Wee may therefore hence conclude, that the Church hath no ſtrength, vnleſſe the knowledge of God preceede all other benefits, and that the then truly flouriſheth, whileſt ſhe willingly confeſſeth to hold all the graces ſhee hath of Gods free bountie. But where this light of the word is wanting, and the true knowledge of God is either dimmed, or put out, the greateſt proſperitie we can inioy, is worſe then all the miſeries the world can afford. I therefore refer ſtabilitie, ſtrength, and ſaluation, to one & the ſame thing; to wit, that the Church ſhall haue ſtabilitie, when blindneſſe and error being baniſhed, men ſhall begin to learne the knowledge of God.

By this wee ſee what Church there is amongſt the Papiffs, (a pompous and glorious one it is indeed in outward ſhew); but where is this knowledge? Therefore can the not be ſtable; neither is ſhe the Church of God. If the Lord then ſhew vs that fauour, that the light of faith may ſhine truly amongſt vs, other blessings no doubt shall easily flow vnto vs: and if it fall cut we be shaken with diuers stormes, yet God will vphold vs alwaies with his hand. Now when he saith, thy times, he speakes to Hezekias, not as to a priuat person, but as to the head of the people, vnder whom also the whole bodie is comprehended.

But seeing the kingdome of Hezekias was but a little shadow of Christ his kingdome as we haue touched before, these things therefore ought to be referred vnto Christ, in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge. We are also to note these titles which are vsed to set forth the commendation of Gods word, and the doctrine of the Gospell: S. Paul also doth the like, Coloss. 1.9. when he saith, Teaching in all knowledge and wisdom: for by this praise, he extols the dignitie of the Gospell. Whence we also gather, that where Iesus Christ is not truly knowne, there men are destitute of true wisdom, although they be expert in all other sciences, which without this are all but vanitie.

Morcouer it seemes the feare of God should be added for an exposition, that the Prophet might the better manifest that the knowledge whereof he spake was the gouernesse of pietie, being neither idle nor vaine, but penetrating with efficacie into our hearts to conforme vs to the feare of God. See therefore why this feare is elsewhere called knowledge, Prou. 1.9. and 9. 10. yea, the beginning of it, that is to say, the summe and principall part of wisdom. And those deceue themselves which take the word beginning for the first rudimets or elements, seeing Saomon means the beginning, and the end: for as men are fooles vntill they haue submitted themselves vnto the word of God, so the perfection of wisdom flows from teachableness, or the obedience of faith. The feare of God then is called his treasure, because without it all prosperitie is but miserie: whence it yet further appears that all the parts of a prosperous life consists in the knowledge of God, which we attaine by faith.

Also vnder the person of this king he shews that it is an inestimable treasure to serue God in such deuotion and humilitie as is meete: and further he esteemes all them miserable and forlorne people which are void of this feare of God. On the contrarie, blessed and happie are all those which feare him, albeit of the world they be iudged the most miserable of all others. But what feare speaks he of here? Euen of that which containes in it true obedience, and a reformation of our minds and affections. For the wicked haue a feare of God, but they feare him as malefactors doe their Iudge. Such a feare deserues no such praise, because it proceeds not from the true knowledge of God, nor from a readie desire to serue him. It therefore is directlie contrarie to that wisdom whereof our Prophet speaks, who hath so applied these things vnto Hezekias, that in the meane while they also appertaine to the whole bodie of the people, as we haue said before. Whence we gather, that they haue relation vnto the people as well as the king: but much more vnto Christ, who was filled with the Spirit of the feare of the Lord (as we haue seene in the 11. Chapter) to make vs partakers with him of y^e same grace.

Verf. 7. Behold, their messengers shall crie Without, and the Ambassadors of peace shall weepe bitterlie.

8. The paths are wast: the wayfaring man ceaseth: he hath broken the Covenant: he hath condemned the Cities: he regardeth no man.

IT is not very certaine whether Isaiah here mentions the perplexitie and danger in which the Iewes were, the rather to set forth the greatnes of their deluerance: or, whether he foretels the calamitie which was to come, that the faithfull should not faint vnderneath it. For mine owne part, I thinke this is not to be referred to the historie of that which already happened: for in regard, that sharp and sore temptations were at hand, it was necessarie that the faithfull should be fortified to wait patientlie for the help of God euen then whē things should be growne desperate. Howsoeuer it be, it is a woull and lamentable description of the wast of the Church; that in these dangers the faithfull might hold fast their confidence: secondly, that seeing themselves deliuered, they might acknowledge they were no other way rid from them but by the wonderfull power of God.

The signe of a desperate estate is noted out, when he saith, that the Ambassadors which were sent to appease this tyrant, could obtaine no truce, for which cause they returned with bitter sorrow and teares, not being able to hide the same in their journey, but were willing to manifest to others what was in their hearts, in regard they were in such a wretched estate. No doubt but Sennacherib with proud and scornfull reproaches refused the conditions of peace which were offered him, so as the Ambassadors were constrained openly to lament and crie, as hauing forgotten the dignitie of their persons, and letted not to publish the answer which this tyrant gaue them, euen before they returned to the King their master to giue an account of their Ambassage. Others by the Ambassadors of peace, vnderstand those which were wont to proclaime peace: but this interpretation is vnapt, and as I thinke, too farre fetched. By the Ambassadors of peace, I vnderstand those which were sent to appease Senacherib, and to redeeme peace with any conditions.

In the next verse he addes, that the waies shall be so stopped vp that there shall be no commer or goers, as it fallles out when open warres are proclaimed. Now it seemes that the Prophet brings in the Ambassadors, telling how it shall not be lawfull for them to passe to nor fro any more, the passages shall be so dangerous. As touching that which followes, he hath broken the Covenant, some expound it, as if the hypocrits complained that God kept not his promise. But if this be referred ferred vnto God, ſuch a complaint may be attributed not onely to the hypocrits, but to the faithfull alſo, who ſometimes expoſtulate the matter on this wiſe with the Lord: but I like not this ſenſe. And therefore I rather thinke the Prophet continues to ſet forth the crueltie and vnappeaceable furie of Sennacherib, who diſloyally brake the conuenant which he made before with Herzechias. For albeit he promiſed truce; yet as ſoone as any occaſion offered it ſelfe to inuade Iudea, he falſified his faith, and began warre againe. Thereunto appettaines that which is in the end of the verſe, he contemned the Cities, and regarded no mans perſon: wherein he ſhewes, that the crueltie of this tyrant was ſuch, that hee could not be withheld, neither by feare, nor ſhame.

Verſ. 9. The earth mourneth and fainteth: Lebanon is aſhamed, and heauen downe: Sharon is like a Wilderneſſe, and Baſhan is ſhaken and Carmell.

10. Now will I riſe, ſaith the Lord, now will I bee exalted, now will I liſt vp myſelfe.

HE here more fully expreſſeth after what manner they ſhould ſee the eſtate of Iudea miſerably diſtreſſed, yet ſo, that their faith in the end ſhould breake forth as out of a bottomleſſe gulfe. He alſo names the places particularly, to wit, Lebanon, Baſhan, and Carmell, which are far diſtant one from another, being as it were the borders of the holy land: all which is to ſhew, that no corner ſhall be ſpared, or reſt in ſaferie. And in the deſcription of this delolation, hee attributes to euery ſeueral place, that which agreed with the ſituation of it; as to Lebanon, ſhame and confulion: becauſe glory and beautie are attributed vnto it in other places, in regard it was replenished and adorned with great and goodly trees. As touching Sharon, becauſe it was a plaine and fertile ſoile, he ſaith, it ſhall be like a wilderneſſe. That Baſhan and Carmell is ſhaken, becauſe there grew abundance of fruits. Thus he alludes to the nature of theſe places, and deſcribes the miſerie and calamitie which ſhould befall the ſame, that hee might the better amplifie and ſet forth the mercy and goodneſſe of God, which ſhould be the cauſe of their deliuerance, albeit for the preſent, they ſaw themſelues as good as forlorne. For here was cauſe to behold the immediat hand of God. Vnleſſe any had rather ſay, that the Prophet recites a thing already done, to ſtir the people vp to thankſgiving.

Verſe 10.

Now I will riſe] The particle now, is of great weight: alſo this double repetition, I will be exalted, I will riſe: for we muſt note the time to which this is to be referred; to wit, euen to that in which the Church in mans iudgement was brought to nought: for then will it be ſoone enough for God to yeeld her ſuccour. There is here therefore a compariſon of things contrary: for hee ſets

the horrible calamities before the faithfull, which ſhould oppreſſe & eaſily ouerwhelme them, had they not been fortified with ſome conſolation. As if he ſhould ſay; The Lord will indeed ſuffer you to be brought to the extremitie; but when you ſhall lie as it were at the laſt gaspe, and in vaine ſhall haue proued all waies to diſpatch your ſelues thereout, himſelfe will riſe for your deliuerance. For it is of neceſſitie that wee be thus afflicted and preſſed to the vnoſſ; to the end wee may know God to be the onely author of our ſaluation,

The word now therefore ſignifies a time of extreme miſerie. A man would thinke this to be a ſtrange kind of dealing in the Lord: but the anſwere is at hand; God thus deſers his ſuccour, becauſe it is good, firſt that the patience of the faithfull ſhould be exerciſed: ſecondly, that their faith ſhould be tried; thirdly, their fleſh tamed: fourthly, that they might be the better ſtirred vp to ſeruencie in prayers: fifthly, that they might be raiſed vp in the hope of the life to come. And therefore this blocke is laid in our way, leſt they ſhould prevent the time which the Lord allotted out vnto them.

Afflictions exerciſeth our patience, tries our faith, tames the fleſh, quickens prayer, and raiſeth vp in vs the hope of the life to come.

The repetition is very weightie, and is added for the greater confirmation of the matter: for when things ſtand perplexed, wee thinke our ſelues vndone; wheteas we ſhould hope about hope, becauſe then is the time when the Lord vſeth chiefly to manifeſt his power. For this cauſe he exhorts the faithfull to be of good courage, in ſetting before them theſe commendations of his glorious power; that none neede to feare, but valiantly to buckle with the pride of their enemies.

Verſ. 11. Yee ſhall conceiue chaſſe, and bring forth ſtubble: the fire of your breath ſhall deuoure you.

12. And the people ſhall bee as the burning of lime: and as the thornes cut vp ſhall they be burnt in the fire.

NOW hee turnes his ſpeech againſt the Enemies of the Church, which vaineſie and fooliſhly exalt themſelues: for when God ſhould once begin in wonderfull manner to vtter forth his power, they ſhould then haue trial of the vanitie of their enterpriſes, and ſhould be able to bring nothing to paſſe, although by great troops they aſſembled themſelues together, to put their plots in execution. For the Lord ſcornes their rage, in regard they imagined they were Lords of the world; whereas he in a moment can cut them off, notwithstanding all their preparations. Now it is an vſual manner of ſpeech in Scripture, to call mens deliberations and enterpriſes conceptions. The ſimilitude is taken from women with child. And therefore it is ſaid, that men conceiue & bring forth, when they imagin and put ſome wicked thing in execution: but our Prophet tells them, that ſuch conceptions ſhall turne to nothing, and that the birch also shall vanish into smoke, so as they shall not prosper in any thing which they take in hand. What neede we then to feare all these goodly and gay shewes which our enemies make? For say, that God suffers them for a tyme to consult, to imagin, and rage against vs; yet in the end he wil scatter all that they haue rashly, and proudly done, as chaffe before the winde. Let vs also know that this which Isaiah hath prophesied against Senacherib, doth likewise appertaine to all the enemies of the Church and faithfull people.

Where he deuouneeth that they shall be deuoured by the fire of their owne breath, or spirit. Some are wont to expound it, Your spirit is like a fire which shall consume you: but this similitude is both vnapt and absurd. The true exposition is cleare enough, The fire which your breath hath kindled, shall deuoure you: for we are wont to kindle the fire by blowing of it. He teacheth then that the fire which the wicked haue kindled by their wicked deuices, shall turne to their ruine, because they shall be consumed by them.

Now this sentence is the same which the Scripture so often and so diuersly repeates, as, They shall fall into the pit which they haue digged: In the nets which they haue laid are their owne feet taken, Psa. 7. 15. Their sword which they haue drawne shall pierce their owne bowels, and their bow shall be broken, Psa. 37. 15. The Prophet shewes then that this wretched tyrant (which had destroyed all Iudea, and laid siege with great force against Ierusalem) as likewise the rest of y^e Churches enemies, should draw ruine vpon their owne heads, and in the end vtterly perishe. In a word, the fire which themselves had kindled should be the only meanes to consume them.

Afterwards he compares them to the burning of lime, in regard y^e their flintines should be mollified, euen as the fire desolues the stones, so that they should be brought to pouder and dust vey easilie. Questionles the wicked rush themselves vpon their owne destruction by their owne headines, so greedie they are to doe hurt. The similitude of shornes is no lesse proper, for albeit they wound the shrewdly which touch them, yet there is no wood that burnes so violentlie, or is sooner consumed. The like is to be seene in lime, for the fire softens and desolues it, notwithstanding it be neuer so hard at the first. This he saith shall befall the Caldeans, because the Lord shall cut them off in an instant, albeit they were then feared of all: and that their consumption should be brought to passe, when there was no appearance thereof at all. As oft then as wee see the enemies of the Church heape vp treasures, and gather men and munition together to bring vs to wrack, and to put all the world in an hurlyburly, let vs assure our selues they are kindling the fire in which themselves shall miserable be consumed.

We know this was fulfilled in Senacherib, for time was the best expositor of the truth of these prophesies, how incredible soeuer they seemed then. Let vs hope then against hope that the same wil befall those that tread in the steps of this tyrant, and by this and infinite other examples let vs foruise our selues and others in our miseries and calamities, out of which doubtlesse we shall be deliuered, and shall behold the horrible vengeance which shall fall vpon our enemies.

Verf. 13. Heare, ye that are farre off, what I haue done: and ye that are neere know my power.

I*saiah* makes a Preface here, as one minding to speake something of great importance: for he calles for auisance of his hearers, which men are wont to doe when any excellent or matter worthie of note is to be propounded. He speakes to them that were neere, which should be eie-witneses as it were of this spectacle: also he calles those farre off, which should heare of it by report. As if he should say, Such shall be the power of God, that it shall not only be manifested to some neere bordering nations, but also to those that are vey farre remote from them. His meaning is then, that God will make his worke knowne by some notable and speciall signe of his presence. Why so? Because the wicked which before quietlie reposed themselves in safetie as being exempt out of all danger, should now on the sudden be surprized with feares and terrors.

Verf. 14. The sinners in Zion are afraid: a feare is come vpon the hypocrits: Who among vs shall dwell with the deuouring fire: Who among vs shall dwell with the euerlasting burning.

B*ut* some might replie, that there is no such great matter here to vse so solcme a Preface, as to summon all the world to hearken, was it a thing of so great importance that the wicked should be affrighted? I answer, If all be well considered it will be found no small testimonie of Gods power to awaken sinners out of their drouzines, and to make them (will they nill they) feele that God is their Iudge, but then especiallie, when they haue couered their contempt of God vnder the maske of hypocrisis. For albeit it is a matter of great difficultie to awaken y^e prophane ones, when their hearts are indurate: yet the obstinacie of hypocrits farre exceeds theirs, who thinke God much beholding vnto the. They are so bewitched then we see, that they contemne all threatnings, and scorne the iudgements of God, and with their slouts & mocks they reiect all the prophesies, so as it is a miracle to overcome one of them who so obstinately resist. Thinke therefore that it is not without cause that our Prophet is so sharp in rebuking of them. For doubtlesse he gales the bastard Iewes by mentioning Zion: who shrouding themselves vnder the shadow of the Temple, thought themselves secure in so inuisible a fortresse, that no harme could befall them. And truly, there are none more proud or hautie then they (as hath bin said) which glorie so much in the name of God, and in the titles of the Church.

See Chap. 30. 34.

Whatsoever preparations the enemies of the Church make to consume her, is but the kindling and blowing of the fire which in the end shall consume themselves.

The

The word Manſiphich, is translated Hypocrits; but it may also bee generally taken for traytors and reuolters. Seeing they were so wicked then, as to mocke at God himselfe, and his true Prophets, he denounceth, they shall feele him to be a sharp and seuerer iudge, that so they might cease to take pleasure in their subtilties.

He addes a confession, which hath an appearance of humility; the better to shew, that such hypocrits as doe not willingly obey the word of the Lord, shall in the end feele by experience (the mistis of fooles) how terrible Gods iudgements are. When laughter shall be turned into gnashing of teeth, then they shall begin to confesse, that all their force was nought else but straw and stubble. Now for the wordes: some translate; Who shall dwell for vs? others; Who among vs shall dwell? If we simply reade it, For vs; this will bee the sense; who dare oppose himselfe against the fire? or, Will put himselfe between it and vs, that the flame thereof touch vs not? The other interpretations will beare the same sense; but the expositors differs in this, that some refer it to the King of Assyria; and others, vnto God: which latter, I rather receiue, as I haue said alreadie. For albeit the Assyrian was as a fire that burnt vp the country by his heate; yet our Prophet meant to expresse a more terrible thing then it; to wit, that inward torment and vexation of minde, wherewith the wicked are racked, the stings of conscience which cannot be auoided, and that vnquencheable fire of offences which surmounts all torments. So then it is iustice with God to deale with sinners as they deale with him. And therefore the Lord is called (in respect of them) a denouring fire, by Moses, Deut. 4.24. For the Prophets (as hath been often said) borrow their phrases from him: and the Apostle in Heb. 12. 26. doth the like.

The Prophet himselfe confirms this exposition, shewing the cause of this feare: for some might object, that God was too seuerer to terrifie men thus about measure. Indeed he is wont to shew himselfe louing and gracious to the faithfull; but therewithall seuerer and terrible to the wicked. Some thinke that the Prophet meant to conuince all men of sinne, that hauing scattered all trust of merit (into the aire) they might with all reuerence and humilitie, flee vnto Gods free grace by true repentance. As if he should say; None can stand before Gods iudgement seat, vnlesse he be perfectly iust: and therefore that all consequently are accused. But he rather speaks in the person, and according to their meaning, who before scorned all threatnings: and so he now brings them in trembling and asking, who shall dare to present himselfe before the face of God? For this dolorous complaint, is a signe of that terror which he spake of erewhile: where being conuincid of their weaknesse, their distresse extorted forth these words; Who is able to abide the Lords presence? Now because they ceased not to exalt themselves against God, notwithstanding these words were drawne from them against the haire, as we say: therefore the Prophet, that he might prevent their wicked replies, answers on Gods behalfe, that he is not terrible and fearfull to men naturally; but it falls out so by their owne default, in regard themselves are affrighted with the sense of their owne guiltinesse; so as God suffers not their consciences to be at any quiet.

Verſ. 15. Hee that walketh in iustice, and speaketh righteous things, refusing game of oppression, shaking his hands from taking of gifts, stopping his eares from bearing of blood, and shutting his eyes from seeing euill.

Now he expresseth that more fully which we touched before; to wit, y (these hypocrits) had no cause to accuse God of ouer-great rigor, because themselves by prouoking him to displeasure, did thereby put his fauour far away from them. For hee shewes that God agrees with men well enough, if they will tone and follow iustice; if they giue themselves to equitie; if they keepe their fingers cleane from brakes, and walke in uprightnesse with their neighbours; but being infected with all maner of corruptions, and giuen to malice, slander, couetousnesse, extortion, and the like sinnes, must not the Lord astonish such with feares, and shew himselfe terrible vnto them? In a word, the Prophets meaning is to stop the mouthes of the wicked scoffers, that so they might cease to accuse God of cruelty, in bringing destruction vpon them, seeing the whole cause thereof was in themselves. They make many turnings to escape Gods iudgement; but the Prophet affirms, that hee is alwaies good to those which honour him. And albeit Moses in this sense calles him a consuming fire, Deut. 9.3. lest his maiestie and power should be contemned; yet whosoeuer hee be that shall draw neere vnto him with a true desire to please him, he shall feele by the effects, that there is nothing more sweete and amiable then his presence. At such time then as God causeth the light of his countenance to shine vpon the faithfull, they haue peace with him in a good conscience: whence it follows, that hee is not terrible of his owne nature, but we, (we) by our peruersitie prouoke him to be such a one vnto vs.

Now this is specially directed to the hypocrits, who cover their villanies and secreet mischiefs vnder the cloke of holinesse; and thus abuse the name of the Lord to sin the more freely. But our Prophet setting downe a definition of iustice, by examples, doth thereby more cleerly and plainly rebuke their vngodlinesse. And mentions some principall actions touching the conuerſation of men, whereby we may easily take triall of our godlinesse. For he sets before vs the duties of the second Table (as he hath done often alreadie) which is the best way to discouer who indeed is a religious man. For as gold is tried by the fire, so by a mans ordinarie carriage of himselfe, may you find how he is affected in the seruice of God. The mutuall benefits which wee doe one to another, will manifest what pietie is in the heart.

By the word to uualke, this similitude of the way, so familiar in Scripture, is to be vnderstood, when it speaks of the Christian course, or of a continual perseverance: Psal. 119. 1. 5. and 112. By iuſtice, he means not an exact obseruation of the Law; but that equitie which is required in the second Table: but wee will not stand to discusse the word curiously. Afterwards he descends to the principall parts of true vprightnesse: and because the tongue is the chiefe instrument whereby man gouernes his actions, he puts that in the second degree after iustice. For he that withholds it from euill speaking and flander, and abstains from lying, peritury, and flatterings, whereby he might any way offend his neighbour; such a one is said to ſpeake righteous shings.

The other kind is comprised vnder these words, and deſpiſeth againe, &c. He might well haue said in a word; Hee which deſpiſeth monie; but he spake plainly, and therein applied himselfe to their rudenesse: for he that deſires gaine, polluteth and veth all dishonest and indirec̄t meanes to enrich himselfe, hee wil not ſtucke to vexe and oppresse the poore and needie; neither cares he, so he may get mony, whether it come in by right or wrong. What is to be said of them then which haue their hands alwaies open and stretched forth to take: nay, which with talents grapple whatsoever comes to net. And not content therewith, will prostitute themſelues vnto gaine, as shamelesse harlots will doe, to trap those that are deſtitute of wiſdome. Is it any wonder if God thunder against such, to roote them out wholly?

Laſtly, he requires that some ſigne and teſtimonie of integritie may also be ſeene euen in the eares. By blood, he meanes murders and manſlaughters; but he therewithall comprehends all ſorts of wicked conſpiracies, that the eates may neither be open to hearken, nor yet to giue any conſent thereunto. For hee meanes not that wee ſhould ſhut our eares against the cries of the poore, when they are wronged and oppreſſed; but that we ſhould detest all ſuch counſels, by which the wicked goe about to deſtroy innocents; that wee ſhould not ſo much as lend our eares to ſuch, neither in any wiſe to be carried away by their ſolicitations vnto euill. Laſtly, hee requires the ſame purtie in the eies. To conclude, he teacheth vs to reſtaine all our ſenſes, in ſuch wiſe, that we giue no occaſion to the wicked to thinke we doe in any ſort aproue of their doing; euen as wee meane to eſcape Gods vengeance & wrath, of which he ſpake before.

Verſ. 16. He ſhall dwell on high, his defence ſhall be the munitions of rockes: bread ſhall be giuen him, and his waters ſhall be ſure.

TO the end the Lewes might know that God had iuſtly chaſtiſed them, and that they might endeavour to make their peace with him, the Prophet affirms, that this bleſſing is ready to fall vpon the iuſt and vpright, ſuch as hee deſcribed them to bee in the former verſe: for they were not to feare this deuouring fire of which hee ſpake, in regard they were out of all danger thereof.

They ſhall dwell on high in a ſafe place. The wicked indeede were to feare; for it ſhould ſurely deuoure froward ſpeakers, oppreſſors, deceiuers, and ſuch as applied their hands, tongues, eares, and eies, to fraud and vnrightheouſneſſe. As if he ſhould ſay; I would not haue you to wonder if he be ſeuere towards them, and yet he is not ſo much their Iudge, as the guiltineſſe of their owne euill conſcience, who like an executioner, is ſtill at their elbow, miſerably to torment them. The only way therefore to be ſeareleſſe in Gods preſence, is willinglie to keepe our ſelues in his feare.

By high places, hee meanes thoſe that are moſt ſafe and free from all danger: in a word, ſuch as the enemy is not able to inuade by any force: which he ſufficiently confirms in the next words, by placing the iuſt in the rockes. To the ſure dwelling, hee adds abundance of outward bleſſings: as if hee ſhould ſay; Nothing ſhall be wanting to thoſe which ſerue God in ſinceritie & vprightneſſe. Why ſo? Because hee will not onely ſaue them free from hurt, but will alſo furniſh them to the full, with whatſoever good things they ſhall ſtand in neede of in their ſhort pilgrimage. For by bread and water, hee meanes all things neceſſary for the ſuſtentation of this preſent life.

Next, he promiſeth ſure waters: (for albeit the wicked haue abundance for a time, yet their waters ſaile in the end, as God threaten in the law.) Now the like may be ſaid touching the word bread, becauſe it is an epithete belonging as well to the one as to the other: and it is as much as if he had ſaid; that all the faithfull ſhall be ſure of food. For the lions often lacke and want their pray; but thoſe that feare the Lord, ſhall want nothing that is good: Psal. 34. For as in his owne nature hee is bountifull, ſo is he neuer weary of giuing, becauſe his goods diminiſh not by his great liberalitie.

Now becauſe the life of man is ſubiect to ſundry perils; and that it ſufficieth not to haue prouiſion and plenty of foode onely to ſuſtaine vs, vnleſſe the Lord alſo keepe and defend his by his almighty power; therefore we are diligently to obſerue what was ſaid before; to wit, that the faithfull are lodged in a ſafe place. For the Lord performs the office of a faithfull ſhepherd, who is not onely careful to prouide food for his ſheepe, but alſo preſerues them from the rage of the eues and rauening wolues. To be ſhort, he holds them vnder his ſauegard, that no aduerſitie might annoy them. Are our enemies buſie then at any time to moleſt vs? Let vs thinke it a juſt iudgement of God vpon vs for our finnes. Hath hee reiected vs? It is becauſe wee haue deſerued it. And thus we muſt impute all the euill which oppreſſe vs vnto our finnes, as the

the onely cauſe thereof. Yet let not thoſe who haue kept faith and a good conſcience, think that God hath forſaken them: but to the laſt breath, let them reſt ſecurely vpon theſe promiſes which the Lord hath here made; to wit, that he will be a ſure rocke of defence vnto them. I grant that none can be ſo pure or fully perfect, that he ſhould be able to beare the preſence of God: for if he marke our iniquities, who ſhall ſtand? as ſaith the Pſalmiſt; All of vs then haue need of a mediator, by whoſe interceſſion our ſinnes may be pardoned. Which doctrine it was not our Prophets meaning to reiect, which is plentifully diſperſed thorowout the whole Scriptures: but his drift here was, to beat downe the wicked, who are alwaies gaulled & purſued with the ſting of an euill conſcience. Which we are diligently to obſerue againſt our popiſh Doctors, who abuſe theſe and the like places, where workes are comended, that they might abolith the righteousneſſe of faith; as if the remiſſion of ſinnes, which wee receiue by the benefit of Chriffs ſacrifice, were to be excluded.

Verſ. 17. Theſe eyes ſhall ſee the king in his glory: they ſhall behold the land a far off.

Altho' the Prophet changeth the perſon, yet this verſe ought to be ioined to the former; becauſe he ſpeakes to the true ſeruants of God, & promiſeth them yet another benefit, to wit, that they ſhall ſee the King in his glory. Such a promiſe was very neceſſarie to ſuſtaine the hearts of the faithfull, when things were thus confuſed and deſperate in the land of Iudea. For when Ieruſalem was beſieged, the King was ſhut vp within the Citie, inuironed with diſloyall counſellers, the people inconstant and mutinous, euery one expected preſent ruine, and as it ſeemed, no hope of a better eſtate was left. But the kingly power in Dauid's race, was a ſingular pledge of Gods fauour towards them. Iſaiab then prevents this danger as you ſee. The King for a time, ſaith he, will ſeeme vile and contemptuous, yet ſhall thine eyes ſee him eſtablished in his former maiestie and dignitie.

First then let vs obſerue heere, that God beſtows an ineſtimable fauor vpon vs, when the Commonwealthe inioyes peace, and when he ſends vs good Princes, which gouernes all things faithfully and ſincerely; for then God rules ouer vs by their hand. This benefit therefore being no ſmall one, our Prophet was not forgetfull to mention it, in promiſing ſo happy an eſtate to the ſeruants of God.

But herewithall we muſt obſerue, that this kingdome was a figure of the kingdome of Chriſt whom Herzechias represented: for the fruit of this promiſe would bee of no great value, vnleſſe we come to him, vnto whom all theſe things are to be referred. And leſt any ſhould take mee as a forger of allegories, which I profeſſe to ſee, let ſuch a one know, that I expound not this ſimply of Chriſt. But in as much as the ſtedfaſtneſſe of this vading kingdome is no where elſe to be found, but in him, the figure, which Herzechias here, lead vs to Chriſt as by the hand. Iſaiab then promiſeth here the reſtauration of the Church, in which, two members are to be conſidered. Firſt, that the King ſhall appear in his beautie: ſecondly, that the boundes of the kingdome ſhould be enlarged. Now we know Chriſt is ſo diſfigured in outward appearance, that the world deſpiſeth him; becauſe nothing is to be ſeene in him that is faire or pleaſant; but at the laſt, his maieſtie, his magnificence, and beautie ſhall appear. His kingdome ſhall flouriſh, and ſpread it ſelfe far and wide, albeit the wicked now are Lords of all, and doe ſo afflict the ſeruants of God, that they can ſcarcelly inioy one foote of ground in peace and ſafety; yet with firme hope muſt we wait and looke for our King in his glory, who at length will ſit him downe in his glorious and beautifull throne, and will enrich his people with great honours.

Verſ. 18. Thine heart ſhall meditate feare: where is the Scribe? Where is the receiuer? Where is hee that counted the towers?

The faithfull are againe aduertised of the calamities which were at hand, leſt being ouertaken therewith vnawares, they might happily fall vnder the burthen. Some tranſlate the verbe to meditate, in the preterperfecte: others, in the future tence; becauſe this change of time is much vſed among the Hebrewes. For mine owne part, I willingly retaine the future; ſhall meditate: which the Prophet alſo in his owne language doth: for as I take it, hee rather warnes the people of the euils which were neere, then relates what they had ſuffered before. Now when he asks, where is the ſcribe? he liuely beates into their eares, the voice of them who being affrighted, would cry on this manner, where is the ſcribe? where is the receiuer? the rather to touch them to the quicke.

If any thinke it to be a broken ſentence, becauſe hauing ſpoken in the former verſe of the beautie of the King, he now propheciethe terrors. I make no queſtion but the Prophet by way of compariſon, amplifies the fauour of God; to wit, that the faithfull being deliuered, might the better eſteeme of their condition. For men are naturally forgetfull and peruerſe, when they ſhould ſet themſelues to publiſh Gods praifes: and being once eſcaped, they let ſlip the acknowledgement of the great dangers fro which they were freed. It was therefore needfull to ſet before them the diſtreſſes vnder which they ſhould be held, that they might the better apprehend the greatnes of the benefit which God ſhewed them. There is yet another reaſon why this people were to be aduertised touching this feare; namely, hauing ſpoken before touching the beautie of their King, hee would not haue them ſo relie vpon it, as to promiſe vnto themſelues ſuch tranquillitie, as ſhould be exempt from all troubles; but rather to be prepared to vndergo all sorts of greouances and vexations. And yet, that they should know also that God cared for the kingdom of Iudah, and in his good time would deliuer them out of the hands of those tyrants which held them tributaries and besieged them.

The estate which the Prophet heere describes is very miserable: for is it not a pitifull thing to see a people of a free condition so pressed vnder such a barbarous tyrannie, that all their goods must come to be praised, their houses, possessions, families, & seruants registered? Many of our times which haue not bin acquainted with these things, haue yet some little taste how irksome this seruitude is, when their goods are praised to the uttermost mite: and not onely their yeerely rents which are certaine, but also the hope of future gaine: and not mony and possessions alone, but their names also are taken. Such deuices there are to impose new tributes, not vpon viands onely, but euen vpon the smallest things: so that tyrants rake to themselves a great part of that, which the poore people can hardly beare: yet all these, and infinite other calamities will nothing abate the pride, excesse, and rebellion of men. What will they be thinke you, being freed from these taxes? will they not easilie forget all the euils past, and the fauour of God also, and bee worse then euer they were before, in running into all leaud and wicked behauiour.

It is not without cause then that the Prophet laies these things thus before his people, lest after their deliquence they should range after their lusts. As if hee should say; What a shame were that? nay, rather acknowledge the goodnesse of God, who hath dealt so mercifully with you, and cleaue vnto him with your whole hearts. Some haue fallie imagined, that Saint Paul alledgeth this place in 1. Cor. 1. 20. But so he should mistake the Prophets meaning, and should apply these words to a wrong sense. The cause of the error grew from the word Scribe, which is not taken here for a teacher. For Isaiab calles him a Scribe in this place, who tooke the names of men and their families, and inuentories of their possessions and houses. To be short, hee which kept the register of all the taxes and tributes.

By the poiser, he means him which receiued the imposts, for hee weighed the monies which were paid in: such as are our receiuers and treasurers at this day. He adds yet a third fort, which was the most intollerable of all; to wit, hee that counted the towers or chiefe houses; for they made search, and viewed euery house, to know which were the richest, that they might get the more pence out of it. Tyrants haue such at command, who like blood-hounds, haue skill to hunt and snell out fat purses; that so, besides the ordinary taxes they may raise an extraordinary impost. No doubt but the sight of such exactors was greuous to the poore people, and not without cause: for they neuer left them, till they had sucked their blood to the verie marrow. If any by this word had rather vnderstand the officers of the King himselfe, who had the charge to pull downe the houses adioyning to the walles; I hinder him not for following his opinion. I rather thinke it likely that the Prophet speaks of the exactors, which the conquerours set ouer them, whom they had vanquished, that they might the more securely hold their own, as they say.

Verf. 19. Thou shalt not see a fierce people, a people of a darke speech, that thou canst not perceiue, and of a stammering tongue, that thou canst not vnderstand.

Some translate the word Noan, Strong; Others, Impudently: but I verily thinke he meant to set forth the crueltie of the Assyrians, which he presently declares, saying; There is no communication to be had with them, for they speake a strange language, which thou canst not perceiue. For there is nothing that moues men more to mercy, then an interchangeable speech, by which one may take knowledge of anothers misery. But if this be wanting, what is left to cause an hard heart to relent? Alas, they know not what thou saiest, and therefore thou canst looke for no more compassion from them: by thy intreaties, then if thou hadst to deale with wilde and sauage beasts. Thus the Prophet further aggravates the wofull estate of this people, that by contraries he might let them perceiue, how exceeding bountifull God was towards them, when he deliuered them out of so great a feare. As in another place the holy Ghost magnifies the grace of God, in that hee preserued his people in Egypt, albeit they vnderstood not their language. Psal. 81. 5.

Verf. 20. Looke vpon Zion, the Citie of our solemne feasts; thine eies shall shall see Ierusalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that cannot be remoued: and the stakes thereof can neuer be taken away, neither shall any of the cordes thereof be broken.

Many read it in the vocatiue case; Looke O Zion: but it is better to read it as I haue translated it; Looke vpon Zion. The Prophet propounds a promise touching y^e restaurati^on of y^e Church, of which y^e faithful were to make speciall account: for if the Church shake or fall, where is their prosperitie? But he shewes that she shall be in such wise restored, that she sets the thing euen before their eyes; whereas indeed he speakes of a thing to come. And this he doth that his words might be y^e more effectuall. As if he should say; Thou shalt see Zion restored, and Ierusalem flourishing yet once againe. And albeit you now see all things confused they were already accomplished.

In calling it a Citie of solemnitie, he shewes wherein the restaurati^on of Zion did chiefly consist;

A promise touching the restaurati^on of the church

The Prophets are wont to speake of things to come, as if they were already accomplished.

Wherein the reſtauration of Zion chiefly conſiſted.

conſiſt; to wit, becauſe the people ſtooked thither to heare the law, to renew their covenants with God, to call upon his name, and to offer ſacrifices: for when they were deprived of theſe things, they were as ſheep ſcattered without a ſhepherd, or as a bodie ſeparate from the head: in a word, as a people vndone, and deprived of all ioy. And therefore the captiues in Babylon ſorrow for nothing ſo much as that they were banished from Zion, and could not enjoy the comforts which there they were wont to finde, Pſal. 137. 5. It alſo appears plainlie enough by many places that it hath bin the chiefe complaint of all the faithfull.

Moreover, he calles Zion, a Citie, becauſe it ſtood in the miſt of the Citie; and it is alſo called the citie of Dauid. The compaſſe of the whole Citie of Ieruſalem was very large, for there was a double wall, as we haue ſhewed you heretofore, which is to be ſcene alſo in many other Cities. Note we here that in the reſtauration of the Church conſiſts the fulnes of all bleſſings, as the only bliſſe which we are to deſire and wiſh for; all other benefits abound they neuer ſo much, wāt we this, are nothing: as on the contrary, enjoy we this; we enjoy all things; for we can now way be miſerable, as long as Ieruſalem, that is to ſay the Church, flouriſheth. But when doth the flouriſh? When God ſits as chiefe in our aſſembles, and when we covenant in his name to cleaue vnto him for euer. The vnbeleeuers are forward to crowne themſelues as it were with the title of Gods name, as if their aſſembles were gathered vnder his enſigne; but all is hypocriſie. For though they draw neere to him: with their mouths, yet their hearts are farre off from him, neither will they haue him nor his lawes to beare ſway amongſt them in any thing.

In the next place Iſaiah ſaith, that the faithfull, which a long time had been toſt to and fro with many tempeſts, ſhould now at the laſt haue a ſure and quiet abode in the Church of God. But howſoever the people had ſome ſmall taſte hereof vnder Hezekias, yet the full accompliſhment therof is performed in Chriſt only: vnderſtand me not, that euer ſince, Gods children haue had ſafe and quiet dwelling in this world. No, this reſt is now hidden, for wee are faine to wander and ſtray vp and downe here; and are driuen many times to ſhift from poſt to pillar without any certaine abode, toſt with diuers tempeſts and whirle-winds, we are on every ſide aſſailed with infinite enemies, and yet theſe combats muſt we ſuffer, ſo as we can hardlie get ſo much as a minutes reſt here. Thinke not then that God promiſeth ſuch a peace as carnall ſenſe can comprehend. No, we muſt diue into the deepeſt thoughts of our hearts, reformed by the holy Ghoſt in righteouſnes and holines, if we will enjoy this peace which paſſeth vnderſtanding, as Paul ſaith, Phil. 4. 7. This peace ſhall we be ſure to enjoy as the Lords gift, if we remaine in the true Church.

By tabernacle, and cords, he ſtille and aptlie deſcribes the condition of the Church. For he might haue called it a citie well founded; but he calles it a Tabernacle, or Tent, which is apt in an inſtant to be remoued from place to place. To teach vs, that although the eſtate of the Church ſeeme to haue unaſtable ſtability in it, and is ſubiect to many changes, yet that the ſhall ſtand ſteadie and vnmoueable for all that: the ſhall ſtand againſt all ſtormes and tempeſts, againſt all the iurie of enemies, although we thinke it vnpoſſible, and can no way comprehend the reaſon of it. Faith alone is it that can make things ſo repugnant to agree together, to wit, that there is ſafer dwelling in a ſilke tent, then in the ſtrongest Caſtles in the whole world. With this buckler muſt we beare off Satans blowes, which otherwiſe would ſhake and ſhewer vs to peeces as oft as we ſee the Church not a little tottering only, but caried cleane away as with a whirlewind now hither, now thither. Who would thinke there were any ſaſtie, or place of reſt to be looked for in theſe tempeſtuous whirleings? But becauſe the Lord will not haue his ſeruants altogether hampered in the things of this life, that they may depend wholly vpon him; this promiſed protection of his ought to be more eſteemed of vs, then thouſands of other ſtayes beſides.

Verſ. 21. For ſurely there the mightie Lord will be vnto vs as a place of floods, and broad riuers, Whereby ſhall paſſe no ſhip With oares, neither ſhall great ſhip paſſe thereby.

The two particles Chi, and Im, ſtand often for a double affirmation; but they are put here for expoſitions: we may alſo tranſlate, For it, but I willinglie retaine that which is cleareſt. Well, the Prophet giues a reaſon why the Church which reſembles a reſtleſſe pavilion, is notwithstanding ſealier then Cities well founded: to wit, becauſe her Lord the Almightie is in the middes of her, for ſo ſhe ſhall not be ſhaken, as is ſaid Pſal. 45. 5. Separate God from the Church once, and the will fall of her ſelfe though no man put his leaſt finger to it. For whereof doth the conſiſt, but of a ſort of poore weake and fraile creatures, yea, the fraileſt of all others. But whē God dwels in the miſt of vs, then he ſuſtines and beares vp this feeble and weake nature, and is to vs as a ſtrong rampart, deepe trenches; yea, cuen as walles and riuers which compaſſe in a Citie round about. Now the Prophet had reſpect to the ſituation of Ieruſalem, which had nought elſe but a little river, nothing ſo large and boiſterous riuers as Babylon and other Cities had. For they were commanded before Chap. 8. 6. to content themſelues with the only power of God, & not to couet after theſe great floods; as if he ſhould ſay, We ſhall ſurely be inuincible if God be reſident amongſt vs, becauſe his defence will be a ſhield and buckler of prooffe.

The ſhip ſhall not paſſe.] Great riuers haue this incommoditie, that they make paſſage for the enemies to arize therein with their ſhips ſometimes more then were to be wiſhed: and thus that which ſerueth at one time for a help, many times may afterward turne

Though the Church in this world be ſubiect to many changes as the Moone, yet ſhall the ſtand vnmoueable againſt all ſtormes and tempeſts whiſt ſoever, as is proued in the verſe following.

In the reſtauration of the Church conſiſts the fulnes of all bleſſings.

What manner of peace and quietnes it is which the faithfull enjoy in this world.

The Church rather called a Tabernacle then a Citie.

to our hurt and losse. But the Lord saith, he will fo serue as a riuer, that yet the entrance of no enimie need to be feared, in regard of any such incommodie. Now hee mentions two sorts of vessels, to wit, gallies, and ships of burthen: and thus he shewes that the enimie shall no way preuaile. From hence wee may gather two very profitable doctrines. First, neither to seeke, nor wait for saluation at the hands of any, but from God alone. Secondly, that it is in vaine to gather together much artilerie and defences, because they shall not onely become vnprofitable vnto vs, when God is against vs, but shall turne to our owne ruine and destruction.

Verf. 22. For the Lord is our Iudge, the Lord is our Law-giuer, the Lord is our King: he will saue vs.

The maner how God fits in his Church.

1. 1. 3. King.

Lawgiuer.

That is the true Church, which acknowledgeth God for her Lawgiuer and King.

Papists exercise a cruell tyranny ouer the consciences of poore men and women.

Iudge.

Now the Prophet shewes how God visits in the midst of his Church; to wit, by being serued and acknowledged as Iudge, law-giuer, and King. For those who obey and submit themselves vnto God, as to their King, shall effectually feele that he is the safe keeper of their saluation: but those that glory in this falsly, shall looke for saluation from him in vaine. Submit wee our neckes therefore onely to his yoke. Let vs harken vnto his voice, and obey him: then will he for his part manifestly shew himselfe to be our defence and protection. But if we contemne his voice, and rebell against his Commandements; what maruell is it, if in dangers he leaue and forsake vs? The true Church then, as you may obserue, is he who acknowledgeth God for her King and Lawgiuer. With what face then dare the Papists brag, that they are the Church of God, seeing they reiect the lawfull governments established by Moses, the Prophets, and by Christ himselfe, to bring in their own deuices and trumperies in stead of the same? They exercise a cruell tyranny ouer the consciences of poore men and women: and in taking that libertie away, which Christ hath purchased, they miserably vex the poore soules of his seruants, and as much as in them lies, would draw them into perdition with themselves.

But it is Gods office alone to sit in mens consciences, seeing he is the onely Iudge and lawgiuer, whose right it is to rule vs by his word. The Prophet conioynes three words together here; Iudge, lawgiuer, and King; because it is a thing of such great importance, as ought not slightly to be passed ouer. If wee then suffer our selues to be gouerned by his word, hee will neuer forsake vs. Thus in few words, wee haue the onely meane set before vs how to obtaine saluation.

Verf. 23. Thy cords are loosed: they could not well strengthen their mast, neither could they spread the saile: then shall the pray bee diuided for a great spoile; yea, the lame shall take away the pray.

Hee turnes his speech to the Assyrians, in whose person hee also speakes to all the enemies of the Church. For hauing promised her such stabilitie, as shall neuer be shaken, he taxeth now the fond confidence wherewith the wicked are puffed vp; as if they were so well rooted, that it were vnpossible euer to displant them. Be it then that for a time they built their hopes vpon their riches, as vpon a strong Citie, and that the same was as an high wall vnto them in their imagination: whilest they were so besotred therewith, yet Isaiah prophecies their sudden destruction to be at hand, because Gods hand vpheld them not. Now hee goes on with the similitude which he vsed in the 21. verse, where he compared the Church to a very strong place, well inured with goodly riuers: by reason whereof, the enemy could not approach vnto her. Now he compares the estate of the wicked to ships; signifying thereby their rotting foundation; notwithstanding they plaied the bugbeares, and were caried with such furie and rage, as it seemed they would beare downe all before them with a breath. Although they had furnished themselves then both with great ships and gallies to ioyne in one the regions, which lay far distant one from another, and so meant to make themselves Lords of sea and land: yet should they feele that all was but vapors and smoke. The Lord would turne ouer their ships, breake downe their masts, and cut off their Cables, and sinke all into the bottom of the sea. Let vs not altogether then stand wondering and gazing at the strength, violence, or audaciousnes of our enemies; but let vs looke vp vnto the Lord, & wait for that day wherein he will tumble their furie and violence vpon their owne heads.

Verf. 24. And none inhabitant shall say, I am sicke: the people that dwell therein, shall haue their iniquitie forgivenen.

Now the Prophet returnes againe to the Church; for the ruine which he threatened should fall vpon the Assyrians, tended not a little to the consolation of the faithful: for what securitie could the Church haue had, vnlesse God had opposed his helpe against the power of so many enemies, which assailed her on euery side? Hauing in a word then touched the state of the wicked; to wit, that they shall all be brought to nought, because they persecute the children of God; he aptly returnes where he left, to wit, that God will omit no occasion that may make for the good and saluation of his Church. He saith then that the Citizens of the Church shall be freed from all incommodies, because by the fauour of God, they shall inioy an happie estate.

The second part of the verse serues for an exposition of the former: for sinnes being forgivenen, the graces of God shall flow in vpon vs without without any let or ſtay. Whence we gather, that all the miſeries which aſſaile vs, proceedes from no other cauſe then from our iniquities. Otherwiſe, the reaſon which hee yeeldes, ſhould be improper and far fetched: but this principle is to be holden, that all the miſeries which God ſends vs, are ſo many tokens of his wrath. Thence it followes that God muſt needes vs with a fatherly reſpect, when our finnes are pardoned; and out of his loue, to giue vs whatſocuer is good for vs.

Therefore if we deſire to be eaſed of our troubles, keep we this order. About all things let vs ſeeke reconciliation with God; for the cauſe being remoued, the effect ſhall forthwith vaniſh away. But becauſe our deſires are not well nor rightly ordered, caring onely to get away the rod from our backs, and neuer conſider deeply of the cauſe: we neede not wonder if wee lie groveling ſtill vnder the ſmart thereof. They therefore deceiue themſelues which would bee freed from croſſes, and yet will delight in their finnes: nay, if ſuch ſhould be vnder no aduerſitie at all, yet ſhould they not ceaſe for all that to be miſerable people: for what reſt or tranquilitie of mind can they inioy, whileſt their conſciences in euery place purſues the guilt of their iniquities?

Wherein conſiſts true felicitie then? In hauing obtained forgiveneſſe of finnes, and in feeling ſenſibly, that all the good things we receiue from God, are ſo many pledges of his fatherly good will towards vs. Learne we alſo, that it is impoſſible to pleaſe him, or be accounted among the number of his children, vnleſſe hee ceaſe to impute our finnes vnto vs. There is nothing then but free reconciliation alone, which can make vs well pleaſing in his ſight; nor nothing but that, which can make way for his loue to be ſhed abroad in our hearts.

Now albeit we be continually vnder the croſſe, yet that breakes not off the promiſe; for the faithfull content themſelues with this comfort and conſolation in the miſdeſt of all their afflictions; to wit, that God is their God, and ceaſeth not to hold them for his deere children, though he correct them. For being regenerate by his Spirit, they begin to taſte of that happineſſe which Adam inioined in full meaſure before his fall: but being burthened with many finnes, therefore haue they neede of a continually waſhing; and yet God ſo tempers his bitter potions, that he ſupports their infirmitie ſtill. He alſo lets them ſee that he hath a care of their welfare, by moderating the ſharpenneſſe of his ſtripes, if hee doe not at once ſet them free. It is not without cauſe then you ſee, that our Prophet exempts the renewed Church from common miſeries, becauſe they carrie in them a ſtampe of Gods curſe.

Hence alſo we may note how childiſh the diſtinction of the Papiſts is, touching the forgiveneſſe of the ſinne, but not of the puniſhment, as if wee were able to ſatiſfie Gods juſtice. But the Prophet teacheth vs another leſſon, as wee may eaſily gather from other places of their writings. But if we had but this onely text, can any man ſpeake more plainly, then to ſay, that afflictions ſhall ceaſe, becauſe iniquitie is forgiven? Truly it is all one as if it had been ſaid; The puniſhments ceaſeth, becauſe the fault is pardoned. I grant that God ſometimes afflicts the faithfull, albeit he forgives the fault: but it is to the end that by this ſtroke of the rod, he might make them wiſer for the time to come; and not to exact a ſatiſfaction of them, as if he had been reconciled vnto them by halues. But our Papiſts will needes haue ſuch puniſhments ſtand for ſatiſfactions: as if the ſinner in part ſhould thereby redem himſelfe; which, wee know, directly croſſeth the doctrine of free remiſſion of finnes. And thus their fond inuentions, both concerning ſatiſfactions, and Purgatory, fall to the ground.

It is alſo to be noted, that this priuiledge belongs onely to the houſhold of faith: for out of the body of Chriſt, which is the communion of Saints, what hope of reconciliation with God is there left? That is the reaſon why wee are taught in the Symbole to ſay, I beleeue, the catholic Church, the remiſſion of finnes. For as God loues none but thoſe whom hee findes members of his onely Sonne; no more beſtowes hee his free imputation vpon any, but ſuch as are luely members of his body. What remains to thoſe that are without then, and ate ſtrangers from the Commonwealth of Iſrael, but that they muſt needes periſh vnder the curſe? Therefore to forſake the true Church, is manifeſtly to renounce eternall life.

Daily deſirings needes daily waſhings.

THE XXXIII. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. Come reere yee nations, and hearken yee people: let the earth heare, and all that is therein; the World, and all that proceedeth thereof.

Witherunto our Prophet minding to comfort the children of the Church, hath preached as it were in the miſt of their aſſembly. But now he directeth his ſpeech vnto the Gentiles, and takes vp the ſame argument ſtil, albeit after another maner then before. For hauing ſhewed that the Lord hath ſuch care ouer his Church, that hee will alwaies prouide meanes for her ſafetie: hee now alſo addes that which we haue ſcene heretofore; to wit, that he will at laſt take his peoples cauſe in hand, and reuenge their quarrell, though for a time hee hath ſuffered the wicked to take their penniworths of them. He continues to handle the ſame matter then; but by a consolation of another kind. For he shewes how seuerely God will plague those wicked ones, which haue persecuted his Church. The Prophet according to his office therefore, summons them by proclamation on Gods behalfe (that he might the better awaken them) to assemble them selues together, and appeare before his iudgement seat. For thus the wicked must be rouzed out of their security, who in time of prosperitie despise all admonitions; thinking that God either will not, or cannot punish their iniquities. Yet in speaking thus vehemently, his greatest respect was to the Church: for otherwise hee found but deafe eares among the nations, they would haue profited nothing at all by it.

In this place hee addresseth his speech to the Idumeans, who were like enough proudly to despise these threatnings, and therefore he calles heauen and earth to witness against them, saying, that the iudgements which God will execute, shall bee so apparant and manifest, that not onely all people, but all the insensible creatures also shall see it: for it is the maner of the Prophets to speake thus to the dunbe creatures, when men inuaded with reason and vnderstanding, grow deafe; as we haue scene before in the first Chapter.

Verf. 2. For the indignation of the Lord is vpon all nations, and his wrath vpon all their armies: hee hath destroyed them, and deliuered them to the slaughter.

BY nations, he meanes those enemies which bordered vpon the Iewes, who were inuironed with many Countreys: for they had as many enemies almost, as borderers. Now albeit there were other causes of this malice, to wit, enuie: yet because they were of a contrarie religion, that did wonderfully inflame their rage against them, in regard they thereby condemned their superstitious, which caused the Lord the rather to promise his helpe, as a Iudge to reuenge their quarrell.

He addes, vpon all their armies, because the Iewes were but an handfull of people, being compared with other nations. Although these nations then boasted, because of their great armies, and despised the small number of the Iewes; yet the Prophet affirmes, that God can easily consume their multitudes, & bring them all to nought, rather then he will hazard the losse of his little flocke, whereof he is the shepheard. And albeit hee speakes of things to come, yet vseth he the present tence, because he might set the thing before the eyes of the poore Iewes, which were almost overwhelmed with afflictions. For, as I haue touched before, he foretels not these things in respect of the Idumeans, who would receiue no instruction; but in respect of the Iewes, whom he meant to comfort, because they were miserably vexed by their enemies.

cast out, and their stinke shall come vp out of their bodies; and the mountaines shall be melted with their blood.

BY this circumstance hee shewes that the destruction shall be great: for if but a few persons be slaine, they burie them. But when so many are slaine, that those which be left a liue, are not able to burie them, they care not much to leaue them vnburi'd: so as the stinke of the carcafes, as yee know, ascends and corrupts the ayre. Thus it appeares that God is strong enough to roote out infinite armies. It may be also the Prophet meant to set forth this iudgement of God at large, because besides the killing of the nations, there would be shame and disgrace brought vpon them, in regard their dead were deprived of the right and honour of buriall. Afterwards he amplifies the horrour of the diformiture, in saying, that their blood shall flow from the mountaines, as if they were dissolued or molten: as when breaches of great riuers doe violently descend, and carry earth and all before them. And thus he againe shewes, that no meanes shall be left them to escape, because the slaughter shall bee no lesse in the mountaines, then in the plaine where the battell is pitched.

Verf. 4. And all the host of heauen shall bee dissolued, and the heauens shall bee folden like a booke: and all their hostes shall fa'l, as the leafe falleth from the vine, and as it falleth from the figgetree.

ISAIAH vseth here an excessiue manner of speech, as others of the Prophets likewise often doe, to set forth the terror of Gods iudgement, and deeply to wound dull and dead hearts. For otherwise, his speech would haue been of no force, neither would it much haue profited the carelesse and secure person. He addes then, that the very stars themselves shall bee darkened in this waste, as if they were constrained to fall: the better to manifest the wailing which should be there. For when the heauens are cloudie and gloomie, it seemes the cloudes wrap and fold themselves vp one in another, the Sunne and stars begin to grow wan and weak, and the whole frame of the heauens shake, as if they were readie to fall. Now he shewes the like shall happen at this time, because euery thing shall shew signes of sorowe and lamentation.

But this must be referred to the apprehension of men, for the heauens moue not out of their place: but when the Lord manifests some tokens of his displeasure, wee are as much terrified therewith, as if the heauens were ready to fall vpon our heads, and to burie vs vnder them. Not that such things befall the heauens; but he speakes as it were to brazen faces, whom hee was faine thus to awake, that they might not take him as if hee told them a tale of Robin Hood, as they ſay; no, you ſhall bee ſo ſmitten with feare, ſaith he, that you ſhall imagin the very heavens are ready to fall about your eares. This is the juſt reward of a drouzie conſcience, to wit, that wicked perſons which cannot bee touched with any feare of God, ſhall be afraid of their owne ſhadow, and ſhall as much tremble at the falling of a leafe, as if the Sunne and ſtarrs fell from heaven. And thus he alſo notes a woſull change, which ſhall trouble and mingle all things together.

*Verſ. 5. For my ſword ſhall be drunken in the heavens: behold, it ſhall come downe upon Edom, even upon the people of my * curſe, to judgement.*

HE ſaith that the ſword of the Lord is drunken with blood, as when one hath made a great ſlaughter, ſwords are bathed in blood. And that the ſpeech might haue the more force, he brings in the Lord himſelfe vterring of it. But why, ſaith he, it is in heaven? For God calles not men vp thither to puniſh them, but executes his iudgements here below in earth, and that by the hands of men. But the Prophet reſpects that ſecret counſell of God, by which he deliberates and ordaines all things before the execution thereof: he vnderſtands it not then of the act it ſelfe, but commends the efficacy of his owne propheſie, in regard that by the immutable counſell of God this ſlaughter ſhould certainly fall out. Alſo he meant to informe the faithfull hereby, that God examines the doings of the wicked in heaven, howſoever they giue themſelues to all iuſtice on earth, and go on in their bad courſes unpuniſhed. Laſtly, that the ſword wherewith they ſhould be ſlaine was alreadie bathed in blood in God his account, euen when he is only determined to puniſh them, which he will assuredly performe, notwithstanding all their proſperitie.

Sodom burnt alreadie in Gods account, whileſt ſhe gaue her ſelfe to drunkennes, diſſolutions, and execrable villanies: as much may likewiſe be ſaid of all other wretched people which lie fettered in Satans chaines, to be ſlaine by the ſword of the Lord of hoſts, euen then when they wallow themſelues moſt in their voluptuouſnes. Let vs not therefore ſtand gazing vpon the proſperitie of the wicked, whileſt they inioy more then their hearts can wiſh; neither let vs hunger after the ſame: for albeit no man moleſt them, yet are they not far off from ruin. Why ſo? poore ſoules! God is againſt them.

But our Prophet names the Idumians here, who were enemies to Gods people, notwithstanding they were of affinitie with them, and bare the ſtamp of the ſame religion, for they were children of Eſau, and of the ſtock of Abraham, as was ſaid before. As at this day, what greater enemies haue wee then the Papiſts, which are baptized with the ſame baptiſme that we are, and make profeſſion of the name of Chriſt? and yet they furiouslie perſecute vs, and would haue vs vterlic rooted out; becauſe we conſent to their ſuperſtitious, and Idolatries. Euen ſuch were the Idumians, and therefore the Prophet culled them out from amongſt all the reſt of the enemies of the Church.

In calling them the people of his diſcomfiture, he conſignes the former ſentence: for it is as much as if the Lord had ſaid, It will be but in vaine for you to thinke you can eſcape my hands, ſeeing you are alreadie ordained to deſtruction. For by this phraſe of ſpeech he pronounceth definitive ſentence vpon them, as being alreadie condemned in his heauenlie decree, and that no leſſe, then if at that preſent they had been put apart, and cut away from off the land of the liuing.

And leſt it might ſeeme that God did them any wrong, he addes, in judgement: for there is nothing vnto which men are more prone then to accuſe God of crueltie: ſo as the greateſt part can not be brought to acknowledge him their competent Iudge, eſpeciallie if he chaſtiſe them ſomewhat ſeuereſly. Iſaiab therefore ſhewes, that this ſlaughter muſt needs be mixt with equitie, ſeeing God neuer exceeds in our much ſeuereſtie.

Verſ. 6. The ſword of the Lord is filled with blood: it is made fat with the fat, and with the blood of the lambs, and the goates, with the fat of the kidneys of the rammes: for the Lord hath a ſacrifice in Bozrah, and a great ſlaughter in the land of Edom.

HE goes on ſtill with the ſame argument; but by another deſcription, which amplifies the matter greatly: wherin his drift is to rouze vp the wicked who were wont to giue and geere at all admonitions, as we haue ſaid before. Is it not needfull then that Gods iudgements ſhould be diſſepered out in liuely tables to wound the hearts of the enemies, and to animate the minds of the faithfull with an holy pride, in aſſurance that their foes can not any way luſte it for all their ſtoutnes and rebellion, but that they muſt be brought to the ſhambles like beaſts as ſoone as God doth but hold vp his finger, as they ſay?

He compares their deſtruction to the ſacrifices: for as they were wont to ſacrifice beaſts, for the ſeruite and honor of God, ſo ſhould he be glorified by the ſlaughter of this people. The Prophet then confirms that here which he hath ſaid before touching the iudgement: for when the Lord executes iuſtice, his glorie ſhines thereby: men reuerence and worſhip him, ſo as the deſtruction of the wicked you ſee is rightlie compared to ſacrifices, which were a part of his ſeruite.

Indeed there was no great pleaſure in be- holding the ſacrifices: for the cutting their throats, the guſhing out of the warme blood, and the ſtink of the ſmoke ſerued rather to driue men away; yet the honour and glorie of God thined euen in theſe things. So, this deſtruction of the Idumians no doubt was an horrible spectacle to looke vpon, and made no such goodly shew, as to bring one in loue with the sight of it : but that the faithfull euen in this respect, might learne to sanctifie the name of God, they were commanded to lift vp their eyes to heauen, because God in executing such a vengeance, did as it were erect and set vp so many altars for his sacrifices. And because they had vniuistly afflicted the Church of God, and had cruelly intreated his chosen, without all compassion or humane, Isaiab pronounceth that the offering vp of their blood, was a sacrifice acceptable and of a sweet smelling saueur vnto God, because it is the execution of his iudgements.

Gen. 36. 8.

Papiſts the greateſt enemies the Church of God hath.

By lambes and goates, vnder a figure he means the people which should be sacrificed : and in alluding to the sundry kinds of offerings, he comprehends all the people, as well small as great : to shew, that when God shall take his enemies in hand to punish them, hee will not let so much as any one of them escape. He mentions Bozrah, which was the chiefe and head Citie of the Country, in which the greatest slaughter should be executed : and in the next place adds the land of Edom, through which this discomfiture should passe, without sparing any corner of it.

Verf. 7. And the unicornes shall come downe with them, and the heifers with the bulles : and their land shall be drunken with blood; and their dust is made fat with farnesse.

This verse is annexed to the former, for it is no new thing he speaks of; but hee continues the same figure, amplifying what hee had said touching goates and lambes : to which, hee nor onely adds calues, but wilde beasts also. The summe is, that Gods vengeance is bounden, so as he will spare neither age nor estate; for he will put to the sword as well the cruell and proud Giants, with their vaine brags, as the feeble weaking: as if one prepared a sacrifice, in which, beasts of all sorts were mingled one with another. Neither should any thinke it absurd, that lambes are coupled with cruell beasts in this sacrifice : for by the word lambes in this place, hee meanes not harmlesnesse and innocencie; but the poore and weake are called so by comparison, because their meane condition held them vnder some appearance of modestie.

Now albeit it may seeme strange that the Lord should thus smite his enemies, without sparing of any at all; notwithstanding by the word sacrifice, he shewes he doth nothing but that which is iust and equall, and for which he ought to be praised. And indeed whosoever shall examin this fact, shall be inforced to lay his hand vpon his mouth, and to confesse, that God had iust occasion to cut them off all, nor one excepted. The like end are all reprobates to looke for; namely, to be sacrificed by the hands of those that are as wicked as themselves. Some take the word Abbirim, for Strong : I had rather follow them which translate it Bulles, it being so taken, Psal. 50. Albeit by Bulles here, vnder a figure, he meanes the strong and mighty.

Verf. 8. For it is a day of the Lords vengeance, and the yeere of recompence for the iudgement of Zion.

This verse must be ioyned to the former; for it contains the end why the Lord corrected the Idumeans so severely, namely, because he meant now to maintaine and reuenge the quarrell of his people. For had he not added this reason, that which hee spake before, might haue seemed not onely darke, but improper. For it would be but a flitting and vncertaine knowledge of things, vnlesse in the consideration of Gods punishing of the wicked, we did also therein see, that hee manifests the continuall care and loue which he hath to his chosen, in the preservation of them. Now that which is here said of the Idumeans, ought to be applied to all the enemies of the Church; for vnder this one particular, our Prophet comprehended them all; and for this cause are we to cheere vp and refresh our hearts with this consolation in time of aduersitie, and to sustaine the iniuries which are done vs, which God shall reuenge himselfe. For is he called the auenger, thinke you, for nought? See Psal. 94. 1. It is not our Prophets meaning then alone to say, that God hath power sufficient to punish the wicked when he thinks good, but also that he reignes in heauen, to reuenge all wrongs in due season.

But the two words, day and yeere, is to be noted: for thereby he giues vs to vnderstand, that God sleeps not in heauen, whilst hee seemes to winke at the enemies crueltie; but onely defers to punish, till the appointed time; to the end the faithfull might learne in the meane space, to possesse their soules in patience, and suffer him to gouerne all things according to his incomprehensible wisdom.

Verf. 9. And the riuers thereof shall be turned into pitch; and the dust thereof into brimstone; and the land thereof shall be burning pitch.

This whereof he speaks, hath relation to that which went before; in which hee adds a more ample declaration of this destruction. We told you erewhile why the Prophets doe liuely represent and set forth Gods iudgements in such plaine tables as it were; euen to bring men vpon the scaffold, thereby constraining men to take knowledge of those things, which otherwise they would neither see nor comprehend; and if they did, yet they would vtterly forget them as soone as they had scene or apprehended them. But besides this, we must note that the Prophets spake of secret and hidden things, which seemed altogether incredible: for many thought the Prophets bolted out things at a venture in theſe matters. There needed many confirmations therefore: and ſuch are thoſe that he ſpeaketh in this, and other the like places.

From particular threatenings, we may descend to the general.

The ſumme then is, that he ſpeaketh of ſuch an horrible change, as ſhall utterly waſte the land of Edom. Moreover, he alludes to the deſtruction of Sodom and Gomorrah: Gen. 19. 24. which is a forme of teaching much viſed among the Prophets: for in this ruin we liue (as Saint rule telleth vs) a perpetuall example of Gods wrath againſt the reprobate: neither is it without cauſe that the Prophets doe ſo often renew the remembrance thereof, for they would haue all men learne thereby to tremble at Gods iudgements. Hitherto appertaines that which is ſaid in the verſe following.

Verſ. 10. It ſhall not bee quenched night nor day: the ſmoke thereof ſhall goe vp euermore: it ſhall be deſolate from generation to generation: none ſhall paſſe through it for euer.

Queſtionleſſe the Prophet ſpeaketh an exceſſiue manner of ſpeech; but the Lord is conſtrained thus to deale with vs, to awaken our dulneſſe; for an vſuall forme of ſpeech would not moue or affect vs. In ſaying then, that the wrath of the Lord againſt the Idumeans, reſembles a fire that never goeth out, he takes from them all hope of pardon: for as they ceaſed not to prouoke him, ſo ſhould they find him a ſeuere Iudge vnto them. And Malachi notes it as a ſigne of the reprobation of this people, that the Lord was angry with them for euer: Malachi 1. 4. The oppoſition muſt be ſupplied, becauſe Gods children alwaies receiue ſome conſolation, leſt they ſhould be diſcouraged. But we need not ſtand long vpon this matter: it ſufficeth that we haue the drift and ſcope of the Prophets words.

Verſ. 11. But the pellican and the hedgehog ſhall poſſeſſe it: and the great owle and the rauen ſhall dwell in it: and he ſhall ſtretch out vpon it the line of vanity, and the ſtones of emptineſſe.

As touching theſe creatures which Iſaiah here mentions, there are diuers opinions: neither are the Hebrew expoſitors themſelues well reſolued touching the ſame: yet we may perceiue the Prophets drift well enough; to wit, that he ſets out the face of a Country laid waſte & deſolate. For doubtleſſe he ſpeaketh of hideous monſters in nature, which come not among men, neither are they acquainted with them. And this he doth the rather to deſcribe the horror of this deſtruction. The firſt member of the verſe then is cleere enough of it ſelfe: but there is ſome difficultie in the ſecond. Some expound theſe words, lines of vanity, by an antiphrace, and vnderſtand it of the Iewes: but I rather thinke it ſhould bee referred to the Idumeans, as the former words are. And to the end we may the better know that this is the Prophets true meaning, the ſame words are found in the firſt Chapter of Malachi, verſe, 4. 5. who came long after our Prophet: in which place, hee confirms that which Iſaiah here denounceth. Though Edom ſay, we are impouertied, but we will returne & build the deſolate places; yet ſaith the Lord of hoſtes, they ſhall build, but I will deſtroy it; and they ſhall call them, the border of wickedneſſe, and the people with whom the Lord is angry for euer. And your eyes ſhall ſee it, and yee ſhall ſay, The Lord will be magnified vpon the borders of Iſrael. Malachi then plainly expounds that which Iſaiah ſpake ſomewhat darkly in his time: Iſaiah ſaith, the Idumeans ſhall build in vaine: the other, that they ſhall ſpread the lines of vanity: for it is all one in effect as if he had ſaid, that the maſter-workmen (as Maſons and Carpenters) ſhall but loſe their labour in going about to build the Cities againe: for men of ſuch craft, vſe ſmall lines and plummets to meature their works by. Thoſe then that ſhould take in hand the reſtauration of Edom, ſhould beſtow coſt in vaine: for they ſhall be ſo confounded, that they ſhall not know at what end to begin, nor where to make an end. And albeit God ſpeaketh to mitigate the miſeries which he ſends vpon others, by ſome conſolation in the end, yet they muſt looke for none at all.

Hence we may collect a very profitable doctrine, which is this: doe wee at any time ſee that cities heretofore ruined, are now built againe and brought into ſome good faſhion? Therein we may behold a ſingular note of Gods fauour: for the labour of Maſons and handicrafts men would haue been to no purpoſe, vnleſſe the Lord had put his hand both to the beginning, middeſt, and end thereof; for what can prosper, vnleſſe he guide things from the laying of the firſt ſtone, to the laſt: and likewise, vnleſſe hee keepe them vnder his protection? Men may well diſburſe great ſummes of monie then, yet in vaine: yea, they ſhall vex themſelues, without bringing to paſſe, vnleſſe hee be pleaſed to gouerne the buſineſſe, and to powre out his bleſſing vpon that which they take in hand. His onely bleſſing therefore makes rich: and that alone is it which vpholds vs in any eſtate or condition. For which cauſe it is ſaid, that his hands built Ieruſalem: Pſal. 47. 2. Now as touching that which Iſaiah here threatens againſt the Idumeans, the holy Ghoſt pronounceth the like elſewhere, againſt the houſe of Abah: meaning that it ſhould bee raced euen with the ground: 2. King. 21. 13.

This text is diuerſly expounded: but I will not trouble you with the reciting of the expoſitions; for in reſurting of them, I ſhould make my ſelfe more worke then needs. That which is moſt probable, is this, They ſhall call the Nobles of Edom to rule, but it shall be in vaine: As if he should say, In so miserable an estate there shall none be found that will willinglie beare rule, or take vpon him the government of state-matters. This sentence is read elsewhere, yea, we haue had the same in a maner before, albeit somewhat differing in words. Now this maner of speech leads me to think, that the Prophet meant closely to taxe the pride of this people, who were waxen ouerhaughtie, by reason of their peace and abundance. For as much then as the Idumeans being seated vpon high mountaines grew proud, the Prophet shewes, that they should be brought downe with ihame, so as none of the Nobles should be left, neither should there remaine any man of great place: for when kingdomes are ruinated, all government is also abolished. The people are as a bodie without an head, neither is there any distinction of persons, or places.

Lords without Lordships.

Thus then by way of scorn he saith, that these braue Nobles which were so highlie exalted, shall be as Lords without Lordships, which appears yet better by the second member where it is added for expostions sake, that they shall be brought to nothing. The summe is, that Edom shall resemble a bodie shattered in peeces, in which shall appeare nought else but an horrible confusion of all things. Oh fearefull curse of God! What doe men differ from beasts, I pray you, if they want the execution of good lawes? Is their condition any whit better? No surely. The beasts may well be without any head or gouernour, because they will not offer crueltie to those of their owne kinde: but Lord, what is more cruell then man, if he be not kept vnder! Is he not caried an end by his passions as a fittie of hell to runne out into all dissolutions?

¶ Vers. 13. And it shall bring forth thorns in the paces thereof, nettles and thistles in the strong holds thereof, and it shall be an habitation for Dragons, and a coure for Ostriches.

HE continues on his speech, wherein he sets forth an Image of an horrible desolation: to wit, when beautifull houses and paces are razed euen with the ground; or, so laid on heapes, that men can haue no vse of them: being rather fit for thornes, briars, and nettles to grow in, then for dwelling places, which is farre worse, then if they had bin conuerted into meadow or errable ground. But see how the Lord punisheth the pride of such as delight in building of sumptuous houses, and gorgeous paces; they thinke to make their names immortall, as it were: but God driues them out, and makes nests therein for birds; and dennes for wild beasts: and thus they serue as perpetuall ensignes of their vaine ambition, who by such buildings thought to make themselves garlands of their owne renouue and excellencie. Mens places then are inhabited of such beasts, who represent the nature & dispositions of those which built and dwelt in those so goodly houses,

How God punisheth the pride of such as delight in building sumptuous houses.

Now this ouerturning of order is also a woorthie signe of Gods wrath; to wit, when the earth which was created for the vse of man, is constrained to receiue inhabitants of other kinds, and to spew out their right and lawfull owners: but by meanes thereof no doubt it shall be purged of that filthines wherewith it was in times past defiled.

A note of Gods curse in this change.

Vers. 14. There shall meet also Zim and lim, and the Satyre shall crie to his fellow, and the Skritch-owle shall rest there, and shall finde for her selfe a quiet dwelling.

15. There shall the Owle make her nest, and lay, and hatch, and gather them vnder her shadow: there shall the Vultures also be gathered every one with her make.

SOME affirme that these beasts are Fayries, Others, Hobgoblins, others, Satyres: neither do the Hebrues themselves agree about the proper signification of their names. But what need we stand much about the matter? It sufficeth vs that we haue the Prophets scope and drift. He meant to decipher out an horrible desolation. As if he should say, Idumea shall be laid low wast, that it shall be left without inhabitants: for in stead of them it shall be replenished with wild beasts. See here the iust reward of those vaine glorious fooles, which built such sumptuous paces to continue the perpetuall memorie of their names forsooth. And here by the way also is a prediction of the chastisement wherewith this cursed nation was to be scourged for their crueltie, in regard they whollie bent themselves to seeke the ouerthrow and destruction of their brethren and neighbours.

Now howsoeuer it be doubtfull whether the Prophet speaks here of * Fates, * Hobgoblins, or * Satyres, yet all agree that these words signifie such beasts as haue the faces of men. We also see how cunning the Deuill is by diuers illusions, ghosts, and fearefull apparitions; by sounds, and hidious noyses, to inchant desolat places: but of this wee haue spoken in the 13. Chap. Now this vice which God hath so sharplie punished in one people, is almost common to all: for who is he that builds such stately houses, but the price thereof is wrung out of the poore? Sometimes by violence and extortion; sometimes by continuall molestations; so as the very morter, stones, & wood, are replenished with blood, in Gods sight: Therefore the stone shall crie out of y wall (saith Abacuc) and the beame shall answer vnto it, Woe to him that builds a Towne with blood, &c. Let vs not wonder at these strange iudgements and horrible changes then, when wee see that ambition draws with it these wicked extortions and robberies, but rather let vs serioulsie therein consider Gods iust reuenging hand.

The like was threatened before Chap. 13. 22. against-Babell.

* Ladies of the Fayries or Elves. * A Skritch-owle, or an vnclucky kind of bird.

Vers. 16. Seeke in the booke of the Lord, and reade: none of these shall faile, none shall ſhall want her make: for his mouth hath commanded, and his very ſpirit hath gathered them.

BY the booke of the Lord, ſome vnderſtand this propheticke; as if he ſtured them vp to reade it diligently: and ſo it is, as if he ſhould ſay, not one ſide of it ſhall faile, when the time is expired: as he addes by & by after. Others expound it more ſubtillic of Gods eternall decree, thus; Search whether he hath not ſo ordained it: but this expoſition is too farre fetched. I expound it of the law it ſelfe therefore, which by way of excellencie is called the booke of the Lord, becauſe out of it, the Prophets drew all their doctrine, as we haue often told you heretofore. That the noueltie of ſuch a ſact then, ſhould not make them reiect this propheticke, Iſaiab ſaith, that they were aduerted of it long before: and thus hee priuily taxeth their incredulitie, for remaining ſo groſſe conceied, as to eſteeme this thing altogether new and vheard of.

Now he hath good reaſon to bring them to the law, wherein God ſo often declares that he will haue care of his people, and will puniſh the wicked ſort. Seeing Mofes therefore ſpake of it ſo long agoe, the Prophet ſaith, that none ought to be ſo incredulous touching the truth of his propheticke, ſeeing he telles them of no ſtrange matters, but onely confirms that which Mofes hath long ſince teſtified and taught. This I take to be the nauiue ſenſe of our Prophet, who by theſe words meant to fortiſie the Iewes, to the end they ſhould wait with patience for the promiſe of the Lord, as being aſſured that the euent would manifeſt the truth of thoſe things, which were alreadye foretold to fall vpon the Idumeans, and other enemies of the Church. Why ſo? becauſe Mofes had teſtified (without cauſe of blame) that God would alwaies protect and defend his people. Againe, it was needfull they ſhould be aduerted hereof, that when the Idumeans ſhould be thus dealt withall indeed, they might not thinke it fell out by chance, but might acknowledge God the author of this iudgement. For ſuch is the peruerſitie of mans nature, that he beleeueth not, though he be forewarned, till the very pinch: and beſides, hee is giuen to attribute that vnto fortune, which proceeds from the iuſt iudgement of God. Iſaiab therefore prevents theſe inconueniencies, in willing them to aſke of Mofes touching the truth hereof, becauſe hee was reuerenced of all, in reſpect of his authoritie.

None of them, to wit, of the beaſts: for the Hebrewes vſe theſe two wordes Iſch, and Iſhab, not only when they ſpeake of men and women, but alſo of males and females of all kinds. For his mouth. He confirms that which he ſaid before; for albeit Gods works, be manifeſt inough, yet he makes vs comprehend them better by his mouth, that is to ſay, by his word, that thereby wee may haue a clearer ſight of them: and this is the right viewing of the works of God, to wit, when with a quick eie we behold them in the cleere glaſſe of his word. For we are too bold and preſumptuous, and giue out ſelues the raiues too much, velleſſe we be guided by this heauenlic doctrine, as it were by torch light. The pride and ouerwening of men therefore is here to be reſſeſſed, who will call into queſtion, and cenſure the iudgements of God and all his workes, without being ruled by his word: for if they would ſeeke in his booke, and aſke at his mouth, wee ſhould ſee greater pietie and religion in them then there is.

Now the Prophet in ſpeaking of the mouth of the Lord, meant to confirme that which was ſaid before touching this iudgement; the reaſon is, becauſe nothing can ſaie of that which iſſues out of his ſacred mouth. Iſaiab affirms it to be a thing impoſſible then, that that which is once decreed of God, which he alſo hath commanded him to publiſh in his name, ſhould euer be called backe by any meanes. And thus with this buckler, hee repulſeth all the difficulties which caſilie ariſeth, as oft as the promiſes of God doe ſurmount our reach.

I grant he ſometimes threatens with condition, as he threatned Abimelec, Gen. 12. 17. and Pharaoh, Gen. 20. 3. and the Niniuities, Ionah. 1. 2. whom afterwards hee pardoned, becauſe they repented: but if he haue once determined to puniſh men indeed, hee will ſhew by the effects, that hee is both true of his word, and able to performe it, as well as hee is able to deliuer his in the time of neede.

This the Prophet expreſſeth againe when he maketh the mouth and ſpirit. or breath to conſent together: for albeit the ſpirit of the mouth and the word, doe often ſignifie one and the ſame thing; and that the Hebrewes are wont to repeat one thing twice: yet here he makes an elegant alluſion vnto the breath, from which the words proceed, and of which they be formed: as if he ſhould ſay; this propheticke ſhall not want his efficacie, becauſe God, who by his voice hath commanded the brute heaſts to poſſeſſe Idumea, will alſo draw them thither with his onely breath.

Now hee ſpeakes of a ſecret inſpiration, What maruell is it then, if all beaſts aſſemble themſelues together at Gods firſt becke; as we ſee it came to paſſe in the deluge; yea euen in the creation of the world; when Mofes teſtifies, that at Gods commandment all beaſts came by and by vnto man, to ſubiect themſelues vnder his government? Gen. 2. 19. & 7. 15. And would they not thinke you haue been ſubiect and obedient to him ſtill, if he himſelfe had not been deſtroyed of this authoritie by his owne rebellion? But being now reuolted from God, the beaſts forthwith began to band themſelues againſt him, and to offer violence vnto him.

possesse it for euer, from generation to generation.

HE saith, that these monsters and wilde beasts are so put into possession of these places, that they can not be easily chased from thence, because God (himselfe) hath assigned it vnto them as their lot and inheritance. By this then he shewes, that whole Edom is vnder the Lords commandement, that is to say, to cast out the inhabitants thereof, and to giue the possession thereof vnto whom it pleaseth him, namely, to the Dragons, Ostriches, Sayres, Owles, Vultures, and such like.

I

Hence let vs gather, that it is in vaine for men to promise vnto themselves a perpetuall abode in any place whatsoeuer, further forth then they be readie to depart both out of place, yea, and calling to, as soone as God shall be pleased to dispossesse them. For we hold our places but as tenants at will in the place where he sustaines vs, nay, as pilgrims and strangers, whether we be in the countrie of our naturall birth, or out of it. If he be pleased to giue vs a quiet habitation in a certaine place for any long time together, we inioy it only by his speciall favor: for as soone as he speaks but the word, we must of necessity be packing thence. Moreouer, if we acknowledge he hath giuen vs to continue in any Countrey, there we may be bold to dwell safely and quietlie: for if he will maintaine the beasts right in keeping them safe in the place which he hath assigned them, will he not much more preserue men, for whose sakes he hath created heauen, earth, and the sea, with all that therein is?

We must impute it to a speciall favor of God if he suffer vs to inioy our abode in any place for a long space.

THE XXXV. CHAPTER.

Verf. 1. The desert of the Wildernes shall reioyce: and the wast ground shall be glad and flourish as the rose.

HE Prophet speaks heere of a maruelous change, for hauing in the former Chapter set forth the desolation of Idumca, and shewed how it should be brought vnto a desert, now on the contrarie he promisseth that the desert shall be made a frutesfull place, so as the barren and fallow field should become fat and flourishing, and the solitarie and wast places should be inhabited with people. This must needs be the peculiar worke of God, for as he blesteth the whole earth, so also with this blessing doth he sprinkle some parts of it more sparinglie, others more liberallie: sometimes he withdrawes it altogether, because of mans vnthankfulness.

This text is diuerslie expounded. Not to meddle with the fond glosses of the Iewes, who draw this and the like places to the temporall kingdome of the Messias, whom they forge at their pleasure. Some expound it of Iudea, others referre it to the vocation of the Gentiles. But let vs aduise our selues well, whether it will not agree better so to expound it of Iudeah, that vnder it we also comprehend the whole world. For he hath so prophesied the destruction of the whole world, that in y^e meane while he spared not Iudeah, contrariwise in as much as iudgement began at his owne house, or sanctuarie, the wast of the holie land was foretold in the more lamentable termes to the end it might serue as a speciall example. Hauing therefore aptlie and fitlie begun with Iudea, he now calles all the world a desert, because the wrath of God whollie ouerflowed it as a deluge. I therefore willinglie referre this place to Iudea first, and next to other parts of the world: as if he should say, When the Lord shall haue punished men for their iniquities, and shall be auenged vpon the Iewes and Gentiles, then the deserts shall be conuerred into an habitation, and God shall renew the face of the whole earth.

This restauration is an excellent testimonie of the goodnes of God: for are we not all worthie to perish, and to be vterlie consumed, when we prouoke God by our reuolt, but especiallie those whom he hath adopted for his peculiar people? But Isaiah had speciall respect vnto the Iewes, lest they should faint in their scattering.

Let vs now see how this prophesie was accomplished, or when it shall be accomplished. The Lord began some restauration of his Church when he brought his people out of of Babylon, but that was but a small beginning: I am not afraid therefore to say, that this, and the like places, are to be referred vnto Christ and his kingdome: for it can not otherwise be vnderstood nor fulfilled, if we compare other prophesies with this. But whē I speake of Christes kingdome, I vnderstand not only that which is here on earth, but that also which shall be accomplished at the last day, which for this cause is called the day of restoring & refreshing, Acts 3. 21. because the faithfull finde no permanent rest till then. The reason then why the Prophets speake so magnificallie of Christes kingdome is, in regard that they haue an eie vnto that great and notable day wherein the true and perfect felicitie of the faithfull shall be established.

The Prophet therefore hauing spoken of these horrible discomfitures, and hauing likewise foretold the miserable confusion that should befall the whole world, he now comforts y^e faithfull by this promise, telling them for certaine, that all things shall be restored. But this is only brought to passe by Christ, in whom we may be said to be renewed and gladdened in deed, for he it is who restores and puts in order whatsoeuer was and is confused: for out of him; what is there in heauen or in earth but ſhine, conſolation, and deſtruction. But wee are to note it diligently in the firſt place, that the world was fitted by ſuch chaſtiſements to receiue ſo great a fauour; and that by meanes thereof, this benefit of Chriſt might ſhine the more gloriously, which would haue ſeemed but darke and obſcure, if things had been already ſet in perfect order. And therefore it was needfull that the proud and haughtie hearts ſhould be tamed and humbled, that the taſte of this grace and power of Chriſt might be the more welcome.

How and when this prophesie shall be accomplished.

The Churches restauration began in the re- turne from Babel, proceeded at Christes first commiog, and shall be fullie accomplished at his second appearing.

Verſ. 2. It ſhall ſouriſh abundantly, and ſhall greatly reioyce alſo and ioy: the glorie of Lebanon ſhall be giuen vnto it: the beauty of Carmell, and of Sbaron; they ſhall ſee the glorie of the Lord, and the excellency of our God.

HE now more fully expreſſeth how great the effect of this grace of Chriſt is, by whoſe power and vertue, the things which before were deſolate and in poore eſtate, doe now ſouriſh. This repetition then ſerues for an amplification: and the verbe twice vſed, may be doubly expounded; that is, either to ſignifie the prolonging of time in the continuall growth: as if he ſhould haue ſaid, It ſhall not ſouriſh with a tranſitorie beautie; which vaniſheth away by and by, but with a continuall ſouriſhment, ſtedfaſt and permanent; that ſhall neuer fade nor fall: or, to note out the increaſe and continuall, or yeerly growth: for Chriſt enricheth vs, that from day to day he may augment his graces in vs.

The ſimilitudes following, doe further ſet forth this fruitfulneſſe: for hee contents not himſelfe to ſay, that there ſhould be plentiful harueſts, whereas before it was a wilderneſſe, and that the dry places ſhould wax greene, but hee adds that there ſhall be ſuch a glorie and excellencie, as is in Libanus, Carmel, and Sbaron: and albeit Carmel ſignifies a field that is tilled and fruitful, yet here it is a proper name, as the other two be. Now we haue ſcene heretofore, that theſe mountaines were much renowned, and held for the moſt wealthy places of all Iudeah, in regard of their goodly ſituation and abundance of fruits.

They ſhall ſee the glory. He now expounds that in plaine termes, which before he ſpoke figuratiuely. Men are barren and empie of all good things by nature, till they haue learned to know God aright: and therefore the beginning of our fruitfulneſſe is, that wee haue life put into vs by his preſence, which cannot be brought to paſſe without an inward feeling of the power of faith. For I make no queſtion, but the Prophet meant to raiſe vp our mindes higher, to the end wee might be brought to the conſideration of the abundance and fruitfulneſſe of heauenly graces. Men may be filled with bread and wine, and ſuch like, and yet in the meane while may be ignorant that God is the giuer thereof, and therefore ceaſe not to be miſerable ſtill; nay, which more is, abundance rather blindes them, and oftentimes makes them grow rebellious: but when God manifeſts himſelfe, and cauſeth vs to ſee his glory and excellencie, it comes to paſſe, that beſides the ſight of theſe bleſſings, we inioy them to our ſaluation.

Verſ. 3. Strengthen the weak hands, and comfort the weak knees.

WE may expound this place generally, as if he ſhould ſay; Let thoſe that feele their hands weak, put ſtrength to them; and let thoſe who feele their knees trembling and weak, be of good comfort, and be ſtrong: but the verſe following ſhewes, that all this belongs to the Miniſters of the word. For he ſpeakes to the teachers of the Church, & commands them to exhort, to prouoke, and quicken up the feeble, which were weak and fainthearted, to the end hee might make them more conſtant and chceretull. Now this is brought in to very good purpoſe, becauſe it could not be choſen, but that ſo many ſignes of Gods wrath (of which he ſpoke before) ſhould not terrifie and make the ſtoutest of all to tremble. For ſeeing aduerſities doe alwayes caſt vs downe, who is not afraid when God ſhewes himſelfe angry againſt our finnes, and proclaimes open war againſt vs? But the Prophet giues them in charge to cheere vp the ſorrowfull hearts, and thoſe that were as good as dead: and in the verſe following hee ſhewes how this ſhould be done.

Verſ. 4. Say vnto them that are fearefull; Be you ſtrong, feare not: behold, your God commeth with vengeance, euen with a recompence, and will come and ſaue vs.

BECAUſE it is God onely who makes his word effectual in our hearts by his holy Spirit, and puts this ſtrength into it, whereof he hath ſpoken; (for by faith onely wee liue and ſtand) therefore Iſaiah adds this promiſe, touching the grace that was to come, ſaying, Behold, your God will come. In the firſt place we haue to note, that Gods meaning is not to withdraw or keepe his grace in ſecret, but rather that it be publiſhed and communicated to all, to the end trembling hands and hearts may be ſtrengthened, and their ſpirits reuiued. This is the onely meane to inable vs to ſtand in the moſt deſperate tentations: for if wee be not ſet vpon our ſeete by the word of the Lord, we muſt needes quaiſe and loſe our hope. The Miniſters haue this charge then; to wit, to comfort the heauy hearted, to confirme the weak, and to ſtrengthen thoſe that are ready to fall.

Wee haue alſo to note of what exceeding force the word is, ſeeing it is able to ſtrengthen the weak hands, and to comfort the feeble knees: for if it had not power to inſpire this life into men, the Prophet would neuer haue ſpoken thus. And yet, if God ſhould onely

smite the eares in speaking, and should not therewithall cause the same to sinke into our hearts, all would be to no purpose. In that he attributes this efficacie vnto the word then, let vs also therein know that it is himselfe from whom that power proceeds, that so it might not be spoken fruitleslie, but might worke inwardlie vpon the conscience, not at all times, nor vpon all, but then, when it pleaseth him this to worke by the secret power of his holy spirit.

Hence we gather, that by the same word we be brought into the right way of Gods seruice, for without it we should remaine ignorant, all our reason would faile, and not only stagger, but our infidelitie would make vs become whollie brutish. It is more then need then that the Lord succor vs this way, that our feates being appeased, & our weaknes strengthened, we may be fitted to walke on in our christian course. For if we had these words Fear not, Behold your God, well fixed in our hearts, all faintings would soone vanish. Men no sooner feele that God is neere vnto them, but they cast away feare, or at the least so resist it, that they are not overcome of it. In nothing be carefull saith S. Paul, for the Lord is at hand, Philip. 4. 5. and 6. of which sentence we haue intreated at large elsewhere. It seems also that the Apostle to the Hebrues alludes to this place, Chap. 12. 3. and 13. where hauing forbidden them to be grieved or discouraged with Gods correction, he recites the words of our Prophet, and applies this sentence to all the faithfull, that so they might stirre vp themselves vnto perseuerance, and constantlie to hold out vnto the end, in regard they were to suffer many assaults.

How to be cald of fainting fits.

Neither is it superfluous, that the Prophet addes your God: for if we be not assured that he is ours, his comming shall bring vs terror rather then comfort. Therefore he sets not God forth here in his Maiestie, which casts downe the pride of the flesh; but his grace which comforts the afflicted & weak. We see then it is not without cause that he thus adorne God with this title, namely, that he is the protector of the faithfull, to retaine them in safetie.

Obiect.

If any obiect that God must needs be dreadful when he comes to punish in his wrath: I answer, that this vengeance is threatened against the wicked, and the enemies of his Church; so that albeit it be terrible vnto the, yet it shall bring consolation to the faithfull. This is the cause why he addes, that he will come to save: for otherwise the Lewes might haue replied, What benefit shall the destruction of the enemy bring vs? What shall we be the better for it? Should wee delight in their calamities? This is the cause I say why he saith expresse, that he will turne this vengeance and recompence (touching their enemies) vnto their saluation: for the saluation of the godly is alwaies joined with the punishment of the wicked. We shewed in the seauenth Chapter vers. 4. how the faithfull are deliuered from perplexed cares by this fauor of God, and by the hope of his defence. For the present; let vs obserue, that God is readie armed with vengeance, to the end his children may learne to rest vpon his help, and not to thinke him idle in the heauens: this is the cause of these repetitions, for infidelitie hath gotten such fast rooting in vs, that is not plucked vp by and by.

In the end of y verse there may be a double reading, to wit, either that God shall come with a recompence, or, that he will come with the recompence of God; choose whether of the two you like best, for the sense is all one. Now vnderstanding if you reade Elohim in the genetiue case, Recompence shall be called the recompence of God, because it properlie belongs vnto him, that so the faithfull may know assuredlie that he is no lesse a rewarder, then God.

Verf. 5. Then shall the eyes of the blind be lightened, and the eares of the deafe opened.

6. Then shall the lame man leape as an hart, and the dumb mans tongue shall sing: for in the Wildernes shall Waters breake out, and riuers in the desert.

HE speaks still of the promise touching the restoration of the Church, that he might comfort the hearts of the faithfull who should be sharplie assaulted with the grievous calamities of which he had foretold. Now seeing Christ is the fountaine from whence this restoration springs, we must of necessitie still haue recourse vnto him, if we will haue the right vnderstanding of that which Isaiah saith in this place, for by him alone it is in deed that we are begotten againe to the hope of the heauenlie life. Now it is not vnlke but our Prophet alludes to the prophesie which we haue seene in the 29. Chapter vers. 9. 10. where he threatens the Lewes with a fearefull blinding of their eies, and an hardening of their hearts, for which cause he here promisseth that at Christs comming mens mindes shall be enlightened and cleared by regeneration, whereas before they fate in darknes.

There is great force in the word Then: for thence we may gather, that being out of Christ we are dumb, blind, and lame: in a word, void of all abilitie to performe any thing that is good; but Christ renews vs by his spirit, that in him we may recouer our true health. By tongue, eyes, eares, and feete, he means all the faculties of our soules, which in themselves are so corrupted, that we can not draw thence so much as a good thought; till we be made new creatures by the benefit of Christ:

Being out of Christ, we are spirituallie blind, dumb, and lame.

for our eies can not see the truth, our eares can not vnderstand it, neither can our feete walke in it, vntill we be vnted vnto Christ. The vnderstandings of men indeed are very acute in apprehending mischiefe, their tongues eloquent and prompt vnto slanders, periueries, lying, and vaine speach, their hands and fingers but too nimble to theft and violence, their feete to shedding of blood: in a word, all the powers both of soule and bodie not only inclined, but

We are naturallie prone and wise to do euill, but to do well we haue no knowledge. Iere. 4. 22.

but also set on fire to doe wickedly. But come we to the performace of that which is good, every finger is a thumbe, as they say. Is it not more then needfull then that wee be reformed by the power of God, that thence wee may beginne to vnderstand, comprehend, speake, and put in execution those things which God hath called vs vnto ? for none can so much as say, that Iesus is the Lord, but by the holy Ghost.

This reformation then we see proceedes onely from the grace of Christ : those therefore which are conuerted vnto him, doe recover new strength, whereas before they were wholly vnfruitfull, and as good as dead. For out of him, we are either deprivied of all good things; or else they are so corrupted in vs, that they can be applied to no right vse, but are rather prophaned by our abusing of them. Iesus Christ hath both fully testified and taught the truth of this point, when hee gaue speech to the dumbe, sight to the blind, legs to the lame and impotent; but that which hee did to the body, was but a glimpse of that which hee works much more abundantly and powerfully in our soules.

In saying that the waters shall be digged out, hee adds other benefites wherewith the faithfull are enriched soone after the establishing of Christ his Kingdome : as if hee should say; You shall not neede to feare any want, after you be reconciled vnto God through Christ; for plentifull and perfect felicitie streames from him vpon vs. But these things the Prophet sets before vs vnder borrowed speeches.

First, hee saith the waters are digged. For whereas all things were barren before, now there should be great abundance. How poore and beggerly are we then, vnlesse God, for the loue which hee beares to Iesus Christ, powtes out his blessing vpon vs; which Iesus onely brings with him from his heavenly Father, and then imparts it to the members of his body. I denie not but the wicked thriue wonderfully in outward abundance; but all is accursed of God; because they are out of Christ: from whom onely flowes that true and sauing influence of all riches. Truly it were much better to wish death, rather then the abundance of wine and oyle, with which wee must needs swallow the curse of God. When Christ then shall beginne to manifest himselfe, then shall riuers and waters flow forth, to the healthfull vse of the faithfull.

Verſ. 7. And the dry ground shall be as a poole, and the thirstie as springs of water: in the habitations of dragons, where they lye, shall be a place for reedes and rushes.

HE confirms the former sentence; to wit, that Christ shall come to satisfie his chosen with abundance of all good things. Why so? Because waters shall issue and flow out of the dry ground. But we must remember what I said erewhile, to wit, that the Prophet here describeth out vnto vs, an Image as it were of euerlasting happinesse: for howsoeuer this outward change appeared not visible to the eye at Christs coming; yet Iſaiah not without good cause affirmes, that vnder his government, all things shall be fruitfull: for hee hath said before, that without him all things are accursed vnto vs. This whole world will bee but as a parched heath and wildernesse, where lions, dragons and wild beasts range after their pray, vntill the kingdome of our Lord Iesus Christ be erected and set vp amongst vs: let it bee once established; the faithfull shall seele no want at all.

The Lord did set his scale to the truth of this doctin, whē he deliuered his people out of Babylons captiuitie. Yet we are to seeke the accomplishment of this prophetic in Iesus Christ, who sets all things that are out of frame, in their perfect estate againe. For that deliuerance was but a darke shadow of this; and yet wee are not to seeke the full accomplishment of this promise in this world; neither, because as our blessednesse consists onely in hope, so must wee frame our mindes to wait for the same till the last day, when wee shall be put into the full possession of our happinesse, which now for the present is hidden as it were from vs. It sufficeth vs that God giues vs some sweete taste thereof in these our conflicting daies, that with the greater affection we might learne daily to aspire to that full felicitie which is reserved for vs in the heauens.

Verſ. 8. And there shall be a path way, and the way shall be called holy: and the polluted shall not passe by it: for he shall be with them, and walke in the way, and the fooles shall not erre.

THE Prophet promiseth the Iewes haere, that they shall be set at libertie to returne home againe into their country, to the end that being afterward carried captiue into Babylon, they might not imagin it to be a perpetuall banishment. And yet me thinkes this sentence should extend it selfe further. For as heretofore hee promised them abundance and store of blessings, where there was nothing but barrennesse; so hee saith now, that the place where none dwelt, shall be inhabited and frequented by multitudes. To bee short, that Iudea shall be in such league and amitie with other nations, that one of them shall mutually passe to the other without any danger at all: for where places are not inhabited, what traffique can men haue there? You shall see no man passe to and fro there. Hee saith then it shall come to passe that the Iewes shall haue egress and regress (as we vse to speake) to traffique with others, after they are come home, and shall bee settled in their Country.

But it is not without cause our Prophet adds, that the way shall be holy. For where there is much concourse of people, vices and corruptions haue their swinge on every side, How could it bee auoided then, but these great troupes must needs pollute the land, yea, and infect one another with a mutuall contagion. The Prophets meaning is then, that not only the land, but the minds of men should be purged and renewed by the benefit of Christ, that both the one and the other which in times past were wont to be prophaned by their vncleanes, should now be sanctified. And yet we must keepe that in minde which I haue touched before, to wit, that the Iewes whose way shall be made holy, should returne into their countrie again to serue their Redeemer therein. As if he should say, The land shall be purged from those filthie sinkes which in times past were in it, that it may be inhabited by the true seruants of God.

Death is rather to be wished, then that abundance which we must needes swallow Gods curse.

He ads also a more ample exposition when he saith, that no polluted shall passe by this land now hallowed by the Lord for his children. As if he had said, God will so separate the faithfull from the prophane, that they shall no more be mingled one with another: and this doubtlesse was to be esteemed as one of the principall blessings that the Church receiued. But this is not accomplished in this life, for hypocrits and contemners of God intrude theselues pell mell into the Church, and many times hold great places in it: and yet we may see some signe of Gods fauor this way, when he takes off the scumme from his Church by diuers meanes; only we must wait for the full purgation of it vntill the last day: yea, euen the seruants of God theselues, who are regenerated by the worke of his holy spirit, are yet compassed about with many corruptions: for albeit the Lord hath begun to sanctifie them, yet it shall not be perfected in this life: their old man is not whollie mortified, but only tamed and repressed to giue way for obedience to the new. Now because the Lord liues and reignes in them, and subdues their lusts, they are called holy, in respect of y^e principall part of regeneration in them.

The expositors turne the end of the verse diuerslie, where he saith, he shall goe with them: for some translate, They shall walke that way, and shall not erre after they haue been accustomed to walke in it, no, nor they which knew it before others. This way shall be for the children of Israell, those which walke in it shall not erre though they be foolish. But me thinketh the pronowne demonstratiue he, may better be referred vnto God. As if the Prophet had said, God shall goe before you to prepare the way, and the scope of the text also requires it to be so vnderstood: for it was not enough for them to haue an open way, vntill God went first before to direct his chosen. Our Prophet then magnifies this inestimable grace, by bringing in the Lord walking with his people: for if he (hew vs not the way we shall alwaies erre, being of our felus whollie addicted to vanitie. Nay, though the way be plaine, and be before our eies; yet can not wee discern it from that which is crooked: and although we haue made some good entrance, yet will our follie carrie vs hither and thither out of it by and by.

But our Prophet telles vs, that we shall not neede to feare missing of the way when we follow God, whilest he goes before vs; seeing it pleaseth him to take this office vpon him. It is very likely also, that he alludes to the historie of the first delurance, because God then led his people in the day vnder the cloude, and in the night vnder a pillar of fire, Exod. 12. 21. Therewithall he also shewes how needfull it is that God should gouerne vs: he also taxeth vs all of follie (be wee neuer so wise in our owne conceit) when he addest that the fooler shall erre no more: for God lets them wander by crooked paths, which thinke themselues wise enough to be their owne guides: if we therefore desire to keepe him in the way with vs, let vs acknowledge that we stand in neede of his direction. In the meane while he offers vs a good recompence when he promiseth that all such as forsaking their owne counsels shall be content to follow him, shall not erre in any thing though they be none of the wisest. And yet his meaning is not that the faithfull shall remaine fooler still after the Lord hath taken them by the hand: but he shewes what they were, before God vouchsafed to leade them the right way.

Vers. 9. There shall be no lyon, nor any some beasts shall ascend by it, neither shall they be found there, that the redeemed may walke.

HE addest yet another fauour of God, and that is, that the people shall be deliuered fro all dangers, though they walked through the deserts. Before, among other curses of God he put this; that wild beasts should meet the Iewes in all places which way soeuer they trauailed: but now, being receiued into fauor, they should be assailed neither by lyons, nor any other cruell beasts, because God would chase them away, that his redeemed might passe without hurr or danger. For albeit they had libertie to returne, yet they might well meete with many impediments in the way, and therefore he saith, The Lord shall remoue all annoyances that might any way stop their passage. Hence we gather a very necessarie doctrine, to wit, that the Lord not only begins the worke of our saluation, but continueth it vnto the very end, lest otherwise his grace might be frutelesse and vaine in vs. First then he opens the way to giue vs entrance. Secondly, he makes it plaine and easie, and takes away all impediments. Thirdly, he goes with, and before vs in the way. Lastly, he so continueth forth this grace in vs, that at the last he brings vs vnto his perfection. We must make vse of these foure points every day. For albeit our hearts be set (whilest we liue in this world) to aspire to our inheritance which is in heauen, yet Satan laies many stumbling blocks before vs, and we are inuironed on euery side with infinite dangers, but the Lord who hath set vs in this way, and goes before vs, leading vs by the hand, will neuer leave vs in the midway, but wil fullie perfect that vnto the end which he hath begun in vs by his Spirit. We may also obserue, that the mouthes of rauening and wilde beasts are muffled so by the grace of

We ought to make vse of this doctrine for the whole course of our life.

The Church shall not be fullie purged till the last day.

The elect are called Sainis in regard the principall part is regenerated.

God, they cannot hurt vs, nor exerciſe their crueltie vpon vs; according as it is ſaid in Hoſe. 2. 18. I will make a couenant for you with the beaſts of the field, and with the birds of the aire.

Verſ. 10. Therefore the redeemed of the Lord ſhall returne and come to Zion with praife: and euerlaſting ioy ſhall be vpon their heads; they ſhall obtaine ioy and gladneſſe, and ſorrow and mourning ſhall flee away.

THe Prophet confirms the former doctrine; to wit, that nothing ſhall hinder the Lord from working the full redemption of his people, becauſe he hath decreed it. He calles them the redeemed of the Lord: firſt, that he might prouoke them to the conſideration of his power: ſecondly, that they ſhould not meaſure the promiſe of their returne, by looking vnto humane helpeſ. Moreouer, hee ſhewes that they ſhall come to Zion. Thereby giuing them aſſurance, that God will not bring them out of Babylon, to leaue them in the way. Hence we learne, that we cannot enter into Zion, which is the Church, vntill God haue redeemed vs: for in this example of the ancient people, we haue a paterne ſet before vs, in which wee may ſee that no man is deliuered from vnder the tyrannie of the diuel (whoſe vaffals we are all of vs by nature) vntill God haue preuented vs by his grace. For who is ſufficient to be his owne redeemer? Now becauſe the worke of this redemption belongs in particular vnto the kingdom of Chriſt, it thereupon followes, that hee is onely the finiſher of it; as himſelfe ſaith, Iohn 8. 36. Againe, it is not enough to be once redeemed: for marke what the end of it is here, to wit, that he might remaine in the Church of God, and grow daily from faith to faith. Hath Chriſt redeemed vs then? let vs aime at this marke with all our might.

If any ſhall reply, that we need not goe far to be receiued into the Church, for wee are brought into it by Baptiſme: I anſwere, the Prophet vnder this figure, ſpeakes of the whole courſe of our life; becauſe the redeemed of the Lord are then ſaid to bee truly come into Zion, when hauing ended this their pilgrimage, they enter into the poſſeſſion of the heavenly life. We may therewithall alſo note that the more we profit in the grace of God, and proſper in the Church, the neerer we are vnto him.

By the words of joy and gladneſſe, hee meanes there ſhall be ſuch felicitie vnder the Kingdom of Chriſt, that we ſhall haue ample matter of reioicing. But wherein doth true ioy and gladneſſe conſiſt? And ſurely the true and onely way to obtaine gladneſſe, is to ſeele that God is reconciled vnto vs, whoſe fauor alone is ſufficient to yeeld vs perfect felicitie; yea ſo far, as to make vs reioyce in tribulation: Rom. 5. 1, 2, 3. Contrauwiſe, what can comfort or glad vs, if God becauſe vs of this reconciliation? Hence wee gather a ſure doctrine; to wit, the faithfull cannot be ſaid to reioyce as they ought, vnleſſe they ioine praiſes vnto God therewith: this ſpiritual ioy therefore muſt be diſtinguiſhed from carnall and prophane ioy and delights, into which the wicked plunge themſelues: for they reioyce indeed, but the iſſue ſhewes how dangerous this laſciuioſneſſe of the fleſh is, when wee flatter our ſelues in the contempt of God. It is not without good cauſe therefore that S. Paul calles this ioy ſpiritual; for it conſiſts not in the inioying of earthly things, as in riches, honours, treaſures, which periſh and come to nothing in a moment; but this ioy is ſecrete, it hath his ſeat in the heart, and out of it can it not be remoued nor taken away by any meanes whatſoeuer, though Satan inducers with might and maine vpon all occaſions to diſturbe and aſſaile vs.

And therefore our Prophet addes verie well, that it is euerlaſting, and drives away all ſorrow: for albeit the children of God do euery day vndergoe many anguiſhes, yet ſo great is the power of their conſolation which they haue by the Spirit, that in the end it ſwallowes vp all ſorrow and mourning. We glorie, ſaith Paul, Rom. 5. 3. euen in our tribulations: now this glorying or boaiſting cannot be without ioy. The Apoſtles went away reioicing from before the Councell, that God vouchſafed them the honour to ſuffer rebuke for the name of Ieſus: Act. 5. 41. I graunt y faithfull are not exempt vtterly from ſorrow: nay, they are oftentimes plunged in great diſtreſſes: it is moſt true, but they are not ouercome of them, becauſe by faith they looke directly vnto this redeemer, by whoſe power they are more then conquerors. For they may be compared to one that being gotten vp to the top of ſome high mountaine, beholds the Sunne, and is gladdened with the brightneſſe of it; and in the meane while ſhould ſee others vnderneath him below in the vallies, ſo choked and ſufed with fogges and miſts, that they could not behold this light.

The hitorie contained in the next Chapter, and that which followes, is as it were a ſeale ſet vnto the former prophecies.

We cannot enter into the Church till God haue redeemed vs.

THE XXXVI. CHAPTER.

Verf. 1. Now in the fourteenth yeere of King Hezekias, Sennacherib King of Assur came vp against all the strong Cities of Iudah, and tooke them.

IN this Chapter, and in that which folloves, the Prophet recites an excellent historic, which is set as a seale vnto the doctrine of the prophesies before going, touching the afflictions of his people: in which also, God promised to shew them mercy by repulsing the Assyrians, that so hee might deliuer Ierusalem and the holy land out of their hands. By this so manifest an effect then, the people perceived that the Prophet had not foretold these things in vaine. Furthermore, God had also a purpose to informe the posteritie to come, albeit those, which then liued had no lesse need of such a spectacle then their predecessors. Our Prophet hath often threatned that Gods vengeance was at hand; that the Assyrians taried but till God gaue them a signe to imploy themselves as his scourges in his seruice: on the other side, he published promises of consolation touching the Iewes; to wit, that God would succor them when all things should be brought to an after deale. And these things were all fulfilled, but the greatest part of the people closed their eyes, when they should haue beheld these famous iudgements of God: nay, which was worse, they shamefully despised the succour which God offered them. By all which circumstaues, their fortuthnesse was altogether inexcusable.

But this serued no doubt for the comfort of the little flocke, who would not by their infidelitie cast disgrace vpon so excellent warnings, but rather by beleeuing, in deuoured to purchase credit vnto them, for their sakes that should succede. And the Prophet for his part was hereby encouraged to hold on his course with the greater affection, and with the more inuincible constancie, when he saw before his eyes, that God did as it were from heauen so gloriously confirme the doctrine which he had preached. And because the truth of God is neuer honoured according as it deserueth, if it bee not furnished with infallible testimonies of his mightie power, he being willing to relieue our infirmie, makes vs here behold as in a glasse, his workes and word ioined together; so that looke what the Prophet caught vpon earth, God confirmed from heauen. But his calling was then manifestly confirmed indeed, when the Lord deliuered Ierusalem from the siege of Sennacherib, all things being then in such a desperate case, that the faithfull could not, but confesse that they were rid out of death by his onely power. Now yee see the reason why I haue said, that this historie is as an authenticke seale set to the former doctrines, the which (if it had been wanting) would not haue bin beleueed.

In the fourteenth yeere.] It is not without cause that he notes this circumstance of time, in which these things were done. For Hezekiah had then established the worshipp of God in his Country: and not content therewith, he had also summoned the Israelites by posts and messengers sent from all parts, with commandement that they should come to Ierusalem to offer sacrifices; to forsake that their long reuolt, that with one consent they might be reunited againe into their most holy faith, & serue God according to his word. Read 2. Chro. 30. 31. 32. Chapters. Euen when the Kingdome was brought into this good order; to wit, when superstitions were abolished, the Temple purged, and Gods true worship erected and set vp: then came the Assyrians to assaile Iudea, who wasted the Country, tooke the Cities, and subdued the land vnder his command. Ierusalem onely remained, within which Hezekiah was mued vp as in a prison.

Let vs consider a little now in what dumps this good King and his subiects were cast: for if we iudge of this calamity according to reason vnreformed, a man would thinke that God did vniustly suffer his seruant to bee brought into such extremities; because it seemed in some sort, that his godlinesse might deserue protection at Gods hands, and that hee should haue exempted him from all incumbrances; because his whole desire was bent to serue his God purely. For we may wel thinke that God brought not this scourge vpon him now for his negligence, excessie, or wantonneffe; much lesse for his superstitions or idolatry, seeing at the very first entrance into his Kingdome, he imploied himselfe to the vtmost, with exceeding diligence to establish religion in the puritie of it. What was Gods purpose herein then? Surely hee meant to try the faith and patience of his faithfull seruant.

Verf. 2. And the King of Assur sent Rabshakeh from Lachish towards Ierusalem vnto King Hezekiah with a great host, and hee stood by the conduit of the vpper poole, in the path of the suters field.

THE order of the historie may seeme somewhat here to be altered: for hee said before, that Sennacherib had taken all the Cities of Iudah: verf. 1. and now hee sends Rabshakeh from from Lachiſh which he had beſieged: Lachiſh was not taken yet then. But we are to note that oftentimes the courſe of an historic is diſioynted, ſo as that is recited laſt which was done firſt. Beſides the Scripture haue this figure frequēt in them (as in this place) where it is ſaid, that all ſtrong Cities were taken, although ſome no doubt eſcaped, which Hezekias notwithstanding was vnable to ſuccour. It ſeemed then that the Aſſyrian was become Lord of the whole land, ſeeing nothing was left but Ieruſalem, in which Hezekiah was impriſoned.

This historic is deſcribed more at large in the ſecond booke of Kings 18. & 19. Chapters, where it is ſhewed that Hezekiah uſed all the meanes he could to redeeme his peace, for he would haue had it almoſt vpon any condition. He gaue 3000. talents of ſiluer, and 30. of gold, which this tyrant exacted, for payment whereof, he was driuen to rob the Temple of the veſſels that were in it, and of the plates of gold which were faſtned vpon the gates thereof, becauſe his owne treaſure waſt ſpent. But as ſuch inſatiable gulſtes can neuer be filled, ſo when he had receiued this money he then falles to demaund greater things, and impoſed vpon him harder conditions then the former, that he might vex and aſſiſt this good King to ſuffer. For nauing once wrought vpo his mindes, he thought the ſecond time to draw him to whatſoever himſelfe liſted, only he waited for ſit oportunitie to begin warres aſreth.

But the people no doubt for their parts had well deſerued to be thus ſcourged for their wickedneſſes, according as it had been before propheſied: for albeit religion flouriſhed in outward ſhew, yet their liues remained vnchanged, impietie ouerflowed, and their hearts were as foule within as euer they were before. For as much as the people repented not of their ſinnes then, was it not needfull they ſhould be chaſtiſed with the greater ſeueritie in regard of ſuch a malicious obſtinacie? But becauſe the meſure of their iniquities was not yet full, God pacified the rigor of his wrath, and gaue them an admirable deliuerance when all things were become vtterlie deſperate.

Verſ. 3. Then came forth vnto him Eliakim the ſonne of Hilkiah, the ſteward of the houſe, and Shebna the Chancellor, and Ioah the ſonne of Aſaph the Recorder.

Menrion was made of this Eliakim in the 22. Chapter: to whom the Lord promiſed the chiefe place in the kingdom after the death of Shebna. But it ſeemes this was but a vaine and idle promiſe, ſeeing he is ſent to the enemy to ſue for fauour, as one, being readie to yeeld and ſubmit himſelfe to the mercie of ſuch a cruell Tyrant. This might alſo aſtoniſh the hearts of the faithfull, euen to make them call the truth of Gods promiſes into queſtion. Beſides, this good king was fo deſtituted of good ſeruants, that he was conſtrained to ſend Shebna with the reſt, though he knew him to be a diſloyall traytor. The word Sopher ſignifies a Scribe, and therefore it is often taken for Teachers, or ſuch as are learned: ſometimes for thoſe that keepe bookes, and haue the diſpoſing of the rowles or charters of Kingdomes. I haue tranſlated it Chancellor: for it can not be referred to the knowledge of the Law: we may alſo gather that this Shebna was in great credit, though he were put from the eſtate of being ſeward, or great maſter of the kings houſhold. The word Mazkir ſignifies a ſecretarie, or a maſter of the requiſits.

Verſ. 4. And Rabſhekeh ſaid vnto them, Tell you Hezekiah: I pray you, Thus ſaith the great king, the king of Aſhur, What confidence is this wherein thou truſteſt?

* This claufe I pray you, is not in Maſter Caluins text.

The Prophet ſhewes that theſe three Ambaſſadors (which repreſented in a manner the whole ſtate of the kingdom) were not only repulſed, but receiued diſgracefullie, & galled with inſupportable iniuries by the Captaine of this Tyrant. For he is ſo impudent as to aſke how Hezekias durſt preſume to rebell, no leſſe then if he had bin a man conuincid of Rebellion. Some expound the particule Na, I pray you, but it can not well ſtand with the honor (as you would ſay) of ſo proud and inſolent a Tyrant, to come vnto them by way of intreatie. He ſpeakes rather like thoſe who impoſe conditions vpon others, who are either vanquiſhed, or are readie to yeeld themſelues for feare, whom ſuch are minded to receiue to mercie, which we commonlie call, Sommer, that is, To call vpon, or To Summon one. But that his Summons might be of the greater authoritie, this Captaine ſpeakes in the perſon of his King: and with big words ſets forth his greatnes; the rather to daunt the heart of Hezekias, when he ſhould heare he had to deale with ſo powerfull an enemy. For his meaning was not only to ſay that Hezekiah was farre inferior to his Maſter the chiefe Monarch of the world; in compariſon of whom, Hezekiah was to be eſteemed no better then a meane Gentleman: but he calles him the great King, the King of Aſhur; that by theſe titles of his power and magnificence he might as it were darken the glorie of all other Kings, that ſo all might ſeeme to reſt in him alone. Which thunderbolts had bin ſufficient to haue terrified and feared the heart of Hezekiah, eſpeciallie ſeeing he was hurt vp, as I ſaid before, within the walles of the Citie, out of which he could not eſcape; much leſſe was he any way able to make his partie good againſt the violence of this Tyrant.

Verſ. 5. *I ſay, * Surely I haue eloquence, * Or, they are but words of the lips, but counſell & ſtrength are for the warre: on whom then doeſt thou truſt, that thou rebelleſt againſt me?*

Whereas we read in the holic hitorie, Thou haſt ſaid, it may be expounded thus, thus, to wit, that Rabshakeh makes as if hee knew Hezekiah his thoughts: as if hee should say; Thus thou deliberatest with thy selfe. But the sense comes all to one, though we reade this word in the first person: for Rabshakeh speaks as one that had gaged the depth of Hezekias his enterprises, and had been made acquainted from point to point with all his purposes; and therefore scemingly reproching him, faith, I perceiue thy consultations well enough: but alas! they are but words of the lippes.

Now this clause is diuersly expounded: some reade, Thou saiest thou hast not the words of the lips onely: that is, thou braggest not onely of eloquence, but of courage and counsell. Others, Thou hast speech indeed, but counsell and strength are fit for war. But I approue not of them who take words for prayers; for that would beea sense constrained, and too far fetched.

Thus vnderstand it then; Hezekias hath words of the lippes: that is to say, hee tickles your eares with goodly discourses and sweete promises, to keepe you from revolting: he hath indeed plentie of words, as they say, but of what value are they to wage warre against a mightie potentate? as if he should say; I am not ignorant what Hezekiah doth, nor vpon what principles he staies himselfe, euen vpon sweete wordes: but these are nothing worth to wage warre withal; for counsell and strength are needfull for that. It may also be well referred to the Egyptians; as if hee should say; that Hezekias plaid the foole to suffer himselfe to bee gaged with faire promises. For we need not doubt but the Egyptians were forward enough in promising mountaines and wonders, although they were slow enough in performing anie thing. But sofar as such as he will speake of this matter anon, I willingly thinke that he derides Hezekias, as one who being stript of all furniture fit for warre; onely entertained his people with wordes full of vaine boasting.

Vers. 6. Loe, thou trustest in this broken staffe of reede on Egypt; whereupon if a man leane, it will goe into his hand, and pierce it: so is Pharaoh King of Egypt, vnto all that trust in him.

IT is very likely that this is distinguished from the former sentence. For hauing said that Hezekias entertained his people onely with glozing and flattering words, & thence concluding that his confidence was vaine; he comes now to other particulars, and inductors by all means to weaken the hearts of the people, that by the discouraging of them, he might with the greater facility cause them to yeeld. First, he labours then to bring the King into disgrace with his subiects; secondly, he awakens the hearts of the subiects, by telling them that the helpes vpon which they relied concerning Egypt, should no way help them; and therefore they were very vnwise to

First, he compares Egypt to a staffe of reede; because of their weaknesse: then by way of amplification he adds, that it is broken thirdly, that it is so far from staying him that leane vpon it, that it will rather pierce his hand. The summe of all which is, that the confidence which the Iewes had in the Egyptians, should not onely be frustrate, but also hurtfull. And no doubt but Rabshakeh had had good cause thus to tax them, if Hezekias had indeed relied vpon the Egyptians. But he falsly & shamefully accuseth this good King of that whereof he neuer had so much as a thought. And yet God in the meane while paid this rude and rebellious people home with this reproch, which they worthily deserued, in suffering to wretched a cause, thus to scorne their reuolt and disloyalty. Our Prophet had sharply censured this offence before, but his reprehensions were receiued; eury one turned away his eares: was it not good reason then that the Iewes, who so vnworthily disdained the Prophet, speaking vnto them in the name of God, should be sent to schoole to such a Master as railing Rabshakeh was.

By this example we are admonished, that it is no maruell if at some time vnbeleueurs (who cast off the counsel of God, which tends to their saluation, setting light by all prophecies) bee forced to heare these and the like flouts from their enemies, with which Rabshakeh the Captaine of the Kings armie heere proudly and disdainfully scornes the Iewes. Also we may see how great difference there is betweene the admonitions of the Lord, and the reproches of Satan. When God would withdraw our mindes from trusting in the arme of flesh, he pronounceth this general curse; Woe be to him that trusts in man. That all the world being brought to nothing, wee might content our selues with him alone. But to encourage those whom before he had cast downe, hee sets this remedie before them; Blessed is v' man that trusteth in the Lord, and whose hope the Lord is, &c. Ier. 17. 5. & 7. Contrariwise, Satan accusing vs for our vaine hopes, therewithallicites vs vnto dispaire, draws vs from euill to worse; and in the end, to vse vnlawfull meanes, as Rabshakeh heere doth; who scornes the hope which the Iewes had in the Egyptians helpe, that hee might bring them from that to rest vpon God onely: but hee puts the Assyrians betweene, as if saluation could appear from no piace else. He names Pharaoh, but he also comprehends all Egypt.

Vers. 7. But if thou say vnto me, We trust in the Lord our God, is not that he whose high places and whose altars Hezekiah rooke downe; and said to Iudah and to Ierusalem; Ye shall worship before this altar.

Rabshakeh vseth an argument which consists of these three members; to wit, either Hezekiah thinks himselfe strong enough to reſiſt, or hee looks for helpe from Egypt, or, he truſts in God. If he reſt vpon his owne ſtrength, it is his folly: for what is he in compariſon of my maſter? As for Egypt, let him neuer expect helpe thence, but rather hurt and loſſe. His onely ſtay that he reſts vpon, muſt be the helpe of God; but had he not ouerthrowne his altars, and aboliſhed his ſeruice? will hee not therefore rather puniſh then helpe him? Rabſhekeb then in a word ſtrips this good King at once, of all ſuccour both of God and man. Satans drift in this, was not onely to pierce the heart of the King, and to ouerwhelme him vnder the burthen of this affliction; but alſo to ſtir vp the Commons (who commonly are factious and inconstant) to rebellion. Many where of no doubt yet doted vpon their old ſuperſtition, and would eaſilie haue been drawne to a reuolt by this ſubtile deuiſe; becauſe the ancient religion forſooth, which had long cuſtome ioined with it, was now changed by Hezekias, who in their conceit was iuſtly puniſhed for his raſhneſſe. For example, if any thing now fall out otherwiſe then well, the Papiſts by and by cry out with open throats, that it is a iuſt vengeance of God vpon vs, becauſe we haue bene ſo bold to aboliſh their traditions and ceremonies, receiued for ſo many hundred yeeres.

They that cannot indure to heare Gods voice in the ministerie of his word, shall be forced to heare of the same things by such as shall be like to their liking:

Verſ. 8. Now therefore giue hoſtages to my Lord the King of Aſſur, and I will giue thee two thouſand horſes, if thou be able for thy part to ſet riders vpon them.

His concluſion is, that Hezekias ſhall doe beſt to yeelde himſelfe without trying it out by fight, and to promiſe obedience for euer vnto the Aſſyrian. Which, that he may the rather perſwade him vnto, hee caſts his powerie againe in his teeth. As if hee ſhould ſay; If I ſhould giue thee two thouſand horſes, wert thou able to furniſh them with ſufficient riders amongſt all thy people? For hee offers him not horſes by way of honor, or that he meant in good earneſt ſo to doe; but rather to afflict and wound the heart of this good Prince. The clauiſe, I will giue thee, muſt be thus reſolued; Although I ſhould giue thee two thouſand horſe, yet wert not thou able to finde horſemen enough for them. I am not ignorant what the expoſitors write vpon this place: but whoſoever ſhall conſider euery circumſtance well, will eaſilie iudge that this was ſpoken in contempt.

Verſ. 9. For how canſt thou deſpiſe any Captaine of the leaſt of my Lords ſeruants, and put thy truſt on Egypt for chariots and horſemen?

Hee now confirms the former ſentence, & ſhewes that Hezekias is ſo far off from reſiſting the power of Sennatherib, that hee is ſcarſe worthy to be compared with the leaſt of his Captaines. But what is the reaſon that he liſts himſelfe thus arrogantly? No doubt becauſe the Iewes ſhould not preſume any thing at all in regard of the abſence of the King of Aſſur, who was now beſieging Lachith. For albeit he was not yet come with all his hoſt, Rabſhekeb brags notwithstanding, that his Leſſenants are ſtrong enough; to the end Hezekias and the people might without delay yeelde themſelues vnder his obedience.

Verſ. 10. And am I come now vp without the Lord to this land to deſtroy it? The Lord ſaid vnto me; Goe vp againſt this land and deſtroy it.

Now he ſets vpon Hezekias another way; namely, that he ſhall aſſemble his forces in vaine, together for his defence. For he pretends that the King hath not now to deale with a mortall man like himſelfe, but rather with God himſelfe; becauſe he is come vp to deſtroy the land of Iudeah at his appointment. As if he ſhould haue ſaid; As many of you as ſhall reſiſt me, ſhall reſiſt God: and then your reſiſtance will be to ſmall purpoſe. Hence let vs learne, that albeit we be giuen to piety, faithfully inducuring by all means to aduance the Kingdome of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, yet wee muſt not looke for all that to be exempt from all croſſes, but rather to fit our ſelues for the bearing of them. For the Lord will not alwaies crowne our vertuous life with earthly rewards: truly ſuch recompences were vniſiting for vs. As namely, abundance of riches, inioying of our ward peace, and hauing all things that heart can wiſh. For are not the wicked therefore eſteemed the onely happy men in the eyes of the world, becauſe they are ſrolike, quiet, healthfull, and haue the world at will. Thus then it might ſeeme that our condition ſhould be no better then theirs.

God crownes not vertue alwaies with earthly honours.

But it behoues vs alwaies to ſet this example of good King Hezekias before our eyes, who after he had wholly ſet himſelfe to reforme religion, and to ſet vp the pure worſhip of God, was yet ſharply aſſailed with afflictions, ſo far forth, as he was not far off from deſpaire; to the end, that when we ſhall think we haue done much, wee be ſtill ready notwithstanding to ſuſtaine all ſorts of combats and perſecutions. Neither to be out of heart, if at the firſt our enemies be too hard for vs; in ſuch wiſe, that we looke euerie moment to bee ſwallowed vp aliuie of them. For theſe great crackers, and haughtie ſpirits, will eaſilie bee taken downe, after they haue caſt vp their firſt bubbles: yea, after they haue ſpit forth their venom, all their pride will quickly vaniſh and come to nought.

Note.

Rabſhekeb magnifies the greatneſſe and power of his King, to aſſright the heart of King Hezekias, ſee I pray you what courſe the wicked ſort takes with vs: they aſſaile vs by threats, they labour to ſhake our faith and patience by many feares; or rather, Satan himſelfe doth it indeede in their perſons. For who ſees him not ſpeaking heere in the person of this railing miscreant? Nay, which more is, he takes vnto him euen the person of God himselfe, and so transformes himselfe into an Angell of light. For what saith the Holy Ghost in other places? He that rests vpon the help of man, seeks his owne destruction, because man is a thing of nought, weake and brittle. Doth not Rabshekeh affirme the same here? Speakes he any otherwise then if he were a Prophet sent of God? It behoues vs therefore wisely to distinguish betweene the voice of God, and men, who deck and adorne themselves with his name vnder false pretences, for the Deuill can turne himselfe into many shapes, that he may appeare in the likenes of God. But this rayler had no cause at all to reproach Herzekias with this, as hath been said: for he trusted not in his forces, neither was he puffed vp in any confidence of the strength of Egypt.

But it is our portion euen then to be railed on when we doe the most good. Satan hath skill enough in deed to allaile vs by such engines, and causelesse to make vs stinke as it were in the presence of men, which I confesse is a very dangerous temptation: for we desire to maintaine our credits with men, and are much offended when they take that in euill part which is done with an honest and vpright affection; and therefore Satan labors in nothing more, then by slanders to cast disgrace vpon that which we haue done with pure consciences, for either he forgeth against vs some crime whereof we are innocent, or chargeth vs with fallhood, imputing things vnto vs which we neuer meant. But our integritye must be vnto vs as a brasse wall, whereby we may remaine vnmoueable, as Herzekias here doth against all such accusations and slanders.

As touching the latter member of this sentence, wherein Rabshekeh taxeth the King, because he had abolished Gods true worship: who sees not that this is a meere slander. Herzekias had indeede ouerthrowne the Idols, and the Idolatrye which God abhorred. But what maruell is it if the Infidels know not how to distinguish betweene the false god and the true, betweene religion and superstition? but we haue too much experience of this euen amongst our selues. For the Papists who are plunged ouer head and eares in their superstitions, accuse vs for abolishing infinite humane traditions, and complaine that we haue almost eleene ouerthrowne Gods whole seruence, and thus they stand railing at vs as this Rabshekeh doth. Should God help these heretiques who haue destroyed his Altars, profaned his Temples and all things else, which were by vs set vp in such a decent and goodly order? For the Papacie was all glorious without, euery one admired it: but alas, we remaine nothing but a few bare and naked ceremonies altogether without pomp. Will you see the reason then why they thinke the seruice of God is ouerthrowne? It is because they measure it by outward things. Therefore when any aduersitie befallles vs, then by and by they cry out: nay, it is well enough, all the fault is in the selues. These heretiques haue brought the whole world vnto ruine by their heresies. And if they see vs plunged into any miserie, then they open their mouthes wider against vs then euer before. Yet must we still remaine strong in the faith against such horrible outcries, and must also let them know, that that which they pretend to be the seruice of God, is not; but is rather meere dotages, which we haue worthelie abolished: yea, we must not let to tell them, that all such things as haue been forged in mans braine appertaines not at all to Gods worship, but are to be esteemed as the illusions of Satan, being of all other things the most dangerous. We ought then as you see to stand out with an inuincible faith against all sorts of these imputations, wherby Satan in deuors to darken and smother the light of true religion.

But one might haue thought it strange at the first blush, that Herzekias had ouerthrowne all the Altars but one; and prophaned all the Temples, only one excepted: but this only defence may serue in stead of many, that nothing was done for which he had not good warrant out of Gods word; and therefore was he contented with one Altar, because God had forbidden them to erect many: he brake downe all the Images, because they had been vnauidelicly erected and set vp, against the doctrine of the law. We at this day haue the same difference with the Papists, for they blame vs for nothing more, then that we haue castrated an infinite number of their bald Ceremonies, and haue only retained those things which God hath ordeined. But in this matter we are not to dispute to nor fro touching y which may please mē; but rather how we may approue our actions vnto God.

Verf. 11. Then said Eliakim, and Shebana, and Ioab, vnto Rabshekeh, Speake I pray thee to thy seruants in the Aramitis language (for we vnderstand it) and talke not with vs in the leues tongue, in the audience of the people that are on the wall.

WE further see by this circumstance how farr Herzekias abased himselfe, whilst he sought by mild increasies vnto the seruants of his enemies, by his Embassadors. Secondly, the pride of Rabshekeh, in reiecting to curiously these humble requests. Thirdly, the indignitie of such a refusal, which is the greater, in regard the sute was for the obtaining a thing of so small importance. Hereby it is manifest that Herzekias was so careful to appease the rage of this Tyrant, that almost quite forgetting his royall dignitie, he endeuored to pacifie him with as lowly termes as was possible: if we be therefore wrongfullie oppressed, let vs not thinke much to part with some of our right in giuing soft answers.

Now in that he thus humbled himselfe in the sense of his owne weakness, because he was vnable to resist the Assyrian, it serues greatlie for the setting forth of Gods glorie, because he saueth this people as it were out of the lions iawes: for this Reluerance had neuer been so glorious, if they had bin fitted onely from some pettic danger. But seeing they were at the pits brink; the power of God shines so much the more, in that by so rare a miracle he chased away and discomfited the enemy, who now had put his knife to their throats as it were.

The Ambassadors besought Rabshakeh that he would not speake thus before the people; because they were naturally mutable and inconstant, and therefore might suddenly be drawne to reuolt: secondly, they were timorous, and therefore would quickly tremble euen at the thaking of a leafe: and therefore they request Rabshakeh not to speake in the Iewes language, for they sought nothing else but how they might find a fit meane to redeme their peace. This good King likewise did all hee could to appease the rage of the tyrant, but to no purpose; for the Ambassadors obtained nothing of Rabshakeh. The more he intreated, the fiercer grew hee, and overflowed in all pride, as the proprietie of the insolent is to doe.

Verf. 12. Then said Rabshakeh; Hath my master sent mee to thy master, and to thee to speake these words, and not to the men that sit on the wall, that they may eat their owne dung, and drinke their owne pisse with you?

WE see here the madnesse and wouluifnesse of this tyrant: whence also wee may perceiue, that the state of King Hezekias was in great danger. For Rabshakeh speakes here like a conqueror, and behaues himselfe towards Hezekias, as if hee had been no King at all, but rather his vassall or slaue. In that wee see him then thus swollen with pride, we must needs thinke that Hezekias on the other side was not a little cast downe, euen as one ouerwhelmed with sorrow, and left destitute of all succour: so as both in his owne, and all mens iudgements else, there was no way but one with him. Let vs also gather hence, that Rabshakeh was not sent thither to offer any conditions of peace, but rather to receiue the King to mercie, and to terrifie the people; for the bringing whereof to passe, Sennacherib had giuen him a puissant armie.

Hee also makes his bragges, that he hath not to doe with the King, so much as with the people; to whom he spake forsooth for their benefite and commoditie. Now that hee might make them quake and tremble yet more, he sets before them the miseries and calamities into which they plunged themselves, if they harkened vnto Hezekias; to wit, that they must needs die for hunger; because the extremitie would be so great, that of force they shal be constrained to eat their owne dung, and to drinke their owne pisse. They should therefore shew themselves wise, and such as had care of their owne safetie, if they forthwith yielded themselves to his mercie.

Verf. 13. So Rabshakeh stood and cried with a loud voice in the Iewes language, and said; Heare the words of the great King, of the King of Assur.

THE Prophet shewes by what praesises Rabshakeh inducoured to discourage the hearts of this people. And first hee telles vs that he spake in the Iewes language, notwithstanding that the Ambassadors had besought him to speake in the Aramites. Now it must needs be a great couraieue to the hearts of the faithfull, to heare this holy tongue, which was dedicated to the mysteries of heauenly wisdom, to be thus prophaned and prostituted to such horrible blasphemies: neither could it be auoided, but this reutation throwdlic shaked the vnfirm and weak. But hence we may note, that there are no enemies more noisome then those that speake in our owne tongue. Of which, we haue experience now in very many who learne our tongue, that is to say, our manner of speech; that they may the better insinuate themselves into the cares of the simple and ignorant, to turne them away from the truth.

Thirtie yeeres agoe the Papists had a barbarous language, vtterly estranged from the stile of the holy Ghost: there was scarcely to be heard amongst them, one word that faoured any thing at all of Christianitie: but now they haue learned to varnish ouer their blasphemies with the language of Canaan, that so we might take them for honest men. And thus wee see the diuell hath filed and furbished their tongues; for he is their father and instructor, as hee was in times past vnto Rabshakeh.

When it is said, he stood vp; it is to set forth the pride and insolencie of this varlet, for his outward gestures manifest sufficiently how arrogantly he behaued himselfe. No doubt he stood before; but now hee raiseth vp himselfe, to be the better seene and feared of the Iewes. And hauing yet once againe told them the greatnesse of his King; he addes vnto it the message with which he was sent. For it is one of Satans policies with high wordes to set forth the power of our aduersaries, and to make the dangers seeme greater then they be indeed, to bring vs out of heart: for wee faint by and by, as soone as our eies are but a little dazed with the glory of earthly things. Against it therefore we are to oppose the power of God, which will be sufficient to arme vs with strength, against all the powers of darknesse. The enemies cease not to brag proudly, euen with open mouth of their greatnesse and power, and scorne our feeblenesse and weaknesse; but if the Lord be with vs, what should astonish vs?

Verf. 14. Thus saith the King; Let not Hezekiah deceiue you: for he shall not be able to deliuer you.

IN giuing to his Master the title of a King, he speakes of Hezekias as if hee were but some some common person, and giues him no title at all. Also, not content to continue his slanders against this good man, he now disgorgeth his venome euen against God himselfe, calling the trust & confidence which Hezekias had in his fauor, (whereunto he also exhorts all his) nothing but impostures and deceits.

Slanders of
the Papists,

Wee at this day are assailed with the like slanders of the Papists, when they say, we do nothing else but seduce and leade men into perdition, by teaching the to trust perfectlie in one only God. But we neede not maruell much if they cast those reproches vpon vs which were cast vpon this good King, seeing they proceed from the same author and father of lies, euen the Deuill. Where he saith, Hezekias is vnable to deliuer his people, it was very true in deed, vnlesse God did also put to his hand. Neither did Hezekias attribute this vnto himselfe, to rob God of his honor: but freeilie protested, that his owne safetie, and the safetie of his people depended vpon God only. But it was needful that this aduerfarie should disguise his words, as the wicked doe at this day, whē they meane to defame our doctrine, for they forge faire and goodlie pretexes to make our words hereticall in shew, so as they easily deceiue the hearers, vnlesse they haue their eyes in their heads, to consider of all things wisely.

Vers. 15. Neither let Hezekiah make you to trust in the Lord, saying, The Lord will surely deliuer vs: this Citie shall not be giuen ouer into the hand of the King of Assur.

NOW Rabshekeh recites Hezekias his exhortation, by which he encouraged the people, and adds his refutation, as if it had been but a vaine speech, euen the inuentions of his owne braine: whence it appeares, that the wicked make none account at all of the power of God, although they can speake of it to serue their owne turne. For albeit he denies not plainly that God is able to help his people if he would, but makes them beleeeue he is angrie with them, and therefore is their enemy, yet in ouerthrowing their faith (as much as in him lies) he abolisheth the power of God, because his meaning was so to smite the hearts of this ponne people with terror, that they should be constrained through despair to subiect themselves to the lawes of this victorious Tyrant.

Moreover, by another subtletie he also inducours to wring frō them their trust in Gods help, in that he assures them as we shall see in the next verse with promises of inioying plētie and ease. For what is able to worke in vs a desire to reuolt from God sooner, then whē we are drawne thereunto with the shew of profit and pleasure. If the world begins once to smile abuse vpon vs, and to glad our hearts, then behold the hope of eternall life begins forthwith to vanish, for our senses alwaies dote vpon present things. Rabshekeh hauing armed himselfe with this engin, giues them this admonition, Depend not vpon vncertaine hopes, rather take that which is certaine. This maner of speech hath great efficacy in it to allure vs to a reuolt. For men are apt to nothing more, then to be possessed of that which may bring them profit: and it is exceeding irksome and tedious vnto them to be deferred, or to hang in suspence, so as to preferre the good which is yet farre off, before the commodities which are before their eyes. See *Rabshekeh*s argument then: Hezekias promiseth you help from God, but you see no such matter: he therefore seekes to captiue your wits in the expectation of things vnertaine: but the King my Master will not only promise, but wil performe in giuing you those things which you see. This might seeme to be a very strong argument. But let vs finde out the fallacie, for Satan is often wont by such sleights to turne vs from depending vpon Gods prouidence.

The Lord calles vs to the hope of eternall life which as yet is hidden from vs: (for we hope for die things which wee see not.) Hee promiseth that he will be our Saviour: in the meane while he suffers vs to languish and faint many times, so as it seemes all our hope is but in vaine, if we only keepe our eyes fastned to the estate of present things. Satan sets now vpon vs, and thus begins to whisper in our eares. And why dost thou hope thus in vaine? What is the frute of thy faith? What expects thou out of this world? In a word, we must be armed to wrestle thus against Satan euery day. When Christ calles vs to heauen, Satan inducours to hold vs groueling to the earth. We must therefore stick close to the promises which are set before vs, that hoping about hope, we may stand fast in the Lord, and neuer suffer our selues to be seduced nor withdawned from trusting in him by any allurements whatsoever.

Vers. 16. Hearken not to Hezekiah, for thus saith the king of Assur, Make appointment with me, and come out to me, that euery man may eat of his owne vine, euery one of his owne fig-tree, and drinke euery man the water of his owne well.

Wee must walke by faith, and not by sight. 1. Cor. 5. 7.

Rom. 8. 25.

Wee haue need to put on the whole armor of God. Ephes. 6. 11.

Or, make a blessing.

WHILEST he deuisech how to estrange the peoples hearts from Hezekias, he therewithall entiseth the vnto present pleasures, that they may quite forget God, and wait no longer vpon him. As if he should say, Trust not in God, Trust rather in my King. See how Satan playes the Sophister: for in darkening Gods goodnes by his fogges and mists, and masking vs with vailles of false hopes, he sets vpon the creatures in stead of the Creator, to wrap vs vp in his nets.

Well, Rabshekeh presents profit, pleasure, and ease before them by this vaine brag; to wit, God offers you benefits, but they are far off: I haue mine here in mine hand. Now albeit he vseth Hezekias his name here, yet vpon the matter, the comparison stands betwene God and the Assyrians. For Hezekias being indeed the true seruant of God, he played not the hypoerite in boasting of his trust and confidence dence failly: but reſting vpon the immutable and vnchangeable promiſes, hee faithfully exhorted the people (as his dutie was) to reſt quietly vpon God. Contrariwiſe, Rabſhekeb clothes his King with Gods ſpoiles as it were, and as the ſeruant and vaſſall of the diuell, indeuoured to withdraw the peoples minds from their true allegiance vnto God, to all impietic.

To make bleſſing with him, ſignifies friendly to pacific: as if he ſhould ſay; Fight not, venture not your ſelues that way; but yeeld your ſelues, and ſubmit you freely to my King. Now Sennacherib not onely craues audience, but would alſo haue them to do homage and fealtie; which that he might the better draw them vnto, hee couers this odious tenne of ſeruitude, with the word bleſſing. Hee counſels them to redeeme their peace and other commodities, which they inioied before at his hands, by this woſull reuolt; to wit, that they ſhould forſake Hezekias to cleaue vnto him. Now it was the moſt ſeruile and miſerable condition that might be, to forſake this good King whom God had eſtabliſhed, who alſo bare the image of Chriſt: for what was it elſe but to renounce God himſelfe, who had created and ſet vp in the middeſt of them this ſigne of his heauenly fauour?

Verſ. 17. Till I come and bring you into a land like your owne land, euen a Land of wheat and wine, a land of bread and vineyards.

Now hee addes a condition much more vile then the former: for he ſhewes that peace can no way be procured with Sennacherib, but by yeelding themſelues vnto Baniſhment. And what was that but to forſake Gods true worſhip, to throw themſelues into ſuperſtitions; and willingly to caſt themſelues out of that inheritance which God had giuen them: But in regard that Rabſhekeb ſpeaks to men deſolate, and ſuch as were aſtoniſhed with the preſent danger, hee boldly challengeth of them, whatſoever himſelfe liſtech; to the end they may at the leaſt procure the ſafety of their liues.

And here we ſee as in a glaſſe, that his words are nothing elſe but a liuely representation of thoſe temptations & aſſaults, wherewith Satan daily laies ſiege againſt our faith. For all his practices tend onely to plucke vs away from our confidence in God, by the allurements and pleaſures of this world. What? is it not good to ſleepe quietly in a whole ſkinne, and to redeeme thy peace any way? Thou wouldeſt be happy; doth not happineſſe conſiſt in the plentiful inioying of all things? But then eſpecially he aſſailes vs thus, when he ſees vs in miſericie; then is he bold, & dares more vehemently ſollicite vs to ſhake off Gods yoke; but ſo, that ſtill he doth it with fetches and cloſe conuiances, as hee may beſt couer our reuolt with the ſhew of ſome good.

Now when he hath gotten vs in his nets ſo far forth, that we eſteem better of things preſent, then of thoſe to come, he addes this condition with it alwayes; to wit, that we will now be his ſeruants, and runne at his becke: and this we can by no meanes eſcape, when hee hath once tickled vs with his deceitfull hopes, and with the taſte of earthly things.

But becauſe this word exile, founded ſomewhat harſhly and vnpleaſantly in the cares of this people, it being no eaſie matter for them to leaue the ſweetneſſe of Iudea; Rabſhekeb willing to let them know that they ſhould looſe nothing by abandoning their Country, telles them, that the Country into which they ſhould be caried, was no leſſe fruitful and plentiful then theirs. And thus hee went about to dazle their eies, that they might not thinke themſelues to be looſers any way by the bargaine. Yet doth he finely omit that which was the principall, to wit, the ſeruice and worſhippe of God, the Temple, the Kingdome, and ſacred order & government, with other matters appertaining to the heauenly inheritance. For alas! without theſe, what felicitie is there? Wherefore let euery one of vs in the feare of God learne, to fix the right knowledge of ſpiritual benefites faſt in our hearts: for it is not for nought that Dauid ſaith, he would rather be a doore keeper in the houſe of his God, then (with all the delights and pleaſures of this world) to dwell in the tents of the vngodly. For he that once ſuffers his heart to be glewed to the loue of earthly things, is in danger thereby to deprive himſelfe of true happineſſe. For this is that horrible iudgement wherby God often auengeth himſelfe vpon mens incredulitie. Let all the faithfull therefore feare before God, and beware that they faint not vnder anie calamities or afflictions whatſoever.

Verſ. 18. Leſt Hezekiah deceiue you, ſaying; The Lord will deliuer vs. Hath any of the gods of the nations deliuered his land out of the hand of the King of Aſhur?

Here is now another argument, differing from the former; by which he labours to ſeduce the peoples hearts from their allegiance to King Hezekias, and from their truſt and confidence in God. He bragged before that he was Gods ſeruant, ſent of him to deſtroy the land of Iudea: for which cauſe he promiſeth vnto himſelfe aſſurance of the victory. But now the miſerable feares not to aduance himſelfe againſt the Lord of hoſtes. For you muſt know that the wicked doe not alwayes at the firſt chop diſcouer all their impietic touching their contempt of Gods maieſtie; but the Lord by degrees laies open their thoughts, and conſtrains them to caſt vp the poſſon which lay hid within them. This wretch now then goes on further in his blaſphemies, and feares not to ruſh againſt the higheſt Maieſtie, as if hee were the ſtronger.

But he ſpeakes in the perſon of his Maſter,

Satan conditions which hee vſually addes to his temptations.

Note.

who had obtained great victories ouer many mightie nations, which indeede had their gods; vnder whose protection they thought themselves safe. Sennacherib hauing subdued these, thought also that he had ouercome their gods, vpon whose help they rested. Thence it comes that he puffes vp himselfe so farre in pride, that he dares iustle against the liuing God: yea, he is caried away with such madnes, that he feares not to oppose his strength against the power of the Almighty.

You see then, that albeit the wicked scene at the first to be farre from the contempt of Gods maiestie, yet in the end they manifest that they attribute all to themselves, and vterly exclude him. In words I grant they will giue the praise of their victories vnto their gods, but forthwith they sacrifice vnto their owne nets, and offer incense to their yarne, as Abacuk saith, 1. 16. which practise our hypocrites imitate at this day. For if they obtaine any victorie, they by and by runne and thanke their Idols: but when that is done, they also thanke their owne counsels, policies, manhood, and their forces: so as a man may well perceiue that vpon the matter they attribute all their successe vnto themselves, and not vnto their Idols. In this his proud boasting then, he shewes himselfe to be a liar, when he acknowledged God the author of his victories.

On the other side it could not be but the heart of good King Hezekias must needs be wonderfullie grieved in hearing God to be thus charged with breach of his promises, whē this wicked one railed thus against God, and matcht him with Idols. But these things are written, to the end we might consider the patience of this good King, and also follow his example when the like shall befall vs.

Have any of the gods of the nations?] When he opposeth himselfe against all Gods, as one that had ouermatcht them, it is so farre from common sense, that the wicked themselves do shudder and tremble at it: and yet if the Lord doe but a little presse them, he easily draws forth of them such confessions as this. When they haue premeditated what they will say, then they can faine themselves Gods seruants forsooth, but soone after he inforceth them to confesse and vter forth that which was concealed within. Let vs know then that superstition is alwaies ioined with pride, so as it is vnpossible but he should aduance himselfe about all that which is called God, which in his heart acknowledgeth him not. We neede not wonder then that wicked men are proud and rebellious, for it is only the pure and right knowledge of God which is able to humble our stout hearts. And yet this miscreant is no way excused, for casting the vanitie and feeblenes of these Idols iustly in their teeth: for wee must lopke at his intent and pride, seeing he scornes not so much the superstition and vaine confidence of the Gentiles, as through their sides to wound (if he could) euen the highest Maiestie. Euen as that tyrant Dionysius, who resisted God, and prouoked him to the fight, whilst he scorned his owne Idols: for against his conscience he derided the God which he could scarcely comprehend in his shallow braine. The like is to be said of all other Infidels, who haue mocked at false religions, which they thought were of God.

Note we here also the other blasphemie by which the diuine Maiestie is wickedlie violated, when Rabshekeh couples the true God with the false, as if he were one of their consorts. For what blasphemie is greater then to match the immortall God, the author of all things, with dunghill gods: truth with lyes, glorie with ignemie, and hell with heauen? The Lord our God is great, and worthie to be praised, saith Dauid: yea, he is to be feared aboute all gods: for all the gods of the Hea-then are Idols, but the Lord made the heauens, strength and glorie are before him, power and beautie are in his sanctuarie, &c. Psal. 96. 4. 5.

Vers. 19. Where is the God of Hamath, and of Arpad? Where is the God of Sepharuaim? Or how haue they deliuered Samaria out of mine hands?

20. Who is hee amongst all the gods of these lands, that hath deliuered their countrie out of mine hand, that the Lord should deliuer Ierusalem out of mine hand?

Some thinke Hamath to be Antioch in Syria: Arpad, that Citie whence people were taken to inhabit Damascus, and that Sepharuaim was situated in this countrie. If these things be so, then Rabshekeh recites here the ancient names of the Cities whence in times past many nations came forth: but afterward they not only lost their renowne, but their proper names also, that such a change might the rather affect and moue them. Howsoeuer it be, he expressely notes out the neighbour cities which were best knowne by name to the Iewes, that the ruin of them might touch them the more neere: neither do I doubt but these places were of Syria, and Israel. As if he should say, You see these two kingdomes subdued, which notwithstanding had so many gods and patrons, and doe you thinke that your God can resist me? The expositors take the particule Chi for an interrogation in both places. Haue the gods of the nations deliuered them? Shall your God deliuer you then? But that the sense might runne the better, I had rather translate it thus, Let your God deliuer Ierusalem out of mine hand? This seemes also to be spoken tauntingly, as if in scorne he should haue said, Yea, I warrant you, your God will deliuer you, as the gods of the Gentiles deliuered those that worshipped them. Now this ignorance of the wicked proceeds from this, they know not that God punisheth mens sinnes when aduersitie befallles them. First of all then they deceiue themselves by making an ouerthwart comparison: Oh, I haue ouercome this or that people, therefore it is I that am the efficient in this matter: for they know not that God by their hands executes his wrath vpon the people, whom he for their iniquities hath deſtinated to deſtruction. For though they will not vtterly deny but they haue received ſomewhat in their victories from him, howbeit it is but ſainedly, becauſe they neither ſee his will nor his iuſtice therein.

In the next place they ſtep one degree higher; that is, euen to equall themſelues with God: I haue overcome them whom God proteſted; & therefore I haue alſo overcome himſelfe. Heere is a liuely deſcription of that which we ſaw before in the tenth Chapter. Ha I Aſhur the rod of mine indignation: but he thinks not ſo. There the Lord admoniſhed the faithfull, that although Sennacherib in his outrageous pride, ſtroue to abolith all diuinitie; yet he was alwaies to hold this principle, that hee could put nothing in execution, but what God himſelfe from heauen ſhould ſuffer.

It is our parts then to acknowledge that God corrects vs by the hands of wicked men, who are the rods of his wrath: and therefore to turne our eyes from them, and caſt them vpon him, who iuſtly corrects vs for our tranſgreſſions. If the wicked preuaile, let vs not thinke that Gods arme is therefore broken: but let vs know that we were vnworthy of his helpe. For he it is that armes tyrants againſt vs for our ruin; hee puts weapons and munition into their hands, hee driues them to and fro which way ſoeuer he thinks good, and deliuers vs vp into their hands, when we haue ſhaken off his yoke of obedience from our neckes.

When we ſee the Turke to ſwell ſo proudly as he doth at this day againſt vs, and is already become maſter of an infinite multitude of Chriſtians: we muſt not be troubled at it, as if Gods arme were ſhortened, or as if hee wanted power to deliuer vs. No, but wee ought rather to conſider how many waies thoſe of Grecia & Aſia haue prouoked Gods wrath againſt them, whileſt ſo many villanies and abominations haue had the full ſwindge in theſe countries, whileſt ſo many horrible impieties and ſuperſtitions haue bin ſuffered to raigne there. It was requiſite then that the chaſtiſement ſhould be the ſharper, that the iniquities of ſuch as made profeſſion of Gods name in hypocriſie, might be ſuppreſſed. Thence hath the proſperitie of the Turke ſprung; theſe followed thoſe horrible waſtes which we ſee in all the eaſterne parts. And yet how inſolent is the Turke? How ſets he vp the creſt, ſcorniug our religion, and wonderfully extolling his owne, or rather worſhips himſelfe indeede, and ſacriſiecth to his yarne, as was ſaid before out of Habacuck of other infidels.

Let vs be warned to lay theſe iudgements of God neere to our hearts, and not imagin that the Turke was able of himſelfe to conquer ſo great an Empire, but that it was the Lord who let him looſe thus to puniſh the iniquities of men. But his pride in due time ſhall be reſpreſſed. Now albeit proſperitie in it ſelfe be a teſtimonie of Gods fauour, yet we muſt not begin there, if we will iudge thereof as is meete. For ſo play the Turkes and Papiſts: if they obtaine the victories, they conclude by and by that they haue God at their becke for ſooth. But when we know him as we ought, his benefiſts ſhall come to vs in their order; to wit, they ſhall ſerue as teſtimonies to aſſure vs of his fauour and power. And yet wee muſt bee exceeding watie how we attribute any thing to our ſelues: for our mindes are no ſooner poſſiſſed with a falſe confidence, but we ſhall be ſo tranſported & caried away with furie, that God ſhall bee found no more worthy afterward to be matched ſo with vs. At the firſt, the wicked will deteſt ſo much as manifeſt an impietie; but when they are once beſotted with diuiliſh pride, to aray themſelues with Gods his ſpoiles, it is then eaſie to fall into this beaſtly ignorance. I grant that Sennacherib had ſome ſhew of pietie; for wee ſhall reade afterward, that hee was ſlaine in his Temple whileſt he was worſhipping Niſroch his God, to procure his fauour and good will: but as he here conſounds the Creator of heauen and earth, with the gods of the Gentiles, ſo alſo when occaſion ſhould haue offered it ſelſe, hee would haue made no bones at all to haue railed vpon his owne Idoll.

Verſ. 21. Then they kept ſilence, and answered him not a word: for the Kings commandement was, ſaying; Anſwer him not a word.

This is added that wee might yet better conceiue in what a woſull caſe Iudea was: for this good King hauing but weak means left, is conſtrained to put vp all wrongs, and to let his enemy haue the laſt word. He had ſent his Ambaſſadors to appeaſe his furie: when this preuailed not, hee forbids them to commune with him, that they might no further inſenſe this cruell woollfe, who was but too much enraged before. Yet it is not eaſilie diſcerned whether the Prophet ſpeakes here of the Ambaſſadors, or of the people, to whom Rabſhekeſh vttered theſe blaſphemies. It is moſt likely that it ſhould be referred rather to thoſe which kept the walles, who notwithstanding ſtood ſtill without tumult, albeit the enemy gaullied them to the quicke by his reproches; becauſe they obeyed the commandement of their King. Whence we gather, that it is a ſingular grace of God to ſee a peaceable and an obedient people, eſpecially when all things are confuſed and at the laſt caſt.

But ſome may obieſt, that it was no time now to command them ſilence, when ſuch blaſphemies were diſgorged againſt God: for we are not to diſemble the matter, whileſt the wicked ſtand breaking their ieiſts vpon his Maieſtie, no, though it were with the danger of our liſe? At leaſt wee ought to make it ſome way appeare, that we cannot indure to heare his honour and glory to be trod vnder foote. But it is not ſaid, that they held their peace, as giuing conſent to that which hee ſpake, or to approoue of thoſe blaſphemies which he belched out against God, which no doubt vexed them sore, albeit they vttered neuer a word. For the Ambassadors sorrowed and wept, & from their inward griefe which pressed them, proceeded the renting of their garments: by which outward signe, they testified that they abhorred his blasphemies. Now in as much as it had been but time lost, to haue reasoned the case with Rabshekeh, they returned quietly without any word at all: the people on the other side, who could haue gotten nothing by contending, are content to oppose their signes against this miscreants pride.

A commendable magnanimitic.

And truly it is a very commendable fortitude not to be bowed, but quietly to keepe our standings, when it is not permitted vs to answer. Hence learne, that we are not to contend against the wicked at all times, when they teare the blessed name of God in peeces by their outrages; because in so bitter a combat, and amidst so manie railings there is no roome left for defence of the truth.

A good caution.

And yet we must not so giue the raines to our cowardlinesse, that we should thinke our felues excused, if wee keepe silence when the wicked lift vp themselves against God. For our silence is not to be approved of, vlesse in some sort we shew that it greatly disliketh vs, and that we giue them to vnderstand, as much as in vs lieth, that there is nothing more insupportable to vs, then to heare the holy name of God rent in peeces. Wee must giue testimonies of our zeale then, lest the enemies should thinke that we lightly esteemed the honour of God, in that wee are not moued when they blaspheme.

Verf. 22. Then came Eliakim, the sonne of Helkiah, the steward of the house, and Shebna the Chancellor, and Ioah the sonne of Asaph with rent clothes, and told him the wordes of Rabshekeh.

Now wee see that Eliakim and the other Ambassadors were not silent, as if they had approved of the impieties of Rabshekeh, or, that they temporised in respect of the danger: for they rent their garments, and thereby shewed how much they were offended with these blasphemies. I except the hypocrite Shebna, who was forced with thame to doe as others did, though but for fashions sake onlie. The Lewes and other casterne people were wont to rent their clothes, when they meant to shew their great detestation of something: for as their constitutions were much more fierce then ours, who dwell in these cold Countries, so were they more violent in their outward gestures, maner of their attire, goings, and such other signes. We must also note in this place, that those who passed by the iniuries which were done to their owne persons, yet rent their clothes when they heard the name of God blasphemed: for those that are vnreconcilable in a particular iniurie, where patience is required, and are not moued when they heare the holie name of God rent with reuilings, such shew (I say) that they haue no zeale at all in them.

THE XXXVII. CHAPTER.

Verf. 1. And when Hezekiah heard it, he rent his clothes, and put on sackcloth, and came into the house of the Lord.

He Prophet shews that nothing remained to this good King but one onely hope of saluation; namely, to poure out his complaints into Gods bosome, who is a iust Iudge: according as it is said, Psal. 123. 2. The eyes of the faithfull wait vpon him, euen as the eyes of bond seruants wait vpon their masters and mistresses, when they are oppressed. When Ierusalem then scemes lost, Hezekias destituted of all humane helpes flees vnto God for his protection. And thus he confesseth, that this is the onely remedie when things are become desperate. Now herein Gods grace shined in such wise, that it was a manifest miracle shewed to all, when the King with all his subiects were deliuered out of the mouth of the lion. This circumstance therefore is to be noted, to the end wee may take knowledge of the excellencie of so great a benefit.

Here we are also taught what course to take in extreme dangers: wee must not be slothfull nor idle in crauing helpe of God, who by this meanes calles vs vnto him. Wee must not then stand amazed nor dismaied, but rather be prickted forward by our necessities, which presse vs to seeke his assistance: for that vse Hezekias makes of his afflictions. He goes forthwith into the Temple, no otherwise then into a place of refuge, to hide himselfe and his people vnder the shadow of Gods wings.

Thereunto hee also ioines the outward signes of repentance, he rents his garments, he puts on sackcloth, and couers himselfe with ashes, & doth other things, which were then solemnic signes of godly sorrow, by which (being vnder sore afflictions) they condemned themselves before God as poore malefactors, and humbly sought pardon of him. Now the modestie of this holy King is wonderfull, seeing he is not ashamed to prostrate himselfe

God calles vs to him by extreme perils, therefore we must not be slothfull in crauing his aid & assistance.

in the preſence of his God, though he had brought ſo worlthic things to paſſe, and was adorned with ſo many rare and excellent virtues. On the other ſide we may behold in him a wonderfull courage of mind, and ſtedfaſtneſſe of faith, in that the weight of ſo great a triall hindred him not freely to ſeeke unto that hand for help which ſharplie aſſailed him. There is not one amongst an hundred to be found but will uirumure if God doe touch him but a little more then ordinarie; yea, they will be readie (if they haue done any good) to twite God in the teeth with it, and thinke themſelues but hardlie recompenced for the ſame at his hands. Others will complaine and ſay, It is but in vaine and time loſt to ſerue God, when they ſee things fall not out as they would haue them. But wee ſee none of theſe things in Hezekias, for he is not aſhamed to confeſſe his fault, notwithstanding he was indued with the true feare of God.

Therefore if we deſire to ſeeke reconciliation with God, and to ſeele his fauor in the day of aduerſitie, let vs giue ſome teſtimonies of our repentance, and francklie acknowledge and confeſſe our ſinnes: for afflictions comes not out of the duſt, Job. 5. 6. but God ſolicits vs thereby to amendment of life. I grant that ſackcloth and aſhes ſerue to little purpoſe, vneleſſe the affection of the heart go formoſt: for hypocrites (as we know) are but too forward and ouer-liberrall in their ceremonies. The Holy Ghoſt (as wee haue ſcene before) requires theſe exerciſes, and giues them their iuſt commendation; yet ſo, as they be alwaies vſed to a right end. And no doubt it was alſo a ſigne of ſingular modeſtie and meekneſs, to ſee this good King and all the people by theſe helps to ſtirre vp one another to the feare of God: alſo, in that he clothed himſelfe with this deformed and baſe apparell the more freely to confeſſe his fault, which is an humilitie that Kings and Princes are aſhamed to imitate.

Verſ. 2. And hee ſent Eliakim the ſteward of the houſe, and Shebna the Chancellor, with the elders of the Priests clothed in ſackcloth, unto Iſaiah the Prophet, the ſonne of Amos.

3. And ſaid vnto him, This is a day of tribulation, and of rebuke, and blaſphemie: for the children are come to the birth, and there is no ſtrength to bring forth.

BY this Ambaſſage he not only meant to call Iſaiah to lament this calamitie with him, but alſo to haue ſome conſolation from the mouth of the Lord; for if prayers be not grounded vpon the word of God, they will be but ſo many words caſt into the ayre. Wee know that the vnbeleeuers will make both loude and long prayers, and yet flee away from God, either by deſpising, or in vtter reiecting his promiſes. Here is a ſigne of Hezekias his true deuotion then, that being kindled with the zeale of prayer, he addes there-unto a confirmation of his hope, leſt he ſhould ſant vnder the temptation; alſo, in that he keeps himſelfe cloſe to the means ordained of God, and deſires to heare his voice by the mouth of his Prophet Iſaiah. For albeit he reſted vpon none but God only, yet he ieiectis not the teſtimonic of a mortall man like himſelfe: and this is the cauſe why the title of the Prophet is here expreſſie mentionned, becauſe he lent to Iſaiah to be confirmed by ſome new propheſie. And thus he names him, not as a priuat man, but as the ſeruant of the Lord, whoſe office it was to comfort the King by ſome word of conſolation.

There are two notable remedies then by which we are ſuccored in affliction. Firſt, we muſt call vpon God for his deliuerance: Secondly, we muſt ſend for the Prophets of God (if they be to be found) that they may giue vs ſome word of conſolation: for it is their charge to comfort and reſtifie the afflicted, by ſetting the pretious promiſes of life before them. But if Prophets be wanting, yet we ſhall haue ſufficient and full conſolation in the word it ſelfe. For we muſt aſke counſell of theſe Prophets which God hath ſent, not only during the terme of their liues, but for euer afterwards, and of thoſe that ſucceed them: for although themſelues be dead, yet we haue their bookes ſtill with vs: their doctrine liues, and ſhall remaine for euer: but the ſumme is, we muſt alwaies aſke counſell of God.

Two ſoueraigne remedies by which we may receive comfort in affliction.

Some may demand, whether Hezekias was not ſufficiently inſtructed, and furniſhed with the promiſes, was it not a ſigne of infidelitie in him then to ſeeke for new promiſes of the Prophet? I anſwere, It is not to be imputed to him for infidelitie or diſtruſt that he ſeekes a new promiſe, becauſe being beſt acquainted with his owne infirmitie, he was not aſhamed to ſeeke new confirmations of his faith.

Queſt. Anf.

The fleſh alwaies ſolicits vs to diſtruſt, therefore we ought not at any time to deſpiſe new ſupplies: nay rather it ſtands vs in hand to vie all the beſt meanes we can to heate backe the multitudes of temptations which dayly preſſe vs. For Satan inuitions vs to cloſe on euery ſide, that if we be not well furniſhed indeed, it is not poſſible for vs to wind out of his ſnares and intanglings. Although we be well inſtructed in Gods word then, and haue learned that he will ſurely help vs in the day of trouble, yet when ſome extraordinarie ſurge or waue ariſeth, it is all the need then to get vs to the mouth of the Lord againe and againe, and ſtill to ſeeke out new confirmations to comfort, quicken, and ſtrengthen our faith. We haue no particular propheſies now, but we ought to apply the generals to our particular vies, becauſe they were written for our learning, Rom. 15.

The fleſh euer more ſolicits vs to diſtruſt, therefore we ought neuer to deſpiſe new ſuccors.

In that Hezekias ſent Ambaſſadors to Iſaiah, and went not himſelfe, it was becauſe he praid in the Temple: for it appeares the mourning was generally, in regard that both the elders and counſellers were clothed in ſackcloth, it is alſo very probable that the King had proclaimed a publike faſt. Let vs alſo note, that Iſaiah liued not in the Kings houſe to giue himſelfe to iollitie there : but in his absence, God meant to proue the faith of this good King.

Although our hearts be well confirmed in the promiſes, yet vpon new aſſaults we ought once yea twice to get new confirmations from the mouth of the Lords.

Verf. 4. If so bee the Lord thy God hath heard the words of Rabshekeh, who the King of Assur his master hath sent to raile on the liuing God, and to reproch him with words, which the Lord thy God hath heard, then list thou vp thy praiers for the remnant that are left.

Obiect.

IT seems that Hezekias doubts whether the Lord would heare or no : for the particule Vltis is translated, if peradventure ; and it is taken in this sense almost thoroughour the whole Scripture. But we must note that the faithfull are accustomed to speake thus, though they bee most assured that God will succor them. They are indeed somewhat perplexed, but it is onely in regard of the difficultie of the temptation wherewith they are pressed. Hezekias might well doubt, if we looke vpon the estate as it then presently stood; but hauing turned his eyes towards the word of God, hee became more certaine of Gods will, and then ceased to tremble any more. Now because it cannot be auoided, but the flesh will alwaies fight against the spirit in the faithfull, and so ouercharge them, that they are faine still to drag y^e wing or to traile the leg after them, they sometimes fit their words according to the difficultie which presents it selfe before them. And in other places we may obserue, that Gods seruants haue spoken in this manner, though the matter were out of doubt. For when Saint Peter exhorted Simon the Magician to repentance, he addes; If peradventure the thought of thine heart may be forgiven thee : but hee therein counsels him not to tremble, or to pray in vnbeliefe, because such a praiers had been in vaine : but he sets before him the greatnesse of his sinne, that hee might quicken him vp with the greater feruencie to awaken at the last, that hee might proue a true conuert indeed. This word if then, is not put here in a doubtfull sense, but signifies that which we vsually speake, it may be, when we dare hope or promise something to our selues.

Neither doth Hezekias speake thus, as if God vnderstand not what the wicked say, or as if he were utterly ignorant of it, but because this principle was fixed in his heart; to wit, that the Lord is neer vnto all such as call vpon him in truth : he now therefore armes himselfe with praiers, and is fully resolu'd to withstand all distrust. And for as much as he could not attaine the goale without great strife, he saith, peradventure, or, it may be. Note also that he addes here two sorts of hearing, which in part resolues this question. True it is that at the first there seemes to be some repugnancie in these words ; It may be hee will heare the words which he hath heard : but it is a very apt kind of speech ; for Hezekias is certainly perswaded that nothing is hidden from God. He onely disputes in himselfe, whether God would examin this miscreants blas-phemies. For in regard that he often defers his punishments for a time, and seemes to winke at mens impieties, it seemed that hee now also tooke no knowledge of these blasphemies. Lastly, he takes it for granted, that all things are manifest & naked before Gods eyes: onely he asks in some perplexitie, whether the Lord indeed will shew himselfe displeas'd with *Rabshekeh*s railing, by some outward signe or no; that is, not to let him escape any longer vnpunished? To be short, he desires to see the execution thereof, which is then performed, when God sets those things in order againe, which before were cut of frame and confus'd ; and when hee shewes himselfe the Iudge. For then wee proue by experience, that he hath indeed had respect vnto the welfare of his people. Thus Hezekias asks; Lord, couldest thou not heare the blasphemies of Rabshekeh, to reuenge the same? or, art thou not able to shew that the glory of thy name is deere and precious vnto thee?

When he calles the Lord Isaiah God, his meaning is not as if hee were peculiarly seru'd by one man onely; neither eoth he hereby cut off himselfe from the number of the faithfull : but because praiers flow from doctriens, this holy King speaks honourably of the Prophets ministerie, and testifies, that he is the true seruant of God. Sometimes this relation extends it selfe further; for all the faithfull doe iointly call vpon God, who holds them all in the number of his people. But he is called Isaiah and *Paul*s God, in regard of their particular calling.

How God is said to be the God of Isaiah and Paul.

List vp praiers.] This is the second cause for which Hezekias sent his Ambassadors vnto Isaiah; to wit, that he might also inioy the benefit of his praiers with others. In which we see, it is not the Prophets office onely to comfort the afflicted, by setting the promises of life before them, but also to pray for their saluation. Let not the Ministers and Preachers of the word thinke that they haue discharged their duty then, when they haue exhorted and taught those that depend vpon them, vnlesse they adde praiers thereunto; for it is all our duties so to doe. But Hezekias sent to the Prophet chiefly, that hee might shew the way vnto others by his example.

It is the Ministers dutie not onely to comfort his people our of the word, but also to list vp his praiers vnto God for the in their distresses. What is meant by this phrase, To list vp praiers.

To list vp praiers, signifies nothing else but to pray; yet the phrase of speech is to be noted, for it shewes how our affections ought to be ordered in praiers. The Scripture in euery place wils vs to list vp our hearts vnto heauen, for otherwise we shall pray without any due reuerence at all to Gods Maiestie. Besides, our blockishnesse is so great, that as soone as we enter into praiers, there comes grosse imaginations touching the maifestie of God into our mindes; so as if he should not call vs away from them vnto heauen, we would rather seeke him vnder our setete, then there.

Lam. 3. 4 5.

To list vp praiers then, is so to pray, that our hearts be not glued to the earth, nor yet that we conceiue ought of God, that agrees with carnall or fleshy conceits : but attributing ring that vnto him which ſutes beſt with his diuine nature; alſo that we aſpire vnto heauen with an ardenſie of zeale, and with all our affectiones. It is in this ſenſe that Dauid ſaith; Oh, let my prayer come before thee as incenſe, and let the liſting vp of my hands be as the euening ſacrifice.

Moreover, Herzekias deſires Iſaiab to pray for the remnant that were left. This circumſtance might ſerue to bow the Lord: not that he is to be bowed, as men are: but thus hee deales with vs, and is contented to ſtoope downe to our weakneſſe. Be it that our care is ſo deſperate then, as we are euen at the pits brinke, as they ſay; yet muſt we lay forth our miſeries before God, that thereby wee may gather ſome conſolation; becauſe himſelſe proteſts, that he hath reſpect vnto the poore and needie. Yea, the nearer we are to deſtruction, with the greater affection ought we to craue his aid and aſſiſtance; as wee ſee Herzekias here doth, when all things were become deſperate.

10. 17. 8

Verſ. 5. So the ſeruants of King Hezekiah came to Iſaiab.

6. And Iſaiab ſaid vnto them; Thus ſay vnto your Maſter, Thus ſaith the Lord; Bee not afraid of the wordes that thou haſt heard, wherewith the ſeruants of the King of Aſhur haue blaſphemed me.

AS the Prophet hath told vs before, that the onely refuge the King had, was to aſke counſell at Gods mouth: ſo now hee ſhewes that it was not in vaine, becauſe hee receiued ſuch comfort and conſolation from him as his heart deſired.

By this example we are admoniſhed, that if we ſeek reſpite from the Lord, by diſcharging all our cares into his boſome, wee ſhall neuer be left ſuccourleſſe. And albeit ſuch Prophets, as Iſaiab was, are not alwaies to be had in the world, yet will hee not fail to meet thoſe that wait for his helpe in due ſeaſon, and with ſuch meanes as ſhall be anſwerable to their neceſſities.

Now Iſaiab ſaith in the firſt place, that hee anſwered them in the name of God: for hee aſſirms that God is the author of this his meſſage. The Prophets were alwaies to haue regard that they ſpake nothing of their owne heads: alſo, it was neceſſary that God ſhould come betwene with his authority, in a matter of ſo great conſequence. Thus then our Prophet ſhewes, that God preuented (as it were) the prayers of this good King. The falſe Prophets brag much of Gods name, yet falſely: but Iſaiab being the very organ of the holy Ghoſt, doth iuſtly come in his name that ſent him: and in that hee forbids him in the firſt place to feare, hee therein would haue Herzekias to hold faſt his confidence, or at leaſt to wait in hope and ſilence.

As oft as we heare theſe wordes feare not, let vs know that peace which ſaith begets in vs, is here recommended vnto vs: for all they which in reſting vpon God, doe wait for deliuerance from him out of their trials, ſuch obtaine victory by their patience, ouer all feare; ſo as they inoy ſweet peace in the middeſt of the ſharpeſt troubles. Moreover, that this good King might with the more cheertulneſſe expect a ſoyfull and an happy iſſue, our Prophet plainly ſhewes, that God takes himſelſe as a partie in this cauſe, which hee now minds to take into his owne hands: for hee cannot indure that the wicked ſhould abuſe his name. And therefore they are to looke in the end, that hee will ſhew himſelſe a juſt Iudge in puniſhing them for the ſame.

By the word ſeruants, hee amplifies the indignitie of the fact: for had the King himſelſe vitered theſe blaſphemies, it had bin a thing inſupportable, that the Lord of glory ſhould haue bin ſo proudly diſdained and reproched by a mortall man; much leſſe then ſhould hee indure to be railed vpon in ſuch wiſe by one of his vaffals. And thus the condition of the perſon that railed, makes the offence more odious.

Verſ. 7. Behold I will ſend a blaſt vpon him, and hee ſhall beare a noiſe and returne to his owne land: and I will cauſe him to fall by the ſword in his owne land.

SOME translate; I will put my Spirit within him: as if the Prophet ſpake of ſome ſecret inſtruſt of heart; but this is too conſtrained. The ſimilitude is very apt, in that hee ſhewes God hath a whirle wind in his hand, which ſhall drie Sennacherib away before it into another place. The holy Scripture is often wont to vſe ſuch a kind of ſpeech, in comparing the wicked to ſtraw and chaffe; becauſe God is able with the leaſt blaſt of his mouth to ſcatter them whither ſo euer hee will; euen then when they thinke themſelues at the ſtrongeſt. Hee compares the trouble then which fell vpon the hoſt of Sennacherib, to a whirle-wind, which carried him violently out of Iudea. In the next place, hee ſheweth that it will bee as eaſie for God to chaſe this enemy away, as it is for a whirl-wind to drie chaffe or ſtraw before it. The like is to bee ſaid of all tyrants, bee they neuer ſo ſtrong and mightie.

We may perceiue that the claufe, hee ſhall beare, is added by way of expoſition: & therefore I had rather reſolue it into a particule of ſhewing the cauſe, thus, For hee ſhall beare a noiſe. For hee ſpakes of this blaſt, which as ſoone as it was blowne, it forthwith repulſed and conſtrained Sennacherib to returne into his owne Countrie, by reaſon of the newes which hee heard from Egypt and Ethiopia.

When the Prophet addes, that this tyrant ſhould fall by the ſword, it is as much as if hee had ſaid; hee vexeth others, and induors to enlarge his Monarchy; but God will raiſe him vp enemies in the middeſt of his owne Countrie, which ſhall bring him to nought. Many expound; the Countrie, or, the land of not: that peace which ſaith brings forth is commended vnto vs.

Pſal. 1. 4.

The enemies of the church compared to chaffe.

If in our diſtreſſes wee powre out our heart before God, hee will neuer diſappoint vs of our hope. Note.

As oft as we heare this voice, Feare

Israel: but it is too constrained, for it is spoken of ſy countie of the Assyrian. And there is in this clause a close opposition: He which conquered the Kingdomes and Cities of other Princes, shall not be able to defend his owne, but shall there be slaine.

Verf. 8. So Rabshekeh returned, and found the King of Assur fighting against Libnah: for he had heard that he was departed from Lachish.

HE shewes now how Rabshekeh returned to his King without striking any stroke, and returned not to the place where he left him: for his meaning is, that Sennacherib had raised vp his siege before Lachish, and was gone downe into Egypt to lay siege to Libna, which some thinke to be Pelusium: others say, it was a Citie of Iudeah. For it is very probable, that hauing heard newes of the arming of the enemy, he directed his armie towards Egypt, to stop the passages before them. Now albeit the Lord abated the furie of this tyrant by new warres, that he might thereby giue some rest to the Iewes, yet he would not ouercome him by the hand of man, but only manifest and brings his vitamed pride forth vpon the stage, because he ceased not still to belch out his wonted blasphemies, notwithstanding himselfe was in great danger, as we shall see afterward.

Verf. 9. He heard also men say Tirhakah king of Ethiopia, Behold, he is come out to fight with thee: and when he heard it, he sent other messengers to Hezekiah, saying,

BY that which followes we may coniecture what the cause was why the Assyrian so suddenlie departed frō Iudeah. For the Kings of Egypt, and Ethiopia had made a league one with another against Sennacherib, because they saw he grew too mightie, and ceased not to inuade Countrie after Countrie: for they thought if his violence were not resisted betimes, they might be sure to looke for the like measure. These Kings meant not to defend Iudeah by working his woe, but respected their owne safetie, because the power of so mightie a man is for the most part worthelie had in suspection of other Princes and their people. It is wisely done of them therefore that in foreseeing dangers, they ioinc their forces together to make resistance ere it be too late: for they had been easily ouerrunne had they been separated one from the other. Thus you see why they ioinc their forces into one, to wit, that they may withstand the violence and furie of this Tyrant.

The Assyrian being intangled in so desperate a warre, sends new Ambassadors to Hezekias, thinking by threats to enforce him to yeeld: wherein we may see how Tyrants are caried away with pride, and an ouerweening of their owne greatnes, so as they thinke to make all the world to tremble & quake at their words, or at the only hearing of the sound of their names, or at the sight of their very shadow. This man being somewhat preuented by a new & difficult busines, thinks notwithstanding to subduc Iudeah, whence he was forced to depart. It may be he was ashamed to be thus disappointed of his purpose, and thus abruptlie to raise vp his siege: but he thinks to obtaine that in his absence which he could not accomplish in his owne person. Howsoeuer, the Lord did wonderfullie worke in succoring his poore seruants, who esteemed themselves as sheepe appointed to the slaughter. Now that he might abate the rage of this Tyrant, he occupies his head, and his hands with such intricate busineses, as out of which he could not easily wind himselfe: as if one should hamper a furious beast, or should hold him fast by the snout, as the Prophet will shew anon. I grant, their cruell and reuengefull natures are not tamed thereby, but yet they are so restrained, that they can not doe the hurt they would.

Wee see the truth of this now amongst vs. How many tyrants are there which thirst after the ruin of the Church? How many plots do they lay to bring it about? How busie are they in corners, secretlie taking counsell together? And with what power and policies are they indued? But when they thinke to haue their purpose, it may be the Lord suddenlie descrites their designs, and raiseth vp enemies against them. Sometimes hee sets them together by the eares, and brings the cruelties which they thought to execute vpon his children vpon their owne heads. Yet they continue as obstinate and as fierce as euer they were before, and cease not to imagin mischief still: as this Sennacherib; he is hindered of his purpose you see, yet hee is not wearie of molesting this good King, but domineers ouer him with maiesticall tearmes, as if he had been a poore slaue: yea, he commands him as if he were his vassall. And not content with that, he proudly exalts himselfe euen against the Lord of glorie, and goes beyond the pride of his Captaine Rabshekeh. For although Rabshekeh's words and his are all one in sense, yet hee offers outrage against the Lord with greater impudencie, and with an open throat as it were.

Verf. 10. Thus shall ye speake to Hezekiah King of Iudah, saying, Let not thy God deceiue thee in whom thou trustest, saying, Ierusalem shall not be giuen into the hand of the King of Assur.

WHAT an horrible blasphemie is this? He accuseth God to be a lier and a deceiuer, as if he plaid fast and loofe with those that put their trust in him. For take away his truth from him, and what remains? That is the thing he most esteemes. But he drew these words out from the mouth of this miscreant, who before seemed to reuerence some god. It is not long you see then but he discouers himselfe to the full. Whereas he saith in the person of God, that Ierusalem shall not be giuen,

Some do thence conieſture, that the traytor Shebna had informed the king of Aſhur of Jſaiah prophetic, and the words doe ſound ſomewhat that way, but there is no neede of any ſuch coniectures, for the Aſſyrian knew well enough that Hezekiah truſted in God. The promiſes made to Dauid, and to conſequēdy vnto him, were not vnknowne. This is my reſt, here will I dwell for euer, for I haue a delight therein: Pſal. 132. 14. Nor that this tyrant ſtudied the prophecies to profite by them; but they were manifeſtly knowne to all, yea, that the Iewes did wonderfully glorie in them, and often boaſted of Gods helpe and protection againſt their enemies. This tyrant oppoſeth his blaſphemies againſt the promiſes; Let not thy God deceiue thee: and thus he flies in Gods face as it were, as if hee had been too weak to defend Jeruſalem; and as if himſelfe was not onely ſtronger then all men whatſoeuer, but alſo ſtronger then the Lord of hoſts.

He goes about to proue this by examples. He firſt had vanquithed other nations which worſhipped other gods. Secondly, he takes an argument from the power of his predeceſſors; They were ſtronger then the gods of the nations, but I am more mightie then they by many degrees: therefore the God of Iſrael ſhall not ſtand before me. See how the wicked are wont to grow more and more in their overweening, by hauing good ſucceſſes; ſo as they euen forget that they are men. For they not onely attribute a diuine maiſtie vnto themſelues, but thinke they are a degree about that alſo. Which more is, when they haue reieſted all difference betwene good and euill, they take pleaſure in doing miſchiefe, they glory in the finnes of their anceſtors, and thinke themſelues no ſmall foolles, in that they came off ſuch theetes and robbers. For he that ſhall note the riſing of theſe Monarks well, it often talles out that he which is growne the mightieſt, may well be called the rich ſonne of a great theefe.

This tyrant cares not whether it were by right or wrong, that his predeceſſors conquered ſo many Countries: for ſuch neuer reſpect equitie, when they meane to make themſelues great: let them haue the ſtronger ſide, and then it is no matter by what means they come by it, juſtly or vniuſtly, all is one ſo they haue it; all is fiſh that comes to net, as they thinke. They put in praſiſe the ſaying of a certaine Poet; If a man will bee wicked, let him get might, that he may be ſo. This vice bath not raigned in one age onely, but wee ſeele by experience, that it hath the full ſwindge now more then euer heerebefore.

Verſ. 11. Behold thou haſt heard what the Kings of Aſhur haue done to all lands in deſtroying them, and ſhalt thou be deliuered?

1 WE muſt here note a double comparison; for he compares Hezekias to other Kinges of Juda (his predeceſſors) which were more mightie then hee, and yet were overcome by the Kings of Aſſyria. But Sennacherib on the contrary, being more mightie then any of the reſt, proudly aduanced himſelfe: it follows then that Hezekias is not able to reſiſt him. The other compariſon is of the Kings of Aſſyria, and Sennacherib himſelfe, with the idols of the Gentiles. If the idols then could not protect the people which honoured them; it thereupon follows, that the God of Iſrael is no more able then they, to ſaue his people. But when we read here how ſharply hee reſiſted the ſaith of Hezekias was aſſailed by theſe wonderfull tentations: let vs furniſh our ſelues with the like artillerie, and prepare our ſelues to the fight. Yea, whicſt time laſts, let vs carefully ſtore our ſelues, that we may conſtantly and courageouſly reſiſt when the like danger ſhall approach. If Satan obiect vnto vs the ruin of many nations, let vs diſtinguiſh our condition from theirs: for albeit we are indeed ſubiect to the ſame calamities, yet we haue ſure promiſes touching our ſalutation, which the others had not.

We muſt buckle our ſpiritually armour about vs, to reſiſt temptations before they come. We muſt diſtinguiſh betwene inſidels and our ſelues.

Verſ. 12. Haue the gods of the nations deliuered them which my fathers haue deſtroyed: as Gozan, and Haran, and Rezep, and the children of Eden which were at Telaſſer?

13. Where is the King of Hamath, and the King of Arpad, and the King of the Cities of Sepharuaim, Henah, and Iuah?

Mention is made of Gozan, in 2. King. 17. 6. And thence we may gather that it was a Citie of the Medes, although others affirme that it was ſituated in another Country: but it ſufficieth that it ſtood eaſtward from Iudeah. Touching Charan, it is often mentioned in the Scriptures. Plinie ſaith it was a Citie of Arabia; but it is commonly placed in Mefopotamia. Which is confirmed by Abrahams voyage, who came thence with his father, when he departed out of Caldea: Gen. 11. 31. A. E. 7. 4. The prophane Hiſtoriographers call it Charras in the plurall number, and ſay that Craſſus and his ſonnes were ſlaine there.

Verſ. 14. So Hezekias rooke the letter of the hand of the meſſenger, and read it: and he went vp into the houſe of the Lord, and Hezekias ſpread it before the Lord.

The Prophet now ſhewes what reſuge Hezekias ſied vnto in his great affliction; to wit, he went forthwith into the Temple to bewaile his miſery (which hee could not remedie) before the Lord, and to diſcharge his cares and ſorrowes into Gods boſome. For it was no conſufed or diſordered complaint, but by praiers & teares he meant to bow the Lord to his requeſt, that hee might yeeld him ſuccour. By this example we are taught, that there is no easier way to wade out of our calamities when they presse vs, then by casting our burthen vpon the Lord: for all comforts besides, shall doe vs more hurt then good, if this be wanting.

He spread not the letters before the Lord, as if he had been ignorant of them; but God is well pleased we should deale thus with him: therein applying himselfe to our infirmities. For our praier, teares, and complaints, discover not our necessities before his eyes, seeing he knows them all before wee once begin to open our mouthes; or to aske ought at his hands. But we now speake of that which is profitable for vs; to wit, that God may shew that hee hath heard the blasphemies of our enemies; so as those who haue vttered them, may not escape vnpunished. This is the reason and end wherefore Hezekias spread the letters of this cursed tyrant before the Lord, namely, to put the greater edge vpon his praier, and to kindle and inflame his zeale more and more.

Verf. 15. And Hezekiah praied vnto the Lord, saying;

16. O Lord of hostes, God of Israel, which dwellest betwene the Cherubims: thou art very God alone ouer all the kingdomes of the earth; thou hast made the heauen and the earth.

BECAUSE Sennacherib had been the instrument of Satan to shake the faith of Hezekias, hee now opposeth his rampart against him; to wit, that God is the Lord of hostes, and therefore of infinit power. For there is no doubt but hee rouseth vp his spirits, in assuring himselfe to obtaine that he asks, when he adorne the Lord with these excellent titles. Will we haue our praier, to preuaile with God? let vs hold this principle; that God will be found of them that seeke him: Heb. 11. 6. But this good King had speciall need to lay hold of this sentence; to wit, that Gods power alwaies remains one and the same, albeit the wicked strine to lessen it by their railings & scoffes; and to take heart the more freely and boldly vnto him, to set himselfe valiantly against the lets by which Satan indouered to hinder his course. Now herein we may behold the heroicall magnanimitie of this good King, who ceased not to resist this tyrant for the maintenance of Gods power, but bare a loyall affection inwardly in his heart thereunto, and also made God a witness of his inward affection. Before he begins to frame any praier then, hee breaks through the fallacies whereby Satan went about to put him to the wall: so that hee not onely magnifies Gods power, but maintains the soveraigntie which hee hath ouer the whole world.

Now hee meditates on these things, the better to confirme himselfe in the assurance which he had in Gods prouidence, by which all things in heauen and in earth are ordered and disposed. And this foundation ought all the faithfull first to lay, that so they lose not their labour in praier. The Kings praier had not been of such force and efficacy, if he had onely said, Incline thine care O Lord, and heare, &c. or such like wordes: as when hee keeps this principle first in his heart; that God hath care ouer all the works of his hands. For hee perswades himselfe that God will take this cause into his owne hands, and will not suffer the tyrant thus proudly to aduance himselfe; but will rather speedily put him downe, sith the government of the whole world belongs vnto him. Also, seeing Sennacherib attributed that vnto himselfe, which of right appertained vnto God; that hee could not escape vnpunished.

Where hee subiecteth all the kingdomes of the earth vnder Gods hand and power, he applies it vnto his owne particular vs. In the meane while, such a title neuer agrees to any but to God onely; because hee rules ouer all Kingdomes. Notwithstanding he denies not but Kings, Princes, and Magistrates haue their iust titles; yet so, as these selues be subiect vnto God, & maintaine his right & dominion: for it belongs onely to God to be King of Kings, & Lord of Lords, as S. Paul saith. Not that hee therefore aboliseth the names of Kings and Lords, with their dominions, but shewes that all depends vpon God onely, how great or mightie soeuer they be; that they should not thinke themselves haile fellow well met with him, but that they ought rather to acknowledge him to be their Lord and King. Kings then hold their authoritie, as you see; if so be they will keepe the mid way betwene God and men, and will not presume to climbe higher.

Moreover, Hezekias gathers this title from the very creation; for it is not possible that the Creator of heauen and earth should euer forsake the workes of his owne hands; nay, doe we not see on the contrary, that he gouernes mankind by his prouidence, which is the chiefest part of the world? It were too absurd a thing then to limit the creation within so narrow bounds, that it should onely serue as a witness of a certaine power of God, that lasted but a while, and stretched it selfe to a few things: no, it ought to be extended to a continuall working in all things. By this it appears, that those tyrants which will take liberty to rule as they list, do therein bereaue God of his honour; and therefore when things fall out otherwise then well vnto them, they may iustly impute it to their owne pride and presumption.

Hezekias also alleageth other epithetes, for the confirmation of his faith. And first, in that he calles him the Lord of hostes, hee againe extols his power; but when hee addes, the God of Israel, hee notes out a more neere and particular presence: for it was no small signe of Gods loue, to haue taken the safetie of this people into his owne custodie. Hereunto appertaines his sitting betwene the Cherubims: as if he should say; Thou hast placed thy throne here, and hast promised protection to such as call vpon thee before the Arke of the promise: now resting my selfe vpon this counte-

A principle euer to be held, namely, that God will alwaies be found of them that seeke him.

1. Tom. 6. 15.

Exod. 25. 18. I come to thee as to the only gardian of my ſafetie. But Hezekias doubtleſſe had reſpect to the ſonne of the Arke, which was ſhadowed with Cherubims. Some expound theſe Cherubims, Angels, as if it were ſaid, God reignes in heauen, and ſits among the Angels. But this expoſition ſutes not. For it is ſaid, that he ſits betwene the Cherubims, becauſe of the Arke which was thus compoſed. Now wee know it was a true and certaine ſigne of Gods preſence, albeit his power was not ſhut vp within the ſame: but Hezekias in mentioning thereof meant to affirme, that God was there preſent, becauſe he had vouchſafed to gather his people vnto him, by ſtretching his wings (as you would ſay) ouer them. For as much then as there is a great diſtance of place betwene God and vs, Hezekias layes hold vpon this notable pledge of adoption, and yet kept he his mind free from being tainted with any carnall conceits touching Gods Maieſtie, whereinto the ſuperſtitious plunge themſelues, who ſtrive by all meanes to draw him downe from heauen: but the King contenting himſelfe with faith in the promiſes which he had receiued, concludes, that he needed not to ſeek farre for Gods fauorable preſence.

Let vs obſerue this phraſe of ſpeech well therefore, which teacheth vs to mount by little and little vnto heauen by the light of the promiſes which doe ſhine clearly before vs: yet ſo, that in ſeeking ſuccour, we imagin not that God ſhould be abſent from vs, ſeeing he hath choſen his dwelling place in the mids of vs. For in regard that his Maieſtie much ſurmounts heauen and earth, it is not lawfull for vs to bound him within the narrow ſcantling of our vnderſtanding: yet we may comprehend him according to the ſmall meafure thereof, becauſe he hath reuealed himſelfe vnto vs by his word: not that we muſt needs pull him downe from his heauenlic throne therefore, but that our minds which are of themſelues weake and dull, might by degrees approach neerer and neerer vnto him: for we haue good reaſon to preſſe with boldnes towards his highnes, in regard he calles vs vnto him by his word and Sacraments.

And if we conceiue of theſe things aright, the ſpiritual knowledge of God ſhall alwaies beare ſway amongst vs, ſo as wee ſhall not need to tie the Lord any more to ſtones nor ſticks. No, we ſhall imagin nothing of him that is earthlic or carnall: for the neerer we ſhall draw towards him, the more will we endeavour our ſelues to vſe all lawfull meanes which he ſets before vs, that our ſpirits may not reſt vpon earthlic things: for he applies himſelfe to our ſhallownes only, to the end that his Sacraments might ſerue vs as ladders to climb vp vnto him by: but this ſuperſtition hath peruerſed and turned it to a quite contrarie vſe.

erſ. 17. Incline thine eare, O Lord, ana, are: open thine eyes, O Lord, and ſee, & eare all the words of Sennacherib, who hath ſent to blaſpheme the lining God.

HENCE we gather in how great perplexitie Hezekias was: for the vehemencie of his prayer diſcouers vnto vs a wonderfull meafure of griefe, ſo as a man may ſee that he indured great combats which he ouercame not without much adoe. For albeit the affection and zeale of his prayer ſhewes the ſtrength and power of his faith; yet he therein repreſents vnto vs as in a glaſſe his paſſions that boiled within him. As ſoone then as we are to indure any ſuch ailments, let vs learne from the example of this good King to oppoſe againſt the paſſions wherewith we are toſſed, that which may beſt ſerue for the confirming of our faith, that by the tempeſt it ſelfe we may be brought to a ſafe and quiet hauen. Let not the ſenſe of our weakenes any whit aſtoniſh vs then; no, not when feare and dread ſhall preſſe vs aboue meafure as it were. For the Lord will haue vs wreſtle valiantlie euen till we ſweate and tremble, becauſe we muſt not thinke to goe to heauen in a featherbed, or at eaſe, as we vſe to ſpeake, but after many combates God hath promiſed an happie iſſue to them that fight as they ought to doe, which in the end he will vndoubtedlie beſtow vpon vs.

But why doth Hezekiah deſire God to beare? Thinks he that he ſleepes, or vnderſtands not? No ſuch matter. But wee are wont to ſpeake thus in ſome deſperat caſes, either when wee thinke God abſent, or when he ſeemes to make light account of our afflictions. Wee ſee he was ſo perplexed then that God (as he thought) had forgotten him; that is to ſay, according to the ſenſe of the fleſh: for had he not beheld him preſent by the eyes of faith, he had vtterlie quailed. It is as much then as if Hezekias had deſired the Lord euen effectuallic and openlie to ſhew ſome worke for his ſaluation, which he had long hoped for before in the ſecret of his heart.

But why doth he pray that God would open his eyes, and ſee? It is as much as if he had ſaid, Lord, let it appeare that thou haſt care of theſe matters. Now he ſufficientlie ſhewes where his paine held him moſt, namely, he longed to ſee ſome vengeance ſhewed vpon theſe blaſphemers which offered ſuch outrage againſt Gods Maieſtie: for albeit this good King tooke great thought for the preferuation of his kingdome and people, yet had he reſpect vnto Gods glorie: aboue all other commodities whatſoeuer. And truly the aduancement thereof ſhould touch vs neerer, and moue vs more then any thing elſe, eſpecially when we know that his glorie and our ſaluation are things that can not be ſeparated.

Thus Hezekias hauing brought forth this Tyrant vpon the ſtage as a blaſphemous and hatefull enemy of God, becauſe Ieruſalem gloried in this title, The God of Iacob, and in his protection, he thereupon concludes, that God can by no meanes caſt off y^e Citie which he hath taken into his owne cuſtodie, vneſſe therewithall he ſhould renounce his owne name also. Seeing the Lord then of his infinite Bountie is pleased to ioine his glorie with our saluation, let vs hold fast these promises, and let vs fortifie our selues with them, namely, that although the wicked goe on in a vaine hope, thinking to scape scotfree whilest they blaspheme God, and cast vp that poison out of their hearts which lurked before in them, yet there is not a syllable thereof which he understands not, and he will in his due time bring them to an account for the same:

Verf. 18. Truth it is, O Lord, that the Kings of Asshur haue destroyed all lands, and their countrie.

19. And haue cast their gods in the fire: for they were no Gods, but the worke of mans hands, euen wood or stone: therefore they destroyed them.

Herzekias begins here to put a difference betweene the true God and the false, which we also had need diligentlie to do: for the wicked that are not enlightened haue many confused thoughts of some diuinitie, which by and by vanisheth away, so as either they thinke there is no God at all, or if there be, yet they regard him not. But God would not haue vs lightlie touched with some idle or vading conceit of him, but that we should acknowledge him to be the true God, who by the brightnes of his power scatters abroad all the darknes of ignorāce. It is not enough then you see to acknowledge a diuinitie if I can not tell what, as prophane ones do, but God ought to be so knowne and receiued, that he be discerned from all Idols; and the truth separated from lyes. And questionlesse, when he hath once cleared our iudgements; all opinion of false religions which possessed our minds before, will immediatlie fall to the ground.

And so much the rather are we to hold fast this doctrine, by how much the more many please themselves in fond speculations, thinking it sufficient for them if they acknowledge a God at randon. Whether they ought to worship the god of the Turks or Iewes they know not: and thus they houer in the ayre, and touch neither heauen nor earth, as they say. There is not a worse plague to be found, then such an imagination, for thereby the true God and Idols are mingled together, whose Maiestie is then tumbled downe from his throne, vnlesse hee bee held as supreme head, and all false gods with their worship laid at his feet. The beginning of true pietie therefore consists in a wise distinguishing of this only God, from all the troupe of idoll gods.

But Herzekias vseth two reasons by which he shewes they were no Gods. First, because they were made of corruptible matter: Secondly, they were the worke of mens hands. Now what is more absurd then to see a man so much past shame as to be the forger of a God; not only because himselfe is not eternall, and God is: but because he can not consist by his owne power, not so much as one minute of an houre. For example, let all the world doe their utmost to put all the wit & force thereof into one man if it could be, yet is he not able to make a poore flea: what pride is it then for a man at his pleasure to put his hands to the worke; and to forge as many gods to himselfe as he list? for seeing all that is in vs is meereley earthlie and transitorie, we can expect but treene gods to come from the worke of our owne hands. Adde further, that it is the greatest follie in the world to imagin vnder pretext of arte, to fasten a kind of diuinitie to a corruptible and an insensible blocky as if a peece of wood or stone began then to be god, as soone as it hath some purtrairure giuen vnto it. Thus we may easily ouerthrow all the superstitions which men haue inuened: for stedfastnes and constancie must be sought further off then in mens shallow braines: nay, I say more, all that which they haue inuened in that shop, is condemned as lyes, and things of nought.

All the world not able to forme a sillie flea.

No follie like this, to imagin that as the workman by arte hath giuen some forme or shape vnto it.

Verf. 20. Now therefore, O Lord our God, saue thou vs out of his hand, that all the kingdomes of the earth may know that thou only art the Lord.

Now this good King in the conclusion of his prayer ouercomes all feare, against which he had fought a long time; for there is no doubt but the helps wherewith he hath hitherto furnished himselfe, did much encourage him with boldnes to adde this short clause. Now albeit God deliuers vs not alwaies from outward troubles, yet in regard he had promised to preserve and keepe the Citie, Herzekias was bold to beleue that this tyrant which plotted his ouerthrow, should little auale by any of his deuices. And whereas he againe vrgeth the Lord with this mortue, That his glorie shall be wonderfullie aduanced, by the deliuerance of this Citie: thence we gather, that we ought to wish nothing more then to see the same flourish euery maner of way: for it is the principall end of our saluation, from which we must not turne one iot, if we thinke to find him mercifull vnto vs. In the second place we gather hence, that such are vnworthe of Gods help, who contenting themselves only with their owne saluation, either forget, or set light by the end for which they are saued. For God by this vthankfulness is not only dishonored, but they therein offer him great outrage in separating those things which at any hand ought to be ioined together. Doth not the glorie of his name shine in our saluation? And is it not the chiefest comfort and consolation we haue, that it doth so, as we haue said already? Yes doubtlesse.

Moreouer, Herzekias not only desires the God of Israel may be only exalted of men but would haue him exalted so farre forth, that all Idols also might be abolished for many Idolaters at that time would be content that the true God had bin ship-ped amongst the rest of their dunge gods; but because he can away with ie to sit reck-mate

Verſ. 21. Then Iſaiah the ſonne of Amos ſent vnto Hezekiah, ſaying, Thus ſaith the Lord God of Iſrael; Becauſe thou haſt praied vnto mee concerning Sennacherib King of Aſhur,

22. This is the word that the Lord hath ſpoken againſt him; The virgin, the daughter of Zion hath deſpiſed thee, and laughed thee to ſcorne: the daughter of Ieruſalem hath ſpoken her head at thee.

NOW behold the fruit of prayer: for things being brought to an afterdeale, God ſuddenly reacheth Hezekias his hand, by the miniſterie of our Prophet Iſaiah. Not that hee ſo reached or ſtretched it forth, that the enemie was forthwith put to flight; but in promiſing deliuerance by Iſaiah's mouth, he ſtill exerciſeth the faith of his ſeruant. Now as the Prophet for his part, could not of himſelfe haue given this conſolation; ſo had it been but a ridiculous thing to haue promiſed it, vnleſſe Hezekias had alſo beleecued that this meſſage was ſent him from God. He therefore contented himſelfe with this bare promiſe, waiting in ſilence till God ſhould manifeſt his power. Now by this wee are taught, that it is our dutie at all times to aſke counſell of the Lord, if we meane to ſeele his comforts in our afflictions and diſtreſſes: for if we ſet light by the meſſage which he ſends vs by the miniſterie of his faithfull ſeruants, we are then viterly vnworthy to receiue any conſolation from him. But albeit wee be neuer ſo well inſtructed, and filled as it were with the knowledge of this doctrine, yet it ſtands vs in hand to know it euery day better and better, ſtill drawing thence new teſtimonies to confirme our faith withall, to the end we may haue remedies at hand when new aſſaults ſhall befall vs, and may not at any time bee deſtitute of comfort in the middeſt of our greateſt calamities: for hee that is beſt furniſhed and fortified this way, can neuer bee too well provided. We haue in Hezekias here a ſingular example of faith and conſtancie; and yet the Lord contents not himſelfe to haue comforted him once, and by one prophecie onely, as in verſe 6, 7. but he now confirms his faith many waies; that we who are far ſhort of that conſtancie which was in him, might learne to know what need wee haue of many helpes for the ſuſtaining and vpholding of our faith continually.

Becauſe thou haſt praied vnto mee. The holy hiſtorie expreſſeth no more but this verbe, I haue heard thee: the word becauſe therefore is a relative in that place: but here it is an expoſitive, or a particle of giuing a reaſon, as in many other places. For it is forced and conſtrained to ſupply the verbe To heare; as nanie expoſitors doe: and the ſentence runnes well being reade as it is; when God therein ſhewes that he will ouerthrow all the practiſes of Sennacherib, and repreſſe his violence and furie, becauſe Hezekias hath praied. As if he ſhould ſay; I giue thee ſuch an answer as fits thy request. And doubtleſſe whoſoever he be that directs his prayer vnto God, hee ſhall in the end feele how much the Lord is inclined to answer: in deede hee often holds his peace, and offers vs no conſolation by his word, but it is becauſe wee haue been ſlute in our afflictions.

The ſumme of the prophecie comes to this; that Hezekias, as feeble and deſtitute as hee was of all ſuccour, yet needed not for all that to feare in beholding this tyrant ſo to aduance himſelfe: for God would be the moderator in this caſe, who proteſts that hee will take the quarrell into his owne hand; as if he ſhould ſay; Sennacherib indeed hath offered outrage againſt thee and thy people, but the weight of it failes vpon my Maieſtie. And thus he ſhewes that hee will be reuenged of the heathen that knew not his name; and withall admoniſheth the faithfull not to ſorrow as men without hope, if the world for a time doe tread them vnder foote, for he hath ſtore of ſuccours readie in heauen to ſuſtaine their infirmities. But it hath much greater force, in that he ſpeakes to the whole Church; then if he had ſpoken to Hezekias particularly: for this circumſtance augments the indignitie of the fact, becauſe Sennacherib ſcorned the meane eſtate of this poore people, as if Gods helpe had been a matter of nothing. The Prophecie then taxeth the blindneſſe of this Tyrant, who hauing no reſpect vnto God, thus proudly inulteth ouer his poore and deſolate Church.

It is an vſual thing in the Scriptures, to call Cities daughters: ſometimes goodlie Cities alſo are called virgins, as we haue noted before in another place. But heere Iſaiah meant to note out Ieruſalems weakneſſe, who was as a poore virgin, ſuccourleſſe and comfortleſſe, which this vile ruſſian; and curſed cutthroate vexed and reuiled: whereas God on the other ſide, as the father to whom this iniury was offered, ſhewes that he is acquainted well enough with the plotes of this mixture, as alſo in what eſtate the whole land of Iudea was.

Verſ. 23. Whom haſt thou railled on and blaſphemed? And againſt whom haſt thou exalted thy voice, and lifted up thine eyes on high? euen againſt the holy one of Iſrael.

IN the verſe before going, he deſcribed the matter as if it had been ſeen and heard of all: now hee raiſeth their thoughts higher; ſhewing that the Tyrant hath not onely bent himſelfe againſt Ieruſalem, but againſt her God alſo. Let this place come to our remembrance as oft as we are expoſed to the ſcoffes and taunts of the wicked: for albeit wee are ſorlorne, and there be no eye to pitie vs, nor any to plead our cause, in regard of the enemies rage which is more and more inflamed against vs, yet our God is at hand, who will coter vs in such wise, as we shall haue strength and defence sufficient: for all they that persecute vs, doe not onely war with vs, but with him which is the liuing God. These things were not written for onc age alone; but rather as this promise is perpetuall, I will be thy buckler, and thine exceeding great reward:

Gen. 15. 1.

God perfects his power in weaknes.

A friend to thy friends, and an enemy to thy enemies: Gen. 17. 7. so, euen then when we haue least meanes and strength to resist, let vs bee so much the more resolu'd, that the hand of our God is the nearer to deliuer vs. Since God had been pleas'd then in the person of Abraham to strike a covenant with vs, vpon condition that himselfe will alwaies take our quarrell into his owne hands: let vs assure our selues, that he will faithfully performe his promise, and will manifest it, that the wrong which is done vnto vs, redounds to his owne person. In a word, he is so made one with vs in his Christ, that hee will haue ours made his, and that which is his, made common to vs.

To be short, hee is so conioined with vs, that he meanes to make a communitie of all that is his and ours together. And therefore hee tooke the outrages and wrongs which Sennacherib did to the Church, as done to his own person: to shew, that wicked men greatly abuse themselves, when they are puffed vp with an ouerweening of their own greatness, as if therefore forsooth they should escape vnpunished, when they haue trod the poore Church vnder their feet. For we know they basely esteeme of God his prouidence, and especially when they see the faithfull lie panting vnder the burthen of the Crosse and afflictions, they thinke them vnworthy the succor of God: who for that cause awakes himselfe as it were, and declares by vnanswervable arguments, that he is no lesse wronged when his little flocke is thus halled to and fro, then if open violence were offered to his owne Maiestie. Let it be granted then that our enemies thinke our God cares not for vs, when outward meanes faile vs, and that they then spoile with greater liberty, as if we were giuen into their hands for a pray; yet God on the contrary affirms, that our saluation is deere and precious still vnto him.

But our Prophet with many wordes sets forth the pride and insolencie of this tyrant, as of a man altogether insupportable; to wit, in his speeches, looks, and gestures which hee vsed with head, hands, feete, and all the parts of his body: for as such proud tyrants haue a vaine conceit of their owne greatness, so they aduance themselves, and behold others with a scornfull eye; as if they were some pettie gods, newly fallen from the cloudes. For a conclusion, Isaiah adds, that albeit the affaires of this people went but meanly forward, yet God notwithstanding, who holds them vnder his protection, remains in heauen, and is as almighty as euer he was: wherein he taxeth the madnesse of Sennacherib, who esteemed the people according to the outward appearance, neuer considering that they were dedicated and consecrated vnto God. That wee then may rest safely and securely vnder his power and protection, and that he may spread his armes ouer vs for our succour in the time of neede; we must for our parts be sure that we be bi Israel; which wee shall be, if resting vpon his word and promise, wee quietly sit vs downe vnder the shadow of his wings.

