TO THE READER.

THE object of this book is to preserve and hand down to all future posterity representations of the Homes of their Forefathers. From a variety of causes they are rapidly disappearing; and before long the places that now know them will know them no more. It has been a labor of love to the undersigned to collect these mementoes of the past, and his efforts have been ably seconded by many gentlemen to whom his thanks are hereby returned. He has labored under many disadvantages which cannot be here enumerated; but he has tried to do his work faithfully, and no liberties have been taken with the old buildings represented, or with their surroundings, merely for pictorial effect. It is true that a few houses have been slightly altered from what they are to what they were originally; and sometimes an indifferent object, such as an old barn, or it may be a tree, has been left out or pushed aside to show the building to better advantage. Thus, if not photographically correct, they are sufficiently so for all practical purposes.

Many persons will ask why Plymouth is so poorly represented. It is much to be regretted that so little which is old remains there; and every one who visits the place is, in consequence, disappointed. Yet it must be borne in mind that Kingston was originally a part of Plymouth, and the old houses shown in that town are practically Plymouth houses; so that, upon the whole, Plymouth is not so poorly represented as might at first sight appear.

With these preliminary remarks he respectfully offers his book to all who are interested in the early history of those who laid the foundations of this Commonwealth, trusting it will meet with their approval.

The Bradford House Plymouth.

This house once stood on Town Square, and it is believed that Gov. Bradford lived in it but this like all the other dwellings of the Pilgrims has been swept away by the ruthless hand of "Improvement."

The Barker House, Pembroke.

The oldest house in New England!

This was commenced by Josiah Barker in 1628 who, accompanied by Fred Davis a colored man, started from Plymouth in a ship boat and followed the shore until they reached the mouth of North River. This they ascended until they found a place suitable for building and here they commenced this house. It has never passed out of possession of this family and is now owned by Poley Barker who is at the present time (1860) 86 years of age. The house stands about 8 miles from either the Wington or Hanover R.R. stations.

The Humphrey House, Swanscott.

This house stands on the farm of E. R. Mudge, and is one of the oldest in N. England, having been built in 1634 by John Humphrey or Humphrey, who was a native of Dorchester, England, an able and wealthy man. He was deputy Governor of the Colony. The frame and bricks used in the building were brought from England. It has been somewhat modernized.

The Peabody House, Danvers.

This house, now owned & occupied by Francis Peabody, Esq. is known as the Headquarters of Genl. Gage and was built by Robt Hooper of New Bedford, in 1754. Thos Gage, Royal Governor of Mass. removed here from Boston June 5th 1774, and made it his residence. The architectural proportions & details are very fine, & great care has been taken in their preservation. It is considered one of the best examples of houses built in N. England during the last century of the Colonial period.

The Brown House, Watertown.

This house, or a portion of it, was built by Abraham Brown about 1632, thus making it one of the very oldest houses in N. England. It stands near Mun. St. on the road to Waltham. The name is sometimes spelled Browne.

The Craddock House, Medford.

This is the first brick house erected in New England in the year 1634, by, or rather for, Matthew Craddock, the first Governor of the Mass. Bay Colony. He never came to this country although it was evidently his intention so to do. This house is in the outskirts of Medford on the road to Malden. It certainly ought to be owned by the State of Mass.

The Saltm stall House, Ipswich.

This was built by Richard, eldest son of Sir Richard Saltm stall, about 1635, and is a very interesting old building, both externally and internally. The lower part is filled in with brick and stone and is bullet-proof. It stands a short distance from the Station. It is sometimes called the Bond House.

The Sutton House, Ipswich.

This house was built by the grandfather of Gen. Sutton and is probably about 200 years old. It stands in the eastern part of the village.

The Noyes House, Old Newbury.

This was built by the Rev. Jas. Noyes, about 1636. It stands a short distance to the right of the Upper Green, not far from the Old Town church.

The Coffin House, Newbury.

This was probably built by Frisiam Coffin about 1650, before he removed to Salisbury in 1654. It is most likely that the front portion was erected much later, as the rear part is evidently much the older of the two. It stands on High St. very near the Old Town church.

The Alden House, Duxbury.

