IT appears there is some hitch about the apof the seats in the Legislative department of the Bombay Council. We fear Mr. Cowasjee's friends have been too zealous in recommending him. To have been recommended by newspapers was bad enough: but if he had the farther misfortune to be recommended by one or ther misfortune to be recommended by one or two Secretaries to Government, we suppose that was enough to prevent the Governor fro

Without discussing the relative claims and qualifications of individuals, we should say that perhaps one Parsee was enough for the Council. The greatest discovery made in the theory of Government is that of the natural cessary separation of these great functions, and necessary separation of these great functions, the legislative, the executive, and the judicial. In the head of a family we see them united: in a despotism we see them united. These are the only forms of Government understood in the East. It is true that in the family there is little danger of the abuse of these functions, because all tyranny is restrained by natural affections. In a despotism the consequence of

There the legislator, the executive, and the judge yet to see the Native of India who really understands and feels the necessity separating these three great functions of Government. We have yet to see the man of the East who feels that there is any impropriety in their being united in one person. We have yet, therefore, to see the oriental who really understands the nature and office of a constitution of Government as an owner of the contract Committee, to the Commissioner in Sind, and to the various District Committees. One article has, however received special exemption from the action of the rule which fixes the 31st of March as the termination of the period for the reception of things at the exhibition building. Whilst accounts show that Indian cotton of last season's growth is likely to be fairly represented at the forthcoming exhibition, it is nevertheless very important that the results from the various experiments with exotic seeds which have been this year instituted, as well as fresh specimens of the ordinary staples, should, as far as possible, also find a place in it, and accordingly Her Majesty's Commissioners have, on my representation, decided "what taking into consideration the greatly increase! importance attached to the produce of cotton, owing to political events, special sanction will be given for the reception, up to the last week in April, of Indian for the reception, up to the last week in April, of Indian for the reception, up to the last week in April, of Indian for the reception, up to the last week in April, of Indian for the reception, up to the last week in April, of Indian for the reception, up to the last week in April, of Indian for the reception, up to the last week in April, of Indian for the reception, up to the last week in April, of Indian for the reception to the three produces of cotton, or the reception to the produce of cotton, or the reception to the reception that the results are the reception to the reception of the reception to the

CORONER'S INQUEST. CORONER'S INQUEST.

A Coroner's inquest was held before Dr. R. T. Reid on the 2nd instant at the Morgue on view of the body of Bhimpee, a little girl aged five years. The Inquisition was adjourned until the 7th instant when it was again resumed. It appeared from the evidence that the deceased partook of some sweetmeats, which had been given to her by a boy, shortly after which she was taken with vomiting. The deceased was taken to the Hospital but she died after she had been there a short time. A portion of the same sweetmeats was preserved and buried in the ground, and produced at the Inquest. The Coroner's surgeon Dr. Haines analysed the buried in the ground, and produced at the Inquest.

The Coroner's surgeon Dr. Haines analysed the contents of the stomach and the sweetmeats, and found a quantity of white arsenic in the latter, the eating of which would be sufficient to cause death.

Verdict.—Died from an ulcer on the stomach caused by eating poisoned sweetmeat which had been given her by a boy, but there is no reason to suppose that the boy knew that it was poisoned.

Vissunally Domodur, book-keeper to Messrs Sillar & Co., stated that on the 15th November last he paid the amount of this bill to the prisoner, he said he could not write, and that his name was Babajee Goomasjee, he did not write. The witness was quite sure that he was the man that received the money. The sum of thirteen Rupees was duly entered in the cash book.

Cross examined—Dont remember paying the prisoner a bill of forty Rupees. Did not know him by the name of Ramchunder Crustna. The bill was not brought to the witness by another man, but by the prisoner.

In his defence the prisoner said that he did not embezzle the sum of thirteen rupees. At the time of taking his leave he brought a substitute to his master, on the 9th of December, went on board ship. Previous to that he paid the sums of forty, twenty-six and fourteen rupees to his substitute to be delivered to his master. He returned from his leave five days before the completion of his time, and proceeded immediately to his master, whe told him that he did not want him each completion of his time, and proceeded immediately to his master, who told him that he did not want him any more. He denied having received the thirteen rupees, nore. He denied having received the thirteen rupees, but that another suppy had received it. He had a witness but he was not present. The case was then adjourned until Friday.

ANOTHER CHARGE.—The prisoner was then charged with embezzling another sum of nine rupees likewise the property of his employer Mr. R. Partridge. The facts of this case were similar to the last.

