TO THE HIGH AND MIGHTIE PRINCE,

HENRIE, PRINCE OF GREAT BRIT-TAIN, SONNE AND HEIRE APPARANT TO our Soueraigne Lord, IAMES King of Great Brittain, &c.

AND TO THE MOST NOBLE AND VER-TVOVS PRINCESSE, THE LADY ELIZABETHS GRACE,
his Highnesse most deare Sister; all honour and happinesse, with eternall glorie through Christ IESVS.

Most gracious and renowned Princes, hauing translated out of French into our English tongue, the booke of the prophecie of Isaiah, interpreted and expounded by Master John Calvin, of reuerend memorie : I humblic craue that it may be published vnder your most Princely names and protection. The reason of this my humble petition is, that the honor of so noble a worke may not be imbased by the meanes of my endeuours. This Prophet by birth was the sonne of Amos, esteemed by many to haue been brother to Azarias King of Iudah, and Father in law to King Manasses: which being so, this Prophet was by birth of the blood Royal, and descended of the house of David, which for the promise of Christ to come of him, was the most noble house of all the Kings of the earth. Being so borne, his education could not be but Princely, and his bringing vp in all good learning, wisdom, vertue and honor. His spirituall graces, not attained vnto by ordinarie meanes, but inspired into him immediatly by the Spirit of God, were excellent. This appeareth particularly in the sixth Chapter of this Prophecie, declaring that an Angell

The Epistle Dedicatorie.

gell of God with a burning coale taken from the Lords Altar, and laide to the mouth of the Prophet, refined his lips and his tongue, that they became pure and precious as the finest Gold. The same is manifest in all the booke of his Prophecie; wherein both the light and the heate of that heavenly fire appeareth. For he not onely declared the will of God sincerely, according to the lawe and testimonie deliuered to Moses, but also foreshewed the future euent of the Kingdome of Judah, and of all the flourishing states and Kingdomes of his time.

He Prophecieth also of the birth of Iesus Christ, as if hee had been taught by the Angell Gabriel; who brought the annunciation and message of it to the blessed Virgin his mother. Of his passion and death he spake, as if with the Apostle John he had stoode by when he was crucified. His resurrection he described, as if with all the Apostles he had stoode vpon Mount Oliuet, where the Lord tooke the cloude of glorie as his heavenly Chariot to ascend and goe vp to his Father. His zeale and indignation against sinne is eident euery where, in his sharpe reproofes of the offences of all estates.

Finally, the booke of his Prophecie beareth written in the head of it the names of foure Kings, in whose time he prophecied; and before whom as a vessell of golde he bare the name of God with great honour. All which things being royall, it seemed to me most conuenient that his booke should still beare in the front of it the names of Princes. And as hee foreshewed that Kings should be Fosterfathers, and Queenes Nurces of the Church of Christ, so my desire was that his booke might be published vnder the names and protection of Christian Princes.

Moreouer, I was led hereunto by the example of this Interpreter, whose exposition vpon Isaias prophesie I translate; namelye, of M. John Caluin, a man in his time of excellent pietie and learning; and one of the great lights, whereby it hath pleased God both to chase away the errors of poperie, as the darknes of the shadow of death; and to cause his maruellous and comfortable light of the Gospell to shine vnto this present age. For hee dedicated his first exposition of this booke to the young Prince, King Edward the sixth, of famous memorie, for the princelie graces, for the zealous loue of true religion, and of al heroical vertues, where- with in his young yeeres he raised an admirable expectation of future glorie, if his precious life had long continued. He was also most worthily renowned with highest glorie, for that gracious reformation in religiō, which was established by his regal authority, and which our English Church at this day with great comfort doth enioy, vnder the happie gouernment of our Soueraigne Lord the King, your most noble and renowned Father.

Furthermore, the same Author setting out againe this Commentarie, amplified and enlarged, he dedicated this second edition to our late most gracious Queene Elizabeth, worthie of eternall memorie in this Kingdome, for the reestablishing (after a few yeeres alteration) of the zealous reformation of her most vertuous brother. Which example hath led mee in most humble manner to seeke for the same worke, the high patronage and protection of such Princes, like those to whom hee presented this his seruice.

To whom I know none so like as your selues, both in regard of your high estate, and also in like most noble descent from the vnited houses of Yorke and Lancaster. Besides which resemblance, your Highnesse also is of like yeeres to the yong Prince King Edward, and in the eies of all the kingdome, of like hope of excellent vertue and zealous proceedings in the aduancement of Christian religion.

In like manner your Grace resembleth the most gracious late Queene Elizabeth, both in her royall name, and also in the constant expectation of all men, to expresse in time all the princely vertues and graces that shined in that most renowned Princessse, from this Westerne part of the world, to the furthest East, and to the rising of the Sunne.

In which respects, esteeming such a dedication, most like that which my author made of his owne worke, I haue most humbly craued that this my translation of it might bee vouchsafed the honour to haue your Princelie names written in the beginning of it. For notwithstanding the great difference that is betweene a reuerend learned writer and expounder of the holie Scriptures, and the translator of such an exposition, yet this meane seruice hath also his good vse in the Church of God; and is of long and tedious labour to such as take paines therein; which being gratioufully accepted, may encourage others to trauell in this kind, and cause many to giue thanks to God for you both, by whose most princely fauours and protection, they are made partakers of such worthie writings. And I shall alwaies pray Almighty God, with this new yeere, to multiply many more vpon you, and dailie replenish your hearts with all princely and he-roicall graces, that may enable and adorne Princes of so hie estates, amongst this people.

*Your Highnesse, and Graces most humble deuoted, in all loyall
and dutifull affection,*

CLEMENT COTTON.

TO THE MOST HIGH AND RENOWMED PRINCESSE,

ELIZABETH, Queene of England, &c. A most gracious defender of the true Christian Faith.

JOHN CALVIN.

Although in correcting and polishing of this Commentary, most noble Queene, I haue trauelled with such diligence, that it may well be esteemed a new booke: yet because in the first edition it was dedicated to your brother King Edward, who in his infancy farre surpassed the men of his time; whose memorie also I wish euer to flourish, as worthily it deserues: I was determined to alter nothing touching the inscription. But because in this miserable and wofull scattering of the Church, and the abolishing of the sincere doctrine which hath happened in so short a space, with an incredible violence; this booke, with the whole word of God, was banished England for a time: and that now as I hope it shall be received (as before) at your happie entrance into that kingdome; I haue committed no absurditie, as I thinke, if together with the name of so worthy and excellent a King, I also ioyne yours; which all good men do both loue and honour. Yea, besides this occasion which thus offers it selfe; necessitie also may seeme to require that I should intreate your fauour touching this Commentarie in particular; the banishment whereof hath (I am well assured) been much lamented by very many of the faithfull, your louing subiects.

Although I confesse my meaning is not so much to obtaine your fauour onely in respect of my labours, as humble to beseech, yea and by the sacred name of Christ to adiuere you, that not onely all good bookes may againe find intertainment, and bee freely used in your kingdome vnder your allowance: but also that you be carefull in the first place, of that true religion which hath been shamefully corrupted. If Iesus Christ, the onely sonne of God doth iustly challenge this of all the Kings of the earth, then hath he bound you, most noble Queene, with a more holy band to put your sacred hand to such a worke. For in that time wherein your selfe, the daughter of a King, were not free from that dreadfull tempest rushing downe so furiouslie vpon the heads of all the faithfull; (this Lord Iesus I say) plucking you safe thereout, albeit you had your part with them in the feare of this danger; he hath obliged you to vow your selfe and all your designes to his seruice. And so farre is it off that you haue any cause to blush in respect of such a deliuerance, that contrariwise God hath therein giuen you ample and plentifull matter of reioycing, in vouchsafing thus to conforme you to the Image of his sonne; vnto whom our Prophet among other glorious titles giues him this, namely, That out of prison, and from iudgement was he taken, and exalted vnto a soueraigne degree of celestiaall rule and dominion. As it is not a common honour then to resemble such a Patron: so as oft as you shall call the same to mind (which you should neuer forget) out of what perplexed and wofull feares you are escaped through Gods

The Epistle to Queene Elizabeth.

Gods providence, who hath in a visible manner as it were, reached forth his hand from heauen vnto you. Know yee, that he sets this marke before you; namely, that with a fearelesse constancie, and an inuincible magnanimitie of mind, you should interchangeably referre vnto your Protector and Redeemer, that right which vnto him appertaineth; and setting all other busineses aside (with which on all sides you shall be enuironed in these beginnings of your reigne) you will (which I nothing doubt of) giue such order that his seruice vnworthilie corrupted for a time in your countrie, may bee there reestablished in its first glory.

And if Satan endeuour to terrifie, or weaken you in proposiing many and great impediments; you know of whom you ought to craue courage, cheeresfully to goe on, and to overcome all obstacles. God also for his part, who approoues of mens particular actions, will crowne in you his worke, with an happie and wished end.

Moreouer your dutie to religion, most excellent Queene, should the rather prouoke you; seeing our Iſaiah requires, that Queenes should be no lesse nurcing mothers to his Church, then Kings the nurcing fathers thereof. Neither are you only bound to purge out the filth of poperie againe; and that the stocke lately affrighted and dispersed, be againe gathered together and fostered: but that you also call home the banished exiles, who chose rather to lose the present profits of their natie countrie, then there to continue, whilest pietie was chased thence. Here is the summe of your thankefulnesse towards God, and a sacrifice of a most sweet saour, namely, that the faithfull seruants of God, who were constrained to wander to and fro in farre countries for the profession of the Gospell, may now returne home to their houses by your fauour.

As for vs, who for good cause haue bitterly bewailed so lamentable a spectacle (we, I say) haue inst occasion giuen vs now to be glad, and to gratifie you, when by the clemencie of your eie, we presently see the way made open to our brethren, not onelie to serue God with freedom in your Maiesties dominions; but also to be a meanes whereby others may enjoy the like benefit there with them.

To conclude, most noble Queene, if of your fauour you accept (as I hope you will) this testimonie of the reuerence which I owe to your Greatnesse; though many may esteeme the same small and contemptible: yet shall I thinke my selfe abundantly recompenced, and will all my life endeuour by all meanes possible to manifest my thankefulnesse to your Highnesse for the same.

The Lord guide and governe you, most noble Queene, by his Spirit of wisdom; strengthen you with inuincible fortitude; defend and enrich your Highnes with all sorts of blessings. From Geneva, the yeere 1559. Iannuarie the 15. which, as they say, is appointed for the day of your Coronation; for which cause I did the more willingly set pen to paper, hauing obtained some release from a quartan Ague.

TO THE MOST NOBLE AND RENOWMED, EDVVARD THE sixth, King of England, &c. A true Christian Prince.

IOHN CALVIN.

Albeit I acknowledge (most noble Prince) this Commentarie to be faithfully and aptly gathered from my ordinarie readings: yet in regard it was polished by another hand; at the first I feared, lest being published vnder the title of your name, it might seeme I had not furnished my selfe with a present worthe of your Maiestie. But one speciall reason among others, in the end freed mee from this feare; namely, that as this Princely Prophet descended of the blood Royall; and a most honourable Ambassador of Christ the Soueraigne King, suted well with your person: so

I hoped that my labours which I haue taken in expounding his prophecies, would be accepted and esteemed of you.

Moreouer, seeing he had good experience of the disposition of siue Kings, far vnlike each other, to whom he continually preached: yet I need not aduertise you, which of these you ought to follow, neither yet to exhort you to the performance of such duties, vnto which you shew your selfe alreadie most willing.

Vzziah and Iotham fauoured him; and yet they wanted sufficient courage in erecting Gods pure worship: the greatest conflicts he sustained was with Abaz: not that he was an open enimie; but a false hypocrite, full of dissimulation, and treacherie. And what enimies (I pray you) gaule Gods seruants more then such? His successor Hezechiab not only reuerenced this holy personage, but also modestly, as one of the comon sort, submitted himselfe to his doctrine; obeyed his counsels, and suffered himself to be gouerned by his admonitions. Nay which is more, he willingly yeelded to be sharply reproofed by the Prophet when need required. The last, which was Manasses, who, as all the Iewes with one consent affirme, was his father in law, wickedly slew him by cruell torments. Yea, euen during the time that good Kings aided him, and also vnder Hezechias; who shewed himselfe so godly a protector of pietie and godlinesse, yet then, was he continually vexed with sharpe and tedious trauels, and made to vndergoe very grieuous conflicts: so difficult and rare a thing is it to see men consent to wholsome doctrine. I say more; such as will faithfullie and vprightly discharge their duties in this propheticall function, must needs make account to be at continuall oddes with the world. So much the more therefore ought faithfull Kings, by their defence, to succour the Ministers of Christ, that they be not molested nor pressed aboue measure, by the insolencie of the wicked.

But by how much the more as this vertue is excellent, and truly heroicall; so if wee shall call to mind what hath past in all the ages from the first (till now;) how rarely hath it been found; or how few haue giuen themselues to the practise of it? Many being remisse and fainthearted, haue through meere negligence suffered Gods truth to be suppressed, as if the matter had not at all concerned them. The greater part shewing themselues aduersaries, haue with furie and violence rushed against it. And would to God all those who at this day profess themselues Christians, had but so much heart to aduance the doctrine of saluation, as they are proude in glorying of this name.

But

The Epistle to King Edward.

But to be silent touching others, we may yet at the last worthilie esteeme this comfort, not as a common fauour, in the miseries wherein the Church now is, that you, most noble King, haue been raised vp of God, with this spirit, and excellent magnanimitie of mind, to maintaine the pure religion; and as effectually to offer vnto God your seruice in this behalfe, as you know he receiues and approoues the same at your Maiesties hands. For howsoeuer the affaires of the Kingdome be yet managed by your honourable Counsell: and that as wel the most noble Duke of Sommerfet, your Maiesties Vncle, as also many others, haue taken the cause of religion so to heart, that they labour diligently (as it is very fit they should) to establish the same: yet doe you in such sort outgoe them all; that it well appeares, the zeale which they see in you prouokes them not a little to follow you. For you haue the same, not only to be of such a princely disposition as promifeth much, and to haue some seeds of vertues also, (which yet iueuerthelesse seemes great in so young yeeres) but more then that, such a ripenessse of these vertues alreadie growne beyond your age; which to the most aged, gets not only rare praise, but also makes them much to be admired. And aboute al, so greatly is your pietie commended, that I am very wel assured our Prophet shal haue one, that wil with like respect reuerence him being dead, as H Ezekias did whilest he was liuing.

As concerning the fruite which may happily redound vnto you thereby, it is best your selfe should learne it by your owne experience in reading of him: and yet I haue touched that also a little in the preface. There is only one thing which I haue determined to say vnto your Maiestie, (and this it is:) After the Prophet hath laid foorth Gods iust complaints against this so vnthankfull a people, and hath threatned the Iewes with such chastisements as their disloyall reuolt, and desperate obstinacie deserued; namely, that the time approached, wherein they should be brought to an horrible ruine: foorthwith comming to set foorth the new and incredible restauration of the Church, hee promifeth that God will so respect the same, that in despite of all her enemies, shee shall alwaies flourish in beauty, and happinesse. Those which returned from the captiuitie of Babylon felt this ioyous and blessed estate, when the sacrifices being againe newly erected, they might conceiue some good hope of greater benefits, then those which they then enjoyed: as when we behold the breake of day, wee expect the Sunne-rising soone after. But when Christ the sunne of righteousnesse appeared with his glorie in his Gospell, the thing it selfe greatly surpassed all that which had been highlie praised by the Prophets reuelations.

Within short space the knowledge of the true God was disperfed almost throughout the whole world. The pure religion which before was despised and shut vp within the bounds of Iudeah (as in a narrow corner) now began to bee spread into all nations and prouinces, yea, so honoured, that God was called vpon with one consent of faith by infinit multitudes. The sonne of God hauing here and there gathered the Churches, set vp his royall throne, and aduanced the same into the highest degree to be seene of all from the East vnto the West. The Churches adorned with admirable graces of the holy Ghost, not onely tasted of the incomparable fruite of the diuine goodnesse, but were also faire and shining theaters to manifest the wonderfull power of God, euen to such as were blind. And albeit, Christ raigned vnder the crosse, yet amidst the fierie conflicts and persecuti- ons, his glorie shined more gloriouslie, and his triumphs more stately, then if the Church had alwaies enjoyed tranquillitie.

In the end it came to passe, that that hautie pride of the Romane Empire submitting it selfe also vnto Christ, was a singular ornament to the house of God. But the malice & ingratitude of men was the cause why this happinesse lasted not successiuelly. And so the spouse of Christ as one stripped of so pretious a robe, spoiled of her dignitie, and deprived of her honourable attire, was brought backe againe to a miserable deformitie: yet God alwaies preferued some remainders, as it were in secret corners; but as touching the outward face of the Church, for the space of many yeeres, nothing appeared any where, but scatterings and confused waits. And we at this day behold how the Roman Antichrist, vsurping farre and neere ouer the sanctuarie of the Lord, by a sacrilegious tyrannie holds it vnder his feet rent and oppressed. For seeing the puritie of doctrine is there corrupted by monstrous errors, and that Gods seruice being ouerturned, idolatries raigne there without number; that in stead of a gouernement rightly instituted, a cruell torture hath been brought brought in, that the Sacraments be in part by grosse and absurd abuses corrupted, and partly shamefully set to sale: what remaine there (I pray you) but wofull ruines of that naturall beautie of the spirituall building?

Norwithstanding the Lord in our times hath begun againe to set vp that which was fallen downe, that at least there might be some image of the true Temple where he was purcly serued according as he hath ordained in the Gospel. To which end he hath selected out as it were from among the least of the common people, his chiefe builders, to aduance this worke by sincere doctrine. I grant, it is of it selfe a difficult worke, and of great waight, though Satan should let vs alone in quiet. But if euen now whilest some part of this building is raised vp, he doth his vtmost to break it downe, is it any maruell if we labour much, and with great care, & yet see little or no fruit for the present to come of our labors? Therefore these mightie Giants proudly scorne vs: as if whilest we studying how to practise the ruine of the tyrannous Romane sea; wee should striue to ouerthrow the mount Olympus.

These great wits also, who (as they thinke) know somewhat, deride our diligence; in regard we are so earnestly busied in restoring the Church to her first estate: as if in the same any certaine or settled estate were to be expected. For these (forsooth) imagine that they are so well founded, and on all sides so furnished, that it is no lesse easie to abolish poperie, then to mingle heauen and earth together. But the conceit of these wise men differs somewhat. For in regard the puerfuitie of the world is so great, that it cannot be held in awe, they thinke we trauel in vaine, and against the streame to seeke in correcting vices, to haue a pure and sincere administration of a Church. The flout of Erasmus is well enough knowne; What hopes Capito of the tenth which shall come after him? It cannot be denied but Wolfgangus Capito was an holy man, who with a most sincere affection endeouored to purge the Church. But because he was perswaded that the Ministers of Christ should no lesse lose their labour in correcting the stubbornnesse of the world, then if they should haue taken vpon them to haue forced the streame the contrarie way (for thus they are wont to thinke who talke of things in the shade) he taxeth vs all of inconsiderate zeale in the person of one. But both the one and the other are much deceiued, in that they consider not, that wee so imploy our selues in the Lords seruice, as he hath commanded, that in the meane while the restauration of the Church is meerey the worke of his owne hands. Neither is it without cause that the whole Scripture commonly testifies, and that our Prophet againe and againe so carefully repeates it. Wherefore being mindfull of this doctrine, let vs no way be discouraged from vndertaking vnder Gods guidance, a businesse which farre surmounts our owne abilities; that so no encumbrances may either breake off our purpose, or so weaken vs, that we should desist from our enterprife.

And here I doe expressly summon you, most excellent King, or rather God by the mouth of his Prophet Isaiab calles you, namely, to goe on in imploying whatsoever power and force God hath endued you withall; and with new encreases to set forward the restauration of the Church, which is now so happily begun in your kingdome. First, you daily heare and reade that this charge is committed vnto you in that Kingdome ouer which God hath placed you. Yea, and Isaiab, as I haue said, calling Kings nurcing fathers of the Church, permits not that the helpe which shee in this behalfe requires of you in her affliction, should now be wanting vnto her. Neither ought your heart to bee lightly touched with that, where the Prophet denounceth an heauie curse to fall vpon all Kings and nations, which shall defraud her of their aide.

Againe, your Maiestie also evidently knowes, that euen the necessitie of these times requires it. And albeit by your endeouors, it may be you shall gaine little; yet knowing how acceptable a seruice this is vnto God, and that it is a sweete smelling fauour in his nostrils, no dangers whatsoever ought to turne you from this enterprife.

Seeing then that God thus exhorts you to behaue your selfe valiantly, and therewithall promiseth you an happy issue: why shuld you not cheerfully follow him whē he calls you? In another place our Prophet cries; Prepare, prepare the way for my people. It is wel enough knowne, how there was no hope that the poore captiues could bee restored home to their countrie againe, neither was this presently performed. But in regard the Prephet by the spirit of prophesie, then foresaw what the posteritie should effectually feele, lest by so lamentable a spectacle, the faithfull might be discouraged, he prevents them betimes; telling them that there are no obstacles or impediments, whatsoeuer (be they as firme and as close as they may be) thorow which God wil not make a way to deliuer his Church. Neither do we stand in lesse need of consolation to quicken vs vp at this day. And as for you, most noble King, it is very requisite that you be readie and watchfull, in respect of the charge which is committed vnto you, seeing Isaiah exhorts all Kings and Magistrates, in the person of Cyrus, to reach forth their hand to the Church in her trauel, to the end shee may be restored to her former estate. Although in this regard your condition differs much from that of Cyrus, in that he being but a stranger ouer the Lords flock was neuer taught expreslie, willingly, and with a franke courage to offer himself to restore & maintaine the Church: but you, whom the Lord hath not only vouchsafed to receiue by adoption, but hath also placed you in highest ranke among his children; the Prophet calles you to this office, as if he reached you out his hand. So much the more confidently therefore, and with the more ardent affection ought you to proceede on in this race. The matter (as I haue said) is in it selfe full of great difficulties, intangled with much tediousnesse, and mingled with dangers; because Satan ceaseth not to broch his cunning shifts and deuices (if by any meane he might) either to ouerthrow, or destroy the holie temple of God; sometimes also God by such trials will prooue our constancie. But if you be resolu'd, that hitherto you haue enterprised nothing by your most graue Counsell but by diuine authoritie from Gods word, and that for the present you so continue in restoring the estate of y^e Church, no doubt but you shall find by experience how wonderfully God will effect that which he hath giuen his Ministers in charge. England shall receiue an incomparable fruit from this so happie a going forward: and we shall haue cause too, with you and your whole kingdome to reioyce. In the meane while I will not cease to further your holy endeouours, as there is good cause, by my poore prayers, in regard they are the best meanes I am able to afford you.

Farewell most noble King. The Lord long preferue your flourishing estate, assist and guide you by his holy spirit, and in all things blefse and prosper you. So be it. From Geneva this fise and twentieth of December.

To the Reader,

Such pretious esteeme (Christian Reader) were the expositions of this reuerend author in the Church of Geneua, that albeit some of them were by himself * spoken, and others of them * written in Latin; and that in fauor of the learned especially: yet because with his more then ordinarie depth of iudgement he alwaies matched a singular simplicitie and plainenesse, so that hee therein stoopes to the capacitie, euen of the simplest; it was thought fit, that by some of good note in the said Church, they should all be translated into the vulgar French, for the benefit of all such as vnderstood the same.

Which commendable zeale and godly care of theirs, as it worthily prouoked many of this our Church for the common good, (at the happie entrance of our late deare and dread Soueraigne Ladie Queene Elizabeth into this kingdom) to translate diuers of his Commentaries vpon the bookes both of the * old, and * new Testament into English; so if their good beginnings had been seconded by answerable proceedings, thousands might, I doubt not, haue reaped the like fruit by those that are yet * vntranslated, which they haue done by the former. Wherefore, this seruice to the Church of God hauing been a long time neglected, and not hearing of any that purposed to set his helping hand to this so necessarie a businesse, I thought it might happily prooue a labour not altogether vnseasonable nor vnprofitable, if according to my poore abilitie I endeououred either to continue forth those former good beginnings, or at least thereby to quicken vp the care of such as are much more able then my selfe, to prosecute the same.

To which purpose (good Reader) some few yeeres since, for the first assay, I selected out of this learned Authors workes in French, his Commentary vpon the Hebrewes, not before translated; which being authorized, I was bold soone after to present thee therewith. Now because, as I suppose, it hath not passed abroad without some good fruit, it hath the rather encouraged me once more, whilest I profited my selfe in reading this Commentarie vpon the princelie Prophet Isaiah, to haue some respect of thy profiting also. For which cause thou hast the same now, as the former; translated, allowed, and also published (if thou wilt) for thy particular vse and profit.

As touching the fruit that is thence to be reaped, it would bee much better that thy self from thine owne experience mightest be able to report, then for me here at large to dilate. Only this I thinke I may not omit: if in reading this prophesie thou wouldest haue the difficulties therein cleared; thy iudgement in other things not obscure, either rectified, or confirmed; thy meditations concerning diuers sorts of instructions, menaces, reprehensions, promises, and consolations enlarged; loe here a Philipp readie at hand in any of these things to satisfie

* To wit, his ordinarie Lectures vpon the Prophets, which being read in the Schooles, were by approued Notaries there, taken from his mouth verbatim, and afterwards vnder the title of his lessons, or readings, imprint. d.
* Namely, his Commentaries, which were written by him at seuerall times in the house.

THE FRENCH TRANSLATOR TO THE READER.

I*T is twentie yeeres since and more, good Reader, that the lessons of M. Iohn Calvin vpon the Propbet Iſaiah (which being collected by M. Nicolas Gallars) were printed vnder the title of a Commentarie; and dedicated to that noble Prince of blessed memorie, Edward the sixth, King of England. A long time after, the Author himſelfe reuiewing this collection, imprinted both in Latin, and in French: ſatisfied not himſelfe only to reuiew it, thereby to explaine that, which otherwiſe ſeemed obſcure, by reaſon of the breuitie of it; and to ſet that in order, which was ſomewhat conſuſed: but he laboured therein with ſuch diligence and good ſucceſſe, that he augmented it in Latin with excellent and neceſſarie matters for the vnderſtanding of the text; more then the third part: bringing all things into ſo exaſt a forme, that if any bee pleaſed to take ſo much paines, as to conferre the firſt Commentarie or collection of thoſe leſſons, with this ſecond; he ſhall find that which we haue ſaid to be very true. Neither was this gathered in the ſchooles the ſecond time, as at the firſt; but was written in the houſe, euen word for word by the Authors owne direction: who hath ſo aptly diſpoſed and couched the whole together, that in peruſing of it, you ſhall perceiue in this booke, as well as in others which haue alreadie paſſed his hands, that he hath done great ſeruice to the Church of God, and hath alſo faithfully chalked out the way vnto ſuch as deſire to profit in diuine ſtudies. But eſpecially by theſe his Commentaries, which being careſully read, will ſerue noleſſe to the explaining of many texts that are contained in other bookes of the holy Scripture, as they will alſo be moſt helpfull to giue the true ſenſe of the Propbet Iſaiah; which hath mooued mee (good Reader) to beſtow my paines in translating the whole anew into French: leſt ſuch among you as vnderſtand not the Latin tongue, ſhould be deprived of ſo great a benefit.*

A PREFACE TO THE PROPHECIE OF ISAIAH:

BY M^r. IOHN CALVIN.

They haue been wont to spend many words in setting forth the office of the Prophets. But I see no readier way then to referre them to the law; whence their doctrine is drawne, as the riuers from the fountaines. For they set the law before them for their imitation, so as by good right we may affirme and hold them to be the expositors thereof, in whom there is nothing separate from it. Now the Law contains three points. First, the doctrine of life :

The Prophets ground their doctrine vpon the Law.

Whereof they are the Expositors. The law contains three points:

secondly, the threatnings and promises: thirdly, the couenant of grace, which is founded in Christ.

For as touching the Ceremonies, they were exercises, by which the people were held in the seruice of God, and in godlinesse; according to the Contents of the first Table.

The Prophets then expound the doctrine thereof more at large; and lay that fourth in more plaine termes, which is brieflie contained in the two tables; teaching that which the Lord principallie requires.

As touching the threatnings and promises which Moses touched in generally, they applie them to their owne times, and describe them particularly. Lastlie, that which is said obscurely in Moses, touching Christ and his grace; they set it forth more perspicuousslie, and alleage more ample and abundant testimonies of the free couenant.

Threatnings: Promises:

But that the thing may be more cleere, we must fetch the matter further off; namely, from the Law it selfe, which God ordained as a perpetuall rule for his Church, that it might alwaies be in mens hands: and that all their successors should follow it.

Now because this doctrin of the law sufficed not this obstinate & vnruely people; the Lord also foreseeing that they would neuer be held in, vnlesse it were by some bridle: hee addes a prohibition, not to seeke to Magitians, Southsayers, Inchanters, Sorcerers, nor to such as regard the times, or the flying of birds, to such as asked counsell of familiar spirits, or at the dead; because such things were an abomination to the Lord.

Prohibitions, Deut. 18. 9. 10. 11. 12.

And to preuent the replies which they might make, namely, that their condition should be worse, then that of the infidels, who had their Southsayers, Astrologers, Sacrificers, and such like, of whom they might aske aduice and counsel; but they shuld be destituted of any that might be able to giue them satisfaction in doubtful and intricat causes: herein, to take away al pretext, & that they might not defile themselues in these execrable customes of the Gentiles, God

THE PREFACE.

Deut. 18. promifeth to raife them vp Prophets, by whom he wil manifefit his wil, who alfo fhall faithfully teach them whatfoeuer hee fhall giue them in charge; that they might haue no caufe to complaine for the time to come, as if any thing were wanting vnto them.

I grant, that in that place Mofes mentions a Prophet, and not Prophets. Notwithftanding it is a change of the number, to wit, the fingular for the plurall, a thing common in the Scriptures. And howfoeuer the place ought properly and principally to bee vnderftood of Chrift (as S. Peter expounds it Act. 3.) in regard he is the Prince of the Prophets, and that all of them, with their doctrine alfo depend vpon him, and with one confent aime at him: yet by this name, which is collectiue, it alfo comprehends the reft of the Prophets.

The Lord then hauing promifed them Prophets, by whom hee would declare vnto them his counfell and will, he commanded the people to reft in their expofition and doctrine. Not that the Prophets fhould adde any thing to the law, but that they fhould faithfully expound the fame, and conferue the authoritie thereof.

Mal. 4. 4. Whence alfo it is, that Malachi exhorting the people to perfift in that doctrine, faith, or rather God by him: Remember the Law of Mofes my feruant, which I gaue him in Horeb for all Ifrael. Thus bringing them backe to Gods law only; and commanding them to be content therewith. But would Malachi haue them to defpife the Prophets then? No. But for asmuch as the prophefies are dependances of the law, and that the law summarilie comprehends them all, this exhortation fufficed. For fuch as are well acquainted with the fumme of the doctrine, and principall heads of it, hauing their willes well inclined thereto; it is certaine that they will not contemne the prophefies: for it were a thing too fond to boaft of hauing affection to the law, and yet in the meane while not to make any account of the diuine interpretation thereof: fuch as are fome at this day, who are fo fhameleffe, that they dare brag of louing Gods law, and the whileft cannot endure to bee admonifhed or reprehended by the doctrine which is drawne and collected from the fame.

Note.

The firft table.

Thus when the Prophets deale with mens manners, they bring in no new thing, but explaine thofe things which were mifunderftood in the law. As for example, the people thought they had done their duties to the vtmoft, when they had offered facrifices, and obserued the ceremonies: for the world is wont alwaies to meafure God according to their owne ell, and to botch him vp a carnall feruice. This corruption the Prophets reprocue fharpely, fhewing that all ceremonies are nothing where the integritie of the heart is wanting; and that God will be worshipped by faith, and a right inuocating of his name. This was manifefted to them plainely enough in the law, but it was needfull it fhould take a deeper impreflion, and that they fhould be put againe in mind of it. The hypocrifie, wherewith men maske themfelues vnder the vaile of ceremonies, was to be difcouered.

The fecond table.

As touching the fecond table, the Prophets thence drew their exhortations, fhewing how all wrong, fraud and violence was to be abandoned. The Prophets office then was nothing elfe, but to hold the people in obedience to Gods law.

Threatnings.

Vifions.

In the threatnings and promifes they haue fomething more fpeciall. For what Mofes propounded in generall, they describe in particular. Befides, they had vifions, which were proper to them: by which the Lord reuealed things to come, that fo they might applie the promife and threatnings to the peoples vfe, and might further affure them of Gods will.

THE PREFACE.

Moses threatens, God will pursue thee with the sword, the enemies shall vex thee with- Moses.
out, and within, domestical contentions shall annoy thee. Thy life shall hang as by a thread; thou shalt tremble at the shaking of a leaf; and such other things.

But the Prophets say: Behold, God hath raised against thee the sword of the Chal- Th: Proph:ts deans, and of the Egyptians: also, God hath armed these to the battell. This citie shall be destroyed at such a time. The like is to be said of the promises.

Moses saith, If thou obseruest the commandements, God will blesse thee. And then Moses.
 he goes on in recounting blessings in generall.

But the Prophets in particular affirme, The Lord will blesse thee in such a The Prophets thing.

Also the Lord promiseth by Moses in these words, Although thou wert scattered Moses.
and driven to the utmost parts of the earth, yet from thence will I gather thee.

But the Prophets promise, that albeit the Lord hath scattered them as farre as The Prophets Babylon, yet within 70. yeeres he will cause their captiuitie to returne.

And as touching the free couenant which God made with man through Couenant of Christ, the Prophets are much more eident; and doe much more confirme Grace.
 the people in it. For they set Christ before their eyes, when they would comfort the faithfull; and raise vp their minds to the hope of his comming, euen as it were to the foundation, and to the place of the couenant, vnto whom the effect of the promises was to be referred.

Whosoeuer shall ponder these things, shall easilie perceiue what hee is to seeke in the Prophets, and whereunto their writings tend. But for the present, it sufficeth that we haue pointed it foorth as with the finger.

Hence we may soone gather how wee ought to handle the doctrine of the word, and how we ought to imitate the Prophets; who so much admired it, that thence they collected the admonitions, reprehensions, threatnings and Nota consolations, to applie them to the peoples vse. For though it be not dailie reuealed vnto vs what we ought to doe, yet are wee to compare the conuersation of the people of our times, with that of the people of old; and by histories and examples to denounce the iudgements of God. Namely, that from the venge- Go: alwaies ance he tooke vpon such sinnes in that time, he will likewise be reuenged vpon like himselfe.
 those that reigne euery where in our time. Why so? Because he is alwaies like himselfe.

The faithfull teachers then must come furnished with the like wisdome, if they meane to handle the doctrine of the Prophets profitablie. Thus much as touching the prophesies in generall.

To come to our Prophet Isaiah: the inscription sufficiently shewes both what The inscrip- he was, and in what time he published his prophesies. For his father is here nam- tion.
 ed, to wit, Amos brother of Azarias king of Iuda. Whence it appeares hee Isaiah de- was of the blood royall: and of this opinion are all the ancients. And yet nei- scended of ther his stocke, nor neere affinitie to the King (for the Iewes affirme he was fa- the blood ther in law of Manasseh) could hinder him from being put to death in hatred Royall.
 of his doctrine, neither was he respected any more, then if he had been of some base estate or condition.

The names of the Kings here mentioned, set foorth the time, in which hee The time prophesied. There are some who thinke that he began about the end of Vzziahs when raigne. And they take their coniecture from the vision which is recorded Isaiah in the sixth chapter, by which he testifies hee was confirmed. But this conie- Propheesied.
 cture is too weake; as shall be shewed in place conuenient. It rather appeares by the inscription, that he prophesied in the daies of Vzziah; of which I see nothing

THE PREFACE.

thing to the contrarie. How euer it bee, it plainly appeares that he prophesied aboute 64. yeeres. For Iothan raigned 16. yeeres: Abaz as much; Hezekias 29. This makes 61. Ad those in which he prophesied vnder Vziah; and afterwards vnder Manasses, who put him to death: These at the least will make vp 64. yeeres; in which Isaiab ceased not to performe the office of a Prophet. And it may well be that he prophesied longer: but of this we can gather no certentie from the historic.

Isaiab put to death by Manasses.

Isaiab a paterne for all Pastors.

This then ought to be seriousslie marked of all the Ministers of the word, that from his example, they may learne patiently to beare the burthen of their office, though it be cumbersome and painefull: not thinking it any disgrace to suffer many sore and tedious trauels, seeing they haue so many worthie paterne set before them. I grant it must needs discourage them exceedingly, when they see that things goe not forward; and that their labours take not such good successe as they desire: thinking it better to leaue all, rather then to bestow so much labour in vaine. They haue need therefore often to remember, and to set before their eyes such examples. (Why so?) Because Isaiab fainted not, although he gained little by so many painfull trauels.

Jeremiah.

Jeremiah also ceased not by the space of 50. yeeres to call vpon this people, who in the meane while hardned their hearts the more: and yet wee see they forsooke not their charge, whatsoeuer difficulties came betweene. Euen so must wee follow our vocation, and constantlie beare all sorts of encumbrances.

The change of Kings.

Note also the circumstance of the change of Kings which are here numbred vp, chap. 1. 1. For it is impossible that in so great diuersitie, the State should alwaies continue alike. No doubt but many troubles fell out. And yet our Prophet perseuered with an inuincible constancie; and neuer suffered his heart to be overcome of feares.

Quest.

But some may aske whether Isaiab himselfe put this title to his prophesie, or some other. None of the expositors that I haue read, answers this question. For my owne part, albeit I am not very well satisfied, as touching this question, yet I will shew what I thinke.

Ans.

How the Prophecies were collected.

After the Prophets had preached to the people, they gathered a compendious summe of their sermon; which they affixed to the gate of the Temple, that the prophesie might the better be viewed and learned of all. And after it had remained there a sufficient time for some certaine daies; the Ministers of the Temple took it downe, and put it into the treasure of the Temple, that the memorie thereof might continue for euer. Very likely it is (I say) that the bookes of the Prophets were thus gathered, as may appeare by the second Chapter of Habacuk; who soeuer be disposed to consider the same well: as also from the eight of this prophesie.

See chap. 30.
8. and chap.
8. 1. 2.

The Prophecies preferred by the singular prouidence of God.

Now this was done no doubt by the speciall prouidence of God, that by the Priests themselues, whose office it was to conserue the prophesies for such as should succeed, it is come to passe that wee at this day enioy these treasures; which they for the most part lightly esteemed. For the Priests were the greatest enemies, that the Prophets had to deale withall.

A COMMENTARIE Vpon the PROPHEESIE OF

ISAIAH, WRITTEN BY THAT REVEREND AND PAINEFVLL

Pastor, in the Church of Christ, Master

JOHN CALVIN.

Verf. 1. A vision of Isaiah the Sonne of Amos, which he saw concerning Iudah and Ierusalem; in the daies of Uzziah, Iotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah Kings of Iudah.

Although the Hebrew word chazon which the Prophet useth be deriued of seeing, and doth properly signifie vision: yet notwithstanding for the most part it imports as much as Reuelation. For as oft as the Scripture makes mention of speciall visions which appeared to the Prophets, whereby the Lord meant the better to confirme them when hee would haue some excellent thing come to light, it vseth the word Mareah, which properly signifies vision. But to the end heape not vp many testimonies, in the third chapter of the first booke of Samuel (where mention is made in generall of prophesies) the author of that booke saith, that the word of the Lord was precious in those dayes, because there was no manifest vision (where he vseth the word Chazon) and a little after, the vision by which God manifesteth himselfe to Samuel, is expressed by the word Mareah. Also in the twelfth chapter of the booke of Numbers, where Moses distinguisheth the two ordinarie meanes of Reuelation, hee there with dreames coniointeth vision as the speciall. And yet by the ninth chapter of the same booke of Samuel, it appears that the name of Seer was imposed in old time vpon the Prophets: but by way of excellencie, because God discovered his counsell familiarly vnto them.

Now as touching this present place, it is out of doubt that the certaintie of doctrine is deciphered out vnto vs by this very word; as if it had been said; There is nothing contained in this booke which was not manifested to Isaiah by God himselfe. Wherefore the true sence of the word is to be obserued; for thereby wee learne, that the Prophets spake not of themselves, neither yet preferred their owne imaginations: but that they were enlightened by God, and had their eyes opened to see those things which otherwise of themselves they had not been able to haue comprehended. The doctrine of Isaiah then, euen in the very inscription, is recommended vnto vs; to wit, because it contains nothing of mans inuention, but the reuelations of God: to the end we might bee assured that whatsoever is contained in this booke, was reuealed vnto him by the holy Ghost.

[Concerning Iudah.] It were not amisse if it were translated Against Iudah. For the particle Al signifies both the one and the other; and the sence will be all one: for whatsoever this booke contains, it doth properly appertaine to Iudah and Ierusalem. But if any shall obiekt that there are many things mingled in this booke which concerne Aegypt, Tyrus, Babylon, with other cities and countries: the answer is, that it was not necessary to recite euery particular in the inscription; because it was sufficient that the principall summe should be set before vs, thereby shewing to whom the Prophet was chiefly sent, namely, to Iudah and Ierusalem. For whatsoever his prophesies concerne beside, it is accidentally as they say: neither yet was it any digressing from the scope of his office to preach to others also: what calamities approached neere vpon them: for Amos, though he were specially sent to them of Israel, yet passed hee not the bounds of his vocation when he prophesied also against Iudah: yea we haue yet a more familiar example here of in S. Peter and S. Paul; Peter was appointed ouer the Iewes, and Paul ouer the Gentiles, and yet Saint Peter passed not beyond the bounds of his office in preaching to the Gentiles, as when he went in to Cornelius: neither S. Paul, when he offered the preaching of the Gospel to the Iewes, to whom he resorted as soone as he entred into any citie. And thus was it lawfull for Isaiah to doe, in like manner, Nor whilst he enduoured to discharge his dutie to the vttermost in teaching of the Iewes, and purposely bent all his studies that way: did he yet go beyond his calling when hee speakes (as it were by the way) of other nations?

He takes Iudab here for the whole nation, and Ierusalem for the chiefe seate of the kingdome: for hee separates not the citie from the kingdome; but names it by way of excellencie, as being the mother citie. Euen as if a Prophet at this day should be sent to speake vnto the whole kingdome of France, should name the citie of Paris, as the chiefe of the kingdome. And it was needfull that this should be done; first, to the end the Citizens of Ierusalem should not exempt themselves, as though they were guiltlesse: or rather, as being dispenced withall, from being vnder any checke, in respect of the greatnes of their dignitie. Secondly, that by meanes hereof they might be prevented from sending the Prophet backe to the Comions, and countrie people. But they are deceived, who would haue Ierusalem to bee named a part, because it was situated in the tribe of Beniamin, seeing the one halfe thereof, which was subiect to the successors of Dauid, is comprehended vnder this name of Iudab.

Verf. 2. Hearre O heauens, and thow earth hearken: for the Lord hath said, I haue nourished, and brought vp children, but they haue rebelled against me.

* Or, haue done wickedly against me.

Isaiah hath here imitated Moses: for so it is the custome of all the Prophets to doe; neither is it to be doubted but he alludes to that excellent song of Moses, Deut. 32. 1. in the very entrance whereof he calls heauen and earth to witness against the people. I graunt that it is a terrible protestation: for it is as much as if both of them should turne themselves to the dumbe elements voyde of sense, because men had no eares to heare, but were become vtterly benumbed in all their senses. Isaiah then speakes here as of a rare and prodigious thing, which were euen enough to smite the very elements with astonishment: though otherwise senselesse in the euen. For what could be more horrible, then to see the Israeclites reiect the Lord, in whom they had receiued so many benefits? Those who by heauen, vnderstand the Angels, and by earth, men, doe too much lessen the force of these words: and doe also take away that wherein the chiefest weight of the Prophets vehemencie lieth. Now all the expositors almost doe finish the clause, For the Lord hath spoken, here: As if the Prophet meant to say, Seeing God hath opened his sacred mouth, it stands all men in hand attentiuely to receiue his word. And thus the sentence in appearance indeed is more full: but the circumstance of the place requires another knitting together of the words; namely, that this word hearken bee referred, not generally to what purpose one will; but solely and onely to the next complaint. And so, the sense is thus; Hearre the complaint which God commenceth against you: I haue nourished, &c. For he recounts such a monstrous thing, as he is almost cast into a swound at the sight of it: so as he is faine to call in all the insensible creatures (contrarie to all order) to be witnesses thereof. I had rather then take these things in their proper signification, because they doe better set forth the Prophets meaning.

And to the end that no man should wonder why he speakes thus to things without sense or reason, experience it selfe not obscurely teacheth vs that the voyce of God is heard euen of the dumbe creatures: yea, and the very order of nature is nothing else but an obedience, which is yeilded vnto him thorowout all the partes of the world, to the end his soueraigne authoritie might shine in all places. For the elements, the heauens and the earth, doe their duties, and yeeld obedience to the commaundement which is prescribed them, and that at the least becke which God maketh to them: The earth bringeth forth her fruits; The Sunne, the Moone and the Starres doe finish their courses; The Sea passeth not beyond the limits which God hath appointed vnto it; The heauens also doe turne about to their certaine spaces: Finally, in all things wee may obserue a wonderfull distinction, although all these creatures be destitute of reason and vnderstanding. But man, who is indued therewith, in whose eares and heart the voyce of the Lord do often sounds, as if he were wholly senselesse, moueth not, neither boweth he his necke to submit himselfe to the obedience of his God. The dumbe and insensible creatures then shall beare witness against such obstinate and rebellious persons, to the end they may one day feele that this obstestation was not vsed in vaine.

I haue nourished.] Word for word it is, I haue made them great. But because he speaketh of children, wee cannot turne it better then that, I haue nourished, or brought vp. For the Latines, in stead of nourishing; say, to bring vp children. Yet hee by and by adds other benefits wherewithall hee had wonderfullie enriched them: as if he should say, I haue not onely performed the office of a good father in nourishing, and sustaining you in this life: but I haue also taken paines to exalt you to honour and dignitie. For there was no kind of fauour or mercie which the Lord withheld from the, euen as if he meant wholly to empirie himselfe. As hereafter in the fifth chapter he reproclereth them saying, What could I haue done any more to my vineyard that I haue not done vnto it? Why? the Lord might very well haue said as much to all nations, seeing hee nourished, and bestowed many blessings vpon them: but the Israeclites were his speciall chofen people, whom he had adopted before the rest of the world to himselfe, and intreated them as his most deere children, embracing and cherishing them with a speciall care, euen as in his very bosome. In a word, he adorned and beautified them with all manner of good things.

Now to apply this to our time; let vs consider ſider whether our condition bee not like, or rather much better than that of the Iewes in ancient times. The adoption of God obliged them to the purſue of his ſeruite: our bond or obligation is double: namely, becauſe he hath not onely redeemed vs by the blood of Chriſt, but becauſe he who hath once vouchſafed to deliuer vs, doth ſtill call vs alſo to himſelfe by the preaching of the Goſpell, and therein prefers vs farre before all thoſe whom he hath yet left blinded in their ignorance. If we acknowledge not theſe things, of how much greater puniſhment ſhall we be worthe? for by how much the more the grace of God hath been abundantly powred forth vpon vs, of ſo much the more ingratitude ſhall we be conuincd before him.

But they haue rebelled] S. Ierome translates it, They haue deſpiſed me. But it appears ſufficiently by other places, that the Hebrew word Paſſang, expreſſeth yet ſomewhat more; namely, that they reuolted. God teſtifies then that he could not hold them vnder his obedience; no not by all the benefits hee could beſtow vpon them. But that they turned away more and more, & eſtranged themſelues, no otherwiſe then the ſonne, who by leauiſg his fathers houſe, ſhewes that hee is become altogether incorrigible. It is a monſtrous thing for children not to be obedient to their fathers; eſpecially to ſuch a one as neuer ceaſeth to doe them good, beſowes his whole care as it were vpon them. Lycurgus would not make any law againſt the vthankfull (becauſe it was a thing againſt nature not to acknowledge a benefit receiued). A child then that is vthankfull to his father is a double monſter, yea rather a threefold monſter againſt a liberall father, who ceaſeth not to doe him good. For albeit the Prophet calls them children, it is not giuen them heere as a title of honor, but the more to aggravate this their reuolt, and to make it the more odious.

Verſ. 3. The Oxe knoweth his owner, and the Aſſe his maſters Crib, but Iſrael hath not knowne: my people hath not underſtood.

THIS comparison doth further exemplifie the crime of their reuolt. For the Lord might well haue compared his people to the Heathen, and Infidels: but he toucheth them neerer, in comparing them to brute beaſts, and in ſhewing that they are yet more fooliſh then they. For albeit theſe beaſts be voyd of reaſon & vnderſtanding, yet are they teachable, at the leaſt wiſe in this reſpect, that they acknowledge thoſe who feede them. Seeing then that the Lord had not onely fed this people as in a ſtraw or Crib, but had fed them largely and abundantly, no otherwiſe then the father doth his children whom he tendreth; and had not onely pampered their bellies, but did alwaies repleeniſh them with ſpirituall foodde: had he not good cauſe, think you, to eſteeme them worthe rather to be ſent to ſchoole to learne of Oxen and Aſſes then of men; eſpecially when hee ſaw they were become ſo beaſtly? he ſends his people then to theſe brute beaſts to learne their duties of them. And no man ſuall for it often ſals out that the vnicurable creatures do better follow the order of nature, and doe in their kind ſhew more humanitie then men themſelues. And not to alledge many examples, this one which Iſaiah here propounds ſhall ſuffice: namely, that theſe beaſts being altogether ſenſeleſſe and blockiſh, doe yet notwithstanding obey their maſters and theſe who haue the gouernment of them. And if in other things we ſhall conſider wherein the beaſts doe ſurpaſſe men, how many particulars ſhall we find out? What is the cauſe that ſcarſely any beaſt will offer violence to one of his owne kind; and that he ſhould therein, as you would ſay, acknowledge his owne likenes. What is the cauſe alſo that all ſorts of beaſts doe take ſuch paines to nourish their little ones, ſeing it often falleth out that women forgetting nature, and all womanhood, doe reiect and forſake their children? And doe we not obſerue how beaſts will keepe ſuch a mediocritie that they will eate and drinke no more then that which ſufficieth them for life, and to vphold their ſtrength; whilſt men in the meane ſpace doe ſtuffe and gorge themſelues, or which is worſe, do ouerthrow themſelues with ſurſetting? Laſtly the beaſts do in nothing paſſe beyond y bounds of nature, which are ordaind for them.

But the Papiſts (whoſe cuſtome it is to ouerthrow the naturall ſenſe of the Scriptures and by their dreames do corrupt all the myſteries of God) haue here found out a notable fable: for they make men beleue that the Oxen and the Aſſes did worſhip our Lord Ieſus Chriſt lying in the cratch after he was borne: wherein they ſhew themſelues to bee excellent aſſes. And yet would to God they themſelues would but follow the poore Aſſe which they haue forged! namely, that they were Aſſes worſhipping the Lord Ieſus Chriſt, and not rather wincing and kicking againſt his Maieſtie with their heeles. For the Prophet ſpeakes not here of a miracle, but of the order of nature: declaring that whoſoeuer they be that doe ouerthrow the order thereof by a bad conuerſation, are become monſters. We neede not forge new miracles then to giue authoritie to Ieſus Chriſt: for ſo, by mingling the falſe with the truthe, this inconuenience would follow vpon it, y none would beleue either the one or the other. Neither neede we doubt, if there had been any ſuch miracle, but the Euangelists would haue put it in writing.

The name Iſrael which here he oppoſeth againſt theſe beaſts, hath a very great emphasis in it. We know what honour it was to the poſteritie of Jacob to beare this name, which God himſelfe had impoſed vpon, this holy Patriark, becauſe he overcame the Angel in waſtling. Which name was ſo much the more diſhonoured, by how much the more theſe baſtard and degenerate children durſt notwithstanding make their bragges of that title. And ſit there is a cloſe reproch in it; not onely because they vsurped the name of this holy personage (whose vertues they imitated nothing at all) but also because they were vnthankfull vnto God from whom they had receiued all manner of benefits. Lastly, we must supplie an ourthwart comparison: for the greater their dignitie was, in that they had been exalted farre aboue all other people, so much the more (to reproch them vnder this honorable title) are they separate from other nations. The Greeke Interpreters haue added this word me; but I had rather repeate that which the Prophet hath said, to wit, that Israel hath not knowne his possessor or owner; that is to say, God: nor his crib; that is, his Church, wherein hee was nourished, and to which hee ought to bee gathered. Especially seeing these poore beasts doe acknowledge their master that feedes them; and doe voluntarily returne to the place where they were wont to find pasture.

Verf. 4. Ab, sinfull nation, a people laden with iniquitie, a seede of the wicked, corrupt children: They haue forsaken the Lord: they haue* prouoked the holy one of Israel to anger: they are gone backward.*

* Or, sinfull woman.

* Or, they haue despised.

AH.] Although he had reproofed their fault sharply enough, yet notwithstanding the more to amplify it, he yet further addes this exclamation: by which he shewes his detestation against so horrible and foule an ingratitude. Some thinke this particl Ab, is put here in signe of lamenting. Saint Ierome hath interpreted it, Woe: but me thinke it should more fitly agree to an exclamation, arising partly from astonishment, and partly from sorrow. For wee are wont to burst into outcries, when so vnwotthie a thing is committed, that words cannot expresse it; or rather when words answerable to the greatnes of the grieffe failes vs. In stead of sinfull nation as we haue translated it, the Greekes haue turned sinfull woman, the vulgar translation also bearing the same. But the Hebrew word signifies those who are giuen ouer to wickednes, and it is not to be doubted, but the Prophet here accufeth them of their desperate malice.

A people laden] &c. We must note the force of the similitude; for hee not onely means that they were plunged in their iniquities, as in a deepe mirie pit; but also reprocheth them that they sinned not so much of ignorance or infirmity (as the weak often do) but that they followed on and continued in their rebellion of set purpose. As if he should haue said, They are giuen vp to all iniustice, and haue wholly sold ouer themselves to commit euill. Where he addes, Seede of the wicked; it is as much, as mischieuous seede. Some expounding it more wittily, say, that they declared themselves vnworthie to hold any place among the children of Abraham: because they were become bastards, and degenerate. As in other places they are called a seede of Canaan; yea they are reproched with the name of vncircumcised; euen as though they had bin begotten of prophane or a strange people. But it is an vsua manner of speech among y Hebrews; which the Greekes also obserued in their speech, when they say, sonnes of the good, for good children.

Corrupt children.] It is word for word, corrupting; and therefore the expositors supplie, Themselues, or, their waies. But me thinke bastard, or degenerate agrees better. For his meaning is that they are so depraued, that they resemble their fathers nothing at all. Moreover, hee adorns his nation here with foure titles, which are not very seemely: And Such indeede as were farre remote from the good conceit which they had of themselves. But thus must hypocrites bee dealt withall, to awaken them; and the more they sooth vp themselves in casting off the feare of God, so much the more must they bee thundred against. For a milder and a more gentle doctrine would not haue preuailed with such a kind of people any thing at all: neither would a slight manner of reproofe haue moued them. The false persuasion therefore of their righteousness and wisdom was to be plucked away from them; for therewith they masked and disguised themselves, and often made their bragg: thereof in vaine.

For they haue forsaken the Lord.] Now hee addes the reason why hee hath so sharply and bitterly reprooued them: namely, lest they should complaine as they were wont to doe; that they were too severely dealt withall. First then he vpbraids them with that, which is the fountaine of all euils: to wit, they had forsaken the Lord. For euen as it is the chiefe perfection of righteousness to cleaue vnto God, as Moses teacheth; What doth the Lord thy God require of thee but that thou cleaue vnto him? so is it the greatest miserie wee can plunge our selues into, when wee haue forsaken him. Now the Prophets meaning is, to let the Iewes see, that they were not onely guiltie of one fault: but to shew them that they were become Apostats altogether. No doubt, but that which followes serues for an amplification; whether we reade, To prouoke, or, to dispose; yet I rather rest in the latter. For it was too grosse an ingratitude to make light account of him who had adopted them for his owne, from the rest of all nations. And for this cause he calles himselfe the holy one of Israel, because in giuing himselfe vnto them he had thereby adorned them with his holines. For this name is so attributed vnto him euery where, in regard of the effect. From how barbarous a pride then did the despising of so great an honour proceed? If any had rather retaine the word prouoke; the sense will be, that they had reiected the Lord: euen as if they meant to prouoke him to anger of set purpose. Whence we may see how detestable their Apostasie was.

They are gone backward] The sense is that when the Lord did set a certaine way and forme before them how hee would haue them to carrie themselves, they on the contrarie were carried away with their lusts: and

and yet he confirms the former ſentence ; to wit, that they had given the bridle ſo farre to their ſhameleſſe malepertnes, that they were altogether reuolted from God : yea, and that wittingly and willingly, by erring from that marke vnto which they ought to haue bent their courſe all their life long.

Verſ. 5. Wherefore ſhould ye be ſmiten any more? for you ſhall away more and more: the whole head is ſicke, and the whole heart is heauie.

Wherefore ſhould] &c. Some do turne it, vpon what? or, in what part? And they take it as if the Lord ſhould ſay, There are no more plagues left to ſtrike you withal. For hee had tried ſo many waies to bring them into the right way, that there was no chaſtiſement left. But I had rather interpret it, Wherefore, or, to what purpoſe? As alſo the Hebrew word importes ſo much; and withall I take it that the ſenſe ſeemes to agree beſt thereto. For ſo we are wont to ſay, wherefore; to what purpoſe, &c. His meaning is then, that the Iewes are growne to ſuch a pitch of wickednes and vngodlines, that it is impoſſible to make them become any whit better. We know by experience that after deſperate men haue once hardened their hearts, then they will rather be broken all to peeces then receiue any correction. Now he complains that there was ſuch an obſtinacie in them, euen as if the Phyſician hauing aſſaid all good remedies to cure his diſeaſed patient, ſhould begin to ſay at the laſt, All the ſkill I haue, will doe no good. And withall hee accuſeth them of extreame malice: for when the wicked are come to that paſſe that chaſtiſements will not humble them, then are they come to the very top of all wickednes. So then it is as much as if the Lord had ſaid, I ſee very well, that though I ſhould correct you neuer ſo much, yet I ſhall do you no good. For queſtionleſſe things are then become wholly deſperate when the chaſtiſements and calamities which God vſeth as remedies to heale our vices, will profite vs nothing. And yet for all that the Lord is ſo farre off from ceaſing to puniſh ſuch ſtil, that (which more is) it ſtirres vp and inflames his wrath ſo much the more againſt vs: For there is nothing more burthenſome to him, then ſuch an obſtinacie. Notwithſtanding it is rightly ſaid, that hee loſeth his labour, when he cannot thereby draw vs to repentance: and that all the remedies hee applies to a people ſo vterly paſt cure, are in vaine. So then he is ſo farre off from ſparing ſuch, that hee not onely doubles his blowes and afflictions vpon them, trying all meanes poſſible: but he is conſtrained neuer to giue ouer till he hath vterly conſumed them. But then indeede hee plaies not the part of a Phyſician, but rather of the Surgion: which is the cauſe why he ſo laments here, that his chaſtiſements ſhall now become vnpromitable to the people.

You ſhall away.] This is a confirmation of the former ſentence; ſo that I diſtinguiſh this member from the former, which others notwithstanding doe conioyne together. As if he ſhould ſay, You will be ſo farre off from ceaſing to erre, that (which worſe is) you augment your wickednes more and more, for I ſee you are ſo carried away to doe euill, as if yee had laid your heads together, deliberately to conſpire thereof in your minds: ſo that there is no hope at all left of any moderation. Now God in this ſpeech purpoſed to manifeſt vnto al men how incorrigible their ſpirit was, to the end they might pretend no excuſes afterwards.

The whole head.] Others tranſlate, Every head: and thinke that the princes and great men among the people are here meant by theſe particular names. But for mine owne part, I rather agree to their opinion, who tranſlate, all the head. For me thinke it is a plaine ſimilitude, taken from the body of man; to wit, when the bodie is ſo fore afflicted, that there is no hope of health left. Now he names two principall partes whereupon the health of the whole bodie depends: and hereby he declares the extremitie of the diſeaſes, wherewith this wretched people was vterly ſpent. It was not ſome part or common member of the bodie then, which was pained, but the heart was wounded; and the head very ſore diſeaſed: in a word, that the vitall parts (as they are called) were ſo putrified and infected, that they were incurable. But the Interpreters doe not agree in this behalfe: for ſome referre this ſickeſſe to ſinnes; others, to puniſhments. To ſinnes thus; You are alreadie become a rotten and ſinking bodie, wherein nothing that is whole and ſound is left: wickednes and ſinne hath gotten the ſwinge amongſt you, by the infection whereof all is deſiled and corrupt. But I had rather vnderſtand it of the puniſhments: for the Lord doubtles ſtil purſues this complaint: namely, that the people are ſo rooted in obſtinacie, that they cannot bee brought to amendment of life for any plague inflicted vpon them; and that howſoever they had been ſmiten euen to death (at the leaſt way, rent and torne in peeces with ſore blowes in a fearefull maner) yet that they became neuer the wiſer for all that.

Verſ. 6. Euen from the ſole of the foote vnto the head, there is nothing whole therein, but wounds, and ſwelling, and ſores full of corruption: they haue not been wrapped nor bound vp, nor molliſied with oyle.

Theſe words alſo haue affinity with the former, wherein hee ſtil protecutes the very ſame matter vnder the ſame ſimilitude and maner of ſpeech. Thoſe who referre the firſt part vnto ſinnes, doe not ſufficiently weigh the remainder of ¶ that follows. Let vs grant that the people corrupted with vices are compared to a ſicke bodie: what coherence will there be touching the things which by and by follow, to wit, that their wounds were not wrapped nor mollified with oyle? It appears therefore that the Prophet speaks of the afflictions wherewith the people were almost consumed. And he also sets forth this continuall languishing in them, as a testimonie of their extreme hardning. He calles the wound Corrupt, from whence flowes a continuall infection, as if a spring (deepe in the earth) should continually send forth new streames of venome. So that by this similitude, he shewes that the maladie is incurable, seeing the corrupt water which is in it runnes without stay. The amplification also is not small, when hee saith, there were no remedies applied thereunto. For the three similitudes which he cōioynes together, tend all to one end, namely, that this people were in so miserable a plight, that they were without any hope of comfort, without consolation and without remedie. So that in such kinds of punishments, one might easily discretne the extreme seueritie of God.

Verf. 7. Your land is wast: your cities are burnt with fire: strangers deuoure your land in your presence, and it is desolate like the overthrow of strangers.*

W^{As} Word for word it is, desolation. And thus Isaiah profecutes that more largely, and more clearly, which he had said before figuratiuely touching the wounds: To wit, that the land was afflicted with an horrible wast. For I had rather referre the sentences to the time past: because the Prophet rather recountes how many calamities haue formerly happened, before he denounceth the vengeance of God. For he casts their dotage and benumbednes of hart in their teeth, in that they continued so befotted in their miseries. As the overthrow of strangers. This is added for amplification sake. For their sense is too narrow and constrained, who would haue the Hebrew word raim, which significeth destruction (which word the Prophet also here useth) to be put in the stead of zerem, which signifies an overflowing of waters. True it is that the word may be applied to enemies: but it is better to take it in his proper signification, for strangers. For the calamitie is then much more grieuous when men vnknowe, and those that come from a farre countrie doe make warre in a kingdome; because they are lighty farre more cruell, and doe more hurt then the neighbour enemies. For they race the cities: they burne vp houses, buildings, and villages; destroying all things; and sparing nothing. In a word, they rush in with barbarous inhumanitie, seeking nothing but to kill, sack, and burne: yea, they study rather to do hurt, thē to get their booty. But y^e neighbour enemies because they are able to hold that which they haue won, vs^e to leaue garisons there; and as soone as any reuolt is intended, or any trouble moued, they forthwith send succors: and therefore are not so cruell, neither doe they spoyle the countrie out of which they may fitly reape any commoditie. Hee therefore describes no ordinarie destruction, but rather so bloodie and fierce an one, as exceeded all the rest.

From hence then we may note, that when God hath once begun to chastice & correct, he makes not an end with vs by and by. But in striking vs with many wounds, hee redoubles the blowes, and ceaseth not to visit vs still with one plague after another, if so bee we cannot be brought to true repentance. Let vs then chelue and flee such an obstinacie, if we meane to escape the like punishments: or if we meane this reproach which was iustly cast vpon the Iewes, should not by as good right light vpon vs: namely, that albeit wee haue been diligently admonished, and haue felt the hand of the Lord, yet for all that we could not bee corrected nor amended. What maruaile is it then, I pray you, if wee are pressed with so many and so diuers calamities, whereof we can see neither end or issue? Surely we euen fight hand to hand as it were with God and against all his rodde by our rebellion. Is it not needefull then that hee should take vs in hand; and deale with vs, as men do with restic and vnruely Iades, who the more they wince and kick, the more they must bee pummelled about the head, and spurred vpon the sides? There want not many at this day, I dare say, who accuse God of Crueltie as if he were too outrageous, and that he ought to carrie a more soft and gentle hand ouer vs: But in the meane while they consider not how horrible our wickednesses be. For if they would looke well into them, truly they should easily perceiue an admirable mercie of God, euen in the midst of this his seueritie, which seemes so great in their eyes. And to the end wee may not thinke the Lord was too rigorous towards this peopl^e; let vs consider the vices which he by and by reckons vp.

But a question may here be demanded; to wit, why the Prophet should say that the people were so many waies afflicted, seeing he began to prophetic (as we said before) vnder the reigne of Vzziah; in whose time the state of the kingdome of Judah was verie quiet, so that howsoeuer the kingdome of Israel sustained some losse towards the ende of Vzziah his daies, yet that notwithstanding appertained nothing at all to the kingdome of Judah. For which cause the Iewes indeed thinke this to appertaine to the reigne of Iotham, and not to the reigne of Vzziah. Now howsoeuer their opinion seemes not to agree very well at the first blush, yet is it not without some probability of reason, if wee shall examine the opinions of others. For wee know that they haue not alwaies kept the order of time in gathering together of the prophesies. And it may bee that this Sermon of Isaiah had obtained first place here for no other cause, but for that it contains a summe of that doctrine which shall be handled afterwards. Others thinke they escape easily away when they expound all these things of vices; and not of punishments: but they cannot so easily auoid that which is spoken of the burning of cities, and wasting of the land. If any thinke the Prophet speaks not of the present

preſent eſtate of the kingdome, but of that which was to come; and that in the perſon of God, hee denounceth the iudgements which were at hand, howſoever they then ſaw them not before their eyes; I doe not greatly gainſay it. Although it be very likely that the Prophet ſpeakes of things which were knowne vnto him. It is rather a certaine narration then of a thing done, than a propheſie: though in the verſe following I confeſſe he ſhewes what the iſſue is, which approacheth.

Verſ. 8. And the daughter of Zion ſhall remaine like a cottage in a vineyard, like a lodge in a garden of Cucumbers, and like a beſieged cite.

HE alludes euen to that cuſtome which is now in vſe amongſt vs in France: namely, to a little cottage which the Vinekeepers prepare when the grapes doe ripen. Alſo he vſeth another Similitude which is almoſt like vnto the former; drawne from the manner of that nation, when the ſeruants watched to keepe the gardens of cucumbers. Afterwards in verſ. 9. he himſelfe expounds what he meanes both by the one & by the other. Now the expoſition may be double; to wit, that all the countrie ſhould be waſted, and nothing left in ſafetie, but the cite of Ieruſalem, which ſhould remaine as a cottage: or, that the cite it ſelfe ſhould bee brought to nought. The Iewes follow the firſt interpretation, and vnderſtand this place of the ſiege of Senacherib: but I thinke it reacheth further off; namely, to the deſtructions which followed afterwards. We may alſo referre it to the neerenes of neighbour hood, which being ruinated and deſtroyed amongſt them, it could not bee auoyded, but that the cite ſhould ſeeke great loſſe thereby. But as I take it, the true meaning of the Prophet is, that the evils wherof he ſpeakes, ſhould come euen to the cite it ſelfe, ſo as it being conſumed, ruinated, and brought to nothing, and into deriſion, ſhould become like a cottage. Now he calles Ieruſalem, the daughter of Zion, by a phraſe of ſpeech vſuall in the Scriptures, which intitleth ſome people by the name of daughter, as the daughter of Babylon, and Tyre, for the Babylonians, and Tyrians themſelues. Alſo hee rather mentioneth Zion, then Ieruſalem; becauſe of the dignitie of the Temple: and this manner of ſpeech alſo is very frequent thorowout the whole Scriptures.

Verſ. 9. Except the Lord of hoſts had reſerued vnto vs, euen a ſmall remnant, we ſhould haue been as Sodom, and ſhould haue been as Gomorah.

HEre he concludes that which he had pronounced before touching the ſcourges of God: to wit, that there ſhould be ſuch a ruin; or rather, that it is alreadie preſent, ſo as by the beholding of it, it might bee fitly reſembled to the deſtruction of Sodom: were it not that the Lord ſhould pull out a few remainders as out of the miſt of the ſire. This verſe therefore confirms that which I ſaid erewhile: where the Prophet hauing ſpoken of the calamities which were alreadie hapned, did in briefe manner conuoyne therewith the euent which ſhould ſhortly enſue: as if hee ſhould haue ſaid, Suffer not your ſelues to be beguiled with faire words: For looke what deſtruction hapned to Sodom and Gomorah, the ſame ſhould fall vpon you, vnleſſe the Lord in hauing compaſſion vpon you, ſhould reſerue ſome few. And vnto this agrees that which is ſaid in Ieremiah, It is the Lords mercies that wee are not conſumed, &c. Lament. 3. 22.

Now from hence we are to note two things: Firſt, that hee here denounceth an extreme ruin: yet for as much as God hath to doe with his Church and elect people, therefore this iudgement ſhall be mitigated by a particular and ſpeciall fauour; to the end the faithfull (whom hee here rightly compares to ſmall remnant) may bee deliuered from the generall deſtruction of the whole nation. Now if God hath puniſhed the iniquities of the Iewes by ſuch horrible chaſtiſements, doe we thinke the like will not befall vnto vs if we partake with them in their rebellions; for the Lord had conſecrated this people to himſelfe, and had exempted them from the common condition of others. And wherefore ſhould hee rather ſpare vs if we continue hardened in our impietie and diſloyaltie? But which more is, what iſſue can we expect in the miſt of ſuch an heape and puddle of vices whereinto men plunge themſelues euery way thorowout the whole world? Truly euen the ſame that befall to Sodom and Gomorah: namely, if we ſhould be brought to nothing, did not the reſpect which God hath to his free covenant (wherein hee hath promiſed that his Church ſhall neuer periſh) withhold his vengeance from vs. This threatening alſo which is very terrible and fearefull, appertaines to all thoſe that are obſtinate and deſperate, whoſe manners cannot bee reformed by any ſtrokes of God his rodde.

On the other ſide, wee are to note that which I haue alreadie touched out of Ieremiah; namely, that we ought to attribute it to the only mercie of God that we are not al vterly conſumed and brought to nothing. For if we ſhall behold how great the iniquities are which do reigne in euery place, and amongſt all ſorts of men, we ought to admire Gods mercie that we ſee ſo much as one man alie, and that all haue not been cleane ſwept away from off the earth. Thus it pleaſeth the Lord to keepe his hand in; to the end he may ſtill continue a Church in the world. And S. Paul alſo who is the beſt expoſitor of this place yeeldes the ſame reaſon; for alledging it in the Epistle to the Romans, chap. 9. 29. he beates downe the inſolencie of the Iewes, to the end they ſhould not bragg of that naked title which they bare, as if it had been enough for them that they were deſcended from the ancient fathers, in regard of the fleſh. For he admoniſheth them that God could deale with them as hee had done in old time with their fathers: but that he is still minded for his mercies sake to referre a Church to himselfe: and to what end? euen that it should not vterly perish. For it is for the loue and fauour which hee beares toward it, that the Lord referueth some little seede, when in regard of our rebellion hee is constrained to exercise his rigorous iudgements. Which sentence ought greedily to comfort vs in our extreamest calamities; yea, euen then when we shall thinke the Church as good as forlorne: that when we see the state of things turning vpside downe, so as to our seeming heauen and earth goeth together (as they say) yet that we euen then continue firme and inuincible touching our trust in God his mercie notwithstanding, resolving our selues that God will neuer cease to haue care of his Church howsoeuer the world goe.

Euen a small remnant.] This particule small, may be referred as well to that which went before as to that which followes. And therefore some translate, We had been almost as Sodom. Notwithstanding, I had rather referre it to the former speech: to declare that the number which God referued from the common destruction, was very small. But some rather thinke that this is taken affirmatiuely, and was therefore put to expresse the matter the more liuely: which I reiect not; although it may be taken in his true and natie sense, as if it had been said, There shall but a small number of the people remaine. Now we are to note this sentence diligently: for, vnles the Church haue faire and large dominions, men are wont to despise her. And from thence it comes that hypocrits bragge so much of their multitudes; and that the weake also stagger, as being dazled with their pompe and glorie. It therefore appears by this place, that wee must not measure the Church by the hugenes of the multitude, vnlesse we meane to esteeme more of the chaffe, then of the wheate; because the quantitie therof is greater. But it ought to suffice vs that although the number of the faithful be verie small, yet that God notwithstanding acknowledgeth them for his elect people. And with this also should that consolation of Christ come into our minds: Feare not little flocke, for it is your fathers pleasure to giue you the kingdom, Luk. 12. 31.

Verf. 10. Heare the word of the Lord O princes of Sodom: hearken vnto the law of our God O people of Gomorah.

HE confirms that which he had said before; to wit, that God his vengeance is not cruetie: why so? Because they had deserued a farre greater punishment. And howsoeuer there was some difference betwene them and the Sodomites, in regard of the punishment; yet the fault was alike: so as if the Lord had not pardoned them, hee might euen iustly haue plagued them with the like iudgement. In a word, he telles them, that if

God doe spare, it is not to the end they should conclude with themselves, that their sinnes were lesse then those of the Sodomites; but that they were to attribute it rather vnto the mercie of God. Now there is no great diuersitie in that he attributes the name of the cite of Sodom to the Princes and the name of Gomorah to the people: but it rather shewes their condition to be both alike. But whereas hee repeats one thing twice; this diuersitie of names hath the greater elegancie. As if he should say, The Princes and people differ no more one from another, then Sodom differed from Gomorah. True it is that hee alludes to the diuers degrees of men, when he attributes two cities to them as it were apart: but in regard that Sodom equals Gomorah in value, wee see hee binds them vp both together as it were in one fardle. The summe then is; If any man wil iudge of the Princes and people, he shall find them agreeing as well together in one, euen as Sodom and Gomorah did. That is to say, there was neuer a barrell better hearing: but they were as like, as one egge is to another. For there was no more vprightnes in the princes, then in the people. The Prophet begins now therefore to vnmaske the Lewes, and that very iustly: for as it is a common thing with all hypocrites to shroud themselves vnder mercurious pretences, to the end they may not be espied: euen so stood the case with this people, who were stained with this vice aboue any other. And therefore the Prophets had no sharper conflicts with them, then about this matter. Pride also (with this bragging of stained holines) reigned amongst them; and they gloried no lesse in the noblenesse and excellencie of their nation, then of their outward ceremonies and seruice: by reason wherof this feueritie of the Prophet did greatly gall them. But in as much as it was needefull to draw out their villanies into light, the more they set vp their bristles, the more liuely doth the Prophet thunder against them. And thus must all hypocrites be serued.

The word of the Lord.] The Prophet takes the word of the Lord and the law, for one and the same thing. And yet notwithstanding I doubt not but hee vsed this word law of set purpose, to the end he might taxe their sottish opinion: For whilst they imagined to appease God with sacrifices which they offered without faith or repentance, they interpreted the law of God after their owne fantasies. By which words then he admonisheth them, that in alledging the authoritie of Moses, he brings in no new deuce of his owne, neither addes he any thing to the law; but that in hearing him, they should only heare the will of God, wherof hee faithfully enformeth them. Also that the law of God doth in no sort fauour or allow of their dealings in this point: to the end they should not thinke to beguile the Lord with a false persuasion of their owne righteousnes.

Verſ. 11. What haue I to doe with the multitude of your ſacrifices, ſaith the Lord? I am full of the burnt offerings of Rammes, and the fat of fed beaſts: and I deſire not the blood of Bullocks, nor of Lambs, nor of Goates.

Now Iſaiah brings in God ſpeaking, who interprets his owne meaning himſelfe. For it is not enough that the Lawgiuer doe command onely, but that he alſo ſhould adde a natiue expoſition to the Lawes, that they be not corrupted. Now it is not to be doubted, but that the former ſharpe reprehension was very ill taken: For what could one haue ſpoken more boldly or roundly againſt them? They gloried in the name of Abraham, bragging in the title of his children, and proudly vaunting themſelves thereof. For which cauſe the Prophet thus armes himſelfe with the authoritie of God againſt them. As if he ſhould ſay, Know you, that you haue not ſo much to doe with me, as with God himſelfe. Next he ſhewes what it is that God reſpects, and what his meaning is in demanding ſacrifices of them: namely, not that hee doth ſo much eſteeme of the ſacrificing of brute beaſts; but that they ſhould ſerue, as outward props and helpes of godlines. And therefore that the Iewes greatly deceiued themſelves, who put their cheefeſt holineſſe in ſuch outward ceremonies. For they thought they had diſcharged their duties very well, when they ſacrificed and offered their offerings: and when the Prophets required any thing more of them, then they complained as if they had beene ouer hardly dealt withall. But the Lord telles them that hee abhors and reiects their offerings. Now it may ſeeme that this is too ſtrict a courſe: for were they not the things which God himſelfe had inſtituted and commanded? But wee muſt note that as touching the commandements of God ſome ought to be obeyed ſimplie, and others for another end: as for example; The law commands, firſt, that we ſerue and honor God: ſecondly, that wee ſeek our neighbours profit. Theſe things are of themſelves pleaſing vnto God, and are abſolutely required of vs. But it is otherwiſe in regard of ceremonies, for they are exerciſes which are not ſimplie required in reſpect of themſelves, but for another end. And the like we may ſay of faſting. For the Kingdom of God ſtands not in abſtinance from meats and drinks: faſting therefore hath reſpect to an higher end.

God therefore hath not ſo inſtituted ceremonies as if hee would bee appeaſed by the worke wrought; but that the people ſhould by them exerciſe themſelves vnto godlines: and ſhould thereby bee the more ſtirred and trained vp in faith, and in his pure worſhip and ſeruiſe. But hypocrits are onely forward and carefull in obſeruing theſe, as if the principall matter of religion conſiſted in them: and thinke themſelves the moſt deuout people in the world, whiſt they wearie and tire themſelves a long time in the obſeruation thereof. And that they might yet appeare the more holy; they euer lightly ad ſome thing of their owne, and inuent ſome noueltie from day to day: but in the meane time they wickedly abuſe the holy ordinances of God, in that they refer them not to their right ends. All their ceremonies therefore are nothing elſe in God his account, but prophanations of his holy worſhip and ſeruiſe. For whiſt they reſt fettered as it were in the bare and naked outward action only, what difference is there betwene their ſacrifices, and thoſe of the Gentiles? which wee know are ſtuffed full of ſacriledge, becauſe they are not referred to a right and lawfull end. This then is the reaſon why the Lord reiects all ſuch ceremonies notwithstanding himſelfe had inſtituted them: to wit, becauſe the people looked not to the right end and vie, for which they were ordained. Herein then ſtode the continuall conſtict which the Prophets had with the people; namely, in plucking off theſe vizards from their faces: and in ſhewing them that the Lord did not content himſelfe with outward ſeruiſes, neither could be appeaſed with ſuch faire ſhewes.

And the faithfull ſeruants of the Lord haue euery where experience of the ſame combats euen at this day. For men doe alwaies meaſure God by their owne ell; and thinke to appeaſe him with outward appearances, and will not be brought by any meanes to offer vp vnto him a pure and vpright heart. But Ieremiah will eaſily diſſolve all the difficultie of this place. Fer in the 7. chapter, he ſaith out of the mouth of the Lord: if then I redeemed your fathers out of the Land of Egypt, I did not command them to ſacrifice to me: only I commanded them that they ſhould heare my voyce and keepe my commandements. Wherein he ſhewes, that all the obſeruation of the ceremonies did depend vpon the word; and that they are vaine and vnprofitable, if they be ſeparated from it, euen as if one ſhould diuide the ſoule from the bodie. Hereinto alſo belongs the argument of the fiftieth Pſalme: Will I eate the fleſh of fat Bulles, or wil I drinke the blood of Goats? Offer vnto God praife, and pay thy vowes vnto the moſt high. Ieremiah alſo in another place ſaith: Truſt not in lying words ſaying, The Temple of the Lord, This is the Temple of the Lord, but rather amend your waies, &c. Alſo Micheah: Doth the Lord delight in thousands of Rammes, or in ten thouſands of fat beaſts of the vallies? By and by after he addes: I will ſhew thee O man what is good: and what it is that the Lord thy God requireth of thee, to wit, To doe iudgements, to loue mercie, and to humble thy ſelfe ſo walke with thy God: Mich. 6. By which places it appeares, that God reiects ceremonies, becauſe they were ſeparate from the word, as from their ſoule or life. Whereby we may ſee how great the blindnes of men is, who cannot bee perſwaded that all the paines they take this way in the ſeruiſe of God is vnprofitable vnleſſe the integritie of the heart goe before.

And this vice is not onely rooted in the common people, but almoſt in all men; yea, euen in thoſe who in their owne opinion thinke they excell moſt. From hence it is at this day that this goodly deuice of the worke wrought, cannot bee pulled out of the minds of many; which the doctors of the Papists haue found out. But it is not man which speakes here, but God himselfe: who by an immutable decree, declares that men sacrifice vnto him in vaine: and that whatsoeuer they doe else, is without fruite, vnlesse they call vpon him by a true faith.

Verf. 12. When yee come to appeare before mee, who required this of your hands to tread in my courts?

Behold here a most excellent refutation of Counterfeit worship; when God affirms they came not before him as hee commanded them: pronouncing in generall that it is but lost labour when men offer him that which he requires not: because he will be no otherwise serued then according to his commandement. Whence is it then that men doe so please themselves in such inuentions, but because they vnderstand not that all their seruing of God is vnprofitable and odious in his eyes? For otherwise they would by and by thinke thus with themselves, Surely, God requires obedience as the principall: neither would they with such ouerweening extoll their owne workes; which hee on the other side scornes and derides: not onely for that he receiues not profit at all thereby; but because hee would not haue men to attribute that vnto him, which they haue rashly inuented of their owne heads without his commandement: and also because hee cannot endure that men should establish their owne fantasies, in stead of his law. Although to the end he may yet touch them neerer to the quicke, he by and by adds, That it is a seruice falsely so called; which he esteemes to be but lost labour: namely, that in assembling themselves in the Temple, they did nothing else but wear the paucements thereof with their feete: as if he should say, You must needs thinke that I am much bound to you, for beating mine eares thus with your feined prayers.

Verf. 13. Bring no more oblations in vaine: incense is an abomination vnto me: I cannot suffer your new moones nor sabbaths, nor solemne daies (it is iniquitie) nor solemne assemblies.

This is a very profitable admonition to repress y^e inordinate appetite of those who ceased not obstinately, to follow their vaine and feined seruices, that at least being warned of God, they might repent, if at any hand they would be admonished. But it appeares by this place, how obstinate hypocrits are in their false confidence, being once hardned therein, because they cannot possiblic heare the Lord, although hee manifestly warne them that they should cease to lose their labour as they doe. Incense is an abomination &c.

That he might pricke them vnto the quicke indeede, he passeth yet further, and tels them that such seruice is not only vnprofitable, but that he also detests it, as abominable vnto him: and very iustly; for it is an high sacrifice to prophane the seruice of God; vnder which they falsely shrouded themselves. For euen as God esteemes nothing more deare and precious vnto him the his glory; so is nothing lesse tolerable vnto him, then to see it trodden vnder feete by any corruption whatsoever: which yet is then done, when euer yame thing is set vp in stead of his true worship. Some are deceiued in vnderstanding this place, thinking that the Prophet speakes of the abolishing of the law; for that is not his meaning: but he rather brings the people of his time to the true obseruation of the ceremonies; and shewes wherefore, and to what end they were instituted. The seruice of God was spirituall euen from the beginning of the world. And whereas there were other exercises diuers from ours in the old Testament, it was in regard of men, and not of God; for there is no changing with him; Lames 1. 17. but he applied himselfe to the weakenes of man. This gouernment then was fit for the Iewes, as an Abce for children. Therefore he shewes to what end this gouernment was established, and what was the true vse of ceremonies.

Verf. 14. My soule hateth your new moones and your appointed feasts: they are a burthen vnto me: I am wearie to beare them.

The Prophet adds nothing different from the former doctrine, but in generall pronounceth of al ceremonies, "where there is not spirituall truth ioyned but onely a false pretence appeareth, that they are not onely things vnprofitable," but wicked. From hence we must obserue, that we labour but in vaine vnlesse we worship God aright as it is meete, and himselfe prescribeth: For if truth be it indeede which pleaseth God in all things; then much more doth he looke for it in the worship which is done to his Maiestie. Moreouer our labour is not onely lost (as hath been said heretofore) but the worship of God is hereby peruered, which is the greatest villanie that can be committed. Now all superstitions are so many corruptions of the pure worship of God: and therefore it follows that they are wicked and detestable. Superstition then is to be esteemed either by the thing it selfe, or by the affection of the heart from whence it proceeds. By the thing it selfe; when men dare bring in of their owne heades, that which God hath not commanded. As all those things are which superstition (commonly called deuotion) hath begotten. One will set vp and Idoll; another will build a chappel; the third will found yeerely penions to haue Masses said daily for him; others, such like paltrie stuffe without end or measure. Now when men take vpon them to be so malepert as to forge new seruices:

* Viz. In the performer; as after appeareth by M. Caluins owne words. * i. As he performeth them, that is, an hypocrite his action is vnprofitable to himselfe and impious.

1. Sam. 15. 22.

uices, there hath superstition the full swing. It may also be in the affection of the heart, when men doe vse the ceremonies (which God hath allowed and commanded) in outward appearance: who in the meane while sticke fast there; neuer aiming at the marke, and truth of them. As for example, the Lewes hold the ceremonies ordained by Moses with tooth and naile, but yet they leaue that which is the principall behind them. For they regard a good conscience nothing at all; a man shall not heare them speake of faith, or of repentance; they haue no knowledge of their spirituall miserie: and (which is worst of all) they separate Christ from their satisfices, giuing no place at all to the truth. Wherein we cleerely see the truth of that which wee haue taught heretofore; to wit, that it was a bastarding & painted shew which they made: so as their sacrifices differed in nothing from the sacrifices of the heathen. We neede not wonder then if the Lord call them an abomination. I will not stand to scan the phrascs of speech which the Prophet here vscth; they are diuers: and yet notwithstanding they are not to be lightly passed ouer. For the Lord well discernes how great the rage of man is to forge new seruices, and therefore he vscth amplifications to depresse this vice the more; and againe pronounceth, that hee hates them. Besides, for as much as men doe flatter themselues and are perswaded that the Lord will make some account of their dreames and store of deuices, he on the contrarie faith that he abhorres and detests them.

Verf. 15. And when you shall stretch out your hands I will hide mine eies from you: and though you make many prayers, I will not heare: for your hands are full of blood.

IT came not from any superstition that the people in old time vsed to stretch out their hands in prayer: neither came this gesture of any vaine or friuolous lust, as many others haue done: But in regard that nature her selfe thrusteth forth her hands to seeke for that which the desirerh: testifying euen by outward signes that she hath her recourse vnto God. Therefore in as much as we cannot stie vp vnto him, wee list vp our selues as it were vnto him by this signe or gesture. True it is that the fathers had no commandement to doe it: notwithstanding they vsed it as being inspired of God. And by this very signe are all idolaters conuinced euen of sottish blindness: for they protest by this outward gesture that they haue their refuge in God, and yet notwithstanding in effect they withdraw their hearts from him to idoles. Also to the end the superstitious might be the more conuinced, the Lord was pleased that this custome should alwaies continue in vse amongst them. The Prophet then condemnes not the lifting vp of the hands simple, but their hypocritie, whereby in appearance they made shew to call vpon God, but in their hearts they were farre from him, as in the 29. chapter he doth more fully charge them. The Lord confesseth indeed that he is neere; but it is to those that call vpon him in truth, Psaln. 145. 18. For where hypocritie reigneth, there can be no true inuocation. That therefore which is said in another place is not contrarie to this; namely, when they shall stretch forth their hands vnto me, I will heare them. For the Lord there speaks of that inuocation which proceedes of faith. For faith is the mother of prayer: but if faith be absent, prayer is a meere mocking of God. This he yet amplifies further when hee tels them that he will not heare their cries, although they should multiply their prayers: As if hee should say; Be it that you neuer cease praying, yet this your diligence shall profit you nothing: For hypocrites haue this vice also peculiar vnto them, that they imagine the more they babble, & more holy they are, and that they can the more easily obtaine the thing they aske. But he refels their babbling her, as we see.

For your hands.] Now he begins to declare more plainly why he abhors, yea, reiects their prayers, as also their sacrifices with disdain; namely, because they presented themselues before his face with a brauerie full of dissimulation: and in the meane while were cruell, bloody and giuen to euery kind of iniquitie. Now howsoeuer he by and by addes other sorts of iniquities, he yet speaks thus notwithstanding in regard that he had mentioned the lifting vp of the hands: and faith, that euen in them, they bare a signe and marke of their impieties, so as they need not to marueile why they be so sharply heaté back. For otherwise this manner of speech, To list vp pure hands, was not only in vse among the Prophets and Apostles, but also euen amongst prophane authors, who were pricked forward by the very instinct of nature, to exercise themselues in reproofing the sottishnes of mé: or rather it may be the Lord plucked this confessio or ceremonie from them, to the end that at the leastwise there might alwaies be some appearance of true religio amongst thé.

Notwithstanding the Prophet meant not to charge the Lewes to be such theeues or murderers as rob and kill by the high waies side: but hee strikes at their priuie deceits and opressions whereby they got other mens goods into their owne hands. For God iudgeth otherwise then man doth: man espieth not the priuie iuglings and wylie practises of the wicked by which they are accustomed smoothly and cunningly to beguile the simple ones; or if so be they chauce to come to light, they are extenuated, and not examined according to the weights of the Sanctuarie: But God pulling out these gallants by the poll into light, who were wont to shroud their robbeties vnder honest titles, pronounceth before all men that they are murderers. For if thou kill a man, be it after what manner thou wilt, then art thou a murderer, whether thou cuttest his throate, or takest away his maintenance, and that which is conuenient for him. He speaks not of them then which were openly openly wicked, being detested of all for their dishonest dealing: but of such as caried two faces vnder one hood; professing themselues good men in outward shew, and kept their credit with the world. And this is a circumstance well worthy our obseruation. For thus must wee procede at this day against those lank and emptie fellows who will cloake their villanies vnder vizardes of honestie, and in the meane while, what by deceit, violence, or some such other iniurie, they oppress the poore and needie. Although then they impudently cry out that we doe them wrong to compare them to thecues and murderers, yet must they be reprehended with such seueritie, as the Prophet vsed here to their fellows. For when wee speake in the name of God, we must not iudge according to the reason and opinion of men: but must with all boldnes pronounce that which the Lord his iudgement approueth.

Vers. 16. Wash you, make you cleane: take away the euill of your workes from before mine eyes: cease to doe euill.

Now hee exhortes the Iewes to repentance, and shewes the true way to come thereto, if so be they meant y^e their seruices should be allowed of God. Whence wee gather, that nothing can please God, vnlesse it come from a pure conscience. For God is not like a man, that he should esteeme our workes by the outside of them. Men do many times praise the worke which a wicked man hath done, but in God his sight (who chiefly respects the heart) the polluted conscience defiles all the rest of the vertues. And that is it which the Prophet Haggie teacheth, setting an example of the ancient ceremonie before them: namely, that whatsoever a polluted man had touched was vnclane: whence he concludes, that no cleane thing can proceed from the wicked. Our Prophet hath already affirmed, that it is in vaine to offer sacrifices vnto God, in vaine to make vowes, in vaine to call vpon him, if the integritie of the heart do not sanctifie the outward seruice. Wherefore to the ende the Iewes should not labour any longer for nothing, he requires this cleannes: and begins with a generall reformation, to the end they should not think they had bleared the eyes of God by doing their duties in some one or two things only. And thus must they be handled who haue estranged themselves from God. Wee must not touch a disease or two of a sick infected body: but if care be had to heale it truly and soundly, we must be forced to call them backe, and to begin all anew: yea the contagion of the disease must be purged wholly from within; that so they may begin to please God, whereas before they were detestable and abominable in his sight. And no doubt also by this Similitude of washing, hee exhortes them to purge themselves from their inward vnclanneses. But vnto this hee will by and by ad outward workes.

Now in that he commands them to wash

themselues, it is not because men come to repentance by their owne proper mouing, and free will; but he shewes that no other remedie will serue the turne; vnlesse they appeare pure and cleane before God. Now we know that the Spirit of God is wont to attribute that to men, which himselfe workes in them, who therefore is called cleane water, Ezech. 36. 25. because repentance is a worke proceeding from him.

Take away. Now the Prophet descends to the fruites of repentance. For he not onelie declares in plaine termes that they ought to be cleanned and washed; but he commands them to shew a testimonie of their change in their whole life, and in all their actions. Notwithstanding hee confirms the former sentence; namely, that the sithines of the people is before the Lord, which defiling and stayning all their workes takes away all the goodnes which might seeme to be in them. He makes expresse mention of the eyes of God, to the end that whilst he beholds them, they should not think to deprime him of seeing, and so make him a companion with them of their blindness. Cease from euill. He goes on still to blame their life. Some expound this place, as if by euill doing; the Prophet should vnderstand euill liuing: But it ought properly to be vnderstood of those misdoings whereby a mans neighbour is offended. Seeing in the next verse following, it is said, Learn to doe well: where the clause, To your neighbour, should be supplied. For he speaks of the iniuries, and good turnes which our neighbour receiues of vs. Now because repentance hath his seate in the heart, therefore he sets it forth by these kinds, whereby men may come somewhat neere to the knowledge of it. For euery man would be taken for a good man: but the outward workes shew what euery man is within. He brings them then to externall workes, that by them they should shew forth the truth of their repentance. Now hee comprehends the fruites of repentance vnder two members, to wit, a ceasing to doe euill; and a learning to doe well. For first wee must abstaine from doing all wrong: yet so, as wee deale not like those prodigall ones who would be esteemed liberall, when they take from one to giue to another: neither yet like those pinchpennies who thinke they haue quit themselues well when they are carefull in keeping their own, doing others no harme; and yet in the meane while will doe good to none at all. His meaning is then, to comprehend both the one and the other: for the obseruation of the second table consisteth in these two points.

Vers. 17. Learn to doe well: seeke iudgement, relieue the oppressed: iudge the fatherlesse, and defend the widowes.

* Or, him who is transgressed vnderfoote.

Even as immediatly before, where he commanded them to abstaine from euill, hee therein comprehended a continuall exercise thereof: as if hee should say, Hitherto your whole life hath been nothing but a committing ring of euill : now on the otherſide he teacheth them to bee mecke and courteous ; and drawes them to learne what it is : euen as if he had had to doe with new apprentices, and raw ſchollers. And firſt he commands them to ſeeke iudgement : others translate, Examine your ſelues ; which I approue not. For by the word ſeeke, hee ſignifies a further thing, namely, an actuall studie, as they call it. Alſo by the word iudgement he comprehends whatſoever is good and right, as if he ſhould ſay, Study to be vpriight.

Relieue the oppreſſed.] The Prophet after his accuſtomed manner comes to particulars, after he hath ſpoken of things in general: and howſoever he had alreadie exhorted them to welding and equite in ſpeciall manner ; yet now willing to preſſe them more neerely, he reckons vp ſome particular kindes thereof in plaine words, by which hee comes to a more ample and full declaration of the general. For otherwiſe men would alwaies goe for iuſt and vpriight ; and hardly ſhould you ſtirre or moue them with generall doctrine. But when one comes once to particulars, euen as if one ſhould bring them out by the polles into open view, then they are conſtrained to ſubmit themſelues ; or at the leaſt to become more tractable : whereof we haue daily experience.

Iudge.] The Prophet makes choice here of two particulars, which do beſt of all lay open and diſcouer the wickednes of men. For they very ſeldom take the cauſes of the widow and fatherleſſe in hand, becauſe they looke not for the reward. And hence it is then that poore creatures are expoted to infinite ſorts of iniuries ; namely, becauſe no man is haſtie to ſuccour them : for who will ſerue in the place of iuſtice for nothing ? nay are there not many who giue themſelues to poll and pill the poore and needie ? And doth not this manifeſtly ſhew, how few make conſcience of executing iudgement ? Indeed it is no wonder if the rich and mightie haue friends to maintain and vphold their cauſes, ſeing they are drawne and allured thereunto, not of conſcience, but for hope of gaine. But the Lord here ſhewes that he takes care for the fatherleſſe and widowes ; and that he will iudge and reuenge their cauſe, if any haue offered them violence. And as much he ſaith of all other diſtreſſed, who being held down by violence and tyrannicall cruelty, do ſigh and grone vnder the oppreſſion of them who are more mightie then they.

This ought to miniſter a ſoueraigne conſolation to all the children of God : whoſe condition it is to poſſeſſe their ſoules by patience. For how proudly ſoever the wicked aduance themſelues, yet ſhall not that hinder the faithfull to triumph in their anguiſhes. Let this ſentence therefore bee alwaies ingrauen vpon their hearts, The Lord will ſuccour vs : and, Although men deſpiſe vs, yet will he care for vs : He will helpe the helpleſſe, and will defend their cauſe.

Vers. 18. Come now and let vs reaſon together, ſaith the Lord : though your ſinnes were as crimſin, they ſhall bee made white as ſnow : though they were red as ſkarlet, they ſhall be as white.

COME NOW.] The Expositors haue bene wont to translate, I pray you, or Then : but me thinks the aſſurance of a good cauſe is here noted ; ſo as the Hebrew particule now, ſerueth for an exhortatiō. For he ſhewes that the Iewes ſhould be able to make no replies, and that they would remaine ſtarke dumbe ; although long time ſhould be giuen them to iuſtifie themſelues. And ſurely to muſt hypocrites be dealt withall : for they are ſkillfull to pleade boldly with God, and will bee ſeeking out ſtaring holes. Therefore he ſaith if they bee minded to plead, he is as readie as they.

But ſome may demand what reaſon the Prophet hath to ſtand chiefly vpon the duties of the ſecond Table, rather thē vpon the duties of the firſt. For we know that in diuiding of the Law, it is not without cauſe that God hath placed the firſt Table formeſt, as in the chiefe ranke. Neither is it to be doubted, but as it is firſt in order, ſo it is alſo formeſt in dignitie. I anſwere, that the Prophets Quest.
haue ſpoken diuerſly in reproouing the hypocriſie of men. For ſometimes they complaineth that the Sabbath is violated : Otherwhiles that prayer is neglected : but chiefly and principally they crie out againſt idolatry and ſuperſtitions. But our Prophet complaineth here, that men made no account of their duties towards their neighbours. Yet ſo it is, that all tends to one end : namely, that our workes are vaine before God, when they come not frō a pure conſcience : and that we haue no feare of him at all before our eyes. Now they are wont to ſet forth the feare of God, one while by the calling vpon his name ; another while by the obſeruation of the Sabbath ; and ſometimes by other workes. But in regard that a man beſt knowes the certaine difference which is betweene the true ſeruite of God and hypocriſie, by workes of charitie ; the Prophet keeps a very direct courſe in mentioning of them. For hypocrites are very diligent in outward ſeruices and ceremonies : and yet are full of enuie within. They buiſt with pride and contempt of their brethren ; they burne with auarice and ambition : neither can they eaſily be vnmaſked whillt they couer themſelues vnder the performance of outward ceremonies. Such then muſt be examined by this rule, euen as by a touchſtone, and thereby bee tried whether they haue the true feare of God in them or not. We may well bee deceiued indeede if we will iudge of the godlines of a man by the ſecond Table onlie ; but if any man ſhall exerciſe himſelfe in the duties of the commandments of the firſt Table, which are teſtimonies of godlines and of the ſeruite of God, then muſt he be brought to this triall, to wit, whether hee walke without deceit with his brethren : whether hee abſtaine from wrong and violence : whether hee be true in his word and promiſes : and whether hee carrie himselfe louingly towards his brethren. And this is the cause why Iesus Christ saith, that Mercy, Iudgement, and Truth are the principal parts of the law, (when he reprocheth the Pharisees for laying aside the care of true iustice, in that they pleased themselves onely in pectie things, tithing Mint, Anis, & Cumin, Mat. 23. 23. By faith in that place he vnderstands fidelity, which we commonly call loyaltie: and by Iudgement all vprightnes when we render to our neighbour that which to him appertaineth: not suffering him to be wronged by others, but helping him as farre as we are able. But if these be the principall parts of the law, in what degree shall we place the commandments of the first Table? I answer, that they still keepe their order and dignitie: but by these of the second, which Christ straightly requireth, whereupon hee also insists, the hypocrisie of hypocrits is chiefly discouered, so as a man may more plainly discern there-by whether the true feare of God be in any one in truth or not. And in the same sense must that be taken where it is said, I wil haue mercie, and not sacrifice: Hosea 6.6. 1. Sam. 15. 22. Matth. 9. 13. & 12. 7. For mercie is a declaration and prooue of true pietie. Moreover because it is a true demonstration of loue, it pleaseth God of it felicitie: but sacrifices, please him for another end. Now it appears sufficiently, as I thinke, why Isaiah rather mentioneth here the doing of good to our neighbours, then faith, or calling vpon Gods name: as also why the Prophets doe speake so diuersly when they meane to bring hypocrits backe to the true seruice of God, and to shew it forth by the outward fruits.

Though your sinnes &c. This is as much as if he should haue said, I accuse not innocent persons, neither take I pleasure to pleade thus with you; but know, that the cause is great that makes me thus vrge and accuse you. For hypocrits are wont to quarrel with God, as though he dealt too sharplie with them, or as though he were vnappesable. Yea in their obstinacie they find out this excuse, That it is in vaine for them to enduor to returne into fauour with God. And if all excuses faile them, yet notwithstanding they haue this stuff, That they ought not to be pressed so neere: and that men must be borne withall in some things; yea euen the best of all. Therefore the Prophet prevents them, and brings in the Lord speaking thus; For my part if neede require, I refuse not to pleade with you; for thereby it shall appeare that your obstinacie is the cause why we are not at vnitic together: bring with you therefore cleannes of heart, and then all our strife shall cease. I would not stand to pleade with you, if you would offer me the sacrifices of an vpright heart. Now from hence wee may gather a wonderfull consolation, namely, that God pleades not with vs, as if he meant to pursue vs with rigor. For if we would earnestly conuert and turtie to him, hee would by and by receiue vs into fauor & blot out the remembrance of all our offences, so as he would not call one of them into account. For he is not like men, of whom one cannot obtaine pardon for the least offence, that shall bee committed against them. Nay, on the contrarie, he is readie to cleanse and pardon vs: so farre off is it that we haue any cause to complaine of his ouer great rigoroufnes. For he contentes himselfe with the cleannes of the heart; and if there be any sinne that breakes out, besides our purpose, he forgives it, by pardoning such as haue prouoked him.

Verf. 19. If yee will consent and obey, yee shall eate the good things of the land.

Isaiah still pleades the cause of God against the people: and in briefe affirms, that all the calamities which the people sustained ought to be imputed to their owne default: and that they were to blame themselves for not recouering a more happie and comfortable estate. Why so? Because God for his part is alwaies readie to pardon their sinnes, if they harden not their owne hearts against him. But for as much as it seemes, that the Prophet placeth felicitie here, in the will and power of man, the Papiſts contend with open mouth that men haue power of their owne free mouing to doe good or euill. Is it so? As if God discoured here how great the abilitie of men is; when hee acculeth their obstinacie. But he should then say in vaine, if yee will consent, if so be it were not in their power. I answer, that howsoeuer the choice bee not in our owne power, as they would make vs beleue it is, yet God iustly chargeth sinners to be the voluntarie authors of their euils, because they pull downe the wrath of God vpon their owne heads willingly, and without constraint. I grant then, that it is a speciall gift of God for a man to enduor to doe good: but it is also as true, that the wickednes of reprobates hindreth them from applying themselves thereunto: and therefore that al the fault of their hardning abides and remains in themselves. And hereupon dependes this reproach, namely, That the people might haue had an happie issue, and a comfortable life, if they would haue become reachable and obedient to God. For seeing that of his owne nature hee desires nothing more then to doe good, we may iustly impute it vnto our owne malice, and vnthankfulness, that this liberalitie which hee daily offereth, comes not vnto vs.

On the contrarie, he addes a terrible and grievous threatning, to wit, that the vengeance of God is readie to cease vpon them, to the end they might feele that the contempters of God shall not remaine unpunished. We must also note that there is but one only rule of well liuing; that is, the obedience which wee yeeld vnto God, and to his word. Also in these words, there is a transported sentence by a figure which wee call Hypallage, because the speech should be resolved thus, If you be of a readie mind, and haue full consent of will to obey; or else thus, and yet in the same sense: If ye hearken and obey me, and my word. Seeing then that God placeth the felicitie of men in obedience, it followes that that our life is then well ordered when we heare God ſpeaking, and that we obey him in all things. Now we may ſee how great the wickednes of men is when they vouchſafe not to lend their eare to God, but reſect the felicitie which hee offereth and prepareth for them. Truly their froward affections ought to bee tamed, to the end that whiſt theſe poore wretches draw the wrath of God vpon their owne heads, they might not wittingly and willingly caſt themſelues headlong vpon the edge of the ſword. Wee muſt note alſo, that in the verſe following, which is the concluſion, he threatens them with extreme ruine, if ſo be they ſtill continue to rebel obſtinately againſt God.

The good things of the earth. He means the fruites which the earth brings forth for the neceſſitie of our life. For the earth ſeemes to bee ſomewhat vnkind when it brings not forth her fruites, but keeps them as it were in her boſome. Although I make no queſtion but hee alludes to the promiſes of the law, where God promiſeth that he will bleſſe the ground of ſuch as walke in his commandments, that they may haue abundance of all good things. And yet hee offereth not the commodities of this life vnto vs to the end he would ſlay vs in an earthly felicity, which hypocrits indeed only gaſp after, wholly employing all their wits thereabouts: but that by the contemplation thereof, we ſhould liſt vpon minds to the heauenly and ſpirituall felicity: as alſo that by the taſte of his ſo great goodnes he might accuſtome vs to reſt in the eſtate of eternall happines. Now the ancient people were inured rather to be called by ſuch ſhadowes and reſemblances to the heauenly inheritance, namely, by the taſte of earthly benefites. And this difference is well to be noted, that we may applie this doctrine to our ſelues according to that degree whereunto God hath been pleaſed to exalt vs. Now the Prophet would teach vs that true felicity, with the complements thereof, conſiſts in the obedience of God: alſo, that the wicked, in rebelling againſt him, doe draw vpon themſelues all manner of calamities: and that we therefore ought to impute all the euils which we endure, to our finnes and rebellions, as to the proper cauſe thereof.

Verſ. 20. But if yee reſuſe and be rebellious, yee ſhall be denoured with the ſword: for the mouth of the Lord hath ſpoken it.

THE wicked alwaies thinke the puniſhments which they ſuffer are farre greater then their fault, although God deale mercifully and fauourably with them. And howſoever they dare not wholly iuſtifie themſelues; yet notwithstanding they ceaſe not (as we haue ſaid heretofore) to accuſe him of too great ſeuericitie. But the Prophet ſhewes how they ſhall bee no end of their plagues which they often ſuffer, till they bee wholly conſumed: as alſo that there are yet more heauie chaſtiſements prepared for them of God, that they ſhould not imagine to eſcape with thoſe light ſtipps wherewith they were hitherto ſmiten. The Papiſts wreſt this place to eſtabliſh their free will. And thus they reaſon: If men be happie when they will obey God, then it followes that it is in their owne power to will. Behold a childliſh argument. For the Lord by the mouth of his Prophet diſputes not what or how great our power of will is to good or euill: but admoniſheth, that it is by our owne default that we enioy not the abundance of all good things: and further that the neceſſities wherewith wee bee pinched, are the juſt rewards of our diſobedience and rebellion. Now there is great ods betwixt demanding, whether a man bee able to make his will which is euill, good; and, whether by his wicked will (which is his owne by nature) hee draws vpon himſelfe all the plagues which he endureth. Theſe ſubtile and craftie doctours therefore do vniuſtly and falſe ground their doctrine of free choice of good and euill vpon this place.

For the mouth of the Lord hath ſpoken it. Because threatnings ordinarily doe not much moue ſuch as are carried away with their inordinate deſires and luſts, the Prophet to the end he might awaken them from out of their ſo great drouſines, admoniſheth them that this ſentence proceeds not from the mouth of a mortall man, but that it is come out of the mouth of the eternal God, who is not mutable as men are, but is alwaies as good as his word. He ſets the authoritie of God before them then to feare and terrifie them; to the end that ſuch among them as were fallen into a dead ſleepe in their vices, might earnestly giue themſelues to hearken to his threatnings.

Verſ. 21. How is the faithfull citie become an harlot! It was full of iudgement and iuſtice lodged therein, but now they are murderers.

TO the end the reprehention might be the more forcible, and that their wickednes might be ſo more deteſtable, in that this people were thus reuoluted from God and from all integritie and vprightnes, he cries out as if he ſaw ſome ſtrange and vnwonted thing. And ſurely it was an horrible change, that the people whom the Lord had choiſen and ſet apart to bee a royall prieſthood to himſelfe, ſhould thus fall from ſo ſoueraigne pietie and godlines, into the gulfe and ſinke of all ſinne and wickednes. But he ſpeakes chieflie of the citie of Ieruſalem, which was the royall ſeate of the Sanctuarie of God: hee complains that ſhe which heretofore was a faithfull garden of iuſtice, is now become a denne of theeuces: and that of an holy and chaſt virgin, ſhe is become an harlot. To the ende therefore hee might make the baſtard Iewes (who were farre from the integritie of the holy Patriarks) the more aſhamed, hee takes vnto himſelfe the perſon of a man aſtoniſhed, who wondreth and reaſoneth with himſelfe selfe how such a thing could come to passe. Also in this word faulshfull, hee alludes, as I thinke, to the faith in mariage which the wife ought to keepe to her husband. I grant that the signification of the word reacheth further: but waying the circumstance narrowly, I thinke it not amisse to take the word faulshfull, for chaste. For a little after he opposeth the contrarie member; calling her harlot. So as being in times past a loyall wife keeping faith to her husband, shee is now become an harlot past shame, and blussheth not at her villanie. Now it is an vsuall thing in the Scriptures to call the Church of God by the name of his wife: which degree of honour Ierusalem kept whilst shee retained her spirituall chastitie and persecuted in the lawfull and pure worship of God: but as soone as the gaue ouer that, then shee became an harlot.

Now it is not to be doubted but this astonishment of the Prophet was ioyned with great sorrow. For it ought to make our haire to stand an end, to see men revolt and slide backe from God; and forsake the faith and allegiance which once they promised him. Neither can it be but men of any good heart, will be deeply touched with extreame sorrow at beholding of such a wofull spectacle. We reade, Luk. 15. 10, how the Angels reioyce at the conuersion of a sinner, and therefore they are much grieued at the perdition of any one of them. But how much more heauie and sorrowfull are they when they behold the ruine and destruction of a whole citie and Church?

Now this admiration carries with it a complaint: as if the Prophet should haue said to Ierusalem; From what an excellent and flourishing estate art thou fallen? into what miserie hast thou plunged thy selfe? What shame and dishonour hast thou laid thy selfe open vnto? For in making mention of her former estate, in which shee had flourished and had been honourable accounted of, hee thereby prouokes her to bee so much the more moued; so as she who in times past had been an honest mother of a family, should haue much more care of her honour and reputation, then such a one as hath passed her whole life in all kind of wicked and leude behaviour.

She was full of Iudgement.] He shewes what the fruites of this loyaltie was in times past. We may take iudgement for vprightnes only, or, if any will, he may take iusstice for giuing to euery one that which to him belongeth: and iudgements for taking the cause of the innocent in hand; and reuenging the poore and needie: For so the Scripture indeede vseth them, when these two words are ioyned together. But because they are not wholly ioyned together in this place, I take iudgement simple for vprightnes; as being one, and the same thing twise spoken, to manifest it the more clearly.

But now they are murderers] Here hee shewes how Ierusalem is become an harlot. For whereas iustice and equitie were in times past highly in estimation in her eyes: now on the contrarie shee is full of murders. Now he meanes not murderers and theenes onely, as hath been said: but those who vnder colour of iustice drew other mens goods to themselves by deceit, and violence: and lastly those who walked not plainly and simple with their neighbours, in what estimation soeuer they were: as sometimes, may very often it fall out, that the most wicked are the most praised. Now from this estate whereunto Ierusalem was come, let vs consider after what manner Satan for the most part exerciseth his tyrannie ouer the Church of God, euen as if the bridle were laid in his necke. For if euer there were a Church, it was in Ierusalem; and yet notwithstanding Isaiah saith, that it was become a denne of theenes, or as a caue wherein men were deuoured and swallowed vp. But if Satan had his swinge so there; let vs not meruaile if the case bee now alike with vs; but let vs rather giue order that we be not corrupted by so wicked examples.

Verf. 22. Thy siluer is become drosse: thy wine is mixt with water.

THE Prophet speaks by a figure: and vnder two similitudes, shewes here, how that although things were not wholly ouerturnd in appearance, yet that their estate notwithstanding was changed and corrupted in such wise, as it was far from that which it was wont to be. For he saith, that drosse shined in stead of Siluer: and that there was nothing in their wine but colour, without any saour: as if he should haue said, Howsoeuer thou makest a faire shew of goodnes, yet there is nothing that is pure to bee found in thee. Thy wine which was wont to be of it selfe, is now mixed; and howsoeuer it deceiues them that looke vpon it, yet by the taste one may know it is corrupted. Now all this is to none other end, but that the Iewes, hauing once purged themselves from all dissimulation, should begin to confesse their finnes, and not to please themselves any longer in them, as hypocrites are wont to doe. To which purpose these Similitudes which he here vseth, are very apt and fitting: for the drosse of siluer hath some resemblance with siluer; also the water that is mixed with the wine, hath some shew of the colour of the wine it selfe: and yet notwithstanding they are farre off from the puritie of the things, which they resemble. So the hypocrites paint themselves with the colour of false siluer, although indeed they deserue no more commendations then drosse: yea they are more detestable therein, then if they were openly wicked. Yet notwithstanding, they oppose themselves against God and men, and no lesse disloyally then wickedlie paint ouer themselves with vanitie and vaine shewes to couer their malice withall.

Verf. 23. Thy Princes are rebellions and companions of theenes: euery one loueth gifts, and follo weth after rewards, they iudge not the fatherles, neither doth she doth the widowes cauſe come before them.

Here is an alluſion and meeting together of wordes in this place, which hath a verie good grace; as if hee ſhould ſay, Thy Princes are piicers. Neither ſpeakes he ſo of the princes, as if the people were holy and blameleſſe, but hee toucheth the wellſpring of the miſchiefe: for euen as no euill is more hurtfull, then that which comes from the head, and diſperſeth it ſelfe into all the members; ſo alſo is there nothing more pernicious in a commonwealth, then a corrupt and wicked Prince, who ſpreadeth abroad his corruptions ouer all the body, as well by example, as by giuing libertie thereunto: Prou. 29. 12. From whence alſo came the proverb, Such a maſter ſuch a man. It is all one then as if the Prophet ſhould haue ſaid, that it was no particular vice that reigned among the common people, but that the Princes, and great Lords had let looſe the reins to all wickednes. Alſo there is a cloſe amplification in the word Princes; becauſe it is a thing much to be lamented, that the euill ſhould come from thence, where remedie ſhould be ſought. He inynes one particular, which is, that they are companions of theeuers: by which words he ſignifies, that they were ſo farre off from endeuoring themſelues to reſpreſſe theeueries and wrongs, that on the contrarie, they drew gaine and profit from thence: and he calles them theeuers iuſtly, who in taking part of the pray, gaue licence to others to ſeale. Neither can it be auoided when a Iudge ſuffereth himſelfe to be corrupted by bribes, that diſorders ſhould not raigne: for it is all one, as if hee himſelfe ſhould conſent with theeuers.

Every one laueth gifts. Hee alſo ſhewes the cauſe wherefore the Princes had ſocietie with the theeuers, and by a wicked conſpiracie had coupled themſelues with them, to ſoſter and maintaine all iniuſtice: to wit, couetouſnes. For iuſtice is gone when Iudges are giuen to the loue of monie: for if accepting of perſons be ſuch a corruption in iudgment, that where it reignes, equite hath no place at all; truly, whoſo euer he be that is poſſeſſed with couetouſnes, ſuch a one hath more reſpect to the perſon then to the cauſe. And therefore he cannot ſee the right: but will pracliſe that which one ſaith, to wit, hee will make lawes, and ymake them againe.

By this we are aduerted, what a vertue it is in a Magiſtrate to know how to contemne gifts: for if he cannot curb his deſires, his hands and eyes, he will neuer iudge iuſtly. It is therefore but a tale when ſome ſay, they can keepe a good conſcience, though they receiue rewards. ſeing that which the Lord ſaith, remains euer true; namely, that gifts doe blind the eyes of the wiſe, and peruerce the words of the iuſt: Deut. 16. 29. There is no man then ſo perfect, nor ſo wiſe and learned, whoſe eyes & vnderſtanding may not be blinded with gifts. Whence it is that he iuſtly chargech ſ Iudges to be companions with theeuers, becauſe being carried away with a blind deſire of monie, there was no law neither of God nor of man which they peruerced nor, and that there remained amongſt them no reſpect either of ſhame or equite.

Wee muſt alſo note, that for the conſiſtition of hypocrites, the Prophet ſets their workes, which were notorious, before them, which were alſo apparent to all the world: becauſe otherwiſe they would neuer bee brought vnder. And yet no doubt but there were many at that time which wined when they were thus termed by ſ name of theuers: as alſo at this day, many crie out impudently, and obſtinately that they are not theuers for taking thoſe bribes and giſtes which are offered them, and that it will hinder them nothing at all from iudging iuſtly. Now becauſe ſuch anſwers are fruioleous, the Prophet hauing diſcouered their wickednes, and contenting himſelfe thus to haue reprooued them, he pleades no more with them. And verily nature it ſelfe reacheth vs, that it is vnpoſſible to giue right iudgemēt, when Iudges are ſo greedie of recompence and reward: for it cannot bee but that thereby they muſt needes ſet both their faithfulnes and eſtimation to ſale.

They iudge not theſe things. Euen as the Lord doth ſpecially recommend vnto vs the cauſes of the widowes and of the fatherleſſe, becauſe they are deſtitute of mens ſuccour and helpe; ſo alſo it is no meruaile if hee be offended when hee ſeeth the Iudges neglect them, in ſtead of being mouth, eyes, cares and hands for them. For when no man puts forth himſelfe to ſuccour ſuch as are deſtitute of counſell, force, and neanes, they muſt of neceſſitie bee laid open to iniuries, and all manner of violences, without hope of redreſſe. Now when no man takes their cauſe to heart, it is a ſigne that couetouſnes and briberie haue the cheefeſt ſway there, and not equite.

Verſ. 24. *Therefore ſaith the Lord the God of hoſts, the mightie one of Iſrael, ah, I will * caſe me of mine aduerſaries, and auenge me on mine enemies.*

* Or, comfort me, &c.

The word Alon, which is put in the firſt place, ſignifies properly Lord, and is to bee referred to the word that is oppoſite, to wit, Seruant. The name tebanah, by which the eternall eſſence and Maieſtie of God is expreſſed, is added conſequently. After then that the Prophet Iſaiah had recited ſome particular ſinnes by the which he made it manifeſt to euery one, that all things were corrupted amongſt this people, minding now to vſe ſome threatnings, and to let God his iudgement before them; hee not onlie adorns the Lord with the office, and power of a Iudge, but alſo hee admoniſheth them, that the children of Abraham are a peculiar people vnto him; and in this ſenſe, the mightie one of Iſrael, is added: although there may be here a priuie and cloſe kind of deriding, wherewith hee galleth the Iewes; as if hee ſhould ſay, that they did fooliſhly bragge of the name of God, ſeing they are ſuch wretched and wicked seruants : and that they trust in his strength in vaine: which strength he is forthwith readie to display against them. Hauiug thus then begun to speake, he addes, As I will comfort me. By which words he means that God will not bee appeased till first hee hath had his fill in chastising of them. He takes the word comfort, after the manner of men. For euen as wrath is nothing else but a desire of reuenge : so reuenge it selfe also is a kind of contentment: for when any is reuenged, he is glad, and satisfied. Thus the Lord saith that hee will satisfie himselfe in chastising his enemies, as if it were a kind of recompence.

It is true that this place is diuersly expounded, and I meane not to trouble my selfe so farre as to examine all interpretations, neither will I stand to refute those which sute not with the text : it sufficeth for this time, that wee haue the true sense of the Prophet. He speakes not here of the Chaldeans, or Assyrians, as many thinke ; but of the Iewes ; against whom he proclaimes open warre in the name of God, whose herald he is : which threatening was very harsh and vnpleasent vnto their eares, in regard they thought themselves so linked to God, that hee would bee an enemie to their enemies. But God contrariwise shewes that he is become their enemie, because they haue prouoked him by their naughtines. And after this manner must we awaken the hypocrites, who continually fighting against God, notwithstanding blush not still to claime his protection for their safegard. Therefore let vs not inuauaile, if the Prophet doth sharply terme them the enemies of God, who hauing broken the covenant, were thus combined together to make warre against him.

And yet notwithstanding, to the end hee may shew that God is as it were constrained and enforced to chastise his people, he threatens them, as it were, with a kind of inward sorrowing. For as nothing is more agreeable to his nature, then to doe good : euen so as oft as his anger is stirred vp against vs, and that hee handles vs severely, it is certaine that our owne frowardnes hath constrained him so to doe, because we will not suffer him to bestow his benefits vpon vs ; but especially he is inclined to deale thus louingly with his owne children : & albeit he seeth that his louing kindnes and gentlenes can nothing preuaile with them, yet is it in sorrow of hart that hee strikes them. But peradventure some had rather expound the particule How, as if God should cry out as one being enflamed with wrath. For mine owne part I take it, that in this place there is a voyce of griefe and sorrow : because the Lord in thinking often vpon his covenant, would willingly pardon his chosen people, were it not by their owne obstinacie they did altogether reiect it. In the second member, and auenge me of mine enemies, there is a figure vey vsuall with the Hebrewes, who repeat in one and the same verse many times one selfesame thing: whence we also gather, that this sentence hath this drift, namely, that God could not quite himselfe, vntill he were reuenged vpon this traiterous and disloyall people.

Verf. 25. Then I will turne mine hand vpon thee, and burne out thy drosse, till it be pure, and take away al thy sinne.

THis is a moderation of the former threatening. For howsoeuer hee pursues that which he hath begun to speake of touching his seueritic, notwithstanding he addes therewithall, that the Church shall remaine safe still in the midst of all calamities, wherewith the people should be smitten : neuertheless his principall drift is to comfort the faithfull, to the end they should not thinke the Church should be brought to ruine, although God was constrained to deale more sharpelic with it then he hath been wont to doe. For the holy Ghost alwaies provides in the ministrie of the Prophets for the vpholding of the faith of Gods children (who continually tremble at his words) that they should not bee discouraged, being humbled with feares and threatnings ; because so much the more as the wicked ouerflow the bankes, and scoffe at all threatnings, so much the more doe they which are touched with the true feare of God, tremble thereat.

Moreover, the turning of the hand of God, generally signifies the witness of his presence : as if he should say, I will lift vp mine hand : which he is wont to doe after two sortes, either when he chastiseth the wicked, or when he pulles the faithfull out of their miseryes. Seeing then it easily appears by the circumstance of the place, that God would asswage the sharpnes of the correction by mingling some consolation ; The turning of his hand, ought to be referred here to the restoration of the Church. For although he pronounceth in generall that they are all his enemies : yet now he moderates & restraines this speech, in calling Jerusalem or Zion by his owne name.

When he addes, I will burne out thy drosse, although he notes the fruit of the correction, to the end it should not be grieuous and burthensome to the faithfull beyond measure : notwithstanding, wee gather from thence that the restoration of the Church, is a speciall worke of God. He euermore lifts vp his hands to the end he may punish sinne and bring those that erre into the right way : but yet his roddes should auaille little or nothing, if he himselfe did not make them profitable, by touching their hearts inwardly. And because hee here makes mention of a speciall fauour which hee communicates to his chosen : from thence it follows that repentance is a true and peculiar worke of the holy Ghost ; because otherwise the sinner would harden himselfe more and more vnder the blowes, rather then profit thereby any thing at all. Further we are not to vnderstand this cleane purging, in such wise, that there should remaine no drosse, as if God would wholly purge his Church in this world from all filthines : but this manner of speech is rather to be referred to the common fashion

Note.

Gods outward corrections profit vs nothing, at all unless he teach vs inwardly by his holy spirit.

of mens actions, as if he ſhould ſay, The eſtate of the Church, ſhall be ſuch, that the beautie thereof ſhall ſhine like ſilver. The true puritie then is ſignified by theſe words, becauſe the Iewes had too much pleaſed themſelves in their filthines before. Now this ſimilitude is very fit, for by it the Prophet ſhewes, that although the Church of God was then ſo ſtuffed with multitudes of corruptions; yet notwithstanding there ſhould remaine a remnant which ſhould recouer their brightnes, after that the droſſe and corruption ſhould be conſumed. And thus he ioynes both members together, becauſe hauing ſpoken in ver. 22. of their offences, hee ſaid, that their filuer was become droſſe.

Verſ. 26. And I will reſtore thy Iudges as at the firſt, and thy Counſellers as at the beginning: afterward thou ſhalt be called a citie of righteousnes, and a faithfull citie.

Now he ſpeakes plainly without any figure. And becauſe hee had ſaid that the ſpring and beginning of all euils was in the princes; thus hee teacheth, that their offices and places ſhall be purged by the Lord, when he begins to reſtore the perfect health and welfare of the Church againe vnto her. And from thence it is alſo that iuſtice in the political government comes; to wit, when the governors that rule are vertuous, and fearing God: becauſe all things goe to hauock, when thoſe which gouerne, are wicked. It is plaine enough, that by Iudges and Counſellers he meanes all Magiſtrates of what ſort ſoever. In that hee promiſeth they ſhall bee ſuch as they were at the beginning, he puts them in mind of the ſingular benefit of God, whereof they had beene deſtroyed. God by his direction had exalted the throne of Dauid and commanded that in this governmēt there ſhould ſhine an Image of his fatherly loue. Now although they had corrupted the ſame by wicked tyrannie; yet notwithstanding, they ceaſed not to make their bragges of falſe titles: for they boaſted much of the kingdome of Dauid, euen as the Papiſts glorie at this day vnder a falſe pretence of the Church. Therefore the people are juſtly admoniſhed from what an happie eſtate they were fallen by their owne default, that ſo they ſhould not be diſpleaſed to haue their multitudes of mē diminished, but might rather be moued to recouer againe the good order which God had ordained.

Afterward thou ſhalt be called.] He extends the fruite of this reformation, whereof he hath ſpoken, to the whole bodie. For the Prophet hauing ſaid that Jeruſalem was a faithfull Citie, and full of iudgement before ſhe reuolted from God; now he ſaith, that after ſhe ſhall be chaſtiſed, theſe vertues here ſpoken of ſhall be ſeene to ſhine in her. The ſummie alſo of true repentance is ſet forth in this place: for by Iuſtice, is vnderſtood integritie, wherein euery man obtaines of another that which to him belongeth, and that one man liues with another without oppreſſion. The word faithfull extends it ſelfe further: becauſe we call that a faithfull Citie, not onely where equitie and mutual iuſtice ruleth among men, but alſo where God is purely ſerued. And thus vnder this word, the puritie and chaſtite of the vnderſtanding is comprehended. Yet we muſt note that iuſtice defends from this faithfullnes, becauſe that when we carrie our ſelves vprightly one towards another; there iuſtice will eaſily beare the ſway. And ſurely by examining the whole a little more narrowly; it ſeemes the Prophet takes not the word fideliſie in ſo ample a ſignification as h:retore. Alſo that hee fo ioynes theſe two vertues together, as if they tended both to one end: ſo as truth ſhould be the firſt in order as being the cauſe; then that iuſtice ſhould be the effect of it.

Moreouer Iſaiah not onely promiſeth that ſhe ſhall be juſt and faithfull, but alſo that by theſe badges and markes ſhe ſhall become excellent and renowned: thereby further ſignifying, that her rightcouſnes ſhal be ſuch that the knowledge and renouue thereof ſhall be ſpread abroad euery where. We know alſo that by hypocrites obtaine great and honorable titles: but becauſe Iſaiah brings in the Lord ſpeaking, hee holds it as a ſure concludiſon that the citie ſhall bee juſt according as hee hath foretold. In the meane while, as I haue ſaid, he ſets before vs the fruit of a true conuerſion, as if he ſhould ſay; When Jeruſalem ſhall bee once brought to true godlines, then others ſhall ſee the fruites of her renouation alſo.

HE confirms the ſame doctrine: and becauſe the reſtitution of the Church was a thing hard to bee beleeneed, hee ſhewes that it hangs not vpon the will of men, but that it is grounded vpon the Iudgement and Iuſtice of God; as if he ſhould ſay, God will by no means endure that the Church ſhould wholly be deſtroyed, becauſe he is juſt. The meaning of the Prophet then is, to withdraw the minds of the faithfull, from all earthly cogitations, to the end, that when the hope of the ſaluation of the Church is in queſtion, they ſhould depend vpon God, and not be diſcouraged, although in ſtead of helpe and ſuccour they ſhould ſee lets and hinderances on all ſides. For thoſe that reſerre theſe words of Iudgement and Iuſtice to men, are deceiued; as Iſaiah ſhould ſpeake now of the well ordered eſtate of a city; and therefore that ſenſe which I haue giuen is according to the true meaning of the Prophet, to wit, that although no ſuccour appeare vnto them from men, yet that the iuſtice of the Lord notwithstanding is more then ſufficient to redēme his Church. And truly whiſt wee looke into our owne ſtrength, what hope of helpe can we conceiue? Nay, how many rockes doe there by and by rather appeare, to daſh our faith all to peeces? It is in God only then that we shall finde a perpetuall firmenes of trust. In the second member, and they that returne, the means of the redemption is expressed, to wit, that those which were banished and scattered farre off, shall be gathered together againe.

Verf. 28. And the destruction of the transgressors, and of the sinners shall bee together, and they that forsake the Lord, shall be consumed.

TO the end hypocrits should not thinke that any fruit of these promises did appertaine vnto them, and lest they should boast in vaine, he threatens that they shall perish, although God redeeme his Church. For hypocrites are alwaies mingled amongst the faithfull: and which more is, they thrust themselves into the chiefeest places, valuing the Church according to the outward forme and shew thereof, audaciouly drawing whatsoever God hath promised, vnto themselves. But the Prophet pluckes this trust (if it may be so called) from them, because it proceedes from nothing else but pride of heart, and a vaine perswasion. Here therefore is diligently to be considered, with what wisdom and discretion the faithfull Teachers haue neede to be endued withall, for the comfort of the good, that they may refresh their minds with some consolation; and preserve them from fainting, and from being discouraged, whilst they terrifie the wicked with the iudgements of God. On the Contrarie also the faithfull being stayed by the promise of God, and that the wicked seeke to wrest it to themselves, and lift vp their crests with a vaine confidence, we must then keepe this order and meane, that we giue the wicked no occasion to become proud and insolent: as also that the faithfull be no whit out of heart, nor discouraged: as Isaiah doth here in this place. For hauing spoken of the redemption of the Church, he threatens the obstinate and wicked, and denounceth their ruin, to the end they might not thinke, these benefites of God did any thing at all belong vnto them. Now although he iudgeth y^e wicked to perdition, yet by this comparison he amplifies the grace of God towards the faithfull: the which should then be the better perceiued, when God should heale those that were his, whilst the wicked in the meane while should perish, as it is said in the 91. Psalme, vers. 7. Againe, he also moderates the sorrow which might disquiet the hearts of the faithfull, for the wast of the Church; for he admonisheth them that the whole bodie could not otherwise be healed, vnlesse the corruption which was in it, were cut off.

Verf. 29.  For they shall be confounded for the Oakes which yee haue desired, and yee shall bee ashamed of the gardens that yee haue chosen.*

THe particle, ci, is put in the Hebrew, which shewes the cause: but it is often also vsed for an exposition. Now because the Prophet addes no new matter here, but only manifests vnto them the cause of the ruine, which hung ouer the heads of the wicked, the Hebrew word, which wee haue translated, to ~~was~~, hath seemed to agree very well; as if the Prophet should haue said, There was no plague more hurtfull to them then superstition; the idols, faith hee, which you doe so heape together to procure your welfare, shall rather turne to your ruine. Now whereas some haue heterofore translated gods, for the word trees, is refuted by the text it selfe: for he by and by makes mention of gardens. Moreover he reprooues all false, and new found seruices vnder the names of trees and gardens, by a figure called Synecdoche, when a part is taken for the whole. For howsoeuer there were all sorts of Idolatrie among the Jewes, yet this particular kind, namely, to chuse woods and forests, to offer sacrifices, was specially the most vsuall amongst others. Now be it that one would reade woods, or gardens in the second place, yet no doubt, but he meant to point at their Altars, and Chapels, where they performed their diuellish worshipp: and although it was not their meaning, wholly to reuolt from the true God; yet notwithstanding they forged new seruices: and as if one place had been more acceptable to God then another, they consecrated and dedicated them to their deuotions, as wee see it is come to passe in the Papacie. But by and by there followes a change of the person: for to the end the reproofe might bee the more sharpe, he speaks euen to the wicked themselves, of whom he spake before in the third person.

Afterward by the word, to come, he taxeth the furious affection wherewith the wicked are set on fire in their superstitions. God requires that the whole heart be dedicated vnto him: but they violently plunged themselves in a blind pursuing of their new devised seruices, as if they were carried away with a beastly and brutish affection. And to say Note. the truth, this sickness is roored almost in the vnderstandings of all men, that hauing once forsaken the true God, they runne a madding after their Idols. Therefore it is, that the Scripture often compares this fury to y^e loues of harlots, who not only cast off all reason, but likewise all shame. Although it further appears by the second member, that hee not onely taxeth their intemperancie, but also their boldnes to violate the seruice of God, when he saith they chose gardens: which word is opposed to that which was commanded in the law. For with what flourisher soeuer the vnbeleeuers seeke to shadow their superstitions withal, yet notwithstanding this sentence remains sure, that obedience is better then sacrifice, 1. Sam. 15. 22. And therefore S. Paul Col. 2. 23. vnder the word superstition, comprehends all those corrupt worshipp, which men forge to themselves without the commandement of God. God then complaines, that the Jewes hauing despised his word, pleased themselves in their owne inuentions: as if he should say, It was your duties to haue obeyed obeyed me, but you have liked better to follow your owne fantaſie, or rather a franticke libertie.

And this is ſufficient to condemne all the inventions of men, to wit, that it is not lawfull in any ſort, to chuſe a way how to ſerue God, becauſe the right of preſcribing that appertaines vnto himſelfe. God had then commanded that no ſacrifices ſhould be offered vnto him but in Ieruſalem; the Iewes thought to pleaſe him in other places: which falſe imagination alſo deceiued the prophane nations. And I would to God that it had onely reſted there; but we ſee how the Papiſts are wrapped euen in the ſame error. Laſtly, experience it ſelfe teacheth, that this diſeaſe is common to euery age.

Obiect.

If any object that the matter is not ſo great in reſpect of the place, that God ſhould therefore abhorre the ſacrifices which were euenly where offered him. Firſt we muſt note the cauſe why God as then would haue but one onely altar, namely, to the end it might be a band of holy vniute to this rude people, and that by this means Religion might continue ſound and immutable. Now although that this ſpeciall cauſe ceaſeth, yet muſt we holde this principle, that commandements were giuen of God, euen touching the leaſt things; to the end the Iewes might inure themſelues the better to obedience. For in regard that ſuperſtition paints her face with the colour of deuotion, it is impoſſible, but men ſhould flatter themſelues in their inuentions. Notwithſtanding ſeeing that obedience is the mother of true religion, it followes thereupon, that the fantaſies of men, on the contrary, are euen fountaines of ſuperſtition.

Obedience the mother of true religion. Mens fantaſies, the fountaines of ſuperſtition.

This alſo muſt be added, that euen as Iſaiah did a little before reprove the wickednes of the people, which raigned amongſt them againſt the breach of the ſecond Table of the law, which is loue; now alſo he makes his complaint, that they haue tranſgreſſed the firſt table. For in as much as all perfection of righteouſnes conſiſts in the obedience of the law, the Prophets when they would reprove the ſinnes of men, one while they ſpeake of the firſt, and then of the ſecond Table. We muſt alſo alwaies obſerue this figuratiue manner of ſpeech, when vnder one kind the Prophets do comprehend the whole in generall.

Verſ. 30. For yee ſhall be as an Oke, whoſe leaſe ſudeth, and as a garden that hath no water.

The Hebrew particle may bee taken affirmatiuely, as I haue turned it: and it ſeemes that the Prophet alludes to thoſe gardens vnto which they had falſely tied the ſeruice of God; for becauſe he had made mention of theſe gardens, he threatens them with drought, caſting in their teeth the confidence, which they reposed in them. You pleaſe yourſelues very much, in your gardens, and in your trees (ſaith he) but you ſhall be as trees dried, and ſubiect to fall. The Lord then ſcottes the fooliſh bragging of the idolaters who pleaſe themſelues maruelouſly in their inventions: and thinke that heauen muſt needs be opened to them, when they are in the miſt of their ceremonies. As at this day when the Papiſts haue lighted vp their lampes, and decked their temples; when they ſhine with gold and pretious ſtones; when they heare the melodie of their Organes, and the ſound of their bells, they thinke themſelues the moſt happie people vnder the ſunne, as if God being infinite beholding vnto them, and ſatiſhed with ſuch baggage, they were freed from feare of any danger.

Verſ. 31. And the ſtrong ſhall bee as tow, and the maker thereof as a ſparke: and they ſhall burne both together, and none ſhall quench them.

The Hebrew word Chafon ſignifies ſtrong; now it is here attributed to God; and yet notwithstanding it retaines ſtill his ſignification, as if hee ſhould haue ſaid, That god whom you made your ſtrength, ſhall be turned into tow. And the maker thereof: hee means the caruer: but becauſe mention is made of the idole, it muſt bee referred to the thing in queſtion. Some thinke that the Prophet doth here note out the repentance of the idolaters, who ſhould acknowledge their follie, and with ſhame ſhould burne their idols: but me thinks, the Prophets meaning is otherwiſe. For euen as fire is made of drie ſtuffe, as tow and ſuch like: ſo ſaith the Prophet, God ſhall gather you and your idols together vpon an heape (as when one pileth vp a ſtacke of wood) to the end you may bee conſumed together. So as the idols ſhall be as tow, and the men as the fire; to the end the flame may conſume them both together.

And there ſhall be none to quench them.] We muſt note that when the Prophets ſpeake of the wrath of God, they repreſent it by external ſignes, becauſe it cannot be perceived by our eyes, or other ſenſes. Thus the wrath of the Lord, by which the wicked are deſtroyed, is compared to fire, that conſumes all things. Now it ſufficiently appears by this, what the Prophet meant to ſay, namely, that all the wicked ſhall periſh, let their confidence be what it will; yea which more is, their ruine ſhall be ſo much the greater, by how much they ſhall haue placed their truſt in falſe and deceitfull things: and that in the place from whence they hoped and looked for ſaluation, euen there ſhall perdition fall vpon them. For the idols and puppets are but matches to kindle the wrath of God withall; and that in ſuch wiſe, as it can neuer be quenched.

THE II. CHAPTER.

Verf. 1. The word that Iſaiah the ſonne of Amos ſaw vpon Iudah and Ieruſalem.

His prophesie is a confirmation of the doctrine which we haue had a little before, as touching the restauration of the Church. For in as much as it is a very hard matter to expect the saluation of the Church in the midst of the ruine of it, when as the wrath of God being once kindled doth begin to consume all things round about; then are the bare and naked promises very hardly thought to bee sufficient for vs to rest and stay our selues vpon. For this cause the Lord would haue this speciall vision conioyned in stead of a confirmation with the consolation, which was proposed heretofore; the more assuredly to confirme our faith, that the Church should not perish, no not in all the calamities that could possible befall it. Thus I doubt not but this vision hath affinity with that which we haue seene in the 26. and 27. verses of the former chapter. And by this we may know what was the vse and end of visions. For in as much as the bare doctrine is of no sufficient authority at all with vs; therefore the Lord addeth visions, by which he seales vp in vs the truth of his word. Seeing then that this vision is ioyned with the former promise, from thence we gather a very profitable doctrine: to wit, that all the visions which the Lord reuealed to his Prophets in times past, ought to be ioyned with the promises, and to be as seales annexed vnto them. Herein also we haue greatly to magnifie, and extoll from time to time the wonderfull goodnes of God, who is not contented to giue vs his word alone, but doth also vouchsafe to set the view of the things promised euen as it were before our eyes.

Now he addes a confirmation, because the restauration of the Church is a thing of wonderfull importance: which also ought necessarily to be knowne. For what shall become of the truth of God; what shall become of faith, if there be no Church? And if there be no Church, it would follow, that God were a liar, and that all which his word containes, were false. But euen as he shewes by memorable signes, that it is he alone, who without the aide of men, and by meanes vnknowne, consecrates his Church: so here now by an excellent prophesie, he promisseth to doe the like.

The vse of this prophesie then is double: for in as much as Iſaiah and others after him were without ceasing to terrifie and feare this people (so full of obstinate malice) til such time as they should be carried away captiues;

the Temple burnt, and the citie destroyed: it was very needfull in regard of the faithfull, that such rigour should be asswaged by some consolation of hope. Moreouer, in regard that they should languish long in captiuitie, and that after their returne many calamities would breake in vpon them to shake their minds; and in the end should bee wrapped, and as it were ouerwhelmed with a sea of an horrible ruine, and almost a desperate confusion: if they had not bin comforted against so many terrors, they would haue perished an hundred times. But the promise of the restauration of the Church did comfort and strengthen those who were already fallen, to the end that at the least the calling vpon the name of God (which against all dangers is the onely and chiefe remedie) might haue it force amongst them. The word, some translate, The thing; because the signification of this word is generall: but it is rather to be taken for decree, or ordinance. Iſaiah saith then, that this was reuealed to him by a speciall vision.

Verf. 2. It shall bee in the last daies that the mountaine of the house of the Lord shall be prepared in the toppe of the mountaines, and shall be exalted above the hilles, and all nations shall flow vnto it.

When he makes mention of the terme or full end of daies, let vs remember that he speaks of the kingdom of Christ. We must also vnderstand the reason why he calles this kingdom so. Vntill this time all things did hang in suspense, to the end the people should not rest in the estate of that time, which was but a shadow; but in the Redeemer, who was to declare vnto them the substance. After Christ came then, if wee will compare that time with ours, we are indeede come to the verie terme of those daies. But it was needfull that the fathers which liued then, should with armes stretched forth endeavour to come vnto Christ. And because the restauration of all things depended vpon his coming, it was for good cause that they are commanded to enlarge their hope euen vnto that day. For it was alwaies profitable vnto them, to know that the estate of the Church should bee more perfect vnder our Lord Iesus Christ: especially seeing they were held vnder shadowes and figures; and yet in the meane while were subiect to diuers changes. Also the Lord did terrifie them many waies of set purpose, that hee might hold them in suspense. But the circumstance of this prophesie had a particular respect: for they might haue very well haue fainted in the space of foure hundred yeers, or thereabouts, if this fulnes of time should not haue come in their minds, wherein the Church ſhould be reſtored to her perfection. Therefore as the Church was euer and anon almoſt ouerwhelmed with diuers tempeſts, ſo euery one of the faithfull laid faſt hold in theſe dangers vpon this ſentence as vpon a board or planck to bring them faſte to the heauen. In the meane while we muſt note, that the perfection of daies, did ſo begin at the firſt coming of Chriſt, that it runnes on ſtill with a continuall courſe, vntill hee appears the ſecond time againe for our ſaluation.

Shall be prepared.] This viſion in appearance might almoſt haue ſeemed ridiculous: not only becauſe Zion was a little hill of no great height: (as if compariſon had bin made of a heape of duſt, with great mountaines) but alſo in regard that a little before he had foretold her ruine. How could one haue then beleeued, that Zion which had loſt all her dignitie, ſhould againe bee thus honoured with ſo great an excellencie, that ſhe ſhould turne the eyes of all the Gentiles to the beholding of her beautie? yet is ſhee ſo advanced notwithstanding, as if ſhee ſhould bee mounted higher then the Mount Olympus. Let the Gentiles bragge of their mountaines, as long as they will; yet ſhall they be nothing in compariſon of this little hill (ſaith the Propheet) although it be low and ſmall in appearance. To naturall reaſon indeede this is verie vnlike. What ſhall Zion hang in the cloudes? And therefore no queſtion but the wicked ſcorned this promiſe. Wee know well enough that impietic hath alwaies ouerflowed her banks againſt God. Yea, the circumſtance which I haue touched alreddie, was enough at the firſt puſh to haue ouerthrowne this propheſie. How is it then that this little hill could be ſo ſoone exalted, being fallen after the deſtruction of the Temple into vtter diſhonour? But doubtleſſe Iſaiah foretold not theſe things in vaine. For in the end, this little hill was truly exalted about the mountaines: becauſe that from thence the voyce of the Lord was heard; which ſounded forth thoro'out all the world euen to liſt vs vp into the heauens; from thence the Maieſtie of God ſhined. Laſtly, becauſe it was the ſanctuarie of God, it ſurmounted aboute all the world in height of excellencie.

Now we muſt note the vſe of this propheſie, namely, that Iſaiah meant to ſet before them a conſolation, whereupon they were to ſtay themſelues in their captiuitie: that howſoer the Temple ſhould be deſtroyed, and that the ſacrifices ſhould ceaſe, yea and all things ſhould fall to the ground: yet notwithstanding this hope ſhould encourage the faithfull; and that in this horrible confuſion they ſhould thus thinke: True it is that the mountaine of the Lord is now deſolate; but yet ſhall ſhee haue her ſeate there againe, ſo as the glorie of this mountaine ſhall ſurpaſſe the glorie of all others. To the end then that they ſhould not doubt of the euent hereof, the Propheet hath pictured it forth here as in a table, wherein they might behold the glorie of God. For although the mountaine continued then ſafe, yet was it in a manner deſteſtable, becauſe it was brought to a miſerable deſolation, hauing loſt all her glorie, in regard that God himſelfe had forſaken it. But the faithfull were to behold, not theſe ruines, but this viſion. It alſo ſufficiently appears by that which followes, why hee ſpeakes ſo highly of the exaltation of this mountaine of Zion, becauſe from thence came forth the Goſpell, wherein the Image of God ſhined. Other mountaines might ſurmount it in height: but becauſe the glorie of God did appeare vpon it in an higher degree, therefore it was alſo neceſſarie that the mountaine in which he manifeſteth himſelfe, ſhould bee exalted about others. He doth not praiſe the mountaine of Zion then in regard of it ſelfe, but in reſpect of her ornament or glorie, wherewith alſo all the world was to be beautified.

Verſ. 3. And many people ſhall goe and ſay, Come, and let vs goe vp to the mountaine of the Lord, and to the houſe of the God of Iacob, and hee will teach vs his waies, and we will walke in his paths: for the law ſhall goe forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Ieruſalem.

I N the former verſe he had briefly touched the cauſe from whence ſuch an excellencie ſhould come vnto the mountaine of Zion, to wit, becauſe all nations ſhould flow vnto it, as if the riuers ſhould overflow with ouermuch abundance of waters: now he declares the ſame thing, adding alſo the reaſon of it. For one might demand vpon what occaſion ſo many ſorts of people ſhould flow thither by bands from countries ſo farre off. He ſaith then that they ſhall come thither for no other end but to ſerue God. But in the word Manie, there is an antitheſis, for he ſignifies that there ſhould not be one nation onely, as before; which ſhould yeeld obedience vnto the true worſhip of God: but that thoſe which were altogether ſtrangers, ſhould come to conſent with like agreement in religion with the: as if he ſhould ſay, The Church which before was ſhut vp as in a corner, ſhall now be gathered out of all parts. Hee hath put many then, for diuers. For it is certaine that he meant not to liſten to which he had ſaid ere while of all nations. Further, although this was neuer fulfilled, to wit, that all the people of the whole world hauing left their countrie ſhould aſſemble to Ieruſalem; notwithstanding becauſe the doctrine of the Goſpell (by which God did there gather to himſelfe a Church indifferently from out of al the world) came forth of this mountaine of Zion; hee well affirms that thoſe who embraced the couenant of ſaluation, with one conſent of faith, and ioyned themſelues to one onely Church, ſhould come thither. The agreement alſo which is betweene the figures of the law, and the ſpiritual worſhip, is to be noted; ſuch as it began to be after the coming of Chriſt.

And they ſhall come.] Firſt hee ſignifies by theſe

these words that the faithfull shall bee filled with such affection, and zeale to enlarge and spread abroad the doctrine of saluation, that none of them shall content himselfe with his particular knowledge, and vocation, but shall desire to draw on others with them. And questionlesse there is nothing more remote from the true nature of faith, then that deadnes of heart, by which men casting aside all care of their brethrens good, doe shut vp in themselves, all the light of knowledge they haue receiued: so as it comes to bee smothered and choked within them. Therefore by how much the more any hath receiued abundance of grace from God, by so much the more ought he diligently endeour to lighten others by his light. Behold here then the true means how to gather a Church together; to wit, by the externall voyce of men. For although the Lord might draw euery man to his knowledge by his secret inspiration; yet notwithstanding he will bee serued by the ministrie and labour of men, to the end hee may exercise them in a mutuall care about the saluation of one another. And by this meanes also he knits them the better together, and takes triall of their teachablenesse, to wit, when one of them will iustifie himselfe to be taught by another.

Moreouer, isaiah shewes that all those which haue charge to teach and exhort, should not rest themselves, onely in commanding of others: but rather to ioyne themselves vnto them, and to walke together as companions with them. For wee see some that will command with authoritie, and prick men stoutly forward with exceeding great security, when as they themselves in the meane while will not moue a foote. But the faithfull here content not themselves, in commanding their brethren saying, goe vp; but rather leading them the way in going first, they set their owne example before them. This therefore is the right manner of teaching, when by putting that in execution our selues first, which wee require of others, wee make it knowne before all men that we speake truly, and in good earnest.

- 1 And he will teach vs his waies.] In the first place he shewes, that wee cannot serue God rightly and as we ought, vnlesse the light of 2 the holy doctrine goe before. Secondly, that God is the onely teacher of his Church; vpon whose mouth we ought to hang: whence 3 also it follows, that he takes no delight in the foolish, and vnstable deuotion of mens in-4 uentions. And lastly, that howsoeuer he vseth the ministrie of men to teach vs by, yet that he referues this notwithstanding as proper to himselfe, to wit, that they preach nothing but his pure word. And if all those which call themselves doctors of the Church had followed this rule, religion had not beene so fouly corrupted, with an endles, and confused diuersitie of superstitions. Neither can it be auoided that we should not fall by heaps into multitudes of errors, when men turne and wind vs thus after their owne fantasies.
Isa. 53 then in attributing the authoritie and office of teaching the Church to God onely, by good right he stoppes at the mouthes of mortall men: so as the very office of teaching is not committed to the Pastors of the Church, but vpon this condition, that Gods voyce be onely heard there. Let such then as would be esteemed his seruants, suffer themselves to be ruled in their duties by this sentence, to the end they may in no sort diminish the least iot of his authoritie.

There is in the member following, word for word, He will teach vs his waies: which is thus much in effect, That hee will teach vs
what his waies are; or hee will set his waies before vs for a perfect instruction. Then he adds vnto it obedience, And we will walke in his paths. Wherein he shewes both the fruit & the end: for the doctrine which is giuen vs by the mouth of God consists not in idle speculations, but directes the whole course of our lues, and frames vs to his obedience. But we must note againe, that the waies and paths of God are called his commandements, to the end we should know that they erre miserablie which turne aside from them, bee it neuer so little. And thus all licentious libertie is here restrained, and the rule of instruction is in this place giuen vnto all, euen from the greatest to the least, namely, that they con-taine themselves within the compasse of Gods word.

For the law shall goe out of Zion] This is an exposition of the verse going before, in which he said that the mountaine of Zion should be exalted aboue all other mountaines, to wit, that it should be exalted into an high degree of honour, when it should bee the fountaine of the doctrine of saluation, which should spread thorowout the whole world. Hee cales it the law. But wee haue elsewhere spoken of the originall and proper significa-of this word. The word Torah, which is here interpreted law, signifies doctrine, because the law contains so perfect a doctrine in it, that nothing is to bee added or taken away.
And so he speakes after the manner of the Prophets. For in as much as the rule of all pietie is comprehended in the law, they are wont vnder this word to comprehend the whole word of God; as also vnder this word Altar, they comprehend the seruice of the Lord. Moreouer, seeing wee know that this prophecie was fulfilled, when the preaching of the Gospell began in this verie place (for Christ first taught in Ierusalem; and afterward fro thence the doctrine spread thorowout the world) this word law, is not to be taken strictly, which then was rather abolished, as touching the yoke and bondage of it.
Whence we gather, that this word without restraint, is to bee taken generally for the word of God. And whereas the Prophets say that the waters shall flow fro out of the Temple, which shall water the whole world; by a similitude they shew those things which isaiah in plaine words here teacheth; to wit, that the beginning and wellspring of the doctrine of saluation should come from this place. For from thence the Apostles, and other Teachers did spread the glad tidings of saluation thorowout the whole world.

Chap. I. 10.

Exek. 47. 1.

But the reason why the Prophet thus ſpeakes, is to be noted; namely, to confirme the faithfull againſt all the changes, which otherwiſe vpon euery ocaſion might haue quailed their courage. And therefore it was needefull to preuent offences, and to furniſh the conferences of the faithfull with comforts againſt all ſtormes, in what condition fouer they ſhould be; as if he ſhould haue ſaid, Let your affaires prosper how they will, yet in the miſt of the calamities and afflictions which oppreſſe you, wait notwithstanding; and be you certainly perſwaded, that the Law ſhall come forth of Zion, and the word of God from Ieruſalem. For it is a decree of God, which cannot be falſified nor ouerthrowne by any chance or change of time.

We may gather by the courſe of the times which followed, how needfull this conſolation was for the faithfull. For when Iuda was forſaken and deſolate, the temple deſtroyed, and the gouernement of the Church wholly deſaced, and that tyrannie increaſed more and more; it was an eaſie matter to quench all hope, and to haue become deſperate altogether. On the other ſide, when the Iewes were come home out of captiuitie from Babylon, when horrible ſuperſtitions by little and little increaſed, and that the Priests had vſurped a wicked tyrannie, in ſtead of exerciſing their office as became them; if this promiſe had not comforted the faithfull, what might they haue elſe imagined, but that Religion was aboliſhed, and that the ſeruiſe of God was quite and cleane extinct? And no doubt but this temptation, which happened by meanes of the vices which were in the miſt of them, was more troubleſome for them to beare than their exile in Babylon. In their baniſhment they had Prophets, by whoſe doctrine they were put in hope; but in this corrupted eſtate all fruit of doctrine was taken from them, Religion and godlines was deſpiſed; but the Lord ſuſtained them at a pinch by the onely ſtay of this prophēſie. For when as the law was ſo vilely prophaned and contemned, and as it ſeemed caſt downe from his proper ſeate, which the Lord had conſecrated and appoynted for it; would any man haue thought, that nor onely it ſhould haue had his place there, but that it ſhould alſo raigne ouer all ſtrange countries that were farre off? Contrariwiſe, the Prophet not onely ſaith that the Law ſhall be eſtabliſhed in his throne, but alſo that it ſhall goe a great deale further off: whereby hee ſignifies, that it ſhall bee no longer ſhut vp within his firſt bounds, becauſe it ſhould be indifferently publiſhed among the Gentiles.

And queſtionles this carried great waight and authoritie with the Apoſtles, when they vnderſtoode that they were ordained to doe thoſe things which are here promiſed. Otherwiſe they neuer durſt to haue aduentured the taking of that charge vpon them, they would neuer haue had courage enough to haue finiſhed it. Laſtly, they could neuer haue borne ſo weightie a burthen; eſpecially if you adde, that they had the rage of the whole world inflamed againſt them. But they were ſurely perſwaded that hee which had made this promiſe, and giuen them in charge to beare his meſſage, would eaſilie ouercome all theſe difficulties. We muſt alſo note, that from hence we may gather a great confirmation of our faith, by conſidering that the doctrine of the Goſpell came forth of Zion: for from thence we conlude, that it is not new, nor lately ſprung vp; but that it is the eternall truth of God, the teſtimonie whereof appeared a long time before it came to light. We alſo gather it was neceſſarie that all the ancient ceremonies ſhould be aboliſhed, and that a new manner of teaching ſhould be brought in; although the very lame doctrine in ſubſtance ſhould ſtill remaine. For at the firſt the law came out of mount Sinai: but now it came out of mount Zion, and therefore it tooke a new forme. Two things then are to be noted: Firſt, that the word of God is alwaies one, and like vnto it ſelfe: that no man ſhould reprove God of changeablenes, as if he were variable. Alſo, that how fouer at this preſent, the law of the Lord, is the ſame which it was; yet notwithstanding that it came out of Zion, as it were with a new garment put vpon it. Secondly, that the ceremonies and ſhadowes are aboliſhed, becauſe Chriſt is made manifeſt, in whom we finde the truth and ſubſtance of them.

Verſ 4. And he ſhall iudge among the nations, and rebuke many people: they ſhall breake their ſwords alſo into mattocks, and their ſpeares into ſiſhes: nations ſhall not liſt vp a ſworde againſt nation, neither ſhall they learne to fight any more.

His meaning is, that the doctrine ſhall be as a Royall ſcepter, to the end God may rule and gouerne among all nations. For the word, to iudge, among the Hebrewes, ſignifies to rule, or gouerne by a figure called Synecdoche. Becauſe then, that God had held one people onely vnder his gouernement, the Prophet here teacheth, that the bounds of this kingdome ſhall be enlarged, becauſe it ſhall haue dominion ouer diuers nations. He alſo cloſely notes the difference between the kingdome of David, and this other which ſhall become much more excellent: that of David being but a figure of it. For from that time God gouerned his choſen people by the hand of David; but at the coming of Ieſus Chriſt, he began to raigne by himſelfe, to wit, in the perſon of his onely Sonne; who is very God manifeſted in the fleſh. The Prophets alſo doe ſometimes expreſſe the name of the Prophet David, when they ſpeake of the kingdome of Chriſt; and that very ſiſhe: for it is in regard of the humane nature, becauſe the promiſed Redeemer ſhould come out of that familie; but in this place hee exalts the Maieſty of his diuine nature: where-by it appears how much more excellent the condition of the new Church is about the old; because in it God appears to be King in the person of his Sonne. Again, hee also confirms the vocation of the Gentiles: for Christ was not sent to the Iewes onely to raigne amongst them, but also to haue iurisdiction ouer the whole world.

Rebute the people.] The word taeach doth sometimes signifie to expostulate, sometimes to correct, also to prepare, or make readie. But in this place the receiued interpretation doth very well agree, whereas the Prophet doth speake concerning the reformation of the Church. For there is neede of correction, that we may learne to submit our selues vnto God. For by reason of that rebellious nature which is inbred in vs, wee shall neuer profit in the word of God, vnlesse we be brought vnder by violence. Therefore Christ also, Ioh. 16. 3. from hence takes the beginning of the Gospell: namely, that the world might be reprobued of sin. Now that the doctrine might not want increase, Ishiah shews, that y^e stubbornnes of our flesh must be broken: and therefore hee assignes vnto God, the part of a Iudge rebuking, that hee might examine our life; and by condemning our vices, might reforme our manners for the better. And truly we see that the Gospell is of small force, but where the iurisdiction of the holy Spirit beares rule; which doth bring men vnto repentance.

They shall breake their swords.] Now hee adds the fruit which should come from thence, when Christ shall gather the people and nations together vnder his gouernment. There is nothing more desireable, then peace: but although all seeme to desire it, yet euery one troubleth it by his foolish lust; pride, couetousnes, and ambition is the cause that some do cruelly rise vp against others. Because then that men are naturally carried away by their euill affections, to trouble and ouerthrow all things, the Prophet promisseth here that such a mischief should be redressed. For as the Gospell is the doctrine of reconciliation, which takes away the discord betweene God and man, so also it pacifies, and brings men to vnitie one with another. The summe is, that Christ his people shall be meeke, and hauing trodden cruelty vnder their feete, shall studie to liue peaceable.

But they haue done vnfitly, which would restraints this to the time wherein Christ was borne, because that after the battaile Antioque, the Temple of Ianus was shut vp: as it appears by the histories. I confesse indeede that this peace which was vniuersall in the Romane Empire, was, as it were, a signe of that eternal peace which we enjoy in Christ. But the Prophet meant to say more: to wit, that Christ so reconcileth men to God, that all deadly warres being thereby appeased, there should thereupon follow a healthfull peace among them. For if Iesus Christ be taken away, we are not onely estranged from God, but wee haue open warre continually with him, which will iustly returne vpon our owne heads: from whence it is, that all

Furthermore, Ishiah promisseth, that when the Gospell shall be published, there shall be an excellent remedie in the world to appease all dissensions: and not onely that, but all hatreds being abolished, men shall be inclined to helpe one another. For he saith not simple that the swords shall be broken; but that they shall be conuerted into massocks. In which hee shewes there shall be such a change, that whereas they were wont before to vex one another, and did commit manie iniuries to the hurt of their neighbours; afterwards they should entertaine peace and loue amongst themselves, and should lend one another the hand, for the common profit of all: for massocks and sishes, are instruments fit for labour, and are necessarie and profitable for the life of man. He shewes then, that when Iesus Christ shall reigne, those who in former time were carried away with a desire of doing hurt by all meanes whatsoever, should now be helpful to others by all meanes possible.

Neither shall they learne to fight any more.] The word which the Prophet vseth, signifies cito accustom, or to learne: but the sense is cleare; namely, that they should not exercise themselves any more in those Arts that should doe hurt, neither should they giue themselves, to the doing of wrongs nor of wicked practises, as they had been wont to doe. From hence we gather, that they haue profited very little in the Gospell, whose hearts are not brought to meeknes: amongst whom charitie hath taken so little place that they take no delight in shewing kindnes one towards another. But this can neuer be brought about vnlesse the consciences of men be first appeased by God; for there we must begin, to the end wee may also haue peace with men.

There are some brainicke bedlems which turne this place to the maintaining of a carnall libertie, thereby to take away whollie from the Church the vse of the sword: and from this place doe exceedingly condemne all manner of warre. For example, If a prince defend the people committed to him, and see that none offer them wrong; it is not lawfull, say they, for Christians to vse the sword. But the answer is easie: For the Prophet vnder a similitude speaks of the kingdome of Christ, shewing that it is a kingdome of peace to reconcile men one with another through a mutuall good will. And it is a similitude much vsed in the Scripture, where the thing signified is shewed by the signe: as in Luk. 22. 36. it is said, Lex him that hath no sword buy one. It was not the purpose of Iesus Christ to prouoke his seruants to fighting; but he signified thereby, that the time of war drew neere. So on the other side it is said that swords shall cease, or shall be applied to diuers ends, when hatreds and debates shall cease: and that those who were enemies before, should be reconciled. But some may reply, that in the time of peace and tranquillitie there is no vse of the sword. I answer, that peace hath so much strength amongst vs; as the kingdome of Chriſt beares ſway and doth flouriſh : and that in theſe two things, there is a mutuall proportion. And would to God that Chriſt might raigne wholly amongſt vs; for then peace alſo ſhould bee in his full ſtrength. But in regard that wee are yet farre off from the perfection of this peaceable kingdome, wee muſt alwaies thinke of the goings forward of it. They are therefore too fond, which conſider not that the kingdome of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt hath but his beginning here. Moreouer, God gathers not his Church together, that is to ſay, a companie of the faithfull, to the end they ſhould bee ſeparated from others, but the good are alwaies mingled with the bad, and which more is; the good are not yet come to the marke, and are farre off from the perfection which is required of them. Wee muſt not ſecke then the full accompliſhment of this propheſie here on earth: it is enough if we taſt the beginnings of it, and that being reconciled to God in Ieſus Chriſt, we keep amitie together, and abſtaine from all doing of wrong.

Verſ. 5. O houſe of Iacob, come ye,

* Or, we will. and let us walke in the light of the Lord.

HE ſharply pricketh forward the Iewes by ſetting before them the example of the Gentiles. For ſeeing that in publiſhing the Goſpell God meant to iudge all nations from the mountaine of Zion, that he might ingraſt them into the bodie of his choſen people, it was a very ſtrange thing, that the houſe of Iacob ſhould revolt from him: and that whileſt ſtrangers ſhould draw neere, the houſehold ſervants ſhould withdraw themſelves, who of right ought to haue held the firſt place, and ſhould haue led others by their example. This exhortation therefore is not onely full of vehemencie, but it is both a graue, and a biting complaint. And therefore he calles them by an honourable name; O ye houſe of Iacob, ſaith he, rome: which is the more to amplify their ingratitude, that being the firſt borne in the Church of God, they ſhould yet notwithstanding, renounce the right of the heritage which was common to them.

Here is a cloſe comparison then, as if hee ſhould haue ſaid, Behold the nations which runne to the mountaine of Zion, every one exhorting, and pricking forward his neighbour; and they ſubiect themſelves to the word of God, and ſuffer it to iudge them: and the whileſt you Iſraelites that are the heritage of God, what meane you to draw backe? Shall the nations ſubmit themſelves vnto God, and doe you reſuſe to haue him reigne ouer you? Yea is there ſo great a light ſprung vp thoroughout all the parts of the world, and will not you in the meane while bee enlightned? Are there ſo many ſweete waters running forth; and will not you drinke? what a madnes is this? doe the Gentiles runne to them with ſuch haſte, and doe you ſit ſtill? When he addes, and we will walke; hee ſignifies that the light is put before their feete, which with cloſed eyes they reiect; yea they quenche it as much in them is: and yet the brightnes thereof notwithstanding ſhould bee ſuch, as it ſhould draw all nations vnto it.

Verſ. 6. Surely thou haſt forſaken thy people, the houſe of Iacob, becauſe they are full of the Eaſt-manners, and are ſorcerers as the Philiftines, and abound with ſtrange children.

* Or, antiquitie.
* Or, ſooke their delight
in.

HE openly accuſeth this people of the peruerſitie of their nature; and uot onely in plaine termes, but as one carried away in an admiratiō, he ſuddenly breaks off his ſpeech, and turning himſelfe to God hee cries out; Wherefore then ſhould I ſpeake to this ſo deſperate a people, whom thou haſt iuſtly forſaken? For in giuing themſelves to idolatries, they haue moſt diſloyally turned away from thy word. It may be alſo a propheſie of calamitie which ſhould come vpon them, which the Prophet foreſaw by the Spirit, as if hee ſhould ſay, Wonder not to ſee the mount of Zion laid waſt and ſpoiled for ſo many ſins of the people. Yet is it not made ſuch a lamentable ſpectacle that any ſhould bee brought to deſpaire, but that all thoſe in whom there is any hope of health, being touched with true repentance might conuert vnto God before ſuch a thunderclap come vpon them.

For the Prophets were as Heraulds to publiſh the iudgement and vengeance of God to the wicked, that ſo by all meanes they might endeavour, to bring all that they poſſible could to repentance. And the ſeruants of God muſt neuer put off this affection, namely, euen to ſtudy how they may preſerue the verie reprobate; if by any meanes it could bee brought to paſſe. This place therefore may bring a merueilous conſolation to all faithfull Paſtors: for when it ſeemes to vs that we ſpeake to deafe eares, we ſtagger and begin to forſake all; What ſhall I doe? I doe nothing but beate the aire. And yet notwithstanding, the Prophet ceaſeth not, to exhort thoſe in whom hee ſaw no hope of amendment. An how ſoener he be as a man aſtoniſhed at their ruine, yet doth hee not ceaſe for all that to admoniſh them ſtil. Let vs note alſo, that although the wicked bee obſtinate, yet the iudgements of God muſt be denounced againſt them; let them recoyle, and gnaw the bit as much as they will, yet muſt they ſtil be ſummoned before the iudgement ſeate of God, to the end they may be left without excuſe.

I take the Hebrew word Ci, for ſurely: for this ſignification agrees beſt, becauſe it breakes off the exhortation which he had begun; and now ſpeakes to God. Alſo when he againe calles them the houſe of Iacob, it is added for the greater vehemencie of ſpeech, which men in a matter of great importance are wont to doe: as if he ſhould ſay, This holie nation which God hath choſen, is now left and forſaken.

For they are filled.] Because the word Kedem signifies sometime the East, and sometime antiquity, we may interpret it, that they were filled with the manners of the ancient, because they had brought the superstitious in use wherewithall the land of Canaan was in times past infected. For we know that the Prophets did often reproch the children of Israel, that they were liker to the Cananites, then to Abraham, and the other holy Patriarkes. And questionlesse it was a double vnthankfulness not to change their peruerse manners, seeing the old inhabitants being driuen out, they were brought in to possesse this land, to the end it being purged from all their filthines, it might afterwards be dedicated to holines. Yet because the other sense is more receiued, I had rather hold that; although the expositors themselves doe not here agree: For some take the letter Mem comparatuely; as if the Prophet should say, Before, or, Rather then them of the East: others take it more simple, and better also in mine opinion; in saying, that they were full of the East: that is to say, of the vices which they had drawne from thence; imitation being a mercurious contagion: so as nothing is more vsual then to see corruptions glide from one land to another a farre off.

That which by and by followeth opens it yet more cleerely, when he saith, of the forceries of the Philistins. For vnder diuinations by a figure which they call Senecdoche, hee comprehends the deceits of Satan: to which the prophane nations were giuen. The Prophet then meanes that they differ in nothing from the Philistins; from whom God notwithstanding had separated them by the priueledge of his adoption. And this was sufficient to condemne them vtterly, in that hauing forgotten their vocation, they defiled themselves in the corrupt and wicked waies of the Gentiles. Whence it appears that to sinne by the example of another, doth serue nothing at all to make the fault the lesse.

The latter part of the verse is diuersly expounded: for some draw strange children, by a similitude, to the lawes and customes: others referre it to marriages. Because that in taking of strange wiuces without discretion, they had so mingled their seede that there were manie children bastards. The exposition of S. Ierome is more grosse, who thinks that they defiled themselves in wicked lusts contrarie to nature. For mine owne part, I doubt not, but by strange children he meanes strange nations; and not by a figure, the lawes. The Prophet then accuserth them, that in desiring to please the Gentiles, they wrapped themselves together with them in their wickednesses: and thus had not only mortall men but wicked men also in greater account, then God himselfe. Now he saith, that they tooke their delight: because the affection and delectation of a wicked imitation, had rased the true loue of God, and of his wholesome doctrine out of their hearts.

Verf. 7. Their land also was full of siluer and gold, and there was none end of their treasure: and their land was full of horses, and their chariots were infinite.

WE must take good heede to the order which the Prophet keepes here. For he now shewes the causes wherfore the Lord reiected his people. In the former verse hee began with diuinations, and strange manners; now hee descends to the gold and siluer: and afterward he will speake of their horses and chariots. No doubt then but hauing first of all condemned their idolatrie, he here in the second place, reprootes their auarice; and in the third, that wicked confidence which men haue, when by forging vaine succours vnto themselves, they depart farre off from God. It is not a thing to be condemned as vnlawfull in it selfe to haue abundance of gold and siluer; but because this people burned with an insatiable couctousnes, and trusted in horses, and in Chariots, therefore they are iustly reprooued.

Some take the Hebrew particule by way of opposition, as if the sense were thus; And yet they abounded in siluer: thereby to make the ingratitude of this people the greater; because hauing abundance of all things, yet they ran after their idols and enchantments, as if all things had been in a desperate estate. Which is much lesse excusable then if they had gone after them in aduersitie: whereas they shooke off the yoke of God from their necks, being fed with good things in all abundance. Thus by this sense then he should amplifie the wickednes of this people running voluntarily and for no cause to idols, whilest they ouerflowed in their delights: but yet I receiue not this interpretation, because I thinke it too much constrained. For hee rather reckons vp with one breath, as it were, the vices, wherewith the people had spotted themselves: that is to say, conctousnes, false confidence, and idolatrie. And howsoeuer their opinion be true which expound it by way of opposition, yet notwithstanding it agrees not with the sense of this place.

A little after Isaiah confirms the same also more cleerely. For howsoeuer it be not wicked, nor a thing to be condemned in it selfe (as I said before) for a man to haue gold or siluer, if so be hee vse it as he ought: yet the Prophet iustly sets himselfe against that wicked desire and insatiable greedines in heaping vp siluer; which indeede is a detestable vice. Hee saith, there was no end, because their lust was insatiable and without measure. As much is to be said of horses, and chariots: for in this place he condemnes their peruerse confidence. Now for to preuent this mischief, the Lord had forbidden their Kings to gather great multitudes of chariots and horses together, lest by resting vpon such things, they might bring the people backe againe into Egypt. Because then that it is hard for men who haue meanes at command, not to be puffed vp with pride; the Lord would that his people should be destitute of them, or at least should content themselves with a mediocritie.

Deu. 17. 15.

Verf. 8.

* Or, bowed before.

Verſ. 8. *Their land alſo was full of idols: * they worſhipped the workes of their owne hands, before that which their owne fingers had made.*

HE repeats \bar{y} which he earewhile touched concerning idolatrie; but more clearly.
 1 And in the firſt place he ſets downe the matter: afterwards the uſe, which in a manner is wont alwaies to follow thereupon. For it is a very rare thing to entertaine idols amongſt vs; but we ſhall by and by abuſe our ſelues with them. Becauſe it is all one, as if a man ſhould pile vp wood, and another ſhould put fire to it: will there not bee a fire by and by? it is vnpoſſible it ſhould bee otherwiſe, the fire is not more readie to burne the wood, then we are inclined to ſuperſtitious, and idolatrie. Therefore the word Elium, which the Prophet here vſeth, is very ſitly impoſed vpon the idols by the Hebrews: becauſe they are things of nothing; and but vanitie. Neither is it to bee doubted, but the holy Ghoſt by this word would reprove the rage of men, who by means of ſuch vanities thought to draw the nearer vnto God: as the Papifts at this day: who to the end they might the more eaſily ſuare men with their idols: brag that they are lay mens bookes. But it is more ſafe for vs to giue credit to that which the holy Ghoſt ſpeakes. The triall it ſelfe alſo ſhewes clearly what fruit the people gather by theſe bookes. For being deceiued by ſuch groſſe imaginatiōs, they frame vnto themſelues earthly and fleſhly gods: of whom Ieremiah juſtly ſaith, that the idoll is not one-ly a vaine thing, but alſo a teacher of falſhood and lies: Ier. 10. 8.

Beware of entertaini^{ng} idols.

We are further to note this deſcription where the Prophet ſaith, that the people bowed downe before the workes of their owne hands. For what blockiſhnes is it that men ſhould not thinke it enough to worſhip wood and ſtone in ſtead of God, but ſhould alſo attribute diuinitie to that which they haue framed; which yet they cannot giue to themſelues! truly it is a monſtrous thing that a ſtocke of baſe and contemptible wood ſhould be by and by worſhipped as ſoone as a mortall man ſhall haue put his hand thereto: as if he had made it a God. But howſoever the Prophet ſpeakes to the ancient people; we may notwithstanding applie the ſame thing to the Papifts, who acknowledge no maieltie of God, but in the workes of their owne hands.

The repetition he addes, Which their fingers haue made: carries a great ſignification with it: the more plainly to ſhew their beaſtly liues. Wee are alſo to marke the phraſe of ſpeech by which the outward geſture of adoration is expreſſed, not that it is vnlawfull to bow the knee, or the head by way of ciuilitie, or humilitie: but becauſe hee which bowes himſelfe before an idoll, makes profeſſion thereby of the ſeruiſe of God: whence it appears how childiſh a ſiſt it is which the Papifts haue gotten of that adoration, which they call dulia. Seeing here in the matter of

Verſ. 9. * *And a man bowed himſelfe, and a man humbled himſelfe: therefore * ſpare them not.*

* Or, as ſome reade: The common ſort; and, them of the better ſort. * Or, ſpare them not.

SOME of the expoſitors do reade this ſentence together with the former, as if the Prophet ſhould ſtill go on in aggravating of their fault in many words. If we receiue this ſenſe, we muſt vnderſtand by theſe words perſon and man, all the Iſraelits: as if he ſhould ſay, there is neither one nor other exempt, or innocent from this filthines. But others are of a better iudgement, which thinke the Prophet repeats that in other words, which he had ſaid before; as touching the chaſtiſement: and that hereby he expreſſeth what a deſtruction ſhould come vpon this people forſaken of God. And thus the tenure of the ſpeech ſhould agree very ſitly: to wit, that the ruine of all both great and ſmall, which ſhould conſume the whole people, drawes neere: becauſe that in ſuch an ouerflowing of vngodlines there was no hope of any releaſe from Gods reuenging hand to bee looked for. Moteouer in theſe two verbes, To bow, and to humble, there is an elegant alluding to the bowing of themſelues, whereof he ſpake in the eight verſe: as if hee ſhould ſay, They haue bowed downe themſelues to their idols: God will therefore cauſe them to be humbled and bowed downe vnder a verie heauie and great burthen of calamities and runes. And withall, no doubt but hee alſo corrects their arrogancie: becauſe it was hard for them to beleeuue that a people furniſhed in ſuch ſort with ſo much riches, could ſo quickly be ouerwhelmed with miſeries.

The latter part of the verſe is expounded two waies, although in reſpect of the ſubſtance there is no great choice which of them ſoever we take. For the meaning of the Prophet is to teach, that God cannot be appeaſed towards ſo obſtinate a people. If we read it in the time to come, Thou wilt not pardon them, the ſenſe will be the more eaſie; yet notwithstanding, the imprecation wil alwaies hold: to wit, pardon them not. For wee know that as oft as the Prophets (who were inflamed with the zeale of God) did wiſh that ſome iudgement might come, they threatened the juſt puniſhment which the wicked were to receiue: as being the instruments of the holy Ghoſt; and no otherwiſe. And it is no meruaile, if the Prophet being offended with ſo many abominable crimes, was in this manner kindled with zeale, that he appoints out his countie to deſtruction, becauſe nothing was more precious vnto him, then the ſacred honour of God.

But we muſt alwaies vnderſtand that the remainder and remnant of the Eleſt is to be excepted for the Prophet ſpeakes not here of all, one by one; but of the bodie of this people, which was almoſt rotted in their vices, ſo as there was no hope of health to bee looked for: for otherwise it had been to no purpose to haue exhorted desperate and obstinate men to repentance, or to let the hope of pardon before such. The summe then is, that the restauration of a new Church is not to be looked for, till God haue first executed his iudgements, and destroyed the Temple.

Verf. 10. Enter into the rocks, and hide thee in the dust from before the feare of the Lord, and from the glorie of his Maiestie.

BECAUSE the wicked gaue themselves too much libertie, and were too secure vnder Gods threatnings, it is an vsual custome with the Prophets when they threaten obstinate sinners to adde such liuely descriptions, whereby to terrifie them: euen as if they should set the thing in present view before their eies. This is the reason why the Prophet now commands the contemners of God to enter into the rocks, and holes, to hide them vnder the earth. Wherein hee first shewes them that the iudgement of God is more terrible then an hundred deaths: seeing to escape the same, the graue is to bee wished for. But when hee forceth them thus into their holes, he doth with the greater emphasis manifest the heauy waight of the vengeance of God. Although then that by the feare of the Lord, he meanes the scourges wherewith God should smite this wicked people; yet notwithstanding it is not in vaine that he by and by speaks of the glorie of his Maiestie: as if he should say, God is terrible to the wicked, according to the measure of his glorie, in whose destruction he will manifest his infinite power. And moreouer, although the wicked cannot bee bowed nor humbled by any chastisement whatsoever, yet are they constrained to feare, when they feele Gods wrath to approach. But as touching the Elect, they are taught of God to feare vnder his chastising hand after another sort: for being smitten with the strokes of his rods, they willingly bend themselves to beare the yoke. Isaiah then testifies, that the glorie of Gods Maiesty shal shine most clearely, after hee hath shewed himselfe as a iust Iudge. For whilst he lets men alone, it seemes all is well, and men thinke that hee hath hid himselfe.

Let the Pastors of the word then learne from hence how they ought to behaue themselves, when they haue to deale with benumbed consciences; to wit, that being well awakened by the iudgements of God, they learne to feare this iudgement seate in good earnest. And howsoever it often seemes that we lose our labour in singing thus to deafe eares, yet will this terror of Gods iudgement pearce euen into hearts of iron: at the least to leaue them without excuse. And oft times also it comes to passe that some are healed, and the faithfull in like manner do profit by it, when they vnderstand what shal befall the wicked and reprobate by executing such horrible iudgements vpon them.

Verf. 11. The hic looke of man shall be humbled, and the losines of men shall bee abased, and the Lord onely shall be exalted in that day.

BECAUSE whilst the wicked are glutted with present riches, and rest, all things falling out to their wish, they put these threatnings of the Prophet farre off from them, and by this meanes hardened their hearts against God: in this place therefore hee now sets downe a couric (as hath been said) how to pull downe this pride of theirs: as if he should say, The time will come, wherein your great arrogancie, which makes you thus in vaine to set vp your bristles, yea, and that with an incredible rage against the most high, shall cease. For howioeuer the wicked seeme to be religious, yet you shall perceiue by their pride notwithstanding, that they will not sticke to iustle euen against the Lord himselfe, so as it seemes they are greater then he. In that God thus thundreth against them, it is to the end that he might pull downe their pride and hautines; and himselfe onely might be knowne to be the chiefest. And therefore, as we haue said heretofore, the impunitie of sinne is as it were a cloud cast before our eies, which hinders vs that wee cannot see the glorie of the Lord. For when he reuengeth himselfe vpon the rebellions of men, his glorie doth so much the more appeare. And that is the cause also why Salamon saith, That the hearts of the children of men are set in them to doe euill, because in this world they see themselves more happie then the godly, and so blinded more and more. But here hee shewes that after the proud shall be brought vnder in spite of their teeth; then nothing shall hinder, that God should not be knowne to be such a one as he is. Surely there was great reason that the people should willingly haue submitted themselves vnder God, and haue cast their eies vpon his greatnes, in respect that vnder his shadow they were in safetie: and besides the stocke of Abraham was adorned so excellently with such varietie of benefites, to the end they should haue bin as y mirror of the holines, and glorie of the Lord. But because the Lewes are now risen vp in rebellion against this so good a God, Isaiah denounceth against them, that God will deuise a new way how to axalt his glorie; to wit, euen in their destruction.

In naming, The hic lookes and losines, hee notes the inward pride of the mind and hart, by their outward countenance and behauiour. For a wicked conscience will discouer it selfe in the contempt of God and man, euen by the outward gesture and looke. It is in the same sence that Dauid notes our lositie eies, and high lookes: Psalm. 131. 1. &c. 101. 5. Isaiah also doth better confirme this, in the verse following. Now by heaping vp of so many words with such great vehemency, we may easily gather how notorious their rebellion was. Moreouer, we are not to maruaile that he inſiſts ſo much vpon the taming of mens arrogancie, if we doe but conſider how hard a thing it is to bow the hearts of thoſe who reſting vpon their riches, are afraid of nothing: imagining that they are aduanced to none other end, but to doe whatſoever they liſt without checke or contolement. For we ourſelues haue experience at this day how tender and delicate, yea and how eaſily ſuch take pepper in the noſe, who attribute to themſelues more then there is cauſe why, and in the end how obſtinately they reiect all holſome admonitions. For this cauſe it is that the Prophet doth thus ſtilly ſharpen his ſtile againſt ſuch iolly fellows in particular, rather then to threaten ſy vengeance of God againſt the whole people in generall. And yet he ſets not himſelfe againſt the Princes onely who were placed in great dignitie about others: for not onely they, but thoſe alſo of baſer condition are readie enough to burſt with pride oftentimes; according to the common prouerbe, Every one hath the heart of a king: ſo as wee ſee every day, that if wee touch the fores of wretched and beggerly fellows but euen with the tip of the finger, you ſhall ſee them vomit forth inſupportable payſoned ſpeeches. Seeing then that this vice was very common, Iſaiah toucheth as well the ſmall as the great that were tainted therewith, ſignifying, that by how much the more the Lord had dealt gentle with them, by ſo much the more they were to looke for a greater iudgement: for their hearts were ſwollen with rebellion, becauſe of their too great abundance. Furthermore altho the letter Lamed, which is put in the datiu cafe, be ſometime ſuperfluous, yet notwithstanding in this place it holds his proprie: becauſe it ſeemes Iſaiah aſſignes out a certaine day, as men are wont to doe, when iudgements or aſſiſes are held. I expound it then, that the day is appointed by God himſelfe, wherein the proud muſt make their appearance before his iudicall throne to receiue ſentence of condemnation.

Moreouer we may gather by theſe words, that God ſhewes himſelfe an enemy to all the proud; and therefore this day of aſſignation is as much as if God had ſaid; I can no longer endure that men ſhould thus wickedly exalt themſelues againſt me: and therefore all ſuch as liſt vp themſelues about me, ſhall be broken in peeces with my hand. Now if this were well rooted in our hearts, who is it that would not abhorre and deteſt pride, by which we thus prouoke the wrath of God againſt vs? If any will reade, Proud and loſtie, in the Neuter gender, it muſt be referred to the fortrefſes, bulwarkes, and munitions: but the rules of Grammar cannot beare it, that wee ſhould expound it otherwiſe then of mens perſons.

Verſ. 12. For the day of the Lord of hoſts is vpon all the proud and haughty, and vpon all that is exalted, and it ſhall be made low.

This verſe is expounded together with the cleuenth.

Verſ. 13. Euen vpon all the Cedars of Lebanon, that are high and exalted, and vpon all the Okes of Baſhan,

14. And vpon all the mountaines, and vpon all the hilles that are liſted up,

15. And vpon euery his tower, and vpon euery ſtrong wall.

ALL theſe allegories which are here inſerted of Libanus, and of the high mountaines, are ſo far off from darkning the matter, that they do rather giue light vnto it. For let mortall man exalt himſelfe as high as he will, yet ſhal he neuer be able to match ſy mountaines, and higheſt trees in height: which the Lord will eaſily beate downe, as it is caſie for the winde with a puffe to ſcatter the light chaffe here and there. Iſaiah then ſhewes the proud here, as it were in a glaſſe, how vaine and fooliſh they were to think ſy their haughtines could keepe them that God ſhould not ouertop them. There is alſo here an exceſſiue manner of ſpeech, which was of great weight, in reſpect of amplifying the threatning. For it is not like that God was angry with the mountaines and trees; or as if hauing changed his purpoſe hee ſhould now bring to nought, that which himſelfe had eſtabliſhed and ſetled: but Iſaiah ſets the iudgement of God before their eyes in the guiſle creatures, to the end they might the more aſſuredly perſwade themſelues that their preſumptions and bold wickednes ſhould not remaine vnpuniſhed. We ſee then wherfore he intermingles theſe figures of Cedars, Okes and mountaines.

That which is added of the walles, is not ſpoken by way of allegorie or figure. Wee know that whileſt men feele themſelues well fortified they flatter themſelues as if they ſtood in no great neede of Gods helpe. Iſaiah then mentioneth the matter of their falſe confidence vnder the names of towers and walls. For if any place ſeeme to be vnable to be vanquiſhed, there will the prophane ones build their neſts; from which they deſpise both heauen and earth, becauſe they thinke they are there ſafe from all dangers. Iſaiah threatens them, that when it ſhall pleaſe the Lord to bring men downe, he can quicklie overthrow their fortrefſes vpon which they in a falſe confidence leaned. And howſoever they are things, which in themſelues are not to be miſliked; yet notwithstanding becauſe they do too much occupie our braines, it is for very iuſt cauſe that the Prophet ſharpeneth his ſtile againſt them.

And hereunto belonged that which hee ſpake before as touching the Chariots and horſes, verſe 7. For as it is ſaid in Miche: that becauſe men doe reſt themſelues beyond meſure, vpon the riches of this world, therefore it is neceſſary that they be wholly bereft of them, that ſo they may truſt to be ſaued by the onely hand of God, and not hang their hope vpon the ſonnes of Adam. So hauing a little before reprooued them for the multitude of their horſes, now he denounceth the judgement of God; and withall admonisheth them that it is ympossible to returne into fauour againe with him, till he hath bereft them wholly of those things, to the end they should not rest anie more vpon the false succours of this world.

Vers. 16. And vpon all the ships of Tarshish, and vpon all pleasant pictures.

BY Tarshish the Hebrewes do surely meane Sylicia; and because the Iewes had great trafficke with this nation, the Scripture often makes mention of the ships of Tarshish; which were so called, because they frequented that sea. Navigation certainly is not to be condemned, because it bringes great profit and commoditie to men: as well to carrie forth as to bring home marchandise. This kinde of trafficke also cannot be hurtfull; seeing it is the will of God that all mankinde should be helpfull one to another by mutuall duties; but because pride and crueltie is aboundant in things ingendred by abundance; therefore Isaiah reprobues this kind of merchandise, by which the land had been greatly enriched. Adde heteunto, that oft times it comes to passe that the merchandise and trafficke which is vsed with nations farre off; is full of deceit and pillage, and there is no measure amongst men in this behalfe touching excessive gaine. First then the Prophets meaning is, that the Iewes shall be stripped of their riches; to the end they may learne to subiect themselues vnder God. Secondly, he sets forth their couetousnes and vnlawfull gaines by signes; as if one should describe murder by shewing a sword all bloodie.

The second part of the verse shewes that the Prophet condemnes that navigation, by which the land was much infected with corruptions. It is a thing too frequent and common, that delicacie, wantonnes, and abundance of voluptuousnesse, doe easily follow great wealth and riches, which is verie often seene in wealthie countries, and cities of merchandise. For those that trade into farre countries, contenting themselues nothing at all with things which are in their houses, do bring home with them new sumptuous and rich stufes; which in former time were vtterly vnknown. Now because wealth, is for the most part the mother of superfluitie and dissolution, the Prophet makes mention here of rich furniture; as if he should haue said, The Iewes haue decked their houses so sumptuously, that they haue drawne the judgement of God vpon them. For vnder the pleasant pictures, by a figure called Synecdoche hee comprehends as well rich hangings, as the worke of Phrygia, and the vessels made by exquisite Arte.

Now it is certaine that mens manners are corrupted when they giue their lusts the bridle thus to seeke here and there for such vnnecessarie superfluities. And we see that such delicioussnes was the ruine of the Empire of Rome. For before the Romans trauelled into Greece, they were very chaste, continent and moderate. But in the ende hauing overcome

Asia, they began to wax delicate, and to become more and more effeminate. But after their eyes were once dazelled with golden pictures, vessels, pretious stones and tapistry, and that their nostrils were perfumed with oynments and odors, by the same meanes they became besotted in all their senses; and in following the dissolutenes of the Easterne partes as a more gentlemanlike fashion of liuing, they began to ouerflow more and more in all disordered dissolutenes.

Vers. 17. And the hautes of men shall be brought low, and the loftines of man shall be abased, and the Lord shall be onely exalted in that day.

THE Phophet in naming so many kinde of heights in the former verses, declares that he spake of men. For the high mountaines and great Cedars displeas'd not God, as they were his creatures: but he signifies that all the mischiefe rests in the hearts and liues of men, who do too much trust in high and great things. But some may object; It oft times falls out that the wicked are so farre off from comming to amendment or being humbled by the afflictions which they suffer, that they rather become the more obstinate and rebellious: as it appears in Pharaoh, whose hardnes could not be softened by any plagues whatsoever. Wherefore it seemes that that which the Prophet saith heere, comes not alwaies to passe. I answer, that the effect of the chastisement is not expressed: as if God should bow rebels to his obediēce. But the sense of the place is this, to wit, that although the reprobates be hardened, that the Lord will not therefore smite his chastisements, wherewith he will chastise them, till such time as their pride and hautes be brought to the ground. For whilst they rest vpon their riches and fortifications, thinking (as they say) to be safe there; they neither feare nor honour God. But although they be fortified neuer so much, the Lord will subdue and bring them downe easilie; not by a plague or two, but so manie waies, that being brought low, and shut vp, they shall cease to lift vp their horns against him, and shall prouue by experience that it is in vaine for them to be obstinate and rebellious. That which is added, and the Lord onely shall be exalted, hath been expounded before.

Vers. 18. And the Idols will be vtterly destroy.

AS heretofore in his reprehension hee ioynd idolatrie with superfluities, couetousnes and other vices; so he now ioynes them againe together in denouncing the punishment.

Vers. 19. They shall goe into the holes of the rocks, and into the caves of the earth from before the feare of the Lord and

Wealth the mother of superfluitie and dissolutions.

Note.

and from the glorie of his Maieſty when he ſhall riſe to deſtroy the earth.

BEfore he ſaid other words: to wit, in conſtraining and compelling them, ſaying, Enter into the rocks; to the end hee might the more luclly prick their conſciences: but now he ſhewes what they ſhall doe: and telles them that they muſt enter. And hereby it appeares that that ſentence was not an exhortation, but a terrible denunciation of the heauie wrath of God, to feare the wicked, and obſtinate, who deſperately deſpiſe all admonitions, and threatnings. That which is added of the fear of the Lord, is to be vnderſtood, of the feare which ſy Chaldeans and Aſſyrians put them in; whoſe hand hee called before (as hee doth here againe) the glorie of God: becauſe hee ſerued himſelfe by them to chaſtiſe his people. Although then that they were diſloyall and wicked, yet they ſerued to the glorie of God: ſeing euen the diuell himſelfe ſerues ſomewhat to that end in deſpite of his teeth. Thus he ſpeakes of the Chaldeans, and Aſſyrians, becauſe the glorie of God might be perceiued in the chaſtiſements which hee executed vpon the people by their hand.

Hee confirms the ſame thing by the word Arise, which ſignifies as much as to go vp into the iudgement ſeate to giue ſentence. In the particle, which by & by ſolloweth, to ſtrike the earth, there is a goodly alluſion or meeting of words, which can ſcarcelly be expreſſed in another language, as if hee ſhould ſay, To ſmite downe to the ground. Now hee ſaith that the Lord will ariſe, becauſe it ſemes that hee ſleepes, when hee deſerres his iudgements: he ariſeth then, when he goes vp as Iudge, to inſtict puniſhments vpon the wicked: in ſuch ſort, as men ſhall well perceiue that nothing can ſcape his knowledge, nor be hidden from his eyes: from him (I ſay) who leaues not any wickednes vnpuniſhed.

Verſ. 20. *And at that day ſhall man caſt away his ſiluer Idols, and his golden Idols (which they had made themſelves to worſhip them) * the moultes, and to the backs.*

* Or, into the holes of the, &c.

IDolaters doe pleaſe themſelves wonderfully in their ſuperſtitions and wicked ſeruiſe. For although they bee full of crimes, and naughtines, yet behold their refuge, namely, they thinke to appeaſe God by their goodly ſeruiſes. As if we at this day ſhould ſet forth the wickednes, and villanies wherewith the Papiſts ouerflow, they were not able to denie them: but will flatter themſelves vnder this pretext ſootho, that they performe a goodly ſeruiſe vnto God, and will thinke that all their vices ſhould bee ſufficiently couered vnder this cloake. The Prophet therefore pluckes away this vizard from Idolaters, and denounceth againſt them that they ſhall no more haue ought wherewith to couer their filthines. For the Lord will conſtraine them to caſt away their idols, to the end they may know it was in vaine for them to haue put their truſt in them. Laſtly, they ſhould be aſhamed of their vanitie. Becauſe in proſperitie they thought that God was fauorable vnto them, as if he had taken delight in their ſeruiſe: and could not otherwiſe perſwade themſelves, til ſuch time as it was manifeſted vnto them by effect, that hee abhorred them. It is in aduerſitie then that they began to acknowledge their filthines as the Prophet Hoſea verſe 17. Hof. 2. 7. teacheth, when he compares them to harlots, who perceiue not their vncleannes all the while they gaine well; and inioy their pleaſures. But when they haue loſt theſe things and are forſaken of their louers, then they begin to be thinke themſelves of their porerie and ſhame, and to enter into the waie of repentance; of the which they would neuer once haue thought, whileſt they were lulled aſleepe in their wantonnes. And ſo fallies it out with all idolaters who are neuer ſo aſhamed of their beaſtlines as to caſt away their Idoles from them, till being preſſed with extreme calamitie, they thinke themſelves ſomewhat low brought.

Which they had made themſelves &c. That is to ſay, which they had made by the helpe of the workeman. Neither is this added for nothing; becauſe hee ſignifies that the counterfeit and falſe gods are falſely worſhipped. For what good can gods framed by mans hands doe, ſeing God hath his being of himſelfe, and is without beginning? It is a thing then that goes quite backward, and againſt all reaſon, that men ſhould worſhip that, which themſelves haue deuſed. By this ſpeech therefore hee deſcribes their wickednes; in that although their idols were made of gold or ſiluer, or of other corruptible matter, and that they were framed by men; yet neuertheleſſe that they were worſhipped in ſtead of God: withall, he expreſſeth the cauſe why they are diſpleaſing to God, to wit, for that they were honored. With what pretext now I pray you, will the Papiſts couer their impieties? For they cannot denie but they worſhip Images and puppets. Now where ſuch adoration and honor hath place, there is a manifeſt and plaine ſacriledge, which cannot be diſguiſed. By the holes of the moultes, hee here vnderſtands all filthy and vncleane corners whatſoever, wherein they ſhould be hid with infamie.

Verſ. 21. To goe into the holes of the rocks, and into the tops of the ragged rocks, from before the feare of the Lord, and from the glorie of his maieſtie, when he ſhall riſe to deſtroy the earth.

THIS is no ſuperfluous repetitiõ, although Iſaiab repeats the ſame things wherof hee ſpake but erewhile. For is there any thing more difficult then to prick, & wound men to the quicke, and to prouoke them to the true feare of God? We perceiue this, not onely in hypocrites, but euen in our ſelves, if we looke narrowly into it. For how many things things are set before vs, by which our minds ought to bee raiſed; and yet notwithstanding wee are ſcarce once moued therewith? It was chiefly neceſſary that this judgement of God ſhould be repeated to the hypocrites, who pleaſed themſelues in their wickednes. Now the ſeuericie of Gods vengeance is therein manifeſted, namely, that the wicked choſe rather to be ſwallowed vp into the deepeſt gulfs that may be, then to come neere into his ſight. From this place it ſeemes that Chriſt borrowed that wherewith he threatens the Iewes; in that day they ſhall ſay to the mountaines couer vs, and to the hills, hide vs. Luk. 23. 30.

Verſ. 22. Ceafe you from the man whoſe breath is in his noſtrilles: for wherein is he to be eſteemed?

THEſe things are conioyned with the former, and haue bin ill diuided from them by ſome. For after he hath with threatnings proclaimed the iudgements of God, he exhorted the wicked to ceafe from beguiling themſelues by a vaine confidence: as if he ſhould ſay, I ſee you are blinded and drunke with vaine hope, ſo as there is no reaſon at all which can preuaile with you; which coms to paſſe, becauſe you aſcribe too much to your ſelues; and yet man is nothing: for you haue to doe with God, who with his onely looke is able to bring the whole world to confulion. This place is expounded diuerſly. For ſome interpret it of Chriſt, & take breath, for conſuming; as alſo the Scripture is wont elſewhere to vſe this ſimilitude. They take noſtrill for wrath, becauſe the ſigne of anger appears in the noſtrils: and ſo gather this ſenſe; Take heede you moue not Chriſt to wrath againſt you. But if all be well waighed, we ſhall find this expoſition to be far off from the ſcope of the text. Others, although they expound it of men in general, yet notwithstanding they referre it to this ſentence; Feare not them that can kill the bodie, Mat. 20. 28. But this opinion is no more fitting with the text then the other. For it ſhould be from the purpoſe and would not agree to the time: becauſe there was then no occaſion to diſſwade them from the feare of men. But as I haue ſaid, the coherence of the text, clears vs eaſily from all doubts. For the beginning of the chapter following expounds this plainly, and confirms it: and he which diuided theſe things did ill to ſeparate that which ſhould haue beene ioyned together: for he will there adde; The Lord will take from you the things which ſo much puffes vp your hearts, and begets ſuch high ſpirits in you: This confidence which you haue is vaine and fooliſh. And thereupon dependeth that which hee now ſaith, Ceafe from man then

Chap. 3. 1.

But it is neceſſary firſt to ſee what the breath of the noſtrill ſignifies. He thereby ſets forth the fragilitie of mankind: namely, that the life of man is but a breath which forthwith vaniſheth away; and as Dauid ſaith, If the Lord withdraw the ſpirit, man returnes to his duſt:

Alſo, His Spirit departs, and he returnes to his earth. Pſal. 104. 29. Again, They are fleſh, a breath which paſſeth away and returnes not. Pſal. 146. 4. and 78. 39. Seeing then there is nothing ſo feeble and weak as our life, what means this confidence, forſooth, as if the rootes of our ſtabilitie were profound and ſtrong? We muſt then ceafe from man; that is to ſay, we muſt leaue this vaine confidence: for man hath his breath in his noſtril: for if his ſoule once depart, he vaniſheth forthwith away as water. Now we ſpeake here, of that breath by which man liues, which is the weakeſt of all things.

Moreouer, when the Lord forbids vs to put our truſt in man, let vs beginne at our ſelues; that is to wit, let vs not in any caſe truſt in our wiſdome, or induſtrie. In the ſecond place, let vs depend neither vpon the helpe of men, nor vpon any creature elſe: but let vs place our whole truſt in the Lord. Curſed is he, ſaith terewiah, which truſteth in man, and puts his ſtrength in the arme of fleſh, that is to ſay, in outward means and helpes. Ier. 17. 5.

For wherein is he to be eſteemed? Behold here the right way how to beate downe all pride, namely when nothing is left to men wherein they may pleaſe themſelues. For this is as much as if the Prophet had ſaid, Al the glorie of the fleſh is nothing worth. We muſt alſo obſerue, that this is ſaid by compariſon, to the end wee may learne, that if ſo be there bee any excellencie in vs, it comes not by nature, but wee hold it all by borrowing the ſame from without vs. We know that mankind was adorned of God with giſtes which ought not to be deſpised; we know alſo that ſome are more excellent then others; but becauſe the moſt part hauing reiected the Lord, do pleaſe themſelues in their own forme and ſhape beyond meaſure; yea euen prophane men eſteeme ſo much of themſelues, as if they were gods: Iſaiab therefore wiſely ſeparates man from God, as alſo the Holy ghoſt doth thorowout the whole Scripture. For when men are conſidered in themſelues, it better appears how fraile their condition is, yea how tranſitorie, and inconſtant. As ſoone therefore as men ſhall once beginne to attribute vnto themſelues but the leaſt ſtrength whatſoever, then muſt their vanitie be made known, and diſcouered vnto them, to the end they may acknowledge themſelues to be nothing. By this onely word all the glorious titles of free will and mans merits doe fall to the ground, wherein the Papiſts glorie againſt the grace of God: and all that fond and fooliſh loue, which prophane men haue of themſelues, is alſo plucked away from them. Laſtly we are all called home to God, the author of al good things: to the end wee ſhould not think any thing excellent either in heauen or earth, out of him. For his praiſe is forthwith eclipsed, if ſo be the whole world be not ſtripped of all wiſdome, ſtrength and iuſtice; in a word, of all praiſe, that ſo it may be giuen to God alone.

THE III. CHAPTER.

Verſ. i. For loe, the Lord God of hoſts will take away from Ieruſalem and from Iudah the ſtay and the ſtrength, euen all the ſtay of bread and all the ſtay of water.

WE haue ſaid a little before that the Prophet goes on ſtill with the ſame matter which he began in the ende of the former chapter. For hee admoniſheth the Iewes, that how great riches ſo euer they poſſeſſe; yet notwithstanding they ſhall not bee able by any meanes whatſo euer to hinder the wrath of God (being once inflamed againſt them) to conſume all their preparations. Whence it appeares, that they too much ouerthoote themſelues, who, to put farre away from them all feares, doe heape & gather together weapons, power, ſtrength of warre, counſels, great ſtore of victuals, and ſuch like. The particule demonſtrative Hinc, which wee haue tranſlated, Behold, or Loe, is not put here for the more certentie of the matter; but to ſet forth the ſhortnes of the time, as if Iſaiah ſhould euen ſet the thing it ſelfe before the eyes of the wicked. For it often comes to paſſe, that thoſe who dare not openly condemne the iudgements of God, do yet notwithstanding reiect them, as if they touched them neuer a whit; or elſe as if they were farre off from them. What is that to vs, ſay they? or, if afflictions come, wherefore ſhould wee make our ſelues miſerable before the time? when the calamitie comes vpon vs, will it not then be time enough to thinke vpon it? Be cauſe then the wicked digge themſelues ſuch hiding places, and ſecurely take their eaſe in deſpiſing the iudgements of God, the Prophet doth the more neerely preſſe them home, to the ende they ſhould not imagine, that the hand of God ſhould bee farre off; alſo that all their ſtaies, which they promiſed to themſelues, ſhould be but in vaine. To this appertaines that where he calles God, the Lord God of hoſts, that ſo his Maieſtie might the more daunt their ſleepe and benumbed conſciences. For God hath no need of titles: but it is neceſſary that our blockiſhnes and drouſines ſhould be awakened by the ſenſe and feeling of his glorie. Now the Prophet in the firſt place threatens, that the Iewes ſhall be ſtripped of all abundance of victuals, ſo as they ſhall be forced to die for want. And by and by he will adde the ſame thing as touching their ſuccours of warre, and all helps of politicke order and government. From hence we may gather, that the Iewes were ſo liſted vp with the prosperous ſucceſſe which their affaires then had, that they fooliſhly ſe-ured themſelues, as if they had been vtterly exempt from all damage or decay. But Iſaiah lets them know, that not onely all the region ſhall bee ſmiten with the rods of God, but that Ieruſalem in like manner, which was as it were the inuincible fortrefſe of the whole nation, ſhould be ſmiten alſo: as if he ſhould ſay, The wrath of God ſhall not onely be ſcattered vpon the bodie; but it ſhall pearce alſo euen vnto the very heart. As touching the words, Maſhen and Maſhenah, which he hath put in the maſculin, and in the feminine gender, I doubt not but by this diuerſitie, he would more certainlie expreſſe, that all kinds of ſtaies ſhould bee broken: and therefore I haue tranſlated, ſtrength of ſtay. For I approue not of their expoſitions who referre this to men: becauſe it is rather to bee vnderſtoode of all helps, of all kinds.

Notwithstanding ſome doubt whether the Prophet reſtrains this to victuals, or rather whether he referres it to the other helps and ſtaies which doe follow a little after. But it is very likely that vnder theſe two words he generally comprehends all things whatſo euer, which are neceſſarie for the ſuſtenation of the eſtate of a citie, or people: and alſo, that by way of explication, hee names ſome ſpecials.

The firſt member then hath this ſcope, to wit, that the Lord will tread vnder feete, all defence and riches, by meanes whereof they thought to continue ſafe; ſo as there ſhould be nothing left to ſuccour them. Secondlie, he addes, what the pouertie and want ſhall be: and as we haue ſaid, he begins with food, which, in the firſt place, is of al other the moſt neceſſarie helpe for ſuſtaining mans life.

Now the Lord takes the ſtrength of bread and of water away two waies: firſt, when hee takes them from vs altogether; or elſe when he takes away their ſtrength to nourish vs. For if God inſpires not a ſecret vertue into the, they can profit vs nothing at all, though we ſhould haue them in neuer ſo great abundance: and that is the reaſon why it is ſaid elſewhere, that he breakes the ſtaffe of bread: Ezech. 4. 16. That is to ſay, Though the Bakers giue out bread by waight, and though it be eaten, yet it ſhall not ſatiſſie them any thing at all. This ſimilitude ought to be diligently obſerued, to the ende wee may know, that although the bellie bee filled neuer ſo full, yet we ſhal alwaies bee hungrie, becauſe the ſecret bleſſing of God, which nouriſheth and giueth ſtrength, is wanting.

But although the want wherewith the Prophet threatens the people in this place may be vnderſtood of famine, becauſe God will deprivie the Iewes of all kind of reliefe; notwithstanding, becauſe the Prophets are wont for the moſt part to take theſe manners of ſpeech out of the law; this interpretation agrees very well. For hee might ſimply haue ſaid, I will take away from you bread and wine: but he expresseth a thing more secret, in speaking of the stay and strength of bread and water: as if he should say, Although the people be not brought to pouertie for want of meate and drinke, yet God can so vse the matter, that they shall famish for hunger, euen whilest they swallow downe their morsels: because his blessing being taken away, all nourishment shall passe away as smoke. To be short, his meaning is, that the people shall haue no food that shall strengthen them, either because they shall haue no bread nor water; or if they haue them, yet they shall be able to get no nourishment out of them.

Vers. 2. The strong man, and the man of warre, the Iudge, and the Prophet, the prudent, and the aged,

3. The Captaine of fiftie, and the Honorable, and the Counseller, and the cunning artificer, and the eloquent man.

HE mentions other helps, by which the state of nations or cities are vpheld in their perfection. He threatens that the Iewes shall be wholly deprived thereof, so as they shall be able to doe nothing in the house, by counsell or aduice; nor in the fields abroad by force of armes. Now he standes not to keepe any strict order, but in contenting himselfe with a brieft summe, he mingles one thing with another. He begins with men of warre, by whose hand the countrie was defended. Sometimes God takes them away by death; and sometimes he makes them become faint hearted and effeminate. This last is the most vsuall, so that the successors doe degenerate from the valor of their ancestors: and those who before were stout hearted, in processe of time become fearfull, and are disabled for the warre. We see also that the first often fall out, to wit, that the most valiant haue their courage by and by quailed.

