LETTER I.

VOYAGE FROM NEW-YORK, AND ENTRANCE ON THE TROPICS.

Flushing, L. I. Sixth-month (June) 1st, 1840.

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I seize the first day of leisure that has fallen to my lot, since I left Washington, in order to commence a narrative of my late tour in the West Indies; and I gladly avail myself of thy obliging permission, in addressing a series of letters, on the subject, to Henry Clay of Kentucky. Sure I am, that the present state of the West India Islands, in a pecuniary, political, and moral, point of view, cannot be a matter of indifference to any American statesman. I know that thy feelings of interest in the great experiment which is now developing its results, in that part of the world, are deep and lively; and I venture to believe that thou wilt give no severe reception to the familiar incidents—the trifling descriptions, whether in verse or prose—with which my story may probably be interwoven.

I must however premise, that I undertook this journey, neither in the pursuit of pleasure, nor for the specific purpose of ascertaining the effects of emancipation; much less as the agent or representative of any body of philanthropists, either in England or America; but in the character of a minister of the gospel. My primary object was to preach the glad tidings of peace and salvation to my fellow men, and from persons of every class, condition, and party, in the West Indies, I have met with a cordial welcome, and the kindest attentions.

In company with MAHLON DAY, a highly respectable citizen of New-York, and a young friend, who kindly undertook to act as our attendant and helper, I sailed from that city on the 22nd of last Eleventh-month, (November,) in the Camilla, Captain Watlington. Our ship's company consisted of about twenty individuals, (mostly in search of a warmer climate and better health) who had taken their passage, in this accommodating little ship, for Santa Cruz. The fine, but cold, frosty day, on which we left your shores, gave them a sufficient warning, that the season was at hand, when the rigor of a North American winter would become dangerous. At the same time, it afforded such of us as were in good health a delightful opportunity—as we swept along under full sail—of observing, under the brightest aspect, the rare beauty of the harbor of New-York, the bay, and the neighboring islands.

We had not continued our voyage more than three days, before we found ourselves in a genial climate. The thermometer stood at 70, and light clothing gradually came into requisition. The change was almost magical, and certainly it was no small luxury thus insensibly to glide into warmth, and as it were, to catch summer again by the skirts. We were now crossing "the Gulph Stream," where it is said to have a breadth of two hundred and fifty miles, and the temperature of the air was probably heightened by the heat of the waves below. To account for this enormous current of warm water which runs up from the Gulph of Mexico, in a north-easterly direction, to so great a distance, seems to be nearly impossible. What the causes are which occasion the magnitude of the current, and the heat of the water, seems to be mere matter of conjecture ; but its beneficial effect in melting the ice, and unlocking the harbors, of North America, affords one evidence among ten thousand, that even the wildest sports of nature are subservient to good and wise purposes, in the order of a benevolent Providence. Boisterous weather and a strong adverse gale, were our portion as we crossed "the Gulph." The foaming waves, with tops of a light transparent blue, rose to an unusual height, and were in beautiful contrast with the troughs below, of a deep dull lead color.

CAMILLA, whilom swift of wing
 Can now no longer fly,
 In vain her gallant sailors sing ;
 She faints and longs to die.
 The waves o'er which she loved to dance,
 Now horrid in her eye,
 In awful alpine forms advance,
 And curl their snows on high.
 O, were it not for sore affright,
 They might have charmed her view,
 Dappled and marbled o'er with white,
 And tipped with azure blue.
 But the vales and pits that yawn below
 Are dull and dark as lead ;
 They bid her every hope forego—
 Fit chambers for the dead !
 But quail no more thou blithsome maid,
 Beneath the howling blast,
 Sunshine alternates still with shade,
 Such fury cannot last.
 Thy guardian sylphs shall soon prevail,
 To dry those tears of sorrow,
 A smiling sky, a favoring gale,
 Await thee for the morrow.

This prediction was verified ; for on the following day, the wind was favorable, the weather fair, the sea of the finest ultramarine blue, and nothing could be more delightful than our voyage. We were particularly pleased with our first sight of the flying fishes, which we observed scudding along with wonderful agility, over the surface of the water. Our Captain assured us, that he had watched one of them which flew for the full distance of half a mile, before alighting. One of them winged its way on board our ship ; and a more exquisitely beautiful creature I have seldom seen, about eight inches in length, his eye black, his back of the brightest dark blue, pure silver below, his wings ribbed like a leaf, and perfectly transparent. The creature bears not the touch of man—he quivered, and presently died, in my hand. At night, the phosphoric illumination around the ship, as she flew before the wind, was wonderful. Though there was no moon visible, one might easily have supposed that it was moonlight, and the waves sparkled, and almost blazed. The following lines are graphically true, without poetic licence.

The moon beneath the waters sleeps,
 The stars are veiled with clouds,
 The vigorous breeze o'er Ocean sweeps,
 And swells the rustling shrouds.
 Regardless of the gale, the storm,
 CAMILLA flies ahead,
 And, lo, around her angel form
 A mystic glare is spread.
 The foam she dashes from her side,
 Dispels the gloom of night,
 And seems diffusing far and wide,
 A supernatural light.
 The myriad sparks of liquid fire
 Dance to the virgin's fame ;
 And the billows from her brow retire,
 All flickering with flame.

As we found our way into the tropics, we observed that the atmosphere became clearer and clearer ; no mists were perceptible ; the sun seldom obscured, and the appearance of the sky and stars, at night, peculiarly bright and clear. The moon, in these latitudes, often assumes an almost vertical position ; and many of the stars which belong to the southern hemisphere, are visible. Before day light, one morning, the Captain called me upon deck, to look at the southern cross, which is certainly a constellation of rare beauty. One of the five stars which form the cross, however, is of inferior magnitude, and not in the true position, which somewhat mars the image. When I turned towards the east, I enjoyed a still finer spectacle. The horn of an almost expiring moon, Venus, and Mars, were in all their splendor ; and the profusion of azure, lilac, ultramarine, pea-green, orange, and crimson, which mantled the sky, about half an hour before sun-rise, I never before saw equalled.

The sunset in these warm regions, is also remarkable for mellow beauty, but not as I imagined, of a splendor equal to the sun-rise. One evening, a "golden edged cloud" suggested a few lines of consolation to one of the ladies on board, who with much sorrow and anxiety, was nursing her interesting little boy, evidently sinking by degrees into the arms of death.

A dark cloud was skirting the edge of the sea,
 A frown on the brow of the west,
 And nature was shrouded with sadness to me,
 As she sank in the ocean to rest ;
 But the sun that was wrapped in that mantle of woe,
 His radiance begins to unfold,
 And the veil that was darkening the billows below,
 Is fringed and embroidered with gold.
 The scene is a signal for mental relief,
 While it charms and refreshes the sight ;
 It bids me believe that the cloud of my grief,
 Shall soon wear a border of light.
 The gilding of hope, and the beaming of love,
 Victorious o'er sorrows and fears,
 Are heralds of mercy from heaven above
 To illumine this valley of tears.

No one needs to lack amusement during a voyage; especially within the tropics;—nature is constantly presenting objects of interest, and the sea, in its ever varying phases, is a sight which never tires. We were amused, one morning, by watching the motions of a great shark, called, from its known discernment and cunning, the "Sea lawyer." His broad head, agile body, and flopping green fins, with the numerous little myrmidon fishes which accompanied him on his journey, formed a striking spectacle. At another time, a dolphin followed our bait—a much more taper and active fish than I had imagined; his fine blues and greens quite glittered through the waves. On a third occasion, the sea was seen sparkling with myriads of minute blue fishes, speckled with silver. The "man of war birds," to all appearance black, with long wings and swallow tails, were often perceptible, soaring above us to a great height. I am told that they form a curious link between the albatross and sea eagle. Their gyrations resemble those of the latter bird; and it is said that during the hurricanes which so often occur in the West Indies, in the autumn, these birds are seen rising, in great numbers, above the sphere of agitation, and enjoying themselves in the tranquillity of the skies above.

On the 3d of the Twelfth-month (December,) we caught our first sight of land, the conical rocky peaks of Virgin Gorda, rising before us to a considerable elevation. Soon afterwards we saw Tortola, St. John's, and St. Thomas—all, however, at a great distance. The next morning, those islands were full in sight to the westward, and in the distant east, we obtained a view of the mountains of Porto Rico. The appearance of these tropical islands, rising suddenly from the sea, and forming steep, pyramidal elevations, sometimes of bare rock, at other times covered with greenness, was to many of us a perfect novelty; and one is immediately led, as a matter of course, to trace their existence to some vast impulse from below. There can be little doubt, I suppose, that they are, in general, of volcanic origin; and that they are not of that fathomless antiquity to which some of the geological strata pretend, is plainly evinced by the circumstance, that the fossil shells and corals which are found imbedded in their mountain tops, are often of precisely the same kinds as are still discovered in the Carribean seas. Our course lay through the "Virgin passage." During the clear but moonless night we passed by a precipitous rock, called the "Sail rock." Such is its resemblance to a ship in full sail, that, as the story goes, it was once battered, by mistake, as an enemy, by a French frigate. We seemed to be driving directly upon it, our mate having failed in his endeavors to steer to the leeward of it; but a sudden tack of the ship was effected, so as to prevent the too probable contact. The next morning we were becalmed within sight of Santa Cruz, though at a distance, from that island, of forty miles.

To our right—also at a long distance—lay Crab island, which is said to be of considerable fertility and value. I understand that the chief part of it, is still covered with fine forest timber, that parrots abound in the woods, with wild animals and game of various descriptions. For a long time this island continued unsettled and unclaimed; but of late years it has fallen into the hands of Spain, and is said to be a kind of dependency on Porto Rico. The governor is a Frenchman; and slaves have already been introduced into the island. It is greatly to be feared that it not only affords a refuge for the slavers of Cuba and Porto Rico, but that, it will itself be gradually peopled with slaves from Africa. It seems to be a questionable point whether Great Britain is not in possession of the first claim on this island.—If so, it is surely most desirable, for mercy's sake, that she should assert her rights. As we lay motionless, on the deep, we observed two negro boys making their way towards us, from a far distant sloop, in a crazy little boat which they were skilfully working with paddles. We fondly hoped that they were bringing us a supply of fruit; but on their arrival, we found that their mission was to beg for a little water and provision. The interview, however, was one of considerable interest; for they were the first of the emancipated British slaves whom we saw in the West Indies. They came from Virgin Gorda, and were employed by the Captain of the sloop, himself a negro, with three others, in cutting wood on Crab island, for the use of the hospital in Santa Cruz. Their wages were five dollars and a half, per month, for each man, besides board; thus, under the new system, they were earning their living by honest industry; and they appeared to us to be at once well behaved, and contented.

In the evening—when the patience of some of our company was beginning to flag—a favorable breeze sprung up; the night was mild and clear, and the sky studded with stars; our passengers assembled on the quarter deck, enjoying the scene; every body was in good humor in the prospect of a speedy termination of our voyage; and fair was the wind, the next morning, which wafted us safely to our harbor.

The appearance of Santa Cruz, as you approach it from the North, is picturesque and pleasing—to us who had been so long at sea, and were strangers to West Indian scenery, it seemed clad with beauty—a succession of rounded or conical hills and mountains, cultivated to their very tops; partly red (being the color of the soil) where the hoe had been at work; and partly bright green, where already covered with the sugar cane—neat planting settlements visible in various spots; severally consisting of a mansion, a boiling house, a number of negro huts, and a wind mill on some neighboring elevation, for grinding the sugar—the green wooded dells between the hills—and the cocoa-nut trees, with their tall stems, and strange looking, but elegant, deciduous branches, scattered over the whole scene. We landed at Fredericksted or West-End, exactly two weeks after our departure from New-York. Good boarding houses, well suited for invalids, were ready for the reception of all the passengers. For ourselves, we found a peaceful and commodious resting place in the house of our kind friend Rebecca Rogers—a house which we can cordially recommend to the notice of West Indian travellers. The hot-house warmth of the atmosphere, was very perceptible to our feelings on our first landing; but we were soon refreshed with the delightful easterly breeze which seldom fails to blow in Santa Cruz; and certainly it was not without a feeling of heartfelt gratitude to the Creator and Preserver of men, that we first landed on a West Indian shore. One consideration alone was oppressive to us—we had come to a land of slavery.

But it is time I should close my first letter.

I am, with great respect, &c. &c.

LETTER II.

SANTA CRUZ.

Flushing, L. I. Sixth-month (June) 2d, 1840.

MY DEAR FRIEND,

The charms of a tropical country, when novel, are calculated to make a delightful impression on the mind; and as we roamed along the lanes, and cane-fields of Santa Cruz, during the first few days after our arrival, we could easily conceive the pleasure enjoyed by Columbus and his followers, when the fertility and beauty of West Indian scenery first burst upon their view. Many beautiful productions of nature however, not indigenous, are now added to the catalogue of wonders, which inflamed the imagination of Columbus.

Almost every plant we saw as we drove or rode about the country, from the largest tree to the small weed, was unknown to us, and formed the subject of somewhat troublesome enquiry. It was a new world to us, as well as to its first discoverer; and several days must be passed amidst these scenes, before one can obtain any thing like a familiar acquaintance with the productions of nature. Splendid exotic plants which would be regarded as rarities, even in the greenhouses of England and America, are cultivated in the little gardens of Santa Cruz; and the wild flowers are scarcely less attractive. Amongst them, we observed large kinds of convolvulus, white and pink; yellow bell-flowers, scarlet creepers, bright blue peas of singular beauty; and to crown all, the "pride of Barbadoes," sometimes crimson, sometimes yellow, with butterfly petals, long pendent stamina, and acacia like leaves, adorning the hedges in great profusion. The trees are, for the most part, bearers of fruit, and many of them are covered with luxuriant foliage. To select a few of the most remarkable, I would just mention the plantain and banana, (nearly the same in appearance,) with pendent leaves of vast dimension, and a profusion of finger-like fruit growing in clusters—the wild orange tree, covered at the same time with fruit and flowers—the lime, which lines the hedges, and is equally fragrant, producing in abundance, a small kind of lemon—the guava, with pink blossoms and pear-like fruit, also frequent in the hedge rows—the mango, heavily laden with foliage, and with fruit in its season—the mammee, growing to a great size, and profusely covered with glazed, dark green, foliage—lastly, the tamarind, with its light feathery leaves and long pods which contain the fruit used for a preserve, spreading its branches far and wide, like the British oak.

The sweet orange, and those larger species of the same genus, the “forbidden fruit,” and the shaddock, are produced only by cultivation; but they grow in Santa Cruz very plentifully. In company with a young friend, I rode one morning to visit the gardens of Prosperity estate, which, for want of some of that labor, now monopolized by the sugar cane, are left in wild confusion; but these delightful fruits are still produced there in luxuriant profusion; and a visit to Prosperity is an easy method of gratifying the sight, the smell, and the taste. Of these three senses, however, the first perhaps is the best pleased on the occasion; for nothing scarcely can be more beautiful than those rows of orange and shaddock trees, laden with fruit, green and gold.

The branches of the cocoa-nut tree diverge like the ribs of an umbrella, from one common centre; and just at that centre, far out of reach, hang the clusters of cocoa nuts. In their half ripe state, they often supplied us with a delicious beverage of sweet milky water, a provision of nature admirably adapted to a hot climate. But valuable as is the cocoa-nut tree in tropical climates, it is much inferior, in beauty, to the cabbage palm, or mountain cabbage, which may be regarded as the greatest ornament of this delightful island. Its straight branchless trunk, from 30 to 50 feet high, bulges out a little in the middle, and is covered with a smooth grey bark, neatly divided into ringlets which mark the periods of its growth. Out of the top of the trunk rises a second stem equally straight, of bright green, which contains the cabbage so much esteemed as a delicacy at table; above this green stem, the palm branches spring forth like those of the cocoa-nut, but with greater luxuriance; finally, a thin spiral rod forms the summit of the tree. The high road between West-End or Fredericksted, and Bassin or Christiansted, the seat of government, (about fifteen miles in length) runs between rows of cocoa-nuts and cabbage palms, which have been carefully planted on either side. On one part of this road, the latter trees are remarkably lofty and beautiful; and so regular, and even artificial, is their appearance, that one might imagine oneself to be travelling between some of the colonnades of Pæstum, or Tadmor in the desert.

One good resulting, among many evils, from the despotic government of this island, is the careful preservation of its trees. No man is allowed to cut them down, even on his own estate; for they are not only valued for their shade and beauty, but are supposed to attract the showers; and Santa Cruz depends almost entirely on the skies, for its supplies of water. Another favorable result of arbitrary power, is that the inhabitants have been compelled to pay for the macadamising of their roads. The travelling in Santa Cruz, is, in consequence, rapid and easy, and the evening drives through the picturesque valleys in the neighborhood of West-End, afford a luxurious enjoyment, even for invalids.

On the top of the spiral rod of the cabbage-palm, I have frequently observed a handsome grey bird, somewhat less than a thrush, called the chincherry. Like the king-bird of North America, it is said to mock even the hawk, and to assert its dominion over all the fowls of the air. Humming-birds and bright little barbets are seen contending for the blossomed sweets of the yellow cedar; a sly looking black bird, in shape like a jay, and generally called the black witch, abounds in the hedges ; quails and minute doves are numerous ; and a small species of bittern is often seen floating along over the lower grounds of the island. Lastly, the brown pelicans, on the sea coast, flopping lazily over the waters, and ever and anon diving for their prey, are as numerous as gulls on the coast of Great Britain. It may be well to observe that the southern part of Santa Cruz is an extensive plain, I believe of shell-limestone formation. The highlands, composed of an indurated clay, conspicuously stratified, and tossed into various angles by some vast impulse from below, form the northern barrier ; and very beautiful is their undulation. The loftiest of these hills is Mount Eagle, which rises 1200 feet above the level of the sea. An hour's ride, from West-End, brings you to the top of Prospect or Bodkin Hill, from which there is a magnificent bird's eye view both of the hills and plains, all, with little exception, under careful sugar cultivation. But it is on the sea shores of Santa Cruz that the American or English visiter will probably find his greatest amusement. The large blushing conks and other shells which strew the beach, the corals, madrepores, sea-fans, and sponges of many definite and curious shapes, not to mention the "soldier crabs," dressed in regimentals of purple and scarlet, and inhabiting every empty shell they can find, cannot fail to attract the attention of the lovers of nature, even when, like myself, they have little pretensions to science. Yet, it must be confessed, that all these rarities are nothing in comparison with the fishes.

The fish market at West-End is held under some cocoa-nut trees, on the shore, a little before noon, every day. To watch the arrival of the boats, on these occasions, and to examine the live fish, before they are taken out, or after they are laid on the grass, under the shade, is a source of almost endless amusement. The variety of the kinds, and the brightness of their colors, are truly surprising. I know only their vulgar names, and vulgar indeed they are ; but I cannot do justice to my theme without specifying the grunt, striped with alternate lines of yellow and purple ; the goat, pink and silver ; the doctor, of burnished copper; the Welshman, pink with yellow stripes; the hind, white with red and brown spots; the rock-hind, green with brown spots; the parrot, dark brown, blue and yellow; the silk-fish, of a bright pink; the blare-eye, pink with a prodigious white eye; the Spanish hog, bright yellow and brown; the angel, of the finest gold and purple; to which list might be added a multitude of others. These fishes are generally from one to two pounds in weight, and with others of a larger dimension, but not so splendid, are generally good for the table,—no small resource even for the poorer inhabitants of Santa Cruz. Our friend, Dr. Griffith, an able naturalist from the United States, who was with us on the island, was very successful in preserving these gaudy creatures, without destroying their color. I understand that he has since presented his collection to one of the scientific institutions in Philadelphia.

The town of Bassin or Christiansted is much larger than West-End, well built and agreeable, with a good harbor for shipping, within the reef or bar. The Government House is handsome and commodious; the hills near the town lofty and picturesque; and the views from them of the port below, the sea coast, and fine tracts of country, both to the east and west, amply repay the labor of the ascent. The same may be said of Bulow Minda, the Governor's country seat, a handsome place, on a high hill about two miles west of Bassin. There, fine prospects, and pure, cool, air may be enjoyed in abundance. West End, however, from its numerous excellent boarding-houses, and the pleasant rides in the neighborhood, is the better place for invalids. The thermometer ranged during our stay there from 75 to 80, with little variation at night. The hot sun must be avoided during the day; but during the early mornings and evenings, the weather and country air, are, in general, delightful.

No man need require a more wholesome or agreeable diet than is afforded by the fish, the sweet pork and mutton, the edible vegetables, and the fruits, of Santa Cruz. The yams, when in perfection, are a good substitute for a mealy potatoe; the ripe plantains and bananas, especially the latter, are excellent fruits, and, when fried, are among the nicest of vegetables ; the oranges are delicious, and the shadocks and forbidden fruit, when of the best kind and fully ripe, are not less so. To these may be added the sour-sop, sugar-apple, sappedula, bell-apple, pomme de Cythere, star-apple, and above all the mango. This last, when of an inferior kind, has the taste of turpentine ; but the better sorts have somewhat the flavor of a peach, and are very luscious. This description applies with variations, to the other West India islands. Nature has done wonders for them. Our friend, Dr. Stedman, who has been practising for fifty years on the island, as a physician, sent us a present of the bread fruit. It is round, of the size of a cocoa-nut, and covered with a green rind, divided into hexagons, like the honeycomb. We were directed to keep it for a day or two, then to bake it, and lastly to cut it in slices, to be toasted for breakfast. We found it a sweet, agreeable, farinaceous food, probably the best substitute for bread that has yet been discovered.

The sugar crop was now commencing on several of the estates, and we visited the property of our friend, Adam Stevenson, of North-End, to witness the process of sugar making. When there is wind enough to turn the mill, the canes (already conveyed to it on asses or mules) are forced between two almost contiguous iron cylinders, kept in constant rotatory motion. The liquor thus pressed out, is conveyed by a long wooden pipe, down the hill to the boiling house. It is there received by a large vessel called the clarifier, and thence it passes through a succession of boilers, subjected to different degrees of heat. First it is converted into syrup ; next into the thicker fluid called sling. The sling is conveyed by troughs into the graining pans, where it granulates, and assumes the form of sugar mixed with molasses. It is then transferred to the hogsheads, from which the molasses gradually drain into receivers placed below ; and, finally, the sugar is left dry and pure, ready for exportation. The sugar of Santa Cruz, is generally of a fine grain, and light and delicate color,—much more so than that produced by moister and more luxuriant soils. Every part of this valuable plant is applied to some use. The leaves form excellent fodder for pigs and cattle; the refuse cane, after the juice has been pressed out, receives the name of trash, and is carefully stacked, under cover, for the purpose of fuel.

It is a circumstance much to be lamented, that the distillery is an almost unvarying appendage to the boiling-house, and every two hogsheads of sugar are accompanied by at least one puncheon of rum. The new rum of the West Indies is a tempting, but most unhealthy, liquor, and has, doubtless, caused an unnumbered multitude of untimely deaths. Our friend Stevenson drinks only water, and with an honest consistency, manufactures no rum. The “scummings” of the sugar-liquor, from which (with a mixture of molasses) the rum is usually distilled, are, on his estate, pumped back into the clarifier, and converted into sugar, as excellent as any that he makes. He is confident that this change of system is economical and profitable; and greatly is it to be desired that his example may be followed throughout the West Indies.

The exports of sugar from Santa Cruz, in 1839, were 19,428 hogsheads, of 1300 lbs. each. In some former years, the produce has been upwards of 30,000. While, on the one hand, this island derives vast advantage from the watchful skill and care of a respectable body of resident proprietors, there can be no doubt that the dead weight of the slaves is severely felt,—that many of the estates have passed from the hands of the original owners into those of the managers,—that many others are heavily mortgaged,—and that the land for several years past, has been under a process of gradual exhaustion. The emancipation of the property of this island from its burdens, and the restoration of its soil, is reserved, as I believe, for the annals of freedom.

I understand that the slaves form about four-fifths of the population, and are in number about 19,000. Time was, when the treatment to which they were exposed, was harsh and severe; and then their numbers were constantly declining. Of late years, however, the Danish government has instituted various restrictions which have ameliorated the condition of the slaves. They are not allowed, as I understand, to be worked longer in the day, than from 6 o'clock in the morning, to the same hour in the evening, with intervals (not always long enough) for breakfast and dinner. Legal provisions are made respecting food and clothing. The driver in the field is not permitted to carry any more terrible instrument than a tamarind switch of moderate size; and twelve lashes with the rope, and a short period of solitary confinement, (mostly, I believe, in a light room,) are the extent of punishment which even the manager or master is permitted to inflict. This rope, however, is a dangerous instrument of torture; and I am told that the reduction of the allowed number of lashes, from thirty to twelve, is no matter of law, but the simple result of the imperative benevolence of the governor-general, Von Scholten. Any negro has a right to buy his own freedom; and, in case of need, the price is settled by a public appraiser. The consequence of these benevolent provisions is, that the condition of the slaves is improved, and their number is now kept up, with a very small increase.

But although slavery in the Danish islands, has undoubtedly assumed a mild form, the degradation which it occasions—the low physical, intellectual, and moral, condition of the slaves, as compared with that of the liberated negroes of the British islands—is obvious and unquestionable. The worst feature of the system is the “Sunday market,” as it is called. The slaves are allowed no one of the working days of the week for their own business. The consequence is, that multitudes of them throng from the country (often from a great distance) into the towns of Bassin and West End, on the First-day of the week, with their provisions and fruits for sale. The rum shops are hard by the market places. The buyers, of course, misuse the day as well as the sellers; and the scene is one, not only of busy traffic, but of noisy merriment, idleness, and dissipation. Before we left Santa Cruz, we called on General Söbötker, the present Governor of the island, to take our leave; and we ventured to press this subject on his consideration, not without some remarks on slavery in general. He listened to us in a very obliging manner, and seemed to look forward to better days; but his last words to us, as we went down his steps from his door, were, "Patience, patience, patience."

It was very satisfactory to us, to learn from our friend Captain Van Schoiten, the brother of the Governor General (then in Denmark) that a commission had been appointed at Copenhagen, to enquire into the state of these colonies, with a view to emancipation. In the mean time seven large buildings have been erected in different parts of the island, to serve as chapels and schools, [for the religious and literary instruction of the Negro population. They are not yet in use; but several of the planters are making laudable exertions for the education of their slaves, in reading, and in a knowledge of the Holy Scriptures. A colored person of the name of Macfarlane, in every way adapted for the office, is employed for the purpose; this school circulates, with excellent effect, from one estate to another. Having been taught their moral and religious obligations, the negroes, on these estates, are already greatly improved, and are much more useful to their masters, than in the days of their ignorance.

The schools held, on the First-day of the week, under the care of the members of the Episcopal church, at Bassin and West-End, are attended by several hundreds of black, mulatto, and white, children. Some of the planters and their wives, are united with colored persons and others, as instructors in these schools; and the blessed work is carried on, both among the teachers, and the taught, without prejudice of cast, or distinction of color.

I cannot conclude this letter without observing, that the society in Santa Cruz, is remarkably agreeable; and nothing could exceed the kindness and hospitality which we received at the hands of many of the resident proprietors. No denominations of Christians, besides the Danish Lutheran church, are there tolerated by law, except the Moravians, Roman Catholics, and Church of England; but by the special leave of the Government, we held public meetings for worship in both the towns, before we left the island. These were largely attended by persons of various colors, and conditions, and afforded an opportunity for the free promulgation of those essential principles of Christianity, which lie at the root of pure virtue, and permanent happiness.

It is to be hoped that civil and religious freedom, without obstruction or distinction, will ere long exert its genial sway over the Danish Colonies. When such is the case, this delightful island, so remarkable for its even climate, and other natural advantages, may reasonably be expected to become as pleasant and desirable a residence as can any where be found. Even as matters now stand, we left Santa Cruz, after a visit of nearly three weeks, with feelings of regret, as well as of gratitude and affection towards many of its inhabitants.

But it is time once more to conclude.

SAINT THOMAS AND TORTOLA.

MY DEAR FRIEND,

Having performed the religious duties which devolved upon us in Santa Cruz, we took a hearty leave of our numerous friends, and sailed for St. Thomas, which port we reached on the morning of the 26th of the Twelfth-month (December.)

As you approach St. Thomas from the South, and enter the harbor, (the island and town having the same name) the scene presented to the view, is one of the most striking in the West Indies. The harbor is formed by a narrow inlet of the sea, and a land-locked bay within, remarkably commodious as a station for shipping. It is a free port of great business—a little emporium of traffic—and we observed, on our arrival, a vast number of vessels, lying in the harbor, of various sizes, and belonging to different nations. On the left of the entrance, is a lofty round hill on which the fort is built; and on two elevated spots to the right, are seen, the remains of fortresses, once the strong holds of the Buccaneers, who, in days of yore, infested the Virgin islands. The town is neatly built on three hills, running in a parallel line at the northern, or inland, extremity of the bay; and these are surmounted by picturesque conical mountains; composed, (I believe) of primitive rock, and covered with brushwood. One would have supposed that when once a vessel has entered this harbor, it must needs be in perfect security; but this is far from being always the case. During the fearful hurricane which visited St. Thomas, in the eighth month of 1837, one hundred and seventy vessels in the bay, were, as I am informed, driven ashore. The loss of life and property, on that afflicting occasion, was very considerable.

We were kindly welcomed, on our landing, by some friends of ours, who have a temporary residence in the place, and were provided with good accommodation at a large boarding house, much frequented by the merchants of the town. The approach of a great ball, about to be given in the house, soon drove us into a more secluded abode; but quiet was not then to be found in St. Thomas. It was the negro Saturnalia, the slaves being allowed a perfect liberty, from "Christmas" to New Year's day, to drum, fiddle, dance, and sing, to the utmost extent of their wishes. The evil genius of slavery seemed now to have assumed the form of a merry-andrew, and we thought that the dissipation could not fail to be as unprofitable to the negroes, as the din was disagreeable to ourselves. However, we dared not judge them—we knew it was their only holyday.

This island, is at once picturesque and barren. The few sugar estates which it contains are of an inferior description, and almost the whole population, amounting, as we understood, to about 11,000, are concentrated in the town. Populous as is the town, it contains only one Protestant place of worship—of very moderate size—used on the First-day of the week, by the Danish Lutheran, and Dutch Reform churches, in succession. By the kind permission of the Dutch Reform pastor, and with the consent of the Governor, Major Oxholm, we held in this building, our public meeting for worship. The respectability and attention of the congregation, afforded us an evidence, that even in St. Thomas, there are more than a few persons, who think and feel seriously on matters of the highest importance. But we greatly fear that among the traffickers of many nations, and the confusion of many tongues, in this little Western Tyre, the pursuits of religion are generally forgotten. Merchandise by day, and gaiety by night, seemed chiefly to engross the attention of the residents. Nor could we hear any favorable accounts of the moral condition of the black and colored population. There are but few married couples among them—loose and low habits appear to be general. No one can aver that slavery, in St. Thomas, is attended by any one advantage, temporal, civil, moral or spiritual.

We called one evening at the Moravian establishment which lies about two miles to the westward of the town, and exchanged kind looks with the German brother with whom we were unable to converse, in his own language. The religious influence of the Moravians, in the Danish islands, although to a certain extent decidedly beneficial, is considerably diminished by two circumstances ; first, by their practice of preaching and teaching in the Negro-Dutch, a barbarous jargon, now but little spoken by the people ; and secondly, by their holding slaves as part of the mission properties. It is greatly to be regretted that the local Danish government in both islands, is at present greatly prejudiced against the Methodists. To be a Methodist, seems to be tantamount to being absolutely excluded from the Danish colonies. The success which these Christians have met with, both among the slaves in your southern States, and among the liberated negroes in the British West Indies, affords a plain proof, that they might be admitted with entire safety to the government, and with the most important benefit to the mass of the population. The worst charge which can be made against St. Thomas, has relation to the Slave Trade. The Spanish and Portuguese slave vessels, frequently come to this port to be fitted up for their nefarious adventures on the coast of Africa ; here they have free ingress and egress, without the smallest interruption from the Danish men-of-war on the station ; and on some occasions, they have actually received their supplies of gunpowder, from the fort itself. Why should not the treaties between Great Britain and Denmark, on the subject of the Slave Trade, be followed up by an honest and vigorous co-operation ? In a Christian and even Protestant government, (as it professes to be) such connivances are extremely disgraceful ; but it may be hoped, that the present rulers of Denmark, will bring them to a speedy termination.

It is refreshing to turn from the obliquity and corruption of men, to the charms of scenery, and the rarities of nature.

Both these are to be found in St. Thomas. Kindly provided by our friends with horses, we occupied some of our early mornings, in scaling the hills in several directions; and the views which we obtained of the harbor, the town, and the shipping, under various aspects, with the wild country around them, were enchanting. From the top of the heights, to the north of the town, the sea, with its numerous inlets and rocky keys, is visible on both sides; and a ride of a few miles to the eastward, brings you suddenly to a near view of St. John's, Tortola, Josè Vandyk, and other picturesque islands, with wooded mountains in the foreground, and ocean rolling between. But perhaps the greatest object of curiosity, in this island, is a prodigious specimen of the Bombax Seva, or silk cotton tree, which grows about two miles to the westward of the town. This tree which bears a light foliage and pods full of a silky cotton, (suitable, we are told, for the manufacture of hats) loses its leaves once in the year. In the present instance, it was quite bare—its trunk about fifty feet in circumference, of a contorted shape, with high, thin, battlements or projections—its vast branches, spreading to a great distance, at right angles with the trunk, and shooting out others nearly at right angles with themselves—some parts of it encumbered with enormous knots. This tree is of African descent; the specimen now described, may fairly be called a vegetable monster.

On the last day of the year, we embarked on board the brigantine, Eclipse, of Trinidad, Captain Aarestrup, which we had hired for a cruise among the islands to the windward, and having taken an affectionate leave of the friends who "accompanied us to the ship," set sail for Tortola.

The distance between the two islands is small; but our voyage was slow and boisterous; and after passing along the highly picturesque coast of St. John's—another Danish island, much more cultivated than St. Thomas—we were overtaken by the night, before we could make the passage between its eastern extremity and Norman's island, which leads to Tortola. A night of discomfort and sea sickness was however amply repaid by a safe entrance the next morning, between fine rocks and mountains, into our desired harbor. A skilful negro sailor, whom we picked up at St. Thomas, piloted us along a somewhat difficult course, to Roadstown, in Tortola. The island as we approached it, presented a highly interesting appearance; its mountains peaked and picturesque; and the plains below, clad with sugar cane.

With some difficulty we found board and lodging at a tavern close by the sea, kept by a singular, colored old lady, named McClaverty. Her rooms had been occupied up to that day, by some of her relatives who had been dangerously ill with fever, and the children of the family were creeping about the house, in a most emaciated condition. No alternative offered, but to take the apartments; we were assured that there was no danger, and we happily escaped without the least infection. The constant draughts of a delicious easterly breeze sweeping through the house, were indeed sufficient to prevent it; and that we were not in the way of starvation, was evident, from the sight which caught our eye, of a number of green turtles in a small reservoir of sea water, before the door of the tavern. These animals abound among the rocks and keys of the Virgin islands, and are common fare at the tables of the gentry.

We could not but feel an intense interest in making our first visit to a British island, peopled with emancipated negroes. Out of a population of nearly five thousand, there are scarcely more than two hundred white persons; but we heard of no inconveniences arising from this disparity. We had letters to Dr. Dyott, the Stipendiary Magistrate, and to some of the principal planters, who greeted us with a warm welcome, and soon relieved us from our very natural anxiety, by assuring us that freedom was working well in Tortola. One of our first visits was to a school for black children, under the care of Alexander Bott, the pious minister of the Parish church. It was in good order—the children answered our questions well. We then proceeded to the jail; in which, if my memory serves me right, we found only one prisoner, with the jailor, and the judge! Our kind friend Francis Spencer Wigley, the Chief Justice of the British Virgin Islands, happened to be there, and cheered us with the information, that crime had vastly decreased since the period of full emancipation. I looked over the list of commitments to the jail, which, for the most part, are summary, for petty offences; and observed that in the last six months of 1837, the number committed was one hundred and eighty-six, and in the last six months of 1839, only seventy-five, making a difference of one hundred and eleven in favor of freedom. With regard to heavier offences, the three preceding courts of session, (embracing a period of nine months,) were occasions of perfect leisure—not a single criminal indictment at any of them.

In the afternoon, we presented one of our letters to William R. Isaacs, a most respectable old gentleman, who was once President of the Island. He was confined to his bed with a sprained ancle, and kindly allowed me the use of his excellent riding-horse, during our stay at Roadstown. He is himself a considerable proprietor, and was then acting as attorney to Reid, Irving & Co., of London, owners, by mortgage tenure, of a large part of the island. In these two capacities, our elderly friend had fifteen hundred free negroes under his care; and since all his habits had long been associated with the old system, we could not but regard his testimony as of peculiar value. He speedily informed us, of his own accord, that his laborers were working well. "I have," said he, "no complaint to make." The fact that so large a proportion of the island had passed out of the hands of the proprietors, into those of the merchant and money lender, was a conclusive evidence against slavery. With this evidence we could now contrast the happy testimony of our friend, in favor of freedom.

The next morning we mounted our horses at an early hour, and in company with Dr. Dyott, and R. V. Shew, an influential planter, visited President Isaac's principal property. I observed a large company of negroes, male and female, at work on the brow of a lofty hill. I rode up to them, in company with the overseer, and found them heartily at work. They were engaged in the laborious occupation of holing—i. e. digging holes with the hoe, for the reception of the canes; and protecting each hole (as was necessary on that steep declivity) with a firm embankment. Those who best understood the subject, freely acknowledged that their work was excellent. We afterwards witnessed similar scenes, and received accounts equally satisfactory, on the sugar plantations belonging to R. V. Shew, and Judge Wigley. The wages of these laborers are small, only sixpence sterling per day, with a trifling increase during crop time; but I was assured that the privileges which they enjoy, of a cottage, with good provision grounds, rent free, and plenty of pasture for their stock, at least double the amount of their wages. The present condition of the planters in Tortola is not very favorable, from long continued droughts, and a consequent short crop; but I hope that more prosperous seasons will soon lead to an increase of wages. This is obviously the best method of preventing the migration of the peasantry to Trinidad, to which colony many of them have been lured by emissaries sent out for the purpose—under the hope of larger returns for their labor. In the mean time I am quite willing to acknowledge, that the laborers of Tortola appeared to us to be in a condition of considerable ease and comfort.

