Also, I dare maintaine, that a man ought to take a Wife which is yong, well featured, and a Maide, rather then a widow, or one in yeares, formerly moulded vnto anothers manners and humors: because it is most certaine, that in soft & tender youth, much better and easily may be imprinted, euen such maners and conditions as the Husband would wish, (with absolute priuiledge of Obedience) then in rugged, stubborne, or aged fullen Nature.

To this purpose we haue a notable example, in Timotheus the cunning & excellent Flute player; and who for mony made no spare of his skill, for the instruction of youth in his singuler qualitie. He obserued it as a custome, before he wold accept of any Scholler; to know, if formerly he had practised any beginning of the Art, for he wold take more then halfe the price doubled of such, then of them that knewe nothing therein. And his reason was, because he should take more paines to bridle such a one, of an euil apprehension alreadie learned, then hee could any way doo, by direct teaching such as formerly knew not a note. This example serueth well for widdowes, that formerly haue beene taught and instructed by others: and therefore, do require the more difficult labour, to chaunge the bad Tunes, and strange conceits, learned or practised in their first Husbands daies. In which respect (and verie iustly) I preferre the Marriage of Maids, before that of Widdowes; because, beside what els hath beene, and yet further may be alledged, womē do contain a singuler loue and memory of them, with whome they had their first acquaintance.

Now, as concerning Parentage and a wealthie Dowrie with a Woman, I read, that a yong Grecian went to Pittacus, one of the seuen Sages of Greece, to craue his Counsell in the case of marriage, vsing these wordes; I am offered my choise of two women in marriage; the one is equall to me in goods & parentage, the other exceedeth mee very farre, which of them is fittest for mee to elect? Pittacus returned him this answer: See yonder are two children, practising to play at defence with Cudgels, go vnto them, and they will giue thee Counsell. He did so: and as he approched neere the Boyes, who were laying their heads together, concerning their owne play: When they saw the young man come, that exceeded them so much in strength and stature, imagining he came to play with them, they laide downe the weapons, saying; Euerie man should play with his equall. By which childish precept or admonition, hee perceined that hee ought to marrie his equall.

Of Timotheus the skilfull player on Flutes.

An euill Custome once learned, is not easily cured.

A note for Widdowes.

Marriage of maids, preferred before that of Widdowes.

Of a Wiues parentage & riches in marriage, the case aduised by wife Pittacus.

Equality is the fittest thing in marriage.

Plutarch

Plutarch, his graue aduise concerning marriage.

Plutarch, in his Treatise of nurssing Children, saith: A man ought not to marry his Sonne to a Woman richer then himselfe, neither of any greater condition. For (saith he) he that allies himselfe, where he is exceeded in wealth; instead of begetting Kinred, purchaseth Maisters and Commanders. And when a rich Woman marries her selfe to a poore Man; pride alwaies will haue the supremacy in her braine, living a'together unruly and incompatible, onely by the contempt she hath of her Husband. The Philosopher Menander saide: A poore Man that matcheth himselfe with a rich Wife, giues himselfe in marriage to the woman, and not she to him. Lycurgus appointed a Law to the Lacedemonians, that they should marry their Daughters without any dowries; to the end, that each one should endow themselves with vertues, and onely (therefore) to be required in marriage. Now, albeit this Law seemed rigorous to some, yet (for all that) it was very allowable; being kept in one body, as well as in another. And then, if the Father had no Mony or other goods in marriage with his Wife: hee was the lesse obliged to giue any with his Daughter; and hereby it was the better knowne, that when a Man sought to be married, whether he did it in respect of riches, or no. But it were a great deale of lost labour, in seeking now to perswade this among vs: considering, that men are so well acquainted with this abuse, as marriage (in these daies) is procured for nothing else.

Notwithstanding, I will still maintaine, that when a rich Man desireth Marriage; he should not greedily gape after riches, but rather to enioy a noble and vertuous Wife. Taking example by Alexander the Great, who although he was a mighty King, as is wel enough knowne: yet he tooke to Wife Barsina, the Daughter of Arbassus, without any riches; but she was young, vertuous, and of royall descent, and hee that is most rich, should most seeke after this vility. So shall he be sure to auoyd al discontentment, for, by setting Monies aside, which couer many vices: such strange deformities would appear naked and manifest, which else cannot be scene, men being blinded with Auarice; for they are so cunningly dissembled, that though they are apparant, yet they will not be discerned. I mislike not, that in equall noblenesse, a man should make his best election, & please his affections to his own contentment: euen as I vtterly condemne him, that (for Wealth) can be content to take a vile and infamous Wife.

I shall not need to labour my selfe in this matter, because the very earth herein is a Schoole-waiteer to vs, for, if we sow in a sharpe ground, and not prepared: it will bring forth fruit that hath no sauour, although our Seede be neuer so good and delicate. On the contrary, low Seede (learse relishable) in a well husbanded ground, and it will yeelde fruit most perfect and excellent. In like manner, to haue good and absolute Horses, we must make our election in a well tride breede or race; much more then should we haue care of our Children and Successours. Truelie, in my iudgement, a man makes very slender account of himselfe, and badly satisfieth his owne Obligation for which he was borne: if hee leaue not to his Children as Noble a Linage, as he was Heire to by his Father; which he cannot doe, in giuing them a Mother of worse condition then himselfe. Moreover, if he haue any care of his owne honor and reputation, he will encrease more Wealth and Dignity to his Children, then he receiued from his Father. How highly then doth a man stand charged, and greatly indebted; to leaue a good Issue behinde him, and of true borne blood? Yea, much greater then was left to himselfe, for auoyding al occasion, of giuing his Children cause to complaine of him.

Paulus Emilius declareth, that Manestius the Athenian, Sonne to Iphicrates, the excellent Captaine, whose Mother was of mean condition and poor birth, which the saide Iphicrates had taken in marriage, was demaunded; which hee loued best, either his Father or Mother? He answered; My Mother. They that mooued the question, wondering heereat, desired to vnderstand his reason. Because (quoth he) my Father, in regard of himselfe; hath made me a Native of Thrace, and the Sonne of a poore Mother: but she hath made mee an Athenian borne, and the Sonne of a famous Captaine.

An example deriued from the earth

Example of Horses.

How careful a man ought to be in choise of his wife.

Of Manestius the Athenian, Sonne to Iphicrates, and his worthy answer.

As

Lycurgus his Law against dowries in Marriage.

A hard matter to be perswaded in these dayes.

Example of great Alexanders marriage

Mony couers many foule imperfections.

Of beauty & blacknesse, a meane betweene both

Iuno her promise to Aeolus

The Authors intent in this case.

As concerning beauty, setting aside their opinions, who say, that choyse should be made of one neither foule or faire, but a meane betweene both: I say, that euermore (to our vttermost power) make a faire Wife our eye-marke, provided she be vertuous, as we haue formerly said. For otherwise, my aduise is, rather to take a vertuous homely one, then a faire one, of proud and bad Nature. And the reason of chusing a faire Wife, onely is this; in regard of generation and posterity, and to haue beautifull Children. Virgill declareth, that the Goddesse Iuno, making great promises to Aeolus, said: She would giue him one of her goodliest Nymphs, because she might bring him beautifull Children. Archidamus, King of Athens, was condemned in a great amercement of Money, because he had married a Woman of little stature, the Iudges saying; that he would leaue the a race of little Kings, and of no constitution. This which I haue said, is not by way of commaund, but of counsell, which may be accepted and done, without any difficulty, or exception of persons. For marriage vnited with a homely Wife, is as holy as that of the fairest, and with the poore, as with the rich, with a Widdow, as with a Maide: because vniuersally, where nature and charity is, all different things haue equality, and good conformity.

CHAP. XIII.

Of the cordiall loue and amity, which ought to be in Marriage: With some examples of loue among the married.

Marriage where, and to what end instituted.

Love and Charity betweene two vnited bodies, deserueth to be commended, because Marriage is so excellent a thing: as well in respect of him, that instituted it, which was GOD, as the place of institution, which was Paradise, and that proceeding from it; to wit, the propagation and perpetuity of mankind, with remedy against all sensuall appetites, and wicked concupiscences. All other loues in this humane life, with what men soeuer they be; are meere improper loues: but this is Diuine, and (in truth) it is that, which makes vnion both of Soule and Body, for so is it sealed and confirmed, by power of supream prerogatiue. And there is nothing else, that betweene two thus conioyned, can be so particularly proper; because both heart and body are common, betweene a good and loyall married couple. Which cannot bee so in other amities, that small thinges can soone destroy, and slender trifles separate; nay, which is much worse, the longest continuance therof is but for little time. The prooffe heereof hath daily bene seene, for few haue continued to death, because the will of man is so mutable: as a new friend can easily thrust an old one out of his place. But true and intire loue betweene Man and Wife, cannot bee sundred, neyther by infirmity, pouerty, misfortune, or disfaour, for nothing but death only can be the denider. Nay, it seemeth also to continue after death, as hath bene noted in some worthy widdowed persons, whose examples are infinite.

Among whom, and deseruing best consideration of all other, the loue of Adam and Eua hath most eminence: considering, that the fruit of life being forbidden them, Adam notwithstanding, to please his Wife, exposed and submitted himselfe to all perrill. When Paulina, Wife to the wise and learned Seneca of Cardona, heard that cruell Nero had put her Husband to death, and that he had chosen his owne death, by making incision into his veines: shee would not onely beare him company in death, but also in the very same manner of dying, and therefore sliced her veines, according as it was done vnto Seneca. When Nero had intelligence therof, and knew that this ensued from inuiolable loue: he caused great speede to be made, to saue her in the perill of death. For, being euen vpon expiring, he caused her veines to be bound vp, & kept her that shee could not dye: by meanes whereof, the good Lady liued all the rest of her time in great affliction, and colourlesse, in signe of the loyall loue she bare to her Husband. We read in the liues of the Emperors, that

Lacius

The body and Soule is vnited together in marriage.

Coniugall loue hath continued after death,

The incomparable loue of Adam and Eua.

There are loue of Paulina, wife to learned Seneca.

The loue of Triata to her Husband Lucius Vitellius.

Lucius Vitellius, Brother to the Emperour Vitellius, being benighted in a dangerous battaile: his Wife, named Tri-ata, loued him so perfectly, as she entered disguised among the Souldiers, to beare her Husband company, and to assist him in life or death, fighting more valiantly then any of the rest. Thus did her intire loue make her forget feminin weaknesse, life and safety.

The loue of King Darius to his faire Q.
Roxana.

Quintus Curtius reporteth, that King Darius being conquered by Alexander, and spoiled of a great part of this Kingdome: endured it with stout courage and patiently, without trouble, or shewing the least signe of sadnesse.
But when newes was brought him,
that his Queene and Wife was dead:
to shew that hee loued her more then his royal dignitie; he wrong his hands, and could not containe, but wept bitterly.

The loue of queen Alcesta to her Husband Admetus

Ouid, Iuinall, Martiall, and others, speaking of the worthy Wife to King Admetus, doe say: That shee (to giue life to her sickely Husband) slew her selfe, hauing heard aunswere from the Oracle, that his life should bee saued, if one of his dearest friends would dye for him. Notwithstanding, in the small credit giuen to Poets: I should

The loue of a poore Fisherman and his wife, euen to the death.

haue spared this example, if holy Saint Hierome had not made mention thereof. The younger Pliny writeth in a Letter of his, that a Fisher-man was sicke of a grieuous and incurable disease, whereby he endured daily extreame Agonies. Which his Wife beholding with great compassion, louing him sincerely, seeing all hope of helpe vtterlie lost, & no remedy to be found, though all meanes possible had beene sought for: she councelled her Husband, not to liue any longer in this tormenting paine, but saide vnto him; that seeing he must needs dye, he should bid death welcome, and so end all grieuance. The Husband liked well of her aduise, and yeelded thereto, and they both getting vp on a high Rocke, the Wife bound her selfe fast to her Husband, and throwing themselues head-long downe, were bruised in many peeces.

Of a poore labouring man and his wife in the Kingdome of Naples.

Baptista Fulgosa delareth, that a poore labouring man in the Kingdome of Naples, traouailing along by the Sea side with his Wife: she chaunced to stay a while behind him, about some vrgent

10

20 30

40

50 businessse. In which time of tarryan ce there arriued a Foist of Moores, who bearing her aboard: the poore man had no more sight of her, but onely of the Foist, which launched off into the Sea, whereby hee conceiued, that the Moores had carried his Wife away with them. Hereupon, confounded with greefe, he threw himselfe into the Sea, and swum after the Foist, crying vnto them which were within it, that seeing they had taken his Wife from him;

they would be pleased to take him also.
Which made them take him vp into the Gally, to the no little amazement of the Moores, and great comfort, (though in floods of teare) of the woman. Afterward, they were both brought before the King of Thunis, to whom the Vessell belonged, and the whole Story beeing related to him, which moued his mind to such great compassion: as he not onely deliuered them, but also sent them home againe.

To speake likewise of the loue which Artemisia bare to her Husband Mausolus: wee must then consider, what a glorious Sepulcher shee builded for him, calling it Mausolus, after his name, and rancked among the 7. wonders of the world, only for the costly workman ship thereof. The loue of Tiberius Gracchus to his Wife, was likewise very admirable, and although the example bee stale and common, recited at large by Valerius Maximus, yet may we not well spare to speake thereof. He hauing found two Serpents, in the Bed Chamber where hee vsed to take his rest: desired to know the augury thereof, whereto he had answere. That he must needs kill one of them, yet with this caution: that if he killed the Male-Serpent, then he should dye before his Wife; but if the Female, then his wife should dye, and he remaine alive.
Whereupon, he louing his wife much better then himselfe, made effectuall demonstration thereof; when he chose rather to dye, then to behold the death of his Wife: for he slew the Male-Serpent, and dyed himselfe, leauing her to suruiue a widdow. But it is to be doubted, whether she was the most happie of both, in hauing such a Husband, or infortunate in the losse of him. Now, as concerning a two-fold Argument, where-

The loue of Artemisia to her Husband Mausolus.

The loue of Tiberius Gracchus to his wife.

A double Argument of loue.

wh. rebby to approoue the sinceritie of loue, to wit: a woman to kill her selfe, for greefe and feare of her Husbands death, or else, to mourne in such contristing manner, as death to ensue vpon meere sorrow.

Concerning the first of these, wee haue already related in the story of fair Alcesta; and for the other, we haue a notable example in Julia, the Daughter to Julius Caesar, and Wife to Pompey. The garment of her husband being brought vnto her, gashed and all bloody with a wound which he had receiued: she imagining her Husband to be slaine, before she had leysure to heare the cause thereof, fell into such a strange conceit and alteration; as her vnderstanding was quite lost, and being immediately deliuered of a Childe (where-with she had long gone great) instantly died. And her death ended the worlds peace, which (by her meanes) was preserued in the kinred of Julius Caesar the Father, and Pompey her Husband. The loyalty of Lucretia towards her Husband, is so notable, as now it were needlesse to report it: for, loathing to liue defamed, after her chaste body was adulterated, she resolutely slew her selfe. The loue of the wife to Count Fernand Gonçales, is also very memorable, & likewise the meanes whereby she deceiued the king: for she remained Prisoner in the habite of a man, while her Husband fled, and saued his life in her womans garments. There are infinit examples to this purpose, which (for auoyding prolixitie) I forbear to set down, and although (by our lawes) none are allowed to kill themselves: yet are these examples worthy to be noted & considered, considering they were performed by Paganes and Gentiles, not hauing any light or knowledge of our Faith.

CHAP. XV.

Of diuers customes, which our ancient forefathers obserued in their Mariages.

MArriage contracteth it selfe, with the sole consent of the man and woman: but to the end, that this consent might be the better authorised, and remaine in intire perfection; it was thought requisite, to shew the same by wordes and outward signes, because none but God onely knoweth and vnderstandeth our harts, & hence it proceeded, that men instituted many ceremonies and sollemne wordes. As for those which are obserued among Christians; they are so euident and notorious, as there is no need to speak of the. Wherefore, I will onely discourse of some customes, which barbarous nations, and the Romaines also vsed in their mariages, the diuersity whereof (it may be) will yeild some pleasure.

The ancient Romaines, according to Cicero, were married in two kinds, and they had two manner of wiues or women, answerable to the diuers ceremonies of their mariages: the one was more common then the other, and she named her selfe Matrone; the other was stiled Mother of the family. Of this latter kind, it seemeth that they were married, as (well-neere) Christians now adaiies are. For the Husband would demand of the woman, if she would be Mother & Mistresse of his Family; and she answering, yea; gaue her consent. She likewise then demanded of him, if he would be Father of the Family, and he answering also, yea: then they took and ioyned their hands together, and this form of marriage was held for lawfull. By this meanes, the wife attained to such place in her husbands house & family, as she should haue had, if she had bin a Daughter of the same house: for now she was ranked in the number of the same linage, & (as a daughter) came to succeed in hir husbands inheritance. Hereof Boetius speaketh more amply, in the second of Ciceroes Topicks. The other ceremonie was more common, & by ordinary words: and such women were not accepted as mothers of families, albeit they were termed Matrones.

The Romaines had also this custome, that bringing the new married wife to her Husbands dwelling; she must stay at the doore, and not enter, vntill shee were (perforce) drawn in. Giving thereby to vnderstand, that she went by constraint to the place, where shee was to loose her virginity. VWhen they gaue the wife into her husbands power, they first caused her to sit downe in her mothers lap; frō whence the husband must forcibly

The loue of Julia, daughter to Cesar, and Wife to Pompey.

The loue of the Romaine Lucretia.

The Wife of Count Fernand Gonçales.

Single consent is the act of Marriage.

Cicero in Topic.
Two kinds of Marriage among the Romaines.

The first kind of Marriage.

Boetius in secund. Topic.
Cicero.
The second kind of Marriage.

Another custome of the Romaines.

forcibly fetch her, while the Daughter held fast her Mother with strong embracings. This they obserued as an ancient memory of the Romaines, when they forcibly fetcht the Sabine Virgines from their mothers: by means of which rapture, it succeeded well to Rome, and greatly encreased their people. And yet before they proceeded thus farre, it was an order established; that the Bride should touch both Fire and Water, which Ceremony they vsed (according to Plutarch and Laſtantiuſ) as signifying generation by these two Elementes, because they are the two principall generatiue causes of all things. Others say, it was done to the end, to shew the wife sincerity of heart, and loyalty by her to be kept: because water washeth away all vncleanness, and had mixions are purged by fire, as we may discern in Metals. They held likewise (as a very euill presage or augury) any marriages made in the month of May; in regard of some vanities and superstitions remaining among them, which are largely reported by Ouid and Plutarch.

They had also another Custome, that when the Bride entred the doore of her Husbands house: he should say (with a loude voyce) Casa Cecilia, and she, Caio Cecilio. This they obserued, because Tarquinius Priscus, seauenth King of the Romaines, had a wife most chaste, wise, and endued with many vertues, who was named Caia Cecilia, but before she came to Rome, shee was called Tanaquil: and therefore the Husband pronounced these wordes, to put his Wife in minde of that vertuous Woman, that was a Crowne and honour to her Husband. There went one also before the Bride, home to the doore of her Husbands dwelling, carrying a distaffe laden with Flaxe, and a Spindle hanging by; to put her in minde, that she should exercise spinning: Pliny is the Authour that speaketh these things.

These Romaines had yet another custome, that when a man married a widow; the solemnity was kept on a featiuall day; but if he wedded a Maide; then it was kept on an ordinary working day. Macrobius and Plutarch are the Authors hereof; and Plutarch saith, that the nuptiall celebration made on the Feast-day, was expressely so done: because the people being then busied at playes and recreations, should take no knowledge when Widdowes were secondly married. Contrariwise, the weddings of Maides were solemnized on working-daies, because they should be seene and knowne generally. But Macrobius affirmeth, that Maides nuptials were not performed on featiuall daies; because (as we haue already saide) of the Ceremony, of forcibly fetching them from their mothers laps, which could not be done vpon any feast day.

I forbear to speake of other solemnities and Ceremonies among the Romaines, to come to them of the Babylonians, whose forme of marrying their Maids was thus. On a certaine date in the yeare, the Maides were brought into a publike place of the Citty, where marriage was graunted to them that were the fairest: but not any dowrie to be giuen with the Maide, for shee was then deliuered to him that would giue most Mony for her. The same order they obserued in the second degree of beautie, and so in all other degrees, to the very meanest and simplest: who if they could not bee married without Mony, they then must giue it, that had the fairest Wiues, by which meanes, some vnſightly and hard fauoured Maides, were as well marryed as the brightest beauty, without bringing any Mony with them. Marcus Antonius Sabellicus saith, that this was also a Custome among the ancient Venetians: but then you must vnderstand, that such as were of meanest handsonnes, brought no dowries with them, neither did they receiue any; or bought them, but took them freely.

The ancient French-men, because their Daughters should not complain of being marryed against their wils; they had a Custome; that at such time as their Daughters were fit for marriage; they would inuite a great number of young men to a Banquet: but they were men of such qualitie, as might each way be answerable to their owne condition. In this Banquet time; the maide had free leaue, to elect a Husband among the inuited: and, for a publike signe, where, and on whom her affection

The Sabine virgins brought perforce from their mothers

Plutar in Prob. Laſta. in lib. 2. de Inſtit. Diuin.

Ouid de Faſt. Plutar. in Prob.

Caia Cecilia. Caio Cecilio.

Huſwifely enſtruction.

Plin. in lib. 8. Cap. 40.

Of marrying a Maide and widow, and on what daies

Macrobius lib. 4. Plutar. in Prob.

Of marriages amongst the Babylonians.

Wiues had for the most Money.

Marcus Antonius Sabellicus.

An ancient Custome among the French, for marrying their Daughters.

A marriage Custome in Africa.

* People of Scythia in Asia beyond the Caspian Sea.

Euseb. de Euan
preparat. lib. 5.

Strabo concerning the Ara-bians.

A pretty Story incident to the purpose.

