Isaac Edward Emerson

IN proportion to the number enrolled, the men entering the University at its reopening in 1876 furnished to State and nation a remarkably large group of leaders in public and private life. With barely a hundred students in its classrooms, there went forth into life those who rapidly became eminent as judges, doctors, ministers, manufacturers, farmers, and teachers. Prominent among the students of the early days is Isaac Edward Emerson, a native of Chapel Hill, a loyal son of the University, a manufacturing chemist of national reputation, a faithful friend and a tireless, successful man in the business world ever since he left Alma Mater to begin the battle of life.

Captain Emerson, of the Class of '79, entered the University in 1876, and soon found his natural bent in the Department of Science where he specialized chemistry and soon qualified as an assistant in the chemical laboratory.

On leaving college, he took a position in a local drug store, but soon went to Baltimore where he began business for himself. His business grew so rapidly that in a few years he was among the leading manufacturing chemists of the country.

As the years moved along, he became interested in other lines of business in which he has achieved signal success. As a builder of hotels, or the owner of model farms and herds of high-bred dairy cattle, or the possessor of large landed estates, he has always displayed an almost uncanny vision of the future and a forceful, constructive power that have ever brought success to his every venture, and yet success has never turned his head, and ever and anon his mind has gone back to his old Chapel Hill home, to the little college town where he first heard the sound of a college bell calling him to preparation for larger life in a far-off city of which he little dreamed in his boyhood days.

Time and again, he has been invited to positions in the business world outside of his own chosen line of work, but he has invariably declined those invitations and has pursued steadily and successfully his own calling in his own remarkably successful way.

In his home, whether it be for the time being, in his hotel, or at one of his beautiful country estates, or in his palatial summer residence on the ocean front, he is the same unostentatious, sturdy Southern gentleman, the same loyal, devoted

Tar Heel, ever unchanged by success and always standing with outstretched hand to welcome the boys he knew 'way back yonder in his college days when "old Pres" Battle was laying the foundation of the University of today.

He was for quite a time a popular member of the Maryland Naval Reserves, hence the title "Captain" Emerson by which he is so well known in his adopted State.

As a lover of athletic sports he has turned his heart back to North Carolina and given to our University "Emerson Field," which enables us to play here biennially on native soil, a great football game with the University of Virginia. On two occasions, Carolina has played this classic on Emerson Field, and each time more than ten thousand yelling football fiends have cheered Carolina on to victory, and yet on each occasion there has been deep regret that the generous donor of the field which made the game possible was not there in the great crowd to see not only the victory, but also the pleasure he had made possible for his native State.

It is with pleasure that this issue of the YACKETY YACK is dedicated to Captain Isaac Edward Emerson, a loyal alumnus, whose splendid career in the business world, Alma Mater has always followed with deep interest and genuine delight.

Foreword

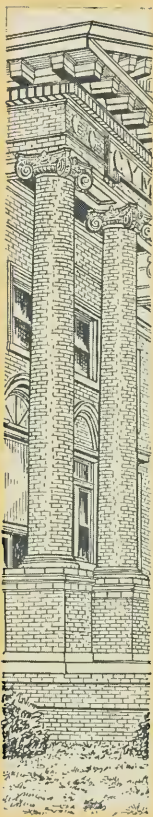

There is nothing new in the Play. It is the age-old drama of University life, and through its four acts only the Players change. The old favorites pass on. Their understudies pick up the lines and strut and fret their brief hour upon the Stage. But we knew them, and we shall keep them. So, when in later years reminiscence shall call them back, let imagination quicken them to life, and for incident let memory supply.

Carolina Alumni

BEFORE we came to Carolina and caught the breath of freedom in its air, took some part in the activity of the campus, and watched its life day by day, the attitude of the Old Carolina man was a puzzle to us. We couldn't understand the reverent way in which he handled the names familiar to the Hill. We couldn't understand his love for something he had left so long ago and seldom saw.

Now we know why he loved Carolina, and now we know that this unflinching devotion to her name has brought Carolina to her place in the State, to-day. The clean atmosphere of loyalty to the University has been handed down generation after generation until to-day it has penetrated into the very heart of Carolina, and the Alumni of the University are immortal, because their work is going forward and will continue to go forward.

Your names, Alumni, are dear to us. You live here in us just as you lived here years ago. We are doing our little to carry the work on and on, and hand down to others the intangible essence of real school love and spirit that you left when you attended your last classes, took your last examination, and walked out of the University to take the leadership of a great State and your place in the onward march of a great people.

Alma Mater and Her Brood

IN 1921, the University and her alumni presented to the State of North Carolina a program of extensive development and enlarged service, and challenged the State to give them the means for carrying this program into execution. The liberality with which the State met this challenge, carried the alumni of the University to the highest goal of influence and service which they have ever reached. It is the justification of their existence as an organized body, but it is also much more than that—it is a clear and insistent call for them to “Carry on!”

Before the alumni can answer this call, they must have a clear understanding of their relation as alumni to their Alma Mater and to the State, and of their obligations to each.

It is not easy to define the exact relations that ought to exist between a State-supported university and its alumni. A privately-endowed university, in a certain sense, belongs to its alumni. Within well-understood limits, they are responsible for its support, and it is responsible to them for the manner in which it performs its functions. But in no sense can this be said of a State-supported university. Such a university belongs to all the people of the State from whom it draws its sustenance and to whom alone it is responsible. Nevertheless, the alumni of a State-supported university do bear to both the university and the State a peculiar relation which is not shared by the citizenship generally.

To understand this relation, they must first of all understand the function of the State university in the modern State. The late President Graham defined it as the right “to serve as fully as possible the higher needs of all the people,” coupled with the duty to interpret this service “not as thinly stretching out its resources to the State boundaries for the purposes of protective popularity, nor as carrying down to those without the castle gates, broken bits of learning; but as the radiating power of a new passion, carrying in natural circulation the unified culture of the race to all parts of the body politic.”

The alumni are the channels of this circulation, and their first obligation is to keep themselves in sympathetic connection with the source from which the vital fluid is propelled on the one hand, and on the other, with the various parts of the body politic through which it is to be circulated. If the University of North Carolina reached only those fortunate few who enter its doors, the circle of its vitalizing influence would be small indeed. It cannot function properly unless that circle is wide enough to embrace within its radius every person within the boundaries of the Commonwealth; and obviously it is through the alumni only that this university-circle can be so extended.

But the alumni must be more than the channels of circulation; they must be the interpreters of the University to the people. It is only through them that the University can hope to receive from the State, that sympathetic understanding and interest which is the fundamental condition of the highest service, and it is through them also that the State must expect to receive the benefits which she has a right to expect from that service.

It must be perfectly obvious that the alumni cannot correctly interpret the mission of this University unless they themselves understand what the University is. They must understand that the University is something more than a campus with a group of buildings attached; that it is something more than faculty and students; that it is even something more than a Carolina-Virginia football game. Important as these things are to her work, they are not the University. The University is an embodiment of the ideals of truth, virtue and beauty; its mission is to inspire men with a passion to attain these ideals in their daily lives. Athletics, faculty and students, buildings and grounds are simply the means through which these ideals are to be interpreted, and it matters little which we use if only our interpretation is correct. For the alumni to interpret her athletics in terms of victory only, her scholarship as merely a system of mental gymnastics, her physical equipment as means of housing so many hundreds of students, is utterly to misunderstand the University and their relation to her. Her athletics they must interpret in terms of the virtues of clean-living, generous self-sacrifice, and fair play which her training in manly sports is designed to inculcate; her scholarship they must interpret in terms of service to that truth to which she is dedicated; and her physical equipment they must interpret in terms of beauty and good taste.

Not only must the alumni so interpret their Alma Mater to the world, they must also aid in equipping her with the means of fulfilling her mission.

The recent gift of $25,000 by Mrs. Graham Kenan, for the endowment of a Graham Kenan Fellowship in Philosophy, is a fine example of the sort of thing the alumni may do. There is no more urgent note in the University's program of enlarged service than the call to her alumni for endowments of adequate fellowships in graduate studies. The University ought also to be able to look with confidence to her alumni for endowments for lectureships in extra-university fields, for a university press, for the enrichment of her library, for beautifying her campus, and for other similar activities which do not necessarily fall within the sphere of the State's obligations but without which there can be no really modern university. Indeed, there is no lack of opportunity for the alumni to join hands with the State in developing here the new and greater University of which Graham dreamed and for which he laid down his life. The door is open, and the challenge to enter is to all. Never was the need so great, never was the time so ripe, never was the call so insistent.

PRECEDED by numerous members of the Abernethy tribe, this one has upheld all the tribal traditions at this place, and still managed to stay on. His faults are not so many as you would expect from his innocent looking face, but are merely confined to the telling of old jokes with no point to them, and making propositions whereby you do all the work and he gets all the proceeds. A familiar figure on the football field, a good student, occasionally, during his four years stay with us he has made an indelible impression that would be exceedingly hard to eradicate.

ALLRED is one of those unassuming sort of men about whom the serious things of college life revolve. Alert of mind and interested in his work, which is said to lead to the teaching profession, he has still retained enough of the untutored touch to make him a good egg and a genial companion. We are grateful to the University of Tennessee for letting us have him with us for awhile.

SCROOGE" in his four years here has developed from a boy to a man, and in the development he has made as many close friends as any man on the Hill. Greatly in demand during the dances, and clever at various indoor sports, he has, nevertheless, been a student of distinction, and has made a record of which "Pres" Lake himself would not be ashamed.

A little farther up, the road which Will P. is following divides in two parts, the one leading towards the law as a profession, the other towards the tobacco business. "Little Man" hasn't quite decided which work he shall choose, but in whatever field his efforts shall be, his clear head, and sterling character will carry him to a success worthy of the great things his friends expect from him.

JACKSON LAFAYETTE APPLE

Greensboro, N. C.

Age, 20; Weight, 148; Height, 5 feet 11 inches

APPLE was rather slow in getting himself established here. In fact, it is a noticeable characteristic of his to be leisurely in most anything he goes at, but he is possessed of a quality of steadiness which goes very well with the first named characteristic. Jack doesn't go out much for athletics, but when it comes to reporting he's a "news hound"—just ask any of his associates on "Dice" Daniels' Tar Heel board. His slow ultra-Southern drawl is calculated to make you sit up and take notice the first time you hear him—after that you'll take notice anyway, for Jack rarely speaks unless he's really got something to say.

WADE came to us in our Junior year, after he had realized that he was not endowed physically with those qualities requisite for a soldier. His first two years of college preparation were spent at V. M. I., and we feel that his transfer was distinctly our gain and the latter's loss. During his stay here he has endeared himself to many who will regret to see him leave the campus. A good student, a good mixer, a man who has gained quite a reputation as a writer (and we seriously suspect him of being connected with the Yellow Journal) we take leave of him but not before wishing him the best of luck.

RED is addicted to singing in the Glee Club and writing one-act plays that Freddie Koch will not produce. It is rumored that he ran a good race for the best looking co-ed, but we think that this was started by some enemy of Mary Yellott's.

However, "J.G." is a regular fellow and when he turns his merry note unto the sweet throat of Paul John Weaver, the press agents resound with his praises.

We predict a great future for "Red" in the musical world if he stays out of the lumber business.

AMONG the best known men on the campus, he is well-liked by all those who know him. He is said to run shy of women. However, he is a man of many activities, as is proven by the fact that he is a good student and at the same time one of the best tennis players that Carolina has ever produced. Having passed through the perils of the S. A. T. C., the privations of military life left a stern impression on his character, changing him from a somewhat happy-go-lucky Freshman to a quiet and rather stern upperclassman. Occasionally, though, his irrepressible good nature breaks through!—and when he smiles, we feel the spirit of comradeship that underlies it. We have always suspected him of being over-modest.

JEFF" says that he is not a farmer himself, but he comes from a town where men fasten their suspenders with ten-penny nails; and well we might believe it, for he is a big, husky good-natured specimen. He is one of those big, capable fellows who care nothing for "starring", but who quietly makes a thing go when he gets behind it. He believes in the golden mean—"A plenty of work and a plenty of play, not too bad and not too good. Be serious but be pleasant". "Jeff" is one of those men who will inevitably succeed.

RING up the curtain!"—and there you are likely to find K. Batts, whether as "Ida", "Janie", "Trista", or "Mary", as versatile in her acting as in her lively self. Entering after Christmas in her Junior year, Katherine has had to work hard to make up for lost time, which accounts for her being here during Summer School, when she and her "tin Elizabeth" were familiar figures on the campus. Her interests and energies have not been confined, however, to The Playmakers and her books. If there's anything going on, "Batts" is more than apt to be in the thick of it, and always with pep and to spare. She's a good old girl, when all's said and done, and though she has not decided just what she is going to do next year, we're wishing her luck and betting on the success of whatever she undertakes.

UNLIKE most men in the Chemistry Department, "Chief" has found time for outside activities, outstanding among which is his work on the Tar Heel. But let it not be inferred that as a chemist he "is not there," for attention to duty and application to his studies have been noticeable throughout his four years at Carolina.