He adds the Iudges, and the Prophet. Wee know that amongst the Hebrewes, Iudges are taken for all gouernors whatsoever. Also it is not to be doubted but that all Teachers whatsoeuer, are to be vnderstood by the name of Prophet. He threatens the Iewes then, that after the ciuill gouernment shall be abolished, and teaching extinct, that then they shall be cut off. And to speake the truth, the Magistrates & Teachers haue the same place in the Common-wealth, that the eyes haue in a mans head. To the same rancke also I referre the word ancients, who are the fittest to gouerne: because age obtaines prudence, counsell and grauitie. As touching the name diuine, although it be taken in the euill part in the Scriptures, yet it should seeme to be taken in the good part here; seeing Isaiah reckons vp those things which are necessarie to defend, or conserue the estate of a kingdome or citie. We may well call this man then, one that knowes wisely how to forecast matters, and who hath a deepe insight into dark & obscure things, which are necessarie; not by diuinations or superstitious Artes, but with a quick and prompt iudgment, and with great dexteritie of wit. Also in regard that God had forbidden them to go to aske counsell of Magicians, Inchanters, Diuiners; and that Balaam himselfe testifies that there was no soothsaying in Israell; Num. 23 23. If any had rather vnderstand this place of diuinations made by Inchantments, I do not gainsaie it; neither will there any a'urditie follow, to reckon it among the number of their chastisements, to wit, that this people so full of wickednesse shall be also deprived euen of all vnlawfull succours: as in Hosea, the Idols are ioyned with the Altar and the sacrifices.

Hee calles him the Duke or Captaine of fiftie, according to the manner of speech then in vse. For the Captaines of fiftie were among the Iewes, as they of hundreds were among the Romanes. The Greekes do call them by a name which signifies Princes of hundreds. And because such manner of principallitie was not in vse among the Latins, therefore the name also was vnknowne vnto them. The Hebrew word toes, which I haue translated Senatour, may be applied to particular persons, who are excellent in knowledge. But because they attribute it to Counsellors who exercise a publicke charge, I would not depart from the common opinion.

Moreouer, because handicrafts men haue their good vse in the conseruation of the common good, and for supporting of an estate, as well as other Arts, Isaiah saith, that they also being abolished, the downefall of the Iewes approacheth vpon them. The expositors expound that which is said in the last place diuersly; word for word it is, He which vnderstandeth low words, spoken betwene the teeth. Now because the pythionically spirits do giue their answeres by mumblings and low voices, some thinke that he should speake heere of Inchantments. Others expound it better; who by the word Lachas vnderstand secret counsels. But for as much as by this word, we may vnderstand a graue oration as well as of things secret; I haue not been afraid to translate it Oratours. Notwithstanding if any had rather vnderstand it of those men who are prudent and learned, who being vnfit for oratorie in publicke, doe yet giue counsell in secret, which also is a good thing; I do not say against it.

To conclude, we are to obserue this summarie description of a well ordered estate. For first Isaiah hath placed corne and other things necessarie for the maintenance of life in the forefront: secondly, force of warre: thirdly, knowledge how to gouerne y^e people, and other parts of politicall gouernment: in the fourth place the propheticall function & charge: and lastly handicrafts. The Lord beautifies the people with these helps whom he means to bring to ruine. Let vs know the, that all things which we finde profitable to maintaine vs in this life, floues vnto vs from the free fauour of God. Whence it follows that we consider an other point; to wit, that we take diligent heed that we by our vnthankfulnes doe not deprivē our ſelves of ſo excellent gifts of God.

Verſ. 4. And I will appoint children to be their Princes, and babes ſhall rule over them.

TO the end the vengeance of God might be the more apparent, he now tels vs how woſull and miſerable this change ſhould be, to wit, when the faithfull & wiſe governours ſhould be cut off; and that God ſhould put daſtards & meecoks in their ſtead. By Children we muſt not onely underſtand them that are ſo in age; but alſo in vnderſtanding, and manners: ſuch as are delicate and effeminate perſons, who have no ſtrength in them; neither are able to manage the ſword that is put into their hand. He hath not oppoſed all the members one againſt another: he thought it enough to ſhew ū meane by which a Common-wealth might ſoone be brought to ruine; namely, if ſo be that fooles and ignorant ones do beare rule, who are as children, in whom there is no wiſdome nor grauitie to be found. We may therefore hold it for a ſure principle, that he is vniſt to gouerne a Common-wealth, that is not called thereunto of God, nor furniſhed with ſingular vertues: which thing Plato alſo did well perceiue; for howſoever hee were a prophane man, hauing no true knowledge of God, yet he well diſcerned that none was capable nor fit to ſway publike affaires, but he which was indued with diuine vertues. And as the adminiſtration of Common-wealths is of God onely; ſo alſo is it neceſſarie that it be vpheld by himſelfe in euery reſpect; and there remains no more to thoſe whom the Lord governs not, but that they be like to children, yea that they be twice children, to wit, deſtitute of all counſell, and wiſdome.

Now the Lord exerciſeth his vengeance two waies: for ſometimes we thinke we haue men of grauitie and of experience in matters; but when they take it in hand, they ſtumble like blind beetles, and haue no more ſkill and wiſdome then little children; becauſe the Lord depriveth them of this ſingular vertue, with which before they were indued: and puts them out of bias, as if he had ſmiten them with a thunderclap. Sometimes alſo the Lord proceeds more ſlowly and takes away excellent perſonages for iudgement, by little and little, and ſuch as were fit for government: and tranſports the ſwaying of cauſes ouer to them which are not able to gouerne a familie, nor a ſillie child. When theſe things come to paſſe, we may hold it for certaine, that deſtruction and ruine is not farre off.

Moreouer, we haue to obſerue (as I touched not long ſince) that the eſtate of a Common-wealth well ordered, is an excellent gift of God: ſeeing all the orders of Iudges, Senators, Souldiers, Captaines, Teachers, and Handicrafts men, doe all of them helpe one another by mutuall community: and doe knit themſelves together for the common ſafeite of the people. For ſeeing the Prophet threatens and denounceth that theſe things ſhall be aboliſhed as a moſt heauie iudgement of God, he ſufficiently ſhewes, that theſe are rare and excellent gifts, which are neceſſarie for the conſeruatiō of the people.

The office of Magiſtrates, Captaines, and Souldiers is here commended vnto vs then; as alſo the office of Teachers. Which we are well to note, againſt thoſe franticke fellows, who ſtrive to cut off from the world, the power of the ſword; and all other good politticke orders. Now the Prophet ſhewes that theſe things are not taken away but when God is diſpleaſed. It followes thereupon then, that ſuch folke who fight againſt ſuch benefits of God, reiecting and quenching all that in them lies the ſame, are wicked ones and enemies to the publike good. Alſo the Miniſtry of the word doth here receiue his commendation, without which a Common-wealth cannot long endure. For where no prophetic is (as Salomon ſaith) there the people periſh: Prou. 29. 18. Moreouer, handicrafts, tillage, all occupations of what fort euer they be, as Carpenters, Labourers, and ſuch like, which ſerue for the neceſſities and commodities of men, are here praized, as the miniſters and ſeruants of the Lord, and haue the ſame end, as the others before mentioned; to wit, to preſerue mankind. We may alſo ſay the ſame as touching them that profeſſe the arte militarie; for although a lawfull warre ought to be nothing elſe but a meanes of peace, yet notwithstanding, it is neceſſarie ſometimes to come to ſtrokes: ſo as they who haue the adminiſtration of the ſword, doe vſe it in defending themſelves and theirs. Warre therefore muſt not be condemned in it ſelfe, becauſe it is a meanes to conſerue a Common-wealth. Eloquence alſo is a thing not to be deſpiſed: becauſe there is often neede of it, as well in publike, as in priuate, fully and plainly to ſhew a thing, and to make a truth cleare and euident. For that alſo is reckoned amongſt the gifts and ſpeciall bleſſings of God, when a citie aboundeth with prudent and eloquent perſonages, who can debate with the aduerſaries, in the gate, or in the place where neede ſhall require to defend it ſelfe by counſell and reaſon.

Now the ſumme of this place is, that when the Lord takes away his gifts from a people, and changeth their eſtate, be it any way howſoever, either by altering the forme of gouernment, or that good governours be taken away; the wrath of God is to be acknowledged, who takes away Kings in his wrath, as Hoſea ſaith, and giues others in his anger. Hoſea 13. 11. We muſt not therefore attribute ſuch changes to fortune, or to other cauſes.

Verſ. 5. The people ſhall bee oppreſſed one of another, & every one by his neighbour: the children ſhall preſume againſt the auncient, and the vile againſt the honorable.

the Lewes; all good order being broken and fallen to the ground, as it happens to all people as soone as good government is ouerthrowne. We know how great the shameles malice of mans minde is where ambition carries euery one away thereunto. Lastly, how furious the lusts of the flesh are, where there is no bridle to restrain them. And therefore it is no maruaile if one doe proudly lift vp himselfe against another, that cruelty hath the swinge there; and that euery one takes libertie to commit all manner of outrage, when Iustice is ouerthrowne, and laid in the dust. If we wisely consider this, we shall esteeme more highly of the blessings which God bestowes vpon vs, when he maintaines vs in a tolerable and good estate, and suffers vs not to bee miserable watted and scattered. Whence it appears, that those who spend and imploy their wits to ouerthrow politicke governments, are the open enemies of mankind: yea, they differ nothing at all from brute beasts.

But this confusion which the Prophet here describes is most odious, to wit, that the child shall presume against the auncient, that the people of israell, and those of base condition, shall rise vp against those that are honorable, and men of reputation. For there is nothing more strange then to see them shamefully intreated, who are worthy to be honoured. And yet notwithstanding these vnseemely and odious examples happen, when the politicke order is ouerthrowne. Whereas I haue translated the verbe Niggsh. To endeouour, or to doe their utmost, it was by constraint: for otherwise the meaning of the Prophet had been imperfect.

Verf. 6. When euery one shall take hold of his brother of the house of his father, and say, thou hast clothing: thou shalt be our Prince, and let this fall bee under thine hand.

* Or, scattering.

FOR as much as this sentence is of affinity with the former, and still continues to the words following, He shall sweare; it is certaine that the particle Et, is taken as signifying a certaine time. For the Prophet intending to set forth an extreme miserie into which this people should fall, he saith, There shall be no man which will take the charge of government vpon him, although he shall be entreated so to doe. Surely ambition hath the swinge so for the most part amongst men, that the greater part doe alwaies thirst and long for headship (and that with enuie) one ouer another, yea they aspire many times to get it with hazard of their liues: For euen in all times we shall see that the greedie lust to reigne and rule hath shaken the whole world: and there is not the meanest village in which some are not to bee found who would be tight glad to haue power and authoritie giuen them to command the rest: so much is flesh and blood prone by nature to be covetous of honour. Whence wee may perceiue, that all things are brought to an extreme exigent, when such a dignitie is not onely contemned, but also reiected with a disdainfull refusall. For the calamitie is extreme, and past cure, when men begin to flee and auoid that which they were wont naturally to couet.

ry low ebbe, when men refuse to beare rule.

But for the fuller amplification of the matter, the Prophet sets other circumstances before vs; to wit, that the Lewes shall rather cast off all sense and feeling of mercie and humanity, then to take vpon them the charge of government. If any should refuse to rule in a strange countrie, it may bee it would not seeme strange at all: but when we speake of the preserving of our brethren, it is too vn-courteous a dealing to refuse so honorable a charge. It is a signe then of an extreme desperatenes, when he vpon whose faithfulness his brethren doe rest themselves, and whose aide and succour they wait for, and desire, reiects and casts all desire of rule and authoritie from him.

And therefore also they haue been wont to chuse those for Princes who are rich; or at the least, it is very feldome that government is committed to any, but such as are of a competent sufficiency, lest their pouerty should expose them to contempt and disdain, or else draw them to vse vnlawfull shifts.

This circumstance is also adde, to wit, that although they bee sufficient to beare the burthen, yet they shall not accept of it; as if hee should say, that not the meane and base people shall refuse the place of government onely, but euen the greatest and best furnished also. Moreouer, the verbe, shall take, hath a great emphasis in it: for it is altogether as much in effect as to lay hands vpon him, to arrest him: as if Isaiah had said, Those who shall seeke a Prince, shall not proceede therein by allurements nor intreaties, but there shall bee a multitude full of tumult, where they shall endeouour to lay hands vpon some one or other by violence, and shall force him to take the charge of government vpon him. And there is no lesse weight in the last circumstance when he addes, This scattering shall be under thy hand, that is to say, At the least if there be left in thee any sparke of mercie or humanity, put forth that strength thou hast to helpe vs in this our extreme misery. For when a troupe of men are as a scattered flocke, asking succour at the hands of one of their brethren, as at their pastor and shepheard, yea, pitifully bewailing their scattering, their hearts are harder then iron or flint, who will not then lend their helping hand for their helpe. Some translate, Let thy hand be vnder this scattering; to wit, to susteine it: as if there were therein some amplification in the Prophets words.

Verf. 7. In that day he shall sweare, saying, I cannot be an helper: for there is no bread in mine house, nor clothing: therefore make me no Prince of the people.

BY the word, To sweare, he expresseth a vehement refusall, and a resolute denial. For often often it falls out, that he, who in the beginning excuſed himſelfe, and made ſhew to be vniſable to doe any thing, yet at the laſt being intreated, doth yeeld to that which is requiſted of him: but he who reſuſeth any thing, and that by way of an oath, giues them that haue ſought his helpe no hope, that hee will euer fulfill their deſires: for he hath reſolued to continue his purpoſe. And it may be alſo that the particule, in that day ſignifies as much as incontinently, that is, without pausing any thing at all, or making any longer conſultation about the matter. But becauſe it may alſo be taken to ſignifie a time full of calamitie, I do not gaineſay this latter. There is no difficultie as touching the Prophets meaning, onelic he purpoſed to ſay thus much in effect, that there ſhall be no refuge nor fit remedie to reſtore this woſull diſipation.

Although the expoſitors doe interpret this hebrew word choleſh ductly, yet I agree willingly with them, who thinke it ſhould be a ſimilitude taken from Surgeons: becauſe there is nothing more fitting therunto. And it is all one as if ſome bodie being called to heale a ſicke man, he ſhould anſwere, I am no Phyſician; or, the nature of the diſeaſe is ſo incurable, that it is impoſſible to heale it. The coniuunction copulatiue ווא, which follows afterwards, is put to note out the cauſe of ſuch a deniall, as if he ſhould ſay, I aſſure you I haue no power to do it. His meaning is then, that the eſtate of this people ſhall bee ſo deſperate, that there ſhall not a man bee found, who dares giue order to redreſſe their wants; no not when things ſhall bee driuen to a narrow pinch, Verſ. 8. Doubtles Ieruſalem is fallen, and Indah is fallen downe. becauſe their tongue and works, are againſt the Lord, to prouoke the eyes of his glorie.

HERE the Prophet ſhewes the cauſe of this ruine; leſt it might ſeeme that God were cruell in chaſtiſing his people thus ſharply. Now it is as much as if he had ſaid, This people doe periſh moſt iuſtly, ſceing they haue ſo many waies hardened their harts againſt the wrath of the Lord. And hereby he cuts off all complaints. For we know how audaciouslie the world rageth when it is chaſtiſed more then ordinarily it is wont to be. Now he ſaith, they were readie both in words and deeds, to commit all ſorts of euils. Hee ſpeakes alſo of the deſtruction of the citie as of a thing preſently acted; albeit the time paſt, may be taken for the time to come, as oftentimes it is.

To prouoke to wrath] This manner of ſpeech amplifies the fault: ſhewing that of ſet purpoſe they meant to prouoke the Lord. For the things that are done before our eyes doe very much offend vs, eſpecially if they be diſpleaſing vnto vs. Wicked men mocke with God, as if they could beguile him. But becauſe nothing can be hidden from him, be it neuer ſo ſecret, Iſaiah reprocheth them that in his preſence without bluſhing they ouerflowed in committing their wickedneſſes. The epithete glory, is alſo to be marked: for it is a ſigne of more then a furious brutiſhnes, not to be touched with any feare of reuerence, when the Maieſtie of God is preſent. Now God had wonderfully maniſteſted his glorie to the people of Iſrael, ſo as they ought to haue been humbled in good earneſt, if they had had any droppe of ſhame or modeſtie in them. Let the wicked then murmur againſt God as they will, and accuſe him of crueltie, yet ſhall the cauſe of all their calamities be found in their owne hands.

Verſ. 9. The triall of their countenance reſiſteth againſt them; yea, they declare their ſinnes as Sodoms, they hide them not. Woe be vnto their ſoules: for they haue rewarded euill vnto themſelues.*

* Or, ſhall anſwere for them.

BECAUSE the Prophet had to deale with hypocrits, that were ſhameleſſe and impudent, who yet bragged that they were very holy men: hee ſaith, that their very countenance reſiſted againſt them, what they were, and that there was no need to goe ſecke out wittneſſes a farre off to beare wittnes againſt them to conuince them of their wickednes. For he takes the word, to anſwer, to beare wittnes, or to confeſſe. How ſoever then that they diſguiſed their faces and their foreheads, ſo as they were able to deceiue others, yet notwithstanding God conſtraines them to diſcouer themſelues, and to maniſteſt themſelues to be ſuch as they were indeede: ſo as in deſpite of their teeth they bare the markes of their fraudes and diſſimulations in their faces.

Others expound, that their wickedneſſes were ſo apparent that one might perceiue the vilanie which they would couer, as in a glaſſe. But that which by and by follows confirms the firſt ſenſe, when he ſaith they declared their ſinnes as the Sodomites. By which words he ſignifies, that they ſo let looſe the bridle to wickedneſſe, y they bragged of their ſilthineſſe without bluſhing; as if it had beene ſome excellent thing worthe of praife; firſt to haue taken away all difference betwene honeſtie and vilanie, and then to giue ouer themſelues to all prophane licentiousneſſe. And therefore he compares them to the Sodomites, who were ſo farre blinded with their voluptuousneſſe that they caſt themſelues headlong with a blockiſh brutiſhnes into all manner of leaudnes. You ſee then what is meant by the reſiſting of their faces, whereof he hath ſpoken before, to wit, that they bare in their faces maniſteſt tokens of impietie, which were more then ſufficient to wittneſſe their guiltines.

Woe be vnto them] He here expreſſeth that which hath been ſaid heretofore alreadie: that all the cauſe of their euils remained in themſelues: becauſe they had prouoked the Lord by their vices and naughtines. And therefore they had no way to wind themſelues.

felues out; and if they did, yet it should bee but in vaine, because the euill was so rooted in their bones; as if hee should haue said, Seeke what pretext you can to colour your sinnes, yet you cannot accuse God, as if hee should imite you wrongfully. Know then, that your felues are the cause of it; and therefore giue glorie to God, and lay the whole blame vpon your owne heads.

Verf. 10. Say ye, Surely it shall be Well With the iust: for they shall eate the fruites of their Works.

BEFORE I set downe the opinion of others, I will touch ſy true meaning of the words. Because it is an vsuall thing that the threatenings of such heauy vengeance of God haue been wont to bring a marueilous bitter and sharpe temptation to the faithfull; and withall because there is seldome any such publike calamities, but they are also wrapped vp in the same with the wicked; for this cause the Prophet, as I take it, brings them back to the prouidence of God, which neuer so confounds things together, but that in the midst of such confusions he hath skill to discern betweene the euill and the good.

But this place is diuerly expounded. For some translate, Say to the iust, because he is good, he shall eate the fruit of his hands: and after their opinion, we should gather this sense; I will and commaund that the godly be of good courage: for howfocuer I doe sharply punish the sinnes of the people, yet notwithstanding it shall goe well with them. But this sense seemes to me more agreeable, *Say, that is, hold this for a sure principle. Because to say, is often taken in the Scriptures to think, and to haue been perswaded: as in Dauid, I said, I will take heed to my waies: and infinite other such places. He commaunds not then that one should tell the iust; but that euery godly man should rather be perswaded of this truth in his owne heart: namely, that his estate should be happie and blessed, howfocuer it seemed miserable for the time present. And so I take the word Tou; for an happie and prosperous estate: as in the former verse he vsed the word Raab, which is of a contrarie signification, & against which he now opposeth Tou. And thus I thinke that Raab should not be taken for wofull; but for a troublous estate.*

Also because word for word, it is, Say, Surely it shall be well with the iust, it seemes that the particle Gi should either be affirmatiue, as in many other places: or rather superfluous. Although it be very likely, it should be put by way of confirmation, as if he had said, Surely it shall be well to the iust, let all occasion of doubting therefore betaken away, and let it be held for certaine, that his condition shall be most blessed and happie. Now forasmuch as this is hard to perswade any of, he adds, that he shall eate the fruit of his works, that is, he shall not bee defrauded of the reward of his equitie. Whereas others take To say, to admonish, and translate these words

It shall be well, Admonish the iust that he do well; I reiect that exposition as beeing drawne too far off.

Verf. 11. Woe be to the wicked, it shall be euill with him: for the reward of his hands shall be giuen him.

HE opposeth this as a contrarie member to the former: from whence it is easie to gather the Prophets meaning: to wit, that his purpose was to comfort the good, and to terrifie the wicked by setting forth the righteous iudgement of God. For when any great calamitie falls out, by which all are alike afflicted hand ouer head, we begin to call it into question whether the world be guided by the prouidence of God or no, or rather by the turning of the wheele of blind fortue. Thus the faithfull feare to be wrapped vp in the same ruine with ſy wicked. Others againe think that it is all one whether a man bee godly or wicked, seeing aswell the one as the other are alike afflicted with pestilence, warre, famine, and other such corrections. And so from thence, this peruerse imagination entrench in the minde of man, that there is no difference betweene the reward of the godly, and the vngodly. Amongst such an heape of darke cogitations, many by the temptation of the flesh, are solicited to despair. The Prophet therefore shewes the vpright iudgement of God; to the end they might persevere in his feare; and might also know, that those shal not escape vnpunished, who perswade themselves that he will not correct them, though they prouoke him daylie to wrath and indignation.

Also he exhorts them to magnifie and extoll Gods iustice with high reuerence: as if he should say, Do not think that this world is governed by chaunce: or that God strikes he cares not how, without keeping measure: but resolute your selues assuredly that he will deale well with the iust: for the Lord will giue him that which he hath promised, and will not disappoint him of his hope. And on the other side, be you as verilie perswaded that the condition of the wicked shall be most accursed: because hee himselfe seekes his owne woe, and therefore shall it fall vpon his owne pate. And herewithall the Prophet also reprooues the blockishnes of the people who felt not the iudgement of God. For they suffred the punishment of their iniquities; and yet they hardened themselves against the blowes, as if they had bin altogether senselesse. Now there cannot a worse thing befall vs then when we harden our hearts against corrections, and seele not the hand that smiteth vs: when we perceau such a senselesse in vs, surely then we are almost past hope of amendment.

Verf. 12. Children are extortioners of my people: and women haue rule ouer them: O my people, they that leade thee, cause thee to erre, and destroy the way of thy pathes.

TH^e Prophet alſo reprooves the follic and blocktheſſe of this people who were ſtarke blind, euen at noone day. There is nothing which men beare more impatiently, then to endure the yoke to be laid vpon their ſhoulders: neither do they varie readilie ſubmit themſelues to the government of any that haue more power then themſelues. We muſt needes ſay that ſuch as obey delicate and eſtimate perſons, and ſuffer that ſuch folke ſhould oppreſſe them, are become ſottiſh, impotent, and faint hearted. Neither is it to be doubted alſo, but thoſe who thus willingly did offer their ſhoulders, like Aſſes to beare the burthen, were ſmitten from heauen with a ſpirit of amazednes, I graunt that thoſe who are couragious ought to beare the rule of a tyrant: but Iſaiah reprooueth the Iewes, who for that they had obſtinately ſhaken off the ſweete yoke of God, were now readie to yeeld themſelues vnder vilanous and baſe ſubiection, & that with moſt ſeruite conditions. They could not complaine that they were conſtrained to it by force, ſeing they obeyed them freely; to whome notwithstanding they needed not to haue bene ſubiect vnleſſe they would. Whereby it appears that they were ſtricken with the hand of God, and daunted with feare, ſo as they had neither ſtrength nor wit left in them.

And it is euen that ſame vengeance wherewith God had threatned the people with before by Moſes. For as we ſaid erwhile, the Prophets had ſtill an eye to this generall doctrine of Moſes in all their Sermons. For how can it bee that men hauing power to reſiſt, ſhould willingly put themſelues into bondage (which notwithstanding they naturally flee) vnleſſe that God hauing deprived them of all counſell and vnderſtanding, ſhould thus leaue them to themſelues to auenge himſelfe by this meanes of their rebellions? Wherefore as oft as the like befalls any of vs, let vs not think it is come to paſſe by chance: no, let vs on the contrary know, that when wiſeſſe men, and more feeble then little children, ſhall haue dominion ouer vs, that the wrath of God hath then ceaſed vpon vs: vnleſſe peraduenture we meane to be reprobud by the Prophet, of a much greater blocktheſſe.

They that lead ſee] He goes on ſtill with the ſame doctrine, to wit, that God is exceedingly angry with ſe Iewes, in that he hath let looſe the bridle to the wicked to trouble all. From hence alſo we may coniecture, that the common people fooliſhly ſuffered themſelues to be led hoodwinked by the Governours; ſo as they receiued their edicts and courſe of conuerſation as oracles. Now all the corruptions which raigned euery where, came frō thence. To the end that ſe contagion therfore ſhould not ſpread further by the ignorance of the people, Iſaiah cries to them that they ſhould take heede of the Governours themſelues who were carrying them away headlong into deſtruction. Others expound; Thoſe which make thee happy. But becauſe the participle which he vſeth may be deriued from the verb laſar, which ſignifies to gouerne, I had rather follow this interpretation, becauſe we thinke it ſutes beſt with the ſcope of the text. I confeſſe indeede that the ſaſſe Prophets flattered the people: yet I ſce no reaſon why he ſhould mention their flatteries in this place. But it agrees very well to the heads and leaders: namely that they were the cauſe of ruine. For as the Princes are ordained for the common ſafety, ſo alſo is there not a more dangerous plague, then when they be men of no value; ruling all things as they liſt. He ſaith then, that thoſe which govern are the cauſe of the euill, and corrupt all; ſeing they ought to correct others, & to ſhew them the way by their examples.

Verſ. 15. The Lord ſtanderth vp to plead, yea, he ſtanderth to iudge the people.

14. *The Lord ſhall enter into iudgement with the ancients of his people, and the Princes thereof: for ye haue * eaten* * Or, conſumed. vp the vineyard? the ſpoile of the poore is in your houſes.

WHILEſt impiety runnes ouer the countrey with the rarnes in her neck, and that the Lord ſends no ſuccour from aboue, we either thinke that he is idle, or that he hath forgotten his charge. Therefore after he hath complained of the princes which did not their office, hee addes now that the Lord will do his; and that he will not ſuffer ſuch wicked ones to goe unpuniſhed. For there cannot be a greater offence, nor a thing that troubles our mindes more, then when Magiſtrates in the open ſight of all the people ſhall ſhew all manner of leude examples, and yet none muſt dare once to open his mouth: nay by your leaue they muſt be ſoothed and flattered. Then we begiame to aſke where is the Lord become? from whom (by this ouer great licentiousnes) the cheefeſt thing wherein his glorie ought to ſhine, to wit in good government, is taken away. Iſaiah meetes with this difficultie. As if he ſhould ſay, Albeit I confeſſe indeede that the common people are bad enough; yet becauſe ſe Princes themſelues are corrupt in the higheſt degree, yea ſo farre as by their euill examples to deſile the whole bodie of the comon wealth; know yet that God is gone vp into his heavenly throne, as a iuſt Iudge, who at the laſt wil cal them to account, and will giue euery one of them according to their workes. And yet he exempts nor the common people as if they were faultleſſe; but to ſe end we might know the fountaine whence all the euils proceeded, he chiefly applies himſelfe to ſe Governours in particular, and threatens them with that puniſhment which they had deſerued. Hee had ſet vp a iudgement ſeate for God before; from whence he ſhould plead: now he tels them againe that he ſhall come: but how? with the ancients. Now although it were not greatly from the purpoſe, that the Prophet ſhould allude to thoſe lawfull aſſemblies, where the ancients are set with God, as being his lieutenants: yet notwithstanding I agree to the most receiued opinion: to wit, that God will euen plead against the Ancients of his people. This place then answers to that of David: God sits in y^e assembly of gods: Pfal. 82.

 2. In a word, his meaning is to say, Although the Princes haue libertie now to doe what they will without punishment, and that no man dares reprocue their disordered appetites; yet know ye that there is a day coming wherein they shall feele that God hath authoritie about them, wherein also they shall render vp an account to him of all their dooings.

No doubt but the Iudges of that time were very vnwilling to heare such reprehensions: for they could not endure to be handled so sharply; neither did they thinke it was lawfull so to doe: because they would haue all in their power; & would haue their fantasies held for law, that all things which please them should be lawfull for them; that euery man should glose and flatter them, by consenting to the things which they had wickedly done: they would bee iudged of none in their actions; no, they would not be subiect to God himselfe. Being growne to this vnrulnes then, so as they could neither beare admonitions nor threatnings, the Prophet euen summons them to appeare before the iudgement seate of God.

We must note also, that they are called honorable Princes of the people; but it is in title onely: for in respect of their great dignities they thought themselves exempt and discharged from all lawes, as by some speciall priuiledge: and thought that howsoeuer prophane Kings and Princes were indeed subiect to the iudgement of God; yet that they notwithstanding were exempt from it by means of their holines. They perswaded themselves then that they had nothing to doe with reprehensions, as being a matter needles to proceede against them by threats and terrors, as if they had been prophane persons. And therefore the Prophet expressly telleth them, that the Lord will not onely enter into iudgement with the Princes in general; but with these proude hypocrites, to whom he had committed the charge of his people.

And you haue consumed vp] The similitude of the vine is very common, specially when mention is made of the children of Israel. And by this word the Prophet redoubles their fault, because they had dealt no more fauourable with the people of God (whom he had loued with a singular affection) then if they had been some profane nation ouer which they had ruled. This pronoune you, also hath great vehemencie in it: because he speakes euen to the husbandmen themselves, who being set to dresse the vine, did deuoure it like wilde beasts. And therefore he greatly amplifies their crueltie in this behalfe. For what a disloyaltie was that to deuoure that which they should haue conferred and kept? Now the Lord shewes by this similitude, what a care he hath of his; and how affectionately he loues them: not onely in regard that the Church is his vine and heritage; but also when he saith, that hee will not suffer the disloyaltie and wickednesse of them that gouerne by tyrannie.

When he ads, that the spoyles of the poore were in their houses, hee names one particular, by which the other parts of their life might be knowne. Now the Princes houses should rather haue been as the Lords house, in regard they supplied the place of God, which ought to haue been holy to all. It was an extreame sacrifice then, when of a sacred place they made it a theuifish den. Also this word poore, augments their fault. For it is the most barbarous crueltie of all others, to snatch from the poore and needie, who are not able to defend themselves, and therefore ought rather in deed to be succoured.

Verf. 15. What haue you to doe that you beate my people to peeces, and grinde the faces of the poore, saith the Lord, euen the Lord of hosts?

HE reckons vp some particulars, by which it appeares that the poore were proudly dealt withall by them; yea cruelly, and with all oppression and wrong. It was not needfull that the Prophet should recite by peccemeale al things which were to be reprocued in the Princes: because by this litle, it sufficiently appeares how vniust and tyrannicall their government was. But where shall the poore finde refuge, if not at the hands of the Magistrate, who ought to be the father of the countrie, and to be an helpe to miserable persons? Therefore hee vseth an interrogation with a kind of vehemencie, What? as if he should say, What boldnes is this? What barbarisme and crueltie is it thus to abuse the wretched estate of the poore, and to spare them nothing at all? So also by the two similitudes, he sets forth their pride, ioyned with crueltie.

Saith the Lord of hosts.] To the end this reprehension might haue such authoritie among them as was meete, he sets the person of God before them: for here is a close opposition: as if hee should say, You must not take these things as from the mouth of man, but it is God himselfe, who is the author of this accusation: it is he that pursues these injuries, who will also take vengeance of you for them in the end. And therefore because those who are set in any degree of honour do vsually so ouerflow with pride, that they despise the words and admonitions of all men, he opposeth against the pride of such, the Majesty of God, to the end they may not bee so conceited as to despise the sharpe threatnings which hee hath charged them with in good earnest. And yet let vs remember that wee take not this place as if the Prophet preached nothing but the mercie of God onlie. For hauing denounced vengeance in general to all, he toucheth the heads especially, to the end that neither the one nor the other might thinke to escape the hand of God.

God. Wherefore hee here vſeth the argument, which we call for the greater to the leſſe: How can it be that the Lord ſhould pardon the common people, ſeeing hee muſt euen puniſh the Princes, becauſe they haue deſtroyed the vine?

Verſ. 16. The Lord alſo ſaith, becauſe the daughters of Zion are hautie, and walke with ſtretched out necks, and with wandring eyes, walking and minſing as they goe, and making a tinkling with their feete.

HERE follows another threatning againſt the ambition, diſſolution, and pride of women. And in this the Prophet hath not followed any precise order, but reprooues now one vice, then another, as the matter required: and then hauing finiſhed his ſermon, hee comprehends a brieſe ſumme of it in few words, as hee did in the firſt Chapter. Hee ſpeakes then againſt ſumptuous apparrell, and ſuperfluous ornaments, which were euident ſignes of vaine oſtentation. For where there is this exceſſe in apparrell and ornaments, there is alwaies ambition ioyned with it: and ſo by conſequence, many other vices for the moſt part, doe goe hand in hand with it. For, from whence comes the ſuperſtutie both of men and women, but from pride? Firſt then hee juſtly taxeth this vice as the wellſpring of all the abuſe, and ſhewes it by the ſigne thereof, to wit, by their going; becauſe the women walked with ſtretched out necks. Now as it is an euident ſigne of modeſtie to bow the head (as alſo prophane authors doe witneſſe) ſo to liſt it vp too much, is a ſigne of arrogancie. And for a womans head liſted up, what can it ſhew elſe but pride? The Prophet therefore did wiſely, in beginning at the fountaine it ſelfe: for if he had begun at the outward ſignes; as at the garments, walking and ſuch like things, they would haue had their replies at hand, to wit, that their harts were vpright and innocent enough for all that: and that there was no ſuch great neceſſitie to crie ſo bitterly againſt them, and to ſummon them before the iudgement ſeate of God for putting on a little braue or light apparrell. To the end therefore that hee may meeete with their vaine obiections, hee firſt diſcouers y inward diſeaſe, which ſhewes it ſelfe euery way in all the outward attire.

That which hee addes of wandring eyes, ſhewes a ſhameles luſt, which is ofteneſt ſcene and eſpied (as certaine witneſſes thereof) in the eies: for bold and audacious eies, are the true meſſengers of a diſhoneſt heart. On the contrarie, chaſte women haue their eies ſtedfaſt and drawne in as it were, rather then rouing and wandring abroad. Tinkling. This geſture ſutes wel with an immodeſt and laſcivious countenance. It is vncertaine, whether the women had little belles to their pantables, which tinkled as they went: or rather whether in keeping meaſure they carried their countenances as women danſers do, becauſe the manner of attire is much changed ſince that time. Notwithſtanding I willingly receiue this expoſition; that in going they made their ſteps to found: for the very words doe ſufficiently ſhew it.

Verſ. 17. Therefore ſhall the Lord make the heads of the daughters of Zion bald, and the Lord ſhall diſcover their ſecret parts.

18. In that day ſhall the Lord take away the ornament of the ſippers, and the calles, and the round tires,

19. The ſweete balles, and the bracelets, and the bonets,

20. The tires of the head, and the ſtoppes, and the head bands, and tablets, and the earrings,

21. The rings and the muſſers,

22. The coſtly apparrell and the vailles, and the wimples, and the criſping pinnes,

23. And the glaſſes and the ſire linnen, and the hoodes, and the launnes.

HERE is a coupling of things together, in ſtead of a particle that renders the cauſe. For he denounceth, that ſeeing they cannot be amended, neither by gentle admonitions, nor by any words; that the Lord will proceede otherwiſe with them, becauſe hee will no more vſe ſharpenes and rigor of ſpeech, but will come vpon them in great diſpleaſure and with his arme out ſtretched to take vengeance vpon them. And therefore euen as they had ſhewed their rebellion from the head vnto the feete, ſo he alſo giues them to vnderſtand, that the Lord will ſhew the ſignes of his vengeance vpon all the parts of their bodies. Wherefore he begins with the head, where the principall decking is; and afterwards deſcends to the other parts. Now we are to obſerue that the Prophet reprooues not the exceſſiue pompe of theſe women with this ſharpenes & vehemency without cauſe: for aboue all other vices, wherewith they are ſtained, they naturally burne with a ſond deſire to decke and trim themſelues brauely. And although they are prone enough by nature to couctouſnes; yet will they ſpare no coſt to make themſelues fine: yea, they will pinch their bellies, and offer violence to nature it ſelfe, that they may haue wherewith to attire themſelues the more coſtly & ſumptuouſly: ſo greatly are they corrupted with this vice, that it ſurmountes all others.

Hiſtories doe ſhew what vprotes women haue raifed at Rome, by reaſon of the law called Oppie, which was ordained concerning apparrell, becauſe one ſide would eſtabliſh it, and the other part would haue it aboliſhed: ſo that there could be no conſolution made hereabout by any graue and moderate courſe, becauſe of their riots. But we neede not goe so farre to seeke examples; for wee may find infinite numbers almost thoroughout all nations; so as it is a vice too common in all ages.

What vice is moſt predominant in women.

Women made an vprore at Rome, becauſe of a law made for reſtraint of fine apparrell.

Now because we are alwaies sharpe witted to deuse excuses to couer our excessiue superfluities, therefore the Prophet pointes as it were with his finger at the fountaine of all the mischief: to wit, this furious pride, before spoken of, wherewith women are carried away when they are to fiew themselves, and appeare before others. For to the ende, they may be the better seene and discerned they will shine with deckings of their garments, that so the eies of euery one may be drawne vnto them. The Prophet then hauing touched the inward sore; hee reckons vp many particulars, that so he might bring the fottishnes of women into the open view of all the world to receiue disgrace. And therefore hee makes a long catalogue; because none are more curious then a woman about this matter of piling vp fashion vpon fashion, and tire vpon tire. She will heape ornaments one vpon another without nuber: and therefore it was not without cause that the ancients in times past called a womans cabinet, or chest, A world. For if all the pieces which are here mentioned, should be gathered together, and laid vpon an heape, a man should find as many fashions as there are parts of the world. And therefore it seemes the Prophet here rifles the chests of women to bring forth their paltrie packe ofiewels which were laid vp therein; to the ende that by how much the more they gloried in them, and tooke pleasure therein; by so much the more euery one might bee made y better acquainted with their follies. Therefore how focuer here bee a long catalogue, yet is nothing superfluous; seeing thereby their insatiable lusts are the better discerned.

As touching the particulars, I meane not to stand dilating vpon euery thing apart, seeing euen the best learned of the Hebrews themselves are doubtfull concerning some of them, neither can they make any true definition of the sundrie formes of these ornaments. It is sufficient for vs to know y summe of the words, and to vnderstand the Prophets drift; to wit, that he gathers together and reckons vp all these apish toys, to the end the ambition and dissolution, with the great varieties thereof, might be so manifest; that there might no excuse bee brought for defending of them. Also it were too great an impudencie to affirme that whatsoeuer women deuse in their foolish braine beyond the bounds of common honestie, should be counted and esteemed as necessarie for couering the bodie. For how many things are they which he here recites, which are neither required for nature, necessitie, nor for honestie? To what purpose serues these bracelets, earrings, chaines, and otheriewels? whence it appeares, that such a superfluous heape, could not bee excused with any pretence whatsoeuer. It is therefore an immoderate superfluitie which must either bee repressed, or restrained; for that oft times they fall out to bee whorish intisements, wherby to weaken the heart, and to inflame it with wanton lusts. No inuaine therefore, if the Prophet be so earnest against this vice, and denounce such fearefull iudgements against it.

Vers. 24. And in stead of sweete savour, there shall be stincke, and in stead of a girdle, a rent, and in stead of a dressing of the haire, baldnes, and in stead of a stomacher, a girding of sackcloth, and burning in stead of beautie.

IT is certaine that this region abounded with sweete smells: and wee neede not doubt, but they were very inordinate in the vse of them, as in other things. Wee see that euen the nations very farre off from the East, did not abstaine from excessie herein: for there was no cost nor long distance of places which could hinder them from it. How much more did the excessie herein ouerflow then, thinke wee, in the place where such things were in abundance? whereby doubtles one might see lust enflamed, and dissolutions augmented more and more. He signifieth then that they did many waies abuse these ointments and perfumes. For men are ingenious in pursuing their lusts, and yet can neuer be satisfied.

In stead of a girdle, a rent.] Others translate, Ripping, or viloosing, that is to say, the Lord will ungird them. Now he meant to oppose two things greatly contrary one to another: to wit, that as the women walked being curiously girt and adorned, so they shall now walke torne and naked. He also opposeth to dressing of the haire baldnes: because they did not weare their heare modestly, but in all dissolutenes. Also against a stomacher, a girding of sackcloth: Now whether it were a belt or some other kind of girdle, it is certaine that the Prophet meant to decipher out some ornament which was in great estimation. Also he opposeth burning, to beautie: For delicate & braue women are afraid to go often into the sunne, for feare of being sunburnt: and yet he saith notwithstanding that this shall happen vnto them. In a word, as well men as women are here admonished how soberly they are to vse all the gifts of God, as well in their diet, and apparell, as in all their other behauiour. For the Lord cannot away with excessie, and it must needs be that he auenge himselfe vpon it by fore and grieuous punishments, when men will not be brought into order by light corrections.

Vers. 25. Thy men also shall fall by the sword, and thy strength in the battell.
26. Then shall her gates mourne and lament, and shee being desolate shall sit vpon the ground.

Now he turnes his speech towards Ierusalem, and to all the kingdomes of Iudab.
 Hauiing

A womans cabinet called a world by the Ancients.

Having therefore shewed, that the whole bodie is infected and corrupt, and that there is no part free frō contagion, & hath not spared so much as the very women, he returnes vnto a generall doctrine. Now yee know it were not conuenient that there should bee giuen to euery woman many husbands. Besides, that which follows in the next place did not appertaine to this people only. Now hee sets before them the manner of their chastisement, in telling them that al the strength of the people shall bee brought downe by warres. And from thence follows the mourning of the gates, which he foretelles shall come to passe when these discomfitures shall fall out. We know that in that time they kept their assemblies in the gates. So then euen as the gates did (as you would say) reioyce in the multitude of the Citizens: so they are said also to mourne when there should be such an horrible wast and consumption of them. Notwithstanding, I denie not but that hee compares Ierusalem to a desolate woman bewailing her widowhood. For it was the manner of those that mourned, to sit vpon the ground: as also this people were addicted to many more ceremonies, then our manner of life will beare. The summe notwithstanding of his speech is, that the citie shall remaine without inhabitants.

THE IV. CHAPTER.

Verf. 1. And in that day shall seuen Women take hold of one man, saying, Wee will eate our owne bread, and we will weare our owne garments: onely let vs be called by thy name, and take away our reproch.

EE still follows the same matter; and no doubt but this Sermon was made together with the former. And therefore we must not separate this verse in any wise from it. By this circumstance hee more fully expresseth what that ruine and destruction which he had before threatened against the Jewes, should bee. For vnlesse threatnings be redoubled against hypocrits, either they will play the deafe men, or else they will extenuate them in such sort, as the feueritie of God shall not touch them to the quicke. He here shewes then by the effect what horror of imminent destruction shall come vpon them, to the ende they should not promise an escaping from it at their pleasure: as if he should say, Thinke not that a litle skimmish shall lessen your number in some part: but it is rather an extreame ruine which threatens you; so as there shall scarcely one husband bee found for seuen women. And hereunto appertaines the word, shall take. It is a thing contrarie to the modestie of a woman, to goe and offer her selfe of her owne accord to a man. Now the Prophet saith, that they shall not onely doe so: but that there shall be seuen women, which shall lay hands vpon a man to take hold of him; so small shall the number of men be.

That which immediatly follows doth yet amplify this extreame wast; when they say, We will eate our owne bread, &c. For seeing it is the proper office of the husband to provide for his wife and familie, the women doe seeke husbands with vnequall and base conditions, when they discharge them of all care of getting their maintenance: There must needs bee a very small number of men left then, when many women hauing cast off all shames, are not onely constrained to content themselves with one husband, but doe also agree to get their owne liuing, and desire no more but that the husband will keepe the faith of marriage with them.

Let thy name be called vpon ti.] We may render it in another sense, Let vs beare thy name. For when the woman comes into the family of the husband, shee takes his name, and loseth her own: in as much as y husband is her head: and therefore her vaile is a signe of her subiection. As Abimelech said to Sara, Abraham thy husband shall be the covering of thine head: Genes 20.16. But if the woman marrie not, she remaineth couered vnder the name of her family. Now it sufficiently appears by the 48. chapter of Genesis, that this is the true sense of this manner of speech; where Iacob blessing his neplewes, saith, Let my name, and the name of my fathers, Abraham and Isaac, be called vpon them: that is to say, Let them be of our stocke, & partakers of the couenant, & neuer shut out thereof, as it came to passe in Elsau and Ismael. The prophane authors also speake after this manner: Maria desiring to returne againe to Cato, (as it is in the second booke of Lucanus) saith, Giue me onely the bare title of marriage; let it bee lawfull to write vpon my Tombe; Maria wife of Cato.

Now they say, Take away our reproch: because it seemes that they beare some reproch, when they find no husbands: not onely in that it seemeth they are despised as vnworthy, but because it was a singular blessing of God among the ancient people to haue posteritie: and therefore the Prophet saith, they shall not onely haue neede with care to bethinke them how to auoid this reproch; but shall vse all possible perswasions to attaine thereunto. Lastly, he signifies that the destruction shall bee such, that almost all husbands shall die.

Verf. 2. And in that day shall the bud of the Lord be beautifull and glorious, and the fruit of the carib shall bee
* excellent

1. Cor. 11. 3.

Gen 25. 23.
Cato and Matth.

* Or, in excellencie, and renowne.

* excellent and pleasant for them that are escaped of Israel.

This consolation is added in very good season, in regard that the faithfull might have bene vterly discomfórted with the newes of such an horrible waste, and might doubt in themselves how the couenant of God could stand fast in this so great a ruine of the people. For there is great differéce betweene these two things, that the people shall be as the sand of the sea for multitude, and yet notwithstanding that they shall be so rooted out by an horrible ruine, that there shall be no dignitie nor glorie at all remaining in those that shall escape, no, not so much as a glimpse of any name. Isaiah therefore according to his custome, as also the rest of the Prophets, prevents the mischief in due time, and moderates the terror by adding this consolation, to the end that the faithfull should assure themselves, that notwithstanding all these things, the Church shall be saved, and that by this meanes they should fortifie their hearts in good hope. Euen as then in the second Chapter he disputed touching the restoring of mount Zion, so now also he promifeth, that a new Church shall spring vp, euen as a bud or sprig shooteth vp in the field, which was vnderrest before. They do commonly expound this place of Christ: and so much the rather is this opinion receiued, as it seemeth to haue some colour by the sentence of Zachary; Behold a man whose name is Branch, Which is also further confirmed, in that our Prophet speakes not barely of this branch, but with addition, of honorable: as if it had been the meaning of the Prophet to speake of the Diuinitie of Christ. And after when the Prophet adds the fruit of the earth, they referre that to his humane nature. But when we shall consider all things aduisedly, I doubt not but he taketh the bud of the Lord, and the fruit of the earth, for an abundance of most ample and vnwonted grace, which abundance shall recreate the assamished: for he speakes euen as if the earth after a waste should be so barren and dry, that it should neuer promise any bud to come out of it, thereby to cause the grace of God to be the more longed for in so sudden a fruitfulness, as if seared and barren fields should bring forth grasse beyond all hope.

This manner of speech also is much vled in the scriptures, to wit, that the gifts of God shall bud out of the earth, as the Psalmist saith, Truth shall bud out of the earth, and righteousnes shall looke downe from heauen. Psal. 85. 12. Also hereafter in the 45. Chap. The earth shall open, and saluation shall fructifie. It appears by the course of the text that this is the true meaning of the place: for Isaiah adds in the words following, that the deliuerance of Israel, to wit, this handfull yet remaining, which the Lord will saue from this destruction, shall be the glorie and beautie of this bud. Also the word Pheltath which they commonly turne Deliueraunce, is collectiue in this place as in many others.

But yet there may be a double exposition, either that those which shall be deliuered shall be a fruit of glorie and a bud of honour: or that the graces of God shall bud amongst them. The first exposition likes me best, because it seemes the Prophet adds the explanation in the verse following, when he sayth, That those which shall remaine, shall be called holy. Questionlesse the Prophets meaning is to say, that the glorie of God shall appear clearly, when a new Church shall be borne, as if hee should create a people of nothing.

Those who draw and reſtraine this place vnto the person of Christ, make themselves a ſcorne to the Iewes; as if for want of testimonies of scripture they should pull in places by the eares to serue their turne. For there are other places of scripture, by which wee may more clearly prouoe that Christ is true God and man, so as it is no neede to coyne proofes thereof from hence. But yet I confesse that the kingdom of Christ is heere spoken of, vpon which the restauration of the Church is grounded. Neuertheless, let vs obserue y this consolation is not sent to all indifferently, but only to the remnant which should be drawne out of death as it were by wonderfull meanes. Againe, lest the consolation might seeme to bring but cold comfort if it had ben only sayd that a small number should be deliuered; he speaks of an exceeding glorie, and excellent brightnes, to the end the faithfull might assure themselves that they should receiue no hurt by this their demeriting, because the Church of God takes not her dignitie fró the multitude, but from puritie, which is, when God shall gloriously and excellently beautifie his faithfull ones with the gifts of his Spirit. Whence we ought to gather a most profitable doctrine; namely, that howsoeuer the faithfull be small in number, and that they be like brands taken out of the fire, yet notwithstanding that God will be glorified in the midst of them, and will no lesse shew a prooffe of his excellent greatnes amongst them, then if he were in the midst of many.

Verf. 3. Then he that shall be left in Zion, and he that shall remaine in Ierusalem, shall be called holy, and every one shall be written among the liuing in Ierusalem.

* Or, so life in Ierusalem.

HE holds on his former speech still, shewing, that when all the filth of the people shall be purged out, then that which remains shall be called holy. Whereas some thinke that those are called holy which shall be found written in the booke of life, it seemes to me an ouerstrict sense. We should rather reade these two members apart: All those which shall be found in Zion, shall be holy; and all those which shall remaine in Ierusalem, shall be written in the booke of life. And this repetition is very frequent, and much vled among the Hebrewes, namely, when the Prophet sets forth one benefit of God by many titles; as when it is said, There shall be saluation in Ierusalem, and remission

Ier. 2. 32

miſſion of finnes in Zion; both which are to be referred to one end: yet neuertheleſſe the grace of God is the better manifeſted, when the cauſe of ſaluacion is placed in the free pardon.

There is the like reaſon in this place: for he ſaith, that the Church being waſhed from her filthineſſe, ſhall be cleane; and that all thoſe who haue place in her ſhall be truly the elect of God. But yet it is certaine that this appertains not to all the viſible Church, in the which there are oftentimes many mingled, which only cary the name of the faithfull, and yet haue not any true marke of their profeſſion: yea, theſe ſurmount the little flock in number for the moſt part, euen as the chaffe doth the good corne. And howſoeuer the Lord had clenſed them from the chaffe in their exile in Babylon, as if he had taken the fanne in his hand: yet wee know that the Church was very far off fro her right hewe notwithstanding. But in regard that the image of this puritie did then ſhine in ſome part, which truly appeared after the ſheepe were ſeparate from the goats, Iſaiab according to his accuſtomed maner, in ſpeaking of theſe beginnings, comprehends the continuall courſe of time euen to the end, whē God ſhould fully accompliſh that which he had then begun.

We ſee the very ſame thing effected euery day: for although the Church be not wholly purged from her ſpots by being exerciſed vnder the rod and correction, yet notwithstanding the recouers part of her puritie when the ſpots are taken away. So then the ſuſtaines no loſſe by her afflictions, becauſe that as ſhe is diminiſhed one way, ſo ſhe is much more comforted another way, by caſting out from her many hypocrites. For example, the health of a ſick body can not be recouered vnleſſe you firſt purge the rotten and corrupt humors away which is in it. From hence we gather a very fruitfull conſolation, for wee are wont to deſire a multitude, and would by that iudge of the good eſtate of the Church: but we ſhould rather deſire to be a ſmall number, that ſo the glory of God, rather then of a multitude, might ſhine in the miſt of vs. But becauſe our owne glorie carries vs away, from thence it comes to paſſe that wee more regard the number of men then the vertues of ſome few. Wee muſt alſo gather what the true glorie of the Church is, for it then truly flouriſheth, when the Saints haue place in her: and although they be few and deſpised of the world, yet they neuertheleſſe make the eſtate thereof flouriſhing and deſireable. But becauſe it will neuer be in this world that the Saints ſhould occupie the place alone in the Church, we muſt patiently beare the mingling, and in the meane while hold it for a ſingular benefit as oft as it approacheth any thing nie to this puritie.

We haue ſayd alreadie, that by thoſe which are written in the booke of life, we muſt vnderſtand the elect of God, as if he ſhould ſay, The prophane multitude ſhal be cut off, who only haue their names written in the earth. Now the Prophet alludes to the place in Mo- ſes in the 32. of Exod. where he deſires rather to be blotted out of the booke of life, then that all the people ſhould periſh. But although God haue none other booke but his eternall Counſell, by which he hath predeſtinated vs to ſaluacion, in adopting vs for his children, yet this ſimilitude agrees very well to our weakneſſe, becauſe our vnderſtanding can not otherwiſe comprehend how God ſhould know his flock, in ſuch wiſe as none of the elect ſhould euer be deprived of eternall life. Seeing then that God hath his choſen written, the decree of adoption, by meanes wherof eternall felicitie is aſſured vnto them, is called the booke of life. As touching the reprobate, although for a time it ſeemes they be equal to the children of God, yet notwithstanding they are not enroled in this Catalogue, as we ſee how they are driuen away when he gathers together, and puts his owne apart. Now the accompliſhment hereof ſhall not be, till the laſt day: notwithstanding vnto Gods children, becauſe they are aſſured of their election, when they perſeure conſtantly, while the reprobate fall to reuolting, it is a great comfort in calamities, when being ſincken with temptations, we continue ſtedfaſt in our vocation.

Verſ. 4. When the Lord ſhall waſh the filthineſſe of the daughters of Zion, and purge the blood of Ieruſalem out of the miſt thereof by the ſpirit of iudgement, and by the ſpirit of burning.

HE ſtill goes on with the ſame doctrine: for in as much as we commonly thinke that the Church receiues great hurt through the afflictions by which ſhe is diminiſhed, the Prophet inſiſts more and more vpon the contrary ſentence. And now to beate back this error, he reaſoneth by the contrary, to wit, that God rather waſheth and purgeth out all the corruptions from his Church by meanes of afflictions. By blood. I vnderſtand not only murders, and ſuch other notorious crimes, but all maner of filthineſſe and vncleanneſſe whatſoeuer. Now there is a redoubling in this ſimilitude, by which he repeats one and the ſame thing twice, becauſe that which before he called filthineſſe in generall, now he calles it blood in particular, as the fluxe of blood, or ſome ſuch like thing. In ſumme, he ſhewes the fruites which theſe corrections bring, to wit, that by them our filthineſſe is cleaned. For whileſt vngodlineſſe ſpreades it ſelfe hither and thither without puniſhment, then we grow as corrupt as others, for which cauſe it is neceſſarie that the Lord ſhould awaken vs by admonitions, yea, as a good Phyſition, that he purge, lance, and ſometimes that he feare, and burne.

He takes iudgement for puritie, to wit, for the effect of iudgement, when the things which were declining are ſet againe in their firſt eſtate. He adds, the ſpirit of burning, by which their filthineſſes are purged and corrected. Wherein we are to note two things: Firſt, that the purgation of the Church is wrought

The Church ſuſtaines no loſſe by her afflictions.

2 wrought by the spirit. Secondly, that the name is imposed vpon the spirit by the effects; now of iudgement, now of burning. As if he should say, The iudgement of the spirit, and the burning of the spirit. As oft then as these manners of speech are met withall in the Scripture, to wit, The Lord will doe these things by the spirit of truth, power, and righteousnes, &c. we may turne this phrase of speech thus; In truth, in power, and in righteousnes of the spirit. For the spirit of God, from whom both the beginning and end of the worke of our saluation comes, workes thus in vs. From these epithites then we must obserue what the principall effects of the spirit are: the Lord purgerh out our drosse by his spirit, that he may amend and reforme vs. By the word iudgement, he sheweth what the chiefe vertue is in the restauration of the Church: to wit, when those good things which were confused & ouerthrowne are restored, and set in their right order againe. Burning also sheweth the maner and way which the Lord vseth to restore the Church to her first puritie.

Vers. 5. And the Lord shall create vpon euery place of mount Zion, and vpon the assemblies thereof, a cloud and smoke by day, and the shining of a flaming fire by night: for vpon all the glorie shall be a defence.*

6. And a covering shall be for a shadow in the day for the heate, and a place of refuge, and a covert, for the storme and for the raine.

[Vpon euery habitation.] As if he should say, There shall not bee the least corner in the mountaine of Zion, where the grace and fauour of God shall not appeare. I take habitation and assembly, for one and the same thing. For I take not Assembly for congregation, but for the place where men meete. Now to the end hee might describe and set forth a full blessing, he alludes to that which Moses recites; namely, that when the Lord would deliuer his people from the bondage of Egypt, hee sent a pillar of a cloud by day, and a pillar of a fire by night, Exod. 13. 21. It is an vsuall thing with the Prophets, that when they would set forth any excellent benefit, they then call to remembrance this most glorious worke of God, to wit, The deliuerance out of Egypt. Because then did the Lord wonderfully display the infinite treasures of his grace, to the end hee might establish his Church; not omitting in that worke any testimonie of his bountie and goodnes, that the felicitie of his chosen people might be famous thorowout the whole world. But aboue all things, this was most memorable, that they should be preserued by day, by the covering of a cloud from the annoyance of too much heate, and that the pillar of fire should goe before them in the night, to the end they should not wander or goe astray. The summe is this; that when God will gather home his Church from out of Babylon, that the manner of it shall bee no lesse admirable, then that by which the people were in times past deliuered out of Egypt. Not that they should be accompanied in the midst of their iourne betwene Babylon and Iudea, with the cloud and the pillar of fire, as in the wildernes: but because he shewed testimonies of his fauour towards them by meanes no way lesse excellent then they. As if any should say at this day, The Lord will illuminate vs by the light of his holy spirit; he will giue clouen tongues, by which his Gospell shall be spread thorowout the world. No man would take this literally, as if the Holy Ghost should be sent downe from heauen in a visible forme: but this miracle should bee remembered only, to the end the faithful might learne to rest at this day vpon y same power of God in the restauration of the Church, as the Apostles had experience of in their time. And withall, that by this manner of speech the Prophet mentioneth a continuall succession of blessing; as if he should say, God will not stretch forth his hand to deliuer you for a moment only, but euen as he hath alwaies assisted our fathers in the desert; so after he hath deliuered you, he will defend you vnto the end.

That which he addes, vpon All glorie, depends vpon that which he said before, to wit, that the bud which should againe sprout forth, should be glorious. It is as much then as if he had said, Vpon those which shall beare the signes and markes of their deliuerance. It may be also that he alludes to that place of Exodus: where it is said, that the houses which the destroying Angell had marked, were not hurt: Exod. 12. 23. For as then the sprinkling of the blood was a safekeeper of their saluation; so also Isaiab promiseth that the faithfull shall be in safetie, when God shall haue marked them. And this ought to be diligently obserued. For wee are admonished, that we cannot otherwise bee partakers of the grace of God, vnlesse wee beare his image, and that his glorie doe shine in vs.

[And a covering] &c. Although the Prophet confirms that which wee haue touched already, to wit, that God will leade his chosen perpetually, vntill he haue brought vs to our wished end: yet notwithstanding we are admonished that the faithfull shall bee alwaies subiect to many troubles. For heate and cold, and other sharper euils then those doe still fiercely pursue them: so as when they are deliuered out of one danger, they fall againe into another. But behold here a most sweet consolation, to wit, that against all stormes, the only shadow of the Lord shall suffice vs: because by it we shall be so couered, that nothing shall hurt vs, or bring vs the least damage. Although then that diuers afflictions and troubles doe enuiron vs on all sides, yet the Lord promiseth that hee will assist vs: as it is spoken in the Psalm: The sunne shall not smite thee by day, nor the Moone by night: Psalm. 121. 6. For the Lord shall preserue thy going out, &c. It onely remains that wee follow

follow our vocation, and diſcharge our duties faithfully. It beſalles alike to faithfull and vnfaithfull, to endure many troubles: but the wicked haue no refuge nor couert vnder which they may ſhroud themſelues; they muſt of neceſſitie be overwhelmed. But the condition of the faithfull is bleſſed. For although they be cumbered with heate and cold, yet they haue a ſure refuge vnder the protection of God. Only let vs be mindfull that that glorie wherof wee ſpake before doe thine in vs: otherwiſe theſe things doe nothing at all appertaine vnto vs. But if we beare the marke of God, let vs be aſſured that he will be our helpe as eſt. as any tempeſt ſhall fall vpon vs.

THE V. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. Now will I ſing* to my beloved, a ſong of my beloved to his vineyard. My beloved had a vineyard in a very fruitfull hill.

* Or, for.

* Heb. Sonne of the eye, or of the fat.

The argument of this Chapter differs from the former. For the Prophets purpose is to ſet forth the eſtate of the children of Iſrael as it then was: to the ende euerie one might take knowledge of his faults, and that by this meanes, ſhame and diſpleaſure in themſelues for their finnes might prouoke them to come to true and earneſt repentance: as alſo that hereby they might behold their miſerable condition as in a glaſſe. For otherwiſe they would haue flattered themſelues too much in their vices, and would not haue borne any admonitions at all. It was needfull therefore that their brutiſhnes ſhould be painted out before them as in liuely colours. But to the end he might procure himſelfe the greater authoritie he verſh this preface: for they were wont to write excellent and memorable things in verſe; to the end euerie one might haue it in their mouth, that ſo there might remaine a perpetuall remembrance of them. According as wee ſee that ſong which Moſes wrote, Deut. 32. and many others after him who did the like; that as well in publike as in priuate, one might heare all things ſounded forth by ſuch voices. For the doctrine is thereby more highly aduanced, then if it ſhould be taught onely. For this cauſe Iſaiab compoſed this ſong, that ſo the people might take a more cleare view of their filthines. Neither is it to be doubted, but theſe things were handled excellentlie, both for art and voice, as the cuſtome is, wee know, to compoſe verſe with the moſt exquisite ſkill that may be.

To my beloved.] It is certaine that he meaneth God; as if he ſhould ſay, I will make a ſong on Gods behalfe, by which hee complains of the ingratitude of the people: becauſe there was much more velenencie in it to bring God in ſpeaking. But ſome may aſke wherefore Iſaiab calles him his beloved. Some doe anſwer; it was becauſe hee was of the kindred of Chriſt. And the truth is indeede, that hee deſcended from Dauid: but this ſeemes to be conſtrained. It ſhall be more plaine and agreeable, if according to the ſentence of S. Iohn, we ſay, that the Church is committed to the friend of the bridegrome: and that we put the Prophets in this number. For no doubt but this title is fitting for them, ſeeing the charge of the auncient people was committed vnto them, to the ende they might be maintained vnder their head. It is no meruaile then, if they were ieaalous and diſpleaſed, when the people turned away their hearts from him. Iſaiab then puts himſelfe in the perſon of the bridegrome; and as one grieued and perplexed in regard of the Church committed to his charge, hee complains that ſhe hath broken the covenant of wedlocke: and withall laments and bewailes her d. ſoyaltie and ingratitude.

John 3. 29.

And hereby wee may ſee that it was not S. Paul alone who was ieaalous ouer the ſpouſe of God, but alſo all the Prophets and Teachers, as much as in them lay, had the like care; to wit, ſo many as were faithfull to the Lord. And this title of Spouſe ought to touch all the ſeruants of God to the heart; and to quicken vp their ſpirits. For what doth a man hold more deare vnto him then his wife? Surely euerie honeſt man will prefer her before all treasures; and will more readily hazard his goods to other mens cuſtodie, then his wife. And therefore he muſt needes be eſteemed very faithfull to whoſe keeping a man will commit his beſt beloved. Now the Lord commits this truſt to the Paſtors and Miniſters, and puts his Church which is as his deare wife into their hands. What wickednes were it then to betray her by our ſloth and negligence? Whoſeuer is not inflamed with the care of her preſeruatiou, he cannot couer himſelfe vnder any pretence whatſoeuer. Whereas in the ſecond place, he adds the word Dodi, which he vſed before; although he chaſgeth the fiſt ſyllable, yet notwithstanding it is of the ſame ſignification with the fiſt. Be it then that ſome turne it, Vncle; others Coſine, I am rather of their opinion who take it by way of alluſion. For we muſt giue more liberty to Poets then to other writers. He hath then thus garniſhed theſe words, and come ouer them (as you would ſay) to the end that by ſ rhythmie, and tuning of the verſe, he might helpe their memorie, and quicken their vnderſtandings.

My beloved had a vine.] The ſimilitude of the vine is much vſed in the Prophets: and there is no compariſon more fitting his purpoſe then this. For he ſhewes by it two waies how much the Lord eſteemes his Church.

F There

There is no possession that a man holds more deare to him then his vine : neither is there any thing that requires more daily and continuall labour and diligence. The Lord then not onely teacheth that we are as a precious heritage vnto him ; but would also haue vs take knowledge of the continuall care and thought he takes for vs. In the beginning of the song, the Prophet remembers the benefits which the Lord had bestowed vpon his people the Iewes ; then he shewes how great the ingratitude of this people was : thirdly, the punishment and correction which will follow : lastly, he makes a catalogue of their finnes : because men will not acknowledge their offences, but by maine force. ◊

In a very fruitfull.] In the entrance hee shewes that God had seated this people in a happie dwelling place, as if a man should plant a vine in a pleasant and fruitfull hill. For by the word which he vseth, I vnderstand an high place, which is exalted about the plaine : we commonly call it a hill. Whereas some referre it to Ierusalem, as if he should describe the situation thereof, I thinke it to be farre fetched and constrained. It seemes to me rather, that the Prophet pursues his allegoric. And because God had vouchsafed to take this people into his care and safeguard, he compares this grace to the planting of a vine. For vines are more easily planted in hills and high places, then in vallies. And as one saith, The vine loues the high hills, the West, and the side of a wood. He alluded then to the common custome of planting vines. Afterwards hee follows the similitude, saying, that the feate of this place was not common as others were. For in calling it, The sonne of the oyle, or of the fat, in his language ; he means a fat and fruitfull place. I approue not of their exposition who restraine it to the fruitfulness of Iudeah. For the Prophet meant to describe the happie and blessed estate of the people by this similitude.

Verf. 2. And he hedged it, and gathered out the stones of it, and he planted it with the best plants, and he built a tower in the midst thereof, and made a winepresse therein : then hee looked that it should bring forth grapes : but it brought forth wild grapes.

HE shewes the continuall care and diligence of the Lord in dressing his vine : as if he should say, He omitted nothing of that which is required to be in a good husbandman, who about all things watcheth vpon his charge. Notwithstanding wee are not here curiously to examine the text, word by word as many doe ; saying, That the Church was inuironed with hedges, to wit, with the protection of the holy Ghost ; to the end it might be secured against all the assaults of the diuel : that the presse signifies the doctrine : and that the stones signifie all troublesome errors. The Prophets meaning, as I haue shewed, was more plaine and simple ; to wit, that God diligently performed the office of an husbandman, sparing nether paines nor cost. But in the meane while, the Iewes had great cause to consider in themselves with how many great and diuers sorts of benefits the Lord had enriched them. When the Church at this day is set forth vnto vs vnder the similitude of a vine, wee ought to referre these figuratiue speeces to the benefits of God, by which he assures vs of his loue towards vs, and also of the care he hath for our saluation. It seemes that in the word of planting, order should not be obserued : for a man should rather plant first, and then close it with an hedge afterward. But thus I vnderstand it, that he no sooner planted his vine, but he forthwith provided all things belonging vnto it. And therefore he iustly accuseth them of ingratitude and disloyaltie, that they brought not forth fruit worthie the cost and paines bestowed vpon them.

And we are greatly to feare lest the Lord take not vp the like complaint against vs. For by how much the more the Lord shall haue enriched vs with greater benefits then they ; so much the more abominable shall our vnthankfulness be, if we abuse them. The Lord neuer beautifies and adorns his Church in vaine ; or that she should onely make outward vnprofitable shewes ; but to the end the might bring forth grapes, that is to say, good fruits. But if we disappoint the Lord of his expectation, the punishment which the Prophet here foretelles, will certainly follow. Wherefore the remembrance of his benefits ought to moue and pricke vs forward with all diligence to yeeld him thanks. Moreover, there is here a close opposition in the word vine, thus greatly husbanded : because that by so much the more we are bound to make pretious account of God his benefits, as they are more rare and excellent ; as being pledges of his particular loue towards vs. That hee causeth the sunne to shine as well vpon the wicked as the good, and bestowes all things necessarie vpon them for to feede and cloth them ; these are common gifts. But how much more ought wee to prize and esteeme this covenant of grace, which hee hath contracted with vs ; by meanes whereof he illuminates vs by the light of his Gospell ; which grace he onely bestowes vpon his beloued. We are therefore about all things to waigh & consider of this care and diligence, which the Lord bestowes, in working daily vpon our minds, and in framing vs to his owne image.

[Now he looked.] He heere complains that the people who had beene indued with so great excellencie of gifts, were wickedly and vnthankfully become degenerate ; and accuseth them for contempt of the louing kindnesse of God. For he saith, that in stead of good grapes, this Vine brought forth sowre and wild grapes. Now, we must not imagin \hat{y} God (before whose eyes all things are naked) can be deceiued of his hope, as a mortall man may be : for in the song of Moses he publisheth with a loud voyce, what the perversitie of this people would be, and that it was appar-

rant to him euen from the beginning. My beloved, ſaith he, will kick with the heele againſt me, after the ſhall become fat and luſue, Deut. 32. 15. There is then no more vn-cercentie of hope in God, then of repentance: neither doth Iſaiaſ ſubtiltie diſpute here what God waited for in himſelte, but how the people ought to behaue themſelues, leaſt they receiue lo great fauours in vayne. And thus God commaunds that his Goſpell ſhould be publiſhed for the obedience of faith; not that he looks that all ſhould yeeld their obedience thereunto; but becauſe the vnbelieuers might be left without excuſe by the onely hearing of it. To conclude, there is nothing which ſhould more prouoke vs to liue holily and according to God, then when the Holy Ghoſt compares the obedience which we yeeld vnto God, to ſweet and pleaſant fruit.

Verſ. 3. Now therefore O inhabitants of Ieruſalem, and men of Iudab, iudge, I pray you, betweene me, and my Vineyard.

4. What could I haue done any more to my Vineyard, that I haue not done vnto it? Why haue I looked that it ſhould bring forth grapes, and it brought forth wild grapes?

Now he appoints euen thoſe to be Iudges of his cauſe, with whom he pleades: as men are wont to do in things ſo plaine and apparant, that the aduerſe partie can haue no euafion. It is a ſigne then that God hath gotten the better end of the ſtaffe, whē he permits thoſe who are guilty, to ſhew whether the matter be ſo or no. Now he firſt demaunds, What could be more deſired of a huſbandman or good houſholder then that which hee did to his Vine. From thence hee concludes, that they are vtterly without excuſe, in that he ſhould be ſo wickedly defrauded of the frutes of his labours: although it ſeemes in the ſecond member, that he complains in himſelte that he waited for any pleaſing or deſireable frute of ſo wicked a people. As it will often come to paſſe that we ſhal complain by our ſelues, when the euent of a thing doth not anſwere our hope: and we are ſory to haue beſtowed our labour and coſt vpon ſo vnthankfull perſons, whoſe peruerſitie ſhould rather haue kept back ſuch benefits from them. And we wil confeſſe that we were indeed iuſtly deceiued, becauſe we were too eaſie and light of believe. Yet notwithstanding, this ſence will be more plaine; to wit, ſeeing I haue fully diſcharged my dutie, and haue done aboue all that could haue bene expected in huſbanding my Vine, whence comes it that it yeelds me ſo euill recompence? and that in ſtead of the frute which I looked for, it only brings forth bitter fruit?

If any ſhall obiect now, that the remedie was in Gods hand, if he had but only bowed the heart of the people; This is but a friuolous cauill to excuſe them: for their conſciences pricked them in ſuch wiſe, that they could not eſcape by laying the fault vpon another. For although God doe not pearce with efficacy into the hearts of men by his holy ſpirit, to make them teachable; yet ſhall it be in vaine for any notwithstanding, to mutter that this was wanting vnto them, ſeeing that their externall vocation doth ſufficiently cut off all pretext and ſhew of ignorance. Alſo, God ſpeakes not here of his power, but he denies that he was bound to do more for them then hee did.

Verſ. 5. And now I will tell you what I will do to my Vineyard; I will take away the hedge thereof, and it ſhall be eaten vp: I will breake the wall thereof, and it ſhall be troden downe.

6. And I will lay it waſte: it ſhall not be cut, nor digged; but briars and thornes ſhall grow vp: I will alſo command the cloudes that they raine no raine vpon it.

Becauſe he holds the Iewes as good as condemned perſons by their owne mouth, he by and by addes that he will be the auenger of the contempt of this grace, ſo as they ſhall not eſcape without puniſhment. For this reproch would not haue bin ſufficient to haue moued the, vnleſſe he had forthwith threatened the with correction. He giues them now to vnderſtand then, that ſo great wickednes whereby they haue diſloyally mocked him, ſhall not eſcape ſcot-free. Now the ſumme of the vengeance is, that they ſhall be deprived of the gifts which they had abuſed; not only when God ſhall withdraw himſelfe fro them, but alſo that they ſhall be laid open to the ſpoile of the enemies. In the meane while he ſhewes how miſerable their condition ſhall be, when he ſhall once ceaſe to beſtow his liberalitie vpon them. Whence it follows, that it ought to bee attributed to the ſingular goodnes of God, that this Vine continued ſafe and ſound till then: yea he admoniſheth by how many ſundry waies it was preſerued; and alſo how many meanes God hath in his hand to deſtroy and lay it waſte, both within and without. For his ſuccour being withheld from it, it muſt needs lie open to be deuoured of all that ſhould paſſe by, whether men or beaſts. After (ſaith he) that I ſhall take away my hedge, the beaſts ſhall tread it vnder ſecte, and it ſhall be eaten vp, and the robbers ſhall rob and ſpoile it, and ſo it ſhall be laid fallow. And further, becauſe the Lord ſhall ceaſe to prune and deck it, it ſhall bring forth no more fruit, in regard it wants huſbanding: but briars and thornes ſhall grow vp, which will choke the plants; yea, God will cauſe ſo very rootes to wither away by withholding raine.

Now we may perceiue by this, with how many weapons God is furniſhed to reuenge himſelfe vpon our ingratitude, when he ſhall ſee that wee deſpiſe his benefits. True it is that the Prophet continues the ſimilitude: and to the end he may win the better audience, he enricheth his speech with figures; notwithstanding it behoues vs simple to gather, that euen as God dayly bestowes infinite blessings vpon vs, so wee also giue diligent heed, that by taking away now this, and afterward that, he auenge not himselfe vpon our contempt of them. And as touching the gouernment of y^e Church, by how much the more it hath need of many helps, so much the more shall she be subiect to many chastisements, if the wickedly corrupt the things that God hath ordained for her saluation. And therefore it is no wonder if so many calamities threaten vs at this day, with wast and destruction. For we ought to attribute all the euils that shall befall vs (whether the decay of vision; or that the wicked haue their swinge; or that wolues and foxes doe creepe into the Church) to our owne vnthankfulness: because wee haue not yeelded such fruit as we should, but haue been slothfull and idle. Let vs acknowledge the wrath of God then as oft as we are iustly deprived of so many benefits as hee doth willingly offer vs.

Note.

Verf. 7. Surely the vineyard of the Lord of hosts is the house of Israel, and the men of Iudah are his pleasant * plant: and he looked for iudgement, but behold oppression: for righteousness, but behold a crying.

* Or, branches.

Hitherto hee hath spoken figuratiuely: Now he sets downe the drift of his song. Heretofore he hath only charged the Iewes with iudgement: Now he shewes that they are not only guiltie, but also that hee holds them as conuicted persons. For they could not bee ignorant of the benefits which they had received from God. Thou (saith the Psalmist) broughtest a vine out of Egypt, and hauing driuen out the nations, didst plant them in, Psalm. 80. 9. Isaiah follows not all the parts of the similitude neither was it needfull: It was sufficient to haue shewed the scope and drift of it. The whole people were the vine: the particular persons the branches: thus hee first accuseth the whole body in generall; and lastly euery one in particular: so as none could exempt himselfe from this condemnation, as not hauing iustly deserued the same before.

It sufficiently appears wherefore the people is called a vine. Because God had chosen them, and made the couenant of grace and of eternall saluation with them, and had enriched them with infinite benefits. The beginning is the plant; the labour afterwards followeth. This people was adopted of God, and husbanded by him diuers waies. For their adoption had not been sufficient, if the Lord had not wrought vpon them and framed and enriched them with his graces from day to day. We ought at this day to be much vrged with this doctrine. Christ affirms, that he is the vine, and that being ingrafted into him, the father will purge vs, for as much as

God vouchsafeth to performe the office of a husband man in this behalfe, and carefully bestowes all those things vpon vs which hee (in reproach) saith he, bestowed vpon the ancient people. Is it any matuaile then if he be grieuouly offended, when he bestowes his labour in vaine, and without profit? From hence comes that threatening; Euery branch that beares not fruite in me, shall he wened downe and cast into the fire.

[He looked for iudgement.] He begins plainelie to shew how wickedly the Iewes are degenerate, amongst whom all kind of violence and of iniustice had place, hauing reiected all equitie and righteousness. In the words, hee vseth a meeting together; which hath great elegancie: and although they found almost one of them like another: yet they are of contrarie signification. For Mischap signifieth iudgement: Mispach conspiracie, or oppression: Tjedaca iustice: and Tseacs the crye and complaint of those which were oppressed by violence: which things were not wont to be heard, when euery man had his due. Moreouer he makes mention of two things which God requires principally of his people, as being indeede the true fruites of the feare of God. Although notwithstanding the seruice of God be first in order: yet it is not inconuenient that it should be described by the duties of the second Table. They are rightly conuincid to haue contemned God; because they exercised crueltie against men: for where inhumanity beares sway; there religion is quenched.

Let vs know that the same is now said vnto vs: for as this people was planted; so also haue we ben. We ought also to call to mind that which S. Paul saith, that we were but wild Oliues, and they were the true and naturall Oliue. We then which were strangers are grafted into the true Oliue, and are purged and adorned with a continuall care of the Lord. But what fruites bring we forth? truly not onely vnprofitable, but also bitter. And therefore we are guiltie of greater ingratitude, in regard that we are enriched and abound in benefits, much more excellent. And iustly is this complaint commenced against vs, seeing that violence and wrongs doe reigne euery where, but because the general doctrine did not sufficiently prick their hearts; he describes two kinds particularly: to the end hee might shew them as with the finger how far off this people were from the fruite that a good vine should bring forth.

Rom. 11. 24.

Verf. 8. Woe be vnto them that ioine house to house, and lay field to field, till there be no place, that ye may be placed by your selues in the midst of the earth.

NOW he reprooues their insatiable avarice and couetousnes; from whence frauds, iniuries, and violences do commonly arise. For it is not a thing vnlawfull in it selfe to ioine one field to another, nor one house to another; but he aims at the heart; which by no means whatsoever can bee satisfied, when when it is once ſet on fire with deſire of having. Hee deſcribes the affection of thoſe then which thinke they have never enough:

neither are content, how rich ſoever they be.
We may ſee that the covetous are poſſeſſed with ſuch a greedy luſting, that they deſire to have all to themſelves alone; & thinke that which others have, is their want, or is taken from them. And therefore Chryſoſtome hath an elegant ſpeech to this purpoſe: That the covetous would gladly take away the ſunne from the poore; if it were in their power.
For they grutch their brethren, the very elements which yet are common, and would gladly ſwalow them vp: not to enjoy them;
but becauſe their luſt deprives them of va-derſtanding in this behalfe. In the mean while they conſider not that themſelves are not able to doe any thing without the helpe of others, & that aman being alone by him-ſelfe is vnprofitable; they onely earke and care how to gather much together; and therefore they deuoure all by their covetouſneſſe.

He chargerh the covetous and proud with ſuch a furie, that they would have all others cut off from the face of the earth, to the end themſelves alone might haue it in poſſeſſion:
and therefore there is neither end nor meaſure in their luſt. What folly and madnes is it to driue thoſe from of the earth, whom God hath placed therein with vs, and to whom he giues a dwelling place common with vs? Queſtionleſſe a worſe thing could not befall them then to haue their wiſh. Neither could they alone till the ground, reape;
and performe other neceſſarie duties of this life; nor yet could they adminiſter things neceſſarie to themſelves. Alſo God hath lo-vited men together; that one hath neede of the helpe and induſtrie of another: and there is no man, vnleſſe he be out of his wits, who will reiect his brethren; as though they were hurtfull or vnprofitable. The proud alſo cannot inioy their glorie, if they ſhould be left alone. How blind are they then who would chaſe and driue men away to reigne by themſelves.

Now as touching the length and great-nes of houſes: the like is to be ſaid of them;
as was heretofore ſaid of ſcilds: becauſe the ambition of thoſe is alſo reprooued, who de-ſire to dwell in goodly palaces and ſpacious houſes. It is not vnlawfull for him who hath a great family to haue alſo a large houſe: but when men (puffed vp with pride) will adde to their houſes without cauſe, onely to be at more libertie, and that one alone takes vp the dwelling places which would ſuffice a great many; then it is meere ambition and vaine glorie, which ought worthily to be reprooued. For it is all one, as if having contented others; they onely ſhould be lodged: and that their poore brethren were worth of no more but the covering of the firmament; or that they ought to goe ſeeke out ſonie other habitation.

Verſ. 9. *This is in mine eares ſaith
the Lord of houſes: * ſurely many houſes*

ſhall be deſolate, euen great and faire without inhabitant.

Something muſt be heere ſupplied; for his meaning is that the Lord is ſet downe as the Iudge, hauing the knowledge of all theſe things. When the covetous rappe and ſerape their riches together, they are blinded by their luſt, and thinke not that they muſt one day be called to an account. True it is that men are neuer ſo befoted, but they attribute ſonie kinde of iudgement to God; but they flatter themſelves in ſuch wiſe, as that they thinke ſurely God regardeth not. So they acknowledge a iudgement of God in generall, but when it comes to the particular, there they lay the raines in the neck, and ſuppoſe they ſhould not be kept ſo ſhort.
Alſo in this particule, if there be nois, wee ſee a forme and maner of oath often vſed in the ſcripture. For to the end he might the more aſtoniſh them, hee ſpeakes doubtfully as it were by ſentence broken off in the mid way.
He might haue expreſſed this threatning by a full ſentence; but being imperfekt, it holds the hearer more in ſuſpence, and ſo it brings the greater feare with it. Moreover, by this maner of oath (halfe pronounced as we ſay)
the Lord would teach vs to accuſtome our ſelves to modeſtie, to the end we take not libertie in vſing execrations.

What is it then that he threatneth? That many houſes ſhall be deſolate. This is a juſt puniſhment, whereby the Lord corrects the couetouſnes and ambition of men, which would not be brought to conſider their end, that they might haue contented themſelves with a little. As he, who derided the inſatiable couetouſnes of Alexander, who becauſe he vn-derſtood by the philoſophie of Anachariſis that there were many worlds, ſighed in him-ſelfe, becauſe with ſo much labour he had not yet conquered the government of one.
A world (ſaith he) will not ſuffice Alexander, ſufficit orbis etc. he is as diſcontented as if he were pinnd vp in a very narrow roome; or as if hee were bounded within ſonie certaine Iland; and yet when his time comes to be buried, he muſt content himſelfe with a coffin. For it is death onely which teacheth and conſtreineth vs to confeſſe how vaine a thing the bodie of man is.

We ſee euery day examples thereof, and yet who is inſtructed by it? For y Lord ſheweth vs in a glaſſe how ridiculous the vanitie of men is, who lay out an infinite maſſe of money to build pallaces, which yet will one day bee neſts and dens for nightcrows, owles, miſe;
and ſuch like beaſts. Theſe things are dayly before our eyes, and yet wee take none of them to heart, to grow the wiſer by them;
There fall out ſo many and ſodaine changes, ſo many houſes deſolate, ſo many cities wa-ſted and laid on heapes, laſtly, ſo many other and ſo euident ſignes of God his iudgements, and yet notwithstanding men can not bee withdrawne nor weaned from this inſatiable greedineſſe of coueting. The Lord threat-neth by the Prophet Amos, You haue build you houſes of hewen ſtone, but you ſhall not dwell in them. Also, he shall smite the great house with breaches, and the little house with clefts, Amos 5. 11. and 6. 11. This falls out day by day, and yet the inordinate affections of men can not be awaged.

Verf. 10. For ten acres of vines shall yeeld one bath, and the seed of an omer shall yeeld an epha.

HE teacheth, that the like shall befall to the fields and vines, namely, that the covetous shall not enjoy their revenues which they desire, because their lust is insatiable; yea so as by their ravening they shall destroy the fruits of the earth, even as certaine beasts doe cause the buds of the vine, and eares of corne to burne and moulder away by their breath. The fields therefore shall be so barren, that they shall hardly yeeld againe the tenth part of their seed. The vines also shall yeeld very little wine. A bath, is a certaine measure of moist things, as Iosephus witnesseth; now it containes 72. english halfe pints, which measure is very little for ten acres, and principallie in a fat soyle. An omer, is a certaine measure of drie things, and also containes (as the same Author saith) 31. bushels. Epha, is the tenth part thereof, whereby it appears that it containes a little more then three bushels. And yet notwithstanding in good ground one doth not only gather ten times as much, but thirtie times more then was sown, and in ordinarie ground much more then it receiued; when it comes otherwise to passe, no doubt it is a certain signe of the curse of God, who auengeth himselfe of the insatiable covetousnes of men, and they notwithstanding lay the fault in the badnes of the soyle, as if that were the cause; but all in vaine, because we shall not want ouerplus, if the Lord do not curse the earth for the covetousnes of them that dwell in it. When they gather together, and heape vp so carefully, what doe they else but swallow vp the benefits of God by their greedinesse? And though this vice be not seene in all, because they are not able; yet the affection thereof is not wanting; for the world was neuer more set on fire with this coucting. Is it any wonder then if it haue experience of this punishment of God?

Verf. 11. Woe vnto them that rise vp early to follow drunckenes, and to them that continue until the night, till the wine do inflame them.

IT was not the Prophets meaning to reckon vp all the sinnes here which then raigned, but he only toucheth some particulars vnto the which they were most addicted: and hauing handled the generall doctrine, it was necessarie to come to application; yea and to touch those things which were chiefest, because there would haue been no end if he should haue prosecuted them all, one after another. After that he hath reprobud the vice of covetousnes, he speakes against gurmamandizing, which was then a very common sinne among them; for he makes choise not only of such perticular vices which were in one or two personages, but of such as reigned commonly euery where. And the truth is, that these vices are so contagious that they infect the whole body. To rise betimes, signifies as much as to do some thing carefully, as it is sayd in Salomon, Woe to the people whose Princes eate in the morning, that is to say, who place their chiefe care in feeding their belly, and in inioying their voluptuousnes; Eccle. 10. 16. now this is nothing else but to ouerturne the whole order of nature. For as David saith, Man ought to rise in the morning to goe to his worke, and to wait vpon his busines till the euening, Psal. 104. 23. But if he rise to do nothing but to take his pleasures, and to giue himselfe to follow drunckennes, it is monstrous. He addes, that they continue till the euening. As if he should say, from morning to night, they continued in their drinkings, and were neuer weary in gouzelling in of wine. Now abundance and excesse are ioyned together, because where all things abound, there men abuse them to excesse and intemperancie.

Men must not rise in the morning to be idle, but to labor.

Verf. 12. And the harp and the violl, timbrill and pipe, and wine are in their feasts: but they regard not the Worke of the Lord, neither consider the Worke of his hands.

HE addes Instruments with voluptuousnes, by which, men giuen to gurmaandise, prouoked their appetit. It may be these Instruments were differing from ours, yet notwithstanding they appertained to Muffick, which Isaiah condemnes not; for it is an arte in no wise to be contemned; but he painteth forth a people ouerflowing in all sorts of superfluitie, and who gaue themselues libertie to take all their delights: which sufficientlie appears by that which followes, But they regard not. As if he should say, they so wallowed themselues in their delights, and were so glued to their pleasures, that it seemed they were begotten and brought vp in them; neuer thinking wherefore God gaue them things conuenient. For men were not sent into the world to eate and drink, & to plunge themselues in dissolutions; but to obey God, and to serue him in reuerence, to acknowledge his benefits, and to studie how to please him in all things; but when they ouerflow in excesse, daunting and singing, without any other drift then to passe their life in iolitic, they are worse then brute beasts; for they consider not to what end God created them, neither how he gouernes the world by his providence, vnto which marke all that we do in our life ought to tend.

Musick in it selfe not to be condemned.

We are not put into this world to plunge our selues in delights, but rather that we should studie how to please God.

I thinke it enough that I haue laid forth that sence which I take to be the most plaine: because I cannot receiue other mens acute interpretations: Among others, theirs who by the worke of the Lord, vnderstand the law. Neither am I purposed to recite euery mans opinion, opinion. It ſufficieth to hold that the Prophet laies this reproch vpon ſuch as gaue themſelues to ſurſetting, ſo as they willingly became brutiſh; when they withdrew their minds from God, who was the author of liſe.

Verſ. 13. Therefore my people is gone into captiuitie, becauſe they had no knowledge, and the glorie thereof are men ſummed, and the multitude is dried vp with thirſt.

IAllow not the expoſition of ſome interpreters; namely, as if the people fell into many vices through ignorance and error, becauſe the teachers had their mouths ſhut vp: which in the end was the cauſe of their ruine. No, he rather ſets himſelfe againſt a groſſe and voluntarie ignorance: as if hee ſhould ſay, They drew their deſtruction vpon themſelues by their owne follie. The ſence is then, that the people ſhall periſh becauſe they had deſpised inſtruction; whereas they might haue been at their eaſe, if they would haue beleued good counſell. And therefore the Prophet expreſely ſaith, My people: becauſe they were ſeperate from other nations by a ſingular prouidedge; to the end they being kept and guided vnder God, might hold a right manner of good liſe. As it is ſaid in Deut. 4.7. What nation is ſo great that hath ordinances and lawes ſo righteous, or to whom the gods come ſo neere vnto them, as the Lord thy God is neere (at this day) vnto thee? This ſhall be your wiſedome and vnderſtanding in the ſight of all the people to heare your God. Such profaneneſſe therefore greatlie agrauates the crime; that this people ſhould bee ſtarke blind in the miſt of ſo great light. And therefore this accuſation, namely, That the people which God had taken into his charge ſhould bee without knowledge, was very grieuous. For the law was euen way ſufficient for the direction of their whole liſe: ſeeing it is a ſhining light amidſt the common darkenes of this world. And therefore it was a mouſtrous thing that the people would not giue themſelues to walke in the way which was ſet before them, but rather wilfully caſt themſelues headlong into deſtruction. The Prophet now to their reproch telles them that they ought to impute all the calamities which they indured, to their owne default, becauſe they refuſed to bend their eare to God, who would ſo faithfully haue taught them.

Whereas ſome expoſund the word Captiuitie by a metaphor, it ſeemes too ſtriſt: becauſe the Prophet here deſcribes the puniſhment, wherewith God did ſmite this people in part, and wherewith hee determined to ſmite them afterward: to the end hee might plainly ſhew that the people was miſerable by reaſon of their ſin; as if they had in a manner wiſhed the curſe of God to fall vpo them. When the Prophet made this Sermon, there were ſome of the tribes gone into captiuitie already. Alſo the deſtructions of both king-domes did approach. And therefore the Prophet ſpeakes as if they had been all now preſently in Babilon. Laſtly, he addes another ſcourge, to wit, that not onely the common people, but alſo the moſt excellent among them ſhould be dried vp with famine and want: wherein the vengeance of God would be the more apparant. For it was an horrible ſpectacle to ſee the rich and chiefe men in whom conſiſted the credit of the whole nation to wander vp and downe; dying for hunger. And yet God paſſed not meaſure in executing ſo rigorous a iudgement vpon them: becauſe wee muſt alwaies haue an eie to the roote of their ignorance, to wit, that the Iewes were become wholly deſperate, ſo as they obſtinately reiected the light of the heavenly doctrine. Yea, they ſtopped their eares againſt the Lord, when he was readie to perſorme the office of a good maſter in teaching them. From hence wee gather a very profitable doctrine: namely, that the fountain from whence all plagues doe flow, is, becauſe we cannot endure to bee taught by the word of God. And that is the principall thing which the Prophet would haue vs to marke.

But ſome may aſke whether ignorance be the cauſe of all ſin: For wee ſee that many offer'd not ſo much of ignorance, as of rebellion: and although they ſee what is right, yet notwithstanding they will not follow it. Whence it followes that they ſinne wittingly; and not onely of ouerſight. I anſwere that ignorance is ſometime neere, and ſometime further off; that is, This man wants the meanes; and the other hath the meanes, as they ſay. Ignorance is ſaid to bee neere, when men deciuie themſelues vnder ſome pretence; and do wittingly blindfold themſelues. That which is farre off, is when men reiect the principles whereby they ought to take direction for the rule of their liſe. For they ought to looke directly vnto God and his will. But when they deſpise it, they are rebellious and obſtinate: yet notwithstanding ſuch are ignorant, becauſe they will not learne, but reuolt from the foundation. And yet that ignorance excuſeth them not, which they willingly imbrace, in reiecting ſuch a teacher. Wherefore this ſentence remains ſure, that the people are diuers waies afflicted; becauſe they knew not God, neither would ſuffer themſelues to bee taught by him.

Verſ. 14. Therefore hell hath enlarged it ſelfe, and hath opened his mouth* Or, his without meaſure, and their glorie, and ſoule. that multitude, and their pompe, and hee that reioyceth among them, ſhall deſcend into it.*

BY this verſe the Prophet ment to preſſe thoſe with feare which were growne too ſecure, and were nothing moued with any threatening whatſoeuer. For although the captiuitie was an horrible thing, and the famine also; yet was the stubbornnes and blockhithnes of this people so great, that they laid not these fearefull signes of God his anger nigh their hearts in good earnest, as they ought to haue done. And therefore Isaiah threatens some thing yet more fearefull; to wit, that hell had opened his throate to deuour them all. I said erewhile, that this which is here said of the time present, ought partly to be referred to the time to come. The Prophet also speaks not rashly, as of things cleere and manifest. And he would present the thing as it were before the sight of the people, to the end they might behold that with their eies, which they could not see brought to belecue. Moreouer, as in comparing hell for the graue to an insatiable beast; so by the soule, he means the belly, whereinto the meate descends. The summe is, that the graue is as a large and deepe gulfe, which by the com mandement of God, opens her throate to deuour men adiuaged to death. You see then that this prosopopei, or faining of persons, hath much greater vehemencie in it, then if he had said, that all were iudged to die.

The multitude.] He ioyneth the base and noble together, to the end none should flatter himselfe with hope of escape: as if he should say; death shall consume you, with all that you haue, namely, pleasures, riches and pompe, together with all things else, wherein you place your confidence. This then is a confirmation of y former sentence. And this particle Therefore. Or, for this cause, is alwaies to be obserued. For y people imputed the cause of their calamities to fortune; or rather howsoever it were, they were hardened vnder the corrections of the Lord. Isaiah giues them to vnderstand therefore that these things fel not out by hap hazzard. Moreouer, men are wont to quarrell with God, yea, they are so proud and shamelesse, that they feare not to make head against him. Therefore to the end this pride might be beaten downe, hee shewes that the chastisements wherewith they are punished, are most iust: and that they were wholly to blame themselves, for being euery way so miserable.

Vers. 15. And man shall be brought downe, and man shall be humbled, even the eies of the proud shall be humbled.

THIS is as it were in the shutting vp of his speech; in which he shewes to what end and issue these scourges would come vnto: to wit, that all should be humbled; and that the Lord only should be exalted. We haue scene the like sentence heretofore, and haue there declared the Prophets meaning: to wit, the end why we are chastised of God. For aduertities are so odious vnto vs, that for the most part we can conceiue no good thing to proceed from them. When we heare of punishments, wee haue them in horror and detestation, because we consider not that the Lord is iust. But the Prophets call vs to another consideration, to wit, that whilst men sport themselves in their sinnes, they smother as it were the iustice of God, which shineth not clearely, vnlesse when hee takes vengeance vpon our iniquities. Behold indeede an excellent fruite, and such a one as is to be preferred before the saluation of all men. For we ought to let all things giue place to the glorie of God, which shineth no lesse in his iustice then in his mercie.

There is no cause then, why we should so much feare the rods of God wherewithall we are corrected: but ought rather in all humilitie to embrace whatsoever the Prophets pronounce against vs. Although in this kind of speech the Prophet hath also touched the pride of the hypocrits to the quicke; who euer become the more wicked when they escape still vnpunished: as if he should say, do yee thinke it is possible that after God hath forborne you so long, yet at the last you should tread him vnder your feete? no, assure your selues he will arise, and will be exalted in your destruction. Because the Prophet hath put the word Adam in the first place, and after Aisch; some thinke he ment to comprehend as well noble as base; as if he should say, It shall not be the common people only which shall perish, but also all those who are noted for their honour, riches and dignitie. And I willingly receiue this sence, because Aisch is deriued from force; and Adam from earth. If any will expound it more simplie, I leaue him to his owne iudgement. Howsoever it be, the Prophet hath here comprehended all mortall men; as well great as small.

Vers. 16. And the Lord of hosts shall be exalted in iudgement, and the holy God shall be sanctified in iustice.

HE shewes the manner of the excellencie; or the formall cause, as they say, of this exaltation, whereof he spake before: and it is as much as if he had said, That the Lord of hosts (whom the wicked doe proudly treade vnder foote) shall be exalted, when he shall shew himselfe the iudge of the world. And thus hee scornes the sottish confidence, wherewith the wicked were swollen. For if iudgement and iustice must haue the vpper hand; there ruine must needs follow: seeing their pride was nothing else but an ouerturning of the whole course of nature. Now we must diligently note, that it is no more possible for the wicked to remaine alwaies in a happie estate, then that God should suffer his glorie to be abolished. Although iudgement and iustice doe differ in nothing one from the other, yet the repetition is not superfluous. The vehemencie also of the speecli is further enlarged, when hee addes in the second member, and the holy God shall be sanctified, to the end the wicked should not through a false imagination promise a lasting felicitie by force, or without cause; which they cannot doe, but that the holines of God shall thereby be abolished. But seeing God is holy of his owne nature, it must needs be that he must be sanctified. Whence it follows that

ruine is prepared for the wicked, that ſo their obſtinacie and rebellion may be brought vnder, becauſe God can not denie himſelfe.

Verſ. 17. Then ſhall the lambs feede, after their maner, and the ſtrangers ſhall eate the deſolate places of the ſat.

Some translate, The lambs ſhall feede according to their maner; others, according to their portion; but hee meanes, according to their cuſtome. This verſe is diuerſly expounded; but we are to note in the firſt place, that it is the Prophets meaning to giue conſolation to the faithfull which were terrified by the hearing of ſuch fearefull iudgements of God: for looke how much the more a man is of a good and tender conſcience, ſo much the more feelles he the preſent hand of God, and the more neerely is he touched to the quick with his iudgements: laſtly, the feare and reuerence of God cauſeth vs to be rouch- ed in good earnest with whatſoever it be that is ſet before vs in his name; wherefore they could not haue bene withheld from diſ- paire in hearing ſo terrible threatnings, vn- leſſe this conſolation had bin added there- unto as a ſweet ſauce to giue them occaſion to reſiſh and take a ſweet taſte in the mercie of God. And this is a thing much vſed in the Prophets, to wit, ſtill to haue an eye alwayes to the faithfull, to furniſh them with com- fort. Although then ſaith Iſaiah it ſeemes God is minded to deſtroy all this people, yet not- withſtanding he will ſhew himſelfe a faith- full ſhepherd toward his lambs, and will feed them as he was wont to doe; marke that for one point.

Alſo the meaning of the Prophet was to beate back the pride of the great ones, who in oppreſſing the faithfull and ſimple by an vniuſt tyranny, boated notwithstanding that they were the Church of God ſtill; he tels them therefore that this their boaiſting is full of lying and vanitie, thus to adorne them- ſelues with the title of the flock or ſheepfold of God, becauſe they are goates, and not lambs; and therefore when they ſhall be cut off, God will ſtill haue meanes in his hand to feede his flock; but yet by the way, that the lambs ſhall neuer thriue, nor be in good plight, till they be ſeperated and deliuered from the goats.

The deſolate places.] The expoſitors do yet againe vary vpon this place alſo: but I thinke the true ſence is, that after the children of God haue been driuen away for a time as ban- niſhed men, they ſhall be reſtored to their right, and ſhall then recouer that which was deſert, or which was trampled and ſpoyled by the ſat beaſts; that is to ſay, by the proud and cruel which had ſpoiled them of their goods. By the deſerts, he meanes the poſſeſſions which they had left, and which others had occupied, in as much as he hath regard to the cuſtome which was then well knowne and commonly vſed amongſt them, to wit, that if any poſſeſ- ſed fields or houſes, he had his hand (as it were) in ſuch wife ſtretched forth vpon them, that no man durſt touch ſo much as a clod of earth, but and if he left them, an other occu- pied them. The people then had ſo left their inheritances, out of which they had bin dri- uen, that they had no hope euer to recouer the ſame againe; ſo as in regard of them, they might well be called deſerts, yea, deſerts of the ſat, becauſe the ſtrong and men of power poſ- ſeſſed them. Now although it may ſimply be taken for ſat deſerts, yet notwithstanding it is more probable that the tyrants are here called the ſat.

Verſ. 18. Woe vnto them that drawe iniquitie With cords of vanitie, and ſinne as With cartropes.

Having inſerted a brieſe conſolation to aſuage the ſharpnets of the puniſhments in regard of the faithfull, he returns to the threatnings, and goes on to ſtrike them thro- row with theſe thundring ſpeeches, which at the leaſt might terrifie them in ſome ſort. By cords, hee meanes nothing elſe but the al- lurements of ſinne, by which men ſuffer them- ſelues to be deceiued, and thereby to become hardened in their hearts in wickednes, be- cauſe lightly they either containe the iudg- ments of God, or frame vaine excuſes; or elſe pretend they can do no otherwiſe; what vaile then ſocuer it be which they put before the, that the Prophet calleth cords. For as often as men are led away to ſinning by the concu- piſcence of their fleſh, in the beginning ther- of they conſult in themſelues, and feele ſome bridle which reſtrains them, and which dgbtleſſe would hinder them from commit- ting of euill, if that they were not ouercated by a contrarie tempeſt, which ſhakes off and puts away all remorſe of conſcience. When any man is enticed or ſtirred vp to euill, his conſcience by a ſecret inſtinct aſketh him, What doeſt thou? And ſinne neuer creepeth thus vpon vs, but we feele ſome remorſe. And God hath thus in deed preuented men, to the end all ſhould not giue ouer themſelues with an vnbridled licentiousnes to commit euill. Whence cometh it then that men are ſo obſtinate in their naughtineſſe? To ſay the truth, they ſuffer themſelues to be begu- led by allurements, and do ſo drench their minds with delighting themſelues therein, that they deſpiſe the iudgements of God, and all to purſue their owne ſinnes with gree- dines. They ſlatter themſelues, in beleeuing that which is ſinne, to be no ſinne; or elſe they mince them, making the leſſe then they be; or, excuſe themſelues in them vnder one pretence or other. Theſe are then the cords and wicked bands by which they draw iniquitie to them. Whence it appears, that God did not threaten them in vaine; for they not only ſinned wittingly, but obſtinatly and rebellouſly. To conclude, they ſo pulled and halled ſinne vnto them, that they were left without excuſe.

one of Israel draw neere, and come, that we may know it.

HE notes out one perticular, by which he shewes how they drew sinne vnto them as with cartropes. There is nothing so dangerous as to reiect all thought of God his iudgement, and not only that, but also to contemne whatsoeuer he saith as a fable. Isaiab meant therefore to expresse an extreme contempt, when as men hauing been forewardnes of God his iudgements, shall in scorne say, that they would gladly see them, and deride at them, as at some bug-bear, which these words so full of contempt and presumption do euidently shew; Let him come: let him come.

Worke heere (by a kind of excellencie) is taken for iudgement. For it seemes in deepe that the Lord regards not when he deferses to take vengeance vpon the iniquities of the vngodly: but when he ariseth to giue iudgement, and to execute punishment, then his worke appeares, and is manifest in deed (as they say) becaufe we perceiue by the effects that the world is gouerned by his power and authoritie. Worke then in this place is specially taken for iudgement, becaufe thereby it something appeares vnto vs that God is not idle, but doth his office. Now the wicked speake of him in derision and scorne, and we haue experience of this frowardnes and obstinacie at this day more then is meete, and wee must wage the like warre against them which the Prophets did. The wicked thinke that God takes his ease in heauen, and cares not for mens matters, as certaine epicures, who placed God his chiefest happines in this, that he had nothing to doe. And although they imagin that there is some God, yet they acknowledge him not in his iudgement, but in the meane while they make good cheere, and neuer pine away themselues with such thoughts. Let the Prophets and Ministers crie, and that with open mouth, let them threaten and terrifie vs whilst they list, we will securely lye still, waiting till that which they threaten come to passe, and in the whilst we will make merie. Thus the Prophet recounts the speeches of the wicked, whereby they shewed in what contempt and disdain they had his word, not only saying let it be worke come: but let it come quickly, and let it draw neere: for in regard it came not suddenly, they concluded, that whatsoeuer he executes not as soone as he hath spoken the word, is but smoke.

2. Pet. 3. 4.

In the second Epistle of S. Peter he brings in the wicked speaking thus and saying, that since the world was created all things haue continued alike; there is still one continuall course of nature, and therefore it is but a mockerie to looke for a day of iudgement after so many ages. In the meane while they prouoke God and that of set purpose, to the end he should forthwith shew his power. They adde Counsell, to his worke: as if they should say, how long wil God deliberate vpon it, eare he tell what he will do: let him rather shew vs by effect what he hath decreed. Their fault also is greatly amplified in that they dare to mock so wickedly at the doctrine which was so familiarly taught them: being herein more wicked then the very prophane heathen; becaufe they despised that word whereby God had adopted them as a peculiar people vnto himselfe.

That we may know it.] See heere manifest signes of infidelitie. For the wicked wil not acknowledge God, vnlesse they presently feele him: neither wil they beleue his words. But if the holy Ghost by this marke brandeth them for abominable wicked ones, it behoeth vs by a contrary marke to let our faith and godlines appeare: to wit, that we rest in the bare and naked word of the Lord, although the euent doe not by and by shew it selfe, seeing it is the propertie of faith to hold vs fast glued to the mouth of God. The confirmation is added indeed by the works, but we must not begin at them. For thus stands the difference betweene the elect, and the reprobate: the elect rest simplie vpon the word of God, and yet in the meane while despise it not: but the wicked despise his word though he should speake a thousand times; and are infortunate vpon him still to see his works; and when iudgement is threatened, they aske, where is it? and thus they can not indure that one should mention it vnto them, vnlesse it doe by and by appeare by effects. Where there is so little moderation, it follows that there is no faith, but rather a rebellious obstinacie, which turnes a man out of the way, and estrangeth him more and more from God.

Verf. 20. Woe vnto them that speake good of euill, and euill of good; which put darkenes for light, and light for darkenes; that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for soure.

ALTHOUGH many restraints this sentence to Iudges, yet if we obserue the words a little more narrowly, it shall be easie to gather from the whole context, that this is a generall sentence. For hauing before cried out against those who could not endure any admonitions, he still goes on with the same reprehension. Now it appeares that such kind of people haue alwayes some pretence or other wherewithall to deceiue themselves. And therefore they neuer cease to make replies as oft as their vices are set before them: but he expressly reproues the shamelesse impudencie of those who of set purpose endeouored to ouerthrow all difference betweene good and euill. And the letter Lamed placed before these two words euill, and good, shewes the sence to be thus; namely, thoe that make euill of good, and of good euill: that is to say, who by craftinesse full of vanitie couer, excuse, and disguise wicked matters, minding by their subtilties to change the nature of euery thing: but on the contrary by lyes and flanders they ouerthrow that which is good. For whosoever hath the feare of God, he is withheld by conscience and shamefastnes from excusing his sinnes, or enterprising to con-

demne that which is juſt and right. But they who are voyd of this feare, are alſo impudent to commend vices, and make no bones of it at all to condemne vertues, the which in whomſoeuer it be, is an euident ſigne of deſperate wickednes.

We may alſo applie this ſentence to diuers particulars. For if priuate perſons are here accuſed when they ſay, euill is good, and good euill: much more is it true of thoſe, who are aduanced into high place, and haue publike office; whoſe dutie is to vphold and maintaine all that is lawfull and right. But hee rebukes all ſuch in generall who flatter themſelues in euill doing; and for hatred which they beare to vertue, condemne that which is done vprightly; yea, who to couer their filthines, vſe cauſling ſhifts; and become altogether obdurate in themſelues. The Prophet ſaith, that ſuch folke do all one, as if they ſhould turne light into darknes, and ſweete into ſower: For thus they ſhew themſelues to be poſſeſſed with a diabollicall rage; when they ſo mingle and confound all principles of nature.

Verſ. 21. Woe vnto them that are Wiſe in their owne eyes, and prudent in their owne ſight.

HE goes on ſtill in rebuking ſuch as could not bee reclaimed by any perſwaſion whatſoeuer, who ſhut the gate againſt all good counſell and holy admonitions which are made vnto them. Laſtly, he pronounceth a woe againſt all deſperate contemners, who oppoſe and ſet the luſts of their fleſh, or the peruerſe confidence of their owne wiſedome, againſt God his doctrine, and admonitions. And not onely reprooues thoſe which are ſo puſſed vp with a falſe opinion of their wit, that they are aſhamed to learne of others: but he alſo condemnes all ſuch in generall, who being wiſe in their owne conceit, reſuſe to heare God ſpeaking, and to obey his holie counſels. This vice hath been too common in all times, and is to be ſcene at this day in many: who although they make conſcience to reiect all the doctrine of godlines openly, yet are ſo farre off from any true teachablenes and obedience, that they proudly reiect whatſoeuer likes them not. They grant there ought to be ſome bridle to hold them in: but on the otherſide, arrogancie ſoblinds them that they quickly murmure againſt God, when he ſhewes them but the way wherein they ſhould walke. And not content with that; but with furious indignation gnaw their teeth when any reprooueth that which they doe. For where ſhall we finde that man who renouncing all his owne reaſon, will be readie to learne, from God his mouth onely? Now there is not a more dangerous peſtilence then this lying ſhew of wiſedome, ſeeing teachablenes is the beginning of godlines; when renouncing our owne wiſedome, we goe thither where God calles vs. But this falſe perſwaſion, is not condemned onely, for that it makes men diſobedient to God, and ſo cauſeth their ruine: but alſo becauſe it is intolerable in it ſelfe. For we muſt become 1. Cor. 3. 18. fooles, if we will be the diſciples of God. It is alſo certaine, that whereſoeuer this modeſtie and humilitie beares not ſway, by meanes whereof men do voluntarily yeeld their obedience; there reignes a furious rebellion. In their owne eyes, is as much as when we ſay in our French tongue, In their owne opinion, or conceit.

Verſ. 22. Woe be to them which are mightie to drinke Wine, and to them that are ſtrong to powre in ſtrong drinke.

Now the Prophet reprooues another vice: to wit, drunkennes and intemperancie of life, whereof he had ſpoken before. And thus it is very likely this chapter was gathered out of diuers ſermons; and that the heads of them are ſummarily touched onely. For in regard the Prophet ſaw no repentence, he was conſtrained to repeate & beat into their minds one and the ſame thing often. He returns then to the ſame reprehentions which he had touched before: and preacheth againe againſt drunkenneſſe, exceſſe, couetouſneſſe and other corruptions. Whence we may gather, that when admonitions profit nothing, we ought to vſe the greater vehemencie againſt the ſubberne and vnteachable. Neither truelie are we to feare, leſt this importunitie ſhould be wearifome; but often to repeate the reprehentions till they bow vnder them; or elſe till they ſhew an incurable malice.

He taunteth them pleaſantly, telling them that they are luſtie and ſtrong to drinke; becauſe they ſpend and conſume their ſtrength in fighting with the pot and glaſſe. But what a brutiſhnes is this, for a man being of a good conſtitution of body, to make ſhew of his ſtrength, in drinking exceſſiuely. Alſo becauſe the figure Synecdoche is vſed of the Prophets in all the Scripture; he takes the ſpeciall for the generall, as if he ſhould ſay, Woe to drunkenneſſe, woe to intemperance, &c. But hee hath of purpoſe ſet forth that which was the moſt ſhamefull, that ſo hee might make this vice generally abhorred and deteſted. For there is nothing more vile and baſe (as we haue ſaid) then for a man to proue his force, in deuouring and ſwallowing in meates and drinks, and thus to wreſtle againſt himſelfe by cramming in as much meat as his belly will hold. Such men hold no rules of ſobrietie, neither do they know why God nourriſheth them. We eate and drinke to vphold the body, and not to ouerthrow it. We liue to ſerue God, and to beſtow our ſtrength in the helping of our neighbours turne: but when men endeavour not to preferue their ſtrength by theſe meanes, but rather ourturne it by prouing how much they can beare, it is certaine they are become worſe then brute beaſts.

Exod. 13 8.
Deut. 16. 19.

Obiect.

Ans.

HE reproves a corruption which was then rise in iudgement seates, and shewes the cause why there was no iustice kept in them, to wit, for that gifts had place and were in account. For auarice blinds the eyes of the wife, and perueris all order of iustice and right, yea euen in those who otherwise beare some good affection thereunto. But some may obiekt, that iudgements are perueried by many other meanes then by presents only, seeing that hatred, friendship, loue, and other sinister affections doe very often blind the vnderstanding. This is very true, but the Prophet aimed at that which falls out for the most part, & yet notwithstanding meant not to spare the vices which he expressed not. By whose example good Teachers ought to be wise and well aduised in considering and correcting those vices which carrie the chiefe swinge among the people, and about all to insist vpon those which they see to be most in vse by wicked custome.

Now this corruption whereof mention is made in this place, is the most frequent of all others in iudgement seates, and therefore the Iudges which would iudge iustly, ought to take diligent heed they auoid it. Neither must we giue care to those Iudges who denie that presents are giuen them to that end: or who say, that although they receive them, yet notwithstanding they will giue vpright iudgement: for where gifts haue place, there needs must all affection of equitie and iustice be corrupted, neither can it be possible that thine affection should not be most inclined to him of whom thou hast received thy reward. To conclude, let vs giue care vnto the Lord, who saith, that rewards blind the eyes of the iust, lest in doing otherwise we will seeme
to be wiser then God himselfe.

Where gifts
haue place,
there all loue
of iustice must needs
be corrupted.

Deut. 16. 19.

Verf. 24. Therefore as the flame of fire deuoureth the stubble, and as the chaffe is consumed of the flame, so their roote shall be as rottennes, and their bud shall rise up like dust, because they haue cast off the law of the Lord of hostes, and contemned the word of the holy one of Israel.

THAT it might not seeme he hath cried out so oft without cause, he shewes againe
how great and horrible punishment is nere to this people, and denouneeth an extreme ruine against the obstinate, because they would not be brought into the way, but obstinately resisted against the heavenly doctrine: now he vseth such figures as were fit to expresse his meaning, and also such as touched them nearer to the quick, then if he had spoken plainly without them. He begins with a similitude, and forthwith ends with a metaphor, in attributing a roote and bud to the people, as to a tree: for by these two words he comprehends whatsoever force was in the people; were it open, or hid: and saith, that all of it should perish. For euen as when the roote which giues strength vnto the tree and susteineth it begins once to rot, then the tree decayeth: so he threatens destruction to this people, and tels them that all their strength is wasted and consumed.

But he shewes not now, as heretofore, the particular kinds of wickedneses by which they had prouoked the wrath of God. He only adds the generall cause, to wit, the contempt of the law of God, because, as we all know, that is the fountaine of all euils. He also amplifies the fault greatly, that in as much as the will of God was manifested vnto them in the law, they could not say it was by ignorance or error, but of set iustice, that (in shaking off the yoke of God) they gaue themselves the raines to all licentious libertie, which was all one, as if in reiecting a most louing father, they should giue ouer themselues to be vassals and slaues to the diuell. Adde withall, that he accuseth them of a generall reuolt, as if he should say, they were not rebellious against God in one kind only, but they wholly forooke the Lord as disloyall apostataes. Moreouer, that they did not only despise the word of God, but he complains of a thing more horrible, to wit, that the word was become abominable vnto them, or, that they reiected it with a wicked de-spitefulnesse. If so be then that the contempt of the law of God be the wellspring, head, and perfection of all euils, there is nothing we are more to feare, then that Satan should so preuaile as to turne vs aside from the reuerence of it. And if we be subiect to some faults, yet let vs suffer at the least that the medicine may be applied vnto them; vnlesse
in reiecting thereof proudly and maliciously we meane to draw eternall perdition vpon our owne heads.

Verf. 25. Therefore is the Wrath of the Lord kindled against his people, and he hath stretched out his hand vpon them, and hath smitten them that the moun-taines did tremble, and their carcases were torne in the midst of the streets: and for all this his Wrath is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still.

IN this verse the Prophet repeats the former iudgements whereof the Iewes had experience already, and shewes, that they be not yet at an end, but that far worse punishments are prepared for them, vnlesse they returne into the right way. I confesse indeed that the time past is often changed for that which is to come, but the words of this text will best agree so; for he propounds two distinct things concerning y^e obstinat rebellie of this people: first, how God had already chastised their iniquities. Secondly, seeing there was no signe of repentance, that he hath yet other scourges readie to correct their wicked-neses. Thirdly, hee shewes what these scourges are, and tels them that the Assyrians shall

ſhall come as ſoone as the Lord ſhall but hold vp his finger, yea that they ſhall come at his only huſſing. This is the Prophets meaning. Whence we may gather, that as ſoone as a people hath eſcaped one calamitie, they forget their chaſtiſements, and neuer thinke more of the iudgements of God: and although experience ſhould alſo be the miſtis of fooles, yet they harden their hearts vnder the blowes. Iſaiab ſtrikes at this ſenſeleſnes, as if he ſhould ſay, Haue you ſo ſoone forgotten the calamities vnder which you groined not long ſince? Whence came it that the dead bodies were caſt here and there, but becauſe the Lord had ſtretched forth his hand vpon you? And if God dealt with you as a Iudge, what is the cauſe that the wounds which do yet bleed, do not worke a reuerent feare in you to preſerue you from heaping ſinne vpon ſinne thus freſhly againe on all ſides? And to this end doth he repeat the particule Therefore, wherein he yekis a reaſon of his ſpeech, as if he ſhould ſay, Theſe are not afflictions that come at aduenture, but are manifeſt ſignes of God his diſpleaſure. He alſo ſaith expreſly, that God was angrie with his people: for had not the Iewes fallen from their dignitie, their condition had beene more happie then that of all ſeuerall nations of the world beſides. When God therefore deales ſo ſharply & ſeuerely with his choſen people, no doubt but they had grieuouſly prouoked him by their rebellions. And withall he refutes the falſe brag of the Iewes wherewith they were wont to aduance and boaſt themſelues, as if they forthwith ought to be exempt from all corrections, becauſe they were the peculiar people of God. Alſo when he ſaith that the mountains trembled: by this compariſon he expreſſeth the weight of the puniſhments vnder which they hardened themſelues, to the end he might yet more ſharply reprove their ſenſeleſnes, as being more blockiſh then things without feeling if they felt not the wrath of God, and the horrible vengeance wherewith the kingdome of Iſrael had been chaſtiſed.

And for all theſe things.] Hee threatens more heauie plagues to come, as hath been ſayd. For although the wicked know they are corrected of the Lord, yet they thinke all is paſt, as ſoone as they haue receiued but two or three blowes. And therefore they wrap themſelues vp as it were in a vaine confidence, as though the worſt were paſt, and that the powers of the Almighty were ſpent. This is the cauſe why he cries out, that the wrath of the Lord is not yet appeaſed; and that although they haue ſuffered many calamities, yet notwithstanding hee is furniſhed with varietie of darts, from whence they were to looke for infinite wounds.

The Coniunction Copulative may be reſolued into the Diſiunctiue, as if he would ſay, Be ſure that the hand of God is yet ſtretched out. Now he hath regard to that which he had ſayd before, namely, that the hand of God was liſted vp. He ſaith now, that it is not pulled in, but that he will yet purſue and ſmite them with wounds, yea, yet more featefull and terrible. We ought to meditate vpon theſe ſentences diligentlie, to awaken ſuch men who feare not to lie ſnoring, and that after they haue been humbled and chaſtiſed of God.

Verſ. 26. And I will liſt vp a ſigne vnto the Nations a ſarre, and will hiſſe vnto them from the ends of the earth: Or, a people and behold, they ſhall come haſtely with ſpede.

IN this, and in the verſes following, he ſhewes what puniſhment the Lord would inflict vpon this people, to wit, that they ſhall be ſo ſpoyled by the Aſſyrians, as the Iſraelites their brethren had been a little before them, yea much more grieuouſly: for howſoever the Aſſyrians in times paſt had much waſted them, the kingdome of Iudah neuertheleſſe was not yet brought to ruine. Adde herunto, that the deſtruction of the kingdome of Iſrael was as a looking-glaſſe, wherein they might behold the wrath of God, and the iuſt iudgement which hee had brought vpon them: and yet no queſtion but this prophete ſeemed incredible to them of Iudea, although there were many good likelihoods of it, and alſo becauſe the ſtate was quiet; and they no ſooner had the leaſt ſhew of truce, but they forthwith grew careleſſe: therefore hee ſaith, that this deſtruction ſhould come from ſarre, wherof they did not ſo much as dreame. And thus he ſounds the Alarm as if the enemies had bin already at the gates. For he puts not theſe words from ſarre, and from the ends of the earth, to put them in any hope, but rather of ſet purpoſe he thus ſpeakes, to the end they ſhould not iudge of the wrath of God by things apparent to the eye.

We are wont to eſteeme of dangers according to the outward appearance of things; when the enemies are farre off, or that they be hindred by other impediments to moleſt vs, we thinke we are ſafe. Thus the people ſlept, as they ſay, on both ſides, no otherwiſe then as if they had been out of all danger. But Iſaiab declareth, that all this ſhall not hinder the Lord from ſending the Aſſyrians with banners diſplayed to cut them in pieces. This liſting vp a ſigne, is a figuratiue kind of ſpeech, becauſe when the banner is diſplayed and the Captaine giues the ſigne, then the ſouldiers are wont to arme themſelues and to begin the fight.

He ſhall hiſſe.] Although the change of the number be a thing much vſed in the Scripture, yet it is not without reaſon, I take it, that the Prophet of many nations makes but one people, for he ſhewes that when God ſhould aſſemble many peoples & ioine them to one body, that this ſhall be no conſiſted multitude, but ſhould be as an inire body, hauing one head which ſhould rule and haue the ſoueraigntie ouer them. He rather vſed ſeuerall words of hiſſing then ſome other that ſounded more terrible, as of ſounding the Trumpet, or ſuch like; to ſhew, that God had no neede of any great noyse to assemble the enemies together, and that it is no hard matter for him to be reuenged on them which haue offended when the time appointed is come, for he can finish all things by the least signe that may be.

As in verſe the 26.

And behold he shall come.] He heere yet further confirms that which I haue noted, to wit, that the wrath of the Lord must not be esteemed according to outward objects: for although it seemes that all things do promise peace, yet shall warre come notwithstanding sodainly fro thence whence we looked not for it: yea and although it may seeme we be enuironed with friends round about vs, yet shall God raise vp enemies from the ends of the earth, which shall come easily vpon vs (all lets whatsoeuer to the contrary) as if a plaine and smooth way were prepared for them, Which we ought to beare well in mind, lest we suffer our selues to be blinded by some false trust and confidence.

We are also to obserue, that warres fall not out by chance, nor at mens appointments, but by the commandement of God, euen as if he sounded the Trumpet to assemble the souldiers. Be it by warre then, by famine, or pestilence that we are afflicted, let vs know that all of them do proceede from the hand of God, because all things come at his voyce, and readily obey him. And yet the Chaldeans had not this zeale of obeying God, for they were caried away with their couetous and insatiable lust and desire of dominion, or thought of some such like end, but God serued himselfe of them to execute his iudgements. And herein we clearly see an admirable witnes of the power of God, which is not tied to the will of men, neither depends it vpon their fantasies, but it is free for him to call whom he will to doe him seruice, yea such as are vtterly ignorant of it. And yet the wicked are not hereby excused when they are thus drawne against their purpose, because they serue not God freely, for they propound some other thing vnto themselves, as crueltie, spoile and violence, and God by their crueltie correcteth the sinnes and offences of his people.

Verf. 27. None shall faint nor fall among them: none shall slumber nor sleepe, neither shall the girdle of his loynes be loosed, nor the latchet of his shooes be broken.

His meaning is, that all things shall be so fitted and prepared, that nothing shall let or hinder them to march on forward: as if a Prince hauing inrolled his souldiers, should by and by giue order to prepare the wayes to bring in prouision of victuals, and to administer all things necessarie whatsoeuer. He shews then that they shall be readie and nimble, and that there shall be no impediment to cause them to prolong the time. He also shewes their diligence, affirming, that none of them should lo much as slumber. Now in these words, none shall slumber, nor sleepe, the order is a little inuerted: for he should rather haue sayd, none shall sleepe, nor slumber: because it is a lesse matter to slumber then to sleepe. But this manner of speech must be thus resolu'd, They shall not slumber nor sleepe: that is to say, they shall be so farre off from sleeping, that they shall not slumber at all. We haue the like phrasē of speech in the 127. Psalme, He which keeps Israel shall neither slumber nor sleepe. It is an Hebraisme then, which agrees neither to the Greeke, nor Latine.

Verf. 28. Whose arrows shall be sharp, and all his bowes bent: his horse hooves shall be thought like stint, and his wheelles like a whirlwind.

His meaning is, that they shall be furnished with fit weapons. Now he retaines the manner of sight vsed among the Assyrians and other Eastern people, who for the most part were accustomed to arme themselves with bowes and arrows for warre, as we see the Englishmen doe at this day: but vnder these particulars he comprehends all sorts of weapons. But because the way was long, and the voyage difficult, the Jewes might happilie thinke there would be many impediments to turne away the enterprise of the enemy, and that is the cause he saith, why the hooves of the horses should be like stint, so as they should neither faint nor be wearie, but should easily come to Iudca. Hercunto appertaines the other member, when he compares the wheelles to a whirlwinde: for the people of old time were wont to goe to warre with Chariots, and therefore he not only mentions horses, but also wheelles. And all this is to be referred to this great haste and diligence which they should vse, to wit, that the Lord should not be hindred by the long distance of the way to bring in deadly enemies against the Jewes to destroy them.

Verf. 29 His roaring shall be as a Lion, and he shall roare like Lions Whelps: they shall roare, and lay hold of the pray: they shall take it away, and none shall deliuer it.

This appertaines to crueltie. He compares the Chaldeans to Lions, whose sight is fearefull, and of nature cruell, as if he should say, They shall not be such me as are touched with any sence of pitie, mercie, or humanitie, but shall rather shew themselves cruell, and like wilde beasts. He also adde, that they shall be of such strength, as none shall dare to come neere them to pluck the pray out of their teeth. Meaning thereby, that the Jewes shall be vtterly vnable to disappoint their assaults, because that for feare of their crueltie none shall adventure to approach vnto them: for in regard that God would vse them as his seruants to punish the Jewes, it was requisite they should be furnished with a terrible power and maiestie, that this fortif

Heb. 10. 31. People might be made to vnderſtand at the laſt that they had not to doe with men, but with God, into whoſe hands it is a terrible thing to fall.

Verſ. 30. And in that day they ſhall roare vpon them, as the roaring of the ſea: and if they looke vnto the earth, behold darkenes, and ſorrow, and the light ſhall be darkened in their ſkie.

The Prophet addes this, to let the Iewes vnderſtand that the Chaldeans ſhould not come into the field at random, but ſhould be appointed therunto by God, and prepared by his hand. By the roaring of the ſea, he meaneth ſuch a great hurly burly, as ſhould ſeeme like vnto a deluge, by which all Iudea ſhould be drowned. He alſo cuts off all hopes, in foretelling that there ſhould be neither eaſe nor end in theſe chaſtiſements. The Iewes (ſaith he) ſhall looke vp and downe to finde meanes to eſcape, as men are wont to do in any great perplexitie, but on which ſide ſoeuer they turne them, be it to heauen or to the earth, they ſhall finde no eaſe from either of them, becauſe miſeries and calamities ſhould vtterly ouerwhelme them on all ſides. This maner of ſpeech is very common, yea euen among the rude people, at ſuch time as deſtruction and calamities do threaten on euery ſide, when no iſſue or eaſe can be perceiued. It is neceſſarie then that it ſhould ſare thus with vs, when the Lord purſues vs, to the end his high hand may alwayes appeare in our eyes; and that on which ſide ſoeuer we turne our ſelues, we might behold the creatures armed againſt vs for the execution of his iudgements: for we may ſometimes eſcape mens hands, but which way ſhall we be able to flee from the hand of God?

THE VI. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. *In the yeere of the death of king Vzziah I ſaw alſo the Lord alſo ſitting vpon a high throne and lifted vp, and * the lower parts thereof filled the Temple.*

They have been wont to begin the 6. Chapter heere, but ſome thinke it is the beginning of this booke; and therefore that the Propheſies of Iſaiab were not well collected and gathered together, alledging this reaſon, that y^e Prophet refuseth to take vpo him y^e office of teaching, which he would not haue done, if he had exerciſed it before: and that he ſeemes altogether a nouice, ſeing he yet knew not his vocation. Morcouer that heere he declares how he had now ſeene the Lord, and not before. But I thinke theſe reaſons are not of any value, as I haue touched heretofore, and therewithall I anſwere, that it ought to ſeeme no new thing that the Prophet ſhould be caſt as it were into a ſwound, and ſo aſtoniſhed with this ſtrange viſion, that he ſhould vtterly forget he was a Prophet: for there was no part in him which was not aſhamed at the preſence of God; and therefore as ooe amazed he willingly ran into ſome hole, or rather thinking himſelf but a dead man, he thought verily he ſhould haue giuen vp the ghoſt. And it is very neceſſarie that the children of God ſhould be thus touched, when God letteth them perceiue the ſignes of his preſence, to the end they may be humbled and conſounded in themſelues. Adde alſo, that God meant thus to feare the rebellious people in the perſon of his ſeruant, and therefore it is no maruell if he excuſe himſelfe being ſo aſtoniſhed with feare; as alſo in regard that he had not before felt the weight of his charge as now he did, after the maiſtic of God had thus euidently appeared vnto him.

But why was not this viſion giuen him in the beginning? I anſwere, it was neceſſarie in regard of the time, to confirme him more and more in the execution of his office. An example whereof we may ſee in the Apoſtles, for in the beginning they were ſent with commandment, not to paſſe the bounds of Iudea, but after Chriſt roſe againe, he eſtablisheth them anew in a ſolemn manner. He breatheth on them, and tels them that they ſhould receiue the holy Ghoſt; and contents not himſelfe therewith, but ſending downe the holy Ghoſt from heauen vpon them in fire toongs, he put an extraordinarie power vpon them. So according to the diuers mutations which happened in times and kingdoms, it was neceſſarie that Iſaiab ſhould be confirmed and approued againe by a new viſion: as well that he might be encouraged to conſtancie, and might with the more cheerefulnes follow his vocation in time to come, as alſo that his miniſtrie might be authorized among the Iewes by the authority of God. This reaſon to me ſeemes ſufficient why he had not this viſion at the beginning, but had it rather ſometime after he began to teach.

Mat. 10. 5.
Act. 2. 3.

Now that this booke takes not his beginning here, it ſufficiently appeares by that we haue ſeene in the former preface, which is much more cleare and proper then this. And becauſe all paſſage might be ſtopped by the desperate obſtinacie of this people, it was neceſſarie he ſhould begin his ſpeech with this vehemencie here ſet downe: as alſo becauſe it is very likely that he had exerciſed the function of teaching a long time vnder king Vzziah, who was dead as I thinke before this propheſie was publiſhed. Laſtly, the Prophet by theſe words ſignifies, that God appeared peared vnto him after he had alreadie begun to execute his office.

Some by Death vnderstand the Leprosie wherewith this king was smitten, which was indeede a ciuill death, because the king was constrained to forsake the companie of men, and to leaue the government of the kingdom: but I had rather take death in his proper signification. Thus I thinke then, to wit, that Isaiab prophesied the former things fro the time of Uzziah, at that time when he was stricken with Leprosie, and that Isaiab had this vision after his death, at that time when Iothan should succeed him. For we know how the change of kings do bring diuers sturres and hurly burlies, so as it is no wonder if Isaiab were confirmed againe in his calling. Also the prophesie it selfe which followes will declare sufficientlie that he had preached sometime before he had seene the Lord. For the blinding of the people is heere spoken of, whereof the Prophet had such experience, y^e their stubbornnes might haue caused him to haue giuen ouer that which he had begun, seeing he lost all his labour. The Lord then confirms him by this vision, to the end all discouragemets being set apart, he should manfullie continue to do his dutie, and goe on with that which he had begun by the commandement of the Lord.

Obiect.

[I saw the Lord.] Some aske how Isaiab could see the Lord, who is a spirit, and therefore can not be seene with corporall eyes: and also because the vnderstandings of men are not able to mount vp to his infinit greatnes, how it can be that he should comprehend him vnder a visible forme? But we must note, that as oft as God shewed himselfe to the fathers he neuer appeared vnto them in his whole essence, but as men were able to comprehend him, according to their capacite. For it is not inconuenient (albeit men creepe here as it were vpon the earth, or at the least are very low beneath the heauens) that God should descend downe vnto them, so as the beames of his glorie should appeare vnto them as in a glasse. Such a forme then was represented before Isaiab, whereby he tasted and saw the incomprehensible maiestie of God as farre as his weakenes could beare. And therefore he attributes a seate, a garment, and a bodily sight vnto him. Whence wee may gather a very profitable doctrine, to wit, that as oft as God shewes any signe of his presence, we are to know for certaine that he is present by vs: for he deceiues not in giuing vaine representations, as men wickedly disfigure him by their foolish inuentions. Because this representation then was a true testimonie of God his presence, Isaiab rightly affirms that he saw him. As when it is sayd that Iohn saw the holy Ghost in the likenes of a Dove, the name of the spirit is transferred to the signe, because he should not doubt but it was the holy Ghost which rested vpon Christ.

Matth. 3. 16

Obiect.

Anf.

It is demanded in the second place who this Lord should be. S. Iohn in the twelfth of his Gospel teacheth and that truly, that it is Christ, because God neuer shewed himselfe to the fathers bur in his eternall Word, and only Sonne. And yet some notwithstanding do restrain this amisse to the person of Christ in my iudgement, seeing the Prophet giues him indefinitely the name of God. The name Adonai, which seemes best to appertaine to Christ, fauours their opinion nothing at all, for it is often attributed vnto God simply, and without relation. Mention is made of God in this place then without determining of either end: yet notwithstanding one may properly say, that Isaiab saw the glory of Christ, because he was the image of the inuisible God from euerlasting.

Col. 1. 15

[Sitting vpon a seate.] He could not haue better described the maiestie of God in regard of the circumstance of the place then vnder the person of a idge, to the end his maiestie might the better awaken the Iewes, and we shall see hereafter the horrible iudgement which the Lord pronounceth from his seate. But to the end we thinke not the Prophet should inuent how he could paint out God, we must note that he faithfullie represents the same shape and forme which was exhibited and shewed vnto him. Now some may doubt whether the Prophet was brought into the Temple, or whether these visions were reuealed vnto him sleeping. Although they are wont to bring many reasons for the one or the other exposition, which leaues it in suspence, notwithstanding the most probable coniecture is, that although he were out of the Temple, in the house, or in the fields, yet that this vision might be giuen him as to the rest of the Prophets.

Obiect.

Anf.

[And with his lower parts.] Almost all the expositors do vnderstand this of the fringes of the garment; although it may be referred to the verges of the iudgement seate: so as his meaning is to shew that the greatnes of God was such, that it spread it selfe throughout all the parts of the Temple. He also meanes to attribute a more excellēt and glorious forme vnto God, then to any humane creature whatsoever. And that he thus appeared in the Temple, it doth yet adde greater authoritie to the vision, because he had promised his presence to his people there, and there the people waited for answers, according as Salomon had exprefly declared at the dedication of the Temple, 1. King 8. 30. To the end then the people might know that these things proceeded from God (vpon whom they called dayly, and vpon whom in a vaine confidence they were puffed vp) this vision was shewed to the Prophet in the Temple. Now this must needs obtēin great credit among them, when it was preached aloud that this was no word of any mortall man, but a diuine oracle comming downe fro God, whose name they had wont boldly to vsurp as oft as they would attribute vnto themselves any great matter. For this indeed was a very sharp and an odious prophesie, and therefore had the greater need of sound confirmation: And it is also a thing vsuall among the Prophets of God, namely, that he spake vnto them from his Temple and from his Sanctuarie.

Verf. 2. The Seraphims stood vpon it, every every one had ſixe wings; With twaine he covered his face, and with twaine he covered his ſecte, and with twaine he did ſlie.

HAving testified that God had appeared vnto him full of maiestie and glorie; he adds that the Angels were about him, which he calles Seraphims, in regard of their ſeruen- tie. Now although the etymologie of this word is well enough knowne, yet diuers reasons are brought on both ſides. Some affirme they are called Seraphims, because they burne with the loue of God; others, because they are swift as fire; others, because of their brightnes. Howſoeuer it be, the incompre- hensible maiestie of God is set forth vnto vs in this description, as by the sunne beames, to the end in them we might learne to con- sider and adore ſo admirable and excellent a glerie. Many thinke there were two Seraphims, euen as there were two Cherubims, which compassed the Arke. I willingly receiue this opinion, and yet I dare not affirm any thing, where the scripture is silent. Now in regard it is an vsuall thing in the scripture to appropriate the descriptions which are made of God, to the signes, the vse whereof was ordinarie, and the knowledge thereof familiar among the faithfull; it may be the Prophet saw such a figure. In the meane while I ſo continue to hold this as a probable coniecture, that yet notwithstanding I hinder not any to receiue a contrarie interpretation, if any can bring better warrant, for Daniel saw thousands of Angels, and not two only. Dan. 7. 10.

Six wings.] This figure is not without reason. For these wings thus composed, contained some mystrie, which y Lord would not haue whollie hidden. The two by which the Angels ſlie, signifie nothing else but their readinesse and nimblenesse to execute the commandements of God. And seeing the analogie of this thing is certaine and euident, I hope those which are not contentious will easily agree therunto. The other two where- with they covered their faces, sufficientlie shew, that the Angels themselves can not beare the brightnes of Gods maiestie; yea, that they are dazzled with his looke, euen as we are when we behold the sunne in his brightnes. And if the Angels can not beare the maiestie of God, how great shall the rashnes of men be if they strue to attaine therunto? Let vs learne then to enquire no further of God then is lawfull and expedient, in such wise as our knowledge may soberly and modestly taste that which yet is very farre off from our capacitie. Yet notwithstanding the Angels do not so couer their faces as that they should vterly depriue themselves of any sight of God, for they ſlie not at randon. So we also may behold God, but yet so farre forth as the weakenes of our vnderstanding can endure. There is a little more difficultie as touching the other two wings. For some thinke they haue their feete covered, lest they should touch the earth, and so get some soile from thence, as wee our selues and others haue been wont to doe. For euen as in walking we gather duſt & filth, so whileſt we remaine vpon the earth we are infected, as with touching some contagious thing. Whence we may learne, that the faithfull shall haue no acquaintance with the Angels, vnlesse they ſlie aloft, being no longer glued to the earth. This is the exposition which some bring. But I am rather of their opinion who thinke these wings had a contrarie vse to those which were about rehearsed: for euen as they couered their faces with wings aboue, lest they should be ouerwhelmed with the exceeding brightnes of God; so had they wings beneath, to couer themselves from our sight. Now if it be so that wee can not behold so small beames of the brightnes of God which glimmereth in the Angels but we be by and by dazzled; how can we behold that most excellent and bright maiestie of God which is able to swallow vp all our reason? Let men learne then that they are farre remote from the perfect knowledge of God, seeing they are vnable to attaine so farre as to the Angels. This exposition I take to be the best, and yet I receiue not the first.

Vet. 3. And one cried to another, and said, Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts: the whole world is full of his glorie.

IT was necessarie all these things should be represented to the Prophet in a vision, to the end that not only the people but euen Iſay himſelfe should be the more moued. For there was no lesse neede in regard of him, then of all the people, seeing he was to susteine very hard and difficult assaults; neither could he haue boldly denounced these things, vnlesse he had been first confirmed. The people also being admonished by this vision how exceeding great and fearefull the maiestie of God was, who pronounced this sentence against them, should be terrified therewith in good earnest: This God (at whose only looke the Angels themselves tremble, and whose praises they continually sound forth with full voyce; lastly, whom they serue and obey) came forth vpon his throne: but men whom he had vouchsafed to adopt for his children, proudly with obstinacie resisted him. Now when we heare that the Angels are continually buſied in sounding forth Gods glorie, let vs know that their example is set before vs for our imitation. For it is the highest seruiſe we can do vnto him to be occupied in celebrating his praises. In as much then as he herein makes vs companions with his Angels, it is to the end that whilst we wander here below, we should notwithstanding be conioyned and made like to the heauenly inhabitants. Lastly, to the end the harmonic between vs and the Angels may be perfect in all points, it behoues that the praises of God doe not only sound vpon our tongues, but that all the actions of our life be referred therunto; which we shall then do when we endeavor to doe all things therein to the glory of God.

To be occupied in celebrating Gods praises, is the highest seruiſe we can do him.

Holy,
Holy,
Holy.]

The Auncients haue vsed this testimonie against the Arians when they would prouue the three persons in the one essence of God. I mislike not their iudgement, although if I should haue to deale with heretikes, I had rather vse stronger arguments, for they triumph and become the more hardened when we contend against them with such places as are not sufficientlie plain and euident, as heere they might readily answer, that by the number of Three in this place was shewed a perfection (as in many other places of the scripture besides.) Although I doubt not but the Angels doe heere set forth one God in three persons (and to say the truth, we can not magnifie God, but we must by and by celebrate the praises of the Father, of the Son, and of the holy Ghost) yet notwithstanding I take it we should rather vse more solid testimonies, to the end that whilst we go about to prouue the chiefe article of our faith, we expose not our selues to the scoffes of heretikes. So then by this repetition there should be rather shewed an vnweariable continuance of praising, as if the Prophet had sayd, The Angels neuer ceased their melodie in singing the praises of God: as indeed his Holinesse ministreth to vs infinite matter thereof.

The whole world is full. Word for word it is, The fulnesse of whole earth: which we may referre as well to the fruits, liuing things, as to all sorts of riches wherewith God hath furnished the earth; and so the sense should be, that in this adorning of the earth, and the diuers furnitures which are in it, we may see the glorie of God to shine, because they are so many testimonies of his fatherly loue towards vs. Notwithstanding the most simple and naturall sense is, that the glorie of God fillles the whole world, and is spread abroad throughout all the quarters of the earth. And in mine opinion there is heere a close opposition, by which he beates back the foolish ouerweening of the Iewes, who imagined the glorie of God was shewed no where else but vpon them, as if they meant to shut it vp in their Temple. Now Isaiah shewes that it is so farre off from being shut vp within so narrow bounds, that it fillles the whole earth. And this agrees to the prophesie which will afterwards follow touching the blinding of the Iewes, for thereby he hath giuen entrance for the Gentiles into the Church of God, in regard they supplied the emptie and forsaken place of the Iewes.

Verf. 4. And the lintels of the doore cheekes moued at the voice of him that cried, and the house was filled with smoke.

His noyse of the posts sufficiently shewes that it was no voyce of man which the Prophet heard; for there is no mortall man that is able to make the posts and threshold of an house to shake with his voyce. Now the Lord meant not only to confirme his voyce to the Prophet, but to men also, and that for euer, that so it might be knowne throughout all ages. Let vs know then that the voyce of God is confirmed to vs at this day by this sound, to the end we also should tremble as oft as he speaketh: for if the dumb and insensible creatures are moued therewith, what ought we to do; we, I say, which seele, smell, taste, and only vnderstand it, to the end we should holily and reuerently obey his holy word?

The house was filled with smoke.] This was a common and ordinarie signe which the Lord vsed among the auncient people: for as soone as Moses entred into the Tabernacle Exod. 33. 6. we reade that the smoke was spread, so as the people could neither see Moses nor the Tabernacle. The smoke then which Isaiah describes was no new thing; but God according to his accustomed maner meant thereby to testifie that he would manifest his power in executing iudgement vpon this people.

But some may aske why the Lord would manifest his presence by this signe rather than by another? A twofold answer may be giuen to this question. First, because the Lord hath alwayes been bent to repress the boldnes of men, to the end they should not enquire further into his Maiestie then was meete, being alwayes prone (euen all of vs) to be prying ouermaleperly and rashly in this regard. Wee would pearce aboue the clouds and search into the very secrets of Gods counsell, and in the meane while neglect that which is before our feete. From thence ariseth this laberinth of errors, in which after \bar{y} spirits of men are enwrapped, they forthwith fall to serue false gods: for me no sooner giue leaue vnto theselues to forge what they list of God in their fantasie, but they by and by therewithall enterprise they care not what against him. And therefore it is not without cause that he hath opposed this smoke, thereby to admonish men of their weakenes. And yet he would not haue them to be either blind, or besotted with the blockishnes and error of the Papiests, who at this day couer ignorance vnder the name of simplicitie: but he forbids to search or pry further into the heauely mysteries then that which is manifested vnto vs by himselfe in his word: for that (as S. Augustine sayth) is a very learned ignorance. Wherefore as oft as mention is made of the like smoke, let vs know it is as a bridle by which we ought to be kept in awe, that we shoul'd not be too curious in searching into the counsels of God. Secondly, this smoke was to strike a feare into them, as we see when Dauid describing God to be terrible and angrie, sayth, that cloudes and darknes are round about him, Psal. 97. 2. which also agrees very well to this place, because he pronounceth an horrible iudgement to wit, the blinding of the Iewes. Some would haue this a fore-runner of \bar{y} fire which should burne the Temple: but that which I haue set downe is more probable.

Verf. 5. Then I sayd, woe is me, for I am vndone, because I am a man of polluted lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of of polluted lips: for mine eyes haue ſeene the King and Lord of hoſtes.

NOW the Prophet telleth in what manner he was effectually touched with this viſion, to wit, that hee was ſo terrified with the feare of Gods preſente, that he thought himſelfe undone. And hee addes the reaſon wherefore he thought thus of himſelfe: Be- cauſe (ſaith he) I am of polluted lips. I wonder why S. Ierome hath turned it, Be- cauſe I held my peace, ſeeing there is no ambiguity in the word. It is true that the verb Damaſ ſignifies to hold ones peace, but in this place there is a certaine note of the verb paſſiue which is added. It may alſo be tranſlated thus, Wo vnto me for I am brought into ſilence: becauſe ſilence is often taken for death in the ſcripture, and it is ſayd, that thoſe which are buried are in ſilence. But ſeeing it is all one as touching the ſenſe, I will not contend much about the tranſlation. His meaning is then, that he was ſo terrified with the ſight of God, that he became as a dead man: And indeede there is no cauſe why we ſhould wonder at this; for man muſt be wholly brought to nothing in regard of his fleſh, to the end he may be reued according to God. Whence is it that men liue, that is, that they thinke they liue, being puff- ed vp with the knowledge of their owne rea- ſon and power, but becauſe they are ignorant of God? And ſo before he reueale him- ſelfe to vs we thinke we are gods rather then men, but when the Lord appeeres, then we begin to feele and perceiue what wee are. Frothence comes that true humilitie which conſiſts in this, that men attribute nothing to themſelues, but depend wholly vpon God. Wherefore this and ſuch like places vpon this argument, ought to be diligentlie obſerued. Now it was an ordinarie thing with the holy fathers to crie, I ſhall die, I am undone, as oft as they ſaw God. Wherefore before our minds be well awakened by approaching to God in good earneſt, our life is nothing elſe but a vaine imagination: we are in darknes, where- in it is very hard to diſcerne truth from er- ror: but when we are come into the light, it is eaſie to diſcerne the one from the other. So when God comes to vs he brings the light with him, to the end we may ſee that we are nothing, which yet wee can not perceiue whilſt we are puff- ed vp with a vaine opini- on of our ſelues before.

Yes mine eyes haue ſeene.] Is it the ſight of God which brings death to men? For it ſeemes ſtrange that the looke or preſence of God ſhould take away the life, whereof he is the fountaine. I anſwere, that this fall- es out by accident, and in reſpect of our owne default, and not from the nature of the Lord. Death is in our ſelues, and we perceiue it not but when it is compared with the life of God. And without all queſtion this is it that the Prophet here meanes. For he ſaith not ſim- ple, I am dead, but he addes the reaſon, namely, becauſe he is of polluted lips.

But why refraines he pollution to the lips? Was hee pure in his vnderſtanding, in his thoughts, and in the other parts of his body? I anſwere, The Prophet toucheth that which was the principall and moſt precious thing in him, to wit, his tongue, which was dedicate and conſecrated to God, by whom he was in- ſtituted a Prophet. And although otherwiſe he was a ſinner, yet notwithstanding in re- gard of the holy office which he exerciſed, he was ſpecially conſecrated in this part. And yet in as much as he answered not to the ho- lines of God, he confeſſeth he is polluted, yea euen in that part which is the moſt holy in him. And this I take to be the ſimple and na- tive ſenſe of this place, although the expo- ſitors haue ſayd nothing touching it hitherto.

In the miſds.] This is added by way of expo- ſition. For here he puts himſelfe among the people, no otherwiſe then as one who felt himſelfe guiltie of the pollution of the whole body, and forgets the puritie he had recei- ued of God, becauſe he was unable to ſtand before him. Hence it appeeres, how ſuch erre as thinke the Prophet ſeigned as the com- mon people are wont to doe, who forge diuers inuentions of God. For as I haue ſaid, the preſence of God is the confounding of the fleſh, becauſe it ſhewes vs that we are nothing in our ſelues. He which ſeech God, and is guiltie of his owne miſerie, what can he feele but his owne perdition? becauſe God is the Iudge, from whom nothing can be hid- den, or vnknowne; in whoſe preſence all our puritie becoms impuritie. And if this beſell the Prophet, what may wee thinke of our ſelues? for what are wee in compariſon of him? Although God hath begun to purge vs, yet muſt wee alwayes acknowledge our vn- cleanenes, the reliques whereof we ſhall al- wayes feele in our fleſh. From this place alſo we are to gather a generall doctrine, to wit, that mens mouthes are polluted and impure if they be not purged of God. Whence it fol- lowes, that all humane doctrines do alwayes ſmell of their impuritie: for there is nothing pure, but that which proceeds fro the Lord.

Verſ. 6. Then ſlew one of the Sera- phims vnto me with an hote coale in his hand, which he had taken from the altar with the tonges.

THE Prophet ſhewes what remedie was gi- uen him after he had been thus terrified, and as he thought to death: and this con- firms that which I haue ſaid alreadie, to wit, that the puritie of the lips comes from God only, for men can bring nothing of their owne which is not vaine and impure. If any obiect, it is abſurd that the Lord ſhould purge him now, as if his tong had been impure and prophane before, which notwithſtand- ing was the organ of the holy Ghoſt: I haue heretofore ſufficientlie answered this obiection. True it is that the Lord had purged him before, but according to his meaſure. The purgation which is now added is greater, becauſe it hath his degrees and increa- ſings, which no man can wholly obtaine at the firſt. Wherefore we muſt not gather that the Prophets lips were impure before, because they are now purged: but we are to regard to what end this was done, namely, because the Lord would augment and increase his graces in him, and raise him vp higher in dignitie, to the end he might haue greater authoritie among the people; and this was requisite by reason of the times, and of the mutation which was then in the state. The fire is taken from the altar, as diuine and heavenly, because the law forbid to take any strange fire from thence: the reason is, in regard that whatsoever men doe mingle with sacred things, can not but be a meere profanation. Wherefore Isaiah was taught by this figure, that all puritie floweth from God only.

Verf. 7. And he touched my mouth, and said, loe, this hath touched thy lips, and thine iniquitie shall be taken away, and thy sinne shall be purged.

WE see how God stoopes downe to the weakenes of humane sense. He puts the songs in the hand of one of γ Seraphims; to the end he may take a cole from the Altar and applie it to the Prophets mouth. This was done in a vision: yet notwithstanding God rayed vp the vnderstanding of the Prophet by the help of this outward signe. But we must not thinke that the cole had any vertue in it selfe, as superstitious people imagin hidden vertues in magicall arts: there is nothing of all this heere; for it is one God and none other which can purge vncleannes from any part whatsoever. The Angell was heere the minister of the purgation, but he was not the author of it; to the end we post not that ouer to another which belongs to God alone. And this the Angell himselfe expresseth clearly, in that he attributes nothing to himselfe, but taking the holy pledge which he had receiued of God, he applies it as a sacrament to the mouth of the Prophet: not as if he could not haue been clenfed without the cole, but because this visibler signe was profitable for a witness and confirmation of such a thing. And this also is the vse of Sacraments, namely, to confirme vs according to our weakenes. For we are not Angels to behold the mysteries of God without any helps; and therefore he lifts vs vp to him by little and little, and as it were by steps.

Behold he hath touched.] He shewes how the confirmation which was given by the signe was not in vaine, but that the thing which was signified by it was forthwith granted, so as Isaiah well perceiued he was not deceiued. Whence we may gather, that the thing it selfe is giuen vs in the Sacraments with the signe. For the Lord feeds not our eyes in the Sacraments with bare and empirie figures, but he ioynes the truth it selfe with them, to testifie that he works by the signes effectually. And we must note this so much the more diligently, as there are few at this day who are acquainted with the true vse of the Sacraments; as also in regard that commonly there are contentions among many holy and learned personages, euen about this matter. Now in the first place we must hold this article, That γ truth can neuer be separate from the signes; although it ought to be distinguished. For we see and feele the signe; as the bread which is giuen vs by the Minister in the Supper: and because Christ must be sought in heauen, it behoues vs that our thoughts be caried thither. Notwithstanding he offretch his body by the hand of the Minister, to the end the faithfull might truly inioy it; prouided that they aspire to heauen by faith where he is. He giues it then to the faithfull who raise vp their minds to him by faith, because he can be no deceiver.

Now the vnbeleeuers receiue the signe indeed, but because they lie grouching vpon the earth, and ascend not vp into the kingdom of Christ; they are not partakers of the veritie, because that he which hath not faith, can nor lift vp his thought to God, and therefore can not be partaker of Christ. It is faith only which opens vs the gate into the kingdom of God; wherefore whosoever will liue by the flesh of Christ, it is necessarie that he be lifted vp farre above all humane sense into heauen by faith. In a word, there is nothing but the spirit of God only which can make vs partakers of this Communion: yet notwithstanding it follows not thereupon that the truth of the Sacraments should be diminished by the vnbeliefe of men, seeing God alwaies offretch the spirituall thing, but the wicked leaue it behind them; euen as the grace of God by the Gospell is offered to all, but all do not receiue it, although they heare it, and be constrained to consent to the truth of it.

Moreouer we learne from this plate, that the Sacraments are neuer separated from the word, for the Angell receiuefs not a dumb person in this place; but: first he hath giuen the signe, he by and by addes the word, to shew the end of it: for it could haue been no Sacrament, vnlesse the word had also been ioyned vnto it, whereby Isaiah might vnderstand wherefore the cole was put to his mouth. And therefore let vs know that the principall part of the Sacraments consists in the word, which without it are but meere corruptions; as wee see at this day how the Sacraments in the Papacie are commonlie turned into meere may-games. Now the summe is, that there should remaine no impediment why Isaiah should not now susteine the person of God, being perfectlie clenfed, and pure from all spot.

*Verf. 8. * Also I heard the voyce of * Or, after, the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send? and Who shall goe for vs? Then I said, Heere am I, send me.*

THE Prophet begins now to declare the end of this vision, and why the Lord appeared in so glorious a maiestie to ordaine him a Prophet againe, to wit, because he was to carrie an incredible ambassage touching the blinding of the Iewes: he is made more certain

The truth neuer separated from the signes, yet they must be distinguished.

God giues vs the thing signified in the Sacraments, and feeds our eyes therewith empirie shadowes.

certaine then of his vocation in ſo odious a matter, to the end that treading all feare of man vnder his feete, he may obey the commandement of God, for there is nothing that ſo ſecureth the minds of the faithfull, as whē they know they ſerue God. He had alſo another teſtimonie, to wit, that he was purged of God, and thus was ſufficient to make him vnder- take the hardeſt burthen which could be impoſed vpon him.

Whom ſhall I ſend?] The Prophet brings in the Lord ſpeaking, as if he could find no man fit to do this meſſage. Some thinke that the blockiſhnes of the Priests and Prophets is here touched, becauſe not one amongst them was able to teach, although they were many in number. Now although this reaſon hath ſome colour, yet I had rather refer it to the certentie of ſy vocation of the Prophet, to wit, that the Lord called him not forth at random, but with choice. This is then a graue deliberation which the Lord takes as touching him whom he ſhould ſend; not that he doubteth but theſe manners of ſpeech are in regard of vs, euen as when he ſayd, I will goe downe, and ſee, Gen. 28. 21. For God, to whom all things are manifeſt, needs no inquitie; but to the end that men may not thinke he haſtens too much in doing any thing, therefore he applies himſelf to their cōmon manner of ſpeech, ſo whē he asks, Whom he ſhould ſend, he ſignifies, that he needs not a common perſon, but an excellent Teacher in the execution of ſo great a charge. Hence wee are to gather that the authoritie of Iſaiah was confirmed, to the end he might not only be held for a Prophet, but the chiefe among the Prophets. Who ſhall goe for vs? I am of opinion indeede that this place notes out the three perſons in the Deitie, as elſewhere alſo, Let vs create man after our image, Gen. 1. 26. For God deliberates with himſelfe, and that in the plural number. And no doubt but he here conſults with his eternall Wiſdome and Power, that is to ſay, with the Sonne, and the Holy-Ghoſt.

Here am I.] This ſo prompt an anſwere ſets forth the greatnes of that readines which proceeds of faith. For he who before was like a dead man, feares now no difficulties at all. Whence we ſee, that this terror wherof we haue ſpoken herebefore, proceeded not from rebellion, as if he would ſee the preſence of God, and reſuſe the charge which was inioyned him: but becauſe he had neede of new grace, that ſo he might feele and know himſelfe ſufficient for the ſuſtaining of this office. Whence it is to be obſerued, that we can neuer rightlie enterpriſe any thing, without certaine teſtimonie of our vocation: for without that, we ſhall ſtagger and doubt at euery ſtep.

Besides, it is a great prop to vphold our inſimicue, when we feele that we are not ſtature of neceſſarie gifts, but that God furniſheth vs, to the end we may the more eaſily performe our charge. Morcouer it behoues vs to be inſtited by this excellent example of obedience, that as oft as the Lord calls vs, we be readie and prepared to beare the burthen which he ſhall lay vpon vs, and that we reſuſe it not, notwithstanding all the difficulties which may ſtand in our way. When the Prophet ſaith, Heere I am, it is as much as if he ſhould haue ſaid, I am readie to execute that which God ſhall command me; for by this manner of ſpeech, obedience is often noted forth in the Scripture.

Verſ. 9. And he ſaid, goe, and ſay vnto this people, yee ſhall heare indeede, but yee ſhall not vnderſtand: yee ſhall plainly ſee, and not perceiue.

IT appeares againe frō hence more clearly, how neceſſarie this viſion was for Iſaiah, to the end he might not faint in his courſe euen at the firſt pull. For this was a great offence of mind vnto him, that he muſt be faine to haue experience of ſuch an obſtinacie and rebellion in the people of God; and not for a yeere or two, but euen for more then ſixtie yeetes together. It was neceſſarie therefore that he ſhould be well armed, and to become euen as a wall of braſſe, that he might be inabled to ſtand againſt ſuch a rebellion. The Lord plainly teſtifies to Iſaiah then, that he ſhall haue to deale with obſtinate people, whom he ſhall do very little good vpon; yet that he muſt not faint by taking offence at ſo ſtrange a thing, neither be diſcouraged by ſuch a ſubburnnes; but y he is to overcome all theſe temptations, and to paſſe beyond them with an inuincible courage. For the Lord admoniſtheth him before hand touching that which ſhould come to paſſe: and it is as if he ſhould haue ſayd, Thou ſhalt teach, but without fruite, but yet ceaſe thou not for all that to inſtruſt ſtill, becauſe I command thee: and though thou perceiue no fruite, yet be not therefore wearie: only obey me, and leaue all the iſſue of thy labour vnto my wil. I forewarne thee touching theſe things betime, to the end thou ſhouldeſt not faint nor turne aſide by reaſon of thy ill ſucceſſe; as though ſomething v unexpected were beſalne thee. Adde withall, that he is commanded to deteſt their blind obſtinacie: openlie, as if of ſet purpoſe he ſhould thunder out againſt them, and ſhould ſay, I know it very well that I ſhall loſe my labour, but I care not, it is enough for me that God approves of my actions, to whom my preaching ſhall be a ſweet ſmelling ſauour, although it bring death vnto you, 2. Cor. 1.

Ministers are to yeeld obedience vnto God: and to command to com- ſucceſſe of their labors to the bleſſing of God.

Verſ. 10. Make the heart of this people fat, make their eare heauie, and ſhut their eyes, leſt they ſee with their eyes; and heare with their eares, and vnderſtand with their hearts, and conuert, and he heale them.

HEre the former ſentence is better expreſſed. For God not onely admoniſtheth Iſaiah that he ſhall loſe his labour in teaching; but alſo that he will cloſe up the eyes of this people people by his doctrine, thereby giuing them occasion of greater blindnes and obstinacie, which in the end shall worke their perdition. He signifies that the people being deprived of reason and vnderstanding, shall perish, and that there shall be no remedie left: notwithstanding he therewithall aduertiseth y^e Prophet, that his labour shall be an acceptable sacrifice vnto him, howsoeuer it bring ruine and death to the Iewes. And truly this is an excellent sentence, not only because Iſaiah foretelles the things which were accomplished in the kingdome of Christ, but because it containes a very excellent doctrine, the vse whereof is perpetuall in the Church of God. Also those who walke faithfullie in the ministrie of the word, shall be forced to feele the experience of it; and we learne it by effect more then were to be wished: but this hath been common to all the seruants of Christ, and therefore ought we to beare it with the greater courage, howsoeuer it be a great scandall to those that serue God with a pure conscience. Besides, we are not only much offended hereby, but Satan vnder this pretext prickes his instruments forwards to bring their doctrine into the greater disgrace; namely, that is not onely without fruite, but also because it doth hurt, fo as it makes men more obstinate, and works their confusion. For many at this day hauing nothing else to reproch the doctrine of the Gospell withall, affirme, that the preaching thereof brings no other fruite but this, that it makes men worse then they were before. Now whatsoeuer the cunct be, yet notwithstanding God declares that our ministrie pleaseth him, because we do that which he hath commanded.

Besides, albeit our labours seeme vnprofitable, and that men cast themselves headlong into destruction, waxing more obstinate, yet must we goe on still, because we do nothing of our owne will, and therefore to content our selues that we are approved of God. We haue cause to sigh indeed when the cunct answereth not our labour: and wee ought to be much in prayer vnto God that he would giue his word efficacy. Yea, we are to lay the fault in part vpon our selues, when we see so little fruite; yet are we not for all that to cast away our weapons, or to forsake our charge. The truth must alwaies sound forth from our mouths, although there be no eares to heare it, yea, although the world be as blind and as senseles as stones. For it is more then sufficient that we faithfullie serue to the glorie of God, and that our labours are pleasing to him: neither is the sound of our voyce in vaine when it leaues the world without excuse.

The faithfull teachers ought heere to receiue a singular consolation, to fortifie themselves the better alwaies against the offences which fall out euery day by the rebellions of men, lest they be thereby cooled: no, let them continue in their office with inuincible constance. Now forasmuch as this also is a generall offence, to wit, that the liuely word of God (at the hearing whereof all the world ought to tremble) strikes thus the eares of men without fruit or profit; let the weake in faith learne also to strengthen themselves with this sentence. We are wont to wonder how it can possible come to passe that the greatest part of the world should so furiously resist against God. And from thence also arises this difficultie, to wit, whether that can be the heauenlie truth of God or no which is reiected without punishment; because it is not likely that God would speake to men, to the end they should scorne him. But to the end our faith wauer not, we must oppose this stay; namely, that the office of teaching was committed to Iſaiah, that in casting abroad the seed of life, it should bring forth nothing but death: as also that mention is not made heere of that which befell once, but it is a prophesie of the kingdome of Christ as shall be said anon. Furthermore the circumstance is to be noted, that Iſaiah was not sent to all, but only to the Iewes: wherefore there is very great vehemencie in the particule demonstratiue Hinneb, as if he should say, The people whom the Lord had specialle chosen, heard me not; but shut their eyes in so manifest a light.

Therefore let vs not maruell, if whilest we speake to those who brag of the name of God, it happens to vs euen as if we told a tale to deafe eares. True it is this is a sharp message that the Prophet should say he is sent of God to stop up their eares, to shut their eyes, and to make their hearts fat, because it seemes these things are nothing agreeable to the nature of God, and that therefore they are contrary to his word. But we must not think it strange if God auenge himselfe vpon the malice of the people by such an extreme blinding of them. In the meane while the Prophet hath shewed heereofore that the cause of this blindnes was in themselves. For in commanding them to hearken, he testifies, that there is a doctrine fit for their instruction, if they would shew themselves teachable; and that the light is offered to enlighten & leade them, if so be they would open their eyes.

All the fault then is imputed vnto the people, because they reiected so wonderfull a blessing of God. Whence the solution of the difficultie which we touched a little before, is more apparent. I grant it seemes very hard at the first blush, that the Prophets should make the hearts of men more hard; seeing they bring the word of God in their mouth, by which as by a light men should lighten and order their paths, Psal. 119. 705. And we know that Dauid giues it this title, Psal. 19. 9. It is not the office of the Prophets then to blind the eyes, but rather to open them, And heereafter this word is called perfect wisdom, Chap. 8. How comes it to passe then that it takes away mens vnderstanding, and makes the dullards? Rather the hearts which were before of stone, iron, and freele; should hereby be mollified: how can it be then they should be come the more obdurate? I answer (as I haue touched already) that such blindnes and hardening proceeds not from the nature of the word, but is by way of accident: and it ought to be attributed to the wicked.

Obie^{ti}Ans^{er}

wickednes of men. For euen as they who haue foie eyes can not accuse the Sunne for hurting them with the light thereof: nor hee which hath a weakenes and fault in his hearing, a cleere and very loud voyce which he can not beare: lastly, as he that is of a weake capacitie is not to be offended with high and difficult things which he is vnable to comprehend: So likewise the wicked can not accuse the word of God that they become the worse after the hearing of it. Seeing then that all y^e fault is in themselves because they do not giue it access into their hearts, what wonder is it if that which was appointed for their good, do become their bane? For it must needs be, that the disloyaltie and infel-delitie of men should be punished in this manner, to the end they should feele death from that, whence they might haue receiued life;
and darknes from thence, whence they might haue receiued light: lastly, all noysome and hurtfull things frō thence, where they might haue had the fulnes of all blessings to saluation. Which is diligent to be noted, because there is nothing more common with men, then to abuse the gifts of God: and whilest they make themselves beleue they are very innocent, anon they deck themselves with other mens feathers. But they are doubly wicked, in as much as they apply not those things to their true vse which the Lord hath giuen them in trust; but haue also prophane-ly and miserably corrupted them.

S. Iohn alledgeth this place to set out more plainly the obstinacie of the Iewes. True it is that he recites it not word by word; but yet he explanes the meaning thereof suffici-entlie. And therefore could they not beleue (saith he) because Isaiah said, he hath blinded their eyes, and hardened their hearts. Notwithstanding this prophesie was not y^e cause of their vnbeliefe, but the Lord so foretold it, because he foresaw they would be such.
Now the Euangelist applies that to the Gos-pell which was practised vnder the law: and teacheth therewithall, that the Iewes of his time were deuiued of reason and vnderstand-ing, because they were rebellious against God. Although if any should aske the first cause, we must come to the predestination of God. But because this counsell is hidden frō vs, we must not be curious in searching into
it. For the reason of God his eternall counsell appertaines not to vs; but we must looke to the cause which is before our eyes, to wit, their rebellion, by which they made themselves vnworthie of so many and great benefites.

S. Paul also shewes from this place not once but often, that all the cause of their blindness remained in themselves, Act. 28. 27. Rom. 11. 8.
They, saith he, haue made their eares heauie,
and stopped their eyes. So, that which the Prophet attributes heere to doctrine; that the Apostle attributes to the wicked affection of this people, who were the cause of their owne blinding. S. Paul brings in the holy Ghost speaking in this place. S. Iohn saith, that Isaiah spake thus of Christ, after he saw his glorie.
Whence it appeeres, as we haue said heretofore, that this God which filled the whole earth with his glorie, was Christ. But Christ is not separate from his Spirit. It is to very good purpose then that S. Paul hath referred this place to the holy Ghost: for although God did represent himselfe to the Prophet in the luely image of his Sonne, yet is it also certaine that whatsoeuer he represented vnto him, was whollie shed into him by the power of the holie Spirit. Now let the wicked barke against vs while they will with their blasphemies, and blame our doctrine, because the world is made the worse by the preaching of it; yet shall they gaine nothing thereby, neither yet be able to diminish the least tittle of the authoritie thereof, for they must forwith condemne God himself when they condemne his doctrine, but their slanders can not let that his iustice should not appeere; or that he should not preserue that and vs also blameles.

Thas they conuert not. Hee heere cleerely pronounceth, that he sent not the Prophet to saue the people, but rather to destroy them. But the word of God in it self is health-full, and at least necessarie it is that there come some fruit from the preaching thereof, which may profite some, although many lose the fruit of it by their owne infidelitie. I answere, mention is made heere of Aas.
the whole bodie, which was already desti-nate and vowed to destruction, for there are alwayes some whom the Lord hath exempt from this generall perdition. The word was powerfull to saue those, and did truly bring forth his effect; but the common state being sunken deepe in rebellion and infelility, perished. Whereby we also see that the word of God is neuer so hurtfull, that there should not be some few which feele saluation
by it, and haue triall thereof effectually.

But wee are to note from the order and course of the words, that repentance is the beginning of healing. First of all then let vs see what he means by this word healing. He referrēs it to the rods and scourges of God wherewith the people had been humbled for their sinnes. Now the cause of all the euils which we endure, is our rebellion against God; but when we repeny, and that he shewes vs the light of his countenance, then the rods wherewith he chastised vs are cast into the fire, and thus we are healed. This order ought to be diligent obserued of vs, by which it very well appeeres whereth the Lord aimes in inuiting vs to come vnto him, as also what drift the holy doctrine hath, to wit, that we might be conuerted. Behold here then that part of the Gospell, Do penance, or Repent. Afterwards, by offering vs reconciliation, he promiseth remedies for all euils, not only against the bodie, but also against the soule. But if we receiue not so excellent a fruit of the word of God: if we be not reconciled vnto God as soone as the word sounds in our eares, we haue cause to blame none but our selues, because the fault whollie remains in vs. And in very truth that which the Prophet recites heere is a strange thing, and as it were against nature, to wit, that men

men should become rebellious and obstinate, yea altogether incurable by ſ doctrine of Gods word, the propertie whereof is to cure and heale men. It must needs be acknowledged then as a singular grace and mercie of God when we are touched inwardly, seeing the arme of the Lord is not reucaled to all. Notwithstanding the chiefe thing which Isaiah would reach vs by this horrible chastisement of malicious obstinacie, is, that about all things wee beware how wee contemne the Lord his voyce when he calles vs.

Isaiah 6. 44.

Verf. 11. Then said I, Lord how long? And he answered, vntill the cities be wasted without inhabitant, and the houses without man, and the land be utterly desolate.

Although the Prophets are seuered in denouncing the wrath of God against men, yet they cast not off humane affection, and therefore it is necessary they susteine a double person; for they ought to pronounce the iudgement of God with a bold and stout courage, so as they should rather see the whole world brought to utter ruin and destruction, then that the least iot of his glorie should be diminished. And yet in the meane while they are not cruell, as if they were not touched with any compassion of their brethren, whose destruction notwithstanding in regard of their office they are forced to foretel. Now although these two affectiōs seeme cōtrarie, yet do they agree very well, as it appeeres by ſ example of Ieremias, who at the first refused this hard burthen, in that he was cōmanded to threaten destruction to the people; but by and by after he takes heart againe vnto him, and stoutly follows his office: our Prophets mind was thus composed, for in regard of his obedience to God, he publisheth his iudgements with a loud voyce; and yet notwithstanding he had some respect to the people: as if he should say, O Lord, if it must needs be that they be blinded, yet let it not be for euer. And questionles when he made this prayer he was touched with compassion, desiring that so heauie and fearefull a punishment might be mitigated. Thus then naturall affectiōs ought not to hinder vs from doing our duties. As for example, It is a naturall affection that the husband hath to the wife, the father to his children; and yet notwithstanding they must be so restrained and kept vnder, that we haue a speciall eye to that which agrees with our vocation, and to that which the Lord commands.

Simile.

We must note this point diligentlie, for when we once begin to let loose the raines, we often pretend this excuse, to wit, that although our hearts were prompt and readie to do that which God commanded, yet we were overcome with naturall affection: but wee must so weane our naturall affectiōs that they hinder not our vocation; as we see they hindered not the Prophet that he should not follow his calling; for ſ Lord must haue such authoritie ouer vs, that when he commands, we must forget our selues, and all that we haue. Furthermore, although the holy care that the Prophet had ouer the people be heere noted, yet the greatnes of the chastisement is by and by expressed, to the end the wicked (according to their custome) should not promise themselues any releafe. Neither are we to doubt but that the Prophet was stirred vp to aske this by a secret inspiration from God, to the end this sharp and terrible answer (which by and by follows) might be more plainly dartered against them. Whence it appeareth what issue the vnbelieuers shall haue, to wit, that they shall not be chastised superficially or lightly, but shall be cut off with extreme rigor.

He aggravates this, when he saith, Till the houses be left without man, and the land be utterly desolate. Because peradventure the countrie might be spoiled, and yet there might remaine some citie: also some cities might be assailed and destroyed; but yet some houses might remaine still: therefore he declares that there shall be such a discomforture, that not only cities, but houses shall be also rased to the ground, and that there shall be an horrible waste throughout the whole land: howsoeuer notwithstanding that euen in the greatest destructions there is alwayes something left. Now howsoeuer this was but once pronounced by Isaiah, yet let vs know that this appertaines to vs also, for the same iudgement is prepared for all those who with a rebellious spirit shall oppose themselues against God, or with a stiffe neck shall resist against his yoke: yea, so much the more fiercely as any shall behaue themselues this way, so much the more sharply shall the Lord handle them vntill he haue utterly consumed them.

Verf. 12. And the Lord haue removed men farre away, and there be a great desolation in the mids of the land.

This verse containes no new thing, but only expounds the former, and by other words describes ſ destruction which should happen to the countrie of Iudea, to wit, that God would send the inhabitants of the countrie farre off: for hee leaues no hope that those which escape the sword shall be therefore exempt, because they shall be led into captiuitie. Then he immediatly addes a general sentence touching the desolation of the land: as if he should say, It shall be left solitarie, and stripped of inhabitants, be it that they flee, be it that others be caried away into exile, or that others perish by the sword: behold what reward is prepared for the rebellious and obstinate, which heape sinne vpon sinne, vntill the vnquenchable wrath of the Lord be kindled to the height.

*Verf. 13. But yet in it shall be a tenth, and shall retorne, and shall be * catch vp * Or, left as an elme or as an oke which haue a subbarc.*

so

ſo the holy ſeed ſhall be the ſubſtance thereof.

There is ſome obſcuretie in the words; but let vs firſt ſearch out the ſenſe, and then it ſhall be eaſie for vs to gather the ſignification of ſy words. This place is expounded two wayes. Some expound the Hebrue word Aſiriah, the tenth part, others the tenth; and will haue it to be a Noun Collectiue. Truly Aſiriah, and not the former word, ſignifies properly Tenth among ſy Hebrues, although there be no great difference herein. They which turne it Tenth, thinke that truces are promiſed to the people, becauſe there ſhould be ten kings from the reigne of Uzzias vntill the deſtruction of Ieruſalem. And indeed we ſhall finde ſo many from Uzzias to Zedechiah. And thus there ſhould be a great approbation of the Prophets doctrine, to wit, to be able to number ſy Kings which ſhould reigne euen after his death, and not only to thev this, but alſo the time and the day. I know not whether the other ſenſe ſhould be more proper; for it ſeemes the Prophet meant here to comfort the people, becauſe they ſhall yet retaine ſome hidden vigor, which ſhall ſprout forth, howſoener for a time it ſeemes they be whollie dead, as the trees which are wont to waxe greene after the winter is paſt.

But becauſe the firſt expoſition is probable enough, therefore I will expound this verſe according to thoſe who thinke that mention is made heere of ten Kings, and that after they ſhall be paſt, the people ſhall be caried into captiuitie, and the land then conſumed as with a deuouring fire. In the meane while the reader ſhall note, that whether we turne it Tenth, or tenth part, yet we may very fitly referre it to the people, and then the ſenſe ſhall be, Vntill the people be brought to the tenth part; becauſe he had ſpoken before of ſome remainders of the people which ſhould be very ſmall, and will ſpeake of it againe hereafter. And indeed there remained a very ſmall number. It ſhould be taken well thus then, as if of a thouſand there ſhould remaine an hundredth, of a hundredth ten, and of ten one.

Shall returne] That is to ſay, there ſhal come a change for the better, when the Iewes ſhall returne out of exile into their countrie, and that the land ſhall recouer a freſh colour. But it ſeemes there ſhould be ſome contradiction in the hanging together of the text; for the Prophet immediatlie addes, that it ſhall be eaten vp, or left bare; how cold comfort ſhould this be, that the people ſhould be brought home to be deſtroyed againe afterward? Some reſolue this difficultie thus, as if Iſaiab ſhould ſpeake of the laſt and ſmall deſtruction of the people. But in mine opinion he meaneth that it ſhall not be an vtter ruine, but ſuch an one as we ſee in trees, the leaues whereof fall in winter, and there remaines no apperæce of any thing but a dead trunk of wood: yet when the Spring comes they will bud afreſh: he ſaith then, that the like ſhall befall to this people. The word Leauer, ſignifies to burne, and therefore it is as much to ſay as to be conſumed with fire. But wee muſt conioine it and reade it with the ſimilitude which is by and by added. For Iſaiab ſaith not ſimply that it ſhall be conſumed; but as the beech or elme, that is to ſay, with hope of a neete reſtauration.

Whereas S. Jerome tranſlateth Declaration, I know not fro what other word he thought this took his originall, vnleſſe he interpreted freely as it came in his minde; looking rather to the meaning of the Prophet, then to the etymologie of the word, becauſe when trees flouriſh and bring forth leaues, their life is manifeſted, and comes foorth againe into ſight; and this will be very agreeable. It ſeemes alſo it was not without cauſe that Iſaiab hath put theſe two kinds of trees here, becauſe the one buds ſooner then the other, and flouriſheth ſooner alſo; and ſo came it to paſſe to the Tribe of Iudah. For firſt the ten Tribes with halfe the Tribe of Beniamin were caried away into captiuitie: ſo they which had flouriſhed firſt, firſt withered. Iudah withered in the latter end with great hope to ſprout againe; and becauſe heere is giuen hope of libertie, it was not like to the captiuitie of the Iſraelites. It ſeemes then that there is ſome propietie in this ſimilitude of trees, which notwithstanding I would not preſſe too much. By the word of cauſing the leaues, we muſt vnderſtand the falling away of them, as when the trees are ſtripped of their leaues, as of their garment. For in this nakednes it ſeemes the trees be feate and dead, although notwithstanding there is a ſecret vertue remaining within the, by which at the laſt they are reſtored againe at the Spring.

So ſhall] This is the application of the Similitude, which hath great force in it, for when we behold the goodnes of God in this order of nature, we are greatly conſumed therein. Euen as S. Paul propoſids the image of the reſurrection by the ſowing of corne, which is a thing vſualle done: ſo alſo Iſaiab in this place ſhewes the reſtauration of the Church by taking a Similitude from trees, which after the fall are like dead ſtocks, but as ſoone as the Spring is come, they waxe greene, and bring foorth new leaues, which they could not doe, vnleſſe they retained ſome ſapꝑe within them during the winter, howſoener in outward apperance they ſeemed dead. He prophetieth that the like ſhall befall this people, to wit, that although in this grieuous and hard captiuitie they ſhould reſemble drie trees, and therefore might be thought paſt hope of recouerie, yet ſome ſtrength ſhould be conſerued in them, by the which they ſhall be ſuſtained in the miſt of all theſe anguiſhes; and after they haue borne them for a while, at the laſt they ſhall ſpring forth and flouriſh.

Wee haue ſaid that this doctrine belongs not to one ſeaſon only, and therefore wee ought to make our benefit of it. For it often happens that the Church is in ſuch diſtreſſed eſtate amidst the manifold calamities which ſhe ſuſtaines, and is ſo deſtitute of all apperance of ſtrength, that a man would thinke

she were vtterlie perished. As often then as this fallies out let vs yet be fullie resolu'd that there is still a sap hidden within, which howsoeuer it appeare not by and by to our eyes, will yet shew forth his fruit in the end. Now this sap is hidden in the word of God, by which only the Church is vpheld.

Holy seed.] Heere he shewes what this substance is, to wit, the small number of the faithfull, which he calles a holy seed. For he meanes the elect, which should be saued by the free mercie of God, and should be referu'd from this captiuitie, because that this banishment was as it were the purgation of the Church whereby the Lord tooke away the wicked, who being cut off, he gathered vnto himselfe a very small people, but yet truly sanctified. Some erre this to Christ, but this exposition seemes too farre fetched; it will agree better if we erre it to all the faithfull, because the holy seed is the substance of the Church.

THE VII. CHAPTER.

Vers. 1. And in the dayes of Abaz the sonne of Iotham the sonne of Oziah king of Iudah, Rezin the king of Aram came vp, and Pekah the sonne of Remalib king of Israel, to Ierusalem to fight against it, but he could not ouercome it.*

* Or, Syria.

Here is heere recited an excellent prophesie of the wonderfull deliurance of Ierusalem, euen when it might haue seem'd whole desolate. Now the Prophet recounts all circumstances, to the end by them the miracle might be the more admirable; that it might cleerly appeere how the Citie was preserued by the meere goodnes of God, and not by any policies or power of men. For this people were so vngratefull, that vnlesse after the deliurance, all these things had been brought to their remembrance one after another; they could not vnderstand how they were deliuered by the hand of God. And few there were who in the present danger waited vpon that which Isaiab had promised; because they iudged of the publike state of the kingdom and of their own also, according to that which they saw with their eyes. To the end then hee might lay forth the excellent benefit of God, he sets all circumstances before them, that so they might acknowledge out of how great danger they were deliuered when God freed them out of their enemies hands. As touching our selues, let vs know that this mercie was shewed to a people vnthankfull, to the end the Church might be preserued; and that Christ at the last night appeare.

We must note that the Prophet speaks of the second warre which Rezin & Pekah made; and this we shall more easilie gather out of the holic historie, for in the first warre Achaz was ouercome, and a great multitude led into captiuitie, who in the end were brought back by the Israelites, when the Prophet had in the name of God commanded it should be so done. And againe the kings of Syria and Israel raised an armie and assailed Achaz, because it was thought they had so spoiled them by the first warre, that they had left them no power to resist. Whereas then he makes mention of the second warre, it is to amplify the miracle: for Achaz had not a competent power to resist so great a multitude, seeing all the flower of his souldiers were caried away in the first warre. And howsoeuer there were now many people remaining, yet they were scattered; and besides, were much affrighted with the remembrance of the discomforture which was very fresh in minde. And herein doth the goodnes of God and his power appeare to be so much the greater, that hauing compassion vpo so great a calamitie, he gaue succor to his people, and in a moment drew them out from the gates of death, euen then when they had no hope of saluation. Came vp. Here is the proposition and summe of y whole matter. For he shewes of what affaires he was to speake: and in few words according to y visuall maner of speech in the Hebrue toong telles what he meanes to declare anon more at large, and more clearely. For from the very entrance he propounds the issue, to wit, that the enterprise of these two kings tooke none effect: but by and by after he will shew the reason why Ierusalem could not be taken; and yet before he toucheth that, he will briefly shew what counsell and courage Achaz had.

Vers. 2. And it was told the house of David, saying, Aram is ioyned with E- * Or, Syria phraim: therefore his heart was moued, and the heart of his people, as the trees of the forest are moued by the Winde.*

His meaning is not that the newes of this league was brought at that time when the two kings were already neere the citie, for Achaz could not safely haue issued forth if the armie of the enemies had been already in the field: but it is said, that king Achaz trembled for feare before these kings had assembled their me of warre together. Whence it followes, that he was terrified more and more as the danger grew neerer him. The house of David signifies the Palace and Court of the king: as if the Prophet had said, Achaz and his Counsellors were admonished of the conspiracie made against y cuntry of Iudah.

As touching the words; the verb Nachah is diuerslie translated by the expositors; and because it signifies to leade, some draw this sense, that the Syrian brought his souldiers to the ſuccor of the annie, and therefore they thinke there ſhould be ſome change of the letters in the word At: others deuiſe it of Nachab, and tranſlate, He is at reſt. According to other ſome the letters are miſplaced, ſo as Nachab is put in ſtead of Chanah, which ſignifies to pitch the camp, and therefore I haue thought good to turne it, Syria is ioyned, or combined: for y^e Prophet meant nothing elſe but that the Iſraelites and Syrians had made a league of warre together, to conioine their forces for the ſiſſailing of Ieruſalem. Alſo in the word Ephraim there is a figure called Synecdoche, much vſed in the Prophets. The whole kingdom of Iſrael is comprehended vnder Ephraim, not only becauſe that Tribe was the richeſt and more populous then the reſt; but alſo becauſe Ieroboam the firſt king came out of that Tribe.

His heart is moued.] Here we well diſcerne that by the houſe of Dauid, he meanes nothing elſe but the Palace of the king, from whence ſoone after all the reſt of the people were terrified: neither could it otherwiſe be but the common people muſt needs feare when they heard that the King and his Counſell were alſo in that plight. As ſoone then as theſe newes came, all were ouertaken with ſuch an aſtoniſhment, that none could hold a ioynt ſtill. He expreſſeth this quaking by a very apt ſimilitude, which we alſo are commonly wont to vſe when we ſay, He trembled like the leaſe of a tree. And this appertaineth to the ſetting forth of the miracle; for thence it appeeres that they were in a deſperate caſe, not only in other mens iudgements, but even in their owne alſo. They had been all yndone then if the Lord had not ſpeedilie prevented the miſchiefe. We haue heere a faire looking glaſſe, wherein we may behold the ſtrength which the wicked take vnto themſelues all the while they feele not the hand of God; and contrariwiſe how they are ſodainly ouertaken with feare, whē the Lord ſhewes them any danger; for they are ſo ſecure when all things fall out to their wiſh, that the Lord can ſcarcely bring them in ſubiectiō vnder his gouernment, and then they thinke themſelues alſo out of all danger. But if affliction do but a litle touch them, then they are by and by out of heart; yea, are ſo poſſeſſed with terror in their minds, that they behaue themſelues as blockiſh people, deprived of all ſenſe. And this is the puniſhment by which the Lord awakens them out of that deepe ſlumber into which they had caſt themſelues. For before, it ſeemed their eſtate was ſo firme and ſure, that they could neuer be put downe from their greatnes: but now at the leaſt noiſe they heare, they ſtraight fall into a ſwound for feare.

Such a feare is a iuſt vengeance of God, whom they would neuer haue reuerenced unleſſe it had been drawne from them by force. Let vs learne then, that if we haue but the leaſt dramme of true faith, we muſt not thus diſtruſt God when we are in any danger. I graunt it can not be that we ſhould be free from trouble and feare when we are in danger of enemies: but wee muſt not ſo tremble and feare as being perplexed wee ſhould moue this way & that way, as though we knew no hauein, nor place where we may ſafely fixe our footing. For this difference will euer be betweene the faithfull and the vnbeleeuers, namely, the latter ſort feele no remedie to quiet their conſciences, but the firſt do by and by flee to God, where they reſpoſe themſelues with great tranquillite of minde, although they be vexed with diſquietnes for a time, as knowing that they haue a moſt ſafe refuge and hauein of reſt in him.

Verſ. 3. Then ſaid the Lord vnto Iſaiah, Go forth now to meeete Ahaz (thou and Shear-iſhub thy ſonne) at the end of the conduit of the upper poole, in the path of the fullers field, Fiſt, we ſee how the Lord remembering his couenant, prevents this wicked king, by ſending his Prophet to meeete him. Shear-iſhub the ſonne of the Prophet is ioyned with him, that he might be a witneſſe of this prophecie. And it is a probable cōiecture that this name was not impoſed vpon him at randon, but by a ſecret inſtinct of the holy Ghoſt, or by expreſſe commandement from God, to declare the future deliuerance of the people. He bare a ſeale then as it were engrauen in his name, as well of the neere exile, as alſo of their returne. It is alſo credible, that this ſigne or wintes of the prophecie was knowne among the people, for he ſhould not haue been ioyned in commiſſion with his father, unleſſe he had ſuſtained ſome authoritie in his perſon. The place is ſpecified for certentie of the hitorie: and it may well be that the king went carefullie to conſider of the approaching of the enemy, to the end he might repulſe him, which appeareth more cleerely by the holic hitorie, 2. King. 16. 5. It is called, The path of the fullers field, for it may be the fullers were wont to waſh their clothes thereabouts; or rather it was ſome ancient place called by this name: howſoever it be, it was a ſigne that this miſerable hypocrite ran hither and thither with feare and terror, when Iſaiah was comming forth to quiet and ſecure him.

Verſ. 4. And ſay vnto him, Take heed, ^{Or, be aſſured.} and be ſtill: feare not, neither be faint-hearted for the two tailes of theſe ſmoking firebrands, for the furious wrath of Rezin and of Aram, and of Remaliab ſonne.

The verb Shamar, which ſignifies to keepe; is here put in the coniugation of Hiphil, and many expoſitors take it, to take heed; although they draw it amiſſe, and to a ſenſe both conſtrained and beſides the purpoſe, as if the Prophet had admoniſhed Ahaz to take heed how he made warre. The ſentence is more ſimple, to wit, that he ſhould not wax faint-hearted, nor wauer doubtingly, but that he ſhould be quiet & ſecure, therefore I haue tranſlated, Be aſſured. The ſenſe is theſe, that Ahaz should take such heart vnto him, that at no hand hee suffer himselfe to boyle with impaience, neither to torment his minde with restless thoughts. For when men are dae stricken with terror, their mindes are colled vp & down, and haue no setled stay.

This exposition is confirmed by the words which follow, he still: for these two things are ioyned together: first, to stand quietly vpon his watch, to the end he may not be distracted with diuers thoughts, looking this way and that way: secondly, that he be still, and of a calme and quiet spirit within. And behold here the fruites agreeable to a iustifying faith. For as the vnbeleeuers wauer and floate in vncertaine in diuers assaults, and know not to which end to turne them: so the faithfull on the contrarie are staied, and cast themselues vpon God with quiet mindes. Impietie is neuer at rest: but where faith hath gotten strength; there we may see securitie and quietnes of minde, not trembling beyond measure.

These words then doe expresse the vertue of a true faith. Now hauing shewed the remedie whereby to appease the troublesome passions of the heart, he also forbids him to feare: because nothing is more contrarie to faith (who commits her saluation into the hands of God) then feare. For I confesse indeed that it is impossible for vs to be voyde of feare, when dangers approach. For faith makes vs not senselesse. Contrariwise, the children of God are touched with a double feare: the first procedes from naturall sense; which feare they could not auoyde, although they had a perfect faith: the other, from the weakenes of faith, because there is no man that hath profited so well therein, that there should not still remaine some reliques of distrust, against the which we must continuallie fight. This exhortation of the Prophet therefore must not be vnderstoode as if the Lord forbad all feare; but his meaning is, that the faithfull must arme themselues with such conlancie, that they ouercome all their feares. As if he should say, Take heede thou be not cast downe: and if thou meetest with strong and sharpe assaults, be of an inuincible courage, that dangers ouerwhelme thee not: but rather inanfully stay thy selfe vpon the power and goodnesse of thy God; to the end thou maiest bee able to ouercome all calamities.

And hereunto he by and by addes, that he be not faint-hearted, which is as much, as to melt away, or be dissolued. Also it is not without good cause that the Apostle teacheth vs, that our hearts are stablished by faith. For when (in forgetting God) we suffer our selues to moulder away any thing at all, through our owne infidelitie; it procedes first from a weake and sluggish cowardinesse. But hee cannot be said to be delicate, or womanish, who resting himselfe vpon the spirit of God, valiantly resists all aduerfities. Whence we gather, that the Prophet meant nothing else, but that Ahaz should waite with an vndaunted minde, for that issue which God had promised him.

For the two Tayles.] Isaiah vseth a very elegant similitude here, to weaken the opinion which the Iewes had conceiued concerning these mightie Kings, whose greatnes had smitten their hearts with such terror: for their crueltie and furie was as it had been a flaming fire; sufficient to haue consumed all Iudea: yea, and it seemed that this fire could neuer haue been quenched. But Isaiah on the contrarie vouchsafeth them not so much as the name of firebrands; because that might haue seemed somewhat: but onely calles them I cannot tell what fragments or ends of firebrands not kindled, but onely smoking; as if a brand being taken out of the fire; should begin to moulder away, and should cast nothing else but a little light smoke. This similitude then contains a singular consolation; by which we are admonished to esteeme farre otherwise of the violence of the wicked, then according to the outward appearance. They seeme to be so mightie, as if they were able to set on fire, destroy, and consume all the world. Now the Lord minding to preuent and take the feare which we haue conceined from vs, pronounceth that it is but a little weake smoke, of small continuance: although to our seeming it should bee such a fire as neuer could bee quenched.

We must not esteeme the violence of the wicked according to outward appearance.

Verf. 5. Because Aram hath taken wicked counsell against thee, and Ephraim and Remathis sonne, saying:

Although hee had saide before, that the threats and endeavors of the enemies against the people of God, should bee vaine and turned into smoke; yet hee discubles not how many cruelties they had deuised, if God withheld them not. For by euill counsell, he means a destruction: because these two Kings had both conspired to destroy the cuntry of Iudah, And to the end he might the better expresse the same, and might also let them see it, as it were before their eyes, hee recites their counsell in the verse following.

Verf. 6. Let vs goe up against Iudah, and let vs waken them vp, and make a breach therein for vs, and let a King in the midst thereof, euen the sonne of it. Tabeal.

* Or, an entrance into it.

Let vs goe vp.] That is to say, let vs make ready an armie. Some turne the verbe Nekussnah, let vs trouble or afflict: the which indeede shewes the originall of the word: but in this coniugation it signifies rather, To awaken. And howfoeuer I reiect not this first interpretation; yet notwithstanding I had rather follow the second, because it agrees best with the Text By Awakening, I vnderstand, To trouble; and to practise some new stratagem: as we commonly say, raise vp sturres, that this kingdom may no longer be in quiet. As touching that which followes, many many expound Nauquinnah: Let vs enter into it by force: others; Let vs ſo handle the matter, that it ſhall not be able to ſtand before vs. I haue translated, Let vs make an entrance into it. For the verbe Dagua ſignifies that which we commonly ſay, let vs inake a breach, or entrance. Now the meane to breake into Iudea, was either to ſtoppe the paſſages by force of armes: or by teares to ſolicit thoſe which ſhould be timorous and waivering, to reuolt: for which ſubiects hold their obedience, all paſſage is ſhut vp; but when all is on a hurly butly, by ſeditious and factious; an eaſie entrance is made to paſſe euen to the ſtrongest and beſt fortified places. Thus theſe two Kings hoped as ſoone as they ſhould bee arriued in Iudea, that they ſhould terrifie all the hearts of the people with their great and mightie armie, ſo as they ſhould haue neither power nor will to reſiſt. For it is not likely that hauing ſo great a multitude of men, they meant to holde any long ſiege. True it is, that Ieruſalem was well fortified: but they thought the cite would be frighted and troubled with this greate armie; and therefore would by and by yeeld it ſelfe to their mercie. Yet notwithstanding I leaue it to the libertie of euery one, touching the interpretation of theſe words: ſeeing the Prophets meaning is plaine enough. But we cannot eaſily gather from the histories who this Thabal was. It is very likely that he was ſome Iſraélite; who being an enemie to the houſe of Dauid, theſe Kings would binde and oblige vnto them.

A double feare.

Heb. 11. 27.

Verſ. 7. Thus ſaith the Lord God, it ſhall not ſtand, neither ſhall it be.

That which was ſaide before, was to the magnifying of ſo rare and excellent a deliuerance. For when the Lord meanes to ſuccour vs in temptations, he ſets the greatneſſe of the danger before vs, to the end we might perceiue that hee promiſeth no leſſe than the neceſſitie requireth. Hee leſſeneth not, but rather amplifies the euils wherewith we are preſſed: then he offereth his promiſe, and ſhewes that hee is alſufficient to deſtroy vs, although it ſeeme wee bee paſt recouerie: The Prophet hath followed this manner of reaching. For he might ſimply haue told them what ſhould come to paſſe, and might haue incouraged the King and the people; to the end they ſhould not bee affrighted nor diſcouraged in regard of theſe great armies: but he diſcouers the counſell and deliberation of theſe Kings; againſt which he now oppoſeth the promiſes and decree of God, that his admirable worke in their deliuerance might the better appeare. Behold theri the ſacred anchor which onely holds vs faſt in the middeſt of all tempeſtuous temptations: whereas on the contrarie, if God ſhould take away his word from vs, we were neuer able to hold out in aduerſities. Although the King then was almoſt ouerwhelmed with deſpaire already; Iſaiah tells him that there is nothing ſo terrible which he may not boldly deſpiſe; if ſo be that fortifying himſelfe ſtrongly vpon this promiſe of God, he patiently waite for that which he ſees not, which yet ſeemes almoſt incredible to him. He affirms then, that howſoever theſe men haue liſted vp themſelves as giants againſt God, yet they ſhal not bring their practiſes to perfection. And hee vſeth the word, To ariſe vp, as alſo the Latines by this ſimilitude ſignifie a worke with his goings forward. Laſtly, he affirms that ſuch a boldneſſe ſo full of ſaileledge, cannot ſtand. There is yet more vehemence in that which he addes, It ſhall not ſtand: that is to ſay, it ſhall be ſo diſannulled, as if it had neuer been. We muſt note this manner of ſpeech well, by which he oppoſeth the bare and naked word of God, againſt this great haſte, and the deliberation of theſe two Kings.

Verſ. 8. For the head of Aram is Damafcus, and the head of Damafcus is Rezin: and within ſiue and threeſcore yeere Ephraim ſhall be deſtroyed from being a people.

* Or, ye 66 yeeres, and
* Or, broken,
* Or, and ſhall be no more a people.

The head of Syria.] As if he ſhould ſay, Theſe two kingdomes ſhall haue their limits, euen as they haue at this preſent. They aſpire to thy kingdom, but I haue ſet their bounds which they ſhall not paſſe. Damaſcus was the chiefe citie of Syria, as Paris is of France. Hee ſaith then that theſe two Kings muſt be content with their owne greatneſſe, and that looke what eſtate they were now in, the ſame ſhould they continue in hereafter. Now after he hath told them it is in vaine for them to endeavour at this time to amplify their limits; he ſeteth the calamitie of the kingdom of Iſrael. For by the word, To breake, hee ſignifies that this kingdom ſhall be brought to nothing; and it ſhall be no more. For the Iſraelites were carried away indeed into exile, and brought to another people: as part of Sauoy is now incorporated into the kingdom of France, and hath loſt his name. This is it which the Prophet meanes, when hee ſaith, that they ſhall bee no more a people: becauſe that Iſrael in this exile ſhould be mingled with ſtrange nations, and ſhould euen loſe his proper name.

Te ſixte ſiue yeeres.] Seeing that the Iſraelites were led into captiuitie in the ſixth yeere of King Hezekias, and that Ahaz reigned but ſixtene yeeres: it is certain that this reckoning of yeeres ſhould not begin from ſay that Iſaiah was ſent to bring this meſſage. For there was onely twentie yeeres to the time that the ten Tribes were carried into captiuitie: Amos had prophesied of it: Amos 3. 11. and no doubt but as this prophesie of Amos was knowne, ſo alſo the period of time appointed was vnderſtoode of all, euery one knowing the number of yeeres. If we reckon then from the time that Amos foretold theſe things, we ſhall finde it threeſcore and ſiue yeeres: for Iuſham reigned ſixtene yeeres, Ahaz as many. Adde therunto ſixe of King Hezekias, wherein the ten Tribes were led into exile: and then take twentie ſeuen yeeres wherein wherein Yeriah raigned after this prophesie, and it will make threefoore and siue. This coniecture is very probable: neither neede we doubt but Isaiah meant thus. For we haue the prophesie of Amos, by which the Lord admonished the people, lest they should haue complained they had been suddainely ouerwhelmed without warning. Isaiah confirms this prophesie, and propheseth the same time which was already knowne of all. Besides, by these words he sharply galles the senselesnesse of the people of Israel, in that being thus admonished of the destruction both of their countrie and name; they not onely despaired (with all boldnes) the name of God, but burned with a desire to deuoure all Iudea: as if they meant to scorne this heavenly reuelation of set purpose; and thinking because a long time was already past, that they therefore had now escaped. The Prophet derides this their folly; namely, because they imagined the word of God would waxe olde and wither away, in so small a number of yeeres. But because the Israelites were deafe, Isaiah giues them of Iudeah a set time wherein to looke for the ruine of their enemies. This place also teacheth, that the Prophets were faithfull assisters one of another, to the end they might serue God with one heart and affection.

* Or, In the meane while.

Verf. 9. *For the head of Ephraim is Samaria, and the head of Samaria is Remaliabs sonne. If ye beleene not, surely ye shall not be established.

BECAUSE this is a repetition by which he would confirme that which hee said before, namely, that God hath limited the boundes of the kingdom of Israel for a certaine time; therefore I haue translated, In the meane time: for otherwise it would bee absurd, that the chiefe citie should remaine in hir perfection after the kingdome (as hee erewhile foretold) should bee brought to nought. The sense then is, whilest the threefoore and siue yeeres are running on, and comming to their end, Israel hath some respite. His chiefe citie shall be Samaria: let him content himselfe with his boundes, and aspire no higher: for such shall his estate be, till he be wholly cut off, and be no more teperated a people.

Except yee beleene is.] The particle ci is put in the midst of the sentence, as yeelding the reason of it. And therefore some translate thus; If you beleene not: that is to say, because you are not beleeuers. And so restrain the first member to the prophesie of Isaiah: but the second, to the whole word of God, as if he should say, If you giue no credit to my words, then your infidelitie shall bee knowne to all. But thus there should be no difference betweene the verbe Thaanninu, and the other verbe Thaamenu, which are of diuers coniugations. But the Prophet hath not changed the termination without cause: and it appeares by many testimonies of the holy Scriptures, that the verbe Aman, in the coniugation of Niphal, is taken for to stand, or continue fast in his degree. I thinke then that this is as much as if he had said, Beholde your onely stay; waite quietly without being vexed in your selues for that which the Lord hath promised, to wit, deliuerance: if you waite not for it, what remaines, but that you perish? The particle ci signifies as much (it being also vsually so taken in many other places) as surely. He affirms then that they cannot stand, vnlesse they belecue this promise: yea, his words sound somewhat more bitingly; namely, that although they refused to giue credit vnto it, and should endeavour to the vttermost to ouerthrow the stedfastnesse thereof; yet would God for his part continue still to bee firme and sure: as also, that themselues could not stand, vnlesse they rested vpon the promise here offered them. Whence we haue to gather a generall doctrine: to wit, that our destruction then approacheth, when we shall depart frō the word of God; howsoeuer we imagine our selues to be well and sufficiently grounded. For our saluation is inclosed in the word of God: and when that is reiected, God iustly auengeth the wrong that is done to him therein: for hee was neere to haue sustained men by his power, if they had not voluntarily plunged themselues headlong into destruction: we must rest confidently then vpon the promises of God, or else it is in vaine to looke for saluation.

Verf. 10. And the Lord spake againe vnto Ahaz, saying:

BECAUSE the Lord knew very well that King Ahaz was so wicked, as he would not rest vpon his promise; he therefore sent Isaiah to confirme him by adding a signe. For when God sees that his promises suffice vs not, hee addes fit and conuenient signes according to our weaknesse: to the end wee should not onely heare him speake; but that also in seeing his hand reached forth vnto vs, we might be further confirmed by euident testimonies. Whereupon we ought diligently to note the vse of signes; namely, to what end God shewes miracles: to wit, that we might bee confirmed by them in the certaintie of the word. For when we see his power, if we make scruple to beleue his word, hee corrects our doubting, by making vs see euen the thing it selfe: and miracles being added to the word, doe become seales thereof.

Verf. 11. Aske a signe for thee of the Lord thy God, aske it either in the depth beneath, or in the height aboue.

UNDERSTAND these words hie, or low, simple. He puts it to his choyce to choose a miracle, whether he aske it in heauen, or in earth. It may be this word in the depth, hath some greater vehemencie in this place, as if he should say, Take thy choise, God will shew thee by and by that his dominion is farre aboue boue all the world; yea, that it reacheth euen to the bottome of all depths, ſo as at his will and pleaſure he can raiſe the dead out of their graues. See here then a ſingular goodnes of God towards the King, and towards the people, that not only patientlie beares with their diſtruſt for a time, but thus graciouslie ſubmits himſelfe ſo far, as to be readie to giue them euen ſuch a ſigne as they themſelues would deſire for a pledge of his power. Indeed he had not ſo much regard herein to the wicked alone, as rather to provide for the weak which had ſome ſeed of godlines in them, to the end they might be the more aſſured that Iſaiah ſpake not at adventure, ſeeing he could ſo readily ſhew a ſigne of the power of God for a confirmation of his ſpeech. The ſame goodnes of God is now diſplayed towards ſuch as he beares ſo much withall, although he haue iuſt occaſion to be angrie with them. For how great iniurie do they to him when they doubt of his truth? What is left to God, I pray you, when he is diſpoiled of that? Now although wee doubt, yet he is not only contented to pardon it, but alſo to vnderprop our diſtruſt, not with words only, but which is more, with miracles; and preſents them not only to the faithfull, but euen to the vnfaithfull likewiſe, of which wee may take a view in this king. Now if he be ſo gentle to ſtrangers, what ſhall we thinke he will be to his owne houſhold ſeruants which wait vpon him?

Verſ. 12. But Abaz ſaid, I will not aſke, neither will I tempt ſhe Lord.

HE vnder a faire pretence refuseth the ſigne which the Lord offered him, ſaying, that he would not tempt him: for he ſeemes as if he beleeued the words of the Prophet, demanding nothing elſe but the word. And truly as impietie is deteſtable before God, ſo doubtleſſe he greatly priſeth faith. Wherefore it ſhould ſeeme that he who reſts vpon the only word of God, deſpiſing all things elſe, is worthe of great praiſe, becauſe there is no greater perfection then to ſubmit our ſelues to God. But wil ſome ſay, Do we tempt God when we receiue that which he offereth? Certainly no. Abaz lied then when he refuseth the ſigne which was offered him, vnder pretence of not tempting God, for there is nothing better or more excellent, then to obey God. It is a great vertue in deed to aſke nothing but the word; but if God be pleaſed to adde ſomewhat more vnto it, it is then no vertue but a vice to reiect ſuch an help as a thing ſuperfluous. Yea, there is great iniurie offered vnto God in deſpiſing his liberalitie; as if that which he doth for our ſakes were vnprofitable, or as if he were ignorant what things were good and neceſſarie for vs. Wee know that faith receiues her chiefe praiſe, becauſe the holds her ſelfe in obedience: but when we will be wiſe in our owne conceits, and deſpiſe the leaſt thing which is of God, we are abominable before him, what pretence ſocuer we make before men. We muſt ſo ioyne faith to the word then, that we deſpiſe not the helps which he offereth and giueth vs for the ſtrengthening of our faith.

As for example, the Lord in the Goſpell offereth vs all things neceſſarie for our ſaluation: for ſeeing by it we be ioyned to Chriſt, the ſumme of all good things is contained in it. But to what end ſerueth Baptiſme and the holy Supper then; ſhould we eſteeme them as things ſuperfluous? No ſurely, becauſe whoſo without flattering of himſelfe ſhall take knowledge of his infirmities, which all from the leaſt to the greateſt ought to feeble, ſuch an one will be willing to ſtrengthen his faith by theſe helps. True it is we ought to mourne and weepe that the holy truth of God (which can not lie) ſhould haue need of any prop for the infirmities ſake of our fleſh. But in regard we can not caſt off this corruption from vs at the firſt choop, whoſeuer according to his abilitie ſhall adde faith to the word, he ſhall forthwith render perfect obedience to God. Let vs learne then to embrace the ſignes with the word, ſeeing it is not in the power of man to ſeparate them.