An admirable vertue in an Heathen woman, for loue to her Husband.

on was placed, shee brought him a Bas-son of Water to wash his hands. In a Citty of Africa, called Leptina, they had a Custome, that the first day of a Brides coming to her Husbands house; she should send to borrow an earthen pot of her Mother in Law, and she would returne aunswere of lending her none. This was done to no other end, but to teach her obedience to her Husbands Mother, and hauing so hard an answere at the first motion, to expect no better; but on good desert. The * Massigetæ tooke each Man a Wife in Marriage; and yet notwithstanding, one Woman was common to all, and all the Weomen common to any one.
Eusebius saith, that the ancient Bretons had the like Custome. The Arabians of Arabia Felix, had an ancient wont, that a married Woman was common to al her Husbands kinred. And Strabo saith, that when any of them went to her, he would leaue a Ring or Jewell at the entrance of her doore; that if any other should come, he might know the place was already taken vp, and he not enter, for this was especially respected among them: beside, he was punished with death, that made vse of any Woman not of his owne kinred.

It fortun'd, that a Woman highlie endued with beauty, was often visited (in that kind) by her Husbands kinred, and she being importuned by so frequent visitation: left a Ring at her doore, that whosoever should come, might suppose the place to be alreadie supplied. This honest decept endur'd many daies together, & no man could get entrance, till at the last, all her husbands kinred being (one day) assembled in a certaine place: one of them closely slipt away, intending to visite her, in such an assurance of any other. But finding the Ring at the doore, and remembering that hee had left all the kin-red else (but himselfe) together: hee supposed some Adulterer to haue in-truded; whereupon he ran to aduertise her Husband and the rest. But they being entred, found her alone at her worke, and she confessed to them, the cause of thus deceiuing them, and keeping her selfe onely to her Husband.
When they had well considered thereon, and found her intention to be grounded on vertue, for auoyding of dishonest conuersation, arising by such number of her Husbands kinred, to liue in the greater temperance and chastity, sworne enemy to the brutall v-sage and Custome of the Countrey: their own reason confirmed her honorable minde, and in stead of condemning, they highly commended her.

10

CHAP. XVI.

¶ Who were the first Inuenters of Letters, and of Latine Syllables.

20

30

40

50

IT is not to bee doubted, but (among all the Inuentions of Men) that of Letters was the best and chiefest: for,
to present iudgement, they deliuer things long since past, and communicate busineses which are furthest off; nay more, they make a Man (almost) immortall, so that, if it were not for Letters, there had neuer benee so many wise men in the World.
Therefore the Latines are highly beholding to Nicostrata, Daughter to Isonius, King of Arcadia, who after the death of her Husband (by whom shee had her Sonne Euander) leauing Arcadia; came into Italie; and made her stay on the Mount called Pallatine, or Palatium, neer to the Riuer of Tyber, where now Rome standeth. There she builed a Castle, whereof she made her Sonne Euander Lord, and then shee married with Faunus, King of the Laurentines.
She being excellent and skilful, in foretelling matters to ensue; most learned in the Greeke Characters; and endued with an extraordinary ingenious spirit:
inuented nineteene newe Characters of Letters, which she her selfe taught to the grosse and vulgar people.

After her, one named Syluius, Maister of the Plaies or sportes, found out the Letters H. K. and Q. albeit they are no Letters, but Aspirations. The Greekes afterward, in the time of Saint Augustine, found and receiued the two Letters X and Z. And so they all were ranked

Letters the best of all other inuentions.

Nicostrata the first Inuen-tresse of Letters.

Syluius the Maister of the Sports.

ranged together, euen in such manner, as now we haue them. The people wondering at the wisdom of their Lady Nicostrata, named her a Goddess while she liued, and began to render honours to her, as to a Diuinity. After her death, they erected a Temple to her in Rome, neere the Capitall, and dedicated it to her name.

Dyonisus Lycimius the Inuentor of Syllables.

Dyonisus Lycimius the Romaine, a man very ingenious, found and deuised (afterward) the order of Syllables. For which inuention, they made him a Statue, and exalted it in meete place, and for his honour.

CHAP. XVII.

Of Valasca, a Lady of Bohemia, who hauing procured all the Ladies in the kingdome, to kill their Fathers, Husbands, Brethren and Children; governed Bohemia the space of seauen yeares.

Et me quicken your memory, with some-thing spoken in the two and twentieth Chapter, of our first Booke, where speaking of the Amazons. Aeneas Syluius (who was Pope Pius the second) is remembred, concerning his History of the Bohemians, and the Women of that Countrey. Among whom Valasca, a Lady of incomparable Spirit, deserueth to haue her History not vtterly forgotten: because it is very memorable, and why shee conceived such great hatred against the Bohemians.

Valasca, a worthy Ladie of Bohemia.

You must know then, that Crocius, second Duke of the Bohemians, dying without issue Male: his Daughter Libussa (accounted for one of the Sybbles) with fauour and applauses of the common people, was established in the royall seate of her Father, and governed the Prouince for many yeares, to the generall liking of euery one. At length, hauing giuen a very vpright sentence, of some possession belonging to a powerful Lord: he (growing much displeas'd with the iudgement) moued the people against her, saying. That it was a very vnworthy case, and the people greatly to be blamed, being of such a great and Noble Nation, that they should be subiect to the government of a woman. Libussa obtaining silence of those hot seditious Vp-starts, told them; that she knew well enough their new desseigne and contriued deliberation: yet they took her ouer-short in satifying their will. Wherefore, she prayed them to meet together the day following, and shee would labour to content them in all things, for she desired their contentment aboue all things else. The morrow being come, the popularity flocked together in mightie troops, and being (from all parts) congregated in a principall place, and they all attentive to heare Libussa, the Princess began to speake in this manner:

The people moued against Libussa, in regard of her sexe.

10

20 30

40

50

You know (Bohemians) that (to this day) I haue bin to you a milde & peaceable Lady and Mistresse, without offending any one of you, much lesse vsurping vpon your goods: whereby you iustly conceiue, that you had not me as a Dutchesse, but rather as a Mother. Neuerthelesse, for ought I can perceiue, mine administration hath beene scarce pleasing to ye, whereat I do not much mervaille: for herein you imitate all other men, who neuer are satisfied, but can rather wish for a milde and iust Gouvernour, then they know how to keepe him when they haue him. For mine owne part, very gladlie doe I (at this instant) set yee at libertie: and as you desire a man, to rule and awe ye after his manner, so am I contented that you shall haue such a one. Wherefore, take my white Palfray, and bridling and adorning him in his best furniture, bring him forth on this plaine, whence he may take his way whether he will alone. But cease not you to follow him, till you see him stay before a man, feeding vpon a table of Iron; whom bring hither with you, and he shall bee your Prince, and my Husband.

The Oration of Libussa before all the people.

These words were pleasing to them all, and furnishing the Horse; as Libussa had directed, so they suffered him to wander loose, and they following after. The Horse hauing gone the distance of tenne Miles, stayed at a Riuer called Biell, and there hee stood gazing on a Countrey Boore, named Primislaus, to whom hee shewed

* Of this Primislaus, the third Duke of Bohemia, mention is made by Baptista Fulgoso, in his 3. Booke of Memorable actions.

This maketh me to remember Q. Cincinnatus, who from the Plough, was called to the Office of Dictator.

The Oration of Valasca to all her Noble Sisters.

many Horse-trickes, whinnowing and leaping before him, as if he would haue made open notice, that he knew him to be his Maister. The Bohemians, as well Nobles as Plebeians, ranne quickly to the place, and hauing saluted the plaine Villager, said vnto him: Mount vpon this Horse, and goe with vs to the Princesse Libussa, for shee requireth you as her Husband, and the Bohemians will accept ye as their Prince. Primi- slaus, although he was rustical, yet notwithstanding (as it is a generall desire to rule, and no man but will conceite himselfe worthy enough of it:) vsed them very courteously, and saide; hee was ready to obey them, in whatsoever they would commaund him. And hauing heard he must goe visite Libussa, it being a long iourney (as he supposed) to her, and not hauing broken his fast that day: hee turned his * Ploughshare or Coulter, where-with hee had laboured in the field, and setting Bread and Cheefe thereon, fell hartlie to feeding. This was an euident Testimony to the Bohemians, of the words vsed by Libussa to them: whereat being somewhat amazed, they dutifullie attended vntill he had dined. When he had ended, hee mounted vpon the Horse, and they conducted him to the City; where he married the Dutchesse Libussa, who so long as shee liued, was partly gouerned by the aduise of her Husband. But shee being dead, the Kingdome remained to Primi- slaus, and and so the authority of women ceased, which (till that time) was made very famous by Libussa.

But then Valasca, a young Lady, and of high courage, equalling any of the Amazones, who had serued Libussa as Secretarie to her closest counsels: shee could not endure that the power of Weomen should thus bee deiected, but assembling her company on a daie in secret, she vttered these, or the like speeches.

My deare Sisters, we haue lost our great and royall Mistresse, who alwaies maintained the subiection of Men, and neuer could endure that they should be Maisters: but liued like an Empresse, & we (with her) as if we were Queens. But now we see (miserable that we are) how wee must be curbed all the rest of our dayes, vnder the flauish yoake of Males; whereby we shall be in a much worse condition then Slaues, except wee can regaine our former freedomie. Whereof if you considered as deeply as I doe, and that all your hearts were like to mine: I would not doubt, but that easily wee might recouer our first condition. I haue beene (as you all well know) of most priuate counsell with Libussa, and haue learned her best knowledge, both in Enchantments, and compounding Druggeries, fit and conuenient for our purpose. If then you will yeelde to follow me; without faile we will haue a new regency ouer Men. All the Weomen hauing heard Valasca, thought well of her sprightlie motion, and consenting to her aduise, the conspiracy was instantly plotted against the men.

While these affaires were thus working, one night Primi- slaus had a dream, that a virgine gaue him blood to drink, and he (hauing learned of Libussa, as also by others enstructions, sundry secrets of diuination) growing fearefull of this dreame: was carefull to foresee, and remedy al harms before hand, that might presage any future perill. And calling al the greatest Lords of his land to consultation, his maine intention was; to repress the ouer-bold liberty of Women, and to restraine them within stricter bounds. For the Ladies of the countrey had a custome to ride great horses, to run, Ioust, draw the Bow, hunt, and throw Darts: in breefe, they made vse of all exercises, that were conuenient for Men onelie. Which made the Gentlemen generally, to despise the humor of their base minded Prince: telling him: that women, by their soupleness of body, and gallantry of spirit, were much more worthy to be cherished & loued, then men of sottish and idle disposition. Valasca (all this while) ceased not day and night, still to harten on the coniu- red Sister-hood, and effectually prepared the Tragical act, threatned against the Mens liues: giuing them diuers Beuarages and Enchantments, to diuert their affecting thoughts from me, winning (day by day) many married wiues, to ranke themselues in this band and faction.

And at length, when they had leuied a good

Valascaes counsell fully allowed.

The Dreame of Primi- slaus.

A Custome obserued by the women of Bohemia.

The care and endeuour of Valasca, in prosecution of her purpose.

The bloody Stratagem of Valasca.

good and sufficient number, as well of married as vnmarried: the Stratagem was this, that in one night, Weomen should kill their Fathers, Husbands, Brethren, & Male Children, as they lay sleeping in their Beds, by potions purposefully prepared for the. Which being accordingly performed, the women were all in Armes, and mustering at a place appointed by Valasca, which was not far from the City of Praga, where conquering some that made resistance; they went on to Vissagrada, for Primsislaus made there his abiding, and there they purposed to entrap him. But perceiving they could not surprize the Fortresse, they with-drew to a Mountain (a place naturally very strong) and there they builded a Castle, that they named Dienize, to wit; The Mountaine of Virgins, for (in their language) Virgines are termed Dienize. To all such as escaped this bloody massacre, this exploit seemed strange and abominable: for they saw how their number daily increased, and feared that all the rest would flocke vnto them. Whereupon, they made it knowne to Primsislaus, that they were readie, and likewise resolved, to giue battell to these new vpstart Amazones: willing him to march forth with his Army, and they would ioyne their forces with him. The Prince gaue them to vnderstand, that (as then) he could not goe forth; because the Gods had aduertised him, that all such should dye, as instantly offended the Women, and therefore the busines must be referred to some other apter time. But they (making no account of this answer) hauing provided a powerfull Army of their owne, went directly to Dienize, where comming to handy-strokes with Valasca, all the men were discomfited, not without great losse and slaughter of the most part of them. The Ladies that carried themselves worthily in this daies seruice, were named Malada, Nodea, Suata, Vorasta, Radzca, Zastana, and Tristana, and to each of them was giuen (as a deserved guerdon of their valour) rich Chaines and Bracelets of Gold; and of the great booties won by them, they were all recompenced according to their merites. Valasca slew in this conflict. seuen of the very chiefest enemies, beside many other of meaner quality, and euery one supposed her to be a Goddesse.

The Mount of Virgins.

War purposed against the women.

A happy and favorable day for the women, preuailing valiantly against the men.

After this ouerthrow of the Bohemians, they had not the boldnesse to molest the women any way. For they held on in their valiant resolution, making daily sallies out vpon the borders, spoiling and burning in such maner, as they were dreaded ech day more then other. And being become Mistresses (we-neere) of all Bohemia, they were enforced to haue Commerce, Trafficke and communication with men, or else their estate would grow to nothing. Whereupon, they were contented to marry, notwithstanding a law made among the to the contrary. Adding to this law, that their Daughters should be maintained and instructed among themselves. but the sons should be kept by their fathers, hauing first their right eyes put out, and those fingers cut off, which wee call Thumbes; because if they liued to be men, they should not be able to shoote in a Bow, or manage any other Armes against their Mothers. In the end, Valasca hauing vexed Bohemia the space of 7. yeares, and brought it (almost) wholly tributary to her: was beguiled by Primsislaus. For he wrote Letters vnto her, wherein he signified, that those Lordes and Gentlemen which had moued war against her; did it without his consent; and to his great disliking, which made him the better pleased, with such severe punishment as they had iustly receiued. Moreover, that he held her as his deare daughter, not enuying her government of Bohemia: because she had bin Secretary to his Wife, and had (with such wisdom and courage) maintained his rule fully seauen yeares. That he felt himselfe now aged, and was become vnable to sway his people, and his Son not being of conuenient age, for gouernment of so weighty a charge: hee entreated her to come to Vissagrada, and he would surrender the Fortes into her power, by meanes whereof she should wholly subdue Bohemia. Provided, that she would (afterward) allow such a part or portion to his Sonne, as her selfe should thinke fit of, and as hee himselfe (at first) had allowed, by Ibussa her Princessse & Mistris, which he referred to her owne trust only. As for himselfe, he was well pleased to returne to his first

The Bohemians durst not offend the women.

A law made by the women of Bohemia.

Treachery devised against Valasca by Primsislaus.

condition, to dwell againe in the Village, from whence hee came much against his mind. For he accounted it very reasonable, and an act of duty: that as hee had received his Scepter from a Woman; so he should render it againe to a woman.

Valasca was deceived by the false Letter from Primislaus.

This Letter being sealed and sent, was not a little pleasing to Valasca, for she beleeving over-lightly (according to the Nature of her sexe) sent a Squadron of her armed Ladies, to take possession of those impregnable places: whereinto being entred, they were entertained with dances, feasts, and plaies. Primislaus invited them to a Banquet in his Pallace, and in the meane while, as they sate at the Tables; a great troop of well armed Gallants (which hadde beene closely ambushed for the purpose) rushed into the Hall, where the vnfortunate Ladies were all slaine by them: which being done, the power of Primislaus (being a very potent Army) marched forth with to Dieuize. Valasca having notice of this strange mishap, stood as one confounded with amazement, and putting on her Armour presently; issued forth of her Castle, mounted on a Courser, that seemed to breath Fire, hee was so full of Spirit. Many of her worthiest Ladies followed her; but she was the first that encountred the Army: where discovering more valiancy then I am able to expresse, being overthrowne in the thickest crowd of enemies, shee there ended her daies. Her famous followers, hearing the death of their peerelesse Queene and Mistresse: fought stoutlie and couragiously; not in any hope of conquest, but rather to be reuenged on the false treason of men, so that the conflict was very furious and cruell: But loosing the day, they were put to flight, and the Vissagradians pursuing them: got into the Castle as soone as they, where closing fast the gates, they made a mercilesse slaughter of the Weomen. Thus was Bohemia deliuered from the Dominion of Weomen, and Valasca (worthy to be ranked among the most illustrious Weomen) was allowed no buriall; but left as foode to the beastes and Fowles of the Ayre.

All the Ladies slaine by treason.

Valasca slaine in the midst of her enemies, and all her Ladies quite vanquished.

Bohemia deliuered from womens government.

CHAP. XVIII.

Who were the first Inuenters and deuisers of Hospitals; At what time, and upon what occasion.

It is not found recorded in any Histories, either Iewish, Egyptian, Grecian, Romaine, or of other Nation, that at any time they founded or builded any Hospitals, for entertainment and releefe of poor needy people, sicke, lame, impotent, past labour, and for the nourishing of children, exposed and forsaken of Father and Mother: but since the Christian Faith was received among men. For, in former times, such as were lame and maimed; slew themselves, despairing to find any charity among men. Such as were weake and sickly, hauing no meanes to helpe themselves: did make a publike sale of their liues, to share in some part of the price, and being recouered; both they and their posterity were made Slaues. As for Orphane Children, they (by Ciuill Lawes) were slaues to such as paid for their education: And these were Pagans Hospitals in ancient daies. The world was then flint-harted, beholding what men suffered, without any pittie or compassion.

No man would then know the diuersity of torments, wherwith poor Christians were continually afflicted. And because some imagined, that death was such a punishment, as gaue end to all the calamities of this world: to prevent such pittie, they would plucke forth an eie, or break a bone in the thigh, of such as were Christians. And, though the bone tooke no hold againe; but easlie might be heard by crackling: yet must they be sent into the Mines to dig in the earth, and performe other labours that were insupportable. These persecutions ceased, when Constantine the great had attained to the Romaine Empire (by his valour and magnanimity) who was a Christian, and he reuoked all Edictes against Pagans without Charitie, and no Hospitals of releef, but since Christianity began.

Paganes Hospitals.

Cruell Edictes made against Christians.

Constantine the Great.

6 b

By what meanes Christians were discouered.

Euseb. Hist.
Eccles. Lib. 10.

Toto titul. de Epist. & Cler.

The Emperor Constantine, first began the building of Hospitals.

Julian the Apostata ordained Hospitals

against the Christians; and then Charity began to be publicly exercised. For in former times, Christians were noted by their good liues (and Charity which they extended to the poore) whereof there was then great store: in regard of the confiscation of their goods, and the forenamed mutilations, that Countries were (in a manner) couered with people, and Almes would not stretch to help so many.

Heere you must consider, that scarcely the sixt part of the people (at the most) were then Christians: for the Paganes (that hated them) would giue them nothing, and there were none else but Christians to releue them; the distribution of whose meanes became so shortned, as they had labour enough to provide for themselves. And that which most augmented the poore in number, was the preservation of Christians frō persecution, who durst make shew of themselves, after the Coronation of Great Constantine; and had expressed their Charity, by buying the liberty of slaues, that were become Christians, and being expulsed by their Masters, had no releefe, but what they got by begging.

Hereupon, the Christians (to continue their charitable disposition) at the instance of their Bishops, entreated the Emperor, that care and respect might be had of the poore, and Hospitals to be builded; wherein the aged, poore, maimed, Orphanes, Wemen, Widowes, and people eyther past, or vnable to labor, might be relieued. Wherto he condescended, himselfe first beginning to build many, & gaue command, that the like should be done thoroughout his Empire: which yet was not performed, but in those places where the Christians most abounded. Thirty yeares after, his Nephew Julian coming to the Empire, albeit he was no Christian, but an Apostata; yet notwithstanding, he continued on the building and erection of Hospitals. As may be found in his Epistles, which he wrote to Bishops and Proconsuls, and to the Cities of Asia, saying. They might be ashamed, in not following the example of Christians, who founded Temples and Hospitals for them of their Religion; but in them was found no Charity, but all Couetousnesse. After the death of this Julian, who raigned but two yeares; Idolatry began to shrink by little and little, so that there was hardly any place in our Hemisphere, but it became well stored with Christians, by which means (the Christians being no more persecuted) they had opportunity to found many Hospitals, according to their Countries and dwellings. Bishops and Popes builded some in Rome; and provided great reuennues for them. The Emperors in the East, in Italy, and an infinite number of other Princes in diuers Provinces, as at this day is to be seene.

In the end, by course of time, those Hospitals sufficed not, to entertaine so many as were brought thither, and the Children forsaken of their Parents. Which Gratian the Emperour perceiuing (who raigned the yeare of Christ, 380.) He made ordenances, whereby was appointed, that euery Orphan-Child, should remaine as a Slaue to his Fosterer, and Nourisher. Within a while after, the Emperor Valens gaue generall authoritie, to take vp all begging Vagabonds, that were not sicke or impotent; and to make them serue as Slaues. Prohibiting also, that none should goe into Woods or Forrestes, to liue there as Hermits: for he caused a great number to suffer death, that were retired thither; and he would haue no one liue idly, but all to take paines. In imitation (then) of this good Emperour Valens, such as haue the charge of Hospitals, and admitting poore people into them, for their releefe and gouernment: ought to be carefull; that if they be sick and vnable to labour; then to entertaine them, or else to send them backe. For otherwise, they feede on goods giuen, against the will of the Founder, and contrary (indeede) to all equity: because they must allow of none, but the poore and needy, incapable of labour; and such are to be enquired after, whose modesty wronges their misery, and conceales them from open knowledge; while loytering wretches (by friendship) eatē vp their right. Now as there are many inhumanities and rude behaviours, acknowledged to be done among the Turkes; and others that partake in the Mahometane Law; yet most true it is, that they are amners;

Emperours &
Bishops, charitable in building hospitals

Orphane Children appointed to be Slaues.

Young and healthfull
Beggars and Hermits made Slaues.

The care of Hospitallers.

Handwritten marks at the bottom of the page.

The Turks are charitable, & not careful to leave their heires rich.

Entertainment in the Turkish Hospitals.

A verie rich Hospitall of the Turkes.