Among the vegetables which they cultivate in their provision grounds, we observed the pigeon pea, a shrub which grows here in great quantities and produces a nutritious pea for the table: also the cassava. It has been remarked, that a piece of ground cultivated with this root, will produce more food, for man, than under any other cultivation whatever. It is a singular circumstance that its juice is a deadly poison, but after this has been pressed out, the farinaceous substance which remains, is made into an excellent thin bread, like the Scotch oat-cake in appearance, but more agreeable to the palate.

After regaling ourselves with a plentiful breakfast at Judge Wigley's pleasant residence on the top of a lofty hill, we pursued our course through scenery of uncommon beauty—in parts almost of a Swiss character. From a mountain called Chateau Belair, we obtained a view, at once, of almost all the islands of the Virgin group, with their satellites or keys. They are very numerous, and mostly rise very boldly from the sea. The principal of them are St. Johns, St. Thomas, Tortola, José Vandyk, Norman's, Ginger, Peter's, Goodman's, Beef and Guana islands (the latter remarkable for the Guana lizards) and Virgin Gorda or Spanish town. The scene was magnificent. There are no roads, on this island, for carriages—only rocky and precipitous mountain paths, for journeys on horseback or foot. The wild flowers are still more beautiful here than in Santa Cruz. The great aloe, called the century plant, abounds, and has a very picturesque appearance, and there are many prodigious plants of the cactus tribe. Pink, purple, red, and yellow convolvuluses, are seen creeping about in all directions; and the splendid "pride of Barbadoes" is common. The white jasmine occurs in the hedges, and a small tree called the Panchupan, bears profuse branches of large white flowers of fragrant jasmine odor. The brown pelicans float about the coast in great numbers, and we were told that the neighboring low island of Anegada is frequented by the flamingo. At the distance of many hundred yards, when on the brow of a lofty hill, we distinctly saw a shark playing among the waves—an evidence of the remarkable clearness both of the air and water. Many of the hills are covered with luxuriant "guinea grass," and afford excellent pasture for cattle, sheep and goats. A large proportion of these animals belong to the negroes. The cows are sleek and beautiful, and the milk excellent.

Another day was spent in a boat excursion, to the Western extremity of the island, in order to visit some of the estates under the care of our friend Isaac Thomas, another of the principal attorneys on the island. In the course of our voyage, the sailors caught some fish so curiously striped and spotted, as to receive the name of "lizard" fish—and on landing, we observed the shore strewn with handsome specimens of the echinus, or sea egg. We found the sugar plantations under the care of our friend, in fair order. He employs two hundred and fifty free negroes, and assured us that "he had not the slightest complaint to make respecting them." On the examination of the accounts of two of the properties, it appeared that he was decidedly saving money, by the substitution of free labor, on moderate wages, for the dead weight of slavery. After partaking, with several other persons, of this gentleman's abundant hospitality, he accompanied us to Windy Hill, the seat of the President, Hay Drummond Hay, an agreeable and sensible young man, who received us with great politeness. Our friends had now once more provided us with horses; and a long ride, by rocky paths, over steep mountains, brought us home to Roadstown, in safety—but not until after sunset.

Tortola was once the seat of a little society of Friends, and one of our most eminent travelling ministers of former days, Thomas Chalkley, found there a field of labor, and a grave. There are no members of the Society now on the island, but there is a small community of black people, settled, as tenants in common, on an estate once belonging to Samuel and Mary Nottingham, quakers of high character. About sixty years ago, they liberated their slaves, from conscientious motives, and gave them their estate, at Longlook, on the eastern coast. A letter of christian advice addressed to their predecessors by these pious persons, then living at Bristol, is still cherished by the negroes on the property, about sixty in number, and held as a sort of title deed to the estate. We had great pleasure in visiting them. Their land is on the brow of a mountain, and a considerable part of it is well cultivated with yams, and other vegetables. We held a religious meeting with them, in the largest of their cottages, and were entirely satisfied with their respectable appearance, and orderly behavior.

Our concluding day at Tortola, was the first of the week. We had appointed a public meeting for worship for the morning, in the Methodist meeting house. The excellent missionaries then stationed there, Bates and Stepney, being kindly willing to make way for us. So effectual have been the labors of these missionaries and their precursors, among the liberated negroes, that they now number nearly 2000 members of their church, besides attenders—more than a third of the whole population ! The attendance of the laboring people, on the present occasion, was large ; they were dressed with the greatest neatness, chiefly in white clothing, which forms a contrast with their sable hue, pleasing to the eye of a stranger, and peculiarly agreeable to their own taste. Without a word being said to them on the subject, they sat for a considerable time in solemn silence—a practice to which they had never been accustomed—and afterwards listened to the discourse addressed to them, with eager and devout attention. The occasion was one of deep interest to ourselves, and we could not avoid perceiving, that freedom was working well as a handmaid to religion.

In the afternoon we crossed the water on a visit to the African settlement, at Kingstown bay. It consists of several hundred Africans, taken out of captured slave ships, and located on a tract of land, allotted them by order of the British Government. We had heard reports of their poverty and idleness ; but these were belied by their decent and respectable appearance. A church is now in course of building for their use, under the orders of the Bishop of Barbadoes ; and a school has been already formed for the education of their children. About three hundred of them assembled, under the shade of a large tamarind tree, and it has seldom fallen to my lot to address a more feeling, or apparently more intelligent, congregation. One thing is clear and unquestionable—that the African mind is abundantly susceptible of instruction in the great doctrines and principles of the Christian religion.

LETTER IV.

SAINT CHRISTOPHER'S.

Flushing, L. I. Sixth-month (June) 4th, 1840.

MY DEAR FRIEND,

A dead beat to the windward with a rough sea, and on board a small vessel, is certainly no luxury, but such are the inconveniences to which one is very apt to be exposed, during a cruise among the West India Islands. After beating along the coast of Tortola for some hours, we made for the open sea, by the Round-rock passage, and after a night of comfortless tossing, found ourselves next morning, within sight of Saba. The lofty peaks of that island are very handsome—its appearance being that of a single mountain, rising precipitously from the sea. It belongs to the Dutch; and the community of small proprietors who dwell there, are said to be a little world to themselves, depending very little on any distant government, but supporting themselves by their own industry, in boat-building, fishing, &c. Our headwind, after a time, was exchanged for a calm, than which scarcely any state of the ocean is less agreeable to the mariner. The rudder no longer acts; exertion of every kind is fruitless; the sails flutter; the vessel rolls, but makes no progress, and one feels oneself to be imprisoned on the waters, beyond the reach of all human help. On the present occasion we consoled ourselves by endeavoring to describe our misfortune—"a calm at sea."

In vain the mast is reared on high,
In vain the sails are spread,
Our bark refuses now to fly,
Or even creep ahead.

From side to side she still can roll,
 And bid old Ocean bubble,
 But lost her rudder's firm control,
 Useless her seamen's trouble.
 Patience grown sullen, drops her wing,
 And senseless Contemplation,
 Of every brighter, better thing
 Seems to usurp the station.
 But let me for the mind propose
 A worthier employment,
 That as each tardy minute flows,
 May minister enjoyment.
 Draw from the circumstance and scene,
 A lesson worth the learning,
 For so, ye best may prove, I ween,
 Your gift of true discerning.
 The ship of science, sails of art,
 And rudder of man's reason,
 Play but a miserable part,
 Without heaven's breeze in season.
 Vain are the puny powers of man,
 And vain his restless action—
 Only the good old gospel plan
 Can yield us satisfaction.
 But grace resisted, all is death,
 E'en where the gospel's given ;
 Only the Spirit's vital breath,
 Can waft the soul to heaven.

This is a scene, and these are verses, which might be better fitted for a page in Pilgrim's Progress—nevertheless the sentiments here expressed are true. As we passed along on our voyage, our bait was taken by a noble dolphin—one of the handsomest creatures I have seen—bright azure, with dark spots above, and white below. We caught a good view of him as sailor Sam, our intelligent negro, was drawing him out of the water; when he gave himself a cunning twist, and escaped. At another time, our fisherman pulled up a baracoota, a noble fish, of the appearance of a pike, and when grown to its full size, as voracious and dangerous as a shark. Fresh fish for dinner was a luxury which we enjoyed on the occasion ; but for my own, part I paid dearly for our entertainment, which was the probable cause of an indisposition of three weeks' continuance, and not to be controled by medicine. I afterwards found that these creatures are often poisonous, a circumstance ascribed to their feeding on some of the copper-banks, below the waters, which are said to be frequent among some of these islands.

During the course of this voyage, we were within sight at once, of several islands, Saba, already described ; Anguilla, a small island, deriving its name, I presume, from its snake-like appearance ; St. Martin's, St. Bartholomew, St. Eustatia, and in the distance, St. Christopher's. We were sorry to learn, that Anguilla is not in so prosperous a condition as many of the neighboring British islands. How it fares with the laborers, I know not ; but as it is a poor island, it is probable that many of them have been induced to quit it, under the inducement of higher wages in other colonies. With regard to the white inhabitants, we were told that they had expended their compensation money somewhat too easily, and were reduced to a state of no small poverty and distress. I believe there is some view entertained of converting it into a penal settlement. St. Martin's, belonging partly to the French and partly to the Dutch, and St. Bart's, a Swedish island, once a place of much resort as a free port, but now little frequented, present to the eye, as one passes by, a picturesque outline. This remark, however, applies with greater force to St. Eustatia, which rises to a great height, and has all the appearance of an extinct volcano. I am told that it is so, in fact : the plain at the bottom of the mountain, of small extent, appeared, in the distant view, to be green with sugar cultivation.

The approach to St. Christopher's from the north west, is highly interesting. The northern part of the island is mountainous and clothed with forest ; and as we drew near to the coast, it was delightful to observe the brows of the hills and plains below, bright and verdant with the sugar cane—the settlements of the planters looking neat and prosperous—some of the wind-mills turning—companies of negroes seen, in the distance, at work in the fields—neat places of worship visible—and eight large vessels, with other smaller ones, in the harbor of Basse-terre, waiting, as we presumed, for their cargoes of sugar. A more remarkable prima-facie evidence of prosperity, I have seldom witnessed. This evidence we afterwards found to be fully confirmed.

On our arrival at Basse-terre—a low, hot and dusty little town—we met with no small disappointment in the absence of the Lieutenant Governor, Charles Thornton Cunningham, a young friend and connection of mine, whom we were very desirous of visiting. He was gone to Antigua, on an official visit to Sir William Colebrooke, the Governor General of the Leeward islands. No suitable accommodation was to be obtained at the taverns, and with the kind invitation of the President of the Council, W. H. Crook, and of J. T. Pedder, the Governor's Secretary, we took possession for a short sejour, of the government house, a commodious airy building, at a short distance from the town. There we found kind attentions and agreeable accommodations, and were glad to be even so far out of the way of an epidemic fever, occasioned probably by the malaria of a salt marsh to the windward, which was then raging in the town—considerable numbers dying daily.

Early the next morning, I mounted one of the Governor's horses, and enjoyed a solitary ride in the country. Although it was the seventh day of the week, usually applied by the emancipated laborers, to their private purposes, I observed many of them diligently at work on the cane grounds, cutting the canes for the mill. Their aspect was that of physical vigor, and cheerful contentment, and all my questions as I passed along, were answered satisfactorily. On my way, I ventured to call at one of the estates, and found it was the home of Robert Claxton, the Solicitor General of the Colony, a gentleman of great intelligence and respectability. He was kind enough to impart a variety of useful, and in general, cheering, information. One fact mentioned by him, spoke volumes. Speaking of a small property on the island belonging to himself, he said, "Six years ago, (that is, shortly before the act of emancipation,) it was worth only £2,000, with the slaves upon it. Now, without a single slave, it is worth three times the money. I would not sell it for £6,000." This remarkable rise in the value of property, is by no means confined to particular estates. I was assured that, as compared with those times of depression and alarm which preceded the act of emancipation, it is at once general and very considerable. I asked the President Crook, and some other persons, whether there was a single individual on the island, who wished for the restoration of slavery. Answer, "Certainly not one."

After breakfast I was joined by our kind friend, Archibald Burt, a lawyer of eminence, who accompanied me on horseback for many miles, over lofty hills, to a village called Cayon. The view, from these hills, of the cultivated plains below, the town, the shipping, the sea, and the mountainous island of Nevis, in the distance, was grand and beautiful. The highlands of St. Christopher's are evidently worthy of a more diligent examination than it was possible for us to give them. They are clothed with a forest of hard wood, chiefly, I believe, a tree with laurel-like leaves, and large pink bell-formed blossoms, (of which I observed many specimens,) called on the island, the white cedar. These woods abound with monkeys, mischievous enough among the canes, but always too cunning to be caught or shot. They regularly employ a sentinel in advance, who sets up a terrible screeching as soon as danger approaches. "Mount Misery," the loftiest in the island, is henceforth (the Lieutenant Governor afterwards assured us) to be called "Mount Liberty." It is an extinct volcano, 3,700 feet high; the crater is 2,600 feet in depth; the bottom of it is said to be a level of fifty acres, of which seven are covered with a lake, and the rest with grass and trees. Streams of hot water impregnated with sulphur, still issue from the fissures.

Handsome wild flowers, and flowering shrubs, are common in St. Christopher's, as well as Tortola ; especially large hedges of aloes. One of the most valuable productions of the island is the "Tous-les-mois," so called from the notion that it blossoms every month. It is a beautiful plant resembling the Canna Indica, and from its root is obtained a substance extremely similar, in appearance and taste, to arrow-root ; equally nutritious, and better suited to a delicate stomach. This substance is gradually becoming an important article of export. As to the staple article of sugar, we found the island in a condition of prosperity. It was supposed that the crop on the ground, which to us appeared heavy and luxuriant, would produce at least the usual average of 7,000 hogsheads ; and no difficulty whatever was apprehended in realising it. We accompanied our friend Burt to Ottley's,—a well managed sugar estate, belonging to himself and Judge Wigley of Tortola,—where we again examined the process of sugar-making, and again saw the negroes diligently at work, on the day which they usually reserve for their own business.

The day's wages, in this island, are from 7d. to 9d. sterling per day, besides the usual privileges ; but the negroes have no difficulty in earning from 2s. to 3s. sterling per day by job work. Under this system, particularly, they perform a far greater quantity of work in a given time, than could be obtained from them under slavery. "They will do an infinity of work," said one of my informants, "for wages."

This state of things is accompanied by a vast increase in their own comforts. Our friend Cadman, the Methodist minister, was on this station, during slavery, in the year 1826. He has now returned to it under freedom. "The change for the better," he observed, "in the dress, demeanor, and welfare of the people, is prodigious." The imports are vastly increased. The duties on them were £1,000 more in 1838, than in 1837 ; and in 1839, double those of 1838, within £150. This surprising increase is owing to the demand on the part of the free laborers, for imported goods, especially for articles of dress. The difficulty experienced by the gentry living in the town, in procuring fowls, eggs, &c., from the negroes, is considerably increased. The reason is well known,—the laborers make use of them for home consumption. Marriage is now become frequent amongst them, and a profusion of eggs is expended on their wedding cakes! Doubtless they will soon learn to exchange these freaks of luxury, for the gradual acquisition of wealth.

We had much pleasure in calling on the Moravian establishment at Cayon, under the care of Brother Münzer. It seemed to be admirably conducted: he has three hundred children in his school. Another of their establishments, at Basse-terre, is equally prosperous. We visited the school there, and examined the children. Their answers to our questions, were lively and correct. Crime, and petty offences, are greatly diminished, since the date of full freedom. Education in useful knowledge, and religious instruction are rapidly advancing. There are nine churches on the island, under the Establishment; six Methodist chapels, and three Moravian institutions. The Moravians have 3,000 members by birth and otherwise; the Methodists 2,899 in church communion, besides attenders. These numbers include a vast proportion of the population, which is calculated at 20,000.

To the favorable account of this island, which our own observation has thus enabled us to give, I will now add the testimony of the Lieut. Governor, received in a letter, after the lapse of three months from the date of our visit. "I have," says he, "just received the reports of the stipendiary magistrates, as to the general state of their respective districts on this island. I am thankful to say that they are, without exception, most cheering and satisfactory. These reports will be transmitted home, and if similar reports are forwarded from the rest of the West Indies, the friends of the negro must feel proud and grateful. I do not mean to say that individual proprietors and laborers do not occasionally complain of each other; but certainly in the mass, the proprietors of this island evince a willingness to adopt conciliatory measures, and pay a fair remunerative price for labor ; and the laborers are eager to work for fair wages." In a subsequent part of his letter he says, " A public dinner was given here a few days since, at which (wonderful to relate) white and colored men sat down together, cheek by jowl, in good humor and good fellowship."

Our visit to St. Kitt's, like that to Tortola, ended with the first day of the week, during which we held large religious meetings in the Methodist and Moravian meeting houses. These were attended by persons of every color and condition,—chiefly black. The throng in the evening, notwithstanding the danger of fever, was much too great to be accommodated in the house, but strict attention and good order nevertheless prevailed ; and we parted from one another in the flowing of mutual good will.

I can scarcely conclude without noticing an instance of that special providence, without which, not a sparrow falls to the ground. Disappointed as we were at not finding the Lieut. Governor at home, it was owing to this circumstance that we continued only three days on the island. He has since been assured by the physicians, that had we prolonged our visit, even to the extent of a week, there would have been no probability of our escaping the ravages of the fever. As it was, we left St. Christopher's in health and peace.

I am, &c. &c.

Flushing, L. I. 6th Month, (June) 4th, 1840.

MY DEAR FRIEND.

On the 13th of the First Month, (January,) we set sail from St. Kitt's for Antigua—another beat to the windward, which we accomplished in two days. There is a passage for those who are acquainted with it, through the narrows, between St. Kitt's and Nevis, but our captain preferred the longer course round the latter island. This gave us the opportunity of taking a deliberate view of its beautiful contour; the concave circular line of its mountain towards the south, sweeps down grandly to the plain below, which appeared to be extensive and well cultivated. Being desirous of overtaking our friend Cunningham before he should leave Antigua; we could not visit either this island, or Montserrat, which with its extinct volcano and souffriere, soon appeared in view—tempting enough from its picturesque beauty.

Here again we afterwards found occasion to recognize the hand of a kind and wise Providence, for dangerous fever was prevalent, at the time, on both these islands. In Montserrat, it was said to be occasioned by an animal compost imported from Europe, and imprudently used for manure. Although we were not able to visit these islands, we were afterwards furnished with satisfactory accounts from both of them, of the deportment and condition of the peasantry. The report of the stipendiary magistrate of Nevis, to the Governor General, for the half year ending with the Eleventh month, (November,) 1839, states, "that the conduct of the laborers was peaceable and orderly, and that a good understanding generally prevailed between them and their employers—that schools are numerous and well attended, marriages frequent, and the Sabbath well observed.” The following report from H. Hamilton, the President of Montserrat, to Sir Wm. Colebrooke, dated “January 10th, 1840,” seems to be every thing that either the politician or philanthropist could desire. “It affords me great satisfaction to report to your Excellency, the orderly and good conduct of our laboring population. During the Christmas holy-days, our churches and chapels were crowded to excess by a well dressed peasantry, and our jail nearly untenanted. The laborers have all returned to their agricultural avocations with a degree of punctuality, which, I hope and trust, will insure the future prosperity of the colony. The prospects for 1841, are very promising. The laborers are settling themselves down quietly and contentedly, abounding in provisions, and their growing crops in a high state of cultivation. I am happy to say that the differences and jealousies which existed between the parties are wearing away, and giving place to better feelings. Job-work is daily gaining ground. The system of weekly cash payments to the laborers, to the almost total exclusion of credit and barter, is now so completely established, and so punctually acted on, that a case of complaint rarely occurs, and the absence of a contract act is not felt at present.” The stipendiary magistrate of the same island observes, “that repairs and additions to the real property in the town are going on; that the value of land in the country is increased; that an estate which was lately purchased for between five and six thousand pounds, (then considered a good sale,) would not now be parted with for £8000; that the amount of imports is much increased; that marriages among the peasantry are numerous, schools improved and extended, and the progress in general morals satisfactory.”

These testimonies were confirmed by our friend John Cox Collins, the Rector of Montserrat, whom we afterwards met in Antigua. He informed us that the free-laborers there are working well, and that the present crop was estimated at 1500 hogs-heads, being a high average. The negroes who attend his church, insisted last year, on expressing, by some thank-offering, their gratitude to God for the blessings which they were enjoying, under freedom; they subscribed £15 15s to be expended in a silver goblet for the communion table; and on the same ground, in the present year, they are again subscribing their money to supply the table with silver cups.

The reefs near the coast of Antigua are numerous; and as we lay to, on our approach to it during the night, we were exposed to some danger. Early in the morning, however, a pilot boarded us, and we made a safe entrance into the beautiful harbor of St. John's. The appearance of this island, from the sea, although singular from the grotesque form of many of the rocky hills, is not so picturesque as that of St. Christopher's; but the green and orderly-looking fields of cane, and the numerous vessels waiting, in the harbor, for sugar, again afforded us a prima-facie evidence of prosperity. We cast anchor about noon below the fort, and were rowed a long distance in a boat to St. John's. This town is of considerable size, pleasant and airy, and greatly increased and improved since the date of freedom. We had heard much of the yellow fever here; it had been for sometime prevalent with a decided type, but it was now gone by; the last lingering case expiring soon after our arrival. Good rooms and sufficient entertainment awaited us at an hotel kept by a colored female named Appleby.

Although I was in weak health during our stay, of two weeks, in Antigua, objects of interest, and opportunities for religious service, presented themselves in rapid succession. A few brief memoranda from our diary, will lead to some development of the state of the colony.

1st Month, (January) 15th. "How are the laborers going on?" said I to the pilot who brought us into port. "Beautifully," replied he—"eight estates which had been broken up under slavery, are now again in cultivation." This information was afterwards substantially confirmed. Only six of these estates, however, had been broken up, namely: Potter's, Dunning's, Jennings's, Patterson's, Tranquil Vale, and Hill-house;

the other two were stock farms—the whole eight are now under cultivation for sugar. It cannot be denied that the first fact of which we were informed respecting Antigua, speaks volumes.

On our arrival, we called on William Walker, secretary to the Governor General, and stipendiary magistrate. He informed us that our friend Cunningham, and the Governor, were expected at St. John's, from Dow's Hill, (Sir William's country residence) the next morning. In answer to a few enquiries respecting the state of things, he informed us that the laborers were working well, for the low wages of from sixpence to ninepence sterling per day, with the usual privileges; but that they could earn two or three shillings sterling per day by job-work, which was becoming general; and that the last year's crop of sugar was upwards of 20,000 hogsheads. It also appears that the crop now on the ground, is one of excellent promise.

We also visited our friend James Cox, the able and energetic Methodist Minister. "Things," said he "are prosperous; the planters are doing well, the negroes are working well, and their comforts are greatly increased." He kindly offered to give up his service that evening, that we might hold a Friends' meeting in their large new meeting house. We accepted his offer—the meeting was well attended and satisfactory. The Methodists are very prosperous in Antigua; they have several stations, chapels, and schools, and nearly three thousand members of their church, besides attenders.

1st Month (Jan.) 16th.—On calling at the Government house, we found our friend Cunningham, with whom I exchanged the warm greetings of old friendship, and was glad to be able to tell him, that at St. Christopher's, during his absence, we had heard, from all parties, unequivocal accounts of his good government. He introduced us to Sir William Colebrooke, the Governor General, who received us with great kindness, and warmly invited us to his house. Sir William has occupied many successive stations in the British colonial service, and in various parts of the world. He is a person of much talent, information, and reflection; steadfast and patient in the pursuit of the public good, and of the utmost simplicity of manners. He meets with a sort of passive resistance from the local council and legislature; but bears the opposition of his neighbors with an unruffled temper. One of his favorite plans is the union of all the leeward islands under one general legislature, which he considers to be their original constitution—a plan which at once recommends itself, as far more desirable than that of a great number of separate little parliaments; but in this attempt, he has hitherto been frustrated. Our company was now joined by Nathaniel Gilbert, an evangelical clergyman of the church of England, and a large proprietor and planter on the island. Both he and Sir William, amply confirmed our previous favorable impressions respecting the state of the colony. On my enquiring of them respecting the value of landed property, their joint answer was clear and decided. “At the lowest computation, the land, without a single slave upon it, is fully as valuable now, as it was, including all the slaves, before emancipation.” In other words, the value of the slaves is already transferred to the land. Satisfactory as is this computation, I have every reason to believe that it is much below the mark. With respect to real property in the town of St. John’s, it has risen in value, with still greater rapidity. A large number of new stores have been opened; new houses are built or building; the streets have been cleared and improved; trade is greatly on the increase; and the whole place wears the appearance of progressive wealth and prosperity.

Under the guidance of our friend Cunningham, we next called on Robert Holberton, the Vicar of St. John’s, a laborious and devoted minister, and examined his excellent infant school of black children, who gave us answers to our questions, (particularly in Scripture history,) with surprising readiness and accuracy. The vicar then conducted us to the premises of the daily-meal society, where the destitute poor are fed with soup and other wholesome articles, and the sick and disabled, supplied with lodging, boarding, and medical care. This admirable institution, which flourishes under his own superintendence, is supported partly by voluntary subscriptions, and partly by grants of the local legislature. We now proceeded to the state house, where we were introduced to several of the leading officials, and listened to a debate in the local legislature, which was then in session. A colored member was pleading with "honorable members" for the refunding of expenses incurred in making a certain road. The application was refused on the ground that "this house" could pay for no roads which did not lead to some sugar estate—an obvious relic of the old system.

A drive of eight miles over a flat country, well cultivated, partly with provisions, and partly with sugar cane, brought us to "Gilberts"—the spacious old mansion, and one of the sugar estates, of our friend Nathaniel Gilbert, who with his pious and agreeable lady, freely offered us their house for a home, during any part of our stay on the island. Nothing could be more satisfactory than the state of the property. His molasses alone, last year, paid the whole expenses of the estate, including labor; the large produce of sugar, which had met with a high price in the British market, was therefore clear gain. Our friend is too consistent a Christian, to manufacture rum. We understood that he received $25,000 as a compensation for his slaves. He assured us that this sum was a mere present put into his pocket—a gratuity on which he had no reasonable claim. Since his land, without the slaves, is at least of the same value as it was with the slaves, before emancipation, and since his profits are increased, rather than diminished, this consequence follows of course; but what figures can represent the relief which he experiences in his own emancipation from the trammels of slaveholding? Our friend has built a neat chapel on his estate, in which we held a religious meeting in the evening, with his black peasantry. The subject which arose before us, was the rest of heaven. The negroes listened with reverent attention, and after our meeting was finished, they broke out, under the guidance of their beloved "mistress," into a sweet sounding hymn, which had reference to the same topic.

Sir Bethel Codrington, an absentee proprietor, whose land borders on "Gilberts," is said to be deriving £20,000 sterling, per annum, from his sugar estates, in Antigua. Whether this statement is exaggerated or not, I cannot say; but there can be no question, that his revenues, from this source, are very large. He was a noted advocate, during the late conflict for freedom, in our country, for the continuance of slavery. Circumstances have now proved, that emancipation to him, has been anything rather than the road to ruin. Nearly the same remark applies to a respectable member of parliament, whose property in Antigua, during slavery, was in decay—unprofitable and by all accounts, almost ruinous. Now it produces an excellent income. I had the pleasure of viewing his cane fields; they were in fine order, full of pecuniary promise.

I understood from our friend Gilbert, that during slavery, half his people were operative, at one time, and half dead weight, i. e. doing nothing; when freedom came, the rate of wages was so arranged by the planters, that the amount paid to the working half, should just equal the expense formerly incurred in supporting the whole body. Thus twenty slaves, at £5 per head, per annum, and ten free laborers at £10 per head, per annum, would amount to the same sum of £100. In that case the only saving by the change would result from the circumstance, that each free laborer, under the inducement of wages, would do more work than a slave by coercion, especially when (as in the case of N. Gilbert) the coercion was gentle. But had our friend's operative portion of slaves, been only one-third, instead of a half, and the number of his free laborers the same, his saving would have been  $33\frac{1}{3}$  per cent. Now a subsequent and somewhat extensive enquiry has led us to the conviction, that on most of the properties of Antigua, and in general throughout the West Indies, one-third only of the slaves were operative. What with childhood, age, infirmity, sickness, sham sickness, and other causes, full two-thirds of the negro population, might be regarded as dead weight. And further, the number of free laborers employed for the same quantity of work, is now decidedly less than this third. We may therefore fairly reckon that the pecuniary saving, on many of the estates in Antigua, by the change of slave for free labor, is at least thirty per cent. If the interest of money on the investment in slaves, is added to the debit amount under slavery, the comparison becomes much more favorable on the side of freedom. Besides this affair of arithmetic, however, there is the general consideration, that slavery and waste, are twin sisters, whereas, freedom is married to economy. Under the generous stimulus of equal liberty, short methods of labor are invented, machinery is introduced, every man, black and white, is thrown upon his own exertions, and into the whole community, co-operation infuses wealth. "All circumstances considered," says Dr. Nugent, the late speaker of the Assembly at Antigua, "I am happy to say, that the free-labor system is the cheapest, and incalculably so on those properties which were incumbered by an unnecessary quantity of hands."

1st Month (Jan.) 17th.—We had much satisfaction in visiting Newfield, a Moravian establishment—the missionary has a good school and large congregation. The same remark applies to their establishment at St. John's, which we inspected on a subsequent occasion. The Moravians have actually twelve thousand souls under their care in Antigua, one-third of the whole population. We are able to bear a clear and decisive testimony to their usefulness in the British Islands; there it is impeded by no Negro-Dutch, and by no holding of their fellow men as property. At Newfield, we were met by Sir William Colebrooke's carriage, which conveyed us to Dow's Hill. As we passed along through a picturesque country, we observed a curious species of cactus, abounding on the road-side; it is called the Turk's head—bearing a strange resemblance to the head of a man—the blossoms at the top, looking like a red cap or turban.

The Governor's house is built on a hill, overlooking English Harbor, a snug inlet of the sea, very commodious for shipping, with a little town adjoining. From a still higher eminence near at hand, called Shirley Heights, the view of the harbor, and surrounding rocks and mountains, is one of uncommon interest and beauty. One object which we just descried in the distance, excited peculiar feelings. It was a small Baltimore clipper used in the slave trade, which some British cruiser had captured, under American colors. After the capture, she was sent to the United States, disowned by the American government, and finally brought into this harbor. When captured, she was only fitted up for the trade; but had previously carried three hundred slaves across the ocean. By what cruel and expert contrivance, so large a number of human beings had been stowed in so small a space, we were wholly unable to conjecture. The fact however was undeniable.

Nothing could be more obliging than the welcome which we received from the Governor, and his lady and family. We soon formed an affectionate friendship with them; our friend Cunningham, was of the company; and in the evening, we held a religious meeting, in the saloon, with the family, their attendants, friends, and neighbors, white, brown and black. True liberality was evidently prevailing at Dow's Hill.

1st Month 18th.—We received a call from an intelligent lady of rank, who holds considerable property on this island. Her estate under slavery, was heavily mortgaged; but under the genial influence of the new system, is now free, or nearly free, from its burdens. We are told that many such instances have occurred in Antigua. Returned invalided to "Gilberts."

1st Month 19th, First day of the week.—We had appointed a meeting at a country village called Parham. It was a morning of violent rain; but about two hundred negroes braved the weather, and united with us in public worship. It is said that they are less willing to come out to their places of worship in the rain, than was the case formerly. The reason is curious.

They now have shoes and stockings, which they are unwilling to expose to the mud.

In the evening the weather was clear, and we met a congregation, computed to be two thousand in number, at the Methodist meeting-house in St. John's. It was an occasion of great solemnity, a large proportion of that respectable-looking assembly (for such it was) we afterwards found to have been composed of emancipated negroes. I trust it was not unsuitably, that we were reminded on the occasion, of the apostle's words, "Brethren, ye have been called unto liberty. Only use not your liberty for an occasion to the flesh, but in love serve one another."

The next morning we visited the Mico normal school. One Lady Mico, some two hundred years ago, bequeathed a property, to be expended in ransoming Christian captives from the Moors. The property has now become large; and under a late decree of the British Court of Chancery, the revenues arising from it, are appropriated to the purpose of scriptural education—but without sectarian bias—in the West Indies. The school at St. John's, under this institution, is applied to the instruction not only of children, in reading, writing, &c., but of teachers, in the art of education. It is admirably conducted, and is likely to become extensively useful. It is a cheering circumstance of no small importance, that there are no less, as we were told, than seven thousand scholars in the various charity schools of Antigua. In all these schools the Bible is read and taught. Who can doubt the beneficial moral effect of these extensive efforts?

The moral improvement of the negro population is amply evinced by two facts—the increase of marriage, and the decrease of crime.

The vicar of St. John's, during the last seven years of slavery, married only one hundred and ten pairs of negroes. In the single year of freedom, 1839, the number of pairs married by him, was 185.

With respect to crime—it has been rapidly diminishing during the last few years. The numbers committed to the house of correction in 1837,—chiefly for petty offences, formerly punished on the estates—were 850 ; in 1838 only 244 ; in 1839, 311. The number left in the prison at the close of 1837 was 147 ; at the close of 1839, only 35.

Nor can it be doubted that the personal comforts of the laborers have been, in the mean time, vastly increased. The duties on imports in 1833, (the last year of slavery) were £13,576 ; in 1839, they were £24,650. This augmentation has been occasioned by the importation of dry goods and other articles, for which a demand, entirely new, has arisen among the laboring population. The quantity of bread and meat, used as food by the laborers is surprisingly increased. Their wedding-cakes and dinners are extravagant, even to the point, at times, of drinking champagne !

In connection with every congregation in the island, whether of the Church of England, or among the Dissenters, has been formed a friendly society. The laborers subscribe their weekly pittances to these institutions, and draw out comfortable supplies, in case of sickness, old age, burials, and other exigencies. Thus is the negro gradually trained to the habits of prudence and foresight.

Having taken leave of the Lieut. Governor of St. Christopher's, who borrowed our brigantine in order to return, in it, to his prosperous little kingdom, we availed ourselves of the abundant hospitality of our friends at Gilberts and Dow's Hill for several days. In the course of the time, we again held meetings for worship at each place, called at the Moravian establishment at Grace Hill, and examined the school kept under the care of the mission ; attended a meeting of the Bible Society, which is working well in this island, and is generously supported by the laborers themselves ; and spent one morning, in company with the Governor, in visiting the free settlements, near his residence, Augusta and Liberta.

A female proprietor who had become embarrassed, was advised to sell off part of her property, in small lots. The experiment answered her warmest expectations. The laborers in the neighborhood, bought up all the little freeholds with extreme eagerness, made their payments faithfully, and lost no time in settling on the spots which they had purchased. They soon framed their houses, and brought their gardens into useful cultivation with yams, bananas, plantains, pine-apples, and other fruits and vegetables, including plots of sugar cane. In this way Augusta and Liberta sprang up as if by magic. I visited several of the cottages, in company with the Rector of the parish, and was surprised by the excellence of the buildings, as well as by the neat furniture, and cleanly little articles of daily use, which we found within. It was a scene of contentment and happiness; and I may certainly add, of industry; for these little freeholders occupied only their leisure hours, in working on their own grounds. They were also earning wages as laborers on the neighboring estates, or working at English Harbor, as mechanics.

During our rides and drives about Antigua, we sometimes observed specimens, lying on the road, of those remarkable petrifications for which the island is celebrated. They are either of woods found in the trap formation, or of madrepores, mostly discovered in the marl. The woods thus fossilized, are of various kinds, generally those which still grow on the island, perfectly stone, and often filled up with beautiful specimens of jasper and agate. These petrifications admit of the finest polish; and, when polished, are of singular beauty.

On our return to St. John's, towards the close of the week, the vicar conveyed me to some of the infant schools which he had founded in the country: the order and success of these institutions was gratifying. In one of them, I was introduced to an aged black woman, who was in the habit of attending the school as an amateur. She could not read herself, but had contrived to obtain a perfect knowledge of the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah, descriptive of our Saviour's vicarious sufferings. She repeated this chapter to me with entire accuracy, and with a nicety of emphasis, which plainly proved how well she understood, and how strongly she felt, its meaning. In the course of our excursion we called at the Cedar Valley estate, which we found in high order and prosperity. The manager, James Bell, made an excellent report of it.—“It is less trouble,” said he, “to conduct the whole concern now, than it was to manage the hospital alone, before emancipation.” Afterwards we visited a small hospital, under the vicar’s care, for male and female lepers. The dry leprosy which gradually eats up the extremities of the body, and often the features of the face, is a complaint to which the black people, in the West Indies, are very liable—nor is it confined to them. The complaint is said to be incurable. In this hospital, its unhappy victims were well provided for, and under religious care. They seemed very much at their ease; and cordially accepted a few sentences of exhortation and sympathy. In the evening our friend Holbertson’s negro flock assembled in a large school-room, and displayed much devout attention, during a meeting for worship, held by us on the occasion.

The next morning a friend of ours, a merchant in the town, conveyed me to the estate of a large resident planter and member of the council, who received me at his house with the greatest politeness. The manager, a respectable elderly Methodist, drove me about the cane-fields in a country cart, and seemed to take no small pleasure in pointing out the luxuriant crops of sugar cane, at once so vigorous, and so clean. He declared, that the crops of Antigua had never been taken off more easily, than during each successive year, since the date of freedom. This gentleman’s estates had been largely peopled with slaves, and in consequence oppressed by mortgages. Now he works them with less than one-third of the number, and at a vastly diminished expense. “The whole expense of conducting and working the estate at present,” said the manager, “is less than that of the mere feeding of the slaves.” Best of all, the mortgages on the property are mostly paid off; and our friend, once half a slave himself, is emerging into comfort, ease, and liberty.