Verf. 24. By thy seruants hast thou railed on the Lord, and said; By the multitude of my chariots, I am come vp to the top of the mountaines, to the sides of Lebanon, and will cut downe the high Cedars thereof; & the firre trees therof: and I will goe vp to the heights of his toppes, and to the Forrest of his fruitfull places.

See how the indignitie and spightfulnessse of this outrage is further amplified; for the iniurie that is offered by a seruant, is not so easilie put vp, as when it is done by the master; becaue the baseness of the person makes the wrong euermore intollerable. And therefore the proud ones of the world, when they will threaten in the most despightfull sort, they will brag that their wils shall be executed by their seruants and horsekeppers: that they may make it knowne, how basely they esteeme of those whom they purpose to mischief. By this circumstance then the Prophet meant to shew how execrable this blasphemie was, when Sennacherib was not content to vomit it out of his owne mouth; but had set on his seruant Rabshakeh, to make him rent the sacred name of God in peeces.

As touching that which is recited afterward in the person of Sennacherib, some take it generally for the former victories which hee had wonne, and by this meanes had subdued many nations, as we haue said before: but I had rather take it more particularly, in referring it to this last siege. For when he saw the whole land in a manner vnder his obissance, and the mountaines which inuironed all the Country, possessed by his souldiers, he brags as if he had gotten all, and threatens that hee will inioy the castles, mount Libanon with his Cedars, fir-trees, and other commodities: as if he should say; Nothing shall let me to be master of all the forts of Iudah, and to deale with the Country as I thinke good. See how Tyrants glory that the good successes of their warres are in their owne hands, although often constrained to acknowledge the fight to be dangerous.

Verf. 25. I haue digged and drunke the Waters, and with the plant of my feete haue I dried all the riuers ^{*Or, of the} clo- ^{siege.} sedin.

This Tyrant proceeds here, glorying still in his forces, and threatens to bring so mightie nighie an armie, that the multitudes of his ſouldiers ſhall be able to drinke the fountaines and rivrs of Iewrie drie. By the riuers of the ſiege, ſome vnderſtand the riuier Shilo, and the Ciſterns which the beſieged Iewes could not loſe but they muſt forthwith periſh for thirſt. Yet in the firſt member he ſeemes to aſſume, that he feares no want of water, though the whole countrie were deſtitute of it, becauſe he hath men enow to digge pits. In the ſecond place he ſaith, he is furniſhed with meanes ſufficient to drie vp all the waters of the Citie, thinking thus to terrifie the Iewes. His meaning in a word is, that Ieruſalem will not be able to indure the ſiege, nor be able to ſtand out long againſt him, but muſt forthwith be conſtrained to yeeld. Now when the wicked make their vants on this maner, God ſits in heauen, whence at the laſt he will denounce his iuſt ſentence againſt them. For the Prophets diſcourſe tends to informe vs of Gods iuſt and wonderfull iudgement againſt this Tyrant.

The prophets drift in this narration.

Verſ. 26. Hath thou not heard how I haue of old time made it, and haue formed it long agoe? And ſhould I now bring it, that it ſhould be deſtroyed and laid on ruinous heapes as Cities deſenced?

THE expoſitors for the moſt part expound this verſe as if the Lord ſhould ſay, That this Tyrant neither hath done nor ſhall doe any thing but that he hath foretold by the mouth of his Prophet, and thus affirms, that himſelfe is the author of theſe things. But I expound it otherwiſe; to wit, that Ieruſalem ſhall be deliuered by Gods aſſiſtance, becauſe he is the protector of it: and that his ſpeech might haue the more weight, he names not the Citie, but vſeth the pronoun demonſtratiue, as if all other Cities were nothing in Gods account in compariſon of this.

Others referre theſe words, I haue made it, to the deliuerance which depended vpon the ſecret counſell of God: but whoſoeuer ſhall diligencie weigh the ſcope of the Prophets words, will confeſſe that it is here ſpoken of Ieruſalem. God complained, as we haue ſeene, that he was ſo deſpightfullie blaſphemed; and yet in reciting the words of Senacherib he only mentioned Libanon, and the quarters adioining: now to ſhew that vnder the name of Libanis, warre was proclaimed againſt himſelfe, he affirms (as in many other places) that Ieruſalem was founded with his hand, and built at his command: whence it follows, that Senacherib could not ouerthrow it, vneſſe he firſt plucked God downe from his throne.

This doctrine is often met withall in the Scriptures, and wonderfull comfort is conieined in it, vpon which the faithfull may at all times boldlie leane in all their trials and afflictions, be they neuer ſo hard and difficult to be borne; to wit, that they ſhall euer be preferred vnder Gods protection, becauſe he hath elected them. For thus ſtands the argument, I haue made and formed the Church: the ſaluation of it ſhall ſtand for ever, becauſe I will not leaue the worke that I haue begun vniſhished, but will bring it vnto perfection. In a word, the Lord teſtifies that he will goe on with his worke, and will preferre it, becauſe it concernes his owne honor, and our ſaluation.

Phil. 1. 6.

Moreouer, he is called the former of his Church in another ſenſe then that in which he is ſaid to be the Creator of heauen and earth: for we are his peculiar workmanſhip, ſaith S. Paul, being reformed by his Spirit: of which point we haue ſpoken heretofore in other places. This worke therefore of all others is the moſt excellent, yea, aboue the creation of the whole world. Be it farre from any man therefore to aſſume that he was incorporated into the Church by his owne power or induſtrie: for it is not without cauſe that we are called his workmanſhip, Eph. 2. 10.

Ephes. 1. 10.

But it may be demanded why the Lord ſaith he formed Ieruſalem long agoe, for there were many Cities more ancient then it. I anſwere, that this ought not to be referred to the outward forme or building, but to the eternall decree of God, according to which he had choſen this Citie for his dwelling place. For albeit it was then only ſaid when the Arke was made, This is my reſt, here will I dwell, Pſal. 132. 14. And by Moses, I will come vnto thee into the place wherein I ſhall put the remembrance of my name, and I will bleſſe thee, Exod. 20. 24: yet had God long before ordained it. For we were choſen before the foundations of the world were laid, as S. Paul teacheth, Ephes. 1. 4. And S. James ſaith, That we were begotten by the word of truth, that we might be the firſt fruites of his creatures, Iam. 1. 18. He will then conſerue vs aboue all his creatures, and will neuer ſuffer vs to periſh. Now as Chriſt is called the firſt borne of euery creature, Coloſ. 1. 13. ſo the Church alſo, which is his bodie, obtaines in this world the preheminance of dignitie and honour.

Quest.

Anſ.

I leaue the Rabbins to their rauings, when they ſay, that God created the Meſſiah and Ieruſalem with a throne of glorie before he formed heauen or earth. But we muſt hold this principle, that he will be the faithfull gardian of his Church, ſeeing he hath vouchſafed to preferre it before all the world beſides.

Rauings of the Rabbins.

As touching that which followes in the end of the verſe, And ſhould I now bring it to this point? Some draw it to a ſenſe altogether wreſted. I denie not but the Prophets words are in the preterperſectence; Now I haue brought it, and put it: but becauſe y change of the tence is very familiar and vſuall in the Hebrue tongue, it is certaine that the Prophet hauing affirmed that God is in ſuch wiſe the former of his Church, that it is the chiefſt of all his works, he now thence concludes, that it can not be ruined as other common things are. It muſt be read by an Intergogation then, Shall I bring it now, or, ſhould I ſuffer it to be brought? As if he ſhould ſay, Should I ſuffer it to be racted at other Cities which are quite ouerthrowne and laid on heapes? For he compares Ieruſalem with other Cities which were deſtroyed and ſubdued by the Aſſyrians, that ſo they might know that this Tyrant should not so easily obtaine that which he desired, because the difference is great betwene it and other Cities which haue bene reared to the foundation. It must not be compared then with other Cities how well fortified fouer they be, because they with the earthlie matter of which they consist, shall easily fall: but albeit the Church be but weake and feeble in outward shew, yet hath shee such a stable and firme foundation laid in Gods secret election, that it can neuer be ouerturned by any ten:pests whatsoeuer.

We see strange changes haue befallen the world: Commonwealths haue bene turned topsie turuie, Empires abolished, mightie nations subdued, and their renowne and glorie extinguished. What is now become of the glory of the Roman Empire? What is become of the Nobles of this people, who were the Lords of all the earth? If any reliques thereof remaine (which is very small) is it not buried vnder the miserablie slauerie of that cursed monster, I meane Antichrist, who exerciseth his tyranny ouer all the earth? Where is now the liberty which Rome once inioiced? Where is that goodly forme of a Commonwealth, which was once to be seene there? Rome may now well be called the shop of all mischiefe and impietie, and a cage of euery horrible confusion, the Lord shewes that he wil preserve Ierusalem; that is to say, his Church: and albeit among these changes, she be tossed vp and downe, and diuersly afflicted, yet she shall stand fast notwithstanding. At least, the shakings and persecutions which she suffers, shall not hinder her so, that by many resurrections (as it were) she should not still be renewed and multiplied from age to age. Now although the members of the Church are not alwaies of one ranke in this world, yet it is one and the same body knit by joints and bands to one head Iesus Christ. Thus then, The Lord will keepe and defend the Cisse, and will cause the children of his seruants so to conuince, that their seede may be established for euer: Psal. 102. 28.

The glory of the Roman Empire gone.

That Antichrist of Rome, an execrable monster.

Rome may now be called the shop of all impiety.

*Or, For the *Ebr. are short in hād.

*Vers. 27. * Whose inhabitants haue small power, and are afraid and confounded: They are like the grasse of the field and greene hearb, or, grasse on the house toppes, or corne blasted before it be growne.*

THe Prophet now better expresseth that which hee touched in briefe before, to wit, that the estate of the Church is not to be iudged according to that which she is in this world: for though the strongest Cities be taken, that the most valiant doe faile in heart, and fall into their enemies hands; yet the Church shall remaine and flourish, because the rests not vpon her owne strength, neither hath she her foundation from earth, but from heauen. For there is a close opposition here betwene strong Cities which the inhabitants cannot keepe, because they are frightened and troubled; and the Church of God, which being upheld by his onely grace, sustaines all assaults, and is neuer vanquished: for she referres all things to God onely, who giues her beginning and being, continues her strength, indues her with constancie and all sorts of benefites: in a word, with all the parts of her saluation. Hence we are taught, that all the fortresses in the world are nothing, vnlesse God be the watchman. All the forces of men are but as shiuering reeds, vnlesse they be sustained by his power: castles, ramparts, and weapons, bee they neuer so many and inuincible, without him, shall serue their turnes nothing at all.

This is yet better expressed by the similitudes which are added. For it was necessarie that the faithfull should bee well informed touching the loue and singular affection which the Lord bare towards them, lest they should be offended at the prosperitie of the prophane and wicked. Albeit humane forces then be neuer so glorious in outward appearance, and make all the goodly shewes that can be deuised; yet the Prophet affirms that it is but like the grasse and flowers of the field, which are greene and flourish for a time, and suddenly are gone. He abasheth them more by the other similitude which hee adds touching the grasse upon the house tops, whose stalkes are high and easie to be seene of all: but if they grow vpon any high place, then are they nearest their withering, being neuer fit for any vse: as the Psalmist saith; for the reaper fillen not his hand, nor the gleaner his lap; and therefore the passers by say not so much as God speed you: Psal. 129. 6, 7. So albeit the enemies of the Church be like the tall Cedars, whose toppes touch the heauens as it were, and flourish by inioying the world at will, yet shall they in a moment wither and come to nothing. As the corne then which grows on the ground, serues to much better vse then the vnfruitfull grasse which grows on the house top, so the Lord shewes that the base and abiect condition of his seruants, is much more excellent then theirs, who by reason of their power, exalts themselves so farre, as to iustle against the Lord of heauen and earth.

The first Simile.

The second Simile.

Some thinke that that which is added touching the corne blasted, should be the fourth similitude: but as I thinke the Prophet would haue it serue as an exposition of the former similitude: as if he should say; This grasse shall wither away afore it is come to a stalke or to any ripenesse. As the Psalmist also saith, It withereth before it be plucked vp.

Vers. 28. But I know thy dwelling, and thy going out, and thy coming in; and thy furie against me.

HE returneth and toucheth the insupportable pride of this Tyrant, who attributed I wot not what to himselfe, as if he had been inferiour to none: yea, he durst blasphemie and raile vpon the liuing God, as if he had been nothing in comparison of him. But God takes downe his pride and arrogancie:

tie: as if he ſhould ſay, yet doe I know all thy haunts well enough; yea, thy ſitting downe, and riſing up. The wicked exalt themſelves, thinking they ſhould be ſubiect to none, no not to the providence of God it ſelfe: but he ſhewes, that they have no more power but that which is giuen them from above.

Sitting and going forth is taken here for conſultations, imaginations, and enterpriſes of the profane and wicked, who inuent ſundry plots how they may overwelme and deſtroy the people of God: but on which ſide ſoever they turne themſelves, and what way ſoever they take to bring their purpoſes to paſſe, yet they ſhall not performe a jot more then God hath willed. For they are reſtrained by his providence, which driues them to and fro, and often turnes their wicked plots to a good end, though they meant the cleane contrary. But God (whoſe proper office it is to direct mens paths, Pro. 20. 24.) conducts them which way it pleaſeth him.

He ſaith alſo, I know thy ſurie: thereby minding to ſhew, that whileſt the wicked play the beſlems on earth, God ſits ſtill in heauen laughing their madnes to ſcorne. And becauſe Sennacherib behaued himſelfe malepertly, and thought to goe ſcot-free, the Prophet adds theſe words expreſſie, to the end the faithfull ſhould not imagin this to be new, or vnknowne to the Lord, or as if he eſteemed them not.

Verſ. 29. *Because thou rageſt againſt me, and thy tumult is come vp into mine eares, therefore will I put mine * booke in thy noſtrils, and will bring thee back againe the ſurſe way thou cameſt.*

* Or, ring.

THe more the wicked are caried away with rage, & furioſlie exalting themſelves againſt God, the more ſeuerely doth he at the laſt oppoſe himſelfe againſt their pride. He lets them take their ſwinge for a time, and ſuffers them to inioy the world at will, but after long forbearance he tames them, and reſtrains them, leſt they ſhould thinke they had all vnder their command. Sennacherib is a ſingular example hereof, for the more audacious he is to ſome out his rage and ſurie againſt God, the more heauiſe did he feele his wrath to fall vpon him whom he thus braued: which all the pack of perſecuters ought to expect as well as he.

Now he doth aptlie and pleaſantlie ſcorne the ſond ouerweening of this Tyrant, as if he ſhould ſay, I ſee well enough how the world goes, I ſhall gaine nothing by handling the gentle, becauſe thy wrath is become deſperate: ſceing then thou canſt not be tamed, I will hemper thee like a wilde beaſt. And thus God ſhewes more plainly, that he is not only acquainted with the plots and imaginations of this milcreant, but ſo moderates and holds back his tyrannie, that in ſpight of his teeth he leades them whither ſoever he liſt: as if a wilde beaſt haue a ring put thorow his ſnout, a man may leade him whither he will. Some translate the word Kaki, an hooke, but I had rather expound it a ring: becauſe an hooke is fitter to catch fiſh withall then wilde beaſts. Sennacherib then was conſtrained to turne from whée he came, and haſtned away without doing any thing; although his purpoſe was to haue poſſeſt Egypt and Iudah whollie: neither would he haue been diſappointed of his purpoſe willinglie if God had not drawne him away by his ſecret worke.

Verſ. 30. And this ſhall be a ſigne vnto thee, O Hezekiah; Thou ſhalt eate this yeere ſuch as groweth of it ſelfe: and the ſecond yeere ſuch things as grow without ſowing: and in the third yeere ſow yee, and reape, and plant vineyards, and eate the fruite thereof.

NOW he directs his ſpeech vnto Hezekias and to all the people: for he ſpake not before to Sennacherib as if he had heard him, but it was to the end he might the better quicken vp the people to be of good courage, ſceing the Lord did thus deſpiſe this Tyrant. If he had only ſaid, Hezekias, be of good comfort, albeit Sennacherib inſults ouer thee, yet I will repreſſe his pride when I ſee it fit; theſe words (I ſay) had not been of ſuch efficacy, as when together with the ſame he turnes his ſpeech towards the Tyrant himſelfe, in thundring from heauen vpon him: for by this meanes he imbouldens the faithfull to ſee light by all his threats. I therefore hauing firſt ſpoken to the Tyrant, now he turnes himſelfe very ſittie vnto Hezekias and to the people, promiſing them deliuerance: and that not only out of the pawes of this cruell beare, but alſo that Hezekias ſhould inioy his kingdome ſtill in peace and proſperitie, and that the reſt of the people ſhould likewiſe haue all things neceſſarie for an happy and quiet life. And thus he amplifies the benefit of their deliuerance, the rather to ſhew that he will not only ſuccor his people in one kind only, but many waies: for in deed his deliuerances are not only limited to once or twice, but he would haue vs feele his benefits in large and in abundant meaſure, that the fruit thereof might laſt for a long time.

But it ſeemes the Prophet ſits not his ſigne to the preſent purpoſe, ſceing that which he promiſeth came not to paſſe till after they were deliuered: for if God meant hereby to comfort theſe poore beſieged ones, it was now ſittieſt time (one would haue thought) to haue ſhewed his power, and not to haue deſer'd it till the ſiege had been raiſed. I anſwere, there are two ſorts of ſignes, one goes before, and leades vs by the hand as it were to the thing promiſed, the other comes after and conſirms it, that it may ſtick faſt in our memories, neuer to be raced out. As for example, when the Lord brought Iſrael out of Egypt, he gaue many ſignes afore hand vnto Moſes, but afterward he ordained one which ſhould follow the deliuerance: to wit, You ſhall ſacrifice vnto me three daies, Exod. 3. 12. Why ſo? To the end they ſhould not forget so great a benefit, but might yeeld him thanks, after they had had experience of so exceeding a fauour.

Such a signe is y^e which Iſaiah here describes: & questionles, it serues also for a good cōfirmatiō of our faith, to haue such an euerlasting testimonie as it were first before our eies, which may cause vs to consider how many mercies y^e Lord hath shewed vs. Now though the enimie was driuen back, yet there was great likelihood of famine to insue, which vsuallie followes warres: for it is not possible but great dearth must ensue where the fields haue beene wasted and spoiled. But against this necessitie which was likely to befall, the Lord promisseth continuance of foode, and propounds this as an euident signe of their deliuerance, the better to perswade the people that he was the author thereof, or at the least, to fixe the memorie of it the faster in their minds. This was a thing incredible, and seemed farre to surmount all their capacities: but it was needfull that the faith of Hezekias and the peoples also should be thus awakened, that hauing intelligence of so rare a deliuerance, they might be the better prepared to hope, and that the issue also might shew how it came not to passe by chance or fortune; vnto which, for the most part, these so many admirable workes of God are attributed.

The Prophe^ts meaning then is, After the Lord shall haue ſraied the enimie away, he will hold him ſo ſhort, that he shall neuer be able to renew his arme againe: and thus thou shalt liue quietly in thy kingdome, which shall bring thee forth fruit in ſuch abundance, that thou shalt want nothing. Now in regard that part of their store was spent, and the rest wasted, as it comes to passe ordinarily in such publike calamities, and that it was not permitted them to till the earth, being now either besieged, or else fled; hee promisseth them corne without sowing, vnto the third yeere.

Verſ. 31. And the remnant that is escaped of the house of Iudah, shall againe take roote downward, and beare fruit upward.

THis appertaines to the former sentence: for his meaning is, that the Lord will deliner Ierusalem in such wise, that he will care for it also for the time to come, and will keepe it vnto the end. Truely all the benefits the Lord bestowes vpon vs, are so many signes and testimonies of his perpetuall good will towards vs; to the end wee might assuredly know, that hee will neuer leaue nor forsake vs. But in this sentence wee are chiefly to obserue that which we haue also touched before; to wit, that the Lord defended Ierusalem, because hee had pitched his Sanctuarie there, out of which also the Messiah was to come. The word Peltash, properly signifies Deliu^{er}ance; but it is here vsed as a nowne collectiue, which signifies those that are deliuered, or, are escaped: as in other places the word captiuitie, is taken for the captiues.

Now it is not without cause that hee promisseth increase to this little remnant: for albeit the siege was raised, yet the people being much diminished, they had small cause to reioice: & it was a thing very vnlike to expect a full restauration of such an handfull of people.

That he might a little reuiuie their sorrowfull hearts then, he shewes that the Country shall be filled with inhabitants, no lesse then if a faire and goodly plump of trees should fill the granges which were emptie before. But it was not onely the waste of the land of Iudah, which wounded the hearts of the faithfull thus with sorrow, but the great diminution of the ten Tribes their brethren, which had also beene carried away captiues. Now albeit they were thus scattered, yet Iſaiah promisseth that God would set them againe into their first estate, so as they should multiply into an infinit number: for the Lord often suffers his to be diminished & brought to nothing, that his glory may the better appeare afterwards in their deliuerance. And we at this day are to expect the like fauour from God, which he hath heretofore shewed to his people, that when wee see the Church at y^e last cast, giuing vp the ghost as it were; yet the we may assure our selues notwithstanding, that God hath meanes enow readie at hand to multiply this small remnant againe. For such a restauratiō on must not be measured according to the scant ell of our reason.

But hee faith, the Church shall be brought to so low an ebbe, that euerie one will esteeme it quite forlorne, euen as if it were plucked vp by the rootes: and truly the kingdome of Israel was a most sorrowfull spectacle of this plucking vp. Yet the Prophet in the name of God promisseth such an increase, that the tree which was stubbed vp by the rootes, shall againe take deeprooting downward. Albeit the church then haue not that goodly outward hew & beautie which the kingdomes of this world haue, yet will the Lord giue it such an inward and secret power, that by meanes thereof thee shall flourish and grow; contrary to all hope and reason of flesh and blood. Let vs not be out of heart then though the Church seeme to want rootes: neither let vs not thinke she hath none, because they appeare not to our sight; for the Lord hath promised she shall take roote downward.

Now hee addes the fruit also; because the Church flourisheth not onely as the grasse on the house top, which is the estate of the wicked, as we obserued in the 27. verse; but shee shall bring forth plentifull increase: and thus the Lord will finish in her the good worke he hath begun.

Verſ. 32. For out of Ierusalem shall goe a remnant, and they that escape out of mount Zion: the xcale of the Lord of hosts shall doe this.

BEfore, hee promised the deliuerance of the Church vnder the similitude of rootes and fruits: now hee sets it forth in plaine termes, without any figure. In these words therefore God often suffers his people to be brought to low ebs, that his glory might the better appeare in their deliuerance.

The Church of God must liue by faith, and not by sight.

therefore he alludes to that ſiege of Sennacherib, which incloſed this ſmall remnant of people vp in Ieruſalem, as in a priſon; by meanes whereof they were brought to great extremitie. Now ſaith he, they ſhall come forth; that is to ſay, all paſſages ſhall be laid open, ſo as you ſhall walke to and fro againe at libertie without any annoyance. For going forth, is here oppoſed to the ſtraits into which the poore Iewes were brought, in regard of the feare of their enemies. Albeit, this word not onely ſignifies libertie to goe and come, but the multiplying of the people which were few in number. When the land of Iudeah then was ouerſpread againe with great troopes, and that out of theſe ſmall remnants there came forth men and women like flocks of ſheepe, which were diſperſed into all the quarters of the world, it could neuer haue bin brought to paſſe, vnleſſe the Lord of this little handfull, had created, I will not ſay one, but many peoples.

He not onely oppoſeth the zeale of the Lord againſt the counſils of men, that hee might magnifie the excellencie of his worke; but alſo admoniſheth vs that it ſufficeth of it ſelfe for all reaſons wherefore the Lord ſhewes ſo wonderfull and admirable ſignes and tokens of his power. The matter in outward appearance was incredible, as we haue ſaid: for there were many impediments on euery ſide, and helpes none at all. Thus God manifeſts then, that the Ioue he beares to his Church is ſuch, that it ſhall be no hard matter with him to worke extraordinarily for the maintenance of it. He vſea the like praife of ſpeech in Chap. 9. 7.

Verſ. 33. Therefore thus ſaith the Lord concerning the King of Aſſur; Hee ſhall not enter into this Citie, nor ſhoote an arrowe there, nor come beſore it with ſhield, nor caſt a mount againſt it.

Now he comes to the deliuerance whereof he ſpake before: for firſt, God promiſed to driue away Sennacherib, verſ. 29. ſecondly, hee promiſeth to furniſh the people with neceſſarie foode: albeit the Country was piled and waſted: verſ. 30. Laſtly, that he will cauſe this ſmall remnant to increaſe into an infinite multitude: verſ. 31. Now hauing ſpoken of the two laſt points, he returns againe to the firſt; becauſe without it, the other twaine had beene little to purpoſe; or wit, vnleſſe the people had bin deliuered out of the hands of this Tyrant. God therefore promiſeth that himſelfe will ſtand as a braſen wall, to keepe him from entering in vpon them: yea, he wou'd ſo preuent him, that he ſhould not ſo much as come neere to aſſaile them at all. For he ſaith, the enemies ſhall not ſhoote an arrowe there. I thinke the word sollah, ſhould be taken here for a croſſe-bow or other inſtrument of war, with which they ſhot darts; rather then for a mount, for mounts cannot be caſt.

Verſ. 34. By the ſame way hee came ſhall hee returne, and not come into this Citie, ſaith the Lord.

We haue ſaid before, that to returne by the ſame way, ſignifies, To goe his way without performing any thing; as wee vſe to ſay in our common prouerbe; Hee went as wiſe as he came, when one returnes without doing that which he came for, and is preuented in all his enterpriſes. To confirm this, he adds that the Lord hath ſaid it. For no ſooner hath he (which cannot lie) ſpoken, but we ought forthwith to receiue and embrace his word; and that no leſſe then if all impediments being taken away, we ſaw the effect by and by to take place.

Verſ. 35. For I will defend this Citie to ſaue it, for mine owne ſake, and for my ſervant Dauids ſake.

This is the confirmation of the former ſentence, why Sennacherib ſhall not come into Ieruſalem; to wit, becauſe the Lord is her protector. The Prophet here then commands Hezekias and all the people to turne their eyes towards God, in regard the fight of this Tyrant was ſo terrible vnto them, that they could doe nothing but tremble. As when we at this day ſhould conſider the power of our enemies, it would make vs quake for feare; in ſo much y there ſhould reſt ſcarſly one dram of hope in vs: but we muſt norwithſtanding looke direclly vp vnto God, and lay hold vpon his promiſes, and to ſeile our ſelues with them, as with a ſhield. It is to him, to him alone, I ſay, that we muſt turne our eyes, ſeeing he hath power enough in himſelfe for vs to repreſſe the power of mortal man. For this promiſe muſt not be reſtrained to Hezekias his time onely; but it extends it ſelfe to all ages. And yet the Prophets words haue a more ample ſenſe: for he affirms, that God himſelfe is the protector and keeper of the Citie, becauſe he had taken it into his cuſtodie. Thence therefore he concludes, that it muſt needs be out of danger, becauſe his defence is all ſufficient.

When he ſaith he will do it for his own ſake, he thereby brings Hezekias and all the people to the conſideration of the free couenant. The Iewes had beene often rebuked, and that very ſharply; yet did they not ceale euen of ſer purpoſe to prouoke the wrath of God againſt them: in which regard, they not onely deſerued to be left to themſelues in the time of need, but that he ſhould inſiſt vpon them euent ſignes of his fearefull wrath and indignation. That deſpaire might be preuented then, hee teacheth them that God will be their defence: nor that hee findes the cauſe thereof in them, but becauſe he reſpects his own name. Why ſo? Firſt, that his world might ſtand faſt, which was, that hee would neuer caſt off the poſteritie of Abraham, which hee had adopted, nor aboliſh his worſhippe, nor put out the remembrance of his name, though the Sanctuarie should be destroyed: secondly, lest hee should expose his name to the blasphemies & scornes of the heathen. There is therefore a secret rebuke included here, which this people deserued to be galled withall, and that iustlie: for Hezekias no doubt had more adoe to quiet and still the Iewes from their murmurings, then to chase away the enimie: for they tooke on no lesse, then if all had been lost. We must not thinke then that God had respect to the deserts of the people, or to any other particular cause, but solely to his owne glorie. For wee must supplie a close antithesis here, which is expressed by Ezechiel: I do not this for your sakes O house of Israel, but for mine holy names sake, Ezech. 36. 22.

Now seeing the same reason holds still in respect of vs, let vs boldlie oppose this buckler against all our finnes: Lord, although we are worthy by thy iust iudgements of a thousand deaths, yet be thou pleased to accept of thine owne free mercie and goodnes to keep thy promise with vs. I grant, that hypocrites gaine nothing by this, that God is said to be the perpetuall protector of his Church: but vnto this rock must all the faithfull learne to flee for refuge, though they come empty handed of any thing of their owne to appease his wrath withall: for he will neuer suffer his Church to perish, because he hath built and established it with a purpose to keepe it: but the cause that moues him to doe it is nothing else but his owne free and infinit loves sake.

Furthermore it is diligentlie to be noted when he addes, for Dauid my seruants sake: for albeit it had been sufficient for God to haue sought the cause of our saluation only in his free and vnderseeded loue which he beares to his people: yet it is not without cause that he placeth a most certaine pledge of it in Dauid, in whose hand he had renewed the covenant, promising to be his father. Neither doth the Prophet propound him here as a priuare person, but as that holy King, whose throne was established by God, that vnder his government his Church might inioy peace and safetrie. In a word, he was the mediator as it were betwene God and man, in which respect he was superior to the very Angels: for he represented the person of Iesus Christ.

Ezech. 21. 26, 27.

Now albeit soone after his Throne was throwne downe, and the Diadem torne in peeces, yet was not this confirmation vaine, that God would still for a time keepe the Citie, because he would in no sort breake his promise made to Dauid in his truth, touching the perpetuallie of his kingdom. For wee know that his successors lost not the principalitie by the exile of the people till Christ came; who for this cause in Hosea 3. 5. is called Dauid. By this we see how ridiculous the Papists are, when they affirme we are pardoned by the merits of Saints: for there is great difference betwene the Saints and Dauid, in regard of the promise which was made vnto him. He might as well haue named Abraham, or any other renowned Patriarke in the Church: but because he now speaks of the Church, and of the eternitie of Christes kingdom, he speciallie names him, whom about all others had expresse receiued this promise. Behold, this is my rest, here will I dwell: for I haue a delight therein, Psal. 132. 14. Seeing the Prophet then respects the promise, and not the person, the Papists then are worthilie branded with the name of absurd Doctors, in thinking that the intercession of Saints (a dreame of their owne deuising) can be any whit confirmed by this place. Nay, that which they pretend here, directlie crosseth their error: for Dauid which is heere placed betwene, beares the image of the only Mediator, who abolisheth all newfound intercessions. Reade 1. Tim. 2. 5. 1. Iohn 2. 1. 2.

The Prophet respects the promise, not Dauids person.

Verf. 36. Then the Angell of the Lord went out, and smote in the Camp of Asshur an hundredeth fourscore and sine thousand: so when they arose early in the morning, Behold, they were all dead corpses.

Now the Prophet shewes what befell the Lords words to be but winde: he testifies then that his propheticke tooke effect in deed; that so they might be the better perswaded he was sent of God, and had spoken nothing of his owne head. But this so admirable worke must not be restrained to this one prophesie alone, but to the whole scope of his doctrine, which by this miracle was authorized, himselfe knowne to be the seruant of God, and his calling ratified and confirmed. For doubtlesse he annexeth this notable and rare example of Gods iustice as a thing then very fresh in mind, to testifie to the end of the world that it was God which spake by his mouth.

But now where the Angell made this slaughter, it appears not. The common opinion is, that it happened whilest Ierusalem was besieged; but it might well happen also in the way, that is to say, when Sennacherib came to lay siege against Ierusalem. But I leaue it as a thing in suspence, because it is of no great moment: albeit we may easily iudge by the scope of the text, that this Tyrant came not so neere that he could throw any of his darts against the Citie.

Moreover, we are to reiect an inuention of Satan, who hath inuentioned by help of prophane histories to darken so manifest and admirable a iudgement of God, which affirms, that part of Sennacheribs host died of the plague in the watter of Egypt, by reason whereof he was enforced to returne home into his owne countrie. But who will say that there died so many men of the pestilence in one night? This father of lies (according to his ancient custome) honors the Egyptians with this miracle, which God purposely wrought in fauor of his Church. The fact it selfe makes it more then manifest, that Ierusalem was miraculously deliuered, as from the gates of death, speciallie if we way the message which Isaiah brought, as we haue seene before: by which he apparantlie testified that God wrought this this worke rather for the Iewes then for the Egyptians.

And leſt any man ſhould imagin this miracle came to paſſe by naturall cauſes, it is expreſſie added, that all this multitude was ſlaine by the ſtroke of an Angell. Now it is no vnwonted thing for God thus to uſe the miniſterie of Angels, in procuring the ſafetie of the faithfull, for whoſe ſakes he hath created all the armies of heauen. It alſo ſerues greatly for the confirmation of our faith, when we ſee there are ſo many thouſands of them which wait for our ſaluation. The Lord himſelfe is ſtrong enough, and his truth it is which onely keeps vs: Kom. 8. 38. For the Angels are but his hands as it were, in regard whereof, they are called powers and principalities: but hee prouides exceedingly for our weakneſſe, by giuing ſuch celeftiall miniſters to be our gardians and protectors. And yet the whole glorie muſt be aſcribed to God alone, we are to acknowledge the Angels but his instruments; for otherwiſe wee ſhould eaſilie ſlip into the error of the Papiſts, who aſcribing more then is meete to them, doe rob God of his power, to clothe them with it. With which error alſo, the learnedſt men of our time haue bin bewitched, as we know.

Now we cannot affirme certainly whether this were done by the hand of one, or manie Angels; neither is it much materiaſl: for the Lord is able eaſily to effect one and the ſame thing, by one or a thouſand of them. For he vſeth not their miniſterie, as if hee ſtood in need of their helpe, but rather to ſupport our infirmities, as we haue ſaid before: yet it is moſt probable, and answers beſt to the Propheſie words, that one Angell alone had commiſſion to doe this ſeruiſe. Euen as in the ancient deluſion, one Angell paſſed thorow the land of Egypt in a night, to ſlay their firſt borne: Exod. 12. 29. Sometimes God alſo executes his iudgements by wicked angels: but he choſe one of his voluntarie ſeruants here, to deliuer his Church, as by his hand.

An hundred, fourſcore, and ſix thouſand.] We are not to maruell that this was ſo great an armie, as ſome ignorant doe, who eſteeme it but a fable, when they heare tell of ſuch an huge multitude of ſouldiers; becauſe a leſſe number ſerues the turne now a daies. But hiſtories doe plainly reſuſe, that the eaſterne people managed things cleane contrarie to vs; and it is to be ſeene among them yet at this day. It was no maruell they brought ſo many forth to battel, becauſe they were much more inabled to indure cold and heat then we, they had more able bodies to labour, they were more ſparing in diet; neither were they giuen to delicious and dainties fare, with which vice our ſouldiers are corrupted.

As touching the manner of this diſcomfigure, here is nothing ſet downe for certaine. The Rabbins without any testimony or likely coniecture, affirme, that they were ſmitten with thunder and lightning. For as they are bold to come fables, ſo are they not afraid to auouch any thing that comes in their heads, euen as if they had found the ſame recorded in ſome authentique hiſtorie. But the words ſhew, that this was no ſuch apparant ſlaughter: for the Prophet ſaith, that they lay all dead vpon the earth: if they had bin ſmitten with lightning, euery one would haue perceiued it, neither would the Prophet haue concealed it. The coniecture of the Rabbins then you ſee, is confuted out of the very text: but I had rather laue off in the mid way. It ſufficeth that we know thus much; the Lord was minded to deliuer Jeruſalem out of the hand of the Aſſyrians; and he ſinore the hoſt with ſudden death, altogether without mans helpe.

Verſ. 37. So Sennacherib King of Aſhur departed, and went away, and returned, and dwelt at Nineveh.

Now Iſaiah ſhewes, with what diſhonour this Tyrant retired; who before, in his conceit, had deuoured all Iudeah, and durſt challenge the Lord himſelfe. In that he expreſſeth his recoiling backe, with ſo manie words to one purpoſe, it is to caſt diſgrace vpon his cowardly flight: for it is no ſuperfluous repetition when he ſaith, he departed, hee went his way, and he returned. The name of King is alſo added to his further ſhame. As if he ſhould ſay; See this King, this great King, Chap. 36. 4. whom Rabſheke extolled ſo highly, becauſe of his power. Hee came not into Iudeah to returne with infamie; but God for his mercy and truthe ſake droue him out thence, euen as chaſſe before the wind.

Where it is ſaid, hee returned to dwell in Nineveh, it ſhewes vs further, that hee not onely left his courage, but his forces alſo quailed; for hee would not willingly haue ſtaed at home, if deſpaire had not beene as a chaine to keepe him in: he contented himſelfe with his kingdome then, whereof Nineveh was the mother Citie. Afterwards when the Caldeans had ſubdued the Aſſyrians, the Monarchy was transported vnto Babylon; to wit, ten yeere ſaſter the death of Sennacherib, in which time Eſar-baddone, (of whom mention is here made) reigned. For Parides being winked at, and ſupported by many, the forraigne enemies might eaſilie conquer and ſubdue a nation full of factions: and therefore Merodach hauing made uſe of this occaſion, invaded the Aſſyrians, and brought them vnder his command.

Verſ. 38. And as hee was in the Temple worshipping Niſrock his God, Adramelech and Sharcezer his ſonnes ſlew him with the ſword: and Eſar-baddone his ſonne reigned in his ſtead.

The Rabbins giue themſelues the like liberty heere to come deuices; for they ſaie that Sennacherib asked his idoll, why he could not vanquiſh the Iewes: and it answered, becauſe Abraham meant to haue ſacrificed his ſonne to God. And then this Tyrant following this example, determined to offer vp his sonnes, to get the fauour of his god, but his sonnes being prouoked to wrath by the crueltie of their father, slue him in the temple of his Idols. But what haue we to doe to hearken to such coniectures, in which the Iewes bewray their (more then) shamelesse impudencie?

We may see heere as in a glasse, the wretched end of Tyrants, whom the Lord cuts off without mans hand, euen then when they thinke to swallow vp all by their furie: and not only so, but exposeth them and their rage to the scorn of all posteritie. Sennacherib came into Iudeah with a mightie host, and returned to his owne house with a few followers, and God the Conqueror leades him captiue by way of triumph. But this is not all, for in the middes of his kingdome, in the middes of the chiefe Citie of his kingdome, yea in his very Temple (the reuerence whereof would haue been a meanes to haue preserved the meaneest abiect) he is slaine: not by forren enemies, not by popular sedition, not by traitors, nor by his seruants, but by his owne sonnes, that so his end might be the more ignominious, Hercin let vs consider, that these insatiable gulfes who haue delighted to bathe themselues in the blood of others, are slaine by those that are neere vnto them: and cut off by those, of whose loyaltie they seemed to be most secured. Such an act is much more horrible, then if strangers had done it: but thus the Lord punisheth the crueltie of those who with an ambitious desire aspring to be aloft, spare not the very innocents. There are diuers examples of such things in prophane histories, where the iust iudgements of God may easily be discerned. Senacherib therefore receeueth y^e iust recopence of his insatiable couetousnes, in that he plotted how to enlarge his Monarchy, and in the meane while takes no order for his busines at home, how to bring vp his sonnes in vnicite: for because he loued some, and cared not for the rest, thence proceeded this conspiracie. To conclude, this Tyrant was not only murdered; but his kingdome also soone after was brought to nought, as we haue said before: and, that his successor might not deuise any thing against the Iewes, God occupied them at home with ciuill warres, and dissentions.

THE XXXVIII. CHAPTER.

Verf. 1. About that time Hezekias was sick vnto the death, and Isaiah sonne of Amoz came vnto him, and said vnto him, Put thine house in an order, for thou shalt die, and not liue.

OW the Prophet shewes how sharply this good king was assailed with another kind of rentation; to wit, with so dangerous a sickness, as there was no hope left of his recouerie: and not only that, but he was also greatlie grieved in regard he receiued sentence of death from the mouth of the Lord, no lesse, then if he had struck him on the head with a thunderbolt from heauen. We cannot certainly asseure in what time this happened, whether afore, or after the siege, neither need we stand long to discusse the matter. It may easily be gathered from the holy historie, that this sickness fell out about the fourteenth yeere of his reigne, either about the time that the Assyrian came to lay siege to the Citie, or after his deliuerance. For he reigned 29. yeeres; in the fourteenth Sennacherib inuaded Iudea: fifteene yeeres are added to his daies by promise made him here from the Lord; here are the 29. yeeres then. Thus it appears that Hezekias was sicke in the fourteenth yeere of his reigne. All the difficultie is, whether it were in, or after the siege. The likeliest coniecture as I thinke is, that he fell sicke after the siege: my reason is, if it had happened during the siege, no doubt but the Prophet would haue made some mention of it. But he shewed before that Hezekias sent Ambassadors to pacifie Rabsheteh: also, how he went vp into the Temple and spread the letters before God; lastly, that he sent messengers to aske counsell of the Prophet: now all these actions, as you know, should hardlie agree to a sick man: for had this affliction fallen out with the other, the Prophet would not vnicerlie haue passed this circumstance ouer in silence. In a matter which is somewhat doubtful therfore let vs follow that which is the most probable: to wit, that this good king being rid of the enemie, fell forthwith into a grieuous sickness which had almost cost him his life.

In the meane while it is not without cause that this historie is annexed to the former, one following as it were in the neck of another: for thereby we perceleue that God gaue him scarcely so much respite as to take his breath: being escaped the sands, he then falls by and by vpon the rocks. Let vs be admonished therfore that the faithfull are subiect vnto diuers temptations, so as they are first tried by warre, then by sicknesses: yea sometimes afflictions come in so thick and threefold vpon them without intermission, that they indure combates all their life long. Why so? To teach them, that when one billow is ouer, they must expect another to follow presentlie. For they ought to be in such readines, that if the Lord shall be pleased to heape sorrow vpon sorrow, yet they must not breake in sunder, nor yet be discouraged vnder any calamitie whatsoever. If he giue them leaue a litle to take breath, let them know he doth it in respect of their weaknes: but I aduise such not to imagin that these short trucees should presage any long time of peace

vnto them; no, let them rather in the meane while gather new strength, that hauing finished their course, they may looke for rest when they haue attained the quiet haue of Gods kingdom.

Vnto death.] Such a sicknesse might well trouble this holy personage; for such diseases are commonly dolorous, especially if the vicer be inflamed. But that which most afflicted him was, because some signes of Gods anger were mixed therewithall, whereby he might iudge that hee was now become his aduerse partie, because being but lately passed out of one greuous calamitie, he is now suddenly seized vpon by death, as one vnworthy to hold his kingdom any longer. Besides, hee had then no children; so as it seemed after his death things were likely to be wonderfully confuted. Thus then the apprehension of Gods wrath doth more wound the consciences of the faithfull, then any bodily infirmities whatsoeuer: neither can it be auoided, but they must needs forthwith be overwhelmed, hauing lost the sweet taste of his fauour. But the Lord minding indeed to adde affliction to affliction, in expresse termes tells him, thou shalt die. And that it might strike the deeper impression, he takes from him all hope of life: for these words, thou shalt not liue, are not superfluous; but are added by way of confirmation, or augmentation of the thing; As if he should haue said; there is no way but one with thee. Men are wont to trifle out the time when death hath but arrested them, and they turne their eyes euery way to spie out some startingholes: to the end therefore that Hezekias should not suffer his mind to roue vp and downe (as we are wont to doe in vn-certaine things) hee telles him twice for failing, that hee must die. And that he might indeed bid the world farewell, the Prophet warnes him to set his affaires in order with all speede, that his Counsell might know what to doe after his death: as if he should haue said; if thou wilt haue death to respit thee a while, then set thine house in an order quickly.

Here we see then (but I will speake it by the way) that God approves of the practise which is vsuall among men. What is that? Men that die giue their kinsfolks or neighbours charge to performe their will, and to take order also for disposing of the familie.

Jonathans hath translated; Leaue thine house to some one: but the construction of the words teach the contrary. Well, we see that euery one which passeth out of this life, ought to shew that he stands charged with a dutie; to wit, to take order for his familie for the time to come. Notwithstanding the chiefe care consists not in testaments and heires, but concerning the saluation of those whom God hath committed vnto our charge.

Verſ. 2. Then Hezekiah turned his face to the wall, and praied vnto the Lord.

Now hee shewes how Hezekias was affected with this message, that his faith and pietie might the better appeare vnto vs. He neither fumes nor frets as the vnbeleue-ers doe, but takes vp his crosse patiently: he stands not to reason the case with God; to wit, that he had sustained sorrow enough already at the hands of his enemies, and therefore needed not now presently to bee so roughly dealt withall, by a new kind of affliction. This is indeed the triall of true patience, euen to beare the crosse quietly: that is to say, not for once, but to perseuere vnto the end, and to bee alwaies ready to indure new assaults. But aboue all, we are to bow vnder Gods iudgements; and not to murmur at his seueritie, how hard so euer the case gne with vs: Dauid also confesseth, that hee held his peace, because God had done it: Psal. 39. 10.

To this appertaines that which is added, that he turned his face to the wall. For being cast downe with shame and sorrow, he gathers in his thoughts, as if hee would leaue the presence of men, to turne himselfe wholly vnto God, and satisfie himselfe in him alone. The gesture which he vseth is a thing indifferent in it selfe; but we aduantage our selues much when we turne our eyes from all such objects as might carry away our thoughts in prayer: for so, wee get the greater freedom of spirit to powre forth our desires in the presence of God. Surely we are all of vs thereto witted by nature, a little thing easilie distracts vs: and therefore we cannot be too carefull in vsing all meanes to hold our thoughts short from wandring. If we be to pray with others, shame hinders vs from doing it with ouermuch vehemencie, lest wee should be taxed of pride and hypocritie; or we feare to vse those gestures that might be thought vnseemly: it is therefore fit wee should prevent all lets and impediments. Hezekias turnes not his face to the wall then, as one in a passion, or rebelliously and disdainfully reiecting the message that was brought vnto him; but as one who by this gesture framed himselfe with the greater ardenzie to this dutie of prayer.

Whereas hee vtters nothing in expresse words, as he did before when he went vp into the Temple in the sight of the people; it was a signe that his thoughts were much perplexed, so as it seemed his whole body was as it were shrunk in with heatinnesse. And yet he leaues vs a singular example of pietie, that being iudged to death, he yet ceaseth not still to call vpon God.

But these words, thou shalt die, and not liue, did not onely tend to gall him a little, but to pierce and wound him to the very heart: as if God had meant at once by his soueraigne power to haue destroyed him. For it was a signe of his fearefull displeasure thus on a sudden to cut him off in the flower of his youth, and to take him from off the earth; as one vnworthy to inioy the societie of men any longer. Doubtlesse hee wrestled not against death onely, but against hell it selfe, and the torments thereof, wherewith for a time he was sharplie assailed. Whence it folowes, that hee concoined somewhat more in his thoughts, then the Prophet mentions: but howsoeuer howsoever he could not by and by dispatch himselfe out of these incumbrances, yet the holy Ghost did suggeit into this confuled and perplexed spirit of his, such groanes, as could not be expressed. And in truth it had been an vncouth and absurd message, if so bee God had not comforted him inwardly by the secret worke of his Spirit, who was now as good as stricken downe to hell with the outward sound of the Prophets woies. Now for as much as hee would neuer haue repented, being leas'd on by despaire, mortification went foremost; next, followed that secret worke of the Spirit, which consecrated this poore dead body a liuing sacrifice acceptable vnto God.

Wherefore Hezekias turned his face to the wall.

The apprehension of Gods wrath wounds the consciences of the faithfull, more then any affliction whatsoeuer.

Verf. 3. And said, I beseech thee, Lord, remember now how I haue walked before thee in truth, and with a perfect heart, and haue done that which is good in thy sight: and Hezekiah wept sore.

IT seemes here that he meant to reason the case with God, and to tip vp his former life vnto him, as one being wrongfully afflicted: but he meant nothing lesse. He rather furnisheth himselfe with arguments to buckle against the sharpe and dangerous temptations which might follow. For when the Lord dealt thus roughly with him, he might thinke himselfe forsorne, forsaken, and reiected, as if God had disliked of all that he had done before: for which cause he fortifies & cheeres vp himselfe, by protesting that all his actions proceeded from the uprightnesse of his heart. In a word, hee concludes that his inducers were not displeasing vnto God, though hee were presently taken away: and thus he makes way for good hope and praier.

Hee oppoeth not his merits then to the righteousnesse of God, neither complains he as if he were punished vniustly; but armes his selfe against a sharpe temptation, to the end Gods dealing might not seem too seuer in his eyes, in regard that hee had so well reformed, and taken away corruptions; which haue then the full swing in his kingdome, but chiefly in the Church.

A denie not but the Lord sometimes admits his children to reioice in the things which they haue well done: not as wanting of their deserts in his sight, but to acknowledge his benefits, and to be so touched with the remembrance thereof, that they may the better fit themselves thereby to beare all their aduersities patiently. Sometimes also the importunitie of their enemies constraines them to glory with an holy boasting, that they may commend their cause to God, as to him that is the Iudge and defender of it: and so Dana boldly opposeth his innocencie against the flanders of his aduersaries, and that even before the iudgement seate of God: Psal. 7. 9. and 17. 3. But Hezekiah meant here to prevent Satans sophistrie, whereof the faithfull haue sufficient experience, whilst vnder pretence of humilitie, hee ouerwhelmes them in despaire. We must be very warie therefore, that our hearts be not swallowed vp of it.

Besides, from his words we gather the true rule of a well ordered life; to wit, when the integrity of the heart holds the first place: for there is nothing that displeaseth God so much, as when we goe about to cozen either him, or me by our dissimulatio: for as a glistering shew of works is wont to dazle our eyes; so nothing prouokes his wrath more the feined holinesse, in regard his name is thereby most profaned. We know he is a spirit: is it not good reason then that he should be worshipped spiritually, especially seeing he protesteth that a double heart is an abomination vnto him? Hezekiah therefore had good cause as you see, to beginne at the uprightnesse of his heart.

The word Chaiem, which is translated perfect, is nothing else but that integritie and soundnesse of heart which is opposed to hypocrisie; which also appears by the word truth, according as Saint Paul saith, that the end of the law, is loue out of a pure heart, a good conscience, and faith vnfeined. Moreover, Hezekias sets downe the fruits which issue from a pure heart, as from the roote; not onely to animate himselfe, but others also, especially concerning those things which might giue them any occasion of stumbling. Hee staggered not then, but meant to remove the impediments which peraduenture might discourage many.

Againe, let vs note how our life must be ordered, if we desire that God should approue of vs; to wit, that we doe nothing without his commandment: for as hee reiects and condemnes all outward shewes, whereby hypocrits would bee thought inly fellowes; so esteemes hee nothing at all of any newfound seruices, wherein the superstitious sort trauaile in vaine, thinking they merit much at his hands, whilst they cast his word behind their backs. But Hezekias, who knew that obedience was better then sacrifices, 1. Sam. 15. 22. saith not onely that he ran, (which some often doe, though cleane out of the way) but also that he squared his whole life to the commandments of God, which onely is the competent Iudge thereof. Now from this place wee may gather, how much this holy performance was kindled with the affection of praier: for albeit he sees nothing about him but signes of Gods wrath, yet hee ceaseth not to haue recourse vnto him still, and exerciseth his faith, by powring out his praiers & teares in his presence; which all faithfull hearts ought carefully and diligentlie to practise, and that euen in their deepest distresses.

thoughts were, or rather, with how great terror he was surpris'd. It is not easie to define of the intermission betweene the Prophets departure, and his returne: yet it is out of question, that the promise both touching his recovery, and life, was not made till he had felt himselfe forlorne; yea, after he had a long time been toyled vp and downe with furious stormes and tempests. For his faith was tried to the ymmost when God thus hid his face from him, and suffer'd him to lie plunged in the darknesse of death: yet we haue told you already, that the faith of this King was not so quenched, but that some sparks thereof appeared, though hee, were left destitute of all outward comforts. For by the secret instinct of the holy Ghost, he breathed out vnumerable groanes from this bottomlesse gulfe, which ascended vp into the eares of the most high. From whence we gather, that the faithfull are so heard in the day of their distresse, that the fauour of God manifests not it selfe vnto them at the first cry, but hee deferses of purpose to let them feele it, till hee sees they be thoroughly humbled.

Now if it were needfull that so excellent a king and seruant of God should be in a manner thus overwhelmed with sorrowes, that he might be the better fitted and prouoked to desire Gods fauour, and to sigh and grone vnto him, being at the last call, and almost swallowed vp of the lower hels: let vs not wonder if sometimes he Ieaxes vs perplexed with feare and anguish, and deferses that comfort long which we desire. But some may thinke it strange that God forthwith called back his sentence, as if he repented himselfe of that which was gone out of his lips: for there is nothing lesse agreeable to his nature then to be changeable. I answer, Hezekias was not adiu'dged to death in the decree and counsell of God: but his meaning herein was to trie and examin the faith of his seruant. Wherefore in this denunciation there must be a condition supplied; for otherwise Hezekias could neuer haue bowed the Lord, nor disanull'd his irreuoicable decree neither by his prayers nor teares. But the Lord threaten'd him as he did Abimelech king of Gerar for taking Sarah, Abraams wife, Gen. 20. 3. And as Ionas did the Nineuims, Ionas 1. 2. & 3. 4. But it will be further objected, that it is contrarie to Gods nature to speake one thing & thinke another: for thus his words shall lose their authoritie, because men will esteeme of his promises and threatnings as things of little weight. But wee must iudge of the forme of theic words, as of the sense of those which I haue already expounded. God gaue sentence of death vpon Hezekias, because he would not that he should die: neither had it been needfull nor profitable to haue sent him this message, had not the remedie been neere at hand. Besides, as it was the meaning of God to humble his seruant with feare and astonishment, that by a voluntarie condemning of himselfe he might by prayers and teares escape this chastisement: so also it was no lesse his purpose to bring him low by this sharp and biting speech, Thou shalt die, to the end he might require life, and to haue it restored as to him that was now shut vp as it were in his sepulchre. The Prophet supplied an infolded condition therefore, which Hezekias easily espied, although he perceived it not at the first. We can not conclude then that God vsed any dissimulation hete, seeing he fits his speech to the capacite and reach of the person to whom he speaks: for it is no vniuented thing with him to kill before he quicken. He only then holds part of his speech in suspense, that by the outward appearance of death, Hezekias might by little and little be framed to newnes of life.

He only held part of his speech in suspense.

Vers. 5. Goe, and say vnto Hezekias, Thus saith the Lord God of David thy father, I haue heard thy prayer, and seene thy teares: behold, I will adde vnto thy dayes fifteene yeeres.

In his first ambassage, vers. 1. he meant only to terrifie Hezekias, and therefore contents himselfe with a bare propounding of the name of God, *before whose iudgement feare he summoned this poore guiltie person: but now when hee brings message of consolation, he addes a particular title, *to shew from what fountaine this fauour proceeded: as if he should say; God is now moued to shew mercie, so as he will not deale extremely with thee, because he respects the Couenant which he hath made with David.

Why God propounds his name to Hezekias in a diuers forme. *As in vers. 1. *The God of David thy father.

We know there is nothing more hard then to chere vp the hearts of such as haue deeply tasted of Gods wrath, with good hope of mercie; and to cause them indeed to feele that God is now become fauorable and gracious vnto them. This confirmation therefore was necessarie, to the end this good king, being forlorne in himselfe, might perceiue that life was to be restored him, whereof he was in a manner vtterlie deprived, because the promise touching the perpetuities of the kingdome of Iudah could no way be broken.

Nothing more difficult, then to comfort the hearts of such as haue tasted deeply of Gods displeasure.

Thus he being in a manner halfe dead by reason of this message, Thou shalt dye, the Prophet to encourage him puts him in mind of that promise which was then familiarly knowne of all. I haue sworne once by mine holines, that I will not faile David; His seed shall indure for euer; and his Throne shall be as the Sunne before me, Psal. 89. 35, 36. Vpon this boord or planck, Hezekias calls himselfe to saue his life from shipwrack in these boysterous stormes: for he speaks not of David here as of a priuat man, but as of an eternall King, which had the promise, whereupon Hezekias might stay himselfe. I say eternall, not in himselfe, but in the blessed seed. Now because this eternitie was to be manifested at the length in Iesu Christ, of whom Hezekias and the rest of the kings of Iudah were figures, he had good cause to hope well, in regard himselfe was the sonne and successor of David.

As often therefore as our finnes do shut vp the way againe vs from approching vnto God, that we might haue part in his fauor;

let this preface be present before vs. For howsoeuer by our own default he be estranged from vs, yet he is the father of Christ our head, in whom our saluation lies alwaies hidden for vs. To be short, God who a litle before spake as a Iudge, speaks now as a louing father, by looking vpon the mediator Iesus Christ, who euer appeaseth his anger.

Having left him way for hope, he now tels him that his prayers were heard of God: which doubtlesse should be as a good in our sides, to pricke vs forward to the dutie of seruent praiser. For albeit God of himselfe be carefull enough of our saluation, and hath euermore prevented vs by his louing kindnesse, and that not onely whilst we slept, but euen before we were borne: notwithstanding when he signifies vnto vs that all the benefits hee bestowes vpon vs, are as the fruits of our prayers, our storchfulnesse is vtterly inexcusable, if being so liberally inuited to come vnto God, we scorne to open our mouthes to call vpon his name. Yet we must not thinke that our prayers doe therefore merit, because God accepts so fauourably of them; but in giuing that freely, which of fauour he hath promised, he addes this declaration of his liberality, to the end he may the better exercise our faith. For it is no small priuiledge to haue access into his presence at all times, & frankly to powre out our hearts before him, and familiarly to cast all our cares and anguishes into his bosome. Had not Hezekias praied at all, yet the Lord no doubt would haue taken order by some other means, that the gouernment of the kingdome should still haue continued in the stocke of Dawid: but that which he was bound to doe in respect of his rrruth, is attributed vnto Hezekias praiers, to the end hee might acknowledge how great the fruit was he receiued from his faith, which he exercised in his praiers.

The Prophet mentions his teares, as a signe of his repentance, and also of his zeale and affection: not that they obtaine grace, or that they can appease God of themselves: but to shew that by meanes hereof, praiers which proceede from affection, are distinguished from those which proceede from the lippes onely.

In the last place hee addes, that God prolonged the daies of Hezekias fiftieene yeeres, which at the first might seeme absurd; because we are created vpon condition, not to passe one iot or tittle of that time which God hath set downe: as Iob saith; Thou hast set him his bounds, which he cannot passe: Job. 14. 5. But the solution is easie, that this length of time must bee referred to Hezekias his cogitation: for he was excluded from hope of a longer life, so as he was to account the yeeres following, as the lease thereof renewed againe: no lesse then if he had been taken out of his tonbe, to liue vpon the earth the second time.

Verf. 6. And I will deliuer thee out of the hand of the King of Assur, and this Citie: for I will defend this Citie.

Those who thinke that Hezekias was sicke during the siege, ground their argument vpon this verse; because otherwise they thinke this promise should be superfluous: but their reason wants weight. For the Assyrian might well gather his forces together againe, and prepare a fresh armie, both to invade Iudeah, and to besiege Ierusalem. Yea, that distomfure which he had before, might so kinde his rage and furie, as to giue a new onset. The Iews then, you see, might iustly tremble when any should signifie some newes to them touching the enemies approching. This promise therefore is not superfluous, for with the hope of life, Isaiah secures him from feare of the Assyrian, whom Hezekias might alwaies haue had in some ielousie, if by this means the same had not been prevented. In which, we see how God still amplifies and addes new mercies to the former, which he had shewed him: as in the Chapter before going, God promised him abundance of the fruite of the earth, with deliuerance from the siege.

Verf. 7. And this signe shalt thou haue of the Lord, that the Lord will doe this thing that he hath spoken:

8. Behold, I will bring againe the shadow of the degrees, (whereby it is gone downe in the diall of Abaz by the Sunne) ten degrees backward: so the Sunne returned by ten degrees, by the which it was gone downe.

The holy historie orderly recites, how Hezekias asked a signe of the Lord, which was granted vnto him: our Prophet wil onely touch it in the end of the Chapter: but it is no new thing with the Hebrewes thus to set those things last, which should be first, &c. Moreover, the Lord offers some signes voluntarily vnasked. Againe, he grants them to others that require them. Now in regard that the generall vse of signes is to sustaine our infirmities, God for the most part staies not till they bee asked, but from the beginning hath alwaies ordeined such as himselfe knew would be the most profitable to his Church. If the faithfull then at any time haue desired that their faith might be confirmed by signes, we must not by and by follow them therein; because it was a thing very rare: as to Gedon, who being taken from the flail to gouerne the people, he gaue two signes which he vnasked, to the end he might be the better confirmed in his calling: Iudg. 6. 17, 36. As touching other signes, hee was wont ordinarily to giue them to helpe mens weaknesse: as to Adam, the tree of life, Gen. 2. 9. to Noah, the raine-bow in the cloudes: Gen. 9. 13. afterwards, the cloud, the pillar of fire, and the brazen Serpent in the wilderness: Exod. 13. 21. Numb. 21. 8. The like is to be said of the Passouer, Exod. 12. 3. and of all other sacraments which haue been ordeined both vnder

But it ſeemes Hezekias offers iniurie to God, in that he beleeueth him not vpon his bare word, when he asks a ſigne.

Anſ.

I anſwere, he is not therefore to be condemned of infidelitie, becauſe his faith was weak: for where is the man to be found that euer had a faith ſo perfect that was not mingled with vbeliefe, or which was not faultie? Whereas he ſeekes ſome ſtay to vphold his wauering, he is not to be blamed for it: for hauing embraced the promiſe offered him by the Prophet, he ſhewes himſelfe to haue faith in God, in ſeeking remedie againſt his diſtraſt. Were there no infirmities in men, what need ſhould we haue of ſignes? It is no wonder then if Hezekias asks one, ſeeing the Lord is pleaſed to offer the ſame voluntarie vnto others. Yet we are to note, that the faithfull haue not asked ſignes of their owne heads, but were led ſo to doe by the ſpeciall inſtinct of the holy Ghoſt, which may alſo be affirmed touching miracles: for if Heliſas asked raine and drought, it is not lawfull for others to do the like, 1. King. 17. 1. Wee are therefore to conſider what the Lord permits vs to do, leſt whileſt hauing neglected his word, we preſume to indent with him according to the vnbri- dled deſires of our owne fleſh.

The faithfull haue not asked ſignes of God rafhly, but were moued to do it by the ſpeciall inſtinct of the holy Ghoſt.

The ſignes that God gives, haue affinity with the things ſignified.

The ſigne that is here giuen to Hezekias, is the bringing back of the ſhadow in the dyall with the Sunne tenne degrees, whereby it was aſcended, that is to ſay, gone forward vpon the Horizon. This ſigne hath affinity with the thing it ſelfe, as all other ſignes alſo haue: for it is as if he ſhould haue ſaid, Euen as it is in my power to alter the hours of the day, and to cauſe the Sunne to come back againe, ſo am I able to prolong thy life. In that the Sunne went not back to many degrees as there were yeeres added to his life, it could not well be done, becauſe there were but twelue degrees in the Quadrangle: for the dayes were diuided into twelue houres longer or ſhorter, according to the diuerſitie of the ſeaſons. Wee neede not buſie our heads much then as touching the number, it is enough that the proportion and ſimilitude of the ſigne and of the thing it ſelfe ſutes ſo well together.

Fables of the Iewes.

The Iewes doe here inuent fables according to their viſuall maner, affirming, that the day in which Achaz died was ſhorter by ten houres, ſo as the chaſtiſement inflicted vpon him for his iniquities, were turned to the good of Hezekias, in regard the ſhortnes of one day was the cauſe of the length of another. But what ground haue they for this here? Truly not ſo much as any ſhew at all: for here is nothing ſaid touching the death of Achaz, nor of any change which then happened, but of the dyall only which he erected.

Verſ. 9. The Writing of Hezekias king of Iudah when he had been ſick; and was recovered of his ſicknes.

Although the holy historie mentions not this writing, yet is it worthie our obſer-uation, and to be kept in continuall remembrance: for therein we ſee that Hezekias would not by his ſilence either lightlie paſſe ouer, or by forgetfulnes blot out the remembrance of ſo excellent a benefit which he had receiued of God. All the faithfull by his example are taught what to doe when God for their ſakes manifeſts his power miraculoſly, or by extraordinary meanes: it ought not to ſuffice them that thoſe of their owne times ſhould be made acquainted withall, but as much as in them is they are ſo to provide that the poſterities to come may be informed of it, as we ſee Hezekias here doth by this his ſong. Dauid in like maner compoſed many ſongs to this purpoſe after he was deliuered out of great dangers; being carefull to haue that ſung to the worlds end, which was worthie of euertlaſting memorie: ſee Psal. 18. 2. & 27. But he eſpecially whom God hath aduanced to high degree either of honor, or power, euen as one being placed by God vpon a ſcaffold, he, I ſay, ought well to know and vnderſtand that he is inioined to imitate this godly King in this behalfe: and yet both great and ſmall are diligentlie to beware of ambition, leſt whileſt they ſeeme to imitate Dauid and Hezekias, they ſecke to gloriſie their owne names rather then the name of God.

Verſ. 10. I ſaid in the cutting off of my dayes, I ſhall goe to the gates of the graue: I am deſtroyed of the reſidue of my yeeres.

Behold here a very mournfull ſong, for it contains in it complaints rather then prayers. Whence it appeares, that this good King was ſo ſtraited with diſtreſſes, that being oppreſſed inwardlie, he ſoreth himſelfe to teares and lamentations, and ſtates not free lie open his mouth to frame a well ordered prayer. In mutterings by himſelfe then he layes forth the greatnes of his ſorrow: but this may ſeeme ſtrange if wee conſider the cauſe. Was it beſeeming ſo holie a perſonage for the deſire he had to prolong this tranſitorie life, ſo greatly to abhorre death? The firſt rudiments of the heauenly doctrine do teach vs, that we are but wayfaring men here, and therefore ought ſwiſtly to runne the race that is ſet before vs towards eternall life. But Hezekias ſeemes to be ſo much giuen to the earth, as if he had neuer taſted ſo much as one dramme of true godlines. He ſees and deteſts death, as if he had been vtterlie vnaquainted with y word of God. What meanes he then to ſet downe his boiling paſſions in this maner? It ſeemes he meant rather to draw the faithfull by his example to a kind of intemperance, rather then to keepe them within the liſts of Gods heſts. Are we not all of vs too much inclined to rebellion of our ſelues, but we muſt alſo haue a Scholemaſter to inſtruct vs?

Obiect.

But if we ſhall rightlie and aduicelie conſider of the matter, we ſhall ſee it was moſt profitable for vs, that the image of this man (in a maner ouerwhelmed with ſorrows) ſhould should be thus liuely painted out before vs in liuely colours. It was not his purpose to purchase praise in the world by preaching his owne praises. Truly his praier was an vndoubted testimonie of his faith and obedience: but being surprisid with feare and astonishment, and cast downe with heauinesse of spirit, he leaues praier, and rather mutters forth passionate whisperings, God therefore in acquainting vs with his infirmities, meant to instruct all his children in humilitie, and therewithall to extol his goodnesse, by which hee was drawne as it wete out of the iawes of death.

Now whereas being ready to die, hee bewailes his condition, as if hee had set vp his rest on earth, or as if by death men are brought to nothing; we are to consider that there was a speciall cause of it. For albeit death bee not desirable in it selfe, yet ought the faithfull to mourne daily, in regard they serue sinne too much, whilst they remaine in this prison of the flesh. They are forbidden also to lament, as vnbeleeuers do: and on the contrary, they are commanded to lift vp their heads, when they are to depart out of this life, in regard they shall change for a better: Luke 21.28. The Church vnder the law was not destitute of this consolation; for albeit the knowledge of the resurrection was then obscure, yet that which they had was sufficient to asswage the dolours of the faithfull of that time. For if that false Prophet Balaam was constrained to cry out, O let me die the death of the righteous, Numb. 23. 10. how much more cause had the faithfull so to doe, thinke you, in whose cares and hearts sounded this voice, I am the God of Abraham? Exod. 3.6. But howsoeuer they aspired to this heavenly life in sure and certaine hope, yet is it no wonder to see that in Hezekias, which Dauid cōfesseth of himselfe, Ps. 30.3.9. who yet quietly left the world when his time was expired, & died full of daies: 1. King. 1. 10. It appears then that neither of them both were dismayed simply, in regard of the feare of death; but they therein perceiued euident tokens of Gods wrath; and for that cause they prayed with teares to be deliuered from it. For we must remember that the Prophet was sent vnto Hezekias, as an Herald of Armes to pronounce sentence of death vpon him, and that in the name of the most high God. Such a message might well drinke vp all his spirits, and cast him as it were into such horrible and fearefull plagues, that in seeing nothing but Gods wrath & curse to seaze vpon him, he wrestled against despair in it selfe.

Thus we see how his faith was tried, when being atraigned as it were before the iudgement seat of God, he enters into the consideration of his sinnes. For first, this cogitation might come into his head; What is the cause that God should correct his seruants so severely, and in the meane while spare those that contemne his Maicstie? And thus Dauid himselfe was tried, Psal. 73.3. Secondly, he saw himselfe exposed as a laughing stocke to the prophane, who by this occasion would insult ouer true religion. Hee also perceiued that his death might cause the hearts of all the faithfull to wauer. But aboue all, the wrath of God pressed him the neereft, and that no lesse then if he had been already condemned to the pit of hell, and to the eternall curse. In a word, seeing our onely felicitie is to be at one with God, Hezekias was driuen into no causelesse feare, when he felt himselfe separated as it were from this vnion. For these words, thou shalt die and not liue, vers. 1. had almost seized vpon his soule, so that he was as a man laid in graue. Which is yet better expressed by this clause, I said; which not onely signifies (in the Hebrewes language) to vtter or pronounce words with the lips, but to bee perswaded and resolu'd of it in the heart. Though God threatens the hypocrites neuer so much, yet they gaze about for starting holes, and thinke themselves safe, if they can espie any corner wherein to shroud themselves, that afterwards they may bee as iocund as euer they were before. But Hezekias being the true seruant of God, neuer minded the seeking of euasions, but giuing credit to the Prophets words, he prepares himselfe to die, seeing God was pleased to haue it so.

He speaks in the same sense of the cutting off of his daies, feeling that God as his enemy in anger was determined to shortē the course of his life. For he speaks not after the common maner, when hee saith, that a violent death shall cause him to depart this life; but knowes that Gods iudgement is the cause of it. I grant that our life is alwaies cut off; be it that wee die young, or in the prime of our youth, or whether we die old: but it is said of those which die in the flower of their youth, that their life is cut off; because it seemes they are taken away too soone, as fruit gathered before it be ripe. But Hezekias had another drift, to wight he saw the residue of his daies suddenly cut off by the sword of the Lord, in regard hee had prouoked him to anger by his offences. He complains then that God suddenly deprives him of that life, which might haue continued a longer time; as if hee had been vtterly vnworthy to inioy it. Thereunto appertaines that which he saith of the residue of his yeeres: for albeit we ought to prepare for death euery moment, in regard we are all borne mortall; yet it being denounced heere against him as a punishment, hee complains not without cause, that he is deprived of the residue of his yeeres; which hee was likehe to haue inioy'd by Gods assistance.

Verf. 11. I said, I shall not see the Lord, euen the Lord in the land of the liuing: I shall see man no more among the inhabitants of the world.

H Ezekias should passe his bounds in desiring so earnestly to continue in the world, were it not that the feeling of Gods wrath augmented his griefe. In regard therefore that hee seemes to be violently drawne to death by his owne desert, euen as one vnworthie worthie to behold the face of the Sunne, he cries out, and pronounceth himselfe miserable, in that for the time to come he shall neither see God, nor man. Among the faithfull this exception is held, to wit, whilst we live in this world we are absent from God, but having put off the hindrances of our flesh, we shall enjoy the presence of God.

Our onely felicitie stands in our spirituall vnion with God.

The meaning of this phrase, I said.

I grant there is a restraint in these words, in the land of the living. But hereby it seemes that Herzekias ties the sight of God to this life present, as if death did whollie deprive vs of all light and vnderstanding. We are therefore to call to minde that which I said ere while, to wit, This good King hauing receiued the message as proceeding from the indignation of the Lord, was so terrified therewith, as if he had bin vtterlie deprived for euer of his louing fauor. For if he were unworthie to liue, how durst he hope for greater things? nor that all hope was borted out of his heart, but because he only considers the curse of God, so as he can not so speedilie aspire to heauen to sweeten the sorrow that presseth him, by the sweet taste of a better life. It fallies out sometimes that the vnderstandings of the faithfull are so blinded, that for a time they fare as those that are forelorne: but although their comfort seeme for a while to be smothered, yet is it still hidden within, and anon breaks forth. In the meane while Herzekias shewes his pietie, in that (from the lawfull and right vse of this present life) he manifests to all how cumbersome it is vnto him to be deprived of it.

The very beasts are loth to die, yet haue they no other vse of their life but to eate and drinke, to labour, and to fill their bellies. But the end of our life is farre more excellent: for we are created and put into this world that we should dayly exercise our selues in the knowledge of God. And in regard that this is the chiefe end of our life, he shewes the vehemencie of his affections, in repeating the name of God twice, I shall see no more, saith he, the Lord, the Lord.

If any object, that wee see not God in this world, the answer is easie. For first he is to be seene in his works, in regard that by the creation of the world his eternall power and Diuinitie may be seen, as S. Paul saith, Rom. 1. 20. And therefore Hebr. 11. 3. this world is called the Mirror of inuisible things. But because he manifests himselfe more clearly to the faithfull, therefore Herzekias mournes for the want of this spirituall sight; as Dauid also saith, that those behold the face of God who haue freedome to come into his house, that they may confirme their faith by the exercises of religion. As touching the word men, he is sorrie to be deprived of their societie, because we are borne to aid and comfort one another.

Verf. 12. Mine habitation is departed and removed from me like a shepherds tent: I haue cut off like a weauer my life: he will cut me off from the height: * from day to night, thou wilt make an end of me. leannes, or sickness.

HE goes on with his complaints, disciphring out his life by a very fit similitude, for he compares it to shepherds tents. For such in deed is our present condition here in appearance: but he stands not so much to shew what it is which commonlie fallies out to others, as what befell himselfe in particular. The vse of tents was more frequent in those countries then in ours, and oftentimes shepherds change their abode, by reason of flustering their flocks from one place to another. Thus he not only saith, that others dwell for a very little space in an house of clay whilst they passe thorow this world: but that himselfe being quiet in his royall Palace, euen his state was changed, as if a shepheard hauing pitched his tent for two daies in the field, should the third day be forced to remove it to another place.

But we are to note, that sometimes he assigns the cause of his death to himselfe, and then also vnto God: and therewithall giues alwaies distinct reasons of his speech. For in making himselfe the author of his grieife, he therein acquites the Lord; and complains not of him for taking away of his life: but accuseth himselfe, and layes all the fault where it was in deed, for so much his words import, which is expressed in an vsuall prouerb, My selfe hath wouen this web, so as my selfe and none other is the cause of my death. And yet it is not without good reason that in the second place he assigns the cause also vnto God, which before he whollie charged vpon himselfe: for albeit we our selues giue him cause to deale severely with vs, yet is he the Iudge, who inflictis his owne chastisements vpon vs. In all our troubles therefore let vs euer learne to magnifie his iust iudgements, because he doth vs but right in executing his office, when he corrects vs according to our deserts.

Towards the end of the verse, some translate the word Middallah, leannes, or sickness. Others, In drawing out: the first deriue this noutne from the verb Dalah, which signifies to lessen: the others from Dalah, which imports as much as to draw out, in listing vp. But let the readers consider whether the word so life vp agrees not best, because it seemes Herzekias complains that his life is suddenlie snitten downe whilst he indeuored to lift it vp, and to draw it out longer: as if God should cause the Sunne to set as soone as it begins to rise only.

By and by after he addes, That he shall be brought to nought in a short space, which he further expresth by the circumstance of the weight of Gods wrath, which suddenlie consumes men by his only breath. For to be cut off in a day, signifies as much as to die hastily. See the exposition of the latter clause of this 12. verse in the next.

lie say, I made my account. From this verſe we may gather, that Hezekias was ſicke about two daies: for in the former verſe he ſaid the maladic was ſo vehement, that he looked for nothing but death. That day being paſt, he euen waits vnto the dawning of the next day following, and from thence, till night: ſo as he expected death euery minute of an houre. The ſenſe then is; that although hee came to the day breake, yet he ranne haſtily to death, by continuall turmoilings: for being ſmitten with the ſtroke of Gods fearefull iudgement, hee makes no account to liue. And as the Greekes when they will ſhew that nothing is ſo vaine a thing as man, do terme him a daies bird: ſo this good King puts the life of a day here for that tranſitorie life of a man, which is but of ſmall continuance.

Whereas he compares God to a lion, it is no new thing, albeit God of his owne nature be gentle, mercifull, and louing, and nothing iſtes better to his nature then theſe titles: but we cannot feele this ſweetneſſe when we haue prouoked him by our vices, and made him ſeure by our rebellion. Nay, which is more, there is not the crueltie nor ſternneſſe of any, nor of all the bruit beaſts, that can ſo amaze or aſtoniſh vs, as doth the bare mentioning of the very name of God in this caſe: but moſt iuſtly. For his ſtrokes muſt of neceſſitie haue that efficacie in them, as to bring downe all loſtineſſe, and to humble vs to the very gates of hell, that ſo being in a maner ſtripped of all comfort, wee may lie gasping after it, and yet in the meane while apprehending nothing but dread and horror. And of ſuch terrors Dauid ſpeaks in Pſal. 22. 17. where he ſaith; I may tell all my bones. Againe, Pſal. 66. I water my couch with teares. Alſo, My ſoule is fore troubled: Pſal. 63. And the graue hath opened her mouth to ſwallow mee vp. Now it is needful that y faithful ſhould ſometimes bee feared in this wiſe by the ſenſe of Gods iudgements, that they may be ſo much the rather prouoked to deſire his fauour.

Verſ. 14. Like a crane or a ſwallow, ſo did I chatter; I did mourne as a dove: mine eies were liſt vp on high: O Lord, it hath oppreſſed me, comfort me.

H*ezekias* cannot fit himſelfe with wordes ſufficient to ſet forth the greatneſſe of his miſerie, which brought him to that extreme, that he was not able to ſpeake diſtinctly, but to mutter forth a confuſed ſound of words, euen as thoſe that lie at the point of death. Whence it appears that he was wonderfully perplexed, ſeeing his grieſe was ſo great, that hee wanted wordes to expreſſe it. His wordes ſtucke as it were in his throat: nothing could bee heard but whiſperings: whereunto appertaines theſe ſimilitudes of the crane and ſwallow, which the Prophet here vſeth.

Yet euen theſe confuſed voices doubtleſſe doe pierce the eares of God; and albeit our deſee be ſurpriſed with heauineſſe, and that our ſorrowes haue ſhut vp our mouthes, yet he beholds our hearts ſtill, and heares the ſighes which be breathed from faith. Yea often times ſuch broken ſentences are ſent forth with more force & efficacie, then wordes rightly framed, prouided that they proceede from the ſpirit of God, who ſtirs vp in vs ſuch groanings, as cannot be expreſſed: Rom. 8. 25. There is no childe of God but in this caſe feeles by experience, when extreme ſorrow cauſeth his tongue to cleaue to the rooſe of his mouth, and his heart to be cloſed vp, ſo as his prayers are but ſtutterings and ſtammerings. Some tranſlate that which follows in this ſenſe; Mine eies are ſunke in: but ſo the particle, on high, ſhould not agree. And therefore it is beſt to retaine the naturall ſenſe, which is; that his eies were waſted with often and much looking: or, that hee ceaſed not to liſt up his eies on high, albeit he was halfe dead; or was neuer ſo far out of heart, but he knew well that it was his dutie to wait for ſuccour from God.

Let vs learne with Hezekias to liſt up our eies to the heauens: and let vs alſo know that our God requires no great rhetoric of vs in our prayers. He confirms this ſentence in turning his ſpeech by and by vnto God, to deſire his helpe: for in regard the violence of the diſeaſe oppreſſed him, he intreats the Lord to comfort him. Some tranſlate, Anſwer for me; which we haue thought beſt to turne, comfort, or, glad mee: vnleſſe any had rather receive their tranſlation who read it, Make mee to reſt. How euer it be, he demands ſuccour of God, to the end the weight of his afflictions might not ouerwhelme him: we alſo ought to aſſure our ſelues in this caſe, that God will be ſo much the more ready to comfort vs, by how much the more wee ſhall be preſſed on euerie ſide with many calamities.

THe moſt thinke that theſe wordes are vttered by way of an exclamation, ſuch as proceedes from ioy: as if Hezekias reioiced in hauing obtained his requeſt: but I am of another opinion. For it ſeemes to me that hee goes on ſtill in his complaints, because hee ſpeakes as thoſe commonly doe, who are oppreſſed with ſorrow; What ſhall I ſay? He which hath ſaid it to mee, hath done it. That is to ſay, life and death are in his hands, I plead but in vaine with him: it is but loſt labour to complaine ſo much as I doe. Many ſuch wordes and ſentences are to be found in the booke of Iob. This therefore, as I take it, is the verie true ſenſe of the place. For before, Hezekias looked euery way, to ſee if any comfort would preſent it ſelfe vnto him: but now, ſeeing that God had giuen ſentence of death vpon him, hee concludes, there is no reſiſting, I muſt obey.

In the meane while, theſe wordes are to be well weighed; to wit, that God accompliſheth that in effect, which hee threatned in words.

For

For thoſe ſay ſomewhat (I grant) but not all, who expound ſimply thus; God hath performed that which the Prophet pronounced of me, becauſe Hezekias doth not thus barely affirm, that he felt the effect of the word, but ſetting before his eyes the power of God, hee puts an end to all his complaints and cries. Thus David in the 39 Psalme ſaith; I held my peace, Lord, becauſe thou diddeſt it. If the feare of Gods power reſtraines vs not, wee will neuer ceaſe murmuring; and therefore Iob conſidering that he had to doe with God, ſaith; I will lay my hand vpon my mouth: I will make humble ſupplication to my Iudge: Iob 9.15. Hezekias then puts himſelfe to ſilence, for hee ſaw it was but vaine for him to ſtand diſputing the caſe with God. And thus hee confeſſeth, that hee was but as a dead man, becauſe the Lord made him feele how forcible his threatenings were. By reaſon whereof, this good King concludes, that hee profites himſelfe nothing at all with replies, becauſe diſcourſes to and fro haue no place in this behalfe. I grant that theſe words proceeded indeed from deſpaire; for in feeling God his enemy, he ſhuts vp the gate againſt the paſſage of his prayers. But it is no new nor ſtrange thing; for ſuch words (which turne vs from prayer) now and then to eſcape vs in extreme griefes; provided that on the contrary, wee cleaue cloſe to the proſſe of prayer; yea, although the ſenſe of the fleſh doe ouerſway vs ſo far for a time, as to perſwade vs that all is but in vaine.

Wee may coniecture that this good King was ſo intangled with perplexed thoughts, that he fainted in his languiſhing diſeaſe, but eſpecially in that he ſaw it was the beſt way for him to be ſilent, as I haue ſaid: for hee did but loſe his labour to plead with God, as it ſhall appeare more fully in the courſe of the text. Whence we gather, that he now ſets before him the fearful power of God, to the end hee may diſpoſe himſelfe to true humilitie.

Moreover, becauſe the verbe Dadth ſignifies to moue ones ſelfe, to goe ſoftly; ſome expoſitors tranſlate; I ſhall be remoued, or, toſſed: others, I ſhall walke ſoftly. But I verily thinke hee ſpeakes of a weak and trembling caſe; for he was ſo weakened, that he thought he ſhould neuer recouer his former ſtrength againe. This trembling muſt be referred to feare; for he addes by and by after, in the bitterneſſe: as if he ſhould ſay; The anguiſh which oppreſſeth mee, is ſo faſt rooted in mine heart, that it can neuer be plucked vp; and thence came this weakneſſe whereof hee ſpeakes.

Now becauſe the vulgar tranſlation hath; I will acknowledge; the Papists haue wreſted this place to proue their auricular confeſſion; but ſo vnaptly, that old dotards may laugh them to ſcorne. For it plainly appeares, that he ſpeakes not here of confeſſion, but of an aſtoniſhment and trembling, wherewith Hezekias ſhall bee ſmitten, euen all the daies of his life, as he himſelfe here ſaith.

Verſ. 16. O Lord, * to them that ouerlue them, and to all that are in them the life of my ſpirit ſhall be knowne, that thou cauſedſt me to ſleepe, and haſt giuen life to me.

after me, ſhall knowe the life of my ſpirit, becauſe thou haſt made me to ſleepe, &c.

The Prophets words are ſo ſhort, that it hath cauſed many interpretations, amongſt which, this that followes is the moſt approved: O Lord, others ſhall lue after thee yeeres: that is to ſay, their life ſhall be prolonged. As if he ſhould ſay; Seeing thou haſt prolonged my daies, thou wilt alſo cauſe others to inioy the like fauour from thee. But this ſenſe agrees not with the text, and I iudge it too far fetched. I ſhould rather deern Hezekias his meaning to bee this; O Lord, all thoſe which ſhall lue after theſe yeeres which thou haſt added vnto my life, ſhall knowe the life of my ſpirit. And therefore the relatiue (which) muſt be ſupplied; for it is a thing vſuall among the Hebrewes not to expreſſe it: and ſo this will bee no conſtained expoſition. For it is not to be doubted, neither can it be denied, but hee ſpeakes of the yeeres which the Lord had giuen him as an ouerplus. His meaning is then, that the fauour which God hath ſhewed him, ſhall not bee knowne to thoſe of his time onely, but of the poſteritie alſo. Thus he ſets forth the greatneſſe of the benefit, which ſhall bee knowned for the time to come, and ſhall remaine ingrauen in the memories of all, euen after Hezekias ſhall be dead: ſo as it ſhall be called a kind of reſurrection. The word to ſleepe, ſignifies to die; according to the Hebrew phraſe, Gen. 47.30. Thus hee compares his ſickneſſe to death, which he was ſo neere, that he made none account of life.

Verſ. 17. Behold, for felicitie I had bitter grieſe; * but it was thy pleaſure to deliuer my ſoule from the pit of corruption: for thou haſt caſt all my ſinnes behind thy backe.

*O, thou haſt loured my ſoule in the pit of perdition.

Againe he amplifies the greatneſſe of his grieſe by another circumſtance: for ſudden calamities which we thinke not of, doe trouble vs much more then thoſe which wee ſee approaching. His ſickneſſe was the more cumbersome and ſupportable, becauſe it ſurprized him vnawares, whileſt he was quiet and in proſperity, thinking nothing leſſe then to be ſo ſoone bereaued of his life. We alſo know that the faithfull now and then doe pleaſe themſelues too much in their proſperitie, promiſing vnto themſelues a conſtant and ſetled felicitie; which David confeſſeth himſelfe was guilty of; I ſaid in my proſperitie, I ſhall neuer be moued; but when thou hiddeſt thy face I was troubled: Pal. 30. Nothing therefore could aſtoniſh Hezekias more then to heare he muſt die, when hee made account to lue in peace, his enemy being driuen away and cut off: for I thinke hee fell ſicke after Sennacherib was repulſed, and his hoſt ſlaine; as we haue ſaid before. 2

To accuse God of ouer much feueritie, is but to double our owne woe.

Simile.

This shewes, that we must make no account to reioyce in any settled estate long, nor to lull our selues asleepe in iollitic, seeing there is nothing stable nor stedfast in this life: but we may be bereaued of all our ioyes in a moment. Therefore whilst we are in peace, let vs euen meditate of warre, aduersitie, and persecutions. Aboue all things, let vs carefulle seeke that peace which is grounded vpon Gods fatherlie loue and compassion, wherein our consciences may rest securely.

The second part of the verse may be expounded two waies, because the verb Chaschak signifies To loue, and sometimes To will: This sense agrees not amisse, It was thy pleasure to deliuer my soule: but if nothing be supplied, the sense will still be perfect, O Lord, thou hast loved my soule when it was in the Sepulcher. It is knowne to all, that the Soule is taken for the life: but the Prophet here extols the bountie of God, who vouchsafed to loue Hezekias though he were halfe dead.

In the next place he giues the reason of it, in bringing vs to the fontaine from whence this deliuerance issued: for otherwise, one might imagin that he hath spoken of nothing hitherunto but of bodily health. But we may now see that he looked much higher, to wit, first vnto his guiltines before God, secondly to the free reconciliation. He confesseth in deed that he hath receiued his life anew, but yet he esteemes his reconciliation with God more then a hundred thousand liues. Truly it were better for vs neuer to haue beene borne, then to liue long, heaping sinne vpon sinne, and so to hale downe the more horrible iudgements of God vpon our own heads. Hezekias then reioyced chiefe, in that the light of Gods countenance did shine clearly vpon him: for our only felicitie consists in hauing him good and gracious to vs. Yet herewithall he shewes, that we must impute the euils which God laies vpo vs to our sinnes: for such as accuse him of ouer-much feueritie, doe nothing else but double their owne woe. This good King condemnes not himselfe of one sinne only, but confesseth himselfe guiltie of many sinnes, and therefore stood in neede of more then one pardon. If we then desire to be truly comforted in afflictions, let vs begin heere: for if God be appeased towards vs, no euill can hurt vs, seeing he delights not to haue his beloued ones lie languishing in their miseries. It fares with vs therefore as with inconsiderate patients, who neuer thinke of their disease, but only of the accidents thereof, and of their griefes which they feele: but it is more wisdome for vs to follow the counsell of the skilfull Physitian, who considers of the cause of the disease first, and aboue all things indouors to remoue that: for they know that outward remedies are not only vaine, but hurtfull, if the inward disease be not discerned. Why so? Because remedies in such wise applied, do drine the disease further in, and so settles & augments it there, that afterwards there is no hope left for healing of it.

Hezekias therefore like a wife patient, acknowledged the cause of his sicknes; to wit, his sinnes: which being forgien, he then knew the punishment was likewise remitted and ceased. Now by this we may see the sottishnes of the Papists touching their distinction between the fault and the punishment: for Hezekias testifies here that the one was pardoned as well as the other.

Wee are also to obserue this phrase of speech which the Prophet vseth, to wit, Thou hast cast all my sinnes behinde thy backe: for his meaning therein is, that God had whollie abolished the remembrance of them. As in Miche. 7. 9. Thou hast cast all their sinnes into the bosome of the sea. And in Psal. 103. 12. He separates our sinnes as farre from vs, as the East is from the West. All which sentences may assure vs that God will neuer impute the sinnes vnto vs which he hath once pardoned. If it fall out that we be corrected afterwards, he doth it not as a Iudge, but as a tender and mercifull father, that he might thereby instruct and keepe his children in awe. The Papists therefore deceiue themselves in dreaming that the corrections which follow are satisfactions or recompences, as if he would exact that at our hands, because he is loth freely to remit all. No, Gods only purpose in correcting vs is, that he may thereby provide for our saluation for the time to come.

Verf. 18. For the grave cannot confesse thee: death can not praise thee: they that goe downe into the pit, cannot hope for thy truth.

Where he saith, that he can not set forth the praises of God if his life be taken away, he promiseth to do it, if so great a benefit may be granted vnto him; and therewithall shewes, that the only cause why he desires to liue, is, that he might praise God. Now albeit there is not a better signe of a godlie heart then to desire life, vpon condition to glorifie God continually by the same: yet it teemes Hezekias speaks somewhat too strictly. For the faithfull glorifie God no lesse by their death, then by their life: by death they come to be perfectlie conioined with him, and neuer cease to sing his praises with the elect Angels. But there is yet another difficultie which moued Hezekias so much to flee death, and so earnestlie to desire to liue still on earth. Which second question, albeit we haue discussed heretofore, yet the readers shall againe be put in minde that this terror proceeded not from the only apprehension of death: for when the houre came that he should die, he recoiled not back, but willingly went vnto his God. But at this time being smitten with the sence of Gods wrath, his only sorrow is, that his sinnes had bereaued him of his life, fearing he should neuer taste any of Gods blessings or fauours afterward. Hereupon also depends the solution of the first question: for what maruell is it if this good man seeing he must die, his death also proceeding ceeding from the anger of God kindled againſt him, to take vengeance on his finnes: what maruell is it, I ſay, if he ſorrowed and lamented to be condemned to die, as one vnworthy to bee imploied any longer in the aduancement of Gods true religion and Iudgement?

Hezekias looked into the cause of his sicknes.

The ridiculous distinction of the Papists betwene the fault, and the punishment.

Whoſoeuer he be that is once ſtrucke with this thunderbolt, can not ſteele magnifie the name of the Lord, neither in life nor in death, but muſt needes be mute, becauſe deſpaire hath ouerwhelmed his ſpirits. In this ſenſe Dauid ſaith; In death there is no remembrance of thee: Pſal. 65. And the whole Church in Pſal. 115. 17. ſaith; The dead praife not thee, O Lord, neither any that go downe into the place of ſilence. Why ſo? Becauſe thoſe who feele the guilt of their finnes, and Gods anger preſſing them, want matter of thankſgiuing. And yet wee muſt note, that when the Saints ſpake thus, they conſidered not what their condition ſhould bee after death; but from the dolour which they felt they onely looked to the end for which God had created & preferred them in this world.

The chiefſt end of mans life we know, is to ſpend the ſame in his ſeruiſe: who for this purpoſe conſerues his Church vpon earth, as hath been ſaid, becauſe hee will haue his name alwaies praifed. Now he that ſeemes to be caſt off, in regard he is vnworthy to be any longer accounted among the number of Gods ſeruants, cannot diſtinctly conſider with a ſtill and quiet mind, what ſhall become of him after death, but being ouerſhadowed with ſorrowes, takes from the dead, the facultie of praifing God, as if all exerciſes of pietie ceaſed after this life, becauſe (as hee thinkes) Gods glorie is buried in the graue with thoſe that ſhould bee the witneſſes of it.

Verſ. 19. But the lining, the lining, he ſhall confeſſe thee, as I doe this day: the father to the children ſhall declare thy truth.

HE comprehends not all men generally within this ſentence, ſeeing many line, who notwithstanding as much as in them is, labour to extinguiſh Gods glory by their ingratitude: ſo far are they off from thinking they were borne to ſet forth or magnifie the ſame. But his meaning onely is, that men may be true and lawfull Preachers of the glory of God, as long as it pleaſeth him to retaine them aliuie in the world, becauſe he by his liberalitie daily & hourly ſumons them to the performance of this dutie. This oppoſition ſhews that his former ſpeech, The graue cannot confeſſe thee, death cannot praife thee, &c. ought to be referred to this point, namely, that ſuch as are cut off from the world, where they employ their time in praifing God, are by death deprived of ſo excellent a benefit. Beſides, he proteſteth that himſelfe ſhall now bee one of the witneſſes of Gods glory; thereby ſhewing a ſigne of his thankfullneſſe: for he ſaith hee will neuer forget ſuch a merit, but will magnifie the Lord, and preach to others what fauour hee hath taſted of. And not onely to thoſe of his owne time, but to the poſteritie alſo, that they may euerie one ſet forth theſe praifes, and reuerence the author of ſo great a bleſſing.

Hence wee are to gather a very profitable inſtruction; to wit, that men haue children beſtowed vpon them, on condition to bring them vp in the information of the Lord, euerie one induoring with all his might to leaue behind him for his ſucceſſors, ſome good occaſions to ſet forth Gods praifes. Fathers of families therefore ought carefully to record vnto their children, the mercies which God hath ſhewed them. By the word truth, wee are to vnderſtand the fidelitie which God keeps with his ſeruants, and with all thoſe that are witneſſes of his grace, whereby hee maniſeſts vnto them the truth of his promiſes.

Verſ. 20. The Lord was ready to ſaue me: therefore we will ſing my ſong all the daies of our life in the houſe of the Lord.

HEE acknowledgeth that his deliuerance proceeded not from the induſtry of men, but from the onely fauour of God. Whereas ſome tranſlate; It is the Lord which can deliuer mee; they expreſſe not the thing ſufficiently; it alſo ſeemes they miſſe the very letter: for hee not onely magnifies the power of God, but alſo his worke, by which his power was cleerly maniſeſted. In a word, he oppoſeth this his deliuerance to that death vnto which he was iudged of God: for as before he apprehended him as a ſeuere Iudge, ſo now he leaps for ioy in acknowledging him to be his redeemer. For this cauſe he prepares himſelfe againe to ſing a ſong of thankſgiuing; yea, he calles others to him to aid him therein. He mentions the Temple, becauſe there the faithfull met together.

Had he been but a priuat man, and one of the common ſort, yet he was bound to haue offered a ſolemne ſacrifice for the incouraging of others, as well as for the diſcharge of his owne dutie. He therefore being a king, was to be much more careful in bringing others with him to giue God thanks, eſpecially ſeeing the ſafetie of the whole Church conſiſted vpon his deliuerance. He will therefore induor, he ſaith, to make it knowie to all, what fauour God ſhewed him; and that it ſhould be remembered not for a day or two, but all the daies of their lives. Truly it had been a moſt vnworthy thing euer to haue ſuffered ſo ſingular a benefit to haue vaniſhed away, or to die at any time: but in regard of our owne forgetfullneſſe and dulneſſe, wee haue need to haue ſpures to prick vs continually forwards to the performance of this dutie. Thus alſo hee ſhewes to what end God hath appointed holy aſſemblies, euen to the end that all with one heart and mouth, may praife one God in Ieſus Chriſt, and ſtirre vp one another to the exerciſes of pietie.

Gen. 9. 13.

Isaiah shewes now what remedie hee gave Hezekias. Others thinke it was no remedie, because figs are contrarie and hurtfull to vlcers: and therefore they say that the King was aduertised, and by this signe more fullie instructed that this recouerie onlie proceeded from the free grace of God. For example, the bow in the cloudes whereby God meant to testifie that the world should neuer perish againe by the flood, seemed notwithstanding to signifie the cleane contrarie: for it appeeres only when great raines gather together, and are readie to drowne the whole world. They thinke then that the Prophet hath of set purpose applied a remedie nothing fitting for the healing of the disease, because it might appeere to all, that Hezekias was healed without the help of any salues. But seeing the Physitians of our times do vse plaisters of figs to ripen the Plague-fore, it may be the Lord added the salue to his promise, as he often doth in other cases: for this medicine lessens not y^e promise, which without the word had bin vaine and vnprofitable. He also had received a supernaturall signe, which no doubt raught him, that it was God, and none but he who restored his life vnto him, which in his conceit was lost.

Verf. 22. Also Hezekias had said, What is the signe that I shall goe vp into the house of the Lord?

Some expound this verse as if this had bin giuen Hezekias for a signe; and therefore they referre it to the former sentence: but it is more likely that the order of the thing is here changed, which often fallies out among the Hebrues, so as that which should be said in the beginning, comes in towards the latter end. Isaiah mentions not in the beginning of the Chapter that Hezekias required this signe, yet it is recorded in the holy historie that he so did, 2. King. 20. 8. He now adds that therefore which was omitted at the first. That I shall goe vp. In these words his meaning is that the chiefe care of his whole life was, to bestow it to the glorie of God: for he desires not to liue that he might consume his daies in voluptuousnes, but that he might maintaine the honour and pure worship of God. Let vs be admonished then that our daies are not prolonged to the end we should giue our selues to iollitie and dissolutions, but to honour him that hath so much honoured vs; to further one another in his feare; to meete together in the holy assemblies, to magnifie his mercie and truth.

THE XXXIX. CHAPTER.

Verf. 1. At the same time Merodach Baladan, the sonne of Baladan King of Babel, sent letters, and a present to Hezekias: for he had heard that he had bin sick and was recovered.

HE expositors thinke that this Merodach was the first King of the Chaldeans, because his father Baladan held the superioritie among the Babilonians, without hauing the title of King. After this Merodach then had reigned 12. yeceres, he subdued the Assyrians, and made them tributaries vnder the Chaldeans. For those are deceiued who thinke that the warres were begun by Nebuchadnezar: It may well be that he made an end of them, and whollie subdued the Assyrians, whose power was then like enough halfe spent, there remained nothing for him then but to confirme y^e kingdome in his owne hands which was conquered by y^e power of his predecessor. Now howsoeuer y^e Prophet in few words telles how the Ambassadors were sent; yet we must obserue that Merodach did this guilefullie to guggle Hezekias with his flatteries. He threatened the Assyrians already whom he knew the Iewes hated for good cause because their continuall warres: that he might get him a companion then, and a fellow helper in his intended warres, hee insinuates himselfe cunningly into the amitie of this good King: whose heart, as you see, was forthwith surprised with pride, in that hee was too forward in accepting the fraudulent flatteries of this Tyrant, and suffered himselfe to be poisoned therewith.

And yet the pretence was nothing else forsooth, but that the Ambassadors came to conyugalitate with him, in regard of the late recouerie of his health: howbeit the holy historie seemes to alleadge another reason; to wit, that Merodach was moued to send by a miracle: 2. Chron. 32. 31. No doubt but this going backe of the Sunne was renowned far and neere: neither could it be, but many nations were much moued by the report of so vnwonted a thing. But it is hard to say, that so profane a man respected any other thing, then to catch Hezekias by this meanes in his nets. And because God had by so excellent a signe, signified how deare the factie of Hezekias was vnto him, Merodach thought with himselfe (as the wicked and vnbeleueurs are wont to abuse such testimonies of Gods fauour, to the seruing of their own turnes) that his warres which he meant to vndertake, must needes succeed wel, and be blessed from heauen, if he might get such a one as Hezekias to take his part. Thence it was that to manifest his good will, he sent his Ambassadors to him with a present: for he meant to winne him, because cause such an acquaintance should be fir and profitable to aid him against the Assyrians, whom the Jewes (as he well knew) hated most deadly. Thus you see the policies of Kings and Princes, to wit, by close conueiances to serue their owne turnes, neuer caring by what meanes they procure aid, so they may make themselues strong against their enemies.

The practices of idolatrous Kings and Princes.

Verf. 2. And Hezekias was glad of them, and shewed them the house of his treasures, the silver, and the gold, and the spices, and the pretious oniment, and all the house of his armour, and all that was found in his treasures: there was nothing in his house, nor in all his kingdome, that Hezekias shewed them not.

The Prophet plaies the historiographer. For first hee telles plainly what Hezekias did: next, he will shew why he did it; to wit, because ambition had blinded his eyes: and thus he meant to make himselfe great in the sight of the Ambassadors. Thus he taxeth thus inordinate ioy, from whence proceeded so great care at length to feast and welcome them. He that shall reade the historie barely, wil thinke there is no great fault to be found in Hezekiah for any thing he did. Was it not humanitic in him to receiue such Ambassadors with glauesse and magnificence, and to shew them all signes of loue? Who can denie it? Nay, hee had shewed himselfe more then barbarous, if hee had reiected those who in such kind manner came to visit him; or, if he had set light by the friendship of so mightie a King. Notwithstanding all this, his heart was too farre sickled with vanitie and ostentation. For he meant to shew his preiustesse. to the end the Babylonian might know that this amitie should serue him to good purpose; which he further insinuated by shewing his riches, munitions, and furniture for warre. Hee was also blame-worthy, for desiring to be supported by strange and vnlawfull meanes: for therein he bereaued God of his honour, who had freely deliuered him out of two great dangers: otherwise, the Prophet would neuer haue reproued him so sharply for this fact.

Heere is a faire looking glasse therefore, in which euery one may see that there is nothing so dangerous, as to be blinded with prosperitie: to which purpose it was well said long agoe. It is a harder matter to beare prosperitie then aduersitie. We wax vntuly and insolent when things fall out as wee would haue them; neither can we be kept in awe by any threatnings or adinonitions whatsoever. If this befall Hezekias, whom the Prophet before hath so much commended, whose onely treasure was the feare of God: Chap. 33. 6. how ought we to watch ouer our owne hearts, lest we fall into the like dangers?

He suffers himselfe to be ouerwaied with vaine ostentation, and neuer remembers that being halfe dead before, the Lord drew him out of his graue by a miracle from heauen.

If such a mightie Cedar fell, what shall become

In the 20. verse of the former Chapter, hee vowed to sing the praises of God all the daies of his life, in the assemblie of the Saints. Now when he sees some suing for his friendship, and that a mightie Monarch sends from far to salute him, he presently forgets God, with all the benefits which he had receiued at his hands. Do we see this good King so soone ouerthrowne, and ouerwaied with pride and ambition, let vs learne to hold our selues within the lists of modestie, by which we may daily be preferred in the feare of God.

Modestie the meanes to hold vs in the feare of God.

Verf. 3. Then came Isaiab the Prophet vnto King Hezekias, and said vnto him; What said these men? and from whence came they to thee? And Hezekiah said; They are come from a farre Country vnto me, from Babel.

Hee goes on with the same narration still; but he addes doctrine vnto it. And howsoeuer he utters not a word of Gods sending of him, yet it is most certaine that he did this by the instinct and commandement of the holy Ghost; for which cause he adorne himselfe with the title of Prophet: wherein he signifies that he came not as a priuat man, but as hee that was to execute the office which God had inioined him; to the end Hezekias the King might know, that he had not to doe with Isaiab the Prophet now, as with a mortall man. In that he saith he came; we may gather that the King called him nor, but let him rest at home in his house, whilst hee shewed and discovered all his riches: for Prophets are not wont to be called, when such matters are in hand. Before, when calamities besieged him, and that Rabshakeh had proudly and disdainfully blasphemed the God of Israel, then Isaiab the Prophet was sought out and sent for, to intreat him to lift vp his praier for the remnant that was left: Chap. 37. 4. and to giue him some word of consolation and comfort. Thus the Prophets are sought vnto when aduersitie and troubles are neere, or vpon vs: but all things being quiet and well, the Prophets are forgotten; nay, they are reiected because they trouble the feast (as they say) by their wholsome admonitions, and seeme to fill all the company with nothing but melancholic.

Prophets usually sent for in extremitie, but forgotten in prosperitie.

Isaiab came notwithstanding vnalled for; wherein we are behold his constancy: whose example may teach vs, not to tarrie till wee be sent for by such as stand in neede of our office, whilst they please themselues in most hurtfull vices, and plunge themselues into perill by their lightnesse, ignorance, or mallice. It is our duties to gather the disperseed sheepe together; yea, we stand bound to doe it carefully, though no man should require this dutie of vs.

Isaiab his constancie to be noted.

Now howsoeuer Hezekias deserued to bee sharply rebuked, in that he suffered himselfe to be so soone corrupted by the King of Babylon, neuer asking counsell of God; yet the great modestie that was in him is worthy of memorie.

memorie, Why so? He repulseth not the Prophet, neither disdaines he his message, as if hee had reproofed him without cause, but giues him a mild answer, and in conclusion receiues his hard censure peaceably. He had done better if he had inquired at the mouth of the Lord at the very first, as it is in Psalm. 119.24. Thy statutes are my counsellors: but hauing failed herein vnawares, it was a singular vertue in him obediently to receiue the reproofe of his fault which he had committed.

The first question,

What said these men?] The Prophet hits him not home at the first, but prickes him gently, that he might bring him by degrees to confesse his fault. For Herzekias flattered himselfe, and thought himselfe in as good case as might be. It was needfull therefore he should be awakened out of this his sleepe by little and little. I grant this first blow was a very piercing one: as if he should haue said; I pray thee vwhat hast thou to doe with these fellows? Oughtest thou not much rather to haue fled from so contagious a pestilence? He asks also what the summe of their message was, to shame Herzekias, who was ignorant of the serpent which lay hidden vnder the sweet flowers: for he finds no fault with the gratulation of these Ambassadors, although poison was also mingled therewithall: but he aims at the snares which the Caldeans had set to trap Herzekias his feete. Notwithstanding it seemes by his answer, that he was little moued by this light reprehension, because he pleased himselfe too much as yet, in that which he had done; for he vaunts that these men were come to him from a farre Countrey, from Babylon. No doubt but Isaiah knew this Countrey well, so as Herzekias needed not so eloquently to haue described the farre distance of the place: but thus he flatters himselfe, because ambition possessed him. It was requisite therefore that his fore should bee gaged to the bottome, and lanced with sharper instruments.

Vers. 4. Then said hee; What haue they seene in thine house? And Herzekiah answered; All that is in mine house haue they seene: there is nothing among my treasures that I haue not shewed them.

Againe he said, &c.] Hee continues on his couert admonition, to see if Herzekias will at last bee touched and displeas'd with his sinne. But he cannot yet win so much of him, albeit it is almost incredible that the King should be growne so senselesse, as not to feele such prickings. For he knew wel enough that the Prophet came not as curious folkes doe, to inquire of newes, or to passe the time in meriment with the King; but to confere with him about some matter of importance. How cuer it were, yet his calme answer is to be commended; for he falles not out with the Prophet, but modestly confesseth how all things went. But no signe of repentance appeares, neither confesseth he himselfe faulty: for hee considered not his sinne in this his drowinesse.

Ambition is so cunning a witch, that shee not onely bewitcheth men with her sweete poison, but takes away all their senses: so as though they be admonished, yet they repent not at the first onser. When we therefore see this good King smitten with such a benumbednesse, that hee feeles no reprehensions, neither can bee brought to the knowledge of himselfe, wee ought by his example carefully to beware of so dangerous a plague.

Vers. 5. And Isaiah said to Herzekiah; Heare the word of the Lord of hostes:

6. Behold, the daies come, that all that is in thine house, and which thy fathers haue laid vp in store vntill this day, shall be carried to Babel: nothing shall be left, saith the Lord.

BY this iudgement heere pronounced by God, we may see that Herzekias his sinne was not small, howsoever common reason would iudge it otherwise. For in as much as God keeps alwaies a measure in his chastising of men; from the greatnesse of the correction we may gather, that this was no light offence, but an horrible crime. And hereby we are also admonished, that men can neuer discern aright, neither of their words nor workes, but that God is the onely competent Iudge thereof. Herzekias shewes his treasures: were they gathered together to lie alwaies hidden vnder Locke and key? Hee receiues the Ambassadors conuentionly; Should hee haue driuen them away? Hee heares their message: but since the enimic of the Assyrians seekes amitie with him, should he set light by such a commoditie? In a word, what fault is to bee found in all this, if you looke to the outward act? But God, from whom no secrets are hid, spies first of all ingratitude in Herzekias, in this his gladnesse: for he forgets the miserie which pressed him but a little before, and sets the Caldeans (as it were) in the place of God, to whose honour his body and goods were to be consecrated and dedicated. Secondly, he notes his pride; because hee induoured beyond measure to be renowned, in regard of his magnificence and riches. He was faultie also touching his disordered affection, in making such a league as was the destruction of the whole state. But the greatest fault of all was his pride, which after a fort strippes mens hearts of all feare of God: for which cause Augustine rightly breaks out into this exclamation; O what and how great is the poison of ambition, which cannot be cured but by a counterpoison! For he had respect vnto that place in the Corinthians, where the Apostle saith; the angell of Satan was sent to buffet him, lest he should be exalted aboue measure: 2. Cor. 12.7.

Herzekias had not faulted lightly. God keeps a measure in his chastisements: Ier. 30.11.

God the only competent Iudge both of our words and workes.

Augustine. The poison of pride not to be cured but by a counterpoison.

Herzekias was inuincible whilst all things stood ſtood in a deſperat caſe: and now he is ouercome by theſe alluements, and is not able to conquer nor reſiſt his owne vaine ambition. Let vs conſider how dangerous a malladie this is, and let vs keepe ſo much the more diligent watch ouer our falſe and treacherous hearts. Now in regard the Prophet was to pronounce ſo heauie a ſentence, he ſaith firſt, that God enioined him to ſpeake: Hear the word of the Lord, ſaith he: in the next verſe he repeats it againe; not that he laies the matter whollie vpon God, becauſe he feared ill handling; but to the end he might touch the heart of the King to the quick. Wherein we may againe note his great boldnes and conſtancie. He dreads not the preſence of the King, he feares not to diſcouer his diſeaſe, nor to threaten Gods iudgemēt againſt him. For although Kings eares were then ſome-what nice and delicate, yet being aſſured that God had ſet him a worke, he executes his charge couragiouſlie, how vnpleaſant ſoever his meſſage was. The Prophets were indeed the Kings ſubiect, and therefore vnder ſubiectiō: neither attributed they any thing vnto themſelues, vnleſſe they were to goe on Gods errant. But then, what high imagination is there which ought not to be brought downe vnder his Maieſtie? Had he minded to haue retained the fauour of his Prince he would haue bin mute as flatterers are: but he had an eie to his calling, and indeuors to diſcharge the ſame faithfullie.

Nothing ſhall be left. The manner of this chaſtiſement wherewith the Lord threatens Hezekias is to be obſerued: for he takes away from his ſucceſſors thoſe things wherein he gloried ſo much, to the end they might not haue occaſion to doe the like. See how God puniſheth the ambition and pride of men: for their name, or kingdome, which they imagined ſhould laſt for euer, is raced out: they are deſpitefullie intreated, and their memorie is curſed: In a word, he ouerturnes their fond conceits, ſo as they find the cleane contrary to that which they conceiued in their fooliſh braine.

If it be objected, that it is no reaſon a whole citie & kingdome ſhuld be deſtroyed or caried away captiue for one māns fault; ſeeing ſo holy Ghoſt in many places pronounceth, that the open and vniuerſall obſtinacie of the Iewes was the cauſe why God gaue both Citie and Countrie for a pray to the Caldeans: I anſwere, that no abſurditie can enſue, if God be ſaid to puniſh the ſinne of a particular perſon, and that of a whole nation together. For ſince his wrath laid the whole Countrie waſt, all were to acknowledge their offence; and euery one in particular was to conſider what he had deſerued: that ſo none might lay the fault vpon another, but euery man might rather condemne himſelfe.

Furthermore, ſeeing the Iewes were culpable alreadie before the iudgement ſeate of God, Hezekias was iuſtly permitted to fall, that the way might be opened for Gods wrath to breake forth, and to haſten the execution of his vengeance. And the like we know fell out in Dauid. For it was not by chance that he was moued to number the people, but it came to paſſe by the fault of Iſrael, whom the Lord meant by that meanes iuſtly to chaſten. The wrath of the Lord, ſaith the text, was kindled againſt Iſrael, and he moued Dauid againſt them to number the people, 2. Sam. 24. 1. So alſo in this place Hezekias is threatened with a iudgement: but the ſinne whereby he prouoked the wrath of the Lord to burne, was a iuſt vengeance vpon the whole people for the ſinnes committed by them before.

Verſ. 7. And of thy ſonnes, that ſhall proceed out of thee and which thou ſhalt beget ſhall they take away, and they ſhall be Eunuches in the Palace of the king of Babel.

This might ſeeme worſe then the former threatening to Hezekias, and therefore it is referred to the laſt place, to amplify the iudgement. If any calamitie do befall a countrie, Kings, and theirs, thinke to be exempted from it, becauſe they are none of the common ſort. When the Prophet telles him then that his ſonnes ſhall be caried away captiues, we may well ſay, that this ſeemed a very hard ſentence to him indeed.

Moreouer we may from hence gather how much God deteſted this confidence which Hezekias reposed in his riches and outward eſtate (whereof alſo he vanted in the preſence of theſe inſidels) ſeeing he takes vengeance of this crime as of a ſinne irremiſſible by ſo horrible an example, becauſe the King had ſhewed his treasures to theſe heathens and inſidels.

*Verſ. 8. Then ſaid Hezekiah to Iſaiah, The word of the Lord is good, which thou haſt ſpoken: and he ſaid, * Yet there ſhall be peace and * truth in my daies.*

* Or, at leaſt, let there be.
* Or, ſtabilitie.

From this anſwere of Hezekias we gather, that he was not rebellious nor preſumptuous, ſeeing he quietlie heard the Prophets reprehention, though he was not much moued with it at the firſt: for hearing that the Lord was angry, he condemnes himſelfe without any replies, and confeſſeth, that he is iuſtly puniſhed. In whom we haue a paterne of true teachableneſſe and obedience: for when he heard the iudgements of God denounced againſt him, he ſtood not vpon teames with the Prophet, but ſhewed himſelfe modeſt and meeke. From the example then of this good King, let vs learne to hearken to the Lords voice quietlie, not only when he exhorts or admoniſheth; but alſo when he condemnes and terrifies vs, in giuing iuſt ſentence vpon vs.

In ſaying, that the word of the Lord is good: he firſt of all commends his iuſtice, and with patience accepts of that which for the tartenes of it might haue driuen him to ſwelling and impatience: for the very reprobates haue ſometimes confeſſed the fault, and yet their ſtubborne hearts haue neuer bin ſo ea-

Wee muſt hearken to the Lords voice not only when he admoniſheth vs, but when he promouneeth ſentence of condemnation againſt vs.

Iſaiah his boldnes and conſtancie.

Anſ.

God can puniſh the ſinne of a particular perſon, and that of a whole kingdome together.

med, but they haue grudged against the reuenging hand of their Iudge. To the end that Gods threatnings may haue a sweet relish therefore, it is necessarily required that wee conceiue some hope of pardon in the midst of Gods displeasure: otherwise, our hearts will bee alwaies so stuffed with bitterness, that nothing but gall and wormewood will proceed out of the same. But he which in his heart is perswaded that though God corrects, yet he ceaseth not still to retain the louing affection of a father; such a one will not onely acknowledge God to be iust, but will also meekely and patiently beate his temporarie scourge. To be short, where the feeling of Gods loue takes place, so as this principle be once fixed in our hearts, that he is our father, it shall not much dismay nor trouble vs to be heated vp, or cast downe, according as it pleaseeth him: for faith will teach vs that there is nothing more profitable then his fatherly chastisement.

In this sort Dauid in all humilitie answers the Prophet Nathan, who sharply rebuked him: I haue sinned against the Lord: 2.Sam.12.13. (which imports as much as that speech of old Heb; It is the Lord, les him doe that which is good in his eyes: 1.Sam.3.18.) For he is silent, not because it could aduantage him nothing at all to murmur; but because hee willingly submits himselfe to Gods iustice. It seemes that Sams silence tends to the same end, when Sannuel told him that the kingdome was rent from him: 1.Sam.15.24. But because the punishment onely terrified him, he was touched with no compunction of heart at all for his fault. It is no wonder then though he be full of garboilings inwardly still, albeit hee set a faire countenance of it outwardly; because he could not resist accordingly as he would: for malefactors that haue fetters on their heeles, and manacles on their hands, are wont to intreat those Iudges, whom they could find in their hearts to tumble froe their seates, and to stampe them vnder their seete. But because Dauid and Hezekias are in such wise hūbled vnder the mightie hand of God, that they lost not the assurance of pardon, they chose rather willingly to beate the blowes wherewith they were smitten, then to pull their necks out of the yoke.

It is also very remarkable, that Hezekias not onely confesseth that this sentence of God is good, but that also, which Isaiab had spoken: for this word shon, hath great weight in it, in that hee is contented with all reuerence to receiue the word, though spoken by a mortall man; for hee looked to the chiefe author of it.

The libertie which Isaiab tooke might haue seemed somewhat too harsh and combersome in the eyes of a King: but taking him (as he was indecde) for the seruant of God, he suffers himselfe to be censured of him. Which being so, their nicenesse is insupportable, who can beare no admonitions nor reprehensions at all, but in disdain, obiect against the Pastors and Ministers of the word: Are you not men as well as wee? As if forsooth God were not to be obeyed, vnlesse he should send an Angell to admonish them: or, vnlesse himselfe should speake vnto them from heauen. Hence also we may learne, what to thinke of such fantastical spirits, who seeming to reuerence God, doe notwithstanding fully reiect the doctrine of the holy Prophets.

But if they were so readie to obey God, then would they giue as much audience to him in the person of his seruants, as to himselfe if hee should thunder from heauen. I confesse wee must distinguish the true Prophets from the false, and the voice of the Pastor from the stranger: but we must not reiect all, hand ouer head, vnlesse we meane therewithall to reiect God himselfe. Yea, they must be heard of vs, not onely when they exhort and reprove, but also when they condemne and threaten vs (in the name of God) to be punished for our finnes.

The particule ci, is taken heere for an exception: and therefore I haue translated; Yet there shall be peace. For Hezekias addes somewhat more therein to the former; to wit, hee thanks God in that hee hath mitigated the punishment which he had deserued. As if he should say; The Lord might haue raised vp enemies against mee forthwith, that might haue driuen mee out of my Kingdome: but now he spares me, & in deferring the iudgement, moderates the punishment which I should of right sustaine.

This sentence may also be expounded by way of a praier, yet les there be peace: so as Hezekias should request that the correction might be deferred to another time. Notwithstanding, it is more probable that he applies that to the comfort of his sorrowfull heart, which the Prophet had said of the daies to come; that thereby hee might arme himselfe with patience, because a sudden iudgement would haue astonished him much more. This exception then agrees well for the tranquillitie of his minde; yet God will spare the terme of my life. Notwithstanding, if any had rather expound it, For there shall be peace; I hinder him not. Some take the word truth, for the seruice of God and true religion; as if in dying, hee should render thanks to God that the pure doctrine should remaine vncorrupted: but I had rather take it for stabilitie, or a quiet state of the Kingdome: vnlesse any had rather take it to signifie an assured prosperitie, and of long continuance.

Now Hezekias might seeme cruell, in that he vtterly neglected his posterity, as one that cared not much what became of things after his death. For these are horrible blasphemies which swinish Epicures and others of that rout haue in their mouths at this day: When I am dead, let the earth bee on a flaming fire. Againe, When I die, let all die with me. But Hezekias had a far other meaning: for albeit hee desired the prosperitie of such as should suruiue him, as much as his owne; yet hee could not see light by the signe of Gods mercie, who deferred the execution of this iudgement till after his death. For he might conceiue hope from thence, that his successors Faith will teach vs that nothing is more profitable for vs then Gods fatherly chastisement.

Those that are indeed willing to obey God, will giue him as much reuerence whē he speaks by the mouth of one of his seruants, as if himselfe should speake vnto them out of a thunder from heauen.

Simile.

Horrible blasphemies of swinish Epicures.

ſors ſhould in the end bee partakers of this fauour and mercie. Some thinke he reioiced for this delay, becauſe wee ought not to care for to morrow, conſidering that the day hath enough with his owne griefe: Mat. 6. 24. But thus ſuces not well in this place: for Herodias contemnes not the poſteritie, but perceiuing that God did fauourably mitigate the chaſtiſement which hee had deſerued, hee thanks him for it, (as we haue ſaid) in regard it was his dutie to accept of the preſent mercie offered, howſoeuer the iudgement was deferred till after his death. Truly wee for our parts are to performe all ſeruices to the age in which we liue, and to haue ſpeciall regard vnto it: we muſt not caſt off all care for the time to come; but it is our duties to imploy our vttermoſt endeours for that which is preſent, and now moſt preſſeth vpon vs. Wee which liue in theſe times together, are more neerly conioined in affection by the Lord, that by our mutuall communication, wee might helpe one another as much as in vs lies.

We ought to performe our ſeruices to the vmoſt in that age in which we liue.

It is alſo to be noted, that in reſpect of Herodias his ſinne, hee had iuſt cauſe to feare, leſt the Lord might againe ſhorten and cut off the courſe of his lite, which had been prolonged before, euen when hee lay at deaths doore. Hearing therefore the promiſe to be ratified and confirmed, hee giues thanks to God, and is the more patient, in regard of the calamitie to come; although it could not but bee irkeſome and grieuous to him to thinke of it.

THE XL. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. Comfort yee; Comfort yee my people, will your God ſay.

OW the Prophet enters vpon a new argument; for he lets the people alone, which made no vſe neither of admonitions nor threatnings whatſoeuer, in regard they were become maliciouſly deſperate: and turnes him towards the poſteritie to come, to ſignifie to thoſe which ſhould bee humbled vnder the croſſe, that they ſhould not be leſt comfortleſſe in the end; no, not in their deepeſt diſtreſſes. It is very likely that this prophecie was written by him, when the time of the captiuitie drew neere, that after his death he might not leaue the Church behind him ouerwhelmed with grieuous calamities, without hope of reſtauration. Now albeit that to the ſame end hee hath before mingled threatnings and terrors with his prophecies, yet it ſeemes hee had a principall regard to thoſe that then liued: but all that which follows hereafter, toucheth the eſtate of the Church to come, which was reſtored long after the Prophets death. For he will now ſet downe a perpetual doctrine, which is not to bee reſtrained to any particular time, ſeing hee diſcourſeth both of the beginning and progreſſe of Chriſts Kingdome. Of ſo much the greater importance therefore ought this prophecie to bee vnto vs, by how much the more it belongs particularly vnto vs for our vſe. For albeit wee may evidently diſcerne in the former prophecies, that the doctrine therein contained, is proper vnto vs as well as to the Iewes; yet in regard he now leaues the Iewes that then liued, and ſpeakes to their ſucceſſors, and indeede to all the faithfull to the worlds end, it ſeemes indeede that the doctrines following are more peculiar vnto vs. The Lord meant therefore to awaken the hearts of the faithfull by this exhortation, leſt they ſhould faint vnder ſo many calamities. Firſt then he ſpeakes to the Iewes, which ſoone after were to be led away captiues into miſerable ſeruitude, where they ſhould be deprived both of the ſacrifices and Prophets, and leſt deſtitute of all conſolation, had not the Lord bin pleaſed to haue releued them by the comfortable doctrines of theſe prophecies enſuing. In the ſecond place he directs his ſpeech to the whole Kingdome of Chriſt, which ſhould ſucceed them ſoone after, to the end they might then take heart vnto them, when in all likelihood they might ſeeme in the eyes of the world to be vtterlie forlorne. But to the end his words might haue the more efficacie, and might indeede come neere the heart, he brings in God raiſing vp new Prophets: whom hee commands to ſweeten and aſſuage the dolours of his people, by an amiable conſolation. The ſumme is, that after theſe poore baniſhed exiles ſhall haue ſeemed to haue beene forſaken for a time, that Gods fauour and louing kindneſſe ſhall breake forth, as out of the darkneſſe; and the prophecies which were ceaſed; ſhould then be brought to light againe.

Now to amplify this their ioy, he vſeth the plural number; Comfort yee: thereby ſhewing, that he will not ſend one or two; but many by troopes; which alſo came to paſſe indeed: wherein alſo we may more clearly behold the infinite loue and mercy of God. Moreouer, it is diligently to be obſerued, that the verbe is put in the future tence; will your God ſay. Which ſome expoſitors tranſlate in the preſent tence, or in the preterperfect tence; but therein they both change and corrupt the ſenſe: for the Prophet cloſly notes out the time wherein the people ſhould be grieuouſly afflicted, as if God had not ſeene them at all. For howſoeuer the Lord at that time left them not deſtitute of hope touching their deliuerance, by ſending ſome Prophets vnto them; yet in regard hee deferred them long, and that whileſt they were miſerably perſe-

The occaſion of this prophecie.

The time when this prophecie was written.

The prophecies that were before, reſpected thoſe that then preſently liued: theſe that follow, the eſtate of the Church to come.

Why the prophecies following, ought to be more highly eſteemed of vs then the former.

cuted, and in a maner halfe dead: this consolation had no great efficacy, till they saw some euident signes of their returne.

Comfort ye,
comfort ye.

The verb Comforts therefore is to be applied to the present time, which being twice repeated, not only confirms the truth of the propheticke, but also sets forth the power and efficacy of it: as if he should say, in this message there shall be a full, perfect, and perpetuall occasion of gladnes.

But especially they were to retaine the futtertence, will your God say? for in these words there lies hid a close opposition betwene that dolefull silence whereof I haue spoken, and that comfortable doctrine which came in place of it.

This prophesie is like to the complaint of the Church, Psal. 74. Wee see not our signes, our Prophets are nor, and there is none left that can tell vs how long: in which we know the laments, as one left destitute of true consolation, because she could heare no promise of comfort in her distresses. The Prophets meaning in this place then is, The Lord will not suffer you to be left destitute of Prophets which shall comfort you in your extreme aduersitie: for then he will raise vp men to whom he wil giue that commission which you haue so long desired, and then will he shew he hath care of you.

Now I referte this verb will say, not only to the captiuitie of Babylon, but to the whole time of our delucrance, which comprehends in it the kingdome of Christ vntill his last coming. We must adde, that he will say to ſ Prophets, whom he will ordeine for this purpose: for in vaine shall they vtter their voice, vnlesse the Lord speake nor to them first, and put that into their mouths which they shall publish vnto others. Thus then there is a mutuall relation betwene God and his Prophets. But as I haue said, these things are not to be wholly restrained to the captiuitie of Babylon; no, they haue a further extent, and comprehend vnder them the doctrine of the Gospell, in which this power to comforts is chieftie contained: for it is the proper office thereof to refresh the afflicted, & those that are brought low, to quicken the dead, and to reioyce such as are in heauenes: in a word, to bring with it tidings of all ioy and gladnes; for which cause it is called the Gospell, that is to say, good newes: which began nor then to be published when Christ first appeared to the world, but long before, to wit, from the time that God first manifested his fauour.

office of the Gospell.

Gospell, that tidings.

Daniell.

Haggai, Zacharie, Malachi, Nehemiah, Ezra.

Daniell, he first raised vp the standard, to the end the faithfull might prepare themselves to returne home: after him, Haggai, Zachari, Malachi, Nehemiah, Ezra, and others after them, vntill Christes coming, alwaies exhorted the faithfull to be of good comforts, and to hope against hope. The last of them that wrote was Malachi, who knowing there should be no more Prophets after him, sends the people to the law of Mose, that they might learne what the will of God was both touching his threatnings and promises, Mal. 4. 4.

Now from this place we gather that which is chieftie to be sought in the Prophets, to wir, they set before vs the sweetnes of Gods fauour, that the faithfull might conceiue hope for the time to come: that they should not quaille vnder afflictions, but might perseuere in prayer. But the matter being alwaies incredible, he calles to minde the couenant; as if he meant to say, That it was vnpossible for God to forget that which he once promised to Abraham. Howsoever the Iewes then had fallen from the grace of God by their sinnes, yet he auoucheth notwithstanding that he is their God still, and that they were his peculiar people which depended vpon his election: and therefore in regard there were many reprobes among them, he only direcths his speech to the faithfull, for he lets the wicked languish and consume away in their incredulitie. But the godly haue here an inestimable consolation, to wit, that albeit they be pressed with griefe and anguish for a time, yet because they put their trust in him who is the father of mercies and God of all consolation, they shall in the end feele that the promises of grace were conserued and kept for them as an hid treasure, to glad their hearts in due season. See heere an excellent commendation of the propheticall office, which serues to susteine the faithfull in aduersitie, lest they should faint or sinke vnder the burthen: contrariwise, this place shewes, that God is exceeding angrie whē he deprives vs of such faithfull teachers as may bring glad tidings to the Church whereby to refresh the wearie foule, and to strengthen the weake.

My people.

Verf. 2. * Speake comfortable to Ierusalem and criue vnto her, that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquitie is pardoned: for she hath received of the Lords hand double for all her sinnes.

* Or, speake to the heart of Ierusalem.

Here God giues his seruants the Prophets a Commission, and puts that in their mouths which they were to vtter, when fit time serued, for to comforts the faithfull that were sorrowfull. And yet he stands not so much to exhort or imbolden the Prophets to discharge this their dutie manfullie and faithfullie, as he is earnest in giuing of hope to the godly, wishing them to possesse their soules in patience, vntill the Prophets were sent vnto them with this ioyfull and comfortable message. To speake according to the hearts, signifies nothing else but to speake that which is acceptable to vs: for our heart abhorres all vnpleasant tidings, but it effectually imbraceth, and runnes (as it were) to meeete with that which is well pleasing vnto it. Now because the people were in a maner reiected and forsaken, what newes could be better welcome then reconciliation with GOD, whereby all their sinnes were pardoned?

Vnder the word Ierusalem by a Synecdoche, we are to vnderstand the Church, which is so euident, that it needs no prooffe.

signifies the Church.

The word crie, signifies, that this promise of grace shall be cleare and euident: it shall sound so in their eares, that all shall vnderstand: for if the Prophets should mutter or whisper

whisper onely, the assurance of this consolation might seeme doubtfull or weake: but all doubting is taken away, seeing it is to be delivered freely and with a loud voice.

That her warfare is ended. This is that acceptable tidings to wit, that God hath put an end to the afflictions of his people. Some take the word Tsebaab, which we have translated Warfare, simply for the time: as if hee should say, Her time is accomplished. Others thinke that the time of visitation is here noted, but vnsitly; because this word properly signifies among the Hebrewes, a set and appointed time to finish and end some businesse or worke in. But this similitude is doubtlesse taken from souldiers that have libertie to returne home from war; for he saith, the end and issue of their afflictions are at hand; as if hee should say, God will not alwaies suffer the rod of the wicked to rest vpon the lot of the godlie, but keep a measure in humbling of them. He therefore compares the time of their captiuitie in Babylon, to a long warfare, which being ended, the souldiers that vnto employment, are sent home to their houses, to liue there in peace and quiet.

He saith in like manner, that her iniquitie is pardoned; because God will be so fauourable vnto them, that hee will no longer in rigor pursue them: this therefore is the exposition of the former words. For as the Physicians in healing bodily diseases, doe first remove the causes from whence they spring, euen so the Lord deals with vs. The rods wherewith he beates vs proceeds from our finnes: he must of necessitie pardon them then, before his strokes can cease: and therefore the Prophet saith, that her warfare is accomplished, because her iniquitie is no longer imputed. Some take the word Aonah, for miserie, and say that it shall haue an end: which sense also futes well, for so the Prophet affirms one and the same thing two waies: for to say that her warfare is ended, and that her miseries are finished, are things that haue one meaning. But yet wee must hold this principle; that God ceaseth to correct when he is reconciled: so as the remission of finnes ought alwaies to goe before as the cause, although, as I thinke, wee may say that God was so pacified, that hauing pardoned the finnes of his people, hee is now readie to receive them againe into his fauour.

Double.] This place is expounded two waies: for some affirme, that he people which had deserued double punishment, were adorned with double grace: others, that God would chastise them no more, because they had had enough already. Now howsoeuer the first exposition contains a fruitfull and profitable doctrine, yet wee will let that passe now, because it agrees not with the text: for it appears the Prophet meant onely to say, that God satisfied himselfe sufficiently with the miseries which his Church had suffered. I wish therefore that those had bin more inoedest which blamed Saint Ierom and other authors for this second exposition, which is much more fitting; and not the other subtiltie, that the Lord will render double grace for double affliction. The summe is, that the Lord will punish his people no more so long, nor so sharply, because his louing kindeaffe hath overcome his displeasure, and will not suffer him to exercise so rigorous a course any longer: thus the word double, ought to be taken for largely, or abundantly. For we must not imagin that the chastisement was equal, or greater then their finnes; for their blasphemie is to be abhorred who accuse God of crueltie, as if he corrected men too seuerely. What punishment is sufficient for the least of our offences, committed against his infinite Maiestie? This ought therefore to be referred to the mercies of God, that hee alwaies fining in measure, as it is in Chapter 27. 8. will giue them no more blowes, neither yet continue them any longer. Why so? Because the former strokes haue sufficed him, albeit the people deserued to be beaten againe and againe with much more seueritie. The Lord shewes himselfe like a father, who hauing compassion on his children, neuer chides but vnwillingly, and therefore is willing to pardon them their faults.

Double, is taken for largely, or abundantly.

God is as willing to pardon our faults, as we would haue them pardoned.

Verf. 3. A voice crieth in the wilderness; Prepare the way of the Lord, make straight in the desert a path for our God.

Hee goes on with the argument begunne, and shewes more plainly, that hee will send messengers to the people (in appearance forlorne) which shall comfort & cheere them. And thus hee preuents an obiection which some might make; Thou tellest vs indeed of comfort, but where are the Prophets that should bring the same vnto vs? For we shall be in a desert. Whence then, I pray thee, shall this consolation come? Thus he telles them then that the desert shall be no meanes to debaite them of this consolation. The desert heere is taken figuratiuely, for that desolation which should come vpon them: though I denie not but the Prophet also alludes to the way betwene Babylon and Iudeah; for the tedious passage thorow the desert, might seeme to take away all hope of returning home againe. Notwithstanding he proniseth, that albeit all the passages were stopped, and that there were no way set open for them, yet that the Lord would easilie make the roughest waies smooth and plaine for himselfe, and for his seruants. Some ioine the particle, In the desert, with the member following, and expound it thus, Prepare the Lord a way in the desert. But it seemes rather that the Prophet brings in a voice, which should gather these banished ones together, which were driuen out of the habitable lande. As if hee should say; Indeed you see nothing but an hideous desert before you, but yet you shall heare this comfortable voice, by the mouthes of my Prophets. Now these things must be referred to that miserable bondage wherewith they should be oppressed in Babylon.

But to whom is this voice directed? Is it to the faithfull? No such matter. To whom then? To Cyrus, to the Medes and Persians which held this people captiue, who becaufe they were no voluntarie seruants of God, they were constrained to deliuer them whether they would or no. This is the cause why they are commanded to prepare and make readie the way, that the people might passe home into Iudca, as if he should say, Make passage for them in those wayes where none was before. And this sets forth the efficacie and force of this prophesie, for when God giues power to his seruants to commaund cruell tyrants giuen to robbery (and were then conquerors ouer the Babylonians) to prepare the way for his people: he thereby shewes, that nothing shall be able to foreflow the accomplishment of his promise, because he will serue his turne of the Medes and Persians, as of his hired seruants.

What an excellent consolation is this, to heare that God vseth the seruice of Infidels, yea and when his Church hath need, to make all creatures put to their hands for the helping forward of our saluation?

Where he saith, the way shall be prepared, not to the Iewes, but to the Lord himselfe: in this also we haue a singular testimonie of the loue he beares vs, in attributing that to himselfe which in deed belongeth to his people. What need had he of any way to be made for him, or to haue a path prepared? None at all. But thus it pleaseth him to make knowne that we are so neerely ioined vnto him, that he counts it as done to his owne Maiestie which is done to vs. This maner of speech is found often in other places, as when it is said, that God went forth for the saluation of his people, euē for the saluation with his anointed, Abac. 3. 13. Also that he went through Egypt, and led them in the wilderness like a flock, Exo. 1. 4. Psal. 78. 52.

and most renowned
our redemption.

Now this place is alledged by Matth. 3. 3. Mark. 1. 3. Luk. 3. 4. John 1. 23. and applied to John Baptist, as if these things were foretold of him, and very rightlie: for he was the first and most excellent messenger and herault of our saluation and redemption, of which, the deliuerance from Babel was only a type and figure. And in very truth when the poore and afflicted Church recovered health in John Baptist his time, the deformitie which it had, did rather resemble a desart, then the captiuitie of Babylon. But Gods will was that in the desart where the Baptist preached, the figure and image of this horrible scattering might be perceived, which had almost consumed and wasted all the beawtie of the Church. So then that which the Prophet saith here vnder a similitude, was then fulfilled indeed: for John Baptist held forth the banner of gladnes, when things were very desperate and confused.

I grant this voice sounded before by the mouth of Daniell, Zacharie, and others; but the redemption being then neerer, John Baptist spake with more efficacie: for he pointed out Christ with his finger.

But because the besotted Iewes were nothing touched (for the most part) with the true feeling of their scattering, therefore John the Baptist sought out a solitarie and desart place, that by the beholding of him he might awaken the drouzieft of them to the hope of the promised deliuerance. In that he said he was no Prophet, it was in regard of the end of his calling, and of the summe of his doctrine: for he was not sent to exercise any particular function for any set time, but to prepare mens hearts to receiue his Lord and Master. He also referres that properlie to all men which is said here, touching the removing of the impediments out of the way: namely, because the peruerfite of our nature, the ouerthwart turnings of our vnderstandings, and the rebellion of our hearts, doe shut out the Lords passage, and causeth vs that we can not so denie our selues as to yeeld him the obedience which we owe him.

Verf. 4. Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountaine and hill shall be made low: and the crooked shall be streight, and the rough places plaine.

HE both confirms and expounds the former sentence: for he shewes, that the Lord will suffer no impediments stand in his way to hinder him from redeeming and restoring of his Church, whē it seemes good vnto him. These words may well be translated in the imparatiue, so as the Lord should make the whole verſe a charge giuen to the Prophets to prepare and make plaine the way, but the difference is not very materiall: let it suffice vs to haue his meaning, which is, that Gods hand shall preuaile, though many difficulties and less do come in the way to hinder this deliuerance. Thus we may see that many hindrances present themselves as often as God once begins to worke for the saluation and succour of the afflicted: wherein notwithstanding his glorie shines so much the more; neither is it any way hurtfull for vs. For his admirable power is manifested before our eyes, seeing all the forces, enterprises, and imaginations of mans braine can neuer so hinder, but that his decree must of necessitie come to passe: for he will bring his seruants as easily ouer mountaines, and through rough waies, as if they passed through euen and smooth waies. It is certaine that by mountaines and hills, the Prophet vnder a figure meanes all sorts of obstacles: for Satan neuer ceaseth plotting how to hinder our saluation. For whē the matter concerns our spiritual deliuerance, no doubt but these words comprehend in them all inward and outward impediments, as carnall lusts, and crooked affections, ambition, vaine confidence, impatiencie, &c. all which do wonderfullie withstand our passage, but the Lord will remove them all: for whē he stretcheth forth his hand, nothing shall be able to turne or hold vs back.

Verf. 5. And the glorie of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together:

together: for the mouth of the Lord hath ſpoken it.

His meaning is, that this worke of redemption ſhall be ſo glorious, that the Lord will make it knowne to all, that himſelfe is the author of it, and will cauſe his power and maiestic to ſhine therein. It is true that they may bee perceiued in all places, and in all things; but he promiſeth eſpecially to reueale his glory in the protection and deliuerance of his Church; and not without cauſe: for the redemption thereof euen from the beginning vntil Chriſts coming, was as an incredible reuening, or ſecond creation of the world. This promiſe therefore came in due ſeaſon, when Gods power which he was wont to manifeſt, was now almoſt ſo extint, that there ſcarſly ſhined any ſparkles thereof: as it is ſaid, Pſal. 74. We ſee not our ſignes, &c. I ſay, it was to good purpoſe that the Prophet promiſed the a ſigne ſo vnwonted and memorable, by which they might evidently perceiue, that God had infinite meanes in his hands to helpe his Church, although hee ſeemed to defer it for a time.

Hee amplifies this miracle afterwards by another circumſtance; that is, it ſhall not onlie be glorious among the Iewes, but alſo in ſtrange Countries far remote from them: for by theſe words, all fleſh ſhall ſee, hee means that all nations vnder the Sun ſhould know, that the returne of the Iewes out of captiuitie, was a worke wrought from heauen, and that God ſpoke not to them by his Prophet in vaine.

Wherein hee taxeth the incredulitie of men, who reſt not vpon Gods promiſes, but hold all that the Prophets ſpeake in his name for fables, till they ſee the performance thereof with their eies. By this place we are alſo taught, what is the true means to correct our vnbelleefe; euen to exerciſe our ſelues daily in the meditation of Gods promiſes, that fo our faith may be confirmed by all the teſtimonies of his loue which hee ſets before vs. For thus we muſt ioine praſtiſe to the promiſes. The bare view of Gods works doe profite vs little, and therefore he ſends his word to open our vnderſtandings: and in the ſecond place, he ſeales vp the truth thereof by the effect it ſelfe.

Verſ. 6. A voice ſaid, Crie. And he ſaid; What ſhall I crie? All fleſh is graſſe, and all the grace thereof is as the flower of the field.

HE ſpeakes heere of another voice, then that which he mentioned verſ. 3. For hitherunto he hath ſpoken of the voice of the Prophets: now comes in the voice of God; who commands the Prophet to cry. I denie not but the voice of the Prophets is alſo the voice of God, whoſe instruments they are, (for they ſpeake not of themſelues:) yet this diſtinction is neceſſarie, to the end wee may know when the Lord commands, and when it is that the Prophets and Miniſters doe execute his commandments. There is a fit compariſon betweene the two voices then, that we might learne to receiue the meſſage which the Prophets bring in the name of the Lord, with as much reuence as if himſelfe ſpoke vnto vs from heauen: for they ſpeake as from his mouth, and as his Ambaſſadors veter nothing but that which his Spirit ſuggeſts vnto them.

Moreouer, by this preface we are admoniſhed, that the Prophet meanes to ſpeake of ſome great matter: for howſoever he alwaies proteſts faithfully to deliuer that to others, which himſelfe receiued from the Lord; yet here to ſtir vp the more attention, hee telles vs that the words which hee pronouced, were put into his mouth by the expreſſe voice of God.

Henceunto appertaines the verbe To cry: as if he ſhould ſay, Thou muſt publiſh this meſſage with a loud voice, that it may indeed go to the quicke. But the interrogation which is added, imports much: for the Prophets meaning therein is, that hee ranne not of his own head, nor bragged of things he vnderſtood not; but that they were taught him at leaſure, and diſtinctly; he being well aduised, and very attentiu.

From the matter it ſelfe we may gather, that here is nothing ſuperfluous, in regard that two principall points of the heavenly doctrine are here to be handled ſummarilie. Firſt, that howſoever man bee nothing in himſelfe but ſmoke and vanitie, and that all his excellencie vades and periſheth as the ſhadow; or like the flower; yet the faithfull haue good cauſe notwithstanding to reioice, becauſe they ſeek their ſaluation out of themſelues. Secondly, albeit they be ſtrangers vpo earth, yet they are enriched with heavenly glories; becauſe the Lord vnites himſelfe vnto them by his word; for our abatement ought to inflame vs with a deſire to partake of Gods grace.

The Prophet knew well enough what he was to teach, but he meant to rouze vp their ſpirits by this interrogation; thereby to ſhew, that himſelfe and all his fellow ſeruants were conſtrained by this neceſſitie to vtter this ſentence, and that they could not otherwiſe diſcharge their duties well, though they ſhould intreat and admoniſh neuer ſo much: for the truth is, nothing ſhall bee gained by ſpeaking, if they hold any other tenure then this.

The word cry, may ſignifie a libertie and euidence in the words: for the Prophets were not to whiſper betweene the teeth, but in the hearing of all to pronouced that which they had to ſay roundly, and to their vnderſtandings; yea freely and plainly to open the meaning of whatſoever meſſage they had receiued. Is any man called to the office of teaching then? Let him alwaies thinke and remember that he muſt vſe an inuincible freedom of ſpeech againſt all difficulties that are oppoſed to his miniſtery, as the Prophets and Apoſtles haue done, without ſhrinking their neckes out of the collar. Woe bee to mee, saith the Apostle, if I preach not, for necessity is laid vpon mee: 1. Corinth. 9. 16.

All flesh is grasse. First it is to be noted, that he speaks not here of the fragilitie of mans life onely, for the words haue a larger sense; that is, to bring to nothing all the excellencie which men may seeme to haue in them, David indeede compares this life to grasse, Psal. 103. 15. because it is corruptible and transitorie: but the scope of the text shewes, that Isaiab speaks not of the outward man onely, but also comprehends the gifts of the minde, wherewith men are usually puffed vp; as wisdomes, valour, industrie, iudgement, dexteritie, in dispatching businesse, by meanes wherof they thinke themselves more excellent then all the rest of the creatures.

This is better expressed by the word Chasdo, which is by and by added; which some translate Glory: others, Well doing: but I had rather expound it grace: by which word I vnderstand, whatsocuer gift is is whereby men purchase praise, and honour vnto them from others. Notwithstanding, the passiuē signification may haue place: as if the Prophet should say; Whatsocuer is excellent and worthy commendation among men, proceeds from the mere liberalitie of God. And in this sense, David calles the Lord, the God of his fauour: Psal. 59. 10. by whose grace hee had receiued so many benefits as he ioioid. It is also very certaine that all that which is praise worthe in men, is heere called by this word grace: and is by the Prophet condemned euery whit of vanitie: for there is a close opposition between the common gifts of nature, and the grace of regeneration.

Many expound this of the Assyrians, and refer it to them, as if Isaiab meant to discharge the hearts of the Iewes from all feare, by lessening, or indeed by taking cleane away the power, riches, wit, and subtile plots of their aduersaries. Thus they expound it then; If the force of your enemies feare you, remember they are but flesh, which by its own debilitie consumes it selfe away. But these mens errors shall be sufficiently couinced anon by the very scope of the text, where the Prophet applies his speech directly to the Iewes. Wee are diligently to obserue then, that whole man with all his faculties wherein he pleaseth himselfe, is heere compared to a flower.

All men are easilie perswaded of their mortalitie touching this life; and the prophane writers haue disputed that question at large: but there is much more difficultie to plucke vp that confidence which men conceiue through a false opinion of their owne wisdom: for they thinke they haue more sharpnesse of wit & industrie in them then others, and therefore also thinke they haue good occasio to glory in themselves aboue others.

But our Prophet shewes, that the rarest gift in man, fades and perisheth forthwith. Notwithstanding, he seemes to adde a kinde of correction by way of mockage, in speaking of the flower of the field: for there is more beautie in a flower, then in grasse. It is therefore a yeelding or granting: as if he should say; Though men haue some outward appearance of beautie, such as is in the flowers of the field, yet, all is but a flower: for the beautie and grace thereof wholly vanisheth away; so as their glorying and flattering of themselves in this vaine and deceitfull glittering shew, is to no purpose at all.

This may well be vnderstood of the beautie of the fields, which the violence of one gale of wind spoiles; as it is said in the hundred and third Psalme: for we know that the wind is called the spirit of God in other places. But I rather thinke the similitude is applied to the present purpose, because otherwise the application would be obscure. The Prophet then expounds his owne meaning when hee said, that men with all their glory were nothing but grasse, because the spirit of God will consume them in the top of their pride vnto one blast. Therefore this speech must be thus resolved; How soeuer it be true that men being indued with excellent parts of nature, may flourish; yet they shall know that all is but vanitie, vwhen the Spirit of God shall but blow vpon them. For in that they grow so befotend in their own ouerweenings, it is because they neuer set themselves in Gods presence, but digge themselves hiding places, that they may flatter themselves without checke or controle. To the end then that they might no more deceiue themselves with the sweete deccits of lying vanities, the Prophet summons them before Gods iudgement seat, and grants indeed that they flourish in appearance, as long as they keep themselves a great way off from the presence of Gods Maiestie; but let the Lord beginne once to blow vpon them, then all their beautie and strength shall forthwith vanish into smoke. He seemes to attribute an office to the Spirit of God, which is not very fitting vnto it: for it is his propertie to renew the face of the earth: as on the other side, if he withdraw himselfe neuer so little, all things fall to nothing: Psal. 104. And Isaiab affirms here the cleane contrarie. Some may thinke then, that one Prophet contradicts another. But there is no absurditie in it to say; that all things are renewed by the vertue of the holy Ghost. And againe, that the same Spirit should consume those things which seemed very glorious before. For we haue no being but in God; and to beginne to be something in him, we must first of all be conuincd of our vanitie, that we may the better acknowledge it. The Lord therefore blowes vpon vs, to teach vs that in our selues wee are nothing.

Now to the end all might know that the Prophet spake not of strangers, but of that people which gloried much in the name of God, he addes, that the people is grasse: for the Iewes thought themselves more worthy and excellent excellen: then any other nation, and therefore that they of all others ought to be separated from the common sort of men. Hee ſpeakes to them then properly and expreſſie, to the end they might attribute nothing vnto themſelues about others: as if he ſhould ſay, You ſhall ſhew your ſelues very diſcreet and wiſe, if in conſidering your owne povertie and baſenes, you ſhall reliee all vaine confidence. In a word, the Prophet hauing ſpoken of comfort in the firſt verſe, hee now ſhewes how men ought to be prepared to receiue it: but they are no way fit to receiue it, vnleſſe they be firſt brought to nothing. Our hardnes of heart then muſt be ſoftned, our high and proud conceits muſt be brought low, our glorie turned into ſhame of face, and our hearts tamed and humbled, if with fruit we will receiue the conſolations which the Prophets ſhall bring vs by the commandement of the Lord.

Verſ. 8. The graſſe withereth, the ſloue fadeth, but the word of our God ſhall ſtand for euer.

THis repetition is added once againe to bring all the glorie of proud fleſh vnto nothing: it alſo therewithall conteineth an excellent conſolation; to wit, that the Lord hauing humbled his ſeruants, forthwith giues them matter of ioy and gladnes. This is the order of the text then, The graſſe withers, but the word of the Lord endureth for euer. This only conſolation is ſufficient, namely, that the word of God is made the ground of our comfort: as if God himſelfe ſhould reach out his hand to liſt vs vp, after he hath manifested to vs how empty and deſtitute wee are of all good things, and how periſhable and tranſitorie our fleſh is. We then are fraile, and fading as the flower, but the word of the Lord is firme and eternall. To be ſhort, that liſe which is wanting in vs is offered vs elſewhere.

The whole ſumme of the Goſpell is heere comprehended in few words, for it conſiſts in the knowledge of our miſerie, pouertie, and vanitie, that being humbled in good earneſt, we might haue our reſcourſe vnto God, by whoſe only grace we ſhall be whollie reſtored. Let not ſuch then as are acquainted with their woſull condition by nature be therefore out of heart, for the word of the Lord is ſet before them, which is able to build them vp, and to giue them ſtrong conſolation.

Moreouer, wee are here taught to ſecke conſolation no where elſe but in eternitie, which is only to be found in God, and in none other: for there is no ſtabilitie in earth or earthlie things. What madnes is it then to place our happines in preſent things, which wee ſee conſume like ſmoke? He therefore much deceiues himſelfe which thinks he can meete with true felicitie, till he be come vnto God, who is therefore called the eternall, in holy Scriptures, becauſe we might know that liſe flows from him into vs: yea, he hath adopted vs for his children on this condition, that we may partake with him in his immortalitie.

But all this ſhall profit vs very little, vnleſſe

we be ſhewed the way how to attaine it: the word therefore comes betwene, from which we muſt not turne an haire breadth. For if we wander and ſtray from it, we ſhall be intangled in ſuch wonderfull laborynthis, that we ſhall neuer know how to get out.

Now he ſaith, the word endures for euer, not only in it ſelfe, but in vs alſo: which we ought diligentlie to obſerue, becauſe without this addition we ſhould neuer be able to attaine any ſound conſolation. And S. Peter, a faithful expoſitor of this place applies it vnto vs, in ſaying, that we are regenerated by this incorruptible ſeed: yea, by this word, which, ſaith he, is preached among you, 1. Pet. 1. 23. whence we gather, as I touched a little before, that liſe is prepared for the dead, which ſhall earneſtly draw neere to this fountaine ſet open vnto them: for that power which is hidden in God, is manifested vnto vs by this word.

Verſ. 9. O Zion that bringeſt good tidings, get thee vp into the high mountaine: O Ieruſalem, that bringeſt good tidings, liſt vp thy voice with ſtrength: liſt it vp, be not afraid: ſay vnto the Cities of Iudah, Behold your God.

HE goes on ſtill with the ſame argument. The Lord promiſed before that he would ſend Prophets which ſhould publiſh the promiſes to comfort this deſolate and forrowfull people: now he commands that this conſolation be ſpread further, becauſe he means that his grace ſhall be ſhed forth vpon the whole land of Iudeah. He gaue hope of theſe ioyfull tidings to Ieruſalem and Zion before: now his purpoſe is, that this voice ſhould ſound forth, and ring throughout all the reſt of the Cities, for which purpoſe he commands them to liſt up the voice, and to publiſh it in the high mountaine.

Now howſoeuer it be true that by the names of Zion and Ieruſalem, one and the ſame is to be vnderſtood, yet the repetition is diligentlie to be marked. For the meaning is, that this Citie was no way more excellent then the reſt, but in regard that God had choſen it about the reſt to be the ſeate of his Sanctuary. In the next place he ſaith that they publiſh good tidings, becauſe the Priests and Leuites were there ordeined and inſtructed according to the rules contained in the Law, that they might be fitted to be leaders of the people, and to publiſh the doctrine of ſaluation. In the meane while this title wherewith God adorneſ his Church is well to be obſerued, to the end ſhe may be knowne by ſome ſure and infallible marke. For that aſſembly is not to be held for the Church where the heauenlie doctrine of glad tidings is not founded forth and preached: and in this ſenſe the Apoſtle ſaith, that ſhe is the pillar and ground of truth, 1. Tim. 3. 15. For albeit God might gouerne vs well enough without the miniſtrie of man, yet he hath impoſed this charge vpon his Church, into whoſe hands he hath committed the inſeſtimable treaſure of his word, & for this cauſe ſhe is called hereafter, The mother of all the faithfull, Chap. 66. 10. 11. 12. Hence it followes, that nothing is more absurd and vniust, then to see dumb Idols to boast of the name of the Church, as they doe in the Papacie. We are also aduertised, that the Church is not taught of God, that she should keepe her knowledge to her selfe, but that she should proclaime that to others which she hath learned. Moreouer, she is inioined to publish this grace freely without any feare, that the Prophets might know they were not to speake timorouslie, as of a thing doubtfull, but as those that were well assured of that truth which they set forth, being fullie perswaded that God which was the author of it could not lie; but his will was, that the witnesses of his grace should come out of Zion, to replenish the whole land of Iudeah with gladnes.

When he addes, Behold your God; In this sentence he comprehends the summe of our happiines, which consists in enioying the only presence of our God, which brings with it the fulnes of all good things; but if we be deprived of it, no greater miserie can befall vs. For if we be estranged from God, all things must of necessitie turne to our ruine, though wee should inioy all the pleasures in the world. From this circumstance it is also to be noted, that nothing is more contrarie vnto faith, then to tie the doctrine which the Prophets publish, to the sight of our eies; for themselves must needs haue been mute, if they had not lifted their myndes farre aboue the world; neither durst they otherwise haue bin so bold and constant to draw on others with them, to hope for better things in the midst of despaire. Surely when the wicked haue their swindge, and that iniquitie hath gotten the ypper hand; when the poore Church trembles, and seemes of all other the most miserable, then is the time to lift vp our heads, and so much the more to fasten our eies vpon the promises, and to preach and publish his comfortable presence to such as will behold it by faith.

HEE enricheth this short and latter sentence with many words, because it needed some exposition: and he vseth the word behold againe, for the greater certentie, that hee might so much the more encourage the faithfull. He shewes more fully then, of how great vse the presence of God is vnto vs: and first he saith, he will come with power, which shall not be idle, but such as we shall feele to be effectuell. Some translate the word Lo, Of himselfe, which also word for word may be turned, He is mightie, or, reigning of himselfe. Now his meaning is, that God is strong enough, and needs no man to helpe him. The same is repeated vnder the words reward and worke: for it is vsuall among the Hebrewes to reapeate one and the same thing two waies. By reward, we must not vnderstand a recompence due by merit; but the righteousness of God, by which he protests he will recompence those which call vpon him in truth, and with vpright hearts: for those that are but meanly read in the Prophets language, know that the word Secar imports so much.

The summe is, that God will not come to make shewes onely, but will manifest his power, and make vs to feele it indeed.

And thus it would not bee amisse, if the word Effect, were put in stead of worke. Many expound this more wittily, and descent like children vpon vorke and reward, as if vorke were the merit to which reward must bee giuen: but the Prophet had no such meaning. In both words he repeats the same thing, as I haue said, and sets forth the fruit of the Lords coming, which the faithfull shall receiue to their exceeding benefit.

Verf. 11. Hee shall feede his flocke like a Shepheard: hee shall gather the lambs with his arme, and carrie them in his bosome; and shall guide them with young.

BY this verse he shewes what this vorke of the Lord is: for in as much as he workes diuersly, and infinite waies, the hearer might haue doubted with himselfe what God meant to doe. And thus the generall doctrine could not of it selfe haue been sufficient to haue raised vp their hope. Now howsoever hee stands not to reckon vp all the parts of Gods office, yet in these few words he signifies, that his determination was to vphold and keepe his Church. And therefore he compares him to a shepheard: by which word hee sets forth Gods infinite loue towards vs, in that hee vouchsafeth to stoop so low as to be our shepheard. The Prophet hath in other places, yea and in the former verse also, armed him with a terrible and inuincible power for the defence of his Church; which he will also repeat againe afterwards: but here he attributes to him a more gracious title, to the end the faithfull might sweetly repose themselves vnder his protection.

Moreouer, although by the word flocke, he meanes the elect people whom he had taken into his custodie, we are notwithstanding admonished, that hee will be no shepheard, but to such as with the modestie and weaknesse of sheepe and lambs, are content to follow him. The condition of a flocke therefore must be considered: for he will not feede wild beasts, but lambs. Let vs therefore cast off all stubbornnesse, and let vs suffer our selues to be meekened, if wee meane to be gathered into this fold, whereof God promiseth to be the shepheard.

He will beare them.] These words expresse the singular goodnesse of God, who ouer and besides the vehement loue which he beares to his flocke, hath respect to the weake and feeble sheepe; for then he shewes the care he hath in dealing gently with them, his humanity nitie in approaching neere vnto them, and his patience in bearing them in his arrows. Wherein we ſee, he omits no office that appertaines to a good ſheepheard, whoſe dutie is to haue his eye vpon all his ſheepe, that he may gouerne them according to their condition: and to comfort them; but eſpeciallie thoſe that are ſick and infirme. The ſumme is, That God will be gentle, louing, milde, & mercifull in gouerning his ſeruants; ſo as he will not require more of the weake then they are able to beare.

Verſ. 12. Who hath meſured the Waters in his fiſt? and counted the heauen with a ſpanne, and compr. hended the duſt of the earth in a meſure? and weighed the mountaines in a weight, and the hills in a ballance?

Having ſet forth Gods fatherly loue towards his little flock, now he ſets forth his power the ſecond time.

HAving finiſhed his ſpeech touching the fatherlie care that God hath for the defence of his people: now he comes to ſet forth his power; and magnifies it as farre forth as poſſible he can, which yet ſhal moue vs very little, vnleſſe we looke narrowlie into the Prophets meaning. An ignorant perſon at the fiſt bluſh would ſay that the Prophet hath heaped vp a many of broken ſentences without grace or arte: but if we haue regard to his ſcope and end, by an elegant ſpeech he adorneſ the power of God ſeaſonably, becauſe his power is the true and beſt ſtay for our faith to leane vpon, that thereby we may be aſſured he will performe his promiſe. It is not for nought the Apoſtle ſaith that Abraham doubted not, knowing that he which had promiſed, was alſo able to doo it, Rom. 4. 20. And in the ſame ſenſe he ſaith, 2. Tim. 1. 12. I know whom I haue believed; God is able to keepe that which I haue committed vnto him. To this belongs the ſaying of Chriſt, My father which gaue them me is greater then all, Ioh. 10. 29. Seeing then that we haue continually to wreſtle againſt diſtruſt, and that Satan is ready to circumuent vs by many fetches, wee muſt attribute to the power of God the praife that it deſerueth, to the end his promiſes may be receiued of vs with that aſſurance which is requiſite.

Now becauſe the reſtauration of the people was a thing incredible to fleſh and blood, it was needfull that the minds of the faithfull ſhould be raiſed vp farre aboute the world, leſt they ſhould tie the grace of God to humane helps. Wee ſee the Prophet not only teacheth that God is the Creator of heauen and earth: but whatſoeuer he recites touching his infinite power, it is applied to the matter in hand; which we alſo are to doe at this day. When any aduerſitie preſſeth vs, our ſaluation ſeemes to be hidden, Gods power is ouerſhadowed, as if a cloude were come betwene vs and it: we ſtand amazed, euen as if we were viterlic reiected and contemned of the Lord. Let vs not thinke then that this deſcription is ſome light matter: for if the perſuaſion of Gods power were well ſetled in our hearts, we ſhould neuer be ſo toſſed vp Gods power, the true ſtay and propof our faith.

The Prophet playes not the orator only in ſetting forth Gods power, but applies it to the preſent occaſion.

Abraham reſted vpon this power, as we haue ſaid, that he might with aſſurance embrace that which otherwiſe was incredible: and therefore S. Paul aſſirmes that he hoped, above hope, being reſolued that God was able to performe that which he had ſpoken, ſo as he neither ſtaggered, neither was he weak in the faith, Rom. 4. 18. 19. This teacheth vs to liſt vp our eyes aboute the hills, Pſal. 221. 1. and that wee iudge not of things according to the outward appearance; but that we may indeed aſſure our ſelues, that that which God hath ſaid ſhall ſurely come to paſſe, becauſe he hath all things in his owne power.

All of vs are reſt in this; but (as I told you) the Iewes had exceeding neede to be ſullie reſolued of it, for they were oppreſſed vnder very mightie tyrants: all hope of libertie was taken from them: in a word, they ſaw themſelues euery way compaſſed about, as in a great and hidious wildernes. This conſolation therefore had bin ſet before them in vaine, if by the Prophets admonition their minds had not bin raiſed vp to heauen, that ſo they might whollie reſt their hearts vpon the abſolute power of God, without looking to inferior things.

When he ſpeakes of meſures which men vſe in ſmall things, it is to applie himſelfe to our weaknes: for the Lord liſps with vs thus ordinarily, taking ſimilitudes from things vſuall amongſt vs, when he is to ſpeake of his owne Maieſtic, that ſo thoſe of ſhallow and feeble capacities might the better comprehend his greatnes and excellencie. Wee are therefore to reiect all carnall imaginations of God, becauſe his greatnes ſurpaſſeth all creatures: for the heauen, the earth, the ſea, and all that in them is with their vnmeaſurablenes, are yet all of them nothing in compariſon of him.

God is ſaine to liſp as it were vnto vs, otherwiſe we were not able to comprehend his incomprehenſible greatnes.

Verſ. 13. Who hath inſtricted the Spirit of the Lord? or was his Counſellor, or taught him?

14. Of whom tooke he counſell, and who inſtricted him, and taught him in the way of iudgement? or taught him knowledge, and ſhewed vnto him the way of vnderſtanding?

THE Prophet now deſcends to ſpeake that of Gods wiſedome, which in the former verſes he taught concerning his power and goodnes. This golden chaine is to be noted: for as carnall reaſon doth peruerſlie reſtraine the power of God to outward helps, ſo doth it without reaſon ſubiect the incomprehenſible counſell of God to humane imaginations: and thus many things will preſent themſelues to hinder the courſe of Gods works, till he himſelfe be exalted farre aboute all creatures. If our reaſon may be iudge, then there will be no end of doubtings. For as oft as it conceiues not how the Lord works this

Where reaſon is iudge, there will be no end of doubtinge.

er that, wee will call into question the truth of his promises; because whatsoever surmounts our reason, will forthwith seeme an impossible thing vnto vs. Thus then, as we are to oppose Gods power to our vvakenessse, so are wee to preferre his incomparable vvisdome, before our presumption and boldnessse.

Wee must oppose Gods power to our weaknesse, and his wisdom to our presumption.

In asking whether any hath instructed or directed the Spirit of God, it is to shew that he needes no teacher to goe before him, or to counsell him in vnkowne things. The Spirit is heere taken for reason, iudgement, or vnderstanding: for he borrowes the similitude from the nature of men, the better to apply himselfe to our capacities. For, as I thinke, he speaks not heere of the essentiall spirit of God. Now the Prophet sets forth one and the same thing diuers waies, to teach vs that man is more beastly then the very brute beasts, when hee dares aspire to heauen, to search and vveigh the workes of God in the vnequall ballance of his reason: Isaiah meant then more and more to beat downe the headinesse and ouerweening of men. S. Paul alleadgeth this place to the same end, that he might stop our mouthes in asking curious questions touching the incomprehensible counsels of God, who wil not haue them searched into, further then with such sobrietie as is meete for so high mysteries. Onely there is this difference betweene Paul & Isaiah the Apostle saith, that the mysterie of the Gospell cannot bee comprehended by mans naturall vnderstanding: and the Prophet in generall magnifies the prouidence of God. And yet wee must inquire and search into both these points with humilitie, and captiuate our whole reason vnder a right obedience: for all our wit and vnderstanding is nothing but darknes, till Christ hath inlightened vs by his Spirit.

One thing set forth diuers waies.

Rom. II. 34.

That which Isaiah speaks in generall, the Apostle applies to a particular,

Verf. 15. Behold, the nations are as a drop of a bucket, and are counted as the dust of the ballance: behold, hee taketh away the Isles as a little dust.

If wee meane to vnderstand our Prophets meaning aright, and to reade with profit that which hee hath here written, wee must learne to finde out his drift, as I haue touched before. For he extols not Gods greatness thus at random, but sets it forth with all his skill, according as the circumstance of the matter which hee now is in hand with requires: to let the Israelites know, that this buckler is sufficient to couer them, and that they were not to feare the indeuors, rage, nor violence of the world, prouided that God shew them his fauour: and that thus they were to learne to yeeld themselues vnder his sauegard. For if they had not bin well grounded in this point, they should haue met with infinit occasions which would haue driuen them out of heart every minute of an houre. The Prophet therefore goes on with the same argument still, and telles the Iewes, that if the nations and peoples be compared vwith God, they are as nothing: for with his onely blast he will scatter all the inhabitants of the earth, as if they were but a little picke of dust. For in regard we are too much inclined, and foolishly wittie in seeking pretences to strengthen our owne infidelitie, wee imagin that whatsoever Satan conspires to hinder our saluatio, shuts vp all passage against God. The Prophet minding to correct this vice shewes, that all creatures are nothing before him, and that all nations when they stand on an heape, are but as the small droppet of a bucket in his presence. Whence we learne, that it is a grosse sortishnesse in vs so to prefer the creature, that wee abase the power of the Creatour, who ought to bee held as supreme ouer and aboue all things; as indeede hee is.

Lebanon: that is to say; if we should offer a burnt offering vnto God, according as hee deserues; neither Lebanon nor all the beasts that feed in it, would suffice for the sacrifice. He repeats & imprints in their minds this power of God still after diuers maners, that the people who were to trust in it, should not respect creatures, nor any thing they were able to doe with all their forces. Notwithstanding it seemes the Prophet speaks expressly of Gods worship, that he might bring the readers to haue it in the greater reuerence: as if hee should say; Darest thou measure the power of God vwith in the narrow scanning of thy reason? Why shou canst not serue him as thou oughtest, though thou shouldst lay all the vwood and beasts of Lebanon as once vpon his altar. Some gather hence that none can procure Gods fauour by offering sacrifices: which is very true; but we must haue an eye to the Prophets meaning, as I haue already said; who to hearten on the Iewes, to the greater confidence, shewes that all things are nothing, being compared vwith God.

Verf. 17. All nations before him are as nothing; and they are counted to him lesse then nothing.

This is a repetition of that which he hath said before; to wit, that God can destroy all nations as soone as it pleaseth him: and that they are counted as nothing before him euen in their best estate. But it may seeme strange that he saith, All nations are nothing. Were they not all created of God, that they might be esteemed something? I answer, that is spoken Anf. by comparison. For such is the puerilitie of our vnderstanding, that it darkens Gods glorie and Maiestie, and sets those things about it which should be set farre beneath. When we are to enter into this combat then, whether God or the creature should haue the preeminence, let vs boldly pronounce, Thas that vwhich is compared vwith God, is nothing. The Prophet speaks not simply of the nature ture of man as it is created of God: but his purpose is to beate downe and to bring to nothing all their presumption and pride, when they dare set themselves above him. Wee know it is vnpossible to subsist, or be without God, for in him only we lue, moue, and haue our being, as it is said, Act. 17. 28. notwithstanding that which Dauid saith is also as true, to wit, that nothing is so vaine a thing as man: who if he be weighed in a balance, will be found lighter then vaine it self, Psal. 62. And in this sort our Prophet ſewes that all nations are as nothing, yea, lesse then nothing: that he might the better noce out both their vanitie, and indecillitic.

How to read this prophesy with fruit.

Obiect.

Verſ. 18. To whom then will ye liken God? Or what ſimilitude will ye ſet vp vnto him?

The Iewes were in great danger of falling from God in regard of another temptation: for it is certaine that the Aſſyrians and Caldeans obtained not so many victories without the assistance of other nations: thence the Iewes might conclude; What auails it vs to haue a seruice of God apart from other nations, seeing our enemies in fighting haue victorie from heauen; and our God in the meane while succors not vs at all? Neither is it to be doubted but the infidels also mocked these poore captiues, as it appears by other places.

That this calamitie then might not cause the Iewes to forget the true religion; God riseth vp and saith, that a greater wrong can not be done vnto him, then if the faithfull being wrong by afflictions, should therefore conforme themselves to the idolatries and superstitions of the Gentiles. Thus then he confirms them in the truth of his promises, lest they should faint vnder the burthens which they were to susteine.

But the Prophet speaks not to the men of his time only, as we haue said, but to all their successors who were to vndergoe sharp assaults against the Idols of prophane nations, vnder whom they were held captiues. And in the second place they had enough to doe to shunne the euill examples and customes of those nations: for it was exceeding difficult for them to continue constant being mingled among Idolaters, and dayly beholding their coriupt manners. To the end therefore that they might not be tainted with any vain conceit, to wit, that the affaires of the Idolaters prospered well, in regard of the honour which they did to their Idols and false gods; the Prophet, I say, preuents such an offence, and saith, that they were in no wise to compare the gods of the Gentiles vwith the God vvhom they and their fathers vsorſhipped: for those gods were made with mens hands; the matter of them being but gold, silver, wood, stone, or such like: but their God was the Creator of heauen and earth. Great must the outrage be therefore against his Maieſtie, when the same shall be compared with things of nothing; yea, it is a dishonor in the highest degree if he be not exalted farre above the Angels, or whatsoever is called God.

When S. Paul vseth this testimonie against Idolaters, he peruerſts not the true ſenſe of the Prophets words; but from thence hee rightlly gathereth, that it is a wicked thing to represent God by any ſimilitude at all. And our Prophet not only diſſwades the Iewes here from diſtruſt, but alſo therewithall condemnes the ſuperſtitious of the Gentiles; ſhewing it to be a thing quite repugnant to the nature of God to be represented by any grauen Image. And thus we ſee the Apoſtles doctrine ſutes well with this place: for the Prophet hauing proued that Gods power is infinite, ſeeing he is able to comprehend all things in his ſiſt, verſ. 12. at laſt he concludes, To vvhom vvhil ye liken me? Make what Image you will, it ſhall be nothing like me. This is a very profitable doctrine, and well worthie our obſeruation: for were there but this one text, it were enough to reſute all the inuentions wherewith the Papists are miſſed, who permit it as lawfull to represent God by outward ſhapes and figures. The Prophet holds it as a reſolued truth, that it is vnpossible to make an Image of corruptible matter, that should any way be able to match with the glorie of God: he vtterlie reiects the Idols themselves: so farre is he off then from speaking of adoring them, that he counts it euen an execrable and horrible ſacrilege so much as to frame or caue them, and to set them vp before God.

But the holy Scripture is full of such sentences. Moses aduertiseth the people who were inclined to this vice, You ſaw no ſimilitude nor ſhape (saith he) in the mountaine, only you heard a voice, take heed therefore lest being corrupted, you should make you any grauen Image, Deut. 4. 12. 15. Will we haue a right knowledge of God then? Let vs not frame him after our fantaſies, but ſeeke him out in his word, where we ſhall find his Image represented vnto vs in moſt liuely colours. Let vs content our ſelues with this knowledge, and neuer enterpriſe any thing of our owne heads, for other meanes, as Idols, and Images, will neuer teach vs the truth, but vannie & lies, as Jeremiah very well ſaith, Chap. 10. 8. The ſtock is but a doctrine of vannie: And Abacuc, Chap. 2. 18. The grauen Image is a thing teaching lies. Now whereas the Lord ſometimes compares himſelfe to a Lyon, to a Beare, a man, or the like, this is nothing to prouoe the lawfull vſe of Images as the Papists dreame: but ſuch ſimilitudes ſerue to ſet forth the goodnes, lenitie, anger, or ſeueritie of God, with other aſſections attributed vnto him; which can not be maniſeſted vnto vs but vnder ſimilitudes of things familiarly knowne. To conclude, if it were lawfull to represent God by an Image, we should then put no difference between him and the dung-hill gods of the Gentiles, and so the Prophets doctrine could not stand firme.

Verſ. 19. The workeman melteth an image, or the goldsmith beateh it out in gold, or the goldsmith maketh silver plates.

Gods image is most liuely represented vnto vs in his wor.

Images and Idols, teachers of lies.

A dreame of the Papists reſuted.

20. Doth not the poore chuse out a tree that will not rot for an oblation? Hee seeketh also unto him a cunning workman, to prepare an image that shall not be moued.

Because publike consent in things is of great force, and that it is by and by received for a law, if a thing once please the multitude, the Prophet heere fortifies the faithfull against such an error. Here is therefore an occupation or preuention, as they call it; to wit, the Iewes were to take heed how they stood amazed, in seeing idolaters so carefull in their strife, who should haue the gaudiest gods; for if they did so, they were in danger to bee seduced by them. But therewithall he riseth vp in an holy indignation against the desperate follie of men, who fo boile in their superstitious imaginations, that euery one will haue an idoll fit to please his owne humor. He also shewes that no state or condition of men are free from this impietie, but that the poore are as well guiltie thereof as the rich: for the rich, they make them gods of gold and silver: the poore, of such a tree as likes him best. And thus he shewes that all sorts are carried away with an intollerable furie in desiring and seeking out some excellent thing for the seruice of their gods, though the meanes to doe it withall faile them. Men will haue gods forsooth that they may looke vpon, and handle. Loe here the originall and fountain from whence idolatrie hath sprung. For God is not neere vs in a puppet, but by his word, and by the power of his holy Spirit. And howfoeuer in his Sacraments, he represents vnto vs liuely images of his grace and spirituall benefits, yet his onely drift therein is, to lift vp our mindes by them to himselfe. But our Prophet in the meane while derides the follie of these blinde idolaters, who care not what cost or paines they bestow or take, so they may furnish out trim and goodly idols.

All are gone out of the way, all are corrupt: Psal. 14. 3.

The beginning of idolatry.

Verf. 21. Know yee nothing? Haue yee not heard it? Hath it not bene told you from the beginning? Haue yee not understood it by the foundations of the earth?

Having scorned the beastly sottishnesse of the Gentiles, hee now turns againe to the Iewes: for being all of vs by nature inclined too much to superstitious vanities; so we also easilie fall, if any example be set before vs. The Iewes being captues and mingled amongst the Babylonians, were constrained to looke vpon horrible & damnable idolatries, which might soone draw them to a wicked imitation: Isaiah therefore as a good Prophet of God, speedilie prevents them, and warnes them that they bee no whit moued with such spectacles. He askes if they haue not bin taught and instructed concerning the true God. Manie expositors thinke that this is but one repetition; to wit, it appears by the creation of the world, that there is not so much as anie appearance of seeking God in wood, stone, gold, or silver: but wee may gather from the scope of the text, that these are two distinct members. For if he continued still to reprove the Gentiles, hee would then bring no other testimonies but heauen and earth against them: but speaking to the Iewes, who were familiarly acquainted with the law of God; for their reproofe hee vseth testimonies taken both from the order of nature, and from the word.

First, he askes in general, if they knew nothing. Secondly, he propounds the meanes by which they ought to discern the true God from the false. The first is from hearing the word; and therefore he saith expressly, Haue ye not heard? Hath it not been told you from the beginning? The last is from this faire theater of the world, where Gods glory shines round about and beneath vs. He would haue contented himselfe with this second demonstration, if he had had to deale with the profane Gentiles; as Saint Paul also doth Act. 14. 17. For speaking to them of Iconia, who had neuer heard word of the heauenly doctrine, he vseth arguments taken from the order of nature. How? That God left not himselfe without witness, by giuing raine and fruitful seasons. But our Prophet, who speaks of that true religion which was among the Iewes, could not omit the mentioning of the law, which was to make them double inexcusable, if they should forsake or despise it, to prophane themselves among infidels. For they were conuined not onely by the sights of their eyes, but also by the hearing of their eares: which were continually beaten vpon by God, in the preaching of his law amongst them. Seeing then that from their mothers breasts they had (with their mothers milke) been nurced vp with the milke of the true knowledge of God, and were instructed by their fathers, by continual succession, the Prophet telles them that they shall shew themselves too peruerse and vnthankfull, if such an helpe shall nothing profit them.

For that which he saith of the beginning, or long agoe, is to the same purpose; namely, that from their cradles they had been nurced vp in Gods true worship: and besides, in ages succeeding they had such continual teaching, as would not suffer the to erre; only if they did but remember what they had heard. As if he should haue said; You haue no new God, but the very same who manifested himselfe from the beginning to Abraham, Moses, and the rest of the Patriarks.

And here we haue an excellent confirmation touching the antiquitie of that doctrine which hath continued so many ages among the faithfull: not that antiquitie is sufficient of it selfe to giue faith & assurance (for so the Gentiles might reply that their superstitions were no lesse ancient) but in respect that fro the beginning, the authoritie of the law hath been abundantly confirmed, and that God hath testified that himselfe is the author of it: for this cause, I say, it gets great confirmation vnto it by long vse, in that the successors knew that their ancestors gaue them ſuch a forme of religion, which they could not reiect without a manifeſt brand of apoſtaſie. By ſuch an order and progreſſe then, all diſcultie is taken away. Now we at this day haue the ſame faith with theſe good teachers, becauſe with vs they acknowledged one God, the Father of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt : for the faithfull haue all one word and promiſe, tending all to one and the ſame end.

to be obſerued of vs; for otherwiſe it were but a bare ſpeculation to know that God did once create the world, velleſſe wee alſo knew that his hand were alwaies ſtretched out to maintaine and gouerne the ſame in the fiſt eſtate. Which the Prophet expreſſeth in this word ſiteth: as if he ſhould ſay, The earth continues not ſtable and firme in her place, but as it is ſtayed & upheld by the power of God : for ſiſing, by a figure, ſignifies as much as rule or government.

Where he addes, from the foundations of the earth; it is ſpoken by a figure, where a part is taken for the whole: for a part of the world is here taken for the whole. God hath ſet this world before men as a looking-glaſſe, that by viewing of it, they might come to the knowledge of his Maieſtie, and that it might be an image of things inuiſible, as Saint Paul ſaith more fully, Rom. 1. 20. Their ignorance then is inexcusable; for they neede not complaine touching the want of meanes, whereby they may come to the knowledge of God, ſeeing he is ready ſo many waies to manifeſt himſelfe vnto them. And to ſay the truth, men ſinne more of obſtinacie and pride, then of ignorance: for they willingly deſpiſe God, ſpeaking thus diſtinctly, that they might ſlay themſelues in creatures, and in vaine things. Can ſuch a contempt deſerue to be excuſed? No, for thoſe who worſhip their owne inuention in ſtead of God, (of which all almoſt are guilty) are they not welworthy to be blinded? Truly ſuch, and ſo juſt a puniſhment is worthily to be inflicted, where there is ſo great headſtrongneſſe. But if the doctrine of Gods word be joined to this knowledge which we haue by the creatures, we ſhall be much leſſe excuſable. Thus then Iſaiah mentions both knowledges, to ſhew that the Iewes ſhall be worthy of double condemnation, if they ſtand not faſt in the faith, being thus informed and aſſured of the power and goodneſſe of God.

In that he compares the inhabitants of the earth to graffſhoopers; it is to ſhew that God is not incloſed within theſe narrow roomes, ſeeing neither heauen, nor the heauen of heauens are able to containe him; that ſo we might learne (whē God is ſpoken of in the Scriptures) not to imagin any earthly or carnall thing of him touching his incomprehenſible glory. Moreouer, by this ſimilitude we are taught how blind & iottiſh thoſe are, which attribute any thing to themſelues; for they ſhall get as much by their brags, as if ſome little vermin, ſuch as the graffſhoopers be, would riſe vp againſt the cloudes in fetching their friſks: but you know they are forced to fall downe by and by to the earth.

Thoſe that haue a double meanes of knowledge, are doubly inexcusable if they linne againſt it.

He ſpreads out the heauen as a curtaine.] Danid vſeth the ſame kind of ſpeech, Pſal. 124. Iſaiah and Danid ſpeake both touching the aſpect and ſpreading out of the heauens, in regard of our ſight: for it is not their meaning that God ſpreads them out for himſelfe to inhabit there, but rather that we might haue roome enough to dwell vnderneath. For as the earth beares vs vp, ſo the heauens do couer vs; and thus wee haue a manſion or dwelling houſe made vs in this world cloſe and covered. But theſe ſimilitudes may ſeeme much to leſſen the dignitie of the matter whereof the Prophet intreateth, albeit his meaning is cleerly to ſet it forth in the liuelieſt colours hee can deuife: for what is a curtaine? What is a tent? What great matters are theſe? I anſwere; Anſ.

God hath ordained the earth to beare vs, and the heauens to couer vs. Obiect.

Verſ. 22. Hee ſitteth upon the circle of the earth, and the inhabitants thereof are as graſſhoopers: hee ſtretcheth out the heauens as a curtaine, and ſpreadeth them out as a tent to dwell in.

theſe ſimilitudes are exceeding fit to amplify the matter: for it is as much as if he had ſaid, God ſpreads out the heauens with as much eaſe as a man draws a curtaine. He alſo leaues it to euery mans conſideration, how much difference there is betweene the heauens and a curtaine, and what their greatneſſe is; which all may perceiue. Laſtly, there is an oppoſition betweene the houſes that men build with much toyle and continuall coſt, (and yet it is much if they can raiſe a frame of an hundred foote high;) and this infinite height of the heauens, ſo ſpread by the onely word of God. Which ſhewes cleerly, how excellent and ſkillfull a workman he is.

Which he began in verſ. 10, 11, 21.

The reaſon why the Prophet vſeth ſo many repetitions to one purpoſe. From the doctrine of the creation of the world, the Prophet deſcends

He continues on his former argument, but after another manner; and ſets out the magnificence and power of God. Wee haue told you heretofore why hee ſpeakes thus; to wit, becauſe we are too much inclined to diſtruſt: ſo as the leaſt occaſion in the world will make vs ſtumble and be offended. For which reſpect, the Prophet is conſtrained to repeat one thing often, that he might keepe in firme and weak hearts in the confidence of Gods promiſes. Before, he handled the doctrine of the creation of the world, but now he comes to the perpetuall government of it: for God contented not himſelfe to manifeſt his power once onely in the creation of the world, but continues ſtill to ſhew it with as great efficacy in the vpholding and conſeruation of his worke. Thus is well

Verſ. 23. Hee bringeth the Princes to nothing, and maketh the Iudges of the earth as vanitie.

Still hee continues to extoll Gods prouidence, by which hee gouernes the whole world, but eſpecially mankind. In the ſomner verſe hee began to touch this doctrine; to wit, that God hath not created the world to leauē it at sixe and seuen, as we say, but hold his soueraignie and dominion ouer it; meaning still to retaine the keeping and surreiuing of it in his owne hands. But because it pleased him to shew himselfe more familiarly to men, the Prophet hath chosen this particular, that he might therein set forth and praise his prouidence. The summe is, that Gods dominion extends it selfe farre and wide, so as he gouernes all things in heauen and earth according to his good pleasure: but therewithall he teacheth (which was a point worthe of note) that in his gouernment of man-kind one may manifestlie perceiue notable marks of his power and prouidence. Now he contents not himselfe to note it in generall termes, but picks out one particular instance which might the better awaken our drouzie minds. All things that befall the common multitude are soone forgotten, and is quickly out of minde as matters vnworthe the talking of: but whē Kingdomes and Monarchies wherein men are aduanced to great dignities come once to fall, then it seemes the very earth is shaken with it. The Prophet therefore stirres vp our attention very sily by such documētis. Surely a man would thinke that Princes and Magistrates are separated from the common condition of men, and exempt from the ordinarie calamities which befall others, because by their glorie they seeme to dazell the eyes and minds of euery one that beholds them: but they themselues for the most part are vterlic blind, and therefore our Prophet especially aimes at them, saying, That the Lord brings them to nothing. Hath the Lord so great force against the mightie Princes of the earth? What shall become of the baser sort? Can he not, trow ye, deale well enough with them, and handle them as he list? Can he not giue, and take away strength, and the greatness of mens spirits when he will?

Vers. 24. As though they were not planted, as though they were not sowne, as though their stock tooke no roote in the earth: for he did euen blow vpon them and they withered, and the whirlewinde will take them away as stubble.

Though the particle Al signifies Also, yet I haue translated, As though, because it agrees best to this present verse, and so the plaine meaning will be, They shall confesse themselues to be in as poore a condition, as if they had neuer bin planted nor sowne. This is an amplification of the former doctrine: for in this verse he shewes, that euen Princes shall be so whollie plucked vp and rooted out, that not one glimpse of their glorie shall euer be discerned; euen as if it had neuer bin at all. Whilest they are in honor, Psal. 49. a man would thinke them to be so fast rooted that the blasts of aduersitie were neuer able to remoue them: but sudden changes fall out in a moment which blot out their name and renoume, so as men shall say, Were there euer any such? And this comes to passe not in mens persons only, but also to flourishing and stately kingdomes.

Seeing then such great alterations are signes of Gods terrible power, let vs beware how wee chuse our selues such tickling leaning stocks, which haue only a vaine appearance of help in them, but let vs solely and only rest vpon the power of the Almighty, what strength, honor, or riches soeuer wee enjoy. For the Lord plays not at tennis with the world, in banding of such great ones, as one taking delight therein, as some prophane dogs blasphemē: but the higher any man is aduanced, commonlie the bigger he swels in pride, and neuer leaues swelling till he burst himselfe in pieces, that so the iust iudgements of God may be alwaies manifest to all. By this we are also admonished, that it is ill done to attribute the euent of things to fortune, or to second causes: for God became not the Creator of the world, forthwith to leaue his worke, as a carpenter doth his ship, but his hand continallie labours, so as not an haire of our heads can fall to the ground without his good pleasure. When so many changes fall out therefore in the world, and that we see things which in our iudgements would stand for euer, to fall & consume as the smoke; let vs turne our eyes towards this soueraigne prouidence and power of God.

As soone as he blew vpon it.] In these words the Prophet shewes of what short and momentanie continuance those things be which are wont to dazle our eyes, and make vs at a stand. For wee no sooner thinke of a great King, but our hearts quake within vs, and we are moued at it: but he shewes, that Princes and kings are but as stubble before God, whose only blast will carrie them away like a whirlewinde, whither soeuer it pleaseth him. What is our lesson then? We must not stand gazing vpon the creature, be he what he will, that the same should hinder vs from giuing that glorie and honour vnto God which to him appertaines. This the Iewes were diligentlie to note: for it is like enough they would haue thought this great Monarchie of the Caldeans, vnder whom they were held captiues, should neuer haue bin dissolved, nor that themselues should euer haue been deliuered, vnlesse this doctrine had come between: to wit, That there is nothing so firme and stable in the world, which God can not scatter and bring to nothing with his only blast: that they might hold fast the hope of their deliuerance therefore, the Prophet aduertiseth them that as soone as God shall but thunder from heauen, he will breake and crush in pieces all the terrible forces and power of their enemies.

Vers. 25. To whom now will you liken me, that I should be like him, saith the holy one?

This is a repetition of the former sentence, where it was said, that God would not indure to be matcht with Idols, vers. 18, 19, 20. lest the Iewes should diminish any thing of his his power; notwithstanding they were ſo long retained captiues in the hands of Infidels. For they were to beware how they attributed any power to Idols, becauſe the idolaters (who kept them in bondage) profpered: for by ſuch diſputings, comparing the power of the true God with idols, they were in danger to haue mingled them together. This is the cauſe why in indignation he repeats the ſame thing againe; To whom will ye liken me? As if hee ſhould ſay; Dare you venture to take my glory from mee by your comparifons? For howſoeuer men frame diuers imaginations to themſelues, thinking to transforme God into what ſhape they liſt: yet remains he one and the ſame ſtill, and his nature is changed neuer the more by their inuentions.

He brings in the claufe holy one, to verie good purpoſe, putting it in ſtead of Gods name. For therein he prouide taxeth the lewes of ſhamefull ingratitude, if they ſanctiſie him not in their hearts: Chap. 8. 13. ſeeing he hath ſeparated them from others. For there is no hulneſſe to be found in the idols of the Gentiles, being but the workes of mens hands. God then is too much wronged and abaſed, when idols are oppoſed to him, and that men beginne to call it into queſtion, whether of them hath the greater power.

Verſ. 26. Lift vp your eyes on high, and behold who hath created theſe things, and bringeth out their armies by number, and calleth them all by their names: by the greatnes of his power and mighty ſtrength nothing ſaileth.

For, none
ſhall fail.

IT ſeemes the Prophet ſtands too long vpon this point, ſeeing there is none will denie it. For he repeats one thing often, (which none doubts of) but muſt needs be conſtrained to confeſſe the admirable power and wiſdome of God in the comely order of nature. But wee muſt obſerue what hath been ſaid heretofore. Wee in our ſelues are ſo vntoward, and doe value Gods power at ſo low a rate, that we ſometimes afford him not the honour which we will giue to a mortall man: yea, the appearance of a ſillie worme of the earth, puts vs ſometimes into ſo great murthering and feare, that all the promiſes of the Almighty in the holy Bible, can ſcarſely comfort vs. For this cauſe the Prophet hath iuſt cauſe to repeat it ſo often, that God is deſtroyed of his honour, if his power rauith vs not ſo as to admire it. Thus he makes no idle repetitions you ſee, becauſe wee are ſo dull and ſlow of hearing, that we haue need to be awakened and pricked at euery turning with the ſpur. Men daily behold the heauens and the ſtarrs, but where is hee that thinks ſeriously of the author of theſe things?

Wee ſee the ſhape of man ſo artiſtically formed by God, that he was put into this world to behold the heauens, that hee might acknowledge the Lord of them: for God hath bowed downe the faces of beaſts towards the earth, and hath made man to goe vpright; to ſtirie him vp to view the place of his abode. And this was well deſcribed by a prophane Poet, who ſaith:

Although euery creeping thing bends his face chiefly towards the earth, yet to man God hath giuen a face to looke vponwards, and hath created him to behold the excellencie of the heauens, and to liſt vp his eyes to the ſtarrs.

Thus then the Prophet ſets forth mans malignitie, who will acknowledge nothing of God, though it be painted out before his eyes, but had rather haue their ſnowt grubbing in the earth like Moles: for the maieſtie of God muſt needs touch vs neere, if wee looke wiſhly vpon the heauens. In naming of the ſtarrs, he expreſſeth more plainly, that the wonderfull order which ſhines in the heauens, doth as it were preach with a lowd voice, that there is but one God and Creator of the world; which all ſuch muſt be conſtrained to acknowledge, as amidſt ſo great numbers and diuerſities of ſtarrs, ſhall obſerue their diſtinct order and comely marchings. For the ſtarrs were not thus ſet euery one in his place at haphazard; neither is it at random that they march ſo ſwiftly in ſuch proportion, ſetching ſo great compaſſes, and yet walking as by a direct line; ſo as they turne not an haire breadth from that path which God hath limited out vnto them. Thus their wonderfull diſpoſition ſhewes, that God is the author and framer of them. Can a man then open his eyes, but he ſhall be forced to behold the maieſtie of God, in the works which his hands haue wrought?

He bringeth out their armies by number.] Vnder the word armie, he comprehends two things. Firſt, a number in a maner infinite: ſecondly, the excellent diſpoſing of them. For a ſmall number of men will not make an armie, unleſſe there be many bands. Moreouer, we call not a troope of men gathered diſorderly together, an armie; but that where there are Lieutenants, Sergants of the band, Captaines, Colonels, and other leaders, who are to bring their ſouldiers in a right aray. Thus then the infinite numbers, order, and certaine courſes and marchings of the ſtarrs, doe very well deſerue this name of an armie.

By the word number, hee ſignifies that God hath this armie alwaies at a beck. Souldiers you know loue to be wandring this way and that way, and the Captaine cannot eaſily get them by and by together, though hee cauſe the trumpet to be ſounded; neither can hee forthwith put them in aray being aſſembled. But it is far otherwiſe with God, hee hath alwaies his ſouldiers at a beck, yea by number: that is to ſay, he knows the tale of them, ſo as none abſents himſelfe.

He calles them all by their names.] This ſentence is in ſo many wordes contained in Pſal. 147. Some expound it as if God knewes the number of the ſtarrs, which to vs is vnkowne: but Dauid and Iſaiah both meant another thing; to wit, that God makes the ſtarrs to ſerue his turne at his pleaſure, as if one should call his seruant by his name to set him about some businesse: and in the same sense it will be said hereafter, Chap. 45. 1. that the Lord called Cyrus by name. because he vsed him as his seruant to set his people at libertie. In a word, by this hee notes a great readinesse and obedience, when he which is called by his name, answers to it by and by.

Those who expound the member before going; to wit, that God knows the number of the stars, saile also in this, that they thinke by the word greatnesse, hee hath giuen them names signifying their power & office. Others expound it; that there is no starre which hath not his proprietie and efficacy; because the Lord hath giuen it them for ener. Others iointe these words with the verbe shall call: as if the Prophet should say; The Lord is so mighty, that all the starres vnderstand what he commands them. But as I take it, this sense agrees best; to wit, that God is so powerfull and mighty, that hee no sooner commands anie thing, but all the armies of heauen are pressed to obey him: wherein we haue a singular testimonie of his greatnesse, when so excellent creatures doe without difficultie subiect themselves vnto him; and in receiuing his commandments, witness that they acknowledge him for their Lord and Creator.

The word none, is by the Hebrewes applied not onely to men and women, but to other creatures; yea to those that are without reason: as heretofore in Chap. 34. 16. speaking of the birds which should inhabit stately houses, he saith, that none of these shall faile: and the word Isch, which is there, the Prophet puts heere. This place sets before vs the power of God, and teacheth vs that there is no creature in heauen nor in earth, but it depends vpon his will and good pleasure. What is more absurd or vnreasonable therefore, then to compare him with idols, which are vainer then vanitie it selfe?

Verf. 27. Why saiest thou, O Iacob, and speakest thou O Israel. My way is hid from the Lord, and my iudgement is passed ouer of my God.

Now Isaiah complaines of the Iewes, who being in a manner brought to the last cast, turned their cies away from Gods promises, which were the meanes of their comfort. Or if you will haue it so, he takes order for the time to come, lest they should quaike vnder so many and so tedious afflictions as should befall them. The words are in the future tence, which may be resolued into the subiunctiue; Wherefore shouldst thou say? From the former sentence he well inferres, that whatsoever should happen, the faithfull and elect people were to wait patiently vpon the Lord, till he in due season should relieue them. Now he reasons from the lesse to the greater; that seeing God alwaies holds his soveraigntie ouer all the parts of the world, it is vnpossible that he should euer for sake his Church. Notwithstanding, it is very likely that the people in that time made many com- plaints, and murmured against God, as if hee had been carelesse of their saluation; or as if he came not soone enough to succour them; or else that hee shut his cies, as one that refused to behold them in their aduersities. This vice he now goes about to correct; for they thought the Lord had cast them off: and so in afflictions we are also ready to thinke; for we imagin that he hath reiected and giuen vs vp for a pray, because he lets things in the world goe at six and seuen.

Iacob and Israel. By these names the Prophet puts them in mind of the Lords covenant, confirmed vnto them by so many promises. As if he should say; Thinkest thou, thou art not that people whom God hath chosen to himselfe? Wherefore shouldst thou imagin that hee which cannot deceiue, should contemne thy arguments or reasons? For the word vray, is taken for their estate or reasons; and hid, is taken for contemned or vnknowne: because if God withhold his help but a little, wee straight way thinke that his prouidence reacheth not vnto vs. Some expound it otherwise; to wit, that the people are heere reproofed, because they thought to sinne without punishment: and so they will haue this sentence, like to that in Psal. 14. 1. The foole hath said in his heart there is no God. But questionlesse this was the Prophets meaning; Thinkest thou O Israel that God thinks not of thine affaires? For hee contests against the peoples infidelitie, and rebukes them sharply, that hee might afterward raise them vp to hope and comfort; shewing that it is vnpossible for the Lord not to regard and helpe those whom hee hath once taken into his tuition and sauegard.

The word iudgement, which is by and by added, confirms this interpretation: for we cry out for iudgement in the time of affliction, when we be oppressed and wronged. And it is said, that God then takes our cause in hand, when in taking knowledge of it, hee defends and keepe vs: as on the contrarie, that he regards vs not, when he suffers vs to be giuen vp for a pray to our enemies. It is as much then as if he should say; O ye Iewes, what meane ye to complain, as if God had forgotten or despised your conditions! Now by this reprehension, Isaiah prepares them to receiue consolation: for all impediments were to be remoued, to the end the way to come thereunto might bee the more easie.

Verf. 28. Knowest thou not? or hast thou not heard, that the euerlasting God, the Lord hath created the ends of the earth? Hee neither fainteth, nor is wearie: there is no searching of his vnderstanding.

HE repeats the same thing that he said before; to wit, that the people who had been instructed in the schoole of God, were no way excusable, in regard of their dulnesse. Hee rebukes them thus sharply then for not hauing having profited better in the Law, and other good meanes which God had giuen them, ouer and beſides the common vnderſtanding wherewith all of them might haue been indued. In the firſt place he puts the verbe To know, which is more generall; becauſe God had cauſed his glory to appeare vnto them, by many miracles and teſtimones of his power: in the ſecond place he comes to the hearing; as if hee ſhould ſay, If theſe things haue wrought nothing vpon thee, namely, that thou haſt been ſo long taught and inſtructed, both by the word and workes of God, that hee vſeth not to ſit idle in heauen; it muſt needs be concluded, that thou art verie vnteachable.

By the greatnesse.

When God is said to take our cause in hand.

He calles him the eueraſting God; thereby diſtinguiſhing him from al corruptible idols, the worke of mens hands. Now if this article were well imprinted in our hearts, diſtruſt would vaniſh away like ſmoke. For if God be eternaſl, then it is impoſſible for him either to be changeable, or weak; for eternitie hath this propertie vnto it, that it is no way ſubiect to change, but continues alwaies alike, which the Iewes comprehended not, though they had often heard it before. This is the cauſe why the Prophet is ſo round with them in rouzing them vp by this reprehention. For thus he ſhewes how double guiltie they ſhall be before God, if hauing bin taught by his word, and by ſo many of his benefites, they ſhal ſtill reſuſe to yeeld him that honour and glorie which to him belongs.

He is not wearie, &c.) Heere the Prophet ſhewes two things; the firſt, that God is not wearie of well doing: the ſecond, that there is no ſearching of his vnderſtanding. In the firſt member he proves, that nothing can let God to continue his well doing towards them, becauſe he is not like thoſe y waſte their goods by often giuing out: or to ſuch as are euer and anon wearie in doing good turnes: or to ſuch as repent their liberaltie: for his bountie can neuer be drawne drie. If he haue done good to the fathers, he will do no leſſe to the children. And whereas he often works quite contrarie to that which we thinke meete, the Prophet preuents the conceit, by telling vs that his Counſels are inferuabile. Thus he admoniſheth vs not to murmure though he do not by and by applie himſelfe to our deſires: for there is nothing better to nourish hope in vs, then this ſobrietie: to wit, that we conſidering how wonderfullie God works for the defence of his choſen, might be brought willinglie to ſubmit our reaſon vnder his ſecret counſels.

Verſ. 29. But he giueth ſtrength vnto him that fainteth, and vnto him that hath no ſtrength he increaſeth power.

The Prophet now applies the former general ſentences to the matter in hand: for his purpoſe is, as we haue ſaid, to hearten on the people, and to giue them better hope. But becauſe the Iewes were low brought, and void of ſtrength, therefore he ſhewes, that it is the proper office of God to ſuccor thoſe which are thus faint and wearie. By this circumſtance then he ſets forth Gods power, to the end they might conclude and be ſurely reſolued of their ſaluation, whilſt God ſhall be fauorable vnto them. I grant, that the Prophet had reſpect to the people who were detained priſoners in Babylon: but we ought notwithstanding to make our profit of this doctrine, that although our ſtrength ſhould faile vs, ſo as we ſhould be brought to deaths dore, yet to remember that it is Gods propertie to ſtretch forth his hand to ſuch as faint and are ſpent, being leſt ſuccorleſſe. But it is requiſite we ſhould ſiſt of all feele our pouertie and wearines, that that ſentence of S. Paul might be fulfilled in vs, The power of God is perfected in our weaknes, 2. Cor. 12. 9. For if our hearts be not thoroughlie touched, ſo as we be indeede conuincid of our imbecillitie, we can not find help of God in due time.

Verſ. 30. Even the yong men ſhall faint, and be wearie, and the yong men ſhall ſtumble and fall.

BY this compariſon y Prophet further enrichth y which he ſaid before; to wit, y the power which God giues to his elect is inuincible, and euer durable: for man ſtrength eaſily vaniſheth; but Gods, neuer. It is moſt certaine, that all the naturall ſtrength we laue is from God; but for as much as men proudly attribute that as proper to themſelues which he giues, to all, therefore the Prophet diſtinguiſheth betweene the ſtrength which ſeemes to flow from nature, and that, by which God eſpeciallie ſuſtaines his children. For in as much as the other is an vniuerſall benefit beſtowed vpon all the world, therefore men take no knowledge of that. Thus then hee calles that the ſtrength of men, which is a gift common to all: and that the ſtrength of God, by which he aſſiſts vs when all our ſtrength faileth. For he here ſpeakes of that grace of God which is called ſupernaturall; and ſaith, that it is perpetuall, whereas men can haue nothing of themſelues but that which is transitorie & perſhable, that ſo by this make he may ſeparate the Church of God from the reſt of the world, and ſpirituall ſtrength from that which is earthly proſperitie.

The Prophet diſtinguiſheth betweene that ſtrength which men ſeeme to haue by nature, and that by which God ſuſtaines his children.

Supernaturall graces

Whereas in the firſt member he hath put the word Nearim, which is as much to ſay as young men; and in the ſecond he addes Bakurim, which ſignifies not that only, but men of choiſe: yet becauſe he repeats but one and the ſame thing, it agrees beſt if we reſerre it vnto the time of age; and yet hee meanes all ſuch as are ſtout, and in their beſt ſtrength. Now by this we may ſee how hee magnifies the excellent prerogative wherewith Gods childre are endued aboue others, to the end they might ſatiſfie their hearts with their owne condition, and might nothing enuie the children of this world, who reioyce in their owne ſtrength. In a word, he ſhewes how much men erre, in hauing an overweening of their own abilities. Why ſo?

N n 4 Because

Eternitie hath this proper vnto it, that it is no way ſubiect to change.

Sobrietie a notable meanes to nourish hope.

The application of the former doctrine.

Because it often ouerthrowes them, and makes them fall quickly.

It seemes he alludes to that which falles out daily, to wit, that the stronger any man is, the bolder will he be to vndertake difficult masteries, and that is the cause that the strongest natures do soonest decay; for they thinke that nothing is too hard for them. They headily and rashly plunge themselves into all aduentures; but in conclusion, they faint and fall in the mid way, and receiue the hier of their headinesse. The like befallens them who haue receiued any grace of God, and wax proud of it, thinking too well of themselves: for whatsoeuer they haue receiued, comes all to nothing; nay, it turnes to their ruine and perdition: and such fellows worthily beare the punishment of their pride.

Those that are strongest by nature, commonly soonest decay in strength.

Verf. 31. But they that wait vpon the Lord, shall renue their strength: they shall lift vp the Wings as the Eagles: they shall runne and not bee wearie, and they shall walke and not faint.

THe Hebrewes say; To change their forces, for renuing or gathering newe strength; and to bee thereby restored. The Prophet shewes that strength shall neuer be wanting to the faithfull, which shall hope in the Lord: and so he confirms that which he said, Chap. 30. 7. Your strength is to sit still. For wee ought not to play the bedlems, or wild colts, but with patience to wait for our God. This hee notes out by this word vultis. Men that swell and fret, doe often breake, through their owne vnrulines; but the strength of the faithfull, which hath no such flourishing shewes, (yea it is commonly so hidden that it cannot be seene) whilst they wait for Gods helpe, this strength receiues by the blessing of God new increases. Let vs therefore returne to that sentence of Paul; That Gods power is perfected in our weaknesse: 1. Cor. 12. 9. which by consequence we ought thrugly to feele, that we may indeede giue place to the power of God. The Iewes stood in great need of this doctrine during the time of their tedious seruitude: but it is no lesse necessarie for vs now in the dissipations and scatterings which we see in the Churches.

They shall lift vp their wings.] Some thinke the Prophet vtters the same thing which is contained in Psal. 103. Thy youth shall be renewed like the Eagles. I grant that the Eagle among other birds liues long: for both Aristotle and Plinie doe witness that shee neuer dies of age, but of hunger; because shee cannot get the meate into her beke, by reason of the crookednesse of it; in which respect she liues by drinking a very long time. A certaine Iew called Zadius, (being all of them too audacious in deuising of fables) would make vs belene that the Eagle flies vp into the next region to the Sunne, vnto which shee approacheth so neere, that her olde fetters burne off, and in stead of them others come forth: but this is wholly ridiculous and fabulous. The Prophets meaning is, that those who trust in the Lord, shall be strong as the Eagles cuen to their old age. But because the Eagle flies higher then other birds, in which shee also shewes great agilitie of body; whence the prouerbe came, The Eagle in the cloudes: therefore by this place wee may vnderstand, not onely length of life, but also strength and nimblenes. So as the Prophet hauing first set forth the increasing of strength, which the faithfull receiue from God, addes in the second place, that they shall grow nimble and apt to fore aloft.

Thereunto appertaines that which is added; they shall runne and not bee wearie: as if hee should say; The Lord will so assist his chosen, that they shall finish their course without any incumbrances. It is a figuratiue kinde of speech, by which hee signifies that the faithfull being fortified with Gods strength, shall be alwaies prompt, and able to execute their charges. But will some say, we are euer in affliction; how is it then that he saith, we shall not bee wearie? I answer, that the faithfull are so afflicted and wearie, that yet at last they shal overcome, and feele that they haue been sustained by the power of God: for it befalls them according to the Apostles experiment, 1. Cor. 4. 8. 9. We are pressed, saith he, on euery side, but not in distresse; poore, yet not ouercome of poueritie; persecuted, but not forsaken; cast downe, but we perish not. Let vs learne then to looke vnto the Lord, who at last will conduct vs to the quiet haue, after we haue passed many streights: for hee which sets vs in the way, and commands vs to goe on, hauing entred vs therinto, he will not guide vs for a day or two onely, leauing vs to sinke or swimme in the midde race, but will lead and direct vs to the verie goale.

THE XLI. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. Keepe ſilence before mee, O Ilands, and let the people renue their ſtrength: let them come nere, and let them ſpeake: let vs come together into iudgement.

Albeit it may ſeeme that the Prophet enters into a new argument, yet it is certaine that the doctrine of this Chapter hath affinitye with the former. For to ſhame the Iewes, he telles them that hee would make good his cauſe, though he ſhould plead it before the blind infidels. Thus then hee reproues the ignorance, nay the ſortitineſſe of this people, to whom God had ſo familiarly reuealed himſelfe by his law. And yet we are not to wonder that they did thus tremble being wrapped in ſo many troubles, being in a manner vterly vnſit to apprehend any ſound comfort: for woſull experience teacheth vs how much aduerſities doe amaze vs; becauſe in this peruerſe and corrupt nature, euery of vs is ſubiect to theſe two diſeaſes. In proſperitie there is no ho with vs, we ſhake off all the bands of ſobritie and modeſtie: in affliction, either we ſtorme, or elſe ſtand amazed, being vnable with anie cheerfulneſſe of Spirit to receiue the leaſt word of conſolation that may bee. It is no maruell then if the Prophet inſiſts long vpon this argument, and purſues it with ſo much varietie of words.