An Hospitall of free accessse of all, sicke or sound.

and willingly giue to the poore of their owne Sect, and haue founded, and yet doe builde many Hospitals of great Reuenues: because they are nothing so carefull, to leaue their Heires such extremity of wealth, as we are in these parts of the world. For (well-neere) all of them, that eyther know how to manage Armes, or exercise any estate or condition, haue wages of the Prince. Such as are duputed to gouerne the goods of their Hospitals, are commonly Hermits, who stay not till any come to offer them themselues: but goe to meete trauailers on the way, entreating them to come and accept a lodging, with promise of kinde entertainment, which accordingly is performed. And if they be lame, vnable, or sick; they remaine there so long as they please. When they passe on farther, free leaue is granted them; & all the recompence required of them, is to pray to God for the founders soule. Their Hospitals are commonly builded on the chiefe and greatest waies of Citties, and in places where Villages are most remote, and where water can hardly be found, presuming vpon their larger merit. Beside, many of the common people will feed dumb creatures, as wild Birds & beasts; yea, Fishes in the Riuers, throwing in Bread or Corne, to sustaine them for mans vse.

Of the Turkish Hospitals, there is one at the entrance of Mare Maiore, coming from Bosphorus, which a Daughter to the Emperour Solyman, the wife to Rustane Bascha builded, and hath more then eight thousand Ducates of annual rent. There is another, founded by a Bascha, in the Isle of Phermena, not far from Delos in Greece; which was in the time of Mahomet the second, that conquered Constantinople. This Hospitall hath the reuenues of twelue thousand ducates, and there are receiued all diseased persons, and others, without any exception of religion, poor or rich: They go to wash themselues in the hot Baths, which are sulphurous, and neere adioyning to the Hospitall. But rarelie or sildome in any other Hospitals within the Turkes Dominions, and founded by them; are any other entertained, then of their owne Religion. As concerning such, as (in Antiquity) were founded by Christians, and are in these Lands subiected to the Turkes: all sorts of people are there receiued and welcomed: and where any such are, commonly a Mosque or Temple for Turkes is builded neere vnto it; as is to be seen on Mount Sinai, and else-where.

There is one in Constantinople, begun by Mahomet the second, and finished by Baiazeth his Sonne: which hath the reuenues of threescore thousand Ducates. Another is in the same Cittie, of twelue thousand Ducates annuall rent, founded by Solyman. Orcanes, the Son of Othoman, second Emp. of the Turkes, builded another, in the yeare 1335. in a Towne named Plagiary, not farre from Callipolis, whose rentage is thirtie thousand Ducates: Onely to this end, that poore people may there be entertained and lodged, and all other passengers; praying to God for his Fathers Soule, and sixe of his Brethren, put to death by him, that hee might raigne alone in the more safe assurance.

A Persian King, about the yeare 1550. caused a Mosquee to be builded in Armenia, with an Hospitall, endowing it with forty thousand Ducates rent, at the Mountaine, on the top whereof Noahs Arke stayed. All such as come to this Hospitall, going for deuotion to the said Mountaine, be they Christians (for there they haue a Chappell) Turkes, Moores, Arabes, or Scythians, of what Nation or Religion soeuer they be, sicke or sound; there they are entertained after the Armenian manner, three dayes and three nights, without payment for any thing. In Fez, the Capitall Cittie of the Kingdome (the people beeing great obseruers of the Mahometane Law) there are fiue faire Hospitals, endued with great reuenues, not onely for releefe of the poore: but also to teach and nourish (freely) yong poore Children in good Letters, or in Diuinity.

Theuet writeth (as likewise I haue vnderstood by others, that haue beene in Quinsay, a Cittie whereof we haue formerly related) that there is an Hospital of more then an hundred thousand Ducates Reuenues, truely yearely paid. There, all persons, of what Nation, religion, or sexe soeuer they be, are enter-

Hospitals erected by Christians, in lands conquered by Turkes.

The hospitals in Constantinople.

Orcanes, the Murderer of his sixe Brethren.

A rich Hospitall in Armenia, of most free and liberal entertainment for all commers.

Fiue goodly Hospitals in the Cittie of Fez.

Theuet. in Lib. 12. Cap. 18.

An Hospitall in an Idolaterous Country

entertained; provided that they be diseased, or impotent; and there they are relieved with all things necessary, vntill such time as they shall be able to trauaile. I neuer read or heard, that Idolatrous people had any Hospitals except this: but there needeth little admiration thereat, because they are a people full of great humanity and courtesie. Let not the Turkes then, and others, make their vaunt, that they were the first which inuented and builded Hospitals: for the honour is onely due to the Christians of the Primitive Church.

CHAP. XIX.

Of an Embassage, which was sent to Hippocrates the Physitian, by the Common-wealth of the Abderites, to come and succour their Law-maker & King Democritus, whom they imagined to be a Foole, and out of his wit.

Before the Romaines hadde made Greece tributary there were great store of Common-weals, Islands, Citties, & People, that liued according to their owne Lawes, without depending on any other, then such as they elected to commaund ouer them: who (for the most part) were Phylosophers, men of good life, renowned, & of great erudition. These men were called Law-Makers or Kings, as Lycurgus who commanded ouer the Lacedemonians; Demetrius Phalerens, ouer the Athenians; Epaminondas ouer the Thebanes, and the like of many others. During this good pollicie among the Gracians, there was a great and goodly Cittie and Commonwealth in Thrace, scituate on the Sea, called Abdera, the Prince and Ruler whereof, was deceased. While they remained in suspense, who should bee elected into his place, that might be an honest man, not auaricious, carrying himselfe with Princes, and neighbouring people, louingly, and no affecter of warres: they did set downe their resolution, that a Law-maker must bee endued with such perfections, and such a one would be most beneficiall to their Commonwealth. For, al-

The great
freedome and libertie of Greece, vnder the gouerne-ment of Phylosophers

Abdera of Thrace.

beit Cicero saith, that the Abderites had not ouer-much vnderstanding: yet it appeared, that in the election of this Law-maker, they shewed themselves to haue more wit then the Romaines had. For among so many braue and valiaunt men, as aspired to this high estate, they made choise of one, named Democritus, one of the most Learned men in his time, vertuous, little caring for worldly goods, and had far trauailed; yea, he surpassed Plato, who then liued, and bare him great enuy.

This Democritus was not chosen for his wealth, because he was poore; nor yet by fauour, as hauing any Kindred in this great Common-wealth: for hee was a Mylestan, Sonne to a verie famous and rich man, named Anthenocritus, who had such substantiall meanes, that hee maintained a whole day the Army of Xerxes, when it came into Greece, and the number of men in the saide Armie, was tenne times seauenteene hundreded thousande men.

This Anthenocritus, left many Children, the youngest whereof, was Democritus, who would haue nothing but money (& no other worldly possessions) but not to put to Vsurie, or spend foolishly, but to serue his trauailes in the Worlde, in Countries where he knew were Learned men, that taught good Sciences and Vertues, and he obtained this degree among the Abderites, onely by his good Fame, as formerly hath bin said.

He had trauailed thorow the very chiefest parts of the world; as into Egypt, Caldea, Persia, and into the Indias, to heare the Gymnosophists. And hauing Learned so much as hee could, hee returned home into his owne Country very poore, and hauing consumed all his Patrimony; a Brother of his, named Damasus, in charity receiued him, and maintained him for some small time: but it was not long (after his returne) but his wisdom and great Knowledge began to bee knowne. For, hee had Learned that there was a God; that there was a Creation, & thold be an ending of the World; and he wanted very little of the same beleefe, which the true Church of God hath. Hee published many Books, which discoursed of things Naturall and Morrall. In briefe, he wrote of all the Sciences, and so Learnedly, that his Fame flew into many places.

Cicero in lib. de Natu Deorum.

Democritus his Nature & life

Anthenocritus, Father to Democritus.

Diog. Laert. de Democrit.

The trauailes of Democritus.

The great wisdom and Learning of Democritus.

The coming
of Democritus to the Abderites.

The pollicie
of Democritus.

The retreat
of Democritus from the Ab-derites.

The place where he made his abiding.

How he spent his time daily

What sights he dayly beheld.

ces. So that the Abderites (with good ad-uise and counsell) sent for him to their Cittie, to be commanded by him. He finding the Cittie wholly deuided, and embrouilled with factions, proceeded so dexteriously, that he brought them al to vnity, and made them good friends. He found also the Common-wealth full of vices, and abounding in Luxury, which (by good Lawes) he reformed, and exercised Iustice as well on the rich as poore.
He found the meanes likewise to accord certaine Neighboring Prouinces, which warred on the Abderites. He instituted Gouernors in all places on the frontiers;
as also on the Seacoasts, such as were honest minded men, and not Ambitious.
Which being done, hee liued with the Cittizens some yeares; and perceyuing them to be well reformed, and that they had no more need of his lawes, hee made his retirement to a solitarie place, to attend on his Phylosophy, highly contem-ning all matters of the worlde, which are nothing but true vanities; well knowing, that they deserued not to be sorrowd for, because Heraclitus did nothing else; and daily therefore he laughed them to scorn.

Without the City, and verie neere vnto the wals, there was a tree, which wee commonly call a Plane-tree, somewhat low, yet extending his branches very amply: vnder which, he sat vpon a stone continually alone, hauing no other garment but a long gowne of course stufte, barefooted, his visage pale, with a long beard, & his body very meager. Somewhat neer vnto him, there ran a riuer descending out of a neighboring little hill, wheron stood a temple dedicated to the nimphs, round enuiroined with wild Vines, hauing good store of Bookes by him, and diuersitie of creatures, whereof he dissected some, setting instantly downe what his experience taught him. At other times, he wold ruminate and confer with his vnderstanding, things that he had both seen and read: &
when he was weary with Anatomizing, hee would walke abroad; and returning home again, quietly set him down. Now as this place, was not farre off from the chiefe Lady gate of the Cittie, & Hauen of the Sea: so could he both heare & see the weeping and wrastling of the thicke leaved trees, being round planted about his field Cabinet, as also of people suffering Shipwrack, mourning for their Parents, Kindred, Merchandizes, or other losses. If contentions happened among any men, some being presently slain in the place, greuously wounded, or such like dangerous accidents: others loosing goods, either by processe in Law, or in-conuenience of fire, or mortality of cattle, or some contagious disease hapning among men; at all these casualties and accidents he made a mockery and laughter. He would do the like, when he saw a man heartily reioyce, that his Shippe (richly Laden) was safely arriued in the Hauen, and made a good aduenture. To be short, all humain actions which came to his knowledge, whither they had good or euill successe, he would laugh at them.

This hauing many times bin obserued by the Abderites, and supposing him to be troubled in his vnderstanding, they began (by little and little) to wax weary of him, and the whole Country to be offended at him. Whereupon, they entred into consultation, to vnderstand their best maner of proceeding in this case, and the more part of the best aduised, were desirous of remedy, imagining that it was but some disease in the braine, which procured his extraordinary laughs. In which respect it was thought conuenient, to craue the iudgement of some skilful Phisition, such as was Hippocrates of Coos, who dwelt an 150. miles from thence, and had doone many verie famous cures. Among which (not long before) he recouered Perdiccas King of Macedon, who was falne into an extreame meagerneffe of al his bodie; & (withall) was become so melancholy, that he would not see any body, but sate pensiuely alone, void of all appetite for food or rest, so that his disease was reputed in-cureable. Neuerthelesse, Hippocrates (by his industry) found out the cause of his sicknesse, to wit; That hee was amorous of one of his Fathers Concubines formerly deceased, named Phylas, and in regard of naturall shame or bashfulnesse, he would not discouer it to any one. Yet it being at length perceiued by some neer about him; by the learned skill of Hippocrates, he was quickly cured. Moreouer, he had deliuered the whole Countrey of Sclauonia fro a pestilence, after he vnder-stood by the Ambassadors, which the K. of that Land sent vnto him, what windes blew there with greatest power. Manie other excellent cures (almost diuine) are further

Democritus laughed at all accidents whatsoeuer.

Democritus
was supposed by the Abderites to be mad

Perdiccas, K. of Macedon; extreame diseased.

The Pestilence cured by Hippocrates

ther alledged to bee performed by him: which caused the Abderites, without procrastinating any longer time to send their Ambassadors to him, entreating him to come and helpe their Law-Maker Democritus.

Amelesseagoras being the chief in this Legation, a woorthy Orator, and most intirely affecting his Countrey: spake in few words to Hippocrates, according as followeth, to wit; the Common-wealth of the Abderites wished him all prosperitie, and humbly entreated him to take so much paine, as to come to their Cittie to visit Democritus their Law-maker, whom they immagined to be sicke in spirit; and that except some present remedie might be had, they expected nothing more the their generall ruine. But especially, they stood in feare of loosing him, because he made no account of any thing in the world, nor of himselfe; watching both night and day, laughing and mocking at all things whatsoever, not any thing appearing to be acceptable to him. If men were addicted to Merchandize, or were married, or preached, or taught in school; If any commanded, or obeyed, or deliuered any message, or were constituted in dignities, or deposed from them; If anie were sicke, whole, wounded, cured, dead, or any such like accidents, still he made a scorn of them, and laughed at them. The like would he doo, when he saw men reioice at any good occasiō, or sit in peace, or fight, or lament. Hee would talke of Hell, and what was done there; setting the same downe in writing. Hee taught also, that the aire was full of Attonies, which he tearmed to be such bodies, as the Sunne doth represent by his beames, passing thorough any Glasse windowes: and that there were many worlds all corruptible. He was verie attentine in listening to the songs of Birds, rising very often in the night time, singing songes in a bigge and Base voice. He said also, that wisdome did sometime sicke to many his and lostie matters, and that there were infinite Democrites, who held the same opinion with him.

Now, in consideration of all these things, and by this his daily thanner of behauiour, wasting and consuming both his body and spirit, the Abderites conceiued, that hee was transported from his right senses, and that by his recoverie, he shold acquire great fame, and reputation, accompanied also with as ample a recompence, as himselfe should deeme to bee conuenient, because they made more esteeme of Democritus his health, then if all the Houses and Walles of their Citie were couered with pure Gold. And the more to prouoke him to this iourney, he added, that hee should not come thither as a Physitian, but as a New-founder of so great a Citie and Common-wealth, & that he should not heale one priuat man only, but a whole Cittie. And withall, he should bee receiued as their Law-maker, conseruer and Iudge, all things being reputed and ordered, as effected by his Art and singuler experience. Neither was it a Cittie onely, that made this humble request vnto him, but all Greece, the Princessesse of Prouinces, of all Vertues, and of all Sciences in the wide Vniuerse, to cure and recover him, in whom Wisdome her selfe consisted.

Proceeding further in perswasions, he told him, that he was neere allied to the said Democritus; because, that they both tooke Originall from the race of the Goddes. For Democritus was descended of Heroules, and Hippocrates of Æsculapius, sonne to Apollo. Moreouer, that Philopomenes, a famous Citizen and Capitaine of the Abderites, had already prepared a lodging for his entertainement, though not equall to his high deseruing, yet with heart and good will: and they stood charged to present him ten talents, which valewed then (according to the supputation of Budæus) fixe thousand Isles Couronnes, at thirty fixe Sols to the Crowne, which only was to defray the charges of his iourney.

Hippocrates hauing attentively heard all that Amelesseagoras had said, was very pensive, not knowing what to do. For on the one side, hee had (but fewe dayes before) married a faire and sweete young Ladie, whom he was loath to leaue, as fearing least she should do him some displeasure for parting from her so soone, & in the Nonage of their marriage. Another reason withheld him, which was the performing of certaine Sacrifices, which were vowed (from time to time of al Antiquitie) by them of the Ile of Coos, to the Goddes of their Countrey, wherein he had promised his assistance, as being a man that held the place of most emi-

How highly the Abderites accounted of Democritus.

Great perswasions in Amelesseagoras.

Democritus & Hippocrates descended in race from the Gods.

Ten Talents prepared for Hippocrates.

Hippocrates Ielous of his wife but lately married.

Ambassadors from the Abderites conferring with Hippocrates.

All things alike to Democritus.

What Attonies are, according to Democritus, and some other of his opinion.

nence in the Isle, and was verie especially beloued.

Pre meditations of Hippocrates.

Besides, daily and continually arrived in this Island, great store of people, of all qualities and sexes; some for recouery of their health, being sent thither by others, that had formerly found good successe; & others, as Deputies from diuers great Kings and Monarches, to fetch him to their Courts: as (not long before) hee was to Araxerxes, King of all the East, and many more. In brieft, hee referred it till the next morning, to aunswere the request of the Abderites: for now it waxed somewhat late, and towards Sun-setting, wherefore the Ambassadors went to their rest.

The Resolution of Hippocrates.

Hippocrates considered a great part of the Night, what best became him to do in this case. For, he held it fit and reasonable; yea, and appertaining to his Honor, to go and see Democritus, a man of so great authority in Greece: whom if his skill could recouer, hee should win as a friend, and no meane reputation beside. As for his faire wife by him so lately married, he referred her to the trust of a faithfull and intimate friend, named Dionisius. Then, taking order for all his Domestick affaires, and assisting in the Sacrifices, for his safer sayling to the Abderites, and not knowing how long he should stay in this Voyage, he resolved to accept their earnest request. So on the morrow, hee sent for Amelesseagoras, and the other Ambassadors, to whom he said: He did not a little meruaile, that so great a commonweale as that of the Abderites, was so much troubled about the sicknesse of one onely man, as if a man were their whole Cittie. Neuerthelesse, hee did truly account them to be most happie, who knew and vnderstood, that men of Vertue were found Ramparts, Bulwarks, and Defences. His opinion also was, that Arts and Sciences were perticuler gifts of the Goddes, and men were but the Workmanship of Nature, neyther was it the Cittie of the Abderites, that called him to this iourney, but Nature, to help her worke, which now was false into verie great daunger, to the end, that shee

Hippocrates his answer to the Ambassadors.

Nature calleth for the Physitions helpe, & not men.

should not perrish by so grieuous a disease.

As for the ten Talents, which should be presented to him, he desired the Legates to bestow them elsewhere: because he would do as much without Money, as with it, being neuer subiect to such a pernicious sicknesse, as Auarice is. For, (quoth he) the Art of Physicke sets not it selfe to sale for money; and such men as do receiue salarie, do make Slaues of the Sciences, which (of themselues) are free and liberall.

Hippocrates no way couerous

Moreover, hee gaue them to vnderstand (to shew how little he esteemed riches) that it was not long since, when he made refusall to the mighty King Xerxes, for visiting his Court, Country, & great Armies, which were afflicted with certaine popular and deadly Diseases: for which, there could not any remedie bee found; notwithstanding, the Kinges abounding in wealth and pomp, & whereof no meane offers were made, whereby both he and his might haue been rich for euer, if hee had pleased to make acceptance of them. Citties, Townes, and Provinces, wherein are heaped & hoorded more riches then can bee imagined, they are to me (quoth he) trifles, and of no Value: for I euer preferred Vertue before vice, to wit; the loue of my countrey, and all Greece. Heereupon, he promised, that within verie few dayes hee would set to Sea, and visite Democritus; but he could not now depart with the ambassadours, instantly to vndergo so great a voyage, as was 150. miles by Sea, till he had don his duty in the Sacrifices, which were to be performed to their Countrey Gods; the solemnity and Feast whereof, would be ended in few daies.

King Xerxes refused by Hippocrates.

Hippocrates his promise to the Ambassadors.

In like manner, he would take Order for the publicke affaires, and some priuate occasions of his owne. So the Ambassadors tooke their leaue, returning backe with great contentment, and leauing the ten Talents with Hippocrates, notwithstanding his many and often refusals.

CHAP.

CHAP. XX.

How Hippocrates founde Democritus continually laughing: and of the Conference they had together.

Hippocrates being willing to keep his promise, tooke order for al his owne businesse; but aboue all, for the care and gouernement of his new married Wife, whome he left with his friend Dionisius, and in whom he reposed great confidence. For this opinion was crept into his brain, that no Woman in the world could be chaste: which was found expressely set downe in one of his Letters that he somtime wrote to the same friend Dionisius. He wrote also to his friend Damagetus, a Rhodian, entreating him to lend him a Shippe, that safely might bring him to the Abderites, aduising him (but by way of mockery) to tel the Rhodians, that they should heedfully keepe themselues from laughing indifferently either at good or euill, least they should be imagined mad and foolish, as Democritus was. Also, that they should not be sad or weepe, without very great occasion: for (in common opinion) they would thereby fall into the disease, called Melancholy, which procureth alienation of iudgment, with a certain kind of feare. Therefore, they should obserue a Mediocritie, aswell in laughing as in weeping, as hee himselfe both had done, and would do.

Damagetus sent him a Ship, wherein he sailed so prosperously, that (without any hinderance) hee arriued in the Port of Abdera, in few dayes sayling; where hee was expected with earnest affection, and entertained with as great honor and reuerence, as if he had beene a God. Afterward, he was conducted to the place, where Democritus made his abode out of the Cittie, and found him in the same estate, as Amelesseagoras hadde formerly told him. He would not suddenly intrude into his presence, but through the boughes and branches of Trees, that rounde inuiroed his Cabinet, obserued his actions with good iudgement, considering duly what he did. One while, he saw him writing, another while reading, & afterward walking: when, entering into his lodging, Hippocrates (so reuerently as might be) saluted him. So soone as Democritus perceiued him, he sayde; God saue you mine Hoste. Hippocrates answered, And you Sir also, being a most wise and worthy man, which he performed with very humble reuerence. Democritus was somewhat ashamed, that hee could not tearme him by his name; and therefore entreated that he would tell it him. Hippocrates replied, that hee was called a Physition. Then Democritus doubted that he was Hippocrates, although he had neuer till then seene him, and saide: Hee was the Flower of the Æsculapians, and his great renoune had reached vnto his poore abiding.

Growing on to further questionings, he enquired, what occasion had brought him thither? Shewing him his seat to sit downe by him, and all his room, which was couered with greene braunches of Trees, affirming, that he esteemed it better then a Royal Pallace, subiect vnto the instability of Fortune.