His friends are many and to know him well is to know a man in every sense of the word. And as a good fellow he has few superiors; wherever a laboratory bull session is found, there also is "Chief," and he can sling it fast and furiously. When J. A. takes off his specs., leans back and says "Now, I'll tell you," his listeners know that whether his remarks are on the abstract details of chemistry, or on phases of campus activities, they will be well-worth hearing.

AN all-around man is usually to be found only in fiction, but in Stuart Bondurant, Carolina considers that she has an outstanding example of that type. Stuart is a self-help student and at the same time he is interested in the social side of campus life, he is something of a student, in that his marks are good, yet he is certainly not a "grind," and on top of that he enters into many campus activities, even, we have heard, into politics. In a word, Stuart is the stuff, and we are placing our money on him to make a success in whatever field he tackles, be it bootlegging or preaching.

SINCE learning to keep step in Captain Allen's non-S. A. T. C. company in the Fall of 1918, "R. E." has marched steadily forward with one exception; i. e., he changed his course from the once popular C. E. department to the College of Liberal Arts. And yet he maintains—no doubt correctly—that it was the biggest stride which he made in all of his college career. We consider it a treat to have known Robert for he was always springing new surprises upon us; his character was unfathomable, or we should say unassailable. As a leader in "Bull-sessions" he excelled; as a ladies' man he never fell; as a student he did well. In later life, we hope to hear that his hot-air has turned to logic (an impossible change according to certain learned men), that he has finally been caged by some kind woman, and that he has continued his keen interest in books and men.

NEVELAND is what may be termed a ladies' man, but maybe ladies is too general and should be changed to the singular, lady, for that we understand is the present status of the case. Neveland claims that love for his home town takes him home so often on those mysterious week-end trips, but those who know him do not take this explanation without more than the proverbial grain of salt. The ladies and week-end trips do not seem to have diverted him from his studies as his Phi Beta Kappa Key bears witness to his ability as a student. Between the above named activities, Neveland finds time for an occasional game of basketball and penny-ante.

SMELLING strangely of Greenwich Village, of the slums of New York, and of the senatorial atmosphere of Washington, he is perhaps the most accomplished dilettante that Chapel Hill has ever produced. Having dabbled in many things, he is skeptical of everything, and would rather argue than to grat classes when he isn't sick. A realist, he has successfully explained every enigma of humanity except woman, and is making no little progress in that field. However, women naturally object to being analyzed, and if Jim cannot figure them out, neither can we. Jim is one of the brightest men in the class, and will undoubtedly succeed as a lawyer.

WHEN we think of Joe we invariably think also of the inevitable pipe, Johnny Booker's courses, and the Sigma Nu place. For here is a man who has found the utmost of pleasure in these things. Just why, we don't know, but something has made the distinguished English Prof take such a liking to this Rocky Mount youth that nothing less than a "one" is the mark he gives him on all his courses. We are inclined to believe, however, that Joe is simply there with the proverbial "goods." Joe is a good, quiet scout, who knows his stuff, to use the language of the campus. Far be it from him to tackle something he can't finish, and his accomplishments while here have been numerous. There is a cubbyhole somewhere down at Mrs. Patterson's where Joe gets to read all his parallel, the story goes, and he never fails to prepare for rainy days. But he finds plenty of time to hang around the old hall and fraternize extensively. Everybody likes Joe, and it is the campus prediction that he will make his share of the plunks when he hits upon the trail of life.

WE have to admit it. Otherwise a most admirable man, he has an all-consuming vice. With some men it's wine, we mean corn, with others it is the gamut described by an eminent mathematician as "near beer, chicken, and jazz," but with Clyde it is peanuts. It's rumored he ransacked Philadelphia one rainy day for the aforementioned article.

He is an inveterate hunter, both of the Nimrod and Isaac Walton varieties, and a man upon whom nature has placed an undeniable stamp of approval. He is of the out-of-doors, and whether he is toiling in the fumes of a chemical plant or calling to his dog through an autumn wood, we believe he will carry the bigness and squareness of that out-of-doors with him.

AT first sight you would unhesitatingly put him down as a genuine Count of Graustark. Later you would learn that his "made in France" mustache was in reality an effort to hide the fact that he is from Fuquay Springs, N. C. Still later you would be surprised to know that he is not taking fencing lessons, but Geology. It is said that he is pursuing that study with a view to analysing the water of the justly famed springs. He is supposed to be a man with a past. Certainly if vari-colored envelopes are an indication of it, this assumption is justified—he receives them every day.

SOON after this imposing looking gentleman's arrival on the Hill he fell into the wily graces of Collier Cobb, and now he is destined to become a geologist. He will make a good one if he survives the hair-raising tales about huge dinosaurs and lizards thousands of feet long. We hope "R. E. We were going to say that he is a mighty good fellow, a good student, and all that rot, but "R. E. L." deserves higher praise, so we will have to leave the rest to your imagination.

THIS handsome young man is too good looking to go to college, and yet he has proven that his head is much more than a vanity box. His membership in the Phi Beta Kappa Society certifies that he knows his subject. He has had some remarkable experience in the Westinghouse Electric plant where he works in the summer, and where he has likewise written a fine record. His aim is to be the best in his line, and we predict a noble success for he has a strong personality, a smiling face, even in difficulties, and an excellent brain.

CARL SYLVESTER COFFEY
North Wilkesboro, N. C.

Age, 22; Weight, 164; Height, 5 feet 9 inches

Wearer of N. C.; Gym Team (2, 3, 4); Class Basketball and All-class Bachelors' Club; Masonic Club; Wilkes County Club, President (3); Assistant in Gym (3, 4).

ORIGINALLY a member of the Class of '21, this young son of North Wilkesboro has to his credit one accomplishment of which but few Carolina men can boast—that of making a letter in the gym during his first year. But being a No. "1" man in the gym has not kept him from being a good man in his studies, as his "profs" will affirm, especially those of the past summer school. It is also reported by an excellent authority that he made the highest grade given on the "campus course" during the summer session.

But that which puzzles us most is—why did he move his residence from the campus to the country during his Senior year—was it to study or to get closer to nature? But regardless of all reasons for such action we know Carl to be a true son of Carolina, and a loyal member of '22.

JOHN WILEY COKER

Rock Hill, S. C.

*Age, 21; Weight, 135; Height, 5 feet 0 inches*German Club; Di Society; Tar Heel Board (3); South Carolina Club.

Π K A.

FOUR years at Carolina have not succeeded in making John Coker a North Carolinian—but if all the South Carolinians could measure up on general excellence to him, we have no doubt that our Southern neighbor would reassert her Revolutionary rank as one of the four Leading States of the Union. John is a living paradox—redheaded, he has never been known to display his pugilistic abilities. He has very seldom been seen to study, yet he stands high in a scholastic sense. Obviously, he must have acquired the ability to boot his professors; but if he has he does it so quietly that we doubt if even the professors realize it.

After four years of contact with him, we consider him one of the most likable boys that we have ever known.

NINA HORNER COOPER

IT puts you in a good humor just to be with Nina, for she's always full of pep." This, the verdict of the Saint Mary's Muse of 1920, applies equally to her two years at Carolina, and will always be true of Nina wherever she may go. She's the jolliest of companions, be it at the bridge table or coasting down Windy Hill, but underneath her inexhaustible good spirits there lurks a deep dark secret—Nina is a Math. shark! So well does she manage to conceal her aptitude for this weighty science from the public, however, that we begin to wonder what else may be going on all unsuspected within her curly head. Perhaps it is because of this that she was chosen Class Prophet, but we suspect that there is another still deeper reason—just that she's such a good fellow.

WILLIAM EUGENE CORNELIUS

Age, 24; Weight, 145; Height, 5 feet 11 inches

SLIM" entered here with the Class of '20, and like many others of that class served at the front in France. After the war he came back to Carolina and immediately gained a reputation as the best sleeper on the campus. This drowsy appearance, however, did not keep him from passing Cowan's accounting on first trial, graduating Christmas of his Senior year, and gaining many friends among his adopted classmates. Genial, easy going, yet persistent, "Slim" has learned the secret of success.

HAROLD COCHRAN CORPENING
Lenoir, N. C.

Age, 26; Weight, 160; Height, 5 feet 10½ inches

Di Society; Caldwell County Club; Carolina Salesmanship Association, Secretary-Treasurer (3), President (4), College Manager (4).

HAL does not seem to be a devout lover of politics; but he would not let anyone spoof him about this matter. To show the boys what he could do without a political machine, he made the Mary D. Wright Debate.

He says college life is only a loss of time; during which period one loses all that was once his own, and gains in return an inseparable compound of artificiality and deceit. He has been caught doing everything except studying. Of course, he never boots, booting as he sees it is a crime that every college man should steer clear of; but "Ye Gods and Little Fishes" it does pay to be diplomatic.

JAMES POOL CLAWSON

Beaufort, N. C.

Age, 21; Weight, 150; Height, 5 feet 10½ inches
N. C. State College '17-'18, '18-'19; U. N. C. Chapter
American Society of Civil Engineers.

IT took Clawson a long time to make up his mind what he wanted to do. Clawson spent the first part of his college career on the campus of our brother college, N. C. State, where he played with electrical instruments. Clawson came to us and started under the supervision of Prof. Daggett, Mustard, and Lear, Company. He found that he could get along under this trio, so made a stab for Hickerson and Saville, Civil Engineers.

We believe Clawson will make a better Civil than Electrical Engineer. Under the supervision of Hickerson and Saville Co., he has come into his own and some day in the not-very-distant future he should be one of the leading engineers of the country.

FRANKLY we do not know what to say about this individual, for in him we have found so many peculiar and attractive qualities. You may always count on him to do the unexpected. We can't with all fairness call him lazy for he has passed the greater part of his work, even if he did Major in French 5, and for two successive summers neglect Mississippi just to spend the time staying in Chapel Hill.

Entering with us during the S. A. T. C. in 1918, after exchanging his load of cotton for tuition, he was rudely thrust into the Company C barracks where he suffered his first pangs of homesickness. It was with no little difficulty that his roommates succeeded in breaking him from his native dialect; but now we find him nearly well, and when he made his first entrance into North Carolina society he found that he had ventured forth into mighty seas only to find them abounding with Titanics.

In him we find the truest of friends, and his popularity and success at this institution indicate that which we may expect from him in future life.

WHEN we called at R. B.'s (alias "Rips") room to get some dope on him from his roommate, we caught R. B. red-handed at a game of double solitaire, the other delinquent must remain a secret since this narrative is only of "R. B.," the evidence collected was rather scanty and it seems that the only thing that we can accuse "Rip" of is bridge and solitaire with quite a bit of study thrown in for good measure. Being curious about the nickname of "Rip," his roommate informed us that as Rip Van Winkle is the only man known to have slept longer than "R. B.," "Chess" Woodall had thought it only proper to name him after his famous predecessor in the realms of Nod. Everyone claims that "Rip" is a fine fellow, and we will say in this regard that he associates with "Chess" Woodall, and let you draw your own conclusions.

THIS tall specimen from 'way down east came to us after a fitful sojourn at Elon. That he has survived that and taken measures to correct the error, implies that his chief ambition in life is not entirely along matrimonial lines. He gives us the impression that he is after the more material things, which is sound judgment, for the immaterial sometimes follows close on the heels of the material. We believe he has the ability for success and the application to make it real.

IN such undertakings as I am now beginning, it is a problem to tell all one knows and still not tell too much—to leave no spaces blank, and to choose the significant things to tell. As a matter of fact, she presents such an endless amount of material to pick from that I shall have to compromise by simply stating that she has been all the way from Paris to San Francisco has breathed the fog of London, shimmered along the great White Way of N'York, gloried in the grandeur of the rare peaks around Denver—and is now an adopted Tar Heel.

When the Woman's Association chose its officers for the fall term she was elected President—and in January re-elected. She has claim on history, in that she is the first co-ed to serve on the Campus Cabinet, while in Tommy J's office there is to her credit a long list of I's. A record to be proud of, isn't it?—and we are proud of Adeline.

WHEN we come to a man of many accomplishments it is exceedingly difficult to know just which one to speak of. George has been with us for four years, taking quite a part in our class activities until "Freddie" Kotch found him the possessor of certain latent qualities. For a while we did not see much of George but we all realized that we would hear of him in some capacity. When the Playmakers began to make such a success at the University we knew that George had found himself, and he is now business manager for this organization.

One of the best known and liked men in the class, very fond of the ladies, especially one. We predict for George a success that he will undoubtedly merit.

HOWARD HUGH DOGGETT

Age, 22; Weight, 172; Height, 5 feet 10 inches

Varsity Football, 1919, 1920, 1921; Class Basketball, N. C. Club; Rutherford County Club, President (4).

DOGGETT is a man whom we are proud to claim as a friend. He is a rather modest specimen who hails from the great metropolis of Forest City. Rather calm-like and dignified, he is very select in the choice of his friends and will not confide in you until he has tried you and found that you are not "wanting." He is quite fond of the fairer sex and it has even been rumored that he is entirely capable of slinging a wicked line. He is a good student as a rule, although he does have a natural aversion to a certain accounting course.

Altogether, though, he is the man of whom we are proud, and of whom we are certain to hear great things.