Hee calles the Countries beyond the ſeaſ Iles; for in as much as the Iewes had no traffique with them, they termed them all Iles that were on the other ſide of the ſea. Thus then hee directſ his ſpeech not onely to the neighbour Countries, but to them alſo that were far remote, and willes them to keepe ſilence before him. But what is this ſilence? Iſaiah deſcribes one kind of iudgement, which the Lord is content to receiue againſt all nations; onely this, that they would but giue him audience till hee had pleaded his cauſe, and that nothing ſhould bee done herein confuſedly or tumultuouſly; for that is a thing the moſt contrary to iudgement that can be. Hee deſires therefore that proclamation may bee made for ſilence among the Gentiles, which being granted, hee will lay forth his plea in plaine termes. The order of iudgement requires, that euery one may take his turne: for if they ſhould al ſpeake at once, there muſt needs follow wonderfull confuſion. Hence we are admoniſhed, that the cauſe why we neither eſteeme nor honour the power, goodneſſe, wiſdome, and other attributes of God, is, becauſe wee will not giue him audience when he ſpeakes. Men vſually fret and mur-mure againſt God: one ſwelles with pride in contemning his word; another is ſenſeleſſe, and cares not which end goes forward, who being drowned in worldly delights, takes no pleaſure at all to aſpire to the heavenly kingdom. Who ſees not at this day with what boldneſſe and rebellion many ſlander the waies of the moſt high? Whence is it that the Papiſts are ſo violent and obſtinate in their errors? Is it not becauſe they will not giue the Lord the hearing? Surely if wee could but indure to heare him quietly, truth would by and by beare away the victorie.

To be ſhort, the Lord ſhewes here that he will make his partie good, if men giue him but indifferent hearing. He would not haue men to bend their cares in a careleſſe manner; for that euen wicked and corrupt Iudges cannot indure, hauing a fore hand prepared a ſpeech; but hee requires that his reaſons may be ſcanned and weighed, for nothing but truth and equitie ſhall be found in them. Some may demand whether the Prophee here exhorts the nations to hearken? I anſwere, this concernes the Iewes eſpecially; for nations farre off might happily receiue this prophetic ouer late: but this ſpeech hath ſo much the more efficacy to mollifie the hardneſſe of the Iewes hearts, when it is ſaid, that the prophane nations would eaſilie acknowledge his power, if they would but vouchſafe him the hearing. Now there is greater weight and vehemencie in it, that he ſpeakes directly to the Iles, then if hee had ſpoken thereof in the third perſon.

Let the people renue their ſtrength. The Lord prouokes all nations to come to this challenge, and that by way of contempt: as they that haue the better end of the ſtaffe are wont to doe, who being aſſured of the right, doubt nothing at all of the iſſue. Let them come, ſaith the Lord, and conſpire together; they ſhall preuaile nothing, the victorie will be mine in the end: in a word, I deſie them all (as we vſe to ſpeake) for they ſhall haue the worſt, albeit they diſcouer all the abilitie they haue either of body or minde: onely I deſie audience. Thus he ſignifies that truth is ſo powerfull, that it eaſilie reſiſts falſhood, if men will not wittingly ſtop their eares. Let the whole world then conſpire to abolifh her, yet ſhall ſhe continue miſtris ſtill. And therefore if we turne our backs vpon God, it will not bee lawfull for vs to caſt the fault vpon others, but rather accuſe our ſelues of want of attention whileſt he ſpake vnto vs: for if we were prepared to heare him in good earneſt, lies could not preuaile againſt vs, neither ſhould wee bee ſeduced by Satans ſophiſtric, nor by any temptation whatſoeuer.

Whereas he takes vpon him the perſon of one accuſed, to appeare before the ſea of juſtice to pleade; it may be asked, who it is among the ſonnes

Truth would ſoone beare away the victorie, if men would giue God but a peaceable audience.

Obiect. Anſ.

Truth eaſilie reſiſts falſhood, if it may haue but equall hearing.

Queſt. ſonnes

All of vs ſubiect to two diſeaſes: in proſperity to ſhake off all bonds of ſobritie, in aduerſitie either to ſtorme, or ſtand amazed.

Let vs come together into iudgement.

The cauſe why we honour not Gods wiſdome, power, &c.

Anc

sonnes of men, that is able to bee a competent Iudge in so high & difficult a plea? I answer, here is nothing said touching the choice of Iudges: the Lord onely meant to say, that hee will get the day, if his cause should bee heard before any competent Iudges. There is no reason why hee should submit himselfe either to men or Angels, to giue an account before them of his doings: but to take away all excuses, he testifies that the victorie is already in his hands, if hee should be constrained to plead for himselfe. It follows then, that it is a thing most vnreasonable, to stand debating of the matter among our selues: why doe wee not rather forthwith submit vs wholly vnto him? We shew our selues exceeding vnthankfull and peruerse, if we will not afford him the hearing, and thinke vs how equall the conditions are which he requires. Truly, though nothing could be more absurd then to see mortall man stand to iudge the eternall God: yet behold a thing more vile and hateful, to wit, that we dare condemne him, before we haue heard his iust defences.

*Or, Who hath raised vp iustice from the East? Hath he not called him to come after him.

Verf. 2. Who hath raised vp iustice from the East, and called him to his foote, and gaue the nations before him, and subdued Kings? Hee gaue them as dust to his sword, and as scattered stubble to his bow.

Hence it appeares what is the Prophets drift; for his meaning is to assure the Iewes that they shall be out of danger of erring, if they will but keepe the way which he chalks out before them. This is the cause why he mentions Abraham: for he might haue instanced other works of God, but he rather chose an example fitting his purpose: for the Iewes being descended from the stock of Abraham, whom God had (not without many dangers) drawne out of Caldea, they for their parts were to hope that God would no lesse assist and help them, seeing his force was nothing abated, nor his loue cooled. It being a difficult thing for them therefore to hope for any returne, in regard they were held captiues in their enemies countrie far froe home, the Prophet sets the like example before them, to quicken vp their hope and confidence. They were scattered in Caldea, and in the regions adjoining: they imagined that the way was hedged vp against them, in regard of the many stumbling blockes that lay betwene them and home; but Abraham their father passed from Vr of the Caldeans, into Iudea. He that had brought a poore man with his father, his nephew, and wife, safe and sound through so many straits, could not he also conduct and leade his people? Since God then had deliuered Abraham out of all incumbrances, in drawing him out of his Countrie; this example which so neerely concerned them, ought to touch his children and of-spring to the quicke: so as the safe conduit which their father had from, or of the Caldeans into the land of promise, was to serue them as a pledge or mirror of their deliuerance to come.

When he calles Abraham iustice, it is not to magnifie him; but to shew that God put vpon him that person which appertained to the whole Church: for his calling was not to be esteemed as that of a priuate person, but therein God shewed a testimonie of his eternall iustice, which is common to all the faithful. As if he should say; In the person of this good Patriarke, the Church was once deliuered, that by meanes thereof, she might hold this for a principle; to wit, that her saluation and Gods iustice should neuer bee turned backe to the worlds end. For in this one man, we may behold the vocation of all the faithful, the forme of a Church, and the beginning and end of our saluation. In a word, Abraham is as a mirror of Gods iustice, as long as it shall shine in this world. This word iustice therefore serues to amplify the matter; for it was a wonderfull worke of God to raise vp iustice to the east, where all things were corrupt and defiled with abominable superstitions. Hath God then shewed so rare an example of his power and goodnesse? why should we not wait for the same still?

As touching that which followes, to come after him: some expound it, as if Abraham had called vpon the name of the Lord whither-soeuer he came: for he no sooner set his foote in any region, but he set vp an Alter to offer sacrifice to God: Gen. 12.7. & 13.18. All this is true that they say; but yet I expound it otherwise, to wit, that God led his seruant Abraham in the way, who followed that his leading foote by foote: for hauing receiued a commandment to goe forth, hee knew not the Country whither he should goe; so as he walked, but knew not which way to turne him, and God held him still in suspense, till hee entred the land of Canaan. Now because Abraham immediately obeyed the voic of God, and albeit his way was vnertaine, yet hee depended still vpon his mouth, contenting himselfe with his conduction: our Prophet fitly saith, that he came after him; because hee followed God, as readie and obedient seruants are wont to follow their master at the heeles, though they know not whither he goes.

And subdued. His meaning is, that howsoeuer this good man might haue beene distracted & put out of heart through many temptations, yet God made him safely passe the pikes, which might any way hurt him. Moses recites not all the incumbrances which Abraham met withall in the way: but euery one may consider, that first of all his departing out of his natie Country, could not be void of many discontentments. For it was vnpossible that forsaking his Country so rashly, but hee should be hated of his countrimen, who would condemne him for a mad man to leaue the place of his natiuitie, his friends, and kinsfolks, to goe he knew not whither. Then, being come into the land of Canaan, he had to deale with barbarous and froward men, with whom he could no way make his peace, because hee inclined himselfe nothing at all to their superstitions.

That which Moses recites teſtifies plainly, that Abraham had neuer any ſetled peace; and yet the wicked durſt enterpriſe nothing againſt him, but the Hittites offered him a place of burial freely without money, though he offered to pay for it: and they confeſſed that he was a Prince and man of God amongſt them, Gen. 23. 6.

The Prophet further amplifies the grace of God, in that he ſpared not Kings; to ſhew, that he was the faithfull protector of his ſervant Abraham. Now the hiſtorie of the four Kings which he put to flight and diſcomfited is notorious. We may alſo extend it to Pharaoh and Abimelec, Gen. 12. 17. and 20. 3. where of the Prophet expreſſie ſpeaketh in the 105. Psalme: for the Lord rebuked and chaſtiſed them, in that they durſt adventure to touch his anointed. But he ſpeakes properlie of the victorie which he got ouer the four Kings which led his kiſnman Lot captiue with all his familie: for it ſufficientlie appears by the ſcope of the text, that he ſpeakes not of kings or nations that were peaceable, but of armed enemies, who by force were ſubdued.

He afterwards amplifies the eaſines of this victorie, and expreſſeth therein a great contempt, when he compares Kings to dull and ſtubble: for Abraham overcame them without hazarding his perſon. And therewithall we are taught to attribute this victorie to God, and not to the power of man: for men can not atchieue a victorie with ſo little adoe.

Verſ. 3. He purſued them, and paſſed ſafely by the way that he had not gone with his feet.

Again he magnifies the ſingular goodnes of God in amplifying this victorie by other circumſtances: and this is aduiſedlie to be conſidered of vs, that he ſhould obtaine ſo great a conqueſt in a countrie vnknowne vnto him. It was a difficult and dangerous matter for him to purſue his enemies into regions unfrequented: for Hiſtories record ſufficientlie whar advantage is gotten by knowledge of places both by ſea and land, which thoſe that frequent the warres haue cuer and anon experience of. But this hindered not Abraham: whence it appears yet better, that he was conducted and ſuccored by Gods hand, who leades thoſe that are his forward with boldnes.

Verſ. 4. Who hath wrought and done it? He that calleth the generations from the beginning. I the Lord am the firſt, and with the laſt, I am the ſame.

Though Iſaiab propounds nothing here but the example of Abraham: yet no doubt his meaning is to put the people in mind of all thoſe benefits which the fathers in former times had receiued. As if he ſhould ſay, Remember your beginning. From whence raiſed I vp Abraham your father? Through what waies led I him? And my benefits haue not ended there; for ſince that time, I haue neuer ceaſed to fill you with all manner of bleſſings. When he asks, Who it is? He ſpeakes not of one fact, but ads other mercies powred out vpon them many waies, which the people were now to call to minde.

Where he ſaith, that God called the generations from the beginning, it ought to be referred to the continuall ſucceſſions of the times: and the word Dor among the Hebrues ſignifies not only the time or age of mans life, but thoſe alſo which lue in the ſame age. And thus one age is diſtinguiſhed from another, as the fathers from the children; and the grandfathers from their little ones: for our ſucceſſors will call vs which now lue, the former, or next age: and that of our predeceſſors, the old time. Now becauſe one age would conſume the race of mankind if it were not ſupplied by the children which are borne; the Prophet ſhewes, that God multiplies men by continuall ſucceſſion, that ſo one may ſupplie anothers room when it is empty. Whence it follows that his prouidence gouernes all ages, leſt we ſhould thinke the world were ordered by fortune: for wee may euidentlie perceiue that his hand and power is in the ſucceſſion of one age after another.

But becauſe diuers changes make vs thinke that the world goes vpon wheelcs, as they ſay; therefore the Prophet contrariwiſe ſhewes, that theſe ſo many alterations were foreſcene from the beginning. The ſumme of all is, That God rules in theſe varieties and changes which time brings forth, and with a ſteadie hand brings that to paſſe which himſelfe from the beginning hath ordered.

I the Lord. He affirms in more euident termes that God is the author of theſe benefits, namely, that Abraham overcame his enemies, liued ſo long among the wicked without harme done vnto him: that he diſcomfited four kings; and that the Lord reuenged the wrongs he receiued, when Pharaoh and Abimelec tooke his wife from him, Gen. 12. 9. and 14. 15. and 20. 18. To be ſhort, he teacheth, that it is to him we ought to referre all the benefits beſtowed vpon the ages following, after ſo diuers and ſundrie waies: for he extended not his liberalitie towards Abraham and his ſeed alone, but likewise to the whole world.

Where he names himſelfe the firſt, and ſaith he is with the laſt, this appertaines not only to the eternitie of his eſſence, but to his rule and dominion which he exerciſeth ouer the whole world. As if he ſhould ſay, Continuance of time makes me not wax old, for I neuer meane to giue vp my right. He is not idle in the heauens, but from his high throne beholds and orders the leaſt things. Morcouer, although the world forgeth vnto it ſelſe a world of dunghill gods, yet he will loſe nothing by it, becauſe he alwaies continues one and the ſame.

6. Every man helped his neighbour, and staid to his brother; Be strong.

HE shewes now that the world was too vnthankfull, who hauing seene the workes of God, did still perseure in that blindness wherewith it was possessed before. In the beginning of the Chapter, hee shewed that the victorie was his, if they would but lend their eares to heare his plea: now he addes, that the Gentiles knew his power well enough, and yet for all that, continued obstinate and rebellious. In which respect, they were left without excuse. Why lo? Because the Lord manifested himselfe so apparently, that they could not chuse but see him, vnlesse they would wittingly shut their eyes, lest they should behold him.

That he might therefore take from the nations surthest off, all pretext of ignorance, he saith, they were abashed at the sight of his workes; and yet they fell to their old bias againe, and forthwith wrapped themselves in many superstitious vanities and errors. The surme is, that they not onely beheld, but were also conuincid, in that this knowledge abashed them. But some may object, that the benefits which God did to Abraham, could not bee made knowne to all, in such wise that forraigne nations should be fully acquainted with it. I answer, that howsoever he mentions none but Abraham here, yet vnder him hee meant to call to mind other examples of his goodness, which their forefathers had tasted of since, that from both, they might conceiue hope of deliuerance. Abraham was not onely deliuered out of Caldea, but God drew also all his posteritie out from the bondage of Egypt: Exod. 13. 16. and put them into possession of the land of Canaan. He saith then that the Iles felt his power, when hee deliuered and preserued his people, that they might know the true God: for his power plainly appeared in so many miracles.

Lastly, he signifies, that the Iles should be astonished at Gods inuincible power, when he should afterwards deliuer his people. And whilest the wicked shall heare tell of it, they will not cease still to bee perplexed, because they therein feele that God is their enemy.

Drew neere.] By this, some vnderstand, that the vnbeleeuers tooke a narrow view of Gods workes. For we vse to draw neere when we would be more certainly informed of any new thing: others referre it to the King of Sodome, who met Abraham: Gen. 14. 17. but these things, as I thinke, fauor not, neither come they neere the matke. The words of the text will be easie vnderstood, if we ioin this latter member to the verse following, thus; They drew neere and came: every man helped his neighbour: and so the sense will be; Although the Iles saw and knew my workes, so as they stood abashed, yet they assembled by heapes to make conspiracies. But to what end? Euen to harden on one another to make new gods, and to confirme themselves more and more in their blindness.

Hee amplifies the crime then, when hee saith, that every one helped his neighbour. Now truly, hee that shall looke neere home, and shall diligently obserue mens dealings, hee shall perceiue that the spring from whence all superstitions flow, is, that with one consent they agree to quench the light which shines vpon them from heauen.

Now albeit the Lord heere complains of idolaters, yet he doth it to the end the Iewes might bee farre from corrupting themselves with so foule a sinne, but might rather keepe themselves close vnto God, and to a sincere confidence in his promises. He sets the ingratitude of the Gentiles then before them, that they might learne to shun their steps, and to continue rooted in the reuerence of Gods Maiestie. We here see now as in a glasse, how great the peruersitie of men is, who profit nothing at all by beholding the workes of God, but become the more dull and senseless thereby; for they had rather winke with their eyes, and to shut them at high noone, then to behold God, who represents himselfe before them. Besides this blindness, there is a raging furie which prouokes them to rise vp against God himselfe, and to be so mad, as to offer him the combat, rather then not to maintain their superstitions: so that this vice stands not so much in the worshipping of idols, as in going a madding after them. The Prophet sets forth this phrensie when he saith, play the men; be valiant, or strong: for he expresseth their mischieuous conspiracie, in that they provoked, nay, set one another on fire to commit idolatry, and to reiect the feare of the true God, which they might conceiue in their mindes, by the sundry testimonies of his power.

Verf. 7. So the workeman comforted the founder; and hee that smote with the hammer, him that smote by course, saying; It is readie for the soddering; and hee fastened it with nailes, that it should not be removed.

THIS verse is diuersly expounded, for it is somewhat obscure: neither doe the Iewes themselves agree in the exposition of the words. I know not the reason why the word Charash should here be taken for a Carpenter or Ioiner; for it signifies any workeman working vpon stonie matter. Some translate the word Atabalik, (which signifies him that smites) in the accusatiue: but I had rather put it in the nominatiue. They also turne the word Patam, an anuell; others, a little hammer: but because it signifies sometimes to smite by course, I haue thought this exposition most fitting to the text. For the Prophets meaning is, that the founders smiting one after another, encouraged each other; because they then are earnest in their busines, and sweat at the worke, so as one drawes on his fellow, and hastens him thereunto, to the end that which they haue begunne, may soone be finished. In a word, he sets forth the obstinacie & headstrongnes of idolaters, who combine themselves together in one to resist God.

It appears as well by this place, as by all histories, that this vice hath not rigned in one age only; yea, would to God we had not too wooll experience of it among our selves. Wee see how men prouoke one another by mutuall perswasions to vphold Idolatrye and superstitions: the more the truth shines forth clearly, the more obstinately recolle they backe, as if they had plotted with an high hand to make warre vpon God. For since pure religion was restored, Idols, Pilgrimages, Masse, vnlawfull vows, haue multiplied, and haue bin set vp in despite of it: and more Masse-priests, then euer before. There was some measure kept vnder the first ignorance: but the Idolaters raigne now like hellish furies carried away with the fire thereof, and leaue no corner of their wits vnsearched, in deuising how to erect superstitions and Idols, which are now like to breake their necks. To be short, they band and fortifie themselves to withstand the Lord of hosts. If any would lay the fault vpon his companion, he shall gaine nothing by it: for the euill is spread so farre into euery one in particular, that they can no way be excused. All are giuen to lies, and writinge seeke to be deceived: and then trusting in their multitude, they extoll themselves and their side about God himselfe: one whets on another to serue and worship Idols, which they loue with such heate, that all the world is now almost set on fire with it.

Veis. 8. But thou, Israel, art my seruant, and thou Iacob whom I haue chosen; the seed of Abraham my friend.

Now the Prophet shewes how vnreasonable a thing it were that Israel should mingle himselfe with prophane Nations, though all of them iouined hand in hand, marching in aray vnder the banner of Idolatrye, and giuing themselves to lewde practises. Why to? God had called them, and icely separated them to be his peculiar people, and therefore it became not such to throw themselves headlong into so beastly a furie. This place is notable therefore, and teacheth vs to stick fast to the calling of God, that we desire not our selves with the filth of the world: if corruptions breake forth, and that Idolaters let loose the bridle to all villanie; yet must we be held short by another bridle; to wit, we are the chosen of God, and therefore it is not lawfull for vs to stie out, as the wicked and vnbelieuers do. Such were some of you, saith the Apostle, but you are washed, but you are sanctified in the name of the Lord Iesus, and by the Spirit of our God, 1. Cor. 6. 11. For what is more absurd then to wander in the darke, after the sunne of righteousness hath shined vpon vs.

Let vs in any wise therefore bethinke vs of our vocation, that we may follow it effectually and diligentlie: and walking in it as children of the light, let vs abhorre all the darknes of our life past. This is the cause why he calles Israel his seruants: not that the Israelites had merited ought by their seruises, but because it had pleased the Lord to choose them for his owne. And therefore to the same purpose he addes, Thou Iacob whom I haue chosen: wherein he lets before them a speciall commendation of his free bountie. As if he should say, You are my seruants, not by merit, but by my free mercie, seeing I haue prepared you thereto by mine election, and by putting you apart to be my peculiar people. To be short, he admonisheth them, that they obtained not this title of being the seruants of God by their owne industrie; for there was nothing to be found in them that should make them more holy then others, but only because the good pleasure of their master was such, who chooseth this or that man according to the counsell of his owne will. Therewithall also he shewes what is the end of our election, to wit, that we should be the seruants of God. For he hath chosen vs, as the Apostle saith, that we should be holy and without blame before him in loue, Ephes. 1. 4. The end also of our election is, that such as were the bondslaves of Satan before, should now submit and giue themselves to God in absolute obedience.

In the third place he addes, the seed of Abraham, to reach vs, that election depends vpon the free promise of God: nor that the promise goes before election (which is from euellasting) but because y^e Lord makes knowne his fauor in respect of his promise: for to Abraham he said, I am thy God, and the God of thy seed, Gen. 17. 7. This fauor then was continued to his successors, and in respect of the promise, God had a speciall care ouer the welfare of this people, as also S. Paul saith Rom. 9. 4. That to them were giuen the covenants, the promises, and the law. For which cause this seed was called an holy nation, a royall Priesthood, &c. Exod. 19. 6. 1. Pet. 2. 9.

But the Lord shewes the singular loue he beare to Abraham in calling him his friend. It is no small fauor to be called Gods seruant: for if it be worthily esteemed an high dignitie to be brought into the seruice of a King or Prince, how much more highly ought we to thinke our selves aduanced when we are accounted the honesta seruants of the Almighty? And yet he contents not himselfe herewith, but as if that were too little, he honours him yet further, and adorne him with the title of Friend. Now that which is here said of Abraham belongs to all the faithfull, whi. h Christ declares at large, Ioh. 15. 15. I call you not seruants, saith he, but friends: for the seruant knowes not what his Master doth, but I haue acquainted you with all my heauenly mysteries and secrets: by reason whereof, you may easily discern how great the loue and affection is which I beare towards you. Seeing then that God hath done vs so great honour, ought we not to bethinke vs of our duties? Hath he shewed so vnutterable a fauour to vs, and shall it not stire vs vp to serue and honour him with the greater care and reuerence? But let it (I pray you) be alwaies remembered, that Abraham is not called the friend of God, but in regard of adoption: as Moses also saith of the Iewes, Deut. 4. 37. He loved thy fathers, and therefore he chose their seed after them.

Idolaters can prouoke one another to the vpholding of their superstitions, Pilgrimages, Masse, vnlawfull vows, prayers for the dead.

God chooseth and re- fecth whom it pleaseth him. The end of our election is, to be Gods seruants.

Election depends vpon the free promise.

Abraham Gods friend. Simile.

Note, that Abraham is not called Gods friend, but by the right of adoption.

*Or, haue called thee before the excellencies,

Verf. 9. *For I haue taken thee from the ends of the earth, and called thee before the chiefe thereof, and said vnto thee; Thou art my seruant, I haue chosen thee, and not cast thee away.

Isaiah goes on with the same matter still; for who is it that feesles not by common experience, what need he hath euer and anon to be quickened vp, by the often repetition of this and such like consolations, when aduersities doe presse vs? It is no wonder then that the Prophet insists so long vpon this argument. Now from the onely person of Abraham, he ascends to all his posteritie, and mentions the benefits which he had done for them. I take the relative Isb, for the particle For; because hee yeeldes a reason wherefore the people were to be of good comfort in their aduersities; to wit, they had felt and tasted before how good and gracious God was vnto them: what cause had they then that they should not trust in him still for the time to come?

The ends of the earth may be taken two waies; either that the people had bin brought from a far Countrie, cuen from the place of Abrahams natiuitie. or in respect that God, who hath the utmost bounds of the earth at his becke, yet vouchsafed to reach forth his hand but to one onely people. He adds the farre exceedings, or, excellencies; for I haue so translated the word Asiflum, which others expound in the masculin, Princes, or, excellent: but there is no great difference betweene the one or the other: for the Prophet magnifies Gods grace, who passed by other mightie nations, and tooke vnto himselfe a nation abieft and obscure. Some refer this taking to Egypt, whence the people were brought. For it is not vnknowne how glorious this kingdom was, and what good opinion the Egyptians had of their learning, antiquitie, noblenesse of blood, and other prerogatiues. But I expound it otherwise, and refer it to the election of the people, who were taken from the midst of other nations, much more excellents then they: so as there is a comparison here betweene the Iewes and other nations. Which Moses also shewes when he saith; That they were not chosen because they were more in number then any other people; for they were the fewest, Deut. 7.7. but because the Lord loved them, and because he would keepe the oth which he had sworne vnto their fathers: Deut. 7.8. Againc, Thou enrest not into thine enemies land for thine uprightnesse of heart, nor for thy righteousnesse; for thou art a stiffnecked people: Deut. 9.5.6. Albeit then they were much lesse in quantitie then all other nations, yet they were chosen, wherein they had a testimonie of Gods singular loue: had they any cause then to mistrust so bountifull and liberrall a father for the time to come, hauing already receiued so many benefits from his hands?

Hee further adds, that the people had a pledge of this grace in the law, standing as it were vpon record: as if he should say; it is not hid from thee, but it is written faire in plaine tables: for hauing chosen thee, I afterwards gaue thee my law, that thou shouldest not wander higher and thither, but mightest keepe thy selfe loiall vnto mee, that so I might performe my promise concerning thy saluation.

As touching that which followes, and not cast thee away: it seemes both superfluous, and that it comes in out of place, were it not that it is an vsuall thing so to doe with the Hebrewes, which also hath great weight in it. For thereby hee expresseth the stedfastnesse of their election: as if he should say; I haue not left or forsaken thee, though thou hast giuen me many occasions: for the ingratitude of the Iewes was so great, that hee had iust cause to haue cast them off, but that hee meant to shew himselfe to bee that God who changeth not. Now that which is said of them, belongs also to vs: for this sentence of the Apostle is perpetuall, Rom. 11.29. The gifts and calling of God are without repentance. Howsoeuer then hee casts off the greater part of the world, in regard of their incredulitie, yet he alwaies referres to himselfe some seede of adoption, that so the calling may remaine in some sprigs: neither indeed can Gods election be altered by the peruersitie of men. And therefore let vs remember that God hath chosen vs on this condition, that we should still remaine in his house and familie, albeit by good right we deserue to bee driuen out of it.

God hath chosen vs, but vpon condition that we continue in his familie.

Verf. 10. *Feare thou not, for I am with thee: bee not afraid, for I am thy God: I will strengthen thee, and helpe thee, and I will sustaine thee with the right hand of my iustice.

*Or, yet, or, certainly I will, &c.

Because the former doctrine was to quiet the peoples hearts touching their quiet resting vpon Gods prouidence, the Prophet thence concludes, that they ought not to feare, hauing so many benefits set before their eyes; in which they might evidently discern the loue which God bare vnto them. The reason which he addes, for I am with thee, is diligently to be obserued. For this is the sure foundation of our confidence; to wit, which being once fixed in our hearts, we shall stand fast and inuincible against all manner of temptations: as on the contrarie, when we thinke God is absent, or doubt whether he will assist vs or not, feare surprizeth vs, and carries vs floting vp and down through many waues of distrust. But if we rest vnmoueable vpon this foundation, there is no calamities nor tempests whatsoeuer that can ouerwhelme vs.

And yet the Prophets meaning is not that the faithfull can be so confident, that feare should no more assaile the; but notwithstanding they haue wauerings in their hearts, and be often solicited to distrust vpon diuers occasions; yet they resist the same with such constancie, that faith at the last gets the victory. For it is incident to vs by nature so ſcare, and to be full of doubtings: but ſuch a vice is to be corrected by this meditation; God is with me to helpe, and takes care for my ſalutation.

Some reade it in the preterperfect tence; I have helpe thee: but I reade it in the future; I will helpe thee. I alſo expound the Hebrew particule Al, Yet; it being often uſed in this ſenſe in other places. It may alſo be taken for Certainly: but I leave the choice to the readers diſcretion: If wee take it in the preterperfect; this particule will be as much as Yes, or, Likewiſe.

Under the word iniſtice, the Scripture not onely comprehends equitie, but alſo the Lords fidelitie in preſecting his Church. For he ſhewes his iniſtice, when hee defends his children againſt the conſpiracies and ſundry plots of their aduerſaries. He calles the right hand of his iniſtice then, that wherby he manifeſts his fidelitie and iuſtice. Whence we are to gather a ſingular conſolation, to wit, that we ought not to fear, ſeeing the Lord is determined to protect and defend his ſervants, for it is not poſſible he ſhould either put off, or renounce his iuſtice.

Verſ. 11. Behold all that prouoke thee, ſhall bee aſhamed and confounded: they ſhall bee as nothing, and they that ſtrive with thee ſhall periſh.

The Prophet promiſeth the Jewes aſſured helpe againſt their aduerſaries; for if hee had giuen them hope of their deliuerance, and had made no mention of their enemies, their minds might haue beene foreſtalled with many ſuch perplexed thoughts as theſe: It is true indeed that God promiſeth much touching our deliuerance out of all perils, but yet we ſee our aduerſaries the ſtronger; who deale cruelly and vnciuilly with vs. Where is then that ſalutation ſo oft and ſo largely promiſed? See heere therefore a circumſtance added to the generall promiſe. As if he ſhould reply, I grant your enemies ſtriſt, and yet as the laſt they ſhall be aſhamed and confounded. Deliuerance is promiſed, but it is vpon condition that you abide the brunt of your enemies, and buckle hand to hand diuers waies with them. For we muſt not promiſe to our ſelues any worldly reſt or tranquillitie heere, becauſe wee muſt alwaies bee ready armed to fight.

Verſ. 12. Thou ſhalt ſeek them, and ſhalt not finde them: to wit, the men of thy ſtriſe; for they ſhall be as nothing, and the men that war againſt thee as a thing of nought.

[Thou ſhalt ſeek.] That is to ſay; if thou ſeekeſt them. For we uſe not to ſeek our enemies after they are put to flight. Therefore I thinke it ſhould be conſtrued thus; if thou ſeekeſt them, thou ſhalt not find them; becauſe they ſhall be cut off, and brought to nothing. Wee muſt note here y there are two ſortes of enemies: the firſt ſort aſſailes vs by open violence: the ſecond by words: that is to ſay, they tene vs with ſlanders, cuffings, and reuillings: Not onely ſo, but they ſummon vs to their courts, as if their cauſe were iuſt and good: nay, they bring vs before the iudgement ſeates, and often accuſe vs of thoſe crimes wherof themſelues are the authors. But ſuch are the crafts of Satan, whoſe ſervants ſeeing theſe are, what maruell is it if they tread in the ſteps of their lord and maſter? Firſt then the Prophet ſpeakes of pleaders; and next, of the armed enemies which dealt roughly with the Church. What wonder is it then, if we be exerciſed with falſe accuſations? Nay, wee muſt not thinke it ſtrange, if many companions ſell themſelues to Antichriſt as his vaſſals to rebile and ſlander vs, ſeeing the ſame hath befallen the Prophets and other ſervants of God.

Sir policies.

Antichriſt hirelings.

Verſ. 13. For I the Lord thy God will hold thy right hand, ſaying vnto thee, Feare not, I will helpe thee.

The Prophet ſhewed vs erewhile whereupon we ſhould build the confidence of our ſalutation, that we might continue ſafe againſt all aſſaults; to wit, when we were certainly perſwaded that God is our God. Now hee teacheth the ſame thing, but in other words; neither is the repetition ſuperfluous: for we know how eaſily the remembrance of this doctrine vaniſheth away, albeit we haue it often repeated vnto vs. This promiſe therefore cannot be too much praized nor inſiſted vpon, ſeeing it doth ſo hardly take roote in our hearts. Let vs be well aſſured then that wee ſhall find an vndoubted iſſue in all our perplexities, becauſe the Lord will aſſiſt vs: as oft therefore as we ſhall be preſſed vnder anie dangerous aſſault, let vs learne to fix our eyes vpon him.

Now when hee calles himſelfe the Lord our God, it is not ſo much to ſet forth his power, as his goodneſſe, which he will make vs feele. For what benefit ſhould redound vnto vs from the knowledge of his power, if therewithall we were not well perſwaded of his loue? Ac the onely hearing of his power we are aſtoniſhed; but when his goodneſſe is preached with it, the very remembrance thereof ſufficeth to appeaſe vs.

He ſpeakes of taking by the hand, and of the voice againe; for it ſerues much to the comforting of our weak faith, to know what ſignes of loue God ſhewes vs, eſpecially when the doctrine of faith is ioined therunto, which aſſures vs of his perpetuall fauour. This claule therefore, ſaying vnto thee; hath great weight in it: for we muſt needs remaine alwaies in ſuſpence, till we heare the voice of the Lord in his word. It is that alone which ſufficeth to abolith all our ſcare, and to ſet vs at reſt. Are we deſirous then to hane our harts quieted, and to ouercome the many troubles which daily befall vs? Let vs hearken direſtly to the good word of God, and euer hold faſt the comfort thereof in our hearts. For it is

Two ſortes of enemies.

Note. impossible for them who either will not heare this word at all, or hearing it, doe it negligentlie, to attaine this peace: nay, let them be sure that an accusing conscience and a trembling heart shall alwaies pursue them.

Verf. 14. Fear not, thou worme Iakob, and yett men of Israel: I will help thee, saith the Lord, and thy redeemer the holy one of Israel.

What course God takes in ministering comfort to his afflicted Church.

HE seemes to speake somewhat too meanelly of this people in that he calles them a worme, and then dead men: but this comparison agrees well with the calamitie which the people were in: and he takes a better course this way to minister comfort vnto them, then if he had called them, The clec't nation, a royall priesthoode: an holy tree springing forth of an holy roote, or if he had adorned them with the like titles. For to say the truth, it had bin absurd to haue imposed such glorious titles vpon them, being pressed as they were vnder so base and vile a slauerie. By the name of worme therefore, he laments the ignominie and shame into which they were brought; and puts them in good hope of a better estate. For thus he shewes, that the Lord cares for them, notwithstanding they be abiect and vile in the eyes of men. As if he should say, Though now thou beest nothing, yet will I succor thee, and by restoring thee to thy first estate, will cause thee to come forth of this rottennes and abiect condition of thine.

Some translate the word Meshim, Men, which agrees not with the text, but must necessarily be translated dead, for it is an exposition of the other epithete worme, according to the Hebrae phrase. I agree with S. Ierome who hath so translated it, neither doe I passe much that the word is otherwise written here then elsewhere, in regard of the changing of the pricks: for this might easily fall out by reason of the likenes which these pricks haue one with another. The thing should be weyed, for there is nothing more absurd, then to reade men, in stead of wormes, vnlesse they reade it dead, or mortall. But God meant no doubt that this voice should be heard among the people who were now at last cast, to the end it might pierce euen into their graues; for on the contrary he promiseth to be the redeemer of these which are dead.

Now the Prophet had not such respect vnto his owne time, but that he meant his doctrine should extend it selfe to all ages of the world. As oft then as we shall see the Church oppressed vnder cruell tyrants, let vs call this sentence to minde, that albeit Gods children be trodden vnder foote by the proude, that they be despised, and that they haue not so much leifure as to take their breath, being persecuted and afflicted aboue measure: yet let vs know that euen such are in great account with God, so as they shall be able ere long to lift vp their heads. Let this be applied to euery one of vs in particular, that we may not be discouraged for the scoffes of the wicked, nor for the miseries and calamities which we indure, no nor for death it selfe. Do we resemble dead men, and is all hope of deliuerance taken away? yet wil our Redeemer come at last, and will raise vp his Church out of her very graue.

A Consolation.

When the Prophet adds the holy one of Israel, he brings back the people as he hath done before to the remembrance of that Canaan by which Israel was separated from other nations to be Gods peculiar people: thus he encourageth them, that their miserable condition should not too much deiect nor cast them downe, though they seemed as wormes of the earth, and as dead men.

Verf. 15. Behold, I will make thee a roller, and a new threshing instrument hauing teeth: thou shalt thresh the mountaines and bring them to powder, and shalt make the hills as chaffe.

HE speaks still of the restitution of the Church, promising that she shall be so exalted aboue her enemies, that she shall bruise and grind them to powder. And this he expresseth vnder a very fit similitude. For the Iewes to whom he speaks were almost crushed in pieces: but now on the contrary he tels them that they being deliuered shall crush their enemies, and so render them like for like. Now it was very needfull that this consolation should be added, for had they not recovered new strength, it is like enough they had bin subiect to the tyranny of their enemies for euer: God meant to arme them then, that they might be able to repulse the outrages done vnto them: so as they were now become the executioners of Gods vengeance as our Prophet shewes.

But by these words it might seeme he meant Obiect. to inflame the Iewes with a desire to revenge, which is directlie contrarie to the nature of Gods spirit: to which vice we being too much inclined, the Lord often commands vs to repress these desires of reuenge; so farre off is he from allowing them in vs: nay, doth he not on the contrary exhort vs to pray for our enemies? Math. 5. 44. Wee ought much lesse then to reioice in their miseries and calamities. I answer, that the Prophet shewes here what shall come to passe; but he neither commands, nor counsels them to desire the ruin of their enemies. If any reply, that we must not only expect, but also desire that which the Lord hath promised, seeing it turnes to his glorie, and our saluation: I confesse indeed, that this consolation greatly asswageth our sorrowes, in that he promiseth to punish our enemies one day who haue cruelly vexed vs, in rendering them the same measure which they haue measured. Yet this hinders not the law of loue, which enioines vs rather to sorrow for the euils which they voluntarily pull downe vpon their owne heads, and to bewaile their condition, then to wish their ouerthrow. If we embrace this promise with such faith as is meet, that is, in casting downe all the impacencie of the flesh at her feet, then then ſhall we firſt of all be diſpoſed to patience; and in the next place we will with a moderate zeale wait for the accompliſhment of Gods iudgements. We muſt therefore labour to quench all thoſe inordinate paſſions of the fleſh, and with an humble and meeke ſpirit to wait for the fit time when this iudgement ſhall be executed: not ſo much in regard of our owne particular profites, as to ſee Gods iuſtice exalted, according as it deſerves. David hath writtē to this effect, Pſal. 58. The righteous ſhall reioyce when he ſeech the vengeance, he ſhall waſh his ſectē in y^e blood of the wicked: not that they take pleaſure in their miſeries, but as it is ſaid afterwards in that Pſalme, Men ſhall ſay, Verily there is fruit for the righteous, doubtleſſe there is a God that iudgeth the earth. For God maniſeſts his iuſt iudgements to the world, when the wicked are puniſhed for their miſdoings. The Iewes (being cruell and blood-thirſtie) ſnatch vp theſe promiſes like ſavage and wilde beaſts, who rauēnouſlie deuoure the pray that is offered, and keepe a howling if they doe but apprehend the very ſent of it. But the Lord would not haue his children to forget that mildnes which he aboue al things likes of: for we can make no claime to be the children of ſuch a father, vnleſſe we be led with the ſpirit of meekenes and gentlenes. To be ſhort, by the harow waſh ſharp teeth, he means nothing eſſe but the fearefull and terrible end of the wicked, whom the Lord will ouerthrow by the hands of the faithfull, yet not ſo inflame their hearts with a deſire of ſhedding blood, as to comfort and cheere vp their ſpirits.

Verſ. 16. Thou ſhalt fanne them, and the winde ſhall carrie them away, and the whirlwind ſhall ſcatter them: and thou ſhalt reioyce in the Lord, and ſhalt glorie in the holy one of Iſrael.

His meaning is to ſhew that which he vttered in the former verſe, but by another ſimilitude. For he compares the Church to a fanne, and the wicked to chaffe, which the winde ſcatters to and fro. As if he ſhould ſay, Though the wicked thriſh and fanne you now, yet they ſhall be chaſtiſed more ſeuereſly, for they ſhall be cruſhed in pieces by their deſtruction, and ſcattered as ſtraw. But yet note the difference; for the faithfull are fanned in this world for their great good, becauſe they ſuffer themſelues to be brought vnder the obedience of God: but the other obſtinateſly reſiſting and abiding no yoke, the Prophet reacheth, that they ſhall be ſcattered as chaffe, that is, carried away by the winde. Thus then, God had threshed y^e Iewes with great ſtrokes of the ſlaile; he had ſmiten them downe with laying them on; and ſcattered them with his fanne: that ſo becomming cleane and pure wheate, he might gather them into his Garnet; but appointed out the prophane nations to be as ſtubble for the fire.

There is one thing more to be conſidered, to wit, that the victorious Church fannes ſome vnbeleeuers, to the end they might be purged, and finde place in Gods ſtore: and thus this prophetic was fulfilled, as oft as any of the Genules were woon to the laith by means of the godly, thereby bringing them vnder the dominion of Chriſt. Neither had the faithfull euer any earthly power to rule over their enemies: nay contrariwiſe, they are alwaies ſaine to poſſeſſe their ſoules in patience; but the Lord cauſeth them vnder ſuch heauie burthens to ſtoſh like the Palme trees, ſo as they eſcape ſaie from danger. And which more is, they haue euen amiddeſt theſe ſtreites troden the enemies of the truth vnder their ſeete with inuincible courage.

Moreouer, it is to be noted, that the Scripture is wont often to attribute that to the Church, which appertaines to none but God only. In regard then that God puniſheth the wicked for the fauor he beares to his Church, it is ſaid that he giues them to the faithfull to tread vnder their ſeete, becauſe the fruits of ſuch a benefit belongs vnto them.

Besides, as oſe as we read theſe prophesies, we muſt liſt vp our minds to Chriſts kingdom, that putting off all peruerſe affections, we may keepe ſuch a meaſure as is fitting, and neuer with this ſcattering before the time. For it ought to ſuffice vs that our head will at the laſt tread downe all our enemies vnder our ſeete, and make them his very footſtoole, that we may participate with him in his victorie. Where he addes, that the Iewes ſhould haue cauſe to reioyce in the Lord: though he meant hereby to aſwage their ſorrowes, yet therewithall he alſo exhorts the faithfull to modeſty, that they ſhould not breake forth into ſurie, if it fell out that the Lord ſhould thus ſubdue their enemies. For men are inclined to nothing more then to ſwell in pride, when things fall out as they would haue them: they forget then that they are men, and as for God whom they ought to acknowledge the author of all benefits, him they vtterlie neglect. Thus then, that the Prophet might bridle this inordinate ioy of the fleſh, which often caries vs beyond our bounds, he addes, in the Lord, becauſe, as all our glory and gladnes comes only from him, ſo it ſhould be aſcribed only to him. Laſtly, he exhorts vs to acknowledge Gods benefits, that the higher he hath advanced vs, the more carefull ſhould we be to cut off all pride and preſumption, that we may giue our ſelues to reioycing in him, and to the ſetting forth of his praife and glory only.

Verſ. 17. When the poore and needie ſecke water, and there is none (their thourg faileth for thirſt, I the Lord will heare them: I the God of Iſrael will not forſake them.)

HE goes on with the argument begun frō the beginning of the former Chapter: for he ſets out the miſerable and poore eſtate into which the Iewes ſhould be brought being in Babylon, till God hauing compaſſion vpon them, ſhould at the laſt aſſiſt and help them. Thus he aduerteth them to prepare fannes the wicked, to make them fit for Gods glorie.

Wherefore it is added, that the Church muſt reioyce in the Lord.

Letch'm that reioyceth, reioyce in the Lord.

We cannot approue our ſelues to be Gods children, vnleſſe we be led by the ſpirit of meekeneſſe.

Three things to be noted, in that the Church is compared to a Fanne.

The faithfull are fanned in this world for their great good.

The Church ſometimes themselves for the induring of extreame pueritie, when he telles them of thirst: for wee know there is nothing more tedious to bee borne, then the vans of vwater when one is thirstie. This therefore was a very apt kind of speech to expresse the grearntesse of their calamitie.

But the Prophet affirms that God will aid them, euen at the very pinch; and thus we may see to whom this promise belongs; namely, to such as being in extremitie, parch away, and faint with thirst. Hence also we may note, that the Church flows not alwaies in abundance of outward things, but is sometimes brought to penurie and want, that by such goades in her sides, the might be stirred vp to call vpon God; for wee are wont to wax idle when things fall out as we would haue them. It is good therefore to bee exercised with hunger and thirst, that wee may learne to seeke the Lord with our whole hearts. In a word, it is very needfull we should be pressed with pueritie, that so wee may the better taste the Lords bountie.

Questionlesse the Prophet meant by this circumstance to set forth the grearntesse of Gods grace; as also admonisheth the people hereby, not to faint nor quail in the time of need and want. Now we are to obserue what titles he giues them: for in calling them poore and needie, he speaks not to strangers, but of such as the Lord had chosen and adopted for his heritage. Wee ought not to wonder then if God now and then suffer vs to languish vnder hunger and thirst, seeing hee hath exercised our fore-fathers no lesse seuerely.

When he saith, the waters appeare not: let vs learne that the Lord for the triall of our faith and patience, takes away all means from vs, that we might rest vpon him alone. By the word I will beare, he signifies that God helps not all, but such as call vpon him: are wee so carelesse then as to contemne this helpe? It is good reason we should be left destitute stil, without feeling any succor, in regard we are vnworthy of it.

Verf. 18. *I will open riuers in the tops of the hills, and fountaines in the middest of the vallies: I will make the wilderness as a poole of water, and the waste land as springs of water.

19. I will set in the wilderness the Cedar, the shittah tree, and the myrre tree, and the pine tree; and I will set in the wilderness the firre tree, the elme and the box tree together.

THE Prophet amplifies the former doctrine by another circumstance; to wit, that the Lord needs no naturall, nor externall remedies to succour his Church withall, but hath secret and admirable meanes ready, by which he can supply the necessitie thereof about all that mans reason can conceiue or imagin. When wee see no helpe, despaire casilie creepes vpon vs; we dare hope no longer then we see worldly meanes present before our eies: if they faile vs, then all hope in God is gone. But our Prophet telles vs that this is the very houre in which we should gather greatest assurance; because the Lord hath then most libertie to manifest his power, when men are brought to extremities, and seeme vterly confounded. It is his property then to assist those that are his, against the expectation and thought of man, that thus wee might not suffer our selues to bee transported hither and thither by any difficulties or idle discourses.

Now the better to confirme this, hee promiseth to worke miracles conrarie to the order of nature: teaching vs thereby not to speake or iudge of these his doings according to humane sense, neither to tie his power nor promises to secondary causes: for the Lord is strong enough of himselfe, and needs no helpe from others; he is not so bound to the ordinary course of nature, but hee can change it as oft as it pleaseth him. Now we know the things heeere promiseth to doe, are conrary to nature: as to make riuers spring forth in the tops of mountaines; and fountaines in the middest of the plaine; and pooles in the desert. But why promiseth hee these things? Left the Iewes might thinke the way to be stopped vp against them, in regard of their returning home; because that great and spacious wildernesse was betwene them and it, wherein passengers were wont to bee parched with the heat of the Sunne, and left destitute of all necessaries. Thus then the Lord promiseth plentie of vwaters, and all other prouision needfull for their iournie.

These things were accomplished when the Lord turned the captiuitie of Zion; but much more perfectly when he conuerted the whole world vnto him by the Gospell of our Lord Iesus Christ, from whom flowed waters in great abundance, which were shed abroad thorowout the earth, to quench the thirst of poore forlorne sinners. Then there was such a change, as men could by no meanes conceiue the reason of it in their vnderstandings.

Verf. 20. Therefore let them see and know, and let them consider and vnderstand together, that the hand of the Lord hath done this, and the holy one of Israel hath created it.

HOW soeuer God shewes himselfe wonderful in all his works, yet when the matter concerns the restoring of his Church, it is then that he manifests his admirable power principally, so as he makes euery one astonished at it. We haue seene heretofore, and it will be repeated againe hereafter, that by bringing the people home from captiuitie, the Lord left such a testimony of his power therein, as shall be memorabile to the worlds end; and the Prophet in effect saith as much here. Now because we are either dull or carelesse in considering the workes of God, or heede them not as we should; therefore they easily slip out of our mndes : and this is the cause why he repeates one thing so often. For wee still stand muzzing rather vpon things of nothing, then to take to heart the workes of God : and if it fall out that they draw vs to a nice admiration of them, yet it is but as a wonder that lasts for nine daies, because our mndes presently runne after other fancies, in which there is no fruit at all. The Prophet awakens vs then once againe, that he might chase away all sluggishnesse and sottishnesse of mind from vs, that so all our senses might bee brought to comprehend the power of God.

First of all then hee willes them to see or behold, which gets a certaine knowledge: then hee addes consideration, which better confirms vnderstanding, and more certainly. It is not certain whether the Prophet speaks to the Iewes; that is to say, to those of the household of God, or to strangers: as I thinke, we may generally assume, that when the Church should be restored, the power of God should then be perceived of all nations neere and far off; so as all should bee compelled to admire so rare and excellent a worke. It is also certain that the Medes and Persians hauing gotten dominion ouer the Iewes, were wonderfully abashed in hearing these testimonies of the Prophets, but chiefly when they saw the accomplishment and effect thereof performed before their eyes: for they might well know that men could neuer bring such things to passe; and yet they were not conuerted to God themselves for all that.

Verf. 21. Stand to your cause, saith the Lord: bring forth your strong reasons, saith the King of Iacob.

IT was very needfull that this should be added to the former doctrine: for whilest we conuerse with the wicked, they scorne our hope, and thinke vs fooles, and too simple and light of beliefe. You see with what scoffes our weak faith is assailed and shaken; Oh these fellows build castles in the aire, and perswade themselves of the accomplishment of things impossible and vnreasonable. For as much as the Iewes then lay open to such taunts in their banishment, it was necessarie they should be fortified by such admonitions. And that this sentence might get the greater weight touching the assurance of it, hee sets all prophane people at nought, commanding them to stand to their cause: as men are wont to doe in iudgments. But in calling him the King of Iacob, he bids defiance to all the idols, and shewes that he will take his peoples quarrell in hand, to the end they may know at length that he is the protector and defender of his owne glory, in deliueing such as are iniustly oppressed. And yet it was needfull that the faithfull should be fortified with an exceeding measure of faith: for in what case was the estate of the Kingdome, whilest they were detained prisoners in a strange land, and in a manner ouerwhelmed with calamities? That is the cause why the Prophet called them dead men, and worne Iacob, verse 14. But their hearts were sustained by this promise, in which it was affirmed, Chap. 11. 1. that their root was hidden in the earth, when the people was compared to a tree hewen downe by the rootes: onely there should come forth a rod out of the dry stocke of Ishai, &c. Thus by the eyes of faith, they beheld the kingdome that was hid: for it was impossible to see it by the outward senses, no, nor to comprehend it by the light of naturall reason.

Verf. 22. Let them bring forth, and let them tell vs what shall come: let them shew the former things what they be, that wee may consider them, and know the latter end of them: either declare vs things for to come.

23. Shew the things that are to come hereafter, that wee may know ye are gods: yea, doe good or euill, that wee may declare it, and behold it together.

NOW hee directs his speech not onely to the idolaters, but permits them also to bring in their idols: as if he should say; I know you thinke your idols very wise, yet they will bee able to speake very little in the defence of so bad a cause. We see here that God takes vnto him the person of an aduocate, & speaks in the name of all the people; for he will not be separated from his Church, but is careful, as you see, to furnish and fortifie her against all the opprobries of the wicked, and against all their plots, whereby they indeuor to assaile our faith. We must be of good courage then, seeing God is pleased to bee the pleader of our cause, and stands betwene vs and the idolaters; and as one armed with his owne inuincible truth, bids defiance to the idols themselves, being ready in person to refute their vanitie.

Besides, he shewes that his elect are sufficiently furnished with his word to get the victorie; so as they need not be afraid to undertake the combate against all vnbeleeuers whatsoever. And truly he that hath profited in the heavenly doctrine as hee ought, shall easily confound all the impostures of Satan, by a constant and victorious faith. Grant our faith begins at obedience, but the reachablenesse by which wee submit all our senses to Gods worship, goes so before the vnderstanding, that from thence our minds are illuminated with sound knowledge.

By this marke wee may discern superstition from that true religion, which is directed by a rule that is neither doubtfull nor deceiueable. The idolaters vaunt themselves but too much in their errors, yet all their pride proceeds from folly, sottishnesse, and frensic. For if they would consider of the heavenly doctrine, with calme and quiet minds, all this ouerweeing by which they darken the light of truth, would forthwith fall to the ground. But the faithfull haue another respect, whose faith albeit it be founded vpon humilitie, yet it is not caried away with a foolish or inconsiderate zeale, because it hath the spirit of God for the conductor and leader thereof, that so the may neuer turne aside from the certaine light of Gods word. Therefore where the right rule of discerning things is absent, there can be nothing but superstitions, as Isaiab saith. Now because things are not to be done rashly, therefore the faithfull wils them to bring forth, and put them in their heares: not that they meant to halt between two opinions, being before instructed of God, but because the superstitious could alledge nothing for themselves, but that which was worthy to be laughed at of all. See here againe then the difference between blockish obstinacie, and true faith, which hath her foundation vpon Gods word, so as shee can neuer be moued.

But now let vs see with what argument our Prophet defends the Maiestie of God; for he so attributes vnto himselfe an infinite power and foreknowledge of all things, that none can take them vnto himselfe without manifest blasphemie. Whence we gather, that these things are so proper to the Diuinitie, that he indeed rightly deserues to be called God, who knowes and can doe all things. Thus the Prophet reasons then, If the Idols whom you adore be Gods, they must be able to know and doe all things: but they haue no power to doe any thing at all, neither in prosperitie nor aduersitie: neither do they know that which is past, presents, or so come: therefore they be no Gods.

But here ariseth a difficult question, for in prophane histories there are many predictions which the Idolaters received from their gods: for which cause it might seeme that Apollo, Iupiter, and others, knew of things to come: and therefore they were Gods. First I answer, that if we consider what the oracles were which these Idols gaue forth, wee shall finde there was either obscuritie, or great ambiguitye in them all. As, that which was giuen to Pyrrhus. Thy men ouercome shall the Romans. And, to Crasus, after he hath passed Halys, Crasus shall ouerthrow many kingdoms. Now the euent will shew that touching the first we must vnderstand it thus, The Romans shall ouercome thy men. And for the second, After Crasus hath passed Halys, he shall ouerthrow many kingdoms: not other mens, but his owne. Thus Satan at that time vexed the minds of men by these intangled ambiguities, that he might alwaies leaue them hanging in suspence, that gaue themselves to be directed by such impostures.

But besides this, that is to be noted which Paul saith 2. Thess. 2. 9. That the efficacie of error is giuen vnto Satan, that he might blind the vnbeleueers who delight in his delusions. When they aske counsell then of this father of lies, it is no maruell though they be deceiued vnder a colour of truth: but in the meane while, it is a iust punishment of God vpon them for their ingratitude.

We reade that a lying spirit was let loose by means of the false Prophets, the better to blind Ahab, who pleased himselfe in such beguilings: 1. King. 22. 21. It was good reason also that the prophane nations who had forsaken the true God, should bee intangled in the snares of error, and so drawne headlong into perdition. Thus then it is a fond dispute whereabout Saint Augustine labors so much; to wit, how the diuels may bee partakers of this prescience which the good Angels haue: for the cause hereof must not be sought out in nature. So in times past, when God gaue the bridle to false Prophets, he by their fallacies auenged himselfe vpon the peoples wickednesse: not that such imposters had any great gift of knowledge, but being fitted for this purpose, they did according to the licence giuen vnto them.

As touching God himselfe, altho his foreknowledge be hid, and that it bee a bottomlesse depth, yet is it manifest enough to those whom he hath chosen: so as they may discern him from the troope of false gods. Not that hee foretold all things by his Prophets, for mens curiositie in that behalfe is insatiable: neither is it expedient they should know all things; but he hath concealed nothing from them that is fit to bee knowne, for by many excellent prophecies hee hath forewarned that he hath a speciall care of his Church: as Amos saith; Is there any secret thing which the Lord will not reueale to his seruants the Prophets? Amos 3. 7.

The Lewes haue wickedly and vnworthily abused this prerogatiue, in that they haue set their fond predictions to sale among strange nations. But the truth of God hath alwaies so shined in the prophecies, that all men to whom God hath giuen wisdom, may cleerly perceiue that the God of Israel was and is the onely God. Verily it was no more possible for the idols to beguile the faithful which were instructed in the schoole of God, then at high noone to perswade one of a perfect fight, that blacke were white: so farre was it off for them then to get any credit by their foreknowledge; and yet least of all by their power: neither of which it was any way lawfull to ascribe vnto them, seeing it appeared by continuall prophecies, that one God onely ruled and gouerned all things, both aduersely and prosperous. The Assyrian thaked his idols for his victories which he obtained: but God had long before instructed the Iews of that which should happen; yea and had made it euident in all mens sight, that hee armed this wretch to execute his own iudgements. Read Chap. 10.

Now to doe euill, is not taken heere to commit any outrage, which is a thing far from the nature of God, but it signifies to correct and send aduersities, which indeed ought to bee attributed to Gods prouidence, and neither to fortune nor idols. And this is often met withall in the Scriptures: as in Amos 3. 6. Is there euill in the Citie, and the Lord hath not done it? Ieremiah also accuseth the people, in that they knew not that God was the author both of euill and good: Lament. 3. 38. The Lord then punisheth the finnes of the people by warres, plague, famine, pouertie, sicknesses, and other the like euils, and will be knowne to be the efficient from whom all of them proceed. Now Iſaiab alleagech not all the examples and arguments, by which he was able to haue diſtinguiſhed the true God ſtō idols; for that would haue taken vp much time: but he now contents himſelfe to proue it briefly, and yet plainly: for he hath not yet ended his argument.

Verſ. 24. Behold, yee are of no value, and your making is of nought: man hath choſen an abomination by them.

Now he ſcornes the idols, that he might confirme the faithfull in the confidence and obedience of God, ſcizing by this compariſon, that idolaters are miſerably blinded and beguiled. The word making, ought heere to be taken in the paſſiue ſignification: as if he ſhould ſay; It is a vaine imagination or inuention of nought. But it ſeemeth he ſpeakes improperly, in calling the idols things of nothing: for are they not made of gold, ſiluer, braſſe, wood, ſtone, or ſuch like matter? The ſolution is eaſie, for Iſaiab conſidered not the matter, but the qualitie; that is to ſay, the opinion of diuinitie which men gaue vnto them. For the ſuperſtitious doe not ſimply worſhip the wood, braſſe, or metall, but the maiſticke of God, which they fondly and blaſphemouſly tie to the corruptible idol: ſo as in effect heere is nothing but a vaine imagination. To which purpoſe Paul ſaith, that an idol is nothing: 1. Cor. 8. 4. For what can that be, or what name ſhall be giuen to a worke of vannie?

[An abomination.] Others reade it, The abomination; in the nominatiue, and vnderſtand it that ſuch are abominable as eſcēt and ſet vp idols: but I thinke it is otherwiſe to be vnderſtood. I take ſ̄ verbe choſen, indefinitely, as the Grammarians ſpeake, & it is often ſo taken in the Scriptures. For when the Prophet ſpeakes of the common people, and recounts ſome ordinarie and vſual thing, they expreſſe not the nounce ſubſtantiue. Thus I vnderſtand it then; Men cannot forge idols, but therein ſhall they alſo forge an abomination. And ſurely this is a worthy text, teaching vs both to abhor idols, and the boldnes of thoſe that ſet them vp: for this cannot be done without offering great violence to the Lord himſelfe. Many eſteeme it but a ſport, but the Prophet not onely thinkeſ otherwiſe, but he calles it ſuch an abomination, as God neither can nor will ſuffer vnpuniſhed.

The word To chuſe, points out as with the finger, from what fountaine idolatry ſprings. For true religion ſhould neuer be polluted with ſo many corruptions, if men had not preſumed to make them idols of their owne deuſing. Whence wee may note, that all deuifed and inuented worſhips of God are heere oppoſed to true pietie.

Verſ. 25. I haue raiſed vp from the north, and hee ſhall come: from the

eaſt Sunne ſhall hee call vpon my name, and ſhall come vpon Princes, as vpon clay, and as the poſter treadeth mire vnder fooſe.

Now hee turnes againe to the argument which hee touched before concerning Gods preſence and power; and ſhewes that the name of diuinitie appertaines to him onely, in whom theſe things are to be found. Touching his raiſing from the north, ſome expound it of Cyrus; others, of Chriſt: but I thinke the Prophet notes out two things heere; ſo as by north, we are to vnderſtand the Caldeans, and by the eaſt, the Medes and Perſians: as if hee ſhould ſay; There will come two changes worthy of memorie, for I will raiſe vp the Caldeans, and exalt their kingdom: afterward, the Perſians ſhall come, which ſhall be their Lords and Maſters.

Now although theſe things were to fall out long time after, yet the Lord ſhewes that they were already manifeſt in luſt; yea, that hee ordained them in his ſecret counſell, to the end the euent thereof might be a certaine token of his diuinitie. Yet in the firſt member of the verſe, he denounceth iudgement, to feare the Iewes: in the ſecond; he ſets forth mercy, in teſtifying that the captiuitie and deliuerance of the people was his worke, that all might perceiue that the preſcience and power of God were things which did indeed belong vnto him.

The prophane nations diuide certaine offices amongſt their gods: Apollo, he foretels things to come: Iupiter, he puts them in execution: another, hee diſpatches a buſineſſe contrarie to that: but Gods office is not onely to foretell and ſignifie things to come, but to diſpoſe of things alſo according to his good pleaſure. For in whatſouer thing it be that any diuinitie ſhaines, it ought to be aſcribed to God onely, and not to any other. This is the cauſe why hee appropriates to himſelfe both preſcience, and the execution of the ſame inſeparably.

In that hee ſaith, he will raiſe vp from the north, hee prophecieth (as I touched before) of the captiuitie to come: of which there was no feare at that time, becauſe the Iewes and Caldeans were in league together: in the next place hee prophecieth of the reſtauration of the people, who had leaue of Cyrus to returne into their Country. Now who would haue imagined that things being in ſo good plight, (as then they were) that ſuch a change had been poſſible, eſpecially in regard the euent was to fall out long time after, namely, about 200. yeeres after the prophcies of Iſaiab? And yet the Lord teſtifies that he is the author thereof, that ſo all might know that the Caldeans came not by chance; but were raiſed vp of God, who viſed them as his rods to correct the Iewes withall.

The Medes and Perſians alſo ſubdued not the Caldeans by their owne power, further forth then as they were led and directed by the ſame hand of the Lord. In this place therefore hee ſets forth the greatneſſe of Gods power, power, and that so plainly, that hee proues Kings and Princes to be but dag and dirt in comparision of him.

And thus we may yet better perceiue, that the Prophet not onely respected those of his owne time, but those also which should come after him : for they which then lued, could hardly discern what this meant ; but their successors which saw it, and had experience of it, vnderstood it much better. The end was, that all might know how there was but one God, before whose eyes all things are naked and manifest, and who gouernes all things according to his good pleasure. You may perceiue then what an excellent text this is, in that it shewes the perfection and certentie of Gods oracles. For the Iewes forged not these prophecies whilest they were prisoners in Babylon ; but their fathers hauing heard and receiued the long time before, their successors at last acknowledged Gods iust iudgement, whereof they had been forewarned before : and in the second place, they also embraced the mercy offered, in that they saw God would in due time send the deliuerance: who as he is the preferuer of his Church, so they felt him faithfull in his promises, by good trial and experience. From this place therefore we may safely conclude, that Isaiah spake not by his owne motion, but that God vsed his tongue as the organ of the holie Ghost, who put these wordes into his mouth.

The certentie of prophecies.

Gods prescience and power.

In that he saith, he shall come, it signifies that whatsoeuer was foretold by Gods commandement, should without all peradventure come to passe. For hee speaks of a thing to come, which sets out as in liuely tables the prescience of God. Secondly, in adding that he is the author of these things, that is to be applied to his power. To call upon the name of God, signifies nothing else in this place, but to perform somewhat at Gods commandement. It is true that Cyrus little thought he was imployed in the seruice of the God of Israel, neither meant he to obey him : but the cunct shewed that the Lord marched before him by his secret power and prouidence, to bring him to Babylon by continuall and incredible victories.

In comparing him to a Poster which treads his clay, it is added because euery one thought the strength and power of the Caldeans was so great, that none was able to vanquish the: for they seemed inuincible then indeed. But euen at that time when the Babylonians trusted in their wealth, despised their enemies, and proudly advanced themselves, the Prophet telles vs that they, and infinit others besides, should be troden vnder foote as the Poster doth his clay. In a word, his meaning is, that the prosperous estate of the Caldeans could no way hinder the change that was to come ; neither should they be able to let the Medes and Persians from inioying their Monarchy. And truly the issue did well verifie and confirme the truth of this similitude, when Cyrus hauing vanquished so many nations, and got many godlie victories, did in a little space of time conquer all the East.

Verf. 26. Who hath declared from the beginning, that wee may know ? or before time, that we may say, he is righteous ? Surely there is none that sheweth, surely there is none that declareth, surely there is none that heareth your words.

The Lord hauing made prooffe of his Diuinitie, returnes againe to shew the difference betweene him and idols. For he asks whether the idolaters were able for the confirmation of their false worship to say the like for themselves : that is, to alleadge any example of such a prescience or power. Now because hee might without controuersie, rightly attribute these things to himselfe, in derision of them he answers for them ; Surely we acknowledge, that hee which is able to doe such things, must needs be the true God.

Word for word it is, wee will say he is iust : but the word iust, hath many significations : for it is taken sometimes for True & Approved: in which sense it is said, Luke 7.35. That wisdom is iustified of her children: that is to say, approved. Wee haue seene testimonies enow then of Gods diuine maiestic, which hath put downe all the vanities of idols; in regard that all things in heauen and earth are gouerned and ruled at the disposition of one onely God; who in an instant is able to bring the mightiest Monarks to nought.

Now the Lord speaks heere in the plurall number, wee; to shew that he defends not his own cause alone, but his peoples also. I grant his owne eternitie is sufficient for him; but we being still infirme, it is behoouefull for vs to know certainly that hee is the true God, that so our mindes may not wander after creatures, but may rest wholly and onely in him. Experimentall knowledge therefore is added with the word, the better to sustaine our weake faith, if it be yet ready to wauer. In the next member he saith, that the idols are all mute, and leaue those that follow and serue them in suspence. Whilst God on the contrary, makes the candle of his word to burne so clearly, that it is able to giue light to his elect people, and to giue them both what to speake and thinke.

Experimentall knowledge must be ioined with the word.

Verf. 27. I am the first that saith to Zion ; Behold, behold them : and I will giue Ierusalem one that shall bring good tidings.

Now God expresseth that more clearly, which he had told the Iewes touching the things to come, that hee might fortifie them in the faith : for it should little auaille them barely to know what was to insue, vnllesse the Prophets had also shewed them the end and vse thereof. The Lord testifieth then, that his predictions tend to the edification of his Church : and it was great reason this should be added to the former doctrine, that the people might know theſe examples were propounded not only to ſet forth Gods power, but alſo that the faithfull for their parts might ſeele the fruit thereof. For thus we ought to apply all the examples of the preſcience and power of God vnto our own vſe; that ſo we may be aſſured of the care he hath ouer vs, and that he turnes all things to our ſaluation.

Zion is commanded then to acknowledge the true and onely God. Firſt in reſpect that he had juſtly inflicted this puniſhment vpon his people for their offences: ſecondly, being redeemed out of this captiuitie, they might eſpecially take knowledge of his mercy and goodneſſe.

Behold.] We haue to conſider of mount Zion here, as of a place not inhabited; and of Ieruſalem as a Citie laid waſte: for which cauſe Ieremias brings her in ſpeaking as widows and deſolate women are wont to doe; Behold, O Lord, how I am troubled: Lament. 1. 20. The Lord here ſets her out as a widow left alone. Afterwards, Iſaiah will incite her to reioice, as the who hauing been barren before, ſhould now bee made fruitful by the Lord, and ſhould haue many children. In this ſenſe the Lord now ſhewes that hee will comfort Ieruſalem, euen at that time wherein ſhee ſhall ſeeme nothing elſe but a woſull ſpectacle of horrible ruines. Now the meſſage is, that a widow and one that was forſaken before, ſhould bring forth many children: or, that thoſe who were ſcattered and diſperſed by baniſhment a far off, ſhould come towards Ieruſalem in great troopes.

This waſte therefore muſt bee oppoſed to the reſtauration performed by Cyrus, where it is ſaid, Behold, they come. And by the word firſt, is vnderſtood, not onely the eternitie of God, but alſo the antiquitie of the prophecie. Afterwards, Iſaiah addes how God teacheth the faithfull touching things to come; to wit, by the labours and miniſtrie of his Prophets.

Saint Jerom hath translated the word Messenger, Euangelist; but it properly ſignifies a meſſenger. And yet there is no great difference in the ſenſe, for his purpoſe is to ſpeake of the Prophets which ſhould bring the ioyfull and deſireable ſidings of this deluerance; which God by Moſes had alſo promiſed long before; to wit, that he would raiſe vp faithfull Miniſters from time to time, which ſhould far excell all ſoothſaiers, magicians, and prognosticators. For this cauſe alſo hee gaue the Church this goodly title, Chap. 40. 9. ſaying, that ſhee brought good ſidings, becauſe the word of God ſhould ſound forth in her.

Now this ſerues much for the praiſe and commendation of preaching. For the Lord comes not downe from heauen to teach vs, but vſeth the miniſterie of his ſeruants, and ſhewes that he ſpeakes by their mouth; which is ſo admirable a benefit, as ſhould cauſe vs to imbrace it with both our hands. Hee promiſed vnder the law (as I was ſaying) that hee would raiſe vp a Prophet in the middeſt of his people. Deut. 18. 15. Now he confirms that promiſe, in ſaying, that meſſengers ſhall not be wanting to comfort them in their dolours and extreme diſtreſſes. Hence we may alſo conclude, that there is no forme of a Church where prophecies ceaſe: that is to ſay, when there is none to bring vs good ſidings of comfort in our miſeries out of Gods word.

Verſ. 28. But when I beheld, there was none; and when I inquired of them, there was no counſeller; and when I demanded of them, they answered not a word.

The Lord hauing ſpoken of himſelfe, turns againe to the idols: for in theſe Chapters you ſhall meete with theſe anti-theſes euerie where; by which he oppoſeth himſelfe againſt idols. As if he ſhould ſay; I doe theſe things whereof I haue ſpoken; but the idols can doe none of them, becauſe they are void of counſell, wiſdome, and vnderſtanding. They can neither answer them that aſke things of them, nor mitigate their griefes. Now in this comparison, he ſhewes that hee can eaſily proue himſelfe to be God. Firſt, by the doctrine of the Prophet: ſecondly, by his works: which are not to be found among idols. Therefore it follows that they are no Gods, and that we muſt reſt our ſelues wholly vpon him that is the true God.

Besides, mens eies are ſo dazeled with careleſneſſe, becauſe they neither aſke, marke, nor conſider any thing: they bewitch their owne hearts then by beholding idols, and willingly deceiue themſelues; for doubtleſſe they ſhould quickly perceiue the vanitie that is in them, if they did warily obſerue all circumſtances. Whence it is euident, that Idolaters ſhall neuer bee able to excuſe themſelues by pretext of ignorance, becauſe they loued rather to bee blinded, and to erre in darkneſſe, then to ſee the light, and imbrace the truth.

Hauing condemned the Idols, now hee ſaith as much of thoſe that honour them. As it is in Pſal. 115. They that make them are like vnto them; and ſo are all they that put their truſt in them. He ſhewes then that the whole rabble of the ſuperſtitious ſort are full of vanitie, and haue neither wit nor diſcretion, I grant it is hard to perſwade them to it; for pride which poſſeſſeth them, ſo puffes them vp, that they thinke themſelues the onlie wiſe men of the world; and thoſe that follow not their traine, the onely fooles and dizards that are, in comparison of them. How proudly doe the Papiſts and their ſubtle Doctors deride and ſcorne vs? With what furie haue the Romans contained the Iewes in times paſt? What then? Let not vs care for ſuch a pride, ſeeing God condemnes them all here of vanitie.

The Prophet proceeds from the cenſuring of Idols, to ſay ſuch as honor them.

Papiſts deride the Proteſtants. The Romans contemned the Iewes.

Their worke is of nothing.] He calles works, both both the images which the superstitious forge to themselves, as also all the new found seruice, wherein there is neither end nor measure; when some one will bee the master and author of his owne religion. These works hee calles things of nothing.

In the next place he proues it more plainly, in calling them vaine, and chaos: that is to say, confusion: for so I expound the word Tobin, it being so taken in Gen. 1. 2, where Moses shewes that the earth was at the first without forme, and a confused lump. This place ought diligently to bee obserued against Idolaters; for they thinke images were ordained to preferue and vphold religion, and that mens mindes are stirred vp to de-notion by the sight of them; as if God were there present: they call them lay mens books, Images lay mens books, fit for such as are not capable of the doctrine of the Scriptures. But the holy Ghost heere pronounceth, that they are formelesse and confused things, because they trouble and detain mens mindes in superstition; yea, in such sort, that all their light of wisdom and knowledge, is choked and quenched by performing seruice to them. To conclude, hee teacheth that all images and the honor done vnto them; & not to only, but those that make and follow them, are nothing but mere vanitie, and that wee may boldly so iudge of them.

The Image and Image maker meere vanitie.

THE XLII. CHAPTER.

Verf. 1. Behold, my seruant; I will stay vpon him: mine elect, in whom my soule delighteth; he shall bring forth iudgement to the Gentiles.

It seemes the Prophet brake off his speech to speake of Iesus Christ: but wee must call to mind what we haue said elsewhere: to wit, that it is vsuall with the Prophets in promising any thing, hard to be beleued, forthwith to make mention of Christ: because all the promises are confirmed in him, which otherwise would be doubtfull and vncertaine. All the promises are in Christ, yea, and Amen, saith Psalm 2. C. 2. 20. For what acquaintance haue we with God, vnlesse the Mediator come betwene? we are so far separated from his Maiesie, that we can neither be partakers of saluation, nor of any other benefit without Christ. Now when the Lord promised any deliuerance to the Iewes, his purpose therein was to lift vp their mindes far above the thing it selfe, that so they might conceiue of better and greater things then their bodily libertie, and returne into Iudaean. For these things were onely as preparatiues to that great redemption which they at last obtained, and which we now obtaine by Christ Iesus. Yea, that grace of God that shined in the returne of the people, had been imperfect, vnlesse he had euen then bin knowne to be the perpetuall gouernor of his Church. We haue also told you before that the deliuerance out of Babylon, comprehended in it the absolute and full restauration thereof. It is no wonder then if the Prophets ioine this beginning of grace with Christs kingdome, for they vse so to doe almost in all their sermons. We must come to Christ then, without whom there is no (hearing) nor helpe in God: that is to say, we can lay no claime to the right of being in the number of Gods children, vnlesse we be grafted into that body, of which hee is the head. The very scope of the text therefore shewes, that hee is spoken of in this place, as of the head and first borne. Why so? Because the things heere mentioncd, cannot be attributed to any other then himselfe: but if this reason will not suffice, the Euangelists shall end the controuersie for vs. See Matth 2. 18, 19, 20, 21.

He calles Christ Gods seruant, by way of excellencie: for although this name belongs to all the faithfull, because they are adopted for his children, on condition that they sacrifice and consecrate themselves and their whole liues to his seruice and obedience: yea albeit the faithfull teachers, and all those who haue any publike charge in the Church, be particularly called Gods seruants, yet there is a speciall cause why this title agrees more properly vnto Christ, then vnto any of them. For he is called seruant, in respect that God the Father hath not onely giuen him the charge of teaching, or to doe some other thing; but also in regard that hee hath called him to performe an excellent and peerlesse worke, which is common to none but him. Furthermore, although this name be attributed to the person of Christ, yet it ought to be referred to his humane nature: for his Godhead being eternall, and that in respect thereof he hath euer obtained equall glory with his Father, it was necessary he should take our nature vpon him, that he might submit himselfe to the obedience of a seruant. And therefore Saint Paul saith; that he being in the forme of God, thought it no robbery to be equall with him; and yet notwithstanding emptied himselfe, and tooke vpon him the forme of a seruant. See Phil 2. 6. Christ then is a seruant, but voluntarily, lest wee should imagin his dignity might be somewhat impaired thereby. Which the ancient Doctors signified vnder this word Dispensation: whereby it came to passe, as they say, that Christ subiected himselfe to all our infirmities. The affection by which he became subiect vnto God, was voluntarie: in the meane while it was to the end he might become our seruants also: notwithstanding

When the Prophets prophesie of any thing hard to be beleued, they forth with mention Christ.

These promises were but preparatiues to that great redemption accomplished by Christ.

No helpe in God without Christ.

ſtanding this his ſo abiect a condition, hinders him nothing at all from inioying his ſoueraigne maieſtie; for which cauſe the Apoſtle ſaith, God hath giuen him a name aboue euery name: Phil. 2.9.

He vſeth the particule demonſtratiue, Behold, to bring the Iewes as it were to the ſight of the thing done: for that which they ſaw in Babylon, was able to haue put them cleane out of heart. He wil them therefore to turſe their eies from beholding things preſent, and to fix them onely vpon Chriſt. Some expound the verbe Tamachi, which ſignifies To ſtay, paſſiuely; others, actiuely. If we take it in the paſſiue, the ſenſe will bee, that God ſo ſtaires himſelfe vpon his Chriſt, that hee will giue him charge of all things, then as maſters doe to their truſtie ſeruants. Now it is a ſigne of great truſt which the Father repoſeth in him, that hee giues him charge of all things, and commits into his hands his owne rule, authoritie, and power. Yet I reiect not the actiue ſignification; to wit, I will erect or ſet him vp; or, I will eſtabliſh him in his eſtate: for that which followes immediately after, I will put my ſpirit vpon him, is but a repetition of the ſame thing. He ſaith in the firſt place then, I will ſtay vpon him: then he ſhewes the manner of this ſtay, in ſaying, that he will gouerne him by his Spirit: and thus hee ſhewes that he will ſuſtaine and helpe Chriſt in all things, and will not ſuffer him to fall vnder any difficulties. Now it was needfull that Chriſt ſhould bee indued with the holy Spirit from aboue, in regard hee was to take vpon him that diuine office of being mediator betweene God and men: for according to his humane nature, he was vnable to beare the waight of ſo great a burthen.

Eleſt is here taken for excellent; as in other places young men which are in the flower of their youth, are called men of choiſe. Hee is called a ſeruant eleſt then, becauſe hee ſhall beare the meſſage of reconciliation, and all his actions ſhall bee diſpoſed of by the Lord. Yet, behold heere a teſtimonie of that loue which God hath ſhewed vs in his onely Son; for in him the head, we may ſee our eleſtion ſhine, by which wee are adopted to the hope of a better life. Seeing then that there is an heauenly power dwelling in the humane nature of Chriſt; when we heare him ſpeake, let vs not ſo much looke vpon fleſh & blood, as liſt vp our mindes higher, that ſo we may ſee his diuinitie ſhine in all his actions.

In whom my ſoule delightis.] By this teſtimonie we may conceiue that Ieſus Chriſt is not onely well pleaſing vnto God his Father, but is alſo that his onely beloued Sonne: ſo as there is no obtaining of any grace, but by the meanes of his interceſſion. In this ſenſe it is alledged by the Euangelists, Mat. 3. 17. Luke 9. 35. Saint Paul alſo teacheth, that wee were reconciled with God through this his wellbeloued one, for whoſe ſake God loues vs: Ephes. 1. 6. According to which, our Prophet ſhewes that Chriſt ſhall not be adorned with the vertue and power of the holy Ghoſt for his owne particular onely, but to ſhed it abroad alſo far and wide vpon others.

By the word iudgement, hee vnderſtands a well ordered government, and not the ſentence which the Iudge pronounceth vpon the iudgement ſeat: for the verbe, To iudge, among the Hebrewes ſignifies to rule, gouerne, and direct things. He addes, that this iudgement ſhall extend thoroughout all the earth, as well to the Gentiles as to the Iewes: which promiſe was then new and ſtrange: for God was onely knowne in Iurie, Psal. 76. 1. ſo as forraine nations were excluded from any hope of grace. We therefore that are Gentiles, ſtand in exceeding need of theſe ſo cleare and euident teſtimonies, that we may grow daily in the aſſurance of our vocation and calling: for without theſe promiſes, what aſſurance is left vs? They nothing at all pertaine vnto vs. Chriſt was ſent then to bring the whole world vnder the rule and obedience of God his Father. Whence it appears, that all things without him, are but a confuſed chaos. Before hee comes therefore, it is impoſſible to ſee any right order or government among men. Let vs then learne in all things to ſubmit our neckes vnto his ſweet yoke, if we deſire to beuſtly and rightly gouerned.

Now we muſt iudge of this government according to the nature of his kingdom that we liue in, which, as you know, is not of this world, but conſiſts in the inward man: for it conſiſts in a good conſcience and integritie of life; approued not of men only, but of God chiefly and principally. The ſumme then comes to this, that our whole life being perverted ſince the time wee were altogether corrupted by the fall of Adam, Chriſt is now towards the end of the world come with an heauenly power of the ſpirit, to change our hearts, and to reforme vs into newneſſe of life.

Verſ. 2. Hee ſhall not cry, nor liſt vp, nor cauſe his voice to be heard in the ſtreetes.

The Prophet ſhewes after what manner Chriſt ſhall come; to wit, without ſuch pompe and preparations as earthly Kings haue. For when they come in, trumpets are ſounded on euery ſide, & the Heralds make a great noiſe and crying; ſo as a man would thinke heauen and earth would goe together. But Iſaiab ſaith, that at Chriſts coming, none of this din ſhall be heard: not ſo much to maniſeſt his modeſtie, as to teach vs that wee ſhould looke for no outward pompe in him. Secondly, that by the beholding of his meekneſſe, by which he ſeekes to draw vs to him, wee might run with all our might to meete him. Thirdly, that our faith might not languish, in reſpect of his baſe and abiect condition.

He ſhall not liſt vp his voice.] That is to ſay, he ſhall make no ſtirres, but ſhall bee quiet and ſtill. And ſurely hee was ſo far off from popularitie, that hee forbade the publiſhing of his owne miracles; to the end we might therefore know that his government and authoritie differed much from that which Kings and Princes seeke after, when they cause themselves to be proclaimed that they may get the fauour of the multitude.

Verf. 3. A bruised reede shall be not breake, and the smoking flax shall be not quench: he shall bring forth iudgement in truth.

Having affirmed in generall that Christ shall not resemble the Princes of the earth, he comes now to set forth his meekenes, in regard he will susteine the infirme and weak. By the Similie of a bruised reede, he shewes, that he will not vicerlic breake and bruise such as are halfe broken already, but will rather vphold and sustaine them, that he may augment that good which they haue in them. Then he sets it forth by another Similie, of smoking flax: which is taken from the weekes of lampes: men will not quench them though they burne but dimly, and cast a smoke, but will rather cleanse and keepe them in. Such tender affection the Prophet attributes to Christ, for thereby he supports our imbecilitie: And haue not all of vs good experience hereof? For looke wheresoever any sparkle of grace shines, he confers and augments it. Alas! if he should deale rigorously with vs, we should forthwith be brought to nought. Albeit then that we halt on the one side, and be much shiuered and broken, yet will not he by and by reiect vs as altogether vnprofitable, but will support vs for a long time, till he haue made vs more constant, and more strong.

God gaue vs a signe of this compassion in Christ, when hee was consecreted for this worke: for the Holy Ghost came downe vpon him in the shape of a Doue, which we know is a bird of a sweete and quiet nature, Mat. 3. 16. Now surely the signe doth full and whole agree vnto Christ, for he made no noise: he shewed not himselfe terrible like to the Kings of the earth: neither will he require more of his subiects then they are able to beare, but will rather relieue and susteine them. Did he not manifest this at his appearing; and doth hee not caufe vs dayly to feele it by his Gospel?

According to whose example, let the Ministers of y^e Gospel, which are his Lieutenants, learne to carrie themselves meekely: let them also be readie to support the weake, and with compassion to bring them home into the right way, lest by ouer-much rigor and austerenes, they quench the sparks of godlines which shine in them: let them rather hearken, incourage, and strengthen them with all their power. But lest any man should imagin that his so great lenitie should cause him to nourish vices in vs, he addes, that he shall bring forth iudgements in truth. Albeit then that Christ vpholds and susteines the weake, yet he is farre off from such flatteries as may nourish any vices in vs. Sinne must be corrected therefore without flatteric, because it is directlie contrary to that mildnes whereof the Prophet here speaks. We are to take heed that we fall not into extremities then, for the weake-hearted must not bee too seuerely handled, neither must the wicked be fostered by our dissimulations.

But that we may the better know who they be towards whom this lenitie must be shewed according to the example of Christ: we must carefullie consider of the Prophets words, for he speaks of a bruised reede, and of smoking flax. These similitudes shew nothing at all to the rebellious and strong, nor to the rebellious and vntamed ones: for such are vnworthy so great bountie: they rather deserue to be bruised and broken with hard strokes of a beetle by the seueritie of the word. Isaiab then you see so commends gentlenes, that yet therewithall he shewes to whom it belongs; and how, and when, it is to be vsed: for it appertaines not to the obstinate and hard hearted, or to such as vomit out their rage, but to those that shew themselves teachable, and do with willingnes put their necks vnder Christs yoke. The word smoke also admonisheth vs that he neither lightens nor sustaines them that willicie sit in darknes, but the sparkles, how obscure and small soeuer they bee. Therefore where obstinacie and impietie reignes, there is neede of extreme rigor, such must at no hand be spared. Nay though vice be not growne altogether intollerable, yet it must not be nourished by this softnes, but rather corrected and amended, that it spread no further. For care must alwaies be had that the truth may remaine in her perfection, that sinnes lye not covered, nor, that secret corruptions be not thereby increased, but that the weake may by little and little be formed to an vpright course of life. He speaks of such then as haue sincere hearts, and loue the puntie of religion, though many things be yet wanting in them: for there is to be seene in them good affections, and good desires at the least. It appears by many examples how seuerer Christ shewed himselfe to scornors, for he is consteined to vse his iron rod to breake such in pieces as will not indure to be guided by his shepherds crooke. He truly pronounceth indeede that his yoke is sweet, and his burthen light to those that follow him voluntarily, Mat. 11. 30. but it is as true that he is armed with a scepter of iron to crush his enemies in pieces Psal. 2. 9. and to fill all places with their dead bodies, Psal. 110. 6.

Verf. 4. He shall not faile nor be discouraged till he haue set iudgement in the earth, and the Isles shall wait for his law.

The Prophet alludes to the former verse, and confirms that which he said before, to wit, that Christ should be milde and calme towards the faithfull, and yet that he should not be soft nor effeminate, because he will manfullie execute the charge imposed vpon him by his father. That is his meaning when he saith, He shall not faile: in which verb there is an allusion to the former verse, where he spake of the smoking flax. Here he shewes there-therefore how lenitie ought to be tempered; to wit, that it incline not to ouer much indulgencie: for it muſt be vſed, yet ſo, as it muſt not hinder the faithfull diſcharge of our duties. Many win loue by their ſoftneſſe, to the end they may entertaine friendſhip with the world: but in the meane while, they wickedly and looſly betray the truth. I remember I once ſaw in a renowned citie two Preachers: one of them reprov'd ſinne ſharply and with a ſtrill voice: the other ſtudied altogether how to inſinuate himſelfe into the good grace of his auditors by flatteries. Hee that was ſo plauſible, expounded the prophecie of Jeremiah, and was then in hand with a very ſweete place that was full of conſolation. Now hauing found a text (as hee thought) fit for his turne, he began ſharply to inueigh againſt theſe rigoros and ſeuere reprouers, who are wont to terrifie men by thundering out the iudgements of God againſt them. But on the next day, becauſe the Prophet changed his ſtile, and agreeable to his vehemencie, roughly rebuked the vngodly, this vile flatterer was (to his ſhame) conſtrained to recant (as it were) that which all had yet fresh in memory. And thus the fauour of the people, at which he ſo much aimed, ſoone vaniſhed away; for himſelfe had diſcovered his owne heart: by meanes whereof, he was loathed both of good and bad. We muſt diſtinguiſh then, as you ſee, betwene the teachable and obſtinate, that we proſtitute not this our ſoftneſſe to all purpoſes.

Christs tender affection described by these two similes.

In the meane while Iſaiah ſaith, that Chriſt ſhall bee of ſuch an inuincible force, as will cauſe him to paſſe thorow all impediments: for by theſe words, ſil he hanc ſet iudgement in the earth, hee meanes that Chriſts miniſtry ſhall bee ſo effectuall, that his doctrine ſhall fruſtraie. For he ſaith not onely; Till he hath preached the will of his father; but, Till hee hath eſtabliſhed iudgements: that is to ſay, gouernment: as we noted before. Hee reſtifies then that Chriſts preaching ſhall not bee fruitleſſe, but ſo powerfull, that men ſhall be reformed by it; which ought not to be reſtrained to his perſon onely, but to the whole courſe of the Goſpell: for he performed not his office, as if he ſhould ceaſe at three yeeres end, but he continues it till his laſt coming, by the miniſtrie of his ſeruants. And we are taught here by the way, that it is not poſſible for vs to diſcharge this dutie faithfully, without ſuffering many troubles, nor without ſuſtaining many hard and dangerous combats; yea, ſo far, as to be overwhelmed by them, and in a manner driuen to giue ouer our calling. But we muſt not ceaſe for all that: wee muſt conſtantly goe on, and cheerfully hold out vnto the end. The Prophet therefore ſaith here, that Chriſt ſhall be ſo valiant, that he ſhall neuer forſake his ſtanding, but ſhall fight it out to the laſt ſtroke. Now we ought to ſet this example before vs, that wee may perſeuere with an inuincible courage, to the very end of our courſe.

He takes law here for doctrine; for the word is deriued from another which ſignifies to teach. Now the Prophets are wont thus to ſpeake of the Goſpell, and the doctrine thereof, thereby to note, that it was not to bee eſteemed new, but conſonant and agreeable to that which Moses himſelfe had taught.

By the word les, the Hebrewes vnderſtand (as wee haue told you before) the regions which were beyond the ſeas. And heere the Prophet againe confirms that which was ſaid in the former verſe, to wit, that Chriſt was appointed, the gouernour not ouer the Iews onely, but ouer the Gentiles alſo, though they were exempt from hauing any thing to doe with the Iewiſh policie. To be ſhort, this promiſe appertaines to all nations, that ſo all the world might feele the fruit of this reſtitution and reformation.

Where hee ſaith, the Iles ſhall vaiſt; his meaning is, that the cleſt ſhall embrace the Goſpell with a great and ardent affection, when it ſhall be offered vnto them: for therein the Lord maniſeſts the force of his election, when thoſe which before erred in darkneſſe, ſhould with all their hearts embrace the doctrine of ſaluation, being preached vnto them; And albeit they ran in times paſt hither and thither as ſtraied & loſt ſheep, yet they ſhould diſcerne the voice of the ſhepherd, as ſoone as they heard him, and ſhould willingly follow him, as Chriſt himſelfe ſaith, Iohn 10.16. Thus we may ſee the ſaying of Auguſtine to bee moſt true, to wit, that there are many ſheep oftentimes out of the fold, when there are wolues remaining in it. Now this vaiſing is a worke of God, when men who thought themſelues wiſe, ſhall ſuddenly renounce their wiſdome, and ſhall haſten to learne the Goſpell of Chriſt, that they may wholly depend vpon the mouth of ſuch a teacher.

Auguſtine.

Many ſheep without the fold, and of ten many wolues are within it.

Verſ. 5. Thus ſaith the Lord God, (he that created the heauens and ſpread them abroad, he that ſtretched forth the buds thereof, he that giveth breath vnto the people vpon it, and ſpirit to them that walke therein.)

This is a confirmation of that hee ſaid in the beginning of this Chapter, touching Chriſts Kingdom; to wit, that he will reſta- bliſh and reſtore all things. Now becauſe this might ſeeme incredible, he addes a glorious deſcription of Gods almightie power, by which our faith might be confirmed, but then chiefly, when the eſtate of things in the world ſhould be directly oppoſite vnto it. He brings therefore pregnant proofes in of Gods power, that all might bee moued to hearken after ſuch newes, and to be aſured that hee which hath created all things of nothing, who hath ſpread out the heauens, and makes the earth fruit- full, inſpires life into the creatures, and ſuſtaines and keeps all things by his outſtretched arme, can eaſily accompliſh the promiſes hee hath made touching Chriſts King- dome.

By theſe manners of ſpeech we are admoniſhed to fix our eies euermore vpon the power of God, that so we may credit that which he hath spokē accordinglie: for Isaiah speaks not these things at randō, but thereby meant to dispatch our minds of all scruples, because nothing is impossible to God, who holds the whole world vnder his subiection: but in the Chapters following we shall meete with the like phrases of speech. Some translate the word El, Mightie, others, God: but the matter is not great, because the sense comes all to one reckning: for he describes his power and Maicstie, and adorns him diuerslie with such titles, to teach vs, that he can easly raise vp and restore that which was faine to the earth.

Verf. 6. I the Lord haue called thee in righteousness, and will hold thine hand, and will keepe thee, and will giue thee for a covenant of the people, and for a light of the Gentiles.

HE repeats the name of God againe, in which we must supplie that which was said in the former verse touching Gods power. All almost doe thinke that he speaks here of the end of Christs calling, because he was sent of the Father to establish righteousness among men, of which before they were destitute, whilest he is absent from them, and being giuen to all sorts of vice and vnrighteousnes, were detained prisoners vnder Satans tyranny. But because the word Iustice, or righteousnes, extends it selfe further, I leaue this subtletie: neither is it said that Christ should be called to righteousness, but this phrase of speech must be resolued into the aduerb Iustly, or Holyly. I rather thinke that Christ is called in righteousness, because his calling is lawfull, and therefore shall be firme and stable: for we know that things disorderedly done can not long continue, vnlesse any had rather expound it, that God in ordeining of Christ the restorer of the Church, seeks for another cause of it then in himselfe, and in his owne righteousness: notwithstanding it is certaine that this word notes out vnto vs stabilitie, and is as much to say as faithfullie.

By the holding of the hand, he meanes the Lords present help: as if he should say, I will governe and uphold thee in the vocation vnto which I haue called thee. In a word, as thy calling is iust, so also will I iustifie and maintaine it, euen as if I led thee by the hand. And the verb will keepe, which is forthwith added, shewes sufficientlie what the holding by the hand signifies, to wit, that Christ shall be so governed of his Father, that he will be his teacher and protector in such wise that he will succor and assist him in all things.

I will giue thee for a covenant.] Now he expresth the cause why God promiseth to be the protector of Christ. Moreover, he distinguisheth betwene the Jewes and the Gentiles; not that they differ ought in nature, or, as if the one were more excellent then the other (for all haue neede of Gods grace, and Christ brings saluation indifferently to both) but in regard the Lord had attributed the first degree to the Jewes, therefore it was good reason they should be distinguished from others. Before the partition wall then was broken downe they were the more excellent, not by way of merit, but by the free grace of God, because the covenant thereof was first made with them.

But some may aske why Christ is named in the covenant, which was ratified long before: for there were two thousand yeres and more past from the time that God adopted Abraham: the originall of this separation then was long before the coming of Iesus Christ. I answer, that the covenant made with Abraham and his posteritie was founded on Christ: for thus runne the words of the covenant, In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed, Gen. 22. 18. The covenant was confirmed then only in Abrahams seed, that is to say in Christ: at whose coming it was confirmed, and established by effect, though it was done before in regard of the promise. Therefore it is that Paul saith, All the promises of God are Yea, and Amen in Christ, 2. Cor. 1. 20, who in another place is called the minister of circumcision, to fulfill the promises made to the fathers, Rom. 15. 8. And in another place he shewes yet more plainly that Christ is our peace, so as those who were furthest off, are made neere by his blood, and that both are by this meanes reconciled to God, and made members one of another, Ephes. 2. 17. By these places it appeares that Christ was promised not to the Jewes only, but to the whole world.

And here we haue againe another testimonie touching the vocation of the Gentiles, seeing our Prophet expresse affirms that he is giuen for a light to them. Now he mentions the light, because the vnbelieuers were plunged in most palpable and profound darknes, during the time that the Lord enlightened the Jewes only. What is our lesson then? Surely we are worthy to beare the blame for euer if we remaine in darknes, and haue this light of life in the meane while thining before vs. For the Lord calles all vnto him, none excepted, and giues Christ vnto all, that he may be our light. It remains then that we only open our eyes, then will he alone chase away all darknes, and will illuminate our minds by the word of truth.

Verf. 7. That thou maist open the eyes of the blind, and bring out the prisoners from the prison, and them that sit in darknes out of the prison house.

Isaiah recites heere more at large to what end Christ shall be sent of the Father, that we may the better perceiue what fruit we shall reape by the same, and how necessarie his help is. Now he taxeth all men of blindness, to the end we should acknowledge it, if we meane to be illuminate by Iesus Christ. To be short, he shewes vnder these borrowed speeches what our condition is, till Christ appeares for our redemption: to wit, that we are all miserable, poore, and destitute of all good things; inuironed, and overwhelmed with infinite miseries, till Christ hath set vs free free from them. But howsoever the words be here directed vnto Christ, yet the intent of the Prophet is thereby to instruct the faithfull, and to teach them that it is in Christ, and in none but him, vpon whom they must depend, and to assure them that the remedie of all their euils is ready at hand, if so be they seeke vnto him for succour. For the Prophet sets not Christ to schoole heere, as if he stood in neede either of instruction, or of a commandement: but hee speaks to him for our sakes, that we might know wherefore hee is sent of the Father: as it is in the second Psalme, I will preach the decree: aske of me, and I will giue thee the heathen for thy possession. For Christs dignitie and authoritie is there magnified, to assure vs that the Father hath giuen him soveraigne dominion ouer all, that so we might haue good hope, and might boldly put our trust and confidence in him.

Verf. 8. I am the Lord, this is my name; and my glory will I not giue to another, neither my praise to grauen Images.

Hence wee may gather how great the disease of incredulitie is, seeing the Lord vseth so many repetitions to heale it, as if he could hardly satisfie himselfe therewith: for we are by nature so inclined to distrust, that it is impossible we should beleue any thing the Lord speaks, vntill he first of all mollifies the hardnesse of our hearts. Besides that, we fall euer and anon into the same euill by our owne heedlesnesse, if we be not withheld by many persuasions. This is the cause then why he returnes to confirme that whereof he spake before, to wit, that his promises might not want their credit and authoritie.

The word Ihu, is sometimes a substantiue, and so it is a proper name of God: but I willingly expound it, This is my name: that is to say, this name, The Lord, is proper to me in such wise, that they sinne grieuously who attribute the same to any other. To be short, by this manner of speech he confirms all whatsoeuer he hath spoken touching the office of Christ, and now adds (as you would say) a seale to the promise. As if he should say; He that pronounceth these things, testifies that he is the onely God, and that this name belongs to him, and to none other.

I will not giue.] That is to say, I will not suffer my glory to be diminished; which must needs be, if I should be found either a liar, or inconstant in my promises. Thus you see that hee will performe his promises, because he will thereby prouide for the maintaining of his owne glory, lest the same should anie way be impeached. Truly this is a singular text; for it teacheth vs that Gods glory shines especially in the accomplishment and fulfilling of his promises: whence we also gather a wonderfull confirmation of our faith; to wit, that the Lord will neuer faile nor be wanting in his promise; neither can any thing hinder or stay the course of that which he hath once determined. But because Satan labours by all means to obscure and darken this glory of God, and to giue it either to false gods, or to men, therefore he protests that he cannot indure to be taken for a falsifier of his promises.

The opposition which is between the onely God, and idols, is to be referred to the circumstance of the time: for if God had not deliuered his people, the infidels might haue boasted, as if the true religion had beene built vpon a sandie foundation. His meaning is therefore, that he will not suffer the wicked to make their triumphs ouer the Churches ruin. And wherefore is it, I pray you, that God hath hitherto spared vs, and hath to this day dealt so fauourably with vs? Euen because his Gospell should not be exposed to the horrible blasphemies of the Papists. Hence let vs gather a general doctrine then, to wit, that the Lord will haue his glory wholly reserved vnto himselfe; for he will maintaine and defend it euery way to the vtmost: shewing that hee is exceeding ielous of it, when he cannot abide that the least iota thereof should be taken from him to be giuen to creatures.

Verf. 9. Behold, the former things are come to passe, and new things I doe declare: before they come forth, I tell you of them.

NOW he calles to mind the former prophecies, by the accomplishment whereof, he shewes he ought to be beleued for the time to come: for our former knowledge and experience of Gods goodnesse, is of great vse to confirme vs for hereafter. It is as much then as it he should haue said; I haue spoken often to your fathers, and you know that nothing hath failed of that which I haue promised, but all is come to passe: and yet when I tell you of things to come, you will not credit me. The experience you haue had touching things past, cannot moue you; neither can it prouoke you to forsake your infidelitie. This is the vse then which we should make in remembering Gods former benefits, that our saluation being for a time hid vnder hope, wee may sticke to his word and promise, and may be the better confirmed in it all the daies of our life.

By the pronoun Behold, hee evidently shews, that they knew by the effects that God neuer deceiued them that trusted in him, nor neuer spake any thing by his Prophets in vaine; for his truth was apparant to all, by infallible signes and tokens.

Before they come forth.] By this clause he separates God from idols, because it is he onely which knows and foretels things to come: but idols know nothing at all. Now although the gods of the Gentiles often times gaue them answers when they sought vnto them, yet we haue told you in the former Chapter, that such answers were either false or ambiguous. For those y depended vpon such toies, haue for the most part bin grossly deceiued, as they were wel worthy: and if any successe at the first hath ensued, yet they were thereby plunged the more deeply into eternal perdition. And no doubt it fell out by Gods iust judgement, that Satan by such delusions so bewitched the. But the prophecies had another drift, for the Church was by them either brought to repentance, to her great profit and saluation; or else was thereby fortified with good hope, to the end shee might not sinke vnder the weight of her afflictions. This remaines sure then, to wit, that the euert declares the truth of that which God hath foretold, for hee orders and gouernes all things by his prouidence.

That which is here spokē to Christ, is rather to instruct vs then him.

Chap. 41. 12, 23.

The Gentils iustly punished by the delusions of Satan in their idols.

Verf. 10. Sing vnto the Lord a new song, and his praise from the end of the earth: yee that goe downe to the sea, and all that is therein: the Iles and the inhabitants thereof.

What effect Gods benefits should haue in vs.

This exhortation to the praising of Gods, a further confirmation of the former promises.

The matter of this song.

The reason of this exhortation.

What the Prophet means by a new song.

New, is here opposed to that which is common and ordinarie.

Now he exhorts the people to thanksgiving: for Gods benefits should euer haue this effect in vs, namely, that the remembrance of them should stirre vs vp to sing his praises. Besides, in that he sets their deliuerance before their eyes by this exhortation, he further confirms the promises whereof he hath spoken: for his drift is to be well observed; to wit, that the faithfull ought not to be dismayed nor ouerwhelmed with sorrow, though they were in euill case, but to frame their minds to a ioyfull expectation of their redemption, and hence forwards to giue themselves to sing the praises of the Lord.

The matter of this song is, that Christ was reuealed and sent into the world of his Father, to susteine the miseries of his Church, and to restore her to her perfect estate; yea in a manner to renew the whole world. Now the more difficult the matter was to be beleued, the more desirous the Prophet was to remoue all obstacles out of their way, that he might the better imprint these prophecies in their minds. And no maruell though he labors thus to awaken them, seeing they were brought into extreame neede, and were left as men destitute of any hope of recouerie. The only sight of present things was sufficient to shake their faith, yea and to thinke that all things which the Prophets had foretold were but vaine & ridiculous. He comes in now therefore with this exhortation, that in so desperate an estate they might be of good cheere, and might boldly rest vpon the certaintie of these promises.

By a new song, he means an excellent, an exquisit, an elegant, and no common song, but such a one as should rauish mens minds by mentioning the wonderfull goodnes of God, the like whereof was neuer seene before, in which sense this word is taken, Psal.

33. 3. 96. 1. for new is opposed heere to that which is common. And thus the infinit mercie of God, which should be manifested in Christ, is extolled in this place, by whose means it fell out that this mercie of God was celebrated with wonderfull praises. Hence we learne that the more God hath enriched any of vs with the abundance of his

sing his praises. I grant that all are bound to do it: for what is he vpon whom the necessitie of this dutie is not strictly to be imposed? But those that haue bin enriched with the greatest benefits ought also to publish them with the greater magnificence. Seeing that In Christ God then hath bin pleased in Christ to set God hath set open vnto vs the fountaine of all blessings, vs the fountaine of all his blessings, &c. and hath vnfolded his hidden spirituall treasures to all, is it any maruell if he require vs to offer vnto him a new and excellent sacrifice of praise? But wee are to note, that this song can not be sung by any man that is v regenerate, for it must come from the deepest ground of the heart. The holy Ghost must be the inditer and inspirer theretore of these praises, or else they can not be acceptable. Moreouer, he not only exhorts one or two to this dutie, but all nations of the earth, because Christ is appointed a Sauiour to all.

In Christ God hath set open to vs the fountaine of all his blessings, &c.

None but the regenerate can sing this song.

Verf. 11. Let the wilderness and the cities thereof lift vp their voyce, the townes that Kedar doth inhabit: let the inhabitants of the rocks sing: let them shout from the top of the mountaines.

Although the Prophet comprehends all the parts of the world, yet he mentions none but such as were best knowne of the Iewes. For Iudea had the Sea lying of the West side, and the desert of Arabia lying on the East: and where he speaks of the paulions of Kedar, of the wildernes, and rocks, he means Arabia; but it by a figure called Synecdoche, so as vnder these words he also comprehends all the East: it is as much then as if he had said, From the sunne rising, to the going downe thereof, these praises shall sound forth, because the Lord shall now be worshipped in euery place, whereas before he was only knowne in Iewry. Things shall be changed therefore, for this song shall be heard to the vtmost ends of the world.

He mentions the townes of Kedar, because they knew that the Arabian Scenites dwelt in tents. But in speaking of the wildernes, he names the Cities: I note then, that he means not only that great desert which was between Iudea and Arabia, but the countrie lying beyond, which partly was esteemed as bordering vpon it; as also the plaines lying beyond the Mounts are called Mountaines, for the common people are so intent vpon that which is next vnto them, that they thinke things farre remote, resemble it. But our Prophet in the meane while exalts and sets forth the grace of God, in that it should extend it selfe to sauage and wilde people, whose crueltie and barbaritie was sufficientlie knowne.

Verf. 12. Let them giue glorie to the Lord, and declare his praises in the Ilands.

He now shewes what this shouting shall be, Heuen a celebrating of Gods praises, in regard gard his goodneſſe and bountie ſhall be felt in all places. Thus he commands then that this redemption bee ſung forth with one voice, ſeeing the fruit thereof ſhould be common to all nations. By this we are admoniſhed to ſing with ardent affection at this day, when we ſing the praifes of God, that we for our parts may be inflamed, and may alſo ſet others on fire to doe the like by our example. For ſuch as haue taſted and felt how gracious God is indeed, cannot mutter them for th betwene their teeth; neither will they be luke warme, nor ſing them alone by themſelves onely.

THAT which our Prophet addes now, ſerues to overcome the temptations of the faithfull: for hee attributes ſtrength and force vnto God, to teach them that his ſuccour is ſufficient for their ſafety. In aduerſitie we are perplexed, becauſe wee ſtand in doubt whether Gods power will be ſtrong enough for our defence; but then chiefly, when in hiding his eyes from vs, he ſeemes as it were to reiect our praies. For this cauſe the Prophet is careful to ſet forth the power of God in ſuch excellent termes, that all might learne quietly and boldlie to reſt themſelves vpon him.

The going forth whereof he ſpeakes, is to be taken figuratiuely: for God ſeemed to be hid in the time wherein he ſuffered his people to be oppreſſed and afflicted, without any appearance of ſuccour: this claue then ſignifies as much as to goe forth to the reſcue; which alſo is confirmed by the words following. For in that he attributes courage vnto God, who like a man of warre ruſheth vpon his enemies; they are ſimilitudes taken from humane afflictions. Whence we learne what force there is in his helpe, and yet his power without theſe borrowed ſpeeches, would moue vs little or nothing. He applies himſelfe therefore in theſe things to our capacities, as we haue told you before in many other places, that we might know with what affection he bends himſelfe to protect vs; with how great diſcontent he indures the affliction and oppreſſion of the faithfull: and in the third place, how terrible his wrath is, as oft as hee once prepares himſelfe to the fight.

But the circumſtance of the time is alwaies to be noted, vnto which the Prophet doubtleſſe had a ſpecial regard; & theſe prophecies muſt alſo be applied thereunto: for as long as the rage of the enemies increaſed, and as long as they triumphed over the afflicted people of God, the faithfull were to conſider of things farre about that which they ſaw with their eyes, and to be reſolved that God was ſtrong enough to ſubdue all their enemies, and to deliuer them out of their hands. Neither was it ſufficient that their perplexed thoughts ſhould onely be quieted by this promiſe, during the time of the captiuitie; but it was alſo needfull that it ſhould continue euen vntill the coming of Chriſt: for they were conſtrained from time to time to reſiſt many incurbrances, as it appears by the histories.

Verſ. 14. I haue a long time holden my peace: I haue been ſtill, and refrained my ſelfe: now will I cry like a trauiailing Woman: I will deſtroy and deuoure as once.

THE Prophet labors to prevent the temptations which are wont to put vs to much trouble, whileſt God deſers his helpe. We are then tempred with impatience, and thinke all his promiſes vaine. For we iudge it a thing vnſeemly for God to be ſilent, and to ſleepe, as you would ſay, when the enemy awakes, and aduanceth himſelfe; in a word, that hee ſhould be cold, whileſt they be inflamed with rage to hurt; and to winke at their iniquities, whileſt they ouerflow in all manner of cruelties.

The Prophet minded therefore to ſuſtaine and cheere vp the hearts of the afflicted, which wereouer loden with ſorrowes, and to perſwade them that God had not forſaken them, albeit euery thing ſeemed to threaten their ouerthrow.

Hee doth of ſer purpose expreſſe theſe words, a long time, leſt ſo tedious a languishing ſhould cauſe them to faint: for in regard they had been vexed with warre vpon warre continually after the death of Iehuſaphas, it was hard for them to paſſe ſeuente yeeres more, being in captiuitie, out of their owne Countrey. But their calamities were not yet an end, and therefore it was needfull they ſhould bee wiſely admoniſhed, that howſoeuer God did not by and by ſuccour them, yet they ſhould loſe nothing by this delay, if ſo bee they waited with patience. Thus alſo hee rebukes the vnbeleeuers, who gaue themſelves to all diſorder by abuſing this patience of God; who proteſts that he wanted not power, though hee contained himſelfe in ſilence.

Like a woman trauiailing. By this ſimilitude he ſets forth Gods wonderfull tender affection and ardent loue: for he compares him to the mothers wonderfull ardent loue towards her onely ſon, albeit ſhe hath brought him forth with extreme ſorrowes. One would thinke theſe things ſhould agree nothing at all vnto God: but the vehement loue hee beares vs can no way be expreſſed, but vnder ſuch borrowed ſpeeches. Hee is conſtrained to vſe ſuch ſimilitudes then, as are familiarly knowne, to make vs conceiue that of which we are ignorant: for his loue farre exceeds ours; that is to ſay, it is perfect and entire. And albeit his loue ſurpaſſeth all humane affections, yet there is no exceſſe therein.

Note alſo, that he meant to ſhew, that this deliuerance of the people ſhould reſemble a birth, to teach the Iewes that their graue was as a wombe vnto them, that so they might conceiue hope of saluation, euen in the midst of corruption. Albeit then that he was able to bring forth a new Church without paine or travaille, yet to the end his grace might the better appeare in such a birth, it is not without cause that he attributes the cry of a straitling woman vnto him. But for as much as this similitude might diminish somewhat of Gods power and maiestie, the Prophet ioines the other affliction withall: for touching his loue, hee resembles a mother; but touching his force and power, he is like a lion.

No exceſſe in Gods loue.

Wherefore the Prophet ſets forth Gods power with ſuch elegancie.

Theſe prophecies muſt be reſerued to the circumſtance of the time.

God as touching his loue, resembles a mother: but as touching his power, a lion.

Verf. 15. I will make waste mountaines and hilles, and dry vp all their hearbs: and I will make the floods Ilands, and I will dry vp the pooles.

THE Prophet meanes that all the munitions which animated the wicked to retaine these poore captiues, could not hinder the Lord from setting them at libertie. It was needfull this should be added to the former. For when we see the wicked armed (in a manner) with inuincible power, wee then tremble, and haue much a doe to apprehend Gods power, so faire as to continue stedfast in our confidence. Isaiab therefore insists vpon this point, signifying that neither men nor munitions can resist the Lord, when he is minded to deliuer his chosen. In a word, hee shewes that the change shall bee such, that those who were the strongest before, shall be broken to peeces, and shall gaine nothing by resisting of him. This I take to be the natieue sense of these words; so that it is needlesse to stand descanting subtilly vpon them any longer, as some do, who expounding these things allegorically, thinke that mountaines and hilles signifie Cities; hearbs, the men which dwell in them. But why should we follow such sophisticities, seeing the Prophet onely shewes that God is powerfull enough to fulfill his promises, and to deliuer his Church? because hee can easilie surmount all stumbling blockes that shall be laid before him. This sentence therefore answers to other prophecies which we haue scene heretofore, where Isaiab teacheth, that Gods power is not tied to second causes, when he is determined to preuent the enemies of their purpose; but goes thorow with his worke after a wonderful fashion, and breakes downe all impediments which seemed to thur vp his passage.

Gods power not tied to second causes.

Verf. 16. And I will bring the blind by a way that they knew not, and leade them by paths that they haue not knowne: I will make darknesse light before them, and crooked things straight. These things will I doe vnto them, and not forsake them.

HAVING shewed that the force of the enemy could not hinder God from deliueering his people, he goes on with that consolation which hee toucheth in the 13, and 14 verses. Now he calles them blind, which know not what way to turne them, nor which way to runne, by reason things goe so croosie and aukward with them. In a word, such as see no issue, but bottomlesse gulphes ready on all sides to swallow them vp: for euen as the way seemes plaine and smooth whilest things doe indifferently prosper; so in aduersitie, (but especially when all is darkened with sorrow, when all hope is gone, and death it selfe presseth hard vpon vs) wee stand then like amazed creatures. The Prophet teacheth therefore, that when all things are desperate; then, euen then is the time and houre in which wee should most of all expect succour and helpe from the Lord.

Who they be that the Prophet calles blind.

It is sometimes also very requisite that wee bee brought into straits, so as no euation be left vs, that wee be sometimes put to our shifts, and pressed on every side; yea, to be left starke blind in regard of the sight of any outward meanes. Why so? That we may learne to depend vpon the onely helpe of God, and to rest our selues quietly in him. For as long as we can see any leaning stocke, or are able to catch hold of any stay, bee it neuer so little, vpon that we set our whole hearts: and thus it comes to passe that wee are carried hither and thither, and vterly neglect the remembrance of Gods wonted fauour.

The time in which wee ought chiefly to expect help from God. It is good for vs sometimes to be brought into straits.

Would we be assisted and succoured then in our aduersities? Truly wee must content our selues to be blind then: that is to say, we must turne our eies from beholding things present, and keepe our reason shorr, that we may onely rest vpon Gods free promises. I grant this blindnesse will not be very pleasing to vs, and that therein the imbecillitie of our iudgements may be therein easilie discerned; yet ought wee not therefore to flee it much, if we wiselie consider the fruit that redounds to vs by it. For is it not better to be blind, and to be led by Gods hand, then to see with both eies, and to plunge our selues into vnauoidable dangers? He confirms this, in promising to turne darknesse into light. Be it then that we perceiue not so much as one sparkle of light in our afflictions, yet must wee not despaire of Gods helpe; but vse it rather as a meanes to trust more confidently in Gods promises then euer we did before: for God will easilie change our darknesse into light, hee will soone make crooked things straight, and leade vs in the way, that we may boldly walke therein without stumbling. But in the meane while, let vs know, that these things are onely promised to the faithfull that put themselves into Gods custodie, and are contented to be governed by him: in a word, to such as being acquainted with their owne dimnesse of sight, doe willingly content themselves to follow such a leader, waiting in the darknesse of their affliction, for the light of his countenance; for to such onely hee reacheth forth his hand. Let vs cleaue fast therefore to his promises, and not imitate the wise men of this world, who will walke by their own light whether he will or no; or will wander in vlawfull deliberations.

Verf. 17.

Verſ. 17. They ſhall be turned back: they ſhall be greatly aſhamed that truſt in graven Images, and ſay to the molten Images, Yee are our Gods.

BY this we euidentlie ſee to whom the former doctrine belonged: for now he diſtinguiſheth Gods ſeruants from Idolaters. As if he ſhould ſay, The Lord will deſtroy his people, but in the meane while thoſe that truſt in graven Images ſhall be aſhamed. As if he ſhould ſay, the choice is here ſet before you, either by grace to be ſaued, or miſerable to periſh. For all ſuch as put their confidence in Idols ſhall ſurely periſh: but thoſe that reſt vpon Gods word and promiſe ſhall aſſuredly be ſaued, I grant they muſt ſuffer many and tedious afflictions, yet they ſhall not be aſhamed nor confounded: for God in the end will ſhew that this difference which he puts betweene them that truſt in him, and thoſe that truſt in Idols was not in vaine.

Moreover, it is very certaine that by the two marks which he here expreſſeth, all Idolaters are meant, who fix their hope in any thing but in God. For albeit they bow not before their Idols, yet in attributing vnto them I know not what diuinitie, they take that glorie from the only true God which to him belongs: for the principall part of Gods ſeruiſe ſtands in faith and prayer, both which the Prophet expreſſeth in this place. But it may be demanded, whether they were ſo blockiſh as to ſay to a block, Thou art my God. For the moſt ſuperſtitious haue confeſſed that God was in heauen; neither haue they bin ſo groſſe as to attribute a diuine nature directly to wood or ſtone: it ſeemes therefore that Iſaiah makes them more ſottiſh then they are. I anſwere, that all Idolaters attribute that power to their Images which belongs to God; albeit they acknowledge him to be in heauen: for when they trot ſo faſt after their puppets and Idols, to whom they make and pay their vowes, doe we not euidentlie perceiue that they giue that to them which only appertaines to God? It is in vaine then that they labour to colour and cloake brutiſhnes, for they make gods of wood and ſtone, and in thus doing offer extreme violence to the Lord. The Prophet therefore hath not ouerſhot himſelfe, neither hath he framed a falſe aculaſion againſt Idolaters, becauſe their owne words doe ſufficientlie teſtifie the ſame to their faces, when they call their Idols and Images, gods. Yea let it be granted that they be not heard to pronounce any ſuch words, yet their madnes may eaſily be diſcerned, in that they thinke God can neither heare, nor help them, vntleſſe they proſtrate themſelues before a ſenſeleſſe ſtock, and mumble vp a certaine ſtint of prayers before it. Now theſe things are thus vetered, to let all know, that none can be ſaued, but he which ſhall truſt in God only.

HE takes blinde and deafe here in a contrarie ſenſe to that in the ſixteenth verſe, where by this ſimilitude he noted out thoſe who were ſo deſtitute of counſell, and overwhelmed with the weight of afflictions, that it deprived them of all fight. For by blinde in this place he meanes ſuch as did ſhut their eyes againſt the cleare light, and would take no knowledge of Gods works. By deafe, thoſe that would not heare, but rather delighted to lie ſnorting in the filthines of their ignorance. He condemnes here therefore the blindnes of the Iewes, or rather of all men, as I take it. For although it be true that he reprocherh the Iewes to be blinde euen in ſeings, and deafe whileſt they heard: yet this alſo doth in part belong to the Gentiles, to whom he manifeſted himſelfe by the creatures, ingraued in their minds and conſciences the knowledge of himſelfe, and to whom alſo he had and ſhould make knowne his admirable works.

In that he calles for audience then, he giues them to vnderſtand, that the only cauſe which hinders them from comprehending Gods truth and powet, is their owne deafnes, and blindnes, mixed with a malicious vthankfulnes. For he is not wanting in giuing them ſufficient teſtimonies of his power, neither is he negligent in teaching them familiarly enough: but the fault is in themſelues, in that they applied not their hearts to inſtruction, nor to meditate in his word: no, nor yet to behold his wonderfull works, ſo as every one wittingly ſhut their eyes: and therefore the Prophet ſhewes that all the fault reſted in themſelues if they ſaw not Gods power.

Verſ. 19. Who is blind but my ſeruant? or deafe as my meſſenger that I ſent? who is blinde as the perfect, and blinde as the Lords ſeruant?

ALL expoſitors almoſt doe expound this Verſe, as if Iſaiah mentioned the outrages which the wicked are wont to belch out againſt the Prophets. For they caſt the ſeruants of the Lord in the teeth with the things which they haue reprinted and condemned, which ſuch companions as they can not indure. As if they ſhould ſay, Who are they, I pray thee, whom thou accuſeſt of blindnes, and and who are they thou calleſt deafe? Take it hardly to thy ſelfe. We know none ſo blinde as thou art. They thinke then, that it is as much as if the Lord complained thus of the Iewes, I ſee very well that you eſteeme my Prophets for no better then blinde and deafe. But we ſhall by and by ſee that this interpretation ſutes nothing at all with the ſcope of the text: for the Prophet ſhewes afterward why he calles them blind, to wit, becauſe they ſaw many things, but kept them not. Now this can not any way agree to the Prophets, ſet vs therefore follow the pure and naturall ſenſe.

Iſaiah before condemned all men of blindnes, but the Iewes eſpeciallie, becauſe they inioyed thoſe meanes whereby they might haue a clearer fight then any others: for they had not only that glimmering, which was common to all nations, but had alſo the word founding in their eares, by which the Lord fully manifested himselfe vnto them. Though the whole world besides then was blind, yet these should haue had eyes to see and know the Lord, in regard they had the doctrine, as a burning lampe to giue light vnto them. Besides, hee speaks to these afterwards in the sixtie Chapter, Rise vp Ierusalem, and bee bright, for the darknes shall couer the whole earth, but the Lord shall giue thee light. Because the Iewes then were blind in so cleere light, therefore he taxeth them by this particular reprehension. As if hee should say; I strue but in vaine against those which are far off from mee, neither doe I much maruell at their blindness; but this is strange, that such a thing should befall my seruants, who haue the cleere light shining before their eyes. I am as one astonished to see them deafe, who haue the word continually sounding in their eares. The things I teach them are so plaine and euidēt, that the very blind and deafe may in a manner vnderstand them: but alas! I speake to them in vaine; for I thinke there is not a more brutish and sottish people to bee found. To be short, whereas they should haue had the quickest sense of hearing and seeing, they were the worst of all.

Whom I sent.] Isaiah descends by degrees
 1 from all men in general, to the Iewes in particular;
 2 then to the Priests, which were the lights of the world as it were: for it was their
 3 office to interpret the Law, to walke before others in a good example of life, and to shew vnto them the high way to heauen. Their
 The Priests. lippes, ye know, were to preferre knowledge, and at their mouth men were to seeke it: Mal. 2.7. The Prophet therefore complaines, that those who should bee lights and guides to others, were themselues as blinde as the rest.

Some refer the word seruant, to Isaiah: others, to Christ; and thinke that both were condemned of blindness. But this comes nothing neere the Prophets drift: for his meaning is, by way of comparisō to amplifye the former complaint made, touching the blindness of the Iewes. Their fault was much greater then that of other nations: but the Priests were yet in the greatest fault of all, who were their leaders and guides. Let vs know then, that by how much the more wee come neere vnto God, and the higher hee shall haue advanced vs in dignitie aboue others, the lesse shall our excuse be.

To the same purpose he calles them perfect; which indeede should haue been so: for hee puts them in minde by this reproch, of that perfection from whence they were fallen by so vnworthy a reuolt, and thereby had shamefully prophaned that holy and glorious name of their God. For seeing he gaue them a perfect rule of righteousness to direct them both in life and doctrine, it should haue been their parts not to haue swarued an haire breth from it.

Verf. 20. Seeing many things, but thou keepest them not: opening the eares, but he heareth not.

Now himselfe expounds what this blinding is, which he mentioned before; and he shewes it to be twofold. Thus we may perceiue well enough, that he speaks only of the Iewes, who wilfully and maliciously had choked the heavenly light. The fault will bee double then when they shall appeare before Gods iudgement seat, if wee shut our eyes before the cleere light, and stop our eares whilst he vouchsafes to teach vs by his word. I grant the prophane nations are iustly left without excuse: but the Iewes, and others, to whom the Lord so many waies manifested himselfe, shall bee worthy of a double condemnation, in that they would neither see nor heare God. Let vs feare this iudgement then, who haue so many worthy lights and examples shining before our eyes; for there is a blinding espied at this day in many, and as great a hardening as was among the Iewes; but the one shall bee no more excused then the other.

What we are to make of the former doctin.

Verf. 12. The Lord is willing for his righteousness sake, that he may magnifie the Law, and exalt it.

That he might amplifye the offence of the Iewes, hee now shewes that it was not Gods fault that they were deprived of good daies. Hee said before, that the miseries and calamities which they indured, were the punishments of their wilfull & obstinate blindness. Now, to fill vp the measure of their iniquitie, hee adds that by their obstinacie they had reiected all reliefe. This place is diuersly expounded. Some read; The Lord would haue it so; others, He is gracious. But I haue translated, The Lord is willing: that is to say, is inclined to deliuer his people, so magnifie his law, and to exalt his iustice. And thus God yeeldes the reason why he is ready to succour the vnworthy; to wit, because he is willing that his glory may be aduanced in their saluation, that his iustice by this meanes may also appeare, and that his law might flourish in her perfect strength. Now in that the Iewes were in such a distressed estate, it was because they wittingly loued darknesse rather then light, and to heape sorrowes vpon their owne heads, rather then to obey God: for had not this come betweene, it was his only desire to haue enriched them, and to haue aduanced them.

This verse diuersly expounded See more in the sequell.

Some expound it thus; The Lord is as willing to magnifie his law, and to shew his iustice in chastising the Iewes, as hee was to threaten them by it: and thus they refer the word righteousness, to the punishments and plagues wherewith this people were visited of God. Others translate, For my righteousness sake: and so refer it to Christ; but they deceiue themselues in the word Tsidō, for doubtlesse the Prophet speaks of righteousness, minding to shew that the Lord was willing to exalt the truth of his promises, and the the ſignes of his righteousneſſe in the conſervation of the Jewes: if they had not ſhewed themſelves unworthy of ſo great a benefit by their owne vnthankfulneſſe: others thinke that the Lord is heere excuſed, in regard it ſeemed hee ſuffered his truth to faile, when his choſen people were expoſed to ſo manie calamities; and that the Prophet meant to prevent this ſlander, by telling them that they were not thus ſcattered & made a pray, becauſe the Lord tooke any delight therein, but becauſe he reſpected his iniurie about all things. But for my part, I expound it ſimply in this ſenſe, that the Lord to exalt his Law, v. 13 readie to doe his people good, that his glory and iuſtice might ſhine therein: but that the people deſpised themſelves of ſuch a bleſſing, and thus made their caſe deſperate by their owne obſtinacie.

The ſenſe according to Matter Caluins iudgement.

The cauſe why the Lord adorne his Church with ſo many fauours.

From hence alſo we may gather, for what cauſe the Lord adorne his Church with ſo many of his fauours; euen that hee might magnifie his law, and bring men to the ſeruiſe of his Maieſtie, that ſo his truth might ſhine more and more.

When the Prophet ſaith that the Lord is willing; it is euident that he findes no cauſe out of himſelfe: but yet he expreſſeth it further, in adding for his righteousneſſe ſake: for he excludes all that men bring of their owne; neither can hee be moued to doe good, but becauſe he is juſt. Adde alſo, that no dignitie or worthineſſe is to be found in any man: but there was a ſpeciall reaſon of this, in reſpect of the Jewes, whom hee had vouchſafed to adopt among the reſt.

Verſ. 22. But this people is robbed and ſpoiled, and ſhall be all ſnared in dungeons, and they ſhall be hid in priſon houſes, they ſhall be for a pray, and none ſhall deliuer: a ſpoile, and none ſhall ſay, Reſtore.

NOW Iſaiah ſhewes, that the people are miſerable, and appointed to deſtruction by their owne folly, becauſe they reieced God, who otherwiſe was readie to haue ſuccoured them, but they, like deſperate perſons reieced all remedies, and ſought their owne overthrow. He ſo excuſeth the Lord then that he vehemently reprobues the people, who vnkindly did caſt off the Lord, and turned his grace into wantonnes. And yet, as I haue ſaid already, this is not ſaid ſo much to juſtifie God, as bitterlie to complaine of this nation, who had ſworne to procure their owne ruine, ſeeing they wilfully threw themſelves into ſundry calamities. If we ſee the Church ſcattered and deformed at this day, let vs blame our ſinnes, for we thereby would not ſuffer the Lord any longer to continue his louing kindnes towards vs.

The cauſe of the Churches deſormitie.

Some tranſlate the coniunction copulative Vau, Wherefore, which I haue rather tranſlated But, for it is oppoſed to the willingnes wherewith the Lord was inclined to defend his people, if themſelves had not hindered the ſame. I haue turned the verb To bind into the future tence: for the Prophet ſpeakes of the people which ſhould be led captiue. As touching the word Bakrim, I thinke they are here two dictions, ſignifying in the cauſe; for it they ſhould be taken for yong men, it will not agree with the ſcope of the text.

They ſhall be ſpoiled.] Thoſe who interpret this of all men generallie, of whom Chriſt only is the Sauour, come nothing nere the Prophets meaning: for he ſimply affirms that the people ſhall periſh, without hope of deliuerance, becauſe they reieced Gods grace. Hence let vs gather what ſhall vndoubtedlie befall vs, if we forthwith receive not Gods mercie whileſt it is offered: truly we ſhall deteue to be deſtroyed of all ſuccour, and to periſh miſerable, being made a ſpoile and a pray.

What it is to reieced grace being offered.

Verſ. 23. Who among you ſhall hearken to this, and take heed, and heare, for afterwards.

I*Iſaiah* goes on with the ſame argument, for he ſaith, that the Jewes are and ſhall be ſo beſotted, that they ſhall ſee nothing, though they be admoniſhed. In the next place he ſpeakes directly to them, and taxeth their dulnes, that could neither conceiue nor know any thing touching Gods iudgements, which yet were ſo maniſeſt, whereas in all likelihood they ought to haue been beſt inſtructed and taught of all others.

For afterwards.] That is to ſay, who being at the laſt tamed by afflictions, ſhall come againe to be thinke themſelves, though very late. We ſee then how this admiration vho among you! aggravates their crime and obſtinacie, when he ſaith, they ſhould be euer vn-teachable. In the meane while let vs learne what uſe to make of Gods threatnings and chaſtiſements: for the Lord neither reprobues nor corrects vs for our ſinnes as if he delighted in taking vengeance, or required any recompence, but that wee ſhould ſtand vpon our guard for the time to come.

To heare for afterwards.

The uſe we ought to make of Gods reprehentions and corrections.

Verſ. 24. Who gaue Iacob for a ſpoile, and Iſraell to the robbers? did not the Lord, becauſe wee haue ſinned againſt him? for they would not walke in his ways, neither be obedient to his law.

SEe wherefore Iſaiah complains, that the Jewes tooke nothing to heart; for when they ſuffered, they thought it came to paſſe by chance, and that they wanted the power to make reſiſtance, which their fathers had before them, through the want whereof they were overcome by their enemies. In a word, they looked ſo much to outward cauſes, that they neglected to thinke vpon the Prophets threatnings; neither regarded they Gods iudgements. He is ſaine therefore to ſummon them before Gods heavenly throne, to proue vnto them, that he was the author of their miſeries: for it was vnpoſſible to perſwade them that their corrections proceeded from God, who puniſhed them for their offences. And may

may not we say the like of the people of this age? Every one is content in generall termes to confesse that God is the author of all things: but come to particulars, men are ashamed to acknowledge that this & that crosse procedes from his hand. Why so? Because their mindes are distracted with many thoughts, and being forestalled with this opinion of fortune, they turne their mindes rather to this or that, then to the Lord. Isaiah shewes then that the sinnes of the people are the cause of such a ruin, and that the Lord is iust in bringing the same vpon them: according also as Moses had testified; How should a thousand haue fled at the sight of one, if their strong God had not sold them, and if the Lord had not thrust them vp? Deut. 32. 30.

Wee wonder to see things fall out euerie day contrary to our expectation; and in the meane while, neuer consider the fault to bee in our selues. We must therefore be brought vnto the consideration heereof by force of armes, as it were: it is needfull therefore that this doctrine should bee oft pressed vpon vs.

Now to the end they might not charge God with crueltie, the Prophet adds, that it came iustly to passe: for he smatched not vp the rod rashly, but that necessitie constraines him therunto; neither takes he pleasure in our afflictions.

We are to obserue two distinct things here then. First, that no aduersitie happens but by Gods providence, lest wee should imagin that things fall out by chance, or by some outward cause. Secondly, that no euill comes vpon vs iniustly, because we haue first prouoked God to chastise vs for our sinnes committed against him. It is in vaine for men to accuse God then of any hard measure; for wee must acknowledge his iust iudgements in the chastisement which are worthily befallen vs.

When he saith, they would not walke in his wayes, hee further amplifies the fault of the Iewes, but he changeth the persons; for in the former member hee put himselfe in amongst the rest, because hee was one of the same bodie, and therefore confessed his faults. Not that hee resembled the common people in anie leaud behauiour; or that he approved of their wickednesses, but it was vnpossible in so great an heape of vices, that he should be vtterly vntainted with some infection and contagion thereof, with the rest of the parts of the body. Therefore in as much as there was great difference betweene him and others, he changeth the person, and ads that they would not, thereby shewing, that so foule a rebellion displeased him: so as hee could neither winke at it, nor consent vnto it. For he speaks not here of pettie offenses, but of a contemps and renouncing of God; in regard that they brake out into pride, after they had shaken off his yoke. This is the cause why Isaiah in the second place puts himselfe out of the number.

Now if these things fell out iustly vpon the Iewes, let vs know that the like hangs ouer our heads, and will bee inflicted vpon the whole world, if being admonished, we repent not: for we see how gratioously the Lord calles vs to him, how many waies hee manifestis his good will towards vs, and with what loue he protests hee is ready to be appeased, though he be iustly offended. But if after so many fauourable summons, and daily experiences of his patience, we still refuse to giue care, it is most certaine that wee shall feeble by wofull experience, that the miserie which besell these, is common to all rebels.

If Gods patience be abused, we shall be sure to smart for it.

*Verf. 25. Therefore hee hath poured vpon him his fierce wrath, and the strength of the battell: and set it on fire round about, and hee knew not; and it burned him vp, * yet hee considered not.*

*Or, but he put it not vpon his heart.

BECAUSE Gods chastisements which had begun to seize vpon them, and were afterward to be finished in their captiuitie, were very grieuous, therefore the Prophet sets forth the vehemencie of them by these similitudes. For he saith, that the Lord will powre out his wrath: as if some thunder-clap should fall vpon their heads with great violence; or as if the waters should ouerflow, and make great breaches thorowout a whole Country; as the waters gushed forth hastily in the deluge, after the windowes of heauen were broken, and that the bottels thereof were set open: Gen. 6. 11. In the next place he vseth another figure, saying, that God will gather together his forces against vs, and to assault them to the vtmost. If any vnderstand this of the enemies which the Lord raised vp against the Iewes, I gainsay him not: for it is certaine that they came forth by Gods iust iudgement. For what was Nebuchadnezzar but Gods rod? Yet I rather thinke it should bee taken by way of similitude; to wit, that God entred by violence as an enemy armed, and powred out his fierce wrath vpon them.

Now he hath diuers means to fight against vs; for hee corrects his people sometimes by plague, sometimes by the sword, some times by famine: and therefore I thinke that in this similitude hee comprehends all sorts of afflictions where with the Lord smites his people. And if wee thinke them now and then too sharpe, let vs consider the vglinesse of our sinnes, and we shall perceiue that they be not exccssive, neither that he is too seuer and rigorous in punishing vs.

God hath diuers means to correcte.

We must set the vglie shape of our sins against the bitter taste of our afflictions.

And he knew it not. He cries out againe against this grosse sottishnes wherewith y Iewes were so possessed, that they could no way feeble their misery; neither could they so much as lift vp their eyes to heauen, to acknowledge Gods hand which smote them.

But he put it not vpon his heart. This phrase of speech signifies to consider of a thing seriously and diligently; for if we thought vpon it, and had it well giuen in our hearts that God is the Iudge, and that hee iustly chastiseth vs, wee should forthwith repent. The world at this day is pressed vnder manie calamities; there is almost no corner

We wonder why God afflicts vs, but we neuer wonder at our sinnes which are the cause of them.

God takes no pleasure in our afflictions.

THE XLIII. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. But now thus ſaith the Lord that created thee o Iſaiah: and he that formed thee o Iſrael, Feare not: for I haue redeemed thee: I haue called thee by name, thou art mine.

EE can not well tell whether this verſe depends vpon the former, or is ſeparated from it. For the Prophets (whoſe writings are leit vnto vs) diſtinguiſhed nor their Sermons into certain Chapters, ſo as we ſhould be able to define of euery dayes Sermon. Yet me thinks this doctrine is ioined to the former, ſo as hauing ſhewed himſelfe very angry againſt the Iewes euen to threaten their deſtruction, he meant now to ſweeten this ſharpeness. For the Lord hath euermore reſpect to the faithfull: neither is impietie at any time ſo ouerspread, but hee reſerues a ſmall remnant which hee keeps from falling into ſuch extremities, becauſe he cares for their ſafetie, and therefore the letter Vſu ſhould be reſolued into a particule aduerſatiue thus, Yes, will the Lord leaue ſome conſolation to the faithfull which ſhall ſucceed. This place therefore is to be well obſerued, for albeit the whole world ſhould conſpire to roote vs out, and that Gods wrath ſhould burne on euery ſide about vs, and that we were brought to deaths dore, yet if there doe but two or three of the faithfull remaine, we ought not to deſpaire, ſeeing the Lord ſpeakes thus vnto them, Feare not.

How this verſe depends vpon the former.

The word now, which the Prophet here vſeth hath great weight, for it ſignifies that the calamitie is preſent, or very neere at hand. In a word, that it is the time wherein all things ſhall ſeeme deſperate and ſorlorne; yet euen then, God will neither ceaſe to comfort his elect, nor ſweetly to aſſwage their forrowes, that ſo in the greateſt of their extremities they may haue a firme and an inuincible faith. Hereunto appertaine theſe Titles of Creator, and Forger, without which theſe propheſies would haue bin vterlie vneffectuall. Now we may gather from other places, that the Lord ſpeakes not here of that generall creation which is common to vs with other men, when we are borne dead in treſpaſſes and finnes, but of our regeneration into the hope of eternall life, in which reſpect we are alſo called new creatures: and in this ſenſe S. Paul ſaith, that we are Gods workmanſhip, Ephes. 2. 10. as we haue ſufficiently ſhewed heretofore. In this ſenſe he alſo calles himſelfe the former: as if he ſhould ſay, I haue not formed my Church, in which my glory clearely ſhines, to bring to excellent a worke to nought. Whence we may obſerue, that the Church hath nothing in her ſelle, whereof ſhe can boaſt, but of Gods grace, to which all theſe gifts wherewith ſhe is adorned, ought to be attributed.

The Church hath nothing in her ſelle to boaſt of.

That which is added, for I haue redeemed thee, may be as well referred to the time to come, as to that which was paſt: for the firſt deliuerance out of Egypt gaue them hope of that which was to come: but albeit he ſpeakes of the future deliuerance from Babylons captiuitie, yet the verb which is put in the time paſt ſutes well, in reſpect the Lord hath in his ſecret counſell alreadie redeemed vs, before the effect thereof extends it ſelfe vnto vs. Minding therefore to reſtiſie what he had decreed in himſelfe, to wit, to deliuer his Church which ſeemed as good as ſorlorne, he ſidly vſeth the time paſt, ſaying, I haue redeemed thee.

To call by name, ſignifies to receiue one into a neere band of familiaritie, as when God adopts vs for his children. What is the reaſon of this ſpeech? Surely the reprobates are ſo reiected of him that it ſeemes he forgets their names, in which reſpect the Scripture ſaith, that he knows them not, Math. 7. 23. Now by this oppoſition we ſee more clearly what it is to be called of God: to wit, when he leaues others to honour vs with a ſpeciall fauour, in putting vs into his familie, whereas we were ſtrangers from him before: ſecondly, when he receiues vs into his charge and proteccion to order and guide vs and all our actions.

What it is to be called of God.

To the ſame purpoſe he addes, Thou art mine. To giue the faithfull to vnderſtand, that he will euer haue a Church among his elect, becauſe he will not be deprived of his right of poſſeſſion. To be ſhort, he ſhewes that it is his peculiar and precious inheritance, which he will at no hand indure to be diſpoſſeſſed of.

Verſ. 2. When thou paſſeſt through the Waters I will be with thee, and through the floods, that they do not overflow thee. When thou walkeſt through the very fire thou ſhalt not be burnt, neither ſhall the flame kindle vpon thee.

THIS is a preiunction, whereby the Prophet ſhewes that the faithfull ought not to faint vnder their afflictions, ſeeing God is at hand to ſuccor them. Thus he ſpeakes more plainly then he did in the former verſe: for in teaching that the Church shall not bee free from miseries and calamities, but must wrestle with them without ceasing, he thereby incourageth her to patience and magnanimity. As if hee should say; The Lord hath not redeemed thee that thou shouldst inioy thy pleasures, and shouldst give thy selfe so ease and idleness, but to the end thou shouldst prepare thy selfe to indure all sorts of euils.

See Exod. 3. 2. & 2. Cor. 4. 8. 9. 10.

Though we be brought into many fraits, yet the Lord will giue vs a timely issue.

By fire and water, he means the infinit variety of troubles, to which we are subiect in this present life: for we haue not to incounter with one calamitie onely, but with many, and those of diuers natures: so as wee must make account to goe thorow fire and water. As the Apostle James also, Chap. 1. 2. exhorts the faithfull to count it exceeding ioy, when they fall into diuers tentations. For certainlie our faith hath need of many trials, in regard that oft times, he which for once hath gone away conqueror, may faint and be ouercome the second time. God exerciseth vs therefore with many afflictions, but in the end wee shall escape: the waves shall beat vpon vs, but they shall not swallow vs up; the fire shall burne vs, but it shall not consume vs. Wee shall haue a sense and feeling I grant, of the misery as well as others, but God will sustaine vs by his grace, and fortifie vs with the spirit of patience, that our hearts faile vs not, till putting forth his hand vnto vs, he hath drawne vs vp vnto himselfe.

Verf. 3. For I am the Lord thy God, the holy one of Israel thy Saviour: I gaue Egypt for thy ransome, Ethiopia and Seba for thee.

*Or, in thy stead.

A confirmation of the former consolation.

HE confirms the former sentence by the Experiences of the time past. For if the Lord had in former time succoured his people, it was good reason they should stay assuredly vpon his fauour (for the time to come.) Wee must euer keepe that in minde which is contained in the first verse; Fear not, for I haue redeemed thee: for these things should be ioined together, because they tend all to one end. For if the Lord be our God, then by consequence he is with vs: verf. 2. and wee shall proue by experience that he is our Saviour. But if wee will find him such a one to vs, it is necessarily required, that wee proue our selues to be a part of Israel; not in name onely, but to shew some infallible markes thereof in the whole course of our life. Thus you see the foundation of our confidence is in this, that the Lord is our God. Whence it followes, that those who acknowledge him not for their father, neither will rest vpon his good pleasure, must needs haue trembling consciences for euer. The wicked reioice and lift vp their crests against God, but their securitie and ioy is nothing else but a giddines, & frensic of spirit; by reason whereof, they hasten their owne perdition the sooner. But the faithfull are heere assured, that he who hath chosen them, will alwaies continue their God and Saviour: for which cause he hath separated

To seele God our Saviour, we must be a part of Israel, not in name onely, but by some infallible testimonies.

In this sense he calles himselfe the holy one of Israel, because amongst all mankind, which is naturally estranged from him, he chose his people Israel to be his peculiar flocke. Now howsoeuer the outward separation be to little purpose, vnlesse the elect also bee sanctified by the power of the holy Ghost; yet although Israel was polluted as well as other nations, God notwithstanding pronounceth that his couenant shall neuer be broken with them, in regard he will remaine alwaies like himselfe. Moreouer, it is euident enough that the word holy, is taken for him that sanctifies. Will wee be assured then of Gods loue? Let vs euer set before vs the pledge of our adoption, which will be vnto vs as a sure rocke whereon to settle our hearts: this grace therefore let vs beg of God with all the powers of our soule.

The meane to keepe our selues in the assurance of Gods fauour.

I gaue Egypt for thy ransome.] I meane not to expound these repetitions which the Prophet so often vseth, which also are frequent in his language: for hee puts, To giue the ransome; and, to giue in thy stead, in one and the same sense. Wee haue told you already that the Prophet consumes the faithfull, by setting these former presidents of Gods grace before them. As if he should say; You haue proued long since, that the Lord hath had care of your saluation; for how was it possible for Sennacherib to bring his forces against the Ethiopians, and other nations, but that God had a purpose to spare you, and to turne the violence of your enemies against your neighbours? Seeing then that hitherunto hee hath imploied himselfe so much in your seruice (as it were) you haue no reason to doubt of his fauour for the time to come. If therefore at any time it so fall out, that our necessities shall cause vs to call Gods prouidence or his promises into question, let vs remember what mercies he hath bestowed vpon vs in times past: for hee may iustly condemne vs of exceeding vnthankfulness, if hauing receiued so many fauours from him, wee yet stand in doubt of his good will towards vs for hereafter.

But some may aske why hee calles Egypt and Ethiopia the Churches ransome, seeing prophane nations are vnworthy of such an honor, as to be the redeemers of Gods children? I answer, the Prophet borrowed this phrase of speech from mens vsual maners of speaking: as if hee should say; The Egyptians, Ethiopians, and Sabeans were put in thy stead: I constrained them to sustaine the harmes which hung ouer thine head, even as if there had been an interchange made betweene you: for to saue thee, I destroyed them, and in thy stead, put them into the hands of thine enemies. Wee must resort to the historie for the better vnderstanding hereof: for when Sennacherib came with violence against Iudah, God arrested him by the way, and sent him to fight with others; so as hee was constrained to turne backe his forces. And thus the Egyptians and the Ethiopians were destroyed, whilist Gods people were spared: 2. King. 19. 9.

Hence we may easilie gather, that the same prouidence

Gods providence the ſame in relieving his Church at this d. y. as in former ages.

providence and infinite goodneſſe of God, is as far extended vnto vs at this day, as it was towards the Iewes, vnleſſe we be more then blockiſh. Is it not he, thinke you, that makes tyrants (who would care vs vp at a morſell, and with one conſent are all of them readie in their furie to ſwallow vs vp quicke) to deuoure one another, and to tūne their rage which was kindled againſt vs, vpon others? Doe wee not ſee by experience, that to preferre vs, hee puts others in our ſhoes, and ſo they become our raſome? When we therefore are thus fauoured of God, that the wicked lets vs alone in quiet, whileſt they are aſſaulting one another, (for it is not of anie good will they beare vs that wee are freed from their furie,) let vs then liſt vp our eyes vnto heauen, and with all thankfulneſſe acknowledge that God puts others in our places by a miracle, to the end he might ſpare vs: for we are as ſheepe appointed to be ſlaine; naked ſwords are glistering on euery ſide euer vs; and if hee either plucked them not out of their hands, or turned the points and edges of them towards others, wee ſhould feele the ſmart which they doe.

Whence it is that the Church liues in peace.

Verſ. 5. Fear not, for I am With thee: I will bring thy ſeed from the Eaſt, and gather thee from the Weſt.

WE muſt not thinke there is any ſuperſtition in that the Prophet ſo often repeats this exhortation. All of vs know, and haue ſufficient experience how inclinable our nature is to diſtruſt. Now it is hard for vs to thinke or imagin into what wonderfull ſtraits and diſtreſſes the Church of the Iewes was then brought. As ſoone as we begin once but to call Gods promiſes into queſtion, our mindes are diſtracted with many paſſions, we ſtand amazed at the greatneſſe and diuerſitie of the dangers, we are daily aſſaulted with vexations of ſpirit; at laſt we grow ſottiſh, and cannot bee brought to taſte how gracious our God is. Our mindes therefore being thus poſſeſſed with deſpaire, haue we not neede that this voice ſhould againe & againe ring in our eares, I am with thee; feare not: that ſo this feare may either be whollie rooted vp out of our hearts, or at leaſt ſo corrected by little and little, that we may not be overcome of it: for I can tell you, if it take neuer ſo little rooting there, it is not ſo eaſilie diſplanted. Hence we obſerue, that we ought to place our hope in nothing but in Gods being preſent with vs: for if he be abſent, we muſt needes tremble for feare or wax dull and dead hearted, or ſtagger to and fro like a drunken man. And yet the Lord would not haue vs be void of feare, as that we ſhould thereby grow careleſſe or idle; but when we heare that he is neere, and that he will aſſiſt vs, faith muſt then overcome all difficulties in the moſt eminent dangers.

Wherein our hope ought to be placed.

I will bring thy ſeed from the Eaſt.] This place is drawne (as we know) out of Deut. 30. 3, 4. For the Prophets are the expoſitors of Moses, and doe gather their doctrine out of his writings, as we haue ſhewed you from the beginning. Thus the Prophet applies this place of Moses then to the circumſtance of the time preſent, vnto which in this Sermon he hath a ſpecial reſpect. Moses had thus foretold, The Lord thy God ſhall cauſe thy captiues to returne turne, and will haue compassion vpon thee, and will gather thee together againe out of all nations among whom he hath scattered thee: yea, though thou wert scattered to the utmost parts vnder heauen, yet from thence thy God will gather thee, and from thence will he take thee. Isaiah applies that now to a particular, which Moses then spake in generall, vttering the same thing, only changing some of the words. The summe is, that howfoeuer it be as difficult to gather together in one a people not only disioined, but also scattered among many nations to the utmost coasts vnder heauen, as to gather ashes together againe, being sprinkled here and there, yet God by his admirable power will cause these members thus rent in sunder, and diuided so farre one from another, to be gathered againe together into one body.

Verf. 6. I will say to the North, giue: and to the South, keepe not back: bring my sonnes from farre, and my daughters from the end of the world.

See verse 5.

VNDER the fourre quarters here mentioned, he comprehends the whole world, for so it is vsually taken in all languages. But Isaiah speaks somewhat in an higher stile then Moses doth, because he meant as it were to set the people againe to the possession of their land: and this is very fitting for such descriptions which place things before our eyes as if they were presentlie acted: he might haue determined this matter in a word, but this varying of the sentence hath much more weight in it; for he brings in the Lord as it were vsing his prerogatiue royall ouer all creatures, commanding all parts of the world so for his people againe as libertie.

Not all Israel but the true Israel shall be gathered.

Bring my sonnes.] By this he signifies that all Israel shall not be gathered, but that part only which is the true Israel: for all those that descended from Abrahams loines according to the flesh, were not Israelites indeed, but there were many bastards. These things therefore appertaine to the true seed: for the whole body of this great people escaped not, but a little handfull only, as we haue seene heretofore in the tenth Chapter. The number of those that were led captiue was exceeding great: the flock or remnant that returned was very small: there was that seed with which the Lord would not breake his couenant made with their fathers, nor suffer them to perish.

But this seemed an hard matter for the Iewes to beleue, who were despised of all, and were not only hated, but reiected as the cursedest nation vnder heauen, so as they were thought vnworthie to be reckoned among the comon ranke of men. It was needfull for them then to cleaue fast to these promises: they knew well enough indeed that Cyrus should come, but yet they could not imagin what maner of man he should be, seeing he was yet vnborne. Had they not need then, thinke you, to be armed with a constant and firme faith to wait vpon the Lord with inuincible hope and patience, when many held these prophesies for no better then fables? Let vs from hence learne to looke only vnto God, that so we may be resolu'd of his help, and of the performance of his promises in due season.

Verf. 7.  Every one shall be called by my name: for I created him for my glorie, * formed him and made him.*

* All called by my name.

* Or, yea, I haue.

RESOLUE this sentence thus, because the Prophet vseth the singular number in stead of the plural, and therefore the expositors haue erred here. For thus they translate, All those that are called by my name, I haue formed for my glorie. But I rather vnderstand it thus: All called; that is to say, All shall be called by my name: as in another place he saith, My name shall be called vpon them. Why so? Because I haue created, made, and formed them for my glorie.

You shall finde the exposition of these words in Chap. 29. 23. & 43. 21.

Hee continues the argument which hee handled before touching the gathering of the people into one body, though it were dispersed into diuers and farre Countries. As if he should say, If this worke seeme incredible, you must not iudge of it by the order of nature, but according to the absolute power of God.

By my name then, signifies vnder my conduct, for we haue told you in another place, that he shewes himselfe fauorable vnto vs, when in respect of the right of adoption, he reputes vs for his people. Now because the Iewes were to be led vnder his government and power, and not by the strength or riches of men, he affirms that his name shall be exalted in this deliuerance.

For my glorie.] The Prophet addes a reason, which contains in it a strong confirmation, to wit, God will haue his glory to shine in the saluation of his people: wherein he protests, that it is his proper office to protect his Saints, and to be as careful for their good, as for the glorie of his owne name, which he will neuer suffer to be blasphemed. In a word, that his honour (of which he is the perpetual defender) and the saluation of his people, are things so neerely conioined, that nothing can separate them.

And the further to amplify the same, he repeats one and the same thing in diuers formes of speech, that he might the better perswade them to be the finisher of that good worke which he had begun in them. To this appertaines the particle Al, which signifies Yea, or Also, and in some places, Now: so as many expound, Euen as I haue created and formed this people, so doe I desire to set them in their first estate, and restore them to their former libertie. It may also be translated Yea, which I thinke agrees best, and I haue also followed it in the text, to shew, that whatsoever the people receiued, proceeded from the meere grace of God, who had a speciall care ouer their saluation, so as he could not indure his fo faire and excellent worke to remaine vnperfected. This place then sets before vs a singular testimonie of Gods exceeding ceeding fauor, in that he hath not only created vs men, but hath also reformed vs according to his owne image.

Verf. 8. I will bring forth the blind people, and they shall haue eyes: and the deafe and they shall haue eares.

The breuitie and shortnesse of the words breeds some obscuritie in the sense. For some translate thus; I will bring forth the blind, and him that hath eyes: that is to say; as well him that sees, as those that see not: The deafe, and those that heare. Others, by this word Blind, vnderstand such as haue eyes; but yet so dazeled, that they cannot behold the secrets of Gods heauenly wisdom. But when I consider the words well, I had rather expound them distinctly thus, I will so bring forth the blind, that I will giue them sight; and will deliuer the deafe in such wise, that they shall recover their hearing. Word for word it is; To bring forth the blind, and there shall be eyes; the deafe, and they shall haue eares. For the drift of the text requires that this benefit should be noted distinctly: so as the people must first be deliuered, and then eares and eyes shall bee giuen them.

The Lord effected this, when he brought his people forth of Babylon: but the Prophet doubtlesse looked further off; euen to the kingdome of Christ: for then the faithfull were not onely gathered out of Caldea, but from the foure quarters of the world also; as wee may plainly and excellently see in the first sermon made by Saint Peter, where manie of diuers nations were gathered together to profess the same faith. Many also afterwards, which seemed altogether strangers, came and ioined themselves to the same bodie, and shewed that they were the true children of Abraham.

Therefore if we will finde the full accomplishment of this prophesie, we must come to Iesus Christ, by whom onely wee are deliuered from the bondage of Satan, and maintained in a free estate. It is he that giues vs eyes and eares, who before were both deafe and blind by nature. But we must call to minde that which I haue often said heretofore; to wit, that this restauration wrought by Christ, is ioined with the returne of the people: for that which God then began in drawing his people out of their captiuitie, he continues while Christs second coming, and then in the end will finish it: and thus there is but one and the same deliuerance still. Whence it follows, that the benefits mentioned in this verse, ought not to bee restrained to so narrow bounds, as to the captiuitie onelic.

Verf. 9. Let all the nations bee gathered together, and let the people bee assembled: who among them can declare this, and shew vs something? Let them bring forth their witnesses, that they may be iustified; but let them beare, and say it is truth.

The Prophet takes to him heere the person of God, and derides the Idols; as hee hath done before. For it stood him in hand (especially then in respect of the time) to separate the true God from Idols. It is no great matter to attribute the glory of the diuinitie vnto God in generall termes, but it is exceeding difficult to giue it to him onely, and to suffer all false gods to be brought to nothing, which then were in great request. For in the destruction of the Iewes, the Idolaters feasted their gods of gold and siluer, no lesse then if they had overcome the God of Israel. The Prophet therefore instructs the people afore hand, what they should answer touching the scoffes and taunts of their enemies, in respect of whom, they were but a litle handfull; and chargeth them notwithstanding to continue constant in their holy profession against all the power of their aduersaries, and not to feare though great troopes of them should bee assembled to defend their errors. We haue told you before that prescience and power belongs to God onely, in regard that he sees and gouernes all things according to his will: by which two arguments, hee conuinceth all false gods of fallhood: Chap. 40. and 41. Now he repeats the same thing, not so much to draw the Idolaters from their error, amongst whom these prophesies were not read, but to confirme and establish the Iewes in faith, who were assured that they knew the true God. I grant this doctrine now is common both to Iewes and Gentiles. The Iewes haue indeede depriued themselves of it by their owne vnthankfulnesse: so as that benefit which was then proper to them, is now translated vnto others. But Isaiah spake then especially to the Iewes, to force them to an vnfaired detestation of Idols, and of the superstitions of the Gentiles, which had then their full swing. Now hauing summoned the Idolaters to maintain their Idols cause, he takes it for granted, that it will be but in vaine for them to giue such honour to their puppets, because they are able to foresee nothing to come.

He addes, that no witnesses will be found, which can auouch that the false gods haue euer indeede prophesied of any thing truly: in which regard their cause is left destitute of a lawfull defence. It is not to be denied but in all times there haue gone many flying reports touching the miracles which Idols haue done: and we heare of many wonders now a daies: for Idolaters are no lesse obstinate in auouching their fables and lies, then they are bold and impudent to inuent them: but if we come to examin them, we shall find no truth therein, but meerer fancies and sottish deuices. For this cause the Prophet giues them the prize, if they bring in such witnesses as are worthy of credit: and thus it is to God onely then, to whom this honour appertaines to haue witnesses on his side.

To conclude, as if the matter were cleere enough of it selfe, he stands vp more boldly,

The reason why the Prophet instructs the people againe in the doctrine of Gods prescience.

Where we shall find the full accomplishment of this prophesie.

Three extents of this and the like prophesies.

The only let that keepe men from the knowledge of the truth.

Those that are willing to learne, shall soone perceiue that the truth is grounded vpon infallible arguments.

and commands the vanquished to hold their peace. Yet in that he bids them heare, it is to shew that the only let that keeps men from the knowledge of \bar{y} truth is, that their minds being forefalled with error, they scorne to giue care vnto God. For this contempt hinders them from coming to repentance, but rather stand proudly to defend the inuention of their owne braine. But the Lord was ready to haue taught them if they had had but a patient care. For where could they haue found a better Master? But their pride and rebellion blinds them so, as they can not see the truth, and thus vp their eare from hearkning to the voice of God. Are they not iustly left without excuse then, seeing they obstinately reiect him, and will not lend their eare to his doctrine, who offers himselfe in such milde sort to instruct them? For if they were in any measure teachable, Isaiah well assures that they should be constrained to subscribe to their owne condemnation: for in truth, all such as shew themselues teachable shall easily vnderstand that the truth of God is grounded vpon infallible arguments, and not vpon vncertain opinions which haue their foundation in the ayre.

Verf. 10. You are my witnesses, saith the Lord, and my seruant, whom I haue chosen: therefore ye shall know and beleue me, and ye shall vnderstand that I am: before me there was no God, neither shall there be after me.

THE Lord hauing prouoked the Gentils to disputacion, and hauing shewed that all that which they esteemed touching the excellencie of their Idols, was meere vanitie and lies: now he leaues their assemblie, and brings forth his witnesses, that men may know, that his case is not like that of the false gods. He rightly boasts then that the true witnesses take his part: for the Iewes had bin taught by reuelations from heauen so farre forth as sufficed to giue them vndoubted assurance of their saluation. And yet he priuily taxeth their ingratitude, if so be they did not publicly and vnfeindly protest that they had learned all things requisite for the defence of Gods glorie: and this indeed he also summons them to vow neuer to forget nor conceale \bar{y} truth of these prophesies, by means whereof they might be able to shew the certentie of the true religion: for it had bin treacherie in them to haue defrauded so good a cause of any defence which they were able to bring vnto it.

By the name seruant, some vnderstand Isaiah: but I had rather vnderstand it of all the Prophets, because there is here a change of the number. This name then is giuen particularly to the Prophets whom the Lord chose to maintaine his truth: and yet I doubt not but in vsing the singular number he had a speciall and chiefe respect vnto Christ, who is the end and accomplishment of all the prophesies: and it is also very sure that he is the speciall witness that shall conuince the whole world. But yet we must haue regard to the Prophets intention, which is, to call the Iewes indeed to be the Lords witnesses: and to accuse them of ingratitude if they did not frankly profess what they had heard and seene. For hauing had so many good lessons taught them from time to time, they could not without grosse disloyaltie either doubt or call into question the power and goodnes of God. Thus then he shewes that the Church is picked out to bear witness to the truth of God: in which sense S. Paul calles her the pillar and ground of truth, 1. Tim. 3. 15. It is her office then to publish and maintaine it, so as it may be receiued of the posteritie from age to age. Not that the Lord stands in need of such an aid, but because it is his good pleasure neither to approue nor establish the same among men by any other meanes.

Isaiah therefore vnder this one word comprehends all the seruants of God, who stand bound to defend their Masters quarrell, but chiefly the Ministers, who ought to be as the Standard-bearers, and by their example to shew the way vnto others. It is therefore speciallie spoken to them here, though in general he is to be held no faithfull seruant of God, who so smotheres the knowledge of the truth within him that he dares not auouch it before men.

Therefore you shall know. That the Lord might not seeme to procure to himselfe witness of things vnknowne, he adds, you shall know, you shall beleeue, you shall vnderstand: thus shewing by the order of the words, that faith precedes, or goes before confession. If this confession then haue no deeper foundation then in the tip of the tongue, and is not laid in the heart, it shall be held but vaine and friuolous, for the Lord neither allows nor approues of it. And yet there is some difficultie in the order of the words, To know, To beleeue, and To vnderstand: for faith is not alwaies ioined with knowledge: for a man will not say that such beleeue because they know; faith is often absent, where knowledge is present. Besides, it is doubtfull in what sense vnderstanding, which is here added after beleeue, is to be taken, as if it should differ from knowledge. But our Prophet in this place shewes that there is a certaine preparation vnto faith, by which God first giues authoritie vnto his word as oft as he sees a necessarie vse of that meanes. I grant, that faith begins at humilitie, which captiues all our reason vnder Gods lore: but because we embrace not the doctrine that is offered with such an assurance as we ought, therefore God confirms it vnto vs by sundrie testimonies, and by our owne experience, the better to settle vs firmly in this faith. In this sense the Euangelist S. Iohn shewes, that himselfe and S. Peter beleeued the Scriptures after they had seene the signes of Christes resurrection in the Sepulchre, Iohn 20. 8. In another place also he saith, That the disciples beleeued in Christ, when that was accomplished which he had spoken with his mouth, Iohn 2. 22.

The summe then is, that the Iewes shall seele

The Church must beare witness to Gods truth.

Faith goes before confession.

Many haue knowledge that are destitute of faith.

The truth of the prophesies must neuer be forgotten.

Gods cause must not be left destitute of our defence.

ſeele by the effects that they worſhipped the true God, after their faith ſhall be confirmed by viſible ſignes. In the meane while, he diſcernes true faith from that wauering infidelitie, which carries vnconſtant men hither and thither; for God giues knowledge & judgement alwaies to his elect, whereby they ſhall be able to diſtinguiſh truth from lies. After this, followes faith and ſtedfaſt confidence, which cauſeth them without doubting to receiue whatſoener the Lord hath revealed vnto them: and then faith kindles a greater light in the vnderſtanding, and as we profit by degrees, ſo knowledge growes in vs, and ſhines more clearly. But this is not effected in vs by our owne reaſon, but by the power of the holy Ghoſt; for it is his office to enlighten vs.

That I am] His meaning is, that it is needfull to know what a one God is, if we would rightly beleue; and that it is he only, and none other that we worſhip, leſt our mindes ſhould wander & erre in receiuing whatſoener men ſhould approue, or thruſt vpon vs. That is not properly termed faith, which forgeth ought according to mens fancies, or that lightly credits whatſoener is ſet before her: neither is that faith which by and by cleaueth to whatſoener is ſet before her, or wauereth in vn-certainte: but true faith is grounded in ſuch aſſurance, that in giuing her ſelfe to the ſer- uice of the onely true God, ſhee boldly con- temnes all falſe gods, and deliuer mens vnderſtandings from all feare of error.

By this we may know what to iudge of the implicit faith of the Papiſts: for they account them beleueurs, who are ſenſleſſe and ignorant of that they beleue, and are not able to vtter one word touching the knowledge of God, (for alas they know not what he is) in regard they openly proteſt that they beleue as their mother the holy Church beleue. But the Lord contents not himſelfe with ſuch abſurdities, but ioines faith with vnderſtanding, to teach vs that the one cannot be ſeparated from the other.

Moreouer, it is no faith, vnleſſe we beleue in one God the Father of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, who ſpake by the Prophets and Apoſtles. Hauē we not this God? Then is our faith but a fancie. Which that they may the better confirme touching that he ſaid before, I am the onely God; he addes in the ſecond place, that there is no other before him. The words La-nogaz, may indeede in another ſenſe be taken for a creature, or worke of God; for they ſignifie, There is none. But becauſe it ſeemes that this is conſtrained, I willingly agree to the vſual expoſition, that There is no God formed before. In which there is a kinde of Ironie: as if the Prophet ſhould haue ſaid; There is none other God but he, vnleſſe hee be forged by mortall men. I trow then you will not compare them with the eternall God.

He addes, that there ſhall bee none after; becauſe himſelfe holds alwaies the intire and perfect ſoueraigntie, and is not changed by age or corruption. The ſumme is, that we cannot ſay we haue faith indeed, till we come to reſt the ſame wholly in him: for thoſe which acknowledge a kind of diuinitie, and yet are ignorant what it is, are alway perſued with trembling conſcience, and are wrapped in wonderful ſnares. Let vs therefore ſtay our ſclues vpon that God which cannot indure any companion with him; or that the leaſt portion of his maiſtie ſhould be unpaired; becauſe He onely is.

Verſ. 11. I, euen I am the Lord, and beſides me there is no Saviour.

THE Lord triumphs heere as hauing gotten the victorie. In the former verſes he hath ſufficiently inſtructed vs touching the meanes whereby to come to his knowledge, and hath ſhewed that there is no other God but him. Now to confirme this doctrine hee breaks out into this exclamation; It is I, euen I, that am the Lord, and there is none beſides mee. And thus wee may ſee how dangerous a thing it is to forge a god according to our fantaſie: for wee haue no ſooner effected it, but behold, an Idoll in ſtead of God. Let not vs therefore accept of any thing but that which proceeds from him, leſt we runne out in this behalfe. Hath hee manifeſted himſelfe vnto vs? It is good reaſon wee ſhould daſhe profir, grow, and become and more confirmed in his knowledge. And this is the vſe wee ſhould make of this repetition, I, I am the Lord.

Yet I would not haue you thinke he ſpeaks heere of his eternall eſſence onely; but let vs know that his power and goodneſſe, which he fully manifeſts by cauſing vs to ſeele the ſame, are here comprehended. And that is the reaſon why ſo epithete of the only Saviour is added; which is a mark whereby to ſeparate him from all his creatures. For the world deceiues it ſelfe in attributing vnto God a naked and bare title, and in the meane while transports his dignitie ouer to the creatures. In the Papatie I grant there is mention made of God, but they ſtrip him of his honour; when one part thereof is giuen to Peter and Paul, and another to William and George: that is to ſay, when his offices are diuided into ſo many parts, that they leaue nothing to him but the bare title of God. They brag that they worſhip but one God: I wot well; but when wee come to ſpeake of his offices, they forge as many gods as there are creatures, and to them they diſtribute his authoritie and power. But the Lord will haue theſe things to remaine wholly and ſoly vnto him; neither can they be attributed to any other without committing horrible ſacrilege: for it is he onely that beſtows all good things vpon men, and he onely defends and preſerues them.

The latter member of the verſe then, expreſſeth that knowledge which proceeds from experience, that ſo we might ſeele ſaluattin in none but in him, who is the author of it. Whence we gather, that the principall part of Gods ſeruiſe conſiſts in faith; which is, when he is acknowledged to be the fontaine of life, when he is adorned with the title of Saviour; as alſo when theſe things which

Verf. 12. I haue declared, and I haue saued; and I haue shewed when there was no strange god among you: therefore you are my witnesses, saith the Lord, that I am God.

THis verse is as it were a rehearfall of the former; for the Lord tells them againe that hee hath foretold things to come, and hath brought them to passe accordingly, thus; To declare, is, or may be referred to his foreknowledge; and, To saue; to his power and goodnesse. In a word, his meaning is, that he is the onely God who knows and accomplisheth all things. Now howfocuer this was spoken to the Iewes, yet wee are to know that it also appertaines vnto vs: for all the prophccies which remaine on record, ought to be so many lessons to reach vs the wisdom and power of God, that so wee may wholly rest vpon him. Now, that wee should abolish all superstitions, and suffer him to sit as our onely Doctor in his heavenly chaire; he tels vs againe, that hee hath shewed his power, and manifested the signes of his fauour, without any mans helpe: whence it followes, that those are too ingratefull and peruerse, which will not content themselves with him alone.

When there was no strange God among you (saith he) to worship, euen then did I openly discover my power in the sight of the whole world. How dare you then attribute that to Idols, which belongs to me onely? And yet the Prophet doth not so much in this place commend the antiquitie of the peoples religion, as he labours to reiect all false succors. As if he should say; Seeing you haue knowne none but the true God, whose miracles haue been so wonderfull and apparant, you ought to be resolu'd, that there is no helpe but in him. Therewithall also the Prophet shewes, that our infidelitie hinders God from shewing his power in the midst of vs: let vs therefore abandon all errors, and all false opinions of God; if we will haue experience of his power; for if we turne aside after idolatries and superstitions, are wee not well worthy to feele the want of his power and goodnes?

In conclusion, he calles them witnesses, as accusing them of froward and cursed ingratitude, if they dissemble that goodnesse of his, which was so publickly manifested: for the more God shall haue declared his power by many visible testimonies, the more are wee bound to publish and make knowne the same vnto others.

Verf. 13. Yea, before the day was, I am; and there is none that can deliuer out of mine hand: and I will doe it, and who shall let?

HE speaks now of Gods eternitie; but we must still keepe in minde the Prophets drift. For he which had a beginning, is not of himselfe, neither can hee hold vnder his dominion, nor gouerne the things which hee created nor. When the Lord therefore calles himselfe the eternall, it is to shew that the world was made by his hand, and that this goodly order of nature fell not out by chace, but tooke the originall from his admirable wildome and power: Gen. 1. 1.

And therefore he addes in the next place, that none can deliuer out of his hand: which yet shewes vs more plainly, that by his eternitie wee may proue his soueraigne and infinite power. For were he not eternall, hee could neither retaine all things in his hands, neither could hee defend his people, nor serue his turne of the creatures according to his owne will. But because he is without beginning, it necessarilie followes, that all things be subiect to his disposition. Heereunto appertaines that which is added, that nothing can let him from doing that which hee hath once determined. All which, serued to teach the Iewes, that they should not stand amazed nor be discouraged, in regard of the force, furie, and multitude of their enemies.

Verf. 14. Thus saith the Lord your redeemer, the holy one of Israel; For your sake I haue sent to Babel, and brought it downe: they are all fugitiues; and the Caldeans cry in the ships.

THE Prophet saith that Cyrus shall be as an hired souldier, which shall bestow his trauell in the Lords seruice, for the redemption of his people. I grant hee names not Cyrus, but hee speaks of the host which marched vnder his conduct, to subdue the Babylonians. We know this was brought about by Cyrus and Darius; but all of them were Gods executioners, who had foretold these things long before. He directes not his speech onely to those that saw the accomplishment of all these things, but also to all those whom the Lord meant to sustaine with this hope of deliuerance, which they could neuer haue dreamed of by any humane reason. For he speaks to the captiues, who being oppressed vnder the cruell seruitude of the Caldeans, were left destitute of all meanes of comfort: in which respect these promises might seeme most fabulous, because in mans iudgement there was no hope that euer they should get out of this prison.

But we must giue this honor to Gods word, euen to beleuee that which otherwise is incredible, to the end wee may hope about hope: for such is the power of faith, that the stands not gazing vpon things externall, but fixeth her eyes in the heauens, and pierceeth thorough euen to the very throne of God.

Now there is great force in that which is added, for thy sake. For seeing pride, and an insatiable couetous desire to rule, prick'd Cyrus forward to this action; and that there were many occasions for which this war was raised, a man would not haue thought that the whole world should thus haue bin shaken ken in the ouerthrow of this Monarchie, and that the poore Iewes the miſerableſt of all people vnder heauen, ſhould by this meanes haue had a way made to returne home into their owne countrie. But God proteſts, that he will giue the Perſians victorie, ſo as they ſhall eaſily conquer all the Eaſt, becauſe he ſauors his Church.

For this cauſe he ſhewes in the firſt place, that it is he which is their redeemer, and the holý one, the better to perſwade them that he held thoſe whom he had choſen to be his peculiar people deare and pretious vnto him. Notwithſtanding, this ſeemes contrarie to that which we haue ſene before in the 33. Chapter, Woe to thee that robbeſt, when thou waſt not robbed: the Lord meant by this that he would auenge himſelfe vpon the crueltye of the Babylonians, and render them that meaſure which they had met out vnto others : now hee ſhewes that the Perſians rooke armes by his commandement, that by meanes thereof he might worke his peoples deliuerance. But theſe things may be eaſily reconciled, to wit, that the Lord had reſpect to his people euen then whileſt he ſcourged the Chaldeans: for as his prouidence extends it ſelfe ouer the whole world in generall, ſo hath he a ſpeciall care of his Church : and as he dearly loues his Saints, ſo he turns all things to their ſaluation. It is not without cauſe then that he ſaith he ſent them to performe this worke by his free grace, becauſe he meant thereby to procure the ſaluation of his Church. In the ſame ſenſe he addes, that at his commandement hee brought them downe: for albeit the Medes and Perſians had another end, yet their iorney was gouerned by an heavenly inſtinct. And thus God meant to ſhew what loue he bare to his choſen people aforehand, leſt they ſhould haue fainted in their extreme anguiſhes and afflictions. This promiſe therefore was of great vſe, in reſpect the poore captiues might from hence greatly comfort themſelues that they were beloved of God, although all the world beſides contemned, hated, and reiected them as the offſcouring of all things, ſeeing they ſaw that God in the end was minded to ſuccor them, and for their ſakes to deſtroy the Monarchie of the Babylonians.

Where he ſaith, they ſhall flee, it is to ſhew that God ſhall ſo proſper the affaires of Cyrus, that the Chaldeans ſhall be aſtoniſhed at his arriuall, and ſhal throw downe their armes to take them to their heeles: for it often fallies out, euen to ſome mightie Prince, well appointed with all furniture to enterpriſe war, in which notwithstanding the iſſue ſhall be woſull. It was not enough then that Cyrus was ſent with a great armie, vnleſſe therewithall his enterpriſes had ſucceeded well.

And that he might further ſet forth their haſtic flight, he addes, there ſhall be a crie, or tumult in the ſhips, for they could not flee by land. True it is they had a riuer fit for the purpoſe, to wit Euphrates, which met with the riuer Tigris, by reaſon whereof they had meanes to eſcape: but they were diſappointed of their purpoſe in this behaſe, in regard the riuer was drawne drie.

Verſ. 15. I am the Lord, your holy one, the Creator of Iſrael, your King.

This verſe conteines in it only a deſcription of him that ſpeakes: firſt, ſhewing how great his power & maielte is: ſecondly, with what affection he entertaines his elect, and all to the end the promiſes before mentioned might haue the greater waigh. I call this verſe therefore a ſcale to the former ſentence, as if the people ſhould haue ſaid, We heare much ſpoken of God, and of his promiſes; but I pray you what is this God? The Prophet anſwers, Euen he that is your holy one, the creator of Iſrael, and your King.

He is called holy one, becauſe he culled and ſeparated a people to conſecrate them vnto himſelfe. By this title then he puts them in minde of their adoption, wherein he joined himſelfe vnto them by a ſpeciall band, to aſſure them for the time to come that he would be their Father and Saviour. In which ſenſe wee at this day ought to acknowledge that God is our holy one, in that he hath put vs a-part to be members of his Church, whereof he hath aſſured vs, by our vocation and calling.

The title Creator is not to be referred to the generall creation of all things: for ſo he is alſo the Creator of the wicked: but to reformation, in which reſpect we are called his workmanſhip, Ephes. 2. 10.

In that he addes your King, it might ſeeme ſomewhat ſtrange: for what appearance was there of a kingdome among the Iewes now? Were they not loaden with reproches and contumelies, becauſe they were left deſtitute of all ſuccor? Yet ſaith was to breake thorow all theſe obſtacles: in this title therefore the Prophet gaue them hope that the kingdome ſhould againe be reſtored, howſoeuer to the eies of fleſh and blood it lay now in the duſt, yea vtterly extinct; notwithstanding all this, they were to hold God for their Soueraigne and King ſtill.

Verſ. 16. Thus ſaith the Lord which maketh a way in the ſea, and a path in the mightie waters.

HE once againe comes to confirme that which otherwiſe ſeemed incredible: and that this confirmation might haue the greater authoritie, he takes vnto him the perſon of God. Now he puts them in mind of former benefits, to reach them, that as they had found him an Almighty Saviour before, ſo they ſhould aſſure themſelues that he would be no leſſe powerfull and gracious vnto them for the time to come: neither leſſe able nor willing to worke their deliuerance. As if hee ſhould ſay, The Lord vwho ſpeakes will certainly ſhew the greatnes of his power by the effects: of which as your forefaſhers haue had experience, ſo his meaning is to giue you no leſſe triall of it then they had. Are we not too vnthankfull then if by former benefits received, we be not drawne to hope in him for hereafter? but eſpeciallie Israel deli- uered out of Egypt, to the end they should neuer forget it.

Hee brought Israel out of Egypt, vpon condition they should neuer forget such a deliuerance: Exod.13.9. The Prophet now sets the same God before their eies, shewing that nothing could withstand him, which by his power hee ouercame not, when he tooke his peoples saluatiō in hand, For then he made a way for them in the sea, Exod.14.21. and guided them thorow the tempestuous & mightie waters; to wit, thorow the riuer Iordan, which he dried vp, though it was very boisterous: Iof. 3.16. Now hee exprefly names these two admirable miracles, because they might imagine that all passage was shut vp against them, in regard of their returne into Iudea: and that all these promises therefore were but fables.

Verf. 17. When hee bringeth out the chariot and horse, the armie and the power lie together, and shall not rise: they are extinct and quenched as tow.

Now he shewes that neither munition, nor strength can resist God, or hinder him from deliuering his people when hee thinks good, no more then the sea was able to let him from sauing them: but hee diuided the same, and drowned their enemies with their chariots and horses therein. See here then an amplification of the former verse: as if he should say; Be it that the whole world haue conspired your destruction, and would hinder mee from working your deliuerance; shall it not be in vaine? For when I list, I will not onely find out a passage for you in the midst of bottomlesse gulphes, but I will also scatter and overthrow all force and power of your enemies: yea, I will so dash them in funder, that they shall neuer be able to arise. It may be he that hath lost one v.ictorie, will gather his forces afresh together the second time, and win that hee lost before: but the Lord in this place promiseth a perpetuall victorie; shewing that their enemies shall bee so discomfited, that they shall be vterly extinct. Which sudden destruction he further exprefseth by the similitude of rowe: when fire is put to rowe, it may well make a blaze for a while, but forthwith it is consumed and gone.

*Or, Forget ye the, &c.

Verf. 18. Remember ye not the former things? neither regard yee the things of old?*

This verse must bee vnderstood by way of comparation.

The Prophet hitherunto hath shewed at large how mightie the Lord is to saue his people: now hee saith that all the miracles which were wrought in the first redemption, were nothing in comparison of those that should be effected hereafter: that is to say; the glory of this second deliuerance should be so rare & excellent, that it should darken the first: not as if the Iewes were to forget so great a benefit; for the memorie thereof worthily deserued to be celebrated from age to age, euen to the worlds end; and as the Lord had commanded, was to stand vpon perpetuall record. For in the preface of the Law, Exod.20.2. thus he speaks; I am the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage. He also commanded the fathers to be often recording of it to their children, and to continue the remembrance of it to their succellors. This therefore must be taken by way of comparison: as in Ieremias; Behold the daies come, saith the Lord, that they shall say no more, The Lord which brought the children out of Egypt: but the Lord liues, which hath brought the posteritie of Isaiah out of the land of the North, and out of all the coasts of the earth, whereinto he hath scattered them: Ier.21.7. The summe is, that the last deliuerance shall be far more glorious then the first, if the one be compared with the other. Whence it followes, that this prophecie is not to be referred to a few yeeres; because the Prophet extols not here the beginnings of their deliuerance onely; but extends the fruit of this returne euen vnto Christ, at whose coming both the kingdome and priesthoode were really established.

Verf. 19. Behold, I doe a new thing; now shall it come forth: shall you not know it? I will euen make a way in the desert, and floods in the wilderness.

BY this wee may yet better perceiue what the Prophets drift was in the former verse. For here he saith, there shall be a new worke: that is, no common or ordinary, but such a one as by the excellencie and greatness of it, shall darken the fame of all the rest, no lesse then the Sunne when it shineth in his might, darkens all the starres in the firmament. In that hee saith, it shall now come forth; the meaning is, it shall not be long deferred. I grant these things were not by and by accomplished; but when wee haue respect vnto him that speaks, foure hundred, nay a thousand yeeres in his sight, are but as yesterday. Thus hee comforts them, because hee would not that their seuentie yeeres captiuitie should discourage them.

A new worke is here opposed to that which is common and ordinarie: See Chap. 43. 10.

When hee adds, shall you not know it? This interrogation hath more force and vehemencie in it then a simple affirmation. And this manner of speech is much vsed both among the Hebrewes, and also among Greeks and Latines.

The interrogation hath more force in it then a bare affirmation.

Further, hee promiseth to make a way in the desert, wherein he hath respect to that desert which was betwene Babylon and Iudea: for here he speaks of the peoples returne homie. And for that cause also hee mentions the floods: for they might well haue perished for thirst, in traouling thorow a place so barren and waste. Therefore the Lord promiseth to prouide them of water for their journey: as if he should say; Feare not for want of necessities, for I wil furnish you sufficiently; so as you shall returne vnder my conduct and leading.

The desert betwene Babylon and Iuda.

But

But it seemes the Prophet passeth his bounds, when he magnifies this deliuerance in such excellencie speeches. For we reade not that the riuers were heere turned into blood, nor that a grosse and palpable darknesse troubled the air, or that the first borne were flaine, or that any vermin were sent to deuoure the fruits of the earth; neither any of the like wonders which came to passe in Egypt: none of these happened, as wee know in Babylon. What meanes hee then by this new deliuerance? This hath caused almost all the writers that are Christians, to expound this place simply of Christs comming; wherein no doubt they haue been decciued no lesse then the Lewes, who onely restraîne this to the deliuerance out of Babell. And therefore as I haue said in another place, wee must heere comprehend the whole time that passed betweene the deliuerance out of Babylon, vntill the comming of Christ. The redemption out of Egypt may be compared to the first birth of the Church; because the people were then gathered into a body, and the Church was established, which before was without forme: yet this redemption ended not at the peoples comming forth of Egypt, but continued till they were possessed of the land of Canaan, which was giuen them after the Kings were driuen thence. The like may be said of this birth by which the Lewes were brought out of Babylon, and restored home into their owne Country: for this restauration must not be restrained to their going out of Babylon onely, but it stretcheth it selfe vnto the comming of Christ; during which space of time, there came great and wonderfull things to passe indeed.

Was it not an admirable thing that a fort of poore captiues, contemned of all as miserable abiects and slaues; yea held and esteemed as detestable as the disease of the pestilence, should notwithstanding be restored and sent home into their Country by insidell Kings? Besides, that they should be furnished with all things fit for their iourney, and order taken for their affaires: as also for the building of the Citie, and restoring of the Temple? But yet behold wonders much greater then these, which came to passe afterwards; when there were but a few of the people which would returne backe againe, and the most were so discouraged, that they preferred so miserable a seruitude before so blessed and happy a freedome. When a small handfull (I say) of them then returned into Iudeah, in respect of that great multitude which was led into captiuitie, yet fell there out greater lets and hinderances. For were there not conspiracies, new hatreds & grudgings raised vp against this people, who were in too much contempt and disgrace already? Did not the worke cease, and was not all means procured to hinder the finishing of it? In which respect they might well haue thought that the Lord had brought them out in vaine, seeing they were now exposed to greater dangers then euer they were before. After the Temple was built, things succeeded no whit better; for they were inuoi-ned on all sides with mightie aduersaries, who hated them most deadly, and vexed them without ceasing. Afterwards they were visited with sundry afflictions and persecutions; so as it might seeme they were as good as ouerwhelmed and rooted out by them. Yet notwithstanding God ceased not still miraculously to preferue them euen in the midst of fire and sword. If we consider their poore and miserable estate, and the sore trials they were put to by tyrants, wee may well admire how any one of them escaped.

That we may the better vnderstand then how wonderfull this deliuerance was, and in what sort it surpassed the first, wee must haue an eye to the histories of things begun and continued vntill Christs comming; who then added infinite graces and benefits to the former: for doubtlesse the second deliuerance was greater then the first.

Neither is this any constrained exposition, but it agrees with the manners of speech vsed among the Prophets: for they haue alwaies respect vnto the Messiah, and incessantly did they fix their eyes vpon him. The Prophet Haggai therefore will giue vs much light for the vnderstanding of this place. For he shews, that when the Temple was built, the olde men which had seene the excellencie of the first, wept, saying, that this later was nothing in comparison of the former: and hardly could they be perswaded but that God had utterly forsaken them, and that his promises were of none effect. But Haggai to comfort them, and to shew that the glory of the second Temple shall far surpass the first, albeit the outward forme of it were lesse beautifull, brings them forth with to the Redeemer, saying on this manner: Thus saith the Lord of hostes; Yet a little while, and I will shake the heauens and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land, and all nations: the desire of all nations shall come; and I will fill this house with glory, saith the Lord of hostes. The gold and siluer is mine, saith the Lord of hostes: the glorie of this house shall be greater then the first: Haggai 2.7. As Haggai: then continues the restauration of the Temple till Christs comming, to which he refers the true glory of it: so this deliuerance out of Babylon held on the course thereof till Christ; for these things are conioined together, or rather haue affinity one with another; so as it is no maruell though he say, it did euery way surpass the deliuerance out of Egypt.

Verf. 20. The wild beasts shall honour me, the Dragons and the Ostriches; because I gave water in the desert, and floods in the wilderness to giue drinke to my people, euen to mine elect.

HE adorne the former sentence; for all things standing in this confused manner, it was needfull to set our Gods power in the highest termes that might be, that at least the word might supple that which seemed to be wanting in effect. His meaning is then, that Gods hand shall be so sensible felt and perceived

To vnderstand this last deliuerance of the Church aright, wee must looke to the histories of things begun and continued till Christs comming. The Prophets shall keep their eye vpon Christ.

The Churches redemption out of Egypt, may be compared to her first birth.

ceived in this worke, that not only men but wild beasts also should be touched with a sense of it, so as they should yeeld a kind of honour and thanks vnto God. This prophetic therefore answers to Plal. 114.3,4, where it is said, That the sea saw it and fled, Iordan went back; the mountaines skipped like sheepe; and the little hilles as lambs: the earth trembled at the presence of the God of Iacob.

Isaiah's attributes heere the same feelings to the brute beasts, in regard that by a secret instinct they should be constrained to giue place, that the people might passe with more securitie. And yet the reason hereof hath a larger extent, to wit, that they shall stand amazed at the beholding of so many miracles. To be short, God shewes, that he will not leaue his people destitute of necessarie foode that they should be enforced to retorne back through want: for by this excessiue kind of speech, he expresseth the incomprehensible loue of God towards the Iewes, that by the power of their hope they might mount aboue all present obstacles.

The vsf. Now when we heare of these things, let vs not measure his power (in our distresses) according to the order of nature: but by faith let vs fix our eies about all things visible and comprehensible.

Moreover, lest these poore banished orphanes should lose all hope of Gods euertlasting fauor in seeing themselues thus reiected and despised of all: Isaiah brings them to the remembrance of their adoption, as if he should say, Thinke not but *y*ou remain the people of God still, notwithstanding this your horrible scattering: for he who hath once elected you neuer changeth his counsell. As oft then as we stand in neede of encouragement to hope well, let vs remember the calling of God: for albeit we feele our owne vnworthines, yet it ought to suffice that the Lord hath vouchsafed vs this honor, to make vs his people.

My people, mine elect.

We must in temptation oppose our vocation against our vnworthines.

Verf. 21. This people haue I formed for my selfe: they shall shew forth my praise.

The Prophets meaning is, that the Lord must needs performe that which he spake before, because it concernes his owne glorie to deliuer the people which he hath chosen to himselfe. This appertained therefore very much to the consolation of the Iewes, as if he should say, Do ye thinke I will suffer my glory to fall to the ground? It is ioined with your saluation, and therefore it stands me in hand to looke to it, Be you sure therefore that all shall goe well with you: for I can not suffer you to perish, but my glorie must therewithall be abolished also. But your saluation is sure; for I haue determined that you shall magnifie my greatness for euer.

Gods glorie and our saluation ioined together.

Where he saith he hath Created this people, it is to let vs vnderstand that our regeneration is a worke supernaturall: for we are to hold this principle which we haue often told you of heretofore, that he speakes not here of that generall worke of his creation touching mankinde; but of regeneration or adoption, by which God separates his Church from the rest of the world, and from all the remainders of it. Let no man be so bold theras to attribute this worke either to himselfe, or to the merits of men; but let vs from this place learne to ascribe so excellent a benefit whollie and only to the free grace of God.

Isaiah speake here of our common creation, but of our spirituall regeneration. See Chap. 29. 23.

They shall shew forth my praise.] Although the Prophets meaning be (as I haue said) to shew that the people should be deliuered in regard it neerely concerned Gods glorie: yet from this place we also learne, that the end of our election is the setting forth of Gods glorie in all things. I grant that the reprobates are instruments of this glorie; but it shines in a farre diuers sort in vs: for we are chosen, as S. Paul saith, that we should be holy and without blame before him in loue: and he hath also predestinated vs, to adopt vs in himselfe by Iesus Christ, according to the good pleasure of his will to the praise of the glorie of his grace, wherewith he hath freely accepted vs through his beloued, Ephes. 1. 4, 5, 6. Hereunto appertaine the words of Peter, where he saith, We are a chosen generation, and that we should shew forth the vertues of him who hath called vs out of darknes, into his marvelous light, 1. Pet. 2. 9. And Zacharie sings, That we are deliuered out of the hands of our enemies to serue our God in holines and righteousness before him all the daies of our life, Luk. 1. 75. Here ye see the end then both of our election and calling: which is, that we being consecrated and set apart for Gods vs if it were, we might praise and honor him as long as wee haue any being in this world.

The end of our election & vocation.

Verf. 22. And thou hast not called vpon me, o Iacob: but thou hast wearied rather me o Israel.

With this priue rebuke he confirms that which was said in y former verse: to wit, that the merits of the people had no way moued him to deale so graciouslie with them. This deliuerance therefore was to be ascribed to his free goodnes. For prooffe hereof, he saith, Thou hast not called vpon me: vnder which word he cōprehends the whole seruice of God, whereof prayer was a principall part. And thus he takes a part for the whole, according to the vsuall maner of the Hebrues. Now the Lord manifests it sufficientlie in other places, that Inuocation is a speciall part of his worship: for hauing said in the fiftieth Psalm that he reiects sacrifices and ceremonies, he presentlie addes, Call vpon me. For this cause the Scripture mentions this exercise of prayer, when it notes our the marks of Gods worship. For Moses minding to shew that the same was againe restored, saith, that then men began to call vpon the name of the Lord, Gen. 4. 26.

God saues none for his merits sake.

The prooffe.

This phrase, Called vpon me, expounded.

Prayer, a speciall part of Gods worships.

I take the particle Et in the second part of this verse for a coniunction aduersatiue thus, But thou hast wearied me. Others translate, For thou hast trauailed: as if he should say, Thou hast done that which I commanded thee thee vnwillingly; which comes all to one. For as the Lord requires obedience, ſo would he haue his ſeruants to performe the ſame cheerfully and readily. Hee loues a cheerfull giuer, as the Apoſtle ſaith, 2. Cor. 9.7. but thoſe that ſerue him by halues, or by conſtraints, cannot properly be called his ſeruants; neither doth he accept of them, nor of ſuch ſeruices. To ſhew then that the Iewes had not worſhipped as they ought to haue done, hee ſaith, they did it vnawillingly.

If any had rather haue it an expoſition of the former member, and ſo tranſlate it thus; Thou haſt not called upon me, O Iſrael, becauſe thou haſt yeelded me but a forced and conſtrained ſeruice; I gainſay him not, becauſe the difference is not great as touching the ſenſe. Yet if it be taken as I haue tranſlated it, I thinke it is neerer to the Prophets meaning; and the oppoſition contains alſo in it a rendering of the cauſe. Will we haue our ſeruices acceptable vnto God then? let vs yeeld him a frank and willing obedience.

Verſ. 23. Thou haſt not brought me the ſheepe of thy burnt offerings, neither haſt thou honoured mee with thy ſacrifices: I haue not cauſed thee to ſerue with an offering, nor wearied thee with incenſe.

Some may demaund why the Prophet ſhould thus reproch the Iewes, ſeing it is apparent that they were vey diligent in offering ſacrifices, according to the ordinances of the Law. Some refer this to the captiuitie, during which time they could offer no ſacrifices, though they had bin willing ſo to haue done. Why ſo? Becauſe it was vnlawfull to offer them any where but in Ieruſalem: for which reſpect, their ſacrifices could not be acceptable vnto God. But I rather take it as a generall reproch: for whileſt the people had opportunity to ſacrifice, yet they could alledge no merit nor worthineſſe, as if God had been any way beholding vnto them for the ſame: for there was neither faith nor obedience to be ſene in their ſacrifices. But faith, as we know, and obedience, are things which God chiefly looks vnto, without which, nothing we doe, is, or can be pleaſing in his ſight. They wanted therefore integritie of heart; their hands were full of blood; they were wholly defiled with robberies and deceit; iuſtice and equitie was baniſhed far from them. Albeit then that they brought their beaſts every day vnto the Temple, and offered them there, yet hee rightly affirms that they offered none of theſe things (to him); becauſe God accepts of no ſacrifices which are ſeparated from the truth, and ſo offered them to another, and not to him: for all he required was, that by theſe outward meanes, his people ſhould exerciſe their faith and obedience. But theſe being wanting: what worth was there in the ſacrifices? Hence wee gather that the Prophet ſpeakes here of no new thing, but continues that which hee began to teach in the former verſe; to wit, that hee reiects all hollow and ſeruile ſeruices.

Verſ. 24. Thou boughteſt me no ſweet ſauour with thy money, neither haſt thou made me drunke with the fat of thy ſacrifices: but thou haſt made mee to ſerue with thy finnes, and wearied me with thine iniquities.

By the word Caneh, he meanes that where-with they made the precious ointment which was ſeldome vſed; as is recorded in Exod. 30. 25. For therewith were the high Priests, the Tabernacle, the Arke of the covenant, with the instruments thereunto appertaining, anointed. Hee ſaith then; Albeit thou ſhouldeſt lay forth thy money to buy me of that odoriferous ointment, thou ſhalt but ſpend it in vaine, if thou lookeſt that I ſhould accept of it. For all their labour was loſt, becauſe they aimed not at the right marke. God eſteemed none of all theſe ceremonies, as long as they were ſeparated from faith, and the vprightneſſe of the heart, and a pure conſcience.

Where he ſaith, thou haſt not made me drunke; it anſwers to a phraſe of ſpeech in the Law, where the Lord teſtifies that he felt a ſweete taſte in the fauour of the ſacrifices; not that he tooke delight in the killing of beaſts, but becauſe by ſuch helpe he meant to keep his people in true obedience. Here on the contrary he ſaith, that the people ſacrificed not rightly, becauſe they defiled all by their impuritie. As if he ſhould ſay; You haue affaſhliſhed me (as much as in you is) in that you bring me nothing in ſinceritie, but that which through your finnes is corrupt and vitious fauour. Preſently after the Prophet ſets out the foulneſſe of this fact, in that the people were not onely careleſſe in doing their ſeruices to God: but which is worſt of all, induored to ſubiect the Lord their God to their will, or rather to their diſordered appetites and luſts.

Thoſe who refer this place to Chriſt, offer violence to the Prophets meaning; and therefore the expoſition which I haue vſed, ſeemes to me the moſt naturie: for the Lord complains that they haue inforced him to beare an heauie burden, in regard of their finnes, whereas they ſhould haue ſubmitted themſelues to him in all reuerence, and with all good conſciences: for when we aduance our ſelues againſt God, we doe by our inſolencie and rebellion, make him as it were a ſervant to our luſts.

Now hee expreſſeth this better when hee ſaith, that hee hath been vi. caried: that is to ſay; I haue ſuſtained many diſcontentments, in regard of the diſſolute behauiour of my people: for we wound and pierce him to the heart, when we reiect his voice, and will not indure that he ſhould raigne ouer vs. But it ſeemes he alludes to that hee ſaid erewhile touching the peoples vnwearineſſe in ſeruing of God: which being ſet as oppoſite vnto the same, it shewes that these rebels did much grieue him.

Verf. 25. I, euen I am he that putteth away thine iniquities for mine owne sake, and will not remember thy finnes.

to vs, and so the pardon should not be free. For this cause Ezechiel expresseth the opposition, I do not this for your sakes & house of Israel, but for mine owne sake: Whence it followes, that God is the author of forgiveness, and is also inclined freely to forgive, because he finds no cause at all in man (vnlesse it be his miserie) why he should do it.

The conclusion.

No man is saved for his merits.

BY this exclamation the Lord puts an end to the former sentence, as if he should say, that he for his part can reioyce, that he puts away the iniquitie of his people, and holds them in freedome, that they can pleade no merit whereby to obtaine this at his hands, seeing they deserue rather to be seuerely chastised, nay to be vtterly confounded.

Now he repeats one and the same thing twice, that he might touch men to the quick for their vnthankfulness: for we are wont either to take vnto our selues, or in some sort to obscure the honour which belongs to God only. Those take the Prophets words in too naked a sense, which thinke that God attributes vnto him here the authoritie and preeminence in pardoning of finnes, for he rather opposeth his mercie to all other causes, as if he should say, There is nothing moues me to shew mercie, but only my free fauour, and that Redemption therefore is wrongfullie attributed to Merits or satisfactions, seeing I am the only author of it. The summe is, that the people were to continue their hope of returne, because God was willing for his owne names sake freely to remit their finnes, and to worke their deliuerance.

Why God speaks rather of remission of finnes, then of redemption. Simile.

In this place then there is handled the doctrine of the remission of finnes. It now remains to see vpon what occasion: for there is no doubt but the Prophet promiseth deliuerance in regard of Gods free grace. And for this cause he rather spake of forgiveness of finnes, then of Redemption: for they being sore pressed & corrected for their finnes, the cause was to be removed ere the effect could cease. A disease can not be cured till the matter which feeds it be first removed: so, as long as Gods wrath stands vnappeased, so long must our chastisements continue. Therefore it is necessarie that this wrath be pacified, and we reconciled vnto God, before we can be freed from our afflictions.

This manner of speech therefore is to be well obserued against a childish distinction of the Sophisters: who confesse indeed that God pardons the fault, but they wrangle and say, that we must satisfie for the punishment. And hence haue proceeded Satisfactions, Indulgences, Purgatorie, and infinite other inuentions. But our Prophet speaks not only here of the faults, but makes expresse mention also of the punishment, which is likewise done away, in regard their finnes and iniquities were freely pardoned. Which is yet more clearly proued, in that he addes this particle, For mine owne names sake. For it is certaine that this exception is opposed against all merits. As how? I has God respects neither our persons, nor oughts that is in vs, when he is to do away our offences, but is moued thereunto by his owne free mercie. For if he should consider any thing in vs, he should then seeme to be bound

This exception opposed to merit.

And therefore I will not remember thy finnes.] The Prophet added this for the consolation of the faithfull, who by the feeling of their owne vnworthines, might easily haue slipped into despair. For this cause he puts them in good hope, and confirms them in this confidence: to wit, That they should obtaine remission of their finnes, and so be deliuered out of captiuitie, notwithstanding their vnworthines. Hence we haue to gather a very profitable doctrine, to wit, That no man can assure himselfe of obtaining pardon, vnlesse he rest vpon the free grace of God. For such as looke to their works must of necessitie waiver, and in the end despair. For if they were not befottered with grosse hypocrisie, they would alwaies set their guiltines before their eyes, which would confine them whether they would or no to doubt of Gods fauour.

None can be assured of obtaining pardon, vnlesse he rest vpon Gods free goodnes.

Where it is said, that the Ministers also do remit finnes, that is not repugnant to this place, for they are witnesses of this free remission. They vse this common distinction, That God forgines finnes by his power, and The Ministers by their office: but because this distinction doth not sufficientlie explaine the Prophets meaning, it is best to hold that which I haue set downe, to wit, that God not only pardons finnes by his power, but also that all benefits which we are to expect, flow vnto vs only from his free grace. And thus the Lord hath so adorned the Gospel and the Ministers with this authoritie, that he reserues it notwithstanding intirely in his own absolute power.

A distinction.

How God is said to pardon by the Ministers.

Verf. 26. Put me in remembrance: let vs be iudged together: count that thou mayst be iustified.

BECAUSE it is an hard matter to correct mens pride, the Lord goes on still with this argument; and insists the longer vpon it, that he might the better bring the Iewes to humilitie, as also that he might cause them to renounce the confidence of their works. He giues them libertie freely so say and alledge what they can in their owne behalfe, to make their partie good against him: vnlesse if vpon better aduice, they should rather thinke it best for them to lay their hand vpon their mouth.

Mans pride not easily subdued.

God giues vs leaue to make our defences, if we thinke his accusation ouerstrick.

By way of yielding so much vnto them therefore he bids them put him in minde: If thou hast any thing to alledge for thy selfe, saith he, I pray thee remember me of it. Speake thou in thy turne, and I will giue thee audience. And by this manner of speech he gaules men more to the quick, then if he should haue spoken to them in plaine termes, For thus he shewes, that they are more then senselesse, if they dare ascribue any thing vnto themselves. Why so? Because, if libertie were giuen them them to tell their faire tale, they would be conuicted of their vanitie and emptines, without being able to say ought for themselves.

Iroala.

That thou mayst be iustified.] That is to say, that thou mayest get the day, and goe away conqueror: I therefore giue thee free leaue to say what thou canst. Now this is spoken after such a kind of taunting and detiding of the Lord, as did more cut their combs, than if the Lord should haue stood to haue iudged the in his own person, according to his absolute authority. In the meane while we must not forget the Prophets drift, who was constrained to plucke this maske of merit from the Iewes, that in all humilitie and meeknes, they might receiue the grace of God.

The Prophets drift.

Verf. 27. Thy first father hath sinned, and thy teachers haue transgressed against me.

The Prophets argument according to some interpreters. Adm. Abraham. Moses. Aaron.

THE expositors for the most part vnderstand this place of the first Father Adam: others rather refer it to Abraham. As if the Prophet should say; You haue not onely sinned, but your father Abraham also: notwithstanding all the holinesse wherewith he was indued. By teachers, they vnderstand Moses and Aaron, which sinned: albeit they were adorned with singular graces. And if the case stood so with your father and teachers, how much more are you sinners, who are their inferiours? And thus according to their sense, it should bee an argument taken from the greater to the lesse.

An argument from the greater to the lesse.

But I vnderstand it otherwise; for vnder this word father, he comprehendeth not onely one or two of their predecessors, but many; and that by a change of the number. A thing vsuall among the Hebrewes. And this manner of reprehension is often found both in the Prophets, as also in the booke of Psalms: for they knowing themselves to be the holy nation, they swelled in pride against the Lord; as if this honour had been due vnto them, either in regard of the excellencie or merites of their fathers: and thus the right of inheritance made them swell. The Prophets therefore were carefull from time to time, to discouer the iniquities of their fathers: for which cause Saint Stephen, who succeeded them, is bold to pronounce, that they had alwaies resisted the holy Ghost: Acts 7. 51. As if he should say; You haue not begun this day to be thus wicked; your fathers were as bad long agoe. Of an euill Crowe, there is issued forth a naughty egge. But you, saith our Prophet, are growne worse than your fathers, and far surpass the wickednesse of your predecessors: so as if the Lord had onely respected you as you are in your selves, hee might iustly haue consumed you long since.

Stephen.

A Prouerbe.

In the next place he addes their teachers to shew that the fault rested not onely in the people: for euen those which ought to haue been their guides and leaders, to wit, the Priests and Prophets, were first in the transgression, and plunged them into error which followed them. And thus (to bee short) hee shewes that there was no estate nor condition free from vices nor corruptions. As if the Lord should haue said; Let them goe now and brag of their merites, & let them alleadge any way but the least shew of reason why I should be bound to succour them, and they shall find there is nothing but my free mercy.

If any shall object, that it is iniustice to reproch the children vnto the offences of their forefathers, because it is written, The soule that sinneth shall die: and, The sonne shall not beare the iniquitie of his father: Ezech. 18. 20. The answer is easie, for the Lord punisheth the finnes of the fathers vpon their children which succeeded them: and yet they are not punished for the faults of another, seeing themselves stand guiltie of the same crimes. And when it so fallies out that the Lord smites the whole body of a people, hee couples the fathers with the children, that he may wrap them all in the same condemnation.

Obiect.

Ans. God punisheth the children of wicked parents, because they walk in their steps.

Verf. 28. Therefore I haue prophand the rulers of the Samarie, and haue made iacob a curse, and Israel a reproch.

THE letter Ver, must bee resolued into a coniunction of concluding: and the verb To pollute, should bee translated in the future tense, though it may also bee left in the preterperfect. Yet I had rather turne it; shall pollute: and to apply it to the time of the captiuitie, in regard hee speaks properly to those which should lue in Babylon. If any had rather extend it to the diuers calamities wherewith the Lord afflicted his people, and so ioine it to the captiuitie of Babylon, it will not be greatly amisse. And it may be the sense will runne better, if we should say, that hee speaks here of those things which often fell out before; to the end he might warne them for the time to come, not to stand too much vpon their parables, lest with shame and great dishonour, they againe receiued the iust reward of their ingratitude. He sets forth the cause of their ruine then, in regard that both fathers and children were to drinke of one cup, who ceased not to sin, but would fro day to day kindle Gods wrath against them without ceasing, not giuing euer their bad courses till God seuerely scourged them.

This verse conuinceth the cause of the Iewes ruine.

Now it is said that God prophand the rulers of his Church, when hee despoiseth and rejects them as things of nought: and so it is taken in Psal. 89. and in many other places. For euen as when we are set apart, and sanctified by him, we dwell vnder the wings of his safeguard and protection, as long as wee retaine and keep that sanctitie pure and vndefiled: so as soone as we cast the same off, hee prophand vs, because wee cease to be holy; and so wee make ourselves also vaworthy of his defence. And thus hee laies them open for a pray to the enemies, which before he called his anointed, and could not indure that any should touch them. But is it not strange that the Priests, which represented the person of God prophand vs, because we cease to be holy.

Christ, should be said to be polluted? The reason is, because they erred out of the right way themselves, who should haue been lights to others.

The Hebrew word Cherem, which I haue translated execration, is as much to say, as cutting off: but it also signifies execration; and therefore I haue iudged it to sute best with this place, because reproch follows. The Prophet borrowes all these words from Moses, whom he follows so neere, that we may well discern the stile of the one, in the writings of the other. The Prophets therefore forged nothing of their owne heads: for thus saith Moses; Thou shalt be an astonishment, a prouerbe, and a scorne to all nations, whether the Lord thy God shall leade thee: Deut. 28. 20. 37. Thus then hee threatens to afflict this people in such wise, that they should be a reproch vnto all; for wholoever hee were that gaue himselfe to cursing, this people should bee a fit subiect for such a one to exercise his execrations vpon, so as hee might make them the foote of his cursing song. Every one should haue such a fling at them, that their name should sit abroad as a common prouerbe from one to another, in euery ones mouth that were disposed to scorne. As for example, the name of a Iew at this day (howfoeuer it bee honourable in it selfe) yet how odious and hatefull is it? The Lord then pronounceth by Isaiah these horrible threatnings, to teach them that they could not bee too severely punished for their hainous offences; and that when God should begiune to visit them, they should haue no cause to complain of our hard measure, neither should they thinke that the Prophet was too sharpe in his reprehensions.

The name of a Iew iustly execrable at this day, howfoeuer it be honourable in it selfe.

Isaiah follows Moyses stile.

into his household from his mothers wombe: Psal. 116. 16.

Verf. 2. *Thus saith the Lord that made thee, and formed thee from the wombe; he will helpe thee: Feare not O Iakob my seruant, * and thou righteous whom I haue chosen.*

* Or, my beloved whom, &c.

The coherent of this verie, with the latter part of the former Chapter.

Isaiah hauing a little before taxed the wickednes of the Iewes; and also hauing pronounced that they were all worthe to perish eternally, in regard that as well small as great, had desiled themselves in all things. He now somewhat sweetens the sharpnesse of the chastisements, and begins to comfort them. I expound the particle Vau here, Yes: as in many other places. Euen as if he had said; Albeit you are inuironed with many miseries, yet heare now what I will doe for your sakes. For this verfe ought to be knit to the argument afore going, because the Lord shewes hee will neuer suffer the people vtterly to perish, though he be content they should feele much smart for a time.

Albeit he dealt roundly with the Iewes in the latter end of the former Chapter, to strippe them of all false confidence, and to humble them that hee might driue them to seeke pardon: yet now hee sweetly alliaies that tartnes, with a speech full of exceeding comfort, to assure them that they should lose nothing by renouncing themselves. Therefore we must heere supply some oppositions thus; True is it, O Iakob, that in thy selfe thou art nothing: but thy God that formed thee will not despise the worke of his owne hands. There is no worshinesse as all in thee that can procure thy redemption from ruin and destruction; but mine adoption, for the which I haue vouchsafed as a mercifull father to receive thee, shall be more then sufficient to saue thee.