When they had sitten a while together, he desired him to tell him in trueth: if he were come to him about any perticuler businesse, or for some publicke cause? Wishing him to conceale nothing from him, for he would assitt him to his vttermost. Hippocrates answered, that (in trueth) he had no other errand to that place but only to see and conferre with a most Wiseman, according as his country had giuen him in charge. Then Democritus offered to prepare him a lodging, to entertaine and Feast him as his good guest. But Hippocrates told him, that he had already taken vp his lodging with Philopomenes, and demaunded if he knew him? Democritus replied, that he knew him verie well, and that he was the sonne of Damon, and his dwelling was neere vnto the Fountaine Hermandia; he hauing beene a friend to his predecessours, as also hee continued so still to himselfe. All this while Hippocrates heedfully noted, whether his spirit did any way wander, or no; and to know assuredly the state of his vnderstanding, he desired him to tell him what the Argument was, which hee had

The salutations betweene the two Philosophers.

Their further interloctions.

Philopomenes, the Sonne of Damon.

Id est,
In deede, or will.

A mockage giuen by Hippocrates.

Hippocrates sal-leth to Abdera, and there arriueth.

Hippocrates obserued the be-hauour of Democritus.

written

A Discourse of folly, writ ten by Democritus.

How Folly is begotten in the bodie of man.

Hippocrates confirmed in knowledg by Democritus.

Sollicitude for worldlie goods, is a Phylsophers hinderance.

Hippocrates
would know the cause of Democritus's
laughter.

written in a Booke lying open before him? Democritus hauing paused a little space, answered; That it was of Follie. Is it then against the City, replied Hippocrates? Against what Cittie answered Democritus? By which words, Hippocrates wel perceiued, that he had waded too farre in speech, and offended the whole Common-wealth of the Abderites, and had also discovered the cause wherefore hee was come to see him. Wherefore, concealing what he thought, he sayde to Democritus, that he would be loath to offend him, but prayed to resolue him what he could write concerning Follie? Democritus answered; that hee had written what Folly is, and what hee conceyued, concerning the engendering thereof in the spirits of men, and how it was to be auoyded. Then shewing him diuers creatures by him, which he had dissected in forme of Anatomies, hee tolde him; That he had not so done, as to correct or contemne the workes of God, but onely to finde out the seate, and the Nature of anger or choller. For he was not ignorant, that when this humour redounded (neuer so little) in the bodie, it caused furious actions, and that al creatures had it; but in some lesse, and in others more: and when it attained to superabundance, it begot diseases in the spirit.

Then Hippocrates lifting vp his eyes to Heauen, was much better confirmed then before, only by the Wisedome of Democritus, admyring his happinesse, and telling him that hee might boast of the chiefest felicity among men; rendering him a reason for his words. Because (quoth he) that we cannot compasse the meanes, to obtain the like leysure as you haue. And why (quoth Democritus) cannot you haue the like leysure? Because (replied Hippocrates) domesticall affaires care for worldly goods, which are necessarie to be had and kept, for our Children, expences, diseases, frailties, and mortalities which happen, with multitude of seruants, women, and other such like matters, do depriue vs of those leysurable times, to pursue occasions of benefit and profit.

So soone as Democritus had heard these words, he fell into an extraordinary Laughter, leauing al other actions whatsoever. And Hippocrates demanded of him, the reason of his laughter, and whither he had spoken wel or ill, which made him Laugh much more vehemently; and many of the chiefest Cittizens, both hearing and seeing it, greewing that so great a man should in this manner be scorned, they verily beleened, that Democritus was mad, and no further doubt was now to be made thereof. And therefore, in affliction of mind, some rent their haire, others wept, and some smote themselues vpon their faces.

Hippocrates pursuing still his purpose, desired Democritus once more to yeelde him a reason for his ouer-abounding Laughter, and whether any thing done by him, might occasion the same? to the end (quoth he) that I may correct my selfe, from giuing you any such offence hereafter. Democritus replied, swearing by Hercules, that if he would take occasion to make him forbear, or to reprove him for laughing, he protested, that hee should performe the best cure that euer he had done.

Why (quoth Hippocrates) are you not to be reprehended, when you Laugh at the death of a man? Or when you see him sicke, or acting folly, or in choller, raving, murthuring, and such like most miserable accidents committed by him? The like also you do, in his very best fortunes, or what felicities of the Worlde focuer befall him: so that (in you) there appeareth no difference betweene good and euill.

You haue sayde verie true, answered Democritus, and yet you seeme to be ignorant in the true cause of my laughing. But if you knew, or could discern it, you would finde, that the cure thereof extendeth not onely to them of your Countrey, but euen to your owne selfe; and you would gaine much more profite thereby, then you can do by your sending for hither. And when I giue you to vnderstand, that my laughing proceedeth from those vanities; wherein men spend all their life time, yea, more then ridiculous: methinkes (in recompence thereof) you should instruct mee in the Art of Physicke.

And let mee now tell yee (Learned Hippocrates) that I Laugh and mocke; when I see a man filled with Follies, and emptie of all Vertuous actions, carrying himselfe foolishly in all his courses, seeking for Golde and Siluer in all quarters of

The laughing
of Democritus
not to be cured.

The true cause of Democritus's laughing.

A Discourse
concerning search after golde & siluer.

of the World, having no end in his Ambition, but is molested with daylie Trauailes, to the end, that hee may be esteemed more in reputation, and fauoured of fortune.

Hee delueth into the earth, making deep Trenches and waies vnder ground, beeing daily in great perrill and daunger of the earthes falling vpon him, continuing in this drudging exercise all his life time, euen like a Laborious Iouryman, searching and following the veins of the Mettalles, which manie times hee cannot finde: or, if hee finde them, they are oftentimes verie short, or so difficult to followe, that the cost is tennē times more, then the profite ensuing thereby.

And dooth not this deserue Laughter? For, when they dare so much hurt the earth (which they call their common Mother) and vse her as a despightfull Enemy, whom they should hold in great admiration and reuerence, for suffering them to walke vp and downe vpon her bosome, I thinke it a matter well becomming Laughter, to affect what is closelie hidden in her intrailes, and yet to do her such manifest iniury.

Some do loue Dogges, others Horses: Some desire to command and be obeyed in manie Prouinces; and yet themselues will knowe no Obedience. Some marrie Wiues, hauing long time before verie dearely loued them: & yet (in a short while after) forsake and hate them; begetting Children, with much care and cost for their education; yet when they grow great, and past Correction, they despise them; wil not see them; but leaue them Naked vnto the Worlds mercie. Doo not these behauiours expresse their intollerable follies? VVhen men liue in peace, then they couet war, detesting all quietnesse; Deposing their Kinges, and aduancing others in their sted; murdering some men, to begette Children of their Wiues; seeking in the ground for Gold and Siluer; and hauing found them, buy them of the earth; and with the fruites thereof, striue to make mony againe. How many strange varieties of humors are men in? VVhen they are poore and needie, then they seeke for riches; and when they haue them, they hide them vnder ground, to burie them in the place from whence they first cam;

or else wastfully spend them. O wise Hippocrates! I Laugh at these things, beeing done to such ill purpose: but much more when no good euent succeedeth of the. Ther is no truth or Iustice found among them; for they plead daily one against another: the Son against the Father, and Mother, Brother against Brother, Kindred and Friendes of the same qualitie. And at these things they do, to compass Riches, whereof (after death) they can be no possessors. And yet notwithstanding, they will kill one another daily for wealth, commit all vnlawfull Actions; concerning both the poor, their friends, and Countrey.

They make great account of manie senselesse things; esteeming them to be part of their treasure; as Statues, Pictures, painted Tables, and other mouebables of like matter, which they buy at deere rates; being so dexteriously wrought, as nothing but speech wanteth in them; yet they hate liuing persons that do speake to them. Others, do affect laborious, and difficult things; for such as dwel on firme Land, desire to remooue thence to VVatry Islands, and hauing remained there but a while; then they must needs retorne to their first abiding, being no way constant or stable in their desires. They commend courage and strength in warlike actions, yet are daily conquered themselues by Auarice and wickednesse; at euerie change hapning in their bodies, or sicknesse of minde. In brieft, they are as deformed in their liues, as Thersites the Greeke was in his body. And for conclusion (worthy Hippocrates) me thinkes you should not reprehend my laughing, perceiuing so many vanities in men; for no man will mocke his owne follie, but at that which hee discerneth in another, and so they do iustly mock one another. The Drunkard calles him a Glutton, whom he knowes to be sober. Many men loue the Sea; others Husbandry: brieftly they cannot agree in their Trades and professions, much lesse in their liues and actions.

Hippocrates hauing heard Democritus to speake in this maner, without anie pre-meditation: but readily deliuered from his Mouth; and as no man could better vtter his minde, to declare the Vanitie of humane condition, full of so manie ridiculous contrarieties, made

More cost then profit

The Earth, the common Mother of all men.

Variable contrarieties in the affections of men.

No estate or condition liuing contentedly.

The maiestie of men against one another.

Senselesse things esteemed above liuing men.

The deformity of mans life.

The maner of the world.

Sloth & carelesnesse hate full to the Gods.

Excellent reasons alleaded by Hippocrates.

The event of things cannot be auoyded.

The answer
of Democritus
to Hippocrates.

answere: That the necessitie of things, compelled men to many of these actions and variant willes in one another: the principall cause ensuing from the diuine permission, to the end, that men might not bee ydle, because there is not anie thing more odious to the Goddes, then sloath and neglect. And as in Nature there is not any thing stable or firme; euen so, the vnderstanding of man (which is round circled and shut vp with naturall things) is not so certaine and immouable, as daily to fore-see future inconueniences. What would a man do, ioyning in Marriage where he dearly affecteth, if hee foresaw death to bee the cause of their separation? Or the Father and Mother, Nursing their Children tenderly, knewe the houre of their Mortalitie and subiection to death? Would a Husbandman bestow his seed in the ground, if he could fore-tell that it would yeelde him no encrease? Or a Merchant vndertake Nauigation, if hee saw his owne Shippe-wracke before his eyes? Would a King accept of Regall Authority, if he were sure of deposing, and casting out from his dignitie? Or a Magistrate seated in honor, afterward reiected, and tossed vp and downe (like a Tennis Ball) at the peoples pleasure? Alas, woorthy Democritus, each man thinketh, that whatsoever hee enterprizeth, shall succede to happie and fortunate successe. Neither is there any need of such apprehension, or any strong imagination, that pernicious accidents must neede waite on mens enterprizes: For, then no man would aduenture on anie thing, but euery one would stand stupid, confounded with fearefulnesse. Why do ye not now (quoth he to Democritus) mocke and laugh at these words of mine, as you did before, and still doo at all things?

Democritus hauing heard Diuine Hippocrates, excused himselfe thus; That his vnderstanding was but grosse and rough hammered, and could not well comprehend what hee had formerlie declared, concerning the perturbations & tranquillitie of the minde. Insomuch, that if men would gouerne their actions by discretion and prouidence; they wold not declare themselues to be fooles, neither shoulde hee haue any further cause of laughter. But (quoth he) they swell proudly, and so glorie in their doings, as if (in this life) they were immortall, onlie through defect of vnderstanding, beeing harde to bee instructed in such difficult points. It were sufficient to make them wise and well-gouerned, if they would but set before their own eyes, the change or vicissitude of all worldly things, finding nothing firme and stable, the whole world dooing nothing else, but gire and wheele about: so that he which is alofte to day, on the morrow following is removed lower: and hee that sate on one side, is hurled to anot her. And not considering this slippery businesse, they fall easily into verie great inconueniences & troubles: coueting things of no profite, and by greedie thirsting after them, tumble headlong into manie miserable Calamities.

So that, if no man would attempt more, then what his strength could ablie stand vnder, and he beare awaie without perrill, he would lead a much better contented life; and men hauing learned to know themselues, would limit a mediocrity, not an infinitie to their ambition. Then they would consider, that nature hath sufficient to administer what is necessarie for this life, without seeking ouer-painfully, after superfluities and vnprofitable things, which bring nothing with them, but great greefe and mollestation.

Like as a bodie that is growne grosse, fat, and well fed, is soonest suspected to fall into some grieuous disease: euen so, fareth it with great riches, which are subiect to store of trauerfes and mutations. There are many, who take no heede of that which happeneth to others, only by bad conuersation; and therefore, do ouerthrow themselues in the same maner, thorough their owne fault, not fore-seeing daungers manifest, and not hidden; dreaming otherwise on length of life by them. These are the things (O men more then mad, quoth he) that yeilds me matter of laughter, by suffering the pains of your Impieties; as of your Auarices, insatiable desires, enmities, conspiracies, deceits, enuies, and other Vices; which (in regard of their multiplicite) are impossible to be declared; besides your dissimulations and fallacies, in conuersing together, bearing deadly hatred one to another, yet shadding it with lies, flying

The infinite ambition in men, the cause of all euils.

The benefite of knowing our selues.

A familiar comparison
betweene the body & riches

Vices ordinary and common among men.

ing out into all voluptuous turpitude of life, and transgressing all Lawes, both of nature and ciuility.

Many things are pleasing to them, and when they are forborne but a while, they returne againe afresh vnto them. As oftentimes they doe, who shun and despise Nauigation, yet afterwarde doo vnder take it againe, leaving off Husbandrie, which at the first was their only exercise. When they are young, they thinke it long till they attaine vnto age; and when they are arrived to it, then they iament, and finde many irksom discommodities in it.

Princes commend a priuate life, and a priuate man hath an itching humor after Royaltie. The Magistrate praiseth the Handicrafts mans condition: and the other would gladly be in his Office, to be reuerenced and obeyed as the Magistrate is. And what is the reason of all these disturbances, but that no man will take knowledge of himselfe, as hee ought to doo? Some take delight in destroying Townes and Citties, to erect other in contrary places, spoiling one country vni reasonably, to intich themselves in another immeasurably. In all these things, they differ very little from Children, in whom there is neither counsell or iudgement, and resemble brutish creatures, onely this excepted, that they can containe themselves within the Lawes of nature; which men either cannot, or wil not do.

When shal we see a Lyon hiding gold in the ground? Or a Bull contending for a fatter pasture? When the wilde Boare is thirsty, hee will drinke no more then sufficeth nature. When the wolfe hath filld his belly, to get him a stomach againe, hee walketh about from place to place; but man eateth and drinketh both night and day, neuer satisfied with too much repletion. These creatures couet no carnall coniunction, but at certain times and seasons in the yeare: but man at all times and all houres, giuing license to his owne voluptuous fleshinesse, ruinating thereby the health of his body. And is it not a matter deseruing laughter, to see an Amorous foole writh his arms, weep, howl, and torment himselfe, for a mishapen slut, foule, hard faouored, and vsightly, forsaking bright beauty in her sweetest delicacy? And yet for al these grosse imperfections, I thinke Physicke affordeth not any remedie.

You cannot note such mallice in me, as daily you may discern in others; for they kil one another, and I do but dissect and Anatomize poore Beastes, to seeke the cause of these distempers, Vanities, and worldly follies: yet such prooffe were better made on mens bodies, if my kind Nature could endure it; and but that I am a louer of man, and of his good: You may easily obserue, how the world it selfe is hatefull to men, compacting so manie calamities in him, as with them he is continually vexed. For many from the houre of his birth is weake and sickly. When he suckes for his nourishment, hee is vnprofitable, and vnable to gouerne himselfe. Growing greater, he practiseth unhappinesse, and then, hath neede of a Ruler.

Comming to manly yeares, hee waxeth bolde and sturdy; and descending into Old age, hee declareth his owne miserie, remembering his labours and calamities passed, all which, hee brought with him from the wombe of his Mother. Heere their Conference was interrupted, by the comming in of one, that broght certaine Bookes; but a signe being giuen him to lay downe the Bookes, and depart; they fell againe to their former discoursing. But Democritus fearing, lest he had already wearied Hippocrates, with so long and diuers causes of his Laughter, entreated his fauourable patience yet a little longer, and then he should iudge if he were in ad, according as many others imagined.

To approue my former speeches (qd. he) let vs cast our eies into diuers Courts and priuat houses, where dangerous actions are committed, that are not brought to open euidence. In many Courts, Iudges giue sentence according to their own pleasure, offering too much wrong to innocents, & poor despised soules. Notaries and Scriueners on the other side, they alter the Iudges sentences, or (for money) lose their deeds. Some make false monies; others forge counterfeit waights & measures. Some abuse their parents, yea, corrupt their owne Sisters; & others, frame lying Pasquils and rimes, disgracing men & women of vertuous life, & extolling such as are lewd and vicious. Some rob in the night time, breaking Doores and Windowes: And Magistrates ordaine Lawes against stealing, yet are the greatest Theeues themselves. Some hang

Q q 2 them

No man truly satisfied with his own condition.

A delight deseruing little comendation

Brute beastes do behaue themselves better then men.

Affection, is a blinded Folly.

The wretched and miserable estate of men.

Democritus proceedeth in his discourse.

Concerning Iudges.

Notaries and Scriueners.

Coynes and Waights.

Falfe Libels.

Robbing and Thieuing.

Desperation	themselves, or otherwise worke their owne deaths, for not obtaining what they would haue, or else in meer despair. Among men, there are many that affect Dauncing, Singing, Laughing, and frequenting of Feasts and Bankets, while others sit Sighing, Mourning, & lamenting, hauing neither meate or drinke to fill their hungry bellies.	to good purpose: but because the Reader may gesse them by former relation, I spare further proceeding in them. In pronouncing his words, hee seemed rather a God then a man, and his desire was to be heard, without molestation. It waxed now somewhat late, and it appeared, that time had tutored either to allow of seperation. Wherefore, Hippocrates most humbly thanking Democritus,	between Democritus & Hippocrates.
Great inconstancy in the affections of men	There are some, that haue no other delight, but to bee cloathed in rich and sumptuous Garments, neuer caring to couer and adorne their minds, but only with wicked and execrable vices. Some run, trot about, seeke and call into their houses, Knights of the Post (as we terme them, with false witness to ouerthrowe an honest meaning man: and albeit the Iudges knowe it well enough, yet (for bribes) they winke at it, and suffer false contracts, to preuaile against right and equity.	10 Democritus, for instructing him in the causes of his Laughter, and what else he had learned by his wittie discourse, wished, that he were as free as he, without charge of a wife and family, on condition hee might liue like another Democritus.
Proud nakedness	The most part of Weomen, if they bee desirous of walking abroad, manie houres are too few, in decking and adorning themselves, only to appeare beautiful in the eyes of other men: but while they abide within doores, they care not how vnhandsome and fluttish they bee, where rather they should be in their best brauery, only to be liking and acceptable in the eyes of their Husbands.	20 Hippocrates with drawing into the Citie, to his kinde Hoste Philopoemenes, was no sooner there arriued, but the greater part of the Honourablest persons came to visit him, to vnderstand the estate and health of their Law maker. In few Wordes he told them, that in the body of Democritus he could find no infirmity, albeit he made too slight account of his own person, either in order of diet, garments, and other necessaries. Much lesse defect was to be found in his minde: for he was verily perswaded, that the whole worlde contained not a man more wise, learned, and honest, then hee. And the Commonwealth was badly informed, to imagine him mad, or out of his senses, because he laughed (ordinarily) as well at good as euill: for his Laughter proceeded from iust occasion, to witte; i he vanity and presumption of men, promising themselves (for the most part) eternity in this world. Howbeit, the life of man (as euery one well knoweth) is but a dreame, soone passing away. Hee recited also to them, his sententious sayings, in such rare method, and excellent Order, as all the hearers confessed their great error, in holding the wisest man in the world for a foole.	The Noble-men resorted to Hippocrates.
False witness	Seeing then (quoth hee) that the Spirits of men are so variable, and full of intemperance, why shoulde not I Laugh? Surely, I am of the minde, that Physicke is offensive to them, and in regarde of their ill Temper, euery thing is irkesom, and folly seemeth to be Wisdome vnto them.	30 On the morrow, Sacrifices were offered to the Goddesse Pallas, in thankfull manner, because shee had pleased to preserue the helth of Democritus; presenting (beside) great & rich gifts to Hippocrates, for the great paines and trauel he had taken. After many resaltes, he said vnto them, that he remained verie highlie obliged vnto them, for causing him to conferre with the Wisest man in the worlde: for he had many infirmities in his spirite, where-	The report of Hippocrates, concerning his iudgment of Democritus.
Pride in women, to see & be seene.	There are many parts in your Art of Physicke, which suffer blame openly, either thorough ignorance, enuie, or ingratitude. Some sicke men, recouering their health, most commonly do attribute their cure to those Goddes vnto whom they haue deuoted themselves; or to fortune, or to their owne naturall disposition: neuer minding the Physition, who tooke great paines in purging Humors of dangerous quality, and bringing them to a more milde constitution. But you know these things much better then I do, because you haue made iudicious experience of them.	40 Many other speeches passed betweene them, to approue that his Laughter was
Of Physick & Physitians.	The end of the Conference, be-	50	Sacrifices to the Goddesse Pallas.

whereof he was vtterly ignorant, till hee talked with him; and they might haue caused verie manie pernicious accidents, but that his graue Counsell had giuen them remedy; and therefore, hee rather ought to reward Democritus, as a gracious Benefector. So, being brought aboard his Shippe by the Abderites, he set saile, and returned home vnto the Isle of Coos.

This Hippocrates lived afterward like a Woorthie man, and in great reputation, hauing written threescore and seauen Bookes of the Art of Physick, which yet to this day are helde in great estimation, as beeing most learnedly composed; yea, such hath beene their Authoritie, that all cases pleaded before Iudges, if they were determined by Hippocrates, all Lawyers allowd them as a denitive sentence, without informing themselves by any other naturall reason.

The whole Art of Physicke is grounded vpon that which hee hath written; and is the onely reason, why that Science was reduced into an Art. Not onely was he in great credite and estimation during his life time in Greece, but likewise in many remote Nations where that credite liueth still: For his Workes are read not onely in Asia and Europe, but likewise in Affrica, amongst the Moors, Jewes, Arabes, and Indians, where Commentaries are daily made on his Bookes.