HIS WORSHIP said that this case would be adjourned

India the price the cotton stands at is fully equal to that of the home market, and in many instances far above it.

"It must not be forgotton that the total supply of raw cotton to Liverpool from all countries, exclusive of the United States and the East Indies. For the period above stated in 1860 was only 189,278 bales, and that for the same time this year it has been even less, 184,306 bales.

"Without venturing on any actual estimate of the quantity of cotton we shall receive from India for next year, a collation of the facts connected with the trade, based on the operations of the present year, will yet enable us to judge of the probabilities for and against a large supply next season.

"I believe the question to be one simply of price, and that the present rates are about sufficient to insure a supply equal to our disminished requirements caused by high prices if confidence were felt in their being maintained. As there can be no guarantee for this; there must, consequently, be great speculative risks in the importation of cotton from India.

"The impediment to a large supply from that country is the existence of the American crop (although it is reported to be under an average), and the possibility of some event occurring any day to enable it to be imported within a few months, from which time, allowing for cleaning, packing, transit, &c., we should, as usual, have that crop in this market, entailing very heavy losses on the ship-pers of Indian cotton even at the present prices there.

THE ARMSTRONG GUN.

THE ARMSTRONG GUN.

(From the Army and Navy Gazette, Nov. 30.)

Sir William Armstrong, in a letter which he addressed to the Times in the month of October, declared his intention of declining any controversy upon the subject of his gun. Sir William fearing, however, some misconstruction, has reconsidered his determination, and has again appeared in print. On Wednesday another letter from him appeared in the same journal to which his former communication had been forwarded. We regret that it is totally impossible for us to reproduce the lengthened statement with which Sir William has favoured our contemporary, but we are happy to give some of its most salient parts. Sir William begins by saying,— some of its most salient parts. Sir William begins by saying.—

"Sir.—I ended a letter which I had the honour of addressing to you last month by declining further controversy on the subject of the new system of ordnance. My time is too much limited to permit of my involving myself needlessly in controversial warfare, and it is not reasonable to expect that I should continually have to defend my gun in the columns of the press, through all the stages of its progress and development, against incessant attacks by opponents usually ill-informed as to their facts. In the long run the best weapon must win the day, whether it be mine or another's, and I am assure that my gun cannot be written up into success as I am that if successful it will never be written down. After stating the reasons for his change of mind, Sir William proceeds to state—
"First, as to the guns themselves.

William proceeds to state—

"First, as to the guns themselves.

"My shortest course will be to exhibit, in a tabulated form, the number of my guns which have been proved and issued for use; the number which have been returned from service for repair; and a few other particulars, all of which I have betained from official sources. I must crave the patience of your readers for this portion of my letter, which I fear will be too statistical for general interest.

 Calibre of Gun.	Number Proved.	Number in Store.	Number Issued for Use.	Number Burst.	Number Returned for Repair	Latest Contract Price.*
6-pounder 12-pounder 25-pounder	49 464 325	44 152 253	5 312 72	0 0	0 14 0	£ 120 195
40-pounder	221 563	48 329	173 234	0	2 4	285 650

"The above table extends over the whole period that has elapsed since the adoption of the gun, and I proceed make some comment on it.

"I will, however, first speak of a gun said to have burst, though bursting is not the proper term to give to the fate which befell it. It had been used for drill the night before, and left by mistake with the drill or practice shot still in the muzzle. On the next day the gun was louded at the breech, and fired in ignorance of the oversight, when the muzzle, as a necessary consequence, was blown off at the point where the practice shot rested. Both shots were recovered, bruised, and fractured by the collision showing plainly how the fragments of the one had acted as wedges to jam the other. These circumstances were notorious at Shoeburyness, where the one had acted as wedges to jam the other. These circumstances were notorious at Shoeburyness, where the accident happened, and it is remarkable that the occurrence should have transpired in the Mechanics' Magazine shorn of its explanation. As the muzzle of any gun that human ingenuity ever invented would have been blown off under similar circumstances, I think I may fairly conclude that the 40-pounder lost its muzzle without losing its honour."

We now proceed to that part of Sir William's letter.

We now proceed to that part of Sir William's letter, which he alludes to the vent-pieces, of which so let has been said and written in which he alludes to the vent-pieces, of which so much has been said and written:

"It will be seen by the table below that the injuries there entered have chiefly occurred to steel. Where otherwise, they have been confined, with one exception, to the 40-pounder; a proof that the fault was one of pattern and not of principle. I have, therefore, for some time been occupied in settling a stronger pattern for the 40-pounder vent-piece, and as it is precisely one of those questions which presents no radical difficulty to an engineer, I think the public may safely leave the matter with the authorities and myself.