Some oppositions supplied.

God will neuer suffer vs to erill, though he lets vs feele a little smart for a time.

Doctrinc.

Hence let vs gather, that Gods wrath is neuer so far inflamed against his Church, but he alwaies leaues some place for his mercie, which we haue often noted before. As often therefore as the Prophets threaten; they euer adde some word of consolation, seruing to mitigate the former severity.

But we must note what I haue oft told you before; to wit, that the Prophet speaks not heere of the first creation, as wee be borne naturally the sonnes of Adam, but of regeneration, which is onely proper and peculiar vnto the elect, by which it comes to passe that they haue place in the Church of God. And to the end men should attribute nothing to themselves, as if they had moued God hereunto, hee addes, which formed thee from the wombe: by which words, he sets before them that covenant which was at the first made with their fathers, in the right whereof, God had set them apart also to be his people, euen before they were borne: which some refer vnto the person of Iakob, because by taking his brother by the heele, he gaue an excellent testimo-

But lest we should imagin men derued this by their good seruices, he addes, whom I haue chosen: for God calles vs not to be his seruants for any dignitie or merit he sees in vs, but because he hath made vs meete to be partakers with the Saints in light) by his free election. In this place then the two words, seruants and chosen, haue the same signification: yet so, that election goes before. And therefore Dauid saith, that hee was Gods seruant before he was borne; because he was receiued

nie of his election: but this is conſtrained. I rather therefore referre it further; to wit, That the Lord ſhewed himſelfe liberal and bountifull vnto his people ſiſo the beginning: and thus he takes away from them all boaiſting of merits, becauſe he formed them at the firſt of his free grace, and hath ſill from time to time freely added new benefits to the former.

He will help thee.] Others ſupplie the relatione ſi, as if he had ſaid, Thy helper: notwithstanding, it ſeemes beſt to reade it apart, and the ſenſe had bin clearer if we had read it in the firſt perſon, I will help thee: but the difference is not great. The ſumme of the whole comes to this; that he which is the Creator of the people, will be reade to ſuccour them when the appointed time is come. In which regard it is free for euery one to reſt in the expoſition he thinks beſt: yet I had rather follow the plaine and the leſſe conſtrained ſenſe, without ſupplying any thing.

The word Ioſhurin is diuerſlie expounded, for ſome would deriue it of Iaſchar, which ſignifies, To be vpright, or, To pleaſe: others deriue it otherwiſe: but I agree rather with thoſe who tranſlate Beloued, deriuing it from the verb aboue mentioned. Mofes alſo hath giuen this title to the Iſraelites in his ſong, Deut. 32. 15: for howſoever ſome tranſlate the Hebrue word there vpright, as in this place, yet the old tranſlation agrees beſt, which reads it, My beloued is waxed fat. Now our Prophet adornes his people with this name, to the end that by the remembrance of benefits paſt, they might conceiue good hope for the time to come.

For the faithfull are to hold this as a generall and perpetuall rule, that by mercies formerlie receiued they ought to expect no leſſe fauours for hereafter, otherwiſe we ſhould fauour too much of ingratitude; and ſhould ſhew our ſelues not to reſt at all in the promiſes: which if they were foundly and deeply imprinted in our hearts, would worke a ſetled peace and tranquillitie of ſpirit: not to make vs idle, but to chaſe away al inordinate feares and diſtruſt.

For which cauſe he once againe repeates, Feare not o Iacob: whereunto alſo belongs that conſolation of Chriſt, Luk. 12. 32. Feare not little flock, for my Father takes pleaſure in you, and will giue you the Kingdome. And queſtionleſſe among ſo many dangers which threaten vs with death on euery ſide, there is no remedie more ſoueraigne to appeaſe our feares then this ſentence, namely, that God vouchſafeth ſo farre forth to fauour vs, that we ſhall be euerlaſtinglie ſaued by him. By the word Beloued then he giues them the better to vnderſtand, that their ſaluation depends vpon the grace and good will of God, who referres and attributes whollie to himſelfe all that which is found praife-worthie in his people.

Vers. 3. For I will powre water vpon the thirſtie, and floods vpon the dry ground:

I will powre my ſpirit vpon thy ſeed, and my bleſſing on thy buds.

HE continues on the ſame argument, and therewithall ſhewes wherein this promiſed help ſhall ſtand. We muſt ſill keepe in mind therefore that theſe prophesies are to be referred to thoſe woſull and dolefull times whereof mention hath bin made before: to wit, when all things were conſufed, the people iorſaken, and all the promiſes of God ſeeming as if they had been of none effect: the Prophet therefore meets with theſe doubts, and compares the people to a drie and thirſtie ground which hath no moyſture left in it: which ſimilitude Dauid vſeth Pſal. 141. 6. to ſet forth his miſerie. Now howſoever they were ouerwhelmed with ſorrowes and had loſt all vigor, yet leſt their hearts ſhould faint within them in theſe extremities, they were to ſet theſe and the like ſweete ſentences before them.

And wee alſo are to haue our recourſe to ſuch promiſes as oft as dangers beſet vs on euery ſide, ſo as we can ſee nothing but preſent death ready to ſwallow vs vp quick: and by this meanes ſhall we remaine more then conquerors. But it is required that we be ſuch as haue a ſenſe and feeling of our thirſt and pouertie, that ſo our fainting and parched ſoules may cheerefullie receiue reſreſhing from theſe floods.

By the word ſpirit, he tels vs what is ſignified by waters and floods. The ſpirit is alſo called water in Ezech. 36. 25. but in a diuers ſenſe. For when Ezechiel attributes the name of waters to the holy Spirit, he calles them pure waters: hauing reſpect to the purgations vnder the Lawe. Iſaiah will afterwards likewiſe call the holy Spirit water, but in another reſpect: to wit, in that it giues ſtrength and vigor to fainting ſoules, by his ſerret and inward power. But here the Prophets words haue a further extent: for he not only ſpeakes of the Spirit of regeneration, but there is an alluſion to that generall vertue which it ſheds into all the creatures, whereof the Pſalmiſt ſpeakes, Pſal. 104. 30. When thou ſendeſt forth thy ſpirit, they are created: and thou reneueſt the face of the earth. Now as Dauid there in the firſt place ſhewes that all the parts of the world are reuiued by that ſerret power which God breathes into them: ſo afterwards he attributes vnto the Lord a ſufficient abilitie, forthwith (as ſoone as it pleaſeth him) to reneue the whole frame of heauen and earth, that it ſhould not fall to ruine. In the ſame ſenſe doth our Prophet call water, the ſudden reſtauration of the Church: as if he ſhould ſay, the reſtoring thereof is in the hand of God, as well as it reſts in him by dewes or ſhowers to fruſtifie barren & parched grounds. Thus the Spirit is compared vnto water, becauſe without it all things would fade and wither with drouth: he it is alſo that reuiues the world by a ſerret ſprinking of it with his power, and redreſſeth the barrennes that proceeds of heate and drouth, whereby the earth recouers a new face as it were: which is yet further amplified by the word blessing, added in the end of the verse.

Verf. 4. And they shall grow as among the grasse, and as the willowes by the riuers of waters.

This verse is an amplification of the former.

There is nothing contained in this verse, but that which I haue alleadged out of the hundreth and fourth Psalm; to wit, that when God sends forth his Spirit, then the whole face of the earth is renewed, and the things which were before parched vp with heate, shall beginne to wax greene and flourishing; euen as the hearbs sprout, after they haue been watered by the dewes from heauen. He amplifies his speech by these similitudes, and shewes more plainly, that it shall be no lesse difficult for God to repeople his Church a new, which was barren and deformed, in regard of the wofull estate in which shee was, then to giue the earth power to bud, and bring forth grasse and hearbs. Moreover, albeit hee speaks not properly heere of regeneration: yet may wee refer this sentence vnto it, because hee handles the doctrine of the Churches restauration, whereof regeneration is a principall part: for God thereby repaires his image in his elect & chosen people. We might insit longer vpon this matter, and lay it out more fully, but we must first labour to attaine the Prophets meaning, and shew the plainc and natue sense of his words.

Verf. 5. One shall say, I am the Lords: another shall bee called by the name of Iakob: and another shall subscribe with his hand vnto the Lord, and name himselfe by the name of Israel.

Hitherto the Prophet hath spoken vnder borrowed speeches, now he sets forth the thing plainly.

Hitherto the Prophet hath spoken by similitudes, but now he deliuers his mind plainly and without any figures, shewing what these buds and hearbs bee, whereof hee hath spoken; to wit, that the Lord will gather his people out of all nations, and will bring them into his Church, which were far off before: also that he would restore and augment the same, which in a manner seemed to bee brought to nothing: for all should runne vnto it out of all quarters of the world, and should craue that they might bee imolled among the faithfull: according to that which is said in Psal. 87. Behold, Philista, Tyre, and Ethiopia; there was he borne. Which place of the Psalm, howsoever it hath seemed to be obscured by the ignorance of the expositors, yet it serues to giue light to this prophetic. For we know the number of those which returned from the captiuiy were very few: the faithfull therefore had cause to bee astonished, and to blush for shame; much more cause had they to be hindered from comprehending the glorious and wonderfull worke of their redemption, which was so highly extolled by the Prophets. The author of this Psalm therefore labours to preuent this astonishment, and giues them to vnderstand that the Babylonians and Egyptians shall also become members of the Church: that the Ethiopiens, Tyrans, and all such as were strangers, should come and be incorporated into the number of Gods chosen. As if he should say, Ierusalem is now desolate indeed, yet will God not onely gather together his banished, but will also call from every part of the world, and make them one body, which now are sundered, in such sort, that they shall reioice that God hath made them Citizens with the Saints, and shall no lesse appertaine to the body of the elect, then if they had issued forth of the same.

Now for as much as wee are wont to take their names, who are to be imolled in bookes, the Prophet hauing respect vnto this custome, vseth these phrases of speech: One shall subscribe with his hand vnto the Lord, and shall name himselfe by the name of Israel: another shall protest I am the Lords, and shall call himselfe by the name of Iacob. By which words the Prophet signifies that this shall bee a new and extraordinary worke, when hee which before was a meere stranger frō God, should now reioice that hee was adopted of him. Shall be called, signifies heere as much as we usually say, To bee called by anothers name: as in the fourth Chapter, where it is spoken of the women which desired husbands, onely to take away their rebuke and shame, We will eat our owne bread, and will weare our owne garments: onely let vs bee called by thy name.

Now howsoever Isaiah seems to make distinction heere betweene such as in expresse termes protest themselves to be Gods people, and those which desired to bee called by the name of Iakob, yet the two members are to be referred both to the one and to the other: for to be Gods child, and to bee of Israel, are things conioined with an inseparable band. Why so? Because God will be Father to none, but such as haue the Church for their mother. And yet we also note, that there are no true Citizens of the Church, but such as submit themselves vnder the Lords dominion.

God will that all his children should acknowledge the Church for their mother.

If the Prophet had omitted this word Lords, and had onely mentioned Iakob and Israel, yet we must haue risen from thence to the fountain of Iakob, of whom all things in heauen and in earth are named. But to take away all ambiguity, he repeats this order twice; to wit, that those onely are to bee accounted the children of Iakob, which submit themselves to God.

By this we may easily see the Prophets drift: for he shews that the church no sooner desire the want of Gods blessing, verf. 3. but by little and little shee falls to ruin, and withers away: on the contrary, when the Spirit is shed abroad vpon her, she by & by recouers new strength and force; not onely in regard of obtaining her first beautie and glory, but contrary to all hope, shee attaines wonderfull increase. We are also to note that the Prophet speaks not heere of the order of nature, as if the new children of the Church were borne so; for no man gets such a dignitie by his owne industry: but when those which were strangers gers before, ſhall be regenerated; then the Propnet ſaith, they ſhall come and give in their names, to teſtifie, that they are indeed the children of God. We ſee here therefore a deſcription of a change which farre ſurmounts nature, and all reaſon of fleſh and blood: to wit, when out of the curſed race of Adam, there iſſues a ſpiritual Iſrael.

Some thinke that Iſaiah notes heere how ſmall the number of the faithfull ſhall be, when it is ſaid, one ſhall ſay: and another ſhall be called; and the third ſhall ſubſcribe: but this conicecture wants ground, and the very ſcope of the text eaſily confutes their error. As I thinke therefore, wee haue rather to gather, that the Church ſhall come in by troopes out of diuers nations far remote one from the other: in regard that God will bring home ſtrangers vnder his dominion, and to touch their hearts, that they ſhall glory not in words onely, but in truth, that they are of the number of his people. Hence alſo wee may obſerue, that true faith cannot be in the heart, but it will forthwith breake out into a voluntarie and franke confeſſion, which may be gathered from theſe foure diſtinct members: one ſhall ſay, I am the Lord; another ſhall be called by the name of Iſaiah; the third ſhall ſubſcribe with his hand; and the fourth ſhall call himſelfe by the name of Iſrael. For the very truth is, that Gods ſeruants ought not to be mute or ſilent, but both by words and deeds to teſtifie what is in their hearts, ſeeing they profeſſe to obey him, and reioyce in his name the whole courſe of their life.

Verſ. 6. Thus ſaith the Lord the King of Iſrael, and his redeemer the Lord of hoſts; I am the firſt, and I am the laſt, and without me there is no God.

The Prophet enters not into any new diſcourſe, but onely confirms the former doctrine, which it was needfull for him to do: for mens mindes are wonderfully inclined to diſtruſt, and they are quickly out of heart in the time of aduerſitie; neither can they be raiſed vp by one or two exhortations. He ſpends no waſt labor then in confirming this doctrine with ſo many words, becauſe we neuer attribute ſo much to Gods power as we ſhould. We are often diſtracted with penſiue cares, and are ouermuch glued to the things of this life. The Prophet therefore hauing fixed this vnumerable name of Iehouah in the forefront, he alſo calles him King, and Redeemer, becauſe it is not enough to apprehend his power, vnleſſe we be alſo aſſured of his fatherly loue which he beares vs. That the promiſes of God then might haue their authoritie with vs, he not onely mentions his glorie, but his goodnes alſo, to aſſure vs that it appertaines vnto vs. But it might ſeeme ridiculous that he calles himſelfe King, ſeeing the people were in a maner brought to nothing, yet were the faithfull notwithstanding to cleaue faſt to this promiſe, ſo as by faith they were euen in this ſeruitude to apprehend a kingdome to come, though for the preſent they ſaw not ſo much as any glimps of it. And the very truth is, the former doctrine would neuer haue entered into the minds of men oppreſſed vnder ſo extreme a bondage (yea almoſt ouerwhelmed with deſpaire) had not this preface prepared a way and paſſage for it. But when God familiarly inuites vs vnto him, ſhewing that he indeed is our, faith being allured by ſo ſweet a ſummons breakes forth though it were euen out of hell it ſelle.

In ſaying I am the firſt, he means not to magnifie the eternitie of God, but to ſet forth his unchangeableneſſe, that to the Iewes might belecue him to be ſuch a one for the time to come, as they had found him in times paſt. But what neceſſitie was there of this, may ſome ſay, ſeeing he ſpeakes to the faithfull, who were rightly informed of this truth already? I anſwer, that albeit men beleue in God, yet doe they not kn w him fir ſuch a one as he is, and oftentimes they attribute leſſe to him then to a creature. Therefore the Prophet would haue vs to liſt vp pure hearts vnto heauen, that being emptied of falſe imaginations concerning him, we might intirely fixe our faith vpon one God onely. I adde further, that it was needfull this people ſo extremely vexed ſhould be confirmed againſt ſuch violent temptations, that they might neither loſe their hope, nor patience.

Verſ. 7. And who is like me that ſhall call, and ſhall declare it, and ſet it in order before me ſince I appointed the ancient people? and what is at hand, and what things are to come? let them ſhew vnto them.

Now the Lord compares himſelfe with Idols, as we haue ſeene before, Chap. 40. 18. 19. His purpoſe is to deliuer the Iewes from being diſcouraged or offended when the victorious Babylonians ſhould proudly triumph ouer them: for, the reproches wherewith the wicked loded them, were exceeding intolerable and fearful, as, Where is your God? Why doth he not help you now? Such blaſphemies were ſufficient to haue ſhaken the hearts of the faithfull in ſunder, and ſo farre to diſmay them, as to diue them into viter deſpaire. The Prophet therefore inſits very carefully vpon this point, that he might euer be confirming of them againſt ſuch defaults.

This lamentable deſolation into which the people were then ſalne, was as a thick cloud which ſhadowed from them the ſight of Gods louing countenance: and the wicked on the other ſide reioiced, as if their gods had now obtained the preheminance. But the Prophet intending to ſcatter the darknes of ſuch miſts and clouds of errors, ſhewes, that Gods glorie ſhines as it were in certaine and inſalable marks of his diuinitie, which diſcernes him from Idols. Why ſo? Becauſe the Lord foretold all things that ſhould come to paſſe, to the end his people might acknowledge him a iuſt Iudge in his chaſtiſements inflicted vpon them, and yet might alſo about hope be aſsured, that he would be fauorable and mercifull vnto them.

To call, is taken heere two waies: either it is to be referred to Gods foreknowledge, or to the execution thereof: for as all things are gouerned by his providence, so doth hee also know what is to come, and giues plaine proofes of his prescience. But we neede not stand long in discussing the signification of this word, seeing it plainly appeares, that the Prophet attributes vnto God both prescience, and the administratiō of all things. Yet I rather iudge, that he refers it to the act: as if he should say; Shall there be found any among the gods of the Gentiles, that can call: that is, can publish, ordaine, and raise vp deliuerers? May you not easilie discern by this, that there is none other God but me? And thus hee derides the Idols, to whom men attributed such power causelie.

By the verbe to shew, which is presently added, he sets forth the speciall goodnesse of God, who vouchsafed to reueale his secrets to the elect and chosen people, by the ministerie of the Prophets. By the ancient people, some vnderstand the Gentiles, saying, that the singuler number is put for the plurall; because the Lord no sooner furnished the nations with people, but he separated them one from another, and established an order which should indure for euer. Others extend it vnto the creatures, so as the starres should be one people; and the hearbs, beasts, and such like, should be another. But when I consider all circumstances, I am constrained to follow another exposition; to wit, that the Lord speaks of his people, and calles them ancient, because he preferred them before all others: and yet it is certain that there were some long before them. The Egyptians, Arcadians, and others, brag of their antiquitie. As touching Abraham, he came out of Mesopotamia, whilst the Caldeans flourished: and liued solitarily in his house, as if the memorie of his name should haue been buried in obliuion, when the neighbour Countries were replenished with people, and with all sorts of benefites. Neither must we iudge of the antiquitie of Israel by the length of yeeres, or in respect of any thing externall, but by Gods election: for which cause indeed, the foundations of Ierusalem are called euerslasting. It is as much then as if he had said; Before there were any men to forge or frame Idols, I determined in my secret counsell to haue a Church, which should indure for euer. This people therefore is the most ancient and excellent of all others, though others be before them both in yeeres and in dignitie. For as all things were created for man, so all men were made to serue the Church: yea, there is not any nation whatsoever, be it neuer so high or mightie, which is not much inferior. For the Church is the body of Christ, which far surpasseth both in age and excellencie. We will not stand to recount fables, as the Iewes doe, who affirme Ierusalem to be built from the beginning: for the Prophet respects not beginnings of time here. And yet wee must hold this principle, that the elect people are more honourable and ancient, then the strange nations; because they approach neerer vnto God, who is the fountainne of eternitie.

Let them shew.] This permission giuen, shewes that men shall but lose their time in looking for any answer from Idols, touching the foretelling of things to come: and if they should, yet their answers would proue nothing but impostures and words, hauing alwaies a double signification, wherewith they were sure to be seduced that went to aske counsell of them, as wee haue said heretofore.

Verf. 8. Feare yee not, neither be afraid: haue I not told thee of old, and haue declared it? You are euen my witnesses, whether there be a God beside me, or a God that I know not.

*Or, strong.

I Saiah shewes now wherefore hee spake of the power of God; to wit, that hee might confirme the peoples faith: for this is the conclusion which he gathers out of the former arguments: Seeing the Lord is so powerful, and gouernes all things after the counsell of his own will, therefore the people whom he hath taken into his protection, haue no cause to feare. In the next place hee repeats that which was said before; to wit, that God had not onely succoured the Iewes in hugger mugger, in shewing himselfe at vnwares, when none waited for his helpe; but had also vpheld their faith by many prophecies, and gaue them sufficient testimonies of his fatherly fauour: so as his diuinitie was manifested to the utmost. For what should it profit vs to know that God both foresees and is able to doe all things, if he did not therewithall manifest the same vnto vs concerning our saluation? Albeit then it is his pleasure that many things should be vnknowne to vs, yet hee communicates so much of his counsels, as is expedient and fit for vs to vnderstand.

The knowledge of Gods pre-science and power should little auaille vs; if he manifested not the same for our good.

The word Meax, signifies a long time: or, (if any had rather take it otherwise) it notes out an opportunitie or fitnessse of time: for the Lord reueales his secrets vnto his elect, when he sees the time to be conuenient. But the first interpretation seemes to me the least constrained.

Wherefore you are my witnesses.] His meaning is, as I haue touched before, that the people could not pretend ignorance, if they contented not themselves with one God, seeing he hath so fully manifested himselfe vnto them, that they might be the best witnesses of his diuine power. What is the end of our knowledge then concerning Gods glorie? Euen openly to witnessse the truth of God before men, as hath been said before: vnlesse we had rather be counted smotherers of that light which hee hath manifested vnto vs by his holy Spirit. Moreouer, we can be no lawfull witnesses of Gods truth, if he confirme vs not by his truth: for what validitie is there in his testimony, who doubts of the truth which he is to profess? Wee must therefore be both taught by Gods word, if we will haue ſuch a faith and hope as accompliſheth ſalutation.

He attributes heere vnto God the title of ſtrength, as in many other places; becauſe it is not enough to know the eternall eſſence of God, vnleſſe wee therewithall aſcribe vnto him power & ſtrength. Otherwiſe, we ſhould leaue him onely a bare and naked title, as the vnbeleeuers doe; who indeed confeſſe there is a God with their mouthes, and afterwards attribute his power to this and that creature.

Verſ. 9. *All they that make an Image are vanitie, and their * delectable things ſhall not profiſe them: and they are their owne witneſſes that they ſee not nor know: therefore they ſhall be confounded.*

THe Lord now on the contrarie ſhewes how miſerable the Idolaters are which erre and vaniſh away in their inuentions, being not faſt grounded vpon his eternall truth, to wit, they are ſenſeleſſe and void of ſound iudgement. And as he hath heretofore juſtly condemned the ingratitude of the people, if by the teſtimonies of Gods preſcience and prouidence they were not encouraged to hope well: ſo now on the contrarie, he armes and fortifies them againſt the ſuperſtitions of the Gentiles. But in regard the vnbeleeuers were many in number, and ſlowed in forces and riches, he denounceth that all is vanitie; and to be ſhort, that all their goodly ſhewes would proue deceitfull helps in the end. By their deſirable things, he not only comprehends their Idols, but alſo all their ſeruiſe, veſtments, pomp, and ceremonies, which fooles are wont to honour them withall. And he ſets out theſe things by a very fit word: for ſeeing the chiefe end of mans life conſiſts in aduancing the true knowledge and worſhip of God (wherein ſtands the maine difference betweene vs and brute beaſts) ſo muſt it be preferred before all things be they neuer ſo excellent: to this (Iſay) we ought to referre all the thoughts and deſires of our hearts. It is not without cauſe then that the Scripture vſeth this word, when it ſpeakes of Gods worſhip and ſeruiſe: but it is vſed here touching a corrupt and ſurriouſe zeale wherewithall Idolaters are carried away after their Idols, and their ſeruiſes: for this cauſe he ſaith that all their deſirable things about which they ſpend ſo much time, are both vaine and vnprofitable. Oftentimes alſo this deſire is compared to the ſildie luſt wherewith men are ſo bewitched, or whollie blinded, that they can not ſee their villanie, nor yet obey common reaſon, whereof we haue largely ſpoken in the firſt Chapter.

In that he addes, themſelues are vniueſes: ſome expound it that the Idols beare witnes againſt themſelues, and plainly teach what vanitie there is in the, ſo as they which perceiue it not are wonderfullie blinded. But I like not of this expoſition: I had rather follow thoſe therefore which referre this to the Idolaters, who can giue ſufficiente teſtimonie themſelues of their vanitie, and know that indeed their Idols neither heare nor ſee.

There is an oppoſition in this place betweene Gods witneſſes verſe 8. and the Idols witneſſes in this verſe, for the firſt yeeld a glorious witnes to the truth of God by the light of his works, and the vnderſtanding of his propheſies and promiſes: the others are conſtrained to ſtand mute and dumb, vnleſſe they will be falſie, and beare witnes to vaine things, hauing no truth at all in them. I denie not but Idolaters brag of their ſeruiſes, and extoll them about the ſkies: but this blind conſcience of theirs doth more then ſufficiente witnes how great vanitie and waueing of mind there is in that which they doe: for they alwaies tremble and are in continual vniquietnes, though they carie it out with great ſtirres by their rebellions. Themſelues then are vniueſes againſt their Idols: as if one hauing an ignorant teacher, ſhould plead againſt his inſufficiencie. So the Idolaters ſhall teſtiſie that their gods neither know, nor are able to doe ought; becauſe they are driuen to confeſſe that the matter whereof they conſiſt is nothing but wood and ſtone, or ſuch like ſtuſſe wrought with hands: and that things thus framed and faſhioned can neither ſee nor ſeele ought at all. The faithfull therefore only are the lawfull and true witneſſes, in affirming that their God both ſeeeth, gouernes, and effects all things done in heauen and in earth. The reſt muſt needs be confounded, albeit they ſtoutlic maintaine their errors now with fire and fagot, for their owne conſciences beare them witnes that their minds are enthralled with a vaine opinion, and corrupt imaginacions.

Verſ. 10. Who hath made a God, or molten an Image, that is profitable for nothing?

HE now derides mens madnes who preſume to be the forgers of gods: for is it not an horrible and execrable thing that a mortall creature ſhould dare to make himſelfe a Creator? truly there is no reaſonable man that would not greatly deteſt ſuch a ſurie, and yet the moſt part are carried away with ſuch a ſenſeleſſe rage euen to make gods; and no admonition whatſoener can reclaim them. But they will anſwere me, that they haue no ſuch thought, and that we do them great wrong to accuſe them of ſuch follie. And the Papiſts at this day tell vs that we belie them, and offer them iniurie, in vſing this and the like teſtimonies of ſ̄ Prophets againſt them: but they indeuor in vaine to iuſtifie themſelues by ſuch cauils. For Iſaiab very truly affirms that they are ſo bewitched, that they thinke they can make a god: in regard they attribute a diuinitie to blocks and ſtocks; as ſoone as they be once framed and poliſhed, then they forthwith run a gadding after the, they vow vnto them, they pray and bow their knees before them: in a word, they attribute that to them which belongs only vnto God.

[Which is profitable for nothing.] This is to be well obserued, for by these words it is euident that all figures, by which men would represent God, are condemned for vaine and vnprofitable. Whence it followes, that God is not only blasphemed, and oft times his glorie giuen to dead stocks, but that those which make and receive them, do also lose their labor to their owne confusion of face. The Papiſts alledge that these be lay mens bookes. But this is a weake and childish shift: for the Prophet testifies, that they are profitable for nothing. I wish them therefore either to confesse that their Images are vaine and vnprofitable, or if they dare be so bold, to blot this testimonie of our Prophet out of his booke. In a place before, hee hath expressed somewhat more: for Chap. 41. 23. he saith they teach nothing but lies. But wee haue spoken sufficiently of this matter in the 40. and 41. Chapters.

Verſ. 11. Behold, all that are of the fellowship thereof shall bee confounded; for the Workemen themselves are men: let them all be gathered together, and stand vp, yet they shall feare, and be confounded together.

A reproofe both of Idoll makers, and Idoll worshippers.

HE not onely rebukes the workemen and forgers of Idols, but all Idolaters, who are so blind and senselesse, as to close the power of God within a trunk of wood, as soone as it hath but receiued a new forme. His meaning is then, that the aris men should not onely be punished for their presumption, but those also which shall be companions with them in their superstitions. These shall not escape: for it is good reason that both being guiltie of the same crime, they should both receiue like iudgement. Now they cannot by anie meanes excuse themselves, in regard they see that their Idols are vaine and dumbe, forged and framed with mans hand: how can they be gods then?

See Psal. 97.7

[Let them all be gathered.] As if he should say; Let Idolaters and their Idols combine themselves together; yet shall they feare and bee confounded, when they shall stand vp before Gods tribunal seat.

But it is not without cause that the Prophet threatens them with feare and confusion: for Idolaters are wont proudly to aduance themselves, and to despise others. They glory much in their multitude, as the Papiſts doe now adays; who in reproch and disdain, esteeme vs but a small handfull. They insolently insulte ouer vs, and band themselves with wonderfull pride both against God and his word. Isaiah therefore appeales heere to the consciences of such men: for howeouer obstinacie and extreme rebellion of heart hath possessed them, yet are they constrained to tremble and quake when they are alone, crying out, What shall wee doe? especially when they looke towards the end of all their actions: for they haue no stabilitie whereupon they may boldly rest. When their rage pricks them forward, then they are audacious enough; but when they come againe to themselves, and at leaſure be thinke them what they haue done, they melt away for verie feare. Their furie, pride, and multitude then, ought not to terrifie nor astonish vs. Why so? Because all this wil in a moment be brought to nought. Let vs not be much moued therefore at the combinations, brauadoes, and diuillish plottings of the Papiſts, seeing we know that all these things shall turne to their ouerthrow; for the more they ouerflow in inuolency, and aduance themselves against God, the more heauie and shamefull shall their extreme fall be.

Papiſts bold for a brunt.

Verſ. 12. The smith taketh an instrument, and worketh in the coales, and fashioneth it with his hammers, and worketh it with the strength of his armes: yea, hee is an hungred, and his strength faileth: hee drinketh no water, and is faint.

13. The Carpenter stretcheth out a line, he fashioneth it with a red threed: he planteth it, and he pourtraiet it with the compasse, and maketh it after the beantie of a man, that it may remaine in an house.

IT is not in vaine that the Prophet makes this large description; for his meaning is to rouze vp the drowsie consciences of the superstitious, out of their senselesse blockishnes; if by any meanes he might either terrifie, or at least hinder the Jewes from being made drunke with this poisoned cup: for they were compassed about on all sides with an infinite number of idolaters. He disciphers out euerie thing point by point, that he might giue them cleerly to discern the their spirituall frensie and madnesse. I grant he might haue condemned this their wickednesse euen in few words; but this large description makes it very apparant, when hee thus reckons vp the Smith, the Carpenter, the tooles, labours, and diligence of these workemen; to bring vs (as you would say) euen to the acting of the thing it selfe. For men who naturally haue these errors ingrauen in their vnderstandings, are more moued this way; then by a plaine sermon. Neither can they be wakened from their sluggishnesse, but by continuall loud cries. All things therefore must of necessitie be minced out vnto them by small morsels; yea they had neede haue it chewed for them, and put into their moutnes like young children, that so at the last they may comprehend that doctrine, which otherwise seemes new and strange vnto them.

The furie of idolaters amplified.

[Yea, is hungry.] Hee expresseth the zeale wherewith Idolaters are carried away in forging their gods: for they are so ferie and vehement, that they can keep no measure at all. Their lusts picke them forward as mad men, men, to runne vpon their owne deſtruction: they will not allow themſelves time to eaſe nor drinke. Thus ſitie therefore may well be compared to the raging luſts of whoremongers, as we haue ſaid before. In a word, they ſpare not their ſtrength, but employ all the faculties & powers both of ſoule & body in this buſineſſe; which is better vnderſtood by The ſtrength of the arme. As it he had ſaid, They deſpise themſelves of dies and reſt, they apply to the vtmoſt the ſtrength of their armes: yea, they will ſcarſly allow themſelves the common comforts of nature. In a word, they ſpare neither paines nor loſſe to finiſh their gods, which they ſo much deſire. verſ. 9.

Now, whereas hee ſaith, that though theſe faine, yet they giue noi ouer, but indure hunger and thiſt, rather then to hinder their work, it is to be vnderſtood of the workmen; yet it may alſo as well extend it ſelfe to all the indeuors of an inconfiderate cale. For we ſee how the ſuperſtitious will torment their bodies in their ſeruent deuotions (as they call them.) But the more they melt and pine away themſelves to fall into perdition, the more vile and abominable is our ſloth, when wee deſraud God of that ſeruiſe which to him appertaines. But in the end hee ſhewes with what folly this diligence is filled, ſeeing the whole fruit of their labour is to behold their Idols, idly to reſt without feare in whatſoeuer place they were faſtened: as if ſome lazie bodie ſhould wallow in the aſhes, or lie all day ſoaking in his bed.

Verſ. 14. He will hew him downe cedars, and take the pine tree and the oke, and taketh courage among the trees of the foreſt: hee planteth a ſiſre tree, and the raine doth nourish it.

In this verſe the Prophet deſcribes not onely their violent ſurie, but their wilfull obſtinacie.

THE Prophet ſets forth not onely the zeale and witteſſe rage of Idolaters, but alſo their obſtinacie and rebellion. For in that he ſaith, they cut downe cedars, and did plant a ſiſre tree; it is to ſhew that they perſeuered long in their follie, and were not ouertaken with any ſuddē paſſion, which droue them to forge theſe gods. They are not content onely to chufe trees of ſufficient growth, but they alſo plant them young, water, and husband them, and vaiſt a long while, till they be come to a ſufficient ſtature to make an Idoll of. When wee read theſe things, and ſee ſuch an horrible rage, let vs know that God takes vs by the necke (as it were) to pull vs thence, and to continue vs in true picie. Wee muſt take theſe foxes (I meane theſe luſts) betimes, and kill them whileſt they be cubs, leſt if we nourish them ouer long in our breſts, they grow wild and impregnable. Wee are euermore to watch ouer our owne hearts, that a wicked luſt no ſooner creeps in to carry vs away to the loue of Idols, but wee forthwith roote it out, for feare of falling into theſe deepe gulphes; becauſe euen the beſt of vs all beares about with vs ſome ſeedes of this brutiſhnes, which by no meanes can be weeded out: nay, they wil bud & ſprout vp in vs without ceaſing, vnleſſe we be purged of them by the power of the holy Ghoſt.

Moreouer, ſeeing Idolaters are thus violently carried downe the ſtream in ſeruing their Idols, haue not wee cauſe to bluſh for ſhame, that are ſo cold in the ſeruiſe of our God? Let vs (ſay) bluſh and be aſhamed of our ſloth and lukewarmeſſe; nay, kee coldneſſe, whileſt theſe that worſhip Idols, are fire hote as it were with zeale; and let vs alſo bethinke vs of the count wee are to make. With what vehenencie are the Turkes carried away, when the matter concernes the maintenance of their Mahomet and his blaſphemies? Are they not ready to ſhed their owne blood, and to giue their liues for the defence thereof? The Papiſts are not behind them herein: for they are no leſſe inflamed with ſurie to vphold their ſuperſtitious. And we in the meane while can content our ſelves to ſit ſtill; much adoe there is to quicken vp our zeale; nay, doe we not often euen quench thoſe good ſparkles which God hath kindled in vs by his holy Spirit: Hearkē what Jeremiah ſaith; Hath any Nation changed their gods? But my people hath forſaken me the fountaine of liuing waters, to dig vnto themſelves broken pits that can hold no water: Jer. 2. 11. This compariſon therefore ought to be well obſerued, leſt wee be found leſſe conſtant in maintaining the truth, then Idolaters are obſtinate in defending lies.

In that Idolaters are ſo vehement in their Idoll ſeruiſe, it ought to make vs bluſh, that are ſo cold in Gods ſeruiſe.

Verſ. 15. A man burneth thereof; for he will take thereof, and warme himſelfe: alſo hee kindleth it, and baketh bread, yet hee maketh a god, and worſhippeth it; he maketh it an Idoll, and boweth vnto it.

16. Hee burneth the halfe thereof in the fire, and vpon the halfe thereof hee eateth fleſh: hee roſteth the roſt, and is ſatisfied: alſo hee warmeth himſelfe and ſaith, Aha, I am warme, I haue been at the fire.

17. And of the reſidue thereof he maketh a god: hee boweth vnto it, and worſhippeth, praieth vnto it, and ſaith; Deliuer me, for thou art my god.

HEE worthily taxeth their ſottiſhnes, that manifeſt experience it ſelfe cannot lead them to conclude it for a thing vnpoſſible, that a ſmoke of wood ſhould become a god. He alſo taxeth their vnthankfulneſſe, in deſrauding God of his honour, ſeeing his power may eaſily be diſcerned euen in the growth of themſelves. For when a man puts wood to diuers vſes, the bountie of God forthwith preſents it ſelfe before his eyes, be it in vvarming himſelfe by it, or in baking bread in the oven, in roſting, or heating his meate with it. In a word, as oft as we warme vs, and inioy theſe benefits by our fires, ſhall wee not be conuincid of inexcusable ingratitude, if we therein therein consider not of Gods goodnesse, who hath so provided, as to destitute vs of nothing, that is needfull for vs?

Hereunto appertaines these words, Aba, I am vaine: for this spech expresseth the ioy of such as being freed from incommodities and wants, begin to blesse their owne good estate. But can there be a more vnworthe or vnreasonable thing committed, then for men in such comfortable maner to haue the vse of Gods blessings, that their hearts are therewith filled with gladnes, and yet neuer to be thankfull to the author from whom they proceed; nay, to abuse his great riches to violate his honor? No doubt in the meate that is in their kitchens, and in other commodities, they see that the wood is their seruant and made for their vse, why then should they bow before a trunk of wood, that shall resemble the shape of a man? Is not God robbed of his right by such a course? And when they pray to their Images, rob they not the Lord of that sacrifice which he principallie requires? The very prophane writers haue sometimes derided the follie of these Idolaters, which durst after their owne inuention frame a god of a corruptible substance, wherof they made no reckoning before. Thence came this flout of the Poet Horace, who brings in an Idoll speaking thus:

Horace.

I was once the stock of a figge-tree, seruing to no purpose, whilist the Carpenter not knowing whether is worse best to make me a seat to sit vpon, chose rather to make me such a god as you now here see mee.

But such folke notwithstanding could not see the fountaine from whence this impietic sprang, because they gaue not themselues to consider of that goodnes and power of the only true God which shines in all his creatures.

Now when the Prophets dealt thus bitterly against Idolaters in laying forth their furie and sortishnes, no doubt but they complained as if he had offered them great iniurie: neither wanted they their tricks, but to the vniuersal coloured over their errors with goodly pretences: to wit, they confessed that the gods were in heauen, as may be seene euen in their owne writings: neither would they in expresse termes affirme the stone or wood was a God indeed. And this shift also the Papists haue found out at this day against vs, because they would not be condemned of so grosse a blindness. But we haue told you, that the Prophet stands not so much here to debate about the simple essence of God, who also were no better then an Idoll, if nothing but that were giuen vnto him: but the question here is touching his properties, to wit, his prescience, power, providence, iustice, saluation, and such like, which our Prophet would haue ascribed vnto him fullie and whollie. And when Idolaters erect Images and runne vnto them for aid and succor, supposing that God heares them; also, when they speake to their puppets which they set before them, tie they not their saluation to the things themselues? But this brutishnes proceeds from the ignorance of the nature of God, in that they imagin him to be carnall like themselues, who is a pure and spirituall substance: and thus they manifest the base opinion they haue conceiued of God, whose glorie they reject and prophane, in likening him to corruptible and earthly things: for what is more disonant from his Maiestie then Images? and yet those that worship them, inuolue to inclose God in heauen, and to make him flout to their lusts. The Prophet is iustly displeas'd then with such corruptions, and therefore gauls the furious desires of these superstitious ones, seeing a man can not thinke of nor viter a thing more detestable.

Verf. 18. *They haue not knowne, nor understand: for * God hath shut their * Or, he. eyes that they can not see, and their hearts that they can not understand.*

His conclusion is, that it were impossible for men indued with common reason to be thus reasonlesse, if God had not shut up both their eyes and hearts. For had they but a dram of wit in their heads, they must of necessitie be drawne to consider how absurd a thing it is to worship a fragment of that wood which themselues had burned, and with their owne eyes saw it consumed to ashes before them. But in as much as they neither know nor understand any thing, nor will be brought to beleue their owne senses, a man may well conclude, that they are become beasts: for this ignorance wherewith Isaiah reprocheth them, is as much as if hee had said; They are beasts in the forme of men. And howsoeuer many among them were otherwise sharpe witted enough, yet in this behalfe they were more then iustly conuinc'd of their brutish senselesnesse.

senses.

The reason added in the latter member of the verse, is not to lessen their fault, but to shew how odious and hatefull their sinne is: for men would neuer become so senselesse, vnlesse God in his iust iudgement had giuen them vp into a reprobate sense. Some supplie God heere: others, the falsc Prophets: affirming that the people were blinded, because they were seduced by their impostures; otherwise they had neuer bin plunged into such grosse errors: for false doctrines blind the eyes. There are others who take it in another sense, and they refer it to Satan. But because the first exposition is most vsed in the Scriptures, I rather allow of that; to wit, that God blinded them iustly. Vnlesse any had rather referre it to the Idolaters themselues, who wittingly are wont to put out the eyes of their owne reason: and in this sense there must bee a change of the number; to wit, they: a thing much frequented among the Hebrewes: But I haue set downe that which seemed fittest. You may also adde, that it is verie vsual in the Hebrew tongue, to conceal the name of God, when it mentions him.

Falsc doctrines
eyes.

Now it appears by many places of Scripture, in what sense God is said to blind the eyes, and to harden the hearts; to wit, when he takes away the light of his holy Spirit, and and giues men vp to their owne luſts : ſo as they can no more be reclaimed by any perſuaſion. He alſo armes Satan with the efficacy of error, by cauſing him to lay ſuch ſnares in the way of thoſe that receiue not the truth in loue, as they can neuer wind themſelues out, but muſt ſtill be ſubiect to his illuſions and bewitchings. What remains then but groſſe darkneſſe and blockiſh ignorance, through which this tyrant, the father of lies and of darkneſſe, gets free egreſſe and regrette. For there is not left vs ſomuch as one ſparkle of light to ſcatter theſe miſts of error: but wee ſhall be driuen on with the Spirit of giddineſſe, wherewith the Lord ſmites the reprobates, ſo as we ſhall be ſtrangely halod to and fro at Satans pleaſure.

And yet we muſt not lay the blame of this blinding vpon God, for hee alwaies findes iuſt cauſe ſo to doe, though many times it be hid and concealed from vs. Neither is it fit we ſhould curiouſly prie into this ſecret, nor to enter into his hidden counſell, vnleſſe we meane withall to beare away the puniſhment of our owne preſumption. I grant the cauſes for the moſt part are moſt apparant, as mens vnthankfulneſſe and rebellion againſt God : as Saint Paul deſcribes it at large in the Epistle to the Romans, Chap. 1. 28. for their blinding is the iuſt fruit of their deſerts. Howſoever men excuſe themſelues then through ignorance, yet this will be no ſufficient pleaſure for they had neuer been wrapped in ſuch errors, if the Lord had not done it for their wickedneſſe ſake.

Now from the iuſt iudgements of the one, we may draw ſound and infallible arguments from the iniquities of the other: for God is iuſt, and therefore neuer puniſheth any man vniuſtly; he blindes no man till himſelfe hath deſerued it, and hath wittingly ſhut his owne eyes : let the fault therefore reſt wholly in men, who of ſet purpoſe ſeek their owne blinding and hardening. The Propheets meaning then doubtleſſe is, that men who ought to ſuffer themſelues to be governed by diuine inſtincts, being naturally indued with ſome light of reaſon, were worthily reiected of the father of lights, to be the bondſlaues of Satan.

Verſ. 19. * And none conſidereth in his heart, neither is there knowledge nor underſtanding, to ſay, I haue burnt balſe of it euen in the fire, and haue baked bread alſo vpon the coales thereof. I haue roſted fleſh and eaten it; and ſhall I make the reſidue thereof an abomination? ſhall I bow to the ſtocke of a tree?

This is a confirmation of the former ſentence, whereby the Prophet labours to prevent all excuſes, becauſe vnbeleeuers delight to maintaine and vphold their owne ignorance. And whereas it commonly falles out that men haue ripe wits in deuiling and foreſeeing things for their owne aduantage in the world, but are as blind as Moſes or Baekes, in things belonging to Gods worſhip and ſeruice; the chiefe cauſe is, that they are too eager in purſuing worldly profits and pleaſures, ſt are too ſlacke in ſeeking firſt the kingdome of God. In this ſentence therefore the Prophet reproues this contempt of pietie and religion, in that hauing fetched ſuch long circuits, yet theſe vnbeleeuers conſider not in themſelues whether they are in the right way or no, or whether they labour not in vaine in ſpending ſo much coſt and labour in the purſuit of their errors and ſuperſtitions.

He alſo proues that their ſottiſhneſſe is inexcusable, in that they giue themſelues to ſuch new ſound ſeruices. For if they did but weigh all circumſtances a litle in an equall balance, they might eaſily perceiue their owne groſſe folly: but ſeeing they be blind, it is a ſigne they meane to deceiue themſelues, and to pleaſe themſelues in their blindneſſe. And therefore there is no pretext of excuſe at all left them, which can ſtand them in any ſtead: ignorance they can pretend none, becauſe they will not apply their wits to ſearch out the truth. Returning into the heart, is taken heere for conſulting apart by a mans ſelfe: for there is ſcarce a child ſo rude, that may not bee a ſufficient Iudge to condemne ſo palpable a madneſſe. The ſuperſtitious therefore fauour themſelues too much; for they ſinne not altogether of ignorance: neither is this vice ſo much to be attributed to mans naturall corruption, as to his obſtinate and heady opinion.

Verſ. 20. He feedeth of aſhes: a ſe-duced heart hath deceived him, that hee cannot deliuer his ſoule, and ſay; Is there not a lie in my right hand?

This verſe againe confirms the former ſentence. To feede of aſhes, ſignifies as much as to be repleat with aſhes: as, to feede vpon winde, Hoſ. 12. 1. ſignifies to be filled with winde; for the ſame may be ſaid of the one, that is ſaid of the other. As on the contrary, Thou ſhalt feede the truth; Pſal. 37. 3. for thou ſhalt be ſaciare with truth: that is to ſay, filled. Others againe expound, Thou ſhalt adminiſter ſpirituall foode: others, Thou ſhalt feede faithfully. But I had rather follow the firſt interpretation. Heere his meaning is to ſay, that men are ſwollen indeed, but in the meane while they are windie and emptie: for they are onely ſtuffed with vanity, which hath no ſtedfaſtneſſe in it. And therefore they rather burſt with pride, then by being any way ſatiſfied with good nourishment.

Afterwards he comprehends both the former points againe; to wit, that they ſee nothing, becauſe they are intangled with deceitfull baits; and yet that they wittingly and willingly caſt themſelues into theſe ſnares of vanity. The Prophet inſiſts long vpon this matter, to ſhew that nothing puſheth forward theſe Idolaters, and the ſuperſtitious ſort to commit theſe outrages, but their own free will. What reason haue they then to lay the blame vpon others, seeing the cause of these euils proceedes altogether from themselves? which euils they will needs retaine and carefully nourish within them. They aduance themselues in wonderful pride against God, they are repleat with a fallie opinion of their owne superstitions: in a word, all vnbelieuers are readie to burst with pride. Let vs in the meane while feed vpon the solid meate of sinceritie and truth, and let vs beware we suffer not our selues to be misled by any such delusions.

Notwithstanding he taxeth them (iustly) you see, for pleasing themselues in so foule a vice: for who is it that wil pardon such a carelesnesse, as is joined with the losse of mens felicity? We see how busilie men bestir them, when the naturall life is in icopardie: stands it not vs much more in hand then, to awaken men out of the slumber of their soules, which are in danger of eternall damnation; especially if we may doe it by putting forth our hand in pulling them out?

Moreover, it is said that he deliuer his soule, which by repentance escapes out of Satans nets. And in that sense we are said to saue one another, when we bring men that haue erred into the right way by our holy admonitions. Whence comes it then that Idolaters runne headlong into perdition? Because they take the bridle in their teeth, and wilfully rush into the same, euen as the horse iusteth into the battell.

Lastly, in the end of the verse hee shortly shewes, the meane whereby men may recover themselues out of this danger; to wit, in considering their owne workes, without flattering of themselues: for he that please himselfe in his error, and inquires not whether he doth well or no, such a one shall neuer be able to deliuer his owne soule. As for example, our Papists will not examine vpon what reason their diuine seruice is grounded, but content themselues to couer such a beastlinesse vnder the cloake of simplicitie; as if God meant to haue a Church of rude asses, or as if hee had not commanded vs to distinguish betwene that seruice hee accepts, and that which hee reiects: or as if hee had not commanded vs diligently to search what his good and acceptable will is, lest we should indifferently allow darknesse for light, and sower for sweete. For these things must be examined by the touchstone of his written word: which if we shall doe, it shall be easie for vs to escape out of the dangers; if not, then let vs lay the cause of our ruine vpon our selues. Why so? Because our meaning is to perish wilfully, in regard wee will not suffer our selues to be brought into the right way, or will not beare the words of exhortation.

Verf. 21. Remember these (O Iacob and Israel) for thou art my seruant: I haue formed thee: thou art my seruant; O Israel forget me not.

Application. NOW hee applies that to the peoples vse, which he hath so long insisted vpon before, touching the lies and superstitions of the Gentiles; wherein the ignorant deceiued themselues, especially in the matters belonging to Gods worship and seruice. Now hee writ not this so much for them of his owne time, as for the sakes principally which were to succede, and should afterward remaine captiues in Babylon. In which regard, they by their long abode among the Idols, were in danger to be corrupted, & declined from the true seruice of God, if they had not been restrained by such bridles. The Prophet therefore admonisheth them, that howsoeuer they should be detained seuentie yeeres in captiuitie, yer they should call these exhortations vnto mind, thereby to sustaine their hearts in their greatest temptations.

Thou art my seruant.] Hee adds this as the reason why they should remember these promises; euen to keepe themselues from this common contagion. For it had been a thing insupportable for the elect people, whom God had inclosed within the limits of his law, thereby to separate them from others, if they consuledly and indifferently should haue mingled themselues among the pollutions of the Gentiles. As if he should say; Wonder not you that the Caldeans are so rife in their errors, neither follow their example: because I haue formed thee to serue mee: that is to say, I haue reformed and regenerated thee, that thou mightest be heire of eternall life. Of this creation we haue amply spoken heretofore; to wit, that it appertaines to the renewing of the inward man. Now the Scripture is often wont to vse this argumēt, to wit, You are called to holinesse, and not to vnclannesse: 1. Thef. 4. 7. Also Phil. 2. 15. Walke as children of the light, in the midst of a peruerse and froward nation, With many the like places.

Since we gather that wee are worthy of many stripes, if by our carelesnesse and negligence, wee suffer that light of Gods grace wherewith he hath enlightened vs, to go out; because our fault will be much greater then theirs who haue not tasted of the like fauour. I grant the prophane are worthily punished; neither shall the excuse of ignorance be able to setue their turnes; but those that haue receiued grace, and haue abused it, shall bee worthy to be the more seuerely chastised.

Forgets me not.] His meaning is, that it is vnpossible for those which were once entred into the good way, to turne aside; ylesse it bee by forgetting of God. For as long as the remembrance of his Maiestie remains imprinted in the tables of our hearts, neither errors nor impostures shall euer bee able to take place. Is any reuolted from God then to turne to superstition and impietie? Let him impute it to his owne malice.

What is the cause of apostasie then? The forgetsfulness of God: for that by little and little drawes vs out of the right way, till at the length we be wholly reuolted. But by the remedie heere prescribed, he assures them that they shall be cut of danger to reuolt, namely, if they exercise themselues in continuall meditation: for if our minds grow once carelesse heerein, they gather rust (as it were) which which infects and corrupts all knowledge of God, till it be cleane eaten out.

Vers. 22. I haue put away thy transgressions like a cloud, and thy sinnes as a mist: turne vnto me, for I haue redeemed thee.

The Lord promisseth deliuerance to his people: for the truth is, that our mindes cannot be raised vp to remember him as we ought, vnlesse we first feele him gracious and fauourable vnto vs. That hee might preferue his people which he had formed for himselfe from reuolting then, he addes now a promise of consolation; to persuade with them, that this their banishment should not indure for euer: for God (as hee is a most patient and louing Father) somitigates their corrections, that hee alwaies forgiues the faults of his children.

As touching the putting away of their iniquities, it properly belonged to the captiues, which for their iniquities sake suffered that punishment. Hence it followed therefore that God being appeased, their deliuerance was at hand: for it is an argument taken from the cause to the effect. If the fault be remitted, so is the punishment. For the Iewes were no sooner reconciled with God, but the punishment which they suffered for their transgressions ceased.

Now in these words there is hid a close exhortation to repentance, not onely to moue them to sigh under the burthen of their afflictions, but to acknowledge them as iust recompences of their iniquities, whereby they had prouoked God vnto wrath. As oft then as he handles vs roughly, wee must not craue so much to be disburthened of this our sorrow and miserie, as rather to beginne at the forgiveness of our sinnes, that God would not impute them vnto vs. And heere wee haue cause giuen vs againe to meet with that fond distinction of the Papisls, who confesse that the fauls indeed is forgiuen, but not the punishment.

By the similitude of the cloud, hee means that the Lord would no longer continue to pursue them in his wrath, nor to correct them in his displeasures; because their sinnes being put out of his sight, the punishment was therewithall also abolished. For you see that in a faire day, the clouds which before darkened the light of the Sunne from vs, are vanished and gone. Let vs therefore reiect these diuelish inuentions of men, whereby they labour to ouerthrow this comfortable doctrine of the free remission of sinnes, seeing it flatly crosseth the doctrine of the holy Prophets.

This clause which is added, returne to mee, may be taken two waies: either that the Lord thereby exhorts them to repentance: or that therein he giues them hope of deliuerance: but both expositions may suite well. We haue told you that it is vsuall in the Scriptures to exhort to repentance, as oft as it mentions our deliuerance: for the Lord purposeth by this meanes to draw vs to himselfe, that hee might thereby fit vs for the receiving of his benefites. But because the people were in a manner past hope of their deliuerance, in respect of their owne infidelitie, wee may take these words as a confirmation, that from thence the people might vndoubtedly conclude in themselves, that they should returne. As if the Lord should haue said; I know you thinke me to be far from you in this your distresse, yet be of good cheere, for I am mindfull of you still. Now this latter exposition pleaseth me best, because as I thinke it suites best with the text. For the Prophet about all things studies how to confirme these poore captiues in the promises: yea, and if it were possible, to ingraue them in their hearts: Well, he commands the Iewes to turne vnto the Lord, howsoeuer their long exile hindered them from hoping that he would be their redeemer. As if he should haue said; Though I seeme to be far from you, and to neglect you, yet be not discouraged, for I am resolu'd to redeem you.

Vers. 23. Reioice yee heauens, for the Lord hath done it: show yee lower parts of the earth: brag forth into praises, yee mountaines; O Forrest and euery tree therein, for the Lord hath redeemed Iakob, and will be glorified in Israel.

Hee now exhorts the Iewes to giving of thanks, not onely as a testimonie of their dutie, but also to assure them the more fully of their deliuerance. And thus he brings the people as it were to the thing done, no lesse then if they had seene their deliuerance before their eyes. For such manner of speeches doe affect vs much more then if the promises were deliueted in naked and bare termes. Seeing then the people might stand in some doubt of their returne, because they languished long in their miseries, and were almost consumed in them: the Prophet awakens them, and not onely frames them a song fit for the paying of their vowe, but also shews that this worke of God shall bee so glorious, that the very heavens and the earth, with all the insensible creatures shall admire the greatness and nouelty of it.

[Ye mountaines sound forth praises.] We may well interpret, ye high heauens, and show earth below, sing praises: but because he makes mention of the mountaines, he calls those the lower parts of the earth which are euen, as the plaines and vallies, to the end that all Countries on which side soeuer, might be incited to celebrate and magnifie the name of the Lord.

He addes afterwards, that this work which all the creatures are called to behold and admire, is the redemption of his Church: (for that is comprehended vnder Iakob and Israel) and signifies that Gods glory shall wonderfullie shine therein. Besides, we are to consider that which I haue said elswhere; to wit, that their returne is not simply set out heere, but the power.

Now the Prophet will forthwith according to his custome, fall into a description of Gods power; because the promises would little moue vs, vnlesse the doctrine of Gods power were also added, to remoue all doubts and scruples out of our hearts. For it often fallies out that by our obstinacie and distrust, wee diminish both the goodnesse and power of God, in attributing lesse vnto the same then we ought: for which respect the Prophet heartens on the faithfull by the excellent titles afterwards mentioned, to the end they might hope about hope. And yet he begins with the commendation of the goodnes and fatherly affection which God beares his Church to the very end: for the setting forth of Gods force and power would moue vs but little, if himselfe should not therewithal draw neere to confirme vs in the assurance of his goodnesse. Wee must not begin at his Maiesie then, nor mount so high, for feate of being ouerwhelmed: but this loue of his, by which he graciously drawes vs vnto him, must be embraced of vs also.

The title of redeemer in this place, is referred to the time past, in regard that the Iewes, who were once redeemed out of Egypt (as our of a bottomlesse gulph, and that by a miracle almost incredible) ought from the remembrance thereof to be confirmed, in hope of the euerlasting continuance of it from age to age. Hee calles himselfe their former, in the same sense which we haue often expounded it before; to wit, because in regenerating those by his Spirit whom he adopts, he makes them new creatures. And thus by the way he puts them in mind of the benefits they had already receiued; that from thence they might conclude, that God would be sure in his promises concerning their deliuerance for the time to come.

From the wombe.] Hee addes this also, to teach them to acknowledge that all the benefits they had receiued from God, were vnderferued: for he had preuened them by his mercy, euen before they were able to open their mouths to aske any benefits of him. And by this consideration David cheereth vp his spirits in his extreme distresse: It is thou O Lord, saith he, that hast drawne me out of my mothers wombe: thou gauest me hope whilest I sucked my mothers breasts. I was cast vpon thee euen from the wombe: thou art my God from my mothers belly: Psal.

Regeneratio,

22.9.10. But our Prophet speaks not heere of that generall fauour which is common to all men as soone as they are come into the world; but he magnifies that comenans whereby God had adopted the posterity of Abraham, euen to a thousand generations: for doubtlesse he which hath begun so good a worke, would finish the same vnto the end.

In the next place follows the titles concerning his power; to wit, that it is he which of his owne good pleasure did spread out both the heauens and the earth. By the word spreading out, his meaning is, that the absolute gouernment of the whole world is in his hands, and that all creatures are subiect vnto him: for Gods uword and power ought so to be ioined together, that they must neuer bee separated.

Verf. 25. I destroy the tokens of the soothsaiers, and make them that coniecture fooles, and turne the wise men backward, and make their knowledge foolishnesse.

The Prophet expressly addes this, because Babylon not onely surpassed all other nations in riches, men, and munitions: but also in a wonderfull measure of uuisdome, and that in such wise, as they seemed to pierce euen the very skies. For what inconuenience could befall them which foresaw things to come a farre off, and could prevent imminent dangers, as they imagined? Astrologers, which then were in great request among them, foretold of great matters, and thence came that bastard Astrologie which we forsooth call Iudiciall, wherewith many good and toward wits at this day are corrupted. They vsurp the name also of Mathematicians, that they may get them the more credit among the common people. But the Egyptians gloried as the only authors of this science, because they held themselves to be of greatest antiquitie, and were the instructors of others. But this contention we leaue to them. Sure it is, that the Chaldeans were practitioners of it from the beginning, and so highly esteemed of it, that both Greekes and Latins haue giuen the name of Chaldeans to the Astrologians. For as much then as they trusted very much in this science, the Lord auoucheth that he will scatter all things belonging thereunto.

Now by the word tokens, or signs, he vnderstands the situation, concurrence, and diuers aspects of the starres, from whence the Astrologers draw their coniectures. In the next place he saith he will make them fooles. Some take the word Baddim, for lies: as if he should say, The diuinations of Astrologers are but impostures, and meere illusions: but I had rather take it for soothsayers, it being often elsewhere taken in this signification.

But it may be demanded whether he vtterly condemnes the Astrologie of the Chaldeans, or only the abuse and corruption of it.

I answer, he heere only condemnes the signes whereby the Chaldeans coniectured, as if they they could iudge of things to come: for the Lord pronounceth that all ſuch things are necerely vaine. It is not without cauſe then that he forbids his people to aſke counſell of Aſtologers, ſoutherſers, Prognoficators, & ſuch like Magicians, and that no man ſhould haue to deale with men of ſuch profeſſions vnder paine of death, Deut. 18. 10. 11. But if any could haue gathered certaine coniectures from the ſituation and aſpect of the ſtarres, no doubt the Lord would neuer haue condemned ſuch ſciences. Seeing then without exception he forbids them, it clearly ſhewes they containe nothing but mere illuſions, and therefore that all his people ſhould eſteeme theſe as abominations. But thoſe that pleade for this vanitie, alledge, that the Lord hath giuen the planets and ſtarres for ſignes, Gen. 1. 14. Be it that I grant them this principle, yet we muſt conſider vwhereof they be ſignes. For we condemne not that Aſtologie which contemplates the courſe of the ſtarres, wherein Gods wonderfull Maieſtie is to be ſcene: but we reiect as vaine ſuch curious heads as will thence conclude how long kingdomes and common-wealthis ſhal ſtand; vvhats accident ſhall befall this Citie, or nation: that man, or ſuch a woman, for herein they paſſe their bounds, and abuſe theſe ſignes, which were neuer ordeined to foretell things to come. I confeſſe indeede that ſometimes we are admoniſhed by theſe celeftiall ſignes to behold Gods wrath, which we haue iuſtly enflamed, and alſo the plagues which hang ouer our heads, but not to make vs ſo ſoole-hardie as thence to conclude of euery particular accident, much leſſe to ſearch out things hidden and vvreuealed, which it is not lawfull for vs once to enquire after.

But about all things we are to ſinde out the cauſe and ſpring of this myſterie of iniquitie which is in it: for a man no ſooner receiues this error, to wit, that mans life is governed by the ſtarres, but Gods prouidence is by and by ouerthrowne, and he turned out of his iudgement ſeate: or thus, that they may take from him the authoritie of puniſhing the wicked any more, or, in his mercie to giue life to thoſe that were loſt. For ſuch as thinke that the ſtarres gouerne and rule mens liues by their irreuoicable mouings, doe forthwith harden their owne hearts with this imagination of fatall deſtinie, and ſo they leaue nothing at all vnto God: thus then his iudgements are concealed, piecie nipt in the head, and prayer vterly abolished.

He calles them wiſe, and attributes knowledge vnto them by way of granting them ſo much, for ſuch kind of men are wonr to glorie much in the titles of wiſe men, and in making ſhew what knowledge they haue in the ſtarres, as if God had called them to be of his priuie Counſell. Thus then in a word he concludes, that none of theſe vaine maſkes of wiſdome, nor knowledge, ſhall be able to hinder the Lord from ouerturning of their eſtate, becauſe he will bring all their juggling trieks to nothing.

* Or, raiſeth

Verſ. 26. He * confirmeth the word of his ſeruant, and performeth the counſell of his meſſengers, ſaying to Ieruſalem, thou ſhalt be inhabited: and to the cities of Iudab, ye ſhall be built vp, and I will repaire the decayed places thereof.

Now the Prophet applies that which he ſaid before to his purpoſe: for albeit he hath ſpoken generallie, yet he reſpected a certaine end, that ſo he might fit his ſpeech to the purpoſe in hand, left the lewes ſhould be troubled with this fained wiſdome of the Chaldeans, and ſo be brought to doubt whether God would at any time deliuer them or no. He oppoſeth their vaine preditions then to Gods promiſes, that no man ſhould thinke this Monarchie was vterlic exempt frō danger. Now the promiſe was this, Babylon ſhall fall, Chap. 21. 9. But my people ſhall be ſet at libertie.

Gods promiſes, oppoſed to vaine preditions.

The Chaldeans derided theſe promiſes, as if they ſhould thus haue ſaid, Muſt wee needs fall? A ſort of wiſe men no doubt: as if we could not foreſee that by the ſtarres if any ſuch thing ſhould happen. The Lord therefore ſaith, that he will raiſe vp, that is to ſay, will accompliſh that which he hath promiſed, and will bring ſuch things to paſſe, as the wiſe men neither yet had, nor were able to coniecture. For the ſorners eſteemed no better of theſe propheſies then of an vprofitable found which ſhould forthwith vaniſh. Againſt ſuch an opinion hee oppoſeth the word ſo raiſe, thereby ſhewing that God would cauſe his word to be beleued.

The name ſeruant, may be vnderſtood of all the Prophets, vntleſſe we had rather ſay, that Iſaiah is chieſie heere ſpecified, as the moſt appatent witnes and meſſenger of this deliuerance. But there is no neede why we ſhould reſtraine this to one in particular, ſeeing it is a thing common to them all, being all called by one and the ſame name of Ambaſſadors or meſſengers of God: for he had ſent many vnto them, that by a mutuall conſent they might the better vphold the faith of the people.

Vnder the word counſell, he comprehends Gods decrees, but not all: for it is vnlawfull to ſound the depth of thoſe ſecrets which he hath not reuealed to his ſeruants: but when he diſcouers that which he hath purpoſed to doe, wee ought to receiue the ſame with as great reuerence as if God himſelfe had opened his moſt ſecret counſels from heauen. Let men beware then how they giue ſcope to their appetites, to enquire further of things then God hath reuealed by the mouth of his Prophets. To be ſhort, his meaning is to commend the authoritie of his word which is vtered by the miniſtrie of men, and that no leſſe then if they reuealed to vs the eternall counſels of God.

See Deut. 29. 29.

What authoritie God giues to his Miniſters.

[Which ſaith to Ieruſalem.] After the Prophet hath ſpoken generallie, he fits his ſpeech in as particular a ſort as he can to the preſent purpoſe touching Gods promiſes, for otherwiſe the people could haue reaped little fruit by them. He names Ieruſalem therefore expreſſie, to giue them to vnderſtand that it should be restored. In this therefore we are especially to obſerue Gods power, in that he is able as oft as need is, miraculoſly to defend, yea and raiſe vp his Church euen from the gates of death. Doe we beleue that he is true and almightie? Then may we be aſſured that there ſhall alwaies bee a Church: and when ſorrowfull times approach towards vs, let vs hope that hee will ſpeedily redreſſe all diſorders; for that which is heere ſaid to Ieruſalem, appertaines to the whole Church. If we be inforced at this day then to ſee her lie in the duſt, and her towers caſt to the ground, ſo as nothing but pitifull deſolations euerie where appeare; let vs build vpon this promiſe, that God in his time will build and repaire the decayed places thereof, and bring her to her perfect hue.

Verſ. 27. He ſaith to the deepe, Be dry, and I will dry vp thy floods.

Some thinke the Prophet deſcribes Babylon here vnder a figure; neither doe I denie but it may be heere comprehended: yet I cannot allow that it ſhould be onely reſtrained to her. For I had rather take it for ſome vnexpected mutation; becauſe hee ſhewes there will be a neceſſitie of ſuch a rare change, as if the people were to be drawne out of the boſtome of the ſea: but he reſolues them, that God will be omniſufficient to ouercome all lets and impediments. As I thinke therefore, Iſaiah rather alludes to that firſt deliuerance, at what time God brought the people out of Egypt through the midſt of the ſea: as if he ſhould ſay; I haue done this for your fathers, hope for the like at my hands now, and thinke not that the waies through which you are to paſſe homeward, ſhall be ſtopped vp againſt you.

Verſ. 28. He ſaith to Cyrus, Thou art my ſhepherd: and hee ſhall performe all my deſire: ſaying alſo to Ieruſalem; Thou ſhalt bee built; and to the Temple, Thy foundations ſhall ſurely bee laid.

This is an excellent place. In which wee may conſider, not onely the admirable prouidence of God, but alſo a worthy teſtimonic of the truth and authoritie of his promiſes: for Cyrus was named here a long time before he was borne. How may that be proued? There was betwene the death of Manaſſes, who put Iſaiah to death, and the birth of Cyrus, more then an hundred yeeres. But ſay he had now been borne, who could haue foretold that hee ſhould haue come to Babylon, frō the furtheſt mountaines in Perſia? Theſe things are worthy our obſeruation then; for they ſhew that Iſaiah ſpake not by the will of man: for who would euer haue thought that one called Cyrus, ſhould come with maruellous ſwiftnesse from the remotest and moſt barbarous parts of the world, to deliuer Gods people? Whereas ſcoffers obiect, that the Iewes might forge this after all was come to paſſe: it is ſo forth and aſturd a cauill, that it needes no reſutation. For during the captiuitie, the Iewes turned out theſe bookes, to conſirme their hope touching their deliuerance: who doubtleſſe had been put cleane out of heart, if the Lord had not comforted them by theſe & ſuch liuely promiſes, which were as goodly monuments left to ſtrengthen the minds of the faithfull in faith and hope. Neither doe I doubt but Cyrus himſelfe was much amazed, when he vnderſtood that God had appointed him to be the ſhepherd and leader of his people Iſrael: yea, it is verie likely alſo that it greatly inflamed his heart with ſuch a loue towards the Iewes, that it framed him with readineſſe of mind to furniſh the Iewes with victuals and other neceſſaries for their journey. Thus the Lord points him out with his finger, by whoſe hand he determined to redeeme his people; that ſo they might not gaze here and there for help in their perplexities.

[And ſaith to Ieruſalem.] This is the concluſion which conſirme the former things; and all to aſſure them that Ieruſalem ſhould vn doubtedly be built againe. As alſo, that hereby they might conceiue in what deare and precious account God had them, when they ſhould ſee the Monarchy of the Eaſt giuen vp to the Perſians. And therewithall he ſhewes for what cauſe Ieruſalem ſhall be reſtored: euen that Gods pure worſhip and ſeruiſe might be there againe erected. For hee promiſeth not this reſtauration to the end men ſhould ſecke their owne eaſe or preferment, but that the Lord may be called vpon of his ſeruants, in peace, and in ſinceritie of heart: which it ſtands vs in hand to obſerue diligently, becauſe many prefer their temporary pleaſures and profits, before the honour and worſhippe of God. In regard whereof, Haggai takes vp a bitter complaint againſt thoſe of his time; Is it time for your ſelues to dwell in your ſield houſes, & this houſe to lie waſte? Againc, You ſuffer this houſe to lie waſte, and yee runne euery man vnto his owne houſe: Haggai 1.4.9. and yet it was the Lords pleaſure they ſhould chiefly haue regarded his houſe. To this appertaines that which the Prophet addes, And to the Temple; Thy foundations ſhall be laid. Indeed we at this day haue no Temple of wood and ſtone which we are commanded to build, but the liuing Temples of the holy Ghoſt: 1. Cor. 6. to wit, our ſelues, becauſe he hath choſen vs for his habitation. Theſe are the Temples which wee muſt build vp by the whoſome doctrine of Gods word, that we may be framed to an holy and an vpright conuerſation, and to render him the ſeruiſe due vnto him. For this is the very cauſe why God will haue a Church in the world; namely, left the memory of his bleſſed name ſhould bee cleane aboliſhed from among vs.

The Church ſhall alwaies continue.

THE XLV. CHAPTER.

Verf. 1. Thus saith the Lord vnto Cyrus his anointed, whose right hand I haue holden to subdue nations before him: therefore will I weaken the loines of Kings, and open the doores before him, and the gates shall not be shut.

Or, vngird.

*I*saiah continues forth the matter which he beganne to handle in the latter end of the former Chapter. For hee shewes that God hath not promised deliuerance to his people in vaine; because hee had before ordained and decreed the meanes how to bring it to passe, according to his owne purpose. When there is question made touching our deliuerance out of anie danger, we forthwith inquire by what meanes it may be effected; and also the reason of it. Now albeit God had rather hold vs in suspense, and so to coneele from vs the meanes he hath already in his hand: notwithstanding in this place he applies himselfe to the weaknesse of their mindes, and is contented to name the partie vnder whose conduct he purposeth to bring them home into their Country. For in regard their faith was to be sharpe assailed by diuers temptations of other kindes; hee was willing heere to preuent this particular doubt, that so other troubles which befell them, might not vtterly crush them. To giue the more efficacie then vnto his word, he turnes him to Cyrus, saying, I haue chosen thee to be my King, I will take thee by the hand, and will subdue nations before thee; so as they shall make passage for thee, and shall willingly yeeld themselves vassals vnto thee. For this turning of his speech to Cyrus, was much more effectually, then if the Lord had spoken onely to his people.

When God is determined to redeme his Church, no impediments can hinder the effecting of it.

Obiect.

But some may thinke it strange that hee calles him his anointed, seeing this title onely appertained to the Kings of Iudah and Israel, in regard that they represented Christs person. For to speake properly there is but one anointed of the Lord: according to which Habacuc saith, Thou wentest forth with thine anointed, for the saluation of thy people: Hab. 3.13. For the kingdome was set vp in the person of Dauid, which was the image of Christ; who for this cause among the Prophets, is called Dauid; & the son of Dauid, in many places: Ezech. 37.24. Hose. 3.5. I grant that the anointing which distinguished this priestlie kingdome from other profane gouernements was the speciall: seeing then that this title appertaines onely to the Kings of Iudea, it might seeme strange that it should beere be attributed to an idolatrous Pagan. For though Cyrus was instructed by Daniel, yet we reade not that he changed his religion: hee reuerenced indeede the God of Israel, and held him the soueraigne God aboute all creatures; but he was neuer drawne by this meane to serue him in any sinceritie, neither was he cuer brought to forsake his idolatries and superstitions. God honours him thus far then, as to call him his anointed; not with a perpetuall stile, but during the time he held the office of a deliuerer, and in respect he sustained the person of God, both to reuenge the cause of the Church, and to redeme the same out of the Assyrians hands: which office indeed, properly appertained to Iesus Christ. This ordinary title then giuen vnto Kings, must be restrained to this circumstance, to wit, as he was the redeemer of Gods chosen in setting them at libertie. Whence we may see how greatly God esteemes the saluation of his Church, when in regard of one particular benefite, Cyrus an idolater is called his anointed.

Why Cyrus is called Gods anointed.

Ans.

I haue holden thy right hand] By this phrase of speech he signifies that Cyrus shall prosper in all his enterprises; because hee shall fight vnder God as his Generall. Isaiah affirms then that Cyrus shall haue good successe for the Churches sake, that he may be fit to deliuer her. And in this he againe magnifies Gods providence, who in the midst of such troubles, assured the Iewes that he would so dispose of things from heauen, that all should worke together for the saluation of his elect. Now in respect that Cyrus could not well goe into Babylon, because al Asia bent their force to disappoint him of his purpose; the Prophet in these words shewes, that God will ouerthrow all contrary power, that shall set it selfe against him. And because mans chiefe strength consists in his loines, or reines, the Hebrewes take the weakening of the loines, for the dissolving or weakening of the strength. We may also expound it a little otherwise, to wit, that the Lord will spoile or vngird them; according to the common phrase of the Scripture: for Kings at their coronation, are girt wit a girdle, it being a part of their royall furniture: Iob 12.18. In which sense God saith in the fifth verse following, that he would gird Cyrus. I therefore rest my selfe rather in this latter exposition, that so the opposition may suite the better. Hence it appears the that Kings haue no more power then the Lord giues them, neither can they v̄e it in the defence either of themselves, or their people, but by his commission. For if he be pleased to dispoile them of their principalities, they cannot defend the same against him, neither by force, nor by any meanes else whatsoever.

Kings haue no more power then God giues them.

And I will open the doores before him.] By this phrase, the Prophet meanes, that foriuestes cannot resist God, which (in generall termes) all will confesse: but yet they cease not for all that to trust in their towers of defence. For when Cities are enuironed with thick walles, and that the gates are fast shut, every one thinks himselfe in safetie: contrarywise the Prophet shewes, that all fortifications are vnprofitable, and that the stopping up of passages are but in vaine when the Lord will open the way to their enemies. Now howsoeuer it is not to be doubted but the gates were shut and surcly barred: yet because Cyrus marched with an incredible swiftnesse through all places where he came, as if all Cities had giuen him way, the Prophet rightly affirms, that all impediments shall be removed.

The strongest Fortifications too weak, when the strong God minds to redeeme his chosen.

Verf. 2. I will goe before thee and make the crooked straight: I will breake the brasen doores, and burst the yron barres.

3. And I will giue thee the treasures of darknes, and the things hid in secret places, that thou mayst know that I am the Lord which call thee by name, and name thee, though thou hast not knowne mee.

These two verses depend on the former.

THESE two verses depend vpon the former: but in a word they shew, that Cyrus shall easily overcome, and that in short time, because the Lord shall prepare the way for him; for this cause he promiseth that the crooked way shall be made straight, in respect that God will take away all obstacles. Now because money is the sinew of warre, and that Cyrus was to passe ouer the poore & barren mountaines of Persia, Isaiah tels him, that the treasures which before were hid, should fall into his hands, that being enriched with ys spoile, he might furnish himselfe with all necessaries, for by treasures of darknes, he means treasures hidden and buried deeply in the earth. Now it appeares plainly by the histories how these things came to passe: for after Cresus king of Lydia was taken, who was the richest king in the world, Cyrus recouered great treasures. A man would neuer haue supposed then that he could haue made such a generall Conquest, had not the cause of so good successe been heere expressed: to wit, that the Lord called him forth, and guided him in his iourney, that in him he might manifest a notable signe of his power: for so much, that thou mayst know, imports.

Money the sinew of warre.

Cyrus no true conuert.

I grant that Cyrus knew (as we haue said) that God was ys God of Israel, and did greatly reuerence him: yet he became no true Conuert for all that, neither did he embrace the true worship according to the ordinances of Gods law. This therefore was a particular knowledge, to wit, so farre forth as he assisted the Church, for whose deliuerance he was ordeined. It was needfull then that he should be in some measure touched with this knowledge, in regard of this worke of God which he had to performe. He speaks not of that knowledge then by which we are enlightened; or of the spirit of regeneration, but of a particular knowledge, such as the prophane and vnbeleeuers haue.

[Which call thee by thy name.] Some barely expound this phrase of speech, that Cyrus was thus called of God before he was borne. But we haue said heretofore, Chap. 43. 1. that by these words ys Prophet meant another thing, namely, that God calles those by name whom he chuseth and ordeineth to execute some special worke, in which respect he separates them from the common multitude, for this signifies a neerer and a more familiar calling. And in this sense it is said, that the good shepherd calles his sheepe by name, Iohn 10. 3. because he knowes them distinctlie. But aboue all, this agrees to the faithfull, whom God accounts his flock, and of his familie, which grace he neuer vouchsafed to Cyrus. But in as much as he appointed him to be a special Leader in such a special seruice, he stamped him as it were with rare and singular notes of his power. And thus much touching the cause why this title of calling is giuen vnto him.

These words, The God of Israel, must be well obserued, because the superstitious are wont to attribute their victories to their Idols. And in that sense Abacuk saith, That euery one sacrificed to his god, Abac. 1. 16. They runne riot then in their talke, and forge such a diuinitie as it pleaseth them to conceiue of, in stead of acknowledging the only and true God. Now all that which is heere said of Cyrus, may be applied vnto vs in a farre better sense, to wit, that we frame not to our selues such a knowledge of God as fits our owne appetites, but that we separate him so from Idols, that he may only be reuerenced and acknowledged of vs in one Iesus Christ, out of whom we can worship nought but an Idoll, nay the very Diuell himselfe. In this respect then let our knowledge surpasse that which Cyrus had, to wit, let vs reiect all superstitions and idolatries, that we may serue him in holines and righteousnes (all the dayes of our life.)

Out of Christ we can worship nothing but an Idoll, nay, the Deuill himselfe.

Verf. 4. For Iacob my seruants sake and Israel mine elect, I will euen call thee by thy name, though thou knowest not mee.

HE shewes the reason why Cyrus shall prosper thus happily in all his enterprises, euen for the conservation of Gods people. As if the Lord should haue said, Thou shalt obtaine a glorious victorie, but it shall be more in respect of mine elect, then of thee: for, for their sakes it is that I haue subdued kings and nations vnder thine obedience. By these prophecies then the Prophet meant to comfort the Iewes, lest they should despaire in the middes of so many calamities: and yet no doubt he also meant to teach Cyrus that hee was beholding to the Iewes for all his conquests, that by means hereof he might be inclined to vse them with the better respect.

In the second part of the verse there is a repetition which amplifies the reason very much:

much: and on the other ſide the Prophet ſhewes by what right the Iſraelites came to be Gods ſervants, euen becauſe it pleaſed him freely to eleſt them. For it is not in the power of man to make himſelfe the ſervant of God, or to obtaine ſuch an honour by his owne free will. This word eleſt therefore is added as an expoſition of the former member, and yet the end of our election is therewith ſet downe. For God finding vs the very bondſlaves of Satan by nature, calls vs by his free grace, that we being ſet at libertie, ſhould become his ſervants: notwithstanding he ſhewes, that no man is worthin in himſelfe of this favour, but he which is eleſt. For who dares brag that he hath merited ſo great a benefit? Or what can we doe, or offer vnto God? We are not ſufficient of our ſelues, but the Lord makes vs ſufficient, as S. Paul ſaith, 2. Cor. 3. 5. His free election therefore is free, and is the very foundation of our ſaluation: and the ſervice is but the end, which we of dutie owe vnto him.

Now, howſoever this be reſtrained to the hiftorie of Cyrus, yet thence we may gather a generall doctrine. For when God cauſeth ſuch diuerſities of changes in the world, he thereby procures the ſaluation of his Church, and wonderfullie conſerues it, euen in the middeſt of the tempeſts. We (for the moſt part) are as blind as beetles in viewing the works of God: but yet wee muſt hold it for a ſure principle, that he neuer forgets his Church, no not then when a man would thinke heauen and earth would goe together: nay then by ſecret meanes he brings forth her light as the noone day, that all in conſeſſion may indeed confeſſe that himſelfe is the protector and defender of the ſame.

Ioſephus recites a memorable hiftorie of Alexander the Great, who hauing beſieged Tyre, ſent Ambaſſadors to Ieruſalem to aſke the tribute which the Iewes payed to Darius. Jaddus the high Prieſt who had ſworne to pay this tribute, would in no wiſe obey Alexander, but reſuſed to pay it him: this tyrant ſcornin ſuch a reſuſall, and in a manner being readie to burſt with pride, determined the deſtruction of Ieruſalem; and indeed hauing overcome Darius, he fits himſelfe for the execution of his deliberation. The high Prieſt Jaddus comes forth clothed with the Prieſtly robes, and with other Prieſts met Alexander, Alexander no ſooner beheld them, but he alights from his horſe, and fell downe at the high Prieſts feet in ſigne of reuerence. As all ſtood amazed at this, as at a thing extraordinary, and cleane contrarie to his purpoſe, thinking he had bin beſides himſelfe; Alexander answered Parmenion, (who only amongſt the reſt asked him what he meant) that he worſhipped not this man, but God, whoſe office Jaddus ſuſtained. As alſo, that whileſt he remained at Dion a Citie of Macedonia, he had ſcene in a dreame a man ſo appa-ralled, which preſented himſelfe vnto him in the perſon of God, willing him to take Aſia: alſo, promiſing to be the conductor of his armie, that he might not doubt of the vi-ſtorie, and for this cauſe he ſaid he could not content himſelfe with ſufficient admirations in beholding this high Prieſt. Thus Ieruſalem was deliuered, the mouth of the Lyon ſtopped, who thought of nothing but gorging himiſſe with the pray; nay, the gat greater libertie of him then the inioyed before, beſides great gifts and large priuiledges.

Now I haue alledged this hiftorie to ſhew that the Church of God is preferred in the middes of all dangers by ſtrange and vnex-pected meanes, for the times were then very troubleſome, and no one corner in the world almoſt remained in quiet. But aboue all, Iuda ſeemed to be appointed vnto robberies and ſpoilings; and yet behold the Church deliuered as it were by a miracle, whileſt other countries were waſted, and the forme of them vtterlie changed.

That which is added in the end of the verſe, though thou haſt not knowne me, ſerues for the greater amplification, not only to teach Cyrus that theſe his endowments were no parts of his merits, but that he ſhould not deſpiſe the God of Iſrael, albeit he knew him not. The Lord often aduerteth vs that he prevents mens induſtries, that he might vtterlie caſt downe all high conceits of fleſh and blood. But he had another end in preventing of Cyrus, for if he had thought that God had giuen theſe victories vnto him for his owne ſake, then would he like enough haue ſcorned the Iewes, yea and would haue vſed them but as his vaſſals and ſlaues. The Prophet ſhewes therefore that Cyrus his deſerts were no cauſe of this, but that he deliuered the people out of their enemies hands, becauſe God fauored them: for this poore blind Inſidell would haue bin readie to haue transported that ouer vnto his Idols, which was due to the liuing God; becauſe being beſotted in his ſuperſtitious, he would neuer haue giuen obedience to that God willinglie who was a ſtran-ger and vnknowne vnto him, vnleſſe he had firſt of all bin inſtructed by this propheſie.

Why this hiftorie is alledged.

* Or, appar-
 ralled.

HE confirms the former ſentence: for it is no ſuperfluous repetition. Truly it was neceſſarie that Cyrus ſhould be often irged with this point, that there was but one God, vnder whoſe power all potentates and nations are tributaries, that being rid by this meanes from all impoſtures, he might be whollie turned to the God of Iſrael. Moreover, the Prophet more expreſſie ſhewes, that no diuinitie is to be ſought out of him: as if he ſhould ſay, Looke that thou attributeſt not this victory to thine Idols, neither conceiue thou any conſuſed god in thine owne braine, as fooliſh men are wont ro doe: but be thou aduerted that it is the God of Iſrael only that is the author of this conqueſt. It is like enough that Cyrus made no great vſe of this ſennon, neither that he forſooke his Idols to cleaue cleaue to this true God; yet no doubt he had many flashings in his mind, which made him after a sort to acknowledge a Godhead, and that this God had the whole world at his becke. But howsoever Cyrus neglected this doctrine, yet the members of the Church ought to embrace it, that they may boldly reject all false gods.

I haue apparelled, or girded thee. This apprelling answers to the nakednesse whereof he spake before, saying; The loines of Kings shall be vngirt: for he is said to apprell such as he furnisheth with strength to the battell: 1 Ps. 18. 32. to make them conquerors. Whence we may gather, first that men haue no more courage then that which God inspired them withall by the power of his Spirit. Secondly, that neither armor nor armes serues to any purpose, if God be not for vs. Thirdly, that it is he onely who gouernes all hurly butties, and giues the victory to whom it pleaseth him, lest any should thinke that things fall out by chance.

Hee repeats againe, though thou hast not knowne me, to confirme this point the better; to wit, that Cyrus obtained nothing of God, but for Iacobs sake: vers. 4. first; that he might thankfully acknowledge so great a benefit: and as a testimonie of his thankfulness, hee might indeuor to shew kindnes to the people of God.

Verf. 6. That they may know from the rising of the Sunne, and from the West, that there is none besides me. I am the Lord, and there is none other.

God would haue the memory of his mercies retained in his Church.

THE Prophets meaning is, that this worke should bee so excellent, that all nations should extol and magnifie Gods name therein; yet was it not forthwith accomplished. For albeit the fame of this victory was spread far and neere, yet few perceived that the God of Israel was the author of it. But after it was manifested to those that dwelt neere, it was divulged also to others, till at last the newes thereof came to the whole world. Neither doth hee foretell what should by and by fall out; but that which was afterwards to be accomplished, notwithstanding these things were a long time concealed. The Lord then would not suffer the remembrance of such a deliuerance to vanish, but would haue the same to be called to mind by continuall admonitions, to the end the nations furthest remote, might celebrate the memorie of this deliuerance from generation to generation, euen to the worlds end.

Wee ought likewise to obserue that which I haue touched before, to wit, that the Prophet ioines the first prophecies with the last, because the returne of the people was as a beginning and forerunner of the generall deliuerance to come. And thus he speaks of the true and perfect restauration of the Church. Adde also, that although men by their malice and vnthankfulness should burie these glorious works in obliuion: yet it followes not thereupon, that the same should

Verf. 7. I forme the light, and create darknesse: I make peace, and create enill: I the Lord doe all these things.

AS if he should say; Those who were wont to attribute all things to fortune, or to Idols, shall now know the true God: so as they shall attribute all power and glory, yea and the administration of all things to him onely. He speaks not of a perfect knowledge; albeit the same be required to attaine vnto the vnderstanding of former things. Now seeing the Prophet affirms, that the very Pagans shall vnderstand, that this whole action is ordered and gouerned by the prouidence of God; it ought to make those that beare the name of Christians to blush, when they rob him of his power, to giue it to diuers sorts of gouernours, forged in the shop of their owne braines; as they doe in the Papacie. For what an acknowledging of God call you that, to giue him onely bare and naked titles? For as he is the true and onely God, so must wee ascribe vnto him his absolute and full authority, which hee hath in ordering & disposing of all things at his pleasure, both in heauen and in earth.

As I thinke, this whole section belongs to the sixth verse.

By these words of light and darknes, vnder a figure he vnderstands as well peace and war, as prosperite and aduersitie. Afterwards, according to the phrase of the Hebrewes, he extends the word peace, to all good success; which plainly appears by the opposition: for he not onely opposeth peace to war, but to all other mishaps. Some giddy heads wrest this word enill, as if God were the author of it: but it is euident enough to him that hath eyes to see, how shamefully they abuse our Prophets testimony. For that which is plainly opposed, expounds the signification of the word: adde if you will, that the members ought to be referred one to another: for he opposeth peace to euill; that is to say, to wars, calamities, and other aduersities. If he had opposed righteousnesse to enill, they might haue had some pretext: but this opposition of things so directly contrary, is easie vnderstood. And yet the common distinction is not to be rectified; to wit, that God is the author of the euill of punishment, but not of the fault. But the Sophisters doe expound it amisse: for although they confesse that famine, plague, warre, vnfruitfull seasons, and such like scourges doe come of God, yet they denie him to be the author thereof when they befall vs, by reason of men. Which is a false doctrine, and vtterly croseth the Prophets words: for the Lord often raisth vp the wicked to correct vs by their hands; as it appears by many testimonies of the Scripture. I grant the Lord inspires not euill into them, but he vseth it as a meanes to chastise vs, and therein performs the office of a iust Iudge. Did he not so serue himselfe of Pharaohs hardnesse of heart, and others, to afflict his people? Let vs therefore hold fast this doctrine, to wit, that God onely is the author of all things: that is to say, he sends aduersitie and prosperitie, howsoeuer hee vseth mens industriest therein; that so nothing may bee attributed to fortune, or to any other cause whatsoever.

God the author of all things, and how.

Verf. 8. The heauens send downe dew from above, and let the cloudes droppe downe righteousness: let the earth open, and let saluation and iustice grow forth; let it bring them forth together: I the Lord haue created him.

The doctrine of this verse was very effectuall to confirme the faithfull in the expectation of their deliuerance to come.

Some thinke this should be a forme of praier, which the faithfull were to vse in waiting for that deliuerance whereof the Prophet speakes. And thus they ioine this verse to the former; The Lord will not deliuer you by and by, it shall be your duties therefore to sollicit him by your praiers. But I expound it otherwise, to wit, that the Prophet speakes still in the name of the Lord, who in regard of his absolute power, hath heauen and earth at his becke; and heere commands them in his name to apply themselues to further the restauration of the Church. This verse therefore hath great force in it to confirme the faithfull in the hope of their redemption to come: for which way soeuer the Iewes turned their eyes, they saw nothing but matter of despaire. If they looked towards heauen, behold God an angry Iudge: if they looked towards the earth, they saw nothing but tokens of his wrath to present themselues about them on euerie side, so as they could hope for nothing that was good. Iffaiah therefore confirms their faith, and commands heauen and earth, which promised nothing but threats and terrors, to bring forth iustice and saluation: which kind of speech hath greater weight in it, then if God himselfe had promised that this should haue come to passe. For the elements, who are ready prest at Gods commandement, are in this sence said to receiue and vnderstand the charge inioined them of God. Thus then the sentence runnes all with a breath, which would be but abrupt, if this verse were to be vnderstood of praier.

Now this phrase of speech is vsuall in the holy Scripture: as in the Psalmes; The mountaints shall bring peace to the people by iustice: Psal. 72. 3. Truth shall bud out of the earth, and righteousnesse hath looked downe from heauen. Psal. 85. 11. Mercy and truth are met together, righteousnesse and peace, mercy and truth, shall raigne therein together. And the very same thing the Prophet toucheth in this place.

Now he alludes to those meanes that serue for our ordinarie food; for our naturall life is sustained and maintained by bread, and the fruits of the earth, in regard we stand in need of such helps. But the earth will not be fit to bring forth these fruits, vntill the heauens doe refresh the same by often raining downe vpon it out of the cloudes, that afterwards it may become fertile, and bring forth fit nourishment both for man and beast.

By the word iustice, he meanes nothing else but the faithfullnesse of the Lord, whereby he defends and conserues his Church, in as much as he causeth iustice to distill from the heauens; that is to say, a right order of gouernment, the fruit whereof is saluation. For he speakes heere of the deliuerance of the people out of Babylon; in which deliuerance the Lord shewed himselfe to be the protector of his Church. Now hauing attained the naturall meaning of the words, we must thence descend to Christs kingdome, wherunto these words ought indeed to be referred: for God hath not limited these promises within the compasse of a few yeeres; but continued on his benefites euen to the very coming of Christ, in whom all these things were absolutely fulfilled: no doubt then but the eternal iustice and saluation brought by Christ, is heere set before vs: but wee must first restrain this exposition, to the returne of the people out of captiuitie.

Iustice.

Saluation a fruit of iustice.

The Kingdome of Christ.

Or, let the pot contend against the pots.

Verf. 9. *Woe bee to him that strieth with his maker, * the potshard with the potshardes of the earth: shall the clay say to him that fashioneth it, What makest thou? or thy worke, it hath none hands?*

10. Woe vnto him that saith to his father, What hast thou begotten? or to his mother; What hast thou brought forth?

This place is diuersly expounded: for some vnderstand it of Balthazar, who (as we see in Daniel) lifted vp himselfe proudly against God, in prophaning the holie vessels of the Temple: but this is too constrained an exposition. The second may seeme more probable; to wit, that the Lord giues and grants more to his choson, then a father will doe to his children, or a workman to his worke: for those who expound the words thus, thinke that the Prophet speakes heere by way of comparison in this sence: If a sonne should rise vp against his father, and contend with him, should hee ger any audience? No: for a father will keepe and retaine his owne authoritie, and in this behalfe would iustly reiect his sonne. The like would also fall out, if the clay should rise vp against the potter. Yet God permits vs to contend with him, and offers himselfe freely to satisfie any of our demands: and thus they ioine the tenth and cleuenth verse together, thinking that the patience of God appears, in that he deales thus fauourably with vs, and humbles himselfe more then mortall men are commonly wont to doe towards their children. I grant that this exposition hath more colour then the former, but both of them are farre wide from the Prophets intention.

The third and most naturall exposition.

The simple and plaine meaning of the Prophet therefore as I thinke is this, that Isaiah here represseth mens complaints, who murmure and pleade against God in the time of aduersitie. This admonition therefore came in due place, to teach the Iewes willinglie to receiue the consolation offered, that they might be fitted to beare the crosse patientlie and with a settled mind: for as oft as God holds vs in suspence, the flesh solicits vs to grudge on this manner: Wherefore doth he not rather that which we would haue him to do? What meanes he to vex vs thus in deferring his help so long? Now, that the Lord might beate back such a presumption, he saith, Shall the pot contend with the potter? Shall a sonne pleade with his father? And shall not I then much more deale with you as it pleaseth me? What remains then but to beare his stripes patientlie? For it is our duties to let him freely execute his office, and by no meanes to withstand his soueraigne power and authoritie. As touching the word Wo, I take it for a particule of expressing him that rebukes and corrects.

Murmurings arising from flesh and blood.

Let the pot strive with the potter. That is to say, let euery one striue with his equall, as we vse to say in our common proverb, Let the pot cleaue the pot of the earth. For in sending men to their like, he taxeth their boldnes and presumption, for not considering that in contending with God, they fought nothing else but how to plunge themselves into their owne ruin. As if he should say, Doe yee know with whom yee haue to doe? Let them know that God will euer be stronger then man, and they shall be constrained in the end to giue place. But if they so farre forget their owne brittleenes, that like Giants they dare scale the heauens, then shall they proue by experience (it may be when it is too late) that they medled with their match, and that they haue contended with their Maker, who can easily dash his vessels in pieces one against another, yea and beate them to powder, as the potter doth the vessels which he hath formed.

Proverb.

Some expound the word Kerasm workemen, or potters, and vnderstand it thus, Shall the pot rise vp against the potter? But they take one letter for another, to wit, shin for sin, which they might easily doe. I had rather therefore follow the common reading, and content my selfe with this sense, Shall the clay say to him that formed it? The Potter as we know hath power to make what vessell he will: the Father hath authoritie to command his children; and shall God haue lesse power and authoritie? The Prophet therefore reproues those which contend with God in aduersitie, in that they can not beare their afflictions patientlie. Such must learne to giue eare to the admonition of S. Peter; Submit yourselves vnder God, faith he; and humble your yokes vnder his hand: Bow your necks to his yoke, 1. Pet. 5. 6. Striue not with him that is stronger then thy selfe, if he exercise thee with diuers calamities, for power belongs vnto him to gouerne vs according to his good pleasure. If we stand to dispute with him, he wil vse such inuincible arguments against vs, that being conuincd, we shall be enforced to giue place. But if it fo fall out that he doth not by and by repress our pride, it is not because he is destitute of reason, but because in equitie we should leaue vnto him the right to dispose of vs after his will: an honor, which he iustlie referes to himselfe, that his creatures presume not in the pride of their hearts to aske a reason of his doings. Is there any thing more dishonorable then to reiect his iudgements, when we list not to approve of them?

No disputing with God.

S. Paul vseth the same similitude, but it is in a matter of an higher nature, for he disputes about the point of Gods eternall predestination, and manifest mens blind conceits, who reason with God why he hath chosen some, and reiected others. Then he shewes, that men at the least should giue God as much priuiledge as to a Potter or workeman, and cries out, O man, who art thou that pleadest with God! Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, why hast thou made me thus? Hath not the Potter power ouer the clay? &c. Rom. 9. 20. 21. Who shall dare to oppose himselfe against God? The Apostle then accords with our Prophet, though S. Paul vseth the similitude in a different matter and of greater consequence: and yet both affirme that God hath an absolute power ouer men, to the end they should suffer themselves to be ordered and governed by him, patientlie bearing all his corrections: the only difference is, that Isaiah speaks of things which concerne this present life; and Paul, of those that concerne life euerlasting.

Iob. 9. 4.

S. Paul and Isaiah accords together though with some difference.

Or thy worke it hath no hands.] The Prophet obserues mens vsuall formes of speaking, as when we say, Set to the last hand, when a piece of worke is vpon finishing, and that mens hands waxe feeble whilest the work is rough and vnpolished. So, as oft as men murmure against God for not applying himselfe to their desires, they therein accuse him either of sloth, or of ignorance.

Mestre la dernier main.

Verf. 11. Thus saith the Lord, the holy one of Israel, and his maker, Aske me of things to come concerning my sonnes, and concerning the works of mine hands: command you me.

I Haue told you already that I like not of their iudgements who knit this verfe so with the former, as if God giuing ouer his right, should giue the Iewes free leaue to enquire more of him then a child of his father. The other exposition differs not much from this, to wit, that the Israelites are miserable in that they vnderstood not Gods will; yea, in that they refused to know it, and would not seeke for comfort, but reiected it when it was offered: in a word, that their owne follie was the cause why their afflictions ouercharged them, and that they could finde no consolation

lation vnder them; becauſe they would not enquire at the mouth of the Lord. If we receive this expoſition, we muſt preſuppoſe that he ſpeakes of an other kinde of inquiſition. For though it be a thing vnlawfull to enter into Gods ſecrets, yet of his goodneſſe hee vouchſafes to diſcouer to his Children ſo much thereof as is expedient for them to know. And, it is alſo good reaſon that as oft as he opens his ſacred mouth; we ſhould carefully lend our eare to all that which he manifeſts vnto vs. Now we may alſo ſee the ſelfe ſame fault at this day in our ſelues; where with Iſaiah reprocheth the auncient people the Lewes.

But it is more likely this ſentence depends vpon the former, ſo as it is an application of the ſimilitude, in this ſenſe; It is not lawfull for the ſonne to conteſt with his father, nor the clay to ſtrive with the Potter; how much leſſe ſupportable is that libertie, which mortall men take vnto themſelues, when they will preſcribe rules vnto God, how hee is to order his children? for otherwiſe the ſentence ſhould be both doubtfull and diſmembred. But theſe two members ſute very well together; the pot ſuffers his Potter to doe what him liſteth; and he which is begotten of a mortall man, dares not contend with his father: ſhall not I then, who am the Creator and ſoueraigne Father of all, haue as much power ouer my creatures & children? If any like the fiſt expoſition better, then Iſaiah blames mens folly, in that they neglect to aſke of God, or to learne from his mouth, the things that may comfort them: for they might eaſily haue perceived by the prophecies, what care God had of them, and thereby might haue comie to the knowledge of the end of their miſeries.

And queſtionleſſe the onely remedie in aduerſitie is, to goe and aſke counſell at the mouth of the Lord, and not to fix our eies vpon the outward eſtate of things preſent; but in our ſpirits to comprehend the ſaluation to come, which the Lord hath promiſed vs. For he is faithfull (as the Apoſtle ſaith) and will not ſuffer vs to be tempted about that we be able to beare, but will giue an happy iſſue with the temptation, and will augment his graces in vs: 1. Cor. 10. 13.

As touching that which is by and by added, command you me: it is not to be taken by way of an imperious authority; for what haue we to command God, or vrge him contrary to his will? No, we are to be commanded and vrged by him: for none can profit in Gods word, vnleſſe hee bring a modeſt and meeke ſpirit. In theſe words the Lord offers himſelfe ready to teach vs, to the end we might be bold to aſke of him concerning ſuch things as are expedient for vs to know. As if he ſhould ſay; Aſke of mee, I am ready to inſtruct you in things needfull for your comfort. And yet becauſe this manner of ſpeech ſhould be ſomewhat improper, he thinks that the complaint whereof I ſpake before, is the fitteſt, to wit, that God is ſtripped as it were of his fatherly authoritie, if he be denied liberty to hold his Church vnder a profitable diſcipline.

And thus this word Command, is to be taken in euill part, when men hauing ſhaken off all modeſtie, ſhall make no bones to ſummon God before them; and to queſtion with him of whatſoever comes in their braine, as if he were their ſeruant. Which yet appears better by the word aſke: as if he ſhould ſay; You ſhall doe well to teach mee how to forme and frame my worke. In a word, the Prophets meaning is, to exhort men to modeſtie and patience: for they no ſooner begin to fall a diſputing with God, but it is all one as if they went about to pull him out of his high and heavenly throne. Now in this, he ſpeakes not enely to the Lewes; but as was alſo needfull to repreſſe the blaſphemies which then walked apace through the mouthes of prophane Idolaters. It is as much to ſay theſe, as if God in theſe words meaning to maintaine his owne right, ſhould reſuſe the murmuring and reſpinings of all the world: and that in this manner, Whither will your pride and preſumption ſtretch at laſt, ſeeing you will not ſuffer me to be maſter in mine owne workehouſe, and to gouerne my familie as I thinke good?

Verſ. 12. I haue made the earth, and created man vpon it: I, whoſe hands haue ſpread out the heauens, I haue euen commanded all their armie.

IT ſeemes as if the Prophet meant ſimply to defend and maintaine the power of the true God againſt the false, as hee hath done before: ſo as this ſentence ſhould containe in it a ſecret oppoſition betweene the true God, and the Idols whom the ſuperſtitious adore. Fooles are wont to inquire at their Idols, as if the world were by them ruled and gouerned. But God on the contrary calles vs to himſelfe, telling vs that it is hee onely who hath created heauen and earth, and hath placed man vpon it, and that he hath ſpread out the heauens, &c. Gen. 1. 1. 7. and 2. 15. But, as I thinke, it is better to apply this whole ſpeech to the circumſtance of this place. For can any thing be more prepoſterous, then to leaue men vniimpeached, whileſt they preſume to call Gods authority into queſtion, whoſe maieſtie ſurpaſſeth the very heauens? He courteth ſurely then the rage of men, which dare inſolently aduance themſelues euen aboue the heauens themſelues: but therewithall he aduerteth them, that if God ſhould be brought to make his iuſt defence, that hee would find ſufficient reaſons to maintaine his owne cauſe. For if he gouerne the whole world in generall, then muſt he needs haue a ſpeciall care of his choſen: neither reſpects he ſtrangers ſo farre, as to forget his owne houſhold ſeruants, now ſcattered here and there, and wandring to and fro. Thus I expound this verſe then, Muſt I, whoſe infinite and incomprehenſible wiſdome and power, ſhines in the creation & gouernment of heauen & earth, not only be tied to mens lawes, but be abaſed beneath their condition? But if any miſdoubt of mine equitie here in, if I gouerne and order

This verſe contains an argument taken from the liſte to the greater.

The beſt remedie wee can vſe for our ſuccour in aduerſities.

der all things by my power; shall I not much more be carefull of those, whom I haue adopted for my children? shall I not watch for their saluation? And thus it is an argument taken from the lesse to the greater: in which sense it agrees very well with the Scripture.

We know wee are adopted of God, vpon condition that being receiued into his protection, he should keepe vs by his power, so as none can hurt vs without his leaue. If a poore sparrow cannot fall to the ground without his will (as Iesus Christ saith) Mat. 10. 29. will he vnadvisedly expose vs to the rage and cruelty of our enemies? vs (I say) whom he priseti aboute many sparrows? Seeing God then nourisheth and vpholds all creatures by his prouidence, hee cannot forsake his Church, which hee prefers aboue the whole world. To this prouidence of God ought we, to runne then, as oft as things are in a desperate estate; that so wee may not sinke vnder the temptations, by which Satan seekes to asfaile vs on euery side.

Verf. 13. I haue raised him vp in righteousness, and I will direct all his waies: hee shall build my Citie, and hee shall let goe my captiues, not for price nor reward, saith the Lord of hostes.

A profecutio of that argument the Prophet began to handle in the beginning of this Chapter.

THE Prophet profecutes that argument now, which he fell in hand withall in the beginning of the Chapter: for intending to aswage their afflictions, which were verie sharpe and tedious, he giues the Iewes hope of deliuerance, and beckening vnto them with his hand (as it were) wiseth them to wait for an assured redemption. As if hee should say; Albeit it seemes you be now forlorne, yet the Lord will deliuer you from death. From the very matter it selfe then, it is easie to collect for what cause Isaiab intermingled the former reprehension: for had he not broken off his speech, to fall into this digression, the Iewes might haue been driuen into despaire through impacience.

In righteousness, signifies iustly and truly, and is taken relatively; because he renders a reason why God was determined to raise vp Cyrus, to wit, in regard that himselfe is that faithfull guardian of his Church, who neuer failes those that stee him. Some expound; In righteousness: that is to say, that hee may punish the Chaldeans: others, that the iust may raigne more iustly. But the Prophet respected none of these things.

Iustice is often in the holy Scriptures taken for faithfulness; for Gods righteousness shines especially in defending of his Saints: in which hee shewes a singular token of his soueraigne and vnspotted vprightnesse: Psal. 5. 9. and 7. 18. and 22. 32. For though there be not so much as one of Gods workes, in which there is not ingrauen a marke of his righteousness; yet the most ample and excellent testimonie thereof, appears in the saluation of the Church. His meaning is then, that he raised vp Cyrus to manifest his righteousness, in that hee was ordained the Captaine to conduct the people home out of captiuitie.

By these wordes, my Citie, hee means Ierusalem, which he calles his, because hee would haue his name there to be praised, and to be particularly consecrated vnto his honour; as himselfe declares, Exod. 20. 24. where he saith, In all places where I shall put the remembrance of my name, there will I come vnto thee and blesse thee. Now there was none other Citie appointed for sacrifices, voves, and prayer but this: which is the reason why it is called the Citie of God; The dwelling of the most high; because God is in the midst of it. And in another place; This is my rest for euer. But Cyrus built not this Citie with his owne hand: but only, by his decree forbad, that any should hinder the reedifying of it. Besides, he gaue to the people all things needfull for their returne.

Not for price: that is to say, for nothing. It is no ordinarie matter for a Conqueror to let loose his prisoners: For hee either puts them to their Ransome, or impofeth vpon them some very hard conditions. But Cyrus did none of these things: Whence it followed, that such a deliuerance happened not by the will of man, but by the speciall decree of God. The word Captiuitie, is heere taken for Captiues: because it is a nounce Collectiue.

Verf. 14. Thus saith the Lord; The labour of Egypt, and the merchandise of Ethiopia, and of the Sebeans, men of stature shall come vnto thee, and they shall beethine: they shall follow thee, and shall goe in chains: they shall fall downe before thee, and make supplication vnto thee, saying; Surely God is in thee, and there is none other God besides.

HEE speaks againe of the restauration, which was afterwards effected by the permission of Cyrus: but wee must remember what I haue said often before; to wit, that these promises doe stretch themselues further off: for they comprehend vnder them, all the time which ranne out betwene the returne, vntill Christs appearing. And if the readers doe ponder this well, and shall seriously weigh the Prophets forme of speaking, heere will be found nothing superfluous nor excessiue. Now Isaiab alludes to that cost and charges which Cyrus was at, in furnishing the Iewes with necessaries to rebuild and adorne the Temple withall. For then was fulfilled that which hee saith touching the labour of Egypt, and the merchandise of Ethiopia, which should come vnto the Iewes: for these two Countreies were tributaries and subiect to the kings of Persia. Of these tributes, the Temple of Ierusalem was restored: which restauration was but a beginning of that which was accomplished by Christ. Neither was this seruice of strange nations to Gods people ought else, but a torerunner of that obedienc which diuers Countreies were afterward to yeeld to, the Church of God, after Christ was manifested sted to the world. Moreover, vnder the name of Egypt, and Ethiopia, and the Sabeans which now flourish, he also compriseth all other nations: as if he should say, You are now oppressed vnder the tyranny of strangers, but the time shall come that they shall serue you. This promise was not fulfilled the first day it was made, but then only when Christ came into the world to subdue haucie and stubborn hearts vnder his obedience, which were incorrigible before, for afterwards they meekly gaue their necks to beare his sweet yoke, and yet the Lord deliuered his people out of Babylon, that he might preferue a Church vnto himselfe till Christes coming, vnder whose dominion all nations were to be subdued. It is no maruell then if the Prophet speaking of the returne of the Iewes, bends his speech towards the marke of the Lords decree, so making but one deliuerance (as it were) of both.

gouerns not to darken the glorie of her head by an haucie
superioritie.

Where he saith, that the Israelites shall get the conquest over all nations, it depends vpon that mutuall coniunction which is betweene the head and the members: for in regard the only Sonne of God hath so vnited the faithfull vnto himselfe that they and he make but one, therefore often that which belongs to him is attributed vnto the Church which is his body and his fulnes, Ephes. 1.23. In this sense it is said that the Church gouerns: not to darken the glorie of her head by an ambitious superioritie: or to attribute vnto her selfe a proper empire, as if she had something separate from her head: but in regard the preaching of the Gospell which is committed vnto her, is the spirituall scepter by which Christ manifesteth his power. And in this sort, none can humble himselfe, nor fall downe before Christ, but he submits himselfe also to the Church, because the obedience of faith, and the doctrine of the Church are things vnited, and yet so, that Christ notwithstanding which is her head may reigne alone; and may exercise his power without the help of a second.

See 1. Cor. 14.

Surely God is in thee.] The Prophet shewes what they shall say which by way of honor shall make supplication to the Church, to wit, they shall confesse that God is in her of a truth. Some translate the word At, Only, which I reiect not, but confesse that it stilie expresth the Prophets meaning: yet it wil not agree amisse to expound it affirmatiuely, Surely God is in thee. Now hee shewes, how strange Nations shall be subiected to the Iewes, to wit, in acknowledging that there is no other God but him, whom the Iewes worship.

John 4.22.

If it be objected that this appertaines not at all to the Iewes, who are now cut off from the Church: I answere, The Gospell notwithstanding came from them into all the world: and thus we acknowledge Ierusalem to be the fountaine from whence this pure doctrine of life issued. In old time the Iewes only knew the true God, and none had the true worship but they: others being giuen to impostures worshipped their owne inuentions: in which respect Christ speaking to the woman of Samaria, said, We know what we worship, John 4. 22. It is rightly said here then, that God is in thee, because other nations knew not God. But because there is here a close opposition, I willingly receiue the particle Only, so as it setues as a testimonie of the sound conuersion of the Gentiles, who contenting themselves with one only God, shall vtterlic forsake their Idols.

The summe is, that those who swelled with pride before, and despised the Church with a scornfull eie, should now subiect themselves vnto her after they were taught what Gods true sanctuarie was, yet so (as hath bin said) that God shall not therefore giue ouer his principallitie though he thus aduanceth his Church. And here we may behold a signe of true conuersion, to wit, when we worship not a god of our owne forging, but such a one as is acknowledged in the Church. This excellent title also which is giuen to the Church is not to be omitted, God is in thee, for God is in the middes of it, because he hath chosen his dwelling there, as in Psal. 46. If we bee Gods people and do submit our selues to that doctrine of saluation which he sets before vs, then may we resolute vpon it that he will assist vs, because he neuer failes those that seeke him. This therefore is a perpetuall promise, and ought not to be restrained only to those times.

Verf. 15. Verily thou, O God, hidest thy selfe: O God, the saviour of Israel.

Now Iſaiah breaks forth into an exclamation, shewing, that they must wait long for the inioying of Gods promises, for the people were in danger of declining, seeing the wicked had the world at will, and that all things went crosse with them. I know well that many expound this place otherwise, for the Hebrews for the most part interpret it thus, That the Lord will lude himselfe from the Gentiles, but will manifest himselfe to his people. The Christian Doctōrs bring another exposition, but as far from the purpose. I grant that which they say sauiors of wit, whē they affirme that Christ is an hidden God, because his diuinitie was hidden vnder the infirmities of his flesh. But this hath no affinity with the Prophets intention, who saith, God is hid, because he seemed as it were to estrange himselfe for a time, whilst he suffered his Church to languish vnder diuers oppressions and calamities, they were therefore to build vp one another by hope, which as Paul saith, is not of things seene, but of things hidden, Rom. 8. 24. And in this sense Iſaiah saith that God was hid, because they saw not the promises by & by performed: thus he meant to draw their minds from the consideration of things present, and to rauish them about the heauens.

So also must we doe, if we meane to apprehend and imbrace his help. Wee haue neede of patience then you see, that when the promises are deferred, wee may also be able to hold our desires in suspense. He said ere while that the heathen should seele Gods

presence, notwithstanding they were then blind and sottish: but because the time of the manifestation hereof was not yet come, it is not without cause that this exclamation is intermingled, to wit, that before God will manifest his glorie, he will hide his power for the triall of his seruants.

Besides, from the epithite which is by and by added, where God is called the saviour, the Prophet speaks not of the essence, but of the want of his succor: for he shewes, that God hid himselfe from minding the deliuerance of his Church, in regard he withdrew his hand for a time, as if he had purposed whollie to forsake the same. Our God will haue our saluation lie hidden then as it were in darknes, to the end that if we wil haue any part therein, we may make our accounts to goe out of this world, because this benefit will not by and by appeare vnto vs: we must therefore wait for this saluation with an inuincible constancie, for it is expedient, and for our great good, that God by this meanes should examine and proue our faith, that so when afflictions do diuerslie press vs, we yet cease not to rest our selues vpon him, and vpon his promises.

Vers. 16. All they shall be ashamed and also confounded: they shall goe to confusion together that are the makers of Images.

17. But Israel shall be saved in the Lord with an euerlasting saluation: yee shall not be ashamed nor confounded world without end.

The Prophet heere compares the Iewes with the Gentiles, to preuent a difficult and dangerous temptation wherewith they might be shaken, by seeing the Gentiles to haue all things according to their wish. For they might well thinke in such streights that either God fauored the Gentiles, or, that he neglected his Church, or, that all things were huddled vp together at aduenture. The Prophet therefore aduertiseth them, that howsoeuer the prophane nations florished for a time, and seemed to be aduanced about the clouds, yet their perdition was decreed as well as the saluation of Israel. In a word, he admoniseth them not to iudge of Gods power by the estate of things present, lest they should fix their thoughts vpon things of no continuance, but that they should rather lift them vp to the eternal saluation, and in the meane while being stricken with Gods hand, patiently to beare their condition, without grudging at the prosperitie of the wicked, who were shortly to haue a shamefull fall, P^{sa}. 37. This sentence then is knit to the former: for whosoever shall be well instructed that God hides himselfe whilest he is a saviour, will not much be moued at the prosperitie of the wicked, nor at the miserie of the faithfull that are despised, and exercised with sundrie afflictions, because the end of the one is shame, and the end of the other glorie.

Thus you see how the Lord prooues our faith and patience, and yet, that nothing of our eternal saluation which is prepared for vs shall fall to the ground: and that such who seemed the only happie men, shall in the end perish. All the good they now enioy shall turne to their extreme ruine, because they abused the gifts of God, and like theetues, vsurp vpo that which is none of theirs, though they seeme to be the iust possessors of all things. As oft then as these thoughts shall trouble vs, to wit, that the wicked prosper, that God fauors them, and that the promises vpon which we rest are vaine, let vs haue our recourse to this sentence of our Prophet, as to a safe citie of refuge, and let vs thus fortifie our selues; God will not disappoint vs of our hope: in the end we shall be deliuered, though wee bee now exposed to the reproches, iniuries, outrages, and cruelties of our enemies.

Vers. 18. For thus saith the Lord (that created heauen, God himselfe that formed the earth, and made it: he that prepared it, he created it not in vaine: he formed it to be inhabited) I am the Lord, and there is none other.

This verse serues to confirme that which was said before, for the Prophet would haue the Iewes fullie resolu'd, that the Lord at last would worke their deliuerance, albeit they were a long while oppressed vnder a miserable seruitude; and therefore some by the earth, vnderstand the land of Iudeah: but I rather take it to be an argument take from the lesse to the greater, as we said before in the 12. verse; to wit, That seeing Gods prouidence reacheth generallie ouer all his creatures, by so much the more doth it extend it selfe to those whom he hath adopted for his children, in regard he hath a speciall care ouer them. Thus stands the Prophets argument then, Seeing God hath created the earth that men should inhabit it, much more hath he made it a place of abode for his Church; which he esteemeth more then of all creatures besides: If he hath seled the earth vpon her foundations, in giuing it a certaine forme, and in ordeining it to a certaine vse and end, shas men might be nourished and sustined with the fruites it bringeth forth; no doubt but he hath giue it to his childre in the first place, and that in a soueraigne degree of honor about others. I grant wee fee not this come alwaies thus to passe, and therefore our minds must be framed to be vpheld by hope, that so wee may stand firme and inuincible against all sorts of temptations. In a word, the Church of God shall stand as long as the foundations of the earth remaine, for it shall be established before God, as the Sunne and Moone in the firmament, P^{sa}. 89. 36. 37.

In Chap. 54. 9. he will vse an argument of greater force, to wit, If the couenant which was made with Noah touching the constant estate of the world, be firme, much more shall his promise made to his Church be sure and perma-

We must be content: to suffer our saluation to lie hid for a time, See Col 3. 3. 4.

Yet we must wait for it with an inuincible constancie.

As God in the former verses tooke order for the saluation of his Church, so here he decrees the destruction of his enemies.

The prophets Argument.

permanent: for the world is corruptible and perſhable, but the Church, which is Christs kingdom, ſhall remaine for euer. The promiſes therefore which are made concerning her, muſt needs be more ſure and ſtable then any thing beſides. Now becauſe the earths principall ornament ſtands in her being inhabited, the Prophet addes, that it was not created to lie vvaſte, but for men to conuerſe in.

The Church remains for euer.

If any ſhall obieſt on the contrary, that the earth was without forme, and void euen after it was created, as it appears in Gen. 1. 2. where Moſes ſeeth the ſame word Tobu, that the Prophet heere doth, which ſignifies, without forme, and emptie; the ſolution is eaſie: for the Prophet ſpeakes not of the beginning of the creatiō, but of Gods purpoſe: by which hee ordained the earth for mens vſe and abode. The Prophet then contradicts not Moſes at all, ſeeing he hath reſpect to the vſe and end.

Obiect,

Anſ.

As touching that which followes, to be inhabited; it extends it ſelfe to all mankind in general; to wit, the earth is ordained for all men to dwell vpon. For whence comes it to paſſe that the Lord nourisheth vs, prouides all neceſſaries for vs; yea and ſuſtains the very wicked? Is it not that his decree might continue ſtedfaſt, becauſe hee hath appointed men to haue their dwelling in it? Otherwiſe, it were impoſſible that hee ſhould indure ſo many vices & wickedneſſes to raigne, and not vterly to deſtroy man from off the ſame: but hee reſpects his owne holy ordinance, and not our deſerts. Heere is the reaſon then why ſtates and kingdomes continue ſo long in the middeſt of Barbarians and Infidels; The Lord will haue the earth inhabited. And howſoever for the ſinnes of men, the Lord oftentimes brings ſome Countries into deſolation, and ſowes it as it were with ſalt, in regard they become barren, and are notable to ſuſtaine their inhabitants: yet, he euer ſo mitigates his ſtroke, that the earth is inhabited by ſome, becauſe God will haue his decree to ſtand inuioable.

The reaſon why God continues ſinfull man vpon the earth.

God will alwaies haue a remnant to call vpon his name.

But we muſt remember what I ſaid before, to wit, whileſt there is a world to bee inhabited of men, that God will haue a remnant reſerued, which ſhall call vpon his name. From hence then may all the faithfull gather great conſolation: for albeit the world contemnes them, and that they be few in number; and on the contrary, that the wicked ſurpaſſe them in multitude, riches, power, and authority; yet how little account ſoever bee made of them, and that they be eſteemed no better then abiects, and the of-ſcouring of al things, yet are they precious in the eyes of the Lord, becauſe he acknowledgeth them for his children; and therefore will neuer ſuffer them to periſh.

In that he repeats it againe, I am the Lord; it is not onely to juſtifie his eternal eſſence; but to put a difference betweene his Maieſtie and Idols, that he might ſtill retaine the Iewes within the bounds of his pure worſhippe and ſeruiſe. The ſuperſtitious ſort will confeſſe indeed that there is one God, but they forge that one God in their owne braine: we muſt therefore know and acknowledge that God, which manifested himſelfe to the Patriarks and Prophets. Neither ſpeakes he heere of Gods eternal eſſence onely, as many thinke, but likewiſe of all the offices which peculiarly belong vnto him, to the end none may dare to transfer that which is onely proper vnto him, and not vnto creatures.

Vcrſ. 19. I haue not ſpoken in ſecret, neither in a place of darkneſſe in the earth: I ſaid not in vaine vnto the ſeede of Iakob, Seeke you mee. I the Lord doe ſpeake in righteouſneſſe, and declare righteous things.

Now he brings the people to the doctrine of the Law, becauſe God cannot be comprehended by the ſenſe of fleſh and blood. Howſoever then he be hid from carnall reaſon, yet he fully manifolds himſelfe, and giues a remedy in his word, which ſupplies our want, to the end we ſhould ſecke no further then it: were it not ſo, we ſhould be left as men without any hope at all, and ſhould vterly quaile. He therefore proteſts, that hee called vs not vnto him in vaine, albeit his helpe be deferred; becauſe that which hee hath promiſed, is moſt ſure.

As hee hath ſhewed vs clearly then whether we ought to flee, and vpon what to reſt, ſo will he let it be ſeene by the effects, that the hope of ſuch as haue ſtaied vpon his word, ſhall not be fruitleſſe. Hence wee may ſee how abominable their ſpeeches are, who affirme that a man can gather no particular aſſurance of his ſalutation from the word of God: they alſo make it no better then a noſe of wax, that they might diſcouraige Gods people from meddling with it. For theſe maſtiues barke thus, in regard they ſee it diſcouers their errors, and that the whole foundation of their rotten building, is ouerthrowne by the doctrine contained in that little volume.

An horrible blaſphemie to affirme that a man can gather no particular aſſurance to himſelfe of his owne ſalutation out of the Scriptures.

But with Dauid we anſwere; Thy word, O Lord, is a lantern to my feete, and a light vnto my path: Psal. 119. 105. With Iſaiah and the reſt of the holy Prophets we anſwer; that the Lord hath deliuered nothing that is obſcure, doubtfull, or deceiuing: and with Saint Peter we confeſſe, that the word of the Prophets is moſt ſtable and ſure; ſo which, as he ſaith, we do well in gining heede, as to a light that ſhines in a darke place, vntill the day dawne, and the day ſtarre ariſe in our hearts: 2. Pet. 1. 19. And if this were ſaid of the Law, and of the Prophets, vnto what ſhall we ſay of the Goſpell, by which this light is openly reuealed vnto vs? Shall we not affirme with Saint Paul; If the Goſpell be yes hid, it is hid in them that are loſt, whom (Satan) the God of this world hath blinded? 2. Cor. 4. 3. Let the blind world then accuſe it ſelfe, when it cannot indure the brightneſſe of this word: and as for vs, let vs ſtand faſt and abide by this heavenly light, which the faithleſſe labour to dimme and darken with their mists and fogs of errors.

Moreouer, it seemes the Prophet alludes to the Oracles which were giuen out of caues and the three footed stoole of their Idols; for they were things vncertaine, and full of illusions. But Gods answers are free from such things: for he speaks not in darknesse, but in the highest places of the Citie; neither vtters he ought that can deceiue, or be turned too maner of waies.

Simile.

But will some say, experience teacheth that the Scripture is both hard and obscure. It is very true; but this is to be attributed to the dulnesse & slownesse of our vnderstandings, and not to the Scriptures. For the blind, or such as are weake sighted, cannot accuse the Sunne, in that they are not able to behold it. The fault is in themselves. And yet this remains sure, that as many as are teachable; and yeeld obedience vnto Gods ordinances, shall not lose their labour, because the Lord will shew himselfe a faithfull teacher towards the humble and mecke.

Psal. 125.9.

The Scriptures easie to them that will vnderstand: 1. Prou. 8.9.

Howsoeuer then all attaine not to a perfection of knowledge, yet the study of such as seeke vnto God vnfeinedly, shall neuer returne without fruit. In this clause also the Prophet shewes, that the end and vse of the Law, serues to bring men to God: for it is the onely true happinesse of man, to be knit againe to his Sauour: and the sacred bond of this coniunction, consists in faith and in true pietie.

The steadfastnesse and certaintie of Gods word.

Now in the second member hee not onely protests that he spake distinctly, and without ambiguitie; but also sets forth the steadfastnesse and certaintie of his word: as if he should say; I make not these large promises to circumuent or beguile poore captiues withall, as if I meant to feed you onely with faire words; but I will also surely performe whatsoeuer I haue promised. And thus he conuinceth their ingratitude, who being called, answered not: for Gods meaning is to make vs partakers of all the good things which hee offers vs, whereof otherwise wee are vtterlie destitute.

Gods word neuer yet found deceitfull to any that rested vpon the truth of it.

Where it followes, that God speakes in righteousness, it serues as an exposition: as if hee should say; My word by which I seeke to draw the Saints vnto mee, was neuer yet tainted with any vntruth, but contains things that are altogether righteous: Psal. 19.9. The words of the Lord, saith David, are pure words, as the silver tried in a furnace of earth, fined (seuenfold): Psal. 12.6. In Gods word then wee haue a cleere righteousnesse shining out vnto vs; which hauing scattered all our darknesse, will forthwith enlighten our mindes and vnderstandings.

*Or, those which carry the wood of their Idol, and which pray vnto a God that cannot saue them, haue no knowledge.

Verf. 20. *Assemble your selues and come: draw neere together, yee abiects of the Gentiles: * they haue no knowledge that set up the wood of their Idol, and pray to a god that cannot saue them.*

HE bids defiance to all Idolaters, and summons them to appeare, that they might haue the matter taken vp, vpon some reasonable conditions; as we haue seene before in other places. But the issue will goe wrong on their sides, because all their reasons will be easilie ouerthrowne. As if he should say; They now please themselves in their superstitions, but when their cause comes once to the trial, all pretexs shall by & by vanish like smoke; so as it will be no masterie to put them all to silence. Let them assemble then if they will by troopes, let them consult, conspire, and doe their vtmost by threats, fraudes, and terrors, yet must the truth needs preuaile at length against them.

All Idolaters summoned to appeare.

The Lewes had great neede of this confirmation, in regard they saw idolatries and superstitions to haue the full swing on euerie side, and the true seruice of God vtterly to be extinct.

To this fortresse also must wee flee at this day, when wee consider our feeblenesse and weakenesse. The Turkes possesse a great part of the world. The Papists aduance themselves with their crosses set vp on high in euerie place: and we in the meane while, which are but an handful, are esteemed no better then the wormes of the earth: but yet in the end, truth which is great, will preuaile, and as a conquerresse, will pull downe all that state and pompe which now dazles our eyes.

The truth will at length preuaile.

Some translate the word Pelete, Reiected: others, Fugitiue, or, escaped; and thinke it is directed to the Lewes which were returned home. But this sense is too far fetched: it rather seemes that the Prophet vnderstands thereby, the reiected of the Gentiles; because the verbe Palat, signifies to reiect. And yet the Prophet speaks not heere of the common nor worst sort, but directs his speech to those that were the learnedst, richest, and of greatest renowne among the Gentiles. For he calles them reiected, in respect that they are nothing in the sight of the Lord. And yet if any had rather expound the word; a farre off; I hinder him not: for it is as if hee had said, Assemble you selues from all parts of the earth.

In adding, those which carry the wood: hee shewes with what furie Idolaters are carried away, who worshippe the Idols which themselves carry vpon their shoulders in processions: or, we may (if you will) take this word, To beare, To lift, or, set up in some high place: for it is the policie of Satan, to erect and set vp Images vpon pillars and in high rood lofts, to strike men with an admiration of them, and to draw them by the onely view to proferre them some signe of reuerence and honour. And yet we may take it simply for the whole seruice which is performed to the Idols, that he might plainly shew how there was nothing but vanitie and folly in all that they did. For the superstitions sort cannot be ignorant, that their Idols haue more need of mens helpe, then men haue of theirs, that can neither goe, nor stand an end, vnlesse men lend them their hands. And to this appertaines that which is added, that they pray vnto a God which cannot saue them. For what

follic is it to pray and make vowes to a ſenſleſſe ſtocke or ſtone, that neither heares nor ſees? And yet the vnbelecuers ride poſt (as it were) to dumbe and dead Idols for helpe.

Verſ. 21. Tell yee and bring them, and let them take counſell together, who hath declared this ſiõ the beginning? or, hath told it of old: Haue noi I, the Lord? and there is none other God beſides mee, a iuſt God, a Saviour: there is none beſides me.

A comparifon betweene Gods predictions, and thole of the Idols.

A Gaine hee proteſts againſt all ſuch as might trouble the Iewes or weaken their faith by their ſcornings. For the Prophet aimes alwaies at this marke; to wit, that hee may fortifie the peoples faith againſt the aſſaults of the Gentiles; becauſe the poore Iewes, who were ſo extreemly handled, were in danger of ſtaggering in the miſt of ſo many great and violent temptations, had they not had ſome pregnant arguments ſet before them to hold them in their faith and obedience towards the true God. Thus then hee permits the prophane to bring in whatſoever they can for the maintenance of their cauſe.

Where he ſaith, let them conſult together: it is added in token of the greater boldneſſe and confidence: for the Prophets meaning is, that they ſhall gaine nothing (as wee haue ſaid before) albeit they conſpire neuer ſo much together. It may be alſo, hee meant to ſhew how there was nought elſe but vanitie and deceit, in all that which the Idolaters dreame of, touching the excuſing of their errors. Make what pretences you will then, faith he, to colour your inuentions, yet ſhall Gods word be ſtrong enough to ſuſtaine the faith of his ſeruants. Hee calles them therefore to a right examination of things, that they may compare all the brags of the Infidels, touching the predictions of their Idols, with the Law and the prophecies.

I willingly receiue that which is affirmed by all; to wit, that the Prophet ſpeakes of the deliuerance of the people. But in regard the ouertrow of the Babylonian Monarchy was ioined therewithall, therefore I thinke one of theſe things is compared with the other. And becauſe one ſentence is repeated twice, theſe two words, Mikedelem, and Mean, are as much in effect as if he had ſaid; From the beginning, and from the times paſt: for this prophecie was publiſhed long time before the things (propheciã) were accompliſhed: whereby the faithfull might evidently perceiue, that it was God which ſpoke.

To preſcience he adds his power, as we haue often ſaid: and yet withall he ſhewes to what end God is powerfull; euen to ſaue his people.

Verſ. 22. Looke vnto mee, and yee ſhall bee ſaued: all the ends of the earth ſhall be ſaued; for I am God, and there is none other.

Hitherunto hee hath ſpoken onely to the Iewes, as if ſaluation appertained to none but them. Now he extends his ſpeech further off: for hee calls a great audience to him, euen the whole world, to partake of the hope of ſaluation: and therewithall condemnes all nations of vnthankfulnes, if in giuing themſelues ſhall be ſeduced with Perſors, which obſtinately ſlunned the cleere light which was offered. For can a man commit a greater ſinne, then direclly to reiect his owne ſaluation?

New the Prophet turnes his ſpeech from the Iewes to the Gentiles.

God commands all then to looke vnto him: to which Commandement he adds a Promiſe: for this hath greater weight in it, and confirms the matter much more, then if he had ſet it downe ſimply by way of a command. We haue in this text therefore an excellent teſtimony touching the vocation of the Gentiles: wherein wee ſee how the Lord indifferently calles all ſorts of men vnto him, the partition wall being broken downe, which ſeparated betweene the Iewes and the Gentiles.

Eph. 2. 14.

Moreouer, wee are heere taught the true meanes how to obtaine ſaluation; euen to looke vnto God, and to turne vnto him with our whole heart. But we muſt looke vnto him with the eye of faith, that we may embrace the ſaluation promiſed to all, in Ieſus Chriſt. For God ſo loued the world, that he gaue his onely begotten Sonne, that vwhoſoever beleeueth in him, might not periſh, but haue euerlaſting life: Iohn 3. 16.

Now when hee exhorts all the ends of the earth, he ſhewes that all men haue hitherunto erred out of the right way, & haue had no reſpect vnto the true God: for where infidelitie raignes, there God cannot be diſcerned from Idols. In a word, he ſhewes that the condemnation of the whole world, ariſeth from dotting vpon their owne inuentions, whereby they forſake the living God: for from the knowledge of him, flowes eternall and aſſured ſaluation. The Lord then reacheth out his hand to ſaue all nations, and ſhewes them what way they ſhould take to obtaine it. And thus it appears it ſel not out by chance, that the Golpell was generally preached vnto all nations vnder heauen: but that it proceeded from Gods decree, who had ordained it ſo to come to paſſe long before. Yet hee accuſeth the Gentiles of blindneſſe, as I haue ſaid ere while, in that they turned their eyes after vanities, and ranne which way ſoever their giddie ſpirits led them. For how ſoever by nature they could not find out the true God, hauing from their infancy been trained vp in ſuperſtitions, and were bewitched with them; yet God had iuſt cauſe norwithſtanding to blame them for the prophane contempt of his grace.

All haue erred.

The way to ſaluation deſcribed.

Hypocriſie, you know, is alwaies wrapped in ignorance, ſo as men had rather bee deceiued through vaine deceits, then to be led the ſtraight way vnto God.

Hypocriſie alwaies mixed with ignorance.

Verſ. 23. I haue ſworne by my ſelfe: T 4 the

*Or, that is,
every knee,
&c.

the word is gone out of my mouth in righteousness, and shall not returne, that euerie knee shall bow vnto mee, and euerie tongue shall sweare by me.

A confirmation of the former sentence.

HE adds a more manifest confirmation to the former sentence: for because this calling was extraordinary and vheard of, hee therefore adds an oath, as men are wont to doe in things that are strange and hard to be credited. The Iewes might haue made replies, in regard they were then reputed the onely elect people. But in that he confirms it with an oath, all contention is taken away. I grant the Prophet aimes againe at the same marke that he did in verf. 6. to wit, that Gods glory shall so shine in the reformation of the Church, that all the world, from the rising of the Sunne, to the West, shall admire the same: or, to tell it you in a word, that the signes of Gods power shall so shine in this deliuerance, that all nations shall be confounded with feare and astonishment. In the meane while hence wee may gather that which I touched before; namely, the Gentiles are heere equalled with the Iewes, so as God shall be the common father of all, and his name called vpon in all places.

Now God sweares by himselfe, because there is none more sufficient to be a witness of his truth: for he is the truth it selfe. Men sweare by greater then themselves, as the Apostle saith, Heb. 6. 16. but God hauing no superior, sweares heere by himselfe.

The cause of Gods oath.

We must note the cause of this oath. It is euen to sustaine the infirmities of the Saints, lest they should float vp and downe in vncertainties. What a wonderful goodnes of God is this, who to remedy our diffidence, disdains not to vse his owne name, as if hee laid it to pawne: On the other side, how grosse and vile is our incredulity, if this oath doe not satisfie and content vs?

Now seeing God referes to himselfe the confirmation of all truth, we must take good heed when we are constrained to call him for a witness in othes, that we miugle not his name with Saints, or any other creatures whatsoever: but ying it with such reuerence as is meete, let vs referre his honour full and whole vnto himselfe.

Gods name not to be mingled with creatures
in our othes.

The word is gone forth.] The meaning is, that whatsoever the Prophet hath published at Gods commandement, is firme and sure. As if hee should say; This commandement passed not from me vnawares. In this sense the word righteousnesse, is often taken for a true speech, and such as shall alwaies be found so: and therefore he saith, that his word cannot be called backe.

To this appertaines the other member, shall not returne: that is to say, it shall still grow to perfection, vntill it appears by the effects, that it came from a God most iust, true, and almightie: for man a will call backe his word when he meetes with any difficultie that may hinder him from keeping the same. But because nothing can let God from executing his determinations, the Prophet rightly concludes, that the course of this word cannot be stopped, nor broken off by any inconuenience at all. The particle, That is, must serue heere for an exposition; to wit, Behold vnto this word.

Every knee shall bow vnto mee.] By this hee means that all nations shall bow before God; because the deliuerance of the Church shall terrifie the whole world. Yet withall it followes from hence, that his true worshipp shall also be received among all nations. For we cannot truly bow the knee before God, till he hath manifested himselfe vnto vs. Men may indeede present a kind of seruice to the one God, whom yet they know not: there is nothing but vanitie and illusions in all this. He speaks heere then of that true religious seruice, which proceeds from such a knowledge of God, as is rooted in the depth of the heart: for where no faith is, there can bee no sincere worshipp. True faith, as wee know, staies not her selfe vpon any vncertaine or vnkowne thing.

to bow the knee to God.

He sets forth the thing signified therefore, by the signe, as the Scriptures are often wont to doe. Whence we gather, that God requireth the outward seruice of the body: for the Prophet separates not the externall profession of religion, from the internall affection of the heart. It is in vaine then for such inconstant spirits to brag, that they can honour and worshipp God in their hearts, though they bow their knees before Idols. It is in vaine for them (I say) to make so friuolous an excuse, seeing the inward beliefe of the heart cannot be diuided from the outward confession of the mouth. For with the heart, man beleeuces vnto righteousness, and with the mouth he confesseth vnto saluation: Rom. 10. 10. For this cause the Lord approoues of their integritie and vprightnesse in his seruice, that had not so much as bowed a knee to Baal: King. 19. 18.

Saint Paul applies this text to the last iudgement, where he saith, that all shall be constrained to appeare before the iudgement seat of Christ. Although it is applied heere to the peoples deliuerance out of Babylon, to the spreading abroad of the Gospell, and to the establishing of the kingdome of Christ. But the Apostle holds it for granted, (which we also are not to bee ignorant of) that that which appertaines to Christs kingdome, ought not to be restrained to some parts of it onely, but to stretch it selfe throughout the whole course thereof, euen till the full and perfect accomplishment of the whole appeare. What is it then to bow the knee vnto Christ? It is when his doctrine is obeyed, and the preaching of the Gospell receiued.

bowing of the knee to Christ,

But many still resist it, and boldly contemne it: Satan plots sundry mischiefs, and with open mouth rageth against it continually; so as the accomplishment of this propheticke seemes yet to be very far off. The knee shall then truly be bowed to Christ, when he shall triumph, and hath pur downe and destroyed all his enemies, and when he shall appear in maiestic and in glory to all, which Satan and his supports doe now seeke to abolish. And therefore therefore S. Paul teacheth, that when Chriſt ſhall aſcend vp into his Throne to iudge the world, then ſhall that be accompliſhed which began to take effect from the beginning of the Goſpell, which we alſo ſee to draw neere from day to day.

The verb to ſeare is put for ſeruiſe, reuerence, or ſubiectiōn, by the figure called Synecdoche, whic a part is taken for the whole. An oth alſo is part of the honor which is due vnto God, for by it we confeſſe and acknowledge that he is the author, father, and lawfull protector of all truth, and that all things are naked and bare before his eyes, Heb. 4. 13. When this honor therefore is giuen to Idols, Gods Maieſtie is thereby violated with an execrable ſacrilege: thus then, thoſe which ſerue him purely, ſwear only by his name, and by nothing elſe. But we haue ſpoken of this matter in another place.

Verſ. 24. Surely he ſhall ſay, In the Lord haue I righteousnes and ſtrength: he ſhall come vnto him, and all that prouoke him ſhall be aſhamed.

HE ſhewes what true faith is, and what worſhip God approves of, to wit, when we haue not only a bare knowledge of him, or thinke in our hearts that there is one God, but when we alſo feele what a one he is to vs. Whoſoeuer he be then that contents himſelfe with a naked apprehenſion of God; is farre off from that faith which ſo knits vs vnto him, that we feele him dwelling in vs, according as S. Paul would haue vs not only to know Chriſt, but that he alſo ſhould dwell in our hearts by faith, Ephel. 3. 17. For be that contemplates of an idle god in the heauens ſiting at his eaſe, will neuer bow his knees before him with a ſincere heart; neither will he euer make a franck and willing confeſſion vnto him.

Now becauſe righteousnes and ſtrength are the two maine points of our ſaluation, the faithfull acknowledge God to be the author of both in them, and thus they whollie attribute the glorie of their happines vnto him: and in confeſſing that it proceeds from his free grace, it is to reſtue to all that by nature they are deſtroyed of ſuch gifts. They therefore confeſſe that they can finde neither ſtrength nor righteousnes in themſelues, but do ſeek the ſame only in God, that he may not be defrauded of his proper right.

He ſhall come vnto him.] The expoſitors agree not touching the interpretation of theſe words: for mine owne part, I vnderſtand this place only of the faithfull, who ſubmit themſelues vnto God, that ſo wee might ſee the reaſon of the oppoſition which is betweene them, and thoſe rebels which ceaſe not obſtinately to reſiſt God. Thus I expound it then, Thoſe who confeſſe their righteousnes and ſtrength to be from God, ſhall come to him. For his meaning is, that we haue acceſſe vnto God by faith, ſo as all thoſe which confeſſe that their ſaluation conſiſts in him, ſhall alſo come vnto him, and ſeele him preſent vwith them.

Truely, a man can neuer voluntarily draw neere vnto God, till he be reconciled with him: for the more we feele the terror of his Maieſtie, the further off wee flee from him. The Prophet in this place then magnifies this ioyfull fruit of Gods fauor, by means whereof, thoſe that were ſtrangers farre off before, ſhall now come and be made neere vnto him. To this agrees that in the 65. Pſal. Becauſe thou art a God that heareſt prayer, therefore ſhall all ſiſtch come vnto thee.

Now Iſaiah hauing ſhewed that God will gather in ſtrangers from their diſperſions, and entertaine them in his owne houſe, he denounceth an horrible iudgement againſt contemners and deſpiſers, who giue themſelues the raiſes, as if there were no God at all; and ſcorning all pietie: wallow themſelues in worldlie delights. For as faith only brings forth obedience, ſo the Prophet ſhews that it is infidelitie only which prouokes God to wrath and diſpleaſure. When he brands the vnbelecuers with this marke, that they are rebels to God; yea, that they prouoke him to the combat: therewithall hee pronounceth that they ſhall be covered with ſhame, howſoever they make their triumphs in the ſight of the world.

HE now preuents an obiection which might be made againſt this doctrine, to wit, it ſeemes ſtrange that the Lord ſhould call thoſe nations vnto him which were farre off before: as if they ſhould ſay, Hath God then choſen the poſteritie of Abraham in vaine? Shall his promiſes ſo often repeated Gen. 15. 5. and 17. 7. vaniſh into the aire? To this he answers, that the Lord will not ceaſe to be true in his promiſes ſtill, ſo that howſoever God hath made choiſe of the Gentiles, yet notwithstanding the couenant contracted and made with their fathers ſhall ſtand ſtill inuolable, becauſe the elect Iewes ſhall hold their ſoueraigne prerogatiue. For hee ſpeakes not heere of their reſiectiō as in many other places, but the Prophet only deliuers this point, that Gods grace which ſhall now be extended to all nations, ſhall ſtill flow from this fountaine, I am thy God, and the God of thy ſeed after thee, Gen. 17. 7. whereas the moſt part of the Iewes then were reiectēd; this ouerthrew not Gods couenant, becauſe the remnant that were adopted alwaies remained the true and lawfull ſeed: and albeit they were few in number, yet were they the firſt borne in the Church.

Moreouer, all thoſe among the Gentiles which were graſted into this body, began now to be the children of Abraham as in Chap. 44. 5. one ſhall ſay, I belong to Iacob, another ſhall ſubſcribe with his hand, and ſay, I am begotten of Iſrael. From this tide it is that we at this day are reputed by good right the Iſrael of God, though Iacob begat vs not. The Prophet addes this then, that they ſhould not thinke the couenant of God was aboliſhed:

None comes willingly to God, till they feele their reconciliatiō with him.

shed: as also, that they were not so to glorie in their race and stock, that they should therefore vtterly despise the Gentiles.

The whole seed of Israel.] He stretcheth this seed further off, lest they should imagin it to be vnhollie restrained to the posteritie of Abraham. For the Lord gathers his people indifferentlie both out of Iewes and Gentiles. In this place then he speakes in generall of all mankind.

We haue further to obserue, that the Prophet saith, we are iustified, and shall glorie in the Lord, for we must neither seeke righteousnes, nor glorie out of him. Now glorie is added, because it depends vpon righteousness, and follows it. For which cause S. Paul saith, Where is thy reioicing? It is excluded. By what law? of works? nay, but by the law of faith, Rom. 3.27. Also, if Abraham were iustified by works, he had wherein to glorie, but not with God, Rom. 4.2. It followes then, that those shall iustly glorie, who seeke their iustification in God only, acknowledging that in themselves there is no matter at all of reioicing.

Those iustly glorie that seeke their iustice in God only.

Neither righteousness nor glorie out of God.

THE XLVI. CHAPTER.

* Or, quite ouerthrow.

* Or, Mares.

* Or, throwne downe.

Verf. 1. Bel is bowed downe: Nebo is fallen: their Idols were vpon the beasts, and vpon the * Cattell: they which did beare you were * laden with a wearie burden.*

The coherence of the sentences rather to be considered now and then in this prophesie, then the diuision of the Chapters.

Leah continues forth his former argument; for we must not stande ouer-stricke vpon the diuiding of the Chapters, in regard they were not alwaies aptly obserued: but we are rather to consider of the sentences which cohere very well, as I haue said; notwithstanding, if any had rather haue it the beginning of a new Sermon, in regard that he forthwith speaks of the ruine of Babylon, I do not much contradict him. Bel and Nebo, were Idols which the Chaldeans worshipped, and it is very likely they were their chiefe patrons, for Idolaters alwaies make choice of some principall gods, vnder whose protection they thinke to be safe. Wee may also coniecture that this Nebo was an inferior god, added to the great god Bel, as Mercurie was to Iupiter. And vnder the names of these two the Prophet also comprehends all other Idols, foretelling by the spirit of prophesie that all the abominable Idolatries and superstitions of the Gentiles should be abolished, when God (hauing subdued y^e Idolaters vnder his feet) shall in triumph leade them captiues, for then it should be manifest to all that he was the iust auenger of his Church. The Chaldeans proudly boasted of the protection they had vnder their false gods; but the Prophet refutes this vaine confidence, saying, that the God of Israel will not content himselfe only to roote out the prophane people, but will also ouerthrow all their gods to their vtter shame and disgrace.

And therefore he saith, that they shall be borne vpon mares, in regard they should be throwne into some cart, or other to be transported and tumbled vpon heapes together as it pleased the carters to dispose of them: that is it which he signifies by the word pus downe, because the souldiers should lay all the gods on heapes which were so highly aduanced before. And no doubt but this was accomplished when the Medes and Persians tooke Babylon: for the Monarchie being translated to them, these Idols also were taken away as part of the spoile. Now howsoeuer Isaiah prophesied these things in respect of the Babylonians, yet doubtles he specially aimed at the coming of Christ in the flesh, at whose appearance all Idolatries and superstitions should be abolished. For when his kingdome is once established, all Idols forthwith fall to the ground, for it is not possible that false religion and superstitions can stand with his true knowledge: he expels all darknes with his brightnes, so as he leaues no roome neither for the false gods, nor anie of their seruices: for what communion hath light with darknes, or Christ with Belial? as S. Paul saith, 2. Cor. 6.15.

But withall we must obserue that the Prophet respected the time in which the Jewes were held prisoners: for they saw the Chaldeans perfume their Idols, and attributed vnto them a soueraigne power, as if the issue of all things had bin at the beck of these puppets, and in the meane while they scorned the God of the Jewes, as if he had bin insufficient to defend his people, (or if he were) yet that he did not much regard them. He shewes then that there shall be such a change, that the gods of the Chaldeans which were highly exalted should fall, and that the true God who seemed to be throwne to the earth shall be exalted, and shall reuenge the outrages done vnto his seruants.

The Prophet derides the vanitie of these goodly gods, who had neither strength nor motion, neither were they able to stand vpon their feet, nor to defend themselves, seeing the poore beasts were faine to carrie them. Heere is a close opposition then betweene their Idols, and the true God, who stands in no need of any help at all. But the Prophet to their further disgrace adds, that the mares (where of hee ſpeakes in this verſe) were hewed downe with the burden, of which they would gladly haue rid themſelues. And thus theſe falſe gods, after they ſuffered their worſhippers to bee deprived of them, were now become troubleſome to the poore brut beaſts.

Where Christes kingdom is established, there all Idols fall to the ground. See 1. Sam. 5.4.

A close opposition betweene the true God, and Idols.

Their ſoule.] It is an Hebrew phraſe; by which the Prophet mocks theſe Gods who had neither ſenſe, nor any vnderſtanding at all. He ſpeakes it then by way of contempt againſt the vaine and dumbe Idols; to wit, that they and their ſoule were led into captiuitie.

But let vs ſee if this may not as well be re-torted vpon the true God, whoſe Arke was raken by the Philiftims, 1.Sam.4.11. which was the ſigne of his preſence: for thus it ſeemed, that the Lord himſeife was in a maner led priſoner.

The answer to this obiection is eaſie. For howſoeuer the Lord meant that the Arke ſhould be a teſtimonie of his preſence, yet he forbade the Iewes to reſt in it, but commanded them to liſt vp their eies to heauen, and there to ſeek and adore him: for as hee is a ſpirit, ſo meant hee alwaies to be ſerued ſpiritually. The Arke then was not worſhipped in Gods ſtead, but was a ſigne by which the people were led as by the hand, to ſet their affection on things aboue, euen vpon the Lord himſeife: contrariwiſe, the Gentiles doted onelic vpon their puppets, and attributed vnto them a diuine power. Wee may alſo affirme, that the Philiftims were at laſt well ſcourged for their preſumption; ſo as they felt how they had to deale with the true God: 1.Sam. 5.7.

But this answer may ſeeme inſufficient; becauſe the Lord ſuffered his Arke to be in contempt for a time, as it plainly appears by the courſe of the hiſtory: 1.Sam. 5. 6. Thus then the true ſolution is; that howſoeuer the Lord communicates himſeife vnto vs by ſignes and ſacraments, yet hee vrill be ſought of vs in heauen. Moreover, himſeife had foretold by memorable prophecies, that the Philiftims in their conqueſt led him not priſoner, but that hee willingly expoſed his Arke as a pray to his enemies, to auenge him of the wickedneſſes of the people. Alſo when the Temple was deſtroied and burnt, and the veſſels carried into Babylon, the Iewes could not be ignorant but the ſame God which they had worſhipped in Ieruſalem, was the authour of this chaſtiſement, in regard hee had ſo often foretold that by his Prophets, which then came to paſſe.

Verſ. 3. Heare yee mee, O houſe of Iacob, and all that remaine of the houſe of Iſrael, which are borne of mee from the wombe, and brought vp of mee from the birrh.

The Prophet heere elegantly ſhewes what great difference there is betwene the true God and Idols: for hee ſaid before, that the gods of the Babylonians ſhould be carried upon carts, and drawne by beaſts, becauſe they were dead ſtockes: heere hee attributes a far higher prerogatiue vnto the God of Iſrael; to wit, that he carried his people, as the mother carries the child in the wombe; which being borne, ſhee alwaies carries in her boſome. Now hee calles the Iewes to giue care, that they might make answer from their owne experience; for they ought to be the more affected, in regard they had ſele by the effects, that God had continually ſupported both them and their burdens. He ſerch a very fit oppoſition then, and from the former words thus concludes; Acknowledge and confeſſe indeed that I am the true God, and in nothing like vnto Idols, which are vaine things, and dead burthens: adde alſo, that in regard of my continuall benefites, which I haue neuer ceaſed to powre vpon you from your birrh, you cannot be ignorant, but muſt needs know the greatneſſe of my power. For the Lord is not onely powerfull for himſeife, but extends it to all his creatures, that we might truly feele the efficacy thereof.

Which are borne of mee from the wombe.] This ſimilitude, by which God compares himſeife to a mother that leaues her child in her wombe, is very fitting for his purpoſe. Now he ſpeaks of the time paſt, in which hee began to giue vnto his people teſtimonies of his grace: vntleſſe any had rather expound theſe wordes more ſtriſtly, to wit, that God hath in mercie advanced them, and borne them in his armes as a child borne of his mother: Pſal. 22.9, 10. But becauſe God began not onely to be a nurſing father to this people from their naturall birrh, but alſo begat them ſpiritually; it is not amiſſe to extend his ſpeech euen to that, to wit, that they iſued as it were out of Gods wombe, into newneſſe of liſe, and to the hope of the eternall inheritance.

If any obiect that God is euery where called a Father: Ier. 31.9. Mal. 1.6. and that this title properly belongs vnto him: I answer, that Gods loue is ſo incomprehenſible vnto his Church, that all the ſimilitudes in the world are inſufficient to expreſſe the ſame. For it is a thing that hath many branches, yea infinite and vnmeaſurable; ſo as if all the benefites that witneſſe true friendſhip, were gathered into one, yet exceeds all that can be thought or ſpoken of: there is no ſimilitude therefore that can expreſſe his ineffable loue.

If we onely vnderſtand it, that from the time God begat them, hee hath borne and tenderly nourished them in his boſome: this will well ſute with that which is written in the ſong of Moſes, Hee nourished and carried them, as the Eagle doth her litle ones vpon her wings: Deut 32.11. To be ſhort, the Prophets meaning is, that vnleſſe the Iewes forget their originall, they muſt of neceſſitie conclude, that they were not begotten in vaine, but that God, who hath performed vnto them the office of a louing father and mother, will neuer leaue them, but alwaies will aſſiſt them. And beſides, that by continuall ſucceſſion of time, they ſo felt his power, that they were at no hand to doe any homage to Idols.

Chap. 10. 21. When hee mentions the remainder, it is to shew, as wee noted before, that the greater part by their rebellion, made a defectio from the Church: and thus the hope of the redemption, appertained but to a small handfull. For this cause he craues audience, because the vnbelleuours were become no lesse deafe at his voice, then the prophane nations. Now howsoeuer the estate of the people at that time was far from perfection, and that the remnants of this dispersed people, was exceeding small, yet the Lord commands them to consider how miraculously they were persecuted and kept vnto that instant; that so they should not doubt but hee would continue a louing father and mother vnto them in like manner for the time to come. And in that he requires them to hearken to his speech, hee shewes that the true and onely remedie of all our miseries consists in depending vpon Gods mouth, and in hearkening to the promises of his grace: for then we shall haue strength enough to beare all our afflictions. As on the contrary, there is a wide gate set open to rush vs into despaire: yea, and to expect nothing but ruine and destruction, when we stop our eares, and will not heare his voice.

The true and onely way to redresse our miseries.

Verf. 4. Therefore vnto old age I am the same, euen I will beare you vntill the hoare haues: I haue made you, I will also beare you, and I will carry you, and I will deliuer you.

God not onely begins, but perfects the worke of his grace in vs.

I Expound this particle Van, Wherefore: which wee are diligently to obserue. For thus he concludes; I haue begotten you and brought you forth; yea I haue borne you in mine armes, whilest you were yet in your swaddling clouts: and therefore I will be the protector of your life euen vnto the end. And thus Dauid reasons; Thou, O Lord, diddest draw me out of the wombe, thou gauest me hope euen at my mothers breasts. I was cast vpon thee euen from the wombe: thou art my God from my mothers belly: Psal. 22. 9, 10. God promiseth the Iewes then, that hee will alwaies be a father vnto them. The Lord, saith Dauid, will finish the good worke he hath begun in me: thy mercies, O Lord, indure for euer; therefore thou wilt not forsake the worke of thine owne hands: Psal. 138. 8.

This word, I, (six times repeated) is of great weight in my judgement, although the interpreters expound it simply as a pronoun demonstratiue. But it signifies heere not onely Gods eternall essence, and that he will euer be like himselfe; but it is also spoken in regard of vs, shewing that wee shall alwaies find him one and the same.

Where hee saith vnto old age: this might seeme a strange speech, seeing we grow to be perfect men, after God hath once drawne vs out of our childhood. But let every one examine his owne strength as he ought, and we shall easilie perceiue, that none of vs haue so profited, but we shall still feele that God had need to vphold vs daily by his power: for otherwise the most perfect would fall downe flat at euery turne. Which Dauid also expresseth in Psal. 71. Cast me not off O Lord in the time of mine old age, forsake me not when my strength faileth.

I haue made you, I will also beare you. He reuencs the same argument againe: as if he should say; God will not looke to your deserts, but to his owne worke: and therefore will continue forth his grace towards you. Hence we may thus conclude; Seeing thou hast not onely created vs to be men, but also to be thy children, thou wilt doubtlesse continue to beare that affection to vs, which fathers and mothers doe towards their children, and wilt alwaies haue care ouer vs.

Verf. 5. To Whom will yee make mee like, or make me equall, or compare mee, that I should be like him?

The Prophet brings in the Lord here complaining of the Iewes, for distrusting his power and goodnesse; as also for comparing him with Idols: nay, for abasing him beneath the. For in seeing the Chaldeans to haue the world at will, they iudged themselues hopelesse, and that the memorie of the covenant was so abolished, as if there had been no God left in heauen to haue taken care of them. The Lord takes vp a complaint therefore against them, in that hee perceiued they attributed some power to the Idols, and in so doing, obscured his regall authoritic. He handled the same argument in the 42. & 43. Chapters, and in those that follow: and therefore we haue the lesse need now to insist any longer vpon euery word. That they should not measure Gods power then, by the view of things present, hee commands them to raise vp their mindes higher. The like aduertisement were fit to be made to vs at this day, if in beholding the prosperitie of the Papiists, we should therefore imagiue that they had the true religion on their side: for otherwise, what were it but to compare the liuing God with Idols? This circumstance is diligently to be noted, because many expositors baulking, and neglecting it, doe lessen the weight of this sentence: for they thinke the Prophet cries out onely against the superstitious, who attribute some diuinitie to wood and stone, because Gods glory is defamed, when hee is compared to dead Images. I nothing doubt therefore but hee taxeth their peruerse judgement, and crooked conceits, wherewith the people were transported and carried away in aduersitie, to thinke that God respected the Babylonians about them. For, if God had fauoured the Babylonians, it would thereupon haue followed, that hee had also approoued of their idolatry: and thus his glory should haue been giuen from him, vnto senselesse creatures. To conclude, hence we may gather a general doctrine (as S. Paul fitly applies it, Act. 17. 25.) that God is robbed of his honor, when we liken him to dumbe and vaine Idols.

We must not thinke the better of Idolaters because they seeme to prosper in their sinne.

A generall doctrine.

Verf. 6. They draw gold out of the b.se, bag, weigh silver in the ballance, and hire a Goldsmith to make a god of, and they bow downe and worship it.

7. They beare it upon the shoulders; they carry him and set him in his place: so doth he stand, and cannot remove from his place. Though one cry unto him, yet he cannot answer, nor deliuer him out of his tribulation.

The Prophet told vs the same thing before, which he now repeates againe, that hee might ingraue this doctrine the more deepele in our mindes: for superstition hath taken such rooting in our hearts, that it cannot bee plucked vp, valesse God wholly alter and change our nature. All that we haue heard against the folly of Idolaters, will by and by slip out of our memories, because we alwayes retaine in vs some seedes of superstition; there being nothing to which we are more inclined, then to file ourselues in this dunghill. Hee saith then that to forge Idols, one prouides stufte, another imployes his art and skill to fashion it: & thus there must be two fathers of whom these Idols are begotten: first, the rich churle, who disburseth the gold, or silver: secondly, the Goldsmith, who giues a forme vnto them. And now behold a new forged god.

Wherin he plainly taxeth the senselesnesse of those that secke a godhead in their purses, and in the hands of the artificer. For who would imagine that from so sudden a change, men would prostitute themselues before a piece of metall, hauing put some shape vnto it, according to their owne fantasies? For it is such a god, as stands them in so much the stufte, and so much the fashioning.

The particule Apb, put before the verbe To worship, sets out this their madnesse: for there might be some excuse which deserued to be pardoned, it being suddenly overtaken with this error, they should fall downe and worship some false god: but these persisted obstinately in their frensie.

This bowing and worshipping being added after the former circumstances, doth much aggravate the obstinacie, and shewes that they were vterly bewitched. This blockishnesse then, as I haue said, is too grosse, when men will worshipping a god forged with their owne hands.

The same amplification is added in the verse following; They beare it upon the shoulders, &c. For being deprived of all common sense, they runne and cry for helpe to such gods: and must they not needs be starke bedlems then?

Verf. 8. Remember this, and be ashamed: bring it againe to mind, O ye transgressors.

This verse is expounded two waies; to wit, that God speaks both to the Iews & Gentiles. For such as are but meanly instructed in the Law, are easilie deceiued, in y they quench the knowledge of God hath kindled in their vnderstandings. Again, there is no man but hath some seedes of religion sown in his heart by the very light of nature: but he either choketh it by his infidelitie, or corrupts and marres the same by his own inuentions. In this sense then we may refer it to all mankind in generall. But I had rather retaine the other sense, and the very scope of the text requires it. For by and by after, he addes such things as appertaines to none but to y Iewes, whom he here calles transgressors. For they were throwne down with a very little blast of temptation, and were euolted from the true God: as if their seuentie yeeres captiuitie must needs haue blotted all the benefits of so many hundred yeeres out of their hearts. In regard then that they had troden vnder foote all right ascription of pietie, he sharply taxeth their ingratitude, in that they were to easilie slid into superstitions.

When hee commands them to returne into their hearts, it is to shew that they were not well in their wits before. Others translate, Bring backe; which is nothing at all to the purpose, because euen now he commanded them to remember, and wil repeat it by and by in the verse following. He brings them now then to their owne hearts, in regard the forgetfulness of Gods former benefits proceeded from a kind of follie.

Be ashamed. Others translate, Be strong, or of good courage: and thus they drawing it from the word Isb, which signifies to behaue a mans selfe valiantly. Others, from Ashish: which is as much to say, as foundatio. As if he should say; Bee of good courage; thinke not that I will destitute you of conuenient succour. But I rather agree with Saint Jerom, who draws it from the word Esh, which signifies fire: for it better suites after their shame is discouered, that they should blush as red as fire, then to be valiant or of good courage. And yet I giue euery one leaue to chuse which of the readings he likes best. He would they should blush for shame then, in regard of their carelesnesse, vnthankfulnesse, and wickednes, that afterwards they might runne vnto God.

Verf. 9. Remember the former things of old: for I am God, and there is nothing like me.

This is the exposition of the former sentence, for hee shewes more fully that which he was speaking of before; to wit, that God hath shewed sufficient testimonies of his power and maiestie; not onely for two or three yeeres past, but of old. For he had continued his benefits, & had made them to feele the tokens of his fauour in a constant course continually. Thence hee gathers that the signes of his Deitie were sufficient to hold them from turning out of the right way. We haue also to obserue that hee contents not himselfe to be called God, but to be acknowledged the only God, as we haue said before, Verf. 10. Which declare the last things from the beginning, and from of old the things that were not done, saying, My counsell shall stand, and I will do what soeuer I will.

An amplification.

Now he shewes more at large after what manner he would haue y^e Lewes to thinke of the time past, to wit, because they were dayly instructed by continuall prophesies so farre forth as was expedient. But hauing made this preface, he comes in the next place to mention the hope of their deliuerance. Neither are we to wonder that he repeats one thing so oft, because it was a matter whereof they could hardly be perswaded, for the people were not only slow to believe, but with their infidelitie they joined rebellion. He admonisheth them then that they had bin often saughes for a long time together, how safe a thing it is to trust in God, who doth not so much commend his foreknowledge vnto them, as to shew what he had ordeined to fall out by the ministrie of his Prophets. Neither had there bin any truth nor steadfastnes at all in the prophesies, vnlesse the same God which had foreordeined this or that to come to passe, had not also the euents thereof in his owne power. And withall he aduertiseth them that in all prophesies he spake nothing but the truth: for he published his decrees, to the end they should not doubt to rest boldly therein as soone as the Prophets had spoken. But because I haue handled these things largely before, therefore I touch them the more briefly for the present.

Verf. 11. I call* a bird from the East, and the man of my counsell from farre; as I haue spoken, so will I bring it to passe: I haue purposed it, and I will do it.

Or, the thought.

An application of the generall doctrine to a particular vs.

Cyrus.

The Prophet hauing spoken of the presence and power of God, now applies his generall speech to a particular vs, for he meanes to comfort the Lewes: to wit, that they were not in such perpetuall slaueerie vnder y^e Babylonians, as that no hope were left them touching their deliuerance. He now comes to a specialtie then, and promisseth that Cyrus shall come with haste, howsoeuer ic seeme impossible in the eyes of flesh and blood. Where I haue translated the word Aais, thoughts, almost all the Interpreters translate Bird, which is the true signification of the word: but because we may gather out of the second of Daniel, verse 14. that it is sometimes taken for counsell, or thought, I had rather follow this interpretation, which is also approved by certaine Hebrues: yet it may be, the Prophet therein alludes to a bird; as if he should say, It shall be a swift thought or counsell; neither do I denie but he notes the swiftnes of Cyrus his voyage.

Where he calles Cyrus, the man of his counsell, it is a repetition much vsed amongst the Hebrues, whereby also it appeares, that the word Aais is put in y^e first member for thoughts, or decree. Now he calles him a man of his counsell, because he shal be the executioner of this iudgement. Notwithstanding if any had rather retaine the word Bird, I will not gainsay him, in regard of the neere affinity that is betwene the similitudes: for Cyrus his coming was so sudden and vnexpected, as that he seemed to come flying as a bird. He besieged and tooke Babylon whilest the Chaldeans thought all passages were shut against him. Also, if this interpretation be better liked, we may say that Isaiah alludes to those diuinations which they made from the flying of Birds, whereunto the Chaldeans were exceedingly giuen: for as they practised iudiciall Astronomie, so obserued they the flying & chirping of Birds; thinking that herein consisted a certaine knowledge of things to come, but the Lord tells them he will send a bird which they could not foresee. Notwithstanding, the first exposition contents me best, to wit, that he hath respect to the swift passage of Cyrus, signifying, that the waies can not be so shut vp, nor the fortresses so strong, that they should hinder him fro approaching suddenly vnto Babylon.

Iudiciall Astronomie.

Where he addes from the East, it serues not only to make the promise certaine, but also to assure the Lewes that no distance of way should be able to let or foreflow this worke of God, and therefore by way of exposition he addes in the second member, from farre. Hence let vs learne to what end we ought to referre all that which we read of Gods presence or power in the holy scriptures, for these things are not said to hold vs in suspence, but to the end we might the better applye them to our vs.

He also closely opposeth Gods counsell to our thoughts. Why so? Because he will so deliuer his Church, that men shall not be able to conceiue the reason thereof in their minds. Howsoeuer then that which God promisseth seemes incredible, yet he shewes that he will easily open himselfe a way, to the end wee should not measure his incomprehensible counsels within the narrow scantling of our reason.

I haue thought it. Others translate, I haue formed it: but I thinke the verb Ias agrees best, being taken here for to thinke. He therefore confirms that which he said before, to wit, that this was thus ordeined of him before, and therefore should remaine steadfast and inuolable. And whereas he addes, As I haue spoken, so will I bring it to passe, it is as much as if he had said, that he foretold nothing in vaine, and that this prophesie which was published at his commandement, ought to be accounted of, as if it were alreadie accomplished. He hath put this first member then to gaine credit to his words : and then hee addes in the second, but I say, with his word preached : which we are diligently to observe, because we are tolled with diuers distractions, doubting whether God hath spoken in good earnest or no; because we imagine him to be such a one as our selues; that is to say, (in plaine English) an hypocrite, or a dissembler. But he protests that nothing proceeds from him, but that which hath issued from his mature deliberations: so as the preaching of the word, is no other thing but an assured testimonie of his secret counsels, which he hath purposed to manifest vnto vs. As oft then as the Lord vtters his voyce, wee ought to build vpon the assured accomplishment of it.

HE sharply rebukes the Iewes againe, who would neither giue credence vnto God, nor receive any consolations at all in their aduersities. This was a galling reprehension, which no doubt went very neere the quicke : but they well deserved it, in regard neither threatning, nor promise of God, were it neerer so sweete and amiable, was auailable to tame them. These two epithetes which he heere vseth, are to be noted: whereby hee giues vs to vnderstand, that the afflicted and miserable, shut vp the passage of Gods helpe from them by their owne rebellion. For by their murmurings and grudgings, they shake off the feare of God, and in thus doing, ruth themselves headlong into such desperate courses, that they make open war vpon him. Now he speaks to the Iewes, who were ready to burst with malice and pride : notwithstanding afflictions oppressed them to the utmost. And thus hauing shaken off the feare of God, they fell into open raging, which [I would to God] many among vs were not guiltie of, who wax worse by their calamities. Thus then they would accept of no remedie nor medicine at all to cure their euils, if any would haue the word iustice to bee taken heere for Gods succor, as in the verse following; I leaue it free for them so to doe : for it is no strange thing to see the obstinat, who repell Gods, and reiect his grace, to bee vnable to rest vpon his sweete promises, or not to suffer that any should doe them good, albeit helpe bee offered them.

Verf. 13. I will bring neere my iustice : it shall not be farre off, and my saluation shall not tarry : for I will giue saluation in Zion, and my glorie vnto Israel.

IF any had rather retaine that which I was saying; to wit, that such as are farre from iustice, and vncapable of Gods grace, are here called to repentance, the sense will bee all one : but if wee say that the Iewes were farre from iustice, in regard they were giuen vp to a dissolute behauiour as men past grace, then there is an apt opposition betwene the iustice of God, and the iustice of men. Although the Iewes there were farre from iustice, and had cast off all studie of pietie; yet God affirms, that his iustices neere. As if he should say; I must confesse incredulitie is a maine let and hinderance, yet shall it not hinder me in the end from manifesting the force of my truth. What though some did not beleue, saith Paul ? shall their vnbeliefs make the truth of God without effect ? God forbid. Rom. 3.3. Yea, let God bee true, and euerie man a lier. And to say the truth, if he did not overcome mens stubbornnesse by his goodness, wee should incontinently perish. For which of vs receiues the bounty of God, or his grace when hee offers the same, as wee ought? Doth hee withdraw his mercy or his truth from vs? It is for no other cause, but for that we be farre from iustice. Contrariwise, though we resist him, yet he drawes neere vnto vs, that he may manifest his iustice, albeit we be vtterly vnworthy of it. Yet he doth this in such wise, as the wicked receiue no fruit at all by it. For the Prophet comprehends not those cursed apostataes, as if this saluation promised belonged vnto them; but only affirms, that God hath meanes ready to make his iustice appeare.

But heere it is needfull for vs to consider in what state this people stood, to whom this speech was directed. They were all in a manner tainted with the sinne of infidelitie, and those that rested vpon the promises were but very few : euen the elect sometimes shewed themselves but too obstinat; so as they seemed to be no lesse infected with this contagion then the rest. He raxeth them all in generall then, as well to conuince the reprobates, as to galle the elect, and to bring them into the right way. But he chiefly sets himselfe against the rebels, as I haue said, who obstinately and stubbornly reiect all hope of grace.

And my saluation.] Heereby it appeares what he meant by the word iustice; to wit, the help and succour of God promised in sic and due season to his people. He takes iustice and saluation then, for one and the same thing, because it is an excellent testimony of Gods iustice, when he conserues and protects his distressed ones. It is not added superfluously, that it shall not be far off, and shall not tarry : for heerein he expresseth Gods exceeding great mercie, in that he will finish the course of his iustice, albeit the people should resist the same.

And vwill put.] The letter Vau, is heere put for a particule of rendering the cause, thus; For I will put. Now this is a confirmation of the former sentence : as if hee should say; Seeing the Lord hath once determined to saue Ierusalem, shee cannot be disappointed of such a benefit. He ioines his glorie with the saluation of the faithfull : as also Saint Paul takes the cause there was little or no hope that the people should euer returne, as long as the Babylonical Monarchie flourished. He therefore conioined these two things together; to wit, the ouerthrow of this Monarchie, and the peoples deluerance which should insue. For the statelesse of this Citie was vnto the poore Iewes as a deepe graue, in which they were buried: but when the Lord opened it, then the peoples first life was as it were restored to them afresh. In that hee commands her to come downe: it hath greater weight in it then if he had directly threatened the should come downe: for thus he speaks with authoritie, as if he were already set in a throne of iudgement: for he spake nothing but what he had warrant from God to deliuer; and therefore hee boldly pronounceth what should happen. And this commission wee see the Lord gaue to Ieremias; Behold, I haue set thee this day ouer kingdoms and nations, that thou shouldest plucke vp and destroy, and pull downe and plant: Ier. 1. 10. For there is no power at all that is not vnder the checke of Gods word.

high, but it is subiect to the authoritie of

Lastly, his meaning is to bring the Iewes as it were, to view the thing done, for they could not without much difficultie conceiue how this change should happen, vnlesse God should destroy their enemies with thunder & lightning from heauen. Touching this word daughter of Babylon; it is a figure much vsed among the Hebrewes, when they speake of Cities and nations. He calles her virgin, not in regard of her chastitie or shamefastnesse, but because shee was tenderly and delicately entertained, as virgins be, and was not as yet forced nor rauished by the enimie, as it was said of Zidon in Chap. 23. 12. The like may be said at this day of Venice, and of other Cities flowing and abounding in riches and pleasures: in which regard, they seeme most happy in the cies of the world. But they haue no lesse cause to feare the change of their estate, then the Babylonians, howsoeuer they seeme now to be far off from danger. For thou shalt be no more: that is to say, those that esteemed thee happy, shall reioice no more with thee for thy prosperitie.

Verf. 2. Take the millstones, and grindmeale: lose thy lockes, make bare the feete, vncover the leg, and passe throw the floods.

ALL this description tends to this end, namely, that Chaldea shall taste of a wonderfull change. For this Citie which before was in great honour, shall bee brought into extreme dishonour, and euery way put to such drudgerie, that all shall perceiue euident and apparant signes of Gods wrath therein. Behold then the marks of a most seruile bondage, Take the millstones, and grindmeale. For they were wont in ancient time, to put slaues of the basest and abiectest condition to the mill. Their condition then must needs bee miserable, when they were held no better then horses: for in warre, those that got the conquest, handled some of their prisoners with much better respect. But heere the Prophet propounds nothing before the Chaldeans, but a wofull condition in all points, to the end the faithfull might assure themselues that they should goe forth freely; when the Chaldeans, who held them captiues, should themselues be captiuated. Now howsoeuer we reade not that the great states of the land were thus dishonourably vsed, yet it sufficed for the accomplishment of the prophecie; that Cyru suffering them to inioy some base offices, made them vncapeable of any rule or authority, by constraining them to cease from all honest exercises, and liberall sciences.

slauerie.

The righteous escape out of trouble, and the wicked shall

And because they ouerflowed in voluptuousnesse, by the lockes hee alludes to the trimmings of virgins. We know they are but too curious in trieking and setting out their haire. Isaiah therefore on the contrarie describes here a dressing far discrepant from the former; to wit, that from the head downe to the feete, they should be couered with ignominie, with filth and mire, in stead of that braue and costly attire they were wont to weare. Maidens and virgins will scarcely bee seene to passe through the streets, much lesse through high waies: but the Chaldeans must passe throw the floods, and that with the thigh or leg vncovered.

Verf. 3.

Verſ. 3. Thy ſilthines ſhall be diſcovered, and thy ſhame ſhall be ſeene: I will take vengeance, and I will not meet thee as a man.

The con-
cluſion.

THis is the concluſion of the former ſentence, as if he ſhould ſay, As long as Babylon flouriſhed ſhe kept her reputation, and was greatly eſteemed: for oftentimes vnder riches and authoritie there lie many vices, as vnder vailles, which being taken away, the ſilth is diſcovered to the great ſhame of the parties, as Demosthenes ſpeaking of Philip king of Macedon ſaith, Whileſt mens bodies are in good plight, the weaknes which is hidden in ſome of the members is not eſpied, but if the body fall into any dangerous ſicknes, then all is out of order, heere is a breach felt, there is a ſinew periſhed, or ſomewhat elſe out of ſure.

A ſaying of Demothemes, ſpeaking of the eſtate of Philip king of Macedonia.

The ſame we ſee to happen in kingdomes, Common-wealths, and Cities ill governed; for the ſilth and corruption which before was covered vnder the glorie of their eſtates, being now a little troubled, are diſcovered; when their pomp and riches are taken from them, then their cruelties, treaſons, robberies, periuries, vniuſt taxes, and other impieties, by which they purchaſed to themſelues honour in time of proſperitie, begin to turne to their diſhonour in the time of aduerſitie.

A Simile.

I will take vengeance, and will not meet thee as a man.] It is as much as if he ſhould ſay, Think not thou haſt to do in this caſe with a mortall man, whoſe violence thou mayſt reſiſt: for in other places, where mention is made of mans hand, it ſignifies a kinde of moderation. But here the Prophet ſhewes that the Chaldeans ſhall find no reliefe at all, becauſe God will vtterlie roote them out. Others tranſlate, I will not meet a man, that is to ſay, I will accept of no man that ſhall in-treat for them: Let who will come forth and intercede for theſe, yet I will not remit their fault, neither leſſen nor adſwage the puniſhment one whit. This ſenſe agrees well, but it is a little conſtrained, in regard of the diſpoſition of the words: for thus, the verb Paga, which ſignifies to goe before, muſt be taken in the paſſiue ſignification, which cannot be. Moreouer, the Prophet ſaith not ſimply that God will not be intreated, but that he will not be appeaſed. Thus the firſt expoſition ſutes beſt, if we conſider rightlie of the order of the words: yet euery one may follow whether of the ſenſes he will, for take which you liſt, the ſumme will be, that the Lord will ree them out without pittie or mercie; only this I ſay, the firſt expoſition likes me well, becauſe it agrees beſt with the text.

Verſ. 4. Our redeemer, the Lord of hoſts is his name, the holy one of Iſrael.

The end of Gods iudge-ment is to maniſeſt himſelfe the redeemer of his Church.

THE Prophet ſhewes to what end God would take vengeance vpon the Chaldeans, euen in regard of the peoples ſalutation, as he ſaid in Chap. 45. 4. But this ſentence hath much greater force in it, in regard it comes abruptly, and as one wakening himſelfe out of a dreame when he ſaw Babylon ruined, which before made it her trade to ſubdue and treade other nations vnder her feet. And he ſhewes that this ſhall come to paſſe for none other cauſe, but to the end the Lord may manifeſt himſelfe to be the redeemer and auenger of his people.

The holy one of Iſrael.] As if he ſhould ſay, This people was not elect, nor ſeparated from other nations in vaine: his meaning is then to ſet forth a teſtimonic of his power in this particular, and that is the reaſon why he ioines this title holy vnto it.

Verſ. 5. Sit ſtill and get thee into darknes, o daughter of the Chaldeans; for thou ſhalt no more be called, The Lady of kingdomes.

HE continues on the ſame argument ſtill, and ſhewes, that the end of the Chaldean Monarchy draws neere. But becauſe this ſeemed ſomewhat incredible, hee repeats the ſame thing in many words, which he might haue diſpatched in one ſentence. He vſeth theſe deſcriptions then to ſet the thing done (as it were) before them. Where he bids them ſit ſtill and be quiet, it is in ſigne of ſhame and contempt. And yet this ſilence may be oppoſed to her firſt eſtate, wherein ſhe reigned as a Lady: for then ſhe not only liſted vp her voice with authoritie like a Miſtris, but ſhe cauſed her words to giue ſuch a ſound, that the noiſe thereof terrified all the Eaſt. Now the Prophet commands her to ſit ſtill and leaue her cackquet, in regard her condition is ſo changed, that where ſhe was wont to ſpeake ſo loude before, ſhe ſhall not dare now to mutter one word diſtinctlie from betwene her teeth.

By how much the more the peoples deli-uerance ſeemed incredible, by ſo much the more is the Prophet forced to ſet it forth by ſundry deſcriptions.

Now in that he bids her enter into darknes, I willinglie receiue the firſt expoſition: for thoſe who are fallen from a proſperous eſtate into aduerſitie, ſit downe and put their mouthes in the duſt with ſhame, and dare ſcarce ſo much as gasp. For thou ſhalt no more be called. We know that this Monarchy had a large extent, and was Lady ouer many great kingdomes, for ſhe was the head of all dominions, it was needfull then that theſe poore captiues ſhould be fortified with theſe promiſes, and aduertised of Babylons ruine, that they might be put in hope of their deliuerance.

Verſ. 6. I was wroth with my people: I haue polluted mine inheritance, and giuen them into thine hand: thou diſt ſhew them no mercy, but thou diſt lay the very heauie yoke vpon the ancient.

THIS is a preuention, whereby he admoniſheth the Iewes (as he often hath done heretofore) that their captiuitie was a ſcurge inflicted vpon them by God: for if the ſtroke had come from the hand of another, then the remedie had not bin in him. That they might be perswaded then that he which had smitten them was able to heale them, he wills them to impute it to the desert of their owne finnes that they were so hardly dealt withall; yet he exhorts them to hope well, in regard God was minded to keepe a measure in chastising of them; and withall toucheth the cause why the Chaldeans should be ouerthrowne, namely, that God, who is the iust reuenger of wrongs and iniuries, hath much more iust cause to reuenge the outrages done to his people. Besides, in the first member he calles the Iewes to repentance, in regard they had drawne all these euils vpon their heads by their owne offences. Next, he accuseth the Chaldeans, for taking vp this occasion to exercise their crueltie, as if one should steale a child whom the father had ouly commanded to be whipt with a rod. Whence it folloves that the Chaldeans insulted without cause, as if by their owne power they had subdued and led the Iewes captiue, for they should be iustly punished, in that they cruelly misused the prisoners whom they had vanquished.

Now whereas he saith that he was wroth, and therefore polluted his heritage, let vs not thinke that hauing changed his mind he was so farre offended as vtterly to neglect the care of his people, so as to thinke no more vpon his couenant: no, the contrarie plainly appears as well by the euent, as in that he vouchsafeth to call them his people, notwithstanding the greater part became Apostataes from him, and were iustly reiected of him as prophane. But in speaking thus, he had respect to his couenant, for he had ancie to the foundation and original whence they issued: so as those who came of Abraham according to y^e flesh, are reckoned for the people of God, albeit there were very few which were his children by the right of adoption, for all in a manner falsly challenged to themselves the title of Abrahams offspring. Thus the word wroth in scripture is not to be attributed to any passion in God, who euer desires the saluation of his people, but vnto vs, who prouoke him by our wickednesses. For he hath iust cause to be angrie, albeit he ceaseth not still to loue vs. He so prophanes his Church then, that is to say, prostitutes it, and giues it vp as a pray into the enemies hands, that neither do his elect thereby perish, nor yet is his eternall couenant violated. Nay, in the midst of his wrath he remembers mercie, Haba. 3. 2. and mitigates his blowes where-with he smites his people, and in the end will seuerely punish those that vexed them.

If the Lord pollute his Church then for a time: if tyrants cruellie oppresse her, let vs not be out of heart, but let vs flee to this promise, to wit, that he who auenged himselfe vpon the insolencie of the Chaldeans, will not let the rage of our enemies goe vnrecompenced. Morcouer we are diligentlie to obserue, that men ought not to abuse their victories, to handle their prisoners hardly, as often it falles out, for when they cast off all humanitie, they become like wild beasts, and spare neither old nor young, men nor women, when they haue gotten the masterie: in a word, they vtterlie forget their condition. Now howsoeuer they abuse their power, yet wee may resolute vpon it, that God will meet with them in the end, for such shall haue iudgement mercilesse, as will shew no mercie, Iam. 2. 13.

But it may be demanded how the Chaldeans could exceed the bounds which God had prescribed them; was not God able to haue suppressed their rage? And if he were not, where is the truth of that sentence, An haire of your heads shall not fall to the ground without the will of your heavenly father? Luke 12. 7. The answer to this is easie, for howsoeuer it was not in the power of y^e Chaldeans to passe their bounds indeed, yet may we perceiue a more then brutish crueltie in them, in that they indeuored vtterly to roote out these poore helpless wretches who yeilded themselves to their mercie. The Lord complains by his Prophet Zacharie of the same vnruines of prophane nations, who violentlie rushed vpon his people to destroy them, though his wrath was not much moued against them. I am greatly angrie, saith he, against the carelesse heathen, for I was angrie but a little, and they helped forwards the affliction, Zach. 1. 15. Here then he amplifies their fault, in that they spared not the ancient, whose age naturallie procures more reuerence. Whence we may gather how insupportable their wrath was against those which resisted them.

Verf. 7. And thou saydst, I shall be a Lady for euer, so that thou didst not see thy minde to these things, neither didst thou remember the latter end.

HERE he taxeth the pride of the Babylonians, who promised vnto themselves a perpetuall domination, and neuer thought of any falling from their greatnes by any inconuenience that might happen. See how the childre of this world are bewitched with their prosperitie, contemning all others in respect of themselves. But Isaiah scores such pride, and shewes, that there is nothing more abominable in the sight of God. To say, is taken heere to conclude in a mans selfe of a thing: which will better appeare anon. For the proud are not wont to vtter such words in publique before euery one, but these high conceits are boiling euermore within them, although they make no shew thereof outwardly. Now this is a follie insupportable, that men will so farre forget their owne fragilitie as thus to exempt themselves from the common ranke of others, for in so doing they thinke not of what mould themselves bee made of, to wit, dust and ashes. I grant the faithfull may be secure, in regard they are prepared with patience to expect and looke for the worst that may befall them, because they are couered vnder the wings of Gods protection, and yet they are not free from feares, in regard that there is no estate permanent in this world. The prophane then lift vp their crests against God, as oft as by their fond innaginations, they promise to themselves some rest in the midst of the continuall tempests wherewith this world is tossed.

Now to set forth the Babylonians furie, he adds that the length of time made them neuer the more moderate. It was no great wonder if vpon hot bloud they plaid the bedlens: but to exercise their crueltie from day to day, hauing got the conquest, and to insult ouer poore captiues without ceasing, was a thing vtterly insupportable, and more then barbarous. But all this flowed from pride (as Psal. 55. 19. I haue said:) for they thought of no changes: they imagined their mountaine stood so strong, as there was no remouing or altering of their firme estate. Heere is the second reason then wherefore the Lord brought Babylons Monarchy to the ground.

Neither dost thou remember the latter end thereof. Some thinke there is a change of the person heere, but without any good ground. For mine owne part, I take it he speaks of the end of Ierusalem: and this is the most receiued opinion. For the Lord often speaks of his Church, without mentioning her name, by way of excellencie: as wee also doe, when wee would expresse the vehement affection wee beare to some that wee loue dearly. But the wicked are ignorant of the end of the Church; neither doe they know wherefore the Lord corrects her: they make themselves merry with her mournings, because they would gladly behold her vtter subuersion; neuer thinking that God cares for her.

If any obiect that the Babylonians could not know it: yet that could not excuse thē. For they could not be ignorant what God it was whom the Israelites worshipped. Whilest they thus advanced themselves then aboue the poore Iewes, and handled them so cruelie, they therein persecuted God himselfe: euen as if of set purpose, they had determined to trample both him, and the couenant which hee had made with his pebble, vnder their feete.

Verf. 8. Therefore now heare thou that art giuen to pleasures, and dwellest carelesse: seee saith in her heart; I am, and none else: I shall not sit as a widow, neither shall I know the losse of children.

Babels intolerable pride.

HERE the Prophet threatens the Babylonians their ruin againe: wherein he vttereth very fit words to confirme the peoples hearts in good hope, lest being amazed at the prosperitie of the Chaldeans, they might happily faint, and be brought out of heart. And yet he speaks not to Babylon, as if he meant to forewarn her; but it is rather said for the consolation of the faithfull. Hee adds that she was drunken in pleasures: for howsoeuer prosperitie in it selfe is not to be condemned, in regard it is the good gift of God; yet wee are not ignorant how the children of this world are wont to abuse ic, by falling into riot and excess. Moreouer, hee now toucheth in a word, what it was which she said in her selfe in the former verse; to wit, a secret perswasion, whereby shee concluded that things should come thus and thus to passe. For so the proud are wont to doe, howsoeuer for modesties sake they dissemble and couer ic, because they would not that euery one should be priuie thereto.

I am, and there is none but I. What an insupportable insolencie call you this? she prefers her selfe aboue all the world. First, she thinks she stands by her owne power: secondly, she makes her selfe belecue, that the rest of the world are not worthy to be compared vwith her: thirdly, she promiseth her selfe a rest vchangeable. For the first, none can say truly I am, but God only, to whom it belongs properly to say, I am that I am: Exod. 3. 14. For by this tide he distinguisheth himselfe from all creatures. Thus then Babylon tooke from God the honour due vnto him, when shee imagined that shee stood by her owne power: and in aduancing her selfe thus, shee bid battell vnto Iehouah. Moreouer, she wronged the whole world, in abasing them thus vnder her feete. But these haughtie mindes first indeouour to begin with God, that so they may make him their enemy: and then they set themselves against men, that so they may leaue none exempt either in heauen nor earth, against whom they make not warre by their ouerweening. The third member, which contains the height of her pride, consists, in that she resolues vpon a state that cannot be moued; neuer thinking what little hold worldlings haue of things present: for often times, the higher men are aduanced, the lower is their fall.

None can say truly, I am, but God only.

Verf. 9. But these two things shall come to thee suddenly on a day, the losse of children, and widowhood: they shall come upon thee in their perfection, for the multitude of thy dininations, and for the great abundance of thine inchanters.

WHEREAS Babel thought her selfe exempt fro feare of al dangers, the Prophet here denounceth an extreme calamitie to befall her. She promised her selfe that she should neuer feele losse neither of husband nor children: on the contrary he shewes, that both these evils shall ouertake her: so as she shall be made a wofull spectacle for all to behold with contempt, in regard of her desolatensse. Hee adds that it shall come upon her in perfection: that is to say, there shall not one iot or tittle thereof faile: for she shall know the miserie of widowhood, with a witchesse; as they say. And thus there is a close opposition betwene the moderate corrections, in which some mitigation may be expected, and that horrible vengeance of God, which brings forth no other issue but a final desolation: for the more the wicked exalt themselves in their pride, the lower will the Lord abase them in his indignation and wrath.

The higher the proud exalt themselves, the lower the Lord will abase them.

Because of the multitude, &c.] Others translate; Of thy soothsayers. But mee thinks the word should rather note out the vice, then the persons. Some take the letter Beth, for a participle of rendring the cause, and expound it, Because: in which sense it is often found in the Scriptures: albeit wee may expound, that the Chaldeans shall finde no helpe nor succour in their deceivable diuinations, in which they gloried so much: and so it may be translated, Notwithstanding.

As if hee should say; Notwithstanding the multitude of thy diuiners and coniecturers, these things must needs befall Babylon. For he derides the confidence which they put in these fond prognosticators, through whom they thought to foresee things to come. But in regard he will insit longer upon this point in the 12. and 13. verses, therefore I willingly consent, that hee here recites one of the causes of their destruction; to wit, that they despised all dangers, upon the confidence they conceiued in these impostures and illusions.

Verf. 10. For thou hast trusted in thy wickednesse: thou hast said; None seeth mee. Thy wisdom and thy knowledge, they haue caused thee to rebell; and thou hast said in thine heart, I am, and none else.

HE explains that which he said in the former verse, though we may extend it further; to wit, that he taxeth the Chaldeans for their fraud, oppression, outrages, and wicked practises, whereby they so highly magnified themselves. For all these great kingdoms lightly become great dens of theues, as an arch-theefe which once raigned among them said: because they can neuer enlarge their territories; but by plucking from others by force and violence; therefore they driue the lawfull possessors out of their houses, that they may be Lords and Kings within themselves. Now he calles that wickednesse; which hee adornes afterwards with these goodly titles of wisdom and knowledge. For thus tyrants are wont to compass their deuices: they forget all equitie and right, that they may make the poore to fall in their nets. But the Lord detects and discouers their trecheries, so as euery one may see they dance but in a net. After Iob hath said, that God catcheth the wise in their wisdom: to shew what this wisdom is, he calles it craftinesse: Iob 5.13.

As touching that which by and by follows; namely, that Babylon said none saw her wickednesse: this sets forth with what freedom she committed the same. For seeing reuerence or shame holds men in some awe, he that feares not God as a witness of his behauiour, and thinks men notes nothing hee doth; such a one will not stick to practise any villanie. I grant that the most wicked are sometimes stung with the worme of an euill conscience: but they close vp their eyes, and plunge themselves into a benumbednes and deadnesse of conscience, as Moles within the ground. In a word, their consciences are seared vp with an hot yron. But about all we see how they scorne God with a desperate presumption, as if by their fetches they were able to dazzle his eyes. For when they purpose to beguile the simple, it sufficeth that they may doe it closely: as if belike, they could deceiue his eyes [who in all places beholds both the euill and the good: Prov. 15.3.] But they flatter themselves in their cunning in vaine; for the Lord will easilie plucke off their vizards. Let all men detest such wisdom then, by which men deceiue their owne soules, and pull inuicitable ruine upon their owne heads.

I am, and none else.] He againe repeats those blasphemies mentioned in the 9. verse: that all might know how much God abhors them; and how neere such are to endless perdition, that exalt themselves higher then is fit.

Verf. 11. Therefore shall euill come upon thee, and thou shalt not know the morning thereof: destruction shall fall upon thee, which thou shalt not be able to put away: destruction shall come upon thee suddenly, ere thou bee aware.

HE continues stil to scorne the vaine confidence of the Babylonians, who thought all things safe, by reason of the foresight they had touching the situation of the starres. He therefore denounceth against them, that which the Scriptures asseme to hang ouer the heads of all contemners of God. When they shall say, Peace and safetie, then shall sudden destruction come upon them: 1. Thef. 5.3. So as they shall not know in the morning, what shall befall them ere night. Now it appears sufficiently out of Dan. 5.30. how certainly these things came to passe.

Verf. 12. Stand now among thine Inchanters, and in the multitude of thy Soothsayers (with whom thou hast wearied thy selfe from thy youth) if so bee thou maiest haue profit, or if so be thou maiest haue strength.

THE Prophet speaks to the Chaldeans, as we are wont to speake to common ruffians or harlots, who will receiue no admonitions. Hold on your course still; you shall see in the end how the world will goe with you. So he saith; Thou shalt tell me one day what good thou hast gotten by thy soothsayers and coniecturers. By the word Stand, hee alludes to the gesture of diuiners, who stand still in a place, til some bird flie that way. Also, the Astrologers stand obseruing the course of the heauens, and will not misse the least point. If any had rather expound it Diuinenes, then Diuinations; I doe not much contradict him, becauſe the word Kabarim is ambiguous.

If thou mayſt be ſtrengthened:] As if he ſhould ſay, Thy diuiners can not turne away that deſtruction which is ready to fall vpon thine head, for he inſults ouer their peruerſe confidence: foretelling, that after they ſhall haue vſed all ſtrifts they can, yet they ſhall proue fruitleſſe and boodeſſe.

Verſ. 13. Thou art wearied in the multitude of thy counſels: let now the ^{}Aſtroglogers, the ſtarre-gazers, and Prognosticators ^{} ſtand vp, and ſaue thee from theſe things that ſhall come vpon thee.

* Or, binders of the heauiſt.

* Or, come forth.

A plainer deſcription of ſt. which before was deliuered obſcurely.

Now hee deſcribes that more plainly which he ſaid a little before ſomewhat obſcurely, to wit, that all the counſels which Babel tooke in times paſt ſhall turne to her deſtruction, in regard ſhe nourished within her a vaine hope wrought in her heart, from the perſwaſion of her wiſdome and power, as if nothing had bin able to haue done her hurt. He ſpeakes not of counſell in the ſingular number, but of counſels, and, of multitudes of them, to ſhew, that they boated and bragged in vaine, though they were neuer to witty and cunning to deceiue; for the fuller their counſels were of fine conſciences, and the more they were in number, the more ſhould they be vexed that were the deuifers of theſe.

This is a generall ſentence therefore againſt all ſuch, as truſting in the excellencie of their wit, build Caſtles in the aire, reſting vpon their owne providence, and inucent by all meanes how they may circumuent and catch the ſimple in their ginnes, for God will ſcatter all their plots, and ouerthrow their counſels, as he threatened before in Chap. 30. 1. Wo to them (ſaith he) that take counſell, but not of me; that couer with a couering, but not by my ſpirit. What is the reaſon then that men prosper not in their counſels? Surely becauſe they ſecke not at all vnto God, from whoſe mouth we ought to looke for all wiſdome and counſels in aſking it at his hands. The more ſtrick kind of perſons conſult then, the more trouble they put themſelues vnto, and the leſſe fruit they gaine thereby, as Salomon well ſaith. They riſe vp early, and goe to bed late, and eate the bread of careſulnes, traouailing for nothing, Pſal. 127. 2. for he ſpeakes there of the vnbeleeuers, who haue not learned to caſt their care vpon the Lord, but truſting in their owne induſtrie, enterpriſe many things raſhly and vndoubtedly. The Lord derides ſuch confidence, and cauſing it to become fruſtrate, in the end they ſeele by experience how little good they get by their plots and inuentions, and thus they are conſected for their boldnes, whileſt Gods childre inioy his bleſſings with quiet ſleepe, as it is further added in that Pſalm: that they are vtterlie exempt from all troubles, but becauſe firſt of all they vex not themſelues: ſecondly, they commend the iſſues of all their affaires with quiet minds to the bleſſing of God.

Iam. 1. 5.

Come forth] Heere we ſee what theſe counſellers are of whom the Prophet ſpeakes, to wit, thoſe diuiners who gat themſelues much credit among the people vnder the vaine title of wiſe men, as if forſooth they had knowne all things by beholding the ſtarres: but wee haue ſpoken before Chap. 44. 25. of the vanie that is in this Iudiciall Altronomie. If any obiect, that it was not in theſe diuiners to turne away imminent dangers: I anſwere, The Babylonians would ſo haue taken it, if they hauing foreſeene this deſtruction had forewarned them of it; but ſeing they foreſaw it not, therefore it followed that their profeſſion was vtterlie vaine. Many repleie, that the Prophet ſpeakes heere againſt the ignorance of the Arte, and not againſt the Arte it ſelfe: but ſuch are deceiued, for he ſpeakes here of the Chaldeans, who were the fathers of this Arte.

Judiciall Altronomie. Obiect. Anſ.

Now he addes very pleaſantly, that they bind the heaue[n]s: in regard they ſteek not to auerre that their dreames are as certaine as if they had the world tied in a ſtring, or as if they had the ſtarres claspd in their armes. Yet if any had rather tranſlate encharsters, the ſenſe will not be amiſſe, for the Hebrew word ſignifies both the one and the other. Now howſoever it be not euill in it ſelfe to conſider of the ſituation of the ſtarres, yet the Prophet notwithstanding ſaith, that ſuch as will foretell things to come, do paſſe the bounds of this ſcience. It alſo ſeemes, that to make theſe ſpeculators the more odious (in regard they did diſcredit all diuine predictions) he cloſely oppoſeth them to the true Prophets, for when wee fixe a fatall neceſſitie to the ſtarres, Gods iudgements muſt needs be put out of mind.

To conſider of the ſituation of the ſtarres, allowed to foretell things to come, there by condemned.

Verſ. 14. Behold, they ſhall be as ſtubble, the fire ſhall burne them, they ſhall not deliuer their owne liues from the power of the flame: there ſhall be no coales to warme at, nor light to ſit by.

Hee here inueyes more ſharply againſt theſe Aſtroglogians, who aggravated Babels pride by their vaine brags: for ſuch deceiuers are wont to bereaue men of all feare of God, by attributing all things to the diſpoſition of the ſtarres, ſo as they leaue nothing to Gods providence. See from whence the contempt of God and of all his threatnings ſprings, namely, from not attributing the puniſhments which he ſends to his hand, but to deſtinie, and to a meeting of ſecond cauſes, which wizards fondlie imagin in their owne braine. This is the reaſon why he takes vp the Chaldeans in ſuch a rigorous ſort, reſembling them vnto ſtubble ſeaſon fire, which is conſumed in an inſtant; for hee compares them not to wood with which one may make a fire of ſome continuance to warme himſelfe by, but to ſtubble, or hemp-ſtalks, to ſhew, that there is nothing of ſo ſhort continuance as ſuch kind of men.

A terrible denunciation againſt theſe Aſtroglogians.

Whence the contempt of God and all his threatnings ſprings

Verſ. 15. Thus ſhall they ſerue thee with

* Or, and with whom thou hast wearied thee, * euen thy merchants from thy youth: eery one shall wander to his owne quarters; none shall saue thee.

He now directs his denunciation against the Babylonians.

HAVING denounced destruction against these Siar-gazers, he returns to the Babylonians; and telles them that they are not to expect help from them, whence they thought to haue it: for they should but lose their time in resting vpon such counsels, after which they had so long and so painfully trauelled.
Now in speaking of such as traded with her,
he meanes those whom wee commonly call Pettifoggers: which is a similitude taken from Merchants who haue infinit shifts to beguile:
for there is no kinde of subtilie fetches, but they haue them at their fingers ends. Princes in regard of their greatnes traffique nor;
but they will vse such fellows to serue their owne turnes, and to traffique for them. Now howsoeuer this may bee vnderstood of all those that were in league with the Chaldeans, and had succoured them, yet the Prophet aimes specially at her Diuiners.

Where he addes, from thy youth: it is to aggrauate Babels iniquitie, who of old was poisoned with this fond opinion: so as it was become another nature vnto her.

Every one shall wander to his quarter.] Some thinke the Prophet speakes of the Astrologers flight, in regard eery one should bee constrained to shift for his owne life: and I will willingly agree to this exposition. But yet I also thinke that he alludes to the regions of heauen, which the Astrologers part and measure out, to draw their prognostications from thence. He derides their vaine brags then: as if he should say; They retire to their regions, but they shall wander in their imaginations, and shall find no place of refuge. If any had rather vnderstand it of their reuolt, from whom Babel looked for present helpe in time of need, I gain say him not.

THE XLVIII. CHAPTER.

Verf. 1. Heare ye this, O house of Iakob, which are called by the name of Israel, and are come out of the Waters of Iudab: which sweare by the name of the Lord, and make mention of the God of Israel; but not in truth nor in righteous-nesse.

then that Isaiab is so vehement: shewing that they much dishonoured the Lord, in that they would not rest vpon his truth.

He speakes to Israel; but so, as to Israel, degenerate: Israel in name, and not Israel in deed. Hee giues them not this title then, by way of honour; but rather to conuince them of their false confidence, in that they wrongfully vsurped this honourable title, and nothing at all answered the truth thereof in their practise. For why did God dignifie his seruant Iakob with this name, but because he shewed himselfe valorous and invincible in aduersitie? Which appears by that wrestling he had with God, who pitcheth the field as it were to make warre vpon vs, when hee exerciseth vs with diuers tribulations: Gen.
32.28. How could this title agree then to his successors, when they fainted and forsooke their confidence in the day of aduersitie? He afterwards reprocheth them, in that they nothing at all resembled the holy fathers, from whom they were descended.

By waters, vnder a figure, hee meanes the fountaine and spring from whence the Iewes issued: for I allow not of the Rabbines ridiculous glosse; who by the word waters, vnder-stand that sperm whereof children are in-gended, because it is moist and waterish: but it is a similitude very fitly drawne from waters which flow from a spring. Now hauing taxed them for bastard and degenerate children, he addes that they falsly cover the sama title vnder the cloke of pietie and religion; from the truth whereof, they were also re-uolted.

Now because an oath is a part of Gods worship, hee here puts it for the whole, vnder the
God great wrong in swearing by their Idols; so the true worshippers doe highly honour him

Now the Prophet directs his speech to the Iewes.

OW hee directs his speech to the Iewes, whom hee chiefly respected in the whole chapter before going.
For he was not sent to the Babylonians;
but so speakes to the,
that still his meaning is, the Iewes should make their profit of it; for whose good he was principally appointed, & ordained to that high and excellent calling.

He hath foretold the ruine of Babel then, to the end the Iewes might in patience and silence wait for their deliuerance: and yet, that the greatnesse and power of their enemies in the meane while, might not daunt nor discourage them. But resting securely vpon these promises, they might stand with invincible force against all temptations. Now in as much as the Iewes were somewhat obstinate, and would not easilie be brought to credit these promises: as also that Isaiab by the spirit of prophecie, wel foresaw how stiff necked and rebellious they would proue, euen in their captiuitie; he therefore reproues them thus sharply. Ezech. in Chap. 33. 31. shewes at large how great their incredulitie was, when they murmured against God and fel off the hooks, making no more account of these promises, then of so many fables. It is not without cause

Isaiab in this

him in ſwearing by his name, for thereby they proteſt to haue but one God, whoſe name they thus glorie in. But in this place the Prophet inueyes bitterly againſt the hypocrites, who had nothing in their mouths but the name of God, and toſſed it continually vpon the tip of their tongues, but in the meane while their hearts were farre off from him, as it is in Chap. 29. 13. for this cauſe he ſaith, But not in rightewiſneſſe, which word he takes heere for vprightneſſe and ſoundneſſe of heart, without which nothing we doe is acceptable before God. Or, truth and rightewiſneſſe may be taken for words of one ſignification, as if he ſhould ſay, There is nothing, but hypocriſie and vaine ſhewes in all your doings: you profeſſe your ſelues to be the ſeruants of the God of truth, and behold, you let all the world ſee that you are ſuſſed with diſloyaltie and lies.

Verſ. 2. For they are called of the booke Citie, and ſtay themſelues vpon the God of Iſrael, whoſe name is the Lord of hoſts.

HE holds himſelfe to the point ſtill, and in other words refutes their vaine ſhewes, for falſly they glorie to be citizens of the holy Citie, and yet they ſtuck not to pollute and deſile it with their leaud praſtiſes.

Ieruſalem was worthily reputed holy, in regard God had ſanctified it for the place of his abode, but it was prophaned with ſo many abuſes, that there was no holines at all in a manner left in it. In the 15, and 24. Pſalme we ſee who are worthe to be eſteemed the true citizens of Ieruſalem, but ſeeing the Iewes bluthed not to play faſt and looſe with God, they thought it enough to couer themſelues vnder this vaile, of the Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord.

Where he ſaith, they ſtayed vpon the God of Iſrael: hee ſpeakes not of a true confidence, but of a malepart boldneſſe. For as the faithfull ſtay and reſt vpon the Lord with their whole hearts, ſo hypocrites doe falſly maſke themſelues with his name, and are beſorted with a vaine and fond perſwaſion: they contemne all things, yea, they feare not impudencie to diſgorge this brag; Tuſh, God will ſurely help vs, he will neuer forſake his people, as if God were a foſterer of ſuch a prophane crew. To be ſhort, they caſt his lawes behind their backs, and tread them vnder their feet, and yet proteſt with high termes that God is the ſtay of their ſaluation. But to the end they ſhould not thinke to eſcape unpuniſhed for ſuch dallying, the Prophet affirms, that Gods maieſtie and glorie ſhall not whit be impeached, though hypocrites indueur to tranſigure him at their pleaſures. For in calling him the Lord of hoſts, he adds it as a threatening, to the end they might know that the God of Iſrael, vnder which title they vainely couered themſelues, was alſo the Lord of hoſts to puniſh ſuch hypocrites, and that could not indure to be thus mocked and triſted withall, Verſ. 3. I haue declared the former things of old, and they went out of my mouth, and I ſwered them: I did them ſuddenly, and they came to paſſe.

HE accuſeth the Iewes of ingratitude, in regard they diſtruſted GOD who had ſhewed them infinite teſtimonies of his goodneſſe to confirme them in a true and ſound faith, and thus he betraues them of all excuſe, in telling them that he hath declared former things. Now it ſeemes he ſpeakes not only of their redemption from their captiuitie, but of other benefiſts which the Lord had done for his people; as if he ſhould ſay, I began of old to tell you what ſhould enſue, neither haue I promiſed any thing which is not accompliſhed: but notwithstanding ſo many expetiences, you beleeue nothing that I ſay, no not the moſt certaine and the infallible truth.

Wee may alſo ſuppoſe, that the Prophet ſpake not only to thoſe which then liued, but likewiſe to ſuch as were afterwards to ſurniue them in the captiuitie, that when the calamitie ſhould befall them, they might call to minde what was foretold them, for God meant to haue this propheſie renowned, that during their exile, they might know how theſe things fell not out by chance, and therefore were to gather coſolation thence. Iſaiab reprehends them ſharply then, in regard that albeit they knew the truth of theſe propheſies by the euent, yet they would not acknowledge Gods hand in the, neither would they reſt vpon his promiſes. Had he not good cauſe then, thinke you, to rebuke them thus ſharply, and to condemne their obſtinacie? Yes, doubtleſſe. For they reſiſted that hand which offered them reliefe, and reſiſted his mercie: they limited the holy one of Iſrael, in that they would not beleeue that he ſhould euer be permitted them to returne home into Iuda. Nay, when the way was fo wide open before them, very few had any heart to returne into their countrie. Others ſuppoſed that Cyrus did but dallie with them, only permitting them to goe, that hauing gaged and ſounded the depth of their affections, he might take occaſion thereby to oppreſſe them, and deale the more ſeuereſly with them, nor conſidering that thoſe things which the Lord had foretold muſt of neceſſitie come to paſſe, though men and Angels ſhould withſtand the ſame.

I ſo vnderſtand theſe prediction then whereof the Prophet ſpeakes, that vnder them I alſo comprehend the ancient propheſies, in which the Lord had ſaid to Abraham, that his poſteritie ſhould be led captiue, and ſhould after be reſtored to their firſt libertie, Gen. 15. 13. And ſo we muſt come to other propheſies of this nature by degrees, which ſucceſſively followed one another, for each this propheſie was many times confirmed now in one age, and then in another. His meaning is then, that the Lord yet neuer foretold any thing, but the iſſue and euent answered vnto the beginning.