JOHN Dewey is that funny looking bird you saw behind the bat in all those pictures made of Coach Lourcey's squad in 1920. The estimable coach said that "J. D." was the only man on the team that looked like a ball player, so that explains his looks.

He has somewhere about him that quality that goes to make a man the first president of the Di Society for his Senior Year. Another interesting thing about him is that he roomed with Roger Ogburn at Guilford College, as well as in number 14 Old West. I can see him now as he would sit and laugh at "Eye-brow" until he must need wipe the tears from his glasses.

It has been said that "J. D." is a born mechanic, in that he ran a "machine" around the campus with no small dexterity. Oh, yes; he made an l under Dr. Stabb on Spanish. Beyond these he is about like the rest of us.

FREDERICK MAST DULA

Age, 19; Weight, 150; Height, 5 feet 7 inches

Caldwell County Club; Gym Squad (1), Gym Team (2, 3); Assistant in Gym (3); Wearer of N. C.

THIS man has made his years here at Carolina a period of study and pleasure combined. He believes in taking things as they come and worrying about nothing. He is fortunate enough to be able to retain his good humor and presence of mind under the most trying circumstances. Almost any afternoon you might drop in the "Gym" you will find Dula at work on the bar or the rings with as much grace as the best of them. Possessing an unlimited amount of energy and a keen sense of humor coupled with his taking ways we expect him to make for himself an enviable position wherever he goes.

CLAYTON distinguished himself as a mathematician two years ago when he won the "William Cain Prize in Mathematics," but just why he deserted Civil Engineering, we have never been able to understand. Certainly, it was not because he did not have the mathematical ability. But then there may be other reasons.

Always quiet and friendly in his manner, Edwards makes friends everywhere he goes. We hate to see him leave.

KIVER" put two years in at the Citadel, then he decided to come here and get an education. He is another of those sons of sister Carolina who does not know what it was the Governor of North Carolina said to the Governor of South Carolina.

He comes from Darlington—what a name!

Are we to understand that Darlington is a land of sunny, southern romance where the sand shimmers and twinkles in the sunlight, and where the pines whisper and nod in the moonlight? We believe in you "Kiver," for we can imagine you in the role of Lothario. Though south be south and north be north, these twain shall never be separate, "Kiver" never shall be separate.

SLICK" hails from Woodland, where the other twenty-five inhabitants thinking that the climate of Chapel Hill would be good for him, unanimously decided to send him there. He has done well here in spite of the fact that his brother willed to him, on his departure, the peculiar name of "Slick." Knowing him as we do, we have often wondered why such a name clung so persistently to him. However we consulted the Drug Stores and much to our surprise found, that "Slick" has tried every brand of hair tonic on the market.

He hopes to become Mayor and Postmaster of Woodland, or Governor some day, and then put Woodland on the map. Whichever of these you undertake, "Slick," the Class of "22", wishes you success.

WHEN I saw that John was next on my list, I found myself envying the I he made on Italian. Yes, John has read the Inferno in the original, talks with both hands—Sissignorel, and his efforts have not been restricted to the Wops—French was pie to him; Spanish was pudding; English was dessert in all forms; and German was a delicate entree.

John had, yes, still has it, an odd twisted little smile. I don't know why I mention it now, exactly, except that it is so undeniably a part of him. Perhaps it is in its way indicative of that quality in him that makes him of his kind, unique. He is the only little man I have ever seen in all my life who does not carry eternally and inseparably, a chip on his shoulder. Yes, in this also he is remarkable. Napoleon Bonaparte had one, so had Alexander Pope and—Pike Trotter—John once wrote a lyric, beginning thus: "She may be a pickled onion, but she's all the world to me."

LEONARD EPSTEIN

THE ladies cry for "Ep." Where the light fantastic is being tripped, Leonard is most sure to be there, reigning supreme, besieged with requests for "just one dance." "Ep." appreciates to the fullest extent the joys of life, especially the wild ones, and yet like the rest of us, he has his ups and downs that he must tell you about. He likes to appear before the public and this desire has won for him a berth among the notable characters of our class.

"Ep" has indulged strenuously in athletics, chief among which was sleeping—a sport in which he excelled greatly. Will be honored and loved by all as one of the many boosters who have made Goldsboro famous on the campus. Withal he is a steady man on whom we have learned to depend.

WHEN I first saw "Dick," I thought he was an escaped Oberon. He was treasurer of the "Y," later, proving my first impression to be true in one phase at least, that he is not exactly of this world.

Perhaps I am partial to "Dick"; he was such a good part of that triumvirate consisting of "eyebrow" Ogborne, himself, and myself. Anyway, it takes something to make one partial to another, n'est-ce pas?

He is known to have made a 1 on Frank P. Graham's history. Enough of the platitudes; but one does not speak platitudes of "Dick," they are not platitudes.

I'll leave the sunshine to the flowers, I'll leave the moonbeams to the rippling lakes, I'll leave the moonshine to those disappointed in love, I'll leave the gift of forgetfulness to those who have used moonshine, moreover; but the task of keeping my memory clear and fresh, I'll leave to "Dick."

FINGER started out to study Electrical Engineering, but just about decided that playing a mandolin was his "calling." His roommates say he gets called every time he starts to play. His music is immensely popular in South especially after midnight and the boys enjoy it so much they often say kind things about his ability.

Besides all this however he is really a great electrician, being able to turn an electric light either on or off with equal skill and what makes matters more remarkable it is said by some that he can turn it on with either hand. We admire the persistent way in which he goes after success.

HERE'S a lady in the full sense of the word. When we think of Alice we do not picture a venerable old Southern lady, clothed in hoop skirts and heavily veiled, nor do we imagine a movie actress posing in her latest abbreviated costume, but always there appears before us the likeness of a fair young maiden, neatly dressed, well-poised, reserved, and yet not too reserved. During the four years in which she has passed quietly in and out of the classrooms with us, she has proven that she too knows her subjects well. In the meantime, she has also taken active interest in the community work of the Methodist Church here; she has aided in the Woman's Association work in the University as it struggled to further the interest of the women students; and she has diligently helped her mother in their home on Cameron Avenue. Though she now plans to teach, we predict that a young man will some day find in our classmate a happy, congenial, companion for life.

PHILOSOPHER, poet, writer, and doctor to be, and an all-round good scout is he. For he studies when he studies, does not fool away his time, but when he plays, he enjoys it and says it's sublime. This is Mac Gorham, or "Bull Finch", which either you choose, for it's all the same, as they wear the same shoes. In the fall quarter of this present year, he took five courses and averaged a two, so I hear, besides writing for Willie on various things, from the price of eggs to the dress of kings, why students sin, and sport a frat pin.

Last summer he took a perilous trip, to the land where they carry a gun on the hip, for in bloody old Ireland he made a sojourn, was shot and chased after, so he did return, to the land of the free and the home of the brave, and once more he is a willing slave, to education. Next year, however, less of him will be seen, as he intends to go into Medicine, and learn all the aches and the pains that we have, and how to cure appendicitis with pneumonia salve, and what is a germ, and how does it walk, and how to cure a burn with chalk.

THERE is so much we could tell you about "Bob", but our space is limited so we must turn our attention to a few of his accomplishments. "Bob" is known to be able to do more things well than any other member of our class, whether it be playing football, basketball, leading dances or carrying on several affairs with different girls at the same time, we are led to call him accomplished. Not overly studious, he has gone about his various duties with a seriousness of purpose that is puzzling even to his professors.

He says he intends studying medicine, but we are afraid he is mistaking his calling, for during his four years here he has shown us that he has in him the makings of a big politician. However, if he follows his present plan, we look for all sickness to vanish soon after he learns the art of doctoring.

HERE is a gent of political looks, with a cane and golf stockings and ne'er any books, he strolls about our greensward both night and both day, with his political line, and doubtless you'll hear him say, "Well I think this man will win this time, because he received my support" (for a gallon of wine).

In Rural Economics he has had many puds, if only he didn't have to write up the goods, of how many eggs does a chicken lay, and how much meat eats a man per day. In the summer time to the mountains he hies, where love he does make under moonlit skies, and when he shoots his line, how the ladies fall, and whisper to him that they'll be his all. And last October when we came back, we found that "Bill" was sporting a moustache and a derby hat. The former made his lip look like he had scurvy, and gentle reader, words can't describe the derby. But soon the fringe of hair went away, and we hope it wont appear before Judgment Day.

But Bill is a good scout, and with his good line in this world of ours he will surely shine, and some day in Washington town you will see, he'll be flinging a senatorial spree.

HOW like a noble knight he looks! Yea, and verily it is impressed on those who know him. If he knows, he will tell you; if he does not know he will tell you anyway. Nothing from the fine points of football to the achievements of the recent Disarmaments Conference will find him at a loss conversationally.

Watts came to us from Durham and soon after his arrival he experienced the desire to run something. Accordingly he put his machine in operation and during his Senior year we found him managing the football team in a most capable and businesslike manner.

Watts upholds the dignity of our class. Tall, and distinguished-looking, he has never done anything more derogatory to his dignity than to take an occasional smoke. A good student, a great hand with the ladies and a valuable man to our class we send him forth to his chosen profession, law, with the best wishes of the class.

WILLIE" came into our midst some three years ago, a diminutive man with an ambition to show, how he could talk, and think, and write, as well as debate in the Phi on Saturday night. His record shows the mark he's attained, and many are the laurels which call forth his fame.

This year as editor of our magazine, he has proved that life is not one sweet dream, he has called for reforms on the campus plot, and is champion of the unwashed proletariat.

While he may be a radical and a Bolshevik, we'll find him right though we think him a freak. When he becomes editor of the Durham Sun, the world will learn the Millenium's begun; for vice and evil he will combat, and challenge the supercilious man of the frat, and there'll be a Soviet in Durham at that time, with W. Agnostic as its great Lenin.

ORDINARILY one will hear different things from different persons, especially when the desire is for biographical material, but there is one point about George on which all are agreed. He is forever in some sort of trouble, either real or fanciful, from which he is striving to extricate himself, and is never happy when free from it.

He is an energetic youth, is George, although I am perfectly well aware that you do not think so, and my opinion of men and ability as a biographer will suffer accordingly. What was it Falstaff said about honor? "To hell with your opinion!", or something like that. There is one more point upon which you should, and shall, be set aright; George is a, sh-sh, is a French bull. The best commentary on George is, after all, this sentiment voiced by one who has known him also in his sober moments: "He is as crazy as the devil and I would rather hear him in a session than any man I know." We rest our case. . .

He is known to be a close student of literature specializing in "Bob" Service and one "Captain Billy". "Jake" and "Sweetie" Sweetman and "Bill" Boatwright and "Ted" Coggleshall became so bitten by the insect of pinochle that the fourth roommate of the last named Gentleman, being a devout believer that "Black Jack" is the King's own game, was wont to howl dismally and swear like "Bob" Gray on a cold Sunday morn.

With his football and his pinochle, and literary tastes, we leave "Jake" to the propitious Fates.

PLAYING bridge is this guy's long suit at college. He is an old hand at the game and really has become quite an adept. It is said he can bid two no-trump with either hand, but this is a matter of grave doubt. He likes best to play when "Pot" Parham is sitting opposite, playing dummy, and composing a sonnet. "Pinky" gets his unusual nickname from the complexion of his hair which is not green. Of a genial disposition, he frequently invites the editors to have dopes with him, and then says, "That's all right, I'll match you for them."

ATAR HEEL by adoption, Earle has never quite succeeded in forgetting West Virginia, and in spite of an unfortunate affaire de coeur at Charleston, he still retains much of the characteristic independence of his native mountains. He has divided his time largely between chasing elusive atoms up and down a test tube and bidding no-trump hands in a pasteboard foursome. He should have been a disciple of Horace for he believes in the truth regardless, and his philosophy includes the calling of a spade a spade. Also he has absconded with ye editor's pipe, and this is said editor's chance to get revenge.

In this age of broken promises, the best thing to be said of any man is that confidence can be placed in him and that we say of Earle without fear of contradiction.

THIS fair and curly haired son of Gastonia has the makings of an excellent student were it not for certain strong tendencies to pinochle and bridge, when the time thus employed could be spent much better in the pursuit of knowledge. But far be it from us to pass judgment on our fellow mortals. Rufus has proved himself to be a good student, in spite of pinochle, and it can not be held against him that he has not made all ones. Rufus, at one time, had high political aspirations and was a member of some very choice political combinations in times past, which whether successful or not is a matter of history. But above all Rufus is a fine, clean-cut gentleman and we can say no better of any man.

VOTED the Best-All-Round her Senior year at St. Mary's, Ellen has lived steadily up to her reputation since coming to Carolina. There is nothing on the program in which she is not interested, and if she goes at a thing it's pretty apt to get done, whether it be serving in the doubtful and difficult position of president of the Woman's Association, putting pep into a dispirited co-ed basketball team, ploughing resolutely through Freshman Math and Latin, or thumping "Jack" on the head with her thimble as "Ma" in "Dixon's Kitchen." She has been an invaluable ally to the Playmakers, both as actor and as inspiration. Last year she wandered from the straight and narrow and identified herself with the notorious "hell-fire workers," but in this, her Senior year, she returned to the fold of the purely academic. Next year she expects to put into practice her Welfare training, and it is with much regret that we shall bid her farewell.