We overtook a wedding party. Both bride and bridegroom were common laborers on the estate. The bridegroom was attired in a blue coat, handsome waistcoat, with a brooch, white pantaloons, and Wellington boots—the bride, in a vast pink silk bonnet, lace cap, and white muslin gown, with fashionable sleeves! We afterwards called on Dr. Daniel, the respected President of the Council, and a large attorney. He freely assured us that the laborers, on the properties under his care, were working well, and at a much cheaper rate, than in the times of slavery. Here also, the result of the experiment was a saving of expense; and of course therefore, an increase of profit, and a rise in the value of property.

Another week had now elapsed, and on the First-day evening, notwithstanding indisposition, a third meeting was held in the Methodist chapel. It was promiscuously attended, as was supposed, by two thousand five hundred people. The appearance of the congregation, and the deep interest they evinced on the occasion, reminded us of the prophecies in the book of Isaiah, respecting the great moral change to be effected by the gospel of Christ, in a world of vice and sorrow. “The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them, and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose.”

I was now laid by, under the care of a physician, for two days; but on the next morning (First month, 27th,) was allowed to unite with my friends, in visiting the jail and house of correction, which we found in a state of cleanliness and order. There was little to complain of, but the stowage of lunatics in the jail—a practice not unusual, in the British West Indian Colonies. I have since heard from the Governor General, that a separate place is now allotted to them; he also informs me, that the tread-wheel, which we were happy to find disused, is on the point of being finally demolished. The Chief Judge, Nanton, who accompanied us to the prisons, and attended the meetings which we held with their afflicted inmates, fully confirmed the statements which we had previously received of the diminution of crime. - He also gave a cheering account of the behavior and industry of the negroes on his own property.

We were now placed in possession of clear documentary evidence, respecting the staple produce of the Island. The average exports of the last five years of slavery, (1829 to 1833 inclusive,) were, sugar 12,189 hogsheads; molasses 3,308 puncheons; and rum 2,468 puncheons. Those of the first five years of freedom, (1834 to 1838 inclusive,) were, sugar 13,545 hogsheads; molasses 8,308 puncheons; and rum 1,109 puncheons; showing an excess of 1,356 hogsheads of sugar, and of 5000 puncheons of molasses; and a diminution of 1,359 puncheons of rum. This comparison is surely a triumphant one; not only does it demonstrate the advantage derived from free labor during a course of five years, but affords a proof that many of the planters of Antigua have ceased to convert their molasses into rum. It ought to be observed that these five years of freedom, included two of drought, one, very calamitous. The statement for 1839, forms an admirable climax to this account. It is as follows: sugar 22,383 hogsheads; (10,000 beyond the last average of slavery,) 13,433 puncheons of molasses (also 10,000 beyond that average,) and only 582 puncheons of rum! That, in the sixth year of freedom, after the fair trial of five years, the exports of sugar from Antigua, almost doubled the average of the last five years of slavery, is a fact which precludes the necessity of all other evidence. By what hands was this vast crop raised and realised? By the hands of that lazy and impracticable race (as they have often been described,) the negroes. And under what stimulus has the work been effected? Solely under that of moderate wages.

The Governor made a parting visit to us at our hotel in the evening, and seemed to derive pleasure from freely imparting to us his just and admirable views of colonial policy. They are founded on the immutable basis of Christian principle. Our brigantine had now returned from St. Christopher's, and early on the 28th, we sailed for Dominica.

I cannot with honesty, quit my narrative of Antigua, without acknowledging that, amidst the profusion of evidence poured in upon us, in the island, of the favorable working of freedom, we met with one opposing testimony. It was that of a wealthy old gentleman whom I met one day in the streets, and of whom, every one who visits Antigua, is pretty sure to hear. No sooner were we introduced to him, than he began to pour forth his complaints of the misconduct of the laborers, impending ruin, &c., &c. It so happens, however, that not an acre of ground is offered for sale, within his reach, which he does not purchase with the utmost avidity; so that his landed property, already large, is constantly on the increase. His words were sad enough, but every one acknowledged, that ample was the refutation of them, furnished by his deeds. Confident we are, that our elderly friend is far too much alive to his own interest, to form any exception to the following declaration of the Governor and N. Gilbert. On our asking them, whether there was any person on the island who wished for the restoration of slavery, they answered, without a moment's hesitation, "No—not one."

I am, &c. &c.

LETTER VI.

DOMINICA.

Flushing, L. I. Sixth-month (June) 5th, 1840.

MY DEAR FRIEND,

Our voyage from Antigua to Dominica, was one of thirty-six hours. We passed under the lee of Guadaloupe just before night closed upon us. The appearance of that island on the west side, of which alone we had a view, is mountainous and barren—not without much of picturesque beauty. We were informed however that on the other side, it is highly cultivated, which is also the case with that still more beautiful island, Martinique. It is an evidence that slavery in these French colonies, is not without its hardships, that several hundreds of the slaves, since the British act of emancipation, have made their escape to Dominica—chiefly I believe from Guadaloupe.

The poor creatures run prodigious risks in their attempts to cross the water, in small open boats; and we were informed that at least one third of them perish before they can reach the land. One hardy fellow arrived on the shore of Dominica, after extreme peril, on the remains of a small raft which he had constructed of the pithy stems of the great aloe, or century plant. When at Dominica, we heard excellent accounts of the behavior and industry of these runaway slaves. About two hundred of them remain on the island—the rest have migrated, in pursuit of higher wages, to Trinidad. Devoutly is it to be desired that the steps already taken by the French Government towards the emancipation of the slaves, in these colonies, may be carried forward to their completion without delay. It is a circumstance worthy of observation, that the commission appointed to enquire into the subject, after the most deliberate investigation, have brought in a report recommending—not any gradual dilatory process—but the immediate abolition of slavery.

The attention of the French Commissioners was closely given (I believe by personal visits) to the result of the experiment of abolition in the neighboring British colonies; and it can be no matter of surprise that the excellent working of freedom in Antigua, where the change was made without any intervening apprenticeship, should have brought them to this conclusion. Nevertheless the strongest argument for the course recommended by them, might be drawn from the comparison of Antigua and Dominica.

Never were two colonies more contrasted in their circumstances than these. Antigua is a dry island, watered only from the skies, and cultivated nearly to the extent of its capacities, the remaining wild land being of little value. Dominica is watered by a vast number of little streams which flow (as we were told) from a fathomless lake embosomed in the mountains, at a high level above the sea. It is in consequence, a moist island, and of luxuriant fertility; and nine tenths of the soil, productive as it is by nature, are wholly unoccupied—in a state of absolute wildness. Antigua again, long before the date of emancipation, was the scene of much Christian labor, and education had been spread extensively among the slaves. On the contrary, in Dominica, the people who speak a barbarous French patois, and are under the sway of the Roman Catholic religion, were, until lately, almost entirely destitute of schools, or any other means of instruction—an ignorant and uncultivated race. And yet—wonderful to say—the experiment of emancipation, is working just as well, in Dominica, as it is in Antigua. The negroes of Dominica, neither squat on the wild land, nor shew any wildness themselves; the trifling unsettlement which took place at the date of full freedom, soon subsided; and they are working, in a quiet inoffensive manner, on the estates of their former masters. “Their conduct,” says one of the Stipendiaries (in his last report to the Governor General, dated "January 1," 1840) "is orderly, quiet, and peaceable." A second says, "They continue to conduct themselves with every propriety;" a third observes that "their general conduct is orderly and industrious." The solution of the problem, is easy. Educated, or uneducated, the negro loves his home, humble though it be, and has no wish to exchange it for a wild life upon the mountains. With equal sincerity he loves the silver "mochos" which are placed in his hands as the reward of his labor, and it is natural to him to work, in order to obtain them.

On the following morning we obtained a distant view of Dominica, but did not succeed in reaching Roseau, until night-fall. Columbus discovered this island on the first day of the week—thence its name, Dominica; and when queen Isabella asked for a description of it, he crumpled a sheet of paper in his hands, in order to give her some notion of the jagged and compressed appearance of its conical mountains. One cannot approach this romantic spot of earth, without feeling a kind of fascination. A late writer describes it as a land of "mists and torrents and rainbows," and such it truly is. The mountains peaked and picturesque as they are, and some of them very lofty—the highest five thousand six hundred feet above the level of the sea—are mantled to their very tops, with luxuriant vegetation; and through the deep ravines, and luxuriant dells which divide them, many a sudden gust of wind assails the mariner, and many a mountain stream finds its way into the ocean.

As it was quite dark before we cast anchor, we concluded not to attempt a landing until morning; but after I had retired to my berth, I was told that two colored gentlemen, Louis Bellot, a planter, and Charles Fillan, clerk to the house of representatives, had come on board to offer us a hearty welcome, and tender their help and hospitality. We declined their kindness for the night; but the next morning they rejoined our company, and conducted us to the clean and comfortable abode of Maria Dalrymple, a colored Methodist matron, whom, not without good cause, they and many others in the place, are accustomed to call their "mother." There we were received with abundant cordiality, and were provided with good accommodation, both of bed and board, during our stay on the island. After partaking of a hearty breakfast, and making a few needful arrangements, we proceeded to the Government House, and paid our respects to Major McPhail, the Lieut. Governor. He and his lady had given a kind reception to some missionary members of our society, when he was governor of Santa Maura, one of the Ionian islands; and very kind and cordial were they to ourselves. We frequently partook of their hospitality, and were glad to meet at their table, white and colored persons without distinction. The major is a man of great integrity, and liberal views. He was imprisoned two months, on one occasion, in Portugal, for refusing to kneel before the host. When in Greece, he was an able and successful promoter of education; and in Dominica, he has proved himself, through no small difficulties, to be the undaunted protector of the rights of the negro.

I wish I had the opportunity of introducing to thee, our friends Fillan and Bellot. The former is a young man with the wool of Africa on his head, but full of bodily and mental energy, ardent in the cause of religion and humanity, but naturally prone to merriment. He is a plant of no stunted growth, which would bear a little pruning; and reminded me of Quintilian's saying, in his work on education, "Des quod amputem—give me something to cut off." I draw this portrait, at the risk of annoying him, for the sake of the race with which he is connected. Bellot is an intelligent, well-educated person, a member of the legislature, and much respected in the colony. On our return from the Governor's, we found they had provided horses, and were ready to accompany us, on our excursion into the country. The day was hot, but the temptation of the scenery was irresistible. We first ascended Mont Bruce, a military station, from which there is an enchanting view of the Roseau valley, which winds along between many shaped rocks and mountains, itself luxuriantly green; with the little river of that name running, or rather rushing, through the midst of it. As we rode up and down the hill, we observed on its brow, many garden grounds of free settlers, filled with orange trees, plantains, and other fruits and vegetables. We then took our course along the valley itself, for a few miles, until we arrived at one of Bellot's estates, where we found his people busily engaged in making sugar. He has had the good sense to lease out portions of his land to independent settlers, many of whom are at work upon his estate. His sugar works are in the valley, and after leaving them, we pursued a winding road up a high hill, which led us to his house at Copthall. When there, I observed a curious little building on the premises—of new stone well cemented—out of which the pigs were emerging one after another. On examination I found it was the "bilboes" or "cachot;" an abominable place, without light or air, or as nearly so as possible, in which the wretched negroes had formerly been punished with solitary confinement. During slavery, and the apprenticeship, Copthall had been in other hands, and was rapidly falling into decay;—almost the only tight place on the property, being this very bilboes. Now, under freedom, and the care of Bellot, the estate was rapidly improving, the produce of it had increased £200 per cent, and the Bilboes were turned into a pig sty! Who can deny that here was a delightful proof of the advantage and efficiency of freedom?

After partaking of needful refreshment, we followed the mountain road, to a higher elevation, and visited another estate, also in the hands of a colored planter, where we again found the laborers, working well. Several of the people gathered around us, and a woman who could speak English, came forward on behalf of the company, to beg for a school. "We are hungry for a school," said she, "we are tired of waiting for it." Nor were these idle words; for the people on this and a neighboring property, had agreed to subscribe eight dollars per month in part payment of a teacher. Nothing indeed can be more eager, than the desire of the negroes of Dominica for education—they seem determined to obtain it; and it is gratifying to know that the efforts now making, for the purpose, are at once considerable and successful. There are nearly 700 scholars in the four Mico schools, which are ably conducted, and being quite clear of sectarianism, are not opposed by the Roman Catholic priests. Geo. Clark, the laborious and exemplary minister of the parish church at Roseau, has four schools under his care. The Methodists have five mission establishments, 1017 members of their church, and eleven schools besides two held only on the First-day of the week. Thus the cause of Christian instruction is now making rapid progress, and will, I hope, ere very long, pervade this island, as it does Antigua.

The quantity of provisions raised in Dominica, is stated, in a late official report, to have increased 50 per cent, in the year 1839. The soil makes generous repayment for a little culture, and as we rode along, the fruitful provision grounds, either of the independent settlers, or of free laborers on the estates, met our eye in every direction. The oranges, and other kindred fruits, are peculiarly fine, and we shall not soon forget the refreshment of some ripe and juicy "forbidden fruit," which a negro shook from his tree, and kindly bestowed upon us, in the course of our mountain ride.

On our return home, we overtook a peasant with an agouti in his hands. It is a small, hairy animal, which seems to unite the natures of the pig and the rabbit. We bought it, and our "methodist mother" afterwards cooked it for our breakfast. The zoology of Dominica is quite interesting. The wild boar is found in the woods; a species of boa constrictor is also met with, and not unfrequently pays a fatal visit to the poultry-yard. Parroquets are numerous, and several kinds of humming birds, abound. Immense numbers of land-crabs, at certain seasons, afford excellent food for all who take the trouble of catching them. The same may be said of the crapeaus, very large frogs, which frequent the pure, running waters, and are, as we can testify, an excellent article of diet—the meat tasting like that of a chicken. But it is the vegetable luxuriance of this island, which is the most striking to the eye of a stranger,—far exceeding any thing that we have elsewhere witnessed, except perhaps, in some parts of Jamaica. Innumerable shrubs, plants and trees, novel to us, with broad-leaved creepers of various kinds, cover the hills with a remarkable depth of verdure. The most beautiful of these productions is the tree-fern, which grows to the height of 20 or even 30 feet, and waves its bright green feathers over the whole scenery of the island.

After riding many hours, we were fairly overtaken by the night-fall, and were glad to return in safety to our comfortable quarters. We afterwards spent an agreeable evening at the Governor's. On the next day, the first of the week, we held our meetings in the Methodist meeting-house morning and evening. In the evening, the Governor and his lady, and most of the gentry of the place, attended, with a large number of others, of various shades of color. As the colony is much distracted by parties, it was, we hope, for a good purpose, that we endeavored to hold up the standard of Christian charity and unity—"There shall be one fold and one shepherd."

Our friend Joseph Phillips, a stipendiary magistrate, had kindly come from a distant part of the island to visit us, and furnished us with a variety of important and encouraging information. He gave us an unqualified good account of the conduct of the free-laborers. They are remarkably honest, and bags of small coin, intended for the payment of wages, are conveyed about the country, without risk. In the early part of the apprenticeship, the number of punishments per month, in his district was 70. They are now reduced to an average of only two. One invalid constable is sufficient to keep his whole district in order. In a late report addressed to Sir William Colebrooke, he observes, "The amount of crime in this colony of 20,000 souls, is perhaps less than in any other part of her Majesty's Dominions." We received similar reports from other magistrates, especially a colored gentleman—William Lynch, an active and intelligent stipendiary, whose firm support of the rights of the laborers, has done him high credit.

Accompanied by this magistrate, and Fillan and Bellot, as before, we devoted the following day to an excursion to the souffriere, on the northern coast. A ride of many miles, through another luxuriant valley, brought us to Geneva, the extensive sugar estate of William B. Lockhart. The views there are delightful, embracing the beautiful island of Martinique in the distance. I visited the sugar works, and am not aware that I have ever seen a more healthy looking, or apparently industrious, company of laborers, than were there assembled. Their employer assured me that his people were working well, and that he was deriving decided pecuniary advantage, from the substitution of free-labor for the dead weight of slavery.

In ascending the lofty hill which separates Geneva from the souffriere, we passed by several estates.—The report of “Coole-rie,” was that “the negroes were working delightfully:” at “Berraquoir,” the manager informed us that “they were working cheerfully, and cheaply to their employer as compared with slavery.” A third property had been dismantled under slavery, and was now again in process of sugar cultivation. Thus from step to step, our evidence, in favor of the present system, accumulated. When we arrived at the top of the hill, the scenery presented to our view was of uncommon sublimity and beauty. On one side lay Grand Bay, a noble inlet of the sea, with the rocky and hilly coast nearly surrounding it; on the other, the valley of the souffriere, well covered with sugar-cane, winding its way to the sea, between lofty mountains. One of these mountains is supposed to consist almost entirely of sulphur, and the brow of it forms the souffriere; from which springs a small stream of boiling water, and flows down, through the valley, to the sea. As we descended the hill by a zig-zag route, we came into the immediate neighborhood of this mass of sulphur, which fills the surrounding atmosphere with a strong odor. It is of a pure quality, rather white than yellow, and is now exported in considerable quantities. The traces of volcanic operation, throughout this island, are very conspicuous; not only in the fantastic shapes of the hills, caused (it may be presumed) by some vast irregular force from below; but in the coloring of many of the rocks, which plainly betrays the action of fire.

One of the lofty conical hills which rises from this valley, to the east, appeared to be cultivated to its summit with coffee; at any rate, the hedges by which the coffee plants used to be protected, were seen intersecting the hill in every direction, and formed a pleasing feature in the scenery before us. It is a remarkable circumstance that since the date of a hurricane, which ravaged this island, a few years ago, the coffee plants have generally withered, from the resistless attack of a small white fly. In consequence of this blight, the exports of coffee have been greatly reduced, and several of the coffee-estates are now coming under sugar-cultivation. They are generally in the hands of small French planters, whose slaves formed part of their families before emancipation, and are now working the properties for their former owners, on shares. The present crop is said to be an improved one; and hopes are entertained that the miserable effects of the blight will be gradually surmounted.

At the little village of Souffriere, by the sea side, a Mico school, under the care of a pious and able teacher, is in useful operation. Boats were in readiness for us on the shore, and we were rapidly conveyed, by star-light, along a rocky and picturesque coast, back again to Roseau.

There we continued for three days longer, visited the prison and the schools, held two more religious meetings, and received kind calls from several of the principal residents. I am not aware that the favorable reports which we obtained, from them, of the orderly and industrious behavior of the peasantry, was interrupted by a single exception. Among the most interesting of those visits, was that of our friend Dugald Stuart Laidlaw, an elderly planter of great influence in the island, much respected as a liberal patron of education, but one whose habits had long been associated with the old system. He is a large proprietor, and still larger attorney, and has no less than twenty-two estates under his care. The valuable information with which he favored us—entirely of his own accord—was to the following effect—"that although his present crops were somewhat diminished in consequence of the slight degree of unsettlement, which took place after the commencement of full freedom, (at the time of planting) he had now no complaint to make—that the laborers were working well on their old locations—that not a single instance of squatting had occurred—that he was conducting his estates on the plan of job-work, which was agreeable and profitable to both parties—that whereas he had formerly borne the burden of more than two thousand one hundred slaves or apprentices, he now employed only six hundred free laborers—that he expected to save money by the change—and lastly, that he was taking measures for enlarging the extent of his sugar cultivation.”

I afterwards met with an agreeable confirmation of this last item in the account. In company with the Governor, and our friend Bellot, I rode out one afternoon, to see a celebrated prospect from a hill, bordering on the valley of the Roseau, called Watten Waven. When we arrived at the spot, I found it was one of the estates under the care of this gentleman. Before us was an amphitheatre of mountains, of romantic shapes and covered with foliage, and at their feet, an uncultivated glen of extreme luxuriance. The scene was lovely beyond description ; but its beauty, if not to be materially injured, was at least about to change its character, for our friend Laidlaw had already laid his plans for converting this wild, fertile glen, into a sugar plantation.

The export of sugar from Dominica was, in 1837, (the last year of apprenticeship) 2,221 hogsheads ; in 1838, 2,900 hogsheads ; in 1839, 2,474 hogsheads ; a gradual but decided increase is now expected.

Cheering, indeed, is the fact that, in the meantime, both the morals and comforts of the laboring population are rapidly improving ; take for an evidence, the decrease of crime, and the increase of imports. In 1833, (the last year before the act of emancipation) the commitments to the jail, were 160 ; in 1839, the first entire year of freedom, only 88 ; difference in favor of freedom, 72.

The average imports of the last five years of slavery, were of the value of £64,000. In 1839, they amounted to £120,000 ; although certain vessels which had been expected, had not yet arrived, when the accounts were made up—difference in favor of freedom, £56,000 ; a sum which mainly represents an increase of comforts enjoyed by the emancipated negroes.

Two other circumstances, in the present state of Dominica, deserve a somewhat emphatic notice. The first is, that field labor, being no longer the work of slaves, is no longer held to be disgraceful. The black people who were free, before the date of emancipation, used to consider it below their dignity, to work on the estates. Now it is quite otherwise. We had the pleasure of finding them busily engaged, with their lately emancipated brethren, in cutting the cane and boiling the sugar. The second circumstance alluded to, is of a political nature. A majority of the lower house, in the Legislature, is composed of colored persons—duly chosen, of course, by the freeholders of the island. It may naturally be asked, whether a body of persons, so constituted, show any tendency to disquietude or disaffection. To such an inquiry the answer is most satisfactory ; they are remarkable for their loyalty—the zealous friends and supporters of the British Government !

On the 7th of the Second-month, we took our leave of our warm-hearted friends. Maria Dalrymple, who had lodged and boarded us, so greatly to our comfort, refused to receive a penny of repayment ; but we at length persuaded her to take the doubloons which were her due, with our permission that she should apply them to charity. Our colored brethren accompanied us to the vessel. We parted from them, under the feeling of Christian love and friendship ; and as the lateness of the season precluded a farther windward voyage (consistently with our other objects) we set sail for St. Thomas.

The wind which, as a matter of course, we hoped to enjoy in our favor, now “hailed” to the westward, and blew strongly ahead. Such are the trials of patience to which one is often exposed, at sea. As we slowly receded from Dominica, we amused ourselves with the following memorandum of its history and its charms.

1. 'Twas on the Christian's day of rest,
While men on shore their faith confessed,
In many a song of praise ;
The gallant knight of the western star,
Descried thy headlands from afar,
And traced thy shadowy bays.
2. Clouds and mists were over thee flung,
And the rainbow on thy rocks was hung,
And howled the wind thy vales among,
And the mountain torrents roared ;
But soon thou wast mantled o'er with smiles,
When the sunbeam broke thro' thy deep defiles,
And o'er the loveliest of the isles,
Beauty and grace were poured.
3. The crumpled sheet in the veteran's hand,
Figured thy jagged and pyramid land,
But all thy rocks were green ;
The tree-fern waved upon thy brow,
And the plaintain leaf was broad below,
Where the rivulet gushed unseen.
4. The parent of three hundred rills,
Asleep amidst thy ravined hills,
A fathomless lake was found ;
And high around thy mountains rose,
But never wore they the wreath of snows,
For they were forest crowned.
5. The monkeys, voluble in chat,
Within thy bowers in council sat,
And roved the bristled boar ;
Coiled the vast snake without a sting,
Blazed many a bird unskilled to sing,
And the sprite that hums on the lusted wing,
Glanced o'er thy flowery shore.
6. Far from the haunts of civil men,
O'er brake and thicket, glade and glen,
The dark-haired Indian wandered then,
Untutor'd and untamed.

- A hardy, yet a harmless race,
That never saw the white man's face,
Or heard the Spaniard named.
7. The serpent to their bosom pressed,
Poisoned their blood and broke their rest,
Then circling, stole their soil ;
Their native freedom sank in chains,
Barter'd for beads their fruitful plains,
Their loss was liberty—their gains
Were slavery, stripes, and toil.
8. As melts beneath the scorching sun,
When winter's sturdy course is run,
April's untimely snow ;
So melted from their father land,
The hapless, persecuted band,
Before the lash of woe.
9. A few that bear the Caribb's name,
Now idly weave the wicker frame,
Or beg a scanty meal ;
Their native fires for ever gone,
They wander listless and alone—
Their woes forget to feel.
10. Not so, the sorrow-stricken race,
Soon kidnapped to supply their place,
From home and kindred torn ;
In pestilential cabins pressed,
Robbed of their wages, scourged, distressed,
Degraded, weak, forlorn.
11. Then hail, the holy, happy day,
When all their chains were cast away,
And freedom spread her genial sway,
O'er the islands of the west—
Thy verdant hills shall flow with peace,
Thy vales, with plenty shall increase,
Thy notes of discord all shall cease,
Fair Dominique the blest.

Our voyage continued four days. Having lost all sight of land, and being without any means of calculating longitude, we were, at length, very much at a loss to conjecture our true position. According to the Captain's reckoning, we were yet far away to the east; but our own calculations brought us on a line with Santa Cruz. This opinion proved to be correct. On the break of day, one morning, we found ourselves approaching that island. Although bound for St. Thomas, we now thought it advisable to change our course, and soon found ourselves safe at West-End, in the midst of the cordial welcomes and congratulations of our friends. We were a good deal wearied by long-continued excitement and exertion, and found in their society, for a few days, just that refreshment, both of body and mind, which was suited to our need. One change, which had taken place during the seven weeks of our absence, was remarkable. When we were there before, the subject of slavery was almost unmentionable; now we could scarcely find time to answer the inquiries made of us, respecting the working of emancipation in the islands to the windward. Many of the planters openly professed their willingness to emancipate their slaves, if compensation were but granted. The question of compensation lies between the planters and the Danish Government; and we sincerely hope that the latter will exercise all due liberality on the occasion. Nevertheless, it is clear, that, in pure justice, this question can never bar the infinitely higher claim of a third party—that is, the negro—to a property in his own person.

LETTER VII.

MY DEAR FRIEND,

Our second visit to Santa Cruz afforded us an opportunity of uniting with twenty or more of the boarders there—individuals with whom we had formed a highly agreeable acquaintance—in chartering the ship Whitmore, Capt. R. Watlington. It was agreed that the rest of the company should leave Santa Cruz, in the course of the Third-month, (March) and after a cruise among some other islands, call for us at Jamaica, and convey us, by Havana, to the United States. For ourselves, we set sail, on the 18th of the Second-month (February) in our little brigantine, intending to land at Jaquemel, a port on the south of Hayti, on our way to Jamaica. Our kind friends, the planters of Santa Cruz, loaded us with presents of oranges, shaddocks, syrup, new sugar, &c., for our use during the voyage, and heartfelt was our mutual expression of good wishes, on our departure from the island. We now had the delightful trade wind directly in our favor. Our course lay along the southern shore of Porto Rico; which extends ninety miles in length. This coast presented to the eye no peculiar aspect of interest or beauty. The mountains to the south of the island are low, and we hardly perceived a speck of cultivation. That much of the interior is well cultivated and of great luxuriance, we are well aware, and melancholy in the extreme, is the fact that the negro population of the island is constantly increasing by fresh importations. We afterwards learned from our friends in the Whitmore, who called on their way to Jamaica, at the port of St. John's, that the slaver "Hound," under American colors, landed nearly four hundred negroes in its vicinity, the day before their arrival. Some of the company visited them, and found them in a miserably emaciated condition.

We left the south western extremity of Porto Rico at night-fall one evening, and at daybreak were in sight of the low island of Mona. The next morning we found ourselves within a mile or two of the coast of Hayti; and were surprised to discover how much we had over-run our calculation of longitude, when in the course of the day, we saw the dome-like rock of Alto Velo, a small island at its southernmost point, rising before our view. Here it was that Columbus and his sailors amused themselves in days of old, with killing the "sea wolves." Our course was now directed to the north-west, past another remarkable rock, called Los Frayles. This rock is composed of a row of vertical pillars, which by a fertile imagination, might easily be clothed with sack cloth, and depicted as "Friars." We were glad to pass by such dangerous "brethren" before sun-set, and were desirous, if possible, of making the port of Jaquemel, only sixty miles distant, the next morning. But our hopes were frustrated; for when the morning came, we found ourselves becalmed near the coast, in front of a high cliff, with white hummocks, but at what longitude, we had no means of ascertaining. Here we amused ourselves with observing the motions of the Portuguese men-of-war—small jelly fishes—which sometime go by this name, and sometimes by that of "nautilus." Their bodies are hollow and transparent, of a bright pink or purple, and their feelers, by which the animalculæ are caught for their sustenance, are composed of many purple cords curiously woven and twined. These cords are poisonous, and often inflict a sting on those who are bold enough to handle the animal. In the evening (when it was dark) a favorable breeze sprung up, and as we passed by a mysterious hollow in the mountains, a strong tide appeared to rush in upon us from the land. Perceiving as I believed, some tokens that this was our port, (for I had been studying the Coast Pilot for the purpose,)

I requested the Captain to lay to for the night, and the next morning the scene which lay before us was magnificent. The mountains which rose to a great height, were enveloped in clouds; but I thought I clearly perceived a harbor-like opening between them. The bearing of the land was right, according to the book; and when, for a moment the clouds broke away, I distinctly saw that remarkable descent of one mountain upon another, in a perpendicular line, which I knew to be a sign of the harbor of Jaquemel. But the Captain, the mate, and my fellow-passengers, were all of a contrary judgment,—so the word was given for turning the vessel round; and we availed ourselves of a fine easterly breeze, in sweeping along to the westward.

After a short time, it became evident to all on board that we had lost our port. We had intended to take mules at Jaquemel, ride over the mountains to Port au Prince, pay our respects to the President Boyer, and then return to our vessel; but this somewhat boyish design was now disappointed, and nothing remained for us to do, but to pursue our course to Jamaica. We afterwards found that our matters were ordered much better for us, than we could have arranged them for ourselves; for had we landed at Hayti, we should have had no time for the accomplishment of some important duties, to which we found ourselves called in Jamaica.

A fine breeze was now wafting us along at a noble rate, the weather was bright, the sea of gorgeous blue, and the coast of Hayti, along which we were passing, was formed of a circular line of mountains, clad with forest, and often descending in precipitous white cliffs to the sea. A small island to the South of it, covered with verdure, called L'Isle des Vaches, seemed spread like a carpet upon the waves, and these were tossing about in every direction. A few lines of verse may serve as a brief memorial of the "finest day of our voyage."

Old Neptune was dressed in his brightest blue, where winter has no rigor,
And the easterly breeze was sweeping along with most salubrious vigor;

And the sea-nymphs now could sleep no more upon their coral beds,
For the waves were tossed in a thousand forms, with the white foam on their heads.

Beside us Hayti's Alps arose, in a crescent of true glory,
The forest on their summits waved, and their front with age was hoary,
Their snowy cliffs, in forms abrupt, were to the sea descending,
To the beauty of its azure, the charms of contrast lending.
L'Isle des Vaches, spread its level greens on the bosom of the ocean,
And the clouds above, like the bark below, were all in rapid motion.
The Nautilus pink was floating there, of armed ships the parent,
And scudded away the flying fish, on silver wing transparent.
The scene was of deepest solitude, but full of animation,
And the pilgrims lost their grief and care, in joyous contemplation.

Just as the sun was setting, we took leave of St. Domingo, at Point Gravois, and pursued a straight course, across the open sea, for Jamaica. In the course of the night, the Captain called us up to look at a lunar rainbow; it was of a pale yellow, marked with great plainness, the arch perfect and of considerable extent. The next day we came within sight of Jamaica, and were delighted by the first glimpse of the blue mountains, some ridges of which are seen in the distance, towering over Morant Point, the easternmost extremity of the island. We lay to before the Point during the night, and the next morning, having taken in a pilot, pursued our course towards Kingston. We sailed beside the plains of St. Thomas in the East, which presented to the eye every appearance of fertility and cultivation; and we were pleased to observe, some large merchantmen in the small harbor of Port Morant, waiting, as we presumed, for the usual supplies of sugar. The blue mountains in the back ground, were now clearly in view—the highest peak more than 8000 feet above the level of the sea. It was truly a feast of delightful scenery. Kingston harbor is formed by an inlet of the sea, between the main land and a long sand-bank called the Palisades. At the point of this sand bank stands the neat little town of Port Royal, the principal naval station in the West Indies, and the grave, during slavery, of thousands of British soldiers and seamen. Now there was scarcely a man of war to be seen on the station—an agreeable contrast to the large number of merchantmen which we found in port, at Kingston. A comparative view of the two places, afforded us an impressive evidence, that freedom is allied both to security and wealth. Do full justice to a population, and you will want no men of war to terrify them into obedience. Give fair scope to liberty, and sooner or later, commerce will flourish.

By a boat which had supplied us with pink and silver fishes for breakfast, we had sent notice of our approach, to some kind friends at Kingston, and were cordially welcomed on our arrival, by John and Maria Candler, members of our own Society, from England, W. W. Anderson, a lawyer of eminence, of the Episcopal church, much devoted to the cause of religion and humanity, and Charles Lake, a colored member of the Legislature. They conducted us to Grace Blundell's Hotel, in East-street, where we found a clean and airy dwelling, with even luxurious accommodation. Kingston is a large city, pretty well built, of at least 50,000 inhabitants, but unpaved, the streets hot and dusty. It would have been well had the sums of money lavished on the building of a large new theatre, been applied to the improvement of the streets; but as the commerce of the city is brisk, and the real property in it, rapidly rising in value, it may be expected that this object will be effected in its turn. Here we met with the utmost civility from our kind friends, of the firm of Atkinson, Hosier & Co., who presented us, on our arrival, with letters enough to occupy our attention for two or three days. We could now understand the full meaning of King Solomon's saying, "As cold water to a thirsty soul, so is good news, from a far country." We landed at Kingston, after a voyage of eight days, on the 26th of the Second month, (February.)

John Candler and his wife, had arrived in Jamaica many weeks before us, having come from England, on behalf of our Society there, for the purpose of applying a fund raised among the Friends, for the benefit of the negro population; not without the further object in view, of promoting the welfare of all parties in the colony, by setting an example of temperate conciliatory conduct, and by extending such Christian counsel as they might be enabled to give. On two successive evenings, at their lodgings, we met circles of religious people of various denominations, to whom was related our story of the islands to the windward; and we endeavored, I trust, to provoke each other to "love and to good works," in the name of the Lord. On the 29th, we commenced our "labor of love"—for such it was, however feeble—with visits to the House of Correction, and County Jail; the former airy and tolerably commodious, its inmates employed in breaking stones; the latter utterly inadequate for its purpose—the prisoners being stowed in small rooms, with little air. We held religious meetings in each of these prisons; and I am sorry to add, that our audience in both cases, was numerous. The scum of the population, since the date of emancipation, has found its way into the city, and the consequence is an increase there, of petty crimes. But we were cheered by the information received through various channels, and from the best authority, that taking the island as a whole, crime is decidedly diminished since the abolition of slavery; in many of the country districts, it has almost ceased. These meetings were attended by several of the magistrates, and it may be worth mentioning, that amongst them were two black aldermen, as respectable in their demeanor, and so far as we could judge, as fit for their office, as any of their colleagues.

The 1st of the Third month, (March,) was the First of the week, and we were glad to observe that the day was remarkably well observed at Kingston—just as it is in many of the cities of your highly favored Union. A wonderful scene we witnessed, that morning, in Samuel Oughton's Baptist Chapel, which we attended, without having communicated to the people any previous notice of our coming. The minister was so obliging as to make way for us on the occasion, and to invite us to hold our meeting with his flock, after the manner of Friends. Such a flock we had not before seen, consisting of nearly three thousand black people, chiefly emancipated slaves, attired after their favorite custom, in neat white raiment, and most respectable and orderly in their demeanor and appearance. They sat in silence with us, in an exemplary manner, and appeared both to understand, and appreciate, the doctrines of divine truth, preached on the occasion. The congregation is greatly increased, both in numbers and respectability, since the date of full freedom. They pour in from the country partly on foot, and partly on mules, or horses, of their own. They now entirely support the mission, and are enlarging their chapel at the expense of £1,000 sterling. Their subscriptions to this and other collateral objects, are at once voluntary and very liberal. "I have brought my mite for the chapel," said a black woman once a slave, to S. Oughton, a day or two before our meeting; "I am sorry it is no more;" she then put into his hand, two pieces of gold, amounting to five dollars. This description, which would apply with equal force, to several other scenes witnessed by us in Jamaica, may be sufficient to show the utter fallacy of the notion, that the cause of religion has declined in that island, since the breaking of the bonds of the slave. The exact contrary, is pre-eminently the truth.

We always endeavored, during our residence in Jamaica, to hold the balance even between the Baptists and the Methodists, the chapels of both denominations being freely offered to us. In the afternoon, a meeting was held in pursuance of public advertisement, in the Wesley Chapel—a house of similar vast size. The congregation was very large and promiscuous, consisting of persons of all ranks, parties, and colors. Much had the colony been perplexed and agitated by the strife of parties. No wonder, therefore, that we felt it to be our duty to preach peace and charity, and to uphold the efficiency of evangelical and vital religion, as the radical remedy for all abuses. "Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be brought low, and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain, and the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together."

Third-month (March) 2d. Under the guidance of our friends J. and M. Candler, we drove several miles into the country, to breakfast at Papine, the estate of J. B. Wildman, late member of parliament for Colchester. There we were entertained by William Manning, a catechist of the church Missionary Society, who, like other agents of that institution in the island, is very valuable and useful. The house is embosomed in tropical trees of rare beauty, one of them a mahogany-tree, covered with small dark leaves, and spreading its branches like one of our vast oaks. Large red lilies were growing wild among the grass and shrubs. The productions of nature in this island, are somewhat different from any that we had before seen. For example, the pimento or Jamaica pepper tree, which produces the "all-spice"—of lofty grey trunk, and dark polished fragrant leaf; the lignum vitæ, profusely adorned with blue blossoms; the date palm, much exceeding the cocoa-nut tree in the luxuriance of its branches, and many delicate kinds of acacia. As to the mango trees, they may be said to cover the country, and during the four summer months, afford abundance of delicious food to men, mules, horses, cows, and pigs. All animals seem equally fond of this fruit. The birds of Jamaica are also more various and frequent than in the other islands which we visited. The turkey buzzard, so common in your southern states, abounds here, and is protected by law, from the gunner; being of great use in clearing the island of carrion, and all other sorts of unhealthy garbage. A sweet songster is heard in the country, called here the nightingale, which, at times, it much resembles in its note. It is in fact a variety of the American mocking bird, and is nearly of the same size and appearance.