And yet neuer foretold any thing, but the euent was agreeable to the beginning.

Ier. 7.

Verf. 4. Because I knew that thou art obstinate, and thy necke is an yron sinew, and thy brow brasse.

The Jewes
obstinacie &
discovered.

The Lord here protests by his Prophet, that he spake of things to come, because of the peoples obstinacie. As if the Prophet should say; I have done more for you then stood with my calling. Not that he only bent his speech this way, for wee know that the principall drift of his sermons appertaines to the godly, who quietly obey, and willingly giue care. But Isaiah, that had to deale with a troward people, rightly affirms, that God would have vied a most soueraigne remedie, in ratifying his law by many prophecies, and that successiue one after another. For as hee had foretold nothing but the truth to their fathers, so he shewes that he continues still so to doe, that hereby hee might batter downe the obstinacie and rebellion of this people.

Hee saith their necke was as an yron sinew; because it could not be bowed. I grant that sinewes are stiff, yet they are bowable. But heree he saith, nothing will bow them, because they are as vntamed heifers. Afterwards hee adds, a brow of brasse, to set forth their impudencie. Two things holds vs in awe: first, teachableness, if we willingly submit our selues to the wholesome admonitions and instructions, which shall be rendered to vs. Secondly, if being ouertaken with anie sinne, wee be so touched with true remorse and blushing, that wee condemne the euill committed: where these two graces, humilitie and shamefastnesse are wanting, it is a signe of a desperate obstinacie. By two arguments the Prophet shewes that this people was giuen vp to all iniquitie, in that hee affirms they were become unteachable and shamelesse. Notwithstanding when the Lord cannot otherwise remedie such a mischief, yet he so farre supports our rebellion, as to admonish vs of things to come. And thus, transforming himselfe as it were, he is readie to trie all the waies hee can, that hee might allure vs vnto him, and set vs againe in the right way.

Verf. 5. Therefore I haue declared it vnto thee of old; before it came to passe I haue shewed it thee, lest thou shouldest say, Mine Idoll hath done them, and my earued Image and my molten Image hath commanded them.

AGaine he propounds the same thing vnto them, that the people being deliuered out of Babylon, might acknowledge that God himselfe had done it, lest they should attribute this redemption either to their Idols, or to fortune. If it bee asked wherefore the Lord makes mention of Idols, seeing the Jewes professed to worship but one God: I answer, they were already so corrupted by ouer much familiaritie with the Gentiles, and had fo defiled themselves with superstitions, that God was in a manner vtterly forgotten. Ezechiel complains of this in his eight Chapter, verf. 3. For there being carried in a vision into Ierusalem, hee saw the Sanctuarie of the Lord polluted with diuers idolatries and abominations. It is no maruell then if our Prophet put them in mind of God, the only author of all benefits, to the end they might acknowledge their redemption to be his worke.

Lest thou shouldest say.] Hee means that the Jewes should be inexcusable, if they did not confesse this benefit of being set free from bondage, to proceede from Gods hand. For that which was foretolde so long before came it came to passe, could not fall out, neither fortune nor chance. Hee ioines Gods prescience then with his power, shewing that he hath not only foretold these things, but hath also performed them. Heere then we may behold as in a glasse, the frowardnesse of our owne hearts, which are alwaies plotting how to bereaue the Lord of his deserued praise, euen as oft as he sends vs any helpe, or bestowes any benefit vpon vs, whereby he stretcheth out his hand to becken vs to himselfe. But the world resists God in this behauiour, euen with an high hand, euermore attributing that to creatures, which proceeds from God: as in the Papacie, where wee see they ascribe the benefits of God, vnto the Saints departed; as if he fate idle in heauen, or were fallen into a dead sleepe. It is needfull therefore that the light of Gods word should alwaies shine before vs, for the rectifying of our iudgements: for wee shall alwaies misse the marke in considering of Gods workes, vnlesse he giue light vnto our steps, by the lanterne of his blessed truth.

The same thing often befallles many at this day, which Isaiah bewailes touching his nation; to wit, that notwithstanding all admonitions, yet they cease not to forge Idols, which they adorne with Gods spoiles as it were. The Apostles, Peter and Iohn, in their life time, Act. 3. 12. cried with a loud voice, that they did no miracles by their own power or godlinesse: and yet we see how the Papists, whether they will or no; yea as it were to vex them, will burthen them now they are dead with infinit miracles. Well, howsoeuer God at this day foretelles vs not of things to come, yet shall the Law and the Gospell be of no lesse force to condemne out vnthankfulnessse, then if wee had seene the wonders (whercof God shewed himselfe the author) contained in the prophecies.

Verf. 6. *Thou hast heard; * behold all this. And will not yee declare it? I haue shewed thee new things * euen now, * and hid things which thou knewest not.*

BY this wee may better discern that the Prophet speaks of the captiuitie to come, and of the redemption that was to insue. Wherein he as well prouided for the good of the people of his owne time, as for theirs that were to succcede: that so, albeit those which then liued, made no right uſe thereof, yet at leaſt thoſe that ſeruiued them, being heereby admoniſhed, might amend. For it often falls out that the word moues not ſuch as are preſent: nay, they hauing heard it, goe their waies and contemne it: but their ſucceſſors on the contrary, receiue it with more reuerence.

Where he bids them behold: ſome thinke the Prophet ſo propounds the euent of the thing, as if he ſhould ſay; God neuer ſaid any thing, but the truth thereof hath maniſteſted it ſelfe. But I expound this word behold, or See, thus; Seeing the Lord hath ſpoken: it is thy dutie to thinke well of that he hath vttered, and to giue diligent attention thereto. Whence we may gather, that our dullneſſe is the cauſe why we ſuffer that which proceeds out of Gods mouth, to fall to the ground; and that many doe therefore couer themſelues with the vaile of ignorance in vaine. For the Lord ſpeakes diſtinctly enough, vttering to euery mans capacitie, as much as is needfull for them to know; if the auditors were but as attentiu as they ought, and did aduifedly conſider what is ſaid.

But the Lord requires ſomewhat more of his people beſides hearing and underſtanding of his word; to wit, that they ſhould publiſh the wonders whereof they haue had experience. And thus vndoubtedly hee inſtructs his ſeruants, vpon this condition, that being taught themſelues, they ſhould labour in the next place, to bring others to confeſſion of the ſame faith with them.

From now, is as much as if he had ſaid; Now this day in which the Lord foretells thee by my mouth, that which thou kneweſt not: for it cannot be apprehended nor forceſene by any humane coniecture.

Verſ. 7. They were created now, and not of old. And euer before this thou heardeſt them not, leſt thou ſhouldeſt ſay; Behold, I knew them.

The Prophet ſhewes that hee diſputes not about things knowne, or vnderſtood, by long uſe: ſiſt, to correct the pride which is naturally grafted in all men, (for they vſurpe vpon that which belongs to God onely:) and ſecondly, that none ſhould attribute the leaſt iot thereof vnto fortune, or to any ſecond cauſes whatſoeuer. Men uſe many ſhifts to deſtroye God of his glory, applying all their wits, to ſee how they may part among the creatures, that which is his proper right, that they may leaue vnto him no more but his naked and bare titles. Leſt the people ſhould imagin then, that they were either ouercome by the power of the Chaldeans, or ſet at libertie by chance, therefore the Prophet ſo oft repeats, that all is Gods worke.

Where hee affirms, that they heard not: ſome expound, that the people reiected Gods admonitions, and would not obey the wholeſome counſels which were giuen them. But I thinke he meant another thing, to wit, that that which could not be knowne by humane reaſon, of which alſo the Iewes were ignorant, was maniſteſted vnto them, that they could not well defraud the holy Ghoſt of his juſt praiſe. And this is euident enough by the ſcope of the text.

Verſ. 8. Yet thou heardeſt them not, neither diddeſt thou know them; neither yet was thine eare opened of old: for I knew that thou wouldeſt grieuouſly tranſgreſſe; therefore haue I called thee a tranſgreſſor from the wombe.

*Or, a rebell

The Prophets meaning is, that the Lord hath not inſiſted ſo long vpon this matter without cauſe, but hath been thus inſtant in exhorting the people, to the end they might acknowledge that they were chaſtiſed, and in the end deliuered from all their miſeries, by the immediate hand of God. For they (being of an obſtinate nature) might complaine, that it was needleſſe to trouble their heads with ſo many repetitions of one and the ſame thing. The Prophet answers, that it is no wonder, ſeeing he hath to deale with a ſort of tranſgreſſors: and thus in other words, he confirms that which he ſaid in the fourth verſe, touching the iron ſinew. The ſumme is, that God knowing the pueruertiſie of this people, omitted no good meanes to win them to his obedience: by how much the more then they haue been conuincid by ſufficient and infallible teſtimonies, ſo much the leſſe ſhall they be excuſable before him. Now hauing pulled off their vizard of holineſſe, to wit, their glorying in the name of Iſrael, (as in the firſt verſe) hee impoſeth vpon them a more proper name, and flatly calles them rebels.

A confirmation of that which they were taxed, verſe 4.

By the wombe, I vnderſtand not their firſt eſtate, by and by after they were ſeparated to be the Lords people; but from their deliuerance out of Egypt, which was as a birth of the Church: Exod. 12. 21. But how ſoever this people had had infinir experiences of Gods great goodneſſe towards them, yet they neuer ceaſed to behaue themſelues diſloyally againſt ſo good a benefactor; nor to wax more and more vntamed: ſo that hee had juſt cauſe to tax them with the titles of rebels and traitors.

Verſ. 9. For my names ſake will I deferre my wrath, and for my praiſe will I reſtaine it from thee, that I cut thee not off.

Hauing reproched the people touching the malice which flowed from the fathers to the children, and ſo to their nephewes: now hee ſhewes that they are ſtill vpheld by Gods mercy, whereas they were otherwiſe worthy to periſh an hundred times. The uſe of this admonition was double: for it was needfull that the faithfull ſhould be thus ſuſtained, leſt they ſhould haue fainted in their captiuitie, beſides, when they had leaue to returne,

The ſcope of the former reſpiciſſions maniſteſted in this verſe.

Neither the peoples captiuitie nor deliniance happened by chance, turne, it was fit they should be humbled to acknowledge that their deliuerance proceeded whollye from the meere grace and good will of God. And thus we see that the former reprehension tended to teach them, that it was the Lords hand that drew them out of Babylon as out of a graue, not for their deserts, for they were well worthie to haue bin vtterlie destroyed.

Vſe to vs.

In that God ſpares vs then at this day, and mittigates his corrections; in that he remits our offences, and hath any respect at all vnto vs, these things whollye proceed from his free grace. Why so? Because we should learne to attribute none of these benefits to the merits or satisfactions of men. Here then the distinction of ſophisters falles to the ground (as wee haue shewed in other places) touching the remitting of the punishment, which they affirme not to be free, because we must make satisfaction for the same vnto God. But our Prophet teacheth, that God freely remits it, and that only for his owne names sake. For he speakes here of the punishment which he might iustly inflict vpon the Iewes. He had very good cause then to haue consumed them, if he had not respected the maintenance of his owne glorie.

Distinction of the Sophisters.

Verſ. 10. Behold, I haue fined thee but not as silver: I haue chosen thee in the furnace of affliction.

God so corrects his Church, that in the meane while he thereby procures her saluation.

THE Lord shewes, that he vsed such measure in correcting his Church, that therewithall he provided for their saluation. In the former verse he said that he spared, or would spare them, because he respected his glorie: now he shewes that he hath chastised them in deed, yet so, that he did it for their good; for he corrected them, to fine them, but we are not wont to trie and fine that which we mind to cast away: seeing then he had none other end, it follows that he did it to procure their benefit and saluation thereby. Besides, he mentions this trially by way of preuention, lest any should object, that Gods loue little appeared in so sharp afflictions. The Prophet, I say, doth in fit season preuent such a conceit, & tells them, that God hath skill enough to correct his Church in mercie, and yet not vtterly to forsake her.

Moreouer, he adds that he hath not fined vs as silver, for then we should haue bin vtterly consumed. There is some puritie to be found in silver, but in vs there is nothing but dross: and were it not that the Lord made vs silver, we should be burnt to ashes, yea to nothing, euen as tow or flax. Corrections would draw from vs no puritie at all. The Lord in trying of vs then hath respect to our abilitie, lest he should passe measure, as Psal. 103. 13. 14. then he makes our chastisements profitable vnto vs by the worke of his owne spirit, which would otherwise proue mortall and deadly vnto vs.

To chuse, is taken here to discern: for we ordinarily make choice of that which we desire to keepe, as wee haue said Chap. 7. 15. where it is said, that Christ should eate butter and hony, till he had knowledge to chuse the good, and refuse the cuill. He shewes then by this word what difference there is betwene the stripes wherewith the faithfull are smitten, and those which the wicked are to sustaine, wherewith in deed they shall be overwhelmed. But howeouer the Lord tries and smites vs, yet are we acceptable in his sight, and he reserues still a fatherly affection towards vs, euen in the midst of our afflictions, and in the end he brings vs forth bright as silver, and so makes our sufferings to become a sacrifice of a sweet smelling fatour in his nostrils. To conclude, his meaning is, that God ceaseth not euen then to be good to his Church, whilest he seemes to consume her to nothing.

Verſ. 11. For mine owne sake, for mine owne sake will I do it: for how should my name be polluted? surely I will not giue my glorie vnto another.

HE repeats that which he said before, but he adds an interrogation, which the Hebrewes are wont to vs when they speake of absurdities, as heere, Can it be that my name should be prophaned? The second member, I will not giue my glorie &c. serues for an exposition of this interrogation. Isaiah then amplifies that which he spake before in few words, and flies an higher pitch in his stile; for it is not only a bare amplification of the former sentence, but rather a beautifying and adorning of it for ſ greater confirmation thereof. Now by these words he means that men as much as in them is, doe profane Gods name, and giue away his glorie vnto creatures; only the Lord in his admirable prouidence stops the course of this mischief, and keeps his glorie vnblemished. Although we by our fault then doe expose this glorie of God to contempt, yet will he preferre it as long as he shall continue our protector. Hence we gather a very sweet consolation, to wit, that the Lord ioines his owne glorie with our saluation, as we haue often shewed you before.

I will not giue. That is to say, I will not indure that any should rob me of my glorie: but this had fallen out if the people had bin vtterly consumed, then would they haue scorned the God of Israel; for the wicked were wont in the afflictions of the Saints to disgrace these blasphemies, Where is now their God? Psal. 79. 10. Psal. 42. 3. Moses also alledged, that the Lord withheld his hand from destroying the people for the same cause: I feare, saith the Lord, the surie of their aduersaries, lest they should wax proude, and lest they should say, our hie hand, and not the Lord hath done all this. Deut. 32. 27. And questionlesse, as oft as the Lord testifies the faithfull, by manifesting vnto them the signes of his heauie displeasure, the only remedie then left vs is this, that he will yet remember his owne couenant of grace made with vs in Christ, lest he should prostitute his holy name to the outrages and blasphemies of the wicked. Neither did the Prophet only stirre them vp hereby to giue thanks thanks to God, and to confeſſe that their proſperitie proceeded from his free mercie; but he did likewiſe put a forme of prayer into their mouths, and a ſhield of defence upon the armes of the faithfull, wherewith they might repulſe all the ſerie darts of the diuell.

WE haue told you heretofore why the Lord ſpeakes of his eternitie; namely, to teach vs that he is alwaies like himſelfe, and that we ſhould not meaſure his power by the narrow ſcantling of our owne ell. He here calles for audience, becauſe the onelic thing that deceiues vs, and makes vs wander after ſo many falſe opinions is, that we haue no cares to heare. Where he ſaith Iſrael is his called: he oppoſeth it ſerely againſt that reprobation, whereof hee ſpake in the beginning of the Chapter. For hee there ſhewed that the Iewes wrongfully vſurped this title, and falſly gloried therein; becauſe they ſhewed not themſelues to bee true Iſraelites in deed. But here he declares that Iſrael is his owne called: as if a father in rebuking his ſonne, ſhould in anger call him baſſard; and yet being appeaſed, ſhould afterward terme him his ſonne. Thus the Lord ſhewes that the Iewes were growne ſo degenerate, that hee had iuſt cauſe to reiect them: and yet albeit their vnworthineſſe of that great honour he ſhewed them, he ſtill reſpects his owne calling of them, which they could not abolish nor make vnfruitfull by their malice or vnthankfulneſſe.

The particule yes in this place, ſignifies a continuance: for the Prophet meanes nothing elſe but that God is alwaies like himſelfe: that is to ſay, he repents not, nor changeth not his mind, as men are wont to doe: and therefore he ſaith, that he is the firſt and the laſt. Now we haue alſo in theſe words to note, that Iſaiah ſpeakes not here of God his eternall eſſence, but applies this doctrine to our uſe: ſignifying that he will be ſuch a one to vs, as he hath euer been in times paſt: as alſo that we ſhould remember to ſeparate him from Idols; left our mindes being diſtracted by new inuentions, ſhould erre from his true feare.

Verſ. 13. Surely mine hand hath laid the foundations of the earth, and my right hand hath ſpanned the heauens: when I ſhall call them, they ſtand vp together.

As God is vnchangeable, ſo is he almightie.

THE Prophet ſhewes here more plainly, what his meaning was in the former verſ. For hauing ſaid that God is alwaies one, and neither changeth his affection nor will towards vs, hee now magnifies and extolles his power, in regard of his viſible workes which wee daily behold. And thus the Lord comming forth of his Sanctuarie, doth after a ſort manifeſt himſelfe familiarly vnto vs in them.

Whether wee turne the wordes, my right hand hath meaſured, or, hath ſuſtained; the ſenſe will be alwaies alike: neither is it needfull that we ſhould ſtand much about the interpretation of the word Tſapak. For the word To meaſure, notes out the admirable wiſdome of God, in that hee hath ſo aptly proportioned all the parts of this faire curtaine of the heauens, that it ſhould neither bee higher nor lower from the earth then it is: but that they conſtantly keep the order preſcribed them of God: ſo as in this round and ample vaiſtneſſe, wee can behold nothing deformed or miſplaced: If any had rather retain the word To uphold, it is alſo a commendation of Gods ſingular wiſdome and power, who beares vp this infinite weight, and great maſſe of the heauens in their continuall motion, and yet keepeſt from tottering or reeling from one ſide to another.

Note.

But the laſt member where hee ſaith, that all things ſtand vp together when hee calls them; hath ſome more difficultie in it. For it is either to be referred to the firſt creation of the world, or to the perpetuall gouernement thereof. If we refer it to the firſt creation, the preſent tence of the verb To appeare, ſhould be taken for the future tence, thus; As ſoone as the Lord commanded them to appeare, they forthwith obeyed, according to that in the 33. Pſalme, verſ. 9. He ſpake the word, and it was done. But if wee accept of this expoſition, the word together, which is added, ſeemes not to ſute well with the historic of the creation mentioned by Mofes. For the heauens and the earth were not created and adorned in an inſtant: Gen. 1. 2. Things were firſt intermingled and confuſed: then the Lord ſeparated them and placed them in order. But the ſolution is eaſie; for the Prophets meaning is nothing but this, that the Lord created all things by his onely will, and ſo formed heauen and earth, that they forthwith obeyed his commandement.

Obiect

And yet for mine owne part, I willingly extend this ſentence to the perpetuall gouernment of the world. As if he ſhould ſay; Heauen and earth obeyed Gods voice, and yeelded to his abſolute power: ſo as theſe creatures ſo farre remote one from another, willingly conſented and agreed together, with an incredible harmonic; neither more nor leſſe then if they were turned about with one wheele. And howſoever the ſpace bee wondrous great betwene earth and heauen about, yet the Lords voice was diſtinctly heard in euery part of them. There was no need of meſſengers then to teach or publiſh his will, but himſelfe in an inſtant executes the ſame at his pleaſure. Shall a man finde any Prince that can haue all his ſeruaunts by and by about him as his call? No, Gods power then is infinite, it is diſperſed far and neere, and extends it ſelfe to all parts of the world, as the Scriptures doe manifeſt, and ſaith by experience makes vs feele.

God permits the Lewes to bring in their allegations.

NO doubt but the Lord directs his speech to the Lewes, though hee vtters nothing heere which ought not to be knowne of all. But because the heathen & prophane people had no eares, therefore hee summons not them to heare. Wee know that the Lewes had this priuiledge aboue other nations, that God manifested himselfe to them: as it is said in the Psalm; God is knowne in Iudah, his name is great in Israel: Psal. 76. 1. and 147. 19, 20. And thus their selfestesse was the lesse excusable, in that they reiected their owne happinesse. For whence sprang this lightnesse and inclination to apostasie; but from the little or no regard they had of this inestimable treasure of the heauenly doctrine? They well deserued then to bee thus sharply chidden, and that he should thus closely tax them for their malicious and manifest conspiracies to darken the grace of God.

Now it seemes the Lord permits the Lewes to bring in their allegations which they had, as those who trusting to the goodnes of their cause, dare thus defie their aduerser partie: Bring in thy reasons, and if thou hast aie merall in thee, shew it. The Lord then prouokes them first, and bids them tell if they can; whether the gods of the Gentiles haue foretold any such things or no. And this may also be applied to the Soothsaiers and Prognosticators, who attributed to the mensclues the knowledge of things to come, which they could not foresee at all. And in the same sense he repeats that which follows in the verse insuing: I, euen I haue spoken it. The summe comes to this then, that the Lewes wauer, yea and fall; because they haue not well informed themselues how singular a grace of God it is, to learne from his sacred mouth, whatsoever is needfull to saluation. In the latter part of the verse, hee recites one particular; namely, God had foretold the end of their captiuitie in Babylon. True it is that he names not Cyrus as the dispenser of this benefite: but in speaking of some certaine personage well knowne, he saith, God hath chosen him to surpris Babel by force.

The word To loue, is not taken heere simply, but for some speciall respect: and therefore he restraines it to the happy issue of his voyage. And so we may say that Saul was beloved of God for some priuate end; namely, that hee might raigne for a time, and might haue the gift of prophetic: 1. Sam. 10. 10. But there is an higher matter to bee considered of touching the faithfull, whom God loues with an euerlasting loue: for hee will neuer suffer them to be separated from him. The Prophet then meant to say, that Cyrus shall vanquish Babylon, because he shall vndertake that businesse vnder Gods authoritie & leading; not of his owne motion, but after such a manner, as God thrusts forward the blind and ignorant, whether him listeth: or as hee vseth sometimes to serue his turne of men against their wills. For Cyrus is not praised for his voluntary obedience, but it is rather indeed an extolling of Gods singular prouidence, by which hee disposeth of all sorts of men to performe his will, and to execute his decrees.

By arme, (vnder a figure familiar amongst the Prophets) we may vnderstand his uorke. And thus the speech will runne better; Hee shall execute his will against Babylon, and his uorke against the Chaldeans. And wee know that the Prophets are wont to ioine Gods counsell and worke together. Now he priuilegeth the Lewes for their ingratitude, in that they would not belecue Gods promises, though hee pointed out the thing before them with his finger, and spake far otherwise then did the Chaplaines of the false gods. To conclude, hee meant to informe the Lewes, that the surprizing of Babel by the hand of Cyrus, shall bee a uorke of the Lord, vnder whose direction all things shall bee so carried, that the Church in the end shall be deliuered.

Verf. 15. I, euen I haue spoken it, and I haue called him: I haue brought him, and his way shall prosper.

HEE brings the Lewes againe to the prophesies, and attributes this honour vnto God, that hauing in fit time reuealed the thing, hee takes away all doubtings. Afterwards hee addes, that whatsoever was foretold, shall be confirmed. And thus there is a double force in the doubling of these words, I, euen I. As if he should say, it is none but the God of Israel that hath spoken these things which are hidden, and to come: secondly, he being true, and one that neuer deceiues, he will vndoubtedly accomplish whatsoever he hath promised. Naiah then propounds two ends here vnto himselfe: First, that the poore captiues should wait for their deliuerance: secondly, being deliuered, that they should acknowledge God to be the author of so excellent a benefite, and not to ascribe it either to the arme of flesh, or to haphazard. Now he shewes that Cyrus his good successe in his enterprises, shall proceede from Gods calling of him. Not that he was worthy of so great a fauour, neither that he obtained it by his own industry and power; but in regard that the Lord vied him as his seruant to deliuer his people. For where he called him his blowen in the former verse, and heere saith that he hath called and brought him; I told you erewhile that it is not to bee referred to that loue of God, whereby he adopts vs for his children, by calling vs to himselfe. Cyrus was neither loued nor called in this kind: for howsoeuer he were indued with excellent vertues, yet was he tainted with very odious crimes, as ambition, desire of swaying Kingdomes, couetousnesse, crueltie, and many other vices: for his wofull and vnhappy end manifested sufficientlie what what he was. The Prophets meaning is then, that God will be favourable to Cyrus in proſpering him outwardly: not to adopt, nor to ſhew him that fauor which he only communicates to liis choſen. The cauſe muſt be conſidered then for which he giues him theſe titles, to wit, that he will vie his miniſterie for the deliuerance of his Church, as we haue ſaid before.

Verſ. 16. Come neere vnto me: heare you this: I haue not ſpoken it in ſecret from the beginning: from the time that the thing was. * I was there, and now the Lord God and his Spirit hath ſent me.

HE directs his ſpeech againe to the Iewes, and in commanding them to draw neere, he meetes them halfe way (as it were) gently to receiue them, and yet he couertlie taxeth their reuolt, ſhewing, that they were vnfit to entertaine wholeſome doctrine, vnleſſe they departed from their errors. Surely it was a detestable fault in them to be ſo farre ſeparated from God, with whom they ought to haue bin ſo neerely conioined: but their ſeparation conſiſted not ſo much in diſtance of place, as in the want of conſent in affections: our approching then conſiſts in a readines to heare, hauing ſubdued our owne carnall reaſon. But this is a worke of his owne grace; for who will be readie to direct his heart vnto God, if himſelfe draw him not?

I haue not ſpoken in ſecret.] The expoſitors expound this place diuerſlie. Some applie it to Ieſus Chriſt, whereas Iſaiab had no ſuch meaning: and it ſtands vs in hand to auoid all wreſted and conſtrained interpretations. Others referre it to the Prophet himſelfe: but this ſutes as badly as the former, for this ſpeech can agree to no man. I thinke then that Iſaiab brings in God ſpeaking, and blaming of the people touching their ingratitude, in that from the beginning, that is to ſay, ſince the day he began firſt to manifeſt himſelfe to their fathers, he hath not ſpoken in ſecret, nor obſcurely. Whence it follows, that the ignorance which is in them muſt needs be imputed to their owne malice, in regard they did wittinglie ſhut their eyes againſt the cleare light.

When he ſaith from the time, &c. It ſignifies, that he performed that by his power which he had ſpoken with his mouth. Hee rightlie affirms then that he gaue ſignes of his preſence, when in perſonning all things, he not only ratified the prophesies by the effects, but alſo to reach, y^e thoſe things which men imagin to fall out by chance, were gouerned and directed by Gods ſpeciall prouidence. In a word, he puts them in minde of Gods ancient promiſes, and of the accompliſhment of them, to ſhew, that God will be alwaies like himſelfe. Thoſe which ſay that Iſaiab ſhall be preſent in ſpirit when the Lord ſhall bring againe his Zion, offer violence to the Prophets words, and are euery way ſarre wide from his intention.

And now the Lord and his Spirit, &c.] Heere Iſaiab ſpeakes of himſelfe indeed, and applies this ſentence to the former doctrine, proceſſing therein that God who ſpake from the beginning, ſpeakes alſo by him, ſo as they were to giue no leſſe credit to that which he now pronounced by the mouth of his ſeruante, then if himſelfe were there preſent in his owne perſon. Hence we may gather a profitable doctrine, to wit, that we are carefullie to thinke vpon all the miracles which the Lord hath done, to confirme our hearts in his truth. For it is no ſmall confirmation of our faith that the Lord hath had a remnant from the beginning, to whom he hath maniſteſted himſelfe, inſtructing them, and making them aſſured promiſes, which he hath fulfilled, ſo as there neuer failed nor fell to the ground the leaſt iot of that which he hath ſpoken. For what hath he pronounced with his mouth that he hath not fulfilled with his hand in due and conuenient ſeaſon? As oft then as wee be ſurprized with doubtings, wee muſt haue our recourſe to theſe and the like examples, and thence conlude thus with our ſelues, God hath of old bin wont to keepe touch with his ſeruants: it is not ſince yeſterday that he hath begun to ſpeake: neither did he euer hold his people in ſuſpence by ambiguous or doubtful ſpeeches, but hath alwaies ſpoken perſpicuouſlie and plainly. Thus the Prophet ſhewes he vtters nothing from his owne braine, but was ſent of God, who hath ſhewed himſelfe iuſt in all liis ſayings.

He mentions the Spirit, not to note out a thing diuers from God, ſeeing he is of one eſſence with him. For in one eſſence of God we acknowledge three perſons: but he names the Spirit, becauſe he is the only teacher and conductor of all the Prophets. S. Paul ſaith, That none can ſay Ieſus is the Lord, but by the holy Ghoſt: and by and by after he ſaith, that the gifts of God are diuers, and yet it is one and the ſame ſpirit, which works all things in all, 1. Cor. 12. 3. 4. In this place alſo we haue a manifeſt prooſe of the diuinitie of the Holy Ghoſt, becauſe he ſent the Prophets, which appertaines to none but God, euen as Ambaſſadors are ſent by the only authoritie of the Prince. Seeing the holy Ghoſt ſent the Prophets then, and directs and giues them power and efficacy, he muſt needs be God. Beſides, hence we gather, that we are to abandon all ſuch as haue not this direction of Gods ſpirit, notwithstanding they crake, they be ſent of God: I meane this troupe of popiſh wolues, who glorie in the titles of Paſtors, and Teachers, and impudentlie brag of their ſendings, ſeeing they are whollie deſtitute not only of the holy ſpirit, but of his doctrine. For in vaine doe they boaſt that they are inſtigated and ſent of God, when they are vtterlie vnſuſhred of thoſe gifts and graces of the holy ghoſt which are fit for the execution of ſuch a charge. Moreouer, it is too great a ſauaines in them to pretend the illumination of the ſpirit of Chriſt, ſeeing themſelues are whollie void of faith, and knows not a B ſtro a battledore in the doctrine of ſaluation. There are horned Biſhops which ſit in the chaire, and God wot the moſt part of them as ignorant as beaſts: nay, there is not tenne of them among among three hundred who haue so much as tasted the first rudiments of pietie, Is any thing more absurd, then to say that such an assemble is governed by the holy Ghost?

Verf. 17. Thies saith the Lord thy redeemer the holy one of Israel, I am the Lord thy God which teach thee to profit, and leade thee by the way which thou shouldst goe.*

*Or, teaching thee profitable things, leading thee, &c.

This and the foure verses following, depend one vpon another.

I loine this verse with the foure verses ensuing, because they tend all to one end, in which God promiseth deliuerance to his people, yet in such wise, that he first shewes how they were brought into bondage by their owne fault, and that to the end they should not murmure in obiecing that it had bin better for them to remaine in the countrie, if the Lord meant to help them then to be brought back after they were led away. For a Physition deserues not praise so much for curing a disease, as for hindring and preventing it. The Prophet prevents them, and saith, that this hapned through the peoples fault, for they might haue escaped this iudgement if they had but diligentlie attended vnto Gods commandements, but they would not, therefore such an obstinacie well deserued such a punishment: for it was not the Lords fault that the affaires of the people succeeded ill, but they had reiected his fauor which was tendred vnto them, and yet he saith, the Lord will ouercome this rebellion by his great goodnes, because he is not minded his people should perish, though for a time he afflicts them.

Teaching thee profitable things.] By this he meanes, that Gods doctrine is such, that it is able to preferre his people in good state if they would constantlie follow the rules therein prescribed. Now the Lord takes paines to teach vs, not to procure his owne good, but ours. For what good are we able to do him? By his holy doctrine then he prouides for euey one of our saluations, that being rightly instructed by it, we might reape the fruit thereof, which is, an happie and blessed life. But when by our vnthankfulness we reiect the benefit freely offred, what remains but that we should worthily perish? Isaiah then had iust cause to reproch the Iewes, that if they had not wittingly deprived themselves of the fruit of this doctrine, they should haue bin ignorant of nothing that tended to their profit and saluation.

Now if it bee affirmed touching the Law, that by it God taught his people profitable things: how much more may it be said of the Gospell, by which whatsoever is profitable and necessary, is fully reuealed vnto vs? And here also we see how execrable y^e blasphemies of the Papists are, who auer, that the reading of the Scripture is dangerous and hurtfull, that they may disswade the Iaicie (as they call them) from meddling therewith. What? Dare they indeed giue the lie to God, who by the mouth of his holy Prophet pronounceth that they are profitable? See 2. Tim. 3.16.

Papists giue God the lie.

Whether is it better we should beleeeue God or them? Let them disgorge their blasphemies then as long as they will with an who-rish forehead, yet ought not we to restraints the studie of them: for wee shall perceiue that Isaiah hath spoken the truth, if wee reade the holy Scriptures with feare and reuerence.

Guiding thy way.] These wordes shew yet more cleerly, the profitableness before mentioned. For the Prophets meaning is, that the way of saluation is set open to vs, if we heare God speaking; because he is ready to leade vs through the whole course of our life, if we will submit our selues to his lore. And thus Moses protests that hee set before the people life and death: Deut. 30.19. Also, This is the way, walke in it. For the rule of a godly life is contained in the Law, the which cannot deceiue. I command thee this day, saith Moses, that thou loue the Lord thy God, that thou walke in his waies, and that thou keepe his commandements, ordinances, & iudgements, that thou maiest liue, that the Lord may blesse thee in the land whither thou goest to possesse it: Deut. 30.16. The summe is, that such as are teachable, shall neuer bee destitute of light, vnderstanding, nor counsell.

Verf. 18. Oh that thou haddest hearkened to my commandements! Then had thy prosperitie been as the flood, and thy righteousnesse as the wanes of the sea.

*Or, peace.

IN regard the people might haue complained of their being led captiue, the Prophet to prevent such grudging, shewes the cause why it came to passe; namely, because they reiected the doctrine of saluation, without reaping any benefit by it. No doubt but he had respect to Moses his song, where there are almost the same words repeated. Oh that they were wise, then they would consider their latter end! Deut. 32.29. The particle Li heere, signifies a wish, Oh that, or, Would to God. But the Lord not onely complains that the Iewes lightly esteemed the good and profitable things offerd them: but he also bewails their miserie, as a father doth that of his children. For he takes no pleasure in afflicting vs, neither would he shew himselfe seuer, but that wee constrain him thereto by our frowardnesse. God then is heere moued vth compassion in beholding their ruin, who had rather wittingly perish, then to be saued: for he was ready to haue dealt all sorts of blessings liberally amongst them, if they by their owne rebellion, had not repelled and put him backe.

A preuentio.

God takes no pleasure in our afflictions.

Now it were preposterous to enter into Gods secret counsell, and to inquire wherefore himselfe made not the externall word effectually vpon them, by the worke of his holie Spirit. For the question is not heere of his power; but mans rebellion is heere onely reproued, that they may be left without excuse. Truly as oft as God calles vs to himselfe by his word, there is a full and absolute felicitie

Who art thou that disputest with God?

Wee haue told you before that the word peace, ſignifies all happy euents. It is then as if he had ſaid; Thou haſteſt had abundance of all good things, and ſhouldeſt neuer neede to haue feared any change, in regard the bleſſing of God vpon his ſeruants is a fountaine that can neuer bee drawne drie. As touching the word iniſtice, ioined vnto peace, wee may take it for that which wee commonly call thy right. But I had rather vnderſtand it of a Commonwealthe well gouerned, where all things are ruled orderly and well: as if hee ſhould ſay; All things had prospered and had gone well with thee, and thou haſt had a flouriſhing State.

Hee worthily ioines ſuch an eſtate with peace: for if good gouernement bee ouerthrowne, all goes out of frame; for it is not poſſible to inioy a right peace, where iniſtice is wanting: that is to ſay, vnleſſe matters of ſtate be managed with equitie and vprightneſſe. If we loue peace then, let vs forthwith be inſtant with the Lord to obtaine this happie eſtate, which is bleſſed of him. Some deſcant heere vpon ſpirituall iniſtice, and vpon remiſſion of finnes: but they miſſe the marke, and ſtray quite from our Prophets meaning, who ſpeakes plainly and ſimply.

Verſ. 19. Thy ſeede alſo had been as the ſand, and the fruit of thy bodie like the grauell thereof: his name ſhould not haue been cut off nor deſtroyed before me.

This alſo appertaines to an happy eſtate, namely, when poſteritie is increaſed: for by their helpe, the aged are comforted and reſreſhed in their labours, and the aduerſaries reſpelled. The Pſalmiſt, you know, compares ſuch children to arrowes ſhot from the hand of a mighty man, and pronounceth him bleſſed that hath his quier full of them: Pſal. 127.5, that is to ſay; who hath many ſuch children. In mentioning of ſand, it ſeemes he had reſpect to the promiſe made to Abraham; I will multiply thy ſeede as the ſtarrs of the heauen, and as the ſand by the ſea ſhore: Gen. 22.17. Afterwards he repeats the ſame thing in diuers words, according to the cuſtome of the Hebrewes, calling children and grauell, that which he had called ſeede and ſand. In a word, hee ſhewes that the people hindered God, from cauſing them to feele and taſte the fruit of his promiſe.

Afterwards, coming to the interruption of this grace, hee plainly reprocheth them; namely, that themſelues had ſought their owne ruine and deſtruction; whereas God had multiplied them wonderfully by his power. For by the word name, hee vnderſtands the lawful eſtate of the people, which had alwaies flouriſhed, if the courſe of Gods bleſſing had not been ſtopped.

And whereas he ſaith the people were aboliſhed, this muſt bee vnderſtood in reſpect of the land of Canaan, out of which Gods people being vomited, Leuit. 18.25.28, they ſeemed to bee baniſhed the houſe of their father. For the Temple whereof the Iewes were deſtroyed, was a ſacrament vnto them of Gods preſence, and the land it ſelfe was a pledge vnto them of their heauenly inheritance. Being exiled thence then, they were in a manner excommunicated, and caſt out of Gods preſence, and had had no teſtimonies of his ſuccour left them, had not theſe promiſes relieued their miſeries. Now it is for vs to conſider well of this their miſerie: for being baniſhed farre from their Country, they had neither Temple, ſacrifices, nor aſſemblies. Now thoſe amongst whom at this day there is no forme of a Church, vſe of Sacraments, nor preaching of the word, they ought to thinke that God hath in a manner caſt them out of his preſence. Let them learne then to call and cry inſtantlie with ardent praier, that God would plant his Church in their coaſts.

Verſ. 20. Go ye out of Babel; flee ye from the Chaldeans with the voice of ioy: tell and declare this; ſhew it forth to the ends of the earth: ſay ye; The Lord hath redeemed his ſervant Iakob.

This is the ſecond part of this complaint, by which the Lord proteſts that hee will deliuer his people, how vnworthy or ingratefull ſouer they be. For hauing told the Iewes that hee hath performed the office of a good teacher towards them, and that they would not lend their eares; ſo as by their owne default they were ſent into captiuitie: now in ſetting before them his inuincible patience, he addes, that he will not ceaſe to aſſiſt them, till hee hath drawne them out of their bondage. Hee commands them then to goe out of Babel where they were captiues. Whence we gather, that how iuſt cauſe ſouer God hath to complaine of vs, yet by his inextimable goodneſſe, he is ready to ſuſtaine our miſeries, and to aid thoſe that are vnworthy; yea ſuch as haue ſtrowardly reſiſted his grace.

That which is added touching the voice of ioy, ſerues to confirme this deliuerance: for hee meant to adde this confirmation to that promiſe, which was vtterly incredible. That he might remooue all doubtings then, hee highly commends this benefit.

Declare. He expreſſeth the greatnes of that confidence which hee meant to erect in the hearts of the Iewes: for we are wont to publiſh that plainly and openly, whereof we haue good experience and aſſurance: but if we doubt, we dare ſcarſe open our mouths, but remaine mute and dumbe. Now Iſaiab ſpeaks of a thing to come with that reſolution, as if it were alreadie come to paſſe, that the people might in their hearts conceiue the more ſure and certaine confidence: and therefore hee vſeth this commandement, which hath much more efficacie in it, and moued their mindes more then if hee had told it them in bare termes.

Verſ. 21. And they weare not thir- X x 4 ſtice:

He led them through the wilderness: he caused the waters to flow out of the rock for them: for he clave the rock, and the waters gushed out.

Isaiah puts the in mind of their first passage out of Egypt, to correct their infidelitie.

Fables invented by the Iewes.

In regard the Iewes saw no way open to returne home, and that there lay betwene many great and vast wildernesses, the Prophet alledgeth Gods power, from whence he propounds some examples, that so the Iewes might be dispossest of all feare & doubtings. He would haue them then to consider, whether God was not sufficientlie able to deliuer their fathers out of Egypts bondage, and to bring them through horrible deserts, in which notwithstanding he furnished them with viands, water, and all other necessaries, Exod. 16. and 17. If he were able to do the one, why should they misdoubt his abilitie concerning the other? The Iewes here according to their maner coine fond fables, and inuent ridiculous miracles which were neuer done nor heard of. And this they doe, not so much of ignorance, as of impudencie, whereby they giue themselves libertie to publish any thing that may carrie a faire shew, though it be vterlie senselesse. But our Prophets meaning was to put them in mind of that first passage out of Egypt, and of the miracles which the Lord then did. For whē the Prophets meane to extoll Gods works, it is their custome (as we haue often shewed) to mention this first deliuerance. And thus Dauid setting forth the victories he obtained, saith, that the mountains trembled and shooke, the ayre cleft in twaine, and the Lord appeared from heauen, which he neuer saw notwithstanding, Psa. 18. but he therein follows the description of the deliuerance out of Egypt, to shew, that God was the author of it, and that he also fortified and guided him to overcome his enemies, and that his power was no lesse manifest in this victorie, then in those wonderfull signes and miracles.

And thus the Prophet now would haue the people consider of these wonders of old, to correct their incredulitie, & not to be tempted with diffidence: for it was the custome of Gods faithfull seruants to cast their eyes alwaies vpon this deliuerance, that by the remembrance of so great a benefit, they might confirme euery mans heart in faith and hope. We haue also told you before that they were from age to age to feele the fruit of this redemption, that the Lord by a continuall progresse might still be acknowledged the protector of that people whom he had so redeemed at the first. Our Prophets meaning is then, that the Lord will easly overcome all impediments, and will set open the passages that are shut, will furnish them with water in abundance that they faint not for thirst, for he will worke for them as in old time he did for their fathers, when extraordinarie he caused waters to issue out of the rock, they making their account to perish for thirst. Exod. 17.6. and therefore there was no cause why they should call the assurance of their returne into question, if they would but only meditate of that power of God wherof themselves by experience had tasted.

Verf. 22. There is no peace, saith the Lord, to the wicked.

Some inclose these words, saith the Lord, in a parenthesis; but we may keep this order in the text, to wit, That the Lord denies the peace to the wicked, wherof they are unworthy. A prevention in regard of hypocrites.

Now this is expressly added, lest the hypocrites according to their wont, should conceiue any vaine hope in these promises, for he saith, they belong nothing at all to such, that he might whollie exclude them from all hope of saluation. But it seemes Iesaiah respected some other thing, for in regard the greatest part of the people overflowed in impietie, and reiected this benefit, many infirme and weak ones might stagger, and be offended at their multitudes: for at this day there are many weak consciences troubled, when they see the doctrine of saluation contemned by the greater part of the world, Seeing then there were many in great danger of stumbling, he turnes their minds from this temptation, that the multitude of the wicked and vnbeleuers (who reiected Gods grace, and this happie estate mentioned verse 18. 19.) might not trouble them, but rather without gazing vpon such kinde of persons, might comfortably embrace and possesse this benefit themselves.

THE XLIX. CHAPTER.

Verf. 1. Heare ye me, o Iles, and hearken ye people from farre, The Lord hath called me from the womb, and made mention of my name from my mothers belly.

From the treatise of their redemption, he comes to speake of Christ.

Auing discoursed of the redemption to come, hee now descends to speake of Christ, vnder whose leading, the people were deliuered from the captiuitie of Babylō, as in old time they were out of Egypt. Now it was needfull the former prophetic should be confirmed with this present doctrine: for they would hardly haue bin drawne to expect this redemption from the Lord, had he not set Christ Iesus before their eyes, in whom all Gods promises are Yea, and Amen, 2. Cor. 1. 20. who only also is able to cheere vp and refresh the fainting spirits: for wee are no lesse to looke for temporall saluation from him, then that which is eternall. Adde, that the Prophets are wont in speaking of the restoration of ſ Church euer to mention Christ, not only because he is the minister thereof, but also because his adoption is grounded vpon him. found judgement do confeſſe, that this place is to be vnderſtood of Chriſt only, & that all haue not kept the order which we haue noted. For the Prophet ſpeakes not of Chriſt at the firſt brunt, but vnder this preface, for wiſh- out it the people could looke for no redemption, in regard their reconciliation with God depended thereupon. Now that it might haue the greater efficacy, he brings in Chriſt himſelfe ſpeaking, not only to the Iewes, but to the nations beyond the ſeas, and to the ſtrangers farre remote from the common-wealth of Iſrael, who are ſpecified heere vnder this word ies, as we haue ſhewed in another place.

The Lord hath called me from the womb. Some aſke what this vocation is? for ſeeing we were elected in Chriſt before the foundations of the world, Ephes. 1. 4. it follows that he is before vs, becauſe he is the beginning and foundation of our election. It ſeemes the Prophet therefore hath ſpoken leſſe then the thing imports, in affirming that Chriſt was called from the womb, ſeeing he was before all time. But the answer to this is eaſie, for the queſtion is not heere touching Gods eternal election, whereby we are adopted for his children, but only of the eſtabliſhing and conſecration of Chriſt ordained to this office, that wee ſhould not thinke he intruded himſelfe thereinto at random. For no man takes this honor to himſelfe, but he that is called of God, as was Aaron, Heb. 5. 4. 5. So Chriſt tooke not vpon himſelfe the office of the high Prieſt, but he which advanced him to it, ſaid, Thou art my ſonne, this day haue I begotten thee, Pſal. 2. 7.

Moreouer, the Prophet defines not of the beginning of time, as if God had then begun to call him from the womb, but it is as if he ſhould haue ſaid, Before I came out of my mothers womb, God ordeined me to this office, as S. Paul ſaith, That God had choſen him from his mothers womb, Gal. 1. 15. though notwithstanding he had elected him alſo ſo before the foundations of the world. It is alſo ſaid of Jeremiah, Before I formed thee, I knew thee, Iere. 1. 5. In a word, the ſumme is, that Chriſt tooke our fleſh by the ordinance of his Father, that he might fulfill the worke of our Redemption vnto which he was deſtinated. Hereunto appertaines the laſt member of the verſe, for the mentioning of his name, ſignifies as much as a familiar knowledge of him. He ſeparates him then from out of the common ranke of men, becauſe he is choſen to a rare and ſingular piece of ſeruiſe.

Verſ. 2. And hee hath made my mouth like a ſharpe ſword: vnder the ſhadow of his hand hath hee hid mee, and made me a choſen ſhaft, and hid me in his quiuier.

HE ſeeth two ſimilitudes; to wit, the ſword and quiuier, to expreſſe the efficacy of his doctrine: and then he ſhewes to what end he was called and dignified with ſo noble a title, namely, that he might teach: for that is it he ſignifies by the word mouth. Chriſt then was not ſent of the Father to conquer by force of armes, as earthly Princes doe; but his conquest is obtained by the ſword of the Spirit; that is to ſay, by preaching the whole counſell of God, in which hee will be fought and knowne: for he is not to be found elſewhere. Now hee ſhewes what the force of his mouth is; that is to ſay, of the doctrine which proceeds out of his mouth, when he compares it to a ſharpe ſword. For the word of God is liuely in operation, and more piercing then all two edged ſwords: for it divides betweene the ſoule and the ſpirit, and the ioints and the marrow; and is a diſcerner of all the intents of the heart: Heb. 4. 12. He compares it alſo to an arrow, becauſe it not onely hits neere, but alſo a ſarre off, and comes euen to them who ſeeme far remote.

But after Iſaiah hath ſpoken of the efficacy of his doctrine, hee adds, that God will maintaine both Chriſt and it by his power: ſo as nothing ſhall be able to hinder the courſe thereof. For as ſoone as Chriſt opens his mouth; that is to ſay, as ſoone as the Goſpell begins to be ſincerely preached, the aduerſaries band themſelves on all ſides, and infinite enemies conſpire how to ſuppreſſe it. So as this efficacy whereof he ſpeakes, and which hee attributes to his doctrine, would not ſtand, vnleſſe Gods protection and ſhadow came betweene, to abandon the aduerſaries.

But he ſpeakes not heere onely of Chriſt, but of the whole body of his Church. I grant we muſt beginne at the head, but ſo that thence we muſt defend to the members, and apply it to all the Miniſters of the word; which is heere ſpoken of Chriſt, in regard this efficacy of the word is giuen them, that their voice ſhould not beate the aire in vaine, but that it ſhould enter to the pricking of the heart: Acts 2. 37. The Lord alſo cauſeth the trump of his word to ſound, not in one place onely, but to the vtmoſt ends of the earth. Laſtly, in regard the Lord faithfully keeps them vnder the ſhadow of his hand, though they be ſubiect to many reproches, and that Satan on euery ſide aſſailes them; yet they breake not off their courſe, which experience might well haue taught vs. For there is not one of vs, but we had long ſince been vtterly rooted out by the ſecret and open practiſes of our enemies, had not the Lord been our defence. And truly I cannot but wonder, that any one Miniſter of the Goſpell ſhould ſtand ſafe, in the miſt of ſo many & ſo great dangers. But the cauſe is, the Lord keeps them vnder the ſhadow of his hand, and hides them as ſhafts in his quiuier, that they ſhould not be hurt nor deſtroyed of their enemies.

Verſ. 3. And he ſaid vnto me; Thou art my ſeruant Iſrael; for I will be glorious in thee.

THIS verſe muſt be ioined with the former. For heereby it appeares, that he ſpeakes not of one man, but of the whole people: which the expoſitors haue not conſidered: for this place neither ought to be reſtrained by force of armes, but by the ſword of the Spirit.

Pſal. 45. 5.

God will maintaine both Chriſt and his doctrine. The Goſpell no ſooner preached, but it is oppoſed by enemies.

A miracle that a faithful Miniſter ſhould ſtand.

This verſe depends vpon the former.

Chriſt thruſt not himſelfe into his office without a calling.

Two ſimilitudes expreſſing the efficacy of his doctrine.

Chriſt conquer not to Christs person, nor yet referred to Israel onely. But we must heere obserue the course of the Scriptures. When the body of the Church is mentioned, then Christ is placed in the middle, as it were, who vnder him comprehends the children of God. Wee heare what Saint Paul saith; The promises were made to Abraham, and to his seede. He saith not to his seede, as speaking of many: and to thy seed, which is Christ; Gal. 3. 16. For he comprehends not the multitude of children which came of Abraham according to the flesh, seeing all were not partakers of this blessing, Ishmael was reiected; Gal. 4. 30. Elsaw was hated; Mal. 1. 3. and many others were cut off.

When the people were deliuered from vnder the captiuitie of Babylon, the number of those which returned were very small; for the greatest part reiected this excellent benefit of God. Where was this seede then? Euen in Christ who is the head, and vnder him contains the rest of the members: for in him, by an inseparable band, is the whole seed assembled and knit together in one. And in the same sense that Ishaiab hath noted out Christ vnder the name of Israel, so also hath he comprehended the whole body, as the members vnder the head. Which is no new thing. For when Paul speakes of that vnion which is betweene Christ and the Church, hauing set it forth vnder the similitude of a mans body, he addes, euen so is Christ: 1. Cor. 12. 12. And in this place the name of Christ is attributed vnto Israel: that is to say, to the whole companie of the faithfull, which are vnited to Christ as the members to the head. Afterwards, the Lord giues this title to the Church, which is the spouse of Christ, as the wife is dignified with the name and title of her husband.

Now he calleth Israel his seruant: that is to say, his handmaid the Church; for shee is the pillar and ground of truth, because hee hath committed his word vnto her, as a pledge to keepe; that by her ministerie it may be published thorowout the world: 1. Tim. 3. 15. In the latter part of the verse, hee shewes what the end of this ministry is, and why those that preach the Gospell are called thereunto of God; to wit, that they make his glory by all meanes to shine cleere in respect of themselves, and to aduance it also among others. Which Christ teacheth in the Gospell, saying; Father, glorifie thy Sonne, that thy Sonne also may glorifie thee: Iohn 17. 1. But doth not God shew vs a singular fauour, when he appoints vs, base and vile wretches, to be procurers of glory vnto him? Oh! let this quicken vs vp to obey him carefully, and to imploy our selues faithfully in his seruice. And yet the Prophet meant to expresse somewhat more, namely, that howsoeuer Satan and his imps lay all the plots they can, yet Gods power shall ouerthrow them all: so as Christ shall triumph notwithstanding gloriouslie, and God his maiestic shall shine most bright in his Gospell still.

Verf. 4. And I said; I haue labored in vaine, I haue spent my strength in vaine and for nothing: but my iudgement is with the Lord, and my worke with my God.

The Prophet addes a grieuous complaint heere, in the name of the Church; yet so, as he begins at the head, as we haue said before. Christ then with his members complains, that he hath in a manner vtterly lost his labour: for after hee hath greatly praised and commended the efficacy of that word which issueth out of his mouth, verf. 2. now he shewes that it hath done little or no good notwithstanding: so as this glory which God requires to shine in the ministerie of his word, appeares very little. For Christ saith, he hath laboured in vaine, because men wil not repent, nor turne to God by the preaching of the heavenly doctrine. It was to great purpose that the Prophet added this. First, to teach vs that this fruit whereof he spake, shall not alwaies appeare in the eyes of men; for otherwise we should be readie to call the truth of Gods word into question; and would also be brought to doubt, whether this doctrine, which is reiected of so many with such impudencie, were the word of God or no. Secondly, that we might bend all our forces with inuincible constancie to performe our duties, and to commend the successe of all our labours vnto the blessing of God, who will not suffer it to be fruitlesse in the end. And thus the Prophet meant to meeete with a dangerous temptation, that by the rebellions of men, we should not faint in the middle of our course. And truly Christ so begins here vnto a complaint, that he yet comforts himselfe by and by, knowing that nothing shall be able to direct him from the performance of his charge. And the text would be somewhat plainer, if wee reade it thus: Although my seruante be in vaine, and that I haue spent my selfe without fruit; yet it sufficeth that my worke is approued of my God. Vnto which appertaines that which is added; but my iudgement is before the Lord.

Albeit then the fruit of our labours appeare not before vs, yet must it content vs that they are done before that God whom we serue, and to whom our seruice is agreeable. For Christ exhorts and encourageth the faithfull Ministers to fight valiantly, vntill they haue ouercome this temptation: so as, setting light by the malice of men, they cheerfully goe on still in their calling, without suffering discontentments or carelesnesse to hindre their course. If the Lord haue a purpose then to try our faith and patience, so farre as that it shall seeme we labour in vaine, yet must wee satisfie our selues with the testimonie of a good conscience. But if this consolation take no place in vs, then is it certaine that we are not carried forwards with a pure affection: neither doe wee serue God in this function, but the world and our owne ambition. Wherefore it is needfull for vs to haue our recourse to this sentence in such temptations.

In the meane while wee may note that the whole world, is accused heere of ingratitude, both both by Chriſt and his Church: who ſo complain before God, that notwithstanding they expoſtulate with the world, in regard the doctrine of the Goſpelly which is ſo effectuall in it ſelfe, workeſ no better effects in the inhabitants thereof. But this fault wholly reſteth in mens vnthankfulneſſe and obſtinacie, who reiect the grace which God offers them, and chuſe wittingly to periſh, rather then to be ſaued. They therefore which charge the Goſpell of vnfruitfulneſſe, and wickedly belie and ſlander the bleſſed truth, ſcoffing at our labours as being idle and vnprofitable, and babble that it is the cauſe of conuulſions, and ſets men together by the eares; let them now come forth and accuſe the Sonne of God: let them conſider well with whom they haue to doe, and what profit their impudencie will bring them in the end. For men are in all the fault, in that themſelues make fruſtrate and void, the preaching thereof, as much as in them lieth. But the faithfull Miniſters who are vexed in their ſoules to ſee men periſh ſo miſerably by their owne fault, who alſo waſt and kill themſelues with ſorrow when they haue triall of ſuch an obſtinacie, ought notwithstanding to arme themſelues with this conſolation, and not to be ſo diſquieted as to caſt down the bucklers, though at ſometimes it ſeemes beſt for them ſo to do. Let them rather meditate that Chriſt is paraker with them in this their burthen: for he ſpeakes not only of himſelfe, as we haue ſaid before, but of all his faithfull ſeruants, who here in all their names, as a carefull protector, enters their accusation for them. Let them therefore reſt themſelues vpon his defence, and leaue the maintenance of their cauſe vnto him. Let them make their appeale (as Paul doth) to the day of the Lord, 1. Cor. 4. 4. and neuer ſtand to breake their braines about the lies, ſlanders, and outrages of their enemies; for as their iudgement is before the Lord, though the vnthankfull world diſgrace them an hundred times, ſo will God be the faithfull approuer and rewarder of their ſeruice. Contrariwiſe, let the wicked, prophane contemners of the word, and all hypocrites tremble; for when Chriſt ſhall accuſe them, all their defences will not be worth a ruſh, neither ſhall any be able to abſolue them from his iuſt ſentence of condemnation. We muſt looke to it then that the fruit which ſhould come of the Goſpell, periſh not by our fault, for God manifeſts his glorie, that we may be made the diſciples of Ieſus Chriſt, and bring forth much fruit, Iohn 15. 8.

Verſ. 5. And now ſaith the Lord that formed me from the womb to be his ſervant, that I may bring Iacob againe to him (though Iſrael be not gathered) yet ſhall I be glorious in the eyes of the Lord, and my God ſhall be my ſtrength.

HE confirms the former ſentence, and ſets before vs a more full conſolation by a repetition of the duties of his calling, and the teſtimonic of his owne conſcience. And this ought to be a ſtrong tower for vs to run vnto; for nothing diſquiets nor troubles our minds more, then when we be vnertaine vnder whoſe leading it is that we enterpriſe this or that. Iſaiab therefore brings vs to the certentie of our vocation. Firſt then the faithfull Miniſters ſay with Chriſt their Prince and Captaine, that God hath formed them, in regard he alwaies endues them whom he ſends and calles to the office of teaching, with neceſſarie gifts, for they draw all the graces wherewith they are furniſhed from the only fountaine of grace the holy Ghoſt. Thus then in the firſt place God hath ſet his ſeale vpon Chriſt: next vnto him, vpon all his Miniſters, whom according to their meaſure he fits and prepares, that they may haue wherewithall to execute their charge. Therewithall he ſets downe the end of their calling: for the Apoſtles and teachers of the Church are ordeined and ſent to gather the ſcattered flock of Chriſt together, that all his ſheep may be folded vnder him into one bodie. For there is a wofull ſcattering in the world, but in Jeſus Chriſt all are gathered in, as S. Paul ſaith Ephes. 1. 10. other band of vnitie there is none.

As touching the word created, or formed, many triſtle in deſcantiſing about the humane nature of Chriſt, which indeed was created: for it is more cleare then the Sunne at noone day that this creation is to be referred to his office.

Though Iſrael be not called.] The Iewes reade this by an interrogation, Shall I not bring Iacob againe, and ſhall not Iſrael be gathered? But this reading is conſtrained, neither do they conſider of the Prophets meaning, but as much as in them is, corrupt the text, that they might couer the ſhame of their nation. Others expound, He ſhall not be loſt: or, He ſhall not periſh. For the verb Aſick ſignifies, to truſt vp; for, they gather together that which is to be kept, or to be conſumed: and ſo when we ſpeake of one that is dead, we commonly ſay, he is truſted vp.

This ſenſe agrees not ill, I am ſent, that Iſrael periſh not, but I had rather follow another expoſition. Although all Iſrael be not gathered, yet ſhall I be glorified: for in this place we may ſee that two contraries are oppoſed one to another. If the Miniſters of the word be ordeined to ſaue men, it is a great honor to them when many are brought to ſaluation; if not, it makes them abaſhed and aſhamed: for S. Paul calles thoſe whom he gained to Chriſt, his ioy, and his crowne, Phil. 4. 1. 1. Theſſ. 2. 19. Contrariwiſe if men periſh, we beare ſhame and diſgrace by it, in regard it ſeemes God curſeth our labors, in that he vouchſafeth vs not that honor, as to be the aduancers of his kingdome by our Miniſtrie. Notwithſtanding our Prophet affirms, that ſuch as haue ſerued Chriſt in this office, ſhall be glorified: for he comprehends the members vnder the head (as we haue ſtice ſaid before.)

Will not Iſrael be gathered then? yet ſhall Chriſtes Miniſtrie loſe no lot of glorie thereby. For if men be not gathered, the burthen will lie whollie vpon their owne necks. In which which sense Saint Paul affirms, that although the preaching of the Gospell be a saour of death vnto death in the reprobates, yet euen that is a sweete saour vnto God, who by the meanes of preaching, will make the wicked the more without excuse. God is glorified double, if the effect answer his desire. But, if the Ministers of the word, hauing omitted no part of their duties, shall (to their grieue and smart I confesse) see no fruits to come of their labours; yet let them not repent that they haue heerein pleased God, whose approbation is heere opposed to all the peruerse iudgements of the world. As if the Prophet should say; Be it that men abhorre you, and charge you with many faults; yet must you swallow this, and much more too with patience: for God hath another end, and will crowne your patience with glorie and honour, which the wicked so proudly and scornfullie despise.

He addes in the same sense, that it ought to suffice them that God is their strength, to the end that neither the multitude nor power of their enemies doe astonish them, seeing in their God consists their strength.

Verf. 6. And hee said; It is a small thing that thou shouldest be my seruant, to raise up the tribes of Iacob, and to restore the desolations of Israel: I will also giue thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou maiest bee my saluation to the end of the world.

HEE goes on further and shewes, that the labours of Christ and of all his seruants, shall be glorious indeede; not onely before God, but also before men. For howsoeuer they be esteemed vaine and vsfruitfull in the beginning, yet in the end the Lord will cause them to bring forth fruit contrary to all the opinions of men. It was enough that in the first place God approved their labours: but in that he now addes, that the same shall not proue vnprofitable, no nor in regard of men: this ought to bee as a spur to put life into them, and much to comfort their comfortlesse spirits. Whence it followes, that wee ought to hope that the issue of that which is committed into Gods hands, shall be good, because the blessing which hee promiseth to our labours, shall in the end appeare; so farre forth, as he sees it expedient, and for his own glory.

Besides, he addes that this labour shall not onely fructifie among the people of Israel, but among the Gentiles also: which (blessed be our God) is now come to passe. Nay, more then that; for seeing the Iewes with an obstinate hardnesse, became so gracelesse as to reject Christ; the Gentiles are now grafted into their stocke. And thus Christ is appointed of God to be a light vnto the Gentiles, and his saluation manifested to the vmost parts of the world.

This consolation then was very necessarie, as well for the Prophets, as the Apostles: Acts

13.47. For they had but too wofull and daillie experience more and more, of the frowardnesse of the Iewes. In which regard, they might haue called the certainty of these promises into question, seeing so little fruit of them appeared. But vnderstanding that Christ was also sent to the Gentiles, they were not so vnwilling to goe thorow thicke and thin, as otherwise they would haue been. I grant it was a thing incredible; nay, prodigious: but thus the Lord is wont to worke far about the reach of mans reason. Saint Paul calles it a secret hidden, Eph. 3.9. from the foundations of the world, and is yet vnknowne to the very Angels: 1. Pet. 1.12. further forth then it is manifested vnto them by the Church: Eph. 3.10. Thus then, although the Iewes were once the onelie wise people vnder heauen, Deuteronomie, 4.6. yet they are heere matched with the Gentiles: neither is there anie more distinction now betweene them before God: Rom. 10.12.

The Rabbines reade this verse by an interrogation; Is it a small thing? As if he should say; that it is enough, and that nothing greater nor further is to be required. But they doe maliciously peruert the natie sense of the Prophets words; and make themselues belieue, forsooth, that they shall one day become Lords ouer the Gentiles, and raigne ouer all nations. But the true meaning is, that this shall be an excellent and glorious worke in it selfe, when God shall restore and reestablish the Tribes of Israel. And yet this worke shall be much more glorious, in respect that he will ioine the Gentiles to the Iewes, that they may with one mouth and heart, professe the name of one Christ. He speaks not in this place of the reiectiō of the ancient people then; but of the increasing of the Church, when Iewes and Gentiles shall be made one body. I grant that after the Iewes fell away from the couenant of grace, the Gentiles supplied their emtie place: so as their reuolt was the cause that those which were strangers before, were now made children by adoption. But heere (as in many other places) Isaiah foretelles that the Church shall haue a large extent, when the Gentiles shall be receiued in, and made one body with the Iewes.

Now albeit the word light, may be vnderstood ioy and felicitie, yet I doubt not but the Prophet respects the doctrine of the Gospell, which giues light to our vnderstandings, and pulles vs out of darknesse. Hee also saith, that this light which Christ shall bring, shall be saluation: for as Christ is called the way, the truth, and the life, because we obtaine life by the knowledge of the truth: so in this place he is called the light and saluation of the Gentiles, because hee enlightens our mindes by the doctrine of the light of the Gospell, that he may bring vs to saluation. Let vs obserue these two things then: first, that our eies are opened by Christs doctrine: secondlie, that wee which were dead, shall be raised vp to life; or rather, that life is restored vnto vs.

Verſ. 7. Thus ſaith the Lord the redeemer of Iſrael, and his holy one, to him that is deſpiſed * in ſoule, to a nation that is abhorred, to a ſervant of rulers; Kings ſhall ſee and ariſe, and Princes ſhall worſhip, becauſe of the Lord that is faithfull: and the holy one of Iſrael which hath choſen thee.

Iſaiab goes on with the ſame argument, that the people might conceiue a better hope in their munde, touching their eſtate & condition, when they ſhould ſee themſelues afflicted vnder to many tedious calamities. And the rather to confirme his ſaying, hee calles God, who promiſed to performe theſe things, the redeemer of Iſrael. But may ſome obiect; How can theſe things ſtand together; that God ſhould bee called the redeemer of his people, whom he ſuffered to be overwhelmed with miſeries? For where was this redemption and ſanctification become, ſeeing the people had iuſt cauſe to complaine of their povertie and calamities? I anſwere, that the memorie of that which had fallen out long before, is heere propounded and ſet before them, to miniſter vnto them matter of hope and truſt. For the Iewes being preſſed with deſpaire, the Prophet preuenteth it by aduertizing them, that that God which in times paſt had deliuered their fathers, is now no leſſe almighty then he was then. Albeit then for a time, hee withdraw the light of his countenance from them, to exerciſe and trie their faith, yet hee commands them not to caſt away their confidence, becauſe their certaine and full redemption is in his hands: and yet they were heerein to looke farre aboue the reach of humane reaſon. This therefore is a very excellent place: out of which we may gather how carefully we ought to beleaue God when he ſpeakes, albeit hee doe not forthwith accompliſh that which hee hath promiſed, but ſuffers vs to languiſh vnder afflictions a long time.

Some translate the word Veru, Contemned; others, Contemptible; which I approoue of. But this augments the miſerie of the people, when the Prophet calles them deſpiſed * in ſoule: for many are deſpiſed of others, who notwithstanding are worthy of honour, in regard of the graces wherewith they be indued: or being pulled vp with pride, ceaſe not with an higher contempt, to treade vnder their feete the contempt of others. But Iſaiab affirms, that the Iewes are not more deſpiſed and contemptible in the eies of others, then they are in their owne. Thus then hee notes out an exceeding ignominie and low eſtate; therewithall comprehending the affliction of the Spirit: to teach them that God ſhall ceuſe in his time to ſuccour them, when they ſhall be thoroughly humbled.

I ſee no reaſon why ſome haue changed the number in the word nation, ſeeing the Prophet ſeeth the ſingular number Go; it being certaine that hee addreſſeth his ſpeech to the poſteritie of Abraham. Afterwards hee calls them ſervants of rulers: as if he ſhould ſay, that mightie tyrants oppreſſed them: for by the word Moschelim, hee means thoſe that haue ſo much force and power, that it is an hard matter to eſcape their hands.

When he ſaith that Kings ſhall ſee, he ſpeaks in high and glorious termes of the deliuerie of his people; but in the meane while, hee is contented they ſhould bee tried in the furnace, to proue their faith and patience; for where were the triall of faith, if God ſhould forthwith giue that which he hath promiſed, (as we ſaid before.)

In the word Princes, there is a repetition much vſed among the Hebrewes. But we will ſpeake it thus ſhortly; Kings and Princes ſhall ſee, they ſhall ariſe, and bow downe.

By the verbe To bow downe, he expounds what he meant by ariſing: for wee riſe vp to giue honour. The ſumme is, that the greateſt Princes of the world ſhall bee awakened to confeſſe that the reſtauration of the Church is an excellent worke of God, and worthy of reſpect and reuerence.

Becauſe the holy one of Iſrael who hath choſen thee, is faithfull. See the cauſe of this great aſtoniſhment, touching the honour which Princes ſhall performe to God; to wit, becauſe they ſhall acknowledge his faithfullneſſe and conſtance in his promiſes. For the Lord would not be acknowledged faithfull from a bare and naked imagination, but from experience it ſelfe; to wit, in the preſeruation and protection of his people, whom hee hath adopted. Hence therefore let vs learne not to iudge of Gods promiſes by our present eſtate, but by his truth and faithfullneſſe: ſo as when we perceiue nothing but death and the graue to compaſſe vs round, yet wee may remember this ſentence, by which the Lord calles vs to him, euen the vile and contemp-
2. Cor. 7. 6;

God would not be held to be faithfull by a bare imagination, but from good experience.

Hence alſo wee are to conſider how glorious and admirable a worke the deliuerance of the Church is, in that it conſtrains Kings, be they neuer ſo proud (thinking nothing), be it neuer ſo excellent, worthy to behold them) to behold, to admire, yea and to honour and reuerence the Lord, whether they will or no. This new and extraordinary worke then, is heere greatly recommended vnto vs in this behalfe. For not to mention ancient hiſtories; by what means hath God deliuered vs out of that woſull tyrannie of Antichriſt? Truly wee were as thoſe that dreame, as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, Pſal. 126. 1. eſpecially if wee doe but ſeriously conſider of the thing it ſelfe: for the Lord hath wrought a miracle in bringing vs to doe homage vnto Chriſt.

In the end of the verſe, the Prophet repeates that which hee touched before; to wit, that this people were ſet a part to bee the Lords. But in election we muſt ſeeke the beginning of ſanctification: for the people were the holy inheritance, becauſe God had vouchſafed of his meere grace to chuſe them. Iſaiab. then means that ſecret will of God, from whence ſanctification flowes; that Iſrael might not thinke they were choſen for their own deſerts.

As if he had said, The Lord which hath elect thee shewes, that thou art so indeed by the effects. As we ought then to acknowledge Gods faithfulness and truth in our saluation, to must we attribute this saluation only to our free election. And yet it behoues euery one that will partake in so great a benefit, to be a portion of the true Israel, that is to say, of the Church, out of which there is neither truth nor saluation to be found.

V. vs. 8. Thus saith the Lord; in an acceptable time haue I heard thee, and in a day of saluation haue I saccored thee, and will preserue thee, and giue thee for a covenant of the people, that thou mayst raise vp the earth, and obtaine the inheritance of the desolate heritage.

From this verse we may yet more clearly gather that which we haue handled in the beginning of this Chapter, to wit, that the Prophet so speaks of the whole body of the Church, that he begins at the head thereof. And this, as I haue said, ought to be well obserued, for the expositors haue bauked it, and yet without it we shall not be able to make these verses to cohere. S. Paul plainly shewes this, in applying this very sentence to the whole Church, 2. Cor. 6.2. But yet that which follows, I will giue thee for a covenant of the people, sutes to none but Christ only. How shall we make these things agree then? To wit, if we shall consider that Christ is not so much his owne as ours, For he was not borne; neither died he, nor rose againe for himselfe. He was sent for the saluation of his people. He seeks nothing at our hands: for he stands in neede of nothing. Thus then, God makes his promises to y^e whole Church: and Christ, who is as it were the suretie or pledge betweene both, receiues these promises, and procures nothing to himselfe by them, but altogether for the Churches behoofe, for whose saluation he was sent. He speaks not then of Christ, as singling him out by himselfe, but as of one that is ioined and made one with his Church for euer. It is an inestimable fauor then which the father shewes vs when he beares his sonne for our sakes: yea, that he directs his speech to his sonne whilest he is speaking of our saluation. For by this we may perceiue how neere the coniunction is betweene Christ and vs. He represents our person. He hath nothing which is not ours: and is heard of his Father in respect of vs.

with Christ
againe noted.

By the acceptable time, the Prophet meant to keepe the faithfull within their bounds, that they should not be too eager in their desires, but might patientlie wait the Lords leisure euen till his prefixed time were come, in which sense S. Paul calles the coming of Christ the fulnes of time, Gal. 4.4. He would haue them then to depend vpon the will of God, and in the meane while to beare his wrath with a quiet and meeke spirit. Moreover, albeit the Prophet meant to exhort the faithfull to patience, and to learne to subdue their wills to the will of God, yet he therewithall teacheth, that our saluation flows from the free fauor of God. For his receiving of vs is the foundation of our saluation. And saluation is the effect of this grace. We are salued because we please God; not for our owne merits, but of his meere goodnes. And yet withall he shewes that our saluation is certaine, in that we haue so sure a pledge of Gods grace: for in assuring vs of his fauor, he remoues all doubtings.

This place serues to set forth the commendation of Gods word, without which, there is no enquiring after saluation: as also S. Paul saith, 2. Cor. 6.3. where he shewes that Gods fauor is plainly manifested vnto vs in the preaching of the Gospell, so as that which is written heere touching the day of saluation, is thereby accomplished. Thirdly, the Prophet admonisheth vs, that when the Gospell is sent to any place, there God discouers a sure pledge of his fauor, and good will. For is it not euident that he pities vs, when he so graciously allures vs to himselfe? He might let vs erre in darknes without this light, but it comes vnto vs only from his free grace, that so he might remoue all doubtings and stumbling blocks out of our way. Let vs lay it vp in our hearts then, to wit, that this mercie whollie depends vpon God his free will.

No saluation without the word.

Where God sends his Gospell,
there he discouers a sure pledge of his fauor.

If it be asked, why the Lord hath illuminated vs rather in this time then in any other: We must answer, because it was Gods good pleasure so to haue it. For S. Paul in the place before alledged, brings vs to this point. Behold now the acceptable time, behold now the day of saluation; which place will help vs much to vnderstand the Prophets meaning, that so wee may learne to ioine Gods free accepting of vs, and our saluation together. A pledge of which fauor we haue in the preaching of the Gospell.

Quest.

Ans.

We are also to note that these prophesies were not to be restrained to a certaine time, seeing they appertaine to the Church to the worlds end. For when wee begin at the redemption out of Babylon, we must come forward til the redemption purchased by Christ, of which the first deliuerance was but as it were a preparatiue. And seeing there are still certain reliques of this seruitude remaining, it must continue to the worlds end, at which time all things shall be restored, and set againe into their perfect estate.

These prophesies appertaine to the use of the Church to the worlds end. Three redemptions.

I will giue thee for a covenant.] Hence it appeeres, that whatsoeuer was said of Christ before, was not promised in regard of his owne particular profit, but for our sakes. For he was ordained to be the pledge of the covenant, because the Iewes by their finnes made a diuorce between God and them, who had contracted a perpetuall covenant with them. The renning of this covenant then, which was broken or disannulled, is attributed vnto Christ. In which regard, that which Paul saith, Ephes. 2. 14. and 17. is to be noted: Christ is our peace which hath made of both one, and hath preached peace as well to those that are far off, as to those that are neere. But our Prophet had a speciall eie to that horrible diffi-

patron, which none but Chriſt alone was able to remedie. It remains now then, that we apply this grace to our uſe : wee (I ſay) who were ſtrangers and enemies, far from the covenant of grace in reſpect of the Iewes, before the Goſpell was publiſhed ; without which, we had neuer taſted of our reconciliation with him. Chriſt then was given for a covenant to the people, becauſe there was no other way to come vnto God, but through him. The Iewes were then the onely people; but the partition wall being broken downe, all, both Iewes and Gentiles haue bin gathered into one body.

That thou ſhouldeſt raiſe vp the earth, which was deſolate. For the returne of the people was as a new creation: as wee haue ſhewed elſewhere. Vnto which alſo appertaines the words of the Prophet, that we might know there is nothing but a wofull waſte and ſcattering in the world : for Chriſt is ſent to raiſe vp that which was deſtroied and fallen to the earth. If all things ſtood in a perfect ſtate, then he ſhould be ſent to vs in vaine. Wee ought therefore diligently to conſider of our eſtate : for in our ſelues we are ſtrangers from God, and excluded from all hope of ſaluation; but Chriſt hath raiſed vs vp together with him, and hath reconciled vs to his heavenly Father. Beſides, Iſaiah addes the benefits which we obtaine by Chriſt, after wee be reconciled.

Verſ. 9. That thou maielt ſay to the priſoners; Goe forth: and to them that are in darkneſſe; Shew your ſelues, they ſhall ſecke in the waies, and their paſtures ſhall bee in all the toppes of the billes.

Behold heere a deſcription of the change, that happens at Chriſts coming. Notwithſtanding it is very ſure that the Prophet meant in this place, to giue ſome conſolation to the Iewes, things being then in ſuch a deſperate ſtate, to the end their reſtauration might not ſeeme incredible; no, not albeie they lay in darkneſſe of death. Yet in generall termes, he ſhewes wherein the office of Chriſt conſiſts; to wit, in reſtoring the deſolate heritage: verſ. 8. For before his coming, we lie manacled hand and foote vnder a miſerable ſlauerie, and are plunged into the darkneſſe of hell. By theſe two ſimilitudes then he ſhewes, that wee are wrapped in all ſorts of miſeries, as long as Chriſt is abſent from vs. For by darkneſſe, he excludes vs from all the benefits which appertaine to Chriſts kingdome: as faith, righteousneſſe, holineſſe, truth, and the like graces: wee are in darkneſſe then, till Chriſt ſay; Shew your ſelues: we are bound, till he cry, Goe forth. Now there is great weight in the claufe; That thou maielt ſay: for hee ſhewes that the preaching of the Goſpell, is the meanes by which we are debuiered. If we then deſire the libertie and the light of Gods kingdome, let vs hearken vnto the voice of Chriſt, for elſe we ſhall be oppreſſed vnder the perpetuall tyrannie of Satan.

Where is now the libertie of our free will? For whoſoeuer attributes to himſelfe light, reaſon, or vnderſtanding, can neuer haue part in this deliuerance by Chriſt. Why ſo? Becauſe libertie is promiſed to none but to ſuch as acknowledge themſelues captiues; nor light and ſaluation to any, but to ſuch as confeſſe themſelues to ſit in darkneſſe.

Moreouer, in that he promiſeth Gods children that their paſtures ſhall bee in all waies, and in all high places: by theſe ſimilitudes hee ſhewes, that thoſe who are vnder the protection of Chriſt, ſhall fare well: for he is a vigilant and careful thepheard, and furniſheth his ſlocke with all things neceſſarie: ſo as nothing can bee wanting vnto them, that appertaines to their ſoueraigne good. This aduertement was of great uſe for the Iewes, in that time in which they were to paſſe throw hot & ſcorched paths, and to come at length into a land waſted and deſolate. The Prophee therefore ſaith; that albeie humane helpes ſhould faile, yet God of himſelfe is rich enough to ſupply all their wants. This is the reaſon why the Spirit of God delights ſo much in comparing the faithfull to ſheep; that feeling their owne weakneſſe, they might willingly and wholly ſubmit themſelues to be governed vnder the protection of this good thepheard: Iohn 10. 11.

But withall it is very likely that the faithfull are admoniſhed not to affect great delicacies, for they ſhall neuer taſte of ſuch abundance, but they ſhall feele many wants mingled therewith. Beſides, it is not fit they ſhould bee pampered or full fed, in regard they are ſubiect to many dangers: for wee know that the waies are fraught with theenes and enemies, and the tops of the inmountaines are for the moſt part barren and dry. The Church of Chriſt is ſo defended then, that ſhe is neuer far from assaults and outrages of enemies, and ſo repleniſhed, that yet ſhe dwelles in waſte and terrible deſerts. But whoſoeuer her enemies inuiron her on euery ſide, yet the Lord protects her from their violences. If we be in hunger or want, he is ready to furniſh vs with all neceſſaries in abundance, and to nouriſh and ſuſtaine vs; yea, in theſe neceſſities, we better perceiue the care he hath of vs, then if we were in a place of the greateſt ſafetye.

Verſ. 10. They ſhall not be hungrie, neither ſhall they be thirſtie, neither ſhall the heate ſmite them, nor the Sunne: for hee that hath compaſſion on them, ſhall leade them, euen to the ſprings of waters ſhall he driue them.

The Prophet confirms that which was ſaid in the former verſe; to wit, that God hath ptouiſion ready to ſuſtaine the Iewes in the way; ſo as no neceſſaries ſhall be wanting vnto them. And no doubt hee puts them in mind of that time in which their fathers were readie to periſh in the deſert for want of food; in which neceſſitie, God gaue them

Free will.

No libertie but to ſuch as feele their captiuitie, not light, but to ſuch as confeſſe they ſit in darkneſſe.

The faithfull muſt learne not to want, as well as to abound.

See verſe 10.

A confirmation of the former verſe.

Why Chriſt was given for a covenant to the people.

Neither light, liberty, nor ſuccour out of Chriſt.

Manna from heaven the space of forty yeers: Exod. 16.35. Also in speaking of the shadow against the beat, it is certaine that he hath respect to the pillar of a cloud, wherewith the Lord couered them by day, to the end they should not be parched vp with the heate of the Sunne: Exod. 14.21. For the Prophets are wont, as we haue said, to mention the peoples departure out of Egypt, as oft as they were to confirme their barts in the assurance of Gods goodnesse, either towards all in generall, or towards any one in particular. In that hee mentions the springs of waters, he also alludes to those waters which issued out of the rocke, when the people were almost dead for thirst. For these things fell not out in the deliuerance of Babylon, but in putting them in remembrance of former benefites, the Prophet sets before them the power of God, which hath alwaies bin sufficient to procure the saluation of the Church.

Verf. 11. And I will make all my mountaines as a way, and my paths shall be exalted.

God the Churches companion in her pilgrimage, prouiding her of all necessaries.

HE here expresse and fitly mentions the peoples returne: for to what purpose should hee promise such felicitie vnto the Church, vlesse they had been restored to their first libertie? Hee signifies then that all obstacles and impediments shall be remoued, which might any way hinder their passage: and that the mountaines, the toppes whereof might seeme impossible to be climbed, shall be made passeable and easie to bee attained. In a word, that hee will make all rough and hillie places smooth, that they may with ease returne into Iudeah. When the Church then was to bee restored to her perfect estate, no lets whatsoeuer, were they neuer so great, were able so to ouermatch the Lord, but that in the end hee would easly overcome them all.

And in that hee calles them his mountaines; it is to shew, that he hath not onely power to command them to giue his people way; but he further expresseth, that it shall be himselfe who will bring the Iewes home; no lesse then if he went in person before them. He carried them vp (saith Moses, Deut. 32.13.) to the high places of the earth, when they passed thorow the wilderness. Also he saith, that the Lord went before the Israelites, when they departed out of Egypt: Exod. 13.21. Heere we see then what singular loue the Lord beares to his Church, in that hee vouchsafeth to be a companion vnto her in her iourney, and takes vpon him the whole care touching her necessarie prouision therein: so that in succouring her, he seemes to prouide for himselfe.

Verf. 12. Behold, these shall come from farre: and loe these from the North, and from the West, and these from the land of Sinim.

Whereas some think the Prophet notes out heere the foure quarters of the world, it hath no great likelihood. And yet I reiect not this opinion altogether, because it is probable, & agrees with many other texts of Scripture. First hee saith, these shall come from farre: then hee addes some particulars, for an exposition of the generall sentence. In stead of Sinim, some reade Sinim: and the Hebrewes themselues reade it diuersly. Saine Ierem thinkes it is meaing of the south part from Mount Sinai; lying towards the South. And this is the most receiued opinion. Others thinke it to be the name of a citie or region, called Sienes, situated towards the tuncing of the Sunne, when it is at the highest. But these opinions make nothing for the explanation of our Prophets meaning, which is cleere and manifest in it selfe. For doubtlesse hee speakes of such as were farre remote, and scattered in diuers quarters, whether they were to be gathered in fro the North parts, or beyond the seas. Isaiah then so promifeth the returne from Babylon, that therewithall hee also extends this propheticie to Christs time: as wee may easly gather from that which we haue said, Chap. 36.6. For we must still hold this principle, that the second birth of the Church vnder the Kingdome of Christ, is heere described: for hee not onely promifeth that the Iewes shall returne to Ierusalem to reedifie the Temple; but that those also, who before were strangers from the Church, should be gathered from out of all quarters of the world.

Verf. 13. Reioice, O heauens, and be ioyfull, O earth: braist forth into praise, O mountaines; for God hath comforted his people, and will haue mercy vpon his afflicted.

THOUGH hee exhorts and stirres vp all the faithfull to thankgiuing: yet hee hath a speciall drift to confirme that promise, which otherwise in it selfe seemed doubtful. For our consciences wauer, and are perplexed in affliction: so as it is an easie matter to settle them timely vpon the truth of Gods promises. In a word, either men stagger, tremble, fall, or vtterly despaire. For if the least feare, distresse, or affliction doe but arise, much adoe there is to fasten any consolation vpon vs. For this cause we haue neede to haue our faith confirmed by all sorts of arguments. See the reason then why Isaiah speakes so gloriouslie of the benefite of this deliuerance; namely, to the end that the faithfull, who saw nothing round about them but ruine and death, might notwithstanding bee of good comfort, and in hope to wait for a happie change. Hee sets the deliuerance therefore before their eyes, as if it were already accomplished; that so they might haue all matter of ioy and reioicing: though at that time there appeared nothing but cause of sorrowe and mourning.

As oft as the Lord therefore promifeth a nic mercie, lets vs euer bee mindfull to ioine praise and thankgiuing thereunto, though we see not the accomplishment thereof: that Isaiah so propheticall the Iewes returne, that therewithall hee also comprehends the kingdome of Christ.

S. Ierom.

A principle.

*Or, poore.

A thankgiuing, in which is included a confirmation of the former promises.

Praises must be ioined to the promises.

ſo wee may the better waſhen our drowzie ſpirits: next, lee vs hit vp our eyes alſo to Gods power, by which he ouerrules all creatures both in heauen and in earth: for he no ſooner beckens with his finger, but they all ſtand vp together, as it is in Chap. 48. 13. to fulfill his commandement. If the ſignes of his admirable power then do euery where appeere, ſhall wee thinke he will not make the ſame much more glorious and admirable in the ſaluation of his Church? Vnder this figure then Iſaiah teacheth, that neither the heauens, nor the earth can yeeld a more acceptable ſeruitie vnto God, then when they ioyne and combine themſelues together to aide the Church.

Moreouer, that the faithfull ſhould not ſinke vnder the weight of the calamitie, before he promiſeth that God will comfort them, he exhorts them quietly to ſuſtaine their ſorrowes. For by the word poore, he ſignifies that the Church in this world is ſubiect to many afflictions. Therefore that we may be fit to partake of Gods mercie, let vs learne vnder the croſſe, and vnder many miſeries, teares, and groanes, to wait till we attaine vnto the poſſeſſion of it.

Verſ. 14. But Zion ſaid, The Lord hath forſaken me, and my Lord hath forgotten me.

The Lord minding further to amplify his grace, complains that the hearts of the Iewes were ſo cloſed vp, that they had almoſt diſcouraged him, had not his infinite bountie ſurmouned all their peruerſe imaginati- ons. Yet therewithall he indeuours to correct this vice, that they might ioyfullie embrace, and (as it were) ſee the promiſed deliuerance before hand which was offered them: as alſo that ſeeing his forwardnes to ſuccor them, they on the contrary might prepare themſelues to hope well. But this doctrine doth now alſo appertaine to vs, for when God deſerues his help, all of vs for the moſt part are too much perplexed, wee thinke by and by God hath forſaken and reiected vs. And thus deſpaire eaſily preuailes, vnleſſe we be wiſe to prevent the ſame betimes: which we ought to do, leſt we be bereaued of Gods grace.

Truly our infidelitie manifeſts it ſelfe to the vtmoſt in ſuch doubts, in that we neither quietly reſt vpon Gods promiſes, nor patientlie beare his corrections, which leade vs to repentance: nor yet the triall of our faith, by which he diſpoſeth vs to mortification: neither any other afflictions, which he vſeth for our humiliation. For God iuſtly complains of the Iewes, who by their diſtruſt reiected his ſaluation offered, and could not indure to leaue of his help. Now he reſtraines not this only vice to a few, but comprehends alſo the whole Church, to ſhew that he will be liberal and beneficial towards the Iewes farre above the meaſure of their faith: yea, he will oppoſe himſelfe againſt their incredulitie, that he wich his ſaluation may paſſe through all the lets and impediments which ſtand in his way. Let euery one of vs beware then how we flatter or ſooth vp our ſelues in this vice, for the Lord pleades againſt his Zion, that is to ſay the whole Church, becauſe ſhe vſeth ſuch ſpeeches as ſhaun and proceed from a (bitter) roote of diſtruſt.

Verſ. 15. Can a woman forget her child, and not haue compaſſion of the ſonne of her womb? though they ſhould forget, yet will not I forget thee.

To correct this diſtruſt, to the complaint he addes an exhortation full of ſweet conſolation. For by a very fit ſimilitude he ſhews what great care y Lord hath ouer his Church in comparing him to a mother, whoſe affection and care is ſo great towards her child, that the fathers loue in compariſon thereof is as nothing. He propounds it not then, you ſee, in the example of a father, which notwithstanding is often vſed: Deut. 32. 6. 2. Cor. 6. 18, but that he might the better expreſſe his ſingular loue, he rather compares him to a mother: and he names not children only, but the fruits of the wombe, to which vſualle the woman beares much greater affection. For the loue that a mother beares towards the little one which the nourriſheth and ſuckleth at her breaſt, is almoſt vnutterable. Alſo what care doth the vſe, euen to ſpend many nights together without ſleepe, by reaſon of the ſtewardnes of the childe! And to ſpeake all in a word, the ſpares not to waſt and conſume her ſelfe dayly; ſo as her loue makes her cleane forget her ſelfe. And this care wee ſee is not only in the reaſonable creatures, but in the vnreaſonable alſo: yea, euen in wilde beaſts, who yet are gentle and louing in this behalfe, howſoever otherwiſe they be of cruell and fierce natures.

Now in regard women ſometimes proue more vnnatural then wilde beaſts, yea, and ouercome them in crueltye, by neglecting the fruits of their bodies, the Lord addes, that if this ſhould fall out, that yet he will neuer forget his people. For the firme and vnumoueable affection he beares vs, farre ſurmounes the vehement loue and amitie of all fathers and mothers in the world. Let vs then call to minde what Chriſt ſaith, Math. 7. 11. If you which are euill can giue good things to your children, how much more will your heavenly father! Is it poſſible that he ſhould empie himſelfe of this fatherly affection? No verily. Men which are of peruerſe natures, and loue theſelues, yet will not neglect their children, and will the Lord (the fountaine of mercie, who needs nothing, but giues to all men liberallie, and hath not the leſſe) neglect his Church? Wherefore howſoever it ſailes out ſometimes that mothers reiect and forſake their children (which yet is prodigious) yet notwithstanding, God, who loues his children with a ſtable, conſtant, and perpetuall loue, will neuer reiect them. To conclude then, our Prophet heere ſets out the inſtimable care of God, who watcheth night and day for our ſaluation, to aſſure vs, that he will neuer leaue nor forſake vs, though we be toſed fed to and fro with many and great calamities.

Chap. 27. 2. 3
Hebr. 13. 5.

Verf. 16. Behold, I haue grauen thee vpon the palmes of mine hands: thy walles are euer in my sight.

Gods loue to his Church set forth by another similitude.

BY another similitude he sets forth this inestimable care that God hath ouer vs. We vse to say in our common prayer, That one hath that vpon his fingers ends, which is seruicible imprinted in his memorie. And when Moses commands a dayly meditation in Gods law, he saith, Thou shalt bind them vpon thine hands, Deuter. 6.8. that so they might alwaies haue Gods commandements before their eyes. Heere our Prophet vseth the same similitude, as if he should say, I can no sooner looke vpo my hands, but I behold thee there: I beare thee so ingrauen vpon my heart, that nothing is able to blot out the remembrance of thee: In a word, I can not forget thee, but I should also forget my selfe. True it is that GOD hath neither hands, nor any bodily shape: but thus it pleaseth the holy Ghost to stoupe downe to our slender and weake capacities, that he might the better set forth the infinite loue which he beares vs. And because the Church is in many places called the Temple, or Citie of God (whence also comes that similitude of building so much frequented in the scriptures, Psal. 102. 16. Ier. 24. 6. Math. 16. 18.) therefore the Prophet brings in the similitude of walles: by which hee notes out the quiet and peaceable estate of the Church: as if he should say, I will alwaies see that Ierusalem shall flourish, and be in good plight. Whence also we obserue, that heere is set forth vnto vs a right order of government and discipline, whereof the Lord will be the perpetuall protector and defender, as himselfe heere protests. Let vs also remember that this prophesie tooke place in that wofull desolation when the walles of Ierusalem (which were the liuely image of the Church) were throwne downe, the Temple rased, good government abolished, and in a word, when all things were out of ioint, and almost brought to vtter confusion: for he promiseth that all the Churches priuiledges shall forthwith be restored to their first perfection.

Verf. 17. Thy builders make haste: thy destroyers, and they that haue made thee waste, are departed from thee.

An amplification of the former verf.

HE amplifies that which he touched in briefe in the former verse: for his speech might haue bin esteemed ridiculous & vaine, concerning this continuall care that God hath ouer the Church, and her walles, which he now suffered to be rased to the very foundations. For this cause, I say, he adds an exposition, to wit, that it is ruinated indeed, but ere long it shall be reedified anew.

The right way to re.

From this word builders, wee may gather wherin the right way of repaying the church

consists; namely, if the Lord bee pleased to send forth maister Carpenters and Masons to frame it anew. Secondly, in driuing out the destroyers, which build not, but breake downe. For albeit God can build vp his church without the helpe of men, yet is he pleased to vse their labours: and howsoever he finisheth the whole building himselfe alone, by the secret worke of his holy Spirit, yet hee blesteth the inducers of his seruants, that the same should not become altogether vnfruitfull. To him we must pray, and from him alone wee must expect workemen; for hee is able to fit them with gifts and graces, and to appoint one to euery one his taske, as Saint Paul saith, 2. Cor. 3. 5. Thus wee are then, not onely to pray that God would send forth labourers into his harvest, but also that he would furnish them with power and efficacy, that they may not bestow their paines in vaine. Is the doctrine of the Gospell then preached with some fruit: It comes to passe by the singular goodnesse of God.

Mat. 9. 38.

But this were not enough, vnlesse he therewithall should driue off the destroyers: for Satan inuades and assaults the Church by infinit waies: neither wants hee his supposts and catchpoles, who employ all their forces either to slake, hinder, or ouerthrow the Lords building: and therefore we ought continually to pray, that God would still defeat all their enterprises. But if that good be not done, which we desire, let vs accuse our selues and our owne ingratitude; for the Lord is readie to bestow his benefites vpon vs in great abundance.

Verf. 18. Lift vp thine eyes round about, and behold; all these gather themselves together, and come to thee: As I lue, saith the Lord, thou shalt surely put them all vpon thee as a garment, and gird thy selfe with them like a bride.

HE awakens the Church by setting her deliuerance before her eyes, to the end she might view this so glorious a worke, & might behold the swoopes of men which should flow in vnto her on euery side. Now as this gathering together, serued to sustaine the mindes of the faithfull in captiuitie: so was it their duties, who saw it accomplished indeede, to render thanks vnto God. Whence it appears, that this prophesie was of good vse in both the times; as well whilest their deliuerance was yet hidden vnder hope, as when it was ratified by the effects. And albeit also he speaks to the Church in generall, yet this speech belongs to euery one in particular: that so, all generally, and euery one particularly, might embrace these promises.

When hee commands them to lift vp their eyes; it is to shew, that the cause which moues vs to saint, is, in that we doe not so diligentlie obserue the work of the Lord as we ought; but suffer our eyes to bee couered as it were with a vaile, by reason whereof, wee cannot see three paces before vs. Thence also it comes, comes, that we can hardly conceiue any hope, but are euer and anon plunged into deſpaire, when the leaſt troubles ariſe.

Now if this bee ſaid of the whole Church, let every man examine his owne heart, and ſee how ſubiect he is to this vice; and let him euer ſtirre vp, yea awaken his ſpirits, to behold the workes of the Lord, and to reſt himſelfe vpon his promiſes with his whole heart.

In that he ſaith, the children of the church ſhall be gathered; the meaning is, to bee one bodie with Chriſt, and as one ſold vnder one ſhepherd, we muſt be gathered into one lap of the Church. For Chriſt holds none other to be in the number of his ſheepe, but ſuch as are ioined into one body by the vnitie of one faith: Iohn 10. 16. Whoſoeuer then would bee accounted among Gods children, let him be a child of the Church: for as many as are ſeparate from her, ſhall alwaies bee held as ſtrangers before God.

As a garment, or, ornaments.] The Prophet ſhewes wherein the chiefe ornament of the Church conſiſts; to wit, in hauing many children gathered into her lap by faith, and gouerned by the Spirit of God. Behold the true beautie; behold the glorie of the Church; which otherwiſe is deformed, and ill fauoured, yea torne and rent in pieces, if ſhe be deſtituted of theſe ornaments. Heereby we ſee that the Papiſts haue great ſkill in diſcerning of the right ornaments of the Church: for they pleaſe themſelues in nothing but crucifixes, paintings, images, ſtately buildings, gold, precious ſtones, and glorious veſtments: that is to ſay, in bables and puppets, fit for little children. But the true dignitie and glorie of the Church is all inward: Pſal. 45. 13. becauſe it conſiſts in the giſts and graces of the holy Ghoſt: in a word, it conſiſts in faith, and in good workes. Whence it followes, that he is then clothed with royall robes, when people being knit together by faith, doe aſſemble into her lap, and worſhip God in ſpirit and in truth.

Now that this promiſe might haue the greater weight, the Lord adds an oath, that he might draw vs to credit the ſame; to the end that when the Church (as we thinke) is at the very pits brinke, we ſhould then wait and expect her reſtauration. Which doctrine, if euer there were neede of it, it is now much more. For whether ſoeuer we turne our eies, what ſee wee elſe but horrible deſolations? What are we to doe then? Let vs deliuer our ſoules from deſpaire, by ſtaying our ſelues vpon this oath, As I liue? And let not our ſmall number diſmay vs, though for that cauſe the world deſpiſeth and diſgraceſh vs. No, the Lord, we doubt not, hath his elect ſcattered heere and there, whom at the length he will aſſuredly gather into his Church. Let vs plucke vp our ſpirits then, and liſt vp our eies by a true faith, that wee may not onely extend our hopes to one age, but to many.

ſurely be now narrow for thee that ſhalt dwell in it: and they that denoure thee ſhall be farre away.

HE confirms that which went before, but in other words; to wit, that the change by him promiſed, is in Gods hand, who will cauſe his Church, which hath a long time lien deſolate and waſte, to be ſuddenly inhabited againe; and that in ſuch wiſe, as the land ſhall not be large enough to containe ſo manie inhabitants. He ſetth a ſimilitude of a Citie broken downe, whoſe walles and buildings are reſtified: vnto which alſo, the people flow in ſuch troopes, that the bounds thereof muſt be enlarged, becauſe the firſt circuits are too narrow for them all. And thus he not onely ſpeakes of the peoples returne from Babylon, but alſo of that reſtauration wrought by Chriſt, when the Church was not onely ſpread thorowout Iudca, but alſo thorowout all the quarters of the world.

Moreouer, he addes that ſuccours ſhall be in a readineſſe to defend the Church againſt her enemies, which would moleſt her with outrages and iniuries. Theſe ſhall not be able to hurt her. Why ſo? God will driue them farre away: not that the Church had euer any perfect reſt in this world, or could be exempt from all violence of enemies: but howſoeuer it be, God, who ſtill ſupports the infirmities of his ſeruants, hath alwaies reſiſted the wicked, reſſeſſed, or vtterly deſeated their plots, that ſo the kingdome of Satan might neuer waxe great by the ruines of the Church.

Verſ. 20. The children of thy barrennes ſhall ſay againe in thine eares; The place is fruit for mee, giue places to me that I may dwell.

Iſaiab goes on with the ſame argument, and vnder another figure, promiſeth the Churches reſtauration. Now he compares her to a widow (or rather to a wife) that is barren: to ſet forth the miſerable and deſolate condition of this people, who were oppreſſed vnder ſo many cuils, that the memory of that nation was in a manner extinct: for they were mingled among the Chaldeans, who held them priſoners; ſo as they were almoſt incorporated into one body with them. Wee are not to maruell then if he compares the church to a barren wiſe, for ſhee conceived no more children in her wombe. In former time the Iewes flouriſhed; but now their kingdome was torne in ſunder, their power vtterly ouerthrowne, and their name in a manner buried in obliuion, when they were led into captiuitie.

Hee promiſeth then that the Church ſhall come forth of theſe ſinnes, and that the who now liſt ſolitarie, ſhall returne to her firſt eſtate. Which is ſignified by the word againe: for thereby he aſſures them, that God was able to render them that againe, which in former time he had beſtowed vpon them, though now for a season he had deprived them thereof.

Whereas many take children of barrennes for orphelins, methinks it suites not with the text, because widowhood and barrennes is referred rather to the person of the Church. And therefore by way of amplification he calles them so, who beyond all hope were giuen to her that was a widow and barren.

Giue place:] That is to say, for my sake giue way. Not that it is seemly for the faithfull to driue their brethren out of y place wherein they dwell: but the Prophet borrowed a phrase of speech which is commonly vsed, to signifie, that no incommoditie whatsoever shall hinder many from desiring to be receiued, and that place may be giuen them. This came to passe when the Lord gathered an infinite number of soules from all parts of the world. For in a moment, and aboue mans reason the Church which was emptie before, was replenished: her bounds were enlarged, and extended farre and neere.

Verf. 21. Then shalt thou say in thine heart, Who hath begotten me these, seeing I am barren and desolate, a captiue, and a Wanderer to and fro? And who hath nourished them? Behold, I was left alone: Whence are these?

The Church brought in, admiring her extraordinary exaltation,

By these words he shewes, that the restoration of the Church whereof he now speaks, shall be admirable: and therefore he brings her in wondering, yea astonished, that she is exalted by so extraordinarie and vnexpected a manner. And to say the truth, this is no superfluous description. For the children of God, and of the Church, are not made new creatures by the will of flesh and blood, but by the secret vertue of the holy Ghost; neither are they borne into this world as we see men dayly haue a new of-spring to replenish common-wealths, for naturallie we haue no part in the kingdom of God. If any man then will but consider of this new and vnacustomed change, and then by what meanes the Church was multiplied and nourished a long time in her poore estate, he shall be constrained to admire and wonder thereat.

Now he shewes that this shall be no fained admiratiō, in which arte flatterers haue great skill, but it shall proceed from a true affection of the heart. Why so? Because there shall be iust occasion so wonder, in regard the Lord hath so long, and in so many dangers not onely preterued his Church, but hath made it multiply into a new generation vn hoped for. For who would haue imagined that when the Iewes were in the most contemptible condition that might be, couered ouer as it were with miseries and reproches, that any one of the Gentiles would haue desired societie with such: Moreover, there was no likelihood that mens minds could feele so sudden an alteration as to ioine themselves to such a religion as themselves both hated, and despised before: nay more then that, the wall of separation then stood, which shut out all stran-gets and vncircumcised ones from entring into the Church of God.

But he addes the reason of so great an astonishment, to wit, that she was barren before, and therefore was vterlie destitute of children. For the word of God which is the spirituall seed wherewith the children of the Church were begotten, ceased: the sacrifices also were broken off: in a word, whatsoever serued to maintaine a state in perfection, was abolished.

Besides, the Church is called barren, not because God euer forsakes her, but in regard his gracious presence doth not alwaies appere. We saw a wofull spectacle of this barrennes when the Lord to punish mens ingratitude tooke from vs his blessed truth, and suffered vs to walke and erre in darknes, then we might well say that shee was a widow and barren indeed, when the was left quite destitute of children. Hence also we may perceiue how foolish the Papists are, in that they will alwaies haue Christ so to dispose of his Church, that the must neuer know the state of widowhood nor barrennes. For howsoeuer the Lord at no time vterlie reiects his Church, yet he often withdrawes from her the signes of his presence, because of the worlds vnthankfulness.

A wofull spectacle of the Churches barrennes scene in our times.

Who hath nourished these?] Those who are banished and often remoue their habitation can not well nourish nor bring vp children: So, when the law and doctrine of godlines sounds no more in the Temples, spirituall nourishment must needs faile. But the Lord who stands in no need of humane helps, begets vnto himselfe children after an extraordinarie manner, by the incredible vertue of his holy Spirit, and these he nourisheth, how, and in what place it pleaseth him. Now to accomplish this prophesie, he hath contrarie to all hope, raised vp nurses, so as the Church admires not vnusuaus cause at the fostering and bringing vp of her children.

When we reade this prophesie we are admonished not to vex our selues about measure if at any time we see the Church left like a widow. Neither so farre to giue way to distrust, as to thinke that God who is all sufficient, can not in a moment renew and restore her to a perfect estate, though for the present we see no likelihood nor appearance at all of it.

Verf. 22. Thus saith the Lord, Behold I will lift up mine hand to the Gentiles, and set vp my standard to the people, and they shall bring thy sonnes in their armes: and thy daughters shall be carried vpon their shoulders.

Isaiah confirms that which he said erewhile, to wit, that y Lord would cause the Church which a long time was a widow and barren, to bring forth an innumerable of-spring, so as her selfe should be constrained to admire at her owne fruitfulness. And this he doth to remoue all scruples and doubtings, which peradventure might arise in their minds. But the

the Lord pronounceth, that he will not only give children to his Church among the Iewes (as in former time) but among the Gentiles also: and yet he shewes, that this generation shall be spirituall, to wit, by the grace of adoption. To which purpose appertaines the similitude of the standard, for thereby he encourageth the faithfull to hope for a new kinde of generation, far different from that which we see in the common course of nature. It was necessarie then that the Lord should set up his standard, and to discover his secret power by the preaching of the Gospell, that among so many sorts of languages and differing dispositions, he might bring children to the Church, and to be made one with her in the same faith, euen as brethren gather together into the lap of their mother.

Those are deceiued who by the metaphor of the band, and standard, thinke the preaching of the Gospell is only signified, separating it from the efficacy of the holy Ghost, for both must be conioined together. The vertue of the holy Ghost must in no wise be separated (I say) from the preaching of the Gospell, witness 2. Cor. 3. 6. We must run therefore to this band of God, and to this standard, when we see the Church oppressed vnder the tyrannie of the wicked. For albeit they be euer plotting all sorts of mischiefe vterlie to ouerturne it, yet is Gods hand stronger then all, and men in the end shall gaine nothing by resisting him, for at last he wil subdue and bring down their rebellion, that his Church may haue some breathing time in despite of them all. In that he promisseth the childre of y Church shall be brought in betwene the armes, and vpon the shoulders, it is a figuratiue maner of speech, in which he would signifie that God will no way be hindered, when he meanes to gather his Church from the scattering, wherein he shall find her, because all the Gentiles shall help him. And howsoever this be in the first place to the banished and disperſed Iewes, yet no doubt it is to be extended vnto all Gods elect in all places, who are, or shall be receiued in, to participate of the same grace.

Verſ. 23. And Kings shall be thy nursing fathers, and Queenes shall be thy nurses: they shall worship thee with their faces towards the earth, and lick up the dust of thy feet: and thou shalt know that I am the Lord: for they shall not be ashamed that wait for me.

HAving spoken of the obedience of the Gentiles, he shewes, that it not only appertaines to the common people, but euen to Kings also, whom he compares to foster fathers, who bring vp other mens childre, and Queenes to milch nurses, which are hired forth for that purpose. Why so? Because Kings and Queenes shall furnish y Church with all things necessarie for her children. For whereas before they banished Christ out of all their coasts, now they shall from henceforth acknowledge him for their soueraigne King, and shall yeeld him honour, homage, and seruice. And all this came to passe after God manifested himselfe to all the world by his Gospell, for the great Kings and Princes thereof not only submitted themselues vnder the yoke of Christ, but also imployed their wealth & riches to restore & maintaine the Church, so as they became the protectors and defenders of it.

Whence we note, that a speciall and particular dutie is heere required of Princes, besides their ordinarie profession of the Christian faith. Why so? Because the Lord hath clothed them with power and authoritie, to the end they should provide for the Churches good, and also procure the glorie of God. I grant this dutie belongeth to euery one, but by how much the greater power Princes are indued withall, the more carefull should they be to imploy their studies and paines about these things. That cause why David expressly names them, and exhorts them to be wise, to serue the Lord with feare, and to kisse his donne, Psal. 138. 11. Hence also we may discern the follie and madnes, who affirme that Kings can be no Christians vnlesse they give ouer this office and dignitie. For this was accomplished vnder the kingdom of Christ, when Kings being conuerted vnto God by the preaching of the Gospell, came to this hie degree and dignitie, which far surmount all sorts of rule and principalties, to wit, to be the nursing fathers, and defenders of the Church.

The Papists thinke none can be right nursing fathers to the Church vnlesse they leaue vnto Priests, Monks, and idle bellies, great reuenues, large possessions, & fat prebendaries, to fatten them vp as swine in a stie. But this nomifluens tends to a far other end, then to cramme and stuffe the guts of such a companie of insatiable gulphs. For the question is not here touching the enriching of their houses, who vnder a fained pretence of holines will needs be taken for the Ministers of the Church (who haue bin the only poysoners and corrupters of the Church of God, with the deadly venome of the whores cup) but rather to roote out Superſtitions, and vterlie to ouerthrow all idolatrie, to aduance the kingdom of Christ, to conferre the puritie of doctrine, to remoue scandalles and offences, and to purge out the filthie dregges of false doctrine, whereby the wholesome doctrine of God is corrupted, and whereby his glorie is darkned and obscured.

When Kings haue taken order for these things, then are they also to furnish the Pastors and Ministers of the word with all things necessarie, let them relieue the poore, and looke that the Church susteine not by their negligence beggerie, or vndecent wants. Then let them erect Schooles, and endow them with sufficient pensions for the teachers: let them foster and cheriſh Students, let them build Hospitals for the aged and diseased, and performe other offices which serue for the maintenance and conser-conferuation of the Church. But these excessive expences superfluouslie bestowed towards the founding of Masses and Orato-ries, and imploied for the making of vessels of gold and siluer, rich & gorgeous vestments, in which Papists glory and brag; only serues for a pompe and ambition to corrupt the pure and sincere nourishment of the Church; yea, to choke and extinguish Gods seed, which is the onely food by which the Church liues.

If Kings in stead of nurcing fathers to the Church, become tormenters of her, it is the iust reward of our sins.

Now when we see things otherwise carried at this day; to wit, that Kings in stead of nurcing fathers to the Church, become torment-ers & destroyers of the Church, that the true doctrin is reiected, the faithfull Ministers banished, and that greafe idle paunches, insatiabie gulfes, and supposts of Satan are put in their roomes, (for to such, Princes distribute their riches : that is to say, the blood of the people which they haue sucked) when alto those Princes, vid. otherwise being faith-full, yet wanting power, and therefore hauing little or no courage to defend the word, or to maintaine the church. Let vs acknowledge that this is the iust reward of our iniquities, and let vs confesse that wee be vnworthy to inioy such good nurcing fathers. Notwithstanding after these so horrible ruines, wee must be euer waiting and looking for the restauration of the Church; and for such a conuer-sion of Kings, as that they shall shew themselves fathers and protectors of the faithfull, and such as shall constantly vphold the doctrine of the word in their dominions.

They shall lick the dust of thy feete. The Papists in like manner offer violence to this place, to establish the tyrannie of their Idoll :
as if forsooth, Kings and Princes could not otherwise shew themselves the true and law-full seruants of God, vnlesse in his stead they should fall downe at the feete of their disgui-sed head of the Church. This they account a testimonie of great seruice done to God, when they will abase themselves to kisse his feete with great reuerence. But first of all, if they will know what an opinion we ought to conceiue of such an idolatrous and barbarous reuerence, let them learne it from Saint Peter, whose seat they brag to hold : for hee would not suffer Cornelius the Centurion to doe him such reuerence: Act. 10. 26. Let them also learne it from Saint Paul, what to doe in this case, who rent his garments, and reiected this honour with great detestation: Act. 14. 14.
Is any thing more absurd then to say that the Sonne of God, in stead of ordaining a Minister of the Gospell, should consecrate a pro-phane King, exercising a Persian-like pompous state, vterly insupportable ? But let vs remember that whilst the Church is a pilgrime in this world, that shee may bee humbled, and that shee may be conformed to Christ her head, shee is subiect to the crosse,
And if her enemies giue her any rest, yet you shall perceiue that her chiefest glory and beautie consists in modestie. Whence it followes, that shee is stripped of her ornaments, when shee is decked with a prophane arrogance.

The Churches chiefest glory consists in humilitie.

The Prophet then by these words vnderstands nothing else but that adoration by which Princes humble themselves before God, and that obedience which they yeeld to his word in the Church : for we must carefully beare in mind what hath been said before; to wit, that the honour which is done to the Church, must neuer be separated from her head. For this honour and seruice ap-pertaines vnto Christ: and if it be in any sort attributed to the Church, it is in such wise, that it alwaies remains intirely to her onely head. Adde also that Kings doe not submit themselves to the true religion; but that they should beare the yokes of men, but that they might submit themselves to the doctrine of Christ. Who euer be they that reiects the Ministers of the church, and refuseth to beare the yoke which God imposeth vpon all his seruants by her hand : such a one hath no communion with Christ, neither can hee be the child of God.

The honour done to the church, must euer be separated from her head.

Hee is no child of God, that will not beare the yoke which he imposeth vpon him by the Churches hand.

For those that *vva*it for me, &c.] I take the word Ascher, for a particule of rendring a reason: for the words runne on so in a line, that those who diuide them, doe much darken the Prophets meaning. For by this argument, he proves that it is good reason Kings and Princes should cheerefully bow vnder Gods government, and need neuer be squemish to humble themselves before the Church; because God will not permit any that wait for him, to be athamed. As if he should say; This shall be no slauish, but an honourable and an amiable subiection.

No slauish,
but an honorable subiection, to humble our selves before the Church.

Now he ioines his truth with our saluation:
as if he should say; Let me be held neither for God, nor true of my word, if I accomplish not that which I haue promised. Hence we gather an inestimable fruit. For as it is impossible that God should lie or repent, so it is necessarie that the stables of our saluation, which the Prophet drawes from the truth of God himselfe, should euer remaine stedfast, without being moued or shaken.

Vers. 24. Shall the pray be taken from the mightie ? O the iust captiuitie delinered ?

25. But thus saith the Lord; Euen the captiuitie of the mightie shall bee taken away, and the pray of the tyrant shall be deliuered: for I will contend with him that contendeth with thee, and I will saue thy children.

H Aving answered an obiection in the former verse, which might arise in the minds of the faithfull : now hee confirms this solution yet better. For it seemed a thing incredible that the Iewes should euer be deliuered from vnder the hands of so mightie an enemy, who held them prisoners by the law of armes,
and had iustly subdued them vnder bondage.
He addes this interrogation then (as it were) in the person of all the common people, who as it is likely, had this speech rise in their mouthes : to which he makes answer, as wee shall

God testifieth in these verses, that he will oppose his power against the power of such as tyrannize ouer
his Church, be they visible or inuisible aduer-

ſhall ſee anon. But firſt we muſt obſerue the ſimilitude, in that the Church is called the pray of the mightie, and the iuſt captiuitie: that is to ſay, lawfull. For he is called a juſt poſſeſſor, which hath gotten it lawfully: as in a juſt war, he that takes the ſpoile, is the juſt poſſeſſor of ir. Such was the condition of this ancient people, whileſt they were in exile; for they loſt both their Country and libertie together, and the conquiſhers will onelic was a law:

But yet we are diligently to obſerue this ſimilitude; to wit, that the Church ſhould be oppreſſed by the tyrannie of Princes, & made a pray to the throte of wolues: and yet notwithstanding ſhee ſhould be eſteemed good purchaſe, yea eſteemed a iuſt captiuitie. What is more vniuſt? But thus were our fathers handled: and are we better or more worthy then they? But let them boaſt as long as they liſt of their iuſt captiuitie, and let them glory at their pleaſure in this vaine title, the Lord pronounceth them abominable (cut-throtes,) and theeces, in affirming that he will be a- uenged of them, and plucke the prayes of their teeth: for God vieth not to ouerthrow iuſt poſſeſſors. Whence it follows, that the dominion which they vſurped ouer Gods people, was an vniuſt tyrannie, and plaine robbetic. Neither could their weapons nor munitions hinder the Lord from taking from them, that which they vnlawfully detained.

And this promiſe ſtands in force not onely againſt tyrants, and viſible enemies, but alſo againſt the tyranny of Satan, from which we are now deliuered by the admirable power of God. I grant, Satan is a powerfull aduerſarie; but the Lord, which is ſtronger then he, will bind him, and take away his weapons, and caſt downe his ſtrong holds, that he may reſtore vs vnto libertie: Mat. 12. 29. Haue wee tried the power of God then in this behalfe? The greater reaſon haue we to relye vpon his deliuerance ſtill, as oft as our enemies tread vs vnder their feete, and tyrannize ouer vs with cruelties.

Now when he ſaith he will contend for our ſakes: firſt, he therein brings vs to the conſideration of his power, that we ſhould not iudge of things either by common reaſon, nor yet by the ſtrength of mans arme. Wee muſt not look then vpon y which we are able to doe, or to the meanes which we haue in a readineſſe; but commit the whole ſum of our affaires vnto the good will of God, who vouchſafes both to care for vs, and to defend vs. And not onely ſo, but affires vs that he is furniſhed with ſtrong arguments, to answer al the ſlanders of our aduerſaries. For we haue ſaid a little before, that the wicked doe not onely aduance themſelves, by violence and crueltie againſt the Church; but do alſo lode her with infinite ſlanders, as if they had iuſt occaſion giuen them to tyrannize ouer her.

Is not this conſolation more then needefull then; to wit, that God will maintaine our innocencie, and by his allegations, will cauſe the vaine pretext to vaniſh, which may anie way ſerue to augment the crueltie and impudencie of the godleſſe? Therefore it is that hee addes once more, And I will ſaue. Heere then you ſee wee haue a ſingular conſolation, knowing that we are made one with the Lord in ſo faſt a couenant, that hee oppoſeth himſelſe againſt all thoſe that contend with vs. So as he will bleſſe thoſe that bleſſe vs, and on the contrary, will curſe thoſe that curſe vs: in a word, hee teſtifies that he is an enemie to our enemies. From this word ſaue, we muſt alſo note, that whẽ we are ſet free from bondage, and defended againſt the furie of our enemies, or ſaued; that we impute not theſe things to the worke of fleſh & blood: leſt any ſhould aſcribe that to his owne induſtry, which God commands vs wholly to expect and vvaie for onely from himſelſe, in regard it is a ſingular benefit that proceeds from his hand.

See Chap. 26. 12.

Verſ. 26. And I will feed them that ſpoile thee with their owne fleſh, and they ſhall be drunken with their owne blood, as with ſweet wine: and all fleſh ſhall know that I the Lord am thy ſauiour, and thy redeemer, the mighty one of Iakob.

IN the firſt place hee ſhewes what ſhall become of the enemies of Gods Church, threatening that the time wil ſhortly approach, in which they being enraged and ſet on fire vviſh hearts burnings one againſt another, ſhall at laſt butcher one another. Truly it is the Lord which deprives them of reaſon, and plungeth them into frenzies, and that in ſuch wiſe, that they bend againſt themſelues the very weapons, which in times paſt they had drawne forth to maſſacre the Church withall. And thus they turne their ſwords points one againſt another, till they haue fought their owne vtter ruine, as the Madianites did: Iudg. 7. 22. The ſumme of all is, that the Church ſhall haue no need of mans helpe, nor of any preparation at all, when God is minded to confound and bring the wicked to nought: for hauing firſt ſmiſten them vviſh giddiniſſe, they ſhall fall to eat and deuoure one another, being ſet on fire with the furies of hell, euery one againſt his fellow.

And all fleſh ſhall know.] Hee repeats the ſame thing which we haue ſcene in verſe 23. namely, that the time ſhall come, in which the God of Iſrael ſhall be acknowledged of all, the true and onely God: becauſe he hath ſaued his people from deſtruction. For he would haue this to be noted as a ſpeciall teſtimonie of his Diuinitie, when hee appeared in all mens ſight the ſauiour and redeemer of his people. Some reade the name of Iakob in the vocatiue caſe: but I expound it in the genitive. For the Lord ſhews that he is the ſauiour, redeemer, and the mighty one of Iakob; that his people might learne to reſt themſelues ſecurely vnder his ſauegard and protection.

The church this enemye ſhall at length turne their ſwords points againſt themſelues, which they drew forth to maſſacre her withall.

THE L. CHAPTER.

Vers. 1. Thus saith the Lord, Where is that bill of your mothers diuorcement, whom I haue cast off? or who is the creditor to whom I sold you? Behold, for your iniquities are you sold; and because of your transgressions is your mother forsaken.

The Lord proues the lawfulness of the Churches diuorce, vnder two similitudes.

His place is diuerslie expounded: but very few haue attained y^e Prophets meaning. To the end wee may haue the sum briefly, we must note this conclusion, whereby the Lord in manie places testifies, that his people are obliged and bound vnto him: namely, that he is as it were our husband, and we his wife: for it is a spirituall mariage consecrated by his eternall word, and sealed vp with the blood of Iesus Christ. As he then for his part receiues vs into his protection as his beloued wife, vpon condition that wee keepe faith and loyaltie towards him: so when we play false with him, he reiects vs; and then it is rightly said, that he puts vs away: euen as if a husband should banish an adulterous wife his house. Now, because wee could not easilie conceiue the reason why God should reiect the Iews which were pressed vnder so many and great calamities, it was necessarie the should here come to manifest the cause of this diuorce. But for as much as we are ordinarily too eloquent in couering of our owne faults, and strue to lay all the blame where we should not; that is to say, vpon God himselfe: so the Iewes also then murmured at their estate, as if the Lord had done them wrong so to reiect them. Why so? Because they could not bee brought to acknowledge that the promises were made vneffectual, and the covenant abolished by their leaud behaviour. At least they could not be drawne to make this confession, but with much adoe: for they posted ouer their fault to their predecessors, as if they forsooth had borne the punishment of their offenses. From thence proceeded those complaints recited by Ezekiel: Our fathers haue eaten fower grapes, and our teeth are set on edge: Ezek. 18.2. Now because such prouerbs at that time went current among them, the Lord bids them bring forth that letter of diuorce, by which they might iustifie their owne innocencie, and proue that God had vniuistly put them away.

It was the custome then to giue a woman vniuistly diuorced, a letter in her hand: for thereby her husband was constrained to testify, that his wife had liued chastly and honestly with him: that all might know that she was not put away for her owne fault, but because she pleased not her husband. And thus the wife was set at libertie, and her innocencie approued; and the fault was laid onlie vpon the husband, to whose discontented mind the cause of this rent was imputed. Moses ordained this law, Deur. 24.1. in regard of the peoples hardnesse of heart, as witnesseth our Lord Iesus Christ, Mat. 19.7. The Lord by a very fit similitude then shewes, that hee is not the author of this diuorce, but that the people put away themselves by their owne fault, and so pursued their lusts, that they vterly dissolved the mariage knot. This is the cause why he asks for this letter, whereof they boasted so much: for there is great weight in y^e pronoune demonstratiue that; by which the Prophet meant to tax their vaine excuses. As if he should say, You haue skill to put the fault farre enough from you, and to reproch the Lord; you haue your defences in your hands ready to shew; and yet in the meane while you your selues haue violated the faith of marriage: neither are you able to alleadge any iust matter for your felues, whereby to disproue the lawfulness of your diuorce.

Is here is the creditor? Heere hee sets forth the same thing by another similitude: when any was so farre indebted, that hee could not satisfie his creditors, hee was constrained to giue his children in payment. The Lord now asks if hee were forced to doe this; to wit, whether hee hath sold or giuen them to pay his creditor; or whether he was like to those vnthrifts, who fondly waste their substance: or to those householders, who suffer themselves to runne ouer shoes in debt. As if he should say, I am sure you are notable to charge mee with any such matter. And therefore it is euident to all, that you haue been sold & brought into bondage for your iniquities. And thus the Lord maintaines his owne iustice against all false imputations; which by this second member hee thus repulseth, in regard that the Iewes were sold and put away by their owne fault.

Saint Paul vseth the same similitude when he saith, We are sold vnder sinne: Rom. 7.14. but in a diuers sense. Besides, the Hebrewes are wont thus to speake of wicked ones, who giue ouer themselves to commit sinne with a reprobate mind. But heere the Prophet onely meant to conuince the Iewes, in regard that by their owne offenses, they had wittingly pulled all the euils they sustained vpon themselves. If any aske, but can the Lord reiect his heritage? Can hee disanull or breake his covenant? No verily: but it is said hee forsakes and prophanes his heritage: as in Psal. 89. Ezech. 24. because we can iudge no otherwise of it by outward appearance: For in that he bare not that affection towards them hee was wont, it was a kinde of diuorce or reiection. To be ſhort, we muſt note theſe oppoſitions, either that the wife is diuorced by the husbands fault, or becauſe her ſelfe is a ſhameleſſe harlot. Again, that the children are ſold, either by reaſon of their fathers powerte, or for their owne vniuſitineſſe. And thus the context of this text will be eaſily vnderſtood.

Verſ. 2. Wherefore came I, and there was no man? I called, and none answered: is mine hand ſo ſhortened that it can not help? or haue I no power to deliuer? Behold, at my rebuke I drie vp the ſea: I make the floods deſert: their fiſh rotteſh for want of water, and dieſh for thirſt.

IT may be the Prophet renders a reaſon there why the people hauing prouoked the holy one of Iſrael to anger, hath not only pulled vpon themſelues a ſea of euils, but are alſo worthely cut off by their owne obſtinacie from all hope of pardon and ſaluation. But I rather thinke the Lord proceeds yet further. For hauing ſhewed that he had good cauſe giuen him to reiect this people, who willinglie choſed rather to liue a ſeruite life then to be free, he addes, that it is none of his fault that they were not forthwith deliuered. And as in the former verſe he ſhewed that the fault whollie reſted in the Iewes, ſo here he proues that their owne malice was the cauſe why they grew old and purrified in their miſeries, for there wanted neither will nor power in the Lord to haue holpen them if they had not stubbornly reſuſed his grace and liberalitie. To thut it vp in a word, Iſaiab ſhews, that both their entrance, and conſuance in this calamitie came only from their owne fault, that he might free God from blame: and ſignifies, that the Iewes did wickedlie when they accuſed him to be the author of their miſeries; or in complaining, that he came not ſoone enough to their ſuccor.

Fiſt then the Lord ſaith, that he came. But to what end? To reach the Iewes his hand. Whence it followeth, that they are iuſtly deſtitute of help, in regard they deſpised his fauour. Now the Lord comes, when he giues vs any ſignes of his preſence. He comes by the preaching of his word, and by the ſundrie benefits which he beſtows vpon vs: as alſo, by the many teſtimonies which he vſeth to manifeſt the fatherly loue and good will he beares vs. Was there euer any people, ſaith Moſes, that ſaw ſuch ſignes and wonders as thou haſt done, or that hath heard the voice of God ſpeaking out of the middes of a fire, and liue? Deut. 4.33.34. Seeing ſuch a dayly ſummons ſerued to no purpoſe; and that in ſetting hope of mercie before the, he ſought to draw them to repentance, doth he not iuſtly cõplaine as of a prodigious thing, that they would not come forth to meet him? They are couined of ingratitude then, that whereas they ought to haue fought vnto God, they would not vouchſafe to meet him. For what a vile vnthankfulnes is it, not to receiue that grace which is freely offered?

In that he ſaith, I called, he repeats the ſame thing in diuers words. When God calles vs we ought to giue care, and to offer our readie and willing obedience. For this is the answer (which he complaines is not giuen him) to wit, that we ſubmit not our ſelues whollie vnder his command. But this word ſutes very well heere to the circumſtance of this place, in that they wilfullie deſpised God, who offered them preſent deliuerance out of their troubles. It auailed him no more to ſpeake vnto them therefore, then if he had ſpoken to ſo many deafe and dumb men. Thence he concludes, that their deliuerance was deſerred only in reſpect of their owne backwardnes, which he confirms vnto them by former teſtimonies, in that he had in former time manifeſted to their fathers the ſufficiency of his power.

Now leſt they ſhould cauill and excuſe themſelues in affirming that they were not ſaued, though they deſired it: God on the contrarie affirms, that they muſt ſeek the cauſe of ſuch a change elſewhere then in him. For ſure it is, his power was not diminiſhed. He would not haue bin ſlack in reaching out his hand to them in their affliction, if they had not obſtinately reiected his offer.

Now by this Interrogation, he expreſſeth the equitie of his cauſe, as one that maintained a thing cleare and manifeſt. For who dares obiect that his power is leſſened? And to that end he puts them in mind of that power of his, by which he brought them out of Egypt, leſt they ſhould imagin ſome were now diminiſhed, but might rather acknowledge that their vices ſtopped the courſe of this power, that it could not now manifeſt it ſelfe. At his rebuke he ſaith the ſea is dried vp, as if he had terrified it, in rebuking of it. For by his commandement the waters parted in twaine to giue his people paſſage, Exod. 14.21. And Iordain fled back, Joſt. 3.16. Pſal. 114.5. ſo as the fiſhes being deſtitute of water, died and rotted.

HE alſo mentions the thick darknes which was ſpread ouer the whole land of Egypt for the ſpace of three daies, Exod. 10.22. for then the heauens were in a maner clothed with mourning weeds, becauſe as a faire and cleare day glads our hearts, ſo a darke and gloomie day brings ſadneſſe & heauines with it. Therefore it is ſaid that the heauens were covered with a ſack, or with a mourning garment, as ſignes and teſtimonies of affliction. And if any had rather take them for general ſentences, he may do ſo if he will. But as I thinke the Prophet hath reſpect to the hiſtorie touching their deliuerance out of Egypt. From whence they might gather, that God who had deliuered their fathers after ſo wonderfull a maner, was now leſted from ſuccoring the in the miſeries which oppreſſed them, by reaſon of their owne vnthankfulnes,

It was not, ſur want of power in God that he ſuccored not the Iewes: but it reſted whollie in their owne vnthankfulnes.

Verf. 4. The Lord hath given mee a tongue of the learned, that I should know how to minister a word in due season to him that is wearie: he will raise me vp in the morning; in the morning hee will awaken mine eare to heare, as the learned.

After a double reprehension, he addes a consolation.

HAving twice convinced the people of ingratitude; now, according to his custome, he addes a consolation: for the Lord so shames vs, that he forthwith mindes to free vs from shame and confusion. Albeit then vpon good grounds hee hath proued, that the people were iustly reiected, and perished by their owne desert; yea, and had made themselves vtterly vnworthy of deliuerance: notwithstanding all this, hee promisseth them helpe and succour. Now because in a matter so difficult, there was need of more then ordinarie authoritie, the Prophet saith, that God sent him, and fitted him with abilitie to execute that which was inioined by him. All in a manner doe refer this place vnto Christ, as if it futed not to the Prophets person, whē he saith he was smitten. We read not indeed that Isaiah was so handled: and yet it followes not therefore that their argument is found enough. For Dauid complaineth that his garments were diuided; which properly appertained vnto Christ: & yet it followes not that the like befell not Dauid. For mine own part, I am out of doubt that Isaiah brings in himselfe as one representing the person of all Gods seruants, as well touching those that were before him, as of those that were to succeed him.

Now hee saith that the Lord gaue him a tongue; to the end the promises, whereby hee seekes to cheere vp the peoples hearts, might haue the greater weight: for our faith soone begins to wauer, if we once deeme that men speake without warrant. Besides, the condition of this people was so forlorne, that they could not be drawne nor allured by any reasons that could be alledged to hope or expect deliuerance. The summe is then, that the message of their present deliuerance is brought them from heauen: so as if any will refuse to credit it, such a one shall shew himselfe no better then a rebell against God.

Now howfoeuer the Prophet inducours to purchase authoritie vnto himselfe in this behalfe: yet hence we may gather in generall, that none are fit to teach, vnlesse they be first taught and instructed of the Lord. Thus then all faithfull teachers are admonished to craue that of Gods Spirit, which otherwise they can neuer haue. I grant they ought to studie diligently, lest they should get vp into the chaire without sufficient preparation: but yet we must hold this principle, that whatsoeuer serues to furnish them for able Ministers, must be so many gifts of the holy Ghost. And to speake the truth, what boldnesse and presumption is it to represent themselves in the publike assemblies in the name of God, if they bee not the organs and instruments of the holy Ghost.

Thas I should know.] Somewhat must be supplied heere (which wee also haue done) that is, to minister or publish. Vnder the word to know he comprehends that wisdom and dexteritie which a Pastor of the word ought to haue that meanes to preach the word faithfully and fruitfully. As if he should say; I haue been well instructed in Gods schoole, and therefore I haue attained sufficient skill to speake a word in due season, for their comforts that are laden with the burthen of their sinnes.

He calles them wearie, who were broken with many afflictions, as wee haue seene before. I giue strength to him that is wearie. And Christ speakes thus, Mat. 11. 28. Come vnto mee all you that are wearie and laden. Thus hee meanes then that God hath instructed and taught them, that he might be fitted to comfort the afflicted with apt and fit words: so as the broken hearts might be healed by the sense and feeling of Gods mercie in Christ. Hence we gather, that the Ministers of the word ought chiefly to extend their care ouer such as are in distresse, and to comfort those that are oppressed, and in a manner ouerwhelmed with the weight of their calamities: and then to teach them wherein the true rest of the soule consists: as wee haue shewed, Chap. 29. 18, 22. Moreouer, heere we see what euery one of vs ought especially to search after in the holy Scriptures; namely, how to arme and fit our selues with proper and apt sentences to minister consolation to our owne soules in the time of need. He then that shall bee able to cheere vp and sustaine his owne spirit with solid cōfort when things are perplexed; nay, when they seeme altogether desperate: let such a one assure himselfe, that he hath well profited in the Gospell. I confesse the doctrine of the holic Scriptures hath many other vses. For they not onelie containe in them matter that is meete and profitable to comfort the weak and afflicted, but also sharpe rebukes and threatenings against the obdurate: 2. Tim. 3. 16. But Isaiah heere shewes, that his principall charge was, in due season, to minister or bring a word of comfort to the Iewes, who were now in a manner comfortlesse.

He will awaken me in the morning.] Heere the Prophet witnesseth, that the Lord is so carefull of the miserable and oppressed, that he will giue them comfort in the morning: that is to say, in time conuenient. I grant we are often left destitute of consolation: but howfoeuer the Lord suffers vs to languish for a time, yet the fit times and seasons are in his owne power, in which hee will preuent our necessities by his succours. And if it so fall out that he tarry long, let vs impute it to our negligence: for we stop and hinder the course of his mercies from flowing in vnto vs by our owne sloth: or rather indeed, by our rebellion. But howeuer it be, yet he watcheth alwaies carefully for our saluation, and makes speede to succour vs: nay, whilst wee flee from him and resist him, he then allures vs to himselfe, himſelfe, that he might reſreſſe vs by his loue and fauour.

He repeats the word morning twice, thereby ſignifying a daily continuance: leſt wee ſhould thinke there were any paſſions in him, as there are in men, to reiect & deſpiſe them afterwards, whom hee hath once taken into his cuſtodie. No, contrariwiſe, he makes them alwaies to feele his goodneſſe euen vnto the end, and neuer deſtitutes them of conſolation.

That I may heare as the learned.] His meaning is, that his care was attent, not like to one that is ignorant, or dull witted, but that hee was fitted and wel inſtructed for the purpoſe. And yet withall hee ſhewes by his example, that God teacheth all ſuch Miniſters as hee ſends forth, for the ſaluation of the Church with efficacy: for it were to ſmall purpoſe for them to be indued with humane learning, vnleſſe therewithall they had the inward teaching of the holy Ghoſt. By this wee ſee yet better, how true that is which wee haue ſaid before; namely, that none proue good teachers, but ſuch as haue firſt been good diſciples. Such the Prophet calles them taught and learned: for thoſe that will not vouchſafe to learne, as thinking that they know enough, are twice mad and fooliſh. For by Gods owne cenſure, none are truly taught and learned, but ſuch as ſuffer themſelues to be taught, before they take vpon them to teach others; that ſo they may haue the certaine knowledge of the things which they meane to teach them. Now to publiſh ought abroad to the world, which they may not with good conſcience proteſt they haue receiued from God. To ſhut vp all in a word; theſe are learned, who in learning daſtie diſdaine not to grow ſill in learning.

Verſ. 5. The Lord God hath opened mine eare, and I was not rebellious; neither turned I backe.

HE repeats that againe which he ſaid before, and heere comprehends whatſoever is fitting for the office of a teacher. For the opening of ſiue eare, ought not onely to be referred to doctrine, but to the whole vocation: as firſt, to his entrance; ſecondly, when he that is to bee ſent, receiues his charge, touching all that which he is to performe; to wit, the commandement it ſelfe, and authoritie to execute the ſame. Beſides, the Lord not onely opens the eare, when hee manifeſts his will, but when hee toucheth the mans heart with efficacy, and ſo moues him, that hee yeeldes him his obedience. As in the ſortie Pſalme; Thou haſt pierced mine eare. And Chriſt ſaith; Whoſoever hath heard and learned of my Father, hee comes to mee: Iohn 6. 45.

Hitherunto appertaines the ſecond member, where the Prophet ſaith, he was not rebellious. The ſumme is, that hee vnderooke nothing at random; but being well aſſured of the calling of God, hee performed the office of a teacher: notwithstanding it was heauie and tedious to beare, becauſe he was made fit and willing to obey.

Verſ. 6. I gaue my backe to the ſmiters, and my cheekes to the nippers: I hid not my face from ſhame and ſpitting.

HE oppoſeth the inuincible force where-with hee is indued, to the reproches, ſcoornes, and outrages of the wicked: as if he ſhould ſay; Albeit the contemners of God vſe many deuices, yet will hee overcome all their iniuries: ſo as hee will neuer repent himſelfe of that labour which hee hath taken in hand. Moreouer, this place manifeſtly ſhewes, that the Miniſters of the word cannot faithfullly diſcharge their duties, but they muſt therewithall prepare to buckle againſt the world; yea, to ſuſtaine ſharpe aſſaults on all ſides. For Iſaiab no ſooner affirms that hee was readie to obey Gods commandement, but by and by he addes, that his perſon was expoſed to the ſmiters. Wherefore the faithfull ſeruants of God cannot auoid this condition, in preaching the word as they ought; but they muſt looke for ſtripes, reproches, hatreds, ſlanders, and diuers aſſaults of the aduerſaries, who reſpine at the libertie which the true Miniſters of God muſt needes vſe in their reprehensions and admonitions. Let them arme themſelues therefore with faith and conſtancie: for there is a terrible combat prepared for them.

But hee not onely expreſſeth what meaſure the Prophets ſhall haue at the hands of the wicked, but alſo the contempt of the world: for the wicked will haue men ſuppoſe that their cauſe is good and juſt, euen whiſt they oppreſſe the Miniſters of the Goſpell, and perſecute their doctrine: for they will haue Gods ſeruants reputed as euill doers, that by this meanes they may bring them into diſgrace and hatred. That is the cauſe why they rent and teare them with varietie of falſe imputations, and belch out all the outrage they can. And haue not wee experience hereof at this day? Doe not our aduerſaries load vs with the nickenames of ſeducers, ſeditious, ſchiſmatikes, and heretikes, and diſgorge manie other reproches, wherewith they haue heerefore taxed Chriſt and his Apoſtles?

Now he complains that he was ſmitten and ſpitted vpon, not only by ſtrangers and open enemies, but hee toucheth the wrongs which were done him by thoſe that made ſhew to be of the Church. For it is alwaies ſeene, that out of the lap of the Church there ariſeth wicked contemners of God, who are the furtheſt enemies that the Prophets of God haue. Thoſe then who will ſerue God purely, muſt fit themſelues aforehand to beare all theſe things with patience, that ſo they may paſſe as well through good as euill report, 2. Cor. 6. 8. Yea, let them not only deſpiſe bands, tortures, baniſhments, and death, but reproches and ſpittings alſo, though ſometimes theſe things ſeeme harder to beare then death it selfe. This doctrine appertaines indeed to all the faithfull; but especially to the Ministers of the word, who ought to be the ringleaders to others, and to be as standard-bearers.

Verf. 7. For the Lord God wil help me, therefore I shall not be confounded: therefore haue I set my face as a flint, and I know that I shall not be ashamed.

To those oppositions of men, the Prophet sets the help of God.

HERE the Prophet shewes from whence this great magnanimitie proceeds, wherewith he and other the seruants of God were indued to sustaine the violence of all comers, namely, the help of God: for by faith therein Isaiah affirms, that he hath hardened his face as a flint against all the iniuries of the vngodly. Hauing then with a stout courage, wherewith he is endued, set light by all his aduersaries, he also labors to draw others to the same constancie with him; and (as in a glasse) describes to the life what the state and condition of all Ministers of the word is, and shall be. For thus he would turne them from the loue of the world, that they might giue themselues whollie vnto God, and to fixe their eyes altogether vpon him, for there is no combat so sharp, in which they shall not be more then Conquerors vnder the leading of such a Capitaine.

By the similitude of a flint, he shewes, that come what come will, he will not shrink an inch, for the signes of feare and astonishment, and of all other afflictions appeare by and by in the face, which plainly vtters to all how matters goe within. When Gods seruants are handed thus shamefullie, they must needs quaike vnder so many iniuries, if they had not browes of brass and yron to repulse them. And in this sense it is said, that Ieremias was set as a defended Citie, and yron pillar, and vallies of brass against the Kings of Iudah, against the Princes, and against all the people, Iere. i. 18. Ezechiel also had his forehead made as hard as the adamans, which is much harder then the flint, that he might not recoile back from the obstinacie of the people, Ezech. 3. 9.

This sentence, I shall not be ashamed, is not to be taken in the same sense with that in the former member: for there it is referred to the affection, and heere to the effect, or the thing it selfe. When in the beginning of the verse then he glories that he shall not be confounded because God is on his side, it is to shew, that it sufficeth not to know that God will help vs, vnlesse we also feele the same by experience. For what profit haue we by his promises, vnlesse wee put our confidence therein? Faith then is required, both to yphold our comfort, and assure vs of Gods fauor: but in the end of the verse the Prophet boldly protests, that he is vndoubtedlie perswaded of an happie issue. And thus to be ashamed, signifies to be disappointed. For they that conceiue a vaine hope, are subiect to mocks and reproches. Heere we see then that the faithfull teachers and Ministers of the word haue promise of a speciall defence. Let Satan and the world bend their forces together then to assaile them with all their power: the more they assault them, the stronger shall Gods defence and protection be ouer vs. Thence we must conclude, that all such as are fainthearted and quaike when they come to the triall, were neuer yet well fitted to execute their office. For he that hath not learned to fight, is neither apt to serue God nor his Church; neither is he fit to preach the doctrine of the word.

2. Tim. 2. 5.

Verf. 8. He is neere that iustifieth me, Who will contend with me? Let vs stand together: Who is mine aduersarie? Let him come neere to me.

9. Behold, the Lord will help me: who is he that can condemne me? Loe, they shall wax old as a garment: the moth shall eate them vp.

WE must alwaies remember that the Prophet speaks nothing heere that is proper to himselfe only, but testifies what a one God will, and euer shall be towards the faithfull Ministers, that so being assured of their lawfull calling, and executing their offices faithfullie, they might boldly contemne all aduersarie power, and neuer slack their duties an inch for any slanders. Why so? Because the Lord who iustifies them, hath, and euer will be readie to maintaine and defend his owne truth. Now whofouer he be that will indeed boldly protest this, he ought to haue a pure conscience. For if he haue vndoubtedly intruded himselfe, not hauing a sure testimonie of his lawfull calling: or if he be such a one as brooeth his owne dreames and fantasies, in vaine shall he boast of this promise, for it appertaines to none but to such as being called of God, doe faithfullie and purely discharge their duties.

A Minister that hath a good conscience, may haue also great boldnes.

Intruders can not challenge to themselves this priuledge.

Now howsoeuer mockers and despisers of God will neuer cease to make many replies against his seruants, yet Isaiah still offers himselfe to pleade his masters cause, and that as boldly, as if none durst enter the lists against him, or to forge any slanders for their defence. Not that he was able to charme their tongues, but because he was well assured they should gaine nothing by all their tattle. Thus then he shewes, that notwithstanding all the false imputations which the aduersaries lay vpon the word and the Ministers thereof, they must not be discouraged. For there is no crime with which they do not charge vs. But all in vaine. Why so? Because the Iudge that defends their innocencie is neere. The faithfull Ministers therefore may (by S. Pauls example) summon the false and sinister iudgements of men before the Iudgement seate of God, who will giue a iust sentence, 1. Cor. 4. 4.

Let vs stand together.] The faithfull teachers ought to be so confident, as without feare to challenge all their enemies the field. For Satan with all his supports dare not at all times stand to their tackling openly, but especially when they encounter vs with lies. But they haue haue cloſe and ſecret practiſes, and iugling tricks vnder boord to ſurprize ſuch as ſtand not vpon their watch. Yet the ſeruants of God feare not to ſhew their faces, nor to enter the liſts againſt the aduerſarie: neither are they aſhamed to reaſon and debate the matter, if the enimie dare appeare. For the truth is of ſuch ſtrength, that it flees not the noone day, as we ſee heere, that Iſaiab feares not boldly to egge and prouoke all thoſe to the fight, whom he ſaw to lie in wait to trap him. And here he vrgeth them againe ſaying, Let him come neere me. For the true Paſtors ought to be alwaies readie to yeeld a reaſon of their doctrine. But where is he that vouchſafes to heare them patientlie, or that will conſider what his doctrine is which they preach. I grant the aduerſaries are readie enough to draw neere, but it is only to draw out their ſwords, and to cut the throates of Gods ſeruants, or to whet & file their tongues, that they may be fit to defame them by all ſorts of ſlanders. In a word, their beſt defences conſiſts in fraude, and tyrannie, for with reaſons orderly gathered from the Scriptures, they dare not encounter, we therefore being well aſſured of the equitie of our cauſe, are readie with a chriſtian fortitude to challenge them the field. For though they condemne vs without hearing our defences; yea, and though the numbers of the be great, which ſubſcribe to their ſayings, yet will we not be outſeared, for God, whoſe cauſe we defend, is the Iudge, who at the laſt will giue ſentence on our ſide.

It ſeemes S. Paul alludes to this place, where he ſaith, It is God that iuſtifies, who ſhall condemne? Rom. 8. 33. For we may boldly appeale to the Iudgement ſeat of God, when we are clothed with his free righteousnes in Ieſus Chriſt. But Iſaiab handles another argument heere. For he ſpeakes not now of mans ſaluation in generall, but of the miniſtrie of the word, whereof the Lord will be the protector againſt all the aſſaults of the wicked, neither will he ſuffer his ſeruants to be ouerwhelmed with their falſe packing nor violences. In the end of the verſe he ſhewes that he vaunts not of his fortitude as one out of gunſhot, or as if he meant to fight with his owne ſhadow, but he proteſts that he will keepe his ſtanding in the face of the proudeſt of them all that dare aſſaile him. For whoſoever they be that bid battell to Gods word, ſhall but daſh themſelues vpon their owne deſtruction by reaſon of their owne brittle-nes, and ſhall forthwith vaniſh to nothing.

Now as if he had had the thing before his eyes, he ſeeth a particule demonſtrative, Behold, or loe, they ſhall waxe old as doth a garment, the moth ſhall conſume them. The Pſalmiſt ſeeth the like ſimilitude, when he compares the men of this world with the children of God, Pſal. 49. For albeit the worldlings braue it out, and that they ſhine as precious ſtones, yet ſhall they periſh. But the faithfull who now lie covered with filth and rubbiſh, being once decked with new beautie, ſhall in the end ſhine as the ſtars. But in this place Iſaiab properly ſpeakes of theſe mad dogs, who hate and barke at the faithfull Miniſters of the word. Now howſoever ſuch prophane wretches are in beſt eſteeme with the world, and in great authoritie in the middeſt of the, yet all their brauadoes ſhall fall and come to nought, euen as the beautie of garments that are defaced by the gnawing of the moth.

Verſ. 10. Who is amongſt you that feareth the Lord? Let him heare the voice of his ſervant: he that walketh in darknes, and hath no light, let him truſt in the name of the Lord, and ſtay vpon his God.

H Aving ſpoken of the inuincible ſuccors which God giues to all his Propheits, Iſaiab now directs his ſpeech to the faithfull, admoniſhing them to ſuffer themſelues to be governed by Gods word, and to yeeld themſelues teachable. Whence we may gather how farre he inſulted ouer thoſe with an holy pride which were his detractors. For in regard the wicked among the Iewes at that time preuailed, in reſpect of their multitudes, the little flock were in danger to haue their faith extinguished by them. In that he asks where thoſe were that feared the Lord? it is to note out the fewnes of them. And yet he calleth theſe few to take part with him, that they might ſeparate themſelues from that great rout, left they ſhould conſent with them in their wicked plots, ſo much condemned of God. As in Chap. 8. Say ye not a conſpiracie, &c. Thus then howſoever Gods enemies make a great armie in regard of their multitudes, yet Iſaiab aſſures himſelfe, that there is a remnant left who will profit by his doctrine.

Now he ſpeakes to ſuch as feare God, for where religion and the feare of God is wanting, there wholeſome doctrine can take no place. We ſee how thoſe who otherwiſe will be taken for great clerks, and ſharp witred, do yet receiue the ſame. Why ſo? Surely thoſe that are ſwollen with pride, and hate modeſtie and all humilitie, proue more then diſtinct when the matter concernes the diſcerning of this or iſtome of God. It is no maruell then that Iſaiab layes this as the foundation, to wit, the feare of the Lord, that ſo the word may indeed be diligentlie and attentiuely received and heard. Whence alſo it appeares, that there is no true feare of God where the hearing of his word is contemned. For hypocrites; will make great brags of pietie, and the feare of God: but by their contempt of it they plainly manifeſt their rebellion, in that they obſtinately reiect the doctrine of the Goſpell, and all ſound admonitions. Take a ſure triall heere then of ſuch kind of perſons, that ſo you may pluck off their vizard where-with they would couer their faces.

Let him heare the voice of his ſervant. He might euen as well haue ſaid the voice of God, but he chooſeth rather to ſay, of his ſervant. For God will be no otherwiſe heard of vs, but by the voice of his Miniſters, whoſe ſeruiſe he ſeeth for our inſtruction. Iſaiab then ſpeakes firſt of himſelfe, and next of all his fellow brethren, who haue the ſame office of teaching with him. And thus heere is a close opposition betwene the audience which he requires, and that licentious contempt of holy doctrine, which being basely accounted of among the impure, they by their pride drew others, as witleffe and giddie headed as themselves, to the like base estimation of it.

Now because the faithfull might reply, that the fruit of their feare and pietie did not yett appeare, but that they were contrariwise in miserable seruitude, as if they had been wicked liuers; the Prophet meetes with this complaint, and affirms that the faithfull, who hitherto had been hardlie dealt withall, should not for all that lose their labour, in yeelding obedience to God and his word: for though they haue walked in darknesse, yet they shall at the length inioy the light of Lord.

By darknesse the Prophet meanes not ignorance, nor blindness of munde, but the afflictions whereby Gods children are in a manner ouerwhelmed. And this is the consolation whereof he spake vers. 4. where hee said, that the tongue of the learned was giuen him, that hee might know how to minister a word in due season to him that was wearie. And he also heere promiseth, that those who hitherto haue been almost drowned in so many calamities, shall be comforted.

Vers. 11. Behold, all you kindle a fire, and are compassed about with sparkes: walke in the light of your fire, and in the sparkes that yee haue kindled. This shall yee haue of mine hand, yee shall lie downe in sorrow.

Hee reprocheth the Iewes because they chose rather to make a fire alone by themselves, to walke in the light thereof, then approach to Gods light. This place hath bin ill expounded. And if we would haue the right meaning of it, we must note the opposition which is betwene Gods light, and mans light: that is to say, between the consolation which the word of God brings, and the vaine comforts of men, who will indeouour to put away their sorrowes, by things ridiculous and of no value. Hauiug spoken before then of light and darknesse, and hauiug promised light to such as gaue eare to the voice of the Lord; hee now saith, that the Iewes reiected this light, so kindle one of their owne: and in conclusion affirms; that they shall be consumed as with a fire, by their owne light.

In this sort Christ reprocheth the Iewes, for reioicing in Iohn Baptists light: Iohn 5. 33. Because they abused his person, to darken, nay rather to quench the glory of Christ. For in opposing Iohns person against Christs, to darken his glory: what did they else but put out the light of God, shining in a mortall man, to kindle themselves another? Which yet directed them not to walke in the right way; but made them wander in by-paths, wherein they had small cause to reioice.

In saying that they were compassed about with the sparkes, he taxeth their froward imaginations, which harried them to and fro: and therewithall derides their vanitie, in that they ranne swiftilie and with great alacritic, whither foucer their deceiueable lusts led them.

[Vvalke.] As if he should say; You shall feele by experience how vaine and vanishing your light is, when your vncertaine hopes haue failed you. And thus by this so taunting a perniission, hee signifies that they shall both lose their time and their labour. Others expound, that the wicked kindle against themselves, the fire of Gods wrath. But the Prophet hath an higher drift; neither doe I thinke that this exposition agrees to this place.

[Of mine hand.] In regard the wicked being beguiled with a false confidence, think themselves utterly out of danger, and doe boldly contemne all after claps, by trusting in their light; that is to say, in the meanes wherewith they haue furnished themselves: the Lord shewes that they shall lie downe in sorrow, and that this shall proceede from his hand. In a word, that such as forsake the light of Gods word to seeke consolation elsewhere, shall miserably perishe.

THE LI. CHAPTER.

Vers. 1. Heare mee yee that follow after righteoufnesse, and yee that seeke the Lord: looke vnto the rocke whence yee are hewen, and to the hole of the pit whence ye are digged.

ow the Prophet exhorts the Iewes not to faint, though they were few in number: for they were so humbled and diminished, that they seemed neere their vtter ruin: euen as if they had been hopelesse of any posteritie to succeed them. Hee therefore brings them to their originals; to teach them that howsoeuer they were but a small handfull now, yet God was able to increase & multiply them. Then he commands them to looke vnto their father Abraham, who being but one man, yet grew into a great number, and God gaue him children as the starrs in the firmament: Gen. 15. 5. (and as the sand vpon the sea shore: Gen. 22. 17.) Thence they might colle&, that if God in so small a space was able so admirably to multiply their fathers, he was no lesse powerfull to make them increase heereafter, seeing his power is no whit abated, nor his will changed.

Darknesse taken for afflictions.

The difference betwene Gods comforts, and those of our owne deuising. Verse 10.

A consolation or exhortation vnto patience.

Lookes to the rocke,] Some thinke that Abraham is heere called a rocke, because hee was strong in faith: as Saint Paul saith, Rom. 4. 19. Others alleadge a reason cleane contrarie to this similitude: for they thinke Abraham is heere called a rocke or stone, because he was vnfit to beget children: and that Sara was called a caue, because she was barren. But all of them, as I take it, are deceiued: for it is a plaine similitude taken from stones. He saith then, that they were hewen or digged out of Abraham and Sara, as stones are hewen or digged out of a rocke or stone. There was exceeding need that the faithfull should be vpheld by this admonition, in the ruine of the whole nation. God had promised (as we said before) that Abrahams seede should be as the stars, and as the sand. This promise in outward appearance was abolished in the destruction of Ierusalem: for then those that remained, were like a small cluster of grapes that remains after the vintage. But in regard they had already prooued how powerful God was, to create a great people of nothing; the Prophet exhorts them to hope well still, that they may not bee taxed of vnthankfulness: towards God. And thus hee directs his speech properly to the faithfull, who had much adoe to sustaine so sharpe temptations: for hee speakes not to all in general, but to those only that rested vpon the promises, whom he calles followers of righteousnesse.

The Country was filled with vnbelieuers and hypocrites, who had for a long time been apostataes from the exercise of pietie: the more praise those deserted then, who constantly followed a godly and a sincere course. Where there is a desire of righteousnesse, there God hath audience: but where infidelitie reignes, there is no place at all for the promises. Thus then, albeit they boasted they were Abrahams children, yet all were not capable of this doctrine. In the next place the Prophet shewes the way how to follow this iusse, to wit, in seeking the Lord: for it must needs be that such as seeme to follow righteousnesse, and yet aime not at this maie, doe erre in all the parts of their life. These two things then, to follow righteousnesse, and to seek the Lord, must be ioined together.

Vers. 2. Consider Abraham your father, and Sara that bare you: for I called him alone, and blessed him, and increased him.

This application shews sufficiently wherunto the Prophets exhortation tended; namely, to confirme the peoples hearts in the hope of a better estate. He faith he called him alone, not onely because Abraham had no companions with him when he was called to forsake his Country; but because the Lord suffered him to inhabit the land of Canaan, without hauing issue, till his old age: so as he looked not to haue any at all. And besides that, Sarah his wife was also barren: but at the last they had a sonne giuen them to comfort their old yeeres in their afflictions. Which was no sooner giuen, but it seemed that God had appointed him to the slaughter: and yet for all this, the Lord furnished him with a great number of children. I told you ere while, how necessary this consolation was for the Iewes; which wee may also iudge by that wofull and miserable estate in which they then were; as histories doe at large record.

It is also no lesse needfull for vs at this day, in regard of the scattering of the church; that so our small number may no white discourage vs. No, wee are rather to hope that God wil one day multiply the same, by means to vs vnknowne. For we haue heere a manifest and an excellent example thereof in this blessing, whereby wee see how the Lord in Abrahams old age, weakens, yea and out of death it selfe multiplied his of spring. Which promise appertaines not onely to the Iewes, but to other nations: and therefore his name is no more called Abraam, but Abraham: Gen. 17. 5.

Vers. 3. Surely the Lord shall comfort Zion, hee shall comfort all her desolations, and hee shall make her deserts like Eden, and her wilderness like the garden of the Lord: ioy and gladnesse shall be found therein, praise and the voice of singing.

The Prophet shewes that the example propounded in Abrahams person, agrees to all ages. For as the Lord created so great a stocke out of one man in a moment; so will hee replenish his Church by extraordinarie and vnknowne means: not for once onely, but as oft as in the worlds account the is become a widow and barren. And thus after S. Paul hath spoken of Abrahams faith, and commended the excellencie of it, he applies the same doctrine to euery one of vs in particular: Rom. 4. 24.

Where he addes, and shall comfort all her ruines; it may be thus expounded: The Lord will comfort his Church, not onely whilst she flourisheth, but euen when she shall be brought to desolation and solitarie. And it was necessary indeed that the should be wasted and deformed euen to the vtmost, before shee could rightly taste the helpe whereof hee heere speakes. Whereas it follows, that her deserts shall be as a place of pleasure, the Prophet hath respect to that place of Moses, where he shewes how man at the beginning was put into the garden of Eden: Gen. 2. 15. that is to say, into a place of pleasure: whence by his owne fault he was banished. Now we which are deprived of this benefit and blessing which God bestowed vpon our first father, are also scattered vpon the face of the earth, and deprived of the pleasure. Wherefore when many desolations befall vs, and that wee see the order of nature ouerturnd, and nothing to bee perceived but miserable wastes and scatterings, let vs acknowledge that this is the iust punishment of our infidelitie, and of the rest of our horrible iniquities. Let vs also remember the sentence pronounced against our father Adam, or rather against his whole posteritie, which as we are to do in the whole course of our liues, so then principallie when wee see the desolations and wracks of the Church. For the earth which otherwise of it selfe would abound with all sorts of pleasures, is now brought into a wildernes: by our fault, and the Church which eueri where flourished, is destroyed and laid waste. Now in the next place the Prophet adds joy and gladnes, whereby he signifies, that there shall be such a wonderful change, that the Church shall mourne nor lament no more: for whilest she was oppressed vnder so heauie a bondage, there was nothing heard but sighs and groanes, but being restored, she shall reioyce, and sing praises vnto God. Heere then we are admonished to praise and blesse the name of God, after we haue tasted of his liberalitie, Psal. 147.

Verf. 4. Hearken ye vnto me, my people, and giue eare vnto me my people: for a law shall proceed from me, and I will bring forth my iudgement for the light of the people.

IT is not without cause that the Lord so often calles for audience: for wee haue too wofull experience how dull wee are of hearing, and chiefly in aduersitie. When we stand in greatest need of consolation, then by our impatiencie and faint-heartednes we put it farre from vs. Wherefore it stands eueri one of vs in hand to pluck vp our spirits, especiallie when aduersities do pinch vs to the quick, that by this meanes wee may rouse up and awaken our spirits, and banish all slothfulness to receive cōfort. Such an attention the is heere required as may confirme our hearts in patience, till the time of grace be come. And thus the Lords meaning is, that he will reigne againe, and restore his Church to her first estate, in which he will haue his name called vpon.

Albeit the word Law signifies as much as the Edict which the Lord will publish when he is determined to gather together his scattered Church, yet therewithall he shewes by what meanes he will reigne, to wit, by his law, and by the doctrine thereof. And thus we see that where the doctrine of the law is reiecte, there God reignes not: that is to say, there men acknowledge him not.

By Iudgement, he meanes the rule of a well ordered government, by which he will restore his kingdome. He saith, that this Iudgement shall be for the light of peoples, because miserable men by nature are drawne out of darkness when God begins to reigne, and are then enlightened by the doctrine of the word.

The verb I will bring forth, is diuerslie translated by the Interpreters, because the Hebrew word Rage hath diuers significations, for sometimes it signifies to cut, and to open, sometimes to rest. Some then expound, I will cause to rest: that is to say, I will make firme, and this sense agrees not ill. Many among the Jewes vnderstand it otherwise, but I will not trouble the reader with their harsh and intricate expositions, I rather willingly receiue this translation, I will bring forth; or cause to come forth: that is to say, I will manifest my iudgement, for this I thinke fites best with the former member. Now we know that the Hebrewes are wont to vse many repetitions. And therefore albeit the Lord repeats one thing twice, yet the sense is but one and the same. For where he said, that a law should proceed from him, now he promisseth to bring forth, or to manifest his iudgement.

Verf. 5. My righteousness is neere: my saluation goeth forth, and mine armes shall iudge the people: the Isles shall wait for me, and shall trust vnto mine arme.

HEE confirms the former doctrine. The righteousnes of the Lord hath relation vnto men, who haue experience that he is iust. When the people were oppressed vnder so sore a bondage, they had good cause to think they were iustlie chastised for their sinnes. But they might wonder they were thus left and forsaken, that Gods worship was disolued, and his holy name blasphemed by the prophane & vngodly, who committed many outrages against him without punishment. That he might giue them some consolation then, Isaiah promisseth that God will shortly assist them, that so his truth and righteousness may be published throughout the whole world. But by the word Iustice, he meanes not that recompence, which he giues to eueri one, but that faithfulness of the Lord, who protects his Saints, and bestowes many graces vpon them, and keeps his promise touching their deliuerance, in not suffering them to be ouerwhelmed. This appears yet better to be so by the member following, where by way of exposition he adds, that his saluation is gone forth: for the righteousnes of God appeared in the saluation of the people. The captiuitie of the Jewes in Babylon was vnto them as a kind of death, and this is the cause why he calles this deliuerance saluation.

Mine armes shall iudge.] By armes he signifies the manifestation of his power, for it is a figurative manner of speech much vsed in the Scripture. Now because Gods soueraignie and power seemes to be limited within very narrow bounds; yea, sometimes appeeres not at all, therefore he mentions his armes, thereby signifying that his kingdome shall be spread farre and neere.

Verf. 6. Lift up your eyes to the heavens, and looke vpon the earth beneath: for the heauē shall vanish away like smoke, and the earth shall wax old as a garment, and they that dwell therein shall perish in like maner: but my saluation shall be for euer, and my righteousnesses shall not be abolished.

WHILEST wee see so many changes fall out in the world, and that y Church

A confirmation of the former doctrine.

How God will reigne in his Church.

The ſtabilitie of the Church.

As we often thinke ſhall be violently ſwallowed vp therein, it is very needfull that our minds ſhould be gathered vp farre aboute the whole order of nature, otherwiſe the ſalvation of the Church ſhall ſeeme to hang in a net, and to ſtope vp and downe in the middeſt of theſe tempeſts, we may eaſily diſcerne with what wiſdome God governes all things both in heauen above, and in the earth below: ſecondly, with what a fatherly care he vpholds and preſerues his work, and the whole frame of the world: thirdly, with what equitie he diſpoſeth and provides for all his creatures therein: but his care and providence ouer his Church is ſurpaſſing great, which indeed he hath ſeparated from the reſt of the world. The Prophet hath here comprehended both theſe points, for he commands the faithfull to turne their eyes on euery ſide of them, to conſider Gods admirable providence as well in the heavens, as in the earth, by which he hath conſtantlie continued from the creation that goodly order by him then eſtabliſhed. Hee addes, that although theſe things ſeeme to fall to decay, yet it is vnpoſſible that y^e Church which hath her ſure foundatiō in God ſhould euer be ſhaken. As if he ſhould ſay, Heauen and earth ſhall periſh an hundred times rather then the promiſe (vpon which the ſalvation of the Church is grounded) ſhould be aboliſhed. He therefore puts ſalvation in the firſt place, and then he addes righteouſnes, which is the ſolid foundation wherewith this ſalvation is vpheld: when dangers threaten vs on all ſides then, let vs learne to flee to this citie of refuge.

Vnto this ſentence alſo belongs that which is in Pſal. 102. The heavens ſhall wax old as doth a garment, but thou, Lord, art the ſame, and thy yeeres ſhall not faile: and therefore thy children ſhall dwell, &c. Both places do admoniſh vs, that the fauor which God ſhews in the conſeruatiō of his Church, farre ſurpaſſeth all the reſt of his works in excellencie; for the whole matter and ſubſtance of the heavens and earth is but periſhable and tranſitorie, but the ſalvation whereby God preſerues his Church neither is nor can be liable to ſuch changes and alterations, becauſe it is eternall.

Verſ. 7. Hearken vnto me, yee that know righteouſnes, the people in whoſe heart is my law. Feare not ye the reproch of men, neither be ye afraid of their rebukes.

BECAUSE the wicked hauing all things at their wiſh, deride and ſcorne our hopes, and make themſelues ſport with our miſeries & calamities, the Prophet exhorts the faithfull to ſuffer with patience, and not to feare their rebukes; neither to be diſcouraged for their outrages, becauſe the felicitie which they inioy, ſhall be but of ſhorts continuance. For notwithstanding their meriments ſtuffed ſo full of deriſions and proud diſdainings, they are alreadie ordeined to be meate for mothes and wormes: as on the contrarie, that God holds the ſaluation of the faithfull (which for a time he ſeemes to neglect) ſafe in his owne hand. But we are againe to note the repetition of this verbe, To hearken, for this is the third time the Lord hath required audience in this Chapter: for when we be in perplexities, and tremble in regard of our miſeries, we haue much ado to apprehend or imbrace the promiſes. There is great need then that we ſhould often be rouzed and wakened vp to attention, vntill we haue wound our ſelues out of all entanglings.

But he directes not his ſpeech heere to the hypocrites, but to ſuch as know righteouſnes. For howfocuer the faithfull do not offer purpoſe reiect the word of God, yet they often ſhut the doores againſt this righteouſnes, and ſo hinder the ſame from hauing any entrance, becauſe in aduerſitie they ſtop their eares, and nouriſh diſcomfortable thoughts within them. To the end then that they might giue the promiſes entrance, and ſuffer themſelues to be comforted, the Prophet awakens them againe, and bids them giue eare.

The order of his words is alſo to be noted, for firſt he ſhewes who they be of whom the Lord would haue audience, namely, of ſuch as know righteouſnes: ſecondly, expounding what this knowledge is, he addes, the people in whoſe hearts my law is written and planted, for there is no righteouſnes without Gods word. Let men make neuer ſo many lawes, and that in the beſt forme they can deuife, yet they can not bring vs to true righteouſnes: they may well bring vs to ſome ſhadowes of it, but they ſhall neuer attaine ſo farre as to expreſſe it to the life. He alſo therewithall ſhewes the way how to profit in the law of the Lord: for the law hath not his ſeate in the braine, but in the heart, that ſo being leaunened with this heauenly doctrine, Mat. h. 13. 33. we may be whollie transformed into it, 2. Cor. 3. 18.

Verſ. 8. For the moth ſhall eaſe them vp like a garment, and the worme ſhall eaſe them like wooll: but my righteouſnes ſhall be for ever, and my ſalvation from generation to generation.

BECAUSE the faithfull ſeruants of God were to indure many iniuries & wrongs which the enemies of the world would load them with: therefore the Prophet exhorts them againe to beare theſe things patiently: for the diſgraces and checks which we often receiue from the wicked, wound vs more to the heart then their fires or ſwords. But we muſt hold it our glory and crowne of offriciōing, that wee be contemned of them, and accounted as the of-ſcouring of all things. Thence ariſeth that fortitude; though the world reiects vs as the ſcumme of the world: for God holds vs precious in his ſight, in regard our cauſe is his owne. Let vs then with Moses, eſteeme the rebuke of Chriſt aboute all the riches of Egypt, Exod. 2. 11. Heb. 11. 26. Let vs with the Apoſtles reioyce, who went from the Councell with glad hearts, in regard they were counted worthis worthy to suffer rebuke and wrongs for the name of the Lord Iesus: Act. 5. 41.

Now because it were little ioy vs to see the wicked brought to nought, vnlesse wee might inioy our freedome and safetie; the Prophet shewes what our condition shall be, namely, neuer to be defiined of the righteousnesse and saluation of God. But this comparison seemes not verie fitting, when the ruine of the vngodly is opposed to his righteousnesse. For it might haue been more properly and plainly affirmed, that howsoeuer the wicked reioice, yet they shall shortly perish, and the faithfull, who now resemble dead men, shall liue. For seeng he mentions not them at all, but onely recommends vnto them the perpetuie of his righteousnesse; it might bee objected, what profit shall we haue by this, that Gods righteousnesse shall remaine for euer, whilest we in the meane while, are ouerwhelmed with miseries? But the Prophet in these words aduertiseth vs, that the consolation which belongs vnto vs in afflictions, must arise from hence, that our health and saluation is after a sort shut vp in God. For whilest men rest in themselves, they cannot conceiue so much as the least dramme of hope, which will not forthwith vanish. And therefore he turnes our eies vnto God, whose mercie indures for euer, vpon them that feare him, and his righteousnesse vpon their childrens children, as Dauid saith, Psal. 103. In regard that our saluation then is founded on Gods mercy and truth, Isaiab brings vs vnto it, that all men being accounted as nothing, wee may wholly trust in the saluation of the Lord. For thus we must reason; Saluation is in God; not for himselfe, but for vs: as also his righteousnesse, which hee is readie to manifest for our defence. From the saluation & righteousnesse of God then, wee ought to gather that his seruants can neuer perish. Which we haue also proued from the testimonie of Dauid: Thou art alwaies the same, and thy yeeres shall not faile: the children of thy seruants shall continue, and their seede shall stand fast in thy fight: Psal. 102. 27, 28. Wee see then how hee applies this perpetuie vnto Gods children, who stand not by their owne strength, but in God, who is the rocke of their saluation.

Verf. 9. *Rise up, rise up, and put on strength, O arme of the Lord: arise as in the old time in the generations of the world. Art not thou * the same that hath cut Rahab, and wounded the dragon?*

10. Art not thou the same which hath dried the sea, euen the waters of the great deepe, making the depth of the sea a way for the redeemed to passe ouer?

The Prophet heere teacheth, that when God raiseth vs vp by his promises, we on the other side ought instantly to intreat him to accomplish that which hee hath promised, For he giues vs not comfort to nourish vs in idleness; but the more to inflame vs with a greater affection of praier, and to a daily exercising of our faith. Now the Prophet speaks heere according to our vnderstandings. For we thinke that God sleepest, as long as he defertes to relieue our miseries: and yet the Lord beares with vs thus far, that hee suffers vs to pray with such words, as saour somewhat of the infirmities of our natures. The faithfull then pray that God would arise, or awake: not as if he were idle, or asleepe in heauen; but they rather acknowledge therein their owne dulnesse or sloughnesse, in regard they cannot conceiue ought else of God, as long as he defertes to helpe them. Notwithstanding howsoeuer the flesh imagineth that hee sleepest, and neglects our miseries, yet faith looks higher, and apprehends his infinite power.

The Scripture therefore is wont to say, that God awakes, and puts on strength, when he manifests some testimonies of his presence and power: for without this, we esteeme him either idle or asleepe. Now when the Prophet calles it the arme of the Lord which was then hid, he sets it heere before them, as if it were present, that they might conclude; surely our enemies could not afflict vs thus cruelly, if that the Lord had not withdrawne his arme, and helping hand from vs. We haue shewed you the cause of this delay in Chap. 50. 1. namely, for their reuolt from God.

By the daies of old, hee shewes, that they ought to remember all the wonderfull works which God had in former time wrought for their saluation. For howsoeuer he seemes to sit still as one vtterly carelesse of vs, yet is he the same God still, who of old hath gouerned his Church, and therefore can neuer now reiect or abandon those whom he hath receiued into his protection.

In the generations of old.] This repetition doth yet better expresse, that wee ought not onely to consider what was done yesterday, but those things also which were done long agoe: for we must extend our thoughts euen to the most ancient generations, that wee may overcome those temptations, which otherwise would seeme to ouerwhelme vs. The Prophet doth heere then gather together in one, all the testimonies of Gods fauour, which he hath from time to time manifested to his people, that if two or three were not sufficient, yet at least the great numbers of them might wholly confirme the faith of the elect.

Now because it was too tedious to draw a long catalogue of all, hee names this first and excellens miracle among the rest; namely, the wonderfull deliuerance of the people out of Egypt. For by Rahab, I doubt not but he means proud and cruell Egypt: as in the 87. Psalme; I will make mention of Rahab and Babylon, among those which know me. Also, Ezechiel calles the King of Egypt a dragon: 29. 3. Behold, I come against thee Pharaoh King of Egypt, the great dragon, that lieth in the midst of the riuers. Thus it sufficiently appears,

Saluation in God, not for himselfe, but for vs.

In what sense God is said to wake, &c.

Wee must meditate on Gods works of old.

* that arme.

Gods promises must beget in vs the peates, and all (in a manner) are of the ſame opinion, that the Prophet heere puts them in minde of that ſtrange deliuerance of the people out of Egypt. If the pride and loſtineſſe of Egypt was at that time brought low; if the dragon was then ſtaine; why ſhould wee not ſtill hope for the like?

Art not thou that arme? [The Prophet reaſons from the nature of God: for this cannot bee ſaid of the arme of fleſh: the ſtrength whereof (be it neuer ſo great) yet decays and diminifeth in ſucceſſion of time. Milo, who was the ſtoutest and ſtrongest among many, waxing old, and looking vpon his arme, ſighed, becauſe hee felt himſelfe deſtitute of that force which once hee inioiced: but it is not thus with God, for his power can neuer diminiſh. Theſe words then, Art not thou that arme? muſt be read with a certaine vehemencie: for the Prophet ſhewes that the Lord is the ſame which he was wont to be, in regard he continues alwaies one and the ſame.

Now howſoever Iſaiah recites not all the miracles which God did, when he deliuered his people from vnder the bondage of Egypt; yet he meant in a word to comprehend whatſoever Moſes expreſſeth at large; that the Iewes being admoniſhed by this brieſe ſentence, might from thence call to minde after how manie waies God did then manifeſt his power.

Hee mentions the red ſea, which was dried vp; not onely for the rareneſſe of the miracle, but becauſe all the former miracles tended to this end, that the people being now ſet free from an vnjuſt oppreſſion and tyrannie, might paſſe out of Babylon into the land of promiſe: and therefore hee makes expreſſe mentiō of the way which was opened for the redeemed. From this example we may conſider what a one God hath been towards vs, that thence we may conclude, that he will for the time to come, bee alwaies like himſelfe, as plainlie appears by the coherence of the text.

Verſ. 11. Therefore the redeemed of the Lord ſhall returne, and come with ioy vnto Zion; and everlaſting ioy ſhall be vpon their heads: they ſhall obtaine ioy and gladneſſe, and ſorrow, and mourning ſhall ſce away.

Now hee ſhewes that more plainly, which hee briefly touched before; for hauing recited the wonderfull workes of God, whereby in times paſt hee manifeſted his power in Egypt, for the deliuerance of his people, hee concludes that neither the high rockes, nor the bottomleſſe gulphes, no nor the gates of hell themſelues ſhall be able to let him from bringing backe his people out of Babylon. Now the better to confirme and apply this, hee calles them the redeemed; to teach them that God intitles not himſelfe to bee the ſauiour of his people, but for their ſakes: and alſo to aſſure them, that he will ſhew ſuch a teſtimonie of his power for their deliuerance, as hee once did; in regard the cauſe is now the ſame.

Vnto Zion.] That is to ſay, vnto that place where hee once appointed his name to be called vpon, that ſo hee might aſſure them that the Temple ſhould be reediſied, and Gods pure worſhip eſtabliſhed. For when the Iewes who were in Babylon, were to looke for that deliuerance which their fathers formerly had, in regard God was alſo the redeemer of their children: they had yet a priuiledge about their fathers, becauſe God had choiſen Mount Zion, in which he had promiſed to reſt for euer: Pſal. 132. 14. But becauſe the worke of God promiſed heere by Iſaiah, was extraordinary, therefore he exhorts the people to thankſgiuing. The word Rima may be ſimply taken for ioy: but becauſe it often ſignifies that praiſe, which wee yeeld vnto God in the acknowledgement of his benefits, I had rather take it for a ſong in this place. The Prophets meaning is then, that there ſhall be an vnwonted, and an vnexpected change; ſo as the faithfull ſhall haue an exceeding cauſe of ioy and thankſgiuing.

In ſaying that everlaſting ioy ſhall be vpon their heads; he alludes vnto thoſe crownes and garlands of flowers, wherewith they were adorned at banquetts. He addes, that they ſhall obtaine ioy: meaning thereby a firme and ſolid ioy. Laſtly, for amplifications ſake, hee ſaith, that all ſorrow ſhall ſce away: and this was to confirme them againſt that ordinary feare which men haue; namely, when as all their ioy in a moment is turned to mourning. And yet heere withall the Prophet admoniſheth them to wait patiently for that happy iſſue which he hath promiſed, though for a while (if neede bee) they are in heauineſſe and ſorrow.

Verſ. 12. I, euen I am he that comfort you. Who art thou, that thou ſhouldeſt feare a mortall man, and the ſonne of man, which ſhall be made as graſſe.

The Lord not onely promiſeth ſaluation and grace heere to the Iewes, but complains that they would not belieue his word, neither would they make that account of his power, which they ſhould haue done. For what an vnworthy thing is it, that the threats of men ſhould ſo terrifie vs, as to make vs ſee light by the promiſes of God, who is ready to manifeſt his power, that ſo at the laſt we might be fortified againſt all aſſaults? Wee ſhew our ſelues flat contemners of God then, when we nourish in our ſelues an inordinate feare of men. Whence it appears how odious a thing it is to make a tumult in our mindes, by reaſon of mens threats, when God calles vs to reſt quietly in him. Truly the ingratitude of men is too groſſe, if in hearing that God is of their ſide, they conceiue not hope from ſo many famous promiſes, to cry with boldneſſe; If God be with vs, who can be againſt vs? Rom. 8. 31. That is the cauſe then that when dangers appear, they ſtand as men amazed; and attribute more power to a mortall mortall man to harme them, then to God to help them. He iustly reprocheth the Iewes then, that they had fortified themselves no better with these promises, and that by them they were no better armed against all dangers. For what greater dishonor can we doe vnto God, then to call the truth of his promises into question, which yet falles out, when men to affright vs, that we can not quietly rest in the things reuealed?

This repetition I, I am, hath great weight, because he that promiseth this consolation is true, neither can the forces, nor deceits of men defeat him of his purpose. Who art thou, &c He shewes how fraile, transitorie, vaine, and brittle mans nature is, the better to bewray the fottishnes of this people, whilest they preferred bubbles, a smoke, and shadowes to strong God. But withall he shewes, that men can not be ouerwhelmed with feare as long as they retaine within them the remembrance of Gods power. Doe wee then stand amazed when dangers approach? It is a signe that we haue forgotten God, and therefore he addes, Verse 13. And forgettest the Lord thy maker that hath spread out the heauens, and laid the foundations of the earth? And hast feared all the day continuallie because of the rage of the oppressor which is readie to destroy? Where is now the rage of the oppressor?

IT is not enough to imagin that there is one God, but wee must acknowledge and imbrace him by faith. In calling himselfe a maker, it must not be referred to the generall Creation, but to spirituall regeneration, as we haue noted before in diuers places. And in this sense Pau calles vs the workemanship of God, because he hath created vs vnto euery good woike, Ephe. 2. 10. If we remember then the worke of our Creation and adoption, from this beginning we may hope of perseverance vnto the end, lest we should proue vnthankfull vnto God, when after so vndoubted testimonies, he hath manifested his faithfulness and truth vnto vs.

Besides, the Prophet ioines Gods infinite power with his speciall goodnes which he shewed to his people: and this power he opposeth to mans imbecillitie, who in the former verse he compared to grass. He shewes by his works what his power is, so as those which perceiue not the same therein, are more then blinde. For which way can we turne our eies but we must needs behold most ample and large testimonies of Gods power and goodnes which he notwithstanding notes out here in a word, wher he speakes of the spreading out of the heauen, and of laying the foundations of the earth. It is our brutishnes then, & matchlesse sensuality to forget the same, seeing there are so many infinite testimonies of Gods power, which may daily refresh our memories.

And hast feared.] Hee continues the same comparison. For what are men, saith he, that thou shouldest so feare them, if thou comparest them vnto God, who hath promised to relieue thee? Truly it is an exceeding dishonor done to his Maiestie, if we beleuee not that he hath more power to saue vs, then the enemies haue to destroy vs. The Lord therefore would haue vs to consider well what and how great he is, and how farre his power extends it selfe that we should not feare the rage of the oppressor, nor the furie of a mortall man, who vanisheth as a puffe of winde, or as the smoke.

Verse 14. The captive hasteth to be loosed, and that he should not die in the pit, nor that his bread should faile.

THIS verse is diuersly expounded: for some thinke it is to be referred to Cyrus, and so they expound the word Tisbith (which we haue translated banished) he which causeth to remoue. But the most receiued opinion is, that this word is to be taken for him that is bound or oppressed: or, for one exiled, wandering hither and thither. The Iewes were not only banished, but were to held captiues, that it was impossible for them freely to returne home into their countrie: and therefore I expound this of the Iewes: but yet it may be taken both waies, either that the Prophet reproues their ouer-great haste to be loosed, in regard of their impatient wishing to returne: or it signifies, that their returne into their countrie shall come in due season, that their long expectation might not put them vtterly out of heart. As if he should say, The time in which you are to depart home is hard at hand. This second exposition is the most approued, and I willingly receiue it, because it agrees with the scope of the text.

A thousand yeeres with the Lord is but as one day.

But is it not strange that he saith, the people shall shortly returne, seeing the captiuitie indured so long a time. But it is not without cause that God saith, his deliuerance which he deferred to a fit time should forthwith be accomplished: for albeit the same seeme very long to vs, yet is it but short in deed, because it is the fittest and best time. And truly if we shall consider the estate of this so great and mightie a Monarchie, which had not then so much as any appearance of euer being ruinated, we may safely affirme that the time was very short.

Thus then, whereas we thinke Gods promises long in performing, we shall esteeme the time but a moment; prouided that wee lift vp our eies vnto the heauens, Psal. 123. 1. This exposition is yet better confirmed by that which is added, that he die not in the pit. See how the Lord hastens then to deliuer his elect: in due season, that out of the darke dungeon they may come forth safe and sound. Neither doth he promise his people a speedie dispatch, to free them from their bonds only, but also that he may do the good after their deliuerance; for he promiseth them all things necessarie for this life present, that so they may rest whollie vpon the Lord, who is not wont to aid his people for once only, but is wont worke to be with them, euen till their latter end.

Verſ. 15. And I am the Lord thy God that diuided the Sea when his waues rored: the Lord of hoſtes is his name.

HE mentions his power againe. For mens diſtruſt and ſlothfulneſſe is ſo great, that albeit the ſame his power bee manifested in their ſight, yet the leaſt temptation that is, prouokes ſufficiently that they are not well perſwaded thereof. For they alwaies turne to their old bias againe, when the cuill preſſeth them; neither can they conceiue how this power which is in God, appertaines any whit vnto them. Hee ſpeakes not heere generally but alleageath that worke of wonder, ſo often mentioned heretofore: for in that redemption of their fathers, hee gaue hope of eternall ſaluation to all their poſteritie. He therefore rightly affirms himſelfe to be that God, who long ſince diuided the ſea, Exod. 14. 21. Then he adornes this miracle, in ſaying, that at his voice the roaring and boiling waues were appeaſed. Let vs know then that there are no floods ſo violent, but the Lord can ſtil and aſſwage them, for the deliuerance of his Church: Pſal. 93. 3, 4. For it is hee that calmes the ſea by his power, as Iob ſaith, Chap. 26. 12, though it bee very boiſterous and vntamed. He alſo raiſeth the tempeſts when it pleaſeth him. But the Prophet, as I haue ſaid, chiefly reſpected the hitoriſtic of their deliuerance out of Egypt.

He giues God the title of the Lord of hoſtes, to teach vs how farre his power extends it ſelfe; which hee is readie to manifeſt, as oft as hee purpoſeth to giue reliefe vnto his Church.

Verſ. 16. And I haue put my words in thy mouth, and haue defended thee in the ſhadow of mine hand, that I may plant the heauens, and lay the foundations of the earth, and ſay vnto Zion; Thou art my people.

HE returns againe to the doctrine by him propounded before; namely, that God, who comforts his Church, and ſaith I, euen I am hee that comfort you, verſ. 12. affirms heere, that hee hath put his words into the mouthes of the Prophets, which they haue in charge to deliuer. Hence we may gather, that theſe things proceeded not from man, who commonly is mutable; but from God, that cannot lie. The Lord ſpake to all the Prophets: firſt, to Iſaiab, then to others ſucceſſiueſly; but at laſt we muſt come to Chriſt: and yet we need not reſtraine this to Iſaiab, nor to Chriſt; but to extend it to all the Prophets. Moreover, it is the Lords meaning that wee ſhould hearken as diligently to the conſolations of the Prophets, as if he taught them vs in his owne perſon: yea, he ſaith heere, that it is hee which ſpeakes by their mouthes. Hence wee gather, that others neede not draw neere to giue comfort to the Church, but ſuch as by whoſe mouth God ſpeakes: for wee ought to reiect all ſuch as broach their owne inuention, albeit they ſhewd themſelues neuer ſo much with the title of Gods name.

But let vs a little ſee into the Prophets meaning. For hauing ſhewed that mens conſciences alwaies wauer, till the Lord haue ſecured them; it teacheth vs to hold this principle, that it is God, who ſpeakes by his Prophets: for otherwiſe our conſciences would remaine in doubtings and perplexities ſtill. There is alſo great weight in theſe words, in that he recites the commandement of God: for by the authoritie heereof, he was ſtrengthened on to performe his office.

And haue kept mee in the ſhadow of mine hand.] Though this was ſaid in Chap. 49. 2. yet was it no needleſſe repetition. For hence wee learne, that God will vndoubtedly defend his Miniſters at all times, that ſo being upheld by his ſuccour, he may fit them to paſſe thorow the pikes. Now that we may be covered in this ſhadow, two things are required: Firſt, that wee be well aſſured that we publiſh nothing to the people but Gods word: ſecondly, that we doe this at Gods command: for ſuch as raſhly intrude themſelues, may well crake of the title of teachers, but to no purpoſe; for they ſhall turne their backs, when it comes to the triall indeed. But if we haue the teſtimonie of a good conſcience, to witneſſe with vs that we are called of God, then may we reſolue our ſelues aſſuredly of Gods aid and proteccion, and that in the end we ſhall haue the victory.

The end of the ambaffage is added; that I may plant the heauens, ſaith he: that is to ſay, that I may bring all things into their right order. I grant this is diuerſly expounded: but the moſt natiue ſenſe, as I thinke, is, that heauen and earth are renewed by the doctrine of ſaluation; becauſe in Chriſt (as Paul ſpeakes) all things both in heauen and earth, are gathered together in one: Eph. 1. 10. For in regard that ſince the fall of the firſt man, we ſee nothing heere but ſuch horrible confuſions as burthen the very inſenſible creatures, and make them as it were to beare the puniſhment of our ſinne: Rom. 8. 22. this diſorder can no way be repaired but in Chriſt. Seeing then that the whole face of the earth is diſfigured by this wofull deſolation, it is not ſaid without cauſe, that the faithfull teachers doe renew the world, euen as if God did caſt heauen and earth into a new mould againe, by their hand. By this let vs take a taſte of the grieuouſneſſe of ſinne, ſeeing ſuch an horrible downfall hath ſucceeded in the nature of things. It is ſaid then that the heauens are planted, and the earth ſet vpon her foundations, when the Lord eſtablisheth his Church by the miniſterie of his word. This hee doth by the hands of the Miniſters, whom hee directs by his holy Spirit, and defends them againſt all the furie and plots of their enemies, that they may effectually accomplish the worke imposed vpon them.

Lastly, he shewes that this ministerie tends to an higher end, then to the visible forme of this world, which suddenly vanisheth away; to wit, that hee will raise vp and nourish in the hearts of the faithfull, the hope of the blessed life. For the true restauration of the Church, and of the world, consists in this, that the elect may be gathered into the vnitie of faith, and that they all with one accord may aspire vnto God, seeing he so louingly allures them by these words, I am thy God. By this we may see what account God makes of his Church, and the saluation thereof, in that he not one-lie preferres it about the whole world, but shewes that the stabilitie of the world depends vpon it. We are also to obserue what word it is which God will haue preached: for in it we haue the rule of a godly life preferred; and besides, it testifies vnto vs our adoption, wherein especially consists our saluation.

Verse 15. and in this verse, Thow are my people.

Verf. 17. Awake, awake and stand vp O Ierusalem, which hast drunke at the Lords hand the cup of his wrath: thou hast drunke the dregs of the cup of trembling, and wrung them out.

IN regard the Church was to sustaine and indure many afflictions, the Prophet furnisheth her with consolation, and meetes with a difficultie that might come betwene; namely, the enemies tyrannizing ouer the poore Iews, when as in the meane while, they felt no fruit of these promises. His meaning is then, that the Church should be restored and shall recouer her full strength, though now she be afflicted, and tossed vp and downe with diuers tempests. And by the word awake then, he raiseth her from death, and as it were out of her graue. As if he should say; No ruin can be so wofull, nor any desolations so horrible, that can let God from effecting of this restauration. Such a consolation doubtlesse was of singular vse: for when sorrow hath seized vpon our hearts, wee by and by thinke that the promises bring nothing at all vnto vs. It is very needfull then that wee be often put in mind of this, and may also haue it euer our sight; namely, that it is God who speaks and thus calles, not such as are in a flourishing estate, but those that are brought low, yea and dead: for these hee can awaken notwithstanding, and raise vp by his word: for this doctrine of saluation is not ordained for those that are in good plight, but for the dead, which haue lost all hope.

Which hast drunke, &c. The cup of wrath, is taken two waies: for sometimes it is said, that the Lord giues vs a cuppe of wrath to drinke, when hee finites vs with giddinesse, and deprives vs of sense: and thus wee see often befalls men in their affliction. Sometimes also it is taken simply for the bitter and smart blowes, wherewith hee corrects his children in wrath: in which sense, this word ought to be taken in this place, as it appears, because the relatiue this, is therunto added. Neither doth this crosse that which is said; to wit, that the Church was amazed and drunke: for this happened in regard the Lord chastised her so seuerely. Now this is a similitude much vsed in the Scriptures, by which the Lord calles his rod, wherewith he corrects his children, a drinke or potion, diuided to euery one. Notwithstanding when it speaks of the elect, this word cup, serues to set forth the measure which God keeps in his iudgements: for he fauours his blow, though hee chastiseth his people sharpelie. See Chap. 27. 8. Ier. 30. 11.

I take the word Tarata, for anguish, or trembling, wherewith men are seized, when they feele themselues oppressed with grievous afflictions. Wee may also say they be drunke, in regard they haue swallowed all that was in the cup; so as their calamitie and miserie is growne to the height; and to this belongs the word pressing, or wringing out. Besides, the Church is heere aduertised, that all her calamities whatsoever which befall her, proceeded from Gods immediate hand; to the end shee should not imagin that shee was wrongfully afflicted, or that her miseries fell out by chance: for the Prophets drift is to let the people see, that they be iustly punished for their iniquities. Neither can a man euer be raised vp, vnlesse hee confesse first of all that he is fallen; nor rid out of his miserie, except he acknowledge himselfe miserable by his owne faule. In a word, what haue we to doe with consolations, vnlesse the doctrine of repentance goes before?

The dregs, then are not to be taken in this place, as they are in Ieremy 25. 15. where he speaks of the reprobates (whom the Lord chokes and stifles with the drinke of this cup) but for a iust and ample punishment, which yet the Lord meant somewhat to moderate. After he hath chastised vs then after his own will, and is purposed to put an end to our miseries, he saith; the dregs are drunke up: as wee haue seene, Chap. 40. 2.

Verf. 18. There is none to guide her among all the sonnes whom shee hath brought forth: there is none that taketh her by the hand of all the sonnes that shee hath brought vp.

THE Prophet heere describes a pitifull estate wherein the Church was: for what greater grieft, then when the children which shee had brought forth, would not yeelde her any reliefe, or comfort at all? But he sets forth this her miserie in this wise, to teach her to wait for consolation from God, albeit she were in this pitifull plight, because God will neuer forsake his seruants, no not although they were plunged into the depth of hell. The doctrine is then, that albeit the Church be forsaken of men, yea of her owne children, who she hath nourished vp in her lap, yet God will assist her. A mother cannot be more pinched at the heart, then to see her children to abandon her, of whom she expects loue for loue. This ingratitude and inhumanity cuts her much more then the cruell rage of her enemies: for why doth ſhe nurse and bring vp children, but that they may be a ſtaffe vnto her in her age? But when children neglect their durie, what can the eſſe imagin but that ſhe hath loſt her coſt and labour? Thus then, howſoever the Church had performed the office of a Mother, and had brought forth, and brought up her children to mans eſtate, notwithstanding Iſaiah pronounceth, that there is no ſupport nor ſuccor to be looked for at the hands of the vngratefull.

And yet the Prophets ſpeech hath a further ſcope, to wit, that the children that will not relieve their mothers neceſſities, are baſtards and degenerate, that ſo ſhe might the more quietly beare their deſtruction. It was a very heauie and dolorous thing to ſee the Church ſtripped of all her ſpring, and to be left a widow. And yet this beſell her. But the Prophet deſerteth not the Church, that her children deſerue not to be bewailed of her, but that ſhe ſhould rather deſire to haue others in their ſtead, as it is in Psal. 102. 18. that the people which ſhall be borne, ſhall praife the Lord.

Moreover, that miſerie which the Prophet here deſcribes belongs whollie to our time. Many now brag that they are the children of the Church, but which of them takes the miſeries of their mother to heart? Who laments her ruines? Who feels his ſpirits ſo moued thereat, as to put his ſhoulders to vndergoe the burthen with her? How many are there which betray; and more cruellie perſecute her vnder this title, then the open & ſworne enemies? And therefore after all the reſt of her miſeries this comes in at the laſt to make vp the meaſure of them to the full. Again, thoſe which will be reputed the pillars of the Church, and not only brag that they are children, but brag that they are her ſhepherds, are euen they who cowardly and treacherouſly haue forſaken her when ſhe called them to ſuccor her. What maruell is it then if God cut them off, that he may hereafter giue his Church naturall children which may aſſiſt her.

Verſ. 19. Theſe two things are come vnto thee: who will lament thee? Deſolation and deſtruction, and famine, and the ſword: by whom ſhall I comfort thee?

The Prophet ſeth the like words in a manner touching Babylon in Chap. 47. Theſe two things ſhall come to thee ſuddenly in one day, the loſſe of children, and widowhood. But here the Prophet promiſeth a better iſſue and end to the Church, becauſe the Lord will draw her out of this bottomleſſe gulph of miſeries: yet he threatens an extreme miſerie, that ſhe might fit the faithfull for patience, and that in the middes of their anguiſhes they ſhould not ceaſe to liſt vp their prayers and ſupplications vnto God. The ſumme is, that the Church ſhall be ſo oppreſſed vnder all ſorts of calamities, that ſhe ſhall ſeeme euen to be overwhelmed with them. How ſo? Without, the was to look for many ſharpe af-ſictions: ſecondly, ſhe ſhould receiue no comfort nor reſt from her owne children, verſ. 18. Theſe are the two great euils whereof the Prophet ſpeakes. But yet this diuiſion ſeemes not to agree, for after he hath mentioned one euill, to wit, that none ſhall giue the Church comfort or coſolation, he names four kinds of euils, deſolation, ſorrow, or breaking, ſword, and famine. Some expound that the Church was famiſhed within, and reued without by her enemies, but I am of another opinion, as I haue already ſhewed. For it is a phraſe of ſpeech (to ſpeake by an interrogation) much frequented among the Hebrewes, when they purpoſe to deny a thing abſolutely. And this hath its elegancie among them, though it hath not ſo much grace in another language. Iſaiah then mentions theſe two euils, the one outward, in regard ſhe was waſted and deſtroyed with warre and famine, which he hath ſignified by the four former kinds. The other inward, in that ſhe ſhall be left deſtitute of coſolation, and none would lament her. For by the interrogation he ſhewes that ſhe ſhould haue no coſolation. This verſe then answers to the former, where we haue already told you to what end the Prophet deſcribes theſe ſo lamentable and woeful an eſtate of the Church.

Verſ. 20. Thy ſonnes haue fainted, and lie at the head of all the ſtreetes as a wild bull in a net. and are full of the wrath of the Lord, and rebuke of thy God.

HE ſets forth this ſorrowfull condition of the Church at large, when he ſaith, that her ſonnes lie proſtrate. What ſorrow is more bitter to a naturall mother then to ſee the throates of her children cut, and not only one or two of them, but the ſtreets to be paved with the multitudes of them thus ſlaine? He adds a ſimilitude taken from a Beare, or from ſome other wilde beaſt, thereby ſhewing, that the ſtrongeſt among the Lewes were ſnarled as it were in the nets.

A miſerie to a mother to ſee her ſonnes ſlaine, from whom ſhe expects ſuccor.

In ſaying that they were full of the wrath of the Lord, it is to aduertize them, that it came not to paſſe by fortune. For he would not haue them impute this worke to chance, neither yet to accuſe God of hard dealing, in that they were afflicted ſo ſore. Why ſo? Becauſe his iudgements are alwaies iuſt and right: which he ſhewes further, in telling them, that this plague proceeded from Gods rebuke, or threatening. But withall, we muſt note his meaning, which I haue touched before, namely, that the faithfull ſhould not caſt away the hope of their ſaluation, notwithstanding their many miſeries and deſolations daily ſolicited them thereunto.

Verſ. 21. Therefore heare now this, thou miſerable and drunken, but not with wine.

NOW he ſhewes more plainly, why he hath ſpoken of the calamities of the Church,

Who takes the miſeries of the church to heart?

*Or, bringing.

The Church muſt make her account to meet not only with inward, but outward calamities alſo.

I

A mitigation of the Churches sorrow in this and in the next verse. Quest.

Church, namely, that the faithfull should not doubt of the Lords readinesse to comfort them, though they indured many and great extremities. But wherefore calles hee the Church miserable? Is there any estate so blessed as to be in Gods fauour, especially seeing this blessednesse cannot bee taken from vs? For it is not said without cause in Psa. 144. 15. That the people are blessed which haue the Lord for their God. I answer, she is miserable onely in appearance. Also the Lord calles her not by this name in vaine, for himselfe is the helper of the miserable, and of those that be destitute of succour; as wee haue said before.

Anf. The Church miserable onely in appearance. Sec Hof 14 4

Where he calles her drunken; we must note that the faithfull doe not alwaies indure their afflictions with such patience and constancy, that they are not sometimes astonished: but notwithstanding their amazednesse, they ought to conceiue that the Lord chastiseth them iustly; and also to be assured, that hee will succour them. For he speaks not to the strong and valiant, but to the feeble, miserable, the humbled, and to such as resemble those that are drunk: to such hee promiseth comfort. To be short, by this word hee asswageth the Churches sorrow, and shewes that hee keeps a measure in the greatest afflictions, that hee may draw her out of perdition; as if he raised a dead and rotten carcase vnto life.

*Or, Thus saith the Lord, thy ruler and thy God, the protector of his people.

Verf. 22. *Thus saith thy Lord God, even God that pleadeth the cause of his people; Behold, I haue taken out of thine hand, the cup of trembling, even the dregs of the cup of my wrath: thou shalt drinke it no more.

IT is not without cause that hee adds three epithetes to the name of the Lord: First, that he is the ruler, or patron: Secondly, thy God: And lastly, the protector of his Church. For we must alwaies consider what acquaintance we haue with God, who is such a one as becomes vs to come vnto him in familiar maner; because in making himselfe one with vs by a perpetuall covenant, he manifests that hee hath once chosen vs to bee his people. The Iewes in their time no doubt, were encouraged in this preface, boldly to embrace that which is heere promised: and the new people, whom God hath now created, and receiued into his safegard and protection, as well as the people of old, haue no lesse cause to embrace the same promises with them.

Now the Lord attributes to himselfe the title of protector; to teach vs that when we see great dangers approaching, and that we suppose they will worke our ruine; euen then to run to this strong tower, namely, that God is the protector of his people. It ought also to bee a shield of defence vnto vs, as well against all Satans fierie darts, as against the assaults of our visible enemies.

Behold I haue taken.] He propounds vnto the matter of good hope, to wit, that God chastiseth his Church but for a time. By which, the Iewes were to learne, that all the calamities which threatned them, were iust recompences of their transgressions: as also that the rod should bee tied to their backs, till God had received them to mercy. The summe is, that his wrath will be appeased in such wise, that he will mitigate their afflictions, and will cause the iudgements wherewith he had for the present visited his Church, to cease. In the seuenteenth verse wee haue spoken of the similitude of the cup: and this place doth sufficiently confirme that which was said there, God mentions the cuppe of his wrath then, which caused his Church to tremble, as if hee had bin smitten with giddines: notwithstanding the Prophet vseth the word Tarata, which some translate Anguish: others, Trembling. By the dregs, hee means that the measure of Gods vengeance shall be full; so as God, for the loue hee beares to his children, will be satisfied.

God afflicteth his Church but for a time. 1 2

Verf. 23. But I will put it into their hand that spoile thee, which haue said to thy soule; Bow downe, that we may goe ouer: and thou hast laid thy body as the ground, and as the streete to them that went ouer.

THIS is the other part of the consolation, where hee promiseth, that the Lord will not onely content himselfe to deliuer his Church out of so many euils, but will also send vpon her enemies, all the calamities wherewith shee was afflicted. Are wee pressed then, & persecuted? A time will come, wherein God will speedily turne our captiuitie, and our (enemies in their turne) shall be plauged to the vtmost. For it is iust with God (as Paul saith) to render affliction to those which trouble you, and to you that are troubled, rest with vs, when the Lord Iesus shall shew himselfe from heauen with his mightie Angels in flaming fire, rendring vengeance vnto the that know not God, nor obey not the Gospel of our Lord Iesus Christ: 2. 1. 1. 6. 7. 8.

God corrects his own first, but the wicked must keepe their turne next Prou. 11. 8. Hebr. 7. 10.

The temporall punishments then which God inflicteth vpon them in this life, are the beginnings of their endless torments in hell, to which at the last they shall bee adiudged. And the better to describe the insolencie and pride of their enemies, (the like wherof we taste at this day from our aduersaries) hee sets downe their words, in which they shamefully tyrannized ouer the children of God: for pride & crueltie are the inseparable companions of impietie: for as the true knowledge of God makes men lowly; so the ignorance of God makes men proud and cruell. Wee see how such as know not God, flatter themselves, and proudly doe they insult against the Lord, and against his faithfull seruants. I grant this is a thing ful of misery, and a great indignitie; but seeing he is pleased to suffer his name to be exposed to the outrages of the wicked, let vs not much be moued, if we be wronged for his names sake: for wee are not

THE LII. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. Arise, arise, put on ſtrength O Zion; put on the garments of thy beautie, O Ieruſalem, the holy Citie: for henceforth there ſhall no more come vnto thee, the vncircumciſed and the vncleane.

He confirms the former doctrine, that he might the better awaken and rowze vp the peoples mindes, which were drenched in grieſe & anguiſh: for it was neceſſarie this ſhould be added to the former, as a ſpurte to quicken them vp, and to make way for this doctrine, that it might the more eaſily enter into their amazed and inſenſible hearts. He ſpeakes to the Church, as to one aſtoniſhed and in a ſlumber, and bids her ariſe to gather new forces, and to reſume her ſoule a freſh. Which hee repeates ariſe, and not without cauſe: for it is very hard to awaken, and to cauſe ſuch to take heart againe vnto them, that are ſmitten; nay, laid flat vpon all four with the feeling of Gods wrath.

Put on thy ſtrength. As if hee ſhould ſay; Thou haſt hitherto wallowed thy ſelfe in duſt and aſhes, as one forlorne, by reaſon of thy anguiſhes: but now ariſe, and fit thy ſelfe to receiue that happy eſtate into which the Lord is purpoſed to ſet thee. Hee oppoſeth ſtrength then to ſaintheartedneſſe, with which we are vſually combred, when things grow deſperate; and the beautiful or glorious garments, to ſilthineſſe and naſtineſſe.

Then he adds the reaſon; to wit, that God will henceforth ſuffer the wicked no more to take their ſwinge, as they haue done in waſting and ſpoiling his Church at their pleaſures. She hath now cauſe therefore to reioice, being rid out of the tyrants hands: and alſo for her ſafetie, wherein there is plentifull occaſion of ioy and gladneſſe miniſtred vnto her for the time to come. But herewith Iſaiah ſummons vs to a common and generall reioicing, when the Church is receiued againe into Gods fauour: for queſtionleſſe, if there bee any ſparke of true godlineſſe in vs, wee ought to be exceedingly moued at her happineſſe, and to laugh and ſing for ioy when ſhe flouriſheth, and to vveepe with her when ſhe is perſecuted. In a word, ſhe ſhould be the very fullneſſe of our ioy: according as the Plaſmiſt ſaith; Let my tongue cleaue to the rooſe of my mouth, if I preſerre not Ieruſalem to my chiefe ioy: Plaſ. 137.6.

By the word comes, hee means that which we ſay commonly, To haue entrance: for the Lord ſhuts vp the paſſage againſt the wicked, that they cannot range abroad at their pleaſures vnpuniſhed, as they were wont. By uncircumciſed and uncleane, hee means all ſuch prophane ones, as corrupt the pure ſeruite of God, and oppreſſe mens conſciences by their tyranny. They are wont to call all them uncircumciſed, who were ſtrangers from Gods Church, who had the ſigne of circumciſion; for with that all the faithfull were marked. But in reſpect that many bare this badge of the covenant, who were no whit better then the reſt; to remoue all ambiguitie, he adds, the vncleane. For the cutting away of the foreſkinne, was nothing in it ſelfe; and is by Saint Paul accounted as uncircumciſion, if the puritie of the heart bee not ioined therewith: Rom. 2.25. Gal. 3.6. Thus the Prophet ſhewes then, that ſuch kinde of perſons ſhall haue no place in the Church; that all corruptions being aboliſhed, and the true worſhip of God reſtored, ſhe may inioy a perfect and happy eſtate. In the meane while, I conſent to thoſe who reſeſt this to the open enemies of the church, whom the Prophet brands with theſe odious names; that the ſeueritie of this chaſtiſement might put the Iewes in mind of the greatnes of their iniquities.

Auoir entree.

The ſigne of circumciſion auails nothing, vneſſe the puritie of the hart doth concurre therewith.

Verſ. 2. Shake thy ſelfe from the duſt: ariſe, and ſit downe, O Ieruſalem: looſe the bands of thy necke, O thou captiue daughter Zion.

The Prophet deſcribes the Churches deſertion more at large, and ſets it forth in very excellent termes. In bidding her ſhake off the duſt, and to ariſe, let vs not by and by gather, that wee haue free will in our ſteues to uſe it when we thinke good: for it belongs to God onely to pull vs out of the duſt, and to ſet thoſe that are fallen, upon their feet, and to let looſe the priſoners, by taking off, or breaking aſunder their bands and fetters. But wherefore doth the Prophet then inioine vs that, which ought not (as it ſeemes) to be required of vs, ſeeing it is not in our powers to performe it? I anſwere, that to ſpeake in this commanding ſort, hath much greater force in it to awaken vs, then if he had onely ſaid in naked termes, that we ſhould doe this or that: and therefore he pronounceth, that God hauing ſet her into her firſt libertie, ſhe ſhould now come forth of the mire.

An amplification.

No free will in vs to that which is good.

Queſt.

Anſ.

Rom. 12.15.

A confirmation of the former doctrine.

The word to sit, signifies a flourishing estate, and is opposed to the verb to lie, whereby is meant an extreme miserie. I grant, that sometimes to sit downe, signifies to be made low: as when it is said to Babylon, Sit thou in the dust, Chap. 47. 1. But it is here taken in another signification, for hauing commanded her to arise, he by and by addes, and sit downe, meaning, that she should no more lie along, but should be restored to her former estate, and should no more afterwards be troden downe by her enemies.

Verf. 3. For thus saith the Lord, ye were sold for nought, therefore shall you be redeemed without money.

It will be as e. fit for God to redeeme his Church, as it was for him to suffer her to be sold.

This verse hath bin ill expounded by many, who haue descanted here too subtilly, for they haue inuented many things besides the Prophets purpose. Now this agrees with that which he hath said in the 50. Chapter verf. 1. where he asketh for the creditor to whom he sold them: and here he saith in like maner, you were sold for nought: as if he had said, that he tooke no money, neither was he engaged to any creditor at all that could challenge them by right of sale. This serues greatly to cōfirme the promise: for the Iewes might doubt touching the truth of this promised freedome, in regard the Chaldeans the mightiest of all nations, held them prisoners a long time. But the Lord preuents this doubt, saying, I neither sold, nor pawned you. You were sold for nought, and therefore I may require you againe, and claime you as mine owne. Stand not so much then whether the matter be hard to compass or no, seeing I haue promised you libertie, neither dispute you too and fro of the matter by your carnall reason, for y^e Chaldeans haue no right at all to keepe possession, neither can they be able to hinder your passage. To conclude, euen as in the place before alleaged he cleared himselfe from the imputation of an vnchrist, who is compelled to make sale of, or to pawne his children for debt, so in this place he shewes that they were taken from him, and were let go of him gratis, for no other cause, but in regard they had prouoked him therunto by their iniquities, Chap. 50. 1. Therefore there is no more difficultie to redeeme them, then there was in parsing from them.

