THE ESMOND SADDLE

Is A NEW DEPARTURE.

The Rider moves the Saddle. Not the Saddle the Rider.

NO FRICTION.

NO SADDLE SORENESS.

PERFECT COMFORT.
INCREASED POWER.

NO VIBRATION.

NO PERINEAL PRESSURE.

THE ESMOND SADDLE is not immovably fixed to the Cycle, but is slung from an elliptical bar attached to the L pin, so that the rider glides over all obstacles, and the vibration and shocks sustained by the machine are not communicated to him. In addition to this swinging motion from back to front it has a slight rock from side to side which allows it to yield to the pressure of the leg muscles in making the stroke on the Pedals, permitting the full weight of the rider to bear on them, giving greatly increased power.

See it at Stall No. 42, Western Arcade.

THE VICTORIAN ERA OF BRITISH ART.

THE British School of Painting may be said to have existed for two hundred years, for its founder, William Hogarth, was born in 1679. He it was who struck the first note of independence which has been the keynote of the finest British art ever since.

During the sixty years of Her Majesty's reign it has shown an ever increasing vitality, because it is founded more on the love and study of Nature than on the art of other countries. Hence, with perhaps many shortcomings and even crudities, it has struck out a line of its own, and has exhibited beauty and originality quite distinct though not apart from the other great Schools of Painting.

Sir Joshua Reynolds, born in 1723, was the first President of the Royal Academy, and also the foremost figure in a group of painters which comprised some of the greatest masters of our school. The art of the Continent had died out, and its animating spirit having passed from Italy, Spain, Flanders, Holland, and France, had at last set her foot in England, calling forth such artists as Gainsborough, Wilson, Romney, Ramsey, George Morland, and many others; all having a strongly marked individuality and, what is so delightful to the painter and the connoisseur, an unerring sense of colour and a true appreciation of nature, of human nature as well as external nature; and who shall say that the works of these artists cannot hang side by side with those of any other artists of any school?

As they are anterior to the Victorian period, they are not included in the present exhibition; but ranged along the centre gallery is a fine display of the engraver's art, which includes many beautiful renderings of them, and where those visitors who are interested may find them out for themselves.

As these painters passed from the scene, others of note appeared who carried on the traditions of the school well into the earlier part of the present reign.

John Constable, born in 1776, died in 1837, the very year of Her Majesty's accession. He may be taken as an eminent example of the independence inaugurated by Hogarth, and that closer imitation of Nature which freed the school, to a great extent, from the domination of the Dutch painters, an influence, however, which, in its initial stage, is certainly not to be regretted. But the works of Constable were so new in aspect, and so original, that his contemporaries, with the exception of a few artists, could not appreciate them, and they seldom found purchasers. Yet his influence has survived to the present day, not only here but on the Continent, and his pictures are now bought at fabulous prices.

The first name which greets us as we enter on the Victorian period is that of Joseph Mallord William Turner, certainly the most original and perhaps the greatest of all our painters—but this I must leave to others to decide. He was born in London in 1775—a year before Constable—but lived on to produce a prodigious quantity of grand and beautiful work till 1851. So much has been said and written of the genius of Turner that it is quite unnecessary here to say more. I will only point out that in him, again, we have a truly British artist, who, although he copied nearly every school from Titian to Claude Lorraine—perhaps to show what he could do—was nevertheless one of the most independent painters who ever lived, and the most assiduous student of sky and land and water in all their aspects; his great aim appearing to be to paint light and space, not only for the eye but for the mind—a great poet whose harmonious couplets were drawn with the brush.

It is to be regretted that the work of Turner is only represented by one oil painting, “Port Ruysdael,” which seems to have suffered terribly at the hands of the cleaner; but among the engravings may be found reproductions of many of his finest pictures, and notably a collection in a perfect condition from his “Liber Studiorum,” of which it is said that this work alone would have made the reputation of any other artist.

To make up for the deficient representation of Turner, there will be found in Room No. 1 (a room devoted to deceased masters) an interesting collection of the Norwich School—including some of the very finest pictures of John Sell Cotman, born in 1782. His work seems to me, second only to Turner and Crome, so strong, harmonious and complete is it. Note especially the seapiece No. 50. Cotman died in 1842.

Two specimens by James Stark, who was born in 1794, come next in order of date, one of which, No. 37, is an excellent example, but is more like an imitation of Hobbema than the work of an original master, and does not possess those particular qualities which characterise English art, still it is a beautiful piece of colour; note how it sets off the David Cox next to it, which is purely English and looks like Nature herself seen through an open window.

Of George Vincent, also born at Norwich, in 1796, there are two specimens in this room both good in colour, and a beautiful marine subject by George Chambers, No. 30.