Hee was neuer seene to be in Choller, neither more sadde or ioyfull at one time then another. Hee was very charitable to the poore, Benigne, Affable, Liberall, and Laborious: Hee was so beloued in many Prouinces, that (on a time) the Athenians being prouoked by vniust Ambition, denounced Warre against the Isle of Coos: but (for his sake only) the Thessalians and other people, sent their Ambassadours to succor them with men, and all meanes else: And also in respect of him, the Athenians would not come to Handie-blowes: but calling to minde, that hee had once deliuered their Citie from the Pestilence, granted them peace, and accepted him amongst the number of their Cittizens, to enioy the same priuiledges; allowing him besides, a great pension yearely, out of the publicke Treasury. Hee died in the hundred and cleauenth yeare of his age, leauing two Sonnes behinde him, verie famous Physitions, to wit, Thessalus and Draco.

He had a great number of Schollers, whom he wold neuer license to practise, or graunt them his Letters, till they had first taken their Oaths in the Temple, before the Altar of Apello, to abbreuiate diseases to their vttermost power; to giue no counsell, neither to suffer any to poison any bodie, or cause women to be deliuered of abortiue children: To be secret in infirmitie, as wel concerning women as men, without lusting after women, or young Maids, being vnder their cure: nor to report any thing spoken by them, or done in their houses, after their entrance. Also, that they should teach their Arte freely, and without reward to others, according as he had taught it them; and aboue all things else, that they should feare God. It is not aboue fortie years since, that his Sepulchre was found in the Isle of Coos, his Natiue Countrey, which the Emperour Theodosius had builded in his honor, betweene two Hilles, in a verie deepe Quagmyre, which was 860. yeares after his decease. Whereby wee may well perceiue, that Soranus is a lyer, who would haue his Tombe to be in Macedonia. He is alwaies pictured with his head covered, as a signe of his Nobility.

The death & children of Hippocrates.

The Oath giuen by Hippocrates to his Schollers.

The Sepulcher of Hippocrates.

The departure of Hippocrates from the Abderites.

The authority of Hippocrates his workes and writings.

The life and vertues of Hippocrates.

CHAP. XXI.

Of the two most excellent Painters in those times, Apelles and Protogenes.

Having formerly spoken of the woorthy Art of Painting, it may seeme absurd, that two Chapters should be inserted, concerning one and the same subiect. But in mine owne excuse, I must alledge the mens dignitie of whom I am nowe to speake, deseruing well a Chapter by themselves, for better impression in the Readers minds. Apelles, who was tearmed the chiefe or Prince in the Art of Painting, learned this Science vnder a Woorthie man, named Pamphilus, whose cunning

The Authors excuse for this chapter.

Pamphilus the Maister of Apelles.

Protogenes another famous Painter.

Apelles came to see Protogenes.

Protogenes knew Apelles by his line.

Apelles his second visitation of Protogenes.

was so absolute, as hee would accept of no Scholler, at lesse rate then an Attique Talent by the yeare, which valewed fixe hundred Crownes of our Money nowe. In the time of this Apelles, there was another most famous Painter, named Protogenes, so prompt and skilful in this Art, as supremacy in excellency could not be discerned in either. In regard whereof, and Apelles hauing credible intelligence of his great renoune, he resolued to goe see him, & sayled thence to Rhodes, wher Protogenes made his abiding. Being there arriued (with purpose not to be knowne, no not to Protogenes himselfe) he came to the doore of his dwelling, at such time as Protogenes was gone abroad Entring into his Worke-house, he demanded of an aged woman where he was, saying, hee would haue spoken with him. Who stal I say (quoth the old woman) inquired for him? Then Apelles tooke a Pensil, which he found lying by an vnwrought Table, and said to the old woman. Thou mayst tell Protogenes when hee commeth, that he which did this in this Table, came hither to see him And as he spake the wordes, he drew a strait line so curious and elaborate, as the like could not haue been done by the hand of any other Workeman, and so departed.

Protogenes being returned home vnto his house, and told by the Olde woman as she was commaunded; hee looked on the Table, and perceiuing the rare perfection of the Line, he presently said, Apelles hath done this, for no other mā could do it. Then tooke he another Pensill, and vpon the Line which Apelles made, he drew one of another colour, so delicate small, thinne, and slender, and with such true proportion, as none but himselfe could performe the like, commaunding the Old woman, that when Apelles returned thither, she should shew it him and tell him, that this was his workmanship whom he came to see. Soone after, Apelles came againe to the shop, Protogenes being absent; and the Olde woman shewed him the Table as her Maister had giuen him in charge. Apelles being much aī aimed to see such an aduantage aboue him, tooke a Pensill, and on the chiefe subtilty of the line, which Protogenes had made vpon his (although it seemed inuisible to the eie, it was so ouercuriously drawne) yet notwithstanding, by the dexterious skill of his hand, in a third colour, he formed another Line, so subtle and ingenious, that it denided the two formost thorow the midst; and was also set downe with such exceeding perfection, as no space was left to draw another. Protogenes comming home againe, and beholding what was done, confessed himselfe conquered, and ran suddenly to the Port to finde Apelles, to honour and giue him entertainment. Afterward, this Table, with the three lines onely, was reputed as a myracle, and long time kept in Rome, being (for the admirable Art expressed therein) brought thither, and it remained there in Cæsars time, when by casualty of fire it was burned.

Apelles had this custome, when he had finished any rare piece of Worke, to set it in open sight at his doore, for al by-passengers to behold it: then would he hide himselfe aptly behinde it, to hear if (with reason) any one could reprove it, so to vnderstand the peoples iudgement. Once it happened, that his cunning was controlled by a Shoo maker, because the Lat. het of a shoo was not well painted. Alwayes he wrote vnder his Tables, these especiall words; Apelles did this, and yet did it not, giuing thereby to vnderstande, that he held not his work for perfect and compleate.

This excellent man, liued in the time of Alexander, the greatest King that euer was, by whom he was so commended, & held in such high honor, that he prohibited by publicke Edict, no Painter should draw his picture but Apelles onely. Nor did he hold it any disgrace to his maiesty, oftentimes to go and sit by him, as hee was painting in his Shop, which is a notable Argument, that this Arte was in great reputation in those times, and that Apelles was most excellent, & not meanly esteemed and loued by Alexander. For Apelles hauing (by his commaund) drawne to the life, and naked; one of his fauorits, a choise Lady, named Campasse, found her to be so faite, and of such perfection, that he grew extraordinarily inamored of hir. Which comming vnto the knowledge of Alexander, though he loued the Lady dearly, & aboue the rest of his Concubins, yet he concluded to take hir from himselfe, & giue hir in marriage to Apelles. Nor is this act vnworthie to be ranked in the number of his greatest victories,

The curicus Table vnfortunatly burned.

A custom obserued by Apelles.

Apelles reproued by a shoo-maker.

Apelles liued in Alexanders time.

The loue of Alexander to Apelles.

tories: considering, that, conquering his owne affections (which euermore is the worthyest triumph) he could rob himselfe of a faire friend, to bestow her vpon another. Some say, that by this Campaspe, Apelles painted the Picture of Venus.

He was so skilfull in naturall portraiture, that Ptolomie, King of Aegypt, and one of the Successours to Alexander, enuying the fame and vertues of Apelles; made a sumptuous Feast, whereto, treacherously, and in the Kings name, Apelles was invited, and came. Ptolomy being highly offended, angerly demaunded of him; Who had beene the cause of his presence there? Which when Apelles heard; suddenly he tooke a coale out of the fire, and, without returning any other answer: presently drew the figure of a face, which every one (there present) knew to resemble a follower of the Kinges, named Planus. Many other meruaileus things in Painting, were performed by him, which would aske ouer-long time to recount. For Histories doe relate, that he painted such things, as were not to be painted: as the beames of the Sun, Lightning, Thunder, and such like impossibilities. His workes were so rare and singuler, that a Table, wherin Venus was figured, rising out of the Sea, and which was placed in Iulius Casars Temple by Octauius, happening afterward to be defaced in some perticuler part; no man durst attempt to amend what was mard, knowing no meanes to conforme it to the first perfection.

About the ending of his daies, he began to draw another peece of Venus, so faire and curiously proportioned: that dying before he had finished it, no man could be found, that would enterprize to perfect it; according to the beginning. At another time, he had painted a Horse, so neere to the life; that other Painters (having drawne the like Figures, and desirous to make experience of the most perfect) would take liuing Horses out of the Stable, and set them before their owne handye worke, for comparison. But when they brought them before that done by Apelles: they would binne to stirre, whinnow and snuffle, as if the other had been a liuing Horse indeede, whereby Apelles carried the excellence from all the other Painters. Nor was his worthinesse of spirit discerned by his Painting onely, but also in his good discoursing. For Protogenes, praising and extolling him beyond all other Painters; Apelles answered. You are as skilfull a Maister in the Art as I am; but you haue one fault, that ye will tire your selfe with Painting. Declaring heereby, that ouer great diligence and continuall labour (exceeding duty) is hurtfull: because it wasteth, oppresseth, and confoundeth the Spirit; when a man shall so assidually continue at his worke, and giue the minde no breathing time, in some other pleasing exercises. A Painter shewed him one of his pieces, & vaunted, that he had done it in such a short named time; whereto Apelles answered: I saw that by thy workmanship, though thou hadst not told me.

We may speake somewhat of Protogenes, and of his cunning skill in Painting, albeit it were matter enough to his glory, to declare no more then that which Demetrius did, at his sledge before Rhodes. For he might very easilie haue entred the Citty, if he would haue fiered it in a certaine place: but hee would by no meanes yeild thereto, or that any fire should be put in that place, because he well knew, that in the very same part of the Citty, was a Table wrought by the hand of Protogenes. And he rather chose, to faile in surprisall of the Citty; then to burne that Table, such was his great esteeme and loue to it. The day before the Citty was besiedged, Protogenes beeing in a Garden (at his worke) without the Walls, was taken by the Souldiers of Demetrius: for though hee knew the Armies coming, yet would hee not giue ouer his businesse begun. Being brought before Demetrius, the King demanded of him; with what assurance he durst so securely trust himselfe without the Citty? I am certaine (quoth Protogenes) that thy Warre is against the Rhodians, and not against the Arts. Whereupon, Demetrius gaue him in guard to diuers of his trustiest Souldiours, that no man might wrong him in perfecting his worke, and oftentimes went himselfe to see him.

There haue beene in this Art, many choise and singuler Work men, exceeding Ptolomy King of Egypt, an enemy to Apelles.

Admirable things painted by Apelles.

Works of Apelles left imperfect, no man could finish them.

Apelles apt & ready in discourse.

Ouer much labour dilleth the Spirit.

Concerning the worthy skill of Protogenes.

Rhodes besiedged by Demetrius.

The names of many verie rare and singular Painters.

Women very skilfull in Painting.

ding possibility to name them all, and therefore we will but glaunce at some: As Aristides, of Thebes; Asclepiadorus, of Alexandria, very skilfull also in the Mathematiques; Nichomachus, of Athens, Sonne to Aristodemus; Panens, Brother to Phidias, and many other, of whom Pliny speaketh in his fine & thirtieth Booke. And because that men only shall not boast of their figularity in this Art; we can alledge some women likewise, very famous therein, and that haue exceeded extraordinarily: as Thimaretta, Daughter to Mycon of Athens; shee painted the Figure of Dyana in a Table, which was long time preserved in Ephesus. We may not forget Irene, Calypso, and a Virgine named Lala Cyzicena, as also Olympia, and others. True it is, that in our time there are very excellent men: but I must be silent therein, least in speaking of some one or two; I should doe injury to the rest.

CHAP. XXII.

Of what forme a Man ought to bee, to appeare thereby in his best shape and proportion.

Seeing we haue spoken in diuers kinds, of Painters excelling in their Art: me-thinkes it cannot vary farre from our purpose, to speak of the great and chiefest Painter, euen the former and Creator of all things, who obserued a rule and true proportion of Art, in the composition of Man. Among other meruailes, which we are to consider in mans composing; we must first know that he is framed of so perfect a measure, and each part so well compassed (as we shall instantly declare) that our ancient Architects and Builders, had especiall regard, to the proportion obserued by God, in the creation of Man, whereby they shaped their order and composition, for building Houses, Churches, Castles, Towers, Shippes, and Instruments for Warre, and from thence deriued their first proportions. And in contemplating, and well considering the measures of Mans stature, each member after other: they found out such a compasse, as they could thereby direct their labour, and forme the order of wonderfull buildings. Which I must confesse, as well in our Moderne, as in our Ancients, discoursing hereof, and deliuered by their owne writings: especially Vitruuius, albeit experience doth herein best teach vs.

The true rule & proportion in composition of man, obserued as a method for al other matters.

Now, part of this proportion by them found and considered, was, that in the stature of man there is no certain measure or arrest, because some are greater then other. Neuerthelesse, our elders iudged, that to forme a man of apt and perfect greatnesse; it required but sixe foote in length, or else not to exceede seauen: because such as haue surpassed this rule, went contrary to the naturall course.

In like manner, Vegetius, speaking of what stature men should be elected for War-seruice, saith: That the Confull Marius would chuse his Tyrans, (which were new or Fresh-water Souldiours, as we rearme them) of six foot in height, or (at the least) five foot and ten inches, which are the ten partes of twelue portions in a foot. And for conformitic in these things, Vitruuius further saith; That the foote of a man maketh the sixt part of his length. Neuerthelesse, this rule taken by the common foot, is vncertain: for I haue seen Men & womē more great, then seuen times the length of their feet would reach to. To agree then with Vitruuius and Vegetius together; we must know, that Vitruuius meant Geometricall feet, which contained foure hand-breadths, or handfulls, each handfull to haue foure fingers breadth, and each finger foure Barley graines in length. For all Authours, both Auncient and Moderne, writing on this Argument, doe assure vs, that the measuring foote, consisteth of the greatnesse of twelue points, which we tearme inches. Of these feete then a man ought to haue sixe, to be of good height, and he that reacheth to seauen, is very taule, and whosoever exceedeth seauen foote, should be called a Gyant, and monstrous: according to the rule of the most wise Marcus Varro, recited by Aulus Gellius. Whereun-

No certaine measure in the stature of man.

The Confull Marius in election of his Souldiers.

The agreement of Vitruuius and Vegetius.

The allowed height of a Man.

to Suetonius consenteth in the life of Octavianus, speaking of his forme; where he saith, that he was of little stature: yet notwithstanding, it could not be perceived, in regard of equall proportion in his members; but when he was near another of taller stature, the he. Yet he saith, that his measure was five foote and nine inches; and by reason of this want in the first foote, he was called little.

Let vs come now to the proportion of the members, and how much (one with another) ought to haue in their length. In the first place, the auncient Philosophers found out, that the round & circular figure (as being the most absolute of all other) is perfect in man. For a man lying on the ground, his face towards Heauen, his armes and hands extended so wide as can bee, and likewise his legges and feete: open then a compasse of fixe foote in breadth, and set one of the points directly on his navel, as in a Center, and turne the compasse round about by his furthest reach, and it will make a round and perfect circle, taking iust measure by the endes of the feete and hands. This is a rule certaine, and common in all men, by a good and well commensured proportion. Vitruuius speaketh it in the place before alleadged, and the like doe many other Authours beside: Pliny writeth, that the figure or forme of a man, is angulare and quadrangulare, because in opening his armes, and extending his fingers, the largenesse is found, according to the measure of the man in length. Hence ensueth it, that holding his feete together, and his Armes abroad extended; he is a quadrangle of foure equall lines. For one passeth in him by the Crowne of the head; a second, by the Soles of his feete; a third, by one of his hands; and the fourth, by the other. But coming to the members proportion ioyntly together, and likewise of all the body with them; there is found some difference, betweene our Authours Ancient and Moderne. Vitruuius saith, that the face of a Man, measuring it from the neather part of the Chin, to the first root of Haire towards the fore-head; should containe the length of a tenth part of the whole bodie. And that the length of the hand; from the Wrist to the top of the middle Finger, is likewise the tenth part of a Man. And from the top of the forehead, to the beginning of the Breast; containeth a sixth part. Also from the Crowne of the head, to the same vpper part of the breast; is a fourth part. They deuided also the face, into three equall portions; one to begin at the tip of the Chin, and mounting vp so farre as the Nosthrils; then from thence, vp to the eye-browes the second; the third and last, is from the Eye-browes, vp to the roote of the haire. The foote (as we haue said) is repered to be the sixth part of the whole body. The Cubite (which reacheth from the Elbow, to the top of the middle Finger) is the fourth part; And likewise the Breast another fourth part. Behold what auncient Writers haue held as a rule, which they deriued from Vitruuius, according to his Countrey.

Now, this rule ought to be in a man, to haue good proportion and disposition in all his members. I speake this, because there is not any other rule, bee it neuer so great, but it hath some exception. Wherefore, this here named, is not found alike in all men, but yet in the greater part of them; so that, he which shall be found most conformable to this rule, hath euer the best shape and disposition. There are many other proportions among the members of man, and from one to another, all which would be too tedious to declare. Neuertheless (according to my wonted order) I will speake of some of them brieflie. Among these, obserue this, that the very greatest ioynt of the biggest Finger or Thomb, termed an inch; is the measure of the mouthes height, when it is fully open, I meane in such as can easily, and without any grieuance, open their mouths. Againe, the same ioynt, is the perfect measure from the tippe of the Chin, iust to the Iawes or Chaps, when the mouth is shut. The other lesser ioynt of this inch or Thomb, that is to say; where the naile is, is the distance betweene the vpper Lippe, and the tip of the Nose. The great ioynt of the other next Finger, which the Latines called Index, the pointing Finger, or fore-finger; containeth the length of the fore-head or front, taking measure from

The face of man deuided into three equall proportions.

The best allowance for good proportion in a man.

Many proportions among the members of man, by ample description.

Of the measure in the fingers.

The proportion of the members in their due length.

The round & circular figure perfect in man.

Plin. in Lib. 22 Cap 9.

The figure of a man Angulare and Quadrangulare.

The members measured with the whole body together.