Calibre of Gun.	Number Issued. Two to	Number	Number rendered Unserviceable.

"I take next the vent-pieces registered above as unserviceable.
"I have already remarked that the principle of steel having been definitively abandoned, instances of injuries to steel are of minor importance. But even the number of steel failures entered by me above must be taken with much reservation. Six of the 12-pounder vent-pieces, for instance, under this head failed at Shōeburyness, where from 21 12-pounders 12,433 rounds have been fired. The other two are reported by the Marine Artillery, who have fired I don't know how many rounds. The three 25-pounder vent-pieces failed during experiments. Of the nine steel 40-pounders, four went in some experiments on board the Trusty, to which I shall presently refer: two others became unserviceable in the course of 2001 rounds from 40-pounder guns at Shoeburyness; one more failed on board the Cambridge in the course of 1003 rounds from 40-pounders; one on board the Edgar flagship of the Channel Fleet during a number of rounds unknown to me. I have only now to speak of the four steel 100-pounder vent-pieces. These all failed at Shoeburyness in the course of 1172 rounds, but two of them yielded only to extra charges of 18lb. of powder.

"As to the failures of the wrought-iron vent-pieces. In the case of the 100-pounders they are limited to the single instance of a vent-piece slightly bulged, which

"As to the failures of the wrought-iron vent-pieces. In the case of the 100-pounders they are limited to the single instance of a vent-piece slightly bulged, which had not been reported when I last addressed you. Beyond this we have but seven to account for. As I have above said, all these seven occurred to one class of gun, whose pattern of vent-piece will in consequence now be changed. But, what is more remarkable, all these seven (together with the four vent-pieces mentioned above) failed on board the Trusty in the course of a single experiment. with Captain Coles' cupola shield, during only 142 rounds front only two guns. The gun in which eight of the 11 vent-pieces thus failed was brought to Woolwich for investigation. It there exhibited none of the destructive qualities it had shown on board the Trusty, but was fired 58 rounds with the same pattern vent-piece as before, yet could make no impression on it. Failures so singularly localised can only have arisen from some special cause. At the same time the strengthened pattern will meet even such contingencies as these.

"It only remains for me to add two more casualties, which, as they happened during an experiment at Woolwich, by the Ordnance Select Committee, for test-

"It only remains for me to add two more casualties, which, as they happened during an experiment at Woolwich, by the Ordnance Select Committee, for testing a carriage, are not included in the report. On that occasion one steel 40-pounder vent-piece was broken, and one of wrought iron cracked. During the same experiment the copper ring of two vent-pieces became loosened,—an injury quickly remedied by pressing on a new one, and having nothing to do with the strength of the vent-piece. No other failure has occurred to the service patterns, even during experimental practice.

"The above statistics are taken from official reports before me, from the Horse Guards and Admiralty, dated respectively the 7th and 14th instant. My extracts as to broken or injured vent-pieces would, however, be incomplete if I did not carry my information further. No failure of this kind has ever taken place at any artillery station except Shoeburyness. None is reported from Shorncliff, where there is constant practice, nor from any of our 36 batteries of field artillery, at home or abroad. None has occurred in New Zealand. None happened in China during 3800 rounds. None in the Channel Fleet, in all the rounds they must have fired, except one steel 40-pounder vent-piece on board the Edgar. None on board the Cambridge gunnery ship and her tender, except one steel 40-pounder, in 3623 rounds. These facts speak for themselves. Casualties, to some extent, necessarily attend a new system on its introduction, and their number will naturally every day grow less.

"The above account. which takes in a period of Rare as have been the cases in which the success of the gun has not been complete. I take more pleasure still in the fact that a new system of rifled artillery, with its new projectiles, fuses, and accessories, has been introduced, and so far parfected, without loss of either life or limb, or even injury to The Government being guaranteed against injuries at proof.

a single individual. The truth is, that the guns are of unprecedented strength."