Clarkson Stanfield, born in Sunderland, 1793, began life as a sailor, but left the navy to take to art. His pictures show his complete knowledge of everything connected with ships and the sea, and in addition to that, a fine sense of their pictorial element. See Nos. 48 and 66. He died in 1867.

One of the finest works in this room is "The Village School," by Sir David Wilkie, born in 1785. He came to London when he was twenty-one, entered the Royal Academy as a student, soon to emerge from it one of the greatest masters that Scotland has produced, and added not only strength but a peculiar charm to the British School by his delineation of human expression and kindly humour. The "Village School" is so slight in treatment, many parts being only faint suggestions of figures, that it may be called a sketch, but is so complete that one feels no further touching could improve it.

Up to Wilkie's time only a few Scotchmen had joined the ranks of the English painters, so they may be said to have come over with Wilkie, and have certainly been a welcome reinforcement. One has but to turn to the picture by John Phillip, which hangs as a pendant to the Wilkie, to be convinced of this. It is called "The Lottery Ticket," and is one of those powerful renderings of Spanish life for which this artist was so celebrated. He was born in Aberdeen in 1817, and died in 1867.

While the old school of colourists was dying out, a somewhat dull period of historic genre and costume painting set in, fostered in a great measure by the nouveau riche and the picture dealer. The exhibitions of the Academy, however, about the middle of the century were interesting from the story-telling point of view, and were in accordance with the taste, or rather the fashion of the day; but the attractiveness of the pictures lay too much in the displays of the costumier, and not sufficiently on the finer requirements of art. But as if this lethargy were but the passing away of Winter to make way for Spring, at the very time when British art had ceased to be natural, and had become theatrical, two or three bold and original spirits, endowed with genius and talent, came to the front, and by what was at first looked upon as an eccentric innovation, recalled the English painters to their old watchwords, and bade them again turn to Nature for their inspirations. Foremost in this group were Sir John Millais, Holman Hunt, and Dante Gabriel Rossetti.

These three artists were the founders of the so-called pre-Raphaelite

School. The costumier was not altogether discarded, but truth and earnestness, and intensity of expression, combined with almost religious painstaking in rendering the details of Nature, gave a strange air of novelty to their productions, which startled the public and critic alike. Laughter and abuse were poured forth on this little band of brothers, yet they recalled our young painters to their old landmarks, and our School in consequence has been advancing ever since.

In the centre of the wall on the left of Room No. 1 hangs a picture of a little girl dancing a minuet, which is certainly not pre-Raphaelite, for it does not recall the fifteenth century; nor is it at all like the early efforts of the Brotherhood, but it is the result of it. The little face that lives and looks at you with the simple expression of childhood, and little feet that are ready to dance to you, are not those of either a saint or a Madonna, but of a dear little English girl. She won't let you think of paint, or talent, or chiaroscuro, or colour or composition, but only of her own small self. Now this seems to me to be the triumph of art, since it is Art which conceals Art. One sad reflection we cannot suppress in looking at this delightful picture, which is that it hangs in the gallery of deceased British painters.

Sir John Everett Millais, who occupied the presidential chair of the Academy for so brief a space, was born at Southampton in 1829. He was universally beloved by his brother artists, and has left behind him a noble record of his truth, his industry, and his kindness. That he could paint men as well as he could paint little girls may be seen by his portrait of Lord Salisbury which hangs in another department.

Opposite to the "Minuet" is a work by another President of the Royal Academy who was with us but a short time ago—namely, Lord Leighton. He, too, has left a noble record of his life's work, as shown by the fine exhibition last winter at Burlington House. This grand classical figure, though differing so much in subject and treatment from its opposite neighbour, possesses those qualities of distinction which its author was ever anxious to implant on the English School, hoping thereby to raise it to more dignity. How far he has succeeded remains yet to be seen; but, curiously enough, when Leighton relaxed for a moment in his self-imposed duty, and painted simple domestic subjects, such as "The Music Lesson," or when, as it were, for rest, he sat far away from the studio making landscape studies, he became as true and characteristic a British painter and as fine a colourist as the best of them.

There are other fine works here which awake a melancholy interest as being by artists who have recently died, such as Henry Moore, John Pettie, and Hamilton Macallum. But we must pass on.

OUR LIVING PAINTERS.

Turning to our living painters, one is delighted to find that they are not only actuated by the same spirit as those of the past—that is, of independence and truth—but they bid fair to even outdo their own old masters. On every side will be seen work full of health and vitality, and evidences that the British School still maintains its reputation for colour; only a few false notes jar with the others here and there, consisting chiefly of white chalky pictures, which are a great source of trouble in arranging an exhibition, as they will sometimes throw out a whole wall, especially when they are large. There are, however, many pictures by young men which show they are working out new problems in colour and other important elements of their craft. Among the landscape painters we still see the same fondness for Nature and the same truthful delineation of her beauties, but with a tendency to degenerate into copies of bits, and mere studies, rather than works which appeal to the imagination and the poetic sentiment—works which, in other words, express the soul of Nature as well as her outward guise.