We were disappointed, on visiting the sugar works of Papine, to find them stopped; and we saw young men, doing nothing, in some of the comfortable cottages which have been built on this property. The reason assigned was, that there was "a matter to settle." The said matter turned out to be the trial of a "myalist," or "black doctor," one of those persons who hold communion, as is imagined, with departed spirits, and practice medicine, under their direction, for the cure of the living—the diseases themselves, being ascribed to Obeah, or evil witchcraft. These superstitions, although not nearly so prevalent as formerly, still prevail in some places, and deprived as the negroes now are of regular medical attendance, some of them have recourse to these magical quack doctors, to the great danger of their lives. The whole day was now given up by the people to this strange concern; but under a promise of their working for their master two of their usual spare days, in lieu of it. The myalist, a young fellow of eighteen or twenty, dressed in the height of the fashion and jet black, was brought up before our friend Manning to be examined—several men, and a crowd of women, being in attendance. He openly confessed his necromancy, and as a proof of its success, shewed us two miserable women, one sick of fever, the other mutilated with leprosy, whom he pretended to have cured. The evidence was regarded by the people as resistless, and our plain declarations of disbelief in the myalist, were very unwelcome to them. They said it was "no good." We were sorry to observe the obstinacy of their delusion, but such things will be gradually corrected by Christian instruction.

Under slavery, two hundred slaves were supported on Papine estate; now it is worked by forty free laborers. The saving of expense occasioned by this change cannot fail to be considerable. The young people are taught to read. The men and women are generally married, and faithful in the maintenance of the marriage tie. Bibles are sold to the negroes here, as in other parts of the island, by the agents of the Bible Society, at the cost price. Many of the people make a sacrifice—far beyond the power of the peasantry of Great Britain—in order to obtain quarto Bibles with gilt edges!

From Papine, we went forward to the Hope sugar estate, belonging to the Duke of Buckingham. Under the apprenticeship, it had fallen into almost entire decay, from mismanagement, and was a very losing concern ; but it is now leased, together with a coffee estate of greater value, to Joseph Gordon, a respectable resident planter, for £2,000 per annum—I believe sterling.* This gentleman is bringing the property round, by free labor, and will doubtless make it answer his purpose. He has about one hundred and fifty laborers upon it, well at work, under an able overseer. We had much pleasure in visiting them in the fields. The women were cutting canes, at one shilling sterling per day ; the men were holing, at job, or task work, and were earning at least twice the amount. Many of them indeed finish their two shillings worth by noon ; and can double it, if they please, before sundown. On the other hand, they pay their landlord a fair rent, for their cottages and provision grounds—generally half a dollar per week.

The fairness and propriety of this arrangement cannot be questioned ; and all that is required to render it complete, is to give to the tenant, by deed or otherwise, an independent lien, for a reasonable period, upon his little tenancy. He will then have the opportunity of taking his own stock in trade, namely his labor, to the best market ; free from all compulsion, except that of voluntary contract, to work on any particular estate, or for any particular rate of wages. Wherever the peasantry of Jamaica have been thus trusted and honorably treated, they have seldom failed, to work on the properties of their old masters, which are the most familiar to them, and the nearest to their homes—provided always that fair wages be given, and these paid weekly in cash. But it has been the unhappy lot of this colony, to be much perplexed with this subject of rent, which was prematurely forced on the attention of the people, immediately after the date of full freedom. Had it been permitted to find its own way, by degrees, on the common principles which regulate the affairs of men, there can be no doubt that the laborers of Jamaica would have been just as little disturbed and unsettled, as those in Antigua and Dominica.

As it is, the question of tenancy has been mixed up with that of labor, on a great proportion of the estates on this island. In case of any misunderstanding between the overseer and the laborers, on the subject of the work, either as to its duration, or price, threats of ejection have followed. These threats in many cases have been put in forcible execution. Cottages have been unroofed and even demolished. Cocoa-nut and bread fruit trees have been cut down; provision grounds have been despoiled by the hand of violence, or trodden under foot of oxen; and thus the laborers have been driven to seek for themselves a new home, either by moving away to other properties, or by purchasing little freeholds on the neighboring mountains. We often heard of these instances of violence, and saw something of them; yet I would charitably believe that they have been comparatively rare. Not so, the plan of doubling or trebling the rent, or even multiplying it fourfold, upon the arbitrary decision of the employer, or of charging it per capita against husband, wife, and each of the children, as a penal exaction, to compel labor—the screw for this purpose being completed, in many cases, by distraint of goods and imprisonment of person. Sorrowful to say, this plan has been practised through the length and breadth of the island. Every one must perceive that it classes under slavery, of which the very essence is, compulsory labor. The discontent, heart burning, and desertion of estates, to which it has given rise, are the natural consequences of the infraction of pure justice; and form the principal explanation of the discouraging accounts which have, from time to time, been given of Jamaica, since the date of freedom.

On the other hand, the estates which have been managed on those just and equal principles, which allow full scope to the freedom of the laborer, have in general been blessed with tranquility and prosperity. The favorable and unfavorable accounts from Jamaica, (allowing for a little exaggeration on either side,) are both essentially true; and, with little exception, they are the respective results of two opposite methods of management. But the evil is correcting itself; a better understanding is gradually taking place; and masters and laborers are increasingly in the way of being bound together—not by unfair methods of compulsion, but by the surer, safer, bond of a common interest.

To continue our narrative—after visiting the Hope estate, we rode to an independent village consisting of the settlements of seventy families, who have purchased good plots of land, and have built, or are building, for themselves, pretty comfortable cottages. We were glad to find that the men of this settlement are still working for wages on the neighboring estates. Our friend Manning was with us, and the people at the village seemed very anxious to obtain, through his assistance, some permanent arrangement for a weekly religious service. The village appeared to us to be a scene of thrift and contentment.

“How many dollars should I find in thy purse at home?” said one of our company to a young married negro, who was guiding us along one of the mountain passes. “Should I find five!” “Yes, sir,” replied he, “and no great matter neither.” How very few of our laborers in England, would be found with twenty shillings, in their purse, of spare money—was our reflection on the occasion. “How much dost thou pay at one time for liquor?” “A pound, sir,” said he—that is twelve shillings sterling—which lasts this laborer for wine, porter, &c., only six weeks. They are by no means given to intemperance, but some of them keep these articles in their cottages, for their own use in times of hard labor, and for the entertainment of their friends—a luxury which we hope will be soon exchanged for domestic comforts of a more desirable character. Their provision grounds are often extremely productive, sometimes yielding a clear income of £20 or £25 sterling. They are a decent, intelligent race, alive to their own interest, and increasingly cognizant of all that concerns it.

On our return, to Kingston, we dined with a few of the planters and merchants, at the house of our friend, George Atkinson, himself a planter. They gave us individually, a favorable account of the working of the negroes on their properties. These men of business take a hopeful view of the improved condition of affairs within the last few months, and appear to look forward, on substantial grounds, to the future prosperity of the colony.

But it is time to conclude this letter.

LETTER VIII.

MY DEAR FRIEND,

With all due apologies for the familiar mode in which I am telling our story, I shall proceed to make further extracts from the simple diaries of our stay in Jamaica. In this way I hope to place thee in possession of the facts of the case, and to develop the principles out of which they spring.

Third-month, (March) 3rd.—Three of our company drove eastward from Kingston, seven miles, to a tavern by the road side, where we were provided with an excellent breakfast. Afterwards we mounted horses for an excursion up the Port-Royal mountains. A climb of four miles, in the midst of luxuriant vegetation and noble scenery, brought us to Halberstadt, a coffee plantation belonging to John Casper Weiss, of which we had heard a dismal report, at Kingston, from an individual who was connected with the owner of the property. We were therefore the more pleased, on entering the plantation, which has somewhat the appearance of an English pleasure-ground, to see it well clad with vigorous coffee-trees, and a large company of good-looking negroes, diligently engaged in pruning them. There was certainly no lack of production here, and none of effectual labor. We held a friendly parley with the laborers, whom we encouraged to continued industry, and then went forward to the great house, (as they call the planter's residence on each estate) in this instance, a neat dwelling embosomed in mountains, and commanding an extensive view of the sea. A more lovely spot I have seldom seen. There, on delivering our letter of introduction, we were kindly received.

and entertained by the proprietor, to whom we were entire strangers.

One hundred and seventy slaves, or apprentices, used to be supported on this estate. Now, our friend employs fifty-four free laborers, who work for him four days in the week, taking one day for their provision grounds, and another for market. This is all the labor that he requires; and willingly did he acknowledge the superior advantage which attends the present system. The saving of expense is obvious.

I understood our friend to allow that the average cost of supporting a slave was £5 sterling per annum.

170 slaves at £5 per annum, . . . . .	£850
He pays 54 laborers 4s. 6d. per week, one day's labor being set off against rent, for 50 weeks, 2 weeks being allowed for holydays, . . . . .	607 10
	<hr/>
Saving under freedom, . . . . .	£242 10

Here I would just remark that the setting off of a day's labor, against rent, cannot be regarded as a desirable plan; for, in the first place, it involves the wife in the payment of rent as well as the husband—both being required to give their day's labor; and, secondly, it is quite unreasonable to expect that work, already (as it were) paid for, should be executed as well as that for which payment is expected. It was no matter of surprise to us, to hear that the work performed by the laborers of Halberstadt, on the day assigned to rent, was by no means equal to the usual average.

J. C. Weiss shewed us his works, and kindly explained to us the whole process of coffee cultivation. First comes the planting of the sucker—a slip with a root to it—five years being allowed for its growth, in a space from five to eight feet square, according to the nature of the soil. The plant looks like a handsome laurel, powdered in the blossoming season, with white flowers; the berries red, sweet, and pulpy, each containing two coffee seeds or stones. The average annual produce of a coffee plant on these mountains, is one pound of coffee—the height of the plant, varying from three to ten feet. After about fifty years it ceases to bear; and the land becomes ruiuate; that is, incapable of producing any more coffee. But the truth of this prevailing notion may be questioned. The principal field operations, after the plant begins to bear, are pruning and picking—no severe work for the laborer. Then comes the “pulping”—in a mill formed for the purpose—by which the stones are deprived of the surrounding pulp and outer skin. In a second mill, they are peeled of their inner skin, and separated from it by winnowing, as wheat from chaff. The coffee is then spread in the sun, on large, open, clay floors, called Barbecues. After being well dried, it is subjected to a process, called house-picking, which is nothing more than the separation by hand, of the broken and inferior seeds, from those of a better quality. Finally comes the packing of the coffee in bags and barrels, which are conveyed, on mules, down the mountain paths, to the place of shipment. We saw a number of women diligently at work in the house, picking, and men at the mills. Thus the whole scene was one of order and industry. The proprietor informed us, that although a temporary unsettlement, since the change of system, had occasioned a diminution of produce, there was now a decided reaction; and that if his people continued to work, as they were then doing, an increased crop next year, might reasonably be expected. After an early dinner, our kind host conducted us, on horseback, to an estate on a higher mountain eminence, called Bloxburgh. As we rode along, and when we had attained the height, the views of the hills, plains, and distant sea, with the palisades, town of Port Royal and Kingston harbor, on one side—and of deep ravines and wooded dells backed by the Blue Mountains, on the other—were of unusual sublimity and beauty. We could not be surprised, that Columbus, in his day, was so much delighted with the scenery of Jamaica.

At Bloxburgh we found an agreeable young man from Scotland, who was then sole manager of a very extensive coffee estate, belonging to Park & Hall of Liverpool. He told us that he had ninety laborers at work, who were doing as well as those on the neighboring properties; and that he was looking forward to an increased produce for the future. It appeared however, that he had been engaged in some conflicts with them, on the subject of rent and wages, which did not evince an enlightened management.

Here it may be well to notice the fact, that the great majority of estates in Jamaica, belong to absentee proprietors, who reside in England. In Jamaica, they are placed under the care of some attorney, or representative of the owner; one attorney often undertaking the care of numerous estates. Under the attorney, is the overseer, on each particular property, on whom the management almost exclusively devolves. This state of things is extremely unfavorable to the welfare of Jamaica. If the proprietors cannot give their personal attention to their estates, it would certainly be a better plan to lease them to eligible tenants on the spot—a practice which has, of late years, been adopted in many instances. It is only surprising that estates never visited by the proprietor, and seldom by the attorney, but left to the care of inexperienced young men, often of immoral character, should prosper at all. Nor would they prosper, even as they now do, but for two causes; first, the exuberant bounty of nature, and secondly, the orderly, inoffensive, conduct, and patient industry, of the negro race.

Many of the coffee-estates in this neighborhood are on very high ground, one or more at least four thousand feet above the level of the sea. Our intelligent conductor pointed out several of them to us, and, with little exception, gave a good account of their condition under freedom. At Halberstadt we were lodged as well as boarded; and, the next morning, after reading the Scriptures with the black people, we took our leave; and pursued our course, by a mountain path, many miles in length, to Lucky Valley, a dell of great beauty, where there are both coffee and sugar estates. The path was, in parts, one of extreme narrowness, with a bank on one side, and a precipice on the other, but our horses were sure footed, and we rode along in safety.

For the first time, I observed the great aloe in bloom—its vast stem, profusely covered with bunches of yellow blossoms, and the little green “grass birds,” somewhat larger than the humming birds, busily engaged in ravishing its sweets. Such a spectacle in England or America, would attract a crowd of visitors. At Lucky Valley, we met with the usual hospitality of a Jamaica planter. Our friend, Hector M. Wood, until that hour a perfect stranger to us, kindly took us in, gave us a good dinner, led us over his sugar-works, and showed us his people industriously at work. He assured us that although his present crop was not large, he was expecting a decided increase for the future—a statement which applies, not only to the estates visited during this excursion, but to the generality of properties in the neighborhood. Our friend had long acted as overseer or manager for others, and was one of those persons who had wisely availed himself of the times of fear and depression, shortly before freedom, in order to purchase landed property for himself. I have very little doubt, that he will make his fortune. His wife is a colored person, of agreeable manners, and much respectability.

The rapid diffusion of marriage among the negroes, and the increase of it even among the white inhabitants in Jamaica, is one of the happiest results of freedom. We were assured on good authority that four times as many marriages took place, last year, in Jamaica, as in an equal population, on an average, in England—a fact which proves not only that numerous new connections are formed, but also that multitudes who were formerly living as man and wife, without the right sanction, are now convinced of the sinfulness of the practice, and are availing themselves, with eagerness, of the marriage covenant. It appears that upwards of 1600 negro couples, were married in the Baptist churches alone, during the year 1839.

On our way to the tavern, where we had left our carriage, the day before, we passed through a narrow and picturesque defile of lofty limestone rocks,—the “Falls” river, rushing along between them. At one place it forms a water-fall which reminded me of Wales and Scotland. We returned to Kingston, in the evening, much amused and instructed with our excursion. We had selected the Port Royal district, not because we expected any peculiar satisfaction from inspecting it, but rather because we had heard complaints of its condition.—After viewing things for ourselves, we returned home, encouraged and consoled.

Third-month (March) 5th. A meeting of the Jamaica Anti-slavery Society was appointed to be held, this evening, at Spanishtown. As we had both information and advice to communicate, we believed it to be our duty to attend, on the occasion; the society being wholly divested of party politics, and aiming simply at the extinction of slavery, all the world over. Spanishtown is the seat of Government—a place of ten thousand inhabitants. It is hot and dusty, like Kingston; but it is considered to be an improving place. Many of the houses both in the town and vicinity, have been rebuilt or repaired, since the date of freedom. The road leading to it, from Kingston, is flat and uninteresting; but one object on its side, cannot fail to attract the attention of the traveller. It is a splendid specimen of the silk-cotton tree, equal in size with that in St. Thomas, but excelling it in beauty. It was profusely covered, when we saw it, with bright green foliage; and spread its shade to an astonishing extent.

In the evening, nearly two thousand people, white, brown, and black, assembled in the Baptist chapel, and Judge Bernard, a magistrate and planter of the highest respectability, took the chair. One principal object of the meeting was the appointment of deputies to the World's Convention, for the abolition of slavery, about to be held in London. It was addressed in a lively and pertinent manner by many of the missionaries, of various denominations, from different parts of the island. Towards the close of it, it fell to my lot to communicate some important information respecting the working of freedom in the islands to the windward, and to impress upon all parties present, the duty of equal justice on the one hand, and of charity and moderation, on the other. I endeavored to persuade the land-owners of the utter impropriety and impolicy of mixing up the two questions of rent and wages—a practice which has so greatly interfered, in Jamaica, with the unfettered operation of freedom; and I explained to our black brethren, who flocked from the country to the meeting, how greatly they would promote the cause of emancipation, in other parts of the world, by setting an example of patient industry as cultivators of the soil, and by increasing the staple exports of the Island. I ventured to remark that the eyes of North America in particular, were fixed upon Jamaica, watching the pecuniary, as well as moral, result of the great experiment. I am sure thou wilt acknowledge that this was sober and practical doctrine; and certainly, on their part, it was received with a degree of intelligence and hearty good will, which I have never seen exceeded on any similar occasion. The interest which these people feel in the freedom of their race, is extreme; and many of them are liberal subscribers to the Society.

The Legislature was not then sitting, and the Governor, Sir Charles Metcalfe, was absent on a visit to some other parts of the island. We had no opportunity, therefore, during this visit to Spanishtown, of communicating with many of the official men, but were well pleased to be introduced to Richard Hill, the Secretary of the Department of Stipendiary Magistrates. He is colored; and in times of conflict and prejudice, the more violent advocates of slavery on the island, used to call him the “black viper;” but his unquestionable integrity, talents, and knowledge of public business, have secured him the respect and confidence of the public. He was offered the government of St. Lucie, but declined the appointment, from an apprehension that his color would subject him to indignity. His opinion of the working of freedom in Jamaica, grounded on an extensive and accurate acquaintance with the subject, is highly favorable. His only fear is, lest unequal laws or unjust practices, should impede its native force, and mar its operation. In these views we fully agree with him. Let freedom alone, and all will be well.

This view of the subject was pleasantly confirmed by some valuable missionaries of the Scotch Kirk, who reside in the Parish (or county) of St. Mary. In that district, rent and wages have been arranged quite independently of each other, and labor has been suffered to find its market, without obstruction. The consequence is, that there have been no differences, and the people are working well. The quantity of work obtained from a freeman there, is far beyond the old task of the slave. In the laborious occupation of holing, the emancipated negroes perform double the work of the slave, in a day. In road making the day's task under slavery, was to break four barrels of stone. Now, by task-work, a weak hand will fill eight barrels, a strong one, from ten to twelve barrels.

Afterwards we called on Charles Nicholas Palmer, formerly M. P. for the County of Surrey, who was with us at the anti-slavery meeting, and fully united in the views which were there unfolded. He is the owner of five estates in Jamaica, which are regulated on fair principles,—so powerful, in themselves, as the source of success. He gave us an excellent account of the conduct and industry of his laborers, assured us that he was greatly indebted to the influence of their Christian pastors; and added the pleasing information that these properties were now emancipating themselves from the burden of debt, and consequent mercantile restrictions, by which they had been oppressed under slavery.

Third-month (March) 7.—This day was spent in a tête à-tête ride on horseback, with J. M. Phillippo, the respected minister of the Baptist congregation at Spanishtown; and certainly, it was one of uncommon interest. We set off very early in the morning, and pursued a gradually ascending course for thirteen miles, until we arrived at Sligoville, where the Governor has a delightful country-seat, and my friend, the Baptist, a missionary station and school. The country through which we passed is rich in fertility and beauty, and we had the pleasure of observing well cultivated provision grounds and gardens, on the road-side, which were entirely the growth of freedom. As we rode along, we met a great number of country people, with large, well-balanced baskets, on their heads, of fruits and vegetables, which they were carrying to the Spanishtown market. They uniformly met us with a smile of pleasure, and friendly salutations. The minister was well known to them, and many of them had been present at the anti-slavery meeting, with which they were much delighted. Their manners are, in an extraordinary degree, respectful and polite.

At the Baptist station at Sligoville, we spent several hours. It is located on a lofty hill, and is surrounded by fifty acres of fertile mountain land. This property is divided into one hundred and fifty freehold lots, fifty of which had been already sold to the emancipated laborers, and had proved a timely refuge for many laborers who had been driven, by hard usage, from their former homes. Some of them had built good cottages; others, temporary huts; and others again were preparing the ground for building. Their gardens were cleared, or in process of clearing, and in many cases, already brought into fine cultivation. Not a hoe, I believe, had ever been driven into that land before. Now, a village had risen up, with every promise of comfort and prosperity, and the land was likely to produce a vast abundance of nutritious food. The people settled there were all married pairs, mostly with families, and the men employed the bulk of their time, in working for wages on the neighboring estates. The chapel and the school were immediately at hand, and the religious character of the people stood high. Never did I witness a scene of greater industry, or one more marked by contentment for the present, and hope for the future. How instructive to remember that two years ago, this peaceful village had no existence!

After partaking of needful refreshment, in the neat but commodious country house, with which J. M. Phillippo was here provided, we returned towards Spanishtown, by a yet wilder path, over stones, and through brakes and briars, until we came to Clarksontown, another village of the same description, but in rather a more forward state of cultivation. Here we were refreshed, by the hospitable people, with drafts of lemonade. We found them industriously engaged in cultivating their own freeholds. Many of them had long been laborers on a neighboring estate, from which they had at last been forced away, by ill treatment. Their cocoa-nuts had been felled—their huts demolished. What could they do but seek a new home? They crowded round us, and expressed the most entire willingness again to work on the property, if they were but treated with fairness and kindness. They were well known to my friend Phillippo, being many of them members of his church, and a better conditioned, or better mannered, peasantry, could not easily be found.

On our return home, we visited two neighboring estates, of about equal size (I believe) and equal fertility; both, among the finest properties, for natural and local advantages, which I any where saw in Jamaica. One was in difficulty—the other all prosperity. The first was the estate already alluded to, which had been deprived of so many hands, by vain attempts to compel the labor of freemen. There, if I am not mistaken, I saw, as we passed by, the clear marks of that violence, by which the people had been expelled. The second, called “Dawkin’s Caymanas,” was under the enlightened attorneyship of Judge Bernard, who with his lady, and the respectable overseer, met us on the spot. On this property, the laborers were independent tenants. Their rent was settled, according to the money value of the tenements which they occupied, and they were allowed to take their labor to the best market they could find. As a matter of course, they took it to the home market; and excellently were they working, on the property of their old master. The attorney, the overseer, and the laborers, all seemed equally satisfied—equally at their ease.

Here then was one property which would occasion a bad report of Jamaica—another which would as surely give rise to a good report. As it regards the properties themselves, both reports are true—and they are the respective results of two opposite modes of management.

At Dawkin's Caymanas, we had the pleasure of witnessing an interesting spectacle; for the laborers on the property, with their wives, sons and daughters, were on that day, met at a picnic dinner. The table, of vast length, was spread under a wattled building erected for the purpose, and at the convenient hour of six in the evening, (after the day's work was finished,) was loaded with all sorts of good fare—soup, fish, fowls, pigs, and joints of meat in abundance. About one hundred and fifty men and women, of the African race, attired with the greatest neatness, were assembled, in much harmony and order, to partake of the feast; but no drink was provided, stronger than water. It was a sober, substantial, repast—the festival of peace and freedom. This dinner was to have taken place on New Year's day; but it so happened, that a Baptist Meeting House in another part of the island, had been destroyed by fire; and at the suggestion of their minister, these honest people agreed to waive their dinner, and to subscribe their money, instead, to the rebuilding of the Meeting House. For this purpose, they raised a noble sum (I believe considerably upwards of £100 sterling;) and now, in the third month of the year, finding that matters were working well with them, they thought it well to indulge themselves with their social dinner. By an unanimous vote, they commissioned me to present a message of their affectionate regards, to Thomas Clarkson, and Thomas Fowell Buxton, the two men, to whom of all others, perhaps, they were the most indebted for their present enjoyment.

In the course of this delightful ride, I observed several beautiful birds, entirely new to me—the woodpecker of Jamaica, finely varied with red, black and green; the bright green toady, of the size of a small wren, with scarlet throat; a larger bird like a robin, green and purple; and the smallest of the “fowls of the air"—if fowl it may be called—the bee humming-bird, just about the size of a bumble bee, and much resembling it, in manner and appearance. Our friend Richard Hill is an ornithologist and artist, and has made an admirable set of drawings of the birds of this island, which I trust, in due season, will be presented to the public.

The following day was the First of the week, and brought with it, at Spanishtown, a repetition of the scenes which had so much interested us, the preceding week, at Kingston—a vast meeting of negro laborers, at the Baptist Meeting House in the morning, and at the Methodist Chapel in the evening, a promiscuous assembly of all classes and colors—both meetings held, of course, after the manner of the Society of Friends. The principles upheld to view on these occasions, were not of a sectarian nature; but were calculated, we trust, to cement all sound christians, in “the unity of the spirit, and in the bond of peace.” In reference to the meeting held in the morning, one of our company observes, “I watched the people as they sat before us, shoulder to shoulder—I witnessed the tears starting to their eyes, and saw their significant tokens of response—I heard “yes massa” faintly and involuntarily escaping the lips of some of them. In short, here was before me a people, only a few years ago, under the grinding, iron hand of bondage, ignorant, degraded, and desponding—now free, feeling, and intelligent.”

LETTER IX.

JAMAICA.

Flushing, L. I., 6th Month (June) 12th, 1840.

MY DEAR FRIEND.

I will now continue my diary.

Third-month (March) 9th. At an early hour this morning, my friend Mahlon Day and myself, drove out ten miles on the high road to Old Harbor, to Bravo Penn, a handsome villa, the seat of Alexander Bravo. He is a member of the Council, Custos of the parish of Clarendon, a large land owner, and once the holder of a thousand slaves. Great as his stake was in the old system, he was even then the firm friend of freedom, in the efficacy of which he felt great confidence; and when all around him were talking of ruin, he set his apprentices to work to build the capital mansion, in which he now resides. He is a married man, the father of a large young family. At his house we were met by our friends, Palmer, late of Surrey, and Ramsay, Custos of St. Catharine's.

That confidence in the safety of freedom, which A. Bravo displayed by building his mansion during the apprenticeship, has been farther manifested, since emancipation, by his hiring two large properties belonging to the Marquess of Sligo. These he is now conducting, for his own benefit, in addition to several sugar and coffee estates of which he is the owner; and I find he is yet further extending his sugar cultivation, by forming a new plantation for the purpose, on a farm hitherto in grass. These proceedings involve a practical testimony of the highest value, in favor of the present system. They are, as I understand, connected with the fact, that the payment of wages to a comparatively small number of free laborers, produces a far less formidable debit in account, than the support of a thousand slaves, with all its collateral pecuniary burdens.

Our friend Bravo has had the good sense to separate the two points of rent and wages. He charges the people a fair rent on their cottages and provision grounds, according to the money-value of their occupation ; at the same time, he pays them good wages, and leaves them at perfect liberty to take their labor to a better market, if they can find one. The consequence is that they are, in general, happy and contented, and work on his estates, willingly and vigorously. The result of his own experience and of his extensive knowledge of the island, is just this—that the emancipated negroes, are working well, on the properties of their former holders, wherever they are fairly, kindly, and wisely, treated. These adverbs are severally intended to have their distinct force. All infractions of pure justice—all new fangled attempts to compel labor—all oppressive, inequitable modes of management—must in the first place be renounced. Harsh, unkind treatment, profane swearing, and all hard language, must, in the second place, be avoided. And lastly, there must be discretion and firmness. Where fairness and kindness are practised, there will still be little probability of success, if unwise sacrifices are made of the rights of the master—if, for instance, the laborers are allowed to take any quantity of wild land that they please, for their provision grounds, for little or no rent, and so render themselves independent of wages. Again, the occasional caprices to which they are prone, and which are apt to irritate the tempers of overseers, require to be met by a calm and steady resistance. On one of A. Bravo's estates, the people had shortly before, struck work for the renewal of an extravagant rate of wages, which had been allowed them, under peculiar circumstances, the year before. Our friend knew that the demand was unreasonable, and quietly yet firmly resisted it. The consequence was that in a very few days, they were all at work again, as heartily as before. He is further of the judgment, that like other laborers, all the world over, they require a careful superintendence. In the nature of things, their service will be more or less, eye-service, until they come to be fully impressed, with their moral and religious obligations, as cultivators of the soil.

After breakfast we drove to Kelly's, one of Lord Sligo's properties. Here all is prospering, under A. Bravo's care; and Lord Sligo has given directions for the building of one hundred comfortable cottages on the estate, which are to be leased to the laborers, with one-acre plots of ground; so as to render them independent tenants. By this wise and liberal arrangement, the Marquess will, I trust, succeed, first, in obtaining a good rental, and secondly, in securing a constant home supply of labor, amply sufficient for the cultivation of his estate. We saw the people, on this property, busily engaged in the laborious occupation of holing—a work for which ploughing is now pretty generally substituted, in Jamaica. “How are you all getting along?” said my companion, to a tall, bright-looking black man, busily engaged with his hoe. “Right well, massa, right well,” he replied. “I am from America,” said my friend, “where there are many slaves: what shall I say to them from you? shall I tell them that freedom is working well here?” “Yes, massa,” said he, “much well under freedom—thank God for it.” “Much well” they were indeed doing, for they were earning a dollar for every hundred cane holes—a great effort certainly, but one which many of them accomplished by four o'clock in the afternoon. “How is this?” asked the same friend, as he felt the lumps or welts on the shoulder of another man. “O, massa,” cried the negro, “I was flogged when a slave—no more whip now—all free.” We left “Kelly's” for an hour or two, on a visit to Henry Taylor, the Baptist missionary at Old Harbor, who has under his care a large congregation and excellent school. We observed two large merchantmen in the harbor, and a third approaching it at a distance—no evidence that this part of the country has failed to be productive! On our return to Kelly's, the laborers were assembled, at our request, under the shade of an old silk-cotton tree, and listened with eager interest, to the practical advices which we wished to communicate. It was our desire to encourage them to a life of honesty, industry, and piety. And truly, they are willing to be taught.

One estate only, in that district, was said to be under any difficulty, for want of sufficient labor—Bushy Park, a property of great extent and fertility, on which many hundred black people are located. They are said to belong to an African tribe which has been found, since they were transferred to the colonies, less easy to control than the generality of their brethren. We visited this estate in the afternoon, and a large number of them were convened, at our request, in front of the Great House—as fine a looking race as we any where saw. They were addressed, with much freedom and plainness, on the duties which devolved upon them as free hired laborers,—and most of them received the exhortation with cordiality. We had every reason to believe, that the difficulties on this property, had arisen from the want of kind and judicious management, on the part of some former overseers. The present attorney is our friend George Atkinson, of Kingston, who has since informed us, that the obstructions have been removed, and to use his own expression—“that they are merrily at work.” The evening was now advanced, and under the guidance of our kind friend, Custos Ramsay, we returned to Spanishtown.

I can hardly refrain from inserting an anecdote which he told us, illustrative of the mind and manners of this people. A tame plover which he kept in his garden, before the date of freedom, frightened at the report of a gun, was seen burying her long beak, and hiding her head, in the sand. A negro lad was passing by at the time, and after a few moments' melancholy musing, was overheard saying, “Every something know him own trouble!”

Third-month (March) 10th.—Having arranged a journey to the northern coast, we left Kingston in two open carriages, being five Friends in company, much united in heart and judgment. Our friend Phillippo and his wife, kindly undertook to be our guides, during our first day's journey. This devoted missionary appeared to us to have a far more extensive influence over the laboring population, than any other individual in Spanish-town ; and we can, from our own observation, venture to assert, that he exerts it in a beneficial manner—greatly to the advantage of the planter, as well as the laborer. Through many difficulties, he has worked his way to a condition of comparative ease, and of great usefulness. He has eight missionary stations and eight schools, under his care, and like his brethren in other parts of the island, is greatly beloved and respected by the people. By the last accounts, the Baptists of Jamaica have twenty-six thousand members in church communion, and the Methodists, twenty-two thousand ; besides the multitude, not in membership, who attend their respective places of worship. Schools are connected, as a matter of course, with most of their numerous congregations. We saw five hundred black children, at once, assembled in J. M. Phillippo's chapel. Who can calculate the moral advantages derived to the negro population from these extensive efforts in the cause of religion—efforts which have been almost doubled, in efficacy, since the abolition of slavery ? That these advantages are at once great and solid, and appeared to us to be counteracted by no unfair bias, we are bound to bear our unequivocal testimony. We can easily suppose that individual missionaries, during that long continuance of conflict and difficulty to which they have been exposed, have not always confined themselves within the bounds of prudence and moderation. We are ourselves aware of some such instances. But these circumstances are as nothing, when compared to the general influence of these pious men, in promoting both the temporal and spiritual welfare of all classes of the community. The Baptist missionaries in Jamaica, for many years past, have been the unflinching, untiring, friends of the negro. No threats have daunted them, no insults or persecutions have driven them from the field. They are now reaping their reward, in the devoted attachment of the people, and the increasingly prevalent acknowledgement of their integrity and usefulness.

We left Spanishtown under a hot sun, the dust flying ; and after travelling eighteen miles to the northward, we arrived at Jericho, a Baptist settlement, in the highlands, in the midst of clouds, mist, and violent rain. This sort of weather is common among the mountains in Jamaica, while the level plains on the coast are almost burning with heat. Our course lay through the fertile and well-wooded parish of St. Thomas in the Vale, partly along the banks of the Bog river, which present a variety of picturesque scenery. The perpendicular rocks of white limestone, close beside the stream, are, in one spot very lofty ; and the trees of various kinds are rendered singular by the immense creepers, which hug their trunks. Some of these creepers bear a large white trumpet blossom, and are very handsome. Near the road-side stands Rodney workhouse, a place of confinement and punishment, notorious in former days, as a scene of cruelty. Under freedom, it has lost at once its inmates, and its terrors. We were kindly received by the missionary Merrick and his sister, and accommodated free of all expense, with bed and board—a mountain kid was cooked for our dinner. A meeting for worship had been appointed for the evening, which, notwithstanding the stormy weather, was attended by many hundreds of the laboring people ; and was an occasion of much feeling and interest.

Another meeting was appointed for the following evening, at St. Anne's Bay, on the northern coast, at a distance of thirty-five miles, and as our road lay over Mount Diavolo, it was necessary to start very early in the morning. But our horses, which had been turned out to grass, were lost in the fog, and we were foiled in our attempt to commence our journey, before the usual breakfast hour. The ascent of Mount Diavolo is laborious, continuing for many miles ; and in order to relieve our horses, it was necessary to walk, in the heat, most of the way. But for this exertion we were amply repaid. The scenery was delightful—the hills are covered with forest, and the distant plains, beautifully cultivated, were seen in a succession of views, between their projections. On the steep slopes immediately below the road, are a number of plots of ground, lately purchased by the negroes, who were busily engaged in cultivating them, and in building their cottages. It is a land of rich pastures; the fine cattle seemed half buried in the guinea grass; the meadows on the brow of the mountain, in which they were feeding, were richly adorned with fern-like tufts of bamboo. These grow to the height of forty or fifty feet, and wave about in the wind, like gigantic ostrich feathers. The road on the northern side of the mountain, winds down, by a gradual descent, into the luxuriant valley of Moneague, covered with guinea grass, and other herbage—very similar, in appearance, to some of the picturesque, fertile, valleys of Wales.

But, amidst these beautiful scenes, we were undergoing the uneasiness of being belated, with an appointed meeting ahead, which we could not reach. Eighteen miles further had we to travel from Moneague, before we could arrive at the place of our destination; the rain was falling in torrents, and the road, in parts, was steep and difficult. At length we reached St. Anne's bay, and on our arrival at the chapel, found the people in the act of dispersing. They rallied with surprising rapidity; and, tired as we were, of travelling, and they of waiting, we all derived refreshment, I trust, from a short but solemn meeting for worship, during which the negroes, who had come from the country in large numbers, evinced their usual seriousness and good behavior. We afterwards found an agreeable resting-place, under the hospitable roof of the Baptist missionary, Thomas F. Abbott. His house is on the brow of a high hill, and commands an animating view of the thriving little town, the bay, the shipping, and the luxuriant cane-fields spreading over the plain, on either side. This small place is increasing and prospering under freedom; new houses are in course of erection, and property, near the town, is more than doubled in value. The owner of a piece of land which, five years ago, might have been purchased for £100, now refuses to take £500 for it. The information which we here received, was highly satisfactory. Rent and wages are arranged, irrespectively of each other, on several large properties near the town. These are all doing well; but on others where rent is made the instrument for compelling labor, confusion and disputes have followed. One planter of St. Anne's parish, has cleared £3,000 sterling, by the last crop, and freely acknowledges that he cultivates his land more easily and cheaply than he did under slavery. Another planter, who had been bitterly complaining of approaching ruin, had refused a large sum of money for his estate, and had finally leased it for £600 sterling, per annum. During the last three years and a half, Thomas F. Abbott's congregation—composed almost exclusively of black laborers—have raised £2,600 sterling, for the support of the mission and other collateral purposes. William and Mary Waters, lately slaves—he a black-smith—she a pedlar—have saved £100 sterling, since 8th Month, (August,) 1838, and are subscribing £10 per annum, to the cause of missions!