Now in that Abaz refuseth the ſigne which was offered him, he therein ſhewed his rebellion & vnthankfulnes; for he deſpiſeth that which God had preſented him for his exceeding profit. Heereby alſo it appeares after what maner we ought to require ſignes, to wit, when they are offered vs of God: he then which refuseth them, muſt needs reiect the grace of God therewithall. Some franticke ones there are at this day who make no reckning of Baptiſme, nor of the Lords Supper, thinking them abees for little children: which yet they can not do, but they muſt therewithall reiect the whole Goſpell: for thoſe things muſt not be ſeparate which God hath ioyned together. But ſome wil aſke notwithstanding, whether it be not lawfull to aſke ſome ſignes of God, for we haue an example thereof in Gedeon, who deſired that his vocation might bee confirmed with ſome ſigne: the Lord granted his requiſt, and diſliked not ſuch a deſire: Iudg. 6. 17. To this I anſwere, that although Gedeon had no expreſſe commandement of God to aſke a ſigne, yet notwithstanding he was ſurred vp to doe it by the holy Ghoſt, and did it not of his owne proper motion. Wherefore we muſt not take the like libertie to our ſelues by abuſing his example; eſpeciallie ſeeing the importunitie of men is ſo great, that they make no bones to aſke ſignes of God without end or meaſure. Such a boldnes therefore is to be ſuppreſſed, to the end wee may content our ſelues with thoſe which God offereth vs. Now there are two ſorts of ſignes: ſome extraordinary; which we may call ſupernaturall: as that whereof the Prophet wil ſpeake anon, and that which was giuen to Herexiah, as we ſhal ſee God willing hereafter, Iſay 38. 7. Others are ordinarie, and in daily vie, as Baptiſme, and the holy Supper, which coiteine no miracle, at the leaſt which can be ſeene to the eye, or by any other outward ſenſe. For that which the Lord miraculoſly works therein by the holy Ghoſt, can not be ſcene; but in the extraor-dinarie, the miracle is visible to the eye. Now all other signes haue the same end and vse, because that euen as Gedeon was confirmed by that maruelous signe, so also are we confirmed by Baptisme and the holy Supper, although we see no miracle before our eyes.

Verf. 13. Then he sayd, heare you now o house of Dauid, is it a small thing for you to griene men, that ye will also griene my God?

Because it was an intolerable wickednes to shut the gate against the power of God which should confirme the truth of the promise vnder colour of honestie and modestie; the Prophet is iustlie offended, and sharplie rebukes these wicked hypocrites. Now howsoever it were an honorable thing for them to be held for the race of Dauid (which had been so indeed if they had walked in y steps of Dauid) yet notwithstanding he now calles them y successors of the house of Dauid rather by way of reproach, then otherwise. And in very deed, the ingratitude was so much the more heinous, because this fauour was reiected by that house, out of which the saluation of the whole world should come. Their originall therefore from whom they had so shamefullie degenerated, was a great dishonour vnto them. And wee must obserue this order heere: for we ought not to begin with sharp reprehensions, but with doctrine, to the end men may be gentlie drawn, rather then enforced by it. When the bare & simple doctrine will not serue, then we must adde confirmations: but if they will profit by neither of these, then it is needfull to vse greater vehemencie. In this maner it is that Isaiah thundreth here, for hauing offered doctrine and signes to the king without fruit, he now vseth the last remedie, sharplie and grieuousslie chiding this obstinate man: and not him alone, but also all the house royall, which was defiled with this impietie.

Is it a small thing?] He vseth comparisons betweene God and men; not that those of whom hee speakes, to wit, the Prophets and faithfull Teachers, can in deed be separated from God, for they are nothing else but the instruments of the Lord, hauing one common cause with him, as long as they discharge their duties. And the Lord testifies of them, who so despiseth you, despiseth me: and he that heareth you, heareth me, Math. 10. 40. The Prophet then shapeth his speech according to the impietie of Ahaz and his fellowes, because they thought they had to do only with men. And no question but we may heare the like voyce which the wicked belch out euen amongst vs at this day: Are they not men that speake vnto vs: and by this meanes they thinke to make voyd the doctrine of God.

It being then an ordinarie thing amongst the prophane contentners of holie doctrine to speake thus, the Prophet acknowledgeth indeed that they were men which had this charge committed vnto them, to teach the word of God. As if he should say, be it that I am a mortall man, as you say I am, and that you haue such an opinion of the Prophets of God; yet is it a small thing for you to griene vs, but that you will also griene God himselfe. But in reiecting the signe of his admirable power which hee is ready to giue you, you reiect him. It is in vaine then for you to brag that you make no account of it, because you haue to do with men, and not with him. This then is the cause why the Prophet is so moued with anger: whence we perceiue the thing which I touched erewhile, to wit, that it is time to vse seuerer reprehensions after we haue vsed all the good meanes which God hath giuen vs, and haue omitted nothing of that which was our dutie: then we must rush vpon them with greater vehemencie, and lay open that impietie which lay hid vnder these cloakes of hypocrisie.

My God.] He said before, Aske for thee a signe of the Lord thy God, to wit, whilest his peruerstie and rebellion was hidden: now he takes it as proper to himselfe, because Ahaz and those that were with him were vnworthie of the honour of so excellent a title. He shewes then that God is of his side, and not with these hypocrites, and thus testifies what his confidence is. For he shewes with what conscience he promised deliuerance to the king, as if he should say, I came not of myselfe, but was sent of God, and haue told thee nothing but out of the mouth of my God. All Ministers should haue the same boldnes, not in appearance only, but effectuallic rooted in their hearts. The false Prophets will brag too much of this; but it is only a vaine and impudent iangling which they keepe, with a blind confidence proceeding from presumption.

Verf. 14. Therefore the Lord himselfe will giue you a signe, Behold the Virgin shall conceive and beare a sonne, and she shall call his name Immanuel.

Ahaz had already refused a signe which the Lord had offered him when the Prophet protested against his obstinacie and vthankfulness. Isaiah notwithstanding testifies that this shall not let nor hinder the Lord from giuing the Iewes the signe which he had promised and appointed. But what signe? That a Virgin should be with child. This place is obscure: but the Iewes themselves are partie the cause of it, who as much as in them is haue deprauid the true exposition by diuers cauls. For this testimonie toucheth them neere, in regard it conteines an excellent prophetic of the Messiah, who is heere called Immanuel; and therefore haue they studied by all meanes to wrest the Prophets meaning to another sense. Some of them pretend that mention is made here of king Hezekias, others of the sonne of Isaiah. Those which draw this place to Hezekias, are too shamelesse, seeing it must needs be that he was of yeeres when Jerusalem was besieged, shewing thereby that they are altogether ignorant of the historie. But behold the iust reward of the froward, namely, namely, that God ſo blinds them, that they are deprived of all iudgement. The like befalls the Papists at this day, who ostentines make themselves laughingstocks, when they are caried away with the spirit of giddines to depraue the scriptures. The pretence of those who thinke it was the sonne of Iſaiah, is altogether frivoulous, because we reade not that a deliuerer should be raised vp of the seed of Iſaiah which might deserue the title of Immanuel: for this title is so high and excellent, that it can appertaine to no man.

Others thinke, or at the least confesse (because they will not contend ouermuch with the Iewes) that the Prophet speaks of some child which should be borne then, by which Christ notwithstanding was figured darkely. But they bring no reasons of any weight, neither do they shew who this child should be, nor yet prouoe it by any testimonies. Now it is certaine (as hath been said) that this name of Immanuel can properly agree to none that is man only, and therefore we need not doubt but the Prophet speaks here of Christ. But all both Greeks and Latins which haue written vpon this text are too confident in the expounding of it: for they simple affirme, that Christ is here promised of the virgin Marye, as though there were no difficultie in this place. Now the knot which the Iewes would haue vs vntie is not easily done, to wit, that mention is made of Christ here without any cause. Thus they deale with vs, willing vs to consider well the circumstance of the place. Ierusalem was besieged, the Prophet was to giue them a signe of their deliuerance: to what purpose is the Messiah promised them now, who should be borne five hundred yeeres after? By this argument they thinke they haue woun the goie, affirming, that the promise touching Christ could stand. Ahaz in no respect for assuring him of the deliuerance of Ierusalem. And here they cue victorie, chiefly indeed because none haue answered them. And therefore I said that the expositors hitherto haue been too confident in this respect, for it is not a thing of small importance to shew the cause why mention is made here of the redeemer. Let vs see then how we may resolve it.

King Ahaz refusing the signe which was offered him of God, is brought at the last by the Prophet to the foundation of the covenant, which euen the most wicked durst not reiect. The Messiah must be borne, and all looked for him, because the saluation of all the people depended vpon him. The Prophet then hauing rebuked the king, proceeds with him againe in this manner, Thou wouldest faine ouerthrow the decree of God in reiecting his promise; but this decree notwithstanding shall remaine inuiolable: thy disloyaltie and ingratitude shall not hinder God from being the deliuerer of his people, because, at the last he will raise vp his anointed. And for the more full declaration of these things, we must obserue the custome of the Prophets, who in confirming particular promises, do lay this foundation, to wit, that God will send the Redeemer. By this general prophecie Lord euery where confirms that which he speciallie promiseth to his people. And questionlesse it must needs be that he which lookes for help and succor from God, must therewithall bee also perswaded of his fatherly loue. But how should he be fauorable without Christ, in whom he hath freely adopted vs for his chosen, and alwaies receiued vs vnto mercie? According to which S. Paul saith, That in Christ all the promises of God are yea and Amen, 2. Cor. 1. 20. As oft then as God sent any succor to his people in old times, he by and by reconciled them to himselfe in Christ. And therefore when hee threatens famine, pestilence, or sword, he sets the Messiah before their eyes to giue them hope of deliuerance. Seeing this is so apparat, the Iewes haue no cause to storne here as if the Prophet should speake without cause of a thing: so farre remote. For wherevpon did the deliuerance of Ierusalem depend? was it not vpon the manifestation of Christ? vpon which foundation the saluation of the Church hath euermore been builded and vpheld.

Iſaiah then speaks properly, saying, Thou receiust not the promises of God; but yet will he fulfill them: yea, he will send his Christ, for whose sake it is his pleasure to preserve this Citie: and howsoeuer thou beest vnworthie of it, yet God will haue regard of his owne glorie. King Ahaz then is shut out from the signe which he had before reiected, and is deprived of the benefit of which he made himselfe vnworthie: yet is the inuincible promise of God offered againe vnto him, which is sufficientlie shewed by the particle Laken which signifies Therefore, as if he should say, Because thou reiectest this particular signe which God offered thee; the same God which was so liberall as to offer thee a signe freely, will not cease to giue it, although it be irksome and cumbersome to thee. But where as I haue said, that the effect of this promise is made euen to Ahaz, my meaning is not as if God did therein comprehend him within the number of his chosen, for whose saluation God had ordeined his Sonne: but as in respect that the word was directed to the whole bodie of the people. For they which expound the word Laken, which signifies your sonnes, is constrained. Moreover, the Prophet leaues this prophane king in regard of the accomplishment of the promise, and hath respect to the people who were adopted of God. He will giue it you then, not to thee, o cursed king, nor to thy companions, but to you whom he hath adopted. For the covenant which God had made with Abraham remaineth sure and vnmoueable. And the Lord hath alwaies had a remnant to whom the fruits of it do appertain, although hypocrites rule and beare sway ouer the people who are partakers thereof. So then there is no inconuenience to propound this promise to the visible Church, and to set it in full view before their eyes.

Behold a virgin.] The word behold hath great weight, and it is put to set forth the greatness of the matter. And so is the Scripture wont to speake of excellent and memorable things; to, the ead mens minds may be lifted vp about all earthlie things. The Prophet commands then y^e those which heare him should be attentive, and consider this extraordinarie worke of God; as if he should say, Be not suggish, but wey this great grace of God, which you bought cherefullie to receiue; but it is hidden from you, because of your dulnes. Now although the word Alma which signifies virgin, be deriued from Alam, which signifies to hide, because shamefast and modest virgins presse not into publike meetings:

and although the Iewes contend very much about this word, denying that it is taken for virgin, because Solomon vseli it for a yong maid which is beloued; we need not stand long in deciding this question. Let vs grant them that Alma signifies a yong Dansell betrothed, and that this word is to be referred rather to the age as they will haue it (which the scripture notwithstanding vseli often when it speakes of a virgin) the thing it selfe sufficiencie refutes all their slanders. For what matter of admiration had the Prophet spoken of, if he had said, that a maid should conceiue by the companie of man? Truly it had been a ridiculous thing to set this forth for a matter of wonder or miracle. But put the case it should be spok^e of a woman which should conceiue by the helpe of man, yet all may see it to be a fond and senselesse thing, that the Prophet speaking to the Iewes of a new and extraordinarie matter, should adde thac a betrothed maid should conceiue. It appeares sufficientlie then that he speakes of a virgin which should conceiue by the power of the holy Ghost, and not according to the common order of nature. And this is that mysterie which S. Paul so lighlie magnifies, to wit, that God was manifested in the flesh,
1. Tim. 3. 16.

And she shall call.] The verbe is of the feminine gender among the Hebrues. For I know not whence they haue taken it which reade in the masculin, seeing the copies which we use differ not one from another in this respect: so that being referred to the mother;
it is certaine that some extraordinarie thing is expressed. We know that the charge is alwaies giuen to the father to impose the name vpon the child, in regard it is a signe of that authoritie and power which fathers haue ouer their children; neither belongs it to the women. But here it is transferred to the mother. Whence it follows then that he is so conceiued of his mother that he had no father on earth, for otherwise the Prophet should peruert the common vse of the Scripture, which attributes this office to me only.
Although it is to be noted, that this name was not imposed vpo Christ by the wil of his mother, neither had there been any weight therein; but the Prophet means that the virgin shall be as it were the Herault which shall publish this name, because there should be no earthlie father to performe this office.

Besides, this name was attributed to Iesus Christ euen in regard of the effect, because the only sonne of God clothed himselfe with our flesh, and vnited himselfe vnto vs in taking one selfesame nature with vs. He is called then God with vs, or conioined with vs, which can not agree to the man that is not God; The Iewes in their cauilings say, that this name was imposed vpon Herckias, because God deliuered his people by his hand.

He (say they) who is Gods minister, represents his person. But neither Moses nor Ioshua, which deliuered the people, were so called:
it followes then that this name Immanuel, is preferred farre before that of Moses, Ioshua, or any other; for by this name he sumntos all those that either were before, or shall be after him: it being a testimonie of an high and excellent dignitie and authoritie wherewith hee is adorned about all creatures.
Wherefore it appeares that not only the ver-tue of God is heere set forth vnto vs as it was wont to be by such ministers, but the vnion of the person, in which Christ appeared God and man together. Whence we still perceiue, that Isaiah telles vs no common matter, but shewes an incomparable secret, which the Iewes labour with tooth and naile to obscure and darken.

*Verf. 15. Butter and hony shall be eate, till he haue knowledge to refuse the euill,
and to choofe the good.*

Here the Prophet confirms the true hu-manitie of Christ; for it was a thing altogether incredible, that he which was God, should be borne of a virgin. So strange a thing agreed nothing at all to humane reason. To the end we should not thinke then that hee imagineth some ghost, hee declares the signes of this humanitie, by which he shewes that Christ shall appeare in the very true nature or flesh of men, to wit, because he shall be nourished after the same manner that other little children be. Now the Iewes had another maner of nourishing their children then we haue, for they vsed hony, which we commonlie vse not, and they retaine this fashion among them yet to this day, so as they cause the Infant new borne to taste of butter and hony before they giue it suck.

Till he know.] That is to say, till he be come to those yeeres wherein he can discern euill from good, and as we commonlie say, till he be of discretion: for the letter Lamed, signifies the time and terme, namely, how long he shall be nourished after the maner of children: and this serues to proue his humane nature: so much the more. By knowledge hee meanes that vnderstanding and iudgement which comes after Infancie is past. Whereby we see how farre it pleased the sonne of God to abase himselfe for our sakes; that he would not only be fed with ordinarie foode, but was also content to be deuiued of vnder-standing for a time, and to susteine all our infirmities according to his humane nature; for this can not appertaine to the diuine nature. Heb. 2. 15.
S. Luke speakes of this time of Christs ignorance, when he saith, he profised in wisdom, and in stature, and in fauour with God and men. Luk. 3.
35. If S. Luke had said simplic that Christ profited,

profited, one might have replied, that was in regard of men; but he expreſly addes ſayeth God. It was needfull that he ſhould be like to all other little children for a time, that hee might be deſtitute of vnderſtanding as touching his humanitie.

* Or, Truly. Verſ. 16. * For before the Child ſhall haue knowledge to eſchue the euill and to chooſe the good, the land that thou abhorreſt, ſhall be forſaken of both her kings.

Many are heere deceiued when they will conioine this preſent ſentence with the former, as if it were ſpoken of the ſame child, and to make it an expoſition of the former, as if the particle ſi were ratiouall. But if we more narrowlie wey the Propheets meaning it will ſufficiently appeare, that hauing lett the generall doctrine, from which hee had made ſome digreſſion, he now returnes to the matter againe; for hauing grounded the hope of Ieruſalams deliuerance vpon the promiſed Meſſiah, now he teacheth how it ſhall be deliuered. I expound not this verſe then of Chriſt, but of all children in generall; and herein I differ in opinion from all others which thinke it ſhould be ſpoken here of ſome certaine child. But for mine owne part I take the word Hannan generallie, to as the letter He ſhould be added for the better vnderſtanding, rather to ſhew the age, then ſome ſpeciall child, as we commonlie ſay, I be child, adding this article The, for the clearer vnderſtanding of the matter; which alſo is verſe vſuall in the Scripture. Now if the word ſhe had marked out ſome particular child, he would rather haue ſaid, this child, as in other places. Neither is it likely that this promiſe touching the ruin of the kingdomes of Syria and Samaria (which followed not long after) ſhould be deferred ſiue hundred yeeres, that is, to the coming of Chriſt: we know this were too great an abſurditie. The ſenſe then is, Before the children which ſhall be borne heere after ſhall know to diſſeue euill from good, the land which thou abhorreſt ſhall be forſaken.

By land I vnderſtand the land of Iſrael & Syria: for although they were two Countreys, yet notwithstanding they were eſteemed but one, by reaſon of y^e couenant which the two kings had made one with another. Some take the land for Iudea; but that can not agree, becauſe of the relieiue that followes. Now it is caſe to gather from the holie hiſtorie, that theſe things came ſo to paſſe according as they are heere written. For after Ahaz had called the Aſſyrians to help him, Rezin was ſlaine by them, 2. King. 16. 9. Pekah king of Iſrael died ſoone after, that is to wit, in the twelfth yeere of king Ahaz; and Holbez the ſonne of Hele reigned in his ſtead, 2. King. 17. 1. Before the children then which ſhould be borne ſoone after ſhould come to yeeres of diſcretion, both the kingdomes were deſtitute of both their kings, becauſe Rezin and Pekah died before that time. The word indeed is directed to Ahaz; and to the end he might be the more reuiued, God promiſeth him to take vengeance of his enemies; yet only to the end he might be left the more without excuſe. As touching the words, it is ſaid, that king Ahaz abhorred or deteſted the land of Syria and Iſrael, becauſe from thence he was aſſailed. God promiſeth then that theſe kings ſhall quicklie periſh. Some turne the word Mipne, becauſe; and I confeſſe it is often taken in this ſenſe: but I expound it more ſimplie heere, as if he ſhould ſay, the land ſhall be forſaken and left deſtitute of the preſence of her two kings, ſo as they ſhall appeare therein no more. And by theſe words of the Prophect it ſufficiently appeares, that theſe things are to be vnderſtood of both kingdomes.

Verſ. 17. The Lord ſhall bring vpon thee, and vpon thy people, and vpon thy fathers houſe (the dayes that haue not come from the day that Ephraim departed from Iudah) euen the king of Aſhur.

Here the Prophect on the other ſide threatens this wicked hypocrite, who ſeemed afraid (forſooth) to tempt God, and yet in the meane while ſought help from thoſe whom God had forbidden him to meddle withall. To the end then he ſhould not liſt vp his creſt too high in regard of this promiſe heere made vnto him, he denounceth his deſtruction, and teſtifies, that the help which he expected, to wit, from the Aſſyrians, ſhould be altogether for his ouerthrow. As if he ſhould ſay, I thou promiſtſt thy ſelſe wonders from the king of Aſhur, and thinkeſt that he will ſtick cloſe to thee, becauſe that (againſt the commandement of God) thou haſt made a league and peace with him; but thou ſhalt ſhortlie feele what commoditie will then redound vnto thee by tempting of the Lord. Thou mighteſt haue reſted quietlie at home, and ſo would God haue been mercifull vnto thee; but thou loudeſt rather to haue help of Aſhur: well, thou ſhalt learne by experience, that their crueltie ſhall farre exceede the crueltie of all other enemies. This ſpeech of the Prophect then ſutes very well with the former; for he preſſeth the diſloyaltie and vnthankfulnes of the king the more neere, who in relieuing both the word of God and the ſigne, had made himſelſe vtterlie vnworthie of any promiſe at all. Alſo becauſe that as ſoone as hypocrites haue eſcaped any feare or danger they turne by and by to their old bias againe, he affirms that the Iewes can by no meanes eſcape but they muſt be chaſtiſed; according as they had well deſerued. For this cauſe he ſaith expreſly, that the houſe of Dauid (which by a ſpeciall priuiledge ought to be exempted) ſhall be wrapped euen vnder the like calamities. For God ſo moderates his iudgemēt, that whileſt he ſpares his Church and prouides for the ſafetie thereof, he yet in the end cauſeth the wicked (who are mingled with the good) to feele the rigor of his vengeance.

From the day that Ephraim.] The Scripture vſeth this phraſe of ſpeech when it notes out any any Speciall calamitie. The Iewes could no way be more deepe wounded, then to see the kingdome not only miserable wasted, but also the bodie of this people to be rent and torne in peeces; the ten Tribes being led away captiues: and therefore the reuolt of Ephraim from Iudah, is a forewarning of an extreame ruine: for seeing the kingdome of Iudaes magnificence was more abased by this diuision then by any other calamitie which could haue befallne it, the Prophet saith that in this time they had not receiued a greater losse. Wee see heere (as I was about to say ere-while) how God opens a way to his mercie, by remembering the faithfull, and in chastening the hypocrites.

Wherefore we ought to consider this his admittable counsell, namely, that the Church should then remaine safe and found in the midst of the dangers of death. Who would euer haue thought that Ierusalem should haue been deliuered from the great armie of these two kings? And that the kingdome of Syria then in her flourishing estate should afterwards be brought so soone to nought? Or that the destruction of Samaria should immediatly approach? And in the meane while who would haue imagined that Assyrians, vpon whom the Iewes reposed themselves, should be more hurtfull vnto them then euer the Syrians or Israelites were? The Lord did all this for the conseruation of his Church, so as yet notwithstanding hee tooke vengeance vpon the impietie of king Ahaz.

Verf. 18. And in that day shall the Lord bisse for the Flie that is at the vttermoſt part of the flood of Egypt, and for the Bee which is in the land of Aſhur.

BECAUSE the Iewes imagined to hold the Assyrians at their deuotion in regard of the couenant, the Prophet deriding such a follie, declares, that the Assyrians shall be readie, as soone as God shall but make a signe, and shall driue them whither soeuer he thinketh good. This word bisse, is put in stead of commandement, as hauing respect to the nature of the kingdomes wherof he makes mention: for Egypt abounded with Flies, in regard that the region is hot and myric. There must needs breed many Flies then where the ayre is hote and moyst. Assyria, that had honey-bees in great plentie. But howsoeuer hee declares that hee will bring the enemies with his whistle, alluding to the nature of the Flies, and of the Bees: his meaning is, that he wil make them come easilie, as if he should say, There shall be no great need of much traualle, for they shall ſtie as it were hither as soone as I shall haue giuen them a ſigne. And thus he shewes how readilie his counsell and secret instruct shall haue force and efficacie, when with his only whistle he shall constreine the most warlike people to execute his commandement.

Verf. 19. And they shall come and shall light all in desolat valleys, and in the holes of the rocks, and vpon all thornie places, and vpon all bushie places.

HE follows the Similitude; for Bees vsually desire to make their nests in caues or valleies, bushes, or such like places: as if he should say, There shall not be so much as the least corner which the enemies shall not fill to make their nests therein. Wee neede not trouble our selues much in searching out the reason why he rather speakes of thornes and bushes then of other things, seeing the maner of speech is figuratiue; & yet notwithstanding I make no question but his meaning is to shew, that there should be no place of refuge at all left vnto them, whether they sought to dig caues, or to hide them in the desolate valleys, because the enemies will fill vp all the roomes in the countrie. From hence we gather once againe, as we haue already noted, that nothing comes to passe rashly, or by chance, but that all things are gouerned by the immediate hand of God. Secondly, that albeit the wicked bestir them, and are caried with a blind furie to do mischief, yet God notwithstanding holds them short, in making them serue to his glorie. Therefore when we see the wicked set all at fixe and seuen, let vs not thinke that God hath giuen them libertie to wander at their pleasure, but let vs be most assured that he wil calme and moderate their restless boilings. This may exceedinglie comfort vs amidst these tourmoiles wherein Christendome is now enwrapped, and by the violence thereof so tossed vp and downe, so that all things seeme to fall on heapes: for wee must remember that the Lord hath a secret reine or bridle in his hand wherewith he keepes in these furious beasts, lest they should swallow vp all, by ranging whithersoever their rage carries them: and that they can not passe the bounds which he hath assigned them.

Verf. 20. In that day shall the Lord ſhauẽ with a razor that is hired, euen by them beyond the riuer, by the king of Aſſur, the head, and the haire of the feete, and it shall consume the feete.

NOW he vseth another Similitude, and compares the enemies by whom God had determined to afflict Iudah (in his time) to a razor, wherewith the beard and haire are shaued, and wherewith they vse to take away the like excrements. The particle Beth is superfluous heere, and signifies only (after the maner of the Hebrues) that an instrument is spoken of, and therefore I haue simple translated, shall haue with a razor. Now the Prophet himselfe will by and by expresse his owne meaning, to wit, that the Assyrians shall be as a razor in the hand of God, and that they shall come from ſarre. For which cause he addes, that they are beyond the flood: giuing thereby to vnderstand, that the riuer Ephraites shall not hinder them from passing ouer to fulfill the commandements of God. Moreover he saith, that not some portion of this people people only shall of his owne proper motion rush into an other mans land, tracing vp and downe without any certaine direction; but that the King himselfe shall be their leader, to the end that Iudea may be destroyed by the people and King together, that so they may fall, and be ouerwhelmed vnder so heauie a burthen.

It is not without cause that he saith, this Razor shall be hired: for hereby he sets forth the crueltie of the warre which the Assyrians should make: as if one hauing hired an hoise or a sword, should boldlie serue his turne therewith, making no more spare of it then if it were his owne. For we know that such as take things vpon hire, will haue the seruice of the thing; according to the price they hired it for. So the Lord tels them that he will not spare this razor, although the edge of it should be blunted; which is as much to say, as he will send the Assyrians with a boisterous and furious rage. Now if the Lord auenged himselfe so sharpe for the causes heterotore mentioned by the Prophet, let vs feare lest we feele the like punishment; or rather let vs tremble at the razor wherewith the Lord hath begun to shave vs alreadie.

The head, and the haire of the feet] By the haire of the feet, hee means the lower parts: for whatsoever is below the bellie is attributed to the feete by the figure Synecdoche, by reason whereof the Hebrues call vrin, the water of the feet; and covering of the feet, for easing the bellie. His meaning is then that the whole bodie shall be shauen all ouer, and the beard also. Now if wee take away these figures of each, and would haue a more plaine and simple sense of these words, he signifies an vtter and vniuersall ruin: as if he should say, This razor shall descend from the crowne of the head euen to the feet, and the kings and princes shall not escape this discomfiture, but they themselves shall feele the cutting of this Razor.

Verf. 21. And in the same day shall a man nourish a yong Cow, and two Sheepe.

IN these verses to the end of the Chapter the Prophet layes forth the estate of a Countrey wasted and spoiled: for his meaning is to paint out as in lively colours, and to set in full view before this people so great a calamitie, that nothing shall be discerned on which side soeuer a man turnes his eye, but the marks of an horrible waste and desolation. And whereas some thinke the Prophet pronoueth heere a mitigation of the chastisements, we shall by and by see that this suites not with the text. And although also he makes mention of a man nourishing, yet notwithstanding he speaks properlie of the richest of them: for he giues not to euery one so much, but that those who in times past had wont to nourish many Oxen and Sheepe, should now content themselves with a few. His meaning is then, that they shall all be brought to great penurie. And therefore because the Prophet in his language saith a man shall reuiue, or quicken, some thinke it is as much as if he had said, To deliuer from death: notwithstanding I haue followed that which was the most simple and approued.

Verf. 22. And for the abundance of milke that they shall giue, he shall eate butter; for honey and butter shall euery one eate, which is left within the land.

SOME expound, that they shall hardlie draw so much nourishment from one Cow as will be sufficient to serue for one familie: for those who bring vp Cattell, luc not only of the Milke, but make Cheesse also, and reserue Butter to sell. When he saith then that of all the abundance which shall be left, one shall not be able to get so much as will be necessary to suffice the familie; he thereby notes out (as these expositors affirme) necessitie and want. Others thinke that he here promisseth increase, so that although they should haue but few Sheepe and Kine, yet notwithstanding they should haue enough to maintaine themselves. But the third exposition agrees best, for it seemes the Prophet meant to say, The number of men shall be so small, that they shall not need much milke to suffice them all. Which then hath declared in the former verse that Iudea should be so pilled, that there should not remaine many beasts: but now he addes, that there shall be yet a lesse number of men, because a litt'le milke shall suffice for foode to the inhabitants that remaine in the land. This exposition I rather receiue, because a promise should not well sute to this place. And as for the first sense, it is vnapt, because he speaks not only of those that haue Cattell, but of all the inhabitants; for he expressly saith, whosoever shall be left: by the which speech, he signifies yet againe a small number. His meaning then (in a word) is to say, that the land shall be to ruinate and dispeopled, that they shall not neede much milke nor butter, because few men shall be left in this desolation.

Verf. 23. *And at the same day euery place wherein shall be a thousand vines, shall be a thousand pieces of siluer: * so it shall be for the briars and for the thornes..*

*Or, Because

I Will not stand to refute the opinioe of those who thinke that israhel here comforts the faithfull, because the veine of the text doth sufficientlie shew the contrarie, so as the very words cleerely shew, that the Prophet goes on still to describe the waste and ruin of the land. Others thinke this should be the sense, namely, that there should be bushes and thornes in the places where the vines were, which were sold for a thousand pieces of siluer. But we see that this should be too base a price, if the Prophet should speake of all the land in general: For what thing were it to prize a vine at a sickle, which is the most precious possession that one can haue? That were all one as if it should be giuen for a piece of bread, as we commonlie say when a thing is sold extremely vnder-foote. There is no field so barren and vnfriitfull that is not worth more, if so bee a man bee able to husband it, as they doe when a land is well peopled. Hee addes the reason of the changing of the price, whereby it appears that he speaks of a wast and destruction. There shall be no labourers, saith he, because of the bushes and briars, which we see comes to passe in an extreme calamitie. I thinke also that the letter Lamed, which some haue expressed by the word To, signifies Be-cause. For the enemies hauing pilld and made hauock of all, and no husbandmen nor vinedressers being left, the best husbanded places must of necessitie be couered with thick bushes and brambles. His meaning is therefore, that there shall be so few inhabitants, that scarcely one should be found that would bestow the least piece of siluer to buy the fairest Lordships.

Verf. 24. With arrowes and With bowes shall one come thither, because all the Land shall be briars and thornes.

THe verb is in the singular number, yet notwithstanding we may expound it by the plural, to wit, that the Archers shall goe through Iudea. Some thinke Isaiah speaks of Bowes and arrowes, because the enemies should be so fearefull to behold, that no man should dare to approach neere his possessions without armour. But I thinke it more probable that men shall go a hunting where the land was well manured and dressed before, because there should be caues and denues for wilde beasts. Now this is a miserable change, to wit, when fields which in times past were husbanded and fruitfull, are conuerted into forests and bushes. And therefore by bowes and arrowes in this place I vnderstand hunting; and the sense is, that the Farmers shall not come neere their Vineyards, but the hunters: and that they shall not meddle either with planting or pruning of vines there, but others shall hunt wilde beasts in those places. So that for conclusion, he notes nothing else but an utter desolation, by means whereof the whole land shall be turned topse turue.

Verf. 25. But on all the mountaines which shall be digged with the mattocke, there shall not come thither the feare of briars and thornes: but they shall be for the sending out of Bullocks, and for the treading of sheepe.

* Or, there shall be no feare.

IT seemes heere that the Prophet contradicts himselfe, for hitherto he hath spoken of the consumption of the land: but now when he saith that oxen shall feed in the places where were thornes and briars, he describes as it were a new estate. This hath caused some to applie these words to the consolation of the people. But the Prophets meaning is nothing lesse, because hee declares that the mountaines which were farre remote from the places where men dwelt, and whither men went with great difficultie, should be now fit pasture for Cattell by reason of the multitude of folks which should retire thither. And because euery one would flee to the mountaines, which in former times were desert and inaccessible, they should not feare to be scratched with thornes, because there should bee inhabitants enow to suppress them. Now this is a miserable thing, when men can no otherwise escape from death, but by running amongst the thornes and brambles. His meaning is then, that men shall seeke shelter and habitation in the mountaines, which were desert and vnhabited: because there shall be no roome left for safetie in the plaine. And thus hee portraites out the rounous and pitifull estate of all the countrie; namely, such an horrible destruction, that the face of the land shall be vterly changed from that it was before. When the Prophet foretold these things to King Ahaz, no doubt but hee contemned them. For this wicked King resting vpon his forces, and vpon the league with the Affyrians; staied himselfe hereupon, and seded himselfe againe vpon his lees: as soone as the siege (which threatned the Citie) was raised and gone. But Isaiah notwithstanding ceased not constantly to discharge his dutie, shewing still, that there was no succour but in God; testifying to this wicked hypocrite also, that his ruine would come from that place whence he looked for safetie and deliuerance.

THE VIII. CHAPTER.

Verf. 1. Moreover, the Lord said vnto mee; Take thee a great roll, and write in it with a mans pen; Make speeche to the spoile, haste to the pray.

* Or, a common stile.

His Prophecie contains no new matter: but is a confirmation of the former; wherein Isaiah had prophesied the destruction of two kingdoms of Israel and Syria, which was at hand.

Hee had also foretold, that both Countries should lose their Kings, before the children which should be borne soone after, were able to discern betweene good and euill; that is to say, before they should bee of discretion. But because the wicked take no warning by any threatnings, it was needfull that this prophecie should bee repeated, and confirmed by some signe: First, that he might awaken the people; God commandeth this Prophecie to bee published and written, to the end all might take knowledge of it. We haue ſaid heretofore, that the Prophets were wont after they had receiued commandement to publiſh any thing to the people, to comprehend the ſumme of it in few wordes; and then fixed it to the gates of the Temple: as we may gather from the booke of Itabacut; wherewith if wee conſerre this place, the thing ſhall bee manifeſt enough. But here is a more particular thing: for hee not onely commands the prophetic to bee written; but hee requireth a great and large roll, to the end it might bee read a ſarre oft. For by how much ſmaller the letter is, ſo much the more difficult and obſcure it is to read. Heereunto appertaines that which immediately followeth, touching the Stile of a common perſon. The word Enoſh. is taken for a man of any trade; to the end all, yea the ſimpleſt ideots might read that which ſhould be written.

Make haſte.] This ſhort and cutted manner of ſpeech hath much more vehemencie in it, then if hee had ſtood to dilate the matter at large. For euery one was able to carry home foure words to his houſe; and in them to take knowledge of the ſwiftnesse of Gods wrath; as alſo to bee the more neere, and in good earneſt touched with his iudgement, no leſſe then if hee had felt it with his finger. Laſtly, the Lord would not ſtrive with words, becauſe it was now no time to plead; but rather to repreſent the matter by an outward ſigne. By an example then he ſets the vengeance of God before their eyes; whereof the Prophets had ſo often told them in vaine before: to the end it ſhould pierce the more deeply into their hearts, and ſhould remaine engrauen in their memories. So that as oft as one ſhould but mention theſe words, haſte to the ſpoile; they ſhould alſo call to mind the deſtruction of Iſrael and Syria, and be further certified of it. Now becauſe the Prophet prophecied in the former chapter of the coming of Chriſt; many vnaptly expound this of him: to wit, that being furniſhed with an heavenly vertue, hee came to diſpoile the prince of the world; and therefore haſtneſſe to the pray. Although this hath ſome ſhew of wit, yet it can by no means agree to the text. For the true and plaine ſenſe declares, that the Prophet ſaith not any new thing, but conſirmeth that which hee had ſaide before.

Verſ. 2. Then I tooke vnto mee faithfull witneſſes, to record, Uriah the Prieſt, and Zechariah the ſonne of Ieberechiah.

THe Prophet vſeth a nounce and verbe deſcended from one roote, and the meeting together of the words hath elegancie: as if we ſhould ſay, I haue witneſſed my ſelfe with witneſſes. Now becauſe this matter was of great importance, hee tooke witneſſes with him, as men were wont to doe in things of conſequence. Hee calles them faithfull; that is to ſay, true and meete: and yet notwithstanding one of them was a curſed and wicked apoſtata, who to flatter the King, built an Altar like vnto that at Damaſcus; and openly conſented to an horrible impietie and abomination. I know there are others who are indeede of a contrary opinion: but if wee conſider the circumſtance of the time well, we ſhall finde it to be euery that ſame Uriah, who like a trencher-chaplain, conformed himſelfe to the yngodly humour of the King; as the holy hiſtorie witneſſeth. Whereas they thinke it was ſome other, becauſe Iſaiab calleth him faithfull: it is too weake a reaſon; for the Prophet did not ſo much looke to the man, as to the office which he exerciſed; in regard whereof, hee was ſufficient to be a witneſſe in this caſe. He meant not to ſay then, that Uriah was a good man; but that his perſon was not to be reſpected, in regard of the authoritie of his office; but was in reſpect thereof, a witneſſe free from all exception, as they ſay. Moreouer, I thinke this prophecie was fixed to the doores of the Temple, in the preſence of Uriah and Zechariah, who were taken to be witneſſes to it. For hee ſpeakes of no viſion, but of a commandement of God, which liue indeede did and performed: to the end theſe words might be as a common prouerbe in the mouthes of all the people.

Verſ. 3. After I came vnto the Propheſſe, which conceived and bare a ſon: Then ſaid the Lord to me; call his name Maher-ſhalal-chaſh-baz.

I Make no queſtion but this which folowes happened to the Prophet in viſion, to ſcale vp the former prophecie. It ſeemed then to Iſaiab, that he had the company of his wife; and that by this copulation he begat a ſon vpon whom this name is impoſed. There were no abſurditie if we ſhould confeſſe that the Prophet had the company of his wife; and that hee did indeede beget a child, to whom this name was giuen: neither would I much contend with him which ſhould be of ſuch an opinion. But becauſe it is not very likely that this name was impoſed vpon any man, there being no teſtimony of it: I rather incline this way; to thinke that this viſio was offered to the Prophet, as a confirmation of the former prophecie. Hee calles not his wife a Propheſſe, as the wiues of Kings are called Queenes, by way of honour: but becauſe ſhe was a publike perſon in this viſion. Iſaiab therefore out of doubt, doth of ſet purpoſe turne away the mindes of the faithfull from thought of any carnall copulation; that they might ſo much the more attend to this ſacred myſtery. For howſoeuer it be a thing lawfull in it ſelfe to beget children in marriage; yet notwithstanding nature it ſelfe teacheth, that the act is a matter of bluſhing, or ſhamefaſtnes, which ſeeketh to do it ſecretly.

Verſ. 4. For before the child ſhall haue knowledge to crie My father, and my mother, hee ſhall take away the riches of Da- m. sciz, and the spoile of Samaria, before the King of Assur.

Here follows both the exposition of the obscure words of Isaiah; as also of the vision aduoyced vnto it. For seeing God meant to speake briefly, it was needefull it should bee intelligible. I referre not the word child to the sonne of the Prophet, but to all those that should bee borne soone after; as I haue said heretofore. He threatens then, that the two kings of Israel and Samaria, shall be cut off before those children shall be of any growth. In the presence of the King of Assur. That is to say, according to his desire and will. Wherein it may bee hee meetes with the ancient manner of those which triumphed: before whose chariot they vsed to carrie the spoils of the enemies. Thus the spoiles of Damascus and Samaria shall bee borne before the King of Assur. From hence it appears yet better that the Prophet meant nothing else but to foretell the ruine of the kingdom of Israel and Syria: First, for the comfort of the faithfull, and secondly, to scorne at the foolish feare of this cursed King, which could not endure that the Lord should succour him. He had not onely reiect-ed the promises; but also the signe which was offered him. This is the cause why the Pro-phet doth so much the more reprocue the impiety of this king, and of all the people: as if he should say, I see that thou art resolu-ed to beleene nothing: but yet is the Lord determined to assist his chosen. For thou shalt shortly see sudden and vnexpected changes, by which God will deliuer his people. And yet it is certaine that these things are not directed so much to the King, as to the faithfull. Whence we are to note, that the seruants of God doe not alwaies speake so to the hearers doe by and by beleene their sayings. Isaiah speaks heere to the wicked, whom he professed nothing at all. Why then doth he direct his speech vnto them? To the end hee may conuince them more and more, and to lay their infidelity in their dishonour: as also that the goodnes of God might be the better knowne. For who would not haue thought but such an impiety would haue shut vp the gate of all Gods mercies from them? yet notwithstanding the Lord by his goodnes ouercomes both the peruersitie of the King, and of the people. Now yee see the Prophets drift, to wit, that whilest he reprocheth the wicked with their pride, he shewes them notwithstanding that God is alwaies like himselfe.

Verf. 5. And the Lord spake yet againe vnto me, saying,

6. Because this people hath refused the waters of Shiloh which runne softly, and reioyce with Rezin, and the sonne of Remaliah.

TO the end Achaz should not waxe secure, nor rest himselfe vpon a vaine hope, the Prophet suddenly breakes off his speech touching the common saluation of the faithfull, and doth againe set the threatenings and chastisements before the vnbeleeuers. Some thinke that hee speakes here against those which onely sought after newes: as indeede it comes to passe, that the common people for the most part are not contented with the present state, but desire to heare of a new King. And that often happens to manie, which wee see befall those that are sicke; namely, they hope to be better, when they haue changed their place. The wills of men are so peruerse, that when things fall not out as they would, they looke after nothing but a change in the state, greedily pursuing after tidings therof, thinking to receiue some reliefe by it. But I thinke the meaning of the Prophet is to be stretched further, and is not to be referred only to those who asked after a change: but that it is rather a generall speech comprehending all estates: for impietie, and the contempt of God had almost ouergrowne the whole land.

He speaks not then of any small number or of a particular faction; but of the whole assemblie of the people: and seeing they were almost all of them degenerate, he very iustlie reprooues them all. I confesse indeede that he excepts a little remnant of the faithfull, of whom he will make mention by and by. Now the offence is, that the people distrusting their owne weaknesse, desired greater riches and forces. He saith then, that they despised the waters of Shiloh, because the Iewes made no reckoning thereof, and were discontented with their owne estate. He ads, that they delighted to looke to Rezin. Others translate, with Rezin; but the particle, to, expresseth their peruerse desire better. His meaning then is to say, that the Iewes seeing themselves destitute of great garisons, looked vnto others, and longed for the riches of the kingdom of Israel. For when they considered their pouertie and weak estate they trembled, and trusted not in God at all; but only in outward helps. They thought they should be in great safetie, if they could obtaine a Prince equall in power to the King of Israel. Thus they reioyced in other mens riches; and desired them, Verf. 7. Now therefore, behold the Lord bringeth upon them the waters of the riuer, mightie and great; euen the King of Assur with all his glorie, and he shall come vp upon all their Riuers, and goe ouer all their bankes.

HE speaks in the present tence, to the end all should lay it the nearer to heart. Behold, the Lord brings upon you violent waters. We must note the similitudes which the Prophet vseth: for the speech is much more elegant, then if he had spoken barely and nakedly without them: and it is as if hee had said, Because the people are not contented with their condition, but are euer lusting after the riches and wealth of another, I will shew ſhew them what it is to haue a mightie King. As for example, if ſome few people ſubiect to a poore and obſcure Prince, hauing mightie neighbours that were ſubiects to a King of great renowne ſhould ſay, Oh, what a goodly thing were it to bee the ſubiects of ſuch a puſſant King, to be vnder the government of the Emperor, or of ſ King of France, who haue an inuincible power! Should not God haue iuſt occaſion to chaſtiſe ſuch a wicked deſire? For by how much the more mightie Kings are; ſo much the more doe they oppreſſe their people: they will be vnder no controll, but will do whatſocuer they liſt: adde alſo, y they know not the meaſure of their power, but according to their ſtrength they giue themſelues licence to doe what them liketh. The Lord reprooues this vbridled deſire of the Iewes, that in diſtruſting their owne ſtrength, they looked not to the Lord, but to the riches of mightie Kings. Now this reprehension hath much more grace vnder theſe figures, then if he had ſpoken with- out them.

Silo, as S. Ierom ſaith, was a little fountaine, whente proceeded a riuer running ſoftly thorow the middeſt of Ieruſalem. And becauſe this little riuer was inſufficient to defend them, they deſired and asked after thoſe great riuers which inuironed, and greatly enriched the cities. For there is nothing which brings more renowne and riches to a countie, then theſe great nauigable riuers, by which one may fetch in and carrie out all ſorts of merchandize, the more eaſily. He compares Euphrates then, (which is y moſt renowned riuer in the Eaſt) with Shiloah; and follows the ſame ſimilitude: vnderſtanding by violent waters, the Aſſyrians, which ſhould waſte Iudeab, and ſpoile it wholly, as it were with a deluge. I wiſhew you, ſaith the Lord, what it is to wiſh for theſe mightie and violent waters.

And ſhall come vp.] This place ought to be diligently obſerued. For wee haue all of vs a diſtruſtfulneſſe naturally rooted in vs, ſo as when the helpe of man failes, wee are out of heart. Let God make what promiſe hee will, we cannot be reſolued of the truth of it: but haue our eyes fixed vpon our owne feeble- neſſe, and being beſotted, we lie like blocks in our feares. And therefore haue we neede to ſeek a remedie for this vice. Shiloah then; that is to ſay, the vocation or condition to which God hath called vs, with promiſe of bleſſing; ſhould be vnto vs a ſtrong defence, although we ſee it not before our eyes; and that we ſhould preferre the ſame our eſtate before the power of the greateſt Kings of the world. For if wee relie vpon the ſuccour of men, and place our confidence in riches and abundance of ſiluer; we muſt looke for the chaſtiſement which the Prophet threatneth in this place. The holy hiſtorie witneſſeth that theſe things came to paſſe; ſo as he which ſhall reade therein, ſhall haue no great need of an expoſition of this place. The Aſſyrians whom the Iewes called to their ſuccour, deſtroyed them; and this was a iuſt puniſhment of their diſtruſt. Wherein wee haue a faire looking glaſſe to behoold the ende of ſuch luſtfull people, who could not content themſelues with the promiſe of Gods aide and ſuccour. Let vs then looke to our ſelues, and let vs be warned by this deſtruction of the Iewes.

The Church for the moſt part is in ſuch caſe, that ſhe is alwaies deſtitute of the helpe of men, leſt whileſt we be too well ſtabliſhed in our outward eſtate, wee ſhould haue our eyes dazled with our riches and ſtrength, and ſo ſhould fall to forget God. We muſt learne to reioyce in our weakeneſſe, and to content our ſelues therewith; to the end we may depend vpon the Lord for ſuccour: ſo as the ſmall and low waters be better pleaſing vnto vs then all the great and boiſterous riuers of the Heathen: let vs not therfore enuie the great- neſſe and power of the wicked. To this purpoſe it is ſaid in the 46. Pſal. The ſtreames of the riuer ſhal reioyce y city of God; the fan- ctuary of the moſt high is in the miſt thereof, therefore it ſhall not moue: God will helpe it right early, the Heathen make a noiſe, the kingdoms ſhaked, and the earth trembled:

The Lord of hoſtes is with vs, &c. If any ſhall obiect that the helpe and ſuccour of men is not to be deſpiſed: the anſwere is very eaſie: Anſ.

Obiect.

to wit, that the Prophet condemnes not ſuch helpe here; but that curſed feare which driues vs into deſpaire: as when we are ſo affrighted, that no promiſe of God whatſo- euer can hold vs in our places. Now we muſt yeeld God this honour to content our ſelues with him alone, although all things elſe ſhould faile vs; ſeeing we are aſſured that he is alwaies ready to relieue vs. And then it is al one whether we haue outward helpe, or whether we haue them not. For if we haue them, it is in our liberty to vſe them; if wee haue them not, let vs be content: and let one God onely ſuffice vs for all neceſſities. For hee is ſufficientlie able to fulfill his promiſes of himſelfe, and needeth none of mans helpe: therefore wee may boldlie commit our ſelues ouer into his onely cuſtodie and ſafeguard.

Let this be wet obſer- ued.

The Verbe Kataph, which ſometimes ſigni- fies to paſſe; is as much in this place, as to ſpoile and cut off: as if the Prophet ſhould haue ſaid; Hee ſhall not onely ſlightly paſſe thorow Iudeab, but ſhall alſo ouer-flow it; ſo as he will drown and deſtroy it wholly. For he will ſpread himſelfe all ouer the land in all places. He addes, Verſ. 8. And ſhall breake into Iu- dath, and ſhall ouerflow and paſſe thorow, and ſhall come vp to the necke; and the ſtretching out of his wings ſhall fill the breaddth of thy land, O Immanuel.

THIS ſimilitude is taken frō a mā, who ente- ring into a riuer, goes forward by degrees til at length he come vp to the neck. So ſhall Iudab be inuironed with this boiſterous flood; to wit, with the Aſſyrian: in ſuch fort, as he ſhall waite into it vp to the necke. Now he ſpeakes this of Ieruſalem, which was the chiefe and capitall

Citie

Citie in the kingdom: for when the Assyrian arrived there, it was no hard matter to destroy all Iudah. The breads of thy Land. That is to say, ouer all the parts of it. The Prophet goes on still with the similitude of his prophesie, and shewes how great the violence of the Assyrian wil be, and he amplifies his fiercenes and turbulencie by the same similitude, to wit, of a raging streames, which hauing broken all ramparts that could be set before it, ouerflows and spreads euery way, ouercaries and beares all downe before it. For he follows his denunciation against the Iewes, as he began to do in the two former verses. And as he had threatned the Israelites and Syrians with destruction, so now he likewise threatens the Iewes with the same. For the better vnderstanding whereof, we must consider the context which Isaiah disposeth very fitly. He had directed his speech before to others, because Ahaz was vnworthie of it. The Lord shall giue you a signe, and this we haue handled in the former Chapter. He therewithall addes the meanes whereby to preserve Ierusalem, to wit, by the sodaine mutations which should happen to Israel and Syria. This was confirmed in the beginning of this Chapter as well by expresse commandement, as by vision. Now he comes to the Iewes, who should not thinke to escape without punishment; as also that they should not be too much lifted vp with the fall of their enemies: for he shewes that their reward is very neere, and that they shall be chastised for their impietic and disloyaltie, because they despised the Lord, and would not be satisfied with his promises, signes, and benefits which were offred them in all fulnes and abundance.

Immanuel. Some aske why the Prophet rather turnes his speech to Christ, then to call it Gods holy land: for no doubt but by the name of Immanuel he meanes Christ. It should seeme that this was said to expresse the indignitie of the offence so much the more: because Iudah was not only consecrated vnto God, but also had the pledge of his saluation in the person of the Mediator; and therefore should be a great indignitie vnto them to be destroyed by an Infidell king. But I thinke rather the Prophet addes this word, to giue some hope againe to the faithfull, and to comfort them in so great a calamitie, for they might haue been out of heart, seeing the countrie so cruellie wasted and spoiled. His meaning is to say then, that this destruction shall not hinder the coming of the Redeemer (of whom he had made mention before.) As if he had said, The land shall be thine, O Immanuel, thou must dwell and remaine in it. This then is adled in stead of a consolacion, giuing them to vnderstand that the land being pilled and destroyed, shall yet notwithstanding be rather Gods then mans. And this turning and applying of the speech to the second person, hath great vehemencie, because by this meanes he hath recourse to the promised redemption: to the end the Lord may moderate his anger in the midst of these horrible calamities.

Verse. 9. Gather together on heapes o ye people, and ye shall be broken in pieces. Or, peoples. ces, and bearken all yee of far countries: gird your selues, and you shall be broken in pieces: gird your selues, and you shall be broken in pieces.

The Verb Roen signifieth to bruise, or to breake, whether it descends from the word Roa, or from Raab. But because Raab signifies to conioyne or assemble, some had rather take it in this sense; which also agrees best with the argument and context of the Prophet. For whereas some translate, Breake you, to wit, either the kingdom of Iudah, or the Assyrians; it seemes too constrained, & too farre fetched. But it appeeres that ŷ Prophet describes the counsels and enterprises by which they thought to cut off the Church of God, because he by and by addes, Gird your selues. Also in the beginning of ŷ next verse, Take counsell. The word then of Asssembling, properlie agrees to this place, vnlesse any had rather take the word to Breake by a figure; to which I willingly yeeld, and so the word amounts to as much as to heape vp, or (as we commonlie say) to pack vp hard together, because things which are pressed, are also consequetlie pressed with violence and thrust together. He meanes then not only an heape, but an heape well pressed together: as if he should say, Gather your selues close together, as if you were some very thick heape. This signification as it seemes agrees very well to the circumstance of this place; and that which is added afterward tends also heereunto, Arme you, Gird your selues. But the Prophet encourageth himselfe with trust and confidence, after he had made mention of Immanuel, that is to say, God, who was to assist his people. And by the seliefame meanes conceiued a new hope against the enemies, who although they might seeme to haue obtained all their desires when they had spoiled the countrie; yet should the Lord be conqueror, and would maintaine his owne against the crueltie of their aduersaries. And thus withdrawing his mind from the contemplation of this calamitie, he turnes it to Christ, and in beholding of him, he so fortifies himselfe, that he is bold to triumph ouer his enemies, as if he had alreadie ouercome them. We are to place the Prophet then as it were in the watch-tower, from whence on the one side he beholds the difcomfure of the people, and from the other the Assyrians conquering and ouerflowing in all pride. Then being comforted by the sight and name of Christ, he forgets all his afflictions, as if he ailed nothing, and being deliuered out of all miserie, he turnes himselfe against the enemies which God should destroy soone after. And this we ought diligentlie to obserue, that hauing now to wrastle against the same temptations in these afflictions which the Church indureth, and with ŷ burthen whereof she is almost ouerwhelmed: that we forthwith cast our eies vpon Christ, by beholding of whom we may triumph ouer Satan, and all sorts of enemies.

O ye peoples,] Wherefore makes he mention of peoples, ſeeing the Aſſyrian only ſhould deſtroy the land of Iudea? I anſwere, that the Armie of the Aſſyrian was compoſed of diuers nations, for he had ſubiected the Chaldeans; together with many others: and therefore this Monarchie comprehended diuers countries, notwithstanding, he hath alſo an eye to the Iſraelites, Syrians, and Egyptians, and to all other enemies whomſoever which had ſet themſelves againſt the Church of God. Neither ſpeakes he of one plague wherewith the Church was afflicted only, but of the perpetuall combats which the choſen people ſhould ſuſtaine from time to time. For the better understanding wherof we muſt ioine the verſe following: where in the latter end it is added, becauſe the Lord is with vs. For behold the foundation of our deliuerance, to wit, God with vs. Let men conſpire, let them plot, conſult, and determine, all ſhall be in vaine, becauſe there is no counſell againſt the Lord. Let vs begin then at this foundation, if we meane to be ſtrong in deede.

But we are to examin whether it be lawfull for all to reioyce on this maner; the wicked bragge in deed that God is with them: neither make they any bones to triumph and glorie in his name, and yet is their glorie vaine and to no purpoſe. As touching the faithfull, their valiant mind is grounded vpon the word of God, and proceeds from a true faith, liuely ingrauen in our hearts: by means wherof we dare boldly triumph ouer all our aduerſaries. As alſo S. Paul teacheth, who encourageth all the faithfull by this doctrine, If God be with vs, who ſhall be againſt vs? Rom. 8. 30. Let vs then in the firſt place looke that we haue the Lord with vs; which can not be done, but we muſt embrace the promiſes by faith: which if we haue, then ſhall not our reioycing be in vaine. Whereas he ſpeakes to a nation ſo farre off, to which this voyce could not reach, the reaſon thereof is euident enough, to wit, that the faithfull might know the efficacy of the word, and might vnderſtand that the Aſſyrians with all their preparations ſhould be governed by it, although they were very farre remote: as if he ſhould ſay, It is true that you deſpiſe God, but he can eaſily keepe you back a farre off, and beate downe all your rage.

Grd you &c.] The repetition is not ſuperfluous, for it is much more hard to looke for the ſuccor of God againe after we haue once been deliuered; then to embrace the promiſe of one only deliuerance. And further, although the firſt aſſaults of the enemies do not much aſtoniſh vs, yet notwithstanding whē we ſee them obſtinate in their malice; their hardnes of heart weakens vs, of the which we haue dayly experience. For if any danger preſents it ſelfe, we can looke for ſuccor from God for a brunt, but if we fall therinto the ſecond time, we quaiſe: and ſuch is our woſull vnthankfulnes, that we can hardlie be brought to belecue that God will aſſiſt vs once more. So then, we are out of heart if happely we fall into danger oft times, thinking ſurely that God will be wearie at the laſt, if he do vs good and ſuccor vs curry day. Iſaiah therefore would prevent this weakenes of men, that when we haue been aſſailed once or twice by enemies well provided and furniſhed: yet notwithstanding to remaine couragious and inuincible ſtill. And if it fall out that being once circumvented they yet double their forces, neuer ceaſing to weary vs, yet let vs not therefore wax faint or out of heart, becauſe God is able to deſtroy and cut them off to day and to morrow, euen as oft as they imagin our ouerthrow.

And in this place alſo we are aduerted of our eſtate & condition, to the end we might learne to be alwaies vpon our watch, and readie to ſuſtaine new aſſaults: and not to thinke we are therefore diſcharged when we haue reſiſted once, becauſe Satan is neuer idle, but is euer buſie in his charge, not ceaſing day nor night to procure our ruin. He ſolicits and ſtirres vp his ſouldiers, and ſets them on fire with new luſts. But albeit we muſt neceſſitie enter into the combat often, yet let vs be aſſured to obtaine the victorie. Let vs fight then with cheerefulnes; and keepe our ſtanding firme in the battell.

Verſ. 10. *Take counſell together, yet it ſhall be brought to nought: pronounce a decree, yet it ſhall not ſtand: for God is with vs.

* Hebr. Immanuel.

HAuing ſpoken of the force of the enemies, he comes now to their counſels; as if he ſhould ſay, Howſoever the enemies are mightie not only in weapons and ſtrength, but alſo in counſell and wiſdome, yet ſhall they loſe all their labour. This aduertifement therefore was very neceſſarie. For it often happens that we contemne our enemies, how mightie or well armed ſoever they be, becauſe they want counſell, and are rather carried with blind furie, then led by reaſon: he aduertifeth therefore that all the craft and ſubtilties whereby the enemies ſhall endeavour to ſnare the people of God, ſhall in the end turne all into ſmoke, and therefore that they ſhall bring nothing to paſſe, although they haue all means readie, and that nothing be wanting in their power, counſels, and policies.

He adds, Pronounce a decree, that the ſenſe might be the more cleere. I haue tranſlated Appoint, or Decree a decree. This appertains either to the inſolencie of the enemies, or elſe it is the conclusion of their counſell: for after a thing is determined, the Decree follows. He aſſirmes, that all this ſhall vaniſh into ſmoke. Thus it appeares what the Prophet meanes, and what we are to make of this place. Now this may ſerue vs as a ſhield wherewith we may beate back all the darts of the enemies, whether they be furniſhed with weapons, riches, power, credit, authority: or whether they be indued with wiſdome, counſell, policie, wit, foreſight, aptnes of intention, or boldnes: for if ſo be we haue God with vs, we are then moſt ſtrong, and very well appointed; and conſequentlie, all that the enemies shall plot and devise, shall forthwith vanish away into nothing. We haue in the former verse at large explained the reason which he addes, namely, That God is with vs: yet I doubt not but in saying Ci Immanuel, he respects the name which he imposed vpon Christ before: and although he shewes that God assist his people, yet notwithstanding because the Maieestic of God in it selfe would not suffice for our comfort and consolation, he considers God himselfe, in the person of the Mediator, for whose sake alone he hath promised to assist and helpe vs.

Verf. 11. For the Lord spake thus to me in taking of mine hand, and taught me that I should not walke in the way of this people, saying,

Here the Prophet wrastleth against another kinde of temptation, to wit, against the infidelitie of the people. And to speake more plainly, we are to note that he had two temptations, one without, the other within.

- 1 The outward came in regard of open enemies, as the Assyrian, who hauing almost consumed all, so astonished the people by spoiles and cruelties, that he saw nothing but vtter subuersion. The inward was, because this holy people who bragged they were the chosen people of God, did put their confidence in the help of man, rather then in the Lord: this was a very dangerous temptation. For hereby it seemed that all passage for the promises of God was whollie shut vp; which were dayly offered them, and alwaies whetted vpon their memories. What could the Prophet imagine in such a perplexitie, but the vtter subuersion of this froward people, who ceased not maliciously to reject the grace of God which was so neere vnto him? The Lord therefore hereby armes the Prophet and his disciples against such a temptation,

As if he had taken me by the hand.] See here an elegant similitude, which the expoitors haue not vnderstood as I thinke. He alludes to fathers, or masters, who vsually put their hand vpon their children or schollers to hold them in, and to constrain them to obey, when they profit nothing by words. Thus the Lord holds in his Ministers, who are readie sometime to leaue al, because they think their labor is but lost: he then holds the back I say, in laying his hand vpon the, to the end they may continue to execute their office. They who faithfullie serue the Lord haue sufficient experience how needfull this is for them, and haue a prooffe of it euery day. There is no temptation more burdensome, then when those who ought to shew themselves faithfull, recourt: in a word, when it seemes that faith is banished out of the world. It is very necessaric then that God should take vs by the hand; for wee are not only vnstable, and subiect to lightnes, but also naturallie inclined to euill more then we ought, although we be not drawne therunto by any whomsoever. But if any naughtie custome be joined herewithall, then can wee hardlie bee masters of our selues. It is certaine that wee should fall downe backward at euery push, were we not vpheld by an admirable power of God, to fixe our constancie in an assured haue. Let euery one of vs exercise himselfe diligentlie with the consideration hereof. For although we are well perswaded of the truth of all this, yet notwithstanding when we should put it in practise we faile, and cast our cies rather vpon men then vpon God. In regard whereof we ought to be so much the more carefull to profit in this doctrine, and to pray vnto God, that he will hold vs in, not only with his word, but also with his hand. And herewithall let vs consider how prone we are to follow an euill course, for when we see wicked examples we run after them with might and maine, and of an example make a law: so that if so be some march afore, we thinke we are permitted to follow after, and to do as they do, especially when a wicked custome hath gotten the vpper hand, and that the matter rests vpon the constancie of one or two only. Euery one also couers himselfe with this faire vizard of a generall consent; the which all will confesse to be wicked and naught in it selfe. And which more is, where is he to be found that is not pushed forward as with a whirlwind to follow custome? euen as if it were in the power of a people to bring in their corruptions, in stead of good lawes. This hath not been the fault of one age alone, but it hath the swinge as much or more euen at this day then euer heretofore. Yea, this corruption is ingrauen in all men by nature, namely, to hold an error as a law. From thence haue proceeded all the superstitions that euer were, and those which are now in the Papacie, so as if one would seeke the original, we shall finde they came from no other spring, but from that which one of them hath drawne in after another, by one and the same error. And thus are all intangled in the nets of Satan, so as euen at this present the common consent of men is the chiefe corner stone of such inuentions. Behold the weapons wherewith each one of them defendis himselfe: We are not alone (say they) we follow an infinite multitude.

Verf. 12. Say ye not a confederacie to all them to whom this people saith a confederacie, neither feare you their feare, nor be afraid of them.

First, we must consider what the state of this people then was: they saw themselves destitute of great forces, and too weake to susteine warre against so mightie enemies. See what it was which made them set their eye and affections so strongly vpon strangers, for they thought themselves vtterlie vndone, vnlesse some aid came vnto them from other places. It is in this sense that I take the word Conspiracie, because they thought they stood in neede of their Confederates. But because the word Conspiracie is taken both in the good and euill part, and sometimes in Hebrue ſignifies as much as Band, I take it in the better ſignification. Others are of a contrary opinion, and expound, Behold thine enemies the kings of Iſrael and Syria, who haue conſpired among themſelves. But I rather agree with thoſe who referre theſe words to the covenant and aſſociation which many vnbelievers would contract with the Aſſyrians. The Lord then admoniſheth Iſaiah not to regard the counſels of the wicked, although all the people ſhould approve of it, and that every one of them ſhould yeeld to the deſire of his companion. Wee may alſo giue a double interpretation: for ſome reade it apart; as if the Prophet in the ſecond member ſhould condemne the corrupt manners of the people. But wee muſt reade and conioine theſe two members, Be not aſtonied if your fellow citizens plot together from day to day to make vnlawfull covenants, agree not you with them. Moreover, although God ſhould haue ſpoken but to the Prophet alone, and not to the multitude of thoſe who profited by inſtruction to turne their mindes left they ſhould become vnfaithfull in aduenturing rathlie after others; yet notwithstanding the plurall number Sa ſee not, thewes, that all y^e faithfull were taught in his perſon.

Hebrue

Feare not. Here we ſee from what ſountaine the giddie counſels whereby men ſkirmiſh among themſelves proceede; to wit, from this, that their mindes are ſo foreſtalled with feare, that they are caried hither and thither without any diſcretion at all. The chiefe cauſe why the Iewes deſired ſo much to be confederate with the Aſſyrians, is diſcouered in this place, that is to wit, being tertiſhed aboue meature, they thought they could ſaue themſelves by no other meanes; and ſo this blinde feare hindred them from expecting help and ſuccor from the Lord; this is the cauſe which made them thus to long for this confederacie. True it is there was like occaſion of feare as well to the faithfull, as to the vnfaithfull, but they feared not all after one maner. For the faithfull tooke heart of grace becauſe they knew God had the care of their ſaluation, and being armed with the promiſe of God, comforted themſelves as oft as the name of Immanuel came into their mindes. But the wicked ſurprized with feare, thought of nothing but of refuge from the Aſſyrians: they cared not for Gods helpe, neither yet retired themſelves vnto him. The Lord forbids not the faithfull to feare; for they are vnable to abſteine from it; but he commands them to overcome this faithleſſe feare which overwhelmes the wicked: Let vs not gaze here and there then after their example; and leſt wee plunge our ſelves headlong into deſperation in ſeeking vnlawfull helps, let vs aboue all things take heed that feare deprivē vs not of true iudgement.

Now the remedie of this miſchiefe is this, that we be reſtrained by the word of God, from whence proceeds all peace and tranquillitie of minde. And in conſerring the eſtate of this people with our owne, let vs learne to runne for refuge to the name of God, which ſhall be as an invincible forteſſe and tower vnto vs. It alſo appears againe by theſe words, ſaue ſee not &c. put in the plurall number, that the Lord ſpake not to the Prophet alone. Likewiſe S. Peter drawes a generall doctrine from this place, 1. Pet. 3. 14. admoniſhing vs not to feare the feare of the wicked; but to put our confidence in God, and to haue our eyes alwaies fixed vpon him, thereby to remaine conſtant, although heauen and earth ſhould be mingled together. And if euer the admonition of the Apoſtle Peter were neceſſarie, it is now in our great neede: for wee ſee all things overthrowne, turned as it were topſie turvie, and mingled together with an horrible confuſion: to the end then that we be not troubled, the Lord puls vs from fixing our eyes vpon men, that being attentue to the voyce of his word, we might continue immouable. True it is that Saint Peter takes this word of ſaue in the paſſive ſignification, and Iſaiah in the aſſiue. The Apoſtle exhorts the faithfull to be conſtant, and not to tremble at the threats and terrors of wicked men; and the Prophet condemnes this feare which moued the Iewes to ſecke confederacies with the prophane. But becauſe it was not y^e Apoſtles meaning to expound this place, or to aillege it word for word, but only to allude to the ſenſe of the Prophet, there is no abſurditie in this diuerſitie.

Verſe 13. Sanctifie the Lord of hoſts, and let him be your feare, and let him be your dread.

WE haue ſaid already that the cauſe of ouer great feare in dangers comes frō hence, that men liſt not vp their eyes nor aſſections to God, and therefore the Propheet now applies a ſoueraigne remedie to aſſuage ſuch immoderate feares, to the end ſuch as feare imminent and preſent dangers might learne to yeeld that honour vnto God which vnto him belongeth. Sanctifie the Lord of hoſts, ſignifies as much as to magnifie and exalt his power, to the end we ſhould call to mind how he gouernes the world; and that the beginnings and iſſues as well of good things as of euill, are in his power. Whence it followes, that God is robbed as it were of his honour and holines if we goe not directlie vnto him when we are in any perplexitie. This maner of ſpeech therefore hath great weight, for we are taught that God can not be more contemptuouſly deſpised, then when we are overcome of feare: as if he were not exalted high aboue all creatures, to order and diſpoſe of the euents of things. Contrariwiſe, after that by his ſuccor we haue ouerpaſſed and overcome the dangers by a conſtant faith, then is he adorned rightlie with that ſoueraigne authoritie which is due vnto him, becauſe vnleſſe we be moſt aſſured that he hath infinite meanes readie in his hands which we are ignorant of for our deliuerance, it is all one, as if wee eſteemed him ſome dead idoll.

It is to very good purpoſe alſo where he addes, That God himſelfe ought to be the feare and dread of the people; to the end they might know that they should receive a iust and due recompence of their wickednesse and contempt of his Maiestie, when they trembled like cowards, and were so amazed for the present dangers. Now, although hee joyne aread and feare together; yet his meaning is not that the Iewes should so tremble at the mention of Gods name, as to flee from his presence: but he placeth these two words together, onely because he requires a sonne-like reuerence of his Maiestie: as also to note a constant perseuerance therein. His meaning is then, that they shall be free and dispatched from trouble of minde, if so bee his feare bee so liuely engrauen in their hearts, that they neuer depart from it. And tuely, whosoever hee be that subiecteth himselfe willingly vnto God, setting his feare onely before his eyes, to hold himselfe by meanes of this bridle, in his duty; such a one shall feele by experience, that there is no place of refuge more safe, then vnder the shadowe of his wings. But in regard that the wicked cease not to prouoke his wrath against them by their outrageous libertie; hee auengeth himselfe worthily vpon such a carelesse securitie, vexing their mindes with a continuall vnquietnesse.

The difference betweene the feare that is in the faithfull and that of the wicked.

Verf. 14. And hee shall be as a Sanctuarie: but as a stumbling stone, and as a rocke to fall vpon to both the houses of Israel; and as a snare and as a net to the inhabitants of Ierusalem.

HE promiseth a secure and quiet conscience vnto the true seruants of God; because the Lord will easily appeale all terrors, in keeping them vnder the shadow of his wings. Now he alludes to the word Sanctifie, which hee vsed heretofore: for the word which signifies Sanctuarie, Tower, or fortress, is deriued of that which signifies, to sanctifie. He meanes to affirme then, that God asks nothing whereof he offereth not a like mutuall recompence. For whosoever they are that doe sanctifie him in their hearts; shall also proue by experience, that he is a most certaine Sanctuarie, and hauen of safetie for them. But howsoever there bee some correspondencie betwene God and vs in this sanctification; yet notwithstanding it is in diuers respect; because wee are said to sanctifie him, when wee attribute vnto him all praise and glorie, and depend altogether vpon him: but he on his part is said to sanctifie vs, when hee deliuers and keeps vs in all dangers. Now because very few are found who obey him, resting themselves wholly vpon his promises, the Prophet meant to arme the faithfull against all such temptations. For they were in danger to be carried away by such and so wicked examples as by a kinde of whirlwinde. Behold now the Prophets meaning; as if he should say; The Lord will bee a most safe and faithfull gardian vnto you; and howsoever others spurne against him, yet be not you afraid; but continue you constant in your places.

There is also in this place a secret opposition: because the Sanctuarie is as a Tower situated in an high place, for the defence of the faithfull; and for the destruction and ruine of the vnfaithfull, in regard they rushed vpon God with a foolhardinesse. But wee shall hereafter see more cleerely how this was accomplished; partly vnder Hezekias, partly also from the time of the captiuitie of Babylon: and yet notwithstanding, Christ was therewithall prefigured, who was to bee a rocke of falling, and not a fortress of defence to the Israelites. Isaiah aduertiseth the faithfull of this fall; to the end they should conforme themselves to this warning.

To the two houses.] The Iewes doe fondly and senselessly rent this sentence, instead of diuiding it aright. For they say, that God shall be partly a sanctification; and partly an offence to the Israelites: as if by the two houses, he should distinguish betwene the faithfull and the vnfaithfull. But hee rather commands the faithfull not to bee discouraged, although almost all the multitude of both the kingdomes, do hinder them from following of God; but that in forsaking all impediments, they should goe on with cheerefulness through the thickest of them. The Prophet might haue said in a word, hee shall be a stumbling stone to Israel: but hee meant to expresse it more fully: for he comprehends the whole people, and saith; that God shall be their ouerthrowe. The people were diuided into two Kingdomes; to wit, Ephraim and Iudab; and therefore hee names both the one and the other. I grant that some were excepted out of this number: but he speaks here of the whole body in generall.

This is an excellent place, and cannot bee too oft called to minde; especially in this time wherein we now liue, wherein wee see the estate of religion almost quite abolished in Christendome. Many boast that they are Christians, who yet are farre off from God, and to whom also Christ is a stone of offence.

The Papists proudly brag of his name, although they prophane his whole seruice by their superstitions, and despihtfully dishonour him. As touching those who haue the pure worship of God established in the midst of them, there are very few who imbrace the doctrine of the gospel with a sincere affection.

On which side then soeuer wee turne our eyes, wee can see nothing but wofull temptations euery where. And therefore let vs set this most profitable aduertisement before vs; to wit, that it is no new thing to see the greater part, yea, almost all those who boast themselves to be the seruants of the Church, yet to spurne against God. And in the meane while, albeit we be but as a little handfull of people in respect of them; yet must wee rest our selues constantly notwithstanding vpon the Lord.

To the inhabitants of Ierusalem.] This is the second amplification. For hauing made mention of both the kingdomes, hee names the principall principall or head place of them both. Now howſoever the whole Country was degenerate; yet notwithstanding it ſeemed that the Lord had his chiefe residence there. Hee ſhewes then that God is a ſtone of offence, and a rocke to fall vpon; not onely to the common people, who were diſperſed abroad in the Countrey and villages; but alſo to the greateſt; as to the Magiſtrates and Miniſters who were in Ieruſalem: yea euen in this holy place (I ſay) where God intended that the remembrance of his name ſhould eſpecially be honoured. The which Dauid alſo witneſſeth when he ſaith; that the maſter builders whom God had ſet on worke, reiected the chiefe corner ſtone: Plaſ. 118. 22. Ieſus Chriſt alleading this place againſt the Iewes, thewes that theſe words were ſpoken of him. I deny not but this fell out in Iſaiah his time; but much more in the time of Chriſt for impietie & rebellion increaſed by little & little, euen till it came to the height. So then as wel the great, as the ſmall, who had alwaies obſtinately reſiſted God, did yet more licentiously overflow at that time; ſo as being come to the top, in the day of their deſtruction, they were wholly forſaken of God, whoſe Sonne they had wiſſily reiected. And from hence we gather a teſtimonie of the eternall Godhead of Chriſt: Saint Paul ſhewing that it is God himſelfe of whom the Prophet here ſpeakes: Rom. 9. 33. Now hee mentions no new God; but him who created heauen and earth, and who maniſteſted himſelfe to Moſes. It is God himſelfe then, by whom the Church hath been alwaies gouerned.

Verſ. 15. And many among them ſhall ſtumble, and ſhall fall, and ſhall bee broken, and ſhall be ſnared, and ſhall bee taken.

HE continues to threaten the wicked as he did heretofore; and denouneeth, that all thoſe which would not reſt vpon God, ſhould not eſcape unpuniſhed. Now the threatening is this; After they haue ſtumbled, they ſhall fall; and in the end, ſhall be broken. This agrees with the former Similitude, in which he compares God vnto a ſtone. Chriſt alludes thereunto, comprehending both the members: Whoſoever falls vpon this ſtone, ſhall bee broken; and vpon whomſoever it ſhall fall, it ſhall grinde him to powder: Mat. 21. 44. That which follows afterward, They ſhall bee ſnared and taken, agrees to the Similitude following; wherein he compares God to a net and ſnare. Let not the wicked thinke themſelves then ſtronger then God, or wiſer then hee: for they ſhall ſeele in the end, both to their coſt and ruine, that he is the ſtrongeſt and wiſeſt. Therefore it muſt needs follow, that they bee brought to nought; becauſe they ſhall be broken to powder in an inſtant: or elſe ſo enwrapped, that they ſhall neuer winde themſelves out. Now theſe things are not proper vnto God otherwiſe the accidentally, if we may ſo ſpeake: for his proper office is rather to draw men vnto him, and to giue them aſſured ground of their ſaluation; which was very well knowne and ſcene moſt cleerely in Chriſt. In regard whereof, Saint Peter ſaith, that howſoever many vnbelecuers ſtumble at him, yet that their falles ought not to hinder our faith, that it ſhould not alwaies march on; becauſe to vs Chriſt is a choſen and pretious ſtone: 1. Pet. 2. 4.

Verſ. 16. Binde vp the teſtimonie, ſeale vp the law among my Diſciples.

THE Lord now turnes his ſpeech to the Prophet, and incourageeth him againſt he ſhould fight againſt Apollataes and rebels; to the end he might execute his office boldly and conſtantly; which was not a little needfull. For Iſaiah had tried the great rebellion which was in the people: ſo as if he had looked onely vpon the preſent eſtate, to wit, the infidelitie of the people, and the labor which hee beſtowed in vaine, hee might forthwith haue been vterly out of heart. For this cauſe the Lord purpoſed to confirme and ratiſie his vocation a freſh vnto him: and not for his ſake alone, but for all their ſakes alſo which ſhould obey his doctrine. And howſoever few ſhould giue credit to the ſame; yet doth the Lord witneſſe notwithstanding, that his doctrine is ſealed vnto thoſe few: and that for their ſakes Iſaiah was not to giue ouer teaching, neither yet that the others ſhould ceaſe their walking in the obedience of faith. Now he compares the doctrine of the word to Sealed letters, which many might hold and handle; but yet notwithstanding could not bee read nor vnderſtood but of a ſmall number; that is to ſay, of thoſe to whom they were directed. And thus there are very few who vnderſtand the word of God, (for they are the elect onely) howſoever it be offered to all in generall. The word of God then is ſealed vnto thoſe that profit not by it; and yet ſo ſealed, as that the Lord opens the ſame notwithstanding to his choſen by his holie Spirit.

Some deriue the verbe Tſur, which ſignifies to Binde, of the verbe Natſar; and tranſlates, Keepe. Now although this bee of no great importance; yet notwithstanding it appears by the other word Seale, that the expoſitiō which I haue followed is the beſt: for the auncients were wont to binde a threed about their letters, and then to ſet the ſeale vpon it. Now from hence wee gather a moſt profitable doctrine: to wit, that the Paſtours and Miniſters of the word, ought to continue conſtant in their office, although it ſeemes that all reuolte, and that nothing is to be ſeen in men but outrage and rebellion: becauſe the Lord will euer reſerue vnto himſelfe, ſome diſciples which will profit in the reading of his letters; howſoever they be cloſed and ſhut vp to others. The Prophet will vſe the ſame Similitude, Chap. 29. 11. where hee ſaith, that the word is like to a cloſed booke: but there mentions the wicked onely: but heere hee ſpeakes of the Diſciples, amongſt whom whom his doctrine should not be vnfruitfull.

Quest.

But some will demand; whether the Prophet should leaue the people so, as to withdraw and shut vp himselfe apart with his disciples, who made some benefit of his warnings? I answer: This was not the Prophets intent; for it was the will of the Lord that he should preach publicly and manifest his message vnto all. And because he spake as to deafe eares, & might therefore lose his labor, and so hee discouraged in seeing no fruit to come thereof; the Lord heereby encourageth and strengtheneth him, to the end he should go on forward still, although all things were in a manner desperate: that so, contenting himselfe with the small number of his disciples, he might be more courageous in his ministerie then euer before.

*Or, So.

Verf. 17. Therefore I will waite vpon the Lord, that hath hid his face from the house of Iacob; and I will looke for him.

SO I will wait.] I had rather translate the Hebrew participle Uai, in this sense; because the Prophet retires himselfe apart as it were, hauing receued consolation from the Lord: as wee haue seene heretofore. It is as much then as if hee had said; Seeing the Lord is pleased to haue some Disciples, amongst whom his doctrine should bee sealed, I will wait, although hee hath hid his face from Iacob. That is to say, although hee hath reiected and cast off his people. This place is worthy our obseruation; in the meditation whereof, wee ought continually to be much encouraged: yea, if so be the Lord proceede so farre, as that he hath turned his face away from his people, and should reiect those who make profession of his name: yet for all this, must wee wait vpon him with inuincible patience. This is the only remedie wee haue. The word waiting, hath great emphasis in it, as if hee should say; Yet notwithstanding will not I turne away from the Lord; I will still perseuere in faith. He yet augments the matter when he addes, So I will wait. Seeing our faith is wont to stagger and faint when offences doe happen. It is greuously shaken when we see our selues forsaken of our companions, and that the sworne enemies of the Church doe proudly vsurpe the title of it: for offences for the most part doe cause vs to turne away from God, filling vs with such perplexed thoughts, that we are ready to call the truth of his word into question. This consolation then is very necessary, as well in the calamities wherewith the Church is oppressed, as in the troubles wherewith shee is tossed by the disloyaltie of others.

Verf. 18. Behold, I and the children whom the Lord hath giuen mee, are as signes and wonders in Israel, by the Lord of hostes which dwelleth in Mounts Zion.

HERE the Prophet not onely testifies, that hee will wait in patience; but also shewes what his constancie is; proposing himselfe, with his disciples and those which remained with him, to open view. As though hee should say, Although others recoile, yet Lord behold I am ready to doe thee seruice; and I also bring those with mee, whom thou hast vouchsafed to saue miraculously by my labours. Hee shewes an inuincible manfulness then, and protests that he will continue in the faith and obedience of the Lord, although all should reuolt.

By Children, hee vnderstands seruants and ministers; following therein the vsual custome as well of the Hebrew tongue as of the Latine. Now he speakes of the Disciples whom he mentioned before. Whence it appeareth, what their dutie is, who would bee reputed the true disciples of the Lord; to wit, that they protest with Isaiah, to be teachable, and ready to hearken, and that they be ready to obey, as soone as the Lord shall speake. The teachers also ought to bring their disciples with them, and not to send them alone before them: they ought to march in the first ranke, and to shew them the way by their example; as was said in the second Chapter, verse 3. otherwise they should haue no authority in teaching. The Apostle in the Epistle to the Hebrewes, applies this place to Iesus Christ; and from thence draws an admonition, which ought to serue vs as a sharpe spurre; to the end wee should not thinke to follow Isaiah alone for our leader and Doctor, but Christ himselfe; and to be so much the more encouraged to run our course with greater alacritie.

Heb. 1. 13.

is hee the Lord hath giuen me.] The Prophet shewes heere of whom it is that we hold our faith; to wit, of God and of his free election. For Isaiah preached to all publicly, admonishing every one, and soliciting all without exception, to draw neere vnto the Lord; but the word profited those onely which God had giuen him. By the word Giuen, hee meaneth those whom God drew inwardly by the secret instinct of his holie Spirit; for otherwise the externall voyce should haue sounded in the eares of the people in vaine: and thus it is said that the elect are giuen to Christ of God: his Father: Ioh. 6. 37. Whereby we perceiue, that the promptnesse of faith depends not vpon the will of man; but that some few among many doe beleue, because (as S. Luke saith) they were ordained before vnto life: Act. 13. 48. Now God is wont to call them whom he hath predestinate; and sealeth vp the testimonie of their adoption effectually in them, to the end they may giue themselves to teachableness and obedience. Such a thing is the gift then whereof Isaiah speakes in this place. But this agrees fitly vnto Christ, to whom the Father offereth and giueth Disciples; as it is said in Iohn; No man cometh vnto me except my Father draw him: Iohn 6. 44. Whence it followes, that he is appointed our *g*adian to perseuere vs vnder his protection vnto the end: and therefore he saith; That none of those whom the Father hath giuen him, shall perish: Ioh. 17. 12.

Ioh. 10. 10.

Signes and wonders.] Some referre this to miracles miracles amiſſe: for the ſenſe is farre otherwiſe, namely; That all the faithfull ſhall not onely be hated, but alſo bee had in execration; ſo as they ſhall be eſteemed monſters; and that not amongſt ſtrangers and open enemies, but euen in Iſrael it ſelfe; whereof wee haue experience at this day. The Papiſts on the one ſide abhorre vs more then Turkes or Iewes; nay, more then dogges and ſwine. Now although this be odious, yet muſt wee not be much aſtoniſhed therat; for this propheſie of neceſſities muſt euen now bee fulfilled. The Prophet found it by experience amongſt his owne people: as all thole haue likewiſe done, which haue followed his doctrine. But wee finde not onely this hatred towards vs in the Papiſts alone, but euen in thoſe who would ſeeme to haue profited moſt in the Church: and the greater part of theſe abhor vs, mocke vs, and eſteeme vs as very monſters; onely becauſe we trouble our ſelues ſo much, and are ſo carefull for the ſaluation of the Church, of Gods honour, and of life eternal. But yet let vs not bee afraid to put our ſelues into dangers, to incurre hatreds, enuies, raunts, baniſhments, want, hunger, nakedneſſe; and laſt of all, death it ſelfe for all this. *To them incede they are monſtrous things; for how can they taſte of theſe ſoueraign good things with any reſiſt, whileſt they pamper themſelues, and are ſo carefull for their quiet and eaſe? But to the end their flouts may not aſtoniſh vs, we muſt arme our ſelues with this exhortation of the Prophet.

Now to the end hee might ſhew how vaine and friuolous the conſpiracie of the wicked is, hee ſtoutly triumphs ouer the pride of the whole world, by placing the Lord of hoſtes oppoſite againſt them: as if he ſhould ſay; I paſſe nothing at all that men abhorre and deſpiſe, ſeeing I am aſſured that God is on my ſide. When hee alſo addes, that the Lord dwelleth in mount Zion; theſe words carry great weight. For though the people were covered vnder an infinite heape of vices and wickedneſſe, yet they gloried as if they onely were holy to the Lord; and in abuſing his promiſes, they condemned the true ſeruants of God, which reprobud them. On the contrary, that the Prophets might pluck this pride & vaine confidence away fro them, they teſtified that they were the Miniſters of the onely true God; whom this people notwithstanding falſly bragged to worſhip in Mount Zion. Now God did not ſo chuſe his dwelling place there, as if being tied to that he would therefore allow a baſtard and newfound ſeruice: but would be fought and ſerued there, according to the rule of his word. And therefore Iſaiab taking the God which dwelleth in Mount Zion, on his ſide, taxeth and ſharply galleth the hypocrits, who fooliſhly and proudly bragged as of as they cried, The Temple of the Lord: becauſe it was rather an idoll wherein they gloried; contrary to Gods word. Now although they ſnatched the promiſes to themſelues, yet they falſly alleaged them againſt the true ſeruants of God; as the Papiſts at this day doe againſt vs. The Prophet then adorneth God with this title, to the end hee may vnmaſke thoſe hypocrits, which made no conſcience vainely to oppoſe the name of the Temple againſt the expreſſe word of God. And in this regard Iſaiab now ſaith; Take vs for monſters as it pleaſeth you, yet notwithstanding God will approve of his owne; you cannot abhor them, but you alſo therewithall reiect the God of Abraham and David, whole ſeruants we are;

Verſ. 19. And when they ſhall ſay vnto you, Enquire at them that haue a Spirit of diuination, and at the Soothſayers, which whiſper and murmur; ſhould not a people enquire of their God, from the liuing to the dead?

[But if they ſay.] The Prophet goes on with his ſpeech; to wit, that all the faithfull being armed with the authoritie of God, ſhould not onely as with a buckler, but as with a wall of braſſe, conſtantly reſiſt all impietie. He admoniſteth them then to continue ſtedfaſt, and not to be ſhaken, if any ſhould offer to ſollicite them to ſuperſtition and idolatric. Hee vſeth the plural number, to ſhew that it was a vice common among all eſtates, which had ouerflowed euery where: as if he ſhould ſay, I ſee very well what will come to paſſe, you ſhall be in great danger: for thoſe which remaine amongſt you, will endeavour to turne you aſide from the true God, becauſe themſelues being wicked, will alſo deſire to haue you become like them. I herewithall he ſheweth how wickedly they were reuolted from the law and covenant of God, in that they were not aſhamed to ſollicite others to ſeeke vnto Sorcerers and Enchanters, whoſe verie names ought to haue been abominable and accuſed vnto them.

[A people.] Some reades this altogether in the perſon of the wicked; as if vnder pretence hereof, they would deceiue the ſimple: to wit, that there is no nation whatſo euet, without oracles & revelations, but euery one aſketh counſell at his gods, or at leaſt, of the Magicians and Soothſayers. Yet notwithstanding, mee thinks the opinion of others is more ſound, who thinke that Iſaiab teacheth his diſciples how they ſhould anſwere, if ſo be any ſhould ſollicite them to idolatric. And yet this doth not ſufficiently open the meaning of this place: for commonly it is expounded as if it were a compariſon, from the leſſe to the greater; What? doe the Gentiles aſke counſell at their gods, which notwithstanding are falſly ſo called; and ſhall wee not make more account of him whom wee know to be the true God, eſpecially ſeeing he hath maniſteſted himſelfe ſo to be vnto vs, and that by ſo infinite teſtimonies? Is it not a foule ſhame that the heathen ſhould make more reckoning of their gods, then we doe of our God? But I rather expound this of the Iewes themſelues, who are called People, by way of excellencie; becauſe they were adopted of God. Neither is it materiall that the Prophet vſeth the word Elohim, Gods, in the plural number;

This text is a buckler wherewith we ought to beate backe all those superstitions which glide so smoothly thorowout the world. And if others doubt and stand in a mammering whether they should aske counsell at dead idols, or at Saints departed, yet let vs alwaies haue this answer ready at hand; That we ought to aske counsell of God onely. Now the Prophet alludes to the place in Deuteronomie; where the the Lord forbids that they should goe to Enchanters or Sorcerers: Deut. 18. 10. And lest they should alledge the examples of the heathen, who had their Soothsayers and expounders of dreames, and obserued the flying of the fowles, hee addes in 15. verse, that they should not want a Prophet, neither should they be left destitute of necessarie doctrine. It was the will and pleasure of God then, that they should wholly depend vpon his word, and onely learne from thence whatsoeuer was expedient for them to know, and so to yeeld him loyal obedience.

As touching that which follows, from the liuing to the dead, some expound it otherwise, and interpret for in stead of from: and then the sense is this; Will yee aske counsell at the dead for the matters of the liuing? But in regard this sense is constrained, it should bee more proper it may bee, to expound it thus, The Lord will be our master, and for this end hath ordained his Prophets, that we should learne his will of them: for the Prophet is the mouth of the Lord. It is not lawfull then to goe vnto the dead, to whom this office was not giuen: and adde hereunto also, that the Lord mindes not to vse the seruice of the dead to teach vs. But yet, when I haue well considered the text somewhat more narrowly, I had rather translate the Hebrew word Dead, From; to wit, from the liuing to the dead: as if he should say; that one onely God ought to suffice vs, as well for the liuing as for the dead. Whether thou considerest the heauen, the earth, or the lowest parts thereof, thou shalt finde that one God onely sufficeth vs. Me thinks this sense is most proper, and easie. The Prophet then armes the faithfull against the deuises and plots of the wicked, which otherwise might haue caused them to reuolt; to the end they might content themselves to haue God onely for their Master; and that they should not doe him that iniurie, as in forsaking his doctrine, to giue themselves to other teachers; but rather casting off all other things, they should onely depend vpon the truth; the which hee repeates and confirms immediately.

Verf. 20. To the Law, and to the Testimonie, if they speake not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them.

This place is diuersly expounded. For some take it to be a forme of an oath, as if the Prophet should Swear by the law, that those were apostataes, which drew others to the like apostasie with them. But I take it otherwise; namely, that we are rather brought to the Law, and to the Testimonie; because the particle Lamed, shewes that this is the true sense. The Testimonie is conioyned with the Law; not as if they were diuers things, but for the plainer vnderstanding. As if hee should say; To the Law, which contains the Testimonie of Gods will toward you. Lastly, we must take the word Testimonie, for an epithite; to the end we may know what the vse of the Law is; namely, that God manifests himselfe therein, and shewes what a one he will be towards vs: and lastly, hee there ordaines all things which are needefull for vs to know. This then is an excellent commendation of the Law, which contains the doctrine of saluation, and the rule of a right and happy life. And this is the reason why hee iustly forbids vs to turne from it in the least iota; as if hee should say, Forsake all your superstitions, after which these runne so violently. They were not content with God alone, but sought a thousand inuentions: for what will satisfie him that forsakes the Lord? Christ speaks also in this sort; They haue Moses and the Prophets, let them heare them: Luke 16. 29. For although Abraham bee brought in speaking there, yet is it a perpetuall oracle which procedes out of the mouth of God.

We are inioyned then to heare the Law and the Prophets, to the end we should not be carried vp and downe after the curiosities of mans braine; neither to desire the knowledge of any thing by meanes of the dead. For if the Law and the Prophets sufficed not, the Lord would not forbid vs to vse other meanes. And hereby we learne, that whatsoeuer is added to the word of God, ought to be condemned and reiected. Why so? Because it is the Lords will that we should wholly depend vpon his word, and that all our wisdom should bee limited within the bounds thereof. If we then listen vnto others, we snatch vnto our selves a libertie which he hath forbidden vs; and in so doing, wee offer him great outrage. Now whatsoeuer it is which men shall bee bold to set vp of themselves, will bee found nothing else but a corrupting of this word. Let vs therefore reiect all other teachers, if we minde to obey God. And he also shewes further, that we shall then be well armed against all idolatries and superstitions, when we relie vpon the Law of the Lord. For as S. Paul calles the word, The sword of the Spirit: Ephes. 6. 17. so also by it ought we to bring Satan and all his inuentions to nought. Retire we thither then, when the enemies shall assault vs; that being armed therewith, wee may fight valiantly, and at the last, ouercome and put them to flight.

If they speake not, &c. I will not recite all the diuers expositions of this place, because it would be too tedious. And indeede, the true exposition seemes to mee so sure, that it may easilie refute all others. The common interpretation is, that the wicked doe therefore

All our wisdom should be limited within the bounds of Gods word,

duance their lies, and set their wives to sale, because there is no light in them: that is to say, because they are deprived of common sense. But for mine owne part, I expound it, that the faithfull are hereby exhorted to be of good incourage: so as if the vnfaithfull agree not to the true doctrine, they doe nothing elsse herein but show their blindness. And therefore must we contemne their blockishness, to the end it may be no let nor impediment vnto vs: as also Christ admonisheth that we should boldly let such blinde guides alone, lest we be moued with their blinde obstinacie. They are blinde, saith he, and leaders of the blinde. Will you wittingly perth together with them? Matth. 23. 14. For this cause the Prophet commands that such authoritie be giuen to the word of God, to the end wee may boldly despise the whole world, if they should gainſay it: for by the authoritie thereof, wee may condemne the Angels themselves, if they should fall into such a sinne. If an Angell from heauen should preach any other doctrine, let him be accursed; saith Paul, Gal. 1. 8. How much more boldly then may wee condemne men which resist God? And this manner of speech also which the Prophet vseth, hath great weight, if they speake not according to this word: because such a one is iudged blind, who readily and without resistance imbraceeth not this sentence; namely, That wee must not bee wise beyond the Law of God.

We must not be wise beyond the Law of God. *O shall passe by this Country.

Verſ. 21. Then hee that is afflicted and famished, shall goe to and fro in it: and when he shall be hungry, he shall euen curse himselfe, and curse his King and his gods, and shall looke vprward.

Lest the faithfull should suffer themselves to be enwrapped in the common errors, hee addes how horrible the punishment is which threatneth the wicked when they shall be once reuolted from God, and also shall inforce themselves to draw others to the same reuolt with them. The place is somewhat obscure, but the cause thereof proceeds of this, that some haue not weighed y words as they ought to haue done. Now the verb Aber hath great weight: for by this word To passe, he signifies the giddinesse which causeth men to wander, so as they are altogether disquieted, nor being able to stay long in any place whatsoever. We must supplie a noun to the verb indefinite, to wit, The Iewes shall passe. By the pronoun in us, he vnderstands the countrie of Iudea, which the Lord had preferred aboue all other regions: and therefore this may be well inough vnderstood, albeit the Prophet hath not expressed it. As if he should say, I haue pronounced indeed that this region should be the perpetuall heritage of my people, but they shall be as restles vagabonds; and it shall fare with them as with those who being driuen out of their countrie, being afflicted with pestilence, famine, and all manner of miseries, do seeke euery where for some place of abode better then their owne, but can no where finde it. Thus these words are opposed to that singular benefit of God, whereof Moses makes mention so often, to wit, that they should dwell perpetuallie in Iudea: for he foretelles here that they shall be vanderers and vagabonds not in their countrie, but in a strange region, so as in whatsoever place they should arriue, they should be assailed and vexed with infinite calamities.

Assimilad.] It seemes the Prophet speakes of the Iewes conuersion, as if he should say, After they haue bin thorowly humbled with Gods iudgements, they will come to repentance: and questionlesse this is the true remedie whereby God for the most part heales the obstinacie of men. Notwithstanding if any thinke that by the word hunger the Prophet describes the wrath and stubborn yelling of the wicked, it must be obserued that he not only comprehends hunger and thirst, but. (by the figure called Synecdoche) all other calamities also. By the word To prouoke, he signifies that which we haue in our common speech, they ſet, or chafe. The meaning is, that they shall begin to be displeas'd in themselves, and shall also detest all those factors in which they trusted before: and this in deed is the beginning of conuersion; for in prosperitie, we flatter our selues, but being oppressed, we abhorre whatsoever is about vs. Now if any had rather referre this to the reprobate, then this word ſet shall note out that gall and bitterness which rather pricks them forward to a furious raging, then to a calme and quiet humbling of themselves.

They shall curse their king.] By king, some vnderstand God. And Zophonie takes Malchom in this sense, Zoph. 1. 5. that is to say, their king. But I here put a distinction between king and God, for the wicked are first blinded with the false trust which they put in Idols, and by and by after they ground and establish their strength vpon earthlie things. The Iewes hauing a king, were puffed vp with his glorie and power: and when Iſaiah preached, the wicked exasperated the king against him, and they moued all the people to imitate their king, who was as it were the standard-bearer. In as much then as they were puffed vp as well in regard of their idols as of their king, he shewes that they shall be oppressed with so many calamities, that they shall be constrained to curse their gods, and their king. And behold heere the beginning of repentance, namely, to detest and put farre away all impediments which turne vs away from God.

Lifting vp their face on high.] He heere describes an affrighted and perplexed conscience, which vexeth the afflicted so long till they haue learned to lift vp their eyes boldly on high. It is some beginning of repentance, as I haue touched a little before, to endeavor to seeke true remedies, hauing been instructed and awakened by calamities and chastisements. But we must goe a step further, to wit, that resting our selues vpon God only we gaze not here and there, neither yet be tossed to and fro with all winds. To be short, Iſaiah threatneth the Iewes with an vtter ruine, because they were become so desperate, that a light and easie stroke of Gods hand had not sufficientlie tamed their rebellion. Yet notwithstanding we may expound this in the good part, to wit, that the Iewes should lift up their eyes at the last vnto heauen:

Verf. 22. And when he shall looke to the earth, behold trouble, and darkenes, vexation and anguish, and he is drinen into darkenes.

BVt then we must reade this 22.verse apart, and so the sense will be, that the Iewes shall conuert vnto God, because they shall be destitute of all meanes on earth, and shall perceiue nothing but horrible calamities on which side soeuer they turne their eyes. Now these speeches are partlie simple, and partlie figuratiue: for by darknes and obscuritie he meanes nothing else but aduersitie, after the maner of the scripture phrase: but he addes drinen, amplifying it greatlie by this word affliction: for if one push him forwards which is in darknes, he stumbleth and hurts himselfe very greatly. His meaning is then, that to one sore affliction the Lord wil add another more grieuous, to humble them more and more. For his intent is nothing else but to shew that the iudgements of God shall be so horrible, that they shall be constrained in despite of their teeth to cast vp their eyes into heauen.

THE IX. CHAPTER.

Verf. 1. Yet the darkenes shall not be according to the affliction that it had when at the first he touched lightly the land of Zebulon, and the land of Nephtaly; nor after ward when he was more grieuous by the way of the sea beyond Iordan in Galilee of the Gentiles.

E begins to comfort & afflicted with hope of a mitigation of the chastisements, least they should be swallowed vp with so great an heape of calamities. Many draw these words to a cleane cō-trarie sense, saying, that it is a threatening which presageth a more heauie affliction to the Iewes, then that wherewith they were chastised by Tiglath-peleser, or by Salmanassar. The first did them much euill, and the second more then the former: for he caried the ten tribes away captiue, and abolished the name of Israel. Some thinke then that the Prophet in this place foretels of a more heauie calamitie then euer they yet tasted of, which being compared to the two former, should much surpasse them. Although I am not minded to reiect this exposition because it is something probable; yet notwithstanding I am of a contrarie opinion, albeit this first hath the fairer shew: the Prophet meant to take all pleasures from the hypocrites, lest they should imagine that this destruction which was to ouerflow all, should be like some little spoile which might passe away by and by as the former afflictions had done; and so shall we take the particle et in his proper signification. But me thinke the naturall sense of the place will agree better if we say, that it is a consolation, wherein the Prophet begins to moderate that which he had formerlie spoken of these horrible darknes, and drinings forward: and in mitigating the bitterness of these chastisements, he comforts and drawes them to hope that God will shew them mercie; as if he should say, And yet, euen in this cruell destruction which the Iewes shall vndergoe, the darknes shall not be such as it was when the land of Israel was first afflicted by Tiglath-peleser, and then a little more seuerely by Salmanasser: for the faithfull might haue growne out of heart in such distresses, if they had not had some consolations to haue cheered and comforted them. The Prophet then speakes vnto them, to the end they should not thinke themselues vndone, and declares vnto them that the rods wherewith God meant to beate them should be more easie then the first. We shall easily discern hereafter by the context how proper and naturall this exposition is.

But why saith the Prophet that this destruction which will lay all things waste, shall yet notwithstanding be more gentle and supportable? for Ierusalem should be razed, the Temple broken downe, the Sacrifices abolished, which notwithstanding in former warres remained wholie vntouched: this then should seeme the cruelllest, and the others but light in comparison. We must obserue that there is a certaine promise added to this, which was not to the others; now it is by this promise only that temptations may be overcome, and the iudgements made more light: this (I say) is the only remedie which sweeteth our euils, so that those who are destitute thereof must needs fall into despaire. If the Lord confirme vs by this meanes, giuing vs hope of his helpe, there is not the greatest affliction which we shall not esteeme very light. This may be illustrated by a similitude: It may fall out that a man shall drowne himselfe in a little riuer, if he fall therinto with his head downward; the which notwithstanding in the midst of the sea might haue been saued, if he had had some placke or boord which might haue brought him to the shore. So also the little calamities will ouerwhelme vs if we be destitute of the grace of God; whereas being grounded grounded vpon the word of God, we can eſcape and come forth out of an extreme miſerie and ſound.

As touching the words, ſome take Muſph for an adiectiue, as if the Prophet ſhould ſay, It ſhall not be darkened: but the relatione of the feminine gender which followes a litle after, hindreth from referring this vnto men. The opinion of thoſe who ſay it is a nounce ſubſtantiuē is better, & therefore I haue thought good to translate word for word: There ſhall be no darkenes in Iudea according to the time, &c. Whereas ſome expound the verbe Hekah, as if the earth had been oppreſſed and burdened with people led into captiuitie; this is vtterlie wide from the Prophets meaning, neither agrees it to the ſcope of the Text: for it is ſaid, by and by after, that the neighbor region was burdened with a ſecond warre: no doubt then but this verbe answers to the former, Harifſhon. Becauſe then that Tiglaib-pelizer aſſailed but a litle portion of the kingdome, it is ſaid that the warre which he made is but light in compariſon of that of Salmanazar. He alſo ſaith by the way of the ſea, becauſe Galile was neere the riuer of the Mediterranean ſea, on the other ſide it was inuironed with the flood Jordan. It is called Galile of the Gentiles, not onely becauſe it was neighbour to Tyre and Sidon, but alſo in regard many nations were mingled there amongſt the Iewes; for after Dauid gaue this countrie to king Hiram, it could neuer be ſo quiet but the Gentiles would alwayes occupie ſome part of it.

Vcrſ. 2. The people that walked in darknes haue ſeene a great light: they that dwelled in the land of the ſhadow of death, vpon them hath the light ſhined.

HE ſpeakes of things to come, and yet notwithstanding vſeth the time preſent, that in this deſtruction of the Citie, and in the captiuitie and ruin thereof, the people might behold the light of God. The ſumme is then, that euen in the miſt of darkenes, yea of death it ſelfe, they were neuertheleſſe to hope, ſeeing God is able ſufficientlie to giue life to his people when they ſhall be thought as good as dead. It ſeemes that S. Matthew in alledging this place turnes it to an other purpoſe: for he ſaith this propheſie was fulfilled when Ieſus Chriſt preached by the ſea ſide, Math. 4. 15. But if we rightlie conſider the Similitude, S. Matthew hath iuſtly applied this place vnto Chriſt, and hath obſerued the true ſenſe. Although it ſeemes our expoſitors can not tell how to make it hang together: for whereas they ſimply affirme, that this appertaines to the kingdome of Chriſt, they yeeld no ſufficient reaſon of it, neither doe they ſhew how this agrees to this place. If we will haue the true ſenſe then, we muſt call to mind what hath been ſaid heretofore, namely, that the Prophet in ſpeaking of the returne of this people from the captiuitie of Babylon, preſented not one age or ſeaſon before his view, but comprehended all others, euen to the coming of Chriſt, who brought a full and perfect libertie with him to his people. For the deliuerance from Babylon was as an entrance and beginning of the reſtauration of the Church, not to eſtabliſh it for ſome few yeeres, but till ſuch time as the Meſſiah ſhould come, who brought ſaluation, not to mens bodies onely, but alſo to their ſoules. We ſhal finde this maner of ſpeech to be very familiar with Iſaiab, after we haue proceeded further, and ſhall be a litle better exerciſed in reading of his propheſie.

The Prophet then hauing ſpoken of the captiuitie of Babylon, which ſhewed a very great calamitie to come, declares that it ſhall yet be more light then that which Iſrael had ſuſtained at the fiſt, becauſe the Lord had moderated and limited a certaine end to this calamitie, to wit, the ſpace of 70. yeares, which being paſt, the light of the Lord ſhould thine againe vpon them. By this hope of deliuerance then he cheares vp the hearts of ſuch as were caſt downe with feare, to the end they ſhould not be diſcouraged. And thus he hath put a difference betweene the Iewes and the Iſraelites, who had not any certaine hope of ſo neere a deliuerance. For howſoeuer the Prophets had giuen a certaine taſte of the mercie of God to a ſmall number of the faithfull amongſt the people of Iſrael, yet notwithstanding becauſe the deliuerance of this people was as an ouerplus, and depended vpon the deliuerance of Judah, the Prophet iuſtly affirms that a new light is offered, in as much as God hath determined to redeeme his people. Saint Matthew alſo rightlie ſpreads the beames of this light ouer Galile, and the land of Zabulon.

Darknes and the ſhadow of death.] Heere he compares their exile in Babylon to darknes and death, becauſe thoſe which were detained therein were poore and miſerable, and were altogether like dead men: as alſo Ezechiel out of their mouth declares, namely, that the dead ſhould riſe out of their graues, Ezech. 37. 11. 12. Their condition then was ſuch, as if no brightnes or ſparkle of light had ſhined vpon them. Yet notwithstanding he ſhewes that this ſhall be no hinderance at all, that they ſhould enioy the light, and recouer their fiſt libertie againe: which libertie he ſtretcheth not to a litle ſpace, but euen vnto Chriſt his time, as hath been already ſaid.

And hence we obſerue how ſy Apollies went to alledge ſy testimoniēs of ſy Prophets, and to ſhew the end and true vſe of them. As S. Paul alledgeth the teſtimonie of Hoſea, I will call them my people which were not my people, Rom. 9. 26. Hoſea 1. 10. Where he appropriates this to the calling of the Gentiles, although it be properlie ſpoken of the Iewes: and ſhewes that it was fulfilled when the Lord did incorporate the Gentiles into his Church. Thus when this people were in this baniſhment and incloſed therein as in a ſepulcher, they differed nothing from the heathen. And in regard they were in one and the ſame condition, it is good reaſon that this teſtimonie ſhould appertaine to the Gentiles as well as to the Iewes. Neither muſt it be referred to an externall miserie only, but to the shadow of eternall death, vntill Christ shine vpon vs by the doctrine of his word, which is the cause why Paul saith, Awake thou that sleepest and stand vp from the dead, and Christ shall giue thee light, Ephes. 5. 14. If then we extend the beginning of the deliuerance from the returne out of Babylon vntill the comming of Christ, from whom proceeds all bountie and libertie of good things, we shall haue the true sense of this place, which otherwise hath not been expounded clearly enough by the expositors.

Verf. 3. Thou hast multiplied the nation and increased their ioy: they haue reioiced before thee according to the ioy in haruest, and as men reioice when they diuide a spoile.

THIS place is somewhat obscure, as well in regard of it selfe, as also because of the diuersities of interpretations: for it seemes absurd to say that the ioy was not increased, seeing he by and by addes, They reioiced. For this cause the Iewes say that the particle Lo is not negatiue here, as if one letter were put in stead of another, to wit Alaph for Vau: as also that this is found in the scripture, albeit very feldome: and this they publish, because they can not make the text hang together as they would. Some referre this to Sennacherib, because his so great an armie brought him no matter of ioy, but rather of sorow. Others not amisse expound it of the Church: but they giue no reason for it, for they thinke the Prophet speaks this because the faithfull are subiect to many miseries and troubles thorowout their whole life. Others drawe out a sense further from the purpose, to wit, that the Gentiles which should increase the Church, should not bring any ioy to the Iewes, nor to the ancient Synagogue. But I cannot approue any one of these interpretations. And therefore I expound it thus: that euen as in the beginning of the Chapter the Prophet said, the benefit of this redemption should be greater then all the rest, although it seemed not so in regard of the small number of those which should returne home into their countrie: so now also he repeats the same comparison againe: or at the least, another euery way like vnto it: namely, that the grace of God should shine much more then it did when he multiplied the people. For if we compare the estate of the kingdom of Iudah, before the captiuitie of Babylon, with that which followed after the returne; wee shall well perceiue that it gained at that time more than it lost before.

There returned but a small handfull of people indeede, in comparison of the great multitude which had been led captiue thither. Moreouer, they inhabited not freely in their owne country, but by way of lone: and they were to pay tribute to the Persians, so as they held not any appearance in a manner of their first dignitie. Who would not then haue preferred the flourishing estate which was in the house of David before this? Yet notwithstanding the Prophet affirms, that this last estate, howsoeuer it appeared much lesse, and more miserable, is yet neuertheless to be preferred before the first flourishing estate and glorie of it. Hee shewes also that there shall bee greater ioy then, than when there was abundance of all sorts of riches and good things: which Agge likewise witnessed, Hagg. 2. 10 to wit, that the beautie of the last Temple should be greater than the first; although to outward view it should seeme farre otherwise. It is as much then as if Isaiah should haue said, There was neuer greater ioy, no not when the multitude of people was much more: for howsoeuer we be few, and a small number, yet notwithstanding thou hast reioiced vs by the light wherewith thou hast shined vnto vs, that there was no ioy in the former estate comparable to this. For this deliuerance was as an entrance of the true and perfect saluation, which was at the last brought and offered by Christ.

Before thee. Its meaning is, that the ioy shall not be light nor momentanie. For men often reioyce; but it is with a vaine and a false ioy which brings nothing in the end but sorrow and tears. Now he declares that the roote of this ioy shall be so stedfast, as it shall neuer perish nor be moued. And herunto appertaines the particle before thee, because there is nothing that glads the hearts of the faithfull more, then when God causeth the light of his countenance sweetely to shine vpon them. They are not caried hither and thither with a franticke and blinde ioy, after the manner of the children of this world, but their full and perfect ioy is to repose themselves in the louing fauour of God. It may be also that the Prophet alludes to that sentence which is so often found in the bookes of Moses: Thou shalt reioyce before the Lord thy God, Deut. 12. 12. For although hee there speaks of the Tabernacle, yet may this manner of speech be fitly applied to the present purpose, namely, that the ioy of the godly shall not bee prophane, but shall arise from hence that they know God; and by faith beholde him to bee the author of their saluation.

Others expound it somewhat more strictly, as if the faithfull should reioyce before God in their consciences, because in the world they finde nothing but sorrow and continuall cause of griefe. Now although this be true, yet notwithstanding wee may gather a lesse constrained sense from the circumstance of the place, to wit, that the faithfull which should be miraculously deliuered, should reioyce with true gladnesse, because they were assured by this deliuerance that God was their father, and therefore might boldly reioyce, as being for euer exempt from all euill, when they shall be reioiced into his protection. This sets forth a perpetuall ioy then, as I said erewhile.

The similitudes which he addes of the haruest; and spoyle, whereby he amplifies the greatnesse of this ioye, are cleare enough of themselves. To conclude, it appears by this this place, what profit Chriſt brings vnto vs; to wit, a ſtedfaſt & perfect joy, which can by no means whatſocuer, bee plucked away from vs; no, not although we be aſſailed with waues and ſtormes, yea and preſſed with all manner of anguiſhes. For howſocuer we be weake and feeble, yet muſt we reioyce and be of good courage: for our joy conſiſts not in muſcitudes, neither in riches nor outward appearances; but in a ſpirituall felicitie which wee obtaine by the preaching of the Goſpell.

Verſ. 4. For the yoke of their burthen, and the ſtaffe of their ſhoulder, and the rod of their oppreſſion haſt thou broken as in the day of Midian.

HE ſhewes the cauſe of this joy; to wit, that the faithfull being deliuered from an horrible and cruell tyrannie, ſhould eſtreme of this benefit euen as much as if they had been drawne out of the iawes of death. Now to the end this fauour might bee the better illuſtrated, Iſaiah ſets forth the vile and inſupportable ſlauey wherewith the Iewes were oppreſſed: and herunto belongs this heaping vp of wordes, cauſe yoke, rod of the ſoulders, ſtaffe of the oppreſſor, or, exaſſor. For although wee bee ouertender and delicate when afflictions preſſe vs; yet notwithstanding as ſoone as the bitterneſſe is paſt, we by and by forget them. To the end then that this redeemed people might keepe the ſingular benefit of God in remembrance, and in a reuerend regard, the Prophet would haue them to conſider how hard and lamentable this ſeruitude was, wherein they groined and bowed vnderneath heauy burthens, when as the ſtaffe neuer moued from off their ſhoulders, being preſſed by a Tyrant which inſulted ouer them: for which cauſe they might well reioyce and be glad of their deliuerance.

And hee yet extolles the excellency of this fauour by another circunſtance, in regard that God did openly diſplay his ayme and power in their deliuerance, euen as it were from heauen it ſelfe. And therefore he brings in an ancient and memorable exauple: that as God had in times paſt diſconcerted the hoſt of the Midianites, by a wonderfull and incredible means, without the ſtrength and ſuccours of men: ſo now alſo he would diſplay euen the very ſame power; to wit, that he will deliuer his people from vnder that tyrannie which ſhall oppreſſe them, without the helpe of any man: euen then, when none of the poore Iewes ſhall dare to liſt vp their finger (as they ſay.) We muſt alſo obſerue, that God ſuccours his, that ſometimes hee ſerues himſelfe of ordinary means: but when hee ſees that theſe means will bee hurtfull vnto men, and hinder them from looking to the hand of their deliuerer; he then works alone and by miracles, leſt any thing ſhould ouer ſhadow or linder men from the manifeſt being holding and knowledge of his power. Thus the ayme of the Lord appeared from heauen in this victorie of Gedeon, where the enemies were cut off without any helpe of mans hand at all. For what had Gedeon but a noiſe of broken pitchets, with which hee ſhould very hardly haue feared a ſort of poore miſe: hee had a little handfull of me againſt a great hoſt: and in ſtead of all ſorts of weapons, they had vaine and ridiculous ſearcrowes.

For this cauſe he compares the future deliuerance of the people to this other deliuerance, and ſheweth that the manifeſt power and vertue of God ſhall bee knowne vnto all in this laſt, as well as in the victorie of Gedeon. Some expound this place ſimply of the Law; which may well be called a heauie yoke & a ſtaff: burthening the ſhoulder. But this expoſition agrees not with the text; for ſo it might ſeeme that the Prophet ſpake from the purpoſe, which were as much as to offer violence (as it were) to this place. Let vs hold the meaner then whereof I haue ſpoken before; to wit, that God hauing brought his people out of Babylon, continued on this benefit ſtill euen vnto the coming of Chriſt. This is the ſenſe then; Thou haſt taken off theſe burthens, vnder which thy people was vniuſtly and cruelly oppreſſed.

Others apply this to the deſtruction of Ieruſalem, which was vnder Veſpaſian. But they have no ground for it. Almoſt all the Iewes referre this to Herzechias, when the Lord deliuered the Citie from the ſiege of Senacherib, and did cut off his hoſt. But this interpretation cannot agree, becauſe Herzechias raigned not tyrannically ouer the Iewes. Moreover, the Lord deliuered his people then out of the danger, and from the feare wherein they were, and not out of any ſeruitude. Whence it appears, that the Prophet looked further off; and that our expoſition is both true, and ſutes beſt with the text.

Verſ. 5. Surely euery battell of the warrior is with noiſe, and with tampling of garments in blood: but this ſhall bee without burning and deuouring with fire.

Almoſt all the expoſitours agree in this, that Iſaiah meant to oppoſe all other victories to that which God ſhould giue vnto his people. For other conquerours obtaine victorie in ouerthrowing their enemies: but here the Lord ſhall ouercome by his immediate hand. He expounds this ſpeech then, As Verſe 4. in the day of Midian, more fully. The Lord ſaith, hee ſhall not vſe many mens helpe in this worke: but ſhall winne the victory from heauen. Now when God workes thus himſelfe alone, hauing reiected all impediments, wee can cleerly diſcerne that hee is the author of our life and ſaluation. Seeing alſo there is an oppoſition which ſhewes the difference betwene the common manner of warfare, and the miracle of deliuerance, the conjunction and, which is in the miſt of the verſe, ſhould be reſolued into a particule aduerſatiue: as if hee ſhould ſay; Enemies are wont to bee put to flight by a furious fight: but God will worke otherwiſe; becauſe hee will cut off the enemies.

enemies of his Church, as if he shot forth his lightnings, and should send downe fire from heauen vpon them. Wee may well receiue their opinion who expound it, With a breath; namely, that all warriors shal be astonied, and, In burning of fire. But the first sense agrees best, and is confirmed euen by the Prophets owne words. It appears also that the Prophet speaks not here onely of that deliuerance which the people receiued vnder Cyrus, who gaue them libertie to returne into their Country; but wee must apply these things also to the kingdome of Christ.

Verf. 6. *For vnto vs a child is borne, and vnto vs a sonne is giuen, and the gouernment is vpon his shoulder: and *hee shall call his name Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The euertlasting father, The Prince of peace,

*Or, they. Or, his name shall be called. *Or, of the world.

Isaiah shewes now the finall cause, wherefore this deliuerance was to bee preferred before all other benefits of God; because hee will not onely bring his people out of captiuitie, but will also establish Christ in his royall throne; vnder whose Kingdome there shall be seene a soueraigne and an eternall felicitie. And thus he shewes that this deliuerance shall be no temporary or perishable benefit, seeing hee comprehends the whole time wherein the Church should be preferred vntill the coming of Christ. Neither is it any meruaile if the Prophet passeth forthwith from the returne of the antient people, to the full & whole restauration of the Church, which notwithstanding should not come to passe many ages after. For we haue said heretofore in the seventh Chapter, verse 14. that all the promises of saluation are grounded vpon the Mediator, for whose sake onely God is mercifull vnto vs; and therefore the Prophets were often wont to propound this pledge and earnest penny, as oft as they would encourage the faithfull, and raise them vp to a comfortable expectation of deliuerance. And thus it came to passe, that the returne from the captiuitie of Babylon, was a beginning of that restauration of the Church, which in conclusion happened in the perfection thereof; to wit, when Christ appeared: in regard whereof, there is no absurditie in this so continual a progresse of time. And therefore Isaiah teacheth, that they were not to stay their mindes in the beholding of the present benefit, but to consider the end; and thereunto to referre all these things: as if they should haue said; Our happinesse consists in our deliuerance from death; not to leade our liues onely in the land of Canaan; but rather that we should aspire to the kingdome of heauen.

This place adinonisheth vs, that we should not swallow vp the benefits which wee receiue from God, so as we should forthwith put them to forgetfulness; but ought rather to lift vp our mindes vnto Christ: for otherwise it will bee but a flashing and vaine

ioy; because such benefits will not make vs taste the sweetnesse of the loue which God our Father beares vs, vnlesse his free election ratified in Iesus Christ goes before. Lastly, the Prophet would not haue this people to rest in the pleasure of that one outward and transitory deliuerance, which they obtained; but that they should consider the end thereof; to wit, the conseruation of the Church vntill such time as Christ the onely Sauour and redeemer should appeare. For hee it is who ought to bee the matter and end of all our ioy.

To rest in the enjoying of outward benefits, without hauing an eye vnto Christ, will proue but a vanishing ioy in the end.

A child is borne to vs.] The Iewes doe impudently wrest this place: for they expound it of Hezekias; who was born notwithstanding before this prophesie was published. But hee here speaks as of a new and rare matter; yea, which more is, it is a promise to confirme the faithfull in the hope of a thing to come; whence wee may truly gather, that such a child is here spoken of as should be borne afterward. He is also called the Sonne of God. I deny not but the name of Sonne stretcheth very far in the Hebrue tongue, but it is when some other word is ioyned therewithall. Euerie man is the sonne of his Father: those who haue attained to the age of an hundred yeeres, are called Sonnes of an hundred yeeres: the wicked are called Sonnes of iniquitie: those which are blessed, Sonnes of blessing. Heretofore in the fifth chapter, verse 1. Isaiah called the fruitfull hill, the Sonne of the Olive. But this word Sonne by it selfe, can be vnderstood of none but of the Sonne of God. And here it is attributed vnto Christ by way of excellencie, to the end we might know that by this marke he is separated from all other men. Neither is there any doubt but the Prophet had respect to that famous Prophesie which was so often in the mouthes of all; I will be his Father, and he shall be my Sonne, Psalm 86.27. as it is said in the second Psalme, Thou art my Sonne, this day haue I begotten thee. For had it not been a thing commonly knowne, that the Messias should be the sonne of God, the Prophet had vnaptly and to little or no purpose mentioned the name of Sonne barely and simple. This title therefore depends vpon the Prophesie before going: from whence the Apostle concludes, that Christ is more excellent then all the Angels, and is exalted farre aboue them, Heb. 1.5.

2. Sam. 7. 14.

Moreouer, although Christ should be contemptible in the person of a little child, yet notwithstanding his dignitie is adorned with the title of Sonne. I confesse indeede that he might also haue been called the Sonne of Dauid: but it is better referred vnto God. Now the other titles following (we know) doe in no sort belong to Hezekias. And I will hereafter reiteate at large the cauils wherewith the Iewes arme themselues to corrupt this place. Let them barke as long as they will, yet is the thing cleare and most apparent vnto all such as will iudge thereof peaceably, and with sound iudgement. There is also great weight in this which he adds, that this sonne is giuen so the people: to the end the Iewes might know their their ſaluation, and alſo the ſaluation of the whole Church was included in the perſon of Chriſt. And this gift is one of the principall articles of our faith, for the birth of Ieſus Chriſt ſhould little auaille vs. vnto theſe were giuen vnto vs. Now in the verſes following, Iſaiah ſhewes what this child, and his condition ſhall be.

2. Cor. 1. 20. All the promises of saluation grounded vpon the Mediator.

His government is laid vpon his ſhoulders. It is vtterlie frivolous to thinke (as many do) that the Prophet alludes to the Croſſe of Chriſt. He bare his Croſſe vpon his ſhoulders, and thereon triumphed gloriouſlie ouer y^e prince of the world. But ſeeing it is heere ſaid, That the government is laid vpon his ſhoulders, in the ſame ſenſe as it is ſaid, that the key of the houſe of Dauid is laid vpon the ſhoulders of Eliakin, as we ſhall ſee in the 22. Chapter, we haue no need to coine new inuentions without a foundation. We thinke heere is rather a cloſe oppoſition betwene the government which the redeemer ſhould beare vpon his ſhoulders, and the yoke which was mentioned before, verſe 4. wherewith the tyrants oppreſſed the poore captiues. This expoſition agrees well, and is not ſubiect to any cauill whatſoeuer. The Prophet ſhewes then that the Meſſiah ſhall in nothing reſemble thoſe fooliſh kings who giue themſelues to laſciuiouſnes, neuer taking thought for the diſcharge of their duties, for he ſhall be ſtrong and mightie to vndergoe the burthen impoſed vpon him. Thus he extolles the maiestie and excellencie of Chriſt, becauſe he ſhall obtaine honor and authoritie by his owne power, and ſhall not execute his office with his fingers ends only, but with his whole ſtrength.

His name ſhall be. Although the verbe be of the actiue ſignification, yet notwithstanding becauſe it is taken indefinitely, I haue been bold to render it in the neuter gender: for it is as much as if the Prophet ſhould haue ſaid in the plurall number, They ſhall call. This manner of ſpeech is in vſe amongst vs Frenchmen, ſaying, * They ſhall call. For whereas the Iewes reſerre this vnto God, and reade it thus, Wonderfull, Counſeller, The mightie God, The eternal father, and Prince of peace, ſhall giue him his name; wee ſee eaſily that they do this of ſet purpoſe, and with an affectation of darkning the glorie of Chriſt: for were they not ſo obſtinate as to deſire to ſpoile him of his Deitie, the text would run exceeding well as our men haue turned it. Beſides, what need was there to adorne God with theſe epithites, if the Prophet had only meant to ſay that he ſhould giue the name to Meſſiah? For the epithites which are wont to be giuen to God are either perpetuall, or applied to the matter which ſhall be handled, which we ſee is not ſo in this place. Furthermore, it were a peruerſing of order, to put the name of God in the miſt of diuers epithites, but it ſhould rather be put before the verb ſhall call, to wit, The mightie God ſhall call, &c. Moreover, I ſee not how the name of Counſeller, can ſimply agree vnto God: for it muſt be referred to thoſe which are aſſiſtants or counſellers to kings, or ſome others.

If any cauiller will yet reſt himſelfe too obſtinately in this wrangling of the Rabbins, he ſhall do nothing elſe but manifeſt his impudencie. Let vs follow that which is plaine and cleare.

Wonderfull. We muſt note, that theſe titles be no vaine things, but ſubie applied to the preſent occaſion: for the Prophet teacheth what a one Chriſt ſhall ſhew himſelfe to be towards the faithfull. Now he diſputes not of his incomprehenſible eſſence, but extols his vertues, wherof we ſhall haue experience by faith. Which we ought ſo much y^e more to keepe in mind, becauſe men for the moſt part content themſelues with the bare name of Chriſt, without conſideration of his vertue and ſubſtance; the which indeed we ought euen more chieflie & principallie to weigh and conſider. In the fiſt epithite he prepares the minds of the faithfull to the conſideration of a very rare thing, to wit that they ſhould expect ſome more excellent and greater matter from Chriſt, then that which we ſee in the courſe of Gods ordinarie workes. As if he ſhould ſay, There are ineſtimable treaſures, & wonderfull things, hidden in Chriſt. And the very truth is, that his redemption farre ſurpaſſeth the worke of the creation of heauen and earth. So then the ſumme is, that the grace which God hath manifeſted in Chriſt is more excellent then all other miracles.

The ſecond epithite ſignifies, that the redeemer ſhall come adorned and decked with all wiſedome. But heere we muſt call that to mind which I haue touched before, namely, that the Prophee diſputes not in this place of the hidden and ſecret eſſence of Chriſt, but of that vertue which he manifeſted towards vs. He calles him not Counſeller then becauſe he knowes and vnderſtands all his Fathers ſecrets, but rather in regard he iſſued out of his Fathers boſome, and therefore performed all the parts of the office of a ſoueraigne and perfect Teacher: ſo as it is not lawfull for vs now to be wiſe further then his Goſpell; to the praiſe whereof alſo this appertaines, for therein the wiſedome of God is fullie contained, as Saint Paul alſo often ſhewes; and therein alſo Ieſus Chriſt manifeſts and declares whatſoeuer is neceſſarie for our ſaluation; and that ſo familiarly, that he ſpeakes no more to his diſciples as vnto ſeruants, but as vnto friends, Iohn 15. 14. 15.

The mightie God] El is one of the names of God, which notwithstanding is deriued from might or power, ſo as ſometimes it is added in ſtead of an epithite. But here we may perceiue it is a proper name, becauſe Iſaiah contents not himſelfe therewith, but hath added the epithite Gibbor, which ſignifies ſtrong. And truly if Chriſt were not God, it were ill done to reioyce in him; for it is written, Cursed is he that truſteth in man, Iere. 17. 5. The maiestie of God then muſt of neceſſitie ſhine in him, that in him we may place our confidence, becauſe we can not reſt vpon any creature without high ſacrilege. He is called the Mightie God then, for the ſame reaſon that he was heretofore called Immanuel, Chap. 7. 14. For if in Chriſt we only find ſtrength and the nature of man, our reioycing should be fruitles and peruerse, and the stay of our hope should be grounded amisse, and without any stedfastnesse. But if so be he shew himselfe to be a God to vs; yea a mightie God, then may wee boldly and securely repose our confidence in him. There is also very great reason why the Prophet calles him the Mighty and Strong; for we haue to fight against the diuel, death, and sinne; enemies that are farre too mightie and strong for vs to deale withall, who would quickly master vs, if wee were not clothed with the inuincible strength of Christ. By this epithite then wee are taught that Christ is strong enough to vphold our saluation, to the end wee should desire none but him: for he is God, and wil shew himselfe strong for vs. This application is the key of this place, and of others like vnto it; to wit, that we distinguish betwene the incomprehensible essence of Christ, and that power by which he manifesteth himselfe vnto vs.

4. Eternall
Father.

Eternall Father.] The Greeke Translator hath added, To come: and in my iudgement hath rightly expounded it; for it sets forth the Eternitie: vnlesse wee had rather say, that a perpetuall and continuall order of times and seasons should agree better, lest the heauenly life, which is yet hidden from vs, should needlesly be restrained to this place. It is true that the Prophet also comprehends that, yea, and admonisheth vs that Christ shall come to make his elect immortal: but because the faithfull being yet in this world, must passe from death to life, this time to come, is referred to the eternall estate of the Church. The name Father, is taken for Author; because Christ maintaines his Church in all ages, and giues immortalitye as to the whole body thereof in generall, so to euery member in particular. Whence wee learne, how fraile and brittle wee are, being out of him. For be it that wee liue very long, according to the manner of men, what shall become of this old age at the last? Let vs therefore lift vp our mindes to that eternall and blessed life, which wee possesse by faith and hope, although wee see it not visibly with our bodily eyes.

5. Prince of peace.

The Prince of peace.] Behold the last epithite; whereby the Prophet declares, that Christ shall bring full and perfect felicitie with him at his coming; or rather a quiet and blessed securitie. For the word peace, signifies as much oftentimes amongst the Hebrewes, as prosperitie, in regard that among all blessings, none are found better or more desirable then peace. The summe is, that all those who will subiect themselves vnder the gouernement of Christ, shall leade a quiet & a happy life vnder his obedience. Whence it follows, that where this King raignes not, mens liues are most miserable and full of troubles. But herewithall wee must obserue, that the nature of this peace, and of this kingdome are both alike. For it hath his principall seat in the consciences of men: otherwise it must needs be that wee should be alwaies in conflicts, and exercised through continuall assaults. And therefore Isaiah doth not promise an external peace only, but such a peace, whereby wee may enter againe into fauour with God, from whom we were utterly estranged and enemies before. Being iustified by faith, we haue peace with God, saith S. Paul, Rom. 5. 1 Now after Christ hath quieted our consciences, this very peace shall haue the chiefe place in our hearts, so as we shall carry our selues patiently vnder all afflictions: and besides, from this fountaine we shall see outward prosperitie to streame downe vnto vs, which is nothing else but an effect of the blessing of God.

Phil. 4. 7.
Col. 3. 19.

Now to the end we may apply this doctrine to our vse; as oft as wee are vexed with any diffidence; and that all meanes doe faile vs, yea when all things seemes in a confusion before vs, let vs remember that Christ is called wonderfull; because hee hath incredible meanes in his hands to aide his withall, and is able by his power to surmount farre above all that we can imagine. And when we shall be destitute of counsell, let vs remember that hee is that Counsellor. And if our power and strength doe faile vs, yet let vs remember that hee is the mightie God. And when we shall see new feares euer and anon to terrifie vs, and that many deaths doe enuiron vs on all sides, let vs rest and reliee vpon his mercie; whercof hee is not called the Father for nothing. And let vs learne to sweeten all the miseries of this world euen by this remedie. And if it fall out that wee be tossed vp and downe with diuers tempests, and that Satan labours to disquiet our consciences, let vs remember that Christ is the Prince of peace, who can easily quiet all our troubles. And thus these epithites shall confirme vs more and more in the faith of Christ, and shall fortifie vs against Satan and hell it selfe.

Vers. 7. The increase of his gouernement and peace shall haue none end: hee shall sit vpon the throne of David, and vpon his kingdome, to order it and to establish it with iudgement and with iustice, from hence forth euen for euer: the zeale of the Lord of hostes will performe this.

HE here begins to expound and confirme that which he had said before, where he called Christ The Prince of peace; to wit, that his gouernment must endure for euer, and that there shall be no end of his dominion, nor of his peace, which also was repeated by Daniel, The Angell Gabriel in like manner had respect hereunto when he brought the message to the Virgin; or rather hee expounded this place, because it can be vnderstood of none but of Christ. He shall raigne, saith he, ouer the house of Iacob for euer, and of his Kingdome there shall be none end. Luke 1. 33. Now wee see by experience, that the greatest dominions in the world, doe quickly fall to the ground through sudden mutations, no lesse then if they were built vpon yce. We may also know both by histories and examples of things which fall out euery day, how variable and vnstabl vnto the Kingdome eternall. There is none but this government onely then, which is immutable and eternall.

Dan. 7. 27.

Earthly Kingdomes vnto the Kingdome eternall.

Now this ſpreading and perpetuall whereof Iſaiah here ſpeakes, containes two members: for it referreth it ſelfe as well to the time, as to the ſtate thereof. Now albeit the ſtate of Chriſts Kingdome be ſuch, as it ſeemes euer & anon likely to periſh: yet notwithstanding God contents not himſelfe onely to defend and keepe it, but doth alſo enlarge the bounds thereof faire and wide; and then vpholds it, and cauſeth it to ſtand faſt for euer and euer. Which we are diligently to note, to the end the continuall aſſaults wherewith the Church is aſſailed, doe not ſhake our faith; becauſe we are here aſſured, that amidſt theſe furious threats, yea amidſt the very ſwords of the enemies, the Kingdome of Chriſt ſhall ſtand ſtedfaſt by the inuincible power of God: ſo as in deſpite of the whole world, it ſhall flouriſh for euer. Indeede we muſt not iudge of the ſtedfaſtneſſe thereof by the appearance of worldly things, but by the promiſe; which makes vs certain of the eternitie and continuall increaſings of this kingdome.

We muſt not iudge of the ſtedfaſtneſſe of Chriſts Kingdome by worldly things.

The eternitie of peace is added to the government, and not without cauſe, ſeing the one cannot be ſeparate from the other: adde alſo that it ſhould be impoſſible for Chriſt to be a King, but by meanes thereof hee muſt hold his ſubiect in a happy and quiet peace vnder him, and alſo enrich them with all manner of bleſſings. But in regard they are ſubiect daily to infinite ſorts of troubles, bearing many hard brunts, yea tremble and are preſſed with feares and perplexities; therefore they ought to apprehend this peace of Chriſt; which hath the chiefe ſeat in the heart: to the end they may continue ſafe and found, yea and may ſtand faſt in the miſt of the ſhakings of this whole world.

Whereas the letter mem, placed in the word Temarbeh, is cloſe, contrary to the common maner of the writing of the Hebrewes; ſome thinke it ſignifies the bondage wherein the Iewes ſhould bee till the coming of Chriſt. Others thinke that by this ſigne, this people were excluded out of the fellowſhip of the kingdome, becauſe of their diſloyaltie: and for mine owne part I reiect none of theſe expoſitions. But yet can we ſcarcelly affirme that the Prophet wrote thus; notwithstanding becauſe it hath been giuen vs from hand to hand, and that the Rabbines are ſuch diligent obſeruers euen of the leaſt pricke or point, we cannot thinke that this was done vnaduifedly.

If we grant that the Prophet wrote thus of ſet purpoſe, mee thinke it is an aduertisement very profitable to the faithfull, leſt they ſhould imagine that the Kingdome of Chriſt was to flouriſh in outward pompe; alſo leſt hereupon they ſhould forge any carnall triumphs through a vaine hope; but might rather bee aſſured onely amidſt ſo many afflictions, that the Kingdome of Chriſt ſhould grow, no man perceiuing how; becauſe they had a promiſe thereof made vnto them.

Upon the ſtone of Dauid. Becauſe the Lord had promiſed Dauid that the redeemer ſhould be borne of his ſeede, and that the kingdome of Dauid was nothing but a little ſhadow of a more perfect and happy eſtate which God had determined to eſtabliſh by the hand of his Sonne, the Prophets are accuſtomed to call Chriſt the Sonne of Dauid; to the end they might bring the people backe to the remembrance of this ſo memorable miracle. For howſoeuer the name of ſo holy and renowned a King was for iuſt cauſe precious and honourable; yet notwithstanding the faithfull much more eſteemed the promiſe touching the reſtoring of ſaluation which was promiſed vnto Dauid; yea and the very remembrance of this prophetic was famous amongſt all; ſo as there was none, no not the ſimpleſt which did not recurrence it, being aſſuredly perſwaded of the truth of it. I will not heape vp together all the teſtimonies wherein the Prophets promiſe the aſſiſted that they ſhall be reſtored in the perſon of Dauid, or of his Sonne. For they ſometimes ſay, that Dauid ſhould be King, who yet notwithstanding was dead long time before. So Iſaiah in this place ſhewes that hee propounds nothing of his owne head, but onely reſtretcheth their memories with the conſideration of that which God had in times paſt promiſed touching the eternitie of this Kingdome. By the way then, hee toucheth that which Amoſ had handled more fully; to wit, that the throne of Chriſt which had been ouerthrowne for a time, ſhould be ſet vp againe, Amoſ 9. 11.

Ier. 23. 5. & 33. 15.
Ier. 30. 9.
Ezech 34. 23. 24. & 37. 24.
Iſaiah 3. 5.

Iſaiah alſo deſcribes the eſtate of this kingdome, but it is vnder a ſimilitude taken from earthly kingdomes. For he ſaith; that Chriſt ſhall be a King, who ſhall order and eſtabliſh his kingdome by iudgement and by iuſtice. Theſe indeede are the two meanes whereby worldly governments doe flouriſh and ſtand ſtedfaſt; which on the contrary doe by and by fall to ruine, when they are governed by violence and tyranny. Therefore in regard that iuſtice is an excellent defence and fortrefſe of kingdomes and governments, and that the felicitie of the whole people depends thereupon; the Prophet by this particular teacheth, that the Kingdome of Chriſt ſhall bee an example and paterne of an excellent government.

Iuſtice the fortrefſe of Kingdomes.

But this iudgement and iuſtice whereof hee here ſpeakes, appertaines not to outward policie; becauſe we muſt hold the proportion which is between the kingdome of Chriſt and the conditions of it. Now it being ſpiritually, it is eſtabliſhed by the power of the holy Ghoſt. Laſtly, all this ought to be referred to the inward man; to wit, when we are regenerate of God to be made truly righteous. The outward iuſtice indeede followes forthwith; but it is neceſſary that this renovation of the ſpirit and heart doe goe before. We are none of Chriſts then vntleſſe wee bee giuen to vprightneſſe and equitie, bearing that righteous in our hearts, which he hath engrauen and fixed there, by his holy Spirit.

Chriſts Kingdome ſpiritual.

We are none of Chriſts vntleſſe we be giuen to vprightneſſe.

Where it is added, from hence forth, it ſeemes it ſhould rather be referred to the perpetuity of of iustice and doctrine, then to the eternitie of the Kingdome; to the end wee should not thinke his lawes resemble those of Kings and Princes, which continue in comparison but three daies, or a very smal time, and are sometimes renewed, that a little while after they should come to nothing; but that wee might know how the vertue and power thereof endures for euer. For they are established as Zachariah saith (in his song) that wee might serue God in holinesse and righteousnesse before him all the daies of our life. For as Christs Kingdome is perpetuall, because himselfe dieth not; so also iustice and iudgement endures for euer, and cannot be changed by any tyme.

Luke. 1. 75.
Rom. 6. 9.

The zeale of the Lord.] By zeale, I vnderstand a burning affection and care which God will manifest in the conseruation of his Church, by removing all difficulties and impediments which otherwise might hinder the deluerance of it. For euen as when wee enterprife some difficult and hard matter, our affection, vehemencie, and ardent desire surmounts all the hinderances which lie in our way to breake off or let our inducours: so Isaiah shewes that God will be inflamed with a rare and singular desire to saue his Church, that if the faithfull in their vnderstandings cannot comprehend the promise which hee erewhile made them, yet they should not cease therefore to be of good comfort, because the way and course which God holds, is wonderfull and incomprehensible. Lastly, hee signifies that the Lord will not come with a light and slowe arme to deliuer his Church, for hee will alwaies be inflamed with an inestimable loue which hee beares to his faithfull ones, and with the care of their saluation.

Verf. 8. The Lord hath sent a word ^{Or, is fallen.} *to Iacob, and it hath lighted vpon Israel.

Here follows a new prophecie. And as I thinke, this Sermon is diuided from the former, because the Prophet speaks now of the future estate of the Kingdome of Israel, which was then aduersarie to the Iewes. Now wee know that the Iewes were terrified with the forces and power of this Kingdome, and not without cause: especially when the Israelites made a league with the Syrians, because the Iewes were too weake to resist their power. Wherefore for the comfort of the faithfull, hee shewes what the estate of the Kingdome of Israel shall be. He takes Iacob and Israel for one and the same: but this variety hath his elegancie; when hee shewes that the wicked shall gaine nothing by their deuices, in seeking to winde themselues out of Gods iudgements, and to blot out the remembrance thereof. He alludes to the speech of those, who thinke to escape by scoffes and raunts, turning whatsoever the Prophets doe threaten, vnto sport and matter of merriment: as if some wise man would strue to beate backe a tempest, by blowing against it with his mouth. It is a yeelding of the thing vnto them then by way of derision; as if hee should say, You are of opinion that God will bring euery thing to passe which hee hath threatned, vpon others: but all the menaces which he pronounceth against Iacob, shall also fall vpon Israel.

The verbe To send, is taken, To appoint, or ordaine. The particule Beth, signifies, into Iacob himselfe. For the word of God must abide and rest there; because it cannot be, that the same should vanish away without his fruite. So then he teacheth that in this place, which he will repeat hereafter in other teatmes, My word shall not returne to me in vaine: Chap. 55. 11. because looke what hee hath once decreed, is neuer published but it fructifieth. For by the word to fall, he shewes the certaine effect and euent of the thing: as if he should say, I imagine not, neither doe I foresheew these things out of mine own braine; but it is God which hath spoken, who can neither change, nor be deceiued.

Verf. 9. And all the people shall know, euen Ephraim and the inhabitants of Samaria, that say in the pride and presumption of their heart.

By the word people, I vnderstand not the Iewes, but rather the Israelites: as also that herewithall the Prophet looseth this knot, by naming Ephraim expressly. He addes Samaria thereunto, which was the capitall citie of this people, or of ſten Tribes; because the strong and best furnished Cities, which thinke themselues out of all danger, are for the most part much more proud then others. For they thinke by agreeing with the enemy, to be alwaies able to escape out of danger; although all the rest of the Country villages be destroyed. And therefore Isaiah threatens, that it also shall be enwrapped in the very same destruction with others. Hee saith also, that all shall feele, that the prophecies which are come out of the mouth of God, shall not be pronounced in vaine. And by the word To know, which is to be referred to experience it selfe, hee priuily taxeth their infidelitie; as if hee should say, Because I speake but to deafe eares, and to such as make none account of my admonitions, experience shall make you wise; but yet too late.

Which say.] Heere the Prophet inueighes against the obstinacie and rebellion of this people; who having been chastised many times with the rods of God, and that very sharply, were yet notwithstanding so farre off from repentance, that they hardened their hearts more and more, as if they had been made fat with blowes. Truly those who mocke thus proudly at the Lord, cannot be brought within compasse, till they be wholly ouerwhelmed. Now such a conspiracie doth manifestly prouoke God to anger, and that of set purpose. This is the cause why the Prophet saith, that this proceeds from pride and presumption: whence it followes, that it is iust with God to apply to hard and knotie wood, hatchets harder then it,

Verf. 10.

Verſ. 10. The brickes are fallen, but we will build it With breuen ſtones: the wilde fig trees are cut do vne, but we will change them into Cedars.

THEſe were the words of the rebellious, and deſpiſers of the calamitie which was befallen them, as though it had bin for their profit; becauſe they take occaſion thereby to decke their houſes and fields the more richly. We will build more bricely ones (ſay they.) The houſes of bricke are fallen, that we may dwell in excellent palaces. The trees are cut downe, but we will plaine them with more fruitfull ones, This vice hath not raigned in one age alone; for wee ſee the like obſtinacie euen now in the world. With how many calamities hath Europe been afflicted within theſe foure hundred yeares? with how many ſcourges hath it been called to repentance? and yet notwithstanding wee perceiue not that any one of them hath done it any good; but exceſſe contrariwiſe increaſeth day by day, the voluptuous inflame themſelues, and perſeuer in their vices and wickedneſſe with greater boldneſſe then euer before. In a word, it ſeemes that afflictions are euen prouocations to pride and exceſſe: what muſt we looke for then, but to be broken with harder blowes then any of the former?

Verſ. 11. Neuertheleſſe, the Lord will raiſe up the aduerſaries of Reſin againſt him, and ſoyne his enemies together.

BECAUſE the Iſraelites were puffed vp with the confederacie which they had with Syria, and thought that all things ſhould fall out according to their wiſh, Iſaiah threatens a ſudden change which ſhould cut off all their hope, and ſhould wholly ouerthrow all their plots. For the Aſſyrians roſe vp ſoone after, and made warre with the Syrians. And Reſin being ſlaine, the eſtate of that kingdom was wholly overthrowne. He amplifies the matter when hee addreſſes, he will gather together. For his meaning is, that the Lord will aſſemble and mingle diuers enemies together, whom he will ſend to deſtroy the King of Syria; as indeed the army of that great Monarch of the Aſſyrians was compoſed of diuers nations.

Verſ. 12. Aram before, and the Philiftims behind, and they ſhall deuoure Iſrael: With open mouth: yet for all this his wrath is not turned away, but his hand is ſtretched out ſtill.

THE Prophet ſhewes what this change ſhall be, and what ſhall come to paſſe after the death of Reſin, who banded himſelfe with Iſrael againſt Iudah: to wit, that whereas the Syrians were friends to the Iſraelites before, they ſhould preſently after the death of their King, become their enemies, and make warre vpon them, which alſo came to paſſe. And this is his meaning when he ſaith that Syria ſhall be before. For their expoſition who by Syria, vnderſtand them of the Eaſt; and by the Philiftims them of the Weſt, is not agreeable. The plainest ſenſe is, that the enemies ſhall nouriſh and aſſaile them on all ſides, becauſe thoſe whom they thought to enjoy as faithfull friends, ſhould riſe vp round about them to ouerthrow them. Where he ſaith before, and behind it answers to the common manner of ſpeech, ſo as we need not ſeek a new or ſtrange expoſition. Let vs learne by this example what it is to put confidence in the power of men, and in confederacies with Princes, and eſpecially when we wax ſecure, being ſnared with vnlawfull bands: for whē the Lord will, thoſe who before were on our ſide, in an inſtant ſhall band themſelues together for our deſtruction: and the remedies which we ſhall take to be profitable, ſhall be hurtfull vnto vs, and ſhall compaſſe vs round before, and behind. We muſt alſo obſerue, y^e God manifests not his plagues all at once, but when we ruſh againſt him obſtinately, and prouoke him more and more, then he augments and redoubles alſo his blowes, and ſends new chaſtiſements, to the end he may tame and breake our rebellion and ſtubbornes. With all the mouth, ſignifies the ſame which wee haue in our common phraſe of ſpeech, With full mouth, as if he ſhould ſay, Iſrael ſhall be expoſed as an open pray vnto his enemies, ſo as he ſhall be deuoured with open mouth, as of the Syrians; ſo of the Philiftims.

Yet for all this.] This is a harder ſentence then all the reſt, and ought to haue terrified the vnbeleeuers more then any thing whatſoever. For although they haue ſuſtained many puniſhments, yet are they not at an end: he hath ſtill new rods readie prepared againe for them, becauſe by going on in their rebellion they draw the wrath of God more and more downe vpon them. For men take occaſion to become vterlicke obſtinate and to ouerflow in all euill whiſt they ſuffer but ſome light puniſhment, thinking they ſhall ſuffer no more, and ſo become the more ſtuffenecked. They alſo perſwade themſelues they ſhall be deliuered from the iudgement of God, imagining that all his rods are ſpent or worn, ſo as they giue themſelues the bridle, and ſhake off the yoke, as if they were wholly eſcaped out of his hands. For this cauſe Iſaiah threatens that the hand of the Lord is ſtretched forth ſtill, that they ſhould not ſuppoſe they were able to eſcape the ſame.

Now he rather vſeth accuſation, then doctrine, although the threatenings tend alſo to this end that the doctrine may be the better vnderſtood. But becauſe he had to deale with deſperate people who had profited nothing at all for any blowes they had received, therefore it is that he ſhewes the end of their calamities is not yet accompliſhed: ſo that although God ſeemed to ceaſe ſtriking for a time, yet notwithstanding he had not ſpent all his ſcourges, but had his hand ſtill ſtretched out to afflict them with a new plague.

* O., bur yeo. Verſ. 13. * For the people turneth not vnto him that ſmiteth them, neither do they ſecke the Lord of hoſtes.

They expound this as if the Prophet yeelded a reaſon why God ceaſed not to ſtrike them blow vpon blow with new chaſtiſements, to wit, becauſe the people are ſo obſtinate and ſtiffe-necked, that they will not come to an acknowledgment of their faults, nor to amendment. For wherefore ſhould God giue place to the obſtinate, in whom he ſees no repentance? ſo it might ſeeme they were ſtronger then he. This is the cauſe then why he continues to ſmite them more ſharply. And ſeeing Iſrael amended not for any correſtion whatloeuer, his deſtruction was juſt: ſuch was their extreme obſtinacie, that not ſo much as any one of them were moued, or turned any whit, although they had been chaſtiſed and beaten ſo often. This forme of chiding is terrible. For when the Lord not only admoniſheth vs with words, but pricketh vs forward, and conſtraines vs by his works, namely, by diuers chaſtiſements, and yet we remaine obſtinate, not enduring that hee ſhould pluck vs from our wicked delights: is it not a ſigne of a deſperate malice; and can one thinke or ſpeake of a thing more horrible? It is too much when men ſubmit not themſelues to his doctrine as ſoone as it is propounded vnto them: but the ſinne is yet greater when they are not moued by any reprehensions; but greateſt of all is their ſinne when they harden themſelues againſt the rods of God, yea kick and wince, or by their brutiſhnes inflame the wrath of their Iudge more and more againſt them: neuer calling themſelues to account wherefore they are ſmiten, nor what it is to which the Lord thereby calles them. When the remedies then profit nothing, what ſhould we thinke, but that the malice of ſuch is become incurable and paſt all hope of amendment?

Now this reprehension appertaines not to the Iſraelites only, but to vs alſo. For the Lord hath alreadie chaſtiſed all the world in ſuch wiſe by diuers plagues and calamities, that there is almoſt no part thereof free. And yet notwithstanding it ſeemes that all haue obſtinately coſpiied againſt God, in ſo much that albeit he do his vtmoſt, yet they are alwaies like themſelues, neuer ceaſing to goe on ſtill in their leaudnes. The Lord then may juſtly take vp this complaint againſt vs. And the truth is, that he ſpeakes now to vs by his Prophet Iſaiah: neither ought we to looke for another Prophet which ſhould threaten new chaſtiſements, ſeeing our caſe diſcreeth in nothing from that of the Iſraelites, being guiltie of the ſame iniquities with them.

When he ſaith, that they haue not ſought the Lord, he therein expounds the firſt member of the verſe; for God ſmiteth, to draw ſuch vnto him as recoile back from him. And yet it ſeemes notwithstanding that by this meanes he driues men farre off from his preſence: but becauſe his proprietie is to draw thoſe out of their graues whom we thinke he hath overwhelmed with his chaſtiſements, he hum-bleth poore ſinners by fearing them only, to the end they ſhould returne vnto him. And truly the beginning of our conuerſion, yea the only rule of good life is, ſo ſecke God. If we ſecke any other way, we goe vterlie awrie. But let vs now ſee what it is ſo ſecke God, or how we ought to do it. For hypocrites will alwaies alledge this for themſelues, that they carefulie humble theſelues before the Lord to obtaine remiſſion of ſinnes by prayer, faſting, teares, and other outward ſhewes of ſorrow. But God will be ſought farre otherwiſe, to wit, The Sinner being humbled before him in good earnest, muſt willinglie receiue the yoke of obedience which before he had ſhaken off, and whollie imploy himſelfe in his ſeruiſe, whom he before deſpised.

How the Lord will be ſought.

Verſ. 14. Therefore Will the Lord cut off from Iſrael head and taile, branch, and ruſh in one day.

15. The ancient and the honorable man, he is the head: and the prophet that teacheth lies, he is the taile.

His meaning is, that the vengeance of God ſhall be vniuerſall, and that it ſhall wrap all eſtates in it: for the whole people was corrupt, and the contagion thereof had ſo invaded the whole countrie, that there was nothing whole nor found amongst them. Now then when impietic hath thus gotten the ſwinge, men begin to flatter themſelues, and euery one thinks to frame goodly excuſes when they haue many to beare them companie; and imagine that they haue ſufficient reaſons to defend themſelues withall, when they make compariſon of themſelues with others. This is the cauſe then why he denounceth this vengeance againſt all in generall, becauſe they were all alike infected with a common diſeaſe. By branch he vnderſtands the mightie and ſtrong: by ruſh, or riede, the weakeſt; that is, the people of baſe eſtate, who in a maner had no wealth at all. He ſhewes then, that the wrath of God is readie prepared, which ſhall ſpare neither weake nor ſtrong, neither ſmall nor great, becauſe there was none which were pure and cleane from the common contagion of filthineſſe.

But in the next verſe hee expounds that which he ſpake allegorically of head and taile, plainly and without figure; and ſaith, that the ancient and honorable which ſwayed the common affaires, and had the managing of the Commonwealthe, are the heads: to whom he ioynes the ſaile Prophet, which he comprehends vnder the word taile. Now he explains both the firſt part of the former verſe, making no mention at all of branch and ruſh. But wee may yeelde a good reaſon why hee omitted this. For his meaning was to preſſe them chiefly which ſinned moſt, and thereby drew others to ſin alſo by their example, becauſe they were reſpected in regard of their eſtates. Hee brands the Prophets with this name of taile, not that they were abiecds and contemptible, as ſome thinke: but his meaning is to expreſſe the loweſt part of the body.

dy. The magistrates and Iudges are in the head or highest ranke, because they are promoted to the chiefest place: he puts the fisse Prophet in the tail, because they abused the people by their cunning and hypocritie: as it hee compared the one to Lyons or bears, and the others to foxes. We are heere admonished not to sleepe in our vices, although iniquitie raigne in all estates; yea although there should not be a man left that were pure and vpright. For by how much the more wickednesse increaseth, so much the more will the wrath of God bee kindled both against small and great. Which wee ought to take good heed of in this deluge of all mischiefs which wee see at this day; namely, lest when the wrath of God shall once beginne to burne, that all things bee not viterly consumed by it.

Verf. 16. For the leaders of the people cause them to erre: and they that are led by them are deuoured.

Others translate, They which blesse thee, or speake blessedly: as if hee should say, There is no greater petillence amongst people then flatteries, which nourish all licentiousnes of dissolutions. But yet I will follow that reading which I haue approued of before; where wee met with the very same word: Chap. 3. 12. Now his meaning is, that the gouernours and magistrates, whose office it was to leade, and hold the people in good order, and in an honest course of life, gaue liberty and licence to all to doe what them listed, suffering them to follow vice and wickednesse; and that in regard thereof, they were worthily esteemed seducers and corrupters: for the corruption flowed from them vpon all the people, as from the head into the members. Magistrates and Pastors are chosen to repress the dissolutions of people; to ordaine that which is good and right; and especially to maintain the honour of God. If they contemne these things, they are rather to bee esteemed impostors then Pastors. because they bring in horrible confusion. And when euery one gouernes as he listeth without any order; what is to be expected but some wofull euent? Where as the people bee so chastised for their offences, wee must not therefore say, that the gouernours should looke for lesse punishment: for they made none account of the charge which was committed vnto them, and in so doing, were the cause of all the e uils.

When hee addes, that those which are led, are deuoured: although by this particule his meaning is to say, that wicked Princes, and those who rule as they list, cannot but bring all things to ruine: as also because the teachers deceiue and abuse the people, in stead of shewing them the right way, because the people perish through their owne default: yet notwithstanding he therewithall shewes, that neither the one nor the other is to be excused: as if the wicked gouernours should serue as a couert for their faults, as commonly men are wont to imagine. For if the blind leade the blind, as Iesus Christ saith, they shall both fall into the ditch, Matth. 18. 14. It being certaine that there was none of them all who was not willingly misled. And therefore those onely who tooke delight to bee deceiued, were deuoured by the wicked and disloyall leaders.

Verf. 17. Therefore shall the Lord haue no pleasure in their young men, neither will hee haue compassion on their fatherlesse, and of their Widowes; for euery one is an hypocrite, and wicked, and euery mouth speaketh folly: yet for all this his wrath is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out.

* Or, shall not be, &c.

Here Isaiab shewes more plainely how horrible this vengeance of God shall be against all estates. So farre off is it that the guilty should saue themselves, that euen children, young men and widowes, shall not escape; although they haue been wont to spare such, and that in the cruellest warres. Which mercy, histories doe shew hath been practised euen by the very heathen at the sacking of Cities. But the Lord shewes heere, that he will haue neither respect to age nor sexe. Although yet another sense will not bee amisse, to wit, that though the battels depriue many women of their husbands, and children of their fathers; yet that God will not cease for all that to chastise both widowes, children, and fatherlesse. But because this sense concerns the principall point very little, I therefore stay not my selfe in it. Now to the end they should not accuse God of crueltie, hee therewithall shewes good cause why hee ought to be thus seuer towards them; because they shall bee found wicked; and therefore worthy to bee equally cast headlong into destruction, and that by a most iust sentence.

Hypocrites.] I minde not to differ from the common opinion touching this word, although Cananah, signifies a wicked one, disloyall, & corrupt. For it seemes he toucheth the chief spring and fountaine of all euils; saying, that there was no sparke of the true feare of God amongst them. Hee speaks not of some light dissimulation then, but of an inward contempt which benummeth mens consciences, so as they cannot be moued by any admonitions at all: as if hee should say, They are wholly sunke deepe in their rebellion. But for as much as iniquitie drawes the hands, feete, and other parts of the bodie with it, after it hath once gotten possession of the vnderstanding: therefore the Prophet addes, that they are all wicked. In the third place hee affirms they overflowed so farre, as without blushing to boast of their sins. The word Abalah, which some translate folly, hath oftentimes a larger signification among the Hebrewes: for it is taken for villanie, wickednesse, and frensie. The Prophet therefore as I thinke, meant to say, that they are so giuen to iniquitie, that there need none other witness to be takē against theē, then their own tongues.

Gen. 34. 7. Isa. 7. 15.

Yes for all this &c.] He againe repeates this sentence, which indeed ought often to be repeated, because it sufficeth not to be once instructed how grievous the iudgements of God are against the vngodlie, seeing we easily and quicklie forget them; and thereof it comes that we soone cast off all care and feare. And besides, a false opinion beguiles and blindfolds vs, which is, that after God hath chastised vs only once, we think his power is spent. Wherefore as oft as God corrects vs, it is good we hold vs to this principle, namely, that by y^e first, God threatens vs with a greater calamitie, vnllesse we repent betimes. And seeing the Lord reiterateth this admonition so oft, let vs learne thereby to set it alwaies before our eyes; to wit, that the wrath of God is not yet appealed, although it seemes he hath sharplie corrected mens iniquities. What are we to iudge then when hee giues vs but a fillip and away? as at this day indeed we have been afflicted; but what is it in regard of these extreme calamities wherewith this people were oppressed; and yet the Prophet threatneth that the Lord prepareth new rods for them? What will become of vs then? Truelie the Lord will doe his office, and will alwaies bee like himselfe. If this terror do not awaken vs, our blockishnesse is intollerable. I haue translated the verbe To burne, in the time to come; to the end the sense might bee the more cleere: for although he speaks as of a thing past, yet notwithstanding he threatens a continual successioⁿ of punishments to y^e rebellious.

together; to wit, that the chastisements of the wicked did procede from the iudgement of God; and yet that the fault is wholly in the sinners; to the end they might not mutter as if God had dealt cruelly with them. But his manner of speaking hath an elegant degradation: for experience shewes, that when the fire is kindled in any low place, it increaseth by little and little, and then spreads it selfe more and more, euen till it hath attained the top. Isaiah shewes that in such wise shall the wrath of God be; because it should not inuade the wicked at the very first, but should kindle by little and little, so as at length it should ouerspread farre and wide. In the beginning, the Lord proceeds moderately: if hee gaine nothing by touching and going, then he doubles his blowes. But if he see vs altogether indurate, then he sets his wrath on fire, vterly to destroy and consume vs, euen as the fire burnes vp a thicke forest. Lastly, as the other Prophets say; Wee shall finde our felues to be but straw and stubble, when the wrath of God is once kindled.

Verf. 19. By the Wrath of the Lord of hosts shall the land be darkened, and the people shall be as the meate of the fire: no man shall spare his brother.

HAVING shewed that the cause of all euils proceeds from our felues, to whom they therefore ought to be imputed; hee teacheth by consequence, that God reuengeth himselfe iustly. For seeing men draw miseries and calamities vpon themselves, God permits them not to escape his hands. Not that hee is inclined to crueltye, (for hee is louing and gentle) but because he is iust, and cannot indure the wicked. Hee expresseth the vengeance of God by the similitude of smoke and darkenesse, then which nothing is more heauie and dolefull; because so fearefull a iudgement could not well be expressed, but vnder borrowed speeches. Although it seemes hee alludes to the smoke whereof hee had spoken before. For when a fire is growne to such greatnesse, and burnes so on euery side, the brightnesse must needes be obscured by the darknesse of the smoke.

No man shall spare his brother.] In this last particule, and in the verse following, the Prophet describes by what meanes the Lord will execute his wrath after it shall bee so inflamed. For though wee discern no enenies which might astonish vs, God can arme one of vs against another to destroy our felues. As if he should haue said, that God will not be much to seeke in bringing his vengeance vpon you which he hath threatned; because although others should let you alone, & not molest you, ye the can overthrow you eue by ciuill warres. Now it is an horrible thing and monstrous to say, that none should spare his brother: and that euery one shall deuoure his flesh. For a man neuer hated his owne flesh: Ephes. 5. 19. But when God hath blinded vs, what letteth that wee should not destroy one another? And although this bee odious, yet

The first stroke God giues vs is a fore-unner of a greater, vnllesse we preuent the same by timely repentance. See Leuit. 26. 18. 21. 24. 28.

*Or, vabehic.

Verf. 18. For wickednesse burneth as a fire; it deuoureth the briars and the thornes, and will kindle in the thicke places of the forest: and they shall mount vp like the lifting vp of smoke.

THE Prophet taxeth the wicked, who make a trade of discharging themselves of their faults, to lay them vpon God. For either they seeke starting holes by perswading themselves that they are innocent, or they extenuate their sinnes, if they be conuined; as if God were too rigorous. And the truth is, that they will neuer confesse God to bee iust in correcting them, vnllesse it bee by constraint: and albeit they dare not excuse themselves openly, yet they fiet and grumble inwardly. The Prophet minding to repress such a stubbornnes, compares the calamities to a fire; but hee adds, that the impietie of men is the wood and fell which kindles Gods wrath: as if he should say, They all of them cry out and complain that the wrath of God burnes fiercely, and yet they consider not in the meane while, that they kindle and enflame the same by their sinnes, as with bellows, and that these sinnes doe adde new matter daily to this fire: yea euen they themselves burne and consume inwardly in the fire of their iniquities.

That which he saith of the briars and thornes, is as much as if hee had said; that this flame should spread it selfe throughout all the quarters of Iudea. Now he expresseth two things it comes to paſſe every day. There is neither conjunction of blood, nor of religion, nor of the image of God, which we all beare, that can hold vs in, although euen the very heathen ſometimes deferred to do euill, being bound with nothing elſe but the common band of naturall ſocietic, becauſe they knew that the beaſts themſelues agree together, taking knowledge of one another, not exerciſing crueltie to any of their owne kinde: for one Wolfe will not eate another, neither one Beare another. It is much againſt nature then that men, from whom the name of humane proceeds, ſhould be ſo cruell, as to eate one another; therein ſurpaſſing the rage of wilde beaſts. This euill then can not fall out but by reaſon that God hath blinded them, and giuen them vp vnto a reprobate ſenſe: for when as men are in peace, they thinke themſelues free from all dangers, and feare nothing. But the Lord derides ſuch ſecurity, and thewes, that he will execute his wrath vpon them, euen by their owne hands, which he wil arme and prouoke againſt them.

Verſ. 20. And he ſhall ſnatch at the right hand, and be hungrie; and he ſhall eate on the left hand, and ſhall not be ſatiſfied: every one ſhall eate the fleſh of his owne arme.

This is a common ſpeech, To pull and hale on all ſides: and this phraſe ſets forth an inſatiable or cruell auarice. Alſo this deſire of ſnatching prickes men forwards vnto crueltie. Now he expreſſeth their inſatiable deſire with greater vehemencie, in that being prouoked by a blinde crueltie, & poſſeſſed with more then a brutiſh furie, their teeth alſo ſhall be ſet on edge with no leſſe appetite to ſuck the blood of their brethren, then to eate the fleſh that is bought in the ſhambles. This circumſtance greedly aggravates the ſharptnes of the vengeance, to wit, that the children of Abraham, and the holic poſteritie of the choſen people ſhould ouerflow into ſo horrible a rage. Let vs remember then that it is a token of a fearefull puniſhment of God when brechten band themſelues one a-gainſt another, with a furious deſire or luſt to teare one another in pieces.

Verſ. 21. Manaſſeh Ephraim, and Ephraim Manaſſeh, and they both ſhall be againſt Iudah: yet for all this his wrath is not turned away, but his hand is ſtretched out ſtill.

THEſe two Tribes were ſpeciallie linked together, for beſides that they deſcended of one father Abraham; there was yet a neerer conjunction, in that they tooke their originall of one Patriarke Joſeph, Abrahams great grand-child. Now although they were ſo neere allied, yet notwithstanding God ſhewes that he will cauſe them to haue ſuch conflicts together, that they ſhall deſtroy each other, euen as if they ſhould deuoure the fleſh of their owne arme; in regard whereof, they ſhould neede no ſortene enenies. He addes alſo, that when Manaſſeh and Ephraim haue wearied themſelues in fight, both of them ſhall ioyne together and let vpon Iuda to deſtroy them alſo.

Yet his wrath.] If any man ſhall ponder in his mind what calamities Iſaiah hath ſet forth; he will, I doubt not, be aſtoniſhed, and wonder very much in himſelfe to ſee that he yet denounceth ſharper puniſhments then the former. But the Lord deales thus with the wicked, neuer ceaſing to afflicte them, till he hath whollie ouerwhelmed and rooted them out, becauſe they hauing been often ſummoned to repentance haue reſuſed, and ſtill reſuſe to be reconciled vnto him. We are not therefore to maruell if plagues after plagues be heaped vpon them, as is alſo declared by Moſes, namely, that he wil yet ſend ſeuene times more puniſhments vpon thoſe which would not come to repentence, leſt they ſhould imagine that after they had been chaſtiſed once or twiſe, all their puniſhments were then at an end. Now when he ſaith, that the hand of God is ſtretched forth ſtill, he means, that new rods are ſtill in making, which he hath in a readineſſe to ſmite them withall: for the Lords anger is not like to that of women; but his correſtions and wrath go both together.

THE X. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. Woe vnto them that decree wicked decrees, and write grieuous things.

Lsaiah now preſſeth y people ſomewhat ncerer to the quick, as he hath done in the firſt and ſecond Chapters, to the end they might perceiue y they were iuſtly afflicted. For men will neuer confeſſe they haue deſerued the paines which they indure, vnleſſe they be conſtreined therunto, and manifeſtly conuincid. Now although they were ſufficiently conuincid euen by the former teſtimonies, yet was it needfull to ſpecific thoſe things againe, by which their hypocriſie might be diſcouered. For men are ſo impudent, that they thinke themſelues ſafe if they can frame ſome excuſe, and in the meane while blaſpheme God wittingly. He handled them not too ſharply, neither did he exceed meaſure in acuiſing them, no, though in deſpight of them he ſtopped their mouths, ſeeing they were come to ſuch an impudencie.

Psal. 7. 14.

22. 33.

Auen and Amal are oftentimes conioined together in the scriptures. Auen signifies vanitie, and iniquitie; but the latter signification agrees best to this place. Amal is as much to say as vexation; and oftentimes that which is the very cause of it, to wit, the wrong or oppression which the rich and mightie oppress the poore and weake withall, abusing them by their power and authoritie. For euen as he hath heretofore shewed that the well-spring of an euill life proceeds from the gouerners themselves, so he now placeth their ill example in the first ranke, to the end they might receiue due punishment for the wickednesses wherof themselves were the cause. Which we ought diligentlie to obserue, because such as are promoted vnto the highest rooms, thinke they are then freed from the common condition of men, so as they ought to yeeld none account of their doings vnto God. Therefore hee shewes that they shall haue this priuiledge before others, euen to be first chastised. Whereas some establish here two orders; and distinguish betwene makers of decrees, and those that vniue them: I approue not of it. For in general, without any distinction at all, he taxeth such Princes and magistrates as oppressed the people in such wise, by their vnjust and tyrannicall decrees, that their gouernement tended wholly to plaine theuery. He therefore comprehends all sorts of gouernours and superiours.

Verse. 2. To keepe backe the poore from iudgement, and to take away the iudgement of the poore of my people, that widowes may bee their pray, and that they may spoile the fatherlesse.

TO keepe backe. Others translate, To cause them to turne from: but the true sense is, To keepe backe the poore from defending their quarrellor. To make them lose their suite. This is the iniquitie and oppression which hee mentioned in the former verse; to wit, that they plucked from the poore that right which belonged vnto them. They were defrauded that the rich might be gratified; and being vtterly spoiled of their luings, they carried nothing away with them from the seate of iustice, but taunts and reproches. Now hee names the poore chiefly, because they are lightly destitute both of mony and other helps. Whereas the Iudges and Magistrates then ought to haue aided them before the rest; they on the contrary rooke the greater liberty to oppress and tread them vnder foote with greater inuicacie. For those who haue most riches, friends, credit, and fauour, are not so liable to oppression; because they haue weapons in their fists wherewith they may both defend and reuenge themselves. But the Lord saith, hee hath a singular respect vnto the poore, which yet notwithstanding are for the most part despised: yea hee so regards them, that hee will not suffer the wrongs and iniuries which haue beene done vnto them to remaine unpunished. For he hath not taken vp, on him the title of the protector and defender of the poore for nothing. In him it is then that the poore and weake ought to seek consolation; and therefore to endure their troubles and miseries patiently, because God hath care ouer them, and will not suffer the harme that is done them to goe vnrueged.

The rich and mightie are heere also admonished, that they therefore laugh not in their sleeue, although God deferre their punishment: for bee it that the poore be left destitute of their right through iniustice; yet the Lord will iudge their cause, and take the maintenance of their right into his hands, who were thought to bee destitute of all helpe.

Verse. 3. What will yee doe now in the day of visitation, and of destruction, which shall come from farre? to whom will ye flee for helpe? and where will ye leaue your glory?

*Or, where will yee be safe.

THE Prophet doth heere sharply threaten the Princes that slept securely in their sinne. For it is the common custome of such, who are drunken with their greatnesse, proudly to despise al danger. He shewes then, that although God seeme for a while to deferre and winke at their doings; yet notwithstanding the time of his iudgement is prescribed, and shall speedily knocke at their doores ere they be aware. And because they were growne secure by reason of the victorie ouer their enemies; as also because they were backed by the league which they had made with a most puissant nation; therefore the Prophet expressly telles them, that their destruction shall come from farre.

The word visitation is taken here for iudgement; because God also visits vs two waies: in mercy and iudgement. For he reueales and manifests himselfe and his power vnto vs in them both. First, when in taking pittie vpon vs, he deliuers vs out of the dangers wherein we are plunged. And secondly, when he roots out the wicked, and contemners of his word. The two significations tend to one end; because God manifests not himselfe vnto vs, but by his workes; and we thinke hee hath forsaken vs, vnlesse hee giues vs some signe of his presence. The Scripture applies this word visitation then to our capacite, because when wee are pressed with afflictions, and the wicked in the meane while let loose the bridle to all dissolutions, it seemes to vs that God is farre off from vs, and that he takes no care of our matters.

In what sense this word visitation is taken generally.

Visitation therefore in this place must bee taken for iudgement; by which God will take the wicked by the necke, so as they shall not escape him: also that he will oppose himselfe against their boldnesse and rebellion.

And how it is taken in this place.

Now if there be such horrible iudgements of God heere in this world, how fearefull and terrible will he be when he shall come at the last to iudge all men? For all the examples of chastisements, which now astonish and amaze vs, are but small beginnings of that last vengeance, wherein hee will thunder vpon the the reprobate: and hee alſo referres and deſerres many things which hee ſeemes to paſſe ouer in ſilence, euen of ſet purpoſe vntil that day. And if the wicked be not able to beare the blowes wherewith he ſmiteth them here below; how much leſſe well they be able to ſuſtaine his fearefull and incomprehenſible Maieſtie, when they muſt come before his tribunall ſeate of glory, at whoſe preſence euen the very Angels are aſtoniſhed?

When he ſaith, from ſarre; note that wee ought not to waxe ſenſeleſſe whe' proſperitie abounds: for all ſuch as extenuate the power of God by a falſe ſecuritie, which rockes them aſleepe in their vices, ſhall feele, that in an inſtant he can, and alſo when he will, ſhake both heauen and earth, euen from the one end thereof to the other.

To whom will ye flee? He ſhewes how they ſhall reſt vpon their forces in vaine, becauſe they ſhall auail them nothing at all to reſiſt the hand of God. He alſo ſhewes, that as they haue been cruell towards others, ſo it ſhould be a moſt iuſt recompence, that in their need they ſhould finde ſuccor neither from God nor man: for there ſhall be iudgement without mercie vnto thoſe that ſhew no mercie, lam. 2. 13. This ſhall happen eſpeciallie to the Iudges, who ought to haue been a refuge for the whole people, becauſe it is their office to defend and maintaine the poore and afflicted: but if in ſtead thereof they deſpiſe, betray, or ſpoile the; is it not good reaſon they ſhould feele how much their crueltie diſpleaſeth God, & that eu' in their own deſtruction?

As touching that which follows, Where will ye leaue your glorie? The expoſitors take it as if Iſaiab ſhould ſay, that they ſhall be deprived of their dignitie. And they thinke the Prophet in deriſion asks what ſhall become of this their high preheminance, wherewith the great ones haue no leſſe proudly then fooliſhlie aduanced themſelues, when God ſuffered them to take their pleaſure? But becauſe this would be too much conſtrained, I rather thinke that Iſaiab inquires where they will finde hiding places to ſecure their glory. And in this ſenſe I take the word, To leaue, namely, To put in ſafetie: and the two particles answers therunto, To whom will you flee for ſuccor? Where will you finde refuge that you may hide your excellencie? Vnleſſe any had rather retain the expoſition which I haue put in the margin, becauſe the verbe Azab ſignifies, To aſſure, as well as To leaue. To conclude, if God confound and overthrow Princes in this wiſe, that are ſo high exalted, what ſhall become of thoſe that are of baſe condition? There is none then that hath any cauſe to flatter himſelfe: for wee muſt needs become all as ſtubble, when the wrath of God ſhall be kindled againſt vs.

* Or, if they fall out.

Verſ. 4. * Without me they ſhal fall among the boord, they ſhall fall among the ſlaine: yet for all this his wrath is not turned away, but his hand is ſtretched out ſtill.

BEcauſe the ſignification of the Hebrew particle is ambiguous, the expoſitors bring many interpretations. Some take it excluſiueſly, as in many other texts of the ſcripture, euen as if he ſhould ſay, They ſhall only fall among the priſoners and ſlaine, becauſe they ſhall be led captiue, or put to death. Others tranſlate, Without me: and if this reading agree, the Prophet ſhewes what the cauſe of their deſtruction is, to wit, they are reuolted from God: and this is the cauſe indeed of all euils, namely, to leaue the fountaine of life, of ſaluation, and ſo conſequentely, of all good things. And thus he toucheth the ſottihnes of the wicked to the quick, who thought themſelues ioly fellows when they had forſaken the Lord; euen as if there could not haue befallen them a more deſireable and pleaſant thing, then to be ſeparate ſarre enough from him: and thus it ſhould be a kind of bitter reproch in regard their calamitie ſhould proceed from no other cauſe then from the abſence of God, whereof they ſondlie reioyced. Others thinke this ſhould be a broken or an abrupt wayner of ſpeech, to wit, that they ſhould haue no refuge but in hiding themſelues vnder them that were fallen and ſlaine. And alſo it may be a forme of an oth. Now this ſenſe will agree well, that God ſhould ſwear with indignation that he would not pardon one of them, but would deliuer ſome ouer to their enemies, who ſhould cut their throates; and would cauſe others to be led into captiuitie. This ſentence then ſheweth what deſtruction ſhall befall all thoſe who being admoniſhed by the word of God, repent not. We alſo gather from the text following, that the Prophet threatens them with a fearefull deſtruction; for he repeats that which he hath ſaid alreadie, to wit, that the wrath of God is not yet appeaſed, and that he will finde out greater chaſtiſements then the former, to auenge himſelfe vpon them. This teacheth vs, that there is nothing better then to be touched with true repentance, and in good earneſt to acknowledge our faults betimes, to the end the Lord may ſhew vs mercie.

Verſ. 5. O Aſſur the rod of my wrath! the ſtaffe alſo in their hands is mine indignation.

THat which now follows hath ſuch reference to the denunciation of puniſhment, that yet there is alſo mingled therewithall ſome conſolation to ſweeten the troubles of the faithfull; yea, the ſpeciall drift of the ſpeech is to ſhew, that all the euil which the Aſſyrians ſhall do them is but a ſcourge ſent of God for a time only; and yet after the wicked ſhall haue triumphed with ioy aboue meaſure, it muſt needs come to paſſe that they ſhall be tamed in the end. The Hebrew word Hoi, ſometimes ſignifies a bitter exclamation. Sometimes it is taken as an aduerb of calling; and ſometimes alſo it ſignifies a woe, as indeed the old tranſlator hath turned it: yet it may not be otherwiſe expounded heere, but as if the Lord called the Aſſyrians; or ſpeakes as a man ſighing in himselfe, that he is constrained to chastise his people by them.

And yet while I consider better of euery circumstance, I rather condescend to this opinion; namely, that the Lord calles the Assyrians heere, as if hee armed them by his edict to make warre. He told the Iewes before that they should come: but hypocrits are so senselesse, that they are neuer touched with any feare of God, but when they see his plagues; or rather indeed till they feele them. This is the cause therefore why he now saith, Come: as if the Iudge should call for the executioner, and command him to binde the malefactor; or rather to cut off his head. Thus the Lord calles the Assyrians, to the end he might execute his vengeance by their hands.

Also the staffe. This may be referred to the Assyrians, and we may resolve it as if it should be a repetition of the same speech, the words onely being a litle changed. And yet I so distinguish them; that the Assyrians are called the staffe of Gods wrath; moreover, that the swords and weapons wherewith they were furnished, are nothing else but the wrath of God himselfe: as if the Prophet should say, God serues himselfe (as it pleaseth him) of the Assyrians, euen as offwords to execute his vengeance withall. Lastly, that they are no otherwise to be feared, but so far forth as God shal display his wrath by their meanes towards the Iewes, although they be furnished with munition. In a word, he shewes that all the force of the enemies shall proceede from the wrath of God, who by a secret instinct shall driue them forward to ouerthrowe this people: for otherwise they could not haue moued so much as one of their fingers. God also pronounceth, that the staffe which the Assyrian beareth, is his indignation; to the end the Iewes might know that the assaults and indeauours of the enemies were governed by his prouidence. For I approve not that which others translate, in the place, or, in their region: both are too much constrained. To be short, the Lord calles the Assyrians as executioners of his vengeance, to the end hee may punish the sinnes of his people by their hands; and protests, that whatlocuer they hold in their hands, is his indignation.

Now this doctrine hath two vses. First, to terrifie the wicked, and that they might know how God threatens not to roote them out in vaine: as also he shewes how hee will punish them. Which serues much for the awaking of the vnfaithfull, who mocked at all these sermons and threatnings of the Prophet. Moreover, this doctrine was not a litle profitable, when the people beganne to be afflicted by the Assyrians. For then they easily perceived that that which the Prophets had foretold, was not spoken in vaine, neither came it to passe at aduenture. But some wil here ask, why he now calls him the staffe of his indignation, seeing he said before, that the Assyrian was the rod of his wrath? For one would thinke hee should speake thus, The Assyrian is my wrath, and the staffe which he beares is mine indignation. But we are not curiously to stand vpon the word, seeing wee vnderstand the Prophets meaning. Now he calles men the staffe of Gods wrath, because he serues himselfe of them as of a staffe: he saith, that the weapons of men are the wrath of God, because they are not handled at the pleasure of those which beare them, but are testimonies of Gods wrath.

The Prophet then hath spoken aptly, to the end we should not thinke the wicked are carried away with the rains in their necke, whither their appetite shall leade them: but are slaid and held short, so as they can doe nothing at all without the will of God. From hence we may gather, that God works by the hands euen of the wicked. But wee must be wise according to sobriety, and speake modestly herein: for we ought wisely and iudicially to distinguish betwene the worke of God, and the actions of men. God then works and serues his turne of men three waies. First, in respect that all of vs haue our being and doe moue by him: whence it followes, that all our actions proceed from his power. Secondly, he driues forward, and bowes the wicked by a particular meane, whither it pleaseth him: and although they thinke nothing at all thereon, yet doth hee serue himselfe of them, to the end they may kill and destroy one another; or to the end hee may chastise his people by their hand: and of this kinde doth the Prophet speake in this place. Thirdly, when hee gouernes his elect by the spirit of sanctification, which is peculiar to his chosen onely. Wherefore, bee it that tyrants, spoilers, or others molest vs, bee it that strangers lift themselves vp against vs; yet in the midst of all these contused garboiles, full of all vexations, wee must lift vp our eyes to the hand of God, neuer imagining that any thing fallles out by chance.

Vers. 6. I will send him to a dissembling nation, and I will giue him a charge against the people of my wrath to take the spoile, and to take the pray, and to tread them under feete, like the mire in the streetes.

HE goes on still with the former sentence, wherein hee called Assur the rod of Gods wrath. For euen as a father takes not the rod in hand for nothing, but determines to correct his child: so the Prophet shewes that the rod of the Lord shall not walke at random; but is ordained and appointed to chastise this wicked and vnthankfull people. He calles them a dissembling or froward nation; because there was no vprightnesse nor sinceritie in them: so then, dissimulation is opposed to integrity, which is the beginning of all vertues: as contrariwise, hypocrisie is the mother of all vices. Moreover, hee accuseth not the Israelites lightly heere, but reprocheth them with a thing more execrable then any other. And therefore he presently after calles them the people of his indignation. As elsewhere hee saith, that the Idumeans are the people of his curse, Chap. 34. 5. But albeit hee declares that hee is angrie againſt the Iewes, yet the mince of the Hebrew phraſe hath a farre greater weight; for it imports as much as if the Prophet ſhould ſay, that this people is deſtinate to perdition, becauſe there is nothing elſe in them but matter of wrath. It is certaine that God is neuer angrie, vnleſſe he be prouoked thereunto by our wickednes; but when impietie is come to the higheſt degree, then his vnappeaſable wrath and inſignation burneth. Thus he takes away all hope of reconciliation from the hypocrites and contemners, who ceaſed not to heape ſinne vpon ſinne.

Afterwards it is ſaid, he gaue the reins to the rage of the enemies, that they ſhould deuoure and ouerflow into all kinds of pilling and exorſions. And yet we muſt not take this as if becauſe the Aſſyrians had commandement from God, they might therefore excuſe themſelues: for God commands after two ſorts, to wit, by his ſecret counſell, whereof men haue no knowledge: ſecondly, he commands by his law, which we ought chiefly to haue regard vnto; that ſo we may anſwere a companie of fantaſtical ſpirits, who diſpute prophanely of the counſell of God, whē they will excuſe their owne and others impietie.

Wee muſt then wiſely diſtinguiſh betwene theſe two ſorts of commandements: for ſeeing the Lord declares his will in his law, I ought not to mount vp to his ſecret counſell which he hath hidden from me, but ought rather to bring my ſelfe ſimplic vnder his obedience. If any ſhall alledge that he obeyes God when he plungeth himſelfe into diſſolutions, he is a lyar, and accuſeth God in vaine to be the author of his wickedneſſes, whet eoſ his owne heart knowes himſelfe to be guilty, for in this reſpect there needs none other witneſſe, but euery mans owne confidence. I grant that God ſerues his turne of the wicked, but ſe wicked haue no purpoſe therein to ſerue God. Therefore when he works by the wicked and reprobate; it is a thing accidental in regard of men: for they haue no intent of ſeruing his will, neither haue they any will thereunto. If therefore they take this pretext, they may be eaſily conuincid as vtter rebels againſt God, ſeeing they only do that which pleaſeth themſelues: for they haue the expreſſe will of God in his law, ſo as they ſeeke it in vaine any where elſe. In regard of them then, they do not the worke of God, but the diuels, becauſe they ſerue their owne luſts. It is certaine that the Aſſyrians did not ſo much as looke for any reward for their paines at Gods hands, but were caried away with their luſts, ambition, and auarice: in the meane while the Lord ordered their endeuors and counſels to another end, which was to them vtterlie vnknowne. Now the ſumme of this place is, that a rare and extraordinary teſtimonie of Gods vengeance ſhould be maniſteſted, when the Aſſyrians ſhould ouerflow with a furious licentiousnes, becauſe they ſhould be ſent of God not to deale mildlie or moderateli with his people, but to pill and ſack them as in open warre. He addeth alſo To be trod vnder ſeet, which is the vttermoſt of all rage, for what can men do more then with thame and contempt to ſtamp them vnder ſeete whom they haue vanquished?

Verſ. 7. But he thinketh not ſo, neither doth his heart ſeem: it ſo: but he imagineth to cut off, and deſtroy not a few nations.

BECAUSE the wicked doe trouble the consciences of the weake by caſting out the ſome of their rage, as if God had not the power to hold their hereceniſſe and furie ſhort; the Prophet presents this betimes, and exhorts the faithfull to know, that they are iuſtly afflicted by a ſecret iudgement of God, although the wicked ouerflow into all diſſolution. So then he ſhewes that which we touched erewhile, namely, that the Aſſyrians ſhall mude nothing leſſe then to ſerue God, and to be executioners of his vengeance: but we ſhall ſee by and by to what end they did it. For ſome might obiect thus: Thou art the Ambaſſador of God, why doeſt thou menace vs with the Aſſyrians? As if belke this furious beaſt would yeeld obedience to the commandement of God. To this he anſwereth, that God is ſuch a wonderful worke-man, that he knoweth how to draw thoſe to do him ſeruiſe, who thinke nothing at all thereon, or which otherwiſe would not obey him. Although (ſaith he) thou their endeuors and counſels ſend whollie to another end, yet nothing ſhall hinder God, that euen by them he ſhould not execute and fulfill that which he hath ordeined. For many might replie: What a prepoſterous courſe is this? Will God ſubiect his choſen people to profane nations? There is no equite at all in it, that our eſtate (be we ſinners as we are, in the higheſt degree) ſhould be made worſe then ſe condition of theeues, who by their wickednes and impietie had deſerued a moſt ſeuere puniſhment. The Prophet declareth then that the Aſſyrians ſhould haue their turne alſo, and ſhould be iuſtly puniſhed in their time: and yet ought no man to thinke it ſtrange if they afflict, pill, deuoure, & maſſacre others, ſeeing they ſhould not want their recompence.

Besides, the Prophet comforts the faithfull, and aſſwageth their trouble and perplexitie; ſhewing that God holds the pride of theſe wicked ones ſhort, leſt they ſhould exerciſe whatſoeuer pleaſed them. He teacheth then, that howfoeuer the wicked furiouslie rage, that God notwithstanding moderates his owne iudgements from heauen, ſo as he rakes a ſpeciall charge of the ſaluation of his Church. And therefore although that Aſhur be inflamed as a cruell beaſt after his pray, yet he commands the faithfull to liſt vp their eyes vnto God, whoſe counſell is farre remote from this blind furie of the enemy.

The wicked do Gods will, yet it is not with a minde to ſerue him, but their owne luſts.

rod of God; namely, because hee was so blinded with pride, that he acknowledged not any power about his owne. Neither can it otherwise be, that those should in any sort submit themselves vnder the providence of God, who resting vpon their greatnesse, attribute this and that vnto their owne forces. For then are wee said to giue the chiefe dominion vnto God, when we beleue that it is vnpossible to moue the least finger without his will. Contrariwise, whosoeuer thinks himselfe to haue any power of his owne, hee vsurpes Gods power vnto himselfe, with a pride full of sacrilege: as in this place the Prophet describes the insolencie of a profane King in lincly colours, who proudly vaunted as one hauing all things. This especially happens to great Princes; for they are so blinded with abundance of riches, munition, and power, that they hardly can be brought to thinke themselves men. Of which wee haue too much experience: for what Prince shall we see at this day, who thinks or remembers that he is a man, and subiect to the miseries of this present life? They are so carried away with giddinesse of spirit, that they thinke to attaine to the top of whatsoever they haue determined by and by, and that in despite of all impediments whatsoever.

Verf. 9. Is not Calno as Carchemish? Is not Hamath like Arpad? Is not Samaria as Damascus?

Heere hee names certaine Cities, although others affirme that they are regions. Notwithstanding it is more probable that they were Cities, or some strong places. Shall it not happen (saith he) alike to the places which I haue not yet subdued, as to these which haue resisted me? He compares Calno, Arpad, and Samaria (which he vanquished afterward) to Carchemish, Hamath, and Damascus, which hee had vanquished before, and saith, that these should not be stronger then they. Thus haue the wicked been wont to boast and glory in their deeds past; so as they thinke to breake thorow all impediments, as if nothing were able to hinder their counsels and enterprises: and which is yet worse, they thinke to come to the end of all things in despite of God himselfe, and without his knowledge. When we reade this historie, let vs learne not to be proud if wee haue been strong at some time, or if all things haue fallen out according to our wish. For he who hath exalted vs, can quickly also abase and cast vs downe. And if hee reprocheth the Assyrian for his ouer weening, how much more ought they to be reprobued, who attribute the praise of holinesse and righteousness vnto themselves, as if they could regenerate themselves by their owne proper vertue? For wee need not doubt but such do rob God of his honor, and take that to themselves which is proper vnto him.

Verf. 10. Like as mine hand hath found the kingdomes of the idols, seeing their idols were about Ierusalem, and about Samaria:

11. Shall not I, as I haue done to Samaria, and to the idols thereof; so doe to Ierusalem, and to the idols thereof?

Heere pride ouerflows his banks yet further: for the Assyrian not onely exalts himselfe against men, but euen against God also: yea, against the gods which he worshipped. He boasteth that the gods vnder whose protection other nations were; could not let him that he should not subdue them, and that the God of Ierusalem and Samaria should resist him no more then the former. For infidels are so full of pride, that attributing the victories which they get, to their owne forces, they make no bones to exalt themselves against God and all diuine power. They make faire shewes indeed, as if they stood in some awe of their gods; that is to say, of the idols which themselves haue forged; to whom they bow and offer sacrifice; whereby they seeme to confesse, that they hold all their victories of these treen gods: but by and by they offer incense and sacrifice to their owne nets, (as Habacuck saith, speaking of Nebuchadnezzar) Abac. 1. 16. when they brag and glory themselves in their goodly acts, counsels, prudence and industrie. For then they discover their hypocrisie, then they lay open their secret thoughts, which were hidden before vnder these close sayings: which wee may easily discerne, when they suddenly take that to themselves, which before they seemed to attribute to their god. Wee neede not wonder then if Senacherib exalted himselfe about all that is called God; for such is the fruite of impietie.

Now there is heere a double blasphemie. First, in that hee aduanceth himselfe about God, thinkeing himselfe stronger then hee. Besides, in that hee matcheth the true God with the false. Hee shewed his impietie more then enough, when he exalted himselfe about idols; for although idols be nothing; yet in regard that the worshippers of them attribute a certaine vertue and diuinitie vnto them; if they lift vp themselves against such forged gods, they shew themselves contemners of all diuine power. Their owne conscience then witnesseth against them, that they bid open defiance to God; neither is there any ignorance which can excuse them, because they perswade themselves that God is inclosed in their images. For be it that this tyrant derided Apollo, or Iupiter; it is certaine that he despised them not simply as idols; but as hauing some diuinitie in them. The other blasphemie of this tyrant was, that hee placed the living God in the ranke of the counterfet gods of the heathen; and was so bold and presumptuous to exalt himselfe against him, as well as against other gods, and to despise the confidence of Israel, as if the vertue and power of God ought not to be esteemed greater then that of the idols.

Idolaters reuerence their owne idols but in shew onely.

Idolaters shew themselves contemners of all diuine power, in contemning the gods which themselves haue forged.

We must be ware how we waxe proud of our good successes,

For he that hath exalted vs, can soone deiekt vs.

Verſ. 12. But when the Lord hath accompliſhed all his worke upon Mount Zion and Ieruſalem, I will viſit the fruit of the proud heart of the King of Aſhur, and his glorious and proud looks.

Hitherto the Prophet hath ſhewed vs what the pride of the Aſſyrian ſhould be, after he had overcome Iſrael: but now he declares what ſhould befall the Aſſyrian himſelfe, and what the counſell of the Lord ſhall be againſt him. The vnbelieuers doe all things as if God were not in heauen, or were not able to breake all their enterpriſes. For what meane theſe haughty and proud wordes elſe; My hand hath found the kingdomes of the idles; but that he thought to exalt himſelfe about all gods? But God oppoſeth himſelfe here againſt his indevours; ſo that hauing once ſerued his turne of him, hee will alſo puniſh him. This ſentence contains two members: firſt, Iſaiah ſhewes that God will frame a puniſhment for this wicked and miſdell King. Secondly, he ſhewes that the time thereof is not yet come; to the end the faithfull might wait for it with patience.

Now hee teſtifies, that the fit time to bring this to paſſe is, after God ſhall haue chaſtiſed the finnes of his Church: as if the Father of a familie would firſt quiet the ſturres which are bred in his owne houſe. This is the drift of this counſell; to wit, that the faithfull ſhould not waxe out of heare, though they ſaw this curſed tyrant to triumph in this ſort, neither yet to deſpaire of their deliuerance, as if there were no means at all to bridle his furie. In a word, God promiſeth, that after he ſhall haue permitted the Aſſyrian to exalt himſelfe beyond meaſure, yet that he will execute iuſtice in the end. Secondly, that it is his office to abate the pride of fleſh, which is ioyned with ſuch an execrable ſacrilege. And therefore the particle ſur, hath great weight; as if hee ſhould ſay, that the haughtineſſe wherinto the Aſſyrian is exalted, ſhall bee no let why the Lord ſhould not pull it downe well enough.

He takes the fruit by way of ſimilitude, becauſe the wicked thinke themſelues bleſſed when they are ſwollen with pride and outrage, euen as if they gathered ſome fruit. He placeth the heart firſt, which is the ſeate of pride, which being ſtuffed with arrogance, vomits nothing but iniuries and crueltye. Afterwards hee addes the eyes, wherein the inward affection of the heart manifeſts it ſelfe, which by the eye-lids lifted vp, are meſſengers of the vice which is ſecret. Although then that the Aſſyrian lifts vp his creſts, yet God declares, that hee hath means in his hand ſuddenly to conuert the glorie of this King into diſhonour and ſhame. Wherefore hee heere comprchends the contempt, diſdaine, pride, and other arrogant behauiours and ſignes of vaine glory; all which are to be ſeene in the proud. Now he brings in God ſpeaking: for that which God pronounceth with his mouth, hath greater vehemencie then it hee ſhould haue ſpoken by the voyce of the Prophet. From hence we are to draw a generall doctrine; namely, that God cannot indure the inſolencie of the proud, but hee muſt needs downe with it; becauſe hee is at perpetuall warre againſt them: 1. Pet. 5. 5.

Let vs alſo note that this ſentence comes in by way of reſtraint, to the end the Prophet might preuent the ouer great haſtineſſe of men, ſaying, that this ſhall come to paſſe after that the Lord ſhall haue accompliſhed his worke. For as ſoone as we ſee a man proud, wee meruaile how the Lord can ſuffer him. But Iſaiah ſhewes heere that God indeede ſuffereth this tyrant, although hee proudly and ſincerely exalts himſelfe, becauſe hee is minded to ſerue his turne of him: and that the time is not yet ſeaſonable wherein the Lord ſhould ſhatter the wicked too peece; but that they muſt wait with patience. For after he hath aſſiſted the kingdomes of Iudah, as bringing his owne houſhold firſt into order, he will not then be ſlowe nor ſlothfull to puniſh the enemie ſtranger: as fathers who are wont either to caſt away, or breake the rods wherewith they haue beaten their children.

Hee takes the mountaine of Zion, for the Church, by a figure called Synecdoche; to the end that by the Temple and royall Citie, hee might decipher out the whole body, as by the head or principall part.

He expreſſly ſaith, all the worke, becauſe wee willingly hold backe the Lord from his worke by our inconsiderate haſtineſſe: yea many times when he hath but euen new begunne. For we are wont to make ſuch wiſhes againſt the reprobate, as it is hard to reſtraine our impatience; vneſſe God apply himſelfe to our affections in puniſhing them by and by. To abate ſuch heate, the Prophet commands that wee ſhould let God alone, and leaue the fit time free vnto himſelfe when to exerciſe his fatherly chaſtiſements.

All the worke then, is taken for a juſt meaſure. Behold here a very profitable doctrine, and of great conſolation. We ſee the wicked are wonderful proud, and how they liſt vp themſelues audaciouſly againſt God, as if they were ſtronger then he: alſo how they purſue his doctrine with iniuries and ſlanders; ſo as we can hardly expreſſe the fierceneſſe of their arrogance with words. If the Lord ſhould agree to our will, hee ſhould runne by and by and thunder from heauen againſt them, and vterly roote them out. But his purpoſe is before hee doth this, to correct his Church by them. For he ſpeakes not heere of Egyptians, or Aſſyrians; but of the Iewes, of Zion, of the Temple, his dwelling place, which it pleaſed him to dedicate and conſecrate to his honour.

So at this day there are diuers diſeaſes in the Church which the Lord will purge and heale. True it is that he hath alreadie begun: but wee decieve our ſelues if wee thinke his worke to be now perfect. Hee will not ceaſe then, till he hath ſo tamed vs, that being touch-ched with a true feare of his name, we submit our selues vnto him with such modestie and teachableness as is fit. Wherefore wee must not maruell if he lets loose the bridle to Tyrants, and suffereth them still to exercise their crueltie against his Church: for the consolation is readie, to wit, having vsed them as his vassals to correct his people, he will visit their pride and arrogancie. And it is no wonder if God in smiting his chosen first, do therein declare that he hath a speciall care of their saluation.

I. Psal. 4. 17. Judgement then must begin at the house of God first: and afterwards he proceeds on in judgement against strangers, who shall be yet more grieuoulsie punished.

Verf. 13. Because he said, by the power of mine owne hand haue I done it, and by my wisdome, because I am wise, therefore I haue remoued the borders of the people, and haue spoiled their treasures, and haue pulled downe the inhabitants like a valiant man.

THe Prophet doth againe repeat the open blasphemies which the Assyrian would disgorge; for he attributes all the victories which he obtained to his wisdome and power. By the strength of his hand, he meanes his armed souldiers gathered out of diuers nations; but withall he brags also, to haue bene a valiant king: and thus is the custome of these vaine braggers, to attribute all that to themselves which is done in their name; although they in the meane while giue themselves to feasting and ease vnder the shadow. Afterwards he boasts of his wisdome and warinesse, as we commonly say, I haue bene very discreet and expert. And no doubt but he adorns his fraudes and deceits with the title of honestie, wherewith yet hee had circumcumented his neighbours. For behold the craft and cunning of Kings and Princes, euen to trouble and vex the Countrie by indirect meanes, to seeke pretence of lawes, to sow discords, and lastlie, to mingle heauen and earth together (as they speake) by their practises.

When he saith, I haue remoued the borders of the people, it is as much to say, I haue stretched out the bounds of my government, and haue added other countries to mine owne, so as there is no bound nor distinction. As if we should say, that the French King hath taken away the limits of Brittainie, Burgonie, Aquitaine, Prouence, and other regions, in ioyning them to his kingdome. He adds also, that no treasures lay so secret and hidden which he discovered not, & got to himselfe: as if he should say, By my wisdome I haue drawne all nations round about into my nets; I haue emptied their treasures; and griped all that was hid into mine hands.

Verf. 14. And mine hand hath found as a nest the riches of the people, and as one gathereth egges that are left, so haue I gathered all the earth, and there was none to moue the wing, nor to open the mouth, or to whisper.

HE further adds, that it was no hard matter with him to ouercome Kings, and lay their riches on an heape: and he makes this y more plain by a similitude; as if he should say, If a man should seeke a nest and finde the birds gone, he may take the egges away without any difficultie. For if the birds sit vpon their egges (as they haue a naturall affection to keepe their nests) either they will flie vpon him that would take them away, and peck at him with their billes, or else they would indeuour to driue him away by hissings and shrill cryings. But this Tyrant boasts that there was no bodie durst so much as open his mouth against him, and that by meanes thereof he conquered all kingdomes without any great adoe; and therefore he attributes all these things to his wisdome, acknowledging no prouidence of God at all. Now the Prophet hath set forth these brags of set purpose, and that euen by the mouth of the Tyrant himselfe, to the end he might shew that these boastings of his were so many bellows (as it were) to kindle the wrath of God. For if such a proud caytiue were not to be borne with among men, how much lesse can the Lord suffer or endure such an one?

Verf. 15. Shall the axe boast it selfe against him that he veth therewith? or shall the saw exalt it selfe against him that moueth it? as if the rod should lift vp it selfe against him that taketh it vp, or the staffe should exalt it selfe, as if it were no wood.

HERE the Lord doth more apparantlie deride the follie of this outrageous Assyrian, by which hee promiseth vnto himselfe mountaines and wonders. For saith the Lord, it is all one, as if the axe or hammer should despise the hand that holds it, and should brag of their nimbleness: whereas it appears well enough that these are but dead instruments, without any proper mouing. But before wee further expound the sentence at large, I will touch something brieflie as concerning the Prophets words. The second member of the verse is somewhat obscure. True it is that the sentence is plaine, but there is some ambiguity in the manner of speech, which also causeth great diuersitie among the expositors. All things being well weyed then, me thinks the sense which I haue giuen sorts best with the text. What? Were it not a monstrous spectacle, if y staffe should exalt it selfe against him that takes it vp, as if it were no wood? For the particule Esh often signifies as much as Against; and the Copulatiue Vau is also often superfluous. And thus we shall haue a cleare exposition, and such a one as agrees with the Prophets meaning. Heretofore he reproched the king of Aithur because he attributed the victories which he obtained to his counsels and forces: but now he saith, that herein this Tyrant exalted himselfe against God, neither more nor lesse then if the ~~we~~ deſpiſing the hand that ruled it, ſhould appropriate the praife due to the workeman vnto it ſelfe: or that a ſtaffe ſhould riſe vp againſt him that handleth it, as if it were ſome other thing then wood; which yet is dead and without ſtrength. Whence wee may know that men exalt themſelues againſt God, when they attribute vnto themſelues more then is meete, and that they war not ſo much with men like themſelues, as with the Lord himſelfe. Let vs then reiect theſe proud ſpeeches ſo full of blaſphemies, as; I haue done this by my power; I haue directed this by my wiſedome; I haue brought ſuch a thing to paſſe by my induſtrie. For the Lord is a iea- lous God, Exod. 20. 5. and cannot abide to giue his glory to another. Iſaiah 42. 8.

Now let vs obſerue theſe comparifons, whereby he likeneth men to instruments. But fiſt of all we muſt referre this to the prouidence of God in general, by which all creatures are ordered and governed, as ſome doe who confeſſe indeede, that all are moued of God, becauſe that they neither will nor chuſe; but they adde, that euery creature is moued according to his naturall inſtinct, as the Sun, the Moone, the heauens, and ſuch like things. Thus they imagine that man is carried hither and thither by his owne will and free choice; becauſe God doth nothing elſe but continue the power which hee gaue at the beginning. Now their errour tends hereto, that the frame of the whole world is indeed ſuſtained by the hand of God; yet ſo, that it is not need- fully particular mouings ſhould be ordered by his prouidence. And thus they attribute vnto God the office to ſend raine and faire weather, in as much as hee is the creator of nature; and yet neuertheleſſe, that God commands nothing; but the raine is ingendred of the vapors; and faire weather procedes from ſome other naturall cauſes. Now this con- fuſed gouernement which they leaue vnto God, is ſcarcely the one thouſand part of the dominion which he attributes to himſelfe. Iſaiah therefore rightly eſtablisheth him as preſident ouer all actions, ſo as hee diſpo- ſeth of men according as it pleaſeth him beſt, no leſſe then if they were *rod*s in his hand. He bowes their counſels, ordereth their enter- priſes, and moderates their actions; to the end wee might know that all things depend vpon his prouidence, and not vpon the appetite of the wicked.

Yet they reply, that there is no reaſon wherefore men ſhould bee thus called axes and ſwords; and that in the meane while their will, iudgement, and whatſoever elſe that diſtinguiſheth them from beaſts, ſhould be taken away from them; ſo as of men we ſhould make trunkes of wood or ſtones. But the an- ſwer is ready: for although God compares men to ſtones, it followes not therupon that they ſhould be altogether like them. For that which is like, is not the ſame, but agrees in ſome point. For although a ſtaffe cannot moue it ſelfe hither and thither, yet notwith- ſtanding is fit to giue blows: ſo the wicked haue ſomething in nature, and yet can they turne themſelues neither one way nor other further then they be ſtill guided by the prouidence and ſecret counſell of God. Thus this fitting or agreement of things, hindereth not that the whole action ſhould not be attributed to God onely.

But it is very farre from the purpoſe that ſome doe heere moue that queſtion touching the will of man. For although God be ſaid to hold the counſels of men in his hand, and turnes their enterpriſes and executions to what end it pleaſeth him; doth it therefore follow that they conſult not, or ceaſe to de- uſe this or that? For wee muſt not here ima- gine any conſtrained will, as if God drew men whether they would or no: but hee rules all their mouings by a wonderfull and an in- comprehenſible manner; yet ſo as their owne will remaines vnto them ſtill. Now Iſaiah tea- cheth chiefly in this place, that all the in- deuours of men are vaine, if the Lord giue not an iſſue vnto them: and therefore that the King of Aſhur could haue done nothing, what enterpriſe ſoever hee had taken in hand; if God had not giuen him his victories. In re- gard whereof, hee hath no cauſe to attribute the praife of thoſe things to himſelfe, which hee obtained not but by the meanes of God. And this is it which hee conſirms by another ſimilitude, when hee ſaith, that the liſing vp of the ſtaffe, comes not from the nature of wood, but from the will of him which hand- leth it.

Verſ. 16. Therefore ſhall the Lord God of hoſtes ſend among his fat men leannes, and vnder his glory ſhall hee kindle a burning like the burning of fire.

HE goes on ſtill with the former doctrine, ſignifying that God will ſhow the Aſſyri- an how hee hath liued vp himſelfe too much, and that hee will bring that his arro- gancy downe to the ground; wherein hee fooliſhly pleaſed himſelfe. For in as much as hee put his truſt in his forces, and in the multi- tude of his munition, Iſaiah declares that God will take all this away from him; and this vnder the ſimilitude of fat and leanne. For by this word fat, hee ſignifies as well riches, as ſtrength of warre; and by the word leanne, the want and neede of theſe things, wherein the Aſſyrian truſted too much: as if he ſhould ſay, The Lord will cauſe all the fat and well fed things of the Aſſyrian to waxe leanne. It is no new thing to compare proſperitie vnto fatneſſe: for euen as horſes that are ouermuch pampered, become proud, ſo as they are ready to caſt their rider, or wince and ſling with their heeles if any offer to come neere them: ſo abundance makes men become wild and cruell, inſomuch that a man cannot maſter them but by bringing downe their fiſh.

The other ſimilitude is yet more proper, to wit, that the fire ſhall be kindled vnder his glorie: for his meaning is, that by how much the more his felicitie increaſed, the hotter ſhould the flame bee which ſhould conſume it. And therein alſo he ſhewes, that the Aſſyrian ſhall be utterly brought to nothing, euen as if one should plucke vp a tree by the rootes, or should raze an house to the very foundation. For if a man should onely loppe off the branches of a tree, it would easilie bring forth other branches: or if the roofoe of an house were onely burned, all the other parts would remaine safe and sound. He leaueth nothing then to the Assyrian, but affirms that hee shall be utterly consumed. By this word As, or like, which imports a similitude, hee fitly shewes, that the flame shall bee such that it shall consume all the glorie of the Assyrian.