This was built by John Alden, son of the John Alden who came over in the Mayflower. It was erected about 1653, and has been but little changed from its original appearance. It stands on high ground very near the R.R. Station. It has never passed out of the family, and an eighth generation of John Aldens is now (1880) living in it.

The Standish House, Duxbury.

This house is believed to have been built by Alexander, son of Capt. Standish about 1646. The Captain's house stood about 1/2 mile distant, but of this no vestige remains except the cellar.

Birth-place of John G. Whittier, Haverhill.

This house was built by Thos. Whittier, (an ancestor of the Poet) who came over from England in 1630, and settled first in Salisbury, removing thence to Newbury, and afterwards to Haverhill, where he built a small house near the present one which latter he erected about 1665. It originally sloped to one story at the back, but was afterwards raised to its present proportions. It stands near the turnpike leading to Amesbury, about 3 miles out of Haverhill.

The Saltonstall House, Haverhill.

This house was built about 100 years ago by Dr. Nath^l. Saltonstall on the north side of Merrimac St., nearly opposite where the Post Office now is. It commanded a charming view of the Merrimac River and the surrounding country. It was removed to its present location on Saltonstall Lake by his grandson, W. G. Howe Esq. of Haverhill.

The Endicott or Nourse House, Danvers.

This house was built by Townsend Bishop in 1640, and was afterwards owned and occupied by John Endicott, son of the Governor. It afterwards passed into the possession of the Nourse family and here lived Rebecca Nourse, one of the victims of the Witchcraft mania. It is now owned by Orrin Putnam.

The Moulton House, Lynn.

This is a very old house, but the exact date of its erection is uncertain. It was partially remodelled by the father of Jas. T. Moulton. It stands near Boston Street.

The Pierce House, Dorchester.

This house was built by Robert Pierce 1640, and occupied by him until his death in 1664 since which time it has remained in the possession of his lineal descendants. It stands on Oak Avenue, Adams street.

The Curtis House, W. Roxbury

This was built by W.^m Curtis in 1639 and has always been in the possession of his descendants. Gen. Washington occupied it for a short time at the commencement of the Revolutionary War. It stands very near the Boylston station of the Providence & R.

The Bradford House, Kingston.

This house was built by a grandson of Gov. Bradford about 1675. It is in a tolerable state of repair, and is situated on high ground near the Landing.

The Allerton or Cobb House, Kingston.

This house, or rather a portion of it, is supposed to have been built by Isaac Allerton about 1640, but there is some doubt about this. It was afterwards owned by Ebenezer Cobb, who died here in 1801, aged 107 years and 8 months. It stands in the south-eastern part of the town, near the road leading to Plymouth.

The Palmer House, Salem.

This is on High Street Court, and was built by Richard Palmer in 1675. It is believed to be the oldest house in Salem that has never been modernized, except perhaps in the windows.

The Prince House, Salem.

This stands at the corner of Pleasant & Forester Sts., and was built by Richard Prince, deacon of the first church in Salem, about 1670. The projecting parson is undoubtedly much more modern.

The Clark House, Rowley.

This house was built by a man named Chaplin about 1670. It is now owned by Moses Clark.

The Ober House, Wenham.

This house was built about 1660. It is about a mile from the R R Station, on the road to Drewers.

The Tappan House, Newburyport.

This was built by Jacob Tappan about 1672, and stands on Tappan St., not far from the Pillsbury House. It is now owned by Mrs. Cornelia Tappan.

The Pillsbury House, Newburyport.

This was built by Joshua Pillsbury about 1685 and has always been owned by his descendants and the owner's name always has been, and still is, Joshua Pillsbury. It stands on High St. not far from the Bolleville church.

The Lynde House, Melrose.

This house was built about 1680 about the time of the King Philip War. It stands in the south-western part of the town near Washington Street.

The Iron Works House, Saugus.

This house was built by the Leonard, who here commenced the manufacture of iron, about 1643. One of the brothers removed to the neighborhood of Saunton. The business was carried on here for 100 years afterwards. The chimney of this house is of immense size, and is probably the largest in New England. The exterior has been somewhat modernized.

The Pierce, or Little, House, Newbury.