3rd Month (March) 12th, 1840. After calling on the Wesleyan Missionaries, and endeavoring (I hope with success) to reconcile a difference which, from a peculiar circumstance, had arisen between them and the Baptists, we set off on our journey to Brownstown—an easy road, as we were told—only eighteen miles from St. Anne's Bay. The first half of the route lay by the sea side, through a rich plain, which we found under prosperous sugar cultivation. Neither the well-clad and well-cleared fields of cane, nor the neat buildings on the successive estates, indicated any thing of that ruin which some persons had so busily predicted for Jamaica—but just the contrary. On the sides of the road, were neat hedges over-run with several kinds of convolvulus in full bloom. After travelling several miles, we turned away from the sea, (as we supposed, according to direction) and ascended a long steep hill to our left, covered with pimento trees, forming what is called a pimento walk. The beauty of these pimento trees is great, something like the orange tree, but much loftier; the bark bare, and looking as if it had been peeled of its outer coat, the leaf dark, glossy, and of an aromatic smell. The produce is the berry called all-spice, which finds at present, a very low market, and the cultivation of it pays badly. As we quietly proceeded on foot up the steep ascent, and through these fragrant bowers, the scenery became very alluring—Cardiff Hall, an old planting settlement, appearing on a green penn (or park) below, a large grove of coconuts hard by, and the sea, of bright blue, in the distance. We were told that we should find Brownstown, where a meeting was appointed for the evening, at the top of this mountain; but to our dismay, when we reached the summit, we found ourselves at an estate called Antrim, on the wrong road, and eight miles from the place of our destination; the mountain road between the two places, was considered to be impassable for carriages. The black people of the village crowded round us, proffered their aid, and refreshed us with draughts of cocoa-nut milk. Many of them were just setting off, though from so great a distance, for the meeting; for indeed they are a zealous, church-going people. John Candler and myself, escorted by two of them, went forward on ponies which they kindly lent us; and the rest of the company moved slowly on behind, with the carriages, assisted by a band of these willing-hearted people. Nothing could exceed their kindness and attention; and by pulling back the wheels in descending, and pushing them forward in ascending, some of those steep heights, they enabled our drivers at length, to accomplish the journey, which otherwise they could not possibly have done. “Don’t fret, massa,” said one of those zealous helpers, to a friend in the company—“all will come right at last.” “Will massa have a little wine?” said a black woman, in a cottage by the road-side, to the same friend, when he called to ask for a draught of water. The wine, sure enough, was at hand, and was found to be timely, in a moment of great fatigue. Several empty bottles, in one corner of the room, showed that this cottager was accustomed, so to evince her hospitality. Our friend offered payment, which was politely refused—"thanks," said the woman, "are better than money."

We were in the midst of a Christian people; and as my companion and I rode on through a country of wild and enchanting beauty, we overtook flocks of the peasantry, who had just finished their day's work, wending their way to our meeting. It was a touching sight, coupled as it was with the recollection of the cruelties which many of them had once suffered; now without exception, they seemed respectable and happy. Brownstown is a free settlement and country town, rapidly improved—and improving—since freedom, the land in it, already quadrupled in value. We were hospitably received by our worthy friends, John Clark the missionary, and his wife, and held an interesting and affecting meeting for worship, with about twelve hundred black people. After it was concluded, my companion delivered to them, a written message sent from the venerable Thomas Clarkson, now in extreme old age, to the peasantry of Jamaica; expressing his Christian love and sympathy, and advising the continuance of that patient and orderly conduct by which they have hitherto been so remarkably characterised. The message was received with respect, and called forth a warm response. The work of religion, going on in this district, is remarkable—a multitude have been added to the church, since the date of full freedom, and hundreds of others, are awakened to anxiety respecting their souls. This delightful village is nested among luxuriant hills. Every thing in it seemed to be thriving, with the single exception of a dark-looking little building, now forsaken and useless. This was the dungeon and public flogging place, during slavery and the apprenticeship. Our friends assured us, that these scenes of cruelty, generally took place once in the week; and vain were their attempts to escape from the horrid sound of the cries of the sufferers. Now under the banner of freedom, the desert of thorns and briars, may truly be said to be blossoming like the "rose of Sharon." We heard excellent accounts of the working of the people on the estates in this neighborhood, except only where they have been oppressed by the misapplication of the rent system.

On leaving the place, the next morning, we called on the Wesleyan minister, and met at his door a large wedding company, all of them, I believe, laboring people; but handsomely attired, and on horseback. It was a scene which could not be matched among the peasantry of Great Britain.

We then drove through the fertile sugar-plains of the parish of Trelawney, to Falmouth, a considerable town on the sea coast, and the seat of the useful labors of William Knibb, the Baptist minister, so well known as the staunch and effective friend of the negro population. He was now absent on a legation to the Anti-slavery Society, and the Baptists, in England, in company with one of his black brethren; and the attachment of the people to their minister, as well as their own prosperous condition, had been amply evinced by their raising a voluntary subscription of £1,000 currency (near three thousand dollars) to defray the expenses of the mission. On our way, we passed through another prosperous village called Stewartstown, which contains a large store, a well attended church, Methodist and Baptist chapels, schools of course, and a large number of freehold settlements, occupied by the negroes. At Barnstaple, a sugar estate on the road, where we stopped to refresh ourselves and our horses, the overseer informed us that he had one hundred people well at work, on wages from one shilling sterling to half a dollar per day—"no complaints, all comfortable."

In our friend William Knibb's absence, we were kindly received at his house, and met a warm welcome from "Brother Ward," his able representative. Afterwards we met seven or eight hundred of the people in the chapel, who seemed to lend a willing ear, to the plain advice which we ventured to offer them on several practical points,—the cultivation of the soil, the education of their children, the daily use of the Holy Scriptures, the duties of mothers, &c. The next morning we visited the jail and house of correction for the parish of Trelawney, and found only two prisoners in the former, and one in the latter—a white sailor. During slavery and the apprenticeship, they sometimes had from eighty to one hundred miserable inmates, in this house of correction. We also made agreeable calls on the Scottish and Wesleyan ministers, and on the clergyman of the parish church, who has a day school under his care, of three hundred children. Thus under different administrations, the good work of Christian education, is making rapid progress. Much that we saw and heard during our journey, in the parishes of St. Anne's and Trelawney, was of an encouraging nature. The sugar cultivation was evidently going on substantially well; temporary difficulties had been surmounted, and so far as we could learn, nothing but a few lingering attempts, to compel labor, (or in other words to retain slavery under a new form) interrupted the prosperity of these fertile districts. A better understanding had begun to prevail among the parties; and these parishes were affording abundant evidence, that wherever liberty is left alone, thrift goes along with it, to the comfort and benefit of all classes of the people. We observed one large merchantman waiting for sugar, at St. Anne's Bay, three at Falmouth, and about twelve at Montego Bay.

A pleasant drive of twenty-two miles, by the sea coast, brought us on Seventh-day (Saturday) evening, to the last mentioned place. It is a town of about 12,000 inhabitants, situated at the foot of wooded hills, and at the inland extremity of a very beautiful bay—quite a good-looking place, and like other towns in Jamaica, rapidly improving. We met with the kindest reception from the wife of our friend, Thomas Burchell, the Baptist missionary. He was himself absent at a country station, but his people flocked about us, and seemed overjoyed at our arrival. Although the notice of our coming had been short, and no service had previously been expected, nearly 3,000 of them assembled at the chapel, the next morning, with scarcely any mixture of white persons, and displayed a seriousness and propriety of demeanor, which reflected much credit both on themselves, and on their absent pastor. In the afternoon, I was accompanied by Walter Finlayson and Levi Lewin, two of the magistrates, on visits to the house of correction, and jail, for the county of Cornwall—that is, for about one third of the island. The jail was nearly empty. In the house of correction, I found about fifty offenders, in a very insecure prison, without classification, and I fear greatly neglected, as to religious care or culture. Wretched lunatics were mingled with the other inmates of this sad abode. The prisoners, in each place, listened with attention to a short address, delivered to them on the occasion, and I trust they will claim the increased Christian care, of pious individuals living in their own neighborhood. After an overflowing assembly for worship, in the evening, at the Methodist meeting house, the day ended in peace.

LETTER X.

JAMAICA.

Providence, R. I., Sixth-month (June) 24th, 1840.

MY DEAR FRIEND,

After the interruption of nearly two weeks, occasioned by the attendance of one of our Yearly Meetings and other circumstances, I resume the thread of my story—requesting thy farther kind attention to the diary of our tour in Jamaica.

On the 16th of the Third-month (March) we left Montego Bay, early in the morning, and drove eight miles, to Mount Carey, an inland Baptist station, and the country residence of our friend, Thomas Burchell, who met us there, from a third of his stations, at breakfast. Our road lay first, along a fertile valley, and next, up the brow of a mountain, from which we obtained delightful prospects of the sea, with several low green islands, the town and harbor of Montego Bay, the shipping, and the distant hills—the whole scene bespeaking, at once, the bounty of nature, and the essential prosperity of the land. The parish of “St. James” was the principal seat of the “rebellion,” (as it was falsely called,) shortly before emancipation. The long continued acts of provocation and oppression, to which the negroes had been exposed, drove them, at last, into a state of irritation, not without instances, I presume, of crime and violence; but there can be no doubt that the flame was at once fanned, and exaggerated, by a violent party, on the other side, with a view to impede the march of approaching freedom. Nevertheless, freedom has come; and in this once agitated parish, virulence and confusion have given place to quietness, order, and gradually progressive improvement.

We continued for two days, at Mount Carey, enjoying both ease and abundance, under the peaceful roof of our hospitable friend. Thomas Burchell is a gentleman, and a Christian, a man of modesty, integrity, and talent, and his history affords a remarkable example of the truth of that divine declaration, "Him that honoreth me, I will honor." He was once insulted, persecuted, and imprisoned. Now, he is greatly at his ease, enjoying a delightful country residence, and exercising over many thousands of the peasantry, at his various stations, an influence incomparably greater than that of any other individual in the vicinity. During an intimate association with him and his family for two or three days, we could not perceive the smallest tendency, in his mind, to any political abuse of his well-earned ascendancy; and from our own observation, we are able to declare that while he is the firm friend of the laborer, he is anxious to promote, by every means in his power, the fair interest of the planter. The congregation of country people, at Mount Carey, is large, and the day school well attended and admirably conducted.

The appearance, dress, and deportment of the people, assembled at our large meetings at Montego Bay and Mount Carey, afforded us ocular demonstration that we were in the midst of a thriving peasantry; nor can there be the least question that this condition of thrift, on their part, is mainly the consequence of their working, for wages, on the estates of their old masters. The remaining exceptions, in this fertile district, to a comfortable understanding between the employer and the laborer, are to be traced, as we had every reason to believe, to a want of good management on the part of attorneys and overseers. But a gradual improvement, even in these instances, was taking place; and indeed the mismanagement to which we allude belonged in some cases, chiefly to the period of apprenticeship, which left behind it roots of bitterness, by no means easy to eradicate. This appears to have been the case with some noble properties, near Mount Carey, belonging to an English Baron—of course an absentee. We visited the principal of them, on which during the apprenticeship, much cruelty had been practised ; and even just before our visit, certain provision grounds, improperly occupied (as we were told) by some of the negroes, had been, far more improperly, despoiled, by the turning in of oxen upon them. We were pleased to find that Lord — had transmitted to his agents some admirable written directions—especially with regard to the equitable settlement of the questions of rent and wages—which, if fairly acted on, will, as we believe, ensure the future prosperity of his estates. About one hundred and fifty of his people attended our meeting for worship at Mount Carey, and after it was over, we entered into a friendly parley with them, with a view of impressing upon them their Christian duty, as hired cultivators of the soil. They appeared to us a well-conditioned company of peasants ; and they gave us a kind and respectful hearing—fully acknowledging the fair and benevolent disposition of the absent proprietor of the estates. We parted from them with the bright hope, that whatsoever remains of misunderstanding between them and their employers, will, ere long, be removed, and that a tract of land remarkable for natural beauty and fertility, will soon be equally distinguished by the profit which it yields to its owner, and by the peace and comfort of all who dwell on it.

Just such a scene of mutual satisfaction, is “ Childermas” estate, in the same neighborhood, under the care of — Matthews, a kind and intelligent overseer. Our friend employs one hundred and twenty laborers, who are working admirably ; he has obtained sixty-two hogsheads of sugar from the last crop, and is laying the foundation of a largely increased produce. He has built his people comfortable cottages, charges them low rents, and pays them good wages. There can be no question that the proprietor’s outlay will soon be abundantly repaid. It may, however, be remarked that, in this case, there was evidently the advantage of a ready capital. It is worthy of more than a passing notice, that the constant tendency of slavery was to diminish capital ; and now that it is exchanged for freedom, the want of labor, on many properties, is obviously to be traced merely to the want of money to pay for it. This evil will be rectified by the gradual influence of freedom; as has already been so remarkably the case in Antigua. A third estate, near Mount Carey, called "Anchovy," was given up, as a bad concern, at the first date of freedom, but is now resumed, and by virtue of free labor, has already nearly recovered itself.

Third-month (March) 18th.—Early in the morning we left Mount Carey, and in the company of our friend Burchell, drove, through a cultivated country, to Bethelton, another station, where the Baptists have a large congregation, four hundred and fifty members of their church, and a school for one hundred and fifty children. The neighboring village, consisting of little freehold settlements, occupied and well cultivated by the negroes, had proved to many of them a place of refuge from oppression, and now presented a scene of quiet prosperity. It was here that we first observed the cultivation of ginger. The plant has long grass-like leaves, and the root which forms the article of commerce, is prepared for sale, by the simple process of cleaning, and drying in the sun. It certainly affords the negro cultivator a short and easy method of realising money. We now took our leave of Thomas Burchell; and, provided with one of his obliging people, as a guide, pursued our journey over rough narrow roads, until we arrived at Kepp, a romantic penn or park, in the parish of "St. Elizabeth"—the estate of George Marcey, one of the most respectable resident proprietors of the island. He is a pious member of the Church of England, and although declining in years, devotes his time and talents to the gratuitous education of nearly a hundred negro children. Though we were total strangers—five in number, with six horses, and three drivers—he received us with cordial good-will, gave us an excellent dinner, summoned the people, in the neighborhood, to a religious meeting in the evening, lodged us most comfortably, and dismissed us, the next morning after breakfast, with as hearty a blessing as any one could bestow. He seemed, however, a good deal discomfited by the difficulty which was experienced, in that neighborhood, in procuring labor ; and although he acknowledged that a gradual improvement was taking place, complained rather bitterly of the state of things around him. On subsequent inquiry, we had reason to believe that the difficulty in those parts, as in other places, was very much connected with extravagant charges of rent. That our friend himself was somewhat too prone to discouragement, appeared from a circumstance of which he informed us,—that a few years since, he had sold a certain sugar estate, called G——, for the trifling sum of £1500. “And what dost thou suppose to be the value of that property now, friend Marcey ?” said one of our company. “Ten thousand pounds,” was his immediate reply—an assertion which afforded us a fresh and palpable evidence, that notwithstanding occasional and temporary difficulties, Jamaica is on the road to solid prosperity. Another item of information with which this gentleman favored us, was equally satisfactory. Few persons are so well acquainted, as he is, with the people in the neighborhood, and we were therefore glad to hear him say, that their numbers, under freedom, are increasing, in a geometrical ratio. Compare this statement, with the well-known fact, that, under slavery, the population of Jamaica was constantly decreasing. The old system was a killing one—the new system, when fairly carried out, is in its very nature, life-giving.

3rd Month (March) 19th. We parted from our friend Marcey with feelings of grateful respect, after which, a long and somewhat tedious stage, brought us to Lacovia, a very small village, containing a church and two taverns. It had once been the “capital” of St. Elizabeth, but the court house having been lately opened at Black-river, on the coast, Lacovia seemed much deserted. We were, however, glad to make the acquaintance of the valuable curate of the district, who gave us a generally favorable account of the state of the population ; and although our accommodations at the tavern, were miserable enough, we concluded to continue there over the night, in order to hold a meeting with the people, in the evening. They assembled on the occasion, in large numbers, in the presence of their minister, and behaved with the utmost attention and decorum. In the course of our drive, this day, we observed, as we often did at other times, a large number of negroes industriously at work on the roads; they were each of them earning, four bits, or thirty-three cents per day—the usual day's wages of Jamaica. The circumstance may appear scarcely worthy of notice; it is nevertheless important; for in the first place it shows that labor is to be easily obtained, even in St. Elizabeth, at a very moderate expense; and secondly, the numerous exertions which are now making in Jamaica for the improvement of the highways, are a sure sign of a rising, rather than a falling, state.

The following day was one which will long be impressed on our recollection. We were aware that in attempting to cross the island, in this direction, it was necessary for us to surmount some one tremendous hill. Two or three routes were proposed to us, but by all accounts, it was quite problematical whether, with four-wheel carriages and jaded horses, it would be possible for us to overcome the difficulty. As the alternative was the loss of many days in measuring back our long journey, we were somewhat anxious respecting the result; but we were soon relieved by the kindness of our friend Ricketts, the stipendiary magistrate, who called at our tavern, requested us to visit the estate which he now manages for a relative in England, and promised that our carriages should be dragged up the inevitable mountain road, by force of eight pair of oxen. Early in the morning, one of his laborers arrived on horseback to guide us, six miles, to Bartons. We found the place smiling with prosperity; the crops excellent, the works in good order, and the people diligently and cheerfully laboring for moderate wages. The history of this estate throws great light on the practical operation of freedom. During the last year of apprenticeship, its produce was 100 hhds. of sugar, and 25 puncheons of rum—expense of management, £2000—profit, small in proportion—I believe, a cipher. At the date of full freedom, the works ceased, and nothing was done upon the property, for many weeks; the people were called rogues and vagabonds. It was then undertaken by our friend Ricketts, who, in his first year, notwithstanding this deplorable condition of things, realised 70, or (taking the same measure as before) 82 hhds. of sugar, and 29 puncheons of rum—planted 18 acres fresh—expended only £1,090 (about half the amount of the former year)—and obtained a clear profit for his employer of £1,200. He now expects to increase his produce of sugar by twenty hogsheads annually. Who shall say that freedom, when fairly tried, fails to work well in Jamaica?

After breakfast, our friend mounted two of us on horseback, and the whole company proceeded, several miles, through a rich valley, to the foot of the mountain. We made two calls by the way—one at a beautiful penn, in excellent order, belonging to W. F. who, with other members of his family, owns 10,000 acres of this fine land. He gave us a good account of the 1000 negroes on his estate. Sometime ago, conflicts had arisen with them on the subject of rent; but now, matters were arranged on a right footing, and the peasantry were working well, for moderate but regular wages. Our next visit was to a Moravian settlement, which was diffusing a useful influence all round. We found there, a German pastor, and a pretty good school; two elderly negro sisters seemed to take great pleasure in presenting us with some fine shaddocks. They steadily refused all payment—declaring that “thanks were better.”

Steep and rocky as was our mountain road, and of several miles in length, and impossable as it would have been for our jaded horses to have surmounted it with the carriages, the oxen performed the task for us with great facility; and four pair were found sufficient for the purpose. For ourselves, we toiled up on foot, and were well repaid for the exertion, partly by the delightful scenery, and partly by the company of several intelligent persons who happened to overtake us. One of them was a young physician in large practice, and well acquainted with the neighborhood—we were now entering the parish of Manchester. Perfectly did he confirm our previous conclusions—namely, that wherever freedom is thwarted by attempts to compel labor, there are to be found decay and desertion; and that on the contrary, wherever the new system has its full scope, there all is prosperity. Evidences of this fact, more and more abounded as we proceeded on our journey. Among the persons who overtook us on the road, were two coffee planters—resident proprietors. One of them had been acting on the compulsory system, through the medium of rent; he was full of complaints; and talked of renouncing the raising of coffee altogether. The other invited us to come and visit his estate, which we were assured, was a most picturesque spot, amidst those verdant mountains. We were obliged to resist the temptation, but were pleased to learn, that his property was managed on sounder principles, and was in a prosperous condition. I must do the former individual the justice to say, that he listened, in the most friendly manner, to the practical advices, as to the management of his peasantry, which we ventured freely to impart to him.

When at length we had arrived at the summit of the mountain, we complied with the polite request of two ladies who had overtaken us on horseback, and called at the house of one of the principal coffee-planters of the vicinity. He gave us the usual kind reception; but it was evident, at first sight, that he had been disappointed and mortified. After a short conversation, on indifferent topics, we took our leave. He followed us to his gate and began, at last, to pour out his troubles. He had been, in days past, a warm friend to the abolition of slavery, but now many of his negroes refused to work for him. “Do tell me” said I, “why they will not work for thee; hast thou been making any attempts, since freedom, to compel their labor?” I have used “a little gentle compulsion,” was his reply. The cause of the difficulty was now evident, to my own apprehension; and I afterwards found, that the questions of rent and labor, had been intermingled, on his property, and that the former had been exacted, on an arbitrary scale, in order to compel the latter. The peasantry of Jamaica are much too cognizant of their own rights and interests, long to submit to this new form of slavery. Fondly attached as they are to their humble homes, they avail themselves of every opportunity of obtaining a better lot, and gradually desert the estates on which they are unfairly treated.

Weary as we already were with our journey, we had many miles yet to travel, over a rugged and difficult road, before we could reach a well known penn, where we intended, though strangers, to ask for a lodging. We were now on a high elevation above the level of the sea; and the face of the country was covered chiefly with woods and pasture land. We looked in vain for some of those flocks of green parrots, which frequent this district, and supply the inhabitants, as we were told, with excellent pies; but the luxuriance of vegetable nature was the constant subject of our admiration.

The highlands of Jamaica are adorned with as great a variety of beautiful ferns, as can probably be found in any part of the world; also with many kinds of palm and aloe. The thatch palm, a plant of low stature, with handsome fan-like leaves, is frequent in the woods, and is used, by the negroes, as a cover for the roofs of their cottages. Amongst the aloes (as I presume) we observed a magnificent plant, with a large spike of purple flowers and a pink calix, which is there called, the wild pineapple. The vast creepers which embrace, and sometimes even destroy, the trees, are most abundant. One species is remarkable for its juicy stem, which, in the midst of surrounding drought and heat, is said to afford the traveller or the laborer, many a refreshing draught of wholesome water. Our kind friend, the young physician—a new but valuable acquaintance—led the way; and just as the evening was closing upon us, conducted us in safety to the wild and romantic spot, where we intended to lodge. He afterwards presented me with a perfect specimen of a fossil conk-shell (I believe, of the common species, still found on the coast) which he had dug out of limestone, at an elevation of two thousand feet above the level of the sea.

We were now come to the residence of an enlightened planter and attorney, who has the care of twenty coffee-estates, and whom—not having the liberty to name him—I shall call A. B. He was not at home ; but his servants supplied us with a comfortable meal, and good lodging ; and greatly were we pleased and satisfied, in having found a resting place, in the midst of delightful scenery, and a happy contented population.

A. B. joined us the next morning ; and we also received visits from two individuals, the benefit of whose acquaintance, we had particularly desired—Dr. Davy, the Custos of Manchester, and Dr. Stewart, a clergyman of enlightened views and extensive influence—I believe the stipendiary curate of the parish. Nothing can be more reasonable and effective, than the system adopted by A. B. as well as by Dr. Davy, in the management of the estates under their care. Both these gentlemen are said to have been, in former times, much opposed to emancipation ; but they have been wise enough to sail with the stream, and to give freedom a fair, confiding, trial. They entirely separate the questions of rent and labor—charging rent according to the money-value of the tenements, and payable quarterly ; and on the other hand, giving fair but moderate wages, which they constantly pay weekly, and in cash. They adopt the system of job or piece work, by which the stimulus of wages is vastly increased. They build comfortable cottages for their laborers, and let or sell to them, plots of ground, so as to render them absolutely independent. Thus they secure an ample home population ; and for this population, education and religious instruction are provided on a large scale.

The consequence is that the people are well at work on the properties under their respective care ; the employers are satisfied, the laborers contented and orderly, the whole district in a state of comfort and prosperity. “ I came to this district,” says Dr. Stewart, in a letter which I have since received from him, “ in April 1834. There was one place of public worship, not one third filled. It contained 1250 square feet then. It has since been twice enlarged, and now contains 2427 square feet, and is not half large enough for the congregation. I have also, in the same district, another place of worship, capable of holding 600 people, which is regularly attended every Sunday, and is always full. The average attendance has increased from 300 to 1600, at least. The communicants have increased from 27 to 289. In 1835, the Bishop confirmed, in my chapel, 47. In 1840, he confirmed, in the same place, 635. During the same period, two very large Moravian chapels have been erected in the same district. In the six last years of slavery, the number of marriages, at this church, was 421 ; in five years and a half of partial or entire freedom, 2014. When I came here, I found two adult negroes who could read a little, but there was no school in the parish ; now more than 100 adults can read, and almost all the rising generation ; and schools are rapidly increasing."

This delightful report of the rapid progress, under the banner of freedom, of education, morals, and religion, perfectly corresponds with Dr. Davy's account of the decrease of crime. "The parish over which I preside," said he, "contains 22,000 souls. There is no crime in it now. The jail has only three inmates—one old convict, and two persons for an assault."

Now I am sure, my dear friend, thou wilt agree with me in the sentiment, that even if emancipation had for ever brought to a close the cultivation of coffee, in the parish of Manchester, such a circumstance, however undesirable, would have been as nothing in the scale, when weighed against these rich blessings, social, moral, and religious. Had all the planters in the district been deprived of their profits, it would still have been a small point, in the comparison. But happily, the prosperity of the proprietors, is linked by an indissoluble tie, to that course of justice, mercy, and wisdom, which insures the well being of the population at large. The experience of A. B. and of his friend Dr. Davy, affords the clearest evidence, that a fair arrangement with the laborers, on the ground of full and unrestricted freedom, answers for the pocket.

In the first place, they have discovered, that a good rental may be obtained from the laboring population, under the character of an independent tenantry, to the great advantage of the proprietor. A. B. showed me a rent-roll of £1270 per annum, (whether currency or sterling, I know not) which sum he was levying, on a few of the estates under his care, without the smallest difficulty to himself, or uneasiness on the part of the people. And secondly, they have ascertained the fact, that a freeman, under the stimulus of wages (paid on job-work especially,) will do a great deal more work, than a slave under the impulse of the whip; and therefore that work on a small scale—as in some particular job—or work on a large scale, as in the whole conducting of an estate—may be obtained at a much cheaper rate now, than it was under the old system. The argument, when fully stated, stands thus: the population being in both cases the same, a larger proportion of it becomes operative in freedom than in slavery; and of the operative part, each individual, does more work, in freedom than in slavery—and thus more labor is thrown upon the market—and of course labor becomes cheaper—in freedom than in slavery. But this truth, with A. B. and his friends, is matter not of argument merely, but of account. The expense of working one of A. B.'s estates in 1837, during the apprenticeship, was £2,400 currency; in 1839, since freedom, it was only £1,200 currency—exactly one half. In this case the produce was somewhat diminished, but the profit was increased.

This is a point worthy of peculiar attention. The prosperity of the planters in Jamaica, must not be measured by the mere amount of the produce of sugar or coffee, as compared with the time of slavery. Even where produce is diminished, profit will be increased—if freedom be fairly tried—by the saving of expense. “I had rather make sixty tierces of coffee,” said A. B. “under freedom, than one hundred and twenty under slavery—such is the saving of expense, that I make a better profit by it—nevertheless, I mean to make one hundred and twenty, as before.”

“Do you see that excellent new stone wall round the field below us?” said the young physician to me, as we stood at A. B.’s front door, surveying the delightful scenery—“That wall could scarcely have been built at all, under slavery, or the apprenticeship; the necessary labor could not then have been hired at less than £5 currency, or about $13, per chain. Under freedom, it cost only from $3 50 to $4 per chain—not one-third of the amount. Still more remarkable is the fact, that the whole of it was built, under the stimulus of job-work, by an invalid negro, who, during slavery, had been given up to total inaction.” This was the substance of our conversation—the information was afterwards fully confirmed by the proprietor. Such was the fresh blood infused into the veins of this decrepid person, by the genial hand of freedom, that he had been redeemed from absolute uselessness—had executed a noble work—had greatly improved his master’s property—and finally, had realised for himself, a handsome sum of money. This single fact is admirably and undeniably illustrative of the principles of the case; and, for that purpose, is as good as a thousand.

A few more particulars, however, which bear on the same point, may be interesting and satisfactory. They are contained in the letter, already cited, from my friend, Dr. Stewart, dated “Mandeville, Jamaica, March 28, 1840.” “With regard to the comparative expense of free and slave labor,” says he, “I give you the result of my experience in this parish. Wherever rent and labor have not been mingled together, prices have been reduced, in the picking and curing of coffee, from one-third, to one-half; from £10 per tierce, to from £5 to £6 10. Grass land is cleaned at one-third of the former expense. A penn in this neighborhood, when cleaned in slavery, cost, simply for the contingencies of the negroes, £80. The first cleaning, by free labor—far better done—cost less than £24. Stone walls, the only fence used in this rocky district, cost £5. 6. 8; the lowest £4, under slavery. The usual price now is £1; the highest, £1. 6. 8. To prepare and plant an acre of woodland in coffee, cost, twenty years ago, £20; up to the end of slavery, it never fell below £16. In apprenticeship it cost from £10. 13. 4, to £12. Now, it never exceeds £5. 6. 8. I myself have done it this year for £5; that is the general price all through the district. In 1833, I hired servants at from £16 to £25 per annum. In 1838, 1839, and since, I have been able to obtain the same description of servants, vastly improved in all their qualifications, for from £8 to £10 per annum." These are pound, shilling, and pence, calculations; but they develop mighty principles—they detect the springs of human action—they prove the vast superiority of moral inducement, to physical force, in the production of the useful efforts of mankind. It is the perfect settlement of the old controversy between wages and the whip!

"I know the case of a property," observes Dr. Stewart again, "on which there were one hundred and twenty-five slaves—the expense amounting (at £5 per annum, for the maintenance of each slave) to £625. The labor account for the first year of freedom, deducting rents, was only about £220, leaving a balance in favor of freedom, of £400. More improvement had been made on the property, than for many years past, with a prospect of an increasing extent of cultivation. On a second property, the slave and apprenticeship expenses averaged £2400; the labor account, for the first year of freedom, was less than £850. On a third estate, the year's expense, under slavery, was £1480; under apprenticeship, £1050; under freedom, £637. On a fourth, the reduction is from £1100 to £770."

Allowing a little time for the calming of apprehensions, and the development of truth, such results must infallibly find their way into the value of landed property. That they have already done so, in Jamaica, to a considerable extent, is undeniable. A person in the parish of Manchester, who never held slaves, availing himself of the general alarm, bought a property, at the date of full freedom, for £1000 currency. The free laborers work the better for him, because he never was a slaveholder. He cleared the whole purchase money, besides his expenses, the first year. He would, of course, make a miserable bargain, were he now to sell the property for five times the amount, i. e. for £5,000.

There can be no better testimony in Jamaica, on this subject, than that of A. B. He assured me that landed property in that island now, without the slaves, is worth its full former value, including the slaves, during the times of depression, which preceded the act of emancipation. It has found its bottom, has risen, and is still gradually rising. "I believe in my conscience," says Dr. Stewart, "that property in Jamaica, without the slaves, is as valuable as it formerly was, with them. I believe its value would be doubled, by sincerely turning away from all relics of slavery, to the honest free working of a free system."

Third-month (March) 21st. After a comfortable meal, called the "second breakfast," we parted from our intelligent friends at — Penn, and again assailed the rough hilly roads. At one spot, we were obliged to use all our force in pushing our carriages up a hill as steep as the roof of a house; but the constant succession of fine scenes, repaid all our toil. In the evening, we reached the neat little village of Mandeville, the capital of the parish of Manchester, which is at the height of 2,500 feet above the level of the sea. There, in the midst of green woods and pastures, we found an inn, which, for comfortable fare and accommodation, would do credit to England or America, and were glad to take up our abode in it, for the following day—the first of the week. During the course of our excursion, we had received help and information from the Baptists, the Methodists, the Moravians, and the ministers and members of the Church of England. At Mandeville, we found ourselves among the Independents or Congregationalists. An excellent missionary station has been formed there, under the London Missionary Society, a large chapel, effective school, &c. In this chapel we held our public meetings for worship, morning and evening. Great were the numbers, and still greater, the love and cordiality of the negroes who attended on the occasion. A prosperous, well-behaved peasantry, they certainly are—a large number of them came to the meeting, on horseback! To us it was a happiness, of no common order, again to unite with our brethren and sisters of the African race, in drinking at the fountain of the waters of life. But I must bring this long letter to a conclusion.

I am &c. &c.

LETTER XI.

JAMAICA.

Providence, R. I. Sixth-month (June) 26th, 1840.

MY DEAR FRIEND,

Early in the morning of Third-month (March) the 23d, we quitted Mandeville on our journey back to Spanishtown. We had been previously introduced to W. D. a planter of high character in the neighborhood. He was once an irreligious man, and warm on the side of slavery. Now he has become the devout Christian, and conducts his estates to the comfort of his people, and greatly to his own ease and profit, on the liberal and enlightened system, adopted by A. B. and Dr. Davy. He is selling little freeholds, within his own property, to the laborers, with admirable effect. They are working well for him; and his crops are abundant. He grows rich upon freedom, and expends his surplus revenue, in promoting the cause of religion and philanthropy.

As I was riding down the Mandeville hills, on a hackney lent me by the missionaries, enjoying the grandeur of nature and the beauties of cultivation, I overtook a good-looking young negro, handsomely attired, and mounted on a poney of his own. He was a laborer on Richmond park coffee-estate, in the parish of Clarendon, paid half a dollar per week for his rent, was able to earn four dollars per week, by piece work; had paid £10 sterling for his poney; kept wine, at times, in his cottage; had gone to Mandeville to obtain his marriage certificate from the Rector; and with his young bride, seemed to be in the way of as comfortable a measure of moderate prosperity, as could easily fall to the lot of man. This is one specimen among thousands of the good-working of freedom, in Jamaica; but I fear it would be easy to draw the reverse picture, and to tell of much oppression and exaction, to which this people are still exposed, in some parts of the island. "Are the people working well" said I to George Wedderley (that was his name) "in the parish of Clarendon?" "Yes, generally; but on some properties they are uncomfortable." "Why so, George?"—"When a man has finished his job, he goes for his money and can't get it. Sometimes he hires helpers, but can't get his money, and therefore can't pay them. The rent is set off against him. Then come bad words. The rent is often increased, often doubled." I had every reason to give my young informant credit, both for shrewdness and veracity. With his own lot he was perfectly satisfied. In the course of the same ride, I met with many of the peasantry who had attended our meeting, the preceding day;—they seemed overjoyed to see their friends again. One woman, in particular, was at a loss to express the multitude of her good wishes. As far as I could understand her patois, they were, that "sweet massa" might be "well fed on his journey," and supplied with "plenty of the Holy Spirit," for his work, in the gospel. She appeared to understand what it is that can alone adequately qualify any man, for such a service. They are surely a people easily susceptible of good impressions; and peculiarly affectionate towards those who endeavor to instruct them in the way of righteousness.

We took our breakfast at a tavern, by the road side in the village of Porus. This village had sprung up, under freedom, and appeared to contain at least a hundred freehold settlements belonging to the negro laborers. They had bought their land and were still buying it, at the price of from thirteen to twenty dollars per acre; and we were grieved to learn that many of them had settled on spots which had already become unproductive. Thus were their money and labor lost; but in common with their brethren, they were earning wages on the neighboring estates. Here there is another congregation and school, under the London Missionary Society. We were told by the missionary that part of his flock had been led off, the day before, by an ignorant black teacher. There are said to be many such, on the island, and we heard a poor account of their character, and of the effect which they produce; but their influence as compared with that of the missionaries, is very trifling, and as education spreads it will, in all probability, entirely cease.

We were now once more on a level with the sea, and traversed an uninteresting Savannah, (the name given in Jamaica to a flat plain) until we arrived at Four Paths, in Clarendon, the place of our destination. There, we met with a cordial reception from William Barrett who has a good chapel and school under the London Missionary Society. Henry Reid conducts another mission establishment, in the place, on behalf of the Baptists. Both of them have large congregations, and, like true Christian brethren, are heartily united in the work. These excellent men had just been found guilty, by a Jamaica jury, of assisting in a riotous assembly and assault. The charge had reference to an affray, in which some of their people had been engaged with certain wicked disturbers of their meetings for divine worship; and so conspicuously innocent were our friends, that notwithstanding the verdict of the jury, the Court had abstained from inflicting any punishment whatsoever. We were glad, at such a time of affliction, to give them the right hand of Christian friendship; and certainly we can speak well of the orderly and devout demeanor of the numerous laborers, who assembled that evening, at our request, in William Barrett's chapel. After the meeting for worship was concluded, we complied with the Missionary's wishes, in giving the people some account of the conduct and condition of their brethren, in the islands to the windward; and nothing could exceed their attention, while we explained to them how much the cause of liberty, in other parts of the world, depended on their own continued industry and good conduct. The people of the two churches had voluntarily paid the whole costs attending the trial of their ministers—a liberality, which, under slavery, would have been at once unthought of, and impossible.

We were glad to hear that the generality of the sugar estates, in this neighborhood, were doing well—many of them affording ample evidence that the absence of oppressive and compulsory measures, is followed by prosperity. On one of these estates, called “Seven Plantations,” a liberal overseer was making eleven hogsheads of sugar, weekly, instead of six, the former average quantity. Fifty acres of cane were accidentally burnt on this property. The negroes came forward, of their own accord, and offered to work, for a time, without remuneration, in order to make up the loss!

Third-month (March) 24th. Our route this day, lay through part of the flat but fertile parish of Vere, on the southern coast. We were informed that on the First-day, just past, a vast multitude of people of all colors had assembled on the shore to witness a baptism conducted by one of the missionaries; but all was decency and order, on the occasion. The appearance of the cane in this district, bespoke a good crop; much of it had already been taken off; we were told that a difference which had lately occurred between the planters and the laborers, on the subject of wages, had been satisfactorily adjusted, and that the people were now working well. In the afternoon, we arrived at the Baptist station at Old Harbor Bay, conducted by Henry C. Taylor, who, with his obliging wife, gave us the usual hospitable reception. The people in the neighborhood were invited to a meeting in the evening. Although the notice was short, they assembled in large numbers, many of them from a considerable distance—no slight effort for them to make, after having been at work, in the fields, the whole of the day. But we trust that they met with their reward; for there was spread over the assembly, that peaceful solemnity, which seemed to indicate that the smile of divine loving-kindness was resting on this once persecuted, but now free and happy community.

We were now within twelve miles of Spanishtown, to which place we returned, the next morning, Third-month (March) 25th—our excursion, since we left it, having occupied fifteen days. Three of our company went forward to Kingston, in order to offer a welcome to our friends from Santa Cruz, who were expected to arrive, about this time, in the Whitmore. My friend and brother in the gospel, John Candler, remained with me for the day, at Spanishtown, as we wished to attend the Legislature, which was now assembled, and to pay our respects to some of the principal officers of the government, and other persons of influence. Two or three of our visits may be worthy of a brief notice.