AN unassuming makeup of black hair (olive-oiled), brown eyes, and a good clean-cut face; with anything but the appearance of a book-worm—that is Marshall Lake. And he is not a book-worm, but he has made the highest average of his class during his four years in college, and that makes him President of Phi Beta Kappa. "CHAPPIE" was one of the would-be-ensigns who came to the University in the Fall of '18, but, as the others in the unit he joined were disappointed, so was "Chappie," in his naval aspirations, due to the signing of the armistice. Who knows but that our Country lost a Dewey or a Hobson? But he quickly recovered from his disappointment and entered earnestly into his college work, developing into a conscientious hard-working student, and making an enviable record in this respect, passing courses that made him a welcome visitor at the Alumni Building. "Chappie," with all his good work in the academic school took plenty of time to take part in college activities. Being a good mixer, he has formed many close friends, not alone with his own classmates, but with men from every class and school in the University. There is no reason why a man who can fool so many of the "sweet young things" and yet remain intact both in body and mind, should not make a wonderful lawyer, and it is with a spirit of pride that we predict a most successful future for him in his chosen profession.

There will be no superfluous "bull," nor no extra words said, but if he promises to do something for you by a certain time, you can rest assured he will do it. He will in time outlive the ignominy connected with being a native of East Bend—why couldn't he have chosen West Bend just as well? EDDIE must have been born under a lucky star, because he can get away with things that would send anyone else to the penitentiary. He has that happy faculty of getting what he goes after—even though he does make us feel that someone is pulling the wool over our eyes. His philosophy is inclined to the fatalistic, believing that Diogenes searched for an honest man because he was convinced of the futility of looking for that quality in a woman. We know though that he has a preference for the baby-vamp type, and it is said his motto is "Get 'em early and bring 'em up right." He has a forceful personality, an inherent sense of good taste, and just enough sarcasm and eccentricity to make him interesting.

HERE is the star pupil of English 51, who writes poems on the side and recites them for fun, who passes all quizzes and tests that he takes, and will be a Phi Beta Kappa ere he graduates. This lad is beautiful to behold, with a rosy face and locks of gold, and eyes so shining and bright, the ladies cannot resist when he asks to kiss them good night. He neither drinks nor smokes nor has any bad habits, other than going hunting for rabbits, on cold days.

From Gaston County he came to the University at Chapel Hill, to study hard and get his fill, of knowledge in every shape and form, and study from late at night till morn, so that in years to come, he can impart his knowledge, and form a separate co-ed's college. This fair institution will be placed in Gastonia, whose residents then will suffer insomnia, from the noise the girls make after "lights out," frolicing, frisking, and running about.

So hail to this coming educator, whose mind rises over ours like an elevator, filled with thoughts so deep, that they make us look blank, and wonder how far in the books he sank, to get the dope, this is Sammy McClurd.

MEASURING something over six feet in the vertical and just enough to give finite dimensions in the horizontal, this slender lad should surely achieve a high place in the world. He is an entertainer of no mean ability, as will be remembered by those who recall these words: "Now Mr. Clark, there are four suits in the deck. Choose two of them." Sometimes he is really funny, that is, unconsciously so, and to have seen him impersonating the Leaning Tower of Pisa one wintry night in Durham, would have convinced even the most sceptic of his ability to defy the law of gravitation. Chemistry is his serious work, racy bits of De Maupassant in the original his diversion, and brickyard blondes have been known to figure prominently in his scheme of things. JOE said he once went bear hunting and saw a bear. This particular bear was up in a tree and Joe was supposed to scare him out. He shot and killed a sparrow three trees away. The bear climbed down the tree and ambled away, thinking that a thunder storm was no place for a home-loving bruin. This is item number 1 in the case against Joseph Altira. The second is that he was once a school teacher. This "aged" him, it is claimed.

Joe is not only a bear hunter and school teacher; he plays a steady brand of baseball—ask me for a man who is four sides square and straight as a pine, and I'll tell you to go look for this Daniel Boone of the twentieth century. WHEN Rousseau started his "back to nature" movement, way back yonder, he little dreamed that his great work would one day be taken up by a man in Chapel Hill, North Carolina. Yet that is what happened, for this bird, tiring of eking out an existence in a dormitory, bought the only available tent in Chapel Hill, and picking out a nice place back of Memorial Hall, decided that there would be his future home. So there's a new Rousseau today, and this one, just like his predecessor started his movement because he liked nature in the first place, and because it was cheaper to live in a tent in the second place. But seriously though, "E. J." is one of the most sincere men on the Campus; and that he will amount to something in the world is proved by his nerve in breaking away from tradition and precedent and doing a thing he thinks should be accomplished.

"Goat" is ugly, there is no questioning that, but there is something on the other side of the ledger, too, for "Goat" is a wit. "C. L." has won an enviable place in forensic circles and judging from the loftiness of this position one might think him selfish because there were many others who aspired to his seat. He is not selfish, rather he has lived up to his motto to be a success. Mary D. MIKE was made for the teasing and irritation of a guitar. He brought down tablet-shaking applause in Memorial Hall by his never-to-be forgotten "Mikadoing," moreover, only to desert the muse of giving his fellowmen entertainment to gain for him equity before the Law.

His first case was Tyler vs. "party of the first part," just because he was not allowed to "stagger inn" to dinner. He did not lose, needless to say.

It has been told of him that when he was handling the string instrument part of the Glee Club, he took a man before Mr. Weaver to try for a place, whose only qualification was that he could play a harmonica and carry a music stand.

FROM the military life of the Citadel School, came one Jule Nixon with eyes so cruel, and hair parted so sleek, that all the girls fell, both bold and meek. In three short years he has earned his dip, thanks to the Education Department's crip. Now the question is, will he be a teacher, or just a good old baptist preacher, down Hertford way.

In this short life many experiences Jule has had, some were good but a few were bad. Just get him to tell of a N. and S. train episode, and you'll realize why it is such a bum road. Why the drawing room furniture is beyond recognition and the conductor assigned him to eternal perdition. Why a bright brass article lies in a dark, deep marsh, and a hat at Saint Mary's caused a teacher to act harsh.

There is a girl in Greenville Town, whose beauty is of great renown, and often he journeys to this place, only to return with a beaming face, and can be heard to murmur as the waves on the sand, "O, Boy, but ain't love simply grand!"

THERE is a dusky citizen in this village who bears the same name as the man in the picture above. It is said that they both belong to the same eating club, and are seen often together, though an explanation is made that the brunette John has his meals served in the kitchen. The white John has spent an interesting four years in this collegiate servitude. Aside from annexing as friends just about everybody he knows, he has passed with seeming little difficulty some mighty hard courses, and has had more than his share of college fun. On the class athletic field this pride of Goldsboro has kept the eastern hamlet on the map, and it is said that up at the Kappa Sig hall when John says something, the invariable reaction is that things begin to happen. He has divided his interests since on the Hill in the above mentioned domicile, Old East, and Flip Wooten. This white John has had no small degree of success attached to his endeavors while on the campus.

NIHIL" is his name but names do not mean very much, because he is anything else but nothing. He has taken a great liking to tennis this year. We think that Mr. Tilden had better place his laurels under lock and key or this young man will grab a few. His middle name is girls and more girls. He has one of these articles in every port, especially Portsmouth. For this boy we can only predict an early marriage. We cannot attempt to go further.

WE have here an interesting one. From playing stage decorator with the Playmakers to studying inconveniences of Greek, he seems to get some joy out of existence.

He surely has an idea that small things are small things; but what he is going to do about it no one knows, nor does he, we venture. He often strikes a jovial note, but just how deep it is, no one seems to know.

He has a funny little corner in the advertising scheme of Oestricher Company, in which he tries to connect the eight things of the material minded advertiser with more substantial and human sentiment. He is an artist, c'est tout!

BEHOLD—a man! His name is "Jim," just "Jim." We have known him scarcely four years, but we love him for what he is, and admire him for what he has done. He joined us when we came here to "help win the war" though he had never finished the High School when he enlisted for service in the S. A. T. C. However, his grades soon proved to the faculty that he had the capacity to do the work effectively, in fact more ability than many who arrived with High School diplomas neatly framed to decorate their rooms. But he has done more than study; he has been a power on the campus. He has taken part in student activities, an active part. As a business man, none is his equal; as a moral leader, he is not surpassed; as a worker, Williams recognizes his superiority. As Caesar wrote, so can Jim write:—"I came, I saw, I conquered!" Carolina has nothing else to offer him; as a class we have given him our highest office, and now only remains our ardent prayers and best wishes that he continue the excellent work for his mother, his Alma Mater, his State, and his God.

It is said that one night in Alabama he insisted on proclaiming to the winds that he was from North Carolina, which is after all but a natural desire, and that when a traffic cop held out his hand, Pick returned the greeting in a most affable manner.

Pick gives one an impression of strength capable of riding rough shod over any amount of pretention. No wonder the girls feed him the "gre' big he mans" line, and quite naturally he is the leader of any band he is with.

THIS diminutive little treasure of Prof. Daggett and King Lear, is not quite as inconspicuous as his size would tend to indicate, for "Skinny" has braved the dangers of a summer school and has emerged victorious. He is always a true friend, whether he is carrying you home to put you to bed, or lending you two-bits to go to the Pickwick. Inoffensive and somewhat reserved, he rarely confides in you, but he makes a perfect confidant for anyone else—listening to their tale of woe and sending them away smiling. His only vice is an all-consuming passion for bridge, though we often suspect that were it not for the holy terrors of E. E., he would become a lounge lizard. He is a typical Mecklenburger, but, in a pinch, we believe that he would be willing to root for Due West.

MIL is no less a "favoritress" among us than she was at N. C. C. W., where she had her being for the first three years of her collegiate life. And that is not saying just a little, either, if honors act (and they do) as a barometer for the measurement of said favoritess. Although she has been in our class but a single year many members who are ignorant of the names even of fellow-classmen of four years' association, know her, well—very well.

"Mil" is really the kind of a co-ed we all like to have in our class. She is quiet—but only when the exigencies of the occasion require it. She is always cheerful, always pleasing, and that we like to have her around just to see her smiles, for she gave Mary Yellott a close race for the prettiest co-ed.

"22" unquestionably has a just claim to an exalted and unique position so far as co-eds are concerned, and "Mil" is just as much to blame for this as any other, almost as much as any other two.

WOULD you ever have accused him of studying? I thought not; but as a matter of fact, he could put out the old labor. I recall him as he worked over Physics 2, Lab. He was particularly interested in a little machine that went "Click," just as keen as you ever saw. Wherefore he has often been called "Click." He would have been called "Red" as surely as buds turn into roses if he had not been preceded by two other sons of the house of Proctor; so that distinction went to brother Knox.

Bob always seemed to hold himself just a little in, by coming out just a bit harder he would have done some good work for the magazine. Moreover he has the material for a noticeable football player. I came near saying he was no mean politician, but I think I shall save that one and pull it on him at some party.

However, I do say that he can keep me as entertained as it is good for anyone, to, in one of those long to be remembered "bull-sessions," Bob brandishes a wicked line. DID you ever pass the "Bain Villa" and hear issuing from it sounds of the peppiest jazz ever? If so, it's a safe guess that Lina was at the piano, and we'd venture to say, too, that there was an admiring throng around her. It isn't often that we find some one who can play as Lina does, and is as nice about doing it. It's said on good authority that she can play with her back to the piano, and having heard her perform facing the music we don't hesitate to believe even that. Which just shows what faith we have in Lina's musical ability.

French comes next in the list of her accomplishments, for she's one of Billy Dey's prize pupils. She's strong for Spanish, too, and shines in education. This is a formidable list, but it doesn't worry Lina or prevent her from always being ready for a good time.

BILL has the unique distinction of never finishing out a Fall quarter during his four years' registration at the University. The only explanation we can find for this is that it was begun during his Freshman year when he decided the S. A. T. C. would be too strenuous a life for him, and he hated the idea of tearing down a precedent, consequently Bill will have to work harder than the rest of the class to finish with us.

Bill hails from Smithfield and during his four years at the Hill he has not allowed us to forget the fact, though we do not hold it against him. The only fault we have been able to find with him is that he has interests away from the Hill on the week-ends and deprives us of the pleasure of his company.

Not overly studious we have found in him those qualities which count for most when a man is confronted with the problems of life.

I WAS wondering just what would be the nearest approach to libel I could get on "Bill" when I happened to lick an earful of chemistry gossip. He is reported to have gained possession of a pin—one of the sort worn to designate condition of heart—belonging to one of the local fairies (not fair ee's) (nor local color) and gave not one thing in return, whereupon the distressed little one of the super sex became exceedingly frantic and—oh, I have forgotten the rest—you would thoroughly enjoy it could I but recall it, though I promise...

Bill was, as a matter of fact, one of those peculiar specie known as a chemistry bull—the supreme one only knows what that implies, and he won't tell.

Besides this, and his being at once serious and frivolous, serene and salitorial, homely and comely, lazy and energetic, we can say no word more—one was always glad when one said, "Hello Bill."