This was built by Col. Daniel Pierce, an ancestor of President Pierce, about 1685, and is the finest mansion now remaining in Mass. of so early a date. It was built for a Garrison House, the larger portion being of stone, brick, and the walls are very thick. The center chimney is of enormous size. It has passed through many changes of ownership, and now belongs to a Mr. Little. It stands back some distance from the street beyond the Old Town Church.

The Poor House, Newbury.

This was probably built by a man named Spence, about 1640 and afterwards sold to John Poor, whose descendants still live here. It stands close to the turnpike a short distance below Parker River.

The White or Ellery House, Gloucester:

This was built by Rev. John White 1703; and for some years after his death was used as a Town House. It is very strongly built, and the chimney is of immense size. It stands on Wash- ington St. about a mile from the R. R. Station. The 4 balls shown in front of the house are gone.

The Gott House, Rockport.

This house was built by a man named Gott abt 1700, and has continued in the possession of his descendants until the present time. It stands near the water, in that part of the town called Pigeon Cove.

The Bradstreet House, North Andover.

This was built about 1725 by Gov. Bradstreet. It stands on the Andover turnpike nearly opposite the Phillips House.

The Abbott House, Andover.

This is a very old house, on the road to Ballardvale, built probably about 150 years ago, but nothing that is reliable can be ascertained in regard to it.

The Lincoln House, Cohasset.

The right-hand portion of this house is said to have been built by Indians on Green Hill, about 200 years ago, and was removed to where it now stands by Ephraim Lincoln about 1770. It is situated close to the Jerusalem Road about 3 miles from Cohasset Village.

The Nichols House, Cohasset.

This house was probably built about 1680 by Job Cushing. It is now owned by James W. Nichols. It stands on King Street, about a mile from the village.

Manchester-by-the-sea.

This old house was built for the second minister settled here, and has never been altered.

Boston.

This is a very old house on Hull St. nearly opposite Copp's Hill burying-ground.

Reading.

This house is very near the R. R. Station. It was probably built about 1720. During the Revolutionary War a number of British prisoners were quartered here.

Groveland.

This is a very old house about 1/2 mile from the center of the village. Nothing definite could be learned about it.

South Scituate.

This is said to be the first mill ever built in Plymouth Colony. It stands on 2nd Herring Brook, not far from Greenbush station.

Scituate.

This is the Jenkins house and is probably at least 150 years old. It is not far from the R. R. station.

The Lennisen House, Gloucester.

This was built by an ancestor of the present proprietor about 1772. It stands near an old road leading to Rockport. This house is not far from the village of Bay View.

The Chard House, Gloucester.

This house was built about 1730, and is now owned by Thos. Chard. It is in that part of Gloucester called Annisquam.

The Boardman House Saugus.

This is a very old house, probably built in 1690 by the ancestor of the Boardman family. It stands close to the road leading to Melrose, from which it is distant about 2 miles, and is in a state of good repair. It now belongs to a Mr. Howard.

Woodland Site, Levester.

This was built about 1730 by Joseph Sprague, and afterwards owned and occupied by his son William as a dwelling and store. A blacksmith shop & hand card factory were also on the estate. The house was burnt down some years since.

The Moll Pitcher House, Marblehead.

This house, built about 1720, was the birth place of the noted Moll Pitcher, who was born here in 1743. It stands on Orme Street.

St. Michael's Church, Marblehead.

This was built in 1714, and is probably the oldest Episcopal Church in N. England. It stands on Summer Street. The following lines by Whittier are very appropriate.

*Church to reverend memories dear,
 Quaint in dash and chandeliers;
 Bell, whose century-rusted tongue,
 Burials tolled, and bristled rung,*

*Loft, whose fiery organ kept
 Keys, that Smetaler's hatred, had swept,
 Mar, o'er whose tablet old,
 Sinai's law its thunders rolled.*

The Longfellow House, Cambridge, Mass.

This house, surpassing in interest almost any other in New-England for having been so long the head-quarter of Gen. Washington and for now being the home of the poet Longfellow, stands on Brattle St. It was probably built in 1735 by John Vassal since which it has undergone several changes of ownership.

The Holmes House, Cambridge.