Some expound this more subtilly, that we are redeemed freely by Christ. The doctrine no doubt is true: but it agrees not with the Prophets intention (in this place) for his meaning is to correct the diffidence of the Iewes, that he might assure them of their freedome. Let it suffice then that when God is purposed to redeeme his Church, he will not stand much about beating the price with the Chaldeans, whom he will easily chase from their vniust possession, and that whether they will or no.

Verf. 4. For thus saith the Lord God, My people went downe afore time into Egypt to sojourne there, and Assur oppressed them without cause.

The expositors soare aloft heere, and in the meane while come nothing neere the matter. The Iewes forge three captiuities heere. The Christians differ from them, in supposing that it is spoken heere of the third captiuitie vnder Antichrist, frō which Christ shall deliuer them. But in my judgement the Prophet hath a farre other meaning, for he argues from the lesse to the greater, and allegeth the captiuitie vnder Pharaoh, from which the people in old time were deliuered by the wonderfull power of the Lord. His argument stands thus then: If the Lord punished the Egyptians because they dealt so barbarouslie with his people, much more will he be reuenged on the Chaldeans, who no lesse cruellie tyrannized ouer them. For Pharaoh had much more shew of reason to domineere ouer the Iewes then the Chaldeans had. For Iacob going downe into Egypt with his familie, subiected himselfe therby vnder Pharaohs power, who in thankfulness for the good seruice which Ioseph had done him and the kingdom, assigned out to his father and brethren a very large countrie, fit to nourish their cattell in for their abode. The successors of Pharaoh prouing vnthankfull, and forgetting the benefits receiued by Iosephs meanes, they afflicted all Iacobs posteritie diuers waies. Neither was the Lord behind hand with them in recompensing this vnkindnes and ingratitude with a swift and seuerer vengeance. But the wickednes of the Chaldeans was farre worse, and more insupportable, in that they cast the Iewes out of their countrie, vnto which they had a iust title, to leade them away captiue. If the Lord then could not endure the ingratitude, nor the vniust taxes which the Egyptians laid vpon the Israelites, though they might claime a iust possession, how much lesse would he suffer this violence and crueltie of the Chaldeans, who had no right at all to retaine his people, but oppressed them by force and tyrannie?

See Chap. 49. 24. 25.

By Assur, he meanes the Chaldeans, who were ioined vnder one Monarchie with the Assyrians: but he names the Assyrian especially, because he was the first who greatly afflicted Iudeah, and made a way to this captiuitie.

Verf. 5. Now therefore what haue I heere saith the Lord, that my people is taken away for nought, and they that rule over them make them to howle, saith the Lord? and my name all the day continuallie is blasphemed?

HE prosecutes, and confirms that which I haue said, namely, that he hath no reason to suffer his people to lie any longer vnder this seruitude: in these words therefore he doth as it were blame his owne delay. As if he should say, Shall I not manifest my power? Shall I not defend my people? If Pharaoh who who was ſo lawfull a poſſeſſor, could not reſiſt me; ſhall theſe thieves and robbers bee ſtronger then he?

In the next place he recites the cauſes that ſhould moouſe him to call backe their captiuitie. But we muſt heere ſupply a cloſe oppoſition in the word taken: for the Egyptians led not Iacob captiue forcibly: hee went downe thither willingly when ſamin preſſed him; and yet his poſſeſſion was let free. How much more ſhall they bee violently plucked out of their hands, who forced them out of their owne Country; to ſubdue them as ſlaues againſt their will?

Afterwards, to augment the indignitie of the fact, he ſaith his people were conſtrained to bowle, or cry, without ceaſing. Some expound it otherwiſe: but I thinke it is ſaid to augment the fault, in regard hee expreſſeth what violence and oppreſſion the Chaldeans exerciſed ouer the Iewes: for they contented not themſelues to vſurpe an vniuſt dominion ouer them, but they handled their priſoners cruelly. Moreouer, to cry or bowle, argues a deeper miſeric then when we ſigh or weepe. Doubtleſſe there is appearance that the sorrow is violent, when the ſame extorts yellings and pittifull cries. It is indeede a ſimilitude taken from wilde beaſtes, which ſhewes an extreme deſpaire.

And that my name ſhould be expoſed all the day long to blaſphemies. This is the third and principall reaſon why the Lord will deliuer his people; namely, that his name may not alwaies be made a ſcorne, nor laid open to the outrages of the wicked; for hee reſpects his owne honour, and therefore conſerues his Church, and the worſhip of his name: but when the Church is ſcattered, then the wicked by and by take occaſion to belch forth their blaſphemies, and offer proud contempt euen againſt the higheſt Maieſtie. It is rightly ſaid then, that in deliuering his people, he will defend his own cauſe. I will neither ſtand to recite nor confute the diuerſities of expoſitions vpon this place, becauſe I thinke it ſufficient that I haue briefly touched the nauie ſenſe of the Prophets words.

Verſ. 6. Therefore my people ſhall know my name: therefore they ſhall know in that day, that I am he that doth ſpeake: behold* it is I.

*Or, I will be preſent.

The concluſion.

The Prophet concludes that from this verſe, which hee touched in the two former verſes; namely, that the people ſhould in the end bee deliuered by the Lord, who will not be found contrary vnto himſelfe. For if hee hath redeemed their fathers: and if hee hath alwaies aſſiſted his Church (in former times) he will neuer ſuffer their ſucceſſors to be ouerwhelmed, whom he hath adopted. We are diligently to obſerue the verb Shall know: for the knowledge of the name of God, conſiſts firſt, in reiecting all ſuperſtitious: ſecondly, to know him in his word, which is his liuely image; and thirdly, by his works. We muſt not forge a god after our owne fantaſies & luſts; but ſo comprehend him, as he hath maniſteſted himſelfe vnto vs. Thus the Lord concludes then, that he will effectually aſſiſt and accompliſh whatſoeuer hee hath promiſed; that the people may know their expectation is not in vaine, and may heereby bee more and more conſumed in the knowledge of his name.

But we muſt remember what we haue ſaid heerebefore touching that experimentall knowledge, which ſubſcribes to the authoritie of the word. Moreouer, Gods ſpeaking is to bee referred to his promiſes, and his preſence to his actual power. As if he ſhould ſay; Albeit you heare nothing now but the ſound of words, in which I promiſe you things almoſt incredible, yet heereafter you ſhall ſee the performance thereof: for I purpoſe really to act that which I haue promiſed. Hence we may gather a generall doctrine; namely, that the promiſes and the execution thereof, are knit together with an inſeparable bond. As oft as Satan then ſolicites vs to diſtruſt, as if God had quite and cleane reiected vs; let vs remember this point, and let vs truſt boldly in the name of our God, who neuer promiſeth ought in vaine: and if it falles out that he performs not the ſame forthwith, yet he will doe it in conuenient time.

Verſ. 7. How beautifull vpon the mountaines are the feete of him that declareth and publiſbeth peace! that declareth good tidings, and publiſbeth ſaluation, ſaying vnto Zion; Thy God reigneth.

The Prophet confirms the faithfull againe in the certaintie of Gods word: Firſt, to giue them certaine aſſurance of being reſtored to their firſt freedom: and next, that hee might in the meane while ſuſtaine their hearts in good hope, during this ſore bondage. Hee ſpeakes elegantly in the commendation of this meſſage, that the faithfull might content themſelues in this calamitie, with the offer of the hope of their ſaluation to come. For indeed, they were to imbrace this conſolation propounded vnto them, that being fortified therewith, they might quietly and patiently expect an happy iſſue of the promiſe. That the faithfull then might bridle their deſires by patience, he adorneſ the word of God with excellent ſtiles. (As if hee ſhould ſay) Can you be ſo vnthankfull, as not to content your ſelues with this inſeſtimable treaſure of God word, which brings ſo many commodities with it? Will you let looſe the raines to your vnbriſled affectiones? Will ye indeede complaine of God? For his meaning is to call backe the people from their diffidence, who were ouercarried through diuers allurements, and would not reſt ſecurely vpon the truth of Gods word. For this cauſe hee extolles the excellencie of his doctrine, and ſhewes, that the Lord will giue much more by it, then wee can aſke or thinke.

Besides, it is plaine that hee speaks not heere of euery kind of doctrine, but of that onely which is fit to yeeld consolation. Hee shewes then that the seete of such as bring glad tidings from Gods mouth, are pleasant and desirable. Why so? Because this consolation serues not onely to assuage our sorrows, but brings with it inestimable ioy: for he speaks heere of the doctrine of saluation; and therefore he saith, that by it, peace, good tidings, and saluation is published. By the word peace, hee vnderstands an happy and prosperous estate: but wee haue heereofore intreated at large touching the signification of this word.

Saying to Zion, &c.] Hence we gather what the beginning of this doctrine is, which Isaiah published, and what it is wee ought principally to desire; namely, that the kingdome of God may be established amongst vs: for if he reigne not, all things must needs fall to ruine, and so by consequence, our estate must be miserable. As on the contrary, the onely way to saluation is, when God vouchsafes to take the care of vs: and it is also the meanes whereby we obtaine peace, how confused or desperate soeuer things otherwise are.

Let vs also remember that this message appertaines to Zion; that is to say, to the church. For what haue the prophane and ignorant sort to doe with it? The Apostle Saint Paul alleageth this place, Rom. 10. 15. to prooue that the preaching of the Gospell is of God, and not of men; and that it is hee who sends the Ministers, which bring the glad tidings of saluation. Now he vseth this gradation; Who soeuer shall call on the name of the Lord, shall bee saved: but vve cannot call upon him whom vve know not? For what giues praiser entrance but faith, by which, hauing embraced God for our father, we may familiarly discharge all our cares into his bosome? But whereupon is this faith grounded? Vpon the doctrine of the Gospell, whereby the Lord manifesteth his loue vnto vs: and for this end vseth the labours and ministry of men. In conclusion therefore, the Apostle addes, that none is fit to preach this word, vnlesse he be sent of God. But it seemes as if Saint Paul wrested these words of the Prophet, to serue his owne turne: for hee speaks not heere of Gods sending forth of Ministers, but rather how welcome their coming ought to be vnto vs. I answer, that the Apostle hath held this resolu'd principle; namely, that we must desire none, but such as are sens of God. But from whom comes this saluation? Comes it from men? No such matters: for a benefit so excellent, can come to vs from none but God himselfe. He rightly concludes then, that this saluation proceeds from God, and not from man.

Verf. 8. The voice of thy watchmen shall bee heard: they shall lift vp their voice, and shout together: for they shall see eye to eye when the Lord shall bring againe Zion.

A continuation of the

HE continues on his speech, shewing, that the restoration of the people shall be such, as the messenger shall boldly publish it. former confirmation.

By the lifting up of the voice, he signifies the same that he spake of before touching these words, upon the mountaines: for the thing shall not be done in a corner, but it shall be so manifest and apparant, that all shall be smitten with astonishment. Those who speake of things doubtfull, mutter them out betwene the teeth, and dare not lift vp their voice: but this shall be no perplexed or doubtfull matter. The Prophet borrowed this similitude from watchmen, whom they were wont to place in Cities: though all the Prophets indeed are called by this name, because they are placed in the watch-tower to watch for the peoples safetie. Hab. 2. 1. Chap. 2. 1. 1.

When hee saith, they should lift vp their voice, it is to shew, that during the captiuitie, there should be silence; because the tongues of the Prophets should then cleaue to the roofof their mouths: for albeit they admonished euery one priuately, yet they should not haue liberty to preach publicly. In which respect also, Jeremiah saith; I will put my mouth in the dust: Lam. 3. 29. But when the Lord shall cause the captiuitie of his people to returne, then the watchmen which were dumbe before, should haue their mouths opened to publish their freedome: for they should not speake in hugger mugger, neither should they content themselves to giue some priuie token of this consolation; but should boldly proclaim this saluation vpon the mountaines: verf. 7. Which also appears by that in Chap. 40. 1, 2, 3. where wee haue handled this matter more fully. Eze. 3. 16.

Eye to eye.] That is to say, plainly and openly. These things are indeed to be extended to our spirituall conuersion. I grant wee are to tie our selues to the literal sense; yet so, that we are to comprehend vnder the same, that sauour which God shewed to this ancient people: for these things were accomplished when he set the Iewes free; and for this end hee vsed the ministrie of Zerobabel, Ezra, and Nehemiah. But yet wee must stretch the same euen to Christs coming, at which time the Church was gathered from all the parts of the world; yea, more then that, euen to Christs last coming, in which all things shall be set into their perfect estate.

HE exhorts the faithfull to thanksgiving. But his speciall drift is to confirme their hearts in the expectation and assurance of this saluation, as if the inioying of the thing called them presently to thankfulness. For the truth is, we are too little affected when the Lord protests that he will assist vs: yea, wee thinke he doth but mock vs, vnlesse he effect that which he hath promised. The Prophets therefore are wont to insist very much vpon this point, namely, in confirming the peoples hearts, & in setting their deliuerance as it were before An exhortation to reioice. Why the Prophets insisted so leag in pressing the promises before before their eyes. Now howſoever it ſeemes aike and abſurd to call to ſong of ioy in the time of heauines, as in Pſal. 137. 4. yet wee haue formerly ſhewed, that this manner of ſpeech is very fit to awaken ſuch as grone vnder the burthen of care, feare, or ſorrow. He mentions the deſerts, or deſolate places of Ieruſalem, to the end they ſhould hope for the re-edifying thereof, notwithstanding the now lay in the duſt: for this title agrees better for the removing away of feare, then if he had called her an happie or flouriſhing citie. From the time then that ſhe fell into this moſt miſerable eſtate, they would haue thought theſe promiſes had concerned them nothing at all, vnleſſe the miſeries againſt which they were to encounter had bin manifeſted vnto them. It alſo taught them to wait for this reſtauration in aſſured hope, though they now ſaw nothing but horrible ruins, and deſolations.

For the Lord hath comforted.] The Lord turned the peoples mourning into ioy, and of captiues, ſet them free. Some may obiekt that this was not yet come to paſſe. But in Gods promiſes we muſt behold thoſe things plainly, which as yet appeare not to our ſenſes, how farre ſoever they ſurpaſſe the reach of our reaſon.

He hath redeemed his people.] Here wee ſee that the deliuerance of the Church is the proper worke of God. And if this ought to be affirmed in regard of that deliuerance out of Babylon, which was but a figure or ſhadow, what ſhall we ſay of our ſpiritual deliuerance it ſelfe? Can that be attributed to men, without offering great wrong vnto God? Let vs conclude then, that as it appertaines to God only to deliuer his Church, ſo none but he can preſerue her free eſtate.

Verſ. 10. The Lord hath made bare his holy arme in the ſight of all the Gentiles, and all the ends of the earth ſhall ſee the ſaluation of God.

Arm made bare.] This is a ſimilitude taken from men of armes, who turned vp their ſceues when they prepared themſelues to the combate. Though to make bare here ſignifies not ſo much the making of the arme naked, as the maniſteſting of it, and ſtretching it forth. For when wee ſit ſtill, our armes are lightly folded one in another, or wee couer them: ſo in regard of our ſenſeleſnes, we imagine that God ſits idle, as men are wont to do, vntill he maniſt his power.

He calles it the arme of his holines, in regard that he ſhould diſplay his power for the ſaluation of the people: for there is here a mutuall correſpondencie betweene God and his Church, which is conſecrated vnto him. I grant that his arme is made bare in the gouernment of the whole world: but it is neuer called the arme of his holines (as in this place) but when he giues ſome ſpeciall reliefe vnto his Church. The power of God muſt be conſidered two waies: firſt, generally, in the conſeruation of all the creatures: then, ſpeeciallie in the protection of his Church, for the care he hath thereof is patticular, and not common to others.

In the ſight of all the Gentiles.] His meaning is, that this deliuerance ſhall be worlde of ſo great admiration, that euen the blind themſelues ſhal ſee it. Whereas this noble ſpectacle is manifeſted to the ends of the earth, we there in perceiue that ſy Prophet ſpeakes not only of the bringing againe of Zidon, as in verſ. 8. which ſhould happen ſome few yeeres after, but of the generall reſtauration of ſy whole Church both of Iewes and Gentiles. The Rabbins therefore do maliciously reſtraine this to the deliuerance out of captiuitie from Babylon. And the Chriſtians on the other ſide vnaptly to our ſpiritual deliuerance, which wee obtaine by Chriſt: for we muſt begin at the deliuerance vnder Cyrus, and goe on ſtill euen till our owne times. Thus then the Lord beget to maniſt his arme among the Medes and Perſians, but afterwards he made it appeare in the ſight of all nations.

Verſ. 11. Depart ye, depart ye: go out from hence, and touch no vnclene thing: goe out of the miſt of her: be ye cleane, that beare the veſſels of the Lord.

HE now exhorts the people to be alwaies readie to depart, and yet in the meane while patientlie to indure their miſeric: for as the ouer-great haſte of the people to be looſed deſerued to be reſeſed, ſo their droulines was to be quickned, in reſpect that before their deliuerance euery ones deſire was wonderfullie kindled to returne; but when the time was expired, their long expectation had abated their heate, and had deſerued them not only of all hope, but of all will or deſire to returne, ſo as the number of thoſe that came back againe into Iudea was very ſmall. They were mingled amongſt the Babylonians, who had ſo enticed and corrupted them, that they made little or no reckning at all of their cuntry. It was very needfull therefore that they ſhould be awakened and quickned vp to be of good courage in this their long attendance, and that they ſhould not ſuffer themſelues to be ſtained with the filthineſſes of the Babylonians.

The ſecond member wherein he forbids them to touch any vnclene thing, doth better confirme that I was about to ſay. For he commaunds them to keepe themſelues pure and cleane fro the pollutions in which the Chaldeans plunged themſelues, becauſe there was danger that they might be corrupted with heatheniſh ſuperſtitions, to which vice wee are by nature too much enclined, and are therefore eaſily miſed by euill examples. He exhorts them then notwithstanding their captiuitie, not to yeeld to any thing whereby to pleaſe their cruell Lords, in hope to mend their condition: not to be drawne away by any allurements from the pure worſhip of God; nor to deſile themſelues with Babylonian Idolatries: that they ſhould not ſo much as in outward ſhew bow downe to the Idols, nor consent to false religion, for this is that accursed pollution which the Lord exhorts them heere to auoid. Such temptations as these aforesaid, are incident to poore prisoners that are oppressed vnder Tyrants, which sometimes to faint, that they giue themselues leaue to doe many wicked and vnlawfull things, vnder pretence that they would thereby assuage the furie of Tyrants. But in this place we see how frivoulous their excuses be. For the Prophet not only requires this puritie of the Lewes when they shall be set free, but also during the time of their slauerie and bondage, yea, though it were with the losse of their liues in the very place.

Doubtlesse these aduertisements also belong vnto vs, who by S. Paul are exhorted to purge our selues from all impuritie both of body and minde, 2. Cor. 7. 1. Moreover, Isaiah directs this exhortation particularly to the Priests and Leuites, who were to shew themselves most constant, in regard they were the standard-bearers: not that it was lawfull for others to defile themselves, but he speaks principallie to them, that they might giue good example to those ouer whom God had placed them as Captaines and Leaders. We are also to remember what we haue seene heretofore, which Isaiah also will repeate againe in the end of his booke, namely, that there should be a new Priesthood planted out the redeemed people. And yet I willingly consent, that the Leuites & Ministers of the Temple are heere mentioned by way of excellencie, for all the people. Thus this doctrine then appertaines at this day not only to the Ministers of the word, but to all Christians in generall, who are also called a royall Priesthood, 1. Pet. 2. 9. and are not only appointed to beare the vessels of the temple, but are also themselves the temples of God, 1. Cor. 3. 6. For this cause Ezechiel hath foretold, that in the restauration of the Church, the Leuites should be high Priests, and all the people should be put in the place of Leuites. Seeing then that the Lord hath aduanced all vnto so high a degree and dignitie, it necessarilie followes, that this puritie is required of all without exception, and therefore S. Paul applies this place to the whole Church, 2. Cor. 6. 17.

Verf. 12. For ye shall not goe out with haste, nor depart by fleeing away: but the Lord will goe before you, and the God of Israel will gather you together.

An amplification.

THE Prophet againe amplifies this benefit of their redemption, for they were all so swallowed vp with despaire, that they thought it a matter incredible. He especiallie speaks to them that were to goe into captiuitie, that they should not faint in being brought to such a wofull condition. But he promiseth them that this deliuerance shall not be by flight, as that out of Egypt was. For there is heere a close comparison betweene their deliuerance out of Egypt, and this out of Babylon. For they fled by night out of Egypt, fainting as if they had only meant to haue gone three dayes iourney to offer sacrifice vnto God, Exod. 3. 5. and 8. 27. Afterward, they went forth hastily and with tumult, as it was enioined them, Exod. 12. 31. and then Pharaoh pursued them, thinking vterly to haue destroyed them, Exod. 13. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9.

But heere it is said, it shall be farre otherwise with the Lewes (at this time) for they shall goe forth like Conquerors, so as none shall dare to stop their passage. In a word, they should depart thence (as wee are wont to say) with banner displayed. This deliuerance then shall be much more excellent and admirable, then that of Egypt.

The Lord shall goe before you.] That is to say, hee shall leade you, and be your Captaine in the way. But will some say, Did not God also conduct the ancient people, when he brought them out of Egypt? It is true indeed; but he shewed not his maiestie so fully then as hee did heere. For now he brought out his people as a valiant Captaine doth his souldiers, after hee hath gotten the field of the enemy. To this appertaines the word, shall gather: for they should not be scattered one from another, as it falls out in some sudden astonishment; neither should they wander to and fro, but should march in troups in good array, as vnder their colours. It is as much then as if he had said, God will conduct you like an armie assembled by himselfe, one shall not follow another as it were by stealth, but being knit all together, you shall march boldly without feare, none shall hinder you, for you shall be gathered vnder the leading of God, to returne home into your countrie.

Verf. 13. Behold, my seruant shall prosper: he shall be exalted and extolled, and be very high.

Isaiah hauing spoken of the restauration of the Church, comes now to Christ, in whom all things in heauen and in earth are gathered together, as saith the Apostle, Ephes. 1. 10. Some expound the verb ascit, Shall behaue himselfe prudentlie: but because it is by and by added, that he shall be exalted, the scope of the text requires it (as I think) that we should rather translate, He shall prosper, seeing the infinitiue, Sacal, signifies so much. Hee speaks then touching the prosperous estate of the Church. But because there was no such thing to be seene in outward appearance, he brings vs to the sueraigne King, who should set all things in their perfect estate, and bids them to wait for him. Now the oppositions which the Prophet heere vseth are diligentlie to be marked, for he opposeth the highnes of this King whom the Lord would exalt, to the poore and miserable condition of this people, who were almost brought into despaire. And he promiseth that this King shall be the head of the people, who shall flourish vnder so worthe a leader, though now they be afflicted and brought to the gates of destruction. Why so? Because all things shall prosper that their King takes in hand.

The restauration of the Church consisteth whollie in Christ.

I

He

He calles Christ a ſervant, in reſpect of the office which God had impoſed vpon him. For Christ is not to bee conſidered of heere, as bearing the perſon of a private man; but with that office which the Father had committed vnto him, namely, that he might be this leader and conducer of the Church, and might reſtore all things. And let vs for our part know, that the things heere ſpoken of Christ, doe alſo belong vnto vs. Christ is giuen vs of God, and therefore haue wee intereſt in his office. For the Prophet might haue ſaid in a word, that he ſhould be exalted and be verie high: but in attributing to him the name of a ſervant, it is as much as if he had ſaid; Hee is thus exalted for your ſakes.

Vers. 14. As many were aſtonied at thee, his viſage was ſo deformed of men, and his forme of the ſonnes of men.

Hee vſeth this preuention, in regard this imitic and dignitie of Christ appeared not at the firſt bliſh: for which cauſe they might take occaſion to reiect him. Therefore the Prophet ſhewes, that Christ muſt firſt be humbled and made low. And thus he preuents the doubts which might haue cauſed them to ſtagger, in beholding his abieſt and deformed eſtate! As if he ſhould ſay, You muſt not deſpiſe this his baſeneſſe and deſormitic, for it brings with it forthwith eternall felicitie.

By men, I vnderſtand not this by way of comparison, as many expound it, to wit, More then men: or, Aboue that which fallies out among men: But I willingly accept of the plainſt ſenſe, namely, that Christ was deformed among men: or, that his beautie was defaced, in regard of the peruerſe iudgements of men.

All were aſtoniſhed.] Some take this aſtoniſhment for that admiration which men were in, when they ſaw the miracles which Christ did: and yet being brought to the Croſſe, they ſtraightway reiect him. But they come nothing neere the Prophets meaning: for hee ſaith, that Christ ſhall be ſo deformed, that all ſhall be aſtonied at him: his baſeneſſe of birth was ſuch, as all deſpiſed him; his glory was hid vnder the infirmitie of fleſh. And howſoeuer a maieltie worthy of the onely begotten Sonne of God, ſhined in him; yet men diſcerned it not: but they rather gazed vpon that his abaſements, which eclipsed and darkened his glory. See heere the true cauſe of this aſtoniſhment then, namely, becauſe he conuerſed among men, without any outward pompe. For the Iewes expected not a Meſſias of ſo meane an eſtate. Now at his crucifying this aſtoniſhment was augmented much more.

Saint Paul ſpeakes of this abaſement of Christ, and then of his exaltation, when hee ſaith; He being in the forme of God, thought it no robbetrie to be equall vnto God, but he humbled (or emptied himſelfe) by taking vpon him the forme of a ſervant, and was made like vnto men, and was found in ſhape as a man. Hee humbled himſelfe and became obedient vnto the death, euen vnto the death of the Croſſe. Wherefore God hath alſo highly exalted him, and giuen him a name aboue euery name, that at the name of Ieſus, euery knee ſhould bow, both of things in heauen, and things in earth, and things vnder the earth: and that euery tongue ſhould confeſſe that Ieſus is the Lord, vnto the glory of God the Father. It was needfull the that Christ ſhould firſt be humbled and ſhamefully intreated, and that this glory into which hee was exalted, ſhould not appeare at the firſt. But after his humiliation vpon the Croſſe, came a glorious reſurrection, with a ſoueraigne degree of honour.

Christ humbled before he was exalted.

Vers. 15. So ſhall hee ſprinkle manie nations: the Kings ſhall ſhut their mouthes at him: for that which had not been told them ſhall they ſee, and that which they had not heard, ſhall they vnderſtand.

Others expound, Hee ſhall diſtill: ſo, vnder a figure, taking it To ſpeake. But ſeeing the verbe Nafa ſignifies to ſprinkle; and being ſo taken in the holy Scriptures, I had rather follow this interpretation. His meaning is, that the Lord ſhall ſpread his word among many nations. In the next place he addes the effect of this doctrine, in laying, that Kings ſhall ſhut their mouthes in ſigne of aſtoniſhment: but yet diuers from that which he mentioned before: for men ſhut their mouthes and ſtand aſtoniſhed, when the matter is of ſuch conſequence, that they are vnable to expreſſe it, becauſe they can finde no wordes wherewith to vtter the ſame.

They ſhall ſee that which was not told them.] The Prophet ſhewes that this aſtoniſhment ſhall not proceede from the bare ſight of Christs perſon, but rather from the preaching of the Goſpell: for though he roſe againe, yet all eſteemed him dead, if the glory of his reſurrection had not been publiſhed. The preaching of the goſpel therefore maniſteſted thoſe things which neither the eye had ſcene, nor the eare heard of before: as alſo in regard of the publiſhing of this doctrine came to Kings and nations farre off, euen to the ends of the world.

Saint Paul alleudgeth this text, and ſhewes that it was fulfilled in his miniſterie, reioicing that hee had preached the Goſpell to thoſe who had neuer heard of it: Rom. 15. 21. For this is the office of an Apoſtle, and not of euery Miniſter now. Thus then our Prophet ſhewes, that the kingdome of Christ ſhall not be ſhut vp in ſo narrow bounds, as within the end of Iudeah; but ſhould ſpread it ſelfe further off. The Iewes vnderſtood ſomewhat by the Law and the Prophets; but the Gentiles knew nothing at all. This therefore by conſequence belongs vnto them.

Shall vnderſtand.] By this hee ſhewes that ſaith conſiſts in certentie & in allured knowledge:

THE LIII. CHAPTER.

Verf. 1. Who will beleue our report? and to whom is the arme of the Lord revealed?

An holy complaint in the person of all the Ministers of the Gospell.

He will not stand to speake of the diuision, or rather dismembring of this Chapter: for it should rather haue begunne at the 13. verse of the former Chapter. And this ought to be joined to that which was said a little before: for the Prophet staies heere as it were in the middle of his speech. For hauing said before, that the name of Christ should be published faere and neere, euen amongst strange nations; and yet that he shall be so contemptible, that these things shall in a sort be esteemed no better then fables, he now suddenly stops in the mid way as it were, and cries, that none would beleue him. And therewithall he also expresseth his griefe, to think that men should be so incredulous, as to reiect their owne saluation. This is an holy complaint then: for his will is, that all should know Christ, and yet he sees but a few which beleue the Gospell: which makes him to vtter this lamentable cry; Who hath beleueed our reports?

Vfe.

Let vs then sigh and complaine with the Prophet: yea, let vs be euen greued in our soules, if wee see little fruit to come of our labours, and let vs powre forth our complaints before God. For thus ought the faithfull seruants of God to be affected, if they meane sincerely to discharge their duties. Isaiah shewes then, that the number of those shall bee very small, that shall submit themselves to the Gospell of Christ: for when hee cries; Who will beleue our preaching? it is as much as if he had said; That of an hundred that heare the Gospell, scarcely one of them will proue a beleuer.

Neither speakes hee of himselfe onelie heere, but as one representing the person of all the faithfull Ministers. Although God send many of his seruants then, yet there are but a few that beleue: What shall become of them that inioy no preaching at all? shall we need to wonder much at their extreame blindness? If the earth that is well husbanded, brings forth but little fruit; what is to be expected from that that is vtterly barren; and vnhusbanded? But the Gospell loseth no whit of his excellencie, though it get but few followers: neither doth the small numbers of beleuers diminish the authoritie thereof, nor yet obscure the infinit glory of it: but rather so great is the mystery of it, that it can hardlie find any welcome in the world: for it is esteemed folly, 1. Cor. 1. 23. because it is far above the reach of their carnall reason.

In the second member Isaiah more clearly sets downe the reason why there are so few beleeuers. What is that? None can come vnto God, without the especiall illumination of his holy Spirit. But those are deceived in my iudgement, who thinke that arma heere signifies Iesus Christ. For it is a rendring of the cause, why the Gospell gets no more attendants; namely, they cannot comprehend the mysteries thereof by the dexteritie of their turall wit. This is a very worthy sentence therefore, and it is alleaged both by Saint Iohn and Saint Paul to this very purpose: Iohn saith; that albeit Christ had done so many miracles, yet they beleueed not: that the word which Isaiah had spoken might bee fulfilled; Lord, who hath beleueed our reports? and to whom is the arme of the Lord revealed? Iohn 12. 37. And Saint Paul saith; But all haue not obteied the Gospell for Isaiahs saith; Lord, who hath beleueed our preaching? Rom. 10. 16.

Both of them shew, how we are not to wonder if that which was so long since foretold, doth still come to passe, that so they might remoue that scandall which otherwise would remaine, in regard of this peoples revolt, who in stead of acknowledging and receiuing Christ when he came, did obstinately resist him. And yet Isaiah meant not to tax his own Countrymen alone with this sinne, but comprehends all those that shall succeede them to the end of the world: for as long as Christ shall haue any kingdome on earth, this propheticke must be daily accomplished. And therefore the faithfull ought to be confirmed with this testimonie, against such an offence. Moreover, this refutes their ignorance, who imagine that faith is in euery mans power, because the word preached is common to all. For though all be called to saluation by the ministry thereof, yet the Prophet expressly affirms, that the outward voice which calles, profits nothing, vnlesse the particular grace of the holy Ghost concurre therewith. But whence is this difference? Onely from Gods secret election, who referues the cause thereof hid in his owne counsell.

Th's inwarditie common both to Iewes and Gentiles.

Many called, but few chosen.

Verf. 2. But hee shall grow up before him as a branch, & as a roote out of a dry ground: he hath neither forme nor beautie: when we shall see him, there shall be no forme that we should desire him.

This senteuce hath reference to verf. 14. where it was said, that at the first appearing Wee must not iudge of him.

Chriſtes glorie by outward appearances, but according as the Scriptures deſcribes him vnto vs.

ring of Chriſt, he ſhould haue no forme nor beautie in mens eyes; but before God, he ſhould be highly exalted into a ſoueraigne degre of honour, and greatly eſteemed. By which wee are taught, not to iudge of Chriſts glory according to outward appearance, but by faith; ſo to apprehend him, as the holy Scriptures haue deſcribed him. And therefore this particule Before him, is oppoſed to humane reaſon, which cannot comprehend this his admirable greatneſſe.

He vſeth almoſt ſy very ſame ſimilitude with that in Chap. 11. 1. where he ſaid, that a roſe ſhould come forth of the ſtock of Iſſaſ; for the houſe of Dauid was then like a withered ſtock of a tree, which had no ſap nor any appearance of beautie left. And therefore in that place hee nameth not the houſe royal, but of Iſſaſ, whoſe name was then little renowned. Onely the Prophet addeth heere, a dry ground; thereby ſignifying, that Chriſt ſhould take no force from the moiſture of the earth, to cauſe him to grow as trees doe: but ſhould increaſe after a ſupernaturall manner. Thoſe who allegorize heere, and thinke that the Virgin Mary is called a dry ground in this place, becauſe ſhee conceiued by the holy Ghoſt, and not by the ſeed of man, doe miſſe their marke: for the queſtion is not heere touching Chriſt his birth, but of his whole kingdome.

Now the Prophet ſaith that he ſhall be like a branch iſſuing out of a drie ground, which in appearance will neuer grow to any ſtature. For indeed, if wee ſhall conſider by what meanes Chriſt hath eſtabliſhed his kingdome, and what perſons he hath vſed; the weake beginnings; and the numbers of aduerſaries that reſiſted him, we ſhall eaſily perceiue that all things came to paſſe as Iſaiab foretold. What were his Apoſtles, that they ſubdued ſo many Kings and Nations by the ſword of the ſpirit? May they not well be compoſed to little ſprigs? Thus the Prophet ſhewes then by what meanes Chriſtes kingdome ſhould be erected and eſtabliſhed, that we ſhould not iudge thereof as of a worldly kingdome. The deformitie whereof he ſpeakes in the next place, is not only to be referred to Chriſtes perſon, which being contemptible and deſpiſed of the world, was at laſt adiudged to a ſhamefull and curſed death; but alſo to his whole kingdome, which hath no forme, beautie, nor glorie at all in the eyes of men: in a word, no appearance at all to procure any great admiration in the eyes of worldlings. For albeit Chriſt roſe againe, yet the Iewes alwaies eſteemed him a man crucified, and full of reproch, ſo as they proudly diſdained him.

Verſ. 3. He is deſpiſed and reiected of men: he is a man full of ſorrowes, and hath experience of infirmities: We hid as it were our faces from him: he was deſpiſed, and we eſteemed him not.

This preſent verſe tends to the ſame purpoſe with the former; namely, that men ſhould reiect Chriſt, becauſe nothing was to be ſeene in him but ſorrowes and infirmities. The Iewes needed to haue this often repeated vnto them, that they might not conceiue a falſe opiniõ of Chriſt, nor of his kingdome: for he that wil rightly ſee his glory, muſt paſſe from his death, to his reſurreccion. Many are offended at his death, as if he had been overcome and overwhelmed of ir. But they muſt paſſe forwards to that diuine power and maiesty which ſhined in his reſurreccion: Rom. 1. 4. Yet if any ſhall begin at his reſurreccion, hee ſhall not follow the order heere preſcribed by the Prophet, neither ſhall he comprehend the mightie power of the Lord.

We almoſt hid our faces from him. It is not without cauſe that hee vſeth this word we: for thereby he ſhewes, that thus all men ſhall iudge of him. Neither ſhall any man be able euer to conceiue otherwiſe, vneleſſe the Lord correct and reforme his judgement by the holy Ghoſt. And how ſoever he ſeemes heere to taxe the Iewes principally, who ſhould diſdainfully reiect the Sonne of God promiſed and offered; yea and puts himſelfe in the number, as being a member of that body: yet let vs learne from this place notwithstanding, that the whole world is heere taxed and condemned of ingratitude, for contemning of Chriſt; becauſe they iudge him vnworthy, the looking vpon; may they turne their eyes from him, as from an abominable thing.

Verſ. 3. Surely hee hath borne our infirmities, and carried our ſorrowes: yet we did iudge him as plagued, and miſtaken of God, and humbled.

The particule Surely, is not onely an affirmatiue, but alſo ſerues for an expoſition; to wit, when any thing is brought to light that ſeemes ſtrange and vnwonted. For is it not wonderfull, nay monſtrous, that hee to whom God hath giuen ſoueraigne power ouer all creatures, ſhould be thus abaſed and humbled? So then, if the cauſe were not rendered heere, all would eſteeme this no better then a fable. Why was Chriſt thus couered ouer with dolours and infirmities? Surely becauſe he bare our ſorrowes. Saint Matthew alleadgeth this propheticke, after he hath told how Chriſt healed diſeaſes of diuers kinds: Chap. 8. 17. And yet it is moſt certaine, that he was appointed rather a Phyſician of mens ſoules, then of their bodies. Adde alſo that the Prophet ſpeakes of ſpiritual ſorrowes. But in the miracles ſhewed in the healing of mens bodies, Chriſt manifeſted a plaine prooſe of that power hee had to heale the ſickneſſes of their ſoules. This healing then whereof S. Matthew ſpeakes, extended further then to their bodies: for he was ordained a Phyſician of ſoules: Matth. 9. 11, 12. And this is the cauſe why Matthew attributes that to the ſigne, which agrees to the thing ſignified.

In the ſecond member the Prophet ſhewes the greatneſſe of this peoples ingratitude and peruerſitie, in that they did not ſee the cauſe why Chriſt was thus ſare humbled with the former.

He that wil take a right view of Chriſtes glorie, muſt paſſe from his death to his reſurreccion.

Now the Prophet ſerues downe the cauſe why Chriſt was thus ſare humbled.

Job. 18. 36.

This deformitie is not only to be referred to Chriſtes perſon, but to his whole kingdome.

The doctrine of this verſe is all one aud afflicted, but did rather iudge that hee was smitten of God for his owne finnes : and yet they knew well enough that hee was an innocent; yea the Iudge himselfe testified it: Matth. 27. 24. Luk. 23. 4. 14. 22. Iohn 18. 38. Since then they saw well that hee being not guiltie, bare the punishment of finnes which hee neuer committed, wherefore did they not conceiue some rare excellencie to be in him? But in regard they saw him smitten and despised, they neuer stood to examin the cause, but iudged onely by the euents, as the foolish are wont to doe. And for this cause Isaiah complaines of the forwardnesse of mens iudgements: which considered not of the reason why Christ was so greatly afflicted. And especially he bewailes the senselesse of the Iewes, in esteeming God the sworne enemy of Christ, without thinking of their owne iniquities, which by this meanes were done away.

Verf. 5. But hee was wounded for our transgressions, hee was broken for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was vpon him, and with his stripes we are healed.

*Or, in his wounds is our medicin.

A repetition of the cause, lest any should be offended at Christs abatement.

HE once again repeats the cause of these so great afflictions of Christ, to present the scandall that might arise: for vs spectacle of the Crosse drues many farre from Christ. That is to say; whilst they onely consider of that which is present before their eyes, not looking whereunto the same tends. But all offence is removed, when they see that by his death, he hath not onely done away our iniquities, but hath also obtained saluation for vs.

Some thinke that chastisement, is here called the chastisement of peace; because men were growne senselesse, and hardened in their finnes: and therefore it was needfull Christ should suffer. Others referre this peace to the conscience; namely, that Christ hath suffered, to giue our consciences rest. To which purpose Saint Paul saith; Being iustified by faith, wee haue peace with God: Rom. 5. 1. But I take this word simply for reconciliation; because Christ bare the chastisement which was due vnto vs. And thus the wrath of God iustly inflamed against vs, is appeased, and the peace made betwene God and vs, by meanes of this mediator, so as wee are now reconciled.

A generall doctrine.

Hence wee gather a generall doctrine; to wit, that wee are freely reconciled vnto God, because Christ hath paid the ranfome of our peace. The Papists will confesse thus much I grant; but by and by they restraine this doctrine to originall sinne: as if after baptisme, free reconciliation had no more place; but that we are to satisfie for the rest by our workes and merits. But our Prophet deales not heere with one kind of remission onely, but extends this benefit to all the parts of our liues: so as it cannot bee lessened nor restrained to one certaine time, without committing horrible sacrilege. And by this also it is easie to overthrow the friuolous distinction of the Sophisters, touching the remission of the punishment and the fault: for they will not haue the punishment remitted, vnlesse it be abolished by satisfactions. But the Prophet plainly shewes, that the punishment due to vs for our finnes, is laid vpon Christ. What doe our Papists then but make themselues ioint redemptors with Christ, attributing vnto themselues the same power with him?

A friuolous distinction of Sophisters,

touching the fault and punishment, answ. cd.

And with his stripes wee are healed. Hee brings vs againe vnto Christ, that wee may haue recourse to his wounds, if euer wee meane to recouer life: for the Prophet heere opposeth him to vs, in respect that there is nothing to bee found in vs, but death and damnation; and in Christ onely life and saluation. It is he alone that hath procured vs a plaister; yea, by his sickness hath he giuen vs health, and by his death, life: for he alone it is, who hath pacified and reconciled the Father with vs. I confesse heere is ample occasion afforded mee to speake of many things touching the fruits that come to vs by the passion of our Lord Iesus Christ: but my purpose is now rather to expound, then to preach. Let vs therefore content our selues now with this short and plaine exposition. And I wish every one by himselfe to gather consolation from hence, and to apply the fruit of this doctrine to his particular vse: for these matters doe as well concerne all in generall, as euery one in particular.

Verf. 6. All wee like sheepe haue gone astray: wee haue turned euery one to his owne way, and the Lord hath laid vpon him the iniquities of vs all.

THAT he might the better imprint the benefit of Christs death in our hearts, hee shewes how necessarie this healing is, which he mentioned in the latter end of the former verse. For if we acknowledge not our miserie and pouertie, wee shall neuer know how desirable the remedie is, which Christ hath brought vs; neither shall we euer hunger or thirst after the same, with such a longing affection as we ought; but being acquainted with our owne forlorne estate, then feeling our wants, we will runne with greedinesse to receiue the remedie, which otherwise we shall lightly esteeme. That Christ then may bee receiued as hee deserueth, let euery one consider and examine himselfe, and acknowledge that he is lost, vntill Christ seeke him out.

The necessitie of this healing described.

Luke 19. 10.

We see heere that none are excepted, seeing the Prophet comprehends all: for all mankind had been vtterly lost, if Christ had not wrought our saluation. No, he excepts not the Iewes, who yet were puffed vp with a false opinion of their dignitie; but hee euen wraps them vp in the same condemnation. Now he compares them to sheepe, not to lessen their fault, as if themselues for their parts were harmlesse: but the more plainly to shew that the proper office of Christ, consists in gathering from among the dispersed, those who resembled brute beasts.

None excepted out of this lost condition.

In adding afterwards euery one: he descends from from the generall in which hee comprehended all, to the particular: to teach every one a part, whether it be not ſo indeede: for a ſentence generallly propounded, moves vs not ſo much, as when every man conſiders that it belongs to him in ſpeciall. Let every one then awaken vp his owne conſcience, and let him preſent himſelfe before the iudgement ſeate of God, confeſſing his miſery.

In the next place the Prophet ſhewes wherein this ſtraying conſiſts, namely, that every one hath followed his owne way: that is to ſay, hath lived after his owne pleaſure. And thus he ſhewes that there is but one way to walke in; out of which, if any one turnes, he can doe nothing but wander and loſe himſelfe. Neither ſpeakes he of ut ōtes only, but of our very nature, which cauſeth vs all to go aſtray. For if we could recouer the right way againe, and deliuer our ſelues from error, either by the inſtinct of nature, or by our owne wit, Chriſt had died in vaine. We are all loſt thou till Chriſt hath deliuered vs: and the more wee ſhall relie vpon our owne wiſdome or induſtry, the more ſhall we draw perdition downe vpon our owne heads.

Thus then the Prophet ſhewes in what eſtate we are, till we be regenerated by Chriſt: for all are wrapped vp in the ſame condemnation: there is none righteous, no nor one: there is none that vnderſtands, there is none that ſeeketh God. They haue all gone out of the way, they are all become vnprofitable: there is none that doth good, no nor one: Pſal. 14. 3. & 53. 4. As S. Paul alſo manifeſts it more fully, Rom. 3. 10, 11, 12.

And the Lord hath laid vpon him. Heere is a goodly oppoſition: for in our ſelues wee are ſcattered, in Chriſt we are gathered: by nature wee erre, and iud headlong into deſtruction; in Chriſt we find the way by which wee are directed to the haue of ſaluation: our finnes preſſe vs downe to hell; Chriſt diſchargeſ vs of them, ſo lay them vpon his owne backe: whileſt we were loſt then, and ſo eſtranged from God, that we runne poſt haſte to hell, Chriſt tooke vpon himſelfe all our ſilthineſſes and iniquities, that hee might deliuer vs from eternall death. But we muſt refer this only to his condemnation and puniſhment: for hee was no way guiltie, otherwiſe then by imputing of our finnes vnto him. Let every one of vs then make a diligent examination of his own iniquities, that ſo he may bring himſelfe to a true taſte of this grace, and may feele the fruit of the death of Chriſt.

Verſ. 7. Hee was oppreſſed, and hee was afflicted; yet did hee not open his mouth: hee is brought as a ſheepe to the ſlaughter; and as a ſheepe before her ſheerer is dumbe, ſo opened hee not his mouth.

Or, lambe.

Chriſts obedience commended.

HE here praiſeth Chriſts obedience which he ſhewed, when he was to ſuffer death; for had hee not done it willingly, hee might haue ſeemed not to haue ſatisfied for our dif-

obedience. As by the diſobedience of one then, all were made guiltie, (as Paul ſaith) Rom. 5. 19. ſo by the obedience of one, many were made righteous. And in another place; Hee was obedient to the death, euen to the death of the Croſſe: Phil. 2. 8. This is the cauſe why he held his peace before Pilate iudgement ſeate, Mat. 27. 12. 14. though hee might haue pleaded his juſt defence. But in regard hee had bound himſelfe to ſuffer for vs, hee willingly ſubmitted himſelfe to an vnjuſt iudgement, withont vniſering one word; that wee with full mouth might reioice, in being freely juſtified by faith, and ſo acquitted from the righteous ſentence of our condemnation;

And heere alſo by the way wee are exhorted to patience and meeknes, that by Chriſts example wee may be readie to indure reproches, iniuries, wounds, and torments for his ſake. In which ſenſe, Saint Peter allegeth this place, 1. Pet. 1. 22, 23. ſhewing that wee ought to be conformed to our head Chriſt, that ſo wee may follow him in patience and modeſtie.

In the word lambe, there may bee an alluſion to the ſacrifices vnder the Law: in which ſenſe hee is called the Lambe of God: Iohn 1. 29.

Verſ. 8. Hee was taken out of priſon, and from iudgement: and who ſhall declare his age? For hee was cut out of the lande of the living: for the tranſgreſſion of my people was hee plagued.

THIS place is diuerſly expounded. Some thinke the Prophet proſecutes the argument which hee beganne to handle, verſ. 6. namely, that Chriſt was ſmitten with Gods hand, and afflicted for our finnes. The Greeks tranſlate; And in his abaſing, his iudgement appeared. Others, He was lifted vp without delay. Others expound; That he was lifted vp vpon the Croſſe: that is to ſay, Chriſt was led to the place of execution, immediately after his apprehenſion. For mine owne part, I rather agree with thoſe who thinke that the Prophet paſſeth into the glory of his reſurrection, hauing before ſpoken of his death: and by this meanes, meant to meeete with mens perplexed thoughts, which might trouble and greeue the hearts of many.

For when wee ſee nothing but stripes and ſhame, we remaine aſtoniſhed: mens natures abhoire ſuch ſpectacles. The Prophet then teacheth, that Chriſt was lifted vp: that is to ſay, deliuered from priſon, and from iudgement or condemnation; and afterwards was exalted into a ſoueraigne degree of honour, leſt any ſhould iudge that hee was overcome, or ſwallowed vp by this horrible and ſhamefull kind of death. Truly hee triumphed over his enemies in the miſt of death it ſelfe: yea, he was ſo condemned of it, that now himſelfe is ordained the ſoueraigne Iudge of all, as it well appeared in his reſurrection. Iſaiah then keepes the ſame method that Paul doth, who hauing in Philip. 2. ſpoken of Chriſts humilia-

Chriſts patient ſufferings, our example.

For the further explication of this and the verſe following, reade his Comment vpon Act. 8. 32, 33.

tion even to the death of the Crosse: addes, that for this cause, he was advanced to an high exaltation; hauing now obtained a name, vnto which euery creature in heauen, earth, and vnder the earth, must bow their knees, and yeelde their obedience.

Arians. Heretikes must be conuincd not with shewes, but with plaine euidence of truth.

As touching the exclamation following, it hath been tacked and rent by diuers expositions. The ancient Fathers abused this place to confute the Arians, who denied the eternal generation of Christ. But they should haue contented themselues with plaine and manifest proofes of the holy Scriptures, that so they might not haue made themselues a scorn to heretikes, who by this meanes oftentimes take occasion to grow the more impudent; for they might haue replied, that the Prophet had no such meaning. Chrysostom referres it to Christs humanitie, because he was miraculously coeieued in the virgins wombe, without the vse of mans helpe: but he rones farre off from the Prophets meaning. Some others thinke that the Prophet cries out vpon them that crucified Christ. And some againe refer it to the posteritie which should succede; to wit, that Christs Inage or offspring should greatly increase, though himselfe died. But seeing the word Dor, signifies Age, or lasting; I doubt not but I.e. speaks of Christs age, namely, that notwithstanding the sorrowes wherewith he was ouerpressed, hee shall not onely be freed from them, but shall also haue a flourishing age, yea such a one as should indure for euer. For hee shall not resemble those that are deliuered from death, and yet must die neuertheless afterwards, because hee rose againe to liue eternally. For as S. Paul saith, Rem. 6.9. Hee can die no more, death can haue no more dominio ouer him. And yet we must remember that the Prophet not onely speaks of Christs person, but comprehends vnder it, the whole body of the church, which must neuer bee separated from her head. Wee haue here then a notable testimony touching the perpetuity of the church: for as Christ liues for euer, so will he not suffer his kingdome euer to perish: Iohn 14. 19. In the next place wee are to appropriate this immortalitie to euery member in particular.

Psal. 102. 24. 27.

Christ can die no more.

For hee was cut off. It may seeme strange at the first blush, that the death of Christ should bee the cause and well spring of life. But in regard hee indured the punishment due to our offences, all the ignominie which appeared in the Crosse, ought to bee laid and charged vpon vs. And yet in the meane while we may see a wonderful goodnesse of God shining in Christ, who hath so manifestly discovered his glorie to vs, that we ought to be carried into a wonderful admiration of it.

A note touching the perpetuity of the Church.

For this cause hee once againe repeates, that he was plagued for our transgressions: that wee might diligently consider how hee suffered for vs, and not for himselfe: for he bare the torments which wee had deserued; and should for euer haue borne them, had not this ransom and satisfaction come between. Let vs acknowledge then that the fault is ours, whereof hee bare the punishment and condemnation, by offering himselfe to his heauenlie Father in our name; that in his condemnation wee might receiue our absolution.

Verf. 9. And hee made his graue with the wicked, and with the rich in his death, though he had done no wickednesse, neither was any deceit in his mouth.

Saint Ierom translates; And hath giuen the wicked for buriall; as if the Prophet spake of the punishment, whereby the body will auenge himselfe of those which crucified Christ. But he rather speaks of Christs death, and of the fruits of it, and toucheth not this vengeance. Others thinke that the particle Et, signifies As; and they translate, Hee hath made his graue as that of the wicked. Some againe translate Vnch; and by the rich, vnderstand Ioseph of Arimathea, in whose sepulchre Christ was buried: but this exposition is constrained. Where he addes, and to the rich: I thinke the singuler number is put for the plurall, according to the custome of the Hebrewes. I see no reason why Oecolampadius hath translated; Hee hath exposed his high places to the rich. By the rich, vnderstanding tyrants and proud men; for they are wont to wax insolent and intemperate, in regard of their riches, which they abuse to play the Tarmogants.

Saint Ierom.

Christ seemed to be buried as he were in the hands of the wicked.

Oecolampadius.

Thus I thinke that by the wicked and rich, he vnderstands one and the same thing. Iasabs meaning is then, that Christ was subiect to the contumelies, insolencies, and lusts of the wicked. For the Scribes and Pharisees on the one side rushed vpon him with a desperate fury: and on the other side, the factious people cried nothing but crucifie him, crucifie him: Matth. 26. 66. Pilats contrary to all equity & law, gaue an vnjust sentence of death vpon him, though hee were informed of his innocencie: Marke 15. 14. And the Roman souldiers greedy of any pray, put the cruell and wicked sentence cruelly and wickedly in execution: Iohn 19. 16. Who would not haue thought now, but that Christ had been utterly overwhelmed, and buried amongst the bloody hands of these cruell murderers? For I take the graue heere by a metaphor, in regard the wicked and their executioners had almost ouercharged him. And if any obiekt that Christ was buried honourably; I answer, that this burall was the beginning of his glorious resurrection. But heere hee speaks of his death, which is often signified by the graue. This then I take to bee the true meaning: and yet I giue euery man leaue to iudge as it pleaseth him.

Obiect. Anf.

Though he had done none iniquitie.] The Prophet sets Christs innocencie heere before vs, not so much to defend him against the slanders of the wicked, as to recom-mend vnto vs the fruit of his death, lest wee should imagin that he suffered at aduerture. He was innocent and suffered by Gods decree, not for his iniquities, but for ours: for he bare the punishment due to vs. Now in two words he expresseth Christs

Chriſts perfect innocencie; to wit, that hee ſinned neither in word nor deed. Surely euerie one will confeſſe that this cannot be affirmed of any mortal man: it follows then, that it appertaines to Chriſt onely.

Verſ. 10. Yet the Lord would breake him, and make him ſubiect to inſirmities: when hee ſhall make his ſoule an offering for ſinne, hee ſhall ſee his ſeede, and ſhall prolong his daies; and the Will of the Lord ſhall proſper in his hand.

BY this we may the better diſcerne of that which I haue briefly touched; to wit, that the Prophet propounding Chriſts innocencie, had a further drift then to defend him againſt the contumelies and reproches of the wicked. The make hee aims at then, is to make vs looke vnto the very cauſe, that ſo we might feele the effect thereof in our ſoules: for God neither ordaines, nor executes ought at random. Whence it follows, that the cauſe of Chriſts death was lawfully vndertaken. The expoſition alſo is ſtill to be remembered of vs, which we touched in verſ. 6. There was no ſinne in Chriſt: but why would the Lord then haue him ſuffer? Euen becauſe hee ſuſtained our perſon and cauſe: for there was nothing at all that could ſatiſſie Gods iuſtice, but the death of his only begotten Son.

The word Aſham, ſignifies ſinne, and oblation for ſinne; and ſo oftentimes it is found in the latter ſignification in the Scriptures: Exod. 29. 14. Ezech. 45. 22. For the beaſt ſacrificed, was ſo offered, as that bearing the puniſhment and curſe of the ſinne, it alſo blotted it out. And the Priests ſignified ſo much by the impoſition of hands; euen as if they had laid vpon the beaſt the ſinnes of the whole people: Leuit. 4. 4. And if any priuate man had offered, he alſo put his hands vpon the head of the beaſt; as if hee had thereby tranſlated his ſinne from himſelfe, vnto it: Leuit. 4. 27. 29. And therefore Saint Paul calles Chriſt the curſe, or execration, ſaying; Chriſt hath redeemed vs from the curſe of the law being made a curſe for vs: Galat. 3. 13. And in another place; Hee made him to be ſinne for vs, vt which knew no ſinne, that wee might be made the righteousneſſe of God in him: 2. Cor. 5. 21. Alſo in Rom. 8. 3. For that which was impoſſible to the law, in that it was weak by reaſon of the fleſh, that hath God done by ſending his owne Sonne in the ſimilitude of fleſh, ſubiect to ſin; and for ſinne, hath condemned ſinne in the fleſh, that the righteousneſſe of the law might be fulfilled in vs. The Prophet then by this word Aſham, ſignifies the ſame, which Paul calles curſe, and ſinne, in the places formerly alleadged.

Now heere the fruit of Chriſts death is expreſſed, in regard that by his ſacrifices, ſinnes are done away, and God is pacified towards man: for the vertue of this word ſacrifice, muſt be referred heereunto. Hence it follows, that the abolishing of ſinne, and ſatiſfaction for ſinne, is no where to be found, but in Chriſt. Now that we may the better remember theſe things: firſt, wee muſt note that we are all guiltie before God; ſo as we are accuſed and lothſome in his preſence. Will wee then bee brought againe into his fauour? Sinne muſt be taken away. But this cannot bee done with purgations deuſed by man. How then? We muſt reſort to Chriſts death, becauſe wee cannot otherwiſe make ſatiſfaction to God. In a word, Iſaiab teacheth that ſinnes cannot be pardoned, vnleſſe wee flee to this death. If this language ſeemes harſh, and not ſeemly for the perſon of Chriſt, let ſuch a one enter into his owne heart, and conſider in good earneſt, how feareful and terrible Gods iuſtice is, when nothing is able to appeaſe it but the ſacrifice of Chriſt. And ſo the ineffimable grace, which ſhines in the curſe of Chriſt, will eaſily remoue all offence.

Hee ſhall ſee his poſteritie.] The Prophets meaning is, that it ſhall bee ſo farre off, that Chriſts poſteritie ſhall be diminiſhed by his death, that contrariwiſe, it ſhall be the means to raiſe vp ſeed vnto him. For in quickening the dead, he begs a people which he aſterward will cauſe to multiply exceedingly. Neither is there any abſurditie at all in it, to call the faithfull the poſteritie of Chriſt (though they bee his brethren) for they bee his offspring.

Where hee addes; Hee ſhall prolong his daies, ſome ſupply the relatiue Aſter, Which: ſaying, that the poſteritie ſhall indure long. But I expound it more ſimply; that the death which Chriſt ſhall ſuffer, ſhall not cut off the length of his daies: that is to ſay, from liuing eternally.

Some departing out of this life, doe leaue children which ſhall ſeruiue them; yet vpon condition that their fathers be firſt dead. But Chriſt ſhall haue his children with him: for he dies not as men doe, but obtains eternall life both for himſelfe and his. And thus the Prophet ſhewes, that both the head and the members ſhall liue eternally.

The will of the Lord ſhall proſper in his hand.] This word hand, is often taken for miniſtrie: as where it is ſaid, that the Lord gaue the Law by the hand of Moſes: Numb. 36. 13. Alſo the Lord did this by the hand of David: 2. Sam. 3. 18. meaning, that he vſed his ſeruiſe. In this ſort alſo ſhall the will of the Lord proſper in the hand of Chriſt: that is to ſay; the Lord will cauſe Chriſts miniſtrie to bring forth his fruit, that it may not ſeeme he was expoſed to ſo many cruell torments in vaine. Vnder theſe foure or ſue words, is comprehended a very large and ample doctrine, which euerie one may collect by himſelfe: for wee will content our ſelues now with expounding the text onely.

The will of the Lord, is taken in the ſame ſenſe heere, as it was in the former member: for he vſeth the word Keptis, which ſignifies a frank and liberal affection, full of mercy. This text then ſets two benefits of God before vs: Firſt, that hee ſpared not his owne Sonne, but deliuered him vp for our ſakes, to redeeme vs from death: Rom. 8. 32. Secondly, that he juſtly was this his death to be fruitleſſe, and unprofitable; but cauſeth vs to fruitifie very largely: for vnto benefit should we reape thereby, vnlesse wee felt the power and efficacie thereof in our selues.

Verf. 11. He shall see the trauaile of his soule, and shall bee satisfied: by his knowledge shall my righteous seruant iustifie many; for hee shall beare their iniquities.

The former argument further prosecuted.

Isaiab prosecutes the same argument. For he shewes that after Christ hath suffered death, he shall reape the fruit thereof, from the saluation of men. To the words shall see therefore, must be supplied the fruit and efficacie. Surely these things containe wonderful consolation in them: for Isaiab could no way better expresse Christs infinit loue to vs, then in shewing that hee takes a singular pleasure in the worke of our saluation: and doth herein as it were refresh himselfe, as with the fruits of his owne labours. Euen as one that reioiceth to see that which about all things hee desired to inioy, as if nothing but that could content him.

In the next place he shewes the meanes by which we may feele the vertue and power of Christs death; to wit, by his knowledge. This word knowledge, or doctrine, may be read in a double sence; to wit, in the actiue, or passiue: but in whether of them you reade it, we shall easilie see the Prophets meaning. Neither shall the lawes be able to caull so impudently, but wee will force them to confesse that which is heere said; to wit, that Christ is the onely Doctor and author of righteousness: for the Prophet manifests so much by the effect, saying; that he shall iustifie many. Thus then men shall not only learne in the schoole of Christ, to define what this righteousness is, but themselves also shall be made iust, really and effectually thereby.

Note.

The difference betweene the righteousness of the law, and that of faith.

And heere behold the difference between the righteousness of the law, and that of faith. For albeit the law shewes what it is to be iust; yet Saint Paul shewes it is impossible to obtaine righteousness by it. Which he proues by experience, in regard the law is but a looking glasse, serving to manifest vnto vs our owne unrighteousnesse: Rom. 3. 9, 10. But the doctrine to obtaine the righteousness which Christ sets before vs, is nothing else but a knowledge of him; to wit, faith: that is, when we accept the benefit of his death, and doe wholly rest our selues therein.

Philosophers.

The Philosophers giue many goodly precepts, wherein they thinke all iustice is comprehended: but they were neuer able yet to make any man righteous by them. For where is he that had euer yet the power to liue according to their rules? It is a small matter to know wherein true iustice consists, vnlesse therewithall we taste the benefit of it. But to let the Philosophers passe, we see the law it selfe, which contains a perfect rule of a godly life, is not able to conferre righteousness (as we haue said): Not because there is any want in it, for Moses testified and protested that hee did set before them in it, good and euill, life and death: Deut. 30. 19. But the law is vnable to confer righteousness to vs, in regard of the corruption of our nature: as S. Paul well affirms, that this impossibilitie proceeds from our flesh, and not from the law: Rom. 8. 3. For our nature is enmity vnto it, and our lusts ouercary vs violently, as wild beasts, to rush against the commandement of God. And thus, the law ingenders vnto vs rather then righteousness: Rom. 4. 15. The law then condemnes all men, and hauing discovered their sinne, makes them without excuse. We must therefore seeke out another meane whereby to obtaine righteousness; namely, in Christ himselfe, whom the very law points vs vnto, as to the end of it: Rom. 10. 4. But what is that righteousness of the law? Doe these things, and thou shalt liue: Leuit. 18. 5. Gal. 3. 12. But none can doe them. Then you must seeke another righteousness, which S. Paul collects out of a place of Moses; The word is nere thee, in thy mouth, and in thine heart. This is the word of faith which wee preach: Deut. 30. 14. Rom. 10. 8. By this doctrine we are iustified: not as it is nakedly and barely propounded, but as it offers vnto vs Christ and all his benefits, by which our sinnes are done away, and we fet at peace with God: for if wee embrace this benefit by faith, we are reputed iust before him.

Christ our righteousness
33. 16.

And our Prophet also expounds his owne meaning, in shewing wherein this knowledge consists; for these two members must be ioined together. By his doctrine, or by the knowledge of himselfe, he shall iustifie many; because he shall beare their iniquities. For as hee hath once offered himselfe for the purgation of all our iniquities: so now hee daily allures vs to receiue the fruit of his death, by the preaching of the Gospell. The publishing of which his death and passion, is the substance and foundation thereof, that by hearing of it, wee might be iustified. Saint Paul also accords verily well with this sentence of the Prophet. For hauing shewed that Christ was offered for the remission of our sinnes, that we might be made the righteousness of God in him; hee addes, we are ambassadors for Christ, and do beseech you that you will be reconciled vnto God: 2. Cor. 5. 20.

My righteous seruant.] The Prophet teacheth that Christ iustifies vs, not onely as he is God, but also as he is man; in regard he hath obtained righteousness for vs in his flesh. For hee calles him not My sonne, but My seruant: that whilst we consider him as God, we may also apprehend his humane nature, in which hee yielded that obedience which absolues vs before God. This is the foundation of our saluation then, namely, that hee offered vp himselfe in sacrifice: as he testifies in the Gospell. And for their sakes sanctifie I my selfe, that they also may be sanctified through the truth: Iohn 17. 19.

Christ iustifies as he is both God and man.

The foundation of our saluation.

Verf. 12. Therefore will I giue him a portion with the great, and hee shall diuide the spoile with the strong, because hee powred out his soule vnto death, and he was counted with the tranſgreſſors, and he bare the ſin of many, and praied for the tranſgreſſors.

he

Chriſt died not a common death. For that they might make him the more odious, they hanged theſe two theeves with Chriſt, and himſelfe in the miſt, as the Captaine. And thus Saint Marke alleadgeth this text to very good purpoſe, and according to the circumſtance of this place.

The victory that Chriſt obtained by his death.

Iſaiah ſhewes further, what iſſue Chriſts death ſhall haue : for it was neceſſary hee ſhould adde this doctrine touching the victory which he obtained by his paſſion; becauſe the knowledge of our reconciliation with the Father by his death, would not otherwiſe haue ſufficiently confirmed our hearts. Now hee borrowes a ſimilitude heere from thoſe who vsed triumphes. For hauing obtained the victory, they were gloriously apparrelled, and receiued with ſtately ſhewes : ſo Chriſt, as a valiant and noble Generall, triumphed after the conqueſt ouer his enemies.

He ſhall diuide the ſpoile vnto the ſtrong. It is the ſame with the former member, and a repetition much vsed among the Hebrewes: for thoſe which before be called great, now hee calles mightie and ſtrong. Thoſe who translate; I will giue him a portion with many; peruert the meaning of the Prophet, as I thinke. All the difference in the two members is, that God firſt ſhewes what he gave to Chriſt: and in the ſecond hee addes, that Chriſt inioiced this benefit. Now he inioines it not for himſelfe, but for vs: for the fruit of this victory is made ours. How ſo? Chriſt hath ſubdued death, the world, and the duell, for vs. In a word, the Prophet heere extolles this victory which Chriſt atchieued by his ſufferings, who though he died concerning to the infirmities of the fleſh, yet hee was raiſed againe by the wonderfull power of the holy Ghoſt: 2. Cor. 13. 4. and triumphed ouer all his and our enemies.

Heereunto appertaines the ſimilitude of ſpoiles, which the Prophet vseth. For hee aſcended into heauen, led captiuitie captiue, and gave gifts vnto men: Pſal. 68. Eph. 4. 8. And afterwards he addes, that the abſaling of Chriſt, was the beginning of his imperiall dignitie. As alſo S. Paul ſaith, that after Chriſt had taken away the hand writing which was againſt vs, he triumphed vpon the croſſe, Col. 2. 14. So far was it off then, that the reprochfull death which he ſuffered, did any thing diminifh his glory; that it was rather a meanes by which God his Father advanced him into an high degree of honour.

Iſaiah alſo expreſſeth the kinde of death: as S. Paul alſo, who hauing ſet forth Chriſts obedience, and ſhewing that hee humbled himſelfe vnto the death, addes by and by, that it was no common death, but the death of the Croſſe: that is to ſay, a ſhamefull and an accurſed death: Phil. 2. 8.

Now the Prophet minding yet to amplifie this contumelie to the full, ſaith, that Chriſt was counted among the wicked. But the greater the contempt was before men, ſo much the greater was the glory of his reſurrection. Saint Marke alleadgeth this place, when hee tells vs how Chriſt was hanged betweene two theeves. Mark. 15. 28. for then was this prophetic truly accompliſhed indeed.

But the Prophet ſpake generally, to ſhew that

He bare the ſinne of many. This is added by way of correction, left in hearing tell of the ignominie of this death, we ſhould conceiue ſomewhat that might redound to Chriſts indignitie. With which conceit our mindes being poſſeſſed, we might happily be deuiued of the victory which hee hath purchaſed for vs; to wit, the fruit of his death. The Prophet then ſhewes, that all this was done to the end hee might receiue the burthen of our ſinnes vpon himſelfe: as alſo, that when mention ſhould be made of Chriſts death, we might forthwith remember our owne purgation. This fruit (ſwallowed vp all the ſhame of his croſſe: ſo as his maieſtie & glory ſhined more fully, then if we had ſene him ſit in the heauens. Why ſo? Becauſe in him we haue a memorable teſtimonie of Gods loue, in that he was thus humbled, ſcorned, and miſuſed, with all the indignities that might be, that we who were appointed vnto eternall deſtruction, might with him inioy immortal glory and happineſſe.

I haue followed the common tranſlation in theſe words; he hath borne the ſinne of many: although by the Hebrew word Rabbim, we may vnderſtand the Great and Noble: and ſo the oppoſition would be the more manifeſt; namely, that Chriſt being accounted among the wicked, is appointed and offered as a pledge of the moſt noble and excellent, and bare the ſhame which thoſe that are in highest degree in the world had deſerued. But I leaue it to the iudgement of the readers to chuſe whether of both readings they like beſt. In the meane while I approve the common tranſlation; that hee alone hath borne the ſinne of many: in reſpect the condemnation of the whole world was laid vpon him. And the word many, is ſometimes taken for All: as it appears by many teſtimonies, eſpecially in Rom. 5. 19. For as by one mans diſobedience, many were made ſinners, &c.

And praied for the tranſgreſſors. Becauſe the purgation wherewith we are clenſed, that is, the death of Chriſt, was ratified and approved in regard of his interceſſion towards the Father, it was neceſſary this ſhould be added. For as in the old Teſtament, the high Prieſt, who neuer entred without blood, made prayers alſo forthwith for the people, Exod 30. 10. Heb. 5. 7. ſo that which was there prefigured, was accompliſhed in Chriſt. Firſt, he offered his body in ſacrifice, and ſhed his blood for the ranſome of our ſinnes: & then, that the purgation might be auailable, he performed the office of an advocate and interceſſor for all thoſe that embrace this his ſacrifice by faith: as it appears in that famous prayer which himſelfe hath left vpon record in Iohn 17. 20. *Fathers, I pray not onely for theſe, (that is, for my Diſciples) but alſo for all thoſe that ſhall beleeu in me through their word. THE LIV: CHAPTER.

Verf. 1. *Reioice, O barren, that didst not beare: breake forth into ioy, and reioice thou that didst not trauel with child: for the * desolate hath no children then the married wife.*

*Or, widow.

From the doctrine of Christs passion & death, the Prophet turnes his speech to the Church, that she might teck the fruit and efficacy thereof.

Having handled the doctrine of Christs passion, hee now fitly turnes his speech to the Church; to the end we might seele in our selues the efficacy of his death. For we cannot perceiue it in Christ, if we consider him by himselfe: and therefore wee must come presently vnto his Church, which is his body, because hee suffered for it, not for himselfe. This order wee know is obserued in the articles of our Creed. For hauing confessed that we beleeue in Iesus Christ, who suffered and was crucified for vs, we adde, I beleeue the Church; which hath issued as it were out of his side: Gen. 2. 1, 22, 23. And therefore, after Isaiah hath deliuered the doctrine of Christs sufferings, of his resurrection, and triumph, he descends now in due season to mention the Church, which can neuer be separated from her head: to teach all the faithfull from their owne experience, that Christ hath not suffered in vaine. If he had omitted this doctrine, the faithfull could not so well haue confirmed their hearts in the hope of the restauration of the Church.

Now this exhortation to reioicing, plainly shewes, that after Christ by his death shall haue got the conquest ouer death, sinne, and hell, that hee shall not liue so much for himselfe, but that he therewithall will inspire life into the members of his body. He calles his Church barren, because shee seemed to haue none issue, whilst this wofull seruitude lasted. And indeed, if a man had onely looked vpon her outward estate, hee would surely haue iudged her neere to destruction. Moreover, besides the misery that appeared externally, there was nothing found within, all were corrupted and defiled with superstitions. They had also prophaned themselves with the idolatries of the heathen.

Neither contents hee himselfe to call her barren, but he also termes her a widow: although one of them had been sufficient enough to haue taken from her all hope of posteritie. But when both are ioined together, what was to be expected but an horrible desolation? Notwithstanding he exhorts the people to bee of good courage, in the midst of so many miseries: for she that is desolate, shall haue more children then the married wife. This place may bee expounded two waies; either that the Church is compared to the Gentiles, which flourished like a woman that had an husband: or to the estate she was in before her captiuitie: both senses will agree well. But I had rather follow one kisse constrained: for I doe not thinke the Prophet makes a comparison heere betwene two estates. But it is rather a forme of speech vsall with him, to signifie the extraordinary fruitfulnessse of the Church, that so we should not iudge of her, according in the order of nature. Why so? Because God will worke in his behalfe wonderfully and miraculously. And yet I confesse that shee was then in widowhood; for long time before, God had put her away by his Prophets, and sued out a diuorce betwene him and his people, which was then effected; when he banished them out of their country. But the Prophet pronounceth that this iudgement shall bee temporarie, as wee shall more fully perceiue heere after.

Verf. 2. Inlarge the place of thy tents, and let them spread out the curtains of thine inhabitation: spare not, stretch out thy cords, and make fast thy stakes.

3. For thou shalt increase on the right hand, and on the left: and thy seede shall possesse the Gentiles, and dwell in the desolate Cities.

Hee prosecutes his argument vnder other figures, and promisseth that the Lord will not onely restore his Church, but will also dignifie her with a more excellent estate. Those who thinke that there is a comparison heere betwene the Church and the Synagogue, are deceiued, as I thinke. Neither doe they ought else heereby, then confirme the Iewes in their obstinacie, who perceiue well enough that violence is offered to the sense of this text, by such an exposition. For mine owne part, I doe indeede confesse that these things appertaine to the kingdome of Christ, and that they were then onely fulfilled, from the publishing of the Gospell. But it doth not therefore follow, that the Prophet should not also respect that time which went before Christs comming; for the accomplishment of this propheticie beganne vnder Cyrus, who gaue the Gospell leaue to returne: then it extended it selfe to the comming of Christ, in whom it received the full accompliſhment. The Church then conceiv'd, when the people returned home: for at that time the body of the people was gathered, of whom Chriſt ſhould be borne; that ſo the pure worſhip of God, and his true religion might againe be planted amongſt them. I grant this fruitfulneſſe did not then appeare; for the conception was hid as it were within the mothers wombe, which outwardly could not be any whit diſcerned. But after the people multiplied; and after the birth, they were at the fiſt like a child: then they grew to mans eſtate, even till the publiſhing of the Goſpel. Which time indeed, was the true infancy of the Church. Afterwards, ſhe grew to womans eſtate, and ſhall ſo continue even till Chriſts laſt coming, when all things ſhall be ſet in their perfect eſtate. Wee muſt therefore comprehend all theſe things together, if we wil attaine to the true meaning of the Prophets words. And in this ſenſe it is that Zachariſ, Malachi, and Haggai doe encourage the people touching the hope of their eſtate to come, whileſt they thought they loſt ſo much time in reedifying the Temple: Zach. 2. 5. Hag. 2. 7. Mal. 4. 2. For they promuted that the glory of the ſecond Temple ſhould bee more glorious then the fiſt: but yet this was not perceiv'd. And therefore they extended theſe promiſes to Chriſt: for it was needfull they ſhould be ſuſtained with the expectation of him, and with the aſſurance of his coming, in the building of the Temple. This conſolation then was common both to the Jewes that lived vnder the Law, and to vs, who now ſee this reſtauration of the Church in Chriſt more evidently.

Of thy tents. This is a ſimilitude taken from Tabernacles which were commonly uſed in that country. The Church then is compared to pavilions, becauſe ſhe hath no ſetled habitation in this world: for ſhe ſeemes to be ſelecting, and a pilgrime, in regard ſhe is ſubiect to be often tranſported hether and thether, by reaſon of her diuers changes. And yet I doubt not but he aims at that fiſt delivrance, (according to the cuſtome of the Prophets) at which time, the Iſraelites dwelt vnder tents the ſpace of fortie yeeres: for which cauſe, they every yeere celebrated a ſolemne feaſt of Tabernacles by the commandement of God: Leuit. 23. from 33. verſe, to 43.

But ſome will object, that the building which the Miniſters of the word do reare vp, is ſo firme, that it ought not to be compared to tents. I anſwere, that this ſimilitude of Tabernacles is rather to be referred to the outward eſtate of the Church, then to her ſpiritual or inward eſtate: for the true building of the Church, is the very kingdome of God, which is not vntable, nor like vnto pavilions. And yet the Church ceaſeth not for all that, to be tranſported hether and thether, in regard ſhe can find no ſure reſting place in this world. But ſhe is more firme then a rocke touching her inward eſtate: for in reſpect ſhe is vpheld by the impregnable power & ſtrength of God, ſhee boldly contemnes as dangers. Shee reſembles tents alſo, becauſe ſhe is not built vpon riches nor earthly forces.

In the next place the Prophet addes the reaſon why he commands her to reſt and abroad the cord, to enlarge her pavilions; namely, becauſe a little place would not containe that great multitude of people which God would gather together in one, from all parts. Now in as much as Iudeah was waſted with ruines and deſolations which had befallen it: therefore hee ſaith, that the deſolate Cities ſhall be inhabited.

Verſ. 4. Fear not, for thou ſhalt not be aſhamed; neither ſhalt thou be confounded: for thou ſhalt not be put to ſhame; yea, thou ſhalt forget the ſhame of thy youth, and ſhalt not remember the reproch of thy widowhood any more.

HEE here confirms (as before) the hearts of the faithfull, and ſpeakes to the whole Church: for the calamitie was vniuerſall, and her eſtate was almoſt vterly ruinated. Now he bids her be of good cheere, and addes the reaſon; namely, that her delivrance ſhould be ſo famous, that ſhee ſhould not be confounded. As if hee ſhould haue ſaid; Though now for a while thy caſe be deſperate, yet thy matters ſhall ſucceed proſperouſly: for thoſe that truſt in the Lord, ſhall not be confounded: as the Pſalmiſt ſaith, Pſal. 25. 2. Chap. 49. 23.

He repeats it twice, be not aſhamed: that is to ſay, Hope full, and truſt confidently. For ſuch bluſh for ſhame, who being fruſtrated of their hopes, are forced to hang downe the head. Then hee addes the like reaſon to the former, in the word ſi, for I rake it heere as before, for a particle rendering the cauſe: ſoas it is one and the ſame ſentence repeated in diuers wordes; vneſſe you will, that the fiſt member be referred to the inward affection, and the other to an outward cauſe. But the plaineſt ſenſe will be, that there is in both a promiſe touching an happy and ioyfull iſſue. As if hee ſhould ſay; Thy calamitie ſhall haue an end.

But thou ſhalt forget thy ſhame. This is a confirmation of the former member, by which he vnderſtands the calamities that ſhould befall the Church, when ſhe ſhould begin to grow: for the felicitie ſhee ſhould afterwards inioy, would vterly deſace the memory of them. Wee told you ere while, that ſhee is called a Perſ. 1. widow, in reſpect that at this time God had forſaken & put her away frō him: Chap. 50. 1.

Verſ. 5. For hee that made thee is thine huſband (whoſe name is the Lord of hoſtes) and thy redeemer the holie one of Iſrael ſhall bee called the God of the world.

*Or, all.

HEE here renders a reaſon why ſhee ſhall forget all the ſorrowes and afflictions which ſhe ſuſtained before; namely, becauſe God would accept her into his fauor againe: for the captiuitie was a kind of diuorce; as we haue ſhewed in Chap. 50. 1. Now he ſaith, hee that that made thee, shall be thine husband: for so the words should be so construed. Hee calles himselfe the maker or creator of his Church, not onely because hee hath created her with the rest of the world, but in regard hee hath vouchsafed to adopt her for his spouse: which prerogative is as a new creation. Now albeit the Iewes were fallen from their excellencie, (in regard men are apt by and by to decline out of the right way, if they be not regenerated by the power of the holy Ghost) yet their spirituall creation was not wholly defaced, for the memorie of the covenant remained still, by meanes whereof, God also created them anew.

Where hee calles himselfe the Lord of hostes, it is to be referred to his power, in which we haue cause to reioice, if wee be his children: for the greater his power is, and the more renowned his name is, the greater is our glory, as long as hee accounts of vs as of his children; and that we boast not of such a title in vaine. Now the Prophet amplifies this benefit, when he shewes that God doth vs the fauour, to admit vs into the place of his wife; for so we may indeed lay claime to this his almightie power.

Thy redeemer.] He attributes this name to himselfe, that hee might the better confirme the people in good hope; and also to assure them, that notwithstanding the first deliuerance out of Egypt seemed to be abolished when they were now carried away captiue; yet they shall be so restored, that they shall well perceiue Gods grace shall not be fruitlesse. The verbe, Shall be called, may be either referred to the redeemer, or, to the Holy one; or to them both. For mine owne part, I willingly refer it to both; to wit, The holy one of Israel shall be called thy redeemer, and the God of the whole earth. Hee mentions all the earth, (that is to say, the whole world:) for before, the name of God was onely knowne in Iurie, P'sal. 76. 1. but after the publishing of the Gospel, the Gentiles were also called to one hope of saluation with them. God is now the God of the Gentiles, as well as of the Iewes: Rom. 3. 29. With whom he hath assembled vnder his dominion the Gentiles also, who before were farre off.

Verf. 6. For the Lord hath called thee, being as a woman forsake n and afflicted in spirit, and as a young wife when thou wast refused, saith thy God.

HE meetes with a doubt which might haue troubled the mindes of the faithfull, vnder this grieuous seruitude: as if they seemed to be so reiected of the Lord, as if they were to expect nothing but vtter ruine. The Prophet therefore admonisheth them betimes, not to quaille, though they were forsaken, because God accord^d ng to his wonted fauour, is inclined to be reconciled with them againe: yea, and to recouer them out of their graues.

Hee calles her a young married wife, or wife of youth; that by this similitude he might the better confirme the peoples hope: for the new married couples are easilier reconciled, then those that haue dwelt long together. Young yeeres, and tender loue, allures young folkes to keepe amitie. And thus he shewes that God will be easilie pacified. As if he should say; I grant thou art now diuorced from me, but the diuorce shall not long hold, but the Lord will be at one with thee: yea, of his owne accord he will allure thee to be reconciled.

Simile.

Verf. 7. For a little while haue I forsaken thee: but with great compassion will I gather thee.

8. For a moment in mine anger I hid my face from thee for a little season: but with euerlasting mercy haue I had compassion on thee, saith the Lord thy redeemer.

THE Prophet now expounds the former sentence at large, and shewes the manner of this diuorce; to wit, that the Church shall be shortly restored to her first estate. Now he sets forth this mercy of God very excellently, and thereby allwageth the dolour which might pisse downe the hearts of the faithfull: for it was not enough to put them in hope of some kinde of restauration, vnlesse they were therewithall assured that God would also be quickly appeased. We are our of heart by and by, and quaille, if so be the Lord be not neer presently to reach forth his hand vnto vs. And therefore after Isaiah hath mentioned the Churches restauration, hee forthwith addes, that her reiectiō shall not long indure, but that God will haue compassion on her with euerlasting mercy.

An expō-
tion of the preuention.

When he saith, he forsakes his people: it is as much as if he had confessed it to bee so: for God hath in such wife adopted vs, that mens disloialtie cannot frustrate the same. Why so? Because he is faithfull, and will neuer therefore finally reiect or forsake his elect. This reiectiō then, must be referred to our apprehension, and to our seeming in outward appearance: for wee thinke God hath cast vs off, when we neither feele his presence, nor protestiō. And yet it is necessary we should taste the bitteresse of Gods wrath, (as the wife whom her husband hath put away, laments her estate) that we may know he hath iust cause to deale so seuerely with vs. But on the other side, it is as needfull that we forthwith should drinke a deepe draught of his mercy, which being infinite and euerlasting, will make all our afflictions seeme light; yea, and of short continuance, in respect of that. As often then as calamities doe presse vs downe, let vs haue our recourse to this consolation.

God neuer forsakes his people: See
1. S. Jm. 1. 2. 22.
Lam. 3. 34. 32.

We may also note that this was said, and that truly, of the whole body of this people, who had made this diuorce by their iniquities: Chap. 30. 1. And howsoeuer God did not indifferently receiue them all to grace, but that remnant which he had chosen; yet there is no absurditie nor inconuenience at all in it, that he directs his speech vnto all. peates the same thing againe in the next verse, that it might take the deeper impression in the hearts of the faithfull: as also, that no aduersitie might too much dismay them. And had he iust cause to doe so? Yea doubtlesse: for in this horrible darknesse, the poore captiues could not easilie behold the louing countenance of the Lord. And howsoeuer that which is heere said, for a moment in mine indignation, is properly to be vnderstood, that God in fit season brought his banished home againe into Iudeah: yet thence wee may gather a generall doctrine, namely, that the afflictions of the Church are but for a short space, when we lift vp the eyes of our mindes to the eternall & blessed life. For we must remember the admonition of Saint Paul, to wit, that all the afflictions of the faithfull, are light to beare, and ought to be esteemed very short, if we looke to that eternall waight of glory which is laid vp for vs in heauen: 2. Cor. 4. 17. Rom. 8. 18. And if this comparison come not betwene; daies will seeme vnto vs as long as yeeres. Neither were there any reason to compare seuentie yeeres captiuitie to a moment, if the continuall progresse of Gods fauour were not opposed vnto it.

Verf. 9. For this is vnto mee as the waters of Noah: for as I haue sworn that the waters of Noah should no more goe ouer the earth, so haue I sworne that I will not bee angry with thee, nor reburke thee.

This may bee read two waies: first as wee haue translated, This is to me as the daies of Noah: but the matter is not great. The principall therefore is to haue an eye to the Prophets meaning: for the expositors haue but roured a farr off at it, as I thinke. They expound in generall termes; that the Lord by Gods promised Noah, there should neuer be any deluge againe, and that this oath should remaine for euer: for without this, the good man might haue trembled and feared death at the next shower of raine that had fallen, but that the Lord had sworne to him it should neuer come so passe. And thus, when afflictions are at hand, wee may iustly feare to be ouerwhelmed by them, vlesse the Lord had promised that his Church should bee preferred in safetie. But as I thinke, this should be restrained to the captiuitie of Babylon: for hee compares this captiuitie to the deluge, which then deformed the face of the whole earth; so as the Church seemed to be vterly wasted, the people were all in a manner carried away, and transformed into a strange nation, the kingdome and government were ouerthrowne, their bondage was extreame, and no man would haue imagined but that their memorie and name had been wholly blotted out. And questionlesse that which our Prophet said in the first Chapter, came to passe, namely, that if the Lord had not left a small remnant, they should haue been like to Sodom and Gomorah.

It is not without cause then, that he compares this captiuitie to the waters of Noah: that is to say, to the deluge. For which cause, I am of their opinion who read; For this is to me as the waters; because this reading seemes more solid, as I thinke: and all the Rabbines haue followed it. These words, This shall be to me, ought to be well weighed also, as I take it; which the expositors notwithstanding haue lightly passed ouer. For his meaning is, that this calamitie shall be vnto him as the deluge: that is, as he contented himselfe with one deluge, so as he will neuer send a seconde: so will he also satisfie himselfe with this onely waste of the Church, and he will neuer suffer it to be any more thus ruinated againe. Thus then I suppose this text ought to bee expounded and applied to the similitude, namely, that the ouerthrow of the Church shall bee the same now vnto God, as the deluge was, which happened in the daies of Noah: for euen as hee then swore, neuer to punish the finnes of men more with this so beaue a chastisement, so will he neuer consume the Church any more, as he hath done vnder the captiuitie of Babylon. And truly whatsoever waste there happened aiter, yet the Church alwaies stood, and continued in some forme, till Christ his appearing: for then the seed of the Gospell was sowne abroad euery where, that it might bring forth children to the Lord, out of all the nations vnder heauen. To conclude, the Lord promisseth heere after to mitigate his wrath, and neuer to punish his people so seuerely againe.

But some will obiekt, that since that time the Church hath indured wonderfull straits, so farr forth as in mans iudgement shee was welnie brought to nought: which being so, then haue not I giuen a right exposition of the Prophets words? I answer, God neuer afterwarde so afflicted his Church, that the whole face thereof was abolished, as it fell out when the people were caried away captiue into Babylon. For albeit Antiochus and others made terrible wastes, after which followed those reuolts which Saint Paul foretold, 2. Thes. 2. 3. 1. Tim. 4. 1. And that all the world in a manner was defiled with infinite persecutions, so as Christianitie was almost rased out: yet there euetmore remained some forme of a Church, though much disfigured. Neither was the building so defaced, but some relikes thereof remained vnwasted aboue the deluges, that so this oath of God might stand fast.

So haue I sworne.] This must not be barely vnderstood as it is in it selfe, but by way of comparison, for he opposeth this member to the former, promising neuer to correct his people so seuerely againe, but that hee will both mitigate and moderate his stripes. Although tyrants then play the wilde beafts in running vpon vs with a desperate furie; and that Satan on the other side leaues no plot vnattempted to bring the Church to destruction; and that God for our vnthankfulnes lets loose the raines vnto them, yet will he neuer suffer it to be vterly swallowed vp of ths.

Verf. 10. For the mountains shall remore,

If we set not the eternall weight of glory against our momentary afflictions, daies will seeme to vs as long as yeeres.

As God satisfied himself with one deluge, so hee will satisfie himselfe with this last waste of hee Church.

roue, and the hills shall fall downe: but my mercie shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace fall away, saith the Lord, that hath compassion on thee.

A confirmation of the former sentence.

HE confirms the former sentence, and shewes, that heauen and earth shall passe and come to nought, before his mercie shall faile. Some are so fond to demand here how mountaines can remoue, or, how hills shall fall downe? But they deserue none answer, for it is a comparison taken from things that seeme to be fast and firmly rooted, thereby signifying, that the Church is much more stable and vnuoueable. The mountaines are very firme and strong; neither doe earthquakes happen so often there as in plain and champion countries. The Lord then pronounceth, that though these great and huge mountaines should remoue, or that heauen and earth should meet, Psal. 46. 2. yet his covenant shall stand inuoueable, and his mercie shall be perpetuall towards his Church.

And to this purpose it is said in Psalm. 93. 1. That the Lord shall reigne, and that the world shall be stablished that it can not be moued. And in Psal. 102. 26. 28. The heauens shall perish, but the Church of God shall remaine for euer. In the word mercie we are to note what the foundation of this covenant is: for we can haue no acquaintance with God, vnlesse he freely receiue vs by pardoning our sinnes.

Peace, taken for all prosperitie.

The covenant, is by him called the covenant of peace, because the Lord therein offers vs all that which belongs to our chiefe good: for vnder this word peace, the Hebrews vnderstand all happines and prosperitie. Seeing this covenant then conteines a firme and stable blessednes, it must needs follow that all those are miserable which are excluded out of it. In that he saith, it is he who hath compassion, he againe confirms that which we haue said, namely, that he hath no other reason to shew mercie, but because he is pitifull, and readie to forgieue, Chap 55. 7.

Verf. 11. O thou afflicted and tossed with tempest, that hast no comfort: behold, I will lay thy stones with the Carbuncles, and lay thy foundation with Saphires.

The glorie of the second Temple greater then the first, in this and the next verse.

HE prosecutes the same argument, and promiseth, that the Lord will put the Church into her first glorie; yea, that he will cause her to shine exceeding clearly, in that she shall be more gloriouslie beautified then before, euen as if she were whollie built with pretious stones. Haggai in Chap. 2. 10. shewes the same in a word, when he said that the glorie of the second temple should exceed the first.

Wee neede not stand to decipher out the qualities of these pretious stones, which Isaiah here mentions, seeing the Hebrew expofitors themselues agree not together in this behalfe. It is enough that wee haue the sense of the place. Now this maner of speech hath great weight in it to asswage the sorowes of the faithfull: for it is as much in effect, as if he had set the little barke of the Church cleare off the sands, when it was now in danger of drowning. As oft therefore as we see her ride in boisterous waues, and pressed with infinite calamities, yea, and deprived of all consolation, let vs remember that these miseries are meanes to prouoke God to giue her succor.

Verf. 12. And I will make thy windows of Emeraudes, and thy gates shining brasse, and all thy borders of pleasant stones.

BY these similitudes he shewes, that the estate of the Church shall be more excellent then it was wont to be, as we haue noted before. The Church is here compared to a building, a similitude which we often meet withall in the holy scriptures, and therefore the Prophet layes downe a platforme of a stately and sumptuous building. But wee are to note, that God is here made the master workeman of this building, for the whole worke must be attributed vnto him.

Some may aske what the Prophet meanes by Carbuncles, Saphires, verf. 11. Pearles, and other pretious stones: for S. Paul hath noted out the doctrine of the Gospell by a like similitude: I haue laid (saith he) the foundation as an expert master-builder: and if any build vpon this foundation, gold, silver, pretious stones, wood, hay, or stubble, euery mans worke shall be made manifest, 1. Cor. 3. 10. 12. 13. I answer, the verse following will shew whether the Prophet meant the same thing here or no.

Verf. 13. And all thy children shall be taught of the Lord, and much peace shall be to thy children.

Hence wee may easily collect, that Isaiah spake not in the former verses of doctrine but of men, whereof the spirituall building of the Church is compact. I grant, the Church is builded by doctrine, but that is done in gathering men in, and by fitting them to be liuely stones in this building, 1. Pet. 2. 5. See the difference now betweene Paul and Isaiah. Paul referres pretious stones to doctrine, and Isaiah to the gifts of the holy Ghost, where-with men are enriched and endued, that of them a Church may be reared vp. But the diuersitie of gifts wherewith the Lord adorne his seruants are to be obserued. For all are not Saphires or Carbuncles: the Lord distributeth to euery one his measure according to his own wil, 1. Cor. 12. 11. Eph. 4. 7. 11. Whence wee also are to remember, that whatsoever serues for the adorning of the Church, proceeds only from the meere grace of God. For if wee be Carbuncles and Saphires because wee are taught of God, then it follows that wee get not this honor by nature.

Now the Lord teacheth vs two waies, namely, by the externall ministrie of man, and by the secreet reuelation of the holy Ghost. Iesus

Christ

Chriſt ſhewes in Ioh. 6. 45. which of theſe teachings the Prophet heere ſpeakes of: for he alledgeth this text, and therefore we neede not ſecke for a better expoſitor. It is written in the Prophets (ſaith he) And they ſhall be all taught of God. Whoſoever then hath heard and learned of the Father, commeth vnto me. If this place then ſhould be vnderſtood of the externall preaching, that which Ieſus Chriſt concludes hence would not be firme enough. For this is no good conſequence, The Goſpell is preached, therefore all beleene: for many reſiſt it, others openly ſcorne it, and ſome are hypocrites. The elect only who are choſen to eternall life become teachable, to whom properly it belongs to be accounted in the number of Chriſt his true diſciples. The Goſpell I grant is preached indifferently both to the elect & caſtaways, but the elect only come to Chriſt, becauſe they are taught of God. Hence let vs conclude then, that the Prophet ſpeakes in this place of them, and of none other.

By this we may ſee, how and by what meanes we are made liuing and precious ſtones to ſerue in the building of the Lords ſpiritual temple, to wit, when the Lord hath ſquared and poliſhed vs by his holy ſpirit: and to the outward preaching of his word, iouines the inward power and efficacy of the ſame ſpirit. And thus we are alſo taught how great the peruerſitie of mans vnderſtanding is, in that it can not be bowed nor reformed, vnleſſe the Lord worke vpon the ſame mightily by the powerful operation of his bleſſed ſpirit.

Our Prophet hath conioined theſe two maners of teaching together, to wit, both the inward, and the outward. For he calles thoſe the children of the Church, who are taught of the Lord: if they be children, then haue they bin conceiued in her womb, and nureed vp in her lap, firſt with milke, afterward with ſtrong meate, 1. Cor. 3. 2. Hebr. 5. 12. 13. 14. vntill they grow vp, and become perfect men in Chriſt Ieſus, as Paul ſpeakes Ephes. 4. 13. The outward miniſtrie of the word then is required if we will be his diſciples.

Whence it appeares, how abſurd and blockiſh the raising of thoſe fantaſticall ſpirits is, who peruert this teſtimonie, to ouerthrow the preaching of the word, and the miniſtrie of the Church. For children of the Church can they not be, vnleſſe they will be nourished vp in her lap. Let them goe then with their ſecret revelations; for the holy Ghoſt teacheth none but ſuch as ſubmit themſelues vnder the Churches miniſtrie. Well may ſuch be the diſciples and children of Satan, but not of God, ſeeing they contemne the order which hee hath eſtabliſhed. For theſe two points, to wit, the children of the Church, and the ſchollers of God, are ſo lincked together, that thoſe who reſuſe to be taught of the Church ſhall neuer be Gods diſciples. I grant they muſt be aply diſtinguiſhed, euen as Iſaiah alſo doth, leſt that be attributed to men which only belongs to the power of the holy Ghoſt. And yet they muſt be ſo lincked one to the other, that we muſt know that in this worke God will ſerue his turne by man.

Moreover by this verſe we are taught, that Gods calling works with efficacy in his elect. S. Auguſtine hath prudently pondered this place, and very ſlicie applies it againſt the Pelagians, who extolled mans free will againſt the free grace of God. Theſe Heretiks I grant ſeemed to attribute ſomewhat vnto Gods grace, but in ſuch fort, that they left it to the free will of man either to chuſe or reſuſe: which our Papiſts do at this day, who affirme that euery one may reieſt or receiue this grace. But all, ſaith S. Auguſtine, ſhall be taught of God. His diſciples therefore are taught with efficacy, and follow his calling, Ioh. 10. 27. He alſo alledgeth that ſixth of Iohn by vs cited before, whence it manifeſtly appeares that it proceeds not from any free election that man hath in himſelfe, to be able to bow his will which way him liſteth.

We are alſo to note hence what account the Lord makes of his doctrine, whereby he fits vs for this building, to the end we may be Pearles, Saphires, and Carbuncles. For thoſe that goe about to erect a Church without the preaching of the word, ſhall rather build a Stie for Hogs, then a Church for God. By this alſo we may learne what to iudge of that inſolded faith wherof y Papiſts tattle ſo much: for thus they would make men to differ in nothing from brute beaſts, that ſo they might play the Merchants with them openly, without controule. But I trow, if we be taught of God, it is no reaſon we ſhould reſemble vnreaſonable beaſts.

It may be demanded, whether the Patriarks, Prophets, and other of the faithfull were taught of God vnder the law or no? Certainly they were. But our Prophet ſpeakes heere by way of compariſon. For vnder Chriſt the Lord ſpake ſo euidentlie, that he openly manifeſted himſelfe to be the teacher of his Church, and after he gathered to himſelfe a great number of diſciples. Moreover, this place accords with that of Ieremiah, Chap. 31. 34. And they ſhall teach no more euery one his neighbour, nor euery man his brother, ſaying, Know the Lord, for all ſhall know me from the leaſt of them to the greateſt, ſaith the Lord. Wherefore if it were of neceſſitie that all the children of God in old time were the diſciples of y holy Ghoſt, much more ought we to be ſo in theſe times, ſeeing this prophetic properly belongs to the kingdome of Chriſt.

And there ſhall be abundance of peace. By the word peace, he meanes felicitie, that is, all good things. Hence we are to gather wherein mans chiefe happines conſiſts, namely, in hauing our minds illuminated of God, to comprehend that ſaluation which is manifeſted to vs in Chriſt. For as long as wee be ſtrangers to this knowledge wee are the vn-happieſt people vnder heauen; for ſo the very bleſſings of God are turned into curſings, Mala. 2. 2. till they be ſanctified vnto vs by faith.

The maner how we become precious ſtones, fit to ſerue Gods ſpiritual building.

Anabaptiſts call reuelations taxed.

Whoſoever reſuſeth to be taught of the Church, ſhall neuer be Gods diſciple.

for thou shalt not feare it: and from feare, for it shall not come neere thee.

As God is the teacher of his Church, so will he be her protector.

His meaning is, that God shall bee the workeman and Master builder of his Church. I am not ignorant that others expound it otherwise and take righteousnesse for good workes: which exposition hath some shew of reason in it, because the Prophet hath before spoken of the doctrine of faith: and wee are taught, to the end we should liue holily and righteously. But the Prophet hath another scope, namely, that the Church shall bee restored vnder the conduct of God, who would bee her protector and defender. For heere hee opposeth righteousnesse to that violence and oppression, whereby the Church was ruined: or rather, by this word he notes out the firmnes and stabilitie of it. As if hee should say; This shall be no building of stones nor timber, which may haue some faire glosse set vpon it for a time, because God will faithfully maintaine the worke of his owne hands: and in regard heis in, he will cause her, being restored to her perfect estate, to stand for euer. Let men conspire what they will then to worke the ruin of the Church, their practises shall all come to nought; because God will preterue her by his righteousnesse. Wee haue seene the like speech heereofore. This plaine interpretation therefore contents me, though the other may seeme more plausible to many.

exposition of the verse following, for the better vnderstanding of this.

Verf. 15. Behold, the enemy shall gather himselfe, but without me: whosoever shall gather himselfe in thee, against thee, shall fall.

The Church must not promise to her selfe any secure refuge place in this world.

The summe is, that albeit many rise vp to ouerthrow the Church, yet shall all their plots and assaults be defeated, and vanish into smoke. Yea, it seemes that God not onely promiseth helpe against the open enemies, but also against them vnto him: for many creepe into the bowome of the Church, as if they meant to be her children: but afterward, they fall like vipers to eate out the bellie of their mother. Some translate; In assembling, he shall assemble against thee: vnderstanding this of all the enemies of the Church in generall. This is the most receiued interpretation: neither doe I reiect it, provided that wee therewithall comprehend the wiles, ambushes, and treasons wherewith the Church is assailed. And no doubt but that is heere expressed, which is contained in the second Psalm; to wit, the tumults and conspiracies against Christ and his Church: for not one, but many nations rise vp against her, and yet it is very likely that the Prophet heere expressly ioines the domestike enemies, and those from without, who creepe in to assaile her in her owne bowome as it were. For it is said, in thee, against thee: that is to say, they shall set vpon thee from within, yea euen in the midst of thee.

To bee short, his meaning is, that the Church shall neuer inioy such abundantie of peace, but she must looke for many aduersaries that will assaile her. But how agrees these things together, may some say? for in the former verſe he ſaid thee ſhould be ſarre from oppreſſion, and from feare, for it ſhould not come nigh her: And now he ſhewes ſhe ſhall haue intertine conſpiracies. But the Prophet hath added this in very fit ſeaſon, leſt the faithfull ſhould promiſe vnto themſelues a ſecure reſting place in this world, as if the wicked and hypocrites ſhould no way moleſt her. The Church then you ſee, is ſo deliuered from reproches and oppreſſion, that ſhe is perpetually to incounter with open and ſecret enemies: for Satan wil euey day be raiſing vp of new alarmes againſt her, ſo as by his good will, ſhe ſhall not haue a minute of reſt. This therefore is a correccion as it were of the former ſentence, teaching the faithfull to be alwaies vpon their watch, and neuer to promiſe themſelues any truce. But for our comfort, the Prophet addes a promiſe; namely, that the Lord will protect her in the miſt of all dangers.

Anſ:

Without God, ſignifies as much, as in vaine, or without any good ſucceſſe. For his meaning is, that the plottings of the wicked ſhall come to nought, though they buſie all their wits, and doe the worſt they can. They ſhall caſt themſeltes headlong into an headleſſe rage, but the only hand of the Lord ſhall giue his people an happy euafion and iſſue. Now hee alludes to that which was ſaid before, namely, that the Chaldeans ſhould come vnder the conduct of God, to deſtroy the land of Iudeah. The people were then deſtroyed becauſe God was their enemy: but now the enemies coming to aſſaile the Church without God, that is to ſay, without his fauour, they ſhall ſce and be confounded.

The plots of the wicked
ſhall be all brought to nought: and why?

Which hee better expreſſeth by and by after, ſaying; Hee that ſhall gather himſelfe in thee, againſt thee, ſhall fall. That is, whatſoeuer hee hath imagined againſt thee, ſhall fall vpon his owne head: yea, though the whole world ſhould riſe vp againſt thee, yet ſhould it cruſh and ouerwhelme it ſelfe by the owne burthen.

The particule in thee, is to bee noted: for when the Lord driues our enemies farre off from vs, then we grow confident: but if they approach and draw neere, then wee are out of heart. Therefore he ſaith, though they pierce euen to thine inward parts, yet will the Lord deſtroy them, and deliue thee.

Verf. 16. Behold, I haue created the ſmith that bloweth the coales in the fire, and him that bringeth forth an inſtrument for his worke, and haue created the deſtroier to deſtroy.

The Lord ſheweth how eaſie it is for him to deliue his Church from the wicked enterpriſes of his enemies: for they can accompliſh no more then that which hee permits them to doe; yea he vſeth them as his inſtruments to chaſtiſe his children withall. Now this may as ſuly, bee referred to the Chaldeans, as to the reſt of their enemies, which afterward moleſted the choſen people of God: If wee receiue the firſt ſenſe, God plainly

God knowes
how to worke well by euill

plainly ſhewes, that in a moment hee can chaſe them away, whom he hath brought together; and bring them downe, whom hee hath exalted. And if we referre it to Anſuchus, and his like, the ſenſe will not be much different; to wit, that euen thoſe ſhall not hurt as they would; for they ſhall not ſo much as remoue their leaſt finger without Gods leaue.

But doth not the Prophet ſeeme to contradict himſelfe? For in the former verſe hee ſaid, that the wicked ſhould aſſaile the Church without the Lord: and here hee ſhewes that they fight as it were vnder his colours, and that vnder his conduct and authoritie, they waſte and deſtroy the Church? I anſwere, we muſt conſider the oppoſition; namely, that the Lord had raiſed vp the Babylonians to ſcatter the Church: for wee are to note the ſimilitude of the deluge, mentioned in the ninth verſe, whereby he ſignified an vtter deſtruction: ſo as the Church was then in a manner cleane waſted by the Babylonians, whom he vſed for that ſeruice. But he there proteſts to moderate his indignation: ſo as he will neuer ſuffer the enemy to abolith his Church againe, though for a time he giue the ſame ouer to be chaſtiſed by their hand. Indeed that is the enemies drift; for they employ the vtmoſt of their power and force, to bring the Church to confuſion and vtter ruine, but the Lord repreſteth their rage, in regard they doe it without him, verſa 5. that is to ſay, without his commandement.

Some expound, that the Smith is created for his worke: that is to ſay, to praſtife his owne death: and the deſtroier to deſtroy himſelfe. But I thinke the firſt ſenſe is more ſimple, where the Lord ſaith, that hee createth the deſtroier; it is not onely referred to their nature, as they are borne men, but to the act of deſtroying: and yet wee muſt not lay the blame vpon God, as if he were the author of the vniuſt crueltie which remains in men: for God conſents not with their wicked will, but diſpoſeth of their indeuors by his ſecret prouidence, and vſeth them as the instruments of his wrath. But we haue handled this matter in another place.

Verſ. 17. But all the Weapons that are made againſt thee ſhall not proſper: and every ſongue that ſhall riſe againſt thee in iudgement, thou ſhalt condemne. This is the heritage of the Lords ſeruants, and their righteouſneſſe is of mee, ſaith the Lord.

HE againe repeates that which was noted before; namely, that the wicked ſhall loſe their labours, let them plot as much as they will: for their violent determinations are conducted and held ſhort by the ſecret counſell of God. Now he vſeth the particl All, ſignifying that the wicked ſhould haue meanes of all ſorts, and in great number, to worke the Churches ouerthrow: but all ſhould vaniſh like ſmoke, becauſe the Lord would repreſſe them, God indeede permits them to worke their wils for the triall of the faithfull: but after patience hath had her perfect worke in them, he ſtrippeh the wicked of all the force and power in which they truſted. Now hauing ſpoken in generall of the weapons and instruments of warre, wherewith the vngodly inuade the Church; hee names the ſongue expreſly, which is the moſt peſtilent and deadly weapon of all: Iames 3.8. For the wicked content not themſelues to rent and teare the ſeruants of God by outrages and ſlanders, but they alſo labour as much as in them is, to extinguish the truth of God, and to alienate mens mindes from the loue of it: and this ought more to pierce and wound our hearts, then if we were to loſe our liues an hundred times. Adde alſo that good men are more deeply wounded with falſe imputations, then with the deepeſt gath that can be giuen them with a ſharpe ſword: and therefore we muſt not ouerpaſſe this mortall and deadly weapon of the ſongue.

enemie.

Afterwards when hee addes, that theſe ſongues riſe vp in iudgement: it is to ſhew that the wicked ſhall be ſo bold and inſolent, that they ſhall maliciously prouoke and moleſt the children of God; yea they ſhall doe it in iudgement: for they couer themſelues vnder goodly pretences, that they may make the world beleaue their cauſe is exceeding good. As when the Papiſts call vs dogs, heretikes, and ſchiſmatickes; they plead againſt vs in iudgement (as you would ſay) and will be eſteemed the defenders of the Catholike faith, though they onely be the vpholders of idolatry and lies. And yet their accuſations are painted ouer with ſuch colours, that ſo they may make vs the more odious among them, who are ignorant of our iuſt cauſe: But admire they aſſaile vs with open violence by the ſmitings of the ſongue, Ier. 18. 18. or with any other weapon, yet let vs not doubt but we ſhall be more then conquerours, as this prophecie witneſſeth: for the victorie is heere promiſed vs. Seeing therefore we may be bold to relye vpon the truth of it, let vs buckle our ſelues to the combat, with a ſtout and inuincible courage.

This is the heritage.] Hee ſhewes that the Lord hath giuen this to his ſeruants as it were by the right of their inheritance, wherof they ſhall not be defrauded: for as there is no title ſo ſure as that of an inheritance, ſo he alſo ſhewes, that the ſeruants of the Lord ought to aſſure themſelues of this priuiledge aboue any thing in the world beſides, namely, of his protection and perpetuall ſafeguard, by which he defends and keepes all his, from all dangers whatſoouer.

Righteouſneſſe is heere taken for that which we commonly call, Their right. To conlude, his meaning is, that the Lord will themſelfe the protector of his Church, that he may maintaine their innocencie. As oft then as men offer vs any violence, let vs learne to run ſtraightway to God: for in regard we ſeeke to other helpes, it comes to paſſe that wee are deſtituted of his defence and protection.

THE LV. CHAPTER.

Verf. 1. Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and ye that have no siluer, come, buy, and eate: come I say, buy wine and milke without siluer, and without money.

A generall summons.

THE Prophet here greatly magnifies and extols Gods goodnes, which should be spread abroad largely, and in greater abundance then was wont vpon the Church, vnder the kingdome of Christ, vnto whose custodie all the treasures of Gods graces are committed, for in him God giues himselfe wholly vnto vs. So as the saying of S. Iohn is truly accomplished, namely, that of his fulnes we all haue receiued grace for grace, Ioh. 1. 16. I grant the fathers vnder the law felt this goodnes and spirituall liberallitie of God, which is here mentioned: Oh how great saith Dauid is the goodnes which thou hast laid vp for them that feare thee! Psal. 37. 19. notwithstanding this goodnes was much more fullie and liberallie shed abroad vnder Christ. Behold heere then a singular commendation of Gods grace, which is set before vs in Christes kingdome. The Prophet then not only teacheth that which should be once done, but that also which is dayly effected when the Lord summons vs by his doctrine to the inioying of all these benefites.

Some referre the word waters to the doctrine of y^e Gospell, others to the holy Ghost: but both (as I thinke) are deceived. For those that vnderstand it of the doctrine of the Gospell which they oppose to the Law (whereof the Iewes suppose the Prophet speaks in this place) do only comprehend one part of that which Isaiah meant to say. For the others, who referre it to the holy Ghost, they haue a little more colour, and they alleage that place of S. Iohn: If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it were that saith vnto thee, Giue me drinke, thou wouldst haue asked of him, and hee would haue giuen thee waters of life; Iohn 4. 10. And a little after, it seemes that Christ expounds this text of the Prophet, when he saith, Whosoever shall drinke of this water shall thirst againe; but, he that drinks of the water that I shall giue him shall neuer be more athirst; but the water that I shall giue him, shall be in him a well of water springing vp into everlasting life, verf. 13. 14. Yet I doubt not but Isaiah vnder these words waters, milke, wine, and bread, heere comprehends whatsoever is necessarie to the spirituall life: for they are similitudes taken from that ordinarie foode wherewith we are dayly sustained. Looke then how we are nourished with bread, wine, milke, and water, so also let vs know that our soules are fed and sustained with the doctrine of the Gospell, with the holy Ghost, and with the other gifts of Christ.

Now the Prophet makes a loude exclamation, and cries Ho, for men are rocked so fast asleepe, that they can hardly be wakened: they feele not their pouertie though they be affamished, neither do they desire that meate whereof they haue great neede. This drouzines of men therefore ought to be rouzed with great and continuall cries. The carelesnes then of such as are deafe at this exhortation, is so much the more hatefull and detestable, and the slothfulnes of such as flatter themselues in their sloth, albeit they haue bin spurred to the quick.

Moreouer this is a generall summons. For who is he that stands not in neede of these waters, or, to whom Christ can not bring much profit? for this cause he calles every one, without exception of persons. But men are so wretched, that notwithstanding they feele well enough what neede they haue of Christ, yet they seeke out meanes which way to deprive themselues of such a benefit: and doe rather giue credit to Satan, who furnisheth them with sundrie impediments, then to giue eate to this so gracious and gentle call.

We are to know then wherein the true preparation consists to receiue this grace, which he exprelleth in saying, he has thirsteth: for such as are swollen vp with a vaine confidence, and are full gorged; or, who being bewitched with earthly delights, feele not the pouertie of their soules; neither will they giue place vnto Christ. Why so? Because they feele no relish in the sweetnes of this spirituall grace: They may well be compared to sick folks that haue neede of good nourishment; but because they are filled with winde, with disdain they reiect their meate; or, being catted with some fond imagination, they feede vpon their owne dreames, as though they stood in neede of nothing at all. And in this sort, such as are swollen with pride, or with a false persuasion of their owne righteousness; or, possessed with the allurements of the flesh, do either despise, or reiect this grace of God. It is then required that we be athirst, that is to say, to haue an ardent desire; that we may be fitted to be partakers of so great benefites.

Buy, without siluer.] The Prophet meanes not that there are any which haue siluer in abundance: but it must be thus resolved; Notwithstanding you be extremely poore and needie, yet the way is open for you to come vnto Christ, through whom these gifts are freely guen. But will some say, How can a man be said to buy, without paying ought? I answer, That the meanes whereby we obtaine any thing, is heere improperly called buying. The verb to buy heere then, is taken for to get, or obtaine. And the price, for the labor or industrie; or, any other way whereby men obtaine any thing. He ſhewes then that we are vtterly poore and beggerly, hauing nothing in the world to get this grace of God, but are heere gently allured to receiue all things of his hand freely, without any reconpence on our part.

Verſ. 2. Wherefore doe yee lay out ſiluer, and not for bread? And your labour without being ſatisfied? Hearken diligentlie vnto mee, and eate that which is good: and let your ſoule delight in fatneſſe.

HEe complaines of mens folly and ingratitude, who either reiect or diſdaine Gods bountie, in offering them all things liberally: and yet in the meane while, wearie themſelues much in following after ſundry toles, which can bring them no profit at all. For the diuell hath ſo bewitched them, that they had rather erre in their forlorne by-paths, yea and to kill themſelues for nothing, then to reſt vpon that grace which God preſents before them. The experience of the time in which we liue ſhewes ſufficiently, that the Prophet tooke not vp this complaint onely againſt them of his owne nation, but againſt all men, of what time or age ſouer. For all the ſucceſſors of Adam are caried away with this rage, namely, that whileſt they pretend to ſecke the way to eternall life, they whollie erre and goe aſtray, and rather follow their vaine opinions then the voice of God. The Prophet then complaines not onely of their ſlothfulneſſe, who hauing vtterly forgotten both God and themſelues, haue no care at all of the ſpiritual life of their ſoule, (the numbers of which kind of perſons are very many) but of thoſe who ſeeme to deſire life, and yet neither keepe nor obſerue the way or means to attaine vnto it, but wander in their owne crooked paths.

Heere then are condemned all ſuch means to obtaine ſaluation by, as men haue forged vnto themſelues, without Gods word; and are therefore called unprofitable coſts. For by ſiluer, he vnderſtands all induſtrie, ſtudie, and paines of men: not that God eſteemes a ruſh of all that which wee offer him in vaine to ſerue him; but in regard the ſenſe of the fleſh eſteemes thoſe labours very precious, which we haue fooliſhly taken vp.

By the word bread, hee vnderſtands that which he ſaid before touching vvaſters: and by labour, that which he called ſiluer. As if he ſhould ſay; Men wearie themſelues much for nothing. For when they follow their inuencions, they muſt looke for no reward, though they vex and martyr themſelues neuer ſo much. Therefore the Prophet ſaith, that thoſe who labour inconfiderately, ſhall neuer be ſatisfied. For if they forſake God, to ſecke out new meanes of ſaluation, they ſhall neuer be filled; becauſe, as Hoſea ſaith, they are fed with wind: Chap. 12. 1. They may well ſeeme to be full, whileſt a vaine conceit blindfolds them; but they ſhall be like thoſe, who being ſwollen with wind, ſeile not their hunger. And yet it were much better for them to bee ſo pinched with hunger and thirſt, that they might thereby be prouoked to cry eaſteſtly vnto the Lord to be filled: according to that in Plalme 63. 2. My ſoule thiſteth for thee, like ſhe dry ground. But bread or water alone, would not ſuffice to fill vs, neither can our life bee ſuſtained with one of them. That is the reaſon then why the Prophet hath vſed diuers words, to ſhew that God furniſheth vs with all things abundantly, that are neceſſary to preferue life, leſt we ſhould vſe any vnlawfull ſtrife to ſuccour our felues elſewhere.

But becauſe euery one ruſheth himſelfe into error by his owne counſels; and all hauing forſaken God, doe vaniſh away in their owne peruerſe imaginations, the Prophet heere adds a remedy, namely, that we whollie depend vpon the mouth of God. For whoſoeuer ſubmits himſelfe vnto his word, needs neuer feare that hee hath miſpent his time. And heere wee ſee a wonderfull goodneſſe of God, in that he offers his grace, though men be vnthankfull and vnworthy of it.

Yet notwithstanding he adds a condition, for the entrance into life, cannot be made, vnleſſe wee giue care vnto him. And as the cauſe of our ruine is, that we ſtop our eares againſt Gods word: ſo the way to heauen is open vnto vs, if wee hearken vnto him diligentlie. He repeats the ſame admonition againe, the better to moue our affections: and redoubles the word, Hear, in hearkening. And that hee might the better win vs with ſweete allurements, he proteſts the faulte to be our owne, if we be not fully ſatisfied with all ſorts of good things.

Verſ. 3. Incline your eares and come to mee: heare, and your ſoule ſhall liue: and I will make an euerlaſting covenant with you, euen the ſure mercies of David.

BY this heape of words wee may the better conceiue of that which I haue ſaid before, namely, that God omits no meanes to awaken and correct our dulneſſe: and yet heere is a reprehention. For it muſt needs be granted that ſuch are too drowzie headed, who being ſo louingly called, doe not forthwith yeelde their obedience. An excellent place: which ſhewes that our happineſſe conſiſts in that obedience which wee ought to yeeld vnto the word. Now when he ſpeakes thus, his meaning is, to bring vs to ſaluation: and therefore the fault reſts wholly in our felucs; for wee contemne this ſauing & quickening word. Moreouer, if God ſhould otely command vs to doe that he hath inioined vs, hee ſhould therein ſhew vs the way indeede how to obtaine life, but yet without any profit to vs. For the law, as it comes forth of Gods mouth, is the miniſter of death, 2. Cor. 3. 7. but when hee calls vs to himſelfe, and adopts vs for his children, when he promiſeth remiſſion of ſinnes and ſanctification; this cauſeth them which heare, to receiue life of him. We are the

to consider what kinde of doctrine it is that hath life in it, that we may therein seeke our saluation.

From this place also we gather, that there is no hope of saluation, vnlesse we be obedient to God and his word; and by this all men are conuincid, so as they can pretend no cause of ignorance; for he that vouchsafes not to heare, shall neuer be able to allege one found reason for his owne defence. But, as I haue said, these repetitions set forth the patience of God in calling vs. For he summons vs not for once only; but if he perceiue that we be slow, he admonisheth vs the second, yea, the third time, that he might overcome our stubbornnes. He rejects not those then at the first which disdain him; but after he hath many times allured them.

The nature of faith.

Furthermore heere is expressed the nature of faith, when he commands vs to come vnto him: for wee must so heare the Lord, that the fruit thereof may also follow. Those also who receiue the word of God in faith, do cast away their lusts, and reiect the world wherewith they were fast bound, that they may willingly draw neere vnto God, and that with much joy and gladnes of heart. Yet faith can not be conceiued without hearing, Rom. 10. 17. that is to say, without vnderstanding of the word, and therefore he commands vs to encline our eare before we come. When mention shall be made of faith then, let vs remember that it must be ioined to the word, in which it hath her foundation.

Gods word the ground of faith.

Quest.

Where he addes, and I will make a covenant: some demaund, whether God had not made a perpetual covenant with the Iewes before: for he seemes to promise a new and vnaccustomed thing heere. I answer, he promiseth no new thing, but that which God had before contracted with the people, and therefore it is but a renewing and a confirmation of the covenant, to the end the Iewes should not thinke that Gods promise was abolished, though they saw thescilues so long banished. For whilst they were driuen out of that countree which was promised and giuen them, being without the Temple, and without the sacrifices, and had no marks at all left, but the coucnant of Circumcision; who would not haue thought but that God had vtterly shaken them off? Isaiah then hath fitted this phrase of speech as you see to the capacite of the people, that they might know how the coucnant of God made with their fathers was firme, stable, and eternall, and neither mutable nor temporarie.

Anf.

Coucnant, and mercie, must alwaies be matched together.

He signifies the same thing by the mercies of David: but by this clause he shewes, that the coucnant is free, because it hath its foundation laid in nothing but in the meete goodnes of God. As oft then as wee meete with this word Coucnant in the Scriptures, wee must therewithall call to minde the word mercie, or grace.

Now he pronounceth he will be faithfull therein: and forthwith he signifies, that he will be found true and constant, so that none shall be able to charge him with double dealing, as if he had broken his coucnant. Nay, the Iewes themselues rather were become trecherous and disloyall, in regard they had reuolted from him: for, he for his part can not repent himselfe touching the promise or coucnant, which he had made.

He calles them mercies of David, because this coucnant which was now so solemnly confirmed, was made in Dauids hand. True it is that the Lord made the coucnant first with Abraham, Gen. 15. 5. and 17. 7. and afterward confirmed it by Moses, Exod. 3. 15. and lastly he established and ratified it in the hand of Dauid, 2. Sam. 7. 12. that it might continue for euer. When the Iewes then thought of the redeemer, that is to say, of their saluation, they were to remember Dauid as the mediator, representing the person of Christ. For Dauid must not be considered heere as a private man, but with that title & person aboue mentioned.

Dauid, a figure of Christ.

The time also is to be noted, for the dignitie of the kingdom being extinct vnder this captiuitie of Babylon, and the royall title obscured and prophaned, it might seeme that the truth of God was abolished in the ruine of this familie. He therefore commands them by faith to looke vnto that royall seate of Dauid, which for a time was throwne downe.

See Psal. 89. 38. &c.

Verf. 4. Behold I gaue him for a wisdomnes to the people, for a Prince and a master vnto the people.

* Or, a Leader.

Now the Prophet explanes that yet better which he briefly mentioned before touching Dauid, to wit, because the promise of the redeemer was made to him; and that this speech therefore was fitlie applied to his person, in regard he was the pledge of the coucnant: for he was not placed in that office to performe his owne affaires, but was set there as the mediator betwene God and the people. Notwithstanding, it is certaine that Isaiah brings vs directly vnto Christ, to whom wee may easily descend from Dauid: as if he should say, this successor of Dauid shall come, by whose hand perfect saluation and felicitie is promised. And in calling him a uincine, he signifies that the coucnant by him contracted shall be ratified & established in Christ. There is great weight in this word uincine then: for the Prophet shewes, that this coucnant shall be approued in Christ, through whom Gods truth shall be manifested, because he shall testifie that God is true.

An explanation of the former verse in this, and the verse following.

Wee must descend from Dauid, to Christ.

A witness.

But this testimonie consists in doctrine, for without it we should receiue but little profit by Christs coming, in which sense it is said in Psal. 2. 7. I will preach the decree. And in the same sense Isaiah in Chap. 49. 2. saith, that Christs mouth should be like a sword, or, an arrow. For this cause also he calles him a Leader, and a Master, that to him and to his doctrine audience might be giuen: for if we heare him not speake, nor with certaine affiance embrace that which he saith vnto vs touching the good will of his Father, his power is abolished. For after this sort the name of Christ makes a great found among the Papiests: but seeing they will not receiue him for their Doflar and Master,

A Leader.

A Master.

A testimony touching the vocation of the Gentiles.

Maſter, but onely acknowledge him in name, their brags which they make thereof, are but vaine and ridiculous.

These words, to the peoples, are added by way of amplification: for the Church could neither bee established in her first dignitie, nor get increase, but by the vocation of the Gentiles. It was therefore necessary that the voice of Christ should sound thorow all the quarters of the world, because he is ordained to be the uiziter, conductor, and teacher of all mankind.

Vers. 5. Behold, thou shalt call a nation that thou knowest not; and a nation that knew not thee shall runne vnto thee, because of the Lord thy God, and the holie one of Israel: for he hath glorified thee.

Isaiah expounds that now at large, which he touched before but in a word: for he shewes that Christ shall be the conductor, not of one people onely, but of all. To call heere, notes out the possession: so as there is a correspondencie betweene the word To call, and, to answer, Christ then being called by authority, as hee which is furnished with a soveraigne power, hee calles the nations to bring them in order touching their duties, and to subiect them to the word. Now he saith they shall be readie to obey, though they were not knowne of him: not that the Sonne of God who created them, knew them not what they were, Psal. 94. 9. but it is spoken in regard they were reiected and despised, vntill they beganne to haue a place in the Church: for God had particularly called the Iewes; and the Gentiles seemed to be vtterly excluded, as if they had nothing at all appertained vnto them. But now, speaking to Christ, he promisseth that he shall constaine them to obey, though before they were wholly estranged from vnder his dominion.

Afterwards, he declares this more plainly in the progresse of the text, where indeed he vseth the plurall number, that he might the better shew that the Church shall be gathered out of diuers nations: so as those who were separated and scattered, should now be assembled into one body: for the word, shall runne, is to be referred to the consenting of faith.

Moreouer, he saith heere, that the Gentiles haue not knowne: but it is to be takē otherwise then that which he said before, namely, that Christ knew not them: for ignorance is properly attributed to the prophane and vnbeleeuers, in regard they are deprived of the heauenly doctrine, without which we shall neuer know God. And howsoever this knowledge is naturally ingrauen in the hearts of all; yet it is so obscure & confused, and wrapped in so many errors, that if the light of the word bee not added therunto, whilst they know God, they shall be ignorant of him, and not know him at all, but shall miserably erre in darkness.

We haue heere an excellent testimonie then touching the vocation of the Gentiles: for whom Christ is ordained a redeemer, as well as for the Iewes. Whence also we gather, that God hath now care of vs, if wee will submit our selues vnder his gouernment: so as hee will not onely watch ouer vs, as he doth ouer the rest of his creatures, but as a father that is vigilant ouer his children. The word shall runne, doth better expresse the efficacy of this vocation: for the end thereof is, that we may obey God, in yeelding our selues teachable with a ready and glad heart in his presence, and willingly to receiue from his mouth, the least of his commandments. For as S. Paul saith, Rom. 1. 5. and 16. 26. Obedience is the end of our vocation. But because the Gentiles were farre estranged from God, it was necessary they should valiantly inforce themselves to breake thorow all impediments, to draw neere vnto him.

Because of the Lord, Iſaiah shewes from what fountaine this willingnesse and cheerefull alacrity shall spring, namely, the Gentiles shall know they haue to doe with God. For if we consider Christ as man onely, his doctrine will not much moue vs: but if we apprehend God in him, we shall be inflamed with a wonderfull affection. Now he is heere described vnto vs as a Minister, ordained of God to perfect his worke. For in taking vpon him our nature, he therewithall tooke vpon him the forme of a seruant: and in this behalfe it is no disparagement to him to see him subiected vnto the Father, as one of vs.

Moreouer, we are to remember that which we haue often touched before, touching the coniunction of the head with the members. For that which is said of Christ, appertaines to his whole body: and therefore glorification is common to the whole Church. I grant that Christ alwaies holds the soveraigne degree: for being highly exalted, he rules ouer the whole world, to the end all nations may runne vnto him. To conclude, the Prophet shewes that men yeeld obedience to Christ, and submit themselves to his doctrine, because God hath exalted him, and would that his excellencie should bee acknowledged of all men: for otherwise, the preaching of the Gospell would profit very litle, vnlesse God gaue efficacie to the doctrine, by the power of his holy Spirit.

Vers. 6. Seeke the Lord whilest hee may be found: call ye vpon him whilest he is neere.

Having spoken of the fruit of the Gospell among the Gentiles, who were before estranged from Gods kingdome, he now pricks forward the Iewes, that they may be ashamed to sleepe whilst others raue: for seeing they were first called, it were a shame for them to come lag. This exhortation therefore properly belongs to the Iewes, before whom Iſaiah sets the example of the Gentiles, that hee might prouoke them to follow them: which the Lord also had forctold, namely, that he would prouoke the Iewes to ielousie by a foolish nation: Deur. 32. 21.

The Gentiles set before the Iewes, to prouoke them to follow them.

The time To find, is not taken altogether in the same sense heere, as it is in the 32. Psalm: but for that time wherein God offers himselfe; as in other places he hath set down a certaine limited day, within the compass whereof his fauour and saluation shall be found. And yet I grant that Isaiah also notes the time wherein necessitie presseth vs to aske helpe of God: but we must principally remember that God vs sought in a fit time; vpon himselfe comes forth to meete vs; for it shall be in vaine for the drowzie and sleepe to bewaile the losse of that grace, which themselves haue wittingly reiected. The Lord beates with our slothfulness for a tyme, and patiently waits for vs; but if he gets nothing by it, hee will leaue vs, and bestow his grace vpon others. Christ therefore admonisheth vs to walke whilest it is day, because the night will come, in which wee can walke no more forward: John 12. 37.

Hence wee are to gather a singular consolation, namely, that we are heere assured not to lose our time in seeking God: Secke, saith Christ, and you shall find; knocke, and it shall be opened; aske, and you shall receiue: Matth. 7. 7.

The word call, may be taken heere generally: but I thinke hee notes out a particular seeking of God, such an one as is principall aboue others: as if he commanded vs to haue recourse vnto him by prayers and supplications. Now hee then shewes himselfe to be neere, when hee summons vs familiarly vnto him, in opening the gate, or presents himselfe before vs; to the end we should not wander hither and thither to seeke him.

Whilest he is neere.] Saint Pauls distinction is to be noted; who saith, the preaching of the Gospell is signified by these words: Rom. 10. 10. The Lord is neere, and offers himselfe vnto vs, when the voice of the Gospell sounds in our eares. Neither ought we to seeke him a far off, nor to fetch many circuits, as the vnbelleeuers doe: for he presents himselfe vnto vs in his word, to the end wee for our parts may draw neere vnto him.

Verf. 7. Let the wicked forsake his waies, and the vnrighthouse his owne imaginations, and returne vnto the Lord, and hee will haue mercie vpon him; and to our God, for he is very readie to forgine.

How God is said to be neere vnto vs.

Abundant in pardon.

A confirmation of the former sentence.

HE confirmes the former sentence: for hauing called men to receiue Gods grace, he at large describes the way how to recouer the same. We know how the hypocrites yell and cry with open mouth after God, when they would be succoured in their miseries, and in the meane while they harden their hearts through a wicked obstinacie. That the Iewes then might not disguise themselves in seeking of God, Isaiah exhorts them to true pietie. Whence wee gather, that the doctrine of repentance ought perpetually to be ioined with the promise of saluation: for men can neuer taste Gods goodnesse, vnlesse first of all they bee displeas'd in themselves for their sinnes, and haue both renounced the world, and themselves also. For no man will euer in good earnest desire to be reconciled vnto God, nor to obtaine remission of his sinnes, vnlesse he be touched with a true and sound repentance.

The Prophet describes the nature of repentance three waies, or by three phrases of speech; Let the wicked forsake his waies, and the vnrighthouse his imaginations; and then, let him returne vnto the Lord. Vnder the word vvaies, he comprehends the whole course of our liues; and thus hee requires that they bring forth fruits of righteoufnesse, to shew their newnesse of life. In adding thoughts; he signifies that it is not enough to correct the outward actions, but that wee must begin at the heart. For though according to mens iudgements, we haue as it seemes, changed our life from worse to better, yet wee haue indeed made but a weak beginning, if the heart be not first changed. Repentance therefore obtaines in it the change of the whole man. Wherein wee haue first to consider the imagination, then the deliberations, and lastly, the outward actions. Men see the actions: but the roote from whence they proceed, is hidden within the heart: it behoueth therefore that it bee first reuolued, that afterward from thence there may flow forth fruitfull workes. First, the understanding must be clenid from all the filthinesse that is in it: and then must we cast off the wicked affections and lusts; that from thence, outward testimonies may afterward manifest themselves. If any one boast that hee is changed, and yet liues a disorder'd life; his reioicing is vaine: for these two things must be required together, to wit, the conversion of the heart, and the change of the life.

Besides, God calles vs not to turne to him, till the former reuolt be amended. For hypocrites would be well enough contented that that which they doe should be praised, so they might still bee suffered to rot in their filthinesse: but we can haue no acquaintance with God, vnlesse we come forth of our selues, especially when we haue estranged our selues from him, by a wicked backsliding: wherefore the renouncing of our selues, goes before our reconciliation with God.

And he will haue mercie.] This knitting together of the text ought to be diligently noted. For it shewes that men can neuer be brought to repentance, but by setting before them the assurance of the remission of sins. Whosoever preacheth the doctrine of repentance then, without mentioning Gods mercie, and the free reconciliation, he loseth his labour. For we see how our Popish Doctors thinke they haue wel discharged their duties, when they haue long insisted vpon the former point: and yet in the meane while, they doe but babble and lie in preaching this doctrine. Yea, though they should teach the true way to repentance, yet would it bee to small purpose, seeing they omit the foundation

The doctrine of repentance must alwaies be ioined with the promises of saluation.

The nature of repentance described.

Note

The conversion of the heart, and the change of the life must go together.

The renouncing of our selues, goes before our reconciliation with God.

Remission of sinnes must not be separated from the doctrine of repentance.

tion of free remiſſion of finnes which only appeaſeth conſciences. Truly the guiltie ſinner will alwaies flee the preſence of God (as we haue ſaid in another place) as long as he ſhall be hald before his Iudgement ſeate to yeeld an account, neither will he euer be humbled to obey, nor feare, till his conſcience be at reſt. Now becauſe it is a difficult matter to quiet terrified conſciences, Iſaiah drawes an argument from the nature of God, ſaying, that he will be mercifull, and abundant in pardoning. The holy Ghoſt inſiſts long vpon this point of doctrine, becauſe wee alwaies doubt whether God will pardon vs or no. For howſocuer we haue ſome opinion of his mercie, yet dare we not perſwade our ſelues ſo aſſuredly that it belongs vnto vs as wee ought. You ſee it is not without cauſe that the Prophet addes this member, becauſe he thereby labors to diſpoſſeſſe our minds of that trembling which is incident vnto vs, as oft as we ſtand in doubt of his infinite mercie towards vs.

Verſ. 8. For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your waies my waies, ſaith the Lord.

9. For as the heauens are higher then the earth, ſo are my waies higher then your waies, and my thoughts above your thoughts.

FOR my thoughts.] This place is diuerſie expounded. Some thinke that mens conuerſation is here condemned in generall, to the end they ſhould not pleaſe themſelues therein, nor flatter themſelues in their vices, becauſe there is no acceſſe vnto God, vntleſſe we be emptied of this vaine opinion of our own rightcouſnes. For none will ſecke after the Phyſition, but ſuch as feele themſelues vehemently ſick, and that deſire both the remedie and their health. And therefore they compare this place with that in Luk. 16. 15. That which is highly eſteemed before men, is an abomination in the ſight of God. But I thinke the Prophet hath another meaning. Thoſe therefore who thinke that Gods affection is heere diſtinguiſhed from humane affections, expound it beſt (as I thinke.) For men are wont to meaſure God by their owne ell (as they ſay) and becauſe themſelues are irreconcilable, and can not be pacified but with much adoe: they in like manner thinke that God can neuer be appeaſed, after they haue once offended him. But the Lord ſhewes that he reſembles them: nothing at all. As if he ſhould ſay, I am not a mortall man that I ſhould be ſo ſeuere, and an enemy to you for euer: no, my thoughts are farre vnlke yours, for though it be impoſſible for you to be pacified, and that it be an hard matter to bring you to be reconciled with thoſe which haue offended you, yet it is not ſo with me, I will not ſhew my ſelfe ſo inhumane towards you. To this agrees very well that place of Dauid, Pſal. 103. where deſcribing Gods mercie, hee ſaith, that is in height when the heauens are about the earth: and though the application be to another purpoſe there, yet the ſenſe is all one with this. In a word, there is none ſo gracious, or ſo inclined to mercie as the Lord is, and therefore we muſt impute it to our owne diſſidence, if we obtaine not pardon of him.

Now there is nothing which troubles our conſciences more, then when we thinke God reſembles vs, for this makes vs afraid to draw neere vnto him; nay, we rather flee from him as our enemy, and can neuer be in any reſt. So thoſe who meaſure God according to that which they conceiue of him, doe indeed conceiue a flat Idoll direſtly contrary to the nature of God, neither can they do him a greater diſhonor then this. Are not men who are corrupt, and ſtuffed full with inordinate luſts aſhamed to compare the moſt pure nature of God with theirs? and to impton him that is infinite within ſo narrow bounds, wherein they feele themſelues miſerable enthralled? For in what more noyſome dunceon can any of vs be incloſed, then within our owne inſidelitic? I take it that this is the Prophets true and naturall meaning; and yet I denie not but he had ſome reſpect to mens maners, namely ſuch as he hath deſcribed them in the former verſe.

To be ſhort, his meaning is, that men muſt forget themſelues when they meane to turne to God, becauſe there is no impediment ſo dangerous as when we thinke him to be irreconcilable. Let vs remove this falſe imagination then out of our minds.

Besides, by this place it appeares how farre they are out of the way, which abuſe Gods mercie to take the greater libertie to ſinne. For ſee how the Prophet argues; Repent; forſake your wicked waies, becauſe Gods mercie is infinite. When men doubt or deſpaire whether they ſhall obtaine pardon or no, this makes them more wicked and ſtubborne; but the feeling of mercie drawes and conuerts them. It follows then that ſuch as neither forſake their leaud life, nor change their minds, haue no part in this mercie.

Verſ. 10. Surely as the raine commeth downe and the ſnow from heauen, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it to bring forth and bud, that it may giue ſeede to the ſower, and bread vnto him that eateth.

HAving ſpoken of the tender affection and incredible loue which God beares vs, he again placeth promiſes in the middle, that ſo being grounded vpon them, we might be aſſured to paſſe ſafe and ſound through all dangers. For it would ſerue to little purpoſe that one ſhould deſcribe vnto vs the nature of God, or informe vs of his ſecret counſell, if therewithall wee were not brought to the word, wherein the ſame is maniſeſted: but God ſpeakes plainly and familiarly vnto vs, ſo as we haue no neede to enquire further. We muſt therefore come to the word, which plainly opens his will vnto vs, if ſo be we wil containe all our ſenſes within the bounds of it, for otherwiſe we ſhall alwaies remaine

We muſt impute it to our owne vnbelicfe, if we obtaine not pardon at Gods hand.

Verſ. 7.
Verſ. 8.

To the commendation of Gods mercifull nature, he addes a promiſe that our faith might be the more ſurely ſetled.

Gods nature deſcribed.

Why the holy Ghoſt inſiſts ſo long vpon this doctrine.

Gods affection diſtinguiſhed from ours.

in suspence, and doubt what shall become of vs, though the Lord should tell vs an hundred times that he resembles men nothing at all. And yet men (if they would confesse the truth) do desire to be certaine of their saluation, and to know what should befall them afterward. We are therefore to obserue this order well which the Prophet heere keeps. And thus Moses brought the people to the knowledge of the word, saying, Aske nor who shall ascend vp into heauen, or who shall descend into the deepe, for the word is neere thee in thy mouth and in thine heart, Deut. 30.12, and this is the word of faith (faith Paul) Rom. 10. 10, which we preach.

Now the Prophet borrowes a similitude here from a thing ordinarie amongst vs, and it is exceeding fit for his purpose: for if wee see so great efficacy in the raine which waters and fattens the earth, much more will the Lord manifest his power in his word: for the raine vanishest, and is subiect to corruption, but the word is immortal, immutable, and incorruptible, and cannot consume away as the raine doth.

But that we may the better vnderstand the Prophets words, wee are to search out his drift. Men doubt whether God will accomplish that which hee hath promised in his word; for wee thinke his word hangs in the ayre without any effect: but by the very order of nature hee shewes, how detestable this opinion is. For it is too absurd a thing to attribute life to the word, then to an insensible creature; and therefore hee teacheth, that the vord is neuer vpon him his effect. Some vnderstand it, as if the preaching of the Gospell were neuer in vaine, but that it alwaies brings forth some fruit. Which I grant to be a truth, for the Lord workes by his Spirit, & giues increase, 1. Cor. 3. 7. that the labour of his Ministers may not be in vaine. But the Prophet meant another matter, namely, that God casts not the seede of his word vpon the ground, without effect, neither scatters hee his promises in the ayre, but we shall gather the fruit thereof, if so be wee resist him not by our owne incredulitie. Now hee mentions two effects of the raine, which makes the earth fruitfull by falling vpon it: First, that men may thereby haue plenty of food to sustaine them: secondly, seed so sown: the benefit whereof, is to be reaped the yeere following. If then Gods power bee so great in things transitorie, how much more effectuall may wee thinke his word is?

Vers. 11. So shall my word bee, that goeth out of my mouth: it shall not returne vnto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I will, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it.

God speaks to vs by men.

The vord goes so out of Gods mouth, that it also goes forth of the mouches of men: for God speaks not from heauen, but vnto men as his instruments to declare his will by their ministrarie. But the authoritie of the promises is better confirmed vnto vs, when wee heare that they proceede out of the sacred mouth of God. Although then that hee vfe witness on earth, yet hee testifies, that whatsoever they shall promise in his name, shall bee ratified and confirmed afterwards, before him. And that he might the better ingraue in mens mindes, the power and efficacy of preaching, he aduertiseth vs that hee scattereth not this precious seede at random, but hath ordained it to a certaine end; in regard whereof, no man is to doubt of the effect. For there is nothing whereunto men are more inclined, then to iudge of God according to their owne fantasies, that so they may reiect his word. It was needfull therefore that this doctrine should bee often repeated and beaten into our heads, that wee might know how God will surely performe that which he hath once said. As of then as wee heare of Gods promises, let vs consider what his meaning is in them: as when hee promiseth free remission of finnes, let vs assure our selues of reconciliation through Christ. But as the word of God is powerfull to saue the faithfull, so hath it also his efficacy to condemne the wicked: which Iesus Christ himselfe affirms, Iohn 12. 48. The word which I haue spoken, that shall iudge in the last day.

We must haue an eye to Gods intention in his promises.

Vers. 12. Therefore shall yee goe out with ioy, and bee led forth with peace: the mountaines and the hilles shall breake forth before you into ioy, and all the trees of the field shall clappe their hands.

Now the Prophet concludes the argument of this Chapter: for that which he hath spoken touching Gods mercy, tended to assure the Iews, that God would deliuer them. Now he applies his discourse touching Gods infinite goodnesse to his purpose, and shewes, that his thoughtes are nothing like to the thoughts of men. Take a paterne heere then of a right order of teaching, namely, when we apply generall doctrines, to the present vfe.

The conclusion in this and the vfe following.

A right form of teaching.

Lastly, Isaiah speaks of the peoples restitution, which depended vpon the free mercy of God.

By mountaines and hilles he signifies, that all stumbling blocks which should lie in the way, should notwithstanding serue to aid those that should returne vnto Ierusalem. These are similitudes then whereby hee shewes that all creatures are at Gods becke, and are ready to employ themselves to set forward his worke: yea and reioice to doe it.

He alludes to the deliuerance out of Egypt, according to the custome of the Prophets: for so it is written in Psal. 114. The mountaines leaped like Rammes, and the hills as lambs: What ailed thee O sea, that thou fleddest backe? O Iordan, why wast thou turned backe? For in regard that the restitution of the church is as it were a reuening of the whole world, it is said, that heauen and earth are changed, as if they had quite altered their ordinarie course.

course. All this depended vpon the former prophecies, by which they had a promise touching their returne.

Verſ. 13. For thornes, there shall grow ſyre trees: for nettles, shall grow the mirrhe tree; and it shall bee to the Lord for a name, and for an everlasting ſigne that shall not bee taken away.

A Gaine hee extolles Gods power, which should appeare in the peoples deliuerance: for he teacheth that there shall be such a change, that the way shall bee made verie easie for their returne. Some expound this allegorically; and by thornes, vnderstand that such as inducours to hurt and hinder others, should now become ſyre trees: that is to say, bearing fruit, and bringing profite to their neighbours: but this expolition is too curious. I denie not but these things indeed appertaine to Christs kingdome, and therefore ought to be spiritually vnderstood. For the Prophet beignes at the returne from Babylon, and comprehends the whole estate of the Church, vntill the manifestation of Christ to the world. But it doth not therefore follow that this allegorie is any thing to the purpose, because Jſaiah speaks of the peoples returne into Iudea, For, that they might the better passe, the Lord promiseth to remove all impediments out of the way, and would furnish them with all things necessaric, that so they might bee free from all annoyances.

And so, when Christ promiseth the benefit of our redemption, he therewithall takes away whatsoever thing might hurt or hinder the same: nay, he turnes it wholly the contrarie way, that out of euery euil we might draw some good: for all things turne to the best (as Paul saith) to them that loue God: Rom. 8. 27. And thus God vseth the most hurtfull and dangerous euils, as remedies to purge the faithfull, that they may not giue ouer themselues to the loue of the world, but may bee made the more liuely, and ready to performe the will of their Master.

All things fall out for the best to them that loue God.

When he addes that this shall be for a name to the Lord; it is to shew the end of the Churches restitution; namely, that Gods name might bee the more praised among men, and that the memory thereof might flourish, and bee conserved. And therefore hee addes, for a ſigne: that is to say, for a testimonie, or for a perpetuall memoriall. Although the Church floate then, and bee diuersly tossed among these waues and tempests, yet seeing the Lord is purposed that the memorie of his name shall last for ever, hee will both defend and maintaine her.

THE LVI. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. Thus saith the Lord; Keepe iudgement and iustice: for my saluation is at hand to come, and my right consaſſe to be reuealed.

In the former verses God hath manifested the signes of his fauour towards vs: now he shewes what duties wee owe to him.

HIS is a notable place. For the Prophet shewes what God requires of vs, as soone as he manifests the signes of his fauour, or promiseth to bee recouered vnto vs, to the end our peace may be assured. The thing he requires of vs, is such a conuersion as changeth both our iudgements and affections: so as hauing forsaken the world, wee forthwith aspire vnto heauen: and therewithall hee requires the fruits of repentance.

Vnder the words iudgement and iustice, hee comprehends all the duties of charity, which consists not onely in abstaining from euill, but in doing good to our neighbours, according to our abilities. And this is the summe of the second table: in the obseruation whereof, we giue testimonie of our pietie, if there bee any at all in vs. The Prophets alwaies bring vs thither: for by this means it will quickly appeare what we are within: and the true integritie of the heart is thus discerned, our iustice from those outward ceremonies wherein hypocrites please themselues; as wee haue men. shewed heretofore. Now he renders a reason, and forthwith shewes the beginning from whence all must frame themselues to newnesse of life; namely, that in as much as Gods iustice is at hand to bee reuealed to vs, we in like manner ought to present him with our.

The Lord calles himselfe iust, and saith that iustice is his; not that hee holds it shut vp in himselfe; but because he sheds it abroad vpon men. He also calles that his saluation, by which he deliueers men from destruction.

Besides, howsoeuer these words be directed to the Iewes, that with a sincere affection of heart, and with an vnfeined desire of godlines, they might shew themselues thankful to their redeemer; yet it also belongs to vs all in general: for the whole world is lost in it selfe, vnlesse it recouer saluation in God. Let vs also note this exhortation; for thereby we are taught to be so much the more moued to the true feare of God, as we are neere vnto him; and therefore Saint Paul admoniseth the faithfull, to cast off the workes of darknesse, and to put on the armour of light; because our saluation is neerer vs then wee be aware of: Rom. 13. 12.

Verſ. 2. Blessed is the man that doth this, this, and the sonne of man which layeth hold on it: he that keepeth the Sabbath, and * pollutesh it not, and keepeth his hand from doing any euill.

* Or, violates it not.

To the duties of the second Table vers 1. he now add s those of the first.

IN calling them blesed, who hauing imbraced this doctrine, doe submit themselues vnto God, walking in vprightnes, he closely insinuates, that there are many deafe, or vn-teachable. But to the end their peruersitie or sluggishnes might not discourage the faithfull, he recommends his exhortation to them by the fruite which comes thereof. That the faithfull then should not recoile back, but casting off all impediments, they might readily prepare themselues to walke vprightly, he cries out that such only are blesed, to whom grace is giuen to be thus wise-hearted.

Anf.

The duties of both Tables must goe together.

In the former vers^e we haue said that the duties of the second Table were comprised vnder the words of Iustice and Iudgements. But heere he mentions the Sabbath, which appertaines to the first Table. I answer (as I haue touched before) that such as lue innocentie and iustlie with their neighbours, doe giue good testimonie of their sinceritie towards God. It is no wonder then if after the Prophet hauing spoken of the second Table, he now mentions the first, because they must be ioined both together. In a word, Isaiah meant to say, that he shall be a happie man who submits himselfe vnto God in the obseruation of the whole law, for to such an one the righteousnes and saluation of God belongs, vers. 1.

But because men wander and erre in their imaginations, and seeke diuers means how to draw neere vnto God, the Prophet shewes that there is but one way, namely, when we studie how to order and rule our liues according to the Decalogue. Besides, heere is an excellent place, for it teacheth vs, that nothing is pleasing vnto God, but the obseruation of his commandements. If it be asked whether men can obtaine righteousnes and saluation by works; the answer is easie: for the Lord offers vs not saluation as being prevented by our merits (nay he rather prevents vs) but he offers himselfe freely to vs, and onely requires that wee draw neere vnto him. Seeing then that of his owne good will he calles vs to himselfe, and offers his righteousness freely, we are to take heed, that we deprive not our selues of so great a benefit.

Quest.

Anf.

Now because the Sabbath (as it appears by Moses and Ezechiel, Exod. 31, 13, 17. Ezech. 21, 13.) was the principall signe of Gods seruice, therefore by the figure Synecdoche it contains in it selfe all the exercises of pietie, a part being taken for the whole. We must vnderstand the Sabbath then, with all his circumstances. For God rests not himselfe contented with the outward ceremony, neither delights he in our idleness, but he requires that we freely renounce our selues, that with hart and hand we may yeeld him absolute obedience. The Prophet also addes another Synecdoche in the end of the vers^e, to note out charitie. The summe is, That God is not serued aright, vnlesse true pietie and innocencie of life goe together: as also vnder these two parts he hath distinguished the maner of well liuing. In a word, here is an exposition of that true righteousness which is contained in the law of the Lord, that in it we may rest, for in vaine shall any man seeke a way of perfection out of it. This then ouerthrowes all deified worthips, and all superstitions.

Verf. 3. And let not the sonne of the stranger which is ioined to the Lord speake and say, The Lord hath surely separate me from his people: neither let the Eunuich say, behold, I am a drie tree.

THE Prophet shewes that this grace of God shall be such, that those who were farre off from him before, and against whom the gate was shut, should now obtaine a new estate, or should be placed againe in their right. And thus he meets with their complaints, that they should not say they were reiected, vnworthie, aliants, or shut out for any infamous note; because the Lord would take away all lets and impediments. Now this may be as well referred to the Iewes, whose temporarie reiectiō had made the like to strangers, as to the prophane nations: and for mine owne part, I referre it both to the one and to the other, that so it may agree with the prophecie of Hoses, I will call them my people which were not my people. Hosc. 1. 10.

Moreouer when he saith, that they shall be ioined to the Lord, it is to admonish them that this consolation only appertained to such as followed the voice of Gods call. For there were many Eunuches to whom the Lord shewed no mercie, and many strangers, which were not ioined to the Lord. This promise therefore is restrained to those, who being called, should obey. Vnder strangers and Eunuches, be noted out all such as seemed vnworthie to be reputed among the number of Gods people, who once had chosen them for his peculiar inheritance, and afterwards banished them out of his land. Other nations were shut out of his kingdome, as it appeares in euery place of the holy Scripture. Saint Paul saith in the Epistle to the Ephesiens, Chap. 2. 12, 13. that the Gentiles had nothing to do in the Common wealth of Israel, but were strangers from the covenants of promise, without hope, and without God in the world; but now in Christ Iesus (saith he) you which were once farre off are made neere by the blood of Christ.

Thus then the Gentiles might in the beginning doubt whether this benefit of adoption belonged vnto them or no, seeing it was properly appropriated to the Iewes. And therefore wee see how the Apostles auoided this thing; though the Lord had commanded them to preach the Gospel thorow out all the world. Mark. 16. 15. For they thought the doctrine of the Gospel should haue been prophanted, if they should indifferently publish it as well to the Gentiles, as to the Iewes. And the same scruple might also trouble the minds euen of the elect people, in regard their banishment out of the holy land, was a

ſigne vnto them of their reiection. The Prophet therefore wils them to remoue all ſuch doubts as theſe out of their heads.

Vnder the word Eunuch, hee comprehends all thoſe that bare any note of infamie vpon them, which might be an occaſion to ſeparate them from Gods people. For it ſeemed that y^e Eunuches, and ſuch as had no children, were reiected of God, and excluded out of the promiſe: where in he had ſaid to Abraham, that his poſteritie ſhould be as the ſtarrs in the heauens, and as the ſand of the ſea: Gen. 15. 5. and 22. 17. In a word, hee withdrawes all men from the conſideration of themſelues, that they may wholly fix their mindes vpon the calling of God, that thus they might imitate the faith of Abraham who conſidered not his body now dead; neither the barrenneſſe of Sarab: wombe; ſo as to enter into any diſpute with himſelfe through his owne incredulitie touching the power of God: but aboue hope, beleued vnder hope: Rom. 4. 18, 19, 20. The Prophet then ſpeakes to the vile and conſpicable, left they ſhould be diſcouraged; becauſe, as Saint Peter ſaith, God is no acceptor of perſons; but in every nation, he that feareth God, and vvorkeſt righteouſneſſe; is accepted of him.

Act. 10: 34.

Verſ. 4. For thus ſaith the Lord vnto the Eunuches that keepe my Sabbaths, and chuſe the thing that pleaſeth me, and take hold of my covenant.

Now follows the confirmation. For the faithfull ſeruants of God which kept the Sabbath, and cleaued to the righteouſneſſe of the Law, ſhould haue place in the Church, although they were Eunuches, or had any other impediment. And thus it ſeemes the Prophet abol:ſeth all the externall inarkes and vtiſe ceremonies, wherein the Iewes onely gloued. For the dignitie of the new Church is not outward, but ſpiritual: and albeit the faithfull haue no appearance of glorie before the eyes of worldlings; nay, they are rather deſpised and wronged by them, yet are they of precious eſteeme in the ſight and preſence of God.

When he ioines obedience to the obseruation of the Sabbath: thence we may eaſily gather, that in ſpeaking of the day of reſt, hee had not ſo much reſpect to the bare ceremony, as to a perfection of holineſſe. Where againe he impoſeth bands vpon the faithfull, that they ſhould not ſtart the leaſt ſtep from the duties of the whole Law: for it is not permitted them to chuſe any thing that likes them, but that which God hath reuealed to be pleaſing and acceptable to him. Hypocriſie and inconfiderate zeale therefore are here condemned, in that God oppoſeth his commandments to reuealed intentions, and inioines them to take ſure hold of his covenant.

Verſ. 5. Euen vnto them will I giue in mine houſe, and within my walles, a place, and a name better then of the ſonnes and of the daughters: I will giue them an euerlaſting name that ſhall not be put out.

Heere wee may evidently ſee, that the doore is ſet open for all perſons to enter into Gods kingdome (how vnworthy ſo euer they be.) The Prophet alludes to Ieruſalem, and to the Temple, wherein the Lord had put the incommutall of his name. Now none but the Iewes had any place there: for they would haue thought the Temple prophaned, if any Gentiles had come within it. And this, as you know, was the cauſe that ſo great a multitude aroſe againſt Saint Paul, who had brought ſome vncircumciſed ones into it: Act. 21. 28. But heere the Lord receiues all thoſe without exception, whom before he had reiected: and hath aboliſhed that difference, by bringing vs, who were ſtrangers, into the Temple; that is, into the Church. For it is not now ſhut vp within the bounds of Iudea, as once it was; but it extends it ſelfe farre and neere, thorowout the whole world: as in Marke 16. 15.

The word lad, is taken heere, as in many other texts, for place. It may alſo be taken for power or authoritie, in regard they are advanced to ſuch dignitie, as to be held for the children of God. Where hee adds, a better name, it may be demanded whether the Lord compares the Iewes which were then in the Church, with the faithfull which afterwards he will call into their roome: or the eſtate of the people to come, with that it was then. For it is certaine that the name of the Gentiles is more honourable now, then the name of Iewes, who for their infidelitic were cut off: and we haue ſucceeded them, who being wilde Oliues, were grafted into the naturall ſtocke: as S. Paul ſpeakes, Rom. 11. 24. We may expound it then, that the Eunuches and ſtrangers ſhall haue a better name then the children, and thoſe of the houſhold; who were vnto God as his heritage. But I had rather take it in another ſenſe, namely, that the dignitie of the faithfull ſhall be greater vnder Chriſt, then it was vnder the law. The Patriarks had an excellent name, in reſpect that they called vpon God as their Father, and were knit vnto him by (a perpetual) covenant: but at Chriſts coming, Gods grace was more abundantly ſhed abroad; and therefore we at this day haue obtained a better, and much more excellent name then they.

He calles it an euerlaſting name, becauſe it is vritten in the heauens, where it ſhall not wither, but ſhall flouriſh for euer. The wicked will haue their names to be remembered in this world, and vſe all the meanes they can that their renowne may continue perpetually: but it is perſhable, and therefore laſts not long. But this is another kind of name; for wee are ſo made heires of the heauely kingdome, that wee are accounted for Gods children in the preſence of his Angels. The word Aſſubaniſm, may alſo be interpreted, for the name which a man gets by meanes of his children: for men make their names after a fore perpetuall by their offering. Now the Prophet promisseth that this name shall be much more excellent. But I had rather follow the first exposition.

Verf. 6. Also the strangers that cleaue vnto the Lord, to serue him, and loue the name of the Lord, and to bee his seruants: enery one that keepeth the Sabbath, and polluteth it not, and imbrace my conuenant.

ioyfull in mine house of praier: their burnt offerings and their sacrifices shall be accepted vpon mine Altar; for mine house shall be called an house of praier for all people.

BY these phrases of speech hee expresseth that which he said before, to wit, that the strangers which were shut out of Gods Church, are called now vnto it: so as the difference betweene the circumcised and the vncircumcised, shall bee abolished for euer. For these words cannot bee referred to the proselytes; that is, the strangers conuerted to the Iewish religion, who were taken into the body of Gods people by circumcision: for then the Prophet had spoken of no new or vnwonted thing. But hee testifies that Gods grace shall bee spread ouer the whole world; which could not be done, but the Gentiles must needs bee vnited with the Iewes, to make one body with the: which came to passe; whē the difference touching vncircumcision and circumcision was taken away. There is nothing now therefore that can hinder the Gentiles from seruing of God, seeing they are called into the Temple: that is to say, into the societie of the faithfull. Yea, as a little before we noted, the priesthood was translated from the Tribe of Leui; not onely to the whole body of the Iewes, but euen to very strangers also. It is well enough knowne, in how great detestation the Iewes haue this sentence. For albeit they reade these words of the Prophet, yet they hold it for a thing extremely prodigious, that God should call the Gentiles to the participation of this so excellent a benefit, which was peculiarly allotted vnto them. And yet that which the Prophet saith is to manifest, that none can without grosse impudencie, call the truth thereof into question.

He extols this grace by the fruit that should flow from it; for the true and solid felicitie stands in our being vnited with God as his children. I grant that the wicked ouerflow in iollitic; but all their ioy shall be turned into wailing and gnashing of teeth, because it is accured of God. In the meane while, he fills the hearts of the faithfull with vnspokeable ioy, as well in shewing himselfe pacified towards them, as in causing them to feele his fauour and good will, by giuing an happy successe to their affaires. Yet the chiefe and principall ioy consists in the peace of conscience; which Saint Paul attributes to the kingdom of God: Rom. 14. 17. which wee then inioy, when wee are reconciled vnto God by Iesus Christ: Rom. 5. 1.

He also promisseth to accept of their sacrifices: for we are all called of God, to the end we should offer vp our bodies, and all that wee haue, as sacrifices vnto him. By the word sacrifices, he meanes Gods spirituall worshippe, such as the Gospell describes vnto vs: for the Prophet spake according to the customes of his owne tyme, wherein the worship of God was wrapped with diuers ceremonies. But now, in stead of sacrifices, wee haue praises, thanksgiuings,

A repetition.
Verf. 5.

HEE repeats that he said before, namely, that God will so open the gates of his Temple to all without exception, that there shall be no more distinction betweene Iew and Gentile: but such as the Lord shall call by his word, Act. 2. 39. which is the band of our adoption, shall be ioined vnto him. And therefore these are those espousals, in compassion, and faithfulness; wherof Hosea speaks, Chap. 2. 19. 20. Now he not onely allots them an outward court to worship the Lord in, as the people in old time did, Luk. 1. 10. but he attributes vnto them a more honourable order, to wit, that God will auow them for Priests and Leuites, which were prophane before.

But the end of their vocation which immediately followes, is to be noted, namely, that the Prophet saith, they shall be Ministers of the Lord, on condition that they loue the name of the Lord. And thus all hypocrites are heere reiected, because the expresse tenor of our vocation runnes thus; that we serue the Lord with a free and ready affection of the heart: for wee cannot serue him, vnlesse wee yeeld him a franke and voluntary obedience. That therefore which is said of almes-giuing, ought to be applied to all the parts of our life; namely, God loues a cheerefull giuer: 2. Cor. 9. 7. that thus vnto our Lord and Master, wee may render such a seruice as proceeds from Ioue.

reiected.

In adding, whosoever shall keepe: hee againe mentions the Sabbath; vnder which (as we haue said before) the whole worship of God is comprehended. But the people neglected that which they should principally haue obserued vpon this day: for in contenting themselves with the outward ceremonie, they omitted the truth; that is to say, amendment of life. The Lord on the other side meant they should so rest, that yet in the meane while they should keepe their hands, verf. 2. and their soules pure from all vncleanes and iniquitie.

Vnder the particle, and shall imbrace: he expresseth the zeale and constancie of such as subiect themselves vnto God, and cleaue fast vnto his word. If therefore wee be ioined to the Lord by conuenant, wee must keepe it steadfastly, and be fast glued as it were to the pure doctrine, that nothing whatsoever may turne vs backe, or diuide vs from him.

 rit or excellencie, but from the free bounty of God: for he might iuſtly reiect them, if he onely looked vpon them as they are in themſelues. And yet by this goade are wee quick-

Chriſt our Altar.

For mine houſe ſhall be called, &c. The Temple was onelic deſtinated to the Iewes, by whom the Lord would eſpecially be called vpon. And therefore when Paul would ſhew that the Iewes were aboute the Gentiles in dignitie, he ſaith, that to them belonged the ſeruite of God: Rom. 9. 4. Thus then the Temple was built amongst them by a ſpeciall priuiledge, ſeeing no other nation in the world was permitted to haue the like. But now that difference is taken away, and euery perſon, of what place or Countrie ſoever, may enter into the Temple: that is to ſay, into Gods houſe, becauſe all nations are called to worſhip God. Here then we ſee the manifeſt difference betwene the Law and the Goſpell:
 for vnder the Law, there was but one people which might ſerue God purelie; for which cauſe the Temple was particularly built: but now all may freely enter into Gods Temple, there purely to worſhip him: that is to ſay, euery where.

The difference be-twene the Law and the Goſpell.

But wee muſt note the phraſes of ſpeech which are vſual and familiar among the Prophets: for they vſe ſuch figures as fitted their owne times (as we haue already ſhewed): for by the Temple and ſacrifices they meane Gods pure worſhip and ſeruite. The Prophet here therefore ſets forth or deſcribes the ſpiritual Kingdome of Chriſt, vnder which it is lawfull to call vpon God, and to liſt vp pure hands in euery place, 1. Tim. 2. 8. And neither in this place nor at Ieruſalem, ſaith Chriſt, ſhall men worſhip the Father any more: but the true worſhippers ſhall worſhip the Father in ſpirit and truth, verſ. 23. With our eies therefore do we behold the accompliſhment of this propheſie, namelic, that Gods houſe is made the houſe of prayer to all nations, that ſo in all languages he may be called vpon, Abba Father.
 The Iewes therefore can no longer boaſt that they onely are Gods peculiars. Thus you ſee then how neceſſarie it was that the Prophets ſhould ſure their manners of ſpeech to the times and cuſtomes then in vſe, that ſo all might vnderſtand them: for the time of the full and open reuelation of things was not yet come, but Gods ſeruite was clothed with diuers figures.

Mat. 1. 11.

And yet no queſtion but this Temple thus conſecrated for the ſeruite of God, was truly and really his houſe: for he had told by Moſes, that he would be preſent in euery place where he ſhould put the remembrance of his name, Exod. 20. 24. And Salomon in dedicating the Temple ſaid, When they ſhall come and pray in this houſe, then wilt thou heare in heauen thy dwelling place, 1. King. 8. 33. which is the cauſe why Chriſt reproceheth the Iewes for making his Fathers houſe a denne of theeuces, Math. 21. 13. and thereunto addes this our text to that in Iere. 7. 11. Now Chriſt called the Temple the houſe of prayer, as hauing reſpect to thoſe times in which the Goſpell was not yet publiſhed. For albeit he was come, yet he was not then knowne, neither were the ceremonies of the law aboliſhed.

 But when the valle of the Temple was rent in twaine, Mat. 27 31. and remiſſion of ſinnes preached in his name, Luk. 24. 46. Act. 13. 38.
 then theſe high praifes touching the Temple and other ceremonies tooke their end, for then God began to be called vpon of all nations.

And yet herewithall let vs marke that we are called into the Church vpon condition that we call vpon the name of God. For thoſe do but glorie in vain who hold a place therein, and yet make little or none account of prayers, nor of true inuocation. In what place ſoever we be then, let vs beware we deſpiſe not this exerciſe of faith, ſeeing it ſufficientlie appears by the words of our Prophet, that prayer is the greateſt and the moſt excellent ſeruite that God requires of vs: as alſo it is ſaid in Pſal. 50. 15. that the holines of the Temple conſiſted in the prayers which then had their forcé there.

A confirmation of the former do-ctine.

Who gathers &c.] Iſaiah giues God this title in regard of the circumſtance of the matter in hand, becauſe it is his office to gather in the Church when it is ſcattered abroad, which is confirmed in the ſame ſenſe out of the words of the 147. Pſal. verſ. 2. The Lord builds vp Ieruſalem, and gathers together the diſperſed of Iſ-rael. For this cauſe then he promiſeth to aſſemble them againe, yea, and to ioine diuers nations vnto them, that ſo the Church might grow and multiply into a great number. As oft then as we doubt of the reſtauration of the Church by being aſtoniſhed at the ſight of ſo many ſtormes & tempeſts wherewith it is toſſed, let vs lay hold vpon this buckler, and couer our selues therewith, namely, that it is the Lords office to gather together the dispersed of Israel; yea, though they were diuided and scattered to the utmost part vnder heauen, yet, that euen thence will the Lord easilie gather vs, and restore vs to our perfect estate: Deut. 30.4.

Yet will I gather upon him, I willinglie retain the proprietie of the Prophets words: Gnal, that is, to, or vpon: for (as I thinke) he hath an'ie vnto that which he said in the former verse, namely, that the Temple should be set open to all people: and here signifies, that God shall adde to the Iewes which should be gathered a great number of others, which is now indeed accomplished. For he not onely gathered together those which were dispersed in Babylon, but also gathers together other scattered theepe, which often, and almost euery day came to passe, Iolin 10.16. so as he neuer ceased gathering till he had added a great heape to those which were first gathered.

Verf. 9. All ye beasts of the field, come to deuoure, euen all ye beasts of the forest.

Having comforted the faithfull, he now turns himselfe to the hypocrites.

IT seems this prophesie agrees not with the former, because whatsoever the Prophet hath hitherto spoken was full of sweet consolation, and now he denounceth terrible threatnings, and an horrible destruction. Truly one would take these things as contradictorie one to another. But having comforted the faithfull, we must not thinke it strange if he now aduertise them notwithstanding touching the calamitie which should ensue, to the end that whē they should see all things in an vprore and confusion, yet they should not faint nor be discouraged: as also that their necessities might therewithall stir them vp to runne to the free grace of God with the greater zeale and diligence. There was yet another reason. For the hypocrites abuse Gods promises, and glorie thereof falsely: they are readie to conceiue a vaine hope, proudly insulting in those matters which do nothing at all belong vnto them. Now you see the cause then why the Prophet meant to disappoint them of all matter of reioicing. And thus this prophesie hath a two-fold vie: First, to preserue the faithfull from desperation at the sight of so many calamities which should in a manner ouerwhelme them: and that euen whilest all things were quiet, by faith foreseeing the euils to come, yet they should content themselves with this only remedie. Secondly, that the hypocrites might be astonished with feare and trembling, that they should not insult in their ouerweepings, nor blesse themselves, vnder pretence of these promises.

God therefore calles not men, but cruell beasts to deuoure the people. He commands the faithfull then not to be troubled, nor to suffer themselves to be transported in their minds by distrust whē these wild beasts should be sent. And yet therewithall he meant to awaken them that he might draw them to repentance: and to exhort them patientlie to wait for Gods mercie, that so the promises might not lose their authoritie.

By the beasts of the field, he meanes all sorts of beasts, and so comprehends not onely the Chaldeans, and Assyrians, but also Antiochus, the Romanes, and other nations, who afflicted this people with diuers warres. But he especiallie respects that discomfort of y people by the Chaldeans, who afterwards led them captiues into miserable thraldome.

Antiochus.

Verf. 10. Their watchmen are all blind: they haue no knowledge: they are all dumb dogges: they can not barke: they lie and sleepe, and delight in sleeeping.

NOW he addes the cause why the people were destinated to this destruction, namely, in regard they were gouerned by wicked Princes and Pastors. Not that the fault rested wholly in them, and that the people were innocent; but because their sinne was the beginning of this mischiefe. For if we follow blind guides, that shall not excuse vs; but we rather worthily beare the punishment of our owne iniquities, in regard the Lord takes away good Governours fro such as he meanes to chastise for their vthankfulness.

The cause of the peoples destruction.

By the word watchmen, he not only vnderstands the Prophets which had the gift or charge of teaching, but the Judges, Governours, & Kings, whose dutie it is to administer all things with equitie and vprightnes. And thus he comprehends two sorts of governours, namely, both Ciuill and Ecclesiasticall, whom the Lord had established as the two eyes in the bodie for the well ordering of y Church. If they be wicked or faithlesse, there can not a more dangerous plague happen to the Common-wealth.

Magistracie and Ministrie, as the two eyes in mans body, to gouerne the Church by.

In the first place then the Prophet reprocheth them for their ignorance. For as the principall verue of a good Pastor is to know what belongs to his charge, that he may be able to discern and iudge what is profitable or hurtfull for his flock, and then to watch over them carefullie, and to stand as it were vpon his watch-tower, that by all means he may procure the saluation of his sheepe: so is there nothing in the world that doth worse befeeme him then ignorance & blindness. No man then shall be fit for this office, vnlesse he be acquainted with the right manner of gouerning the people. Hence it appears what account it is to be made of the Idols of our time, who proudly vaunt with intollerable insolencie of the title of Pastors, though in the meane while they be vnlearned, and grossly ignorant.

1. Ignorance.

Nothing more vnseemly then ignorance in a Minister.

Idoll Ministers.

Secondly, in calling them dumb dogges, he taxeth them of idleness, and carelesnes. For seeing it is required of a good Pastor that he be diligent & industrious: in calling them slow bellies, he shewes there was nought in them worthie the title of Pastors. When wee then are deprived of good Pastors, and that either sots, or cruell wolues succeed them, let vs see and acknowledge Gods wrath therein; and let vs assure our selues that destruction is not farre farre off. For from thence, the Prophet gathers his threatnings, and denounceth delolation to the people, when their Pastors are dumbe: Prou. 29. 18. It follows then, that Pastors are ordained of God to performe the office of dogges: that is to say, to watch, to feare away theeues and robbers, and not to suffer them to enter into the sheepfold. If dogges then stand so carefully vpon their watch, and in such wise regard their Masters profit, as to be alwayes watching for his safetie, and will neuer cease barking at those, who it may be are able to kill them: ought not the sleepe and idle Pastors blush to bee ouer-matched by a brute beast?

2. Idleness.

Destruction not farre off whē learned and painefull Pastors are remoued, and ignorant idle bellies placed in their rooms.

Vers. 11. And these greedie dogges can neuer haue enough: and these shepheardes cannot vnderstand; for they all looke to their owne way, euerie one for his aduantage, and for his owne purpose.

3. Couetousnesse.

THe third vice he reproues in these wicked Pastors, is their insatiable couetousnesse. Though they be idle in gouerning, saith he, yet they are valiant and hardie enough in supping vp the broth. Some extend these words of the Prophet further, namely, that such rule with eueltie: and this vice is expressly reprooued by Ezechiel, 34. 4. For false Prophets are ordinarily fierce, and behaue themselves vniciously and barbarously ouer the poore people. But hee that shall aduise himselfe well touching these words, hee shall see that the Prophet taxeth their vnmeasurable auarice, which hee also in the next words paints out at large.

Euery one looke to his owne way.] That is to say, they are diligent in their affaires. Euery one seekes his aduantage. In a word, his meaning is, that there was none, but preferred himselfe first: as if euery one had bin borne for himselfe onely.

The word Mikhsafelu, is diuersly expounded; for some translate; To his end: that is to say, to his affaires: but this agrees not with the Prophets meaning. Others; After the limits of his couetousnesse. But the most naturall sense (as I thinke) is right: which phrase of speech, is also common among vs. Euery one then being giuen vnto couetousnesse, they drew and appropriated all things vnto themselves, seeking their owne commoditie, without regarding the good of others.

He which is giuen to inordinate lusts, can neuer serue God.

Hence wee gather, that he which is giuen to inordinate lusts, can neuer serue God: and whosoeuer he be that bustes his braines to heape vp riches, will neuer apply his mind to build up the Church of the Lord. I know not a more dangerous blindnesse then couetousnesse. A true Pastor therefore ought above all other vices to flee that, if he will serue God faithfully. Doe wee see then that the Prophet complained thus of the wicked Pastors of his time? Let vs not bee troubled if the like befall vs now: neither let vs thinke it any new thing, if

wee see so few to inploy themselves in good earnest, in the worke of the Lord.

Vers. 12. Come, I Will bring wine, and wee will fill our selues with strong drinke: and to morrow shall be as this day, and much more abundant.

I Auing reproued the conterfessie and idleness of the Pastors: now hee sets forth their malice and desperate obstinacie: for hee brings them in speaking, and describes their wicked talke: whereby we may discern, they could not be reduced into the right way, neither by any admonitions nor threatnings; but audaciously contemned whatsoever was said vnto the. In Chap. 22. 13. & 28. 15. the Prophet hath recited the flouts of scornets, who invited one another to play the epicures and drunkards, whilest by the seruants of God they were exhorted to fast in sackcloth and ashes. Let vs eate and drinke, say they, for to morrow we shall die: as if they should haue said; What meane these Prophets to importune vs so much? Wee shall looke but with leane cheekes, if wee follow their counsell. These and the like blasphemies they were not afraid to vtter: as we haue scene in Chap. 22. and 28. And Isaiah repeats the same complaint heere, to wit, that the Pastors hardened their hearts, and obstinately contemned the iudgements of God.

4. Desperate obstinacie.

Now hee reproues them not for drinking vine and strong drinke, which in it selfe is no vnlawfull thing: but he taxeth their brainesicknesse and brutishnesse, which makes men proudly and presumptuously to despise the word of the Lord. The abuse of wine is condemned in other places. But the Prophet in this place inueighs against this frantike malapartnesse, whereby they loftily combined themselves against God, and trampled vnder feete all threatnings, admonitions, reprehensions; and in a word, all religion. And yet no doubt but hee taxeth this horrible and hateful vice, in that they ouercharged themselves with wine and meates, when they had no neede; that neither shame, feare, nor reuerence of God or man, might disquiet their meriments. For it is the custome of the wicked, to glut themselves with all the belly-cheere they can deuise; that so they may with the greater boldnesse and intemperancie, plunge themselves in their filthinesse. But is it not an horrible and fearefull example to see such a contempt of God; not in strangers, nor among the common people; but in the heads and gouernours, who by their godly conuersation, (in this holy and sacred order, which was the figure of Christ) should haue bin guides vnto others? For the Kings and Priests bare in them his image, and were types of him. Wee may easily iudge how insupportable this pride is, whereby men thus furiously oppose themselves against Gods word. For when we come once to recite this soueraigne and last medicine, our case is desperate; we are past cure; because we will not suffer the Lord to bring vs againe into the right way. For this cause, in Chap. 22. 14. the Lord vowes, that this iniquitie shall neuer be pardoned.

Thus then the Prophet notes out an extreme impietie: and let vs obserue his words diligently; To morrow shall be as this day: that is to say; Haue we bin merry to day? wee will be yet more merry to morrow; let vs not pine our selues away before the time.

He applies their fault, because in deriding Gods patience and long suffering, they promised to themselves impunity: as if God slept, or sat idle in heauen, as oft as hee deserues his iudgements. Men at this day in debt or to benumme and bewitch their owne consciences with such diabolically proverbs as these, mentioned in this text, that they may the more freely wallow themselves in all sorts of voluptuousnesse, and take libertie to commit wicked and execrable impieties. That we then may escape this horrible iudgement of God, let euery one search and try his owne waies, and a far off let vs espie the wrath of God; lest being ouertaken at vnawares, wee be suddenly ouerwhelmed therewith.

Diuellish proverbs.

THE LVII. CHAPTER.

Verf. 1. The righteous perisheth, and no man considereth in heart: and mercifull men are taken away; and no man understandeth that the righteous is taken away from the euill to come.

The Prophet continues on his argument still.

Isaiah prosecutes his argument still. For hauing shewed how securely hypocrits repose themselves in their pleasures, and with what impudencie they despise Gods word; he further complaines, that they consider not the workes of the Lord: for we are placed in this world, as vpon a spacious Theatre, to behold the acts of our God. Neither is there any of his workes, how meane soeuer they appeare in our eyes, that we should lightly esteeme; but ought rather diligently and attentiuely to obserue and consider them. Now among other testimonies of his providence, the Lord sets before vs the death of the faithfull, and of approved men whom hee takes out of this world, when he is purposed severely to chastise and correct his people. But no man laies it to heart, neither imagines that such matters should be forerunners of imminent destruction, namely, that the good are gathered to God, and laid vp in safetie, that they may not be wrapped vp with others, in so many common miseries. The summe is, that the wicked greatly deceiue themselves, in thinking that the prolonging of their liues, should bee the onely happinesse that can befall them: and that for this cause they should take themselves to be in better case then the faithfull, who die sooner then they. For as they are glued to the world, so vnder this pretence, doe they harden their owne hearts, that (as they suppose) God fauours them exceedingly, in suffering them to bee safe and sound, whilst others die.

If by men of mercy you vnderstand the charitable and pitifull, then this epithete must be diligently noted; for thereby the Prophet shewes what the true righteousnesse of Gods children is, whereas hypocrites place their righteoussesse in things of no value. Now there is no vertue more pleasing vnto God, then liberalitie, whereby wee manifest our righteoussesse, and discouer vnto all an heart void of guile. But mercifull men may as well be taken in the passiuie signification, namely, for such to whom the Lord shewes mercie: for this manner of speech is common enough among the Hebrewes. Neither is it from the purpose to say, that the grace of God should be priuily opposed to the peruerse and sinister iudgements of men, who are wont to condemne such as die in the flower of their youth. And yet seeing the Prophet in many places adorns the children of God with this title, of being mercifull and libetall, I see no inconuenience, if (as I haue said) we make it a true definition of righteoussesse.

By this it appeares that then the Lord gathered a great number of good men out of the world vnto himself, whose death prognosticated some horrible calamitie; & yet that the Iewes regarded not such forewarnings. Nay, which is worst of all, they tooke occasion thereby to ouerflow with the greater freedome in all licentiousnesse, thinking all should goe well with them, when they surruied the best men.

Now this doctrine is very fitting for all ages & times. For, for the most part, it comes to passe that God takes the good out of this world, when hee is purposed sharply to punish the sinnes of the wicked. Why so? Surely as hee hath a tender care ouer those that be his, so hee puls them often times as brands out of the fire, hauing compassion on them, to the end that such as shall suruiue them, may therein perceiue a token of Gods wrath. And yet this is not a perpetuall law, seeing the elect are often wrapped vp in the temporall iudgements with the wicked. Notwithstanding the taking of them away first, is a thing so ordinary, that it seldome fallies out otherwise: where of in our time we haue a famous example in the death of Martin Luther, who was taken out of this world a little before Germany was pitifullly wasted with that furious warre, which many yeeres before he had foretold, whilst hee thundered against the

the contempt of the Goſpell: againſt the villainies and foule enormities which then overflowed in every place. Often he entreated the Lord to take him out of this life before he ſhould ſee thoſe horrible iudgements which he had threatned: the apprehenſion whereof made him to quake for feare: and this requeſt he obtained of the Lord. Soone after his death a ſudden and unexpected war began to invade, and miſerable to afflict Germanie: euen then when they ſuſpected nothing leſſe. And examples hereof alſo we have daily. And doubtleſſe, if men did well conſider of them, they would not flatter themſelves ſo much in their iniquities as they doe. But I have thought it good to recite this in particular, not onely becauſe it hath happened within theſe few yeeres: but alſo that it might be the more apparant, in regard it fell out according to that which ſo excellent a Preacher of the Goſpell, and a Prophet of God had foretold. We therefore ought diligently to obſerve the worke of the Lord as well in y^e lives, as in the death of the iuſt: but moſt of all in their death. Whereby the Lord calles them to the enjoying of a better life: that ſo they may bee deliuered from thoſe miſeries, into which the wicked muſt at length be plunged.

Verſ. 2. Peace ſhall come: they ſhall reſt in their beds, euery one that walketh before him.

THe Prophet here deſcribes what the ſtate of the faithfull is after death. For the wicked who thinke there is no life after this, do iudge that good men are periſhed, becauſe they can apprehend nothing in death but ruine and perdition. Iſaiah therefore ſaith, that ſuch a peace ſhall come, as is more deſireable then a thouſand lives that are replenished with troubles. As if hee compared the good to crased ſouldiers, who are permitted quietly to take their eaſe.

He addes the ſimilitude of ſleepe, to ſhew, that they ſhall bee ſet free, and deliuered from all diſquietneſſe and care, as if they ſafely and ſweetly ſlept in their beds. Whereas he addes, euery one that walkes: I referre not whoſoever to the word peace, as ſome expound it. Namely, that peace ſhall goe before the faithfull, as if it led them the way. But I thinke he therein notes out the faithfull. As if hee ſhould ſay, Whoſoever walkes before God, he ſhall haue peace. And therefore when the righteous doe die, they (after the enduring of many troubles) are called to peace and reſt, as hauing finiſhed their courſe.

Now they reſt in their beds, in regard they doe not yet inioy full and perfect glorie and bleſſedneſſe: but wait for the laſt day which ſhall be the time of their reſurrexion, where in all things ſhall be fully reſtored. And mee thinke Iſaiah meant to ſay ſo. But, may ſome ſay, Doe not the iuſt inioy peace in this preſent life? For the fruite of faith is that wee poſſeſſe our ſoules in patience, Luk. 21. 19. Rom. 5. 1. I anſwere, that albeit faith begets peace in our hearts, yet notwithstanding wee are toſſed to an ſea with many waues, and are neuer ſo ſecure and quiet in this life, as when the Lord drawes vs home to himſelfe. The death of the iuſt then you ſee brings them to a ſweete reſt and peace, becauſe the ſame is precious in Gods ſight: Pſalm. 116. 15. But the death of the wicked is full of horror. From this place alſo we may gather, that our ſoules are immortal: for were they without any ſenſe, as ſome braineleſſe ones haue dreamed, then could they not bee ſaid to enioy any peace. They are in peace and reſt then, becauſe they liue in Chriſt.

Verſ. 3. But you witches children, come hither, the ſeed of the adulterer, and of the whore.

HAuing ſpoken of the happie and peaceable death of the faithfull; he inueighs with exceeding vehemencie againſt the wicked, who for all this, ceaſed not to leade a leaud and laſciuious life without taking the death of the righteous to heart. For as he hath affirmed that the faithfull are in peace: ſo contrariwiſe he denounceth an vnreconcilable warre againſt the other. Nay, which more is, he hath ſhewed that death to Gods ſeruants is an hiding place which defends them from the whirlewind, haile, and other tempeſts: that afterwards the obſtinate contentners may bee laid open to all ſorts of calamities. For we muſt note here the oppoſition betweene the faithfull which walke before God: and the wicked who ceaſe not obſtinately to reſiſt him. The former after death, ſhall haue peace: the latter ſhall bee vexed whileſt they liue, and after death ſhall feele horrible torment.

He ſummons them before Gods iudgement ſeate: becauſe they thought to eſcape by their ſophiſtications. But he ſhewes that they ſhall gaine nothing thereby, becauſe they ſhall be drawne before the ſame whether they will or no. For, as they had made their hearts ouer hard, ſo was it needfull that they ſhould be pricked with the ſharper launcers: doubtleſſe the Prophet could not vſe too much ſeueritie, as well to awaken their drowneſſe, as to beate downe their pride. Who knows not with how great outweening the lewes inſult in regard of their race? The Prophets therefore are vſually wont to cruſh this their arrogancie and hee mindednes; by affirming that they were none of Abrahams children, in reſpect they beuaught themſelves as baſtards, and ſuch as were degenerate.

This is the cauſe why our Prophet termes them, the ſeed of the adulterer, and of the whore. Wich which alſo Ezechiel reprocheth them in Chap. 16. 3. ſaying, Thy father was an Amorite, and thy mother an Hittite. And the like phraſes of ſpeech are vſed in many other places: Hoſea. 1. 2. Thus then hee brings their intollerable pride downe to the ground, and in deſpite of their teeth drawes them forth into the light, that they ſhould not thinke they could eſcape the tribunall ſeate of God.

Verf. 4. On Whom haue yee iested? upon whom haue ye gaped and thrust out your tongues? Are not yee rebellious children, and a false seede.

Hypocrites vnmarked in this, and the verses following.

THe Prophet shewes that the Iewes haue no occasion at all to glorie so much vnder pretence of their linage or stocke, seeing they derided the Prophets of God. Now they thought it was but with men, with whom they had to deale when they reiected the word. And so at this day wee see how impudently the wicked despise the doctrine of their saluation, and scorne the Ministers of it; and yet in the meane while, couer themselves vnder a vaine shew of religion. This is the reason then wherefore the Prophet preseth them so neere, and reprooues them so sharply. As if he should say, When you thrust out your tongues in this manner against God, and scorne his word, doe ye thinke you haue to deale with a mortal man? For these words, on whom, signifies that they sought out euasions and pretences to cloake their impietic withall. For the vngodly will not acknowledge that they rebell against God: no, they thinke soule scorne any man should so iudge of them: but yet they must bee brought out into the light, and conuincd of their wickednesse. And seeing there is a God, they must be told that they make open warre vpon him, in resisting or in reiecting his word, and in esteeming no better thereof, then of a fable.

To open the mouth, and to thrust out the tongue, is heere taken in one signification: ynesse that vnder these two phrases the Prophet meant the better to discouer their impudencie, namely, in that they thought it not enough only to reiect the Lord, but they must also deride him. For the inward contempt of the heart caused them to vtter forth such manifest scories and blasphemies, so as they were not touched at all with any feare of dishonoring themselves.

Lastly he concludes, that they are rebellious children, a lying seede, and therefore hath iust cause to esteeme them the sonnes of an whore, for such a contempt could not be found in the children of Abraham. By this we learne how the wicked ought to be handled, and with what seueritie they are to be reprobud, that they may haue no cause left them wherby to flatter themselves: and, the more they despise whatsoeuer is propounded vnto them in the name of God, the more ought we to discouer and to manifest in all mens sight their impieties so full of sacrilege.

Verf. 5. Inflamed with Idols vnder euery greene tree? and sacrificing the children in the valleyes vnder the tops of the rocks.

Others translate, Who take pleasure in consolation. But our Prophet takes a similitude vsed in many places of the Scriptures, and very fitting to the circumstance of this place. For the Lord is wont to compare lust, wherewith poore and miserable Idolaters are furiously transported and inflamed, to the loue of brothels, for they keepe no measure at all, neither will they suffer any to restraine them from their follie. Now Idolatrie in Gods sight is a most hatefull kind of whoredome.

As touching the Hebrue word Elim, some translate it Gods, others okes; we may take it in whether sense we will, for there will be no great difference: and all the expositors agree that the Prophet condemnes Idolatrie. I contend not then about the words, though it be very likely that one thing is repeated twice, according to the custome of the Hebrues: and yet it may be vnder an ambiguous word he alludes to their gods.

Sacrificing children. Heere he preseth the Iewes neerer, and shewes that they are none of Abrahams true children. Why so? Because they polluted themselves with all manner of superstitions: and in regard they pleased themselves in such forgeries, therefore he discouers their villanies. As if he should say, You pretend religion, but I protest that you play the whoremongers with Idols. For thus must wee manifest and point out (as it were with the finger) the impietic which subtle and politique heads inducor to varnish ouer with sundrie delightfull colours. The Prophet therefore discharged his dutie most faithfullie, in adiuring them thus before Gods tribunall, and in prouing to their faces that they were guiltie, though they meant to play the cauillers to the full.

Now he shewes that they were rebellious, and had reuolted from Gods law through detestable Idolatries. Then he comes to some particulars, and mentions an horrible, nay, a prodigious and execrable kinde of seruice, namely, Sacrificing of children. Whence it is euident, how greatly the spirit of error preuailes ouer men after they haue once turned away from God. For Satan so possesseth their vnderstandings, that he makes them become starke bedlems. For we must needs conclude that such are frantique and out of their wits who spare not their owne children, but will cut their throates, and thinke they haue then performed an acceptable sacrifice. And yet these cruell murtherers wanted not their pretences wherewith to couer their execrable villanies, to wit, the example of Abraham, who spared not his only sonne. For the ancient Hebrues are of opinion that these customes proceeded fro an inconsiderate zeale: as if they should haue said, Seeing wee are descended from Abraham, we ought no more to spare our children then he did. But this good Patriarke did it in obedience to God, Gen. 22. 2. 12. 16. and these on the contrarie had no commandement, but did it on their owne heads.

Abrahams example was extraordinarie, in which the Lord meant to prouue and to manifest to all the faith of his seruant. Again, Isack was not offered, in respect that the Lord satisfied himselfe with Abrahams prompt and readie willingnes; but these sacrificed their children, children: and therefore this imitation was peruerſe and damnable, ſeeing they trode nothing at all in the ſteppes of their father. This muſt be well obſerued: for the moſt of our ſuperſtitious obſeruāces haue ſprung frō this fountaine of incoſiderate zeale, becauſe men haue greedily ſnatched at any occaſion, and without iudgement haue followed what-ſocuer their fathers haue done.

Verſ. 6. Thy portion is in the ſmooth ſtones of the riuer: they, they are thy lot: euen to them haſt thou poured a drinke-offering: thou haſt offered a ſacrifice. Should I delight in theſe?

Hee proſecutes the ſame argument, and ſundry waies taxeth the ſuperſtitious which raigned in Iudea; for there was no place exempt from idolatry: there was neither rocks, riuers, rallies, nor any corner free, wherein they had not left ſome memoriall of their ſuperſtitious. They had their woods and mountaines, where they ſacrificed according to the cuſtomes of the heathen.

Whether we reade it poliſhed ſtones here, or Parts of the riuer, the ſenſe will be alwaies one. For the Prophets meaning is that the Iewes choſe a ſeruice of God after their owne fantaſie, and turned themſelues away from that rule which he had preſcribed them in his law. Alſo, that by meanes hereof all the ſacrifices by them deuſed were wicked and abominable, in regard God only ought to be heard, when there is any queſtion touching his religion and worſhip. If you will turne it poliſhed ſtones, then Iſaiah taxeth them for the contempt of the law, wherein God had forbidden them to cuſ or poliſh any ſtones with hammers for the framing of his Altar: Exod. 20. 25. Deut. 27. 5. 6. becauſe he would haue them ſacrifice no where elſe but vpon one only Altar. But in reſpect that it was the faſhion of the Heathen to erect Temples iueere vnto fountaines and riuers, the other ſenſe agrees well alſo.

Theſe words theſe, they, haue great weight: and it is to be vnderſtood as if the Lord gaue the Iewes leaue to cleaue to their inuentions, ſeeing they had forſaken him, and rather turned after Idols, and forged inuentions. As alſo the Lord by Ezechiel ſaith to the people, Goe, and ſacrifice every one of you to his Idoll, ſeeing you will not obey me: Ezech. 20. 39. And as I thinke this expoſition agrees beſt. As if he ſhould ſay; I euen leaue you to your owne inuentions; and it contents me that you are whollie addicted therunto. And yet no doubt but the Prophet alludes to that place of Moſes, by whoſe mouth God had promiſed to be the lot and portion of his people, that they might content themſelues with him alone. According to which alſo Dauid ſaith, The Lord is my portion and my inheritance: Pſal. 16. 5. For as much as the Iewes then were reuolted from God, and followed Idols, the Lord had juſt cauſe to ſay they might cleaue vnto them, thereby ſhewing that they ſhould haue no more to doe with him.

To them haſt thou poured drinke-offings.] He continues to put them ſtill in mind of their ſuperſtitious, and proues that they had renounced and forſaken God, becauſe they had attributed vnto them whatſocuer he would ſhould be whollie reſerued as his proper right vnto himſelfe. But the Iewes might haue replied to euery one of the Prophets words, and haue ſaid; that in all theſe things they had none other purpoſe the to ſerue God. And yet you ſee the Prophet ſeares not to charge them with idolatry, for all their vaine and idle pretences: for Gods wrath is prouoked by ſuperſtitious; and the longer they be continued and maintained, the more hotter doth it wax. Hence let vs learne what ſobrietie we ought to keepe in erecting Gods worſhippe, that we may depend vpon his onely will and word. For hee that ſhall ſwarue but the leaſt iot from that, ſhall not onely loſe his time, but ſhall alſo inkindle Gods diſpleaſure againſt him, whoſe Maieſtie, as much as in him is, hee labours to violate and diminiſh.

Should I delight?] We may alſo turne it; Should I repent? And this is the moſt receiued interpretation, becauſe hee meanes to ſhew the cauſe wherefore hee chaſtiſeth the people. As if he ſhould ſay; When I ſhall reuenge theſe enormities, can I repent? Notwithſtanding the expoſition which I haue followed, ſeemes to ſure beſt: Should I take delight or comfort in theſe ſacrifices which you offer mee? For idolaters are wont to pleaſe and flatter themſelues in their inuentions; and therefore preſume that God alſo reioiceth and takes delight and comfort in all things, vpon which they dote with burning luſt. Such an interrogation is not ſuperfluous then, when men thinke that God reſembles them, and that he likes and approoues of all that they thinke well of: but he on the contrary ſhewes, that nothing pleaſeth him, nor is approued of him, but that which accords with his word.

Interrogation.

Verſ. 7. Thou haſt made thy bed vpon every high mountaine: thou wenteſt vp thither, euen thither wenteſt thou to offer a ſacrifice.

Hee repeats the ſame ſimilitude againe which we haue touched before. For ſuperſtitious ſort commit whordome with their Idols; in regard that hauing forſaken the puritie of the word, they breake that holy marriage knos which God had contracted with them; and ſell themſelues ouer vnto Satan. But Iſaiah meant here to expreſſe ſomewhat more: for in telling them that they had made their bed in an high place, it is as much as if he had ſaid; they were become ſhameleſſe, for they cared not who ſaw their villanic, no more then an impudent harlot ſinnes the preſence of men, but is careleſſe of her reputation: ſo theſe committed whordome in the ſight of the Sunne, and being paſt ſhame, aſcended vp to every high and imminent place, to doe it in.

A repetition of the former ſimilitude, verſ. 4.

Hee compares Chapels and Altars to beds, vpon vpon which this cursed filthinesse is committed, and men which sacrifice there to bold and brazen faced strumpets.

In the end of the verse he shewes without any figure, what this harlotry is which he condemnes, namely, that they sacrificed to Idols, I grant they thought in so doing to serue God; but hee reiects whatsoeuer it is that men forge, according to their owne lusts, and detests such a lasciuious course.

Verf. 8. Behind the doores also and postes, hast thou set vp thy remembrance: for thou hast discovered thy selfe to another then mee, and wentest vp, and diddest enlarge thy bed, and make a covenant betwene thee and them, and loudest their bed in every place where thou sawest it.

An amplification of the fault.

HE amplifies the crime whereof hee spake before, that the people should not flatter themselves in their inuentions. Now it is verie likely that isaiah alludes to Moses words, wherein the Lord commanded that they should alwaies haue the Law before them: that they should fixe it vpon the doore postes of the house, and write it in roles, to wrap it about their armes, and about the fringes of their garments, that they might be continually admonished of their duties: Deut. 6.9 and 11.20. Numb. 15.38.39.40. But contrariwise, the Iews ceased not to pollute the doores and the postes of their houses with markes and signes of idolatry; and left no corner nor nooke free from such deflings. Thus God and his Law were reiecte in all places, and in stead thereof, they had fet vp provocations and inticements vnto whoredome.

Thou hast enlarged thy bed. Yet once more he repeats that which he had said before, and comes to this clause againe, to wit, that the Iews committed grosse adulterie with their Idols; and yet thought they serued God; but this came to passe, because they neglected to follow the rules of the word. For it is all one, as if a woman hauing forsaken her husband, should goe and prostitute her selfe to the stewes, and make herselfe common indifferently to all commers: as if the bed were now become an open field, which might containe a great troope of men.

For this cause he saith, that the discovered herselfe without him: because hauing taken off the shamefastnesse of marriage, she suffered others to abuse her. For God holds the place of an husband, to which shee ought to haue been subiect: but shee sought out new companions, and brake the faith of marriage. He amplifies this crime, in regard the Iews did voluntarilie present themselves before the idols: as if a disloyall wife should runne after another man, to haue his companie.

More ouer, vnder another figure, he taxeth their inordinate lust, in respect that one onlie glance of the eye serued the turne, to carry them suddenly and dotingly away into euertie place. Therewithall also he conuinceth men of rashnes: who think themselves very sharp witted in things belonging to Gods seruice; and make choice of their places where themselves list. But this is a diuelliish wit; for the Lord will haue our eyes fixed in such wise vpon him and his word, that they rest closed and shut vp against all other things.

Verf. 9. Thou wentest to the Kings with oile, and diddest increase thine ornaments, and send thy messengers farre off, and diddest humble thy selfe vnto hell.

HERE the Prophet reprooues another vice almost like the former: for impietie begets many errors, and forceth light heads that are void of Gods feare into very sore and perplexed molestations. And is it not good reason that such as will not rest in God should bee restless, or rather tossed vp and downe with whirlwinds? He reprooeth the Iews then that they vexed themselves so much, and so long a time in hunting after the helpe of strangers, namely, when they endeououred to oppose the aide of the Egyptians against the Assyrians: and then being defrauded of their hopes, they began to trot to the Chaldeans. For when men haue forsaken the feare of the Almighty, then they seeke helpe in others, and not onlie wearie themselves, but are a great cost and trauell to achieve the same. And whilest the Lord giues quiet sleepe to his beloued ones, that they may quietly finish that they haue to doe, the wicked vex themselves for nothing. They rise early, and goe late to bed, and eat the bread of carefullnesse: as it is in Psalm. 127. 2. And yet in the meane while they cannot enrich themselves the value of a nail: because they do nothing vnder Gods authoritie or government. Now the Lord punisheth them thus, to the end they may wander vp and downe, as men at their wits end, being euer in doubt and perplexitie, without euer enjoying the benefit of a quiet and contented mind.

It is iust that such as will not rest contented with God, should wander vp and downe restless without reliefe.

See 2. Sam. 28.5.6.7.

Verf. 10. Thou weariest thy selfe in thy manifold iourneys, yet saidst thou not, There is no hope: thou hast found life by thine hand, therefore thou wast not grieued.

HIS meaning is, that men labour in vaine when they follow not God. For they vex themselves without profit, as wee haue said before: because whatsoeuer it be that is taken in hand contrarie to the will of God, can neuer haue good successe. And here hee doth wittily deride the peruse endeuers of such, as in taking much paines, had rather waste and consume the strength of bodie and mind, then with quietnesse to goe whither the Lord called them.

Men labour in vaine when they follow not God.

It is labour lost. That is to say; Albeit thou seeest thy iourneys serue thee to no purpose, yet doest thou obstinately go on in pursuing thy enterprises. And yet very Idiots are wont to repent, when their counsels proper not well.

Such

Who they be that deſerve to be called perverſe and obſtinate.

Such then muſt be called perverſe and deſperate, who having experience of Gods curing and creſting their affaires, are not moved ſometimes to enter into their own harts, and to ſay, What doeſt thou? Ieremiah in his 18. chap. and 12. verſe toucheth this obſtinacie; but in other words: for he ſhewes that the Iewes were growne ſo ſtubborne, that they deſperately ſaid, It is done: that is to ſay, We will walke after our owne imaginations: we have concluded it ſhall be ſo, and we purpoſe neither to alter nor change our determinations. But Iſaiah in this place reprooves that ſenſeleſſneſſe wherewith they were ſo befotted, that they could not bee brought to acknowledge their owne follie, nor repent ſo, as to turne into the right way againe.

Thou haſt found life.] Some take life here for ſoude. As if the Prophet had ſaid; This thy labour hath been as acceptable to thee, as if thou hadſt gotten thy living, in labouring with thine hands. Others take life of the bands for delite or great voluptuousneſſe; and theſe two expoſitions come to one reckoning. But there is yet a little more difficultie, namely, whether he ſpeakes here in good earneſt, or by way of ſcorne. For if there be no figure uſed here, then the ſenſe will be thus: Thou wert not ſorrow, becauſe fortune ſeemed for a time to fauour thee. Whileſt the affaires of vnbeleeuers ſucceed well, the they flatter themſelues more and more in their infidelitie. As the common prouer is, Proſperitie blinds men. But this fallies out then ſpeciallie, when hauing forſaken God, they follow their owne waies and deliberations. For then they deſpiſe the Lord. It may alſo be read by way of ſcorne, as if he ſhould ſay, Whence is it, I pray thee, that thou breakeſt not off thy courſe, nor repent'eſt? why doeſt thou not acknowledge thy follie? Is it becauſe thou haſt life in thine bands, and becauſe all things fall out according to thy deſire? This reading pleaſeth me beſt: though I reiect not the other. Truelic it appeares ſufficientlie by the histories that this people had ſmall cauſe to glorie in their good ſuccesſes. For the league which they firſt made with the Egyptians, next with the Aſſyrians, and laſtly with the Babylonians was pernicious and deadly vnto them. So as they felt by experience how vnaduised they were to call ſuch companions into their reſcue. The Prophet then had good reaſon to obiect againſt them that they had found life by their hand. He ſets out the ſottithneſſe of the Iewes therefore, in regard they wittinglie plunged themſelues into ruine, and obſtinately purſued their owne perdition; whereas at leaſt they ought (euē by the example of foolles) to haue become wiſe after they had taſted the whip.

Verſ. 11. And whom diſt thou reuerence or feare, ſeeing thou haſt lied vnto mee, and haſt not remembred mee, neither ſet thy minde thereon? Is it not becauſe I held my peace, and that of along time? Therefore thou feareſt not me.

HE inueighs here more ſharply againſt the Iewes, in that they were deſtitute of all feare of God; how ſoouer they bragged of their holineſſe, and pretended a vaine title of religion. For hypocrites not onelic flatter themſelues in their ſuperſtitions, but the common people take them for pettie gods: and for this cauſe they inſolentlie advance themſelues both againſt God and men, and ſet forth themſelues with an impudent malepertneſſe. But our Prophet pronounceth that there can be no true feare of God, where he is not purely worſhipped, nor according to the precise rules of his holy word. For let men eſteeme the beſt they can of all their goodlie ſuperſtitious deuotions; yet all is but meete follie and impietie. Thus then hee protests that they haue no feare of God, nor no religion at all in them, though they gloried neuer ſo much of their painted theate. Nay, which was worſe; by their ceremonies they made it manifeſt as by infallible teſtimonies, that they had no reuerence nor awe of God in them. For the Lord teſtifies by Moses, that he would proue whether they loued him from the heart; in ſuffering falſe Prophets to bring in ſuperſtitions and idolatries: Deut. 13. 3. All ſuch then as runne after ſuch trumpetic doe evidently ſhew that their hearts are void of Gods true feare: for if they conſidered, that one day they muſt yeeld an account thereof before his iudgement ſeate, they would not ſo preſumptuouſly tread his commandments vnder their feete.

Where hee complains, that they had forgotten him; it is to ſhew that they had not ſinned againſt him through ignorance, but of an obſtinate maliciousneſſe. For hauing a certaine rule of a godlie life ſet downe before them, they wittingly reuolted from God, and brake their faith which they had promiſed him. We are heedefully to obſerue how terrible this thunderclap is which is ſhot from heauen, as it were againſt all hypocrites, who ſcorne all threatnings, and couer themſelues vnder vaine pretences: when hee thus teſtifies, that they haue no ſparke of the feare of God in them: that they haue forgotten him: and are full of lies.

It is not becauſe, &c.] I haue thought it fit to inſert the particle of rendring the cauſe here, which muſt be ſupplied, to the end the Prophets meaning may be the more manifeſt. For thoſe that ſupplie it not, vex themſelues much to draw out an expoſition: But we know how vſual this manner of ſpeech is among the Hebrewes. The Prophet blames the Iewes for thus abuſing the patience and long ſuffering of God: which notwithstanding ſhould haue mollified their hearts: Rom. 2. 4. But ſuch is mans malice, that hee thereby unbouldens himſelfe in ſinning: and thinks hee hath good leaue to do whatſoever him liſteth as long as hee is ſuffered to eſcape vnpuniſhed: Pfalm 50. 21. And therefore I expound this member thus: Thou feareſt not me, becauſe I haue held my peace: whereas on the contrarie, contrarie, my lenitie should haue broken thine hard heart. Hence we gather, that the Iewes had no cause to complaine that God dealt too severely with them, seeing that though hee patiently forbore them a long time, yet they became the worse; and that by meanes of this impunitie. The Lord was vrged therefore of necessitie to take another course with them: and to punish their iniquities with the greater rigor.

There can be no true feare of God, but where due is worſhipped purelie.

Verf. 12. I will declare thy righteousness and thy workes; and they shall not profit thee.

Though God suffer long, (ye: his patience being abused) he will be avenged at length.

The Prophet shewes that God will suffer no more so long as he hath done in times past, but that heereafter he shall be constrained to take another course with them. Hee mentions their righteousnesse, by way of derision: for vnder this word, hee vnderstands all the impieties and errors wherewith they were stained and defiled. As if he should say; I will haue your righteousnesse to be seene of all. For whilst God holds his peace, those that are most vniust, & filled with all corruptions, seeme to be peticie Saints: but when God gets vp into his iudgement seate, then men are forced to come out of their dennes, and their villanies are manifested to euery one: Psal. 50. 21. The Prophet therefore meane to say, that the world esteemes horrible impieties to be vertues, as long as God is silent: but this shall vanish at the last, when hee shall sit to iudge of them. For after men shall haue flattered themselves much, and for a long time together, yet in the end they shall feele him to be their Iudge.

And they shall not profit thee] This appertaines to the effect; by which men are wont to iudge of things for the most part. For they care not whether the matter be iust or vniust, but imagin, that vvas/bes/ewer is profitable, ought to be approved of: and therefore denounce, that all the workes from whence they expected any benefits should turne to their detriment and ruine.

Verf. 13. When thou criest, let them that thou hast gathered together, deliuer thee: but the winde shall take them all away; vanitie shall pull them away: but hee that trusteth in mee, shall inherit the land, and shall possess mine holy mountaine.

The former verse am plified.

Hee shewes now more at large, that which hee touched but briefly in the former verse, namely, that when the matter shall come to the vp shot, they shall be confounded: for the clause, let them deliuer thee, signifies as much as if he had said; they shall not be able to doe it. In this verse then hee alludes to that which he said before, in verf. 9. to wit, Thou wentest to Kings with thy presents. And for this cause hee calles all the meanes whereby the Iewes thought to secure themselves, gathered: for in resting thereupon, they prostituted themselves to all kindes of villanies, as if they had had been liable to no punishment at all, in regard they were fortified with ramparts on euery side. But the Lord shewes how vaine all their preparations are, that are thus gathered together without him.

The ay here signifies that calamitie wherewith they should be afflicted. For being fetled vpon leagues and succours of their confederates, they thought themselves in such safetie, as if before they had neuer been annoyed by such associates. But hee protests, that all the aid which they haue gathered together, shall serue them to no use: for the hopes which we conceiue in the things of this world, and in the helpe of man, ioined with the forsaking of God, is accursed and abominable: Ier. 17. 7.

Hee reproched the Iewes in Chap. 8. 6. for not contenting themselves with the still waters of Silo, but searched out swelling and roaring ruers, which would ouerwhelme them in the end: which indeed came so to passe. For the Assyrians, Egyptians, and in the end the Chaldeans, not onely were vnprofitable to the Iewes, with whom they were confederate, but at last were also their destruction.