There is no question but that "C. B." is of the latter belief. TOM once confided to the writer that the chief ambition of his college life was to walk up to some men and knock them for a row of pink dominoes. That he has never done this speaks well of his excellent judgment.

As a statistician he is unequalled and can cite a dazzling row of figures to prove that in 1900 the Hottentots were half an inch taller than today. Failing to convince by figures, he finds a ready ally in any Onslowian, who will back his statements to the last ditch.

As a natural psychologist he intuitively knows when to pass three kings, but as an artificial one he has never yet become convinced that it pays to advertise. He is an inveterate hunter and is looking forward with great pleasure to the open season on cranes.

He has a peculiar liking for "Carr barn" and for Durham, that is quite mysterious to we of the unsophisticated clan. His philosophy is fickle, and changes to meet his moods. He is a firm believer in the Divine Right of "doing what you want to" and in the evolution of man. He even claims that a certain Economics professor has failed to evolve. TOM Warren leaves behind him a trail of rhetorical and oratorical milky ways and with his hair standing straight up on numerous occasions he has thrown the fear of Carolina into many an opposing debating team. Tom is a good debater as has been a characteristic of Caldwell county men at Carolina. He has been a worthy successor to all the brilliant lights who have gone before him and along with it he is a good fellow and wears a decent size collar. Tom may possibly be in love and going to marry, but characteristically he has said nothing about it, so we don't know. It is not clearly decided what Tom has been called to do in the great scheme of things, but whatever he tries he will do with the same painstaking carefulness he has done his work at Carolina.

NO. James, the little birdie won't get away. Here is an exponent of the gentle art of sarcasm. But, there is a healing balm in his twinkling brown eyes that soothes the victim before damage results.

"Jimmy" is an engineer. We judge that by his high-top boots. That he is a very civil engineer, we deduce from his success at surveying good heart lines in Winston, New Bern, and formerly, in New York. In the latter place, however, his transit was slightly out of plumb, and it is reported that the girl in question sang a doxology to his blasted hopes.

We admire your code of honor, "Jimmy," we envy your mastery of square and triangle, and we wish you the best of luck in the bridging of chasms with slender threads of steel.

RAB" Wearn is a lad of Summer School note, who along with the Smith twins some fair damsels did smote, with small willow twigs, on the Post Office steps, and one cruel sister did report them as pests; the faculty took the matter in hand, had a trial with a court and a witness stand, who testified the boys had no evil intent, so the judge declared they were innocent.

"Rab" is a full fledged engineer, knows the meaning of kilowatts and other things queer, can design motors, power plants and lights, plays tennis like Tilden and goes out at nights. And under the crest of his coat of arms, the following verse shows he is not from the farms.

Hit 'em high,
Hit 'em low,
But please don't break,
My Horke Vino.

HE first came into prominence on the floor of the Di Hall, when he poured forth a torrent of eloquent debate, and astonished the members by his total absence of the usual reticence attributed to Freshmen. Later we heard of him in connection with the justly famous Lear regime, where ammeters and most mysterious things of wire engrossed his attention. In short, the electrical field had won another convert, and a good one, to judge by the ease with which he masters the problems that try the souls of the subjects of Lear. Aggressive, a consistent worker, and possessed of a genial disposition, he should go far, and we wish him luck.

Catawba College 1918, 1919; Catawba County Club; North Carolina Club; Murphy Club; Di Society.

DANIEL came to us from Catawba College at the beginning of his Sophomore year after realizing that his mental ingenuity did not have "elbow room" in this narrow institution. He encountered with no disasters in his academic work until he struck Dud Carroll's Economics I, but Dud was somewhat fearful of throwing a man who had a commendable record in the Registrar's office; so he got another trial and came out on top. Horace Williams has been a shining light for him during his Senior year, and from day to day he anticipates the joys of receiving the fruits of Horace's lectures on Logic. There is nothing to prevent Daniel from having a wonderful success in life provided he keeps the pace he has set during his college career. He intends to make his mark in the teaching profession which is at present an undeveloped field.

WE don't know whether best to remember him by his funny little mustache which he brought with him from overseas, or by the eloquence with which he addressed the Di Hall on any and every occasion and subject, for Wiles is of the school of speakers who uses the flowing style of oratory with great effect, and no subject finds itself too petty to inspire him to flights of emotion. Literature found him a willing servant, also, and the Magazine carried sketches by him which were strongly suggestive of the weird beauty of Poe. Entering with the Class of '23 he has overtaken us, and as he passes on we bid him Godspeed.

C. J." has been a good successor to Charles Phillips. His has been a hard and thankless job at times, but he has kept his face to the goal.

I have a clear feeling that "C.J." is one man among us who needs no write-up to be kept in place in our memory for exactly what he means. When he took charge of the "Y" it was in sore need of an even keel. He managed to shake it into an efficient machine as far as its support would allow. The "Y" is one of our problems, and "C.J.'s" manner of tackling it must surely give courage and spirit to those who come after him. So he passes, and we pass and we remember.

II K A.

WE will always remember "Wood" when we think of the things he could do better than anyone else while he was in college. A good tennis player and once captain of the team, conceded to be the best dancer by Senior vote and popular opinion, a leader of many dances, a good musician and a man who was sure to be each year on Charley Nichols's glee club are the accomplishments in part of "Wood."

It is sad to relate, but duty demands it—"Wood" during his four years with us has been laboring under a misapprehension. Every time he leaves his room he asks, "How do I look?" The idea of this remark is that he thinks "they simply go wild over him," but the sad part of it is that "he goes wild, simply wild over them."

"Wood" will get by in this world, for besides possessing the ability and fighting spirit, he has the good wishes of all those with whom he comes in contact. Who could fail with this combination.

ROBERT MOORE WILLIS

A MAN well grounded in the art of gentlemanly conduct. His calm dignity gives to him an air of vast and comprehensive learning, yet with it all he manages to reserve a wholesome store of fun and good-fellowship for his friends. NIFTY Neck," strayed from the fold for awhile and sought the Goddess of Wisdom in the classic halls of Cornell, but they all come back, and so with Wood, who left dear Ithaca and came back home, never no more to rove, never no more to roam. Starting out with mining engineering, he speedily decided that subject was too deep for him, and has turned his invariable courtesy and savoir faire into the making of a civil engineer. In fact, he is one of the most civilized specimens we know of, and whether it be sighting through the handle of a tea cup at a tea dansant or through the eyepiece of a transit in a virgin forest, we rest secure in the confidence that his polish and aplomb will never be shaken from him.

HE is our adopted Tar Heel, and he is popular with us both because he is not always singing "Back Home Again in Indiana", and because he was one of the few adoptees who didn't qualify for the Knickerbocker Club. Walt is another of the Disciples of Dud, and by steady efforts in that field has achieved a place very close to the Shrine. He is a Nimrod of no slight repute, though to see him with his funny little green hat and his one-eyed dog, you'd think old Rip Van himself had come to life.

A most virtuous man, he has but two vices, turkish cigarettes and a tendency to exaggerate figures. However, his generosity with the former and his enthusiasm for the latter make us forgive him for both.

SOME things explain themselves; some things are explained by others, but there are some things that will never be explained. The cause of "Ches's" pensive mood and deep thoughtfulness after each set of dances will always be a mystery to his most intimate associates. Why is he so anxious to find an opportunity to leave the Hill? and why does he stand for hours in the postoffice watching his box for that pink envelope?

Girls, however, are not "Ches's" only accomplishments that deserve mention, for his numerous good qualities cannot be overlooked. His ability to make friends has shown itself at the University during his college career, and he possesses a personality that will find for him a place in the hearts of all those he will meet after he has taken leave of his Alma Mater.

WELL, what do you know about this? Here is "Flip," and you can search the page and you won't be able to find the countenance of one Norwood. How does it come about? Too bad that W is such a long ways from N in the alphabet, for we know that the photographer had a hard time getting "Flip" away from John or John away from "Flip" long enough to get their individuals "took." Here is a boy who regularly reads the Argus and Caduceus, boots Freshmen for the Kappa Sigmas, passes all his work with ones and twos and threes, attends to several other honorable pursuits, and still finds time to argue ten hours out of each day with his lifelong friend, John Norwood. Somebody suggests that "Flip" puts out a crowd of work on his classes, but be that as it may, this deserving lad never fails to come home with the bacon about exam time, and he can look back over his four years and proudly say: "I conquered."

PHILOSOPHER, globe-trotter, romanticist, and musician all in one. We first knew him when he sat high in the stadium and played a wicked bass during the Virginia game. He and his bass horn sitting aloof there, playing an individual composition, was but typical, as we later came to know, of the individualism of the man himself. He has our admiration, for language has no terrors for him. French, German, Spanish, and we know not how many more, are part of his everyday speech. Inveigle him into a conversation, purely English, and even the most blasé of you will learn something new about this puzzle we call life, for "Tramp" is a vagabond philosopher and his ideas have nothing of the commonplace about them.

ENTER "Annie Lee"—and just listen to the applause! For there's sure to be applause, audible or unspoken, whenever "Annie Lee appears," be it on the Playmakers' stage or in Horace's Logic class. In the two years that she has been with us, she has made an enviable record as a maker of the much coveted L's, a playwright, and an actress of rare ability. In this last capacity she has made for herself a name which will go down in the annals of the Playmakers as the heroine of "In Dixon's Kitchen," and in numerous other roles which she has created. In addition to which, she is our prettiest co-ed, and we are all mighty glad that she left Maryland for Carolina.

The Class of 1922

GENESIS

1. In the beginning we were injected into the University during the most troublesome epoch in many a year.
2. Myriad rumors and rumblings of war permeated the atmosphere.
3. The atrocity of the S. A. T. C. enveloped us immediately as "Privates, U. S.," instead of the customary "Freshmen, U. N. C."
4. The battles of Strowd's Hill and Piney Prospect were done again and again in repertoire.
5. Little of learning was the order of the day.
6. The Armistice ended the dream existence and like the end of most bad dreams it came as a welcome relief.
7. After Christmas, experiment began again in the new quarter system.
8. By Easter, conditions had approached a state of quasi-normalcy and not over a dozen of our fledglings slipped by the Upperclass gauntlet of the dances.
9. The Carolina spirit was revived and many old men returned from overseas to instruct us in the ways of the University.
10. Came commencement. Finis verdancy.

ACTS

1. Of '22 it has been a characteristic to elect strong men to leadership: Sanford Brown, Joe McLean, Marion Nash, and Luther Phipps have ably piloted us over our four years of tenure.
2. It is a matter of particular pride with us that we were the first class to overwhelm the Sophs in the annual snow fight.
3. It is also well to remember that in our Sophomore year, we ran rampant in Class Athletics.

4. Individually, we have passed many exams and performed marvelous feats of memory.
5. Collectively, we have eked out four of pleasant existence.

PROVERBS

1. It was not long before we learned that we were in an atmosphere far removed from the Prep School idea.
2. We felt ourselves thrown upon our own responsibility, many of us for the first time.
3. But most of us bore up under it, and soon fell in line with the Honor System and Student Government.
4. It was ordained, though, that we must catch our classes, or else endure the wrath of T. J. and the Faculty Committee.

REVELATIONS

1. Now that we have loosed our grip on collegiate existence, it would appear well to venture just one retrospective line on the subjects of our ultimate accomplishment.
2. First, we survey the field of our major, then our minor and next, the bugbear class of required work.
3. We find that we are unable to recall names and dates as we once thought we could.
4. Yet we realize that in a great many ways we have been consummately benefited
5. Suddenly, the blinding light of truth dawns upon us.
6. We find that it is the knowledge of how much we don't know, which we have acquired, that constitutes the greatest feat of our University accomplishments.

The Season

A BRILLIANT victory over Virginia in the annual Thanksgiving classic, played in Chapel Hill before a crowd of over ten thousand people, was the striking close to Carolina's 1921 football season. The Virginia game was played after a warm controversy over an eligibility clause in the contract, which came near causing cancellation of the game. A wonderful display of sportsmanship on the part of the Virginia student body, and the wise action of President Alderman in reversing the decision of the Virginia Committee to cancel the game, saved the day. With the keenest rivalry possible, but with the friendliest spirit, the game was played, and when Captain "Runt" Lowe ran around the Virginia right flank for twenty-three yards, scoring the winning touchdown, the game was chalked up to Carolina's credit.

The Tar Heel eleven, under the able coaching of the Fetzer brothers, was built up around Lowe and Johnson in the back-field and an entire line of veterans, including the two ends, Morris and Cochran. From the first it was a formidable machine. There were two or three disappointments early in the season, chiefly among these the heartbreaking defeat at the hands of North Carolina State. As a whole, however, the season was strikingly successful, and the eleven was one of the strongest that ever represented Carolina.

Wake-Forest was easily defeated in the initial encounter. "Johnny" Johnson displayed the speed and ability that was to prove a terror to all of Carolina's opponents the rest of the season. Lowe was next in ground gaining, while Poin-dexter and Pritchard were the defensive stars. Carolina scored twenty-one points representing three touchdowns and goals from placement, while the Baptists were unable to register a single point.