We first waited on Dr. Lipscombe, the Bishop of Jamaica, with whom we were desirous of obtaining some conversation, on the subject of popular education. He is a learned and amiable high-church man, heartily desirous (we fully believe) of promoting the moral and religious welfare of the community. He received us with much condescension and cordiality, and gave us an excellent account of the large increase of schools, and general progress of education, under the care of the clergy of the Church of England. These schools are at present wholly gratuitous, and we ventured to suggest to him, that the plan of making a small charge for instruction—a plan which works well in the Mico, and other schools—would not only be easily borne by the laboring people, but would be the means of increasing their sense of the value of education. The peasantry of Jamaica, stand in no need of gratuitous charity; and in all matters of this sort, we cannot do them a greater kindness, than gently to lead them to feel their own wants, and to help themselves. Our conversation was concluded by an acknowledgment, on the part of the Bishop, which is worthy of being recorded in conspicuous characters. He expressly stated, that before emancipation, his efforts for the literary and religious instruction of the people, had been comparatively useless. His arm had been palsied by the influence of slavery. Now, every difficulty was removed. While, on the one hand, the negroes were manifesting an immensely increasing desire for education, all obstruction to its course, on the part of the white inhabitants, had ceased. All parties, under the sway of freedom, were united in the desire, to promote the intellectual and moral culture of the rising generation.

We next stepped into the House of Assembly, and listened, for some time, to rather a lively debate, which, though relating to a subject of little comparative interest, would not have done discredit, either to Westminster or Washington. One of the most animated speakers, was a colored member. There are several such in the Assembly ; and some of them are staunch supporters of the measures of the home government. Happy would it have been for Jamaica, had this been more generally the case, with the members of this colonial legislature ; for if there is any one circumstance more than another, which endangers the peace and prosperity of the colony, it is, as we believe, the passing of local laws, opposed to the true intent and purpose of the act of emancipation. That several such provisions have been enacted, within the last few months, is undeniable ; so that a period of apparent smooth tranquillity, in the house, may possibly prove to have been the seed-time of much future mischief and confusion. I would just specify (as a memorandum) the Poundage act, the Fishery act, the Huckster and Pedlar act, the Petty Debt act, the Police act, and, worst of all, the Vagrant act.

I confess that I am far from being fully acquainted with the details of these several provisions ; but I know enough of them, to have formed the deliberate sentiment, that they require the rigorous scrutiny, and faithful check, of the British government. The three former laws, now alluded to, are calculated, as I believe, to interfere with those pursuits and profits of the laboring people, which are independent of the cultivation of the staple articles, but which are nevertheless legitimate and highly desirable, for their own benefit, and that of the community at large. If so, the policy on which they are founded, is narrow indeed. The petty debt act, affords tremendous facilities to that oppressive system of penal and fictitious rents, which is now the very bane of Jamaica. A police, armed with deadly weapons, is always, to say the least of it, a dangerous expedient ; and in country districts where there is confessedly scarcely any crime, it can be regarded only as a needless source of irritation and alarm. Too soon may it also become an instrument of oppression and cruelty. Finally, in a country where there is scarcely to be found an instance of real vagabondism, but where laborers are often compelled to leave their homes, in search of new locations, one cannot but be alarmed at the tendency of a law, which subjects every poor fellow who may be found sleeping under a hedge, or in an out house, by the road side, to a long term of imprisonment, with hard labor in a penal gang! These things ought not so to be.

At the hour appointed for the purpose, we were introduced to the Governor, Sir Charles Metcalfe, with whom we enjoyed the privilege of a long and free conversation. He bears about him all the marks of long experience, knows the world well, makes a generous use of his large pecuniary resources, and by his urbanity of manners, and substantial kindness, readily engages the affections of those who surround him. We fear, however, that his well-intentioned efforts to please all parties in Jamaica, will not, in the end, succeed. We cannot but believe, that an individual of such evident benevolence and integrity, will soon find it his place to make a decided stand, against the various encroachments upon the rights and privileges of the laboring population, which are but too evidently making a silent and insidious progress.

We were sorry to hear that several overseers had lately been appointed to the station of local magistrates; for since the questions which come before the justices, are almost uniformly between the laborers and overseers, it must surely be a dangerous expedient to constitute the latter, judges in their own cause. Between the two evils of no magistrates at all, and magistrates thus circumstanced, the latter appears to us to be the greatest.

The same remark applies, in a considerable degree, to the higher grade of "attorneys," and we apprehend that nothing would more serve the purpose of good order and tranquillity, in the colony of Jamaica, than the settlement of a magistracy, wholly independent of all parties in the island, and paid by the Home Government. The present stipendiary magistrates, with many of whom we had the opportunity of making our acquaintance, appeared to us to be already, to a great extent, answering this purpose. Many of the peculiar functions which they exercised during the apprenticeship, have now ceased, and they are in general acting in the simple capacity of local magistrates. That they are (with little exception,) invaluable defenders of the rights of the peasantry, in all the islands which we have visited, we are bound honestly to testify; nor have we ever observed, in any of them, an indisposition to promote the fair interests of the planter. They have now large experience of the moral and civil condition of the communities in which they act. To remove them from their posts, would, in our opinion, be little short of a death-blow to the peace and liberty of the colonies. We venture with great deference to express our decided judgment that their original number ought to be filled up, and their office, as local justices of the peace, rendered fully efficacious, and permanent. These remarks are made without any feeling of ill-will or prejudice against the planters and their agents, localised in Jamaica. We entertain warm feelings of regard and friendship towards many of these persons; from all of them, whom we saw or visited, we met with unvarying kindness and civility. We give them credit, in general, for honorable and benevolent views and feelings. But we know the effect on the minds of men, of the circumstances in which they are placed, and have watched the silent influence of local bias. It is a true though trite remark, that "when self the wavering balance shakes, 'tis seldom right adjusted;" and hence it obviously follows—I am sure the planters of Jamaica will admit it—that in him who holds the scales of justice, self ought to have no interest whatsoever in the questions to be decided.

We were glad to compare notes with Sir Charles Metcalfe. Like ourselves, he had just returned from a tour of inspection, in other parts of the island. It was therefore a great satisfaction to us, to find that he had imbibed the same convictions as we had, respecting the impropriety of mixing up the questions of rent and wages, and of all other attempts to compel the labor of freemen ; that he rejoiced, as much as ourselves, in the rapid increase of villages of independent negro settlers ; and that he fully concurred with us, as to the most efficacious modes of ensuring the continuous labor of the people on the estates of their former masters. These are, the regular weekly payment of wages in cash, the system of job and piece work, the letting or selling of tenements and plots of ground to the people, within the properties of the planters, and lastly, moral and religious instruction. On one point we somewhat differed. Sir Charles seems to be of the opinion, with many other persons, that the planting interest of Jamaica is suffering from the want of a larger population. That there is scope, in that island, for a great increase in the numbers of the people, is unquestionable ; and we are by no means opposed to any reasonable scheme of immigration. But the result of our own inquiries, is a conviction that the present population of Jamaica, if its force be but fairly applied under a just and wise management, will be found more than adequate to its present extent of cultivation ; and that as the population multiplies under the righteous sway of freedom, the cultivation, may be indefinitely increased.

There is one point, on which a few sentences may be of some use. The only bar that we know of, to that natural increase of the population in Jamaica, which all parties must allow to be desirable, is that grievous want of enlightened medical aid, from which the people are now suffering, in all parts of the island. The provision which was, in this respect made for them, in slavery, has now ceased ; and they have, in general, neither the ability, nor the wish, to employ regular practitioners at the usual prices. Thus are they thrown on ignorant quacks or myalists, and I have no doubt that many lives are lost, in consequence. We apprehend that the best remedy for this evil, would be the formation of public dispensaries, at various stations throughout the island, by the authority, and in the first instance, at the expense, of the local government; each dispensary to be placed under the care of some regular medical practitioner, who should not only dispense medicines, but visit the people at their own houses. Moderate charges should be made for medicine and attendance, by which the outlay of the government might be gradually refunded, and the whole annual expense easily defrayed. We feel a hope that these suggestions may meet with due consideration, from persons of authority in the colony. The health and increase of the population cannot be, to them, an unimportant or uninteresting object.

I will take the present opportunity of offering to thy attention, the account of exports from Jamaica, (as exhibited in the return printed for the House of Assembly) for the last year of the apprenticeship, and the first of full freedom.

Apparent diminution,	8,466

This difference is much less considerable, than many persons have been led to imagine; the real diminution, however, is still less; because there has lately taken place in Jamaica, an increase in the size of the hogshead. Instead of the old measure, which contained 17 cwt., new ones have been introduced, containing from 20 to 22 cwt.—a change which, for several reasons, is an economical one for the planter. Allowing only five per cent. for this change, the deficiency is reduced from 8,466 hogsheads, to 5,175; and this amount is further lessened by the fact, that in consequence of freedom, there is a vast addition to the consumption of sugar among the people of Jamaica itself, and therefore to the home sale.

The account of coffee is not so favorable.

Diminution, (about one-third)	38,554

The coffee is a very uncertain crop, and the deficiency, on the comparison of these two years, is not greater, I believe, than has often occurred before. We are also to remember, that both in sugar and coffee, the profit to the planter may be increased by the saving of expense, even when the produce is diminished. Still, it must be allowed that some decrease has taken place, on both the articles, in connection with the change of system. With regard to the year 1840, it is expected that coffee will at least maintain the last amount; but a farther decrease on sugar is generally anticipated.

Now so far as this decrease of produce is connected with the change of system, it is obviously to be traced to a corresponding decrease in the quantity of labor. But here comes the critical question—the real turning point. To what is this decrease in the quantity of labor owing? I answer deliberately, but without reserve, “Mainly to causes which class under slavery, and not under freedom.” It is, for the most part, the result of those impolitic attempts to force the labor of freemen, which have disgusted the peasantry and have led to the desertion of many of the estates.

It is a cheering circumstance that the amount of planting and other preparatory labor, bestowed on the estates during the autumn of 1839, has been much greater, by all accounts, than in the autumn of 1838. This is itself the effect of an improved understanding between the planters and the peasants; and the result of it (if other circumstances be equal) cannot fail to be a considerable increase of produce in 1841. I am told, however, that there is one circumstance which may possibly prevent this result, as it regards sugar. It is, that the cultivation of it, under the old system, was forced on certain properties which, from their situation and other circumstances, were wholly unfit for the purpose. These plantations afforded an income to the local agents, but to the proprietors were either unprofitable, or losing, concerns. On such properties, under those new circumstances which bring all things to their true level, the cultivation of sugar must cease.

In the mean time, the imports of the island are rapidly increasing ; trade, improving ; the towns, thriving ; new villages rising in every direction ; property, much enhanced in value ; well-managed estates, productive and profitable ; expenses of management diminished ; short methods of labor adopted ; provisions cultivated on a larger scale than ever ; and the people, wherever they are properly treated, industrious, contented, and gradually accumulating wealth. Above all, education is rapidly spreading ; the morals of the community improving ; crime, in many districts, disappearing ; and Christianity asserting her sway, with vastly augmented force, over the mass of the population. Cease from all attempts to oppose the current of justice and mercy—remove every obstruction to the fair and full working of freedom—and the bud of Jamaica's prosperity, already fragrant and vigorous, will soon burst into a glorious flower.

At the Governor's table in the evening, we met most of the principal officials of the island—the Chief Justice, the Bishop, the Attorney General, the Advocate General, the Colonial Secretary, several members of the Council, &c. We believed it right to comply with the Governor's kind request, that we should be present on the occasion. Nothing could be more friendly than the treatment which we met with from the company. The dinner was moderate, though handsome ; temperance, was strictly maintained, and the conversation was rational and agreeable. We took our leave, at night, under feelings of Christian love and regard for all present. May they remember that for public, as well as private men, the law of righteousness, is the only law of safety and of peace !

On the following day we returned to Kingston, where we found our numerous friends just arrived from Santa Cruz, and with them, Miguel Cabrera de Nevaes, Governor of Madrid, who had been lately acting as Commissioner from the Queen of Spain, in the revisal of the municipal laws of the Spanish West Indian colonies. Our friends had taken him up at St. John's, Porto Rico, with a view of affording him a conveyance to Havana. This circumstance turned out to be of no small importance to myself. For after the Spanish Consul at Kingston, full of the fears so natural to the abettors of slavery, had positively refused me a passport for Cuba, and had even written to the Captain General of that island, erroneously representing me as the President of the Anti-slavery Society, our friend Cabre-ra induced him to alter his letter; and afterwards, by his personal influence, procured me a quiet landing and polite reception, at Havana. Thus had we again to acknowledge that providential hand, which provides for all the needs of those who desire to serve Him.

At Kingston I was occupied, for a short time, in carrying through the press a small pamphlet addressed to the planters, and entitled "Reconciliation recommended to all parties in Jamaica." The object of this address, was to show the absolute identity of interest, which now subsists among the planters, the laborers, and the abolitionists, and to call upon them all to unite, heart and hand, on just and salutary principles, in promoting the prosperity of this noble colony. We have since had the satisfaction of learning that it was well received by all parties. It is inserted in the Appendix.

Our last day in Jamaica, was the first of the week—Third-month (March) 29th. Great is the privilege of one day in seven, expressly set apart for the purposes of rest and worship. For ourselves, we felt it to be salutary to cease from the investigation of secular points, however interesting, and again to unite with our fellow men, in drawing near, in spirit, to the Fountain of every blessing. We held our morning meeting in one of the Baptist chapels; the congregation, chiefly black, was deeply serious, and when the subject of the afflictions of Africa, arose before us, the feeling of the people became intense. Many of them are awakened to a lively interest in the religious welfare of the people from which they spring; and we have strong reasons to believe that negroes from the West Indies, will ere long, be engaged in disseminating a knowledge of the Gospel of Christ, among the benighted nations of Africa.

The arising of this spirit of love and zeal, on behalf of the land of their forefathers, has been one of the blessed accompaniments of their freedom.

In the afternoon we again met, in the Wesleyan Meeting House, a vast assembly of persons of all ranks and classes ; and after once more pressing upon their attention, those fundamental principles, in the maintenance of which the true church of Christ, of every name, country, and color, is one body, we took a last solemn leave of Jamaica and her inhabitants. The next morning, we parted from our English Friends who continue, for the present, on the island ; went on board the ship Whitmore ; and as soon as wind and tides permitted, set sail for Havana.

LETTER XII.

THE CONTRAST.

Providence, R. I., Sixth-month (June) 29th, 1840.

MY DEAR FRIEND,

My narrative respecting the British West India islands, being now brought to a close, I will take the liberty of concentrating and recapitulating the principal points of the subject, in a few distinct propositions.

I. The emancipated negroes are working well on the estates of their old masters. The evidence of this fact contained in the foregoing letters, is, I hope, clear and ample. Thou wilt be pleased to recal the case of Tortola—especially the evidence of President Isaacs, who has fifteen hundred free laborers under his care ; of St. Christopher's—that scene of industry and prosperity ; of Nevis and Montserrat, of which the official accounts are so cheering and satisfactory—of Antigua, where, after the trial of freedom for six years, the produce of sugar is largely increased, many estates, thrown up in slavery, are again under cultivation, and the landed property, once sinking under its burdens, is already delivered from its mortgages—of Dominica, where notwithstanding the lack of moral culture, and the superabundance of fertile wild land, the peasantry are working as peaceably and diligently, on their old locations, as in Antigua itself. Nor does Jamaica, when duly inspected and fairly estimated, furnish any exception to the general result. We find that, in that island, wherever the negroes are fairly, kindly, and wisely treated, there they are working well on the properties of their old masters ; and that the existing instances of a contrary description, must be ascribed to causes which class under slavery, and not under freedom. Let it not however be imagined, that the negroes who are not working on the estates of their old masters, are on that account, idle. Even these, are in general, busily employed in cultivating their own grounds, in various descriptions of handicraft, in lime-burning or fishing—in benefiting themselves and the community, through some new, but, equally desirable medium. Besides all this, stone walls are built, new houses erected, pastures cleaned, ditches dug, meadows drained, roads made and macadamised, stores fitted up, villages formed, and other beneficial operations effected; the whole of which, before emancipation, it would have been a folly even to attempt. The old notion that the negro is, by constitution, a lazy creature who will do no work at all except by compulsion, is now for ever exploded.

Taking the same population of black people, a larger proportion of them is operative under freedom, than was the case under slavery; and of the operative part, each individual, on an average, performs more work than he did before. Thus the whole quantity of work obtained, by the stimulus of wages, is considerably greater than the amount formerly procured by the terror of the whip. When I speak of the stimulus of wages, I allude especially to its most effective form—payment by the piece, or job. The peasantry of the county of Norfolk, in England, afford a fair specimen of industrious labor, on day's wages, in a cool climate. My own observation has led me to the conclusion that a free negro in the West Indies, paid by the day, will, in general, perform about three quarters of the quantity of work, which would be called a fair day's labor in Norfolk. But employ and pay him by the job, or piece, and he will soon equal, and even exceed, the day-labor standard of the Norfolk peasant. I presume it was chiefly to job work that a most intelligent magistrate of St. Christopher's alluded, when he said to me with great emphasis—"They will do an infinity of work for wages."

II. An increased quantity of work thrown upon the market, is of course followed by the cheapening of labor. That this is the case in Jamaica, is in the clearest manner demonstrated by the experience of A. B. and his friends, in the parish of Manchester. Great is the pecuniary relief experienced by many of the planters, in the several islands which we visited, in consequence of their deliverance from the dead weight of their slaves. In many cases, the saving amounts to the half of their former outgoing. A planter who owned three hundred slaves, for whom he provided, food, clothing, bedding, household utensils, and medical attendance—not to mention white men for watchers, whips, and bilboes—is now delivered from the whole of this burden; pays one hundred free laborers instead; and soon, by dint of job work, mechanism, and short processes, reduces that number to sixty or seventy. Thus his debit in account comes to be almost as much decreased, as are his crosses and his cares. Remember A. B's declaration that he had rather—for the profit's sake—"make sixty tierces of coffee under freedom, than one hundred and twenty, under slavery."

True indeed it is, that the circumstances of different estates, and even of different colonies, varied considerably as to the expenditure occasioned by the support of the slaves; and the figures, in the comparison now instituted between slavery and freedom, will vary in proportion. But so far, we have omitted to take into the account, the interest of the capital invested in slaves, and the dead loss occasioned by the excess of deaths over births—items which used to produce tremendous debits in every fairly arranged balance-sheet of a West Indian slaveholder. Bring these items into view, and the saving on the side of freedom, is undoubted, uniform, and in many cases, prodigious.

III. We prove the correctness of a sum in division, by a corresponding process in multiplication. Just so, do we prove the truth of the two preceding propositions, by a fact of which there is now taking place, a gradual but sure development, in all the islands which we visited; viz: that real property has risen, and is rising, in value. In the towns, both the enhancement and improvement of property are extraordinary. In the country, the value of the slaves—to say the least of it—is already transferred to the land. Remember the declaration of our friend in St. Christopher's, who had bought an estate, before emancipation, for £2000, and now would not sell it for £6000 ; and that of our friend in Jamaica, who sold " G—— estate" for £1,500, and now remarks that it is worth £10,000. I wish it, however, to be understood, that the comparison is not here made with those olden times of slavery, when the soils of the islands were in their most prolific state, and the slaves themselves, of a corresponding value ; but with those days of depression and alarm, which preceded the act of emancipation. All that I mean to assert is, that landed property, in the British colonies, has touched the bottom, has found that bottom solid, has already risen considerably, and is now on a steady ascending march, towards the recovery of its highest value. One circumstance which greatly contributed to produce its depreciation, was the cry of interested persons who wished to run it down ; and the demand for it, which has arisen among these very persons, is now restoring it to its rightful value. Remember the old gentleman in Antigua, who is always complaining of the effects of freedom, and always buying land.

IV. The personal comforts of the laboring population, under freedom, are multiplied tenfold. In making this assertion, I do not mean to insinuate that they enjoyed no comforts under slavery. On many of the estates, they were well fed and clothed, and were kindly treated, in other respects. Their provision grounds were often ample, the poor and infirm were supported with the rest, medical attendance was given, and many of them found opportunities for saving money. On the other hand, I am fully aware that since the date of full (nominal) freedom, they have been partially subjected, in some colonies, to grievous vexation and oppression ; that in others, their wages are too low ; that the poor and infirm are not always adequately provided for ; and lastly, that medical attendance, in many cases, has been withdrawn.

Yet on the whole, the improvement in their physical condition and comforts, is wonderful. In the first place, they are no longer suffering, under the perpetual feeling of compulsion ; they are enjoying the pleasures of independence—the whip, the bilboes, the treadmill, are all withdrawn. And secondly, their dress and diet, are, both of them, very greatly better than they used to be, under slavery. They are constant customers now, at the stores of the hosier, the linen draper, the tailor, the shoemaker, and the grocer—of which delightful fact, we find both a sure evidence, and a happy consequence, in the vast increase—almost the doubling—of imports. Bread and meat are now commonly eaten by them. Remember their beautifully neat appearance at our meetings ; their handsome wedding dresses, the eggs consumed for their wedding cakes ; the wine, in their cottages, freely bestowed on weary pilgrims ; their boots and shoes, which they are so much afraid of spoiling in the mud ; the mules and horses, on which they come riding to their chapels ; their pic-nic dinners, their social feasts of temperance and freedom. Above all, remember their thriving little freeholds—their gradual, but steady, accumulation of wealth. Wherever they are fairly treated, the laborers of Jamaica, are already most favorably circumstanced. Teach them to improve the structure, arrangement, and furniture, of their cottages ; and to exchange all items of finery and luxury, for substantial domestic convenience—and it will be in vain to seek for a better-conditioned peasantry in any country of Europe.

V. Lastly, the moral and religious improvement of this people, under freedom, is more than equal to the increase of their comforts. Under this head, there are three points, deserving, respectively, of a distinct place in our memories. First, the rapid increase, and vast extent, of elementary and Christian education—schools for infants, young persons, and adults, multiplying in every direction. Secondly, the gradual, but decided diminution of crime, amounting, in many country districts, almost to its extinction. Thirdly, the happy change of the general, and almost universal, practice of concubinage, for the equally general adoption of marriage. “ Concubinage,” says Dr. Stewart in his letter to me, "the universal practice of the colored people, has wholly disappeared from amongst them. No young woman of color thinks of forming such connections now." What is more, the improved morality of the blacks, is reflecting itself on the white inhabitants—even the overseers are ceasing, one after another, from a sinful mode of life, and are forming reputable connections in marriage. But while these three points are confessedly of high importance, there is a fourth which at once embraces, and outweighs, them all—I mean the diffusion of vital Christianity. I know that great apprehensions were entertained—especially in this country—lest on the cessation of slavery, the negroes should break away at once from their masters, and their ministers. But freedom has come, and while their masters have not been forsaken, their religious teachers have become dearer to them than ever. Under the banner of liberty, the churches and meeting-houses have been enlarged and multiplied, the attendance has become regular and devout, the congregations have, in many cases, been more than doubled—above all, the conversion of souls (as we have reason to believe) has been going on to an extent never before known in these colonies. In a religious point of view, as I have before hinted, the wilderness, in many places, has indeed begun to "blossom as the rose." "Instead of the thorn," has "come up the fir-tree, and instead of the briar" has "come up the myrtle tree, and it shall be to the Lord for a name—for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off."

When we were engaged in waiting on the intellectual nobility of your land, at Washington, we restricted ourselves, with little exception, to a plain narrative of the good working of freedom in the West Indies—leaving it to them to draw the conclusions. But now, my dear friend, in a calm retreat, far away from persons in authority, and left to my own reflections, I feel that I may, without impropriety, go a little farther. I will therefore solicit thy attention to a plain, practical, contrast.

I know something of the slave states of North America—

many interesting weeks have I spent in Maryland, Virginia, and North Carolina; and some little time, both in South Carolina, and Georgia; and although I strictly confined myself to my functions as a minister of the Gospel, I travelled with my eyes and ears open, on the subject of slavery. I will therefore freely submit to thy consideration the result of my own inquiries and observations, in the slave states of your Union, on the five points now alluded to. These are, first, the quantity of labor procured under slavery; secondly, the comparative expense of the system; thirdly, the effect of it upon the value of property; fourthly, the comforts of the laboring people; and lastly, the state of morals and religion. On these several points, I beg leave to offer the following remarks.

I. The quantity of labor.—Many a time have I seen the slaves of Virginia and the Carolinas, at work in the fields, under the surveillance of a white overseer; and I could not believe that the work obtained was, in quantity, comparable to that of freemen; for the slaves were laboring without vigor, and the overseer was doing nothing. On inquiry, in South Carolina especially, I found that the quantity of work procured from the slaves, was even much less than I had anticipated. I understood that in a body of slaves, on any estate, the proportion in active service, at any given time, is not greater in America, than it was in the West Indies. There are the old, the infirm, the sick, the shammers of sickness, the mothers of young infants, the numerous children, &c., &c. All these belong to the dead weight, and they leave about one-third of the black population in actual operation. Now, this operative class has no stimulus to labor, except compulsion, i. e. the whip; and people neither will nor can perform by compulsion, an average quantity of continuous work. That they should do so, is contrary to the laws of nature, and to the constitution, not only of the negro, but of mankind. The result is, that the cotton and rice planters of Georgia and South Carolina, are very generally contenting themselves with half a day's work from their negroes. Their task is finished by twelve, one, or two o'clock; and for the rest of the day, they are left to themselves. Most willingly do I allow that this arrangement is to the credit of the benevolence of their masters, though I fear that this prevailing kindness has its occasional painful exceptions ; but the plain fact is, that the slave cannot fairly do more, or much more, than he is now doing. Compel him to perform the task of a freeman, and you drive him to death. Where the only stimulus to labor, which survives under slavery—I mean compulsion—is withdrawn, the work, of course, becomes light in proportion. I have no doubt that the slaves of my dear friend, Isaac E. Holmes, M. C., for Charleston, who would not, if he could help it, hurt a fly, lead as quiet and easy a life, as any people in the world. May they continue to enjoy that privilege, until they are finally set free ! It appears then, that the work obtained from three hundred slaves, in your southern states, cannot be estimated as more in quantity, than the fair day's labor, on wages, of one-sixth of the number, that is, of fifty freemen.

II. But the whole three hundred slaves must be supported ; and the expense of supporting them, in your states, is vastly greater than it was in the West Indies. I was surprised to hear, on excellent authority, when lately in South Carolina, that the average expense of maintaining a slave, on estates where they are liberally treated, is not less than $50 per annum. Three hundred slaves, at $50, is $15,000 ; or take it, for moderation's sake, at $30, and the result is $9,000. But these 300 slaves represent an enormous capital. Even now, the price of a good male slave at Savannah and Charleston, is $1,000—often it has risen to $1,500. Take $500 as the average price of men, women, and children, and your 300 slaves represent a capital of $150,000, on which interest, at 6 per cent., is $9,000. This added to the other $9,000 for their support, makes $18,000—a terrible debit indeed, in any man's annual profit and loss account. Such a debit may be overborne, for a time, by high prices of rice, cotton, or sugar ; but it is ruinous in its nature, and ruin, in the end, it is pretty sure to produce. Pay 50 free laborers $2 50 per week, as wages, and charge them half a dollar weekly for rent, (allowing two weeks in the year for holydays,) and the result is the small comparative annual expense of $5,000. Independently, however, of this calculation in figures, we are to remember the collateral truth, that slavery is wedded to extravagance; whatever may be the particular exceptions, its general tendency is to engender in the slaveholding population, those habits of indolence and wastefulness, which have, as thou canst not fail to be aware, accelerated the downfall of many a reputable family, and many a noble estate.

III. The value of landed property. As the favorable working of freedom in the West Indies, is proved by the rise in the value of property, so I think it must be allowed that a proof of the ruinous tendencies of slavery, is forced on the view even of the most superficial observer, who travels through Maryland, Virginia, North and South Carolina, and Georgia. Thousands and tens of thousands of acres which were once cultivated and productive, have fallen back, under the blight of slave-labor, into a wilderness; not, indeed, the wilderness of olden times, which teemed with the luxuriance of nature, but one without fertility and without hope. The properties to which I allude, the appearance of which cannot fail to be familiar to thyself, were once, doubtless, of considerable value; now (notwithstanding the general rule that land rises in value, as a nation rises) they are worth little or nothing. A change for the worse, in the appearance of the country, is conspicuous enough, even when one passes the line between Pennsylvania and Maryland; but I am told that it is still more striking, to the traveller who crosses the river from the state of Ohio, into thy own Kentucky. The soil on either side of the magnificent stream, being of equal fertility, the free-bank (it is said) blooms with prosperity, while the slave-bank presents the evident symptoms of neglect and decay.

I know that the monied value of property depends on a variety of causes—that it will, of course, rise, when the wilderness becomes settled, and when the population increases, as on the fertile shores of the Mississippi. I am also aware that the richness of an alluvial country, as in Louisiana, and frequent irrigation, as in the rice-grounds of South Carolina, will long counteract other causes which would otherwise produce decay. But it is the privilege of a philosophical statesman, in his examination of the statistics of the country to which he belongs, to analyze and classify causes and effects. On this ground, I am sure it cannot be concealed from thee, that slave labor, viewed in its distinct character, and separated from circumstances with which it is not essentially connected, has a uniform tendency to the exhaustion and depreciation of land. It is a consequence which belongs to the order of nature; but let us remember that the order of nature, is the ordinance of God—"He turneth a fruitful land into barrenness for the wickedness of them that dwell therein."

IV. Comforts of the negroes.—Nothing can be farther from my wish, than to heap abuse on the slaveholders of the southern states. Those with whom I have become acquainted, are amiable and benevolent men, and I give them full credit for kindness and consideration, in the treatment of their slaves. I can perfectly understand what must have been the faithful and affectionate feelings of thy own servant Charles, when, in Canada, he had thy full permission to take the flight of freedom, but averred that if all Canada was offered to him as a present, he would not leave his master. Had I been in your company, however, when this conversation took place, I might perhaps have addressed him in the language of Paul—"If thou mayest be made free, use it rather"—avail thyself of the opportunity—take the upward step in character and condition, which a good Providence opens before thee. And this advice would have been founded on the conviction that it can never tend to any man's comfort, in the long run, to be the subject of unqualified and arbitrary power. I am very much mistaken, if, under these circumstances, happiness is not the exception—discomfort the general rule. Ignorance of his own nature and destiny, is the only condition, as I believe, in which a slave can be permanently comfortable. But the infractions of comfort, to which the slaves of North America are liable, are too notorious to be disputed. The treatment of them, as it regards food and raiment, must and will depend, not merely on the dispositions, but on the means, of their masters. The want of ready money, in the slaveholder, often bears more severely on the slave, than the want of kindness. Again, we well know that masters are sometimes driven, for many months, from their properties, by the insalubrity of the location, and that the slaves are left under the care of overseers—persons of sufficiently low grade, to be induced to risk their lives, for a pecuniary compensation. This must be a fruitful source of suffering.

In order to form a correct view, however, on the present subject, it is enough for me to recur to scenes which I have myself witnessed. Although, in travelling through some of your slave states, I have often observed the negroes well clad, and in good bodily condition, their general aspect has not appeared to me to be that of happiness. Seldom have I seen anything among them, like the cheerful smile of the peasant of Jamaica; and sometimes, they have been half-naked, and wretched in their demeanor. When I saw large companies of black people following either the masters who owned them, or the merchants who had bought them, to some distant state, the lame ones compelled to keep up with their associates, and yet limping behind, from very weakness—when, in one of the sea islands of South Carolina, I looked on a gang of them, giinning cotton, working as if they were on the tread-wheel, their sweat falling from them like rain, and the overseer sitting by, with his cow-hide alongside of him—when, in the negro jail of Charleston, I was surrounded by a large number of negroes, who had been sent thither, without any intervention of law or magistracy, but at the sole will of their holders, to be punished on the treadwheel, or with whipping (not exceeding fifteen lashes) according to directions on an accompanying ticket—when, lastly, in the iron-grated depôt at Baltimore, I visited the poor creatures who had been sold away from their families and friends, and were about to be transmitted, on speculation, like so many bales of cotton or worsted, to the far-distant South—when these scenes passed, one after another, in review before me, it was impossible for me to think highly of the comforts of your enslaved negroes.

The slave market at Charleston is held, as I understand, in the open streets, immediately under the walls of the exchange. There, our fellow-men are bought and sold without reserve. True indeed it is, that many high-minded, benevolent, holders, refuse to sell their slaves under any circumstances, and that many others avoid selling them, except in undivided families. But the laws of bankruptcy and executorship, are fraught with no such tender feelings; and in the breaking up and disposal of estates, husbands and wives, parents and children, are often sold—irrespectively of each other—each to the highest bidder. With such liabilities at hand, where can be the solid happiness of the slave of North America? I would, however, recur to my original ground—no man, who has sense and knowledge enough, to reflect upon himself, can enjoy true comfort, while the law regards him as the property of another. One of your most enlightened senators, furnished me with an instructive anecdote in reference to this subject. A pro-slavery Methodist minister, in our friend's presence, was, one day, questioning a well-educated negro, much respected by his master, and amply supplied with the conveniences of life. "You have your wife and family about you," said the minister; "you have a good house; you and your children are well clad; you sit down, day by day, to a well-provided table; you are even engaged as a preacher to your brethren—why then are you anxious to be free? what can you wish for more?" "Sir," replied the negro, "I wish to lay my hand on my heart, and say, My flesh is MY OWN."

V. Morals and religion. That there are in the slave states of North America, a great number of persons, both white and black, who are both moral and religious, I cannot in the least degree doubt. I have witnessed some plain tokens of the fact, in a large number of decent and attentive congregations, consisting of both masters and slaves, who have kindly given me their company at meetings for worship of my own appointment. Far be it from me to exclude either of these parties from the pale of salvation; or to forget the equal applicability of our common Christianity, to bond and free. Nevertheless, as slaveholders give way to the development of divine truth, in their own minds, they will not fail to hear a voice whispering within them—"Touch not the unclean thing—cease to do evil." That slavery is sinful, not only in its abuse, but in its own nature, seems to me to be evident from its practical results. Two of these, with which an American statesman cannot fail to be familiar, I may now briefly mention—they are in themselves amply sufficient to prove my case. The first, is the dreadful licentiousness which notoriously prevails in your slave states, not merely among the negroes themselves, but more especially between whites and blacks. Here indeed amalgamation speeds its course without reserve, and in a criminal form. An institution which constantly leads to this result—under which fathers are sometimes known, to bequeath or sell their own children—must needs be, in itself, a desperate moral evil. The second result alluded to is compulsory ignorance. Evil in its root—incurably evil—opposed to the will of an intelligent and benevolent Creator—and deadly in its moral tendency—must be a system, which shuts out half or two thirds of the population of a state, from even sipping at the fountain of knowledge—which proclaims to a multitudinous rising generation the stern decree, "You shall never be taught to read the Bible!"

I have now drawn a contrast between freedom in the West Indies, and slavery in North America, on five distinct points—the quantity of labor, the expense of cultivation, the value of real property, the comforts of the negro, and lastly, morals and religion. I have endeavored to avoid exaggeration, in the statement of either side; but who shall deny that the scale preponderates, with immense weight and power, on the side of freedom? Who can doubt that the American statesman is bound by every principle of philosophy as well as philanthropy, of policy, as well as justice, to desist from the support of slavery, and henceforth to labor in the good old cause, of emancipation?

We had great pleasure in relating our story of the West Indies, to a political rival of thine, for whom I have a great personal esteem—I mean John C. Calhoun. He listened with the greatest attention to the narrative, and after I had brought it to a close, admitted his belief not only in the accuracy of the relation itself, but in that of the five points partly pecuniary, and partly physical and moral, on which it furnished such ample evidences of the favorable working of freedom. He then fixed his eagle eye upon me, and cross-questioned me respecting the political state of Jamaica. This process was followed up by a rapid, declamatory argument, in which he endeavored to shew that the emancipation of the blacks in the West Indies, was safe to the white inhabitants, only because it was guarded by the strong arm of Great Britain—that the two races are so distinct and opposite, that without the intervention of such a power, they could not be expected to live together in peace, in the capacity of free-men—that where the blacks preponderate in numbers, the whites would be overwhelmed—that where the numbers are even, there would arise interminable violence and strife—that in America therefore, the political objections to the abolition of slavery, are not to be surmounted. Such I believe was the substance of his argument, which was listened to with great apparent delight, by several of his allies from the south, who were present on the occasion. To hear the eloquent argumentation of our friend, was indeed a great pleasure to ourselves. I said it was a treat to me to hear J. C. Calhoun reason, and that I would not attempt to reply to him—at any rate not without previous reflection. At the same time I ventured to observe, first that political influence, when obtained in connection with the acquisition of property, is in its nature safe; and secondly, that the principles of the Gospel of Christ, were the adequate remedy for all prejudices of race, cast, or color.

Since that time, I have often reflected on the Senator's argument, and my own mind is well satisfied of its essential fallacy.

First with regard to Jamaica, the strong arm of the British Government, was indeed considered necessary for the protection of the whites, during slavery, when the planters and their families were on the edge of a volcano which might any day explode; and notwithstanding that protection, I believe it may truly be said, that an explosion must long since have taken place, had it not been for the unrivalled patience and forbearance of the negro race. But now, under freedom, the volcano is extinguished; the planters and their families are in perfect safety; the protecting arm of the third party is no longer requisite, and to a great extent, it has already, been withdrawn. We were thoroughly satisfied, in all the islands which we visited, that the few troops remaining in them, were, in a political point of view, utterly needless, and might be withdrawn to a man, with entire impunity—and this I believe is the general opinion of the planters themselves. In the mean time, we did not find that any inconvenience is arising, from the constitutional differences of the two races. Certainly there is no antipathy of the blacks towards the whites, but rather the feelings of respect, deference, and affection; and on the other hand, the prejudice of the whites against the blacks, is greatly on the decline. Although there is very little intermarriage between them, the distinctions of color are already forgotten to a degree which we could not have anticipated. All are now on one political level; and the influence of each individual, whether black, brown, or white, is left to depend, as it ought to do, on its legitimate grounds—namely, property, talent, education, and character. As the negroes make progress in these elements of influence, their political power will of course increase; but that power will be conservative, and not destructive.