Sir William then details the great successes which have attended the testing of one of his 100-pounders; two of his 10-pounders; two of his 10-pounders; but as these facts have never been questioned we will not reproduce them. Sir William subsequently alludes at great length to a letter which Captain Halsted lately wrote, but as the pith of the matter lies in a tolerably short compass, we shall give what he terms a summary of the gallant captain's "inherent defects:"—

"1. He says, 'the gun cannot be loaded at the muzzle.' I might as reasonably object to a muzzle-loading gun, that it cannot be loaded at the breech; if, however, it be an object, which I do not concede, to have the alternative of loading at the muzzle, I need only rifle my breech-loader on my shunt system, and it becomes a muzzle-loader also. The gun which fired the other day 51 rounds at the rate of one in 26 seconds was a gun of that kind.

"2. He says, 'the gun cannot be double-shotted. There is not the least difficulty in using two flat-tended shot; but why should this be done when a single percassion shell would be ten times more effective?

"3. He says the gun cannot throw an incendiary (Martin's) shell. Here he is utterly wrong, for even the lead-covered shell, to say nothing of the ribbed one, has been successfully fired with molten iron in both 40-pounders and 100-pounders; in fact, targets are at present being built for a continuance of the practice.

"4. He alleges that the gun' cannot be used with reduced charges for fear of the effects of air space. If Captain Halsted had attended the ricochet firing at Woolwich, he would have seen all sizes of my guns, from 40-pounders downwards, used with every variety of charge, from a few ounces up to the full service quantity.

"5. He declares that 'within certain limits of dis-quantity.

"5. He declares that 'within certain limits of dis-

"5. He declares that 'within certain limits of distance the gun cannot be used to cover either troops or boats with shot or shell, for fear of the lead which strips from all the projectiles, as proved on service in China, and as openly admitted by the author himself in May last.' Really I thought that on the occasion to which Captain Halsted so strangely refers, I had succeeded in showing the hollowness and absurdity of this objection. I stated that the lead could be, and had been so absolutely fixed to the projectile as to render separation impossible. I Halsted so strangely refers, I had succeeded in showing the hollowness and absurdity of this objection. I stated that the lead could be, and had been so absolutely fixed to the projectile as to render separation impossible. I produced specimens of shells, both exploded and entire, in proof of this. I showed that the military authorities had had their choice whether the lead should be thus absolutely fixed, or be in some degree separable, so as to produce more fragments on the bursting of the shell. They have made their choice, and must be considered the best judges of what are the requirements of the Service. If Captain Halsted can persuade them that they have chosen wrong, it is open to them to modify their decision in any way they please; but as they have been offered any degree of adhesion, I do not see how I can be responsible for their decision, though I believe they have decided rightly."

Sir William having thus disposed of Captain Halsted, directs attention to the spirit in which this and other attacks on his gun have been written, and infers that it seems as if Captain Halsted and others were determined to prevent him from working for the public good. We can only find space for one further extract:—

"It (the Mechanics' Magazine) further informed its readers—not for the first time—that the average cost of the guns was 2000.0 Mr. Baring, Under-Secretary for War, gave a flat denial to all these statements from his place in Parliament on the 14th of March last. 'No casualties occurred' in China, and Major Hay's report was of a directly opposite nature. 'The gun,' says Major Hay, 'was the admiration of all. Mr. Baring further told the House that the price of the 12-pounder and 40-pounder Armstrong guns was 1200. and 2850, respectively. In spite of all these rebuffs—in spite of Lord Herbert's declaration, founded on the China despatches, that 'we had the best gun in the world—in spite of the testimony to its efficiency and value given on every public occasion by the Commander-in-Chief of the expedition—in s the production of my report to substantiate, I imagine, his former statement, I am induced to write to you, in order that you may, should you deem it necessary, contradict in any way the statements contained in those articles.

"The Armstrong guns in China rendered the most valuable service, being always in the most efficient and serviceable condition, although put to very severe tests. They were never withdrawn from action and their places supplied by others; on the contrary, the Armstrong guns were invariably the first to be ordered up when artillery was required. At Tongchow, on the 14th of August, and again on the 21st, at the capture of the Upper North Taku Fort, the Armstrong batteries were firing over the heads of our infantry in the advance, and the guns nover ceased firing in consequence of any casualty to our men—quite the reverse; those guns continued firing while the infantry advanced to storm the enemy's works. It would have been most surprising if slight alterations had not surgested them selves in both guns and annuminition, considering that they were being tried for the first time, and that they were most jenlously watched by all.

"In fact, from the instructions I received before leaving England, it was my duty to point out the slightest defect. This I did, and I was glad to observe, in a recent visit to the Royal Armenal, Woolwich, that those defects had all been remedical in a manner which experiments had proved to be most successful; and I was grad to the Refitsh Artillery have the