Afterwards there follows an opposition, wherein hee recalls them to trust in God; which was the onely remedie that ought to be opposed to all calamities: as on the contrary, all our miseries flow from our owne infidelitie and distrust. And whereas hee promiseth an heritage to those that hope in the Lord, it is as if hee should haue said; What is it that you seeke, but that you may liue in safetie, and that your inheritance may remaine whollie vnto you? And I am sure my seife can giue it you. For (tell me) who brought you into this land? Who gaue you possession in it? And yet you trow downe into Egypt, and seeke aid from men which cannot helpe you, and you set mine assistance at nought. The word heritage out of all doubt is meane of Iudea, wherein the Iewes desired to remaine securely. For afterwards, he mentions the mountaine of his holiness, wherupon the Temple was built. Thus then the Iewes sought to turne God out of his office as it were, seeing they rather ranne for succour to the Egyptians and Assyrians, then to him.

Hence let vs gather a generall doctrine, namely, that all our affaires shall succede well, if we trust in God: but if wee reiect that, wee are not to wonder if wee be tossed from post to pillar, and carried with the violence of diuers tempests, whither we would not. By the holy mountaine, to which the Iewes were to be brought againe, hee meanes, that neither life, nor none of the commodities thereof, are to be desired, but vpon condition that we be therewithall inioy the true worship of God: for the end of mans life is, that God may haue a people to call vpon his name purely. Let our eies then be alwaies fixed vpon the honour and seruice of our God, if wee either desire deliuerance from troubles, or to inioy life with the commodities thereof.

All our miseries flow from our owne infidelitie.

Doctrine.

The end of mans life.

Verſ. 14. And he ſhall ſay, Caſt up, caſt up: prepare the way: take up the ſtumbling-blocks out of the way of my people.

See verſ. 1.

ntion.

BECAUSE this promiſe (to wit, that thoſe who truſted in the Lord ſhould poſſeſſe the land) might ſeeme ridiculous, ſeing ſoone after they ſhould be baniſhed out of their countrie: therefore this ſecond promiſe is added for the little remnants ſake which yet remained. In which he promiſeth that they ſhall be brought home againe into the land of Canaan, though for a time they were caſt out and driven into a ſarre countrie. He meetes with a doubt which might ariſe, that ſo the faithfull might not be diſcouraged during this long and tedious exile, nor eſteeme Gods promiſes to be vaine.

Some expound, That the Lord would ſend true and faithfull Prophets which ſhould remove and purge out thoſe offiſces of the Church, wherewith it was corrupted by falſe prophets, and wicked governours. For they, as he ſhewed in Chap. 56. 10, 11. were the cauſe of the ruine of it, and therefore they iudge that heere is a better and more deſirable eſtate promiſed. But this expoſition ſutes very ill, and therefore I had rather follow the firſt, namely, that albeit the Jewes for a time were to be deprived of this land, yet the Lord would eſtabliſh them therein againe, who will to that end command the rough waies to be made ſmooth, for their returne. This place therefore agrees with that which we have ſeene in Chap. 40. 1. 2. 3. 4. where the Lord commanded that the people ſhould be comforted: that their ruine ſhould be proclaimed: and that the waies ſhould be cleared. For being yet in Babylon as in a ſepulcher, and the diſtance of place very great, and the paſſage tedious, they were hardly drawne to hope that they ſhould ever returne againe into their countrie.

Iſaiah therefore was not lightly to paſſe over this matter, that ſo he might take from them all feare of being hindered in their journey, either in regard of the mountaines or the ſea. He ſpeakes to Cyrus and Darius then, into whoſe minds God would inſpire a will to giue the Jewes both paſſage, and all neceſſaries fit for the ſame. As if he ſhould ſay, The Lord will ſend the Jewes ſuch ſervants of his as they little thinke of now, by whoſe miniſtrie he will prepare the way, and bring back his people. The manner of ſpeech wherby he commands, hath greater vehemencie in it, then if he had ſpoken in the third perſon.

Cyrus.
Darius.

In that he bids them to take away the ſtumbling blocks: he ſignifies, that they ought not to be diſmayed for the lets and impediments that lay in their way, for the Lord would eaſily remove them in his good time. Out of the way of my people. The hope of the returne is included in this, namely, that after God had brought back his people, he would againe place them in the land of Canaan. And therefore howſoever for ought they could ſee, there was no way nor paſſage left for them, yet would he provide one, and would breake all barres and obſtales. Why ſo? Becauſe they had the Lords promiſe here for their returne: and in deed it was he that brought them home in ſafetie.

Verſ. 15. For thus ſaith he that is high and excellent, he that inhabiteth the eternitie, whoſe name is the holy one, I dwell in the high and holy place: with him alſo that is of a contrite and humble ſpirit to receive the ſpirits of the humble, and to give life to them that are of a contrite heart.

HE confirms the former ſentence touching the reſtoring of the people after ſy captivitie. But this verſe may be two waies expounded; either, that the Prophet prevents a doubt which might fall into ſy minds of the faithfull, and ſo he mentions things oppoſite; or, that he draws an argumenc from Gods nature, to confirme the hearts of the weak. That this may be the better vnderſtood and opened: firſt of all we know that our minds are often diſtracted by ſuch thoughts as theſe, to wit, That God in deed is in heauren, but in the meane while there is a great diſtance betweene him and vs: and that he little regards vs; or elſe lets things goe at ſix and ſeven in the world: or that hee cares little or nothing for our matters. Now to correct this imagination, the Prophet grants it is true that God dwells on high, but yet doth not therefore ceaſe to behold and to governe this world by his providence: for he is careful of mens ſalutations, and dwells alſo with the afflicted, and with thoſe that are of a contrite and broken heart. For though the Lord be high, yet he beholdeth the lowly, as it is in Pſal. 113. 3. 4. and 148. 6. and in other places.

mation of the former ſen-
tence.

The other ſenſe is, that God reſembles vs nothing at all. For we tremble in aduerſitie; becauſe we meaſure him according to our owne capacitie: and thus we mutter, How can the Lord help vs, ſeing we are overwhelmed with troubles? Moreover, the afflicted are for the moſt part deſpiſed and neglected. And thus we thinke that God is careleſſe of vs, becauſe we conceive of him according to the reach of our carnall reaſon. But it is our parts to iudge ſarre otherwiſe of him, and therefore the Prophet ſaith, that he dwells in the heauren, to ſignifie, that he is not ſubiect to humane afflictions: for he is alwaies like himſelfe, and neuer changeth his counſell. As he therefore hath once promiſed to reſtore the people to their former libertie, ſo will he aſſuredly performe it.

This expoſition I approve of, and yet rather accept of the firſt, which is more ample and copious, and alſo agrees with other teſtimonies of the holy Scriptures, where theſe two things are often conioined, namely, That God dwells in heauren, and yet hath reſpect to things below: but eſpeciallly of his children, as I ſaid erewhile.

Dwelling in eternitie.] But we grouell on the earth, we are vnſtable, and neuer continue ſtayed nor ſetled in that which we have once

E e e embraced.

Anf. embraced: and therefore hee separates God from men; for in him there is nor so much as a shadow of turning: James 1.17. Contrariwise, wee are not so affectioned, as to haue a perpetuall care ouer such as neede our helpe.

Why God cales himselfe the holy one, dwelling on high.

A consolation.

With whom God will dwell.

I dwell in the high and holy place.] The holy place is often taken for the Temple; but heere it is taken for heauen it selfe. We see wherefore the Lord calles himselfe holy, and dwelling in an high and holy place, euen that hee might cause vs to know what difference there is betweene him and vs, and betweene his nature and ours. Besides, we may hence collect a speciall consolation, namely, that the Lord will afflict the poore, yea, and dwell in the midst of them, if so be they acknowledge their miseries. For the wicked shall be pressed with diuers calamities; but in the meane while they cease not to remaine haughtie and vntamed. Let such neuer looke to haue God dwell with them: for those that will expect any comfort from him, must be rightly humbled, and brought low in their owne sight. But he stoopes euen to the dead, that by inspiring new life into them, he may create them anew. Afterwards, he makes expresse mention of the humble spirit, and contrite heart, to let vs vnderstand, that these promises appertaine to none that are rebellious and stiff-necked in their afflictions, but to such as hauing at last subdued all loftinesse of spirit, shall stiew themselves humble and meeke.

Verf. 16. For I will not contend for euer, neither will I be alwaies wroth: for the spirit should faile before me, and I haue made the breath.

Hee prosecutes the same matter still.

HE prosecutes the same doctrine. For this was an hard matter to perswade them of, in regard that in this reidious banishment, they felt God as it were their enemy. It was no easie matter then for them to conceiue such a taste of this grace, as might cause them to take heart vnto them, and to bee of good cheere. The Prophet therefore meetes with this doubt, and shewes that the euils which they were to indure, should last but for a time, and that God would not alwaies be wroth. No doubt but hee hath iust cause giuen him to be angry: but hee rather parts with his right, and pardons that which he might iustly exact. And thus he ioines with Gods wrath, that moderation wherby hee comforts the faithfull, lest the spirit should faile. For albeit he reasons from the nature of God, yet this promise is particularly directed to the Church. Let vs for euer then keepe this point in our remembrance in our extreme anguishes; that so we may not thinke that God will stand to commend or to plead the case with vs.

In wrath God still remembers mercie.

When he saith that God is wroth: it is by way of yeelding so much vnto vs, in respect of the weaknesse of our flesh: for in aduersitie we can conceiue no other wise of God, but as of an angry Iudge: and no question it is profitable for vs to bee touched with this feeling, which ought to bring vs to repentance.

This phrase of speech then must wholly bee referred to our weaknesse, and not vnto God.

For the Spirit shall be clothed againe.] Heere he renders a reason wherefore the Lord will not contend for euer: but this place is diuersly expounded. Among other expositiones, this seemes to agree best; that the Spirit is clothed with the body, as with a garment. In which regard, the body also is called the Tabernacle or dwelling place of the Spirit. If we receiue this exposition, there will be a double sense: for some referre this place to the last resurrection, and say, that the soule shall bee clothed: that is to say, after it shall depart from the body, shee shall returne the second time into it, as into her house. And thus it should be an argument from the greater to the lesse, thus; I will raise the dead bodies: wherefore then should not I put you into a better estate; though you seeme as good as dead? The other sense which some others follow, will be better, and lesse constrained: for this interpretation touching the last resurrection, seemes far remote from the scope of the text.

I haue compassed the Spirit in wroth the body.] As if hee should say; It is I that haue created men; you must thinke that I will haue a care of them then. But I should thinke that the Prophet mounts higher: for he teacheth that the Lord handles vs thus mildly and graciously, because hee knowes and is well acquainted with our frailtie and infirmities. This doctrine is confirmed vnto vs by many other places of the Scriptures; but amongst the rest, out of Psal. 103. 13, 14, 15. Euen as a father pitieth his owne children, so is the Lord compassionate ouer such as feare him. He knowes whereof we be made, he remembers we are but dust. Man is like to grasse, he flourisheth as a flower of the field. In Psal. 78. 38, 39. it is said in the same sense; But hee being mercifull forgave their iniquities, and destroyed them not. He often called backe his anger, and suffered not his whole displeasure to arise: for he remembered they were but flesh, and a vvinde that passeth a way, and returneth not againe. And we thinke the Prophet meant thus much in this place, as if the Lord should haue said; What should I doe trying my force against a little vvinde, or breath; or against a leafe, or grasse, which vanisheth in a moment, and withers away as soone as it hath felt the heate of the Sunne?

Some expound the verbe Taarah, Shall faile: and this agrees well enough to this place; for our Spirit must needs faile, as soone as the Lord doth begin to manifest his power against vs: Psal. 104. 19. But not to stand vpon the signification of the words, we see, I hope, what the Prophets meaning is: for he shewes that God spares vs, and vseth great lenitie towards vs, in correcting our vices, because he respects our infirmity, and meanes to support and relieue it.

Verf. 17. For his wicked conuouersnesse, I am angry with him, and haue smitten ſmiten him: I hid me and was angry, yet he went away, and turned after the way of his owne heart.

reſtore comfort vnto him, and to thoſe that lament him.

A complaint.

Here he complains of the deſperate obſtinacie of the people, and ſhewes that the Lord had exceeding iuſt cauſe to puniſh them thus: ſo as they could not complaine of his ouer great ſeueritie.

For his luſts.] Others turne it, For his auarice. And in this ſenſe if you vnderſtand it of auarice, it is by a figure called Synecdoche, taken as a part for the whole. For couetouſneſſe is the roote from whence other vices ſpring. But we may take it generally for all luſts. For the Lord was wroth againſt ſo many wickedneſſes, wherewith the Iewes were ſtained: and puniſhed them ſeuerely for them. But he ſpeakes expreſly of luſt, to ſhew that they were chaſtiſed, not ſo much for their maniſt and open finnes, as for that they were guiltie before God. For this ſufficeth to all mens condemnation, that God is the Iudge of thoughts. So as he will not onely puniſh notorious iniquities, but alſo the ſecret inordinate and wicked luſts and affecti- ons of the heart. Beſides, hee aduerteth them that they are iuſtly ſmiten: that by feeling their guiltineſſe, they might humble ſue for pardon.

I haue ſmiten him, and bid my ſelfe.] The meaning of theſe words is, that his grace ſtood a farre off and was bidden from them for a time. But he ſpeakes according to our opinions. For we apprehend God as an enemie and angrie with vs, when he puniſheth our offences, as we haue ſaid before. And doubtleſſe it is needefull we ſhould thus conceiue of him and apprehend him, that thereby we may be brought to acknowledge our finnes: which we will neuer do in good earneſt, neither will we be effectually touched with the horror of them, vneſſe we conſider and be aſſuredly perſwaded in our minds and conſciences that we haue thereby prouoked the wrath of God againſt vs. Now as it is expedient that we be brought to repentance by this meanes, yet let vs beware that we be not ouerwhelmed with ſorrow, in imagining either that God is irreconcilable, or that he will haue no more to doe with vs. Thus then the Prophet mitigates theſe exceſſiue feares, and forbids vs to meaſure God according to our owne ell. For albeit he chaſten vs, yet caſeth he not to beare a gracious loue and fatherly affection towards them whom he hath adopted.

But he went his way.] This is the rebellion which the Prophet taxeth and reprobues, namey, that the people amended not by their ſtripes, but obſtinately perſeuered in their wickednes: and therefore he ſhewes they were growne paſt cure, in regard the violent remedies which God vsed could not bring them back into the right way.

The Lord here on the contrarie magnifies his mercie, in regard that he is fauorable to this ſo obſtinate and rebellious a people, and in preventing them of his mere bountie and compaſſion. As if he ſhould ſay, I haue indued to bring them to repentance by my rods and chaſtiſements, euen whileſt they purſued their luſts: but they haue thewed themſelues obſtinate and incorrigible, ſo as I haue ſpent all my labour in vaine. I might therefore (if I would) iuſtly deſtroy them, yet had I rather heale and ſaue them. But this can not be effected vneſſe I maniſeſt my great and infinite mercie. Well, I will therefore withdraw my correſtions. You ſee then that our Prophet by degrees amplifies and ſets forth Gods mercie, whom he brings in as a careful Phyſition, beſtinking himſelf of the apteſt and fitteſt medicines to cure this peoples maladies. But they are incurable, vneſſe the Lord preuent vs for his owne mercie and truths ſake. Let his rods be neuer ſo ſharp and biting, yet can they not draw vs to repentance, vneſſe the Lord worke it in vs by his holy Spirit. Alas I without it wee are in danger to grow the more obſtinate and hard hearted. In this people therefore we may behold the image of mans corrupted nature, therein the better to take knowledge of our owne obſtinacie and rebellion againſt God; as alſo what remedies are the meeteſt to heale our ſpiritual ſickneſſes: ſo as being ſick, may haſte dead, yet wee may recouer health, and be brought into the right way, and therein remaine.

Our Prophet ſhewes herewithall, that perſeuerance in a good courſe is the only worke of God, whereupon follows a great conſolation, which yet wee can not haue, nor faith neither, if repentance be wanting: for ſuch as are not at oddes with themſelues in regard of their finnes, can neuer conceiue ought but Gods wrath, terrors, and deſpaire. Wee are carefull to obſerue the order then which Iſaiah keepes heere; for he doth not raſhly adde a conſolation to the healing, becauſe ſuch as recouer their health, do therewithall recouer ioy of heart, whereof they were before deſtroyed.

When he addes, and to thoſe that lament him; he ſeemes eſpeciallie to note out the faithfull who were few in number, as it appears by the Prophets complaints, who make ſharp and bitter inuectiues againſt the drouzines wherewith this people was whollie poſſeſſed. He ſpeakes to thoſe then who being guiltie of common offences, were conſtrained to weepe in regard of the griefe which preſſed them neere: and lamented not onely the calamities of the people, but alſo in pitifull ſort mourned vnder the ſenſe of Gods wrath, whileſt others plunged themſelues in their voluptuouſnes.

Our mal- dies incurable, if the Lord ſhould not preuent vs by his grace.

of, and to them that are neere, saith the Lord; for I will heale him.

An expectation of the former sentence.

This is the explication of the former sentence, namely, by what meanes the Lord would comfort this people, to wit, by promising and offering them peace: for by the fruit of the lips, he signifies, that they shall heare such good newes of peace, as shall reuiue and reioice their hearts. And, as I take it, he speakes of the publishing of that peace, which was committed first to the Prophets, then to the Apostles, and other Ministers of the Gospell: as Saint Paul teacheth, 2. Cor. 5. 20. Wee are Ambassadors for Christ (saith he) and doe beseech men to be reconciled vnto God.

The repetition of the word peace, serues not onely for the greater confirmation, but it also signifies a continuall progresse of it. As if he should say; You heare nothing now but terrible threatnings: the doctrine of grace and saluation is as good as buried: for you are vncapable of it; your obstinacie is such, that you must be thundered against with terrors and menaces: but one day I will restore vnto you the doctrine of peace, and I will open the lippes of my Prophets, which shall publish the same in your eares.

To those that are farre off.] This was added in regard the people, who were carried away captiue, thought that these things appertained not vnto the, because they were farre off, but such as were left in the Country, might happily inioy this fruit; for their exile was vnto them as a kind of reiectiō. But the Prophet protests, that euen they shall taste of this grace, though they be farre remote. Lastly, the effect is added, namely, that God would heale the people: that is to say, would keepe them safe and sound. Hence we gather that which I touched but erewhile, to wit, that whatsoever appertaines to the true and perfect felicitie of the Church, is the free gift of God.

It seemes Saint Paul had an eye to this place, in Eph. 2. 17. where he saith, that Christ hath brought peace to those which were neere, and to those a farre off. Now hee speakes of Iewes and Gentiles: for the Iewes were neere, because God had made a couenant with them; and the Gentiles were farre off, in regard they had no part in this couenant. But it seemes our Prophet speakes onely of the Iewes? I answer, that the Apostle retaines the Prophets true meaning, if all be well considered: for the Iewes are said to be farre off heere, because they seemed to be banished out from the house of the Lord: and in this respect their condition was like to that of the Gentiles. Seeing then that during the time of their banishment, there was no difference betweene them and the Gentiles, Saint Paul had iust cause to put them both in one ranke, and therefore makes them paires: and thus applied that to the Gentiles which our Prophet had said touching the Iewes: as in like maner he applies the place of Hosea, Chap. 1. 10. to the Gentiles: Rom. 9. 26.

Verf. 20. But the wicked are like the raging sea, that cannot rest, whose waters cast vp mire and dirt.

Having spoken of that peace which the faithfull should inioy, he on the contrary denounceth against the wicked continuall warre and perpetuall troubles, and garboiles of conscience, wherewith they should be vexed. And the rather, that the faithfull for their parts might the better prize this excellent benefit of peace: as also, that the wicked might know, that this peace is so promised to Gods children, that their condition shall no whit be bettered by it. But in regard these doe often vainly and falsely pretend the name of God, and glory in it as a cloke to couer their wickednesse withall; therefore the Prophet shewes, that they shall haue no cause to reioice heerein, or to attribute any thing to themselves in regard of this promise; because they can haue no part in this peace. It should bee litle to their good then, though God shewed mercy to his people, receiued them into fauour; or that hee gaue men authoritie to publish peace vnto them.

tion against the wicked.

This similitude of the sea, is elegant and verie fit to expresse the disquietnes of the wicked. For the sea troubles it selfe, and is tossed with hideous tempests, though the windes be calme: the vvaues iustle one against another with great violence, and breake with a verie terrible noise: and so the wicked are vexed with a secret worme, which cleaueth fast to their consciences; for they are in continuall terrors, by reason of the gnawing and stings thereof, which is a torment that surmounts all the rest, and the most cruell hangman that is to be found in the whole world. The furies of hell harrie and pursue the wicked, not with burning Torches, as the Poets faine; but through anguishes of conscience, and y tormēt of their wilfull rebellion: for euery one of the is affrighted, and extremely tortured by his owne iniquitie: their wicked cogitations amaze them, and cause them to rage, and the guilt and scruples of their consciences astonish them. He hath very aptly then compared the wicked to the raging sea. He that would escape and auoid these tempests and horrible boiling of spirit: let him beware how hee rejects this peace which the Lord offers him. There is no meane betweene these two: for vnllesse wee abandon all our lusts, to entertaine this peace, we must of necessitie be continually tormented and vexed after an horrible maner.

Verf. 21. There is no peace, saith my God, so the wicked.

The Prophet confirms the former sentence, namely, that the wicked shall gain nothing in seeking this peace; for they shall haue alarums rung in their eares on euerie side; and in regard that God makes warre vpon them, therefore they shall but lose their labour to hope for peace. I grant the wicked would with all their hearts inioy peace, yea they much desire it. For what seekes they else in this world, but to be ſecured, and to rocke their conſciences aſleepe, that they may take their fill of pleaſures, and give themſelves over without cheek, unto all laſciviousneſſe. They indeuor to baniſh from them all thoughts of Gods iudgements, and would ſaine become ſenſleſſe: and theſe they take to be the true means whereby to obtaine peace: but they ſhall neuer this way inioy it; ſot till they be reconciled vnto God in Chriſt, their conſciences will euer be galling them, and they ſhall not ceaſe to be moleſted with the accu-fations thereof. And thus hee brings in God the onely author of peace, who by this terrible ſentence, takes from the lewes their peace, and calles him his God: oppoſing it againſt their vaine glory, who falſly couered themſelves vnder ſuch titles. For they could not be ſaid to haue any knowledge of God, whileſt they reiected both his Prophet and doctrine: and therefore Iſaiah is bold by Gods expreſſe commandement, to proclaime open warre againſt them.

THE LVIII. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. Cry aloud, ſpare not: liſt vp thy voice like a trumpet, and ſhew my people their tranſgreſſions, and to the houſe of Iacob their ſinnes.

This Chapter depends vpon the former.

His preſent Chapter was ill diuided, in regard this is knit vnto the former: ſo as if we will vnderſtand the Prophets meaning, we muſt read this as if there were no breking off. Iſaiah hath teſtified that the people ſhould be ſo chaſtiſed, that yet ſome hope of peace remained for them. Now hee confirms this doctrine, and teacheth that the Lord hath charged him to cry out of the throte, or as we commonly ſay in our ſpeech, with open throte. To what end? For ſooth, to ſhew the people their ſinnes. Neither ſpeakes hee onely of the liſting up of the voice, but of that vehemencie and ſeuertie of ſpeech (whereof hypocrites ſtand eſpecially in need) as if God thundered vpon them from heauen. For they flatter themſelves in their vices, if they be not roundly dealt withall, and bee forced to come into the light: nay, no good is to bee done vpon them, vnleſſe they bee laid vpon with maine blowes.

A plaine goſpel.

Where hee addes, ſpare not: it is a forme of ſpeech much vſed among the Hebrewes; I ſpeake, and will not hold my peace: as we alſo commonly ſay; Cry without ceaſing. We haue told you that the Prophet ſpeakes not heere ſimply of the ſound of the voice, but ſignifies a ſharpe & biting kind of reprehention, where-with hypocrites muſt be galled to the quicke: as for example, if the Prophets ſhould onely propound the Law of the Lord, and ſhew wherein the rule of a well ordered life conſiſts, ſhould fall into the praiſe of Gods worſhippe, and without any vehemencie reprocue iniquities; what would hypocrites haue been the better for ſuch a cold manner of preaching? For their conſciences are ſo drowſie, that they cannot be awakened, but with loud and ſerill cries. A cold maner of preaching then would doe them no good, vnleſſe

they were ſharply preſſed and thundered vpon with terrible threats.

Saint Paul (imitating the Prophets) hauing proued all mankind guiltie and worthy of death, he riſeth vp with great vehemencie, againſt ſuch as had ſome appearance of holineſſe, and yet abuſed Gods patience. Behold, ſaith he, thou art called a Iew, and reſeſt in the Law, and glorieſt in God, thou knoweſt his will, and approuſt the things that are excellent, being inſtrued in the Law. Thou takeſt vpon thee to be a leader of the blind, a light to ſuch as are in darkneſſe, an inſtruder of the ignorant, and an inſtruder of them that lacke diſcretion, hauing a ſorme of knowledge & of ſome truth in the Law. But thou which teacheſt others, teacheſt thou not thy ſelie? thou that' preacheſt another ſhould not ſteale, yet doeſt thou ſteale? &c. Rom. 2. Againſt ſuch, in concluſion, hee denounceth iudgement, and the horrible vengeance of God; becauſe they abuſed Gods goodneſſe, and gloried in his name in vaine. Likewiſe in this place the Prophet teacheth the Iewes in particular, who gloried in the name of the Lord, and in the meane while roſe vp in armes againſt him.

This is the courſe then that muſt be taken with hypocrites, who content themſelves with an outward maſke of holineſſe, if we meane to diſcharge our duties profitably, and as we ought. And euen as the Lord hath exerciſed his Prophets in this combat, ſo muſt wee alſo at this day be in like maner exerciſed; that we may not feare the faces of hypocrites, nor content our ſelves to haue reproued them lightly, in two or three words, but to cry aloud with might and maine againſt them.

But, may ſome ſay, If the Lord command ſuch to be reproued for their ſinnes, to whom he promiſeth peace, then no doubt but his meaning was to leaue them ſome hope of ſaluation: and yet it is out of queſtion, that this ſpeech is directed to the reprobates, againſt whom before he proclaimed open war. I anſwere, the faithfull were then few in number: for a ſmall remnant only embraced this peace which was offered them. When Iſaiah then giues hope of a peace neere hand, he had reſpect to that little ſlocke: when he proclaimed warre, that was to terrifie the multitude, who were reuolted from God, and contemned all admonitions. For the state of the people was such that nothing was found nor pure among them, as we haue seene in chap. i. 11.

He mentions the house of Jacob, in regard the most of the people were corrupted. Now this distinction in the Prophets Sermons is diligently to be noted of vs, in that they now speake to the whole bodie of the people: and by and by restrain their speech to a small number of the faithfull. But it is not without a very sharpe and biting reproch that hee calles those his people, and the children of Iacob, which were degenerate from their originall, and had shamefully reuolted from the faith of the Patriarks. This therefore is a yeelding of so much to them: but with a plaine mocke. As if he should say, There are no deserts at all of theirs which shall priuiledge them from hearing their owne.

Verse. 2. Yet they seeke mee daily, and will know my waies, euen as a nation that did righteouslie, and had not forsaken the statutes of their God: they aske of me the ordinances of iustice: they will draw neere vnto God, saying,

A preuenti-on to an obiection.

HE meant here to take from hypocrites all occasions of replies, for they had their exceptions readie, We feare, serue, loue, and seeke God with our whole hearts. Wherefore blamest thou vs as if we were infidels? For we would thou shouldst wel know we order our liues according to the ordinances of the law. But to meete with this obiection, hee denies that they doe any thing purely or sincerelie: but that all is hypocriticall, and from the teeth outward; and therefore God who chiefie requires a perfect heart, reiects such a fained seruice.

Gen. 17. 1.

And wee are to obserue the order which the Prophet here followes. For hauing proclaimed open warre against the wicked and hypocrites, he now seuerely reproofes them, and stripes them quite of their fained pretence, vnder which they shadowed themselves. For thus they were to be handled and to be ferreted out of their lurking holes: otherwise doctrine would profit them but little or nothing. Which order as al the faithful are to obserue in regard of others; so ought every one to applie this doctrine to his seuerall vse, that he may not please nor flatter himselfe in his vices, lest he deceiue his owne heart, or suffer himselfe to be seduced by the illusions of the diuell. Let every one bring with him a pure and an vpright heart, if he meane to profit in the pure doctrine; and to be acceptable to his God.

Moreouer, although Isaiah attributes to these dissemblers and disloyall some kind of holinesse; yet he againe taxeth them with a verie bitter flout, as if hee should say, Your impudent boasting is accompanied with too manifest an obstinacie. And thus it is not only a plaine mocke, but there is a complaint mingled therewith, for presuming to serue

God in hypocritic. Whereas if their shewes were rightlie examined, and that the whole course of their liues were sufficiently sifted, it would be found that their hearts were farre remote from God.

They aske of me.] Those who thinke that hypocrites doe here complaine of God, and rise vp against him as it were to pleade the matter with him, haue not rightlie conceived of the Prophets meaning. I confesse we shal see this hereafter: but before that he plucks off from them that maske of fained holinesse. Hauing said then that they sought God daily, as if nothing had bin deerer to them then religion, he prosecutes the same sentence, and saith, that they asked of him ordinances of iustice, to the end they might honour God, and follow an vpright course of life; to wit, when they made thew to burne with zeale.

And no question but the Prophet here recites the chiefest exercises of the faithfull, which sometimes hypocrites in appearance seeme to imitate. Now the maine point of true godlinesse consists in seeking to Gods reuealed will, that our conseruation may be squared according to the rules which hee giues, and to depend vpon his sacred mouth. But the hypocrites doe counterfeit this in such wise, that for the most part they seeme to practise that which appertaines to Gods worship in an highest measure then the faithfull.

Verse. 3. Wherefore haue wee fasted, and thou seest it not? Wee haue punished our selues, and thou regardest it not. Behold, in the day of your fast you will seeke your will, and require all your debts.

HEE passeth on further in the same argument, and saith, that besides this hypocrisie which thus blindes those that serue God to the halues, pride doth so superabound in them, that they dare in plaine termes make opposition against God himselfe: and when hee pressest them neere, they burst forth into complaints, as if he offered them great wrong. As if they shuld haue said; Hast thou any reason to reiect our seruices, fasts, and prayers? Wherefore shouldst thou not accept of them? Canst thou in equitie suffer vs to punish our selues thus for nothing? Hee hath already granted to the hypocrites some shew of holinesse, whereby they deceiued the world: but now he shewes that they were befotted, and ready to burst with pride inwardly, vnder pretence of their painted workes, with which they thought to satisfie God, and in regard thereof, ourfaced the Prophets, and flattered themselves in their wickednesses, namely, in their infidelitie, rebellion, and obstinacie against God; distrust, crueltie, deceit, and oppression. These were light matters with them, and they thought they might easilie purge themselves of them, by fastings; and such bodily exercises: for these were their goodly merits in which they imagined the whole worship of God consisted, and by which they hoped to be absolved from all their finnes. And thus they strained at a gnat, and made no bones to swallow a Camell: Mat. 23. 24.

But if the Jewes had onely been such, and that the world were now growne better, then should wee be enforced to seeke out examples hereof farre hence: but seeing we haue experience every day of the like dealing, we need not spend much time in the exposition of this text.

Besides, this complaint may as well be referred to the word as to the power of God. For the Lord iudgeth hypocrites both waies. First, he reprooues them by his word: and secondlie, he punisheth their wicked obstinacie. This may then be referred as well to his corrections, as to the former reprehension. But yet I had rather referre it to the word: and I thinke that the hypocrites who vaunted of their fasts, are here rebuked for opposing these exercises against the Prophets admonitions. As if forsooth they had been the true seruants of God, and that they were wrongfully reproboued.

Neither am I of their mind who thinke that the people complaine of God for vsing them so teulerly in this their banishment. But I rather thinke they complaine of the Prophets of God, who as they thought, rebuked them too sharpelie. For the Jewes would needs be held for zealous and deuout men, and could not endure that any should condemne them of impietic or iniquitie. And for this cause the Prophet discouers their affections; & tels them that they stroue against God: that so they might know they had not to doe with a mortall man.

In the second part of the verse (in the person of God) he refuses the vertues which the hypocrites proclaimed with sound of trumpet. The reason is, because they neuer made any reckoning, touching vs putting off of their froward and carnall affections, nor began not at the deniall of themselves. For he condemnes them especially for being giuen to their lusts: and then mentions certaine particular vices. Whence wee may gather, that they were touched with no care of repentance.

Vers. 4. Behold, yee fast to strife and debate, and to smite with the fist of wickednesse: yee shall not fast as yee doe to day, to make your voice to be heard aboue.

The reason Why God regarded not the Jewes fasts.

This verse must be ioyned to the former. For in regard the Lord brought in the hypocrites complaining of vs Prophets vehemencie and sharpnesse in the first member; now in this second he yelds a reason wherefore the Lord regarded not their fasts and other workes: namelie, because none of these things proceeded from a pure affection of the heart. Now he shewes what their hearts were by the fruites; for he brings them to the commandements of the second table, whereby it is easie to discern what wee are within.

The puritie of the heart manifests it selfe in an vpright conuersing with our neighbours, and in abstaining from all fraud and violence. These are vs luely representations of a pure affection: without which God reiects, yea abhorres all externall seruices. For where deceit, extortions and robberies haue the full scope, it is most certaine that here the feare of God hath no place at all. He reprocheth the hypocrites then that vnder colour of their fastings, they took the greater libertie to oppresse their brethren, and to follow their lusts the more freely. Wee haue experience of this euery day: for manie fast, not onely to obtaine pardon for their fraudes, and thefts, and libertie to play the cheecus the more freely; but also that during the time of their fasts, they may haue the better leisure to cast ouer their reckonings, to reade their bills and obligations, to count what gaines are come in by their vsurie, and to deuise waies how to intangle the goods of their debtors within their nets. And therefore for the most our hypocrites put off this businesse vntill Lent, and to the set fasting daies; and such as are the most notorious hypocrites, will heate manie Masses euery daie, that vnder pretext of religion, they may plot their cosenages and treacheries with more freedome, that so no man may come to interrupt them. Last of all, the Prophet reiects their fasts, notwithstanding the high account which they made of them; because by meanes hereof, Gods wrath was the more prouoked.

And by and by after he also reiects their prayers: whence it appeares (as we haue more largely shewed vpon the first Chapter) that God approues no seruices at all, vnlesse they proceede from the sincere affection of the heart. Truly there is no sacrifice more excellent then prayer, and yet we see notwithstanding that the impuritie of the heart pollutes and defiles all our prayers. Moreover, in regard that fasts are vsuallie ioined with prayer, the Prophet takes it for granted, for indeed, it is a dependance of prayer. He forbids such kind of men then to make solemne prayers with fasts, because they shall gaine nothing thereby, vnlesse peraduenture that the Lord will punish them the more feuerly for it. And hence we gather (as we haue said before) that vs Lord reiects all externall workes, if the true feare of his Maicstie goes not before.

The fast which was in vse among the Jewes is not here in it selfe condemned, as if it had bin a superstitious ceremonie, but the abuse of it, & vaine confidence in it. Which we are well to obserue: for we must goe another way to worke with the Papiests, if we should stand to reprove their fasts, which are merely superstitious, in regard they are tied to certain daies and times, as if the rest of the yeere it were lawfull to cram their bellies. They also hold flesh to be vnclane, and in the meane while, stusse themselves vp to the throates with iunckets, & delicate meates. In a word, if so be they eate and drinke their fill only once in the day when they keepe their fast, they thinke then they haue done a worke of supererogation. Seeing then that there is nothing in all that which they doe that may be approued of, wee may simple condemne them. But Isaiahs dispute was in another kind: for the fast which the Iewes obserued was laudable in it selfe, because God had instituted it, Leuit 23.27. and 16.29.30. But the false opinion only was condemned. As for the Papists, we must condemne not only their false opinion, but the institution of their fasts also, in regard it is wicked. The Papists ioyne together with the Iewes in this, namely, that they thinke God beholding to them for it, and in that they thinke to merit by it. But a fast alone is no seruice of God, neither is it required in it selfe as other works commanded in the law: but it is an outward action, as an handmaid vnto prayer; and is profitable either to tame the flesh, or to testifie our humiliation. As when we feele our felues guiltie, we desire God in the day of our aduersitie that hee would turne his wrath away from vs. But he that would be further instructed touching this point, let him resort to our Institutions, Lib. 4. Chap. 12. Sect. 14. 15. 16. 17. and there he shall find a more ample discourse both concerning the vse and end of it.

Fasting alone is no seruice of God.

Institutions of Caluini

Verf. 5. Is it such a fast that I haue chosen, that a man should afflict his soule for a day, and to hang downe his head like a bulrush; and to lye downe in sackcloth and ashes? wilt thou call this a fasting, or an acceptable day vnto the Lord?

A confirmation of the confirmation.

HE confirms the former sentence, and shewes that God neither approoues nor condemnes fasting in it selfe further than when it is applied to the right end. Now his meaning was not vtterly to abolish it, but the wicked abuse of it, to wit, when men put holines in it, and either in despising or neglecting true godlines, they thinke that the bodilie exercise alone sufficeth. For hypocrites are euer wont to make the most they can of their externall ceremonies, and that no lesse, then if they were satisfactions to appease God withall. Now in regard that men according to their headines dare of themselves desire what Gods seruice is, he therefore brings vs backe expreslie to his own definition of it, to the end our reason may not giue sentence that a thing is right, ylesse we be first assured that he approoues of it: for howsoeuer men please themselves, and be highly conceited of their owne vnderstandings, and malepertlie vaunt thereof, yet the Lord reiects and abhorres such pride; for he reserues it in his owne power to make choice of that which he likes best, neither doth it belong to any other.

To chuse, is as much as to like or allow of; but he protests that this is not acceptable vnto him to see one continue a day without meate; and to goe sorrowfull with his head hanging downe. The Prophet hath vsed a very fit similitude: for as the bulrush bowes it selfe easily, notwithstanding it stands bolt vpright, so hypocrites haue skill to bow and hang downe the head, as if they were brought low with faintnes, or to signifie some vaine appearance of humilitie. His meaning was therefore to taxe these superstitious gestures wherein hypocrites are wont to place a kind of holinesse.

Sackcloth and ashes were added to fasting then chiefe, when they made solemne profession of their repentance: for they couered themselues with sackcloth, and laid ashes vpon their heads. God approoued this as an holie and laudable exercise. And we also see that the Prophets summoning the people to repentance, haue called them to sackcloth and ashes, Ioel 1.13. But as we haue formerly said that fasting is not here condemned in it self, no more doth Isaiah condemne these externall rites; only he rebukes hypocrites for separating the truth from the signes.

When sackcloth and ashes were chieftie in vse.

If any shall aske, whether sackcloth and ashes agree to our times or no: I answer, that they are things indifferent, which may also be vsed to edification. And yet it is not needfull to vse such shadowes now in the light of the Gospel, which hath brought vs greater libertie. Herewithall we are also to note the difference which is betwene the Easterne people who vse many ceremonies: and the Westerne, who are much more sparing therein, so as if wee should imitate them, it would be little better then a may-game, or apish tricks. And yet this hinders not them who are desirous to confesse their faults; to clothe themselues in vile rayment after the maner of the penitents, who craued pardon and mercie.

Quest. Anf.

An acceptable fast.] From hence we obserue that fasts were celebrated whē solemne prayers were made; and that all the Church was assembled together. For fasting is but the handmaid of prayer, as we haue shewed before; and wee also see that Christ addes it thereunto, Math 17. 21. It is not instituted then in regard of it selfe, but tends to another end.

Fasting the handmaid of prayer.

Verf. 6. Is not this the fasting that I haue chosen, to loose the bands of wickednes, to take off the heauie burthens, and to let the oppressed goe free, and that yee breake euery yoke?

THE Prophet shewes wherein the true offices of pietie which are principally commanded of God consist, namely, in comforting the poore and oppressed. But it seemes the Prophet vtterly abolisheth fasting, when in stead thereof hee recites those works which are much more acceptable vnto God: I answer, that fasting is then approoued, when charity is ioined with it. The Prophet brings vs to this principle; to wit, that our consciences may be pure & sound, & that we exercise ourselues in shewing brotherly kindnes one to another. For if this order be duly obserued, then fasting being added thereto, will be pleasing and acceptable to the Lord. But, may some say, here is not a word vttered touching the the puritie of the heart. I anſwere, it is vnderſtood by the fruits that proceede from the ſame, or from the workes by which it is eaſie to diſcerne what the heart is. In the next place he numbers vp the duties of the ſecond Table, and ſo vnder this part vnderſtands the obſervation of the whole Law; as wee haue ſeene in Chap. 56. For it is not enough to be beneficial to our neighbours, if in the meane while we contemne God. But we are to note our Prophets meaning: for in as much as we cannot hold the band of brotherly loue with our neighbours, vnleſſe the loue of God goe before, to examine whether this loue and feare of his Maieſtie bee in vs or no, hee requires theſe Chriſtian duties, as the neceſſit ſignes therof, namely, if we liue with our brethren, iuſtly, louingly, and without offering them any hard meature. Adde alſo, that an outward appearance will not ſerue the turne: for where the Spirit of God beares not rule, there charitie is cold. And therefore S. Paul makes expreſſe mention of loue among the fruits of the Spirit: Gal. 5. 22. When the obſervation of the Law is mentioned then, we vnderſtand not onely the outward actions, but the affections of the heart muſt alſo come into account.

To looſe the bands of wickedneſſe.] Some expound it; The wicked thoughts, wherewith men are bound and intangled. But it ſeemes Iſaiah meant otherwiſe, to wit, that hypocrites are very mercileſſe towards the poore, and lay very heauie yokes vpon them. He calles that knots or bands, which wee commonly terme oppreſſions. To which agrees that which is added, to take off the heauie burthens, vnder the weight whercof, the poore & needie grone, and are in a maner ouerwhelmed therewith. The Prophet then ſets not downe the definition of a faſt, but ſhewes what the Lord chiefly and principally requires in the firſt place: alſo by what meanes our ſeruite may be acceptable before him: and how thoſe ought to be fitted and prepared that meane to faſt.

Verſ. 7. Is it not to deale thy bread to the hungry, and that thou bring the poore that wander vnto thine houſe? When thou ſeeſt the naked, that thou cover him, and hide not thy ſelfe from thine owne fleſh?

He ſhall goe on in deſcribing the duties of loue.

HEE goes on in deſcribing the duties of loue, which hee touched in the former verſe. For hauing laid in the firſt place, that wee muſt abſtaine from doing any wrong; now he admoniſheth vs to ſhew our ſelues liberal and lowly towards the afflicted, and ſuch as ſtand in neede of our helpe. For there are two parts of equitie and iuſtice. Firſt, that we offer no man any wrong: ſecondly, that we employ our riches and goods towards the maintenance of them that are in want and neceſſitie: and theſe two parts muſt be ioined together. For it is not enough to abſtaine from violent courſes, vnleſſe therewithall we ſhew mercy in relieuing our poore brethrens wants. Neither is it ſufficient to ſuccour one, if you rob from ſome to beſtow vpon others: for wee muſt not relieue our neighbours wants by thefts and pillages. And if thou haſt committed any iniuſtice, crueltie, or extortion, thou oughteſt not to make amends by calling in God to thee, as if thou wouldſt make him partner with thee of thy ſpoiles. It is neceſſarie then, you ſee, that theſe two parts be ioined together, if we would haue God to approue and allow of our charitie.

In commanding them to break their bread to the hungry, he meant to take away all excuses from the couetous and niggardly, who are wont to reply, that their goods are their owne: like Nabal, 1 Sam. 25. 11. It is mine owne, ſay they, and therefore I may keepe it to my ſelfe. Why ſhould I make that common, which God hath giuen me for my particular vſe? The Prophet anſwers, that it doth indeed appertaine vnto thee, but vpon condition that thou dealeſt out part thereof to the hungry and thirſtie: and not that thou ſhouldeſt eate all thy ſelfe alone. Truly common reaſon teacheth vs, that the hungry are defrauded of their right, vnleſſe their wants be ſupplied: yea, ſuch a woſull ſpectacle often moues the moſt barbarous and cruell to compaſſion.

Afterwards hee reckons vp ſome particulars, which are vſually wont to mollifie the ſtonieſt heart, and moue them to ſhew mercie. The reaſon is, that their inhumanitie which are not touched with the ſenſe of the pouertie, and need of their brethren, might be the leſſe excuſable.

Laſtly, hee concludes, and hide not thy face from thine owne fleſh: where we are to note this word fleſh; for thereby hee means all men in generall; not one, whercof wee can behold, but therein of neceſſitie wee muſt view our owne nature, as in a glaſſe. It is great inhumanitie then to diſdaine and deſpiſe thoſe in whom wee are forced to acknowledge our owne image.

Verſ. 8. Then ſhall thy light breake forth as the morning, and thine health ſhall grow ſpeedily: thy righteousneſſe ſhall goe before thee, and the glory of the Lord ſhall embrace thee.

THE Prophet ſhewes that God is not ouer rigorous, neither requires hee of vs more then is neede, though hypocrites complaine cauſleſſe neuer ſo much, in accusing him of too great ſeuericitie: for when their workes are condemned, then they gnaw the teeth, and anſwer, that God can neuer be content; and therefore they know not what they ſhould doe more, nor what way to take. Hee anſwers them againe, that God requires no more but a pure and vpright heart: that is to ſay, a good conſcience. If they haue that, he will ſhew them mercy, and in gathering them together againe, will giue teſtimonie of their holineſſe, and will bleſſe them euery manner of way, whom he hath iuſtly chaſtiſed for their diſloyalties, disloyalties. In a word, that they shall haue no occasion at all to murmure, as if he were too sharpe towards them; because they should taste of his bountie and liberalitie, if in reiecting all hy poecrisie, they would dispose themselves to worship him in sinceritie.

We must note the particke then. For on the contrarie, it signifies that hypocrites are very farre off from this pure worship of God, though they would be taken for the holiest men in the world. But the Prophet holds them more then conuincid, when by their owne workes he shewes that they neither feare nor reuerence the Lord.

By the word light, he meanes a prosperous estate: as on the contrarie; darkenesse signifies a life full of miserie and calamities. And this we know is a phrase of speech much vsed in the Scriptures. Health, notes out an happy and quiet life, as we shall see anon in another place. For the plagues which were inflicted vpon this people by the hand of God in regard of their sinnes, had almost consumed them: so as they pined away as a sicke man that is brought low by a languishing disease. For there is no sicknesse so sharpe, as to be pressed with the iust vengeance of God, or to be wasted vnder his curse.

The word righteousnesse may be taken two waies: either for a testimonie of vprightnesse: or for an estate well ordered: because God would heale the confusions, and place all things in their first estate. The first sense then will be; after God shall be reconciled with thee, the testimonie of thy righteousnesse shall appeare before him and before men; as if an Herald of armes went before thee. There are other expositors, which had rather take righteousnesse, for a well ordered commonwealth, which is a gift of God, and no small token of his fatherly loue. And in other places also we haue seene that it is taken in this sense amongst the Hebrews. But the last member which followes, the glorie of the Lord; causeth me rather to follow the first exposition, Thy righteousnesse shall see forth, that is to say, All shall know that thou art iust and holie; whereas before thou wast guilty and conuicted. And thus the glorie of the Lord shall be put vpon thee: whereas before thou wert overwhelmed with ignominie and reproches. For we are exposed to shame and contempt, when we beare the punishment of our transgressions.

Verf. 9. Then shalt thou call, and the Lord shall answere: thou shalt crie, and hee shall say, Here I am: if thou take away from the midst of thee the yoke, the putting forth of the finger, and wicked speaking.

Isaiah persecutes that which he hath already begun to inreate of, namely, that the Jewes should prosper in all things, if they liue in such equitie, and so abstaine from all wrong, that thence men may take notice of their piety and religion. For he pronounceth that which is said by Hosea, and is repeated by Christ: That mercie ought to be preferred before sacrifice: Hof. 6. 7. Matth. 12 7. Having spoken then of the duties of charitie, and likewise hauing protested that such as performe them shall be happy; now he ads, Then thou shalt call, and the Lord shall heare thee. For herein consists the chiefest part of our happinesse: namely, if God vouchsafe to heare vs: contrariwise, there cannot befall vs a more wofull condition, then when hee is our enemy.

Now for the exercise of our faith, he attributes that to our prayers which he is minded to bestow voluntarily, and of his meere liberalitie. For if he should full supple vs with his benefits while we slept, as it were; the affection of prayer would grow cold in vs, yea would be vtterly frozen vp; and so his liberalitie should nourish our sloth & negligence. Albeit then that hee preuent vs by his free grace; yet will he haue our prayers to come betweene: and therefore he addes, Thou shalt crie, and he shall say, Here I am. For this promise contains also an exhortation, to the end we should not remaine idle. When hee saith, Here am I: this appertaines not to our outward senses; but by the effects he shewes that he is neere vnto vs, and affours vs.

And in the end of the verse he repeates againe, that God will be pacified towards the Jewes, if so be they did repent. By the yoke, he comprehends all the molestations wherewith the poore were vexed. As if hee should say, If thou ceasest to molest thy brethren, and abstainest from deceit and violence: the Lord will blesse thee euery kind of way.

The lifting vp of the finger also, contains vnder it all manner of iniuries. For we are wont to say, Lift up thy finger, when we meane to deale cruellie with our neighbours, or to offer them any outrage. The word of vanity, is the third kind of wrong, by which wee hurt our neighbour in deceiving them with sweet and sugred words. For all iniquitie is composed either of secret fraud and malice: or of open violence.

Verf. 10. If thou poure out thy soule to the hungrie, and refresh the troubled soule: then shall thy light spring out of darkenesse, and thy darkenesse shall be as the noone day.

Poure out thy [soule.] He continues to commend vnto them the duties of charitie. For the whole summe of his exhortation is to shew that men worship God in vaine, if they onely offer vnto him some cold and naked ceremonies, seeing Gods true and pure worship consists not in such childish things; but rather commands and chargeth vs to liue in innocencie and vprightnesse with our neighbours: doing them good to our powers, and being readie to helpe them when need is, readilie and cheerefully.

The two parts of this dutie are to be marked, which Isaiah also hath expressly distinguished. For in the first place he commends vnto vs the affection of pietie and compassion: in the gument fur-

the next place he exhorts vs to manifeſt the ſame by theſe effects. For it is not ſufficient to doe good to men, vnleſſe it proceede from a franke and willing mind. If I diſtribute all my goods to the poore, ſaith S. Paul, and haue not loue; I am nothing: 1. Cor. 13. 3. Thus then to powre out the ſoule, ſignifies nothing elſe but to pittie our bretherens miſeries, & to be as much affected with their wants, as if we our ſelues were afflicted with them: Heb. 13. 3. As contrariwiſe all ſuch as are ſtrait laced being giuen to their priuate commodities, ſhut-ting vp their bowels, and are void of affection, 1. Iohn 3. 17. are called men of an hard heart.

Whereas others tranſit aſe, If thou preſentſt thy ſoule: it agrees not. The ſame promiſe with that in verſe 8. followes, and vnder the ſame ſimilitude or figure. For by darkeneſſe he vnderſtands a wooll eſtate: and by light, an happie and prosperous condition. As if he ſhould ſay, The Lord will cauſe all thy miſeries which now ouerwhelme thee to ceaſe: and a ſudden felicitie ſhall ſucceed the ſame. Hee ſhewes therefore that they had no cauſe to complaine of God when afflictions preſſed them to the quicke; becauſe they ſhould forthwith eſcape, and enioy an happie eſtate, if they ſerued and obeyed God.

Verſ. 11. And the Lord ſhall guide thee continually, and ſatiſfie thy ſoule in drougth, and make fat thy bones: and thou ſhalt bee like a watered garden and like a ſpring of water, whoſe waters faile not.

THe Lord ſhall guide thee.] Now hee more clearly expreſſeth that which he touched before in briefe, and vnder borrowed ſpeeches. Namely, that God will bee their leader: ſo as nothing ſhall hinder them from enioying all things in abundanc. It is ſaid that God guides vs, when we feele by experience that hee goes before vs, as if wee ſaw him with our eies. Next hee addes, that this ſhall not be for a time; becauſe God neuer leaues thoſe that bee in the mid way; but with an vnchangeable courſe continues his benefits alwaies vnto them. For this cauſe the Prophet alſo promiſeth fulnes and ſatiſſie in their extreameſt penurie. For God hath abundanc of bleſſings alwaies in his hand wherewith to relieue the wants of his children. And ſurely his onelic bleſſing is more worth then the ſweeteſt dewes that can fall in an whole yeere. And yet he doth not promiſe to the faithfull, that they ſhall haue alwaies a goodly and plentifull increaſe of fruites, and good ſeaſons to end their hatcut and vintage well; but that God will nourish them, albeit the earth ſhould bring forth no foode at all. And thus he commands them to depend vpon Gods helpe, and to content themſelues therewith, notwithstanding that the barrenneſſe of the earth ſhould put them to their ſhifts.

In this ſenſe it is ſaid afterwards, Hee will make fat thy bones. He ſaith not; they ſhall be full fed and fat; but ſo leane, that their bones ſhall pierce the very ſkinne. Hee calles them bones then, who are pinched with penury and famine. In a word, ſuch as in whom there is nothing left but ſkinne and bones vnto: he ſtrunke vp and withered. And thus he ſignifies that the Iewes ſhould haue to wreſtle againſt famine and leauntes, vntill God ſhould be pleaſed to reſtore them.

Heereunto appertaines that which hee addes touching a watered garden, and of the ſpring of waters. For Iſaiah cannot ſatiſſie himſelfe in expreſſing the largeneſſe which God would powre but vpon his ſeruants, that ſo men might ſeeke the cauſes of death no where but in themſelues. The ſumme is, that this fountaine of Gods bountifullneſſe ſhall neuer faile nor bee drownt dry, if ſo bee wee ſtoppe not vp the ſame by our frowardneſſe.

Verſ. 12. And they ſhall be of thee, that ſhall build the old waſte places: and thou ſhalt raiſe vp the foundations for many generations; and thou ſhalt be called the repairer of the breach, and the reſtorer of the paths to dwell in.

*Or, reſtore the old deſerts.

By deſerts, the Prophet meanes an horrible waſte which beſell the Iewes at that time, when they were led captiues: for the Land became like a deſert, the cities were ruinated, the Temple was razed, the people made bondſlaues, and ſcattered into all quarters. Hee calles them deſerts, and old, becauſe they could not be ſo ſoone reedified; neither was there any hope left that the people ſhould be reſtored to their fiſt eſtate. If any Citie be waſted or laid on heapes, yet as long as the inhabitants remaine there, it may in ſhort time be reſtored: but if the inhabitants which dwelt therein be dead, or haue bin carried away into a farre Country, and ſhall be long abſent, what hope is left that ſuch a Citie ſhould be new built againe? Wil it not ſeeme ſtrange if a long while after the ruine thereof, one ſhould ſay; The people which ſeemed forlorne, ſhall build and reſtaure it againe? Seeing this promiſe then was incredible, the Prophet meant to meeete with this doubt. For they might obiect; If the Lord meant to raiſe vs to our former eſtate, why ſuffers he vs to languish ſo long a time? He answers, that the length of time ſhall not let God to raiſe vp the things againe that were fallen to the earth for many yeeres together. Now this muſt not be reſtrained to the building of the Temple begun by Zerobabel, and continued by Nehemas, Ezra. 3. 8. but it comprehends the reſtauration of the Church, which was effected ſome ages after.

An obiection p^{ro}duced.

Of thee] ſignifies that out of this people almoſt dead, ſhould come forth ſuch as ſhould repaire theſe woſull ruines. And thus they ſhould be the Carpenters and Maſons to reedifie Jeruſalem. A little after he ſeemes to attribute to all the people that which he now restrains to some particulars, but the sense notwithstanding remains alwaies the same. For if it be asked, Who testified Ierusalem? Truly it was this people. But out of this infinite multitude God culled out an handfull, and cut off all the rest. Some thinke that the Cities should not be big enough to containe so many people, for which cause they should be forced to build those againe which were throwne downe before. But this seemes too farre fetched.

By the foundations from generation to generation, whereof he speaks in the second member, some thinke that the Prophet only repeats that which he said before, and so expound foundations of generations, because they had a long time bin ouerthrowne, in regard these buildings were forthwith to be reedified and set vp: but many impediments should come betwene that should cause the worke to cease: notwithstanding this may be referred to the time to come thus; Thou shalt reare vp the buildings which shall remaine for a long space, for he seemes to promise vnto the Church such an estate as shal continue a long while: as if he should say, other buildings stand not long, but this shall indure for many generations. If any had rather referre it to the tinic past, I gainesay him not.

And thou shalt be called.] The Prophet here comprehends two points. First, that the people should resemble a ruinous building: Secondly, that they should shortly be built againe. But he attributes to the Iewes that they shall be the repairers and directors of the paths, in regard the Lord shall vsf their seruice to that end. Wee haue heere then an excellent promise, namely, that the ruins of the Church shall be gathered againe together, and repaired. Now seeing the Lord will vsf our selues in this worke, let nothing hinder vs from employing our whole seruices this way. And albeit the world resist and scorne vs as witlesse people, yet let vs be of good courage, and overcome all these impediments. For we must be valiant and bold when we know it is the Lords worke, who hath enioined vs thus to doe.

*Verf. 13. If thou turne away thy foote from the Sabbath, from doing thy Will on mine holy day, and call the Sabbath * a*

* Or, delites, *delite, to consecrate it as glorious to the Lord, and shalt honor him, not doing thine owne wayes, nor speaking * a vaine word.*

* Or, thy words.

Some thinke the Prophet hath respect to the outward obseruation of the Sabbath, because it was not lawfull to strawle on that day. Now howfoeuer I reiect not this, yet I take it that the sense hath a larger extent; for vnder the figure Synecdoche, he signifies the whole course of mans life, it being a thing well knowne to all, that by ualking, our whole conuersation is vnderstood. He saith then, If thou ceasest to follow thine owne swinge: if thou stime up all passage against thy selfe: vvalke not vvhither thy fantasia leads thee, &c. For they are said to turne their feete from the Sabbath who impose not this law vpon themselves, namely, not to wander whither their vnbridled lusts would carrie them.

Now as before vnder the fast he comprehended all ceremonies, and shewed that these disguisings in which they placed. their holines, were nothing but vain and vnprofitable things, so in this place he shewes wherein the true obseruation of the Sabbath consisteth, to the end they should not thinke it to be in the outward rest from bodily labor, but in the true renouncing of our selues, that is, in abstaining from all wickednes, violence, voluptuousnes, and euill thoughts.

First, by the word foote he means their works: for the Iewes durst not trauaile nor dresse any flesh vpon the Sabbath day, and yet they made no scruple at all to vex their poore neighbors, and to scorne the afflicted, notwithstanding, he comes forthwith to speake of the vwill, and the vords, that he might comprehend all the parts of that obediece which is due vnto God.

The word delights ought to be referred vnto God, and not to men. For there is nothing which pleaseth him better, or is more acceptable vnto him than the obseruation of the Sabbath, and his pure worship. He carefullie repeats that men do much ouershute themselves if they cōtemne the commandements of God, to set vp their vnprofitable workes in the stead thereof, and also admoniseth vs to suffer our selues to be gouerned by his only will.

Moreouer, he mentions some particulars, whereby he shewes that the true obseruation of the Sabbath consisteth in the renouncing of our selues; and in the conuersion of the whole man: and therefore he layes the vwill for the foundation, that from thence may flow vords, and deeds, for we lightly vtter the conceptions of our vnderstandings, and by our vords we manifest our vwill, then followe the actions. Whosoeuer then will indeuor to serue God as he ought, he must first of necessitie whollie renouente his will and carnall reason. Hence we see wherefore the Lord oft requires the obseruation of the Sabbath in the Scriptures: Exod. 20. 13. Doubtlesse he looked higher then to the externall ceremonie, which is this rest, in which the Iewes placed a worke of great holinesse. No, he rather meant, that hauing put off all the concupiscences of the flesh, and renounced all their inordinate affectiōs, they should testifie their sincere obediece. For in truth, that man can neuer be said to meditate aright of the heavenly life, that is not dead both to the world and to himselfe. Now howfoeuer this ceremonie bee abolished, yet the substance remains. For Christ is dead and risen againe, to the end we might keepe a perpetuall Sabbath; that we cease from our own workes, to suffer the Spirit of grace to worke powerfully in vs.

Verf. 14. Then shalt thou delight in the Lord, and I will cause thee to mount upon upon the high places of the earth, and feede thee with the heritage of Iacob thy father: for the mouth of the Lord hath ſpoken it.

Then ſhalt thou delight. It ſeemes he alludes to the word delights, in the former verſe. For the word Tibannah, which the Prophet uſeth, comes of the word Onegh, which hee uſed in verſ. 12. in ſaying, that the Lord tooke great delights in the true obſervation of the Sabbath. In a word, his meaning is, that the people receiued no delight from God, becauſe they provoked him to anger, & would not obey his will. For if wee ſquare our liues according to the rules of Gods Law, wee ſhall be his delights, and hee ſhall be our ioy and contentment. He teſtifies then that the Iewes are the cauſe themſelues that God takes no more pleaſure in them: alſo that their owne liues are ſo comfortleſſe. By this then hee priuily reprocheth the Iewes, namely, that through their owne folly, they haue drawne downe ſo many calamities vpon them.

Afterwards he addes, that they ſhall mount vpon the high places of the earth: thereby promiſing vnto them their returne, and a ſafe abode in their Country: for we know that Iudaah was ſituated on high, about the regions round about: and that Babylon was ſeated lower, ſo as the people was hid there, as within a caue. And yet hee ſhewes more plainly, what he meant by this word to mount: for hee promiſeth to them the poſſiſion of that heritage which was promiſed a d giuen to the Fathers, which they alſo ſhould then inioy, after that for a time they had been deſtroyed of it.

He addes, for the mouth of the Lord hath ſpoken it; that they might know for certaine, that all theſe things ſhould take effect. But this muſt not only be vnderſtood touching theſe promiſes; but muſt alſo be referred to the former part of this Chapter. For therein hee hath ſharply cenſured the hypocrites, who thought to haue made their party good againſt God, ſhewing alſo that they were (notwithſtanding their plea) juſtly puniſhed for their iniquities: yea, that it was in vaine for them to quarrell with God, by oppoſing their vaine and vnprofitable workes to his iuſtice. And therefore hee brings them backe to the true obſervation of the Sabbath day, and ſhewes that all ſhall goe well with them, if they worſhip the Lord purely: and in the end concludes, that in all theſe things they had not to doe vwith a mortall man, but vwith the eternall God, vwho is the Iudge that teſtifies theſe things.

THE LIX. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. Behold, the Lords hand is not ſhortened, that it cannot ſaue: neither is his eare heauie, that it cannot heare.

2. But your iniquities haue ſeparated betweene you and your God, and your finnes haue hid his face from you, that he will not heare.

The Prophet maintaines Gods equall dealing, againſt the ſlanders of the wicked.

His Sermon is in a manner like to the former. For after hee hath vnmasked the hypocrites, who ſally vaunted themſelues, and ſhewed that their puniſhment is iuſt; now hee anſwers to the reſt of their obiections. The cuſtome of ſuch kind of perſons is to accuſe God either of impotencie, or of ouer great ſeueritie: and therefore he ſhewes, that neither power nor vwill is wanting in God, to ſaue thoſe that be his: but that it is their owne peruerſitie that hinders him from cauſing them to feele his liberalitie: and conſequently, that they did wickedly to complaine of him, in vttering ſuch ſlanders againſt him, ſeeing that themſelues rather deſerued to be accuſed.

The word Behold, hath great weight in it: for it is as much as if the Prophet in ſpeaking of a thing preſent, ſhould haue pointed it out with his finger for the greater certentie, that ſo he might at once cut off all the cauiſes and replies of hypocrites. Now we muſt ſupply oppoſitions in the words ſhortened and heauie: as if he ſhould ſay; The hand of the Lord was once ſtrong enough to ſaue his children: and once his eares were open to heare their prayers: and now hee is no changeling, as if his hand were maimed, or as if his eares were heauie, that he ſhould not be quicke enough of hearing. The ſum is, that men are not to charge God with mutabilitie, as if he had altered his nature; but that the whole blame reſted in themſelues, in regard that by their finnes they had as it were ſhut vp the paſſage againſt his bountie, and would not admit of his ſuccour. So that if themſelues had not laid impediments in the way, hee would haue cauſed them to haue felt his power and mercy, as well as their fathers in times paſt had done. And thus he drawes his argument from the perpetuall and equall conſtancie of God, whoſe grace they reiected by their ſins, and would none of his helpe.

Hence we gather that it is our finnes only that deſtroies vs of Gods fauour, and ſets him and vs at oddes. For that which the Prophet ſaid of his time, agrees to all ages: for hee maintaines Gods cauſe againſt the ſlanders of the wicked. God therefore is alwaies like himſelfe, and is neuer wearie of well doing; his power is not leſſened: but it is wee our ſelues that ſhut vp the gate againſt his grace.

prevented by mens deserts: and therefore it must needs be that hee doe good to the vnworthy. I confesse this is true: but yet I say that mens perversitie sometimes overflows so farre, that it stops vp all passage against Gods benefits; no lesse then if of set purpose we meant to driue him farre away from vs. And albeit hee neuer heares any, but with pardon; it being also our duties alwaies to bring with vs into his presence requests touching the forgiueneffe of our sinnes; yet hee neuer heares the prayers of the wicked. We are not to wonder then if the Prophet accuseth the people, for hauing reiected Gods benefits by their wickednesse, and for making him vnappeasable by their obstinacie. To be short, for making a diuorce; by which they repulsed and turned backe the ordinary course of Gods graces.

Verf. 3. For your hands are defiled with blood, and your fingers with iniquitie: your lippes haue spoken lies, and your tongue hath murmured iniquitie.

He descends from the general to particulars.

Now he brings their workes to light, to stop their contentings: and that they should not call into question what these sins were, which had made this diuision. He takes away from the all excuse then, in discouering vnto them these particular vices; as if their wicked life had been blazed in an open theater. Now he speaks in the second person, in regard that he maintaines and prosecutes the cause of God, whose aduocate he is: and therefore he separates himselfe out of the wicked societie, to whom now he will not ioyn himselfe, although hee were not vtterly exempt from sinne. But he feared and honoured God notwithstanding: and therefore had his conscience clear. For he which shall be tainted with the same offences, cannot freely condemne others: neither shall he be fit to debate the matter, because he bereaues himselfe of his authoritie by his scandalous and wicked life. For we ought not to be culpable of the vices which wee reprove in others, vnlesse we meane to make the doctrine which we teach, a matter of scorne and derision; and our selues to be taken for bold and impudent fellows. But on the other side, when we serue our God in a pure and good conscience, then hath the doctrine which we deliuer maiestie and power in it, and leaues the aduersarie the more without excuse.

Now it is not to be held as a matter superfluous, that he laies forth the vngenerous life of this people thus, by peace meate. For men are wont to seeke out many starting holes; neither can they be brought into any good order, vnlesse they bee first brought to acknowledge their offences.

In mentioning of blood; his meaning is not that they committed open murders; but thereby he notes out the inhumanitie, rapines, violence and outrages which the hypocriticall sort exercised ouer the poore, and such as were not able to resist. We must not thinke he had to deale with notorious mur-therers or theecus; but with the King and States-men; who were honoured and respected, in regard of their great places. These are they whom he calles men of blood; in that they cruellie vexed poore innocents: and in that by force and violence they wrung vnto themselves other mens goods.

For this cause in the next place, hee puts iniquitie in stead of blood. And howsoeuer hee seemes to extend his speech further off; yet it is but a repetition or redoubling of the words; which the Hebrewes often vse for amplifications sake. For he expresth more by the fingers then by the hands. As if hee should haue said, There is not the least part of your bodies which is not stained with extortion.

Next, hee toucheth another kind of wickednesse: to wit, when one of them circumvented another by subtilties, periuries, and treacheries. For iniquitie by which we wrong our neighbours, is fortified with crueltie or lies and deceit, as with the court gard. Now the Prophet in this place insists vpon matters belonging to the second table, and by the sinnes which they had committed against the commandments therein contained, hee shewes that they were wicked persons, and vtterly void of the true feare of God. For that barbaritie and disloyaltie which violates humane societie, merely proceeds from the contempt of God. See here the reason then, why from the hands; that is to say, from extortions and outrages, hee descends to tying, wicked practises, periuries, and other diuellish subtilties, whereby wee circumvent our neighbours.

Iniquitie fortified by crueltie.

Violating of humane societie proceeds from the contempt of God.

Verf. 4. No man calleth for iustice: no man contendeth for truth: they trust in vanitie, and speake vaine things: they conceiue mischiefe, and bring forth iniquitie.*

*Or, crieth.

The Prophet meant to say, that there was no regard of equitie or vprightnes among the: That no man opposed himselfe against the iniuries, which the great ones practised against the weake. And, that all licentiousnesse grew and increased, because all looked through their fingers therat, and no man did set his heart to maintaine iustice. Now it is not enough that we only abstaine from violence our selues, vnlesse as much as possible we can, we therewithall endeavour to hinder men from doing the same to others. Truly, who euer he bee that permits that which he may hinder; the same may be said in a sort to command it. For silence is a kind of consent. And to this appertaines the second member.

It is not enough that we abstaine from offering violence, vnlesse we hinder it in others.

Some take the verb Nishpat in the passive signification, and thinke the Prophets meaning is, That none is iudged iustly. For the whole State is ful of corruptions, and yet no man opposeth himselfe against them. But the actiue signification agrees better, in respect of the answering of these two points one to another, No man calles for iustice: No man contendeth contends for truth. For whereas ſome tranſlate, no man iudgeth himſelfe in truth: it is a little too nice. Beſides, in as much as this verb, To eric, is taken, to contend; the ſcope of the text ſeemes here to runne better, No man ſets himſelfe to maintaine the right, with a loud voice freely to maintaine and defend iuſtice. In a word, to contend againſt the wicked. Vnleſſe we had rather refer this criſing for iuſtice, to the miſerable, who were vniuſly oppreſſed. As if he ſhould ſay, Theſe poore wretches held their peace, becauſe they gained nothing by their cries. But this lenie would be ſome what too harſh. Well, if ſuch as are careleſſe in defending of mans right; and ſuch as relieue not the afflicted are thus rigorouſly condemned by the Lord: what ſhall become of vs, if our zeale in maintaining the glorie of God, prouokes vs not to eric without ceaſing againſt iniquities? if we winke at the ſcoffes wherewith the wicked deride the doctrine of ſaluation, and prophane the name of our God: or if wee ſet light by the plots wherewith they goe about to ouerthrow the Church, ſhall not our ſilence deſerue to be condemned of diſloyaltie and high treaſon? (I trow yes.) To be ſhort, Jſaiab meaning is, that all good order falles to ruine by our fault, if we reſiſt not the wicked as much as in vs lies. Secondly, that there is an extreme conuſion, when no man ſtirres his foote to vphold iuſtice.

When he ſaith, that they truſt in vaine things, it is to ſignifie that they heaped vp multitudes of peruerſe counſels, by meanes whereof they became vtterly obſtinate. Will you ſee the height of iniquitie then? Surely wee may then be ſaid to be come vnto it, when in ſeeking our ſweete allurements heere and there, we accuſome our ſelues with a ſelred malice to contemne God; for by ſuch meanes Satan inueigles the reprobates, till hee hath wholly bewitched them. So as hauing firſt of all taken off all feare of God, they come by degrees to reiect all whoſome admonitions, and at laſt, with inſupportable pride & ſauſineſſe to deride and ſcorne them. Becauſe arrogance then tranſports vs, when wee oppoſe our vaine hopes againſt Gods iudgement; it is not without cauſe that our Prophet brands this ruſt vnder which ſcorners hide themſelues, with a note of deſpaire. For a man may ſee well enough that the maladie is growne incurable, when the wicked make no bones to flatter themſelues in all mens ſight; and when being built as it were vpon their owne ſrowardneſſe, they thinke they have licence to doe whatſoever they liſt.

Hee adds, that one might diſcerne a farre off, what their thoughts and maners were in their ſpeech, according to the common prouerbe; The tongue is the meſſenger of the heart. And yet this particle may be expounded two waies; either that they vttered nothing that was good, but that their tongues were framed to deceiue without ceaſing: or that their wickedneſſe brake forth into manifeſt ſwaggering. And this ſecond expoſition pleaſeth me better then the firſt.

They ſhall conueine miſchiefe, and bring forth iniquitie.] Theſe ſimilitudes ate elegant. For by them he compares the wicked to women, who nourish their fruit in their wombe, and afterward bring it forth. Likewiſe, hee ſaith that the wicked are like great bellied women, whileſt they are plotting their treacheries in their breasts, euen till the full time approach, in which they muſt be deliuered; namely, as ſoone as they haue found fit opportunities. Now hee ſaith, that they conueine hurtfull counſels, to the end they may afterward oppreſſe the innocent without cauſe. As if hee ſhould ſay; They plot their miſchiefs long afore hand, and are alwaies readie to execute ſome outrage: for they ceaſe not heere and there to ſearch out cloſe conuiances to trouble ſuch as onely deſire to bee at peace.

Simile.

Verſ. 5. They hatch Cockatrice egges, and weaue the ſpiders webbe: he that eateth of their egges, dieth, and that which is troden vpon, breaketh forth into a Serpent.

The Prophet paſſeth on further, comparing the Iewes not onely to women, but alſo to venomous beaſts; the better to ſignifie, that whatſoever proceeded from them, was dangerous and deadly. Firſt then hee ſaith that they hatched Cockatrice egges. As a Viper then cannot but hatch a venomous egge; ſo were they ſo defiled and ſtuffed with iniquitie, that they brought forth nothing but poiſon.

A comparison taken from venomous beaſts.

Simile.

By the Spiders webbe, hee means that they were ſo fruitleſſe and emptic of goodneſſe, that by the onely appearance of goodneſſe, they beguiled euery one. And thus hee paints out the wicked with two colours as it were: Firſt, that all their works manifeſted the corruption of their nature. Secondly, that they were profitable for nothing, neither were they readie to ſhew themſelues louing, amiable, charitable, and faithfull to thoſe with whom they conuerſed. I am not ignorant that this place is otherwiſe expounded by ſome, namely, that whileſt the wicked are weauiſg the webbe of other mens deſtruction, they ouerthrow themſelues; and thinking themſelues very wiſe, doe notwithstanding plot their deuices in vaine. And thus are caught in their own nets, and fall into the pit which they digged for others: Psal. 7. & 9. But mee thinke the Prophet meant to expreſſe that which I haue touched, to wit, that the wicked alwaies, every where, and in all things, are miſchieuous, and neuer profitable to any. Whoſoever ſhall haue to doe with them, ſhall taſte their venome, and that they ſtung to death. Heereunto belongs that which hee ſaith, namely, that deadly poiſon is in their egges, and that if one doe but tread vpon them, a Serpent by and by iſſueth forth.

The height of iniquitie.

with their labours: for their workes are workes of iniquitie; and the worke of crueltye is in their hands.

A repetition and confirmation of the former similitude.

HEE both repeats and confirms one and the same thing, namely, that they euer more are hurtfull to mankind, whatsoeuer they enterprize or execute: because of set purpose they haue all duties of charitie in abomination. Heere then is a signe of a nature wonderfully corrupted, namely, to be wholly giuen vp to commit euill, that no hope is left of reaping any fruit from their life, who desire to be vtterly void and stripped of all iustice. Others expound; that they strite to get riches, and to be aduanced to honors: but all to no purpose. Yet I had rather plainly expound it thus; that none of them should couer himselfe with his workes, because his vrebbe is altogether composed of rotten and vsenueicall stuffe.

Now hee repeats one and the same thing in diuers phrases of speech, to shew that their workes should be vtterly fruitlesse. Wee are borne to doe our neighbours good, according to our power, and to be doing of somewhat that may serue for the common good. These are wild beafts then, and not worthy the names of men; seeing they are so industrious to hurt, and so prouident, as to do nothing that is of any worth. Last of all, without any figure, hee adds, that they are giuen and as it were, dedicated vnto iniquitie.

Verf. 7. Their feete runne to euill, and they make haste to shed innocent blood: their thoughts are wicked thoughts: desolation and destruction is in their pathes.

HE here diuers waies describes vnto vs an image of an hatefull impietie. Namely, when men are so farre past grace, and destitute of all feare of God, that they rush into all kind of wickednesse, as the horse into the battell: and ouerflow in cruelties, roberies, and outrages. They runne (saith he) because they are strong and ouerbold to commit wickednesse. Now hauing spoken before of the bands and tongue, now he also adds the feete, to shew that they are their crafts Masters in all sorts of mischief. So as no member of their bodies was exempt from acting some iniquitie. For some vse violence, but they can restraîne their tongues. Others againe who resemble a certaine raenous bird called an Harpie, content themselves with the first pray they meete withall. The Prophet then confesseth that those of his nation were light of foote, to spoile and rob.

A bird called an Harpie.

By the word desolation, hee signifies that wheresoeuer these cormorants came they fared like sauage and wild beafts, who rauin and deuoure all they meete withall, and leaue nothing remaining. So as by their terrible course, they scatter and cause all beafts to flee; which dare not come neere them. Plinie takes vp the like similitude touching Domitian, who tyranized like a cruell beaft. And the same may we see to be in all these blood thirstie ones, whom all the world flees as from furious and vtamed wild beafts. And thus their waies become desolate, and solitarie, when they will suffer none to haue any fellowship with them.

Plinie.
Domitian.

Verf. 8. The way of peace they know not, and there is none equitie in their goings: they haue made them crooked pathes: who soeuer goeth therein, shall not know peace.

SOME take this word peace, too nicely, for peace of conscience, in respect that the wicked are euermore vexed. But the Prophet so brings them to Gods iudgement, that yet in the meane while by transgressing the second table, he shewes that there was neither faith nor charitie in them. In a word, that they were void of affection. The way of peace (saith he) they know not. Why so? Because their woolluish minds had bereaued them of this Iustice and equitie; which two vertues vphold humane societie, and cause men to dwell quietly and friendlie one with another. For iustice and integritie nourisheth peace. But if euery one with furie rusheth violently vpon his neighbour, in offering them open wrong: there, open warre is proclaimed. For wee can by no meanes maintaine peace in the midst of vs, vnlesse euerie one in particular squares all his doings by the rules of equitie.

Iustice and integritie nourisheth peace.

He expresseth this more fully by the word iudgement. As if he should say, wheresoeuer they came, they were a terror to all; because they had cast off all vprightnesse. The last member may be taken two waies, either that who soeuer walkes in them, shall also be farre off from peace: Or, He which fallles into the hands of the wicked shall feele their cruelty and murderous minds. Both expositions may agree well, and (as I thinke) we need not much contend about it. And therefore after the Prophet hath spoken generally before, and shewed, that the fault was not in God, that the Iewes prospered no better in their enterprises; now he descends to the particulars, wherein he more fully declares how they had reuolted from God, and so made themselves vnworthie of his fauour.

Peace cannot be maintained without equity.

But here ariseth a difficultie, in regard that Saint Paul allegeth this place in the Epistle to the Rom. 3. 17. to condemne all flesh as vicious, corrupt, and vtterlie void of any thing that is good. But contrariwise it seemes the Prophet applies it in particular to the men of his time. But the answer is easie. For when he directeth his speech to the Iewes, who were reputed as pettie Saints in respect of others, of necessitie the Gentiles must all come within this rancke. If any obiect, that the Gentiles in liuing iustly were a law vnto themselves, and that their vncircumcision is counted to them for vncircumcision.

Anſ.

Rom. 7. 16. I anſwer, that the Prophet brings God in complaining of all ſuch as were not regenerated by his holy ſpirit. And thus none can be exempt, if he be conſidered of in his owne nature. And yet the Prophet exempt himſelfe out of this number, in regard he was regenerated and governed by the Spirit of God. S. Paul therefore hath alleaged this ſentence to very good purpose when he minded to ſhew what men are, being forſaken of God, and are led by the light of their owne nature. I grant that the perverſitie of men breakes not alwaies ſooth into open ſinnes. Well, our Prophets meaning is to reprove the corruptions of thoſe times wherein iniquities were growne to ſuch an height, that one might well diſcerne as in a glaſſe how (loſſome a ſinke and) bottomleſſe gulph of all at ominations mans nature is. In the meane while there is no doubt but this Sermon ſtung the Jewes to the very quick, in regard they were puffed vp with a vaine conceit of their race for ſooth; but in as much as the ſpirit of God ſpared not them, the reſt of the nations who were no leſſe corrupted by nature, had no reaſon at all to wallow themſelves in their pleaſures.

Verſ. 9. Therefore is iudgement farre from vs; neither doth iuſtice come neere unto vs: we wait for light, but loe, it is darknes: for brightnes, but we walke in darknes.

Why is the living man ſorrowfull? man ſuffers for his ſinne. Lam. 3. 39.

HAVING ſhewed how much the eſtate of this people was perverted and corrupted, he therewithall teacher that they are juſtly corrected thus ſeverely, to the end they ſhould take vp no complaints, as if they were more hardly dealt withall then there was cauſe. He hath by peccemeale then deciphered out their open and knowne corruptions, that they might acknowledge how many waies they were guiltie before God: and now he puts them in minde that it was no wonder if God caried a ſtrait hand ouer ſuch obſtinate ſpirits, in handling them according to their deſerts. Now he ſaith, that iudgement was farre off, in reſpect that they were the only miſerable people in the world, and had not God their protector, as at other times. He takes iudgement & iuſtice for Gods particular care and ſafeguard ouer vs, namely, when he expreſſeth ſo much by the effects. By Iuſtice, he meanes Gods protection, by Judgement, the vengeance which he executes vpon ſuch as offer any violence againſt vs. But here he affirms, that God hath no more care ouer his people, and that he hath withheld his aid and ſuccor from them, becauſe they were vnworthy thereof. We are alſo to note this particule therefore, for thence it folloes, that they were not to murmure againſt God, as if he kept no meaſure in his corrections, ſeeing they had ſo often abuſed his Maieſtie.

Hereunto appertains that which he addes, namely, that a perpetuall darknes enuironed them, who waited for light. This metaphor ſhewes, that they were almoſt conſumed in their miſeries, and were then fruſtrated of their hopes, whyleſt they promiſed vnto themſelves ſome releaſe. By light, is meant a proſperous eſtate, as on the contrarie, by darknes, a ſtate vnhappy, as is well enough knowne in diuers places before. His meaning is then, that it was in vaine for them to expect better fortunes, becauſe he would haue this people learne to impute theſe calamities to their owne deſerts, and not to imagin either that they came by chance, or that the Lord handled them too ſharply, for his whole ſcope and drift is to bring them to the doctrine of repentance.

Verſ. 10. Wee grope for the wall like the blinde, and wee grope as one without eyes: wee ſtumble at the noone day as in the twilight: we are in ſolitarie places, as dead men.

BY varietie of phraſes he expreſſeth one and the ſame thing. For in regard many complaints would be heard to paſſe from this people, he would omit nothing that might ſerue to lay forth their woſull calamities. It may be he vtters theſe things as if he conſented with them, that they were ſo indeed; as if he meant to ſay, Our matters are brought into wonderfull ſtraits: but wee are about all things to conſider the cauſe thereof, ſeeing wee haue deſerued to be handled with much more ſeueritie. And yet the ſenſe will not ſute amiſſe if we ſay, That the drouzie are here awaked, to be thinke them of their miſeries: for howſoeuer they were but too forward in making their complaints, yet Satan benumbed their ſenſes, leſt the ſignes of Gods wrath ſhould ſolicite them to repentance.

One and the ſame thing expreſſed, vnder diuers manners of ſpeech.

Now he alludes to that ſimilitude which he mentioned in the former verſe, where he ſaid, that the people were in darknes and obſcuritie, without any hope of getting out. Here he ſignifies that they were deſtitute of counſell, and ſo preſſed with anguiſh, that no refuge nor remedie at all appeared vnto the. When ſome light affliction befallles vs we looke this way and that way, and haue hope of ſome iſſue: but in great extremities we are able to diſcerne nothing, in regard of deſpaire which hath ſurprized vs: for this cauſe the Prophet ſaith, that being intangled in a maze of perplexities, they groped.

We ſtumble.] This phraſe of ſpeech tends to the ſame end, and hath alſo greater weight in it, namely, that if they ſet but one foote forward, ſo many impediments preſented themſelves on all ſides, that they could finde no more releaſe, then if the day had bin conuerted into the night. By ſolitarie places, I vnderſtand deepe gulphes, or deſert and barren lands. For in this place I allow S. Ieroms reading, who deriues theſe words ſolitarie places, from the verb Aſham; which ſignifies as much as to be horribly deſtroyed and deſolated.

S. Ierome.

The Rabbins who will needs draw it from Rabbins, Shauin, which ſignifies, to be fat, argue childiſhly.

disfilly, as I thinke, neither do they alleage any thing that makes to the purpose. For by solitarie places they thinke men are vnderstood, because Shemmen signifies anointment, and thus iudge, that the Gentiles are noted out in these words. But the Prophets true meaning is, that the Iewes were brought into solitarie places, that being banished from the societie of men, they might resemble the dead, and might bee left without any hope of deliuerance.

Verf. II. *We roare all like beares, and mourne like doves; weelooke for *equitie, but there is none; for health, but it is far from vs.

*Or, iudgement.
*Or, saluation.

HE notes two sorts of men that cannot beare their miseries with patience, but they must discouer them by outward testimonies. For y first cry very loud like beares; & the other mourne like doves. He vsed this latter similitude in Chap. 38. 14. where he described the sighings of Herzaias. And this happens at such times as we would faine repress our sorrowes, and yet wee cannot so restrain them, but whether we will or no some signes thereof will breake forth outwardly. The summe is, that one while the weight of their miseries extorted from them lowd cries; another while they were overcome with groanes, and broken sighings; but neither their roarings, nor muttering, brought them any release, because their estate was not changed for the better.

For this cause, he repeats it once againe, that they vained in vaine for iudgements and saluation; whereby he means that the people were deprived of that succour from God, which about all things they wished and longed for. And he hath vsed the word saluation, the better and the more fully to expresse what hee meant before in verf. 9. by iustice; and here, by iudgement. Hence let vs gather, that we are miserable through our own fault, and that wee wither and waste away in our miseries, till wee be conuerted to our God. Wee may well roare and mourne; but without repentance our sorrowes shall receiue no reliefe. Our miseries then cannot cease, as long as we prouoke the Lord to anger, nor till we induor with our whole hearts to be reconciled vnto him.

No saluation without conuersion.

*Or, multiplied.

Verf. I 2. *For our trespasses are many before thee, and our finnes testifie against vs: for our trespasses are with vs, and we know our iniquities.

A confirmation of the former sentence.

HE confirms his former speech, namely, that the people did ill in accusing God of cruelty, and that they did not rather acknowledge that they receiued the iust recompence of their finnes, the heapes whereof reached vp to the heauens. And in this sense it is that the Prophet saith, they were multiplied. Also this particule before thee, hath great weight; for the Prophet descends into himselfe, and ac-knowledgeth the iust iudgement of God, which was hidden from mens eies. His meaning is then to note out a close opposition, which is between mens iudgement & Gods. Men flatter themselves, and thinke not of their finnes; but God who is the Iudge, leaues not to condemne them for all that, neither cares hee for all the vaine and idle excuses, wherewith they would faine daube them ouer. And therefore he contents not himselfe simply to condemne this people; but he ads, that they had multiplied their iniquities: that is to say, they were guiltie before God many vvaies. He acknowledgeth then that God is iust, and executes the office of a good Iudge, seeing among men there is not to be found so much as a droppe or graine of iustice or equitie. And therefore it is he adds, that it was not needfull to cite any vvainesses, nor to bring them from the Court of heauen, because the Iewes were sufficiently conuicted and condemned by the testimonie of their owne consciences. This manner of speech therefore ought to be well obserued; for it shewes that God hath no great neede of proofes, seeing our finnes hold vs sufficiently conuicted. We haue no reason then to contend with God, as if he punished vs wrongfully, or as if he chastised vs too seuerely: for our owne iniquities testifie plainly enough against vs, vvhath vvaies are, neither hath God neede to seeke out for any other vvainesses.

Verf. 4.

With vs.] Others translate, Vpon vs: but I had rather keepe the proprietie of the word. Men make many turnings, and transforme themselves into many shapcs, that they might be taken for iust: but all in vaine, because they bearc their iniquities, about vvvith them in their bosomes, from which they cannot flee. As also when God condemned Cain, he pronounced that his sinne plaid the vvaichman as the doore. So, hee that despiseth Gods iust iudgement, shall vex himselfe in vaine, if he thinks to escape by rebellion.

When hee saith, the Iewes knew their sinnes; hee means not that they were truly touched with them in their hearts, for then repentance would haue followed: but hee shewes, that albeit they strove to flee the iudgement of God, yet the testimonie of their owne conscience kept them imprisoned, and confined them in such wise, that they lost their labour to frame or forge excuses. Now whereas hee speaks in the first person, putting himselfe also in the ranke, it is a thing very rare in the Scriptures: and yet therewithall he shewes, that this euill had so spread it selfe through the whole body, that there was no member found nor free. Now howloeuere hee might for his owne particular, protest his vprightnesse in the presence of God; yet in respect that iniquity had overflowed into all the parts of the body, he confesseth himselfe to be (as it were) one of those rotten members, and to be infected with the common contagion. Neither doth this any way gainsay our former assertion, namely, that he hath hitherto exempted himselfe from the common reuolt, that he might call them the more to the quicke. Now to take away all exceptions, hee wrappes himselfe also vp in the number with them.

Verf. 13. In trespassing and lying against the Lord, and wee haue departed away from our God, and haue spoken of crueltie and rebellion, conceiuing and uttering out of the heart false matters.

In verse 12. the Lewes are taxed generally, here particulatly.

HE heere reckons vp some particular kinds of finnes, that he might with the greater vehemencie prouoke the people to acknowledge their finnes. Now truly it is monstrous that those which were chastised, and in a maner shattered to peeces by the hand of God, should yet stand to set vp the crest, and that their necke should bee of such an yron sinew, as that they could neither bee bowed nor humbled by the feeling of their misdoings. For the Lord labours to soften our hard hearts by his roddes and stripes. But when chastisements profit vs nothing, wee may then be said to bee growne past recouerie. Jsaiah insists long vpon this point, namely, to shew how wofully state of this people was, who albeit they were almost ground to powder, yet did they stil grudge against God, and could not endure to be brought vnder subiection. He therefore often repeats this admonition, and stands the more vehemently vpon it, that he might tame the rebellion of this people.

He also taxeth their iniquities with many words, and singles them out one from another, hauing shewed before generally what finnes reigned euery where amongst them. Neither doth he reprocue any pettic offences, or of a small handfull of people, but rather a generall reuolt. For by this verse hee giues vs to vnderstand that they were so corrupted, that there was not one dram of faith, integritie feare, or conscience in them. For what is it to lie against God, but wickedly to depart away from him, as if they plaied the flat rebels? He not onely reprocheth them then with the breach of one or two commandments of the law, but saith, that they renounced God, and revolted from him, left they should come at his call.

In the next place he saith, that they were giuen to forge wicked matters, and that they were wholly stained with falsehood. For it is much more detestable to vtter false matters out of the beaui then to be suddenly ouertaken with a lie, yea or to deceiue vpon the instant. In the meane while these rebukes no doubt cut the very hearts of the Lewes, who were readie to braust with pride; taking themselues to be exceeding holy men. But hypocritie must bee thus dealt withall; because a plaine admonition in such a case would haue done little good. By this example then al Pastors when they see the Church of God corrupt, and men to please themselues in themselues, & to lie rotting in their dung; thus must they oppose themselues, and scie sharply and shrillie against the same.

Verf. 14. Therefore iudgement is turned backward, and iustice standeth a farre off: for truth is fallen in the streets, and equitie cannot enter.

THEse are deceiued who thinke he returns to his first speech, in verf. 9, as if he now spake of the punishments which the people had felt from Gods hand. For he still prosecutes his former discourse; and discouers the corrupt diseases of the people: to testifie vnto all that they were iustly punished. But this verse we must thus distinguish vnto the ninth, where he said, That iudgement was gone farre off. For in that place hee pronounced that the Lewes were deprived of Gods helpe, in regard they had made themselues vnworthe that hee should be any longer a defender of their cause. But here he saith that iudgement was turned backward; because they had ouerturned all iustice and equitie amongst themselues. They receiued then a recompence according to their desert, when Gods iustice stood a farre off, and appeared not for their helpe; seeing they had banisht iudgement and iustice farre away from them. For we doe but lose our time, to expect that from God, which wee haue denied vnto others, and haue cast behind our backes.

The former discourse shal p usecued in this, and in verf. 15.

In the place.] That is to say, in the publike assemblee. For his meaning is to speake of those places where they held their courts. And thus hee signifies, that corruptions had not onely seized vpon some priuate persons, but that the whole estate of the people was so depraued, that there was nothing found amongst them. If any vices raigne among the common people, there may some good order be taken to remedie the same as long as iustice hath place: but if the iudgement seates themselues be ouerturned or corrupted, then it must needs be that all things are infected with an vnuerfall contagion. Hee also bewrays their vnbridled libertie, in that they were not ashamed to doe euill in publicke places, and that they neither fled from the light, nor from the eies of men.

Where iudgement seates are corrupted, there the contagion of sinne is vnuerfully ouerspread.

Verf. 15. Yea truth faileth, and hee that refraineth himselfe from euill maketh himselfe a pray: and when the Lord saw it, it displeas'd him, that there was no iudgement.

BY this it sufficiently appears, that Jsaiah spake not in the former verse of the punishments which the people sustained: For he prosecutes the very same discourse with the former: and shewes that the people had no cause to complaine of the rigor of their chastisements, seeing they had so grossely offended and prouoked the Lord. Hee confirms his former speech then: namely, that truth was fallen, iustice had no more place: and here he amplifies the same further, in adding that he which refraineth himselfe from euill, made himselfe a pray. The most of the expositors among the Hebrewes reade this part of the verse with a breath, thus; Truth is fallen, and was made a pray, in refraining it selfe from euill. But I see no reason why they haue accepted of this sense. Saine Ieroms exposition (which I also haue followed) is much better, and more agreable. This phrase of speech is very frequent in Scriptures, as we see in Iob 1.1. of whom it is said, that he was an vpright and iust man, feareing God, and eschewing euill. Salomon also saith, Prou.14.16. That a foole rageth; but the wise man feareth; and deparieth from euill. Well, the Prophets meaning is, that all honest courses were so hated and abhorred, that the small remnant of the faithfull could not liue in safetie. As if he should say, Whosoever meane in these times to haue societie with men, must of necessitie be as wicked as they: according to the old prouerbe; Hee must howle amongst woules; but he that will refraine from euill, shall be deuoured of the woules like a poore sheepe. Truly hee here expresth the height of impietie: for he shewes that truth was so fallen, that no honest man durst conuulse amongst them. Why so? Because whosoever refrained himselfe from euill, did by and by fall into the iawes of Lions.

Prouerbe.

The height of iniquitie.

A consolatio.

And the Lord (auii. et.) This tends to the consolation of this people: for his meaning is, that notwithstanding this peoples obstinacie wich in a manner seemed irremissible, yet God would tender their welfare. And howsoeuer for a time he had feuerely punished them, yet would he at last thinke vpon his couenant: so as in curing their euils, hee would restore vnto them incredible comfort. He speaks here of the time to come, and promiseth that a day will come after all these calamities, that God would send some reliefe to the remnant of his inheritance: for the Iewes had been left destitute of all hope, if the Lord had nor added this consolation.

Take a view heere then after what sort men are wont to plunge themselves into contrarie vices. Are they reprobud? then either they grow stubburne, or being surprized with terrors, they fall into despair. We are therefore carefully to obserue our Prophets course which he heere rakes: for in the first place it was needfull that the Iewes should be sharply rebuked, that so being touched and humbled by repentence, they might cease to murmure or repine against God. In the second place he promiseth them a moderation of their chastisements, with hope of deliuerance, that they should not faint, but wait for the Lords helpe, who neuer suffers his Church to perish: for he so corrects his chosen for a time, that hee will neither forsake, nor vicerly consume them.

If any had rather restraine this discontent and displeasure of God to his iudgements, in regard that hee iustly condemned and abhorred this wicked people; I gain say him not. As if hee should haue said; God saw nothing in this people but matter of hatred: whence it followes, that he had no other motiue to send them reliefe, but onely because hee saw that things were brought to vtter ruine.

Verf. 16. And when hee saw that there was no man, hee wondered that none would offer himselfe. Therefore his arme did saue it, and his righteousnesse it selfe did sustaine it.

THE Prophet prosecutes the same argument still: but hee laies that out more at large now, which hee briefly touched before. For that which hee said in the former verse, might peraduenture seeme obscure, namely, that it displeaseth the Lord, because there was no iudgement. In this place then hee repeats, that the Lord saw there was no man that would succour the Church, and he wondered at it. He vseth a verbe which signifies, that the Lord tooke vp an occasion of wonderment. As if he should say; He stood as one amazed. Some translate the word Maphgia, Intercessor: but I thinke the sense is, that no man presented himselfe to set the things in order, that were confused; there was no Physicion that would put to his hand to prescribe a remedie for this sickness; and therefore the Lord wondered. But it is ealie to iudge why he attributes this astonishment vnto God: for by this reproch, he meant to shame the Iewes, that so (according to their custome) they might nor seecke out pretences to couer their sinnes withall.

The same argument prosecuted.

Now in regard it was a thing incredible or rather monstrous, that amongst the holy and elect people there was not a man to be found that would oppose himselfe against iniustice, he brings in God as one astonished at so rare a matter, that by means hereof they might be brought at last to wonder and blush at their owne hypocrisie. For might they not worthily be taxed of detestable obstinacie if they would not blush at that which draue the Lord into this admiration, and that by reason of their stubbornnes? And therewithal he taxeth their hypocrisie, in that they made shew of hauing pietie and holines in great estimation, and yet when God came to make a diligent search, there was not a iust man to be found amongst them.

Moreouer, by this text he magnifies and extols the greatnes of Gods mercie, in that he vouchsafes to pull out a people as out of the bottome of hell, that were in such a pitifull plight. For no doubt but the Iewes by these words were admonished by what means they were to expect their deliuerance, namely, euen because the Lord was willing by a miracle to saue this forelorne people. Now this word to wonder, sets forth Gods fatherly care. Sure it is that there are no such afflictions in God, namely, that he should be astonished at new and vnwonted accidents, as if they were strange to him. But herein he rather applies himselfe to our capacities, that being touched to the quick with the sense of our miseries, we might be brought to abhorre our wofull condition.

God is not subject to humane passions.

When he saith then that the Lord saw, it is to signifie, that there is no reliefe to be found in our industries: and when he wonders, it telles ys that we are more then block-

kist

kith and ſenſeleſſe; in regard that we neither know nor regard the miſeries we are in. And yet that our careleſnes hindres not the Lord from working ſaluatiſon of his Church.

We muſt not deſpaire though mans helpe faile vs.

So his arme brought ſaluatiſon.) In theſe words he ſhewes that we are nor to deſpaire, albeit the helpe of man doe faile vs. Nay, all aides whatſoeuer being aboliſhed, the Prophet attributes the beginning and end of his nations ſaluatiſon, yea, of all mankind, to the free goodneſſe, and onely power of God. Euen as then in affirming that God is powerfull enough; yea, almightie to deliuer the Iewes, he therefore reacheth out his hand to the weak: ſo in telling vs that we cannot ſo much as ſtir a finger towards the procuring of our owne ſaluatiſon, he thereby caſteth to the ground all high imaginations, that ſo being ſtripped of all confidence in our workes, we might the more freely draw neere vnto God.

We muſt not onely marke what the Prophets ſay; but alſo obſerue their ſcope and drift.

This is the Prophets meaning: and I would haue it well obſerued. For in reading the bookes of the Apoſtles and Prophets, we muſt not onely marke what they ſay, but why and wherefore they haue ſaid thus or that. In this place then we are principallie to conſider whereat the Prophet aims, namely, to ſignifie, that God is of ſufficient power in himſelfe to accompliſh the worke of our ſaluatiſon, that our eyes might be kept from wandring here and there; becauſe our minds are too much tied to outward meanes. What then? but that we reſpoſe the whole hope of our ſaluatiſon in the arme of the Lord: and the true reſtauration of the Church in his righteouſneſſe. Bee it therefore knowne, that ſuch erre groſſely, who place it in any thing elſe, ſeeing God borrowes nothing out of himſelfe.

The uſe of this doctrine.

The uſe and profit of this doctrine, extends it ſelfe euen vnto vs. For albeit all helpes do ſometimes faile vs, yet will the Lord find ſufficient ſuccour for vs in his arme and power. As oft then as outward meanes doe faile vs, and that wee bee ouerwhelmed with all ſorts of miſeries, perceiuing nothing but preſent death before our eyes: let vs haue our refuge to this doctrine: and let vs bee well aſſured that God is ſtrong enough to protect vs: and ſeeing he ſtands not in need of any mans helpe, let vs learne to reſt our ſelues boldly vpon his aſſiſtance. But yet we muſt herewithall retainie the generall doctrine, To wit, that the deliuerance of the Church is a worke and benefite which onely belongs to the wonderfull power of God: that ſo wee may neuer attribute any thing either to the ſtrength or induſtrie of man. We ought alſo to abhorre their pride who wreſt and wring part of this praife vnto themſelues, which whollie belongs vnto God: ſeeing in him alone conſiſts the cauſe and effect of our ſaluatiſon.

The Churches deliuerance a benefite proceeding from Gods wonderfull power.

Arme here ſignifies his power and might: Righteouſneſſe, that equitie which he ſeeth in procuring the ſaluatiſon of his choſen when he becomes their protector, and deliuers them from death. Whereas he ſaith, that his owne arme obtained ſaluatiſon: it muſt not be referred vnto God, neither muſt we reade it as if God had ſaued himſelfe: but it is to bee referred to the ſaluatiſon of the Church which hee deliuered out of the hands of her enemies.

Verſ. 17. For he put on righteouſneſſe, as an habergeon, and an helmet of ſaluatiſon on his head, and hee put on the garments of vengeance for clothing, and was clad with zeale as with a cloake.

The Prophet armes the Lord at all points; not onely to confirme the faith of the godlie, but alſo to ſtrip all men of all confidence in their owne vertue. For the ſumme comes to this, that nothing ſhall be wanting vnto God, neither for diſcomfiring, nor for bearing away the victorie ouer his enemies. Why ſo? Becauſe that of his righteouſneſſe, power, grace, and exceeding affection towards his Church, he will make armour of proſe. And this we are to note with no leſſe diligence, then the doctrine of the former verſe. For albeit we confeſſe that God is almightie, yet doth not that ſatiſfie vs, but wee will bee ſeeking out of other helpe. Our minds are alwaies giuen to infidelitie, ſo as they are wonderfully hampered, and glued faſt to outward meanes. To correct this vice our Prophet ſets before vs this liuely deſcription. As if he ſhould ſay, know ye that God hath all the ſafeguards of your ſaluatiſon ready, ſo that nothing ſhall bee wanting vnto him for your deliuerance, and for your returne home againe: doe your enemies what they can. There is no neede then why you ſhould tremble at all. Beſides, we are verie eaſilie carried away to thinke, that wee bring ſome of our owne vnto God. And thus wee attribute part of his praife to our ſelues, which ſhould wholly be reſerued vnto him.

If God put himſelfe in armes to fight, he needs carrie away the victorie.

Whereas hee clothes the Lord with vengeance and indignation as a cloake; it appertaines vnto the enemies againſt whom God riſeth vp in wrath, for the zeale hee beares to his people. The more then that Satan in deours, and with might and maine plots our ouerthrow, the more will the zeale of the Lord of hoſtes bee inflamed, and will ariſe with his admirable and omnipotent power to relieue vs. Although this worrier of mankind then, and all the reprobates with him ceaſe not day nor night how to oppoſe all the impediments they can, to hinder our ſaluatiſon, yea, and that they breake forth into open rage to roote vs out; yet will our God ſcatter all their plots by his onely power.

Verſ. 18. As to make recompence, as to requite the furie of the aduerſaries, with a recompence ſo his enemies: hee will fully repay the Ilands.

Hee confirms the concluſion of the former verſe. For heere hee ſhewes, what that vengeance is, wherewith hee clothed the

A confirmation of the former concluſion. Lord,

Lord, namely, that he is readie to render the like vnto his enemies. But the reason why the Prophet armes the Lord thus readie with indignation to execute his vengeance, is to be noted, to wit, because the deliuerance of his Church is ioined with the ruine of the wicked. It is needfull therefore that God should be armed to meete those enemies which would worke our destruction.

Hence let vs consider how infinite that loue of God towards vs is when he beares vs such an affection, as to hate those that hate vs, and to protest that he will requite the furie of our aduersaries. So exceedinglie doth he loue his little flock, that he esteemes it more then all the world besides. This is the cause then wherefore he testifies that he will repay the Islands, that is to say, the nations beyond the seas, farre remote from them: for, for the deliuerance of his people he ouerthrew such mightie Monarks as seemed inuincible.

Vers. 19. So shall they feare the name of the Lord from the West, and his glorie from the rising of the Sunne: for the enemy shall come as a flood, but the spirit of the Lord shall chase him away.

Now hee testifies that this deliuerance shall bee so glorious and magnificent, that all the world shall wonder thereat, and shall speake honourably of it: and afterwards, being smitten with astonishment, shall giue glory vnto God. But it is vncertaine whether he means this of the conuersion of the Gentiles, or of the terrour by which the Lord would bring downe his enemies. For mine owne part, I rather incline to the first exposition, namely, that so the utmost parts of the earth, Gods name shall be glorious and fully renowned: so as the Gentiles shall not onely bee amazed, but shall also worship and serue him in true repentance.

The expositors agree not about the rendering of the cause which follows. But the true sense, as I suppose, is, That the violence of the enemy shall be so great, that as a flood spoiles and carries all away before it with the force thereof, so shall he come so teare up, and beare away: But the Lord will forthwith cause him to recoile and to vanish away. It is an amplification then of Gods power, who in an instant breakes in sunder all the terrible power and furious rage of his enemies, so as their violence, being turned backward, it falles to nothing.

But some may aske, of what deliuerance the Prophet here speaks. I answer, as I haue done in another place, that these promises must not be restrained (as they are wont to be) to one deliuerance only. For the Jewes referre it to the deliuerance out of Babylon, and the Christians only to Christ. Now I ioine them both together, that so we may comprehend the whole time fro the peoples returne, with that which followed vnto the coming of Christ: for this prophesie was neuer fulfilled, but in him; neither can that which is here said agree to any other then to him only, because Gods glorie was not manifested before to all the world, nor the enemy so put to flight, that they gathered not their forces together againe, vntill Christ came and triumphed admirably, hauing obtained conquest ouer Satan, sinne, & death:

Vers. 20. And the redeemer shall come vnto Zion, and vnto them that turne from iniquitie in Iacob, saith the Lord.

HE againe confirms that which he said before, namely, that the people should be deliuered, and that God would be the only author of so great a benefit. For this cause then he bids the people to be of good comfort in this exile, in regard it should not be perpetuall: afterwards he placeth the hope of their deliuerance in God only, to the end their thoughts might not rest in any thing but vpon the promises.

Vnder the word Zion, he meanes (as heretofore) the prisoners, and banished: for albeit they were scattered farre off from their countrie, yet was the Temple still to remaine planted as it were in their hearts. But lest the bastard children of Abraham should indifferently applie this vnto themselves with the heires of promise, he forthwith shewes who they be to whom this deliuerance shall come, namely, to such as shall be truly conuersed vnto the Lord. And yet it is very certaine that many returned from Babylon into Iudeah, which were not touched with any repentance at all; who neuerthelesse had their part in this benefit: but the Prophet speaks of that full redemption, which is onely proper vnto the elect. For howsoeuer the external fruit of the deliuerance redounded to the hypocrites; yet embraced they not this benefit of God to their saluation. The Prophet meant to say then, that the punishment of their banishment should haue fruit, to the end that the Lord hauing purged his Church from her filthinesse & corruptions, he might againe gather together her dissipations. We must also euer beare in mind that which I haue heretofore touched, in respect of the diminution of this people. Thus then our Prophet exhorts the elect to the feare of God, that so they might make benefit of the stripes which they receiued.

Hence let vs gather, that we can not be reconciled vnto God by the blood of Iesus Christ, vnlesse we be first of all thorowly displeased with our selues for displeasing of him. Not that our saluation depends vpon our repentance, seeing that is grounded vpon the remission of sinnes. But the hatred of euill, and the loue of good, is so conioined therewith, that they can not be separate. For those whom the Lord receiues into fauour, are in such wise regenerated by the holy Ghost, that they abhorre their vices, and change their course of life.

The Papiests vtterly ouerthrow the whole doctrine of saluation, in mingling and conounding repentance and remission of sinnes together: neither are they of the ignorant Thence the Apoſtle concludes, that Chriſt could not ſo be the redeemer of the world, that it ſhould not appertaine to ſome of the Iews, out of whom he had elected their fathers, and made this promiſe expreſly in fauor of them: Rom. 11. 1, 2. In the end of the verſe, the ratification of ſo excellent a ſentence is added.

Verſ. 21. And I will make this my covenant with them, ſaith the Lord; My Spirit that is upon thee, and my words which I haue put in thy mouth, ſhall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy ſeede, nor out of the mouth of the ſeede of thy ſeede, ſaith the Lord, from hence forth, euen for euer.

BEcauſe the doctrine before propoſed by our Prophet hitherunto was hard to be beleued, he labours by diuers meanes to confirme the Iewes that without wauering they might aſſuredly reſt vpon this promiſe of ſaluati-Queſt.
Anſ. on: and ſhould ſo farre forth honour the Lord, as to ſtay vpon his word. This word covenant is diligently to be noted. For thereby the Prophet ſets forth the greatnes and excellencie of this promiſe. For the promiſes haue a large extent, and may be compared to ſtones in the building; whereof the covenant is the foundation, that ſuſtaines and beares vp the whole builthen. Thus then he hath vſed this word covenant, that they ſhould not eſteeme hereof, as of ſome common matter. And hee addeſ this confirmation, to the end that howſoever this promiſe was not by aid by accompliſhed; yet they ſhould hope for the ſame, euen aboue hope. And it may be, here is a cloſe oppoſition, to cauſe the faithfull with the greater alacritie to aſpire to the new covenant which ſhould be eſtabliſhed in the hand of Chriſt.

But that which he addeſ afterwards ſeemes to bring but colde comfort with it, when he would haue the Church to content her ſelfe with words, and the Spirit. As though ſorfooth there were ſome great happineſſe in hanging in ſuſpenſe, touching the accompliſhment of Gods promiſes. But howſoever the Prophet hereby recommends the excellencie and worth of doctrine; yet notwithstanding I am well aſſured that it is not ſeparated from his effect.

Now in regard that God thus orders & diſpenceth his grace, that he alwaies exerciſeth the patience of the faithfull, whileſt they lue here below; and neuer wholly ſatiſfies their deſires: thus is the cauſe why he brings them to the word. As if he ſhould ſay, Thou ſhalt truly feele that I am liberal; and that I will many waies procure thy good: but thou oughteſt not to wiſh greater happineſſe, then to feele my preſence by my word. Whence wee gather, that the greateſt treaſure the Church hath, conſiſts in this, that the Lord hath choſen her for his dwelling place, that in the hearts of the faithfull he may make his abode by his Spirit, and may conſerue the doctrine of the Goſpell among them.

Laſtly, he foretels that God will neuer forſake his people, but will alwaies aſſiſt them by his word and ſpirit: which two are conioined together, becauſe without the efficacy of the Spirit, the word would profit nothing, but would remaine fruitleſſe. On the other ſide, wee muſt not ſeparate the one from the other, as ſome fantaſticall ſpirits dreame, who in reiecting the word, pretend the name of the Spirit, and are ready to burſt with a vaine confidence, which they haue conceiued in their fantaſticall imaginations: for wee muſt hold that for the ſpirit of Satan, which is ſeparated from the word of God; to which, the holy Spirit is euer more annexed. Now when he quickens the externall word, writing it in our hearts by the finger of his Spirit; then is our condition happy euen in the miſt of infinite miſeries. Neither doe I doubt but it was the expreſſe purpoſe of the Lord to ſay, that albei Goa means to deale graciously vnto his Church, yet ſhee muſt know that her liſe and ſaluati-

And thus the ancient people is diſcerned from the new: for as the Kingdom of Chriſt is ſpiritual; ſo from his reſurreſtion from the dead, the ſoules of the faithfull muſt aſcend vp on high with him.

Now hee promiſeth that the Church ſhall neuer be deprived of this ineffimble benefit, namely, of being governed by the holy Ghoſt, and ſuſtained by the heauenly doctrine: for it were to little purpoſe that the Goſpell ſhould be offered vs; and the holy Ghoſt gi-uen withall, vnlesse they should alwaies dwell and remaine with vs.

God speaks vnto vs but by the mouth of his seruants.

Why God rather speaks to vs by maō, then by himselfe.

When hee saith, in thy mouth, it is to shew, that the Lord so speaks vnto vs, that in the meane while hee meanes to vse the seruice and ministry of man. Hee might indeed if it pleased him, speake vnto vs from heauen, or send his Angels from thence: onely heerein he hath respect to our weaknesse. Why so? Because hee would call and exhort vs by our like; that by their voice he might draw vs vnto him the more familiarly. This order therefore was by him established in the Church: so as they who reiect his Ministers, brag in vaine of their obedience vnto God. His meaning is then, that we seeke the doctrine and word of life, in the mouthes of his Prophets, and in the teachers who preach in his name, and by his commandement.

My words shall not depart.] Some translate in the imperatiue; Let not my words depart: and so the future tence is often taken for this. But an exhortation or a commandement in this place agrees not, in regard the Prophet rather promiseth what God meanes to accomplish. I denie not but hence we may draw an exhortation: but the promise must goe before. Now the tenure of the promise is, that the Lord will so assist his Church, and haue such great care of her, that he will never suffer her to bee deprived of the doctrine of the word. When afflictions presse vs then to the quicke, and things succede not as wee would wish; let vs haue an eye to this sentence: for it is the word and Spirits, by which we must be raised vp and sustained; of which the Lord heere promiseth never to desist vnle vs.

THE LX. CHAPTER.

Verf. 1. Arise O Ierusalem; bee bright: for thy light is come, and the glorie of the Lord is risen vpon thee.

In Chap. 59. 21. hee spake of the word, now hee speaks of the efficacy of it.

In this place the Prophet shewes what the efficacy of this word is, whereof hee spake in the former Chapter. For he comforts the church in her low and afflicted estate, and restores her to her brightnesse. And in respect that he represents the person of God, he heere manifests his authoritie: and for that cause, vseth a commandement, that he might giue his speech the greater weight: as if by his absolute power, he placed the Church in that happy estate, which hee before promised her. The summe is, to assure the faithfull that the Prophet spake not as in the aire, but effectually.

Now he commands her to Arise, in regard that before he said, shee sate vpon the ground: which two words are opposites. In the 47. Chapter of this booke, hee said to Babylon: Come downe, and sit in the dust. And in Chap. 32. 18. hee said of the Iewes themselves; My people shall sit in the dust: and yet on the contrary, in Chap. 52. 1, 2. hee saith; Arise, Arise, O Zion, put on the garments of thy beautie: shake thy selfe from the dust. Now in this place againe hee raiseth vp the Church, as if hee tooke her by the hand, to the end shee might againe recouer her seate of honor, who now sate in the dust, wholly couered ouer with filth and dung.

Now that the poore Iewes might not by reason of the darknesse of their euils, be vtterly ouerwhelmed with despaire, hee telles them that the light which had been smothered for a time, should immediately breake forth againe. Heerein alluding to the ordinarie course of the day, succeding the night. As if he should say; The Lord hauing compassion vpon thee, will draw thee out of these obscure dungeons, in which thou hast so long bin held prisoner. I haue satisfied my selfe in correcting thee, it is time now therefore thou shouldst begin to take some ease. And therefore by the word To shine, vnder a figure hee meanes a recouery of health, and a flourishing estate: as hee retorefore by darknes, Chap. 58. 10. and 59. 9. he signified the calamitie of the Church.

But heere withall he admoniseth her, that this light shall arise vnto her from none but from the brightnesse of Gods countenance, at such time as he shall bee pleased to manifest some tokens of his fauour: for all things fall out to the best, when the Lord lightens vs with his brightnesse: but if he be against vs, we cannot possible meete with a greater misery nor infelicitee.

Verf. 2. For behold, darknesse shall cover the earth, and grosse darknesse the people: but the Lord shall arise vpon thee, and his glorie shall be seene vpon thee.

Now hee amplifies this grace which hee mentioned before by way of comparison, to the end wee might consider of the infinit loue which God beares to his elect; yea and how great the priuiledges are, which are giuen and granted vnto them by him. The summe is, that whilest the world is pressed, and in a manner ouerwhelmed with infinite miseries, God will haue care over his people to inrich them with sundry benefits. He shewes then that the light of grace and fauour, mentioned in the former verse, shall not be common to all, but particular to the people of God. Wee told you before that the word brightnesse, notes out the flourishing estate of the church; but yet wee must not iudge thereof by any outward appearance: for the Prophet flies an

An amplification of the grace mentioned in verf. 1.

higher pitch. Neither make I any doubt, but he here propounds vnto vs a spiritual brightnesse and light. Otherwise the phraie of speech which hee vseth in vers. 3. (namely, that the Gentiles should walke in this light) would not agree. And the coherence of the text of this chapter with the former, shewes it plainly. For in verse 21. of chap. 59. hee said, that the covenant was enclosed in the word and spirit: from the opposition then, it is easily gathered, that the felicitie promised to the Church in the beginning of this Chapter consists in somewhat else then in meate, and drinke, idleness and carnall securitie. Nay, let vs rather consider of the matter aright, and wee shall see, that since that time, all the Gentiles were not covered with a cloud of miseries, whilst the Iewes in the meane while enjoyed their ease. Seeing then the condition of the Church is separated from the state of the whole world; the benefit which Jsaiah possesseth the Church of in this place, is spirituall. As also this brightnesse which he promisseth, is spirituall. This therefore belongs to the spirituall kingdome of Christ, whereby the light of the Gospell enlightened all parts of the world. Yea, the strange nations were enlightened by it.

To this appertaines that which followeth, The Lord shall arise upon thee. For albeit hee shewed that Gods fauour should appeare by manifest signes and effects: yet he leaues not out that which was the principall: namely, that the faithfull should sensiblie perceiue that hee was their father, to the end they might wait for their saluation from him.

Doctrine 1.

Hence let vs gather, that we are ouerwhelmed with darkenesse, till such time as the Lord lighten vs with the testimonie of his free adoption. I speake of all mankind: for Jsaiah teacheth that this quickning light proceeds from God only: thereby to signifie that it is the especiall gift of his owne hand. Secondly, we are to note, that the Church only partakes of this brightnesse, y is the elect of God. Whence it followes, that it is no common or naturall gift: but such a one as with which the Lord supplies the common defect of mans nature. And hereby also wee perceiue that there was neuer any sparke of true light, but in the Church. For all men besides are enwrapped with darkenesse, albeit they thinke to be in the light, and that they haue a great splendor: neither can they be deliuered out of this darkenesse, but by the light of the Gospell. He addes the word glorie. For after the Lord hath once receiued vs into his fauour, he fo continues the same vnto vs, that his benefits doe daily more and more flow in vpon vs with greater increase.

No light out of the Church.

Vers. 3. And the Gentiles shall walke in thy light, and kings at the brightnesse of thy rising vp.

A confirmation in this and the verse following.

The Prophet now confirms that which we were saying, to wit, that men haue no light of their owne: but that whereby the Lord enlightens them through his word. All will confesse so much; but they doe not worthilie esteeme of this grace as they ought: they onely take it for some common thing which appertaines naturally to euerie man: but here it appeares that it is supernaturall. And therefore it must be distinguished from nature; as the repetition of these wordes, upon thee, sufficientlie shewes. First then let vs hold it for certaine, that this benefit proceeds onely from God: secondly, that all indifferentlie do not partake hereof, but the elect onely, whom the Lord enlightenes by his free grace, that he might exempt them out of the common rancke of other men.

Now this is done by Christ, who is called the sunne of righteousness: MaLa. 2. because we are enlightened by his beames. Moreover, the Prophet teacheth, that the grace which was communicated vnto the Iewes, shall bee spread far and wide. According as the words of the covenant often sound, in thy seede shall all the nations of the earth bee blessed: Gen. 22. 18. For the light which was proper onelie to a patticular nation, would bring no benefit at all to others. But for as much as the doctrine of the Gospell was to be spread into all parts of the world, Iudea bare this light; that from thence it might shine to the Gentiles, who saw not one sparke thereof before. For in that he makes this light proper to one people, he shewes that the world could not otherwise be enlightened nor attaine to the participation of this benefit, but in seeking this light in that word which came forth of Iudea, and was heard in Ierusalem; where the lampe of the Lord was kindled; and from whence the Sunne of righteousness cast his beames, that thence he might afterwards enlighten all the habitable corners and quarters of the earth. As in chap. 2. 3. wee haue seene, That the law went forth of Sion. There is no light then, but in the doctrine of the Prophets: so that whofouer they see that recoil backe from it, they falsely bragge of walking in this light.

By the brightnesse of thy rising vp, hee alludes to the breake of day. For as the morning star begins the day, by striking thorow the heauen onely, and forthwith the sunne shines ouer all the world: so the breake of day began first in Iudea; whence the light arose, and spread it selfe through out the whole world. For there is no corner of it, which the Lord hath not enlightened with this light.

He mentions kings, that we should not imagine this light belonged to the common people only, but to Princes and great Lords, who otherwise doe much please themselves in their dignities. Truly, the honour which he here attributes to the Church is exceeding great, seeing her brightnesse shall bee so glorious, that it shall draw vnto her, kings and nations. He calles it the Churches light, not because thee hath any light of her selfe; but in regard thee borrowes it from Christ, as the Moone takes her light from the Swane.

This light belongs as well to Kings as to common persons.

As the Moone draws her light from the sunne, so the Church borrowes her light from Christ.

Vers. 4. Lift up thine eies round about, and behold: all these are gathered Ggg and and come to thee: thy sonnes shall come from farre, and thy daughters shall be nourished at thy side.

be converted unto thee, and the riches of the Gentiles shall come unto thee.

BY many words he confirms this promise touching the restauration of the Church, which seemed a thing altogether incredible: and therefore was a matter hard to be bearen into the heads of the Iewes, in an estate wherein things were so perplexed and confused. For then none but the kingdome of Iudah stood: which daily decayed, till at last it fell flat to the ground. Afterwards, when the people were carried away captiue, all things grew so desperate in these horrible scatterings and wofull ruines, that as it seemed the Church was vtterly abolished. It was needfull therefore that this doctrine should be many waies confirmed, that mens minds, which of themselves are too much inclined by nature to distrust, might no longer remain intangled with doubtings. For this cause then he brings the Iewes as it were, to y thing done, notwithstanding it were yet farre off: to the end they might assure themselves no lesse of y accomplishment thereof, then if the thing were already effected before their eyes.

Now hee commands the faithfull to lift up their eyes on high, that is to say, aboue all humane thoughts: for whilst we remaine fixed to outward appearances, wee cannot saour the fruit of these promises. He ads round about, that they might certainlie know the people should not come from one nation alone, but from all parts, to be knit together into one bodie. Neither doth hee alone promise an end, and a remedie to the scattering which was to come, as in Psalm. 147. 2. and chap. 56. 8. that God would gather in the scattered of Israel: but this gathering should extend it selfe further off. For it signifies that there should be a wonderfull change in the world: so as those who before were strangers and diuided, should be gathered into one bodie. To conclude, the spreading of the Church to the ymost bounds of the earth is here noted out vnto vs. We must also supplie a close opposition here, which manifests that miserable and wofull estate wherinto all mankind is plunged till we be gathered in vnder the conduct of Christ.

Some, by sonnes allegorically vnderstand those who were strong and stedfast in faith: and by daughters, the weak. But I thinke the Prophet was not disposed to speake so acutely. I therefore take it simple thus, That sonnes and daughters shall in time to come, runne vnto the Church. That is to say, shall not onely be begotten within doores, but without also: yea, euen in the furthest parts of the world. For the wombe of the Church shall no more be shut vp in a corner of the earth, but shall spread it selfe as farre, and as wide, as the whole world hath any space.

Verf. 5. Thou shalt see and shine: thine heart shall be astonished, and enlarged, because the multitude of the sea shall

These things at the first blush seeme to haue some repugnancie in them; seeing in the former verse he spake in the present tence; and now in the time to come. But there hee spake of the eyes of faith, which apprehends that, that men cannot comprehend by nature: here, hee handles that which concerns the event of the thing it selfe. Or, rather, by speaking in the present tence before, he meant to signifie the truth and steadfastnesse of the promise: and now restraines the same sentence; to teach the faithfull to limit themselves within the bounds of patience. Besides, howfocuer the promises of God be for a time shadowed from mens sight: yet doe the faithfull cleerely behold them by faith; so as they wait for the vndoubted accomplishment thereof, though others will beleue nothing at all of them.

And shine.] Because the verb Nabar, signifies to shine, and to flow forth, it may be translated both waies. For we may referre it to that ioy which carrieth and causeth the Church to ouerflow, when shee growes and increaseth in this world: or, to that decking of her, which makes her to shine. But it seemes to agree but vntowardly with the text, that hee couples astonishment, with brightnes or ioy. Truly I doubt not but by this word hee vnderstands such an amazement as ariseth from an admiration and wonderment, with which the Church shall be rapt vp and carried away in seeing her selfe to rise to such an vnexpected honour, and to be exalted to so high a degree of glorie. As if he should say, The grearnesse of this worke shall be such, that it shall farre surmount thy hope. It is no astonishment then that is conceiued through some feare of danger or calamitie; but such as we see to happen in great wonders, which surpass the reach of our vnderstandings: when being astonished wee are for the time as in a dreame: Psalm. 136. 1. And this trembling suites very well with ioy.

Verf. 6. The multitude of Camels shall cover thee: and the Dromedaries of Midian, and of Epba: all they of Sheba shall come: they shall bring gold and incense, and shew forth the praises of the Lord.

7. All the sheepe of Kedar shall bee gathered vnto thee: the Rammes of Nebaioth shall serue thee: they shall come vp to bee accepted vpon mine Altar: and I will beautifie the house of my glorie.

Vnder borrowed speeches the Prophet describes the glorie of the Church, and applies his doctrine, both to the time and persons, with which he had to doe. For wee must keepe that in mind which we haue often said.

He that is truly conuerted vnto God, will dedicate all he hath to his ſeruiſe.

ſaid, namely; that the Prophets had reſpect to the people whom they taught. And for that cauſe, mentioned the things beſt known, and the ceremonies moſt in vſe; that vnder the figures thereof, they might note out Gods ſpiritual worſhip and ſeruiſe. For it was good reaſon the Iewes ſhould bee firſt inſtructed: and the Gentiles (in the ſecond place) to whom the truth of theſe things is come. As if hee ſhould ſay; The people of farre Countries ſhall come with their riches, in the power of God.

And where he ſaith, the Church ſhall be enriched, it is not to be referred to the perſons of men: but in regard of the vniõ which the head hath with the members, that which appertaines to God and Chriſt, is heere attributed to the Church. The Iewes deale abſurdly therefore, who vnder colour of this propheſie, by their inſatiable couetouſnes deuoure all the riches of the earth: neither doe the Papiſts leſſe fondly wreſt theſe words to the maintaining of their riches, and ſuperfluous pomps.

Now he mentions Camels, incenſe, gold, and ſheeps, as hauing regard to that wherewith euery region abounded in, thereby ſignifying, that all ſhould conſecrate vnto God whatſoever they inioyed; and ſhould offer themſelues and all their riches vnto him in ſacrifice. Whence we are to gather, that we can not truly be conuerted vnto the Lord, vnleſſe we offer vp vnto him all that euer we haue: for theſe are thoſe ſpiritual oblations which he requires, 1. Pet. 2. 5. Rom. 12. 1. which we can not poſſible denie him, if our hearts be truly dedicated and conſecrated vnto him. The wicked abuſe the gifts of God to exceſſe and wantonnes, and as much as in them is corrupt them by an execrable prophanenes, but the faithfull who vſe them with good conſcience, conſecrate them vnto the Lord. None can rightly ſay hee is the Lords then, vnleſſe he therewithall dedicates and conſecrates vnto the Lord himſelfe and all that he hath.

As touching the regions here mentioned by the Prophet, it is not needfull for vs to diſcuſſe in what place euery one of them is ſituated. Notwithſtanding by the way we note, that he ſpeakes of ſuch as lay Eaſtward, and chiefly Arabia, and the places neere adioining, which he ſignifies by Kedar, and Nebaioth. The Papiſts haue alſo abuſed this place, to proue that Kings came from the Eaſt to offer gifts vnto Chriſt: wherein they ſhew themſelues too ridiculous, ſeing the Prophet ſpeakes of all ſorts of people. But they ſnatch vp without iudgement all ſuch like places wherein mention is made of gold, or incenſe, as if the Prophets meant to ſpeake of the gifts which the wiſe men offered, Math. 2. 11. There is nothing obſcure in this place then: for the Prophets meaning is, that God ſhall in time to come be called vpon in euery place, and all ſtrangers ſhall be gathered vnto him to yeeld him obedience.

As touching the words, they ſhall come vp; ſome tranſlate, They ſhall come vp vpon mine altar in good pleaſure. And this ſeemes to me not vnapt; as if the Prophet meant to ſay, that the offerings of the Gentiles ſhould be acceptable vnto God. Others expound, They ſhall come vp acceptable: which ſutes not with the proprietic of this tongue. For Raſon ſignifies good pleaſure, good will, or fauor: and therefore I thinke it ſhould be read as I haue tranſlated it, namely, that the oblations ſhould come vp in good pleaſure vpon the altar; ſo as the words may thus be reſolued, They ſhall come vp, to appeaſe God: for the altar was ordained, and the ſacrifices offered, to the end God might be mercifull and fauorable vnto men, who according to his promiſe, accepts the ſacrifice offered vpon his altar: for then the Altar was the meane to obtaine Gods fauor.

The Prophet then expreſſeth three things here diſtinctly. For firſt when he ſaith, that the ſacrifices went vp, he alludes to the ceremony which in old time they vſed in the ſacrifices, for they liſed vp their offerings: Exod. 29. 24. Leuit. 8. 29. to ſignifie, that they were to liſt vp their minds, that ſo they might not be glued to the earth; or only, to fixe their eyes vpon that which was offered. Secondly, that theſe ſacrifices were acceptable vnto God, that ſo they might be diſtinguiſhed from the ſacrifices of the Gentiles, which were offered without faith. Thirdly, vpon the Altar, which only ſanctified the oblations: for whatſoever was offered vpon any thing elſe was polluted and abominable. Moreouer, this figure ought to leade vs vnto the truth of it: for Chriſt is Gods altar, as we haue ſene in Chap. 56. 7. and vpon him muſt we offer our ſacrifices, if we would haue them well-pleaſing vnto God.

Befides, vnder the beautie of the Temple he ſignifies the reſtauration of the people; in regard the principall part of their felicitie conſiſted in hauing the Temple wherein God was purely worſhipped to ſtand in perfect beautie. And there muſt wee begin, namely, to haue God reigne amongſt vs, if we would be truly happie, for which cauſe the Lord minding to ſhew that his Church ſhall be reſtored, mentions the Temple, vpon which he will put his glorie. As if he ſhould ſay, My houſe is now expoſed to the mocks of the Gentiles, but in the end I will put my glorie againe vpon it, & whereof it is now deprived. Now out of Zacharie, Haggai, and Malachi it appears, that this was not accompliſhed preſentlie after their returne out of captiuitie: for we muſt not thinke that there was that true dignitie in this ſumptuous building, wherby Herod would cunningly haue inſinuated himſelfe into the fauor of the Iewes. The dignitie or glorie here mentioned therefore appeared not till God opened the dore of heauen to Ieruſalem, and afterwards maniſteſted the hope of eternall ſaluation to all the Iewes.

Verſ. 8. Who are theſe that flee like a cloude, and as the dones to their Windes?

BECAUSE the Prophet could not content himſelfe with mentioning this benefit of God, being rapt into an admiration, he cries out, Who are these? Which maner of speech hath much more vehemence in it, then if he had simply affirmed, that a great number did flee; yea, though he had vfed the same similitudes. He meant then more fully to expresse how glorious this multiplying should be, seeing he could find no fit words to set forth the same withall.

Which flee as a cloud.] Some thinke that by this the Apostles are meant, who with an incredible swiftnesse, ranne to the vtmost parts of the world. I grant this exposition hath some colour: but the Prophet speaks of the assembling of the whole Church, namely, that the nations should runne vnto it from all parts, with great nimbleness and alacritie.

The similitude of doves, which hee vseth, is very apt for this purpose. For when these birds be in the fields, they seeme to be of the number of other wild birds; yet they belong to an house, and haue their louers, vnto which they retire, and in which they make their nests. So in like manner, the faithfull begin to know their gathering together, being illuminated by faith; that so they may withdraw themselues out of that horrible scattering in which they are. Whosoeuer shall consider the miserable and wofull state of those times, shall easilie perceiue how necessarie this aduertisement was. For if the Prophets, who without ceasing, had so many yeeres instructed the Iewes, reaped little or no profit thereby; what was to be expected from the Gentiles, who were wholly estranged from God? Yet the Prophet hath not spoken excessiuely: but hee so admires the thing, that he also drawes vs therewithall into admiration with him.

Verf. 9. Surely the Isles shall wait for me, and the shippes of Tarshish as at the beginning, that they may bring thy sennes from sarre, and their siluer and gold with them, vnto the name of the Lord thy God, because he hath glorified thee.

HAuing magnified the excellent benefit of this restauration, with all the praises he could possibly deuise, hee brings in God himselfe speaking, that his speech might haue the greater authoritie. Some take To vvaite heere, To desire: as if he should say; Let this be done, because the strange nations are as men ashamed, longing after him, by feeling themselues destituted of life and saluation. Others take it simply, To hope: but the word also sometimes signifies, To obserue. And in this sense Dauid takes it, in Psal. 56, saying, The wicked waited for my soule: that is to say, they spread snares for my life. And in this signification wee may take it heere. They shall wait: that is to say, they shall obserue my countenance, as seruants are wont to depend vpon the will of their Masters: as if he should say; Marvell not if so many nations runne after the Church, for the Isles which despise and refuse me now, shall be so attentive to my voice, that they shall doe whatsoeuer I command them. And questionlesse it appears by the rest of this verse, that such a kind of obedience is heere mentioned.

The shippes of Tarshish.] If any will, they may heere supply the particule of similitude thus; As the shippes of Tarshish once sailed vnto Iudea, and brought that which was necessarie for the building of the Temple, and for mens vse: so it shall come to passe, that they shall saile thither againe, and this interrupted navigation shall recouer the first course.

By Tarshish, that is, Cilicia, which was opposite to Iudea; vnder the figure Synechoche, he vnderstands all voyages and traffikes, which they made by sea with strange nations. Wee may also take it without figure thus; The shippes of Tarshish which were wont malaparty to scorne my Church, shall subiect themselues to my authoritie, and thereunto shall bring children from a far Country.

Their gold is vwith them.] He againe repeats his former speech, to wit, that the Gentiles shall so yeeld their obedience vnto God, that they shall offer to him both themselues and all theirs. The Popish Doctors doe heere againe (as I touched in verf. 6.) shew their extreme impudencie, when they abuse these and the like places, to vphold those tyrannous and Persian-like pompes, whereby that Antichrist of Rome, and his supposts, glister and will be wondered at. And albeit they ouerflow in costly raiment, being couered from top to toe with gold and pearles: in a word, though they appaile themselues like a strumpet; yet are they not ashamed to make the holy Ghost the author of all these abominations. For when the Prophets doe but mention gold or siluer, straightway they apply the same to their dissolutions. Truly in this behalfe they resemble the Iewes, who leape for ioy as oft as the Prophets mention gold or siluer; hoping to wallow themselues therein, when the Messiah shall come. So the Papists thinke on nothing else but vpon gold and siluer, with which vaine appearance, their mindes are so bewitched, that they cannot aspire to heauen: but this blockishnesse hath no need of any refutation. The summe is, that God will exalt his Church vnto an high and soveraigne degree of honour, and decke her vwith ornaments befitting her. But to the end the faithfull might not doubt that any impediments should hinder them to receiue so glorious a promise: or lest they should attribute ought to their merits, God himselfe promisseth to be the author of this thing. Moreouer, Isaiah now ascribes the riches of the Gentiles, whom heretofore he had abandoned from the Church, to bee an holy offering vnto God, and as spoiles and recompences of her victory. And thus hee more cleerely expresth that which I haue said, namely, that wee ought to desire nothing so much, as to see the whole world subdued vnder Gods dominion.

gives them matter of good hope, becauſe he will not puniſh them with rigor according to their demerits; but will content himſelfe that they have been humbled under temporary chaſtiſements. And yet therewithal he informeth them touching the cauſe of ſuch a change: leſt they ſhould judge thereof according to their ſenſe. For when kingdomes are changed, and ſometimes on a ſudden exalted; and forthwith fall backe into ruine: we thinke ſuch things fall out by chance, and that it is but the courſe of the world. The Jewes might thinke the ſame, when after the ruine of the Chaldean Monarchy, they were ſet at liberty. And therefore the Lord proteſts that all theſe things were guided by his Providence; that they blind nor be partners with infidels in their blindneſſe; It is as much then as if he had ſaid; If thou aſkeſt wherefore thou haſt endured ſo manie miſeries: truly, becauſe I was angrie with thee, and tooke vengeance of thy offences. But if thou wouldſt know the reaſon of thy deliuerance, it hath proceeded from my meere good will; not for thy merits: or a iumbling together of ſecondarie cauſes; Calamities then fall not out by chance. Neither is the Lord angrie without cauſe. Neither yet is he euer ſo angrie but he leaues way for his mercie.

The ſime argument protecuted, and in the next verſe expounded.

HE protecutes the ſame argument. And has hee ſaid heretofore that ſtrangers ſhould ſubaiſe themſelves vnder Gods authoritie to reedifie the Temple: ſo now hee ſaith that the ſtrangers ſhall beſtow their labour in building up the walles. The comparifons whereby he promiſeth the Churches reſtauration are diuers. For it is a thing vſuall in the Scriptures, where the Church is ſpoken of, ſometimes to ſet it forth vnder the Temple, and then againe, vnder Ieruſalem. Now hee promiſeth that the ſtrangers ſhall helpe to ſet vp this building; leſt the Jewes ſhould faint, being aſſiſted at their pouvertie, or ſmal number. For in the captiuitie they might bee ſolicited to diſtruſt, thinking that albeit they ſhould returne into their countrie, yet there was no likelihood that euer they ſhould perfect ſuch a worke. But Cyrus did this, who furniſhed them with great ſums of gold and ſilver. And yet theſe things were but figuratiue in him; for they had their full accompliſhment in Chriſt, to whoſe kingdome all that which is here ſpoken muſt bee referred. For firſt of all he vſed the ſeruiſe of a few weakie men, to wit, the Apoſtles, who were diſturbied of ſit meanes for ſo long a buſineſſe; afterwards therefore hee raiſed vp ſtrangers, out of whom hee choſe Paſtors, and made their Princes to be nurſing fathers to the Church.

Papiſts malepert in giuing their Pope ſoueraignie ouer Kings. Papiſts ſhameleſſe liers in calling their Pope Chriſts Vicar. Kings ſo ſuon it themſelves to the Church that they hold in their kinglie authoritie ſtill.

The Papiſts too malepertly do ouerthrow and corrupt this place, when they weſt it to eſtabliſh the tyrannie of their Pope; to who they giue ſoueraignie dominion our Kings and Princes: And herein they ſhew themſelves impudent liers (againſt the truth) in calling him Chriſts Vicar: ſeeing the kingdome of Chriſt is not of this world. Ioh. 18. 36. And yet this companion on the contrary domeineeres in pride and cruelty; and takes vpon him to change kingdomes. Now Kings ſo ſubmit themſelves vnto Chriſt, that yet they ceaſe not to be kings ſtill. Onely they are to imploy their power for the maintenance of Gods ſeruiſe; and to gouerne their ſubiects with equitie. Whence wee ſee how ſarre off they are from Chriſts kingdome, who would rent from Kings their power and authoritie, to make themſelves Lords ouer them.

Anabaptiſts would haue no Kings.

From this place wee may alſo refute the Anabaptiſts, who ſo ouerturne politike gouernment, that Kings can no otherwiſe bee Chriſtians, then in renouncing (ſay theſe bedlems) their authoritie. But wee ſee here that God will haue himſelfe honoured of the Kingly order.

Moreouer that none might obieſt, that it had been an eaſier matter to haue maintained the Church in her firſt eſtate, then now to plucke her out of hell: God prevents this alſo, and ſhewes that the Jewes were juſtly thus afflicted, in regard they had too much provoked him by their iniquities. But hee

Verſ. 11. Therefore thy gates ſhall be open continually: neither day nor night ſhall they be ſhut, that men may bring vnto thee the riches of the Gentiles, and that their kings may be brought.

* Or, and their Kings led.

THIS verſe is ill expounded of the moſt Interpreters. For they thinke the Prophet meant to ſay, that the Church ſhall be in ſafe-rie vnder the fidelitie and protection of God. Why ſo? Becauſe open doores, ſhew that danger is farre off. But me thinke the Prophet expounds himſelfe: namely, that the gates ſhall be open, that riches may be brought into the citie from all parts. And in as much as they are wont to beare their burthens by day: the day, ſaith he, ſhall not ſuffice in regard of the continual reſurt of ſuch as ſhall bring precious treasures thither. Wherefore carriages ſhall not ceaſe, in ſo much that the gates muſt be kept open day and night.

Where he ſaith, the Church ſhall haue the riches of the Gentiles, it is not to be referred to temporall commodities, but to the obedience which all the world ſhall yeeld vnto God in his Church: to which he giues that which is offered vnto him, in regard he hath nothing which is not hers.

What is meant by the riches of the Gentiles.

And their kings led.] I had rather retaine the participle which the Prophet vſeth, then to follow them who change it into a verbe: for they ouerthrow his meaning; in regard that he expreſſely addeth this, becauſe the pride of kings is ſuch, that they will not willingly ſuffer themſelves to bee led. Nay, on the contrarie, ſtanding too much vpon their owne power, they wax intemperate; and in ſtead of being led whither they ought; they

Kings naturally unwilling to ſubmit their neckes to Gods yokes carrie away with them al others as with a violent flood. He shewes then that notwithstanding their naturall and vntamed rebellion, they shall submit themselues to God and his Church.

Verf. 12. For the nation and the kingdom that will not serue thee shall perish: and those nations shall bee utterly destroyed.

A confirmation of the former doctrine.

THE Prophet stands much vpon the confirmation of the hearts of Gods children, to assure them that they should behold the restoration of the Church one day, as hee hath now described it out vnto them. These things were altogether incredible: and howsoever we our selues are sufficiently confirmed by the euents of these things which are manifested in all mens sight; yet if wee were not governed by the spirit of Christ, hardly should wee conceiue them in our mindes. He shewes then that there is no cause at all wherefore the Iewes should doubt of the restoration of the Temple; because the Gentiles should come to aide them with all their power. But Isaiah regarded something more high in this place, then the building of the visible Temple. For his meaning is to speake of that obedience which Kings, Nobles, and the commons should yeelde vnto the Church, when they should aduance as much as in them lay, the putitie of doctrine. Yea, hee passeth yet further in pronouncing that the kingdomes and nations which will not serue the Church, shall perish. If such as helpe not the Church, are condemned with this fearefull and terrible sentence; what shall we say of those tyrants who set themselues furiously against her, and labour with might and maine to worke her ouerthrow? If the slothfull and carelesse shall not escape vnpunished, ought not the wicked to wait for some horrible vengeance, seeing they strue to hinder and ouerthrow the worke of the Lord?

If such as serue not the Church shall perish, how shall they escape that persecute her?

He repeats that now in the plural number, which he said before in the singular; to shew, chat if the whole world were guiltie, yet they should wholly perish. For the multitude cannot free those from perishing, that estrange themselues from God: neither shall the wicked be excused, if they hinder one another from comming to saluation; or if they encourage one another to commit iniquitie. Now it is said (as we haue seene before) that Kings and nations serue the Church, not in regard that thee exerciseth any dominion of her selfe, but because God hath giuen and committed the scepter of his word, by which hee rules, vnto her custodie.

And those nations, &c.

Verf. 13. The glory of Lebanon shall come vnto thee, the firre tree, the elm and the box tree together to beautifie the place of my sanctuarie: for I will glorifie the place of my feete.

Isaiah vseth yet another similitude, which hee brought in when hee compared the Church to a building or Citie. For he recites such things as are necessarie to build withall, to wit, the firre tree, the pine tree, and the box tree; all which grew in Lebanon, a Forrest that abounded with goodly and excellent trees. His meaning is then, that whatsoever was faire and exquisite in this Forrest, should be brought vnto the Church. But we must refer the truth of these figures to Gods spirituall worship; for he adorns his Church with the title of the sanctuarie, because himselfe dwells in the midst thereof: notwithstanding hee hath alwaies respect to the Temple, and to the customes of those times. He sets before vs then a patterne of the Temple that stood in Ierusalem; that vnder the image thereof we might consider of the spirituall Temple, whereof wee are the matter and the liuing stones: Eph. 2. 21. 1. Pet. 2. 5.

By the place of his feete, he signifies that hee so dwelles in the Temple; that yet his Maiestie is not inclosed therein, for he is not contained within so narrow limits. There is nothing but his feete then, that is to say, his lowest and meanest part: there by teaching vs, to aspire vp vnto heauen, and not to rest fixed in these external signes, which instruct vs according to our slender capacite. According to which, it is said in Psal. 99. 5. Worship the footstool of his feete, for he is holy. Also, We will enter into his Tabernacle, and worship before his footstool: Psal. 132. 7. Not that Gods essence is diuided into pieces, part in heauen, and part in earth; but in regard that by such helpes, hee raiseth vp his seruant as it were from his feete to his head.

Gods essence not parted into pieces.

Verf. 14. The sonnes also of them that afflicted thee, shall come and bow vnto thee; and all they that despised thee, shall fall downe at the soles of thy feete, and they shall call thee, The Citie of the Lord, Zion of the holy one of Israel.

HE prosecutes the same argument still. For he shewes how wonderful this worke of redemption shall be, when those that persecuted or despised the Church, shall come to prostitute themselues humbly before her feete, and with their whole hearts shall submit themselues to her seruice. By the children of those that afflicted her, hee meanes the tyrants and persecuters which vexed her. Now this was partly accomplished when the Iewes returned into their country. But this returne was but an obscure shadow of that deliuerance which wee haue obtained by Christ. Thus these things then were truly accomplished vnder Christs kingdom; yet so, that we must wait for the perfect consummation thereof, till his second comming: as in another place before we haue noted.

The same argument still prosecuted.

But, will some say, is not this honor whereof the Prophet speaks, too excessive, and greater then of right belongs to the Church? For to bow, and fall downe vpon the ground, are such signes of honour, which no mortall man ought to accept of, I anſwer, that this honor is not made to the members, but to the head, which is Chriſt, who is worſhipped in the Church; and thoſe who hated and perſecuted him before, come now to do him this reverence. Now we ſay that Chriſt is adored in the Church, not according to the Popiſh opinion, who thinke they indeed worſhip Chriſt whilſt they kneele before that Romane Idoll to kiſſe his pantable. Thoſe, in favor of whom this is affirmed, hate and reiect ſuch a doctrine. They only honor Chriſt then who obey his voice; as alſo the Prophet ſaith, that the ſtrangers which were out of the Church ſhould willingly ſubmit themſelves to yeeld obedience vnto Chriſt, whoſe Maieſtie ſhines in the doctrine which himſelfe adminiſters by the ſeruiſe of men.

The Romane Idoll.

And ſhall call thee, &c.] The Church was adorned with this title heretofore, but it was in a maner defaced when the Citie was deſtroyed, the Temple rased, and the people led away captiue. Ieruſalem was no more the ſame, neither was there ought to be ſeene in her but an horrible waſt, and yet he promiſeth that ſhe ſhall be ſo reſtored, that all ſhall acknowledge her for the Citie of the Lord. Afterwards he ſpeakes of the Temple, to ſignific vnto vs that this dignitie is attributed to Ieruſalem in regard of the Temple: that is to ſay, for the ſeruiſe of Gods ſake which was there eſtabliſhed.

Verſ. 15. Whereas thou haſt bin forſaken and hated, ſo that no man went by thee, I will make thee an eternall glorie, and a ioy from generation to generation.

The Prophet had an eie to y^e middle time which alreadie approached: for a little after his death the people were driuen out of their heritage, and led away captiue, ſo as all thought that the Iewes had bin for euer rooted out. That this thought then might not ariſe in the minds of the faithfull, whereby they were in danger to fall into deſpaire and ſay, We are vndone; there is no way left how to remedie theſe ſo extreame miſeries: neither are we euer to expect a better condition; he, on the contrarie ſhewes, that theſe ſore calamities can not let God to reſtore them againe. For howſoever for a time they were after a ſort forſaken when the Lord thus corrected them, yet was it no matter for him to ſet them in a more happie and better eſtate then the former.

Obiect.

If any obiect, that this magnificence of the Church was of no long continuance: the anſwere is ſoone made. For howſoever the people were diuerſlie afflicted after their returne home, and that the Chriſtian Church alſo did not long hold her excellencie, yet is all that which the Prophet foretold accomplished: for Chriſtes glorie ſhines forth from vnder the croſſe, ſo as Gods name remains, and a people alſo that calles vpon his name by faith.

fruit of theſe promiſes, becauſe we breake off the courſe of Gods working by our infidelitie; and by our owne ſtowardnes wee loſe the profit which wee might reape from the ſame. To conclude, we are alwaies to remember that which I haue ſo often told you, namely, That the Prophet ſpeakes not of yeeres heere, or of a few daies; but comprehends the whole courſe of our redemption from the end of the captiuitie vntill the publiſhing of the Goſpell, and ſo ſucceſſiue, till he ſhall giue vp the kingdome to God his Father.

Verſ. 16. Thou ſhalt alſo ſuck the milke of the Gentiles, and ſhalt ſuck the breaſts of the Kings: and thou ſhalt know that I the Lord am thy ſauour and thy redeemer: the mightie one of Iacob.

HE ſpeakes of the ſpreading forth of the Church. But it was neceſſarie that one and the ſame thing ſhould be often repeated, in regard it ſeemed incredible that the Church of God being now brought to ſo low an ebbe, ſhould euer be raiſed, or ſpread ouer the whole world: for her condition was lamentable, but in the end ſhe was rebuilt againe, to the aſtoniſhment of all, and that by a ſmall remnant, as a brand recouered out of the fire; and the ſeed thereof was ſcattered farre and wide thorow all the quarters of the world. And therefore it is as much as if he had ſaid, Though thou beſt now incloſed within ſtrait and very narrow bounds, and haſt nothing in common with the Gentiles, yet ſo it is that thou ſhalt receiue from them much fruites in abundance.

By milke, and breasts, he meanes nothing elſe but that ſeruiſe and obedience which the Gentiles ſhould render to the Church to nourish her offspring. For hauing ſaid before, that of an handfull ſhould proceed an infinite number of children: now he provides milke to ſuckle them with, vntill they be come of ſufficient age. And he expreſly ſpeakes of Kings, in regard it was the harder to be beleued. And thus Kings by the way are admoniſhed of their duties, who if they will diſcharge the ſame as they ought, then muſt they be ſeruaunts of the Church, otherwiſe the Lord will call them to account for it, and we know what Dauid pronounceth in the ſecond Palme, verſe ro. 11.

Kings admoniſhed of their duties.

But wee muſt note after what maner the Church ſhall ſuck the milke and the breasts of the Gentiles. For the ſe is not permitted wholly to draw in vnto her ſelfe all the abilities and riches of the world, but only thereby to preferre her owne eſtate in ſafetie. For can any thing in the world be more contrarie to the nature of the Church, then to be an inſatiable gulph, ſwallowing vp into her belly whatſoever ſhe may come by? Theſe things therefore muſt be referred to the ſpiritual eſtate of the Church, namely, that by meanes hereof, God may be purely worſhipped in her, that the miniſtrie of the word may flouriſh and be advanced there; and that the may thereby retainē some discipline which may serue as a bridle to curbe euery one. And yet herewithall, that the faithfull must remember, it is a more blessed thing to giue then to take: Act. 20. 35, that thus they may be instructed to beare pouertie patiently, to the end they may enrich others with their spirituall riches.

Lastly he addes, that that which for a time was hidden shall be discouered: namely, the Iewes should know, that they were not elected in vaine, in regard they should feele by experience that God was careful of their saluation. But some may aske if they knew not this before they were led captiue. I answer, this banishment resembled a thicke and grosse darknesse; which comparison also our Prophet vsed in the beginning of this chapter. Seeing then that vnder this grieuous seruitude, they could behold neither the power nor glorie of God, he now drew them into the open light. Not that faith failes in afflictions: but because the feeling thereof is one thing, and experience another. Whilest we seeme forlorne, then faith soares vp aloft farre about the present miserie, and those thicke mists with which we be enwrapped. And if God be pleased to restore vs to our perfect estate, then wee perceiue the thing, not by the eyes of faith but by experience it selfe: loe here that manifest knowledge whereof hee speaks. As if he should say, after I shall haue dealt liberally with you, you shall then see by the effects that I am your redeemer.

He doth of set purpose vse the title of the mightie one of Jacob: in regard he had formerly often shewed himself to be such an one towards them. And that not onely Jacob himselfe had many waies felt Gods power by experience, but that his successors also had prooued that it was in him in whom they were to seeke assured helpe. Thus then hee calles him mightie, to the end they might acknowledge that God would be the same for euer towards them, which in times past hee had been to their fathers.

Verf. 17. For brasse I will bring gold, and for iron will I bring siluer, and for wood brasse, and for stones iron. I will also make thy gouernment peace, and thine exactors righteousness.

The excellē-cie of Christs spirituall Temple described.

THE Prophet alludes to the building of the old and ancient Temple, and compares it with the spirituall and heauenly. As if hee should say, When you shall bee carried away captiue, then you will bewaile the ruine of the Temple: but I will so worke, that you shall build it after a more excellent manner. In stead of brasse then, I will bring gold, and in stead of iron, siluer; for wood, brasse, and for stones, iron. As if he had said, All shall bee full of magnificence and glorie in that second Temple which shall succeed the first. Now we know that this prophesie was neuer accomplished in the externall restoration of this people. Nay, it is certaine that the beautie of the second Temple was farre inferior to the first: Ezra. 3. 12. 13. It follows then, that the Prophet who in spirit, saw the true redemption, recites not only that which should fall out presently after the returne of the people; but publisheth the excellencie of the spirituall Temple, which is the Church of Christ: we must therefore come by a direct line, as it were vnto Christ, if wee will attaine the true meaning of this prophesie. In his kingdom these things were fully accomplished, and the dignity of the first Temple was much surpassed: For the Lord shed abroad the gifts of his holic spirit, which farre excelled either gold, siluer, or precious stones. Wee may now then see the Temple built of precious stones, as it was in Chapter 54. 11. 12.

As concerning the word superintendance, others translate tribute. Neither do I doubt but the Prophet meant closelie to compare y^e miserable seruitude, vnder which the people should be held, with that excellent dignitie, to which they were afterwards aduanced. For to peace and justice, he opposeth the exactors, who vniustly tyrannised ouer them, whilest the Iewes were vexed with the countenance and crueltie of the Babylonians. Now he shewes that the exactors being cut off, there shall be no other superintendance then peace and justice. This was more fullie accomplished, when we were deliuered from the tyrannie of the diuell by Christ. For by his Gospell he erected a kingdom of righteousness, which is not yet finished. But wee are to wait for his last coming to see the perfection thereof: and yet in the meane while to content our selues with these first fruits.

Verf. 18. Violence shall no more be heard of in thy land, neither desolation, nor destruction within thy borders: but thou shalt call saluation thy walles, and praise thy gates.

HE here more largely expresseth that which we haue said: namely, that in describing the happie estate of the Church, hee priuile opposeth the miseries and calamities wherewith shee had been diuerslie afflicted, thereunto. For which cause hee protesteth that in time to come shee should no more be vexed by them. I grant notwithstanding that many euils befell them after their deliuerance. What of that? Yet the people were neuer so vitally wasted, but some forme of a Church still remained; and by means here-of they enjoyed peace, feeling by experience that God kept and defended them by his power. Wee must not take it then as if the Prophet in these words promised them to be exempt from all trouble and encumbrance. But this consolation was added by way of comparison, in regard of the miseries to come: to wit, that the Lord will spare his Church; which shall be in fastie vnder his protection.

protection. And queſtionleſſe in the courſe of their delinuerance, they evidently perceiued ſome teſtimonies of this peace which the Prophet doth here ſo highly extoll. To bee ſhort, we muſt alwaies remember that which we haue ſo oft repeated; namely, that wee feele all theſe things in part onely; becauſe the kingdome of Chriſt is not yet accompliſhed.

And thy gates.] He alludes to the building of the Temple, or of the Church, as we haue ſaid elſewhere: and ſhewes that her ſafetie ſhall not conſiſt in towers, walles, or other encloſures; and that howſoeuer humane helps ſhould faile her, yet ſhould ſhee haue ſufficient ſafetie and quiet contentment in God alone. But to the ſaluation of the Church he ioyneth praiſe, or ioy: for being now in perfect ſafetie ſhee ſhould reioyce: whereas before during her oppreſſion, ſhe lay trodden vnder foote in an hopeleſſe ſilence.

Verſ. 19. Thou ſhalt haue no more Sunne to ſhine by day, neither ſhall the brightneſſe of the Moone ſhine vpon thee: for the Lord ſhall bee thine euerlaſting light, and thy God, thy glorie.

20. Thy Sunne ſhall neuer goe downe, neither ſhall thy Moone bee hid: for the Lord ſhall be thine euerlaſting light, and the daues of thy ſorrow ſhall bee ended.

HEE teacheth that the Churches felicitie ſhall not be temporarie, but eternall. For he ſeparates her from the common condition of men, among whom, nothing is ſtable nor permanent. Why ſo? Becauſe whatſoeuer is vnder the Sunne, be it neuer ſo well eſtabliſhed, yet is it ſubiect to diuers mutations and changes. But the ſtate of the Church muſt not be meaſured according to the dangers of this preſent life, in regard ſhee is preferred euen in the midſt of greateſt ſtormes. As if he ſhould ſay; Iudge not of thy ſaluation by outward appearances; but bee thou ſure that God holds that ſafely in his hand. The Lord will bee thy Sunne; ſo as thou ſhalt haue no more need of the light, neither of Sunne nor Moone. Feare not any change then, or conſuſion of things; for thou ſhalt inioy a perpetuall and an immouable light. And yet we muſt not take it as if the Prophet meant hereby to affirme that Gods children ſhould be deprived of the commodities of this preſent life. For ſeeing the Lord hath beſtowed them on all men indifferently, then hath hee much more ordained them for his ſeruants; for whoſe ſakes, euen all things were created of God, in regard he hath a ſpeciall care ouer them. But the Prophet meant yet to ſignifie ſomething more excellent, which the children of God onely doe inioy, namely, that heauenly light. This the wicked cannot apprehend, and therefore they deadly hate it. For howſoeuer they haue the light of the Sunne, and other like benefits; yet cannot

The Churches felicitie not temporall, but eternall.

Though the felicitie of Gods choſen conſiſts in eternall good things, yet are they not therefore to be deprived of the vſe of temporall things.

their felicitie bee firme nor ſtable, becauſe they are without feeling, which hinders them from taſting the principall good thing, to wit, that God is their Father. Our Prophet therefore diſtinguiſheth the condition of the Church, and of the faithfull therein, from the common eſtate of men in the world: to teach vs not to meaſure it according to the changes and alterations of inferior things: as alſo to informe vs, that in the midſt of the moſt palpable and groſſe darkneſſe, God vſeth to let the light of his fatherly countenance ſhine vpon his children, to cauſe them to reioyce. Though all the elements then ſhould ceaſe to doe their office, or ſhould threaten vs with an heauiſe looke, let it ſuffice vs notwithstanding that God fauours vs.

By the name of Sunne and Moone, vnder a part hee comprehends the ſtate of the whole world, which is often times changed.

Verſ. 21. Thy people alſo ſhall be all righteous: they ſhall poſſeſſe the land for ever: the graſſe of my planting ſhall be the worke of mine hands, that I may bee glorified.

*Or, peoples.

THE Prophet ſhewes heere, wherein the true eſtabliſhment of the Church conſiſts: truly when ſhee is ſeparated from the godleſſe, and that the faithfull onely haue place in her. But we know that hypocrites are alwaies mingled amongſt the true children of God in the Church. We haue alſo told you that the kingdome of Chriſt is heere deciphered out; not ſuch a one as it ſhall be in euery particular moment of time, but in its perfection. Chriſt at his firſt coming, began to accompliſh that which is heere ſaid, when he purged his Church in which regard, he calles his Goſpell a ſaw; becauſe by it the chaffe is ſeparated from the wheat: Mat. 3. 12. And he continues ſtill euery day to purge it, and will hold on that courſe euen to the day of harueſt. In the meane while, there muſt be much reſuſe mingled amongſt the good graine, which in that day ſhall at laſt bee vtterly purged and clenſed out.

The Churches is then truly eſtabliſhed, when ſhe is ſeparate fro the godleſſe, and that the faithfull alone haue place in her.

Moreouer, heere is a cloſe oppoſition betwene that prophane and wicked troope, who by their filthineſſe doe pollute the ſanctuarie of the Lord. Further alſo he ſeemes to mention the vocation of the Gentiles, when in the plural number he ſaith, that all peoples ſhall be righteous.

Where hee addes, that they ſhall inherit the land for ever, I doubt not but he had reſpect vnto Iuda, and cloſely oppoſed the time of the reſtauration, to that of the captiuitie, which was at hand. As if he ſhould ſay; Albeit I doe baniſh my people out of their inheritance, yet after ſeuenteie yeeres, I will bring them backe againe to poſſeſſe it for ever. It is alſo to be noted; that he reſtraines this promiſe which appertained to all the people of Zion, to the righteous. For thus there is a kind of correction, whereby he ſhuts out all hypocrites, who are wont vainly to vſurp & snatch

vnto them those titles, which onely belong to the true children of God. This sentence then agrees with the beginning of the 73. Psalm; Yet God is good to Israel, euen to the pure in heart. For here the Prophet attributes the name of Israel, which all bragged of, to the true seruants of God onely. And so in this place we may say as much of the word peoples, to wit, that little remnant which shall be purged from their vncleanness. This was not wholly accomplished among the Iewes: they had the beginnings of it indeed, when they were restored home vnto their Country againe; that so afterwards by their meanes, the possession of the whole world might be given vnto Gods children. And as he spake heretofore of the restauration of the Temple, which was not perfect in Ierusalem, but should bee extended thorow all the quarters of the world; so this possession of the Land must not bee restrained to Iudea alone, seeing it stretcheth it selfe further off, in regard all men are called to haue their part therein: that so by faith they may bee the children of Abraham, and consequently be made heires.

The phrases of speech vsed by the Prophets, ought diligently to be obserued.

These phrases of speech then which are much in vse among the Prophets, ought to be diligently obserued, that we may the better attaine to their meaning, and not to curtail their sentences, nor wrest them to a wrong sense. Their exposition then is too far fetched, and farre remote from the proprietie of the Prophets language; who by the land, vnderstand heauen & the blessed life. For the land of Canaan was giuen to the children of Israel, that being separated from the rest of the world, as the peculiar stocke of God, they might in that place serue him purely. And therefore to possesse the land by rights of inheritance, signifies nothing else, but to continue and remaine in the Church of God.

Where God affirms that the graffe of his planting shall be the vvorke of his hands; it serues to confirme the hope of the faithfull. For in mans iudgement it was a thing vnpossible that euer the Church should bud againe; for all esteemed her forlorne, chiefly in respect her roote lay hidden. That the might sprout afresh then, the Prophet saith, that God will plant the husband man, namely, in replanting that which was withered after it was plucked vp by the rootes. In a word, hee signifies that the deliuerance of the Church out of this miserable seruitude, shall be an admirable worke of the Lord, and not of men; in regard she shall be raised vp as it were from death. And truly that which belongs to the heauenly life, is not giuen vs by nature, nor obtained by our industry; but flowes vnto vs, and proceeds from Gods free bountie. Euery one of vs also ought to apply vnto himself in particular, that which is here said of the whole Church in general: for we were planted of God before the foundations of the world: Eph. 1.4. and afterwards incorporated and called; to the end we might haue assurance of our election and plantation. The wicked were neuer planted of God: and therefore Christ pronounceth that those whom his heauenly Father hath not planted, shall be plucked vp: Mat. 15. 13.

To conclude, the end wherefore we be planted, is by and by added, namely, that we might set forth the praise of God, and tell of his wonderful workes: as we are taught verie well by Paul, in Eph. 1. 12. And by Peter in his first Epistle: Chap. 2. 9.

The end why we are planted.

Verf. 22 A little one shall become as a thousand, and a small one as a strong nation: I the Lord will hasten it in due time.

HE confirms that which he hath already said, namely, that albeit they were few in number, yet the Church of God should be plentifully replenished with people. When the Prophet foretolde these things, there were great multitudes of people: but in short time after, they were so diminished, that the remainders were very few; as we haue seene in the first and tenth Chapters, yet this small number, saith he, shall so increase, that in processe of time, it shall become an infinit people of great power.

A confirmation of that which was said before.

Let vs know then, that whatsoeuer was said vnto the Iewes in this behalfe, is also said vnto vs at this day. For howsoeuer we be but a poore handfull of people, and seeme to be nere our vtter ruine, yet the Church cannot perish, but shall grow and increase to a great multitude, because it is the planting of God: verf. 21. which we must not esteeme of by outward appearances, nor by the force or multitudes of men.

I the Lord. Now the Prophet shews to what end all his former speeches haue tended, namely, that we should not resemble God vnto men, whose counsels and induours caslie vanish and come to nothing. If they would take vpon them to alter the state of the world or of a kingdome; alas, they could doe nothing: but the Lord can change all these things in a moment. He speaks not then of an ordinary government, but of a rare and admirable worke, whereby the Lord will deliuer and multiply his Church.

In the end of the verse he promiseth to hasten the accomplishment of this worke: but he adde a particle that is worthy to be noted, touching the time of the Church. For the relatiue is in the feminine gender; so as they who refer it vnto God, are deceived. And those who translate, In his time, are the cause of this error, in regard this word His, is ambiguous. The Prophets meaning is, that there is an appointed time set, in which the Church should be deliuered. And thus hee exhorts the faithfull vnto patience, that they should not fall away; but rather depend vpon the vnchangeable decree of God, who hath skill enough to dispose of the moments of times.

First of all the he notes the fit time wherein it shall be most for the Churches profit to be deliuered. We cannot iudge of this: for we would haue God doe that which hee hath promised out of hand: and if he foreflow the time, we storme. But he defers for our good; & in respect that the fit time is not yet come. Afterwards terwards he ſpeakes of haſtning, becauſe we imagin that the Lord is aſleepe, or takes his eaſe, when hee deferres. And yet hee haſtens, to execute all things according to that time and ſeaſon which he alone knowes to be fitteſt.

THE LXI. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me, therefore hath the Lord appointed me: hee hath ſent me to preach good tidings vnto the poore, to bind vp the broken hearted, to preach libertie to the Captiues, and to them that are bound, the opening of the priſon.

Or as much as Chriſt expounded this place of himſelfe, Luk. 4.18, therefore the interpreters doe without any difficultie reſtraine it vnto him: holding it for a principle, that Chriſt is here brought in ſpeaking; as if theſe things onely appertained vnto him. The Iews ſcoffe at ſuch, who inconfiderately haue attributed to Chriſt alone, the things which doe alſo agree to the reſt of the Prophets. To ſpeake then what I thinke, it ſeemes to me, that this Chapter is added as a ſeale vnto the former, thereby to confirme ſuch which hath been ſaid hitherto touching the reſtauration of the Chriſtian Church. And that to this end Chriſt proteſteth, that God hath anointed him: which is the cauſe that he (and that very iuſtly) appropriates this propheteſie vnto himſelfe: in regard hee hath exhibited that to vs clearly and manifeſtly which others haue taught obſcurely. Yet this hinders not; but ſuch ſentence may in like manner agree to the reſt of the Prophets whom the Lord hath alſo anointed. For they ſpake not in their owne names, neither did they execute their offices from their private authoritie: but they ſhewed forth the authoritie and office of Chriſt; to whom it not onely belongs to publiſh theſe things; but alſo to fulfill them. This place then muſt be thus vnderſtood, namely, that Chriſt who is the Prince of the Prophets, obtains the chiefe place among theſe; and that it is he onely who manifeſts all that which is here mentioned: & alſo that Iſaiab, with the reſt of the Prophets, and the Apoſtles, are his ſeruants; every one of them employing theſe felues to the vtmoſt in preaching and publiſhing the benefits which we receiue from him. So as ſuch which Iſaiab hath ſaid ſhould be finiſhed by Chriſt, we now ſee it accompliſhed by the effects.

For this cauſe he hath anointed me.] This ſecond member was added in ſtead of an expoſition. For firſt it would haue been obſcure to vs, if he had concealed the cauſe, wherefore God had giuen him his Spirit: but now wee may evidently perceiue his meaning, when he ſhewes the uſe thereof: namely, that hee exerciſeth a publicke office, that ſo hee may not bee taken as ſome priuate perſon.

Now as often as the Scripture mentions the ſpirit of God, and ſaith, that it dwells in vs: 1. Cor. 3.16. let vs conſider of his efficacy and power; and not imagine it to be ſome vaine and idle thing in vs without any effect. Wherefore after the Prophet hath ſpoken of the ſpirit of the Lord: in the ſecond place he addes the anointing thereunto: thereby vnderſtanding the vertues which proceed from that ſpirit. To which purpoſe Paul ſaith, 1. Cor. 12.4. that there are diuers gifts: but only one ſpirit from whence they flow. This place is diligently to be obſerued of vs, for no man ought to take vnto himſelfe power or authoritie to teach in the Church of God, vnleſſe he be able to ſhew that he is called therunto by the vertue of Gods Spirit. And ſo teſtiſies S. Paul in 1. Cor. 12.3. namely, that no man can ſay, Ieſus is the Lord, but by the holy Ghoſt.

But, may ſome ſay, wee fee that euery one bragges of the ſpirit. For the Pope, the Anabaptiſts and other hereticks and fanatical ſpirits haue alwaies the holy Ghoſt in their mouthes, as if hee were their gouernour. How, or by what means then may wee diſcerne of him that is ſent by God, and conducted by his ſpirit, from him that is not? By the anointing. That is to ſay, if he be endued with gifts anſwerable to this charge. If hee then who is ſent of God haue the graces and gifts which his office requires; then hath he aſſuredly the holy Ghoſt. But if hee will take vpon him the office of a teacher; and in the meane while is deſtitute both of knowledge and doctrine, let him be held for a ſeducer.

To preach.] The Prophet attributes not vnto himſelfe the authoritie of a teacher, till hee hath made it manifeſt that he was ſent of God. His authoritie is founded vpon his anointing: namely, in being fitted and furniſhed by the Lord with ſufficient gifts. It is our duties to giue him audience then, not as to a priuate perſon, but as vnto a publicke Miniſter ſent from heauen.

To the afflicted.) Others translate, To the mecke: and the word Ananiam, ſignifies both the one and the other. But I had rather retain the firſt ſignification, in reſpect the Prophet ſpeakes of the priſoners, and of thoſe that are bound. And yet, as I take it, he comprehends both. For he ſpeakes of ſuch, who being vtterly forſaken and reiected, are alſo miſerable in themſelues. Chriſt is only promiſed to ſuch as are humbled and brought low by the ſenſe of their miſeries, who hauing no conceit of their own worth, do willingly containe themſelues within the bounds of modeſty and humility. Hence we gather that our Prophet ſpeakes properly of the Goſpell. For the law was giuen to bring downe all ſoſtie imaginations,

We muſt not thinke of the ſpirit without his efficacy.

No man ought to take vpon him the office of a Teacher, vnleſſe he be able to manifeſt that hee is called therunto of God. Obieã.

That which is here ſaid appertaines to Chriſt as the head, and all the Prophets and Apoſtles as his ſeruants.

This Chapter is added as a ſeale vnto the things before going.

imaginations, and such as are swollen with vaine confidence: but the Gospell is ordained for the afflicted: that is to say, for such as confesse themselves empty of all good things, that by and through it they may be raised vp and comforted. For to what end are the Prophets, Apostles, and other Ministers anointed, but to restore and comfort the heauie hearts by the doctrine of grace?

To binde vp.] The Prophet vseth diuers phrases of speech that he might the better expresse one and the same thing. In the word to binde vp, he expresseth somewhat more then in the former member. For he shewes, that the preaching of the Gospell is no empty found vanishing away in the aire, but a medicine that is operative, which works not vpon those that are stubborne and strong, but vpon such as haue broken and contrite hearts. It is also the end of the Gospell to set the captiues at libertie. We are all prisoners and fettered, vntill Christ haue set vs free by his grace, Iohn 8.36. But let vs beware that we reiect not the benefit which he offers vs whē he is about to smite off our yrons. Generally we may note that the benefits here mentioned are distributed vnto vs by the Gospell, but none are capable hereof, except those who feeling their pouertie doe ardentlie desire the help of Christ, according as himselfe saith, Math. 11.28. Come vnto me all yee that trauell and be heauie laden, and I will refresh you.

Verf. 2. To preach the acceptable yeere of the Lord, and the day of vengeance of our God, to comfort all that mourne.

The time when this grace should be manifested.

HE here expressed the very time wherein this so excellent grace should be spread abroad, y^e so he might take away all scruples & doubts that might come into their heads. For all vs are subiect to sundrie cares, and many incumbrances arise vp in our minds, which hold them intangled with infinite discourses, whereof we tast by dayly experience. Now the Prophet affirms that he is the Herald of the grace which is to be reuealed, the time whereof rests whollie in the disposition of the Almighty: for as himselfe was to be the redeemer of his Church, by his mere fauor, so was it in his owne power (and that by good right) to make choice of the time himselfe wherein to performe the same. It may be the Prophet alluded to the yeere of Iubile, Leuit. 25.10. Howsoeuer it be, he boldly pronounceth that they were patientlie to wait with meeke and quiet spirits, vntill it pleased God to stretch forth his hands.

The yeere of Iubile.

S. Paul in his Epistle to the Rom. 16.26. and to the Galath. 4.4. calles this yeere the fulnes of time. We haue also seene heretofore that the Prophet in Chap. 49. 8. said, Behold the acceptable time, behold the day of saluation: which sentence S. Paul in 2. Cor. 6.2. applies to his preaching of the Gospell. For when the Lord summons vs thereby, then is the gate of heauen set open vnto vs, that wee should forthwith enter into the possession of Gods graces. Wee must not therefore put it off till to morrow; but wee must make vse of the time, and take the occasion whilst so large mercies are offered vnto vs.

But heere seemes to be a repugnancie betweene these two, namely, the acceptable yeere, and the day of vengeance. What is the reason why Isaiah hath ioined things so different together? Truly, because God can not worke the deliuerance of his Church, but he must therewithal shew himselfe a iust Iudge in reuen-ging himself vpon y^e wicked. The acceptable time then is to be referred vnto the elect: and the day of vengeance vnto the wicked, who neuer cease persecuting of the Church. It is needfull therefore that in the deliuerance thereof they should be chastised. According to which Paul, saith 2. Thess. 1.6. that it is a righteous thing with God to render vengeance vnto the enemies who vnjustly afflict the faithfull, and to giue rest to the afflicted. Neither could the Iewes expect any good issue out of so many miseries, vnlesse it were by the confusion of their aduersaries.

In the meane while it is good to note the cause of this deliuerance, which must be whollie ascribed to the free grace of God, and not to our merits, worthines, or any industrie that is in vs. The Prophet seemes iudged, as I haue said, to allude to the yeere of Iubile: but yet we must principallie obserue this, namely, that our saluation consists altogether vpon the free will of our God.

To comfort.] We must remember what I haue touched before, to wit, what the end of the Gospell is: namely, That we being deliuered out of all miseries, and restored to our first liberty, our teares wiped from our eyes; we may enioy spirituall comfort and consolation. But if we be deprived of so great a benefit, let vs impute the same to our owne incredulitie and vnthankfulness, whereby we both reiect and repulse God, who freely offers himselfe vnto vs.

Verf. 3. To appoint vnto them that mourne in Zion, and to giue vnto them* beauty for ashes, the oyle of ioy for mourning, the garment of gladnes for the spirit of heauines, that they may be called trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord, that he might be glorified.*

*Or, or establisht.
*Or, magnificence.

HE prosecutes the same argument, and declares, that the chastisement wherewith the people should be exercised, should not be so sharp, but that there was hope notwithstanding left for them touching remission of finnes. Which that hee might the better perswade the of, he saith, the Lord hath giuen him charge to publish this deliuerance, and that not to himselfe alone, but also to all the Prophets, euen til the coming of that great Embassador, to wit, Christ Iesus, who shall indeed publish and accomplish that which God would now haue diuulged for the time to come: yet therewithal he signifies, that their sorrowes shall not be able to let God from giuing them matter of ioy, whē it should seeme good good vnto himſelfe. For to eſtabliſh, is as much to lay, as to appoint a time, that the long delay ought not diſcourage them. Againe, by the verb, To giue, he recommends vnto them the efficacy of his prophecie, to the end they might be vndoubtedly perſwaded touching the euent thereof. Well, he alludes herein to the ancient Ceremonies of the Iewes, who, when any affliction in thoſe times preſſed them, were wont to couer their heads with aſhes, and to clothe themſelues with sackcloth. By theſe things then he notes out that mourning, and deſormitie, which of neceſſitie was to enſue vpon the peoples woſull condition, and oppoſeth the ſame to that ioy and gladnes which they ſhould be filled withall, after they had obtained their freedome and libertie.

But yet me thinks I can not let paſſe the anſwering of theſe words Pſter, and Epher, one to another, which ſignifie magnificence, and aſhes. For by the tranſpoſition of the letters, they ſignifie things cleane contrarie: by which elegant turning of the words vpside downe, he meant to note out the change of their eſtate.

Trees of righteouſneſſe.] By theſe words hee ſets out the peoples reſtauration. As if hee ſhould ſay; Whereas in times paſt you were rooted vp, and reſembled a withered ſtocke; now you ſhall be planted againe and eſtabliſhed. He brings them then to the conſideration of Gods power, to the end that howſoever they ſhould be overwhelmed & brought to deaths doore, yet were they notwithstanding to aſſure themſelues to bee ſo reuiued, that they ſhould take roote, gather ſtrength, and grow.

Hence we may gather a generall doctrine, namely, that we cannot be quickened, vnleſſe we be planted by the Lord. True it is that we are called his plants, Chap. 60. 21. becauſe hee hath eleſted vs from the beginning: Eph. 1. 4. But yet there is another kind of planting which ſucceeds this firſt; to wit, our calling, which by faith graſts vs into y^e body of Chriſt. This the Lord brings to paſſe by the labours of his ſeruants, the Miniſters of the Goſpell: but the whole muſt be aſcribed vnto him, becauſe it is hee onely that giues the increaſe: 1. Cor. 3. 7. Yet we are alwaies to keep in mind that doctrine, which brings vs from this firſt deliuerance, vnto the ſpirituall kingdome of Chriſt.

Hee calls them trees of righteouſneſſe, in whom Gods iuſtice ſhines, or, an order rightly compoſed. Yet let vs know that the Lord adopts vs vpon condition that we be new creatures, and that righteouſneſſe may rule and raigne in vs. And thence it follows that by nature we are all corrupt and peruerſe, and cannot bring forth any good fruit, till the Lord haue changed and planted vs. This alſo abolitheth that vaine and proud conceit of the Papiſts, who in forging vnto themſelues preparations, for ſooth, or, ſome helps of free will, vſurp vpon that which belongs vnto God. If we bee planted of the Lord, then it follows that by nature wee are drie and vnfruitfull.

For my glory.] See heere the end wherefore we be planted. But of this matter we haue ſpoken in Chap. 60. 21.

Verſ. 4. And they ſhall build the old waſte places, and raiſe vp the former deſolations: and they ſhall repaire the Citie that were deſolate and waſte thorow many generations.

The Prophet amplifies this reſtauration of the Church, and inſiſts principally thereabouts; that the Iewes might conceiue in their mindes a certaine and an aſſured hope of their deliuerance: for theſe promiſes ſeemed altogether incredible. And this is the cauſe why hee adorne the benefit of this redemption with ſo many glorious and goodly titles. Thoſe erſe, who will haue theſe words, Of the age, and from generation to generation, referred to the time to come. As if the Prophet ſhould haue ſaid; that the building whereof he ſpeakes, ſhall be firme and ſtable: whereas his meaning is farre otherwiſe. For he ſhewes (as I noted in Chap. 58. 12.) namely, that the old ruines of the Citie ſhould not hinder the Lord from rearing it vp againe. After the inhabitants of any Citie haue been long ſcattered heere and there, what hope is left that it ſhould be built againe? As for example; who is he that thinkes of the reedifying of Athens? So whileſt the Iewes were baniſhed for a long time into a forrain country, and that Ieruſalem lay waſte the ſpace of ſeuentie yeeres; who durſt expect that euer the Citizens thereof ſhould haue reedified it? For this cauſe Iſaiah calles deſerts of an age, the places formerly deſolated; the Cities waſted, the ſolitarie places from generation to generation: to ſhew that none of theſe ſhould hinder the Lord in due ſeaſon, as was noted in Chap. 60. 22. to bring backe his eleſt to Ieruſalem, and to cauſe them to dwell there.

Moreouer, theſe things ought to be applied to our deſolate times. For howſoever the Lord permits his Church to be rased, and to lie long in her ruines, without any hope at all of being reſtored; yet let vs confirme and ſtrengthen our hearts with theſe promiſes; for it is Gods power and peculiar office to build up and to reneue the things which for a long time haue bene ruined and lien rotting in a perpetuall conſumption. But wee haue handled this matter before in Chap. 58.

Verſ. 5. And the ſtrangers ſhall ſtand and feede your ſheep: and the ſonnes of the ſtrangers ſhall be your plowmen, and dreſſers of your vines.

His meaning is, that the ſtrangers ſhall be ready to obey them. For in reſpect that they were at that time diuided from other nations, no man would lend them their hand. And therefore hee ſaith, that the ſtrangers doe ſtand: that is to ſay, are ready preſt to meete and to ſuccour them.

A generall Doctrine.

Two kinds of planting.

Papiſt preparations.

Where he adds, that they shall feede their sheepe and shall be the plowmen and vinedressers, these are borrowed kinds of speeches. For the Prophet speaks of Christs kingdome, which is spirituall; and sets fourth the perfect felicitie thereof, vnder these figures; that we might the better conceiue of those things which are here proposed vnto vs by examples. Let vs know therefore that wee shall bee truly happie, when Christ shall reigne ouer vs: for by meanes thereof many commodities whereof the posteritie of Adam is worthily deprived, shall be restored vnto vs vnawares.

Verf. 6. But yee shall be named the Priests of the Lord; and men shall say vnto you, The Ministers of our God: yee shall eate the riches of the Gentiles, and shall be exalted with their glory.

THIS verse giues vs a little better light into the former: for in the second part thereof Isaiah foretels, that the faithfull shall eate the riches of the Gentiles, and shall be exalted with their glorie. The Iewes lay hold of these places with great earnestnesse, and greedily deuoure al the goods of other nations, as if one day they should be masters of all: and glorie, as if all the pompe of the world should fall to their shares. But for our better vnderstanding of these things, wee must especially obserue two points. First, that the Prophets minding to set forth the glorie and felicitie of Christs kingdome; borrow similitudes from things belonging to men. Secondlie, in speaking of the Church, they so conioyne the head with the members, that sometimes they rather respect him then the members.

Neither must we reape this fruition of other mens goods, as if those which should bee conuerted vnto Christ should gripe vnto themselves riches, glorie, or the dignities of others; for this would not stand with the rules of charitie. But in respect that all things should be subiected vnder Christs dominion; that so he might vnder the soueraigne rule and authoritie ouer them. This is it which I haue already said, to wit, that the Prophet hath not so much regard of the members, as of the head himselfe. But when riches are brought vnder Christs power, then they are called ours; because he hath nothing which belongs not to his spouse the Church. It is said in chap. 45. 14. in the same sense that the enemies of Christ shall fall downe at his feet, and make supplication vnto him: and yet this is done to the Church, in whom they acknowledge Christ, & submit themselves vnto his doctrine. See chap. 60. 14. Isaiah then shewes what the Father will giue to the Sonne, who hath lawfull power ouer all the world: to whom also all things ought to be subiect.

In the meane while we must not omit that which I touched erewhile: namely, that God feedes his clea^r liberally in this world, to the end thy might feele that their estate is better then that of the infidels. For howsoeuer they may want many things, yet a little contents them; for which they giue God hearie thanks: so as their wants to them are much better, then all the wealth of the world is to the wicked.

By the word Priests hee shewes, that the condition of the common people shall bee much better then it was in times past. As if he should say, Hitherunto the Lord hath chosen you for his heritage onely: but hereafter he will indue you with more excellent giftes, for hee will make you Priests. Now howsoeuer all the people were a kingdome of Priests, Exod. 19. 6. yet wee know that the Tribe of Leui onlie exercised this office, Deut. 33. 10. But our Prophet here testifies that afterward it shall be common to all. Yet this was not manifested till Christ came. I grant that the restauration of the Church began at the returne of the people out of Babylon: but in the end at Christs coming, the faithfull were adorned with this dignitie.

Herunto appertaines that which is written in 1. Pet. 2. 9. You are an holy nation, a royall Priesthood. But withall we ought diligently to note what this kind of Priesthood is: for we must no more offer vnto God any brute beasts; but reasonable men must now be offered and sacrificed to the obedience of Christ. According to which S. Paul saith, that hee offered up the Gentiles by the sword of the Gospell, that they might afterwards yeeld their obedience vnto God. Rom. 15. 19.

Hence we see how childishly y^e Papiests trifle in abusing this place to proue their priesthood: for the Pope and his chaplens ordaine Priests to sacrifice to Iesus Christ; and not to teach his people (both which Moses ioines together in Deut. 33. 10.) But Christ offered vp himself for an eternal redemption, & he only once for all hath performed this Priestly office: Heb. 9. 12. Minding that the fruite of this sacrifice should now be offered vnto vs by the preaching of the Gospell. They which vsurp this office are sacrilegious persons, namely, such as will reiterate, that which Christ hath by himselfe accomplished. Euery one ought rather to offer himselfe, with all that hee hath vnto God: Rom. 12. 1. that he may exercise this Priesthood as hee ought to doe. Secondly, the Ministers who are especially called to teach, ought to vse the sword of Gods word to offer vp, and to consecrate men vnto God. Lastly, those are indeede faithfull and true Ministers, who enterprise nothing of their owne heads, but boldly and vprightly put those commandements in execution, which they haue received from God.

Verf. 7. For your shame, you shall receive double, and for confusion they shall reioyce in their portion: for in their land, they shall possesse the double: everlasting ioy shall be vnto them.*

HE confirms the former sentence, where he had said that the faithfull which mourned, being covered with sackcloth and aſhes, ſhould be ſprinkled with the oile of gladneſſe: verſ. 3 Now this change of the ſermon into joy, is here againe promiſed. Some interpret double to bee in regard that the ſer whom God hath redeemed, ſhould be happie before him, and before men. But I know not whether this expoſition be ſolid enough or no. I had rather take it more ſimply then, as if the Prophet ſhould haue ſaid; The proſperitie of the Church ſhall be ſo great, that it ſhall much exceede all the calamities and aduerſities wherewith it is now oppreſſed. If the be now then diſcontented with her eſtate, ſhee muſt caſt her eyes towards this day, in which ſhee ſhall be moſt happy. And ſo Saint Paul oppoſeth a weight of glory to the momentary affliction, which are ſuddenly gone: 2. Cor. 4. 17. The wicked ſcorne vs without meaſure: for they ſeeue luſt and ſtrong; they abuſe their proſperitie, and tread vnder their feete the poore children of God: but the Lord pronoueth in ſhort ſpace, to cauſe the faithfull being deliuered from vnder their tyrannie) to reuiſe in their poſſion. This began to be accompliſhed when the people returned out of captiuitie: but in Chriſt we haue a more full teſtimonie of it, which daily manifeſts it ſelfe, and at his laſt coming ſhall be finiſhed, who will perfectly reue all things; and the wicked ſhall be conſumed, to the end the poſſeſſion of the world may be ours.

To this appertaines that which hee ſaith by way of yeelding or granting; namely, that the land is now indeede theirs. For then they vaunted themſelues as being Lords of the whole world: but in the end they ſhould feele that it is the proper and particular poſſeſſion of Gods children. Euerlaſting joy may be referred to the eternall eſtate of the Church; becauſe God daily furniſheth them with ample matter of thankſgiving: but in regard they are conſtrained to ſwallow many anguiſhes, and are iniurioned about with all kindes of incumbrances, this prophecie is not accompliſhed vntill the joy of the Spirit hath gotten ſtrength in vs, and obtained the full victorie in our hearts; nor till wee feele that ſweete peace which paſſeth all vnderſtanding, to raigne there; as ſaith Saint Paul in Phil. 4. 7. Col. 3. 15. which peace onely the Saints of God inioy, when they feele luely teſtimonies within them of their adoption. Hee calles it perpetuall, to ſhew how farre it differs from the ioy of the wicked, which is but of ſhort continuance, and ſuddenly vaniſheth away: yea, and is conuerted into gnawing of teeth, Difference betweene the ioy of the godly, and the wicked.

Verſ. 8. For I the Lord loue iudgement, and hate robbery for burnt offering: and I will direct their worke in truth, and will make an euerlaſting covenant with them.

An exhortation added to the former confirmat.

The Prophet not onely confirms that which he hath promiſed in the name of God, but alſo exhorts the Iewes to repentance, and ſhewes them from whence they were to looke for ſaluation, and with what a terrible Iudge they had to deale. For he reaſons from the nature of God; and thence ſhewes after what manner they were to frame their lues, that ſo they might not reiect this grace of God now offered them by their owne rebellion.

Vnder the word iudgement, he comprehends all iuſtice and equall dealing. For hee oppoſeth this word to thoſe idle inuentions wherby the Iewes thought to ſatiſfie God withall, which yet were but cloakes for their wickednes. But as we haue often ſcene heere tofore, the Lord cares for none of theſe masks and vaine pretences, but onely requires the true puritie of the heart and hands, purged from all iniquities. He then that will be approved of God, with all that he performes in his ſeruice, muſt needs haue a pure heart, and leade a blameleſſe life.

Having robbery for burnt offerings.] Vnder a part he comprehends all the ſained ſeruices of God. And by burnt offering is vnderſtood all ſacrifices. There is nothing then more hatefull, then that men ſhould ſacrifice their robberies and coſenages vnto God: or, when they mingle their lies, hypocriſies, and filthineſſe of heart therewith; or, in defrauding God maliciously of his right, doe corrupt his pure worſhip.

Whoſe ſeruice it is that God approves of.

But this is a vice not onely practiſed of that age, but in all times. For euery one will ſeeme to ſerue God, and the wicked themſelues will be aſhamed to be without the appearance of deuotion, in regard the ſenſe and feeling of the diuine nature is ſo ingrauen in the hearts of all men, that it cannot be riced out. But in the meane while, the moſt part of men doe but triſle & dallie with God, and labor to ſatiſfie him with pretie gawdies and toys. Iſaiah therefore condemnes and deteſts ſuch an hypocriſie; and teacheth that the Lord rather requires mercy of vs, then ſacrifices: Hoſ. 6. 7. Mat. 9. 13. and 12. 7. For wee cannot ſerue God, unleſſe wee obſerue the duties of the ſecond table, namely, in abſtaining from all violence and fraudulent dealing: for he who either deceiues, or offers violence to his neighbours, doth alſo therewithall offer violence vnto God himſelfe. To bee ſhort, the Prophets meaning is, to teach vs the true meanes to attaine repentance: firſt, in caſting off all hypocriſie, and in reiecting all inuentions of men, the ſeruants of God doe giue themſelues to the duties of brotherly loue.

The meanes to attaine true repentance.

I will direct their worke.] Some expound, The reward of their worke. But I rather thinke heereby are vnderſtood all the enterpriſes of this life, vnto which the Lord promiſeth an happie ſucceſſe. That which men purpoſe in themſelues to doe, comes not to a good end, either in regard they neglect to aſke counſell of God, or becauſe they doe not things vnder his conduct and leading. And therefore they worthily beare the puniſhment of their boldneſſe: for they either truſt in their own counſels, or depend vpon chances. Now in any of all theſe things there is not ſo much as a dramme of truth, but onely a deceiueable ſhadow of it. On the other ſide, it is no man-well if all things prosper well in their hands, that are gouerned and directed by the holie Ghost, and doe whollie cast both themselves and their affaires vpon the prouidence of the almightie: for all prosperitie doth absolute-lic flow from his onely blessing.

Moreouer, by the word truth is vnderstood an equall course: for the vnbeleeuers are sometimes puffed vp with a worldly ioy, but it forthwith vanishes into smoke. In the end of the verse hee shewes the cause of this stabilitie; namely, God doth not only guide them with his hand for once, and so away: but directs them in their way continually. Loe here the solid stay and vpholding of our perseverance: to wit, in that he vouchsafeth to make an euertlasting covenant with vs; where- in he binds himselfe voluntarily; and freelic bestowes all things vpon vs, albeit in truth he owes vs nothing at all.

Verf. 9. And their seed shall be knowne among the Gentiles, and their buds among the people. All that see them shall know them, that they are the seede whom the Lord hath blessed.

An amplification touching the enlargement of the Church.

THE Prophet discourseth here more clearely touching the aduancement and growth of the Church which was then shut vp within a narrow scantling, and in an out corner of the world, and were afterwards much diminished and lopped: as wee haue seene in the first and tenth Chapters. Isaiah then speakes of the Church, which after so many diminishings shall spread againe ouer the whole world, and that in such wise, as she shall be viewed of all nations. And yet this fell not out, nor vnder the reigne of Salomon whilst the Iewes flourished in greatest abundance of riches and glorie: 1. King. 10. 21. 27. now this seemed incredible. This is the cause also why the Prophets insist so much in perswading the Iewes, repeating it ouer againe and againe: to wit, that they should not measure this restauration according to their carnall sense, nor to outward appearances.

Quest.
Ans.

Now it may be asked, whē these things came to passe. I answer (as I haue often done) that they began to be accomplished, when the people came home into their countrie: for then, and afterwards in succession of time they tasted many waies of Gods fauour towards them. Yet in regard there were but a few small sparkles of these things to be discerned in those times: therefore the perfect beautie of them shined in Christ, vnder whose kingdome these things were whollie accomplished. For then religion was as it were buried; Abrahams posteritie began to sprout; in respect that strangers were by faith ingrafted into the bodie of the elect people. And thus the barbarous nations came to know, that the Iewes were the blessed seed of God: namely, when they vnited themselves vnto them in the same confession of faith. Neither was this only accomplished once, but is euery day more and more fulfilled. Where- as the Iewes were first preferred, and obtained the chiefe place in Gods covenant, it must be attributed vnto Gods free mercie as S. Paul teacheth in Rom. 3. 2. For hauing there shewed that they differ in nothing by nature from the Gentiles, and that hee hath subiected them to the same condemnation with them: he therewithall shewes that they had this excellent priuledge to be the first vnto whome the word and promises of God were giuen. But that all these things proceeded meerelic from Gods free grace, and not from their merits or deserts.

Verf. 10. I will greatly reioyce in the Lord, and my soule shall be ioyfull in my God: for hee hath clothed me with the garments of saluation; and covered mee with the robe of righteousness: he hath decked mee like a bridegrome, and as a bride tireth her selfe with Iewels.

THE Prophet here brings in the Church giuing of thanks vnto God, the better to perswade them of the truth of that which he hath said heretofore. And it is a liuely description, as it were, wherein he paints out the thing done in a table, and placeth it before their eyes, that hee might remouee all scruples. For naturally wee are inclined to distrust: and withall so inconstant, that wee will rather giue credit vnto mens dreames, then to the word of God. But touching this kind of confirmation wee haue discoursed both in Chap. 12. 1. and 26. 1. as also in other places.

For he hath clothed me.] Surely these things were yet very farre off. But it was necessarie they should be seene and comprehended by faith. Yea, it is very needfull that wee lift vp our eyes to heauen, when the Prophet preacheth to vs the doctrine of righteousness and saluation. There is nothing visible here, and much lesse can we apprehend so great a felicitie: seeing all things are still bending towards a dissolution. But in regard that euen at this day such a beauty, as this appeares nor in the Church, which (for the most part) on the contrarie is vnder the horror of the crosse, and therefore contemptible to all the world: it is needfull here that faith should come betweene, which comprehends celestially all and inuisible things.

To what men
inclined.

Justice is ioyned with saluation, in regard the one cannot be separated from the other. These similitudes of garments & robes, are well enough knowne: and it is as much as if the Church should haue said, that injustice and saluation were giuen her together. Seeing it is the Lord then who distributes these benefits, let vs conclude in our selues, that it is onelie he, of whom we must aske them, and none but he, from whom we must expect them. In these words, he hath decked me, there is a figuratiue kind of speech, which they think to be taken from the Priests garments: for which cause some haue descanted here vpon the Priesthood priesthood of Christ. But as I thinke, the Prophet meant not to speake so subtilly, in vsing the similitudes of the bride & bridegroom. The Church was in miserable plight before, and euey one contemned her as a uife diuorced from her husband. But he hauing receiued her into fauour againe, shee shines vs ish wonderfull beausie. And the place in Hosea, 2. 20. answers vnto this. Such an ornament was giuen at the coming of Christ, and we also receiue it daily, when the Lord clothes vs with righteousnesse and saluation. But all these things shall bee fully accomplished at Christs last comming, as we haue often said.

Verſ. 11. For as the earth bringeth forth her bud, and as the garden cauſeth to grow that which is ſowne in it: ſo the Lord will cauſe righteousneſſe to grow, and praife before all the heathen.

THE Prophet confirmes the former promises, by another goodly similitude: for he brings the Lewes to the ordinarie power of God, which shines in his creatures. Wee see that the earth brings forth her bud euerie yeere; the gardens grow greene after they haue bene sown vs ish seedes: to be short, the grasse and plants which in winter seemed as good as dead, doe reuiue againe in the spring time, and recouer new strength. Now these are infallible testimonies of Gods power, and of the good will which hee beares vs. Seeing these things then come thus ordinarily to passe, should men doubt thereof? Hath hee giuen this vertue and power vnto the earth, and will he not much more manifest the same for the deliuerance of his people? Will not hee cause the elect seede to bud, and bring forth; which as he hath promised, shall alwaies remaine in the world?

[Before all the Gentiles.] Hee shewes againe that the bounds of the Church shall no more bee so narrow as they were; because the Lord will cause her to replenish the whole world. Afterwards he mentions righteousnesse, which was fully reuealed at such time as the Lord redeemed his people: but Gods righteousnesse did then especially appeare, when Christ was manifested vnto the world. Not that he concealed it till that time, but in regard men attained not to such a cleere knowledge of it. It is as much then as if he had said; The Lord will so deliuer and restore his Church, that all shall know his righteousnesse: for deliuerance is an excellent testimonie thereof.

He addes praife, in respect that such a benefit ought to be accompanied with thanksgiuings: for the end of righteousness is Gods glory. And therefore he exhorts vs to beware of ingratitude, seeing it were too vnworthy a thing to haue our lippes shut vp, after the receiuing of so many benefits from God.

THE LXII. CHAPTER.

Verſ. 1. For Zions ſake I will not hold my tongue, and for Ieruſalems ſake I will not reſt, vntill the righteousneſſe thereof breake forth as the light, and the ſaluation thereof as a burning lampe.

The causes of these oft repetitions.

In regard that this sorrowfull exile approached neere, which should in a maner vtterly extinguish the name of this people, it was needefull for the faithfull to bee confirmed and hardened with many words, that in sure and steadfast confidence, they might bee supported with these promises, vnder the heauie burthen of the Crosse. In this verse the Prophet discharging that office which was committed vnto him, plainly protests, that hee will no way be idle in the performance of his dutie; neither will he cease to speake, till he hath cheered up the hearts of the faithfull in the hope of their saluation to come, that they might know and bee perswaded that God would deliuer his Church. For himselfe (good man) might be discouraged in beholding the peoples incredulitie, and might be driuen to forsake all, in regard he knew things would grow euerie day worse and worse. Adde also, that he well foresaw this horrible vengeance to bee at hand. But as one vtterly neglecting all these incumbrances, hee notwithstanding vowes a constant perseuerance in his course: to signifie vnto all, that neither the common calamitie, nor yet the peoples dissidence, should be able to hinder God from the performance of his promises, when the appointed time thereof was come. Now it was needfull that these things should be often repeated vnto them, because the peruerſitie of our minde is such, that we presently forget Gods promises.

In that he saith, hee will not hold his peace: hee therewithall admonisheth others also of their duties, that they might be courageous, and with assurance of faith to wait for their redemption, though it were deferred for a time: yea, that their hope should not cease to answer Gods voice, which sounds continually in their eares. We haue daily experience of the necessitie of this dutie, when Satan labours with might and maine to turne our feete out of the right way. Thus then the Prophet not onely shewes what hee himselfe would doe, but by his example teacheth what end all faithfull Ministers should propound vnto themselves; to wit, wholly to imploy their vtmost inducours for the benefit of the Church, For when he saith, for Zions sake,

What ought to be our principall care.

it is to shew that our principall care ought to extend it selfe about the procuring of the perpetuall safetie and prosperous estate of the Church: as also that such deserue not the titles of good and faithfull Pastors, vnlesse they haue taken the care of her welfare so to heart, that they refuse no paines whatsoever, for the bringing thereof to passe.

Some referre these words to praiers: but I had rather referre it to preaching; and so the sense agrees best, namely, that the Prophet will not be discouraged for any incumbrance or iniurie, that he should meete withall in the way: neither would he suffer his zeale to bee cooled, for any impediment whatsoever, from pursuing his office of publishing that which God had inioined him, touching the Churches deliuerance, For had he liued vntill this wofull desolation fell out, no doubt but hee should haue suffered many outrages, by reason of the multitudines infidelitie, as well as other Prophets did. But what euer came, hee protests that he is fortified with such inuincible constancie, that he will neuer be ashamed for any disgraces that men shall offer him, but will manfully hold on his course. By this phrase of speech also he shewes, that his prophecies are all true, and therefore addes the more authoritic vnto them, that after his death they might neuer cease to found in the cares and hearts of the faithfull.

Hee takes righteousnesse for the Churches right, which during the time of her affliction, seemed to be condemned. Her righteousnesse braue forth and appeared then, when shee was restored vnto her perfection, and had recouered her first estate: for this righteousnesse was hid as long as they were captiues.

Saluation is coupled with righteousnesse: for whom God iustifies or maintains their right, such recouer their saluation by the same means. Hence we gather that wee are most miserable and succourlesse, whilst God withdraws his grace, in regard of our forwardnesse. The Prophet therefore in other places hath attributed that righteousnesse vnto God, which he now faith belongs vnto the church. Wee are vndone then when we are deprived of Gods grace; that is to say, whilst wee lie sporting in our sinnes, and God manifests his iust iudgement in punishing vs for them.

Moreouer, the verbe to braue forth signifies, that the righteousnesse of the Church was hidden and buried as it were for a time. Truly shee deserued to haue been consumed and brought to nothing before God. Nay, more then that, her great iniquities were come to such an height, that there was nothing to be expected but the iust vengeance of God. Verily it was in respect of men, who gaue the Church thus afflicted, for lost; and by their pride and crueltie, deiected her euen almost to the bottome of hell. To be short, he compares her with the world, in respect whereof she is righteous, when hauing been purged from her filthinesse, God beginnes to take her cause into his owne hands. By this then the Prophet aduertiseth vs alwaies to hope well touching the restauration of the Church, though for a time she be plunged into an horrible darknes, yea euen into death it selfe. For howsoeuer for a moment she seemes to be ouerwhelmed and forlorne; yet hath she God still for her defence in the heauens, who after he hath corrected her in measure, (as it is in Chap. 27. 8.) will at last manifest the care he hath ouer her. For it must needs be that his righteousnesse should braue forth and be manifested; namely, in the saluation of such as he hath chosen for his people and heritage.

Verf. 2. And the Gentiles shall see thy righteousnesse, and all Kings thy glorie: and thou shalt bee called by a new name, which the mouth of the Lord shall name.

Now he shewes more fully, why hee protested before that hee would not hold his tongue; euen becaufe the faithfull might bee assured that saluation was not promised them in vaine. Glory is heere taken for saluation. In this place wee see with what argument the Prophets must furnish themselves to preferre their constancie; to wit, that the Lord is faithfull, who will in the end accomplish that which he hath promised, albeit hee deserue for a time.

The word Kings, serues for amplification: as if he should say, Not only the commonaltie and meaner sort should see and admire the glorie of God; but that euen Kings themselves, who were wont proudly to contemne that which in it selfe is precious and honourable: for their owne glory so blinds them, and their greatnesse so bewitcheth all their senses, that they cannot willingly acknowledge any dignitie but their owne.

The new name is taken heere for magnificence: for the people were in such wise scattered and dispersed, that there was no certaine body of them to be seene, but seemed as vtterly forlorne. I grant the multitude of them which were carried into captiuitie was very great; yet in respect they were mingled here and there among the Babylonians, they were rent one from another, as a body diuided into many peeces: so as they could not well bee said to retaine so much as the name of a people any longer: which also they had beene forewarned of. But at their returne home, they beganne to bee knit into a bodie againe: and thus recouered that name, of which they had been deprived. Notwithstanding new is taken for vnaccustomed. As if the Prophet should haue said, your glorie shall bee singular, and such as was not heard of before. Which we know in processe of time came to passe. For this handful of people which inhabited the country by way of entreatie, were not able to get vnto themselves such a magnificence by any greatnesse, or signes of honour: but at length after the preaching of the Gospell, the name of the Iewes was both knowne and renowned.

Now Isaiah confirms that which was hard

hard to bee beleued, by adding that God ſhould be the author of this glorie. For it was not in the power of man thus to raiſe vp the poore Church, being then couered ouer with ſhame and diſhonour: but God who raiſeth the needie out of the duſt, was able in a moment to adorne and beautife his Church with new honour. For example, was there ſo much as any face of a Church to bee ſeene amongſt vs within theſe 40. yeeres? The Lord had indeede a ſmall ſeede (ſcattered here and there) but it was ſo conſuled and couered, that there could be no viſible Church of God perceived. And yet hee gat his Church a name, when it pleaſed him to gather the ſame by the preaching of the Goſpell. This ſo admirable a worke of God then, ought to confirme vs in this point, namely, that God will neuer utterly abandon his church. For albeit the wicked do rent & reare vs in peeces with curſed ſpeakings, and that they ſlander and abhorre vs; endeuouring by all meanes poſſible to make vs an abomination in the eyes of the world: yet let vs remember that they cannot plucke Gods righteouſneſſe from him, but that he will make our glorie to ſhine here below, ſeeing hee hath bene pleaſed to write our names in heauen: Luk. 10. 20.

Orlers expound this more ſubtilly, namely, that in ſtead of being called Iſraelites, they ſhould be called Chriſtians. But I rather ſuppoſe, that the former ſenſe ſutes beſt with the ſcope of the Prophets text: as alſo with that language which he is wont to vſe. Moreouer, we ought diligently to obſerue and marke theſe phraſes of ſpeech, which are peculiar vnto the Prophets; that wee may acquaint our ſelues with their ſtile. In ſumme, Iſaiah meant to ſay, that the people, which ſeemed to be rooted out, ſhall be reſtored: and ſhal receiue a new name, not from men, but from God.

Verſ. 3. Thou ſhalt alſo be a crowne of glorie in the hand of the Lord, and a royall diadem in the hand of thy God.

HE proſecutes the ſame argument; which wee are not to wonder at. For, to iudge thereof according to humane reaſon, what man could euer haue conceiued in his mind, or by hope expected a thing of ſo great conſequence? Beſides, his meaning was by theſe words to raiſe vp the hearts of the faithfull to looke towards the kingdome of Chriſt: which it behooued him to beautife and adorne with theſe glorious titles, by how much the more it was then obſcure and farre remote from them. For it was needfull to preuent a twofold danger, leſt the Iewes in ſeeing themſelues ſo farre recoiled backe from their firſt dignitie, ſhould neither deſpiſe the grace of God, nor reſt themſelues in theſe ſmall and firſt beginnings. And thus in ſetting light by Chriſt, they ſhould ſuffer themſelues to be glued onelic to the commodities of this life preſent. It is the Prophets drift then, as you ſee, to aduertife the Iewes, that their returne home ſhall be as a preparatiue to this honour, which they were to looke for in the manifeſtation of Chriſt in the fleſh.

As touching the firſt member; theſe poore baniſhed exiles, and bondmen could apprehend nothing at all but matter of deſpaire, in conſidering the outward eſtate of things: yea, after they were returned and ſetled in their countrie, yet they proceeded but ſlowlie forward in building of the Temple. Hee therefore ſtirres them vp to looke vnto God, that from him they might expect that glorie which now was hidden, in reſpect of mans reaſon. And in as much as they were aſſured that they were deare and precious in his ſight, that they ſhould content themſelues therewith, till he ſhould more liberallie endow them by the hand of Chriſt.

Hee calles the Church the crowne of God, in reſpect that he will haue his glorie to ſhine in vs. Wherein wee haue great cauſe with admiration to conſider of the ineffimable goodneſſe of God towards vs: who though we are by nature corrupt and vnclane, and more vile then the filth in the chancell; yet he vouchſafes to adorne vs, as to make vs the diadem of his kingdom. Let vs be prouoked then by this goodneſſe of God to hunger and thirſt after holineſſe of life, that ſo his image may daily bee reformed in vs more and more.

Verſ. 4. It ſhall be no more ſaid vnto thee, forſaken; neither ſhall it be ſaid any more to thy land, deſolate: but thou ſhalt bee called Hephzi-bath, and thy land Benlab. For the Lord delighteth in thee, and thy land ſhall haue an husband.

HE now meetes with a difficultie which might trouble the minds of the faithfull, whileſt they ſaw themſelues reiected and leſt deſtitute: and yet in the meane while had theſe glorious titles giuen them, of a crowne and a diadem. For might not theſe titles ſeeme ridiculous; ſeeing the Iewes were hated and abhorred of all nations, yea now and then their enemies trampled them vnder feete; and no ſuccour appeared: and yet notwithstanding that they ſhould be exalted vp to heauen, and inloſed in the hand of God? Thus his meaning is to ſay, that howſoever the people were for a time, as a woman leſt and forſaken of her husband: yet they ſhould be reſtored againe in ſuch wife, that their name and condition ſhould be changed. As if he ſhould ſay, this ſhall bee no perpetuall diſorce, for God will at length marrie thee againe vnto himſelfe. Howſoever the Church then ſeemes to be contemptible, and in outward appearance bee like a woman reiected and put away, yet will the Lord one day put an end vnto her miſerie and calamities.

But withall the Prophet teacheth, that this proceeds onely from Gods deſire; that is to ſay, from his free fauour: leſt any thing ſhould bee attributed to the merits or dignitie of men.

men. To which purpose hee saith in Hosea; I will marrie thee vnto me in mercy and compassion. Hof. 2. 19. Thus then the Prophet shewes that their prosperitie shall spring from none other fountaine then this, namely, because God will be pleased of his owne infinit loue, freely to be reconciled with those whom hee hath reiected. Now howsoeuer this appertaines properly to the Church; yet generally are we hence to learne, that Cities and Kingdomes also are restored to their first estate, by the fauour and good will of God: which whilest his wrath and indignation lay vpon them, seemed as vtterly forlorne.