That the position of things which I have now described, as existing in the West Indies, is one of harmlessness and safety, cannot reasonably be denied. Experience has already proved it to be so, to a considerable extent. Nor can I perceive a single sound reason, why it should be otherwise, were it tried in the slave states of your own union.

While it is obvious that the juxta-position of the two races already exists, and cannot be avoided, it is to me equally evident that the true danger of that juxta-position, lies in the relations of slavery. These are unnatural; they are opposed to the eternal rule of right, and they contain, in themselves, the seeds of violence and confusion. Abolish them therefore in faith; bestow on men of all complexions, an equality of political right, and what is the consequence? The whole population, is thrown on the operation of natural and legitimate principles of action, every man finds his own just level, religion spreads under the banner of freedom, and all is quietness, order and peace. Such is the lot of the British West Indian colonies; and such, I humbly but ardently hope, will soon be the happy condition of every one of the United States.

I am, &c., &c.

LETTER XIII.

CUBA.

Providence, R. I., Seventh-month (July) 1st, 1840.

MY DEAR FRIEND,

When we sailed away from Jamaica, as mentioned in a former letter, we soon found that we were in the midst of an agreeable and interesting company. It consisted, of Samuel B. Parsons, a young friend of ours from New-York, who had met us in Jamaica, twenty-two other Americans, including several amiable women, on their return from Santa Cruz to their native shores, and our Spanish friend Cabrera, who was well able to converse with us, both in French and English. He is a person of remarkable intelligence, courteous manners, and as we have every reason to believe, sound moral and religious principle. During the awful conflicts by which Spain has of late years been so fearfully convulsed, he has been seven times condemned to death. Once by the decree of a Carlist General, he was sitting, with the handkerchief bound about his eyes, on the point of being publicly shot, when the tables were suddenly turned, and his rescue was effected. Singular indeed are the providential circumstances which from time to time, turned up for his deliverance, often through the intervention of intrepid women, and he is now one of the most respected and useful servants of the Queen Regent. Of the accomplished education, liberal views, and benevolent intentions, of that royal lady, he gave us an excellent account.—Of course, we did not fail to implore the exertion of his influence with her, for the actual suppression, of their already legally abolished slave trade.

Our voyage was one of nine days, and although of longer duration, than it was reasonable to expect, was remarkably pleasant. One circumstance alone threw a gloom over the circle—the extreme illness of two of our passengers, in whom the genial climate of Santa Cruz had failed to arrest the progress of consumption. One of these individuals has since finished her mortal career, in the faith, and hopes, of the Christian.

Every morning after breakfast, we assembled on deck, for the audible reading of a portion of Scripture, on which occasions no one was a more willing or attentive auditor than our friend the Spaniard. He is a Roman Catholic, as to his habits and connections, but free from the superstitions of popery. Our Scripture reading was generally followed up by the Governor's school. Ignorant as we were, even of the right sounds of the letters, he kindly undertook to teach several of our party, Spanish; and certainly, if he manifests, in his political duties, the same orderly and perspicacious intellect, which he then applied to the instruction of his pupils, he must be a valuable agent, under any Government. He so far succeeded that they presented to him, before we separated, a short address in his own language, which may serve as a memorandum of our pleasant intercourse.

Gentil maestro humano
 Claro, benigno, sano,
 Tu sabes que lo vano,
 Solo es de arena un grano.
 Por tu noble entereza,
 Peligrò tu cabeza,
 Mientras horrible guerra
 Agitaba la tierra ;
 Mas Dios te ha preservado
 Dal enemigo hado,
 Y la gran Reyna bella,
 Quisò poner la estrella
 Que el solo honor ha hecho
 Sobre tu ilustre pecho.
 Oh, muy felice fuera,
 Por tener un CABRERA !

The weather was delightful ; and the contemplation of the ever varying beauties of ocean scenery, occupied many an agreeable hour, as we gradually made progress on our voyage. One day a heron or crane, of speckled white and brown, found her rest on our rigging ; at another time, a number of large birds of a bright scarlet hue, were seen flying, in a row, at some distance from the vessel. They were probably specimens of the scarlet ibis—or perhaps flamingos. Schools of porpoises were often seen from on board the ship, and never seen without amusement ; the smooth agility of the leap with which they rise for a moment out of the water, and at the same time move rapidly onward on their journey, impresses one with the idea of perfect bodily enjoyment. I was in hopes that we should sail within sight of the Isle of Pines, near the southren coast of Cuba, which is said to be very beautiful—once the resort of pirates, and still probably, of slavers—but we passed it at a distance of thirty miles, and saw nothing of it. Soon afterwards we came in sight of the low cape Antonio, which would have proved to Columbus, had he pursued his voyage a few leagues further, that Cuba was no part of his imagined continent. After doubling the cape, we had about one hundred miles to make to windward, before we could reach our port. Baffling winds and calms detained us for two or three days ; our last pig and fowl had been eaten ; we were beginning, somewhat seriously to long for the land—when one delightful evening, a favorable breeze sprung up and brought us, under flying colors and full sail, past the Moro castle and lighthouse, into the port of Havana. It was the 9th of the Fourth-month (April.)

The scene was very animating and beautiful. The Moro is built on a dark rock, on the left of the entrance ; on a hill above it, stand the Cabañas, a fort of prodigious dimensions, in which is stationed a large body of Spanish soldiers. Report makes the numbers of them in Cuba, not less than fifteen thousand—a guard, be it observed, for the protection of the white inhabitants, against their negroes, in a state of slavery ; but I have reason to believe that the number of troops is exaggerated.

Before us lay the wide spreading, old city, said to contain one hundred and twenty thousand inhabitants; a few green hills were seen in the distance; and when we had passed the Moro, the land-locked port full of shipping, including three British-men-of-war, and surmounted by some handsome public buildings, were suddenly opened to our view. It is a port of great resort and traffic, far exceeding, in this respect, any other in the dominions of Spain.

With the exception of the Governor of Madrid, we continued on board for the night; and early the next morning, received a notice, that we were all permitted to land, without undergoing any of the usual formalities. The British Consul, Charles Tolmè, came on board to pay his respects to some of our sister passengers. I found that he was an old friend of mine, whom I had not seen for some thirty years. He gave me a hearty welcome, and accompanied me, on our landing, to the Government House, as I wished to pay my respects to the Prince of Anglona, the Captain General of Cuba. Our friend Cabrera had already conveyed to him a letter of introduction which I had brought with me from the Governor of Jamaica; and I considered that an early call, was due to him from a friend to the slaves, and a Christian minister, whom he had so kindly permitted to land, at all hazards. The Prince, who is one of the old nobility of Spain, is a person of small stature, and by no means imposing in his appearance, but of good talents, and liberal politics. He received us with great politeness, and even apologised to our consul for my having been refused a passport in Jamaica. He spoke French fluently, and talked to us for a few minutes, in a friendly manner. No opportunity offered for conversation on important topics, and we soon retired. I was afterwards informed that it is the uniform practice of the slave traders, both in Porto Rico and Cuba, to fee the respective Governors, pretty largely, for every African imported into those islands. The late Governor of Porto Rico is said to have retired, in consequence, with an immense fortune. The price of connivance, now fixed in Cuba, is reported to be twelve dollars per slave. Douceurs of inferior amount are bestowed on subordinate officers; but alas! the profits of the slave trade are such as to render these iniquitous allowances, but a trifling per centage.

The streets of the city of Havana, are extremely narrow, and we found the heat oppressive; but excellent quarters were obtained for us at a boarding house kept by an agreeable American family of the name of West; and locomotion is rendered easy, by the numerous volantes—small one-horse carriages, with overshadowing leather tops and enormous wheels, driven by negro postillions, in high Spanish boots. The streets are thronged by a busy population—all talking Spanish. Every thing in Havana, is entirely foreign to the eye and ear of an Englishman or American, and it was well that our friend Cabrera had been training some of us to the utterance of a few broken sentences, in the language of the country.

In the evening, under the guidance of the British consul's agreeable lady, we visited the Passéo, a public road and promenade formed of late years, under the Government of Tacon, a Spaniard of extraordinary energy, who is said to have found Cuba a den of thieves and robbers, and to have left it, when he finally resigned his trust, in comparatively good civil order. He made examples of some notorious offenders of high rank, instituted an effective police, built a great prison, and gave much attention to roads and other necessary internal improvements; but he is said to have been no enemy to the slave-trade. At the end of the Passéo is Tacon's villa and garden—the latter laid out, though on a small scale, after the style of the gardens at Versailles. After a walk through this scene of somewhat formal beauty, we ascended the hill, on which stands Fort Principe. Here we obtained a noble view of the city, the harbor, the abundant shipping, the Moro castle, the Cabañas on the opposite heights, and the sea as the boundary of the prospect. In general however the country round Havana, is far from being picturesque, and is cultivated chiefly with maize for fodder. Many miles must be travelled inland, before one can reach either a mountainous district, or those luxuriant fields of sugar-cane, which are managed by a mere process of ratooning, without the insertion of new plants, for twenty, thirty, or even fifty years in succession. Ratooning is the annual raising of fresh canes from the same plant, and the number of years during which it may be carried on, is an index of the strength and richness of the soil. While this process may be continued in Cuba for so great a length of years, the virgin land is so rich, that a mere touch of the hoe, is sufficient to prepare it for the reception of new cane. In most of the British colonies the ratooning lasts only three or four years; and the ground requires the laborious process of holing, or some adequate substitute, as a preparation for planting. No wonder, therefore, that the sugars of our colonies have always been undersold by the planters of Cuba.

The following day, Fourth-month (April) 10th, was one of memorable but painful interest.

We were engaged to breakfast with the British consul; but before going to his house, we availed ourselves of the cool air of the early morning, in order to visit "El jardin del Obispo"—the villa and gardens of the late archbishop—which are quite as worthy of inspection as those of the Governor Tacon. The objects which chiefly attracted us there, were the shady avenues of mango trees, a living alligator kept in a small reservoir, and the greater rarity, in a tropical climate, of a cold stream of clear water, in which it was a luxury to bathe. At the consul's, we met Capt. Hawkins, of the Romney man-of-war, stationed in the port of Havana, for the reception of the Africans who may be taken out of slave-ships, condemned by the Court of Mixed Commission. As the slave trade of Cuba is now rarely carried on under Spanish colors, neither the judges of that court, nor our friend Capt. Hawkins have much, if any, business; but they are useful, nevertheless, as watchers of the iniquities of Cuba.

After breakfast, we accompanied Capt. Hawkins, and one of his friends, to his home on the waters, and were well satisfied with the ample accommodations, which it is calculated to afford the rescued Africans, whenever such an asylum may be required. The captain and his friend are deeply and honestly interested in the cause of freedom—no frequent virtue, and no slight praise, in any one who even sojourns at Havana! After we had examined the ship, he conveyed us, in his boat, on a cruise about the harbor, in order to give us a quiet view of the slavers. Five of them were then stationed there, in the open face of day, notoriously fitted up for the traffic, and ready to slip off for Africa, for fresh supplies of bultos (bales—so the slave merchants call the negroes) so soon as a dark or stormy night should afford them an opportunity of escaping the vigilance of the British cruiser, Snake, then in port at Havana. They consisted of two brigs, one of which had already landed three hundred and fifty slaves, the Socorro ship built for one thousand; the Grandes Antillas, for twelve hundred; and lastly, the notorious Venus, now called La Ducheza de Braganza, Baltimore-built, which had taken in eleven hundred slaves on the coast of Africa, and after losing two hundred and forty, in the middle passage, had landed eight hundred and sixty in Cuba. We understood that the three larger of these vessels, were intended for Mozambique, on the eastern coast of Africa—a voyage of great length, for which their size peculiarly adapts them. They are fitted up with guns, and like the brigs or schooners, are constructed with consummate art, for the purpose of swift sailing. They are utterly unsuitable for a legitimate commerce. The painful compression of the wretched negroes, in the holds of these vessels, during their voyage across the Atlantic, is too horrible to be described. Surely this traffic is the most odious wickedness that ever disgraced or afflicted mankind!

On our return to the shore, Capt. Hawkins conducted us to the office of the British commissioner, Kennedy, with whom, together with his secretary, we enjoyed the privilege of a full and interesting conversation. He is well informed respecting the iniquities which are practised at Havana, and gave us a sad account both of the slave trade, and slavery, of Cuba.

The commissioner reckons the number of slaves annually imported into Cuba, (chiefly in the immediate neighborhood of Havana,) at twenty-five thousand. On farther inquiry, however, I found they are often landed in creeks and bays, both on the northern and southern coasts, out of the limits of our friend's observation; and there is reason to believe that his estimate is below the mark. The profits of the trade are from one hundred to two hundred per cent.; and if only one-third of the negroes, received on the African coast, are brought safely to Cuba, the speculation answers. Hence, it follows, that neither the risks which they run of capture by the British cruisers, nor the deaths of a large proportion of the negroes on the voyage, are circumstances of any importance to the slave-merchant—they require only a moderate insurance.

Reckless of every consideration connected either with honesty or humanity, the captains of these slavers often make piratical attacks on each other. I saw a letter from one of them, describing to the slave trading house in Cuba, by which he was employed, his having been forcibly robbed of all his bultos (bales); and of his having replenished his vessel, by committing, in his turn, a similar depredation. But the whole affair is one of robbery and murder. Of one feature in the slave trade and slavery of Cuba, I had no knowledge until I was on the spot. The importation consists almost entirely of men, and we were informed that on many of the estates, not a single female is to be found. Natural increase is disregarded. The Cubans import the stronger animals, like bullocks, work them up, and then seek a fresh supply. This surely is a system of most unnatural barbarity.

In the afternoon, after an early dinner at the Consul's, we sallied forth on an excursion of rather a delicate nature; it was to visit the barracoons—receptacles where the newly imported Africans are stowed, and offered for sale. Our two young friends went in one direction; M. Day and myself, under the guidance of a young Guernseyman, in another. He and I visited three out of six of these establishments, all of them being within two miles of the city. They have been built, and are conducted, on private speculation, and although the whole business is utterly illegal, their proprietors set at defiance all notions of shame, or of concealment from the eye of Government. We were not very successful in our attempt. The first barracoon at which we called, was empty, and after walking over it, we had only to acknowledge that it was commodious and airy—for these places, for filthy lucre's sake, are intended to be curative of the effects of the middle passage. At the second, the keeper, who was the friend of our young guide, gave us an equally easy admission. We found in it about forty invalid Africans who had just been imported. They looked emaciated and melancholy. A child lying on a dresser, wrapped in a blanket, was in the article of death. The whole scene, with the exception of an idle laughter, was one of mute sorrow and suffering—heart-rending to ourselves. This barracoon was built to contain one thousand negroes. Just at sundown, we arrived at a third of similar size. It is close by the garden of Tacon, which is a place of constant public resort. It was evidently full of negroes, whose voices we distinctly heard. We walked, unbidden, into the courtyard, and saw the keeper turn the key of the last lock, after having shut them up for the night. Our guide timorously approached the scowling master, and begged admission for us, into the dormitories. He gruffly replied, “No son negros aqui”—there are no negroes here. We were therefore obliged to retire, not being much disposed to be ourselves incarcerated in this den of iniquity. On the grass, outside of the gate, however, there were sitting, dressed in coarse shirts marked with the letter D, about forty young men—a lot which had just been selected and purchased. The buyer was standing over them, with a memorandum-book in his hand, viewing them as if they had been oxen. Good cause had he for an attentive survey of their persons, for he had probably given $400 or $500 per head, for them—from $16,000 to $20,000 for the lot. Work them as he may, we could not conceive that this nefarious investment in human flesh and blood, could answer his purpose—especially as so large a proportion of these miserable beings die in the seasoning. Our young friends found their way to a fourth barracoon, where they saw several hundred newly imported children. They were in lean condition, and many of them with marks, on their skins, of bruises or blows, probably received from rubbing against the pannels of the vessel, in which they had been unmercifully crammed, like herrings in a barrel. We returned to our quarters at night, well satisfied with having seen these horrors, and with the information which a most interesting day had afforded us, but heart-sickened and afflicted. O, the unutterable difference between these hapless, hopeless, creatures, and the well-conditioned free peasantry of Jamaica!

The next day was the first of the week. A day of rest and worship, it cannot be said to be at Havana. A certain proportion of the population do, indeed, attend the Roman Catholic churches, with a good deal of decency; but the mass seems to be given up to the utter neglect of religious duty. No Protestant worship is tolerated, not even in the house of the British consul. A Friends' meeting may happily be held, by the very few, as well as the multitude; and in a company of six persons, at our boarding-house, we were permitted to experience some comfort and refreshment, in our usual simple mode of worship. We then placed ourselves under the care of James Norman, a religious merchant of the city, who led us to several of the public institutions—two lunatic asylums, in bad order; a beneficencia, or endowed orphan house, in which we found about three hundred white children, under pretty good tutelage; an excellent asylum for lepers of all colors; and, finally, Tacon's prison, which was filled with eight hundred criminals—one side of the building being appropriated, to blacks, the other, to whites. The white population of Cuba, as compared to the black, is said to be as one hundred and thirty to one hundred. In the prison, the side allotted to the whites appeared to be the more crowded of the two. The prisoners work on the roads and break stones, but when not at work, are locked up, night and day, in large companies, and are left to themselves to grow worse and worse, corrupted, and corrupting one another. Within the walls, we observed a rum-shop, which cannot fail to accelerate the degenerating process. We sincerely felt for an American captain who was shut up with this ruffian multitude. He was once much respected, but had been convicted of secreting money on board his vessel, and after sixteen months of previous imprisonment, (owing, I believe, to his own wish to delay his trial) had been sentenced to be imprisoned here for six years. Miguel de Cabrera kindly undertook to lay his case before the Queen of Spain; and we hope, notwithstanding his acknowledged guilt, he will soon be liberated from his present miserable allotment. The whole scene afforded glaring evidences of the low, and even desperate, state of morals in this slave trading community.

In the afternoon we were summoned on board the Whitmore, to which we were accompanied by our kind friend, Cabrera, and the British Consul. After taking an affectionate leave of them, we weighed anchor, and so concluded our interesting visit of three days to the city of Havana. In consequence, however, of some little nautical accident, we failed to clear the harbor that night, and accordingly availed ourselves of a quiet evening, in holding a religious meeting with our passengers, apart from all disturbing causes. Early the next morning we again passed under the frown of the Moro, and commenced our voyage to Savannah, in Georgia.

I know not that I should have troubled thee with this section of our narrative, had I not wished to solicit thy attention to a subject of deep interest and importance, respecting which this short sojour in Cuba, gave us an opportunity of obtaining some information —I mean, American participation in the African slave-trade.

I. The building of the vessels. The slave-traders of Cuba require vessels of peculiar powers of speed, and otherwise of a construction suited to the slave-trade. These vessels the Americans are preeminently able to build, having at their command, the timber, the capital, and the mechanical skill. The consequence is that there is the usual correspondence of the supply with the demand, and nine-tenths of the vessels employed in the Cuba slave-trade, have of late years been built in America—chiefly at Baltimore. There cannot be the least doubt that the builders are aware of their intended purpose, the construction of them being decidedly distinguished from the usual form of merchant ships. Often they are made to the order of the Spanish slave-trading houses in Cuba, and when built, belong to those houses. Nevertheless, they are furnished with American registers, and sail to Havana, under American colors. This of course is a fraudulent transaction. In many other cases, they are sent to Cuba on speculation; and on their arrival there, are sold to the slave-traders as required.

II. The abuse of the American flag. The treaty of Great Britain with Spain, A. D. 1835, renders vessels under the Spanish flag, seizable as slavers, even when they have no slaves on board, if they are fitted up, for the traffic, with the usual distinguishing articles. These are shackles, cutlasses, gunpowder, false decks, gratings, a superfluity of water casks, extra supplies of provisions, &c. &c. Precisely the same regulations, by a late act of Parliament, are made to apply to Portugal. Before that act was passed, the Spanish slave-traders, in order to avoid the effect of this provision in the treaty, constantly made use of Portuguese colors and papers. These are often forged at Havana, or otherwise obtained and used in a fictitious and fraudulent manner. Notwithstanding the act of Parliament relative to Portugal, the flag of that nation is still preferred to that of Spain; because when captured under the Spanish flag, the slavers are brought under the notice of the joint-commission court in Havana, and when they are condemned, the parties are heavily fined. The Spanish authorities take care to be well feed for the vessels captured, as well as for the slaves successfully imported, and cover their connivance at the traffic, by punishing it severely, when it is detected. Nevertheless, as neither the Spanish nor the Portuguese flag now afford any protection from the British cruisers, recourse is had, to the greatest possible extent, to the flag of the United States.

This object is effected by various contrivances. When an American-built vessel is sold to a slave-trading house in Havana, it is often fraudulently transferred at that port, from the master to the mate, and proceeds to Africa under command of the latter, and with American colors and papers. After obtaining the wished-for supply of slaves (during which process it still maintains its Americanism) it assumes its Portuguese phase, for which it is secretly prepared at Havana, and returns at a venture, to Cuba—using all its speed, to elude the British cruisers. On the return voyage, the mate becomes ostensibly a passenger, but in fact retains his command of the vessel.

Another contrivance for retaining the American flag, up to the same point in the iniquitous process, is that of purchasing the Baltimore ship or clipper, deliverable on the coast of Africa—half the price being paid when the bargain is struck, and the other half on her delivery. Under this arrangement, she of course clears out for Africa, with her American registers and under the flag of the Union. When she arrives on the African coast, her registers are cut in halves, and returned by any two conveyances which may offer, to the grantors; and again the Portuguese phase is assumed, for the return voyage.

III. Aid given by American merchantmen. If, after all, these slave-ships sail from Havana for Africa, under the Spanish or Portuguese flag, they have still another method left of eluding the force of the treaty, or act of Parliament, already described. It is to leave behind them those fittings up, and distinguishing articles, which would lead to their condemnation. In the mean time, these are conveyed by American merchant ships, which come to Havana in ballast, to the slave depôts on the African coast, where the Spanish slaver, after an uninterrupted voyage, finds her needful furniture and supplies, ready for her use. And with what cargoes do these American merchant ships (which I presume are constructed for the purpose) return from the African coast? Generally, with cargoes of bultos—bales—living rational beings from Africa, whom they convey to the Spanish colonies—or sometimes probably to Texas—or possibly even to some safe and hidden resort, within the boundary of your own Union. Thou wilt recollect that the slaver, Hound, which landed three hundred and seventy-two slaves in Porto Rico, and the schooner we saw in Antigua, which had performed a similar errand, were both American, and under American colors. Eighteen such vessels, have lately been reported nominatim, by the agents of the Colonization Society, as observed on the African coast, in the act of carrying on the slave trade.

IV. The involvement of the consular office. The sale of American vessels, at Havana, to the slave traders in that city, whether immediate or deliverable at the coast of Africa—the transfer of them from masters to mates—and finally the clearing cut of any vessel under your flag, from Havana for Africa—are all of them transactions which necessarily come under the official notice of the American consulate at that port. We were informed that the late consul was doubly cognizant of them, because the other side of some of these transactions, must have come before him in his capacity of Portuguese agent. But cognizance does not prove guilt, and the real question is, whether, under these circumstances, he availed himself of all his opportunities and powers, in order to put a stop to these iniquities. We may charitably hope, that this was the case. I was however grieved to observe, that a public defender of N. P. Trist, in a late anonymous pamphlet published at Boston, acknowledges that the late consul entertains doubts “whether the slave trade, considered in itself, is not a positive benefit to its supposed victims.” This is a dangerous state of mind for any British or American resident in Havana. I venture, with great deference, to remark, that no persons ought to be permitted to occupy your consular office, in that place, who are not placed far above the reach of Cuban douceurs, not only by common honesty, but by a deep, determined, and unalterable, abhorrence of the slave trade in itself.

V. The application of capital. That a considerable capital is employed in the different modes of aiding the slave trade which have now been described, and especially in the building of vessels, cannot be denied. But it is commonly reported, I fear not without some foundation, that in some of your commercial cities, American capital is invested in the trade itself—that some unworthy citizens of your republic, are actual and direct participants, both in the carrying on, and in the profits, of this abominable traffic. It appears then first, that a large proportion of the vessels engaged in the Cuban slave trade, are built in the ports of the United States—secondly, that the American flag is borrowed by the Spanish slave traders to a large extent—thirdly, that American merchantmen are engaged, on their own account, in conveying the materials of the slave trade to the coast of Africa—fourthly, that most of these transactions pass under the official review of your consulate at Havana—and fifthly, that American capital is indirectly—possibly, directly—engaged in the slave trade to an indefinite extent.

I have now laid the whole case before thee, as it has come within my own scope of observation and enquiry, and I trust I have done so, with clearness and moderation. When I have stated the same case verbally, to some of the leading men of America, I have been reminded by them of the inconsistency of Englishmen. Certain it is, that the articles used in the slave trade, and often transmitted to Africa on American bottoms, are manufactured in England, and employ a large amount of British capital. The lamentable fact is, that filthy lucre, is often found too strong for moral principle, on both sides the water. But this, my dear friend, is surely no affair of national rivalry. It is one under the weight of which, the petty jealousy of politics, and even the pride of an honest patriotism, ought to subside into nothing. The virtuous public of both nations, and the governments of both nations, ought surely to unite, with the utmost cordiality, in their endeavors to extinguish the most inordinate system of cruelty and wickedness that ever stained the annals of mankind. Let America and England fully join issue on this momentous subject—and the work is done.

In the mean time, something may, I trust, be effected, by legislative enactment. It seems very desirable first, that the laws against building ships evidently calculated for the slave trade, and only for this purpose, should be rendered as clear and stringent as possible; secondly, that the consular office at Havana, should be armed with greater powers, to stop these iniquitous proceedings in transitu. Such were the conclusions to which our own observation and reflection had brought us; and we were rejoiced to find, when at Washington, that a bill for these very purposes, had been introduced to Congress, by our worthy friend John Davis, Senator from Massachusetts. I am told that it has since passed into a law. But we conceive that preventive measures on the coast of Africa, are still more important. We were informed, on high authority, at Washington, that it was the indefinite extent only, to which the mutual right of search was granted under the presidency of Monroe, that was found to be inconvenient, and led to a change of system on the part of this country; and that had this mutual right been confined to certain limits near the African coast, no objection would ever have been made to it. Such being the facts of the case, I would venture to suggest to thy calm consideration, whether within these safe limits, the provision in question might not yet be conceded. There can be no doubt that such a measure, more than almost any other, would facilitate the suppression of the odious traffic. May I venture to entreat thee, to make use of the weight of thy own influence, in favor of the affirmative settlement of this essential point?

Before I leave the subject of Cuba, I think it right to remark, that all persons who visit that island, must be aware of the distinction between the newly imported slaves, and those who have been born on the island, or have been long employed in the service of their masters. The former, called Bozales, being illegally introduced, are not regarded, by the laws of Spain, as the property of their holders. In the much agitated case of the Amistad, the decision of the local courts of Connecticut, against the delivering up of the slaves, was grounded, as I understand, on the fact that these persons were not Ladinos—i. e. true Cuban slaves—but Bozales, who are no slaves at all, in the eye of the Spanish law. Now we are aware that an appeal has been made, against that decision, to the Supreme Court of the United States. I would remark, that should the decree be reversed, it would have the injurious effect of giving the sanction of the highest legal tribunal of this country, to that shameful traffic by which these miserable men were brought into illegal bondage—into the condition of Bozales; and thus the co-operation of unworthy citizens of the Union, in promoting that traffic, would be encouraged and confirmed.

That so great a calamity may be averted, must be the earnest desire of all who wish well to the cause of justice and humanity.

I am, &c., &c.

RETURN TO AMERICA.

Providence, R. I. Seventh-month (July) 3d, 1840.

MY DEAR FRIEND,

In order to bring our narrative to a satisfactory close, I must make a few remarks respecting our voyage home, which none of our company are in much danger of forgetting. This was a time, generally speaking, of quiet enjoyment; though we could not but watch with some sorrow and anxiety, the apparent descent of our two invalids, one of each sex, towards "the valley of the shadow of death." Our course, for the first day, lay to the eastward, and gave us the opportunity of surveying a considerable part of the northern coast of Cuba. We obtained a good view of the entrance of the harbor of Matanzas, about fifty miles east of Havana. The mountains which rise behind it, are of greater elevation than any land in Cuba, which we had before seen. One of them, remarkable for its square outline, recalls the idea of a loaf of bread, and is called, "El pan de Matanzas." We now took our last leave of Cuba, and turned towards the north-east, our course lying through the channel which separates the dangerous shores of Florida, from the still more fatal rocks of the Bahama Islands. The wind was contrary, and we should have made slow progress, as we beat along from one side of the channel to another, had it not been for the Gulph Stream, which some of us had, more than once, encountered as an enemy, but which now proved an effective friend, in impelling us forward, four knots in the hour, in our right course, by the mere force of its current. This stream, is by the mariners, technically called the "Gulph;"

and the following portrait of it, which served to amuse some of our company, is said to be exact.

Of all the creatures here below
 Or virtuous, or vicious,
 O Gulph of gulphs, full well we know,
 Thou art the most capricious.
 We have seen thee locked in a hopeless calm,
 And tossed with waves prodigious,
 We have felt thy gentle breeze's balm,
 And thy fitful blast litigious.
 We have shuddered at thy ugly frown,
 When all thy soul was spiteful,
 And have watched thy malice melting down,
 To radiant smiles delightful.
 One moment—all thy charm is gone,
 Thy looks are most distressing ;
 The next—thou hast thy dimples on,
 Each sailor-boy caressing.
 We have stood aghast at thy leaden vest,
 Thy darksome shroud of mourning—
 In ultra-marine, we have seen thee dressed,
 The heaven and earth adorning.
 Thy bosom boils with love or hate,
 As thy restless passions waver ;
 Thy voice is the thunder of regal state,
 Or a gentle lady-like quaver.
 O Queen ! of Premier, under thy reign,
 Some conjurer holds the station ;
 His name, we take it, is Legerdemain,
 And thine is Transmutation.

Such are the notorious uncertainties of the Gulph Stream ; and in the channel through which we were now passing, seamen are often exposed to danger. Many a wreck takes place on either side of it, and only a few days before our voyage, a vessel of considerable size, was found, bottom upwards, on the coast of Florida.

For ourselves we passed along, though slowly, yet safely, and found leisure to reflect, that the shores, on either side, were marked by circumstances of a most interesting character. As the low green coast, or keys, of Florida, were gradually developed in our view, it was impossible not to mourn over the Seminole war, undertaken against the unhappy aborigines of the soil, in the support, as we fear, of slavery, conducted at an immense expense of blood and treasure, and now carried on (strange recurrence to ancient barbarism!) by the intervention of blood-hounds. The subject, so afflicting in its own particular features, was of course connected in our minds with a general view of that melancholy topic, the maltreatment of the native Indians of North America—witness the cruel banishment of the Cherokees, of Georgia, and the projected expatriation of the Senecas of New-York, under the color of fraudulent treaties, and at the expense of every principle of justice and mercy. I am confident that thy sentiments, on these subjects, are in perfect agreement with our own.

Our view of the Bahamas was a very distant one; but it was enough to remind us of the excellent accounts which we had received, through Sir William Colebrooke, of the favorable working of freedom in those islands. Sir William was their Governor, before he undertook the more important charge of the Leeward Islands; and while we were with him in Antigua, he received, from a friend whom he had left behind him, the accounts to which we allude. It appears that a large number of recaptured Africans are now settled, as free laborers, on the Island of New Providence, and are conducting themselves well. The same may be said of the former slaves or apprentices, who are located chiefly on the outer islands of the group. Friendly societies, and other benevolent institutions, are prospering; and free grown cotton is now produced, in the Bahamas, under the care of the descendants of American loyalists, who settled in that colony, at the time of the revolution.

I am reminded by this mention of the Bahamas, of our friend J. C. Calhoun's argument, in the Senate, on the subject of the Comet, the Encomium, and the Enterprise, one of which vessels was, if I mistake not, driven by stress of weather, into a port of the Bermudas, and the other two wrecked on the Bahamas—each containing American slaves, on their passage from one of your slave states to another. As I have not his speech of which he kindly gave me a copy, now before me, I may not be accurate in my recollection of the particulars; but I think that, in all the cases, the slaves were allowed, by the British authorities of the islands, to avail themselves of the law of the land, and to go free—that, after a long negotiation, compensation was made by our Government for those which were on board the Comet and Encomium, and refused for those in the Enterprise—and that this distinction was grounded on the circumstance that the two former cases had occurred before, and the last case, after, the British act of emancipation. J. C. Calhoun's argument on the subject, is both interesting and ingenious. In the first place he plainly shows it to be a settled point, in the law of nations, that when vessels belonging to any nation, are driven by stress of weather into the ports or on to the coasts, of a friendly power, the agents of that power are bound to protect the property which they contain, and to deliver it up or make compensation, for it, to its rightful owners. He then argues that, the law of nations cannot change with the municipal laws of individual states; and therefore, that if Great Britain was bound by the above mentioned principle of international jurisprudence, to make compensation for wrecked American slaves, before her own act of Emancipation, she was equally bound to do so, after that act.

All this is very clear; but there is the previous question to be settled, whether the law of nations does in any case, regard, living human beings, as the property of other persons. If it does, why is not England bound to restore to America, the runaway slaves who find their way into Canada; and to France, the fugitives who come over on aloe-rafts from Guadaloupe to Dominica; and to Denmark, the happy beings who paddle across the water, at night, from St. Thomas or St. John's, to free Tortola? For my own part, I conceive that the law of nations regards these persons as a third party, possessing distinct rights.

of their own. Professing as it does to derive its authority from the law of God, it is, in its own nature, incapable of giving countenance to the notion that rational human beings may be treated as dumb insensible chattels.

If this is a correct view of the case, I think we must conclude that when Great Britain made compensation for the slaves wrecked in the Comet and Encomium, she acted, not in compliance with the law of nations, but merely out of shame; because before her own act of emancipation, she was herself acknowledging the property of man in man. But no sooner was this act passed, than she rose to the level of the law of nations, in denying the rightful possibility of any such property. From that time forward therefore, she had nothing more to do with making compensation, even to the dearest of her allies, for wrecked, or runaway, slaves.

I trust that these remarks, on subjects of high practical importance, suggested by the circumstances of our voyage, will meet, on thy part, with the usual kind reception. But it was not our allotment to pass the whole of our time at sea in easy pleasures, and tranquil reflections. On the 18th of the Fourth-month, (April,) when we were about fifty miles south of Savannah, we were overtaken by a fearful storm. About eight o'clock in the evening, we observed some dark clouds over the horizon and summer-like lightning playing, to the North and West; and the moon soon afterwards rose of a blood red color. For some time, we imagined that the clouds were gradually dispersing, and we hoped that the electric fluid which was much diffused through the atmosphere, would afford us only a succession of beauties to admire. But after about two hours had elapsed, these hopes were annihilated. The clouds met over our heads, and veiled the moon in deep darkness; the rain poured down in torrents; the ship flew before the wind; and awful flashes of forked lightning, with thunder immediately following, gave ample proof, that the weapons of "heaven's artillery," were nigh at hand—even at our doors. Never before had we witnessed such a war of the elements; but our skillful captain had foreseen our trouble, and our well-prepared ship, with her smallest amount of canvass, moved along steadily. The discharges of lightning, however, and crashes of thunder, became more and more tremendous, when suddenly the vessel received a terrible shock. Almost all the sailors were knocked down, and as soon as they could find their feet, rushed into the cabin for safety; one was dragged in, lightning struck, whether to live or die, we knew not. The captain himself received a stroke which left black traces on his legs. Either a blazing rope, or the appearance of it in electric fluid, was seen falling on the deck; a violent smell of sulphur assailed us; both the upper and lower cabins were filled with smoke, and it was the general belief and cry, that the ship was on fire. At the same time the cook ran into the cabin, and told us that the hold of the ship (for we were in ballast) was filling rapidly with water. Although our large company was preserved in a good measure of quietness, we could no longer conceal from ourselves that we now were in circumstances of extreme danger. But beyond this climax, we were not permitted to pass. The ship was searched, and no fire was discovered; the water in the hold was found to have flowed only from the hatch way; the sulphurous smell and smoke gradually vanished; the storm, after raging for about an hour, rapidly subsided; the sky became clear; the moon regained her ascendancy; our poor stricken sailor began to recover; and we were left in quiet possession of ourselves—body and mind unhurt. The next morning we soon detected the effects of the lightning. The sails were pierced with holes, some boxes were demolished, a considerable piece of timber was forced out of the deck, the main-mast was cracked, and the maintop gallant and royal yards, shivered. Surely we had cause for humble thankfulness to the God of nature and of grace—the Controller of storms and thunderbolts, and the Preserver of men.

To us it was an agreeable circumstance, that the day after the storm, was the first of the week. At the appointed hour, the ship's company, including the sailors, assembled on deck, under no common feelings of seriousness. The fortieth chapter of Isaiah was read to us. Thou wilt perhaps recollect that it begins with the exhortation, "Comfort ye, comfort ye my people;" and ends with the cheering declaration that, "they who wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary, and they shall walk and not faint." Afterwards the whole company fell into silence; and during the solemn hour which ensued, we were reminded of the words of the poet—

Unfathomable wonder,
And mystery divine;
The voice that speaks in thunder,
Says, Christian, I AM THINE.

We were now on soundings, near the coast of Georgia, and on the morrow, Fourth-month (April) 20th, arrived, in peace and safety, at the city of Savannah. So ended, just five months after its commencement, our instructive and interesting West Indian voyage.