Vers. 17. And the light of Israel shall be in fire, and his holy one shall be as a flame, the which shall burne and consume his briars and thornes all in one day.

HE makes an elegant allusion to this burning, wherewith he had threatned the Assyrians. For there are two things in fire, to wit, light, and heate: and as God consumeth his enemies by his heate, to he also mighteneth his faithfull ones with his light. Now it is well enough knowne that God is sometime called deuouring fire in one place, and light in an other (as Psal. 36.9.) in diuers respects, because the power which he sheweth towards the faithfull is not like vnto that which he manifests against the vnfaithfull. In a word, he so threatens the Assyrians with destruction, that therewithall he comfortts the faithfull, and that two waies; first, because they shall see that God will be reuenged vpon the iniuries done vnto them: in the second place, being gladded with his light, they shall receiue new strength, and life.

He plaine y without any figure sheweth what this light is, when he addeth, his holy one, so as there needs no long exposition, to wit, that he wil defend and keepe this people whom he hath clec't and chosen to himselfe as his owne from amongst other nations. He saith then, that the fauour of God which shines vpon Israel, shall be as a fire to deuoure the enemies at the last. In a day, that is to say, it shall burne with a sudden fire. For he signifies a fearefull and vnaccustomed burning, which we commonlie see to befall the wicked euen then when they thinke themselves safest and furthest off from danger. To conclud, he shewes that all the forces which they shall oppose, shall be as Tow, which being once set on fire shall quicklie come to nothing.

Vers. 18. And the glorie of his forrest shall come to an end with his fruitfull territorie, from the soule to the flesh: and shall be broken, as the breaking of a standard.

HE continueth still the same similitude of burning, and declareth that the fire shall as well consume the high things as the low, and shall leaue nothing sound: for it may fall out that the fire will seaze vpon the top of a place, and in the meane while it shall leaue y botome vntouched. The word Carmel, which is put here, is not a proper name, as I thinke, but is rather to be taken for a fat and fruitfull territorie: and there would also be some absurditie in it, to say that Mount Carmel was in the land of Assyria. The sense therefore is, that not only the ruin of the forrests of Assyria shall bee neere, but also that the graine or corne shall be consumed by the same fire, because it shall not only run vpon the vpper parts of the land, but shall pearce downe euen into the bottoms. He addes also another similitude taken from man, Euen as a man is composed of body and soule, so his diseases shall seaze vpon him one by one, till euery part be smitten. For it often fallies out that the body will be sick and impotent, and the spirit will be sound, and so on the contrarie; but when both together are smitten, it is very dangerous. By this similitude then he threatens, that nothing shall remaine in good plight to the Assyrians, who are now destinate to destruction, because they shall perish, both soule, and flesh: not that mens soules are mortall, but because God will openly shew his vengeance vpon them. Surely this is very terrible; for the end of corrections are, that the soule might be saued, although the bodie should perish, 1. Cor. 5. 5. but when the spirit also is destroyed with the bodie, can we imagine any thing more miserable? For the flame onelic togetheth the faithfull, but consumes them not, as it doth the vnfaithfull: in whom it findes nothing but fewell fit for the fire,

As the breaking of a standard. There are here a meeting together in the Hebrew words, which cannot be expressed in another language. But it is the same thing which he hath set before vs in his other similes, to wit, an extreame discomfiture: for when the standard is beaten downe, the whole armie is put to flight. For when ensignes are taken, then there is the greater bloodshed. As when the Historiographers mention any great slaughter, they say that the standards are taken. Now the Prophet threatens not the Assyrians thus in fauour towards them, that they being admonished, might profit thereby, and be touched with true repentance: but it was to comfort the faithfull, to the end they should not thinke the Assyrian should escape vnpunished, when he had exercised his cruelties against the people of God: as also lest they should imagine, that the Lord had forgotten his promise, or that he was not able to bring the enterprises of his enemies to confusion. And in deede, vnlesse the Prophet had speedily prevented the matter this way, many such doubts would haue come into their mindes.

Vers. 19. And it shall bee easie to number the rest of the trees of his forrest: for a little child shall tell them.

THE Hebrew phrase shewes that there shall be a very small number left; and thus hee onely confirms the former sentence, to wit, that there ſhall be ſuch a waſte after the Lord ſhall haue brought the Aſſyrians downe, that the reſidue ſhall be caſtie ſold. And yet he goes on further in ſaying, there ſhall be ſo few, that a little child ſhall be able to tell all that remaine: for we know that little children haue much adoe to count to three or foure. Thus then the kingdome of the Aſſyrians, which in times paſt appeared as a great foreſt, the trees thereof being cut downe and ouerthrowne, ſhall become like to a ſmall number of trees ſcattered a great way off one from another.

Verſ. 20. And it ſhall come to paſſe in that day, that the remnant of Iſrael, and thoſe which ſhall eſcape of the houſe of Iacob, ſhall reſt no more vpon him that ſmote them: for they ſhall reſt vpon the Lord, the holy one of Iſrael in truth.

NOW hee returns to the choſen people, and deſcribes the fruit of the chaſtiſement which was at hand. For in as much as it is an hard and difficult thing to be moleſted and afflicted, and that wee flee it as much as poſſibly we can: the Lord ſhewes vs the fruit of afflictions, that ſo hauing learned to conſider the end thereof, we might indure them the more cheerefully: as if hee ſhould ſay, I know you would ſaine that the Aſſyrian were farre off from you, that ſo you might inioy your commodities quietly; but yet think with your ſelues, that this affliction is as neceſſarie for you, as a potion for a ſicke ſtomacke; for you know not the power of God, and therefore withdraw you your affiance from him, to ſet it vpon the wicked. Now what a miſerable thing is it to put the hope of our ſaluation in thoſe that are Gods enemies, and to ſlay our ſelues vpon them which ſeek nothing but our overthrow? For the Iſraelites reſted one while vpon the Aſſyrians; then vpon the Egyptians. And therefore there was no loſſe in leſſening of the people, becauſe this little handfull which remained, learned thereby to put their truſt in God. And in this reſpect alſo wee may know how needefull it was that God ſhould chaſtiſe the Iſraelites.

Now the moderation which he addes, contains an excellent and wonderfull conſolation, to wit, that notwithstanding this, yet a remnant of the Iewes ſhould remaine, amongſt whom the true ſeruiſe of God ſhould be reſtored. For the particel In truth, is not ſuperfluous: for before the Lord afflicted the, they all made profeſſion to be of the true religion, and called vpon God together: but it was in hypocriſie. Iſaiab then deriding this counterit holineſſe, ſaith, that their hope ſhall be found and ſincere, when they ſhall once be purged from their ſainings and deceits. For although they proudly boaſted themſelues to reſt onely vpon the Lord, yet did they reſt in deepe vpon the helpe of the Aſſyrians. When the Aſſyrians therefore ſhould chaſtiſe them, they ſhould then learne to truſt in God onely, and to turne away their heart from looking for ſuccours from men. Hence we may gather, that we cannot ſolely reſt our ſelues vpon God, vnleſſe wee wholly plucke away all our truſt from creatures. Becauſe we ought ſo to ſtay vpon him, as to renounce all other things willingly for his ſake. Where this confident truſt is not, there hath truth no place, becauſe the heart is double and parted in twaine.

Verſ. 21. The remnant ſhall turne, the remnant of Iacob to the ſtrong God.

THE remnant ſhall be conuerted. This is a confirmation of the former ſentence, although hee ſeemes to allude to that place of the ſeuenth Chapter, where the ſonne of Iſaiab was called Shear-iſhab. For we haue there ſaid, that this name was impoſed vpon him accidentally; to the end hee might be as it were a pledge of that deliuerance to come, of ſ which his father had prophesied. It was needfull alſo that the Iewes ſhould be confirmed diuers waies, to the end they might be aſſured that the Lord would bring them back in the end. Wherunto alſo appertaineth that which he addeth, In the ſtrong God, that is to ſay, to him, whom the people being conuerted from their reuolt, ſhall acknowledge to be the protector of their ſaluation. For this epithite is attributed vnto God, according to the circumſtance of the place. It ſhould ſeeme that the word El, which ſignifies God, ſhould haue expreſſed his power ſufficiently, but he would alſo adde Gibbor: that is to ſay, Mightie, or Strong, to the end he might ſtirre vp the people to truſt the more confidently in him. For how could it come to paſſe that the people ſhould returne from vnder the Aſſyrians and Egyptians, vnleſſe they were perſwaded that God was alſufficient, who ſhould doe the deeде? This then is the wellſpring of all our euils; to wit, when wee are not reſolved that whatſoever wee can with or deſire for our ſaluation, is in God.

Verſ. 22. For though thy people, O Iſrael, were as the ſand of the ſea; yet ſhould but a remnant be ſaued. The conſumption determind ſhall abound in iuſtice.

HEE excludes hypocrits from their fooliſh confidence: for it was enough in their conceit for them that they were the children of that holy perſonage Abraham according to the fleſh onely: and vnder this bare and naked pretext of their originall, they would be thought moſt holy. In the meane while he exhorts the faithfull to patience; to the end they might learne with a mecke and quiet ſpirit, to wait for this diſcomfure and diminution of their multitude; to the end that whē it ſhould come to paſſe, they ſhould not be troubled at it as at ſome new thing. He comforts them then for feare they ſhould not beare ſuch a waſting patiently; becauſe therout the Lord was purpoſed to gather a ſmall remnant at the least. The Hebrew verb signifies To finish, and sometimes also To consume. The latter signification agrees best, for he calles this diminishing of the people, a Consumption, and that Accomplished: and herein hee speaks excessiue (as they say) for it would be a thousand to one that they were not all destroyed, and therefore a very few should escape.

The name of Israel may be taken here in the genitiue, or in the vocatiue case; so as in this latter sense he should speake to the Patriarke Jacob, or to all the faithful in his name. But seeing Y meaning is cleare inough how-focuer we take it, the matter is of no great moment. It may be taken also in the genitiue. For mine owne part I rather thinke it is a proper name to point out as it were the true and obedient Israelites, for he vtters a vehement speech in turning himselfe to the Patriarke; and God in speaking to him that was dead testifies to the liuing, that that which he had long ago promised, to wit, that the posteritie of Abraham, which should be innumerable as the sand of the sea, should not stretch it selfe to a confused multitude, who had cast off all true godlines, but that there should be an interruption in this degenerate people, till that a litle while after they should be renewed.

He addes also another consolation, to wit, that this litle handfull shall abound in iustice. For we are in danger to be out of heart, and to doubt of the mercie of God, when we see the Church of God oppressed with such grievous calamities, so as it seemes it must fall in ruin. To those who are touched with true repentance know by experience that this is the heauic temptation of al others. It was needfull therefore that the hearts of the faithfull should be fortified against it, that by considering the fruit which should come vnto them from this discomfiture, they might feele their grieife asswaged: which fruit was this, that thereby the whole earth should be ouerspred with iustice, euen as a riuer that ouerfloweth. He touched this point before, when he said that this remnant should rest vpon the Lord their God in truth.

The word Iustice is diuersly expounded. Some referre it to the preaching of the Gospel, because the righteousnes of God is reuealed fro faith to faith by it, as S. Paul saith Rom. 1. 17. Now the Gospell was published throughout the whole world by the ministrie of the Apostles, who were as a small remnant of the Iewes. Others had rather to take it thus, as if this Consumption were a testimonie or witness of the iustice of God, who did so grieuouse chastise his people. But I had rather expound it more generallie thus; This Consumption shall iustice so fill the whole earth with iustice. Those which shall remaine, be they neuer so few, shal yet iustice notwithstanding to cause the riuers to run with iustice, in such wise that the whole world shall be covered therewith.

Verf. 23. For the Lord God of hostes

Will make a Consumption, and shall place the bounds in the midst of the earth.

This repetition doth againe pluck away the meanes from these proud contentners of God wherein they flattered themselves. For it was a thing almost incredible that the Iewes should perish as it were in a moment, who had so many promises made Gen. 17. 7. them, and with whom God had contracted a perpetuall covenant: it also seemed to be repugnant to the nature of God, which is immutable. The Prophet threatneth then, that the Lord is the author of this Consumption, to the end he might beate downe the pride of the wicked, who trusting in their present felicitie, thought themselves out of all danger, and being puffed vp with this vaine confidence, laughed at all admonitions and warnings. God, saith he, shall bring your land to a desert, so as in the most flourishing part thereof shall be scene a consumption most like vnto a wildernes. For he takes the midst of the earth for the heart of it, that is to say, for the places most strong and best fortified. Many thinke the word Consumption should be an adiectiue: but I had rather affirme that it is a substantiue, according to which sense it is taken in Daniel, and in other Dan. 9. 24. places. 27.

Saint Paul alledgeth this text, but it is somewhat different in words from these of the Prophet in this place, to wit, according to the vulgar exposition which was then most receiued. Now although the Apostle spake properlie, faithfullie, and according to the Prophets meaning, yet the words which he reciteth being drawne from the Greeke interpretation, haue occasioned many to erre from the true sense of the Prophet. For in regard that the Greeke translator had turned it Logos, that is to say, The word, many haue defacated vpon the Gospel, and thereupon haue affirmed, that the abolishing of the law is here signified, because the Gospel puts an end to the figures and ceremonies: and coequectiue, that it is a word abbreviated & compendious, wherby we are discharged of Y yoke of the law vnder which the people sighed. But this comes nothing nere Y Prophets intention, for he calles consumption heere a decreasing, by meanes whereof the people shall be almost brought to ruin: and therunto tend both senses, namely, that of S. Paul, and of the Greeke interpretation also. For by Word, they vnderstood that which the Hebrews expresse by the word Davar. And although the Prophet hath not the word Davar, yet notwithstanding that which he hath in the text signifies a thing determined, that is to say, a Consumption, and both of them haue one and the same meaning. To conclude, the Apostle repeates that in this place which Isaiah said now touching the future consumption of the people, and reacheth that this prophetic was chiefie accomplished in his time when as the Iewes for their vnthankfulness were cut off from the kingdome of God, some small remnant only reserved,

Verf,

Verſ. 24. Therefore the Lord God of hoſtes, ſaith; My people which dwell in mount Zion, feare not Aſſur. Hee ſhall ſmite thee with the rod, and ſhall liſt vp his ſtaffe vpon thee, after the manner of Egypt.

*Or, example

Hee goes on with the former conſolation, which onely pertained to the faithfull, who in very deed were then a ſmall number. For many gloried in the name of God, and would be taken for his people; but very few there were who ſhewed that by their practice, which they professed in word. He ſpeakes not to all then indifferently; but to thoſe onely which ſtood in neede of conſolation. For ſeeing they were in danger to loſe all their hope, when they compared their condition with others, and that the kingdom alſo was deſtroyed: for this cauſe, I ſay, it was very expedient they ſhould be comforted. And this diſtinction is to be noted: for otherwiſe it had been abſurd to haue directed ſpeeches ſo diuers, vnto perſons of one condition. He adds the reaſon of the conſolation; to wit, that this diſcomfure ſhall be nothing elſe but as the liſting vp of the rod, which ſhall be onely to chaſtiſe them, and not to deſtroy them.

The letter Deret, is a particule of ſimilitude. The word Deret, ſignifies example. I expound it then, After the example of Egypt; as if hee ſhould ſay, Although the Aſſyrian be cruell, and by all meanes will ſeek thy ruine; yet he ſhall not kill, but ſhall onely ſmite thee. Hee alledgeth the example of Egypt then, the bondage whereof was very hard; and yet not deadly. For in the miſt of perplexities and conſuſions, the Prophets are wont to bring the people backe to the contemplation of this redemption, whereby God deliuered his choſen people miraculoſly from the hand of this cruell tyrant Pharaoh. The ſenſe therefore is, euen as the Lord was the ſtrongeſt then, and deſtroyed the Egyptians, who practiſed your deſtruction: ſo will he now alſo eaſily overcome the Aſſyrians.

Exod. 1. 14.

Exod. 14. 24

Others expound it, In the way of Egypt, in regard the Aſſyrians made warre with the Jewes, becauſe of the Egyptians. But this expoſition cannot agree; and if wee looke narrowly into the text, we ſhall finde none more fit then that which I haue alledged; as alſo it is approued of the beſt expoſitors. For there are heere two members one oppoſite againſt another; to wit, the affliction wherewith the Egyptians had vexed this people; and the calamitie wherein they ſhould be wrapped vnder the Aſſyrians. As the puniſhment which the Egyptians inflicted vpon them was not mortall, no more ſhould that of the Aſſyrians be. As if it had been ſaid in theſe or the like words; Thou knoweſt my force and power againſt Pharaoh; ſo alſo ſhalt thou know it againſt Senacherib. Neither would the knitting together of theſe ſentences match well, vnleſſe we ſhould expound it thus.

Verſ. 25. But yet a little while and mine indignation ſhall be conſumed: and my wrath ſhall be kindled to deſtroy them.

Hee meanes not onely the ſiege which Senacherib planted with a mightie armie be-^{2. King. 18.} fore Jeruſalem, but the other diſcomfures alſo^{17.} whereby this citie was deſtroyed, the Temple raſed, and the people carried away captiues. For it was needfull that the faithfull ſhould be fortified againſt theſe grieuous aduerſaries with ſuch promiſes as theſe. Which wee are diligently to obſerue; becauſe if wee lightly paſſe this ouer, as other expoſitors doe, wee cannot ſidly ioyne theſe things together. Thus the captiuitie of the people was as a conſumption; becauſe Babylon was as their ſepulchre, and their exile as a kind of death. When neceſſitie then appeared, and that Senacherib with his armie beganne to preſſe neere vpon them, ſo as they were in great diſtreſſe being thus beſieged, this very conſolation was exceeding neceſſarie. For it might ſeeme that Iudea was vtterly conſumed, and there was litle or no hope of ſuccour left touching outward appearance: as if hee ſhould ſay; Obſerue therefore this conſolation diligently; to wit, the Lord will ſpare thee: true it is hee will deſerre it for a litle while, and will hold his ſuccour hidden as he were from thine eyes; but in the end hee will deliuer thee, and will be reuenged vpon thine enemies, whom hee hath determined vtterly to conſume.

If any will take the verbe Calab, To conſume: he ſaith, he will conſume his wrath, in the ſame ſenſe, as we are commonly wont to ſay; we conſume the yeares and our age: that is, I will giue way to mine indignation, till ſuch time as I haue vtterly deſtroyed the Aſſyrians. But the word, to accompliſh, is more proper; as if hee ſhould ſay, Till I haue executed mine indignation. And this is the deſtruction wherewith hee threatens the vncircumciſed elſewhere. For when the Lord hath taken away all hope of mercy, hee then executeth his iudgement againſt the vnfaithfull.

Verſ. 26. And the Lord of hoſtes ſhall raiſe vp a ſcourge againſt him, as the plague of Madian, in the rocke of Oreb, and his ſtaffe vpon the ſea: and ſhall liſt it vp in the way of Egypt.*

*Or, after the manner of Egypt.

Iſaiah vſeth heere the word ſcourge, and not rod: thereby ſignifying, that the Lord would handle the enemies much more roughly and ſeuerely then they handled the Jewes. For he threatens them with an vtter deſtruction: and declares the ſame more plainly by two examples: the fiſt is of the Madianites, who were horribly deſtroyed in the valley of Oreb; which was thus nominated becauſe of their king: the ſecond is of the Egyptians, which were drowned by the Lord in the red ſea; when they purſued his people.

ple. Iudg. 7. 22. Exod. 14. 21. Now in the first place he recites the historie which was alittle fresher in memorie then the other: in the second, that which was most auncient. Whence we learne, that the Lord displayeth his power for the maintenance of his Church, to the end that in the midst of the greatest confusions in the world, we might remaine steadfast in faith, that being vpheld and stayed vpon his fauour, we might be of good cheere, and of good hope. For his custome hath bin to deliuer his Church by wonderfull and vnexpected meanes, as wee may see came to passe in the time of Moses, and Gedeon. Wee ought euermore the to call these his benefits to mind, to the end we may so much the more couragiously learne to put our trust in God, and to perseuer constancie.

God manifest his power in all times for the preservation of his church, that in the midst of the greatest confusions our faith might remain vnshaken.

- 2 We may also gather from hence, that all the afflictions which compass vs about, are the rods wherewith God beates vs; and yet in the meane while he suffreth neither Satan nor none of his instrumets to hurt vs deadlie.
- 3 Contrariwise, an horrible destruction is prepared for our enemies, as wee see came to passe to the Madianites and Egyptians. This is then a singular consolation, that when we shall compare our condition with theirs, we shall indeede see them merrie, and proudly insult over the children of God; but it is only for a time: for we shall by and by heare what an horrible sentence is pronounced against them, to wit, that they are ordained to a deadlie and an eternall destruction.

Verf. 27. And at that day shall his burden be taken away from off thy shoulder, and his yoke from off thy neck: and the yoke shall be destroyed because of the anointing.

2. Chron. 36.
22. 23.
Ezr. 1. & 2.
2. Kin. 19. 35

IT is vncertaine whether he heere speaks of the deliuerance which hapned vnder Zorobabel, or of that admirable discomfiture of Senacherib, whē he besieged Ierusalem with a mightie armie. All almost agree to this latter exposition: and in very deed, the drift and scope of the text approues it, for he will adde a description of the wayes and chiefest places wherby Senacherib should passe to come to Ierusalem: so as it should seeme nothing should hinder him from inioying the citie at his pleasure. I somewhat assent to this exposition; I only extend this prophesie further off: for Isaiah meant to comfort the faithfull who were pressed with the present calamitie: and the promise also might seeme vaine, seeing the calamities which should come vpon them afterwards were whollie contrarie vnto it. As for example, if the Lord should promise me prouision for the next yeere, and should yet leaue me destitute of it, what credit could I giue to the promise made vnto me; the accomplishment whereof I must wait for so long a time, if he deliuer me not from the present necessitie? Thus the promise of the Lord, who had said he would deliuer his people out of Babylon, and would perpetuallie assist them, might seeme as good as vanished, when the people should see themselves laid open to the throate of this rauenous wolfe. The Prophet then minding to preuent this difficultie, comprehends both the points before mentioned, to wit, that God will keepe his people, and in the end deliuer them from death. Others reframe this to the discomfiture of the host of Senacherib. But because Isaiah promisseth that the yoke shall be dissolued, or broken, I make no question but he speaks of the deliuerance from the captiuitie. In a word, he affirmes, that God will not only deliuer them out of Babylon, but will also giue them succor euen against the siege of this Tyrant Senacherib, whom he will not suffer to passe beyond that which is threatened.

His burden shall be taken from off thy shoulder.] He expresseth this tyrannie two waies, that he might the better amplify the benefit of the redemption. If any will referre this to Senacherib, there was not as yet any such heauie burthen imposed vpon the shoulders of the Iewes vnder his tyranny. The people only payed him a certaine tribute, as we may discern by the holy historie. Wherfore then hath hee expressed this tyrannie vnder two termes? It is very likely that he had respect vnto the present perill, in regard this proud tyrant had already deuoured y whole countrie of Iudea (like a cruell beast as he was) by his insatiable couetousnes: and had so oppressed them, that it might seeme his yoke could neuer be remoued fro off their necks. But I haue already giuen the exposition which seemes best vnto me, to wit, that the Prophet speaks here of the continual course of Gods grace, euen till the time of redemption.

Some expound this which followes of the face of anointing, by the word Fanctie, which noynt the yoke: but this exposition is too strict. Others are better aduised, who take the word Schamen in his accustomed signification, to wit, for oymnt, or oyle. For he brings them back vnto Christ, shewing, that by meanes of him it shall come to passe they shall be deliuered from vnder this tyranny. Now hee calleth Anointing, the kingdom which had bin consecrated by the Lord, and for this cause would he keepe it pure and entire. And when the Prophets will set forth the maiestie of this kingdom, they make mention of the anointing wherewith the Lord in speciall maner had adorned it, because it was a figure of Iesus Christ. For although God had established the rest of their neighbour kingdomes, yet were they prophane notwithstanding; but this was an holy kingdom in respect of others, because the Lord ruled after a speciall maner in Iudea; and vnder this figure of the kingdom, he represented Iesus Christ vnto them. For this cause also the promise was made to Salomon, that the throne of this kingdom should be perpetual, 1. King. 9. 5.

Whereas some expound this word anointing, of the King himselfe; it is too much constrained, neither contains it any substantiall doctrine in it. Thus then the Prophet shewes them then the meanes whereby this tyrannie shall be brought to nothing : for there was little or no hope left in outward appearance, that they should thus easlie shake off the yoke of so mightie a tyrant. Now he tells them then that this shall come to passe by meanes of the anointing of this heauenly kingdom : to the end all might vnderstand that this benefit did wholly depend vpon the vertue of Christ, and not vpon fortune, nor vpon the power of men.

Verf. 28. He is come to Aiath: he is passed into Migron: at Micmash shall he lay vp his armour.

BECAUSE the holy Citie should immediately be besieged, the Prophet sets all the furniture of Senacherib before their eyes, to the end that after the faithful had well bethought them of euery particular formerly mentioned, they might rest stedfast vpon God. And this description had great efficacy to appease their terrours, when they knew the Assyrians should not remove a foot but by wil of God, who by the mouth of his Prophet, had plainely chalked out all the way of the enemy. We need not stand much in expounding the situation of the places which are named here. It sufficeth vs to know that hee passed by these places, whereof the Iewes are heere aduertised. Whereas we haue translated, he shall lay vp his armour; others translate, He hath numbered: for the verbe Pakad, signifies also to number. I reiect not this interpretation; but yet I willingly receive the first rather; because it seemes to mee the Prophet declares that the King of Assyria shall lay vp his armour: that is to say, his victuals and other warlike munitions in Mickmash. We also know it is the manner of them that goe to warre, neuer to set forward without munition, which they lay vp in some safe and fit place, to the end the Campe may be provided of those things which are necessary for it. Now by the word Armour, or, munition, hee not onely meanes darts, and swords; but also all provisions and helpes of warre : for the signification of the Hebrew word stretcheth very farre, and comprehends all sorts of instruments; as also vnder the word Vessels, the Latins vnderstand diuers things.

Verf. 29. They have gone ouer the floods: they lodged at the lodging at Geba: Ramah is afraid: Gibeah of Saul is fled away.

SOME thinke hee speaks in this place of Iordan; but I know not whether one could wade ouer Iordan in that quarter or no. Howsoever it be, hee sets forth what an astonishment there should be when newes should come of the Assyrians arriuall; to wit, that all the Countrey shall be overwhelmed with feare and terrour; so as it shall fall into the hands of the Assyrians, euen as it were of it owne accord. For where so great a feare hath once inuaied the heart, there the vanquished will easly yeelde themselues euen at the first fault of the enemy : so as the conquerours shall rob and spoile at their pleasure. Hee speaks in the plurall number, as hauing changed the person; because he mentioneth the King in one respect, and his host in another. He names Ramah chiefly, because it was the neereſt village : and describes also the flight of some, who being amazed with the onely bruit, should giue vp the Countrey into the enemies hands.

Verf. 30. Lift vp thy voyce O daughter Gallim; cause Laish to heare, O poore Anathoth.* *Or, neigh

AFTER hee had spoken of so great terrour, by the word neigh, hee also mentioneth the cries and shrieks which should be heard in other parts. It is a verie common thing among the Hebrewes to call Cities by the name of daughters. Now hee shewes that the cry shall be so great, that the neighbour Cities shall heare it. For the lamentation which shall be made in Anathoth, shall be heard of Laish.

Verf. 31. Madmenah is removed: the inhabitants of Gebim haue gathered themselves together.

BY an excessiue manner of speech hee meanes, that this Citie Madmenah was shaken in such wise, as it seemed to remove out of the place. Which is to be referred to the tumults of the people, that fled : as if hee should say, The inhabitants of Madmenah shall make no lesse noise, then if the Citie should be turned vpside downe. As touching that which followes, the inhabitants of Gebim haue gathered themselves together; wee may expound it, that they should gather themselves vpon an heap with feare. Others vnderstand it as if they should presse one another, the way being too narrow for passage.

Verf. 32. Yet there is a time that he will stay at Nob: hee shall lift vp his hand toward the mount of the daughter Zion, the hill of Ierusalem.* *Or, it shall be yet day, when hee shall come into Nob to slay there.

SOME expound that the Assyrian shall remaine yet one day in Nob, which was a little citie neere to Ierusalem, as Seterome and others witness. But I rather agree to their opinion, who thinke that the enemy should arise there very early, that he might make his preparations to goe the next day to besiege Ierusalem : for his meaning is to shew the diligence of the Assyrian; and how neere Ierusalem was to an vtter ruin : as if he should say, The enemy shall haue no great way to goe, and shall arise in Ierusalem before the day be at an end. That which followes of the lifting up of the hand, serues to augment the feare, because Senacherib hauing already conquered all the countrie, will threaten Ierusalem, as if with his only looke he could take and sack it. By the word Zion he comprehends all the citie, taking a part for the whole, because this part was the highest, and overlooked all the quarters of the Citie. From the foolish overweening of this tyrant the Prophet shewes that the citie of Ierusalem was not farre off from an vtter downfall: for the whole countrie, yea the Citie it selfe was so astonished, that none durst oppose himselfe against the enemy. Thus the Prophet meant to amplify the benefit of God by these circumstances, to wit, that it was to be attributed to the speciall fauor and good wil of God, and not to mans help, which auailed nothing that Ierusalem was deliueted, euen as if a man should haue pulled a sheepe out of the iawes of the wolfe.

Verf. 33. Behold, the Lord God of hostes shall cut off the bough with feare, & they of high stature shall be cut off, and the hie shall be humbled.

34. And he shall cut away the thick places of the forest with iron, and Lebanon shall haue a mightie fall.

Almost all the expositours doe expound this place of the Assyrians, for they think the Prophet threatens this destruction where with the Lord will roote them out after they haue besieged Ierusalem; as if he should speak on this wise, The Assyrian shall be so swolne with pride, that he will thinke himselfe sure of Ierusalem as soone as he shall haue once looked vpon it: and also, that all shall be astonished at his coming, so as some shall flee away, others shall yeeld themselves voluntarily; therefore he will by and by imagin himselfe Lord ouer all: but the Lord will disdainly ouerthrow all his desseignes, and will cut downe his high branches. Yet when we aduisedly consider euery thing, and especiallie that which is by and by added of Lebanon, with the consolation that followeth, I am of opinion that this place ought to be referred to the Iewes themselves. So then Isaiah, as I thinke, continues still to threaten the calamities which should happen soone after to the people: as if he should say, the Assyrian shall not only come to Nob, but shall spoile the whole countrie; and therefore he shall waste and whollie roote out whatsoeuer is beautifull and good therein, euen as if one should cut off the boughs from the trees, or as if the tree it selfe should bee plucked vp by the roots.

The Chapter following confirms this interpretation, wherein the Prophet giues consolation against this calamitie, and that consolation is ioyned to this verse, and is added as a fit remedie to asswage the bitterness of so great heauines. I do not greatly allow of the diuision of the Chapter, which is often times cleane against the haire, and whollie confoundeth the sense of the Prophet: I thinke then that that consolation ought to be ioyned to this verse, as if there were no diuision at all.

Moreouer, this similitude is not easie to be expounded, for it sufficientlie appeares that by the high and mightie trees he means whatsoeuer is strong, excellent, and high; so as he foretels the ruine and destruction of Iudca, and compares it to the cutting downe of a forest, signifying that there shall be nothing so high and excellent in the countrie which the enemies shall not cast downe euen till they shall haue stripped the land of all her ornaments. He also makes mention of Lebanon, for wee know that it was a mountaine greatly renowned in regard of faire & goodly trees which were in it: but if he had spoken of the Assyrians, there should haue been no reason in it for him to speake of the destruction of Lebanon. Whence we gather, that he here threatens the Iewes againe, and that the preface of his Sermon agrees vry well when it begins at this particule demonstratiue Behold, Verf. 33. Chap. 10.

Reade the former Section saue one, for the better vnderstanding of the verse following.

THE XI. CHAPTER.

Verf. 1. But there shall come a rod forth of the stock of Isaiah, and a grasse shall grow out of his rootes.

Because the description of so horrible calamities might astonish the faithful, and might therewithall minister matter of despaire vnto them, it was very requisite to set some word of consolation before their eyes. For the beholding of the kingdome wasted, the cities ouerthrowne, and all parts of the countrie destroyed, could not but worke sighes and deepe groanings in them, so as they might very easly haue been shaken, and in the end vterlie become desperate if the Lord had not prevented them by this consolation. The Prophet then shewes what the Lord will do in time to come, as also how he will restore the kingdome. Now he still continues the similitude which he had vsed in the former Chapter, for there he said that Iudca should be brought to nought, euen as the fire consumes the forest. The deformitie of this countrie then should resemble a wast ground, where nothing can be discerned but ashes, after the trees haue been consumed with fire. But to the end there might be some resemblance betweene things opposite, he saith, that a rod shall

ſhall come forth of a ſtocke, which yet ſhall become a tree, and ſhall ſpread his branches and fruits faire and neere. For this cauſe I haue choſen rather to tranſlate the word Gueſſe, A dry ſtocke; then roote; although the matter be not great whether of them both we vſe; and yet this word ſtocke, notwithstanding doth better expreſſe the Prophets meaning: for hee ſignifies, that howſoever the ſtocke be dry, yet the graffe which ſhall come forth of it, ſhall bee more excellent then all the forreſts in the world.

Whence wee gather, that this prophetic cannot agree to any other perſon then to Chriſt; becauſe no ſuch graff was ſeene to come forth, before hee came into the world. Verily this can no way be applied vnto Hezekias, neither yet to Ioſias; becauſe they were aduanced euen from their birth to be Kings at the length. As touching Zorobabel, he neuer came to the thouſand part of that dignitie which the Prophet extolleth in this place. Wee ſee then that the conſolation of the poore and deſolate Iewes, is heere ſet before them in one onely Meſſiah, and that their hope concerning the ſame, is deferred euen till his appearing. For when he was manifeſted, there was no hope left of any reſtoring, or reeſtabliſhing of the kingdome; neither in deed could they haue had any if this promiſe had not been added: becauſe it ſeemed that the houſe and lineage of Dauid was vtterly extinct. For this cauſe he mentions not Dauid, but rather the familie of Iſhai; becauſe the dignitie of this family was ſo diminiſhed, that it ſeemed rather the houſe of a countrey Farmer, then the houſe of a King: for ſuch indeed was the houſe of Iſhai, when Dauid (little thinking thereon) was called to the government of the Kingdome. Thus then after they had loſt their ancient glory, and had receiued ſo great a diſcomfiture, hee calleth it the familie of Iſhai, becauſe it was the moſt inferior of all others. And therefore I thinke that the conſolation rather beginnes heere, then at the end of the former Chapter. The Iewes might doubt in ſo horrible a deſtruction, who ſhould be their defender: Iſaiah promiſeth one vnto them, howſoever hee muſt come forth of a drie ſtocke.

He continues ſtill the former ſimilitude of the forreſt (as I haue ſaid) becauſe it hath greater elegancie then if he had ſimply ſaid, that Meſſiah ſhould come. For hauing ſhewed heretofore that the forreſt ſhould be vtterly conſumed, hee addes notwithstanding, that a rod ſhall come forth, which ſhall reſtore the abundance and beaurie of this burnt forreſt againe: and this rod is Ieſus Chriſt, who ſhould come to bee the protector and Sauour of his people. Now it is not needfull to ſhew how abiect and baſe the beginnings of this kingdome was. Truly all that was to bee ſene therein was ſo poore and weak, that to outward appearance all things (the original of the blood royall excepted) ſeemed to be directly contrary to this which ſhould be accompliſhed in the perſon of the Redeemer. Yea ſo low were they brought, that this royall race was as good as vtterly extinguished: for who would haue thought that a poore Carpenter had been begotten of the royall ſeede? Beſides, in what place, I pray you, was Chriſt borne, and what was his bringing vp? To conclude, after he had ſpent his whole life in contempt, and continually expoſed to ſhame and deriſion; was he not cruelly and ſhamefully put to death, by which hee was to begin his kingdome? Yet notwithstanding all this, he grew into an infinite greatneſſe, euen as a great tree growes vp of a ſmall & litle ſeede: as Chriſt alſo himſelfe teacheth vs, Matth. 13.31. whereof we haue daily examples. For it muſt come to paſſe of neceſſitie, that the ſame ſhould befall his kingdome, which came to paſſe in his owne perſon.

Verſ. 2. And the ſpirit of the Lord ſhall reſt vpon him: the ſpirit of wiſedome and vnderſtanding, the ſpirit of counſell and ſtrength, the ſpirit of knowledge, and of the feare of the Lord.

Now he begins to ſpeake of Chriſt plainly and without any figure. It had been ſufficient to haue propounded the conſolation vnder the former ſimilitude: and ſtilly did the oppoſition anſwere betwene the burning of the forreſt, and the new reſtoring of it againe. He therein deſcribed the twofold eſtate of the people: for hauing ſpoken of the calamitie, he by and by addes the hope of reſtauration: the beginning whereof notwithstanding muſt come forth of a litle bud; but now hee manifeſtly ſhewes what this deliuerance ſhall bee, and what the condition both of Chriſt and his Kingdome ſhould be alſo.

Some thinke this ſhould rather be referred to Ezekiah, who was a figure of Chriſt: but how inconsiderately wee ſhewed heretofore. For when Ezekias was borne, the name and royall dignitie of the houſe of Dauid had yet vigor and ſtrength in his ſucceſſours: and beſides, hee was farre ſhort of this greatneſſe, whereof he will ſpeake by and by.

Moreouer, hence we gather, that the ſpiritual Kingdome of Chriſt was promiſed in times paſt to the ancient people, inasmuch as the vertue, power, and maiestic thereof is heere eſtabliſhed in the gifts of the Holy ghoſt. Now albeit Chriſt had litle neede of theſe gifts and graces: yet was it needfull for vs that he ſhould be thus enriched with them, becauſe hee tooke our fleſh vpon him; to the end hee might afterwards poure out againe all thoſe benefits vpon vs, whereof we ſhould otherwiſe haue been vtterly deſtitute. For out of his fulneſſe muſt we all draw grace vpon grace, euen as out of the fountain; according to that in Iohn 1.16.

The Spirit of the Lord.] We muſt keepe that in mind, which I touched erewhile; to wit, that this is to be referred to the humane nature of Chriſt; becauſe it could not be that hee ſhould haue been enriched with the gifts and graces of the Father, but as in reſpect that he was made man. Beſides, as hee deſcended ded fro heauen for our sakes; so did he also receive the gifts of the holy Ghost from heauen to adorne vs with them: and this is that anointing whereby he obtained this name of Christ, the which he communicates to vs. For whence comes it that wee are called Christians but by reason that hee receiues vs into his fellowship, and that he distributes to euerie one of his fulnesse, according to the measure of his free liberallitie? And in very deed, this place doth not so much teach vs what Christ is in himselfe, as rather what he receiued of the Father, that hee might fill vs with his abundance. Now albeit there is no great need that wee should stand long in opening the meaning of the words, yet notwithstanding if any will have a thort difference betwene wisdom and vnderstanding, I am of opinion that the word wisdom, doth generally comprehend whatsoever belongs to the order and rule of life: and then that vnderstanding is added in stead of the exposition thereof. For if we haue the foresaid wisdom, wee shall haue vnderstanding enough. This word counsell, signifies as much as the word iudgement; whereby wee are able to giue resolution in doubtfull things: for it were not sufficient to haue vnderstanding, vnlesse wee were therewithall endued with counsell, to guide vs safely in matters of importance. The word strength, is sufficiently knowne. As touching knowledge, or skill, it differs little from vnderstanding, vnlesse it should rather appertaine vnto knowing, and so it should declare the act. The feare of the Lord, signifies a sincere affection to serue and honour God. Now the Prophet reckons not y^e all the graces of the holy Ghost heere, as many haue thought, For the Papists haue foolishly and vnlearnedly drawne their seuenfolded grace from this place: and some of the auncients haue been no lesse absurdly deceiued therein then they. Isaiah mentioneth but sixe, & they haue added the seventh of their owne head. And as one error lightly follows another, so they haue endeouored to refrain the gifts and graces of the holy Ghost to be but seuen in number: and yet notwithstanding in other places wee see that there are as many epithites more attributed

2. Tim. 1. 7.

vnto him, according to the diuersitie of his effects. Moreouer, it is a thing sufficiently knowne, that we our selues are made partakers of many other benefits by the meanes of Christ, then those which are heere recited; to wit, meekenesse, chastitie, sobrietie, truth, holinesse, and the like, which comes to vs from no other fountaine then from Christ himselfe. Hee recites not all the gifts heere then, which were conferred vpon the Lord Iesus, neither was it needfull so to doe: his meaning was onely to shew that Christ was sent vnto vs furnished and adorned with all graces fit to enrich vs with all.

If these things had not been added, peradventure wee might haue conceived the restoration of this kingdome to be carnall rather then spiritual, as the Iewes doe: or might haue imagined Iesus Christ had been vnfurnished of all necessarie graces. And therefore hee shewes first generally, then particularly, that the gifts of the holy Ghost were powred into him, to the end we might boldly goe vnto him to aske those things we stand in need of. For he will enrich vs with wisdom and vnderstanding he wil giue vs counsell when things are confused, he will make vs strong and valiant in combats, and will beautifie vs also with godlinesse; that is to say, with the true feare of God: in a word, hee will furnish vs with all things needfull for our life and saluation. The Prophet then comprehends all gifts and graces heere, so as it is too foolishly done of them, who haue gone about to suppress that which is not heere expressed.

Now hee shewes that all graces are in Christ, to the end they might be communicated vnto vs: for which cause we are called his companions in the 45. Psalm, verse 8. For as the strength of the members flows from the head, so Christ powres out the vertue of his heavenly vnction vpon the whole body of his Church. Whence it follows, that those who are barren and dry, haue no communion at all with Christ, and therefore doe faully challenge vnto them the name of Christians. As often therefore as wee feele in our selues the want of any of these gifts, let vs accuse our owne infidelitic as the cause of it; because true faith makes vs partakers of all Christs benefits. Let vs humbly intreat the Lord then, that he will not suffer the lusts of our flesh to raigne in vs, that so Christ may wholly vniue vs vnto himselfe. Let vs also observe, that it is onely in Christ, in whom wee are to seeke all good things. For we greatly deceiue our selues, if wee thinke to obtaine any thing at the Fathers hand by any other meane.

Vers. 3. And shall make him prident in the feare of the Lord: for he shall not iudge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove by the hearing of his eares:

The verbe Riach, which is put heere in the coniugation of Hiphil, signifies properly to smell. It may also be expounded in the active signification, To giue a piercing smell, which I thinke agrees as fittest to this place; that this prudence might also be placed amongst the gifts of the holy Ghost. And this effect also agrees particularly vnto the person of Christ; to wit, that he is wise and prudent to gouerne his owne beyond all that the capacite of any of the faithfull is able to comprehend. First, we are to note the similitude of the verbe, To smell; which signifies that Christ shall so abound with iudgement and discretion, that he shall not neede to apprehend any thing either by sight or hearing, because hee shall be able by his onely smell, to discern the most secret and hidden things.

The most part of the expositours take the particle, In the feare of the Lord, as if all the affections of the heart should be discovered before Christ, so as hee should be able easlie to iudge who are the true seruants of God.

These gifts of the holy Ghost, namely, wisdom, vnderstanding, counsell, strength, knowledge, and the feare of the Lord, are therefore powred into Christ, that we standing in neede of all, or any one of them, might boldly beg the same at his hands.

But

But let the readers conſider if the ſenſe would not agree better to ſay, that the feare of God is taken here for a certaine rule of judgement. For the Prophet doth of ſet purpoſe diſtinguiſh the heavenly judgement of Chriſt, from the judgement of men; to the end we might know that the outward appearance of holineſſe or integritie, is nothing at all approved before him. The ſenſe then is, that when we come before the tribunal of Chriſt, he will not onely examine things according to the outward actions, as men doe in civill policie: but the life is there examined and ſquared out, according to the rule of true pietie. Neither indeed is it ſit for men to bee the ſearchers of the heart: and we ſhall often ſee, that there is onely a vaine appearance in thoſe whom we ſhall eſteeme honeſt men: but Chriſt judgeth not by the outside, becauſe he knoweth and foundeth the uttermoſt and hiddenſt ſecrets of the heart. His judgement then is far different from mans judgement, who though they be neuer ſo expert and witty, doe yet too fooliſhly oft times overſhoot theſelves. Thence it followes, that none can be the true ſervants of God, but thoſe whom Ieſus Chriſt approveth. Now they cannot bee approved of him, unleſſe they ſhew a pure and upright heart: for we cannot deceiue him by any falſe and vaine appearances.

Verſ. 4. But with righteousneſſe ſhall he judge the poore, and with equitie ſhall he reprove for the meek of the earth: and he ſhall ſmite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips ſhall he ſlay the wicked.

Here he teacheth that Chriſt ſhall be the protectour of the poore: or rather he ſhewes who they are to whom the grace of Chriſt properly appertaines; to wit, to the poore and meek: that is, to thoſe who being humbled vnder the ſenſe of their owne miſerie; have throwne to the ground this high and proud conceit of themſelves, wherewith men are vually puffed vp. till being meekened by the word, they have learned to humble themſelves. The Prophet here proteſtes then, that Chriſt will not be the defender and protectour of all in generall, but of thoſe who acknowledge themſelves poore, and deſtitute of all good things. And this Ieſus Chriſt himſelf ſhewed to the Diſciples of John Bap. 13. when he told them that the Goſpell was preached to the poore: Mt 11. 5. For all are not indeede indifferently capable of this doctrine, but thoſe onely who being ſtripped of all ourweaning of the fleſh, have their recourſe to this heavenly ſaueguard and protection.

There is here then a cloſe oppoſition; to wit, that Chriſt governes not the rich: that is to ſay, thoſe who are blowen vp with a falſe opinion of themſelves: becauſe that howſoever he calls al men vnto him, yet notwithstanding the moſt pure reſuſe to ſubiect themſelves vnder his gouernement; for they are the poore onely, which ſuffer themſelves to be guided by him. This text admoniſheth vs to ſtrippe our ſelves quite and cleane of all pride, and to put on the ſpirit of meekeneſſe and modeſtie, if wee deſire that Chriſt ſhould rule vs vnder his hand. Behold heere then the ſpirituall pouertie which the Prophet recommends to all the members of Chriſt, which is not to be ſwollen with an ourweaning, but truly to be humbled with the feeling of our pouertie and miſerie, to the end we may depend vpon Chriſt onely. Having once reſolued throughly vpon that, this King and faithfull protectour will take care of our ſaluation, and will defend vs euen to the very end againſt all our enemies: we alſo heere learne, who they be that he calles vnto him, Come to mee all you, ſaith he, that trauaile and are heauie laden: Matth. 11. 28. Needfull is it then that we trauaile and be preſſed vnder the weight of our burthen, if wee will ſeele and haue experience of his lucre.

Wee haue alſo to obſerue the order which the Prophet keeps heere: for firſt hee placeth pouertie, and afterwards meekneſſe or gentleneſſe: becauſe we muſt be poore before wee can bee brought to be meek and lowly. As long as we thinke our ſelves to be any thing, being puffed vp with a vaine confidence of our owne worth, our heart forthwith ourfloweth into all pride and conceitedneſſe; ſo as wee cannot be humbled nor brought into any order: but when we once know our own miſerie, then we beginne to abaſe our ſelves, and being weak and oppreſſed, wee are forced to ſigh vnder the burthen. He heere deſcribes then y condition of Chriſts people, as heerebefore hee had ſet forth the nature of their King: whence alſo we are to learne, that all doe not indifferently partake in theſe excellent gifts of the holy Ghoſt, wherewith Chriſt was adorned, as we haue ſeene heretofore, but the poore and humble onely.

Now this word, to iudge, ſignifies gouernment; the principall part whereof is, that Chriſt makes vs partakers of thoſe gifts which hee hath receiued of his Father, to the end hee might liue in vs, and we in him.

And ſhall ſmite the earth.] In this place the Prophet extolles the efficacy of the word, which is the royall ſcepter of Chriſt. For the rod of the mouth is as much to ſay, as a verball ſcepter: and in the ſecond member, ſpeaking of the breath or ſpirit of the lips, hee repeats the ſelfeſame thing: as if he ſhould ſay, Chriſt ſhall not neede to borrow ſtrength from others to beate backe his enemies, and to ouerthrow whatſoever is contrary to his dignitie and Empire; for his onely breath or word ſhall be ſufficient thereunto. Now this may be a generall ſentence, ſeeing it is of neceſſitie that the faithfull doe firſt die, to the end they may be renewed into a ſpirituall life. And in this ſenſe, the Goſpell is called the ſword of the Spirit, dedicated for the killing of the ſacrifices: but the latter part of the verſe requires another ſenſe. And yet notwithstanding, if any bee minded to vie a diſtinction heere, the ſmiting of the earth ſhall be referred

We muſt be poore before we can be brought to meekneſſe.

In the former verſes the Prophet did ſet forth the nature of Chriſt as he is the King of his Church: here he deſcribes the qualities and condition of his ſubiect.

Heb. 4. 12.

referred as well to the elect as to the reprobate, because ſ Gospel is a two edged ſword, piercing into the inmoſt and darkeſt corners of the heart and diſcerning the thoughts and affections: but it wounds one of them after one maner, and the other ſort after an other. For in mortifying the virtuous nature of the elect, it kills their luſts, that they may be a living & ſweet ſmelling ſacrifice before God: but it ſmiteth and killeth the reprobates our-right, becauſe they rot in their perdition; yea, it is made vnto them the ſauour of death vnto death as the Apoſtle ſpeakes 2. Cor. 2. 16. And I could eaſily grant that he ſpeakes here of both effects in aed, were it not that the vſe of the Hebrew tongue doth contradict it, becauſe the Hebrews doe often repeate one and the ſame ſentence in diuers words.

Now it follows by and by after, that Chriſt is armed with the breath of the lips to ſlay the wicked withal; vnleſſe ſome will ſay that Iſaiah added this ſecond member for amplifications ſake. And in very deed it is much more to ſlay, then to ſmite only. Seeing then it is the propertie of the Gospel to humble all men generally, it is a thing accidentall in the reprobate when he ſtrikes them with a deadlie wound. Thus the Prophet ſhould conioine the ſpeciall to the generally, thereby ſhewing that the wicked fall vpon the ſword of Chriſt vnto eternall deſtruction, becauſe they are not conſecrated to be acceptable offerings. How cuer it be, vndoubtedlie this laſt member ought to be whollie reſtrained and referred to the wicked, and therefore it was added, in as much as this efficacy appeareth not at the firſt in the preaching of the Gospel: and contrariwiſe many deſpise and iſt at it, holding whatſoever Ieſus Chriſt hath ſaid in his word to be no better then a fable. But howſoever they feele not his power by and by, yet can they not eſcape it, but at the laſt they ſhall be ſmiten to death therewith. And yet it ſeemes the Prophets meaning ſhould not be ſufficientlie explained, becauſe he not only ſpeakes heere of the inward feeling wherewithall the wicked are touched whether they will or no, but alſo euen of that impietie it ſelfe which ſhall be ſcattered and aboliſhed by the vertue and efficacy of this ſcepter, as the Apoſtle Saint Paul expoundeth it in the 2. Theſſ. 2. 3. who queſtionleſſe had reſpect vnto this place when he ſpake of the ruine of Antichriſt, and in that place he opens vnto vs the meaning of the Prophet. He ſhewes then that Ieſus Chriſt ſhall cuer be without enemies, which ſhall induor to overthrow his kingdome, to aboliſh or ſtop the free paſſage of his Goſpell (otherwiſe the Prophet had ſaid this without cauſe) but Ieſus Chriſt ſhall deſtroy them by the found of his word, as well euery one of them in particular, as all of them in generall, with their head and Captaine alſo. Thus S. Paul ſets before vs a double vſe of this doctrine in another place, requiring this of a Paſtor, that he be not only fit to teach, but alſo that he conuince the gainſayers, Tit. 1. 9. For the Paſtor ought not only to feede the flock, but alſo to keepe and maintaine it againſt all harmes.

Chriſt performs all theſe things, and therefore he is furniſhed with force of armes fit and neceſſarie to ſurmount the lies of Satan, the crueltie of tyrants, and all ſorts of enemies. It hereby appeares, that falſe doctrines can nor otherwiſe be aboliſhed but by the Goſpel; for the Magiſtrate ſhall vſe the ſword in vaine (which yet muſt be vſed notwithstanding) to reſſeſſe falſe teachers and falſe prophets: all this, I ſay, will ſerue to no purpoſe, vnleſſe the ſword of Gods word be firſt walking: which we ought diligentlie to obſerue againſt the Papiſts, who being deſtitute of the word of God, haue their refuge to new weapons, by meanes wherof they thinke to make their partie the ſtrongest. And which is worſe, they are ſo impudent to brag that heretikes can not be overcome by the word, although both the Prophet, and the Apoſtle Paul alſo eſtabliſheth none other meanes but it.

When the Prophet ſaith by the ſpirit of the lips, we muſt not reſtraine it to the perſon of Chriſt only. For this is to be referred to the word which is preached by the miniſters of it; becauſe Chriſt works ſo in them that his will in their mouth ſhould be reputed his mouth; and their lips as his owne lips: that is to ſay, when they ſpeake by his mouth, and preach his word faithfully. On the other ſide; the Prophet ſends vs not heere to ſecret reuelations, that Chriſt might reigne in vs: but he openlie extols the outward preaching of the word, and teacheth that the Gospel preached and ſounded forth, is a royall ſcepter in the hand of Chriſt; otherwiſe he had vnſeldie made mention of the mouth and of the lips. Whence it followeth, that all thoſe which reiect the outward preaching of the Gospel, do as much as in them is to ſhake off, or at the leaſt would pluck from Chriſt the ſcepter which he holds in his hand: not that the efficacy wherof the Prophet ſpeakes depends vpon the voice of men, but in regard that Chriſt himſelfe works by his miniſters, who will not haue their labour to become vaine or vnprofitable, but that they ſhould bring in the elect vnder his obedience, and kill the reprobates, as S. Paul glories in a certaine place, that he hath vengeance readie againſt all vnbeleeuers and rebels, 2. Cor. 10. 6.

Heere we muſt againe remember what is the nature of the kingdome of Chriſt: for as he hath neither crowne vpon his head, nor yet materiall armor vpon his back, no more doth he rule in the world by force of armes, neither gets he himſelfe authoritie by ſhewes and great preparations; nor yet brings he his people to his obedience either by feare or constraint; but the doctrine of the Gospel is his kinglie banner, vnder which he aſſembleth the faithfull to his ſeruite. Wherefore in what place ſoener the doctrine of the Gospel is preached, there it is certain the Sonne of God reignes; but where it is reiected, there is his rule and dominion aboliſhed by the ſame meanes. Whence it appeares how ridiculous the bragging of the Papiſts is, when they ſay that the Church is amongſt them only, when as yet in the meane while they put

Falſe doctrines can no otherwiſe be put to flight, but by the power of the Goſpel preached.

put Christ himſelfe to ſilence, and can not indure his voice: nay, doe they not on the contrarie diſgorge their edicts with full mouth, their lawes, decrees, and tyrannicall conſtitutions againſt it?

Verſ. 5. And iuſtice ſhall be the girdle of his loines, and faithfullnes the girdle of his reines.

Other tranſlate girdle: but becauſe the Prophet ſets Christ before vs decked as it were with his royall ornaments, I haue rather tranſlated it ſword-girdle, or hangiers: for this alſo is a kingly ornament. as was the ſcepter which was giuen him heretofore. And Iob minding to ſhew that God will ſtrip kings of their honour, ſaith, that he will vnloofe or vn buckle their girdle. Iob. 12. 18. Wherefore to be girt with a ſword-girdle is nothing els but to be placed in royall dignitie, as we alſo ſhall ſee hereafter in another place, Chap. 22. 21. Now the Prophet heere deſcribes two ſorts of girdles, to wit, iuiſtice, and faithfullnes: vnleſſe any had rather ſay that the word faithfullnes being a ſubſtantiu, ſhould be put in the place of an adiectiue, as if he ſhould ſay, that Christ ſhall be girt with faithfull iuſtice. For faithfullnes is not added here as a diuers thing from iuſtice; but to declare what this iuiſtice is wherewith Christ is girded. Some thinke he ſpeakes here of that iuiſtice which Christ communicateth vnto vs, ſo as it ſhould not only be in him, but in his members alſo. By faith or ueritie they vnderſtand that faith whereby we embrace the ſaluation which is offered vnto vs.

The Chalde Paraphraſt expoundeth it thus, The iuſt ſhall come about him, and the faithfull ſhall approach vnto him. But I take it more ſimple, as if he ſhould ſay, He ſhall not appeare as kings clothed with purple, & crowned with a diademe, or girt with a ſword-girdle, but iuiſtice and faithfullnes ſhall ſhine in him. I confeſſe that iuſtice is not ſo incloſed in Ieſus Christ that it alſo appertaines not to all his members: yet notwithstanding wee muſt obſerue this manner of ſpeech, that Christ Girded with righteousnes, comes forth to gouerne his members by it, the which alſo he forthwith powres out vpon them by a ſecret power of the holy ghoſt. If we diſtinguiſh the word faith from iuſtice, me thinks it ſhould be put for faithfullnes or ſtedfaſtnes; as if the Prophet ſhould ſay, that Christ will neuer deceiue thoſe that are his, becauſe he will alwaies continue like himſelfe.

Verſ. 6. The wolfe alſo ſhall dwell with the lambe, and the leopard ſhall lie with the kid, and the calfe and the lion, and the fat beaſt together, and a little child ſhall lead them.

7. And the cow and beare ſhall feede, their young ones ſhall lie together: and the lion ſhall eat ſtraw like the bullocke.

Hee againe deſcribeth the qualities and conditions of thoſe which ſhall be ſubdu-

ed vnto Christ. For becauſe there is a mutual correſpondency betweene the King and the ſubiects, he ſometimes aſcends from the body to the head, and by and from the head to the members: and we haue already ſaid, that Christ taigues not for himſelfe, but for his faithfull ones: whence it followes, that he frames our vnderſtandings to his will, by the operation of his holy Spirit. Yet notwithstanding the Prophet aimes at a further thing: for it is as if he ſhould promiſe an happy reſtaurment to the world, deſcribing as it were the order which was at the beginning, before that wofull and ſorrowfull change happened by the reuolt of man, vnder the which we are conſtrained to ſigh at this day. Whence comes it that the brute beaſts are ſo cruell, that ſuch as haue any ſtrength giue themſelves to ſnatch, rent, and deuoure with violence? Certainly there ſhould haue bin no diſcord betweene God and the creatures, if they had continued ſtedfaſt in their firſt and pure originall. When they riſe vp then one againſt another, and that the weakeſt haue neede of defence againſt the ſtrongeſt, is it not a teſtimonie of that conſuſion which is iſſued from the ſinne of man? Now ſeeing Christ is come to the end, that hauing aboliſhed the curſe, he might reconcile the world vnto God; it is not without cauſe that the reſtaurment of a perfect eſtate is attributed to him: as if the Prophet ſhould ſay, that the golden world ſhould returne, during which time all felicitie ſhould flouriſh: that is to ſay, before the fall of man, and the change and ruine which followed thereupon.

God by Hyſea ſpeaketh thus; I will make a covenant for them with the beaſts of the field, with the birds of the ayre, and with the creeping things: Hoſe. 2. 18. as if hee ſhould ſay, After that God ſhall become mercifull to the world for Christs ſake, he will therewithall ſhew the ſignes of his good fauour vnto it: to the end that whatſoeuer corruptions did proceed from the ſinne of man, might come to an end. To conclude, the Prophets vnder theſe figures, teach the very ſame which S. Paul aſſirmes plainly; to wit, that Christ Col. 1. 20. came to gather the things which were ſcattered both in heauen and in earth: Ephel. 1. 10. The ſumme of all then is, that Christ ſhall come to chaſe all hurtfull things out of the world, and to reſtore it to the firſt beautie in which it was before it was accuſed.

And therefore he ſaith, that the lion ſhall feede as the bullocke: for if the contagion of ſinne had not infected the world, wee ſhould not haue ſcene any beaſt giuen to blood nor to the pray, but the fruits of the earth would haue ſufficed all things; which kind of foodd iudged was preſcribed vnto them by the Lord. In the meane while, although Iſaiab ſaith, that the wild and the tame beaſts ſhould liue quietly together, to the end the bleſſing of God ſhould appeare & ſhine euery where; yet notwithstanding he aimes chiefly at that which I haue ſaid, to wit, that no hurtfull affection ſhall be diſcerned amongſt the people of Christ, neither yet any crueltie or inhumanitie whatſoeuer. And whereas before they had beene as lions and leopards, they should now become like lambe and sheepe; because they shall haue put off all cruell and brutish affection. For by these kindes of speech, he meant nothing else but to say, that those which in times past had been like outrageous and cruell beasts, should become gentle and tractable. And therefore he compares violent men and robbers, to wolves and bearers, which liue of the pray and spoile: and pronounceth that they should become tame and meeke, so as contenting themselves with a common and ordinarie diet, they will carefully auoid the doing of wrong or hurt vnto any.

Col. 1. 20.

Had not the contagion of ſinne infected the world, we ſhould haue ſcene no beaſt giuen to deuouring or bloodſucking, but the fruits of the earth would haue ſufficed all liuing creatures.

Now here we must argue from the lesse to the greater; to wit, if Christ doe appeare and set the brute beasts at vnitie together, much more will hee nourish brotherly concord betwene men, whom hee will gouerne by the spirit of meekenesse. And yet it is not the Prophets meaning that any are thus gentle and peaceable of their own nature, before they be reformed by grace; but hee promiseth, y^e how peruerse soeuer their nature shall be, yet they shall forsake their crueltie, and shall become as meeke as sheepe or lambs.

Whereas hee addes, that a little childe shall leade them: it signifies, that those beasts which were otherwise cruell and vnrained, shall readily yeeld cheerfull seruice, so as there shall be no need to vse any violence to repress their crueltie. In the meane while, we must keep in minde the similitude which we haue touched; to wit, that those shall obey Christ, which shall be giuen vnto him, although they were outrageous beasts before; and shall obey in such wise, that they shall by and by follow him, and that at his least becke: as it is also said in the 110. Psalme, verse 3. Thy people shal come willingly. Neither ought they to be placed in the ranke of sheepe, which are not indued with this meekenesse. Let vs suffer him then to master and rule vs, and let vs willingly submit our selues to those to whom he hath giuen vs in charge, although they be like little children. Thus it seemes that the Ministers of the word should here be compared to little children, because they haue no externall power; neither doe they shew themselves to haue any ciuill authoritie.

Obicq.

But it may be demanded, whether there be not some who are meeke and gentle, who yet haue not been tamed by the doctrine of the Gospell. For it seemes indeed that the Prophet should say so, when hee compares some to sheepe, and others to beares and lions. I confesse we shall finde a meruailous diuersitie in men, who yet are led by the very instinct of their own nature: some are meeke and peaceable, others turbulent and inhumane; but yet it is certaine that all are sauage and outrageous, till Christ haue tamed them by the Gospell. All are puffed vp with ambition & pride, before they bee purged with this medicine. True it is that many may well counterfet a false appearance of modestie and humilitie, but in the meane while they burst with pride inwardly. To bee short, where the Spirit of Christ dwelles not, there let vs not looke to finde any true humilitie.

No true humilitie to be found, where the Spirit of Christ dwells not.

Verf. 8. And the sucking child shall play upon the hole of the aspe: and the weaned child shall put his hand upon the cockatrice hole.

HE continues his former speech; to wit, that when men shall be recciued againe into fauour with God, and that they shall be purged from their vices by the spirit of regeneration, they shall then also bee freed from their hurtfull nature. For men should not neede to feare the biting of venomous serpents, but in regard y^e they are vnworthy that God should subiect the parts of the whole world vnder their authoritie. And in that the serpents haue this libertie to hurt little children, truly it thence appeares, that all the posteritie of Adam is infected with sinne from the conception in the wombe. Now we are to obserue this similitude whereof wee haue spoken; to wit, that those who are filled with an hidden venome to hurt, shall in such wise change their naturall inclination, that they shall not hurt so much as little children.

The libertie of doing harme which one creature hath over another, argues that the whole posteritie of Adam is infected with sinne, euen from the conception.

Some are openly fierce and cruell; others carry and nourish their malice in secret, as a serpent doth his poison; as David also describes it, Psal. 55. 22. For some are more ready to manifest their malice; others more slow. In a word, whatsoeuer they be, he signifies that all must bee purged from their malice, as well open as secret, after they shall be once subiected vnder Christ. He also signifies, that hence forward there shall be a generall securitie euerie where, so as those who are destitute of all helpe, shall liue in safetie, in such wise as they shall aduenture to expose themselves euen to the most perillous dangers.

Verf. 9. Then shall none hurt nor destroy in all the mountaine of mine holinesse: for the earth shall bee full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters that cover the sea.

NOW hee plainly shewes, that euen men themselves hauing subdued their naturall perversitie, shall bee inclined to equitie. Hee speakes then of the faithfull, who are truly regenerated into newnesse of life. For although there are many hypocrits full of iniquitie, mingled in the Church with the elect of God; yet notwithstanding they are like to the Ishmaelites, whom God will driue out thence when his time is. To this purpose we are to note that which is said in Psal. 15. 2. & 24. 4. that none but the louers of iustice shall haue any settled or sure rest in the Temple of God, to dwell there perpetually. This then appertaines to the lawfull citizens of the Church to bee pure and exempt from all desire to doe hurt. Whence we gather also, that it is a singular gift of the holy Ghost, when men abstaine from violent courses; because ambition, pride, crueltie, and couetousnesse, will ordinarily push them forward to wrong their their neighbours every kinde of way, and therefore the Prophet adds to very good purpose that this inestimable gift flowes from the knowledge of God. Thus then it behoues that all flesh be humbled, and that men learne to put themselves into the protection and safegard of God, and to maintaine brotherly kindnes betwene themselves when they know that he is the father of them all. For although many which are not yet renewed by the spirit of Christ may haue some appearance of humanitie, yet is it very certaine that they are caried away therein with the loue of themselves, because all haue this naturallie so rooted in them, that they will alwaies seeke their owne profit rather then the profit of another, and therefore thinke they are put in this world only to serue their owne turne and not their neighbours: yea, they would haue all the world at their command if it were possible, which Plato also wisely considered.

From hence proceed deceits, periuries, thefts, robberies, & an infinit other such like wickednesses, There is no fit remedie then to tame this vnbridled lust but the knowledge of God only. Now we see how the Prophet doth againe establish the dominion of Christ in the faith and doctrine of the Gospel, it being the meanes (indeed) without which he doth not ordinarielie gather vs to himselfe: for thereby he illuminates our vnderstandings to manifest vnto vs the heauenly life, which is nothing else (as himselfe witnesseth) but to know him to be the only true God, and him whom he hath sent, Iesus Christ, Iohn 17.3.

Moreover, the abundance of knowledge is here closely compared to that small taste which God gaue to the ancient people vnder the law. And albeit the Iewes were kept vnder such childish rudiments, yet vnto vs hath the perfect light of the heauenly wisdom shined by the meanes of the Gospel, as Ieremiah also foretold, They shall not euery one teach his neighbour, nor euery one his brother, saying, Know the Lord, for they shall all know me, saith the Lord, from the least vnto the greatest, Ier. 31.34. If so be y^e this fulnes of knowledge then haue taken possession in our vnderstandings, it will purge and cleanse them fro all maliciousnes. This place also informes vs what manner of Church there is in the Papacie, where the light of holy doctrine being smothered, yea almost cleane extinct, their whole religion is, to be blindfolded in a brutish ignorance.

Now if it so fall out that we haue not a perfect knowledge at the first dash, yet we must endeavour day by day to profit more and more, 2. Pet. 3.18. and that in such wise, that the fruit thereof may issue from this roote. Whence it appears that the greater part haue profited but very meanly in the schoole of Christ, when so many cosenages, extortions, and violences haue their full swing on all sides.

Verſ. 10. And in that day the roote of Iſnai which shall stand vp for a signe vnto the people, the nations shall seeke vnto it, and his rest shall be glorious.

HE returnes againe to y^e person of Christ, and repeats the same similitude which he tooke vp heretofore in the beginning of this Chapter, to wit, of the roote, or sprig issuing out of the drie stock, which had no appearance of any sap in it. He saith then it shall come to passe that the Gentiles, who in times past had the Iewes in abomination, shall yet come and doe homage to the King of the Iewes. Now this might seeme a thing altogether incredible: and no doubt but this promise was a long time derided, because such a change should rather haue been expected when the kingdome stood & flourished in his full strength then after it was destroyed. But needfull it was it should be brought thus low, to the end it might afterwards be exalted; and that the glorie and power of God might hereby be better knowne, then if all things had been in their flourishing estate. For what is he that with the eyes of flesh could haue apprehended such a height, from a little sprig that it should be discerned of all people, and should draw the eyes of euery one vnto it? He compares it to a standard lifted vp on high: and we know that this was accomplished in the publication of the Gospel, yea much more excellentlie then if Christ had soared aboue y^e cloudes. Hereunto appertaines that which is said in S: Iohn, As Moſe lift vp the Serpent in the wildernesse, so must the sonne of man be lift vp, Iohn. 3.14.

Christ is then sought when wee run vnto him to obtaine saluation, as in many places of the scripture, where the seeking of God, is as much to say as to put our whole hope and confidence in him. And therefore the Greekes haue translated, They haue hoped, respecting the sense, rather then the signification of the word.

As touching that which immediatlie folowes, that his rest shall be glorious, all the expositors almost do expound it of the Sepulcher of Christ, taking a part for the whole, because they by and by after referre it vnto his death. And to say the truth, the buriall of Christ was but an appendance of his death. The sense then according to their opinion should be, that the death of Christ which was ignominious before the world, shall be full of glorie and maiestie. But when I consider all circumstances more narrowly, the Prophet in this place by this word rest, signifies the Church: as also it is said in the Psalms, This is my rest for euer, here will I dwell, Psal. 132. 14. And thus he decketh the companie of the faithfull with an honorable title, because in them he will haue his perpetuall mansion. Seeing then that the Church at that time was exposed to mocks and reproches, he promisseth that it shall be brought to a better and more happie estate, and shall yet againe recouer her first beautie. Here then we haue an excellent testimonie, which giues vs to vnderstand, that God will dwell for euer in his Church, although this shall not alwaies appear so vnto men.

There may be some appearance of humanitie euen in the vnegenerate, which yet sprigs only from selfeloue.

Plato.

Luk. 2. 31. 32

Nums. 2. 1. 9

Though we attaine not vnto a perfect knowledge the first day: yet we must endeavour to profit more and more continually.

Verf. 11. And in the same day shall the Lord stretch forth his hand againe the second time, to possesse the remnant of his people (which shall be left) of Asshur and of Egypt, and Parthos, and Ethiopia, and of Elam, and of Shinar, and of Hamath, and of the Isles of the sea.*

*Or, Parthe.

BECAUSE the prophesie touching the future glorie of the Church was incredible, hee now declares by what means it shall be brought to passe; to wit, that God will manifest the strength of his hand to performe as it were a famous and memorable act. Moreover, to confirme the elect people in good hope, hee brings to their remembrance the deliuerance past, to the end they might not doubt that God should not bee as well able to deliuer them now, as hee was to deliuer their fathers, who had experience thereof in former time in Egypt. For this word againe, aimes at that, and it is all one as if hee had said, Now also will God be the Redcemer of his Church. This hee confirms by another reason; to wit, although it seemed that God should despise his people; yet will hee not be deprived of his inheritance. The summe is, that God will take care of the saluation of his Church, to the end hee may not be bereaued of his right.

Exod. 12. 31.

Notwithstanding hee speaks expressly of the remnant, because this deliuerance should appertaine but to a litle handfull of seede. Lastly, hee repeats that which hee had said heretofore; Howsoever God separates and scatters his Church, yet can it not be that he should wholly reiect it; because it is no lesse precious vnto him, then our heritage is deare vnto euerie one of vs. Now he speaks not of the Assyrians, which had led the people into captiuitie, but also of other nations amongst whom the Iewes were scattered. For after the greater part of the people were carried into Babylon, some fled into Ethiopia, others into other regions; because they feared lest they should be led into the same bondage with others. As touching Parthe, in the text it is Parthos: some thinke it should be Parthe; and this is probable, although others say that it is Arabia the Stony. Vnder the word Elam, he comprehends the Medes, Zoedians, Bactrians, and other Easterne people. Shinar, or Ethiopia, is comprehended in Chaldea. By Hamath, some vnderstand Cilicia, and other neighbour regions about Mount Taurus. Vnder this word of the Iles, the Iewes vnderstand all the regions which are beyond the sea. For according to their opinion, Greece, Italie, and Spaine are Iles; because the sea is betwene them and others. We see then that the Prophet speaks not onely here of the deliuerance which was vnder Zorobabel, but aimes at a further mark: for the Iewes were not then carried into Egypt, neither into Ethiopia, nor yet into any other regions. This cannot be vnderstood then of the deliuerance out of Babylon, but ought to be referred to the kingdome of Christ, vnder which this deliuerance hath been, and is accomplished by the preaching of the Gospell. Moreover, we must obserue, that this which is heere mentioncd, is a speciall worke of God, and not of men; because hee saith, that the Lord shall stretch out his hand; heerein attributing that to the diuine power of the Lord, which men cannot accomplish by all their strength.

We are also to note, that from the consideration of the benefits which the Lord hath done for vs in times past; wee ought to be the better confirmed in hope for the time to come: so as when we call to minde the deliuerance out of Egypt and out of Babylon, wee may boldly conclude, that the Lord is as mightie now as he was then; and that he will no lesse assist vs at this day, euen in setting vp the Church againe in her primitiue beautie and glory. Hee can performe the same thing the third, the fourth, yea many times, which hee hath done once or twice. Whereas the Prophet calles those whom God deliuers a remnant, let vs learne not to affect a great multitude, but let vs content our selues with our small number, and not bee abashed although we be but a few. For if so be the truth and right confines of God flourish amongst vs, we shall haue true and ample occasion giuen vs to rest therein securely.

Former deliuerances should encourage vs to hope for the like in time to come.
2. Cor. I. 10.

Multitudes not to be affected, vnlesse truth and righteousness doe also flourish.

Verf. 12. He shall set vp a signe to the nations, and assemble the dispersed of Israel, and gather the scattered of Iudah from the foure corners of the world.

THIS verse contains nothing in it but the explication of the former. Now this manner of speech is taken from a similitude, the sense whereof notwithstanding may be double; to wit, either that the Lord in making this signe, will amaze the enemies in such wise, as they shall not dare to stop the passages against the people which shall returne; or rather that hee will set up a signe to the poore banished, to the end they should make no difficultie to take their iourne home againe. Besides, the vse of this doctrine hath its force amongst vs euen at this day: for looke how the standard is lifted vp in the Campe, to assemble euerie one to his colours, and to hold himselfe in battel aray; so also is the standard now set vp before vs, to the end all of vs should gather our selues together thercunto; that is to say, The Gospell which the Lord hath lifted up amongst the Gentiles, and in the which Iesus Christ is preached vnto vs. From hence let vs obserue, that we cannot be gathered vnto the Lord, vnlesse wee come vnder this ensigne, and bee vnited vnto him by faith. For he will not acknowledge vs for any of his sheep, if we be not gathered in from our scattering, and that all of vs doe assemble our selues vnder this banner: as himselfe also saith, My sheepe heare my voice, and they follow me: John 10. 27. There is a repetition in the word To gather: for he shewes how effectuall the calling of God shall bee, because becauſe he will ſet his people in their former eſtate, euen as ſoone as he ſhall be pleaſed to make but a ſigne onely.

The word ſcattering, is collectiue, and vnder it he comprehends the Iewes ſcattered here and there. It ſeemes alſo that he alludes (as hee often doth in other places) to one ſelfeſame text of Mofes, where the Lord promiſeth to gather together his people, when they ſhall be ſcattered to the remot parts of the world, yea euen into the ſoure corners of the earth: Deut. 30. 4. Now this was fulfilled vnder the leading and gouernment of Chriſt: at this day therefore ought wee to hope, that by the meanes of this good Captaine, the poore and deſolate Church ſhall bee reſtored. For otherwiſe there is little hope that this ſmall remnant ſhall bee gathered together, unleſſe the elect doe bend their eyes toward this enſigne. We ought often therefore to call theſe promiſes to mind; to the end wee being vnderpropped by them, may bee more and more eſtabliſhed and confirmed.

Verſ. 13. The hatred alſo of Ephraim ſhall depart, and the aduerſaries of Iudah ſhall be cut off: Ephraim ſhall not enmie Iudah, neither ſhall Iudah vex Ephraim.

HERE hee promiſeth that there ſhall bee ſuch great tranquillitie in the Church, that the Iſraelites and the Iewes ſhall not waite themſelues any more by ciuill diſſenſions, neither yet bee moleſted in any ſort by their enemies: alſo, that they ſhall not bee ſubiect to hauel nor enmie, as they were before. Not as if there ſhould no wicked ones at all be found ſtill among them; but that the Lord will roote them out at the laſt. Yet we are eſpecially to obſerue that which he addes touching the pacifications of ciuill hares and diſſenſion; to wit, that the children of Abraham ſhall no more moleſt one another, but ſhall be at vnicie in one religion, and in the true feare of God. For it was an odious and deteſtable ſpectacle to ſee them ſo long time ſworne enemies one to another. It is not for nought that he ſhewes the fountaine of diſſenſions; to wit, enmie, which was the cauſe why the ſucceſſours of Abraham did rent one another, when the Tribes of Iudah and Ephraim ſtroue amongſt themſelues for the excellencie. This curſed fire brand enmie, hath kindled all the warres in the world, when as no man will humble himſelfe, nor part with the leaſt iot of his right. In a word, the Lord promiſeth here, both an outward and an inward peace, which is an excellent and deſireable benefit aboue all things.

But ſome will ſay, that this was neuer yet accompliſhed, and that we haue rather ſcene the contrarie come to paſſe. For as ſoone as the Goſpell beganne to be publiſhed, diuers wars, tumults, and horrible perſecutions followed thereupon; and all the world almoſt was in an vprore and thriken: and ſince I pray you, what peace hath the Church had with in it?

Satan by ſowing of his cockle and curſed ſeede, hath ſtured vphorrible troubles euen amongſt Chriſtians themſelues; ſo as the Church hath had none more dangerous nor deadly enemies, then thoſe that haue been nourished and maintained in her owne lappe.

I aſſure, that the Prophet heere comprehends the whole Kingdome of Ieſus Chriſt, and not one age or generation. For in this liſe wee doe but onely taſte the firſt fruits as it were of this Kingdome. Moreover, although the Church be vexed with enemies, as well ſtrangers as diuiniſtical, yet euen in the miſt of them, God ceafeſſe not to preſerue and maintaine it: and this in the end ouerturnes all his enemies. Alſo, this prophecie properly appertaines to the true and lawfull children of Abraham, whom the Lord daily purgeth by afflictions and baniſhments; cauſing them by this meanes to forget all ambition and enuie: for we ſhall not vually find deſire of vaine glorie amongſt them, who haue been meekened and inſtructed in the ſchoole of Chriſt. Thus then, that which Iſaiab heere promiſeth, hath alreadie been fulfilled in ſome part, and is accompliſhed euery day. But we muſt goe on ſtill in theſe exerciſes, and haue fighting duly, as well within as without, vntill wee obtaine that eternall peace which wee ſhall ioy hereafter, with all felicitie in the Kingdome of God.

Verſ. 14. But they ſhall ſtce upon the ſhoulders of the Philistines toward the weſt: they ſhall ſpcke them of the Eaſt together: Elym and Moab ſhall be ſtretching out of their hands, and the children of Ammon in their obedience.

HIS meaning is, that the Lord will alſo aſſiſt his people by another means; to wit, that he will triumph ouer his enemies, & ſubdue them vnder his power. For as he hath hitherto ſpoken of the ſafetie of the Church, ſo now alſo he declares, that theſe ſhall obtaine victorie ouer her enemies. Now hee makes mention of the nations againſt whom the Iewes had continuall warres: the Philistiſtims aſſiſted and moleſted them on the one ſide, on the other ſide they had the Ammonites and Moabites, by whom they were conioyned both by ſanguinitie and neighbour hood. And on the other ſide were the Itumans, who were not withheld by any necereneſſe of kindred whatſoeuer, from being the ſworne enemies of the Iewes; they came of Eſau the brother of Iacob; the remembrance wherof ought to haue turned them from all hatred and rancour. And therefore the Lord promiſeth to his Church, that although ſhe ſhould haue enemies, that yet notwithstanding by ſuffering vnder them, ſhee ſhall conquer and bring them vnder in the end.

The ſtretching forth of the hands, ſignifies the domination which the Church ſhall obtaine ouer her enemies: for ordinarily the hands, ſignifies signifies power, and the Hebrews vse the phraſe, To ſtretch out the hand, to ſubdue this or that. So as it is ſaid in the Pſalme, I will ſet his hand in the ſea, and his right hand in the floods, Pſal. 89. 26. To ſtretch out the hand then ſignifies power to rule and gouerne; and contrariwiſe he alſo adds the obediēce which the enemies ſhall yeeld vnto her.

The Iewes who dreame of an earthlie kingdome and Meſſiah, interpret all theſe things carnallie, and draw them to I ſwor not what outward power, whereas they ſhould rather be eſteemed according to the ſtate and condition of Chriſtes kingdome. True it is that the effect of this prophete was ſcene to be fulfilled in ſome part, when the Lord brought back the Iewes from captiuitie, at which time he raiſed them vp into a good eſtate in deſpite of all their neighbour enemies: but the faithfull were to expect a more excellent victorie, which in the end they obtained by the preaching of the Goſpel. For albeit we muſt fight continually vnder the croſſe, yet we overcome our enemies notwithstanding:
 1. firſt, when being deliuered from vnder the tyrannie of the diuell & vnbeleeuers, we are called and maintained in freedom by Ieſus Chriſt, that the fleſh with all his luſts may be brought vnder: ſecondly, when by meanes
 2. hereof we liue to him, and poſſeſſe our ſoules in patience, quietly with a mecke ſpirit bearing whatſoever befall vs. We alſo heape
 Rom. 12. 20. coles of fire vpon the heads of our enemies, and by this meanes likewiſe we obtaine victorie ouer them and ouer all their iniuries and reproches, vnder which it ſeemes we are ſubiect.

Verſ. 15. The Lord alſo ſhall vntertie deſtroy the tongue of the Egyptian ſea, and With his mightie Wind ſhall liſt vp his hand ouer the riuier, and ſhall ſmite him in his ſeauen ſtreames, and cauſe men to walke therein With ſhoes.

HE means nothing elſe in this verſe but to ſhew that the Lord by his admirable power will open a way vnto his people which ſeemed to be ſhut vp before. Now he ſpeakes by a figure, for one ſide of the ſea is called a tongue, becauſe when the ſea enters vpō both lauds, and occupies one part, it ſeemes like a tongue thruſt out. He ſpeakes of the Egyptian ſea then, yea of Egypt it ſelfe, which he yet more plainly declares hereafter. But he principallie names the ſea and the riuiers, becauſe theſe be fortrefſes of the regions and the cloſings in of all paſſages.

[Vpon the riuier.] No doubt but he means the riuier Nilus, which watereth and compaſſeth all Egypt in many places, by meanes whereof they might haue ſhut vp the paſſage before the people returning into Iudea. I doubt not but the word Ruach is here taken for wind, although theſe words of the Lord be ioyned therewith: for all the winds are the Lords, ſeeing he gouernes and guides them as it pleaſeth him, and eſpeciallie a vehement whirlewind raiſed vp miraculoſlie is ſo taken when this word is vſed.

Now he alludes to the firſt deliuerance of the Church whē it was brought out of Egypt. For whē it pleaſed God to giue them paſſage, he dried vp the ſea by the violence and force of the winds, Exod. 14. 21. I grant that God needed not the help of winds, becauſe he was able to haue done it of himſelfe: but when he vſeth ordinarie meanes, firſt from thence we learne that all creatures are readie to yeeld obediēce vnto him. And howſoever they haue their naturall courſe, yet are they all in his hands, ſo as he will turne their force and violence which way ſoever it ſhall pleaſe him. For example, when the wind riſeth, it takes his beginning of a naturall cauſe: all the winds alſo haue their ſeueral proprietie: the ſouth wind is moyſt, the north wind cold, and the effects which proceed from them are altogether alike: for the ſouth wind makes the bodies moiſt, and the north wind dries them. The Lord ſhewes by admirable miracles that he hath a ſuperior power, and an ouerruling hand farre aboue theſe naturall cauſes, ſo as nature (that is to ſay, the diſpoſition of things, as prophane men haue imagined) ouerrules not, but he only. Secondly he ſhewes, that when he thinks good he changeth the nature and order of things, to the end he may be acknowledged the author of them, becauſe ſuch a change doth the better ſet forth his power and domination. This is the cauſe why Iſaiah ſpeakes not of the wind alone, but of the wind of the Lord, to the end we might know that the wind is not raiſed vp by chance, but is directed by the hand of the Lord.

[And he ſhall ſmite him in his ſeuen ſtreames.]

Others tranſlate floods, and expound it thus, He will diuide Nilus into ſeuen parts. Now although this expoſition be received of all, yet I approue not of it; and as I take it, they haue failed here by forgetfulneſſe rather then by ignorance, for I hold them learned men notwithstanding, and ſuch as are well exerciſed in reading the ancient writers. It is well enough knowne by hiſtories, that Nilus hath ſeuen principall mouthes; others were called falſe mouthes, becauſe they had no name. Look then how many armes or mouthes it had, ſo many ſtreames and riuers it made as it ſeemes; and his riuers would haue been ſo many lets and impediments to ſlacken the voyage. Now Iſaiah did purpoſely name the, becauſe of the great fame of this flood. Moreover, although this flood was deepe, yet notwithstanding he ſaith, it ſhall be ſo dried vp, that one ſhall not neede ſo pull off his ſhoes to paſſe ouer it: which yet they muſt needs haue done if there had been neuer ſo little water remaining.

The Prophet then vnder theſe borrowed ſpeeches means nothing elſe but to certifie them, that no power whatſoever ſhall be able to let God, when it pleaſeth him to deliuer his people out of captiuitie. He touched the hiſtorie of the firſt deliuerance, to the end they might know that the ſame ſhould now befall them which had hapned to their fathers.

What we haue to learne from Gods working by ordinarie meanes.

thers in times paſt. This is the cauſe why he doth thus paint it forth before their eyes, becauſe the meanes of this deliuerance ſhould not appeare. For this promiſe ſo barely publiſhed, would not haue entred into their hearts ſo effectually as this notable example did, which was thus propounded and ſet before them.

Verſ. 16. And there ſhall be a path to the remnant of his people, which are left of Aſhur; like as it was vnto Iſrael in the day that hee came vp out of the land of Egypt.

This verſe containes no new matter, but opens that further which went before; to wit, that the people ſhall feele the verie ſame powerfull hand of God in their deliue-rance out of Babylon, as they had formerly proued in their deliuerance out of Egypt. He opened a way thorow the ſeas, alſo thorow a waſte deſert: and laſtly, thorow the miſt of Iordan: euen thus will hee make way againe, Iſaiah ſaith, for his people by the ſame admirable meanes. Now what the Lord hath once done, let vs expect the ſame againe for the tyme to come; and let vs to this end conſider the ancient hiſtories. This alſo ought to be referred to the laſt deliuerance of the Church, when wee altogether ſhall be fully deliuered out of all miſeries and calamities: ſo as howſoeuer the things which are taught vs concerning the reſurrection and eternall life, ſeemes incredible vnto vs, and that the meanes thereof appeares not vnto vs as yet; let vs know notwithstanding, that it ſhall be eaſie with God to finde both the way and meanes.

THE XII. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. And thou ſhalt ſay in that day; O Lord, I will praiſe thee: though thou waſt angry with me, thy wrath is turned away, and thou'ſt comforted me.

*Or, thou wilt comfort.

Iſaiah now exhorts all the faithfull to render thanks to God: although the exhortation hath alſo this diſt; to wit, that they ſhould giue the greater credit vnto Gods promiſe. For hee hath ſealed it vp as it were vnto them by this exhortation; to the end they ſhould aſſure themſelues that it is vnmoueable. As alſo that they ſhould not imagine that the Prophet meant to feede them vp with a vaine hope, when hee put this forme of thankſgiuing as it were into their mouthes: which thanks, they could not haue giuen, vnleſſe the occaſion thereof had been both ſure and ſtedfaſt. In this ſong alſo hee ſhewes why it is that God doth good to his Church; to wit, that the memorie of his bleſſed name might be magnified; not that hee needs any of our praiſes, but becauſe this is profitable vnto our ſelues. For we ought diligently to conſider, what honour he doth vs when he vouchſafes to ſerue himſelfe of our induouours, in the magnifying and publiſhing his glorious name; wee notwithstanding being ſuch vnprofitable, yea altogether vnprofitable ſeruants. The Prophet in this ſong addreſſeth himſelfe in generall to all the people, euen as if hee ſpake to one man: for it was requiſite they ſhould be ioyned together, as if they had been but one. According to this example, our coniunction ought to be ſo ſtrait, that there ſhould be but one ſoule and one mouth: Rom. 15. 6. eſpecially if wee meane that our prayers and thankſgiuings ſhould be acceptable before God.

Though'ſt thou waſt angry.] The ſumme of this ſong is, that howſoeuer God was iuſtly provoked to anger againſt this people, yet notwithstanding ſatiſfying himſelfe with one little ſtroke of the rod, he will eaſilie be appeaſed. Now becauſe the particle Gi, is often put for ſhewing of the cauſe, ſome tranſlate; O Lord I will praiſe thee: for being angry againſt me, thou wert by and by appeaſed. But becauſe it is ſometime taken otherwiſe, I haue followed that which I thought to agree beſt to this place. The faithfull then doe firſt acknowledge their fault: ſecondly, they attribute their deliuerance out of their miſeries, vnto the mercy of God. Now becauſe the verbs are put in the future tense, one may alſo expound, The chaſtiſement wherewith thou ſmiteſt me for a time, ſhall be no impediment that thou ſhouldeſt not pitie mee at the laſt, and giue mee matter of ioy and conſolation. Whether of the expoſitions ſoeuer we receiue, this ſentence ought to be diligently obſerued: for as ſoone as our hearts are touched with the feeling of Gods wrath, wee are ſollicited vnto deſpaire; ſo as if the danger be not ſpeedily preuented, wee ſhall be ouerwhelmed before we are aware. Satan alſo tempts vs euery kind of way, and aſſaileth all meanes whereby hee may put vs out of heart. So much the more neede haue wee then to be well armed with this doctrine; that howſoeuer we feele the wrath of God, yet we may reſolue with our ſelues, that it ſhall not indure long: but that hee will ſend vs ſome conſolation after he hath chaſtened vs.

The ſumme of this ſong.

But if we haue deliuerance, then let vs remember that the afflictions are ended; not becauſe we haue ſatiſfied the iuſtice of God, as if we had merited it at his hands; but becauſe he beares with our weakeneſſe, euen of his fatherly louing kindeſſe. This confeſſion

Afflictions no ſuſtinations of Gods iuſtice.

This is noted from the word Thou, in the text.

Great difference between the afflictions of the godly and the wicked, though they seeme alike in outward appearance.

therefore appertaines properly vnto the faithfull and elect: for although the afflictions of the faithfull & the wicked are alike in appearance, yet is there great difference betweene them. For the wrath of God against the reprobate is perpetuall: and the plagues which they receiue are the tastes and beginnings of their eternall destruction: neither haue they any promise of refreshing or comfort: But the faithfull feele by experience, that the wrath of God endures not long, and doe therefore cheere vp their hearts with good hope and assurance; because they know that God will be mercifull vnto them in the end: which hope certifies them, that hee chastiseth them not so much for their finnes, as rather to bring them to repentance, that they should not perill with the world.

1. Cor. 11. 31.

Verf. 2. *Behold God is my saluation; I will trust and will not feare: for the Lord God is my strength and song, hee * is also become my saluation.*

*Or, shall be.

Although wee ought to apprehend the helpe of God in the midd of afflictions by faith, yet Isaiah speaks heere of that knowledge which is grounded vpon experience: for he endites a song of reioycing, when God by outward testimonies gaue them to vnderstand, that he was pacified towards his Church. Heereunto appertaines the particle Behold, because the bright and shining light of Gods countenance, which had for a time bin hidden from them, did now shine againe vpon them; and that so apparently, that it might almost be pointed out with the finger. Now inasmuch as wee are terrified in afflictions, so as it cannot be auoided, but y^e conscience of finnes will ouershadow our vnderstandings; no otherwise then as if the helpe of God were farre from vs, or did nothing at all appertaine vnto vs; the Prophet doth heere describe what a change there is in the afflictions, when God hath once reconciled vs vnto himselfe. But this prophecie extends it selfe principally vnto the comming of Christ, in which time God caused his saluation to appeare after a more speciall manner.

This propheticall song extends it selfe principally to the comming of Christ.

He adles afterwards, that when wee are once well resolu'd that our saluation dependeth vpon God, that the same is a stedfast foundation of firm assurance, and a singular remedie to appease fears. For without this wee must needes tremble, be still in vnquietnesse and perplexities, and miserably tossed to and fro. Hence wee gather, that confidence proceedes from faith, as the effect from the cause. For by faith wee feele that our saluation is in God: from thence followes a quiet and peaceable estate in the conscience: but where faith is not, there the conscience cannot be in quiet. Let vs know then that we haue well profited in faith, when we are furnished with this confidence which the Prophet heere describes.

Confidence proceedes from faith, as the effect from the cause.

We haue well profited in faith, when we are furnished with this confidence.

Morcouer, this confidence ought so to beare rule in our hearts, that it ought to put all fears and horrour to flight: not that wee can be vtterly exempt from all feare and disquietnesse, but because assurance will beare away the victorie at the last. Yet notwithstanding wee must remember what I haue said; namely, that the Prophet heere sets forth the cheerefulness which the faithfull enjoy, when God is favourable vnto them; whereas in former times they were almost overwhelmed vnder the weight of temptation.

Confidence ought so to beare sway in our hearts as to put all feares to flight.

For the Lord is my strength.] He more cleerely and in a more especiall manner expresseth, that the faithfull shall haue good occasion to sing, because they shall know by experience, that their strength was in their God: for the truth is, that their deliuerance was an excellent proofe of the power of God. But seeing Isaiah recounts not heere the benefit of one day onely, but extolles the worke which God determined in himselfe, to continue vntill the comming of Christ; it thereupon followes, that the praises of God are not founded forth as is meete, vnlesse it be by them who feeling their weaknesse, doe onely seeke vnto God, that hee would furnish them with strength and power. For it is not said heere, that hee should be a part, or the stay of our strength, but that hee is our full and perfect strength. The reason is, because wee haue no more strength and power, then that wee receiue from him. And in this regard also the faithfull say, that hee is their song; because they are thus liberally dealt withall by him, to the end they should exercise themselues in thanksgiuings. Whence we gather, that the beginning of ioy proceedes from the fauour of God, and that the end of that ioy is the sacrifice of praise. Truly the hearts of the faithfull ought to be so disposed to patience, that they should not cease to praise God euen when they see tokens of his frowning countenance: yet in the time of peace and prosperitie, they haue much more cause to open their mouthes, to the end they may sing forth y^e benefits of God with a loud voice.

Who they be that are fit to praise God.

Psal 50. 23.

We ought to praise God euen when we see manifest tokens of his wrath, much more when wee perceiue signes of his fauour.

But because the wicked reioyce euen whilest they despise God, and before themselves like bruit beasts with a false ioy, rocking their consciences asleepe therein, neuer awaking themselves to praise God, justly doth our Saviour Christ curse their ioy; Woe be to you, saith hee, that now laugh, for you shall weepe: your ioy shall be turned into heauinesse, and your laughter into gnashing of teeth. In the end of the verse, if any be pleased to retaine the preterperfect tense of the verbe, the sense will be, that the faithfull sing ioyfully, because God hath saved them. The sense will also agree very well in the future tense; to wit, that God hath not deliuered his chosen once onely, but that hee will also continue the same vnto the very end: for the faithfull ought not to stay themselues in the beholding of the present benefit alone, but to stretch forth their hope to the continuall progresse of Gods fauour.

Luke 6. 25.

Verf. 3. *Therefore With ioy shall yee draw waters out of the wells of * saluation.*

*Or, out of the Saviour.

BY this verse he confirms that which we haue touched before, to wit, that this Chapter

Chapter

This ſong is a ſcale to confirme the promiſe made touching the peoples deliuerance.

Chapter is as it were a ſcale to confirme the promiſe made touching the deliuerance of the people; as if he ſhould ſay, The ſaluation of the Lord is ſet before you as a liuing fountaine, out of which you may draw waters in abundance. This ſimilitude is very fit, for as there is nothing more neceſſarie for this preſent life then water, ſo nothing troubles and diſquiets vs more nor goes ſo nere vs as the want thereof doth. Thus by a figure called Synecdoche (when a part is taken for the whole) he ſhewes that whatſoever is neceſſarie for the ſuſtentation of life is giuen vs freely out of the meere bountie of God. And becauſe we are barren & emptie of all good things, it is no maruell that he compares the meere of God to a fountaine which ſatiſfies them that are thirſtie; reſeſheth thoſe that are parched with heate; and recreates thoſe that are wearie and laden.

Of the ſauour. This word ſauour agrees much better here then if he had ſaid, out of the fountains of God. For wee haue farre greater cauſe of conſolation when we know y himſelfe is the author of our ſaluation. The Prophet therefore hath appropriated this epithere according to the circumſtance of the place. Now if this promiſe comprehends vnder it the whole kingdome of Chriſt, wee for our parts ought alwayes to applie the ſame vnto our vſe. Let vs know then that the goodnes of God is heere offered and ſet before vs, to the end we might ſatiſfie our ſelus to the full therewith. For we ought (as Dauid faith) to be as the parched ground, gaping for thirſt, Pſal. 143. 6. and to aſpire vnto theſe waters of the ſauour. Now this goodnes of God is wonderfull and incredible, when he permits not that our deſire ſhould be in vaine, but freely offers and preſents a fountaine vnto vs, out of the which we may draw waters in abundance. Moreouer, Ieſus Chriſt is this fountaine, and in him we haue the participation of all Gods benefits; for as S. Iohn faith, we draw all out of his fulneſſe, Iohn 1. 16. It remaineth then that wee goe direſtly vnto him as ſoone as our pouertie and want preſeth vs.

Verſ. 4. And yee ſhall ſay in that day, praiſe the Lord, call vpon his name, declare his Works among the people, make mention of them, for his name is exalted.

HE not only exhorts them one by one to praiſe God, and to giue him thanks, but would alſo that they ſhould ſtirre vp others with them ſo doe the life: And as he had ſayd before, many people ſhall goe and ſhall ſay, Come, and let vs goe vp to the mountaine of the Lord, prouoking one another by mutuall exhortations to imbrace the pure worſhip of God: ſo after he hath commanded euery one of them to tender thanks to God, he would now alſo that they ſhould incite one another to the ſame dutie. He ſhewes then that this ought not to be ſaid only to one, but to all; and not only in one time, but for their whole life. Now in a brieſe ſumme he ſhewes how

God is righte honored when he commands vs to call vpon him, and to reioyce in none, but in him only. For this cauſe alſo the holy ſcripture by the word Inuocation, comprehends often times vnder it the whole ſeruiſe of God, vſing therein a part for the whole: for by prayer wee ſhew the truſt that wee haue in God; and this indeede he requires of vs about all things. I alſo thinke that prayer is ioined with praiſe, that the Prophet might comprehend the whole ſeruiſe of God.

Make mention &c. His meaning is that this deliuerance ſhall be ſo excellent a work, that it ought not to be hidden from any corner, but publiſhed thorowout the whole world. I grant that he would haue the Iewes to acknowledge this in the firſt place, but after he cauſed all people to haue the knowledge of it. And this exhortation whereby the Iewes ſhewed their good will, was as a preamble to the preaching of the Goſpell which was afterwards publiſhed. For as the Iewes magnified the fauor which God had ſhewed them amongſt the Medes and Perſians and other nations neere about them; ſo alſo after Chriſt once appeared, they ought to haue been heraults to publiſh the name of God thorowout all the quarters of the world. Hereby it appears with what zeale all the faithfull ought to be moued, namely, that they cauſe the goodnes of God to be manifeſted vnto all, to the end the ſeruiſe of God may be imbraced. Now we ought then eſpeciallie to be moued with ſuch an affection when we haue been deliuered from ſome great danger, as out of the iawes of the diuell, and from vnder the tyrannie of eternall death.

Verſ. 5. Sing vnto the Lord, for he hath done excellent things: this is knowne in all the World.

HE goes on ſtil with his exhortation, ſhewing vs from what affection this praſe ought to proceed; for he teacheth that it is our dutie to publiſh the goodnes of God in all places: and yet muſt we not exhort nor prouoke others to go forward, and out ſelus in the meane time to ſtand ſtill with our armes acroſſe, but we ought to leade them the way by our example: for there is nothing more abſurd then to ſee them ſlothfull and negligent, which prouoke others to praſe God. Now in ſaying that God hath done excellens things, he thereby ſignifies that there is great cauſe ſo ſing. Neither in deed would the Lord haue them to ſing forth his praſes vpon no ground; but he gaue them ample and very good cauſe thereof when he deliuered his people out of that extreme hard bondage. Now we haue alreadie ſaid that we muſt not reſtraine this ſong to one moment of time, but that it ought to be extended euen vnto the whole kingdome of Chriſt. This worke therefore is excellens indeed when God ſent Ioh. 3. 16. 17. Heb. 2. 14.

Ieſus Chriſt the true fountaine.

Chap. 2. 3.

stant matter giuen vs to praise God. When he saith in the last member, that this is knowne in all the world; hee therein toucheth the calling of the Gentiles, and confirms that which hath been already said; to wit, that this worke shall be such as it ought not to be concealed in some one corner; but to be published thorowout the whole world.

* Or, reioyce and sing.

Verf. 6.  Cry out and shout, O inhabitant of Zion: for great is the holy one of Israel in the midst of thee.*

No felicitie but where God dwels,

HE againe exhorts the faithfull to reioyce in God, and therewithall shewes what is the true reioyceing, and whereupon it is grounded. For we can haue no felicitie, but when God dwels in the midst of vs: without this, our life is poore and mistable, although wee had the abundance of all other benefits and riches whatsoeuer. So then if our hearts bee ioyned to this treasure, this felicitie will draw all our senses easily vnto it. He calles God holy, to the end we might know that he will make himselfe felt of vs when he dwelles with vs: that is to say, wee shall not onely reuerence his Maiestie, wherewith wee are by and by ouerwhelmed; but that we shall be also fully assured that hee hath a fatherly care ouer vs, albeit wee be separate from the rest of the whole world. For he calles him the holy one by the effect; because by gathering vs vnder his wings, and sauing vs by his grace, he sanctifies vs as a thing consecrated for his owne vs. And therefore if God be with vs, the feeling of his gracious presence will fill our hearts with ioy vnspeakeable. By reioyceing and singing, he signifies, that when God displayeth his power in the midst of vs, wee haue occasion to reioyce greatly. Also, speaking directly to the inhabitants of Zion, he shewes that all are not capable of so great a benefit: and hee therewithall closely exhorts vs to perseuere in the vnitie of faith, that being knit vnto the Church, we may reioyce with this hapie and blessed ioy.

From the first Chapter hitherto, the Prophet hath denounced iudgement against the two Kingdomes of Iudah and Israel: from the beginning of the Chapter following, to the 24. the Prophet foretelles what horrible calamities should befall the enemies of the Church. And thus God iudgeth his owne house first, as Peter speaks, 1st Pet. 4. 17.

THE XIII. CHAPTER.

Verf. 1. The burden of Babel, which Isaich the sonne of Amoz did see.

Seven reasons shewing the cause why God caused the ruine of the Churches enemies to be foretold.

From this Chapter vnto the 24. the Prophet foretelles the grievous and horrible calamities which should befall the Nations and Countries then knowne to the Iewes; either because they were neighbours vnto them, or else in regard that they had traffique or leagues with them.

And this he doth vpon good reasons: for when diuers changes happended, some thought that God did sport himselfe as it were, and tooke pleasure to bring base things to confusion: others thought that all things were guided by a blind violence of fortune; of which profane histories giue sufficient testimony: and verie few there were who could be reioiced that these casual mishappes were ordained and governed by the counsell of God. For no one thing is so hardly beaten into mens heads as this; namely, that the world is governed by the providence of God. Many indeed wil confesse this with their mouth, but the number of them is verie small which haue it truly engrauen in their hearts. We neede but one little puffe of wind to trouble vs, and behold we are vndone: then fall wee to searching the causes of it, as if this depended vpon the will of men. What will we doe then, when all the world is in an uproare, and that all things are so changed in diuers places, that it seemes they must needs thiner into pecces? Well, we see then it is very profitable that Isaich and the rest of the Prophets should speake of such calamities, to the end that all might vnderstand, that they come not to passe but by the secret and wonderfull counsell of God.

For if they had prefixed no prophecie touching this matter, things being thus suddenly confused, it might easlie haue troubled and appalled the hearts of the faithfull: But when they knew long time before that this should come to passe, they had therein a mirror wherein to behold Gods providence touching the things that happended.

After that Babylon was taken, vsic and experience taught them, that those things which they had learned in times past from the mouth of the Prophets, had not been foretold at random nor in vaine. Notwithstanding, there was an other cause why the Lord commanded that the ruine of Babylon and other places with it was foretold: not that the Babylonians had any profit at all by these prophecies, neither yet the other Nations, as though these writings came to them.

Another cause then was this, God meant by this consolation to assuage the sorrow of the faithfull, lest they should grow out of heart, as if their estate had bin worse then that of ye heathen, then, if they ſhould haue ſcene them eſcape the hand of God altogether without puniſhment. For if ſo be the monarchie of Babylon ſhould haue continued ſafe, the Iewes would not only haue thought they had ſerued the Lord in vaine, and that the covenant which he had contracted with Abramus had been to no purpoſe, ſeeing ſtrangers and wicked men were better dealt withall then the elect people of God: but they might alſo haue entered into a worſe ſuſpition, to wit, that God had fauored theſe curſed theues, who trod all iuſtice and equirie vnder their feet by their robberies and ſeditious; truly they might by and by haue thought either y God had had no care of his people, or elſe that he wanted power to ſuccor them in their need; or that all things were turned vſide downe by the conſuled mouing of fortune. To the end then they ſhould not be too much appalled, nor become vtterlie deſperate, the Prophet preuentis this by the conſolation of this propheſie, ſhewing therein that Babylon alſo ſhall be puniſhed.

Moreouer this compariſon did admoniſh them how grieuous the chaſtiſement ſhould be, which they oſter purpoſe had pulled down vpon their owne heads: for if God threaten the vnbeleuers and prophane nations ſo ſharplie, who yet haue erred in darknes, how much more ſeuere ought his anger to be againſt his people, who had wittinglie rebelled againſt him? Juſt it is that the ſeruant which knew his maſters will and did it not, ſhould be beaten with more heauie ſtripes. When God then denounceeth ſuch rough puniſhments againſt poore blind wretches, he therein did ſet a looking-glaſſe before the Iewes (who had been trained vp in the law) what chaſtiſement they had deſerued.

And yet the chiefe marke that Iſaiah aimes at in theſe propheſies, is to ſhew the Iewes how deare and pretious their ſalutation was in Gods eyes, when they ſaw that he tooke their cauſe into his owne hand, and executed vengeance vpon the wrongs which had been done them.

Now in the beginning the Prophet ſpake of the deſtruction and waſting of the kingdomes of Iuda and Iſrael (as we haue ſeene) which was to come, becauſe iudgement muſt firſt begin at the houſe of God, 1. Pet. 4. 17. for the Lord hath a ſpeciall care of his owne, and chiefly regards them. Wherefore euen as often as we reade theſe propheſies, let vs learne to applie them to our ſelues. True it is that the Lord doth not by piecemeale foretell all things which come to paſſe at this day in kingdomes and amongſt nations, and yet notwithstanding hath he not reſigned vp the adminiſtration of the world, which himſelfe keepeth in his owne hand, to another. When we then ſee the ruin of cities, the calamities which befall nations, and the change of kingdomes, let the things aforeſaid come vnto our minds, to the end we may humble our ſelues vnder Gods ſcourges, and learne to be wiſe by other mens coſts, and erie vnto the Lord for comfort in our afflictions.

Verſ. 1. The burden.] As touching this word burden, which we ſhall meeete ſo often withall, I will brieflie ſhew how we are to vnderſtand it. When the Prophets meane to denounce any aduerſitie, they vſualle vſe this word burden, that the people might know how no aduerſitie ſhould happen which the Lord himſelfe ſhould not lay vpon them, euen as a burden or ſaide is laid vpon mens ſhoulders. Now in regard that the wickednes and inflexiblenes of the people conſtrained the Prophets to ſpeake inceſſantlie of Gods ſcourges, thence it came to paſſe by a common flour or deriding maner of ſpeech, that the Iewes gaue this name of burden to all the propheſies, as it appeareth in the 23. of Ier. verſ. 36. where the Lord ſharplie rebukes them, becauſe by this flouting kind of ſpeech they not only diſſamed his word, but alſo made it odious and contemptible.

Moreouer this word ſhewes, that God ſends all calamities and afflictions to the end euery one may beare the puniſhment of his owne ſinne. He expreſly ſhewes, that that which he was to threaten was reuealed vnto him by a heauenly viſion, to the end this authoritie might put all diſcourſes of beſhlie wiſdome to ſilence. It was a thing no doubt hard to be beleued, that a Monarchie ſo beautifull, and abounding with ſo great riches, could be ouerthrowne by any meanes. In regard therefore that ſo great a power might not dazell their eyes, the Prophet brings them to the truth of the heauenly oracle, to the end they might by faith vnderſtand that iudgement of God which they were not able to comprehend by ſenſe.

Verſ. 2. Lift up a ſtandard vpon the ſie mountains: lift up the voice vnto them that wag the hand, that they may go into the gates of the nobles.

Here is a ſimilitude in the word mountaine, becauſe it is ſpoken to Babylon, which (as we know) was ſeated vpon a plaine: but he ſets it as it were vpon an hie place like a forteſſe mounted vp aboue all peoples, and that in regard of the Monarchie. Vnleſſe any had rather take this word indefinitely: as if he ſhould ſay, that whē the ſtandard ſhall be lifted up, they ſhall runne thither from farre countries, becauſe it will draw people vnto it from all parts by the fight of it. I take this latter ſenſe to be the moſt probable; but I thought it not amiſſe to ſet downe that firſt which was commonly receiued.

Notwithſtanding, this might ſeeme ridiculous, that the Prophet ſhould heere lay a commandement vpon the creatures, as vpon his ſubiect; were it not that he was taught to doe ſo of God, and was furniſhed as it were with his authoritie. For a priuate man heere commands the Medes and Perſians; hee calles armies; he bids them display the banner, ſound the trumpet to prepare vnto battel. In this place then wee haue to conſider the Maieſtie of God, in whoſe name he ſpeakes; and alſo the vertue and efficacy which is alwaies ioyned to his word. Wee often meeete with theſe kindes

What is vnderſtood by this word burden.

When God corrects, he alway begins with his owne.

kinds of speech in the Prophets, to the end we might know that God threatens nothing by his seruants, the execution whereof is not at hand. Isaiab might haue spoken more simply, and in plainer termes might haue told them, that the Medes and Persians shall come, and breake open the gates of Babylon, how strong and inuincible soeuer they seemed to be. But these exclamations haue much greater vehemencie in them, when hee not onely threatens war, as taking to himselfe the person of an Herald; but with soueraigne authoritie, commands the Medes and Persians to come, as if they were soldiery vnder his pay. Besides, he not onely teacheth that they shall bee readie when God shall onely make a signe vnto them, because they shall be pricked forward by his secret instinct: but being sent of God to denounce the ruine of Babylon, he attributes the effect of so incredible a thing to his owne voice. The summe is, that when God hath once spoken, we neede make no doubt but that his word shall be accomplished.

This is also worthy our obseruation, that he speakes to the Medes and Persians, and yet names the not: and this hath much greater vehemency in pointing them forth with the finger: as when we say, This man, and that man.

This manner of speech serues to confirme the prophetic, when he shewes things which were far off, as being present. When he saith; Shake the hand, and they shall enter: his meaning is, that the Medes and Persians shall no sooner set forward at Gods commandement, but they shall haue an open and easie way to march, without any impediment. Now although the Hebrewes call Princes, gracious Lords, and bountifull, (as our Lord Iesus Christ also giues them this title in the Gospel) notwithstanding it rather seemes that the Prophet speaks of the excellent power whereof the Babylonians boasted. For they were furnished with multitudes of people, and all preparations for war, aboue any others: so as it was a thing incredible vnto them, that they should euer be ouercome. But the Prophet declares that nothing shall be able to let, that God should not prepare the way, and giue passage to the enemies, Verf. 3. I haue commanded them that I haue sanctified: and I haue called the mightie to my wrath, and them that reioyce in my glory.

HERE the Prophet brings in the Lord speaking and declaring his Commandements. He calles the Medes and Persians his sanctified: that is to say, those which hce had prepared. For the verbe To sanctifie, is diuersly taken: sometimes it is referred to the spirit of regeneration, which is peculiarly giuen to the elect of God. Sometimes also it signifies to set apart, or prepare: which signification is the most fitting to this place. Now all those whom the Lord creates, hee also appoints to some certaine vse; and scatters not men here and there vpon the earth at randome, to range whither soeuer they think good: but he gouernes them by his secret counsell, orders and moderates the violences of the reprobates, so as hee moues them at his pleasure, this way or that way; and then represseth and pulles them in short when hee listeth. And therefore he calles them sanctified, whom hee hath set apart, and prepared for his seruice, howsoeuer they bee no whit aware of it.

Whence wee are taught, to attribute and referre all the changes in this world, to the secret counsell of God. In this place also wee haue a meruailous consolation; to wit, that the wicked shall be able to doe nothing but that which is decreed of God, let them enterprize what they will. Where hee immediately addes, that he hath called them; it is much more then to command: which hee puts in the first place. For his meaning is, that the enemies shall not onely rouse vp themselves at the signe which God shall giue them, but at his expresse commandement: euen as if I should call one to come vnto mee, and hee should forthwith follow mee. He shewes then that Babylon shall be destroyed by the Medes and Persians, no otherwise then if they should yeelde obedience to the call of God. For although their ambition, pride, and crueltie, was the motiue (touching themselves) which prouoked them to the warre; yet God fitted them thereunto without their priuitie, that they might bee the executioners of his iudgement.

Verf. 4. The noise of a multitude in the mountaines like a great people: a tumultuous voice of the Kingdomes of the Nations gathered together: the Lord of hostes numbred the host of the battel.

HE now addes a more liuely description, by which he sets the things themselves as it were before their sight, because y^e Prophets contented not to speake only, vnclesse therewithall they did euen plainly represent the things wherof they spake; for words barely and coldly pronounced after a common maner, moue not so much; neither doe they touch mens hearts so to the quick as figuratiue speeches doe, which represent the liuely image of things. It is then as if the Prophet should say, You now heare a man speake, but know ye that this voice shall haue such great efficacie that by the very sound thereof nations shall be moued, peoples shall make a noise, and a great sound, for the great multitudes of them; yea, they shall cast forth fearefull cries, and all to bring Babylon to ruine. This cry then shall haue such force, and that after my death, as if that which I now threaten were presentie before your eyes.

By this therefore we see of how great efficacie the word of God is, when all creatures both in heauen & in earth yeeld obedience vnto it. So much the more then ought we to be confirmed in this doctrine, seeing nothing come to passe which was not foretold long time before. This is the reason why he affirms in the latter end of the verse, that God will assemble divers nations together vnder his conduct: and howsoever they shall haue no meaning at all to execute those correctiōs which he hath ordained, yet shall they do nothing but by his appointmēt, euen as if some Captaine amongst vs should muster or set his souldiers in array.

Verf. 5. *They come from a farre country, from the end of heauen: euen the Lord with the * Weapons of his Wrath to destroy the Whole Land.*

* Or, vessels, or instrumēt.

HE yet more fullie confirms that which I said erewhile, to wit, that the preparatiōs of warre come not out of the earth nor by hap hazard: for albeit men by their lusts raise vp those troubles which are in y world, yet God hath an ouerruling hand about them. Jsaiah therefore rightly attributes the preheminecie vnto him, seeing men are nothing but the weapons of his wrath. Now he saith, that the destroyers of the Monarchie of Babylon shall come from a farre countrie, the reason is, because we seldome feare any dangers, vnlesse those which be very neere vnto vs. Babylon was in such wise fortified and well compassed about with so many kingdomes and prouinces which were subiect vnto it, that it seemed no enemies could euer so much as approach vnto it. In a word, the feared no dangers at all, euen as if the had been compact together, and built in the cloudes.

In as much then as there was no danger which threatened this citie any way round about it, he therefore shewes that the destruction thereof shall come from farre. For although all things may seeme quiet and peaceable in our conceit, hauing no controuersies at all with our neighbours, yet notwithstanding God is able to cause enemies to come from the uiermost part vnder heauen. Wherefore we haue no occasion to promise a secure and prosperous estate vnto our selues, although we should discern no danger neere at hand to threaten vs. If this prophesie should haue been caried to Babylon, no doubt but they would haue despised it as a meere fable. For let it bee granted that they would haue had some respect of the Prophets person, yet would they (in this their proud confidence wherewithall they were possessed) haue contemned these threatnings as vaine and friuolous. An example wherof wee haue readie at hand: for wee at this day speake of the Turke in our Sermons, yet euerie one thinks they be idle tales, because we thinke they are very farre off: notwithstanding wee see how much ground he hath gotten in a small time, in ouerrunning those which were farre remote from him, and were more mightie then he. The sottihnes of men is so great, that they can not be awakened vnlesse they be beaten vpon till they may feele the blowes. Let vs therefore set the Babylonians before vs as an example to teach vs wisdom, that so we may feare the threatnings which the Prophets denounce in their Sermons betimes, lest we be ouertaken with the reprobates, who trusting to their tranquillitie are so assomished when the hand of God appeares and sautes them, that they are vterly vnable to stand, but rather fall downe senselesse and amazed.

Whereas he puts the whole Land for Babylon, he hath respect to the largeness of the kingdome, that they might not thinke to preuent the assaults of the enemies by means of the prouinces wherewith they were inuironed on euerie side: yea, notwithstanding that he shewes the calamitie shall be such, that it shall not only come in one way vpon them, but shall be as a deluge, ouerspreading a great part of y world. Moreover, the Medes and Persians are here called instrumēt, or vessels of the wrath of the Lord in a contrarie sense to that which the reprobates are so called by S. Paul Rom 9. 22. For there the Apostle opposeth the vessels of wrath to the vessels of mercie; and teacheth, that the free grace of God shines in the elect, and his iust and severe iudgement in the reprobate. But the Prophets meaning is, that the Medes and Persians are as darts in Gods hand, of whom he serues his turne to execute his wrath and vengeance.

Verf. 6. *Howe you for the day of the Lord is at hand: it shall come as a destroyer from the * Almighty.*

* Or, of the strong, or, destruction of the destroyer.

HE follows the matter still, and commands the Babylonians to howle; not that he directs his speech to them, as if he were in hope that it should profit them, but in shewing what effect it should haue, hee intermingles this maner of speech with great vehemencie. He speaks of the day of the Lord after the vsual phrase of the scripture, because that when the Lord defers his iudgements, it seemes he ceaseth from performing of his office, euen as Iudges do when they go not vp into their iudgement seates. Let vs then obserue this language well; the reason is, we would willingly subiect the Lord to our fancies, that so he might by and by pronounce sentence against the vnbeleeuers. But hee hath prefixed his owne time, and knowes the opportunities right well in which wicked men are to be punished, and when to giue succor to the good. In the next place he shewes that the rigour of Gods iudgement shall be so great, that it shall not only giue iust occasion to the Babylonians to weepe, but also to howle, because he will openlic display his strength for their destruction. For the verbe Shadedai signifies to scatter and to destroy, whence Shadei one of the names of God, which some haue translated Almighty, is deriued. Here is then an elegant allusion to this etymologie, as if he should say, The Babylonians in their destruction shall feele it is not vaine that God is called Shadei, that is to say strong, and Almighty to destroy.

Verf. 7.

Verf. 7. Therefore shall all hands be weakened, and all mens hearts shall

*Or, run out. *melt.

HE shewes that the Lord shal haue so great power to destroy the Babylonians, that they shall be vtterly destitute of any thing whatsoeuer, that might hinder or turne backe his wrath. For albeit they were very rich and mightie, yet should they haue such deiected hearts, and such weake hands, that they should neither haue will nor power to resist. And thus by the way hee glanceth at the crueltye wherewith the Babylonians were puffed yp: seeing it is in the power of God to dissolue mens hearts, to breake, loosen, or weaken their hands, or armes, in such wise that all valour shall fall to the ground, and strength shall be turned into smoke. Now when the heart quailes, what auailes castles, great troopes of men, riches, forts, and fortresses? what auailes a shop well fraught with tooles without a workman? we haue experience of this daily, euen in those to whom God notwithstanding giues great meanes. And thence we may perceiue how vaine that confidence is, which wee put in the helps of flesh, seeing they are so vnprofitable, if God doe smite our hearts but with the least astonishment.

Verf. 8. And they shall be afraid, anguish and sorrow shall take them, and they shall haue paine as a woman that travelleth: every one shall be amazed at his neighbour; and their faces shall be like flames of fire.

BECAUSE the signification of the word Tsim, is doubtfull, the Greeke translatours haue turned it, Ambassadors. But here it signifies anguish, as may sufficiently be perceiued by the similitude of the woman in trauaile with child: which is afterwards added. For he here sets before them as it were in one word, that which he had told them before; to wit, that their hearts should melt, and their hands should be weakened, because, saith he, anguish and sorrow shall surprize them. But whence comes this astonishment? From God. The ancients called this astonishment, a distracted feare. Thus called they the hobgoblins visions, and such like things which frightened men, albeit they had no inward occasion at all so to doe. This was not altogether from the purpose; but yet notwithstanding they erred too grossly, because they vnderstood not that such a thing proceeded from God.

As a woman in trauell with child.] Surely the Babylonians had iust occasion of feare, seeing themselves assailed by valiant and warlike men; but yet the Prophet threatens them that they shall quaike and be in a swound, although they were strong enough to resist them; because they should bee dulled by a secret iudgement of God. To this appertaines that which he addes; namely, that euery one shall be amazed at his neighbour, euen as when men affrighted, looke gassly here and there: and not onely that, but also when there shall be any hope of succour, yet they shall stand still like blockes, as men deprived of all feeling. But the vehemencie of the feare is yet much more cleerly expressed in the member following, when he attributes vnto them faces like fire. For they are too sparing, who thinke (as some doe) that this word signifies shame; as if it were said in one word, they shall blush with shame. Isaiab meant a greater and a more fearfull thing then so. When torments presse vs indeed, the face will be inflamed, and wee shall glow as being closed in with dolours: truly it were too light then to referre it to a blushing onely, in such an horrible desolation. For he describes so strange a calamitie, that for the bitteresse of it, flames shall sparkle as it were out of the face: which indeed comes to passe, when men are vexed with extreme dolour. The similitude of a woman in trauaile, not onely expresseth the greatnesse of the grieft, but also a sudden hurtliburly. Euen as the calamitie then should be bitrer and violer, so also Isaiab saith, it shall be sudden: and good reason, for the Babylonians, who were furnished with so many forces, could neuer haue dreamed that they should euer be molested by any means whatsoeuer.

Verf. 9. Behold, the day of the Lord commeth; cruell, with wrath and fierce anger, to lay the land waste: and hee shall destroy the sinners out of it.

HEREPEATS that which he touched heerebefore; to wit, that although the Babylonians rested securely in their abundance; that the day of the Lord notwithstanding is at hand, which will astonish these secure fellows. But yet it may be demanded, for what cause the day of the Lord is called cruell, seeing there is nothing more desirable, then to inioy the presence of God: neither is there any thing indeed but this onely, which makes vs happy. I answer, we must alwaies obserue to whom the Prophet speaks. For the Prophets were accustomed to dieferie God in diuers sorts, according to the diuersity of the auditors: as Dauid also testifies where hee saith; that hee is mercifull and fauourable to the good, secure and rigorous to the wicked: Pfal. 18. 16. 27. For what can the wicked conceiue in God, but an extreme seueritie? and therefore they tremble as soone as they heare him spoken of. But the faithfull on the contrarie, conceiue and receiue great ioy and sweetnesse in such words; so as nothing can be propounded vnto them more delectable. And therefore when the Prophets turne themselves to the faithfull, they mingle ioy and gladnes therewithall in mentioning of God; because they onely feele him gracious and mercifull vnto them: but if they speake to the vnfaithfull, the iudgement of

Verf. 7.

God is no sooner propounded, but they adde teares and sorrowes. For euen as the faithfull reioyce at the presence of God, because they apprehend his goodnesse by faith: so also the wicked on the contrary are afraid, because their consciences reproues them, and findes them guiltie in regard their seuerer Iudge is at hand. And because hypocrits also seeme to wait for the day of the Lord with great desire, boasting that he will assist them; the Prophets are wont to vnmask them, testifying also, that this day shall be cruell and terrible.

Jsaiah also applies a description to this propheticke, much vied; the better to shew how greatly the wrath of God is to be feared. For inasmuch as we are slow by nature, or rather blockith, we moue not much if the Lord should speake of his iudgements simply. Because therefore a bare and naked speech should haue little vehemencie, hee findes out new kindes of speaking to awaken our drouinesse. By sinners, hee means not all men in generall; but those wicked and desperate wretches which dwelt in Babylon.

Verf. 10. For the starres of heauen, and the planets thereof shall not giue their light: the Sunne shall bee darkened in his going forth; and the Moone shall not cause her light to shine.

TO the end men might be the more liuely and effectually touched with the feare of Gods iudgements, the Prophets are wont to adde exceffiue manners of speeche to their threatnings, which should euen set the wrath of God as it were before their eyes; that so it might pierce into all their senses: euen as if there were not one of the elements which should not rise vp on Gods behalfe to execute his vengeance. And yet these exceffiue speeches exceede not the heinousnesse of the offence, for it is impossible to set forth so horrible a representation of Gods iudgement; but the feeling thereof shall be far more terrible. Well, he speaks of the Sunne, Moone, and starre; and the reason is, because these are excellent testimonies of the fatherly kindnesse of God towards men. Christ therefore shewes, that Gods goodnesse doth in speciall manner appeare, because he makes his Sunne to shine vpon the good and bad: Matth. 5. 45. When the Sunne, Moone, and starres then shine in the heauen, God giues vs cause of reioicing, euen as it were by a sweete and amiable countenance. In as much then as in the brightness of the heauens, he shewes a ioyfull and cheerefull face, euen as if he laughed: the darknesse which the Prophet here describes, signifies as much, as if God hauing hid his face, would cast men headlong into sorrowes and into darknesse, because he is angry with them.

There is the like description in the second Chapter of Isai: and wee haue already said, that this manner of speeche is familiar in the Prophets; to let vs know, that all things shall turne to our ruine, if God be once against vs.

True it is hee sometimes shewes signes of his indignation in the Starres; but that is extraordinary: and the darknesse which the Prophet here describes, shall not come before the last coming of Christ Iesus. But this ought to suffice vs, namely, that all creatures which employ themselves for our seruice, as testimonies and instruments of the louing kindnesse of God, shall not onely cease from the seruice which now they doe vs; but shall euen arme themselves for our destruction, as soone as God shall ascend to iudgement.

Verf. 11. And I Will visit the wickednesse vpon the world, and their iniquities vpon the wicked: and I Will cause the arrogancie of the proud to cease, and will cast downe the pride of tyrants.

THE Prophet speaks not heere of all the world: but Babylon being then the seate of the mightiest Monarchie in all the earth, therefore it is that hee attributes this name world vnto it by a phrase of speeche, hauing great weight in it for Babylon then was as a world, and seemed to occupie almost all the earth. But in the meane while, he declares that nothing is so highly exalted in this same world, which God shall not easilie bring downe euen with his least finger. On the other side, hee aduertiseth that God will then take vengeance vpon the crueltie which the Chaldeans exercised. Let vs also there withall obserue, that hee sets the malice and wickednesse of Babylon in the first place, to the end wee might know that God is not to be esteemed cruell, in regard he chastised it so seuerely, seeing hee smites not this people, but according as the measure of their offences and iniquities had deserued. He takes away all occasion of false accusations then, to the end we ought vnderstand that God is not delighted with the calamities of men: for when hee deals with them according to their deserts, all must haue their mouthes stopped, in regard hee neuer sends bitter and sharpe afflictions, but he findes the cause thereof in men themselves. And yet we must keepe in minde that which I touched; to wit, that the Prophet greatly comforts the faithfull when he shewes them that he will punish the crueltie of the Babylonians at the last, how soeuer hee spared them for a time.

Hee expresseth this immediately, in touching one particular vice; to wit, pride: for thence it was that Babel tooke libertie to oppresse the poore to the vttermost, euen as she listed. But from thence ought we also to gather a very profitable doctrine; namely, that God must needs visit vs sharply, if wee be proud, and please our selues in our selues. For vnder this word, the Prophet comprehends all manner of arrogancie and high imaginations. Be it then that men thinke themselves something; or that they admire their riches, and care for none in respect of themselves; the Lord cannot beare anie arrogancie, neither will he leaue it vnpunished. Seeing then that this is noted heere as the principall and most notorious wickednes amongst a great many other wherewith Babylon was stuffed, so also the wrath of God we see is most set on fire by this sinne. Now this arrogancie was not without tyrannie and crueltie as it ordinarilie falls out: and therefore he addes immediatlie the glorie of tyrants.

For violences, outrages, and oppressions do follow, when men despise others: neither can it be chosen that a man should abstaine from offring violence vnto another, vnlesse he put off all perswasion and opinion of himselfe.
Let vs pull down our peacocks feathers then,
and learne we also to bring vnder our lostinesse to a true and voluntarie humilitie; vnlesse peraduenture we had rather be smitten downe and humbled to our confusion and destruction.

Verf. 12. I will make a man more pretious then fine gold, euen a man aboue the redge of Ophir.

Heere describes in particular the cruell and horrible warre which shall be made vpon the Babylonians: as also the faithfull being instructed by these prophesies, wished (by the spirit of prophesie) for that which was the extreamest and most cruell stratageme of warre, to wit, that the Medes and Persians might pluck the little children from their mothers breasts to dash them against the stones: the summe is, that Babylon shall not only be destroyed, but also whollie rooted out. For when he saith the life of man shall be more precious then gold, he meanes, that the enemies shall be so fleshed in shedding of blood, that men shall not escape their hands for any ranfome whatsoever. Why so? Because they shall loue rather to massacre then to take any ranfome.

Quest.

Dan. 6. 1.

Ans.

Some may demand whether this discom-figure were so cruell as Isaiab heere describes it, for histories witness otherwise: and Daniel himselfe (who was there present) saith, that the citie was taken only, Dan. 5. 30. This is the cause why some expositors haue bene driuen to referre every thing which is said here of Babylon to all reprobates: but therein they haue wrested the text, for the Prophet by and by after speaks of the Medes and Persians. Moreover, the threatnings which wil orderlie follow hereafter touching the Moabites, Tyrians, Egyptians, and other nations, doe sufficientlie shew that this prophesie is properlie against the Chaldeans, whom the Prophet placeth in the first rank:
not that their destruction was so neere at hand as was the destruction of the rest; but because ſ Chutch had no greater nor more dangerous enemies then they. And wee must obserue that Isaiab spake not this whilst the Monarchie of Nineue flourished, but whatsoeuer he foretold against the profane nations in the whole course of his ministrie, is put all vpon one heape as it were. Thus then the order of time was not kept, but the likenes of things was the cause why they haue put all these prophesies in one. For whence is it that Isaiab makes no mention of Nineue, seeing hee afterward sheweth that the Assyrians only were they which molested the Iewes (with whom the Babylonians were in league) but in regard that he speaks not of the histories of his time till he comes to the three and twentie Chapter, but only prophesieth of the iudgements of God which came to passe after his death?

Now when he declares that Babylon shall be destroyed vtterlie; it is certaine he speaks not of one destruction barely, but vnder it comprehends the full ruin thereof, which followed long time after the first. For Babylon flourished, yea after the Persians had subdued it, and kept the name and dignitie of a thrice renowned citie. And howsoeuer it be true that another citie was built, called Ctesiphon, that part of the glorie and riches of Babylon might be taken away; yet notwithstanding the commoditie of the place, the sumptuous buildings and fortresses of the citie, caused that (the dignitie royall excepted)
she was in nothing inferior to the head citie of Persia. Yea, after the death of Alexander the Great, when Seleucia was built neere vnto it, yet could it not staine the name and reputation of this so ancient citie. From hence then we gather, that the things which are heere spoken, can not be restrained to one time. And yet is it not without cause that the Prophet threatens them so sharplie, seeing the change of their empire was the beginning of diuers calamities which followed thereupon afterwards. So that howsoeuer all the people were not slaine, yet notwithstanding in regard the citie was forcible assailed and taken by a sodaine assault, and that by night when all the kings court were drowned in drunkennes; it could not be but the Medes and Persians hewed all those in pieces which they met withall: and therefore we need not doubt but the most valiant of the enemies made many slaughters before they receiued all the people to their mercie. For will any man doubt but that this proud nation was dishonorable handled by these barbarous conquerors, seeing it was vnpossible to subdue them by any other meanes?

Now after that Babylon was by little and little brought vnder, shee by and by after changed her king, and after she had been a while vnder the gouernment of Alexander the Macedonian, the iudainly fell into the hands of Seleucus, who indeuored by all meanes to abate the greatnes of it, till at the last it was brought vtterlie to ruine. And thus whilst God suffered her to stand, she serued as a deformed and shamefull spectacle, that the accomplishment of this prophesie might be the more excellent and certaine: and therefore our Prophet rightlie affirms, that the wrath of God shall not be appeased, vntill this den of theeues shall be wholly brought to nought.
As touching the words, some of the expo-sitors take Enoſſ (which we haue translated man) for a warlike and noble man; and Adams (which wee haue expounded person) for all handicrafts men. But in as much as the Etymologic

mologie agrees not well herewith; I doe not thinke the Prophet meant ſo: I am rather of opinion, that it is a repetition of words, which is common with the Hebrewes. Others take the word Ophir, (which) according to diuers expositours, haue translated, pure gold, for a precious ſtone: but we gather from many places of the Scripture, that it ſignifies very pure and tried gold.

Verſ. 13. Therefore I will ſhake the heauens, and the earth ſhall remoue out of her place, in the wrath of the Lord of hoſtes, and in the day of his ſierce anger.

THis is another figure which ſerues for an amplification. For God cannot repeat this doctrine too often. The reaſon is, not onely to aſtoniſh the infidels, but alſo to bring conſolation to the good, who are often times diſquieted, when the wicked are at their caſe, and haue all things at their deſire: which Dauid confeſſeth when he ſaith; I haue cleaſed mine heart in vaine, and waſhed mine hands in innocencie: Pſal. 73. 13. Theſe liuely images then are for good cauſe thus painted out before our eyes, to ſhew vs plainly the deſtruction of the wicked. And therefore it is as if Iſaiab ſhould ſay; Were it ſo that the verie heauens had neede to be ſhaken for the bringing downe, and the rooting out of infidels; euen that ſhould be done. For they thinke themſelues out of all danger, and ſo deeply rooted in the earth, as if it were impoſſible to plucke them vp; but the Prophet ſhewes that they greatly deceiue themſelues, becauſe the Lord will rather ſhake the heauen and the earth alſo, then that they ſhould not come tumbling downe from their greatneſſe, whereunto they are mounted vp aloft. Whence it followes, that although the world preſents a thouſand leauiug ſtockes vnto vs, as well high as lowe, yet notwithſtanding there ſhall be no ſtedfaſtneſſe in any of them, vnleſſe God therewithall be mercifull vnto vs. And if this appears in particular iudgements, how much more will it appear in that generall iudgement, when Chriſt ſhall aſcend into the iudiciall throne of his maieltie to pronounce ſentence of condemnation againſt all the wicked?

Verſ. 14. And it ſhall be as a chaſed Doe, and as a ſheepe that no man taketh vp: euery man ſhall turne to his owne people, and flee each one to his owne land.

HEe declares that outward ſuccours ſhall profit the Babylonians nothing at all: and by theſe ſimilitudes, ſhewes with what feare the ſouldiers ſhall be ſeazed. Now Babel did not onely ſtrengthen her ſelfe with the men of warre of her owne Countrie, but ſhe had ſtrangers alſo vnder her pay. He ſaith, they ſhall all reſemble little Fawnes or Does, which are very timorous beaſts: and to ſcattered ſheepe; ſo as they ſhall retire neither to their Enſignes nor Garriſons, nor yet keepe a ny order. And when he addes, euery one ſhall flee to his land; it ſufficiently appears from thence, that the Prophet ſpeakes not of the inhabitants of Babel, nor of other people; but of ſtrangers which had been called to her ſuccour. For it hath been ſaid heretofore, that the hearts of men are ſo in the hands of God, that when it pleaſeth him they ſuddenly recouer new ſtrength, who were before fearefull and amazed: and contrariwiſe, thoſe who haue ſhewed great valour and boldneſſe, loſe it all in an inſtant, and become weake and ſceminat.

Verſ. 15. Euery one that is found, ſhall be ſtricken thorow: and whoſoeuer ioyneth himſelfe, ſhall fall by the ſword.

HE here confirms that which he ſaid heretofore; to wit, that none ſhall eſcape out of Babylon, and that all thoſe which ſhall be therein ſhall periſh. Xenophon telles, how by the commandement of Cyrus, all thoſe which were met withall the firſt night, were put to death: and the next day; all thoſe which had not brought in, or laid downe their weapons. But we haue already ſaid, that this prophecie hath a further extent; becauſe this firſt taking was onely the beginning of all other calamities, whereunto Babylon was expreſly referred by the Lord, to the end it might be puniſhed the more often. Others expound the ſecond member otherwiſe then I haue tranſlated it: for in as much as Saphan ſignifieth, To loſe; or, To conſume; they reade, Whoſoeuer ſhall be loſt, and expound this of old men, who by reaſon of their age, can liue no longer: as if he ſhould ſay; they would not pardon, no not euen thoſe who are already worne with age, and vpon the brim of their graues, yea when they ſhould haue one foote within as it were, and ſhould be ready to yeeld vp the ghoſt. But becauſe this is a conſtrained expoſition, and that the very ſame verbe ſignifies, To be ioyned, I had rather follow Ionathan, and others, who thinke the Prophet ſpeakes of the bands and ſquadrons: as for example, when a Cirie is to be taken, the ſouldiers ioyne together to beate backe the aſſaults of the enemies. Vnleſſe any had rather vnderſtand by theſe words, the confederates and companions which were ioyned together with the Babylonians, the more to amplify the greatneſſe of this diſcomfiture.

Verſ. 16. Their children alſo ſhall be broken in pieces before their eyes: their houſes ſhall be ſpoiled, and their wines raiſhed.

HEe paintes out an image of more then barbarous cruelty. For behold the vttermoſt extremite of the enemies rage; when no age whatſoeuer ſhall be ſpared; when liſſe children are ſlaine, who ſhould rather bee defended in regard of their young yeares.

And yet he further amplifies the crueltie, when he saith that this shall be done in the presence of their fathers and mothers. That which followes of the houses which shall be spoiled, and of the women which shall be ravished, tends also to the same end: and this fallies out when the enemies having forgotten all humanitie, and being inflamed with crueltie, would y^e those whom they haue subdued were vterlic rootted out, with their name also.

Vers. 17. Behold, I will stirre vp the Medes against them, which shall not regard siluer, nor be desirous of gold.

The Prophet hauing prophesied the destruction of y^e Babylonians, shewes therewithall also the authors; or, he rather expresseth, that God shall be the mouer of them: and therein also specifies how or by whom this worke shall be done: for he saith, that he will stirre vp the Medes. Certainlie he could not coniecture this by any humane reason; for there was then no enemie nor diffensions betweene the Medes and the Babylonians. And although there had been discord; what was the power of the Medes then, to doe the Babylonians any harme? Seeing things were not so fitted then that the Medes could make warre with the Babylonians, it is very certaine that the Prophet was inspired of God in this matter, especiallie if we consider that he foretold these things more then an hundred yeres before they came to passe. When he addes that they shall not couet gold, nor siluer, he excuseth not the Medes of their rauening and avarice, as if they should be so liberal as to despise gold and siluer: but he rather meant to say, that this warre shall be so cruell & terrible, that nothing shall be seene but a final destruction; for example, because the speciall drift which the Spaniards aime at now adaias when they make warre, is only to spoile and rob, they doe more easily spare mens liues, and are not so addicted to shed blood as the Almans or Englishmen be, who thinke of nothing but killing their enemies.

Now let it not seeme strange to any man that the Lord who is louing & gracious doth yet notwithstanding serue his turne of so cruel executioners: for he works iustlie euen by the wicked; and yet is not spotted himselfe with their malice. Wherefore we must not iudge of the worke of God by the executioners thereof, who are caried away with ambition, couetousnes, or crueltie: but wee ought to consider therein the iust vengeance of God, which the Babylonians had well deserved, because of their wickednesse.

Vers. 18. With bowes also shall they destroy the children, and shall haue no compassion vpon the fruite of the womb, and their eyes shall not spare the children.

Some translate, They shall kill, and thinke that this is spoken by an excessiue manner of speech, as if they should vse the children of the Babylonians in stead of arrowes, in regard they dashed them against the stones, that they might breake them with the greater violence. But I had rather take it more simplic, namely, that the crueltie of y^e Medes shall be so great, that they shall not spare so much as the litle children, which notwithstanding are neuer touched except it be there where they commit exceeding outrages. In a word, that neither old nor yong should be spared, as we haue said erewhile. But we reade not that the Medes vsed any such crueltie: and Babylon was in good estate, and flourished long time after this difcomfiture: and although the seate of the kingdome was caried thence, yet she kept her renowme still, for the very day and night before that it was taken, there was no hurt done, except it were to those which bare armes. In the meane while howsoeuer it was the Prophets meaning to comprehend other iudgments of God also which threatened the Babylonians, and came to passe long time after this first calamitie: yet is it not without reason, neither from the purpose that he describes the maners of barbarous nations, that so the Iewes might the better vnderstand that God had a iust recompence readie in his hand to execute vpon the Babilonith tyranny. No doubt but y^e faithfull also vpon the ground of this promise made the imprecation cōteined in the 137. Psalmē, Blessed shal be he that takes th^e children and dasheth them against the stones.

Vers. 19. And Babel the glorie of kingdomes, and the beautie and pride of the Chaldeans, shall be as the destruction of God in Sodome and Gomorah.

Isaiah meant to cōclude his prophesie touching the ruin of y^e Babylonians in a briefe maner in this place, although he addes some amplifications to confirme his speech touching the full rooting of them out. For the Prophets speake in such sort of the punishments of the wicked, that they leaue them no hope of mercie wherewith they might comfort themselves. But as touching the faithfull, although it seemes now and then that they should be chastened too seuerely; yet are they susteined with this assurance, that the Lord will haue pitie vpon them, and will not vterlic destroy them. Whence we ought to gather, that we must not alwaies iudge according to the outward appearance. For we shall many times thinke that the children of God are vterlic yndone, whose saluation notwithstanding is neere, yea euen in the midst of death it selfe.

In Sodome and Gomorah. } This example is oft alledged by the Prophets, to the end wee might know that howsoeuer all chastisements be not equall, yet notwithstanding in as much as God is vnpartiall in his iudgements, the memorable example which he shewed thereof in the destruction of Sodom appertaines to all reprobates: so as those who harden themselves in their sinnes with the like obstinacie, shall be no lesse punished then they were. And they distinguish betweene the punishments

ments of the elect, and reprobates, in ſuch wiſe, that ſtill God left ſome ſeed to the Iſraelites; but to the wicked none: as we have ſcene in the firſt Chapter; If the Lord, ſaith he, had not left vs a ſeed, we had bin as Sodom and as Gomorah. But he purſues the reprobate with all ſeveritie; and therefore the Prophets threaten them with the very ſame ruine which happened to the Sodomites; that is to ſay, an utter deſtruction without all hope of recovery.

He ſaith it is the ones throw of God; to the end wee ſhould not thinke it came to paſſe by chance, or by the will of men. For euen as the fire fell not vpon Sodom & Gomorah from heauen at random; ſo Babylon alſo was not deſtroyed by haphazard; but by the juſt vengeance of God. Which being alwaies like vnto himſelfe, did execute his juſt iudgement againſt them, and will ſtill doe the ſame againſt all reprobates euen vnto the end. Whereas Babylon is called the glorie and bright beauty of Kingdoms; this is added for amplifications ſake, to teach vs, that God cannot bee hindered from performing his worke by any glorie or excellencie whatſoeuer, that hee ſhould not utterly roote out the wicked. For in regard that this deſtruction was incredible, therefore ſo much the more did an excellent example of Gods mightie power appear in the confuſion of it.

Chap. I. 9.

No glory can withſtand Gods almighty power.

*Or, ſit vpon.

Verſ. 20. It ſhall not be inhabited for euer, neither ſhall it be dwelled in from generation to generation: neither ſhall the Arabian pitch his tents there; neither ſhall the ſheepheards make their foldes there.

BY the word To ſit, hee ſignifies a firme eſtate; as if he ſhould ſay, Neuer looke that Babel ſhall be reſtored any more. For all theſe phraſes of ſpeech tend to one and the ſame end; namely, the Babylonians ſhall be ſo deſtroyed, that their ruine ſhall be perpetuall. This alſo he further amplifies when he addes, that the deſtruction ſhall be ſo great, that the verie Arabians ſhall diſdaine to pitch their tents there, and the ſheepheards their foldes. Now wee may well ſay that this place was become wonderfull deſert, and inhabitable, ſeeing theſe vagabonds made no reckoning of it: for this nation of the Arabians in verie deed, did nothing elſe but trot vp and downe, and had no ſetled abiding. For hauing left their owne Countrie, becauſe it was barren; and therefore is called the deſert Arabia, (for of that wee ſpeake) and being giuen to nourish cattell and to hunting, they frisked it hither & thither, and abode in the mid of the fields; eſpecially in places of beſt paſture. Thence it came that the Greekes called them by a name which ſignifieth dwellers in tents.

The region of Babylon was wonderfull fruitful before this deſtruction, by reaſon whereof this change was ſo much the more terrible, and as it were prodigious, whether in regard that it loſt the firſt fruitfullneſſe, or that all abhorred the ſight of it, becauſe of the continuall calamities wherewith it was waſted. Certaine it is the Prophet declares it ſhall come to paſſe, that not only the buildings ſhall be broken downe, but that the land alſo ſhall be accuſed.

Verſ. 21. But Zim ſhall lodge there, and their houſes ſhall be full of Ohim: Oſtriches ſhall dwell there, and the Satyres ſhall dance there.

HE goes on in deſcribing a deſert place, and alludes to that he ſaid before; to wit, that Babylon ſhould be vnhabited. I cannot well tell how this word Zim ſhould be tranſlated, in regard the opinions of the expoſitors are ſo diuers; who agree no more in this, then they doe about ſundry names of beaſts and hearbs. The vſe of theſe things continued not alwaies, and the Iewes being ignorant themſelues, haue not the knowledge of them; although ſome amongſt them are not aſhamed to brag of their ſkill in phyſicke: and yet notwithstanding are ignorant not onely of the nature of plants, but of beaſts alſo. Whereas ſome are of opinion that Zim, was a wild beaſt: others, that it ſhould be a bird: and ſome others a fourefooted beaſt: herein there is no great difference. For mine owne part, I make no queſtion but the Prophet meant in this place to ſpeake either of wild beaſts which cannot be tamed, or of birds which make their neſts in foreſts farre remote from men. And there will be no inconueniencie in it, if we expound that which followes of Satyres, or Fairies, which the Frenchmen, according to the diuerſities of regions, in one place call Hobgoblins, Robinhoodfellows; and Bugbeares in another. For as Satan abuſeth men by diuers impoſtures, ſo alſo he allots diuers names to eury one of theſe.

It is certaine that the word Zim, is ſometimes taken in the Scripture for wicked ſpirits: for it comes of Ziiah, which ſignifies drieſſe or deſert; as lim comes of Alian, which ſignifies feare. For in as much as the diuell workes ſtrange illuſions by Fairies and Satyres, therefore the names thereof are attributed vnto him. The Prophets drift is, to ſhew that there ſhould be ſuch deſolation, that the place ſhould not onely be forſaken of men, but the euill ſpirits alſo ſhould worke their illuſions there: for by the ſolitarieſſe of the place they take occaſion to terrifie thoſe which paſſe thereby. And looke how theeues and enemies ſhew themſelues more cruell when they come out of ſome obſcure place or caues: ſo alſo the diuels ſeek for the night, darkeneſſe, and places far remote from mens ſight, to the end they may the more affright them which are fearefull and timorous of nature.

laces: and the time thereof is readie to come, and the daies thereof shall not bee prolonged.

He sets forth that which hath been touched before, and shewes how horrible this change shall be; that it might appeare that this shall come to passe from the iudgement of God, and not by fortune. He also amplifies it whē he saith, that this shall happen not to houses, but to pleasant palaces. The shortnesse of time whereof he speaks here, may be referred to the first destruction; yet so, as it was requisite that the expectation of the faithfull should bee held the longer in suspense: I haue told you that Babylon was not so quickly ouerturned; and that the discomfiture made by the Medes, was not so great that the Citie might therefore be compared to a desert. He saith then, that the destruction thereof shall shortly come; the beginnings whereof were scene soone after, for the Lewes were to content themselues, in regard that this vengeance vpon Babylon was not promised them in vaine.

The holy Ghost in like manner is wont to prevent our heate and hastinesse, because we would haue God execute his iudgements out of hand, and should chastise the wicked as soone as we thinke good. But he only knowes the fit season, which yet wee are impatient in waiting for, by reason of the boiling of our passions. But if wee could meditate of his euerlastingnesse, we should easilie bridle this ouer great hastinesse by patience: but because we haue much adoe to hold in our importunitie, God doth somewhat incline vnto vs, shewing that he will come by and by. And yet let vs not iudge of the shortnesse of the time, according to our reason; but let vs lift vp our hearts to heauen, and despise the daies of this life. Aboue all, let vs learne to stoope as soone as we begin to see the iudgements of God comming towards vs, yea though it be in the least measure: although he deterre the execution of them for a long time. The second member is immediately adoe for a confirmation; to wit, that the daies of Babylon shall not be prolonged: as if he should say; The Lord hath appointed a day, so as none shall be able to make truce any longer.

THE XIII. CHAPTER.

Verf. 1. For the Lord will haue compassion of Iacob, and will yet chuse Israel, and cause them to rest in their own land: and the stranger shall ioyne himselfe vnto them; and they shall cleane so the house of Iacob.

Because the particle ci, hath diuers significations, wee may conioyne this verse with the former, thus; But yet the Lord will haue pittie vpon Zion: and so it should shew how much the condition of the Church differeth from that which he described before. But I had rather take it for a particle rendring the cause; and that indeed agrees best to this place, as in many other texts: so as the sense shall be this; God shall destroy Babylon, because he shall haue compassion of Iacob; whom hee can neither despise nor reiect. Whence wee perceiue, that the Prophet hath indeuoured hitherto, to aswage the sorrow of this poore people; to the end they might learne to be of good comfort in those their afflictions, which God would at length auenge. Thus Babylon & the Church of God are here set before vs as in a glasse: Babylon (I say) exalted in her soueraigne power, who had so oppressed the poore and desolate Church, that shee was vtterly past hope (in a manner) that euer shee should be restored againe. But the Lord tumbling Babylon downe from her high seate, therein witnesseth, that he hath care ouer his people, how abiect or contemptible soeuer they seem to be. From hence we may gather a sweet consolation, when wee see that God thus gouernes all the world for our saluation. For all things aime to this end, that the elect may be saued; and not ouerwhelmed by any changes how many soeuer befall the. But some will aske, whether mercie and compassion ceased to be in God for a time? Doubtlesse it continued in him alwaies: but the people which were so greuously afflicted felt it not. For being forepossest with the sence of his wrath, they iudged of themselues according to the outward appearance, and were not able to apprehend his mercie. And yet was the Lord euer like himselfe notwithstanding, & neuer lost his mercifull nature. Thus then we must distinguish betweene the vnderstanding or knowledge of faith, and experience: for whilst the signes of Gods indignation appeare on all sides, in regard that (according to the iudgement of the flesh) we thinke hee is angry; so his grace is hidden from vs: yet faith notwithstanding lifts vp our hearts aboue all darkenesse, to the end wee may behold God in heauen, who is fauourable towards vs.

tion of God according to our infirmities, and meaſure his affection towards vs by the outward works, (I ſpeake of that knowledge which proceeds from experience, which is corrected by the light of faith.) And therefore when the Lord calles vs, that is to ſay, when he confirms his election, it is ſaid he chuſeth vs; and contrariwiſe that hee reiects vs, when he thewes vs any euident ſigne of his indignation. See then how we are to vnderſtand this verſe, to wit, that although the Lord ſhould ſo ſtraight correct his people as if he meant to caſt them off, yet notwithstanding he will ſhew in the end by the effects, and will giue them to know that he hath elected them, when he ſhall giue ſufficient teſtimonie thereof, and ſhall take compaſſion vpon them.

Now we may eaſily collect that which I ſaid erewhile, to wit, that there is great difference betweene the chaſtiſements which the faithfull indure, and thoſe wherewith the reprobates are viſited. For the faithfull be thinke theſelues forthwith of their election, whereby they take heart of grace: but the vnbelieuers ſee nothing but thick darknes, bottomles gulfes, and fearefull conuulſion on all ſides. As ſoone then as the Lord corrects vs, let vs by and by call to mind this difference, to the end we may confirme our hearts in the hope of an happy iſſue.

When he ſpeakes of their returne into their owne land, he therein ſets before them a ſigne of grace and reconciliation: for the land of Canaan was a pledge of adoption to the children of Abraham.

And the ſtranger ſhall ioyne himſelf with them. He prophetieth of the calling of ſeuerall Gentiles, as if he ſhould haue ſaid, The Lord will not only put them into the poſſeſſion of the land of Canaan, but will alſo enrich them with a great increaſe: for he will ioyne the Gentiles with them, that of two peoples there may be made but one only bodie. This benefit then is not to be referred to a few daies, but appertains to the whole Church, which God promiſeth to ſet at reſt in a ſure place. For the Prophet ſpeakes not only of the Church of that time, but of that alſo which ſhould be before, and vnder the kingdome of Chriſt, otherwiſe this addition ſhould be improper.

Verſ. 2. And the people ſhall receiue them and bring them to their owne place, and the houſe of Iſrael ſhall poſſeſſe them in the land of the Lord for ſeruants and handmaidens, and they ſhall take them priſoners whoſe captiues they were, and haue rule ouer their oppreſſors.

HE ſhewes that the ſtrangers ſhall willingly accompany the Iewes, and that in ſuch ſort, that they ſhall not reſuſe to become their ſeruants. We haue ſeene the prooſe of this when the people came out of Babylon, Ezra 1. 6. but this was onely a ſmall taſte of thoſe things which were done by Ieſus Chriſt, to whom all this muſt be referred. For the Lord in deed inclined the hearts of nations which hated his people deadly, to be louing to them whom he meant to reſtore to their countrey and libertie by their meanes: but ſo farre was it off that many nations helped the Iewes after their returne from Babylon, that contrariwiſe the neighbours through enuie conſpired one with another to moleſt them. Ezra 4. 4. For they were not only bent againſt them to driue them out of the land of Canaan, but alſo to ſlaine them from off the earth. Theſe things then were accompliſhed vnder the kingdome of Chriſt, to whom all power is giue not only in earth, but in heauen alſo, Math. 28. 18. who by his Goſpell hath vniited the Gentiles with the Iewes, which before were ſtrangers, Eph. 2. 14. to the end they might not only help the Iewes to take poſſeſſion of their inheritance, but alſo to bring them vnder ſo, as to beare the yoke quietlie and willinglie.

And herunto appertaines that which he addes of ſeruants and handmaidens: for ſeeing the Iewes are the firſt borne in the houſe of God, we which are ioined vnto them ſeeme to haue bin aſſembled as it were vnder their hand, becauſe they were before vs, and obtained the firſt place before all other nations: which honor they might hold euen at this day, if by their owne frowardnes and ingratitude they deſpiſed theſelues of ſuch a dignitie; and yet their vnthankfulnes did not let the Lord to effect that which he here promiſeth. For the Apoſtles who were Iewes, ſubdued ſtrange nations by the word of God; yea euen thoſe which in times paſt held them priſoners, and to whom they paid tribute, to wit, the Aſſyrians, Chalzeans, Perſians, and at laſt the Romane Empire, ſo as all the Gentiles might iuſtly be called their heritage, although they would not reigne ouer them, but winne them to God, that ſo together they might acknowledge one Lord and Prince. This then ought to be referred to the yoke & gouernment of Chriſt whereunto the Iewes ſubdued the Gentiles, and not to a worldly kingdome and rule, as the Iewes falſie imagine.

Verſ. 3. And in that day ſhall the Lord giue thee reſt from thy ſorrow, and from thy feare, and ſit in the ſore bondage wherein thou didſt ſerue.

4. Then ſhalt thou take vp this proverb againſt the king of Babel, and ſay, How hath the oppreſſor ceaſed? and the gold-thirſtie Babel reſted?

HE addes a confirmation to the former promiſes: and thus God vſeth to prouide for our weakenesse, becauſe it is very hard for vs to giue credit to his word; but eſpecially then when things are troubled. And yet the Lord will this way proue the ſtedfaſtneſſe of our faith, when he ceaſeth not to promiſe of our ſaluation, and yet all hope thereof ſhall be quite and cleane cut off from vs. He confirms this with many words, that ſo caſting off all doubt, we ſhould not ceaſe to reſt our ſelues

Great difference betweene the chaſtiſements of the elect, and thoſe wherewith the reprobate are viſited. Note.

A propheticke touching the calling of the Gentiles.

The Iewes might hold the honor of the firſt born in the houſe of God if their owne ingratitude deſpiued them not of it.

The Apoſtles meant not to reigne by their conqueſt, but to win men to God.

felues vpon his gracious free promises, how desperate so euer things seeme to be. And herewithall also he exhorts the Lewes to acknowledgement, and neuer to forget so excellent and memorabile a worke of God. Now of set purpose hee makes expresse mention of the yoke and bondage; thereby to teach the Lewes, that the Lord would take away all these impediments when it pleased him; and that nothing should let him to deliuer his people, as soone as he saw occasion. Let vs apply this doctrine to our vse now, euen in this miserable seruitude and vile bondage of Antichrist, vnder whom poore Christians are holden. For albeit they be inuironed and inclosed on all sides in his nets and snares, yet haue they God for their deliuerer, who will easilie ouercome all manner of difficulties and impediments. And this may also bee referred to all vexatious, miseries, and troubles.

Moreover, by the word prouerbe, or, parable, (for amongst the Hebrewes it signifies graue sentences, high & worthy of note) he shewes that this destruction of Babylon shall be so great, that men shall make a prouerbe of it: which they are wont to do in great and wonderful things. This word how is an interrogation proceeding from a taunting manner of astonishment; for it was incredible that Babylon (furnished with such abundance of riches and strength) could be ouerthrowne, and fall into the hands of her enemies. Hee iustly mockes then at their vaine and foolish confidence, in regard that being puffed vp with their intollerable pride, they thought themselves inuincible and out of all danger. But it seemes contrarie to the modestie of the faithfull, to mocke at the miserie of others: a man would thinke they should rather haue compassion on them. But this is not against modestie, when our zeale is ordered according to the equite of Gods iudgement: for by humane affection, we may bewaile the miserie of those who perish through their owne folly; and yet therewithall despise their pride and furie. And euen as the Lord exalts himself against them, scorning their beastlinesse; so also hee doth in this place command vs (which loue and desire his glory) to conremne them; not after a proud and insulting maner, but as magnifying and extolling his goodnesse and power. By this example then it is lawfull for vs to scoffe at Gods enemies, when they are ouerthrowne and abased: as at Antichrist, whose power wee daily see to decay by litle and litle.

The word Madhuah, which is put in the end of the verse, may be translated gilt, or of gold: but because this word is conioyned with tyrant, or exactor, it is very like the Prophet speaks of the countousnesse and insatiable desire of gold, which the Babylonians thirsted after. For it often comes to passe, that how much the more, great Empires, Commonwealths, and nations haue of riches, so much the more doe they burne with lust of increasing and hauing.

Verf. 5. The Lord hath broken the rod of the wicked, and the scepter of the rulers,

6. Which smote the people in anger with a continuall plague, and ruled the Nations in wrath: if any were persecuted, he did not let.

HE now answers to the former interrogation, and would not that the faithfull should any way doubt of the euent thereof, but rather that they should stand astonished at such admirable workes of God. For the interrogation serued to awaken vp their mindes to the greater attention. It is as much then as if he should haue said; It came not to passe by chance, or by any blinde passion of fortune, that you were not still oppressed vnder a continuall bondage, but you are wholly to attribute it to the providence of God, who brake so fore a yoke of seruitude from off your neckes. Now the wicked are at their wits end when they see such workes, and stand amazed because they see not the reason of them: but the faithfull know that this ought to bee attributed vnto God. Let vs learne then to admire the workes of the Lord, and let vs bee stricken with such an astonishment, that we may acknowledge him to bee the author of them: and let vs not in any wise passe lightly ouer the least of them; but especially then when he manifestis his power in the redemption of his Church; when by his admirable strength, he redemes any one of vs from vnder the seruitude of the diuell, the tyranny of Antichrist, and from eternall death. For these are no common workes; and therefore wee may not in any sort attribute the same to the power of man, or to any other causes whatsoever. Hee ioynes the scepter of the rulers, to the staffe of the wicked; shewing by this repetition, that an vniust tyranny cannot be established by a power imperial in any sort whatsoever: Then by and by after, he more clearly shewes, that the Monarchy of the Babylonians shall be abolished, because it was vniust and tyrannical; and saith, that the people were smitten with an incurable wound, and extremely afflicted, because they ouerflowed in all excessiue dissolutions. By this we are admonished, that howsoever God may seeme to winke at the tyranny of the wicked for a time, yet that he will spare them neuer the more for all that in the latter end, for they shall be destroyed euen as we know Babylon was, because the Lord is iust, and continues alwayes like himselfe.

Verf. 7. The whole world is at rest and is quiet: they sing for ioy.

8. Also the sirre trees reioyced of thee, and the cedars of Lebanon, saying, since thou art laid downe, no hewer came vp against vs.

HEere he shewes how Tyrants are hatefull to all the world, for they are no sooner dead or destroyed, but all leape for ioy, shewing what affection they caried towards them, which Gods workes ought diligently to be obserued, but especially in the redemption of his Church.

Tyrants hatefull to all the world.

We are in these times to apply this doctrine to our vses.

To scorne the wicked is not against modestie, when our zeale is ordered there in according to the equity of Gods iudgements. Psa. 2. 4.

which for feare before they diſſembled. Then ſhall you ſee men utter forth their diſcontentments and hatreds: and not men only diſcouer their joy, but euen the dumb creatures alſo, as the Prophet addes afterwards, ſpeaking of the ſirre trees, and cedars, by way of amplification; for as all things are ouerturned and peruerſed by tyranny, ſo alſo it being aboliſhed, it ſeemes all things are put into their perfect eſtate againe.

Now to the end the ſpeech might haue the greater vehemencie, he addes a figure called Proſopopeia, by which he brings in trees ſpeaking and reioycing, that they ſhall ſtand quietlie now this tyrant is dead. So then y^e Prophets drift is to ſhew that the heauenly Iudge can not indure tyrants alwayes to uſurp, whom all the world deteſts & hates. Whence we may gather, that albeit men be ſilent, and dare not open their lips whiſt tyrants beare ſway, yet the Lord notwithstanding heates their ſecret grones and complaints. Let vs not wonder then if tyrants be cut off by ſuch admirable meanes; for it is neceſſarie that God who is priuie to all the outrages which they commit, ſhould fauour and aſſiſt the innocent.

Verſ. 9. Hell beneath is moued for thee to meeete thee at thy comming, raiſing vp the dead for thee, euen all the princes of the earth, and hath raiſed from their thrones all the kings of the nations.

EVEN as before he attributed gladnes to Trees, ſo now alſo by the ſame manner of ſpeaking hee attributes ſpeech to the dead. For he brings them as it were out of their graves, to the end they ſhould deride the pride of this tyrant; and all the words following are nothing elſe in a manner but moſt pleaſant taunts and flouts. For when great kings approach nere a place, people tremble; they go before and receiue them with great pomp and preparations: ſo Iſaiah ſancies that the dead ſhall goe before this tyrant, who after his death ſhall deſcend into his ſepulchre, that they may do him homage, but yet ſuch as to him appertaineth. Which is as much as if he ſhould ſay, His death ſhall not only be acceptable to the liuing, but to the dead alſo, ſo as they ſhall receiue him honorable according to his deſerue.

Verſ. 10. All they ſhall cry and ſay vnto thee, Art thou become Weake alſo as we? Art thou become like vs?

BEhold what taunts the dead ſhall utter againſt this tyrant, whē he ſhall be in their companie; as if they asked a reaſon of him, why he alſo is dead as well as others. And therefore the Prophet being aſtoniſhed with the noueltie of ſuch a thing, brings in the dead enquiring thereof with admiration, as of a thing vtterlie incredible. For tyrants are ſo blinded with their greatnes, that they thinke themſelues no mortall creatures, but make themſelues halfe gods, and worſhip themſelues. For this cauſe it is well enough perceiued after their death, that their condition differed in nothing from other men; howſoeuer they thought themſelues exempted out of their ranke.

According to this ſenſe, the dead reproch him with a wonderfull riſping deriſion, in ſaying, that he is made like vnto them: becauſe death onely giues vs to know (as the ſatyrlike Poet ſpeakes) how weak a thing the bodie of man is. Dauid alſo ſpeaking of Princes, and of their dignitie, ſaith thus; I haue ſaid you are Gods: yet muſt you die like men, and fall like one of the people: Pſal. 82. 6, 7. For the bodies of Princes muſt needes bee eaten and conſumed with wormes at the laſt; although ſumptuous and glorious ſepulchres be prepared for ſuch kind of perſons.

See Chap. 5. verſ. 9. ſect. 2.

Verſ. 11. Thy pompe is brought downe to the graue, and the ſound of thy viols: the worme is ſpread vnder thee, and the wormes coner thee.

HE mentions the royall pompe, to the end one might more diligently note this mutation, when they ſhould compare the former things with the latter: and thus ſhewes that nothing could let this tyrant from being brought into a like eſtate with others. Under the inſtruments of muſicke, hee comprehends all pleaſures and voluptuouſneſſe, wherein Kings are wont to take delight: becauſe by the ſweete harmonie thereof, they not onely forget death, but alſo by theſe mixed ſounds, all cares are driuen away; ſo as their mindes are ſomewhat intoxicate therewith.

In the ſecond part of the verſe, the dead doe pleaſantly ſay vnto him; Thou haſt a bed fit for thee. For in ſtead of tapeſtrie, or a ſoft pillow, thou haſt mothes; and for a ſumptuous couerlet, thou haſt wormes. To be ſhort, we haue heere a liuely image of mens fooliſh confidence, who being beſotted with the preſent proſperitie and peaceable eſtate of their affaires, reioyce and cheere vp themſelues. This doctrine ought to be diligently obſerued: for howſoeuer men know well enough what their condition is, and haue death ſtill before their eyes; yet are they ſo dulle with ambition, and tickled with pleaſures, yea bewitched with vaine glory, that they vtterly forget themſelues.

Verſ. 12. How art thou fallen from heauen, O Lucifer ſonne of the morning, and cut downe to the ground, which didſt caſt lots vpon the nations?

* Or, which weaknedd men.

I*ſaiah* continues the matter which hee began before in the perſon of the dead; and concludes, that this tyrant differs in nothing from others, although by all his flatteries he induoured to perſwade himſelfe that he was ſome god. He vſeth an elegant ſimilitude in comparing him to the ſtarre of the morning; calling him the ſonne of the twilight, and that becauſe

God will not alwayes ſuffer Tyrants to uſurp.

because of his excellencie and glorie, which made him shine far above all others. Whereas some haue expounded this place of Satan, they haue done it ignorantly: for the scope of the text doth sufficiently shew, that it should be vnderstood of the King of Babylon. But when men snatch vp places of Scripture at randome, and consider not the coherence of the text, we neede not merruile if wee often meete with so many errors. And yet was it a more absurd blockishnesse, when they made Lucifer the prince of duels, making folkes beleue, that the Prophet gaue him this name. But for as much as such inuentions haue no colour at all; let vs leaue them for fables as we found them.

The expositours haue been deceiued in the second member of the verse, in translating the Hebrew particule in the passive signification, saying, Thou art weakened; seeing it is in the active signification. Notwithstanding, because the verbe whence it is deriued, signifies to cast the lot; and that the particule Sar, is ioyned therewith, this sense agrees well, that this tyrant divided all regions by lot, as the Lord and Master of them, and drew them to himselfe, as if they had appertained to his succession. And yet I reiect not the other exposition; namely, that he weakened the people.

*Vers. 13. Yet thou saidst in thine heart, I will ascend into heauen, and exalt my throne above besides the starres of God: I will sit also vpon the mount of the Congregation of God.*

*Or, couen-nant.

*Or, in the sides of the north.
This phrase
To say, expounded.

THIS must be ioyned to that which went before. To say, in this place is taken to resolve in himselfe; according to the Hebrew phrase. For he derides the pride of the Babylonian, who resting vpon his greatnesse, durst be so bold as to promise himselfe continuall happinesse; euen as if it had been in his power to bring the euent of things to passe at his pleasure. Wherem wee haue a faire looking glasse to behold the foolish pride wherewithall the wicked are puffed vp; which also sometimes they are not ashamed to vomit forth. Neither must we heere consider the person of one tyrant onely, but the damnable furie of all the wicked, which make their conclusions in secret, no otherwise then if they were able to dispose of all things according to their owne fantasie. Whole plots S. James describes in liuely colours; We will goe into such a Citie, say they, wee will buy, and sell, and get gaine: and yet in the meane while, they know not what shall come to passe to morrow: Iam. 4. 13. They neuer thinke they are vnder Gods hand; but haue this sottish conceit, that they will doe all things by their own strength. I grant that this brag, I will ascend into heauen, and that which folloves also, is so absurd, as it seemes impossible how it could come out of the mouth of a mortall man: but in regard it was not the Prophets meaning to set downe the speeches of Nebuchadnezzar, word for word, let it suffice vs to consider the thing it selfe. For to speake the truth, whosoeuer he be that attributes more vnto himselfe then the condition of men can beare, hee exalts himselfe against God, as the Giants did, of whom the proverbe speakes: whence it followes, that all their deuises shall come to confusion. But especially hee, who passing beyond the bounds of his calling, prouokes the Lord against him by his boldnesse. And therefore let euery one of vs content himselfe with his estate, and not desire to be mounting vp aloft; but let vs rather continue in that degree wherein God hath placed vs. Indeed if God reach out his hand vnto any, and lift him higher, he may go further: but he ought to vsurpe nothing to himselfe, nor to clime vp therinto of his owne head. And concerning those who are exalted vnto high degree and dignitie, they ought to carry themselves humbly and modestlie; not feinedly, but with such meekenesse of spirit, as if they were not exalted at all.

Besides, we may sufficientlie see wherfore the Prophet accuseth this tyrant of Babylon particularly of such outrage, and also what the scope is to which these figuratiue speeches do aime, the rather by those that follow, to wit, that he desired to mount into the mountaine of the testimony, and by such pride to make himselfe equall with God. For howsoeuer he made these discourses after the ordinarie maner of men, that he was able to conquer the Iewes, yet because he despised the helpe of God, vnder which they shrowded themselves, as he had often heard tell, it was as much as if he had conspired to overthrow the heauens. Now in stead of the mount of Zion, he puts the sides of the north, which description is also conteined in the 48. Psalm. The mountaine of Zion in the sides of the north, is the citie of the great King. He called it before the mountaine of the testimony, which title is drawne from the verbe Iand, which signifies, to vnite, to agree, and make peace. And therefore Moed signifies peace, couenant, and day prefixed. Lastly, it may be referred to time, place, and persons. But I had rather take it heere for couenant, or agreement. For the Lord speaking of the Tabernacle of the couenant in Exodus, saith, I will there make appointment with you. Exod. 25. 21. 22. 29. 42. We must not thinke then that he speaks heere of an assemblie of men, as when the profane meete in fayres or in their feast dayes: but that the Lord meant there to shew a signe of his presence, and to ratifie his couenant; which we ought diligentlie to obserue, because this condemnes the sacrifice of this wicked king, who rather fought against $\ddot{\gamma}$ very beaheens, then against an earthly place.

Vers. 14. I will ascend above the height of the cloudes, and will be like the most high.

A Man would maruell that the Prophet doth thus accuse the king of Babylon, as if he would be check-mate with God, seeing that (as wee haue said) such a thought could could not once enter into any mans heart, but that he must needs quake and tremble for feare. For euen as their is in vs some feed of religion by nature, so also are we contriined in despite of our teeth to beare some reuerence to this diuinitie, which we thinke to be the most excellent about all things. And there is no man so senselesse that would imagin to call God out of his throne, because we are all taught by nature rather to honor and worship God. And therefore howsoeuer the heathens knew him not, yet notwithstanding they worshipped their Idols. Thus we may imagin, it was not likelie that the king of Babylon meant to driue God out of heauen, and to reigne there himselfe. Yet doth nor the Prophet accuse him without cause: for although the vngodlie resolue not to reigne in Gods stead, yet notwithstanding they fight against him whē they exalt themselues more then they ought; hereby attributing that to themselues which is proper vnto him: which is as much in effect, as if they meant to pluck him out of his seate. And what did satan else when he deceiued the first man? You (saith he) shall be as gods, Gen. 3.5. Therefore all such as dare attribute more to themselues then God permits, do lift vp themselues no otherwise then if they meant to proclaime open warre against him; for where pride gets the masterie, there of necessitie must be the contempt of God.

And thus also we may note that which we haue touched before, to wit, that this tyrant bent himselfe off set purpose against God as it were in rushing himselfe against the Church which is his holy heritage. Seeing then that he violated the heauenlie Sanctuarie, this ought not to seeme any excessiue manner of speech vnto vs. Now from hence we obserue a doctrine full of consolation: for wee are taught that the wicked doe arme themselues euen against God, as oft as they set themselues against his Church. This king here is not accused for lifting himselfe about the Angels, but for indeouoring to ouerwhelme the Church of God. Now the seruice of God at this day is not shut vp in any certain place, but is spread thoroughout the whole world. In what part soeuer then the name of God is called vpon, if there any tyrant do purpose or practise the destruction of the faithfull, let vs know that such a one sets not himselfe so much against men, as against God, who will not long indure the proud so to make warre vpon him. We shall finde the like example hereafter in Senacherib, of whom the Prophet saith, that in threatening and offering violence to Zion, he did it to God himselfe. Let vs therefore be assured that we are so vnder the protection of God, that whosoever doth vs wrong, shall haue God for his enimie. He that hurts you (saith the Lord) hurts the apple of mine eye. Zach. 2.8. He also testifieth that he dwels in the midst of the Church, Psal. 46.5. so as none can assaile it but he must beare the first brunt. He will then surely take vengeance of all the wrongs which the Church indures, although he suffer it to be afflicted for a time.

Verf. 15. But thou shalt be brought downe to the graue, to the sides of the pit.

HE hath heretofore shewed, how it was the King of Babel that entered into to set his seate about the cloudes. And now he opposeth an euent quite contrarie; to wit, the sides of the pit, or caue, that is to say, some corner of the sepulchre into which he should be cast. For he said before, that this tyrant would ascend about the mountaine of Zion in the sides of the north, because the place on this side was high about the rest. Now he takes this word sides in a contrarie sense, as if he should say, that he shall be put in the most contemptible place of the pit or sepulchre, euen as when a man thrusts one into some darke or by-corner. For if so be a sepulchre be large and spacious, they desire to lay the honorablest personage in the midst of it: but he saith, that this fellow shall be cast into some hole, or into the sides that shall be left empty. See how the Lord scornes the pride of the wicked from an high, so as when they shall haue deuoured all by their couetousnes, and pierced the cloudes & the heauens with their pride, yet will he experte them to derision at the length, hauing ouerturned all their enterprises eue in lesse then the twinkling of an eye.

Verf. 16. They that see thee shall looke vpon thee and consider thee, saying, Is this the man that made the earth to tremble, and that did shake the kingdomes?

THE Prophet scornes this wicked king againe in the person of the dead, and yet this may also be vnderstood of the liuing; but it is better to referre this whole spech to the dead; ynesse we had rather vnderstand it of the sepulchre, which is almost all one in effect. Now we are wont to stretch forth our neck, and to stand vpon the tippe when any admittable or rare thing is presented to our view. So in regard it was a thing almost incredible that this king furnished with so great power should be dead, the Prophet saith, that all haue cast their eyes vpon him to behold him diligently, as if they could hardly beleue that to be true which they saw euidentlie before them. They aske in the first place whether it be possible that he which made the world to tremble with his looke only, could be so suddenie & easilie brought low. Next, the Prophet shewes how all his wicked desires and enterprises are ouerthrowne; as also that tyrants with their trucitie are like to cloudes, which poure downe water or haile on a sudden as though they meant to destroy the whole world, but they are scattered and gone in an instant. And this similitude that same good old father Athanasius vsed, when some threatned him with the furie of Julian. Lu: her vpon Now the Prophet shewes that this change came from the hand of God, who by his only will can ouerthrow the whole world.

Where pride gets the masterie, there the contempt of God must needs follow.

The wicked arme themselves against God, is often as they set themselves against his Church.

Chap. 36. 18, 19. 20. & 37. 4. 6. 17.

He that wrongs any member of Christ, may assure himselfe to haue God for his enimie.

See Martin Lu: her vpon Psalm of degrees, fol. 33.

Verf. 17. Hee made the world as a wilderness, and destroyed the Cities thereof, and opened not the house of his prisoners.

IN this verse he expresseth the crueltie and inhumanitie of this Tyrant; namely, that he brought the world to a wilderness, raised the Cities, deliuered not his prisoners. Those who haue obtained victorie, haue been accustomed sometimes to release their prisoners, that they might win their hearts by gentleness: but Tyrants had rather bee feared then loud: because they perswade themselves, that the onely safe way to raigne, is to make themselves feared of all, through a brutish cruelty. We need not wonder then at their miserable and wofull end: for it cannot bee but God must render them like for like; after hee hath corrected his Church by their crueltie, shewing no more mercy to them, then they did to others. Thus then he shewes how miserable Tyrants are, in regard they haue both God and men their enemies.

Tyrants had rather be feared then loud.

Verf. 18. All the Kings of the Nations, euen they all sleepe in glorie, euerie one in his owne house.

19. But thou art cast out of the grave like an abominable branch: like the rayment of those that are slaine, and thrust thorow with a sword, which goe downe to the stones of the pit, as a carcase troden under feete.

HEe opposeth the King of Babylon against other Kings; to shew that hee shall be more wretched after his death, then they all. And thus he amplifies the iudgement of God (who should execute vengeance vpon the cruelties done to his Church) by comparison. This place is the cause why I dare not restraints that which Isaiab speaks heere of the King of Babylon, to the onely person of Nebuchadnezzar: because we finde not by histories, that hee was deprived of buriall. Although the Iewes tell, how Euil-merodach commanded hee should be taken out of his sepulchre, because the great Lords of his kingdom durst not doe him homage, till they were certaine of the death of his father. But S. Ierome, howsoeuer hee be credulous enough in other things, yet holds this as a fable. He speaks not then of one man particularly, but of the whole Kingdome: euen as when the Scripture speaks of Antichrist, it comprehends the estate of all the Popes. And therefore he scornes the pride of all Tyrants, vnder the person of one, testifying what their issue shall be; to wit, that they shall fall into such miserie, that not so much as a small handfull of dust shall be giuen them for their buriall: howsoeuer in times past they were like insatiable gulfs, whom all the wealth in the world was not able to satisfie. Those which haue scarce one foot of land, haue not withstanding the honour of buriall; and this was esteemed sacred and inuioleable about all things among the Patriarks: for it was a great dishonour to be deprived of this priuiledge. Yet he shewes that the Kings of Babylon should receiue such an opprobrie, that being cast out of the sepulchre of their fathers, they should be a spectacle of disdain vnto all. But some may aske, whether it were so great a matter in Gods sight, to bee buried with a mans predecessors, that it should be esteemed as a punishment and curse to be deprived of it: I answer, he speaks not of the sepulchre here, as of a thing necessarie to saluation: and yet that it was reputed a great shame for this Tyrant to want buriall.

First of all then let vs consider why buriall was so esteemed among all Nations. Doubtlesse this came from the Patriarks, whose bodies the Lord commanded to bee buried, in hope of the last resurrection. The carcases of beasts are cast out, because they are ordained to none other end but to turne to rottenness: but our bodies are couered with earth, that being laid vp therein, they may wait for the last day; at which time they shall be raised vp to ioyne the soule in an eternall and blessed life.

The reason why we are buried, and beasts are not.

Whereas diuers superstitions are crept in touching the buriall of the dead, it is certaine that Satan hath brought this to passe by his subtletie; who is wont to corrupt and peruert all things, which yet in their owne nature are good and profitable: for he hath forged infinite waies whereby to bewitch men. But concerning the Iewes, we are not to meruaile if they had many ceremonies in this behalfe, neither ought wee to condemne them for it: for they had not so cleere and manifest a reuelation of the resurrection, because Christ was not yet reuealed. But the matter is farre otherwise now, seeing we behold our resurrection in Iesus Christ apparently, and the vaile being taken away, wee now see the promises as in the sunshine, which were obscure to the Iewes. If at this day then any would bring in and reuiue the ancient ceremonies; such a one should suppress the light, and doe great wrong vnto Iesus Christ: for, they endeavour to put a vaile before him, who hath discovered himselfe vnto vs with open face. Notwithstanding it is not vnprofitable to regard the interrings of the corps, because it is a witness of the last resurrection, which wee yet wait for. But we ought vtterly to reiect all such superstitions, and pompe of funerals; which indeed euery faithfull man should abhorre.

Buriall of the dead ought to be retained, but superstitious customes therein to be reiecte.

But if any bee left vnburied, wee must consider the cause. For many Prophets, Martyres, and holy personages haue been deprived of buriall. Wee heare how the Church complains, that the bodies of Gods seruants were cast out to the beasts and birds, and that there was none to bury them: Psal. 79. 2. And wee daily behold how they burne, drowne, and hang the seruants of Iesus Christ, whose death notwithstanding is precious and blessed in Gods sight. For euen as the Crosse of our Lord was blessed; so also the gibbets, bands, bands, chaines and death which his members endure do partake of this bleſſing, yea, and that in ſuch wiſe, that they far ſurmount the felicitie, decking-maieſtie, and pomp of all the kings of the earth: ſo as according to S. Pauls example, they may boldly glory in theſe afflictions. Rom. 5. 3. 2. Cor. 12. 9. Gal. 6. 14. Moreover, albeit we can ſee nothing but a ſigne of Gods wrath vpon thoſe whom he deprives of buriall, yet muſt we haue our reſourſe to the former, and ſuch like ſentences.

Iere. 12. 19.

Now as Ieremiah threatened toachim that he ſhould be buried as an aſſe, becauſe he deſerued rather to be laid with the brute beaſts then with men, who after death are ſeparated from the condition of death by meanes of buriall: euen ſo, in as much as this Babylonian had exalted himſelfe above all, it was good reaſon he ſhould be deſcended beneath all, ſo as his bodie might remaine without buriall. Iſaiah then foretels that this tyrant ſhall not be buried in his houſe, that is to ſay, in the Sepulchre of his anceſters and predeceſſors: for we muſt not thinke that the Sepulchres were within the houſes. The ſimilitudes which are conioined do further expreſſe the iuſt ignominie of this tyrant: for, as hurlfull and unprofitable trees are pluckt vp by the rootes, ſo he ſhewes that the king of Babylon was not worthe to remaine among men. Afterward, he compares him to the garments of the ſlaine, becauſe thoſe which die in battaile are not buried according to the accuſtomed maner, but as bloodie and ſinking carriages troden vnder feete are tumbled into the pit clothes and all, leſt they ſhould infect the aire with their ſmell. Neither will any man offer to touch clothes defiled with blood and mire, for feare of drawing ſome infection fro them. Now we can not affirme that this hapned to the kings of Babylon, yet no queſtion but it was fulfilled, neither ought we to doubt any thing at all of it.

Verſ. 20. Thou ſhalt not be ioyned with them in the graue, becauſe thou haſt deſtroyed thine owne land, and ſwaine thine owne people: the ſeed of the wicked ſhall not be renowned for euer.

Now he ſhewes the reaſon why the king of Babylon is vnworthe of buriall, to wit, becauſe he which had deſtroyed his owne land, was neither worthe to be receiued into it, nor couered therewith. For euen as the earth ſuffaines vs whilſt we liue, ſo alſo doth it couer vs being dead, and keeps vs in her bowels vnto the coming of Ieſus Chriſt. It is then iuſt puniſhment of cruelty when ſhe reuſeth to receiue thoſe into her boſome that haue offered her violence, and defiled her. He yet adds a more fearefull threat, to wit, that God will poure out the remainder of his plagues vpon the ſucceſſors. Yet when he ſaith, The ſeed of the wicked ſhall not be renowned for euer, we may expound this member two waies, either that the race of the wicked ſhall not long endure, or that it ſhall be vtterlie put out. The diuerſitie of the interpretation conſiſts in the word sluicies, for it is either referred to the time paſt, or to come. To the time paſt thus, Although the ſeed of the wicked haue borne ſway for a while, yet the memorie thereof is vaniſhed and gone in the end. In the time to come, thus, God will ſo blot out the race of the wicked, that there ſhall be no more mention of them. Now it is vſuall with the Lord to curſe the ſeed of the wicked; as on the contrarie he bleſſeth the of-ſpring of the faithfull. And euen as the memorie of the iuſt endures for euer, ſo alſo doth it follow of neceſſitie that the remembrance of the wicked ſhould be vtterlie extinct and aboliſhed. Now howſoeuer we ſee not theſe things fulfilled with our bodily eyes, yet haue we ample and pregnant teſtimonies for it, whereby the truth of the doctrine is ſufficientlie confirmed vnto vs.

Pſal. 112. 6.

But we are now to obſerue the reaſon of this vengeance, to wit, the Lord will hereby puniſh the pride of reprobrates who will needs aduance their names, and leaue a perpetuall renoume thereof behind them: and hereunto tend all the counſels, enterpriſes, and endeours of prophane men. Contrariwiſe, the Lord blots out their name and memorie, which yet ſeemed to be ingrauen in eueraſting monuments. Thus it comes to paſſe that they are not only expoſed to contempt, but euerie one deteſts and abhors them. Which in conſeſion befallles all tyrants, for howſoeuer they be flattered and applauded of all whilſt they liue, yet are they and all their poſteritie held in vile eſtimation when they are dead and gone. And thus it appears they are deteſtable to God, Angels, and men.

Tyrants deteſted of all whilſt they liue, but being dead, they are deteſted of all.

*Verſ. 21. Prepare a ſlaughter for his children, for the iniquitie of their fathers: let them not riſe vp nor poſſeſſe the land, nor fill the face of the world with citicies.

* Citicis.

Here Iſaiah prophetieth againſt the king of Babylon in plainer termes then heretofore. Now we muſt remember what I haue ſaid already, to wit, that hitherto he hath not ſpoken of one particular man only, but of the whole kingdome: and now he alſo takes away the ambiguity of this maner of ſpeech. Whereas the old tranſlation hath it, Prepare his ſonnes to the ſlaughter, it comes not neere enough to the right ſenſe, for the letter Lamed being put before y word ſonnes, ſhews it ſhould be tranſlated, Prepare a ſlaughter for his ſonnes. Now let vs ſee to whom this ſpeech is directed, for we muſt of neceſſitie vnderſtand that he here couertlie ſpeakes to certaine officers, ſergeants, or executioners, whom God commands to prepare themſelues for the execution of his iudgement. And who are they? partly the Medes and Persians, as alſo others, by whom Babylon was rased to the foundation. It was not vtterlie deſtroyed when the Persians tooke it (as we haue ſaid before.) Thus then he ſpeakes to thoſe whom God had ordeined in his ſecret counſell to deſtroy Babylon. This phraſe of ſpeech hath greater vehemencie in it then if he had barely said, The slaughter is prepared: for he shewes that God nor onely disposeth of that which the wicked are to doe, but that hee also hath executioners at his commandement, to avenge himselfe vpon their iniquities.

P 2 hath

Obiect.

Whereas he by and by addes, that the iniquitie of the fathers shall be punished by meanes hereof; it may at the first seeme ouer seuer, to couple the children with the fathers, as touching the punishment which the fathers haue deserued, and ought to beare. And yet seemes it to be more hard, that the punishment due to the fathers should be extended to the children, and their childrens children. But this absurditie may easily be auoided, if we interpret the Hebrew word Avin, Misericie: because it signifies as well the punishment of the sinne, as the sinne it selfe. But because such sentences are found in many places of the Scripture; to wit, that God will visit the iniquitie of the fathers vpon the children: we need seeke no such euasion. Neither doth the place in Ezechiel; The sonne shall not beare the iniquitie of his father: Ezech. 18. 20. crosse this. For God punisheth not the innocent: neither must we so vnderstand this place, as if the punishment due to the ancestors, were conuicied ouer by God vnto the children, altogether guiltlesse: for the fault of the children is forth-with coupled therewithall.

But leauing now to speake of that vniuersall curse of all mankind, wherunto all of vs are subiect from our mothers wombes; let vs take an example from some wicked one; whom when God reiects with his whole race, truly we haue no cause at all to complain of it. For his blessing is free: and it is not lawfull for vs to compell him to bestow it equally vpon all: because he may dispose of his grace according to his owne good pleasure; and it is the duty of euery of vs apart, to acknowledge, that whatsoever good thing wee haue receiued, it is none of our own properly nor naturally, but comes vnto vs from elsewhere; namely, fro Gods free liberality. If so be then that he reiect any; must it not also needes follow, that his seede should be accursed? For what can remaine in those which are destitute of his grace, but a masse of impiety? And if they deserue eternal death, much more are they worthy of temporall punishments: for hee who expects the cutting off of his head, ought much more to iudge himselfe worthy of the prison and stripes. Wee must obserue this point diligently. For I hold the solution of those but childish, who thinke the Lord punisheth the children of the wicked with temporall punishments, because of the iniquities of their fathers: thinking it not vnbeseeming for the Lord to correct those that are innocent. Now we know he neuer punisheth such as haue not deserued it: besides, he is naturally inclined to mercy. But how should he spare the wicked, if he should exercise his wrath against the guiltlesse? This then must be held as a thing resolu'd; to wit, that all such as are destitute of Gods grace, are subiect to the iudgement of eternal death. Whence it followes, that the children of reprobates, whom the curse of God pursues, are subiect to the same condemnation with their fathers. And therefore Isaiah speaks not of innocent children, but of the lost and desperate, which, it may be, haue surpris'd their fathers in wickednesse: and therefore are iustly coupled with them, and adiudged to the same punishments with them; because they haue walked in their steps. But some may say, that then they beare their owne punishment; and not that which their fathers haue deserued. I grant this to be true in part: but the reiectiō began before in their fathers; for which cause they are also forsaken and cast away of God. And yet their fault is not so particular as if they were not guiltie at all, but being inwrapped in the same sinnes in regard of reprobation, they are also liable to the same miseries and punishment. I know wel enough that this solution will not satisfie those who neuer cease to dispute & braule against God: but if so be I satisfie the faithfull, and those that are not contentious, I passe not much what the rest say. As for the faithfull, I doubt not but they will content themselves with this solution, which I dare affirme to be most true.

In the end of the verse, som translate, That they fill the world no more with enemies: as if the Prophet meant to say, that all the wicked are the enemies of mankind; yea, euen of the whole earth: and therefore that the Lord prouides for the safety of all, when he sweeps them from the earth: otherwise it should be choked by them, as with thornes and briars. It seemes that this signification expresseth somewhat more; because the earth receiues vs into her lap, if we discharge our dutie: but if wee be contempters of God, it nourisheth and sustaines vs vnwillingly, as her very enemies. Yet had I rather follow the other signification, which is more generally receiued: for I thinke the Prophet meant to say, that the wicked grow vp into a stocke and linage, and bring forth children in great abundance; so as they exceed their progenitors in number, and are more glorious in shew: and thence came the proverbe, that an ill weede growes apace. Now whereas wee behold an infinit multitude of wicked ones, which haue couered the face of the whole earth as it were, we may euen thanke our selues for it: and yet the Lord neuer deales so secretly with vs, but hee referes alwaies some good seede, although it be very thin sowne: yea he alwaies hath an eye vnto some corner of the world, where he may giue his seruants some litle breathing. And if he should diminish the multitude of the wicked nothing at all, it is certaine they would forthwith ouerspread the whole earth. By this is confirmed that which wee haue said before; to wit, that the children of the Babylonians were not slaine causelesse; because it is here said, it was to the end they should not fill the world with Citites. It follows then, that they were wicked, and therefore cut off by the iust iudgement of God; that by this meanes hee might prouide for the ſaſetic of men; and that the Lord cannot be accused of cruelty or hard dealing.

We may thanke our selues that the wicked are so multiplied.

Verſ. 22. For I Will riſe up againſt them: (ſaith the Lord of hoſtes) and will cut off from Babel the name and the remnant, and the ſonne, and the nephew, ſaith the Lord.

Now the Lord teſtifieth, that he will doe that himſelfe which he before had commanded others to do by the miniſtrie of the Prophet: ſo that we muſt obſerue both the one and the other, namely, that it is a worke of God when the wicked come to nought, although he vie men as instruments to execute his iudgements. For he ſpake thus to them heretofore: Prepare a ſtinger, verſ. 21. Whence we haue to note not only the power of God, but alſo the efficacy of prophetic. When the Prophets (ordained of God) giue commandment to all nations to do this or that, it is then ſo farre off that men can hinder the eueht thereof, that they are euen conſtrained to performe the will of God. Now becauſe we ordinarily ſlay our ſelues vpon men, and in forſaking God attribute the power of doing all things vnto them, we muſt hold this principle, that ſeeing God worketh by them, himſelf is properlie the author of the worke, whereof they are only but the executioners and instruments. This is clearly inough laid open vnto vs by the dependance of the places following

I haue thought it beſt to reſolue the letter Vau into a particule of ſhewing the cauſe: for he yeelds the reaſon wherefore he commands the Medes and Perſians to prepare a deſtruction and slaughter for the Babylonians: for I will riſe up againſt them, ſaith he: and this phraſe where God ſaith he will ariſe, is very frequent. Thus alſo the Prophet applies himſelfe to our capacitie, becauſe the maieltie of God is ſo high that we can not comprehend it. We thinke he takes his caſe, and is idle, whiſt he winks at the wicked: and therefore when he will cauſe men to feele his power, and giue ſome teſtimonie thereof by ſome viſible worke, he ſaith he will ariſe.

The epithite which he afterward addes, calling him The Lord of hoſtes, ſerues for a confirmation of this ſentence: as if the Prophet ſhould ſay, I haue not giuen theſe Commandments to the nations of mine owne head, for it is God that gouernes and leads all the battailes vnder his owne hand. Seeing y^e Prophet is ordained then to pronounce the ſentence on Gods behalfe, he may alſo command me, to y^e end they may yeeld obedience vnto him. He yet repeats the ſame thing in the latter end of the verſe, ſhewing that he ſpakes nothing but that which the Lord gaue him in charge, that ſo the prophetic might be the moſt autenticall. Now it hath been often told vs before, that Babylon was not thus ruined till after the death of Alexander the Great. By the ſonnes and nephewes, he meanes not only the Poſteritie, but the Memorie which the wicked would obtaine, ſo as they might be long renowned after their death. God tooke euen this alſo away from Babylon, that ſo no remembrance ſhould remaine thereof at all, but only reproch and ignominie.

Verſ. 23. And I Will make it a poſſeſſion to the hedgehog, and pooles of water, and I Will ſweepe it with the beaſome of deſtruction, ſaith the Lord of hoſtes.

HE yet againe confirms the ſame things which he ſpake heretofore touching the future deſtruction of Babylon, to wit, that men ſhall hereafter inhabit it no more, but it ſhall be made an hidious Caue, into which wilde beaſts ſhall retire. Some ſay that the word Kipod (which we haue tranſlated Biewe) ſignifies a Beuer, others an Hedgehog, other a Tortois. But it is very likely by the circumſtance of the place that our Prophet ſpakes of a beaſt which frequents the waters; becauſe afterwards he mentions a poole, or marſh, which in deed properlie belongs to the ſituation of the place: for howſoeuer Babylon was not compaſſed in with pooles, yet is it ſituated in a moiſt ſoile. Euphrates waters the region on the one ſide, and Tigris on the other: thence it is that the Lord threatens to drowne it.

Verſ. 24. The Lord of hoſtes hath ſworne, ſaying, Surely like as I haue purpoſed, ſo ſhall it come to paſſe, and as I haue conſulted it ſhall ſtand.

IT was needfull to adde an othe for the more full confirmation of the threatening. For nothing is more hardly beaten into our heads then to heare tell of a preſent deſtruction of the wicked, becauſe we ſee them flouriſhing, furniſhed with all kind of helps, ſeeming to be out of all dangers, & vtterlie ſecure. Therefore we are at our wits end in beholding them, being ſo dazzled with their glorie, that we can ſcarſly beleue God when he threatens their ruin and perdition; and therefore he adde an othe, that they might haue no occaſion to hang in any ſuſpence. Whence we may ſee how gracious & louing he is towards vs in ſuecoring our weaknes by applying this remedie vnto it, for otherwiſe his bare word ought to ſuffice. This ſerues then for the great conſolation of the faithfull, as we ſhall ſee hereafter. But this ſhort forme of an othe which he vſeth ought to be well knowne vnto vs, becauſe we meeete often with it in the ſcriptures: and thereby the Lord bridles vs leſt we ſhould take too great libertie in oths which ſlip out of our mouths at random with too much boldnes: for he ſuppreſſeth the greater part of the othe, If I perjurme not this which I haue decreed, let men ſake me for a lier, and hold me no more for God: this I ſay, or ſome thing elſe like vnto it (fearefull to vtter) ſhould be heere ſupplied. Men ought then to reſtraine their tongues, leſt they ouerflow too lightlie in execrations, making horrible

Verf. 25. That I will breake Ashur to pieces in my land, and upon my mountaines Will I tread him vnder foote: so that his yoke shall depart from them, and his burden shall be taken from off their shoulder.

2. King. 19. 35. Chap. 37. 36

Some thinke this is spoken of the host of Senacherib, which was destroyed by the Angell, whilst the siege was before Ierusalem. If wee shall receiue this interpretation, the sense will be thus; to wit, The Lord will shortly shew some euident prooue of this ruine, wherewith hee threatened the Babylonians. For those which heard the prophecies, might aske, What shall the ruine of Babel profit vs, when the hath destroyed vs first? were it not better for vs to remain in our own lãd, & that she might continue safe? What consolation can we take in her destruction, seeing with her our selues must also perish? And truly I make no question but Isaiah sets before them a prooue of Gods fauour in the destruction of their enemies; which was either come to passe already, or should shortly happen. I dare not affirme in what time the Prophet foretold this, vnlesse there bee some probable coniecture, that the discomfiture of the host of Senacherib, made by the Angell, was already accomplished. According to this sense the Prophet should take this famous example, to giue them good hope of the deliuerance to come: as if hee had said; You haue heerebefore felt how miraculously God assisteth his people in time of neede. And this is the reason which makes me thinke the armie of Senacherib was already destroyed. It was needfull then that there should be some vse of this doctrine.

There may be some probable coniecture that Senacherib was discomfited before the time of this particular prophecie.

Obiect.

But Babylon beganne not to molest the Iewes, till she had subdued the Assyrians, and transported the Monarchy. To what end then should the Prophet speake of the iudgement which God would bring to auége the wrong done to his people, when as the Iewes had as yet nothing to doe with the Babylonians? There is no absurditie to say, that a thing already come to passe, should be mingled with a prophecie: neither were it amisse to say, that the Assyrians should here be put for the Caldeans. For although they had no Monarchy, yet is it very likely they were alwaies first prepared, as oft as war was to be made with the Iewes: and so fought vnder the leading of others, that in the meane while they made the greatest part of the armie. First, they were neerer hand then the Caldeans, and those which then ruled, knew well that such people would be loyall and obedient, because of the ancient hatred which they bare to the Iewes. Adde hereunto, that it was the benefit of the Conquerours to subiect the conquered by continuall warres, vnill they were inured to beare the yoke. All which considered, it is not

Ans.

No absurditie would follow, if the Prophet should put the Assyrian here, for the Caldean.

amisse that Isaiah speaking of Babylon, comprehends all the forces thereof vnder the name of Ashur; so taking a part for the whole.

Thus there is no reason that constraines vs to expound this place of the discomfiture performed by the Angell in the host of Senacherib. For as I take it, the Prophet meant onely to affirme, that God would put an end to the tyrannie of the Assyrians; so as they should not be alwaies so mightie: as if hee should say, Although God permit the wicked to beare rule ouer you for a time, yet this domination or superiority shall not last euer; for hee will one day deliuer his people from the seruitude which oppresth them, by breaking the yoke from off their necks. And as hath bin said already; although the Assyrians were subdued by the Caldeans, yet did they not cease for all that to be enemies to the church still. But Babylon, which succeeded Nin-uie, hauing the preheminance by transporting thereof, began to make warre with the Iewes.

Where it is said, that Ashur shall be broken in Iudah: wee must not take it as if they should be slaine there, or destroyed by some discomfiture; but that the elect people should be deliuered from their tyranny: by means whereof their dominion should be abolished. The breaking therefore is not referred so much to the perions, as to the Empire. That which he addes touching the yoke and the burden, canot be properly vnderstood of the Assyrians onely, who yet neuer had taken Ierusalem. And therefore we must note that succession, whereof I spake heretofore: because the Caldeans had no occasion to make war, vnlesse it were because they boasted to haue the preheminance ouer the Assyrians. Now yee see the cause why I thought good to extend this prophecie to that deliuerance whereby the Lord shewed himselfe the protector of his people against the Caldeans and Assyrians; because the yoke was then shaken off, vnder which the Iewes were miserably hampered: yea, thus it comprehends the deliuerance purchased by Christ, whereof this was but a beginning.

Some thinke touching that which followeth concerning the Mountains, that they haue put the plurall number in stead of the singular, as if hee spake of mount Zion: but I had rather translate it otherwise. For in as much as Ierusalem was situated among the mountaines, the whole countrie was contemned for that regard. Wherefore the Prophet speakes by way of derision, granting to the enemies that the mountainous region was indeed the lesse esteemed because of them. But this contempt serued to amplifie the power of God, who deliuers his Mountains from vnder the dominion of a mightie Monarchie. Hercunto appertaines that which is contained in the twentieth Chapter of the first book of Kings, verses 23. 28.

Verf. 26. This is the counsell that is consulted upon the whole world, and this is the hand ſtretched out over all nations.

THe Lord contents not himſelfe with a confirmation or two: no, he hath much adoe to refrain from alluring vs more and more of one and the ſame thing; and all becauſe he knowes how greatly our vnderſtanding is naturallie inclined to diſtruſt: for no repetitions ſuffice vs, although hee makes neuer ſo large promiſes in many words, and adds his othe therunto. The Lord then we ſee is deſirous to remedie this euil, and therefore tends the repetition, that we ſhould not eſteeme it as ſuperſtitious. For thoſe who think the Prophet (or rather the ſpirit of God) ſhould heape vp too many words, haue not yet attained vnto any knowledge of their owne weakenes. Well, in the firſt place he propounds the will and counſell of God: ſecondly his power. Whence comes it that we doubt of his word, but becauſe wee attribut not that ſtrength vnto God which to him belongeth, neither are we perſwaded of his power? Theſe two things are whollie the cauſe of our incredulitie, againſt which wee ought to oppoſe two other things, which Iſaiah heere recommends vnto vs, to wit, the counſell, and the power of God. For we muſt in the firſt place hold it without controuerſie that the Lord is true, becauſe he pronounceth nothing but that which is ſtable and immuable: ſecondly, that he is ſo mightie, that euery knee muſt bowe vnder his hand. Now it is not for vs to ſearch into the ſecret counſell of God, becauſe the Prophet commands vs heere to reſt our ſelues contented in the decree which the Lord hath manifeſted vnto vs by his word. We muſt not then ſie any higher to prie into the ſecrets of God, but muſt reſt ſatiſfied with the infallible teſtimonies which hee propounds vnto vs by the mouth of his Prophets. Let vs therefore with all our affections inbrace the promiſes of God, and ioine his power therunto, becauſe his mightie hand ought neuer to be ſeparated from his mouth.

But we muſt take heed we imagin not an idle power after the maner of Philoſophers, but ſuch a one as the ſcriptures do informe vs of, that is, a power full of efficacy, and ſpedie in execution. But ſome may here demand why mention is made of all the world, and of all nations, ſeeing he ſpeakes only of Babylon? We muſt remember what I haue ſaid heretofore, to wit, that the Empire of Babylon hauing conquered Nineue, did ſpread it ſelfe ouer all the Eaſt, and that diuers nations were ſubiect vnto it; for which cauſe the ruin thereof was alſo the ruin of the whole world: for ſuch Monarchies can not fall, but they muſt needs pull great deſtruction vpon others with them. Wherefore ſeeing the huge maſſe of ſo great an Empire might peraduenture haue called the certentie of this propheſie into queſtion, Iſaiah ſhewes, that albeit it ſhould ouerſpread far and wide, and comprehend infinite multitudes of people, yet none of all theſe ſhould let God to put his decree in execution.

Verſ. 27. Becauſe the Lord of hoſtes hath determined it, and who ſhall diſannull it? and his hand is ſtretched out, and who ſhall turne it?

Here the Prophet vseth an exclamation as it were the better to confirme the former ſentence. For hauing told them that this was the counſell of the Lord, to the end he might ſhew them it is ſo inuolable that it can not be broken, Pſal. 33. 11. he asks the queſtion as of a thing vtterlie impoſſible: Who (ſaith he) can diſannull his counſell, or turne his hand back? and thus by this exclamation he ſets himſelfe boldlie againſt all creatures. For the Lord no ſooner decrees a thing, but he ſtretcheth forth his hand: Is it once liſted vp? the worke then muſt of neceſſitie be put in execution. Now he not onely excludes men by this his exclamation ſrō being able to hinder the decree of God, but all things elſe whatſoever; yea, be it that any other creature beſides the diuell or man would ſet it ſelfe againſt his will. To conclude, he ſhewes that God is not ſubiect to repentance or change, but whatſoever fallies our, were it in the greateſt confuſion in the world; yet is he alwaies like himſelfe: neither can his enterpriſe be foreſlowed by any occaſion.

If any replie, that God hath changed his counſell ſometime, as when he pardoned the Niniuits, Abimelech, or Pharaoh: the anſwere is eaſie. For when the Lord ſent Ionah to the Niniuits, he manifeſts not that which he had decreed in his ſecret counſell, but meant to touch their hearts, and to bring them to repentance by the preaching of the Prophet, that he might ſhew them mercie, Ionah 1. 2. & 3. 10. The like he did when he threatned Abimelech and Pharaoh, becauſe they had taken Abrahams wife vnto them, Gen. 12. 17. and 29. 3. for the Lord by fearing them cauſed them to change their courſe, leſt they ſhould be puniſhed for their obſtinacie.

Verſ. 28. In the yeere that king Abaz died was this burden.

This ſhould be the beginning of the fifteenth Chapter, becauſe the Prophet enters now into a new argument: whence it euidently appears how ill the Chapters haue been diuided, or rather torne in ſunder. For hauing ſpoken of the Babylonians, he comes to intreate of the Phiſtins, of whom he was to ſpeake before he came to mention other nations. Now theſe were the Iewes neere neighbours, and hated them deadly: theſe were the remainder of the nations which the Iſraelites had ſpared, although the Lord had expreſly commanded the to be whollie rooted out. The peoples infidelitie was the cauſe why the Lord ſuffred this remnant to remain euen as thornes to prick their eies; which puniſhment God had threatned them with before, as the Scripture teacheth, Numb. 33. 55. Deut. 7. 16. Wherefore in regard there was

Obiect.

God ſent a meſſage to the Niniuits by Ionah, but he manifeſted not that which he had decreed in his ſecret counſell, which was to theyr mercie.

The fifteenth Chapter ſhould begin heere.

The Lord is deſirous to cure our infideliue.

Thoſe who think the ſpirit of God is wont to vſe too many repetitions, haue not yet thoroughlie felt their owne weaknes.

We muſt oppoſe the counſell and power of God againſt our infideliue.

Let vs with all the powers of our affections inbrace the promiſes of God, and ioine his power thereto.

deadlie feode betwene these two nations, there came no sooner any damage vnto the Iewes, but the Philistims counted it their gaine. For they desired to see the Iews rooted out, neither could any newes be better welcome vnto them, then to heare that the people of God were ouerwhelmed with all manner of miseries and calamities. This is the cause why the Prophet prophecieth against them, as against the perpetuall enemies of the Church.

The cause why the Prophet prophecieth against the Philistims.

Now the time is to be noted wherein this vision was represented vnto the Prophet: because the Philistims were very strong during the life of Ahaz: and this wretched hypocrite was punished for his disloyaltie, because by forsaking God, he fled vnto outward helpe; as namely, vnto men. And therefore in his time the Philistims recouered the Cities that Uzziah had taken: yea they gathered more strength after his death, because they hoped to attaine their enterprises, by reason that the heire of the Kingdome was but a childe. For Ezechias, who was the new King, had as yet neither wisdom, counsell, nor authoritie. It is needfull then to obserue these circumstances diligently, because Isaiah respects not the Philistims so much (although hee speaks of them) as the faithfull whom hee would comfort by this prophetic, and fortifie those with good hope, who might otherwise haue thought Iudah to haue been laid waste, in regard it was assailed with enemies on all sides, no succour appearing from any place whatsoeuer. Isaiah then seekes to establish the faith of these poore afflicted ones, destitute of all succour; and bids them be of good courage, because God will vndoubtedly help them. He calles this prophetic a burden, because it would be vnwelcome and troublesome to the Philistims, who thought themselves safe in regard that the Iewes were miserably oppressed; neither was there any hope left them of a better estate. He shewes then that the destruction of the Philistims also draws neere.

