The square of the Hotel de Ville proeach of the eight sections had taken up their positions with their appropriate flags and with glittering arms. The march began towards the Palace of Lacken, to meet the Prince, about half past 11 o.clock. His Royal Highness, accompanied by three ailes de camp, did not reach the Hotel de Ville till past two o clock. He was extremely anxious to proceed directly to the Palace without going to the Hotel de Ville at all rected by the city authorities, opposed his progress, and after a quarter of an hour's contes-(during which the populace repeatedly seized the brief of his horse, and insisted on his going to pay homage to the city authorities.) he was obliged to submit to their dictation. A grand review of the national guard took place in the Champ de Mars on the 29th August, when about 50,000 men were reviewed by the King. They were all clothed at their own expense, and serving without pay or emolument. The population poured out in immense numbers to witness this truly patrione display; one account says, with exaggeration doubtless, that not less than half a million were present. Laplaced the commander-in-chief on the fayette acted as the commander-in-chief on the occasion, and received on the ground the conmidst of the review, a mass of persons was aren slowly advancing smidst the shouts of the surrounding spectators-it was the wounded in the fight of the Three Days, who had crawled and been carried from the hospitals to view the splen-did show, which, but for their exertions, would never have taken place. Amidst this band of patriots were seen boys of not more than twelve years of age, who had risked their lives on that memorable occasion, and women who had forgotten their sexe's fears in the dangers of their country. The following letter, addressed by the King to Lafayette on the same evening, is characteristic:

"I am anxious to learn, my dear general, how you find yourself after this glorious day, for I am fearful that you must be pvercome with fatique; but I have another object which lies near my heart, namely, to request you to be the interpreter of my feelings towards those glorious National Guards, of whom you are the patriarch. Tell them, that they have not only surpassed my most sanguine expectations, but that it is completely out of my power to express my scatiments of joy and happiness. Having been a witness of the confederation in 1790, in this same Champ de Mars; a witness also of the to join our army in Champagne, forty-eight comparison; and it is with transport I declare to They will have every day, BREAK. you, that what I have just seen is far superior FAST, DENNER & SUPPER, and to what I then considered so noble, and what our enemies found so formidable. Have the goodness, my dear general, to express to the National Guards how sensibly I was affected by their timonies towards myself and how deeply my heart is impressed therewith.

Yours affectionately, "LOUIS PHILIP."

His method of teaching the above languages is grounded both upon reason and experience; it is simple, perspicuous and impressive, and enables the learner in a short time to speak and write the said languages with ease and propriety.

This method has proved a valuable acquise