Carolina journeyed up to Yale handicapped by the absence of Johnson from the line-up, and shortly after the whistle for the beginning of the game, lost the services of Lowe who sustained a badly injured knee. With Johnson and Lowe both out, the eleven lacked the punch to cope successfully with the heavier and more experienced Yale aggregation, and Eli rolled up a score of thirty-four points while Carolina failed to score.

A crippled team also faced South Carolina in Columbia the following Saturday, and an almost entire line-up of scrubs played the first part of the game. The Gamecocks held Carolina to a tie, which was one of the early season disappointments to the followers of Fetzner's charges.

Fair week in Raleigh, the team was in excellent shape and it was generally conceded that the battle between State and Carolina would be a battle royal. So it was, but the West Raleigh collegians came out with the big end of a 7-0 score when "Runt" Faucette picked up a fumble and charged through for twenty yards with the only and winning touchdown. The Carolina eleven threatened on innumerable occasions, but lacked the final punch to drive the pigskin over.

One week later Carolina met the University of Maryland in Baltimore. By use of a dazzling aerial attack and many new formations, and with Johnson and Lowe the big guns on the offense, Carolina was victorious by the score of 16-7. Lowe distinguished himself by kicking three field goals. The lone Maryland score came when a Carolina fumble was recovered and a touchdown resulted.

The V. M. I. cadets were played in Richmond in the next game with the odds slightly favoring the Virginians. The V. M. I. spread formations, usual speed, and what not, were respected, while the Carolina's severe drubbing of Maryland made the cadets tremble. A few minutes after the game started, however, there was no doubt as to the outcome. "Johnny" Johnson alone gained three hundred and fifty-three yards and proved himself to be one of the greatest halfbacks in the South. He was unstoppable. All of his team mates, with Lowe piloting with his usual skillful and clever tactics, were with him from the beginning to the end, and Fred Morris gave a remarkable exhibition of superb interference. The latter sustained a broken collarbone that laid him out for the remainder of the season.

Winston-Salem saw the Davidson Wildcats hold this same team to a 0-0 tie, putting a crimp in the wave of optimism that resulted from the V. M. I. game. Davidson is always a strong foe to Carolina, against whom the Presbyterians fight their hardest, and the 1921 season was no exception. Carolina was unable to launch the offensive drive with which she beat Maryland and V. M. I., and the game ended with both teams scoreless.

The story of the Virginia game has already been told. The controversy between the two universities, keen but friendly rivals since 1869, marred plans for the big exhibition, but the late hour decision to play the game after it had first been cancelled, brought thousands of supporters of both teams to Chapel Hill to witness the struggle. At first, it looked as if the Virginians had the stronger team, but after their first dangerous drive, they were unable to gain consistently by any tactics, while the Tar Heels were much more successful. The Carolina eleven fought as it had not fought all season, and the result was inevitable. At the end of the game the score stood 7-3 in favor of the home team, and the great majority of the hearts in the crowded stadiums and temporary stands that surrounded Emerson field were made supremely happy. Carolina, in the meanwhile, celebrated in old time style and promptly labeled the 1921 season a success—a great success, as only a Virginia defeat can make a Carolina gridiron season.

Maryland—Johnson around end for 37 yd. gain. In this game he alone gained 353 yds.

HE entered Carolina a regular Neophyte, having gained his pre-medical work at Trinity. We have often wondered why "Dave" went to Trinity, for he is a real good fellow. He has a ready ability for handling practical matters, and is fortunate in that he has picked a profession for which he has an intense love. His qualities are of the best type because like good wine, books, or friends, they improve with age.

FOX came over from Guilford as soon as they taught him something. He is a creditable addition to our tribe. He is as steady and accurate in the laboratory as he is on the baseball field. His qualities are sterling, and therefore lasting. Fox is well fitted for just those things that will some day help him to push a Ford for some good doctor.

GIRLS, please don't tarry here. Honest, you had better not, for this is "Shorty" Groome, whom we put up as the ladies' man of our class. He is "simply irresistible". He numbers broken hearts as King Solomon did wives; has that intoxicating flow of reason which must ultimately lead to a feast of the soul. He also tells enticing tales of Groometown (Greensboro is a suburb of this well known Guilford center). But withal, he's a jolly good fellow who shows his sincerity by his constant expression "if you tell me what you're doing, I'll tell you if you are right."

HERE is a specific panacea for all ills of human flesh:—"Johnny," the syncopated medico with his rythmical vocal cords and ever-present giggle. Truly "Johnny" is a tonic. When things look blue for Doctor Key's cadets, "Johnny" invariably pipes in "Judy O'Grady," and in less time than one can say Percival, the whole bunch is—should we say—singing. What's more, he is somewhat of an athlete, as Coach Fred Patterson can bear out. Siler City produced him, Guilford College trained him, the University attracted him, and the Class of '22 cherishes him.

CALM and placid student life has proved a very favorable medium for this organism after various adventures in France. BY the older set who forsook the pen for the sword, Fred will be remembered as a successful baseball captain; by those who came later, he will be remembered as a successful coach in that game. Medicine has called him, and to that profession of high standards he has contributed himself in the same whole-hearted way he has given himself to his friends. HAZEL came down to the University after knowledge. He immediately formed a lasting partnership with one son of Erin—Bill Rourke by name—and then two disciples of Hippocrates have gone down the dark labyrinth of medicine together. To write of one would almost be writing of the other. But he has it on Bill in one particular. He receives pink envelopes every day and is a great writer himself, but not along medical lines. He is a good student, a hard worker, and has all the earmarks of a good doctor.

FIRST YEAR MEDICINE

BEATRICE AVERITT
Fayetteville, N. C.

Age, 22; Weight, 104; Height, 5 feet 2 inches

Flora MacDonald College, '14-'18; Ex-Honorary Member S.P.S.; North Carolina Woman's Association.

AFTER having spent four years at Flora MacDonald, "Beatrice" decided to come to the "Hill" and study Pharmacy, at which she has been very successful. Beatrice is a very hard worker, although she does not spend all of her time on scientific subjects. Regardless of the amount of work she has to do she always has time to do some wonderful work in correspondence. We hardly know what to say of her future, for women are so changeable, but it is the opinion of the class that she will be successful in her ultimate choice.

ADELINE BRADSHAW
Lenoir, N. C.

Age, 21; Weight, 143; Height, 5 feet 7 inches

Treasurer U.N.C. Woman's Association; Honorary Member S.P.S.; Vice-President Caldwell County Club (1), Treasurer Caldwell County Club (2).

IT is quite a task to put here in this limited space all we think of "Brad." She is always very conscientious in her studies and still has time for other activities. To say the least, she is a regular good sport.

Although "Brad" has chosen Pharmacy as her life's profession, we have our doubts as to whether she will continue it long—stranger things have happened.

ELLIE BURTON BRISTOW

Age, 22; Weight, 158; Height, 5 feet 8 inches

Pharmaceutical Club; S. P. S.; Elisha Mitchell Scientific Society; South Carolina Club; Assistant in Pharmacy.

DOC", after two years sojourn at Wake-Forest, Bristow decided pharmacy was his calling, so he came to Carolina in '20 to study the pill rolling profession, and during his two years on the "Hill" has made a host of friends.

"Doc's" technique is unsurpassed, and pharmacy to him is a "crip".

For Bristow we predict a most successful future and trust McColl will be able to appreciate "The Bristow Drug Co."

FITZHUGH LEE FURR

WHEN this wizard of the mortar and pestle starts in to assuage the ills that flesh is heir to, it is felt among certain members of the pharmaceutical fraternity that many new and strange concoctions will come forth. Always up to the last minute in the latest sartorial effect, this Fitzhugh Lee has been in demand with the ladies, and since his savoir faire is of the violet kind, this demand has been productive of some slight embarrassment.

HARRY—a scholar, a judge of good spirits, and a gentleman—and this gives you the dope in a nutshell. As a mixer both of chemicals and fellows he is hard to beat.

The chords of his mandolin have played upon the heart strings of many a fair lady. In fact, one in our Gate City welcomes him not infrequently for the week-ends.

LEONIDAS JACKSON

Cooper, N. C.

Age, 22; Weight, 152; Height, 5 feet 9 inches

S.P.S.; Pharmaceutical Club; Sampson County Club.

JACK", the pride of Cooper, and also the pride of the Pharmacy School, for he is really a Pharmacy "Bull," and whenever there is a Prof to be knocked cold, "Jack" is always on hand. He realizes that a well rounded man should have a little knowledge of all professions. We are expecting him to go into the Welfare Work in the near future. He is a good student and a good egg, and what more need be said of a man?

JAMES EDWIN JOHNSON

Wallace, N. C.

COMING from a town bearing the name of the foremost warrior of Scotland's hills, one would expect to find in him a fierce air of brusquerie, but on the contrary, there is mixed in him a good proportion of geniality and friendship. He has a habit of pushing his accepted tasks to a successful conclusion, and this consistent work is rounding him into shape for the big scrap with the world.

RALPH EDWARD LANGDON

Coats, B. C.

Age, 22; Weight, 164; Height, 5 feet 10 inches
Pharmaceutical Club; S.P.S.; Harnett County Club.

LANGDON is the type who, though somewhat reserved, always gets there just the same. He must be terribly studious, or else it is a case where you should not judge from appearances. He is industrious, kind, and genial, which is a combination hard to beat. It is also rumored that he has a failing for "the little girl back home"—but we don't blame him for that, especially if she is like ours.

ERNEST EDWARD MOORE

Granite Falls, N. C.

Age, 25; Weight, 170; Height, 6 feet
Pharmaceutical Society; Caldwell County Club; Student Council; Class President

HELLO, George, look out, here comes Ernest, member of the Student Council. A most popular young man and leader, he is held in high esteem by all who know him. He hails from the mountains of Western North Carolina. He likes Chapel Hill and campus life, but it is rumored he likes Granite Falls the best. We wish for him a successful future.

EDWARD STUART PUGH

Windsor, N. C.

*Age, 26; Weight, 145; Height, 5 feet 9 inches*Pharmaceutical Club; S.P.S. Secretary and Treasurer
Bertie County Club.

ED., as he is known by the Pharmacy School, is one of the boys of the old school. He first faced E. V. back in '19, after which he decided to work a few years before completing his course. "Ed." is a studious and quiet chap when alone or with stags, but when among the fair sex, it doesn't take him long to get wound up; and, so we've been told, he has an irresistible line. Pugh smokes little cigars of an unknown brand, and uses olive oil and French perfumes. We are afraid to predict "Ed's" future, although he says he is going to settle down with a certain little lady whose name we will refrain from mentioning. His girl says "what could be sweeter than a little diamond ring?" Pugh says "what could be sweeter than a wedding in the spring?"

ARCHIE DUVAL WALKER

Curie, N. C.

Age, 19; Weight, 135; Height, 5 feet 8 inches

Pharmaceutical Society; Pender County Club.

WE do not exaggerate by saying that "A.D." is faithful and sincere in his work. His strong personality has won for him many friends. Although young in years, he has shown remarkable ability as a pharmacist, and bids fair to accomplish notable things. We wish him great success.

JOHN ALBERT WHITE

Belhaven, N. C.

Age, 20; Weight, 175; Height, 5 feet 8 inches

S.P.S.; Pharmaceutical Club.

WHITE, better known as "Remnant," came to us from the large city of Belhaven. White is an all-round good student, but does not let his work interfere with pleasure. He spends most of his time entertaining co-eds. He is a master of "Bull" and handles his line well. We hardly know what to predict for his future. We have an idea he will be the first of the class to begin practicing "Home Economics." Whatever he does, we wish him the best of luck.

Batteries for today's game.—

TEAM

The Season

WINNING sixteen, tying two, and losing only four games, was the notable record made by the 1921 Carolina Baseball Team. The State Championship was won without serious difficulty, and another outstanding feature of the season was the clean sweep the team made of the Virginia series. For the first time in the history of the University, Carolina won all three contests from the Virginians; ancient rivals on the diamond as well as on the gridiron.

The Fetzer coaching system was inaugurated with the 1921 baseball season, and Bill Fetzer coached his first University athletic team with wondrous success. The season started brilliantly and ended brilliantly, the four defeats coming about midway the schedule—one by Davidson here in a swatting exhibition, and the other three on the first few days of the Northern trip. The team, led by Captain "Lefty" Wilson, hero of the season prior, was perhaps the finest aggregation of ball players ever gathered together in this State. Every man on the club could hit hard and timely, and could field cleanly and consistently.

The season started in a promising way with a 7-3 victory over Davidson in Winston-Salem, in which "Runt" Lowe smashed out the first of his remarkable series of four home runs in a like number of consecutive games. This contest, played before 2,500 fans, was one of the most exciting during the season, Lowe's terrific drive coming with three men on bases, the score tied, and after one man was out in the ninth inning.

North Carolina State, the University of Virginia, and Washington and Lee tasted defeat in the following three games at the hands of the Tar Heels, Lowe's home runs in each, proving instrumental in winning. Carolina's long and timely hitting was evident in these first few games. Lynchburg College broke up the Tar Heels' winning streak on this trip with a ten inning 3-3 tie.