Why the Prophet calles this prophetic a burden.

Verf. 29. Reioyce not (thou whole Palestina) because the rod of him that did beate thee is broken: for out of the Serpents roote shall come forth a Cockatrice, and the roote thereof shall be a fierie flying Serpent.

IN the very entrance, hee beates backe that vaine confidence wherewith the Philistims were rashly puffed vp: and in adding, thou whole, he signifies that all, how many soeuer, shall haue their part in this calamitie. As if he should say; That region shall not be spoiled in one place onely, but there is not the least corner which shall not feele it: and as farre as the land doth reach, so farre shall the destruction and ruine thereof be perceiued on all sides. As touching that which he addeth of the rod broken; some referte to Ahaz, but besides the purpose; for he was overcome in all the warres which hee had against the Philistims. And therefore it should rather be referred to Uzziah; and yet am I loth so to restraine it vnto him, that it should not therewithall be vnderstood of the whole body of the Iewish Nation. It is as much then as if he had said to Palestina, or Palestin; Thinkest thou to take thy rest, whilest the Iewes which afflicted thee in times past, are destroyed? No, thou greatly deceiuest thy selfe: for ere long thou shalt be vexed much more. This is the cause, as I haue said, why I restraine not this to one particular person; but rather as I take it, vnder the person of one, hee points out the whole body of the Iewes. He forthwith addes the reason why Palestin should not reioyce; to wit, because the Iewes shall be better able to annoy them then they were in former time. For if the Philistims receiued any detrimment by the Iewes before, they should feele it ten times more heauy hereafter. The which he sets forth by a very fit similitude: for the Cockatrice is more dangerous then the Adder, and the ferie Serpent more hurtfull then the Cockatrice. But God be thanked wee are not annoyed with these hurtfull beasts in this Country. The Prophets meaning is nothing else then, but to shew that the Philistims greatly beguiled themselves, in thinking that the Iewes should not ouermatch them. And therefore I consent not vnto them, who refer the name of the Cockatrice, and flying Serpent, vnto Ezechias. For how soeuer they haue great shew of reason for it, because Ezechias conquered all that the Philistims held, euen vnto Gaza; yet the Prophet meant to stretch this promise further. Let vs know then, that albeit we begin at Ezechias, yet notwithstanding this fauour appertaines to all the Iewes, as to the whole body. Now from hence wee may gather a generall doctrine; namely, that when wee are oppressed with aduersities, and the wicked reioyce thereat, as if wee were vtterly confounded, and they were the only happy men; the Lord testifies, that all this their ioy is but in vaine. God will euermore vphold his Church, and set her in her first estate, though all men should iudge her cast away. The children of God shall get new strength, which will breake the hearts of the wicked for very despite: not that the faithfull with or purpose any such thing; but because it must so come to passe: for God hath so ordained it. Neither are these names of Cockatrice, and ferie Serpent, any names of disgrace vnto them; for they are not such by nature, but are so called, in regard they are deadly to the wicked, though harmelesse in themselves. For it comes to passe by the iust iudgement of God, and the malice of the wicked, that that which is in it owne nature profitable and healthfull vnto them, is turned into losse and poison. Such is the nature also euen of God himselfe, and of his Gospell: 2. Cor. 2. 16.

The reioycing of the wicked lasts but a while.

In that Gods children are but fall to the wicked, it is not from their owne disposition, but from the wickedes malice. Psa. 18. 27.

Verf. 30. For the first borne of the poore shall bee fed, and the needie shall lie downe in safetie: and I will kill thy roote

* Or, be. *rooted with famine, & * it ſhall ſlay thy remnant.*

The prophets in their denunciations againſt the wicked, ſpeak in this ſo much, as the conſoling and encouraging of the Faithfull who are oppreſſed by them.

THIS Prophet, as hath bene already ſaid, had not reſpect ſo much to the Philiftims (whom his threatenings feared nothing at all) as to the Iewes, whom he meant to comfort in their afflictions: for they were ſo oppreſſed that they were now neere vnto deſpaire; and therefore he calles them the fiſt borne of the poore by a note of excellencie, in regard of their miſeries: for being now brought into vtter extremitie, they held as it were the fiſt rank of all wretched people. Now he promiſeth that the Lord will deliuer them from ſuch calamities, and will then ſeede & nourish them as at the firſt: whereby we may ſee that the Philiftims were deſtroyed and cut off for the ſaluation of Gods people: who alſo had made this promiſe vnto Abraham and his poſteritie, ſaying, I will bleſſe thoſe which bleſſe thee, and curſe thoſe which curſe thee: for they muſt needs haue God for their enemy, who offer violence to his children. Then the Prophet compares them to ſheepe, whom we ought to reſemble, if we meane to haue God hold vs vnder his protection. We meete with no one thing other in the ſcripture then this ſimilitude. Doth the Lord correct vs then?

They muſt needs haue God their foe, that offer violence to his children.

Two duties required in a good ſhepherd.

Surely we may well be compared to ſturd ſheep, laid open to the violence of wolues and theecus: but if contrariwiſe he ſmite our enemies, he will gather vs againe together, that wee may reſt in a quiet and ſafe place. This is it which the Prophet ſignifies by ſaying they ſhall reſt in ſafe ſie. The Lord then promiſeth two things here, firſt good paſture, that is to ſay, all things needfull for food and rayment: ſecondly ſafety and defence, to the end we may reſt incloſed & ſhrouded againſt all dangers. Theſe are the two duties belonging to a good ſhepherd: & in theſe two are included all things neceſſarie for ſaluation.

In the ſecond member he directes his ſpeech againe to the Philiftims, whom he compares to a tree, that hath his roots ſo deeple fixed in the earth, that it ſeemes a thing impoſſible to pull it vp; but yet if the roote wither, it muſt alſo of neceſſitie loſe his vigor, though it be neuer ſo profoundlie ſeſed. Whence we are to gather, that the eſtate of the wicked is neuer ſo firme, but that God will eaſily ouerturne it: for he will not only prune off the bowes, but will parch, and bring to nothing the very roote that lies hidden in the earth.

That which follows, he ſhall ſlay thy remnant, is commonlie referred to Hezekias; but as I haue already ſhewed, I had rather extend it generallie to the whole bodie (of which he ſpeakes as of one man) of the King as head, who repreſented Ieſus Chriſt. We may alſo referre it to the Aſſyrian, and to all others whom God vſed for the rooting out of the Philiftims. For the Iewes are accuſtomed to ſpeake thus indefinitely, when they minde to point out the officers by whom God executes his iudgements.

Verſ. 31. Howle o gate, crie o Citie,

thou whole land of Paleſtina art diſſolued, for there ſhall come from the North a ſmoke, and none ſhall be alone, at his time appointed.

HERE the Prophet vſeth amplifications to ſcale vp the truth of his prophesies in the hearts of the faithfull, and the more effectually to imprint thoſe things therein which without theſe would hardlie haue bene beleued. It hath been ſaid elſewhere, that the gates ſignifies the places moſt frequented, in which they kept their meetings. He threatens then that all the Cities ſhall lament, yea and that extraordinarily, becauſe the moſt honorable aſſemblies ſhould make it. That which is added touching the ſmoke, may be taken for the fire, ſo as the thing it ſelfe ſhould be ſhewed by the ſigne, becauſe the ſmoke appears before the fire burnes forth. By North we may vnderſtand as well the Aſſyrians as the Iewes, ſeeing both of them were ſituated on this ſide of the Philiftims: yet had I rather referre it to the Iewes: I meane not now to ſtand refuting of the contrarie opinion. As we haue ſaid heretofore then, the Philiftims thought themſelues great gainers by that which the Iewes loſt, when the Aſſyrians had done them any ſeaſe. Which alſo happened not long ſince to many nauons, who tooke pleaſure to ſee their enemies deſtroyed by the Turks: for they knew well inough that ſuch victories brought heauienes and damage vnto them. So as when they whoſe ruin they thruſted after were vanquiſhed, the way by that meanes was laid open for ſuch as in the end ſubdued them.

Whereas he addes in conſequence that none ſhall be alone, it appertaines to the enemies, who ſhall be ſo furniſhed with power and authoritie in the day prefixed, that is to ſay, when God ſhall haue decreed the deſtruction of Paleſtina, that none ſhall remaine idle in the houſe, but all ſhall be readie and prepared to march forward. As if any in praying the authoritie and power of ſome Prince ſhould ſay, that all his ſubiects aſſemble themſelues and are in a readineſſe as ſoone as he holds vp but his leaſt finger.

Verſ. 32. What ſhall then one anſwere the meſſengers of the Gentiles? that the Lord hath eſtabliſhed Zion, and the poore of his people ſhall truſt in it.

IHAD rather interpret this of all Nauons ſimply, then of any one in particular: for as ſoone as ſtrangers are entred into a Citie, they are wont to inquire what is done there, to the end they may get ſome newes. It is as much then as if he had ſaid; It has anſwer ſhall they giue to ſtrangers, when they ſhall inquire after newes? What ſhall be the common talke after the Philiftims be vanquiſhed? This, The Lord hath eſtabliſhed Zion. His meaning is then, that the ouerthrow of the Philiftims, ſhall be ſuch an excellent pledge of Gods mercy towards his people, that all ſhall thereby vnderſtand, that that the Lord is the keeper and protector of them whom he had chosen to himselfe. For this establishing is nothing else but Gods free adoption, wherein hee promised to be the God of Abraham, and of his seede : Gen.17.7. Secondly, he established it when hee willed that his Temple should be built in Zion, to the end his name might there be called vpon. And yet did not this foundation consist of mortar or stones, but in the promises concerning eternall life: which grace was alwaies knowne to all the faithfull. For this cause the Prophet shewes that the destruction of the Philistines shall be a memorable example by which all nations, yea those that are furthest off, shall vnderstand that God conserues and keepes his chosen people.

The ſtate of the wicked is neuer ſo ſaſt rooted, but God can eaſily diſplace them.

Shall trust in it.] Hee meanes not that the faithfull shall put their trust in Zion; as wee say that we must hope in God: but that the inhabitants of Zion shall dwell in a quiet and secure place; as the Prophets often affirme, that saluation is in Zion: iocel 2.32. He would not that the faithfull then should put their trust in the Church, but shewes that they are conserued and kept in it, because the Lord vpholds and defends it. And yet will hee try our faith, lest we should wholly make our heauen here: and therefore hee calles them poore, that none should thinke to be exempt from common calamities, although God hold vs vnder his protection. But could there be any greater consolation brought vs, then to heare that the inhabitants of the Church are dut of all dangers, notwithstanding they be subiect to infinite miseries? Let vs then apply this consolation to our selues in the midst of all our troubles, and let not impatience cause vs to giue ouer, seeing we perceiue that God hath care of vs, and that we are assured of safetie vnder his wings.

Though God hath taken vs vnder his protection: yet we must not thinke we shall therefore be freed from correction.

THE XV. CHAPTER.

Vers. 1. The burden of Moab. Surely Ar of Moab was destroyed and brought to silence in a night: surely Kir of Moab was destroyed and brought to silence in a night.

Here Isaiah prophecieth against the Moabites, who were neighbours to the Iewes, and knit vnto them by consanguinitie. For we know that the Moabites descended from Loi, nephew to Abraham. Gen. 19.37. Seeing then there was so neere affinitie betwene them; humanitie required at the least that these two peoples should haue entertained one another lovingly. But the Moabites would not be moued by any coniunction whatsoever, to bee friends with the Iewes; but were their deadly enemies, and as soone as occasion was offered, molested them; shewing thereby their stubborne and churlish nature. The Prophet then threatens their ruine also; because they exercised so great crueltie against that people, whom they should haue loued with a brotherly affection.

Now we are still to keepe in mind the end whereunto these prophesies rend: for it is hard to say whether the Moabites profited by them; no though they had heard that which we here reade from the Prophets own mouth: but he neither spake in their hearing, nor yet sent this prophesy vnto them in writing. He had respect therefore rather to the faithfull then to them; and that for two reasons: first, that in seeing so many changes happen; namely, the ouerthrow of Cities, the destruction of Kingdomes, one of them succeeding another: they should be far off from thinking that the world was guided by a blinde rage of fortune, but in all these things might acknowledge the prouidence of God. For if none of all this had bin foretold, men (having their mindes snarled in vanitie, and not perceiuing the least of Gods workes) might easilie haue concluded, that all things had been guided by chance. But being admonished thereof afore hand by the Prophets, they might behold the iudgements of God as from an high Tower. As wee at this day behold in the prophesies of Isaiah (no otherwise then if he had pointed that out vnto vs with his finger, which was then hidden) the Lord sitting in his throne, and ordaining all things to fall out according to his good pleasure: for howsoeuer the wicked offered violence, first to one, and then to another, according as their malice carried them; yet God vsed them as his instruments to execute his iudgements. The second end which the Prophets aimed at was, that among all the garboiles which fell out in the world, the Iewes might know that God had a care of their saluation; and that he might shew how deare his Church was vnto him, when hee should take vengeance vpon her enemies, that had vsed her so vnkindly.

Ar of Moab.] Ar, according to the Hebrewes, signifies a Citie; and so Kir, is as much as to say, as a wall. But in regard that Ar of Moab was one of the chiefe Cities of the Moabites, some take it here for a proper name. And yet wee may so expound both names, as if the Prophet threatened the ruine of those Cities wherein the Moabites gloried most. But I willingly receiue the common interpretation. And so Isaiah hath here set before vs such a description, as wherein we may behold the destruction of the Moabites; to wit, when when their principall Cities are made euen with the ground.

Note whereunto the prophesies tend.

By night, hee ſignifies a ſudden and vnexpected downefall which the Moabites did not ſo much as dreame of. For in regard that the night is appointed for reſt, if any accident fall out therein, all men are affrighted greatly, as at a thing vnlooked for. And beſides, he meant to taxe the careleſſneſſe of the Moabites, becauſe they thought themſelues exceedingly well fenced on all ſides, as men out of all dangers. Brought ſo ſilence: That is, to be deſtroyed; and therefore ſilence is taken for death. But others leauing the ſimilitude, haue rather tranſlated, She is cut off: which I leaue in ſuſpenſe. But this which Iſaiah denounceth againſt the Moabites, the ſcripture affirms to befall the reprobates: to wit, that their deſtruction drawes neere, ſo as they ſhall bee ſuddenly ouerwhelmed when they thinke on no ſuch matter: 1, Theſſ. 5. 3.

Verſ. 2. Hee ſhall goe vp to the Temple, and to Dibon to the high places to weepe: for Nebo, and for Medeba ſhall Moab howle: vpon all their heads ſhall be baldneſſe, and euery beard ſhauen.

AS touching the wordes, ſome leaue out the Hebrew word Baiith: but ſeeing it ſignifies Houſe, and Temple, it is very likely they haue vſually taken it to ſignifie a Temple; as in many places we know the Temple is called the houſe of God: Exod. 23. 19. & 24. 26. Deut. 23. 18. Ioh. 9. 23. Now, in that he brings in the Moabites proſtrate before their idols, he therein taxeth their ſuperſtition, becauſe they worſhipped their falſe god Chamos; as it is eaſily gathered out of 1. King. 11. 7. Iere. 48. 8. 13. The Moabites, ſaith Iſaiah, ſhall minne to their god, when things are in this deſperate caſe, but in vaine, for they ſhall finde no help in him. And forthwith mentioning the high places, we may eaſily diſcerne thereby, that he ſpeakes of the Temple. Neither is it to be doubted but the Moabites had a renowned forreſſe far about the reſt, where they had built the places of their deuotion, in honour of their idoll. For in aſmuch as they knew not the true God, neither had their recourſe vnto him in their aduerſities; it was no wonder if they trotted to their idoll, according to their cuſtome. But hereby they increaſed the miſchiefe, and heaped a full meafure of all euils vpon their own heads; becauſe ſo much the more they prouoked the wrath of God againſt them, as they imagined that ſeruiſe would pleaſe him beſt. The Prophet meant then to ſet out the comfortleſſe condition of the wicked in their aduerſities, as in a glaſſe; becauſe there is no greater bane vnto them, then thoſe remedies whereby they thinke to heale their diſeaſes. For they kinde the wrath of God againſt them to the vtmoſt.

Nebo was alſo a Citie of the Moabites. The Prophet hath mentioned two of them alreadie; he now addes the third, and afterwards the fourth: as if he ſhould ſay; This deſtruction ſhall not fall onely vpon the borders of the Country, but ſhall approach euen vnto the midſt; ſo as there ſhall be no place exempt. Vpon euery head. There is no Nation which hath not his ceremonies to manifeſt either their ioy or ſorrow. The Italians and Weſterne people, ſuffer their haire & beards to grow when they mourne; and thus they call, The growing of the beard. Contrariwiſe thoſe of the Eaſt haue their heads & beards, which before they held for an ornament: ſo that when they change their ordinary guiſe, it is among them a ſigne of great ſorrow. He meanes nothing elſe then, but to ſhew that there ſhall be ſuch cauſe to bewaile the eſtate of the Kingdome, that euery one laying aſide all ſignes of ioy, ſhall put vpon him as it were the ſignes of ſorrow and lamentation.

Euery Nation hath ſeueral ceremonies to expreſſe either their ioy or ſorrow.

Verſ. 3. In their ſtreets ſhall they be girded with ſackcloth: on the tops of their houſes, and in their ſtreets euery one ſhall howle, and come downe with weeping.

HE goes on ſtill with his former ſpeech, deſcribing yet more fully the ſignes of mourning. Now thoſe of the Eaſt are wonderful exceſſiue in theſe kinde of ceremonies; for as they are more vehement and quicke witted, ſo alſo doe they manifeſt their inward affections by outward ſignes, more then thoſe who are of dull capacities, and conſequently, ſo much the more vnwiſe in their mouings and behauiours. Yet was it a vice in them to exceede thus in ſo many ceremonies and geſtures: but the Prophet ſpeakes thereof as of a thing common, and ſufficiently knowne, onely to ſet forth the ſorrow which ſhould happen vpon the laying waſte of that Country. Neither is it in vaine that he addes this deſcription; becauſe the prophecies neuer touch vs to the quicke, vnleſſe God caue them to be ſet before our eyes, as a thing aſted and done indeed. To the end the Iewes ſhould not thinke then, that all theſe things were but words, in deſcribing this deſtruction: hee alſo ſets forth the manner of their griefe, as weeping and howling; to the end they might behold and ſee that accompliſhed (as you would ſay) which to them was ſo incredible. For the Moabites were then in a quiet eſtate; in regard whereof, the faithfull had the more neede of confirmation, that they might not call the truth of this prophecie into queſtion. And herewithall he notes the deſpaire whereinto the vnbeleeuers fall in their aduerſities; becauſe the rocke whereon they build, is of no force to vphold them.

Verſ. 4. And Heſſon and Elealeh ſhall cry; their voice ſhall be heard vnto Iaba: therefore the warriors of Moab ſhall ſhout; the ſoule of euery one ſhall lament in himſelfe.

*Or, harneſſed.
*Or, houſe.

5 Mine heart ſhall cry for Moab: his fugitiues fugitives shall flee vnto Zoar, an heifer of three yeeres old: for they shall goe vp with weeping by the mounting vp of Lubbith: and by the way of Horonaim they shall raise vp a crye of destruction.

HE here names other Cities; for his meaning is to bundle vp all the Cities of this Countrey (as it were) in one fardle, that they may be throwne into the same destruction with the rest; as if he should say, Nor one shall escape. Whereas he adds a little after, Therefore the harnessed of Moab: although the Hebrew participle be a shewing of the cause, yet others expound it otherwise; but it is a matter of no great moment. The Prophets meaning is to shew that none shall be exempted frō howling, seeing the strongest and most valiant amongst them shall do it. Afterwards he shewes that euery one shall be so affected with his owne grieffe, that he shall not minde his neighbour. In the 5. verse he takes to himselfe the person of a mourner, or a sorrowfull person: but it may seeme strange, yea very vnfitting, that the Prophet should bewaile the destruction of the Moabites, for he should rather haue sorrowed at the calamitie of the Church, and reioiced at the ouerthrow of the enemies. But the Prophets are wont to take vpon them the person of those against whom they prophesie afflictions, to the end they may represent their estate as it were vpon a stage or scaffold. And thus they moued afflictions more, then if they had propounded the doctrine simple without this art. And yet no doubt the Prophets trembled themselves at the iudgements of God, yea euen at those which they threatened the wicked withall: but that which I haue said is lesse cōfined, and agrees best, as we may easilie discretely by common experience. He calles them fugitives which fled thence: for his meaning is that those which shall escape frō Moab shall come vnto Zoar, whom he compares to a heifer of three yeeres old, which is in her full force and strength, and hath not yet brought forth, nor felt labor, nor the yoke; but fetches her frisks, and plays the wanton.

Now when the forces of the enemy presseth nere vpon a place, then they flee to other Cities which haue not yet been assailed, and which seeme to be furthest out of danger. Zoar was such a one, because the enemies had not yet ouerrun it: but if any had rather expound this of the whole region, I gainsay him not, because it seemes teremiah speaks in generally, who notwithstanding borrowes many sentences from our Prophet: vnlesse some had rather affirme that he there expresseth as well Zoar, as Horonaim, or rather the whole region which lieth between them. If it be referred to the whole nation, the sense will be, that the Moabites who were nourished vp in pleasures and abundance of all good things, felt no euill till it came vpon them, from whence they grew proude. And therefore to tame them, it was requisite they should be driuen to Zoar, which was farre remote from the Moabites, thereby shewing that they could not saue themselves but by flying very farre off.

Those whom the Lord thus tenderlie fosters, are here admonished to be humble, and not to prouoke the wrath of God against them by their pride and dissolutions: but to be sober; yea euen the when all things prosper with them in the best manner that can be wished: as also to prepare for all changes when God shall be pleased to visit them.

By the mount of Lubbith he describes other places of the countrey of Moab, and sets forth the flight of this people, and the sorrow that shall be thoroughout the whole kingdome. Whereas we haue turned, They shall raise vp the crye; others haue translated, They shall breake, or cleaue asunder with loud cries, affirming that there is a transposition of letters, and that the letter Gnain is doubled. In this sense this verb should be deriued from Raab, which signifies to breake or bruse: but because this serues not much touching the principall, I haue let that stand which is most approued, so as the verb descends from an other, which signifies to waken or raise vp. If any had rather retain the word, To breake, the sense is, that there shall be a breaking, and (as it were) a brusing of the members with sorrow and crying when one smites one arme against an other.

Verse 6. For the Waters of Nimrim shall be dried vp: therefore the grasse is withered, the herbs consumed, and there was no greene herb.

THE Prophet amplifies this desolation by a kind of excessiue speech. He saith, The grasse shall wither, which falls out when God deprives a land of all helps. Also that the waters shall be dried vp: for it is very likely they were exceeding necessarie for this quarter which was drie: for such countries as those bring forth nothing vnlesse they be watered. But howfocuer this be an excessiue speech, yet it contains nothing but that which is most true: for he passed not his bounds, but was faine to lay forth these things in the more words, because of the peoples dulnesse, to the end they might know that this land being deprived of Gods blessing, should become a desert deformed, and void of all beautie.

Verse 7. Therefore what euery man hath left, and their substance shall they beare to the brooke of the Willows.

THAT which euery one hath reserved, signifies the same which we vsually say, that which is left, or spared. For his meaning is to speake of riches reserved; thereby shewing what happens ordinarily in those countries which the enemies inuade, to wit, euery one labors to transport his goods to an other place, and to lay them vp safe there, that so they may fetch them home afterwards. Now he saith that that theſe ſhall haue no ſortreſſe nor refuge to put their goods in ſafety: ſo as they ſhall bee conſtrained to hide them amongſt the willowes. See here an extreme miſerie, when wee can finde no place of refuge, to ſafeguard and keepe that which wee haue gotten with great labour, from being a ſpoile to the enemies. It is very likely that theſe willowes ſtood in ſome ſecret and cloſe place remote from others. Some expound this of the enemies, which bring the riches which they haue pill'd, to the riuer, to part the pray among themſelues.

How sick ought to be haue themselves vpon whom God bestowes most of his benefits.

Verſ. 8. For the cry went round about the borders of Moab, and the howling thereof vnto Eglam, and the ſkriking thereof vnto Beer-Elim.

THe Hebrew particule Gi, was added for ornament. His meaning is, that all the quarters of this Country ſhall be filled with cries and lamentations in euery corner; becauſe this deſtruction ſhall reach from one end to another. To the cry, he addes a ſkriking or double howling, to expreſſe the exceſſe of dolour; it being the manner of deſperate perſons to become vtterly deſolate, and to bee reſolued into cares.

*Original ſings.

Verſ. 9. Becauſe the waters of Dimon ſhall be full of blood: and I will bring more vpon Dimon, euen lions vpon him that eſcapeth Moab, and to the remnant of the land.

He not onely deſcribes here the dolour, howling, flight, and trembling, or the couetouſneſſe of the enemies in raking together of riches; but the ſlaughter of men, which muſt needes be fearefull, when the great and renowned rauer (as Duron was) were ſlild with blood. By increaſing hee meanes that the Lord, in whoſe perſon hee ſpeakes, will augment the murders; ſo as the dead bodies ſhall be piled one vpon another, and there ſhall be no end thereof, till they be all put to the ſword. Now howſoeuer the aduerſities were cruell in this deſtruction, yet the Lord paſſed not meature for all that: becauſe hee juſtly puniſhed the inhumanitie which the Moabites vtterly exerciſed ouer the Iewes; vpon whom they ought to haue had compaſſion. It was juſt then for them to beare the ſame puniſhment which they had laid vpon others.

Which are eſcaped.] Theſe are alſo the increaſings wherof he ſpake; or at leaſt part of them. For behold the highſt pitch of all theſe calamities; that if any induoured to ſaue himſelfe in battel, from out of the hands of his enemies, hee ſhould meete with lions and cruell beaſts which ſhould deuoure him. And this is the true meaning of the Prophet, if we narrowly weigh the whole context. He meant to expreſſe this diſcomfiture, and the miſerie thereof in liuely colours, by ſhewing that the ſmall remnant which ſhall eſcape the ſlaughter, ſhall fall into the pawes of the lion: becauſe the hand of the Lord doth ſo purſue the wicked, that they can no way eſcape: if they paſſe one danger, they by and by fall into another. But withall let vs remember, that the Prophet ſpeakes theſe things for the conſolation of the faithfull, that they might fortifie themſelues by ſome promiſes againſt the cruelty of the enemies, who in the end ſhould be cut off, and ſhould finde no refuge at all in their gods, fortreſſes, or lurking holes; neither ſhould their flight any thing at all auale them.

THE XVI. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. Send yee a lamb to the ruler of the world, from the rocke of the wilderneſſe, vnto the mountain of the daughter Zion.

Here the Prophet inſults ouer the Moabites, for that they knew not God whileſt they had time; but boldly expected his puniſhing hand, till at length they were deſtroyed by it.

In this place then there is a condemning of too late a repentance; when men cannot be brought to amendment by any admonitions whatſoeuer, but harden their faces againſt God. In a word, this kind of exhortation hath place, when the diſeaſe is become incurable. Now wee muſt diligently obſerue the words, becauſe both Hebrewes and Chriſtians interpret this place amiſſe. Saint Ierome expounds it of Ieſus Chriſt, becauſe he deſcended from the Moabites, of whom Ruth came: Ruth 1. 4. Math. 1. 5. and the moſt part of Chriſtian expoſitors follow him. As if the Prophet ſhould ſay; Lord, although ſo ſeuere a iudgement be prepared for the Moabites, yet thou wilt not vtterly deſtroy them. Why? Becauſe they muſt ſend vs the Lambe, which is the ruler of the world. But as this expoſition hath no ground, ſo needes it not to be reſuted. As touching the Hebrewes, they thinke this was ſpoken in regard that the Moabites, who ſeeing the Iewes to haue ill ſucceſſe, ceaſed to pay them the tribute which they ought: and Iſaiah hauing prophecied the reſtauration of the Kingdome of Iudah, they thinke that therewithall hee exhorts the Moabites to acknowledge their King. And ſo would haue this a royall edict to correct their diſobedience: as if hee ſhould ſay; Send the tribute which you owe. But wee reade not in any place that the Moabites were ſubiect or tributaries butaries to the Iewes: neither is there so much as any probable coniecture of it. Whereas they alleage the history of the Kings, they are mistaken: for it is there spoken to the king of Israel: Ahab and Samarina are there expressly named: 2. King. 3. 5, 6 and we know that the Samaritans bare a deadly hatred against the Iewes. I content my selfe then in the first exposition which I haue touched, as being the truest and most naturall: because the Prophets meaning is to condemne the Moabites for not repenting in time, and therefore should now seek reconciliation in vaine; which before to their great vtilitie they might easily haue obtained.

Thus the word send, must be taken by way of deriding: as if he should say; You may now send, but looke for no pardon, nor to get any benefit by it. For when the wicked are admonished, they proudly despise all exhortation: but when the rod is vpon their backe, then they are like franticke men, running hither and thither, seeking helpe euery where, trying all remedies, but without any fruit; for they profite no whit thereby. Isaiah then scornes at their obstinacie and rebellion, and shewes there will be no time of repentance when the destruction shall come vpon them, which they haue iustly deserved.

The Iewes thinke that the Prophet speaks here of Hezechias, but contrary to all reason: for there is no mention made here of any certaine land, but rather of the whole world; whereof the Prophet speaks in generall. This ought then to be referred to God himselfe. He calles that a lambe, which should be offered in sacrifice: for the Nations professed to worship God when they offered their sacrifices. By the stone or rocks of the wildernesse, hee meanes a Citie; which was esteemed the chiefeest in Moab; although wee may well affirme, that hee meant to comprehend the whole Country: and so a part should be taken for the whole. To the mountaine: That is to say, to the true Temple of God, where the sacrifices were offered according as the Law commanded. This place is of excellent vse against the obstinate, who reiect all wholesome doctrine; proudly despising God, till his iudgements take them in the necke.

Verf. 2. For *it shall bee as a bird that flieth, and a nest forsaken: the daughter of Moab shall be at the fords of Arnon.

THE Prophet now shewes what he meant to say, by his former derision; to wit, that the Moabites must not thinke of sending sacrifices then, because they cannot otherwise saue themselves, but by fleeing from their Country. By the similitude of birds, he expresseth the terror wherewith they being once stricken, shall flee at the noise of a leafe. For hee threatens the fearefull and wearisome flight of the Moabites, who had abused their rest.

Verf. 3. Gather a counsell, execute iudgement: make thy shadow as the night in the mid-day: bide them that are chased out: bewray not him that is fled.

HE goes on with his speech. But if we will rightly vnderstand this place, we must see the calamitie wherewith the Moabites were extremely afflicted, before our eyes. Now he calles their wickednesses to remembrance; to the end all might know how iustly this calamitie befell them. When they had all things at their desire, they overflowed in dissolutions, and reiected all reprehensions: now being forsaken and left destitute of helpe, they mourne; seeking remedies, but find none. For thus God deals with the reprobates: he supplies their necessities, and puts all they can wish into their hands, to leaue them without excuse. But after they haue abused these blessings of God through their wicked lusts, and haue turned all things to an ill end, he takes from them all meanes and helpes, and then brings them to nothing. Whilest the Moabites were in prosperitie, they made no great reckoning of mercy and vprightnesse, although they might haue ruled, and had a flourishing Kingdome without doing any man wrong: yet did they abuse it to establish their tyranny. Now then when they are deprived of all authoritie, banished, and fugitiues; Isaiah in scorne, admonisheth them to gather a counsell, and to execute iustice, which before they had ouerturned by fraud & extortions. For Isaiah hath an eye to the time when the Moabites were spoiled of all principality and pwer. And it seemes this reproch is like to that which the Lord vsed to Adam, saying, Behold Adams is become as one of vs: Gen. 3. 22. For he is there scorned by a biting kinde of speech, that not being content with the excellent graces he had receiued, hee would needes be like God himselfe. So the Moabites being not contented with their ornaments and riches, vexed the poore Iewes and Israelites after a barbarous maner; pilld and polled them, and imagining wicked deuices against them.

Seeing then that they had abused the excellent gifts of God, hee iustly reprocheth their fact. Which also appertaines to all reprobates, who insolently exalt themselves when they prosper; and abusing the same, doe offer hard measure to the faithfull. For in as much as they pollute the things which God hath consecrated to a right end, it is good reason they should be deprived of them, and suffer extreme want. Wee see daily examples hereof before our eyes. Whence is it that those who are advanced to great places of honour, fall so violently, but because God auengeth himselfe of their tyrannous government and wicked practises? The Lord also reprocheth their shame, contempt, teares, and complaints: as when they cry out, Oh that I might returne againe to my goods! Oh that I were set in my first estate! But then alas repentance is too late.

Make thy shadow.] The Moabites (as I haue touched before) might haue refreshed the

How God deals with the wicked.

Jewes ſomewhat in their miſerie when the Aſſyrians vexed them. At the leaſt, had there been any ſparke of humanitie in them, they ought to haue received the fugitiues: but in ſtead of doing this, they perſecuted and wickedlie offered violence to thoſe which were oppreſſed too much already by the hands of others. Good reaſon it was then that the Moabites ſhould haue experience in their owne perſons of that cruelty which they had exerciſed towards others, that being chaſed from their dwellings, baniſhed and wandering to and fro, they might finde no ſuccor nor ſhadow to hide and defend themſelves from the heate. For why ſhould they enjoy that comfort which they had unkindlie reſuſed to giue vnto others?

He takes the mid-day heere for extreme heate: and this ſimilitude is often found in the ſcriptures, to wit, that the Lord was as a cloud at his noone, and as a pillar of fire by night, Exod. 13. 21. 22. Numb. 14. 14. Deut. 1. 13. becauſe he did it once in the wildernes. The Propheets retained theſe phraſes of ſpeech becauſe they were then in vie, although they recited not the hitorie. Beſides, when he ſaith, hide them that are chaſed out, he ſpeakes of the Jewes, who being purſued and vexed by the Aſſyrians, were notwithstanding vncourteouſlie intreated by Moabites, whoſe dutie it was to haue entertained and comforted poore fugitiues, eſpecially thoſe who fled to the for ſuccor. But ſince they chaſed them away, it was requiſit that themſelves ſhould be chaſed and deprived of all help and ſuccor. For iuſt and equall is that ſentence of the Lord, who commands that euery one receiue that meaſure which himſelfe hath meaſured, Deut. 19. 19. 21. Matth. 7. 2. Now the Prophet would haue the Moabites to acknowledge their finnes, to the end they might confeſſe the puniſhment of their cruelties to be iuſtly inflicted vpon them. Although he rather reſpects the Jewes, to teach the that God neglected not their miſeries; but would afterwards let them ſee that he reuenged all their wrongs.

Verſ. 4. Let my baniſhed dwell with thee: Moab be thou their covert from the face of the deſtroyer: for the extortioner ſhall end, the deſtroyer ſhall be conſumed, and the oppreſſor ſhall ceaſe out of the land.

THe Prophet ſpeakes to the Moabites as if he humble ſued vnto them in the name of the common people; as if he ſhould ſay, You are neighbours and of the ſame blood, I pray you receiue and ſuccor the oppreſſed. If you will not help vs, yet at the leaſt harme vs not. He brings in God ſpeaking, who is wont to put himſelfe in the place of his people, as if he tooke vpon him the perſon of a ſuppliant. It is very certaine that the Moabites ſhewed none of this kindnes to the Jewes: nay they rather ioined with their enemies to hurt them by all the means they could. This place is worthis our diligent obſeruation, for God heere ſhewes the great care he hath ouer his choſen, ſeeing he is as greatly moued with the wrongs done to them, as with thoſe which are directly againſt his owne Maieſtie. As in Zacharia hee witneſſeth, that as ot as his children are oppreſſed by any, they euen touch the apple of his eye, Zacha. 2. 8. He ſees the teares and heares the groanes of the afflicted which call vpon him, Pſal. 12. 5. & 38. 9. & 102. 20. And how often this alwaies comes not to paſſe in our fight; yet will he ſhew in due ſeaſon that he hath heard them.

Let vs then learne from hence to be kinde, and giuen to ſuccor poore exiles: eſpecially the faithful, baniſhed from their country for the confeſſion of the truth. For there is no ſeruice which God accepts, or allows better then this; as on the contrary, nothing is more diſpleaſing or deteſtable in his fight, then cruelty and inhumanitie. Wherefore if we will feele any reſtching in our calamities, let vs ſhew our ſelues louing and mercifull, and not withdraw our helpe from thoſe that haue neede. Bleſſed is he, ſaith Dauid, which iudgeth wiſely of the poore and needie, the Lord ſhall deliuer him in the time of trouble, Pſal. 41. 1. Whereas on the contrary there ſhall be iudgement mercileſſe to him that ſheweth no mercie, Iam. 2. 13. Now in that the Lord calles the Jewes heere his baniſhed: although this might well be referred to the chaſtiſement, as if he ſhould ſay, they are indeed driuen out of the land of Canaan according as they were oftentimes threatned before: yet he therewithall meanes, that they remaine vnder his protection and ſafeguard, acknowledging them for his owne, although they be chaſed and baniſhed out of their countrie. For this calamitie which the Jewes endured, ſeemed a kind of reſiſtion, but the Lord takes them ſtill for his children, although he thus ſharplie corrected them.

Hence we may gather a ſingular conſolation, to wit, that we are ſtill of the number of Gods children, howſoever we may be ſmiten with hard and grieuous plagues. The extortioner ſhall end. He now directh his ſpeech to the Jewes, and continues to comfort them as before, ſhewing that when their enemies ſhall be cut off, they ſhall thereby be eaſed of all their miſeries and calamities. Now howſoever the Prophet ſpake heretofore expreſly to the Moabites, yet did he therewithall direct his ſpeech to the Jewes alſo. But then he only threatned the Moabites as enemies: here, he more clearly promiſeth comfort to his people; as if he ſhould ſay, O Moab, thou thoughteſt that my people were vtterlie vndone, but I will ſubdue their enemies, and put an end to their afflictions: thou ſhalt periſh, but my people ſhall in the end eſcape from the heauie burthens which oppreſſe them. Vnleſſe any had rather ſay that there is a change of the time here: ſo as the particle Becauſe, ſhould ſignifie vntill, and ſo reading the ſentence all with a breath. But becauſe this may ſeeme conſtrained, I had rather retaine the naturall ſenſe.

be prepared, and he shall sit vpon it in stedfastnesse in the tabernacle of Dauid, indging, and seeking iudgement, and halting iustice.

It is ill done of the Hebrewes to expound this whole verse of Hezekias. For the Prophet speaks of a greater restauration of the Church: the Moabites were not as yet chastened, whilest the gouernment of Hezekias flourished: and at that time the blessing of God began to shine againe vpon the Iewes. It is as much then as if he had said, the enemies of the elect people doe plot the ruine of this kingdome, which God had promised to stand firme; yea, and that for cuer. To the end then that the faithfull might not be out of heart in this wofull scattering; the eternitie of the kingdome which had been set before their eyes by an excellent prophesie, is here brought to their remembrance. This place therefore can be referred to none other but to Iesus Christ, of whom Hezekias, as also Dauid and his successors were figures. These then doe rather leade and conduct others to Christ, who is the onely safe keeper and protector of his people: who indeede gathereth together the remnant that is scattered. Thus then hee brings the faithfull backe vnto Christ: as if hee should say, You know what God you serue: he hath promised to be the onely keeper of your saluation; to the end you may remaine safe vnder his protection, Iohn 10. 28. And if it so fall our that things goe crosse sometimes; yet hath he promised you a redeemer: vnder whom you shall recover a new and stedfast felicitie. What then if for a time you be sad and heauie? yet will this Sauour of the Church come in the end: who will set you in a flourishing liberty. And therefore fettle your selues constantly in the expectation of him: yea euen then when you shall see the estate of the Church miserably scattered.

We haue need to obserue this diligently, because all consolations whatsoeuer are but earthly and transitorie, if all be not referred vnto Christ. Let vs then fasten our eyes vpon him if we will enioy any prosperitie or happiness: for he hath promised that felicitie shall accompanie vs, euen in the midst of persecutions; Math. 5. 10. 11. and that all our anguishes and vexations shall open a way vnto vs to eternal life: yea, that all the afflictions which we endure, shall turne to a full measure of happiness vnto vs, Rom. 8. 28.

Now Isaias shewes that this shall not come to passe by means of men; but by the grace of God, which is the onely builder of this throne. Wherefore to him onely must we attribute this mercie, and acknowledge that it is of his free goodnesse that he hath established this sacred throne in the midst of vs. Now the Prophet confirms it very well in saying, that the cause must be sought no where else, but in the meere mercie of God. This is a grounded truth: for God was not moued thereto by the worthinesse of any merits; as las they were of no value to set vp that throne againe which was fallen downe by the sinne and iniquitie of the people: but seeing those whom he had adopted, had vndone themselves, he meant to shew a token of his infinite bountie in their restauration.

Shall sit vpon it in stedfastnesse.] There is almost no one word here which hath not his weight, so as this verse is worthy to be continually remembered. I grant indeede there is an allusion heere in the word Tabernacle, as 1. Sam. 16. some doe expound it: to wit, that he was as a common person before he was called to sit in the royall throne. For the Prophet meant to decipher out a luely image of the Church, which is fatte vnlike the thrones of kings and princes; neither shines it with gold, silver, or precious stones as they doe. Now howsoeuer he proposed the spiritual kingdome of Christ vnder a base and abiekt resemblance: yet he therewithall admoniseth, that it shall be prepared, and set vp among men in the earth. For if it had been onely said that the throne of Christ should be set vp; it might haue been demanded whether his seate should be set vp in heauen or in earth.

But when he faith in the Tabernacle of Dauid, he shewes that he reignes not onely among Angels, but among men also: lest wee should imagine he were not to be found, vnlesse we ascend vp into heauen. The wicked laugh at this: taking all that we say of the kingdome of Iesus Christ but for a fable; as if it were a fancie forged in our owne braine. For they must behold that wee tell them of with their eyes; also it must agree to their senses: as for vs we ought in no wise to conceiue any thing carnally of him; but to content our selues with his power and vertue.

In stedfastnesse.] The word Emesh signifies all stedfastnesse whatsoeuer; and trueth. Here the Prophet means that the kingdome of Christ shall be firme and stable, as Daniel also hath witnessed, Dan. 2. 44. and 7. 14. Likewise the Euangelist Luke: Of his kingdome (saith he) shall be none end, Luke 1. 33. Wherein it differs from the common condition of other kingdomes, which often fall and tumble downe by their owne weight: be it that the foundations of them be riches and other great commodities, alas their stedfastnesse differs very little from vanishing shadowes. But howsoeuer the kingdome of Christ seeme to totter now and then, yet Isaias tels vs that it shall stand for euer, because God vpholds it with his hand. We must therefore arme our selues with these testimonies against the temptations which shal happen when Christs kingdome is assailed with many and mighty enemies, so as a man would imagine it would fall to ruine fordwich. Let the world deuiſe what it can then, yea, let hell it selfe cast forth flashes of flaming fire: yet must we stick fast to this promise.

Who shall iudge.] I take the word Shophet for Gouernour: as if he should say, there shall be one that shall gouerne: we often see a magnificent throne, and yet no man sits on it; and it will ordinarie fall out that kings shall be either idols or beasts, who haue neither iudgement, wisdome, nor any discretion in them.

Christs Kingdome differs from the common condition of other Kingdomes.

Christs Kingdome may now and then seeme to totter: but it shall euer stand stedfast, because God vp-holds it.

But heere he ſaith, that he which ſhall ſit in this throne wil perſorme the office of a good gouernour: which is added, to the end we may know that Chriſt will be our protector in deed: for the iudgements which is attributed to him is nothing elſe but the ſafe cuſtodie vnder which he hath receiued vs, and which none can wring from him: neither will he let the wicked remaine unpuniſhed when they haue offed vs violence, if ſo be that with a meeke and quiet ſpirit we will put ourſelues vnder his protection.

By the word haſten, the Prophet ſheweth that Chriſt will take vengeance quicklie and ſpedilie of our afflictions: which we ought to oppoſe to our impatiencie, becauſe it ſeemes to vs that he is too ſlow in ſuccoring vs. But when we ſhall be ſo ouerſwayed by our paſſions, let vs thinke, ſurely this comes to paſſe becauſe we giue not place to his prouidence. Although then that he tarrie according to the ſenſe of the ſeſh, yet doth he alwaies moderate his iudgements after a moſt excellent order, according as he knows the ſeaſons beſt for vs. For this cauſe then let vs quietlie wait his good pleaſure.

Verſ. 6. We haue heard of the pride of Moab (he is very proud) euen his pride and his arrogancie, and his indignation, but his lies ſhall not be ſo.

The Prophet addes this ſentence by way of preuention. For that which he had promiſed touching the reſtauration of the royall throne, ſeemed incredible; neither could they perſwade themſelues that the Moabites could be deſtroyed, ſeeing they flouriſhed at that time with abundance of riches, as alſo in ſtrength and power of men: who for this cauſe (being puffed vp with proſperitie) became exceeding proud. Adde alſo, that their malapertnes wherewith they inſulted ouer the poore Iewes, was vnto them like a ſore and hard engin to breake and bruiſe their hearts. The Prophet that he might preuent this reſempration, tels them that the brags of the Moabites are well enough knowne; but yet their pride ſhall not hinder the Lord from puniſhing of them: becauſe there is neither force, riches, nor multitude that is able to reſiſt him. Iſaiah then ſpeakes as of a thing commonlie knowne: to wit, that the Moabites were become ſo extreme proude, that they feared nothing: it being in deed the vſuall faſhion of thoſe that abound in wealth and power, to inſult malapertlie ouer God and men. But how great ſouer their arrogancie is the Lord will eaſily pull it downe.

His inſolencie.] The word Euab for the moſt part ſignifies indignation: but the circumſtance of this place ſeemes to require ſome what more. This nounce comes of the verb to Tranſgreſſe, as if we ſhould ſay in Latine, To exceed, and therefore I haue thought good to tranſlate it inſolencie. Ieremiah hauing mentioned their pride & arrogancie, ſpeakes of hamines of the heart, Iere. 48. 14. & 29. I make no queſtion but Iſaiah and Ieremiah both meant that this people were ſo cruell in regard of their ouerweeming, loſines & ſt.elines, that they would wax wroth and angrie vpon the leaſt occaſion; and churliſhlie aduance themſelues againſt others. This vice is alwaies ioined with loſines of mind, becauſe the contempt of others is accompanied with pride: and thoſe who aſcribe vnto theſelues more then is meete, are eaſily prouoked to anger vpō the leaſt occaſion: ſuch can beare nothing, and are not only inclined to wrath, but to outrage alſo. For by their good wills they would ſubiect euery man vnder them, neither will they giue place by any means to any man whatſoeuer. If euery one be not readie at their beck they take it in ſoule ſcorne. Proude men doe eaſily bewray this their high ſtomack: whereas the humble on the contrarie are of a louing diſpoſition, ioyned with modeſtie anſwerable thereunto, and are ſoone intreated to pardon any that haue donē them wrong.

His lies.] The Hebrewes call the members of man; or the branches of a tree Eddim: and they alſo take this word for Diuination, which is vſed in this ſignification in ſome o-ther places. Some thinke it is put heere by a figure, for childie: others referre it to words, or thoughts; others expound it of ſtrength or ſinewes. But in mine opinion it is taken rather for a fooliſh boaiſting, becauſe this nounce is often taken for a lie: and we ſhall ſee hereafter how this ſignification agrees beſt to this place. The expoſitors alſo differ in the word cen. The moſt tranſlate, That lies, or words are not vpright: others, that lies are not true. For the ſubſtance, I am almoſt of their opinion: neither doubt I but the Prophet meant to ſay that Moab vtters his vaine brags, becauſe he can not attaine to his chiefe enterpriſe.

For the ſenſe of the words we ſhall beſt gather it out of the foure and fortieth Chapt. of Ieremiah verſ. 30. for hauing there repeated the very words of our Prophet, he preſentlie addes by way of expoſition, They ſhall not do ſo, as if he ſhould ſay, That which they haue reſolued in themſelues to do, ſhall neuer come to paſſe. Yet notwithstanding I am not of opinion that there ſhould be a particlē of ſimilitude in the firſt member, but rather of confirmation, as it were by a negatiue, becauſe he declares that there ſhall be no ſtedfaſtnes in Moabs counſels: neither ſhould his diuinations or lies come to effect. Thus the proude often determine of all things no otherwiſe then as if the diſpoſing of them were in their owne hands, and themſelues exempt from being ruled by the prouidence of God. Such pride ſaith Iſaiah ſhall fall, and whatſoeuer they promiſe vnto themſelues concerning their power, ſhall vaniſh like ſmoke.

Heereby wee are admoniſhed, that pride is greatly diſpleaſing vnto God: and by how much the more men be puffed vp in regard of their riches, ſo much the neerer are they to their owne deſtruction.

derneffe: her goodly branches stretched out themselves, and went over the sea.

Iam. 4. 6.
1. Pet. 5. 5.

HE sets forth that more plainly which he touched before: to wit, that this pride and crueltie which proceedes thereof, shall be the cause of Moabs ruine. For seeing the Lord rescis the proud, hee must needs take downe this haughtinesse, vnder which the Church was miserably and shamefully trodden vnder foote. According to which example, the end of all proud persons must of necessity bee lamentable. Where it is added, Moab vnto Moab; his meaning is, that there shall bee a dolorous song as it were, when they shall make their none one to another touching their calamities, and shall weepe for one anothers griefes.

Some translate, Because of Moab; but vnto. For it is by and by said, that the howling shall bee generall, or amongst the people.

[For the foundations.] It sufficiently appears that Kir-hareseb was the head Citie, and the Kings regall seate: but some thinke it to be a proper name; others say it is appellatiue: no doubt but the etymologie of the word was raken hence; namely, because it was built of chalke. It may be also that it was called thus, in regard of the height of the walles which were made of bricke. Now this was a citie greatly renowned in that Country: yet he rather names the foundations then the Citie it selfe, because it should be raced to the ground. As if he should say; You shall not lament the ruine of the Citie or buildings, but the utter subuersion of it, because there shall nothing remaine of it.

They expound the word Necaim, Lame: I had rather translate it, Hurt. The particle which is set before it, signifies as much as, Certainly, or, Surely: sometimes it is taken for But, or, Notwithstanding. Those which take it in the affirmatiue, expound it thus: You shall surely mourne, when you shall be hurt or stricken: that is to say, you shall not neede to hire those that shall faime a mourning for you, as they vsually doe at the buriall of some; but you shall mourne in good earnest. But I expound it Onely; as if he should say; All that shall remaine, shall be stricken; not one shall escape in safetie. And by this manner of speech he expresseth the extreme ruine of that Citie, shewing that those which lue, shall not onely bewaile the calamities of others, but their owne also: because they themselves shall be stricken. If the proud be thus sharply corrected, let vs learne to carry our selues modestly and peaceably; and freely to humble our selues vnder the mightie hand of God.

Verf. 8. For the vineyards of Heshbon are cut downe, and the vine of Sibmah: the lords of the heathen haue broken the principall vines thereof: they are come to Iazer: they wandred in the Wil-

THE Prophet describes the destruction of the whole Country here vnder an allegorie. It is very credible that it abounded with good vineyards: which wee may easily collect fro this place, and another like vnto it in the 48. of Ieremy, verf. 32. Now when the Prophets threaten any Countreies with destruction, they are wont to recite the chiefest things in them. For example, if wee were to speake of Picardie, truly we would not mention vines: as if we spake of Orleans, or Burgondie, The Cities which the Prophet describes in this verse, are the head Cities in the Country of Moab.

He saith, that the principall vines of the vineyards were plucked up by the Lords of the nations: that is to say, by the conquerours which bare sway as they list over the people who they had subdued. Where he saith, that these branches came to Iazer, it is for amplifications sake; because this citie was situated vpon y bounds of the land of Moab. As if he should say, They shall not onely cut downe some part of your vines, but the whole Country shall be laid waste from one end to the other. Some referre this to the enemies: but I had rather referre it to the vines which stretched so far, that they came to Iazer: so as the sense shall be; Although these vines should spread euenvnto Iazer, and should couer much land from thence vnto the wildernesse, yet shall the lords of the nations tread them vnder foote. So that the text runnes well, because it is said afterwards, that the vines spread themselves vnto the wildernesseyea, vnto the sea: thereby signifying, that it was a fruitful soile, but especially for vines; he addes, ouer the sea; because in fertile groundes they are wont to keepe backe the sea with rampires for gaining of ground: and they prevent the violence of the water with boords and timber, to enlarge the land.

Verf. 9. Therefore wil I weep with the weeping of Iazer, and of the vine of Sibmah: O Heshbon and Elealeh I will make thee drunke with my teares, because vpon thy summer fruites, and vpon thy harvest a shouting is fallen.

HERE the Prophet takes another person vpon him, as we haue noted before: for he sorrowes and complaines in the person of the Moabites. I deny not but the faithfull haue alwaies trembled at Gods iudgements, neither could they euer so put off the bowels of pitie, but they had still compassion vpon the wicked; yet doth he not describe his private affections here: but his meaning is, to get authoritie to his doctrine, that none might doubt of the accomplishment of it. And therefore he represents the sorrow and heavinesse which they should all feele after the diſcomfiture (as it were vpon a ſcafold) in the perſon of a Moabite; and all to the end he might the better confirme the Iewes in the truth of this prouiſe, which might otherwiſe haue ſeemed incredible vnto them.

Becauſe vpon thy ſummer fruites.] The expoſitors interpret this latter part diuerſly. I he verbe Naphal, ſignifies to Fall, and to run vpon. Thoſe which take it in the laſt ſignification, referre the word Hedad, to the enemies themſelues: as if he ſhould ſay, The cry of the enemies ſhall runne vpon thy harueſt: ſo as there ſhould be a cloſe oppoſition here betwene this cry, and the ſinging whereof he will ſpeake in the next verſe. Others expound it, It ſhall come to paſſe that they ſhall caſt forth cries: as if ſinging ſhould ceaſe, and as if the pleaſant ſongs and mirth of the reapers, who are wont to reioyce after harueſt, ſhould be no more heard. But I had rather referre it to the cry of the enemies: wherein I follow Ieremias, the faithfull expoſitor of this place, who ſaith, That the deſtroyer ſhall runne vpon thy ſummer fruites. Which Iſaiah calles here the cry of the enemies: as if hee ſhould ſay; When thou ſhalt prepare thy ſelfe to gather in thy harueſt, the enemies ſhall run vpon thee, from whom thou ſhalt heare this hideous cry in ſtead of thy cheerful ſongs, and ſhall chaſe thee thence.

Verſ. 10. And gladneſſe is taken away, and ioy out of the plentifull field: and in the vineyards ſhall be no ſinging nor ſhoutiſg for ioy; the treader ſhall not treade wine in the wine-preſſes: I haue cauſed the reioycing to ceaſe.

Hee confirms his threatning by more words, ſhewing that the whole region ſhall be deſtroyed and laid waſte, ſo as there ſhall be no more vintage nor harueſt. When he ſaith, that God will take away the ſongs of the vine-dreſſers, hee reſpects the ancient cuſtome. For they were wont to dance and manifeſt their ioy after the grapes were gathered in. For which cauſe, Virgil ſaith, that the vine-dreſſer ſings when his laſt labours about his vines are finiſhed, euen as the Mariners ſhout for ioy when they be artiued in the haven. For then hauing ſuffered much, and eſcaped many dangers, they hope to haue reſt, and to obtaine ſome reſreſhing. This is as much then as if the Prophet had ſaid, Being deprived of the reuenuē of their fruites, nothing ſhall remaine vnto them, but the bewailing of their pouerty.

Verſ. 11. Wherefore my bowels ſhall ſound like an harpe for Moab, and mine inward parts for Kir-hareſeth.

The Prophet vnder the perſon of a Moabite doth againe deſcribē a great lamentation proceeding from ſuch grieuous ſorrow, that their bowels ſhould breake, or make an horrible noiſe. For hee would ſhew the thing it ſelfe by the ſigne of it. Now we haue already ſhewed wherunto theſe liuely deſcriptions tend; to wit, that hauing the thing demonſtrated as it were in the ſight, wee might the more confidently expect the obtaining of that which far ſurmounts all our thoughts. In that he names the chiefe Ciue againe, he notes out the ruine of the whole Country, taking a part for the whole.

Verſ. 12. And it ſhall appeare that Moab ſhall be weary of his high places: then ſhall he come to his Temple to pray, but he ſhall not preuaile.

Or, Sauguary.

He now returnes to the ſentence which he touched in the ſecond verſe: to wit, that the idolaters ſeeing their affaires to ſucceede ill, doe runne to idols, thinking to find ſome comfort in them. Although he here expreſſeth ſome thing more: for in as much as Idolaters haue their temples and ordinarie chapels, they trot to that temple which they take for the moſt holy (when any great calamitie befalls them) as to the place where they hope to finde God moſt fauourable vnto them. For if the Papiſts at this day fall into any great and extreame danger, they perſwade themſelues they ſhall ſooner obtaine their requeſts (and this hath been a common and ancient ſuperſtitious conceit) if they trot to Saint Claude, or to our Lady of Limeux, or to ſome other Idol more famous than the reſt; than if they ſhould reſort to the Church that is neereſt hand. They make their extraordinary prayers in places furtheſt off. Thus the Prophet calles the moſt renowned and frequented temple among the Moabites, a Sanctuarie; and ſaith, they ſhall goe thither: but to no purpoſe. Now it appeares by the holy hiſtorie, that the ſamouſt temple of the Moabites was dedicated vnto Chemosh: 1. King. 11. 7.

Some expound the particl, They ſhall not preuaile: that they ſhould be ſo wearie, that they ſhould not haue ſo much ſtrength as to goe to the temple. But the firſt ſenſe is the fitteſt as I thinke: for he takes away all hope from the Moabites, ſo as they ſhould finde no ſuccour, no nor in the gods themſelues. This member, and when it ſhall appeare, hath great waight: for it ſignifies that the Idolaters are nor led with reaſon but rather by their natural appetites, euen like vnto brute beaſts. For as beaſts iudge by touching, ſmelling, and ſeeing, ſo alſo the Idolaters haue no better ſchoolemaſter to inſtruct them than their owne carnall ſenſe. If any then conuince them by ſound arguments, that they doe ill; a man ſhall gaine nothing from them. And howſoever they ſometimes haue experience that all their labour in vexing themſelues after their maner is but loſt; yet will they not therefore giue ouer, but ſeeke new means, and will bring in ſeruiſes of their owne inuention, which they would faine haue God to approve of. If they haue good ſucceſſe, that they attribute to their ſuperſtitious, and ſo waxe the more obdurate: and if matters ſucceed succeed ill they reiect their inventions, condemn their new devised worship, and blame their gods. To be short, they depend wholly upon cuncts, iudging of nothing neither by reason, nor by the word of God. Therefore they are newfangled euermore, according as experience leads them. But it seemes the Prophet passeth yet further, to wit, that the Moabites shall come to the Temple of Chamos when their follie shall be manifestlie discovered vnto all; rather with shame and blushing, then of any mature deliberation.

Verf. 13. This is the word that the Lord hath spoken against Moab since that time.

This short sentence is the confirmation of the prophesie: for his meaning is, that he hath euen pronounced the very decree of God himselfe, and hath vttered nothing but the Lords message. Thus putting off as it were the person of man, he brings in God speaking in this manner:

Verf. 14. And now the Lord hath spoken, saying. In three yeeres, as the yeeres of an hireling, and the glorie of Moab shall be contemned in all the great multitude, and the remnant shall be very small and feeble.

Three yeeres.] The time is not only prefixed for the certaintie, but also to the end the faithfull might not languish in waiting any longer. Now he alludes to the agreements and covenants of men, wherein they have been wont to set downe a certaine day which they must not breake. This is speciallie done in mercenarie busineses; which similitude is often vsed in the scriptures, because the hireling waits with exceeding desire for the appointed day wherein he is to receive his wages. For they groane as it were vnder the burthen, and beare their ordinarie labors vnwillinglie. Thus God saith, he will assigne a certain day vnto the Moabites which they shall not escape; but all their puillance shall therein be brought to nothing. He speakes expresse of the multitude, because they were a great people; and therefore bragged of it as if they had been invincible. Where he ads that the remnant shall be feeble, he meanes, there shall be such a change, that there shall be great ods betwene their former and latter estate, because nothing shall be seene but a wofull and hidious spectacle in those that remaine.

THE XVII. CHAPTER.

Verf. 1. The burden of Damascus. Behold, Damascus is taken away from being a Citie, for it shall be a ruinous heape.

He prophesieth against the kingdom of Syria, and mentions the head Citie, which was the regall seate of the Kingdome. Now it was requisite that this destruction should be described as well as y rest, to the end the faithfull might assure themselves that God would assist them in time conuenient, and would not alwaies suffer the wicked to molest them without ceasing. For the king of Syria was confederate with the king of Israel against the king of Iudah; as we haue seene before in the seuenth Chapter: and because the Iewes were not strong enough to resist them, being destitute of sufficient meanes, they might also haue doubted of succor from God, as if he had left them at fixe and seauen. That he might therefore free them from this perplexitie, he threatens destruction to this kingdom of Syria, from whence they might well conclude, that God fought for the defence of his people.

It is not known in what time Isaiah prophesied this, neither (as I haue touched heretofore) doth he obserue the precise order of times when he threatens any nation with the chastisements which it deserued: but as I coniecture he foretold this, when the two kings of Israel and Syria had inuaded Iudah: hauing therewithall conspired the destruction of the Church. For in as much as he ioines the Israelites and Syrians together, he calles them both to the same iudgement; to let them vnderstand that they had so profited by this wicked and cursed league, that both of them should be inwrapped in one and the same destruction. The Prophets meaning then is to comfort the faithfull of the tribe of Iudah, because he especiallie nor regard to them (and not to the Israelites nor Syrians, whose ruine he now foretels) left they should be left comfortlesse.

The particle demonstratiue, Behold, scales vp as it were the truth of this prophesie. Whereas he only mentions Damascus in particular, it follows not therefore that hee meant to exempt the other parts of the kingdom: but this manner of speech is very vsuall in the Prophets, namely, to take a part for the whole, so as vnder the ruin of the principall Citie, he comprehends that which should befall the whole Nation: for what could the lesser Citie expect but confusion, when the fortresse of the kingdom should be taken? There is also another reason why the Prophets threaten the chiefe Citie, directing their speech against them, to wit, because they were the seminaries of all wickednes, from which as out of a fountaine it dispersed it selfe ouer the whole land.

The time when this burden was threatened.

Reasons why the Prophets threaten ruin to the chiefe Citie, rather then to the inferior.

The reason why this burden is pronounced against Damascus.

Verf. 2. The Cities of Aroer shall be forsaken: they shall be for the flocks; for they they ſhall be there, and none ſhall make them afraid.

Num. 32. 34
Deut. 2. 36.
3. 12. &
4. 48.

IT is vncertaine whether by Amos here, he means that Citie whereof mentio is made ellewhere. It ſhould rather be the name of a Region or Country; howſoever hee deſcribes the forme of a Country laid waſte: for hee ſaith, that the places where Citie were built, ſhould now be common paſtures; ſo as nothing ſhould remaine but the lodges & tents of ſheepheard: for if any inhabitants were left there, they ſhould drue their ſtocks to another place.

Verſ. 3. The munition alſo ſhall ceaſe from Ephraim, and the Kingdome from Damascus: and the remnant of Aram ſhall bee as the glorie of the children of Iſrael, ſaith the Lord of hoſtes.

HEC now ſhewes the cauſe why the Lord would cut off the Kingdome of Syria. The Prophet Amos recites many: Amos 1. 3. But that which Iſaiab mentions here, was the principall; to wit, that they had drawne the Kingdome of Iſrael to the bent of their bow, to make warre againſt the Iewes. No doubt but the Iſraelites were inticed by the flatteries of the Syrians, to make a league with them to fight againſt their brethren. And the better to deceiue them, the Syrians alledged that they would aide them againſt all their aduerſaries. And therefore the Iſraelites alſo reſted themſelves vpon the ſtrength of their confederates: ſo as they were perſwaded, that none were too hard for them. Vnder the word Ephraim hee means all Iſrael, as in many other places; for Ephraim was the chiefe Tribe of the people. Beſides, he ſaith, that the munition and kingdome ſhall ceaſe from a place, when the ſtrength thereof is broken, and the excellency thereof brought low.

The remnant.] That is to ſay, the peoples both of Syria and Iſrael ſhould bee brought to nought: and the better to authoriſe his prophecie, he addes forthwith, that God hath ſpoken it. Now when God puniſhed theſe two kingdomes ſo ſeuerly, no doubt but hereby he provided for the ſaluation of his Church, redeeming and deliuering it euen by the deſtruction of the enemies. And for the rooting out of them both, he vſed the helpe of the Aſſyrians, whom the Iewes themſelves had called: in which fact of theirs, they ſinned very groſſy. Yet could not their offence hinder the Lord from being carefull of his Church; deliuering it, by ſetting his enemies together by the eares. And by this wee may ſee how great care the Lord hath of vs, ſeeing he ſpares not to puniſh euen great and mightie kingdomes for our ſafetie. We may alſo obſerue, that although all the wicked ſhould band and ioyne themſelves in league together to deſtroy vs; yet the Lord will eaſily finde a way how to deliuer vs out of their deuouring iawes. Beſides, we may note how needfull it is for vs to be deprived of all humane helpes, wherein wee often put vaine confidence, and that againſt Gods helpe: for being once blinded with proſperitie, we begin ſo to pride our ſelves in it, that we can giue God no audience. Hee muſt be ſaine therefore to remoue all impediments out of our way, to the end we may come to the true ſight of our pouertie: as it happened to the Iſraelites, who were ſtripped of all their ſucours, after Syria was once deſtroyed.

It is fit we ſhould now be left helpeleſſe, to bring vs to the true ſight of our owne weakeneſſe.

Verſ. 4. And in that day the glory of Iacob ſhall be impoueriſhed, and the fatneſſe of his fleſh ſhall be made leane.

5. And it ſhall be as when the harneſt man gathereth the corne, and reapeh the eares with his arme: and hee ſhall be as he that gathereth the eares in the valley of Rephaim.

ALTHOUGH hee had promiſed to ſpeake of Syria and Damascus, yet now he ioynes the Iſraelites with the Syrians: and the reaſon is, becauſe they were confederates in one and the ſame quarrell. The Syrians, to whom Iſaiab eſpecially directs his ſpeech, were euen as a firebrand to kindle the wrath of the Iſraelites, as hath been ſaid: but the Iſraelites were no leſſe guilty, and therefore iuſtly are they wrapped in the ſame afflictions, as if they had been yoked with them. It is vncertaine whether hee means all the cle& people, when he ſpeakes of Iacob; ſo as he ſhould comprehend the Tribe of Iudah alſo. Yet is it very likely it ſhould bee referred to the ten Tribes onely, who challenged this name vnto themſelves: ſo as hee calles them glorious; by way of deriſion, becauſe when they waxed proud of their ſtrength, multitude, and confederacies, they deſpiſed their brethren the Iewes. Whereas he threatens them afterward with leanneſſe, he doth it to taxe their inſolencie: as on the contrary the Prophets ſcorne and reproch them for being become fat. For their proſperitie made them proud, being puffed vp with the fruitfulnes of their country, euen as fat horſes, ouermuch pampered, are wont to kicke with the heele; which is the cauſe why Amos calls them fat kine: Amos 4. 1. How wanton and luſtie ſoever they were then, the Lord proteſts, that hee will take downe their fat, which cauſed them to be ſo glorious.

Amos 4. 1.

And it ſhall be.] By this ſimilitude he ſhewes how fearefull the iudgement ſhall be. Looke ſaith he, how reapers gather the corne into their armes, ſo ſhall this multitude (how great and mightie ſoever) be reaped by the enemies. And that he might not omit any thing, he addes, that after the harneſſe ſhall be ended, ſome looſe eares ſhall be gathered, which lay ſcattered here & there: as if he ſhould ſay, After the multitude ſhall be gathered in, & the land made bare, cu& as a field that is reaped, the remainder which ſhall be ſcattered, ſhall not therefore reſt in ſafetie. Moreover, hee vſeth this ſimilitude of the harneſſe, becauſe

the people were growne secure vpon trust of their great multitude : But as the reapers are not amazed at all when they see the corne very thicke ; so, saith he, the great multitude shall not disable the Lord from rooting them whollie out. We may in like maner referre this to the Assyrians ; but yet the sense will be y^e same, because they were Gods seruants to execute this vengeance. Wee neede not stand to debate much about y^e verb To gather, because it signifies nothing else but that the slaughter shall be like an harvest, which being once ended, others are permitted to glean the caves which lie scattered. For after that the tenne tribes had bin led captiues, the Assyrians gleaned vp the remnant also, when they vnderstood of their new deuices, 2. King. 17. 4. 5. He makes especial mention of Rephaim, because the Israclites were well acquainted with the fruitfulness of it.

Chap. 24. 13. Yet a gathering of grapes shall be left in it, as the shaking of an olive tree, two or three berries in the top of the utmost bowes, and foure or fise in the high branches of the fruit thereof, saith the Lord God of Israel.

HE had preciselie affirmed that nothing should remaine of the discomfiture; euen as if the name of the nation should be vtterlie defaced. Now he addes a consolation to assuage the bitterness of the slaughter. For he shewes y^e there shall some remaine, although the enemies determined to consume and destroy the vtterlie. Euen as a man neuer plucks his vine so cleane but there will some grape or cluster lie hidden vnder the leaues : Likewise as a man neuer shakes his olives so thorowlic but that some one will hang still in the top of the trees : so howsoeuer the enemies be enraged, and the wrath of God kindled, yet as he therein shewes himselfe a seuerer iudge, so will he shew himselfe gracious and mercifull, in reseruing a small number ; in not suffering the spoile of the enemies to fall vpon his cleft.

Whence we may gather, that his mercie will alwaies take place in the midst of his most fierce vengeance. For he speaks here of the children of Abraham, who albeit they were reuolted fro God, and had made themselues vnworthie of their adoption, yet did the goodnes of God overcome their malice. True it is they had deserued no such fauour, but yet must the covenant of the Lord remaine sure and inuiolable, so as the testimonie thereof appeareth in this remnant, although the people for their parts had abolished it whollie as much as lay in them. Which we ought diligentlie to obserue, that when we see no face of the Church at all, but that the faithfull seeme to be perished, wee should not thinke it is therefore rased out, because God is immutable, who hath promised that it shall stand for euer, Gen. 17. 7. There shall euer be some remaine then, although to outward appearance wee oftentimes behold the contrary.

Verf. 7. At that day shall a man looke to his maker, and his eies shall looke to the holie one of Israel.

Now he sets forth the fruit of this chastisement : and this is the second consolation, which should susteine the faithfull in their aduersities. For howsoeuer they felt nothing but the wrath of God ; yet were they to thinke that the Lord (who neuer forgets his owne) would still preferre his Church for euer : and withall, that the corrections should be profitable to his children. Having spoken then of the perpetuall of the Church, he also adds, that afterwards men shall looke vnto God, which is the most desirable good thing of all others. For when we returne vnto God, then the world, which was laid waste before, begins to be brought into his right frame againe. Therefore when we are estranged from lum, because none of vs repents willinglie, we can not be brought backe againe into the right way vnlesse he vse the spure and corrections to drue vs forward. Hereby then wee are admonished to beare our chastisements cheerefullie, seeing God vseth the same means to purge vs from a most deadlie apostasie. For to looke vnto God, is nothing else but (having once turned out of the way) to come into his fauor by turning againe vnto him, and to put our selues vnder his protection. What is the cause why men giue ouer themselues to all leaudnes ? Surely because they forget God. For where the true knowledge of God is, there is also reuerence of his Maiestie ioined with it : and wheresoeuer forgetfulness beareth sway, there contempt must needs reigne. Although this manner of speech appertaine properlie to faith, as if he should say, when the Israclites shall be once tamed by these sharp chastisements, they shall then feele by experience that there is no succour but in God alone ; in which sense he presentlie adds the word maker. True it was a detestable senselesnes that they rested not vpon that God only who had indued them with so many excellent gifts. The Prophet shewes then that they shall become wiser by being humbled vnder calamities and afflictions, and shall beginne to hope in him who had bound them vnto him by so many benefits.

He calles God their maker, not as in regard that he created all mankind, but in the same sense that he calles him the holie one of Israel. Although then that all me^e be created according to Gods image, yet Israel was properlie the worke of his hands, because they were his holy inheritance and chosen people. And this repetition is vsed to signifie the same thing according to the common custome of the Hebrue tongue. He calles God holie, not only because he is so in himselfe, but also in regard of the effect, for he sanctifies and chuseth to himselfe the children of Abraham : whence it follows, that the creation whereof he speaks, ought to be referred to spirituall regeneration, for so God is speciallie called the maker of Israel.

The second consolation.

Verf. 8.

Verſ. 8. And he ſhall not looke to the Altars, the workes of his owne hands; neither ſhall hee looke to thoſe things which his owne fingers haue made, as grones and images.

THIS expoſition declares more cleerely, that this looking, whereof he ſpake in the former verſe, is to be vnderſtood properly of faith and hope. For hee ſaith, that all falſe truſts ſhall vaniſh, when men begin once to hope in God: for the very truth is, no man be- holds the Lord aright, that forſakes not al his ſuperſtitious. And therefore we are here taught to take away all impediments if we will haue acceſſe vnto God: thoſe therefore doe fouly deceiue themſelues, who will ioync him with idols; as the Iewes once did, and as the Pa- piſts now doe: and note we alſo, that this vice hath not reigned for a day or two in the world, but alwaies. Let vs thē vtterly abandō all thoſe obſtacles, that fo reſting ourſelues vpon the only goodneſſe of our God, we may rightly and cleerely behold him, and put our whole confidence in his mercy.

Now that hee might more plainly ſhew his deteſtation, hee calles the falſe gods the worke of their hands: that the Iſraelites being aſhamed of their folly, might put away and rid their hands of ſuch a reprochfull imputation. Now he ſpares no words in deſcribing this ſinne, becauſe they were principally deſiled with it: as indeed there is no wickedneſſe more abominable in Gods ſight then ic. They had an infinite number of ſuperſtitious among them, and had ſet vp idols and altars in innumerable places; ſo as Iſaiah had iuſt occaſion to reprove and preſſe this ſinne home vpon them.

But ic may be obiected, that the Altar of Ieruſalem was alſo erected by men; why ſhould they not reiect that, as well as the reſt, to come vnto God? I anſwere, that this Altar differed very much from other Altars: for albeic ic were compoſed of lime and ſtone, and decked with gold and ſiluer, and made with mens hands as others were; yet ought they not to reſpect either the matter or workmanſhip, but God himſelfe which was the author of ic, at whoſe commandement this Altar was ſet vp. And therefore the eſſentiall forme (as you would ſay) which ic had receiued by the word of God, muſt be conſidered: and none account to be made of the reſt, becauſe God himſelfe was the maſter builder of ic. As for other Altars, howſoever they ſomewhat reſembled that at Ieruſalem; yet were they deteſtable, becauſe they had receiued no authority from Gods word. And the like reckoning may we make of all the inuentions of mans braine; let them haue what goodly appearance ſoever of holineſſe you will: for God cannot allow any thing but that which is conſecrated by his word.

Verſ. 9. In that day ſhall the Cities of their ſtrength be as the forſaking of boughes and branches, which they did forſake, becauſe of the children of Iſrael; and there ſhall be deſolation.

HE goes on ſtill with that which he began to ſpeake of touching the deſtruction of the inhabitants of the land. Now becauſe the Iſraelites thought themſelues ſafe in regard of their bulwarks and ſtrong Cities; he threatens that this ſhall ſtand them in no more ſtead, than if the enemies walked thorow deſert places. Whereas ſome thinke that Chorath and Azubah are the proper names of Cities, ic is farre fetched: I rather vnderſtand it that he ſpakes here of thornie or vntilled places: as if he ſhould ſay, Your defence of wals and ditches, ſhall ſerue you to no more purpoſe, then if you dwell among thornes and buſhes. I make no doubt but the particle Alber, ſtands here for a note of ſimilitude, and therefore I haue tranſlated ic, As: ſo that the Prophet ſhould ſay all with a breath (as ic were) that the people ſhall now be ſcattered by a fearefull flight, euen as God once draue out the Cananites before them. Thoſe which make this particle a relation, are conſtrained to ſupply ſomething, and to breake off the courſe of the ſpeech.

But the Prophet puts them in minde of an ancient example, to the end the Iſraelites might perceiue how vaine and deceiueable that defence is, which is oppoſed againſt the hand of God. It is a very grieuous reproch: for the Iſraelites conſidered not that God had giuen them this land to inherit, to the end they ſhould obey him: that he had therefore driuen the enemies out of ic, to put them in poſſeſſion: they had therefore made themſelues vnworthy of ſo great bountie by their owne vnthankfulneſſe. Being then deprived of ſuch a mercy, they iuſtly felt the difference betweene the preſent evils, and the former benefits which they once ioynoyed.

This text will be the eaſier to vnderſtand out of Mofes, whom the Prophets often follow: for in the promiſes, he ſaith thus in expreſſe termes; One of you ſhall chaſe a thouſand: and contrariwiſe in the threatenings; A thouſand of you ſhall be chaſed by one: Leu. 26. 8. Deut. 32. 30. Iohs. 13. 10. Euen as he had then ſo aſtoniſhed the Cananites, that they fled by and by before the Iſraelites: ſo alſo did hee puniſh the vnthankfulneſſe of the people, by leauiug them without power to reſiſt. Thus the Lord manifeſted his power two waies: firſt, in driuing out the Cananites: ſecondly, in taking vengeance vpon his people. The Prophet then in calling this ancient benefit to mind, doth therewithall vpbraid this vnthankfull and forgetfull people with their diſloyaltie, that ſo they might acknowledge their chaſtiſement to be iuſtly inflicted vpon them: as alſo that ic was from Gods own hand that they were thus afflicted by their enemies, to whom in times paſt themſelues were a terrour and aſtoniſhment.

Anſ.

God can allow of ſo- thing, but that which he hath conſecrated by his word.

gotten the God of thy saluation, and hast not remembered the God of thy strength: therefore shalt thou set pleasant plants, and shalt graffe strange vine branches.

HE shewes the cause why God handled the ten Tribes so severely, lest they should complaine that they suffered wrongfully, or were hardly dealt with. To be short, his meaning is to say, that all these afflictions are come vpon them, because they have wickedly contemned God. For their vnthankfulness was too too vile, and altogether vnexcusable; that hauing receiued so many benefits, they hold now prostitute their hopes, by relying vpon the helpe of idols and profane nations: as if they had neuer tasted the bountie of God in any thing. Indeede none of the vnbeleeuers being called to iudgement, shall be able to excuse themselves for not offering wrong to God in running after creatures. But the case was far otherwise with the Israelites, to whom God had manifested himselfe in such wise, that they ought to haue rested in his fauour alone, and to haue reiected all the corruptions that reigned in the world. lustly then are they condemned of ingratitude, in that they buried the matter of true confidence in forgetfulness. And to speake the truth, after God hath once caused vs to taste the sweetnesse of his fatherly goodnesse, if it take deepe roote in our hearts indeed, in cannot possibly come to passe, that we should finally let our hearts vpon the inordinate loue of creatures. Whence it followes, that those are very ingratfull, which trot hither and thither, not contenting themselves with God alone. for by this means they set nought by his inestimable bounty. Therefore it is that the Prophet expressly calles him the God of saluation, and the rocke of strength. The word Tsur signifies both the one and the other: for it was a most prodigious thing not to hold themselves faithfull vnto God, who had so oftentimes deliuered them, and that as it were by an outstretched arme.

Whereas hee addes, And hast not remembered: it serues for amplification; because hee closely taxeth them of wicked forgetfulness, in not considering how many fauours God had shewed them before. Thou shalt plant. Now followes the punishment; lest they should imagine this their vnthankfulness should scape scot-free; to wit, because they had forsaken the fountaine of all good things. For albeit they should take care how to liue, yet should they be consumed by penurie and famine: because the enemy shall spoile and waste whatsoever they haue gotten by their industrie. This place is taken out of Moses: for this curse among others is there pronounced. Deut. 28. 30. 39. Whence we may see, that the Prophets borrowed many things out of Moses, and are the true expositours of the Law; as I haue often shewed. He speaks of pleasant vines, and of branches brought from strange, because the greatnes of the losse should augment their sorrow.

Verf. 11. In the day shalt thou make thy plant to grow, and in the morning shalt thou make thy seede to flourish: but the harvest shall be gone in the day of possession, and there shall bee desperate sorrow.

THOU shalt make to grow.] He signifies a continuall husbandry employed about planting and sowing. Yet may we vnderstand it of the successe that comes of it: as if a vine newly planted, should immediately bring forth wine. This agrees with that which is presently added; where the morning is taken for the day: and thus it seemes he should speake of a sudden ripening; vnlesse any had rather refer it to diligence, because they were busie at worke by breake of day. There is some ambiguity in the words: for some turne it, The branch shall be gone in the day of affliction. But seeing the word Chalah, signifies Heritage, it should signifie properly (as I thinke) in this place, a gathering together: neither doe I see how the word Branch should agree. I confesse indeede that when they speake of vines, the word Harvest is vsed; but abusiuely. It might also be translated, Collecting; yet would I not obstinately stand to contend about these two words, because the sense will alwaies be one; provided that the foresaid word be taken for the gathering of fruits. Thus then the text will runne well; Although thou ceasest not from labour, holding thy selfe hard at it from morning to night: yet shalt thou gaine nothing by it, because the fruit shall wither of it selfe, by the shaking of the bowes; or, thy vines shall be spoiled.

Thus then by the figure Synecdoche, vnder the verbe To plant, hee comprehends a daily labour which husbandmen and vine-dressers take in the fields and vineyards. Such a labour must needs bee very irksome, and proceeds from the very curse of God. For if he that is destitute of possessions, be oftentimes banished out of his Country, hee will not be so much grieued as hee that inioyeth fruitfull lands, especially if he haue bestowed any long time in husbanding of them: the Lord then meant to execute his vengeance vpon the Israelites, because they had abused the abundance of the land, and let loose the raines vnto all excess. The like punishment is also threatend generally to all the wicked; to wit, that they shall rise early, and labour extreme'y; because it shall be without any fruit: whereas on the contrarie, those which rest vpon the Lord, are well assured to reape the certaine fruit of their labours, because the blessing of God accompanieth the worke of their hands. Reade Psalme 127. 2. and 128. 2.

ple ſhall make a ſound like the noiſe of mightie Waters.

Others expound Ab, Woe, as if it were a curſe: ſometimes it is uſed as a word of calling, as we haue ſeene heretofore. But as I thinke, it ſhould rather ſignifie Alas in this place: for he mournes for the calamitie which he foreſaw would befall Iſrael: be it that he doth it of a brotherlike affection, or that he thereby would pierce the deeper into the hearts of this ſenſeleſſe and blockiſh people. No queſtion but the Prophets feared the vengeance of God whereof they were the Heraulds, more then any other: and howſoeuer they ſharplie threatned the people as in regard of the perſon they ſuſtained, yet did they neuer ſo caſt off the affection of loue, but they alwayes had compaſſion of thoſe that ſhould periſh. Notwithſtanding the conſideration of the covenant which God had contracted with the ſeed of Abraham, was the cauſe of this: and we ſee that this affection was in S. Paul, who deſires to be accuſed for his brethren the Iewes, Rom. 9. 3. When Iſaiah then ſets the matter thus before his eyes, it could not be but that he was touched with extreme griefe. Now in that he ſets this deſtruction before the view of the Iſraelites as if he himſelfe beheld it, it is to confirme his threatening, as wee haue ſhewed elſewhere. The word multitude is ſet downe, becauſe the armie was gathered of many and diuers nations, whereof the Monarchy of the Aſſyrians was compoſed. By the ſimilitudes which he addeth afterwards, his meaning is only to amplifie his ſpeech: for he compares the enemies to a Sea or deluge which drownes the whole countrie.

Verſ. 13. The people ſhall make a ſound like the noiſe of many Waters: but God ſhall rebuke them, and they ſhall flee ſurre off, and ſhall be chaſed as the chaffe of the mountaines before the Wind, and as a rolling thing before the Whirlwinde.

Although he ſeemes to continue on the threatening which he began before, yet doth he now begin to comfort the faithfull, by repeating again the very ſame words with the former: as if he ſhould ſay, It muſt needs be that thoſe who haue forgotten God ſhould be chaſtiſed, and as good as ouerwhelmed for their wicked reuolt: but the Lord according to his wonted goodnes will repreſſe the ouermuch crueltie of the enemies; for hauing once ſerued himſelfe of their rough dealing, he will finde a meanes well enough to beate them backe and chaſe them away. See heere a ſingular conſolation, by which he meant to put the faithfull which remained in good hope. Now he ſpeakes not of the Iewes onlie, as the moſt haue imagined, for hitherto he hath directed his ſpeech vnto the ten Tribes: amongſt whom no doubt there were ſome that truly feared God; who had been left in a deſperate caſe if they had had no promiſe whercon to reſt.

By theſe ſimilitudes he deſcribes horrible ſtoormes & tempeſts: for when the holy Ghoſt would comfort the faithfull, he ſets theſe things before them which are wont moſt of all to terrifie and caſt downe their ſpirits: to the end we might learne that it is eaſie for the Lord to ſhal all the violence of tempeſts, be they neuer ſo furious. And looke how he hath the ſea, the winds, and tempeſts at his command, ſo eaſie can he curb the rage and violence of their enemies. Therefore he by and by after compares the Aſſyrians to ſtraw, or ſtubble: for howſoeuer their furie was terrible to the Iſraelites, yet the Prophet ſhewes notwithstanding that they are no more in Gods account then ſtraws or ruſhes: becauſe without any paines whatſoeuer he will ſcatter all their preparations. They were not then to iudge of their forces and power according to ſenſe. As oft therefore as wee ſee that the wicked haue gotten the bridle in their necks to runne vpon vs for our deſtruction, let vs arme our ſelues (as much as is poſſible) with this meditation: True it is that we ſee no matter of hope left, but God ſeeth a meanes readie to bring all powers that are raiſed vp againſt vs to nought. The word Gaius, ſignifieth a round thing which the wind driues eaſilie away.

A meditation of great vſe.

Verſ. 14. And loe, in the evening there is trouble: but afore the morning it is gone. This is the portion of them that ſpoile vs, and the lot of them that rob vs.

The ſenſe is this, looke how a tempeſt raiſed vp in the evening appears not in the morning if it be by and by appeaſed: ſo alſo ſhall it come to paſſe that immediatlie after the enemies ſhall be driuen away, you ſhall ſuddenlie eſpie (beyond all hope) a ſweer and quiet calme. The Prophet meant to ſet downe two things: firſt, that the rage of the enemies ſhall ſuddenlie fall vpon them: ſecondly, that the ſpoile which they ſhall make ſhall not laſt very long. For as the Aſſyrians roſe ſuddenlie againſt the Iſraelites, ſo alſo they were ſoone brought to nought. All the faithfull ought to gather great conſolation from this place as oft as they ſee things troubled and conſiſed, and fearefull changes to approach: for is all this ought elſe then a tempeſt which the Lord will eaſilie ſtill? Tyrants come vpon vs as waues and billowes, but the Lord will quicklie diſperſe their rage: let vs therefore patientlie wait for his help. For albeit he now and then ſuffers vs to be toſſed to and fro, yet will the Lord in the end bring vs to the hauen, and that euen thorow the miſt of all ſtoormes.

A Conſolation.

Now if the Prophet thus comforted a ſmall handfull of the remnant, we need not doubt but this promiſe alſo belongs vnto vs. For we in deed are but an handfull, and the poore Church is ſhut vp within very narrow boundes. But if we conſider the eſtate of his kingdome of Iſrael, how ſmall a number of Gods ſeruant was to be found there? Alas there was none almoſt that durſt open his mouth, ſo much was religion and godlinesse hated of all sorts. Although then that the Lord destroys the multitude of the wicked, yet will hee alwaies leaue some planke for his Church to saue her selfe from shipwracke, and to bring the small remnant of the poore faithfull, who are tossed with others as in the same ship, to a safe haven.

[This is the portion.] He speaks of the faithfull which were hid in the kingdom of Israel, and ioynes them to the body of the Church, although the members were scattered here and there; as it often comes to passe to the children of God. And here we may behold the end of the wicked, which haue persecuted vs. For howfoeuer we be exposed to their rage and furie, although they spoile, rob, and tread vs vnder foote, offering vs all the outrages in y^e world; yet shall they be but like vnto waves, which disperse themselves by their owne violence, and so vanish suddenly away. We ought to wait till the like befallles all such tyrants at this day, who miserably vex and afflict the Church, and handle the children of God vnkindly. Let this consolation then bee ingrauen in the table of our hearts, being fully assured that the like iudgment will ouertake them.

The end of persecuters.

THE XVIII. CHAPTER.

Verf. 1. Oh the land shadowing with wings, which is beyond the riser of Ethiopia.

Cannot affirme of what people Isaiah speaks; although it be apparent enough that it was some country bordering vpon Ethiopia. Some refer it to the whole land of Egypt; but without any good probability, seeing he makes a particular treatise thereof in the Chapter following: and therefore wee must vnderstand this as spoken to a people separate from the Egyptians. Many suppose that it should be the Troglodites; which yet seemes not very likely, because they had no familiaritie with other nations: for their speech (as the Cosmographers testifie), was rather a whistling or hissing, then any distinct sound of words. But as touching these here mentioned, it is plaine that they had both society and league with other nations. Yet is it vncertaine whether they conspired against the Iewes or no, or whether they ioyned with the Egyptians to make war vpon the Assyrians. If they were the open aduersaries of the Iewes, then Isaiah denounceth their punishment. But contrariwise, if they did feede the Iewes with deceitfull promises, he shewes that they were to expect no succour from them; because they did nothing but entertaine time with their frivolous messages. How euer it be, we may gather by that which he speaks of the nations neere adioyning, which he will name in this Chapter, in what place this people was seated; to wit, very neere vnto Egypt and Ethiopia. Vnlesse any had rather assume, that it is meant of part of the sea coast of Ethiopia, because it will appeare by the 37. Chapter of this booke, that the Assyrians had warre with the King of Ethiopia. Now when it is said, that this land makes a shadow with wings, it appears that the sea was nigh vnto it; so as it became rich in regard of much navigation. For small and poore regions cannot frequent nor occupie in strange Countries. His meaning is then, that this people vsed to traffique much by sea.

Verf. 2. Sending Ambassadors by the sea, euen in vessels of reedes vpon the waters, saying; Goe yee swift messengers, to a nation that is scattered abroad and spoiled, to a terrible people from their beginning euen hitherto; a nation by little and little, euen trodden vnder foot, whose land the floods haue spoiled.*

*Or, russet. On euery side.

This is properly to bee referred to the state of those times. It seemes that this people had solicited the Egyptians, or Syrians, to vex the Iewes: or else that the Assyrians vsed them to molest the Country of Iudea; or, that they were companions of the Egyptians, ioyning hand in hand to beate backe the Assyrians, lest they should wax too strong and mightie. We can affirme nothing but by way of coniecture, because all histories are silent in this behalfe. Seeing then that we want witnesses in this case, we must vse probable coniectures. It is very likely that these iournies were not taken in hand to goe to some place neere vnto them, but farre off. Whereas hee calles them ships of russet, wee are not to thinke it strange; because it appears by ancient histories, that the Egyptians commonly vsed such vessels by sea, in regard that Nilus is so steepe and dangerous to those that saile in it in some places, by reason of the height from whence the waters doe violently fall; (which they call Catadupes) that it is impossible to bring ships of wood that way, without breaking & renting them vpon the rocks. And therefore they are constrained to vse little pliable vessels. And lest the water should enter in and drown them, the histories say, that these ships were lined with pitch in the insides of them.

[Goe yee swift postes.] This place is obscure; yet will I follow that interpretation which I take to be most probable. The Prophet shewes the end of his propheticke; that is to say, why he foretold the destruction of this people; to wit, (if we take them for the sworne enemies of the Iewes) to bring ſome conſolation to the faithfull, which were miſerable ſcattered and diſperſed, that by receiving this good tidings, they might reioyce and giue thanks vnto God. But if any had rather ſay that the Iewes were drawne by this nation to an vnlawfull league, then this exhortation is by way of deriding them, ſo as he rebukes the folly of the elect people, who forſooke God to depend vpon vaine and friuolous ſuccors. For whereas ſome attribute theſe words vnto God, as if he ſhould command theſe nations inhabiting neere the ſea to haſten to the deſtruction of the Iewes: I ſee not how it ſhould agree to the ſenſe of the text. Neither is there any more appearance in that which others thinke, to wit, that by the words following the Prophet ſets forth the deſtruction of this obſcure and vnknowne people, becauſe that by the ſpoiled people hee meanes the Iewes, which ſhould be vexed and ſcattered after a ſtrange maner, ſo as no part amongst them whatſoeuer ſhould remaine ſafe.

He calles them a terrible nation, becauſe they ſhould be an aſtoniſhment to all thoſe that ſhould behold them, being diſfigured with ſuch horrible calamities. For I cannot approve of their iudgement who expound this of ſignes and wonders which the Lord ſhewed amongst the Iewes to make them feared of all: he hath regard rather to that place of Mofes where it is ſaid, The Lord ſhall make thee an aſtoniſhment and a wonder, Deut. 28. 28. 37: alſo, the nodding of the head, and a prouerb and deriſion is vsed in other places, Iere. 18. 16. & 19. 8. & 25. 18. He ſignifies a people then whoſe ſight ſhall be ſo fearfull, that they ſhall be an aſtoniſhment vnto all: and we know that as this was foretold, ſo alſo did it come to paſſe to the Iewes.

When it is ſaid on every ſide, it is as much as if one ſhould draw lines, and that they ſhould be ſowell knit together, as there ſhould no place be left emptic betwene them: or as if an husbandman made ſuch furrowes in his field, that he leaues not one clout of earth vturued vp, or broken. Thus was this people beaten downe and broken.

By the floods, he meanes a great armie of enemies, to wit, of the Aſſyrians. Now he alludes to that which he ſaid before in the 8. Chapter, verſ. 6. to wit, that the people being diſcontented with their little river Shilo, deſired rather roaring and violent waters. After then that they had called the forth for their ſuccor, they were ouerwhelmed by them as with a deluge. So that the cauſe of all this ill ſucceſſe was for that they contented not themſelues with Gods promiſes, but fought out ſtrange helps. If now then this commandement giuen to the ſwift poſts be taken as fro the perſon of God; thence we gather that he doth not alwaies aſſiſt his elect at the firſt brunt, but withholds his help till things be growne to a deſperate eſtate. For he ſends not a ioyfull and happie meſſage to thoſe that were in ſafetie, or to thoſe that were onlie lightlie touched with the rod, but to a nation ſpoyled and ſwollen vnder foote: yet in that he commands them to haſten, his meaning is, that the iudgement ſhall be ſudden and vnllooked for; ſo as light ſhall ſhine out of darknes (as it were) euen in a moment.

Verſ. 3. All ye the inhabitants of the world and dwellers in the earth ſhall ſee When he ſeteth vp a ſigne in the mountaines, and When he bloweth the trumpet, ye ſhall heare.

HE ſhewes that this worke of God ſhall be ſo excellent, that the Iewes ſhall not onlie perceiue it, but all the inhabitants of the world alſo. Theſe words which are put in the future tence, are by ſome tranſlated in the Imperatiue, according to the ſcripture phraſe: but it agrees beſt to take it in the time to come. As if he ſhould ſay, euen the people farre off ſhall be witneſſes of this calamitie: becauſe all ſhall behold the ſtandard, and ſhall heare trumpets ſounding thorowout the world. And hence it ſhall appeare, that this warre was not raiſed vp by men; but that God himſelfe will ſhew that he is the only author of it, and that by excellent witneſſes. When warres are made euery man diſcernes what is done openlie: but the greater part of men attribute both the beginnings and iſſues thereof vnto fortune. Iſaiah contrariwiſe ſhewes, that all theſe things ought to be attributed vnto God, becauſe he will plainly manifeſt his power by a new and extraordinary meanes: for he works ſo ſometime, that his hand is hidden, and his worke vnknowne vnto men. And ſometimes againe he ſhewes his power in ſuch wiſe that euery one is conſtrained to acknowledge it, and that is it which the Prophet meant to ſay in this place.

Verſ. 4. For ſo the Lord ſaid vnto me, I will reſt and behold in my tabernacle as the beate drying vp the raine, and as a cloud of dew in the beate of harneſt.

AFTER he hath threatened the deſtruction of the Ethiopians or of their neighbours; and hauing therewithall ſhewed that great conſolation ſhould thereby redound to the Iewes; or elſe by way of a ſhout hauing derided the fooliſh confidence which deceiued them: now he addes that God will ſo moderate theſe conſuſions, that he will in the end gather his choſen people vnto himſelfe. The particle Et, which I haue tranſlated Furthermore, is ſometime put for ſhewing the cauſe; ſometimes aduerſatiuelie. But the latter ſenſe in this place ſeemes to agree beſt: the reaſon is, becauſe the Prophet prevents a doubt which might otherwiſe haue greatly troubled the conſciences of the weak. For when wee ſee things in an vproate, there is a vaile forthwith ſpread as it were ouer our eyes, which takes away from vs the ſight of Gods prouidence: for the eſtate of this people whoſe deſtruction he threatens was ſuch, that this propheſie might ſeeme a fable or matter of ſcorne: for (as we may collect) there was no danger nor change to be expected.

Some referre this to the person of Isaiah, as if he satisfied himselfe, by depending vpon that which God had revealed vnto him: that is to say, as if hee had now quieted and settled his minde; which indeed wee ought to doe after we haue heard the voyce of God, waiting assuredly for the accomplishment of that which is foretold vs. As Abacuc; faith; I will stand in my watch-tower: Abac. 2. 1. But I rather think, that the Prophet recites that which the Lord had revealed vnto him, and that the Lord himselfe pronounceth this sentençe with his own mouth: as if he should say, I will rest; that is, I will hold me still and do nothing: for the word also signifies to See. Now hee which lookes earnestly, sees nothing; but onely content himselfe with beholding that hee sees with pleasure and delight.

Hereunto serues also the word Tabernacle, as if the Lord should rest himselfe on the roofoe of an house: as on the contrary, hee is said to ascend into his iudgement seate, when he auentureth himselfe vpon the wicked behauiours of the vnbeleuers: for these phrases of speech are fitted to our capacitie. Vnlesse any had rather affirme, that the Prophet alludes to the Sanctuarie: so as howsoeuer the maiestie of the Lord may seeme to be hidden for a time from this afflicted people, yet should not his rest be vnterly without fruit. The summe of all is this; that howsoeuer all things should be cōfounded, so as one might imagine that God would meddle no more with the gouernement of the world; yet doth he take his ease on this wise, as you would say of set purpose, euen as if hee were thus vp, and fallen asleepe in a chamber, minding to manifest the fruite of this his rest in due season.

As the heate drying vp.] Isaiah doth yet better expresse that which hee hath said before, by this similitude. Wee may apply it to the Prophets meaning two waies. First, as if God being awaked out of his sleepe, would shew such a gracious countenance as should reioyce the hearts of the faithfull, or, as if he would reuiue and quicken them by watering them with sweet showers: and thus the Prophet should shew a diuers successe. There may be also a close opposition, whereby he admonisheth, that when God shall be thought to take his ease, and behold things heere below as it were carelesly; that euen then hee may as it were sport himselfe in executing his iudgements. Truly because the two verses following are ioynced with this, it seemes that Isaiah would say; Howsoeuer God shewes not himselfe carefull after the maner of men, neither runnes with violent heat to take vengeance; yet hath he secret meanes in his hands to execute his iudgements, and yet in the meane while neuer stir his least finger. It may be also, that hee meant to shew that God would vse an extraordinary meane in rooting out this people. But that which I touched erewhile may suffice; to wit, that whilest men are besotted with prosperitie, and drunken in their delights, thinking that God hath no more to doe with them; euen then their destruction is at hand. The reason is, because God is able with his onely looke to cast downe all the forces and preparations of the whole world. And therefore he faith, he will be like to a faire bright day, and to the heate, drying vp the raine: secondly, to a warriish cloud, in the hottest day of summer. Now wee know that such a raine is very fit to ripen fruits; and that the heate coming after the raine, brings them forward and makes them swell; because it disperseth all the moisture that is in them, by the force of his heate.

This it is then which the Prophet meant to say, that howsoeuer many miseries and calamities be prepared for the reprobates, yet all things notwithstanding fallles out for a while as they would wish; so as they seeme the onely happy men in the world; no otherwise then if God meant to satisfie them to the full with the best of his benefits. But in conclusion, they shall finde that they were onely fatted vp, as Oxen for the slaughter: for they shall perish in an instant, and that euen then, when they seemed to bee come to the very top of their happinesse. Whence wee may learn, that we are not to iudge of Gods iudgements according to outward appearance: for when the wicked thinke themselues most secure, then their ruine & ouerthrow is at the doores. Thus doth he comfort the faithfull in very fit season, lest they should thinke the vnbeleuers more happy then themselues, because God winked at their faults: for albeit hee seemes to cocker them whom hee so forbears, yet will he quickly bring them to destruction.

Now we are to apply these things to these miserable and troublesome times wherein the persecuting tyrants of the Church haue their full swinge, abounding in all wealth; bringing their enterprises to passe no lesse then if all things were in their owne power: why so? because they surpasse all others in strength, counsell, and policie. But let vs know for certaine, that all these things are brought to passe by the determinate counsell of God, who is contented to let them go on forward with their deliberations, and lets them prosper: that so he may at the last destroy and vnterly cut them off. I am not ignorant that some others draw the words of the Prophet to another sense: but I hope, that whosoever shall wisely consider the whole context, will easily subscribe to mine exposition.

Verf. 5. For afore the harvest, when the flower is finished, and the fruit is ripening in the flower, then hee shall cut downe the branches with hookes; and shall take away, and cut off the boughes.

Word for word it is, For the presence of the harvest: but we must a little mitigate the sharpnesse of the words. The Prophets meaning is not obscure: for when harvest drawes neere, and that grapes be ripe, the wicked shall finde themselues disappointed, and that suddenly of their whole revenue; in hope wherof they meant to glad themselues. Thus hee goes on still with the same

The wicked are neere to their ruine then, when they thinke themselues most secure.

A consolation for the Church.

ſame matter, and confirms that which hee ſpake before by the former ſimilitudes; to wit, that the wicked are not ouerthrowne at the firſt, but ſloriſh for a time, and the Lord ſeemes to ſpare them: but when the harveſt is come, and that the vines haue once budded and bloſſomed ſo as the iuice begins to vter it ſelfe, then are the very branches cut vp by the rootes. So, when the wicked are neere vnto their ripenes, they ſhall not only be deprived of the fruit they expected, but ſhall be cut vp roote and rinde.

The Lord will giue this iſſue to wicked men, after he hath ſuffered them to inioy their delites for a time: for they ſhall be ſo rooted vp, that they ſhall neuer be able to reuiue, nor yet to be plaited in any fort. From hence then wee gather a ſingular conſolation, to wit, that when the Lord ſeemes to winke at the practiſes of the aduerſaries, he thereby tries our faith, but yet ſuffers not things to be guided by the vnbridled hand of blind fortune, as prophane men thinke. For he is in heauen as in his Tabernacle, and is reſident in his Church as in a poore tent or cotrage, yet ſo, as he will come forth when it ſhall be fit and conuenient time. Let vs thus enter into our conſciences, and lay all theſe things to our heart in priuie, that by this meanes wee may fortiſie our ſelues with ſo excellent a promiſe, by which only we may be enabled to overcome and ſurmount all temptations.

Let vs alſo thinke with our ſelues how the Lord ſhewes vs that he ſets forward and liſts vp the felicitie of the wicked, to the end his mercie toward his Church may be ſo much the more admired. For if he ſhould cut them off as corne before it be ripe, we ſhould neither ſo certainly nor clearly know his power nor his goodnes, as when he ſuffers them to grow vp to their full height, ſuffering them to be full eared and to ſloriſh, to the end that their owne weight may the ſooner overthrow them, or that he himſelfe may cut them vp with his ſickle as fat and full eares.

Verſ. 6. They ſhall be left together vnto the fowles of the mountaines, and to the beaſts of the earth: for the fowle ſhall ſommer vpon it, and every beaſt ſhall winter vpon it.

HE ſhewes that the wicked ſhal be reiected as a thing of nought: Iohn Baптиſt in like maner compares them to chaffe which is caſt out vpon the dunghill. And Iſaiah ſhewes, that they ſhall be left to the beaſts and birds, ſo as the birds ſhall make their neſts in the mids of them in ſommer, and the beaſts ſhall make their lodgings in them in the winter: as if he ſhould ſay, they ſhall not only be a reproch vnto men, but euen to beaſts alſo. Such then is the condition of the wicked, who thinke themſelues cockſure euen then when they liſt vp themſelues moſt againſt the poore Church. But the birds ſhall make their neſts vpon them on the one ſide, and they ſhall ſerue for houſes and food for the wilde beaſts on the other ſide: ſo as they ſhall not only be in worſe caſe then the meaneſt man in the world, but their condition ſhall be far inferior to that of the brute beaſts: for being expoſed to all ſhame and contempt, they ſhall manifeſt to the whole world that Gods prouidence is wonderfull.

Verſ. 7. At that time ſhall a preſent be brought vnto the Lord of hoſtes (a people that is ſcattered abroad, and ſpoiled, and of a terrible people from their beginning hither vnto, a nation by little and little euen trodden vnder foote, whoſe land the riuers haue ſpoiled to the place of the name of the Lord of hoſtes, euen the mount Zion.

^a Or, ten, or torne.

THE Prophet ſhewes againe wherefore he threatened the ruine of this prophane people. For in as much as all nations in a maner had conſpired the deſtruction of the Church, it ſhould ſeeme that her vter ſubuerſion was now come. The Lord ſhewes then that he will aſſiſt her in due ſeaſon; for had he not reſiſted ſuch enterpriſes, and reſpreſſed the plots of the enemies betimes, the Iewes might haue deſpaired: therefore hee lets it be knowe that he hath a care of his Church, ſo as howſoeuer it pleaſeth him to chaſtiſe her, yet ſhall the feeble his help in time conuenient. Yea, hee will oppoſe his ſtrength againſt the power of tyrants and of her enemies, leſt they ſhould overthrow her, and ſo attaine their long expected hopes. That the Iewes then might be emboldned to wait with patience, he not only ſeparates them from the Ethiopians, but aduertſeth them in like maner that God will moderate his iudgements for their ſaluation.

Now he alludes to the ſecond verſe of this Chapter, where wee ſaw the people of the Iewes termed by theſe names and titles. He vſeth the verb To bring, becauſe before this they ſhould be led away as captiues, ſo as it ſhould be no more lawfull for them to goe vp to the Temple, then for forcene nations. We muſt alſo note this word Rem: for his meaning is that the people ſhall be ſcattered, as if hee ſhould ſay, Howſoeuer you muſt bee brought to a ſmall number, and ſhall be but a poore remnant, yet ſhall this little portion that remains be offered vnto God for a ſacrifice.

From hence we are to gather a moſt fruitful doctrine, and exceeding fit for our time. We ſee the Church at this day to be almoſt paſt recouerie; for ſhe is ſcattered, oppreſſed, ouerwhelmed, and trodden downe on eue-ry ſide. What ought we to do in the mids of ſo great diſtreſſes? We muſt lay faſt hold vpon theſe and the like promiſes; and aſſure our ſelues that howſoeuer the world goe, yet God will defend and maintaine his Church. And albeit the be as a bodie torne in pieces, and ſcattered here and there, yet will he eaſily gather her ſcattered members together againe, by the worke of his ſpirit: for he will neuer ſuffer the remembrance of his name, nor the inuocation thereof to perish. The Lord will so worke, that of these peeces which lie now scattered here and there, there shall be a people made and gathered together. For it is easie with him to gather into one, those whom he knits together by the vniue of his Spirit, although they be diuided farre asunder one from another. Although then that we see the Church diminished, and some of her members cut off; yet shall some gift be referred out of her, to be presented and offered vnto the Lord.

To the place of the name] The Prophets are accustomed to vse this manner of speech often. For when they mention the seruite of God, they set it forth by externall exercises: as by altars, sacrifices, washings, and such like. Now the very truth is, that in regard the seruite of God is internall, it cannot be represented but by outward signes; whereby men refuse that they serue and worshippe God. Now he names the mount of Zion here chiefly, because this place was consecrated vnto God, as the place wherein he would haue sacrifices offered vnto him. For the Lord honoured this place aboue all others, in causing the doctrine of his word to come out thence, as we haue seene Chap. 2. 3. so that vnder this name we may rightly vnderstand the pure and sincere worship of God. To conclude, the Prophets describe not this seruite in such wise as it should be after Christ his coming; but such as it was in their own times: the reason is: because it was needfull for them to apply themselves to the capacite of the people whom they taught. Hence we may gather, that we appertaine not vnto the Church, vnlesse we be offered vnto God in sacrifice: Rom. 12. 1. & 15. 6. 2. Cor. 5. 15. Whosoeuer hee be the that challengeth any interest in God, let him offer himselfe vp such a sacrifice vnto him, and let him no longer liue vnto himselfe, but giue and consecrate himselfe vnto God. The meanes where by this is done, is by the sword of Gods word, (to wit, the Gospell) whereby Paul glorifieth that he sacrificed and offered vp men vnto God: as Rom. 15. 6. before alleaged.

By the place of the name of the Lord, he means not that the essence of God (of which we must not thinke in any wise as of a carnall or earthly substance) should be inclosed therein, as if he were tied to any one place: but because it was the place wherein the Lord was pleased to manifest testimonies of his power, and to be honoured and called vpon: where he also shewed his presence by his goodnesse and power; especially in regard of the weaknesse of the people, who otherwise could not comprehend his maiestie. And yet we are to note, that wee cannot be acceptable vnto God, vnlesse we be vnited vnto him in the same faith: that is to say, vnlesse we be knit together as the members of his Church. It is not needfull indeed that we should runne to Ierusalem or to mount Zion: for Zion is now spread ouer all the world, and is consecrated vnto God in generall. It remains then that we haue the same faith amongst vs, and that wee be ioyned and linked together by the band of loue. For if these be wanting in vs, then is there nothing in the midst of vs but pollution; neither haue we any thing that is holy and consecrated vnto vs.

Where faith and loue is wanting, there all things are vndercane vnto vs.

THE XIX. CHAPTER.

Vers. 1. The burden of Egypt. Behold the Lord rideth vpon a swift cloud, and shall come into Egypt, and the idols of Egypt shall be moued at his presence, and the heart of Egypt shall melt in the midst of her.

THE burden of Egypt.] Heere the Prophet prophesieth against Egypt, because she was y^e refuge vnto which the Iewes fled as soon as they saw any danger neere. For hauing forsaken the Lord, in whom they should haue reposed all their helpe, they looked for no succour at all, vnlesse they had it from the Egyptians. And therefore it behoued that this Nation also should be brought low: so as there should no riches nor strength remaine any longer in it to deceiue the Iewes withall: who (as long as Egypt flourished, because it was well peopled, and furnished with all prouisions) contemned the Lord; or at the least made verie slight reckoning of his promises. There was a twofold euill then in this matter: first, that whereas they should haue rested vpon God onely, they were puffed vp with this vaine confidence in Egypt: secondly, in that the Lord no sooner visited them with his rods, but they by and by fortified themselves with the power of the Egyptians against the same: as if they had beene able to ouercome his iudgements, by setting the arme of flesh against them: whereas they ought rather to haue taken occasion by them, to haue turned wholly vnto God. But the Prophet wil handle this matter more largely hereafter in the 30. and 31. Chapters.

Behold the Lord rideth] This manner of speech is found in other places of the Scripture, as in the 104. Psalm, verse 3. but onely in generall. But Isaiah applies it heere vnto this prophetic; because the Egyptians thought themselves so well fenced on euery side, that God could no way finde a gap open to enter into their Country. Hee derideth this their foolish querweening then, and against that, sets the high and mighty power of God, who is borne or carried vpon a swift cloud by means whereof, he will easly enter in vpon them, neither neither ſhall any of their ſtrengths or bulwarks be able to keepe them out. Now becauſe the riches of Egypt had not onely bewitched the Iewes, but their falſe religion alſo, therefore the Prophet doth in like manner take their ſottiſhneſſe in this behalfe; becauſe God would make all their helpe which they looked for from idols, to vaniſh and come to nought alſo. I forbore to ſpend time in ſhewing the vanitie of their childiſh conceits, which ſome haue dreamed of touching the idols of Egypt; to wit, that Chriſt made them fall downe when he fled thither in his infancy: for it deſerues no reſutation at all. Yet haue they abuſed this place to proue this goodly fiction, as alſo many places more like vnto it, and yet the Prophet meant no ſuch matter. For hee ſpeakes of that diſcomſure which the Aſſyrians gaue the Egyptians; ſhewing how it ought to be attributed vnto God, and not vnto fortune; as profane men are wont to doe. Hee ſhewes then that this is a iudgment of God: by whoſe hand all things that fall out in heauen and in earth, are guided and gouerned.

Now he telles them that their idols ſhall fall: that is to ſay, that they ſhall profit the Egyptians nothing at all, although they put their confidence in them, & thought to be in ſafetie vnder their protection. For it is not to be imagined how much this people was addicted vnto ſuperſtition; inſomuch as they worſhipped cats, oxen, crocodiles; yea onions and all kindes of plants. So as there was nothing to which they attributed not ſome diuinitie. His meaning is to ſay then, that the power of all theſe falſe gods which the Egyptians had taken for their patrons, ſhall fall to the ground. Hauing therefore ſhewed that the Egyptians doe reſt in vaine vpon their ſuperſtitious; hee therewithall alſo beates downe the proud imaginations which they had conceiued in regard of their earthly powers. By the word heart, he means the magnanimitie which ſhould quaile at the length, euen in the moſt valiant amongſt them: ſo as as they ſhould not dare to enterpriſe any thing, although they had all the furniture they could deſire. Thus he ſhewes that they ſhall make warre againſt God, who will ſo weaken their hearts ^{in them}, that they ſhall wax cowards, when the time comes that they muſt enter battel with ther enemies. Neither doth he ſay, that they ſhall be terrified onely; but he addes, that it ſhall be in the middeſt of all the Kingdome, where was the ſafeſt & quieteſt abiding; becauſe they were there far enough off from all aſſaults of the enemies. The faithfull had good occaſion to conſider well of this, when the Egyptians were at war: and wee alſo ought to behold the ſame in all mutations of Kingdomes, which proceeds from no other cauſe then the hand of God. If the hearts of thoſe, who are otherwiſe warlike perſons, and haue made great prooue of their valour, doe faile them, if their forces bee alſo feebled; all muſt be attributed to the iuſt vengeance of God.

Verſ. 2. And I will ſet the Egyptians againſt the Egyptians: ſo euery one ſhall fight againſt his brother, and euery one againſt his neighbour; Citie againſt Citie, and Kingdome againſt Kingdome.

HE here deſcribes in a more ſpeciall manner, with what calamitie God was determined to ſmite the Egyptians. In ſaying, that he will ſet the Egyptians together by the eares; he means ſuch ciuill diſſenſions which cauſe thoſe to be rent in ſunder, which ought to defend one another: which is the moſt hurtfull miſchiefe that can befall any Citie or people. Now it was needfull the Iewes ſhould be perſwaded that God (in whoſe hands the hearts of all men are) could make the Egyptians to be inflamed with hatred one againſt another, by a ſecret inſtinct, whereby they might bee brought to deſtroy themſelues, although they were more mightie then their enemies abroad. Hence wee learne, that the people neuer fall to be mutinous, but the Lord ſets them on to fight and make warre one with another: as if a man ſhould gather a companie of Fencers together into the market place. For hee ſets them agog to fight, and driues them forward to hurt, yea euen to kill one another. So then euen as we are to attribute it vnto God, when there is friendſhip and loue among Citizens: ſo alſo ought we to attribute it to his vengeance, when one of them riſeth vp againſt another, killing and murdering one another.

Ciuil diſſenſions the worſt calamitie that can befall a Common-wealth.

Ciuill diſſenſions fall not onely by chance, but Gods prouidence.

Now by way of amplification he addes that which is yet more horrible and prodigious, to wit, that thoſe who are knit together by parentage, ſhall band themſelues to deſtroy each other. If men be worſe then beaſts whē (in forgetting they are created of one and the ſame nature) they fight together: how much more is it a thing abhorring to nature, that brethren or kinſfolks ſhould deuoure one another? By how much the more monſtrous this is, ſo much the more ought wee to acknowledge it to be God his reuenging hand, & his fearefull iudgement vpon them. It ſeemes then that Iſaiah proceeds by degrees: for firſt of all he mentioneth the brother, ſecondly the neighbour, thirdly the Cities, and in the fourth place the Kingdomes. By Kingdomes, hee means the Prouinces into which Egypt was diuided, which the Greekes call Lordſhips, which word alſo they haue vſed in this place.

Verſ. 3. And the ſpirit of Egypt ſhall ſale in the middeſt of her, and will deſtroy their counſell, and they ſhall ſeeke at the Idoles, and at the ſorcerers, and at them that haue ſpirits of diuination, and at the ſoothſayers.*

*Or, yea, though they ſhould.

EVEN as the Prophet in the former verſes tooke heart and courage for the Egyptian; ans, so takes he from them now minds and spirits. These two things are exceeding necessarie for the defence of kingdomes; because whensoever they be taken away, there is no meanes left for vpholding of a State. Now the Egyptians thought themselves farre before all other nations, as touching the conceit they had of their owne wisdom: and proudly disdaind them as barbarians; thinking themselves to be the only learned, industrious, ciuill, courteous, and honest men of the world. For they bragged that they were the inuenters of learning, that Philosophie and Aitologie came from them; in a word, that Egypt was as it were the shop of all the liberali sciences. Therefore they could not imagin that wisdom and counsell should thus faile from amongst them; and doubtlesse if this prophesie had come to their view they would haue scorned it, thinking that the Sea should sooner lack water, and that the whole order of nature should be ouerturned, then that they which thought themselves so naturallie wise, should become fooles. Yet doth Isaiah boldly affirme it: for indeede, he spake not of his owne head, but hauing foretold that they should be stripped of their pride and arrogancie; the context requires that we vnderstand now that they should be smitten with amazednes, seeing both these faculties of the soule depended vpon the free gift of God.

The word Ruach in this place is taken for vnderstanding, or sharpnes of wit: which we ought diligently to note, because many deceiue themselves touching this word. The former sentence is yet better expressed by the word counsell: for thereby he shews whēce this abasement should proceed; truly from this, God would deprime them of counsell.

Yea though they should seeke.] This is an anticipation or cutting them off: for he preuents the objections which the Egyptians might make. Haue not wee gods to goe and aske counsell at? Are there not wise men, diuiners, and enchanters amongst vs? and makest thou so slight account of these? He affirms that none of these shall doe them any good, though they trust neuer so confidentlie in them, being puffed vp also with a vaine persuasion of their wisdom. I will not bestow much time about these names, wherein notwithstanding it seemes Isaiah proceeds on by degrees. For he names the gods, then the magicians, and next the diuiners and soothsayers.

Now they had their oracles, wherein they chieflie trusted: the magicians were inferior to them, albeit they had great authoritie amongst them. In the third place, when there was any question of things of small importance, then they asked counsell of the diuiners and soothsayers. And thus you see that the superstitious are so tossed vp and downe with vnquietnes, that nothing can content them. For as they are inconstant and variable vpon all occasions, so run they first to one shelter, and then to another; and in the meane while Satan by that meanes doth so cōfosen them, that in the beginning he represents vnto them some appearance of rest and quietnes, which they make account shall continue: but to no other end (as the sequell proueth) but to shew them soone after, that being farre off from their expectation, hee might vex and torment them so much the more; and constraine them still to be seeking of new hopes. From whence we learne, that the only way to haue true contentment of heart is to rest vpo God only. And no doubt but the Prophet condemnes these arts, as being farre remote from all reason. For God hath manifested all things which are necessarie to be knowne by those arts and sciences which he hath allowed, and would wee should vse. If any man will be wise beyond these, he must of necessitie haue the Diuell for his scholemaster.

The only way to attain true contentment.

Hee that walks plainly, walks safely.

Verf. 4. And I will deliuer the Egyptians into the hand of cruell Lords, and a mightie King shall rule over them, saith the Lord of hostes.

Now he shewes what should befall the Egyptians being once deprived of vnderstanding, and their courages being quailed, to wit, they were to expect nothing but bondage and slauerie. For a people being once destituted of vnderstanding and magnanimitie, needs must they become their owne overthrow, although no enimie else should assault them. So that the Lord is wont after this manner to reuenge himselfe vpon his enemies, depriving them of all meanes whereby to defend their liberties. I grant that the Prophet threatens a thing more grieuous, to wit, that the dominion whercof the Egyptians proudly bragged, should not only fall to the ground, but that they themselves also should be subdued vnder a sore slauerie & bondage. Now howsoeuer the word cruell be put in the singular number, yet notwithstanding hee saith in the plurall number that they shall be in subiection to Lords, which is much more comberome to beare, then if they should only obey one.

And a mightie King &c.] Hee means that the power of the tyrant vnder whom they shall be subdued shall be so great, that it shall be hard for them to recouer their libertie. Histories make mention of diuers changes which haue happened in many Countries, which yet could not be kept long by those which haue conquered them. For oftentimes the keeping of that which a man hath woon is more difficult, then the Conquest it selfe. But the Prophet tels vs that this estate shall nor easily be changed, for the seruitude of the Egyptians shall be of long continuance: the reason is, none shall dare to oppose nor make warre against so mightie a Conqueror. We may also vnderstand it thus, that Princes ouer a small people are more courteous and humane towards their subiects then those that are more puissant: who trusting vnto their greatnes, let loose the raines to doe whatsoever they list. For as they thinke, their power is inuincible; so do they giue libertie to themſelves to act whatſocuer their ſanctified diuines ſhew to. Whether of the two expoſitions we receiue, the ſumme will be this; That the Egyptians, who eſteemed themſelves in the fiſt ranke, and the moſt renowned among men, ſhall fall into the power of another; and ſhall be oppreſſed vnder an hard bondage; to wit, vnder a mighty King againſt whom, none ſhall dare to oppoſe himſelfe. By this we may ſee how great the folly of ſuch men is, who deſire a mighty King, that ruleth ouer many Countries; as alſo how iuſtly they are puniſhed for their ambition, which yet notwithstanding cannot be reformed, though ſo manie experiences do daily fall out in the world. France and Spaine boaſt at this day, that they are ſubiects to ſomightie Princes: but they ſhall ſeele to their ſmart, how profitable ſuch a falſe pretence of honor is to them. But we haue ſpoken of this matter before in another place: Chap. 8. 6, 7.

Verſ. 5. And the waters of the ſea ſhall ſuile, and the riuers ſhall be dried vp and waſted.

6. And the riuers ſhall goe farre away: the riuers of defence ſhall be emptied and dried vp: the reedes and flags ſhall be cut downe.

HE goes on with that which he began before; to wit, that the ſtrengthes in which the Egyptians kept themſelves ſo ſtrongly, and in ſuch ſecurity, ſhould auail them nothing at all. For they ſeemed to be impregnable, becauſe they were inuironed with the ſea, with the riuer Nilus, and with many ſtrong places: and the hiſtories teſtifie, that the paſſages whereby they entred into the Country, were very difficult, becauſe there was no mouth or entrance into Nilus: for which cauſe they could eaſily repulſe the ſhips which came to land there. Thus they gloried much in this goodly ſeate and place that was ſo ſtrong by nature: euen as the Venecians at this day, ſeeing themſelves ſo ſtrongly inuironed with deepe and long riuers, thinke themſelves altogether inuincible. But ſuch ſtrengthes and defences are vterly vnprofitable, when God is purpoſed to chaſtiſe vs. Hereunto ſerues that which hee addes touching their munitions. He alludes to the cauſes, which not onely let and hinder the ouerflowings of Nilus, but alſo kept the whole land: as if he ſhould ſay; You ſhall need no ſuch things, becauſe Nilus it ſelfe ſhall be dried vp.

But it is very certaine, that this riuer was neuer drawne dry; and yet hath the Prophet foretold nothing which was not fulfilled. We muſt therefore call to minde what wee haue ſaid in another place; to wit, that theſe deſolations are repreſented in liuely colours before vs, as well in regard of our dullneſſe, as alſo to ſet forth the thing performed (as it were) euen in our view. For it is very neceſſarie we ſhould haue ſuch a ſpectacle as might moue our ſpirits, and quicken vs vp to conſi-

der of the iudgements of God: which wee ſhould eaſily contemne, if by this means we were not prevented. Obſerue we then this pride of the Egyptians, who had abundance and diuers ſorts of riches; neuer imagining that it was poſſible for them to be humbled by ſo fearful a ruine. He mentions the reeds and flags, becauſe there was abundance of them; which ſeemed to ſundry purpoſes: velleſſe any had rather ſay, he meanes that the matthes and ponds ſhall be drie.

Verſ. 7. The graſſe in the riuer, and at the head of the riuers, and all that groweth by the riuer ſhall wither, and be ſtrumen away, and be no more.

AT the mouth. Others tranſlate, Riuers: but he vnderſtands it rather of the ſpring it ſelfe, which is ſeldome or neuer drawne dry; although it may fall out that floods and riuers may waxe dry. He takes the mouth then for the head of the riuer, which ſhall ſo dry vp, that no place in the Country ſhall be watered by it. And howſocuer the head of Nilus was very far off, yet is it not without cauſe, that the Prophet threatens that this riuer, ſi ſom whole ouerflowing the fertileſt almoſt of the whole land proceeded, ſhould be dried vp, euen to the very head and ſpring it ſelfe. For it ſeldome rained in this Country; but Nilus perſo med that office for them euery yeere and ſit ouerflowed but ſparingly; it preſaged want and famine. This is the reaſon why the Prophet threatening the druie of it threatens therein the barrenneſſe of the whole Country. And for this cauſe alſo he ſaith, that there ſhall be ſuch want euen in the head it ſelfe, from whence the waters ſhould flow forth, that the graſſe ſhall be dried vp.

Verſ. 8. The Fiſhers alſo ſhall mourne, and all they that caſt angle into the riuer ſhall lament; and they that ſpread their net vpon the waters, ſhall be weakened.

Iſaiah hath reſpect ſtill vnto the eſtate of Egypt. We haue ſhewed in the 16. Chapter, A note touching the vſuall courſe which the Prophets hold in their writings. verſ. 8. how the Prophets are wont to vſe theſe liuey deſcriptions: as when they prophete againſt any Country, they ſpecially mention that with which it moſt aboundeth, as alſo that for which it is moſt renowned. If it be a Country of vineyards, then they mention vines: if it abound with gold, they mention that alſo: if with ſiluer, then they ſpeake of ſiluer. So prophecyng here againſt Egypt, he ſpeakes of fiſhing; becauſe this region was wateriſh, and abounded with manie riuers.

I wil not reiect their tranſlation who tranſlate the verb Amal, To cut off; but the beſt interpretation is, They ſhall be weakened: for this anſwers to the ſorrow and grieue of which he ſpake before. Now we know that there were great numbers of fiſhers in this Country, which Defences ſerue vs to no vſe, when God is minded to correct vs. Nor the ſtrong man in his ſtrength.

which was not the least part of the riches of Egypt. When the Fishers then should be taken away (of which the Country was full) in which trade also consisted a great part of the riches of the Egyptians, it must needs follow that they should be much weakened. As for example, if draperie should be taken from a people, which are accustomed to liue vpon it, great pouertie must needs ensue. He therefore notes a wonderfull change of the whole Country.

Verf. 9. Moreover, they that worke in flaxe of diuers sorts, shall be confounded; and they that weaue nets.

As he spake before of their sorrow; so now he speaks of their hauie: because those who before liued well, and at their ease vpon this trade, should gaine nothing any longer by it. Now these occupations depend one vpon another, to wit, fishing and net making. And yet some doubt whether he speaks onely of net makers or no: for if we take the word Seriketh, for all exquisite linen, it is very likely that this is to be referred to those weavings which are the fairest when they are made of small & fine threed. We also know, that there are clothes of very great price made in Egypt. And it shall not be amisse to comprehend the garments of linen vnder the name of networke, or white nets: for these garments were of great price, in regard they were wouen with great difficultie. Thus then it should be a metaphorical maner of speech, vnder which the Prophet closely nips the dissolutenes of the Egyptians, who clothed themselues with lincen garments as if they had bene wrapped in nets. If we vnderstand it so, then the next verse coheres with it: and for mine owne part, I can not see how so exquisit and artificiall maner of weauing can belong to the trade of fishing. But if any had rather referre it to fishermen, the sense shall be, that all such as exercised the arte of fishing, and gained much thereby, should now be oppressed and ouerwhelmed with griefe. I thinke it is not needfull to translate the Hebrue word Seker, which the Prophet vseth, Nets, because the Etymologie of it sheweth it rather to signifye a trade by which much is gained.

Verf. 10. For their nets shall be broken, and all they that make ponds shall be heauie in heart.

Where great store of fish is they also haue great Pooles or litle fish-ponds to keepe them in: for were it not for them, the fishermen should be constrained to sell their fish for nothing. Besides that, they oftentimes cast their nets into the water and rake nothing. He therefore continues the former argument: for if fish can neither be taken, nor kept, the ponds shall serue to no purpose.

Verf. 11. Surely the Princes of Zoan

are fooles: the counsell of the wise counsellors of Pharaoh is become foolish: how say ye vnto Pharaoh, I am the sonne of the wise? I am the sonne of the ancient kings?

He here ioines wisdom and folie together very fitly: for it is vnpossible this persuasion should be plucked from men, but they will be wise, yea and so esteemed, although it be in despight of God himselfe. It is all one then as if he were of their opinion: when he calles them wise, whom by and by after he taxeth with grose folie. The Hebrue particle Ac, is sometimes aduersatiue: but because it seemes the Prophet sets himselfe against the Egyptians, I had rather translate it, surely, or certainly, or, now at the least: because he derides Pharaohs Counsellors, who of all others were the greatest fooles, and yet in the meane while tooke themselues, and would be reputed for the wisest men. Thus it is a kinde of exclamation, as if he should say, Where is this wisdom of Egypt become? What is become of these Counsellors which despised euery man? Why defend they not the Kingdome? Now is the time when their wisdom may be manifested. Wee see then how this serues for a confirmation and ratification of this present prophesie, for as much as it appears that the Prophet speaks not of things vnknowne, but hath the certentie of Egypts destruction apparent as it were before his eyes. Being follie perswaded then that he was authorized from God, he is bold to proclaime that all these Princes are but fooles, how wise foeuer they make themselves. In a word, the Prophet teacheth, that all their glorie who attribute to themselves the least dram of wisdom without God, is but follie, because it will be perceived to be so in the end, for when they shall come to triall, they will shew themselves no better then children.

I deny not but the Lord suffers them to bring many enterprises to passe, that they may get credit and fame among men: but he bestows them in the end, so as notwithstanding all their experience and ripenes of wit, they will shew themselves more fond then litle babes. Let vs be admonished then to pray for the spirit of counsell and vnderstanding of the Lord, and when we haue obtained it, let vs carefullie vse it in vprightnes with all modestie. For God resists mens wisdom, whē they attribute more to themselves then is meete: and such as too proudly aduance themselves doe well deserue to be punished for their follie. He therefore oft times makes them stand confounded, to the end men may know that their wisdom is nought else but a vanishing smoke. For there is no true wisdom but that which is grounded vpon the feare of God, which is the beginning of wisdom, as Salomon teacheth, Prou. 1.7. & 9. 10.

How say ye &c. He reproues Pharaohs counsellors for flattering of him, as parasites are wont to do now ad~~ays~~es to get y^e fauor of Princes: for all their flatteries tend to none other end; because they finde that the only readie way to get their ſuites, and to creepe into fauour. And thus among ſo many flatteries and lies, truth can finde no place at all among them. Now howſoeuer this is an ordinarie fault in the Courts of great Lords, yet here it the ſway, eſpecially among the Egyptians at that time: for they ſtood vpon their antiquitie, as being the moſt ancient of all nations beſides, boaſting, that they found out the arts and liberal ſciences. Now, if the common people had this good conceit of themſelves, how much more were their Kings infected therewith in reſpect of them?

There was a double boaiſting then; that is to ſay, of antiquitie and knowledge, both which Iſaiah reproves; and tells them, that neither of them ſhall doe them any good. Pharaoh gloried much of the antiquitie and wiſdome of his Nation, which was ſe peoples fault alſo as well as his; but he ſpeakes of the King eſpecially, as of the head, in whom this pride was more plainly perceived, then in the common people. But let vs beware how we brag of our anceſtors, as if we were borne to it by inheritance; no, let vs goe to heauen to finde wiſdome; and let vs aſke it of him that is author of it. As for antiquitie, it is a ſottiſh and vaine brag; and yet Princes are ſo hampered with this vice, that they could finde in their hearts to goe ſecke their race and beginning beyond the Moone, as they ſay: yea, they can verie hardly be diſſwaded from this vanitie. flatterers alſo helpe to augment this folly, who (as wee ſee) haue found out many pleaſant things touching the genealogies of Kings and Princes. For no muſicke ſounds more delectable in their eares, then when they are ſeparated from the common people; as if they were petty gods. But it often comes to paſſe, that whiles they be ſo buſie in ſeeking too curiouſly their grandfathers, and great grandfathers, that they make themſelves ridiculous by it, becauſe it comes to paſſe, that they finde themſelves deſcended from ſome handicrafts man, or trades man.

I haue heard a pleaſant ſtorie from ſome of good credit of the Emperour Maximilian, who (becauſe hee was wonderfull curious in ſeeking out his pedigree) a merry fellow perſwaded him that hee had found his genealogie in Noahs Arke. This wrought ſo vpon him, that neglecting and forgetting all other affaires, hee onely doted vpon this newes; in ſo much that hee would permit none to ſpeake with him; no not the Ambaſſadours which were come vnto him to deale in matters of importance. Every one wondered at this folly, and diſliked it in themſelves; yet none ſo hardy that durſt take in hand to counſell him. At the laſt his Cooke being bolder then the reſt (whom the Emperour vſed as a letter, and tooke pleaſure many times to heare him talke) hauing obtained leaue to ſpeake, ſaid to the Emperour; No man deſires the honour of your imperiall muſicke more then my ſelfe; but me thinkes it pleaſe you, this your great induſtrie to find out your pedigree, is neither profitable nor honourable. I now honour and reuerence your Maieſtie

(ſaid hee) as a god; but if you will ſtand ſo much vpon your title from Noahs Arke, then you and I muſt needs be cozins at the laſt; for we all came from thence. Maximilian was ſo moued with the ſpeech of this knauith ſoole, that he was then aſhamed he had gone ſo farre in the matter, although before, neither friends, counſellers, nor affaires could hold him backe from it; or he knew well that his name, which he meant to make more honourable then his anceſtors, ſhould be made leſſe honourable if they came once to the firſt originall, from whence Princes and ſubiects, noble and baſe, are all deſcended. But is not the folly of theſe men great, when ſooles and ſoilers can perceiue it? Yet this is no new vice, but it is rooted deepe in the ſpirits of the moſt men.

That we may auoid this cuill then, let vs learne to depend vpon God onely, and let vs prefer this grace of our adopiſe before all riches, nobilitie, & parentage. As touching the Kings of Egypt, they were indeede deſcended from moſt ancient Kings, who had reigned a long time; and this made them to ſwell thus with pride, euen as if wiſdome had bin borne in their houſe.

Vers. 12. Where are now thy wiſe men; that they may tell thee, or my know what the Lord of hoſtes hath determined againſt Egypt?

Although it be word for word; And they ſhall ſhew thee, and ſhall know: yet the claue ſhould bee thus reſolued, That they may ſhew thee, yea that they may know at the laſt. Which phraſe of ſpeech is very common among the Hebrewes. Now becauſe the Egyptians had their ſoothſaiers, they thought nothing ſo obſcure or ſecret, but they might haue ſufficient reſolution from them of it: for they went to aſke counſell as well in things of ſmall importance, as in great; and held whatſoeuer theſe men ſaid, as oracles. This vanitie the Prophet derides, ſaying; How will they thew you that which they know not? Hath God made them of his counſell? It is verie likely alſo that the art which they vſed in diuining, is heere condemned: for the art was not onely vnlawfull of it ſelfe, but enchantments and ſorceries were contained vnder it. There are three waies whereby we may know or foreſee things to come. The firſt and chiefteſt is, by the reuelation of the holy Ghoſt, who onely can reſolve vs: as alſo by the gift of prophecie, which is imparted but to a few: the ſecond, by Aſtronomie: the third, by coſterring of things already paſt, whence they haue beene accuſtomed to gather the definition of prudence. As touching the knowledge of the ſtares, a man may at ſome times come to the diſcerning of certaine things, by their ſituation and coniuſion; to wit, famins, fruitful and vnfruitfull ſeaſons, the peſtilence, and ſuch like: yet this is vncertaine, becauſe it hath its ground vpon coniecture onely. Reſpect therefore muſt alwaies be had herein, what proportion the flarres haue with these inferior places. For mens actions are not governed by them as a sort of sooth and deceitfull Astrologians thinke, of whom there are multitudes at this day that insinuate themselves into the fauour both of Princes and subiects, as if they had the knowledge of all things both present and to come in their sleepe. But such fellows are mere coseners, who beguile men by their illusions, and resemble those of whom the Prophet speaks in this place: and yet Princes giue care vnto them, reuerencing them as if they were gods. Truly they are well worthe to be so abused; and it is also a iust punishment vpon them for their curiositie.

These goodly diuiners forsooth doe likewise brag that they vnderstand the arte Magick, wherein the Egyptians were very skillfull; but thereunto they also adde things that are worse and much more detestable, to wit, coniuurations and inuocations vpon diuels, which is the most hatefull and hurtfull thing that a man can either conceiue or vtter. The Lord curseth such coniectures and customes of diuining; neither can it be but the issue and euent thereof will be most wofull, and full of confusion.

If these things were condemned in the Egyptians, how much more do they deserue to be condemned in those who throwd themselves vnder the name and worship of God? It is a wonder me thinks that those who otherwise are both wittie and well learned should suffer themselves to be so grosely abused by such impostures, as if they were vtterlie deprived both of wit and iudgement: but it is iust with God thus to auenge himselfe vpon the ingratitude and vnthankfulness of men. Truly so farre forth as we may iudge of things to come by that which is past, which also wee haue obserued and knowne by vse and experience in things, which is best of all; this in it selfe can not be disliked: yet I would haue no man imagin that any certencie can be gathered from hence of that which is to come, because the matter alway hangs vpon coniecture. Notwithstanding Isaiah doth professedlie set himselfe against this subtletie, which men account a great vertue; not that it is euill in it selfe; but because such a wittie and subtle fellow is hardlie to be found, that with this his knowledge is not also confident to haue at his fingers ends whatsoever is worthe and necessarie to be knowne. And thus they set light by the secret prouidence of God, as if nothing were hidden from them.

There is yet another vice besides: that is, they affect rather a kinde of subtletie & iugling tricks, then true wisdom in deed. But Isaiah especiallie taxeth this pride which is in men of great wits, who by their owne reason will presume to measure the euents of things, as if (they) and not the Lord had not the gouernment of the whole world in his hand: therefore against their diuinations hee opposeth the heauenly decree. Hence we may gather how siclie Ifoerates said that Gods felicitie is powerfull and mightie in deed, but that our wisdom is so likewise. The Apothegme of this elegant Orator seemes a goodly one at the first blith: but seeing he takes wisdom and prudence from God to giue it vnto mortall men, such a parting of stakes is no lesse fortiff then wicked. For what blasphemie is it to attribute a prouider counsell vnto men, & only leaue to the Lord an happie fortune? If any now dare leaue those means by which the Lord doth instruct vs, to haue recourse to the impostures of the diuell, truly such a one is most worthe to be deceiued with shame and great dishonour, for he seekes the remedies which are not, and despiseth those which God offers him.

Those that seeke to coniuurers, are most worthe to be confounded with shame and dishonor.

Vers. 13. The Princes of Zoan are become fooles: the Princes of Noph are deceiued, they haue deceiued Egypt, euen the corners of the tribes thereof.

Zoan was one of the chiefe Cities of Egypt: Noph was also very much renowned: but we can not certainly iudge what Cities they were, vntill any shall take it to be Alexandria, the antiquitie and wealth whereof may be gathered from many places of the scripture. Whereby also their error is refuted, who say, that Alexander the Great built it. For albeit it was often laid waste before, yet he neuer built it vp againe whollie, but only repaired it. Now it appeeres by the third Chapter of Nahum vers. 8. that it was ouce a free Citie, and had league with the Egyptians, being as greatlie renowned as any Citie in the world. He rightlie affirms then that the beginning of her destruction came because of her folly. For the chiefe strength of a common-wealth or of a kingdome consists in counsell, and wisdom, without which, neither riches, nor multitude of men do profit any thing.

Wherein the chiefe strength of a common-wealth consists.

I take this word Angulum, which signifies a corner, by way of similitude for the principall part of the building whereupon the whole weight resteth: so that I had rather reade it in y^e nominatiue case then in the accusatiue, because it should be referred, as I take it, to these wise men, vpon whom the Egyptians relied as securely, as though no mishap could possiblie befall them. But Isaiah tels them that this leaning-stock is too weak, because the resting ouer-confidentlie vpon their counsels was the destruction of Egypt. Therefore after a taunting maner hee condemnes this deceitfull wisdom, which in deede rather deserues the title of vanitie and folly, because it is separate from the feare of God. For men not only abuse this excellent gift of God, but they are also puffed vp with vaine ambition and subtletie, which pleaseth them farre better then true wisdom. Besides, there is also a diuellish surie in them, for they quite suppress the prouidence of God, referring all these euents whatsoever to the capacite of their owne braine.

This is the cause why the scripture cries out so often against such wise men, shewing all their wit to be mere madnes. For they take that vpon them which belongs to God, whereby whereby they commit horrible and intolerable ſacrilege. We neede not recituaile then if the Lord thew fearefull examples againſt ſuch wiſards For how ſoever they be ingenious and quicke witted, yet they ſtumble and miſſe the marke euen in ſmall matters, caſting themſelues into ſuch great dangers, as a ſimple clowne or artiſicer could haue eaſily auoided and foreſcene. Let this be a warning vnto vs leſt we waxe proud in heart, in attributing ſome praife of wiſdome to our ſelues. If ſo be wee haue any prudence and dexteritie in vs, let vs wholly refer it to the free liberality of God, and keepe our ſelues within the rule of modeſtie and ſobrietie. For if we make the Lord the ſtay of our wiſdome, wee haue a ſure corner ſtone, which can neuer be beaten downe, nor ouerthrowne.

The ſureſt corner ſtone.

Verſ. 14. The Lord hath mingled among them the ſpirits of errors: and they haue cauſed Egypt to erre in euery worke thereof, as a drunken man erreth in his vomit.

BECAUSE it was incredible, and vnexpected, that the leaders of ſo wiſe and polittike a people ſhould overthrow the Country by their folly, therefore the Prophet attributes the cauſe of it to the iudgements of God; to the end the Iewes ſhould not be as it were hoodwinked in ſo excellent and memorable an example. For prophane men are wont to attribute Gods iudgements to Fortune, when any thing that is new and vnlooked for fallies out. now he ſpeakes by way of ſimilitude: as if hee ſhould ſay, euen as wine is powred into a cup or glaſſe; ſo will the Lord make the wiſe men drunke, by powring the ſpirits of quidiſſe into them, that being at their wits end, & becoming ſenſeleſſe, they may be made vnable either to ſay or doe any thing rightly. The cauſe why they deceiued Egypt then was, becauſe themſelues were deceiued firſt. And in that the Egyptians ſuffered themſelues to be ſo abuſed, and were not able to keepe themſelues from it; therein may we ſee the iudgement of God vpon them.

How God is ſaid to deprive men of wiſedome and counſell.

And yet Iſaiah makes not God ſo the author of this their ſenſeleſſe; as if the Egyptians might haue laid the blame vpon him. But thus ſtands the caſe; men of themſelues haue neither vnderſtanding nor iudgement; for whence comes wiſdome but from the Spirit of God, which is the onely fountaine of light, vnderſtanding, and truth? Now if the Lord takes this his Spirit from vs, what haue we to charge him withall? Hee is bound to vs no way at all: and in that he is liberall in giuing to men, it proceeds from his meeke fauour. So then when ſoever hee ſmites mens hearts with the ſpirits of quidiſſe and error, he doth it alwaies vpon iuſt cauſes, how ſoever (I grant) they may be hidden from vs. But for the moſt part he puniſheth the wicked, who haue liſted vp themſelues againſt him with this blindneſſe: as it happened to the Egyptians, who being ſwollen with an opinion of their owne wiſdome, were ready to burſt with pride, & deſpiſed all in regard of themſelues. It is a ſuperfluous matter then to diſpute of predeſtination in this place, ſeeing the Lord puniſheth them for a notorious vice. Wherefore when hee blindes or giues them vp, hee cannot be accuſed of crueltie; for it is a juſt chaſtiſement of their rebellion and wickedneſſe: neither can he which puniſheth mens iniquities be called the author of euill.

Let vs now ſhew after what manner God inflicteth this puniſhment vpon them. He deli- How God works iuſtly by iuſt instruments. uers them vp to Satan. who effects this: for hee it is properly who ſowes the ſpirit of error and frowardneſſe in mens hearts; but becauſe hee acts nothing but at Gods commandement, it is ſaid, that God doth that, which Satan indeed doth. For where it is commonly ſaid, This or that is done by Gods permiſſion nothing is more fruſtulous. The Prophet expreſſeth yet more; to wit, that this puniſhment was ſent of God beſauie hee is a juſt Iudge. For hee works by Satan as a Iudge doth by the executioner, and iuſtly puniſheth thoſe that haue offended him: as we reade in the booke of the Kings; Satan then preſents himſelfe before God, and aſkes leaue to deceiue the Prophets of Aſſyria: his request being granted, he executes Gods commandement: for of himſelfe hee was able to doe nothing. 1. King. 22. 21. We neede not heape vp many teſtimonies of Scripture; the thing it ſelfe is manifeſt enough.

In that hee addes, they were deceiued by their counſellers, he therein ſets forth the iudgement of God in the ſecond manner. For it might well be, that although the Princes had beene wiſeſſe, much like to men drunke, that the people neuertheleſſe were ſober and offſound iudgement: but hee alſo ſaith, that the ſeducers ſhould obtaine the efficacy of error to deceiue the people alſo. Thus you ſee a twofold iudgement of God in this place, both againſt the ſeducers, and the ſeduced. By vomiting, hee means a beaſtly kinde of drunkeſſe, adding it by way of amplification, ſhewing, that they are not drunken after an ordinarie manner, ſome wit remaining ſill in them; but that they were drunke like ſwine.

Verſ. 15: Neither ſhall there be any worke in Egypt which the head may doe, nor the taile, the branch nor the ruſh.

THIS is the conſequence of the former ſentence: for his meaning is, that there ſhall be ſuch a brutiſh blockiſhneſſe in all the Egyptians, that whatſoever they enterpriſe, ſhall vaniſh away and come to nothing. This muſt needs befall them who are deſtitute of counſell, and it is a juſt puniſhment of our pride and ouerweening. The Prophet then meant to note out the euent and effect; to ſhew that all things ſhould haue woſull ſucceſſes. And in menacing the head and taile, he ſignifies thereby, that all eſtates, from the higheſt to the loweſt, ſhall be deſtitute of counſell; ſo as they ſhall be able to doe nothing thing to the purpose: vnlesse any had rather vnderstand it as touching the manner of the proceeding of their actions. Let vs learne from hence, that the beginning and end of all things depends vpon God only, of whom we must aske counsell, wisdom, and a prosperous successe in all our busines: vnlesse we meane to haue things succeed with vs, as they did with the Egyptians.

Verf. 16. In that day shall Egypt be like Women; for it shall bee afraid and feare because of the moving of the hand of the Lord of hosts, which he shaketh ouer it.

HE repeates that againe which he had said before, to wit, that the Egyptians should haue no strength at all. Some thinke the Prophet alludes to a womanish behauiour, wherewith the Historiographers haue taxed the Egyptians: which was this, all order being peruerted, women managed the publike affaires, and men kept the houle, and performed the offices that belonged to women. It may be Isaiah aimed at this. But all being well considered, this coniecture can not be currant, because he threatens a iudgement heere which should bring men into a wonderfull mannering. If he should speake of their accustomed behauiour, it should appertaine nothing at all to y^e matter in hand: neither doth he reprove the Egyptians for their womanish hearts, but rather tels them they shall be so terrified, that they shall become timorous like women. For they not only esteemed of themselves as of a warlike people, able to wage battaile, but would take it in hand themselves without any proouocation thereunto, and were also helpfull vnto other nations. For wee see that many prophane authors tell sundrie things of the fricts of the Egyptians, and stand much vpon their commendation. Howfoener then they were more nice and delicate then any other people, yet they were desirous to be esteemed a valarous and warlike people.

But now in so sudden a change we may see an admirable iudgement of God. And therefore he addes that the shaking of the Lords hand shall be the cause of this feare: by which words he shewes that the Lord will order and take all this warre in hand, so as the Egyptians shall neuer be able to stand, in regard they shall not haue to doe with men, but with God himselfe. Now this which Isaiah pronounceth against Egypt ought also to be applied to other nations: for when troubles arise, and warres are proclaimed, the iudgement of God must be acknowledged therein if men seee cowards and faint-hearted. For wee see the most warlike men sometimes to giue place, shewing themselves more delicate then women: yea, to be ouercome with little or no power, when God once smites their hearts with trembling.

Verf. 17. And the land of Iudab shall be a feare vnto Egypt, every one that maketh mention of it shall be afraid thereof, because of the counsell of the Lord of hosts, which he hath determined vpon it.

SOME expound it simple, that the land of Iudab shall be a wonderment to the Egyptians as well as other nations; comparing this place with Chap. 18. 2. 7. where it is said, You shall be an astonishment, &c. But I thinke the Prophets meaning is otherwise in this place: for his purpose is to shew the cause why the Lord will shew such an example against the Egyptians, to wit, because they had been the occasion of the destruction of the Iewes. For they had turned them from the confidence which they ought to haue had in God: it being the custome of Princes to sollicite their neighbours, and offering them help, to the end they may vse them afterward in the like case. But God had forbidden the Iewes to goe downe into Egypt for any succour, Deut. 17. 16. Yet did this wretched people chuse rather to yeeld to the solicitations of the Infidels which offered themselves vnto them, then to God: they are chastised therefore very iustly. Neither did the Egyptians escape vnpunished, because they had giuen them occasion of incredulitie and distrust: for they were so sharplie chastised that they quaked for feare as oft as they remembered the Iewes.

We may gather a very profitable doctrine from hence, to wit, that all such which shall alienate the Church from the true seruice of God, and from trusting in his help, hauing giuen them offence either by fearing, or counselling them, or by any allurements whatsoever, shall be punished and that seuerely. The Prophets words are as much in effect then, as if one should say, That the very looke of a woman will make him to blush which hath entised her to leaudnes, when the filthines of the fact shall come to light; and when God the auenger of the marriage knot shall appeare.

Such as shall be so wickedly minded as to withdraw Gods children from his seruice, or from trusting in him, shall be punished seuerely.

Verf. 18. And in that day shall five Cities in the land of Egypt speake the language of Canaan, and shall sweare by the Lord of hosts: one shall be called the Citie of destruction.

HAVING threatened the Egyptians, and laid forth the cause of Gods iudgements, he now comforts them, and promiseth them mercie: for he shewes that all of them in a manner shall be restored, and shall recouer a prosperous and flourishing estate againe. For of fixe Cities, saith he, five shall be saued, so as one only shall perith. He had before threatened an horrible iudgement to fall vpon the whole kingdom, so as if any shall consider the former prophesie well, he can comprehend nothing therein but a state vtterlie past recouerie. He promiseth then that they shall be restored by a speciell fauour of God, so that this is to be taken as an increase of the Churches.

Churches reſtauration, or as a full meaſure of Gods grace after the redeemer is ſent.

The manner of ſpeech is ſomewhat obſcure: but if we examine it well, there is little or no difficultie at all in the ſenſe. For his meaning is, that the ſix part of the Cities ſhall onely periſh, and that the reſt ſhall continue ſafe. The moſt difficultie is in the word Haheres: ſome read it Haherez; that is to ſay, of the Sunne: but they deceiue themſelves by taking one letter for another. Thoſe who expound it of the Sunne, thinke that the Prophet ſpoke of Helopolis: but it ſutes not well with the ſcope of the text: becauſe hee' not onely promiſeth that ſix Cities ſhall bee reſtored (for that had been no great matter) but ſaith in generall, that of ſixe townes or cities, ſixe ſhall remaine vntouched: and doubtleſſe there were manie Cities in Egypt.

Let paſſe the fables of the old writers, and of thoſe who haue affirmed, that it contained twenty thouſand Cities. Yet it muſt not be denied, but there were a great number in a Country ſo renowned and well peopled; in a Kingdome that flouriſhed as it did, and was ſo frequented; and in ſo ſweete and well tempered an aire. Let vs put the caſe then, that there were a thouſand Cities, or a few more. Hee ſaith, that the ſix part onely ſhall periſh, and that the reſt ſhall be reſtored: ſo as the number of the deſtroyed, ſhall bee little in compariſon. Now it appeares ſufficiently by that which followes anon after, that this reſtauration is to be vnderſtood of the worſhip and ſeruiſe of God.

By the word lip, hee vnderſtands the ſongue; taking a part for the whole: meaning thereby, to ſhew the agreement that the Egyptians ſhould haue with the people of God, and the faith whereby they ſhould make profeſſion of his name. By the ſongue, hee alſo notes out by a figuratiue maner of ſpeech, a confeſſion. For in regard there was but one tongue onely which acknowledged and called vpon the true God, to wit, of this people that dwelt in the land of Canaan; it thereby appeares ſufficiently, that by this word ſongue, we muſt alſo vnderſtand their conſent in religion. To ſpeake the ſame or diuers language, whereby either agreement or diſcord are ſignified; are phraſes of ſpeech very frequent in the Scripture. But let vs obſerue that euery conſent is not ſufficient: for example; if men ſhould agree together to retaine a worſhip of their owne deuiling and approbation, ought they not to come and conſent to that truth which was reuealed to the fathers? Neither doth he onely ſay, that the Egyptians ſhould ſpeak one and the ſame language; but the language of Canaan: for they were to change their ſpeech, & to vſe y which God had ſanctified: not that the pronunciation of this language was more holy; but it is commended, becauſe it contains the doctrine of truth. We are to obſerue this diligently, to the end wee may learne the true manner of conſenting. We ought to ſeek agreement by all means; but let vs beware that the conditions be good whereby it is procured: for it is not lawfull to ſeek a meane betweene both, as the deſtroyers of true religion doe, which yet would be taken for makers of pacifications. Away with ſuch light and double tongues; let the truth be retained, which hath no other foundation but the word of God. Let them that draw neere to it, ſpeake with vs: and whoſoever falſifieth that, let him auoid, and chuſe a language ſitting his owne humour: but let vs continue firme and conſtant in this truth. The Egyptians then cannot ſpeake the language of Canaan, vnleſſe they firſt of all forſake their owne; that is to ſay, all ſuperſtitions.

Some refer this to Protemius, his time, but without any good ground: becauſe wee may gather from the verſes following, that the Prophet ſpeakes of the pure religion and true worſhip of God. And firſt of all vnder the figure Synecdoche, hee teacheth that the ſpeech ſhall be holy, taking one onely kinde thereof; to wit, that they ſhall profeſſe themſelves to be Gods ſeruants, by ſwearing by his name. It may be read, They ſhall ſwear in the Lord, or, by the Lords name; becauſe the letter Lamed, often ſignifies By. If we reade it, In the Lord; the ſenſe will be, that they ſhould promiſe to obey him, and that with a ſolemne oath; as when a nation takes an oath of allegiance to their Prince. And it is all one as if he had ſaid; they ſhall ſubmit themſelves vnder the power of God, and yeelde themſelves vnder his government. But in regard the other reading is more generally receiued, I alſo the more willingly allow of it. For ſeeing an oath is a part of Gods worſhip, the whole is hereby ſignified, by taking a part for the whole. To ſwear alſo by the name of God, is often taken to beare witneſſe that hee is the true God.

His meaning is in a word, that they ſhall ſoundly giue their names to Chriſt. Hence we may gather, that wee muſt make an open profeſſion of our faith; if we meane to yeeld God his true ſeruiſe; and if any will keepe his faith ſhut vp in his heart, ſuch a one ſhall be ſure to haue but a cold opinion in ſtead of faith; becauſe true faith brings forth a franke confeſſion, and ſo inflames vs inwardly, that we ſhall neither wil nor chuſe, but make that knowne to others which we carry in the cloſet of our hearts. Every knee ſhall bow before mee, and euery tongue ſhall ſwear by my name, ſaith the Lord; Iſai. 45. 23. Where faith is then, there ought alſo to be the outward worſhip & the confeſſion of the mouth: Rom. 10. 9, 10. Wee muſt in like maner obſerue, that the things which appertaine to Gods ſeruiſe, ought not to be applied to profane vſes: it is the profanation of an oath then, to ſwear by any other thing then by the Lord. For it is written, Thou ſhalt ſwear by my name: Deut. 6. 13. Doe wee not contemne and deſile his holy name, if wee mixe Saints or any other creature in our oathes? Let vs note here alſo with what reuence we ought to take an oath: for if wee thereby make profeſſion of Gods honour, ought wee not to come thereunto with feare and humility? Afterwards, where he ſaith in the end of the verse, that every sixth Citie shall be destroyed, the meaning is, that all such as turne not vnto God to serue him shall perish, without hope of restitution: this is the reason why he opposeth the Citie of Egypt which should begin to acknowledge God, against those that are appointed to confusion. Where the seruice of God is wanting then, there we can expect nothing but utter ruin: for the word Herei signifies cursing and execration, after which follows ruin and eternall death.

How we ought to ſwear.

We ought to labour for a conſent in religion, 21.

Vers. 19. In that day shall the Altar of the Lord be in the midst of the land of Egypt, and a pillar by the border thereof vnto the Lord.

HE continues on still that which he spake in the former verse, and expresseth more fullie the renument of Egypt, because true religion shall flourish there, the pure seruice of God shall be established, and all superstitions shall fall to the ground. Now he vseth this word Altar, to represent Gods worship, as by the signe thereof; because sacrifices and oblations were exercises of pietie. By the middest of Egypt he vnderstands the principall part of all the kingdome, as if he should say, in the middes of the kingdome, or in the most excellent part of it. As touching the word pillar, we may not thinke he speaks of Images that represents the shape of Saints, or men, but memorials of the feare of God: or his meaning is, that they shall be as signes or land-marks, like to those which bound out the ends and limits of kingdomes: and that after this manner there should be signes set vp, whereby all men might know that God governed this people. And doe we not see it ordinarily fall out, that when a people is truly conuerted vnto God, hauing once forsaken and detested their Idols and superstitions, how they openly set vp signes of true religion, so as all may know that God is purely worshipped there?

Iosephus tells how Onias abused this place, when he fled to Ptolemeus Philometor: for he perswaded him that it should be a very profitable course to set vp an Altar in the Countrey, vpon which the Iewes, that dwelt there, might offer sacrifice: and alledged this text, affirming, that this prophesie ought now to be fulfilled. And in the end this wicked Priest made the King beleue it to be true, although the Iewes openly gainesaid him: for the King regarded his owne benefit; and this bad fellow, who had been deposed from his office, meant to obtaine new credit and fauour. So by this meanes what opposition sooner there was, yet could not this wicked counsell be hindred. But Isaiab vnder these figurative signes plainly describes the pure worship of God which was then in vse: for he hath respect to his owne time, and to those with whom he had to deale, Onias then did wickedly peruert this place to serue his owne turne.

But the popish Doctors are no lesse impudent at this day, in drawing in a place of Malachie by the haire, as it were, to maintaine the sacrifice of the Masse. For where he saith, It shall come to passe that incense shall be euery where offered vnto God: from thence they conclude, that there are some sacrifices differing from the ancient sacrifices: for neither oxen nor other beasts are to be sacrificed; therefore it is the Masse, say they. Truly a very trim argument. Wee may easily discern that Malachie speaks there of the seruice of God, noting it vnder one of the shadowes of the Law, as Isaiab doth in this place: and we ought to marke these kinds of speech diligently, which the Prophets are wont to vse very often.

This then may be plainly explained by another place in Ioel, which we will alledge by way of example, Your sonnes and your daughters shall prophesie, saith he, your yong men shall see visions, and your old men shall dreame dreames, Ioel 2. 28. S. Peter tells how this prophesie was fulfilled when the Apostles being inspired with the holy Ghost, spake diuers tongues: for whereas they were vncleaned before, they then began to be fit to teach the heauenlie mysteries, Act 2. We reade nothing there of dreames. The Apostle then seemes to alledge this place very vnfitly: but it appeeres that Ioel meant to signifie nothing else in this place but Prophecie; and vseth the word dreames and visions for ornament sake, because the Lord in times past did make his minde knowne to the Prophets by this meanes, Numb. 12. 6. He also had respect to the custome vsed at that time, because the Iewes would hardlie haue vnderstood what the gifts of the holy Ghost meant, seeing it was a thing as yet vnknewne vnto them: for being nourished vp vnder rudiments of the Law, they could aspie no higher then to the sacrifices and ceremonies; or whether the signes and sacraments led them.

The Prophets listened to them then as vnto babes or children, to whom we vse not to speake of higher matters then that which they may be able by little and little to comprehend by custome. This doctrine therefore will giue vs the meaning of many texts, the obscuritie whereof wee might otherwise be held a long while in doubt of. It plainly appeeres that the Prophet speaks of Christ his kingdome, so that the things whereof hee speaks, were not fulfilled till his coming. The shadowes must be taken away, that we may behold the truth of things; and so by the Altar we vnderstand the pure and true inuocation of Gods name. But yet the Prophet therewithall shewes by these outward signes, that the pure seruice of God can not be preferred without the publick exercises of religion, the maner whereof must not be disposed according to our will. Let mens inuentions cease then, that God alone may be heard in this matter.

Vers. 20. And it shall be for a signe, and for a witness vnto the Lord of hostes in the land of Egypt: for they shall crie vnto the Lord because of the oppressors, and he

shall

Nothing but ruin to be expected, where the seruice of God is wanting.

Mal. 1. 11
The place of Malachi truly expounded.

The Papists argument out of Malachi for the sacrifice of the Masse, answered by another place out of Ioel.

When men are truly turned vnto God from their idolatry, they testify it by some publick signe.

Onias.

Papists wresters of Scripture.

ſhall ſend them a Saviour, and a great man, and ſhall deliver them.

and doe ſacrifice and oblations, and ſhall vow vowes unto the Lord and performe them.

WE cannot offer any acceptable ſervice unto God, unleſſe he preuent vs by his grace. For who will dedicate himſelfe to his obedience, that is not drawne firſt by the ſweet taſte of his goodneſſe, to embrace him with a right affection? He muſt needes call vs firſt then to himſelfe, before we can call vpon him: and all acceſſe is ſhut vp againſt vs, till hee haue firſt of all allured vs to come vnto him. He ſaid before, that they ſhould be ſubdued by diuers aſſiſtētōs, to the end that they might be ſubjected to God: he now repeats the very ſame thing; for men will neuer renounce neither themſelues nor their vanities, till they are brought to teachableneſſe by ſtrong hand. Notwithſtanding he by and by adds another kinde of ſummons; to wit, they ſhall goe familiarly vnto God, after they haue taſted of his louing kindneſſe. For the cry whereof he ſpeakes, proceeds from faith; becauſe they would neuer betake themſelues to this refuge, unleſſe they were allured thereunto by the taſte of his mercy. And whereas hee promiſeth to ſend them a Saviour, by whole hand the Egyptians ſhall be deliuered; it can be meant of none but of Chriſt; becauſe Egypt was not deliuered from her miſeries, but in regard that the Goſpell was firſt of all preached there.

We reade what ſundry changes this Country indured by the ſpace of foure hundred yeeres, in ſomuch as it was almoſt utterly deſtroyed and laid waſte by forraigne and ciuill warres: but when it ſeemed to be at the laſt caſt, as they ſay, behold, it was conuerced to the Lord, and deliuered out of the hands of tyrants and enemies. Thus Ieſus Chriſt deliuered this Country, when he began to make himſelfe knowne vnto it. We in like manner ought to bee thus diſpoſed to know and ſerue God, that when wee ſhall be diuers waies aſſiſted, we may know that our ſaluation conſiſteth in him alone. And would to God the world had learned this leſſon at this day, ſeing it is in ſuch diſquietneſſe that it ſeemes neere to deſtruction. For what end of theſe troubles can it looke for, but utter ruine, unleſſe by repentance it acknowledgeth that it hath been iuſtly puniſhed for the owne impieties: And when it is added, To deliuer them; we are to gather from thence a verie profitable doctrine; to wit, that God helps vs by Ieſus Chriſt; through whole power hee hath aſſiſted his owne, euen from the beginning: for hee was the perpetuall mediator; and by his interceſſion all good things haue been obtained at the hands of God the Father. Who being now come and revealed, let vs know that wee can obtaine nothing of the Father, but by his meanes.

Verſ. 21. And the Lord ſhall be knowne of the Egyptians, and the Egyptians ſhall know the Lord in that day, Iſaiah adds now that which was the principal: for the Lord can neither be ſerued, nor called vpon, unleſſe we firſt know him to be our Father. As ſaith Saint Paul; How ſhall they call vpon him whom they know not Rom. 10. 14. For we cannot be partakers of Gods gifts to our ſaluation, unleſſe the true knowledge which is by faith goe before. Hee hath good reaſon therefore to adde knowing, as the foundation of all religion; or the key which opens the kingdom of heauen vnto vs. Which knowledge we cannot haue, but by doctrine: whence we may conclude, that God reiects all new found ſeruices; for hee cannot approve of that which is void of that knowledge, which proceeds from the hearing of the true and pure doctrine. Men ſhall neuer be able to fettle a right forme of Gods ſervice then, if they onely bring that which themſelues haue deuſed. Theſe places are worthy to be well obſerued; for therein the holy Ghoſt ſhewes vs what true adoration and inuocation is; namely, hauing baniſhed all the inuentions of men, whereto they obſtinately ſticke, we ſhould ſuffer our ſelues to be taught by the word of God; and if wee once be furniſhed with the authoritie thereof, let vs freely and openly condemne whatſoener the world extollet and admirereth. Whereas he ſaith againe, that Egypt ſhall know; it is a repetition of ſome waight; for this knowledge is of ſo great importance, that it ought not to be ſlightly paſſed ouer, becauſe it holds the chiefſt place; without which there is no true worſhip of God.

And they ſhall ſacrifice. This place muſt be expounded like the former, where he mentioned the Altar. For to what end ſhould ſacrifices ſerue, when Chriſt is manifeſted? Vnder this ſhadow then, he mentionerh the confeſſion of faith and prayer, which followed the preaching of the Goſpell. Now vnder this word he comprehends whatſoever was offered to God, as beaſts, bread, all ſorts of fruites; and whatſoever ſerued to the acknowledgement of Gods goodneſſe. But the difference betweene the old Teſtament and the new, is to be noted; and vnder theſe ſhadowes and ceremonies, we are to vnderſtand that reaſonable ſervice whereof Saint Paul ſpeaketh in the Epiſtle to the Romans, Chapter 12, verſ. 1.

That which is added of vowes, is alſo a part of God his ſervice. The Iewes were wont by vowes, to profeſſe that they acknowledged the goodneſſe of the Lord: and they therin eſpecially gaue thanks by a ſolemne vow, after they had received ſome rare and excellent benefit of him. They alſo made voluntarie vowes for diuers reſpects, according as euery one thought good. Yet none had liberty to vow this or that, after their owne imagination; but there was a certaine rule preſcribed them. How euer it were; it appeares that the Prophet ſignifies nothing elſe by this word vowe, but Gods seruice, vnto which the Egyptians should giue themselves after they had receiued \bar{y} knowledge of the truth. But he mentions those excretes of pietie, by which the Iewes made profession of the true religion. From hence the Papists draw an argument to prouoe that wee must fulfill our vovves to God; but seeing their vovves are n \bar{a} jd \bar{e} at random, and without any discretion, this place giues the no warrant for the maintenance of their error. For isaiah foretels what the Egyptians should do after they had imbraced and followed the doctrine of saluation. So in like maner when Dauid exhorts the people to vowe, and to pay their vovves, they thinke it makes for them; but he meanes not that they should therefore make rash or vnlawfull vovves. For the rule of right vowing stands alwaies in force, beyond which wee must not passe; to wit, Gods word, by which wee are taught what he requires of vs, and what we should vowe and fulfill.

There was neuer any libertie giuen vs to vow whatsoever wee list: the reason is, because we giue our selues the raines too much, and suffer our selues to r \bar{u} th against God in all things, being more impudent in this behalfe then if we had to deale with men. Now ye see the cause why it was needfull that men should be restrained by some bridle, euen to the end they might not giue themselves ouergreat libertie in Gods seruice and religion. Seeing it is thus, we may all see that God approves of nothing but that which his Law confirmes, and reiects all things else as a strange and superstitious worship. What soeuer then any man voveth of his owne head without warrant from Gods word, can not be found; and if he fulfill it, he sinnes double, first, for vowing foolishly, as if he toyed and plaid the foole with God: secondly, for accomplishing that which he hath rashly vovved without warrant: whereas he ought rather to haue repented himselfe, and to haue forborne the doing of it. So farre off is it then that such vovves do binde any man, that on the contrarie hauing acknowledged his fault and rashnes in so doing, he ought to change his mind, and to cease from performing of it. If any now shall make enquire-rouching Papistical vovves, it is easie to prouoe that they haue no affinity with Gods word. For if those which they esteeme lawfull, and the most excellent about the rest are wicked and vnlawfull, as the vovves of Monks are, what may wee thinke of the rest? They vow perpetuall Chastitie, as if it were granted to ali in a like measure: now wee know this gift is rare, neither is it promised to all; no not to those who otherwise are indued with great and excellent graces.

Abraham was of an excellent faith, and constancie, of singular meekenes, and holines, yet had he not this gift. Christ himselfe refuseth that it is not giuen to all, euen then when his Apostles \bar{y} highlie commended single life, Math. 19. 6. 10. 11. 12. and S. Paul saith the like, 1. Cor. 7. 7. 9. He then which hath not this gift of continencie, and yet vovves it, doth ill, and shall be iustlie punished for his presumption. Hence haue come those infinite shamefull examples, whereby God hath iustlie punished such pride in the Papacie. They vowe pouertie also; as if it were vnlawfull for them to inioy any thing of their owne; yet doe they abound in wealth about all men: is not this a plaine mocking of God? As touching the obedience which they vow, it is nothing else but mere rebellion: for they shake off Christes yoke, to subiect themselves to men. Others vow pilgrimages, to eate no flesh, to keepe certaine dayes, and other things full of superstitions. Others vow vnto God fond and doltish toys, as if they had to deale with a litle child: for we are ashamed to make such promises vnto men, amongst whom nothing is confirmed vnto men, both parties be first agreed betweene themselves, and doe allow of one anothers fact. Surely we should much lesse enterprise ought in Gods seruice, vnlesse wee haue good warrant for our decde out of his holie word. What seruice will you call that where the statutes of God are nothing accounted of, and where the will of man only takes place? Can this be acceptable vnto God, thinke we? Nay, shall it not rather be termed superstition, which S. Paul so much detesteth: Coloss. 2. 23. Those which make such vovves then do brag in vaine that they serue God therein, as if this place any thing at all fauored their conceit, because the Lord detesteth such worship.

Verf. 22. Wherefore the Lord shall smite Egypt, he shall smite and heale it: for he shall returne vnto the Lord, and he shall be intreated of them, and shall heale them.

NOW the Prophet concludes that which he had said before, to wit, that the chastisement whereof he spake should be profitable to the Egyptians, because it should be as a preparatiue to bring the to repentance; as if he should say, The affliction wherewith the Lord shall smite Egypt, shall turne to the singular benefit and good thereof. Those who reade, He shall smite with an incurable wound, do interpret this place amisse, and do much diminish the Prophets meaning: for he shewes that the wounds shall be profitable, because God will vse them as a meanes to bring them home. Whence we are to gather, that we should neuer refuse to be chastised of the Lord, seeing he doth it for our great good; in regard that impunitie ingenders a greater licence to commit sinne. And because men are wonderfullie prone in giuing themselves the raines whilst God spares them; therefore he himselfe, is faine to prevent the mischief as we say, which he doth by chastisements and afflictions, that he might thereby prouoke and prick vs forward to repentance and amendment of life. Loe heere an excellent example set before vs in Egypt, who found grace and mercie at Gods hands, although although ſhe was ſtuffed with ſuperſtitions and impie- tie, and ſubmounted all other nations in idolatry.

But note the meanes how; to wit, by turning vnto God: for this is the expoſition of the former member: as if he ſhould haue ſaid, God ſhall heale the Egyptians, becauſe they ſhall conuert. Let vs gather from hence, that conuerſion is as it were a reſurrection from eternall death; for we are but dead all the while we remaine vnconuerted: but being once conuerted, we enter into fauour with God, and are deliuered from hell. Not that we merit this grace by our repentance; but becauſe by this meanes the Lord ſaith vs as it were from death to life. To this repentance there is a promiſe added: whence we gather, that our requests are not in vaine, when we craue pardon for our ſinnes; provided that our repentance be not hypocriticall.

Now when the Lord ſaith, that hee will be mercifull to the Egyptians; hee therewithall ſhewes, that they ſhall obtaine fauour immediately after they be once conuerted. It ſhall be a true conuerſion then, when calling vpon the name of God ſhall follow it. But this inuocation cannot be without faith; for the wicked themſelues may haue ſome knowledge of their ſinnes; yet none of them will haue their reſcourſe to Gods mercy, neither ſhall they euer be truly reconciled vnto him, unleſſe they bee touched at the heart with the true feeling of that repentance which is toy- ned with faith: Rom. 10. 14.

And I will heale.] Hee repeats not that which he ſaid; to wit, the Lord ſhall ſmit Egypt, and heale it; but he promiſeth to heale it in another ſignification; that is, the Lord ſhall ceaſe to correct it. The healing whereof he made mention before, was inward: but this latter is referred to the puniſhments and afflictions. In a word, his meaning is, that God will prepare a ſpedie remedie to heale all their diſeaſes. For as ſoone as we be reconciled vnto God, hee findes nothing in vs that deſerues to be puniſhed. Doe not chariſtgements come for ſinnes? But ſinnes being pardoned, ſo are alſo the corrections which they haue deſerued. And if ſo be we be rechariſted, it is a ſigne that our repentance is not yet ſuch as it ought to be. To bee ſhort, let vs keepe in minde this order which the Prophet here ſets before vs. Firſt, men are prepared to repentance by corrections. Secondly, they are healed, becauſe they are deliuered from eternall death. Thirdly, being brought to the knowledge of their ſinnes, they ſeeke pardon. In the fourth place, God becomes gracious and fauourable vnto them. Laſtly, corrections ceaſe, hauing once obtained pardon of the Lord. Now I thinke there is no man which ought not to acknowledge theſe things which Iſaiah pronounceth here of the Egyptians in himſelfe, in whoſe perſon God ſets as it were a type and an example before the whole world.

Verſ. 23. In that day ſhall there be a path from Egypt to Aſſur; and Aſſur ſhall come into Egypt, and Egypt into Aſſur: ſo the Egyptians ſhall wor- ſhip with Aſſur.

*Or, Ioue.

Now the Prophet ſhewes how it ſhall come to paſſe: that the Lord will ſhed this his bountie forth euery where: as if he ſhould ſay, This largell ſhall not bee that vp in ſome corner, neither ſhall it be felt of one people alone, as it was wont to be. Now he ſpeakes heere of two nations which were the ſworne enemies of the Church, and therefore ſeemed to be the fartheſt off from Gods kingdom of all others. For a man might haue had much more hope of nations further off, in regard that theſe two made warre, as you would ſay that, vpon God himſelfe, and perſecuted his Church wth ſer perſe. Oh Lord! if it be ſo that he ſhewes himſelfe thus mercifull to the capital enemies of his Church, that paſſing by their ſinnes, hee adopts them for his children, what wil he then do to other Nations? Thus yee ſee a manifeſt vocation of the Gentiles, contained in this prophetic.

Note heere the patience and bounty of the Lord our God.

When he ſaith, The way ſhall be open, and there ſhall bee a mutual accesse, ſo as one ſhall goe to another; hee therein notes their brotherly conference. Wee know that the Egyptians had warres with the Aſſyrians almoſt continually; ſo as they hated one another deadly. Now the Prophet proclames heere, that God ſhall turne their hearts, and reconcile them one one another in ſuch ſort, that they ſhall trade and craſſique one with the other; & the paſſages which in times paſt were ſhut vp, ſhall now be ſer open. We are to note that in this place then, which we haue obſerued before in the ſecond Chapter; that is, when men are reconciled vnto God, they ought to nourish brotherly kindneſſe betweene themſelues; for all ſtrifes, debates, eniues, and grudgings, ought to ceaſe with vs, when God is at one with vs. Is it not to be meruelled at then, when he ſaith, that the way is open to goe out of Egypt into Aſſyria? But all this doubtleſſe ought to be referred to the Kingdom of Chriſt, ſeeing wee read not that the Egyptians had this agreement with the Aſſyrians till they came to the knowledge of Ieſus Chriſt.

Men being reconciled vnto God, ought to nourish brotherly kindneſſe betweene themſelues.

ſhall Ioue] This member may be tranſlated, They ſhall ſerue, or worſhip God: but becauſe this word God, is not heere expreſſed, it may be referred to the Aſſyrians, and indeed the Hebrew particle Ech, leades vs to thinke ſo. Thus you may expound it then; Thoſe which in times paſt burned with a deſire to doe hurt, ſhall change their mindes, and in ſtead thereof, ſhall deſire to doe good. In a word, you ſhall ſee in them the fruit of true repentance; becauſe whereas they had wont to ſpoile one another by often warres, they ſhall now take delight and pleaſure in one anothers company. And this ſenſe will ſure well to the ſcope of the Prophets words. And yet I ſeieſt not the other interpretation which is followed of the moſt; to wit, that thoſe who etewhiles worſhipped many gods, Conuerſion a kinde of reſurrection from eternall death.

Repentance merits not remiſſion of ſinnes.

Conuerſion and inuocation goe alwaies hand in hand.

shall now acknowledge but one God onely, and shall make one confession of faith. Thus it shall be free for euery one to follow which of the two expositions he liketh best. But if the last bee receiued, the Prophet then makes this brotherly loue to flow from the feare of God, as the ruer from the fountaine.

Verf. 24. And in that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and Asshur, euen a blessing in the midst of the land.*

*Or, a third.

*Or, shall be.

Now Isaiah sets downe the conclusion of the promise heere, which hee had touched; namely, that the Egyptians and the Assyrians shall be blessed as well as Israel. For before, the grace of God was shut vp as it were in Israel, in regard the Lord had made a covenant with this people only, and had spread out his cord vpon Jacob; as Moses speaks Deut. 32. 9. And David saith, God hath not dealt so with euery nation, neither had they knowne his iudgements: Psal. 147. 20. To be short, the blessing of God abroad in Iudea onely: but here he saith, that it shall be communicated to the Egyptians and Assyrians; vnder which two names hee comprehends all nations besides. They are not named heere by way of honour; but in regard they had been the perpetuall enemies of God, they seemed to much the further estranged from him, and to haue lesse hope of fauour then any others. Wherefore howsoeuer he adopted to himselfe the children of Abraham onely, yet now he is content to be called the father of all nations, indifferently. Some translate, Israel shall be the third, which I approue not: for in as much as the nowne is of the feminine gender, it should bee ioyned with the word berahub: and this word blessing, is as much to say, as example, or mirrour of blessing.

Verf. 25. For the Lord of hostes shall blesse it saying; Blessed be my people, Egypt and Asshur, the work of mine hands, and Israel mine inheritance.

HE comes againe to the reason and exposition of the former sentence: for he teacheth that the Assyrians and Egyptians shall be companions with the elect people by the free goodnesse of God. And it is as much as if he had said; Howsoeuer these titles appertaine onely to Israel, yet shall they be transferred notwithstanding to another people; whom the Lord shall adopt to himselfe. Now there is a mutual correspondency betwene God and his people; so as those whom he pronounceth to be his people with his own mouth, may also answer, and by good right say, that he is their God. This priuledge is indifferently granted both to the Egyptians and Assyrians. But although the Prophet ineaunt to make these strangers companions with the Lewes, which were the household-people of God, yet he distinguisheth their degrees by speciall markes. For in calling the Egyptians Gods people, he means that they are partakers of that honour which God vouchsafed onely to the Lewes. He adorns the Assyrians with the proper title giuen to the Church, saying, that they are the work of his hands.

The Church (as we haue said elsewhere) is called the work, or workmanship of God. Eph. 2. 10. because the faithfull are reformed by the spirit, of regeneration, to the end they may beare the image of God. Thus by the work of the hands, he means not our creation, as we are made men, but regeneration, as we are created vnto newnesse of life; that so being separated from the world, we may be made new creatures. Whence wee perceiue, that in the matter of our new life, we ought to attribute nothing vnto our selues, because wee are altogether the workmanship of God. But when the Prophet speaks of Israel, he adorns him with his prebeminence; to wit, that he is the heritage of God: to the end hee might still retain the right and honour of the first borne among his new brethren. For this word heritage, hath a greater emphasis in it then we thinke commonly of. For questionlesse that same covenant which God made first with them, gaue them such a priuledge, as could not be disanulled by their vnthankfulness; because the gifts & callings of God, are without repentance: as Saint Paul teacheth, Rom. 11. 29. Ephes. 2. 12. Which shewes, that they are the first borne in Gods house. Howsoeuer then that the grace of God be now shed forth and spread abroad further of; yet cease they not to hold the first degree; not by their merit, but by the steadfastnesse of the promise.

The meaning of this phrase, The work of mine hands.

If our new birth be the workmanship of God, ought we to attribute any thing to our selues?

THE XX. CHAPTER.

Verf. 1. In the yeere that Tartan came to Asshad, (when Sargon King of Asshur sent him) and had fought against Asshad and taken it.

IN the former Chapter Isaiah prophesied of that calamitie threatened against the Egyptians, there-withall promising them Gods mercie: now repeating againe the same argument, hee shewes that Israel shall be confounded by this chastisement of Egypt, because they put their confidence in thum. He also ioines the Ethiopians with him. Whence we may coniecture that the Ethiopians were ioined in league with the Egyptians: which I haue touched heretofore, and shall touch it again in the 37. Chapter. First, we are to note the time of this prophesie: for necessitie did preſſe the Jewes in ſuch wiſe then, that they were conſtrained to ſeek help of other nations. The holy hiſtorie witneſſeth, that Tartan was one of the Captaines of Senacherib; for which cauſe we muſt needs acknowledge that this Sargon was Senacherib, who (as we may ſee by this place) had two names. We are likewiſe to conſider in what caſe the ſtate of Iſrael was: for the ten Tribes had been led away captiue; and it ſeemed that the kingdome of Iudah was vtterlie waſted, in regard the whole Countrey was almoſt conquered, Ieruſalem excepted, which was beſieged by Rabſache, Tartan, on the other ſide, laid ſiege againſt Ahdod, 2. King. 18. 13. & 17. Now in the 17. verſe of the 18. Chapter there are three Captaines named: whence we mighte tolke, that Senacherib camp at that time was diuided into three parts, that ſo at one inſtant all being amazed and troubled, and ſome put to their ſhifts, the reſt might haue no opportunitie to aid and ſuccour one another. The Jewes therefore had no other refuge but to ſeek for help of ſtrangers. The Prophet in the meane while is ſent from God to tell them in flat termes, that it is but in vaine for them to depend vpon the ſuccour of the Egyptians, who were alreadie purſued euen by Gods immediat hand; and ſo farre was it off that they ſhould be helpfull to others, that they were ſcarce able to defend themſelues againſt their enemies. Thus the Jewes were to know for certaine, that they were iuſtly puniſhed for their inſidelitie, becauſe they left God, to ſeeke for help to the Egyptians.

The drift and ſcope of this propheſie.

We are heere then to obſerue the drift and ſcope of the text: for it is not Gods meaning to admoniſh the Egyptians, but to correct the inſidelitie of his people: which inſidelitie often caried them away to falſe and peruerſe hopes. That the Prophet might teach them therefore to reſt vpon God alone, he heere ſets before them what iſſue and ſucceſſe they ſhould haue fro theſe vaine helps which they ſo greedily fought after. Now this admonition doubtleſſe was very reaſonable, becauſe the Egyptians had now begun to hinder the paſſage of the Aſſyrians, and had conſtrained them to returne from whence they came: which was the beſt newes the Jewes could poſſible heare tell of. But to the end they might not reioiſe too much in theſe goodly beginnings, he threatens that this ſuccor ſhall turne into ſmoke, becauſe the Ethiopians and Egyptians ſhall in ſhort ſpace be overcome to their great diſgrace and confuſion.

Verſ. 2. At the ſame time ſpake the Lord by the hand of Iſaiab the ſonne of Amoz, ſaying, Goe, and loſe the ſackcloth from thy loines, and put off thy ſhooe from thy foote; and he did ſo, walking naked and bare-foot.

TO the end the Lord might confirme this propheſie by ſome externall ſigne, he commands Iſaiab to walke naked. For if the Prophet had done this of his owne head, he had iuſtly deſerued to haue been mocked for his labor: but in regard he did it at Gods bidding, there is nothing to be ſene in him which is not worthe of admiration, yea, of great feare. Vnder this nakednes, and ſuch other ſignes, there are weightie matters included: beſides, God neuer did any thing either immediatly by himſelfe, neither yet by any of his ſeruants, but the reaſon of it is forthwith declared. Thus Iſaiab walks not naked only, but thewes what his drift is, that is to ſay, why the Lord enioined him to do it; otherwiſe the falſe Prophets might imitate the ſeruants of God, changing themſelues into diuers feartfull tormes to dazzle the eyes of ſimple people, and ſo get eſtimation: but ſuch ſignes are nought worth, becauſe God is not the author of them. Which we are diligent to obſerue, in regard of the Papiſts, who are readie to aduance and ſet vp new Ceremonies in ſtead of true Sacraments. This is the rule which we muſt oppoſe againſt them, to wit, if theſe Ceremonies of theirs be of God, then ought we to receiue them: if not, then is it lawfull for vs to recte them; nay, we can in no wiſe approve of them, but we therein offer wrong vnto God, becauſe mortall men doe then ſurp that authoritie which vnto him belongeth.

Papiſts readie to ſet vp new Ceremonies, in ſtead of true Sacraments. What rule muſt be oppoſed againſt popiſh Ceremonies.

Beſides, God impoſeth not, nor ſets ſignes before vs without the word: for what Sacrament would it be if wee ſhould only behold the bare ſigne? It is the doctrine only which makes the Sacrament. Let vs know then that there is nothing but plaine deceit when the word goes not before. The Papiſts do therefore tonidie impoſe the name of Sacrament to their vaine Ceremonies, when they are not able to confirme them by the pure Scriptures. Well, the Lord hath ſo ioined theſe things together, that none can ſeparate the, but withall they offer violence to the order which he hath inſtituted.

When God impoſeth any Ceremonie, he add. s his word vnto it.

Now in that Iſaiab is commanded to looſe the ſackcloth, the moſt of the interpreters gather that the Prophet was at that time clothed with a mourning weede, in regard that he bewailed the calamitie of Iſrael: for ſackcloth was a mourning garment, as appears by that which is ſaid in Ioe, Chap. 1. 13. They ſay then that this was done, that in bearing vpon him the garments of the guiltie or condemned, he might aſke pardon of God: or, that it could not be that his apparell and countenance ſhould reſtifie gladnes, becauſe his heart was in heaurnes. And indeed it was vnpoſſible but he muſt needs be ſore afflicted in beholding ſo great and horrible calamities.

Some thinke it was his ordinarie apparell, in regard that the Prophets uſed to weare a mantle, as teſtifieth Zachariah 13. 4. But this is too weake a coniecture; neither hath it any ſhew of reaſon. It is more likelie that he was clothed with ſackcloth, to expreſſe his ſorrow. For thoſe of Iudeah were become ſo ſenſeleſſe, that they cared not awhit; neither thought they that this miſerie ſhould euer be able to come neere them: no not then when their poore brethren were miſerable afflicted

ſuffered

flicted and scattered before their eyes: nay, they rather thought themselves out of all danger, and made a mocke at the words of the Prophets, who threatned and foretold their ruine. This was the cause why Micha also complained, that none bewailed the calamitie of Israell.

Mich. 1.11.

Some also aske whether this was a thing done indeed, or rather whether it were not a bare and naked vision, which hee was to set forth to the people. The most receiued opinion is, that the Prophet neuer stripped himselfe naked; but that it was shewed him by way of vision onely, and that but once. Their reason is, because he was not able to indure to goe naked the space of three whole yeeres, both in regard of the heate and cold, and of other incumbrances occasioned by the time. But what hurt is it if we should say that the Prophet couered himselfe in his house, and abroad also; onely that he shewed this spectacle of nakednes to the people, when he was to performe his propheticall office? For I am not much moued with that reason; that hee could not indure the heate nor cold, because God who had inioyned him to doe it, was also able to arme and preserue him when hee did it. But they bring an other reason; to wit, that nakednesse had been vnbecoming a Prophet? I answer, that this nakednesse was no more dishonest, then circumcision: which spectacle, (in the opinion of prophane men) was the most ridiculous thing that could be imagined, seeing the priuie members were then discovered. I doe not thinke, neither would I say should, that the Prophet stripped himselfe so naked, but that hee couered those vncomely parts which would haue giuen but a foule and deformed spectacle to the beholders. It was sufficient that the people were taught what the Lord meant heereby, and that they might be moued with it, as a thing extraordinarie.

Whether the Prophet stripped himselfe naked, or not.

Verf. 3.

When God inioynes vs any seruice, he therewithall furnishest vs with abilitie to performe the same.

That also which moues mee to be of this iudgement, is that which is said here, By the hand, or, in giuing commission: for albeit this manner of speech be often found elsewhere, yet wee neuer meete with it in any place, but it imports some hidden vehemencie; by which the effect it selfe is noted out. The Prophet then sets himselfe before God, and in the midst of the Citizens, as the herald of the calamitie that was to come; and that not by word onely, but euen by a visible signe also. It is to be obserued in like manner, that it is not noted in the text in vaine, that Isaiah did so.

Master Caluins iudgement touching the Prophets going naked.

Thus haue you mine opinion; to wit, that the Prophet went naked as oft as hee preached; onely shewing those parts of his body, which might be seene without blushing. As touching the sackcloth, although priuate men were wont to confesse their finnes in time of trouble in that maner; yet it is probable that Isaiah vsed this signe, both by reason of his office, as also to confirme his doctrine, and the better to rouse the people out of their securitie. If at any time it fall out that the Lord chastiseth either our selues, or our brethren, hee commands vs not to change our raiment, neither is it needfull: but we are altogether cruell and inhumane, if the afflictions of our brethren, & the subuersion of the Church moue vs not. And if it be our parts to mourne, wee ought also to stirre vp others to doe the like, and by our example, to provoke them to feele the calamitie of the Church, that they may be toucht with some compassion.

*Heb. 13.
Rom. 12.15,
16.*

Verf. 3. And the Lord said; Like as my seruant Isaiah hath walked naked and barefoote three yeeres, as a signe and wonder vpon Egypt and Ethiopia;

4. So shall the King of Achor take away the captiuitie of Egypt, and the captiuitie of Ethiopia; both young men and old men, naked and barefoote, with their buttookes vncovered, to the shame of Egypt.

Three yeeres.] Why puts hee this space of time? Because it was granted to the Egyptians and Ethiopians of the Lord, as a time of truce; to the end they might come to repentance: also that hee might thereby proue the faithfulness of his people, that without delay they might pull themselves backe from seeking all vnlawfull succours: thirdly, to the end the Egyptians and Ethiopians might know, that their ruine was not far off; howsoeuer they seemed to bee in a well settled estate. Moreover, the Lord meant heereby to discouer the rebellion of the wicked; for doubtlesse many shewed their impietie in scoffing at the Prophets nakednesse: as on the contrarie, that the faithfull being moued with such a spectacle, might learne not to stay their mündes vpon faire words, although the prosperitie of the Egyptians were a very sweete allurement vnto them. As touching this nakednesse, we are not barely to consider of it alone; but rather the inake and end which the Lord had ingrauent in it: euen as in the visible Sacraments, wee ought to behold the things which are inuisible. These two words, captiuitie, and carrying away, are collectiues, and are taken for the troope of the captiues, and those that were carried away out of the Countrey. Lastly, he saith, that no respect should be had of age: for the old should be led into captiuitie as well as the young.

Isaiah his nakednesse not to be considered barely in it selfe, but the end wherefore it was inioyned him.

Verf. 5. And they shall feare and be ashamed of Ethiopia their expectation, and of Egypt their glory.

HE now shewes for whose sakes hee foretold that these things should befall the Egyptians and Ethiopians; to wit, to the end the Iewes might learne to hope in God in the midst of their afflictions, and might not call strangers to succour them; which the Lord had forbidden. He calles them their expectation; because the Iewes alwaies turned their their eyes towards them, asoft as they were preſſed with any incombrance, putting their truſt in them. For we are wont to caſt our eyes vpon that, from whence wee looke for ſuccour: and thence it is that to looke, is often taken among the Hebrewes, to hope. But they were to looke vnto God onely: ſo that their wandring lightneſſe is heere reprobud. The like ought to happen vnto vs, and that iuſtly; that being made naked, and forſaken of all, we might be plunged in our owne ſhame and reproch; becauſe we reſuſe the refuge which God hath ſet before vs, when he calles vs to huſſelſe, hauing ſuffered our ſelues to be ſeduced by Satans iuſſions.

Verſ. 6. Then ſhall the inhabitants of this Ile, ſay in that day; Behold, ſuch is our expectation, whither wee fled for helpe, to bee deliuered from the King of Aſſur: and how ſhall wee be deliuered?

HE calles not Jeruſalem an Ile onely, but the whole Country of Iudea. They thinke that this name is giuen vnto it, becauſe the Mediterranean ſea inuions it, for nine own part, I thinke he brings this ſimilitude for another reaſon; for it hath but a litle portion of the ſea. But as an Ile is ſeparate from the dry lands: ſo had the Lord ſeparated Iudah from other Countries. For it was ſeparated from all thoſe nauions which were the deadly enemies of the Iewes; becauſe there was a wall betweene them, as Saint Paul ſaith, Eph. 2. 14. which at the laſt was broken downe at the coming of Chriſt. Moreouer, Iſaiah here confirms his prophecie: as if he ſhould ſay, Albeit you cannot now bee moued with my nakedneſſe, yet you ſhall in time know by the effects, that theſe things were not ſet before you in vaine. And God is wont to conſtaine the rebellious and vntractable at the laſt, to confeſſe their fault, that being aſtonied, they might learne to diſpute in themſelues, how their hardneſſe of heart coulde poſſibly bhade them ſo farre.

THE XXI. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. The burden of the deſert ſea. As the Whirlwindes in the ſouth uſe to paſſe from the wilderneſſe, ſo ſhall it come from the horrible land.

The occaſion of this prophecie againſt Caldea.

HE Prophet hauing taught the people to put no conſuſtence in the Egyptians, but in Gods mercy onely; & hauing threatned them with the calamities which ſhould happen to thoſe nations that ſuccoured them, whereupon they reſted and relied: he now addes a conſolation for the encouragement of the faithfull. For hee telles them that the Chaldeans, vnder whoſe power they were to be held captiue, ſhall be rewarded according to their deſerts: whence the Iewes were to gather, that God had a care as touching the wrongs which they ſuſtained.

By the deſert, hee meanes the land of the Caldeans; not it was inhabited, but becauſe that the Iewes had a deſert on that ſide very neere vnto them; as if we ſhould take the Alps for Italia, in regard they are neerer vnto vs; as alſo that it is our way by which wee goe into that Country. But the reaſon is to be marked; for he deſcribes not the nature of the Country, but telles the Iewes that the ruine of their enemies is at hand, and that it is as certaine, as if they ſaw it before their eyes; euen as this deſert was. Beſides, we may note that the Prophets are wont ſometimes to ſpeake ambiguouſly and darkly of Babylon; to the end the faithfull onely might vnderſtand ſuch ſecret myſteries. As for example, Ieremiah changeth the name of the King.

Now he ſaith, that this ſhall come from the South, becauſe the ſouth wind is tempeſtuouſ, and is moued with ſtormes and whirlwindes. Where hee addeth that ſuch tempeſts come from the deſert; it is by way of amplification: for if any tempeſt ariſeth in a place inhabited and frequented, it will not be ſo fearefull as thoſe which ariſe from the deſerts. That he might expreſſe the horrour then of this diſcomfiture, hee compares it to tempeſts which begin to make a noiſe in the deſerts fiſt, and then take a violent courſe, and keepe a great and hideous thundering. Yet notwithstanding it ſeemes the Prophet meant to ſay, that euen as the enemies ouerflowed from this ſide, as a tempeſt to ſpoile the land of Iudea: ſo preſently after, there ſhould bee a whirlwind raiſed for their overthrow. For it had not been enough to haue ſpoken of the ruine of Babylon; vnleſſe the Iewes had therewithal been informed that it proceeded from God.

Wee haue ſhewed the reaſon in the 18. Chapter, why he calles it an horrible or terrible nation; to wit, becauſe after ſo many examples of Gods wrath executed vpon it, it was a tertour to all that beheld it, in regard of the deformitie thereof. For the circumſtance of the place will not beare ſhould be called horrible, in regard of Gods power, which was the protection of it. Although then that Babylon was taken and ſpoiled by the Medes and Persians, Iſaiah notwithstanding pronounceth that the deſtruction thereof ſhall come to the cares of Iudah; becauſe the Lord will by this meanes bee auenged of the outrages done vnto his people, whoſe gardian he promiſed to be.

Verſ. 2. A grieuous viſion was ſhewed ed vnto me. The transgressor against a transgressor, and the destroyer against a destroyer. Goe vp Elam, besiege Media: I haue caused all the mourning thereof to cease.

A Griuous vision.] Seeing it is his purpose to asswage the sorrow of the people, it may seeme an improper speech to call that a griuous vision, which was rather matter of ioy. But this is to be referred to the Chaldeans, who were puffed vp with their prosperitie, and feared no danger at all to be nere the. For abundance ordinarilie begets pride and carelesnes: as if he should say, The Chaldeans make a buckler of their strength and riches in vaine: and the hard stone hath met with an hammer harder then it selfe where-withall it is broken.

The destroyer.] Because Babylon had obtained the Monarchie by pilling and wasting other nations, she seemed to be exempt from all danger. Albeit then that they were feared, and had exercised all maner of cruelties and hard dealing, yet must they at length be forced to suffer the same robbing and spoiling which they had executed vpon others. And to the end the Prophet might get credit to his speech, he admontheth them it is iust, that violence should be answered with violence. Elam is a part of Persia, but is taken here for the whole Countrie: and for this cause also the Persians are called Elamites. But it is to be noted, that there was no appearance of any warre at all when Isaiah prophesied these things: yea, himselfe was dead an hundred yeares before there was any suspicion of this discomfiture. Whence it sufficientlie appeareth, that he could no way attaine the knowledge of these things, but by the spirit of God: and this serues greatlie to confirme the certentie of this prophesie, as also to giue authoritie vnto it. Whereas he commands the Medes and Persians to performe this seruice, his meaning is, that such calamities should not fall out to the Babylonians by hazard, nor at random, but by a certaine decree and appointment of God; in whose name he proclaimes these things, and not in the name of a priuat man. Thus representing as it were the person of God, he might well command his souldiers to assemblé thescilues together, and to make warre, as a Generall or Chieftaine. Now we haue already shewed in the tenth Chapter how the Lord vseth the seruice of theeues, robbers, and such other wicked fellows.

I haue caused all the mourning thereof to cease.] Some thinke this mourning whereof the Babylonians were the cause, ceased after they were subdued by the Medes and Persians. For their tyrannie had occasioned many to sigh and lament, which of necessitie befalls the wicked and tyrannicall rulers. But it may be others are neerer the true sense of the Prophets words, when they say, that the mourning ceased because the Babylonians found no mercie, in regard that themselves had shewed none to others. But yet I expound it more simply, to wit, that the Lord stopped his eares at their mourning: as if he should say, their complaints and lamentations shall nothing auail them. For as they had been vnkinde and cruell, it was iust they should receiue that measure which they had met vnto others.

Verf. 3. Therefore are my loynes filled with sorrow: sorrowes haue taken me as the sorrowes of a woman that travaileth: I was bowed downe when I heard it, and I was amazed when I saw it.

Here the Prophet brings in the Babylonians, lamenting as if the thing had been presentlie acted: for it was not enough simple to foretell the destruction of Babylon, vnlesse the people had bene therewithall so confirmed, as the matter might appeare to be finished already as it were in the sight of the faithfull. This description then was necessarie: not that we should thinke the Prophet here discouers the affection of his heart, as if he had pitied the Babylonians: nay rather he takes the person of some Babylonian vpon himselfe, as we haue said in another place. It ought to content vs that the secret iudgements of God are thus presented before vs as in a looking-glasse, that the dulnes of our faith might be quickned and comforted. The Prophets do therefore more fullie and elegantly describe and set forth these things, then can be any way comprehended by mans reason. Whilest Isaiah then thus expresseth his griefe, he therewithall teacheth the faithfull how seuerer Gods vengeance should be vpon the Chaldeans; and what horrible punishment Babylon shall feele: euen as it fares with vs, when some sudden feare surpriseth vs, or whé one brings vs some heauie tidings.

And he yet further expresseth his griefe, when he compares it to the sorrowes of a woman trauieling with child: as one who being grieuouſlie pained turnes this way and that way looking for succor with wringing the hands. The Prophets are faine to vse such kinds of speech because of our dulnes: for we perceiue not the iudgements of God, vnlesse they be pointed out vnto vs with the finger as it were, so as we may euen touch and feele them. But we are thus admonished of them before they come, to the end we may stand vpon our watch.

Verf. 4. Mine heart failed: fearefulnesses troubled me: the night of my pleasures hath he turned into feare vnto me.

Others translate not amisse, My heart hath wandred hither and thither, because the mind is almost besides it selfe when any great feare falls vpon it. Isaiah declares then the sudden destruction of Babylon, at which a man trembles much more then when it is foreseene, and meanes vsed to prevent it. Daniel recites how that which Isaiah heere foretold came to passe, and saw it with his eyes, eyes. Balthazar in the night had prepared a ſtately banquet, and thought of nothing leſſe then to be put to death when the Perſians came in ſuddenly vpon him. Theſe delights were then ſuddenly changed into feares and vnto me; Goe ſet a watchman to tell what he ſeeth.

The Prophet is commanded to appoint a watchman to ſtand in the Tower, and to tell what he ſees aſſure off; becauſe it could not yet be ſcene with the eyes, neither comprehended by coniecture. To the end then that euery one might vnderſtand that hee ſpake not at raudome, he reſtiſies, that he publiſheth the things which he cleerely and plainly knew by a propheticall ſpirit: for he is mounted aboue the reach of mans iudgement, to whom ſuch things are vnknowne and incredible. And this is diligently to be obſerued: for we muſt not thinke that the Prophets foreſaw things by their owne induſtry, or learned that which they publiſhed, of men; but let vs know, that they were carried vp in the ſpirit farre aboue the reach of mans reaſon, to behold things aſſure off, as if they had been in a watch-tower; for which reſpect, they were rightly termed Seers. For albeit we ſee, yet are we hoodwincked, and haue much adoe to perceiue that which lieth before our ſectet: yea, he that hath the cleereſt ſight, is oftentimes very blinde; becauſe he comprehends nothing but what hee can gather by reaſon. But the Prophets ſpake by the Spirit of God, as from heauen.

Verſ. 5. Prepare thou the table: watch in the watch-tower: eate, drinke: ariſe yee Princes, anoint the ſhield.

This may be read otherwiſe: as if he ſhould ſay; When they made readie the table, and whileſt the watch-men were fitted for their places, whileſt they eate and dranke, behold they were ſuddenly ſurpriſed with feare and aſtoniſhment: one beganne to cry alarm, alarm, yee Princes ariſe, anoint the ſhield. Thus the Prophet ſets the matter forth in liuely tables, euen as if it were a thing then acted. Truly Xenophon deſcribes not the taking of the Citie more like an Hiſtoriographer then our Prophet heere doth. Whence we may diſcerne, that Iſaiah was not taught this prophecie by naturall coniectures, that hee could thus in liuely colours ſet forth that which was to him vnknowne, but that the Spirit of God was his ſchool-maſter.

Xenophon.

A manifeſt prooſe, that the Prophets writ as they were moued by the holy Ghoſt.

2. Pet. 1. 21.

Wee are further to note the time where- in theſe things were foretold: for the eſtate of the Kingdome of Babylon was then moſt flouriſhing, and ſeemed to bee inuincible; ſo as it feared no dangers. Iſaiah derides that vaine confidence of theirs, and ſhewes, that this greatneſſe can eaſily bee brought low. It ought not to ſeeme abſurd, that he brings in the watch-man ſpeaking: for albeit the ſiege laid againſt the Citie, yet nothing daunted this proud and wicked Tyrant from plunging himſelfe ouer head and eares in voluptuouſneſſe and exceſſe; and yet it is not to be doubted, but watches were ſet to keepe all ſure.

Princes were wont to haue a guard round about them, to the end they might the more ſecurely ouerflow in all wantonneſſe without feare: but the Prophet of ſet purpoſe mixeth the watches with the delicacies of the Table; the more evidently to ſhew, that this wretched Tyrant was ſmiten with a ſpirit of ſenſeleſneſſe, before he beganne to dinke himſelfe drunke. The King of Babylon then banqueted and made great cheere with his Nobles, at the verie time when hee was ouerwhelmed with ſudden deſtruction, without taking any heede: not that he was out of danger before, but becauſe he was careleſſe, and ſcorned the enimie; A man would haue thought this impoſſible the day before it happened: for the conſpiracie of Gabrias and his faction, who betrayed the King, was not yet knowne. But who would haue imagined that ſo ſtrange a thing ſhould come to paſſe, had hee liued in the time when Iſaiah vetered this?

The ſumme of all is, that ſuch ouerſhoote themſelues, as would meaſure this prophecie by their owne iudgement; becauſe it came from God, and therefore ſurpaſſeth our capacitie very much. There is alſo much more authoritic giuen to this prophecie, in that he ſets the watch in the name of God. If any obiect then, Thou telleſt things incredible, as if they were already come to paſſe. He answereth, I publiſh nothing at adventure; for he which is appointed a watch-man by the Prince, ſeeth that a ſarre off, which is vnknowne vnto others. Thus Iſaiah perceiued thoſe things by the reuelation of the holy Ghoſt, which others knew not of.

1. Sam. 9. 9.

Verſ. 7. And hee ſaw a chariot With two horſemen: a chariot of an aſſe, and a chariot of a camell: and he heare- ned, and rooke diligent heede.

8. And he cried, Alion. My Lord, I ſtand continually vpon the Watch-tower in the day time, and I am ſet in my watch euery night.

That which hee now addeth, contains a liuely deſcription of this diſcomfiture: for the Prophet publiſheth that which he vnderſtood from the watch-man, whom he had ſet in the tower by the commandement of God. He here brings in this watch-man loo- king a ſarre off, and reporting that which he ſaw: and as if hee had not ſcene cleerely enough at the firſt bliſh, he ſaith it was a chariot: but afterwards viewing it more circumſpectly, he ſaith there were two horſemen in this chariot. For our iudgement is darke and con- fuſed at the firſt, in regard of the nouclite of the matter, or by reason of the distance of place; and afterward as the thing approacheth neerer, so we iudge better of it. Now it is no wonder that matters belonging to men should be referred either to the Prophets, or to the visions of God: for we know that God takes vnto him the affections of men, that he may the better apply himselfe to our weakenes.

Lastly, he saw a Lion: by which some thinke Darius should be signified, who conquered and sacked Babylon, as it appears by the fifth Chapter of Daniel: Whereas the watchman saith he is continuallie vpon his watchtower day and night, it serues to confirme the prophesie; as if he should say, nothing is more certaine then this vision: for those whom God sends to watch, are neither blind, nor sleepe. In the meane while he exhorts and surres vp the faithfull by this example to be as attentive as himselfe; that by the light of the word they may discouer Gods power as farre off.

Verf. 9. And behold, this mans Chariot cometh With two horsemen. And he answered and said, Babel is fallen, and all the Images of her gods hath be broken vnto the ground.

BY this we plainly see that he brings not in the watchman of king Nabuzar: for this kind of speech fits not such a person; the Prophet then by Gods commandement publisheth what should fall out. Now this may be referred vnto Darius, and also vnto God, as well as to the watchman; howbeit, there is no great difference: for Darius being Gods seruant in this behalfe, it is no absurditie to bring him in heere as his Herald. There would be better shew of reason to apply it vnto God, in regard that Darius thought nothing lesse then that he was Gods seruant, when he caused the Idols of the Babylonians to be broken downe. But the matter coheres better to referre it to the watchman, euen as if the Angell should adde an interpretation to this prophesie.

There is a close opposition in this place betwene the liuing God, and dead Idols. This phrase of speech also is to be noted, in that he calles them Images of God. For the Babylonians knew well enough (which all Idolaters doe in a manner confesse) that their Images were no Gods: notwithstanding, they attributed vnto them a diuine power. But when men are come to that passe, they turne the truth of God into a lye; yea, they utterlie renounce him. But occasion will be offered vs hereafter, where we shall speake of this matter more at large. We heere see that the ruin of Babylon was as a iust punishment for her Idolatrie: for the Prophet shewes the cause thereof, when he saith, that God could not indure she should glorie in her Idols.

Verf. 10. O my threshing, and the corne of my floore: that which I haue heard of the Lord of hostes the God of Israel, haue I shewed vnto you.

BECAUSE the riches of this so mightie a Monarchie dazed the eyes of all, by the brightness thereof, it might be esteemed but a fabulous matter whatioeuer the Prophet foretold touching the destruction of it. That is the reason why he draws the minds of the faithfull vnto God, that so they might know it is he alone who tooke in hand to roote Babylon out, and that such greatnes should not come to ruine at mens appetites, but by his power only. The threshing and somes of the floore, are taken for one and the same thing: for it is an vsuall phrase of speech among the Hebrues, who are wont to repeat one thing often.