In concluding this series of letters, for the freedom of which I am ready to make all due apology, I feel disposed to remind thee of the declaration of Scripture, that the "heavens and the earth" shall "wax old as a garment," and that "as a vesture" God shall fold them up; and "they shall be changed." "All the host of heaven," says the prophet Isaiah, "shall be dissolved, and the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll; and all their host shall fall down, as the leaf falleth off from the vine, and as a falling fig from the fig-tree." "But the day of the Lord," says the Apostle Peter, "will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, and the earth also, and the works that are therein, shall be burned up." Again, "the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat." Then, my dear friend, we shall all stand "before the judgment-seat of Christ." The steward shall render up the account of his stewardship; and every one of us must receive, at the holy hands of the Judge of all flesh, "according to the deeds done in his body, whether they be good, or whether they be bad." Earnest and affectionate are my desires that the distinguished individual to whom these letters are addressed, may then be found to have cleared himself from all stain of slavery. Fervently do I crave that, in that awful day, he may be known to have acted faithfully, during his declining years, in promoting its total extinction, in all his several relations ;—first, as the head of a private family ; secondly, as the most influential individual in the state of Kentucky ; thirdly, as the enlightened statesman and patriot of the North American Federal Union ; and lastly, as the friend of all mankind, the citizen of the world at large. Justly applicable to our whole race—to men of every country, clime, and color—is the fundamental principle of your noble constitution, "All men are created equal, and are endowed by the Creator with certain inalienable rights—among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

With much respect and deference, I now bid thee my last farewell.

I am, &c. &c.

APPENDIX A.

LETTER FROM DR. DAVY, CUSTOS OF MANCHESTER, ADDRESSED TO S. W. GRANT, STIPENDIARY MAGISTRATE.

Devon Penn, August 20, 1839.

“SIR,—You ask my opinion as to the state of things at the expiration of the first year of freedom. I give it with much satisfaction, because I from the first had favorable anticipations; the result, so far as my observation and experience extend, has issued in a far greater measure of success than I hoped, or considered possible.

“When I consider how general the impression was, that during the first year nothing would be done by the laborers—that, in fact, the crops would be lost; when I remember with what confidence, confusion and outrage were predicted, and thefts and all kinds of crime were anticipated; when I contrast these impressions and these anticipations of evil, with the actual state of things at the present moment, I feel justified in asserting that, whether it be tested by the best hopes of the most sanguine, or by the worst fears of the most desponding, an unexpected measure of success has attended the first year of freedom.

“I speak of circumstances which have come under my own observation, and I am bound to say that the conduct of the peasantry has been most exemplary—their demeanor is most respectful—and their moral improvement most striking.

“The records of our local courts, and of our courts of quarter sessions, prove an extraordinary diminution of crime.

“In my intercourse with them, I find them honest in their dealings, faithful and diligent in the performance of their duties, and the fulfilment of their contracts.

“With respect to the labor performed, I verily believe that more labor has been done, but by fewer hands, than during the latter part of the apprenticeship. Properties are not only cleaner, than they were at the corresponding period last year, but I believe pruning has been very generally effected.

“With reference to property under my immediate superintendence, work has been completed which could not have been attempted. In addition to pruning and cleaning coffee, I have been able to build and rebuild stone walls, to clean pastures, and to reopen those that had gone into a state of ruinate.

“In the payment of rent, I find the people honest and punctual. This is a matter which (as might have been expected) created some confusion and misunderstanding at first, but I believe now there are few instances, where it is made a money charge on fair and legal terms, that much difficulty is experienced in its collection.

“Under these circumstances, I hesitate not to say that much, very much, has already been gained by the abandonment of the apprenticeship, and the substitution of free and unrestricted freedom, and that if we continue to progress in the same ratio, people will be compelled to rejoice in the change.

“It may not be useless to observe under what disadvantages, whatever of success has attended the past year, has been obtained. Political disputes with the mother country, have agitated the proprietary body, and calumnies the most groundless, and vituperation the most violent, have been directed against the laborers, who, in the absence of effective laws or physical force to direct or restrain them, have conducted themselves in a quiet, peaceable, and honest manner.”

RECONCILIATION RESPECTFULLY RECOMMENDED TO ALL PARTIES IN THE COLONY OF JAMAICA, IN A LETTER ADDRESSED TO THE PLANTERS.

The prosperity of Jamaica is unquestionably an object of equally deep interest to persons, in other respects, of very different views—persons who are ranged on opposite sides of politics even at the present time, and who, during the agitation of the great question of the abolition of British colonial slavery, were often brought into severe conflict with each other. Those were days of peculiar excitement; and it is possible that on both sides of the question, ruffled temper may sometimes have led to angry and extravagant expression, and even to exaggerated statement. But on a calm review of the system which is now happily exterminated, I presume we are all prepared to allow that, both in its origin and operation, it was opposed to the rule of right—that although often kindly conducted, it was liable to fearful occasional abuse—and that a deliverance from it is a blessing, in various important respects, to all the parties concerned.

As matters now stand, it is surely desirable that slavery, with its whole vocabulary, and with all the angry feelings to which it gave rise, should, so far as relates to the British colonies, be buried in oblivion, and that Jamaica should hereafter be treated and thought of only as a colony of free men, of different complexions indeed, but of equal rights and privileges, as citizens of the British empire. This grand truth being in the first place settled—fully and freely acknowledged and appreciated—it follows, as a clear consequence, that all classes of the community ought now to unite, heart and hand, in promoting the prosperity of this noble colony.

Prosperity is a word of large meaning;—it embraces the intellectual, moral, and spiritual, as well as temporal, welfare of the people; but for the present I confine my remarks to temporal welfare. All parties ought now to unite in promoting the coming of the day (as I believe not far distant, for we already see the dawn of it) when the merchantmen which frequent the harbors of Jamaica, shall be multiplied—when her staple productions of sugar and coffee shall more than recover their former amount—when abundance of free-grown cotton shall be added to the list—when vegetable provisions shall be poured forth, at a cheap rate, from the mountains into the towns—when flocks of sheep, as well as yet larger herds of oxen and kine, shall cover the pastures—when, in fact, one of the most favored and delightful spots on the globe, shall be distinguished by a corresponding superiority in the wealth and substantial comfort of its inhabitants.

This great object cannot be otherwise than interesting—First, to the planters, whether residents on the island or absentees, whether proprietors of the soil, or tenants of estates, or managers only of the property of others. Their profits obviously depend on the success of our great experiment—on the realizing of the desired result.

Secondly, to the merchants and storekeepers. The thrift of these persons, depends on the thrift of others—their increase of wealth, on a corresponding increase of it throughout the population.

Thirdly, to the laborers. To speak of the prosperity of Jamaica, is chiefly to speak of their prosperity, for they and their families constitute nine-tenths of the whole community. It is delightful to believe that their domestic comforts are increased and increasing, or rather multiplied and multiplying, under freedom—most gratifying to visit their little freeholds in many parts of the island, and to know that even now, as a body, they are by no means destitute of wealth. But experience amply proves, that by far the surest resource, for the maintenance and improvement of these privileges, is regular wages for regular work. Upon the prosperity of their employers, therefore, essentially depends their own.

Fourthly, and lastly, to the abolitionists—to those of every rank and class, who long, pray, and labor, for the extinction of slavery all the world over. The eyes of France, Denmark, Spain, Portugal, Brazil, and, above all, North America, are fixed on the British West-Indian colonies, and chiefly on Jamaica. It is of primary importance to the cause of freedom under all these governments, that Jamaica should prosper. I mean, prosper pecuniarily. It is in vain that we address arguments on the plea of moral or religious principle alone, to persons who have long been habituated to slaveholding, as part and parcel of their circumstances, and almost of their existence. We must at the same time make an appeal to their self-interest. We must prove, by the example of such a region as Jamaica, that free labor is more economical and productive than slave labor, and that the just and equal liberty of all the citizens of a state, has an unfailing tendency to increase its wealth.

If the view now taken is correct—and I believe it cannot be disputed—it certainly follows that planters, merchants, laborers, and philanthropists, are bound by the most obvious principles of reason and common sense, to unite their efforts in promoting the prosperity of Jamaica.

There is, however, a specific point which, at the present time, peculiarly demands such an union of effort. I mean the prevention of the proposed equalization of the sugar duties. The duty now levied in England, on sugars not produced in our own colonies, amounts to a prohibition; and thus the whole market of our country is open exclusively to the sugar growers of those colonies. Once equalize that prohibitory duty with the lower duty charged on the sugar produced in these islands, and immediately there will be a vast influx into Great Britain and Ireland, of the sugars of Cuba, Brazil, Louisiana, &c. The inevitable consequence will be that the sugars of Jamaica will lose their market, or will fall to a price which cannot remunerate the planter. The next link in the chain of disaster will be a large one. The planter will withdraw from the production of sugar, and will undergo great difficulty in his attempts to apply his grounds and apparatus to any other purpose. In the meantime the laborer will lose his employment and his wages; the merchant and shopkeeper will find their resources of profit suddenly cut off; and, lastly, the abolitionist will discover, to his dismay, that a fresh impetus of vast force is given to slavery and the slave-trade, by the opening of a new market of incalculable value, to the producers of slave-grown sugar. Let not the reader for a moment imagine that this view of the effect of the proposed equalization, is grounded on the notion that slave labor is superior, in point of cheapness, to free labor. Abundant are the evidences which have been afforded me, both here and in other islands of the West Indies, that the contrary is the fact. But there is a vast difference in different regions, as to the capacity of producing sugar at a cheap rate; and long before freedom was enacted, the protecting duties were in force, to prevent a ruinous competition between the sugars of Jamaica, &c., and the cheaper article produced in Cuba and elsewhere. There is said to be a great saving to the colonists of Cuba and Porto Rico, in the expense of producing sugar, not only from the peculiar nature of the soil, which requires, for its cultivation, a small comparative amount of labor, but from the inexpensive character of their buildings and works; also from the circumstance that the proprietors are generally resident on the spot; and there is reason to believe that these persons are satisfied with a lower rate of profit than falls to the lot of the British proprietor. When the energies of freedom are fully developed, they will, I trust, enable Jamaica to cope even with those natural inequalities, which, at present, give an advantage to other sugar-growing regions.

In the meantime it is evidently incumbent on the planters and the abolitionists, to lay aside their former jealousies, and to unite in petitioning parliament against the proposed equalization. Their joint appeal, supported as it obviously is by the common principles of justice, as well as those of mercy, could scarcely fail to be effectual. With regard to the laborers, they ought to be informed how greatly the success of such an appeal must depend upon their exertions. The consequence of a diminished supply of sugar from our colonies, is the undue rise of the price of the article at home. Then follows, on the part of a vast manufacturing and agricultural population, a most natural clamor for cheap sugar; and from that clamor may as naturally arise a yielding on the part of our rulers, and, finally, the equalization of the duties, with all its fearful results. Here then is a stimulus to continuous labor in the production of sugar, which may most legitimately be brought home to the understanding and feeling of every peasant in the West Indies. I am confident that thousands of them in Jamaica, would prove themselves to be very much alive to such a stimulus. They are not only watchful over their own interests, but know how to feel for the woes of their brethren in other parts of the world.

In thus stating the grounds on which I feel the necessity of a hearty union of all parties in Jamaica, in promoting the temporal welfare of the island, I am far from intending to insinuate that the elements of prosperity, in this colony, are not already powerfully at work.—That they are at work, under the sway of freedom, to an extent, and with an energy, which will soon produce conspicuous results, I have not the smallest doubt. Numerous are the acknowledgments which I have myself received from planters, both of sugar and coffee, that the present diminution of produce on their estates has arisen from causes which have now ceased, or are subsiding; and that they are looking forward to a decided increase of production for the future. In the mean time, new houses are building, new villages appearing, the towns improving, trade increasing, the mass of the population flourishing, the imports nearly doubling themselves, property rising in value, and the cultivated parts of the country wearing an appearance of cleanliness and order, in connection with fair crops, which bespeaks any thing rather than decay and ruin.—These indications are exceedingly cheering. At the same time, it cannot be denied that many parts of Jamaica are still grievously perplexed by a want of a good understanding between parties, i. e. between the planters, on the one hand, and the laborers and their supporters and advisers (call them, if you please, the abolitionists) on the other.

What then can be more obviously desirable, than the removal of all misunderstandings, and a perfect and absolute reconciliation between these parties? That matters, in this respect, are already ameliorated, cannot be doubted. The silent influence of a common interest has already been found efficacious, to a great extent, in quelling the heats of passion and prejudice, and in inducing better feelings and juster views of each other, both in masters and servants. But mischief is still at work; and the discord which continues to subsist must cease and be extinguished, before Jamaica can prosper in the degree which her unquestionable resources fairly lead us to anticipate.

Now, in order to this perfect reconciliation and good understanding, we must all endeavor to lay aside the feelings of prejudice and animosity; to bear and forbear one with another, and to put the best construction in our power on each other's actions.—But deeply as I feel the importance of such a course, nothing is farther from my view than to recommend concessions of principle. The more I reflect on the subject, the more satisfied I am that such concessions would only involve an increase of perplexity and distress. The rule of right, is the rule of safety, and the road to peace.

The ground for that unity of purpose and action, which would so greatly promote the prosperity of this colony, must be laid in those broad principles which none can deny, and must be cleared by the removal of all infractions of pure justice, in whatsoever quarter these may have arisen, and in whatsoever direction they may be operating.

Since my lot has been cast on this island, I have taken many opportunities, in large public assemblies of the people, of impressing upon the peasantry, the Christian duty of rendering unto all men their due; and especially of giving fair work for fair wages. I have endeavored to show them that this fair work, which justice requires at their hands, is not only work well performed in the detail, but that measure of continuous labor for which their services are hired, and which they know to be necessary in the cultivation of the staple articles exported from this colony. I must do them the justice to say that, so far as my observation has extended, they are alive to this moral view of the case; for I have with pleasure observed that these sentiments, when fairly laid before them, have met, on their parts, with an intelligent and friendly acquiescence. I wish to avoid any exaggerated statement on this subject; but from the numerous testimonies which I have received, from most respectable members of your body, I think I am justified in the conclusion, that the peasantry of this island have a better understanding now, than they had a year ago, of their true position, and of the duties required at their hands; and that, for the most part, they are working, both on the sugar and coffee estates, to the increasing satisfaction of their employers. I have lately been engaged in a visit to several of the islands to the windward—Tortola, St. Christopher's, Antigua, and Dominica; and I am happy to inform you that in these and the neighboring islands, the peasantry are working well—I may almost say, without any exception. I trust that the same good report may now be made, to a very great extent, of the people of Jamaica; and that the exceptions which still exist, may be traced to peculiar circumstances which will soon disappear and be forgotten. In the mean time, I consider it to be a duty incumbent on all pastors and teachers of the laboring class, whether Churchmen or

Dissenters, to impress upon their minds their moral obligations as cultivators of the soil ; to explain to them on what grounds, and in what way, they are required, in the sight of the Judge of all flesh, to render to their employers, fair work for fair wages.

Having thus stated fully the view which I take of the justice of the case, as it relates to the laborers, I am confident you will kindly bear with me, while I endeavor to develop what I believe to be the rule of right, as it regards the land owner, the planter, the employer. I make this attempt under the feelings of respect and Christian charity, and with ardent good wishes for your temporal, as well as spiritual welfare.

We all know that the abolition of slavery, by the imperial act of emancipation, was total, that it bestows upon the people once in bonds an absolute freedom—a perfect equality, in point of civil right, with the other subjects of the British empire. Since this act has become the law of the empire, all the Queen's subjects are bound, on moral and Christian principle, to maintain its grand provisions, and to abstain from all contravention of them in practice. It cannot, I trust, be offensive, on my part, to observe that this moral obligation rests, in full force, upon the planters of our West-Indian colonies, not only on the general ground of subjection to the laws of the empire, but on the specific ground, also, of their having received twenty millions of pounds sterling from the public purse, as a compensation for their slaves. I just take the liberty of stating, in passing, that so far as my little influence extended, I was never opposed to that liberal grant of money, and I may say the same of some intimate friends and connections of mine, well known as friends to the abolition of slavery, in the British parliament.

Now the very essence of slavery is compulsory labor.—I apprehend that I can make no mistake in asserting that all attempts to compel labor, be they weak, or be they stringent, be they temperate, or be they violent, are opposed to the true meaning and purpose of the act of emancipation, and to the principles of justice as they bear on the circumstances of the case.

One of the methods which has been resorted to in this island, for compelling work, is the mixture of the question of tenure, with that of labor; and I am confident that a little calm reflection will serve to convince any man, that such a mixture is not only at variance with the common-place rules of political economy, but also with the rule of right. It is a system which classes under slavery, and is in its nature opposed to that law of liberty in which, I trust, we all now rejoice.

Allow me to explain myself. A planter of Jamaica, at the close of the apprenticeship—the date of full freedom by law—finds himself in possession of a number of cottages and provision-grounds, occupied by certain freemen, who, I suppose, in such a case, might be regarded as tenants at will.—Allowing some short interval for the almost inevitable temporary unsettlement, it must soon become evident that something is due to the planter, in return for such tenancy.—Now, what is that something, according to universal principles which regulate the relations of landlord and tenant? Certainly not labor—much less a personal restriction to work on a particular spot—but a fair rent—such a rent as represents the true money value of the property tenanted. This is the only quid pro quo, as I conceive, which justice can demand on the occasion.

To require of the tenant the regular payment of such a rent, and legally to eject in case of the non-payment of it, are neither of them proceedings to which any reasonable objection can be urged. But to require not merely that the tenant should pay rent, but that he should work on a certain estate, at a certain rate of wages, and for a certain number of days in the week, and to eject him if these latter provisions are not complied with—appears to me to be unjust in principle—a recurrence, as far as it goes, to the old system of slavery. It is the compelling of labor by a penal infliction.

I presume that ejectments from tenements on the ground now mentioned, cannot be legal; and it appears that the object has,

in many cases, been effected by manual force. Cocoa-nut and bread-fruit trees have been felled—cottages have been unroofed and sometimes demolished—pigs have been shot—provision-grounds have been destroyed—the pleasant fruits of God's earth, uprooted by the rude hand of violence, or trodden under foot of oxen. I conceive that such acts of spoliation are, in point of fact, nothing more or less than substitutes for the cart-whip. Notorious as the facts are to which I have now alluded, I mention them, because necessary to be mentioned, and with no other than Christian feelings towards those who have perpetrated them. Sure I am, that such proceedings must be abhorrent to the feelings of the generality of those persons whom I am now addressing, as well as to my own.

Another method of compelling labor has been the arbitrary increase of rents, with distraint, imprisonment, and ejection in the train, in case of their not being paid. A laborer on a certain estate is under an agreement with its manager, to pay two shillings sterling per week as rent for his house and ground. Some cause of dispute and dissatisfaction arises with regard to his labor, and the rent is immediately raised, by way of penal exaction, to twice, thrice, or four times the amount; or strange to say, it is demanded for his wife and each of his children, respectively, as well as for himself. He of course is unable to pay it. Complaint is made against him by the overseer to some of the magistrates in the neighborhood; the debt is adjudicated to be a valid one; his goods are distrained; and if there be a deficiency, in the amount thus levied, to pay the debt and the fees, he is imprisoned for ten days:—But this is not all; after he has been discharged, the remainder of the debt still hangs over his head, and whenever his petty articles of comfort and convenience again accumulate, he may be exposed to another distraint. In case of his removing any of his goods to avoid the effect of this second seizure, he is liable as a fraudulent debtor to imprisonment, at the discretion of the magistrates, for any term not exceeding three months; and any members of his family who assist him in so doing may be subjected to the same punishment. Now all this is monstrous. It is a screw of prodigious power, of which the obvious application is to compel labor, or in other words to reduce free men, a second time, to slavery.

I can easily believe that the individuals who have resorted to this system of penal and fictitious rents, have met with their difficulties and their provocations; but I am ready to believe that a calm review of the subject, has already convinced some of them that such exactions serve no good purpose—that they are wrong in principle, and calamitous, in their results, to all the parties concerned.

I do not consider it to be my province to enter into a discussion of the laws which have been enacted in this colony, during the last few months; but I cannot, with a good conscience, refrain from expressing my own opinion, that some of these provisions have an unfavorable bearing on the cause of equal rights and unrestricted freedom. It is unquestionable that the act for the recovery of petty debts, affords great facilities for the line of proceeding which I have now described. On visiting the gaol of one of the parishes, a few days since, I was alarmed by observing, that whereas the number of debtors confined in it, during the whole of 1839, was only 12; more than double that number, viz. 25, had passed through that prison since the commencement of 1840—that is, in a little more than two months. Of these, 16 were rent cases, under the petty debt act. If such be the operation of this act in a single parish, what must it be in the whole of Jamaica? Are we to forget that to cast a free laborer into prison—even for ten days—is to break down his respectability, and to undermine his moral worth, as a citizen of the state?

I own I tremble, when I look at the too probable case of a free laborer who cannot agree with his master respecting the terms and duration of his weekly labor. He may be charged one of these penal and fictitious rents. Under the petty debt act he may be despoiled of his goods, and imprisoned for a short period. Driven from his home by repeated vexations, or legally expelled from it by his employer, he may be found traversing the country in search of a new location, or sleeping at night on the road's side, in the open air. Under the police act, he may then be questioned and seized by an armed watchman; and finally, under the vagrant act, he may be punished with sixty days' imprisonment, and hard labor in a penal gang. If these things are so, what is his alternative? It is to yield to the compulsion, to comply with the requirements of his employer, and to labor against his own free will, for such wages, and for so many days and hours in the week, as his master may see fit to dictate. This surely is a perfect contravention of the intent and purpose of the imperial act of emancipation. In plain English, it is slavery.

That these laws may serve some good purposes, is probable; that the design of those who framed them may have been good, I am quite willing to suppose; but that they are capable of an abuse most dangerous to the cause of justice and liberty, and therefore to the tranquillity and welfare of Jamaica, is to me a point which admits of little question. Most earnestly do I crave the watchful care of all persons of influence in the island, in guarding against that abuse. Once suffer it to prevail, and our bright and pleasant hopes of the prosperity of Jamaica, are dashed to the ground.

The injustice of attempts to compel the labor of freemen, is equalled only by its impolicy. The estates on which they have been practised, are precisely those which are the most exposed to perplexity, desertion and decay. On the contrary, where rent and wages have been kept entirely distinct, and have each been settled at the fair market value, ease and prosperity have, in general, been the happy consequence. Little difficulties may indeed have occasionally arisen; but these have been overborne by the superior influence of wholesome and undeniable practical principles. Am I wrong in venturing upon the assertion, that wherever the laborers have been fairly, kindly, and wisely treated, there they have been working well, and all things prosper? Certainly, my friends, there is a native virtue in universal freedom, which, when suffered to act without restriction, and under the blessing of Divine Providence, cannot fail to diffuse innumerable advantages, and to make a very wilderness of thorns and briars "blossom as the rose."

Taking it for granted then, that both justice and policy dictate a total surrender of every contrivance to compel the labor of the peasantry, what are the means of which we are left in possession for procuring that labor?

I answer: First of all—fair though not extravagant wages, paid with undeviating regularity, at a stated hour, once every week, and paid without any reference whatsoever to rent. The more I inquire into the difficulties which have arisen on some properties in Jamaica, the stronger is my conviction of the importance of the regular and frequent payment of wages. A credit in account has a much weaker influence as a stimulus to action, especially on uneducated minds, than money placed in the hand. Lately emerged, as they are from a state of slavery, the laborers of Jamaica may at present be unduly prone to feelings of suspicion. This want of confidence, arising so naturally out of their circumstances, may greatly undermine the influence of wages, as a stimulus to labor, when paid irregularly, or at long intervals. It is of primary importance, for the correction of this want of confidence, and for a corresponding certainty in obtaining continuous work, that as soon as his silver bits can be legally demanded by the laborer, so soon they should be willingly and regularly placed in his hands.

Secondly—task or piece work. I have enjoyed the satisfaction of observing the admirable effect of this arrangement of labor in other islands, especially in Antigua and Dominica; and I am heartily glad to find, that it is increasingly prevalent in Jamaica. It is most desirable for the master—enabling him to obtain his work, at the same ultimate expense as by day-wages, and with greater ease, from fewer hands, and in a shorter period of time. It is equally desirable for the laborer, who doubles his wages by it. It is, in fact, a point of settlement and rest for both parties.

'Thirdly—leasehold and freehold settlements for the laborers. Nothing has yielded me more satisfaction, in this and other islands, than visiting the newly settled free villages, which are now becoming increasingly common. I have found industrious families, inhabiting creditable houses, built by their own hands, and surrounded by small plots of land well cultivated with provisions ; the whole occupation being their own purchased freehold. I have uniformly inquired whether they still work for wages on the neighboring estates, and with a single exception, arising out of a peculiar circumstance, I have received a clear affirmative answer. Here the laborers are perfectly independent ; and they work for wages on the estates, for the obvious and sufficient reason, that it is their interest to do so.

Now I venture to suggest that the same system might be most beneficially applied within the compass of particular estates. I hold that it would be wise and prudent, on the part of planters, to give to their laborers an independent settlement, within the bounds of their own properties. This object might be effected in two ways—either by leasing to them their houses and provision-grounds on a moderate rental for a suitable term—say, not less than three years, or, what would be still better, by selling them little freeholds, large enough for their convenience, but not so large as to divert their attention from daily labor on the estate. I have rejoiced to hear that this plan has been adopted by several proprietors, who have ordered a large number of comfortable cottages to be built on their estates, and then to be let or sold, with one or two-acre plots of ground, to the laborers. There can be little doubt of their securing, by this means, a population at home, which will at all times afford them a sufficiency of labor. I am aware that this arrangement requires a decided confidence in the laborer, on the part of the master. But this confidence will not fail to excite a corresponding feeling in the mind of the former ; it will be sure to meet with its abundant reward.

Fourthly and lastly, Christian education. I am not ignorant of the cry which was once raised, and which is still sometimes heard, in this country, against many serious and devoted ministers of religion, of various denominations.—But I am persuaded that a better feeling towards them is gradually diffusing itself. Certain it is that in those districts of the country, where Christian education is going forward, and a decided religious influence is extended over the people, we find the greatest degree of intelligence, order, comfort, and industry. The principles of our holy religion are, in fact, the only radical cure for the vices, follies, and consequent miseries, of mankind. Fervently is it to be desired, that men of all parties in Jamaica, may cordially embrace those principles themselves, and as cordially endeavor to diffuse them among others. This is the soundest wisdom, temporally and politically, as well as spiritually.—This is the surest of all pathways to peace and prosperity.

I heartily hope that the hints which I have so freely thrown out, in this address, will meet with a calm consideration, and kind reception. They are dictated by no party spirit, but by the feeling of sincere good will for all classes of the people in this delightful island.

The views which I have endeavored to lay before you are practical, and if fairly acted on, would, as I believe, be found beneficial to the whole community. In the mean time may we all “put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness.”

“Charity suffereth long and is kind; charity envieth not; vaunteth not herself; is not puffed up; doth not behave herself unseemly; is not easily provoked; seeketh not her own; rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth, &c.”

That this cardinal virtue may spread through the length and breadth of Jamaica,

Is the hearty desire and prayer

Of your

Sincere friend and well-wisher,

JOSEPH JOHN GURNEY.

EXTRACTS FROM A PAMPHLET ENTITLED "FREE AND FRIENDLY REMARKS, ON A SPEECH LATELY DELIVERED TO THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, BY HENRY CLAY, OF KENTUCKY, ON THE SUBJECT OF THE ABOLITION OF NORTH AMERICAN SLAVERY."

The following remarks (extracted from the above mentioned pamphlet,) will, I trust, be sufficient to show, that the two principal measures called for at the hands of the Federal Government, in the cause of Emancipation, are in perfect consistency both with the rules of justice and equity, and with the articles of the Constitution.

"If this is a correct view of the subject, (and it is the view of a calm bystander, who earnestly craves the welfare of all the parties concerned,) the question immediately arises, What is the first step which the federal government of the United States may best adopt, in order to this grand end? To me it appears that the first step ought to be the abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia. I am aware that the Senate has already passed a resolution against this measure, and that the very petitions of the people, in furtherance of it, are excluded, by a provision which Henry Clay himself allows to be unconstitutional, from the consideration of the legislature. I lament that Congress has thus, for the present, debarred itself from that free discussion of the subject, which would lead to a development of the merits of the case. But I venture to believe that the more the point is considered by individual enquirers, the more general will the conviction become, first, that this measure is fair ; and secondly, that it is desirable and even necessary.

“ On a reference to Sec. viii. Art. 17, of the Constitution of the United States, I find it stated that “ Congress shall have the power to exercise exclusive legislation, in all cases whatsoever, over such district, (not exceeding ten miles square,) as may, by cession of particular states, and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the government of the United States.”

“ The words of this provision are obviously strong and comprehensive. I think it probable that the peculiar subject, either of the abolition or non-abolition of slavery, may not have been contemplated, when the article was formed ; but if either of these things was in view with the framers of the article, one must conclude from the words “ in all cases whatsoever,” that there was a design to include, rather than exclude, the abolition of slavery. Had there been entertained any secret reserve on this particular point, it is scarcely to be believed that expressions would have been adopted, so full, so explicit, so completely applicable to this, as to any other change, which Congress might deem advisable, in the internal regulation of the District to be ceded. I perfectly agree, however, with Henry Clay, in the opinion, that the true and simple intent of this article was, to give to Congress full power to effect any regulations in the District, which would render it suitable as the seat of government of the people of the United States—that great, free, and happy nation, which I trust is yet destined to afford the world an example of the blessed union of public prosperity with public virtue.

“ No sooner was the District of Columbia placed under the sole legislative control of the federal union, than Congress, and through Congress, the nation at large, became morally responsible for the consistency of the laws and customs of that District, with the principles of justice and mercy. It is astonishing that the enlightened statesman with whom I am venturing to argue, should confine his view of this subject, to the mere question of the convenience of Congress, and the personal accommodation of its members. Higher and larger interests are here at stake. In the circumstance that in the District which surrounds the Capitol, six thousand persons are pursuing their daily labors in the character of slaves, there is indeed nothing which affects the personal ease of the debaters within the House. Nay, there is nothing to interrupt their discussions, or even to mar the pleasures of their social intercourse, in the notorious facts, that a prison, strictly belonging to the government, is sometimes used as a jail for the stowage of negroes for sale—that human beings are publicly sold by auction, in the streets of Washington—and that companies of our colored brethren, chained together by the neck, are marched, through that city, to the Southern States, without let or hindrance.

“But these are facts which, taking place at the seat of government, and under the sole control and responsibility of Congress, involve the American people, as a nation, in the guilt of slavery; they degrade her character in the view of the nations of the earth, by affording a palpable contradiction to the principles on which her constitution was founded; and, worst of all, they have a direct tendency to separate her from the favor of that perfectly righteous Being on whom the welfare of nations depends. On the simple ground therefore, of the true meaning of this article in the constitution, (viz. that the legislative control of Congress over the District, should be fully and freely exercised, in all cases which apply to its suitability as a seat of government for the confederate nation,) it seems unquestionably to follow that the abolition of slavery, within these limits, is matter of fairness to the states by which the District was ceded, as well as of justice to the nation herself. And, further, the very same considerations which evince such a measure to be fair, afford abundant evidence that it is desirable and necessary—necessary to the comfort, the reputation, and the true prosperity of the Union.

“I am perfectly aware that, according to the present constitution of the United States, the general government has no power over the internal constitutions of its component republics, in their individual and separate capacity. Should Congress, however, be induced to pay its debt of justice to the slave population of the District, and of Florida, it may be hoped that considerable effect would be produced on the legislatures of the slave states, by the force of example. An example of public virtue, in which the slave states themselves, as part of the Union, would have their share, could scarcely fail to operate on the more enlightened and reflecting part of their own citizens.

“For my own part, I entertain a firm belief that this example would be rendered efficacious, not only by the perfect harmlessness of the measure of immediate abolition, but by its beneficial results. Florida might present a useful pattern to the states in which the colored population is large, in proportion to the white inhabitants; and the District would, as I believe, afford a proof to Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, and Kentucky, that they might abolish their slavery with propriety and safety. Kentucky would then no longer be afraid to make those changes in her constitution, with a view to emancipation, which her distinguished Senator, (in contradiction to his good old character of a friend to universal freedom,) declares himself to have been lately engaged in preventing.

“But there is one step for the benefit of the slaves throughout the Union, which Congress appears to have a constitutional right to take, and which would operate with more than the force of mere example. While the internal institutions of the states, in their individual and separate capacity, are out of its reach, it has the power “to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and AMONG THE SEVERAL STATES, and with the Indian Tribes.”—Constitution, Sec. viii. Art. 3. Notwithstanding Henry Clay’s objections, it appears to me, on calm and deliberate reflection, that Congress has therefore power to put an end to free America’s chief disgrace—namely, her internal traffic in slaves.

“The plea which he urges against this inference from the article on commerce, is double;—first, that this alleged traffic is not commerce at all, but is only to be regarded as the "removal" of slaves from one state to another; and, secondly, that if it were commerce, the power of the federal government would extend only to the regulation of it. It is a power to regulate, not to annihilate; and he has declared his judgment, that it would be no more competent to Congress to prevent Maryland and Virginia from supplying the South with slaves, than to prevent Ohio from supplying the East with live stock.

"This comparison affords an affecting instance of the facility with which, under the prevailing influence of slavery, even enlightened men are induced to forget the impassable distinctions between human beings of a color different from their own, and the beasts which perish. But it is, nevertheless, an apt comparison, as evincing the true nature and character of that which is called, by this statesman, the removal of slaves. The fact of the case undoubtedly is, that this removal is as strictly and properly a traffic—a branch of the commerce among the states of this Union—as is the "removal" of live stock from Ohio to Pennsylvania or Maryland. In both cases, the living creatures, which form the article of traffic, are first raised, or bred, by the land-owner or farmer; secondly, sold to the merchant or jobber; thirdly, driven under his orders to their place of destination, and fourthly, resold to the user or consumer. It is impossible to conceive of anything more regularly a traffic, than is this "removal" of oxen from Ohio, and of "slaves" from Maryland. It is a trade in the animal productions of the earth, precisely analogous, in its several stages, to a trade in cotton. The planter raises the cotton; he sells it to the merchant; the merchant ships it to its place of destination; and there it is resold to the consumer.

"Every humane and generous mind must revolt at the notion of breeding human beings for sale; and the term itself is scarcely tolerable to polite ears. But that they are actually bred for sale, in some of the slave states of North America, is a fact which, I fear, cannot be denied. I confess I feel much compassion for the slaveholder of Virginia, who, seated in his old and gentlemanlike mansion, surveys the wide demèsnes which have descended to him from his ancestors. His lands long since exhausted by slave labor, present to his eye a brown and dreary aspect, except where they have become overgrown by a miserable forest of pines. His black people have multiplied around him, and he scarcely knows how to feed them. His family necessities are perpetually calling for money. The slave jobber is prowling about the neighborhood, with his tempting offers of five hundred dollars for a lad or girl, or one thousand dollars for an adult person. The temptation soon becomes irresistible, and slave after slave supplies the southern market. By degrees he discovers that by far the most profitable article which his estate produces, is the slave ; and, instead of the old fashioned cultivator of the soil, he becomes, by slow degrees and almost insensibly to himself, a slave breeder. But whether this be, or be not the true trade and profession of the slaveholder, it is all one to the slave. He is sold to the merchant, torn from his wife and family, lodged in some negro jail, at Baltimore, Winchester, or Washington, and finally driven, as one of a handcuffed gang, to Alabama or Louisiana,—there to be sold, with an enormous profit for the jobber, to the planter of cotton, coffee, or sugar.

“All this is no exaggeration, as the Senator of Kentucky must be fully aware, of the character of this nefarious traffic ; nor can it be questioned that it is a traffic carried on to an enormous extent. I learn, on good authority, that two-thirds of the funds of a principal state bank, were last year invested in loans to slave merchants ; and there cannot be the least question of the fact, that the yearly commerce of Virginia and North Carolina, in human beings, amounts to many millions of dollars. Would it not be safe to say that it is the largest article of commerce known in those states ? That it is also an extensive branch of trade in Maryland, and some other parts of the Union, is beyond all doubt.

“But, allowing that this is the truth of the case, Henry Clay declares his opinion that Congress cannot touch the question, because its power over the commerce between the states, is a power to regulate only, not to destroy. It is matter of surprise that the very obvious fallacy of this plea, should not have been perceived by the experienced statesman who urged it. Who can fail to remark that in the article of the constitution, which applies to the subject, the word "commerce" is used in a wide and general sense? And who does not know that in the due regulation of commerce, in this comprehensive meaning, the prohibition of a trade in particular articles, is frequently involved? The celebrated tariff of North America was, I presume, intended at least to impede the introduction of certain articles of British manufacture, into this country; and every one knows that duties are sometimes laid on importation, so heavy as to amount to an absolute prohibition. Thus, in the "regulation" of the commerce of the United States with foreign nations, a traffic in particular articles may be legitimately annihilated, for the purpose of serving some larger or higher interest, for the national benefit. The same principle obviously applies to the commerce amongst the states. If a free traffic in some particular article, among some of the states, is injurious to the nation at large,—if it is at variance with great principles, on which the national prosperity depends—if it is illegitimate in its very nature,—the prohibition of such an unhealthy branch of trade, must surely form a just and proper part of that "regulation" of commerce among the several states, which is committed to the care and authority of Congress.

"The subject now before me I feel to be one of most affecting and serious import. In the character of an ardent friend to every class of society in this country, and a hearty lover of her noble constitution, I am constrained to speak in plain terms upon this vital topic. With diffidence, yet with firmness, I must venture to express my own conviction, that the internal slave-trade of this country, though differing in circumstances from the African slave trade, is the same with it in principle; that it is utterly unlawful and spurious, and opposed to the very nature of a healthy commerce ; that it is a blot on the escutcheon of this free and mighty nation, in the sight of all the nations of the earth ; that so far from promoting the prosperity of the states which practice it, it is to them, like doses of brandy to a man sick of a fever—a mere diversion from that sound application of their resources, under the banner of freedom, which can alone restore the prosperity of which slavery has deprived them ; and, finally, that for all these reasons, it is the high, yet simple, duty of Congress, as the authorised regulator of commerce, to extinguish without delay, this nefarious traffic.

“ Whenever the happy day arrives when the federal government shall be induced to pay this debt to the cause of justice and humanity, such a proceeding can scarcely fail to be quickly followed by the abolition of slavery, in all those states of the Union, in which the slaves are becoming comparatively useless. The old outlet for them will be stopped ; and, to issue the final decree, that they shall be free, and at liberty, therefore, to provide for themselves, as may best suit them, will be found to be the only practicable remedy for the inconveniences and miseries of the present state of things.”