The true length of the Nose.	from the height of the eye-browes, to the first root of haire. That which remaineth of this Index, or fore-finger, to the tippe of the Naile, where are two other ioyntes; is the iust length of the Nose, from the end to the eye-browes. The great ioynt of the bigge or middle finger, which is that in the midst of the hand; is the distance from the tippe of the Chin, to the beginning of the nose.	like Artes, duely weighing and considering these rules: made Statues of many pieces, & of diuers proportions, which when they were ioynd together: they appeared as conforme and agreeable, as if they had bin made all in one piece. The Moderne men of our times, haue taken another rule in this diuision of man: for they haue deuided him into nine parts or faces, and the third part of a face. The principall among them, is Phillip de Bourgogne, a singular Caruer, who maketh his diuision thus. From the top or Crowne of the head, so farre as the Front; he maketh a third part of the face. A second third part, is from the beginning of the Front, so farre as the tip of the Chinne. From thence, to the height of the Breast, is a third part. From the Breast, to the Stomacke; is a fourth. From the Stomacke, to the Nauell; is a fifth. From the Nauell; to the secret parts; is a sixth. From thence, the length of the Thigh to the knee, containeth two other third partes, which make seauen and eight. From the ioynt of the knee downward, to the sole of the foote, are reputed two other third parts: which make	The rules of ancient Artists.
The greatnes of the face.	10 And the whole intire hand, is equall to the greatnesse of the face. All the lesser ioynts in the Fingers, hold like measure to the greatnesse of the Naile, which is the moiety of all those lesser ioynts: Wherefore, it is a wonderfull thing, to behold, and obserue the proportions which are in man, and the reasons of them. Moreover, the height of the fore-head, the length of the nose, as also of the lippes, are euermore equall: And the distance which is between the heele and the Instup; is also equall to that betwene the Instup, and the top of the toes.	20 (in all) nine faces, and one other third part. This may be seene and well considered, according to truth, to satisfie some for their further contentment: and this is the rule, obserued and helde by our Moderne men. It is further to be noted and considered, that in the composition and quantity of the members; a very seemely and conuenable proportion is obserued, euen as in a most wonderful Hermony.	Modern men differing from our ancients.
The fore-head, nose, and lips.	30 We haue already said, that the face ought to be the tenth part of the body, so that the whole stature be deuided into tenne partes, or faces, because our auncients made this obseruation. For, from the height or crowne of the head, so farre as the Nosthrils; is one tenth part. From the toppe of the Nose, to the height of the Breast; is a second. From thence, to the mouth of the stomacke; is a third. From the stomacke, to the Nauell; is a fourth. From the Nauell, to the secrets; is a fifth; and there is the halfe moiety of a Mans true stature. From which place also, to the sole of the foote, are five other partes. One beginneth in the midst of the Thighes chiefest greatnesse; the second, descendeth thence to the top of the knee: and the rest going downward, deuide themselues into three other parts. The grossnesse of a man at his wast or girdle; should be the halfe of his height or length: Notwithstanding, as we haue formerly said, although this proportion bee not found alike in all men: yet it is infallible, that he who is equall to this iust measure in all parts, shall be the comliest and most compleat man. For in former times, those auncient Sculptures, Image-makers, Caruers, and others skilfull in the	40 50 60 70 80 90 100 110 120 130 140 150 160 170 180 190 200 210 220 230 240 250 260 270 280 290 300 310 320 330 340 350 360 370 380 390 400 410 420 430 440 450 460 470 480 490 500 510 520 530 540 550 560 570 580 590 600 610 620 630 640 650 660 670 680 690 700 710 720 730 740 750 760 770 780 790 800 810 820 830 840 850 860 870 880 890 900 910 920 930 940 950 960 970 980 990 1000	Phillip of Burgundy, his diuision of man.
The heele & Instup.	40 50 60 70 80 90 100 110 120 130 140 150 160 170 180 190 200 210 220 230 240 250 260 270 280 290 300 310 320 330 340 350 360 370 380 390 400 410 420 430 440 450 460 470 480 490 500 510 520 530 540 550 560 570 580 590 600 610 620 630 640 650 660 670 680 690 700 710 720 730 740 750 760 770 780 790 800 810 820 830 840 850 860 870 880 890 900 910 920 930 940 950 960 970 980 990 1000	Pliny saith, that till the yeares of one and twentie, a man commonly encreaseth in height, and thence-forward groweth in grossnesse, but not in height. Further he saith, that when a Child is three yeares old, he hath receiued the perfect increasing, in halfe of that which he can further increase. Likewise hee saith, that the humours of a sound and healthfull bodie, being answerable in proportion; should containe such weight and poise as followeth. Blood should containe eight equall partes in weight: Fleame should weigh foure partes: Chollour two: And Melanchollie one, but no more. And so it seemeth, that one doubleth it	Let indifferēt iudgement make triall of both.
The measure of the body into ten parts equally obserued.	40 50 60 70 80 90 100 110 120 130 140 150 160 170 180 190 200 210 220 230 240 250 260 270 280 290 300 310 320 330 340 350 360 370 380 390 400 410 420 430 440 450 460 470 480 490 500 510 520 530 540 550 560 570 580 590 600 610 620 630 640 650 660 670 680 690 700 710 720 730 740 750 760 770 780 790 800 810 820 830 840 850 860 870 880 890 900 910 920 930 940 950 960 970 980 990 1000	Pliny saith, that till the yeares of one and twentie, a man commonly encreaseth in height, and thence-forward groweth in grossnesse, but not in height. Further he saith, that when a Child is three yeares old, he hath receiued the perfect increasing, in halfe of that which he can further increase. Likewise hee saith, that the humours of a sound and healthfull bodie, being answerable in proportion; should containe such weight and poise as followeth. Blood should containe eight equall partes in weight: Fleame should weigh foure partes: Chollour two: And Melanchollie one, but no more. And so it seemeth, that one doubleth it	Plin. in lib. 9. cap. 7.
The five parts vpwward.	40 50 60 70 80 90 100 110 120 130 140 150 160 170 180 190 200 210 220 230 240 250 260 270 280 290 300 310 320 330 340 350 360 370 380 390 400 410 420 430 440 450 460 470 480 490 500 510 520 530 540 550 560 570 580 590 600 610 620 630 640 650 660 670 680 690 700 710 720 730 740 750 760 770 780 790 800 810 820 830 840 850 860 870 880 890 900 910 920 930 940 950 960 970 980 990 1000	Pliny saith, that till the yeares of one and twentie, a man commonly encreaseth in height, and thence-forward groweth in grossnesse, but not in height. Further he saith, that when a Child is three yeares old, he hath receiued the perfect increasing, in halfe of that which he can further increase. Likewise hee saith, that the humours of a sound and healthfull bodie, being answerable in proportion; should containe such weight and poise as followeth. Blood should containe eight equall partes in weight: Fleame should weigh foure partes: Chollour two: And Melanchollie one, but no more. And so it seemeth, that one doubleth it	Of growing in height and grossnesse.
The five parts downward.	40 50 60 70 80 90 100 110 120 130 140 150 160 170 180 190 200 210 220 230 240 250 260 270 280 290 300 310 320 330 340 350 360 370 380 390 400 410 420 430 440 450 460 470 480 490 500 510 520 530 540 550 560 570 580 590 600 610 620 630 640 650 660 670 680 690 700 710 720 730 740 750 760 770 780 790 800 810 820 830 840 850 860 870 880 890 900 910 920 930 940 950 960 970 980 990 1000	Pliny saith, that till the yeares of one and twentie, a man commonly encreaseth in height, and thence-forward groweth in grossnesse, but not in height. Further he saith, that when a Child is three yeares old, he hath receiued the perfect increasing, in halfe of that which he can further increase. Likewise hee saith, that the humours of a sound and healthfull bodie, being answerable in proportion; should containe such weight and poise as followeth. Blood should containe eight equall partes in weight: Fleame should weigh foure partes: Chollour two: And Melanchollie one, but no more. And so it seemeth, that one doubleth it	The weight of the humors in man.
The girdle or wast of a man	40 50 60 70 80 90 100 110 120 130 140 150 160 170 180 190 200 210 220 230 240 250 260 270 280 290 300 310 320 330 340 350 360 370 380 390 400 410 420 430 440 450 460 470 480 490 500 510 520 530 540 550 560 570 580 590 600 610 620 630 640 650 660 670 680 690 700 710 720 730 740 750 760 770 780 790 800 810 820 830 840 850 860 870 880 890 900 910 920 930 940 950 960 970 980 990 1000	Pliny saith, that till the yeares of one and twentie, a man commonly encreaseth in height, and thence-forward groweth in grossnesse, but not in height. Further he saith, that when a Child is three yeares old, he hath receiued the perfect increasing, in halfe of that which he can further increase. Likewise hee saith, that the humours of a sound and healthfull bodie, being answerable in proportion; should containe such weight and poise as followeth. Blood should containe eight equall partes in weight: Fleame should weigh foure partes: Chollour two: And Melanchollie one, but no more. And so it seemeth, that one doubleth it	The weight of the humors in man.

The Authors Conclusion.

it selfe vpon the other, euen from the meanest to the greatest. To conclude, this admirable piece of workmanship; contemplating and duely considering it selfe, ought to moue a man, to loue and praise the Worke-man which is God himselfe. And seeing wee haue so faire a preparation in our bodily Fabricke or structure: reason iustly requirereth, that we shold order our manners, according to the perfection of our Soule, to make her appeare the more faire, beeing lodged in a perfect, compleate, and well porportioned body.

CHAP. XXIII.

Of three Princes in our time, and not long since, who ended their dates very miserably, for disobeying, and euill treating their Fathers.

Here needeth no doubt to be made, but many disorderly persons doe liue in this World, that dare exalt themselves against their Parents, and others Superiours, to whom they owe obedience. Which questionlesse ensueth not, but by the sollicitation of the Deuill, couetous to make many of his faction, and to weare his Livery, willingly yeelding themselves to partake in his torments. I speake this, because I purpose to handle in this Chapter, the Histories of three wicked Children; the one of the being a Christian, and the other two of Mahomet's Religion, that carried themselves towards their Fathers and other Kinned, so inhumanly, and without cause; as can scarcely (with modesty) bee expressed, procuring thereby, their owne miserable ending, which happened not about a thousand or twelue hundred yeares since; but euen in our time: To shew the Reader, that this Age of ours is as full of wickednesse and ingratitude, (deedes onely proceeding from the Deuill) as any in former times was euer heard of; wherefore I will begin with the Christian.

Such as haue read the Histories of Phillip de Commynes, who wrote the acti-

10

20 30

40

50

ons of King Lewis the eleauenth, and of his Capitall Enemy, Charles Duke of Burgundy: do finde, that a Duke of Gueldres, a man of vertue, entreating his Subiects benignely, and enriched with the feare of God; had a Sonne named Adolphe, who was newly married to the Duke of Bourbons Daughter. He behaued himselfe fiercely to her, albeit shee was of the blood Royall of France, and allied to the most potent Duke of Bourgongne. Moreouer, grieuing that his Father liued so long, his ambition stretched so farre, as to be Duke of Gueldres in stead of his Father. And that hee might the sooner attaine thereto, this detestable Sonne, one night when his Father would haue gone to his rest; surprized him, and caused him to be led fise miles thence, bare-foote and bare-legde, locking him vp in the Tower of a Castle, which was buldee in a Marshy place, round engirt with Waters, and subiect to litle or no light at all. Sixe months he kept him there in this estate, very basely lodged; and not seeing any fire in all that weary time.

The Duke of Cleues hauing heard of this monstrous dealing; in amity would aduenture for the Prisoners deliuerance: in regard, that the Duke of Gueldres (in his second Nuptials) had married the Sister to the said Duke of Cleues. Adolphe would heare no friendly perswasions; whereuppon, these two Lords entred into cruell Warres, but all in vaine. The Duke of Bourgongne also imployed his paines, to make an agreement betweene the Sonne and Father: but he could speede no better then the other. When the Duke of Bourgongne perceiued the young foole to be so head-strong; accepting of no remonstrances, which both the Pope and he had sent vnto him: he made preparation of warre against him. Adolphe well knowing, that hee was to deale with one more terrible and powerfull then himselfe: withdrew his Father from Prison, and led him to the saide Duke, who yet againe endeuoured to accord them. The griuances beeing heard on either side; the Father, as hauing lost al iudgement, by the insolencies of his Sonne: prouoked, and dared the proud youth to single Combate, vntill silence was imposed on him.

Adolphe, Son to the Duke of Gueldres.

Adolphe surprized his father, and made him prisoner.

The Duke of Cleues seeketh to restore the wronged prisoner.

The Duke of Bourgongne prepareth warre.

The Father called the son to single combate.

In

The Deuill is the Authour and Father of Parricides.

This Age as wicked as any of the former.

The first History.

An agreement betweene the Father and Sonne.

Strange and vile Speeches of a Sonne.

Adolphe the Sonne taken Prisoner.

In the end, the Duke of Bourgogne appointed (faouring the Sonne, as his neere Kinsman) that the Dutchy of Guedres should remaine soly to him: a small Citty excepted, named Graue, ioyning to the Countrey of Brabant; which valued the Reuennue of three thousand Florins. Other three thousand should bee leuied on the Dutchy, making (in all) sixe thousand Florins, which the Father should haue paid him yearly, and the Sonne to enioy al the rest: with this condition, that he should be instituted Gouvernor of Bourgogne, with the accustomed gages. Phillip de Commines, who hath written this History, was deputed (with the other Lords) to make knowne to Adolphe the Sonne, what was determined by the Duke of Bourgogne. But the Sonne, listning to euill counsell, said: That hee would no way accept of these conditions, but had rather throw his Father into a Well, with his head forward, and then to cast in himselfe after. Moreouer, (quoth he) my Father hath beene Duke foure and twenty yeares, and it is now high time that I should be Duke. Willinglie I will giue him three thousand Florins yearly, vpon condition, that neyther he nor his Wife, shall at any time hereafter enter into the saide Dutchy: but liue in some place so secured, as neuer to budge thence, or to be made impossible for their euer leauing it.

While these matters were thus in manning, the people of Amiens, and other Townes seated on the Riuer of Somme, revolted from obedience to the Duke of Bourgogne: for the morgaged Mony which he had on the said places, had beene consigned by King Lewes the eleauenth, who would not take, but laboured daily to keepe those Townes, as best besemed both him and them. The Duke of Bourgogne, aduertised of those Citties revolt, being then at Dorlans; with-drew to Hedin, and commanded a Guard to lay hold on Adolphe, and Men were immediatly appointed for the purpose. Afterward, the Duke of Bourgogne being busied about these affaires; forgot the agreement. But so did not the young Guedrois, for he left his Allemaigne habite, & took one after the French fashion, wherein he fled away secretly, to get into his own country. But as he was to passe a Port neere to Namures, hee payed a Florin for his passage, and a Priest espying him; was suspitious of him, and demanding of a Marriner, came more neer him. When knowing him, he was carried Prisoner to the Castle of Namures: where he remained till the Duke of Bourgognes death, suffering many shamefull ignominies. His Father dyed a yeare after his taking Prisoner, and instituted the Duke of Bourgogne his heire, quite disinheriting his owne Sonne.

The men of Gaunte, touched with the same vice, revolted (after the said Duke of Bourgognes death) against their Lady and Inheritrix Marie; taking the young ingratefull Lord out of Prison, and allowing him to bee their Chiefe. But iust vengeance made no long delay, for within a while after, being bad accompanied, hee was slaine before the Towne of Tornay. Wherein God accomplished his owne words, saying: The disobedient to their Parents, shall neuer finish halfe their years. Behold, the end of this wicked youth, who lived in litle ease, after the persecution of his father, and finished his daies vnfortunately; not leauing any heire to his great Wealth, but the man that was his Capitall Enemy. For afterward, they of the house of Bourgenne, did continually enioy the Dutchy of Guedres, and other Seigneries, euen as they do to this present day.

This manner of misusing Fathers, was as customarie (and more) among the Mahumattists; as among Christians, and they no more exempted from Diuine punishment, then Christians. For they haue knowledge of the old Testament, as weil as Christians; where they see the Commaundements which God made, concerning the obedience due to Parents, and what threatnings doe depend vpon the contrary. Wherefore, thirty two yeares after our first History, Baiazeth raigned in Turky, who, after he had won the victory against the Polonians and Venetians, raigned then thirty yeares. Being then old and decrepite, hauing made peace with all his Neighbours, and enjoying countlesse Riches: he was poysoned, by the procurement of his Sonne, named Selim, in the Citty of Dumatecha, situate in the

Adolphe escap-
ped by flight.

Adolphe taken Prisoner a-gainc.

Adolphe slaine before Tornay.

The second History.

Baiazeth poy-soned by the meanes of his Sonne Selim.

the Countrey of Thrace, whether hee had retýred hunselfe, there to finish the remainder of his daies. This detestable deece, was committed by a Jew, his Phisition, named Hamen, whom Baiazeth most confidently trusted for his health.

His Father being dead, and he possessed of his Treasures: he gaue Money in great aboundance to his men of war, that had enstaull'd him in the Throne Royall: for his elder Brother Zizim, beeing voyd of any meanes to make head against him, was then fledde to Rhodes. He caused two other of his Brethren to be cruelly massacred, and five of his Nephewes. Moreouer, Mustapha, a Man of great authoritie, who wrought all that he could doe to his vitermost, for exalting him to the Empire, he made no spare of him also. Inbriete, his cruelties were so great and horrible, that all men waxing generally fearefull of him: for a long space together, few or none durst appeare in his presence. At length, this wicked Parricide, having raigned nine yeares, ended his dayes at Cturle, (which is a Village in Thrace) by a Pestilentiall Vicer that bred in his reines: as a manifest vengeance, which plagued him with vspeakable torments, for the space of a whole yeare together. Where-with beeing enraged, and put out of his senses, he dyed, cursing both God and Mahomet: to the no little ioy of all the East parts, which he had resolved whollie to ruinate. He dyed in the same place, where (some few yeares before) hee came with bold resistance against his Father: as well worthy (doubleesse) to end his dayes there, where hee entred into disobedience against his Father.

Five and twenty yeares after this our second Historie, another, named Muleasses, King of Thunis in Affrica, an especially obseruer of Mahomets Law, and a great Philosopher, following the Religion of Auerroes, fearing least Barbarossa (Admiral to Sultan Soliman, Emperour of the Turkes) that couered the Sea with a mightie Nauall Army, would come and deiect him from his kingdome (as once before he had done, and was re-seated therein againe, by the Emperour Charles the first, great Grand-Father to the King of Spaine, now rainging) sailed thence into Sicilie, to meete the saide Emperour Charles at Gennes, and to craue succour of him. To guard his Kingdome, while hee was employed in this vrgent businesse; hee left the most faithfull men he could then thinke on; to wit, one named Mahomet, as Gouvernour of the Cittie, and another, called Corsegua, otherwise Phares, whom he constituted Captaine of the Castle, and appointed his Sonne Amydas, as chiefe Commaunder of all his forces, to defend Thunis against the Turkes and Numidians. Being on the Sea, to craue ayde of the Imperiall Majesty; hee was repulsd by contrarie Windes, and driuen into Naples, where the Vice-Roy feasted him very honourably. There, was Muleasses not a little wondred at, in regard of his curious diet, fashion of Apparrell, with such strange and exquisite perfumes, as wee haue already else-where related.

While he was thus at Naples, where the Emperour had commaunded his sojourning, after that Barbarossa had (in vaine) besiedged the Castle of Nice; he received certaine newes out of Affrica, that his Sonne Amydas had cut the throates of his Friends and favorites, and possessed himselfe of the Cittie. This matter so hammered in his head, that he bethought himselfe of leuying an Army of Men, and (in short time) he got together som eighteen hundred, which he caused to be imbarqued, and to prepare for the Gouletie. For hee was perswaded, that (as yet) he might ouer-maister his Sonne, because hee could not yet enable all his Forces: moreouer, this forwardnesse was well liked by the Vice-Roy, Don Pedro de Toledo.

The reason why his Sonne Amydas thus possessed himselfe of the Kingdome, was thorough a false report, (which some enemies to Muleasses had spread abroad) that he was so sicke at Naples; as death ensued thereon; and that before he dyed, hee was become a Christian, and had receiued Baptisme. And this was the cause, that Amydas beeing presented to them of Thunis; was receiued as their King, and at his entrance, he caused some to be slain and massacred, for opposing them-

The care of Muleasses for his kingdome in his absence

The strange curiosity of Muleasses.

Amydas pro-ueth false to his Father.

False reports are very dangerous.

The massacre which Selim made of his Brethren and Kinred.

The miserable death of Selim, as a iust iudgement of God.

The third History.

Muleasses king of Thunis, a man very learned.

The entrance of the King
in blood.

selues against him, by vncertaintie of these tydings of his Fathers death. But Muleasses made what hast he could on the Sea, with his fore-named slender troupe of men, and passed by the Goulette: where he was aduised by the Emperours Lieutenant, named Thoarre, not (too rashlie) to put himselfe into the handes of the Affricanes and Numidians, till first he was assured of their good will towards him.

Muleasses lea-ueth good counsell, and followeth bad

Neuerthelesse, he suffered himselfe to bee led by some Traytours about him, who perswaded him; that euerie one would embrace him, so soone as they saw him, and very ioyfullie bid him welcome, and that Amydas his Sonne (confounded with shame) would take himselfe to flight. Herevpon, he went directly to Thunis, where some number of the people met him, with Knives about their neckes, hanging ready at their throats (as it is a custome among those Affricanes, euen to this day) declaring by their humiliation, and proffered seruice, that they desired pardon.

An vnkinde
we come to Muleasses.

Thus, by despising the counsell of Thoarre, and others that had an honest care of him, to mistrust Ambuscadoes that might be laid for him, and (doubtlesse) were already prepared: he went on to the Cittie, where he was no sooner arriued; but the Affricanes set vpon him, slew about fiftene hundred of his Men, putting the rest to flight, and Muleasses among them. But by the extreame sweete smell of his vnguents and Perfumes, he was discouered; and beeing taken, was brought to his Sonne Amydas, who caused his eyes to be put out with an hot burning Iron, and kept him blinde in Prison most miserably.

Amydas caused his fathers eyes to be cruelly put out, and kept him prisoner.

The like did he to his two Brethren, Nahabell and Abdelas, who were taken with Muleasses. In some short while after, there hapned a sedition in Thunis, during which troubles, Muleasses chanced to escape thence, by the meanes of a Woman, who had kept him certaine daies in a Ditch, couered with Straw. From thence hee got safely into Sicilie, where he liued blinde long time, at the charges of the Sicilians, by commandement of the Emperor: All these things happened in the yeare 1547.

Muleasses escaped out of Prison.

As concerning Amydas, he liued but 4. years after he had committed this detestable Act: in all which time, hee was continually molested with warres, by the Vice-Roy of Argier, assisted with the Turkish forces; and enforced to yeilde himselfe tributary, paying well-neere as much as his Kingdome valued. From the day that hee caused his Fathers eyes to bee put out, he felt himselfe continually afflicted, with an extreame head-ake, and Impostumations in his eyes: whereby he lost all ioy, and became blind of one of his eyes, whereof he dyed. All which thinges succeeded to him by Diuine permission, in iust vengeance of those cruelties which he had exercised on his owne Father. Thus was the ending of these three Parricides.

The wretched and miserable end of Amydas

CHAP. XXIII.

From whence it ensueth, that some dreames are sad and sorrowfull; And others ioyfull and pleasing.

Dream, is that which appeareth to vs as we are sleeping, not by the function of the eyes; but by imagination. Some of

The definitio of Dreames.

those Dreames doe make vs contented and ioyfull, leauing the body iocund, and well disposed at waking. Contrariwise, there are others sad, and offensive, that for diuers daies (after such dreames) procureth a melanchellie languishment, both in the Soule and Body, making men vncapable of receiuing any delight.

Many haue presaged by these dreames, both of good lucke or bad, which soone after should happen vnto them. Some ignorant people haue not spared to say, that they are the Soules of deceased persons; or Angelles, which doe aduertise Men, of such thinges as shall ensue vnto them. My purpose is not to discusse, if the Soules of the deceased haue (at any time) of ignorance, concerning Dreames.

The opinion

time) returned againe into this world; for I leaue that to bee discided by learned Diuines: though some would approve by Text of holie Scripture, that some Soules haue returned into their Bodies, and appeared to others. But because these are extraordinarie matters, and must needes entue miraculoullie; I forbear to speake of them; and will not trouble my selfe any longer, but to discourse of the causes naturall, both concerning pleasing Dreames, and such as are turbulent and offensiuē.

Dioscorides, Plinie, and Galen doe say, that there are diuers kindes of Meates, which doe engender and cause sorrowfull Dreames: As Beanes, Long-Peaſon, Lentilles, Coleworttes, Garlike, Onions, Leekes, Ches-nuts, and all opening Rootes; as Raddish; Carrets, Skirrets and Parsnips. The Flesh of a Hart, Boare, old Hare, and Beefe; also, of a Crane, Goose, Drake, Ducke, Bustard, and diuers other Water-Fowles, as well wilde as tame; and all troubled Wines. Nor is there any doubt to bee made, but that commonly, according to such meates as we vse in our feeding (raising fumes answerable to their severall qualities) that Dreames are begotten of the same Nature.

All these meates before mentioned, with many other which I haue omitted; doe engender euill humours, and are Chollericke, Melanchollicke, and Phlegmaticke. It is necessaric then, that the Bodie of that man, who hath long time vsed these Viandes; should be of the temper of the saide humours, and that the manners and actions of the Soule, should follow the temperature of the bodie.

Galen is of this opinion, and hath written a Booke thereof expresly. Likewise, such men, as haue sustained some notable losse, eyther in their Honour, Body, Goods, Parents, Kinred, or Friendes: and oftentimes (in their Dreames) they haue verie fearefull and mournesfull Apparitions. For many times it comes to passe, that men dreame in the night time, seeming to speake, see, vnderstand, negotiate in the precedent dayes affaires: or else on some thing whereto they bear great affection; or which they desire for to shunne.