The Prophet then discouers vnto the Iews, the originall of all calamities, in witnessiug that their happinesse rests onely in Gods being well pleased with them. For hence wee may gather, that God was displeas'd with them before, whilest they were afflicted. Moreouer, the similitude of marriage, whereby he notes out the peoples restauration, is very notable, and contains two points in it. First, that the discord betwene God & his Church shall cease. Why so? Because she that before was divorced, shall be receiued againe into the place of a wife, Gods anger being pacified; and secondly, that the multitudes of the people shall abolish the shame of their widowhood. For the land is married with her inhabitants, as the trees with the vines: on the other side, it is called a widow, when it is destitute of those who were wont to inhabit there.

The good pleasure of the Lord is in thee.] Isaiah repeates and confirms that which wee said euen now; to wit, that it is of Gods free fauour, when the Church is restored and seled in her first estate, and that the land receiues her inhabitants. For if he turnes his louing countenance away from vs, and reiects vs, there is nothing to be expected but desolation: neither can we then expect any thing that shall doe vs good, either from the power or policies of men.

Verf. 5. For as a young man marrieth a virgin, so shall thy sonnes marrie thee, and as a bridegroom is glad of the bride, so shall thy God reioyce ouer thee.

This verse onely contains the exposition and confirmation of the former. But there seemes to bee some repugnancie betwene them, because in the latter member hee makes God the sole husband of his Church; and in the first he assignes her many. Yet the solution is easie: for when we speake of this marriage of the Church, she hath but one husband, that is, God; who alwaies attributes this title to himselfe. Now this is accomplished in Christ, to whom the Pastors marrie and couple the Church, as a chaste and pure virgin; as Saint Paul speakes, 2. Cor. 11. 2. Notwithstanding, this hinders not that this similitude of the marriage should not be transferred to expresse the vnitie of faith, which all the children of God haue with their mother the Church: yea, God is so her husband, that yet hee marries her with all nations that are gathered into her: for whilest shee is left destitute of children, she is after a sort left as a desolate and solitarie widow. This therefore is spoken in regard of God, who by his wisdom, ratifying the holy vnion betwene the members of his Church, extends the fruit of this marriage to all the body.

From this verse we must gather, that then the Church of God shall bee truly peopled; that is to say, shall haue many children when shee shall be married vnto her husband; namely, vnto God: for at him we must beginne, that he may raigne ouer his Church, and that vnder his conduct we may be gathered into her lap. Then indeed shall this marriage be holy: but if this be wanting, it is not the multitude of people that makes the Church, but rather a filthy brothell house. As in the Papacie, where Gods name roles vp and downe amongst them, and yet his Maiestie is no where more defaced with horrible sacrileges.

Verf. 6. I haue set watchmen vpon thy walles, O Ierusalem, which all the day and all the night continually shall not cease: yee that are mindfull of the Lord, keepe not silence.

The Prophet minding to describe the perfect felicitie of Christs kingdom, collectes into a summe all things that belong to the prosperous and flourishing estate of a Citie or Country. To the rest of the former benefits then hee adds garisons and watch; because the abundance and sufficiency of all things would serue to small purpose, vnlesse we were well fortified against the rage of the enemy. Hee therefore shewes, that the Lord will not onely furnish the Church with all things necessary, but will also plant sufficient gardes about her, to defend her from the eues & enemies: that thus it might appeare how God is the author both of the inward and outward blessed life.

Shall not cease.] To hold ones peace, is heere taken to be quiet. As if he should say; They shall euermore be vpon their watch, to espie a far off imminent dangers.

But in the next place he shewes what these watchmen are; to wit, those that are mindfull of the Lord: that is, such as haue his name in an honourable estimation. The Angels also may bee put in the number of these watchmen, for we know that is their office: Psal. 91. 11. But in regard they watch willingly and cheerefully for the saluation of the Church, Heb. 1. 14. and haue no neede of being quickened vp by exhortations, the Prophet directes his speech to other watchmen.

The verbe which he vseth is somewhat ambiguous. For sometimes it signifies Remember, and sometimes To call to minde: either of both expositions sute not ill. But me thinks the Prophet meant simply to say; that these watchmen should be Ministers of God, to celebrate his name. Some translate; I hope which which publiſh or preach the Lord. But this is too conſtrained, and breaks off the Prophets ſentence: for ſuch expoſitors keep not themſelves to the ſimilitude of watchmen of a Citie, which the Prophet here vſeth. Albeit indeed his meaning was to teach without any figure; that the Church ſhall be freed from all dangers, in regard ſhee hath God for the protector of her ſituation.

And yet reſpect muſt alwaies be had to the nature of Chriffs kingdome here on earth. For it is not maintained, neither by weapons, nor force of men: but as it is in it ſelfe ſpiritual; ſo is it upheld by ſpiritual armour, and defences. The Lord then will haue his Miniſters, whoſe ſeruiſe hee will vſe for the preſeruation of his Church by the ſword of the ſpirit, which is the word of God. ſhee ſhall be ſafe lie kept then, not by mans helpe; but by the ſecret and ſpiritual power of God.

And the Prophet in ſaying, You that remember the Lord, expoundeth himſelfe. Now howſoeuer this ſentence appertaines to all the faithfull, who are commanded as much as in them is to extoll the name of God in all places: yet hee alludes eſpeciallie to the Priests, who being public officers were to leade the way into others, and to bee giuen withall their affections to the ſetting forth of Gods praifes. Beſides, the Paſtors are here admoniſhed of their duties: for it is not enough to feede the Lords ſocke, vnleſſe therewithall they defend the ſame againſt the aſſaults of wolues and robbers. They muſt be vigilant then, and ſtand day and night in their watch-tower, if they meane to diſcharge their duties as they ought. The Lord forbids them to be ſilent: for he would haue them carefull and diligent in their places. In which hee ſhewes what great care he hath ouer his hurch. This text alſo witneſſeth that it is a ſingular fauour of God, when he ſends faithfull Paſtors amongſt vs that are careful of our ſaluation. For we lie open to infinite dangers, and are by and by inuironed with Satans nets, if the Lord preferue vs not by his ſuccours. We ought therefore euermore to begge of him that hee would furniſh vs with meete helpes, which he knows to be neceſſarie for vs.

Verſ. 7. And giue him no reſt till hee repaire, and vntill he ſet vp Ieruſalem, the praife of the world.

Hitherunto the Prophet hath diſcourſed touching the office and dutie of teaching. But becauſe this would not ſuffice without prayer were added, hee exhorts the Miniſters thereto. For as I take it the particle him, muſt be referred vnto God. We ought therefore to be inſtant, and to importune y Lord continually, that he may be pleaſed to giue good ſucceſſe vnto our labors, which otherwiſe would become vnfruitfull. So then whileſt we ſhall diligently employ our ſelues in preaching the word, and forcible reſiſt and withſtand the prauiſes of Satan with all our might, let vs learne therewithall forthwith, to turne our hearts towards God, beſeeching him by humble prayer, that hee would not ſuffer our labours to be in vaine. Euen as in the beginning of the Chapter then, hee referred ſilence vnto doctrine, ſaying, That hee would not hold his tongue: ſo in this place hee referres it vnto prayers, by which we obtaine ſome fruit from the doctrine. Yea the very Angels whet on our diligence by their example to this affection of prayer: For one of them, as we reade in Zach. 1. 12. praies with great ſeruenſe for the reſtauration of the Church.

Till hee repaire.] Hence let vs gather that theſe are two diſtinct benefits, firſt, in enjoying faithfull paſtors which watch for the ſaluation of the Church: ſecondly, that the Church is reſtored and vpheld in her eſtate by their paines. But God who ſpeakes here, doth properly attribute y beſtowing of theſe benefits to himſelfe, as in many other places. How ſhall they preach, ſaith S. Paul, vnleſſe they be ſent: Rom. 10. 15. It is Gods peculiar office then to eſtabliſh good paſtors: for otherwiſe no man would cuer bee ſet to exerciſe ſo difficult & inſupportable a charge: 2. Cor. 2. 16. Againe, hee onlie ſets forward the reſtauration of the Church by their means, for their endeouours would proue vtterlie vaine and fruitleſſe, if the Lord gaue them not good ſucceſſe. Here we ſee then, that mens external labours, are ioyned to the efficacy of the holie Ghoſt. For albeit the Lord himſelf alone begins, and makes an end, yet hee vſeth inſtruments by whom hee ſerues his turne for the erecting & building vp of his Church. This admoniſheth vs, not to be out of hart, no, though we ſee nothing but ruines, and a woſull ſcattering. But let vs pray that the Lord would bring all conſuſions into a right order: which he for his part hath alſo promiſed to doe.

Where he addes, vntill he ſet vp Ieruſalem, it is as much to ſay, As to cauſe the Churches beautie to appeare: ſo as matter of ioy may proceed thence. For as long as wee onlie feele Gods ſeueritic, wee become mute and confounded: but when he ſrees vs from trouble, therewithall he reuiues vs and opens our mouths in furniſhing vs with matter of praile and thankſgiuing.

Verſ. 8. The Lord hath ſworne by his right hand, and by his ſtrong arme, ſurely I will no more giue thy corne to be meate for thine enemies, and ſurely the ſonnes of the ſtrangers ſhall not drinke thy wine, for the which thou haſt laboured.

Iſaiah proſecutes the ſimilitudes which hee vſed before. For in regard Chriffs kingdome could not otherwiſe be deſcribed, by reaſon of the ſhallowneſſe of our capacities, it was requiſite it ſhould be repreſented before vs vnder ſuch borrowed ſpeeches. Euen as heretofore then, hee hath promiſed promised abundance of all good things: and secondly, a faithfull gard, who should carefully watch for the good estate of the elect: so in this place hee promiseth peace and tranquillitie, which the faithfull should quietly inioy, and should never be disappointed thereof. As if he should say; Whatsoever thou possessedst heeretofore, was exposed to pillage and to the spoile: but now all things shall be secured vnto thee, and thou shalt be abundantly satisfied with thy wheate, and with thy wine. In a word, thy felicitie shall bee full of tranquillitie.

But in regard our pueruositie is such, that we cannot beleue in God, though he makes vs neuer so large and liberall promises; therefore Isaiah brings in the Lord binding himselfe with an oath: for the Lord stoopes so low vnto vs, as to sweare, the more to reprove our distrust and obstinacie. Now he sweares by himselfe, because hee hath no greater to sweare by; as the Apostle speaks, Heb. 6. 16. Now he also mentions the right hand of God: that is to say, his power; because it was fitting for this purpose. As if hee should say; If there bee any power in mee, then will I manifest the same for your saluation: and lest your mindes should wax drowie in so difficult a thing, I sweare by my invincible hand, that conquers all things, that you shall remaine safe and sound by my meanes, whatsoeuer dangers can befall you to the contrary. As oft then as hee promiseth vs saluation, let vs forthwith bethinke vs of his verue and power.

If to giue, is a phrase of speech wherein more is vnderstood then that which is vttered: and it teacheth vs with what holinesse and feare we ought to vse an oath. The words themselves are as much in effect as if he had said; Let mee not be beleued hereafter, if the euent of these things doe not manifest the truth of these promises.

When hee promiseth a peaceable inioying of wheat and wine, it is to shew, that when the Church is deslituted of them, that it falls not out by chance, but by the iust iudgement of God. For as oft as the enemies spoile and rob vs of them, let vs assure our selues that this falls out by Gods permission, according as he threatens vs in his Law: Deut. 28. 33. As on the contrary, it is by the speciall blessing of his hand, when every one sits in peace vnder his owne vine, and vnder his owne figgetree: 1. King. 4. 25.

Verf. 9. But they that haue gathered it, shall eat it, and praise the Lord, and the gatherers thereof shall drinke it in the Courts of my sanctuary.

See heere both the exposition and confirmation of the former sentence. For hauing protested that hee would no more suffer the goods of the church to be exposed for a pray, he now addes, that shee shall inioy them. In the meane while he shewes, that we may iustly call wheat and wine ours, when wee haue obtained them by our honest labour: for those who rob others of their bread, or get it by vnlawfull meanes, hold it not by any right from the Lord; neither can they attribute goods gotten, to his blessing, as if they iustly possessed them. To which also, answers that in Psal. 228. 2. Thou shalt ease the labour of shine hands: thou shalt be blessed, and is shall goe vrvell with thee.

But seeing he assignes food to such as shall till the ground; wherefore saith he, that they shall giue thanks to God? Wherefore should men praise the Lord when they reape the come, and gather in the grapes by their labour and industrie? This might seeme to be but a fained thanksgiving, seeing it is attributed to mens good husbandry, and that God should deserue no thanks for that which a man hath achieved by his honest paines. But wee must note that after the Prophet hath taught them the lawfull meanes of getting their liuing, he therewithall addes, that our labour shall be in vaine, if the Lord himselfe doe not by his blessing of the same, furnish vs with things necessarie. For all that we inioy, belongs of right to him: and to him alone, ought we to giue the honor of all that which we haue gotten.

When he addes, in my holy courts: he alludes to the solemnitie of the sacrifices. They might drinke any where else: it was in euery ones power to eat at home. But he alludes to the custome which they held in sacrificing their first fruits vnto God, at what time they consecrated the reuenues of the whole yeere, as the Law inioined them: Leuit. 2. 12. and 23. 10. And this sentence is very frequent in the bookes of Moses; Thou shalt eat and reioice in the presence of thy God: Deut. 12. 18.

Verf. 10. Goe thorow, goe thorow the gates: prepare you the way for the people: cast vp, cast vp the way, and gather out the stones, and set up the standard for my people.

From the former words he concludes, that they shall freely passe thorow the gates of the Citie, which were either shut vp, or broken before: shut vp, during the siege of the encmie: broken, when the Citie was destroyed and rased euen with the ground. Thus his meaning is then, that the Citie shall be so restored, that the inhabitants thereof shall be gathered in great troopes, and that they shall often passe to and fro.

Some thinke that this speech is directed to the Pastors, namely, they should enter into the gates, and passe thorow before others, as their leaders. But the sentence is generall and figuratiue; wherein hee compares the Church to a Citie well peopled, which notwithstanding had been laid waste for a time, and desolate, as Ierusalem was. Others descant more wittily, and say; that the gates of the Church shall be open, when remission of finnes is there preached; by meanes whereof, God calls men vnto himself. But if we will haue the Prophets true meaning, then let vs note that all this is spoken figuratiuely, as wee touched before.

Cleanſe the way for the people.] See wherein the office of the Paſtors properly conſiſts, but the Prophet hath ſpoken generally, and addreſſeth his ſpeech to all ſuch whoſe ſervice God vſeth to prepare the way for his people. Then, he ſpoke to the Medes and Perſians, through whoſe means the Lord gaue the Jewes paſſage to returne home, but afterwards he comprehends all others, by whom God reſtored his Church. Now he commands all men with authoritie to cleanſe and make the way plaine, that the Jewes might know how euery impediment ſhould eaſily be removed, and that their greateſt enemies ſhould forthwith yeeld obedience to Gods commandement: and herewithall he alſo bids the faithfull to ſit themſelves in good earneſt for their iourney, as if many workmen were already preſt to ſecond them. And the weight which is in the repetition of the words ought to be noted, for they ſerue for the further confirmation of the matter.

Paue it with ſtones.] The verb Sakal, ſignifies as wel to take away the ſtones as to paue. And I had rather take it in this latter ſignification, though the expoſitors for the moſt part be of the contrarie opinion. Hereunto appertaines that which he ſaith touching the ſetting vp of the ſtandard. For his meaning is, that the nations ſhall as readily obey Gods commandement, as the ſubiects doe their Princes. For they aſſemble and runne together when the enſigne is diſplaid, and employ their endeours to bring back the people. He ſpeakes very magnificentlie then of Gods power, that the Jewes might be well aſſured to be reſtored to their firſt eſtate one day.

Verſ. 11. Behold, the Lord hath proclaimed to the ends of the world: tell the daughter of Zion, Behold thy Saviour commeth: behold his wages is with him, and his worke is before him.

The Prophet meant to ſay, that ſo Lord in working miraculoſlie beyond all hope and conceit of fleſh and blood will cauſe all nations to know, that this was done by his commandemens. For ſome might obiect, How can it be that the nations who now proudly reſiſt God ſhould come to yeeld him obedience? He answers, Becauſe the Lord will proclaime your returne, in ſuch wiſe, that they ſhall vnderſtand how you muſt be reſtored by his commandement.

But as touching that he addes, Tell the daughter of Zion, it properly appertaines to the Prophets and Miniſters of the word, to whom the Lord giues this charge, to promiſe ſaluation and deliuerance vnto his Church. Hence wee gather that theſe promiſes ought not to be reſtrained to one particular time, but muſt bee extended euen to all ages, till the ſecond appearing of Chriſt. For if wee beginne at the returne out of Babylon into Iudea, wee muſt paſſe along ſtill to the coming of Chriſt, becauſe then this prophecie was truly fulfilled, and the end of the deliuc-rance came; becauſe the Saviour then appeared, when the grace of God was publiſhed by the Goſpell. In a word, he affirms that Gods voice ſhall one day ſound from the Eaſt to the Weſt, and ſhall not be vnderſtood of one people onely, but of all. Now this voice is; Behold, thy Saviour commeth: which we know is the proper voice of the Goſpell. He therefore inioines the Teachers of the Church to raiſe vp the hearts of the faithfull, with the coming of the Lord; though vnto the people it ſeemed a thing far remote.

But this promiſe belongs chiefly to Chriſtes kingdome, who fully and perfectly did accompliſh theſe things, for he indeed ſhewed himſelfe to be the ſaviour of the world, as we haue ſcene heretofore in Chap. 40. 10. And left any ſeruple might remaine, he furniſheth the Lord with power, when he ſhall appeare, as it is in that very place which we before alleaged; for hee vſeth the very ſame words there which are heere mentioned, as if he meant to ſhew, that as ſoon as it ſhould pleaſe God to ſtretch forth his hand, the effect will in a moment appeare: for whileſt he either ceaseth or deſerres, fleſh and blood eſteemes him idle. Wee alſo ſee that many fantaſticall ſpirits forge I know not what diuinitie, as if they meant to paint out a dead image. The Prophet therefore very aptly addes the worke and reward before God, to ſhew that he is the juſt iudge of the world in the time of neede.

Verſ. 12. And they ſhall call them, the holy people, the redeemed of the Lord, and thou ſhalt be named a Citie ſought out, and not forſaken.

HE ſets forth the benefit of the Lords comming, namely, that in ſhewing how his elect are as deare vnto him as his owne heritage, he will make it knowne to all the world that the couenant of Adoption by him contracted with Abraham, is not in vaine: for this cauſe he calles them the holy people, in regard the Lord had ſeparated and conſecrated them vnto himſelfe, for though he gouerned all the nations of the world, yet he vouchſafed to chuſe the poſteritie of Abraham, to haue a ſpeciall care thereof. And in this ſenſe God meant to ſay, that his people ſhall be holy, when he ſhall appeare their saviour and redeemer. And as the people are called prophane when they be plunged in their dregs, being afflicted and vexed by the ſcoffings of the wicked: ſo on the contrarie they are ſaid to be holy, when the Lord ſhewes himſelfe by effects to be the God of their ſaluation, which came to paſſe in their wonderfull deliuerance, for then God ſhewed indeed that he remembered his holy couenant touching his heritage which he had (as mans reaſon deemed) utterly reiected and caſt off. For in theſe words ſought out and not forſaken, we muſt note the oppoſition betweene the time wherein the Lord ſued out this diuorce againſt his people: and that wherein he reconciled thoſe againe vnto himſelfe whom he had put away.

The fruit of the Lords comming.

THE LXIII. CHAPTER.

Verf. 1. Who is this that commeth from Edom with red garments from Bozrah? he is glorious in his apparrell, and walketh in his great strength. I speake in righteousness, and am mightie to saue.

A prevention of a dangerous temptation.

THE expositors Christian haue misinterpreted this place, as if that which is heere said should appertaine vnto Christ, seeing the Prophet speakes simple of God himselfe, and thus they haue made a tes- sus died all ouer with red, in regard he was thorowly bathed in his owne blood which he shed vpon the Crosse. But the Prophet had no such meaning at all. The true and plaine sense is, That the Lord presents himselfe here clothed with red garments before the people, to aduertise all that he would maintaine the cause of his chosen, and be auenged on their enemies. For whilst the people of God were pressed with infinite miseries, and that the Idumeans, with the rest of their aduersaries (who were as it seemed out of all danger) overflowed in all excess of riot: it might dangerouslie tempt the Iewes to thinke, either that these things were guided by fortune; or that God made light account of his children: or that at least he chastised them: with ouer great seueritie. So then, if God corrected the Iewes because of the contempt of his name and religion; how much more were the Jdumeans and other enemies to bee roughlie dealt withall, being the sworne enemies thereof? The Prophet meetes with this so cumbersome a temptation by bringing in God the auenger, Psal. 94. 1. retuening from the slaughter of the Edomites, as if hee had been stained all ouer with their blood.

The naturall meaning of this verse.

The force of interrogations.

Now this description is liuely and full of efficacie, when hee saith, who is this? For such an interrogation rauisheth the minds of the hearers into an admiration, and affects them more, then if it had been vttered in plaine termes. The Prophet did the rather vse it, that hee might thereby awaken the Iewes, who were become drecuzie and besotted. We know that the Idumeans were somewhat akin to the Iewes, in regard they were descended from the same ancestors with them. For they were thus called of Esau, who was also called Edom: Gen. 36. 1. These hauing corrupted the pure worship of God, though they had the same marke of circumcision, notwithstanding persecuted the Iewes most despitefully. And besides, they exasperated the rage of other enemies against the Iewes; manifesting to all what great pleasure they tooke in the ruine of this poore people, as it appears by their egging on of the Babylonians. Remember O Lord, saith the

See Obad. 10. 11.

Church, Psalm. 137. the children of Edom, who in the day of Ierusalem's ruine, said, downe with it, downe with it euen to the ground. Thus then the Prophet denounceth, that the Edomites shall also keepe their turne, in being iudged according to their deserts, that none might otherwise thinke, but they should surely be punished for the barbarous crueltie by them exercised against their brethren. For the Lord wil so auenge himselfe of the wicked and enemies of the Church, that hee will thereby shew what care hee hath ouer her.

Now howsoeuer blood doth vsuallie spot and staine him that vanquisheth, yet Isaiah affirms that God shall bee glorious in his apparrell, after he hath made hauocke of his enemies. As in chap. 34. 6. we haue seene that the slaughter of the wicked there was compared to the sacrifices, in regard Gods glorie shined therein. For what garment could hee put on more glorious then his iustice? Therefore that he might speake honourable of Gods iust reuengings, hee shewes that the blood wherewith he is besprinkled by the slaughter of these desperate wicked ones, is glorious and excellent. As if hee had said, Thinke not that God resembles any common person: for though hee hee died ouer with blood, yet shall not this hinder, but that his Maiestie and glorie shall shine therein.

The Iewish expositors take the word ualking diuerſlie: for some among them referre it to the people whom the Lord should bring backe from the captiuitie: others, to the nations, whom the Lord would transport into other countries, notwithstanding they then seemed to haue a settled habitation. But I thinke it will better sute to the scope of the Prophets text, if we take it absolute. The Prophet then describes the glorious ualking of God, and his noble presence, by which he will manifest his admirable power.

I am, that speake.] The Lord himselfe answers: which carries much more maiestie with it, then if the Prophet had spoken in his owne person. And herein he brings the faithful to the former prophesies, to enforce them, that not only Gods righteousnesse and goodnesse, but also his faithfulnesse should appeare in these iudgements. As if he should say, Now you see the accomplishment of that which hitherunto I haue declared vnto you by my seruants. For this effect of my promises, plainly demonstrates that I am true of my word; and that I speake from my heart without faining, so as I will not by any meanes disappoint your expectations. Now the vision of it selfe had not bene forcible enough, vnlesse the Iewes had therewithall bin put in mind of the things they had heard of before. Seeing the end thereof was to settle their hearts vpon the saluation of God, hee

Verſ. 2. Wherefore is thine apparell red, and thy garments like him that treadeth in the wine preſſe?

HE protecuets the ſame argument. But becauſe the bare recitall would not haue been of ſufficient weight, therefore he doth not at once manifeſt from whence this red colour in Gods garments did proceede, but rather continues his Interrogation ſtill, that he might the better rouze vp their ſpirits, to the conſideration of ſo rare & vnwonted a thing. For his meaning is to ſay, that this ſprinkling with blood is a matter extraordinary, and not ſcene before. And therefore the ſimilitude of the preſſer of grapes, ſutes very well. For Borab, which hee mentioned in the firſt verſe, was ſituated in a countie of vines: as if he would haue ſaid, the grape gatherings ſhal be much differing fro the old wont: for blood, in ſtead of the iuce of grapes, ſhall now bee ſqueezed out.

Verſ. 3. I haue trodden the wine- preſſe alone, and of all the people, there was none with mee: for I will tread them in mine anger, and tread them vnder foot in my wrath, and their blood ſhall be ſprinkled vpon my garments, and I will ſtaine all my raiment.

NOW the Prophet expounds the viſion, and ſhewes wherefore the Lord is thus died with blood; namely, becauſe he muſt be auenged on the Idumeans, and other enemies, who haue vſed his people very inhumanly. It ſhould bee a thing ridiculous to reſerre this verſe vnto Chriſt, in regard he hath redeemed vs without the helpe of any man: for the Prophets meaning is, that the Lord will ſo puniſh the Idumeans, that he ſhall ſtand in need of no mans helpe, becauſe himſelfe will bee ſtrong enough to roote them out. For the Iewes might obiect, that the Idumeans were mightie: that no warre was made vpon them, but that they flouriſhed and liued at their eaſe. But the Lord ſhewes y this ſhall not hinder him from ſmitting them, when him liſteth. I grant he vſed mens helpe, when hee auenged himſelfe of the Idumeans: but yet in ſuch wiſe, that it was apparant to all how the whole action was managed by his owne hand: neither could any thing therein be aſcribed either to the counſels, or forces of men. For they were ſurprized with a ſudden and v unexpected deſtruction: in reſpect whereof the people could not doubt, but that God only was the author thereof, ſeeing they had been ſo often aduerted of it before.

Where he ſaith, And of all the people there was not one with him; it is to ſhew, that howſoever ſome ſhould be, raiſed vp to bring deſtruction vpon Edom, yet Gods worke therein ſhould be ſeparate from theirs. For the infidell enemies neuer dreamed of auenging the vniuſt cruelties of the Idumeans. The Lord would then that his iudgement ſhould ſhine and be conſidered of in the clattering of the harneſſe and weapons, and in theſe violent moouings.

I will goe vpon them. For mine owne parte I willingly retaine the future ſeace, in regard the Prophet ſpeakes of things to come, and not yet accompliſhed. For the Idumeans were to bee ſeuerely puniſhed for their cruelty: though for the preſent, they were at their eaſe, and in great tranquility.

Wee haue alreadie in part touched the cauſe why the Prophet hath vſed the ſimilitude of a bloodie preſſer, which is both a hideous and woſull ſight: yet therewithall he addes, that the puniſhments and vengeance of God againſt his enemies are properly his owne, as if himſelfe had gathered them together, when he ſhall either conſume or ſcatter them. Euen as in Chap. 34.6. ſuch an execution is called a ſolemne ſacrifice: to teach vs that wee are no leſſe to glorifie God, when hee executes his iudgements, then when hee manifeſts the tokens of his mercie. In the meane while hee expreſſeth his ſingular loue towards the Iewes, ſeeing for their ſakes he vouchſafeth to ſprinkle himſelfe with the blood of his enemies ſo farre; that hee vſeth the verbe to ſtaine, or to deſile.

In my vwrath.] The Prophet ſhewes that this alone ſufficeth for the deſtruction of the Idumeans: namely, that the Lord is angrie with them. As if he ſhould ſay, No man ſhall be able to deliuer them when God ſhal haue to doe with them. Hence we are to gather, that mens ruine proceeds from no other cauſe but Gods vwrath: as on the contrarie, our ſaluation depends wholly vpon his meere grace. To conlude, the Lord meant here to teſtifie that the Idumeans ſhould not eſcape vnpuniſhed, ſeeing they had bin perſecutors of his Church.

Mens ruine proceeds from Gods wrath.

Verſ. 4. For the day of vengeance is in mine heart, and the yeere of my redeemed is come.

I N the firſt member of this verſe, the Prophet ſignifies that God will not ceaſe to performe his office: though he executes not his iudgements at the firſt but deferres them to a fit opportunitie which hee foreſees to bee beſt fitting. Neither indeed ought wee to preſcribe vnto him either the time when, or the manner how he is to doe this or that; but to commit it as well to his ſecret counſell, as leaue vnto him the time when to execute all things, according to his good pleaſure. Let vs not thinke then that hee ſleepes, or is idle, when hee deferres.

In the latter member hee ſhewes, that all theſe things are done in reſpect of his loue to the faithfull, when he ſpeakes of the yeere of his redeemed. Day and yeere, are here taken for one and the ſame terme. Onely the word yeere notes out the length of the banishment, to the end the Iewes should neither despaire, nor be discontent, if their deliuerance was foreflood. Thus then the Lord punisheth and destroies the wicked, for the deliuerance of the faithfull, and for the redemption of his Church, to which hee hath a special regard. And this ought greatly to comfort vs, that when the signes of Gods wrath against the wicked appeare, wee may therewithall know, that the fruit of the blowes which light vpon their backs, shall be ours. By this also wee may euidently perceiue, that our gronings have been heard; namely, because that when God is minded to succour the afflicted, we see he armes himself with strength, for the confusion of his Churches enemies. Wherefore, howsoever the crosse lie heauily vpon vs, & presseth vs downe with the weight thereof, yet in vndergoing it patiently, let vs learne by hope to raise vp our hearts to this yeere, which God hath limited for the execution of his vengeance.

Though God ſeeme for a time to deferre, yet he will pay home at length.

Verf. 5. And I looked, and there was none to helpe; and I wondered that there was none to uphold: there fore mine owne arme helped mee, and my wrath it selfe sustained mee.

A further illustration of the former Doctrine.

Albeit the Iewes were destitute of all helpe, and that no man relieved them either by words or deedes, yet he shewes that the onely arme of the Lord shall suffice to punish the enemies, and to set his Church at libertie. Hee teacheth them then to looke for saluation from God onely; that they should not gaze heere and there, but depend wholly vpon God, who stands in no need of other mens helpe. For this cause he brings him in wondering, that no man reached him forth his hand, when he was about to execute his iudgements, the better to imprint this doctrine in the hearts of the faithfull, namely, that God needs no mans aid, but is al sufficient of himselfe to obtaine saluation for his people. And by this circumstance he further illustrates that succour, which he was determined to giue vnto the faithfull; partly to correct their distrust, and partly to exhort them to thankfulness for the time to come: for when God saith he wounded, and was vterly astonished; hee puts vpon him another person, because this astonishment was indeed properly in the Iewes, who neither would, nor could belicue more then what men were able to doe. He therefore opposeth his arme to all meanes whatsoever; shewing that hee will satisfie himselfe with the inuincible power thereof, as well to manifest himselfe the Sauour of his Church, as to scatter and ouerwhelme all the wicked.

Verf. 6. Therefore I will tread downe the people in my wrath, and make them drunken in mine indignation, and will bring downe their strength to the earth.

The conclusion.

From the former sentence hee concludes that Gods wrath is strong enough to confound the wicked, without hauing aid from any other; lest the power of the enemies might any way daunt the Iewes from conceiuing good hope.

To make drunken, must heere bee taken in a contrary sense, to that which it is in some other places, which we haue expounded heretofore; as in Chap. 29. 9. one while we are said to bee drunke when God takes from vs our senses, or smites vs with giddinesse; or when as at length hee giues vs vp into a reprobate mind. But it here signifies no other thing, but to fill, or to beate them to the full, as we commonly say: and this similitude is often, vsed of the Prophets.

I will bring downe their strength: that is to say; though they thinke themselves inuincible, yet will I bring them downe and confound them. The summe is, that the Iewes being afflicted, ought not to despaire of their saluation, as if God hated them; neither to wax obstinate vnder his rods, as if they were smitten at all aduenture; because the rest of the nations, who now oppressed them, should be punished, things should be changed, and those that cried victory before the conquests, should not escape in the end. Now he cullies out the Idumeans for a particular instance and example herof, becauie they dwelt nearest, and were better knowne then others, who also most molested them.

Verf. 7. *I will remember the mercies of the Lord, and the praises of the Lord, *according vnto all that the Lord Or, as vpon. hath giuen vs; and for the great goodnesse towards the house of Israel, which hee hath giuen them according to his tender loue, and according to his great mercies.

Isaiah comforts the people in this so miserable and wofull case, and by his example commands the Iews that in time of their extreme affliction, they should call to mind the former mercies of the Lord, and should beate take them to their praier; that so they might not resemble hypocrites, who neuer haue any taste in Gods goodnesse, but in time of prosperitie. For in aduersitie they are so cast downe, that all the promises in the Bible will not be able to comfort them. Now when the Lord chastens vs, we ought to remember his former benefits, and to breake out into the extolling of them, still hoping of better for the time to come: for God is alwaies like himselfe, and neuer changeth neither his counsel, nor will. And therefore, if we giue place to his mercy, we shall neuer be cast off. This I take to be the context, though others take it otherwise, namely, that the Prophet hauing spoken heretofore of the peoples captiuitie, comforts now himselfe by this assurance of Gods mercy, because God was purposed to saue some. But they are deceiued, in regard they thinke that Isaiah bath hitherto spoken of the Iewes; as if God meant to punish none but them. Whereas he on the contrary teſtifies, that other nations ſhould alſo be chaſtiſed, that the Iewes ſhould not perſwade themſelves that God only hated them: For which cauſe he now exhorts them to celebrate the memorie of thoſe benefits which God had beſtowed vpon their fathers, that by their example they might the better come to apprehend Gods loue towards themſelves. The ſcope of the text alſo ſhewes, that the Iewes are conioined with their fathers, to the end the covenant common to them both might encourage them to hope for better times.

According vnto all things.) He ſteth this particle As, to ſhew, that in aduerſitie theſe benefits of God giuen vnto his people ſhould forthwith come vnto our remembrances, no leſſe then if they were preſent before our eyes, though otherwiſe they may ſeeme to be worne out with age. For if they appertained not vnto vs, it were but labor loſt to remember them, which the Prophet alſo confirms by the particle For. Why ſo? Becauſe the Iewes being members of the ſame body, he had good reaſon to account them as the right ſucceſſors of their grandfathers, and other anceſtors. Truly Iſaiab felt not theſe benefits paſt which he heere mentions, but in regard they had bin beſtowed vpon the Church, the fruit of them reached in part vnto him, becauſe he was a member of the ſame.

And queſtionles this communion of Saines whereof we make profeſſion, ought to be of ſuch value with vs, as to thinke that whatſoever the Church receiues from the hand of God, is alſo giuen to vs. For there is but one Church of God; and that which is now, hath nothing ſeparate from that which was in times paſt.

Iſaiab alſo expounds himſelfe when hee adds, for his great goodnes towards the houſe of Iſraell. Seeing then the Lord ſhewed himſelfe a liberall benefactor towards his people, we ought at this day to expect the like, in regard that we be of his houſhold, and members of his Church. Wel then, albeit we feele him angry againſt vs for our ſinnes, yet muſt we cheere vp our ſpirits through a liuely hope, and arme our ſelves againſt all diſtruſt, becauſe God can not forſake his Church.

In the meane while we haue to note that the Prophet highly extols and magnifies Gods mercie heere, thereby to reach vs, that the foundation of our ſaluation and of all other benefits flowes from thence. And this ſhuts out all merits of men, that ſo no man may preſume to attribute any thing at all vnto himſelfe. But to the end this doctrine may be the better vnderſtood, let vs conſider the time whereof Iſaiab ſpeakes. Religion and Iuſtice then principallie bare ſway and flouriſhed: for howſoever the people had corrupted themſelves, yet Moses, Aaron, and other holy perſonages ſhewed forth good teſtimonies of their innocencie and holines. And yet the Prophet reacheth, that all the good things which Moses and the reſt received, were not to be aſcribed to their merits, but to Gods mercies. But what are we in compariſon of Moses, that wee ſhould thinke to merit ought at Gods hands? Thus then as theſe repetitions of Gods great goodnes, tender loue, and great mercies, doe greatly ſerue for the raiſing vp on high the weak and broken hearted, that they may overcome their greateſt temptations, ſo ought the ſame to put to flight and to ſwallow vp all thought and conceit of mens merits.

Verſ. 8. For he ſaid, ſurely they are my people, children that will not lie: ſo he was their Saviour.

HE ſpeakes of the peoples election, and brings in God diſcourſing of it, to put vs in mind of the end of our vocation, namely, that he will haue a people ſeparated vnto him from the world, in the miſt of whom his name may be worſhipped and called vpon. And yet therewithall he accuſeth the Iewes ingratitude, who deceiued God of his expectation: not that the Lord was indeed deceiued, ſeing he forſaw well enough what they would be, which he had alſo teſtified by Moses, Deut. 32. 15. 16. But the ſcripture ſpeakes thus, when men by their ynthankfulnes care not to deſtroy the Lord of his due, as wee haue ſeene in Chap. 5. I looked that it ſhould haue brought me forth grapes, but behold, wilde grapes. He ſpeakes not of Gods ſecret counſel, but ſpeakes after the manner of men, to ſet forth the mutuall conſent which ought to be betweene God and the faithful, that all thoſe to whom he vouchſafes his preſence as their father, ſhould be readie for their parts to answer when he calles vnto them: for this foundation remains ſure, namely, that none of Gods elect can periſh, becauſe God knows who are his. 2. Tim. 2. 19. And yet we know that the end of our vocation is to lue in holines & righteousnes, as all the Scripture witneſſeth, and alſo according to that which hath bin often ſaid in many places: Chap. 43. 21. & 55. 5.

The Lord had iuſt cauſe therefore to ſay that he had choſen the people to be holy and true, and that he might haue children farre from lies and vanitie. But the people did falſifie their promiſed faith, and reuolted from that ſimplicite of heart which they ought to haue followed: for they were whollie replete with fraude and hypocriſie; and yet the Prophet giues them hope of pardon, if ſo be they would ſeek the Lord, and humble theſelves before him with true repentance.

He alſo notes out that which is the principall in Gods ſeruite, to wit, that we bring with vs thereunto a pure and ypriſt heart. Whence it alſo follows, that the Lord neuer forſakes vs, till we haue bin diſloyall towards him in breaking our faith. Seeing this people then pleaſed themſelves in their vices, it was needfull they ſhould be firſt convinced of their infidelitie, that being conuerted vnto God, they might in the end feele him their ſaviour.

*Verſ. 9. * In all their troubles he was troubled, and the Angell * of his preſence ſaued them: in his loue and in his mercie* he redeemed them, and he bare them and carried them alwaies continuallie.

The inestimable loue which God beares to his Church.

HE amplifies and sets forth Gods goodnes towards his people, shewing, that he bestowed benefits vpon their fathers whilst they suffred themselves to be conducted by him: yea, he had such care ouer them, that himselfe was troubled in their troubles, and bare their miseries and anguishes. In speaking thus, he notes out the inestimable loue which God beares towards his chosen. And the Lord also the better to draw and allure vs to come vnto him speaks after the manner of men, attributing vnto himselfe all the affection, loue, and fatherly compassion that can possible be in them. And yet it is impossible to thinke of any loue or good will of men in this world, which he farre surmounts not.

No loue comparable to Gods loue.

Iyterly reiect not the other exposition, to wit, that the people were not troubled in their trouble; because God alwaies supplied them with some remedies for y allwaging of their sorrowes. But in my iudgement, the learned expositors haue hit the marke, in taking the first sense: wherein the Prophet testifies that God laid vpon himselfe the whole weight of the peoples burthen; to comfort them in their calamities and anguishes. Not that he can any way be grieved: but hee attributes to himselfe humane passions by a figure much vsed.

God no way touched with humane afflictions.

Afterwards he manifests the effect of this care, namely, in that he alwaies saued them by his Angels, whom hee calles the angell of his face: because he was a witness of Gods presence; and as it were his herald to execute his commandements. To teach vs, that the Angels runne not before they bee sent, neither that they intrude themselves into this office of succoring vs, by any priuate motion of their owne. For the Lord vseth their seruities; and manifests his presence to vs by their means. The Angels can doe nothing of themselves, neither doe they yeeld vs any succour further forth than as the Lord sends them to bee the Ministers of our saluation: Heb. 1.14. Les vs not stay our thoughts vpon them then, seeing their office is only to lead vs directly vnto God.

The seruice of Angels.

If any had rather say that the liuely image of God, is here noted out by this Angell; who being the conductor and protector of the people, did therein openly manifest the face and presence of God as in a glasse; such a sense will not be amisse. And for my part I doubt not but that the office of sauiug ought to be attributed vnto Christ, who as we know, is the great Angell of the couenant, vnder whose leading, sauegard and protection the Church hath euer hitherunto been vpheld in safetie.

Mal. 3.1.

The cause from whence all benefits proceede.

In his loue he redeemed them.] The Prophet shewes what the cause is from whence these great benefits proceeded: namely, Gods loue and good pleasure. As Moses also teacheth, Deut. 4.37, and 7.7.8. Whence is it that God hath gathered thy fathers, saith hee, but because hee loved them, and did set his heart vpon them? And thus he meant to dispossesse them of all opinion that they might conceiue touching any merit: for in themselves they were proud and arrogant and insulted more then they had cause. Now yee see the reason why he shewes, that Gods onelic free bounty was the cause of so many blessings.

In the next place Isaiah takes vp the similitude which Moses vsed in his song: namely, that God bare his people, as an Eagle; which teacheth her young ones to flie: Deut. 32.11. Vnlesse any had rather referre it vnto sheepe, as we haue noted, in Chap. 40.11. He shall feed his stocke like a shepheard: hee shall gather the lambs with his arme, and carrie them in his bosome, &c. And yet this similitude of a mother agrees very well: for shee not onely beares the child in her wombe: but also nurces it vp, till it be come to a competent age.

The sum is, that when the people were deliuered, it was not the first fauour that they receiued from God, but they had tasted so sufficiently thereof in the whole course of their liues, that it was to him only, to whom they were to ascribe all the benefits which had been bestowed vpon them.

For this cause the clause, alwaies continually, is added: for the Lord is neuer wearie in doing good, neither contents he himselfe to manifest the tokens of his fauour to one age only: for he neuer ceaseth to enrich and adorne his Church with diuers and fundrie gifts.

God neuer wearie in doing good to his Church.

Verf. 10. But they rebelled and vexed his holy Spirit: therefore hee was turned to be their enemy, and he fought against him.

THE Prophet now descends to the second member, in which hee shewes that the Lord was turned to be y aduersary of his children, because they rebelled, and turned back from him; as if the people (in a word) should thus haue obiected, God shewed many tokens of his louing kindnesse to our fathers for a long time together; wherefore taste we not of the same also? Is hee now of another mind. No, God forbid. But wee our selues by our disloyaltie, haue been reiected: yea, we haue thereby repelled and put backe his benefits from vs: Ier. 5.25. And yet the Prophet condemnes not onely the men of his age, but those also of the ages before. For we see that vnder the conduct of Moses himselfe, they rebelled and murmured against God, Exod. 17.2. Numb. 20.3. Hence it came, that God who tenderly loued them, as it is in verf. 7, became their enemy, by their owne rebellion. Are they punished for their iniquities then? Let them thanke themselves for it. For the Lord is inclined to nothing more then to shew mercie, neither is any thing more acceptable vnto him, then to pursue vs with his fauours.

The preuention of an obiection.

Now he saith by a phrase of speech borrowed from men, that wee vex the holie Ghost by our rebellion: to teach vs to haue care in the greater detestation; because it prouokes provokes the holy one of Israel to anger and indignation; And seeing it is one and the same Spirit, by which God workes our saluation, the Prophet aduertiseth vs that our sins doe estrange vs faire from Gods, by breaking the band of our conjunction. Vnto which tends Saint Pauls exhortation, Ephes 4.30. Griue not the holy Spirit of God, by whom yee are sealed vnto the day of redemption. From this text also we are to note, that we haue no cause to accuse those, by whom wee are molested and persecuted, because it is the Lord himselfe who fight against vs, and by their hand auenge himselfe vpon our sinnes. Let vs rather accuse our sinnes, and condemne them: for thereby wee are exposed to all the miseries, vnder which we are pressed.

Verf. 11. Then hee remembered the old time of Moses and his people, saying, Where is hee that brought them vp out of the sea, with the shepheard of his sheepe? Where is he that put his holy Spirit within him?

*Or, in the midst of whom.

The fruit of this chastisement.

This is the end of the chastisement; namely, that the people might bee awakened out of their drowziness, and bee brought to thinke vpon the things they had forgotten before; because prosperitie so besets vs, that the remembrance of God is vterly buried. These rods therefore serue to recall those thoughts which were abolished in vs; to wit, where is that God which in times past shewed so many mercies to our fathers? For I referre these things to the time past, and therefore haue translated, from the daies of old: for the word age agrees not in this place, seeing the Prophet mentions that time wherein Moses gouerned the people of God. The true sense therefore is, that the Iewes being miserably oppressed, called to minde the ancient times; in which the Lord manifested his power for the preservation of his people.

Whereas some referre this vnto God, as if he had wrestled with their obstinacie, and had rather graued the vngatefull, the leaue that worke imperfect, which hee had begun: this seemes harsh, and too far fetched. The Prophet rather recites the sighes and complaints of this poore people, after by chastisements they had learned how miserable a thing it is, not to bee vnder Gods protection.

By the Shepheard, he means Moses. Neither see I any reason why it should be translated in the plurall number, rather then in the singular. He also expresth the means by which he guided the sheepe; namely, in that hee was indued with singular graces of the holy Spirit: for to put his Spirit in the midst of him, is as much to say, as to manifest the power of his Spirit.

Others had rather referre it vnto the people. Neither contradict I their opinion: but in regard that God had chosen and ordained Moses to be the conductor of his people, it is he principally of whom it is said, that the holy Spirit was put within him. Now this Spirit was giuen him for the good of the whole people, that he might be an excellent Minister of Gods grace, and might set them at libertie. And so by consequence, the power of the Spirit of God appeared in the middest of all the people.

Verf. 12. Hee led them by the right hand of Moses with his owne glorious arme, diuiding the waters before them, to make himselfe an everlasting name.

Hee here prosecutes that miraculous deliuerance of the people, who vnder the conduct of Moses, were brought out of Egypt, and also continues to recite the complaints: which might happily come into the mindes of the faithfull. We see here two things ioined together; to wit, the right hand of Moses, and the glorious arme of the Lord. Who so vseth mans traile, that his praise and glory ought at no hand to be lessened or darkened: for these things were so done vnder the conduct of Moses, that they ought wholly to be attributed to the power of God.

He goes on in describing the peoples deliuerance out of Egypt

As at this day, when it is said, that the Ministers of the Gospell remit sinnes, (which yet belongs to God onely) doth this diminish ought from his authoritie and Maiestie? Truly no: for they are but instruments, who bestow their paines for God, to whom all the glory thereof must be attributed. Alas, what could the fillic hand of man haue done, if the arme of the Lord had not fortified it?

8. Cor. 3. 5.

For this cause in the end of the verse hee expressly addeth, that God at that time wrought after so admirable a manner, to make himselfe an everlasting name: whereof, seeing it is vnlawfull to despoile him, so it shall bee no more lawfull to attribute the least part of praise vnto a mortall man.

Verf. 13. Hee led them thorow the deepe, as an horse in the wildernesse, that they should not stumble.

14. As the beast goeth downe into the valley, the Spirit of the Lord gaue them rest: so didst thou lead thy people, to make thy selfe a glorious name.

This is added to amplify and set forth so great a benefit. He also coniaines similitudes thereto, to expresse this so great and admirable a power of God; namely, as the horse in the desert, and as the beast in the plaine: that is to say, hee led his people as nicely, as one doth an horse vpon the downes. For the word desert, signifies not that desert of Paran, where the people were by the space of fortie yeeres: but according to the common phrase of the Hebrew tongue, it signifies the pastures where sheepe and herds of beasts walke at their pleasure. Which yet better appears by the verse following, where in stead of desert, he names the plaine. And so one and the same sense flowes from them both, namely, lie, that the people walked ouer deepe pits without stumbling, as horses doe in the wildernesse.

These verses are added as an amplification of the former.

In a word, his meaning is, to teach that the red sea did no more let or hinder the people from passing ouer, through the midst of deepe places, then if they had walked vpon a plaine and leuelled ground.

In v. 12 he called his name, euertlasting; and here he calles it glorious; but the sense is one. The people then obiect against the Lord, that if hee once made himselfe a glorious name; then he ought still to haue the same care. Otherwise it will come to passe that the remembrance of the benefits, which hee in former time bestowed vpon their fathers, would vanith quite away.

Verf. 15. Looke downe from heauen, and behold from the dwelling place of thine holinesse, and of thy glorie. Where is thy zeale, and thy strength, the multitude of thy mercies, and of thy compassions? They are restrained from mee.

The application of the whole.

HAuing mentioned the benefits of old in the name of all the people: now hee comes to apply the same vnto his purpose, and intreats the Lord that hee would looke downe from heauen vpon them.

[Looke downe, &c.] By these words hee signifies that the power of God is not diminished, though it appeare not at all times alike. For there must be an opposition supplied, namely, that God had then as it were hid himselfe, neither shewed he himselfe such a one towards them, as hee had done towards their fathers. As if they had said, Albeit O Lord, that we see no tokens of thy presence, but that thou hast withdrawne thy selfe from vs, as if thou wert shut vp in heauen, so as thou seemest utterly to neglect vs; yet we beseech thee vouchsafe to looke downe once againe from heauen, and from the dwelling place of thine holinesse, behold our miseries. See how we ought to separate the vnbeleeuers from the faithfull, who acknowledge God to bee both mightie and mercifull: yea euen then when they can discern no signes at all, either of his power or bountie. And thus they cease not to call vpon him still, though he hides himselfe farre away from them. For the Lord neuer ceaseth to haue care ouer his people, seeing without wearinesse, hee orders and gouernes all the parts of the world.

How to distinguish between vnbeleeuers and the faithfull.

[Where is thy zeale?] By this interrogatiom it seemes the faithfull after a sort vpbraid the Lord, in regard hee is no more toucht with his wonted zeale toward them; or that his power is diminished. But the Prophet hath another meaning. For hee mentions these benefits, as I haue said heretofore, because he meant thereby to confirme the hearts of the faithfull in good hope: thereby also teaching them that God is alwaies one and the same, and neuer puts off the bowels of compassion towards his Saints. And this will be euident enough by which follows.

He takes the multitude of bowels and mercies, for the infinit goodnesse of God; for he discouers and powres out his bowels as it were, in shewing himselfe a liberall benefactor towards vs. And these said fauours are so great, that wee cannot possible esteeme nor value them as we ought. But it is no new thing to see the faithfull prest with griefto powte out their complaints familiarly in the presence of God, charging him that hee hath shut his bowels from them. I grant they retain this principle, that God is alwaies mercifull; in regard his nature is vnchangeable: and howsoeuer they impute it to their sinnes, that they feele him not such a one to them, yet to preserue themselves from despaire they expostulate vnto him, how it can be that hee should handle them so seuerely. Yea, in shewing them nothing but the signes of his wrath, as if he had forgotten himselfe.

The faithfull euer retain this principle, namely, that God is alwaies mercifull.

Verf. 16. Doublelesse thou art our father: though Abraham be ignorant of vs, and Israel know vs not, yet thou O Lord, art our father, and our redeemer: thy name is for euer.

THE Lord permits vs familiarly to powre out our hearts before him. For prayer is nothing else but a manifesting of the heart in the presence God; so as the best remedie we haue to releue our cares and anguishes is to lay them vp in his bosome. Cast thy burthen, saith Dauid, vpon the Lord, and he shall nourish thee: Psalm. 55. 21. and 37. 5. The Prophet then hauing numbred vp Gods benefits towards the Iewes, whereby his power and goodnesse was sufficiently manifested; and yet that men by their sinnes deprived themselves from tasting the fruit thereof: he now comes to this point; namely, that Gods goodnesse is so great, that it ouercomes mens stubbornnesse.

A definition of prayer.

He calles him father in the name of the whole Church. For all cannot call him thus; because it is a priuledge that peculiarly belongs to the Church of God to call him father in his presence. Thence we may gather, that Christ as the first borne, or rather as the onely sonne of God, hath alwaies borne the chiefe sway ouer the Church: for God cannot be called father, but by him. And againe, here wee see that the faithfull contend not with God: but onely draw arguments vnto themselves from his nature, whereby to overcome all temptations, and to settle their hearts in good hope.

The Churches priuledge.

God hath neuer been called vpon as a father in the Church, otherwife than by Christ.

[Though Abraham know vs not.] Some aske here why the people say that the Patriarke knew them not. S. Jerome thinks it was because they were degenerate, and therefore were not worthe of so great an honour. But I take this exposition to be ouer curious. The true sense is, That albeit our forefathers disauiou vs, yet God still holds vs for his children, and shewes himselfe a father towards vs. Those who say that Abraham and the rest of the the faithfull had cast off all care, touching the affaires of this life, doe too subtilly writt the Prophets words to a wrong sense. I speak not of the thing in it selfe; but I say these words proue not that the Saints are altogether carelesse of vs. The most natue and pure sense is this; Lord, we acknowledge that in regard thou art our Father, it is a thing so firme and iure, that albeis our fathers after the flesh should faile vs, yet v wilt thou neuer cease to bee a father vnto vs: Plal. 27. 10. So as all rights of nature shall cease, rather then thou shouldst cease to shew thy selfe a father vnto vs: or that thine holy adoption should bee made void, seeing it is established in thine immuable counsell, and ratified by the death of thine holy Sonne.

And yet in the meane while we may hence gather, that the holy men so pray and present themselves before God, that they looke not to the intercessions of others: for praier is inioined them vpon this condition, that wholly resting themselves in the fatherly loue of God, they reiect all other confidences. But if our Prophet taught the Iewes not to direct their hearts toward Abraham and Jacob (who yet had receiued so many precious promises) to be heard of God: then is it certaine that we haue now no more cause to runne to S. Peter, to S. Paul, and the rest, then to them. For this is not a priuate praier made by one or two, but publike, and appertaining to the whole Church in generall: as if the Prophet had heere set them downe a forme of praier. And questionlesse our confidence ought so to be fetted vpon Gods fauour and fatherly goodnesse towards vs, that we should shut our eies against all intercessions of men, whether aliu or dead. In a word, the faithfull heere protest, that they gaze not heere nor there, but rest themselves in God alone.

But some may aske now, why hee onelie names Abraham and Jacob, and makes no mention of Isaack? The reason is, because the couenant was more solemnly ratified with these two heere noted. I grant that Isaack had no lesse part therein then they; but yet hee neither receiued so full, nor so many promises.

Our Redeemer. Redemption is heere expressed as a testimonie of this adoption: for by this experiment, God shewed himselfe the Father of this people. And therefore the people pray vnto God, and with assurance call him Father, in regard he had manifested vnto them so admirable a signe of his fatherly good will, which gaue them encouragement to hope well. But redemption simply in it selfe, would not haue sufficed, vnlesse the promise had bin therewithall annexed. Euen as then hee did once redeme them, so doth he promise to be their father for euer.

The clause, from all time; sets forth the steadfastnesse and stabilitie of Gods fatherly loue. For we haue not deserued the name of children; but in regard that his will onely, by which hee hath once adopted vs for such, is vnchangeable. Seeing the Lord then hath an eternall name, it thereupon followes, that the title and grace which is therunto conioined and flowes from this eternitie, shall indure for euer.

Verf. 17. O Lord, by hast thou made vs to erre from thy wayes, and hardened our hearts from thy feare? Returne for thy seruants sake, and for the Tribes of thine inheritance.

Or, where-loue shall thou, urned.

Because these phrases of speech seeme harsh and tart; some thinke the vnfaithfull are here brought in murmuring against God, and blaspheming him: for their malice turnes into rage, whe they haue lost all hope. But the scope of the text crosseth this conceit. For the Prophet shewes the fruit which should proceed from these miseries and calamities of the Iewes. How? Because being humbled and brought low, they should cease eather to be proud, or to please themselves in their vices. They were ashamed then that in times past they had erred so farre out of the right way, and acknowledge their owne offences. And so say the truth, when they attribute their sinnes to the wrath of God, their meaning is not to exempt themselves from blame, nor to abolish their faults.

But the Prophet vseth a phrase of speech very ordinary. For the holy Ghost is wont to say, that God causeth men to erre, hardens, and giues men vp into a reprobate mind: 2. Thef. 2. 11. Rom. 9. 18. and 1. 28. Now when the faithfull speake thus, they meane nothing lesse then to make God the author of euill, and of sinne, as if themselves were innocent; or as if they meant to extenuate their crime. But they aime at an higher marke, and rather confesse that their sinnes haue separated them from God, and is the cause why they are left destitute of his holy Spirit. Tea, that thence it came to passe, that they haue been plunged into infinit miseries.

Those who say that God leads vs into error by priuation, that is to say, in regard he be-reaues vs of his spirit, he nor the very hire. It is said that God both hardens and blinds when he deliuers men vp to be blinded by Satan, who is the minister and executioner of his wrath, for otherwise we should euer be a pray vnto the will of the diuell: but in regard he is able to doe nothing of himselfe without Gods commandement, to whose becke he is subiect, we truly affirme, that God is the author of this blinding and hardening, which also the scriptures doe witness in many places. And yet it followes not thereupon that he should be the author of sinne, because he punisheth mens ingratitude by such a blinding. And thus the faithfull in this verset confesse that God hath left them, but their sinne was the cause, so as they still acknowledge Gods iust reuenging hand vpon them. In like manner after Moses hath said, I hat thither vnto God had not giue the people eies to see, nor an heare to vnderstand, hee layes not the blame thereof vpon God, but shewes the Iewes where they were to seeke the remedies of such a benummednes: vvhich of they were conuincid, Deut. 29. 14. But these seeme to take another pretext heere, in that they aske a reason, and expostulate the matter with God, as if he had bin bound to haue handled them more mildly. But I answer, that the faithfull haue still an eye to Gods goodnes, whilest they confesse that their afflictions are the iust recompences of their sinnes.

Some referre these words to the captiuitie, as if the faithfull complained of the Lord for suffering them to languish so long a time in the same. As if the Prophet should say, That their obstinacie increased, because the Lord gaue them no taste of his grace. For the faithfull are often surprized with a very dangerous temptation, when they see the wicked overflow in all abundance, and are almost discouraged, as Dauid hath well expressed it in Psalm. 125. But the Prophets sentence seemes to be more generall: for the faithfull acknowledge themselues to haue erred, because they were not guided by the Spirit of God: whereof they complain not, but rather desire that this spirit may bee giuen them, by which their fathers in former times were gouerned and obtained all things profproullic.

Why haast thou caused our hearts to turne from thy seare?] Some translate, Wherefore hast thou hardned; but because this sutes not with that which followes, from thy seare, I had rather translate, To turne backe. And the verbe also signifies so much.

Some thinke these words, returne for thy seruants sake, appertaine to all the people. As the Scripture indeede is wont to terme all the household of faith by the name of Gods seruants. But I thinke it is properly to be referred vnto Abraham, Isaac and Iacob, which surelie is much more probable. Not that the people rested in their intercession, but in regard that God had made the couenant of grace with them, that they might deliuer it ouer from hand to hand vnto their successors. Thus then the faithfull set not these Patriarkes before them as common persons onely, but in the qualitie of Ministers, witnesses, or mediators of the couenant, with the foundation of their faith: as in that song; Lord, remember Dauid. In which place, the name of this good Patriarke is not set before the Lord, as if the faithfull thought hee had been their aduocate; but in regard the promise, which was made vnto him touching the restauration of the eternall kingdome in his familie, did appertaine to the whole body of the people.

The Papiſts snatch vp these words with great ioy, as if by them the intercession of Saints were proued. But by the true exposition of the place, we may plainly see how easie a matter it is to answer them. For it is spoken of the Fathers, not as if they deserued ought at Gods hand of themselves, or were now intercessors betweene God and vs; but because the free couenant, which not onely appertained vnto them, but also to all their successors, was contracted onely with them.

To the Tribes.] That is to say; Returne to thy wonted fauour towards thy people. By this we see that the things aforesaid, tend to no other end, but onely that the people doe labour, thereby to prouoke the Lord to mercie, after they haue laid before him their miseries and calamities. Here then we see the maner how we are to adresse our selues vnto God; namely, by putting him in minde of his former benefits, and by manifesting in his sight our griefes and sorrowes. Thus we must doe if we would obtaine deliuerance.

How wee must come to God.

Of thine heritage.] That is, because God had chosen this people as his proper portion. As if hee should say; What shall become of thy people if we perish? Not that God was tied to this people, but in respect hee had giuen them his faith by oath. Thus the people durst very well vtge God with his promise, and importune him by their praiers, in regard hee had voluntarily obliged himselfe both vnto their fathers, and to their children.

But now, seeing all promises are ratified and confirmed in Christ, 2. Cor. 10. and that we haue the truth of all things, we ought to bee built vp in so much the greater confidence: for the couenant is not onely contracted in his hand, but it is also confirmed and sealed with his blood. I grant he was the mediator as well for the fathers as for vs; but all things are now more cleere and manifest, in regard they then stucke in many obscure shadowes.

Verf. 18. The people of thine holiness haue possessed it but a little while: for our aduersaries haue troden downe thy sanctuarie.

IT is a wonder y the Prophet saith y people possessed the land but for a very little space, seeing 863. yeres were expired since they began to possesse it, and 1400. yeres and more since Abraham entred into the land of Canaan. But the promise must be considered, in which it was said, that Abrahams posteritie should inioy the land, as an euerlasting possession: Gen. 17. 8. and 49. 4. This was but a little while therefore, if it be compared with eternitie. The people of God then obiekt this short time vnto him, not as accusing him of breach of promise; but to put him in mind of his couenant, and that he should rather haue respect to his owne goodnesse, then to the chastisements which they had iustly deserued. And after this manner the ancient Church complains, in Ps. 102. 23, 24. that her strength was abated in the way, & that her daies were shortened: and therefore praies, that God would not cut her off in the midst of her daies, because the fulnesse of time depended vpon the coming of Christ.

Our aduersaries.] This complaint was much more grieuous; namely, that the wicked prophaned that land, which God had consecrated vnto himselfe. And the truth is, this went neerer to their hearts, then all the rest of their miseries. And good reason; for we ought not so much to respect our selues, as Gods seruice and religion. And this is the end of deliuerance, to wit, that there might be a people which might praise and worship the Lord purely.

Maſter Caluin makes this part of the 19. verſe

THe Prophets ſenſe may admit two expoſitions. For ſome take this place as if the people obiected vnto God, that they were choſen when other nations were reiected, and that this couenant was ratified from the time of old. The other expoſition, which I rather follow, is this; that the people complain and reply vnto God, that there is no difference betwene them and the heathen; in regard they had no ſuccour nor refreshing at all in their aduerſities; which they hold to be an abſurd and an vncomely thing. This is a notable ſentence, and very worthy of memo-rie : for heere wee ſee it is lawfull for vs to powre out our complaints vnto God, when afflictions preſſe vs aboue meature; and to ſet our calling before him, to moue him to ſuccour vs; thereby teſtiſying what great difference hee makes betwene vs and ſtrangers.

ouer v whom thy name is not called vpon.] This comes all to one ſenſe. For the peoples meaning is, that Gods calling ought not to be aboliſhed. And indeed it is not the Lords will that wee ſhould call vpon him in vaine : for prayers are vnprofitable, and vaniſh in the aire, vnleſſe the Lord haue reſpect vnto vs.
Heere note alſo one marke of the Church;
namely, that Gods name is there called vpon.
The wicked cannot call vpon him, becauſe
there is no acceſſe vnto him but by his word; of which, they haue no knowledge; and therefore faith is neuer ſeparate from praier. For where faith is, there is alſo praier; and if it be not there, let vs know for a ſuretie that there is no faith nor hope at all.

A note of the Church.

Faith brings forth praier.

OH that thou wouldeſt breake!] The Hebrew particle, as I take it, comprehends a wiſh. For though it hath many ſignifications, yet the ſcope of the text ſhewes, that this agrees better to this place then any other.
For the faithfull heere enter into a more ardent praier; as often it fallies out when in the ſharpeſt afflictions, a ſet ſorie of words, would want ſufficient vehemencie to expreſſe our deſires. He ſaith, that God breakes the heauens, when hee ſuddenly ſhowes ſome memorable and rare ſigne of his power. And the reaſon of this maner of ſpeech is not onely in regard that men being in great diſtreſſe, are wont to liſt vp their eyes to heauen, from whence they expect helpe; but becauſe miracles alſo make way for them, by breaking the ordinarie courſe of nature. Now it ſeemes that God is ſhut vp in heauen, whileſt hee neglects to ſuccour vs, and lets all things in the world to goe at ſix and ſeuen. For this cauſe then it is ſaid, that he opens and breakes the heauens, when he giues vs ſome ſigne of his preſence, as ſuch a time as we iudge him to be farre remote from vs. But theſe things are ſpoken according to our naturall reaſon, as is alſo the claufe, That thou wouldeſt come downe : for what neede is there that God ſhould change his place? Hee applies himſelfe thus to our weakeneſſe, that we might the better comprehend that which is ſaid to vs of him.

That the mountaines would melt.] That is to ſay; Oh, cauſe thy Maieſtie and glory to ap-peare in ſuch wiſe, as the elements being a-ſtoniſhed at the feeling thereof, might bow, to giue way vnto thee : as ſhall bee declared more at large by and by.

THE LXIII. CHAPTER.

That which in our bookes is made the beginning of this 64. Chapter, is in the Commentarie annexed to the laſt verſe of the 63. Chapter, where you ſhall find it expounded.

Verſ. 2. As the melting fire burned, as the fire cauſed the waters to boile (that thou mighteſt declare thy name to thy aduerſaries) the people did tremble at thy preſence.

3. When thou diſt terrible things which wee looked not for, thou cameſt downe, and the mountaines melted at thy preſence.

WE may reade all this in the future tence, or in the ſubiunctiue. As if hee ſhould ſay; Lord, if thou wouldeſt come downe, the people would tremble at thy preſence, thine ad-uerſaries would forthwith melt away. But I thinke it to be more natuie, as I haue turned it; for it is very ſure that the Prophet alludes heere to Mount Sinai, Exod. 29. 30. where the Lord manifeſted himſelfe openly vnto the people. Hence alſo it appeares how vnaduiſedly this Chapter was diſtinguiſhed, ſeeing the contents thereof is reuiſed for the confirmation of the former viſiſh, which ſhould haue been placed in the beginning. We haue elſewhere ſeene, that when the Prophets mention the relieſes which God hath giuen to his people, they ſtill bring in teſtimonies concerning the deliuerance out of Egypt.

And as oft as they ſpeake of this hitorie, they therewithall comprehend whatſoever benefits God beſtowed vpon his people; not onely when hee deliuered them from vnder Pharaohs tyrannie, and appeared vnto them in mount Sinai: but that also, when by the space of 40. yeeres he furnished them in the desert with all things necessarie; who hauing subdued and wasted their enemies, did put them in quiet possession of the land of Canaan. To bee short, they comprehend all the testimonies, whereby in times past he shewed himselfe gracious to his people; and terrible to their enemies.

The Prophet saith, that the fire made the waters to boile: in regard that contrarie to their wont, fires and lightnings, were mingled with violent raines and tempests. As if hee should haue said, This fire (kindled by the Lord) was so fierce, that it melted all things, were they neuer so hard; and drunke vp euen the very waters.

To this appertaines that which is added touching the melting of the mountaines, before his face. For hee opened a way for his redeemed, euen throw the greatest incumbrances that they met withall. Hee saith also, that the Israelites saw things which they neuer looked for: in regard, that altho God had aduertised them, and had acquainted them with many experiments of his power; yet this terrible spectacle whereof he speaks, greatly surmounted their capacities and understandings, yea, and all the reason of man.

Verf. 4. For since the beginning of the world, they haue not heard, nor vnderstand with the care, neither hath the eye seene another God besides thee, which doth so to him that waiteth for him.

This verse confirms that which wee haue said before; namely, that the faithfull desire nothing here which is strange and vnheard of: but only that God would but shew himselfe such a one towards them, as in times past he had done to their fathers; and that hee would continue forth his liberallitie.

And withall, seeing it hath been his custome to succor his people, and to giue them some assured testimonies of his presence; that he would not now discontinue the same for the tunc to come: that so his almightie power might still shine more and more. For you must note, that he so brings in the people praying vnto God, that therewithall they should confirme their hope from the remembrance of the time past, and with the more boldnesse might haue their recourse to the throne of grace.

The eye hath not seene.] Doubtlesse the Prophets meaning is to magnifie Gods goodnesse by mentioning these so many benefits, which God in former times had bestowed vpon his people. This manner of commendation also, is very high and excellent: when being rauished with admiration in regard thereof, he cries out, that there is no God but he. Likewise, that the things which God hath done for his peoples sake, were neuer heard of before.

But this may be read two waies; for the word God may be taken in the accusatiue, or in the vocatiue: O Lord, none but thou hast seene the things which thou hast done to those that wait for thee. But the other reading is more receiued; namely, They haue neuer heard nor seene such a God. In this last reading the particle of similitude must be supplied; for without that, the sentence would be imperfect. No care then hath heard, neither hath the eye seene such a God, as doth such things. And thus God is here separated from idols; from which the superstitious sort thinke they obtaine all blessings: but they are onely the deuices of mans braine, which can neither doe good nor hurt. Contrariwise, God deales forth his benefits of all sorts liberallie to those that serue him.

It seemes S. Paul expounds this place otherwise, 1. Cor. 2.9. and applies it to another sense. Yea, he cites it in other termes: because hee followed the Greeke translation. The Apostles made no scruple touching this point, in regard they rather respected the sentences then the words: and thought it sufficient only to point out this place of Scripture vnto the reader; whither they might resort to be satisfied touching the things which they taught. But where S. Paul seemes to haue added of his owne, Neither hath it entred into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them which loue him: this he did, that his speech might be the better vnderstood. For nothing is added which agrees not very well with the Prophets doctrine. And that wee may the better perceiue this agreement, wee must consider his drift. In that place hee disputes about the doctrine of the Gospell, which hee shewes doth farre surpass all the reach of mans wit. Why so? Because it contains such a knowledge, as is contrarie, and wonderfullie farre remote from the wisdom of the flesh. In a word, that it is an hidden wildome. For which cause S. Paul worthilie breakes forth into this admiration in weighing and pondering of the same. And our Prophet calling to mind these rare and famous works of God, as one astonished cries out; that there was neuer such a thing heard of. So concerning this grace which surmounts all the rest, namely, when Christ is offered vs in the Gospell, we may breake forth after the same manner, and say, O Lord, the mercie which thou shewest vnto thy people, farre surmounts all our reason. Neither eye, ear, hart, nor spirit, can attaine to such an height. S. Paul then you see applies this place like to his disputation: neither doth he corrupt the Prophets sentence, when he exalts about all things in the world that excellent and peculiar grace which God hath bestowed vpon his Church.

There yet remains another difficultie, namely, that the Apostle transferres that to spirituall benefits; which is here said of temporall. But we may affirme, that Isaiab simple respected the cause from whence these benefits of God issued, though hee therewithall had an eye to the estate of this life present. For all the good things which God hath giuen vs here below for the sustaining and cheriſhing of our naturall life, are ſo many teſtimonies vnto vs of that fatherly loue which he beares vs. And it is alſo the propertie of faith to aſcend by viſible benefits, to inuiſible graces. Thus then howſoeuer the Prophet ſeemes to meddle onely in matters touching their bodily deliuerance, and other things appertaining to this life preſent: yet aimes he therein at an higher marke, and eſpecially reſpects thoſe benefits which in particular manner belonged to the people of God. For what a fortiſhneſſe were it, if whileſt we inioy benefits temporal, wee ſhould not by them mount vp to the weſpring from which they flow; namely, from Gods meere loue and mercie: Both good and bad doe indifferently inioy theſe common good things: but that particular fauour wherewith he enertaines vs, appertaines to none but to his houſhold ſeruants. Hence it is that wee not onely conſider that which appears to our outward ſenſes, but wee forthwith aſcend vp to the very cauſe. Vnto which point, though neither eye, nor eare can reach; that is, to comprehend therein the grace of adoption, by which the Lord proteſts that hee will be our Father; yet hee reucales this vnto vs by the witnes of his holy Spirit.

It is alſo very likely that the Prophet hauing ſpoken of a particular benefit of God, takes occaſion thereby to ariſe vnto a generall conſideration. For when the matter concernes the meditation of Gods workes, the faithfull are wont to aſcend from one kind of them, to the conſideration of the whole in generall. And therefore this onely example of ſo wonderfull a goodneſſe of God, might well rauish the Prophets mind ſo high, that in his meditations he conſidered of this infinite abundance of bleſſings laid vp in heauen for the faithfull. Yea, we manifeſtly perceiue that this honourable commendation comprehends vnder it the free covenant, by which the Lord adopted vnto himſelfe Abrahams poſteritie, into the hope of eternall life. The ſumme of all comes to this; that ſeeing the goodneſſe and power of God is ſo great, we ought not to diſtruſt him; but our confidence ought ſo to be ſetled thereupon, that we ſhould aſſuredly relie vpon his helpe. And to this belongs theſe excellent benefites which the Prophet heere mentions:

Verſ. 5. *Thou didſt meete him that reioiced in thee, and did iuſtly: they remembered thee in thy waies: behold, thou art angry, for wee haue ſinned, yet in them is continuance, and wee ſhall bee ſaued.

*Or, and.

In this and in the verſe following, the Iewes beuaile their miſeries.

HE proſecutes the ſame argument. For the people beuailes their miſerable condition, in regard they felt no reliefe nor eaſe in their aduerſitie; though God was wont to be ſo good vnto their forefathers. The faithfull then ſpeake vnto God on this ſort; Thou wert vnto mee our fathers, but thy fauour is now turned away from vs: and it ſeemes thou wilt be no more appeaſed, ſeeing wee haue gained nothing by calling vpon thee. For whence comes thy aduerſitie, but from this; that as if thou wert now become changeable, thou ſhewſt thy ſelfe otherwiſe to vs, then thou didſt to our fathers in times paſt?

In the next place they confeſſe they were iuſtly chaſtiſed, becauſe they had ſinned. I haue heretofore ſhewed, that there is nothing better for vs in afflictions, then to remember Gods benefites: and not onely thoſe wherof we haue had experience, but thoſe alſo which are recorded in the Scriptures. For we can not be ſenced with a buckler that is more thick nor large then it, againſt all kind of temptations.

Thoſe who thinke theſe words, him that reioiced, and did iuſtly, ſhould be read together, as if he ſhould ſay, Thou didſt meete them which ſerued thee willingly, and delighted in well doing; doe ill expound this verſe, as I thinke. I rather thinke that by the reioycers thoſe are vnderſtood who are ioynfull in proſperitie, in regard the people were then in ſorrow and leauiues. For there is a cloſe oppoſition, thus, Thou wert wont in times paſt to meete our fathers, before they were preſſed with any grieſe, and didſt glad ſhem as thy coming: but now thou art farre off, and ſuffreſt vs to languish with grieſe and diſcontentment. To this belongs that which is added, That they remembered God, becauſe they enioyed his preſent grace, and felt him both the author and vpholder of their ſaluation. Thus by the reioycers of God, he vnderſtands all proſperitie: be it that he was more neere vnto them by handling them tenderly, and cockering of them as his children: or in regard that he naturallie is inclined to doe good. But becauſe he hath ſaid that God was wont to meete him that did iuſtly, the remembrance may be referred to the loſe of pietie. To wit, that they gaue themſelues careleſſe to the ſeruiſe of God: in which ſenſe, theſe words are the expoſition of the former member, which is a thing vſual with the Prophets, who are wont to confirme their ſpeeches with many words.

To remember God, ſignifies, to be ſo ſweetly allured with thinking on him, that we wiſh for nothing beſides, and place our whole felicitie in him. For there is nothing which more reioyceth vs, then the remembrance of his mercie: as on the contrarie, if we feele him angry, then the remembrance of his name is terrible vnto vs.

And wee haue ſinned,] The Prophet renders a reaſon of that aboue ſaid, for they murmur not againſt God becauſe they felt him otherwiſe to them then he was towards their fathers, but they lay the whole blame vpon themſelues. Hence let vs learne, neuer to thinke of the afflictions wherewith the Lord viſits vs, vnleſſe therewithall we call our ſinnes to remembrance, that ſo wee may both acknowledge our faults, as alſo confeſſe that we are iuſtly chaſtiſed.

The word perſeuall may either be referred to ſinners, or to the reioycers of the Lord, To ſinners thus: Although we haue bin obſtinate in our ſinnes, and worthe to be an hundred times condemned: condemned, yet hitherunto we haue bin faued through thy mercie. If we referre it to the waies of God, he renders the reason wherefore the people were not consumed, to wit, in regard the waies of the Lord are firme and perpetuall, and because there is no end of his mercie. And this sense I thinke agrees best to this place.

The beſt fence againſt afflictions.

Some supplicke, that perpetuitie was founded in the waies of the Lord. But I had rather take the words simple as they sound, as Dauid in the 30. Psalm saith, That the Lords anger indures only for a night, but he is appeased, and shewes mercie for euer: for he is not prouoked nor violently carried away with anger, as men are; but hee continues constant and stedfast in his fauour and in well-doing.

But yet we haue not attained the Prophets full meaning: for he saith, that the people are saued, who in the meane while were led into captiuitie, as into a sepulchre, wherein they bewailed their miserie. And therefore I take the time past for the future tence; to wit, we shall be saued, for, We haue bin saued: for it is rather a wish or praier, then an affirmation. The faithfull then boast not of that they haue obtained, but rather in complaining of their pouertie, they haue their recourse to Gods perpetuall mercies. They extoll that then which they desire, and not that which they had already attained.

Verf. 6. But wee haue all been as an vncleane thing, and all our righteousnes is as filthy cloutes, and we all doe fade like a lease, and our iniquities like the wind haue taken vs away.

The faithfull continue their complaint. For they lament their miserable estate because God regarded them not. Moreover, the Hebrewes agree not about the exposition of these words, filthy cloutes. Notwithstanding it is certaine, that they signifie a base and vile thing of no price. Yea, such a thing, which in regard of the lothsomnesse thereof, stinckes in mens nostrils.

But two things are here to be noted, first, that the faithfull confesse they haue offended, and are iustly punished: Secondly, that they cease not to complaine touching the weight of the blowes which they received. Not by way of pleading against God; but to moue him vnto compassion. As when a malefactor would endeouour to pacifie his Iudge, he laies fourth all his miseries and calamities before him.

Many vexed and wearie themselves here, because the Prophet speaking of the filthinesse of finnes; comprehends all the Iewes without exception: though there were among them many of the true seruants of God. But they haue no reason for to doe, for he speaks not here of euery one in particular; but of the whole bodie in generall, which hee compares to filthy cloutes; in regard it was trampled vnder feete; and extreamelie afflicted.

Some haue been wont to alleage this place to proue that it is so farre off from meriting any thing by our workes; that euen our workes themselves are infected and lothsome before God. But this seemes, as I thinke, to be farre from the Prophets intention; seeing he speaks not here of all mankind in generall; but describes their complaints, who being led captiues, felt Gods wrath heauie vpon them. For which cause, they confessed, that both themselves, and their righteousnesse, were like filthy cloutes. First of all then, he exhorts them to confesse their sinne, and to acknowledge their offence: secondlie, to aske pardon. And that the meanes how to obtaine the same is, first, to acknowledge our miserable and wofull condition: and therewithall to confesse that wee therein receiue the iust recompence of our offences.

Wee all said. This is a very apt comparison: which shewes that men wither and wanze away as soone as they feele Gods wrath. Which point is notable described in Psalm. 90. 5. and 103. 15. and in chap. 40. 6. We are rightly compared to leaves; then; because our iniquities are the winds which carrie vs away.

Verf. 7. And there is none that calleth vpon thy name, neither that stirreth vp himselfe to take bold of thee: for thou hast hid thy selfe from vs, and hast consumed vs because of our finnes.

The Prophet confirms that which was said before. For hee admonisheth the faithfull to acknowledge that they are worthy of such a reuenging hand of God, how sharpe and seuerer soeuer it seemed. Now he mentions some capitall finnes. And because it had bin too long to haue stood deciphering thereof out one by one, he strikes at the roote it selfe, and saith, that Gods seruice was condemned.

Under the word Inuocation, hee comprehends the whole seruice of God, according to the vsuall phrase of the Scriptures. For the principall part thereof is, that we call vpon God; thereby testifying that our whole trust is in him. It is very certaine that prayers and vowes were alwaies in vse among the Iewes: but because they wanted the affection of the hart; and that it was farre remote from God; therefore he esteemed none of these fained deuotions. Which hee yet better explains in the particle following; where it is said, that none stirred vp himselfe to seeke God. But all of them vanished away, and fell to nothing through their owne slothfulness.

First hee shewes that the thing we ought chiefly to desire is, that we may be fully conioyned with God. For when we are estranged from him, it must needs follow of necessitie, that all things should turne to our destruction and woe. Now by nature we are exceeding idle and slothfull: for which cause we haue need to be quickned vp with the spurre. Seeing then that we take pleasure ſure in our careleſſneſſe; it ſtands vs in hand to hearken aduſedly to the Prophets counſell, leſt wee become utterly ſenſeleſſe. Otherwiſe it will come to paſſe in the ende, that the Lord for his part will diſdaine and reiect vs. For the Prophet deſcribes the miſerable eſtate of this people, who had no deſire at all to take hold vpon God: neither was there any meanes left to awaken them vpon a ſincere deſire of godlineſſe.

And haſt conſumed vs.] They complaine againe that they were ouerwhelmed with the weight of their miſeries, without being any thing at all releued or caſed by God. For Iſaiah propounds theſe things, in the name of the whole people: and intreats the Lord not to ſuffer them to languish any longer vnder ſo great calamities.

Verſ. 8. But now, O Lord, thou art our father, we are the clay, * and thou art our potter; and we all are the worke of thine hands.

After they haue bewailed their miſeries, with which they were almoſt ouerwhelmed; now in plainer termes they deſire the Lord to pardon and caſe them of their ſinart, and wuball doe more boldly profeſſe themſelues now to bee his children notwithstanding. For it was adoption onely that could raiſe vp their hearts vnto a liuely hope: ſo as notwithstanding the burthen of afflictions wherewith they were preſſed downe, yet they ceaſed not for all that to reſt vpon God as vpon a father. This order ought to be well obſerued: for to attaine to a ſound and ſincere humilitie of heart, it is needfull that wee be deſected and laid on all ſoures, as they ſay. But if deſpaire enſue, let vs haſten to this conſolation: for ſeeing God hath vouchſafed to reſt vs for his children, it is our parts to hope that he will ſaue vs, euen then when things ſhall ſeeme moſt deſperate and confuſed. Thus then, in regard of the free couenant, the Iſraelites proteſt they are Gods children, that they might feele his fatherly good will towards them in ſuch wiſe, that his promiſes might nor be in vaine.

By way of compariſon they amplifie and ſet forth Gods grace, in confeſſing that they were formed of the clay, for they ſeek for no excellent matter in themſelues: only in their originall they extoll Gods mercie, who of mire and clay, hath bin pleaſed to create them his children. In the ſecond member, where God is called their former, and the people the worke of his hands, it comes all to one ſenſe, for they whollie attribute vnto God their being, and the author of all they had. And this is a right acknowledgment: for God is robbed of his due honor whilſt men glorie in themſelues, be it neuer ſo little. But Iſaiah ſpeakes not here of the common creation of men, but of their regeneration, for which reſpect the faithfull are in particular called the workemanship of God, Chap. 17. 7. and 19. 25. and 22. 11. and 27. 11. and 37. 26. and 43. 1. 15. Ephes. 2. 10. They heere acknowledge then a ſingular fauour that God hath done them, firſt, in electing them for his people; and then in enriching them with ſo many and excellent benefiſts.

Verſ. 9. Be not angrie O Lord aboute me, neither remember iniquitie for euer: loe, we beſeech thee, behold, we are all thy people.

The people pray that God would mitigate both his wrath and their afflictions. Not that God euer exceeds meſure, but in regard they ſhould be utterly ouerwhelmed if he would ſtand to examine the to the vtmoſt. They pray then that their paines ſhould be moderated. As Ieremiah ſaith, Correct me O Lord, but in iudgement, that is to ſay in meſure, Ier. 10. 24. For he oppoſeth iudgement to wrath, as in 2. Sam. 7. 14. it is ſaid he chaſtiſeth vs with the rods of men, becauſe he wil not come againſt vs himſelfe to vter all his force in puniſhing vs, leſt we ſhould be forthwith ground to powder.

But it is worth the noting, that they do not ſimply deſire to be freed from Gods iudging of them, but ſo offer themſelues to be chaſtiſed, that the blowes may not daſh them to pieces. And this is the cauſe why they deſire that the memorie of their iniquities may be blaſted out: for if God ſhould not ſhew the mercie this way, there ſhould be no end of their miſeries.

The Prophet repeats that which he had ſaid before in verſ. 8. namely, that God had choſen Abrahams poſteritie. For the beſt aſſurance they had to obtaine pardon was, that God being true of his promiſes, could not reiect thoſe whom he had once aduerſed. In ſpeaking of all, he means not euerie one in particular, but comprehends the whole body of the Church. And howſoeuer the greateſt part of them were cut off by their wicked reuolt, yet this was true, that the Iewes were Gods peculiar people. Neither was this prayer made for all iudiſt gentlie, but only for the little flock of the faithfull. Now the people ſet not forth their merits before God, but reſt to his free couenant by which they were adopted. For this indeed is the ſure and only reſource the faithfull haue: this I ſay is a remedie againſt all miſchietes, and that is the reaſon why Moſes and all the Prophets doe ſo often reſeate the ſame, Deut. 32. 13.

Verſ. 10. Thine holy cities lie waſt: Sion is a wildernes, and Ieruſalem a deſert.

The Church here againe recounts her miſeries, that the might thereby bow the Lord to compaſſion and forgiuences. She ſaith, the Cities were waſted; and for an amplification ſhe adds, that Zion is become a wildernes; for it was the ſeate royall in which God would be called vpon. Then he addes Ieruſalem, wherein Zion was, For it ſeemed ſtrange that the Citie which God had conſecrated to himſelfe, ſhould be laid on heapes and waſted by the enimie.

The Prophet calles them Cities of holines, in reſpect that as God had ſanctified the people, ſo was it his will that the Cities, yea the whole countrie, ſhould be conſecrated vnto him. Seeing the Cities then were dedicated vnto

* Or, thou art, &c.
* Or, former.

After the laying forth of their miſeries they crye for pardon in his, and in the verſe following.

The Iewes pray not ſimply againſt afflictions.

Behold we are thy people.

God is robbed of his glory, whilſt men glorie in themſelues.

The Church recounts her miſerie againe in this, and in the verſe following.

What Cities deserve to be call'd Gods holi-
nesse.

God, they were rightly called holy, because God reigned therein, and was called vpon in them. And thus we may call those Cities of holinesse, in which God is purely worshipped, haue abandoned all superstitions.

Verf. 11. The house of our sanctuarie and of our glory, where our fathers praised thee, is burnt vp with fire, and all our pleasant things are wasted.

The sanctuarie is otherwise attributed to the people, then to God. For it being a pledge of that holy vnion betwene God and the people, it is often called the house of God, because it answered to his holinesse. Here the faithfull call it their sanctuarie, in regard they were thence to draw their sanctitie: which they yet confirme more apparently by the word glory. For they confesse they had nothing to glory in but the Temple, wherein God was pleased to bee worshipped and serued.

And yet we see that this their reioicing, was often vaine; in so much that Jeremiah reproues them for it, saying; Trust not in lying words; to wit, The Temple of the Lord, The Temple of the Lord: this is the Temple of the Lord: Jer. 7. 4. But as the boasting of such as made faire shewes, and grew insolent, in regard of some titles was vaine: so on the contrary, they reioiced rightly, who honoured Gods ordinance; & laid it vp in their hearts; and also resting vpon the testimonie of the word, were assured to dwell vnder his protection, who had chosen out a perpetuall habitation for himselfe in the midst of them. For the Temple was built by the commandement of God; so as the Iewes might well boast that they had God for the vpholder of their saluation.

But because his seruice was then marred and corrupted, and that all in a manner ran riot after superstitions and impietie, the Prophet mentions the time past, and not the time present. As if he should say, Albeis we ee haue not yelde d thee that obedience which we ought so haue done, yes behold it is thy Temple still, where in our fathers serued thee purely: and wilt thou suffer is to be prophaned, and to lie waste? VVill not this reproch redound to shine oune dishonor, see- ing this building was erected for thy worshippe? The Iewes plead not their merits here, neither dawbe they ouer their sinnes; no, they rather confesse and lay them open: onely they put God in minde of his seruice, that in remembering his holy covenant, hee would not permit his promises to bee fruitlesse. And all the faithfull ought to imitate their example.

The verbe To praise, is taken to giue thanks: as if he should say; In this Temple, the lamentable ruine whereof breaks the hearts of the faithfull in sunder, in times past thy praises were wont to sound, when thou diddest entertaine thy people there, in thy mercy and compassion.

Verf. 12. Wilt thou hold thy selfe still at these things, O Lord? Wilt thou hold thy peace and afflict vs aboue measure?

The people fortifie themselves in vndoubted hope, that God will not suffer his glorie to be thus trampled vnder foote, though he be prouoked to wrath by mens infinite offences. Hypocrites reape no consolation at all by this, but these things indeed belong onely to such as are touched with a true sense of Gods mercy. Such conclude, and are certainly perswaded, that howsoever death doth menace them; yet God hauing regard to his owne glory, will at the least bee mercifull to some; that so the whole seed perish not.

Wilt thou afflict vs? Isaiah shewes that God cannot forget his mercie. Why so? Because he cannot deny himselfe: for his glory is ioined with our saluation. And this is a thing diligently to be noted: or hauing spoken before of Gods glory, now he addes, wilt thou afflict vs aboue measure? The Lord then will moderate his corrections; for his glory requires it, that wee bee deliuered from death: which glory he can in no wise neglect. Let vs then take vp this prayer, as oft as our enemies invade vs: not after the manner of hypocrites, who make a great craking of Gods glory, whereof they haue neither taste nor feeling. But let vs come vnto it with faith and repentance, that so wee may truly reape the fruit of this glory.

Gods glory
ioined with our saluation.

THE LXV. CHAPTER.

Verf. 1. I haue been sought of them that asked not, I was found of them that sought me not: I said, Behold me, behold me, vnto a nation that called not vpon my name.

In this verse
the Prophet turnes from the Iewes to the Gentiles.

Ow the Prophet passeth over to the handling of another point of doctrine. For he shewes that God hath iust cause to reiect and cast off the Iewes, because neither admonitions, nor threatnings would serue the turn to reclaim them from their errors, nor to bring them againe into the right way. But to the end they should not imagin that the covenant of the Lord should therefore be broken; he addes, that another people, which then were of none account, should come to him; and that his name should be honoured and magnified in the places where he was unknowne before. The Iewes thought this very strange, and iudged thereof altogether contrary to that covenant which God had contracted with Abraham; namely, namely, that ſuch a grace ſhould be communicated to any other nation, then to his poſteritie. But the Prophet meant to plucke this vaine confidence away from them, to the end they ſhould not imagine that God was onely tied to the poſteritie of Abraham. For the Lord bound not himſelfe vnto them, but vpon a certaine condition : which if they happened to breake, they were to be held as traitors and diſſoiall; and ſo by conſequence, deprived of the fruit of this covenant. Beſides, the covenant was not onely made with Abraham and with his poſteritie, according to the ſcriptures, but alſo with all ſuch as ſhould be ingrafted into the familie of this Patriarke by faith. But it ſhall be more conuenient for vs to beginne at the ſecond verſe, that ſo wee may the better vnderſtand, the Prophets meaning : for there the cauſe of this reiection is expreſſed.

Verſ. 2. I haue ſpread out mine hands all the day vnto a rebellious people, which walked in a way that was not good, euen after their owne imaginations.

HERE hee accuſeth the Iewes, and complaines of their ingratitude and rebellion; wherein he ſhewes that they haue no occaſion giuen them to affirme, that the Lord offered them any wrong, if he made others partakers of the ſame grace with them. The Iewes proudly inſulted againſt God, as if their merits had been the cauſe of their election. But for this their inſolencie and vnthankfulneſſe the Lord reiects them as vnworthie : and vpbraides them, that hee hath but loſt all his time, in ſtretching forth his hand vnto them, to draw and vnite them to himſelfe. For by ſtretching forth of the bands, he ſignifies a daile ſummoning of them. Now the Lord is ſaid to ſtretch forth his hand diuers waies. For hee drawes vs to him either by his workes, or word : but he principally reſpects the latter in this place. The Lord neuer ſpeakes vnto vs, but hee therewithall ſtretcheth forth his hand to vnite vs vnto himſelfe, and cauſeth vs to feele that hee is neere vnto vs. Yea, he ſo manifeſts his fatherly loue, & ſo willingly accepts of vs, that if we yeeld not obedience vnto his voice, we ought iuſtly to impute the ſame to our owne forwardnes. Moreouer, the claue, all the day long, aggravates the fault greatly, namely, that God ceaſed not for the ſpace of many yeeres together, to ſend his Prophets one after another; yea, as it is ſaid in Ier. 7. 13. and 35. 14. He roſe early, and ſtinted not his care and paines vntill the evening.

First, hee calles them rebellions, or diſobedient. Next, he ſhewes what this rebellion was; to wit, the people walked after their owne imaginations: for nothing is more diſpleaſing vnto God, then when men are giuen to follow their owne reaſon : which he will haue vs to renounce, that wee may be fit to comprehend the true doctrine. The Lord heere protests then that he was not to be blamed, for not vpholding the peoples good eſtate, and that he fauoured them not as he was wont : but that themſelues, through their folly, had reuolted, and loued rather to ſticke to their owne inuentions, then to follow him.

Now hauing ſpoken of this reiection, it remains that wee come to touch the calling of the Gentiles, who ſucceeded in the roome of the Iewes: for it is not to be doubted but hee ſpeakes thereof in the firſt place. Now the Lord had long before prophesied of this by Mofes; ſo as this was not to ſeeme any new thing. As they haue prouoked me, ſaith the Lord, to ielouſie, with that which is no God, and haue ſtirred me vp to wrath by their vanities: ſo alſo will I moue them to ielouſie by that which is no God, and will prouoke them by a fooliſh nation: Deut. 32. 21. In a word, the Prophet now pronounceth the ſame threatening which Chriſt thundered forth afterwards, Matth. 21. 43. when the time of their blinding drew neere; The kingdomes of God, ſaith he, ſhall be taken from you, and ſhall be giuen to a nation that will bring forth the fruits of it.

Where hee ſaith in the former verſe, that God manifeſted himſelfe to them that asked not after him; it is to ſhew, that the Gentiles were preuented with this grace of God, without giuing him any occaſion to receiue them into fauour, either by merit, or yer by any worthineſſe at all of theirs. Which manifeſtly agrees with that place which we haue alleaged out of Deut. 32. where Mofes calles them a fooliſh nation. Wherefore vnder this generall title, he makes it apparant what men are, before the Lord hath preuented them by his free grace: for they neither call vpon him, ſeeke him, nor ſo much as thinke vpon him. This place then ought to be well noted, to eſtabliſh the certaintie of our vocation, which is as it were the key which opens vs the doore into Gods kingdom. By this our conſciences are quieted and appeaſed, which otherwiſe would alwaies hang in doubt, and be in perplexities, were they not vpheld by ſuch teſtimonies. Wee ſee then that this was not written at a venture, nor vpon ſome ſudden motion, namely, that wee are called the people of God, and are ſo accounted, becauſe it was thus foretold long ſince by many prophecies.

S. Paul from this place ingeniouſlie diſputes to prouoe the calling of the Gentiles : and ſaith, that Iſaiah cries, and boldly pronounceth, that the Gentiles were called by the Lord, Rom. 10. 20. How ſo? Becauſe our Prophet expreſſed more here then the circumſtance of his times would permit. Thus then by this text we perceiue that wee were called by an eternall decree of God, long before the thing it ſelfe came to paſſe.

In that he twice repeats, Behold me, behold me: he further confirms that God will manifeſt himſelfe ſo familiarlie vnto ſtrange and prophane nations, that they ſhall be well aſſured of his dwelling in the middeſt of them. And queſtionleſſe it was needfull that this ſo vnlooked for a change ſhould be thus eſſeſſualie confirmed, becauſe it was verie hard to be credited. Although euen in this oueltie; the Prophet meant to magnifie Gods vnexpected grace. The summe is, that after God shall be offered to the Gentiles, and that they shall bee received into the holy race of Abraham: then there shall bee a Church in the world, out of which the Iewes shall be expelled. Now wee see that all these things which our Prophet here mentions, were accomplished by the Gospell, wherein the Lord truly manifested and offered himselfe vnto strange nations, As oft then as this voice of the Gospell sounds in our eares: or as oft as we reade these holy prophesies, let vs know that the Lord is neere, and offers himselfe; that being familiarly knowne wee may with boldnesse and assurance call vpon him.

Verf. 3. A people that prouoked mee euer vnto my face: that sacrificeth in gardens, and burneth incense vpon briches.

The fruit that came from walking after their owne imaginations, in this and the next verse.

HE shewes and prosecuteth more at large, in what things the Iewes rebelled against God: namely, that hauing forsaken his commandement, they defiled themselues with sundrie superstitions. Heretofore he had said that the Iewes had revolted from God, in regard they wandred after their owne inuentions. Now he sets forth the fruit of this their wandring: namely, that hauing giuen their thoughts free scope, they ouerthrew the pure worship of God. And this in deepe is the fountaine, from whence all superstitions proceede: euen when men please themselues in their inuentions, chusing rather to bee wise in their owne eyes, then to restrain their senses within the lists of Gods law. It is but in vaine then that the superstitious alleage their deuotions and good intentions, as they call them: for God so abhorres and detests them, y^e those who rest therein are tainted of high treason, and are guiltie of the breach of Gods couenant; because we ought to enterprise nothing of our owne braine: but to yeeld our obedience to Gods commandement. In a word, the beginning and perfection of his pure seruice consists in teachablenesse.

The spring of all superstitions.

By the verb to prouoke, Isaiah sets forth the impudencie of the people, who prouoked the Lord of set purpose: neither had they any such reuerence of his Maiestie, as to subiect themselues vnder his gouernement. And this he further amplifies, in adding vnto my face. For seeing those that are admonished by the word haue him present as: it were before their eyes; they sinne with an hie hand, and are more guiltie of impudencie and rebellion, then such as neuer heard tell of the word.

He also mentions the gardens which they had dedicated vnto their Idoles; and affirms that God was prouoked by them. Some think it should be spoken of briches here, by way of contempt; and that they are secretly opposed to the Altar, vpon which God would haue them onely to sacrifice. And thus they thinke the roofes of the houses are here meant; where y^e superstitious sort were wont to sacrifice, in regard they were made of briches. But I rather thinke this word simple signifies the Altars, which they had erected to their idols. In the meane while, howsoeuer they had a faire pretence to imitate the forme of that Altar ordained by the Lord: yet he abhorred such an excuse, because it was contrarie vnto his word.

Verf. 4. Which remaine among the graues, and lodge in the deserts, which eat swines flesh, and the broth of things polluted are in their vessels.

HE reckons vp other sorts of superstitions. Which albeit by reason of the breuitie of the words, it bee somewhat obscure; yet from other places of the Scriptures, it may easily bee gathered what they were. For as Necromancy was a thing much in vse among profane nations, so also the Iewes went into the sepulchers and deserts, to aske counsell of diuels; whereas they should onely haue sought counsell at the mouth of God. And in supposing to fetch answers from the dead, they delighted to be decied by the illusions of wicked spirits.

Now by the 18. of Deuteronomie, vers. 11. and other places, it appears, how expresse the Lord had forbidden this. And we haue touched it somewhat before, in Chap. 8. We are here taught in generall, that the Lord requires nothing more of vs then obedience, which hee accepts about all sacrifices: 1. Sam. 15. 22.

Which eat swines flesh.] He complained before that Gods seruice was polluted by their superstitions. Now he adds, that they reiected all difference of things: so as they discerned not between the pure and vnclane. And he recites one kind: namely, that they abstained not from swines flesh. This seemes but a light matter. Yet is it not so for all that. For we must not iudge how great this sinne is, by our rule: but according to that which the Lawgiuer hath prescribed. Neither is that sinne to be esteeme light, which God hath forbidden. This appertaines to the externall profession of faith; by which the Iewes should haue shewed, how farre off they were from the prophanations of the Gentiles. Wee must not recoile then from that rule which God hath giuen vs: no, not the thicknes of our naile.

Verf. 5. Which say, Stand apart, come not neere to me: For I am holier then thou: these are a smoke in my wrath, and a fire that burneth all the day.

HE notes out a grosse impietie that was among the Iewes; namely, that of an obstinate mind, and an vntamed rebellion, they opposed themselues against y^e true seruants of God: neither would they obey any admonitions. For whilest we giue eare to admonitions and reprehensions, there is some hope of repentance: but if wee reiect them, then is it certain certaine that we be paſt cure. Now howſoever the Prophets words in appearance ſeeme to be obſcure; yet the ſumme of them is, that hypocrites doe diſdainfully, and malepaſſly thruſt backe thoſe, who faithfully admoniſh them, becauſe they attribute unto themſelves, either a ſhew of holineſſe, or, in reſpect that their pride cannot indure that any ſhould reprove them: for hypocriſie is neuer ſeparate from diſdainfulneſſe & pride. Let vs not meruaile then if thoſe who be tainted with this vice, doe inſolently exalt themſelves, bragging of their holineſſe, and thinke that they excell therein about all others: and if we at this day alſo doe find the like qualities in the hypocrites of our time, which Iſaiah hath deſcribed to bee in thoſe that then lived. For Satan hath ſo blinded them, that whilſt with a vaine bragging of words, they ſet their deuotions to ſale, they baſely eſceme of Gods word.

The expoſitors thinke this ſhould be a generall ſentence, which reproves the Iewes for not ſubmitting themſelves vnto the Prophets: but we thinke the circumſtance of the place ſhould be conſidered, which they haue not ſufficiently reſpected, namely, that this verſe depends ſtill vpon the former: ſo as the Iewes are ſharply reproofed for reuolting from the true religion. And beſides, for that they had maliciously followed their owne inventions, ſo farre forth, that they commanded ſuch to bee pacifying, as ſoothed them not up therein. For this word, Goe backe, ſignifies nothing elſe but get thee hence; as if they ſhould ſay, We will not needle v with ſuch as ſhew vnto vs the way to life and ſalvation.

Verſ. 6. Behold, it is written before me; I will not keepe ſilence, but will render it and recompence it into their boſome.

The Prophet alludes to the cuſtome that is among Iudges, who haue lying by them vpon record, the informations, teſtimonies, acts, and other pieces of euidences, that when neede requires, the offender may bee eaſily conuicted: for we uſe to leaue thoſe things in writing, which we would haue poſteritic to remember. The Lord then teſtiſies that theſe things can neuer bee forgotten, becauſe they bee written before him. For howſoever hee winkes at things for a time, yet ſhall not the wicked eſcape vnpuniſhed, but ſhall well perceiue in the end that hee is a iuſt Iudge.

Hence let vs gather, that wee ought not to abuſe Gods patience, if hee forbearcs vs long, and liſts not vp his hand by and by to inflict his iudgement vpon vs; for he ceaſeth not for all that to keepe a register of all our faults; for which we may be ſure he will one day puniſh vs, vnleſſe we repent. I grant the Lord hath no neede to write for his memories ſake: but it pleaſeth him to uſe this phraſe of ſpeech, that wee ſhould not imagin him to be forgetfull of any thing, when hee defertes the execution of his iudgements. Nay, in Ier. 17. 1. he ſaith yet more expreſly, that the ſiue of Iudah was written with an iron pen, and with the point of a diamond.

To render into their boſome, is a phraſe of ſpeech much uſed in the Scriptures, Pſal. 79. 12. Ier. 32. 18. becauſe men thinke their finnes are either covered, or that they ſhall not come into account. And thus, either they lay the raiues of their concupiſcences in their owne neckes; or in attributing their faults to others, they become vtterly ſcareleſſe. This is the cauſe why God threatns to recompence their ſiue into their boſome, to the end they may bethinke themſelues what Iudge it is with whom they muſt haue to doe.

Verſ. 7. Your iniquities, and the iniquities of your fathers ſhall bee together (ſaith the Lord) which haue burnt incenſe vpon the mountaines, and bliſſephemed mee vpon the hilles: therefore will I meaſure their old worke into their boſome.

*Or, for they.

Heere he amplifies that which hee ſaid in few words in the former verſe. For hee ſhewes that it was not of yesterday that the Iewes were guilty of ſuch a diſloyaltie; but that it is the example of their fathers, whoſe ſteps they now followed: euen as heerebefore the Lord complained that he had a long time forborne this people, and was ſo wearie at laſt, that hee could beare them no longer. Thus then the Prophet aggravates their ſinne, when he tels the Iewes that they haue followed the example of their fathers. As if he ſhould ſay; ſuch birds, ſuch egges. For if men haue been often and diligently admoniſhed, their obſtinacie is ſo much the more to bee condemned, if they repent not. Heere we ſee that after they had reiected all admonitions and threatnings, they perſeuered many yeeres in their corruptions and impieties, which is heere laid to their charges, that they ſhould no longer plead their excuſes to couer their faults withall; but that they ſhould rather labour to confeſſe themſelues worthy of moſt exquisite torments.

The former verſe amplified.

Heere alſo wee may perceiue it to be ſo far off, that the corruption iſſuing from the fathers, ſhould any way excuſe the children; (as the ignorant are vſually wont to make this a buckler for their defence) that it rather ſerues as a meanes to pull vpon them a more heauie puniſhment.

The bad example of our fathers not to be followed.

Are together.] As if the Lord ſhould haue ſaid, that hee gathered and bound vp in one bundle, both the iniquities of the fathers and of the children, that in the end he might reuenge himſelfe of them: not that the children are guiltie or puniſhed for the fathers wickedneſſe, Ezech. 18. 20. but in regard that they followed the wicked courſe which their fathers liued in. Therefore it is juſt with God to wrap them vp with them in the ſame guiltineſſe, and to condemne them according to the ſame ſentence, eſpecially ſeeing their diſcaſes were growne incurable.

For they haue burnt incenſe.] The Prophet

Doctrine.

Gods patience muſt not be abuſed.

heere recites one particular, vnder which he also comprehends all other kindes of vices. For hee signifies all such reuolts as whereby the people were gone backe from Gods pure worship, and had giuen and dedicated themselves vnto strange gods. See here the height of iniquitie: for when the feare of God is stolen out of the heart, then is there no soundnesse nor vprightnesse left behind. He heere points out vnto vs then, the fountaine of all disorders: which wee are diligently to obserue, in regard that men flatter themselves, thinking themselves worthy of great praise, when they serue God after their owne fantasies; and in the meane while, consider not that there is nothing more abominable in his sight, than such a seruice as is deuised according to the appetites of our carnall imaginations. And no doubt but the people heerein desired that God should accept them, whilest they burnt incence vpon the mountains. But we must not Iudge of their worke by their deliberation or good intention, as they call it: Wee must hearken to Gods voice, who protests that he is in this way greatly dishonoured, rather than to all the men in the world; lest otherwise by seeking to rest vpon our intentions: we make our selues double guiltie before his Maiestie.

I will measure their vvorke. The word old may be diuerslie expounded, Either, I will measure againe with their oldnesse: or, in the first place; or, in times past; or, from the beginning. But the circumstance of the place must be considered. For by that we shall the better attaine to the Prophets meaning. You know he spake ere-while touching the works of their fathers: there is no doubt thereof but he here derides the children, who placed their defence in them. For it is but a silly and vaine shift to oppose against God the customes of our fathers, that is to say, a corruption of great antiquitie. Why so? Because in thus doing, we pull downe a more heauie iudgement vpon our owne heads. And yet many are so bewitched with this excuse, as they thinke a man ought not at all to reiect the same: neither can you get them an inch further. Truly, antiquitie is honourable: But no man is so to prize it, that he should therefore in the least thing diminish any of that honour which is due vnto God. See here an excellent place to conuince such as will needes maintaine superstitions by succession of yeeres; as if an old error were to be held for a law.

Verf. 8. Thus saith the Lord, As the wine is found in the cluster, and one saith, Destroy it not, for a blessing is in it, so will I doe for my seruants sakes, that I may not destroy them whole.

THe Prophet here moderates his former sentence. For other wise it had been a thing to seuerely the iniquities of the fathers should thus be called to mind, to the end the Lord might destroy their children with them. Yea, this might so haue affrighted the faith-full, that it had been enough to haue driuen them from all hope of saluation. We ought then you see, to stand carefull vpon our watch, and to consider for what cause the Lord is displeas'd with vs. For his meaning is so to astonish vs, as that therewithall hee would draw vs to himselfe: and not thereby to throw vs headlong into despaire. Hee leaues some hope for the faithfull here then, lest they should waxe fainthearted: and in proffering them refreshing, hee allures them to repentance, of which he reaped neither pleasure nor profit.

He confirms this by a similitude. As if a man minding to plucke vp a vine, yet finding some fruitfull branch thereon, hespares, and reserves it: euen so will the Lord take heed how he pulles vp those, in whom he finds any sap or vigor. In the fifth Chapter he complained, that the people was vnprofitable: yea, worse than that; for they brought forth sower fruits. Isaiah retains the same similitude: but he applies it otherwise. For howsoever the people were like vnto a bastard and barren vine; yet there remained some fruitfull branches, which the Lord would not suffer to perish.

But this may be taken two waies. Either that the Lord will preferre his people for the elects sake: or, that hauing rooted out the reprobates, he will saue the faithfull. There is great difference betwene these two interpretations. As touching the first, wee know that the wicked are sometimes spared for the godlies sake, whom the Lord will neither destroy nor wrappe vp in one common calamitie with them. And this is manifest enough by diuers examples in the holy Scriptures. The Lord would haue spared Sodom and Gomorah, had there been found but ten righteous persons there: Gen. 18. 32. All those which were in the ship with S. Paul to the number of 276. persons were giuen him of God, and saued from shipwacke; that so the power which he shewed in his seruant, might be the more euident: Act. 27. 32. The Lord blessed the house of Potiphar and made him to prosper in all things for Josephs sake, who dwelt in his familie: Gen. 39. 5. Many like examples there be which euery one may collect by himselfe. But I rather approue of the other exposition; namely, that the Lord so punisheth the sinnes of his people, that yet notwithstanding he hath respect to his beloved ones; and wrappes them not vp all in one, and the same ruine. Neither is it his meaning onlie that the faithfull shall be saued, but that there shall be a remnant left, in the midst of whom God will haue his name called vpon. And this is worth the noting. For he shewes that the remnant shall be very small, in comparison of that great multitude which was then in the land: as wee haue seene in Chap. 1. 9.

Now whereas the faithfull are often punished with the wicked, let vs not thinke God doth them any wrong: For the Lord will easily find faults sufficient in euery one of vs to afflict and punish vs. Besides, his meaning is to instruct and awaken vs by his rods: for being ing knit, and as it were grafted into the body of a people, it is no wonder if we be ſmitten with the ſame blowes, in regard we are members that haue drawne infection from the ſame. In the meane while, God moderates theſe chaſtiſements, leſt hee ſhould utterlie teare vp the choſen plants.

Verſ. 9. But I will bring a ſeed out of Iacob, and out of Iudah that ſhall inherite my mountaine: and mine elect ſhall inherite it, and my ſervants ſhall dwell there.

An explanation of the former ſentence. We muſt not iudge of the Churches eſtate by outward appearance.

THe Prophet explains the former verſe in other words, and ſhewes that the Lord will reſerue a ſeede vnto himſelfe, which ſhall call vpon his name. For he hath been wont ſo to chaſtiſe his people, that hee hath ſtill continued a Church, in which his truth and pure religion might be kept. For which cauſe alſo S. Paul calles her the pillar and ground of truth: 1. Tim. 3. 15. Wee are not to Iudge of the Church then, by the eſtate of things here below (ſeeing there is nothing ſtedfaſt in this world) but by the counſell of God who cannot endure to lee her either o-uertrowne or deſtroyed. Let vs carefullie remember this then, that ſo no calamities, ruines, nor deſolations of the Church may aſtoniſh vs.

He calles thoſe inheritors of the mountaines, who being ſet free from vnder their captiuitie, ſhould returne home againe into their countrie. Iudeah was full of mountaines, as we know. Againe, hee expounds that which might ſeeme obſcure: for hee ſignifies that the Iewes ſhould returne vnto their firſt ſtate, and that by right of inheriſance they ſhould inioy that land out of which they had been exiled. For ſoone after, Iudeah was exceedingly waſted: but the Lord proteſts that it ſhall not continue ſo long. For the greater confirmation whereof, he briefly mentions the covenant, by which this land was ordained for them to poſſeſſe as their heritage.

Thus albeir they were a long time retained as priſoners, yet this word heritage ſerued to put ſome life into them, that they might come to an aſſured confidence touching their being reſpoſſeſſed thereof. But it is to be noted that this grace is reſtrained to the elect and true ſervants of God, leſt all indifferentlie ſhould preſume to applie the ſame vnto themſelues.

Verſ. 10. And Sharon ſhall bee a ſheepfold: and the vallie of Achor ſhall be a reſting place for the cattell of my people that haue ſought me.*

* Or, ſor.

BY theſe figures he meanes nothing elſe but that the land which was waſte, ſhal be againe inhabited. For we haue here a ſecret compariſon thus: howſoever after the baniſhment of her inhabitants into a farre cuntrie, ſhee ſhould remaine ſolitarie and empty: yet ſhal ſhee againe be inhabited, and that in ſuch wiſe, as there ſhall be abundance of ſtockes, and beards: of fruitfull paſtures, and commous: and ſhould alſo furniſh them in plentifull manner with all things neceſſarie for the ſuſtentation of men.

Sharon and Achor were places for paſtures; but the one was apt for ſmall beaſts, and the other for great. And here we ſee that Gods promiſes not onely containe in them the things belonging to the life to come, but alſo to that which is preſent; to the end wee might taſte his bountie and liberalitie to the full. For by earthly benefiſts, we are invited to ſeeke for greater and more excellent things touching the heauenlie life.

Godlineſſe hath the promiſe of things belonging to this life, as well as of thoſe to come.

Whereas the Lord extends his liberalitie euen to the brute beaſts, which were created for our uſe: thence are wee to conceiue a more ſure and confident hope touching his fatherly kindnes towards vs. For if hee bee pleaſed to take care of beaſts which are ordained to ſerue vs, much more will hee furniſh vs with all things conuenient both for this life, and for that to come. And yet wee muſt keep in mind that doctrine (whereupon we haue inſiſted heretofore) which brings vs from temporall bleſſings, to the ſpirituall kingdome of Chriſt: Which the Prophets are wont to deſcribe out vnder figures.

If God take care of beaſts, much more to vs.

For my people.] Here he excludes the reprobates, who with braſen faces, will ſtand to bragge of Gods name falſely and vainly. But howſoever they dare malepertly bragge of Gods promiſes and ſacraments, yet are they neuer the nearer for getting any part with Gods children therein, but are deprived of all hope of Gods bleſſings, that ſo they may bee fitted to receiue the recompence of their iniquities.

In adding, who haue ſought mee, hee ſhewes yet more plainely who they bee that haue their part in theſe benefiſts: that ſo hee might ſtop the mouthes of all reprobates and hypocrites, as wee haue ſaid. See here then the true marke which ſeparates the ſheepe from the goates; and the lawfull heires from baſtards: namely, in ſeeking the Lord. For it is not enough to ſhroude our ſelues vnder ſome name or title; but wee muſt ſeek the Lord in puritie of conſcience, that ſo wee may cleaue vnto him with our whole hearts.

A note how to diſcerne Chriſts ſheepe from goates.

Verſ. 11. But yee are they that haue forſaken the Lord, and forgotten mine holie mountaines, and haue prepared a table for the multitude, and furniſh the drinke offering to the number.*

* Or, armie.

LEST hypocrites ſhould beguile themſelues with theſe promiſes, or, leſt they ſhould imagine that this which is ſpoken touching the reſtauration, belonged vnto them; hee once againe direſts his ſpeech vnto them. He calles them Apoſtataes, becauſe they had forgotten the mountaine of Zion: that is to ſay, had reuolted from Gods pure worſhip. For by the mountaine of holineſſe, he ſignifies the rule of holineſſe contained in the word of the Lord. For the Temple was built by his commandement, that in it he might be called vpon: with the altar also, whereupon hee inioined them to offer sacrifices. Thus all sacrifices and oblations were abominable, were they offered in any other place then that; or, to other gods; or otherwise then that which the law prescribed. For it is vnlawfull for men to doe any thing in this behalfe, after their owne fantasies; because the Lord requires nothing but obedience, 1. Sam. 15. 22. which cannot be done without faith, neither can faith be separated from the word, Rom. 10. 17. out of which it is not permitted vs either to seeke or aske of God.

In saying, who haue prepared a table; he recites their superstitions. The word Gad, is diuersly expounded: for some thinke he meanes Iupiter, or his starre: others, fortune. Saint Jerom translates; Who prepared the table to fortune: thinking that this word notes out happy euents. But it seemes more probable to me, that this word is taken for a band or multitude; yea, euen for an armie: and the etymologic of the word futes well enough with the icope of the text. There is one notable place amongst the rest in Gen. 30. 20. which serues for the vnderstanding of this word, where Leah reioiceth for the increase of her children: for it seemes her speech should be thus expoude; into a band. As if she should say; I haue now a great number of children: for the had many before; in so much that the called Gad, her sist soane. So in this place, I thinke Gad, should be taken for a band, troope, or armie: the reason is, because they had so many gods, that they were scarcely able to count them for their multitudes.

To furnish, may be taken heere two waies; namely, that they furnished all things for the seruce of their Idols, liberally and magnificently: for superstition can keepe neither end nor measure. And those, who when the matter concerns Gods worship, will not spare a penny; will steely bestow all they haue to set vp their Idols: or that there is not the meannest of their puppets, to which they haue not offered somewhat: and I rather content my selfe with this second exposition. For Idolaters thinke they haue neuer done enough, vnlesse they honour euery Saint; yea, and the more they serue them, the better they thinke to prosper in their busineses. And of this, we haue but too much experience at this day in the Papacie.

By the number, hee signifies that which hee meant by Armie: and this repetition is much vsed in our Prophets language. Thus his meaning is then, that the Table was set vp: that is to say, they sacrificed not to one Idoll alone, but to an infinit number: that by this hee might shew, what sore punishments these Idolaters were worthy of.

Verf. 12. Therefore will I number you to the sword, and all you shall bow downe to the slaughter, because I called, and yee did not answer; I spake, and yee heard not, but did euill in my sight, and did chuse that thing that I would not. *Or, before mine eies.

The Prophet alludes to the number of gods, whereof hee spake in the former verse: and shewes, that the Lord will easilie comprehend their great numbers; for he will number them to the sword. By this it is euident that hee spake not in the former verse of the two planetes, Iupiter and Mercurie, as some imagin; but in not satisfiing themselves with one God onely, they gathered together an armie of Idols.

Their coniecture is friuolous, who by the word Meni, which we haue translated, Number, vnderstand Mercurie, because Mena signifies to number; and that Mercurie was the god of the Merchants, who haue their bookes of accounts. For the Prophets meaning is plaine enough, in that he shewes the people shall be numbred to the sword, because they reioiced in an heape of gods, and refused to rest vpon the onely true God.

Because I haue called, he amplifies the greatness and hainoufnesse of this reuolt, in regard the Iewes sinned of a set malice, and rather against knowledge, then of ignorance. For they had been often taught and instructed, but they insolently reiected all admonitions. In which respect, they were much lesse excusable then those to whom the Prophets were not sent. For as no man liue can pretend any cause of ignorance; so yet the Iewes much lesse, and those to whom the word of the Lord hath been published: who for this cause shall haue a sharper sentence of condemnation pronounced against them then, and shall be mote seuerly punished then any other.

Hee sets downe the meanes of this call; namely, that hee had exhorted them by his Prophets. For by the clause, I spake; hee repeats one and the same thing twice, according to the custome of the Hebrewes, as wee noted before.

To hearken to the Lord, is to obey his word: for it were to little purpose to lend an eare, vnlesse wee follow that which the word proounds vnto vs. For otherwise, what difference is betweene vs and the Ass, who wags his eares? God will be heard with the heart, Prou. 23. 26. As for a fained audience, he vtterly reiects it. Now he shewes the cause why they would not come at his call; surely they stopped their eares against wholsome doctrine. For the beginning of obedience, is to bring with vs a desire to learne.

Before mine eies, is as much to say, as before my face: which phrase of speech, he vsed a little before. Euery man sinnes before the eies of the Lord, neither can any auoid his presence. But it is properly said that we sinne before his eies, when being called by him, wee stand not in awe of his sacred presence: for he is nearest to those whom he calles by his Prophets: yea, to such it may be said, that he shewes himselfe visibly. Therefore so much the more detestable is their impietic, and worthy thy of the more ſtripes, who as it were with whorith foreheads deſpiſe God, who in ſuch familiar manner ſummons and calles them vnto him.

Now by the latter end of the verſe it appears that the Iewes are not condemned for any enormous ſinnes; but chiefly in reſpect of their new found deuotions, by which they corrupted the ſeruiſe of God. For albeit they were forward enough in hunting after their forged ſacrifices, thinking thereby to obtaine Gods fauour; yet himſelfe pronounceth that he abhorres all ſuch endeouours; becauſe there is nothing but pollution therein. It is not permitted to euery one then to follow that which ſeemes good in his owne eyes; but we muſt haue an eye to that which God approves of, and not turne therfrom, nor an haires breadth. Well, we ſee that this vice hath not rigned in one age onely, namely, that men haue followed their fond appetites; and haue worſhipped their owne inuentions in ſtead of God: when the queſtion hath been touching his pure ſeruiſe. But how great delight ſo euery man take herein, ſure it is the Lord proteſts that hee contemnes and abhorres it.

Verſ. 13. Therefore thus ſaith the Lord God, Behold, my ſeruants ſhall eate, and yee ſhall bee hungrie: Behold, my ſeruants ſhall drinke, and yee ſhall be thirſtie: Behold, my ſeruants ſhall reioyce, and yee ſhall be aſhamed.

14. Behold, my ſeruants ſhall ſing for ioy of heart, and yee ſhall crie for ſorrow of heart, and ſhall howle for vexation of mind.

THE Prophet here diſtinguiſheth (yet more clearly) hypocrites which hold a place in the Church onely, from his true and lawfull children. For though all will needs take vnto them the title of Gods children, yet he ſhewes that many were to be chaſed our of the houſe; & that thoſe who prouddie inſulted ouer Gods people, ſhould be frustrated of their hope, becauſe it was vaine & falſe. And we are to note well the remarkable oppoſition, which is here put betweene Gods ſeruants, and thoſe that falſely glorie in his name. For he ſhewes that their vaine titles, their boating, and falſe perſwaſions ſhould ſtand them in no ſtead. Theſe words, they ſhall eate and drinke, ſignifie felicitie, and a prosperous eſtate in this preſent life. For it is as if he had promiſed to haue ſuch care ouer the faithfull, that they ſhould want nothing.

But it ſeemes the Lord here promiſeth his ſeruants more in words, then he performes in deedes. For are they not often hungrie, and thirſtie, whileſt the wicked overflow in all ſorts of good things, and abuſe them to exceſſe and riot? I anſwere, that Chriffs kingdome is here noted out vnto vs vnder theſe figures: for otherwiſe we cannot comprehend it. For which cauſe the Prophets are wont to borrow ſimilitudes from earthly kingdoms, in which when the ſubiects flow in wealth and in the inioying of all bleſſings, there Gods liberalitie is to be eſpied; by which alſo wee ordinarily iudge of his fatherly loue towards vs. But becauſe it is not expedient that the faithfull ſhould fixe their hopes vpon earthly commodities, it is enough for them that they take onely ſome little taſte of them, the better to vphold their faith. And if it ſo fall out, that they bee now and then preſſed with wants, yet by feeling the benefit of contentation with a little, they ceaſe not, for all that ſtill to acknowledge God for their father, and to taſte of his liberalitie. Nay, ſhall I ſay more; euen in their very poueritie they are oftentimes richer indeede then Kings, and great Lords of the earth.

But although the wicked enioy neuer ſo much, yet are they the only miſerable people in the world; becauſe they cannot enioy their wealth with a good conſcience. The Prophet therfore hath reſpect to the right vſe of Gods giſts. For ſuch as ſeue him purely, receiue from him as children from the hand of their father, all things needfull for this life preſent. But the reſt as vsurpers and theeces take whatſo euer they poſſeſſe by ſtealth and robbetie. No riches nor abundance can ſatiſfie the wicked: they are alwaies in diſtruſt, and trembling: their conſciences will neuer giue them reſt. The Lord you ſee then promiſeth no more here then hee truly performs; neither muſt we iudge of this felicitie by outward appearances.

This will be better perceiued by the words following, where hee ſpeakes of reioying and giuing thanks. For no doubt the Prophets meaning is to ſay, that contentment conſiſts not in the inioying of abundance, but in tranquillitie, peace and gladneſſe of mind, becauſe all things are vnsauourie to the vnfaithfull. But the godly take more pleaſure in the feeling of Gods fatherly loue, then in all the pleaſures of the world. In the meane while wee are to note, that wee muſt wait for all felicitie from God onely, who will not permit any of his to want any thing that appertaines to the bleſſed life.

Verſ. 15. And yee ſhall leaue your names as a curſe vnto my choſen: for the Lord God ſhall ſlay you, and call his ſeruants by another name.

HE proſecuteth the ſame doctrine, and ſhewes that God in the end, will ſeparate the hypocrites from his true ſeruants. Truly, we are not to maruell that the Prophet inſiſts thus long vpon this point; for there is nothing more difficult to be beaten into the heads of hypocrites, who being puffd vp with pride, deceiue and beguile themſelues.

Now he ſaith, they ſhall leaue their name as a curſe, in regard that they held themſelues to be the holy poſteritie: and that there was none vnder heauen but they, worthis of that title. To that alſo appertaines the verb, To leaue: as if he ſhould ſay, that their vaine arrogancie, to which they were so much addicted, should bee violently plucked away from them. And therefore to the end they should beware how they pleased themselves in a temporall and transitory reioicing, the Lord blunts the edge of this their ouerweening, and saith, they shall leaue their names as a curse to other seruants that he shall haue. So as this example should be solemnly taken vp as a common prouerb; God so curse thee, as he hath done the Iewes.

Shall call by another name.] He refels the ouerweening of this nation, who thought God should haue no more people remaining, if the children of Abraham were gone. For he protests that hee will adopt vnto himselfe a new people, and that hee is not so tied to the Iewes, but hee will easilie finde out others, whom hee will adorne with the name of his people.

Whereas some by the word other, vnderstand the name of Christian, it is too much constrained: and it appears by the circumstance of the place, that the Prophet had another drift. For, in as much as the Iewes proudly bragged of the antiquitie of their name, and thereupon grew insolent, because God had of old elected them; as if forsooth he could not bee without them; therefore hee promiseth that the Lord will chuse and adopt another people. And yet should they haue no cause giuen them thereby to accuse him either of inconstancie, or variableness; as if he had changed counsell. Nay, he will rather execute his decrees and iust iudgements against all those, who vnder a false pretence of his name, doe darken his glorie, and corrupt all pietie.

Verf. 16. Hee that shall blesse himselfe in the earth, shall blesse himselfe in the true God; and he that sweareth in the earth, shall sweare by the true God: for the former troubles are forgotten, and shall surely hide themselves.

The whole world opposed to Iudeah.

The whole world is heere opposed to this little corner of Iudeah, where Gods seruice was in a manner included and shut vp. But since God hath manifested himselfe vnto all: he is not now serued in any particular region, but in euery place alike. Which Christ also himselfe teacheth, in Iohn 4.21. saying; The houre is come, and now is, when ye shall neither in this mountaine, nor in Ierusalem, worship the Father. And Saint Paul wils that men in euery place doe lift vp pure hands vnto heauen, without wrath or doubting: 1. Tim. 2. 8. He opposeth the word, Earth, heere then, which signifies all the world, vnto the land of Iudeah.

To blesse and sweare, is taken for the whole seruice of God. Swearing is one branch of this seruice, as we haue seene in Chap. 19. 18. and 48. 1. For thereby we leaue all iudgement vnto God, and acknowledge him the true witnesse of whatsoeuer is done or spoken. We are said to blesse, when we looke for all prosperitie frō his hand, & giue him thanks: after we haue receiued the same. In a word, when we acknowledge that all benefits flow in vnto vs from his meere liberality.

By the true God.] That is to say, by him who is faithfull in his promises, and stedfast in his counsell. Though I denie not but there may bee a close opposition vnderstood betwene the true God, and the false gods of the Gentiles.

The troubles are forgotten and pass.] This promise appertaines onely to the faithfull. Gods meaning is, that he will put an end to the anguishes & afflictions, that the Church might know her calamities should not indure for euer. Now this promise began to take effect, when the people returned from Babylon: for howsoeuer they were troubled as well in the way, as in their Country, yet their afflictions were neuer so sharp, but God kept a measure in them, because at their returne home, the reedifying of the Temple, and the restoring of the politike estate, asswaged the sorrow, and cheered vp their hearts in good hope, vntill the coming of Christ.

Verf. 17. For loe, I will create new heauens, and a new earth: and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into minde.

By these similitudes hee promiseth a notable change. As if God should haue said; I haue both will and power to restore my Church; yea, & that in such wise, that she shall seeme to haue recouered new forces, and haue an habitation in a new world. These are excellent maners of speeches. But the excellencie of this benefit, which should be offered at the coming of Christ, could not otherwise bee expressed. Neither doth the Prophet meane this alone of Christs first coming, but of the vvhole course of his kingdom, vntill his last appearing: as we haue often said in other places. The world therefore you see, is created anew (as you would say) by Christ: for which cause also the Apostle calles it the new world: Heb. 2. 5. Neither is it to bee doubted but hee alludes to this text. Notwithstanding the Prophet speaks heere of the restauration of the Church, after their returne out of Babylon. This I grant to bee true: but yet this restauration is imperfect, vnlesse it bee extended vnto Christ: wee are but in our course thitherward as yet; neither shall these things be fully accomplished, vntill the last resurrection, which is as it were the vtmost bounds and limits of this course.

A notable change promised.

The world created anew by the coming of Christ.

Where he saith, that the former things shall be no more called to mind: some referre it to heauen and earth. As if he should say; Heereafter there shall be no more newes of these creatures. But I had rather referre it to the former time: for his meaning is, that the ioy of being restored, shall bee so great, that they shall vtterly forget their miseries. Vnlesse any had rather referre it to those benefits which were worthy of memorie, and yet were forgotten when Gods grace appeared. And in this sense the Prophet saith, in Chap. 43. 18.

Remember

Remember ye not the former things? Not that God would haue the faithfull to forget their deliuerance; but in regard that the one compared with the other, did daiken it, as the Sunne doth the brightnesse of the ſtars.

Let vs remember then that these things are fulfilled in vs, as oft as we be regenerated: but we are regenerated onely in part, and therefore as yet we cannot attaine the sight of this new heauen and new earth. What meruaine is it then if wee sigh and mourne, seeing wee haue not yet vnterly put off the old man, but many remainders of sinne doe still sticke fast in vs? This renoument must begin at vs, who hold the first ranke: for the creatures in regard of our offences, grone, and are subiect to vanitie, as Saint Paul speakes, Rom. 8.20. But after we shall bee perfectly renued, heauen and earth shall be renued also, and shall recover their first estate. Hence we may gather that which wee haue often mentioned, namely, that the Prophet hath an eye to the whole kingdome of Christ, euen vnto the end thereof: which for this effects sake, is called the day of restauration and refreshing, Act. 3.19.21.

Verf. 18. But bee you glad, and reioice for euer in the thing that I shall create: for behold, I will create Ierusalem as a reioicing, and her people as a ioy.

He exhorts the faithfull to reioice with condigne ioy, for so excellent a benefit of God. And this was added for amplifications sake; because men neuer esteeme of the graces of God, according to their worth, amongst the which, this heere mentioned is the chiefe and most excellent; for they prize them at a very low rate. It is needfull therefore that the faithfull should be ronzed and quickened vp by such exhortations as these, to the end they should thew themselves neither vnthankfull, nor forgetfull: as also that they should not lightly passe ouer this benefit; namely, that being redeemed by the hand of Christ, they might beare the remembrance thereof in their hearts, as the earnest pennie of eternall life. This is the cause why Iſaiah teacheth that the delinerance is not acknowledged with such thankfulness as is meete, vnlesse the faithfull continue on their ioy the whole course of their liues, exercising themselves in singing the praises of God.

Whereas Ierusalem is called gladnesse, and the people thereof reioicing; it may seeme somewhat harsh at the first blush: yet we may thence gather a good exposition, namely, that in the deliuerance of the Church, there shall be such cause of ioy, that it shall abolish all matter of sorrow. And surely when our miseries themselves doe tend to our saluation, wee haue therein no small occasion giuen vs of reioicing.

Verf. 19. And I will reioice in Ierusalem, and ioy in my people, and the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying.

The Prophet expresth somewhat more then in the former verse. For in this his meaning is to say, that the Lord will not onely giue matter of reioicing, but also that himselfe shall bee partaker with them in this ioy. For so great is his loue to vs, that he takes no lesse pleasure in our prospering, then if he himselfe inioiced the same with vs. By which, our faith ought to be much confirmed, namely, when wee heare that God beares vs such an ardent loue, are we afflicted or scattered? He saith, that this grieues & troubles him. Contrariwise, doe we flourish and prosper? He professeth that he takes great pleasure therein. According as wee haue seene in Chap. 63.10. that the Spirit of God was vexed, when that order which he requires and approues, is ouerthrowne and confounded. As also in Chap. 62.5. he takes vnto him the person of a bridegroom, who findes no other contentment then in his wife.

Verf. 20. There shall bee no more there a childe of yeeres, nor an old man, that hath not filled his daies: for hee that shall bee an hundred yeeres old, shall die as a young man: but the sinner being an hundred yeeres olde, shall bee accursed.

Some thinke the difference betweene the Law and the Gospell, is heere noted out, because the Law is as a schoolmaster, who held his schollers vnder the first rudiments; but the Gospell brings vs to a perfect age. Others vnderstand it, that there should bee no more any difference of age: for where eternall life is, there needes no dispute about youth or age. But thus I expound the Prophets words; Be they young or old, they shall come to a perfect age; so as they shall enermore be strong, euen as in the flower of youth: yea, they shall bee alwaies lustie and strong: for wee wax old and feeble by reason of our finnes. When thou art angry, saith Moses, Psal. 90.9, 10. all our daies are gone as a tale that is told. The time of our life is threescore yeeres and ten: and if they bee of more strength, fourscore yeeres; yet is their strength but labour and sorrow: for it passeth away suddenly, and voce stee away. But Christ is come to strengthen vs, and to vphold vs in a perfect estate.

Yet we must distinguish betweene the two members. For after he hath said, that the Children of the Church shall liue long, so as none of them shall be taken out of the world, till they be full of daies, nor till they haue finished their perfect course: he therewithall addes, they shall be strong euen in age is selfe. Now howiouer the greater part of the faithfull are hardly able to indure in respect of their weakenesse, and that others of them grow feeble before the time; yet is this no vaine promise. For if Christ did truly and fully raigine in vs, it is certain that his strength would flourish in vs, and would sanctifie both our bodies and soules. Let vs then thanke our owne corruptions, that wee are subiect to so many sicknesses, sorrowes, to age and other incumbrances. Why so? Because we will not suffer Christ quietly to raigne in vs. As also for that we haue not so fructified in newnesse of life, as vterly to haue put off the old man.

The cause of languishing sicknesse, and vntimely death in our felues.

Corporall and spirituall blessings onely found in Christs Church. Nothing but a curse dresse out of the Church.

From this place also let vs note, that corporall and spirituall blessings are onely to bee found in the kingdome of Christ: that is to say, in the Church. For out of it, there is nothing but accursednesse. Whence it followes that all such as are out of this kingdome, are most miserable. And albeit, they seeme lustie and strong: yet are they nothing in Gods account but rotten and lothsome carions.

Verf. 21. And they shall build houses and inhabit them, and they shall plant vineyards, and eate the fruite of them.

22. They shall not build, and another eate: for as the daies of the tree are the daies of my people, and mine elect shall in old age enjoy the worke of their hands.

* Or, shall continue the worke, &c.

IN these two verses hee puts them in mind of the blessings contained in the law; namely, that such as serued God should inhabit the houses they had built, and should eate the fruites of their trees: Leuit. 20. 10. As on the contrary, the rebellious should bee driuen out of their houses to giue place vnto strangers: neither should they gather the fruite which they had planted: Deut. 28. 30. From this curse (saith Ihu) shall the Lord deliuer you; to the end you may enjoy your substance. Now the Prophet sets before them the things appertaining to this life present: and from thence borrowes similitudes, thereby teaching vs how to ascend vp higher: and to apprehend and lay hold of the blessed and endles life. For we must not sticke fast glued to these transitorie things: but rather vse them as steppes and staires to scale the heauens, that being rapt vp thither, wee may possesse the eternall and immortall benefits. It is also good reason: that the enjoying of these blessings, wherof the vnbeleeuers deprived themselves, should bee promised to the regenerated Church; which rested wholly vpon the only free fauour and good pleasure of her God.

Temporall blessings ought to bee as ladders, by which wee may ascend to the enjoying of eternall benefits.

Where it is added, According to the daies of a wee; some thinke eternall life should be here promised: as if men should then enjoy the tree of life. But this device is vterly frivoules and too farre remote from the Prophets meaning. Neither can I sufficientlie maruell at the expositors, who vexe themselves so much about the interpretation of this place; seeing our Prophet speaks not onely of life, but of the quiet estate thereof also. As if hee should say; You shall plant vines, and tise of the fruite of them; neither shall you depart out of this world, till you haue enjoyed them; both you and your childrens children.

He takes a similitude from a tree, in respect that before hee had spoken of planting of vines. Therefore hee now promiseth, they shall peaceably enjoy their houses and vines, without being any more annoyed, either by enemies or theecus. So as this tranquillitie should bee no lesse durable, then the life of a tree.

The worke is continued, or is made perpetuall, when it hath good successe; otherwise, men should trauell a long time for nothing, if God did not blesse their labour; because the enemy would rob or spoile that which men haue begun: so as they should not be able to enjoy the fruits of their hands. The worke is continued therefore, not onely when it hath some good progresse; but when it is come to perfection. Hence let vs note, that we cannot so much as enjoy our goods nor haue any true rest, vnlesse we be in the kingdome of Christ (who is the only heire of the world) and stand ingrafted (by faith) in his bodie. I grant, the wicked may enjoy the benefit of this life present: but therewithall they shall be in continuall anguish, and the worke of an euill conscience shall continually gnaw them: so as euen their very abundance shall bee their bane and destruction. For onely faith causeth vs to apprehend the things which belong to the blessed life: those then that are destitute of faith, can bee no members of Christ.

No true rest to them that are out of Christs kingdome.

Those that are destitute of faith, no members of Christ.

Verf. 23. They shall not labour in vaine, nor bring forth in feare: for they are the seed of the blessed of the Lord, and their ends with them.

* Or, of spring.

THE Prophet reckons vp here other kindes of blessings which God promiseth to the Kingdome of Christ. For albeit, God had continued to blesse his people alwayes, yet were those blessings after a sort withheld till Christs coming, in whom there was to be seene full and perfect felicitie. The sum is, that both Iewes and Gentiles should bee euery way happie vnder the kingdome of Christ. Now as it is a signe of Gods wrath and curse when we receiue no fruit at all of our labour: so on the contrary, it is a testimonie of his blessing when wee enjoy the fruites of our trauels. For this cause hee shewes how the Iewes being returned home from their captiuitie, to enjoy a true and full deliuerance, shall not labour in vaine; neither shall their worke be fruitlesse. The law thiercates the death of friends, warres, losse of goods, and anguish of minde: Leuit. 26. 22. Deut. 28. 65. But God here on the contrary promiseth tranquillitie, fertilitie, peace, and the fruit of our labours. These blessings are well to be noted: for there are few to be found, who in taking paines, fixe their eies vpon Gods blessing, so as to attribute all things vnto him: or to bee perswaded that they doe but labour in vaine, vnlesse the Few fixe their eies (whilest they labour) vpon Gods blessing.

Lord giue good ſucceſſe thereunto : Pfalm. 127 1. Euen as then we are to expect all bleſſing from God onely : ſo to him alone ought we to render the whole praiſe after wee haue receiued the ſame.

Some expound that which follows, That the women ſhall not bring forth in feare: and that they were not to feare bearing of children; in regard they ſhould feele no paines therein. We know this puniſhment was inflicted vpon the woman, becauſe of her ſinne: namely, that ſhee ſhould bring forth in ſorrow; and ſhould be in danger of death: Gen. 3.16. Children are alſo begotten with feare and trembling, when there are any rumors of warres: and it is more likely that the Prophet alluded to this, to wit, that there ſhould be ſuch tranquillitie, that men and women ſhould haue no cauſe of feare at all. For theſe words muſt be referred to fathers and mothers; who are feareleſſe, in reſpect of their children in time of peace; which they cannot but feare, when any calamitie threatens vs.

The reaſon that is added, That they ſhall be theſed which the Lord hath bleſſed, agrees very well. For whence ariſe feares, terrors, and diſquietnes of min, but from Gods curſe? when this curſe then ſhall bee remo- ued, the Prophet had good cauſe to affirme that the fathers, with their offspring, ſhall bee freed from feares and diſtractions; becauſe being in Gods fauour, they ſhall bee alwaies ſo ſecured from feares and dangers, that they ſhall dwell in ſafetie.

And their offspring with them.] This is contrary to the priuation of children, which is reckoned vp amongſt the curſes of God, in Leuit. 6.22. And it is as much as if hee had ſaid, I will no more bereaue them of the children they haue begotten; but will cauſe them (with the reſt of other benefiſts which I will beſtow vpon them) to enioy their children alſo.

Verſ. 24. Ye before they call I will anſwer, and whiles they ſpeake I will heare.

SEe heere a (moſt) precious promiſe. For what thing is more deſirable then to haue God fauourable vnto vs, and that wee may with boldnes haue acceſſe vnto him? Surely, it is not poſſible wee ſhould be any way miſerable, as long as it is free for vs to haue our recourſe vnto the Lord, though we ſhould be inuironed with infinite thouſands of miſeries and calamities. The Lord heere promiſeth vs then, that ouer ſhall not put vpon ſuites to him in vaine. But what? The Fathers vnder the Law had the ſame promiſe; for from the beginning of the world they were heard as oft as they called vpon him. And in deede prayer is one of the chiefſt fruites of faith. But yet our Prophet confirms this point more and more: for, in regard the lewes were to endure a tedious and long captiuitie, the Lord proteſts hee will not ſuffer them to languish any longer in exile, neither will hee any longer deferre his help, but will heare them: yea, before they cry. This promiſe principally belongs to Chriſts kingdome, by whom we are heard, & haue acceſſe vnto God the Father, as S. Paul cleerely teacheth in Eph. 3.12. I grant the Prophets had the ſame acceſſe: neither could their prayers haue any entrance, but for Chriſts ſake. But the gate which is now made large, and ſet wide open vnto vs, was then narrow, and in a manner cloſed vp. For vnder the law, the people were wont to ſlay without in the court: Luk. 11.10. Nothing now hinders vs from entering into the Sanctuary; becauſe the waile of the temple is rent in twaine. By Chriſt then wee haue entrance into heauen; and may boldly, and with aſſurance draw neere to the throne of grace to obtaine mercie and helpe in time of need. Heb. 4.16.

But ſome may aſke here, whether there be any faithfull in the world at this day, or any kingdome of Chriſt? for it appears not that God is thus ready to grant his ſuccours, neither doe we perceiue any fruit of our prayers. I anſwere, that howſocuer it then onlie appears that our petitions haue been heard, when the effects manifeſt the ſame; yet notwithstanding it is true that the Lord reiects not our prayers; becauſe he ſuffers vs not to faint, but ſuſtains vs inwardly by the vertue of his holy ſpirit, to wait for the cunct and iſſue with patience. Neither deferres hee, as if hee wanted time or leiſure, as men often doe; but rather thereby to exerciſe our faith, and prooue our patience. In a word, God may be ſaid to heare two waies: Firſt, when hee giues vs helpe manifeſtly: Secondlie, when hee aſſiſts vs inwardly by the ſtedfaſt and vnmoouea- ble, euen in the middeſt of our afflictions. Were this doctrine deeplie ſeſed and grounded in our mindes, then ſhould we with more boldneſſe and alacritie haue our recourſe to our God: neither would wee ſtand diſputing the caſe touching the inuocation of Saints, with ſo great headſtrongneſſe and obſtinacie. For whence is it that men haue forged ſo many patrons vnto themſelues, to whom they had rather go then to Chriſt; but becauſe they haue not receiued this doctrine, and haue reiected theſe noble and excellent promiſes?

Verſ. 25. The wolfe and the lambe ſhall feede together; and the lyon ſhall eaſt ſtraw like the bullocke: and ſo the ſerpent duſt ſhall be his meate. They ſhall no more burne nor deſtroy in all mine holy moun- taine, ſaith the Lord.

HIS meaning is, that all things ſhall be ſet in their perfect order, when Chriſt ſhall raigne; and as it ſeemes here is a cloſe oppoſition betwixt Adam and Chriſt. For we know that all the miſeries of this life preſent, haue flowed into vs from the ſinne of the firſt man; for then were wee deſtroyed of the rule and authoritie which God had giuen man ouer all the creatures, which before willingly ſubmitted themſelues vnto man, and obied his commandements: Gen. 1. 28. But now the greater part of them rise vp against him; yea, and assault him with open force. When wee see vulues, beares, lions, and other wild beasts to liur men; and other beasts which serue him; and that those also which should bring him in profit, harmes him, this wee must impute to our owne sinne, who by our disobedience haue ouerthrowne the order of these things.

It belongs to Christ to restore all things to their right order, which by our sinne are now out of order.

But seeing it is Christs office to bring all things into their right order and perfect estate againe, therefore the Prophet shewes that the confusion or scattering which is now to be perceiued in the things of this world, shall be taken away at his coming; because all corruptions shall then be abolished, and the world shall returne to his first shape. The lion shall lue without doing harme, & shall not rore after his pray. The serpent shall content it selfe with the dust; and shall couch close within the earth; without annoying any by his venomous sting. To be short, whatsoeuer is out of course and disordered, shall then be set into a right frame.

And it is not to be doubted, but our Prophet alludes vnto cruell & blood thurstie men, whose wild and furious natures shall be tamed, when they shall bow downe their necks to beare the yoke of Christ. But first of all we are well to consider what confusion is happened to all creatures, by the sinne of man. For if we haue not an eie to that, we cannot rightly iudge as we ought of the excellencie of this restauration. Wee are also to call to mind that which wee haue said before in the eleuenth Chapter, touching these allegories.

Heere wee see then what men are before the Lord hath conuerted and changed their hearts, and receiued them into his fold, euen wild and furious beasts; who then, and not before, abstaine from doing euill, when the Lord by the power of his Spirit, hath subdued their cruell and leuisfull natures: He addes, in his holy mountaine; because all things that offend, being purged away, the Lord will gather vnto himselfe a Church, without spot or wrinkle, Eph. 5. For vnder the word All, he signifies a generall purgation: yee wee are not to wonder if so many doe still remaine cruell and vntractable; because there are but a very few that are true inhabitants of Gods holy mountaine; very few that be faithfull and sincere, no not amongst those that make profession of Christianitie. For seeing the old man shall rules and raignes in them, it must needs be that Crises and dissensions should also haue their full sway there.

What men are, being not conuerted.

Few that rightly inhabit Gods holy mountaine.

THE LXVI. CHAPTER.

Verf. 1. Thou saist the Lord; The heauen is my throne, and the earth is my footstool: where is that house that yee will build vnto mee? And where is that place of my rest?

In the first foure verses he direct his speech to the Hypocrites.

His sermon is different from the former. For the Prophet inueighs here vehemently against the Iewes, who being puffed vp with a vaine confidence of their sacrifices, and of the Temple, were iocund and merrie: and vnder this pretence pleased themselves in their sinnes. But he shewes that this securitie of theirs was not onely vaine and foolish, but execrable and diuellish. Why so? Because such as inuicour to serue God, and to appease him with outward ceremonies, doe grossly flout him to his face. He therefore reprocheth them that they went about to forge vnto themselves an Idoll in stead of God, when they fixed him thus to his Temple. Afterwards he discourseth of the Churches renuing, and of the spreading thereof thorowout the whole world.

Besides, minding to gall such to the quicke, as serued God by halues, and in hypocrisie; hee begins at the description of his nature. For in assigning vnto God the heauen for his dwelling place, his meaning is to say, that his

Maiestic fills all things, and is present euery where; neither can he be shut vp, nor circumscribed within any place whatsoever: so far is it off, that they can include him within the Temple. The Scriptures often affirme that God is in heauen, not that he should be shut vp there, but to raise vp our mindes farre above the world, lest wee should imagin ought of him that were contemptible or earthly: for the onely aspect of the heauens ought to raise vp our mindes higher, and to raise vs into an admiration. And yet he testifies in infinit places, that hee is present vith vs: that his power is manifestt euery where, to the end wee should not thinke it to be inclosed within the heauens. It seemes this was no hard matter to be beleued; and that all then confessed as much. For who among them was ignorant, that Gods Maiestic filled both heauen and earth? Thus they might obiect then, who goes about to plucke God out of heauen? Therefore Isaiah, thou art angry, and inueighest against vs without cause. Neither is it to be doubted but the people insolently reiected this doctrine of the Prophet, and were sharply incensed against him, as if hee had offered them great wrong. But the answer was readie; namely, that whilest they inuoued to pacifie God, according to their owne fantasies, they didas much as in them lay, thereby forge an Idoll, quite contrarie to his Maiestic. These superstitious ones trusted in their bare & naked ceremonies, thinking they had quit themselves wondrous well, if they had been once at the Temple, and offered ferred vp their praies and ſacrifices there. The Prophet ſhewes that we muſt not meature Gods Maieſtie by ſuch an elle; as alſo, that whatſoever wee offer him without the puritie of the heart, is nothing elle but vannie. For ſeeing by Gods dwelling in the heavens, it is euident that he is of a ſpiritual nature; if his ſeruitee bee not answerable therunto, it muſt needs bee corrupt and wicked.

Vnder the word houſe, he comprehends all the ceremonies wherein they thought Gods ſeruitee conſiſted. And for as much as they iudged of God and of his ſeruitee, according to the outward face of the Temple, the Prophet ſhewes, that it was vnworthy the Maieſtie of ſo great a Lord, to fix him to a viſible and perihable building. He diſputes not here ſimply about the eſſence of God, but therewithall of his true worſhippe, ſhewing that it is ſpiritually, that ſo it may be answerable to Gods nature, who is a Spirit: Iohn 4.24. For if men did ſeriously conſider what God is, then would they not forge vnto themſelves ſo many haſtard kindes of religion; neither would they meature his infinit greatneſſe according to their ſhallow capacities. This common and known ſentence therefore hath more weight and efficacie in it, then if the Prophet had ſpoken vnto them of ſome new matter. For thus he ſhewes that they were ſo ſottish and ſenſeleſſe, that they were ignorant of that which was familiarly knowne to the ſimpleſt idiot. As alſo, that they rather reſembled beaſts then men, in imagining that God was ſet, or ſhould reſt, himſelfe in the Temple. By way of contempt, then he aſkes, where is this place? For it is not fit that God ſhould dwell vpon earth, or be ſhut vp as within a priſon. The Temple alſo was built vpon a little hill, which little ſpace was vnable to comprehend Gods glory: 1. King 8. 27.

That place of my reſt. And yet the Lord had ſaid of the Temple, in Pſ. 132. 8. Behold this is my reſt, heere will I dwell, for I haue a delight therein. And in 2. Chron. 6. 41. Ariſe O Lord, and enter into thy reſt. Moreover, wee haue ſcene before, in Chap. 11. 10. that Gods reſt in the Temple ſhould be glorious. In a word, the very name of the Temple was honourable. Why then doth the Prophet now reiect it? I anſwere, that the Temple is called Gods reſt, becauſe hee there ſhewed teſtimonies of his preſence. For he had choſen this place to be called vpon therein, in which alſo he manifeſted euident ſignes of his power & might. But hee cauſed it not to bee built, that men ſhould therefore belecue touching his Maieſtie, whatſoever ſeemed good in their eies: but rather, that being admoniſhed of Gods preſence, by the viſible ceremonies, they might from thence liſt vp their hearts into heauen, acknowledging the Lord to be greater and more excellent then all the world. And yet men being of their owne natures inclined to ſuperſtitious; the meanes which were giuen the Iewes for their helpe, proued lets and hinderances vnto them by their owne fault. So farre were they off then from mouning vp to heauen by them through faith, that they kept their mindes groueling heere below, and made themſelves belecue that God was bound and tied vnto them: for which cauſe they ſerued him by halves, yea, they toied with him at their pleaſure.

Saint Stephen alleadgeth this place to verie good purpoſe, in Act. 7. 48. And the Apoſtle Paul cloſly applies it to the ſenſe that we haue touched, Act. 17. 24. For both of them ſhew, that ſuch grieſly deceiue themſelves, who bring carnall rites vnto God, as if his ſeruitee and true religion conſiſted therein: as alſo thoſe who wickedly deſace his glory, by ſetting vp Idols and Images. For Saint Stephen directes his ſpeech to the Iewes, who being fixed to the ſhadowes of the Law, neglected true godlineſſe. And Saint Paul ſpeaking to the Gentiles, denies that God dwels in Temples made with hands.

Verſ. 2. For all theſe things hath mine hand made, and all theſe things haue I bene, ſaith the Lord, and to him will I looke, euen to him that is poore, and of a contrite ſpirit, and I remember not my word.

The Prophet reſutes the falſe opinion which men conceiued of Gods ſeruitee, in regard they thought that ſacrifices and externall ceremonies auailed very much of themſelves. For this is the ſtate of the queſtion, namely, that God contents not himſelfe with bare and naked ceremonies; that he holds them vaine and idle diſguifings, when men thinke to ſatiſfie him with them.

Where he ſaith, that he hath made all things; it muſt not onely be referred to the Temple, but to whatſoever was there offered vnto God. Now hee ſpeakes expreſly of his making of them, to teach men that he hath no need of this externall ſeruitee. As in Pſal. 50. 10. he proteſts that all beaſts are his creatures, and by right belong to him: and yet (forſooth) the Iewes would needs pacifie him by ſacrificing of them. But ſee heere the diſeaſe which is rooted in the hearts of the ſuperſtitious ſort, namely, that they transforme God into what Image they liſt, though himſelfe hath ordained an outward worſhippe; not for his owne profit, but for ours, that ſo we might be exerciſed therein, according to the reach of our capacities.

The word beginning, is as much as if he had ſaid; You ought not to compare mee vnto thoſe things which heerebefore haue begunne to be, ſeeing I am eternall, and without any beginning. I haue little need then of your ſacrifices, ſaith the Lord, who was before them. What good, I pray you, then can they do me? In a word, hee contends, that ceremonies are nothing worth in themſelves, but belong to another end. Iſaiah alſo holds it for a thing out of queſtion, that God can receive no increaſe: whence it folloves, that he onely contents himſelfe with himſelfe, ſeeing from all eternitie hee neuer ſtood in need of the worlds helpe.

Whatſoever is offered to God, without the puritie of the heart, meere vannie.

Gods worſhip muſt be answerable to Gods nature.

God ord ins his worſhip not for his owne profit, but for ours.

A true definition of Gods service.

In the next place the definition of the true worship is added. For in saying that God regards the humble, I doubt not but the Prophet here priuilege opposeth the humble, and contrite in spirit, to that pompe, brauerie and glistering shew of ceremonies, which are wont to dazle mens eyes, and to rauish them out of themselves. The Lord testifies then, that hee rather requires humble and broken hearts, which tremble at his commandment. Vnder which words, hee notes out the inward puritie of the heart, and a true hunger and thirst after righteousness: and therewithall also teacheth vs how wee ought to be prepared to become acceptable vnto God.

Obiect.

As touching the word trembling, it might seeme strange at the first, that the Prophet should require this of the faithfull; seeing nothing is more sweete and acceptable, then the word of the Lord: neither any thing more contrarie vnto it then trembling. I answer, that there are two sorts of trembling. With one of them those are smitten who see and hate the Lord: with the other they are touched and made obedient, who reuerence and feare him. I am not ignorant that some referre this member to the law, which threatens, terrifies and denounceth the horrible iudgements of God against sinners. But I take it more generally, in regard that the faithfull themselves tremble at the promises, when they receiue them in humility. Hence let vs gather, that true pietie consists in hauing all our senses framed according to the obedience of God, without attributing any thing to our selves through pride or vaine glorie. For it is the nature of faith to yeeld obedience to God: and to heare him speake, attentiuely and patiently. But no sooner doth any vaine opinion of our owne worth puffe vs vp with pride and loftinesse of mind: but wee are forthwith destitute of all godlinesse and feare of God; because if we attribute vnto our selves neuer so little; so much the more doe we contemne and despise him.

Anf. Two sorts of trembling.

A trembling at the promises. Wherein true pietie consists.

The nature of faith.

And it is diligently to be obserued that he faith, that tremble at my word: for many will brag of their honouring and fearing of God; who yet shew themselves contemners of his Maiestie, in that they set light by his word. All our reuerence which wee profess to owe vnto God, must be manifested by trembling at his word: in which hee will be acknowledged, as in his lively image. The sum is, that God prefers this sacrifice before all others; namely, when the faithfull are so humbled in the true denial of themselves, that they think themselves nothing, yea and are content to be brought to nothing also in Gods sight. In which sense it is said: Psal. 51. 17. That a contrite spirit is an acceptable sacrifice vnto God. A broken and a contrite heart O God (saith the Prophet) thou wilt not despise. Now because this modestie of faith, brings forth teachableness in vs; therefore the studie of godlinesse is also added: that hauing cast down all our pride and rebellion, we may begin to tremble at y word of God.

A singular consolation.

From these words we haue to gather a singular consolation; namely, that albeit wee seeme to be miserable in this our humilitie and low estate; yea, and that we be thought vnworthie the looking on: yet cease we not for all that to be happie; because it pleaseth the Lord to behold vs with a gracious aspect. When we are solicited then to despair, let vs thinke: surely the Lord is wont euen by this means to raise vp his children vnto heauen, howsoeuer being here for a time brought euen to y gates of hell, they seeme to be overwhelmed vnder the waight of the burthen.

Verf. 3. Hee that killeth a bullocke, is as if he slew a man: hee that sacrificeth a sheepe, as if he cut off a dogges necke: he that offereth an oblation, as if he offered swines blood: he that remembreth incense, as if he blessed an Idoll: yea, they haue chosen their owne waies, and their soule delitteth in their abominations.

THIS present verse containes two members. In the first, Isaiah plainely manifests, that God reiects all the sacrifices of his nation, yea, which more is, that he abhorred them. In the second, he notes out an horrible abuse, wherein they had mingled the ceremonies of the Gentiles, among the sacrifices of the law: and by this meanes had peruerued and corrupted all. Many thinke that by these words, the sacrifices ordained in the law are abolished. But they deceiue themselves; because Isaiah handleth that doctrine now, which he touched before in the first, and in the fiftie eight chapters. But Isaiah doth not precisely condemne the sacrifices, but rather the vices & corruptions which were mingled with them; namely, in that the Iewes thought that God contented himselfe with vaine appearances: and themselves in the meane while neglected his feare, and the hauing of a good conscience. Hee speakes not of the thing it selfe then, but taxeth the persons who abused the sacrifices. For in thus doing, they offered him no better then the empty shels. His meaning bricflie is to say, That God approoues of none other sacrifices, but such as proceede from a pure heart and a sincere affection.

God condemnes not the sacrifices, but the corruptions mingled therewith.

In the meane while it is very likely the Prophet alludes to those horrible and monstrous sacrifices of the Gentiles. For they sacrificed men aliue: or buried them quicke in the earth. And the Romanes, who thought themselves more deuout then others; yea, and the Iewes also, abstained not from so horrible and execrable a crime. Nay, which more is, these men in their inconsiderate zeale defiled themselves with the murdering of many children: thinking therein forsooth to imitate their father Abraham: Gen. 22. 10. And Isaiah therefore saith, that in sacrificing an ox, it was all one, as if they had cut a mans throate. And thus he shewes that albeit the Iewes had a religio apart by themselves, and such a one as was ordained by God; yet were they esteemed no better then the prophane heathen, among whom all things were filthie and vn-cleane. Also, that God approoued no more of the one, then of the other, in regard his name was no leſſe profaned by their hypocriſie, then by the ſuperſtitions of the Gentiles. But in another place we haue ſhewed how needfull this admonition was. For though the Iewes were ſufficiently conuicted of all manner of abominations, yet they iudged themſelues in good caſe as long as they might lie lurking vnder this couerture. The Prophet therefore meets with them in their turnings, and affirms that they ſhall gaine no more by thinking thus to pacifie God, then if they offered vp vnto him the ſacrilegious abominations of the heathen.

When in the end of the verſe he ſaith, yea, or, in truth; the place may be translated two waies: becauſe ſy relatiue may agree as well to the Gentiles, as to the Iewes, namely, that the Iewes had mingled & intangled themſelues in the idolatries of the Gentiles: or that they followed their owne inuentions. The firſt expoſition is not much amiffe, were it not conſtrained; for he ſpake not of the Gentiles before. And the height of the Iewes impietic conſiſted in this, that beſides the abuſe of Gods pure worſhip; and contempt of the law, they had profaned the Temple, and all other places with wicked and curſed ſuperſtitions. They ſet vp Altars, they planted groues, they ſet forth plaies, and fights: ſo as they walked after euery thing that was ſet vp to corrupt their minds. Thus there was a mingle mingle of all ſuperſtitions betwene them and the heathen: ſuch as is at this day to be ſcene in the papacie: Where wee behold many fragments patched together of all ſorts of ſuperſtitions, not only Jewiſh and heatheniſſe, but alſo newly inuented by the diuell himſelfe: that by meanes thereof they might vnder ſuch goodlie ſhewes, the more eaſily coſten and deceiue the world.

Popiſh ſu-
perſtitions, Jewiſh, Hea-theniſh, and diuiliſh.

The Prophet then meant to ſay, that both themſelues and their companions deſerued double condemnation; becauſe whileſt they gloried in the name of God, and made profeſſion of his ſeruiſe, they were not aſhamed to pollute the ſame with the ſacrileges of idolatrious nations.

The other expoſition is not obſcure: and it alſo ſutes well; namely, that the Iewes were addited to follow the vanitie of their owne inventions; and ſo followed their abominations. And thus he affirms, that ſuch ſerue not God with a pure affection, who at their pleaſure deſpiſe him. Nor onely in reſpect that they are ſtuffed full of avarice, hatred, ambition, guile, crueltie and robberies: but in regard that by their inuentions, they had corrupted Gods ſeruiſe. And albeit the relatiue ought to be vnderſtood of the Iewes: yet the Prophet therewithall condemnes all the ſuperſtitions which they had borrowed from prophane nations. Thus there is no great difference in reſpect of the thing it ſelfe. For he onely teacheth that whatſoever proceeded from them was filthy and abominable, becauſe they had malepertly, and rebellioſly ſhaken off Gods yoke: ſo as impiety raigned among them in euery place. For how can thoſe riuers be pure and cleane, which receiue nothing but mire and dirt from an impure fountaine?

Their choiſe and deſire did more manifeſtly diſcouer their obſtinacie; for hauing wittingly caſt Gods commandments behind their backes, they applied their minds vnto things vicerly contrarie thereunto: as if of ſet purpoſe they had determined to reiect whatſoever proceeded from God, that they might yeeld obedience to their owne peruerſe luſts.

Verſ. 4. Therefore will I chuſe out their deluſions, and I wil bring their feare vpon them, becauſe I called, and none would anſwere: I ſpake, and they would not heare: but they did euill in my ſight, and choſe the things that I would not.

The Prophet meant to ſay that the Iewes ſhould gaine nothing by ſeeking out goodly pretences, and ſtaring holes; becauſe God cannot bee deluded by the fained and coloured words of men. For what reaſon is it indeede, that wee ſhould meaſure God according to our blind reaſon? neither is it meete he ſhould ſtand to mans arbitrement: but wee muſt iudge of his workes by his word.

Gods workes
muſt be iudged of by his word.

[I will chuſe out.] That is to ſay, I will ſo diſperſe the fogges and miſts which they labour to ſpread abroad, that all ſhall be able to diſcerne of the illuſions. They ſeeme now to ſteale away in their darke, but a time will come, wherein they ſhall bee laid open as at noone day. The ſumme is, that in regard the Iewes were addited to ſuch a licentiousneſſe, that they preferred whatſoever pleaſed them before Gods commandments: it ſhuld alſo come to paſſe, that God would alſo take his turne at his pleaſure, to diſcouer all their iuglings.

The ſumme,

Vnder the word feare, he repeates one and the ſame thing according to ſy cuſtome of the Hebrewes, thus; I will cauſe them to know that they haue erred in ſuch wiſe, that that which they feared, ſhall fall vpon their owne heads. Whereby you ſee that their turnings and windings ſhould ſtand them in no ſtead, in conſounding the truth with lies; or to cloake their ſuperſtitions: and alſo becauſe the Lord hath ſkill enough to ſeparate the one from the other.

[For I haue called.] The Prophet doth againe condemne the obſtinacie of the Iewes: who could not abide that the Lord ſhould correct them. There is but onely remedy left to tame our vices; that is, to hearken vnto God ſpeaking, when hee labours to bring vs into the right way. But if we harden our hearts (againſt this remedie) then are we paſt cure. Are men ſo audacious then as to prize their inuentions about the commandments of God? Surely, then doe they openly ſcorne him, to whoſe will they ought to bee ſubiect. But this yet is more damnable, namely, when there was ſo great hardneſſe of heart, that the gate was ſhut vp againſt al holy admonitions.

But one re-
tame our vices.

In vaine therefore did they boast, that their new found deuotions were of any value, to make their seruice acceptable vnto God; because he reiects and abhorres all that, which men chuse and follow, when they haue cast his word behind their backs.

Isaiah also repeats that which he had said before; namely, that the Lewes had sinned in Gods presence: as if they had wittingly determined to prouoke the eyes of his glory to wrath. But withall hee adds the meanes wherby they effected it; to wit, in respect that of a peruerse desire, they chose to embrace that which God had forbidden them. Neither is it for nothing that hee thus oft taxeth the vnicurable insolencie of men, who defrauding God of his right, care not a button for any thing he approves of.

Verf. 5. Hear the word of the Lord, all ye that tremble at his word. Your brethren that hated you, and cast you out for my names sake, said; Let the Lord be glorified: but hee shall appeare to your ioy, and they shall be ashamed.

* Or, draue you behind them.

Heere hee turns him againe to the godly.

Now hee directs his speech to the true seruants of God; and promiseth them a thing which they could hardly expect in these so sharpe afflictions. And he speaks in particular vnto them, in regard many at that time bragged falsely of Gods name. Yea, turning himselfe from the multitude, he preacheth to a small handfull: as hath bin shewed in Chap. 8. Seale up the Law, and bind up the testimonie among my Disciples. Now by this marke hee shewes, that Gods true and lawfull children are those that tremble at Gods word: which is a rare vertue indeed. He therefore opposeth it to their fained profession, who after they were circumcised, would needs bee held for Gods people; & outwardly made great shewes of holinesse; that we might vnderstand, that such onely feare and reuerence God, who honour and reuerence his word: that is to say, who being touched to the quicke with Gods voice, doe subiect all their senses vnder his obedience: for this is no small testimonie of pietie and godlinesse.

Such onely feare God, as reuerence his word.

Besides, in as much as hypocrites are wont to cast a wonderful goodly varnish ouer their glorious ceremonies, the Prophets intent is, to arme and fortifie the faithfull, that they might be able to beare such assaults, lest they should faint when they should bee mocked and abused. As if he should say; You haue not onely to fight against strange nations, but also against home enemies, who hold a place in the Church, and who are your brethren, in respect of that covenant, which is common to you all. If they scorne your simplicitie, in the same sort as they haue proudly despised the Lord himselfe, you must constantly and courageously resist this temptation.

He calles them brethren then, who notwithstanding were enemies, both to the faithfull, and to the word of the Lord. For he attributes this name vnto them by way of yeelding or granting it vnto them; who yet vsurped this title falsely. Whence wee gather, that it is no new plague wherewith the Church hath bin pestered; namely, that the enemies, who beare the name of brethren, should be notified vp in her lap. Hence ariseth that perpetuall conflict which wee must needs haue with hypocrites, who cannot indure that we should serue God in puritie and sinceritie of conscience.

Who cast you out. Word for word it is; Who draue you behind them. As wee see how the Pope thunders against vs horribly, as if wee were most abominable and wretched people. And thus the hypocrites reiect the little flock of the faithfull. For when they once get a head, and see themselves the stronger in multitude, authority, and power, then doe they exercise such tyrannie, that all things are allowed or disallowed, as they list; and cause the faithfull not onely to bee disgraced and despised, but they ouerwhelme them with their great multitude, as the chaffe doth the good corne, yea, they proudly trample them vnder their feete.

The multitude reiecteth the little flocks,

Let the Lord bee glorified. Some translate; The Lord is seuer: but let vs examine whether of the two expositions sures best. Those who turne it, He is seuer; thinke that the wicked complaine, as if God dealt too seuerely in that he spared not his people, and handled them ouer rigorously. They therefore thinke that by this language the people were solicited to despair: for when the wicked goe about to turne vs from God, they labour to plucke from vs all hope and assurance of our saluation. But I rather rest in the second exposition, which also is most received and approved of; to wit, that the wicked doe heere scorne both the promises and prophecies, because this glory which the Prophets do oft mention, did not appeare. As if they should say; Let the Lord shew some signe of his glory, that wee may boldly rest vpon it. And therefore the Prophet meant to arme the faithfull against such a blasphemie, that they should not suffer their faith to bee shaken by the flouts and mockes of the wicked.

This place also may be taken in this sense, namely, that the wicked promised themselves wonders and mountaines, as if by their good deedes they had merited Gods fauour. Which Amos, in Chap. 5. 18. reprocheth the Lewes withall; to wit, that they perfwaded themselves God would bee mercifull vnto them, whilst they obstinately prouoked the Lord. In as much then as vnder pretext of their sacrifices, they despised all threatnings, and yet made their brags, as if God would aide them; the Prophet answers, that they shall see the glory of God, but after another maner then they expected. In a word, it is all one as if he had said; The Lord at his coming will cause the faithfull to know, that their hope was not vaine. For hee would appeare with fauour to the good: but to their shame and destruction, who affirmed that hee would come to maintaine their impietic, whereof hee is the enemy and auenger. The one sort should inioy gladnesse of heart and consolation: but the others, shame and confusion. For they should speedilie

Brethren, enemies both to the word, and to the godly that professe it;

ſpeedilie taſte of Gods vengeance, at which they now ieſt.

Verſ. 6. A voice ſoundeth from the Citie, euen a voice from the Temple, the voice of the Lord that recompenceth his enemies fully.

A confirmation of the former ſentence.

HEE confirms the former ſentence, namely, that God hath not threated in vaine, that he wil quickly come to puniſh the hypocrites, that the faithfull may with the more cheerfullneſſe of heart, wait for this promiſed ioy. But all the difficultie is, to know of what enemies he ſpeakes : for wee may vnderſtand this place of the Babylonians, by whoſe ruine God deliuered his Church. It may alſo bee applied to the other enemies, who were entertained in the boſome of the Church. And I rather incline to this latter ſenſe, though I denie not butt it may be vnderſtood of all ſortes of enemies. But hee reſpects the home enemies, of whom he hath hitherunto ſpoken, who reiected the voice of God, ſounding continually by the miniſtry of the Prophets. Well, ſaith hee, It ſhall come to paſſe that you ſhall heare a more horrible voice. And yet hee forthwith mitigates his ſpeech, leſt this terror ſhould diſcourage the ſeruants of God.

The ſumme.

The ſumme is, that the wicked reioice in vaine, when they oppoſe their rebellions againſt Gods iudgements. Why ſo? Becauſe they ſhall not eſcape his hand. Nay, which more is, his voice ſhall ſound from that Temple, wherein they put ſuch carnall confidence; and that the faithfull ſhall then receiue the fruit of their patience. Would to God that we at this day did not perceiue the like contempt among the rout of hypocrites, who care neither for admonitiōs nor threatnings at all : neither beare they any reverence to Gods word. In ſtead of that ſweete and ſtil voice which they now heare, we are conſtrained to preach the voice of feare and tumult, which one day ſhall ring in their eares; but it ſhall be ſtrō y moutheſ of ſuch maſters, as ſhall be of a clean contrary diſpoſition. For ſeeing the world is ſo audacious, as with a ſacrilegious contempt to reiect Gods word, it ſhall bee conſtrained not onely to heare, but alſo to feele an armed voice : that is to ſay, fire and blood.

Verſ. 7. Before ſhee trauailed, ſhee brought forth : and before her paine came, ſhee was deliuered of a man child.

God provides for the ſafetie of his children, whileſt he chaſtiſheth the wicked.

THE Prophet hauing before comforted the faithfull, to the end the arrogancie and pride of their enemies (with which they ſhould be afflicted) might not aſtoniſh them; and after that hauing commanded them to wait conſtantly till the coming of the Lord; now he addes therewithall, that the wicked ſhall bee ſo puniſhed, that yet God in the meane while will prouide for the ſafetie of his choſen. Neither ſpeakes he onely of ſome one or two men, but of the whole Church, which he compares to a woman : which ſimilitude hee hath vſed heretofore. For the Lords ſpeciall meaning is, to gather vs into a body, wherein wee may haue the teſtimonie of our adoption : as alſo to acknowledge him for our ſaiker, and that we may be nourished vp in the Church, as in the lap of our mother. This ſimilitude therefore of a mother is very apt: for it ſignifies that the Church ſhall bee ſo reſtored, that ſhee ſhall haue a large and ample of ſpring, though for a time the was reputed for a widow and barren. And hee repeats the ſentence againe, which hee vſed heretofore : but now hee expreſſeth ſome-what more, namely, that this worke of God ſhall be ſudden and vnexpected. For he withdrawes the faithfull from all carnall conceits, that they ſhould not iudge of the reſtauration of the Church according to humane reaſon.

Women are wont to beare their children the ſpace of nine moneths in their wombes: then at laſt they bring them forth with great paine: but the Lord hath another way in begetting of his children. It ſhall come to paſſe, ſaith hee, that the fruit ſhall come into the world, before it can be either percieued, or felt by any paine. And that is the cauſe alſo why hee attributes the whole praiſe thereof vnto himſelfe, in regard that ſuch a miracle farre ſurpaſſeth all the induſtrie of man.

Now hee ſpeakes eſpecially of a man child, to ſet forth the courage and agilitie of theſe children. For his meaning heereby is, that ſuch a race ſhall be of a noble kind, and not delicate or effeminate. As we alſo know that the faithfull are ſo regenerated by the Spirit of Chriſt, that they finiſh their courſe with an inuincible courage. And in this ſenſe Saint Paul ſaith, that they haue not receiued the ſpirit of bondage to feare againe, &c. Rom. 8. 15.

Verſ. 8. Who hath beard ſuch a thing? Who hath ſene ſuch things? Shall the earth be brought forth in one day? Or ſhall a nation bee borne at once? For as ſoone as Zion trauailed, ſhe brought forth children.

HE extols the greatnes of this worke, whereof he ſpake in the former verſe. For his meaning is, that the reſtauration of the Church ſhall be admirable, and extraordinarie, in ſuch wiſe that the faithfull ſhall confeſſe the whole worke hath proceeded from Gods meere grace, and not from the order or courſe of nature. For when men thinke of this, they are like to them that dreame, as it is ſaid in Pſalm. 126. 1. Moreouer, his meaning is not that the reſtauration of the Church, ſhall be perfected by and by. For the aduancements thereof are tedious and diuers, yea very ſlow in the iudgement of our ſenſe; but he ſhews that the beginning it ſelfe surmounts y reach of al mens capacities. And yer he speakes not excessiuey neither. For we often see that the Church brings foorth, when she was not iudged to be with child before. Nay, which more is, whilest thee is thought to be barren, thee is made fruitfull by the preaching of the Gospell; in such wise, that we admire at the thing after it is come to passe, in respect it seemed incredible to vs before.

These things were in part accomplished when the people returned out of Babylon. But we haue a much more euident prooue of it in the Gospell; after the publishing whereof, what an infinite number of children hath shee been borne in the Church? And haue not we in our times seene the accomplishment of this prophesie? For since thirtie yerces past that the Gospell hath been preached, how many children hath the Church borne? Hath not the Lord now troups of them dispersed throughout the world? Nothing was here foretold then, which we see not at this day fulfilled euen with our ciies.

Now he sets foorth the glorie of this miracle by a similitude. For what people or nation came there euer into the world all at an instant? For men are gathered and increased by little and little. But it is farre otherwise with the Church; who foorthwith brings foorth and repleniseth many places with great numbers of her children. The summe is, that God will work so powerfully, y by an extraordinary manner, the Church shall haue an infinite number of children in an instant. The word earth, may be taken for any countrey, or for the inhabitants of it.

Verf. 9. Shall I cause to tranell, and not bring foorth? shall I cause to bring foorth, and shall bee barren, saith thy God.

Gods power ought not to be called in question.

EVEN as in the former verse the Prophet hath highly magnified the worke of God: so now hee also shewes that it is not to bee thought impossible; neither ought any to call his power into question, seeing it farre surmounts all the whole order of nature. For if we consider who it is that speakes, and how easie a matter it is for him to performe that which he hath promised, we shall not bee so incredulous; but that wee shall foorthwith remember that the restauration of the whole world is in his hands, who in a moment can create a hundred worlds, if it please him. A little before by intermingling an admiration, he meant to extoll the greatnesse of the worke: but now to the end the hearts of the faithful should not be hindered nor depressed, he exhorts them to thinke well of his power. And that he might the better perswade them that nothing is so impossible with man, but it is easie with him, and by and by obeyes his commandement; hee propounds and sets before them the things which wee see every day by experience. For who perceiues not evidently his admirable power in womens bearing of children? But will not the Lord trou yee shew himselfe, much more wonderfull in the increasing and multiplying of his Church, which is the most excellent theater of his glorie? What a peruersefesse of mind is it then to limit and restraime his power, or to thinke that hee is lesse able when it pleaseth him by himselfe alone to worke without meeces, and as it were with an out stretched arme, then when he vseth naturall meanes?

Verf. 10. Reioyce ye with Ierusalem, and be glad with her, all yee that loue her: reioyce for ioi with her, al yee that mourne for her.

I Saiah promiseth an happie estate to those who wept and lamented before: for he respects not his owne time, in which hee liued, but the captiuitie, during which the faithful being oppressed and beaten downe with sorrow, had almost fainted. He therefore exhorts and prouokes all those who intirely loue the Church, and hold nothing more deare vnto them then her saluation, to reioyce. Hereby shewing that no man hath any part or portion in this so great a benefit, vnlesse such only as beare an holy loue vnto the Church, and are thorowly affected with a feruent desire of her deliuerance: Yea, euen then when shee is contemptible in the sight of the world, as it is said in Psal. 102. namely, That the Saints delite in the scattered stones of the Church, and that they haue pitie on the dust thereof.

Who are fit to reioyce for the churches deliuerance.

For this cause he addes, you that mourne for her. For in regard there was a lamentable and an horrible scattering in the captiuitie, so as there was no recouerie at all to bee expected; hee rouzeth vp the faithful, and commands them to bee of good courage; or at least to prepare themselues to ioi.

This exhortation contains also a promise & something more then that too: For a bare promise would not haue been of such efficacie: But, these things must not bee restrained to one time alone. We are rather to call to minde our generall rule, whereof wee haue so often spoken in this prophesie: namely, that these promises must be extended from the returne of the people, to the coming of Christ; and so to the full accomplishment of all promises at his last appearing.

Verf. 11. That you may sucke and be satisfied with the breasts of her consolati-on: that you may milke out, and bee delighted with the brightnesse of her glory.

THIS verse must be ioyned with the former. Because the Prophet shewes what the occasion of this ioi shall be; namelie, ^{ioy} that the miserable and scattered estate of the Church, shall in time turne to be happie and flourishing. By the word to sucke, hee alludes to the actions of little infants. As if he should say, Enioy your mother, with all her good things, and hang continually at her breasts. Note here that that he compares all the faithfull of what age fouer vnto little children: to put them in mind of their infirmities and weakneſſe, that ſo they might be confirmed by the power of the Lord. This ſimilitude therefore of milking and ſucking, is diligently to be obſerued.

The occasion of the former

Some take the word conſolations, in the aſtiue ſignification, and others in the paſſiue. But I incline to them of the latter ſort. For the Prophet meanes ſuch conſolations, as the Church receiues: and which the imparts vnto her children. And indeed what conſolation is comparable vnto this? For in what can we find matter of more excellent or full contentment; which better appears in the member following, where the delectation in the brightneſſe of her glorie is added.

Verſ. 12. For thus ſaith the Lord, Behold, I will extend peace ouer her like a flood, and the glorie of the Gentiles like a flowing ſtreame: then ſhall ſhee ſucke. Ye ſhall be borne vpon her ſides, and be ioyfull vpon her knees.

The former ſimilitude profecuted.

In verſ. 13.

HE profecutes the ſame ſimilitude ſtill, and compares Gods children vnto little babes which are carried in armes, whom the mothers cheriſh in their boſomes: with whom alſo they vie to ſport and play. Now that the Lord might the better expreſſe to the full the great loue he beares vs, hee compares himſelfe to mothers, who are wont to ſurpaſſe all others in kindneſſe to their children, as wee noted in Chap. 49. 15. The Lord then will needes be our mother, as it were, that he may ſhew himſelfe to be tender ouer vs, (as if hee dandled vs in his lap: in ſtead of thoſe troubles, outrages, miſeries, and anguiſhes which we haue ſuſtained.

By peace, he meanes felicity: and in the word glorie, there is a repetition, vnder which is comprehended all ſorts of riches: ſo as they ſhould want nothing appertaining to a full and perfect peace. For in as much as the Gentiles liued ſumptuouſlie before, and had all things at will; he affirms that the faithfull alſo ſhall enjoy whatſoever belongs to an happy life; euen in as great abundance, as the floods which flow into the ſea.

By the continuall courſe, is meant a perpetuitie. For God being in himſelfe a fontaine that can neuer be drawne drie; his peace muſt needs diſſer very much from that of the world; which is in a moment dried vp, and vaniſheth away. As oft then as wee behold the wofull and lamentable eſtate of the Church, let vs call to mind theſe ſweete promiſes; and remember that they belong no leſſe vnto vs then they did vnto that people. And ſeeing God hath floods of peace in ſtore, which he wil powre forth vpon his Church: let vs not bee diſcomforted, no, nor in the miſdeſt of the greateſt and ſharpeſt aſſaults. But rather let vs ſing, and be glad; when miſeries and anguiſhes doe moſt preſſe vs.

And whereas he delightes in vs as in child ren; and not as in men of a ripe age, let vs willingly acknowledge our condition to bee ſuch; that ſo we may gladly accept of theſe conſolations. For doubtleſſe it is a ſigne of Gods infinite goodneſſe towards vs, when he is thus pleaſed to ſupport our infirmities.

Verſ. 13. As one whom his mother comforts, ſo will I comfort you, and yee ſhall bee comforted in Ieruſalem:

14. And when ye ſee this, your hearts ſhall reioyce, and your bones ſhall flouriſh like an Hearbe: and the hand of the Lord ſhall be knowne among his ſeruants, and his indignation againſt his enemies.

IT is wonderfull to ſee how long the Prophet inſiſts vpon this renouation: for it might ſeeme that he had ſpoken fully of it before. But for as much as hee could not ſufficiently expreſſe the great loue and affection which God beares vs, nor content himſelfe to haue ſpoken of it, therefore it is that hee redoubles and repeats one and the ſame thing ſo often.

When he ſaith, they ſhall be comforted in Ieruſalem: it may be expounded two waies. For the meaning may bee, that the faithfull ſhall be glad, when they ſhall ſee the Church reſtored: or, the Church being reſtored, that ſhee will endeavour to comfort her children. The firſt expoſition ſeemes more copious: but we ought to haue an eie to the Prophets meaning, and not to that which carries a faire ſhew only. In the firſt place he makes God the author of this conſolation. And hath he not good cauſe? yet notwithstanding ads in the ſecond place, that it ſhall be in Ieruſalem, by whom it was to be adminiſtred. You ſee then that this comfort is not offered nor giuen to the prophane contemners, who care not what becomes of the Church, but to thoſe who out of a true affection of godlines doe manifeſt themſelues to be her children.

The verbe to ſet, expreſſeth a ſure experience; that the faithfull ſhould not doubt of the euent: but fully imbracing this prophetic, they might patiently endure for a time their mothers barrenneſſe.

He illuſtrates this by a ſimilitude, when he ſaith, that their bones ſhould receiue new force and vigor, euen as dead hearbs waxe greene, after winter. Now hee ſpeakes of the bones, which become withered with ſorrow, as Salomon ſaith: Prou. 17. 22. as on the contrary, ioy is wont to repleniſh and reuiue them. Thus he notes out a vehemence, and an incomparable ioy: and it ſeemes he alludes to that ſorrow which had almoſt dried vp the bones of the faithfull in captiuitie; in ſo much that they were become withered, and like dead men. The Lord therefore comforts them, and promiſeth that his Church ſhall flouriſh, and abound in all bleſſings. Afterwards, that he might giue them better aſſurance, hee commands them to liſt vp their minds vnto God, who will then manifeſt his ſuccour.

It is added afterward, that the hand of the Lord

The firſt member of this verſe is expounded before in verſ. 11.

Lord was not alwaies reuealed, bur remained couered for a time, as if he had been vtterly carelesse of his chosen. For in appearance, it seemed hee had reiected them, seeing Daniel and other good men were carried away captiues, no lesse then Zedechias. When the Sunne should shine againe vpon them then, there should bee manifested such a difference betweene the godly and the wicked, that his hand which before was as it were hidden, should now evidently appeare, because hee will no more dissemble the matter, nor suffer the wicked any longer to take their full swinge, but will openly shew what great care he hath ouer his Church. Haue our enemies gotten the start of vs then, & haue they made their part the stronger, so as wee seeme for a time to be forsaken, and left destitute of all helpe? Yet let vs not faint nor be discouraged, for a day will come, wherein the Lord will reueale himselfe, and will set vs free from vnder the tyrannie and violence of the enemies.

Verf. 15. For behold the Lord will come with fire, and his charrets like a whirlwind, that he may recompence anger with wrath, and his indignation with a flame of fire.

The end of this description is, that when the faithfull should see their miseries to setue in stead of a may game to the wicked, wherat they would laugh their fill: yet they should not therefore turne from the right way, nor be discouraged. For the Prophet meant not onely to galle the wicked, who are wont to be daunted with no threatnings whatsoeuer, but scorne all that is told them: but he therewithall comforts the faithfull, to assure them that they should be in good case, being vnder Gods protection: as also that they should not ioinc in league with the wicked, though all things fell out according to their desires. Thus then it is to the faithfull especially, to whom the Prophet hath respect, to the end they should content themselves with Gods grace and protection. But it cannot well be affirmed, whether he heere comprehends the last iudgement, with those temporall iudgements wherewith the wicked begin heere to be punished withall. For mine owne part, I nothing doubt, but this iudgement is comprehended with those punishments which are onely forerunners of eternall death.

The Lord will come.] This beganne to take effect at that time, in which the people being carried into Babylon, God shewed his vengeance vpon the domestike enemies of his Church. Afterward, when the time of their deliuerance was accomplished, then hee encountered with an outstretched arme, with the prophane nations, and neuer ceased to giue them diuers signes of his coming; by which he shewed himselfe present to his people, and came in fire to iudge his enemies. Lastly, wee know that he will come in flaming fire at the last day, to reuenge himselfe vpon all the wicked: 2. Thef. 1. 8. 2. Pet 3. 7. But this place must not bee restrained to the last iudgement, vnlesse we also comprehend the rest therewithall. Not withstanding hee opposeth these threatnings, especially against the hypocrites, (as wee shall see hereafter) which were among the Iewes.

Now these metaphors are much vsed in the Scriptures: for we cannot otherwise comprehend this horrible iudgement of God, vnlesse the Prophet should vsd these similitudes, taken from things in common vse amongst vs. The Prophets labour thereby to touch our senses to the quicke, that so being moued with the true feare of God, wee should not eniue the estate of the wicked, for whom so horrible and fearefull a vengeance is prepared.

By this we may see how fond and vnfruitfull the speculations of the Sophisters are, who stand to dispute about the qualitie and sharpnesse of this fire: seeing the drift of the holy Ghost is vnder these borrowed speeches, to set forth the horrible iudgement of God: because otherwise wee are not able to imagin, nor comprehend the same. And this appears yet better by the word sword, (which he vseth in the next verie) for there is the same reason to be giuen of it.

Fond speculations of Sophisters.

Verf. 16. For the Lord will iudge with fire and with his sword, all flesh: and the slaine of the Lord shall be many.

Hee adds nothing different from the former, but onely confirms the former sentence; and shewes, that this iudgement shall be terrible, lest any should thinke the inatter hee speaks of were of small consequence. Thus then he amplifies this horror, the more to terrifie the wicked, as also to cause the godly to keepe themselves in all puritie and integritie, by withdrawing themselves from the societie of the godlesse. And that therewithall they should also patiently beare the iniuries and cruell assaults of the enemies, vntill God shewed himselfe with his reuenging hand from heauē, to execute his vengeance. Now he thateens the destruction of all men, in such wise, that there should be great heapes of dead bodies. And this hee added expressly, in regard that impietic raigned in euery place; and the faithfull were sharplie assailed, in respect of the wickedes prosperitie. For, as our mindes are variable, so wee suffer our selues to bee carried away with bad examples, and the multitude puts many toies in our heads, as if the same were of sufficient force to withstand the hand of God. The Prophet corrects this peruerse feare of ours; for by how much the more impietic, and the great troopes of the wicked beares the sway, so much the more will Gods wrath be inflamed to burne the hotter: so as the numbers and plots of the wicked, shall not hinder the Lord from wrapping them also vp in the same ruine.

A confirmation of the former denunciation.

Verf. 17. They that sanctifie themselves, ſelves and purifie themſelves in gardens, behind one tree, in the middleſt, eating ſwines fleſh, and ſuch abominations: even the mouſe ſhall bee conſumed together, ſaith the Lord.

*Or, in a fountaine which is in the miſt.
*Or, and.

The perſons noted, to whom this vengeance belonged.

NOW he notes out theſe enemies (as with his finger) againſt whom he ſaid, Gods ire ſhould be inflamed. For it was hard to diſcerne whether hee ſpoke of forraine and open enemies; or whether hee directed his ſpeech to the countenners of God; who notwithstanding were mingled among the godly. And therefore hee taxeth the falſe hearted Lewes, which had revolted. And I doubt not but in the firſt place hee gauls the hypocrites: and next of all, the wicked: that is to ſay, thoſe who outflowed in their inordinate luſts: which is meant by eating of ſwines fleſh.

The hypocrites ſanctified themſelves: that is, they ſmoothed over things vnder the pretext of holineſſe: by which means they were beguiled many.

They purified themſelves in gardens.] That is, they polluted themſelves with diuers ſuperſtitions. And yet by ſuch inuentions, they thought to make themſelves the purer in Gods ſight. Others, without any diſſimulatio, deſpiſed God and all godlineſſe. It is a general ſentence then, vnder which he comprehends all idolatries, as well ſuch as manifeſted their wickednes in all mens ſight, as the others, who covered and cloaked the ſame vnder diuers ſhades.

When hee addes, by a garden vvhich is in the miſt: ſome expoſitors ſupp'y a pond or fiſh poole, as if in the miſt of the garden, there had bene ſome holy water put to waſh in. But the other ſenſe agrees alſo well, in regard y as euery one had his god apart; ſo did hee alſo chuſe out ſome one tree among others.

Verſ. 18. For I will viſite their workes and their imaginations: for it ſhall come to paſſe, that I will gather all nations and tongues, and they ſhall come and ſee my glory.

HEE confirms that which hee ſaid in the former verſe; namely, that all the wicked ſhould be puniſhed, to the end that howſoeuer the Lord was content to let them alone for a while to worke their wils; yet ſhould the faithfull be well aſſured to behold the day of their vengeance, and that this ſhould be as it were a preferuatiue to let them from being carried away with the ſtream of the multitude. The Lord teſtifies heere, that he ſo ſees and notes their workes, that it ſhall bee manifeſted by the effects one day, that none could flee from the regard of his eyes.

Some take it as if the wicked were able to doe nothing without Gods permiſſion: which ſentence is true in it ſelfe; but yet it ſutes not with this place. And euery one may fee it to be ſarie ſerched, and wide from the Prophets meaning: for he onely confirms that which he ſaid before; to wit, that the hypocrites and notorious offenders, ſhould bee puniſhed at the laſt; becauſe God kept a regiſter of all their imaginations, deliberations, and wicked actions. So as they ſhould gaine nothing in the end by their luſts; as if it were vnpoſſible to bring them to iudgement.

Becauſe the time is come.] We haue heere the confirmation of that which hath bene ſaid: for hee ſhewes that the time drawes neere, in which hee will call all nations together, and adopt them as one people vnto himſelfe, after he hath reſcued the hypocrites, and the open wicked ones. The Lewes were proudly conceited of themſelves, and contemned all nations beſides, as vile and prophane. But the Lord proteſts heere that hee will adopt them, that they may partake of his glory, whereof the Lewes had made themſelves vnworthy.

Truly this is an excellent place, in which we are taught that God is bound to no people in the world, but that it reſts in his will, freely to chuſe whom it pleaſeth him; and to reſciſt the vnbeleeuers, whom in times paſt hee had called to himſelfe. Which doctrine, Saint Paul diſcourſeth of at large, in Rom. 10. 19. and 11. 25. where hee ſhewes how wee are grafted as into an emptie ſtocke, after the Lewes by their infidelity had bene reſciſted. Iſaiab threatens them now with it: (as if he ſhould ſay;) I would not haue you ſo ſimple as to thinke that God can want a people, ſeeing you forſake him, and thereby make your ſelves vnworthy of his grace. For there are others in the world beſides you; and in the meane while he will themſelfe to be your Iudge, and will make you feele at length that he cannot alwaies ſuffer his patience to be abuſed.

And they ſhall come.] For being grafted in by faith, they ſhall come together into the Church, with the true Lewes, who had not forſaken the true adoption. For the Lewes being neere vnto God, it was needfull that the Gentiles ſhould be made one with them, that ſo the diſcord being remoued, they might be ioined into one body.

To ſee the glory of the Lord, is nothing elſe but to inioy the grace which hee had ſhewed vnto the Lewes. For this was one ſpeciall priuiledge the Lewes had, namely, that they beheld Gods glory, and had with them the ſignes of his preſence. Now he ſaith, that the nations which were deprived of ſuch beſeigns, ſhould ſee and behold this glory, in regard the Lord was minded to inaniſt himſelfe vnto all without exception.

Verſ. 19. And I will ſet up a ſigne among them, and will ſend thoſe that eſcape of them, vnto the riuers of Tarſiſh, Pul, and Lud; and to them that draw the bow, to Tubal and Iauan, Iles a farre off that haue not heard my fame, neither haue ſene my glory: and they ſhall declare my glory among the Gentiles.

THIS may be taken two waies; namely, either that God giues a ſigne; or, that hee markes his with ſome priuy token, to the end they might eſcape ſafe and ſound. The firſt expoſition is moſt receiued. But ſome childiſhly deſcalt heere vpon the ſigne of the Croſſe : others referre it to the preaching of the Goſpell : and both of them, as I take it, are wide from the marke. For heere rather ſeemes to allude to that which was done at the going forth and deliuerance of the people : as Moſes deſcribes it in Exod. 12. 12. And to that which is ſaid in Reuel. 7. 4. namely, that the Lord marked all ſuch as ſhould be ſaued, when his wrath ſhould be powred out vpon the whole world : as thoſe in Egypt eſcaped, whoſe doore poſts were marked with the blood of the Paſſouer. Thus he ſhewes that none but the elect can eſcape the wrath of God, vpon whom this marke is ſtamped. In a word, the Prophet amplifies that which hath been already ſaid, touching the fearefull and horrible iudgement of God, which ſhould light vpon the wicked : for it ſhould conſume all, if he marked not ſome. He promiſeth then to reſerue a ſmall number out of this generall ruine of the whole people. This I take to be the true meaning of our Prophet : according to which hee ſaid in Chap. 1. 9. and 10. 22. that the Lord would reſerue out of this generall deuouring flame, a little remnant.

He addes, that ſome of theſe ſhall bee his heralds, to magnifie his name among the Gentiles. And we know that the doctrine of ſaluation was publiſhed farre and wide, by the Miniſterie of a few ſillie men.

By Tarſiſh, hee meanes Cilicia; and vnder that, comprehends all the coaſt of the Mediterranean ſea, which lay oppoſite to the lãd of Iewrie. Others thinke that this word ſignifies Africa, and Cappadocia : but I rather reſt in the former expoſition. Some by Lud, vnderſtand Lybia; and others, Aſia. And by thoſe that draw the bow, the Parthians; becauſe they were good archers.

Vnder Tubal and Javan, ſome vnderſtand Italy and Grecia; and by the ilez, hee ſignifies vnknowne regions. For vnder this word, the Iewes comprehend all the nations that lay beyond the ſea: as we haue noted before.

Which haue not heard.] Hee meanes that the knowledge of God ſhall be ſpread through the whole world : for the Greekes, Italians, Parthians, they of Cilicia, and other nations knew nothing of the pure religion, nor of Gods true worſhip. To be ſhort, the whole world was wrapped in deepe dungeons of darkneſſe : and therefore the Lord promiſeth that his glory ſhall be knowne euery where. But there is great weight in the word Gentiles: for at that time the Lord was onely knowne of the Iewes; but now hee hath maniſteſted himſelfe vnto all.

Verſ. 20. And they ſhall bring all your brethren for an offering vnto the Lord, out of all nations vpon horſes, and in chariots, and in horſelitters, and vpon mules, and ſwiſt beaſts, to Ieruſalem mine holy mountaine, ſaith the Lord, as the children of Iſrael offer in a cleane veſſell in the houſe of the Lord.

Heere hee cleerely expounds that which was ſaid before; namely, that all thoſe which ſhall eſcape and ſeruiue the reſt, ſhall bee (notwithſtanding their ſmall number) Prieſts vnto God, and ſhall bring ſacrifices vnto him from all parts. Now he alludes to the ancient ceremony of the Law, though he therewithall ſhewes the difference which ſhould be betweene theſe oblations, and the ſacrifices ordained by the Law : for heere hee inſtitutes new ſacrifices, and a new prieſthood. And as he affirmed that all nations ſhould be gathered, verſ. 18. ſo now he ſhewes, that the Prieſts by him eſtabliſhed, ſhall not trauaile in vaine, becauſe the Lord will adde a gracious iſſue vnto their labours.

Hee calles them brethren, who were ſtrangers before: wherein hee hath reſpect to that new coniunction which is made by faith. Others draw another ſenſe from this place, which I doe not altogether reiect; namely, that when God ſhall gather a new people from among the Gentiles, then the Iewes, who were ſcattered here & there, ſhould be gathered together againe: which alſo came to paſſe. But yet this ſeemes to agree better, if we referre it to the vocation of the Gentiles, in regard that the difference being the taken away, a brotherly coniunction beganne to be betweene all thoſe whom the Lord had purpoſed to adopt vnto himſelfe for his children.

Abraham was the father of one nation, and yet all that deſcended from him after the fleſh, were not reputed his children: for the Iſhmaelites and the Iſidmaeans were receiued. He was then a father of many nations, Gen. 17. 5. when God adopted and ioined vnto him by conuenant the Gentiles; to the end they ſhould follow the faith of Abraham. Thus we ſee wherefore the Lord calles vs the brethren of the Iewes; whereas before we were ſtrangers and farre remote from the Church of God : for before hee did caſt out the falſe brethren and reprobrates from their place.

Gentiles become brethren of the Iewes.

We are to note this fruit which iſſueth from the labours of ſuch as in deuoour to ſerue the Lord faithfully; namely, that they thereby reclaim their brethren from all pernicious errors, to bring them to God, who is the fountaine of life. And this conſolation ought to cheere them vp, and to fortiſie them euen in the miſt of all the calamities and afflictions which are incident vnto them. The Lord will not ſuffer one of his to periſh. Happy is our condition then, when after a ſort hee makes vs ſaiours of our brethren.

From all nations.] His meaning is, that there ſhall be no more difference betweene Iew and Gentile: becauſe God will breake downe the partition wall, and will ſet vp his Church in all nations. Thus was that ſaying of Dauid in Pſalm. 2. 8. touching Chriſt, accompliſhed: Aſke of me, and I will giue thee the Heathen for thine inheritance, and the vtmoſt bounds of the earth for thy poſſeſſion.

In

In that hee mentions the holy mountaine: he applies himſelfe to the cuſtome of thofe times. For God was worſhipped in y^e Temple at Jeruſalem. But the Temple hath now ſpread it ſelfe ouer all the world, in reſpect that it is lawfull for all men in all places to liſt vp pure hands vnto God: ſo as all difference of place and perſons is now remoued and taken away. He ſpeakes alſo of the oblation, add ſacrifices which were offered in the temple: though the ſacrifices which wee are now to offer bee much different from thofe of that time. But it was requiſit that y^e Prophets ſhould borrow ſimilitudes from things then commonly in vſe; as we haue often ſaid. Vnder the Law, they offered brute beaſts: but the Apoſtles and other Priests of Chriſt haue ſacrificed reaſonable men: and haue offered them liuing ſacrifices by the preaching of the Goſpell: Rom. 15. 16. The Apoſtle teſtifies that hee performed this office by offering vp the Gentiles, through the ſword of the Goſpell: that they might be an acceptable oblation vnto God ſanctified by the holy Ghoſt. It is no legal Priethood then: nor like to that of the Pa-piſts, which bragge much touching the offspring vp of Chriſt. But it is the Goſpell, by which men are mortified; that being reued by the holy ſpirit, they may be offered vp vnto God. Beſides, euery one offers vp himſelfe in vowing and dedicating themſelues to Gods ſeruiſe: and in yeelding him ſincere obedience, which is that reaſonable ſeruiſe whereof S. Paul ſpeakes in Rom. 12. 1. Thus the end of our vocation is here ſet before vs: namely, that all filthineſſes being purged away, and being dead to our ſelues, we may in the next place learne to loue and follow holineſſe.

Some ſeek out allegories vpon theſe words charrets, and horſes; and they thinke the Prophet hath vſed the verb ſhall bring, in regard the Goſpel neither conſtrains nor terrifies men, but rather allures them ſweetly; ſo as they come willingly vnto God, and haſten vnto him with ioyfull and glad hearts. But I willingly expound this place without ſuch curioſitie: for in regard this ſeruple might come in the minds of many; How is it poſſible for ſtrangers ſo farre remote to come vnto vs? He answers, that horſes, charrets, and liſters, ſhould not be wanting vnto them. For the Lord hath many meanes at hand, to bring them to his purpoſed end. Furthermore I denie not, but the Goſpell may be called a charior, in regard it brings vs to the hope of eternall life: but yet we thinke the Prophet meant ſimply to ſay, That no impediment ſhould be able to withhold the Lord from gathering in his Church. Alſo that he ſhall haue meanes readie, that not one of the elect which hee was pleaſed to cal, ſhould faint in the mid way, Verſ. 21. And I will take of th:m for Priests, and for Leuits, ſaith the Lord.

The Prophet amplifies that which he hath already ſaid touching this extraordinary ry grace of God. He hath already ſhewed that the Church of God ſhould be gathered out of all nations; ſo as in deſpite of all impediments and difficulties that might be oppoſed; yet the nations farre off ſhould be brought to the holy mountaine. Now he paſſeth on further, and teacheth that the Gentiles ſhould be aduanced to a ſoueraigne degree of honour, beſides their adoption. It was much that they had attained vnto alreadie; to wit, that prophane people ſhould be receiued in among the holy people: but now behold here a thing more admirable, to ſee them exalted into ſo ſupreme a degree of dignitie. Hence we may perceiue that the Priethood vnder Chriſt, differs much from that which was vnder the Law. For vnder it only one tribe was admitted to offer ſacrifices: Exod. 28. 1. The Gentiles were reiectd as vnclene, neither durſt they once enter into the Temple: ſo farre was it off that they might be permitted to be Priests. But now all are indifferently receiued.

Some expound this place generally, That the Gentiles ſhall be Priests: that is to ſay, ſhall offer themſelues to God; for ſo the ſcriptures in many places calles all by the name of a royall Priethood: Exod. 19. 6. 1. Pet. 2. 9. Rcu. 1. 6. and 5. 10. Yet it ſeemes hee ſhould eſpecially note out the Miniſters and teachers here, whom God ſhould choſe out from among the Gentiles; and ordaine them to execute that noble and excellent office: namely to preach the Goſpell. As for example, Luke, Timothy, and the reſt, who offered vnto God by the Goſpell ſpiritual ſacrifices.

Verſ. 22. For as the new heauens, and the new earth which I will make, ſhall remaine before mee, ſaith the Lord, ſo ſhall your ſeed and your name continne.

Here hee promiſeth that the Church ſhall be ſo reſtored, that it ſhall endure for euer: for many might feare that ſhe would be laid waſte the ſecond time. Her eſtate then ſhall be perpetuall, after God ſhall haue once againe reſtored her: for which cauſe, he mentions two excellent benefits; to wit, reſtauration, and eternitie.

When hee ſpeakes of the new heauens, and new earth, hee hath reſpect vnto Chriſts kingdom, by whom all things are reued: as the Apoſtle ſhewes in Heb. 2. 8. 13. Now this renume^r hath this end; namely, that the church might continue alwaies in her happy and flouriſhing eſtate: for that which is old, tends to ruine, but things which are new made and renewed, are to laſt long.

God had promiſed that as long as the Sun and Moone ſhould remaine in the heauens, they ſhould be witneſſes of the eternall luſtreſſe of Dauid: poſteritic, which ſhould neuer faile: Pſal. 89. 36, 37. But in reſpect that by the diſloyaltie and vnthankfulneſſe of this people which came betwene, there was ſome interruption: the reſtauration wrought by Chriſt hath really confirmed this prophetic.

Great difference betwene the Priethood vnder Chriſt, and that vnder the law.

1. Tim. 2. 8.

The end of our vocation.

Obiect.

Anſ.

The promiſe recorded in Pſal. 89. 36, 37. really confirmed by Chriſt.

He. Iſaiab therefore rightly affirms that their ſonnes, and their ſonnes ſonnes ſhould ſucceed. And as God hath eſtabliſhed the world, that it ſhould neuer periſh: ſo ſhall the ſucceſſion of the Church be perpetuall, that it ſhall endure from age to age. In a word, he explaines that which he had ſaid before touching the renewing of the world: leſt any man ſhould thinke he referres this to irees, beaſts, or to the courſe of the ſtars: for it ought rather to be applied to the renewment of the inward man. The ancient fathers haue miſſed the marke, whileſt they imagined that theſe things appertained preciely to the laſt iudgement, and haue neither weighed the ſcope of the text, nor the Apoſtles authoritie. And yet I denie not but we may extend theſe things to the laſt day; becauſe we cannot expect the perfect reſtoration of all things, vntill Chriſt, who is the life of the world, ſhall appeare. But we muſt begin higher, namely, at this deuerance, by which Chriſt regenerates his, that they may be new creatures: as it is in 2. Cor. 7. 1.

Verſ. 23. And from moneth to moneth, and from Sabbath to Sabbath, ſhall all fleſh come to worſhip before mee, ſaith the Lord.

The Prophet ſhewes againe what difference there ſhould be betweene Gods ſpirituall worſhippe, ſuch as it ſhould be vnder the kingdome of Chriſt; and the carnall, which was vnder the Law. Every moneth in the new Moone they ſacrificed; then there were Sabbaths, and other feaſts, and ſolemne daies appointed, which they carefully kept. But vnder the kingdome of Chriſt, there ſhall be a perpetuall and continuall ſolemniitie. For there is no more any certaine daies aſſigned to ſacrifice this or that in Ieruſalem, verſ. 19. But our feaſts, offerings, and daies of reioicing, haue a continuall courſe from day to day. In the meane while, hee alludes to the ancient cuſtome of the ſacrifices: and we haue ſeene in many places heeretofore, that theſe phraſes of ſpeech are very familiar with the Prophets. Thus then God would haue vs to offer him ſacrifices in rightouſneſſe daily: not at ſet times onely, nor ſuch as were offered vnder the Law, or according to theirs among the Papiſts, who now fondly reſt in their ceremonies, as if their ſinnes were aboliſhed by ſuch baggage; where with a deſperate ſhameleſneſſe, they dare brag that they ſacrifice Chriſt himſelfe. But of vs God requires ſpirituall ſacrifices: that is to ſay, that we honor and worſhip him with a pure and ſincere worſhip.

Whereas ſome would prouoe from this place, that the Law and ancient ceremonies are aboliſhed; mee thinks it hath but little ground. I grant that theſe legall ceremonies are aboliſhed, and it may be ſo collected fro this place; but were I to proue this point, I would chuſe out other teſtimonies of greater weight. For he makes heere an oppoſition onely betweene the Sabbaths, and feaſt daies, which they ſolemnized vnder the Law, and that perpetuall Sabbath which is now celebrated.

Verſ. 24. And they ſhall goe forth, and looke vpon the carcaſes of men that haue tranſgreſſed againſt mee: for their worme ſhall not die, neither ſhall their fire be quenched, and they ſhall be an abhorring to all fleſh.

Wee neede not ſecke out heere any far fetched interpretations. For in plaine termes hee admoniſteth theſe which ſhould be gathered into the Church, that round about them, they ſhall behold the fearefull vengeance of God. His meaning is not that theſe calamities ſhall breake in amongſt the troope of the faithfull; for it ſhould much leſſen the felicitie of the Church: vpon which God manifeſts all ſorts of teſtimonies of ioy and gladneſſe. But, as formerly he hath ſpoken of that perpetuall glory wherewith God will beautifie his choſen; ſo now he ſhewes what puniſhments the wicked ſhall indure, that the faithfull might be the more carefull to hold themſelues in the feare of God.

Whereas he threatens them to be tormented with fire; haue told you heeretofore, that this is a figuratiue kind of ſpeech, which alſo cleerely appeares by the other part of this verſe: for there ſhall come no wormes out of the earth, ſo gnaw the hearts of the vnbelieuers. The plaine meaning is then, that mens euill conſciences ſhall play the tormentors to vex them continually, and that a more fearefull torment is prepared for them, then all torments (in the world) beſides. In a word, that they ſhall be affrighted, and cruelly diſquieted, after an horrible maner: as if a worme ſhould lie gnawing at the heart of a man; or as if a fire ſhould euer burne him, and yet they ſhould neuer die. Now in reſpect that the wicked are heere aduanced to great honours, from whence they ſcorne the godly, and trample them vnder their feete: therefore the Prophet denounceth againſt them, a terrible change, namely, that they ſhall be inwrapped with extreame ignominie, with vnſpeakable torments. For it is good reaſon that ſuch as haue contemned and ſcorned Gods glory, ſhould be couered ouer with all reproches, and made obominable both to Angels, and to all the world.