This place is diligentlie to be noted, to correct a vice naturallie grafted in vs; namely, when we measure Gods power by our own ell. For his counsell not only farre surpasseth our weak reach, but we are also ill Iudges, and deprauers of his works: neither can we be brought to see the greatnes of them further forth then our owne skill and wit stretcheth. But Gods infinit power ought alwaies to present it selfe before vs: and then especially when our own wit and reason is brought to the last cast: as when the Church is oppressed with tyrants, that it seemes past hope of recouerie, yet euen then let vs know that the Lord will bring them to nothing; and by treading their pride vnder foot, and by breaking their power, will shew that it is his threshing. For y^e Prophet foretold this of no mean or common person, but of the mightiest and most flourishing Monarchie of the world, by how much the more then such are exalted, so much the sooner shall their destruction come vpon them, and the Lord shall send his threshers amongst them.

We are also to know that the example of this incredible ruin which the Lord here sets before vs, appertaines to such as are partakers with them in their sinnes. When he saith he heard this of the Lord of hostes, it is as it were a scale to ratifie the prophesie: for he protesteth that he broached none of his owne coniectures, but received them of the Lord himselfe. Wherein we may note that Gods seruants ought to be furnished with this assurance, that they speake in the name of God, as the Apostle Peter witnesseth; Let him that speakes (saith he) speake as the words of God, 1. Pet. 4. 11. For seducers will brag much of the name of God, but his faithfull seruants are assured in their consciences that they haue published nothing but that which God hath commanded them. We may also obserue that this confirmation was exceeding necessarie, because the whole world (as it were) quaked vnder the puissance of so mightie a Monarchie.

But it is not without good cause that he adornes God with these two epithites, calling him the Lord of hostes, and God of Israel. As touching the first, it is true that it alwaies agrees vnto God: but doubtlesse the Prophet

Wee must expect the restoration of the church when it seemes she is past recouerie.

* Or, the fountes.

* corne of my floore: that which I haue had a ſpeciall regard therein now vnto the preſent matter; oppoſing the power of God againſt all the forces of the Babylonians. For the Lord hath not one hoſt alone, but infinite hoſtes for the bringing downe of his enemies. He is called the God of Iſrael, becauſe he ſhewed himſelfe to be the protector and defence of his people, in the deſtruction of the Babylonians: for the Iewes were then ſet at libertie, when this Monarchie was abolithed. In a word, all things are done here in fauour of the Church; to which the Prophet hath a ſpeciall eye. For he teacheth not the Babylonians, who would haue condemned theſe prophecies; but the faithfull, that they might be aſſured that God had a ſpeciall care of them, howſocuer the Babylonians moleſted them, and had ſcattered them here and there.

Verſ. 11. The burden of Dumah. Hee calleth vnto me out of Seir; Watchman, what was in the night? watchman, what was in the night?

The cauſe of this propheſie againſt Dumah not certaineſie knowne.

IT appeares by the 25. Chapter, verſ. 14. of Genetiſ, that this people came of Iſmaels ſonne, to whom this name is giuen: for which cauſe his ſucceſſors were called Dumans. The certaine cauſe of the deſtruction which is here denounced againſt them, is not knowne: and this propheſie is ſo much the more obſcure, by reaſon of the briefneſſe of it. Yet we muſt alwaies remember what I touched before; to wit, that the Iewes were to be fortified againſt the horrible offences which were at hand. For when ſo many ſeueral changes fall out, eſpecially if the world be ſo moued, that all things are confuſed; we then begin to be troubled, doubting in our ſelues whether things fall out by chance, or whether they be gouerned by the providence of God. For this cauſe the Lord telleth vs, that he is the authour of this change, and renueth the face of the world; to teach vs that nothing is permanent here below, that ſo we might with our whole heart aſpire to that Kingdome of Chriſt which onely is perpetuall.

The reaſon of it in reſpect of the Iewes.

In regard then that theſe changes were neere, it was needfull the Iewes ſhould be aduertified of it aforehand, that when they ſaw them come to paſſe, theſe things might be called to minde, that therein they might behold the providence of God, and ſo gather increaſe of faith. Neither is it to be doubted but the Iewes were carried with diuers diſtractions of minde to and fro, in ſeeing the world ſo shaken on all ſides, and therefore ſought by all meanes they might, to auoid theſe waues and tempeſts. For it is our deſire alwaies to be in ſuch a place of ſafetie, as we may be free from all danger of gunſhor, as they ſay. Some of them peraduenture then might ſeek ſome other place of aboad, the better to prouide for their owne affaires; but when the miſchiefe ſhould preſſe them on euerie ſide, this might make them tarry at home; and admoniſhed them that they could ſhinde no better or ſafer habitation then in the companie of the faithfull.

By this example alſo many might be aduertified, who for feare of dangers, ſeparated themſelues from the Church; thinking they could finde none greater out of it. The Iewes then might be ſollicit with ſuch thoughts: for we haue ſeene in the eight Chapter, that they had reſtleſſe mindes. Seeing then they were thus in doubt, that they ranne to ſtrangers for ſuccour; they might eaſilie be out of heart. And therefore as I take it, this is the principall reaſon why Iſaiab thus denounceth the ruine of the Dumans; namely, that the Iewes might willingly put themſelues vnder Gods protection, and aboute all things might recommend the ſafetie of the Church vnto him.

Let vs hence learne to keepe our ſelues in the lap of Gods Church, be it that we ſee her aſſicted with diuers and ſundry calamities; and let vs rather gladly ſuſteine thoſe lo- uing chaſtiſements which are proper to her children, then to wander abroad to drinke the lees and dregs which ſhall ſtrangle and choke the wicked. For if the children be thus chaſtiſed, what ſhall become of the ſtrangers and reprobates? It may be alſo that the Dumans moleſted Gods people, whilſt their neighbours aſſailed them on all ſides.

We ought to keepe our ſelues in the lap of Gods Church, though we ſee her ſuffer ſundry trials. I. Pet. 4. 17. 18.

Of Seir.] It was a mountaine of Idumea, as it appeareth, Gen. 14. 6. And vnder the name of this mountaine, hee comprehendeth the whole Kingdome. Now in this place he repreſents, as in a glaſſe, thoſe things which had neede of words of vehemencie. And ſeeing the Idumeans asked the watchman what was in the night? it is very likely they were not farre off, and were in hazard of the common danger: for he brings them not in inquiring, as curious to know what newes; but they aſke what the watch ſaw in the night: as when one inquires, then comes another; and the third will come and doe the like. Hereunto tends the repetition, that it was not one alone that inquired, but many; as men are wont to doe when things are doubtfull and perplexed, when euery one affrighted in himſelfe, giues credit to nothing that is told them.

Verſ. 12. The Watchmen ſaid; The morning commeth, and alſo the night: if yee will aſke, enquire: returne and come.

HIS meaning is, that this feare ſhall not laſt a day onely, or ſome little ſpace: as if the watchman ſhould answer, I will tell you that to morrow which I told you to day; and if you feare now, you ſhall alſo feare to morrow. Now it is a moſt miſerable condition, when men are ſo troubled, as they hang in ſuſpence whether they ſhall liue or die; it being that extreme curſe, wherewith the Lord threatens the wicked by Mofes, Who will warrant me till the euening? And when the euening is come, who will let mee ſee the morning? Deut. 28. 67. True it is, that the faithfull are inuironed about with many dangers:

gers: but they know that themselves and their lues are in the hand of God: and therefore they see life in the middell of the horrors of death; or at the least they asswage their feares and perturbations by hope and patience. But the wicked alwaies tremble, and are not onely vexed with feare, but they also consume away in their troubles.

That which is by and by added, retourne, and come: may be expounded two waies; either that they shall lose their labour in running vp and downe without ceasing: or else thus, if any of you be better aduised, get you to Dumah, and there they shall meete with more feares then in the countrie, for they shall finde rest in no place whatsoeuer. Now in regard that God hath alwaies a care of his Church, wee shall finde no place of refuge more safe then there, yea, although we should compasse sea and land.

Verf. 13. The burden against Arabia. In the forest of Arabia shall ye carrie all night, euen in the waies of Dedanim.

The reason of this burden against Arabia.

Now he comes to the Arabians, foretelling that they also must keepe their turn in meeting with Gods iudgement, and all to the end hee might exempt no one region which were knowne to the Lewes. Now hee shewes that they shall be surprized with so great feare, that they shall forsake their owne houses to flie into the forest. Then he names the place whither they shall flie, to wit, Dedanim.

Verf. 14. O Inhabitants of the land of Tema: bring forth water to meete the thirstie, and preuent him that sleeth with his bread.

HE now amplifies that trembling, wherewith God had determined so feuerely to smite the Arabians, that they should thinke of nothing else but of their flight, so as they should not haue so much leisure as to provide them of necessarie things for their voyage. Isaiah then tels them that they shall come into the region of Dedanim empty and destitute of all things, not hauing any food at all to susteine their life. And therefore he exhorts the Inhabitants there to meete them with bread and water: for otherwise they should perish by reason of extreame want. I know that others expound this place otherwise, for they thinke the Prophet derides the Arabians, who had in curish and cruell to the Lewes: as if he should say, you would now be glad to beate water to those that are athirst: but this exposition is too constrained. And yet I denie not but their crueltie was sufficientie recompenced, when they were faine to run on this maner to and fro. Notwithstanding mine exposition is more simple, to wit, that the Arabians should be in miserable a case during their flight, that they should not haue so much as a little water: and therefore must needs perish for thirst, ylesse some came in time to succor them: and he also tels them that they should haue no lesse neede of bread then of water. He calles their neighbours to relieue them, not as exhorting them to doe their dutie, but that he might expresse the matter the more clearly. He commands then to bring forth their bread, not as though they deserued it, but because they stood in neede by reason of extreame want. Yet in as much as the law of nature requires this dutie, the Prophet closely intimates, that the vnworthie & hungrie are defrauded of their bread, whē men refuse to supplie their needs.

Verf. 15. For they flee from the drawne sword, euen from the drawne sword; and from the bent bow, and from the grieuousnes of warre.

His meaning is, that the calamitie shall be so fearefull, that the Arabians shall not flee without cause: the reason is, because the enemies shall pursue them so hotlie with swords and weapons, that they shall not be able to saue themselves by flight. It is manifest enough why he mentioneth this discomfiture: for the Lewes were to be admonished in time of that which was afterwar to fall out, that they might know the world was gouerned by the prouidēce of God and not by chance: and that by other mens harmes they might learne to see God the Iudge of all nations which way soeuer they turned their eyes. But it is not knowne, neither doe histories make mention whether the Arabians were the enemies of the Lewes or no. Howsoeuer it be, it is certaine that these things are set downe for the consolation of the faithfull, to the end they might behold Gods iustice executed vpon all nations, and might also acknowledge that his tribunall seate was erected and set vp in Ierusalem, from out of which he should passe iudgement against the whole world.

Verf. 16. For thus hath the Lord said unto me, yet a yeere according to the yeres of an hireling, and all the glorie of Kedar shall faile.

HE also addes that the calamitie wherof he hath prophesied was neere to the Arabians, which serued greatlie for the consolation of the faithfull. For our passions do naturallie boile so within vs, that wee can not indure to be deferred any long time: the Lord therefore hath respect to our weaknes when he saith, that he will put his hand to the worke. For this cause the Prophet shewes that he foretels things which should not be long before they came to passe, that so the Lewes might with the more courage beare their afflictions, out of which they were to assure themselves to be deliuered in short space. We haue spoken heretofore of the similitude of the yeere of an hireling, which he now addeth the better to expresse the matter: for it is all one in effect as if he had said, Be of good cheere, the time shall not be prolonged. The
prophane

profane authors haue vſed this ſimilitude, when they would expreſſe a ſet and deſired time : as a place of Honour teſtiſeth, where he faith; that the day ſeemes long to thoſe which labour, and are to giue vp an account of their taſke.

Verſ. 17. And the reſidue of the ſtrong Archers of the ſonnes of Kedar ſhall be few : for the Lord God of Iſrael hath ſpoken it.

And the reſidue.] He affirmeth that this calanitic ſhal not be as yet the end of their puniſhments; becauſe that which yet remains to Arabia, ſhall vaniſh by little and little : as if he ſhould ſay; The Lord will not onely impoveriſh the Arabians by warre, but will purſue them to the vtmoſt, till all hope of ſuccour be cleane taken away from them, and that they be cut off. For ſuch are the iudgements of God which hee executeth vpon the wicked. Whereas on the conſtrarie, he mitigates and tempers the ſtripes wherewith he ſmites his children, leſt they ſhould be quite out of heart. By the ſtrong, he means the warlike men that are ſit to beare armes, ſaying; that euen they in the end ſhall drop away, although they eſcaped it in the firſt deſtruction. True it is that hee hath threatened the Iews heretofore with the like plagues; but he alwaies added ſome promiſe, either to aſſuage the burthen of them, or at the leaſt that they ſhould not bee too much out of heart. For it may fall out ſometimes, that the children of God ſhall be ſomewhat ſharply afflicted then the vnbeleeuers; but the hope of fauour which is ſet before them, puts a difference betwene them and the reſt of the world. Now when we heare that God executes ſuch horrible iudgements vpon the wicked; is it that we ſhould be troubled when we fall into ſore temptations? Nay, rather we ought to gather this conſolation, that he will chaſtiſe vs gently, and not condemne vs to death.

The God of Iſrael.] The Prophet teacheth, as we haue heretofore ſcene, that we are not onely to know that theſe things fell out by the diuine prouidence; but that the God whom Iſrael worſhipped, had ſo ordained them to come to paſſe. For all men are ſometimes conſtrained to reuerence God, albeit they beare themſelues in hand, that things are guided by fortune; becauſe theſe thoughts enter now and then into the mindes of the moſt rebellious, as well in proſperitie as in aduerſitie, that certaine there is a God in heauen : but yet they forge a kind of diuine power, according to their own fantaſie, whether in heauen or in earth. Becauſe then profane men imagine a God in their owne braine, therein ſhowing their vanitie and beaſtlineſſe; the Prophet brings backe the Iews to that God whom they worſhipped, to the end they might acknowledge, that it was in him in whom their felicitie conſiſted, becauſe he receiued them into his ſafeguard and protection. For it is not enough that we honour ſome God at random, who gouernes the world; but wee ought to know the true God, who hath reuealed and manifeſted himſelfe vnto vs in the perſon of his Sonne Chriſt. Yea, we ought to note this diligently againſt all profane thoughts of many, who forge I know not what conſuſed diuinity, becauſe they dare not plainly deny that there is a God.

HORACE.

Though the faithfull are ſometimes more ſharply afflicted then the wicked.

THE XXII. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. The burden of the valley of viſion. What aileth thee now that thou art wholly gone vp into the hoſe toppes?

Or, what haſt thou to doe here?

Iſaiah prophecieth againe againſt Iudea: which he names the valley of viſion. And he rather attributes this title to whole Iudea, then to Ieruſalem, of which he will ſpeake afterwards: but now in the Preface hee comprehends the whole land. He calles it a valley for iuſt cauſe; for it was inuironed on every ſide with mountaines. The ſimilitude receiued by many; namely, that Ieruſalem is called a valley, becauſe ſhe ſhould be debaſed from her dignitie, is ſomewhat too much conſtrained. It is well enough knowne why the word viſion is added; to wit, becauſe the Lord had enlightned all Iudea with his word: the Prophet were euer reſident there, who for that cauſe were alſo called Seers. 1. Sam. 9. 9. And here in there is a cloſe oppoſition; for there is leſſe light in the valleys, then in places that are plaine and open; becauſe the height of the mountaines hinder the light. Yet notwithstanding all this, he ſhewes that this valley is more cleere, then thoſe regions that lie open on all ſides to the light of the Sunne: which doubtleſſe came to paſſe by the ſingular goodneſſe of God. For his meaning is not, that it was enlightened by the beames of the Sunne, but with the word of God. Beſides, no doubt but the Prophet meant to caſt downe that vaine and fooliſh confidence wherewith the Iews were puff'd vp, in regard that God had beautified them with excellent priuiledges about others: for they deceiued themſelues whiſt they thought, that becauſe they had the word and the propheties, they were therefore fenced againſt all dangers; notwithstanding their diſobedience and rebellion againſt God. His meaning then is, that theſe viſions ſhould not hinder the Lord to auenge himſelfe vpon their vnthankfulneſſe: nay, by this note of thankfulness, he aggravates their crime; that in so great light of the heavenly truth, they ceased not to stumble, as if they had been utterly destitute of it.

The reaſon why Iudea is called a valley.

The reaſon why it is called the valley of viſion.

W hat hast thou to doe here?] He now bends his speech to Ierusalem; not that this destruction concerned that Citie alone, but because the whole land thought themselves secured vnder the shadow of the Sanctuarie, which was in it: as also that the Iewes might thinke what was like to befall them, if this Citie which was so well furnished, should be thus dealt withall. He asks by way of admiration, whence it comes that euerie one left his house, fleeing to the tops thereof to saue their liues. Now the roofes of the Iewes houses were made otherwise then ours are: and thence it is that Iesus Christ saith, What I tell you in the eare, that preach you on the house tops: Mat. 10. 27. When the inhabitants of Ierusalem then fled to the tops of their houses, and left the houses themselves to the wils of their enemies, it was a signe that they were exceedingly flighted. They might all get vp thither to chase away their enemies with darts and arrowes: but his meaning rather is, that the enemy constrained them to runne vp thither, because they were not onely amazed at their coming, but also fled for feare: yet so, as their flight should not saue them.

Verf. 2. Thou that art full of noise, a Citie full of brute, a toyous Citie: thy slaine men shall not bee slaine with sword, nor die in battell.

Or, are not slaine.

His meaning is, that it was peopled and full of inhabitants; because there is great noise where many people are gathered together, neither can the feare there be so great. Isaiah adds this by way of amplification; to wit, that whereas being a sufficient number, they should haue been vpon the walles and ramparts to defend the Citie, they like cowards gaue place to the enemies, and fled vp to the tops of their houses. He therefore professeth the Iewes the more neerely with these words, that they might duly weigh the iudgement of God: for when mens hearts are cast downe with so great feare, it is certaine that such an astonishment is sent of God. It is as much the as if the Prophet had said; Whence comes it that thou hast no more courage to resist? Surely because the Lord himselfe chafeth and pursueth thee.

Now this doctrine is taken out of the 28. of Deuteronomie: for we haue often said, that the Prophets doe many times borrow sentences out of Moses, to serue their turne withall: onely the difference is, that they apply that particularly, which Moses spake in generall. The Prophet reprocheth the Iewes then with this their calamitie very iustly: for it was fit they should be touched to the quicke, to the end they might learne that all the trouble and euils which they indured, happened to them in regard of their trespasses and sins. For the Lord had promised them continuall assistance: but being now left of him, they were to confesse themselves vnworthy of his aid, and that they had caused the Lord to recoile backe from them by their rebellions.

The Lord neuer deceiues, neither promisseth he any thing in vaine: but these poore wretches are depriued of his loue and fauor by their owne default: which is yet better expressed by that interrogation which followeth; What hast thou to doe here? For it is as much as if by the present act, he shewed that Ierusalem is left destitute of her protectour and defender: because this manner of speech signifies as much as some strange and vnwonted thing. And to the end he might the better set forth the vengeance of God, hee telles them that those which were slaine, died not like valiant men in battell; but that they died onely for want of heart and courage: for this womanish and timorous heart, was a sure token to them that they were all left of God; whose assistance if they had had, they should boldly and manfully haue made resistance. So then hee not onely affirms that this discomfort was accompanied with shame and dishonour; but he also attributes the want of heart and courage to resist to the wrath and anger of God: neither is it to be doubted, but by the circumstance of this their flight, hee beates downe their vaine arrogance and pride.

Verf. 3. All thy Princes shall flee together from the bowe: they shall bee bound: all that shall be found in thee, shall bee bound together, which haue fled from furre.

This verse is expounded diuers waies. The matter in it selfe is cleere enough: but there is some difficultie in the words. Now because the letter Mem signifies Before; some expound the word Merachok They fled before others: who notwithstanding were neerer vnto danger, in regard they dwelt vpon the borders of the Countie. Others thus, Although they were very far off from Ierusalem, yet they ranne away as men possessed with feare, who flee without stay, thinking that they haue the enemy alwaies at their heeles. But I take this sense to bee better agreeing; They ranne farre off: that is to say, those who fled to Ierusalem, as to a Sanctuarie, shall bee taken and bound by the enemies.

Now Ierusalem was as the common Citie of refuge for the whole Countie of Iudea: and therefore after any warre was begun, the inhabitants on all sides drew themselves thither. But they were surprised, notwithstanding they thought it such a place of safetie. Some reterre this to the siege of Senacherib: ^{2. King. 18.} but I cannot be led by any means to expound it so, because hee speaks of the destruction of Ierusalem. But we know when it was besieged by Senacherib, the Lord deliuered it forthwith; neither was there any taken or bound, neither was any slaine there. These things fell out then a long time after the ^{13.} ^{2. King. 39.} ^{15.} ^{2. King. 24.} ^{12.} Prophets

Prophets death: and the holie hiſtorie witneſſeth the ſame: as alſo that the Princes determined to flee when this calamitie hapned:
but neither their flight to Jeruſalem, nor their running away from it did them any good at all, becauſe they fell into the hands of the enemies.

In that he ſpeakes expreſſie of the Princes, it aggravates the indignitie of the fact, for they ſhould have been the ſormoſt in ven-tring of their lives for the ſafety of the people, no leſſe then if they had bin their ſhields and bucklers to ſuſtaine and defend them.

1 But Jeruſalem being now in her flouriſhing eſtate and in great proſperitie, theſe things might ſeeme incredible, becauſe it was a 2 ſtrong and well fenced Citie: beſides, it boa ſteth chieflie in this, that it was vnder Gods protection. For the people thought that God was faſt ſincked (as you would ſay) to the Temple which was amongſt them, of which they bragged in ſuch wiſe, that they perſwaded themſelves they could not be hurt by any power or forces whatſocuer, though the whole world ſhould conſpire their deſtruction. This propheſie therefore might ſeeme very ſtrange, to wit, that they ſhould become heardleſſe, and betake them to their heeles, and yet ſhould not eſcape this way neither.

Iere.7.4.

Verſ.4. Therefore ſaid I, Turne away from me: I will weepe bitterlie: labour not to comfort me for the deſtruction of the daughter of my people.

TO the end the Prophet might affect the hearts of the Iewes the more with this calamitie he takes vpon him the perſon of a mourner: and not that only, but with bitter lamentation he bewailes the deſolation of Gods Church. For this place muſt not be expounded like the former, wherein he expreſ-ſed and ſet forth the ſorrow and heauines of forreine nations: But in regard he ſpeakes heere of the afflictions of the Church whereof himſelfe was a member, he hath good cauſe to mourne in good earneſt, and to call vpon others to lament with him. That which happens to the Church then in generall, ought no leſſe to moue vs, then if each of vs felt the miſerie vpon himſelfe in particular: otherwiſe where ſhall this ſentence be verified,
The zeale of thy houſe hath eaten me vp?
Pſal.69.10. Now the Prophet mournes not apart nor in ſecret without witneſſes, firſt, 1 becauſe he meant (as I ſaid euen now) to prouoke others by his example not onely to mourne and weepe, but rather to repent, that ſo they might prevent the iudgement of God which hung ouer their heads, and might prouoke him no more for the time to come.
2 Secondlie, to the end that himſelfe who was as the herald and meſſenger of God, might publish and declare the wrath that was like to fall vpon them; ſhewing by this his owne deed, that it was no vaine thing which he ſpoke.

We may eaſilie gather from that which is added, that the Prophet ſpoke that with his mouth which he felt in his heart when he ſaith, I will weepe bitterlie for the daughter of my people: for himſelfe being one of Abrahams of-ſpring, he could not but be touched to the quick with this common calamitie, and therefore teſtifies, y he hath juſt cauſe to mourne.

He calles the daughter the aſſemble of the people, according to y vſuall phraſe. Whence we may note, that when the Church is afflicted we ought to be moued with compa-ſion by the example of the Prophet, vnleſſe wee be more then yron hearted. For we acviterlie vnworthie to be numbred among the children of God, or to be accounted among the communion of Saints; vnleſſe our ſelues, with all we enjoy, be in ſuch wife conſecrated vnto her, that nothing can ſeparate vs by any meanes from her. Therefore in ſeeing the Church fo many waies, and with ſuch diuers calamities afflicted at this day, and an infinie number of ſoules to periſh, whom Ieſus Chriſt hath redeemed with his precious blood, muſt we not needs be cruell and barbarous if we be moued with no ſorrow at all? Eſpeciallie the Miniſters of the word ought to be thro-wlie touched with the feeling of this ſor-row: for as they are held for the watchmen, and therefore can ſee further off, ſo alſo ought they to ſigh when they perceiue the ſignes of a ſcattering of the ſheepe to be at hand.

We ought to be thowlie touched with ſorrow for the Church affliction, vnleſſe we will proue our ſelues yronhearted.

Now the Prophets publike teares ſerued (as we haue ſaid) to breake the hearts of the people: for he had to doe with men of ſuch obſtinacie, as could not eaſilie be brought to lament. There is a place almoſt like vnto this in Ieremias, where he bewailes the deſtruction and ſcattering of the people, ſaying, that his ſoule fainted with ſorrow, Iere.4.31. And in another place, Who will graunt that my head might be filled with waters, and that mine eyes might be a fountaine of teares to weepe day and night for the ſlaine of the daughter of my people? Iere.9.1. When the Prophets perceiued they labored in vaine to breake the hard hearts of this people, ſurely they could not chuſe but be ouerwhelmed with griefe and ſorrow, and therefore they indeuored by all meanes to mollifie y hearts of the obſtinate, that if it were poſſible they might be bowed and brought back againe into the right way.

Iere.9.2.

Verſ.5. For it is a day of trouble, and of ruin and of perplexitie by the Lord of hoſts in the valley of viſion, breaking downe the Citie: and a crying vnto the mountaines.

HE againe ſignifies that the Lord is the Author of this fearefull iudgement: and to the end the Iewes might not gaze heere and there, wondering that the enemies ſhould get the vpper hand, he tels them plainly that they fight againſt God himſelfe. Now albeit we often meeete with this doctrine in the holie Scriptures, yet notwithstanding it is no way ſuperfluous, neither can it be fo often repeated but we forget it when we are to praetiſe it.

Though it be often told vs
that God is the author of our afflictions,
yet we forget
it when we ſhould put this knowledge in practice.

it: thence it is that we humble not our selues before our Iudge, but cast our eyes rather vpon men and externall meanes, then vpon God, who would easlie remedie our euils.

By day, he meanes a time prefixed, according to the vsuall prafe of the Scripture; because it seemes that God yeelds ouer his right for a time, when he winkes at mens wickednesse: but he forthwith recouers it againe in that season that himselfe hath appointed. Now it is not for nought that he names the valley of vision againe: for the Iewes thought themselves secured from all dangers, because it pleased God to enlighten them by his word. But because they did vnthankfully reject the doctrine thereof, it was but a vaine confidence, to thinke the bare inioying of it should any way profit them: for the Lord not onely punisheth the infidelitie of those that are out of the Church, but that also of the Church it selfe. Nay, rather he begins to manifest his anger against it first; for he will not indure to haue his graces abused, nor that men should boast of his titles in vaine. That which is added touching

The cry of the mountaine, it may be referred to God, to the Caldeans, and to those also which fled; because the vanquishers raised vp a cry to augment the terrour: but the vanquished either cried for mercie and fidelitie, or else testified their sorrow by teares & weepings. The singular number may also be take for the plurall, or else it is meant of that side of the Citie in which the Temple was built. Both expositions agree to the text; and there is no great difference whether we say, That the enemies cried from the mountaine of Zion, to encourage one another: or that their cry was heard of the neighbour mountaines, when they pillaged and destroyed the Citie: or that the citizens themselves made their lamentations found to the mountaines which inuirted the plaine of Iordan.

Verf. 6. And Elam bare the quier in a mans chariot with horsemen: and Kir vncouered the shield.

The expositours are of opinion that this is a continued speech, & that the Prophet denounceth the same iudgement against the Iewes, that he had done before. But when I consider all things aduisedly, I am enforced to bee of the contrarie opinion: for I thinke the Prophet vbraides the Iewes with their obstinacie and rebellion, for that they repented not, albeit the Lord had chastised them: and thus he repeats the historie of the time past, to put them in remembrance that God his chastisements had done them no good. Thus should these things bee distinguished from the former. In the other verses he foretold what should happen to the Iewes: but now he shewes that they are iustly punished, and that they haue deserued these violent blowes wherewithall the Lord smites them.

For hee had called them to repentance not onely by his word, but also by most wofull efects: yet had they shewed none amendement at all, notwithstanding that their wealth was wasted, and the Kingdome weakened; but proudly persisted in their rebellion. There remained nothing the but y^e Lord should bring heauie iudgements vpon them, seeing they thus persisted in their obstinacy and rebellion.

Now I haue translated this Hebrew conjunction Vau, by way of opposition; it being often taken in this sense. Those who thinke the Prophet threatens in the time to come, retaine the proper sense: as if the Prophet hauing made mention of God, should by and by adde the executioners of his vengeance. But I haue already shewed what exposition I haue approued; and it shall appeare hereafter by the course of the text, that mine opinion is not without good reason. In that hee names the Elamites, and the Kirenians, it agrees better, as I take it, to the Assyrians, then to the Babylonians. For although these nations did neuer make war vpon the Iewes by their owne instint; yet is it very likely that they were in wages with the King of Assyria, and occupied a place in his host, when he besieged Ierusalem. Now we haue said already, that by the Elamites are meant the Esterne people: and vnder the name of Kir, it is certaine that the Prophet comprehends the Kirenians. And because they bare shields, he saith, they discouered them; because they drew them forth of their cases, when they entred into the battell. Whereas some translate, In the chariot of horsemen; I reiect it not: yet had I rather render the words of the Prophet, word for word: for I thinke he meanes a chariot of warre. They vsed then two sorts of chariots; one serued to beare the baggage; and the other to fight in. Now the Prophet speaks of those wherupon the horsemen were mounted.

Verf. 7. And thy chiefe vallies were full of Chariots: and the horsemen set themselves in array against the gates. Or, and thus it came to passe, &c.

If this be a threat, it should be expounded in the time to come; to wit, And it shall come to passe. But because the words following are put in the time past, and that it appeares the Prophet speaks of things already fallen out, I haue not been afraid to appropriate this beginning to that which is by and by added.

The chiefe of the vallies, is taken for faire and fruitfull. Now he puts the Iewes in mind of these distresses, into which they were brought by Senachirib whilst hee besieged them, and whilst the enemies were before the gates of the Citie: for then ought they to haue fled vnto God for succour. But then did these poore Iewes runne so much the further away from him, and the more shamefully did they manifest their rebellion herein, shewing themselves vtterly desperate. Therefore is it that hee vbraides them with this obstinate rebellion.

Verf. 8.

See the exposition of the eleuenth verse, for that giues light to this.

* Or, carried away.

Verſ. 8. And he diſcovered the covering of Iudab: and thou didſt looke in that day to the armour of the houſe of the forreſt.

HE ſhewes in what anguiſh the Iewes were when they were thus hardlie beſieged. Some reſerre this ſpeech vnto God, others to the enemies: but I had rather take it indiſtinitie; for he hath carried away, is a phraſe of ſpeech uſed of the Hebrewes, that is, the covering of Iudab was, carried away. By the word covering, all almoſt vnderſtand the Temple, or the name of God it ſelfe, vnder which the Iewes falſlie bragged. But for mine owne part I take it more ſimple for their Armorie, wherein they ſhut vp (as in a moſt ſecret place) their inſtruments and furniture for the warre. For he calles it not a covering, as if theſe things were not diſcouered to all, but becauſe they were laid vp in a place put a part or ſeuered. And thus hee ſets that forth which we ſee to happen in great hurlie bulies, for then euery one runnes to his weapon, bringing out the munitions for war which were hidden before.

The latter member is ioined with this, to wit, that they then ſearched diligencie euery place where they might get weapons in ſuch an extreme neceſſitie, becauſe the furniture for warre had been had a long time whileſt they enjoyed peace. Now the holie hitorie witneſſeth that Sabmon had built this houſe of the forreſt, that all the armor and inſtruments of warre might be laid vp there. The change of the perſon in this word ſhow, darkens not the ſenſe, but rather confirms that which I haue ſaid, to wit, that the Prophet recites after what maner the Iewes were letted in making preparations to defend the Citie.

Verſ. 9. And ye haue ſeene the breaches of the citie of Dauid, for they were many: and ye gathered the waters of the lower poole.

HE continues forth his diſcourſe, for whilſt matters go well, and that all things are in quiet, men care not greatly neither for munition, nor for warlike furniture: nothing but neceſſitie awakens men, and makes them careful: peace and reſt makes vs become lazie & ſlothfull. As long then as they thought themſelves free from gunshot, they neglected to make vp the breaches of the walles: but when the drum once ſtroke vp, then they gaue themſelves to the care of theſe things, and to take order for letting the enemy fro getting paſſage. By the Citie of Dauid, hee means the miſt of the Citie, which was diuided into two parts, which we may ſee in many Cities. Ieruſalem was enuironed with walles, and ditched round about: but this middle place was the ſtrongeſt forreſſe they had, and it was called the Citie of Dauid. The Temple alſo was fortified, ſo as the Citie was diuided as it were into three. Now Iſaiab meant to ſay that the Iewes had almoſt loſt all hope of ſauing the Citie when they thus retired into the middlemoſt, which was ſtronger then all the reſt. And it appears vey well by the holie hitorie that their caſe was very deſperate. Thus wee may alſo gather, that the propheſies were not gathered in order, ſo as they which put them into one volume did not ſtand much vpon the circumſtance of the time. He addes, the waters were gathered for their neceſſitie, that the neceſſities of thoſe which were beſieged might be ſupplied therewith, and thus the poole ſerued them for a Ciſterne.

Verſ. 10. And ye numbred the houſes of Ieruſalem, and the houſes haue ye broken downe to fortifie the wall.

HIS meaning is, that they viewed the Citie narrowlie and on euery ſide, that no houſe nor building might annoy the defence of it. Others ſay that the houſes were numbred that they might haue watchmen out of them: but the firſt expoſition ſeemes the firſt, for it is confirmed by that which is added after, that there were houſes broken downe to repaire the walles of the Citie. We make no reckning of theſe things in the time of peace: and oftentimes men of meane eſtate will build houſes euen vpon the very ramparts, therefore they muſt be pulled downe in time of warre, that from thence they may fight and repulle the enemy; and alſo leſt any ſhould haue any ſecret ſpeech with the enemy, if houſes were ſo iuxta the walles.

Verſ. 11. *And haue alſo made a ditch betweene the two walles for the waters of the old poole, and haue not looked to the maker thereof, neither had reſpect vnto him that formed it.

THE firſt part of this verſe is conioined with that which hath been expounded heretofore; for his meaning is that they were put to their plunges, and ſo ſlighted with imminent danger, that they were driuen to uſe all meanes poſſible to fortifie themſelves againſt the enemy. In the ſecond part of the verſe he taxeth their ſenſeleſnes, in being ſo taken vp with ſeeking after worldlie helps, that they forgotte that which was the principall. For whereas they ſhould firſt haue had their recourſe vnto God, they neglected it, in contriuing of ditches, ramparts, walles, and other defences of warre, and yet did their chiefe defence all this while reſt in God. Now then it appears that that which I ſaide in the beginning is true, to wit, that he foretels not here the deſtruction of the Iewes, but only puts them in minde of that they had felt in former time: that from thence he might take occaſion to ſhew how iuſtlie the Lord was angie with them, becauſe no chaſtiſement nor correction whatſoeuer could amend them. For their extreme dangers into which they were fallen, ought to haue admoniſhed them of their impiecie and contempt of God, but they became ſo much the more hardened.

hardened. And yet there is scarcely any man 1 so obstinate, who in time of aduersitie, and 2 especially in the midst of great dangers,
 3 but comes to himselfe, and by himselfe alone
 4 considers that he is iustly punished, that hee hath offended God, and prouoked his wrath against him. But the Prophet saith, that not so much as one of the Iewes remembred God in these great calamities, and that therefore the Lord had good cause to leaue them, without thinking anie more vpon them.

From hence let vs gather, that it is a signe of a desperate impietic, when men amend not for the rods and scourges which are laid vpon them. First of all wee ought to follow
 1 God cheerefully, and to yeeld him voluntary
 2 obedience: secondly, as soone as he chastiseth
 3 and correcteth vs, we are forthwith to repent vs. But if his rod doe vs no good, what remains but that God must double his blowes, and make vs feeble them in such se-ueritie, that we at the last be brought to ve-ter destruction by them? This doctrine is most fitting for this season, wherein God calles vs to repentance by so many of his scourges and afflictions. But seeing there is no repentance, what are wee to looke for,
 but that God should vtterlie cut vs off,
 hauing before vsed all meanes possible?

To him that made it. Hee dolefully cōfesseth by these words, y God absolutely condemns not y care we haue to resist our enemies, & to avoid dangers; but that false confidence which wee put in externall means. For our inconsiderate hastinesse is iustly condemned of disloyal-tie and high treason; when wee forsake God, to flie vnto swords and speares, to fortresses and bulwarkes. Let vs learne then to flie to him alone when dangers inuiron vs on all sides; and let vs runne with all the powers of our soule, to the assured fortresse of his holy name. This being done, then is it law-full to vse those meanes which hee giues vs:
 but all things will worke to our destruction, vnlesse we first of all put the hope of our safe-tie in his protection.

Hee calles God the workeman and maker of Ierusalem, because hee had his habitation there, and would there be called vpon. Now seeing this citie was the image of the church, this title also belongs to vs: for the Lord is called the Creator of the Church in a speciall regard. For howsoeuer this title appertaines to the creation of the whole world; yet this second creation whereby he deliues vs from death by regenerating and sanctifying vs, is a benefit which is peculiar to the elect: others haue no part of this. Now this title imports not a sudden act; but such a one as is constant and perpetuall: neither is the Church created once, to be left by and by; but the Lord defends and conserues it euen vnto the end: Thou wilt not despise the worke of thine hands, saith the Psalmist: so Paul testifieth, that hee which hath begunne a good worke, will accomplish it vnto the day of Christ.

And besides, this title contains in it a wonderfull consolation: for if God be the maker, then neede we not to feare, if so be we depend vpon his power and goodnesse. But we cannot cast our eyes vpon him, vnlesse we be indued with true humilitie & confidence;

 that being dispossest of all haughtinesse, and so brought to nothing, we be readie to attribute the whole glorie to him alone. Now this cannot be done, vnlesse herewithall we bee fully perswaded that our saluation is in his hand, being assured y we cannot perish;
 no not although a thousand deaths should compass vs about. Well, their fault then was the greater, in regard the prerogatiue of this Citie, which had been approued by so many euident signes, could not yet prouoke the Iewes to commit themselues vnto Gods protection: As if he should say; What folly is it for you to thinke to keepe the Citie, when you despise the workeman that made it?

Loq. agor.] The Hebrew word signifieth as well distance of place, as length of time. If we referre it to the place, the sense will be, that the Iewes are double vnthankfull that they looked not vnto God; no not a farre off. Wherein we are to note, that we ought not only to looke vnto God when hee is neere vnto vs, but also when it seemes hee is farre distant from vs. Now we thinke him absent when we feele not his present helpe, and when he assists vs not as soone as we stand in neede. To be short, he shewes what is the nature of true hope; for it is a grosse and carnall kind of looking vnto God, when we acknowledge his prouidence no further then we can see it before our eyes; hope you know must mount about the skies. I grant the Lord is alwaies properly and truly present; but he is thought absent and farre off in regard of the weakenesse of our sight. This must be construed then according to our sense, and not as the thing is indeed. Wherefore albeit that he seemes to be absent in these calamities wherewith the Church is now afflicted, yet let vs lift vp our mindes vnto him; let vs awaken our hearts, and shake off all sloth, that so wee may giue our selues to the calling vpon his name. But the other sense agreeth better; to wit, that they looked not vnto God who created and made his Church; nor yesterday, or the day before it, but a great while since; as one who shewed himselfe the maker of it many ages off. He is called then the ancient maker of his Church: because that if the Iewes would but haue called to minde the long progresse of time; they should haue knowne him to haue been a perpetuall conseruer of his worke; wherein their ingratitude is yet the lesse excu-sable.

Verf. 12. *And in that day did the

THE Prophet further amplifies this wicked rebellion of the people. For this circumstance cuts off all replies: for in the mid-

and had reiected the fauour of God, when he was ready to haue healed and reſtored them to their former happines. Here we ſee a ſigne of deſperate malice, when men are ſo beſotted that they proudly deſpiſe inſtruction and correction, kicking obſtinacie againſt the ſpurie: then (I ſay) may we euidentlie perceiue that they are giuen vp into a reprobate ſenſe. Whereas he ſaith the Lord called them, we may expound it two waies: for although he ſhould not ſpeake at all, yet he calls vs ſufficientlie by his rods and chaſtiſements. Put the caſe we had no Scripture at all, no Prophets nor Teachers, and that there were none to admoniſh vs: yet doth God notwithstanding inſtruct vs by afflictions and calamities, ſo as we may eaſily conclude that euery chaſtiſement is a ſummons to repentance. But doubtleſſe the Prophet meant to expreſſe ſomewhat more, to wit, that in deſpiſing the holie admonitions which were ſent vnto them, they were not aſhamed to riſe vp as it were euen againſt God himſelfe, who after a fatherlie manner beckned them vnto him. There is yet greater weight in that he ſaith, it was in the day of affliction, wherein the danger preſſed hard vpon them: for they were admoniſhed both by words and blowes. The ſignes of Gods anger appeared, the Prophets cryed without ceaſing, and yet they became neuer the better.

In that he names ſackcloth, and plucking of their haire, he notes out repentance by the ſignes of it: for it conſiſts neither in ſackcloth, in aſhes, nor in any externall thing, but it conſiſts in the heart. Thoſe who repent in good earneſt, and are diſpleaſed with themſelues, they hate their finnes, and are touched to the quick with ſuch a ſenſe and feeling of ſorrow, that they abhorre and deteſt themſelues and their life paſt: but becauſe this can not be done vnleſſe therewithall they confeſſe the ſame before men, therefore he names the outward ſignes, whereby wee giue teſtimonie of our conuerſion: now the lewes vſed ſuch geſtures and cuſtomes. At that time when they meant to ſhew ſignes of repentance, Iſaiah meanes then that they were called to repentance, to the end they ſhould fiſt humble themſelues before God, and then that they ſhould therewithall ſhew teſtimonies of that diſpleaſure they had conceiued in themſelues before men. The ſignes indeede before are nothing, ſeing conuerſion begins at the heart: and to this purpoſe Ioel ſaith, Renew your hearts, and not your cloaths: not that he would haue theſe ſignes neglected; but he ſhewes that they were not ſufficient nor acceptable vnto God of themſelues. Let vs hence gather what is our dutie when in the ſignes of Gods anger appeare vnto vs, namely, that our repentance ought not only to be knowne vnto God, but alſo to men.

The ceremonies indeede are indifferent; neither haue we any commandment to put ſackcloth nor to pluck off our haire, but we ought willingly and in good earneſt to put the truth of theſe ſignes in praſtiſe: to wit, an vnſeined diſpleaſure in our ſelues that wee haue ſo diſpleaſed God: a confeſſion of our offences; a broken heart, and a new life. For if wee iudge not our ſelues worthy of puniſhment, we cannot come into fauour with God. To be ſhort, euen as the poore malefactor bowes downe his face, and clothes himſelfe in vile arayment; to bow the heart of the Iudges, ſo ought we to iunne in all humilitie to Gods mercy in our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, with vnſeined teſtimonies of our inward repentance.

Yet are we by the way, to note the profit of theſe outward ſignes of repentance, to wit, that they ſerue as goades to prick vs forward to the acknowledgement of our guiltineſſe, and to the loathing and deteſting of our ſinne. And thus as they are ſpures to quicken vs to this dutie, they may be called cauſes of repentance: and as they are ſignes, they may be called effects. For the tokens of our condemnation that wee beare vpon vs, prouoke vs to a more thorow acknowledgement that we are ſinners and guiltie perſons: and they are alſo effects; becauſe if repentance went not before, wee ſhould neuer be brought to viſe them of a ſincere affection.

Verſ. 13. And behold ioy and gladneſſe, ſlaying oxen, and killing ſheepe, eating fleſh and drinking wine, eating and drinking, for to morrow we ſhall die.

The Prophet condemnes not ioy ſimply: for we ſee that Saint Paul himſelfe exhorts the faithfull to reioyce with a true ioy; to wit, in the Lord: Phil. 4. 4. But hee here reproues that ioy which is contrarie to that ſorrow which proceedes of repentance; whereof alſo the ſame Apoſtle ſpeakes in the ſeuenth Chapter of the ſecond Epiſtle to the Corinthians: for indeede, none can be touched with repentance, nor with the true feeling of Gods wrath; but being ſorrowfull, he willingly afflicts himſelfe. The ioy then oppoſite to this ſorrow, is naught; becauſe it proceedes from a brutiſh blockiſhneſſe, and is juſtly reproued, becauſe the Lord accuſeth it.

Hence it appeareth then ſufficiently wherefore the Lord vpbraides them with the killing of oxen, and butchering of ſheepe: for this is not euill in it ſelfe, neither doth it diſpleaſe God: but becauſe faſting is a ſolemne part of repentance which wee heare before men; it is therefore a ſigne of obſtinacie and contempt of God, to kill beaſts, and to make great merriments when we ought rather to faſt. Thus do men deſpiſe Gods threatnings, and flatter themſelues in their vices: and this is the ſumme of Iſaiah's ſpeech.

But the Papiſts are worthily reputed ridiculous, who thinke this place warrants abſtinenſe from fleſh. Why did they not aſwell forbid wine alſo, ſeing the Prophet ſpeakes of that too? But they are ſo far from abſtaining from wine, that contrariwiſe they caſtly permit men for want of fleſh, to recompence the ſame with taking in of their liquor. But let theſe toyes paſſe. For Iſaiah condemnes neither the vſe of fleſh nor wine ſimply, but the abuſe;

Papiſts ridiculous.

Iſaiah condemnes not the vſe of meats and drinks but the abuſe abuse; the dissolution and pride also whereby men so harden themselves, that with an obstinate heart they reiect all Gods threatnings, and iudge whatioeuer the Prophets say to be but fables.

Wee are to obserue this point diligently: for albeit we put not on sackcloth, nor cover our selues alwaies with ashes; yet if true repentance be wrought in vs, we shall manifest the same by such fruits as it necessarily brings forth in them that haue it. In a word, as hee had described repentance by the signes, so hee now sets forth their inward obstinacie and hardnesse of heart, by the outward testimonies of it. For euen as we witness our sorrow for sinne by abstinence and other exercises; so by our dissolutiōs & superfluities, we shew euident signes of a stiffe neck, by which we prouoke Gods wrath more and more against vs: as we reade they did in the daies of Noah, Gen. 6. 5. Luke 17. 27. Therefore after the Prophet had taxed the excesse and intemperancie of the people in generall; he names eating and drinking, as the speciall: wherein the Iews wholly ouerflowed: as if by this meanes they had been able to giue God the repulse, and to tread his threatnings vnder foote.

For to morrow wee shall die.] This particule sheweth sufficiently why the Prophet so sharply rebuked them for drinking wine, and eating of flesh; to wit, because they scoffed and turned all the Prophets threats into iests and matter of derision. Some thinke that S. Paul in alleading almost the very same words in the first Epistle to the Corinthians, Chap. 15. had respect to this place: but I am not of their opinion. For he there recites the phrase of speech which Epicures vsed; who holding it as a principle to spend their time in iollitie whilest it lasted, neuer thought of life eternall; and therefore they said; we must be merry, and take our pleasure whilest life indureth. But Isaiah in this place brings in the wicked, who proudly contemned the Prophets menacings; neither could they indure that any should forewarne them of afflictions, banishments, slaughters, and ruines. For in scorne they tooke vp the Prophets words, and at their banquetts would say in derision, Ho, we shall die to morrow: These Prophets foretell a speedie destruction that is ready to ouertake vs: well, let vs yet reioyce and make good cheere one day more.

This obstinate mindes cannot be touched with any remorse at all, but rather lift vp themselves against God & his Prophets, & so much the more ouerflow in all dissolutions and disorders. Truly it was a monstrous furie in them, thus to vomit forth these blasphemies in disdain, indignation, and despight, which ought not onely to haue rent their hearts, but to haue shaken euen heauen and earth also. But it were to be wished, we at this day had not many such examples: for God no sooner threatens, but the most part spew out their poison, or else scoffe at all things which proceed out of Gods sacred and blessed mouth.

Verf. 14. And it was declared in *the eares of the Lord of hostes: * Surely this iniquitie shall not bee purged from you till yee die, saith the Lord of hostes.*

* O, if this iniquitie shall be pardoned.

AS if he should say; Doe you thinke to play the bedlems, and not bee punished for it, seeing God by this meanes seekes to draw you to repentance? But some may imagine that the Prophet onely repeats the same thing he had said before: for doubtlesse all things are naked and manifest in his sight. But hee adds this as an alarm to awaken the blockishnes of y wicked, who neuer durst aduance themselves thus proudly against God, but that they thinke they can beguile him: for whofoeuer knowes he hath God for a witness of his doings, ought of necessitie therewithall to confesse that the same God must be his Iudge. It follows therefore, that the wicked in their cups, doe quite and clean bereaue God of his power. What maruall is it then, if they be summoned to appeare before his tribunall seate, to the end they may know that there they must giue an account.

It is a terrible threatening when hee saith that this wickednesse shall neuer bee pardoned. Now the particule conditionall, If, contains a negatiue in the Hebrew tongue: as if the Lord should say; Thinke me not to be true, thinke me not to be God, if I be not auenged of so execrable an impietie. The cause why the Hebrewes conceal something in their othes, is to accustom vs to be modest and sober in this behalfe: for we therein craue that God would iudge and be auenged of vs, if we lie. Wee had neede of some bridle therefore to restraine vs from making othes rashly. The summe of the Prophets speech is to teach vs, that nothing is more displeasing vnto God then obstinacy, whereby wee treasure vp wrath against the day of wrath, as the Apostle saith, Rom. 2. 5. and deprive our selues of all hope of perdition.

Othes must be vsed with feare and trembling.

Verf. 15. Thus saith the Lord God of hostes; Goe get thee to the treasurer, to Shebna the steward of the house, and say.

THIS prophesie is particularly addressed against one man. For hauing spoken to all the people before, hee now turnes his speech to Shebna, whom he will mention againe in the 37. Chapter. The Prophet giues him two titles, to wit, of Scribe, or Chancelour; and steward of the house: and whereas hee giues the title of steward here, he will call him by the name of Chancelour in the other place. And therefore some are of opinion touching these words, that he was put from his office of Stewardship, and that Eliakim was put in his roome. But this is vncertaine: yet we may coniecture by the Prophets words, that Shebna was so carried away with enuie, that he endeouored to supplant Eliakim. It is no lesse probable that this prophesie was written written after Ieruſalem was miraculoſly deliuered, and *ſenacherib*s hoſt diſcomfited. In the meane while, many things doubtleſſe happened that are vnknowne to vs: and not vnlike but this perſidious wretch being in ſome credit, did his worſt to ſuppreſſe Eliakim. For it appears by the hſtorie of the ſecond booke of Kings, Chap. 19. 2. that Shebna was one of the principall Secretaries, whom we now call Chancelour. But there is yet a little more difficultie in the word Socan: for ſome thinke it ſignifies a Treafurer, becauſe the verbe Sacan ſignifies to locke: but ſeeing he calles him Chancelour in another place, I thinke he was not Treafurer. Beſides, the Prophet doth ſufficiently witneſſe, that this man had ſuch command in his hands, that others in compariſon of him were little eſteemed. Now this authoritie and dignitie could not well agree to a Treafurer: and therefore as I take it, the Prophet meant ſome thing elſe. For ſeeing this verbe ſignifies ſome times to entertaine, and to warne; it ſeemes the foreſaid word is taken for one that ſuſtaineth and vpholdeth, whom we in our common ſpeech call an entertainer.

It is alſo certaine that this Shebna had intelligence with the enemy. In a word, he was a treacherous and ſubtle fellow: for he held ſeeret amitie with the Egyptians and Aſſyrians, & comploted miſchicuoſly with them, to the end hee might make ſure on all ſides, for vpholding his owne authoritie. Others thinke it was a name of ſome of his predeceſſours, and that he was called Soenite, becauſe of the Citie wherein he was borne: for they ſay he was an Egyptian. I reiect not this opinion, but the other pleaſeth me better; the reaſon is, becauſe he plaid the Ambodexter in pleaſing both parts; thinking by this fetch to hold his owne, whatſoever ſhould fall out.

It may be cleerely diſcerned, that the particule Haxzeb, is put for contempt: as if hee ſhould ſay; Goe to that ſame cunning and ſubtle fellow that workes vpon the vantage, holding with the hare, and running with the hounds, as they ſay. This word Socan, is taken in that ſenſe which I haue touched before in the firſt booke of the Kingſ, Chap. 1. 2. where there is ſpeech of a young virgin that ſhould bee brought to the King to cheriſh him. Notwithſtanding, if any had rather take it for a man that hurts and wrongs men, I miſlike it not, becauſe the verbe alſo ſignifies to impoueriſh.

The Prophet therefore aſkes to what purpoſe he had prepared himſelfe ſo rich and ſumptuous a ſombe in ſo high a place above others, as thoſe are wont to doe, which meane to eternize their remembrance in this world. Now hee ſeemes to taxe the ambition of a ſtranger, and one vnknowne, for deſiring to be thus honourably buried out of his owne country: and yet in the meane while, complotted with the enemy to deſtroy Iudea. What greater follie could be imagined, then to erect a ſepulchre in that land, whoſe ruine and deſtruction he practiſed? And therefore hee addes, Verſ. 17. Behold the Lord will carrie thee away With a great captiuitie, and will ſurely couer thee.

*Or, a notable ſhaking.
*Or, thou ſhalt be wholly couered.

As if he ſhould ſay; Thou ſhalt be driuen hence out of this place into a far Country, where thou ſhalt die ignominioſly. It is better to tranſlate the Hebrew word Gaber, in the genitiue; namely, thou ſhalt be driuen hence with the caſting out of a man. Now becauſe this word alſo ſignifies a valiant and ſtrong man; ſome expound, Thou ſhalt bee driuen hence with a ſure and ſtrong ſhaking. Others take it in the vocatiue, O man; as if he ſhould ſay to Shebna by way of deriſion, O glorious fellow, that braggeſt ſo much of thy greatneſſe, it cannot be but thou takeſt thy ſelſe for ſome petty God! But the firſt reading ſits beſt. And yet the expoſitors conſent not in this behalfe: for beſides mine expoſition, they haue brought another; to wit, That men ſhall be carried away further off, then the women. But I rather thinke he alludes to *Shebna*s pride, who purpoſed to build ſo ſumptuous a ſepulchre, that after his death hee might be thought ſome excellent and worthy perſonage. As if hee ſhould ſay; Thou wilt bee taken for a noble man after thou art dead; but I will canoble thee after another manner: I will carrie thee hence with a notable captiuitie into a farre Country, where thou ſhalt bee ſtrangely buried.

But firſt let vs note in this word, Intertainer, how much a double heart and a deceiver, is diſpleaſing vnto God, who about all things recommends ſimplicitie and plaine dealing vnto vs. Shebna was called the Proud, becauſe the glorie of his prosperous eſtate did dazle his eyes, in regard he was aduanced aboue others: which often befaller them, who being proud and puffed vp with their greatneſſe, feare no aduerſitie at all; as if they were exempt out of the common order of men. But the Lord ſhewes vs, that hee will be the Iudge of ſuch fellows.

We muſt alſo conſider that Iſaiah could not publiſh this prophecy without incurring gret ill will; eſpecially in regard he directs it to a mā ſo proud, & in ſo high place. Yet durſt he not reſuſe this charge, neither made hee any difficultie to tell this man his owne, and to threaten him as God had bidden him.

As touchiug a ſepulchre, wee know that the

You ſhall finde this verſe further expounded in the 17. verſe.

Verſ. 16. What haſt thou to doe here? and whom haſt thou here, that thou ſhoudeſt here burye thee out a ſepulchre, as he that beueth out a ſepulchre in an high place, or that graueth an habitation for himſelfe in a rocke?

This Shebna cauſed a ſepulchre to be built in Ieruſalem, as if there he miſt of neceſſitie alwaies lue; and there bee buried alſo,

A care ought to be had touching our buriall.

care of burying the dead is not vtterly to be condemned: and albeit it be deuiued of buriall, be a matter of no great consequence, as one saith; yet it is an honest thing to be interred, neither ought it to be despised. It was not the Prophets meaning then to reprove Shebna for his care to be honestly buried; but his ambition, in making himselfe so sumptuous a tombe: and herein he taxeth his desire and affectation of vaine glory.

There is yet one thing more to be obserued in Shebna: for in as much as he was minded to deliuer the Citie into the Assyrians hands by treason, hee thought to raigne for euer: hoping by that meanes to receiue the gouernment of the Kingdome of the enemies, as a reward of his treachery; if they became the stronger; and if it happened they had the repulie, he yet notwithstanding looked to continue in his dignitie and authority alwaies.

But thus will be the better vnderstood by the words themselves; What hast thou so doe here? For he was a stranger borne, I deny not but he might well haue obtained fellowship with the people of God; yet in regard he was both a traitor and a stranger, he had no part nor portion in this region nor Citie, which God had specially assigned vnto his chosen. The Prophet askes him then; Whence art thou? Thou art linked with the people of God neither by blood nor affinity; and yet thou wilt not onely raigne in this Country whilst thou liuest, but thou art also plotting how to stablish thy seat here, after thy death. Thou wilt deliuer vs into the hands of the Assyrians, and meanest to turne out the true Lords: so as thy selfe, which art but a stranger, mindest to enjoy this land, in which thou hast not right to one pike of dust. Hence we may gather, that this ambition is exceedingly odious vnto God, when men are not content with the honours wherewith they were glutted whilst they liued; but they must build them perpetuall monuments of their name in the world when they are gone. For they couet to be exalted after their death, and to liue againe as it were in the mouthes of men: and albeit things by death are abolished; yet are they besotted notwithstanding with this foolish hope, that their memorie shall indure for euer. But the Lord auengeth himselfe of their pride and presumption, causing that which they erected for a witness and remembrance of their glorie, to turne to their dishonour and ignominie. For their very name is so accursed, that men can neither heare nor see any mention thereof, but it is with detestation. Nay, it sometimes fall's out, that the Lord suffers them not to be buried in their tombes, but sends them to the gallows, and to the raens; of which wee haue many examples in the histories: neither want we some spectacles hercof euen in our owne times.

But as often as I reade this place, a like example vnto this comes to my mind, and is the neerest in affinity to it of all others; to wit, of one Thomas Moore, who had such an office as this Shebna had. For (as it is well knowne)

he was Chancellor to the King of England: he was a sworne enemy of the Gospell, and persecuted the faithfull with fire and saggon. This man also meant to get himselfe a name, and to set vp a monument of his crueltie and impietie. To which end he caused the praises of his vertues, to be ingrauen in a faire sepulchre which was built in most stately manner. Then he sent his Epitaph, which himselfe had made, to Erasmus, to Basil, to get it printed; and withall, sent him a palfrey for a present. So couetous was he of glory, that hee meant to taste the renoune and the praises in his life-time, which hee thought should haue lasted when hee was dead. Amongst other praises, this was the chiefest; that he had been a great persecutor of the Lutherans; that is to say, of Gods children. But what became of him? He is first of all accused of treason, then condemned, and lastly beheaded: and thus in stead of a tombe, hee had a scaffold. Would we desire a more manifest iudgement of God then these, by which hee punisheth the pride of the wicked; their insatiable desire of vaine glory; their brags that are so full of blasphemies? Truly wee ought no lesse to acknowledge and reuerence the admirable providence of God, in this cruell enemy of his people: then in Shebna, of whom the Prophet heere speaketh. This circumstance also that Shebna was a stranger, is to be obserued: for hence we may see, that all tyrants and enemies of Gods children, would with all their hearts roote out the right heires from off the earth, themselves being but strangers; that so they might raigne as Lords and Kings ouer the whole world. But the Lord in the end will chase them out, and depriue them of all possession: so as they shall not haue one foote of ground to be buried in. An infinite number of such examples are extant euerie where in histories. I grant it fall's not out thus alwaies, but such examples as the Lord sets before vs, ought to draw our thoughts further off; to the end we may consider of his iudgements against tyrants and infidels; who when they thinke to exalt themselves to the highest estate of honour, are made famous by some notable kinde of death, that so their infamie may be admirable to posteritie. He then opposeth as it were vnder hand, that shame which was to follow, to that glory of this sumptuous tombe which Shebna caused to be made.

Verf. 18. Hee will surely roll and turne thee like a ball in a large Country: there shalt thou die; and there the chariots of thy glory shall be the shame of thy Lords house.

Isaiab continnes the verie same spech still, in which he derided the pride of Shebna, who had been at such cost in building his sepulchre. For this verse depends vpon the first member of the verse before going, and as he said ther, the Lord shall carrie thee hence with a notable shaking: so also he saith now, he will cast thee as a stone in a plaine place. By this similitude ſimilitude his meaning is, that nothing ſhall hinder the Lord to carry Shebna away into a farre Country, how ſeadie ſoever he takes his ſtrength to be. And in as much as he had bin ſo careful of his toombe, and had appointed it out, as if hee had been moſt certaine of the manner of his death, Iſaiah telleth him, that hee ſhall not die in Ieruſalem, but in a ſtrange Countrey, whither hee ſhall bee driuen.

By the word chariot, hee comprehends all the glory and dignitie of Shebna: as if hee ſhould ſay; This ignominie ſhall bee famous among ſtrangers. Thus the Lord ſcornes the furious pride of thoſe which thinke onely of the world, judging of their happineſſe according to the glory of things earthly and tranſitorie. Hee alſo calles it the ſhame of thy Kings houſe, either becauſe he had polluted that holy place, which was as the ſanctuarie of God; or elſe becauſe Ezechias had been vnduſed in promoting him ſo highly. And to the end the outward appearance of his dignitie might not obſcure this prophecie, Iſaiah expreſly noteth, that the place which Shebna occupied, augmenreth and makes his wickedneſſe the more deteſtable. And therefore Princes had neede to be careful how they eſtablish officers, vnleſſe they meane to make themſelves and their houſes, matter of deriſion and ſcorn.

Princes muſt be wile who they aduance.

Verſ. 19. And I will drine thee from thy ſtation: and out of thy dwelling will hee deſtroy thee.

*Or, eſtate.

HE pronounceth no new thing here, but concludes the former prophecie, albeit hee will mention Shebna againe in the laſt verſe: but now hee comprehends that in a briefe ſumme, which he had laid heretofore. Now Shebna thought nothing leſſe, then not to haue a ſure abode in Ieruſalem; euen as if it had been vnpoſſible for him to be driuen thence, whatſoever had happened: but y^e Lord telleth him, that he will thruſt and drue him thence into a farre Country. And thus is the Lord wont to ouerthrow the thoughts of the wicked; who thinking to reſt vpon their policies and ſubtile wits, order the Commonwealth at their pleaſures. The change of the perſon, ſhewes that the Prophet ſpeakes ſometimes in the perſon of God, and another while in his owne.

And I will, &c.

Verſ. 20. And in that day will I call my ſervant Eliakim, the ſonne of Hilkiab.

Eliakim.

IT is not certainly knowne in what time Eliakim was put into Shebnaes place: for in the 37. Chapter, verſe 2. we ſhall ſee that Eliakim was the ſteward of the Kings houſe, at that time when Shebna was Chancellor. Now it is hard to affirme certainly, whether anie change happened during this time. Yet it is moſt likely, as I haue touched heretofore, that Eliakim was depoſed from his eſtate, by the cunning dealing of this wicked Shebna, whoſe mockings were then diſcloſed and puniſhed when he made his triumphs: and being baniſhed Iudea, he fled to the Allyrians, and there receiued the reward of his treacherie, Which vſually befalls thoſe that are traiterous, who when they are vnable to performe that which they haue promiſed, become hatefull and odious to them whom they haue deceiued. For as they haue been raiſed and bold in promiſing, ſo is it of neceſſitie that they bee found faile and perfidiouſ. The Iewes ſay, that in the end he was quartered for his treason: but this is not approved by any hiſtorie. But to let that hang in ſuſpence, it is certaine notwithstanding, that he was baniſhed & expelled into a forren Country, and there died ſhamefully; and not in Ieruſalem. Now it is very likely that after his baniſhment, Eliakim was placed in his roome.

I will call,] It is moſt certaine that all Princes and Magiſtrates are called by the Lord: yea, euen ſuch as are heathen and vnbeleeu- ing; for all power, as Saint Paul ſaith, is of God: Rom. 13. 1. But the Prophet ſpeakes here of a particular vocation, whereby the Lord manifeſts his goodneſſe towards his people, when he giues them ſuch governours; as this people might acknowledge that God himſelfe meant to bee ruler ouer them by their miniſterie: who alſo for their parts ought to be well aſſured, that the end wherefore God hath put them in that place, is to execute that office faithfully, which is committed vnto them. Shebna was called indeed for a time, but as he was Gods rod: becauſe he thought nothing leſſe then to ſerue God in that place. But it was farre otherwiſe with Eliakim: for he acknowledged himſelfe the ſervant of God, and willingly obeyed his holy calling. So that, I will call him then, ſignifies as much as if hee ſhould haue ſaid; I will giue a ſigne to my ſervant, whereby hee ſhall know that it is I who haue put him into this eſtate of honor. There is here then a particular relation betwene the Lord and the ſervant; which at no hand belongs to the vnbeleeuers, becauſe they ſerue their owne imaginations and wicked luſts: but Eliakim acknowledged the Lord, and ſerued him truly. To be ſhort, this marke puts a difference betwene the true ſervant of God, and the froward and hypocritical, who climbs to honour by euill practices.

All Magiſtrates ordained of God.

Rulers ought to execute the charge which God hath committed vnto them with all faithfullneſſe.

Note this difference.

A particular relation betwene the Lord and the ſervant.

Verſ. 21. And with thy garments will I clothe him, and with thy girdle will I ſtrengthen him: thy power alſo will I commit into his hand, and he ſhall be a father of the inhabitants of Ieruſalem, and of the houſe of Iudah.

HEE now more plainly expounds that which hee had ſet downe briefly in the former verſe; to wit, that Shebna ſhall be depoſed by Gods iuſt judgement, to the end Eliakim may ſucceede him. Doubtleſſe God by his providence disposeth of all the changes which happen in the world: for as Iob saith, he girdes the loynes of Kings with a girdle, and looses it againe when it pleaseth him: Iob 12. 18. It was pleasantly said in old time of the Emperours of Rome; That it was the tragedie of Kings: for as players that represent some great peronage vpon the stage, hauing ended their part, in stead of Kings become poore Inakes, as they were before: so these being deiected from their high estate, are now and then led to shamefull deaths. And yet is it most certaine, that things were not then thus confused by hap hazard, neither yet by mens deuices onely, nor by the violence of men of warre; but by the counsell of God which ouerruleth all. The Prophet affirms then, that men shal see a special note of Gods iudgement in the banishment of this same Shebna: and on the other side a right forme of gouernement in the restoring of Eliakim.

V 2 providenced

By the garments and girdle, are vnderstood part of that attire which belong to Magistrates. The girdle was a kingly ornament: and no doubt but the chiefe gouernours were it by a speciall priuiledge of honour. But in Rome the Pretors vsed such a kinde of ornament ordinarilie. Iob also saith (as we alledged before) that God looseth off the girdle from Kings, when they are stripped out of their dignities. Now the Prophet foretold this, to the end euerie one might not onely behold the admirable counsell and prouidence of God in this example; but to the end they might also know, that this wretched fellow, who was thus aduanced by vnlawfull means, was iustly deposed.

Hose. 1. 3. 11

And hee shall be a father. No doubt but heathen Magistrates are established by God; but so, as it is in his wrath; that is to say, when we are vnworthy he himselfe should beare rule ouer vs. For hee giues the raines to Tyrants and Pagans; thereby auenging himselfe vpon our vnthankfulnesse: as if he reiected vs, and regarded not how nor by whom wee are gouerned. Contrariwise when as good Magistrates beare rule, wee therein see God comming neere vnto vs, commanding vs that by them which himselfe hath ordained. This is that which the Prophet meant now to say; to wit, that Eliakim will shew himselfe a father, because he shall be indued with the Spirit of God. In the meane while he admonisheth all the faithfull, that it was their duties to sigh earnestly after the aduancement of Eliakim, in regard his preferment should tend to the common good of the Church. By the name of father, he teacheth what is the dutie of a good Magistrate: and the verie profane authors haue affirmed as much; to wit, that a good King is in stead of a father. And when they would flatter tyrants which oppressed the Commonwealt, nature it selfe put this title of honour into their mouthes, to call them fathers of the Country. So likewise when the Philosophers say that a familie is an image of a kingdom, they meane that a King ought to be a father to his subiects. The ancient titles also which they gaue kings witnesseth the same: as for example, Abimelec: Gen 10. 2. that is to say, My father the King: and such other like. Whereby is shewed, that the kingly power cannot be separated from the affection of a father. Let them then which would be esteemed true and lawful Princes, and would be taken for Gods seruants, let them, I say, shew themselves fathers of the people.

Verf. 2. And the key of the house of David will I lay vpon his shoulder: so hee shall open, and no man shall shut, and hee shall shut, and no man shall open.

This is a figuratiue kinde of speech; and therefore we shall not neede to seeke out an allegoricall sense of it, as many do: for this phrase is taken from the vsuall dealings of men. The keyes of the house are giuen to such as are appointed the distributors of necessarie things; so as they open and shut at their pleasure. The house of David, signifies the kingly house: and this was a common speech among the people, because a promise was made to David, that his kingdom should last for euer: this is the reason why it was vsuall called the house of David. The word key is put in the singular number for many keyes. Now albeit they were wont to beare the keyes in their hands; yet it is said here, that they were laid vpon his shoulder; because he was to vndergoe an heauie burthen. And yet he meanes nothing else, but that the tuition and gouernement of the house is committed into Eliakims hands, to order it as he thinkes best. Wee also know, that to giue the keyes, signifies as much as to put one into possession. Some referre this vnto Christ, but with what reason I see not: for the Prophet here compares two men together, namely, Shebna and Eliakim. Shebna was banished, and Eliakim was placed in his roome: wherein doth this concerne Iesus Christ? For Eliakim was no figure of him; neither doth the Prophet describe some hidden myserie here, but borrowes a similitude from the dealings of men; as if one should giue the keyes to some steward placed ouer his house, (as hath beene said.) There is also the same reason to be giuen of it, where Christ calles the office of teaching, The keyes of the Kingdome of heauen: those therefore that weare themselves to finde out some secret and hidden myserie in this place, which is so plaine and manifest, shew themselves but too fortifish and ridiculous, seeing there is no neede at all of any such deuices. Why so? Because the Ministers open heauen by the preaching of the word, and bring men to Christ, who is the onely way. He takes the keyes in this place therefore, for the gouernment of the Kings house, in regard the chiefe trust of it was committed to Eliakim in his time.

Good Magistrates ought to be fathers of the Country.

for the throne of glorie to his fathers houſe.

the cups, euen to ^{of} the instruments of muſicke.

WEe must ſupply a particule of ſimilitude here; and therefore I haue put this word At, in the text. By faithfull, he means a ſure and firme place; for this word is deriued of the word Truth, which is alwaies accompanied with ſtedfaſtneſſe and aſſurance. And for that cauſe the Hebrewes take Truth for a thing ſure and certaine. The Prophet viſeth an elegant ſimilitude, out of which the faithfull Magiſtrates (who are but a few) ought to gather a ſingular conſolation. For thus they may conclude with themſelues; that they are not onely raiſed by the Lord to this degree of honour, but that they are confirmed and faſtened in it, as if they were fixed thereunto by his immediate hand. And to ſay the truth, looke where the feare of God beares ſway, there muſt needes be ſtedfaſtneſſe. For the power and thrones of Kings, is eſtabliſhed by iuſtice; as Salomon ſaith, Pro. 16. 16. Neither doth it ſerue to comfort Princes onely, to the end they may be able to paſſe thorow all dangers with a reſolute mind: but alſo that they may execute their office conſtantly, and without diſtraction, ſo as they neede not quail nor faint for anie cauſe, nor to feare any danger.

But alas how few are there that taſte this doctrine truely? All are almoſt like Ieroboam, thinking that religion ought to ſtoope to them, which they like and allow of no further then they ſee it to be for their benefit: nay they ſucke not at all to diſguiſe and alter it at their pleaſure: as for God and his true religion, they ſet the care thereof in the laſt place. What wonder is it then that they are alwaies in feare of themſelues in their affaires, being neuer at peace and quiet: for they ſeldome or neuer ſet any time apart to thinke vpon him, from whom proceeds all ſtrength and power. Thence come treaſons, thence ariſe cruelties, avarice, violence, and all manner of fraudes and oppreſſions, wherein Princes now ouerflowe more impudently then anie other.

Yet are there ſome, in whom wee may perceiue that which is ſaid heere touching Eliakim: the Lord keepes, maintaines, and bleſſeth the duties of equitie and iuſtice, where-with he hath adorned them. For if he ſuffer the very tyrants to raigne for a time, in regard they obſerue ſome forme of gouernement: how much more will he bleſſe Princes, when with a good and vpright heart they maintaine truth and equitie, and promote Gods true worſhip and ſeruiſe? He that is the perpetuall maintainer of iuſtice, will hee not defend and eſtabliſh ſuch a Prince more and more?

Verſ. 24. And they ſhall hang vpon him all the glorie of his fathers houſe, euen of the nephewes and poſteritie; of ſmall veſſels, from the veſſels of

THis is as much as if hee ſaid, that Eliakim ſhall diſcharge his dutie in good ſort; ſo as he ſhall not deale negligently in it. Whence we gather, that God aduanceth not Princes vnto honour, to the end they ſhould be idle, and giue the reines to their luſtes and affections. For dominion and authoritie is a burden of great waight and labour, if to be men performe their duties as they ought to doe: farre from the praſtice of theſe dumbe idolles; who thinke God hath liſted them vp into the ſeate of honour, to no other end but to ſare deliciouſly, and to wallow themſelues at their eaſe in all manner of pleaſures. But if a Prince will execute his office aright, hee muſt prepare himſelfe to vndergo much turmoile. Neither muſt we thinke that this ſimilitude of the naile, ſhould not ſure well in regard of gouernment: for hereby is ſignified, a burthen full of buſineſſes and troubles. I alſo know well enough, that ſimilitudes agree not alwaies in euery thing, but in the ſpeciall drift whereat they aime.

Now in that hee ſpeakes of the houſe of his father; doubtleſſe Eliakim was of the royall blood. And therefore by ſucceſſors, I not onely vnderſtand his next kinſfolkes; but the whole familie of Dauid. He then ſhall haue the charge of all that ſhall be in the Kings houſe. When he addes the chil. en. chibere; he therewithall reacheth, that this gouernment ſhall be of long continuance; ſo as it ſhall not laſt one mans life onely, but it ſhall be extended to thoſe that ſhall come a long time after. For good Princes not onely profit the Church and Commonwealthe for their owne time, but thoſe alſo which come after them, to whom they leaue ſuch wholeſome lawes, ordinances, ſtatutes, and markes of good and iuſt gouernment; that the ſucceſſors dare not (albeit they be wicked) breake out into all licenciuouſneſſe at the firſt; yea they are compelled in deſpight of them, to retaine ſomething that is good for modeſties ſake. This hee ſhewes ſhall come to paſſe in Eliakim, whoſe gouernment ſhall be ſo vpright, that his very ſucceſſors ſhall feele ſome fruit of it.

From the ſmaleſt veſſels. Vnder a figure he ſhewes that iuſtice ſhall be adminiſtred with equitie, and the right aduanced: and it is as much as if he had ſaid, that Eliakim ſhall not onely deale well with the great ones; but that he ſhall haue reſpect to the meaneſt alſo. But becauſe this is very rare in a Prince, he is much more worthy of praife, then if he ſhould onely fauour the rich and mightie. For the rich haue meanes enough to keepe themſelues fro hurt; but the weakſt are put to the wall, as they ſay; and the poore are a pray and ſpoile to others; and who is it almoſt that will defend the innocencie of their cauſe? By veſſels, the Hebrewes vnderſtand all manner of instruments: and this ſignification extends very far. When he mentio's instruments Or, bag-of muſicke, he explains that which he had ſaid pipes. in a word: for thus ſerues to the expoſition of Princes are not aduanced to liue idly. Dominion an heauie burden if men performe their duties.

Gouernment: a burden full of buſineſſe.

Princes ſhould not onely care for the welfare of the Church for their owne times, but for the poſteritie alſo.

The cauſe of treaſons.

If God ſeem to bleſſe tyrants in ſuſtaining them to ſtill for a time, much more ſuch as are nurſing fathers to his Church.

the word small or litle: as if hee should say, There is nothing so litle or contemptible, which he will not haue care of.

Verf. 25. And in that day, saith the Lord of hostes, shall the nail that is fastened in the sure place depart, and shall be broken and fall: and the burden that was vpon it shall be cut off; for the Lord hath spoken it.

This might seeme to contradict that which hath been said heretofore: but he speaks no longer now of Eliakim, but returnes againe to Shebna, who should be put out of his office; as Isaiah had foretold. Otherwise what way or meanes were there left for Eliakim to come to this honour, vnlesse Shebna were put out? But he had laid his plot in such exquisite manner, that he neuer imagined any man whatsoeuer should be able to supplant him. Thus when hee tooke himselfe to bee in best case, and furnished with manie meanes, so as it seemed he was furthest out of danger; euen then must hee be turned out of all, and Eliakim must succeed him. In that he calles it a faithfull or sure place, it must bee vnderstood as in regard of men; who thinke that things fortified on euerie side, must needs continue alwaies: but God with his onely blast ouerthrowes all these munitions. Hee speaks then by way of granting, when hee saith, that this was a sure and stable place. Whence we are to gather, how fondly such glorie and trust in their greatnesse, who are advanced into high places of honour, seeing they may be stripped out of all, and abased in the twinkling of an eye.

It followeth, And the burden. When the wicked begin once to fall, then those who were vpheld by their authoritie, must needs fall together with them. For is it not good reason that such as were brethen in cull with them, and had furthered this wretch as farre as they could, that they should also partake with him in his punishment? Verie hard it is for them then, who throwd themselves vnder the protection of the wicked, and employing all their meanes for their seruice; that such should not also therewithall be guiltie of their wicked courses: and be it they should be guiltlesse, (which yet fallles out very seldome, or rather indeede neuer) yet notwithstanding they are iustly punished, because they haue placed their hopes in the wicked, as in a sure fortress, and haue wholly relied vpon their command and authoritie.

It is not safe to serue such masters as are not Gods seruants.

THE XXIII. CHAPTER.

Verf. 1. The burden of Tyre. Howl ye shippes of Tarshish: for it is destroyed, so that there is none house: none shall come from the land of Chittim: it is reuealed vnto them.

Tyre was a verie rich Citie, and greatly renowned in regard of the traffique which all nations had with it, as also in regard of the townes of warre and Cities habitable which it built: as Carthage, which imitated the Roman Empire; Vtique, Leptis, Gades, and other Cities, who all sent their presents to Tyre; hereby protesting, that they acknowledged this to be the mother Citie. But Isaiah threatens it with destruction, because it wronged the people of God; as we may gather out of Ezechiel, 26. 2. For we are chiefly to consider the cause of this destruction, in regard it is the Prophets meaning to reueale Gods fatherly loue to his elect and chosen people, who meant to set himselfe against all their enemies. Some thinke that this should be referred to the siege of Alexander, who tooke Tyre with great difficultie. But this supposition is too weake, because Isaiah mentions Chittim, vnder which name the Hebrewes not onely comprehend the Macedonians, but other nations also, as the Greekes, and all those which are beyond the seas. Now King Nebuchadnezzar vsed the helpe not onely of the souldiers of his owne Country in this siege, but other strangers also which he had called from among the Greekes and other places. Besides, the Greekes are spoken of for another respect, as we shall see by and by after; namely, because in time to come, they should not bring their ships any more to Tyre, to trade there. Yet the end of this Chapter giues me occasion to be of a contrary opinion, because Isaiah speaks there of the restauration of Tyre, which was neuer repaired after Alexander the Great tooke it by force. Moreouer, when I conferre Ezechiel's words with these, me thinks they make but one prophetic. He speaks not then of Alexander, but of Nebuchadnezzar; and so doubtlesse it is to be expounded. Adde hereunto, that in the time of Ezechiel and Isaiah, this Citie was vnder the command of a king: but when Alexander took it, the histories say, it was brought into the forme of a Commonwealth. And if we shall consider the end of the prophetic, we shall be sufficiently confirmed in this opinion: for his purpose was to comfort the Iewes, by threatening an ineuitable punishment to the Tyrians, of whom they had been afflicted. For it had been a thing verie vnreasonable, for the Lord to haue chastised other nations, and that these in the meane while which had been no lesse enemies, should haue escaped scotfree, or should haue bin smitten siue hundred yeeres after. All these coniectures then lead vs to expoid this place of Nebuchadnezzar.

Howle.]

The cause of this prophetic.

Alexander.

Howle.] He enricheth the declaration of the ruine of this Citie with diuers figures: and it is his cuſtome ſo to ſpeake, that he might get the more authoritie to his propheete. For to deliuer ſuch a thing in a plaine ſpeech, would haue been but cold; neither would it haue been ſufficiently effectfull to comfort the hearts of thoſe, who a long time had been weake and faint; and therefore he ſets it forth before them, as it were in freſh and luely colours. And firſt he ſhewes that the deſtruction ſhall be very great, in regard that euen the regions farre off ſhall ſeele it; and he commands the ſhips to howle, becauſe they ſhall haue no employment when Tyre ſhall be deſtroyed. Now he eſpecially names the ſhips of the Cilicians, becauſe they being neighbours, vſed to traffique much and often with the Tyrians; and the Hebrewes call Cilicia, Taſhith. Neither could it poſſibly be, but the deſtruction of Tyre, muſt bring great detriment to this Countrey; not onely in that the vſuall traffiques ceaſed for a time, but alſo in regard that the Merchants goods, together with their bookes of accounts, were carried away, and ſcattered here and there; as it vſually talles out when the houſes of rich men are riſſed.

Where I haue tranſlated, they ſhall come no more; others expound it, There ſhall bee no houſe remaining, by which you may enter: but I take it I haue faithfully rendred the Prophets meaning: not as if he thought that all paſſage ſhould be taken from the Cilicians and Greekes; but he meant rather to ſay, that they ſhall goe no more to Tyre, as they were wont in times paſt, becauſe the mart there ſhould ceaſe. Thoſe who thinke the Prophet ſpeakes of the diſcomſure made by Alexander, diuide the claufe of the verſe, From the land Chittim, and conioyne it thus, This was reuealed vnto them from the land of Chittim: that is to ſay, that the Greekes might neither goe nor come, as they were wont. For by Chittim, the Hebrewes vnderſtand the Greekes and Eaſterne people: and it is as if hee ſhould haue ſaid; The traffique of the Greekes ſhall ceaſe, ſo as their ſhips ſhall no more arriue there. And vnder it, he alſo comprehends the Egyptians, Cilicians, Italians, and other nations.

When he ſaith; This was reuealed vnto them: wee may ſidly vnderſtand it as well of the Greekes, as of the Tyrians. If it be referred to the Greekes, the ſenſe will bee, that as ſoone as newes ſhall come of the deſtruction of Tyre, they ſhall then ſaile no more thither as they were wont: for they ſhall ſce this port with as much feare as if it were a rocke. And this ſenſe I doe more willingly receiue: notwithstanding I reiect not the other, to wit, that the Prophet confirms his propheetie: as when wee ordinarily ſpeake of a thing that ſhall ſurely come to paſſe, wee ſay; Looke to it, for this appertaines to thee.

Verſ. 2. Be ſtill, yee that dwell in the Illes: the Merchants of Zidon, and ſuch as paſſe ouer the ſea, haue replenished thee.

HE ſets forth the ruine of Tyre more at large. Now there is here a change touching the number, in the word Illes: for albeit he ſpeakes in the ſingular number, yet he vnderſtands thereby ſeuerall Illes of the Mediterranean ſea, & the people y dwell beyond the ſea; but chiefly the borderers which ſailed often to Tyre, and vſually traded there. He commands them to hold their peace, and to be ſtill, becauſe they ſhall no more trauaile thither. His meaning is, that they ſhould be ſtill, as men confounded; in regard of the great calamity which ſhould befall the, in ſuch wiſe, as they ſhould not dare to vter one word. For it could not bee but thoſe nations which traded there, muſt loſe much, when a Citie ſo replenished with marchandize was ſacked. As for example; if Venice or Antwerp ſhould bee now deſtroyed, would it not redound to the great of many nations?

The Prophet makes ſpecial mention of the Sidonians; not onely becauſe they were neighbours, but becauſe theſe two cities had both one beginning. Zidon was greatly renowned; but yet it was much leſſe in quantitie then Tyre. It ſtoode vpon the edge of the ſea, and was two hundred ^{stad} ſtades in diſtance from it. Now they ſeemed ſo neere one to another, and ſo linked together in merchandiſe, that the Poets often take the one for the other. Wee need not doubt then but the Zidonians gained much more then others, in ſelling and exchanging their commodities: firſt in regard they were neighbours: and ſecondly, becauſe of their continuall trading. For the wealth of the Tyrians ſo flowed in vpon them, that they were caried vpon their wings, after the common prouerbe. Thence is it therefore that their loſſe muſt be much greater then any others, in this deſtruction of Tyre. And that is the cauſe why the Prophet bids Zidon to bee aſhamed in the fourth verſe. He addes, which replenished thee: ſpeaking either of all in generall, or becauſe it was filled with the glut and multitude of men, in regard that ſtrangers came thither from diuers Countreies ſarre remote from them, or elſe becauſe thoſe which trauailed for gaine, did therewithall enrich the Citie.

Verſ. 3. The ſeede of Nilus growing by the abundance of waters, and the harneſt of the riuer was her reuenues: and ſhe was a mart of the nations.

THE Prophets meaning is, that the riches of Tyre ſhall not deliuer it from deſtruction. He therefore ſets forth the rich eſtate thereof ſo highly, to the end euery one might know, firſt Gods iudgement; and ſecondly, that this was no ſmall plague that was light vpon her. And in the third place, the worke of God did appeare to be ſo much the more manifelt,

The cauſe why the Prophet mentions the Sidonians.

* A Stade contains the meſure of ſix ſcore and ſiue paces, which was the length of a race, when they ranne for a price or wager.

manifest, in regard that her destruction came suddenly, when she thought on no such matter. Moreover, he describes the wealthiness of Tyre elegantly: for because Nilus furnished her with corne and other necessary provisions, and that great quantitie of wheat was sent thither out of Egypt; the Prophet saith, shee had her fields as it were, and her seede growing in the streame of Nilus. The Venetians use to say; Their reuenuc is in the sea; because nothing grows vpon the land: but they get all provision of victuals by their trade of merchandise. And the Prophet saith the same of the Tyrians: for it was almost vnpossible they should want food, because Nilus furnished them therewith in great abundance. But he takes this prop away from them as a vaine hope; for they shall destitute them vterly. Isaiah therefore, as hath been saide, describes these things, that all might the better perceiue the vengeance and wrath of God fallen vpon her.

Verf. 4. Bee ashamed thou Zidon: for the sea hath spoken, euen the strength of the sea, saying; I haue not tranailed nor brought forth children, neither nourished young men, nor brought vp virgins.

THis verse is added by way of amplification. We haue told you the cause why he spake of Zidon thus in particular before. Now calles Tyre, sea, by way of excellencie, as if she alone raigned in the middest it. That which is by and by added. I haue not conceived, is spoken in the person of Tyre: and thus he pleasantly derides Tyre, who bragged of her Townes: for Tyre began or built other Cities very renowned. She was in olde time much spoken of (saith Plinie) for the Cities which she built, to wit, Leptis, Vtique, and this Carthage, the imitatrix of the Roman Empire; meaning to rule ouer all the world; and Gades also, which was built vpon the sea. Now all her wealth consisted in purple and scarlet. The Prophet then brings in the Citie of Tyre, lamenting her ancient glorie and excellencie: Alas, I am now no longer a mother; and what hath it profited me that I haue nourished so many children, and brought forth so many Cities? For Carthage was wont to send presents to Tyre euerie yeere, by way of homage: and therein acknowledged her for her mother. Thus it seemes that Tyre surmounted all other Cities in dignitie, seeing Carthage, which was the second after the Roman Empire, did in some sort submit it selfe vnto her. But the Lord tooke all these ornaments from her in a moment, in such wise, that she laments, as if shee had neuer had children.

Verf. 5. When the same comes to the Egyptians, they shall be sorie concer- ning the rumor of Tyrus.

By this verse hee signifies, that this fall of Tyre shall touch the Egyptians also; and thus the exposition which wee follow, is confirmed; to wit, that these things ought to be referred to the first sacking of it. For those of Tyre were in league with the Egyptians, and both of them had their King: not as in the time of Alexander, at what time Tyre was a free Citie, and liued vnder her owne lawes. Now hee could no way better expresse the societie that was betwene them of Tyre and the Egyptians: and the reason why he shewes that the Egyptians shall haue their part in this destruction is, because they had solicited the Lewes to rebel, and had turned them away from trusting in God. Those were open enemies: these vnder pretence of friendship, entertained poisonfull hatreds. Both of them are iustly punished.

God will punish as well the secret as the open enemies of his Church.

Verf. 6. Goe yee ouer to Tarshish: howie ye that dwell in the Iles.

He speaks not onely to the Tyrians, but also to the strangers who were in league with them, in regard of their commerce: now hee commands that they get them to some other place, and to seeke out other hauens. And he names Cilicia, which was opposite to Tyre: as if hee should say, This port which hath been so much frequented, shall hereafter be so forsaken, that the ships shall faile into an other quarter, quite an other way. For when Merchants see a port broken, or a mart abolished, they are wont to seeke out others. He puts one Ile for many, as we haue expounded before; because the change of the number is a thing common among the Hebrewes: and against these Iles he threatens, that they shall howie; because their maintenance depended vpon this trade of merchandise. Besides, their bookes of reckonings and accounts were mingled here and there.

Carthage.

Verf. 7. Is not this that your glorious Citie? her antiquitie is of ancient daies: her owne feete shall leade her a far off to be a sojourner.

THe Prophet aduanceth his stile, and insults yet further against Tyre. Hee disdaines her pride, in that shee gloried in the antiquitie of her name: he is bold the we see to confirme his speech, which to any mans reason might seeme incredible. For who doubts but that this prophecie was scorned: first, the power and strength of Tyre was inuincible, and her wealth as a wall of brasse. Well, Isaiah is so much the more bold and confident, and denounceth a certaine destruction to befall her: and albeit shee was the most ancient amongst other Cities, and in regard thereof, euerie one applauded her: yet all this should not prevent her certaine ruine and downefall.

No strength able to match the power of the Almighty.

Now profane histories doe fetch the original ginall of Tyre, from time almoſt out of mind, and that ſo darkely and obſcurely indeede, that a man can ſcarceely vnderſtand their meaning: yer they ſay, that the Phenicians built it: ſo as they which glorie of antiquitie, may call themſelues children of the earth. But the Prophet to this antiquitie oppoſeth banishment; ſhewing that when the Lord is purpoſed to correct this people, they muſt needs ſtoope. For to goe whither the ſeete leader one, ſignifies nothing elſe but to wander and runne hither and thither. Although his meaning alſo is, that they ſhall wander thus deſtitute of their riches alſo; and in their exile, ſhall be in want of all things: ſo as they ſhall not haue ſo much as an horſe or wagon to carrie themſelues, or any thing of theirs vpon. Now when pouertie is ioyned with banishment, it is a very wofull condition: for a man will eaſilie beare his banishment, if hee haue wherewith to lue, and maintaine his eſtate: but to dwell in a ſtrange Countrie as vnknowne, with pouertie, is a miſerie of miſeries. And that hee may heape vp her afflictions to the full, hee adds, that ſhee muſt goe into a farre Countrie: now the further one is exiled, the harder the banishment is.

Phenicians.

Pouerty ioyned with banishment, muſt needs be dolorous.

Verſ. 8. Who hath decreed this againſt Tyrus, (that crownes men) whoſe Merchants are Princes, whoſe Chapmen are the noble of the world?

THE Prophet adorneſ this Citie with this title, who enriched many; as we may eaſilie gather from the drift of the text. For when he calles her Merchants Kings, he ſufficiently ſhewes, that by the word crowning, vnder a ſimilitude he means the magnificence of Kings. And thus their opinion is refuted, who refer this prophecie to other Citieſ. The ſumme is, that Tyrus enriched her Citizens, as if he created euerie one of them Kings and Princes. Some thinke this verſe is to be added thus; as if the Prophet ſhould represent the perſon of a man aſtoniſhed with the deſtruction of Tyre, to make others afraid: as if he ſhould ſay; Is it poſſible that Tyre ſhould be ſo ſoone brought low, where there is ſuch abundance of riches, ſuch might, meanes, munitions; yea where there is ſo great glorie and maieltie? And that he ſhould then at an inſtant pauſe a while, as men are wont to doe in things vnlooked for. But it is better to ioyn the verſe following to this, which takes away all difficultie; ſeeing the Prophet himſelfe forthwith answers this queſtion, by which he meant to ſtirre vp his auditors to the better attention. For he might plainly haue ſaid; Theſe things are done by the counſell of the Lord: but in regard wee are drowie, ſecure, and ſenſeleſſe hearts would eaſilie haue ouerſlipped this without obſeruation: therefore hee awakens their ſpirits by this interrogation; to the end all might know that hee ſpeakes of no common thing, that therewithall they might take the matter the more to heart. And indeed, by how much the more the iudgements of God are aboue the reach of common ſenſe, ſo much the more are they worthy to be admired.

He ſpake to Egypt before, Chap. 19. in the ſame termes, ſhewing that her deſtruction ſhould not be forced with common and ordinarie changes. Now becauſe it was incredible that Tyre could bee ruined by men; See verſ. 9. therefore the Prophet well concludes, that God himſelfe ſhall bee the author of it. And therefore hee calles it the mother and nurſe of Kings; that he might cauſe Gods iudgement to thinke ſo much the more cleerely: for had it beene a Citie vnrenowned, fewer words would haue ſufficed touching the deſtruction of it: but being adorned with ſo high titles, who could imagine that this could otherwiſe come to paſſe, but by the counſell and decree of God? Hee calles the Merchants Princes: as at this day the Merchants of Venice thinke themſelues to ſurmount Princes in dignitie, Kings onely excepted: yea, and the ſailors alſo take themſelues for no leſſe then good Gentlemen. I haue heard alſo that there are ſailors at Antwerpe, who feare not to ſpend more then the richeſt Gentlemens ſubſtance can beare. Now we are wont to ask queſtions, when nothing can be answered, but what we pleaſe: which alſo is a ſigne of courage and boldneſſe.

Merchants of Venice.

Factors of Antwerpe.

Verſ. 9. The Lord of hoſtes hath decreed this, to ſtaine the pride of all glory, and to bring to contempt, all them that be glorious in the earth.

Ant.
*Or, profane

[The pride.] Or, the haughtineſſe: for we may reade it both waies, becauſe haughtineſſe begets pride; for it is very rare to finde humilitie of ſpirit in a haughtie minde. Notwithſtanding it is better to reade it pride, which is enough of it ſelfe to prouoke God to take vengeance, when men vnder pretence of their excellencie, aduance themſelues aboue meature. To profane, and diſhonour, are rakin for one and the ſame thing: becauſe thoſe who are exalted to honour, ſeeme to bee as men conſecrate and ſet apart, conceiuing I wor not what greatneſſe of themſelues; as if they were now quite exempt out of the common ranke of men. But God no ſooner ſtrips ſuch of their dignity, and brings them down, but hee forthwith makes them vile and contemptible. Let vs therefore learne from this place, ſo to conſider of Gods providence, that we giue that praife to his infinite power, which belongs vnto it for his ſo iuſt a gouernement. So then, albeit the iuſtice whereby it pleaſeth God to moderate his actions alwaies appeares not vnto vs; yet ought wee not therefore to ſeparate his power from his iuſtice. In the meane while, for as much as the Scriptures plainly ſhew, and often ſet before vs the end why God doth this or that; we ought to bee wiſe in obſeruing the cauſes of his works.

A rare thing to finde a humble heart in an haughtie minde.

Note.

Now this inuention of Gods abſolute power, which the Schoolemen haue forged, is a moſt execrable blaſphemie: for it is all one as Gods abſolute power.

if

if they should say, that God were a Tyrant, doing and appointing to bee done what himselfe likech; and not that which is according to right and equitie. Their schooles are full of such blasphemies, and therein they imitate the Pagans, who say, that God sports himselfe in turning things vpside downe here below. But in the schoole of Christ wee are taught, that Gods iustice shines in all his workes, of what kind fouer they be; that so all mouthes may be stopped, and glory may be giuen to him alone. The Prophet shewes then that the causes of such an horrible desolation shall be most iust; to the end wee should not thinke that God doth any thing without reason: for those of Tyre were proud, haughtie, couetous, vnclane in life, and dissolute. Riches and abundance of all things, vsually brings in these vices with them: and the Cities which stand vpo the trade of merchandise, are easily stained herewith. Therefore he teacheth, that God was so prouoked by these finnes; that all others might learne by this example to look about them betimes, and not to abuse the blessings of God in excessive and riot. And this is the fruit indeede which we are to gather of this; that so we may not imagine the Prophet sets a naked and bare historie here before vs. But will one say, Doth God hate the greatnes of Princes and Lords? Why he himselfe aduanceth them to that dignitie: by him great Lords and Nobles beare rule; and it is he that establisheth all the orders of Magistrates and superiours: how then can it be said he should hate them? I answer, that the dignitie whereunto Princes and great men are aduanced, is not hated of God, but accidentally, as they say; to wit, because being thus aduanced, they despise others, & thinke themselves to be no longer men, but some petty gods as it were. And thus pride alwaies for the most part, accompanies greatness; and that is it which God detests: meet hee not then confound and ouerthrow that, whereof he professeth himselfe to be an vtter enemy?

Verf. 10. Passé thorowe thy land like a flood to the daughter of Tarshish: there is no more strength.

*Or, girdle.

Some translate the word Mezsch, Girdle; others, Strength. Those which turne it, Girdle, say; that Tyre shall be so spoiled, that there shall not be left so much as a girdle: and thus hee should allude to the great heape of merchandise: for the basest of them sold of these girdles. But I thinke rather the Prophet had respect to the situation of the citie, which was fenced on all sides, and inuironed with ditches, ramparts, walles, & with the sea also.

Verf. 11. He stretched out his hand vpon the sea: hee spooke the Kingdomes: the Lord hath giuen a commandement concerning the place of merchandise, to destroy the power thereof.

Some thinke this prophetic of Isaiah touching the destruction of Tyre, should now be confirmed by examples, to wit, that the Lord hath shewed so many testimonies of his power in ouerthrowing great kingdomes, that it is no wonder if he now vtterlie roote out this Citie of Tyre, how flourishing or rich fouer it be. And this maner of teaching is often found in the Scriptures, because men acknowledge not the power of God, vnlesse it appears by manifest examples and by the effects. Thus they thinke then that the Prophet heere calles to minde the deliuerance out of Egypt, when the Lord diuided the sea, and afterward hauing driuen out seuen Kings, he caused his people to enter into the land of Canaan. But viewing the Prophets words with mature iudgement, I had rather expound them as an appendance of that which went before; and that because hee speakes of Tyre heere (a coast towne) whose riches occupied all the sea.

Exod. 14. 21.

Hee adds the kingdomes, in regard that it could not perish alone, but therewithall must needs pull ruin vpon many kingdomes besides. And thus this change was as it were the change of the whole world, as it appeeres by histories. Last of all, the Prophet concludes that it is God himselfe who hath giuen commandement touching the marring of these markets, as they say. The word Chanaan hath caused the expositors to thinke that the Prophet speakes heere of the Canaanites, as if hee alledged the example of Gods vengeance against them. But this their supposition is too weak; for this word is often taken appellatiuely, as was the word Factors in the eighth verse. For the riches of Tyre consisting in traffique and merchandise, Isaiah calles it by the name which it chiefly deserued. Now by the verb to decree, he sets out the prouidence of God, to the end the Iewes might know that what fouer seemes of some continuance in this world, yet stands or falls at Gods pleasure, so as he needs no great engines of warre to ouerthrow any strong place, for the least signe he makes with his finger will suffice.

Verf. 12. *And he said, Thou shalt no more reioyce when thou art oppressed, o virgin daughter of Zidon: rise vp, goe ouer to Chittim: yet there thou shalt haue no rest.

*Or, he shall come no more at thee to make thee glad.

All these things tend to one and the same end: for if the Prophet had seene it fit to haue concluded the matter with a bare description, he would not haue confirmed this prophetic with so many words. It was a thing almost incredible that so rich and strong a Citie, so well appointed and fortified, and confederate with so many nations, could haue cuer been ouerthrowne and ruined. When he saith he shall come no more at thee, his meaning is not to forestall them of the hope of restauration which he giues them hereafter, verf. 18. for this threatening ought to be restrained to the destruction of Tyre, as if he should say, I thou shalt not be such a wanton hereafter as thou wast wont to be in times past.

He

He calles her a virgin by way of ſimilitude, becauſe none had meddled with the riches of Tyrus before this time; neither had ſhe yet ſuſtained any loſſe. He praiſeth not her chaſtite then but he eloquently ſhewes, that the riches which had been hid to cloſe, ſhould be digged vp: as if he ſhould ſay; Thou reioicedſt heretofore as young virgins in the flower of their youth; but thy ioy ſhall come to an end when thou haſt been once deflowed. It is all one therefore for the ſenſe, as one ſhould call Venice a virgin Citie, becauſe it was neuer taken by force ſince it was built.

Daughter of Zidon. He ſpe. kes ſtill of Tyre; but he calles it ſo, becauſe the Zidoniens had built it, albeit now the daughter was waxen richer then the mother, as it often fallies out in worldly things. Now the commoditie and ſituation of the place, was the cauſe that the Tyrians grew the ſtronger: ſo as Zidon now depended vpon them. It appears ſufficiently by the holy hiſtorie, that the Monarchy of Tyrus was very famous: but the Prophet in this place onely reſpects her beginning. In that he afterwards commands them to paſſe ouer to Chittim. he not onely driues them into Cilicia, but into the Countries further off: for vnder this word, he comprehends Greece, Italy, and other regions: as if he ſhould haue ſaid; When by baniſhment thou ſhalt be torced to change thy habitation, thou ſhalt finde no reſt among thy neighbours neere hand, but thou muſt wander vp & downe thorough the world; thou ſhalt bee brought into places vnknowne, neither yet ſhalt thou finde reſt there. To be ſhort, his meaning is, that this deſtruction ſhall bee ſo fearefull and miſerable, that they ſhall finde reſt neither amongſt neighbours, nor yet amongſt ſtrangers, when they ſhall haue paſſed the ſeas.

Verſ. 13. Behold the land of the Caldeans: this was no people: Aſhur founded it by the inhabitants of the wildeſſe: they ſet vp the towres thereof: they raiſed the palices thereof, and hee brought it to ruine.

Now hee confirms that which hee hath prophecied againſt Tyre by an example. For it could hardly ſinke into any mans head, (eſpecially into the Tyrians) that their Citie could bee ſurpriſed, they being ſecure and dreamp't of no ſuch matter. I know this place is expounded diuerſly: but I will not now ſtand to confute other mens opinions: it ſhall ſuffice mee to lay forth the Prophets meaning, ſo farre forth as I can diſcerne. The people of the Caldeans were nor. That is to ſay, had no name: for if wee ſearch for the original, they deſcended from the Aſſyrians, as we may iudge by the 10 Chapter of Geneſis, verſe 11. Hee truly affirms then that it was no people in the beginning; becauſe it was couered vnder the name of another: ſo as it was not a bodie at all of any Commonweale.

Whereas we haue translated, The inhabi- tants of the wildeſſe; others tranſlate Ships: but he thinks this expoſition is conſtrained. The fiſt which I haue ſet downe, agrees better; to wit, that the Aſſyrians had eſtabliſhed and ſet vp a certaine eſtate among the Caldeans, who before wandred thorow the deſerts vnder tents of ſkinnes: but the Aſſyrians gathered them into Cities, and brought them to a better ſorme and manner of humane ſocietie. This he ſhewes by the verbe Uru, to wit, that they edified and built Cities: for wheteas ſome tranſlate, They threw downe: it cannot ſtand. What beſell then? They brought Aſhur vnto deſolation; as the common proouerbe is, the daughter deuoured the mother: for the Caldeans deſtroyed the Monarchy of the Aſſyrians, albeit it was the moſt flouriſhing and the moſt mightie of all others. But what of all this? What doe theſe things appertaine to Tyre, will ſome ſay? Much; becauſe it ſhould be deſtroyed by the Aſſyrians and Caldeans. Seeing then that the Caldeans, which were nothing in times paſt, were able to bring downe and ſubdue the Aſſyrians; is it any wonder if theſe two nations being ioynd together, ſhould ſubdue Tyre? If the Lord hath ſhewed ſuch an example of his power in the Aſſyrians; why ſhould Tyre truſt in her riches? Doubtleſſe ſhe alſo ſhall feele the hand of the Lord, and her power ſhall no way bee able to reſiſt.

Verſ. 14. Howle yee ſhips of Tarſiſh, for your ſtrength is deſtroyed.

Hee repeats that which hee ſaid before; Verſ. 1. for the Cilicians ordinarily vſed traffique with the Tyrians, becauſe they were borderers. He commands their ſhips to howle, becauſe when this haven was ſhut vp, the Merchants ſhould ſtand amaſed, in regard they ſhould neither goe nor come any more as they were wont. Now hee calles this port to which they vſually came, their ſtrength; not onely becauſe the harbour and abode there was ſafe, but alſo becauſe the voyages by ſea could bring no profite vnto them without it.

Verſ. 15. And in that day ſhall Tyrus be forgotten ſeuentie yeeres, (according to the yeeres of one King) at the end of ſeuentie yeeres ſhall Tyrus ſing as an harlot.

The Prophet hauing ſpoken of the ſurpriſing of Tyre, now therewithall ſhewes how long their calamitie ſhould indure. For it may come to paſſe, that ruined Cities may be ſoone repaired and brought to their fiſt eſtate: but the Prophet teſtifies that this Citie ſhall remaine deſolate without inhabitant, the ſpace of ſeuentie yeeres. When hee ſaith, it ſhall be forgotten; his meaning is, that traffique ſhall ceaſe, and that Merchants ſhall haue no ordinarie concurſe to and fro, as they were wont. Now, whereas ſome referre the dayes of a king to David, it is too frivolous, for he takes it for the age of a man, as the Psalmist shewes: The age of a man, saith he, is often limited to threescore yeares and ten, Psal. 90. 10. But why mentions he a king rather then some other man? It is because Tyre had a king, and therefore he counts the yeres by his life. This serued much therefore to confirme the certentie of this prophesie, for the Prophet could not know these things by any humane coniectures. By the song of the harlot, he vnder a fit similitude meanes merchandize, not that merchandizing is to be condemned in it selfe, for it is profitable and necessarie for a Common wealth: but he taxeth the deccits and guile wherewith it aboundeth, so as it may very well be compared to the art of harlotrie.

Verf. 16. Take an harp, and goe about the Citie (thou harlot that hast been forgotten) make sweet melodie, sing no songs that thou mayst be remembered.

HE compares Tyre to an harlot, who hauing passed all her youth in whoredomes and filchines, at last becoming old (by reason wherof all forsake and despise her) yet can she not forget her first gaine, nor her wicked pranks, but desires to reuiue and refresh her old spirits. And that she may the better draw men out of all parts of the Citie vnto her, she goes singing, and playing upon Instruments, to delight her companions. For such whores become mad as it were when they see themselves despised because of their age: we see also that the Poet Horace flouts an harlot called Lydia for the same cause. So Tyre, being destroyed and as it were buried in oblivion, shall againe pluck vp her courage, vsing all her wits and deuises to recouer her first estate.

By the harp and the sweet melodie he vnderstands the deccits, craft, entisements and flatteries which are vsed in merchandise, by which Merchants serue their turnes to inueigle men, and to snare them in their nets. In a word, he shewes by what meanes the Citie which consist of merchandise become rich, to wit, by craftie and vnlawfull shifts. For this cause it is that the Prophet saith, Tyre shall tickle mens eares with her sweete melodie.

He further bids her to double her songs, as if he should say, adde deceit to deceit, and flatterie to flatterie, till thou hast drawne euery one vnto thee: steale into mens minds againe, and recouer thy first fame. To be short, euen as an old harlot deuiseith meanes how she may get into fauour againe with men by painting, trimming, and decking her selfe in fine apparrell; also with muscfull Instruments and loue-songs: so Tyre shall rise and enrich her selfe againe by the same meanes wherewith she gat wealth before: not that he counsels or giues Tyre licēce by these words to enrich her selfe this way, but continues on his prophesie.

Verf. 17. And at the end of seuentie

*yeares shall the Lord visit Tyre, * and she shall returne to her wages, and shall commit fornication With all the kingdoms of the earth that are in the World.*

ALTHOUGH Tyre shall seeme to be vtterlie destroyed when God shall afflict her, yet the Prophet shewes that she shall obtaine mercie, for after her calamities she shall be restored to her first glorie. But it is rightlie said that such a restitution shall be brought to passe by the works of the Lord, for otherwise Tyre must of necessitie seele that which Malachie pronounceth against the Idumeans, to wit, that the Lord would ouerthrow and cast downe all that which they built and set vp, Mala. 1. 4. They had neuer recovered their first estate then vnlesse the Lord himselfe had been the author of it.

Now fro hence we may gather a very profitable doctrine, to wit, y albeit God be a iust & seuerer Iudge against y wicked, yet he giues place to his mercie, and is neuer so sharpe in making the wound, but he is as gentle in aswaging y smart of it, and in the end takes it cleane away. Now if he be such a one towards the godlesse & reprobates, what a one will he be to those whom he hath adopted in Christ Iesus for his children, vp6 whom he wil poure out his goodnes? When Kingdomes then are restored, when Citiees are peopled afresh, and that men recouer their liberties, all comes to passe by the only prouidence of God, who casts downe the highest things when it pleaseth him, and on a sudden sets vp and plants that which he had cast downe.

That which follows, to wit, and she shall returne, should be read, But she shall returne: for the meaning is, that Tyre shall not become the better nor the wiser by such a tedious chastisement, but shall by and by returne to her old bias againe, for in these words he taxeth her ingratitude. We euery day behold such examples, for there is almost no corner in the world in which the Lord hath not set the print of his iudgements. Sometimes he giues those whom he hath corrected a breathing time; but doe they become euer the better? No, the Prophet saith then that Tyre shall be such a one, she shall be neuer awhit reformed, but shall rather returne to her vomit againe; she shall play the harlot as she was wont to doe. It is not to be doubted but he speaks of her merchandizing, but he continues on his similitude which he had taken vp before, not meaning thereby vtterlie to cōdemne the trade of Merchants, as we haue said, but because amongst so many corruptions as men haue mingled therewith, it very fidlie resembles the pranks of harlots, for it is replenished with so much cunning, secret packing, and such suble conueyances (as we may now see in the world) that it seems it was only deuised to snare and beguile the simple. How many new and vnknowne practises doe they inuent euery day to gaine and take vp vniūric? which yet none can perceiue vnlesse of long time he hath frequented the Schooles of the Merchants. Wee neede not maruell then if the Prophet

Prophet hath taken vp ſuch a ſimilitude; whereby he meant to ſhew, that Tyrus ſhould be no leſſe deceitful in the trade of merchandiſe, then ſhe was before.

*Or, but in the end.

Verſ. 18. Yet her occupying and her wages ſhall be holy vnto the Lord: it ſhall not be laid vp nor kept in ſtore; but her merchandiſe ſhall be for them that dwell before the Lord, to eaſe ſufficiently, and to haue durable clothing.

THis was an other ſauour of God towards Tyre. After ſhe was reſtored, ſhe yet conuerted not to the Lord, but went on in her ſubtile dealings: for which ſhee deſerued vterly to periſh. And indeed ſhe was miſerably puniſhed when Alexander tooke her by force: yet notwithstanding the kingdome of Ieſus Chriſt was ſet vp there, as S. Luke witneſſeth, Acts 21.4. This verſe then muſt bee oppoſed to the former: as if he ſhould ſay, Yet ſhall the merchandiſe of Tyre be conſecrated to the Lord. Here we haue a wonderfull example of Gods goodneſſe, which ſhined euen into this vile brothelhouſe, and as you would ſay, euen into hell. This reſtauration of Tyre then muſt be attributed to the bountie of the Lord: but this firſt benefit was nothing in compariſon of the ſecond, when the Lord ſanctified and ſet it a part for himſelfe. But will ſome ſay, might that bee offered vnto God in ſacrifice, which the Tyrians had ſcraped together by polling and vnlawfull ſhifts? For the Lord deteſts ſuch offerings; becauſe hee requires a pure conſcience, and innocent hands: Pſal. 24.4. Now in regard of this queſtion, many trouble themſelues about the expoſition of this place, but to ſmall purpoſe: for it is not the Prophets meaning that the merchandiſe of Tyre ſhall be conſecrated vnto God whileſt ſhe continues in her whoredoms, but notes: ſhe ſhall come; namely, after her repentance and conuerſion. Shee ſhall not then gather treaſures, and heape vp wealth by hooke and by crooke; but ſhall employ them in the ſeruice of God, and lay out the profit of her trading, for the comfort of the faithfull in their neede. Now albeit hee hath vſed an vnſeemly word, it is in regard of the time: ſignifying that ſhe ſhall forget her wicked practiſes, and ſhall change her old cuſtomes.

They ſhall not be laid vp. Thus in few words hee deſcribes the repentance of Tyre, which although in times paſt, was addicted to couetouſneſſe; yet being conuerted to Chriſt, ſhe ſhall not ſtude to hoord vp riches, but ſhall employ them for the reliefe of the poore and other good vſes. This ought to be the fruit of repentance, as S. Paul admoniſheth; Let him that ſtole, ſteale no more; but let him rather labour with his hands the thing that is good, that he may be able to giue to him that needeth: Eph. 4.28. Whereas the Tyrians then in times paſt deuoured riches on all ſides, with an inſatiable deſire: Iſaiab ſaith, that now they ſhall bee readie to giue as faſt out, becauſe their inordinate deſire of gaine ſhall ceaſe. This is then a note of charitie to be in our poore brethren: contraiwife, of cruelty; we ſuffer them to want; eſpecially when God lades vs with plentie.

He addes the right way of doing good, to wit, they ſhall beſtow their gods vpon the ſeruants of God. Now albeit he comprehends all the faithfull, yet hath he a ſpeciall reſpect to the Priests and Leuites, of whom, ſome ſacrificed, ſome made readie the beaſts that were to be ſacrificed, & others watched: in a word, all were readie to doe their office; and for that cauſe it is ſaid, that they dwell before the Lord. The like, by as good right, is to be ſaid of all the Miniſters of the Church. Moreouer, in as much as all the faithfull, of what condition ſoever they be, belong vnto the ſanctuarie of the Lord, and are made one royall Prieſthood by Chriſt, to dwell before him: I willingly referre theſe words to all the houſhold of faith, of whom wee ought to be moſt careful: for S. Paul giues vs fo in charge, and would haue them relieued before any other: Gal. 6.10. For if the common bond of nature ought to moue vs to hold an eſtimation of our owne fleſh, how much more ſhould the vnion of Chriſts members which is much more holy and ſtraight, then all the bonds of nature, moue and prouoke vs thereunto?

Chap. 38.7.

We ought alſo to obſerue in this phraſe of ſpeech, to dwell before the Lord, another point; for albeit we haue not now the Arke of the couenant, yet by the benefit of Chriſt, we approach neerer vnto God then the Leuites in old time did. And therefore we are commanded to walke before him no otherwiſe then if he looked vpon vs; to the end we may in all good conſcience giue our ſelues to holineſſe and righteouſneſſe; for we are charged to walke alwaies as in his ſight, and to behold him as one that viewes all our waies, that ſo we may keepe iuſtice and iudgement.

That they may eaſe their fill. The Prophet meanes, that wee ought to ſuſtaine our brethren much more largely and liberally then men are wont to doe: becauſe we are wonderfull niggards and pinch pennies, when we are moued to relieue the poore. There are verie few that will venture their almes for nothing, and giue with a franke and willing heart: for they thinke that that which they giue to others, is loſt, and is but a leſſening of their ſtocke. The Lord therefore greatly commends a cheerefull heart; Rom. 12. 8. rather to correct this vice of niggardlineſſe; and albeit the place in the Romans be chiefly directed to the Deacons, yet it ought to be applied to all. An other ſentence alſo muſt be kept in minde, which reſpecteth that God loues a cheerefull giuer: 2. Cor. 9.7. Let vs alſo note that the Prophet affirms, that whatſoever is giuen to the poore, is conſecrated vnto God: which the holy Ghoſt alſo in an other place teacheth; With ſuch ſacrifices God is pleaſed: Heb. 13.10. For he neuer commanded men to offer ſacrifices, as if they benefit him; no, hee needed them not; but he only appointed them theſe exerciſes of pietie vnder the law, now, vnder the Gospell he commands vs distribute something to our neighbours of that we possesse; testifying that whatsoeuer wee employ for the reliefe of our brethren, is to him a sacrifice of a sweete smell.

And it ought greatlie to kindle the loue of bountie and liberalitie in vs, when we heare that our almes are so highlie commended, and that our hands together with our gifts are consecrated vnto God.

THE XXIII. CHAPTER.

Verf. 1. Behold, the Lord maketh the earth empty, and he maketh it waste: he turneth it upside downe, and scatereth the Inhabitants thereof.

His prophesie as I take it, is as it were shutting vp of all those things which haue bin described in the thirteenth Chapter vnto this, wherem Isaiah hath not onely foretold the ruine of the Jewes and Israelites, but also of the Moabites, Assyrians, Egyptians, and others. In a word, he heere comprehends all in a short summe, as if he had viewed all the neighbour countries that were knowne to the Jewes. Some referre this to the Israelites, others to the Jewes, thinking the Prophet speaks of their destruction: but seeing he makes mention of the world, I can not be drawne to take this place in any other sense, but that he now in a few words comprehends all that which he hath said of many particulars, and those belonging to diuers times. Whereas he in the next verse makes mention of the Priest, it contradicts this that I say nothing at all, although it might thereby seeme that these things should only appertaine vnto the people of God: for albeit he speaks of all nations, yet the Jewes alwaies deferring to be preferred in the first place, Isaiah was to regard them chieflie and principallie, because it was theirs by right. For he speaks of others accidentallie as you would say: no maruell then if hauing touched them, he mentions his owne people in a particular maner.

Others vnderstand this place of the whole world in generall; yet so as they referre it to the last day: which me thinks is too strict: for the Prophet hauing threatned the Jewes and other nations, in the end addes a consolation, to wit, that the Lord will once againe raise vp his Church, making her to flourish more then euer it did: now how can this agree to the last Iudgement? By the word earth, I thinke the Prophet means not the whole world, but those regions which were well knowne to the Jewes: as for example, if we at this day should speake of things which happen in the world, we should hardly passe beyond Europe, much lesse should we thinke of that which is done in India, because the parts on this side is our world as it were. In the same sense Isaiah speaks of the earth, and of the Inhabitants of the Countries adioyning, which he, and those to whom he spake, knew. To conclude, we may limit this world whereof the Prophet speaks in this place, within the confines or bounds of the Assyrians, Egyptians, Moabites, and other nations, as if he should say, Hitherto I haue spoken of diuers calamities which then were like to fall vpon many people, and do yet threaten many others in particular: but now behold the conclusion, The Lord will spoile and ouerthrow the face of the earth, with all the beautie of it.

Others expound the verb Bolkah, he opens the earth, that the enemies may the more easily enter into it: but I had rather expound it, He vncouers the earth, because they vse to say, The earth is couered or clothed all the while great multitudes of people inhabit it; as also whē it abounds with beasts and fruits: contrarywise, it is said to be vncouered and made bare when it hath lost her inhabitants, for so she is stripped of her garment, euen as if a man should be stripped out of his coates and other apparell. Now this was to happen to the Assyrians, Egyptians, and other nations which he mentioned before, as well as to the Jewes, and therefore he wraps them vp altogether in one iudgement.

*Verf. 2. * And there shall be like people, like priest, and like seruant, like master, like maid, like mistris, like buyer, like seller, like lender, like borrower, * like giuer, like taker to vsurie.*

* Or, and the priest shalbe like the people, &c.

* Or, he borrower, like the lender.

And there shall be like priest.] By these words he signifies an vtter ruine, wherē all order, government, and policie shall cease: for whilest any Commonwealth flourisheth, there is alwaies a certaine difference betweene the people and the priests: well then, he notes an horrible confusion. Now vnder this word priest, he puts the particular for the generall, taking a part for the whole, which is a thing very visuall in the Scriptures: although we may take the word Cohenim for those which are placed in any dignitie whatsoever: because the Hebrues sometimes giue this name to Princes, but speciallie to such as are of the blood Royall: notwithstanding I willinglie receiue the figure Synecdoche before mentioned. Now sihence the Prophet puts this confusion of estates among the catalogue of Gods curses, shewing that when they be thus turned topsie turuic, it proceeds from his fearefull indignation: we ought on the contrary to gather how well-pleasing policie, and the well ordering of all things is vnto God; as also what a great fauour we receiue from him when such good order is preferred

and

and continued amongst vs, for it being gone, our life differs nothing from that of brute beaſts. Wee are therefore not onely to acknowledge it to be an heauie hand of God vpon vs, but alſo to confeſſe our owne finnes to be the cauſe, when hee confounds eſtates, deprives vs of the word, and of iudgement ſeates: which being once put downe, the comfort of our life therewithall is fallen to the ground.

We may alſo obſerue hence, that the Lord in executing his iudgements, ſpares not mens perſons, of what calling ſoever they be. What an holy calling was the priesthood which the Lord had conſecrated to himſelfe, and adorned after a glorious manner? How much did the people alſo glorie in it; as if the continuance thereof had been vnchangeable, and to haue indured for euer? Yet notwithstanding euen this honourable order of men, is wrapped in amongst the iudgements of God, becauſe he reſpects no perſons. Nay, the more fauours wee haue receiued from him, and the greater our advancement is, the more ſeuerely will hee correct vs, if wee proue vnthankfull, and abuſe his benefits.

To this appertaines that which is here added touching maſters and ſervants, buyers and ſellers: for wee know that theſe callings are lawfull, and are notumbled together, vnleſſe it bee when God ſmites his people in iuſtice; as we haue ſaid before: for in a State well managed, men put a difference betwene the maſter and the ſervant. Neither can a Commonwealth long ſtand without buying and ſelling: now to make the poore equall with the rich, what is it elſe but to ouerthrow all humane ſocietie? We haue the Prophets meaning then, as if he ſhould ſay; All policie ſhall bee aboliſhed, becauſe in theſe ruines, the rich ſhould be brought into extreme povertie. To conclude, he here ſets forth an horrible deſtruction, after which ſhall enſue a wonderfull change.

Verſ. 3. The earth ſhall bee cleane emptied, and utterly ſpoiled: for the Lord hath ſpoken this word.

HE confirms that which hee ſaid before: and withall admoniſteth them, that theſe changes ſhall not fall out by haphazard, as they ſay; but that it ſhall come to paſſe by the providence and worke of the Lord. He ſaid expreſly in the firſt verſe, that the Lord was determined to emptie the earth: now he tels the, that it ſhall ſo come to paſſe, adding a reaſon of it; to wit, becauſe God had ſpoken the word: and therefore it could not be called backe againe.

Verſ. 4. The earth lamenteth and fadeth away, the world is feebled and decayed; the proud people of the world are weakened.

THE Prophet holds on his ſpeech ſtill: for all theſe words ſerue to lay forth the maner of the ruine of the whole earth; that is to ſay, ſo much as was knowne to the Iewes. Now hee ſets out this iudgement of God, vnder borrowed ſpeeches more familiarly, that he might awaken the drowfie; as hee is wont to doe.

By the high people, we may vnderſtand thoſe which were more excellent then others: for that was a matter of greater wonder, then if ſome people of a baſe condition had been deſtroyed. Notwithſtanding, if any be pleaſed to expound it particularly of the Iewes, I will not gainsay them: for albeit the Aſſyrians and Egyptianes exceeded them in riches and power; yet notwithstanding the Iewes were higher then they, in regard that God had adopted them for his owne. Yet the other expoſition pleaſeth mee better: for ſo his meaning is; that God will not onely puniſh them of meane eſtate, but thoſe alſo that are advanced to honour and dignitie aboue others.

Verſ. 5. The earth alſo deceiveth, becauſe of the inhabitants thereof: for they tranſgreſſed the lawes, they changed the ordinances, and brake the everlaſting covenant.

Others tranſlate, The earth is polluted; becauſe the verbe deceiveth, ſignifies to be wicked: both ſenſes may agree, but the verſe following requires that wee expound it, The earth deceiveth. For hee ſeemes to amplifie it further by and by after, when hee ſaith, that the curſe hath deuoured the earth. There is no great hardneſſe in the word Tarath, whether we tranſlate it vnder, or, Becauſe of her inhabitants. Now there is a mutual traffique, as it were, betwene the earth, and thoſe that labour in it: ſo ſhe ought to render the that which ſhe hath receiued into her bowels, with viſtne; for otherwiſe ſhee deceives them: but ſhe yeelds a reaſon why ſhe deceiues, when ſhee laies the blame vpon the inhabitants: for theſe felues haue made her barren by their wickedneſſe. Our ſinne is the cauſe why the earth ſuſtains vs not, nor brings forth her increaſe as God hath ordained by the courſe of nature. His will is, that ſhee ſhould be a mother vnto vs, to the end ſhe may yeeld vs food: now if ſhe change her nature and courſe, or degenerates from her fruitfulneſſe; let vs impute that to our owne wickedneſſes, becauſe we our ſelues ouerthrow that order which God hath ſet: for otherwiſe the earth would neuer deceiue, but would alwaies render vs that which ſhe ought. The cauſe is by and by added, why the earth is become vnfaithfull and deceiues her inhabitants: for is it not good reaſon they ſhould be defrauded of their promiſion of food, that will defraud God, their Father and ſuſtainer of his honour? Now hee taxeth the reuolt of his nation heere in a particular manner: for their fault was much more heinous, and leſſe excuſable, then all the finnes of thoſe which were neuer taught in God his ſchoole.

Verſ. 6.

Mens finnes the cauſe of the earths barrenneſſe.

The confuſion of eſtate in a kingdom, a ſeruant of very Range alterations.

*Or, high.

1 The word Thorah is transferred to the law, because it signifies doctrine: but it is heere put in the plurall number, and signifies all the doctrine that is comprehended in the law. Now because the Law consists as well in Commandements as promises, the Prophet adds two other words or parts of it, to make his meaning the more plaine.

2 The word Chok, signifies an Ordinance, and by it some vnderstand the Ceremonies, others Maners. Wee may translate it Instructions: for I take it not only for Ceremonies, but for all things that be put to the rules of good life. Thirdly, he puts the word Berith, which

3 signifies a bargain or covenant. This word is to be restrained to the covenants whereby the Lord adopting his people, promised to be their God. He reprocheth their vnthankfulness then, because that albeit the Lord had manifested himselfe vnto them diuers waies, and had giuen them singular testimonies of his loue, yet were they rebellious and wanton, transgressing his lawes, and violating his holy covenant.

But why direct he his speech to the Iewes? Because he knew that he was sent vnto them as their Prophet to teach them. Hence wee

1 may gather what the role of a well ordered life is: for it is contained in the Law, which we must precisely follow if we will approue our doings vnto God, if we turne from it to the right hand or to the left, we are guiltie of

2 transgression. Wee may also obserue that God would not only haue vs to thinke vpon his Lawes and Commandements in his word, but also vpon his Covenant: for the principall part of the word consists in the promises by which hee adopts and receiues vs for his people. Now it is not to be doubted but in these varietie of words the Prophet meant to amplify the matter: as if he should say, You are whollie corrupt, nothing remains found amongst you.

He calles it the euertlasting cōuenant, because it ought to be perpetuall, inuiolable, and to indure for euer, for it ought to continue alwaies from the father to the sonne, that the memorie of it might neuer be lost, but might be preferred stedfast in all ages. He laies forth their disloyaltie then and malice, in that they durst violate the Covenant made betweene God and them, and ouerthrow the things which the Lord would haue kept sure and stedfast. This was odious: no maruell then if the earth auenge her selfe of such an impietie, by denying men their sustentance.

Verf. 6. Therefore hath the curse deuoured the earth, and the Inhabitants thereof are desolate: Wherefore the Inhabitants thereof are burned vp, and few men are left.

Others translate Forswearing: but because this word also signifieth to curse, I doubt not but it is taken here for curfing, the Prophet hauing an eye to those curfes which Moses denounceth in the Law against the wicked that transgress it: Isaiab testifies then that all the calamities which should come to passe, proceeded from the curse of God. We know that the earth was cursed because of the transgression of the first man, so as it brought forth thistles and briars in stead of good fruites, Gen. 3. 17. 18. and yet notwithstanding the Lord hath so moderated this curse, that it ceaseth not to yeeld men foode, although in regard of their vnthankfulness they be vnworthy of it. If we then cease not to offend God, adding sinne vnto sinne; is it not good reason that wee should feele this curse to prick vs to the quick, and that the earth should waxe barren and vnfruitfull?

The cause why the earth is cursed.

I thinke the verb Asham, should rather be taken to desolate, then to transgresse; and the scope of ŷ text also leades vs vnto it, therefore I haue translated, they are desolate: vntill any had rather take the coniunction for a particle of shewing the cause, in this sense, The earth being cursed of God, is withered, because the inhabitants thereof are wicked. The verb Charu may be takeŷ by way of similitude, which I approue best of, to wit, that those whom the wrath of God hath deuoured, were burned, for destruction is often compared to the burning of fire.

Now whereas in the end he adds, that a few men shall be left, thence we may perceiue, that this prophesie can not be expounded of the last Iudgement: for the Prophet rather foretels and confirms the certentie of those calamities which he had threatned to befall sundrie nations, that by this meanes the faithfull being now readie to indure many afflictions, might feare, and be drawne to repentance.

Verf. 7. The Wine faileth, the vine hath no might: all that were of merry heart, do mourne.

8. The mirth of tabrets ceaseth: the noyse of them that reioyce endeth: the ioy of the harp ceaseth.

HE continues on the same matter still, but in a more particular maner, foretelling the desolation that should happen to the land of Iudea. Now he vseth a large description, that he might touch them the nearer to the quick, and wound them with the sense of Gods iudgement. He also taxeth their excess, intemperancie, and wantonnes, because that in so great abundance of all things they rebelled against God.

But this ingratitude is not the sinne of the Iewes only, nor of that age alone, but it may be scene euery where, that the more men are gluttered with the blessings of God, the more proudlie they aduance themselves against him, and giue themselves the raines too much: For this cause the Prophet reproues theŷ, as if he should say, Hither vnto you haue plunged your selues in delights and pleasures, but the Lord is determined to cut you short. Now Isaiab speaks of the thing to come, as if it were already present, the better to paint it out as it were before their eyes.

Wofull effects proceeding from so gracious a cause.

Verſ. 9. They ſhall not drinke Wine With mirth: ſtrong drinke ſhall be bitter to them that drinke it.

*Or, with ſongs.

IT is not a thing euill in it ſelfe to drinke wine; for God hath ordained it for mans vſe: but the Prophet here deſcribes the banquetts of drunkards, in which nothing is to be ſeene but exceſſe, diſſolutions, and dihoneſt ſongs. Moreouer, becauſe they had abuſed their abundance, hee threatens them with want; which men draw into their houſes, when they abuſe Gods bountie by their riot. He addes further, that if they ſhall drinke ſtrong drinke, it ſhall be bitter vnto them: for ſorrow makes vs feele no taſte either in meate or drinke. The ſumme is, that God will deſprieue them of the vſe of wine, norwithſtanding they haue plenty; becauſe the ſorrow wherewith they ſhall be overwhelmed, will cauſe them to loſe all taſte and ſauiour therein. Strong drinke ſhall be bitter: that is to ſay, you ſhall not inioy theſe pleaſures and delights, in which you haue ſoaked your ſelues, any longer.

Abuſe of Gods benefiſes pulles want into our houſes.

Sorrow cauſeth ſweet things to become bitter to our taſte.

Verſ. 10. The Citie of vanitie is broken downe; euery houſe is ſhut vp.

I Willingly agree, that this be particularly referred to the deſtruction of Ieruſalem; although from the ſcope of the text wee may gather, that it alſo extends it ſelfe to other Cities; becauſe he will by and by ſummon the nations in the plural number, to appeare before the iudgement ſeate of God. But in regard that Iſaiab principally reſpected his Citizens; wee may well take it, that this Citie of vanitie is Ieruſalem: either becauſe there was no true vertue in it, or becauſe it was deſtroyed.

Wee may referre the word Tobu, to the deſtruction it ſelfe, or to the ſinnes by which they had prouoked the wrath of God againſt them. If we referre it to their iniquities; his meaning is, a Citie wherein there is nothing but diſorder: & this ſenſe pleaſeth me beſt, albeit it may alſo be referre to the deſtruction. For as I take it, he ſhewes the cauſe of the ruine wherewith he threatens the Citie; to wit, becauſe iuſtice and equitie were baniſhed out of it. The houſes ſhut vp, ſignifie that there ſhall be great ſolitarineſſe: for this is added onely to exemplifie the deſolation of this Citie.

Verſ. 11. There is a crying for wine in the ſtreets: all ioy is darkened; the mirth of the world is gone away.

HIS meaning is, there ſhall be great ſcarcity of wine. Now where want and famine is, there are innumerable complaints; not onely in corners, but in publique places alſo. He expreſſeth theſe complaints and lamentations then; but withall he taxeth their exceſſe and intemperancie, in that they con-terred not themſelues with things neceſſarie, but ſoked themſelues in an ouer flowing of drunkenneſſe and all voluptuouſneſſe. For wee ſhould ſupply an antithetiſ that is wanting here; to wit, You hitherunto abounded in wine and good cheere, through which you haue taken occaſion to waxe wanton and proud againſt God: you ſhall therefore bee juſtly deſprieued of them, ſo that in ſtead of your ioying, ſhall bee heard cries and ſighings.

Wee muſt alſo note a ſimilitude in this ſecond member: for as we are wont to ſay, Ioy A prouebts. then ſhineth in her brighteſt colours, when we haue matter of ioy: the Prophet therefore ſaith, that it is darkened; becauſe ſorrow is as a cloud put betweene. To reioyce, is a thing lawfull in it ſelfe, as alſo to drinke: neither doth the Prophet reprove it; onely that immoderate and inordinate ioy: for men ſeldome keepe compaſſe, by reaſon of that lawleſſe which is in them. For as much as the Iewes then had proudly giuen vp themſelues to all diſſoluteneſſe of life, he ſets Gods juſt iudgement before them: for ioy is then juſtly cut off from vs, when we know not how to entertaine the benefiſts of God with thankfulneſſe, nor know not how to reioyce in him. Hee is enforced then to take our delights and pleaſures from vs, and then to compell vs to mourne and ſigh.

When ioy is juſtly cut off from vs.

Verſ. 12. In the citie is left deſolation, and the gate is ſmitten with deſtruction.

BY an elegant manner of ſpeech hee deſcribeth the deſtruction of Ieruſalem, or of many other Cities together. The beautie and perfection of Cities, conſiſts in the multitude of inhabitants: they are therefore called deſerts, when none are left to dwell in them. Now the Prophet tauntingly ſaith, that deſtruction ſhall dwell in the Citie. True it is that ſome tranſlate the word Shammah, Deſolation: but both the words come all to one ſenſe. He makes mention of the gates, becauſe a man might perceiue by them, whether the Citie were full of people or no; for thither they all came, and there iuſtice was adminiſtred. Firſt then he ſpeakes of the whole Citie in generally, and then notes one particular for amplifications ſake: for albeit Cities be deſtitute of inhabitants, yet ſome may be ſeene at the gates: but if they be empty, the deſolation muſt needs be great thoroughout the Citie.

The beautie of Cities.

Verſ. 13. Surely thus ſhall it bee in the middeſt of the earth among the people, as the ſhaking of an Olive tree, and as the grapes when the vintage is ended.

IN as much as this ſentence comes in betweene the threatenings and the conſolation, it ſeemes hee ſhould onely ſpeake to the elect, and not to all the people indifferently:

vntlesse we will say that he describes that scattering whereby the Iewes were diuided as it were into many nations. But because this should be too strict and harsh, I expound it simple, that some hope is left to the other forelorne nations. And trulie this prophesie doth indeede properlie belong to Christ, through whom it is no maruel if the Gentiles haue some part of the promise of saluation. The Prophet hath already vsed this similitude, Chapter 17.6. but there he only mentioned the church of the Iewes, telling them that a small remnant should still remaine of the holy seed, lest the faithfull might thinke the Church vtterlie rooted out. For as when an olive tree is shaken there will alwaies be some left heere and there, and likewise grapes vpon the vine, so should there remaine after gathering as it were of the faithfull in that great destruction wherewith the Church should be oppressed. But in this place he extends this promise vnto other parts of the world, according as they should partake in the same grace, by the meanes of Christ. Yet he therewithall adds a menace or threatening, as if he should say, the earth shall be left bare of her Inhabitants, euen as trees and vines are of their fruit.

Vers. 14. They shall lift up their voice: they shall shout for the magnificence of the Lord: they shall reioyce from the sea.

HE now goes on and amplifies the consolation which he touched before: for as he said in the tenth Chapter, vers. 22. that of this great multitude there should remaine a litle handfull which should couer the whole earth; so now he shewes that this small number of the faithfull which shall be left of this great vintage, shall reioyce notwithstanding, and sound the same so loude, that it should be heard vnto the furthest regions. This is done by the preaching of the Gospell: for as touching the estate of Iudea, it seemed to be ouerthrowne, in regard that the politrique government was abolished: warres without, and seditions within, had so wasted it, that it was vnpossible euer to be recouered. The rest of the world also was no lesse dumb in vttring these praises of God, then deafe in hearing the sound thereof. Now because the Iewes were the first fruits of y beleeners, I willingly grant that they be placed in the first rank.

Hence we gather a singular Consolation, to wit, that the Lord in a moment can restore his Church vnto a most flourishing estate, yea and create it of nothing; for out of death he drawes life euen as often as it pleaseth him. But is it not a wonder and aboue the order of nature that so small a remnant in lifting up their voice, should be heard so farre off? for where few are, there is silence; and great noise is wont to be where great multitudes are gathered together. This then is the worke of God which farre surmounts nature, and whatsoever facultie else is in man: otherwise it seemes the Prophet should contradict himselfe; to wit, that all Iudea should be wasted, and all the world brought to nothing; and yet that their crie should be heard euerie where. This in it selfe is incredible, or rather ridiculous, if we measure the thing by carnall sense: it is therefore, as we haue said, to be ascribed wholly to the admirable power and worke of God.

By their crie he not only meanes the voyce of gladnes which is expressed by mirth and reioycing, but he also comprehends vnder it trust and confidence, because they shall freely, boldly, and with a leud voyce publish the praises of the Lord. Now herewithall he admonisheth the faithfull that it is their dutie to cause Gods graces in them to be magnified, and not their owne. By the Sea, it is well enough knowne that the Iewes meane the regions farre off, which lie beyond the same.

Vers. 15. Wherefore praise ye the Lord in the valleys, euen the name of the Lord God of Israel, in the yles of the sea.

GODS benefits ought to prouoke vs to giue him thanks, which we then testify, when we vtter forth his praises. What thanks shall I render vnto the Lord, saith David, for all the benefits he hath bestowed vpon me: I will euen take the cup of thankiuing for his saluation, and call vpon his name. This order the Prophet keeps in this place: for hauing spoken of the restauration of the Church, he forthwith exhorts vs to offer the sacrifice of praye. By the valleys, he meanes those Countreies that are scattered and diuided as it were from the rest: for those which are inuironed with mountaines, are distinct and seuerall naturalle. Thence it is that the inhabitants of the valleys are rude and barbarous, because they seldome conuerse with others. It is then, as if the Prophet should haue said, There is no corner of the world be it neuer so obscure and intangled, but the praises of God shall be heard there.

He hath expressed the God of Israel, to signifye that all nations should call vpon the name of the true God. For though all men haue a certaine knowledge of God, and that some seede of religion be rooted in their hearts, yet when the question is of worshipping the true God in a right maner, it euiler vanisheth to nothing, or else they easilie fall to Idolatrie and superstitions. Now the Prophet here speaks of the true religion which should be spread thorow the world: whence yet againe it appeares, that he prophesieth of the kingdome of Christ, vnder whose reigne the sincere truth was reuealed to forreine and profane nations.

Vers. 16. From the vttermost part of the earth we haue heard praises, euen glory to the iust. And I said, My leauee, my leauesse, Woe is me: the transgressors haue offended: yea, the transgressors haue grieuonslie offended.

THIS verse contains two sentences, which in appearance seeme to crosse one another: for the first containes a ioyfull argument of Gods praifes; & preſently he breaks out into lamentations: wherein he bewailes the diſloyall behaviour of the wicked, who made ſhipwracke of all religion and godlineſſe. As touching the praifes of God, wee haue already ſaid, that hee can neither bee praifed nor called vpon, till hee haue made himſelſe knowne vnto vs by giuing vs ſome taſte of his goodneſſe, whereby we may conceiue good hope and aſſurance of ſaluation. From thence come theſe ſentences of Dauid, Lord, who ſhall praife thee in the graue? In death who ſhall confeſſe thee? For as long as we onely feele the wrath of God, we cannot vtter his praifes; and therefore when the Prophet ſaith, they ſhall be heard; he giues vs to vnderſtand, that the Goſpell ſhall be publiſhed thorowout the world, to the end men may acknowledge God for their Father, and wholly giue ouer themſelues to ſet forth his praifes.

It is to be noted that he ſaith from the ends of the earth; becauſe the praifes of God were then bounded within Iudea, and were not heard farre off: but afterward, they ſounded euerie where. When he adds, glorie to the iuſt: ſome take it as belonging to the perſon of all the faithfull in general; as if the meaning were, that God ſhall be glorified, becauſe of his iuſtice. Others reade it together thus; We haue heard glory giuen to the iuſt God. Thoſe who thinke the Heralds of theſe praifes are called iuſt, doe gather a good ſenſe; but they conſider not the word glorie: or at the leaſt they are conſtrained to put the word Reioycing, in the ſtead of it. Whereas he puts the verbe, we haue heard, in the preterpericte tence, and not in the future; I make no doubt but he meant to reuiue the hearts of the faithfull by this conſolation; to wit, We ſhall againe heare the praifes of God: for it imports more then if he had ſaid, The praifes of God ſhall be heard. He alſo ſpeakes in the firſt perſon, that hee might comprehend the whole body of the Church, and ſo draws the faithfull to a more diligent attention. We often finde the epithete iuſt, in the Scripture, which he here applies vnto God: but it belongs vnto him after another ſort then it doth vnto men; who are called iuſt, in regard of that righteouſneſſe which is communicated vnto them: for God is called iuſt, by the effects; becauſe he is the fountaine of it. Let vs now ſee then the ſubſtance of this congratulation and thankſgiuing; to wit, we praife this iuſt God, becauſe we haue life and ſaluation, by the imputation of this iuſtice vnto vs. Where the iuſtice of God is felt then, there muſt praifes and thankes needes follow.

But how incredible did theſe things ſeeme when the Prophet foretold them? for the Lord was onely knowne and praifed in Iudea. Their deſtruction is denounced, and then follows the publiſhing of Gods word and praifes, which ſhould ſound thorowout the world. Now how could theſe things come to paſſe, when the people of God were deſtroyed? Surely we may well conclude, that few at that time belieued theſe prophecies. But now that theſe things are come to paſſe, is it not our duties to admire ſo great a miracle? The Iewes were not onely ſcattered, but almoſt brought to nothing, yet notwithstanding one ſmall ſparkle hath been ſufficient to giue light to the whole world: ſo as whoſoeuer hath been truly enlightned therewith, hath made bold and conſtant profeſſion of the truth.

My bowels.] This place is diuerſly expounded: for ſome tranſlate the word Razi, Secret, others tranſlate, Leanneſſe. Thoſe who turne it, Secret, thinke the Prophet meant that a double ſecret was reuealed to him; to wit, that the Lord was purpoſed to reward the good, and to be auenged on the wicked. For whileſt men looke to the outward appearance, and ſee the wicked haue all they can with, and the godly ouerwhelmed with miſeries; they are troubled and doubt in themſelues, whether the matters of this preſent life are governed by the hand of God, or whether all things are guided by Fortune. But ſuch thoughts are nothing but the ſeedes of impietic; as Salomon ſhewes, Eccleſ. 8. 11. This therefore made the Pſalmiſt enter in the ſanctuarie of God, to conſider of this thing, rather then to conſult with fleſh and blood about it: Pſal. 73. 17. Now if we follow this interpretation, the ſenſe will bee; Although the iuſt ſeeme to haue loſt all their labour: yet this ſecret doe I retaine in my breaſt, that it ſhal be well with them notwithstanding in the latter end: and albeit the wicked thinke to eſcape; yet am I aſſured they ſhall not goe ſcotfree. But in regard this ſubtiltie ſeemes farre fetched, I had rather expound it more ſimply: and ſeeing the particle of expreſſing anguiſh, is alſo by and by added; who ſhould let me to thinke, but that Iſaiah ſpeakes here of the iuſt, or of their reward?

Others expound it Leanneſſe; as if hee ſhould ſay; I languish and am euen dried vp with ſorrow: for as the proſperitie and flouriſhing eſtate of the people, did as it were baton him; ſo their miſerable and woſull eſtate was his leanneſſe. For the Prophet here ſuſtains & repreſents the perſon of the whole ſtocke of the Iewes: and becauſe the Lord had cut it off, hee had iuſt cauſe to bewaile the leanneſſe of it. This interpretation hath ſome probabilitie, as I haue ſaid; becauſe Iſaiah had good cauſe to lament the diminiſhing of his people, which he ſaw was at hand. And wee know, that when the grace of God beganne to be publiſhed in all places, then the Iewes decreaſed; yea the ſucceſſors of Abraham were as good as extinguiſhed.

But let vs ſee whether the Prophet hath not a further drift then to the reiection of his owne nation, ſo as he rather bewailes the inward euils wherewith hee foreſaw Churche ſhould be afflicted. For we may well affirme that the Hebrew word which others haue tranſlated Secret, ſignifies alſo whatſoeuer is within the bodie. And thus it is an exclamation, to wit, my inward parts, or my bowels paine me: neither is it any abſurditie to ſupplie a verbe, in a paſſionate and vehement speech. When the Lord plants his Church it seems to flourish and to be out of all perill: but when her owne bowels, that is to say, her children trouble her, then is she the most grieved: hypocrites aduance themselves, which toucheth her neerer then all the malice of those that are without. To this appertaines these complaints, Alas, Alas! for that doubtlesse was the Prophets meaning, to the end the faithfull might not thinke their felicitie consisted in the things of this life, but might rather know that they were to susteine continuall combates: yea euen then when they imagined nothing could hinder them from inioying most sweet peace and tranquillitie. His meaning is then to expresse an extreme passion of sorrow wherwith the Church should be inwardlie touched, that is to say, euen in her bowels: and so much the more cause had she to lament, because she could not auoid it. For as one saith, The Church can not flee from her home enemies, neither can the riot her selfe of them. This is the cause why the Prophet wants words to expresse his miserie.

When he speaks in the next place of the disloyall, it is a sufficient confirmation of this exposition. We haue too much experience, and shall feele more and more euery day how great and wofull this calamitie is. Whence came Poperie and all the filthie puddle, but from this inward plague? It is an impostume bred in the bowels of the Church, which at length hath broken forth and annoyed vs with the corruption and stinch of it. Whence is it also in these beginnings of the Church, which is but now in the swaddling clouts as it were, we see the true doctrine corrupted, the discipline adulterated, not only by the common people, but by them also which from their good example ought to be guides vnto others? Is it not because the Church hath alwaies been subiect to this euill?

Verf. 17. Feare, and the pit, and the snare are vpon thee, o Inhabitant of the earth.

18. And he that fleeth from the noyse of the feare shall fall into the pit, and he that commeth vp out of the pit shall be taken in the snare: for the windowes from an high are open, and the foundations of the earth do shake.

The Prophet heere expostulates with the people because of their sinnes. Before he said, that not one, but many nations farre remote, should haue cause to sing; now he comes to doctrine: for I thinke this should be secured from the former, because Isaiab threatens the wicked againe, to the end they might know that in the greatest felicitie of the Church they should continue to be accused. For such are wont falsely to challenge vnto themselves the promises of God, when as they appertaine nothing at all vnto them: this is the cause why the Prophets are wont to mingle threatnings with consolations. It may be for ought we know that the Prophet made this sermon apart, vpon some other occasion. For neither did the Prophets themselves, nor other learned men for them distinguish the Chapters: we haue diuers times seene fundrie sentences ioined together which should be separate; & many separated which should be ioined. What was the cause thereof but ignorance? Be it as you will; the Prophet directeth his speech againe to the wicked, and threatens them with an horrible iudgement.

Now this description of feare, pit, and snare, is set before them to worke vpon their affections: for had he in one word told them that destruction was at hand, they would haue bin little moued with it. But the doubt is whether he speaks to the Iewes only, or no: for mine owne part, I meane not to contend much about it; and yet it is most likely vnto me, that it appertaines also to other nations, yea euen to the whole earth, whereof he had propheesied before. By the earth, we vnderstand those regions which were knowne to the Iewes, as we touched in another place. Verse 1. The sense then is, Thou shalt be pressed with so many miseries, that thou shalt not know this place.

which way to turne thee: as also it is written in Amos, He which flies for feare of the Lion, shall meete a Beare, Amos 5. 19. And if he go into his house, when he leanes against the wall, a serpent shall bite him. And in the 15. Chapter of this booke Isaiab told vs, that Lions should be sent against those Moabites that escaped the warre. For God hath a storehouse of infinite plagues wherewith to punish the wicked. It is as much therefore as if the Prophet had said, Be it knowne vnto you, that you can no way winde your selues out of Gods hands: for he hath mo wayes then one to auenge himselfe vpon you for your iniquities; and hath skill enough to snare them that thinke by subtletie to steale away in the darke from him. He that escapes the sword shall be vexed with famine, and if he die not of that, he shall be pressed with some other, euen as if nets were euery where spread to catch you.

God hath a storehouse of infinite plagues wherewith to punish the wicked.

The reason which is added in the latter end of the 18. verse confirms this exposition, to wit, that they can no way preuent Gods vengeance. Why so? for all things are at his beck from the highest heauens, to the lowest depths of the earth. Some are of opinion that the Prophet alludes to the deluge; but as I thinke the very meaning is, that Gods wrath shall be reuealed both from aboue, and below; as if he should say, The Lord will arme heauen and earth on his side to execute his wrath vpon the sonnes of men, that which way soeuer they turne their eyes, they may see nothing but ruine and destruction.

Verf. 19. The earth is vtterlie broken downe: the earth is cleane dissolved: the earth is moued exceedinglie.

heavie vpon it; ſo that it ſhall fall, and riſe no more.

1 HE amplifies theſe puniſhments by diuers 2 phraſes of ſpeech. Now in the 20 verſe he will ſhew the cauſe of this calamitie; to wit, that men haue pulled it vpon their owne 3 heads by their finnes: in all the reſt of the words he ſhewes, that the miſchiefe is deſpe-rate and incurable. We haue ſaid before, that the Prophet vters one and the ſame thing in diuers manners of ſpeech, to the end hee might awaken and wound the hearts of the people, which naturally were too ſecure. For there is a careleſneſſe in our fleſh, which begets a contempt of God; and of this, euerie one of vs hath too wofull experience, both in himſelfe and in others. That the Prophet then might rowſe vp thoſe that were drowie and rocked aſleepe in their finnes, he garni-ſheth his words, (not as one affecting eloquence, to procure credit vnto himſelfe) but to gaine attention of his hearers, & to cauſe
 the ſame to ſink the deeper into their hearts.
 Thence proceeds all theſe alluſions where-1 with theſe verſes are replenished: thence 2 flowes this decking of his ſpeech with figures:
 3 thence is it that theſe threatnings and ter-rours are ſet forth in ſuch varietie of words, namely, euen to awaken the dull and dead hearts of his auditors.

A careleſneſſe rooted in our fleſh,
 which begets
 a contempt
 of God.

Now this doctrine ought to be reſtrained to the wicked; not that the faithfull were exempt from theſe calamities, for they often ſuffer with others: but hauing their recourſe vnto God, and reſting themſelues wholly vp-on him, they are not ſo appalled, but they get the victorie ouer all aſſaults whatſoever. But the wicked, which deſpiſe the iudgements of God, and take a raging libertie of ſinning to themſelues, ſhall alwaies be vexed and terrified without any eaſe or reſt.

Where he ſaith, the earth ſhall be ſhaken; it is not meant, as though it ſhould be carried out of one place into ſome other: but this, as we haue ſaid, is to be referred vnto men: and it is as if he had ſaid; There ſhall be neither kingdome nor gouernement. In a word, his meaning is, to ſet forth thoſe changes whereof he ſpake in the tenth Chapter.

Now it is not without cauſe that he ſaith, the earth is laden with iniquitie; for thereby we perceiue, that God is neuer diſpleaſed with men, but wee our ſelues are the authors and cauſes of all the euill we indure. God is natu-
 1 rally inclined to pitie and compaſſion, and 2 loues vs with a fatherly affection: our finnes are the cauſe why hee deales roughly with vs, and we haue no reaſon at all to accuſe him that ſmites vs. The Prophet againe tels them that there is no recouerie: and ſome are of opinion, that this was ſpoken to the Iewes, whoſe commonwealth was vtterly aboliſhed;
 ſo as being ſcattered here and there, they were ſcately reputed or held for men of like condition with others. But I extend it further; to wit, that the calamities ſhall be ſo great in the world, that it ſhould neuer bee reſtored to his firſt beautie: for men labour tooth and naile to reſiſt aduerſities, and are

Verſ. 21. *And in that day ſhall the Lord viſit the hoſte aboue, that is on

THis place hath troubled many mens heads; ſo as euerie one hath deſcanted vpon it diuerſly. Some thinke it to be meant of the Sunne and ſtarres: others, of the diuels, which ſhould be puniſhed with the wicked:
 others referre it to the Iewes, whom God had beautified with a ſpecial priuiledge:
 but I can receiue none of theſe interpretations.
 The true and naturall ſenſe as I take it is, that there are no powers ſo high, that ſhall be able to free themſelues from theſe ſcour-ges of God; for let them ſoare aboue the cloudes, yet euen there ſhall the hand of God reach them, as it is ſaid in the Pſalme; *Whither ſhall I goe from thy preſence? whether ſhall I flee from thy Spirit? if I goe vp into heauen thou art there: if I take the wings of Pſal. 139.

For Iſaiah calles Kings and Princes, the hoſt ſion aboue, by way of ſimilitude; and himſelfe ſo expounds it cleerely, when he addes, Vpon the Kings of the earth; for I am not of the mind that the words ſhould bee ſcuered, as if hee ſpake of diuers things; but it is rather the repetition of the ſame thing againe, ſo as the latter expounds the former: vnleſſe any had rather expound it thus; He will come in viſi-tation vpon the kingdomes of the earth; yea, euen vpon them which ſeeme the higheſt exalted about the common condition of men.
 Some are ſo aduanced about others, that they ſeeme petty Gods rather than men.
 Now the word viſit, muſt bee referred to the puniſhment, as it appears ſufficiently by the text.

Verſ. 22. *And they ſhall be gathered together as the priſoners in the pit:
 and they ſhall bee ſhut vp in the priſon;
 and after many daies ſhall they bee viſited.*

Hee continues on his purpoſe in the beginning of the verſe, vſing a phraſe of ſpeech by way of ſimilitude; for all were not priſoners: but the Lord brought them all into ſeruitude, as if one ſhould keepe his enemies in ſafe cuſtodie which he had ſubdued. The Prophet brings in the Lord then like a Con-quetour, which holds his enemies in priſon.

For

For men are wont to lay them fast, whom they haue taken. We know that men flee the presence of God, & despise him all y while he spares, or giues the any truce: for this cause Isaiah saith, that they shall be sius up in prison by heapes, that so their reioycing in their multitudes might cease.

Where he saith, they shall be visited after many dayes, we are not to take it simple as a promise, but as a threatening also included vnder it; and that in this sense, O ye Jewes you haue a long time dallied with your God by your rebellion, and haue prolonged your trading in sinne too long; so, God will now prolong his chastisements till he haue in the end brought you (though very late) to a fight of your misdeeds. And this course we see the Iudges of the earth often take with malefactors with whom they are displeas'd: they admit the nor to their presence the first day, but humble them first by throwing them into stinking dungeons, and into miserie, that they may thereby breake the pride of their hearts.

But God is said to visit the world two waies, first, in punishing the wicked, secondly, when after some chastisements he shewes his elect some tokens of his fatherlie kindnes. The word visit in this place is taken, To behold: and thus the Prophet mitigates the rigor of his menace or threatening. For the hearts of the faithfull in these causes haue need of courage, lest they should quale, and be discouraged: in regard of them therefore it is that the Prophets are wont to mingle consolations after their denunciations of iudgements. Seeing these things serued then to cheere vp the faithfull, no doubt but they were specially directed to the Jewes, among whom faith had her speciall residence, in regard that it appeared in none but them. But yet we are once againe to obserue these words, after many dayes, for this is added to exercise the faith of Gods children: we often run headlong in our desires, and would haue God accomplish his promises by and by: we grudge that he delays so long, and wax so impatient that we can no longer indure. But we must learne in humilitie to wait and looke long for the saluation and merie of our God, and not be discontented how long soeuer he defertes, for certainly he will come, and he will not tarric. But herewithall wee must note, that God speaks not heere of all, for as we haue seene in the 13. verse, he was determined to saue but a few: and this ought so much the more to whet our appetites; to the end after we haue been long exercised vnder fundrie calamities, we may meete the Lord that smites vs by vnseiu'd repentance.

Verf. 23. Then the Moone shall be as-hished, and the Sunne ashamed, When the Lord of hosts shall reigne in mount Zion, and in Ierusalem: and glorie shall be before his ancient men.*

* Or, euen in the presence of his &c.

Many thinke that the Prophet vseth this vehemencie against the Jewes, as if he said, The Sunne, Moone, and Starres are ashamed of your incredulitie, so that you are a detestation not to men only, but euen to the insensible creatures: but this seemes vtterlie wide fro the Prophets purpose. I make no doubt but he continues on that consolation which he touched in the former verse; as if he should say, When the Lord shall visit his people, and purge his Church, he will establish such a glorious kingdome, that it shall darken the light of the Sunne and Starres. And this manner of speech is very vsuall among the Prophets, we also haue seene it before in this prophesie. Now Isaiah speaks not here alone of the head, but also of the whole bodie of the Church: when the Lord then shall settle his kingdome vpon mount Zion, his glorie in the restoration of the people shall be so great, that that which seemes bright and glorious in mens eyes, being compar'd with this, shall be but darkenes. And the better to expresse it, he names the greatest lights in the firmament.

Some impropertie draw the verb To reigne, to Gods vengeance: for albeit God reignes when he iudgeth the world, yet this manner of speech linked thus together, God shall reigne in Mount Zion, alwayes notes merie and saluation. For he speaks of the restoration of the Church: whence we gather, that these things are not accomplished but in Christ.

In mentioning of the Ancients he vseth a figure called Synecdoche, a figure often vsed in scripture, taking the chiefe part of the Church for the whole bodie, and yet not without a speciall cause. The ancient men, are heere taken then not only for the Priests, and for those gouernors which haue the oversight of maners and discipline, to wit, such as ought with wisdom and discretion to gouerne others. And vnder these names he comprehends all the people, not only because they represent the whole bodie, the common people being hid as it were vnder the shadow of their wings: but also that the faithfull might haue good hope of a future restoring, otherwise it were to little purpose that a scattered multitude should be left like a crased bodie, or a confused lump.

It is not without cause that the particle, euen before his auncient men, is added, to the end the Jewes might know that Gods power should be glorious: not that it can be comprehended with the eyes of flesh, but by faith: for he so reignes, that we effectually feele his strength in our weakenes. And if we apprehend not this, we shall neuer receiue any comfort.

In stead of glorie, some reade gloriously, others glorious: I had rather take it in the substantiue, although it be not much materiall as touching the sense. For he shewes how great Gods glorie and magnificence should be when Christs kingdome shall be set vp: all glorie then must be turned into darknes, that his glorie alone may shine and surmount all things. Whence it follows, that God then inioyes that which belongs vnto him in y middelt of vs, and that honor which none ought to depriue him of, when all creatures are brought within compaie, and that he alone shines, and is the light of our eyes.

THE XXV. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. O Lord, thou art my God: I will exalt thee, I will praife thy name: for thou haſt done wonderfull things, according to the counſels of olds, With a ſtable truth.

Herunto Viſiah hath prophesied of Gods iudgements, which hung not ouer the head of one people alone, but almost of the whole world. Now it was impossible that the consideration of ſo many calamities which hee foresaw would fall vpon them, should not worke great sorrow and trouble of mind in him. For those that are of an vpright heart, desire that all the world might bee saued. And as they thirst after Gods glory, so they cannot but loue all the works of his hands: by how much the more then a man is possessed with the true feare of God, the more neerely is hee touched to the quicke with the feeling of his iudgements. In the meane while, the wicked are beset when he manifests the same, and will not be moued for any terrors whatsoever: the godly on the contrary quake at the least signe of his displeasure. If wee haue experience of this, what thinke we the Prophet felt, who saw all these calamities which hee foretold, before his eyes as in a glasse? For the Ministers of the word must needs be much more effectually affected with the sight of such things, then the common sort, that the same may be as it were a seale vnto them of the truth of their doctrine.

The Lord then hauing set these horrible desolations before the Prophet as in a table, it was necessarie, that being moued with sorrow and griefe, he should turne his eyes vnto the Lord; for otherwise hee might haue been intangled with confused passions, and great disquietnesse of minde. And therefore being assured that the Lord would prouide for his Church in the midst of these tempests, and that hee would gather in those vnder the wings of his power, which before were scattered farre off, hee takes courage vnto him. Wee see then that Iſaiah continues constant in his vocation, without being daunted or any way discouraged: but rather relying alwaies vpon the assurance of obtaining mercy; and therefore hee continues to celebrate the praises of the Lord his God.

By this we may see, that this thanksgiving depends vpon the former prophesies; and that Iſaiah respects not that which hee hath foretold alone, but also what end the Lord aimed at, in this execution: that is to say, why he afflicted so many nations with such diuercities of punishments; namely, that he might bring vnder those which were before vnto, and ouerflowed in a brutish sensualitye, who as they had no feare of God before their eyes; so had they no sense of religion or godlinesse at all.

Thou art my God. Being perplexed and confounded in himselfe, he suddenly turnes his thoughts vnto God, as we haue said. Whence we may gather a very profitable doctrine; to wit, that when our mindes are tossed to and fro with diuers cogitations, in regard of the many miseries and calamities which daily happen; that we by and by flee vnto God, resting our selues vpon his onely prouidence: for we shall be at our wits end euen for the wagging of a straw, if wee haue not this doctrine for our refuge, by sustaining our hearts therewith. But the better to see the Prophets meaning, wee may well adde a particule aduerſatiue here, in this sense; Although I be now oppressed with many temptations on euery side, yet will I still acknowledge thee to be my God. And thus he voweth to giue vnto God that praife, which vnto him appertaineth; which none of vs can doe, vnlesse an assured perswasion of Gods grace doe raigne and beare sway in our hearts: from whence springs that ioy, which affords vs exceeding ample matter of praises, when being certaine of our saluation, we are assured that the Lord is our God: For all those that are not caried with an affection to magnifie Gods goodnes in the midst of their sorrowes, know not what faith is; neither yet did they euer taste the sweetnesse of his mercy: for if wee haue a sure confidence in God, we must of necessitie extoll his name with ioy and gladnesse of heart.

A wonderfull thing. The singular number is put for the plurall. Now the Prophet rests not in the contemplation of present things, but rather lookes to the end of them: for you shall haue euen profane men that will be affected at the wonderfull euents of things which fall out in the gouernement of the world, and will stand amazed therat; as no doubt the Tyrrians, Sidonians, Babylonians, and Moabites did. But none could benefit themselves by this sight, but such as therewithall had a taste and feeling of Gods wisdom and goodnesse: for without that, men doe rather scorne and despise such workes, then apprehend the excellencie of them: because they looke not to the end that God aimeth at; to wit, that by drawing light out of darknesse, he is wont after a wonderfull manner, to raise vp and reuue his Church in the midst of death, orders and disposeth rightly and to good vse, those things which the wit of man conceiues to be exceedingly confused.

But the better to set forth the commendation of Gods prouidence, he addes, The counsels ordained of olds; as if he should say, Nothing falls

What ought to be our refuge in time of deep distresses.

The assurance of Gods fauour giues vs ample matter of ioy and reioicing, euen in the greatest troubles.

The faithfull may bee daunted for a time, but faith gets the victorie.

Who they are that profit by the view of Gods workes.

faller out suddenly, or at randome, in respect of God. And indeede, albeit to vs it often seemes he doth things vtterlie at vnwares, yet is it most certaine that he hath foreseene and appointed all of the so to come to passe before the creation of the world. By these words then the Prophet meant to say, that all the wonders, which happen beyond the expectation of men, flow from the order of this moderation which God keeps in the government and disposition of all things from the beginning, vnto the end.

Now because we are not able to attaine to his secret counsels, and that our wits can not mount so high, we must be brought to the manifestation of that which for the present is hidden from vs, and is aboue our reach, till such time as the Lord discouer the same vnto vs by his word: by which he applies himselfe to our weakenes, because his secret counsell is incomprehensible. Isaiah therefore descends by and by from these hidden ordinances of God to the doctrine of the word and the promises therein contained, which doubtlesse he comprehends vnder the word Truth. For this repetition should be to little purpose vnlesse he had had some relation in this word: for after God hath by it reuealed his counsell vnto vs, then he properlie appears to be true if we beleue and credit his sayings. Thus then the Prophet commends the stableness and certentie of the word when he calles it a stable truth, as if he should say, All things which God pronounceth, and proceed from him, is stable and immoueable.

Verf. 2. For thou hast made of a Citie an heape, of a strong Citie a ruine: euen the palace of strangers of a Citie, it shall neuer be built.

SOME referre this to Ierusalem: but I rather thinke it to be a change of the number only, which is a thing very vsuall among the Prophets: for Isaiah spaketh not of one Citie alone, but of many, which he foretels should be laid vpon heapes. Whereas others take it, that Ierusalem serued for a palace to the Romans, they come nothing nigh the Prophets meaning; which will plainly appeere if we call to mind what hath been said before, to wit, that the Prophet busies not himselfe in thinking of the scourges wherwith God hath afflicted diuers nations, but rather aims at the end and issue of them. For by them the Lord purposed to subdue and tame the pride and rebellion of men, whom he could neuer haue subdued vnto himselfe, vnlesse they had been smitten with diuers calamities. Moreover, Isaiah saith not only that strangers shall inhabit the surprized Cities, out of which they were driuen that dwell in them: for so that which he by and by addes would not agree, to wit, that the palace shall be no more a Citie: but his meaning is, that vagabonds who should haue no place of abode at all, shall find sufficient roome there, because the inhabitants shall betake them to their heeles. Now because Armon signifies goodly houses, he saith by way of derision, that the eues shall dwell there as in Palaces, in regard of the great space which should lie waste like vnto a desert.

Verf. 3. Therefore shall the mightie people giue glorie vnto thee: the Citie of the strong nations shall feare thee.

SEE heere the end, whercof I haue spoken in the first verse: for if the Lord should destroy the world, no fruit would come of it, such a desolation could ingender nothing but horror; neither would it euer bring vs neerer vnto God to praise him: nay contrariwise we must needs remaine as blocks whē we only feele his wrath: for praises proceed from the feeling of his fauor and goodnes. It is all one then as if he had said, Lord, thou wilt not only smite and afflict, but wilt also effect, that thy wounds which thou makest shall not be without fruit. For by them thou wilt beat downe the pride of men, to the end that those which in times past were strangers frō thee, may now stoope vnder thine obedience. Hence we learne how necessarie chastisements be, for by them we are taught to glorifie God; whereas prosperitie puffs vs vp in such wise that we dishonor him, and thinke we may doe what we list: we also runne out and range ouer all the fields whē God deales louinglie with vs.

The Prophet addes the word feare, to shew, that this praise consists neither in words nor outward gestures, but in the sound and sincere affection of the heart. Whence wee gather, that he heere speakes of the whole worship of God. Now because many thinke themselves well discharged when they haue made confession with their lips only, Isaiah the better to expound his owne meaning addes, The nations shall feare thee. Now in calling them strong and mightie, by such epithites he meanes the pride and losines of those who are puffed vp with their prosperitie: for they exalt themselves against God, so as they can not possible be humbled and brought downe, vnlesse they be quite stripped of all things. You see now whether our thoughts are to retire in thy calamities which we see to fall out dayly: mens pride must needs be repressed and abated, that they may be prepared to imbrace holy doctrine, and to walke in sound obedience. Whilest they are besotted with their riches and vaine hopes, they feare not to contemne the iudgements of God, and hold him out at the stauces end, as they say.

Verf. 4. For thou hast been a strength to the poore, euen a strength to the needie in his trouble, a refuge against the tempest, a shadow against the heate: for the blast of the mightie is like a storme against the wall.

BEhold here the fruit of conuersion. How? The Lord raise vs from death, deliue vs from the graue, by stretching out his hand from heauen to pluck vs out of the iawes of hell, Isaiah descends from Gods secret will to his reuealed will.

The necessitie of afflictions.

We must reioyce in trembling. Pal. 2. 11. & 5. 7.

Our firſt entrance
vnto God.

hell. This is the firſt entrance he giues vs, for hee findes nothing but our miſerie for his mercy to worke vpon. Wee muſt therefore feele our ſelues poore and helpeleſſe, before we can ſee what needs we haue of his power: yea, it is neceſſary that we be ſtripped of all confidence and ſelte truſt, before he will re-ueale his ſtrength in vs. For this cauſe he fits and frames vs by rods and chaſtiſements, as by inſtructions, to come to the feeling of his fauour and aſſiſtance. It is not without good cauſe then that Iſaiah deekes this deſcription with ſo many ſimilitudes: for hee thereby meeets with many and great temptations, vnder which weak man would neuer be able to ſtand, were he not fortified and ſuſtained with ſuch propp.

And therefore hee ſaith, that God will bee ſtrength to the poore, a refuge againſt the tempeſt, and a ſhadow againſt the heate: for what dangers ſoener befall vs, the Lord wil defend his owne againſt them, and will arme vs with all kinds of armour to reſiſt them. The Spirit in this place, as in many others, ſignifies winde, and it is taken for a violent ſtorme wherewith the wicked are carried to ruſh againſt the children of God: for they not onely threaten and terrifie, but alſo ſpit out fire it ſelfe, as to conſume them all. Hercunto appertaines that which is added of the tempeſt, or, ouerflowing againſt the wall: by which figure his meaning is, that the wicked runne with ſuch force, when they haue libertie to doe euill, that they ouerthrow whatſoever ſtands in their way: for it is a greater matter to breake downe and ouerthrow walles, then if water ſhould onely ſpread it ſelfe ouer the earth.

Verſ. 5. Thou ſhalt bring downe the noiſe of the ſtrangers, as the beate in a dry place: he will bring downe the ſong of the mightie, as the beate in the ſhadow in a cloud.

IF the Lord were not on our ſide, when violent men ſet themſelues againſt vs, wee ſhould be vterly ſwallowed vp: for wee ſee how great the rage of the wicked is. Alas, if they be able to ouerturne ſtone walles, how can a poore man bee able to ſtand againſt them? This is added then to ſet forth the goodneſſe of almighty God, that we might know in what an ill caſe wee ſhould be in, if God did not ſuccour vs. The expoſitours take the ſimilitude two waies: ſome thinke that as the vehement heat burnes vp the fields, which of themſelues are dry and barren; ſo the wrath of God ſhall conſume and burne vp the wicked: others tranſlate, As the beate; and then the ſenſe is; Howſoever the wicked relie vpon their power, and therefore are thus boiſterous, the Lord notwithstanding will bring them downe in a moment, as if they were ſurpriſed with heat in a dry place.

But I take the ſenſe to be otherwiſe: for hauing ſhewed how great the rage of the wicked is againſt the faithfull, he addes Lord thou wilt humble them. But how: He alludes vnto the deluge; which ſimilitude he vſed before, Chap. 24. 18. Thou wilt bring downe their heat, ſaith hee, which otherwiſe muſt needes conſume vs: euen as the raine falling from heauen, cooles the heate which would burne vp the fields for want of moiſture. And thus the text hangs well together; whereas the other expoſition is conſtrained, and offers violence to the very letter, as they ſay.

The latter part of the verſe is expounded diuers waies: ſome tranſlate the word Zemir, Seede: others, a Roote: as if the Prophee had ſaid, The Lord will not onely cut off the wicked, but will plucke them vp by the verie rootes. This were probable, if the ſimilitude of heat would beare it: and therefore thoſe who turne it ſong, cry, or, waſte; in my iudgement, doe come neereſt the Prophets meaning, albeit they touch it not fully. Well, he confirms the former ſenſe; to wit, that the violence or cry of the wicked, who proudly exalt themſelues, ſhall ſuddenly fall, euen as the heat of the Sunne when anie raine followes: which is ſignified by the ſhadow of the cloud.

Verſ. 6. And in this mountaine ſhall the Lord of hoſtes make vnto all the people a feaſt of fat things, euen a feaſt of fined wines and of fat things full of marrow, of wines fined and purified.

THEY alſo diuerſly interpret this place: for ſome thinke the Prophet threatens the Iewes, and that in ſuch ſort, as if he called diuers nations to the feaſt: which phraſe of ſpeech is often found in other places; becauſe it is ſaid, that the Lord feedes the wicked fat againſt the day of ſlaughter. They thinke then that the Gentiles are called to the banquet, the Iewes being made their pray: as if the Lord ſhould ſay; I haue prepared a goodly banquet for the Gentiles; to wit, the Romans ſhall ſacke and ſpoile the Iewes. But as I thinke, this ſenſe cannot ſtand, neither ſhall there neede any long refutation, when I ſhall haue acquainted you with the true meaning. Others expound it, as if Iſaiah ſhould ſpeake of Gods wrath thus; The Lord will make a feaſt to all people, he will make them drinke the cup of his wrath till they be drunken therewith. But the Prophet meant nothing leſſe: for he goes on ſtill to ſet forth the grace of God, which ſhould be maniſteſted at the comming of Chriſt. Vſing the verie ſame ſimilitude with that in the 22. Pſalme, verſ. 26, where Dauid deſcribes the Kingdome of Chriſt, ſaying; that the poore as well as the rich, ſhall partake of this banquet, and ſhall eate their fill: by which, hee ſignifies that no nation ſhall be exempt from hauing part in this benefit. At the firſt, it ſeemed that the Lord onely feaſted the Iewes, becauſe they alone were his adopted people, and entertained at this banquet as thoſe of his owne houſhold: but now

The Iewes
were firſt feſted alone.

But now the Gentiles are partakers thereof with them.

he accepts of the Gentiles also, and sheds forth his graces vpon all nations. There is here then a close opposition when he saith to all people, for formerlie he was knowne but to one nation.

The feast of fat things is to be vnderstood of fat beasts. Some translate the word She-mannim, lees, or dregs, but very improperlie: for by this word he means old wines, which we commonlie call old store, which are better then ordinarie, but speciallie in y^e East, where they beare their age best. He calles the liquors wherein no lees appeere, neate and finced wines. To be short, it appears sufficientlie that neither Iewes nor Gentiles are threatned in this place, but that both of them rather are inuited to a goodly banquet. This may the better be vnderstood by the words of Christ himselfe, where he compares the kingdome of heauen to a Marriage feast which the King prepared for his sonne, vnto which all were indifferentlie called, because they which were bidden before would not come. For mine owne part, I make no question but Isaiah speaks here of the preaching of the Gospell. Therefore in as much as the doctrine thereof came from the mountaine of Zion, he saith, that all nations shall come to feast there: for when God offered the heavenly food wherewith mens soules are fed, vnto all the world; it was as if he had erected a table for all commers.

The Lord now dayly inuirteth vs to fill and intrich our soules with all good things: and to that end he raiseth vp faithfull teachers, by whose ministrie he prepares his dainties for vs, and withall giues force and power to his word, that we might be replenished and satisfied. As touching the word Mountaine, albeit Gods messengers come not from Mount Zion to giue vs food, yet by this word we are to vnderstand the Church, out of which none can partake of these benefits; for such dainties are not to be found in the streets nor hie waies; this table is not spread euery where, neither doth euery place afford vs this banquet. The Church is the place then where we must come to keepe this feast. Now the Prophet notes this mountaine especiallie, in regard God was there worshipped, & no where else; yea both these reuelations, as also the Gospell came from thence. Whereas he saith this banquet shall be sumptuous and royallie furnished, it appertaines to the praise of the doctrine of the Gospell; for it is a spirituall food to nourish and refresh our soules, yea, so wholesome and excellent, that we neede seeke no further.

Verf. 7. And he will destroy in this mountaine the couering that couereth all people, and the vaile that is spread ouer all nations.

The interpreters also varie vpon this place, for some by the word couering vnderstand the shame wherewith the faithfull are so couered in this world, that the glorie of God seemes not to shine in them; as if he should say, Albeit the faithfull be ouerwhelmed with many disgraces, yet the Lord will deliuer them from them all, and make their estate glorious. I let passe other expositions: but the true meaning as I thinke is, that the Lord here promiseth to take away that vaile which held them in ignorance and blindnes. These obscurities then were scattered and driuen away by the light of the Gospell. Now he saith that this shall be done in the mountaine of Zion, whence the light of the word in very deepe shined thorowout the world, as wee haue seene heretofore.

This text then must be referred to the kingdome of Christ: for the light shined not vpon all men till Christ the sunne of righteousness arose, who tooke away all vailles, couerings and wrappings. Here we haue then another commendation or praise of the Gospell, to wit, that all darknes shall be dispersed by the light thereof, yea and all vailles of error shall be taken from our eyes. Whence it follows that we are wrapped and blinded with darknes of ignorance till we be enlightened with the doctrine of the Gospell, which only is offorce to giue both light and life, and perfectlie to frame vs new. This place also confirmes the calling of vs Gentiles: for the Iewes are not only bidden to this banquet, but all nations, who before were ouerwhelmed as it were in all maner of errors and superstitions.

Verf. 8. He will destroy death for ever: and the Lord will wipe away the teares from all faces, and the rebuke of his people will he take away out of the earth: for the Lord hath spoken it.

The Prophet goes on still with the matter in hand, for in summe, he promiseth that there shall be perfect felicitie vnder the kingdome of Christ. And the better to expresse it, he vseth many figures very fitting and agreeable for his present purpose. True felicitie stands not in earthlie nor transitorie things, but in that which can not be taken from vs by death: for in the chiefest delights the pleasure thereof is much diminished, because they can not last alwayes. He ioines two things together then which make happines full and compleate: first, that a man may live euer (for it is a miserable thing for them to die which otherwise were once happie for a time) secondly, that this life be ioined with ioy; for without that death seemes better then a life full of trouble & calamities. Further heads; that all rebuke being taken away, this life shall be glorious: for otherwise the wofull oppression of the people which they endured might haue seemed to contradict this prophesie. But some may aske to what time these promises should be referred: for whilst we are in this world we must fight against many assaults, and that without any intermission: so as we are not destinate to die once only, but euery day. To which purpose S. Paul complaines, that he and the chiefest pillars of the Church in his time were gazing-stocks vnto

The light of the Gospell scatters the darknes of ignorance.

all the world ſuſtaining all ſorts of reproches, being eſteemed no better then the oſcuring and reſuſe of the ſame. In what time, or when are theſe things fulfilled then? No doubt they are to bee referred to the whole Kingdome of Chriſt: and I doe expreſly ſay to his whole Kingdome becauſe we muſt not onely conſider the beginnings of it, but alſo the end and full accompliſhment thereof. So that we are to ſtretch theſe promiſes vnto the ſecond coming of Chriſt; which for this cauſe is called the day of redemption, and of reſtoration; in regard that thoſe things which as now ſeeme conſuſed, ſhall then bee reſtored to full perfection, and ſhall put on a new forme.

Anſ.

Thſe and the like promiſes muſt be applied not onely to the beginnings, but to the whole progrefſe of Chriſts Kingdome. Luk. 21. 28. Rom. 8. 23. Acts 3. 21. Eph. 4. 10. Pſ. 126. 5.

As we haue taſted the beginnings of this hope, ſo muſt our hope hold out till we ſee the accompliſhment thereof to the laſt day.

The word of the Lord a ſolid foundation for our faith to reſt vpon.

I gnat that it appertained alſo to the deliuerance from Babylon; but in as much as that was but the beginning and entrance into this, it is certaine that this promiſe muſt be prolonged till the laſt day. Let vs bend all our ſenſes and hopes vnto that then, and we may be well aſſured that the Lord in the end will perfect all things in vs, after we haue finiſhed our courſe. Be it that we now ſowe in teares, we ſhall then doubtleſſe reape with ioy and gladneſſe. Let vs not feare the ſcornes nor threats of the mightie ones; for God vſeth this as a meanes by which in the end he will bring vs vnto eternall glory. And ſeeing we haue here already taſted the beginnings of this felicitie and happineſſe, as ſoone as God adoppeth vs, and that we begin to beare the image of Chriſt, let vs with conſtancy and patience wait the accompliſhment thereof till the laſt day.

But in regard the matter might ſeeme incredible after ſo many horrible calamities, Iſaiab tells them that this proceeded not from man, but from God. For after the Temple was rased to the ground, Ierusalem deſtroyed, the ſervice of God aboliſhed, and the ſmall remnant of the people that remained were oppreſſed vnder tyrannie; who would euer haue beleued that theſe things could haue been reſtored to their firſt perfection? Hee prevents this incredulitie therefore, vnto which men are ouermuch inclined, and confirms, yea and ſeales vp theſe promiſes with this concluſion; Know ye for certaine, that the Lord is the author of this my meſſage: in him therefore reſt all your thoughts, & not vpon me: reſt your faith on him, who neuer was, nor neuer will bee ſouled falſe of his word: Tit. 1. 2.

Verſ. 9. And in that day ſhall men ſay; Loe, this is our God: wee haue waited for him, and hee will ſaue vs: This is the Lord, wee haue waited for him: wee will reioyce and bee glad in his ſaluation.

And they ſhall ſay.] The verbe is indefinite, and ſhould be tranſlated, He ſhall ſay: but becauſe he ſpeakes of that which All, and not one or two, ſhould ſay; I had rather turne it, Men ſhall ſay. This is a very good concluſion, ſeeing thereby they ſhew that theſe benefits of God are not ſlanted nor ſeanted to a few; but that men both receiue and ſeele them by eſſe. His meaning is then, that God prepares not this banquet (mentioned verſ. 6.) in vaine; in regard men are ſatisfied therewith, and reioyce with an eternall ioy. For this gladſome voyce which he foretells ſhould be publike, is a recall ſigne and teſtimonie (as you would ſay) of Gods grace. This place ought to be diligently obſerued of vs; for the Prophet therein ſhewes, that there ſhall bee ſuch a manifeſtation, that it ſhall retaine mens mindes in the word of God, ſo as they ſhall wholly reſt in it, without any doubting at all.

But if theſe things appertaine to Chriſts Kingdome, as they doe indeed, wee receiue great fruit thereby. What? Chriſtians haue now that certaine truth, in which they may boldly reſt; vnleſſe they forget themſelues, and reieſt the grace of God. For it is manifeſted vnto all, & hath taken from them all occaſion of doubting; ſo as they may ſafely boaſt, that they truly know what his will is: yea, we may ſay, and that truly, as Ieſus Chriſt ſaid to the woman of Samaria, We worſhip that which we know: Iohn 4. 22. Therefore, in as much as we are aſſured by the Goſpell, of that grace which is offered vs in Ieſus Chriſt, we wander not any more in vncertaine conſtitutions, as many doe; but we embrace Gods and his pure ſeruiſes; ſo as we boldly bid adieu to all humane intentions.

The oppoſition alſo is to bee noted betwene the little and obſcure knowledge which the Fathers had vnder the Law, and that fulneſſe of knowledge which ſhineth now in the Goſpell: for albeir God vouchſafed the people of old, the light of his heavenly truth; yet it did appeare more familiarly by Chriſt, as it is ſaid in the firſt of S. Iohn, verſ. 14. 18. The Prophet therefore now extols and ſets forth that aſſured confidence which the onely Sonne of God reuealing his Father, hath brought vnto vs at his coming. Beſides, as in this behalfe we haue a much greater prerogatiue then the ancient people had, in regard that the reconciliation made by Chriſt, ſets the Lord more at one with vs: ſo God cannot bee otherwiſe knowne but in Chriſt, who is his liuely image, and the ingrauen forme of his ſubſtance: Heb. 1. 3. Hee that knows not the Sonne, the ſame knows not the Father. Howſoever the Turkes, Iewes, and other infidels boaſt, that they worſhippe God the Creator of heauen and earth; yet in ſo doing, they worſhip nought but the deuiſe of their owne braine. And albeir they be obſtinate, yet they follow nothing but vncertaine and falſe opinions, in ſtead of the truth: they grope in darkeneſſe, and worſhip their owne imaginations in ſtead of God. In a word, all religion out of Chriſt is falſe and deceitfull; all ſeruiſes are deteſtable, & ought boldly to be condemned.

But it is not without cauſe that the Prophet vſeth theſe two wordes, Behold, this is, &c. For therein he teſtifies, that God is ſurely preſent: and a little after, in mentioning

What vs we are to make of this certentie of truth, now reuealed vnto vs in the Goſpell.

God cannot be knowne but in Chriſt

Iob. 14. 7.

Turkes and Iewes not acknowledging God in Chriſt, worſhip their owne imaginations in ſtead of God.

All religions out of Chriſt deteſtable.

Note also, that the Prophet doubles his speech, This is our God, This is the Lord.

faith, and assurance, he sets forth the constancie of those who worship God in Christ. It is certaine that we can not comprehend the Lord in his Maiestie, for he dwels in light which no man can attaine vnto, the which would certainly ouerwhelme vs, if we should presume to aspire therunto. And therefore he applies himselfe to out weaknes, communicating himselfe vnto vs in Iesus Christ, by whom he makes vs partakers of his wildome, righteousness, and all other his benefits.

This is also an excellent point, for in calling Christ the God of the faithfull, he giues him the title of The eternall: whence we gather, that the true eternitie of God is comprehended in his person. Moreover, seeing Christ is thus manifested by the Gospell, it reproches the wicked vnthankfulnes of those who being discontented with this perfect manifestation of him, haue dared to adde vaine speculations of their owne, as we may see in the Papacie.

Wee haue waied for him.] Now hee expresseth that constancie and perseuerance which those should haue that haue once embraced God in Christ: for this was not to be a temporarie knowledge, but such, as wherein we must stedfastlie perseuere vnto the end. Now Isaiah speaks in the person of the auncient Church which then had her proper seate only among the Iewes. And therefore containing all other gods which were worshipped in other places, he confidently affirms that he only which was manifested vnto Abraham, and published in the Law by the ministrie of Moses, is the true God: for other nations which were plunged in darknes and ignorance waited not for him: in regard that this waiting proceeds from faith, which is accompanied with patience; and faith is neuer separate from the word. He admonisheth the faithfull then that their saluation hangs vpon expectation and hope, because the promises of God were somewhat deferred till Christes comming. Furthermore we haue also to consider what the condition of these times were, for it seemed that Gods promise was either disannulled; or that he had reiected the posteritie of Abraham. Truly, howeouer they beheld the promise a farre off, yet God did in no sort reueale himselfe vnto them at that time: it was needfull therefore that they should be ended with a wonderful patience, to sustaine so heauie afflictions and temptations. This is the cause why he commands them to wait patientlie for the comming of Christ, for then they should perfectly feele how neere the Lord is to thē that serue him.

Now this very doctrine ought to quiet and calme our troubled spirits at this day, to the end we may wait for the Lord with a sure and inuincible hope; although our saluation be yet hidden, and that we say of him when he seemes to be far off, Behold him. Let vs learne also in the midst of the greatest confusions, to discern him by this marke, This is the Lord. For the words theselues, although he speaks in the time past, to wit, We haue reioiced, and are glad, yet the words import a continuall act: and a little before he spake in the time to come, He will saue vs. The summe is, that Christ will neuer disappoint those that are his, of their hope, provided that they call vpon him with calme and quiet affections.

Christ neuer disappoints his of their hope, if with calme affections they call vpon him.

Verf. 10. For in this mountaine shall the hand of the Lord rest, and Moab shall be threshed vnder him, euen as Syrax is threshed in Madmenah.

* Or, in the dunghill.

I Doubt not but the Prophets intent in the beginning of this verse is to comfort the Iewes: who wanting this, might haue thought that God had vtterlie forsaken and cast them off. For whereas some expound it of the affliction which the Lord would bring vpon the Iewes, I see no reason of it at all. But it is rather as if the Prophet should say, The Lord will alwaies assist his Church. I know well that the hand of the Lord is also said to rest vpon the reprobate, when without ceasing he continues to presse them with his vengeance till he haue vtterlie ouerthrowne them: but hand in this place is rather taken for succor, then for corrections: for the verb, shall rest, signifies a perpetuall watch and defence.

Hence wee gather a very profitable doctrine, to wit, that albeit God do shed forth insult store of his benefits ouer all the earth, so as the vnbelecuers themselves haue their part of them, yet notwithstanding his hand helps not continually, neither doth it rest any where but vpon his holy Mountaine, that is to say, vpon his Church where he is serued and worshipped. We are also to obserue, that Ierusalem was brought vnder the rod before she felt these graces: for before he denounced the iudgements of God against her; and now he adde a consolation therunto.

A doctrine of singular fruit.

Gods continually help proper only to his Church.

The Prophets mingle consolations with denuntiatioes.

In the second part of the verse he redoubles this mercie of God as it were. Why? Because in correcting the enemies of his Church he testifies how deere and precious the saluation thereof is vnto him. The Iewes had scarcely any greater enemies vnto them then the Moabites, as may be seene throw-out the bookes of the Prophets; notwithstanding there was some alliance betweene them. Now vnder the name of the Moabites he cōprehends all the enemies of y Church, but speciallie those with whom they had any affinity, which commonlie proue the worst of all. He shewes then, that albeit for a time they plaid rex, and oppressed the Church by tyrannie, yet themselves at last should be brought downe. His purpose in this is to prevent the worst, lest the faithfull should be discouraged in aduersitie, thinking their case miserable whilest the wicked euery way triumphed ouer them: for the threshing whereof he heere speaks, shall follow soone after. If we therefore at this day see the Church of God afflicted and troubled by those that in shew haue some acquaintance and league with vs, yea such as take vpon them the name and title of the Church, yet let vs susteine and comfort our hearts by this promise.

Whereas we haue turned the Hebrew word Madmena, a Dunghill; some take it to be the name of a Citie; whereof Ieremiah makes mention, Chap. 48. 2. But what if wee ſay, that the Prophet alludes to this Citie, which ſtood (as it is verie likely, in a fat and fertile ſoile, and that hee thus gaules and preſteth the Moabites the more? as if hee ſhould ſay; Euen as ſtraw is thrashed in their fields, ſo the Lord will thrash the Moabites. I rieiect not the other interpretations; yet I ſee no inconuenience if we ſay, that he had reſpect to the fruitfullneſſe of the land in which this Citie ſtood. And in reading it ſo, I haue not feared to follow the common conſent.

Verſ. 11. And hee ſhall ſtretch out his hand in the middeſt of them, (as hee that ſwimmeth ſtretcheth them out ſo ſwimme) and with the ſtrength of his handes ſhall hee bring downe their pride.

NOW the Prophet both expounds and confirms the former ſentence; yet it is by way of another ſimilitude: whereby hee giues them to vnderſtand, that the Lord will ſtretch out his hand into the verie middeſt of Moab Country, and will not lightly touch ſome corners or out places thereof. Some expound this ſimilitude thus; Euen as men ſtretch forth their armes in ſwimming, ſo the Lord will chaſtiſe the Moabites on this ſide and on that.

Others thinke he ſpeakes of inſlicting manifold puniſhments vpon them: as if hee ſhould ſay; The Lord will not correct the Moabites once onely, but will be reuenged on them the ſecond, yea the third time, for the crueltie which they exerciſed vpon his children. But we may expound this ſimilitude another way; They that ſwimme we know vſe not to caſt themſelues in violently, but they goe gently to worke, and ſpread out their armes very ſoftly; and yet in the meane while, they cut and paſſe thorow the water: So the Lord will not often vſe his greateſt forces to confound the wicked, but wil eaſilie, without weapō or great tumults, bring the deſtruction, how valiant or well furniſhed ſocuer they ſeemed to be. This expoſition of the ſimilitude pleaſeth me beſt, becauſe it doth in nothing depraue the former ſenſe, & giues vs to vnderſtand, that God oftentimes brings the wicked to nothing by his power, although he doe not euer and anon thunder from heauen in the ſight of all the world. Whereas he ſaith, he will doe this in the middeſt of it; he ſhewes that there is no corner ſo cloſe, into which this vengeance of God ſhall not pierce.

Verſ. 12. The defence alſo of the height of thy walles ſhall he bring downe and lay low, and caſt them to the ground, euen to the duſt.

NOW hee directeth his ſpeech againſt the Country of Moab. Moab was well fortified and ſwelled with pride, in regard of their walles and bulwarkes: therefore he ſaith, that the high towers, and other ſtrong and impregnable places ſhould ſerue them to no purpoſe. They of old vſed another kinde of fortification then we doe now at this day, as is well knowne. It is not without cauſe that he here vſeth three words for the better expreſſing of his owne meaning; to wit, I will bring downe, lay low, and caſt to the ground: for it was needfull that this pride of the Moabites wherewith they were puffed vp, ſhould be beaten downe, becauſe they were become intollerable; as we haue ſeene in the 15. Chapter, verſ. 6. The Prophet then derides them; as if he ſhould ſay; Oh, it ſeemes the Lord cannot bring downe this height of yours, in which you ſo much glory. The particle, To the duſt, is as much as if he had ſaid; He will not onely race to the ground, but will bring it to duſt, that there ſhall not remaine ſo much as any mention of the old ruines. This place contains in it therefore an excellent and verie apt conſolation: for our enemies at this day are ſo bold, that they deſpiſe not men alone, but euen God himſelfe: they are ſo proud, and ſo puffed vp in regard of their power, that they thinke themſelues inuincible. But it is our parts to oppoſe this ſentence of the Prophet againſt them and all their forces and munitions; to wit, the Lord will eaſilie bring all theſe things to nought. In the meane while, wee muſt patiently beare the hurt that comes vnto vs by reaſon of their power and ſtrength, untill the certaine and prefixed time of their ruine approacheth.

A conſolation

Let Patience haue her perfect works,

THE XXVI. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. In that day ſhall this ſong be ſung in the land of Iudab: Wee haue a ſtrong Citie, ſaluation ſhall God ſet for the walles and bulwarkes.

HE Prophet begins againe in this place to ſhew, that God will hold the people in his protection, after their returne out of captiuitie, and that Ieruſalem ſhall be in ſafetie vnder his cuſtodie, no leſſe then if it were co-passed about with fortrefſes, ramparts, ditches, & double wals; ſo as the enemies ſhould enter no waies to hurt it. But the time is to be noted when this ſong was publiſhed. The Prophet had foretold what calamities ſhould fall vpon the Church, which as yet were nothing neere, but came to paſſe after his death. Doubtleſſe the people might haue deſpaired in their captiuitie, if theſe promiſes had not vpheld them. To the end the Iewes then might haue ſome aſſurance of their deliuerance, and in the middeſt of death might espie life approaching: the Prophet composed this song before the troubles happened: why? that they might learne betimes to beare their miseries patiently, and to hope for better things. For it was not penned onely (as I thinke) for a thanksgiving which the Iewes should sing after their deliuerance; but also that in their captiuitie it selfe, they might confirme their hearts with confidence of future comfort, and might teach their children to hope for it, leauing these promises as it were from hand to hand, to their posteritie, although for the present they seemed but dead men.

We haue told you in the 5. Chapter, why the Prophet composed these and the like songs in verse; to wit, that euery one might the better remember them by daily recording of them. Although they wept then in Babylon, and were almost ouerwhelmed with sorrow, as these words shew, How shall wee sing the Lords song in a strange land? yet they were to hope, that after their returne into Iudea, they should giue thanks to the Lord, and sing forth his praises. The Prophet therefore shewes them their deliuerance a farre off, that they might cheerefully wait for it.

[A Strong Citie.] By these words the Prophet promisseth an ample and full restauration of Ierusalem, and of the people. How so? God will not onely redeeme the captiues, and gather together the disperfed, but he will also keepe them safe and sound, after hee hath brought them home. But the faithfull notwithstanding forthwith saw the destruction both of the Citie and Temple: and being come home, they could perceiue nothing but those fearefull ruines which Isaiah had foretold. It was needfull then that they should behold this restauration of Ierusalem by the eye of faith, as from an high beacon or turret.

Now after these things, the Prophet shewes what the strength of this Citie shall bee; namely, The protection of God shall be in stead of walles, towers, ditches, and forts: as if hee should say; Let other Cities trust in their defences; God onely shall be the best defence that we can imagine. I reiect not their aduice who say we should reade; Hee hath set walles and bulwarkes for saluation: but in regard the Prophets wordes being simply vnderstood, containe in them a more ample and stable doctrine, what neede is there to wrest in a constrained exposition, when the true and naturall sense runnes very well; to wit, that Gods protection is more sufficient then all defences? according as it is said, Psal. 63. Thy goodnesse, Lord, is better then life: for as Dauid there confesseth, that he rests in greater securitie vnder the shadow of Gods wings, then if hee were furnished with all the succours the world could afford him: so in like manner Isaiah saith in this place, that there shall bee iust occasion of securitie, when God shall vndertake the safeguard of his people.

Now in as much as this promise extends it selfe to the whole course of our redemption, we must here obserue also, that hee is at this day the protector of his Church: and that his defence therefore who keeps it, is stronger then if it were compassed about with humane helpes. If we therefore meane to rest safely, let vs dwell in the Church. And albeit we be destitute of outward munitions, yet lets content our selues with the Lord and his vndoubted saluation, which is farre more excellent then all worldly fortresses.

Gods sole protection of his Church, stronger then all humane helpes.

Verf. 2. Open yee the gates, that the righteous nation that keepeth the truth, may enter in.

NO doubt but many despised this song when Isaiah first published it: for in his time Ierusalem was full of bad companions, and the number of the godly were very few. But after the Prophets death, they were chastised for their impietie; for then they had some inkling that the Prophet had not foretold these things in vaine. For whilest the wicked ate in prosperitie, they feare nothing, and beate themselves in hand, that they cannot be tamed. And thus the Iewes thought they could neuer be driuen out of Iudea, nor led captiues: nay, they imagined they should dwell there euer. It was needfull therefore that all occasion of swelling pride should be taken away from them: hercunto tend the Prophets words, when he saith, that the inhabitants of the new Citie shall be vnlike the first: for they shall bee faithfull and iust.

Moreouer, this promise might haue seemed ridiculous; because those which were banished and led into captiuitie, had no matter at all to reioyce of. Therefore after the destruction of the Temple and the Citie, and the overthrow of all estates, they might object, where are those gates which he commands vs to open? or where are those people that should enter in at them? And yet notwithstanding, we see these things came to passe; neither was there any thing foretold, which the Lord did not performe and accomplish. Wee ought therefore to set these ancient histories before our eyes, to arme our selues with the examples contained in them, and in the midst of this confused estate in which we now see the Church to be, to hope notwithstanding that the Lord will restore it.

God is alwaies as good as his word, howsoeuer our passions boile within vs. What course we are to take when the Church is in a confused state. Chap. 25. 1.

When the Prophet mentions the iust nation that keepeth the truth; hee not onely shewes (as I haue said heerebefore) who they are to whom this promise appertaines; but therewithall, the fruit of that should come by this chastisement: for the Church being once purged from her filthinesse, her righteousnesse and holinesse should shine so much the more right. For when the Prophet wrote this song, the wicked reigned, and the good were verie thin sown, and those also were mingled amongst the multitude, as the wheat in the chaffe. It was needfull therefore that this great troope, who had neither religion nor any feare of God should bee cut off: to the end the Lord might gather in the remnant of his his

his Church. See now how the Lord recompenced this ruine of Ierusalem. For whereas her citizens were before defiled with impie-tie, now they were consecrated anew vnto God; else it had been to little purpose for them to haue recouered a flourishing outward estate, if newnes of life, pietie and vprightnes had not also flourished amongst them. Now as the Prophet in these words sets forth the grace of God, so he also exhorts these redeemed people therewithall to giue themselves to integritie of life. In a word, he testifies that these promises shall stand hypocrites in no stead, for the gates shall not be set open for them, but only for the just and holy.

I grant the Church hath alwaies been like the corne-floore, wherein there is chaffe mingled amongst the good corne, or rather the wheat is couered with chaffe: yet it is not to be doubted but the Church was purged in better measure then it was before, when the Iewes returned home out of captiuitie. For it could not be but those which came back againe were led with a good and zealous affection in regard the iorney was long and tedious, as also, that they were subiect to many inconueniencies and dangers in the way: In the meane while many of their nation chose rather to continue in bondage then to goe home, thinking their estate who remained in Babylon much more quiet and peaceable then theirs who returned into Iudea. It must needs be some seed of godlines then which forced them to come and take the inioying of those promises that were made to their fathers. But albeit the Church was then stained with many imperfections, yet this which the Prophet here affirms was true in part:
for the most of the of-scouring, which were mingled with them before, came not back againe; and those that remained had somewhat profited vnder Gods corrections.

Some distinguish this sentence thus, The just nation before God, and the vpright before men. But I take it more simple, to wit;
After the Prophet hath mentioned the righteous nation, he by and by shewes that this iustice consists in the integritie of that heart which is without fraud or guile: for nothing is more contrarie to iustice then hypocrisie.
Now albeit the man can not be found who hath so well profited as to keepe iustice in e-uery respect perfectlie, yet we may say that Gods children, who aspire vnto this vprightnes with their whole hearts, are notwithstanding keepers of it. Vnlesse any had rather vn-derstand it thus, that true iustice is here set forth vnder one of the parts by the figure Synechdoche, to wit, when men walke simple and plainlie one with another, hauing first of all abandoned all naughtie and wicked practises.

But if any vpon this place should go about to stablish the doctrine of merits, we shall easily answere them: for the Prophet speaks not here of the cause of saluation, neither yet what men are by nature, but what God makes them to be by grace, and what Citizens he meant to haue in his Church; for of wolves he can make lambs, as we haue scene in the 11. Chapter. But whilest we liue in this world, we are alwaies farre off from that perfection which God requires, and therefore we ought dayly to aime still vnto it: but the Lord esteems vs only according to that good worke which he hath begun in vs, and accounts vs iust after he hath once brought vs into the paths of iustice. For when he hath begun to correct and change our hypocrisie, he doth therewithall call vs faithfull and vpright.

Verf. 3. * By an assured purpose thou wilt preserve persei peace, because they trusted in thee.

* Or, It is an assured thought: thou wilt keepe
peace, peace
I say, for they trusted in thee.

Because the Hebrew word Ieser signifies a thing made, created, or a thought, some translate thus, Thou wilt keepe peace with an assured foundation: as if the Prophet meant, that those who continue constant in the tempests of this world, because they rest vpon God, shall alwaies continue in safetie.
Others turne it, Thou wilt keepe peace by an assured purpose, which comes almost to the same sense, to wit, that those who haue fixed their hearts vpon God alone shall be happie and blessed at the last. For God promiseth not to be the protector of his Saints further then they quietlie rest vpon his good pleasure, without waunting. But because the Prophet in one word saith, It is a stable or stedfast decree, let the readers consider, if this be not more sidie applied vnto God: so as the sense will be, The peace of the Church is buile vpon the eternall and immutable counsell of God. For the very principall point is, that the faithfull stay themselves vpon this heauenlie decree, lest they should be shaken by so many changes as dayly fall out in the world.

It is sure that wee ought alwaies to hope stedfastlie in God, to the end wee may euermore feele his faithfulness in keeping vs: it is requisite also that the faithfull be neuer turned aside for any doubtfull or perplexed accident, but ought to stick close to God only:
notwithstanding the fittest sense, and that which agrees best with the Prophets words is, that God hath purposed by an assured and immutable decree that all those which hope in him shall enioy euertlasting peace. For if this stedfast purpose should be taken for the setled constancie of the faithfull, it were in vaine for the Prophet to adde that reason to his speech which followeth, for they trusted in thee. Again, both kinds of speech would be improper, to say that a continuall peace should be forethought of in the conceit. But this agrees very well, that God will neuer deceiue vs our hope when we trust in him: Why?
Because he hath decreed to keepe vs for euer.
Wence it followes, that seeing the Church depends not vpon the brittle estate of the world, it is not therefore shaken nor tossed vp and downe by the sundrie changes which fall out euery day; but is stayed vpon a rock firme and immouable: to wit, the constant decree of God; so as it can neuer be moued.

A close opposition betweene Gods setled purpose, and our wauering thoughts;

And thus, as I take it, here is a close opposition betweene the setled purpose of God, and our vnsetled and wauering thoughts: for it happens euer and anon, that any new assault driues our thoughts hither and thither; yea there is not the least change which brings not his doubtings with it. It is good therefore wee should hold this principle; to wit, that we doe amisse to measure Gods immutable counsell by our tottering deuices: for it is said, as we shall see Chap. 55. That as farre as the heauens are higher then the earth, so much higher are my thoughts from yours, O yee house of Israel, faith the Lord.

Our saluatiō not subiect to change, because the counsell of God remains fure.

By peace, is meant both inward and outward felicitie.

First then, let vs hold this for certaine, that our saluation is not subiect to change; because the counsell of God remaineth fure. Therefore it is the Prophet repeates it, Thou wilt keepe peace, peace I say; thereby shewing, that it shall continue and last for euer. Now by the word peace, he not onely meanes peace of conscience, but all kinde of felicitie: as if hee should say; Gods grace alone shall suffice to maintaine you in all happinesse and prosperitie.

Verf. 4. Trust in the Lord for euer: for in the Lord God is strength for euermore.

Some reade the second member of the verse; Hope in the strong God, Lord of the worlds; but in regard the word Trust, is not alwaies put for an epithite, but signifies Strength, I reiect that exposition, because it is constrained; neither suites it to the matter in hand, as we shall see anon. There is also a little stedfastnesse in their curiositie, who from hence would proue the Diuinitie of Christ: as if the Prophet should say; The Lord Ichouah is in the Lord Iah. For Isaiah hath put the name of God twice, onely to amplifie his power. He therefore exhorts the people to repose themselues vpon God: first then he laid downe doctrine; and in this verse hee comes to exhortation. For it were in vaine to tell vs our peace is in the hand of God, and that he will faithfully keepe it, vnlesse after such instructions & doctrines, we were stirred vp and prouoked to haue our parts therein by exhortations.

Now he not onely wils vs to hope, but to perseuere in it: this sentence therefore belongs properly to the faithfull, who haue alreadie learned what it is to hope in God. And yet they haue neede to be daily confirmed, because they are weak, and readie oftentimes to slip, according to the sundrie occasions of distrust with which they haue to fight.

He commands vs not barely to trust in the Lord then, but that we perseuere constantly in hope and assurance for euer. The reason which he addes likewise is to be noted; to wit, that as Gods power, which is the object of faith, indures for euer; so our faith should still looke to this perpetuitie. For when the Prophet speaks of the power and strength of God, he meanes not any idle power, but such as is effectual and operative: shewing and manifesting it selfe really in vs, following and bringing to a good end that which it hath begun. And yet this doctrine hath a further scope; to wit, it teacheth vs at all times to consider the nature of God. For as soone as wee doe but turne our eyes in the least measure aside, we can see nothing but that which is earthly and vanishing; and must wee not then be forth with out of heart? Faith therefore ought to surmount the world with continuall increase: why? because the trueth, iustice, and goodnesse of God is not temporall and vanishing, but God alwaies continues like himselfe.

We must alwaies fixe the eyes of our faith vpon Gods nature.

Verf. 5. For hee will bring downe them that dwell on high: the high Citie will hee abase; euen vnto the ground will hee cast it downe, and bring it vnto dust.

6. The foote shall treade it downe, euen the feete of the poore, and the steps of the needie.

Now he more fully shewes what this power of God is, whereof hee spake; to wit, euen that whereof we shall haue experience, and that for our good. These two sentences then depend one vpon another thus; to wit, That the proud are cast downe by the power of God, who stablisheth the humble and those that are despised, in their stead. For whereas in the first place hee teacheth that the proud shall be brought downe; it would not suffice for giuing a full and perfect consolation, vnlesse he had also added, that the poore and humble should bee exalted to haue the dominion ouer them. This we know by experience, that God is wont to worke powerfully for our saluation; and this giues vs matter and occasion of good hope.

Verf. 5.
Verf. 6.

By the high places, he meanes all manner of munitions & defences, (for in old time they were wont to build Cities in high places) as also their glorie and riches. His meaning is then, that there shal be no fortresse so strong, which shall let God to abase and bring downe the wicked. Towers and Castles are not displeasing vnto God in themselues; but because it often fallles out, that the strong and mightie brag and glory in them: therefore this dwelling on high, is often taken for pride it selfe. Now it is not to bee doubted but hee speaks here of the wicked, who with their forces, wealth, and treasures, thinke themselues able to make their partie good against God. He also comforts the lewes (as wee haue said) in regard they might bee terrified and despair in themselues, by seeing Babylons power to bee inuincible, vnlesse God had vpheld them by this particular promise. As if hee should haue saide; You neede not feare eyther the greatnesse or power of the Babylonians: why? for it shall easilie bee brought downe, and shall not bee able to resist the power of the most high.

Chap. 13. 1.

Doctrine laid downe in the 3. verf. in this he comes to exhortation. Doctrine & exhortation must goe together.

We must not onely trust, but it must continue for euer. Our faith ought to answere Gods power.