Now, wee are to vnderstand the contrary, in such as vse good and wholesome sustentation, for by those sound & sweete vapours, which doe ascend vp into the braine, proceeding from meates of facile and subtile digestion; ioyfull and pleasing Dreames are engendred. As we may note in such as are drunke with drinking good Wine, how pleasant and facetious they are. Whereas on the contrarie, they that are in like case by drinking bad Wine; doe displeasing actions, and hatefull to be scene. In like manner, they that are troubled with no cares, but are addicted to delights, without apprehension of harmes, and enjoying all things that they can wish for: they haue no dreams at all, or if they chance to dreame; it is of ioyfull and pleasing thinges, as all merrie disposed persons vse to doe, that are in good health.

They that eat Anny-seede after supper, or when they are going to bed; or haue fed on Saffron, or drinke with Baulme, Bourage or Buglose in their drinke: not onely will haue a sharpe and subtile Spirit, but also will dreame on very acceptable thinges. There is a certaine vnguent, found commonly readie prepared by Apothecaries, which is called Populeon, or Pampillion, in regard of the Iuyce of Poplar leaues or budde mingled therein; if the temples be rubbed there-with and chafed, the Liuer-veines, the branches of the great Artery, and the soles of the feet: it is not only the prouocation of sound sleepe, but it causeth facetious and delightfull Dreames also. As the like doe all meates of greene colour, and Hearbes, except Cole-worts: As Morrell, or Night-shade, commonly called Solanum; the Thorne-Apple, called Serramonia. Some say, that the teeth of a Horse, vngueded; hung about a mans Necke, or his right Arme; is a present remedie; if he bee vsed to dreame euill dreames.

Cardanus saith, that himselfe made an Oyntment; compounded in this maner. The fat of young Infants, taken out of their Graue; the Iuyce of Parsely; of Reagall or Aconitum; of Cinckfoyle; called Pentaphyllon: wherewith if

By feeding on good meates, good dreames are occasioned.

Observations concerning Anny-seede, Saffron, &c.

An oyntment called Populeon, or Pampillion.

A strange Oyntment made by Cardanus.

Diuers meates that are the cause of melanchollic dreames.

The causes of sad Dreames, or those of other nature.

Diversity of Dreames in the night time.

Strange sights and apparitions.	some Women and weake persons had chaft the Braine-pan; it is almost incredible to speake, what, and how many thinges they did perfwade themfelues to fee. One while, matters of delight, as Theaters, Gardens, Fish ponde, Garments, Ornaments, Daunces, goodly young Children, and lying with him or her, of whom they were most desirous. Other-whiles, they seemed to see Kinges and Magistrates, with their Guardes and Attendants; yea, all the glory and pompe of mankind, with many other excellent things, such as we see in Paintings, farre greater then euer Nature made them. Contrariwise, at other times they did see verie heauie sighes; as Rauens, Scritchowles, Prisons, Deserts, and Torments. In all which is no wonder, although the vnguent bee poysonous; for the like may bee done by naturall thinges. I am well assured, that in a disease (known to bee too frequent) when the parties haue bene persecuted with knots and bunches; yet being annointed with the Fat or Grease of man they haue found their nightly affliction to be greatly qualified, and by reason of pleasing Dreames, haue awaked with ioy and contentment.	maine bodies: that impresseth both in the body and soule, the present qualities and dispositions thereof. Galen, in his Booke of Dreames, declareth diuers Histories, and (among others) one of a Man; who dreamed, that his left thigh was transformed into a Marble-stone: and within short while after (by a dead Palsie) he lost vtterly the vse of that member. An Athlete or wrafler, dreaming that he was a in vessell full of Blood, and so deepe therein, that scarcely the top of his head could be seene: Galen gathered by this dream, that he had great neede of taking some blood from him; by meanes whereof, he was cured of a great and deadly disease. Others dreamed, that they were bathing themselues in Baths of hot water: the Physition Prognosticated vpon this Dreame, that the patient must bee freed from this disease, by indicatorie Sweatings, which thereon followed, and whereby he won great reputation. In like manner, it happeneth to such as are very thirsty, who dreame that they drink insatiably: and hungry men, that they eate, but neuer be satisfied. It appeareth by these thinges, that during this time of sleep, the Soule should and doth enter into the deepest parts of the body, and hauing neglected the external sense; it tasteth the Coporall sicknesse, and at ributes to it selfe full possession therof, by imagination of those thinges which are instantly desired. Wherefore, whosoever dreameth that hee is pressed and charged with a great burden: there is no doubt, but that his animall faculties are oppressed, by a great multitude of humours. Contrariwise, such as dreame they fly in the Ayre, Runne, Leape, and Dance disposedly: denoteth a light body, exempt from the superaboundance of vicious humours. Such as dreame that they see, and are in Dunghilles, Sinckes, and such like filthy places: they must needs bee possessed with putride, foule, and noysome humours. But they, to whom it appeares, that they are conuersant in Pleasaunt, Sweete, and delightfull places: good humours doe abounde in them, and it is a signe of health. Beside these forenamed dreames, I will not heere inferre, that there are none	Of Dreames that haue happened in successe. Of Blood. Of Baches. Of Thirst. Of Hunger. Of the Soules sicknesse. Of great weight. Dreames that declare good or euill health
Morbis Gallicis.	Hauing spoken concerning the quality of Dreames, occasioned and proceeding from sustentation, as also some other thinges exteriorly applied: I will now speake of such, as doe predestinate sicknesse and diseases, and that by naturall causes. Hippocrates himselfe giueth admonishment to a Physition, to be heerein very carefull. For, if a Man doe Dreame, that hee seeth Fire: it denoteth the Dreamer to be abounding in Choller, or of a chollerick humour and disposition; whereby hee is very apt to fall into hot and burning diseases. He that dreameth hee seeth Smoake, Mists, or profound darknesse; is much disposed to Melancholly sicknesse. To dreame of Raine, and moysture; betokeneth the abounding of cold humours. To dreame of Snow, Haile, and Ices; signifieth the redundancy of Phlegme to be most cold. Howbeit (many times) when men do dream of such thinges, the season is apt and disposed thereto. For the constitution of the ayre; hath such power ouer our hu-
Of Dreames that doe preface and foretell diseases.
Of Fire.
Of Smoake, Mists, and Darknesse.
Of Raine.
Of Snow, Haile & Ices.
The Ayre is the cause of Dreames sometimes.

Dreames grounded on naturall causes.

A Dreame that Galen had none but such as are grounded on some naturall causes; but on the Grace of GOD especially, who graunteth aduise to some Men, to expresse such thinges for the benefit and good of others. As happened to Galen the Phisition, who had a Man in cure, that had an Artery in his ankle-bone halfe cut in sunder, whereby hee lost all his blood, before any remedy could bee applyed to him. He writeth, that he was aduertised in his sleepe (by some God or Angell) that he should cut the Arterie quite in sunder, and the ends would retire to each side; and so locke together againe. When he awaked, he executed what his dream had represented to him, and by that meanes cured the man. Having spoken sufficiently on Dreames, founded on naturall reasons; in the ensuing Chapter I will alleadge some, which haue hapned to diuers Princes, by the speciall Grace of God, and altogether against the order of Nature.

CHAP. XXV.

Histories of the Dreames of some Princes, which Dreames afterward came to purpose.

D Princes, great Lords, Prelats, and others, which had charges by Grace especiall and diuine; haue often been admonished in matters that they should doe. As we read of an Angell, or Dæmon, that appeared (in the forme of the Goddess Pallas) to Antonius, Phisition to Augustus, admonishing him; that although Augustus was sicke, yet he should not faile to be present in the battell, which was on the morrow to be given by Brunus and Cassius, and that he should there abide in his Tent. Which he would haue done, but by the Phisitions deepe perswasions to the contrary. For it came to passe, that the Enemies Souldies won the Tents, where (questionlesse) they had slaine Augustus, if he had bene present there. So by this dreame hee preuented his death, won the day,

The dreame of Antonius, Phisition to Augustus Cesar and remained Sole-Monarch of the Romaine Empire: and, vnder his raigne, was borne the Redeemer of the world.

Quintus Curtius declareth in the life of Alexander, that when he maintained his sledge before the City of Tyre, he being entred for succour of the Carthaginians, who saide they were descended of the Tyrians: concluded to raise his sledge, as despairing of euer surprizing it. But in a Dreame, a Satyre appeared to him, after whom hee followed, as he fled before him into a Chamber. His Interpreters tolde him; that this was a certaine fore-warning, to continue his sledge for longer dayes before the City, and that hee should surely take it. Which fell out to bee true; and this successe had long time bene foretold by an holy Prophet; who said, that a Greeke should gouerne in that Countrey.

The holy Scriptures are full of Dreames, whereby diuers Princes haue bene admonished, both for their own and their peoples Welfare. As Abimelech, King of Gerar, who was possessed of Abrahams Wife, supposing she had bene his Sister onely. But he was fore-warned sleeping, that he should attempt nothing against her modestie, least hee incurred the indignation of God, and he obeyed. Another Egyptian King, by Dreames which Ioseph interpreted to him, while he was kept as a Slaue and Prisoner in his land: found neuertheless the assistance of God, to shunne his owne ruine, and death of his people, by a barrennesse in his kingdom, which should continue for seauen yeares, after as many yeares of plenty. By meanes whereof, he made such prouision of Graine: as hee had sufficient to feede his people; during those fore-told seauen yeares, whereas else he had wanted prouision for his people.

Katherine de Medicis, Queene of France, and Wife to King Henrie the second, dreamed (the day before the said King was wounded to death) that shee saw him very sickely, holding downe his head, as hee walked a-long the streetes of Paris, being followed by infinite number of his people, that lamented for him. Hereupon, most earnestly shee entreated him, and (as

The Dreame of Alexander.

The Dreame of Abimelech, King of Gerar.

The dreames of Pharaoh, King of Egypt.

The Dreame of Katherine de Medicis Q of France.

is said) with wringing handes, vppon her knees; not to aduenture in the rank of Tilters on that day. But he, giuing no credit to her wordes, the last day of the Feasting, for the marriage of Madame Margaret his Sister, to Emanuel Philibert, Duke of Sauoy; entred into the Listes for her Honour. And running to breake a Launce against a bold and worthy Knight, to wit; the Count of Montgomerie: happened to bee wounded; for in the Launces breaking on both sides, a shiuer or splinter entred by the sight of his Helmet, and stricke very farre into his head. The King dyed soone after of this wound, aged about fortie yeares, leauing his Kingdome wofullie mourning for him.

We may note the Dreame of this great Princeesse, and how it happened; whereof (doubtlesse) God gaue premonition by his good Angell, both for her good, and the whole Realme of France. But the King beeing opinitive, would rather follow the vanities of the World, then the good aduertisements of his Wife; and by his decease, the people of France suffered many calamities.

His Sonne, King Henrie the third, three dayes before he was murdered at Saint Clou; beheld (in a Dreame) all his Royall Ornaments, to wit; his Linnen Vesture, Sandales, Dalmatian roab, Mantle of Azure Sattin, the great and lesser Crownes, Scepter and Hand of Iustice, Sword and guilt Spurres; all bloody, and made foule with the feete of religious Men, and other people, and that hee himselfe was very angry with the Sexton, of the Abbey of Saint Denis. And albeit good aduise was giuen him (according to the danger of his Dreame) to stand securelie vpon his Guard; yet so it fell out, as a thing permitted by Heauen, that hee could not auoid the fatall chance, but was slaine, whatsoeuer strong Guard was then about him.

Calphurnia, Wife to the adopted Father of Cesar, hauing dreamed, that she beheld Cesar slaine and massacred; gaue him notice thereof. But he, in stead of conuerting it to his benefit, despised the dreame; and went iocundly to the Senate the day following, where the Dreame sorted to wofull effect. To conclude, good or euill Dreames, doe oftene proceede by our vse of good or bad meates, and such affection as we imprint in our vnderstanding, as also euill humours that possesse our bodies; and we neede not enquire (ouer curiously) what they may seeme to signifie: except it be of Phisitions, who thereby doe gather some coniecture of the parties health. As for the Dreames of Kinges, Princes, Monarches, Magistrates, and such like persons, that hold some degree ouer the people, and in the Church, on whom (often-times) dependeth the good or euill, that any Realme or Province is to suffer: they are not alwayes to bee contemned; but with great discretion and iudgement to bee considered. For I am of opinion, with learned Volateranus, who hath left the same written, that (many times) any person going to his rest, not cloyed with bad affections, nor superfluitie of foode, but beeing vertuously minded, and healthfully disposed: his Soule (in sleeping) many fore-see many thinges to come. For the Soule, which (of it selfe) is Diuine and Celestiall, beeing not offended with any wicked cogitations, or ouer bad meates: is at free liberty, and best of all performeth her actions when the body sleepeth, and not being busied with any other matters.

 CHAP. XXVI.

Strange Histories, of three seuerall persons, that by one disease, called Melanchollie, fell into admirable imaginations.

IN this Chapter, I must present a Melanchollie sicknesse to ye, hapning to two men; the one being described by Ætius, a Greeke Phisition, and the other of an Aduocate of Paris, whose name I must conceale, as Houllier hath done. The one, so farre lost his iudgement, as hee verily beleued and affirmed, that he had no head. The other imagi-

The Dreame of Henry the third, King of France.

Calphurnia her Dreame, concerning Cæsars death.

The Authors Conclusion and opinion of Dreames.

Actius and Houllier both Phisitions.

imagined himselfe to be dead; and therefore would not eat any thing. How they were both healed, not by Medicaments, but contrarie perswasions; is the charge that I haue vndertaken; and therefore, I will begin with him, that was perswaded he had no head.

A man that supposed himselfe to haue no head.

I am not ignorant, that many wil hardly credit such accidents to happen, to wit, that a man (by length of time) should suppose himselfe to haue no head; albeit by the very Organs of the head, he saw, heard, spake, dranke; and fed euen then as all other men do. But we doo not see daily, how this trabilious, or Melancholly matter worketh in som men; yea, with more pernicious and false imaginations, then these two. As he who not long since thought he had a Sance-bel in his head or braine. Another, who verily beleued, that he was King of the Gaules. And a Bourguignon Scholler, remaining at Paris neere to the Church of Saint Iulian, who desired the Physitions, not to hinder his soule, from flying out of Purgatorie into heauen, because he said he was dead. And another, who said, to preuent being a Cuckold, he must needes kill himselfe; and thereupon, hangde himselfe about two yeares since, beside diuers other examples of the like Nature.

Actius Serm 7. Tstrab. 2. cap. 9

Now concerning this man, who was of this headlesse opinion, to thinke that he had no head on his bodie, he was seene and visited by great store of verie famous Physitions, who could find out no remedie for him. Notwithstanding, one among the rest, named Photinus, deuised this helpe, to make him weare a Cask or Head-piece, of Lead, which was of great waight, yet fit for his head. This deuise was accordingly performed; and when they did put it on his head, it was done by two men, without any other Cap or lining; yet warily preseruing the Leade from doing any harme, and fastned verie strongly vnder his chinne. Heereupon, he would say many times that his Heade did ake: and so long they continued this waight on his head, that he became to be perswaded he had a head. For, they vsed to say vnto him, that seeing hee sayd his head did ake, it must needes follow, that hee had a Head. Thus the inuention of Photinus, had happie successe.

A head-piece of Lead, to helpe a Melancholly man

In the yeare, 1550. the month of August, a man of good quality & means, by profession an Aduocate, fell into such a Melancholly alienation of his vnderstanding, that he saide and beleued himselfe to be dead. In regard whereof, he would neither speake, eate, laugh, nor walke any whether, but still kept his bed. His wife requested many Physitions to his cure: but no one could perswade him to receiue any thing, no, not to eate or drinke any sustentation, wherby to maintaine life, hee yeelding no other reason, but that he was dead; and dead Folkes vsed not to eate any thing.

An Aduocate that perswaded himselfe to be dead.

At length, he grew to be so faint and weake, as each houre after other, his expiration was expected. But as manie times it cometh to passe, that God sendeth succour, when (to men) there appears no meanes of remedie or hope; euen so now it fortunied, that a Nephewe to the sicke mans Wife, suddenly there arriued, that newly came from Bourges, where he studied the Lawes, in hope to haue some money of his Aunt (which he greatly wanted) but hee found her much perplexed, and his Vnckle in weak estate of his vnderstanding. But ye must first consider, that hauing beene at Paris with his Father, who was a worthy Attourney at the Chastelet, hee droge him out of doores, and would not entertaine him; because (by much straining himselfe) he had not aboue three weekes before) sent him his quarterly exhibition, which hee had wasted and consumed. His retirement was now to his Vnckle by the Mothers side, whom he found in such estate, as hath formerly bin declared.

A young Lawyer of Bourges.

After he had labored to perswade his Vnckle (by Learned, witty, & eloquent Orations) to fall to feeding, and could not preuaile, hee concluded to vse some cunning, whereby he might help him to his health. And being well skild in naturall causes, he thought it more fitting to ease this immaginary Malady by familiar perswasion, then any other course beside. And as merry-minded Schollers haue alwayes a readinesse in wit, ioyfull without care, and a louiall humour: so hee goes and hides himselfe in a Chamber neere to his sicke Vnckle, where putting on a Winding sheet, after the manner of dead men, readye for interment, (only his face discouered) he was broglt forth, and laid vpon a table in his vnckles Chamber, so as the sicke man might very

The young Lawier taketh in hande to cure his Melancholly Vnckle.

The young schollers warty deuice.

con-

conueniently see him. Foure Tapers of wax were set lighted about him; and all the Children and Sernants of the house stood weeping by him, where both Father and Maister might easily beholde them. In brieft, euerie thing was so Artificially acted, as not any bodie which beheld this deceit, could hardly contain himselfe from Laughing, no not the wife of the sicke man, albeit shee was so extremely afflicted; or the Scholler himselfe, inuenter of the stratagem, perceyuing euery one about him, to make such strange and counterfet faces.

Approbation of the Schol-ler to be dead

The pacient or sicke person, wondring what this matter might meane, demanded of his Wife, who it was that lay vpon the Table? Whereto she answered, that it was her deceased Nephewe, who comming (ouer-hastily) from his studies to see him; and grieuing at his dangerous disease, was dead with grieft; and partly a Plurisie, which tooke him by the way; therefore, she had thus prepared his bodie, and stayed but for the Bearers to fetch him to Church for buriall. But Wife (quoth the sicke-man) how can he be dead, considering I see him nowe to laugh, and his eyes are wide open? Husband (quoth she) dead men vse to laugh, enen as you see my poore Nephew doth. The sicke man would beleue nothing, till he had wrought experience on himselfe. Wherefore, calling for a Glasse to beholde his owne face, hee therewith forced himselfe to Laugh, and Laughing, both acknowledged, and was fullie perswaded, that dead men did Laugh: and this was the first steppe to his recouerie.

The Scholler taught the sicke man
how to eate.

This first Scene thus acted by our Comedian Scholler, hee felt his stomacke to waxe hungry, and verie desirous hee was both of meate and drinke, for he had lien three houres in this manner extended on the Table, and called for some good thing to eate. And indeede, he had good reason for it, for hee came fasting from Bourges, without any Foode, not having either purse or pennie, for his whole quarterage was spent and gone. There was not any thing readie in the house, because euery one was in greefe and mourning; but sending forth to the Cookes, a roasted Capon was presently brought him, which hee quickly deuoured with a pint of Wine, sitting vp (for the time) as men vse to do. This beeing well noted by the sicke man, that a dead man shut vp in a Winding sheet, should feed with so good a stomacke, hee asked his wife whither dead men did eat or no? Yes Husband (quoth she) with excellent appetite, and they do also see verie plainly. Which made him forthwith to call for victuals, to try if he being dead, could eat as his fellow dead men did. One ran quickly to the Cookes againe, and bringing good meat, it was cut readily for him and put into his mouth, so that feeding gently, drinking, and doing all other actions of a mā with good iudgment, thence forward he made no more refusal of his meate, whereby this Melancholy Cogitation, by little and little, left him. But most certaine is it, that had not this Invention of the Scholler preuayled, want of food, and supposition of death, would haue brought immagination, to too true a conclusion.

The sicke man eating by imitation found recou-ry of health.

The Scholler (by his Vnckle Advocate) was reconciled to his offended Father, and obtained License for his pleading: so that comming to the bar, in the Court of Le petit Chastelet (a Court of very ancient Record) he prooued one of the best, and most esteemed of his profession. This History being reduced into a quaint Comedie, was acted one Night (by Gentlemen) before King Charles the ninth, my selfe being then there present.

A young Gentleman, of good & noble descent, in the higher parts of Lymosine, hadde tydings brought him, that a Wilde Boare haunted neere to his abiding, which made him suddenly steppe forth, with diuers of his fathers seruants, himselfe carrying an halfe Pike in his hand; and the rest, such Weapons as they could soonest lay holde on, in hope to kill the sauage Boare. Having got good knowledge where hee lurked, he & his followers prepared thither; and the Boare perceiuing his immediate danger; made directly toward the young Gentleman. that scarcely knewe how to defend himselfe with his halfe Pike; & (by great chance) ran betweene his legges, and ouerthrew him, offering afterward for to wound him with his tusks. But one of his fathers men, a Baker by profession, & indued with good corage, hauing a Lance in his hand, ranne therewith so directlie into

The third History of a yong Gentleman of Lymosine and his hunting of a wilde Boare.

A strange imagination in the young Gentleman.

into the Boares throat, that he stirred no further, but lay there quite dead. The young Gentleman, in his fall giuen him by the Boar, had conceiued a very strange and vnheard of apprehension, to wit, that the Boare had deuoured one of his legs, albeit, he sustained no harme but his fall: and this conceite continued in him for the space of two yeares. In all his other actions, he was of very good iudgement, this onely excepted: for naturally he was addicted to deuotion, not suffering a day to passe him, without hearing Masse; fasting all the ordinary daies appointed by the Church; highly affecting Religious Men, especially, those of the Franciscan Order. And verie desirous hee was, to make himself one in their profession: but hee had heard, that they would receiue none borne with any deformity of body, as Crooke backt, Cripple, Lame, or that wanted any member. This perswasion ouer-ruled him, ran entering into that Order; because he supposed himselfe to haue but one Legge, although he walked vp and downe as well as other men; yet still this false imagination preuayled in him, that the Boare had eaten vp one of his legges.