There followed a series of games in this State and on Emerson field. The University of Maryland was defeated here by the score of 4 to 1, chiefly due to the long range hitting of the two Morris brothers, and faultless pitching of "Lefty" Wilson, the Carolina captain. No trouble was experienced in downing the University of Florida, 3-1, Roseman doing the twirling and the Carolina artillery continuing to slash out doubles, triples, and the like.

The first Wake-Forest game was a classic. Ed Sweetman hit safely in the ninth inning after the game had been virtually conceded to the Baptists, followed by Casey Morris' home run drive sewing up the contest. Later in the season, Carolina defeated Wake Forest on home territory 6-4. Carolina's first defeat came in the game that followed when Davidson staged a ninth-inning rally and scored five runs, winning 9-5. Trinity and Guilford lost to the Tar Heels by two run margins.

Supremacy over the Virginia nine was established beyond doubt when the Old Dominion team went down before Bryson's offerings and gilt edged support of his team mates in Greensboro 7-3, and lost two days later to the Tar Heels here, with Wilson twirling, 3-2.

The Northern trip started off badly, State triumphing over Carolina in Raleigh 9-3 as a forerunner. Georgetown and Fordham followed with victories, and Maryland played the Tar Heels to a tie. Carolina's pitching staff failed to work up to its standard in these games.

Fordham's victory was the last defeat that Fetzer's team suffered. The College of the City of New York was trimmed 8-1; Swarthmore was beaten 6-4, with Llewellyn on the mound, and on the return trip the V. M. I. Cadets were overwhelmed 7-1. A decisive victory over Trinity in Durham 6-2 ended the season, with Manley Llewellyn twirling. The Carolina pitcher, who figured prominently in many of the Tar Heel victories during the season, both by his excellent pitching and his hard hitting while not on mound duty, was awarded the captainship of the team for 1922.

The Season

There is no brighter nor more brilliant period in the entire athletic history of Carolina than the 1922 basketball season. The feat of the Carolina cagers was a great credit to the University, and an almost equally as great credit to this State. The fact is this: the team won out in the Southern Intercollegiate Tournament in Atlanta, and was awarded the silver loving cup representing the Championship of the South.

With Captain Cartwright Carmichael at center, "Sis" Perry and "Wint" Green forwards, and "Monk" McDonald and "Billy" Carmichael guards, Carolina was represented by one of the greatest basketball machines ever in action in Bynum gymnasium. Here was a team, dangerous for its scoring ability, every player a forward, with a wonderful, brilliant, baffling team work, which always played with beautiful precision and splendid offense and defense. Here was a team of stars, and before the season ended, all of them had been placed in a glittering championship crown.

The season started with an overwhelming victory over South Carolina—44 to 28. The quintet worked smoothly, made a fine impression, and talk of State Championship was going the rounds. Wake Forest and State were conquered in the two subsequent games; both by scores indicative of great superiority. Next came Wofford, Trinity, and N. C. State again. All of them fared the same way, and when Wake Forest was whipped the second time and Elon was downed with ease, it was pretty generally conceded that Carolina had won the State Championship. Trinity however, was again defeated in the final game of the season, which assured this honor.

The Northern trip began with a victory over V. M. I. The team weakened in the next three games, and had a brief losing streak, the only losing streak of the season. Washington and Lee, Virginia, and the Army succeeded in handing the Tar Heels defeat. They were hard games to lose, and Carmichael's men fought nobly, but the jinx was persistent, and was not shaken off until entry in the great Atlanta tourney.

In this the real fireworks went off with the Tar Heels lighting the fuses. Howard, Newberry, Georgia, Alabama, and finally Mercer, were met in a row. Carolina was master of them all, and played the most brilliant basketball of the tournament. Atlanta sport writers were lavish in their praises of the North Carolian team. They declared it to be the finest basketball quintet that had ever played in Atlanta. They were particularly impressed with the gracefulness, smoothness, the superb team work of the five, and they commented on the splendid spirit and sportsmanship manifested at all times by Carolina. And so it was that the big cup was brought home, and a great celebration staged over Carolina's remarkable athletic feat.

THE Frat is as old as life. Objects are naturally gregarious. Ants build their hill, bees their hive, and birds of a feather flock together.

Adam—to start no further back—got tired of the atomic state. As there was a scarcity of males, he rushed the co-ed and finally had her installed. It was better, he thought, to make a Frat-mate out of Eve than to remain an atom. She fell for the idea, for she was an atom, too; and as there was a scarcity of females and no chance for a Sorority, she preferred to enter a Frat than to go on as she had been doing.

That social movement on the Eden campus was a stroke of genius. The coalition idea, taking root there, has continued to be popular. Wherever two or three have gathered together, since the fraternal relation has been established, even if, like its paradisaical equivalent, it hasn't always been organized; and many of the best fraternities have been those whose members, in apostolic succession with the Eden group, haven't bothered to wear a pin or give a grip, pass, sign or word.

The Frat, as such, administers the social standard on the campus. Some folk have to do that in all our communities, and it's natural that it should be done in a school.

The achievement has had, has, and will forever have, its limitations. Why not? Everything has its limit. The cotton has its weevil, the bees their drone, and the human his special brand of negativity. The Frat in Eden had a scandal that hasn't been quite cleared up yet. One of the twelve apostles made his mates feel sorry that they had stood for him. Even the church has a member now and then who doesn't show up well, and there are men in the party who are looking out for the loaves and fishes. It's the way life goes. It's the way a Frat will go.

But while the Eden society had to get off the campus, its charter wasn't taken from it. It got another chance. The party isn't to be judged by its scrubs, and religion goes on despite its irregularities. The little social snob struts about in every town and village. He also gets into the Frat. But not even his friends take the manikin more seriously than to wish he had sense. The pariah sometimes puts in an appearance, too. But, like disease, he's everywhere.

The Frat must be thought of in terms of its best members and best intention; and not only is its best intention fine, but its best members are doing their best to sustain the same. That intention is service to a selected group and to the campus.

The members form unique, lasting, and useful friendships among themselves, thus helping each other on the way of life.

Their larger usefulness to the campus hasn't yet articulated itself, for the problem there is great. They, as much as anyone, realize this fact. But it's something that calls for leadership; and it's not too much to expect that the leadership will emerge and that the Frat will gradually exert an extensive influence equal to the splendid intensive one it now sustains within its own walls.

The Season

TRACK in 1921 was no shining light for the athletic annals of Carolina. The loss of the State Meet, although by only two-thirds of a point, and the overwhelming victory of Virginia over Carolina, made the record for the season look rather shabby, together with the fact that the few outstanding feats of the team, and most of the work, was essentially mediocre.

Carolina, nevertheless, succeeded in defeating Trinity, and State colleges by good margins in dual meets, and placed fourth in the South Atlantic meet, which was not bad at all for a team that had been trained and coached as little as the Tar Heels. There were several real good, consistent men on the Carolina squad, and had there not been innumerable handicaps that held the team down, no doubt a better record would have been made.

Abernethy held for one minute both the State and South Atlantic record for the javelin throw. In the State Meet here, after he had thrown the javelin 154 feet and 4 inches, breaking all previous records in North Carolina, Ned Manning from N. C. State hurled it 2 inches farther and established a new record. In the South Atlantic meet, Abernethy went through a similar experience. Among the prominent men on the squad were Bill Yates, high point man for the season, with Sinclair, Royal and Ransom, following in the order named.

On the dashes, Sinclair and Hardin did good work, on the middle distance runs, Royal and Yates were best, and on the hurdles, Yates, Parker, and Carmichael were outstanding. Poindexter, Norris, and Abernethy placed in several meets with the weights. Smiley was the leading pole vaulter, and contributed points on several occasions.

With Coach Bob Fetzer as pilot, the track team for 1922 bids fair to be the most successful in the history of Carolina. This season truly marks the beginning of a new era in this sport here, and the State Indoor Track Meet in Durham, which was the first thing of its kind ever attempted in North Carolina, was a great success. Manager Murchison has arranged some splendid meets for this season, and indications are that Carolina will add greatly to the trophy room in a number of them. The squad is composed of some splendid material, and Fetzer is the man to get all of out the candidates that they have to give.

Tennis

BARDIN
Captain-Manager

The Season

LAST spring marked what might be called a new life for tennis at Carolina. There seemed to be a general awakening of interest in this game on the Campus. Of course, it has always been most widely played here, with every court filled the year round when the weather permits. The Varsity games, however, have never drawn very large attendances, and tennis has never been considered a real important part of Carolina Athletics. Last spring, the team composed of Jernigan (Captain), Bardin, Hawkins, and Smith, began to attract attention from the students. Hawkins and Smith won the cup for championship doubles in the State Tournament held at Greensboro, and Jernigan and Smith both reached the semi-finals in the Singles Tournament.

Professor Louis Graves, Pat Winston, and J. W. Lasley began to talk interest in the Carolina Varsity in the fall, and assisted Manager and Captain Hume Bardin in arranging a schedule and getting the men out for the fall team. Tench Coxe and R. A. Johnston were added to the squad, and fourteen matches out of seventeen played were won. This is a very fine record, and the success of the team caused greater interest than ever before.

As the YACKETY YACK is prepared for the press, Manager Bardin is arranging an elaborate tennis schedule for this spring, which will probably include matches with the Navy, Georgetown, Lafayette, Lehigh, Georgia Tech, Clemson, Georgia, Washington and Lee, V. M. I., South Carolina, Furman, V. P. I., and Loyola College of Maryland. Prospects are excellent for a better team than ever, and for many victories.

There and Here

"When Better Ones Are Built
Buick will Build Them"

ONE must be original even in doing the most conventional things of life. Hence the name of this article. Instead of saying here and there, as one naturally would in writing the ramblings these little sketches of college life purport to be, we say "There and Here", and immediately we are branded as original. Whoever thought of saying "There and Here" before? We defy even Archibald Henderson to go to the Library of Congress in Washington and find anyone ever used that expression to express "Here and There". Archibald, you know, is one of the great research workers of the University. In fact, he is researching most of the time, to the eternal gratification of his math classes. Archibald is also the only man in the country who understood Einstein's theory and survived. We don't believe he really understands it, anyway.

As far as we can gather, the good Doc Einstein supports the theory that a yardstick is longer when pointing North and South than when it is pointing East and West, and that an auto going forty miles an hour may in reality be going only ten or fifteen. We tried that on an Orange County minion of the law. Evidently he had not heard of Einstein, but he showed a great familiarity with Ingersoll, the greatest manufacturer of stop watches in the country.

Behind every laugh uttered on the Carolina Campus during the Fall of 1921 and the Spring of 1922, was a motive. Some folks laugh at things they think are funny, and others are tempted to weep at the very same thing. Parson Moss laughs at life as a whole, and some think him an optimist of first water. The parson overlooks everything that is full of sorrow. He is an extremist.

Our plea to you is to cast away anything that would tend to make you mix sobs with laughter, and for the next fifteen minutes enjoy yourself and the people we are trying to show you. We have been perched on top of the Davie Poplar for nearly a year, doing very little but observing, and now these observations we pass on, and hope that they will be received in the way they were sent.

Have you ever noticed Billy Noble's dog? It is a big black shepherd and getting old. Every day this dog parks on the door steps of Peabody Hall and there awaits his master's voice. A close observation of this dog has convinced us that he is the most cynical dog alive. Even a dog can't hang around Peabody long without getting cynical. Far be it from us to try to explain why Billy's dog is cynical. Possibly it is seeing one Dr. Crane go and come each day. To look at Doctor Crane, (with his huge sideburns, and oh! such a cute little goatee) go and come, would make one cynical. Dr. Crane always looks better going than coming and that accounts for the brightening of those dog eyes when the good teacher's form recedes in the distance.—The dog looks on goatees very much as a human being looks on them. Something for old people and Confederate Veterans to wear. Dr. Crane is young. He shows that in the way he teaches, and as he comes from Kansas, or some such place as that, he isn't a Confederate veteran.

"Will Hays"

ORDER OF THE SHOVEL

"Mary Had A Little Lamb"

Someone has said that a dog must have a mountain and a cathedral to look upon before he is happy. Peabody may be the mountain for Billy's dog, but we can't find the cathedral. Possibly in the dog's mind someone that works in Peabody is the cathedral. Some in that building have been known to get lit up, which is a characteristic of a cathedral you know.

Anyway, Billy's dog is cynical. Go pat him on the head and he will look up at you with a sardonic smile as if to say, "Oh, go to hell with your pats. I am a cynic like Dice Daniels, Mike Gorham, and Lucius Summey. Please go away and leave me alone. You remind me of Willy Horner."

"Twenty-Five Years of Women at U.N.C." is the title of an article in the March issue of the Alumni Review. "Thirty-five Year Old Women at U.N.C." would be a better title. Why is it that the University of North Carolina always draws all the old women in the States. The girls (?) at the University are supposed to be very intellectual. We don't like intellectual woman, anyway. Possibly the University of North Carolina forbids young women from entering because they might endanger the buildings, corrupt the morals of mamma's boy, and sit on the stone bench next to the Davie Poplar. The old Poplar would shudder all the clinging vines off its aged limbs if a woman, or a man for that matter, were to sit on that stone bench. Of all the unnecessary things in the world, stone benches take the blue ribbon. Who wants to sit on a stone bench?