Verf. 6.

*Or, vpright-neſſes are the path of the iuſt.

Verſ. 7. * The way of the iuſt is righteous: thou wilt make equall the righteous path of the iuſt.

HE praifeſh not the iuſtice of the faithfull here, as ſome haue falſtie imagined: but only teacheth that God by his ſingular bleſſing will giue them an happie and prosperous ſucceſſe thorowout the whole courſe of their liues. But becauſe in the beginning of the verſe he had ſaid only in a word, That the way of the iuſt is plaine and equall: in the ſecond part hee expounds himſelſe more clearly; attributing it vnto the grace of God that they perſeuere thus in their good courſe vnto the end, euen as it were thorow a ſmooth and plaine field. For in the verb, to make equall, there is a ſimilitude; namely, that God will poize as with iuſt and equall weights and ballance thoſe things which in themſelues were very vnequall.

There is ſome ambiguitie in the Hebrue word Iaſhar, becauſe it may be attributede as well to God, as to the way. Some therefore tranſlate, Thou which art iuſt wilt make the way of the righteous equall: and God is thus called in the other places. The alluſion alſo would be very fitting to ſay, that the vprightneſſes of which he ſpeakes proceed from God, in regard that he only is vpright or iuſt: notwithstanding the other reading ſeemes leſſe conſtrained.

Dim. 32.4.
Pſal. 25.8.9.

In ſumme, the Prophet promiſeth that God will haue care of the iuſt, and that in ſuch wiſe, as he will lead them by the hand. For we often thinke that all things run conſuſedlic together here below whileſt the vngodlie are at their eaſe, and the good in the meane time are oppreſſed. Yea and albeit the holy Scripture teacheth, and ſo often confirms it vnto vs that God hath care of his Church, yet notwithstanding it is an hard matter to keepe our thoughts ſteadie, but we by and by wauer whē we ſee all things which the wicked take in hand to prosper. And yet it is moſt certaine that God by his ballance poiſeth the waies of the iuſt how vncuen or ragged ſocuer the ſame ſeeme to be: yea, he hath giuen his Angels charge to keepe thoſe that are his, that they ſhould not ſtumble or hurt their foot againſt a ſtone, Pſal. 91.11. otherwiſe there is not the leaſt offence which would not eaſily ouerthrow them and make them quail: much leſſe ſhould they be able to paſſe thorow ſo many briars and thornes; ſuch crooked by-waies; dangerous gulphs, and ſtreit paſſages, vneleſſe the Lord ſhould draw them out, and in the end deliuer them.

Let vs therefore learne to commend our ſaferie into the hands of God, and to follow him ſoc our guide: and in thus doing we ſhall be well directed; yea we ſhall alwaies eſcape, although we were inuironed on euery ſide with ambuſhes, the cunning deuices and the innumerable dangerous plots either of Satan, or the wicked which are his instruments. And haue not wee ſufficient prooue of that which the Prophet here ſaith? Are not our waies made plaine and ſmooth in the miſt of the deepeſt gulphs, ſo as our courſe can not be ſtopped nor ſlacked by any hindrances whatſoever? Truly experience it ſelſe teacheth, that if we were not conducted and gouerned by Gods hand, it were but in vaine for vs to attempt to walke thorow ſuch vnkowne paſſages: for alas ſuch is our weakenes, that we would ſtumble at the leaſt ſtone we ſhould meet withall in the way. Satan and the wicked on the other ſide would not only intangle and intrap vs in many of their nets; neither would they thinke it ſufficient to caſt ſome ſmall ſtumbling-blocks in our way: but one while they would driue vs vpo the rocks, another while into bottomles depths of miſeries, out of which the whole world with all the power it hath could by no means eſcape.

Let vs acknowledge then how neceſſarie it is for vs to looke for our direction from heauen: yea, let vs confeſſe with Ieremiab, O Lord, I know that the way of man is not in himſelſe: and that it is not in man to walke, nor direct his owne ſteps, Iere. 10. 23. Let vs not be puſted vp then with vaine confidences as if we had the euents of things at our beck. Neither let vs boaſt that we will do this or that, like thoſe rath heads who thinke themſelues able to accompliſh all their luſts: for if we haue not ſo much power as to moue our tongues to giue an anſwere; much leſſe can we of our ſelues bring greater enterpriſes to paſſe. It is in vaine for men then to purpoſe, determine, and to diſpoſe of their waies, vneleſſe God guide them by his hand.

Verſ. 8. Alſo We O Lord haue Waited for thee in the Way of thy iudgements: the deſire of our ſoule is to thy name, and to the remembrance of thee.

THIS verſe containes a moſt excellent doctrine, without which the former things might ſeeme to haue been ſpoken in vaine: for the Prophet hauing ſaid that God will be our leader all our liues long, ſo as we ſhall neuer erre nor ſtumble; and yet in the meane while we ſee our ſelues brought into ſo many extremities, that in our iudgements all theſe promiſes are merely vaine: when (I ſay) he thus exerciſeth our patience, it ſtands vs vpon to waſtle manfullie, and yet to hope in him notwithstanding. Of this the Prophet here giues vs warning, namely, that although we alwaies ſee not this ſmooth and goodly plaine; and that the way is not made ſo euen vnder our ſete: but that we muſt preſſe thorow many ſtreits, yet muſt wee ſtill giue place vnto hope and patience.

By the way of the iudgements, he meanes aduerſities: for ſo this word is often taken in the

from hypocrites.

the Scriptures. This is the mark then whereby true Christians are discerned from the false: for whilest hypocrites inioy all things at their desire, they blesse God, and highly ex-toll him; but in aduersitie, they murmure and blaspheme him; thereby plainly shewing, that they neuer trusted in him at all; and therefore they serue God no longer then he serues their turnes in all things. Contrariwise, when the faithfull are exercised vnder diuers crosses and calamities, they are prouoked thereby to draw nere vnto God, and to trust in his helpe. The particle Also, therefore hath great weight in it; for it is as much as if the Prophet had said, The faithfull serue God cheerfully, not onely when hee vscth them gently, but euen then also, when hee deales roughly with them: neither faint they vtterly, because they are sustained by hope.
Wherein consists the true triall of sound godli-nes then? Truly in this, that we trust in God, not onely when hee fillles vs abundantly with his benefits, but then also when hee withdrawes the light of his countenance; yea, when he afflicteth vs, and shewes vs nothing but the signes of his wrath and heauie displeasure.

A triall of a sound heart.

Let vs learne therefore to apply this doctrine to our vse, as often as the calamities of this present life doe presse vs: and let vs not cease to hope in him, although all things seeme vtterly desperate. If he should kill me (saith Iob) yet would I trust in him: Iob 13.17.
And David protests, that hee will not feare, though he should walke thorow the valley of the shadow of death. Why so? because hee knew that God was with him: Psal. 23.4.

In thy name.] In these words the Prophet meant to shew from whence this magnanimitie of minde in the faithfull procedes; which suffers them neither to faint nor to fall vnder the greatest assaults: surely it is in respect that being loosed from those profane desires, wherein the wicked are intangled, they euen in their greatest distresses wherewith they are compassed about, haue free-dome and libertie of spirit to send forth their groanes and cries, boldly into the presence of God. Naturally I confesse our desires are dis-ordered, and the cares of this life doe as it were glew vs to the earth; our thoughts float vp and downe, or else are so besotted, that they cannot freely aspire vnto God. The essence of God in like manner is hidden from vs, whereby wee wax the more slow and dull in seeking of him. For these respects therefore the Prophet brings vs backe from this hidden & incomprehensible essence of God, to his name. As if he should say; Content your selues with that manifestation of him which you find in his word: for there he sets before vs as much as is expedient; to wit, his iustice, wisdome, and goodnesse; yea and his very selfe also.

It is not without cause also that he addes
this word remembrance: for thereby he shewes, that the first apprehension or thought of Gods name sufficeth not; but that wee ought to meditate thereon continually; because without this helpe, all light of doctrine would by and by vanish. For the truth is, the right and sound knowledge of God must needs inflame our hearts with a desire after him:

yea, more then that, it prouokes vs to an insatiabie thirst after profiting, euen as oft as we remember him. The knowledge of God then goes before; and in the second place we ought to exercise our selues much in the meditation of it: for it is not enough once to haue had some little taste thereof, vnlesse therewithall a loue and desire after the same bee increased by a continuall meditation.
Hence wee may learne then, that the knowledge of God is no idle nor dead imagi-

Vers. 9. With my soule haue I desired thee in the night, and with my spirit within mee will I seeke thee in the morning: for seeing thy iudgements are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world shall learne righteousness.

SEE yet a more ample exposition of the former sentence: for before, speaking in the person of all the faithfull, he said, that the desire of their soules was to the name of God:
but now he brings in himselfe speaking; My soule hath desired thee, saith hee. As if hee should say; All the powers of my soule are buffed in seeking of thee and thy name.

The word Nephesh, is often taken for the vital spirit: but because the Prophet vscth two sundry words here, I so distinguish them, as that the soule shall signifie the desire and the will; and the spirit, the intellectuall part.
For we know that the vnderstanding & will,
are the two principall parts of mans soule;
and God will haue both of them; as good reason is he should. And hereunto appertaines that Commandement, Thou shalt loue the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soule, and with all thy strength: Matth.
22.37. The Prophet teacheth then, that all the faculties of his soule were bent, and led him to seeke and desire the Lord.

How soule and spirit is taken here.
The vnder-standing and will, two principall parts of mans soule.

Others take this word spirit, for the regenerate part; and thus by the soule, they vnder-stand the naturall man; and by the spirit, the grace of God, which is supernaturall. But this cannot stand: for the naturall man neuer seekes vnto God; yea, and we know by experience what strife wee haue in our selues when we aspire vnto God; as also with what great difficulty we wind our selues out of this repugnancie. This interpretation then needs no long refutation, seeing it manifestly crosseth the very text of holy Scripture. Moreo-uer, it sufficiently appeares by many places, that these words, Spirit and Soule, import as much as vnderstanding and heart.

By night, the holy Ghost often meanes aduersities; which are compared vnto darknes and obscuritie. But in this place I expound it a little otherwise: as if the Prophet should say; There is no time so vsiting and inconuenient, which I take not to call vpon thee, and to seeke vnto thee. This exposition differs

fers not much from the fiſt, yet it is ſomewhat more generall: for the night ſeemes to be ordeined for reſt, in which all the deſires and travels of men ceaſe; ſo as there is little difference betweene ſleepe and death. But when it was time to take reſt and to be quiet, then the Prophet ſaith, he awaked to ſeeke G O D, ſo as no occaſion could hinder him from it.

The meaning whereof is not as if thoſe which ſleepe can have any ſetled or ſtable thoughts: but ſleepe it ſelfe being a part of our courſe whiſt we ſeeke God, though we lie as in a trance without uttering any word, yet then we may be ſaid to praife him by faith and hope. But the Prophet ſpeakes not of ſleepe here properly, but rather by way of ſimilitude, as it further appeares plainly by the member following, where the morning is oppoſed to the night: and thus he notes out a continuall courſe.

In the next place we are to conſider of the reaſon which he yeelds of his ſo doing when he ſaith, that the inhabitants of the earth ſhall learne righteousnes by the iudgements of God: ſig-nifying thereby that men are inſtructed and taught to feare God by his rods wherewith he ſmites them. For in proſperitie they forget him, ſo as their eyes ſtand out for ſnares:
they reioyce and keepe a coyle, and can not abide to be brought into any good order.
The Lord therefore is faine to repreſſe their pride, and to teach them how to bow vnder his hand. Laſtly the Prophet here confeſſeth that himſelfe & the reſt of the faithfull were prepared by the corrections of the Almighty to kiſſe the rod, and to ſubmit themſelves to his government; and to put themſelves vnder his protection: for unleſſe the Lord maintaine his owne right and authoritie ouer vs with an out-ſtreched arme, none of vs all will willinglie frame our minds aright to do him ſervice.

Verſ. 10. Let mercie be ſhewed to the Wicked, yet he will not learne righteousnes: in the land of vprightnes he will doe Wickedlie, and will not behold the Maie-ſtie of the Lord.

THE Prophet oppoſeth this ſentence to the former: for he had ſaid that when the faithfull are afflicted, or ſee others in the like caſe, that they ceaſe not for all that to reſt in the aſſurance of Gods fauour, and to hope conſtantlie in his help. Now on the contra-rie he ſaith that y wicked can not be brought to loue God, albeit he labour to draw and knit them vnto him by all ſorts of his benefits: nay rather they become the worſe, although he ſhew himſelfe moſt gracious towards them. It may ſeeme then at the fiſt bliſh that this verſe ſhould be contrarie to the former: for it was there ſaid that the iuſtice of God is knowne vpon earth, euen then whiſt he himſelfe ſhewes that he is Iudge of the world, and executes vengeance vpon the iniquities of men. But here he ſaith, that the wicked can not be allured nor drawne by any meanes to ſerue God: and ſo farre is it off that they are any thing the better for the ſtripes which they receive, that they waxe worſe and worſe, and that whiſt he lades the dayly with his benefits: for it is out of centrouerſie that all make not a right vſe of afflictions. What vſe I pray you made Pharaoh of the plagues wherewith God ſmote him? did not the blowes which he felt make his heart

the more hard?

But howſoeuer he ſpake generallie of the inhabitants of the earth beſore, yet he only and properly meant Gods elect. I denie not but this benefit redounds ſome time to hypocrites alſo, to wit, that they are now and then touched with the feeling of Gods Maieſtie:
yea and they are often reſtrained from breaking out euen for feare of the whip. Not-withſtanding becauſe the Prophet here deſcribes the fruites of true repentance, it muſt needs be that he ſhould only meane the children of God when he ſpeakes of the inhabitants of the earth.

Now ſome reade this verſe by an interrogation thus, Shall the wicked obtaine fauor?
or, Wherefore ſhould the wicked obtaine fauor? As if the Prophet meant to ſay, that they were vnworthie to taſte of Gods mercie. But for mine owne part I rather thinke that the wicked will neuer be taught to do well, albeit God ſhould allure them therunto by pow-ring out all his benefits vpon them. The Prophet therefore here reſtrains that which he ſaid beſore in generall termes. And when he ſaith that they do wickedlie in the land of vprightnes, he therein further amplifies the vnworthines of this ingratitude. It was enough and too much that they had alreadie abuſed Gods benefits, and made themſelves more obſtinate thereby: but they made their finne about meaſure ſinfull when they dealt thus wickedlie in the land which God had hallowed. Now he ſpeakes only of Iudea; albeit wee may alſo applie it to other Countries wherein God is now worſhipped: But at that time Iſaiah could giue this title to none other, becauſe there was no knowledge of God but in Iudea. For this cauſe he calles Iudea the land of vprightnes: and thus I interpret it, becauſe the Prophet vſeth the word Neco-choth, which is of the femenin gender, and can no way be referred to men.

This land was adorned with this title in regard the law was in force there, and for that the people were the peculiar choſen of God:
therefore the Prophet addes this to aggravate
the peoples vnthankfulnes, as hath been ſaid.
For their expoſition is farre wide from the naturall ſenſe, who extend it generallie to all the world: becauſe in what place ſoeuer we liue God maintaines vs vpon this condition, that we behaue our ſelves vprightlie towards all. The Lord indeed hath now cauſed his kingdome to ſpread into all places; the land of vprightnes therefore is whereſoeuer his name is called vpon: and thus we deſerue a double condemnation if wee yeeld not testimonies of true thankfulnes by giuing our ſelves to pietie & good works whē God pro-uokes vs therunto by ſo many of his benefits.

The wicked
are bettered

How farre
this land of vprightnes may now be ſaid to extend it ſelfe.

Where hee adds, that the reprobates shall see the maiestie of God; it is not to lessen the fault, but rather to augment and increase it: for it is a foolish and wicked ingratitude in men to bee carelesse of Gods glory, which plainly shines before their eyes. The wicked then are no way excusable: for although God proclaime his name diuers waies; yet in this so cleere a sunshine they see nothing. Questionlesse there want not euident signes at all times by which the Lord manifests both his glory and greatnesse: but their number is very small who take it to heart, as we haue seene before, Chap. 5. 19.

The Lord not onely sets forth his maiestie and glory by his ordinarie workes in nature, but also by certaine signes and worthy documents, wherein hee fully instructs vs as touching his iustice, wisdom, and goodnesse. The wicked shut their eyes at it, and perceiue it not, albeit they be very quicke and sharpe sighted in other matters. This frowardnesse and peruerstie the Prophet now reprobates. Others thinke hee threatens the reprobates here, as if they were unworthy to behold the workes of God. Which although it be true, yet seeing this member is ioyned to the rest, the Prophet still reprobates the fortitude of those, who are so farre off from making benefit of the workes of God, that rather they become the more senselesse by them. For which cause it should not seeme strange vnto vs at this day, if there be few which come to repentance, albeit Gods iustice manifests it selfe so diuersly: for infidelitie is alwaies blinde, when it should behold the workes of God.

Verf. 11. O Lord, they will not behold thine high hand: but they shall see it, and be confounded with the zeale of thy people; and the fire of thine enemies shall deuoure them.

This is an exposition of the former sentence: for hee enters into no new discourse, but expounds that at large, which he had said before in few words. He said in the other verse, that the wicked would not behold the maiestie of the Lord: now he shewes that this magnificence of the Lord is the same which appears in his workes. For the Prophet sends vs not to the hidden maiestie of God, which wee cannot behold with our eyes; but brings vs to his workes, which hee here represents by a figure, vnder this word hand. Well, he accuseth the wicked once againe, shewing that they haue nothing to allege for their defence; neither can they couer themselves, vnder any pretence of ignorance: for albeit they were starke blind, yet was the hand of God made manifest enough; so as nothing could hinder them from seeing of it, but their owne grosse vnthankfulnesse, or rather wilfull fortitude. For many haue skill enough to pleade ignorance, affirming that they perceiue not these workes: but hee telles such, that Gods hand is stretched forth; not onely in such wise that it may be discerned of a small number, but also farre and neere.

They shall see it and be confounded. He makes it very apparent, that this beholding is not the same whereof he spake before, when hee said, that the wicked saw not the maiestie of the Lord: for they saw it well enough, but they regarded it not. Notwithstanding, at the last they shall see it, although too late, and to their great disadvantage. For hauing a long time abused the patience of God, in shewing themselves obstinate and rebellious, they shall be constrained in the end to take knowledge of his iudgements. Thus albeit Caine, Esau, and the like (who repented their sinnes too late) fled from Gods presence, yet in despite of their teeth, they were made both to see and feele that he was their Iudge: Gen. 4. 13. and 27. 38.

Thus hee often draws some remorse as it were euen from those that despise him, to the end he might cause his power to shine cleerely: but such apprehensions bring them no profit at all. The Prophet then so threatens the wicked, whose blindness hee hath rebuked, that he therewithall takes from all pretext of ignorance; plainly telling them, that the time shall come, wherein they shall know with whom they haue to doe, and shall then well perceiue that this maiestie and high hand of God which they reiected & made light of, ought not in any sort to be contemned. For they ouerslow in all riot and dissolution with their eyes shut, they flout and mocke, thinking God will neuer call them to iudgement: yea, which more is, the miseries and afflictions of the faithfull, are things wherein they take great delight. Thus they looke vpon vs with disdain, as if they were out of all danger, hardening their hearts more & more: but in the end, they shall know that the seruants of God haue not serued him in vaine. Now that hee might the better shew that this beholding of God, should not onely be vnprofitable, but also hurtfull to the wicked, he saith, that they shall be confounded, when they shall see the blessing of God vpon his people, wherein they shall haue neither part nor portion.

In the next place he further augments the sharpnesse of the punishment, in regard that these yngodly ones shall not onely be confused with enmie, when they shall see the children of God deliuered from these miseries, and exalted into glory; but they shall also be stricken with no lesse an euill, to wit, the fire of the enemies shall deuoure them. The zeale of the people then in this place, signifies the indignation wherewith the reprobates shall be inflamed when they shall compare the condition of the faithfull with theirs.

Hee calles that the fire of the enemies wherewith God consumes his aduersaries; taking this word fire, for Gods vengeance: for it must not be taken here for that visible fire wherewith things are consumed in this world; neither yet for lightning onely; but by a figure it is taken for a cruell torment: for so by this word the holy Ghost is wont often to note out the extreme wrath of the Lord. Yet I denie

God may well suffer the wicked to take their twinge for a while, but in the end hee paines them home.

Verſ. 12. Lord vnto vs thou wilt ordaine peace: for thou alſo haſt wrought all our workes for vs.

THIS tends to the conſolation of the faithfull. As if he ſhould ſay; We ſee what will fall vpon the heads of the wicked, for thou wilt caſt them out of the company of thy children, & wilt conſume them with fire as thine enemies; but we ſhal haue an happy and bleſſed eſtate. The verbe ſhaphar, which ſignifies to Ordaine among the Hebrewes, is as much to ſay, as to Establish; as if he ſhould ſay; Thou wilt hold and preferue vs in peace continually. The wicked indeed inioy a kind of peace, but it laſts not long: our peace is ſeated and eſtablished in the Lord, and hath ſuch a foundation as ſhall indure for euer. Now by the word peace, he meanes a ſetled and laſting felicitie. Hence let vs conclude then, that the children of God which truſt in him, are fully bleſſed: for the life of the wicked is more then miſerable, albeit it be ſoaked in much deliciousneſſe and pleaſures, as thoſe that haue all things at their wiſh. There is no aſſured nor ſtable peace then, but in the fatherly loue of our God.

By workes, hee meanes all the good which God doth to his choſen: as if he ſhould ſay; All our affaires and actions: all things which we vſe for our benefit in this world, in a word whatſo euer, we put our hands vnto. Thoſe then who haue alleadged this place, to overthrow the doctrine of free will, did not well vnderſtand the Prophets meaning. I grant it is God onely that works, whatſo euer is good in vs; ſo as all our vprightneſſe proceeds onely from his Spirit: but the Prophet meant ſimply to teach here, that wee receiue all the good things which we inioy, onely from the hand of God; and thence concludes, that this fauour ſhall neuer ceaſe, till wee be come to full and perfect happineſſe.

Moreouer, ſeeing God is author of all bleſſings, wee ought eſpecially to be mindfull of thoſe which are chiefe and principall: for if wee ought to acknowledge that the things which ſerue for our maintenance in this life, are the gifts of God; much more ought we ſo to doe in things appertaining to the ſaluation of the ſoule. If ſo be then we owe thankfullneſſe for his liberalitie in ſmall things, how much more ſhould wee acknowledge his goodneſſe in things that are high and excellent? But what need haue wee to object this text againſt the Papiſts, to refute their doctrine of free will, ſeeing they may be eaſilie answered by other places: yea, we haue infinite teſtimonies beſides which are much more euident.

Thus it ſeemes then that the Prophet ſtirrs vp the peoples mindes to thankfullneſſe: for hee commands them ſo to admire the goodneſſe of God in his benefits, that they confeſſe all things they haue to be his gift. We haue here then a very fruitfull doctrine; to wit, that the faithfull are to conceiue an aſſured hope of Gods goodneſſe for the time to come, by conſidering what benefits they haue receiued from him in times paſt; and thence to conclude, that he will vndoubtedly haue care ouer them hereafter. Haue wee then at any time had experience of Gods mercy towards vs? Let vs learne to truſt in him for euer: and ſeeing it hath pleaſed him to ſhew himſelfe ſo bountifull and readie to doe vs good, let vs boldly and conſtantly ſettle our hearts in this truth; to wit, that hee will neuer faile vs.

All the faithfull haue done thus; and this way haue they confirmed themſelues in the faith: for ſee how Daniel ſpeakes, Paſal. 138. 8. Thou Lord wilt not forſake the worke of thine owne hands. And Saint Paul ſaith; He which hath begun a good worke in you, will perfect the ſame: Phil. 1. 6. Likewiſe the Patriarke Jacob ſaith; Lord, I am leſſe then all thy mercies and truth which thou haſt ſhewed thy ſeruant: but thou ſaiſt; I will doe thee good, &c. Gen. 32. 10, 11, 12. For God is not like to men; that is, to be wearie in well doing, or to be drawn dry by too much giuing; but the more good he hath done vs, ſo much the ſtronger ought our hope to be, and to receiue daily increaſes.

Verſ. 13. O Lord our God, other Lords beſides thee haue ruled vs: but wee will remember thee onelie and thy name.

THIS verſe containes a complaint which the faithfull make, becauſe they were oppreſſed vnder the tyranny of the wicked. Thus this ſong is compoſed to comfort the hearts of the faithfull, who in regard they were to vndergoe an hard condition of baniſhment, and to bee expelled out of that good land which was vnto them a ſigne of eternall happineſſe: as alſo being deprived of the ſacrifices of the holy aſſemblies; and ſo in a manner, of all conſolation and comfort: being furthermore ſhut vp vnder the bondage of the Babylonians, in a ſtrange Country, baniſhed from their Country, and overwhelmed with ſhame and moſt grievous afflictions; they might yet notwithstanding by this ſong, powre out their ſighes vnto God, and ſo find ſolace in him.

He ſpeakes therefore in the name and perſon of all the faithfull, who in appearance ſeemed to be reiecte of God, but therewithall profeſſing, that they were his people, and ſo conſequently, did put their confidence in him. But had they not great cauſe to mourne thus, when they were in bondage vnder the tyrannie of other rulers beſides the Lord himſelfe, who once had gathered them in vnder the wings of his protection? Hence therefore it follows, that if they had not been eſtranged from him, they had neuer fallen into ſo wretched a condition, as to be expoſed to the mercileſſe tyrannie of their enemies. But it ſhould ſeeme by this, that the gouernement of Princes is contrarie to that which God himselfe exerciseth; notwithstanding that they rule in his name: but the Prophet speaks not of these heere who beare rule for our good, but of such as are Idolaters, and enemies of the true doctrine. David himselfe was a King, hauing a diuers government from that which God exerciseth, yet so, that he was Gods minister notwithstanding for the common good and sauaiation of all the people that were committed to his charge; and likewise maintained the true Religion, which these tyrants desired whollie to ouerthrow. The like also did iustlie befall the Iewes, who had well deserued to be subdued vnder the crueltie of Infidels, seeing they refused to obey God who vied the so louingly.

But it is not amisse to note the close opposition which is heere put betweene Gods, and the faithfull Kings who gouerned the people vnder his name and authoritie; and those tyrants who at the last oppressed them vnder vniust laws. This will the better appeere by a like place out of Ezechiel, I haue (saith he) giuen them good lawes by the which they might liue: but because they haue not obserued my iudgements, and haue cast my statutes behind their backs; prophaning mine ordinances, and setting their eies towards the Idols of their fathers: therefore I also gaue the statutes which were not good, and iudgements in which they should not liue, Ezech. 20. 24. Now in regard they might haue professed and beene happie by Gods blessing in times past if they had yeilded their obedience to his word: therefore Ezechiel threatens them, that Tyrants shall rule ouer them, and in spite of their teeth shall cause them to submit themselues to their cruell edicts and lawes: yea and that without bringing any profit or reward at all vnto them.

Isaiah in this place bewales the like miserie: Oh (saith he) whilst the Lord reigned ouer vs we had much adoe to content our selues with our estate: but now we are constrained to beare a wofull seruitude; and therein are iustlie punished for our wickednes. The faithfull also which liue vnder the Papacie; or such as are forced to yeeld in any sort to wicked lawes and constitutions full of superstition, may well take vp the like complaint: for they are vnder such an authoritie as is against God: they are oppressed vnder more then a barbarous seruitude, which binds not the bodie only, but leads them to the slaying of their soules.

But we will remember thee only.] It seemes this particle should be opposed to the former thus, Albeit these prophane Lords would turne and withdraw vs from vnder thy gouernment, yet will we hold our selues fast vnto it, because we assuredly know our selues to belong to thee. But there may be gathered from hence a more ample doctrine, to wit, that although carnall reason is readie to say that such as are made a pray to their enemies, and cruellie vexed vnder their tyrannie, are forsaken of God: yet the Iewes cease not therefore still to reioyce in him; notwithstanding they saw him nothing neere vnto them: for the only remembrance of his name sustained them; and did sweetly feede and nourish their hope. Thus there is an opposition of great weight betweene the remembrance of Gods name, and the present feeling of his fauor: for it is a rare and singular grace of God constantlie to cleaue vnto him, when he seemes to be absent and farre off from vs.

Others translate, In thee, and in thy name: but here is no such coniunction. To let that passe therefore, this place affords vnto vs such consolation as is exceeding necessarie for our times, wherein the peruerse vnthankfulness of men by casting off the sweet yoke of God, haue drawne vpon themselves a grievous and cruell flauerie: neither are we to wonder if we see this tyrannie already exercised euen in many places where the name of God is called vpon. The faithfull, I say, must not therefore be discouraged; only let them rest their hopes vpon this consolation, to wit, God will neuer vtterlie forsake those whose whole ioy and delight consists in the remembrance of his name. Let them: not feare then, I say, at any hand to professe this their confidence before all men. What confidence? Truly that they had rather die ten times then once to recoile back from God, and so to darken his glorie. For whosoever he be that through feare giues place to men, let him know for a truth that he hath not as yet rightlie tasted how gracious the Lord is. Whilst we enioy the free vie of Gods word then, let vs diligentlie exercise our selues in it, that so we may arme our selues therewith against the time of need, to the end the world may know that we haue not studied it as in a drcame.

Verf. 14. *The dead shall not liue, *neither shall the dead arise, *because thou hast visited and scattered them, and destroyed all their memorie.

The Prophet comes againe to speake of the wofull end of the wicked, whose prosperous estate often disquiets and dismaies vs, as we may see in the 37. Psal. and in the 73. 17. That our eies then may not be dazeled in the beholding of present things, the Prophet threatens that their end shall be most wofull. Others expound this place of the faithfull, who seeme so to die in the eyes of the world, as if they should neuer rise againe: but it is very cleare that he here speakes of the wicked and reprobates, which will euidentlie appeere by the contrarie to this, which is added in the 19. verse. For we haue in this place an opposition betweene the resurrection of the good, and the bad, whose estates would be little differing one from another, vnlesse it should appeere that the one sort were iudged to eternal death, and the other to a blessed and an everlasting life. Nay the wicked are not simple condemned to eternal perdition, but all the iudgements of God which befall them in this life, are as it were the beginnings and scales vnto them of their endless torment, for they can not be relieued by any consolation at all. Why so?

A singular grace of God it is to cleaue fast vnto him whē he seems to forsake vs.

A Consolation offering our times.

Better to die often then once to revolt.

They that sin against conscience for feare of men, neuer yet tasted in truth how gracious the Lord is.

It is iust with God to make vs serue cruel Lords, when we will not yeeld willing obedience to his lawes.

The flauerie of such as are vnder the tyrannie of the Romane Antichrist.

Every iudgement that lights vpon a reprobate in this life, is a scale vnto him of his endless torment in the life to come.

fo? Because they inwardly ſeele that God is their enemy.

*Pſal. 88. 10.
Prou. 2. 18.
& 9. 18. &
21. 16.*

Whereas we haue translated ſlaine; others read it Giants; but ſeeing the word Rephaim, in many places of the Scriptures is taken for the ſlaine, it will agree beſt if wee take it ſo here; otherwiſe the oppoſition would not be fitting.

That which followes; For this cauſe haſt thou viſited them; is put here by way of expoſition: for he ſhewes why the reprobates periſh without hope of any reſtauration; to wit, becauſe God hath determined to caſt them away. Now what can they expect from Gods wrath which is inflamed againſt them, but death and perdition?

Verſ. 15. Thou haſt increaſed the nation, O Lord; thou haſt increaſed the nation: thou art made glorious: thou haſt enlarged all the coaſtes of the earth.

THis verſe is diuerſly expounded: for ſome think the Prophet ſhewes how the faithfull are not preſſed with one affliction alone, but are plunged ouer head and eares as it were in extreme miſeries, and yet can ſee no iſſue out of them. Others expound it more ſimply thus; O Lord, thou haſt enriched thy people with many benefits: and ſo they think that the Prophet mentions thoſe bliſſings which God beſtowed vpon his people diuers waies: as if he ſhould ſay; Thy people, Lord, haue felt by experience, how liberall thou art by the infinite benefits which thou haſt beſtowed vpon them. But when I conſider that which by and by followes, where hee ſaith, thou haſt enlarged; that is to ſay, thou haſt cauſed thy kingdome to ſpread, which was once ſhut vp within verie narrow bounds; I had rather ioyned theſe two things together; for ſo the latter member expounds the former; and that alſo which followes, to wit, that God ſhall be glorified, agrees very well. For wee know that Gods glorie ſhines in nothing more, then in the aduancement and enlargement of his Church.

Gods glory ſhines in nothing more, then in the enlargement of his Church.

It is as much then as if hee had ſaid; Lord, thou haſt in times paſt but a little handfull of people, but now thou haſt multiplied and increaſed them. For the Gentiles were adopted and ioyned to the Iewes, on condition that they both ſhould make but one people. And thus the Lord added an infinite number to them; for the children of Abraham were gathered out of all nations. We muſt therefore ſupply in this place an addition of a greater number, and not of benefits; in this ſenſe, Thou diſt not content thy ſelfe Lord, with that ſmall number which once thou diſt ioy: and therefore thou gatheredſt vnto thy ſelfe a people without number out of all the quarters of the world.

Now this belongs to Chriffs Kingdome, which was euey where eſtabliſhed by the preaching of the Goſpell: and the Prophet now extols and notes out Gods mercy touching this increaſing and multiplication by the word enlarged. I grant this phraſe ſtraight not much from our common manner of ſpeech, when wee vſe to ſpeake of the enlarging of a dominion, or of an inheritance: yet it is not the Prophets meaning to ſay, that the land ſhall become greater; but that it had larger bounds, and a more fixe habitauon by meanes of the mutual ſocietie of the inhabitants after the pure worſhip of God was publiſhed euey where: for the diſcords which were betwene the Iewes & Gentiles ſtraightened their dwellings, and made them leſſe free then otherwiſe they would haue been. Wee haue here then a promiſe touching the vocation of the Gentiles; which ought greatly to haue comforted the faithfull in their exile, and in that miſerable ſcattering and baniſhment from the Church: for how ſoever they ſaw themſelues wonderfully diminiſhed and weakened, yet they might without all peradventure, aſſure themſelues that they ſhould not onely increaſe to an infinite number; but that ſtrange nations alſo, and thoſe that were farre remote, ſhould be added vnto them.

A promiſe in this verſe, touching the vocation of the Gentiles.

Verſ. 16. Lord, in trouble they haue viſited thee: they poured out a prayer when thy chaſtizing was vpon them.

THIS may bee well expounded of thoſe hypocrits who neuer ſeeke vnto God, unleſſe they be conſtrained thereunto by miſeries and calamities. But ſeeing the Lord alſo inſtructs the faithfull by his rods and chaſtiſements, as the Prophet hath heretofore ſhewed: therefore I had rather referre theſe things ſimply vnto them. Firſt, to the end they may know that God is juſt in his iudgements. Secondly, that they might thereby learne to feare the Lord, and euey day to grow vp in it more and more. Thirdly, that they might feele that the bitterneſſe of the medicine is taken away by the fruite which they receiue from it.

Verſ. 8. 9. Three ends of afflictions.

3

Thus Iſaiab then ſpeakes here in the perſon of the Church; that ſo, when ſoever the faithfull ſhould read this ſentence, they might acknowledge that they were neuer vnto God in their afflictions, then when they abounded in all things which their hearts could wiſh; for then commonly we wax proud and forgetfull: ſuch is the ſtowardneſſe of our nature. Is it not needfull then that we ſhould be tamed & brought vnder by force of armes? This meditation is very profitable to correct the bitterneſſe of our troubles: for when we know what benefit redounds to vs by them, it makes vs leſſe to abhor them.

Iſaiab ſpeakes here in the perſon of the Church.

We are neuer God in afflictions, then when we inioy all that our hearts can wiſh.

The word Lachab, (which wee haue translated Prayer) ſignifies, To murmure. We are not to take this ſentence then for a well ſtamed praier; but for ſuch a one, as teſtiſieth that the heart is pent vp in great dolours, as thoſe who feele ſuch anguiſh, that they can ſcarcely open their teeth to vtter their perplexed thoughts. He therefore ſpeakes of ſuch a praier as is pure and far from all counterfeiting: for when Gods ſeruants are vnder heauie afflictions, they studie how to breathe out their sighes, as witnesses of their extreme griefes. In time of prosperitie, men can speake with open mouth; but in aduersitie, they are smitten downe, they dare not open their lips: shewing the conceptions of their hearts, rather with inward grones, then with words. Thence proceede those sighes which cannot be expressed, whereof S. Paul speakes, Rom. 8. 26. The Prophet then pronounceth this of the faithfull, to whom indeed this doctrine ought to be restrained: for albeit inward garboiles doe now and then force out groanes euen from the very reprobates; yet they are hardened more and more, and become so much the more fierce and obstinate.

Verf. 17. Like as a Woman With child, that draweth neere to the trauaile, is in sorrow, and crieth in her paines, so haue wee been in thy sight, O Lord.

18. Wee haue conceived, Wee haue borne in paine, as though wee should haue brought forth winde: there was no helpe in the earth; neither did the inhabitants of the world fall.

Two things are to be noted here principally. First, he compares the faithfull to women in trauaile; wherein their paines are vn-speakable, as it is well enough knowne. The afflictions of the faithfull therefore, he saith, causeth them to cast forth verie bitter and loud cries. Whence we gather, that the Prophet speakes not here onely of that sorrow which procedes from the suffering of outward griefes and discommodities; but rather respects those horrible vexations which sharpe wound, and with incredible vehemencie assailes the hearts and spirits of the godlie, when they feele that God is angrie with them, their consciences also checking them. No bodily paine therefore may be compared with the griefe of the Spirit, which is most liuely expressed by the particule before thee.

In the second place he goes further, and exceeds the meane which is in his similitude: for where paines haue no end, the condition of the faithfull is far worse then is the condition of women in trauaile. For being once deliuered from their sorrowes and griefes, they reioice in seeing the fruite which they haue brought forth; yea they forget all the paines which they indured: but hee saith here, that the faithfull are in cotinual trauaile. Why so? Because they still are assaulted with new pang and trauailes; and whē they thinke the birth is neere, then they bring forth nothing but sorrowes and anguish, which is expressed by the word wind: to wit, they saw no appearance of any deliuerance or ease of their sorrowes. For so he forthwith expounds himselfe when hee saith, that there was no helpe for them in the earth. That is to say, we see no succour at all.

He adds, that the inhabitants of the world did not fall: for the Hebrew word Naphal, signifies to fall. Some asseme, it signifies to dwell. It we take it in the latter signification, the sense will be; That the Iewes shall not dwell; that is, they shall not returne into their Country; the inhabitants which inioyed it, should not perish. But if we follow the common translation, this must be referred to the wicked on this wise; The inhabitants of the world oppresse vs, and yet they fall not. Why so? Because they haue more then heart can with. For when the wicked flourish, as Salomon saith, then Gods children must of necessitie sigh, and be like vnto women in trauaile with child.

Yet let vs not refuse euen this hard condition, if wee would haue any place in Gods Church. It is most certaine that the common lot of all men is to beare sundry and infinite calamities; and thence came the old prouerb; It were best of all neuer to haue been borne; or being borne, to die quickly. But we see that the faithfull are tited with extreme miseries, and exercised therewith about all others. For God meanes to try their faith, to the end they may serue him, hauing renouced their lusts, and the world also. Seeing the Lord then hath such a speciall care of them, he will chastise them; and in the meane while, will suffer the wicked to run riot into all disorder.

Hence also wee are admonished, that wee must not onely suffer one or two calamities, and so an end, lest we should think our selues discharged after wee haue indured some few assaults: for we must alwaies be prepared to meeete with new trials. When the Lord takes vp his children, he lets them not down forthwith. For we must be content euen then to bring forth the wind, whē we thinke the hour of deliuerance is come: our sorrowes shall still increase, and our throwes shall ouertake one another at euery turne. Wee must hold out with patience then in this combate, as long as God shall be pleased to exercise vs vnderneath it.

We will therefore follow the vsuall exposition, They fell not: for as the Lord now and then cheeres vp the hearts of his children, in manifesting vnto them the light of his countenance in their saluation, and in shewing vengeance vpon the wicked: so he also giues them with all occasion of mourning, by causing them to see their aduersaries euery way advanced into high place of rule and authority ouer them. And if the Lord hath so exercised his Church in former times, why should we thinke much if hee take the same course with vs now?

By the Inhabitants of the world, he meanes the prophane and vnbeleeuers: for he opposeth the rest of the world to the countrie of Iudea, which by way of excellencie he called the land, or the earth, verse 15. making mention of the Inhabitants thereof apart.

Verf. 19. Thy dead men shall liue: euen with my body shall they rise. Awake, and sing, ye that dwell in dust: for

Why God corrects his children, and lets the wicked in the meane while run riot.

Iſaiah ſtill continues to ſpeake of this Conſolation, and turnes his ſpeech vnto God: and thus he ſhewes that our beſt courſe is to bend all our ſenſes towards him, as oft as we are to reſiſt temptations. For wee ſhall find nothing more hurtfull vnto vs then to vter words at random, pleaſing our ſelues in them: for what doe we elſe but roule our ſelues hither and thither, and at the laſt plunge our ſelues into many errors? We can chufe no way therefore that is more faſe then to draw neere vnto God, who only is able to quiet our diſtreſſed conſciences: which if we doe not, we muſt of neceſſitie meeete with many encumbrances, which will ſhake our faith. Will you haue the ſumme of this verſe then? If God be the protector of his ſeruants, notwithstanding they be as good as dead, ſhall they not live euen in death it ſelfe, or rather ſhall they not haue power to riſe againe although they be altogether dead? Yes ſurely.

But it may here be demanded of what time the Prophet ſpeakes in this place, for many expound it of the laſt reſurrection. The Iewes referre it vnto Meſſiah and his kingdom: but they deceiue themſelues, becauſe they imagin that this was fulfilled at his firſt coming: our writers that are Chriſtians haue alſo miſſed the marke, who haue reſtrained it to the laſt Iudgement. For the Prophet comprehends the whole kingdom of Chriſt, euen from the beginning thereof vnto the latter end. Why ſo? Becauſe the hope of the bleſſed life alwaies overcomes the world, as we ſhall ſee anon. Now to the end we may the better vnderſtand the Prophets meaning, we muſt firſt know, that life is not promiſed generallie vnto all, but only to ſuch as die in the Lord: now he ſpeakes of the faithfull which ſo die, whom the Lord preſerues vnder his ſafeguard. We know that God is the God of the liuing, and not of the dead, Math.

22. 32. Are we the Lords? Doubtleſſe we ſhall live. But we muſt in the meane while become as thoſe that are dead, for our life is hidden, and as yet we can not ſee that which we hope for. Thus then he only ſpeakes of the dead; that is to ſay, of the condition of the faithfull which ſit now in the ſhadow of death, in regard of the many afflictions wherewith they are dayly viſited: whence we ſee that this can not be reſtrained to the laſt reſurrection. For we contrariwiſe aſſirme that the reprobates are dead, euen whileſt they live. Why? Becauſe they neuer taſted of Gods fatherlie loue in Chriſt, wherein the true life conſiſts, and therefore they periſh in their brutiſh ſortithnes. But becauſe the faithfull runne vnto God, therefore they obtaine life in the miſſed of their greateſt dangers, yea, euen in death it ſelfe: but in regard they ſet this laſt reſurrection before them as the end of their hope; therefore it can not be ſaid properlie that they live, til that day be come; that being then freed from all ſorrowes and corruption, they may receiue a ſure life that neuer decays. And therefore S. Paul very ſublie ſhewes that it were to turne the order of things vpside downe, if that the faithfull ſhould liue till ſuch time as Chriſt who is the fountaine of life appeeres. Therefore it is we ſaid before that Iſaiah here comprehends the whole kingdom of Chriſt: for albeit we begin to teele the fruits of this conſolation when we enter into the Church, yet we whollie enjoy not the full meaſure thereof, till the day of the reſurrection be come, wherein all things ſhall be perfectlie reſtored, in which reſpect it is alſo called the day of reſtauration, Act. 3. 21. Here then we ſee the only remedie to mitigate the bitterneſſe of all our grieſes, to wit, euen to turne our eies to the beholding of this day, in which God ſhall ſeparate the good from the bad.

As death then naturallie deuoures and deſtroyes all the race of Adam, ſo the miſeries to which they are ſubiect in this world are forerunners of the ſame death. Their life therefore is but a kind of death; but in regard that by the redemption wrought by Chriſt the curſe of God is taken away both in theſe beginnings of death, as alſo in death it ſelfe: therefore it is rightlie ſaid, That all thoſe that are grafted into Chriſtes bodie live, whileſt they die, becauſe all their euils are turned vnto their good, Rom. 8. 28. Whence it followes that they alwaies come forth as thoſe that are more then conquerors, euen out of the very iſues of death; and that till they be fullie and whollie knit vnto their head. Would wee then be eſteemed in the number of thoſe that are dead in Chriſt, of whoſe life he is the ſure gardian? We muſt then liſt vp the eies of our faith about the whole courſe of nature.

But this is yet better expreſſed by the word body, or carcaſe, as if he ſhould ſay, this old rottenneſſe which it ſeemes harh conſumed the bodies of the faithfull, ſhall hinder the Lord nothing at all to make them riſe vp in full beautie againe. As touching the proprietic of the Hebrue phraſe, ſome tranſlate it, With my bodie: others, Which are my bodie. Others againe, ſupplie a particle of ſimilitude, As my bodie: but in regard the ſenſe agrees well enough without adding or deminiſhing, lee vs content our ſelues with that which the words do plainely ſound of themſelues, and ſo had I rather take it by way of application.

At the leaſt this word is added of ſet purpoſe, ſo as the Prophet thereby ioines himſelfe to the whole bodie of the Church: and thus he placeth himſelfe in the number of thoſe which being dead in the Lord, do notwithstanding wait for a reſurrection apart. And in that he mentions himſelfe in particular, it is that he might giue the more authoritie vnto his doctrine. For he thereby ſhewes that he ſpake from the heart, vtering and teſtifying by this his confeſſion the fruit of his faith, according to that ſentence, I beleueed, therefore did I ſpeake, Pſal. 116. 10. 2. in their heart. As did that false Prophet Balaam, who knew well enough that that which he spake was true; and yet for all that received no profit by his prophecies himselfe: Num. 23. 19. and 24. 5.

But our Prophet speaks in this place far otherwise; for he professeth; that he is of their number who belonged to a better life: thus shewing that he willingly vnderwent the sorrows and calamities which God laid upon him for the furtherance of his mortification; as one indeed that chose rather to suffer afflictions with the people of God, then to enjoy the pleasures of sinne for a season. Now thus he makes it cleere to all the world, that he speaks nothere of things which he knew not, or of that which he felt not; but of those things which he learned by experience. Yea, hee shewes hereby, that his confidence was so great, that he willingly ranged himselfe among a company of dead bodies, which yet should (as he beleued) be restored to life, chusing rather to be accounted a rotten carcase, knowing himselfe to be a member of the Church, then to be in his full strength out of the same. And this doubtlesse caused his doctrine to be so much the more effectuell: for he opposeth it to the former sentence, verse 14. in which hee said, that the wicked should not liue; because all hope of (a ioyfull resurrection) was taken away from them.

Obiect.

Ans.

If any object that the resurrection shall be common as well to good as to bad; it is easilie answered: for Isaiab speaks not here onely of the resurrection; but of that felicitie which the faithfull shall enjoy. I grant the wicked shall rise, but it is to eternall perdition: their resurrection therefore shall be to their ruine and death; whereas it shall bring happiness and glory to the iust.

He calles the inhabitants of the dust, the faithfull, who are humbled vnder crosses and afflictions, who in life haue death continually before their eyes. Yet I deny not but they also enjoy the benefits of God euen in this life: but by this similitude the Prophet sets out their miserable condition, as those that beare in their bodies the dying of the Lord Iesus: 2. Cor. 4. 10. For it is needfull that their outward man should be beaten downe and mortified, till at the last it be brought to nothing, that so the inward man may be renewed daily: 2. Cor. 4. 16. If we meane then to haue any part or portion in this consolation, let vs willingly content our selues to lie downe in the dust.

For this cause hee commands the dead to arise and sing; which may seeme to be very vsfitting for men in their case, there being nothing among them but a sorrowfull silence. In this therefore the Prophet shewes an apparent difference betweene the elect of God, who arise by an heavenly power, albeit they be as good as rotten in their graues, and lie buried in the dust; and the reprobates: for they being separated from God and Christ, the fountaine of life, wither away, whilest they liue, that so death may vtterly deuoure them.

Now in that he promiseth to giue them the deaw of the meddow; hee thereby intriceth his doctrine with a verie elegant and fit similitude: for we all know that the flowers do fade and die in winter, but especially in meddowes, for they seeme to be altogether dead, neither can a man be perswaded to the contrary, that shall onely behold the vpper face of the earth; but the rootes notwithstanding lie hid vnderneath, which after they haue sucked in the deaw of the spring time, doe againe gather strength and life: so as the flowers which before were withered away and dried, doe then become fresh and green.

Thus the people shall gather new force after they shall be reuiued and watered with this fruitfull deaw of Gods grace, although for a time it seemed they were wholly withered and gone. Sure these similitudes which are drawne from such things as are familiarly knowne amongst vs, haue great force in them to worke vpon our affections. For if flowers or grasse, which are wet with the deaw that falls vpon them, doe sprout forth, and wax greene; how much more shall we be reuiued if we be watered with the quickening deawes of Gods grace? Why should not our bodies receiue new liuelinesse, albeit they were rotten before? Hath not God as much care ouer vs, as he hath ouer the herbs? Is not the holy Spirit of greater force then the deaw? Saint Paul I remember vseth the like similitude, 1. Cor. 15. 38. where hee speaks of the resurrection: but in regard he applies his metaphor to another purpose, I thinke it not amisse to let it passe for this time; because I would not willingly confound that place with this. Let it suffice vs that we haue attained the true meaning of the Prophet.

Note.

In the end of the verse where I haue translated, The earth shall cast forth her dead: some translate it in the second person; Thou shalt bring downe the land of Giants: or, Thou wilt bring downe the Giants in the earth. I reiect not this interpretation, because the words may well beare this signification: but as I take it, the first seemes to agree best to the text, although the matter be not much materiall, in regard of the substance. For this must be referred to the consolation which we mentioned a litle before.

Verf. 20. Come my people; enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doores after thee: hide thy selfe for a very litle while, vntill the indignation passe ouer.

IN this verse hee exhorts the children of God vnto patience, that they might continue to beare their miseries and afflictions quietly, as also to remaine inuincible against all the sharpe temptations, which as it seemed should ouerwhelme them. There was great need of this exhortation therefore: for the pitifull case into which the poore people were soone after brought, seemed in all outward appearance to be farre off from the promise which was formerly made vnto them. The Prophet then like a tender hearted nurse, takes this troubled people by the hand as it were, who otherwise knew not what shift to make, and carries them aside into a ſecret place to lodge them in ſafety, till theſe ſtirres and hurly burlies were appeaſed. Now whereas he calles them my people, he ſpeakes in the perſon of God, and not in his owne.

By chambers, he meanes a quiet and peaceable ſtate of conſcience: to wit, when with boldneſſe of courage and confidence, we arme our ſelves with patience, in waiting for the coming of the Lord: as Abacuc, who having foretold what calamitie ſhould befall the Iewes, proceſſeth that hee ſtands all day vpon his watch-tower: that is to ſay, in a place of ſafety, to expect the euent in patience and ſilence. Iſaiah commands them to doe the like here: as if he ſhould ſay; You that are the ſeruants of the Lord, get you into your chambers, or into ſome other ſequeſtered place, when you feele your ſelves aſſaulted with ſuch temptations as you are not able to reſiſt.

But for as much as it is not ſufficient to be once well fortified againſt the violence of garboiles and ſtirres, he therefore alſo commands them to ſhut the doore after them; which is to be referred to conſtance and perſeuerance: as if he ſhould ſay; Looke to it that the diuell finde not the leaſt creuiſe open to aſſaile you: for hee can eaſily enter into our hearts, if we giue him but the leaſt aduantage that is.

Whereas he bids them to hide themſelues; his meaning is, that the faithfull ſhould inioy a ſecure freedom, if ſo be they were couragious in waiting for the coming of the Lord: for albeit we ought to fight boldly and valiantly, yet ſeeing the power of God is often manifeſted in our weakneſſe, wee cannot poſſibly take a better courſe, then in all humilitie to run and throwd our ſelves vnder his wings, that ſo hee may ſaue vs from all inordinate feares and terrors. Furthermore, in regard that wee are giuen to boiling paſſions naturally, and are euer and anon carried away with impatency, if we feele not Gods help at hand to ſuccour vs preſently: therefore hee ſaith, that theſe ſtormes and tempeſts ſhall blow over, and continue but a while. We muſt make account to fight euery day againſt one temptation or other; neither muſt wee thinke to come to the end thereof as long as we liue: and this is it that makes our miſeries ſeeme ſo wonderfull long and tedious vnto vs. But if we compare them with that eternitie wherein we ſhall inioy happineſſe without end; the meditation thereof will cauſe them to ſeeme but as a moment. As Saint Paul in a certaine place ſhewes, that the light afflictions which for a ſhort ſpace wee ſuffer in this world, are no way to be compared vnto that eternal weight of glory which ſhall be reuealed in the world to come: 2. Cor. 4.7.

When the Prophet addes, untill the indignation be paſt. he meant thereby to remoue all difficulties out of the minds of the faithfull: and it is no leſſe then if hee had promiſed them deliuerance out of hand. Wee thinke this word indignation, ſimply conſidered in it ſelfe, ſignifies that affliction which proceeds from the wrath of God. Others referre it vnto the enemies of the Church; which ſenſe though I reiect not, yet the firſt likes me better. For wee ſee how careful the Prophets are to inſinuate into our minds, that no euill befall vs, but by the hand of God, and that he neuer ſends the ſame without cauſe, but is firſt prouoked thereunto by our finnes and offences. Hence we learne that God will not be angry with his Church for euer, but will cauſe his wrath to ceaſe at the laſt, euen as we ſee it to fall out in ſtormes and tempeſts: and this is the cauſe why the faithfull beare their croſſes with the greater courage. For thus the Church ſaith, Mich. 7.9. I will beare the wrath of the Lord, becauſe I haue ſinned againſt him, &c. Why ſo? She knew well that God meant her good in chaſtiſing of her. Now our Prophet brings in the Lord ſpeaking, (as I touched before) to the end his exhortation might haue the better authority.

Verſ. 21. For behold the Lord cometh out of his place to viſit the iniquitie of the inhabitants of the earth againſt him: and the earth ſhall diſcouer her blood, and ſhall not hide her ſtaine.

NO doubt but it is an heauie temptation to the faithfull, when they ſee the wicked exerciſe their rage againſt them, and in the meane while, that God ſhould hold his peace: for in ſo doing, they imagine he hath forſaken them. The Prophet then labours to preuent this temptation, and ſhewes, that howſoeuer the Lord hath been ſilent for a while, yet hee will in the end ſhew himſelfe in due ſeaſon, to giue reliefe to his ſeruants, and to puniſh the wrongs that haue been done him. Thus by the word of comming forth, he deſcribes the Lord reaching out his hand as it were to his children: as if the ſame had been hidden before, in regard they felt not his helpe. For that is the cauſe why he ſaith, the Lord comes forth into ſight; namely, to ſuccor his Church, and to execute his iudgements vpon her enemies: for in former time it ſeemed he had kept himſelfe cloſe and altogether ſhut vp in heauen. We may alſo verie well affirme, that Iſaiah alludes to the ſanctuary; which maner of ſpeech is often met withall in the bookes of the Prophets. As if he ſhould ſay; Howſoeuer the prophane nations deſpiſe the Arke of the couenant, being ſeated in a very meane place; yet from thence ſhall the faithfull feele by good experience, how readie the power and fauour of God is preſt to ſuccour them, and that hee is not called vpon in this holy place in vaine. In the meane while, wee muſt hold this as a ſure principle; that albeit the wicked ſcorne the Temple, as if it were no better then ſome Country barne, or ſome ſuch like thing; yet euen from thence will the Lord come forth, when he sees the time fit to defend and to auenge his peoples quarell vpon all the inhabitants of the world.

And this exposition sutes better then if by the word place, we should expound that he should come forth of heauen; for Isaiab meant to expresse somewhat more. The Prophets whē they make any mention of heauen they therewithall present before vs the glorie and maiestie of God: but our Prophet in this place respects our capacitie, that is to say, when we feele that God who in times past seemed to be farre off, and hidden out of our sight, doth at the last appeere for our comfort. He also hath vsed a particule demonstratiue, and a participle of the present tence for the greater certentie of the matter; as also to the end the faithfull might not thinke much to bridle their passions by patience till his coming forth.

Hitherunto appertaines that which he ads touching the visiting of iniquitie: for it were contrarie to his nature who is the Iudge of all the world to suffer wicked men to giue ouer themselves to all wickednes without impunitie. There is in the verb, to visit, a similitude well enough knowne: for we thinke that God either sees not at all, or else is busied about some other matters when he withholdes or deserres the execution of his iudgements be it neuer so little a while.

These words also, against him, want not their weight: for it is often said that when the wicked lay their ambushes they spread a net or dig a pit for themselves. The sense then is, that all the annoyances & oppressions which the wicked bring vpon the Church, shall in time fall vpon their heads that haue been the contriuers thereof.

*Psal. 9. 15.

Lastly, there is also a very great vehemencie in the word, shall disclose: for now whilst the wicked shed and tread vnder foot innocent blood, the earth seemes as it were to suck and drinke it into her womb: in the meane while it seemes the death of the faithfull is quite and cleane forgotten, and the memorie thereof raced out of mens minds for euer; yea, and y God himselfe vtterlie neglects it. These are mens imaginations, but the Lord witnesseth the contrarie here. He calles the blood of the earth then, which the earth hath drunke in, as it is said Gen. 4. 11. The earth hath opened her mouth to receiue thy brothers blood, when the blood of Abel was shed. For the Lord in that place amplifies and aggravates the foulness of the fact when he saith, That the earth is defiled with y blood which was shed: and therefore he therein shewes, first, how pretious the death of his Saints is in his sight: secondly, what care he hath of the same; and lastly, that he will reuenge it. For the earth it selfe shall be armed to punish the cruelties which haue been exercised by tyrants and the enemies of the truth against the faithfull: so that there is not the least drop of blood which is shed that shall not be accounted for. Let vs therefore remember this consolation, and set it alwaies before our eyes when the wicked smite vs, laughing and sporting themselves whilst they vex vs with all manner of outrages. For God in the end will shew that innocent blood hath not cried in vaine, because he can neuer forget his Saints.

A Consolation which we ought to haue continually before our eyes.

THE XXVII. CHAPTER.

Verf. 1. In that day the Lord will visit Leuiathan that pearcing Serpent, and Leuiathan that crooked Serpent, with his fore and great and mightie sword: and will kill the Dragon that is in the sea.

HE Prophet speaks here of Gods iudgement in generall, and so comprehends the whole kingdom of Satan. For hauing spoken before of the vengeance of God against tyrants and vnbeleeuers which had shed innocent blood, he now passeth on further, and publisheth the edict it selfe. The word Leuiathan is diuerslie expounded, but generallie it signifies a serpent, or the whales and fishes of the sea, which are as mōsters in regard of their excessiue greatness. Now howsoeuer this description agrees to the king of Egypt, yet vnder this one kind he meant to comprehend all the enemies of the Church.

For mine owne part I make no question but by way of Allegorie he speaks here of Satan and his whole kingdome, describing it vnder the figure of some monstrous beast, and therewithall also priuicly taxeth the subtilties wherewith he couers his deceitfull baits. And thus he meant to preuent many doubts wherewith (as with mightie billowes) we are at euery turne tossed to and fro, whilst God on the one side promiseth to assist vs, and yet Satan on the other side ceaseth not to make vs feele the force of his darts and craftie concuyances: for his cunning is exceeding great to worke mischief, and his wrath is wonderfull hot against the poore Saints of God.

But in the meane while the Prophet shewes that neither his force nor fraude shall be able to let the Lord from destroying both him and his kingdome. Furthermore, it is not to be doubted but as he here speaks of Satan himselfe, so likewise of all his imps and instruments by whom he governs his kingdome, and molests the Church of God. Let it be granted that this kingdome be furnished with infinite policies, and also with an inuincible power, yet shall the Lord casily bring them all ro nough.

Which that we may the better conceiue, the Prophet opposeth against them the mightie and sharp sword of the Lord, by which it will be no matter for him to slay his enemy how strong or subtile soeuer he be. We are to make account then that we shall euer have to deale against Satan, who like a roaring Lion seeks about whom he may deuoure: and the world on the other side being like a Sea in which we are floting vp and downe, wherein euery moment diuers monsters assaile vs, endeavouring to sink our ship, and to cast vs away: neither is there any force left vs, by which we may resist them, vnlesse the Lord be our helpe. And therefore by this description the Prophet meant to set before vs the dangerous estate in which we stand; seeing we haue (on euery side) so many strong and furious enemies, being also full of fraud. In regard whereof, wee should be put to our thifts, and vttely vndone, if God prevented them not by opposing his inuincible power against them for our defence. For this wretched Kingdome of Satan can neuer bee destroyed, but by the sword of the Lord.

Nothing but Gods sword is able to subdue Satans kingdome.

But wee are to obserue what he saith in the beginning of the verse; to wit, In that day. For thereby he meanes, that God permits Satan to vphold and continue his Kingdome for a time; but so, that it shall downe in the end; as Saint Paul saith, Rom 16, 20. The Lord will shortly tread downe Satan vnder your fete. And thus by this promise wee see, that the time of our warfare is not yet accomplished, but that we must fight valiantly till this enemy be wholly subdued: who yet will neuer cease to assaile vs as long as we liue, albeit he hath bin put to the worst an hundred times. Let vs arme our selues then to wage battell with him continually, and to beare off the violent blowes, wherewith hee will try whether our armour be of prooffe or no: but that we may not be discouraged, let vs alwaies cast the eye of our faith to that day, in which all his forces shall be dashed in peeces.

Our warfare is not yet accomplished.

The epithites wherewith he sets out this Lemathan in part, notes his cunning and subtle policies; also in part his open crueltie: and thus he lets vs see that his strength is vnable to be matched or ouercome. For the word Beriach, signifies a bolt or stake of yron: vnder which the Prophet by a figure meant to note out a piercing power, either in regard of the venomous biting, or the violence of Satan. The second is drawne from the verbe Akal, which signifies to ouerthrow, and is to be referred to his ouerthwart and crooked bowings and turnings.

Verf. 2. In that day sing of the vineyard of red wine.*

*Or, to the red vine.

Now he shewes that all this shall be done for the saluation of the Church. Why so? Because the Lord prouides for the safetie of all such as he hath once vouchsafed to receiue vnder his protection. That the Church then may inioy a sure estate, Satan with all his retinue shall be brought to nought. And hitherto tend all the administrations of Gods vengeance vpon his enemies; namely, to shew that hee hath care of his Church. Now albeit the Prophet expresth not the word Church in this place; yet it is eident enough, that it is she to whose heart the Lord speaks on this gracious manner. Nay this figuratiue manner of speech hath greater emphassis in it, then if he had in plaine words called them the people of Israel: for in as much as the excellencie of a vine, consisteth chiefly in the placing and planting of it, and also depends vpon the continuall dressing of it: if the Church be Gods vine, we thence gather, that she cannot flourish, but by the continuall course of his daily fauour and blessing vpon her. By this similitude, hee also excellēt what singular loue and affection the Lord beares vnto her, as we haue more fully declared in the fifth Chapter.

This word Vine, hath great emphasis in this place.

Now he calles it a red vine: that is to say, very excellent. For red wine in the Scriptures, signifies excellencie, if wee consider other places thereof well. Now he saith, that this song shall be sung in that day, in regard that for a time the Church should bee miserably wasted; so as it should become like vnto a desert, or a place vntilled. But therewithall hee foretels that after this waste, she shall be restored, and filled with such plentie of excellent fruit, that she shall haue ample occasion to sing for ioy.

Verf. 3. I the Lord doe keepe it: I will water it euerie moment: lest a- nie assaile, I will keepe it night and day.*

*Or, I am the Lord that keeps it.

In this verse the Lord shewes what care he hath for this vine, and what diligence hee vseth in dressing and keeping of it. As if he should say; I omit no care nor paines that belongs to a good master of a familie, who proudly prouides all things fit for his household in due season. Now hee not onely shewes what hee will doe when the time of ioy and gladnesse shall come; but he also tels what benefits the Iewes had receiued from his hands before, that so they might be put in the better hope for the time to come. But in the mean while, we must supply a close opposition here, of the time which is betwene these two: for God seemed vterly to neglect his Church, and that in such wise, as it became like a desert. And hence it was that the vineyard of the Lord was so spoiled and wasted, to wit, because the Lord left it for a time, and gaue it vp as a pray into his enemies hands. Whence we gather, that our welfare will soone decay, if the Lord doe neuer so little withdraw himselfe from vs: as on the contrary, that all shall goe well with vs, as long as hee assists vs.

Our welfare soone decayeth, if God doe but a little withdraw his hand.

Now he mentions two points wherein the Lord will shew his diligence; to wit, hee will water his vine continually, and will also inclose and watch it, that it be not ouerrunne by theeues or wild beasts, but may be preserved from all discommodities. These two things are chiefly to be looked vnto for the good conseruation of a vine; to wit, that it be well husbanded, and well fenced. By watering of it, he comprehends whatsoeuer belongs to the dressing and manuring of it: wherewith

he

he promiseth to leaue no dutie vnperformed wherety the good thereof may be procured. But vnto this, vigilancie must needs be added: for what would it auaile to husband a vine with great labour, if afterward it should be left open for cheecues and beasts to enter in and spoile it at their pleasures? The Lord promiseth therefore that he will likewise keepe vs, that no hurt be done vnto it, but that the fruites may haue time to ripen; and may afterward be reaped in their season. Howsoeuer this poore vine be subiect then to many inconueniencies by reason of enemies and cruell beasts which will still be assailing of it with great furie, yet God promiseth that he will interpose himselfe for her defence, so as it shall be kept safe and sound from all dangers. Now seeing he hath appointed a certaine day in which we shall sing this song, let not our hearts quaile if for a time he withdraw his help from vs. Be it that he leaues vs to be spoiled and vexed for a little while, yet will he let vs see in the end that he hath not forgotten vs.

God will neuer cease to supplie his Church with necessarie benefits.

Verf. 2.

Verf. 4. Anger is not in me. Who would set the briars and thornes against me in battell? I would goe thorow them, I would burne them together.

THIS verse contains a most sweet consolation in it. For the Prophet therein shewes the incredible loue which God beares to his people; albeit they be of a peruerse and wicked spirit. God takes vpon him heere then (as we shall see anon) the person of a Iouing father greatly offended, who is angrie with his sonne, yet so, that he must needs shew how much he is inclined to pitie and compassion, because y^e ardent loue he beares to his sonne ouercomes all his displeasure. In a word, he shewes that God can not so hate his chosen, but that he therewithall will make them feele his fatherlie loue towards them, euen in the middell of his corrections wherewith he visits them. The Scripture is wont to set forth God vnto vs many waies: for sometime it sets him before vs as one whose wrath is kindled, and as one terrible to behold; againe, in other places, shewing nothing but mercie and loue. Now why is he set forth thus diuerslie? Surely because wee are not capable of his goodnes. For this cause he is faine to shew himselfe froward with such as are froward; and pure with the pure, as Dauid shewes, Psal. 18. 26. For he manifesteth himselfe in such wise vnto vs, as we giue him occasion. And if he shew himselfe seuerer at any time, we may thanke the hardnes of our owne hearts for it.

But the Prophet speaks not here of all indifferntlie, but of the Church only, to whom he will euer be a father, notwithstanding that he chastise and correct her for her sinnes and iniquities. His Church shall continue safe then, howsoeuer she be vnworthie of such a benefit. This sentence therefore must be restrained to the Church, that so there may be a relation alwaies had betweene God and his elect: whom he can not but dearly loue, although his anger be seuerer against the reprobate. Thus we see the excellencie of this Consolation: for if we be sure that we are the called of God, we may boldly resolute that he can not be angrie with vs; and to speake properly, it is impossible. Why so? Because he loues vs with such a constant affection, as he can neuer lose it. I denie not but God at that time hated some euen among this people, and yet he calles them his beloved, because of his secret adoption. Now by how much the more God shewed himselfe good and gracious towards the people, by so much the more were they all left without excuse that had provoked his wrath against them by their rebellions; Neither need we doubt but he aggravates their fault by this circumstance, to wit, that he is enforced to change his wonted affection towards them in regard of their frowardnes. For hauing spoken of his mildnes, he suddenly cries out, Who would set the briars and thornes against me in battell? Or (as others translate) who will make me like the briar and the thorne? Now it were not amisse to reade it, Who will set the briar against me, that I may fight as the thorne against it. For there is no coniunction copulative betweene these two words. But I unwillingly content my selfe with the first exposition, to wit, that God willeth he might haue to do with thornes and briars, which he would quicklie consume with the fire of his indignation. But if any had rather say that the Prophet here taxeth the doubts which often troubles vs by reason of our owne infidelitie, when we feele the anger of God to be kindled against vs; as if he should say, You much deceiue your selues in that you compare me to a thorne and a briar; that is to say, in attributing a cruell or froward disposition of nature vnto me: if any (I say) shall thus interpret it, I hinder him not to follow the same: and yet I suppose it to be besides the Prophets meaning. Whereas others also thinke that God here puts vpon him the person of one that is angrie, as if he should say, I will no longer be so milde nor easie to be intreated as I haue been heretofore: this also seemes so constrained that it needs no further refutation. I grant, that as God is gracious and mercifull by nature, so nothing goes more against the same then roughnes and seueritie; as one that is constrained to borrow another nature (as it were) from others, when he would shew himselfe angrie. But if the text be read as I haue first interpreted it, I doubt not but it will be sufficient of it selfe to refute the rest, to wit, that God takes vp a heauie complaint that he is not to fight rather with thornes, then against his vine, which he is therefore constrained to spare, because it is his inheritance.

That which follows after, I will goe by steps thorow them, and burne them doth also confirme mine exposition: for burning belongs to thornes and briars; all which the Lord would burne euen as if he made war against them: and therefore he shewes, that he will carrie himselfe more moderately, because hee hath to doe with his vine. Hence we gather, that if the Lord be not angry with vs, wee are not to attribute it to our owne merits or deſerts, but to his owne free election. For in ſaying, who would ſee him, he apparently ſhewes, that he hath juſt cauſe to make war vpon vs, and vtterly to confine vs; were it not for the compaſſion he hath to his Church. And we ſhould alſo be like to thornes and vnbeleeuers, ynleſſe the Lord in his mercy, did vouchſafe to ſeparate vs from amongſt them, leſt wee ſhould periſh with them. If any would ioyne theſe two words, in baſtill, with theſe words, who would ſee the ſenſe alſo would not be amiſſe.

Verſ. 5. Or Will he feele my ſtrength, that he may make peace with me, and be at one with me?

*Or, let him make peace with me, let him make peace with me.

The Hebrew particle is often diſjunctiue; and therefore this place is expounded as if it had been ſaid; Either let her feele my ſtrength, or let her make peace with me: that is to ſay, if ſhe make not peace with me, then ſhall ſhe feele my ſtrength, to her great liſſe. Others expound it a little otherwiſe; Who will feele my ſtrength? that is to ſay, who will repreſſe us? But I leaue this interpretation, becauſe it ſeemes too much conſtrained; contenting my ſelfe with that which is moſt receiued. The expoſitours thinke then that God threatens the Iewes, as one that aſſaies all meanes to bring them home into the right way: for God muſt worke vpon vs many waies, in reſpect wee are ſo accuſtomed to abuſe his patience and goodneſſe. And therefore he often teſtifies, that hee will bring vpon vs the puniſhment of our ingratitude; which it ſeemes Iſaiah doth in this place: as if he ſhould ſay; If this people will not accept of my kindeſſe, and repent, and ſo make peace with mee, I aſſure them they ſhall feele the waight of my hand, which hitherunto I haue withholden from them. There may another apt ſenſe be alſo gathered hence, and yet ſomewhat differing from this. As if the Lord ſhould exhort the people to acknowledge his power, by which they might be brought to ſecke peace with him: for whence proceeds that brutiſh confidence, that wee feare not the anger of God, but becauſe we reuerence not his power as we ought to doe?

Yet had I rather take it here by way of interrogation; which kind of reading we often times meeete with all; as thus: Will hee feele my force that hee may make peace with me? as if a father being in ſome perplexitie and care for the good of his ſonne, ſhould take vp a ſorrowfull complaint on this manner; Will not this vntoward boy indure that I ſhould doe him good? I am at my wits end, I know not how to deale with him; he will abide no rough handling: and yet he abuſeth my lenitie. What ſhall I doe? Surely I will turne him out of doores, if I ſee no amendment: and then I thinke hee will feele how great the power of a father is, whereby I haue hitherto maintained him. For ſeeing he cannot beare kind vſage, I will try what ſeueritie will worke. Will hee not at length acknowledge what mine authoritie is ouer him, and ſecke to bee at one with me? Now wee ſhall the better vnderſtand this, if wee conſider that all our euils ariſe from the want of being touched with the feeling of Gods goodneſſe: for could it once come into our mindes how many benefices wee haue receiued from his hands, it would ſuffice to withdraw vs from all our bad courſes, and wee would forthwith ſecke to bee reconciled vnto him.

Our miſeries

goodneſſe.

We may behold here then, how careful our heavenly Father is for our ſaluation, as one that would make vs feele both his power and goodneſſe; that ſo perceiuing the worth of them both, we might partake in the fruits of both more and more. In a word, he would be as familiar with vs, as with his children, if our owne wilfull malice did not hinder him. Seeing then we wil not indure that he ſhould deale graciouſly with vs; muſt hee not needes manifeſt his power and greatneſſe, that we being humbled by the ſame, and touched to the quicke with his iudgements, we may with all meekeneſſe ſecke vnto him, and gladly ſue for pardon and fauour at his hands? now this is brought to paſſe when we conuert vnto him without ſinning: for it cannot be that we ſhould finde fauour in his ſight, as long as wee pleaſe and flatter our ſelues in our vices. On the other ſide, if wee make peace with him, then muſt wee make full account to bee at enmitie with Satan and ſinne.

But the doubling of the words giues vs moſt cleerely to perceiue, how deſirous the Lord is to be at one with vs. for hee might haue ſaid in a word, that hee is willing to make peace with vs, and readie to forgue. When then he doubles it twice, Let him make peace with me, I ſay, let him make peace with mee: he therein expreſſeth with what a willing and readie mind, yea and with what feruent deſire hee haſtens to abolith all our iniquities.

Verſ. 6. Hereafter Iacob ſhall take roots, Iſrael ſhall flouriſh and growe, and the world ſhall be filled with fruit.

Now hee ſhewes by the effects, what this loue is whereof he ſpake in the former verſes. For the better vnderſtanding whereof, wee muſt conſider the eſtate of this ancient people which was Gods heritage; not by their deſerts, but by the benefit of the free adoption. The Lord had juſt cauſe to bee angry with them, ſo farre forth as to caſt them wholly out of his ſight, and to roote them cleane out. But hee reſtrained his anger, becauſe hee had to doe with his vine and inheritance. For his onely meaning was, that the people ſhould acknowledge their fault, and by that meanes returne into fauour with him. And this is the cauſe why hee addes this promiſe to the former, leſt the people ſhould deſpaire, by being ouermuch feared with this power of God, from which theſe rods and chaſtiſements were threatened

Verſ. 2, 3.

Simile.

It is an easie matter to slip into despaire by the sight of Gods iudgements, vnlesse some hope of mercie be left vs.

to proceed. For it is easie to slip into despaire by the sense of Gods iudgement, if there be not some hope left vs of mercie.

Therefore he saith, that Iacob shall saue roote againe: as if he should say, I haue in deed wasted my Church, and brought her almost to nothing, yet shall she reouer her first flourishing estate, to as the shall fill the whole world; for she shall increase more and more after she is recieued vnto me. Now this similitude which is drawne from taking roote, is very elegant, because we are as good as plucked vp by the rootes whilest God is angrie with vs, for then we are as good as dead and vterlicke cut off: but how soeuer the Lord afflictis his Church, yet he neuer suffers the rootes to die: true it is they lie hid, but yet in time they shall reuiue and bring forth fruit.

Whereas he saith the world shall be filled with the fruit of these rootes; that was accomplished at the coming of Christ, who gathered and multiplied the people of God by his Gospell: for then Israel and the Gentiles were vnited into one bodie, and so the difference was taken away which was betweene them in former time. Now we are not ignorant that the Gospell, and the whole fruit which it brought forth, proceeded first from the Iewes.

Verf. 7. Hath he smitten him as he smote those that smote him? or is he slaine according to the slaughter of those that were slaine by him?

HE confirms the former sentence, to wit, that they might see sure and euident signes of Gods loue and goodness enen in his chastisements: for he is wont so to correct his people that whilest he beates the downe with his left hand, he susteins them with his right. This verse is diuerslie expounded: some interpret it thus, Haue I smitten Israel, as his enemies haue smitten him? The Assyrians shewed them no mercie, but vexed them with all rigor, but I haue moderated my wrath, and haue not smitten them for their ruine: whereby I haue well shewed that I was not their enemie. And yet me thinks the other exposition pleaseth me better, which also is the most receiued, to wit, that a difference is here put betweene the faithfull and the wicked: for the Lord punisheth them both indifferently; but yet after a diuers maner. For in punishing the reprobate he giues way to his anger, because he meanes to root them out in regard they are vessels of his wrath ordeined to destruction, as those that haue no taste nor feeling at all of his goodnes: but when he corrects his children, he moderates his anger, and aims at a contrarie marke, for he thereby meanes to worke their amendment, and to draw them to himselfe, that so in the end they may haue a better & a more permanent estate.

But may some man say, Wherefore doth the Prophet vse a relatione here, saying, of him which smote him. I answer, it is because the Lord often vseth the wicked as his instrumēt to correct his chosen, and that for their greater humbling. For no doubt it is a very great triall the Lord puts vs vnto, when he suffers vs to be oppressed vnder the tyrannie of the wicked: for we doubt sometimes as if he tooke part with them against vs, or as if he hated vs, and meant to disappoint vs of his succor. For the preuenting of this doubt, he saith, It is true, that now and then he permits the wicked to afflict his people, and to worke their wills vpon them for a time, but in the end they themselues with their impietie shall be punished much more sharplie then they haue punished the faithfull. Notwithstanding if any had rather follow the first exposition, I leaue it to his choice, namely, that the Lord will not deal with vs as with his enemies. Thence came that sentence, It is better to fall into the hands of God, then into the hands of men: for the Lord can neuer forget his couenant; wherein he hath giuen his word to vse his Church with all louing and fatherly affection.

*Verf. 8. In measure in the branches thereof wilt thou contend with it, * When he bloweth with his rough wind in the day of the east winde.*

* or, although he shall blow.

THIS is the second prooue of Gods mercie towards his elect; whom he iudgeth with the world, lest they should be condemned with the world: for whilest he smites them, he so moderates his blowes, that he still hath an eye to their weaknes; so as he will neuer correct them beyond measure. As touching the word measure, all the expositors conclude that it signifies moderation: for otherwise wee were neuer able to beare Gods hand; but should be ouerwhelmed forthwith: but he holds an euen hand, and is also faithfull, as S. Paul saith, and wil not suffer vs to be tempted about that we are able to beare, 1. Cor. 10. 13. And thus Ieremias desires the Lord to correct him in iudgement, that is to say, in measure, that so the blowes might be proportionable to his infirmities. But the expositors agree not in y interpretation of these words, in the branches: for some translate, In setting one of them against another by ciuill warres: Others, that God will reuenge their wickedness by that sword which themselues haue drawne out and put into his hand. But I passe by both these expostions, because I can not approue of them: that interpretation which I take to be the most probable is theirs, who expōūd, In his birds, that is to say, In his plāts, signifying, that the Lord will not only curse their goods, but their persons also. For we know that Gods chastisements are of diuers kinds: the lightest are those whereby he depriues vs of outward things, which are commonlie termed the goods of fortune. His meaning is then, that God will so chastise the faithfull, as he will not only touch them in their persons, but he will also deprive them of ordinarie sodde, to wit, of wheate, wine, oyle, and other like commodities which the earth brings forth: for the verb Sbalach (wher-of this word bud comes) ſignifies to bring forth, ſprout, or bud.

But I haue another expoſition which comes neerer the Prophets meaning; to wit, that God contends with his Church in her buds or branches: for albeit hee lops off the branches, and cuts downe the body of the tree alſo, yet he will not ſuffer his wrath to conſume the rootes and all: but the tree ſhall ſpring, becauſe there is alwaies ſome ſap in the rootes, which God will neuer ſuffer to die nor decay. And this fits well with the ſixt verſe, where hee promiſed that Iſrael ſhould take roote, and bring forth fruit. He expounds that then which hee ſpake before; to wit, in meſure; that is to ſay; hee will not plucke it vp by the rootes: for the Lord will lop off that which appears on the outſide of the tree; to wit, the branches and the leaues; but he will keepe the roote ſound. As for the reprobates, hee will vterly ſtab them vp, and ſo mangle them to peeces, that they ſhall neuer ſprout more.

Whereas others haue tranſlated; He blew with his wind: I haue thought it better to ſay; although he ſhall haue liued: for he continues the ſimilitude in which hee alluded to the herbes and plants, which wither away when any ſharpe wind blowes vpon them; yet it is but in the ypper parts, becauſe the roote lies alwaies warme in the earth. So, albeit the Lord comes violently vpon the faithfull, and diſfigures them ſo, that they ſeeme as good as brought to nothing, yet is hee wont to preſerue ſome ſappe and ſeede within them.

Whereas the Prophet names the eaſt wind; he reſpects the ſituation of Iudea, becauſe that wind did much hurt there; as wee may ſee by many other places. Now we know that euery Country hath his particular wind, which is noſome vnto it. As for example; ſome haue the the north-eaſt wind; ſome the fourth wind; others the eaſt wind riſing vnder the Sunne, which is very hurtfull; for it makes the corne to ſhed, blaſts and ſpoiles al fruits; it ſhakes the trees, and leaues nothing almoſt in the fields y is good behind it. By this eaſt-wind then, ſome vnderſtand that which is towards the Sunne riſing, being exceeding noiſome to many Countries.

Verſ. 9. By this therefore ſhall the iniquitie of Iacob bee purged, and this is all the fruit, the taking away of his ſinne: When hee ſhall make all the ſtones of the Altar as chalke ſtones broken in peeces, that the groues and images may not ſtand vp.

HAuing ſpoken of the chaſtiſement of the people; he now begins in plainer words to ſhew, that the Lord wil ſo provide for their ſaluation, by thoſe rods wherewith he corrected them, that they ſhall feele the fruit thereof. I grant he ſpake of this before, but now he expounds himſelfe more cleerely; to wit, that all the afflictions wherewith God humbled them, ſhould ſerue as medicines to purge their finnes, ſo as they ſhould recouer his former fauour.

But will ſome man ſay, are finnes purged by afflictions, by which God corrects vs? If it bee ſo, then it follows that they are ſatisfactions for finnes; as the Papiſts teach. For theſe two things depend one vpon another; to wit, if God correct vs for our finnes, that they may be done away; then if he ſends no affliction, it follows that there muſt be ſome ſatisfaction in ſtead of it. But it is no hard matter to looſe this knot, if we note that the Prophet meddles not here with theſe queſtions; namely, whether wee merit remiſſion of finnes by workes, or whether afflictions bee ſatisfactions for our offences. For his purpoſe is plainly to teach, that corrections are remedies ſent of God, whereby hee cures our maladies, in regard we are wont to abuſe his patience and long ſuffering. Needfull it is therefore that he ſhould force vs to acknowledge our ſins, & to beare afflictions patiently: and thus afflictions are as purgations whereby our wicked luſts are conſumed; euen as if they had paſſed thorow the fire; which metaphor the Scripture is often wont to uſe. But they can no way become ſatisfactions: I grant men may be prepared by them to repentance.

Thus hee teacheth then that the faithfull haue none occaſion at all to repine againſt the hand that ſinote them; but rather to acknowledge that God uſeth this as a meanes to procure their ſaluation; becauſe otherwiſe they would not be brought to taſte how good and gracious he is. If any deſire a ſhorter diſtinction, we ſay in a word, that chaſtiſements purge our finnes mediately, but not immediately, for they bring vs to repentance; which in its order and place, leades vs to the obtaining of the forgueneſſe of finnes.

Now whereas we haue tranſlated, Behold, all the fruit ſhall be, &c. others read it in the genitiue; Of the taking away: but I hold it better to reade it in the nominatiue caſe, in which it is. The word all, is often taken for great, or abundant: hee meanes then that there ſhall come a plentiful harueſt as it were, by theſe afflictions. To be ſhort, hee would haue this correction to be well taken, in regard of the profit which it brings with it; that the faithfull bearing of them patiently and quietly, might thereby be purged from their corruptions, and brought into the way of ſaluation.

But in the next place the Prophet expounds himſelfe yet more cleerly, where hee ſpeakes of the abolishing of ſuperſtitious: for whilſt Iſrael was in proſperitie, they neuer thought of repentance: and true'y it is giuen to men naturally to wax extreme proud and ſubburne, when they inioy eaſe and pleaſure. He ſhewes then that God meant together with their chaſtiſement, to purge their finnes; becauſe they had ſoothed vp themſelues in their naughtineſſe before, whilſt the Lord heaped vp bleſſings vpon them, and cauſed them to feele his goodneſſe and mercy: but now they ſhould change both their mind and their maners, acknowledging and confessing that they were iustlie punished. Now the Prophet puts one kind here for all, to the end we should comprehend the whole vnder this part: so as in a word he notes out the abolishing of all Idolatrie and superstition. For he mentions not the Altar which was consecrated vnto God, but that which themselues had dedicated to their Idols. When she stones of it then should be broken, the Idoles ouerthrowne, and dashed in pieces, so that no signes of Idolatrie at all were to be seene, euen at that very instant should the sinnes of the people be taken away.

If sinne be put away when all Idolatrie is banished: then whilst Idolatrie remaineth sinne must needs be imputed.

Hence we learne that we can looke for no pardon from the Lord vnlesse we forthwith repent vs of our sinnes: for whosoever he be that flatters himselfe in his finlines, he shall assuredlie pull downe the wrath of God vpon his owne head, which he ceaseth not to inflame against him. Our iniquitie then is taken away when we are touched with a true feeling of repentance. In the second place obserue, that albeit repentance be an inward affection of the heart, yet it staves not there, but brings forth fruites to the view of men. For it is in vaine to make men beleue we feare God, vnlesse we cause our light so to shine before them by our outward works: for we can not separate the roote fro the fruitie. Thirdly we haue to note, that the Prophet mentions Idolatrie principallie in this place, because it is the fountaine from whence all euils flowe. For whilst Gods pure worship and sincere religion flourisheth, you shall see the duties of charitie necessarilie to flow fro thence: but we no sooner forsake God, but he forthwith lets vs fall into all sorts of vices. And this is the maine reason why he comprehendes all kinds of wickedneses vnder the name of Idolatrie. Besides, we see that he not only condemnes Images and Idols, but whatsoever the Iewes had inuented without the prescript rule of the law: whence it followes, that all will-worship is reiected of G O D. Where he addes in the end, that they shall no more arise or stand vp: he shewes how odious a thing Idolatrie is in Gods sight, seeing he will haue the very memorie thereof to be quite abolished, so as afterwards there should no signe thereof be left at all. And yet the Prophet meant to expresse somewhat more, to wit, that our repentance should be such, as that we ought to perseuere therein constantlie vnto the end. For we call not that true repentance when men are only moued vpon some sudden passion to renounce and abolish their superstitions, and then forthwith to suffer them to sprout and increase againe, which yet we see comes often to passe in manie, who in the beginning seemed to be consumed with zeale in an outward shew, and within a while haue growne key cold againe. But the Prophet here notes out such a constant zeale, that those who haue once begun to forsake and renounce their abominations, hold out and perseuere in a good course vnto the end.

be desolate, and the habitation shall be forsaken, and left like a wilderness. There shall the Calfe feede, and there shall he lie, * and consume the branches thereof.

* Or, shall brouze vpon the tops thereof.

YEt.] Some take the Hebrew Coniunction Vau, for a particule of rendring the cause; and some, as if it signified Otherwise: therefore it will beare a double sense. If we interpret it For, then the Prophet should giue a reason of that which went before: but that is against the drift of the text; and besides, it is vtterlie a verie absurd exposition. Those who take it for Otherwise, haue the most likelihood: for this threat may well agree, If you repent not, looke to the issue; Your Citie which is so well fortified, shall be made like a wilderness. But yet me thinks this is too constrained a sense, I had rather then expound it, Notwithstanding, or nevertheless: for the Prophet meant to say, that Ierusalem and the rest of the Cities of Iudea should be destroyed: neither could Ierusalem possible escape, albeit God meant to spare his people. This admonition was very requisite, because the faithfull might haue been discouraged in seeing this holie Citie ouerthrowne, and the Temple laid on heapes: but they knew by the former propheties that God had meanes enow in store to conserue his Church, and the consideration thereof vpheld them. The Prophet then goes about to prevent this temptation. And from hence learne, that we ought neuer to be out of heart howsoever we be broughed to a great exigent; and that the Lord begins to handle vs with all extremitie. Now albeit this threatening may well concerne all Iudea, yet I rather thinke that he speaks here principallie of Ierusalem, which was the Mother Citie of that countrie.

Whereas he addes that the Calfe shall feede there, it is a figuratiue manner of speech much vsed among the Prophets as oft as they mention the destruction of a Citie: for they then forthwith shew that the place shall be made pasture ground. In which we haue to obserue what should moue the Lord to execute such a iudgement as to put brute beasts to feed in that place which the Iewes by their wickednes had prophaned. Surely he had adopted them to be his children, and therefore it was their duties to haue yeilded subiection to so louing a father: but in regard they had broken out into licentious behauiour against him, and had shaken off his yoke, it was iust with the Lord as a punishment of their ingratitude, that the place of their dwelling should now be inhabited by better inhabitants, taken from among brute beasts, rather then men.

The sinnes of a nation may so farre prouoke the Lord, that where it was: an habitation for men, it shall become an habitation for beasts only.

Whereas he saith the tops, it is to augment the description of this waste and desolation: as if he should say, There shall be such plentie of grasse, that the Calues shall only brouze vpon the tenderest parts thereof. The word Saiph signifies also a bow or branch: but because they naturallie sprout vp on high, I take it here for the top, or end. We may also affirme that the Prophet alludes to the faire shew which

True repentance holds out to the end.

Verf. 10. * Yet the defended Citie shall which the Citie had, it being in times paſt beautified with faire and high buildings; but nothing ſhould be ſcene there (theſe houſes being throwne downe) but graffe, and boughs of trees, wherewith the calamities being plentifully fed, ſhould onely for wantonnes, brooze vpon the ſops thereof.

Verſ. 11. When the boughes of it are dry, they ſhall be broken: the women come and ſet them on fire: for it is a people of none vnderſtanding; therefore hee that made them ſhall haue no compaſſion of them; and he that formed them ſhall haue no mercy on them.

Some thinke the Prophet hath reſpect to the ſimilitude of the vine, whereof hee ſpake in the beginning of this Chapter; and therefore they tranſlate, When the branches ſhall die. I grant that the word Kefiah, is ambiguous: but becauſe the ſimilitude of the harueſt agrees better; as alſo that the Hebrew word may be ſo expounded, therefore I had rather take it in this ſenſe. And yet I tranſlate not, When the harueſt ſhall be dried; but, When the harueſt ſhall dry. Now, To dry in this place ſignifies nothing elſe but to come to ripeneſſe; as if hee ſhould ſay, Before the crop be ripe it ſhall be cut downe: and ſo the Lord will deprive thee of that which thou thoughteſt thou hadſt ſure enough in thine hand. Where he ſaith, the women ſhall come; his meaning is, that God ſhall neede no ſtrong armie of men to finiſh this buſineſſe, but poore weake women ſhall ſuffice: and thus he amplifies the indignitie that ſhall bee offered them in this chaſtiſement. For he threatens that the calamitie ſhall be full of ſhame and reproach, in regard that it is a greater diſgrace to be praiſed vpon and ſpoiled by the hands of ſillie women, who were neuer expert in feates of armes, then by men who are ſouldiers by profeſſion.

In the next place hee ſhewes the cauſe of this ſo great a calamitie: for at the firſt bluſh the Lord might ſeeme too ſeuere in ſuffering his choſen to be ſo miſerably vexed and ſcattered, without any ſuccour. Why ſo? Becauſe it is contrary to his louing and fatherly diſpoſition, to deale thus with his children. But our Prophet ſhewes, that God did not correct the Iewes ſo rigorouſly without good reaſon, for they were deſtitute of vnderſtanding, & ſound iudgement. It is not for nothing tht that he ſaith, ignorance was the cauſe of all their miſeries: for ſeeing true wiſdome conſiſts in the feare of God, doth not the holy Ghoſt iuſtly condemne all them to bee blind earthwormes, who deſpiſe God to walke after their owne inordinate luſts?

And yet ſuch a blindneſſe cannot excuſe nor free vs from being guilty of malice: for they that offend God, doe it maliciously, notwithstanding they bee hoodwinked, in reſpect of the violences of their luſts: ignorance and malice then are ioyned together; yet ſo, that this ignorance proceedes from a corrupt deſire of the heart. Thence is it that the Hebrewes call all finnes generally by the name of ignorances. and thus Moſes ſaith, O that they were wiſe! Deut. 32. 29. Now euery one may eaſily bee drawne to ſubſcribe to this, by conſidering in himſelfe with what crooked affections he is carried away: for being once deprived of the light of holy doctrine, and deſtitute of vnderſtanding, the diuell ſets vs going with ſuch a head ſtrongneſſe, that we neither feare Gods hand, nor make any account of his holy word. And that he may ſet vs ouer bootes and all, as they ſay, in the next place hee ſtrives to take away from vs all hope of pardon, which may be referred to the whole body of this people in general. For albeit that a remnant were preferred, yet the wrath of God ceaſed not for all that to be inflamed againſt the whole multitude in general.

Whereas the Prophet calles God the maker and former of Iſrael; it is not meant as in reſpect of the creation of heauen and earth; but becauſe he made & formed Iſrael his Church anew, by the worke of regeneration: in which ſenſe, Saine Paul ſaith, that we are the workmanſhip of God: as wee alſo haue ſhewed in another place. Now the reaſon that moued Iſaiah to ſpeake thus, was to aggravate and to amplify the meaſure of their vnthankfulnes, to which they were growne: ſhewing that they were iuſtly puniſhed, becauſe they diſhonoured and diſreuerenced that God moſt ſhamefullie, who had both formed and preferred them.

Verſ. 12. And in that day ſhall the Lord thresh from the channell of the river, vnto the riuer of Egypt: and yee ſhall bee gathered one by one, O children of Iſrael.

In this place the Prophet mitigates the ſharpeſſe of the former ſentence: for it was an horrible iudgement of God vpon this people, to be left deſtitute of all hope of fauour or mercy. The Hebrew particle Uau therefore, ſhould bee tranſlated as it was in the tenth verſe; Notwithſtanding, or, Neuertheleſſe it ſhall come to paſſe in that day. Alſo the Prophet vſeth a ſimilitude, wherein he compares the gathering of the Church to corne that is threshed; which is afterwards ſeparated from the chaffe. But what might moue him to vſe this ſimilitude? The poore captiues were ſo oppreſſed, that they appeared no otherwiſe, then as corne that is hidden and ſcattered vnder the chaffe. The Lord was faine to diuide that which was hidden vnder this confuſed heape then, as with a fan. This ſimilitude therefore of threshing out the corne, doth very fitly reſemble this gathering.

By the channell of the river, vnto the riuer, hee means Euphrates and Nilus: for the people were driuen partly into Caldea or Aſſyria, and partly into Egypt: for many fled into Egypt, when the reſt were carried captiue into Babylon. Thus then he foretelles how the Lord wil gather his people from all quarters, not onely from Caldea, and out of the whole region of Mesopotamia, but from Egypt also.

I haue translated one by one: others turne it; Euery one from euery place; but this is too conſtrained an expoſition. I therefore take mine to agree beſt: and thus there may bee a double ſenſe, Either I will gather you all till I come to one: or, I will not gather you by bands or companies, but one after another: as we ſee it come to paſſe in the gathering in of thoſe that haue wandred and ranged higher and thither. For all cannot be muſtered at an inſtant, but they muſt bee gathered to their files one by one. So the Iewes being ſcattered and diſperſed abroad, could not eaſily bee gathered and vnited together. His meaning is then, that this diſſipation ſhould be no impediment vnto them to be reſtored to a flouriſhing eſtate againe; which indeede afterwards came to paſſe. For the Iewes were ſent home, not with troopes of horſemen and chariots, nor with any great power of men, neither yet with ſwords and ſpeares; but as Hoſea ſaith, by the onely hand of the Lord. See Hoſea 1.7.

Verſ. 13: In that day alſo ſhall the great Trumpet be blowne, and they ſhall come which periſhed in the land of Aſhur, and they that were chaſed into the land of Egypt; and they ſhall worſhip the Lord in the holy mount at Ieruſalem.

HERE he expounds the former verſe: now he ſheweth another ſimilitude, in which he ſhewes, that God ſhall be of ſufficient power to bring home his people with little adoe. For as Kings are wont by the onely ſound of a trumpet, to aſſemble great armies; ſo he ſhewes that the Lord will quickly call his people together: in reſpect of whom, this prophetic ſhould bee no leſſe effectually, then the voice of the trumpet is, which aſſembles ſouldiers together. He calles them the loſt people, in regard they were ſo miſerably diſperſed, ſo as they ſeemed very neere to ſuch a ſorlorne eſtate, as was vtterly without any hope of being reſtored: for had the Monarchy of their enemies continued, it is like enough they would neuer haue releaſed their priſoners. For they caried them not captiues ſo far off; but they went therewithall to abolith the name of Iſrael by little and little.

That which the Prophet addes of Egypt, contains yet a more excellent teſtimonie of Gods loue: to wit, that thoſe which fled thither, ſhould be gathered, albeit they were vnworthy of pardon For their offence was double, as Ieremieſh verie well ſhewes in the ſenen and twentieth verſe of the tenth of his prophetic. For firſt of all they had obſtinately rebelled: and in the ſecond place, they would not obey the reuelation of the Prophet. For they ought rather to haue ſubmitted their neckes to the yoke of the Babylonians, then to haue fled into Egypt, againſt the expreſſe commandement of the Lord.

Now our Prophet ſhewes further, what fruit ſhould come of this deliuerance; to wit, as ſoone as the Iewes ſhall returne out of captiuitie, into their owne land, they ſhall then worſhip the Lord their Sauiour better then euer they did, in all puritie and vprightneſſe: for by the mountaine, hee meanes the Temple and ſacrifices. True it is that this was accompliſhed in the time of Darius: but doubtleſſe the Prophet extends his prophetic further off: for this reſtauration was as it were an obſcure ſhadowing out of that deliuerance which they obtained afterwards by the meanes of Chriſt: at whoſe coming, the ſpirituall ſound of the Trumpet, that is to ſay, of the Goſpell, was heard; not onely in Aſſyria, nor in Egypt, but in the vttermoſt bounds of the earth. And then were the people of God indeede, ſummoned to meeete together in mount Zion, that is to ſay, in the Church. For wee know it is vſuall with the Prophets thus to ſpeake, when they purpoſe to ſhadow our vnto vs Gods worſhip and ſeruite, and a true harmonic and conſent in godlineſſe and religion. Thus applying their manner of ſpeaking to the cuſtome that was in vſe among that people, that ſo they might be the better vnderſtood of all: we alſo know that the Goſpell came vnto vs out of this mount Zion, of which we haue ſpoken more amply in the ſecond Chapter.

It is the duty of ſuch as haue receiued any deliuerance from God, to returne him thanks and praife for the ſame. Ezra 6.1.

THE XXVIII. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. Woe to the crowne of pride, the drunkards of Ephraim: for his glorious beauty ſhall be a fading ſlender, which is vpon the head of the valley of them that be fat, and are overcome with wine.

L Saiab enters now into a new ſermon, as it were altogether diuers from the former, from which alſo it ſhould be ſeparated. Firſt, hee ſhewes that the wrath of God is neere vnto the Iſraelites, and then to the Iewes. For it is very likely the Prophet foretold theſe things when the Kingdome of Iſrael flouriſhed: which yet wee cannot aſſure for certaine, albeit it ſufficiently appears y the ten Tribes were not yet caried away captiue. This courſe the Prophet takes then; firſt he ſhewes that the indignation of God is ready to fall vpon Iſrael, in regard of the groſſe wickedneſſes, and all forts of corruptions which bare ſway amongſt them: for they were puffed vp with pride & arrogance; yea, they had plunyed themſelues into all diſorders, and ouerflowed in all voluptuouſneſſes and diſſolutions. Thence they grew to an open open contempt of God: for we dayly ſee that when men giug themſelves out to their luſts, they eaſily forget him. In the next place he ſhewes how God moderates this his anger, by ſparing the tribe of Iudah: for when the ten tribes were led away captiues with the halfe tribe of Beniamin, the Iewes yet remained vntouched. This mercie of God the Prophet magnifies, to wit, that he would not ſuffer his Church whollie to periſh, but preferred a ſmall remnant. Thirdly he ſhewes that the Iewes had alſo corrupted themſelves, ſo that they would not indure that God ſhould continue his mercie towards them: whatfore ſeeing impietic reigned as much amongst them as it did among the Iſraelites, they likewiſe muſt make account to feele the rod as well as their brethren.

Which order we ought diligentlie to obſerue: for many deceite themſelves in the expoſition of this place, in regard the Prophet hath not named Iſrael expreſſie. But it is a thing well enough knowne that the tenne Tribes are comprehended vnder this word Ephraim. As touching the word wo, becauſe the particle Hoi doth for the moſt part ſerue to expreſſe an execration, I would not depart from the common opinion of the expoſitors, eſpeciallie ſeeing the Prophet vſeth a plaine denunciation of iudgement. Yet if any had rather turne it, Alas the Crowne, I hinder him not. The letter Vau ſhould be taken as a particle that ſhewes the cauſe, thus, For his ſlowre ſhall be fading. He compares the honor and glorie of Iſrael to a ſlowre which fades, as ſhall be ſaid by and by. In a word, he curſeth the wealth of the Iſraelites: for by the Crowne of pride he means nothing elſe but the falſe confidence wherewith they were ſwollen in regard of their ouermuch abundance and riches. You ſhall euer lightlie ſee theſe two finnes god hand in hand: for the ouerflowing of worldlie commodities begets pride and crueltie, becauſe in proſperitie we ſoare aloft, and can not vſe theſe things with ſobrieties as we ought.

Now the Iſraelites dwelt in a very fat and fruitfull ſoile: and that is the cauſe why Amos calles them the fat kine of the mountaine of Samaria, Amos 4. 1. Being puffd vp then in regard of their riches, they (proudly) deſpised both God and men. And therefore the Prophet calles them drunkards, in regard that being made drunke with their proſperitie, they feared no danger nor inconuenience; nay, which was worſt of all, they would not ſubieſt their necks to Gods yoke.

As a fading ſlowre.] I make no queſtion but he alludes to the Crownes they vſed in banquets at that time, which alſo are vſed at this day in many places. The Iſraelites gaue themſelves to gluttonic & drunkennes: no doubt alſo but the fruitfullnes of the land was an occaſion vnto them of this their intemperancie. In calling this ſlowre fading, he ſtill proſeutes his ſimilitude, alluding elegantlie to ſlowres, which quicklie wither.

He alſo ſaith that this glorie is upon the head of the fat valley, becauſe they ſaw the fat paſſures and the fruitfullnes (which cauſed them to ouerflow in pride) vnder their feet. Others tranſlate valley of ſoyments: but this agrees not ſufficientlie. For by this word the Prophet ſignifies ſuch an abundance and fulnes as made them forget and deſpiſe God and all godlines.

By the word head, he alludes to the ſituation of the cuntry, in regard the Iſraelites dwelt for the moſt part in fat and fruitfull vallies. He attributes a Crowne vnto them; compaſſing the whole land and kingdome, becauſe it flouriſhed, and abounded with all ſorts of good things. For he meant to note out their wealth, which begat careleſnes, ſecuritie, boldnes, intemperancie, and crueltie.

And this doctrine alſo belongs (as well) to vs (as to them): for we are admoniſhed by the example of theſe, to vſe our proſperitie moderately, otherwiſe we ſhall be vnhappie euerie kind of way. For the Lord will curſe our riches and abundance.

Verſ. 2. Behold, the Lord hath * a * Or, mightie mightie and ſtrong hoſt like a tempeſt of and ſtrong.
haile, and a Whirlwind that ouerthro-weth, like a tempeſt of mightie Waters that ouerflow, which throw to the ground
* mightily.

3. They ſhall be troden vnder foote, euen the Crowne, and the pride of the drunkards of Ephraim.

* Or, with the hand.

This may be referred to the Aſſyrians; as if the Prophet ſhould ſay, They are euen readie to come vpon you vnder the leading of the Almighty; and that at an houres warning whenſoever it ſhall pleaſe him to call them forth. Yet had I rather take it for a ſtaffe, or ſome ſuch like thing, whereby the Lord would bring downe the height of Iſraels pride. He compares this ſtaffe, or whatſoever thing it was, vnto a whirlwind, or deluge of waters, which beate downe graſſe and ſlowres, and marre all the beautie of the earth: wherein he continues forth the ſimilitude of the fading ſlowre, wherof he ſpake in the beginning; for there is nothing more hurtfull to the tender ſlowres then a ſtorme of haile, or a whirlwind.

Now he vſeth a particle demonſtratiue; to wit, Behold, becauſe the wicked are not ſtirred nor moued, be the danger neuer ſo imminent. He tells them then that he ſpeakes not as of things that are to be called into queſtion, neither of ſuch things as come out of his owne head, but of that which ſhould ſpedilie fall out.

Where I haue tranſlated, with the hand, S. Ierome turnes it, A ſpacious land: but this S. Ierome croſſeth the very text. Others take it for ſtrength: and ſo they affirme that he ſpeakes of a violent driving an end. But the natie ſenſe, as I think, is this, that all the glorie and magnificence of Iſraelites ſhall be throwne downe, euen as if a man ſhould puſh downe one overcome with drinke with his hand. The third verſe is only a confirmation of that which went before.

Verf. 4. For his glorious beantie shall bee a fading flower, which is upon the head of the valley of them that bee fat, and as the hastie fruite afore summer, which while bee that looketh upon it while it is in his hand, hee eateth it.

It is not an easie matter to humble such as are besetted with the pleasures of this life. Denys a tyrant of Sicilia.

He almost repeats the verie same words which were in the first verse: for it is not an easie matter to humble and terrifie those that are besetted with the pleasures of this life, whose eyes are hoodwinked by reason of abundance and prosperitie. For Deys, the second, a tyrant of Sicilia, became so bewitched, that hee was ready to fall on his nose ever and anon, because hee was an excessive eater and drinker at great banquets: and thus mens mindes are intoxicated, through ouer much psmpering of themselues with delicates, so as they both forget God and themselues. The Prophet then repeats one and the same thing twice, to these that were so blockish and dull of hearing: to the end they might vnderstand and beleue that which otherwise would haue seemed incredible.

But hee yet adornes his speech by another goodly similitude; which is verie fitting for his purpose: for fruits that are hastie ripe, are best esteemed, in regard they come first, and giue some hope of a future inttease; but they last not long, neither are they fit to keep. And besides, they are fit for none but great belied women, or for childre or else for youths, which being inordinate in their appetites, deuoure them by and by. Now he saith, that such shall be the felicitie of the Israelites: as if hee should say; Your prosperitie wherein you so much reioice, will not last very long, but will be eaten vp in an instant. Now looke what Isaiah threatens to the kingdome of Isracl, the same belongs also to all the world. For men by their ingratitude; are the cause that all the benefites which the Lord bestowes vpon them, cannot come to ripeness. Why so? Because wee abuse and corrupt them by our naughtinesse. Thence it is that we bring forth hastie fruites of small continuance, which otherwise might last to nourish vs a long space.

Verf. 5. In that day shall the Lord of hostes be for a crowne of glory, and for a diadem of beantie vnto the residue of his people.

HAVING spokē of the Kingdome of Isracl; he comes now to speake of the Tribe of Iudah, and shewes, that in the midst of this so fearefull a iudgement of God, hee will alwaies cause his mercy to be felt. So that howfouer the ten Tribes were gone and lost; yet the Lord would reserue a remnant which should be consecrated vnto him, that therein the crowne and the diadem of his glory and magnificence might be found: that is to say, the Church shall neuer bee so wrangled and disfigured, but that the Lord will find a means to crowne and decke her with honour and glorie. And yet I extend not this propheticke indifferentlie to all the Iewes, but onely to the elect, who were miraculously preserued from death: for albeit he calles this one Tribe and an halfe but a remnant, in respect of the other ten Tribes; yet wee shall see hereafter, that he puts a difference betwene those who were of the Tribe of Iudah onely. Neither are wee to wonder that the Prophet speakes thus diuersly of one and the same people; for sometimes he directs his speech to the whole body as it was generally infected with vices; and another while he applies himselfe to the faithfull in particular. It is certaine that hee rightly calles the Iewes a remnant of people, in regard of the ten Tribes which had reuolted from the pure seruice of God, and had separate themselves from the vniuy of faith: but if we shall consider them without comparison, and shall view them as they were in themselues, apart from the rest, hee had iust cause to tax their wickednesse.

I am not ignorant that others are of a contrary iudgement; the reason is, because he by and by speakes of wine, vers. 7. and so they thinke this sentence should bee ioyned with the beginning of the Chapter: thus it may be the Lord will spare the Iewes; but how is it possible he should, seeing they are as bad as the rest? Seeing then that they are guiltie of the same sinne of vnthankfulness, must they not needes share with them in their punishment? But these expositours doe not aduersely consider that the Prophet is about to set forth a testimonie of Gods singular fauour, in that hee did not cause his whole indignation to fall at once vpon all the race of Abraham: but albeit hee ouerthrew the Kingdome of Isracl, yet he gaue the Iewes respite to see whether they would repent or no. Now with the setting forth of Gods patience towards them, hee vnder hand amplifies the fault of this peoples ingratitude. For should not they haue learned wisdome by their brethrens harmes? yes; the calamitie of the Israelites should surely haue awakened them, and drawn them to repentance. But they past it ouer lightly, and neuer tooke it to heart. Were they not vnworthy of so many benefites then, that would take no benefite thereby? Well, yet the Lord was pleased to conferre his Church euen in the midst of them.

Now you see the cause why hee deliuered Iudah and the halfe Tribe of Benjamin, out of calamitie in which he wrapped the Israelites. Moreover, because Iudah was a verie small Tribe, and was therfore contented of their brethren the Israelites, the Prophet affirms that there is glory and riches enough in God, to supply all outward wants. By this place we are taught what is the true way vnto saluation; euen to place our whole happinesse in God himselfe: for we no sooner turne backe to the world, but wee gather flowers which fade and wither, yea and vanish away by and by. But alas this phrensic reignes in

The Church shall neuer be to disfigured, but the Lord will find a means to decke her with beantie and honour, Cant. 1. 4.

Our true way vnto happinesse, is to place it wholly in God, euerie place more then it ſhould: for men will ſeek to bee happie without God: that is to ſay, without happineſſe it ſelfe. Iſaiah alſo ſhewes, that no calamity, be it neuer ſo great, can any way let God to inuich and adorne his Church. For when all things ſhall ſeeme as good as deſperate, yet God lues ſtill to crowne his ſeruants with glory. It is to be noted alſo, that he promiſeth the Church ſhall bee beautified with a new hew, euen then when her multitude ſhall be diminished; that by this meanes the faithfull might neuer be deſtinat in the moſt horrible waſte that may befall them.

Verſ. 6. And for a ſpirit of iudgement to him that ſitteth in iudgement, and for ſtrength vnto them that turne away the battell in the gate.

THe Prophet ſhewes the cauſe why the Lord wil beautifie the remnant with new glorie. For hec propounds before them the eſtate of a right government, vnder which a people is preferred: which conſiſts in two things principally; that is to ſay, Counſell and ſtrength. By counſell and wiſdome, affaires ought to be managed amongst the ſubiects at home: force and munitiō are for the annoyance of the enemy abroad. Now for as much as Kingdoms and Commonwealtheys uphold and maintaine their eſtates by theſe two meanes; therefore God promiſeth the ſpirit of wiſdome and ſtrength vnto his people. And therewithall teacheth them, that the gift of both theſe are in his owne hands; and that they are not to be ſought elſewhere: for neither can the Magiſtrates gouerne the Citie well, in giuing to euery one his due; neither can the Captaines and Leaders repulſe the enemy, vnleſſe both be led and directed by the Lord.

Wiſdome and ſtrength are the Lords; Job 12. 13. Pſal. 127. 1.

Verſ. 7. But they haue erred becauſe of wine, and are out of the way by ſtrong drinke: the Prieſt and the Prophet haue erred by ſtrong drinke, they are ſwallowed vp with wine, they haue gone aſtray through ſtrong drinke; they faile in diſcretion, they ſtumble in iudgement.

HEe now direſts his ſpeech vnto the profane deſpisers of God, who were lewely onely in name; and ſets forth their ingratitude to the full: for albeit they had ſo euident a teſtimonie of Gods wrath before their eyes, and ſaw their brethren ſeuerely chaſtiſed, in their ſight, yea, albeit they had good experience of his mercie & patience towards them, yet could they not be brought into the right way, by this ſo fearefull an example of ſeueritie: neither could they be brought to anie amendment by ſo liuely a taſte of Gods goodneſſe in ſparing of them.

He ſpeakes here of wine and ſtrong drinke, by way of ſimilitude: for I vnderſtand not this place of the common ſinne of drinkecenneſſe, againſt which he ſpake in the firſt verſe; but I rather thinke hec meanes they were become like vnto drunkeards, in regard they were deſtroyed of common ſenſe and vnderſtanding. If the word As, therefore be ſupplied to wine and ſtrong drinke, then the ſenſe will be the more plaine and euident. I deny not but men wax worſe then beaſts, by the exceſſe of taking in meates and drinke: nay, queſtionleſſe their exceſſe therein had fore dazeld the ſpirits of the Iewes; but if we conſider well of the whole courſe of the text, it will bee caſie to ſee, that he condemnes their iniquitie vnder a ſimilitude.

Where hec addes, the Prieſt and the Prophet, he continues the amplification of their ſinne whereof we ſpake before: ſo that the common people were not onely drunke, but euen the Prieſts themſelues, who ſhould haue been lights to haue giuen direction vnto others: for they are compared to the ſalt of the earth, as Chriſt teacheth: now if they grow vnſauorie and graceleſſe, what ſhall become of the multitude? if the eye be darke, what ſhall become of the parts of the whole body? Mat. 5. 13. and 6. 23.

But the worſt of all was, that they erred not onely in open wickedneſſes, but in viſion and iudgement alſo: whence we may gather, that the ſtate of the Iewes was very deſperate. And here haue we a faire looking glaſſe, wherein we may take a thorow view of our ſelues. Is ic not ſtrange, that after ſo many miſeries and afflictions, which God hath vſed to purge out our corruptions, that the Church ſhould yet notwithstanding be, ſo impure? But ſuch is our ſtowardneſſe, that we kicke againſt the prickes: ſo that how ſo euer the Lord induors by all meanes to correct our vices, yet we not onely fruſtrate the ſame by our rebellions, but daily gather new defilements to the former, wherewith we were ſpotted before. It is no meruaile then if men now adayes are ſo hardened and wax worſe and worſe, notwithstanding the Church hath been ſo manie waies humbled: for Iſaiah affirms, that the people in olde time did the like.

Now whereas the Lord ouercame ſo great and execrable a ſalvatic, by his ſoueraigne bountie, and did ſtill preferue his Church; we muſt needs acknowledge that this came to paſſe by his ſecret purpoſe, far beſides the expectation of any: for he ſhall preuaile but litle with vs, if he onely vſe ordinarie and common remedies.

From this place alſo it appeeres how ſortly & childiſh the Papiſts are in their brags, who haue euer in their mouthes the Church, the Church: & vnder the title of their Prieſts, Bishops, Prelates, & their authoritie, reſiſt the open and manifeſt Scriptures: as if, for ſooth, theſe holy orders could neuer erre. Indeede they would make vs beleue, that they haue the holy Ghoſt ſhut vp in their braine, as if they were, the body repreſentatiue of the whole Church, which is neuer forſaken of God. But here we ſee what Iſaiah ſaith of the Prieſts and Prieſts of his time, whoſe calling was far more excellent then was the calling of anie (of their ſhauelings.) Doubtleſſe if euer there were a true Church of God, it was amongst the Iewes: and the calling of the Priests of that rine was approued of by his word, for which thele haue not so much as a syllable. And yet he shewes that euen they were not only corrupted in maners, but erred also in vision and iudgement: and not only that, but the Prophets also, whom God raised vp extraordinarylie to be helpe vnto the Priests in regard of their negligence: euen these became blinde in their reuelations, and in that holy ministrie of teaching and instructing the people. What is more vaine then, then vnder the pretext of a titularie office to exempt themselves from erring, when as yet in the meane while they haue not only forsaken the Lord and all true religion, but haue also troden vnder foot all honestie, and yet are not ashamed to defend their tyrannie by all the means they can?

The ſortlineſſe of the Papiſts aſſertion, The Church cannot erre, ditcouered.

Verf. 8. For all their tables are full of filthie vomiting: no place is cleane.

HE goes on with the similitude, and represents out vnto vs as in a glasse the maners of such as are giuen to gluttonic: for hauing once cast off all humanitie, they not haui become like brute beasts, but plunge themselves into all filthines. Doubtlesse it is an odious and vile spectacle, to see tables bestrowed with vomitings: and therefore Isiah vnder this figure shewes, that the whole lites of these people were very noysome and vsauoric. Yea we may safely coniecture that the Prophet in a word meant to say, That things were whollie corrupted and prophaned amongst the Iewes; so that if any one approached but neere to their tables, he should find nothing but drunkennes, and filthie vomiting: that is to say, he that should obserue their carriage, should see no part thereof free from loathsome vices and impieties. And as for the doctrine, which of all other was the most precious, truly that was so corrupt, that it stanke no lesse then if it had bene defiled with spewings and excrements. Now it is not my purpose to soare aloft into allegories heere, as some doe.

Verf. 9. Whom shall he teach knowledge? And whom shall he make to vnderstand the things that he heareth? Them that are weaned from the milke, and drawne from the breasts.

THE Prophet in this place with great astonishment shewes, that the peoples disease is growne incurable, and that God had no more fit medicines left in store to heale them, in regard he had but lost all the labor and cost which he had spent to recouer them. Truly, behold heere the most seueraigne remedie that God can vse, when he seekes to call such as are gone astray out of the right way, neuer ceasing to call vpon them that erre, to that purpose: but when this takes none effect; what hope is left of their recouerie, that refuse to be ordered by those means that should do them good? He complains then that God is driuen to his shifts (as it were) in regard the people were become so senselesse that they would not endure he should cure them: and therefore he compares the Iewes to little children lately weaned, or to such as begin to prattle, vpon whom a man should lose his labor that should endeour to teach them any thing.

S. Peter for good cause exhorts the faithfull to draw neere, and as newborne babes to suck in the sincere milke of the word, that they might grow thereby: 1. Pet. 2. 2. for a man will neuer shew himselfe teachable vnllesse he puts off that rebellion which all of vs haue brought with vs from our mothers wombs, But the Prophet here condemnes another kind of Childhoode, to wit, when men be so befotted in their vices that they meditate no more in the heauenlie doctrine then if they were become starke idiots. And therefore some sondlic ioinie this verse and that place of S. Peter together: for they make the Prophet speake as if the Lord should be brought in seeking such disciples as were emptied of all pride; and were become like children lately weaned. But he rather complains that his doctrine was published in vaine, being propounded as a matter of wonderment to fooles and vnwise, who yet are not children in malice, but in vnderstanding, as S. Paul saith 1. Cor. 14. 20. It will also appeere by that which followes in the text, that howsoeuer they could not comprehend his doctrine, yet that God was not to be accused of ouergreat seueritie if he reiected them; and would no longer lose time in speaking as to deafe eares.

Verf. 10. For precept must be vpon precept, precept vpon precept, line vnto line, line vnto line, there a little, and there a little.

THIS verse sufficientlie manifests that the Lord complains as one that had lost all his labour, in teaching a people obstinate and vnteachable. For the case was all one as if a man should take vpon him to instruct little children, to whom he must repeat the letters ouer and ouer, who yet immediatlie forget what was taught them. For although the Master should spend a whole day in teaching them a letter, yet the next day he must begin his labour afresh, and so the next to that likewise, and yet he shall gaine nothing by it, albeit he bestowes all the paines and skil he hath. Those who change the Prophets words here, that they might not offend the eares of the readers, do by an affected phrase of speech corrupt the sense, and cause his words to lose that grace which otherwise is in them: for in repeating the same words, hee meant to signifie a variable and continuall repetition, which we know is very troublesome. For it is a similitude drawne (as we haue said) from little children, whose memories the Master dares not charge with any great matter, because they are vncapable of it, but is faine to diſtill the firſt principles into them as it were drop by drop. And for that cauſe he repeats the ſame thing once, twice, yea, many times, and is ſtill refreshing their memories with their old Jeſſon. In a word, ſuch ſchollers muſt be alwaies fed with milke, vntill they bee growne to more maturitie and ripenes of iudgement.

The Prophet in like manner ſomewhat after a quipping manner of ſpeech, vſeth theſe words; heere a liſte, and there a liſte. Thoſe interpret it ill, as I thinke, who reade the word a liſte, line: as if the Prophet had had reſpect to a building that goes vp ſlowly, and is raiſed an end by lines, now a little, and then a little. For this had been an improper ſimilitude, and too farre fetched, ſeeing he ſpeakes heere of childrens firſt rudiments. I confeſſe indeed that the ſame Hebrew word is vſed in the 18. Chapter, where I haue traſlated, From all parts, or, Line after line, and ſo in manie other places: but the circumſtance of this text requires another ſenſe, as alſo in Pſal. 19. 4. Vnleſſe the word line, or meaſuring inſtrument ſhould agree better there: yet I denie not but vnder a figure it may well be taken for inſtruction, or rule. For in as much as the rule or plummet which they vſe in buildings is called by the ſame name, as we ſhall afterward ſee in this Chapter, it is no maruell if it be referred to other rules.

Verſ. 11. For With a ſtammering tongue, and With a ſtrange language ſhall he ſpeake vnto this people.

Whereas ſome ſupply, that it is as if one ſpake, it is ſuperfluous. I referre this to God then, who, as the Prophet ſaith, ſpake in a ſtrange language to this barbarous people. This reprehention ought therefore to haue pierced them to the heart, in regard that by their owne default they made him to ſim and ſtammer, who yet giues ſpeech vnto all. He threatens them not, but rather accuſeth them of blockiſhnes, in that they made the heauenlie doctrine to become nothing elſe but a conuulſed ſound vnto them, ſo as they receiued no benefit by it, becauſe they wittingly ſtopped their eares againſt it. The Prophet therefore compares their follie to a thing againſt nature, in that they would not heare the voice of the Lord.

Verſ. 12. Vnto Whom he ſaid, This is the reſt: giue reſt to him that is wearie: and this is the refreshing, but they would not heare.

Some expoid this ſentence in many words thus, If anie ſay vnto them, This is the reſt, they will not heare: but this is of no force, neither doth it make that coherēce which it ſhould. The Prophet rather ſhewes why God became a barbarian (as it were) to the Iewes; to wit, becauſe they wanted eares to heare him; ſo that in effect he ſpake as vnto them that were deafe, for they would not learne what this reſt meant. But this deafnes proceed ed from rebellion; for they preſumptuouſlie reiected all wholeſome doctrine with a ſetled malice. It was a frowardneſſe doubly inexcusable then, to reiect that reſt which was offered them, which all men alſo naturally deſire. They were too farre gone already in impietie to ſtop their eares when God ſpake: but their ingratitude was much more ſupportable to deſpiſe ſo deſireable a benefit with ſuch an high hand. The Prophet ſhewes them therefore that ſuite they might haue reaped from the obedience of faith, of which they deprived themſelues by their owne obſtinacie. He blames their blindnes and ignorance then, becauſe all this proceeded from their rebellion: in that they maliciously ſhut their eies againſt the cleere light, which ſhined vnto them from heauen, and loued rather to grope in darknes then to walke in the light.

Hence we gather, that the vnbeleeuers doe willingly plunge themſelues into a miſerable vnquietnes of mind: as ſoone as God renders his word vnto them: for he allures all men to partake in this bleſſed reſt. He ſhewes vs alſo the marke, vnto which if we Ieuell the whole courſe of our liues, true ſelicitie attends vs; ſo as hauing once heard the heauenlie doctrine, no man can run aſtray, vnleſſe he will doe it wittingly. Oh how amiable then ought this good word of God to be in our eyes, ſeeing it brings vs ſo inſtimable a benefit with it, when with reſt and peace of conſcience we may poſſeſſe ſo perfect a bleſſednes! All will in words affirme boldly, that nothing is better then to dwell in a place of reſt: and yet where is he that makes account of it when it is offered him? Nay, all in a manner ſhun it, as if men had agreed with a common conſent to liue in miſerable perplexitie, and continuall trembling of heart. In the meane while, none is to murmure and ſay, that he ſinnes ignorantlie: for what is more cleere and manifeſt then the doctrine of God? all excuſes of men therefore are but in vaine. In a word, what is more abſurd, then to lay the fault vpon God, as if he taught men either obſcurely, or confuledly? Now as God here teſtifies that hee ſhewes vnto men by his word the way how to come to an aſſured reſt: ſo on the other ſide hee certifies the vnbeleeuers, that the continuall broiles which are within them, are the iuſt recompences of their wickedneſſe.

Where it folloves, Giue reſt to him that is wearie, ſome expound it, as if God required works of charitie, if ſo be we will find fauour in his ſight; and theſe workes are here comprehended vnder a part for the whole. But as I thinke the Prophet meant another thing: he rather ſhewes what reſt it is which God affords vs for the releeuing of our infirmitie: and certainly we are conuincied of our great ingratitude, if neceſſitie, which of it ſelſe is a ſharpe ſpurre, cannot for all that quicken vs forward to ſeeke this remedy. This ſentence of the Prophet tends almoſt to the ſame end that the words of Chriſt do, Math. 11. 28. Come vnto me all ye that trauell and are heauie laden, and I will eaſe you. So that Iſaiah ſets the choice of two things heere before the Iewes,

What an inſtimable benefit Gods word brings, if our owne inſidelitie deprived vs not of it.

All men naturallie deſire reſt, yet few take the right way to enioy it.

We are conuincied of great ingratitude, if our owne neceſſities can not quicken vs vp to ſeeke the remedies which God freely offers vs.

1 to wit, whether they had rather be comforted and refreshed; or to fall vnder the burthen, and so be ouerwhelmed. Wherein hee confirms that which I touched ere while; to wit, that God exhorts not those that haue neede of rest, to come vnto him in vaine; as he saith, Chap. 45. 19. I haue not said in vaine to the house of Iacob, Seeke yee me. Are wee taught by this word then? Surely if the fault be not in our selues, we may safely rest in the doctrine which he sets before vs. For it is not his custome to feede vs with vaine hopes; though men are often wont by fond conceits, to throw themselves into many griefes and vexations.

Moreouer, in that he shewes that this rest is prepared for those that are weary and groane vnder the burthen: we are taught, therein at the least, to haue our recourse vnto the word of God, to the end wee may obtaine rest. By which wee may be assured, and that by good experience, that it is the propertie of this word, to quiet our boiling passions, and to appease our distracted and amazed consciences. Whosoeuer hee be then that wanders in seeking rest out of the bounds of this word, shall alwaies be vexed, and shall surely tremble in continual feares; and good reason, for they will bee wise and happie without God. This, as we see, betwixt the Papists, who hauing scorned this peace, are therefore tossed to and fro all their life time with horrible anxietie. For Satan turnes and winde them, that they are cauer vexed with terrible astonishments, and yet can neuer find anie place of rest.

Verf. 13. Therefore shall the word of the Lord be vnto them precept vpon precept, precept vpon precept, line vpon line, line vnto line, there a little, & there a little, that they may goe and fall backward, and bee broken, and bee snared, and bee taken.

Albeit the Prophet repeats the same speech with the former, yet y sense doth a little alter: for now he denounceth the punishment of this so wilful a deafenesse whereof the spake. The iudgement is, that God shall so dazle their wits, that they shall not only reap no fruit at all of the doctrine of saluation, but an empty and vnprofitable sound. In a word, from the former verses he concludes, that seeing the word of God had in no sort profited the Iewes; that their vnthankfulness should now be punished. Not that Gods word should bee cleane taken from them; but in wanting vnderstanding and a right iudgement, they should groape for the way at noone day, and should not finde it. And thus God blinds the eyes, and hardens the hearts of the reprobates more and more, when they are waxen incorrigible.

Saint Paul alleadgeth this place when hee reprehends the foolish conceit of the Corinthians, who were so possessed with pride, that they admired none but such as spake vnto them in strange languages, 1. Cor. 14. 21. It being an vtuall thing with the common people, to wonder at strange & vnwonted things. But this place of Paul is ill vnderstood, by reason they haue not well pondered the Prophets words; which the Apostle very fitly applies to his purpose. For he declares how the Corinthians were caried away with a foolish and vnbridled ambition, vnreasonably affecting things altogether vnprofitable; and thus were become children, not in malice, but in iudgement and vnderstanding. By means whereof, they pulled the curse of God wittingly vpon themselves; wherewith the Prophet had threatened the Iewes in this place. And so it came to passe, that the word of God was vnto them precept vpon precept, receiuing no more fruit by it, then if one had told them a long tale in a language they vnderstood not. Men are grown exceeding fond therefore, when they begin to throw themselves by a vaine affection into wilfull blindness and benumbednesse of spirit; with which plague the Lord here threatens the obstinate & rebellious. Saint Paul then expounds and cleares this sentence of the Prophet verie well; shewing, that such as abule the doctrine of saluation, are vnworthy to profit any thing at all by it.

We had almost the like place to this in the eight Chapter, where our Prophet compared his doctrine to letters sealed vp; and anon he will liken it to a closed booke. This fallies out 10. when the Lord deprivens men of the light of his spirit, and of sound iudgement for their vnthankfulness sake; that seeing, they might not see; and hearing, they might not heare at all: whereby hee punisheth them most iustly. We ought to obserue this well, for wee often take our selues to be great proficient, and to be exceeding happie that we haue the word of God amongst vs; but what profit get we by it, vnlesse our vnderstandings be fitted to conceiue it, and our hearts framed to be directed by it? For wanting this, wee are more accursed, then if we had not the word at all. And therefore wee stand in neede of a twofold grace: First, that God would enlighten vs by his word: secondly, that hee would open our eyes, and dispose our affections to imbrace the obedience of it. Otherwise, the light of the Gospell shall stand vs in no more stead, then the light of the Sun doth to the eyes of him that is starke blind.

By this chastisement then we are admonished, not to abuse the word of God by our prophaneesse; but to vse it to that end for which he hath ordained it.

In the end of the verse he shewes, what ruine is like to fall vpon those that profit not by this cleere light of the word, euen to bee left without a guide, and to stumble and fall; because they are departed out of the right way. But he telles them their fallies shall not be easie, for they shall be broken.

By the word snared, hee vseth an other similitude; to wit, that snarres are prepared for vnbelieuers, wherein they shall be hampered and led to destruction. Wee haue had the like speech in the eight Chapter, and almost

It is the property of Gods word to bring assured rest to our soules. See Ier. 6. 16.

Chap. 8. 16.
Chap. 29. 9.

We are in worse case in inioying the word, then if we were vnder bereaued of it, vnlesse we yeeld obedience therunto.

Let vs beware how wee abuse Gods word.

Note that God may continue his word in a nation, & in the mean while depriue them of the benefit thereof.

Chap. 8. 16.
most

moſt expreſſed in the very ſame words : for the Prophet handles the ſame doctrine, as touching the blinding of the people, who by the hardneſſe of their hearts, had prouoked God to anger. Now his purpoſe is here to ſhew, that ſuch who take the bridle in their teeth, and will needs turne their backs and begone from the direction of the word, are verie neere to a ruinous downefall. For they ſhall either meete with ſtumbling blockes, againſt which they ſhall daſh themſelves in peeces, or with nets, in which they ſhall be ſnared and taken. In a word, they ſhall no way eſcape; for a miſchiefe warcheth for them at euerie turning, who will not walke in the paths which God ſhewes them; for either they ſhall fall and bee broken before all men; or themſelves by priuie wiles, ſhall intrap their owne ſeete in the ſnare.

Verſ. 14 Wherefore heare the word of the Lord yee ſcornefull men, that rule this people which is at Ieruſalem.

HEE (further) amplifies that ſharpe reprehention which he vſed before, and withall, adds a conſolation to reuiue the hearts of the faithfull. For as on the one ſide hee threatens the wicked with deſtruction; ſo yet on the other ſide he leaues matter of conſolation for the faithfull, aſſuring the that their ſaluation is deere and precious to God. Now by the word mockers, hee means thoſe that were witty and malicious, who by their wylie deuices, thought to eſcape the iudgements of God : for the verbe Luts, from whence this word mockers is deriued, ſignifies to cauill and to mocke. Now he ſpeakes not here to common perſons; but to the Princes and Magiſtrates, who thought themſelves wiſer and more prudent then thoſe that were vnder their government. But they employed this dexteritie of wit, in deuſing how they might play mocke holy day with God. It is not for nought the that the Prophet doth tauntingly accuſe them, in calling them ſcorners. As if hee ſhould ſay, You thinke you haue ſuch deepe deuices in your heads, that you can circumuent the Lord; but he will not take it at your hands.

Surely the greateſt conflicts which the Prophets had, were againſt the rulers of the people : for howſoeuer all eſtates were horribly corrupted, yet they being ſwollen with a falſe conceit of their owne wiſdome, were the moſt obſtinate and vtractable of all others. This is to be ſeene at all times almoſt : for albeit the common people be caried away with a violent brutiſhneſſe, yet doe they not ouerflow into ſuch impietic as the great ones, Courtiers, & ſuch other ſubtile heads do, who thinke to goe beyond all men in fineneſſe of wit. The Miniſters of Gods word then had need to arme themſelves (with the ſword of the Spirit) principally againſt ſuch ſubtile enemies: for there are none ſo dangerous, that not onely hurt themſelves, but leade others alſo by their example, to become ſcoffers and deſpiſers. And for the moſt part, they dazle the eyes of the meaner ſort, by means of their authoritie and great titles.

Is it not a ſearcfull and prodigious thing, thinke you, whē the gouernours of the church are not onely blind, but alſo labour to put out the eyes of others, and imbolden them to deſpiſe God, to contemne his holy word, and to rent it in peeces with their ielts? yea, when they employ the vttermoſt of their wits and ſkill to ouerthrow true religion. But we ought to bend our forces againſt ſuch kinde of men, and that according to the Prophets example in this place, and not to be outfaçed in this fight, whatſoeuer they can ſay or doe vnto vs. And himſelfe ſhewes how ſuch ſcorners ſhould be vſed : that is, not much to trouble our heads in deuſing how to inſtruct them, (for teaching wil doe them little good) but wee ought to rebuke them ſharply, and to terrifie them with Gods iudgements. The greatneſſe of the offence is augmented in regard ſuch had place in Gods ſanctuarie, and thereby infected his choſen people with their vile behauiour.

Verſ. 15. But yee haue ſaid; We haue made a couenant with death, and with hell are we at agreement : though a ſcourge runne ouer, and paſſe thorow, it ſhall not come at vs : for we haue made falſhood our refuge, and vnder vanity are we hid.

HERE the Prophet adds the reaſon wherefore he called them mockers; namely, becauſe they had caſt off all feare of God. And hee ſhewes how they made themſelves beleue, that (of all men) they ſhould neuer be puniſhed for their tranſgreſſions, ſo as they grew the more braſen faced. And as if this had been a ſufficient warrant for them, they gaue themſelves the more freely to doe euill, and without any feare, purſued whatſoeuer their luſts led them vnto. And this is it that hee means by their couenant with hell and with death : for they audaciouſly ſcorned all the threatnings and plagues of God; becauſe they tooke themſelves to be out of his gunſhot.

By the word Koze, he ſignifies that which he ſaid touching the word Berith, which ſignifies a couenant: for he repeats one thing twice. This word Koze, which ſignifies viſion, is as much as wee vſe to ſay, To vnderſtand : and it ſeemes there is a ſecret oppoſition in this place betwene the viſions of the Prophets, and thoſe cunning deuices which theſe wylie ellowes delighted in. But yet in the meane while it is certaine, that theſe fine heads neuer came ſo far as to brag thus, and to vtter ſuch words indeed; for that had been too ridiculous, and little children might haue laughed at them. Moreouer, they alwaies ſtudied doubleſſe how to get themſelves all the credit they could among the people, albeit they deſpiſed God, & reiected al holeſome admonitiōs; they would not be ſo groſſe then to confeſſe that they made falſhood their refuge.

But the Prophet obserued their affections and outward practise, and not their faire shewes: and considered what was in their hearts by their deeds, & not by their words. Now because men are wont to please themselves in their vices, and with brazen faces, in despising Gods threatnings, it proues by their practise that they haue made a covenants with death, which they nothing feare though God terrifie them with it: therefore the Prophet in generall reprobates this carnall confidence, which makes men forget the remembrance of God and his iudgements, whereby they wittingly deceiue themselves as if they were able to escape his hands.

Lucianists.

But especially he closteth with these Lucianists and mock-Gods, who thinke they are in nothing so wise as in deriding of God: and the more they would couer their villanie, the louder y^e Prophet cries out with open mouth against them; as if (out of some darke corner) he should draw all their deepe and desperat thoughts into the light. After this sort I pray you behold the wit, the cunning, and subtletie of these wise men of the world, who being inuironed with miseries and ruine on euery side, do yet thinke themselves hidden in safetie. Are they not well worthie therefore to seeke their saluation in lies, seeing they despise the saluation of God which themselves scorne and deride? Indeed they couer their practises with cunning deceits, and vnder goodly pretexts, and in the meane while take them for nothing lesse then lies: but (whatsoever they imagin) the Prophet hits the nail on the head (as we say) and calles them by their names.

A double simile.

As touching this clause of a scourge running ouer, the Prophet vnder those words comprehends two similitudes. For first he compares the afflictions and calamities wherewith God chastiseth the wickednesse of the world to a scourge: and then resembles the same to a deluge, in regard of the violence and vehemencie thereof. Now these scoffers thought themselves cock-sure in regard of being hurt by any such tempests, how sharp or furious soeuer they were, and made full account to escape; albeit they ouerranne the whole land: provided y^e they were fortified with falshood and with vanitie before hand. They could nor but see what iudgements and calamities men are subiect vnto: but because they beheld not Gods hand in them, nor considered his prouidence, but imputed whatsoever fell out to blind fortune, therefore they sought remedies and leaning-stocks whereby they might secure themselves, and keepe back these scourges farre off from them.

Verf. 16. Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I will lay in Zion a stone, a tried stone, a pretious corner stone, a sure foundation. He that beleeueth shall not make haste.

NOW Isaiah comforts the faithfull, and threatens the wicked with their iust and deserved perdition. First, he sets downe the consolation which concerned the faithfull, who were then in stead of a May-game to these Gallants. For we see how the wicked are not ashamed at this day to deride our simplicitie, holding vs no better then idiots, that in the midst of so many troubles and bitter persecutions wee still hope notwithstanding, that God will turne all to the best for vs. The Prophet soares vp and relieues the hearts of y^e good with this consolation then against the insolencie of the reprobate, to the end they might goe on cheerefullie and boldlie, contemning all their flouts & mocks, and might also be assured that their hope should not be in vaine. The word demonstrative Behold, is put heere for the greater assurance of the matter; as if he should say, Albeit the vnbeleeuers make no reckning of my words, nor giue any credit vnto them, yet will I be as good as my promise for all that. The pronoun I, is also of great weight, for the further confirmation of the prophesie. Now for the words, first Bochan is put by way of an epithite with the word stone, and signifies, Of prooffe; and may be taken as well in the actiue signification, as in the passiue, or for a stone vpon which the whole building is to be framed and ordered as to his rule: or for a tried stone. But the first exposition seemes to agree best, and the proprietie of the Hebrew tongue requires that we interpret it rather in the actiue signification. He calles it a tried stone then, in regard of his effect, because the whole building was to be squared and fitted vpon this stone, otherwise of necessitie the whole house must sinke.

The word corner which he adds to it, signifies, that it beares vp all the weight of the building; and by this title (which is also giuen him in Pal. 118. 22.) his power and vertue is recommended vnto vs. Lastly, he calles it a foundation, or (if we may so speake) a foundation fundamentall: thus proceeding by little and little, and as it were by degrees to the commendation of this stone. For he shewes that it is not a common stone, or such a one as is taken out of many which serue in the building: but that it is a rare and excellent one; euen such an one as beares vp all the weight thereof. It is a stone then; yet so as it fills the whole corner: and is so the corner stone, that the whole building is laid vpon it. For as no man can lay any other foundation, 1 Cor. 3. 11. so must all the Church & her members rest and be built vpon it only.

Some translate the second part of the verse as if it were an exhortation, Let not him that beleeueth make haste: but I rather take it in the future tence, in regard it agrees best both with the scope of the text, as also because it is approved of by the authoritie of S. Paul. I denie not but the Apostles followed the Greeke translation, and in vsing their libertie, were content to giue the sense of the place without looking curiously to the words: but they haue in nothing altered the sense, but haue rather truly and naturallie deliuered the same: respecting the drift to which it was rightlie applied. As often then as they alledge a text out of the old testament, they diligentlie

Diligentlie retaine both the end and uſe of it. The Apoſtle alleading this propheſie tranſlated it according to the Greeke; Who ſoever beleueth, ſhall not be confounded, Rom. 9.33. which agrees with the Prophet: for queſtionles his meaning was to ſay, That he which beleueth, ought to be quiet and ſill; ſo as to deſire nothing beſides; neither wauering in vncertentie, nor yet haſting to ſeek out new remedies, but ſhall ſullie content himſelfe in his faith only. The tranſlation is proper then as you ſee, in regard the word haſt notes out ſeruenice, or trembling. In a word, the Prophet meant to eſtimate faith by this inſeſtimable ſtute; becauſe in it we find aſſured reſt and quiet. Whence it followes, that we ſhall alwaies be in vniquietnes and vexation of mind, vntill ſuch time as we haue attained it: for no other haue remains for vs to harbor in in ſafetie, but y^e truth of God, vpon which, if our faith be firmly ſetled, we ſhall find it the only meanes to ſee vs in reſt and tranquillitie of mind. The ſame Apoſtle in another place deſcribes vnto vs the fruite of this faith, where he ſaith, That being iuſtified thereby, wee haue peace with GOD, Rom. 5.1.

A commendation of faith, in regard of her effect.

No peace without that faith which is grounded vpon the truth of God.

Chriſt is this corner ſtone. Mat. 21. 24. Act. 4. 11. Rom. 9. 33. 1. Pet. 2. 6.

Now the Apoſtles and Euangelists ſhew that this ſtone is Chriſt himſelfe: for when he was ſent into the world the Church was then truly built and ſetled. For firſt, all the promiſes had their ſtedfaſtnes in him: ſecondly, mens ſaluation reſteth vpon him alone. Take away Ieſus Chriſt then, and the Church by and by ſhalles and goes to ruine. It is euident by the very text it ſelfe therefore that this is to be referred vnto Chriſt, without whom we haue no aſſurance of ſaluation, but ſhall be in danger of vtter ruine euer and anon. Moreover, we haue the authoritie of the Euangelists and Apoſtles; yea, the Holy Ghoſt teacheth the ſame plainly by their mouth and miniſtrie.

But if we ſhall ſcan things a little better, it will be eaſie to ſee how theſe things are applied vnto Ieſus Chriſt. Firſt it will be granted that Iſaiah doth not for nought bring in the Lord himſelfe pronouncing this, to whom only it belongs to lay the foundation of his Church, as hath been ſhewed before, and ſhal be touched againe hereafter: and beſides, this ſentence is oft met with in the Pſalmes. For though all men ſhould lay their hands to this worke, yet were they not able to lay the leaſt ſtone aright: it is God alone then that founds and builds his Church, howſoever for this purpoſe it pleaſeth him to uſe the miniſtrie and labors of men. Of whom is it now, I pray you, that we hold Ieſus Chriſt, but of the Father? It was the heavenly Father then who did and performed all theſe things, and appointed his only begotten ſonne to be the foundation of our ſaluation.

Reasons to proue that this ſtone muſt be Chriſt.

It is God himſelfe that hath builded his Church vpon this corner ſtone.

Obiect.

Anſ.

But was not this ſtone laid before? Was not the Church alwaies built vpon this foundation? I confeſſe it was ſo, but only in hope: for Chriſt was not yet manifested in the fleſh: neither had he as yet accompliſhed the office of our Redeemer. The Prophet ſpeakes therefore as of a thing to come, to the end the faithfull might be well aſſured that y^e Church which they then ſaw, not attained only, but woſulhe rent and ſhaken, and falling as it were to the ground, ſhould be eſtabliſhed by a new prop when it ſhall reſt vpon that ſtone which God would put vnder it with his owne hand.

He ſaith, it ſhall be laid in Zion, in regard Chriſt was to come out thence. Which alſo ſerues much for the confirmation of our faith; when wee ſee that he proceeded from that place which was ſo long before appointed vnto him. But Mount Zion now is euerie where, becauſe the bounds of the Church are ſtretched to the ends of the world. Now Chriſt is the true triad ſtone: for all the building muſt be ſquared and proportioned vpon him, ſo as we can not be the building of God, vnleſſe we be fitted vnto him. For which cauſe the Apoſtle commands vs to grow vp in him which is the head, in whom all the bodie ought to be knit and ioined together, Ephes. 4. 15. for our faith muſt be whollie proportioned to Chriſt, to the end he may be the rule of it. He is alſo the corner ſtone, vpon which not only a part of the houſe reſts, but the whole weight and ſubſtance of it; for hence other foundation can any man lay, ſaith S. Paul, but that which is laid, to wit, Ieſus Chriſt, 1. Cor. 3. 12. Now yee ſee wherefore Iſaiah leads vs to this foundation when he brings in the Lord promiſing the reſtauration of his Church: for there was ſuch a woſull deſolation, that it reſembled a waſt wildernes, which could no way be brought into any good ſaſhion but by Chriſt alone.

The Churches ruins can no way be repaired but by Chriſt alone.

In that he is called a ſtone to ſtumble at: this is by accident: for the vnthankfull who reſiſt him by their owne malice, ſinde him to be that which he would not be vnto them. But of this we haue ſpoken in the eight Chapter.

Verſ. 17. Iudgement Will I alſo lay to the rule, and right couſes to the ballance; and the houle ſhall ſweepe away the vaine confidence, and the waters ſhall ouerflow the ſecret place.

IN regard the waſt of the Church was ſuch, as the faithfull durſt ſcarce hope for a better ſtate, he ſhewes that God hath the meanes, readie in his hand to reforme the Church anew. And as before he uſed a ſimilitude taken from building, ſo now alſo by another he teacheth that they needed not to feare as if God were not able in the end to finiſh the good worke of his building begun. In the meane while he doth by the way taxe the pride and inſolencie of ſuch as would be taken to be pillars of the Church; which yet as much as in them lay tooke the next way to ouerturne it. The light of faith was almoſt put out: Gods ſeruiſe was corrupted: ſo that there was a fearefull deſonitic to be ſcene in y^e ſtate of this people, albeit they boſted theſelues to be the royall Prieſthood. Which we ſee now fulfilled in the Papacie. For they ſtick not to belch out glorious titles without any ſhame at all, albeit the lamentable confusion which is to be seene amongst them, doth plainly discouer to all the world that there is no forme of a found Church amongst them. Therefore it is that the Prophet stands to shew at what end the reformation of a true Church ought to begin.

Now it is very likely that the words rule and measure are all one in sense, as may be collected more probable from the 21. Chapter of the 2. booke of the Kings, vers. 13. where the Lord saith, I will spread the line or rule of Samaria vpon Ierusalem, and the measure of the house of Ahab. Albeit I denie not but he alludes to the ballance wherein things are weighed: but let vs remember that both similitudes are taken from buildings, wherein the master carpenters & masons frame all things by rule, that so a iust proportion may be kept in euery part. And thus it is said, That the Lord hath appointed an equall iudgement to restore his Church by, wherein, without that all things areumbled confusedlie together, as the ruinous heapes of an house, to wit, when the wicked are exalted, and the faithfull dejected and afflicted. The same he affirms of Iustice, to wit, that it shall be measured & poized with the ballance, and that all things shall be equalled according to the rule. For by Iustice and iudgement he meanes a iust and lawfull gouernment of the Church, which is opposed to those disguised shewes which the titularie Bishops so much brag of. Isaiah tels vs then that this foundation is not only laid to the end the Church might be new begun, but also perfectlie restored and whollie settled, as they say.

How Iustice
and Iudgement are taken in this place.

The other part of the similitude notes out a most iust equalitie. Nothing can be wanting to the building then if Christ be laid for the foundation: but if he be not laid, all will be full of vanitie and confusion. Now in regard that Iustice and Iudgement could not be received whilste these false confidences tooke place, therefore the Prophet shewes that they shall be swept away, because the wrath of God shall bring downe all pride, and the ouerflowing of waters shall enter in to all these secret corners vpon which they so much relied. He threatens then that the hypocrites shall perish with their vaine brags, and that the Lord in the meane while will not faile to provide for the safetie of his Church.

Nothing wants to the building, if Christ be laid for the foundation.

But he speaks not of these scourges as if the wicked should become any whit the better by them, for lightlie they waxe rather worse and worse. This should be the purgation then, to wit, God would discouer the vaine & false confidence wherof they boasted, after he had drawne the out of their denues. For the wicked thinke they are so couered vnder the cloake of iusthood and vanitie, that no blowes can any way touch them: and that is the cause why they flatter themselves till their iniquitie be found worthis to be hated. But the waters will easily come, that is to say, the wrath of the Lord, which runnes and makes a noyse like a streame of waters that will easily breake into the bottome of their lowest caues.

Vers. 15.

Vers. 18. And your covenant with death shall be disannulled, and your agreement with hell shall not stand: When a scourge shall runne ouer and passe thorow, then shall ye be trod downe by it.

BEFORE he spake against the hypocrits, who obstinately scorned at God and all his threatenings; and also ouerthrew their goodly discourses, because they imagined that death and they were agreed: that is to say, they promised vnto themselves neuer to be touched with any of Gods scourges for their vngodlines: as if with iesting and scoffing out the matter they could haue escaped from Gods hand. Now he giues them to vnderstand, that as it is certaine they must giue accounts of this vnto God, so they shall be ouertaken with feare & terror in despite of their teeth. For when men grow thus secure and fortish, it proceeds from a kind of giddines or deepe sleep which they are fallen into, so as they can not feele y^e greatnes of their sinnes, but the Lord will rouze them out of their drouzines well enough, be they rocked neuer so fast asleepe in it, and wil make their forged couenants to vanish away in the aire. In a word, his meaning is to say, That this peace in which the wicked enioy whilste they thus sleepe in their sinnes shall not last euer, for they shall be forced, will they nil they, to acknowledge God to be their Iudge: and although they intended to giue themselves to pleasure, yet should they be surprized at vnawares, and tossed with troubles and griefes of minde in the midst of their rest. For he will apprehend them as malefactors, who hauing broken prison, scorne their Iudges; raile vpon them; and rise vp in all insolencie against them: but espying the Sergeants at their heeles that pursue them, their courage is by and by cooled, and all their mirth is turned into mourning, and then is their state much worse then if they had neuer broken prison at all. Thus the wicked enioy their pleasure which they take in the forgetfulness of their sinnes committed only for a momēt, but the Lord takes them by the neck, and so affrights their consciences, that they can by no meanes obtaine any quiet.

Vers. 19. When it passeth ouer, it shall take you away: for it shall passe thorow every morning in the day, and in the night, and there shall be only feare to make you vnderstand the hearing.

HE expresth more in this verse then in the former, for he shewes that the reprobrates are neere their destruction, notwithstanding they promise to themselves an eternall happines. The wicked can not but feele the afflictions wherewith they are pressed, but in the meane while they flatter and besot themselves, and thus they thinke to put their misfortunes farre from them. For heare what (duclish) proverbs they breathe out, Torment vs not before the time: Let vs be merry whilist

Diuelish

used by the wicked.

whileſt we may; let vs take our pleaſure, and neuer wax melancholicke without cauſe, or for nothing. But the Prophet tels them here, that there hangs an horrible calamitie ouer their heads which they ſee not.

And he addes every morning: that is to ſay, ſpeedily and continually, in regard the wicked neuer feare the Lord till his hand be vpon them. For ſometimes they feare where no feare is; it being only a blind feare, in regard they know not whence it comes. Moreouer, if God threaten, they grow ſecure; becauſe they take him not to bee their Iudge. And thus they had rather feele his hand, then ſeriuoſitie to bethinke them what a one heeis.

In that he repeats the morning twice, and by and by after, day and night; his meaning is, that the plague ſhal not ceaſe, but ſhall ouerflow euertie day. And that to this end, left they ſhould imagin it to be but a light calamitie, or ſhould teede themſelues with hope of ſome releaſe. For albeit the wrath of God laſts but for a moment towards the faithfull, yet it indures for euer vpon the wicked; for hee neuer ceaſeth to purſue them to the vtmoſt.

The expoſitours agree not about the expoſition of the latter part of the verſe, which I haue tranſlated, Fear oneſy ſhall cauſe to heare: Saut terum tranſlates, Feare giues vnderſtanding to the hearing; but the interpretation following comes neerer the Prophets meaning, Onely armour or feare will make them vnderſtand: that is to ſay; All thoſe that ſhall heare this newes, will become teachable, and will harken to the Lord, becauſe of the rumour which they haue heard. And yet I expound it leſſe conſtrainedly thus, (not ſtanding to reſuſe the expoſitions of others) The time will come, when feare alone will open your eares to receive aduertiſement. As if he ſhould ſay; Hitherunto (I confeſſe) I haue gained little by the warnings I haue giuen you, but the Lord himſelfe will deuſe a meanes to teach you; to wit, by the chaſtiſements and calamities wherewith hee will feare you, that ſo you may know with whom you haue to doe. As for example; a ſorrowfull and carefull father that can no way tame a leaud ſonne, will thus ſay vnto him; Seeing thou deſiſeſt my counſell, the hangman (I feare) muſt one day be thy ſchoolemaſter. And thus deales Iſaiab with the rebels of his time, which ſcorned all his ſermons. The Prophets are no body with you now, ſaith he, but a day will come, that you ſhall know to your coſt, that they haue not ſpoken the truth to you in vaine. Yet all this ſhall not ſerue the turne, becauſe there ſhall be no place left for repentance in ſo late an acknowledgement: for the Lord muſt bee ſought whileſt he is to be found. Did Pharaoh become the better for his chaſtiſements? Exod. 8. 15. What got Iſau by his teares, when hee ſaw himſelfe deſtroyed of his birthright? Gen. 25. 38. For fiſt he was deſtitute of true repentance: ſecondly, there followed none amendment of life: Heb. 12.

By the word feare, he ſhewes how fearfull a thing it is to fall into the hands of the liuing God: Heb. 10. 31. and that his word is neuer deſpiſed, buche reuenger the contempt thereof. Hee takes the word Shemurah here, for that which is heard; to wit, for the doctrine.

Verſ. 20. For the bed is ſtrait that it cannot ſuffice; and the conering narrow, that one cannot wrap himſelfe.

BY this ſimilitude hee adorneſ the former ſentence. For he compares the reprobates that are preſſed with Gods hand, to thoſe that are laid in a ſhort and narrow bed, where they can neither ſtretch nor ſtir any member without much annoiance: ſo that in the place of reſt, they feele nought elie but diſquietneſſe and griefe. As if he ſhould ſay; You ſhall be ſo hampered; that being compaſſed about with extreme pangs, your bed (which is appointed for you to reſt in) ſhall be in ſtead of a racke, or ſome other kind of torture. And if they ſeek to couer theſelues, euē their conering ſhall be too narrow. Thus their miſeries ſhall be doubled vpon them, becauſe in the middeſt thereof, they ſhall be deſtroyed of all neceſſarie comforts. For hee expreſſeth the manner of their miſerie by the ſimilitude of a ſtrait or narrow bed, to the end they might know, that their condition ſhould bee the moſt wretched of all men, in regard Gods vengeance ſhould follow them thicke and threefold, which way ſo euer they turned them, and yet ſhould find no eaſe or redreſſe at all.

Now the Lord is wont to vſe theſe ſimilitudes, to ſhew the end he might frame his ſpeech to our capacities; for otherwiſe we are vnable to conceiue how fearfull his iudgements are. From theſe things we gather then, that the feares wherewith the wicked are troubled and inwrapped, are verie great and terrible, when the Lord begins once to purſue them: for they would gladly hide themſelues then in the deepeſt bowels of the earth, that the Lord might not find them; but he drawes them out into the light, and pins them vp in ſo ſtrait and narrow a roome, that they cannot ſtir a foote.

Verſ. 21. For the Lord ſhall ſtand as in mount Perazim: hee ſhall bee wroth as in the valley of Gebeon, that hee may doe his worke, his ſtrange worke, and bring to paſſe his act, his ſtrange act.

BECAUſE he ſpeakes here of the reprobate and caſtawayes, the Prophet propounds nothing but horrors and extreme vengeance: for as the Lord ſhewes himſelfe good and gracious towards them that are his; ſo hee ſhewes himſelfe terrible and fearful to them whom hee reuengeth. And for prooſe hereof hee allegeth ſuch examples, as wherein the Lord maniſteſt his power for the defence of his people; namely, when he put the Philiftines

It is a miſerie of miſeries to be diſtreſſed, and in the meane while to want neceſſarie comforts.

To what end God is ſaine to vſe theſe and the like ſimilitudes.

A horrible thing to be purſued by the Lord as an angry Iudge.

Chap. 55. 6. Heb. 12. 17.

to flight in the valley of Baal-perazim by the pursuit of David, 2.Sam.5.20.25. 1.Chro.14.11. Secondly, when the Amorites and other enemies were discomfited in the valley of Gibeon by the Israelites, vnder the leading of Ioshua, who obtained such fauour of the Lord that the Sunne and Moone stood still at his request, that he might haue time the better to giue his enemies the foile, Iosh.10.10.

By the word of standing vp, he notes out Gods power, because we thinke him asleepe, or sitting idle in heauen, when he lets the vngodly alone at their ease. It is said that he riseth, or stands vp then, whe in all mens sight he giues testimonies of his might, which especially appears when we behold what great care he hath ouer his Church. And albeit there were sundrie respects which caused the Lord in former times to lift vp his hand against strangers which were the enemies of his chosen, and now to proclaim open warre against the Iewes: yet Isaiah applies these examples very fitlie to his purpose, in regard the Lord provides no lesse for the safetie of his Church by expelling her domesticall enemies, then if he bent his force and weapons of artilerie against alians. He holds them then for no lesse then his enemies, howsoeuer they haue the face to professe themselves his friends and people.

Some thinke he calles this a strange worke, because nothing agrees better to Gods nature then to shew mercie in pardoning sins: for when he is angry, it is against his liking, and therefore puts vpon him another nature as it were contrarie to his owne. Because in Exod.34.6. he proclaimes himselfe to be gracious, mercifull, patient, good, and slow to anger, to which the rest of the Scriptures do accord in many words, and diuers phrases, setting him forth to be infinit in compassion.

Others expound Strange, in regard he was wont in former time to defend his people; it was therefore a rare and strange worke that he should now be so seuerer towards them to roote them out as his enemies. To speake what I thinke, I take this word Strange for wonderfull, and a thing ynheard of: for so we are wont to esteeme those things that are seldome seene among men, who as (we know) are much giuen to woder at new and strange accidents. It is as much then as if he had said, The Lord will not punish you after a common and ordinarie maner, but so strangely, that who soeuer sees or heares of it shall be astonished.

True it is that all the works of God are so many testimonies of his power, yea, the least of them is sufficient to draw vs into an admiration: but in regard they are little respected because they are common, we thinke he works nothing, vnlesse it be by some extraordinary meanes. The Prophet therefore sets before vs the examples of old time, to the end men might know that howsoeuer this was esteemed a wonderfull and strange hand of God, yet it was no new thing with him, seeing he hath shewed the like testimonies of his power long since, and that no lesse great and vnwonted. Yet I receiue it for granted and willingly agree thereunto, that the Prophet opposeth the wicked Israelites heere, to the Philistims and Canaanites: As if he should say, The Lord was wont to shew miracles when he saued his people, but now he will do them for their destruction: for seeing the Israelites haue so farre degenerated, they shall feele the hand of God in their perdition, which their fathers felt in their preservation.

Verf. 22. Now therefore be no mockers lest your bonds increase: for I haue heard of the Lord of hosts a consumption, euen determined vpon the whole earth.

HE againe aduertiseth these wicked ones whom before he had called scorners, that their subtle deuises, contempts, flouts and cauils should stand them in no stead, because all their fetches should vanish into smoke; and herewithall exhorts such vnto repentance in whom there was yet left any hope of healing. For this cause he repeats the same thing often, to trie if he could awaken them: for he affirms, if they will obstinatlie stand out, they shal do nothing elsse but more and more weaue the web of their own ruine. Whereas some in stead of bonds, translate Chastisements, it agrees not well with the context, which contains in it a very apt similitude, borrowed from nets. For as the Fox that is taken in the net, or snare, fastens the knot the more whilest he endeouers with strugling to escape, and to saue himselfe: so the wicked, the more they seeke starting-holes, the further they worke themselves fast in the snare. They will needs be running out of Gods reach, and will kick against the pricks, like the iades, who in deuoer by all meanes to throw their rider: but what get they in the end by such rebellion and stubbornnes; nothing but the harder and heauier strokes.

By this wee are taught how to proceede with wicked persons, but then especially whe wee see them destitute of the feare of God: Truly we must forthwith threaten them that they shall escape by none of their cunning shifts or iests from that wrath of God which is readie to seaze vpon them. Hence also we are admonished, that it is no good iesting with God, because he shewes vs here as in a glasse, and that from the beginning of the world, what the end of such haue been as haue set light by Gods admonitions and warnings.

Now to the end this prophesie might the rather be beleued, Isaiah shewes that he speaks nothing but that which was revealed to him by the Lord of hosts. The word Calah signifies sometimes Perfection, sometimes Consumption, as was said Chap.10.23, but it is to be taken here for Consumption, because the Prophets drift is to shew that the Lord is determined quicklie and whollie to roote out this sinfull generation from off the earth. Two things are comprehended in this verse then: first, that the world is neerer to a fearefull destruction (vnlesse any had rather to referre this word earth to the land of Iudea, which I receiue not.) Secondly, that the day is assigned,

God provides no lesse for the safetie of his Church by expelling her domesticall enemies, then if he bent his power against strangers.

In what sense this word strange is taken in this place.

assigned, in which it shall be done, and that it is also at hand. The word beard, is here taken for reuelation: and thus he saith it was reuealed vnto him. For as the Lord determined to vse the ministerie of his Prophets, so did hee also reueale his secrets vnto them, that they might be the expositors of them. It is as much then as if hee had said; The whole world is filled with wicked impieties, the reprobate reioyce in their rebellion, as if there were no God at all to punish them: but hee will shew himselfe Iudge and auenger thoroughout the earth, or in all the quarters of Iudea; neither shall any part thereof be exempt from calamities and affliction, in regard of the open contempt of God and his Lawes. Now albeit Iſaiah published these things in his time, yet they no lesse belong to ours, then to his: for God will shew himselfe to be alwaies one and the same, and hath been wont to execute his iudgements with like equitie and iudgement.

Verſ. 23. Hearken ye: and heare my voice: hearken ye and heare my speeche.

The Prophet vseth a preface, as if hee meant to speake of a thing of great importance: for we are not wont to call for auisance, or to will the hearers to giue their attention, vnlesse some matter of good consequence is to be propounded. And yet it seems Iſaiah speakes here of common things, as of silling, sowing, threshing, and such like. But the Prophet meant by this to raise the mindes of his auditors about these earthly matters: for speaking of Gods iudgements, and shewing how great his wisdom is by which hee gouernes the world, albeit the wicked sort thinke that all things goe vpon wheels at a venture, his desire was to teach and expresse an high mysterie by familiar similitudes, such as were well enough knowne to all.

We often complain, as if God altogether wincked at the praesises of the wicked, because hee thunders not downe vpon them at our pleasures: but the Prophet telles vs that God ordaines nothing but that which is lawfull and right. This preface then hath this drift; namely, to teach men how foole-hardy they be to set God to schoole, in that they controll his iudgements, and interpret them to the worst; the reason is, because hee hath set a schoolemistrie before them in the ordinarie course of nature, in which they may behold these things as cleerely as in a glasse. Behold here then a secret complaint against the blindnesse of men, who stumble at the very noone day. He shewes that they are senselesse and brutish, in not cōprehending the workes of God that are so apparant; and yet are so bold, as to subiect that to their senses, and to controll that, which is high and hidden from them. For example, Saint Paul in speaking of the resurrection, calles them fooles which know not the power of God in the feedes that are cast into the earth. Thou foole, saith hee, that which thou sowest, is not quickened, except it die first: so Iſaiah here pronounceth them senselesse fooler, who are not able to comprehend the wisdom of God in so plaine & euident things. To be short, hee affirmes men to be widelesse and blind in beholding Gods workes, when they are to profite by them.

Verſ. 24. Doth the Plowman plow all the day to Ioy? Doth he open and breake the clots of his ground?

This place is vsually expounded, as if God taxed the people of ingratitude, in regard that hee had plaiced the part of an husbandman with his ground, and had left no cost or paines vnbestowed; but yet had not receiued that fruit which he expected. And thus the Iewes expound it; whom both Greekes and Latins haue followed: but the Prophet meant another thing. For he ioynes this doctrine with verſ. 22. in which hee had threatened that the destruction of Iudah; or of the whole earth was reuealed vnto him; and therefore now adds, that God doth not alwaies stretch out his arme, neither doth he euer keepe one rate in punishing the rebellions of man, but often times winkes thereat, and defers his iudgements for a time. This patience of the Lord the wicked abuse, taking the greater libertie thereby to sinne; as Salomon well sheweth; that is, because all things fall out alike both to good and bad; and that the most desperate wretches doe prosper, when the faithfull in the meane while are subiect to many miseries; yea often to greater then the very reprobates, as cast-awaies: In a word, when the vngodly perceiue no difference (in outward appearance) to be put betweene the godly & themselves, they either thinke there is no God at all, or else that things are gouerned by the disposition of blind fortune. Iſaiah answers to this on this manner; Know you not that God hath the times and seasons in his owne power, and that hee hath skill enough to dispose of his matters in all ages? If the Plowman be not alway plowing his ground, nor breaking of his clots, is any man therefore to taxe him of ignorance? Is it not his wisdom rather that causeth him for a time to cease? For what should a man doe in turning vp the ground continually, but trouble himselfe to no purpose, vnlesse it were to hinder the growth of his corne? Much lesse may God bee said then to doe things at random, or without iudgement; for he knowes how and when to performe his worke.

High mysteries are sometimes expressed by common and familiar similitudes.

The drift of this preface.

1. Cor. 15. 36

ther shall a cart wheele be turned about upon the Cummin, but the fitches are beaten out with a staffe, and Cummin with a rod.

28. Bread corne when it is threshed, he doth not alway thresh it, neither doth the wheele of his cart still make a noyse, neither will he breake it with the teeth thereof.

Now he speakes of the seede, whereof the Plowman puts not in as much as he can; neither powres he it out by heapes, but views the ground, and then sows it with as much as is convenient: for otherwise, great heapes would lie and rot, and there would not so much as one kinnell take roote. Againe, he mingles not divers seeds together, but reserves one part of his field for wheat, another for fitches, and the rest for Cummin: all which he doth by measure, which is here vnderstood by the word Shorab, which ought thus to be vnderstood as I take it, and not for good, or excellent, for he speakes heere of measuring. He saith the like of reaping and threshing: for corne is not beaten out all after one manner, but wheat is beaten out with the cart wheele, or some ragged or toothed instrument: fitches with a rod, and Cummin with a flaile. Now he speakes heere after the custome of his Countrey: for wheat is threshed in France only with a flaile, Prouence only excepted. To be short, his meaning is, that euery kind of grain is not beaten out after one fashion, but euery one hath such an Instrument as fits the nature thereof. Also that the Husbandman is not alway threshing, but keeps a measure, lest otherwise he should bruise the corne.

But who sautes him this knowledge? Surely God only. If they then be so well instructed, and so prouident in these small things, what are we to thinke of that great Master and Doctor who hath taught it them? Knowes not he how to keepe a steadie hand and an euen carriage in his works? Foresees not he the fittest times when to execute his iudgements: to wit, when to turne vp the wicked, and to cause his Plowe and Harrooes to passe ouer them? Doth not he know the fittest time when to thresh them out? yea, and how many blowes, and with what kind of punishment he is to strike men? Knowes not he what is fittest for euery time, and for euery person? Shall not hee shat hath framed the whole order of nature, dispose of things by equall proportion? Dare men be so foole-hardie to quarrell with him; or to call his wisdome in question? In a word, the Prophets meaning is, that no man ought resist to censure the Lord, if he bring not the way of the wicked vpon his owne head by and by: but rather that men are in this behalfe to repress their boldnes, seeing for the most part they mistake things euen in small matters.

For if one that knowes not what belongs to Husbandrie should see a Plowman driving his Plow ouer the fields, making furrowes, and breaking the clods, turning his oxen this way and that way, and following them at an inch, he would surely laugh y man to scorne, and it may be would thinke it a pretie sport for little children: but the Plowman on the contrarie knowing what he doth, can easilie condemne & conuince such an one of rashnes and ignorance: for such as are modest, will iudge that these things were not done in vaine, nor at random, albeit he knew not the reason. Would not a man thinke that the feed which is cast into the ground were lost? An ignorant bodie would iudge it to be so. And yet if they should giue such a sentence (as those that lack knowledge are alwaies the forwardest and boldest in giuing their verdict) would not men of vnderstanding reprove and condemne such for their rashnes, and that iustlie? Now if the case stands thus, how will the Lord deale with vs (thinke we) if we presume to controll his works, which are so farre about our reach, and altogether incomprehensible. Iudge we then by this, how much we ought to flee all ouerweening: and on the other side, in what sobrietic and modestie we are to keepe vnder all our thoughts. For if it be our duties to walke in modestie with men, and not rashlie to condemne that wherof we are ignorant, ought we not much more to walke thus with our God?

As oft then as we shall thinke of the calamities wherwith the Church is so many waies afflicted, let vs not by and by crie out that God hath cast her off, as if because the wicked are let loose, therefore they shall presentlie haue their willes: but let vs on the contrarie assure our selues that the Lord will prouide a remedie for vs when his time appointed is come; and in the meane while let vs reuerentlie and hartilie submit our selues vnder his iust iudgements. Now if any be pleased by taking a narrower view of these words, to gather, that some are punished sooner, some later, as being deferred for a season: this will not only be found probable, but it is also fullie agreed vnto by the Prophet. Hence then there is ministred vnto vs a singular consolation, to wit, the Lord will so moderate his strokes, that at no hand he will bruise or breake in pieces those that are his seruants. Indeed he destroyes the wicked and brings them to nothing; but he corrects his children, that being thereby purged and tamed, they may be brought home into his garner.

Verf. 29. This also commeth of the Lord of hostes, which is wonderfull in counsell, and excellent in worke.

Some expound this place as if the Prophet should say, that this knowledge of Husbandrie comes of the Lord: but I rather thinke it to be the application of the things that went before. For as he hath set forth Gods wisdome in the smallest matters, so would he now raise our minds higher, that we might learne with the greater reuerence to consider of his secret and wonderfull iudgements. We may, and no doubt ought (by the way) to note, as touching that which is contained in the 26. verse, that not Husbandrie alone, but all

There is a place in 2. Tim. 2.19.20. which answers to Master Caluins exposition touching this text.

If we ought to iudge modestlie of mans actions, much more of Gods.

God destroyes the wicked, he only corrects mans actions, he only tames his children.

We are not to quarrell with the Lord, if he bring not his iudgements speedily vpon the heads of the wicked, but rather to repress our boldnes in this behalfe.

All profitable ſciences the gift of God. all other profitable arts alſo are the gifts of God, who powres into their vnderſtandings, choſe artificiall and cunning inuentions. Men therefore ought in no caſe to wax proud of them, or to attribute the knowledge hereof vnto themſelues; as thoſe of old time haue done, who being vnthankfull vnto God, haue deſiſed thoſe whom they thought to bee the deuſers of arts. Thence came the heapes of ſo many goddes which the heathen haue forged vnto themſelues, out of the ſhop of their owne braine. From out of this workehouſe haue proceeded the great Ceres, Triptolime, Mercurie, and infinit others more, ſo highly renowned by the words and writings of niem.

But our Prophet ſhewes, that as theſe ſciences were giuen them from God, ſo ought they to be referred to his glory, as to him that is the onely author and maſter workeman. And if this eſteeme be to be held of husbandry and other handicrafts, what ſhall wee ſay of the noble and liberall ſciences; as of Phyſicke, Law, Aſtronomie, Geometry, Logicke, and the like? Shall we not much more affirme, that theſe are the gifts of God? Nay, ſhal we not both conſider & acknowledge his goodneſſe in the beſtowing of them, that ſo as well in the leaſt, as in the greateſt thereof, we may ſet forth his honour and praife?

If God be the author of handicrafts, much more of Liberall arts.

THE XXIX. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. Ab altar, altar of the Citie that David dwelt in: adde yeere vnto yeere: let them kill lambs.*

It ſeems this ſhould be another Sermon: in which Iſaiah threatens Ieruſalem. Hee calles it Ariel, that is to ſay, the Altar of God; becauſe the whole ſtrength of the Citie depended vpon the Altar.

For howſoeuer the Citizens truſted in other meanes whereof they had great ſtore; yet they chiefly relied vpon the Temple and the altar, more then vpon any other defences. They thought themſelues inuincible indeed, by reaſon of their power and forces: but aboue all, they held themſelues in a fort vterly impregnable, in regard that the Lord couered them vnder his wings. Now they imagined that God was with them as long as they retained the Altar, and the ſacrifices. Some thinke that the Temple is here called Ariel, becauſe it was proportioned like a lion; to wit, broad before, and narrow behind: but I had rather vnderſtand it ſimply of the Altar; and the rather, for that Ezechiel alſo giues it this name, Chap. 43. 15. This prophecy doubtleſſe was directed to the whole Citie; but we muſt note the Prophets drift, which is to plucke away from the Iewes this fond truſt, becauſe they thought God would ſurely helpe them, as long as the Altar and ſacrifices laſted. For they bragged of them, as thoſe who vntruely perſwaded themſelues that they had ſerued God to the full, albeit their lues were vile and wicked.

In the next place hee bends his ſpeech againſt the Citie, which hee adorneſ with a goodly title, by calling it the Citie that David once dwelt in, and yet onely by way of yeelding ſo much vnto them: for he will afterwards reſute theſe their vaine pretext, ſo full of vannie.

Some by this word vnderſtand little Ieruſalem; that is to ſay, the innermoſt Citie, which was alſo compaſſed about with walles: for two Citieſ were compriſed in one as it were, becauſe it was enlarged and extended the confines thereof further off then at the beginning: but as I thinke this place ſhould be vnderſtood of the whole Citie. He mentions Dauid, in regard they gloried as much in his name, as if Gods bleſſing had bin continually tied to the palace royall: for God indeed had promiſed that Dauid's Kingdome ſhould indure for euer.

Hence wee may gather how ſottiſh and ridiculous the Papiſts are now become, who will needes lincke the Church to Saint Peters chaire; and thus would make the world beleue, that God can no where find a place to dwell in, but in the chaire of Rome. Wee diſpute not with them now, whether Peter was euer Biſhop of Rome or no: but let vs grant it were vndoubtedly ſo, yet dare they affirme that Rome had at any time ſuch like promiſe that Ieruſalem had? I his is my reſt, here will I dwell, for I haue a delight therein: Pſ. 132. 14. But what if God had made them ſuch a promiſe? doe we not ſee how Iſaiah threatens Ieruſalem; to wit, that God is driuen thence, when his word was reiecteſt, and his pure worſhip corrupted. What ſhall become of Rome then that hath no promiſe at all? Date theſe compare with Ieruſalem? If God curſed that holy Citie which he had ſpecially choſen; what will he ſay, thinke you, to other Citieſ, who haue ouerthrowne all his holy lawes and ordinances?

Adde yeere vnto yeere. The Prophet ioynes this with the former, becauſe the Iewes thought themſelues elcere aboard, as they ſay, when they had a little breathing and reſpite giuen them: for the wicked imagin that there is a truce betwene God and them, when they ſee no ſignes of his wrath likely to ſeaize vpon them: for this cauſe they promiſe to themſelues nothing but peace, peace; whileſt the Lord ſuffers them to inioy eaſe and proſperitie. Againſt ſuch ſecuritie the Prophet threatens, that God is readie to execute his vengeance; notwithstanding they offered their ſacrifices ordinarily, and renewed them years after yeere. Hence we may learne, that albeit the Lord defers his chastisements, and the executiō of his vengeance, yet we ought not therefore to defer our repentance. For what if hee spares and beares with vs for a time, hath hee therefore forgotten our sins? No such matter. Let vs beware how we build our peace then vpon so slipperie a foundation. Let vs at no hand abuse his patience and long suffering, but let the same rather draw vs to repentance, and to the seeking of free reconciliation with him.

Verf. 2. But I will bring the Altar into distresse: and there shall be heavinesse and sorrow; and it shall be vnto mee like an Altar.

I thinke that the letter Vau, should bee taken here for a particle aduerfatiue; as if he should say, Yet will I execute my iudgements vpon you, and will auenge my quarrell, although it seeme for a time, that in thus sparing of you, I am at one with you. In the next place hee threatens them with sorrow and lamentation, in stead of their festiual daies. Some thinke the word sorrow to bee an adiectiue: but I am not of their mind; for it is taken in the same sense in the Lamentations of Ieremiah, Chap. 2. 5. The Prophet shewes then that the Lord will bring this Citie into such distresse, that the Iewes shall well perceiue they haue not to do with men, but with God: so that howsoeuer the Assyrians made war vpon them, yet they should know to their cost, that God was their chiefe Commander and Captaine.

Where hee addes, that it shall bee to him like Ariel, it cannot agree to the Temple onlie: for his meaning is, that the Citie and all shall be sprinkled with the slaughter which the enemies shall make in Ierusalem; which he compares to an altar, whereupon beasts are slaine to be sacrificed: for as oft as the wicked are destinacō to destructiō, the Prophets compare the same to a sacrifice. In a word, in that he alludes thus to the altar, he affirms that the whole Citie shall bee like Ariel, because it shal ouerflow with the blood of the slaine. Whence it is manifest enough, that an outward profession of Gods worship, together with the externall ceremonies and tokens of his fauourable presence are to little purpose, vnlesse a francke and cheerefull obedience be ioyned therewith. And thus in raunting the hypocrits (who prophanely presented their beasts in sacrifice to God, as if by such meanes they thought to appease his anger) he saith, that all their labour is lost: for hauing polluted the Temple & the Altar, he relles them that none can sacrifice rightly vnto God, but in killing and sacrificing those that were appointed to the slaughter thoroughout the Citie; as if he should say, You shall be murdered and killed in euerie place. He calles this sacrifice a violent slaughter, by an improper phrase of speech; because they refused to offer themselues willingly vnto God.

Verf. 3. And I will besiege thee as a circle, and fight against thee on a mount, and will cast vp ramparts against thee.

BY the verbe Chaddur, hee alludes to the roundnesse of a ball; and signifies as much as if in our vsuall speech we should say, I will compass him about; and thus shewes, that they can no way escape. Where it is added, I will fight against thee on a mount, it concerns the second meanes by which a Citie is to be taken: for they vse to make incurfions heere and there, or to lay a standing siege. Now he confirms the doctrine of the former verse, & shewes that God should be the chiefe Leader in this war, and that the Assyrians should vnder take nothing but by his commandment, notwithstanding themselues were thrust forward with an inordinate lust and desire of reigning ouer the poore Iewes. For it was verie requisite that this people should be fully perfwaded, that God was the author of all the calamities wherewith they were oppressed, to the end they might thereby come to a narrow examination of their impieties. Now the oftener wee meete with this doctrine in the holy Scriptures; so much the more carefull ought wee to be in imprinting the same well in our hearts: for the blessed Spirit of God is not wont to repeat one thing againe and againe without iust cause.

Verf. 4. So shalt thou be humbled, and shalt speake out of the ground, and thy speech shall bee as out of the dust: thy voice also shall be out of the ground, like him that hath a spirit of diuination, and thy talking shall whisper out of the dust.

HE derides the pride of the Iewes, who as long as they were in prosperitie (as hypocrits are wont to doe) despised all admonitions and threatnings. The Prophet therefore saith, that they should one day be humbled: to wit, after their pride shall bee taken downe. Not that they shall change their manners, but because shame shal constraine them to turne their wonted mirth into mourning. And therefore here must be a close opposition supplied: for he speaks to those iolly fellows, who seemed to haue the world at will, who with big looks disdaind every one, as if they had bin subiect to no God at all. Nay, they feared not to load him with blasphemies and iniuries, and contemned his holy word. This pride, saith Isaiah, shall be brought downe well enough, and this intollerable arrogancie shall cease.

In the next words hee expresseth this further by a similitude, laying, that they shall whisper and speake, as it were, out of the holes of the earth. For he compares the voice of those which in times past was so loud and high, to the speech of Coniurers, who giue their an-fwets out of ſome hollow caue digged vnder the earth, mumbling out I know not what confuſed noiſe; for they ſpeake, with no diſtinct voice. His meaning is then that theſe haughtie ones ſhall be like vnto them.

Some expound this as if the Prophet meant to ſay, that their chaſtiſement ſhould nothing profit them: but the text croſſeth that ſenſe; and beſides, he will by and by ſhew that the Iewes ſhould be brought to repentance. But firſt of all he terrifies them, to the end he may beate downe their pride, becauſe they did ſtoutlie & rebellioſlie deſpiſe all the threatenings of the Prophets. The humbling therefore whereof he ſpeakes ſignifies nothing elſe but that they ſhould be couered with ſhame, in ſuch wiſe, that they ſhould not dare to aduance themſelues, nor to vtter forth their ſwelling words of vanitie.

Verſ. 5. Moreover, the multitude of thy ſtrangers ſhall be like ſmall duſt, and the multitude of ſtrong men ſhall be as chaffe that paſſeth away, and it ſhall be in a moment euen ſuddenlie.

I Will firſt recite the opinions of others, and then that which to me ſeemes moſt probable. All (in a manner) do thinke that this ſhould be ſpoke of the enemies of the Iewes; for they take the word Strangers for enemies, and ſo they affirme that the multitude of thoſe who ſhould oppreſſe the Iewes ſhall be like the duſt, that is to ſay, infinite. But conſidering all things circūſpectlie, I incline rather to another opinion, to wit, that the Prophet ſpeakes by way of contempt of the fortrefſes and garifons whereupon the Iewes relied. For they had ſouldiers out of forreine Countries that were valiant vnder their pay. And thus I interpret the word Arifsm, which properlie ſignifies ſo much; neither do I wonder a little that ſome of the Rabbins ſhould take it for the heathen or wicked. In regard the Iewes then drew vnto themſelues diuers garifons out of ſtrange Countries, they thought they were cock-ſure, and out of danger. The Prophet on the contrary threatens that their garifons ſhall ſkirmiſh in vaine, notwithstanding their companies be many in number, for they ſhall be but as duſt or chaffe, that is to ſay, like vnprofitable, oſcourings, ſo as they ſhall haue neither ſtrength nor actiuitie. Hence may we obſerue, that be our riches or abundance neuer ſo much, yet all ſhall turne to ſmoke as ſoone as the Lord ſhall but blow vpon it. The preparations which men make laſt awhile it may be, but when the Lord ſhall euen but liſt vp his hand, all ſtrength muſt vaniſh and become like chaffe.

In the end of the verſe ſome expound, that a ſound ſhall ariſe ſuddenlie, and as in a moment from the inuaſion of the enemies: but I rather referre this word, ſhall be, to the time that this ſhall endure, which ſhall be but ſhort, as faith the Prophet: for his meaning is, that theſe garifons ſhal not hold out long, but ſhall vaniſh away in a moment. Men ſhall boaſt but in vaine therefore, ſeeing God is their enemy.

Verſ. 6. Thou ſhalt be viſited of the Lord of hoſtes with thunder and ſtoking, and a great noiſe, a Whirlwinde, and a tempeſt, and a flame of deuouring fire.

HE addes the cauſe why all theſe multitudes of garifons ſhall be like ſtubble, ſetting it forth by a contrarie ſimilitude. For he oppoſeth the wrath and viſitation of the Lord of hoſtes againſt theſe ſouldiers: For alas, how will ſtraw and ſtubble be able to reſiſt the flame of a deuouring fire? How ſhall duſt be able to abide the force of the whirlwinde? His meaning is then that the vengeance of God ſhall be ſo great, that no preparations ſhall be able to withſtand it. And in this ſenſe he thinks the text conuertes well; the parts whereof would not anſwere proportionable one to another if we ſhould follow another expoſition. Now by this wee learne, that our enemies which aſſaile vs ſhall neuer attempt more againſt vs then the Lord ſhall permit. If he then be pleaſed to defend vs, our aduerſaries can not hurt vs, although they ſhould ſtirre vp all the world againſt vs. On the contrary, is he minded to correct vs? We can reſiſt his wrath neither by weapons nor any fortrefſes whatſoever, for he will ſweepe them away as with a whirlwinde; yea, he will conſume them like a deuouring flame, that leaues nothing behind it.

Verſ. 7. And the multitude of all the nations that fight againſt the Altar ſhall be as a dreame or viſion by night: euen all they that make the warre againſt it, and lay ſiege vnto it.

I Expound this verſe otherwiſe then ſome do, who thinke that the Prophet meant to comfort the faithfull, which I confeſſe is not without great ſhew of reaſon. And ſo it containes a very excellent doctrine, to wit, that the enemies ſhall be like thoſe that dreame, when the Lord ſhall diſappoint them of their hope, euen whileſt they imagined they were ſure of the pray. But this interpretation (for ought I ſee) ſeemes not to agree very well with the text. Sometime it fallies out that a ſentence ſounds ſo goodly in ſhew, that we are drawne to ſuch a liking of it that it ſteales from vs the true and natural meaning thereof, ſo as we neither aduifedlie conſider the text it ſelfe, nor yet take any great paines to ſeek out the authors intent and purpoſe.

Let vs ſee then whether the Prophets meaning be as they ſay, for ſeeing he ſtill continues to denounce threatenings in the verſes following, I doubt not but he proſecutes his ſpeech in this place, which otherwiſe ſhould be broken off abruptly in this ſentence. For he rebukes and taxeth the Iewes for their obſtinacie, in that they durſt be ſo bold to deſpiſe God & all his threatenings. To be ſhort, he reprooues their falſe truſt and confidence by a very fit ſimilitude, ſaying, that the enemy ſhould ſuddenlie come vpon the Iewes euen at that time when they thought them-

The firſt member of this ſeuenth verſe is explained in the verſe following.

We muſt not eaſily be carried away to like of ſuch a ſenſe of ſcripture as ſteales from vs the meaning of the Holy Ghoſt, how goodly a ſhew ſoever it ſeemes to haue.

felles safe and out of all danger; so that the thing shall be so sudden and v unexpected, that it shall resemble a dreame. Although then (saith the Prophet) thou art now forging in thy braine a perpetuall rest vnto thy selfe, yet God shall easily awake thee, and plucke this thy confidence away from thee.

Now the Prophet tauntingly saith the Iewes dreamp, because being plunged in their voluptuousnesse, they neither felt nor saw a nic thing, but (onely) forged to themselves such a happinesse in this drowfinesse, that it held their mindes amazed and confounded. Thence hee gathers, that the enemy should come as in a dreame, to scarre these dreamers. For it often fallcs out, that a quiet and sweet sleepe, is interrupted with fearefull dreames. It also comes to passe that the pleasant things which they dream of, serue them to no vse: for albeit they thinke nothing lesse, yet the alarm will be sounded in an instant. But this would be somewhat obscure, if the Prophet should not explain his meaning more fully in the verse following.

Verf. 8. And it shall bee like as an hungry man dreameth, and behold he eateth; and when hee awaketh, his soule is emptie: or like as a thirstie man dreameth, and loe he is drinking; and when hee awaketh, behold he is faint, and his soule longeth: so shall all the multitude of all Nations bee that fight against mount Zion.

HE compares the Iewes to men hungerstarued, who sleepe indeede; but in the meane while, their stomacke is emptie and yearnes after meate: and thus it is a thing verie incident vnto them, to bee dreaming of that naturall sustenance which they want. So then when the Iewes should be awaked, they should resemble affamished persons. For the Lord admonished them by his Prophets daily, and called them to the heavenly banquet of his word. But they made light of it, neither would they be awaked by it: for they chose rather to play the sleepe beasts in their finnes, then to be filled with these sacred delicacies. Whilest they thus rocked their consciences asleepe then, they thought they needed nothing, but were thoroughly furnished for all alliaies. Isaiah telles them that this is but a dreame or deceitfull vision: for when they shall be well awaked by a sudden calamitie, they shall then feele how lanke and emptie they were; and that the opinion of fullnesse wherewith they were besotted before, was but vaine & deceitfull. For as the hungry which haue such dreames, are the more greeued by them; so the people who were falsly persuaded that all went well with them, shall be much more molested thereby, then if they had had no such conceit to possesse their heads; but had rather confessed their nakednesse and pouertie. This maner of speech seemes somewhat strange at the first, when hee saith, that the multitude of those which fought against Ariel, should be as a dreame, &c. but we must resolue it thus: when the Iewes should falsly persuade themselves of deliuerance, as if the enemy were gone far off; they should then immediately feele how much they were beguiled; euen like vnto one that being hungry, and dreames he is filling his belly with good cheere; when hee wakes, is more strongly pressed with hunger, then if he had dreamed no such dreame at all. I see nothing heere then which any way appertaines to consolation: for hee goes on still with the same matter, and cries out against the obstinacie and contempt of the Iewes, whom hee could moue neither by any admonitions nor threatnings whatsoever.

Verf. 9. Stay your selues and wonder; they are blind, and make you blind; they are drunken, but not with wine; they stagger, but not with strong drinke.

THE Prophet holds on his purpose still, and sharply taxeth this grosse sottishnes of the people. Others translate, Be astonished: but I had rather take it in another sense, to wit, that albeit they stay long vpon this thought, yet notwithstanding they cannot auoid it, but that their mindes will be astonished in long thinking vpon it. In a word, he meant to say, that God would so ouerwhelme their thoughts, that they should find no euation nor issue, although they brake their braines neuer so much, in deuising how to find it out. And forthwith hee giues a reason why they should profit themselves nothing at all, notwithstanding they were so diligent in the matter, and had setled their resolution thereupon; to wit, because they should be like drunkards. His meaning is then, that it must be attributed vnto their sluggishnesse and benumbednesse, that they were not able to discern nor comprehend any of Gods workes.

Wee see the truth of this fulfilled at this day in many, who haue their senses so possessed and intoxicate with a spirituall giddinesse of braine, that they are as blind as moles euen in things manifest and plaine: and although God sets vp a most cleere light of his iustice and equity, they are so hoodwinked, that in regard of this their confused sight, they wax so much the more senselesse. Now such a blockishnesse is a iust punishment, whereby God auengeh himselfe vpon their infidelitie.

But that we may apply this sentence to our vs, we are to obserue that the Prophets words are not to be taken here, as if hee commanded them to stay and to aduise longer vpon it; but rather as I haue said, taxeth (and withall derides) their sottishnesse. It is as much then as if he had said; Thinke vpon it as long as you will, you shall vnderstand nothing. For his meaning is, that they are destitute of sound iudgement and vnderstanding, and therefore doe in vaine consider of Gods workes: so that as the mole receiues no benefit by the light of the Sunne, no more is Verse 7.

Verse 8.

This as I think, belongs to verf. 7.

It poſſible for thoſe that are ſpiritualle blinded to comprehend the glorious acts of the Lord.

When he calles them blinde, his meaning is, that we are created naturalle to haue reaſon and vnderſtanding whereby to conſider of Gods works: It is by accident therefore (as we ſay) if we be blind; ſo that if ſuch a giſtineſſe be fallen vpon vs, ſo heaue a iudgement ought iuſtice to be imputed to our own vnthankfulnes. He oppoſeth ſtaggering of ſpirit, to a quiet and peaceable minde; for he meanes ſuch a diſquietnes as cauſeth the vnderſtanding to ſhake and reele.

Verſ. 10. For the Lord hath covered you With the ſpirit of ſlumber, and hath ſhut vp your eyes: the Prophets and your chiefe Seers hath he covered.

THAT he might the better ſhew the cauſe of this blinding, he attributes it vnto the iudgement of God, who by this meanes a- uenged himſelfe vpon the peoples impietie. For as it belongs to him to giue eyes to ſee cleerely, and to enlighten a mans vnderſtanding with the ſpirit of iudgement and reaſon, ſo belongs it to him alone to put out all the light thereof when he ſees that by a peruerſe and obſtinate hatred of the truth he willingly deſire darknes. Are men blinded then, and that principallie in things that are moſt euident and plaine? Let them acknowledge that this proceeds from Gods iuſt ſeueritie.

He addes alſo, that the people are deprived of the helps and meanes which ſhould bring the light of knowledge vnto them, and ſhould be guides to direct them in their way. For to this vſe are Prophets ordeined, which he notes out by theſe two words Nebiim and Hachozim. In a word, his meaning is, that not thoſe who only are endued with reaſon and vnderſtanding, ſhall be deprived of common ſenſe, but euen the Doctours and Teachers themſelues who ſhould be lights vnto others ſhould become as ignorant as beaſts, ſo as they ſhould haue no knowledge of the right way: yea, they ſhould be ſo farre off from governing others, that they ſhould not be able to gouerne themſelues.

Verſ. 11. And the viſion of them all is become vnto you as the words of a booke ſealed vp, which they deliuer to one that can reade, ſaying, Reade this, I pray thee: and he ſhall ſay, I can not, for it is ſealed.

12. And the booke is giuen vnto him that cannot reade, ſaying, Reade this I pray thee: and he ſhall ſay, I can not reade.

THE Prophet expreſſeth that more cleerely which he touched before, namely, that the Iewes ſhould be ſo blinded, that they ſhould conceiue nothing, although the Lord ſhould enlighten the by the manifeſt brightnes of his word. And this he ſhewes ſhould not happen to the common people only, but alſo to their guides and leaders, whoſe office it was to haue been ſo learned, that they might haue ordered thoſe that were out of the way. To be ſhort, this blindnes ſhould ſeize vpon all eſtates: for he declares that both the ignorant and learned ſhould be ſo dizzie and blockiſh, that Gods word ſhould be vnto them as a booke ſealed vp, in ſo much that they ſhould be able to diſcern no more thereof then of letters faſt cloſed. He teacheth (albeit in other words) the ſame which he taught in the former Chapter, to wit, that the word ſhould be vnto them precept vpon precept, line vnto line, becauſe they ſhould alwaies remaine in the firſt rudiments, and ſhould neuer attaine to the ſolide doctrine. For in the ſame ſenſe he here ſheweth, that none from the higheſt to the loweſt ſhould gather any fruite from the word of God. He ſaith not then that the word ſhould be taken from them; but although it were amongſt them, they ſhould notwithstanding be ignorant of the true meaning of it.

The Lord puniſheth the impietie of men two waies; for ſometimes he whollie takes away the vſe of the word; ſometimes he lets them haue it, and yet in the meane while deprives them of the ſound vnderſtanding of it, ſo as in ſeeing they are ſtarke blinde. Firſt then he deprives them of the reading of it, by taking away the bookes of holy Scripture through ſy tyrannie of the wicked, as it often comes to paſſe: or, by a falſe perſuaſion of men, who thinke they were not giuen to be read of all: Secondly, albeit he ſuffers vs to reade them, and to haue the bookes in our hands, yet becauſe we abuſe them, becauſe we are vnthankfull, and aime not at the glorie of God, therefore we are blinded, and ſee no more, then if we had neuer been enlightened with ſo much as one ſparkle of the word.

We are not to boaſt then that we haue the outward preaching of the word, for that ſhall do vs little good if it become not fruitfull in vs, by clearing our iudgements and vnderſtandings. It is as if he ſhould ſay then, I grant that in regard of the Couenant made by the Lord with your fathers he will let you haue the two Tables of this Couenant, Deut. 4. 20. 37. & 7. 6. but they ſhall be vnto you as a booke cloſed vp, for you ſhall vnderſtand nothing at all.

When we ſee that ſuch things did indeed befall the Iewes, according as Iſaiab foretold, and that we alſo conſider the eſtate of this people whom God had choſen and adoped, me thinke it can not but make vs tremble in our ſelues for feare in beholding ſo horrible a iudgement. For notwithstanding they were inſtructed both by the Law and of the Prophets, and enlightened with a wonderfull cleare brightnes, yet they fell into horrible ſuperſtitious, and deteſtable impieties, for the ſeruiſe of God was prophaned, Religion was whollie defaced and ouerthrowne, themſelues were diuided and ſorted into diuers and monſtrous ſects. Laſtly, when the Saduces, which were the wickeddeſt of all, had got the preheminance, faith, and all hope of the resurrection, yea the doctrine of the immortalitie of soules was vtterly abolished: how could it bee I pray you; but the people must become like beasts or swine? For take away the hope of the eternall and blessed life from men, and what shall we make of them? And yet it sufficiently appears by the testimonies of the Euangelists, that such they were when our Lord Iesus Christ came into the world. For at that time these things were truly accomplished, according as our Prophet foretold; to let vs see that these things were not vttered by him at random, but that they assuredly came to passe, though the wicked no doubt in his time made light account of his words.

Their incredulitie and blindnes therefore fully appeared when this true light came to lighten the world; to wit, Iesus Christ the onely light of truth, the soule and spirit of the law, and the end whereto all the Prophets aimed. Then, I say, the Iewes especially had a vaile laid ouer their eyes; which was figured before in Moses, when the people could not indure to behold him, because of the brightness of his countenance. But this is truly fulfilled in Christ, to whom it appertaines to take away and abolish this vaile, as S. Paul teacheth, 2. Cor. 3.16.

Exod. 34.30

Vntill Christ then, the vaile remained ouer their hearts vntaken away in reading of Moses: for they reiected Christ, to whom Moses ought to haue been referred. Now in this place vnder the word Moses, the whole law is to bee vnderstood; which being referred to Christ, the true end thereof, this vaile shall then be taken away. These iudgements of God we ought so to behold, that wee at this day, acknowledge him to be the same Iudge he was wont to bee, and that the same vengeance is prepared for vs, if we giue not care to his holy admonitions.

In that he expressly mentions them that are learned and ignorant, obserue that we comprehend nor the mysteries of saluation by the quicknesse of our wits, or because wee haue bin well trained vp in schooles; for this could not priuiledge such from the imputation of being blind. Gods word then must be embraced with our whole affection, if wee mind to bee freed from this vengeance, wherewith not the rude and ignorant alone are threatened, but those also which are booke learned, as they say.

Verf. 13. Therefore the Lord said; Because this people come neere vnto mee with their mouth, and honour mee with their lippes, but haue remoued their heart farre from mee; and their feare toward mee was taught by the precept of men;

THE Prophet shewes that the Lord shall haue very iust occasion to correct his people so seuerely, albeit it was an hard and horrible punishment, that their mindes should bee so besotted by Gods reuenging hand. But as men are bold and rebellious, so they are easilie drawne to plead with him, as if he dealt ouer rigorously with them: the Prophet declares that God hath performed the office of a Iudge; & that the cause thereof rested wholly in men, who stirred him vp by their impietie & rebellion. Also he shewes that the people haue well deserued this chastisement; but especially by their hypocrisie and superstitions.

Hee notes their hypocrisie, in telling them that they draw neere with their mouth and lips: for so I expound the verbe Nagish, which I take to bee most probable, although others are of a contrarie opinion: for which cause some translate, To shut vp; others To magnifie ones selfe: but the antithete* (to wit, the verbe to withdraw) which is added by and by after, shewes that this is the true exposition, which also is most receiued.

But he taketh their superstitions and idolatries, when hee saith, that their feare which they had, was taught by the Commandements of men. Now these two things are for the most part ioyned together. Nay, more then that, for hypocrisie is neuer without impieitie or superstitions; and on the other side, impieitie & superstition is alwaies accompanied with hypocrisie.

By the mouth and lips, he means the external profession, which is common both to good and bad: but they differ in this, that the wicked haue onely a vaine outward shew, thinking themselues discharged, if they haue opened their lips in Gods worshippe and seruice; but the good present themselues before God in the truth of their hearts, & in yeelding him obedience with all their power, they acknowledge and confesse how far off they are from performing their duties as they ought to doe.

Hee vseth then the figure called Synecdoche, a thing very frequent in Scriptures; when a part is taken for the whole. But hee made choice of that part which was verie fit for his purpose; seeing men are wont to make most shew of godlines by the tongue and lips. The Prophet then comprehends all the other parts of Gods worship, whereby hypocrites are wont to counterfet and deceiue, for they are euerie way bent to lying and vanitie.

We need seeke no better expositor of these words then Iesus Christ, who vpon the speech of washing of hands, (wherewith the Pharises reprobud the Disciples, because they had omitted so holy an act in their conceit) that he might conuince them of hypocrisie, saith, Isaiah prophced well of you, O yee hypocrites, saying, This people honours me with their lips, but their heart is far off from me: Matth. 15.7.8. To the lips and mouth therefore the Prophet opposeth the heart; the integritie whereof God chiefly requires of vs. For if we want that, hee reiects all our workes, earie they neuer so goodly a shew in the eyes of men. For as himselfe is a Spirit, so also will he be adored and worshipped of vs in heart and spirit: at which end, if we begin not, we may doe what we will in outward shew, but it shall euery whit bee accounted nothing elſe but vaine oſtentation.

Hence we may eaſlie iudge, what eſtimation the religion of poperie ought to haue amongſt vs, who put all their truſt of God in ringing, piping, ſinging, mummings; in ſetting vp candles, in copes, cenſings, croſſings, and a thouſand ſuch fooleries: for wee ſee that God not onely reiects theſe things, but alſo deteſteth them.

Now for the ſecond point : when God is ſerued according to mens inventions, he condemnes this ſuperſtitious feare, albeit men in- deour to couer the ſame with a faire pretext of religion, deuotion, and feare. Hee giues a reaſon why this is in vaine; to wit, becauſe this people was taught it by the precepts of man. For I read the word Melunmadab, (which ſignifies taught) paſſiuely, becauſe the Prophets meaning is, that all order is ouerthrowne, if mens precepts (and not the rules of Gods word) bee taken for the right manner of his ſeruite, For the Lord would haue our feare, and the honour which we giue him, to be ſquared according to the rules of his word, and demands nothing but a ſound obedience, by which wee diſpoſe of our ſelues and all our actions, according to this rule, without turning either to the right hand or vnto the left. Whence it ſufficiently appeares, that all thoſe who are taught to ſerue God after mens traditions, are not onely ſenſelle, but do alſo wearie themſelues in a pernicious labour: for what do they elſe but prouoke Gods wrath againſt them, who cannot more plainly diſcouer how much hee hates theſe worſhips, then by this ſo heaue a puniſhment?

Fleſh and blood I grant thinks it ſtrange that God not only makes none accout of this traſh, but alſo ſeuerely puniſheth mens in- deours, who through error and folly, take much paines to appeaſe him. But wee are not to wonder if hee maintaines his owne authority after this ſort. Ieſus Chriſt himſelfe expounds this place, ſaying; In vaine doe they ſerue me, teaching for doctrines mens precepts : Math. 15. 9.

Some would ſupply a coniunction thus; And precepts: as if the ſenſe were not other- wiſe cleere enough. But it appeares he meant another thing; to wit, that they take a wrong courſe, who follow mens commandements for the rule of their faith and life.

Verſ. 14. Therefore behold, I will againe doe a meruailous Worke in this place, euen a meruailous Worke and a wonder: for the wiſdome of their wiſe men ſhall periſh, and the vnderſtanding of their prudent men ſhall be hid.

HE not onely threatens the ignorant and common multitude with blindneſſe, but alſo the wiſe, who drew the people into an admiration of them: now by this puniſhment we may iudge how odious and deteſtable this ſinne of hypocriſie is (before God) of which he ſpake in the former verſe. Is there any puniſhment more to be feared then blindneſſe and giddineſſe of ſpirit? Men commonly perceiue not the greatneſſe of theſe miſchiefs; and yet it is of all other the greateſt and moſt woſull. He ſpeakes not of the rude ones then, but of the teachers themſelues, who ought to be in ſtead of eyes for the people. For the multitude are alwaies blind of themſelues, as the reſt of the common fort are: but if the eyes be blind, what ſhall become of the reſt of the parts of the body? If the light, as Ieſus Chriſt ſaith, be turned into darkneſſe, how great is that darkeneſſe? Math. 6. 23. This is added therefore by way of amplifying this iudgement.

From this place alſo we may gather, how fooliſh and vaine the boaiſting of the Papiſts is, who think they haue put all the world to ſilence, if they once alleadge the authoritie of their Biſhops, Doctors, and Priests of the Apoſtolicall Sea. It may be they think they haue better knowledge then the Iewes. But whence haue they drawne it? They will ſay, from God. But wee ſee the Prophet ſpeakes not here of the wiſe, among the Caldean, or Egyptians: but of that order of Prieſthood, which God himſelfe had ordaind; yea, of the Teachers and chiefe heads, and of the ſtandard bearers of the elect people, and of the onely Church of God in thoſe times. In a word, of that high Prieſt who was a figure of the Sonne of God, Chriſt Ieſus. For vnder this name of the wiſe men, hee comprehends whatſoever was excellent and in account among the people.

The Papiſts thinke they haue put all the world to ſilence, if they but once mention the authoritie of their Biſhops and the Apoſtolicall Sea.

Verſ. 15. Woe vnto them that ſecke deepe to hide their counſell from the Lord: for their Workes are in darkneſſe, and they ſay; Who ſeeth vs? and Who knowe: h vs?

THE Prophet once againe ſets himſelfe againſt the wicked and prophane contemners of God, whom before he called mockers; who thought themſelues wiſe in nothing more, then in ſetting light by the word of the Lord. For religion was become a thing too baſe for them: and therefore they ſhrowded themſelues vnder their craftie inventions, as in a labyrinth; by reaſon whereof, they boldly contemned all the admonitions & threatenings of the Prophet; yea, not onely that, but euen the whole doctrine of ſaluation. It ſufficiently appeares by this verſe then, that this plague (which afterwards ſpread it ſelfe further) was then in the world; to wit, hypocrits were wont pleaſantly to ſerne God in their hearts, and to deſpiſe the prophecies. Iſaiab cries out againſt them therefore, and calles them Hammaamim, that is to ſay, Diggers: euen as if they digged themſelues caues and hiding places, thinking thereby to deceiue Gods ſight.

Chap. 28. 22.

Hypocrits haue vſed of old to ſerue both God and the pro- pheties.

The words following of hiding their counſels, may ſerue vs for an expoſition. Some expound this verſe as if the Prophet condemned the curioſitie of ſuch who are too bolde

With what tripperies the Papiſts would ſeeme to honor God.

How deteſtable the ſin of hypocriſie is before God.

in diuino into the secret iudgements of God: but this exposition liath no good foundation. The Prophet makes it cleare enough of whom it is he speaks, when he addes their scoffing speeches, in that they thought to commit their wickednes so courtlie and priuile as if none were able to discouer them: now this hiding of their Confels signifies nothing else but a bold perswasion of escaping Gods hand. And thus the wicked obscure the light, by putting their mists before it, left their secret peruerstie should be espied.

Thence proceeds this shamesfull question of theirs, Who seeth vs? for albeit they seemed in outward appearance to serue God, yet they thought themselves able not only to put the Prophets to silence by their shifts and deuices, but euen to overthrow the iudgements of God. I grant they did not this openly, for such will alwaies hold an outward shew of profession, that they may the better deceiue others thereby: but in their hearts they acknowledge no God; but that which themselves haue forged in the shop of their owne braine. Isaiah then compares these subtle practises of the wicked, in which they so much please and flatter themselves, to dennes or caues, for they thinke themselves to be so couered ouer with a vaille that euen God himselfe can neither see nor surprize them in their wickednes.

Now in regard that the great ones are for the most part tainted with this vice, I thinke the Prophet meant speciallie to taxe them: for they thinke themselves too too simple and dull witted, vnlesse they can despise God, and reiect his Law, beleeuing no more thereof than that which likes their owne humors. They dare not for shame reiect Religion whollie, but are constrained whether they will or no to subiect themselves to some one worship or other. But this they do only because they thinke it will bring them in some profit and commoditie; but are neuer touched inwardlie with any true feare of God at all.

This impietie discouers it selfe in too many in these times, but especially since the Gospell was reuealed. We see how easilie men might be brought to be at one with God vnder the Papacie, for had not the Pope forged such a god as would change his shape according to mens euery all dispositions? what man was there amongst them that had not a deuice by himselfe to purge his sinnes; and diuers seruices wherewith to appease his god? wherefore it is no maruell if grosse impieties appeared not then, seeing they were hidden vnder such couerings; but now they be removed and taken away, men haue plainly shewed what they were before.

In the meane while the euill whereof Isaiah complained in his time is no lesse incident to those of our age: for men thinke that God sees neuer awhit when they haue put their shifts betweenc, as if all things were not naked and bare before his (all seeing) eyes, or as if any were able to hide themselves out of his sight, or to deceiue him. You see the cause then wherefore the Prophet for a more ample declaration saith, that their works were done in darkenes, referring it to the vaine confidence wherewith the wicked are bewitched, who haue their sight so dazeled (notwithstanding the light before them) that in not seeing it, they labor to flee from the presence of God. Nay, which is worie, they promise themselves freedome fro all punishment, and giue themselves the raines to all disorder, as if God lay so closely hid, that he could be no way able to finde them out.