And these studies are often on enormous canvases, which are quite out of proportion to the smallness of interest in the subject. The older men painted large pictures, with miles of distance and vast space in them, on modest canvases that could hang in an ordinary room, whereas the modern man too often finds that he wants a cloth eight or ten feet long to paint half an acre of grass and a tree. I do not propose to speak of our living painters individually, but perhaps I may be allowed to refer to the veteran Thomas Sidney Cooper, who though still with us may almost be considered an old master, for he was contemporary with most of those represented in Room No. 1.

His picture of “Canterbury Meadows” in Room No. 7, which is full of the glow of life and light spread over the calm of an English rural scene, has so much interest and beauty in it, that, although a good size, is not an inch too large; whereas I could point to a seapiece by a very celebrated man that is more like scene-painting than delicate art, clever as it is.

Among the younger painters one welcomes a great advance in the workmanship of their pictures; a broad style of handling is combined with good drawing, an element in which the School was so faulty some years ago. Indeed, a good deal more of the dexterity of the French artist is apparent. All the good we can import from our lively neighbours must be ever welcome and must add to our strength; it is only to be hoped that their worst qualities will be left behind—such as their blood-thirstiness and unwholesomeness ; should these find their way across the Channel, there is little doubt that the east winds, the sunless skies, and the dense fogs of Perfidious Albion will soon make an end of them. But we cannot be too grateful to our French friends for as much of their taste and elegance as they can spare us, or for their intelligent criticism and artistic sympathy.

WATER-COLOUR PAINTING.

The beautiful art of water-colour painting, as now practised, was introduced by a few English artists at the end of the last century.

John Robert Cozens, a landscape painter of great taste and poetic feeling, was the first to tint his drawings. He was born in 1752, and died in 1799. With him came Paul Sandby, Wm. Payne, and notably Thomas Girtin and J. M. W. Turner.

Girtin, born in 1773 and dying in 1802, does not, of course belong to the Victorian era ; but two of his works are here exhibited as specimens of the art when it first made its appearance, and as leading up to its full development, as seen in the splendid show of Wm. Hunt's work, which occupies the centre of the left wall in Room No. 3. Note the "Summertime—Roses in a Basket," an exquisite picture in the highest key of colour ; and to the left and right of it, "The Young Salts," and "a boy with a lighted candle"—both perfect in their rendering of boyhood. "The Blessing" is another excellent example, and the portrait of the artist, presiding over his own productions, gives additional interest to them.

To the left of this group are many beautiful drawings by David Cox (1783–1859). This great artist may be said to have begun at the very bottom of the ladder, for his first occupation was that of colour-grinder to a scene painter. He passed much of his life in giving lessons, and is a teacher still, for artists, young and old, may always learn something by looking at his fresh, pure rendering of the atmosphere and colour of nature combined with the consummate art of composition. Note "The Pastoral with horses," "Bolsover Castle," "Welsh scene with figures," "Lane scene, felled timber," "The Hayfield," "The Water Mill," and the grand sombre "Welsh Funeral."

Peter de Wint (1784–1849), another true artist, has a fine drawing of "Ulvester," full of space and grandeur ; "A View of London from Greenwich," "The Isle of Wight," "A View in Kent," and others.

George Barret, in his beautiful pictures of "Morning" and "Evening," "A Pastoral Scene," and "Barge on Lake," though reminding us somewhat of Claude, fills his small frames with vast space and miles of distance.

Passing some masterly sketches by William Muller (whose richly-coloured oil picture hangs in No. 1 Room) we came to "Farm Buildings," by Girtin, and some beautiful women by Sir James Linton, who, however, we are glad to say, is not a deceased artist. On the opposite wall is a goodly show of water-colours by John Sell Cotman, well worth our study; he has eight fine oil pictures in Room No. 1, showing that he is a master in either medium. It is the mind and not the method that makes the painter.

But space will not allow me to say much more of the works in this gallery; small as it is, it contains subject for a volume, and I have dwelt upon it because it is so thoroughly English, and because we English are so constantly taught by our critics to be ashamed of our own artists, especially if they happen to be living.

I must leave the visitor to find out other interesting works of our older water-colour painters, such as Copley Fielding, Sam Prout, J. B. Pyne, J. D. Harding, George Cattermole, J. Chalon, Linnell, G. A. Fripp, and John Thirtle, a pupil of Old Crome, whose "View on the Yare with the first steamboat plying between Yarmouth and Norwich" has a double interest.