The question that has worried all the campus during the year is "Why did Harry weep when the Inn burned down?" Another question is "What bit Willy Horner?"

Dr. Johnny Booker asked one of his class on English 62 whether he would rather die and be eaten by worms or drown and be eaten by little fishes. This question is one of major importance, and could spring only from a man of such intellect as the good Doctor. One of the great pleasures of school life is having one of Johnny's courses. He is the greatest receptacle for micellaneous misinformation we know of, but he certainly knows how to swing a cork-tipped cigarette. He learned that in Germany.

Speaking of the Davie Poplar, the sacred shrine for Freshman worshippers, it has been definitely proven that Davie did not hitch his pony to the said poplar. The large oak southwest of the poplar, and near the pharmacy shack, was the fortunate tree. The meeting of the first board of trustees was also held on the little rise of land just north of that.

In our opinion, it is high time that the old oak got due credit for holding Davie's horse. The poplar is an imposter. We do not hesitate to make this statement. A careful examination into the heart of the matter has disclosed such overwhelming evidence in favor of the oak, that we feel it is only due the oak to move the stone bench over there.

Hellfire

It has been proven by a careful examination that the poplar at the time of the founding of the University was almost as large at the base as it is now. Unless Davie had a hangman's noose he couldn't have hitched to the poplar, for there were no limbs within twenty feet of the ground. Of course, such a great man might have ridden a very tall horse, and thereby hitched to a very high limb before sliding down a leg.

With this in mind the researchers dug into his story deeper than before, and found that Davie was riding an old horse, bought up near the Catawba River where it divided Rowan from Davidson County. It was an old plug, but for those days was considered very fine. It would stand without hitching, and unless urged, would never move. This is the reason Davie hitched to the oak. A close examination of the ground around the oak will convince one that a horse was hitched there one hundred twenty-eight years ago. By cutting into the tree several rounds, one hundred and twenty-eight to be exact, the marks left there by the hitching reins were found. This proof convinced the most doubtful. Down with the Davie Poplar; up with the Davie Oak.

There are men leaving with the Class of 1922, the University is fortunate in getting rid of. There are others who would be an asset to the school if they stayed here, and did not go out and advertise.

A certain man on the Campus walked up to Judge Stacy, of the Supreme Court of North Carolina, when he was here to deliver an address this winter. This self-same young man is a member of a legal fraternity that the good and affable Judge also is, and, giving him the mystic grip, this specimen said "Now, er ah, Stacy, you will pawdon me if I get the grip wrong, but I belong to so many of these social organizations that I find it difficult to disassociate the minor details of the different mystic and absolutely necessary signs." The Judge, we hope, "paw-doned" him, but some of these days that bird will run up against someone without the Stacy sense of humor, and he will forget all about all the different mystic and absolutely necessary grips.

There is a certain young man here who is quite the stuff with the ladies. Of all the sophisticated, blasé, urban, smooth, oily, sweet-smelling things, he is it—when around the ladies. To most of the men on the "Hill" he is what his names indicates, a fish.

The only way to fix Memorial Hall so you can hear in it is to tear it down and build it over again some other way. As it is it is practically useless except for Chapel exercises, which are about as necessary on the Campus as the stone bench under Davie Poplar. Even Dean Bradshaw is getting so he doesn't come to Chapel. We wonder if Mrs. Bradshaw knows about it yet? And do you know what that man actually did the other day? Well, he drank a Coca-Cola. Shades of a glowing sunset, what is the world coming to!

While all the laundry men, the laborers, the picture framer, and others were making themselves unpopular around here in March, and vaccination was the order of the day, a man passing the schoolhouse down in Chapel Hill, heard some awful sounds coming from the inside of the building. "Dam God", I don't want to be Poor," "Nearer My God to Thee," and other awful things could be heard all in the same breath. The young man looked at his perfectly good scar, and feeling the call of humanity rushed into the building to succor the poor dying man and nearly broke up the Carolina Playmakers' fifty-seventh presentation of the "Miser".

We bid you farewell, 1922. Some of you we hate to see go, because you belong here for several years longer, but we couldn't help the School of Education being founded. Some of you are good riddance. We wish you had left earlier. Others have left before you, though, just as you are leaving, and the world is no worse off. Neither is the University. There are some of you who will make a name in the world, just as Jessie H. James did. Others will rank with Hearst and James Cox. Some will help make democracy safe for the world. Others will go to jail where they should have gone long before, and yet your class is no exception to the rule. As a matter of fact, you are better than some we have seen graduate here.

Down at Raleigh, several weeks ago, a young man from the University was wandering around by himself, and passing through the Capitol grounds, he saw the statue there of Bichloride of Mercury. This work of art is a leaning one. In fact, the young man representing this famous suicide drug leans almost two or three feet over his pedestal. This certain wise youth spying the leaning condition, and being somewhat wobbly on his feet on account of imbibing too much bichloride of corn, rushed over, and for nearly nine hours pushed on the statue. Friends finding him there vainly pushing asked him what it was all about and he explained that he was keeping the damm' thing from falling off.

This same young man went into a Greek restaurant and asked for Demosthenese, Plato and Homer. Three cooks were introduced to him as these worthies, and he never knew any better.

That is the part of the "There."

The worthy son of Josephus Daniels, generally known as Dice Daniels, because he pulls so many bones, and Wee Willy Horner, who is supposed to sit in a corner and pull out cherry seed, had a tilt earlier in the year; Willy said

Just a Simple Little Country Girl

the scrap between the Tar Heel and the Magazine (which was really a scrap between Willy and Dice) had ended, but to be perfectly frank about the whole matter, the Tar Heel was "A darned rotten sheet and doesn't get the news." Dice said that Willy was a bad case of the itch and recommended a good application of "Black Flag," which you know is roach powder.

The Yellow Journal came out, and about the only thing yellow about it was the paper. Tyre Taylor, evidently sore because he didn't get mentioned, wrote a powerful article condemning it, to the Tar Heel, and the Tar Heel published it. Tyre said that someone ought to put on rubber gloves and give the editors a good whipping.

The Yellow Journal evidently aroused over the whole matter replied, calling Mr. Taylor "Sweet Youth", and saying that he was a member of the scrub faculty. We would suggest that both parties go off and drown themselves.

It has been rumored around the "Hill" all year that Mr. Julius Algernon Warren, Treasurer of the University, is courting a red-headed girl in Durham. The man actually spends all kinds of money with Pendergraph in going to see the Red-Headed Girl. Our advice to Mr. Warren is "Beware of the red-headed women, and if she is a widow, beware especially hard." Our advice to the Red-Headed Girl is "Watch him close, sister, you don't know him like we do." If we ever marry, we are going to marry a deaf and dumb woman, and if we want to, we can cuss her without being batted over the head with a rolling pin, and praise be to the Almighty for making that kind, she won't be able to talk.

B. C. Brown stopped us one morning going toward the Alumni Building and asked us what we thought of that particular structure. We told him we thought it powerfully ugly. "B. C." applauded the opinion. We felt fine until he asked us what the building made us think of. "Well," we said, "there is no building on the Campus that can make us think." "B. C." was disgusted. "That building," he almost shouted, "is almost frowning. It frowns from every side. It represents a frown." We had always thought "B. C." was sane, before. He turned around toward the library, and asked us what we thought of that and what it reminded us of. In order not to antagonize the boy we said that it reminded us of our daily mail, which generally consisted of notices of books due several weeks ago. Contempt was registered on Brown's face. We felt like the Davie Poplar will feel when it reads our exposé. "That Building," said he, "represents newness, it represents learning." With his face all lit up like a bonfire, a sort of holy joy in knowing all that, you know, he added, "Boy, that building marks the onward and upward progress of time and civilization." Now, the library, which was just a building before, always reminds us of the "Onward March of Time" as played by the Tar Baby Five.

The Moral of the above is "Too much Horace Williams will make even a sane man long for Morganton."

Dean of the School of Education

I Knead Thee Every Hour

The poor Tar Baby reminds us of its namesake in Uncle Remus. Unless our memory fails, that Tar Baby caught Hell, and now what was once the pride of Billy Carmichael, is the joke of Harry Chase. If the Tar Baby doesn't watch out, it will be chased out of business, and Otto B. Sharp will have to come back from Germany. "Honest Ab" says his name is mud now since the Tar Heel and Dr. Chase, two of the powerful influences on the "Hill," have turned from the light of his little sun.

Two lights of the Campus won't be here next year. One is a Green light.

The Phi "Assembly" invited the Di "Society" to send over a committee and find out how to run a debating organization. The Di politely told the Phi they didn't want to know anything they didn't already know. "Why just look at us," they say, "we have Tye Porter, Tye Taylor, Marion Nash, Tom Warren, and Jimmy Grisette, in our organization. All you have is Willy Horner since you ran Bob Gray out.

The way to fight a fire is to get in behind it and pour water on the ashes, according to the Chapel Hill fire department. No wonder Harry cried when the Inn burned down. But he had other reasons, also. Excuse the slam at the fire department, but such has become the habit at Chapel Hill. We have formed the Chapel Hill habit. An investigation into the Chapel Hill habit would be interesting. There are other things attached to it, of course, and if someone with a genius for such work would devote his time to clearing it up, it would be a godsend to the University and the salvation of the State.

During the winter, ponds formed all over the Campus. There was water everywhere. With a college full of embryonic engineers, walks were laid out and dams formed. The next thing to do is to post "No Swimming" signs, and stock these lakes with fish, and then put up "No Fishing" signs.

Tyre Porter, President of the Student Body, and would-be-author of many short stories, wanted to be President of the Di Society. Jimmy Grisette wanted to be president of the same organization. All of which resulted in both parties applying to Joe Ervin for the job. Joe decided on Jimmy, and Garland got the fire beat out of him. Now Garland says Joe done him wrong, and is planning revenge. Tye likes the limelight. Everybody who has gotten a taste of limelight likes it, but Garland has formed the limelight habit. There is only one cure for it. Complete darkness for a given length of time, and then give the patient just a little light at a time until he reaches normalcy. We patiently hope our friend (and he is our friend) will take the treatment standing up.

Tommy J. has a bad habit. He smokes his cigarettes up to the hilt. Sometimes we fear he will forget the name, family connections, and religion of some struggling Freshman, and in that state of mental agitation will forget to remove the hilt. The orneriest hoboe would disdain to grab a duck from Tommy J.'s fag. Some day some bird will write an anthology of Chapel Hill, and lo! Tommy J.'s name will ead the list. But rest assured, Tommy, we won't tell, because we think you are the stuff, the best stuff, old dear. We like your little dog also, it is a fighter.

Three large sticks of dynamite; three matches; three long fuses, all under the pharmacy shack, will give us a fine location for the Graham Memorial Building. But never in your life will you see them tear down any of the old relics here. Why, the very idea! Governor Aycock flunked a course in that building, and it must stand as a monument to that great action on the part of a great man. Possibly the rats will come along some day and help out like they did in the case of the old Inn.

By the way, when the Inn burned down, Dan Grant rescued, at the risk of his own life, the plate telling us that James K. Polk slept in the Inn several nights. Trust Dan to rescue the only thing worth keeping about the old Inn. We wonder when the rest of it will be set on fire. The sooner the better, as Woodrow Wilson said to Lloyd George.

Union Labor suffered a setback here when the small-pox threatened to break out.

We are about to slide off our perch on Davie Poplar and enter again into the wild pursuit of knowledge, that is, if the University will let us enter next fall. Before we slide, however, let us say this: if any have been neglected, it is because you have been going so fast we have been unable to see you, and again we must sleep at times. No ill feelings.

If you haven't laughed while reading this, read it over several times more and try again. Develop your sense of humor, and life will look much better. Try to climb to the top of Davie Poplar and try to appreciate the look of cynicism in Billy Noble's dog's eyes. Of course, we appreciate the fact that some of you are blind to life's little funny spots, but a little drop of humor in each eye will open it wonderfully. But the biggest joke of all is we have fooled you into believing anything we have written is funny.

What an Alumnus says of the Provident

"I carry insurance in the Provident. . . . An investigation of the Provident convinced me that the Company is managed with unusual care, that its mortality ratio and its cost of management are both low, resulting in a very low net cost to the insurer."

HERMAN CONE, Greensboro, N. C.

What a Professor says of the Provident

"I am greatly pleased with the insurance which I have in the Provident. In my opinion the Company more nearly conforms to the true principles of insurance than any other company with which I am acquainted. I am most agreeably surprised in the amount of dividend at the end of the first policy year."

AIR PURIFICATION

A Gateway to Progress

There it stands—a simple forty-foot gateway but unlike any other in the entire world. Through it have come many of the engineering ideas that have made this an electrical America.

The story of electrical development begins in the Research Laboratories. Here the ruling spirit is one of knowledge—truth—rather than immediate practical results. In this manner are established new theories—tools for future use—which sooner or later find ready application.

The great industries that cluster around Niagara Falls, the electrically driven battleships, the trolley cars and electrified railways that carry millions, the lamps that glow in homes and streets, the household conveniences that have relieved women of drudgery, the labor-saving electrical tools of factories, all owe their existence, partly at least, to the co-ordinated efforts of the thousands who daily stream through this gateway.
