On these lists women were given property valuation under the heading "Faculty," in addition to real and personal estates, and many men were doomed for their "Faculty Taxes." That tax was distinct from that on personal property. Since Maine became a State it has had no tax on faculty. Massachusetts has up to the present time. For the full meaning of the tax on faculty reference was made to an authority on such matters, Thomas Hills, Esq., of South Boston, Mass., and the following, dated January 20, 1899, is his answer to the inquiry :

In answer to yours of the 17th inst., I would say that all my investigations as to the faculty tax have satisfied me that it was intended to be a tax on ability—the power to earn money—and I can but think that the act of the assessors of Kittery of 1760 assessing the women of that town "a faculty tax" must have been an ignorant or arbitrary act not justified by law. Such failures to comply with what seems to be plain requirements of law are not uncommon in our day; as the Courts have ruled that many of the duties of the assessors, as defined by laws, are designed to produce uniformity and are directory, not mandatory; and a non-compliance with their provisions is not essential to the validity of a tax—and as it has also been held that a tax which was not assessed in the form required by law was nevertheless collectable. Much careless work can be found in the assessment lists of modern times which are presumably in better form than those of the last century.

The earliest definition of this tax I have met is in the law of the Colony of 1646, quoted by the Commissioners on Taxation, in the Mass. Report of 1875 ( House Doc. 15 of that year ) page 49—

“And for all such persons as, by the advantage of their acts and trades are more enabled to help bear the public charge than common laborers and workmen, as butchers, bakers, brewers, victualers, smiths, carpenters, taylors, shoemakers, joiners, barbers, millers and masons, with all other manual persons and artists, such are to be rated for returns and gains, proportionable unto other men, for the produce of their estates.”

That in the early part of the 18th century faculty was not considered personal property may be inferred from the fact that the tax bill of Judge Sewall of Boston for 1726 which hangs in the office of the assessors of that city shows that he was taxed for “Personal Estate and faculty.”

For several years I owned the tax return of Richard Gridley, the engineer who on the night of the 16th of June, 1775, staked out the line of the redoubt which the rebels defended the next day on Bunker Hill. I gave it away some time since. I think its date was 1780. The language of one of its items in the printed form called for a return of his income “from his trade or profession or gained by trading on the sea or land or arising from the necessities of the war.” The call of the assessors of Boston to the inhabitants of that city in 1805 requires them to return “Income from profession, faculty, trade or employment, or gained by land or sea.” I think you will find a good discussion of the subject by Judge Ames of the Supreme Judicial Court of Mass. in the case of Wilcox v. Middlesex, 103 Mass. 544.

The word “faculty” has in the revision of our laws dropped out of their text, but the faculty tax remains in Mass. The language now employed being that of Chapter II, Section 4, of the Public Statutes:

“Personal estate shall, for the purpose of taxation, include . . . so much of the income from a profession, trade or employment as exceeds the sum of two thousand dollars a year, and which has accrued to any person during the year ending on the first day of May of the year in which the tax is assessed, but no income shall be taxed which is derived from property subject to taxation.”

Very truly yours,

THOMAS HILLS.

Wilcox v. Middlesex, 103 Mass. 544, referred to in the letter was a decision that it was legal to tax a member of a firm for his income above two thousand dollars for the year, after a tax had been assessed on the firm's stock on hand.