This was built by Jacob Fox about 1730, and is the birth-place of Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes. It was occupied by the Committee of Safety in 1775, and Washington also occupied it for three days. It is now owned by Harvard College.

The Aspinwall House, Brookline.

The Aspinwall mansion on Aspinwall Avenue, was built by Peter Aspinwall in 1660, has never been out of the possession of his descendants of the name, and is now (1880) owned by Hon. W. Aspinwall of Brookline.

The Hammond House, Newton.

This was built by T. Hammond about 1730, and has ever since remained in the possession of his descendants. It is situated in the eastern portion of the city, or near Chestnut Hill.

The Fairbanks House, Dedham.

This was built by Jonathan Fairbanks in 1636, and has always belonged to his descendants. It stands not far from the R.R. Station at the corner of Willow & East Streets.

The Adams Houses, Quincy

These are situated on Franklin St., and were built at least as early as 1720, but the exact time cannot be ascertained. President John Adams was born in the right hand house, & John Quincy Adams in the one on the left hand.

The Hubbard House, Concord

This was probably built about 1670, and was torn down recently. It stood near the Common, and in the cellar were concealed many military stores at the time of the Concord Fight in 1775.

The Old Manse, Concord

This was built by or for the Rev. W. Emerson in 1715. He was the grandfather of Ralph Waldo Emerson, who gave it its present well-known name. It stands a short distance from the celebrated North Bridge.

The Cutter House, Woburn.

This house must be at least 200 years old, but the exact date cannot be ascertained with certainty. In 1759 it was owned by Benj. Simmonds, and here the Episcopal Society held their services. It is now owned by Jesse Cutter, and is the only old house in which a genuine old-fashioned diamond-paned window is still to be seen.

The Rumford House, Woburn.

In this house the celebrated Count Rumford (Benjamin Thompson) was born. It was probably built by his grandfather at least as early as 1720, if not before. It stands in North Woburn.

The Munroe House, Lexington

This well known house is probably 170 years old. At the breaking out of the Revolution it was known as the Munroe Tavern, and on April 19th 1775 was the headquarters of Lord Percy, and here his wounded soldiers were dressed after the battle.

The Tidd House, Lexington

This was built by an ancestor of the present owner (Chas. Tidd) about 1684. Mr. Tidd's grandfather, John Tidd, was one of the company under Capt. Barker, who on the morning of Ap. 19th 1775, opened the great drama of the American Revolution, and in which, he was badly wounded.

The Danforth House, Billerica

This was probably built about 1680 by the ancestor of the Danforth family. Several of this family were quite noted men in the early history of this part of the country, one in particular, was a celebrated surveyor. This house stood nearly in the center of the village but it is now probably pulled down.

The Batchelder House, N. Reading

This is probably the oldest house in N. Reading. It was built by a man named Batchelder at least 170 years ago, but has now passed out of that family. It stands on a bye road near Solby Pond.

The Old Meeting House, Hingham.

This was built in 1680, and is the oldest Meeting House now standing in N. England, and although it has been enlarged, still preserves its original form and style. It stands on high ground near the main street, and from the belfry there is a charming & extensive view. It is sometimes called "The Strip."

The Wayside Inn, Sudbury.

*As ancient is this hostelry
As any in the land may be,
Built in the old Colonial day,
When men lived in a grander way,
With simpler hospitality,
A hint of old Redoubt's Hall,*

*Now somewhat fallen to decay
With weather stains upon the wall,
And stairways worn and crazy floors,
And creaking and uneven floors
And chimney huge and tiled and tall
—Longfellow.*

The Floyl House, Revere

This was the second house built in this part of the town, then called Romney Marsh probably about 1670. It stands by the road leading to Revere Beach.

The Edmester House, Everett.

This house stands on Bow St and is 220 years old. It was built by a man named Swartz.

The Carter House, Wilmington.

This is a very old house, having probably been built as early as 1720. It stands in a very lonely part of the town, and has never been clap boarded nor painted. It is still in the possession of the Carter family.

Wracut Garrison House, Lowell

This house was built about 1834 for a garrison house in the town of Dracut, but is now included within the limits of Lowell. It stands on the river road about a mile below Southwick bridge.