In the centre of the wall on the right is "A Sea Beach," by the late Henry Moore, full of breeze and movement; and over it, a pastel, "Summer Lightning," by Albert Moore, his brother, which is full of grace and delicious tenderness of colour. Most interesting also are three drawings by Pinwell, one by Sir John Millais, and two brilliant pieces of work by the late Hamilton Macallum. The great regret we have is, that Frederick Walker is not represented in this otherwise very complete collection.

In the next gallery, devoted to water-colours, will be found many beautiful works by living men, but these I must leave to the tender mercies of the critic.

BRITISH SCULPTURE.

The foregoing remarks on British painting apply equally to our sculpture. It has gradually emerged from the so-called classical style or modern antique, that was in vogue about the middle of the century, and developed into a living art. Indeed, some of the statues now produced may be said almost to breathe; thus a closer adherence to Nature has had the beneficial effect of bringing out original thought and fresh forms of beauty.

The modern school of sculpture has perhaps made even a more marked advance than painting, for it cannot, except in the case of Flaxman and one or two others, point to its old masters with the same pride that the painter can point to Reynolds, Gainsborough, and many more; and it is to be regretted that Alfred Stevens, Bailey, and Foley are not represented.

But on the other hand, we may congratulate ourselves on the strength of our new men. Their work is full of life and decorative quality and even colour, and placed as it is in the picture galleries, one is only too pleased to witness how the sister arts agree.

So fine a collection of modern British sculpture has rarely if ever been brought together, and one of the subjects of congratulation at the present time is the great advance which has been made in this branch of art during Her Majesty's reign.

THE GREAT GALLERY.

It is a source of regret that several well known artists of the Victorian period are unrepresented, not, however, from any want of effort on the part of the Committee to obtain them. Among these are C. R. Leslie, Thos. Webster, Wm. Mulready, and others; and we have only two small works (lent at the last moment) by our great colourist Eddy. But there are some fine things in the large gallery by Sir Edwin Landseer, who was certainly one of our most distinctly Victorian painters, and also many engravings from his pictures. But he is too well known, and is still so great a favourite, that it is needless here to say more of him.

Three large compositions by John Martin—the last he painted—are full of interest, but have had to be placed too high for inspection owing to their enormous size. They are better studied in the engravings, for which purpose they were produced.

Three pictures by the late Edwin Long will, no doubt, be as popular here as they were when exhibited elsewhere. They possess great boldness of design, and appeal to a large class of admirers.

CONCLUSION.

It was a happy thought on the part of the Directors of the Earl's Court Exhibition that, at a place ostensibly one of popular amusement, a collection of art should be brought together, and one which is not the mere showy display that is supposed to be in accordance with the taste of the multitude, but is representative of the British school of the last sixty years.

It is an experiment well worth the responsibility and expense it involves, and one which will prove whether the general public is still so unappreciative as some of its critics are constantly asserting. For my part I do not believe that this is the case; but if it is, then surely the best means of improving it is the opening of such exhibitions as the present one. For art teaches art, and inculcates a love for it; and it will be a source of great satisfaction if the picture galleries are crowded with visitors. If the British public would make more use of their own eyes and less of their ears in looking at pictures, and depend less on their self-elected guides, the artist would be relieved of a heavy burden; and I will venture to say that if the governing authorities spent a little more on art and a little less on art-masters, they would benefit the whole community.

If any of these results can be brought about, or even partly brought about, by the present display, I think we shall all owe the Directors of the Victorian Era Exhibition a hearty vote of thanks.

ENGRAVINGS.

THE various engravings, all in the finest proof states, enumerated herein, have been collected, arranged, and classified, at the direction of the Fine Arts Committee of Advice, by Mr. Algernon Graves, F.S.A., who has endeavoured to hang them, so far as space would permit, in such a manner as to fully illustrate the progress of the Art of Engraving during Her Majesty's reign.

The works of deceased engravers have as nearly as possible been arranged chronologically ; those of living ones alphabetically, and by their positions, comparison between the various schools is rendered easy.

Whilst the Committee tender their very sincere thanks to the various collectors and publishers by whose kind loans this very excellent section of the Exhibition has been gathered together, they would especially do so to W. G. Rawlinson, Esq., for his selection of Liber Studiorum, and to General Sir James Browne, K.C.B., for his examples after Landseer ; whilst to Stanley Brown, Esq., and H. S. Theobald, Esq., they are indebted for exceedingly fine selections of the works of David Lucas, Samuel Cousins, R.A., and Mr. Whistler.

A Steel Plate (No. 904) has been included in the collection, in order to give visitors an idea of the appearance of an engraved plate, and specimens of the recently revived Art of Colour Printing are also shown.

The collection has been made representative so far as is possible (this remark applying also to the Wood Engravings exhibited), and it may be fairly assumed to be by far the most complete and important Exhibition of its kind which has been brought together during Her Majesty's reign.