Hereunto appertaines that which they say, Who shall see vs? Not that the wicked utter such words with their mouths, as hath been said, but because they thought or spake thus in their hearts, as their boldnes and vaine confidence witnessed, for they were so plunged in iniquities, that they reiect all admonitions, euen as if they should neuer haue had any thing to do before Gods iudgement seate. The prophet then we see had to deale against such wicked ones, who albeit in outward shew they seemed to haue some knowledge of God, yet they denied him by their works, and persecuted the pure doctrine with all extremitie. Now thus to speake, what is it else but to affirme that God is not the Iudge of the world, and so to pluck him downe from his throne of Iudgement? for he can not be knowne but by his word, which being once suppressed, or reiected, it can not be but himselfe, who is the author of it, must also therewithall be forsaken and reiected.

Vers. 16. Your turning of deuices shall it not be esteemed as the potters clay? for shall the worke of him that made it say, he made me not? or the thing formed say of him that fashioned it, he had none understanding?

THis verse is diuerslie expounded; and there is also some difficultie in regard of two Hebrew particles, Im, and Ci. Im is often taken for an interrogation, sometimes for an affirmation, which is the cause that some take it for Truly. Moreover, they take the word Haphae for Subuersion, as if he should say, Your subuersion shall be esteemed as the clay. Others, for Thought, that is to say, for the counsels which are working in the braine. But the exposition most receiued is, to take this word for Subuersion or destruction: as if he should say, It will be no more maistrie for me to roote you out, then for a potter to turne his clay in his hand: for you are like vnto it, in regard that I haue formed you: yet because the Prophet seemes to oppose the two foresaid particles one to the other, I encline to another opinion, but so, that I reiect not the former exposition, which in it selfe containes a very profitable doctrine. Thus I vnderstand it then, Your turning, or removing; that is to say, the counsels and deuices which runne to and fro in your minds, shall they not be esteemed as the potters clay? for is it not as if the vessell should say to him that made it, Hast thou formed me? Your pride is strange therefore, for you do as if your selues were your owne Creators, and as if you had all things at your beck. But it is my proper office to appoint what I thinke good : and if you dare vſurpe my right and authoritie, be it knowne vnto you, that you haue forgotten your condition, no leſſe then if you thought your felues goddes rather then men.

This diuerſitie of expoſitions alters the Prophets meaning nothing at all; whoſe purpoſe was to confirme the doctrine of the former verſe : for hee againe reproues theſe proud ones, who attributed ſo much power vnto themſelues, that they would by no meanes be brought vnder Gods yoke, being in ſuch wiſe bewitched with a falſe opinion of their owne wiſdome, that they contemned all good admonitions, as if they had bene ſomes pettie goddes. Thus you ſee how it is ſaid, that they denied God that formed them: for whatſoever it bee that men attribute vnto themſelues, therein they rob God, and take away that honour which belongs vnto him.

The expoſition ſhould be a little differing in the firſt member onely: thoſe which take the particle in affirmatiuely, draw this ſenſe; Certainly I will breake you, as if a potter ſhould breake the pot which he hath made. But becauſe the Prophet had to deale againſt great ones, who ſought couerts to hide themſelues from the Lord, I rather take it by way of an interrogation, as if he ſhould ſay; Are you ſuch ſubtile headed fellowes indeed, that by the turnings and diſcourſes which you plot in your minds, you thinke you can bring this and that to paſſe, as the Potter doth his clay, who by turning it vpon his wheele, makes it receiue what ſhape it pleaſeth him? But let euerie man chuſe which ſenſe he likes beſt: for mine owne part, I haue followed that which I thinke to be moſt probable.

Verſ. 17. Is it not yet but a little while, and Lebanon ſhall bee turned into Carmel? And Carmel ſhall be counted as a forreſt?

NOW the Lord ſhewes that hee will let theſe wicked ones ſee what they are: as if he ſhould ſay; You rocke your ſelues aſleep in your pride; but I will wake you ere it bee long. For men are wont to take libertie to themſelues to doe euill, till they feele the heauie hand of God: for which cauſe, the Prophet threatens that his iudgements are readie to ſeiſe vpon ſo brutiſh a boldneſſe. Vnder the names of Lebanon and Carmel, he meant to expreſſe a reuening of the world as it were, and a change of things therein. But the doubt is, to what end: in which regard, the expoſitors diſagree much one from another: for mount Lebanus being replenished with trees and forreſts, and Carmel being a fat and fruitfull ſoile: many thinke that the Iewes are compared to Carmel, becauſe they ſhould become barren: and the Chriſtians to Lebanon, becauſe they ſhould bring forth great plentie of fruit. This opinion hath a goodly ſhew, and men are vſually very much tickled and delighted with the like deuices: with vnapt but we find a like place to this in the end of ^{expoſitions.} 32. Chapter, verſe 5, which will make it manifeſt, that the Prophet doth here by way of comparison, ſet forth the greatneſſe of Gods fauour: for when he ſhall begin to bleſſe his people, the abundance of all benefits ſhall be ſuch, that Mount Carmel ſhall loſe the report that it had for fruitfullneſſe. He ſaith then, that he will make Lebanon to be like Carmel: that is to ſay, of a woodland, it ſhould bee made paſſurage to ſow corne in: ſo as they ſhould gather as much fruit of plowed land, as if their preſent eſtate being compared with that which it ſhould be afterwards, it might well be eſteemed barren and deſert. But this manner of ſpeech ſhall be more fully expounded when we come to the 32. Chapter.

Men much delighted

Others take Carmel for a noune appellatiue: but I had rather take it for a proper noune: for his meaning is, that theſe ſo fruitfull fields might well be counted barren and deſert, in comparison of this new and extraordinary fruitfullneſſe. Others expound it allegorically, and take Lebanon for the proud, and Carmel for thoſe of meane eſtate: which is too far fetched; and for mine owne part, I affect alwaies to follow the moſt natural ſenſe; and that is it which I haue touched before. Moreouer, to the end the faithfull might not be discouraged, he deſcends from threatnings to mercy; aſſuring them that after they ſhall haue ſhewed their obedience of faith in bearing the Croſſe, which for a time was to bee impoſed vpon them, they ſhould behold a ſudden change to approach, which would cauſe them to reioyce. And yet in taking away this hope from the wicked, he ſignifies that vengeance is then neceſſary vnto them, when they thinke leaſt of it, and whileſt they promiſe themſelues all proſperitie: for when they ſhall ſay, peace, peace, then ſhall ſudden deſtruction ouerwhelme them, as S. Paul ſaith, 1. Theſſ. 5. 3.

Verſ. 18. And in that day ſhall the deafe heare the words of the booke: and the eyes of the blind ſhall ſee out of obſcuritie, and out of darkneſſe.

HE promiſeth, as hath been ſaid, that the Church of God ſhall continue ſafe in the miſſet of theſe ſtormes: for albeit the world ſhould be ſhaken with infinite tempeſts, and laid on heapes, as if heauen and earth went together, yet the Lord would conſerue a little flocke, and raiſe vp his Church againe, as out of the miſſet of death. This place ought greatly to reſreſh the wearie ſpirits of the Saints, and to confirme their faith: for is it not a miracle of miracles, that ſo ſmall an handfull of the faithfull (amongſt whom remains the one and the ſame religion, worſhip, faith, and meanes of ſaluation) ſhould be conſerued among ſo many wrackes of Empires which happened here and there?

But it ſeemes that Iſaiab contradicts himſelfe; for before he ſortold that Gods people ſhould be ſo beſorted, that they ſhould haue none vnderstanding: ver. 11, 12. and now on the contrarie hee saith, that the deafe shall heare, and that the blinde shall see. His meaning is then, that the Church must first be chastised and purged; not after an ordinarie or common fashion, but so strangely, that shee should seeme as good as vtterly extinct.

And therefore he saith, In that day: that is to say, after God hath punished the wicked, and cleansed his Church, hee will not onely enrich the earth with store of fruits, but with the reuening of the face thereof, hee will also restore hearing to the deafe, and sight to the blinde, to the end they may vnderstand his law. For men had neither eyes to see, nor eares to heare withall, as long as so horrible a iudgement lasted: for all were so terrified and amased, that none could vnderstand. But when the plagues & miseries should cease, then the Lord would open the eyes of that y were his, to the end they might see & embrace y goodness of God. For this is the true way to effect the restoration of the Church; namely, in giuing sight to the blinde, and hearing to the deafe: which Iesus Christ, as we know, not onely effected vpon mens bodies, but especially vpon their soules: John 9. We through Gods infinit mercy haue had experience hereof euen in our times, who haue been drawne out of that grosse darknesse of ignorance into which we were plunged, and hath brought vs our into the true light: for our eyes haue received sight, and our eares, which before were close stopped vp, haue been opened to vnderstand, because the Lord hath pierced them, to fit vs for his seruice.

True it is that the blessing which he mentioned in the 17. verse, concerning the reuening of the earth, was vnto them a good testimonie of their reconciliation: but the illumination whereof he now speaks, is much more excellent; for without that, all the gifts of God will not onely vanish away, but will also turne to our ruine and destruction. Now the Lord iustly attributes to himselfe alone, so excellent and great a worke: for it is not possible that those which are blind and deafe, should recouer their sight and hearing by their owne power. It appears therefore that this is promised in particular to the elect onely; because the greatest part of men doe alwaies lie wallowing and weltering in darknesse.

Verf. 19. The meeke in the Lord shall receive ioy againe; and the poore men shall reioyce in the holie one of Israel.

Then the humble shall againe bee glad in the Lord. I translate this place thus: whereas others expound; The meeke shall continue to reioyce: for the Prophet speaks not of the continuance of ioy, but rather of a new ioy. As if he should say; Notwithstanding they be heauie and forrowfull now, yet I will giue them cause of gladnesse, that they shall bee once againe filled with ioy.

He speaks of the humble: in which, note that we are prepared by afflictions to receiue Gods grace: for the Lord casts vs downe and humbles vs, that hee may afterwards raise vs vp. When he corrects his children then, we ought not to bee discouraged; but rather to meditate on this and the like sentences, and to hope full aboue hope. And to conclude, that after we haue suffered a litle while, God will in the end giue his Church ioy and consolation. Moreouer, we hence gather that which I haue touched before, to wit, that the grace of illumination is not common to all indifferently: for albeit all dranke of the same cuppe of affliction, yet affliction humbled but a few, to make them truly poore in spirit.

Afflictions prepare vs to receiue Gods grace.

Heauinesse may induce for a night, but ioy comes in the morning.

All receiue not benefit alike by afflictions.

Verf. 20. For the cruell man shall cease, and the scornefull men shall be consumed: and all that hastied to iniquitie shall be cut off.

Now he expounds that more fully, which was said in the former verse; to wit, that the restoration of the Church should consist in rearing vp those that were humbled, and in shewing compassion to the poore. But first of all that purgation of the Church wherof we haue spoken, was necessarie: for as long as God defers to execute his iudgements vpon the wicked, that are mingled among the good; they beare all the sway in the Church, all things are corrupt and out of order, God is neither worshipped nor serued as hee ought, and religion it selfe is trodden vnder foote. When the wicked then are either taken away, or repressed, then the Church recouers her first beauty; and the faithfull feeling themselves disburthened of so manie miseries and calamities, doe begin to leape for ioy.

In the first place he calles the cruell, Arifim: which word is diuersly expounded: but the Prophet, as I thinke, makes a distinction betwene those who were not ashamed to commit their wickednesse openly; and such, who although they had some shew of goodnesse, yet in the meane while were no better then the rest, because they despised God in their hearts. It may be also that he giues them two differing titles, in regard that as theues among men, they spoiled, oppressed, and vexed, giuing themselves leaue to commit what them listed. And thus they were not restrained by any feare or awe of God, because they esteemed of religion but as a fable. He also comprehends other wickedneses in adding, that they rose betimes to doe euill: for he speaks not of the Caldeans or Assyrians, but of such as would bee held to be of the number of the faithfull, and boasted, that they were the children of Abraham.

Verf. 21. Which made a man to sinne in the word, and took him in a snare: which reprovned them in the gate, & made the iust to fall without cause.

WE haue told you heretofore with whom the Prophet had to deale; namely, with

It is an happy thing when tein-parall blifings and inward re nouation go together. Men are not so fit to receiue colort in the day of distresse, as when the storme is ouer.

Wherein the true meens of the Churches restauration consist.

*Or, Then the, &c.

with hypocrites, and prophane contentners, who esteemed all the reprehensions & threatenings of the Prophet but as wind, and had forged to themselves a god of their own devising. For such who only sought libertie to lue as they listed in their lusts and wicked courses, were vterlic vnable to beare the sharp reproches of y^e Prophets, neither would they bee touched nor repressed by their good wiles. For which cause they were diligent in noting and obseruing their words, either to snarle at them, or to wrest something or other to their purpose. Neither do I doubt but he here taxeth the wicked who were offended at the plainnes of the Prophets, and with their sharp and vehement rebukes, as if they meant to bring the necks of the people, princes, and priests vnder their girdles.

1 Thence it is that these calumniationes and 2 false accusations are raised vp against the faithfull seruants of God at this day; thence is it also that such doubtfull and curious ques-3 tions are propounded vnto them, euen as nets and snares to put the innocent in hazard of their lues, or else to plunge them into some imminent danger. And we see that the Scribes and Pharises did the like euen to Iesus Christ himselfe, Mith. 21. 23. and 22. 17.
Iohn 8. 6. The last member of the verse which is added by way of exposition, shewes, that this is not to be vnderstood of slanders and other cunning deuises in generall, by which the subtle are wont to intrap the simple: for the Prophet rather more plainly condemnes the wicked conspiracies by which the vnbe-leeuers indeuor to exempt themselves from all reprehensions and censures. Now in regard that their assemblies were kept openlie for giuing sentence in iudgment, and that the gates were alwaies replenished with people, the Prophets tooke opportunitie from thence to reprove all sorts, so as they spared not the Iudges themselves. For the matters of life and death at that time were in the hands, of such wicked and godles wretches, that it was needfull to rebuke them very sharplie. But in stead of making any good vse of these admonitions to come to amendment of life, they became so much the worse, and raged against the Prophets, and laid snares to catch them, for as Amos saith, They hated him that reposed in the gates, and abhorred him that spake vprightlie, Amos 5. ro.

This appertaines to all, and especially to Iudges and rulers in Common-wealths, who are the most impatient, and wil by no means abide the least reproofe. They loue to reigne as Kings, and would be so esteemed of others also, albeit they be worse iudged then the meaneſt good subiect.

The expositors agree not in the exposition of the verb tekoſhūn, which signifies to spread nets: for some take it to chide, others, to do wrong, as if the Prophet accused the malepertnes of those who gaue ouer themselves to violence, and by means thereof banished such out of their presence as should any way touch the in their reputations. But as I hope the readers will approue of that reading which I haue followed:

He also saith that the iust was overthrowne without cause, for they did what they could by craft and wicked practises to bring the iust into hatred, as if they had been the only wicked men in the world: but after they haue borne their scottes and reproach for a while, their enemies at length shall come to destruction. For this is the consolation which the Lord giueth the faithfull, to wit, that he will not suffer the wicked to scape so sent-free but they also shall snare for it, and in the end shall be suppressed, how-soeuer for a time they had the world as will. But we must haue patience to wait for the accomplishment of these and the like promises.

Verſ. 20.

Verſ. 22. Therefore saith the Lord unto the house of Iacob, euen he that redeemed Abraham: Iacob shall not now be confounded, neither now shall his face be pale.

This is the conclusion of the former sentence, for he comforts the people, to the end they should not despair in this poore and wofull estate into which they should be brought. It is also needfull to note the time vnto which these things ought to be referred, to wit, to the time of the captiuitie when the Temple was overthrowne, the sacrifices abolished, so as it seemed religion was wholelie rooted out, and all hope of deliuerance taken fro them. There was great cause therefore why the hearts of the people should be sustained and ypheld by these prophesies, to the end that the wrack and ruine of all things being come vpon them, they might haue this planck (as it were) to saue themselves from Ship-wrack, vpon which if they kept themselves firmly, they might by means thereof come safe to y^e shore. By this let vs be warned also to embrace the like promises by faith, and when all things shall seeme desperate, yet let vs rest vpon them with our whole hearts.

Now he speaks of the house of Iacob, in which we are to note, that the vertue of Gods word is perpetuall, and of such efficacie, that it brings forth fruit as long as there is a people in the world which adores and stands in awe of him. For there are alwaies some whom God reserves, because he will not suffer the race of the faithfull to perish. Hath the Lord spoken it then? let vs beleue him, and doub-tlesse the time will come in which we shall reape
the fruit of our faith. For as his truth is firme and stable in it selfe, so if we rest constantlie vpon him, wee shall neuer be destitute of comfort.

It is not without cause also that he addes,
that God who now promiseth to be mercifull vnto Iacob, saith, that he redeemed Abraham:
for he therein brings the people to the beginning of the Church, that considering Gods power, which from time to time was manifested by so many famous examples, they might haue no occasion at all to call his truth into question. If so be then they gloried in that they were the children of Abraham they were the Lord did first deliuer him, to wit, from the seruice of idols which he and his father wor-1 shipped: Iosh. 24. 2. But he redeemed him often besides that; to wit, when he was in dan-3 ger in Egypt and in Gerar: Gen. 12. 17. & 20.

 cued at the time when hee was past power to had a speciall respect to Gods adoption, when he commanded him to goe out of his fathers house: yet vnder this redemption, he compre-hends also all the benefites which God bestowed vpon him: for we see that Abraham was not redeemed onely once: that is, from extrem dangers and perils of death. Now if the Lord raised vp his Church in the onely person of Abraham, and that in such a time as he had lost all strength to beget any children to conserue the same after him; will not the Lord preferue it for the time to come, when in mans iudgement it was as good as for-lorne? What a miserable waste was there of the Church, at the coming of Christ? How many enemies were there which opposed the same? Yet did he set vp this his kingdome in despite of them all: the Church flourished and made all the world to wonder at the glorie of it. Let vs not doubt then but that the Lord will in his due time manifest his power both in auenging himselfe vpon the enemies of his Church which oppress it, and in restoring of her to her first beaurie.

A singular consolation.

When he saith, Iacob shall not be confounded;
 we often see that the faithful are constrained to hang downe their heads with shame, as Jeremie witnesseth; I will put my mouth in the dust: Lament. 3. 29. Also Micha saith; The time is come, in which the wise shall put their hands vpon their mouth, and like the dust:
 for when the Lord corrects his people so sharplie, the faithfull must needs bee confounded therewith. But the Prophet afterward shewes, that this shall not indure for e-uer. Let vs not dispaire then in aduersitie: for albeit the wicked make vs their laughing stocks, and lade vs with all the indignities in the world, yet will the Lord in the end draw vs out of this shame and confusion of face.

 Iob. 5. 27.

Yet the Lord therewithall shewes, that this fauor belongs not vnto such proud ones, who either are obstinate, or oppose their hard heads against Gods blowes that hee laies vpon them; but that it onely belongs vnto the humble, who are bowed with shame, walking humbly with their heads bowed downe.

But may some object, how can it bee said that Iacob shall not be confounded, seeing he was dead long before? it seemes hee attributes some feeling to the dead, and then they know what we doe in this world: thence the Papists argue, that the dead know all that we doe. I answer, there is here the faining of a person;
 which is often found in the Scriptures: in which sense Jeremie saith; That a voice was heard in Ramah, Rachel weeping for her children and would not be comforted for them, because they were not: Ier. 31. 15. For in that place he sets forth the destruc^{tion} of the Tribe of Beniamin, by the lamentation of Rachel, which was the grandmother as it were. So Isaiah brings in Iacob couered with shame and confusion, in regard of the vices and wickednesses of his posteritie. For as a wise sonne is the glory of his father, so a foole is an heauiness to his mother: Prou. 10. 1. Although mothers doe cocker their children most, yet are they ashamed when they see them offend.

 How much more fathers then, whose loue being guided by discretion, are chiefly careful for the well ordering and instructing of their children. Must they not needs be much more grieved, in seeing them wax wicked and dissolute? But the Prophet meant here to touch the people to the quicke, in setting Iacob their father before them; who being adorned with such rare graces, of God, was now dishonoured by his successors: so as if himselfe had been present to haue seene them, it would haue constrained him to blist for shame. He therefore tareth the vnthankfulness of the people, who in stead of honouring, dishonored their father.

Verf. 23. *But when hee seeth his children, the worke of mine hands in the midst of him, they shall sanctifie
 my name, and sanctifie the holie one of Iacob, and shall feare the God of Israel.

*Or, for who

The particl Chi, is here to bee read in its proper signification; to wit, For; because the Prophet giues a reason why the shame of Israel should be taken away: that is, he should haue children raised vp vnto him againe, as it were from death to life. In that the Lord calls them the worke of his hands; I nothing doubt but he therein meant to expresse the admirable worke of their redemption: for he makes those new men, (as it were) whom hee adopts and ioines vnto him for his children; as it is said, P[sa]. 102. 19. The people that shall be created, shall praise the Lord: in which place the holie Ghost doth in like manner speake of the restauration of the Church. For there is no 7.

mention here of that vniuersall creation of mankind, vnder which all good and bad are comprehended, as wee haue often said: but he now brings vs to the knowledge of his power, to the end we should not iudge of the saluation of the Church, by viewing her present estate. Here therefore wee must note diuers oppositions: first, betweene the deformitie of the Church, and her beaurie or excellencie betwene glorie and shame: secondly, betweene the people of God, and other nations: thirdly, betweene the worke of Gods hands, and the worke of men; (for the Church can no way be reestablished but by the onely hand of God:) fourthly, betweene her flourishing estate, and that miserable waste by which she was pittifully rent in sunder before. For he calles the midst of her a perfect restauracion; by which the people shall be so reunited and ioyned together, that she shall the middeſt and the chiefe place thereof alſo. Laſtly he ſhewes what the end of our redemption is, which he ſaith, That they ſhal ſanctifie his name: for we are all created to the end Gods goodnes may be magnified amongſt vs. But becauſe the moſt part of men doe than this end, God hath choſen his Church, in which his praifes do found and continue, as it is ſaid in the Pſalme 65. 2. Praise waitech for thee O God in Zion. Now becauſe many therep in the flock grow corrupt, the Prophet aſſignes this office to ſanctiſull, whom God miraculouſlie had preferred.

Moreouer, becauſe the hypocrites honour God with their lips, and are farre from him in their hearts, as we haue ſcene verſe 13. Iſaiah addes feare to praifes: ſhewing by this, that praifes are of no account with God, vnleſſe they truly are of no account with God, vnleſſe we truly and with our whole hearts doe ſubiect our ſelues vnto him: neither yet, vnleſſe our whole life teſtifies for vs that we take not vp his holie name ſainedlie nor hypoeticallie.

Verſ. 24. Then they that erred in ſpirit ſhal haue vnderſtanding, and they that murmured ſhall learne doctrine.

HE yet againe repeates this promiſe which he touched in the 18. verſe: for whilſt mens vnderſtandings are poſſeſſed with ignorance and blindnes, deſtruction beſegeth and enuirones them about, although they otherwiſe flow in abundance of all worlde wealth. The Lord therefore minding to prepare for the reſtauration of his Church, be- gins to cleare and enlighten the vnderſtandings of thoſe who before erred in darknes by the light of his word. And this he doth by the ſecret inſtinct of the Holy Ghoſt: for it is to little purpoſe to be taught by the externall miniſtrie, vnleſſe he vouchſafe to teach vs by his working inwardlie in our hearts.

In the ſecond member ſome tranſlate detractors; others vagabonds: but the word ſignifies, that thoſe who reſiſted the Prophets before, and could not beare their reprooſes, ſhould now become teachable and obedient, and therefore I haue turned it murmurers. By this we ſee how admirable Gods mercie is, in that he thus brings ſuch home into the right way, which deſerted no ſuch fauor: and not only that, but makes them partakers of his greateſt benefits. But let euery one lay this to his owne heart: for which of vs is it that hath not ſometimes or other murmured againſt God, and deſpiſed his holy doctrine. Yea, if God ſhould not pacifie our murmuring thoughts and affections by ſtilling and ſitting them for his ſeruiſe, the moſt of vs would periſh in our owne follies.

Externall teaching will be to little purpoſe, vnleſſe God works inwardly in vs by his holie Spirit.

THE XXX. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. Woe to the rebellious children, ſaith the Lord, that take counſell but not of me; and cower with a cowering, but not by my ſpirit, that they may lay ſinne vpon ſinne.

HE Prophet heere denouceeth a woe againſt the Iewes, who being impatient in ſuffering the aſſaults wherewith the Aſſyrians and other enemies preſſed them, did ſtraightway runne downe into Egypt to require help of them. But this reprehention may ſeeme ſomewhat too ſharpe, if we ſhall only conſider how lawfull it is for the diſtreſſed and weak to aſke help euen of the wicked; eſpeciallie when they are vniuſtlic vexed: for it is naturall to all men to ſeek protection and defence in time of danger. But if we looke vnto the firſt cauſe of this, we ſhall find that the fault which the Iewes committed in this behalfe, was not ſmall, nor yet to be endured. For firſt of all it is not a light ſinne, but rather a wicked rebellion for a man ſo to be the gouernour of himſelfe, that he deſpiſeth and contemneth to be vnder the yoke of Gods government. Now the the Egyptians, of which there were two principall cauſes.

The firſt was general, and likewiſe had reference to other nations, with whom the Lord would not haue his people to conuerſe, nor to make any confederacies with them, leaſt they ſhould be corrupted by the ſuperſtitious of the Gentils. For it often fallies out (I know not how) that by little and little we learne the vices of thoſe with whom we conuerſe and ate familiar. And as we naturallie imitate their vices rather then their vertues, ſo are we by and by infected therewith, and afterwards the infection growes to ſpread it ſelfe inſtandlie. This is come to paſſe in this realme of France, which hath conuerſed with other nations: for hauing been too diligent in framing themſelues to follow their euill example, they haue now fraughted themſelues full of filthineſſes. Yea, this inordinate deſire of leagues & confederacies hath opened the dore for the Turks to enter into Aſia, and now hath giuen him paſſage into Europe: and howſoener they ſtill retainie their wonted frugalitie in meates and drinks, yet nothing remaines to all countries which they haue ouercome by force, but the villenies and pollutions which they haue left behind the. The ſame may well be ſaid of our countrie of France, by hauing familiaritie with diuers other nations.

The other cauſe was ſpeciall and peculiar to this people onlie: for the Lord hauing deliuered them out of Egypt, meant that they Certaine reaſons why the Prophet denouceeth this woe againſt the Iewes.

The firſt reaſon.

Exod. 13. 17. Lord had ſtraightlie forbidden them to haue Deut. 17. 16. any familiaritie, or to make any leagues with should euer retaine the remembrance of so great a benefit, and for that end gaue them in charge to haue no familiaritie with the Egyptians, fearing lest if they should fall into league with them, the memorie of so famous a deliuerance might easilie slip from them: by means whereof also, they might bee in danger to lose that freedome, in continuing to be thankfull for the same, which thankfulness was iniointed them by God. Was it not an vnworthy thing then to entertain friendship with so prophane a nation, and that to the dishonour of the Almighty? But especially seeing it was his will that his people should acknowledge him alone sufficient to preferre them in safetie, they should haue relied vpon this his promise, & freely haue disclaimed all other helps. You see then that it was a very horrible sin thus to defraud God of the honour which to him belonged, and to labour after acquaintance from all parts with all prophane nations; for had they satisfied themselues with Gods onely protection, they needed not to haue bin so readie to run downe into Egypt.

They were therefore iustly to bee conuincd of their infidelitie, in that they bestowed so much paines this way, and made such a stir in procuring their helpe. Neither is it to be doubted, but that the Prophet also was the more quicke and sharpe in speech against so sacrilegious a sinne; because thereby they bearead God of the praise of his almighty power, in trotting thus vp and downe to get succour at the hands of strangers: for which cause the holy Ghost in an other place compares this lust to an inordinate loue; yea to most brutish whordomes. For Ezechiel shewes that their conjunction with the Egyptians in this behalfe, was no lesse then if a mans wife in her excessiue heate of lust, should not onely runne after adulterers, but should euen desire to haue companie with Asses and horses.

I grant our Prophet doth not simply condemne all leagues with idolaters in this place, but hee respects that prohibition which was expressed in the very law of God it selfe; to wit, that they should haue no association with the Egyptians at all. Hee is thus moued to indignation against the Iewes therefore, chiefly in regard of this prohibition, because it could not bee but Gods dishonour must of necessitie be ioyned with this their running downe, as desperate men into Egypt.

This is the cause why hee calles them peruerse and rebellious children, which phrase wee haue expounded in the first Chapter. His meaning is, that eicher they were men sunke deepe in their obstinacie, wittingly and willingly reuolting from God; or that they were so rooted in obstinacie, that there was no foundnesse nor integritie left in them. In the very entrance then hee chrageth them that they were men giuen vp to their owne counsels, and therewithall did cast off the Lord. Although some expound, To spread the effusion or shedding; and that it agrees with the Prophets meaning: yet others in mine owne opinion, haue turned it better; to wit, who couer the secrets: and this reading I haue followed. The reason is, because he speaks here of counsels and priuie plors, by which, in thinking to deceiue the Prophets, their meaning was indeede to flee from Gods presence.

Those which translate, That they may couer themselues with a couering, are grossly mistaken: for albeit the Iewes sought to the Egyptians for securitie; yet doth the Prophet rather aime at their wile plottings; of which I spake erewhile, and both the expositions come all to one sense.

Now hee repeats one and the same thing by three phrases of speech: first, that they couered their counsels from God; secondly, that they asked not counsell at his mouth: and thirdly, that they would not be governed by his Spirit. For those that are caried away with a conceit of their owne wit, doe willingly giue themselues to cunning deuices, whereby they may couer their infidelitic and rebellion: and for as much as it was not their meaning to obey Gods word, therefore they neuer craued the direction of his Spirit. Thence comes that sorrowfull and wofull euent; for it cannot be auoided, but those counsels and determinations which the Lord gouernes not, must come to a miserable and fallall end. What wisdom is there but that which proceeds out of his mouth? Let vs seeke vnto it then; that is to say, let vs aske counsell of his word; so shall wee also haue the direction and gouernement of his Spirit, from whence proceeds all wisdom and counsell.

But wee are to note that the word and the Spirit are matched together: which crosseth those fantastical spirits, who leaue the word forsooth, to aspire to Oracles and secret reuelations. And thus they would come vnto God, but they will not keepe the Kings high way, as they say, nay, rather despising it. What doe they else then, but strue to flie without wings, as the prouerbe is? Let vs therefore hold vs fast to this principle, that whatsoeuer we consult or enterprise in the whole course of our life, without warrant from Gods word, will in the end deceiue vs, because we begin at the wrong end; for that onely ought to be our guide. And surely if we doe but well be-thinke vs of our owne ignorance, or rather our great brutishnesse, wee may easilie bee brought to confesse that our madnes is worthy to be condemned; to wit, if we shal thinke our selues so wise as not to vouchsafe to inquire at Gods mouth.

If any object, that all things are not comprehended in the holy Scriptures; neither doth it in euerie small circumstance resolve our doubts: I answer, all things whatsoeuer that concerne the well ordering of our life, is fully contained therein. Let vs then once conclude in our selues, that the word of God shall haue the rule ouer our thoughts and actions, and that wee seeke to square them according vnto that; then may we be sure that God will neuer suffer vs to hang long in suspense, but will giue vs a way and passage out of all difficulties and incombrances. And yet it may be wee shall wait long for the accomplishment of this worke; but in the end it is certain certaine the Lord will deliuer and draw vs out of them all, if we be willing and ready to obey him. But therefore that we are carefull in laboring & ſeeking after ſuch meanes as may ſerue Gods providence: yet muſt we alwaies nourish this meditation in our breſt, to wit, that we begin nothing, till we be aſſured that the thing is well-pleaſing and acceptable in his ſight.

If we will yield our selues to be ruled by Gods word, he will not suffer vs long to linger in our doubtings.

The Prophet we ſee then condemnes the boldnes of ſuch who ſeek to ſuccour themſelves by vnlawfull courſes, thinking that way to proſper beſt, when they uſe all meanes, be it right or wrong, euen as if they meant thereby to be their owne ſauours. Now it is certaine that this proceeds from infidelitie and diſtruſt, becauſe they thinke God to be insufficient to ſaue them, vnleſſe they yet runne to ſeek help of ſtrangers, although it be ſtatlie forbidden them. From thence comes thoſe vnlawfull contracts and craftie conuoyances, by meanes whereof men thinke their affaires ſhall haue better ſucceſſe, then if they walked honeſtly and vprightly one with another. Wee for our parts doe ſee infinite examples of this vnbeliefe in all the parts of mens liues: for they thinke themſelves as good as vndone, if they ſhould make it their reſolution to be content with the only bleſſing of Almighty God, and to deale truly and iuſtly with men.

But let vs know that we are not only caſt off and forſaken, but empted of God, as ſoone as we bend our ſelues to ſeek deſcence from vnlawfull helps. Let all our enterpriſes, counſels and ſtudies therefore begin at Gods reuealed will. It is our dutie alwaies to waigh with our ſelues what he commands or forbids, that ſo being whollie deuoted to his ſeruiſe, and to the obedience of his Commandements, we may ſuffer our ſelues to be guided by his Spirit, which if we reſuſe to do, then ſhall our preſumption coſt vs the ſetting on, as they ſay.

He ſaith, that they laid ſinne upon ſinne, becauſe the Iewes did nothing elſe by their goodly preparations wherwith they thought to furniſh themſelves, but daſht their foot againſt the ſame ſtone, and of one euill made twaine, which was too great a readie: for the fault is much more blame-worthie and to be condemned when by vnlawfull ſhifts we labor to ſlee from vnder the hand of God.

But we are here to obſerue one thing more ſpeciall as touching the Iewes, who by the help of the Egyptians would put the Aſſyrians to flight, and yet themſelves had called the Aſſyrians to help them againſt the Iſraelites and Syrians. Aſſhu preſſed the Iewes very ſore, and doubtleſſe it was a iuſt puniſhment of God vpon them for their incredulitie, who ſought for help of men rather then of God. And this we ſee hath been the praſtiſe of many others alſo, who haue not ſtuck to ſeek help euen from the Turke. Well, the Iewes were ſo farre off from repenting themſelves of their ſinne, or acknowledging God to be iuſt in the puniſhment thereof: that they added ſinne to ſinne, as if the committing of one offence had made amends for the committing of another. Theſe are the cauſes then why our Prophet deales ſo roughlie with them: for thoſe that goe on ſo in their wickednes, and do violently riſe againſt God himſelfe, and will not ſuffer themſelves to be brought into the right way, neither by admonitions nor corrections, are worthe to be puniſhed with the greater ſeueritie & rigor.

Verſ. 2. Which walke forth to goe downe into Egypt, (and haue not asked at my mouth) to ſtrengthen themſelves with the ſtrength of Pharaoh, and truſt in the ſhadow of Egypt.

WE haue told you before why the Prophet blames this deſcent, or going downe. But becauſe ſo groſſe a rebellion did much amplify their ſinne, he once againe repeats it, that they did this without conſulting with his mouth, nay expreſly againſt his inhibition. He alſo brings them to the fountaine of this euill, when he tells them that they did it to ſtrengthen themſelves, becauſe they relied vpon the ſtrength of the Egyptians. From hence then ſprung that peruerſe deſire of theirs to make a league with them, in which they ſufficiently ſhewed that they made ſlight account of Gods power, not much caring whether they truſted in him or not; and thus made their impietic manifeſt to all the world.

But ſome might obiect, that men are Gods ſeruaunts, and that euery man may lawfullie vſe their help when he needs the ſame. I anſwere, mans help muſt be vſed, yet ſo, that in the meane while we reſt and depend vpon the alone help of God. But there was a ſpeciall cauſe to blame the Iewes, in regard they knew well that God had forbidden them to ſeek for any help of the Egyptians: and therefore in this their fact they tooke ſo much from God, as they attributed to Pharaoh and his hoſt. It is not without cauſe therefore that our Prophet doth here make a flat oppoſition betweene Pharaoh and God: for the creatures are ſet as oppoſite againſt him in battell, either when they exalt themſelves againſt him, or when men abuſe them, and truſt in vnto, or deſire them more then is permitted vnto them.

Verſ. 3. But the ſtrength of Pharaoh ſhall be your ſhame: and the truſt in the ſhadow of Egypt your conſuſion.

NOW he ſhewes what the end of the wicked ſhall be that deſpiſed God and his word, and followed ſuch counſels as themſelves liked: to wit, that all their enterpriſes whatſoever ſhould turne to their ouerthrow. He alſo threatens them that they ſhall not not only be left fruſtrate of their hope, but that they ſhall alſo goe to ſeek that with great loſſe and conſuſion, which ſhould bring them nothing in the end but ſhame and ſorrow.

This muſt be alwaies the lot of the wicked, for howſoever for a time they ſeeme to be whollie at their eaſe, and that all things fall out according to their desire; yet in the end the same things shall turne to their ruine. This is the iust reward of their presumption, when they dare to passe the bounds of Gods word: for things attained by vnlawful means, shall neuer bring profite to the possessors. He speaks of the strength of Pharaoh, by way of yeelding or granting; as if hee should say; You verily thinke Pharaohs strength is your fabric: but be better aduised, for it shall bring you nothing but shame and dishonour. The shadow of Egypt vnder which you hope to shrowd your selues, shall cause you to be cast downe with confusion of face. These two words of confusion and ignominie, are to be taken both in one sense; but the latter is added by way of amplification, because it carries greater weight with it then the former.

Verf. 4. For his Princes were at Zoan, and his Ambassadors came vnto Hanes.

WE may see by the Prophets words, that the Iewes not onely desired the aide of the Egyptians, calling them to aide and succour them: but hee expresseth somewhat more, to wit, that they obtained not the same without great cost and labour. For it could not be auoided, but they must needs make long iournies, take much paines, and be at extraordinary charges, to goe laden with their presents to the furthest Cities of Egypt, which he here names. For they sent no common persons on these ambassages, but Lords and great Princes. The reprehension therefore is the sharper, because they had basely sought succour of the Egyptians, trotting vp and down like poore futers. We are also to note y^e antithesis here which we spake of before; to wit, that God was ready at hand, and neere to be found; so as they needed not to trauell far, nor to be at any great expences to call vpon his name: for he tied himselfe vnto them by this promise; This is my rest: Psal. 132. 14. and had told them that in that place hee would be found of them. But these poore wretches in despising God, did rather choose to vex themselves, by running to the vttermost parts of the world, then to inioy that present helpe which was offred them within the walles of their owne Citie.

Verf. 5. They shall be ashamed of the people that cannot profit them, nor helpe nor doe them good; but shall be a shame and also a reproch.

HE confirms the former sentence: for it was a wonderfull hard matter to perswade the obstinate sort amongst the Iewes, that all things which they tooke in hand without the expresse warrant of Gods word, should turne to their ouerthrow. Now to the end they might be the more seuerely punished, God suffered them sometimes to prosper in their wicked courses; that so, being more and more seduced, they might in the end breake their owne neckes: for it came to passe by his iust iudgement, that Satan drew them on by litle and litle with his sweete baites, till hee had caught them fast in his nets. But in the end it was euident that they were not onely deprivied of that succour which they expected, but were also sharplie corrected for their presumption and indelicitie.

The Prophet threatens them then that the Egyptians shall not onely deceiue them, (as it often falles out that the wicked either giue vs the slip when we haue most neede, or doe treacherously betray those whom they haue set a gog with faire promises) but that they should stand them in no stead, although they did their best indouours to keepe that faith which they had promised. For let men do the vmost they can for vs, yet in as much as the issues of all things rests in the hands of God, we shall receiue no benefit thereby, vnlesse God bee pleased to adde his blessing. When the Prophet spake this, it was verie doubtfull and hard to bee beleeued, that so mightie a people should bee vnable to giue them helpe: but we ought to hold it for a sure principle, that all the comforts which the world is able to set before vs, shall turne but to smoke, vnlesse the Lord be fauourable and mercifull vnto vs.

Verf. 6. The burthen of the beasts of the South in a land of trouble and anguish, from whence shall come the young and old Lion, the Viper, and fierie flying Serpent against them that shall beare their riches vpon the shoulders of the Coltes, and their treasures vpon the bounces of the Camels, to a people that cannot profit.

HAVING inuicied against the consultations of the Iewes, in seeking helpe from the Egyptians, he now scornes them for the large expences, and great paines which they were at to bring this about: and therefore he denounceth the same curse which he did in the beginning of the Chapter; because they foolishly busied themselves much in transgressing Gods commandement. He mentions the South, because they passed thorow the South Country, wherein Egypt was situated from Indea. And in regard of the way therunto, he calles the beasts, and speaks to them: the rather to shame men, who were become senselesse, and would heare no admonitions at all. He therefore shewes that the effect of this prophetic shall extend it selfe to the very brute beasts; seeing men did shut their eares against it. For seeing this people did proudly contemne these threatnings, the Prophet doth for good cause direct his speech to the Horses and Camels, who though they were destitute of reason, yet should they perceiue that God spake not in vaine.

Furthermore, the Prophet shewes that Egypt (vpon which this people thought to build it is to make their downfall the greater in the end.

Men can do vs no good further than it pleaseth God to blesse their indouours for our good.

A Principle.

Men may sometimes prosper in bad and euill courses, but build their perfect happineſſe) ſhould proue a land of ſorrowe and affliction, euen to the verie beaſts. The way was long and tedious, yet they ſpared no coſt to ſatiſſie their inordinate luſts : yea they were ſo violently ouerſwayed and caried away therewith, that no diſtance of place, nor length of way could poſſibly coole or abate the ſame.

Now Iſaiab threatens them with a ſpeciall iudgement, (beſides the former incumbran- ces) which ſhould catch hold vpon them; to wit, that wild and cruell beaſts, that is, the young and old Lion, ſhould meeete them. Which was no new nor extraordinary accident vnto them that trauelled betwene Iudea and Egypt. Therefore hee heere notes out ſome thing more rare and dangerous; to wit, that beſides the fore trauale, diſcommodities, and charges which they ſhould be at, God in his iuſtice would meeete them with ſuch miſfor- tunes, that in the end they ſhould miſerably periſh. This doctrine ought to be applied vnto vs, who are too much wedded to the verie ſame vice: for as ſoone as any ſhew of danger ariſeth, wee by and by haſten to vnlawfull ſhifts, imagining that they ſhall doe vs good, albeit we know they be condemned of God. Is it not great reaſon then, that if wee will needes partake with this people in their ſin, that wee alſo ſhould ſhare with them in their puniſhment, vnleſſe we preuent the ſame by reſſing our ſtubburneſſe and vnbeliefe by Gods word? We ought alſo to obſerue and take heede of this folly, which carries vs away in ſuch wiſe, that we care for no coſt, nor re- fuſe any paines whatſoever, to ſatiſſie and accompliſh our great ſond and furious luſt. Whileſt we were captiues vnder the Pa- pacie, we had too woſull experience hereof, trotting hither and thither, and made long and wearifome pilgrimages to diuers Saints, when as yet the moſt tedious iournies were eaſie and light vnto vs : but now when wee ſhould yeeld obedience vnto God, and beare the light yoke of Chriſt, wee can indure no paines at all.

Verſ. 7. *For the Egyptians are vanitie, and they ſhall helpe in vaine. Therefore haue I cried vnto her: their ſtrength is to ſit ſtill.

THis verſe contains in it the expoſition of the former ſentence; for he denoun- ceth and repeats but the ſame thing as it were; to wit, that the Egyptians ſhall ſtand the Iewes in no ſtead, albeit they weary their bodies, and empty their purſes neuer ſo much in ſeeking helpe at their hands. As if hee ſhould ſay, Egypts ſtrength ſhall be vnprofitable vnto you, notwithstanding they ſhould do their vttermoſt, and imploy all their power to that end. Thus the Iewes ſhould be vtterly fruſtrated of their hopes; and to their great grieſe ſhould find themſelues much deceiued. The letter Van, here ſignifies For, or, Surely, as I haue tranſlated it.

In the next place he ſhewes that the Iewes haue nothing to ſay for themſelues, in that they were thus giddy headed to runne into Egypt, and that they were vtterly vnworthy of pardon, in regard they would not repent, but wilfully and wittingly poſted downe thither, albeit they had been admoniſhed to tarry at home. For I reſer this crying vnto Ieruſalem, to the peoſ of God; wherein he com- plains that he did but loſe his labour, in ſeeking to reclaim them by ſo many and plaine admonitions : therewithall ſhewing, that it was not without good cauſe that he had fore- warned them to ſit ſtill; for he therein ſought to preuent the afflictions and calamities which otherwiſe he foreſaw would ſurely fall vpon them. But whence, I pray you, ſprang this vnquietneſſe? Truly from this, that Ieruſalem would not beleue the word of the Lord. In a word, he ſhewes that meere rebel- lion of heart pricketh them forward to trot into Egypt. Why ſo? becauſe they might haue liued in ſafetie, if they would haue taried at home.

The verbe to crie, ſignifies that they were not onely admoniſhed by words, but alſo by ſtripes: whence it appears, that their obſtinate and rebellion was the greater. He takes ſitting ſtill here, to remaine and to reſt quietly in the houſe: for he will ſhew afterward, that it had been their parts to haue been of a quiet ſpirit. See now the fountaine from whence this vnquietneſſe and ſtirring, yea, this their madneſſe and giddineſſe of head ſprang. Oh! They thought that the Lord was too weake for their defence, vnleſſe the ſtrength of Egypt were alſo added therunto. For it is the propertie of infidelitie, to ſolici- cite the hearts of ſuch as giue not honour enough to the power of God, to be in continuall vexation of ſpirit, without anie reſt at all.

The nature of infidelitie

Verſ. 8. Now goe, and write it before them in a table, and note it in a booke; that it may be for the laſt day for euer and euer.

HAving convinced the Iewes of manifeſt incredulitie, now he would haue it ſigned and ſealed as it were vpon perpetuall record for a witneſſe vnto all poſteritie, to the end thoſe which ſhould ſucceed might know both how obſtinate & rebellious this people were; as alſo how iuſtlic God inſiſted his puniſhments vpon them. We haue told you before that the Prophets were wont to gather their Sermons into certaine chiefe heads, and afterwards to faſten them vpon the gates of the Temple: which being read and viewed of all at leiſure, the Miniſters tooke them thence and laid them vp ſafely in Cheſts in the Temple: and thus the booke of the Prophets were conſerued, and afterward gathered orderlie into volumes. But when among the reſt there was ſome rare and excellent propheſie and worthe of memorie; then the Lord commanded that it ſhould be written in greater letters, the better to draw the people to y reading of it, that they might mark it the more diligentlie. The Lord now com- mands

Men will take great paines to fulfill their owne luſts, but none at all in yeelding obedience to the Goſpell.

*Or, Surely.

mands the Prophet to doe the like, thereby shewing that this was no ordinarie matter, but the whole to be carefullie written, and very attentiuely read. Yea, that it should not only be read, but also so ingrauen as it were in mens memories, that it might neuer be raced out.

No doubt but the Prophet got great hatred of all hands by this prophesie, in regard he was not afraid to bring them thus vpon the open stage, not only to shame them among those that then liued, but among the posteritie also, and that from generation to generation. For what can men lesse endure, then to haue their wickednesses published, or that the same should stand as it were vpon record in the minds of men? oh! they can not abide that; they detest and abhorre it, accounting it a most vnworthie fact. Yet the Prophet notwithstanding was to goe thorow with it, and to yeeld obedience vnto God, albeit he thereby got the hatred of men, yea and it may be put his life also in danger: which constancie of his we are carefullie to obserue, in regard that he nothing feared the feare of men when the question was of his obedience to his God, and the discharge of his dutie. Then he contemned hatreds, enuie, hurlic burlies, threats, false alarums, and all dangers, that so he might the more freely and boldly performe that charge which was imposed vpon him. In which respect it is our parts to follow and imitate his worthie example if we meane to giue eare and to follow Gods call.

Before them.] Others translate, with them. But the word Before, agrees best, for he meant to prouoke the Iewes in the sight of all, by setting forth this prophesie written in a Table. And hence may we gather that wicked men ought to be senerelie reprehended, and that in the presence of all, albeit they storme neuer so much at it; as being a thing which at no hand they can away withall: for howsoeuer such reprehensions and threatnings doe them little or no good, yet others peraduenture may be warned thereby, when they shall see them so branded with perpetuall shame and infamie.

That which is recorded elsewhere, to wit, the sinne of Iudah is written with the penne of a diamond, and grauen vpon the table of their hearts, shall be fulfilled in them. Neither ought they once to imagin that they shall escape, albeit they contemne the prophesies by stopping their eares at the publishing of them: for their wickednes shall be manifest to the view of men and Angels. Furthermore, in regard they did neuer willinglie repent themselves, nor were ashamed of their finnes, the Lord commands a spectacle of their infamie to be erected, and set vp before the eyes of all: for as they were wont to engrauce victories, or some notable things in tables of brasse, so would God haue their shame noted in publike tables, which the Iewes notwithstanding labored to hide and couer by their cauls. For this was an ordinarie matter as I said erewhile, that the Prophet was charged to defame his own nation by so solemne an edict, for which cause it is added, that it should be for the last day, that so they might be had in detestation for euer; or, because that when the great Iudge shall appeere and sit in Iudgement, and that all bookes shall be opened, then the finnes of the wicked shall be truly discovered: for then the things which before lay hid and buried as it were in obscure darkenes, shall be discovered and brought to light.

Let vs heere obserue diligentlie that the prophesies were not written for the men of one age alone, but also for their children and all posterities which should be instructed, to the end they might learne to eschew that hardnes of heart which was in their forefathers, Psal. 78. 6. 7. 8. and 95. 8. And that which S. Paul saith of the whole Scripture, that it is profitable to teach, to admonish & comfort, agrees also to this prophesie: for we know that these points are needfull to be knowne in all times, 2. Tim. 3. 16. Let vs reiect then the imaginations of those franticke spirits and bad companions, who affirme, that this doctrine was fit for that time, and not for this. Let vs faithfull, I say, learne to stop their eares at such blasphemies, and to driue them farre away from them: for albeit our Prophet be now dead, yet must his doctrine still liue and bring forth fruit amongst vs. *

Verf. 9. * *That it is a rebellious people, * Or, F. lying children, and children that would not heare the law of the Lord.*

The particle For, serues as an exposition, in regard the Prophet now explains that which the Lord would haue published to all posteritie, namely, that the obstinacie of this people was past cure, because they would not suffer themselves to be brought into any good order, notwithstanding they were dayly taught and instructed. Besides, we may from their vaine bragges gather how much these goodly Epithites did pierce and gall vs hearts as well of small as great: for they gloried they were the holie posteritie, and how they issued out of Abrahams loines, as if Gods adoption had serued for a vaile to couer all their grosse and palpable wickednesses, though they were neuer so manifest. Nay, God meant to lay them open, and to publish their wickednesses with sound of trumpet, as it were. For in accusing them to be such as refused to heare the law of the Lord, he therein opens the fountain whence all presumption flows, to wit, the contemps of the word, which discovered their impieitie in despising euen of God himselfe: for they lie who say they will serue God, and yet will not be in subiection to his Commandements.

Isaiah also aggravates their offence for rejecting the medicine that should haue cured their maladies, which medicine was offered them in his (whole some) doctrine. For this cause he calles them rebellious, vntamed, or wild; as also liars, or disloyall, in regard that whosoever will not submit himselfe to Gods word, doth openly turne his back vpon him, no lesse then if God plaid the tyrant in exacting

Note that the prophesies were not only written for them of former times, but to instruct vs and our posteritie after vs.

He that refuseth to submit himselfe vnder the censure of the word, exeth God of tyrannie, is bewitched of Satan, and hates integrity.

Isaiah constancie worthie to be obserued & followed.

adding some unreasonable thing at his hand : and therewithall doth also shew, that hee is bewitched with the illusions of the duell, and giuen vp to the vanity of his own heart, so as he hates all integritie.

Verf. 10. Which say vnto the Seers, See not ; and vnto the Prophets, Prophecie not vnto vs right things : but speake flattering things vnto vs ; prophetic errors.

THE now in plainer termes, sets forth and shewes as in liuely colours, what that obstinacie & contempt of the word is, whereof hee spake before : for the wicked not onely scorne all instruction, but doe also furiously resist it; yea, they with it were vterly abolished and buried in cuerlasting forgetfulness. This is it which Isaiab meant to say ; to wit, that they did not onely turne their cares, eyes, and all their senses from holy doctrine, but could very well haue found in their hearts that it had been vterly extinct and abolished : for the wicked are euermore pricked forward with such rage, that they would haue no mention at all made of that which they cannot abide to heare of. For the power and efficacy of the word so galled and stings them, that they shew themselues to be no better then furious wild beasts in rage and crueltie. Faine would they escape, but they are compelled in despite of them to heare God speake; yea and to tremble before his Maiestie.

Now it vntually fallies out that after this bitterness against the word, in the next place they fall to hate the Prophets that haue bin the Ministers of it : and not onely that, but to lay snares, and to vex them with persecutions, banishments, and oft times with death it selfe. By means whereof, they thinke vterly to roote out & race from off the earth, both the doctrine, and Doctors also that teach it. For, men had rather heare dreaumes and fables, then to bee faithfull taught.

The Prophet sets not downe here the verie words which they spake; to wit, as if they had openly pronounced them; but hee shewes what was in their hearts : for hee had not to deale with such foolas as would goe blaze their impieties to the whole world : no, they were growne to the height of hypocrisie. For they made the world belecue, they were such as serued God deuoutly, and therefore complained as if the Prophets did them great wrong, so to diffame them. But Isaiab pluckes off this visard wherewith they couered themselues, and lets the world see what they were indeed; seeing they would not he brought to giue place to the truth. For whence (I pray you) proceeded their murmurings against the Prophets, but that they neither could nor would hearken to the voice of God?

The Prophets were called Seers, because the Lord reuealed that vnto them, which they were afterwards to reueale vnto others: for they were as beacons set vpon an hill, and as watchmen, thence to discouer a farre off tidings either of that good or euil which was by and by to insue. But the people could not abide to heare of troubles; and therefore they hated the Prophets, who by laying their sins close vnto their consciences, were therewithall proclaimers of Gods vengeance which was ready to seaze vpon them. To this appetaines these words, see not, prophetic not right things : not that they vttered these things indeed, as we haue shewed before; but because they thought thus in their hearts, in which they wished the Prophets would be lesse seuer. For it went against the haire (as they say) to bee so sharply dealt withall. Doubtlesse none of them would once shew themselues so impudent, as in plaine termes to desire they might be seduced; or to say, that they would resist the truth : for in outward profession, they made the world beleue they sought to promote the same with all diligence, as all our aduersaries the Papiests doe at this day: but they denied that the sermons of Isaiab, or of the other Prophets, were the word of the Lord. They were not afraid to tell Jeremias, that he was a liar; and not onely that, but gaue him threatening words saying, Thou shalt not prophecie in the name of the Lord, lest thou die by our hands: Ier. 11. 21. Thus we see the publishing of the truth was to them a thing intollerable. Now in turning their eares from it, what could they elsse beleue but lies? See then how they sought to be seduced and deuiued willingly.

But hee discouers the fountaine from whence all this sprang, when hee saith, they desired to be flattered. For they would haue been most readie to haue heard and receiued flattering words, and could well haue found in their hearts that their eares might haue been tickled in the name of the Lord forsooth. What is the reason then why the world is not onely subiect to bee gyled by impostures, but also that it earnestly seekes and receiues the same? Surely because all men naturally desire nothing more, then that they might be suffered to rot in their slithernesse, through flatteries. But the messengers of God must of necessitie bee sharpe in their reprehensions for all that, if they meane to approue themselues vnto God. Whence it followes, that worldly men cauill foolishly and childishly when they say, we could bee content to bee Gods disciples with all our hearts, if hee would not deale too seuerelie with vs. Which is all one, as if for their sakes they would cause him to alter his nature, and to denie himselfe : as also Micheas saith, that the Iewes cared for no Prophets, but such as would prophecie vnto them of wine & strong drinke: Mich. 2. 11.

Verf. 11. Depart out of the way : goe aside out of the path : cause the holy one of Israel to cease from vs.

THE summe is; that when the Prophets are despised, God himselfe is therewithall despised and reiected, so as he hath no more audience. Thus the wicked cunningly dissimble

ble, because they are ashamed to confesse so great a wickednesse against themselves: but it goes neuer the better with them for all that. For God wil be heard by those to whom he hath giuen comandement to speake vnto vs, and to publish that doctrine which is contained in his word. Ought he then to be heard: Is any reuerence due vnto him? Let vs shew it in imbracing his word, as it is contained in the writings of the Prophets and Euangelists. Which I wish should be well noted, to vphold the credit of the word: for those that reject it, doe as much as if they denied God to haue any being.

Againe, the cause of such impietie is here touched, which doubles the fault; to wit, because you flatters vs not in our finnes, but performs the office of a good and expert Physician. Men desire to be flattered, and cannot willingly indure that God should threaten them: thence proceeds this hatred and refection of the word: thence comes that furious war which they raise vp against the Prophets, whose threats and reprehensions they can by no means indure. For what cause should men haue to reuolt from God, and from vnder his rule and government; were it not that they please themselves with the mists of errors, and hate the right way? The Prophet therefore fitly ioynes these two things together: first, the contempt of heauenlie doctrine: secondly, the hatred of vprightnesse.

Verf. 12. Therefore thus saith the holy one of Israel; Because you haue cast off this word, and trust in violence and wickednesse, and slay therenpon:

HE adds the chastisement of this impiety; to wit, that they should not escape unpunished, because they refused to heare the Lord speaking vnto them: which conceipt he expresseth the more fully by the verbe to Reiect, or, to discharge. He calles it this word, vsing therein a word demonstratiue, in regard that men willingly forge vnto themselves a word agreeable to the manner and course of their owne life: but they will giue God no audience when he speaks. Afterwards he opposeth Gods milde summoning of them, and an exhortation to a quiet rest, against their turbulent enterprises, saying; You trust in violence and slay therenpon. The word Oleg, signifies rapine and extortion, in things appertaining to mens substance: others translate, Riches ill gotten: others, Slander, or, misreporting: but they expresse not the Prophets meaning sufficiently. For mine owne part I refer it not to Riches gotten by wicked practises: but rather to the pride and rebellion, wherewith this people were punished vp.

The word iniquitie, afterwards added, is not to be restrained to iudgement; because as I thinke, it hath a larger scope: for by these two words, the Prophet meant to set forth the inuidencie of the wicked, who proudly and unolently exalted themselves against

God. Why so? Because they would alwaies do what them listed, and withstood him and his sacred will. And as the Poets foined that the Giants made war with God, so these resisted him when he threatned, perswading themselves that they were able to make his force to recoile by their pride and ouerweening.

A fiction of Poets.

Verf. 13. Therefore this iniquitie shall be vnto you as a breach that falleth, or a swelling in an high wall, whose breaking commeth suddenly in a moment.

THIS is the sentence touching their punishment, which Isaiah sets forth by a goodly similitude: for he compares the wicked to a wall that is cracked or swollen. Now as the swelling of a wall, shewes that it is readie to fall, because it cannot long stand vpright, vnlesse all the parts be equally knit together; so the pride and insolencie of the wicked, is an infallible signe & token of their present destruction: for the more they are puffed vp, the more sudden shall their downfall be. And as they are full of wind, so it is not possible, but being overcharged therewith, they must forthwith breake in sunder. Hee bids them therefore to exalt themselves and to behaue themselves maliciously against God, if they will: but in conclusion, hee will quickly ouerturne your pride & presumption; for it is nothing else but a bubble full of wind. Hence we are to be admonished, that there is nothing better for vs, then that wee wholly submit our selues vnder God: and so to gather in all our spirits, that we bind our selues perpetually to doe him seruice. For whosoever hee be that shakes off this humilitie, and grows proud, must needs breake in sunder with gathering in ouer much wind. The Lord indeed for a time suffers the wicked to swell, and make their great risings and ouerflowings appeare, that in the end they might pull ruine and destruction vpon themselves, by their pride and vaine boastings.

Verf. 14. And the breaking thereof is like the breaking of a Potters pot, which is broken without pittie: and in the breaking thereof, there is not found so much as a shard to take fire out of the hearth, or to take water out of the pit.

WHEN a wall falleth downe, yet there remains some remnants of the ruines thereof; and besides, the stones will serue for some good vses; yea, that which is fallen may be reedified. But our Prophet prophecieth here, that those which shall behaue themselves thus rebelliously and proudly against God, shall perish in such sort, that they shall neuer be heald; so that the remainder shall be reuerly vnpreservable. He therefore vseth a similitude taken from an earthen vessel, whose broken peeces can neither be made vp, nor gathered together againe. Which threatnings ought

ought greatlie to moue vs to embrace y^e word of God with all reuerence, when we heare that ſo horrible punishments are prepared for thoſe which deſpiſe the ſame: for the Prophet ſhewes that they ſhall be whollie deſtroyed and vicerlic confounded, and takes away all hope of their reſtauration. And good reaſon: For wee ſee how the contempters of God ceaſe not dayly to ſet vp their Creasts, notwithstanding they haue had the foile three or ſoure times: Why ſo? Becauſe nothing is more difficult then to pluck from out of their hearts that falſe confidence which was faſt rooted therein.

Verſ. 15. For thus ſaith the Lord God the holie one of Iſrael, In reſt and in quietnes ſhall ye be ſaued; in quietnes and in confidence ſhall be your ſtrength: but yee would not.

Here the Prophet ſhewes one ſpeciall touching the contempt of God. For when hypocrites are generally admoniſhed, it toucheth them little or nothing at all: the Prophets therefore vnto their generall doctrines adde particular applications; touching in a ſpeciall manner the conuiciſation of thoſe with whom they had to doe, and ſo alwaies aimed at ſome certaine maik, or end. For his aduerſaries might thus cauill and ſay, Wherefore doeſt thou accuſe vs of ſo great an impietic, as if we meant to reiect the word of the Lord?

This particular therefore is alledged to preſſe vpon their conſciences, and to cut off all occaſions of vaine cauillations. As if he ſhould ſay, Did not the Lord tell you that in reſt and ſilence ſhould be your confidence? Why ſtaid you not vpon this counſell of God? To what purpoſe haue you kept ſuch ſikings to and fro? Thus the Prophet conuinceth them with ſuch forcible argumets, that without extreame impudencie they were vnable any way to excuſe themſelues: or if they did, yet he went away with the victorie, as they ſay.

He calles the Lord the holie one of Iſrael, the rather to reproach them the more for their vnthankfulnes, that ſo they might the better know what ſuccour they might haue had from him who would haue been their gardian, and as their protector. But hauing once deſpised him, their diſtruſt caried them away to ſecke help of the Egyptians; which queſtionles was a wickednes vicerly ſupportable. This Epithite then contains vnder it a bitter complaint, in regard they had ſtopped vp the paſſage againſt the Lord, who drew neere vnto them for their good.

Some tranſlate the word Shunah Repen- tance; others, whom I had rather follow, Reſt: for I thinke the Prophet meant often to tell the people that the Lord required nothing of them but to reſt themſelues quietly in him. Neither is it ſuperfluous that he recites one and the ſame thing in two words: for of ſet purpoſe he hath put theſe words reſt and ſilence together, that he might the better reprooue the diſtruſt and incredulitie of the people.

Moreouer this ſentence contains two parts, to wit, a Commandement, and a promiſe: for he commands the people to ſit ſtill; in the ſecond place he promiſeth an aſſured deliuerance. In regard the people gaue no credit to this promiſe, they therefore obeyed not the commandemēt: tor how ſhould they obey him, in whom they belecue not, or vpon whole promiſes they reſt not themſelues? We need not maruell then if they be deprived of peace and reſt, which without faith can haue no place; neither can faith be without the promiſes: which being receiued, then, and not before, the troubled and perplexed minds come to be quieted. Infidelitie then only is it that begets this trouble, and therefore the Prophet hath iuſt cauſe to reprove it, ſhewing, that it is the fountaine from whence all their miſerie ſprang.

Now albeit our condition be not altogether like to that of the Iewes; yet God would haue vs quietly wait for his ſuccour, to the end we ſhould not be troubled or perplexed, but to hope in his promiſes. This doctrine ought to be common to all the faithfull, for Satan inuets nothing elſe but how to trouble and vex them, and to cauſe them to fall from that happie eſtate in which they are. Moses long ſince gaue this admonition, ſtand you ſtill, and the Lord ſhall fight for you, Exod. 14. 14. Not that he meant they ſhould fall aſleepe, or be idle, but he only required they would keepe this peace in their hearts, Coloſſ. 3. 15. which if we inioy, we ſhall finde by experience that it alone will ſuffice vs for our ſuccour; but without it we ſhall be ſure to be puniſhed for our lightnes and preſumption.

Verſ. 16. For ye haue ſaid, No, but we will flee away vpon horſes, therefore ſhall yee flee: Wee will ride vpon the ſwiſteſt, therefore ſhall your perſecutors be ſwiſter.

He ſhewes how they would by no meanes quietly wait for the ſaluation of y^e Lord, for they choſe rather to haue help from the Egyptians. But there is heere a goodly meeting together of words, whereby he turnes againſt themſelues their owne ſpeeches that were ſo full of vaine confidence: for in the firſt place he takes the word to flee, to eſcape, and in the ſecond place, to take their flight. The Iewes ſaid it was much better for them to prevent the preſent danger in fit and convenient time, and therefore promiſed themſelues good ſucceſſe if they vſed the aid of the Egyptians. Truly ſaith Iſaiah, I denie not but you ſhall flee, yet not for your ſafetie; for you ſhall turne your backs vpon your enemies, and ſhall be purſued of horſes much ſwiſter then your owne.

But wee ſhall perceiue yet more cleerly what vice it is which Iſaiah here taxeth the Iewes withall, by their preſumptuous answer, No: to wit, that they obſtinacie reſuſed to yeeld obedience to that counſell which God gaue them by his Prophets, and thought it

A Commandement, and a promiſe.

I
In theſe words, Shall ye be ſaued. No obediece without faith. No peace without faith. No faith without a promiſe. Only faith quietes perplexed conſciences. Infidelitie the moſt effectiue feares and diſtractions.

This doctrine belongs to vs.

A peaceable and quiet conſcience will give ſufficient comfort in all diſtreſſes.

The prophets are wont to defend from generall doctrines to particular applications.

Horrible preſumption to oppoſe our no, to Gods yea.

faser for them to prouide for their owne defence by some other meanes. Thus in contemning God, they esteemed the false conceit touching the meanes of their saluation, which they had forged in their owne heads, (before that which he had prescribed them.)

Let vs in any wise therefore turne away our eyes from beholding present things, and from relying vpon humane helps, that so we may wholly depend vpon God; for then wee shew whether we trust in him or no indeede, when outward meanes faile vs. I grant it is verie lawfull for vs to vse the things of this life: but alas, wee are of such a crooked nature, that in vsing of them, for the most part wee leaue and forsake God, and wholly abuse those his good gifts. Besides, we are to obserue how wofull their end is, who trust more in outward helps then in God. For all things must needs goe backward, and fall out against their expectations: for example, wee see that whilst these Iewes imagined to saue themselves, they are constrained to flee away with shame and disgrace, and in the meane while did themselves no good at all. It may so fall out, I grant, that things may haue some outward shew of good successe in the beginning; but it is onely to the end, that the change when it comes, might bee the more cumbersome and heauier to beare. Isaiah denies not but Egypt might afford them some helpe: but withall he telles the Iewes, that God would finde meanes enough to to crosse and ouerthrow that helpe, that they should no way escape his hand. For though the whole world should doe their utmost, yee shall they neuer be able to defeat God of that which he hath determined.

Verf. 17. A thousand as one shall flee at the rebuke of one: at the rebuke of five shall yee flee, till yee bee left as a shippe mast vpon the toppes of a mountaine, and as a beacon vpon an hill.

BEcause the Iewes trusted in their strength, in regard of their multitude, (which men are apt to do when they see and behold their power) the Prophet plainly telles them, that all the strength they are able to make at home, shall doe them no more good, then if it were far remote from them. Why so? Because the Lord would to breake and so daunt their courage, that all their forces should stand them in no stead. For to what purpose serue weapons or an host of men; yea what good can garrisons or fortresses doe, when mens hearts are appalled in them with feare? Alas! all our power is but weaknesse, except the Lord fortifie and strengthen vs with the power of his holy Spirit. This sentence is often found in the law; to wit, that when they haue forsaken the Lord, many of them shall bee put to flight before a few of their enemies: Deut. 28. 62. But the diuersitie betweene the Law and the Prophets, is this; the Prophets apply that to some particuler vse, which Moses deliuered generally, as we haue shewed elsewhere.

Wee haue therefore to note three things here. First, that we shall haue no more strength then that which is giuen vs of God. For if he sustaine vs not by his almightie power, wee shall forthwith be out of heart. Secondly, it comes to passe by Gods iust iudgement, that men should make vs afraid, when hee cannot obtaine so much of vs, as to write his feare in our hearts. For it is equall that mens words and threats should quail vs, when wee despise the voice and threats of the Lord. We may also note in the third place, that the Lord hath no neede of any great preparations to correct vs; for if he lift vp but his least finger against vs, we are forthwith vndone: he needs not an host of men to ouerthrow vs, bee we neuer so well fitted and furnished to withstand him. Moreouer, he telles them that their calamitie shall last vntill they be brought to nought: so as there shall onely remaine some small markes of Gods mercy, amidst so great a waste and destruction of the land.

Where he saith, as the mast of a ship in the top of a mountaine, it may be expounded two waies. Some thinke the similitude is taken from a wood or Forrest cut downe: for when men do so, they leaue certaine faire and high trees standing, which may serue for ships. But the word Har, is taken for a rocke, or rocky place against which ships vse to wracke themselves; after which, there is espied a mast, or some such thing, as witness of that shipwracke. The Prophet yet addes another similitude taken from the signes of viclorie, which are vsually erected and set vp after the discomfiture of the enemy. In a word, hee shewes that there shall bee so small a remainder of men, that it shall much resemble a generall waste and desolation. As if he should say; This great multitude now dazles your eyes, but there shall come such an ebbe and scattering of them, that there shall not bee left so much as the face of any people. By this are we admonished, how humble, modest, and mecke wee ought to bee notwithstanding our great riches and strength: for if we lift vp our hearts, the Lord hath skill to take vs downe by and by, and to make vs become more dastardly then women or little children: so as we shall not dare to looke one of our enemies in the face; and if wee doe, yet all our forces shall melt away as snow (before the sunne.)

Verf. 18. Yet therefore will the Lord wait, that hee may haue mercy vpon you: therefore will he be exalted, that hee may haue compassion vpon you: for the Lord is the God of iudgement. Blessed are all they that wait for him.

THE Prophet now addes a consolation: for hitherto hee hath so terrified them, that all the faithfull amongst them might haue been driuen to dispaire. His meaning is therefore, to comfort their hearts; that so hauing tasted how pitifull and gracious the Lord

To trust in God while outward helps faile vs, manifests that we haue faith.

A hard matter to vse this world as if we vied it not.

All things must of necessitie succeede ill with them that trust more in the creature, then in the Creator. An heritage is hastily gotten at the beginning, but the end thereof shall not be blessed.

As a beacon

Let not the strong man glory in his strength. Ier. 9. 3.

No strength but from the power of Gods holy Spirit.

The difference betweene the Law and the Prophets.

Still the Lord in wrath remembers mercy. Hab. 3. 2.

Lord is in the middes of these their calamities they might notwithstanding possesse their soules in patience, and vphold their faith by the power of the promises. This waiting hee opposeth then to that ouer-great haſt, against which hee cried in the beginning of the Chapter. For there hee reproofed the people for their posting downe into Egypt, and condemned therein their infidelitie: but now contrariwise to their reproach he tels them, that the Lord will not render like for like, albeit they haue much dishonored him; neither will he hasten to punish them. Others expound, He commands you to wait; or, He will make you wait. But as I thinke the sense which I haue giuen agrees best.

Now that we may the better cleare this sentence, we must lay this foundation, to wit, that God alwaies keeps a measure in his corrections: the reason is, because he is inclined to mercie, which we gather from the word Judgement: for the Prophets meaning therein is, that the Lord not only chastiseth, but also euermore vsed a moderation in his chastisements, according to that in Ieremiah, Correct me o Lord, not in thy wrath, but in judgement, lest I be consumed and brought to nought, Iere. 10. 24. Also in another place, I will not utter it cut thee off, but will correct thee in judgement, Iere. 30. 11. Thus Judgement is opposed to severity; the Lord so moderating his blowes in smiting the faithfull, that he cuts not off from them all hope of their saluation, for of that he alwaies hath a most tender respect. And therefore as Abacuc saith, In the middes of his wrath he euermore remembers mercie. He is not like one of vs then, to take the advantage presentlie, and to flie vp vs. Alas! so we should be brought to nought by and by. No, he attends vs with patience.

Moreover, it is a confirmation of no small weight, when he addes, that God will shew a ſigne of his glorie in pardoning his people. Where I haue translated, He will be exalted, that he may be mercifull; others turne it, When he shall be mercifull. But I thinke the first translation ſutes best. It seemes to vs sometimes that the Lord either ſits idle in heauen, or ſleeps when he permits the wicked to offer violence to his people: and the ordinarie phrase of the Scripture is, that he ſits still, or is farre off when he defends not his Church. When therefore he had let loose the raines to the Chaldeans to oppresse the Iewes, they might haue thought he had beene aſleepe. Wherefore the Prophet saith, that the Lord will exalt or raise himselfe againe, and wil goe vp into his Judgement ſeat. What to doe? That he may shew you mercie.

Where he saith, Blessed are all those that wait for him, this flowes from the former part of the sentence, wherein he called the Lord the God of Judgement. When the Prophet speaks thus graciously of him, it is that he might perswade and exhort the Iewes to hope and patience, for the people were full of diffidence, and were tossed to and fro with a nauicellous vnquietnes, and vexation of spirit: Why so? Their infidelitie pestered them so misfe-

rable, that they were not able with quiet minds to wait upon God. Well, to remedie this vice, he exhorts them to wait, that is, to hope. Now hope is nothing else but the performance of faith, when we peaceable wait for the accomplishment of Gods promises. Where he saith, Those shall be blessed that wait for him, on the contrary he signifies, that such as suffer themselves to be outswayed with impatientie, and haue their refuge to wicked things, shall be accursed, and in the end shall perish: for without hope in God, there is neither saluation nor happines.

Verſ. 19. Surely a people shall dwell in Zion and in Ierusalem: thou shalt weep no more: he will certaintie haue mercie vpon thee at the voice of thy crye: When he heareth thee, he will answer thee.

HE confirms the former sentence, to wit, that the people shall indeed be afflicted, but yet that in the end they shall returne vnto Zion. But this was a matter very incredible, especially after the ruin of Ierusalem and the whole land, for then it seemed that all the people were consumed; yet the Prophet giues them a promise that the Church shall continue safe. He begins at Mount Zion where the Temple was erected, and saith, that the Lord shall yet be there called vpon: then he addes, that it shall be also in Ierusalem: thereby vnderstanding the spreading and increasing of the Church; together with the restoration of such things as before were ruined. In the meane while he aduerteth them that Ierusalem shall be repeopled, because God had his dwelling there.

When he addes, thou shalt weep no more, it is to shew that their lamentations should not last alwaies. The Church, that is, all the faithfull, should be in great heavinesse while ſt they remained in so miserable and in so wofull an estate; but Iſaiah tels them y^e this their sorrow shall haue an end: and in this sense is it said in Psal. 126. 5. that those which loen in teares shall reape in ioy. The Lord often suffers vs to be pressed with wonderfull anguiſhes, but in the end he will relieue vs, and giue vs matter of gladnes, to wit, when he turnes the captiuitie of Zion: for this is the true ioy of the faithfull. Moreover, in as much as it is a thing very difficult to reioyce whilst the tokens of Gods iudgements present themselves to our view on euery side, the Prophet sets the cause of ioy before vs in his mercie: for we may assure our selves that all ioy and reioycing shall returne and abound as soone as Gods anger shall be appeased towards vs, according as we haue before alledged that famous saying of the Prophet Abacuc, that in the middes of wrath the Lord remembers mercie: and neuer so farre afflicts his Church, but he limits, moderates, and measures his blowes by iudgement.

Our Prophet likewise shewes by what meanes we may obtaine this grace, in saying, it shall be when God shall haue the voice of ioycy. For in these words hee incites and pro-

A definition of hope.

If they be blessed that wait for God, those must needs be accursed that flee from him. Without hope, no happines nor saluation.

We must dwell in Zion and in Ierusalem if we will haue our requests heard and granted.

The returning of Zion spirituallie, the matter of our true ioy.

Our ioy flowes from Gods shewing of mercie.

Though God be most ready to shew mercie, yet will he be sought vnto.

Ezek. 35 37.

On: God will not render like for like. Psal. 103. 10. 12. 13.

God keeps a measure in his corrections, because he is inclined to mercie.

God not onely chastiseth, but keeps a moderation in his chastisements.

Judgement is opposed to severity.

The Lord is patient towards vs because he would haue none of vs to perish. a. Pet. 2. 9.

Hope and patience.

To demand pardon of God without sense of sin, is the next way to deprice vs of this mercy here promised.

No looking for succour without the affliction of prayer.

wokes the faithful to prayers, and ardent sighs and groanes : for if wee aske pardon of God, and be not touched with repentance and remorse for our finnes; whence indeed this cry ought to proceed, we are viterly vnworthy to haue any mercy shewed vs. Would wee then haue the Church deliuered from death, and restored vnto a prosperous estate, no lesse then if the were raised vp out of her graue? Oh let vs cry vnto the Lord that hee may heare the voice of our cries, sighs, and groanes. For alas! if wee can be void of the affliction of prayer, how can wee looke for any succour of him?

To answer here signifies nothing else but that God will cause vs to feele by experience, both his helpe and fauour : for the Lord answers vs not by voice, but by the effects. And yet let vs not thinke he will forthwith answer our cry. Why so? Many times there is much weaknesse of ours mingled with them; so as they be disordered by reason of our vnbridled passions : he will assist vs when it shall be expedient for vs; so as wee shall proue by experience that hee hath respected our saluation.

Verse 20. And when the Lord hath given you the bread of aduersitie, and water of affliction, thy raine shall be no more kept backe, but thine eyes shall see thy raine.

Hee continues on his former speech, confirming the hearts of the faithfull, lest they should faint: for patience alwaies begets hope of a better issue. He therefore instructs them patiently to beare the chastisement to come, because they should onely feele Gods wrath therein for a time; but soone after, the storme shall be blowne ouer; hee promiseth them that ioy and deliuerance shall be at hand, because God will turne his anger away from them.

I expound the latter Van, After that : as if hee should say; After you haue been thus afflicted, then the Lord will blesse you; for hee will change your mourning into ioy. Whereas some take the word Raine, for Instructor, it agrees not with the text: for albeit the principall fruit of our reconciliation with God, stands in the inioying of faithfull Teachers, yet because the common people had suffered much want, Isaiah fitting his speech according to their weaknes, giues the therein a taste as it were of Gods fatherly goodness in mentioning great plenty of all things.

By the words bread and water, hee signifies an extreme pouerty and want of outward things: and therefore hee addes aduersitie and affliction. Now in stead of this penurie hee promiseth to send them fruitfull increase, which hee expresth vnder the word Raine. For hee takes the cause for the effect: as if he should say; The earth shall be exceeding fruitfull : in which phrase of speech, the Prophet also had respect to the situation of that Country; which waited for no other meanes to make it fruitfull, but the raine which fell from heauen; for it was not watered by the overflowing of riuers or fountaines, but onely with raines. Isaiah therefore shewes that the Lord will send abundance of those fruits, which otherwise he could haue diminished or taken away by barrenesse. In any wise therefore let vs learne to comfort our soules with these and the like promises, when wee shall in anie sort feele the hand of our God heaue vpon vs.

Verse 21. And thine eares shall heare a voyce behind thee, saying; This is the way, walke yee in it, when thou turnest thee to the right hand, and when thou turnest thee to the left.

The fruitfulness of the land, whereof hee spake before, ought to be esteemed a good blessing of Good. But behold here the chiefest cause of ioy and gladnesse; to wit, when God vouchsafes vnto vs the wholesome & sincere milke of the word (for our soules.) For there is no famin of bread that ought so much to affect vs with feare and perplexitie, as the famin of Gods blessed word. And indeed looke how much more precious the soule is then the body, so much the more ought we to feare that famin about all other famins; as also another Prophet telles vs: Amos 8.11. Our Prophet then promiseth vnto the Iewes a benefit, about all benefits the greatest. What is that? They shall now be fed with the word of God, which had been exceeding scarce amongst them before. The false Prophets I deny not will boast, that they also haue the word; yea with greater boldnesse many times then the faithfull Teachers themselves. They tosooth will be taken and held for good guides, euen whilest they lead men into error, and at last, plunge them with themselves into euerlasting perdition. But the word which shewes vs the direct way, comes of God alone. And yet if he did not therewithall promise to giue eares to heare it, the word of it (else should little auail vs: for so he should indeed speake but to deafe eares, neither should we perceiue ought but a confused sound.

When he saith therefore that hee will be behind vs as a guide, wee may thereby perceiue, that God will not suffer his word to be spoken to vs in vaine, but will so worke inwardly vpon our iudgements and affections, that they shall be bowed to a true and willing obedience. For all of vs naturally are vnteachable, so that we stand in need to be wholly reformed by the worke of the Spirit. And therefore the word, shall heare, is of great weight in this place.

Now he compares God to a schoolemaster, who sets his schollers before him that hee may the better teach them, and keepe them in order: wherein vndoubtedly, hee shewes the great affection and exceeding care which he hath ouer vs, in that he contents not himselfe to goe before vs, but also to watch vs at euery turne with his gracious eye.

Moreouer, the Prophet shewes, that those which

The famin of Gods word a famin of all famins.

But the inioying of it a benefit of all benefits. False Prophets would be taken for the onely Doctors of the Church.

True doctrine if selfe shall auail vs nothing at all, unless God giue vs eares to heare it.

Patience begets hope of a good issue.

which follow God, ſhal neuer goe out of their way. For by the verbe exhortatiue, waſce yee in vs, hee addes ſome reliefe to helpe our perſeuerance leſt ſome difficultie or other might ſlake our courſe, as it often fallies out.

But that which he addes of the right hand and the left, may ſeeme abſurd, in regard that when Mofes ſhewed the people the way in which they ſhould walke, hee therewithall forbid them to turne either to the right hand, or the left: Deut. 5. 32. & 17. 20. For that way is ſtraight, and no man ought to ſeeke out any by-waies. What might be the meaning of our Prophet then? I anſwere, hee mentions the right hand and the left in this place, in another ſenſe then Mofes doth. For it is taken here for all ſorts of counſels which wee ought to aduife of; which are diuers in regard of the diuerſitie of occaſions that we meeete withall: and according as euery one meeetes with ſundry difficulties, and agreeable to his affaires and occaſions, heis to take aduice and deliberation.

Thus hee calles right hand and left, all the actions of life whatſocuer; to the end that in all our enterpriſes, wee might haue the Lord for our guide, and that we might put nothing in execution, till wee haue called vpon his name, whether we turne to the right hand, or to the left. Hence we gather an exceeding comfort and conſolation; to wit, that the Lord will be with vs in our enterpriſes, and will direct our way before vs, whither ſocuer wee turne, provided that wee willingly ſtray not out of that path which he hath laid before vs.

Verſ. 22. And yee ſhall pollute the covering of the images of ſiluer, and the rich ornaments of thine images of gold, and caſt them away as a menſtruous cloth, and thou ſhalt ſay vnto it, get thee hence.

Hence it appeares, that this direction which God will giue vnto his Saints, ſhall not be in vaine: for hauing abandoned their falſe worſhip, they ſhall giue themſelues to the true. And the Prophet plainly mentions their externall profeſſion of pietie, when they ſhall make it appeare vnto all, that they haue renounced idols, and all idolatry. For ſeeing images are instruments of idolatry and ſuperſtition; therefore thoſe who are truly conuerted vnto God, muſt needs abhorre and deteſt them: yea, and as much as in them is, prophane and pollute them; as we read Iehu did, who prophaned the Altars of Baal, and made a iakes of his Temple: 2. King. 10. 27. Faithfull Princes and Magiſtrates ought to follow his example, and ſuch as haue done the like, if they will giue any true teſtimonie of their ſound conuerſion. I grant repentance hath his ſeat in the heart, and hath God for a witneſſe of it; but wee can diſcerne it no way but by the fruits. And here vnder one kind, Iſaiab comprehends all. For in general hee toucheth one note of true repentance: to wit, when men make it appeare, that they count all things cōtrary vnto Gods true worſhip abominable.

When he ſaith, that the idols are prophaned, That canoe be eſteemed holily, which is erected to Gods dithonour; which alſo pollutes men with the filthineſſe of it? But in regard that men (being beſotted with a falſe opinion) attribute ſome holineſſe vnto them, therefore he ſaith, they are polluted, and that they ought to be reiected and caſt away as filthy things of no worth.

Alſo in calling them images of gold and ſiluer; he therein ſhewes, that the faithfull ceaſe not to abhorre idolatry, what loſſe or diſaduantage ſo euer come vnto them thereby. For many are loth to abandon idolles, becauſe they thinke thereby they ſhall loſe gold, ſiluer, or ſome ſuch like things; and therefore had rather retaine them, then to ſuſtaine the leaſt incommodie. Couetouſneſſe ſo holds & hampers them, that they thinke it ſafer wittingly to offend God, and to deſtroy themſelues with ſuch abominations, then to loſe the pating of this or that triſtle. But we ought to prefer Gods pure worſhip and ſeruice, before the moſt pretious things in the world. Let vs deſpiſe gold let vs caſt pearles ſtr vs, & abhorre whatſocuer is deere vnto vs, rather than to luſe for our ſelues to be polluted with ſuch vile traſh. In a word, there is not y thing to be named for price & excellencie, which we ought not to eſteeme baſe & vile, when wee are to ouerturne the Kingdome of Satan, and to ſet vp the Kingdome of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, which conſiſts in his pure worſhip. For this ſhall wee indeed make it maniſeſt to all the world, whether the loue of true religion hath takē any place in our hearts yea or no; namely, when hauing indeed the wed our deteſtation againſt our owne peruerſe ignorance, we be alſo prouoked to put far away from vs all pollutions and deſtings.

Gods pure worſhippe muſt be deere to vs then the moſt pretious thing the world can afford vs.

How wee maniſeſt that the loue of the truth is truly ſetled in our hearts.

24. The oxen alſo and the young aſſes that till the ground, ſhall eate cleane prouender, which is winnowed with the ſhouell and with the fan.

AGaine he ſhewes by the effects, how deſirable a thing it is to be conuerted vnto God; ſeeing this is the fruit of true repentance, that God will receiue into his fauour the repentant; and will ſo bleſſe them, that nothing ſhall be wanting: nay, rather they ſhall be ſatiſfied to the full with all ſorts of bleſſings. For as miſeries and calamities proceed from the wrath of God, which we ſet on fire by our finnes; ſo when he is at one againe with vs, all things fall out well, wee are enriched euery way; a. wee may plainly ſee in

Our finnes the matter that ſeis Gods wrath on fire.

Images instruments of idolatry. Such as be truly conuerted vnto God, muſt of neceſſitie abhor and deteſt idols. Faithfull Princes ought to imitate Iehus example, in polluting & prophaning idols and idolatry.

the Law, Deut. 28, Leuit. 26.

He spake before of the raie which should make the earth fruitfull, but because he observed no order in beginning with earthlie and temporall benefites, therefore he now adds to that doctrine which concerned the spirituall life, those things which appertaine to the vse of our naturall and corruptible life. For albeit godlines hath the promise both of this life and of that which is to come, yet in the first place it first aspires to the kingdome of God.

1. Tim. 4. 8. Mat. 6. 33.

Our prosperities in all things depend vpon Gods blessing.

Nothing shall be wanting to the converted.

The earth would neuer be wanting to vs in bringing forth her fruit, but that we close vp her womb by our misbehaviours.

When God is angry with men the ponde dumb creatures fare the worse: but being reconciled with man, they all fare the better by it.

Deut. 28. 11.

Hence let vs learne, that men do but lose their labour in tilling the earth, vnlesse the Lord send his raie from heauen. It is he that must water the labours of our hands, and adde increase thereto, or otherwise we shall but tire and vexe our selues in vaine. From his blessing only must our raie come, and to it must wee ascribe the abundance of the fruites of the earth which from time to time we receiue.

Let vs further note that nothing shall be wanting vnto vs, but we shall reape the fruites of our labors in most ample manner, if we conuert vnto God. Let vs also know that our sinnes make vs often suffer want, because we by our owne rebellion repell and beate back Gods blessing. Let vs no more then attribute the cause of famine and the barrennes to any thing else but to our owne vnthankfulness. For the multitudes of people can not be so great, but the earth will be able to nourish and feed them: but we shut vp her womb by our misdemeanours, which without them would be opened to giue vs all fruits in abundance, so as we should liue both peaceable and happilie.

That which he addes of the Castell, serues much to set forth the goodnes of God, for he sheds forth the same vpon the very brute beasts. How much more thinke we will he do it vpon men, whom he hath created after his owne image? Now we neede not maruaile that beasts ordeined for the vse of man do indure famin as well as their masters: and that on the contrarie they fare well when God is fauorable to men being reconciled vnto them, which the Prophet repeats and likewise confirms in the words following, in promising that oxen and asses shall ease cleane prouender. For this sentence is taken out of the Law: and the Prophets vsuallie do so, that in the cuill plight & death of Cattell, we might behold Gods wrath: and fro the sight thereof might be stirred vp so much the more earnestlie and speedilie to be at one with him, that our houses might be filled with his liberalitie.

Verf. 25. And vpon every high mountaine and vpon every high hill shall there be riuers and streames of Waters in the day of the great slaughter, when the towres shall fall.

the life of man: for they could not otherwise expresse the true felicitie of Gods children vnlesse they had done it by setting the same before vs in the image of those things which are subiect to our senses, by which men are wont to measure out an happie and flourishing estate. The summe then is, that such as obey God, and submit themselves to Christ their King, are happie people. But we must not iudge of this happinesse by the abundance of outward things, whereof the faithfull many times haue little enough, and yet cease not to be happie notwithstanding. But these kinds of speech are allegoricall, by which the Prophet applies himselfe to our capacite, that by the things which our senses can comprehend, wee might conceiue somewhat of those things which are beyond our comprehension, which being of such an excellent nature, our vnderstandings are too shallow to conceiue the least part of them.

Happie people that submit themselves to Christ their King. The faithfull cease not to be happie though they suffer want.

Heauenlie things are of that supernaturall excellencie, that they can not now be comprehended of vs but vnder borrowed speeches.

When he saith the riuers in the mountaines, it is further to set forth this ouerflowing of Gods liberalitie, wherewith will God enrich his chosen. Waters vsuallie issue not out of the tops of mountaines, where nothing is seene but barrennes: I grant that valleys are moystned & watred with y springs; but you shall seldome see fountaines in the tops of hills, yet the Lord promisseth to bring this to passe, howfoener it seemes a thing vnpossible: But by this phrase of speech he meanes y we shall be most happie that liue vnder the kingdome of Christ, so as there shall be no place whatsoever but he will replenish the same with all sorts of benefites: Nothing so barren, but he by his goodnes will make it fruitfull, so as felicitie shall abound in all places. Our eyes should see the performance of this promise if Christ might haue the full government ouer vs, for wee should behold his blessing on every side if wee obeyed him with a pure and perfect heart. All things would then fall out to our wish: the world, and the vtmost bounds thereof should be subiect vnto vs: but because wee are farre off from such a kind of obedience, therefore we receiue but a small taste of these benefites, and so much thereof doe we inioy, as we feele the growth of the new man in vs.

Happie men and women that liue vnder Christes kingdome.

Note.

Our sparing obedience prouokes God to be sparing in bestowing benefites vpon vs.

By the day of the great slaughter, he signifies and sets before them another signe of Gods fauour. How? Hee will maintaine those that are his in safetie, against the rage of the enemies: and thus the Prophet goes about to procure credit and authoritie to his former prophetic: for otherwise it had been almost incredible, that poore banished exiles should haue inioyed so many benefites. Hee speaks here then of the slaughter of the wicked: as if he should say; The Lord will not onely doe you good in sauing you, but hee will also destroy your enemies.

All the expositors almost thinke the Prophet speaks here of the discomfiture of that wicked King Senacherib, when he came to besiege Ierusalem: but when I weigh all things aduisedly, I had rather refer it to the destruction of Babylon. For albeit there was a great slaughter when Senacherib was with shame put

The prophets in describing Christes Kingdome

When the Prophets describe the kingdome of Christ they are wont to borrow similitudes from things appertaining to to flight: yet this people was not at that time deliuered. By this we are admoniſhed, that we bee not heartleſſe, though our enemies bee many in number, and haue greater ſtrength, fortrefſes, and more garrifons then wee: for the Lord can eaſily deſtroy them, and yet coſerue his Church, although for the time he ſuffer them to triumph & to haue al things at their will. Let neither their power nor rage daunt vs then: neither let our hearts faile vs, though we be but a ſmall number: for neither their munitions nor fortrefſes, neither yet their furie nor pride ſhall bee able to ſaue them from falling into the hands of the Lord.

Verſ. 26. Moreover, the light of the Moone ſhall bee as the light of the Sun; and the light of the Sunne ſhall be ſeven fold, and like the light of ſeven daies in the day that the Lord ſhall bind vp the breach of his people, and heale the ſtrokes of their wound.

THE Prophet contents not himſelfe to deſcribe an vſual or ordinarie ſtate of happineſſe, except thereunto he adde ſomewhat that is extraordinary. For hee ſaith, that the Lord will worke far above the order of nature, in this his liberalitie. Wee neuer read that the light of the Sunne was augmented, vnleſſe it were when it ſtaid it ſelfe in the daies of Iſhna, that hee might haue leaſure to purſue his enemies: Ioh. 10. 13. Also in the daies of Hezekias, at whoſe requeſt the Diall went backe ten degrees: 2. King. 20. 11. But our Prophet alludes now to none of theſe miracles. Nay, more then that, he meddles not with the lengthening of the courſe of the Sunne vpon our Horizon; but of the augmentation of the light thereof vnto ſeven fold more. For he ſhews what the ſtate of the faithfull ſhall be vnder the raigne of Chriſt: otherwiſe, we know that the Lord makes the Sunne to ſhine, no leſſe vpon the wicked then vpon the good: but the queſtion is here, of ſuch a felicitie as the wicked cannot attaine vnto. There is difference between Gods liberalitie, which extends it ſelf vnto all, and that which is onely proper and peculiar vnto the faithfull; as it is ſaid in Pſal. 31. 20. Great are the benefites which thou haſt laid vp for thoſe that truſt in thee.

Iſaiah ſpeakes of this particular fauour: which that he might the better expreſſe, he takes ſimilitudes from things comon to euerie mans eye. And thus ſhews, that God will inlighten the faithfull with ſuch a light, that the beames of ſeven ſunnes put together, ſhall be far inferior thereunto. But to the end the ſharpeſſe of their miſeries, wherewith this people were ſoone after ouerwhelmed, might not leſſen the authoritie of this prophecie, he adde yet another promiſe; to wit, that God will (as a good Phyſician) bind vp, or heale the ſtroke of his childrens wounds. Where it folowes, that there was a neceſſitie of this correction, that fo by theſe roddes, the people might be prepared to come to repentance: yea, it was neceſſarie that they ſhould be bru- ſed and broken, till they were in a manner brought to nothing.

He mentions their ſtroke then, to ſhew that the wound ſhall be great; for the people reſembled a body hurt with many wounds. If at any time then the Lord deales more roughly with vs then hee is wont, thinke, I pray you, vpon theſe prophecies: for the Lord will bind vpon our wounds, which may otherwiſe ſeeme mortall and deadly. Now if any aſke why the Lord deales thus ſeuerely with his children: I anſwer, wee ſeldome profit in his feare, when he vſeth vs mildly: for our vices are ſo rooted in vs, and cling ſo faſt to our bones, that they cannot bee cut off, vnleſſe God whet his razor verie ſharpe and keene.

Verſ. 27. Behold, the name of the Lord commeth from ſarre, his face is burning, and the burthen thereof is heauie: his lips are full of indignation, and his tongue is as a deaouring ire.

HEE foretels the deſtruction of the Aſſyrians, which were then the principall enemies of the Church. I grant the Iewes had almoſt no neighbours that were borderers, but they were againſt them: notwithstanding in reſpect the Aſſyrians were the richeſt and mightieſt of all others, the Prophet ſcarcelly mentions any but them and the Babylonians, who had bin Monarks ouer nations: although ſometimes by a figure called lyne doche, the Caldeans are ſignified vnder the name of the Aſſyrians.

By the name of God, he means God himſelfe: but he vſeth this circumlocution, in regard the Aſſyrians and the reſt of the nations ſerued goddes of gold and ſiluer. For they mocked the Iewes, as if they had worſhipped a God in name onely. Why ſo? Be- cauſe they reprented him not forth by ſome ſhape or image: as we read of a certaine prophane Poet, who vſed to ſay of them in ſcorn, that they worſhipped the clouds, and a diuinitie that was ſhut vp in heauen. See how infidels and prophane perſons iudge of God according to their outward ſenſes: but our Prophet brings the faithfull to this name of God. As if he ſhould ſay; This God which hath maniſeſted himſelfe vnto you by his name; this God whom you neither touch nor ſee, ſhall come, and ſhall auenge the wrongs done vnto you.

From ſarre.] He adde this by way of yeelding or granting ſo much as it were vnto the idolaters. For as long as the wicked feele not the hand of God, they thinke him far off; and in the meane while deride the faithfull, as if they truſted in vanitie. The prophet therefore ſpeaking according to the opinion of the vnbeleeuers, ſhewes that that ſame God whom they eſteeme ſo far off, ſhall come: or rather that hee is already come, and is hard at hand. This he ſignifies by the particule Behold; which he oppoſeth to the word ſarre off: and therein admoniſhing the faithfull alſo to paſſe ouer all impediments, that they may come come to the hope of this promised redemption.

Though the enemies of the Church be in my and mighty, yet Gods power will eaſily overcome match them.

His face is burning.

- 1 Now to shew that Gods name is not worshipped in vaine nor without fruit in Iudeah, the Prophet sets before them his fearefull power, which he will manifest for the overthrow of the enemies of his Church. For when he speakes to the faithfull, he sets him forth gentle, louing, patient, slow to anger, and pitifull, to put life as it were into them:
- 2 but to the vnbeleueers he proposeth nothing but horrors and terrors. So that where the wicked tremble at the very naming of God, the faithfull being allured by the sense of his bountie & goodnes, do sweetlie repose themselves vnder the shadow of his wings, and are not oppressed with such feares. Hence we are taught alwaies to keepe our hearts in a reuerent awe of God, lest we finde him such a one to vs, as the Prophet here describes him to the wicked.

Quest.
Adi.

Where he saith, the burthen of the Lord is heauie to beare, his meaning is, that God will bring such heauie calamities with him when he comes, that the wicked shall sinke vnder them: for by this weights, he vnderstands the strokes which they shall receiue. He also expresseth the same thing in mentioning the lips and tongue. But wherfore did he rather name them then his hands? Surely the wicked mock at all the threatenings which are published vnto the out of Gods word, and esteeme whatsoever y^e Prophets say, no better then fables. But they shall feele one day to their cost that this sound which proceeds out of Gods sacred mouth is no vaine word, neither yet a thunder which only strikes the eares, but they shall in the end feele the force of this word which they haue despised.

Verf. 28. And his spirit is as a riuer that ouersoweth vp to the neck: it denieth asunder to fanne the nations with the fanne of vanitie, and there shall be a bridle to cause them to erre in the charrets of the people.

First similitude, of a deepe Riuer.

Second similitude, of a Fanne.

HE goes on with the denunciation which he began in the 27. verse, as if he should say, The Church in deed must passe vnder the rod: yet so, as the Assyrians in the end shall vtterlie come to nought. For he saith, that they shall be swallowed vp of the Spirit of the Lord, which he compares to a deepe riuer. Others take the word Spirit for Breath, so as it should be an allusion to the whirlwind, or to some boisterous tempest. In the next place he vseth the similitude of a fanne, which is very frequent in the scriptures; and saith, that he wil fanne the Assyrians to shake them out, and to scatter them. For this cause also he addes the word vanitie, that is to say, an vprofitable Fanne, which cannot retaine or keepe any thing, but loseth whatsoever is put within it. For we know God is wont sometimes to sift and fanne his owne deere children, but it is to gather the into his floore as good wheate.

The third, of a Bridle.

The third similitude is taken from a bridle, whereby the Lord vseth sometimes to tame the pride and fiercenes of the wicked: in a word, to shew that he is their Iudge. Denie not but he also bridles and curbs his seruants and children, but it is to bring them to tractableness: for the wicked, he raises them vp so hard that he tumbles them into perdition, and that is the meaning of this clause where he saith it is a bridle so cause them to erre. For fierce horses are tugged this way and that way by their riders; and the more they wince the more they spurre them: God likewise keeps the wicked short, and handles them so roughlie, that they erre at euery blow hee giues them, as Dauid well describes it, Psal. 32. 10. Now the end of these similitudes is to teach vs, that there is no dallying with God. For albeit he forbears vs for a time, yet at the last we shall prooue the Prophets words true, to wit, that his spirit or breath shall be enough to swallow vp the wicked, and suddenlie to consume them, no lesse then if a flood had passed ouer their heads. To conclude, seeing he shewes that the nations were to be fanned in the fanne of vanitie, let vs feare lest if the Lord find nought in vs but chaffe, he also cast vs vpo the dunghill. Note also the difference betweene the children of God and the wicked, both are chastised alike, but yet diuerslie. How so? The one to be kept and preferred as pure gold, the other as drossie to be burnt vp and consumed.

The end why the Prophet vseth these similitudes.

The wicked and the godly corrected alike: but the one as drossie to be burnt vp, the other as pure gold to be preferred for the Lords vse.

Verf. 29. But there shall be a song vnto you as in the night when a solemne feast is kept: and gladnes of heart, as he that commeth with a pipe to go vnto the mount of the Lord, to the mightie one of Israel.

HE shewes, that all the euils wherewith he threatened the Assyrians should turne to the saluation of the Church. Why so? Because God would no lesse feuerly punish the iniuries done to his children, then if they had beene done to himselfe. And thus he sets forth his fatherlie loue and his inestimable good will towards vs, in that he vouchsafes to take armes euen in his owne person as it were for our defence. Whence we may gather, that all the menaces so frequent in the holy Scriptures, serue much for the consolation of the faithfull.

Threatnings pronounced against the wicked in the holy Scriptures serue greatly for the comfort of the faithfull.

In the next place he saith, that this shall be an holie song; and compares it to those that were vsed in sulemne feasts: the rather to stirre the faithfull vp to thanksgiving, and to teach them how to order their ioy and reioicing. For it is not enough to reioyce, vnlesse our ioy be directlie in the Lord, whose glorie should alwaies be the marke and end we aime at therein: otherwise, our ioy should neither be good, nor acceptable vnto him, but rather prophane and vaine.

If our ioy be not in the Lord, it is a vaine and profane ioy.

Now because the Iewes began their feast daies at the sun setting, and therefore began to celebrate them as soone as it was evening, he saith, that this song shall be as in the night. And he yet further expresseth the manner of their ioy; to wit, that they shall not leape nor skip after the custome of prophane persons;

The Iewes vsed to begin to celebrate their feasts the evening before.

but

but ſhall liſt vp their hearing vnto God reſting in him alone, whom they ſhall acknowledge the ſole author of all benefits.

By the mount, he means the Temple which was built vpon it. He calles God the ſtrength of Iſrael, becauſe the Iewes receiued their redemption from his out ſtretched armes alſo becauſe they dwelt in quietneſſe vnder his mighty protection: herein aduertizing them, that they could haue no ſaſetie for the time to come, but by putting their truſt in his ſtrength. For alas! as ſoone as we perſwade our ſelues that we haue any ſtrength of our owne, we forthwith bereaue God of this title; which indeede, none but the humile & meeke eni gnaue vnto him, who are ſtripped of all their owne ſtrength and power.

Verſ. 20. And the Lord ſhall cauſe his glorious voice to bee heard, and ſhall declare the lightning downe of his arme, with the anger of his countenance and flame of a deuouring fire, with ſcattering and tempeſt, and haile ſtones.

HE confirms that which he ſaid before of the iudgement of God againſt the Aſſyrians, and deſcribes it vnder a figure, as hee and the reſt of the Prophets are wont to do. For whileſt God ſeemes to hold his peace, and plagues not the wicked forthwith, either we thinke he ſleepes, or that he wants ſufficient power: and thus wee are diſtracted with diuers and doubtfull thoughts. And albeit he ſhewes vs ſome one example of his iudgements, yet by reaſon of this ſottihneſſe, or rather vnthankfulneſſe, which naturally poſſeſſeth vs, we wittingly put a vaile betwene, by one deuice or other, to darken the glory of God. For either we attribute it vnto fortune, or to the policies and ſubtile inuentions of mans braine: ſo as we will neuer in good earneſt aſcribe the ſame wholly vnto God, vnleſſe he conſtaines vs vnto it by force. This is the cauſe why the Prophet contents not himſelfe to haue once affirmed, that Gods vengeance ſhould fall vpon the Aſſyrians, but alſo in this place is diligent to paint out the ſame in liuely colours, repeating the ſame thing with greater vehemence.

His meaning is then, that this deſtruction of the enemy ſhall bee ſo ſinuous, that men ſhall be conſtrained to heare the voice of God: that is to ſay, to acknowledge his iudgements, and to confeſſe that this deſolation indeede was from his hand, euen as if himſelfe had vntered the ſame from heauen with his liuely voice in all mens hearing. The ſum is then, that the matter ſhall bee ſo euident, that all ſhall confeſſe this deſtruction came from the mouth of God; to wit, from his ordinance.

He begins with the voice of God, to the end we might know that he gouernes whatſoever is done in the earth. And therewithall he extolles the efficacy of his doctrine, in which the people were to reſt, till it ſhould bring forth theſe effects in the appointed time. But for as much as the effect incontinently follows this ordinance and voice of God, therefore the Prophet adds, the lightning downe of his arme. For theſe two things muſt alwaies be ioyned together, it being vnlawfull once to imagine that God is like vnto men, who ſuddenly taking a thing in hand, in the end leaue it vnperfected. No, looke what he ordaines, that he executes: for his hand or arme is neuer ſeparated from the words of his mouth. On the contrary, hee neuer doth any thing raiſily, but that which hee hath ordained before: ſo as all the croſſes which hee ſends, are ſo many documents to vs of his equall and iuſt dealing.

In the end of the verſe, hee ſets forth this vengeance of God vnder figures; that by the horrour thereof, the Iewes might raiſe vp their ſaith on high with ſo much the more courage: for it was a great conſolation vnto them (notwithſtanding the ſharpe ſcourgings which they felt) to know that their enemies ſoone after ſhould drinke off this cup, euen to the very dregs, but away with the dreames of the Rabbines, who from this place gather, that the Aſſyrians were indeede ſmitten with thunder; for ſuch a coniecture is moſt friuolous. The Prophet keeps his ordinary courſe, and by theſe ſimilitudes deſcribes Gods fearful iudgements, in regard that wee are too ſlow; yea altogether vnfit to comprehend them. Therefore to awaken our dulneſſe, we had neede to heare of deuouring fire, of thunders, floods, and deuours of water; which becauſe they are things abhorring to nature, they vſually touch vs the more to the quick: in which reſpect the Prophets doe the more willingly draw their ſimilitudes from them, to the end wee may apprehend the tearefull reuenging hand of God againſt the wicked.

Verſ. 31. For with the voice of the Lord ſhall Aſhur be deſtroied: which ſmote with the rod.

HE adds this for two cauſes: Firſt, to ſhew why the Aſſyrian was to be broken. For ſeeing hee behaued himſelfe cruelly and ſauagely towards others, it was good reaſon he ſhould receiue like for like. This we know is the vſuall courſe which God takes with tyrants, as our Prophet will tell vs, Chap. 32. Woe to thee that ſpoiledſt, when thou waſt not ſpoiled, &c. Secondly, the Aſſyrians power ſeemed too great to be vanquiſhed. But albeit he was eury way ſo well fortified, that he was not only able to defend himſelfe, but alſo to annoy others; yet y Prophet tells him, Gods onely voice ſhall ſhake him in peeces. By this wee may learne, how vaine the confidence of the wicked is, who haue nothing to truſt vnto but their outward forces; altogether deſpiſing God as if they were not liable to the ſtrokes of his hand. But the Lord needs no better weapons then his voice to ſcatter all their munitions; for hee will conſume them with the very becke of his countenance. Neither are wee to doubt but the Prophet alſo meant by this meanes, to withdraw the words voice, in the ſignifying a voice, ſuch as the voice of the voice.

senses of the faithfull from looking to these helps, lest they should stand to inquire how it might come to passe, but should onely content themselves with Gods promise, who is of power sufficient to execute his counsels as soone as he hath spoken the word.

Verf. 32. And in euerie place that the staffe shall passe, it shall cleaue fast, which the Lord shall lay vpon him with sabrets and harpes: and with battels, and lifting vp of hands shall bee fight against it.

His meaning is, that the Assyrians will trie all meanes to flie from Gods hand, but all in vaine; for it shall pursue them whithersoener they shall turne them, bee it forwards or backward. Touching these words of the staffe digging; I willingly consent to their opinion, who thinke it to bee a similitude taken from those that haue laid on so long, till the traces and prints thereof appeare a great while after: as if a whip or staffe had been let into the flesh. Vnlesse any had rather vnderstand that the plague should cleaue fast to the backs of the Assyrian, euen as a foundatiõ is laid fast into the earth. For that which is not rooted in the ground, may be taken away and transported to another place: but hee shewes that this staffe shall cleaue so fast, that there shall bee no removing of it; neither shall any be able to plucke it away. For God suffers the weight of his wrath to fall vpon the reprobates which vtterly ouercharge them: and lest they might dreame of any starting holes, the Prophet cuts off all hope thereof in this word euery place. For so ought the text to be resolved; to wit, wherefoener the staffe shall light, it shall cleaue fast.

When he mentions the sabrets, it is to shew, that the issue of the war shall not bee vncertain, as it is when forces are of equal strength, but his meaning is, that the Lord shall haue the victory. Why so? Because he shall no sooner vndertake the war, but hee brings that with him y shall do the deed. For sabrets, harpes, and hands lifted up, doe signifie the ioy which they shall haue gotten the conquest, which they cry, victorie, victorie.

Some refer that to the host, which he addes in the feminine gender, shall fight against it: but the truth is, hee meant to expresse a greater thing then it; to wit, Babylon, the head Citie of the Kingdome, opposing it to Ierusalem, which hee had noted out before by a like relative, verf. 29. From whence we may gather, that the wicked must needs be consumed at the last, notwithstanding the great shew of meanes which they haue to escape the same: for which way soeuer they turne them, or whither soeuer they flee, yet the staffe of the Lord shall pursue them, yea and cleaue fast to their backs: they shall neuer bee able to shun his hand, nor beat backe his blowes.

Wee also are now and then corrected by this hand of God, but his blowes shall not alwaies cleaue vnto vs; our wounds shall bee mollified and eased, and our sorrow shall bee turned into ioy. Moreouer, the Lord so fights against the wicked, that they are not able to make their party good, nor yet gaine anie thing by their resistance. He fights with the, but as one that is sure of the victory before he giues the first blow: sometimes hee giues them a little scope indeed, but he takes down their pride whensoever it pleaseth him. If we then fight vnder his ensigne, wee may assure our selues of a prosperou. victorie: for vnder his leading, we shall be safe from danger, and shall haue certaine hope of conquest in the end.

Verf. 33. For Topheth is prepared of olde: it is euen prepared for the King: hee hath made it deepe and large: the burning thereof is fire and much wood; the breath of the Lord like a riuer of brimstone doth kindle it.

Isaiah continues his description of Gods severe punishments, wherein he shewes, that the wicked shall not onely haue their portion of plagues in this life, but shall bee vexed therewith for euer and euer. Why so? Because hell is prepared and made ready for them; not for the poorer sort alone, but for those in great places, euen for Kings & Princes. By Topheth, no doubt he meanes hell: nor as though we should imagin there were some place where the wicked are shut vp after their death as in a prison, there to suffer the torments which they haue deferred: but hee thereby signifies their miserable condition and extreme torments. In the booke of the Kings, this word topheth is taken for the place where the Iewes sacrificed their sonnes to Moloch: 2. King. 23. 10. whereof Jeremiah also maketh mention: Ier. 19. 6. Now this place was destroyed by Iosiah, in regard of the horrible murders and superstitions which were there committed.

For mine owne part, I am out of doubt that the Prophets meant to apply the name of this place, to those exquisite torments which the wicked endure; to the end the faithfull might shudder and shake at the onely hearing of it: as also that euery one might learne to haue idolatrie in the greater detestation.

This very etymologie agrees to the word Hell: for the valley of Hannon was taken for hell it selfe, because of the execrable sacrilegies which were there committed. Now because we thinke the wicked shall escape free, when we see them prosper and haue all things at their wish, the Prophet to take away this conceit, saith, that before yesterday, that is to say, from the foundations of the earth, the Lord hath foreordained what punishments hee will inflict vpon the yngodly. For howsoeuer this decree be hid from vs for a time; yet it is stable and vnmoueable. Let vs not the iudge of the estate of the wicked by outward appearances, but let vs wait vpon our God, who will take them well enough in miſchiefs which they plot, and that in his appointed houre. In ſy meane while let vs not be ouer-haſte to thinke God hath forgotten to be iuſt, for he concluded that which he meant to do, and that long ere we had abilitie to thinke of it: neither can we poſſible be ſo ſwift in wiſhing the ſpedie cutting off of the wicked, but the Lord hath prevented our thoughts and deſires long before, becauſe he hath concluded in himſelfe from the beginning what paines and tormētis he will lay vpon them.

Some thinke this place ſhould anſwere to that in the Hebrews, Chriſt yeſterday, and to day, Sc. Heb. 13.8. But for mine owne part, I ſimply oppoſe yeſterday here to our thoughts, to the end we ſhould not take out ſelues wiſe enough to foreſee & prevent God: for none of his Councils are conceived raiſie, but were eſtabliſhed and grounded in himſelfe from all eternitie. Now he ſpeakes as I haue already ſaid of the tormēts to come, where-with the wicked ſhall be plagued; beſides thoſe which are iuſtified vpon them in this life. In which regard we may iuſtly wonder how the Saduces ſhould be ſo befotted and blockiſh as to reſtraine the rewards and due puniſhments of ſinnes to the afflictions of this life preſent, as if Gods iudgements reached only to this life preſent. For thus, the phraſes of ſpeech which follow would not agree to bodilie and temporall puniſhments: and the name of Sophiſts taken by a figure, ſhould only extend it ſelfe to ſome extreame curſe of God.

Saducee.

Now he ſhewes that euen Kings themſelues (whom men commonlie thinke to be priuiledged in regard of their maieſtie and power) ſhall not be exempt from this puniſhment. Their Greatnes dazles the eyes of the ſimple, but this ſhall be no ſhelter to keepe them from Gods iuſt reuenging hand in plaguing them according to that which they haue deſerued. He ſaith, they ſhall be caſt into a deepe place, to giue vs to vnderſtand that they ſhall be ſate enough for euer crawling out thence. He alſo calles Hell Large to teach vs, that whoſoeuer they be that conſult together in miſchiefe ſhall periſh, although their number be infinite: for the Lord will not waxe weary in puniſhing of the, neither ſhall he be ſtreighted of ſufficient room to ſhut vp all his enemies in.

His heape is fire. Vnder a figure he ſpeakes of the ruine of ſy wicked, becauſe we can not otherwiſe ſufficiently comprehend the ſame: as on the other ſide, without ſome borrowed ſpeeches, we were not able to conceiue of that bleſſed Immortalitie which is referred for vs in heauen; by ſuch ſimilitudes theſe things muſt be applied to our ſenſes. Whence it appears how ſondie and ridiculousſie the Sophiſters deale, who goe about too ſubtille to diſpute torſooth of the nature and qualitie of this fire, and buſie their braines very much to make it appeere what it ſhould be. But let vs reiect ſuch groſſe imaginations, ſeeing we know that the Prophet ſpeakes here figuratiuely, as hereafter we ſhall ſee that to this fire he ioynes the worne that neuer dyes, Chap. 65. 14.

Sophiſters ridiculous in diſputing about the qualitie of this fi.

THE XXXI. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. Woe vnto them that goe downe into Egypt for help, and ſtay vpon horſes, and truſt in charrets: becauſe they are many, and in horſemen becauſe they be very ſtrong: but they looke not vnto the holie one of Iſraell, nor ſeek vnto the Lord.

ENow returns to that which he handled in the beginning of the former Chapter: for he liſts vp his voice againe againſt ſy Iewes, who were accuſtomed whē they were in any danger to flee rather to Egipt for ſuccor then to the Lord. We haue declared before why this was ſo diſpleaſing a thing in Gods ſight. And to be ſhort, there are two reaſons wherefore the Prophet doth ſo ſharply reprove this ſinne. Firſt, becauſe it is vnpoſſible wee ſhould put our truſt in creatures and in God together, touching the means of our ſafetie: for as ſoone as we once fixe our eyes vpon them, it follows by good conſequence that we therewithall turne them away from God. Beſides, God had ſtraightlie forbidden them to make any contract or league with the Egyptians. Thus there was rebellion mixt with a diſloyall confidence, as if they meant wittingly and willinglie to prouide for their owne welfare, by deſpiſing and forſaking of God. It behoues vs therefore to conſider from whence this ſinne ſprang if we would vnderſtand the Prophets meaning aright.

Here is a ſecond reaſon which is more particular (which we haue touched before) why the Lord would not haue the Iewes to be acquainted with the Egyptians, to wit, leaſt ſo vnlawfull leagues might in the end abolith the memorie of their deluerance out of Egipt; as alſo leaſt they ſhould marre and corrupt themſelues with the ſuperfluſions and Idolatries of the Egyptians. But theſe reaſons could beare no ſway with them: Gods inhibiting of them could not hinder them from running downe to their confederates, prouiding a buckler thereof to runne againſt the hand of God. In which reſpect it is no maruell that our Prophet is ſo earneſt in rebuking of them for ſo monſtrous an outrage. Their very going downe into Egipt ſimple conſidered in it ſelfe deſerued a ſharpe rephrenſion, becauſe God had forbidde the ſo to do, Deut. 17. 16. 28. but the offence was much more intoilerable through a falſe truſt they had in betraying therewith turne away from the Creator. Rebellion mixt with their diſloyall confidence.

Two reaſons ſhewing why the Prophet is ſo ſeuere in reprouing this ſinne of the Iewes.

We can no ſooner relie vpon creatures, but we

Ec God

God of that glorie which appertained vnto him, to giue it vnto mortall men.

Now that hee might the better shew how God was robbed of his right by this their fact, hee not onely accufeth them that they leaned and staid themselves vpon the Egyptians, but also hee reproacheth them on the other side, that they looked not to the holy one of Israel. Whence we may more evidently perceiue the cause wherefore Isaiab doth so sharply taxe this disloyaltie of the Iewes. For otherwise the Lord forbids vs not to vse lawfull meanes; as bread, & other sorts of meates, which he hath appointed to serue for our vse. And thus if a man being in danger, shall seeke those helps which are not forbidden, but ordinary and lawfull, such a one deserues no reproofe, if so be hee therein derogates nothing from Gods power. But it is vtterly abominable and damnable, if we suffer our selues to be intangled in these outward helps, as thereby vterly to neglect seeking vnto God: and in distrusting his gracious promises, to desire to trust in vnlawfull meanes.

The word to looke, signifies often in the Scriptures, This trust and confidence; because we are wont to looke wishly towards them, from whom we looke for succor: Act. 3. 5. To be short, we are here taught to put the trust of our saluation in none but in God alone: that so wholly resting our selues vpon his promises, we may goe with boldnesse, and aske whatsoever is to be desired. He permits vs lawfully to vse all things which he hath ordained for our good; yet so, that all the powers of our soules doe stay vpon him alone.

In calling him the holy one of Israel, hee sets forth the forwardnesse and vnthankfulnesse of this people, that being receiued into Gods faithfull protection, they cared not to contemne so gracious a protector and guardian of their saluation, but chose rather to runne after the lusts of their owne hearts. In adding forthwith the name of God; hee shewes that they could not bee kept in awe, neither by the power nor goodnesse of so louing a Father. Now since it pleaseth him at this day to allure vs by no lesse fauourable kindnesse to come vnto him, wee shall play the rebels egregiously, if we looke any other way, or if we refuse to rest in him onely. Looke whatsoever it is then that turnes the eyes of our mindes from looking directly vnto God, shall bee the same to vs as Egypt was to the Iewes, Verf. 2. But yet hee is wise. Therefore hee will bring euill, and not turne backe his word: but hee will rise against the house of the wicked, and against the helpe of them that worke vanitie.

Here he calles God wise, hee adorns him not with a perpetuall epithite, but taxeth the craft and subtiltie of those whom hee saw to please themselves in their wisdom more then was meete. Hee told them a little before, that they digged deepe to couer their counsels, when by their close and secret practises they thought to fle; and yet to blear the eyes of the Lord. Now in taunting wise hee derides their follie: as if hee should say; No doubt but you thought your selues to be iollie wise men in so doing; yea, but you haue to deale with a God that hath wisdom also to eipie your plots well enough. Wherein hee priuily taxeth them for such as imagined that God could not charge them with any thing, or as if hee had bin one that was vtterly vnacquainted with their doings. In a word, it is as much as if hee should haue said; What will become of this goodly wisdom of yours in the end; will it bereaue God of his Spirit? Nay, contrariwise in reproving you for your deceit and vanitie, he will shew by the effects, that hee catcheth the wise in their craftinesse: 1. Cor. 3. 19.

Hence wee may gather a doctrine that is well enough knowne; to wit, that whosoever they be that couer their doings by crafty and close prauses, shall be so far off from benefiting themselves any thing at all thereby, that they shall to much the more inflame the iust displeasure of God against them. An euil conscience alwaies flees from the iudgement of God, and seekes out corners wherein to burie it selfe (if it were possible) out of his sight. The wicked deuise many waies to defend their finnes, and to make their partie good against God; pleasing themselves in their wisdom and subtilties, albeit in so doing, they haue no cloke or maske to hide themselves vnder that is of any value. Others being blinded with their owne greatnesse, are bold to despise God and all his threatnings. And therefore when the prophet saith, that God is wise also, he toucheth the soare to the quicke, to the end they might nourish no such good conceit of their craftie deuices, as if they could thereby ouertreach the Lord.

Now in regard they were vnworthy that Isaiab should stand ouer-long to pleade the case with them: therefore he tels them flatly, that God hath store of arguments ready to snare these politike heads withall. For first of all, they imagined that God tooke little or no heede how things went in the world, because they, forsooth, were left to sinke or swim (as they say) in the midst of so many dangers. And secondly, they esteemed his menaces to be nought else but so many scarrowes. Taking it as a thing granted therefore, that it was lawfull for euery one to provide for his owne safetie: from hence sprang this headines to run any way; and that boldnesse to bee still plotting new deuices. The Prophet shewes then that God will avenge the wrongs which were done vnto him, and that all things are in a readinesse for the execution thereof: moreover, that his word could not bee violated or ouerthrowne by no deuices nor subtilie practises of men.

Hee calles them workers of vanitie, because they indeuored to fortifie themselves against Gods vengeance, with a vaine and vnlawfull defence: that is to say, with the helpe of the Egyptians.

It is lawfull for thee to vie those helps and meanes which God hath ordained for thy reliefe and comfort: but beware of Asa his sin, recorded in a. Chio. 16. 12.

In the last word of the verse.

*Or, wise also.

Egyptians. In the firſt claufe of this verſe he ſeemed after a ſort to yeeld them the title of wiſe men, becauſe hee offered thereunto the wiſdome of God: but now having diſperſed their milts, hee diſcovers to the whole world their iuſt ſhame and reproch. Hence wee are taught, that it is ſafeſt for vs to renounce our owne reaſon, and to ſubiect it onely to the will of God. Why ſo? Becauſe there is no ſtabilitie nor ſtedfaſtneſſe at all in the plottings of vnbeleeuers: nay, they rather wittingly incenſe and prouoke Gods wrath to beate againſt them by theſe their wittie deuices.

Verſ. 3. Now the Egyptians are men, and not God; and their horſes fleſh, and not ſpirit: and when the Lord ſhall ſtretch forth his hand, the helper ſhall fall, and they ſhall altogether ſiule.

IT ſeemes that Iſaiah vtters nothing here but that which euery one knowes, neither would any man ſtand to call the truth thereof into queſtion. For who would be ſo mad as to affirme either that the Egyptians were God, or to denie that they were men? This was out of controuerſie; and therefore euery one would willingly aſſent vnto it for the generall. But to come to particularities; there, they were ſo blockiſh, or ſtood in ſuch a mammering, that they called that truth into queſtion, of which before they were tully reſolued.

Thus they waxed proud, taking themſelves to be no more men; and that they might vtterly free themſelves from yeelding obedience vnto God. For this cauſe we are often admoniſhed in the holy Scriptures, not to truſt in man, becauſe nothing is more vain than he: Pſal. 146. 3. Curſed be he (ſaith Ieremiah) that truſts in man, and makes fleſh his arme: Ier. 17. 5. Yet we ſee that all, none excepted, determine and conclude of matters in themſelves, as if they were able to bring their deſignes to paſſe an hundred yeeres after, which they haue plotted in their braine: yea, as if they could rule both heauen, earth, and ſeas, and could gouerne all things euen as they liſted. Seeing there is ſuch pride in all of vs, let vs not maruell that the Prophet proclaimeth, that the Egyptians are not God, but men. For the Iewes attributed that vnto them, which appertained vnto God. What is that? Euen the protection and ſafeguard of the Church; which he ſo reſerues to himſelfe, that he will haue none to meddle with this office. Iſaiah doth therefore tauntingly taxe the Iewes in this place with the contempt of God, and their falſe confidence wherewith they were puffed vp.

And thus we may ſee how great difference there is betwene God and men. Men can doe nothing of themſelves, but ſo far forth as God ſhall giue them power. Come we to ſpeake of the nature and excellencie of man, wee may well praife the great graces which he hath receiued of God; but oppoſe him once againſt his Creator, then muſt he be accounted leſſe

then nothing. For is it poſſible to attribute any thing vnto man, but wee ſhall thereby take ſo much honour from God? This is the cauſe why wee can neuer conſent vnto the Pap. ſts, when we come to diſpute of the cauſe of our ſaluation, of free will, and of the dignitie of merits and workes: for in as much as man and God, are in theſe things oppoſed one againſt the other, it muſt needs be, that what ſoever is attributed to man, is taken from God. But they part ſtakes in ſuch wiſe, as they giue part to God, and part to men: we on the contrary affirme, that the ſole & whole cauſe of our ſaluation, ought to be attributed vnto God: as alſo, that it cannot bee giuen to anie other, but we ſhall therein commit moſt abominable ſacrilege. In a word, let vs know that in this oppoſition, nothing can be left to man which is worthy of any praife.

By the word fleſh, he means imbecillity and weakneſſe: for what is in fleſh but onely corruption? He ſpeakes of horſes, but the ſame or the like weakneſſe agrees alſo to the Egyptians. As if he ſhould ſay; They and all the forces they can make, are not worth a ruſh. For albeit the Egyptians had a ſoule as well as a body, yet becauſe they were earthly creatures, and dwelt in houſes of clay, they muſt downe. As if hee ſhould ſay; I am ſure you haue no ſpirituall nor celeftiall power. To which purpoſe the Prophet ſaith, Pſal. 146. 3. Truſt not in Princes, nor in any child of man: for his breath departeth, and then all his thoughts periſh.

Now albeit this word fleſh, properly belongs to horſes; yet it is no maruell if men be ſent to take a view of the roſtneſſe thereof, there to learne their owne tranſitorineſſe. But from the threatening that is added, to wit, that this wickedneſſe ſhall not goe free; we may learne a generall doctrine. For the Lord will not indure to haue that giuen to the creature, which belongs to himſelfe: nor, that any ſhould reſoſe that truſt in men, which ought to be reſerued for him alone. He threatens then as well thoſe which ſhould giue their ſuccour, and ſhould be the cauſe of this vaine confidence, as thoſe which ſhould be ſuccoured, & ſhould ſtay the hope of their ſafety thereupon. Now if the Lord cannot abide this peruerſe truſt, as touching things belonging to our temporary ſaluation; how inſupportable are thoſe, thinke we, who to obtaine eternall ſaluation, forge diuers truſts, according to their owne fantaſie? For in ſo doing, they exalt the power of men, to ſet it vp in the place of God.

Verſ. 4. For thus the Lord hath ſaid vnto me; As the lion and the lions whelpes roare after their pray; againſt whom if a multitude of ſheepbeards liſt vp their voice, they will not bee wounded, nor will humble themſelves at their cry: ſo the Lord of hoſtes will come downe to fight for mount Zion, and for the ſide of it.

THE Prophet adds this verſe, to ſhew that the Lord is not minded to leaue his Why there can be no pacifications betwene the Papills and vs.

God threatens both the ſuccourers and the ſuccoured.

If God cannot indure we ſhould lean vpon creatures for ſaluation in matters belonging to this liſe preſent, much leſſe can he indure vs to doe in things appertaining to liſe eternall.

The pride of mans heart intolerable.

The great difference that is betwene God and men.

God neuer forbids vs to trust in creatures, but he therewithall leaves sufficient a guarantee for our faith to relieue vp himself.

Church destitute of necessarie helps. For if whilst in forbidding vs to trust in creatures he should promise vs no supplie otherwaies, we might haue some cause to complaine, as if he offered vs matter of despaire rather then of comfort. For as we haue seene a little before, men are ouer-carefull, because they thinke themselves not halfe wise enough if they vterlie absteine from meanes forbidden, to content themselves with God alone. Seeing hee promiseth them Gods faithfull protection then, he takes away all excuse: for what pretext can serue vs if we despise that saluation which he of his owne accord offers vnto vs? It is all one therefore as if he had said, It is the Lord that assists, and will still assist you; Goe not downe into Egypt when so seeke help there.

The first similitude setteth forth Gods power, which is readie prest to preferre his Church.

But he vieth a very apt similitude, wherein he shewes both the power, and louing affection which was prest for their defence: for he compares himselfe to a Lion which is strong and greedie of his pray. Notwithstanding he insists vpon the second part, to wit, that the Lord takes hold of vs with great courage, keepe and preferres vs safe in his hands against all dangers. In the meane while the Prophet sets forth his power and might, against which no forces nor multitudes of men can resist. Moreover, similitudes hang not together in all points touching the matter in hand, neither is there any necessitie of it: but they must be applied so farre-forth, as the present occasion will permit. When we see then that the Lord loues vs so dearly, and hath so tender a care ouer vs, are we not more then mad if we despise him to seeke other helps, which will be so farre off from doing vs good, that they shall turne to our great hurt? It is not without cause that he addes the side of Zion, because the Temple in which God would be called vpon was situated there. Looke where Gods pure seruice is then, there we may be bold to expect assured safetie, for he cannot be called vpon in vaine. Let vs therefore be his people, and he will not faile to shew himselfe our God.

Verf. 5. The Lord of hosts will defend Ierusalem as the birds that flie: he will deliuer it in defending it, and in passing further he will save it.

The second simile setteth forth Gods tender affection towards his Church.

This is another similitude, in which the Prophet shewes the singular care the Lord hath ouer vs, and how diligent and watchfull he is to keepe vs. It is taken from birds, who are exceeding careful in preferring their yong ones: for they will starue themselves almost, and wil feare no danger at all, to yeeld succor and defence vnto them. Moses vseth the like similitude, Deut. 32. 11. where he reprocheth the Iewes for their ingratitude: he compares the Lord to an Eagle which flutts vp her nest, stretcheth out her wings, flutters ouer her yong, and beates them vpon her wings. Christ also takes vp this complaint ouer Ierusalem, Oh Ierusalem, Ierusalem, how oft would I haue gathered thee together as a hen gathers her chickens vnder her wings, but you would not! Mat. 23. 37. The summe of this place is, That the Lord will be strong enough Verse 4. to conserue his people, which he loues right dearly, Verse 5. and tenderly cares for them. For Isaiah promiseth that God will alwaies performe that for his people, which Moses saith he did for them for a time, because he will neuer forsake those whom he hath once receiued into his loue. To the end therefore the Iewes might not thinke that Gods care only appertained to those of that time, he expresse saith that God will spread his wings ouer Ierusalem to defend it.

Verf. 6. O yee children of Israel returne you, for you are sunck deepe in reuolting.

This verse is diuerslie expounded, for the Hebrewes expound it thus, Returne vnto the Lord, for you haue multiplied reuolts. But as I thinke it should simple be read thus, Returne yee, in as much as you are sunck deepe in reuolting. His meaning is, that the greatnes of their disloyaltie should nothing hinder them fro hauing access to God, if they brought repentant hearts with them, and that hee would forgie them, notwithstanding they were sunck very deepe in rebellion; and yet he therewithall galles them to the quick with this spur, to prick them forward to a true sorrow, and hatred of their sinnes, to the end they should not bring a fained or halfe repentance as men for the most part doe. He stirres them vp then diligentlie to consider how violentlie they haue plunged themselves into perdition, that they might mourne according to the measure of their offences.

In the first place note that the Prophet extenuates not the fault of this people: for it is requisite that such as are to be drawne to the Lord should be touched home with the liuely feeling of their sinnes: for those that flatter themselves in their vices are farre off from hope of pardon, therefore we can not take a better course then to discouer at large the foulness of our sores, when the medicine is to be applied vnto them.

Such as flatter themselves in their vices, are farre off from any hope of pardon.

And yet lest mens hearts should quail within them, they must be cheered and comforted by setting the promises of life and saluation before them: for Satan aims at nothing more, then to steale from vs all hope of pardon. Therefore Isaiah tels vs that God is readie to forgie, albeit by their reuolt they had plunged themselves into the gulfe of hell: and therewithall we may see that the Lord at no time allures vs to repentance in vaine, but forthwith offers vs free remission of all our transgressions, which is the cause why the scriptures alwaies ioines promises of grace to such exhortations as these, to the end that when we are called to repentance, we might know that forgiuenes is also at hand.

The cyle of the Gospell must bee mingled with the biting wine of the Law, lest Satan should make vs his prey.

God neuer allures vs to repentance in vaine, but forthwith offers vs pardon. The Scriptures alwaies coupleth exhortations to repentance, and hope of pardon together.

Where wee haue translated you are fallen deepe, some expound the word Anag, which signifies, To be deepe, To multiply; as if it were a similitude taken from heapes, and so it should be read in this sense, As you haue heaped vp sinnes, so now returne. But the first exposition seemes to agree best. The word

Sarab

Iſaiab. ſignifies revolt: others take it here for forwardnes; but the other ſignificatiō agrees beſt. And therefore y^e Prophet ſummons thē to return to y^e Lord. He calls them children of Iſrael, not to honour them, but in reproach of their ingratitude. For they were rebellious children, which had turned away from that fidelitie and obedience which their fathers yielded: this title therefore contains in it a diſgracefull quipping of them. In the meane while, our Prophet means, that the Lord forgat not the covenant which he made with their fathers, although by their diſloyaltie they were far degenerate. For he teſtifies, that hee acknowledgeth them for the children of Iſrael, and will make them partakers of that which hee promiſed to Abraham and the reſt of the fathers, if they will convert vnto him with their whole hearts.

Vers. 7. For in that day every one ſhall caſt away his images of ſilver, and his idols of gold, the ſin which your hands haue made.

In the former verſe they were exhorted to repentance, in this verſe the Prophet manifeſts the fruits of their repentance. Repentance is inward in the heart: it muſt therefore diſcouer it ſelfe by outward actions, euen at the goodneſſe of a tree is knowne by the fruits.

HE continues on his ſpeech begun in the former verſe: yet there is this difference, that in the former he exhorted them to repentance; but in this, hee ſhewes the fruit of it: which manner of teaching is vsuall in the Scriptures. For repentance being a thing wrought in the heart, wherein it hath his ſeate, it muſt ſhew and manifeſt it ſelfe afterwards by the effects and workes, euen as the goodneſſe of a tree within is knowne by the fruits; repentance is ſet here forth by the effects.

Where he ſpeakes onely of idols, it is according to the cuſtome of the Scripture, which often takes a part for the whole. For there is no queſtion but the Prophet means the whole conuerſion of men: but becauſe it had bin too long for him to haue numbred vp all the parts of it, he briefly comprehends them vnder this one kind. Now the beginning of repentance is the change of the heart: in the ſecond place we muſt come to the outward fruits; that is to ſay, to the workes.

But about all, we muſt note the cauſe why he preached repentance; to wit, in regard the Lord had promiſed them a ſpeedie deliuerance: now to the end he might be capable of it, he exhorts them to conuert. Here alſo obſerue, that we reſiſt God by our wickedneſſes, when we goe on ſtill therein: and thus we hinder the courſe of Gods grace from deſcending downe vpon vs, ſo as hee cannot helpe vs. That his helpe may haue place in our miſeries therefore, he requires that we turne vnto him.

He mentions idols of ſilver, as we haue ſhewed before, becauſe thoſe that repent in good earneſt, are touched effectually with the ſenſe of their ſins. So as they cannot behold the traces of their ſuperſtitions in which God was diſhonoured, without great horror. They therefore abhor ſuch things, and are glad to ſuffer the loſſe of their gold and ſilver, to reſtore their vnſained faith & repentance. For whoſoever hath truly renounced all his ſuperſtitions, will ſpare nothing to make profeſſion of Gods pure worſhip. And this is the Prophets drift when he mentions gold & ſilver, rather then wood and ſtones. Now the loſſe of any thing whatſoever, be it neuer ſo pretious, is infinite gaine when we are ſeparated and cleaned from ſuch curſed pollutions.

As for thoſe who ſtill retainē them, they ſhew themſelves to be intangled with ſuperſtitions, howſoever they ſeeme to profeſſe Chriſtianity; and thereby may we know, that their hearts doe as yet remaine vnreformed. Away therefore with the excuſes of hypocrits, who will not wholly renounce idolatry; to wit, what would you haue me doe? How ſhould I liue? Indeede I know that this gold, theſe reuenues are abominable before God, becauſe they procede from idolatry: but alas! we muſt liue ſome way or other. Away, I ſay, with ſuch childiſh excuſes: for where repentance is wrought effectually in the heart; there forthwith all things that cannot be kept without diſhonouring of God, muſt be caſt away.

Which your hands haue made.] The Prophet preſſeth them, that they might the rather acknowledge their ſinne. For when men are accuſed, they would willingly caſt the fault vpon ſome other, and are very loth to confeſſe their guiltineſſe: as for example, the common ſort are ready to accuſe the Priests, but few will lay the blame of their ſinnes vpon themſelves. Therefore the Prophet calles them the workes of their hands, that they might know that themſelves were the authors of ſuch abominations. And yet therewithall he lets them ſee how their inſidelitie hath cunningly ſeducēd them, whilſt they were the forgers of their owne goddeſſe. Hence we may gather, that God receiſes all our inuentions; neither can he accept in good part, that ſeruiſe whereof our ſelves are the authors. I take the word ſinne, appellatiuely: as if hee ſhould ſay; When you behold your idols, then looke vpon your ſin, acknowledge the ſignes of your diſloyaltie, and reuolt. If you be indeede conuerted vnto God, then ſhew it by the effects, in reiecting your idols, and in renouncing your ſuperſtitions: for this ſhall bee the true triall of your ſound conuerſion.

Vers. 8. Then Aſhur ſhall fall by the ſword, not of man: and the ſword ſhall deuoure, not that of man: hee ſhall flee from the preſence of the ſword, and his young men ſhall melt, or conſume away.

THE letter Vau, may better be translated into an aduerbe of time; Then Aſhur ſhall fall: that is to ſay, when you ſhall be conuerted vnto the Lord, and that your good conuerſation manifeſts your ſound conuerſion; then the enemy ſhall fall. For looke how the Aſſyrian was raiſed vp of the Lord, to puniſh nith the Iewes for their wickednesse, and chiefe for their Idolatrie; so God also promifeth that this enemy shall be cut off when they shall cease to sinne and to serue Idols. Thus wee see that our obstinacie is the cause why the Lord addes plague vnto plague, and doubles his blowes in pursuing vs more and more. For we fill giue him new occasions of enflaming his wrath against vs. If we desire that God should strike vs more softly, and that our enemies might at once be destroyed and neuer trouble vs more; let vs studie by newnes of life to enter into his fauor againe; for he will by and by lay downe his rods, and take away the force and power of our enemies that they shall not hurt vs.

When it is said that it shall not be by the sword of man: the Prophet thereby means that the deliuerance of the Church is the peculiar worke of God: giuing the Iewes to vnderstand, that albeit there appeared no help in earth, yet Gods secret power should be sufficient to redeeme them. Are our enemies confounded then; is their force repressed? Let vs know that this proceeds from the hand of God. Indeed he repelleth the force and furie of the wicked diuers waies; but it is his onely hand notwithstanding whereby the Church is saued. For he so works by humane helps, that yet he keeps her chosen after a wonderfull and extraordinarie maner, as may be seene euen since the beginning of the world: and it is no lesse easie to perceiue it now, if we were not hoodwinked. And yet this lets not, but the Lord may employ some of his seruants in the deliuerance of his Church, but so, that still his owne hand especially shines in such a worke.

We know this prophesie of Isaiab was fulfilled when the host of the Assyrians was discomforted, and when Sennacherib fled. For men commonlie see not Gods hand therein, but the Lord manifests his power to the end we might know that he is the deliuerer of his Church. And when he freed Ierusalem from the siege which was after laid before it, he did therein as in a glasse present also vnto the Iewes an image of their spiritual deliuerance. It is he alone then which will destroy our spirituall enemies. In vaine therefore shall we seeke other helps and remedies, and in vaine shall we rest vpon our owne strength which is nothing: for we shall neuer ouercome nor be Conquerors but by the leading and help of our God.

His young men.] His meaning is, that the Lord will so manifest his might against the Assyrians, that the hearts of young men which are wont to be couragious shall quaille and melt as waxe. For in as much as young men haue lesse experience then those that are old, they are more rash and headie. But the Lord will castie coole their heate when the houte is come in which he will deliuer his seruants. This is the cause why Isaiab made speciall mention of young men, as if he had said, the flower, or strength.

Chap. 40. 20

Verf. 9. He shall flee for feare into his fortresse, and his Princes shall be feared With the banner, saith the Lord Who hath a fire in Zion, and a furnace in Ierusalem.

Now he speaks of Sennacherib, who being swallowed vp with feare, should shamefullie flee into his fortresse in Nineue, as into his nest. He addes, that his Princes who should encourage the rest of the fouldiours, shall be so surprized with astonishment, that they shall neither dare to take vp their weapons, nor to ioine issue, as they say, but shall flee the Standard. To conclude, he shewes that he is Gods Herald to proclaime this Edict, that the Iewes might in no wise doubt nor dispute of the euent as they were wont; also that they might not afterward forget so great a benefit; neither attribute it vnto fortune.

In the end of the verse, if we reade as some translate, Whose fire is in Zion, the sense will be, that God hath a power of fire to deuoure his enemies. Notwithstanding I thinke the relatiue Asher is superfluous: or ought to be translated in the nominatiue Qui, because God is properly called fire, in respect of the Assyrian whom he will consume. Now because he speaks of fire, some referre it to the Sacrifices: but this interpretation is farre fetched, neither hath it any good ground. For mine owne part I doubt not but his meaning is to say, That the Lord hath a fire to consume the Assyrian, or that God himselfe is as a fire, so as he closely compares the Assyrian to straw, or stubble.

He also saith, that this fire is kindled and maintained in Zion, and in Ierusalem, that is to say, in the middes of his people, to shew that the wicked shall not escape vnpunished, for persecuting the Church of God. For they shall one day feele him their Iudge, who stands in the middes of his Church, which for the most part is thought to be destitute of all help. The summe is, that Gods vengeance is prepared for the wicked which haue not ceased to molest his people, and that y^e Lord will not reuenge for his owne sake only, but for his elects sake also. Let vs reioyce in this consolation, and howiuever we seeme destitute of succor and exposed to all dangers, yet let vs euermore assure our selues that our God will be as a consuming fire against our aduersaries.

God will euermore be a consuming fire, to consume the aduersaries of his Church.

Reforme thy euil maners, and God will redresse thy miseries.

The redemption of the Church, a peculiar worke of God.

THE

THE XXXII. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. Behold a King ſhall reigne in right conſeſſe, and the Princes ſhall gouern in iudgement.

is meaning is to ſay, that God will yet bee good vnto his church; ſo as he will reſtore it vnto the former eſtate. Now the beſt way to bring it thereunto, is when ciuill policie is rightly adminiſtred, and all things ordered according to iuſtice and equitie. No doubt this prophetic belongs to Hezechias, and to his reigne; vnder whom the Church was reformed and brought againe into her firſt glory: for before ſhe was miſerably ſcattered. That wicked and curſed hypocrit Ahaz, had corrupted all after his own fantaſie, and had ouerthrowne both the ciuill and eccleſiaſtiſſall policie. The Prophet therefore promiſeth another King, to wit, Hezechias, who by his iuſtice and equitie, ſhould ſet thoſe things in order, which before were confuſed. In a word, he here ſets forth the happie ſtate of the Church, as in a glaſſe of which ſeing it cannot bee erected without Chriſt, it is therefore certaine that the things here ſpoken of, ought to be referred to him; of whom Hezechias was but a figure, both touching his office and Kingdome.

He mentions iudice and iudgement, according to the vsuall phraſe of the Scripture, which by theſe two words vnderſtands a well ordered gouernment: for iudice ſignifies equitie and moderation: and vnder the word iudgement, is comprehended that part of equitie by which the good are maintained and preferred from the violence of the wicked. It is very certaine that the effice of a good Prince, ſtretcheth it ſelfe further then iudice and iudgement; for he ought principally to vp-hold the honour of God, and the purity of religion: but the Scripture is wont to expreſſe the whole obſeruation of the Law, vnder the duties of the ſecond table. For if we abſtaine from violence, if (as much as in vs lies) we labour to releue the poore and oppreſſed, if we hold the band of peace one with another, wee therein giue good teſtimonie that the feare of God is in our hearts, from which ſuch fruits of faith doe ſpring forth. Vnder a part then the Prophet hath comprehended the whole.

But it is not without cauſe that hee mentions Princes. Why ſo? It is not enough that he himſelfe bee a good King, vnleſſe hee alſo haue good gouernours & counſellers about his perſon. For it often fallies out, that the people behaue themſelues leaudly vnder good Kings; as we reade of Nero, vnder whoſe raigne, euery one might doe as he liſted: ſo as the condition of many was much worſe at that time, then in the daies of Nero; for the careleſneſſe of one onely, gaue occaſion to many to become wicked. Kings therefore ought to be furniſhed with good gouernours, which may be as eyes, eares, and hands to his body, in helping him to order things aright. If this bee wanting, a good King ſhall neuer be able ſo to aduance religion and iuſtice; but his officers will bee readie more or leſſe to foreſlow the courſe of good proceedings. And if there be not among the highſt, ſuch a harmonie and agreement touching theſe things, as is in a well tuned inſtrument of muſicke, the Church & Commonwealthe ſhall ſeldome proſper. The counſell therefore which Ieſhu gaue Moſes his ſonne in law, is to bee hearkened vnto of euery good King; let him chuſe for his officers ſuch as bee men of courage, fearing God, and hating couctouſneſſe; yea, let him appoint ſuch for his Captaines ouer tens, fifties, and hundreds.

But now aduaries, bawdes, ruſſians, flatterers, and ieſters, are for ſooth aduanced by Kings, to whom are assigned the chiefeſt dignities and places, as iult rewards of their flatteries and bawderies. Ate we to wonder then when wee ſee commonwealthe euery where almoſt fall to ruin, and come to nought, and all true adminiſtration of iudice and iudgement abandoned and reiected? No verily. For it is the iult puniſhment of our finnes; yea, and wee our ſelues deſerue to haue ſuch gouernours, becauſe wee will not ſuffer God to haue the gouernment of vs. How is it poſſible they ſhould inioy this ſo ſingular a benefit, which are knowne rebels, prophane or malicious hypocrits, who caſt the Lord and his heſts behind their backes, and will not indure the ſweet yoke of Chriſt, which would bring with it this happy and flouriſhing eſtate of the Church here promiſed?

Verſ. 2. And he ſhall be as an hiding place from the wind, and as a ſhadow from the tempeſt, as the riuers of waters in a dry place, the ſhadow of a great rocke in the deſert land.

IN this verſe hee lets vs ſee how exceeding needfull it is to haue a well ordered Commonwealthe, when hee calles this King an hiding place for the wind; and the shadow from the tempeſt. For the world is neuer in ſuch good caſe, as when euery one willingly abſtains from that which is euill, and when all quietly ſeek the benefit of one another, without conſtraint. For as much then as many take libertie to offer violence to their neighbours, by reaſon of their intemperancie and vnruſly paſſions, men ſhall be in continuall ſtrife and debate, if there bee not remedies at hand by law, and iudgement ſeates to ſtill and pacifie them: but becauſe many by their lordly au-

The Churches glory begins at the eſtabliſhing of a well ordered ciuill policie.

This prophetic extendeth it ſelfe firſt to Hezechias; Next, vnto Chriſt, of whom Hezechias was a figure.

A good Prince muſt carefully provide for the flouriſhing eſtate both of Church and Commonwealthe.

To abſtaine from offering violence, to releue the poore, to be ſpeake with our neighbours, good ſignes of the feare of God. It is needfull for a good Prince to haue good counſellers about him.

thoritic are readie rather to raise vp troubles then to alay them: it is not without cause that this good King is heere adorned with such titles.

And if this were rightlie spoken touching the person of Hezekias, how much more doth it sidge appertaine to Christ, in whom we haue our iure and only refuge in these scampes? and yds which wee must be tossed as long as our conſtituting dayes shall laſt in this world. Are we then parched with heate? Let vs learne to throude vs vnder his shadow. Are we euer and anon tossed with waues, so as it ſeemes we ſhall be ſwallowed vp of them? Let vs runne to him as to our moſt ſafe and ſure haue. He will eaſily ſtill and quiet all tempeſts. He will ſet all things in order which before were confuſed and out of frame.

Verſ. 3. Then the eyes of the ſeeing ſhall not be ſhut, and the eares of them that heare ſhall hearken.

4. And the heart of the fooliſh ſhall vnderſtand knowledge, and the tongue of the ſtutterers ſhall be vnloofed to ſpeake diſtinctlie.

Hence wee may yet better perceiue that the Prophet ſo ſets forth the gouernment and reigne of Hezekias, that his meaning therewithall is to leade vs higher. For he in-treates here of the reſtauration of y Church, whereof there was ſome reſemblance vnder Hezekias, but the full accompliſhment of it was vnder Ieſus Chriſt. We know the Church neuer proſpers well if it want iuſt and wiſe gouernours. But which way can this be attained vnleſſe Chriſt reigne? It followes therefore that himſelfe and his kingdome are here recommended vnto vs. Now this promiſe is oppoſed to that fearefull iudgement of blinding, mentioned in Chap. 29. 10. 11. Heere on the contrarie he promiſeth that true light: ſo as thoſe which were blinded before, ſhall now ſee clearly: the deafe ſhall begin to heare, the fooliſh ſhall vnderſtand knowledge, and the ſtutterers ſhall ſpeake diſtinctlie.

He calles them ſeers & beavers, which ought to haue taken heed to the word of the Lord when it was publiſhed vnto them: but they choſe rather to remaine wilfullie blinde and deafe, and eſtranged both their minds and thoughts from wholeſome doctrine. Now the Lord promiſeth them that hee will reſtore eyes, eares, tongue, and vnderſtanding vnto them. Sure it is that whatſoever is heere promiſed proceeds from the free grace of God: for the queſtion is not now ſimple what men ſhal do of themſelves, but of that which God ſhall worke in them. Theſe then are the ſpeciall gifts of God: as on the contrarie, when he ſhuts the eyes, takes away vnderſtanding, and the righte uſe of ſpeech, and ſuffers ignorance and barbarouſnes to reigne; theſe are to be accounted horrible iudgements, whereby God auengeth himſelfe vpon the vnthankfulnes of men, and alſo of their contempt of his word.

The Prophet then promiſeth that God taking pitie of his Church, will at the laſt reſtore that vnto her which before he had iuſtly withheld, and that for the loue which he beares vnto Chriſt, from whom we muſt receive a tongue to ſpeake, eyes to ſee, eares to heare, and an heart to vnderſtand, for till then, we are more then blockiſh, and ſmiten as it were with a fearefull ſortifſhnes. Let vs know then that out of Chriſt there is no ſpiritual life in the world. Why ſo? Becauſe euery mothers ſonne of vs is blinde, deafe, dumb, and fooliſh, vntill we be gathered into that bodie whereof he is the head: whence it followes, that all theſe benefiſts faile when his kingdome is defaced.

We are alſo to note that the chiefſt benefiſts which aboute all others we are eſpeciallie ro deſire are here recommended vnto vs: for riches and the like, in the ioiying whereof men vſualle place their happines, ought to be eſteemed as nothing in compariſon of theſe things. Shall we not be more then miſerable in the middes of all abundance, if the Lord denie vs theſe ſpiritual bliſſings whereof the Prophet ſpeakes in this place? Take away theſe, and we may be ſure Chriſt is gone; neither can wee haue any part in him. For from him doe theſe heauenlic graces flow, as S. Paul teacheth vs, Ephes. 1. 3. Seeing therefore we now enioy theſe benefiſts whereof we haue been ſo long deprived, let vs bluſh for ſhame that with our tongues we haue not rendered vnto Chriſt that glorie which is due vnto him; alſo that we haue neglected to apply the vnderſtanding which he hath given vs to the aduancement of his kingdome, and to the furtherance of his ſeruiſe: for by neglecting theſe things, we haue maniſteſted to all the world that his kingdome hath no place in vs. To conclude, for as much as foolcs are worie to be raſh and headie, therefore the Hebrues take haſtines for ſollie: for wiſe men are commonlic watie and ſlow in that they take in hand.

Verſ. 5. A niggard ſhall no more be called liberal, nor the churle rich.

The Prophets meaning is, that all things ſhall be brought into their order, that men ſhould not eſteeme vices vertues, as they did in times paſt. For where gouernment is confuſed, the courtois reigne as Lords; becauſe men vſualle iudge of vertue by power and riches. Let a poore man be neuer ſo honeſt, religious, yea, and liberal, according to his abilitie, yet he is generallie deſpied of all. In an ill gouerned Common-wealth therefore all things are out of frame, but the contrarie eaſily diſcouers all ſuch iuglings. For let vertue once be in requeſt, vice will forthwith be brought to light. The godly alſo haue greater libertie to repreſſe the pride of ſuch as before trode all iuſtice and equitie vnder foote.

Beſides, in regard the Prophet ſpeakes here touching the ſtate and reformation of the Church, the gouernment whereof is ſpiritual, we muſt yet raiſe vp our minds a little higher,

Chriſt eſpeciallie is this hiding place.

Chriſt our ſhadow and moſt ſure haue of ſafetie in the midlt of ſtrict trials, and floods of aduerſities.

* Or raiſh, or giddie headed.

It is Chriſt only that giues vs eyes, eares, a tongue, and an vnderſtanding heart. No ſpiritual life in the world out of Chriſt.

higher, that we may refer all this vnto Iesus Christ, whose peculiar propertie it is to discouer the vices that are hid, and to take away the vailes & impediments which change the outward face of them: by reason whereof, they are for the most part praised no lesse then if they were vertues indeed. This hee doth by the Gospell. How so? Through the preaching thereof, he laies those wickednesses open, which before were close and secret, and makes them appear in their owne likenesse: so as none shall be beguiled by outward appearances, vnlesse he will wittingly close vp his eyes. Will yee see the reason then why the Gospell is so generally hated of the world? No man would willingly haue his secret filthie thoughts and vile actions made manifest.

The Philosophers dispute very well in manie places touching conuersione and liberality, and in some fort discouer the differences betwene them: but they gage not the consciences to the bottome, neither doe they truly distinguish betwene the one and the other. This cannot bee done but by Christs light, when hee shines by his Gospell, discouering the inmost secrets of our hearts, bringing vs to a spirituall and willing obedience. We are here therefore called to the iudgement seate of Christ, who onely vnmaskes hypocrisie, causing vs to see whether we be truly liberall or niggardly.

Verf. 6. But the niggard will speake of niggardnesse, and his heart will worke iniquitie, and doe wickedly, and speake falsly against the Lord, to make empty the hungry soule, and to cause the drinke of the thirstie to faile.

WE may also translate, The wicked will speake wickedly: for the word Nebalah, signifies all manner of villanie or wickednes, which we commonly call, a man of no worth. We may also translate, The foole will speake wickedly: and thus there should be some allusion in the words Nabal and Nebalah; but the sense would be diuers. Notwithstanding, because he vsed the verie same word in the former verse, when he spake of lawlesse persons & niggards; I do the rather follow this interpretation. I take the word Auen for impietie; for he speakes of a continued liberty to doe euill, as the sequell sufficiently shewes. Why so? Because hee directs his speech to such as plunge themselves into all manner of leaud behauiour; being without touch of breast, and as it were past feeling. They iest out all admonitions, and scorne both God and his messengers. But Christ drawes euē such forth into the light, and laies that open to the view of their consciences, which before lurked in secret: for to him it belongs to diuide (with his two edged sword of the Gospell) euē betwene the marrow and the bones, that euery thought may lie naked and bare before his iudgement seat.

Our Prophet then conuigues on the same

matter which he began to handle in the former verses. Others expound it otherwise, (yet not so properly as I thinke) for they take it to be a prouerbiall speech, and expound it in the present tense; The villaine speakes of villanie. But if I be not deceiued, the Prophet points out vnto vs an higher matter; to wit, that Christ who is the Iudge of the world, will ascend into his iudgement seat to manifest what is in the heart of euery one. For as long as hee forbears to execute the office of a Iudge, all things run out of course: wicked men are applauded because they carry a faire shew of vertue; and the godly are counted as the of-slowing of the world. But Christ will bring euery mans doings to the touchstone that low wickednesse, which before caried some colour of vertue, might be discouered. For which cause it is said, hee hath his fan in his hand to separate the good corne from the chaffe. This fan is the Gospell, whereby God as a iust Iudge, puts the wicked as it were vpon a racke, and maugre their teeth, makes them to vter their inmost thoughts. Wee haue good proofe of this againe and againe, whilest wee discouer that grosse idolatry which was so masked vnder the papiacie, that men tooke it for Gods true worship. Oh how wonderfully were the poore people wrapped in superstitions! Who would euer haue thought that there had lien such horrible monsters (in those times of darknesse) within the hearts of men: such as they are now manifested to be. For the contempt of God so ouerflowed, that some shewed themselves beasts rather then men. But what doe the Papists? They cry out as if we by our doctrine had let loose the bridle to men, and had set open the doore to epicurisme; so as it should be lawfull for any amongst vs (without blushing) to doe what he list. But let them heare our Prophets answer; who telles them, that the truth of God being once brought to light, vile persons will behaue themselves vilely, and the wicked will then speake wickedly: otherwise, how should Christ be a spirituall Iudge, if he did not manifest the secrets of the hearts, and discouer the things that were most deeply hidden?

But besides the scoffes which the reprobrates cast forth against God, hee taxeth also their cruelty, namely, They make empty the hungry soule. Wherein the Prophet orderly recites the finnes that are against the second table. The wicked begin at the contempt of God: afterwards, they fall into their finnes; to wit, they spare not to exercise cruelty against their poore neighbours. What rigor can be greater then to deprive the hungry soule of his bread, and the thirstie soule of his drinke: For the very instinct of nature must needs cause our bowels in compassion to yearne within vs. But when men are growne so yron hearted, and haue so far degenerated, that they are without sense or feeling of their brethrens wants, doe they not shew themselves worse then sauage or wild beasts, who wil pitie their like?

charle are wicked: hee deuise wicked counsels to vnder the poore with lying words, and to speake against the poore in iudgement.

WEE must alwaies retaine the future tence, because he disputes not so much what couctous men are, as what they will be, when Christ by the light of his Gospell shall discouer their hypocrisie, lest they should deceiue any. For hee speakes of that heauenlic light which should breake forth to cause secret wickednesses appeare; as wee haue said. Christ then manifesteth the venome that is hid in the couctous and thewes with what vnlawfull weapons they fence themselves. If any will interpret the word Kelai, Measures; I hinder him not; but the word weapons agrees best, and hath a larger sense; for vnder it are comprehended all sortes of instruments. He means then by a metaphor to set forth the cunning practises and subtiltyes, wherewith the couctous beguile the simple, and snare them in their ginsnes.

In the next place he shewes the reason of it; to wit, they are alwaies hammering of wickedness in their hearts. Surely hee here describeth the miner of the wicked, who busie their braines about nothing else but how they may fill their purses; be it by right or wrong, it is no matter. Such people doth our Lord Iesus Christ here vnmaske, and lets all the world see their priuie packing. Our Prophet amplifies the indignitie of their fact yet further, by other circumstances. For is it not a more grieuous sinne to circumuent the innocents who are vnable to thurst for themselves, then such as haue reaching heads? Againe, is it with sweete baits, they deceiue vnder pretext of friendship? In the third place, if they do this to the poore, who had more neede to be deliuered? Lastly, if nares be spread euen in the open iudgements feates? No doubt the sinne is greater to spoile the poore vnder colour of iustice, then to set vpon them in the high way. For iudgement feates ought to bee like Cities of refuge for the distressed to flee vnto. What shall we say then, if such places bee made dennes of theeces? On the high way a man may happily shunne a theefe, and may wind himselfe out of his nets; but which way shall a man escape out of the Inates which are laid in places of iustice? The circumstances of this text therefore ought diligently to be obserued.

Vers. 8. But the liberall man will deuise of liberall things, and he will continue his liberalitie.

WEE haue told you before that these sentences haue a more spiritual sense then our bare reason can attaine vnto: for the Prophet speakes not so much of Commonwealth matters, as of the reformation of the Church. These things therefore appertaine to the regenerate, ouer whom Christ reignes by the scepter of his word. For how-soeuer many bee called outwardly by the voice of the Gospell; yet few are brought by it to yeeld sound obedience vnto God, or to beare that sweete yoke. Those few doth the Lord make benefactors and truly liberals, in such wise, as they seeke not so much their owne things, as how to benefite the poore; and that not once or twice, and so away, but continue the same from day to day, so as their heart doth rather increase then decrease.

This place is commonly translated otherwise; to wit, that those who are liberall, go on forward, and abound in well doing, because God enricheth them; & recompenceth them with greater benefits. This sense at the first, hath some shew of reason: but the Prophet rather meant, that the liberall shall neuer cease giuing. Why so? Because they shal grow more and more; they shall haue the same will and affections, and shall continue constant in their good course: as it is said, Psal. 112. 9. He hath distributed abroad, and giuen to the poore: his righteousness he indureth for euer. Now this is added because it is an easie matter to counterfet the liberall person for a time: many also thinke they haue quit themselves well, when they haue giuen a litle; but they grow faint hearted by & by, and change their mindes: whereas on the contrary, true liberalitie is not an houres bird, as we say, but growes on to perfection. Those that are indued therewith, perseuere therein constantly: their liberalitie is not by fits & starts; neither are they like a seething pot, that is now ready to boile ouer, and by & by stands as still as a Stone.

This is it which our Prophet meant to expresse by the verbe, shall goe forward or continue. Many things fall out often times, which cooles the heat, and hinders the course of our charitie. First, we meete with the strange ingratitude of men; so as it seemes all our cost is ill bestowed. Againe, many are too greedie, like hoisleeches, that still sucke in other mens blood. Yet let vs often and alwaies beare in minde what Saint Paul saith, Gal. 6. 9. to wit, that we shall reape in due season if we faint not. For the Lord exhorts vs not to such a kinde of liberalitie as should last for a day or a weeke, but for our whole life.

Vers. 9. Rise vp, yee women that are at ease: heare my voice ye carelesse daughters, hearken to my words.

IT seemes there should bee no coherence betweene these words and the former. For before hee spake of the restitution of the Church; but now hee threatens that Gods iudgements are readie to seise vpon those who gaue themselves to a pompous, delicious, and an idle course of life. It should seeme therefore that Isaiah takes vp a new matter in this place. Yet will there be no great inconuenience, if this prophetic be ioyned to the former: for the Prophets vsually keepe this course; first, they lay forth promises of grace

It is a greater sinne to rob the poore vnder colour of iustice, then to set vpon them by the high wayes side. Iudgement feates ought to be as cities of refuge for the distressed to flee vnto.

Many called by the external voice of the Gospell, but few are brought by it to yeeld sound obedience therunto. The way of the righteous like the light that shine in more and more vnto the perfect day: 1. Cor. 13. 12.

grace to the faithfull; then they direct their ſpeech to the hypocrits, teſtifying that the mercy which God promiſeth to his children, ſhall be ſo far off from beſiſing of them, that they ſhall ſurely beare the reward of their finnes.

Whereas he bendeth the force of his ſpeech in particular againſt women, the Hebrews vnder this word (according to the uſe of their tong) vnderſtand Cities: but I thinke this ſhould be no figuratiue maner of ſpeech, and therefore I rather reſt in the bare letter. Now he ſpeaks to women rather then vnto men, to ſignifie the greatneſſe of this deſolation: for women and maidens are commonly ſpared in ſuch times, by reaſon of their ſex, being alſo deſtitute of warlike defences. Well, he ſaith the deſtruction ſhall be ſo barbarous, that none ſhall ſcape ſcotefree.

And note that he ſpeakes expreſly of women of reſt, who commonly are the moſt delicate: for according to their abundance, ſo they may better ſhift for themſelues, and may more eaſily eſcape dangers, when the poore muſt be faine to goe to the wall. But Iſaiah telleth them that they ſhall be conſtrained to riſe and tremble: therein oppoſing this trembling to that reſt and eaſe which they quietly enioyed. For he commands them to riſe, as giuing them to vnderſtand, that it was no time, for them now to ſit ſtill, becauſe the Lord was about to awaken them out of their ſecure couſe of liſe.

When he addes, heare my voice yee daughters: by daughters the Rabbines vnderſtand Cities and Townes; but this ought to be taken literally, as I ſaid before. Hee ſhewes whence this terror and violence ſhall proceed, which ſhall cauſe them thus to riſe and tremble; to wit, from the iudgement of God. But he mentions the voice, to ſhew that this ſhall bee no vaine prophecie, becauſe this war was proclaimed againſt them by the commandment of God. As if he ſhould ſay, You ſhall one day ſeele by experience, what power and efficacy there is in the word of God to awaken you.

Now he blames their idleneſſe, ſecuritie, and delicacie ſo oft, not onely becauſe it ſhould be vnked for thoſe that had bin wont to be at their eaſe, to bee ſo rudely rouzed vp; but alſo in regard it is a thing almoſt vnpoſſible, that the world (in this corrupted and depraued eſtate of mans nature) ſhould not bee too careleſſe in abuſing reſt and abundance. For we then by little and little fall into a fortiſhneſſe of mind, deceiuing our owne ſoules with vaine imagination: ſo as all feare is abandoned of euery one: in which falſe ſecuritie, wee eaſily are drawne audaciously euen to ruſh againſt God himſelfe.

Verſ. 10. Yee women that are careleſſe, ſhall bee in feare above a yeere in daies: for the vintage ſhall faile, and the gathering ſhall come no more.

BY theſe words he meanes, that the calamitie ſhall laſt long: for it is a great reheſe to a ſorrowfull mind, when hee thinkeſ heart, when that the miſeries and afflictions which p^{er}ceiue it, that though vpon him ſo neerly, ſhall laſt but a while. But thoſe afflictions be ſo that there is no hope left of ſome comfortable iſſue, nor promiſe of deliuerance, what can enſue thereof but deſpaire? Hee ſhewes then, that they ſhall not ſuffer this extreme for a yeere onely, but that they muſt expect new afflictions, one in the necke of another. By the word to feare, hee p^{er}itually taxeth their drowſyncke; ſhewing that they ſhall be led away with terror and trembling, ſeeing the ſweet and ſtill voice of whoſſome doctrine was ſo tedious vnto them. And in as much as the Iewes were too much beſet with the loue of earthly and tranſitorie things, hee threatens them with want of bread and wine. And thus hee applies himſelfe to their capacite.

If they had been better purged from their earthlineſſe he would rather haue awakened them with the feare of that iudgement which Jeremiah bewailes, Lament. 1. 7. to wit, that the ſacrifices and feaſt daies ſhould ceaſe, and that the holy aſſemblies ſhould be aboliſhed. But becauſe they had plunged themſelues in voluptuous liuing, and had not ſo well profited as to eſteeme ſpiritual benefits, the Prophet applying himſelfe to their weakneſſe, addreſſeth his ſpeech rather to their bellies, then to their mindes.

Now he toucheth the wiſhing of the fields, which ſhould vndoubtedly follow this war: for abundance is the mother of idleneſſe and ſecuritie. It is therefore as if he had ſaid, The Lord will deprive you of your belly cheere, he will rouze you vp with a witneſſe, and will deprive you of all matter of reioycing. By this verſe then are we admoniſhed not to lie ſnoozing in our proſperity; neither to dreame of ſuch a reſt, as if we were to enioy the ſame in this world for euer. No, let vs ſee the good thing, which God beſtows vpon vs moderately, vnleſſe we meane that God ſhould awaken and ouerwhelme vs vnawares: and by this ſudden change which ſhall befall vs, vex vs worſe then wee can expect or thinke of.

Abundance the mother of idleneſſe and ſecuritie.

Verſ. 11. Yee women that are at eaſe, be aſtonied: feare O yee careleſſe women: put off the clothes, make bare, and giue ſackcloth vpon the loines.

THIS is no ſuperfluous repetition, but rather an amplification of that which hee ſpoke of before: for whileſt men are thus rocked aſleepe, hardly can they be awakened by the voice of Gods Prophets. It is needfull then to cry aloud, and to adde rebuke to rebuke. Therefore in that hee multiplies his threatening, he thereby ſhewes how great our ſecuritie is, when men are once blinded with proſperitie. It is almoſt a thing impoſſible for them to heare the voice of God when he admoniſheth them. And to ſpeake the truth, men are in much more danger by proſperitie, then by aduerſitie: for when all things fall out well, they are ready to flatter themſelues selues; yea, and to be bewitched with their felicitie. This was the cause why he was faine to rebuke the Iewes so sharply; euen to quicken them vp if it were possible out of their drowsynesse. This exhortation then ought to be referred to the time to come as if the Prophet should haue said; In the end you shall tremble, for I can assure you, your rest shall not last alwaies.

Thus hee shewes that this calamitie which was to ensue, should be as a scale set vnto his prophetic, whereby God would manifest by the effects, that these words should not vanish away in the ayre. Where hee bids them to make bare and to gird them with sackcloth, he describes the estate of mourners. For when aduersitie presteth any, then they put on sackcloth, and make the rest of the parts of their bodies naked; and so by outward afflictions and garments, and the like, they manifest the inward dolour of their mindes. Hee calles the women then for their delicious and daintie fare, and voluptuous luing wherein they plunged themselues, to sackcloth and other testimonies of sorrow.

Verf. 12. Men shall lament for the teate; euen for the pleasant fields and for the fruitfull vine.

THIS verse is diuersly expounded: for some without any figure, vnderstand, that there shall bee such great want of food, that women shall lose their milke, and therefore that the infants shall weepe ouer the empty and dried breasts of their mothers: which we see to fall out when people are pined away in great famins. But the most receiued sense, and that which agrees best, is; that by teates, vnder a figure we vnderstand fields and vineyards, which also is expressed in the very words of the text: because from them, as from the teats of our mothers, we daily sucke milke & blood as it were out of y^e earth. His meaning is then, that the fruits of the earth shall faile, because the Lord will so curse her, y^e shall not be able to yeeld any increase. Thus men shall lament in regard of this great penurie, as ouer the teats of their mother, which were wont to feede them with delicates. This sense I take to be fittest, as best agreeing to the naturall scope of the text: for it was necessarie it should serue as an exposition to that which is afterward added, touching the pleasant fields, and the fruitfull vines.

Verf. 13. Upon the land of my people shall grow thornes and briars; yea, upon all the houses of ioy in the Citie of reioycing.

HEE now confirms the former sentence, and shewes that the cause of this famine and barrennesse shall be, in regard that thornes and briars shall grow vpon the land; that is to say, the fields shall bee laid fallow and barren, whereas before they were fat and fruitfull.

Now this must needs be an horrible change for this Country, as we know, had the praise for fruitfulness about any other; not so much in respect of the soile, as by Gods blessing, who had said, I will giue you a land flowing with milke and hony: Exod. 3. 8. and 17. Hence (I say) came this fruitfulness of that land.

Whereas he calles it the land of his people; he preuents an obiection which they might thus make; what reason haue we to feare the barrennesse of that land, or that it should not yearly yeeld vs fruit, seeing God who is good vnto all, will be much more a nursing father to vs, and that in a more particular manner? They thought it then a thing utterly vnpossible, that this land being bestowed vpon them, who were the children of Abraham, should cuer be ouergrowne with thornes and briars. And thus the Prophet rebukes the Iewes the more sharply, because by their rebellion, they had not onely made void these blessings of God, but had also pulled downe his wrath so far vpon them, as to lay their fruitful land waste and barren.

The word yea, in the middle of the sentence, amplifies the doctrine: albeit some expound it, For; reading it thus: For gladnesse is in their houses. But this sense suites not well, in regard the construction of the words will not beare it. I rather thinke therefore that he enlargeth the sentence; as if he meant to say, that this calamitie shall not onely seize vpon the vtmost bounds of the land, but euen vpon the houses of ioy also; to wit, euen vpon those which were sumptuous and pleasant, where they were alwaies wont to solace themselues without let in times past.

But when the Prophet spake these things, I warrant you the people of that time laught a good (as we say) at him: neither could they heare such vnswaorie newes amiddest somanie delights which bewitched them. Nay, they tooke foule scorn to be so dealt withall, because of Gods promises, which they tooke to bee so sure, that they thought no want could euer befall them: but Isaias words haue all proved true for all that. By this example therefore let vs learne to vse prosperitie with sobriety, and so depend vpon Gods promises touching his blessings, to be powdered out vpon vs, that in the meane while we yee, de obedience to his word with a good conscience.

Vse prosperitie with sobriety.

Verf. 14. "Because the palace shall be forsaken, and the noise of the Citie shall bee left; the tower and fortresse shall bee demnes for euer, and the delight of wilde Asses, and a pasture for flockes."

HEE yet sets forth this desolation more at large: for, hauing in the former verse mentioned the house of magnificence; hee now adds the palaces and Cities: meaning to shew, that nothing (be it neuer so glorious or excellent) could bee exempted from this common common deſolation. We ſee then that menſies are dazeled with their owne glorie vntill they liſt vp their eies towards heauen, and thus being ſweetly lulled aſleepe in their plentie, they grew feareleſſe and careleſſe of any thing. Therefore he tels them that all their pleaſant and gorgeous things in the land of Iudea, to wit, their Cities, Pallaces, Caſtles & Fortreſſes ſhould be laid vpon heapes and brought to nothing.

By the word etur, he againe admoniſheth them (as I haue touched before) that this wound ſhall not be cloſed vp againe in a yeere, but ſhould be long in healing; which ſhould anſwere in proportion to the length of time in which they had hardened themſelues in their vices; for had not the hand of God preſſed them long according to their ſubborne and rebellious nature, they would haue been readie forthwith to haue ruſhed into their iniquities aſreſh.

Verſ. 15. Untill the Spirit be poured vpon vs from above, and the Wildernes become a fruitfull field, and the plenteous field be counted as a foreſt.

Verſ. 10.

*Or, Carmel.

The Prophet had to deale as we know with the Iewes, amongſt whom the Lord had planted his Church, it was needfull therefore to leaue them ſome hope of ſaluation, leaſt they ſhould diſpaire in the middes of ſo many calamities. For albeit the Lord handles hypocrits roughlie becauſe they falſely ſhroude themſelues vnder the tide of being his people; yet is he inforced by one meanes or other to prouide for the good of his Saints. This promiſe is added therefore to put them in hope that God can not, nor will not forget his Couenant; howbeit for a time he ſcourgeth his children ſharplie with the rods of men; for he neuer ſo threatens, but he leaues hope and conſolation for the repentant to cheere vp and reſreſh their hearts, and that euen when it ſeemes heauen and earth ſhall goe together.

God neuer threatens fo ſharplie, but he ſtill leaues hope for the penitent.

And that they might the better taſte this conſolation which our Prophet ſets before them, he raiſeth vp their minds to the author of life. Wee ſee that when all things ſadge well, many eate and drinke till their ſkins crack, as they ſay: If ſamin pinch, then God is forgotten, and men renue for ſuccor to the earth. It is not without cauſe then that Iſaiab ſaith, the Spirit ſhall come from above, which warming the earth, ſhall cauſe the ſame to ſloriſh with new fruitfullnes. Neither do I doubt but he alludes to that ſentence of Dauid, Send forth thy Spirit, and they ſhall be created, and thou wilt renew the face of the earth, Pſal. 104. 30.

I 2

This word ſpirit hath two extents here: 1. ſo the reſtauration of earthly benefits.

Now in regard that he alſo ſets before them this ſigne as a token that God was reconciled vnto them, he therewithall aduerteth them, that the reſtauration of ſuch Church ſlowes only from his free grace, who can abolith barrennes as ſoone as it pleaſeth him in his fauor to diſtill ſome ſweet dewes from above: yea, ſo he can do it in an inſtant, becauſe at the firſt he created all things of nothing, as if they had been before.

The expoſitors doe diuerſlie translate the latter part of this verſe, where he compares the deſert to Carmel: but as I haue ſhewed in the 29. Chapter verſ. 17. where there is the like phraſe of ſpeech, it ſeemes to me that the Prophet ſimply ſets forth the effect of this reſtauration: to wit, that the abundance of all things ſhall teſtifie that God is indeed appeaſed towards his people. For the places which were deſerts before ſhould be as Carmel, which was a fat & fruitfull ſoile, whence alſo it tooke his name.

Carmel alſo ſhall be as a deſert: that is to ſay, ſo fruitfull, that if it be compared as it is now with that which it ſhall be one day, it may well be called a deſert: for it is an amplification of the extraordinarie fruitfullnes of it; as if he ſhould ſay, The fields which now are laid fallow and beare nothing, ſhall bring forth frutes: and thoſe which are tilled, and are by nature apt to yeeld increaſe, ſhall wax ſo fruitfull, that the abundance which is now vpon them is but barrennes in compariſon of that which ſhall be hereafter. As if we ſhould compare the grounds of Sauoy, with thoſe of Sicilia or Calabria, we would ſay that it were but a deſert. In a word, he ſignifies that there ſhall be an incomparable fruitfullnes, which the faithfull ſhall enioy after they be reconciled vnto God; and all becauſe they may vnderſtand what loue he beares them by lading them with ſo many benefits.

Now Iſaiab ſo propheſieth here of Hezekias his kingdome, that therewithall he referres all things to the kingdome of Chriſt, as to the end and full accompliſhment thereof. Come we once to Chriſt, then muſt we expound all theſe things ſpiritually, that ſo we may know we are renewed, as ſoone as the Lord ſends downe his ſpirit from above into our hearts, of barren ground, to make them fruitfull. For till we be inſpired from above by this holy Spirit, we are rightlie compared to deſerts and parched grounds, ſeeing we bring forth nothing but thornes and buiſhes, and are vnfit naturallic to bring forth any good fruite. Thoſe therefore which in times paſt were fruitleſſe, being now regenerated by the Spirit of God, ſhall begin in ſome meaſure to bring forth fruite vnto him: and thoſe who before had ſome outward ſhew of goodnes, ſhall become ſo fruitfull after they be thus regenerated by the holy Ghoſt, that comparing the one eſtate with the other, the firſt will be iudged but as a deſert in reſpect of the latter: for all the goodly works that men do before Chriſt hath regenerated them, are but ſo many glorious finnes. Therefore when wee ſee the Church oppreſſed euen vnto death, and that her condition ſeemes very lamentable, let vs liſt vp our eies to heauen, and depend whollie vpon theſe promiſes.

The ſecond extent.

Verſ. 16. And Iudgement ſhall dwell in the deſart, and Iuſtice ſhall remaine in the fruitfull field.

The Prophet heere teacheth wherein the true glorie of the Church conſiſts, to wit,

Wherein the true glory of the Church conſiſts.

F f when

when Iustice and Iudgements gets the vpper hand: for men are not to resemble beasts in seeking only after the abundance of earthlie and transitorie things. By this it appears sufficientlie, that the Iewes were not held by the doctrine of the law in the hope of temporarie benefits only, as some fantasticall spirits affirme: but they were by it commanded to rest in that which was the principall, to wit, that Iustice and Iudgements should flourish amongst them: neither is it to be doubted but they knew well enough that true felicitie consisted therein. We are therefore first of all to seeke the kingdome of God, and the righteousnes thereof, and not to place our ioy and happines in the abundance of wheat and wine, as hogges that feede in the trough. For as Zacharie sings in Luk. 1. 75. The end of our deliuerance from sinne and Satan, and of all the blessings we receive from God, is, that we should serue him in holines and in righteousnes all the dayes of our life.

By Iustice and Iudgement then he vnderstands all vprightnes, as we haue often shewed before. See Verf. 11. Which albeit they properlie concerne the equitie which we ought to vse one towards another: notwithstanding, because it is vsuall in the Scriptures by the duties of the second table to vnderstand the obseruation of the whole law, the Prophet here vnder a part comprehends religion and the true seruice of God. But the Prophets are wont especiallie to mention the duties of loue and those things that concerne the second table, because we chiefe lie manifest vnto men thereby what affection and loue wee beare vnto God. Now where he saith, that Iustice and Iudgement shall also dwell in the desert as well as in y^e plowed fields: it so much the better appears that such plenty of blessings was promised, that the beholding thereof should put men in minde of that great increase which they had seene in the fields before, was but barrennes now in respect thereof.

* Or, effe.

*Verf. 17. And the Worke of Iustice shall be peace, euen the * Worke of Iustice and quietnes, and assurance for euer.*

EVEN now he enuaied against that peace in which the Iewes were lulled asleepe. See verse 9, 10, 11. But heere he promiseth a peace contrarie to that, which shall be a testimonie of Gods loue towards them, who will keepe them faithfullie after he hath received them into his fauour. The close opposition betweene that bruiſh peace, which the wicked thought they had gotten when they committed all sorts of wickednes, whilſt they lay snoring therein also without repentance, and this peace which the children of God enioy by a godly and iust life, is here to be noted. For Isaiah stirres vs vp to couet after this latter; and teacheth vs to be assured that those with whom God is appeased, shall enioy a peace that is blessed and happie in deed. Thus he sets integritie before them for the object of their desires, that so they may attaine that peace which passeth vnderstanding: for there

They that would enioy an happy peace, must is no better meanes to liue such a peaceable life as is free from anyance, then in absteinilabour after an innocent life.

ing from euill, and doing of good, as S. Peter testifieth in his first Epistle, Chap. 3. verf. 13.

But our Prophet leades them higher, to wit, that in liuing holie and iustlie, they shall keepe themselves in Gods fauour. For is it not a thing altogether vnreasonable, that the wicked should expect peace, when they themselves will continuallie make warre against God? In deed there is none but desires peace; yea, who is he that can not highlie extoll it? but in the meane while themselves are the cause why enemies are raised vp against them, for they trouble heauen and earth by heapes as it were with their wickednes. Now in regard that this peace which God giues is perpetuall, Isaiah compares it with that which lasts but for a moment.

The wicked would faine enioy peace, whilſt they make open war against God.

In that he calles peace the effect of Iustice, let vs thence learne that warres proceede from Gods wrath, which we set on fire by our rebellion, whereas peace on the contrarie proceeds from his blessing. When therefore we see the enemies boile with rage, exalting themselves furiously against vs, let vs seeke no other matter to allay that heate then true conuersion: for our God will easily calme and quiet tumults, we being at one with him: for he it is as the Psalmist saith, which makes warres to cease vnto the ends of the earth: he breakes the bow and knapeth the speares in sunder, and burnes the chariots with fire, Psal. 46. 9, but we haue told you before that these things belong not only to the time of Herzlians, but ought also to be referred vnto Christ.

Warres proceed from Gods wrath, which we set on fire by our finnes. Our sound and sincere conuersion, the oonly meanes to still and quiet the rage of our enemies.

*Verf. 18. And my people shall dwell in the tabernacles of peace, and in sure dwellings, and in * safe resting-places.*

* Or, quiet resting-places. Peace, the fruite of Iustice.

AS he hath shewed that spirituall Iustice is that which hath her seate in the hearts of men, the same must be said of peace, which is the fruite of it. Thus when we heare of sure dwelling places, and resting-places, let vs remember what Paul saith, Rom. 5. 1. Being iustified by faith, we haue peace with God. This peace Christ left with his Disciples, which the world could not giue vnto them, Iohn 14. 27. And what maruell? For as the same Apostle teacheth, Phil. 4. 7. This peace passeth all vnderstanding. Hauing once obtained this Iustice, we shall be no more disquieted with inward terrors, as we were whē we felt that God was angrie with vs. The wicked conscience is alwaies at warres with it selfe, and in continuall anguish. The wicked therefore must needs be tossed to and fro with diuers garboiles: for he that is destitute of righteousnes, can neuer be in any sound peace of conscience. But where Christ reignes, there only is the true peace to be found, which the faithfull haue in assurance, which makes the come without feare before the heauenlie throne, not so much in respect of their owne picie, as for that they rest themselves vpon the sure rock of Gods mercies in Christ. Hence we gather, that Christ reignes not where consciences

He that is destitute of the imputation of Christs righteousnes, can neuer haue found peace.

ees are troubled and toſſed to and fro with diuers doubtings; in which caſe the Papiſts muſt of neceſſitie be: yea, and all others that caſt not themſelues vpon the meritorious ſacrifices of Chriſt, and vpon that purgation which he hath purchaſed for vs,

Verſ. 19. When it haileth, it ſhall fall on the foreſt; and the Citie ſhall be ſet in the lower place.

WE told you before, that the Prophets were often wont to ſet forth the kingdome of Chriſt vnder ſhadowes; becauſe they borrowed ſimilitudes from an earthly kingdome, for otherwiſe (in reſpect of our dulnes) we could hardly be brought to comprehend this ineſtimable treaſure of all good things. The meaning is, that the Lord will remove far off from his people, all incombrances and diſcommodities, and will cauſe them to fall vpon others. Now becauſe in this world were ſubiect to diuers tempeſts and vexations, ſo as wee muſt indure raine, hail, windes, and whirle windes: he ſaith that God by his admirable prouidence will exempt vs from the harme we might receiue by theſe things, becauſe the violence thereof ſhall be driuen by him vpon thoſe of other places.

By foreſts, hee meanes vaſt and deſert places, where none inhabits. By this we are aduerſed, that being vnder the protection of Ieſus Chriſt, we are ſo freed from all dangers and inconueniences, that notwithstanding there are many hailes and tempeſts readie to fall vpon our heads: but the Lord is our deliuerer, who either turnes away theſe eminent perils, or frees them who are in danger to take hurt by them. And that hee might the better confirme that which he ſaid touching peace; he ſaith, that the Cities which ſtood in the plaine, ſhall be out of danger; for they were wont then to build their Cities vpon high places, the rather to prevent aſſaults. Now hee ſaith, that God will ſo defend his people, that they ſhall neede none of theſe vſuall munitions, becauſe the Cities ſhall bee ſafe, though they ſtand in the vallies; neither ſhall they receiue any hurt, albeit they lie open to the furie of the enemy. Why ſo? For the hand of the Lord will ſaue and keepe them. Wil we be ſecure then? Let vs not truſt in horſes, nor chariots, nor yet in defended Cities, leſt the Lord ſuddenly diſlodge vs: but ſeeing our good and heavenly Father vouchſaſeth to take care of our ſaluation, let the protection of ſo good a gardian ſuffice vs.

Verſ. 20. Blessed are ye that ſow vpon all waters; and drine thither the feet of the Ox and the Aſſe.

HE ſhewes how great the change ſhall be, when Chriſt begins to reigne. For hee ſaid before, that there ſhould be ſuch a deſolation, that thornes and bruiſes ſhould cover the face of the holy land, that ſtately houſes ſhould be laid on heaps, and the Cities and palaces utterly rased. All theſe things were to fall out when the Country ſhould be ſpoiled by continuall incuſions of the enemy: but now he ſaith they ſhall be bleſſed, becauſe God will giue them the abundance of all things. He adorneth and decketh this fruitfulneſſe with figuratiue ſpeeches, which may be expounded in plaine words; to wit; that they ſhall ſow in marriſh grounds, and ſhall ſeede their caſtill in thoſe places without feare.

By waters, ſome vnderſtand a fat and fruitful ſoile: but I take it otherwiſe, becauſe of the generallitie of the particule All: for in calling them all waters, it is as if hee had ſaid, that euen theſe places which were covered with waters, ſhould be fit for ſilage: ſo as they ſhall not neede to feare the ſpoiling of their ſeede. It is our manner alſo to drue Oxen, Aſſes, and other beaſts out of the fields that are ſown, leſt they ſhould crop off, or mar the corne. But he ſaith here, that it ſhall be ſo thicke and faire vpon the ground, that Oxen and Aſſes muſt be driven thither to eate the firſt growth, as they vſually doe when corne is too ranke.

Hee calles them bleſſed, according to the vſuall Hebrew phraſe, if becauſe their labour ſhould not be in vaine. If it be objected that there was neuer ſeene ſuch a fruitfulneſſe of the earth, vnder the kingdome of Chriſt: I confeſſe that in the times wherein God hath provided for his children in greateſt plenty, yet ſome tokens of his curſe might alwaies bee perceiued, wherein the whole race of mankind is wrapped, by reaſon of Adams reuolt. But becauſe the inheritance of this world was reſtored to the faithfull, by the meanes of Ieſus Chriſt, the Prophets vpon good reaſon affirme, that hee will renew the earth in ſuch wiſe, that it being purged againe from her filthineſſe, ſhee ſhall receiue her firſt beautie. Thoſe that reply, that this is not yet fulfilled, ought to take a view of themſelues, to ſee whether they be yet wholly cleaſed from all their ſinnes. And if they be as yet far off from that ſpirituall righteousneſſe, ſpoken of verſ. 16 let vs bee contented to feele this bleſſing, according to the meaſure of our regeneration; which ſhall neuer be perfected in vs, till hauing put off the infirmitie of the fleſh, wee be fully renewed after the image of God, in true holineſſe and righteousneſſe.

Obiecta
Anſ.

If thou ſee not the full accompliſhment of theſe promiſes, impute it onely to thy imperfect obedience: & be content to feele this bleſſing according to the meaſure of thy regeneration.

Many are the troubles of the righteous, but the Lord deliuereth them out of all: Plal. 34. 19.

THE XXXII. CHAPTER.

Verf. 1. Woe to thee that spoilest and wast not spoiled; and dost Wickedly, and thou shalt cease to spoile, thou shalt bee spoiled; When thou shalt make an end of doing Wickedly.

Whither this woe be pronounced against the Caldeans.

LF we expound this of the Caldeans, the scope of the place will very well beare it. For seeing in chap. 32. 15. hee promised freedome to the vanquished, it was high time for him now to direct his speech against the vanquishers. Not onely that, but the faithfull also stood in need to be confirmed in particular manner, to the end they might be drawne to beleue this propheticke, which was almost incredible. It was verie unlikely that such a Monarchie could suddenly be brought to nought; or that these poore prisoners, destitute of all hope, should by and by be set at libertie, to returne into their owne Country. The Iewes therefore you see, might very well haue fainted in waiting for any succour in such extremities, vnlesse the Prophet had prevented the same by this and the like instructions. He takes away the occasions then which might otherwise haue incited and prouoked them to dispaire, when the Caldeans led them captiue into Babylon; for they then saw no performance at all of these promises, but felt the cleane contrary.

Or, against the Assyrians.

Notwithstanding, because all are of opinion, that this is the beginning of a new sermon, and that these words are directed against Senacherib and his host. I also am drawn to admit, that the Prophet here threatens the Assyrians, with the chastisement of their vniust oppressions and cruelties by them committed, against their neighbours; that so comfort might bee given by meanes hereof, to the comfortlesse and oppressed. His meaning is then, that there shall be a wonderfull change when this flourishing estate of Ninieue shall be brought to ruin, albeit it seemed impregnable. Why so? Because the Caldeans should come against it, and should reuenge the cruelties which the Assyrians had exercised against so many Countries. And to the end his words might haue the greater efficacy, he addresseth his speech euen to the Assyrians, saying; Ho, thou which spoilest; as if he should say; thou hast now libertie to range abroad at thy pleasure, no man darre resist thee; but a day will come, wherein others shall make their pray vpon thee, as thou hast done vpon them.

The Caldeans sent to reuenge the cruelties committed by the Assyrians.

He speaks in the singular number, but it is by a noune collective; which is an vsuall phrase of speech. Others read it by an interrogation, Shalt thou not be spoiled? Thinkest thou thy violences shall escape vnpunished? No, they shall one day render thee like for like. But we may follow the vsuall interpretation, by which Isaiah amplifies the iniquitie of the enemy, who was so greedie after his pray, that he spared none: no not those innocents which neuer wronged him. Wherein we may behold a signe of extreme crueltie, I am very willing to receiue this exposition then; to wit, that in this first member, he describes the disposition of the Assyrians; shewing that they were mercilesse theues and robbers: and further enlargeth their crueltie, in regard they vexed and spoiled those which neuer hurt the: and all to this end, that when the Iewes should behold such wickednesses, they might first be brought to consider of Gods iustice therein; and in the second place, that hee would not suffer such barbaritie to escape vnpunished.

When thou shalt cease.] This is the second part of this verse, in which the Prophet shewes, that the Assyrians do now spoile, because the Lord lets them run riot: but the time of their restraint draws on, so as they shall haue no more power of doing hurt. If it were said, they shall cease to spoile, when they were able to spoile no longer; the sense would be too barré. Our Prophet therefore mounts higher; to wit, that the time will come, that they shall indeed cease to spoile, because the Lord will tame them, and take downe the pride of their power. Which is as much as if he had said; euen then, when thou shalt be at the highest. Hence we may learne, that tyrants haue their terme limited, which they shall not passe. They rob and spoile whilest they haue run the length of their chaine, but when they are come to the end of it, they shall be constrained to stay there, as at their last exploit. Let this consolation then cheere vp our hearts, when we see tyrants take their swinge, and doe furiously band themselves against the poore Church: for the Lord will calme their rage well enough; and by how much the more they haue exercised their crueltie; so much the more shall God heape his wrath vpon them. The Lord will cut them off in a moment; for hee will raise vp enemies against them, which shall sacke and spoile them forthwith, and shall reward them that which they haue done to others.

Tyrants haue their terme limited, which they shall not passe.

Aconsolation.

We are here also to note Gods prouidence in the change of kingdomes; for vnbeleeuers thinke that all things are huddled together by the hand of fortune: but it is our parts to looke higher; to wit, that the Lord rewards the wicked according to their wickednesse; so as in the end, they shall feel by the effects, that he will not suffer the wrongs to goe vnrecompenced, which they haue done to the innocents.

Gods prouidence seen in the change of kingdome.

The euents of things haue confirmed the truth of this propheticke: for soone after the Caldeans subdued Ninieue, who by this meanes

The euents of things haue confirmed the truth of this propheticke.

loſt their Monarchie; yea, and in few yeares it was rased and brought into obſolution, that the might loſe her name. Now in reſpect that Babylon which ſucceeded it, was no leſſe replenished with robberies; the Prophet doth rightly affirme that other robbers ſhall deſtray it, and the Monarchie being ſubdued, they ſhall pill and take to themſelves that which the Chaldeans had purloined from others.

Verſ. 2. O Lord, haue mercie vpon vs, We haue waited for thee: be thou, which waſt their arme in the morning, our help alſo in the time of trouble.

The Prophet adds this ſentence, to ſhew the faithfull whereunto they ſhould haue their refuge in ſuch diſtreſſes; yea, euen then when there ſeemed to be no hope of ſaluation: to wit, vnto prayers; beſeeching God that theſe promiſes might take effect when they ſhould be in the greateſt miſerie, and the enemies power at the higheſt ſo oppreſſe them. We haue neede to obſerue this order diligentlie, for the Prophet hath no ſooner propounded theſe promiſes vnto them, but he forthwith exhorts them vnto prayer. Yea, ſuddenlie breaking off his ſpeech, he comes abrupte as it were vnto inuocation: for he ſaw how hard a thing it was for the Jewes who were in ſuch miſerie to overcome that feare wherewith they were almoſt ouerwhelmed. It is not to be doubted but the Lord haſtens to performe the promiſes which he hath made to his children; yet for a while he deſerres to do it, that he might thereby exerciſe our patience. But if it come once to waiting, no conſtancie nor perſeuerance at all is to be found in vs, for our hearts are by and by danted and broken in ſunder. Is it not needfull then to haue our recourſe vnto prayers; for thereby are our ſpirits cheered and fortified, when we caſt our eye vpon the Lord, by whoſe only diſcretion we get our of all the agonies and anguiſhes which preſſe vs, yet let vs patientlie wait in aſſured hope for that which he hath promiſed: for our God is a faithfull God, he neither will, nor can deceiue vs.

Our Prophet further admoniſteth the Jewes not only to conſider in generall the iudgement of God againſt the Aſſyrians, but alſo to behold therein his fatherlie loue towards his choſen people: as if he ſhould ſay, the Aſſyrians ſhall be ſpoiled in deed, yet not ſo much to receiue the iuſt reward of their couetouſnes and crueltie: as that God thereby means to ſhew what care he hath for the ſaluation of his Church. Moreouer when he exhorts them to cry for mercie, therein he ſets forth our miſerie. Then, to the end the faithfull might encourage themſelves in ſeeking to obtaine fauor, they reſuſe that they waited vpon this God on whom they called. For in deed, our prayers are vaine and friuolous, vneſſe they be grounded on this principle, Let thy mercie o Lord be vpon vs (ſaith Dauid) as we haue truſted in thee. Pſal. 33. 22. For it were preſumption otherwiſe to preſſe into the preſence of God, if he gaue vs not entrance by his call: who as he for his part graciouslie inuites vs to come vnto him, ſo muſt we on the other ſide be ready to yeeld our ſelves obedient to his word as oft as we approach neere vnto him.

Next of all, patience muſt be ioined with faith, without which, we be vnworthie to be heard, becauſe we call not vpon God with confidence. Now faith only is the mother of prayer, as y Scripture often teſtifies in many places, without which what remains but hypocriſie, a vice moſt detestable before God about all others. Hence it alſo appears that Chriſtianitie is baniſhed out of the whole kingdome of Poperie: for if Gods choſeſt ſeruiſe conſiſt in prayer, and they know not what true prayer is (becauſe they will haue men continually to doubt, and accuſe the faith of the Saints of preſumption) how can their ſeruiſe be acceptable vnto God? Can that be a lawfull prayer which is made in doubting and without reſting aſſuredly vpon Gods promiſes? Thoſe great Rabbins which will be called Doctours of Diuinitie (forſooth) are they not more ſimple in this matter then little children? Certainly our children vnderſtand what prayer is better then they, and haue more godly affection. Wee may alſo learne from this text that faith is proued by afflictions, and the true triall of it conſiſts in a conſtant vndergoing of all dangers and aſſaults, and in reſting ſecurely vpon the word and promiſe of God. For thus we make it manifeſt that we haue truly beleued.

As touching that which followes, Thou which waſt their arme, &c. Others tranſlate, as if it were a continued prayer; Be thou our arme in the morning, and our help in the time of trouble. And whereas the faithfull ſpeake in the third perſon, they take it for a change much vſed among the Hebrewes. But I thinke the Prophet hath another meaning, that is, rather to ſet forth the ardent deſire which is conceiued from the conſideration of former benefits. And therefore he thinks theſe words arme of the morning a ſtille added; in which muſt be ſupplied, Thou which waſt, and ſo the faithfull let before them the fauours which God beſtowed vpon their fathers. As if he ſhould ſay, Lord, thou haſt heard our fathers prayers; and when they cried vnto thee thou gaueſt them help. Be thou now our ſuccor and ſaluation in our afflictions.

Arme and Saluation, differ in this; that arme is taken for the power which the Lord ſhewed in defending his Church before it was afflicted; and ſaluation, for the deliuerance thereof when ſhe ſeemed vtterlie waſted. He records the benefits then which the Lord had done to the fathers, that he might moue him to beſtow the like fauor vpon their children: as if he ſhould ſay, Lord, thou haſt heretofore turned away the enils which were reade ſo ſeaſe vpon thy Church; and by thy fauor ſhe flouriſhed and prospered: when ſhe was in trouble thou deliueredſt her: canſt thou now do leſſe for our ſaltes, ſeeing it is thy propriety to relieue thy ſeruants when all hope in men is paſt.

The particle alſo hath great force in it to confirme our faith, and to acertaine vs that

The promiſes begets faith, faith brings forth prayer. Pſal 50. 15. Patience muſt vnderſtop faith and prayer. Faith is proued by afflictions.

Papiſts know not what true prayer is.

Faith is proued by afflictions.

See Pſal. 22. 4-5.

Gods promiſes ſhould forthwith kindle in vs an ardent affection of prayers.

Deut. 7. 9.

God iudgeth the enemies of his church not only to recompence the wrongs and cruelties they haue done her into their own boſoms, but alſo to maniſeſt the care he hath of her ſaluation.

God, who alwaies continues like himselfe and neuer degenerates from his nature, being euer immutable, will deliuer vs also; for such a one the faithfull haue found him to be. Let vs remember therefore in all extremities how the Lord hath been helpfull vnto our fathers that trusted in his helpe, and hath deliuered them, that thence we may conclude, he will no more faile vs, then he hath done them.

Psal. 22. 4.

*Or, peoples.

Verf. 3. At the noise of the tumult the people fled: at thine exalting the nations were scattered.

Hee returnes now to the former doctrine; or rather continues it; hauing in the midst thereof placed a brieue exclamation. First, hee shewed that the Assyrians should be destroyed, albeit they then seemed out of danger. Now he calles forth the Iewes to be eyewitnesses of the same: for the multitudes of the enemies being in a maner infinit, euerie one quaked and thought them inuincible. Isaiah therefore sets before their eyes their fearfull ruin, and that no lesse then if it were already come to pass. He speaks in the plural number, calling them peoples, because the Monarchy of the Assyrians was compact of many nations, and their Campe was gathered out of many Countreies. But be it their numbers were so infinit. What then? Yet they shall miserably perish, saith our Prophet.

Some expound the exaltation, Manifestation; whereby God did notably shew his power; but I take it more simply; to wit, that the Lord, who seemed before to sleep (as it were) whilst the Caldeans spoiled and pillaged at their pleasure, shall notwithstanding suddenly awake, and come forth of his place. Neither is it to be doubted, but the enemy proudly derided this his patience, as if the God of Israel had been subdued and overcome; but in the end he rose vp, and being set in his throne, he reuenged himselfe vpon the wickednesse of his enemies to the full. There is here then a close opposition betweene this exalting, and that appearance of weaknesse which seemed to bee in the Lord for a time, whilst hee suffered his people to be spoiled and wasted.

By the voice of the tumult, some thinke the Lord would put his enemies to flight, onely with a noise: but I feare lest this interpretation should be more subtile then sound. I willingly take the word voice then, for the noise which should moue the Medes and Persians.

Verf. 4. And your spoile shall be gathered like the gathering of caterpillers: and he shall goe against him like the leaping of the grasshoppers.

HE speaks here of the Assyrians. Vnlesse many had rather referre it vnto the Iewes, and so take the word spoil, in the actiue signification; albeit the first sense agrees best. Now this change of persons giues great vehemencie to the propheticie, in that he so plainly aduanceth himselfe against such proud aduersaries, and doth as it were name them. Yet some doubt whether he speaks heere of the final destruction of this nation, or of that discomfiture in which the host of Sennacherib was destroyed before the walls of Ierusalem, by the hand of the Angell. All expositors almost haue followed this latter opinion, which notwithstanding, as I think, is too much constrained. For it seemes the Prophet meant to say somewhat more in the beginning of the Chapter, when he spake of the destruction of this people. Yea, as I haue touched a little before, this propheticie may be extended further off; so as it may comprehend also the Caldeans, which were the last enemies of the Iewish Church. But not to stand much vpon it, it appears sufficiently that the Prophet directs his speech against the Monarchy of the Ninuities.

Now hee compares this warlike people to caterpillars, because they should haue no power to resist, but shall tremble and be so overtaken with feare, that they shall be taken vp by troopes and heapes. The similitude is verie fit: and Nahum vseth it, Chap. 3. 15. although somewhat in a different sense. Wee know that this kind of vermin do much hurt, especially to trees; so as they may well be called the calamitie of the earth. But in regard they are void of defence, albeit they flie in troopes; we know that little children can easilie shake them downe, gather them vp, and kill them by heapes, as many as they meete withall. Our Prophet saith, that the like shall befall to these insatiable robbers: for albeit in that trade they had done much hurt a long time together, yet in the end they should bee easilie ruinated, because being faint and feeble hearted, they shall fall into the hands of their enemies, in such wise, that the riches which were hoorded vp in Ninie by theft, should bee caried into Babylon.

The other similitude of the grasshoppers is added, to shew that the Caldeans shall come vp leaping as it were to deuoure the Countrey. For as these little wormes eate vp all before them; so they flie without ceasing, and in leaping nimble vp and downe, they mar all the fruits of the earth: whereas others refer this to the Assyrians, as if the Prophet compared them to grasshoppers, because it was easie to scatter them one from another, it agrees not: for the Prophet sets the armie of grasshoppers in battel aray as it were, who by their leaping should ouerspread the earth: and very fitly opposeth them to the caterpillers, respecting herein as well the insatiable couetousnesse as the multitudes of the Assyrians and Caldeans.

Verf. 5. The Lord is exalted, for hee dwelleth on high: he hath filled Zion with iudgement and iustice.

ing on with the ſame argument which was handled before; to wit, that in the deſtruction of ſo famous a Monarchy, men ſhould know how deere and precious the ſafetie of the Church is vnto him, ſeeing for her ſake he will roote out Nimue the Queene of Cities, with her inhabitants alſo. Now this aduerſement is wonderfull neceſſarie: for hereby we perceiue, that God ſpares not the prophane & wicked; for in ſetting himſelfe againſt their rage, he mindes to let his elect ſee what tender care he hath ouer them.

Fiſt hee ſaith, the Lord is exalted on high: whereas on the contrary, the wicked thought to haue beaten him downe to the ground, in the deſtruction of his people. But to the end they ſhould not thinke God to be like vnto thoſe, who being overcome, reconer new ſtrength vnto them when things are in better plight (as often it falles out in the world, that ſuch win that at one time, which before they had loſt at another) he ſaith expreſly, ŷ God is exalted in the preſence of all, and that ſuch an high dignitie belongs vnto him, becauſe he dwels in the heauens. Whence it appeares, that he is neuer deſtroyed of his diuine right, howſeuer often times hee ſuffers his power to be hid; but when it ſeemes beſt vnto him, he will manifeſt his greatneſſe in the view of the whole world: for dwelling in heauen, as wee know, ſignifies an imperial ſoueraignty vnder which the whole world is ſubiected. Thus he ſhewes, not onely that God can eaſily overthrow all the pride of fleſh; but alſo concludes from the nature of God, that hee muſt needs ſhew forth his glory at the laſt, when the wicked fall to deſpiſing of him: for otherwiſe he ſhould renounce himſelfe.

Where hee ſaith, that Zion was filled with iudgement and iuſtice, it is another confirmation; to wit, that God will ſhew ſignes of his ſpecial fauour, when the Iewes ſhall be deliuered from the tyrannie of the Caldeans. And it was no leſſe then needfull, to ſee the author of ſo great a benefit before their eyes: for we ſee how peruerſly we darken his glorie by our ingratitude. To be filled with iudgement and iudgement, ſignifies, that God will liberally and abundantly ſhed abroad his grace in the reſtauration of his Church. Neither will the ſenſe be much impertinent, if we refer this to a right polittique order, when all things are juſtly and well managed: for without that, the Church ſhall neuer flouriſh, though all things elſe ſucceed according to our wiſh. We muſt meaſure our prosperous eſtate then by iudgement and iudgement rightly executed, and not by the ouerflowing of theſe corruptible things.

Verſ. 6. And there ſhall be ſtabilitie of thy times, ſtrength, ſaluation, wiſdome, and knowledge: for the feare of the Lord ſhall be his treaſure.

Hee promiſeth that the eſtate of the kingdom ſhall ſtill be happie and glorious vnder Hezechias, hauing reſpect principally to that woſull and miſerable ſcattering which was ſcene in Achaz his daies. For albeit the enemy was expelled, yet was there ſmall hope that the Iewes (being in ſuch extreme) ſhould haue recouered their fiſt condition. As touching the words, ſome tranſlate thus; There ſhall bee in thy times, uirtue, ſtrength, and ſaluation: as if the Prophet ſhould relate what felicitie the people ſhould inioy vnder this holy King: and they thinke that euery word contains in it ſo many benefits of God. Others take the word ſtabilitie, for fidelitic; as if the Prophet ſhould haue ſaid; that it ſhould bee in ſtead of ſaluation and ſtrength. Otherſome draw a ſenſe from hence a little differing; to wit, that ſtrength, ſaluation, and knowledge, ſhall bee ſtable vnder Hezechias. But when I ſcan the words of the Prophet conſiderately, I had rather make another diſtinction; to wit, that ſtabilitie, ſtrength, and ſaluation ſhall reigne in wiſdome and knowledge vnder Hezechias: and ſo, that which is by and by added, the feare of the Lord ſhall be the treaſure of this good King, will follow and agree well. For in time of peace, euery one deſires to be ſecured: yet how few are there that care to uſe the meanes to inioy ſo greata benefit? Nay, doe not the moſt part pamper themſelues as ſwine in the ſtie; ſo as whileſt blind couetouſneſſe drawes all the world after things earthly, few make any reckoning of that incomprehenſible light of the heavenly doctrine.

The Prophets meaning thinke is, that the Churches felicitie ſhall be ſtable, when uirtue and knowledge beares ſway therein, and that ſtrength ſhall long indure, when the knowledge of God is aduanced: thirdly, that eternal ſaluation ſhall dwell there; when men ſhall be taught rightly to know it. This is a verie excellent place: from whence we may learne, that ingratitude ſhuts out Gods bleſſings from vs: that is, when we forſake them to walow our ſelues in earthly and carnall deſires; alſo, that although all the benefits we could imagin or deſire, were giuen vnto vs, yet ſhall all turne to our ruine and deſtruction, vnleſſe they bee ſeaſoned with the ſalt of faith and knowledge.