How the young Gentleman was cured of his melancholy conceit

It happened afterwards verie luckily, that two Friers of the Franciscane Order, traouiling thorow the Country, vpon a day, when the Sunne was neere setting, came vnto his Fathers gate, where they desired both Almes and lodging for that Night: which was graunted them; and they supped with the young Gentleman, as one who was verie gladd to see them.

After Supper, each man betook himselfe to his Chamber, both the religious Friers remaining still in the roome, by a good fire; and thither came the young Gentleman againe secretly, not willing to be espied by any of the house. He fell into Communication with the Fryers, of his long continued Deuotion, and intent to be one of their Order: but he was deprived of all meanes, because hee had but one legge; and the other was deuoured by the Boare. The holy men, looking earnestly on him, demanded, if either of his Legges was Artificiall, which sustained his bodie, and desired him to shew them which was it. Then perceyuing immediately the error of his imagination, they perswaded him to beleue no such falshood; for this was but an illusion of Sathan, to hinder him in the way to saluation. So, with many other goodly remonstrances, which they had with him for the space of two houres, and the delight he receiued therein, without the least omission, he began to fall from his melancholy opinion; so that on the morrow, he told euery one that now he had two Legges. At length, notwithstanding the Counsell and perswasion, both of his Father, Kindred, and Friendes, to the contrary, he entred into Religion, & within the yeare of his approbation, died in the Conuent: for I am perswaded, that his soft Nature could not endure the strict Rules of that Order, which are too seuer.

There is nothing more certaine, then that for these melancholy diseases, wherein imagination and reason are any way wounded, all remedies Physicall do profit nothing, but onely contrary perswasions; opposite to the conceire falsely imagined, as may bee gathered by the three Histories fore-mentioned. Nor need we heere alledge, that if irksome remedies had bene applied to the young Gentlemans Legge, they might (perhaps) haue made him to finde his follie, as I haue knowne some in like case, which proued in vaine: but I am of the minde, that the Religious men tooke the best course. In like manner, when the common people are moued by sedition (which is a beast with manie heades) and touched with a melancholy furie: nothing can sooner reduce them to good sence and vnderstanding, then the Vertuous power of perswasions and Orations. By which meanes also, the alienation of iudgment is quickest cured: and Cicero is of the same opinion.

The Authour both saw, and perfectly knew the gentleman, and this Historie to be true.

Concerning the nature of these melancholy diseases

To appease a discontented multitude.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXVII.

Of a strange manner of Banishment, used by the Athenians, by vertue whereof, manie of the verie cheefest men among them, were likewise sometimes banished, although they had committed no offence.

THE Common-wealth and Government of Athen: (according as we haue already described) was one of the most potent and famous in the World. For after, they wold accept of no more Kings, but reduced all to Libertie: they yeelded a great number of men, excellent both in Learning and Armes, where-with all Histories are plentifully stored.

Amongst all other commendable Lawes and Customes, which they kept for their owne conseruation, and maintenance of their rule and libertie, there was one very strange, which yet appeared to them proper and necessary, to reprove and chastise the ambition & overgreat boldnesse, in some of their chiefest Commanders, who made themselues so great, that meaner men might not withstand them, or attaine vnto the like Authority.

At a certaine time, the people (vnder whom, all estates and conditions of the Cittie were comprized) had power and facultie to banish (although it were without cause) for the space of ten yeares, any one of their principall heads, euen such as they pleased, or stood most in doubt of, that he would possesse himself of their Dominion, or become a Tyrant vnto the Common-weale; or if a common Hatred were conceiued against him, which they performed in this manner.

The Magistrats, to whom this Negotiation was deliuered by Commission; making a conuocation of the people, gaue to euerie one of them a little stone, or small Tile-slate; and his name whome they would haue to bee banished, each man must write vpon the Tile, and then deliuer it backe to the Magistrates. These little stones or Tiles (but some tearme them shelles) were by the Greeks termed Ostraci; and thereon, this kinde of exile or banishment, was called Ostracismus. When all these stones were laid together with the peoples Inscriptions on them, they made an account of them: and if it chanced, that they amounted not to the number of sixe thousand (for in such assemblies, no man stood bound to deliuer in his bulletine, except himselfe pleased) for that yeare there was no banishment graunted. But if they rose to sixe thousand and more, then they counted aside, the names of them that were written on the Tiles; and hee that had the most voyces (although he were the verie honestest man, or of greatest Wealth and Honor in the Cittie) he was immediately banished for ten yeares space, without any remission. Neuerthelesse, no man might do him any wrong in his goodes or possessions: but his Seruants might gouern and order all things, according to his direction.

Now, albeit this Law was induced, to correct and punish not only the vicious, but to appease popular enuy against the mightiest, and to take away all ambition: yet it might so come to passe, that the people enioying this priuiledge and Authority, should banish such, from whom most profit and honor had come to their Common-weale, whereby they shoulde fall into the sinne of ingratitude. And indeed it prooued true, for (by the same means Themistocles was banished, a most excellent Captaine, by whose Counsell and dilligence, Xerxes was vanquished, expelled out of Greece, and his nauall armie quite defeated: not only Athens being set at libertie by him, but all Greece likewise. With the same Wages also was Simon the Athenian rewarded, liuing at the same time, who so many times had fought for the freedome of his countrey. Especially, he did such an acte of honour and vertue, as no man (before him) had done the like. For, hee won the battaile by Sea against the Persians; wherein hee tooke two hundred Gallies. Afterward, and the same day, hee had no sooner achieved this victorie: but bringing his Armie on Land, and Marshalling them in good order, he fought against the rest of the Persians, that had landed before in great

Ostracismus,
the Athenians
banishment.

No repeat of persons in this order of exile.

The reason of this Lawes first institution.

Themistocles banished by this Law.

Simon the Athenian so banished.

Kinges suppressed among the Athenians.

The people might banish whomsoeuer they pleased for the space of ten yeares.

The order & manner obserued in their banishment.

Simons victories both by Sea & Land, and his admirable Liberality.

His noble Charity.

Cratinus, and Georgius Leontinus.

A notable accident concerning Aristides, surnamed Iustus, by an ignoraunt Citizen.

Difference between Plu-tarch, and Paulus Emilins.

great number, and foyling them likewise, was conquered both by Sea and Land. Beside these deeds of Vertue, he was verie liberall of his goods, wherewith Fortune had greatly enriched him. For hee laid open his great Farmes and Gardens, that euery man might partake of such blessing as were there: giuing also (but verie secretly) great Almes to poor people of the City. Hee gaue an expresse charge to all his seruants, that if they met (on the way) any people more aged then themselves, and not well Cloathed, to despoile themselves of their better Garments, and to change for their woorse. Moreouer, each Feast day (allowed by Order) he feasted all the poore Beggars of the Cittie: and in this maner, he spent all the wealth left him by his Father Miltiades. Neuerthelesse, all these Liberalities and worthy deeds, could not defend and saue him from this exile, and ingratitude of his Countrey, as is testified by Cratinus the Commicall Poet, and Georgias Leontinus.

In like manner, Aristides, the Sonne of Lysimachus, was most vniustly banished; which Aristides, for his Vertues and sanctitie of life, was called Iustus: yet could not hee liue without the peoples feare and suspition. But in this case there happened a very notable and worthy accident; for, at the time when the people gaue their opinion for his banishment, according vnto their wonted Custome: one of the Cittizens, that neither could write, or knew Aristides, but only by his fame, came to Aristides himselfe, to entreat him to write the name of Aristides on the stone, because he would giue his voice for his banishment. Aristides wondering at this matter (for he dreamt not on any such vnkindnesse towards him) saide vnto him; Tell mee good man, hath Aristides done thee any displeasure? No; (quoth the Cittizen) but only it offendeth me, that I heare him euerie where tearmed [Aristides the Iust.] Thus doth Plutarch set it downe; but Paulus Aemilius sayeth; that the Cittizen answered him; I know not Aristides, and yet methinkes I cannot endure him, because (with such dilligence) he hath got the honor, to be called Iust. All which notwithstanding, Aristides made him no answer; but wrote his own name vpon the stone; and though the people were thus leagued against him, hee was not a jot offended at his Countrey, but willingly went forth in banishment, saying; I desire of the Goddess, that the Athenians may neuer know any such necessitie, as (at any time) to stand in neede of Aristides. But the Athenians well declared their owne errour, in exiling such a woorthie man: for before, the ten yeares were expired, yea, within six yeares, by will and consent of the people, hee was reuoked from exile. After which repeale, he did many admirable deeds of Armes, being present at the battell on the Sea, near Salamina, where Xerxes was foyled; and likewise at that place, where hee conquered Mardonius. Thus this exile (as I haue formerly saide) happened euermore to the best and most eminent men. Neuerthelesse, albeit the harme was great; yet it carried with it a certaine kinde of honor and dignity, in regard of the fear and enuie generally conceyued, least they should become Tyrants, as Pisistratus was.

Plutarch reporteth, that while Athens flourished in power, wealth, and military exercise, there were two great men; the one, named Nicias, and the other Alcibiades, who were in all things curious and ambitious after glory, enuying greatlie one another. When the fore-mentioned time of Ostracisme drewe neere, and the people prepared for their wonted custome, each of these great men grewe fearefull of himselfe; and laboured with their vtmost dilligent endeouour, to hinder their fall into such an incontinencie. At the same time liued in Athens, one named Hyperbolus, a man of base condition yet very proud, but much more seditious. He perceiuing the humors of Nicias and Alcibiades, eslayed by all means possible, to sow discord and contentions between them, hoping thereby to winne himselfe reputation; and pre-supposing also, that (by reason of their enmity) one of them should be banished by the Ostracisme, & he (in meane time) attaine to the place of his greatnesse, to haue eminency & command in the City.

But this intent comming to the others knowledge, and each of them accounting it shame, that a man of such base quality should equall himselfe with them, pacified their spleenes secretly, and became loning friends; choosing rather to bridle their owne rancor, then to suffer such

The words of Aristides at his banishing.

Aristides repealed from banishment.

Mardonius a Captaine belonging to Xerxes.

Plutarch concerning Nicias & Alcibiades.

Hyperbolus, a man of mean quality.

Nicias and Alcibiades make themselués Friends.

Hyperolus banished from Athens.

such a scandall vnto the state in generall. They further contriued, to woork with the people in such manner, that Hyperbolus should be banished by the Ostracism, and followed their intent so dilligentlie, that they preuailed therein, requiring him with the same measure, which he meated to others.

The people were not a litle well pleased heerewith, to see so vile a person excluded, after so many worthy and excellent men. But at length, these pleasures turned to anger and discontentment, & that in such sort, as the Law of Ostracism for euer after, found imbarment.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Of many worthy and famous men, that by the ingratitude of their Countries, endured Banishment.

Ingratitude of famous Cities

istories are well filled with ingrati- tudes, which ancient and memorable Ci- ties haue returned to such mē, as haue done them notable Seruices, and holpen them in their grea- test necessities. Wherefore, we wil shew some examples, to the studious affecters of Histories, how frequent a thing this hath bin in former times.

M. Tul. Cicero, banished by the means of his enemy Clodius.

The great Father of the Latin toong, and Soueraigne Orator therein, that deliuered Rome from the perillous coniuration of Cataline, was yet notwithstanding banished, at the instance & procurement of Clodius his sworne enemy: whose exile was so much bemoaned in Rome, that there were aboue twenty thousande persons, which chaunged their habites into mourning Garments, and thereby, caused his restoring to his former Liberie, to their great ioy, and his high Honour. Demosthenes likewise, the Prince of Greek eloquence, and Defender of his Country Athens, was banished by the Athenians, who albeit they had founde iust occasion for o do, yet it could pleade no sufficiency, to deprive themselves of so worthy a mans presence.

Demosthenes banished by the Athenians.

10 He was excessiueley grieved, to see him- selfe banished from his Countrey, & that in such sort, as he departed in wonderfull Melancholy. And meeting some Athenians at his issuing forth, that were his capital enemies, he stood greatly in doubt of them: yet did they offer him no offence, but rather ayded and comforted him, with all such thinges as were neede- full for him. Which when he had duellie considered, and saw himselfe reprooued, because he had grieved so much for parting from his Countrey, hee saide vnto them: Wou'd ye not haue me lament, seeing my selfe banished from my Countrey, where a mans enemies are such, as he may account himself happy, when (for saking his friends) he trusteth most to them.

The words of Demosthenes to his Countrymen.

20 Metellus, sur-named Numidicus, in recompence of his victorie obtaiend against Iugurth, King of the Numidians, was banished out of Rome, because he wold not accord vnto a Law, wherof a proffer was made him. Hannibal, after he had performed as much, as a good Citizen possibly could do for the good of his Country, & albeit he was the most excellent Captain of his time, yet could he not be permitted to liue securely in his Country, but being banished thence, was constrained to wander thorow the world. Renowned Camillus was vniustly banished from the City of Rome, euen then when the Gaules surprized it, and had besieged the Capitoll. Wherefore, during his exile, hee was made Dictatour, and chiefest Captaine of his Country, whither being returned, hee deliuered them from imprisonment, that had banished him.

Metellus Numidicus banished from Rome.

Hannibal banished by his native Country Carthage.

Camillus banished from Rome.

40 Serullianus Halla, after hee had preferued the Liberties of Rome, from the ambition of Spurius Emilius, Maister of the Knights that wold haue made him King, and whom he woorthily slew, was banished for his recompence, and sent into exile.

Serullianus Halla banished out of Rome.

50 I neuer knew anie Common-weale, more beholding vnto a man, then Lacedemon was to Lycurgus, for the good Lawes he gaue them, whereby to order their course of life. And albeit, he was a man of Holie life, and commendable manners, and of whom (according vnto Valerius Maximus) the Oracle of Apollo

Lycurgus most vnkindly vsed and banished by the Lacedemonians.

lo Pytheum, made answer; That it was doubtfull, whesher hee should bee ranked among Men, or the Goddes: yet notwithstanding, hee was manie times pursued by the Cittizens, at the stones triall, and expulsed from their Cittie. Finallie, hauing one of his eyes pulled foorth, hee was afterward banished out of the countrey.

Solon banished by the Athenians.

The selfesame courtesie did the Athenians extend to Solon, who had instituted so many good and Vertuous Lawes for them, and of whom, if they would haue continued due vse, their Empire (it might haue beene) had perpetually endured. Neuerthelesse, because he conquered & recouered for them the Cittie of Sa'amina, and likewise aduertised them of Pisistratus his attempts, seeking to make him selfe a King, and to Tyranize ouer them: enen in his old decrepit age, they rewarded him with banishment; and he could not preuaile so much with them, as to graunt him any poor place in their countrey, where he might conclude the small remnant of his dayes; but needes they would exile him into the Isle of Cyprus. Scipio Nasica, who was knowne to be the Vwoorthiest man in Rome, and deserued no lesse honour, for administration and gouernement in the Common-wealth, then the other Scipioes (with their armies) in the field: Neuerthelesse, after hee had freed Rome from the Tiranny and subiection of the Greekes (wel knowing the enuie of some Cittizens, and their hatred conceiued against his Vertues) dissembling an employment in an Embasie, he voluntarily retired himselfe to Pergamum in Asia, where (without seeking anie Reuenge on his Countries ingratitude) he ended the rest of his daies.

Scipio Nasica banished him self from his Countrey.

Publius Lentulus, in like manner, after hee had vertuously defended the Common-wealth, and repressed the furious attempts of the Greekes, his best recompence was banishment from Rome. But before he went to his confinement in Sicily, he desired of the Gods in all the peoples presence, that hee might neuer returne againe, vnto so ingratefull a Nation.

Publius Lentulus banished from Rome.

Boetius Seuerinus, a very famous and Vertuous man, was banished by Theodoricke, that vsurped in Rome: only vpon a conceiued suspition, that the sayde Boetius sought the freedom of his Coun-

Boetius Seuerinus banished by Theodorick.

trei. For the same cause, the Tyrant Dionysius banished Dion the Syracusan, an excellent Captaine, who by the meanes of his banishment, became afterward so powerfull, that he restored his Countrey vnto her wonted libertie, and banished Dionysius from his gouernment, & wholly deprivied him: in like maner hapned it to Thrasybulus the Athenian Captaine, who being banished from Athens by the power of thirtie Tyrants, which helde it in subiection, he mustred together other banished men; and with the helpe of Lyfander, a Captaine of Lacedemon, returned to Athens, and deliuerd it from their flauish seruitude. Publius Rutilius, Consul of Rome, being banished by them that tooke part with illa, albeit he was afterward repealed from exile, yet would hee not yeeld thereto, but saide: I had rather do shame to my Countrey, than causeles banished mee, then to liue among them that consented to my exile. Tarquin the proud, though by no ingratitude, but rather for his wickednes, was banished out of Rome, and lost his kingdom, for the rape which his Sonne had committed on chaste Lucretse, a verie worthie Romain Lady. Milo the Romaine Patrician, by reason of the death of Clodius, albeit he was descended of Cicero, was relegated to Marselles.

10

20

30

40

50

I read, that Clisthenes was the first that deuised the Law of Ostracisme or banishment in Athens, and was himself the first man, that by the same law was banished. Also Eustachius Pamphilus, a Prelate of Antioche, was banished, because he contradicted the Arriani Heretickes, in the time of Constantine the great. Paulus Diaconus, a great Historiographer, and of especiall Authoritie, saith; that Pope Bennet the first was banished out of Rome by the Emperor Anthimus: for this Anthimus hauing vanquished the Emperor Berengarius, and Albert his Sonne, sent them also into perpetuall exile.

Thus you see, that manie woorthy persons haue beene banished, and yet exile was accounted in Rome so great a punishment, as no one could there bee banished, till first hee had consulted thereon with all the people. For in truth, the loue that a man beareth vnto his nation is so great, as hee cannot bee excluded thence, but to his extreme griefe and affliction. For the consolation of banished men, Plutarch wrote a singular

Dion banished by Dionysius.

Thrasybulus banished by 30 Tyrants.

Publius Rutilius banished from Rome.

Tarquinus Superbus banished Rome.

Milo the Patrician banished Rome.

Phalaris in his Epistles.

Eustachius Pamphilus banished.

Pope Bennet banished.

Berengarius & his son Albert sent into perpetuall exile.

Plutarch.
Erasmus.
Seneca in lib.
de Consolat.

Treatise, and Erasmus a very learned Epistle. Seneca also, in his Book of Comfort, directed to Paulinus, writeth woorthily thereon.

CHAP. XXIX.

Of two severall men, who being apprehended for Homicides, were neuerthelesse made Kings, and by those means which they supposed, wold be the losse of their lives.

He meanes wherby God ordereth and woorketh all things, are so secret to the immagination of men, as when they suspect the losse of some perticuler matter by one way, euen then they soonest finde and recouer it. So that, in whatsoever high estate a man is, let him make no certaine assurance thereof, nor yet distrust or fall into despair, if his aduersity be neuer so mighty, as may appeare plainly by two notable examples.

At what time Ladislaus raigned King in Bohemia and Hungaria, hee being the Sonne to King Aubert, young, and newly come to the Gouvernment of the kingdom, he was constrained (in that regard) to rule by the opinion of some of his chiefeft Barons, amongst whome, there happened contention and discords, especially, in the Sons to John Huniades Vayuod (Tutor to the King, who died a little before, and had held the most power or sway in the Realme) on the one side, and Henrie Count of Celia, neere Kinsman to the King, on the other. This enmity was so great, that on a day when the Count of Celia was in a Church, in one of the Citties of Hungary, hee was there slaine by the hands of those Sons, to the Lord John Huniades Vayuode, which is a name of great dignitie in that Kingdom. For the instant, the King made no shew of discontentment, because he knew him selfe not strong enough to chastice this presumption: but afterwardes, being returned to the Cittie of Buda, hee caused the Sonnes of Vayuode to bee apprehended; and the eldest of them being named Ladislaus, had his head smitten off. As for the other called Matthias, because he was verie young in yeares, hee spared to execute iustice on him: Neuerthelesse, hee was committed vnto prison, vnder good and sure guard, in the Realm of Bohemia.

The weaknesse of mans imaginations.

Ladislaus King of Hungaria and Bohemia.

The Count of Celia slaine in a Church.

Ladislaus, son to Vayuode, beheaded.

10 The youth being thus detained prisoner, without any hope of life, or to see anie end of his imprisonment, it hapned, that in the same Cittie, where hee was prisoner, named Prage in Bohemia, the King Ladislaus dyed; by meanes whereof, the people of Bohemia, elected a King called George Pogibrachio. The Hungarians (on the other side) beeing aduertised of their Kings death, and much moued with pittie to young Matthias, especially because of his Fathers former great Authoritie in the Kingdome, they proclaymed Matthias King of Hungary, although he was in the power of George, the newe King of Bohemia. When George had intelligence of their election, hee forthwith deliuered him; and vnto many royal kindnesse towards him, gaue him also his daughter in Marriage. Thus the poore despairing young Lorde, became in an instant a most potent King; & questionlesse, if he had not falne into this aduersitie, he had neuer attained vnto such greatnesse of State. Because some other then he, might haue bene elected; or his Brother Ladislaus (beeing the Elder, and not put to death) had preceeded him; or else, the Count of Celia (hauing escaped his murder) had hindered him, being so neere in Kindered to the King; onely respect and pittie of his imprisonment, was the sole cause of his aduancement.

The death of King Ladislaus.

Matthias being in prison, was proclaimed King of Hungary.

Whore Fortune fauouret, no contrary meanes preuenteth.

20 Thus hoirely expecting death, hee came to a Crown, and by the same meanes as such as haue it, do soonest loose it: prouing afterward, one of the worthiest Kinges in his time, obtaining manie famous victories, and performing admirable actions in Armes; especially against the Turkes.

30 The like fortun'd to Iaques de Lusignan, Vnckle to Peter, King of Cyprus: For, during the Feasting and solemnitie made for the Kings Corronation, a controuersie happened betweene the Genewaves and the Venetians there present, concerning their preferance, because each

The second History of Iaques de Lusignan.

The Venetians and Genewaves at contention

each of them contended about the chiefest place. And the matter was so obstinately debated on either side, that Iaques de Lusignam (who favoured the Venetians) caused some of the Genewages to be slaine. Whereof the rest being aduertised that were at Genes, they were so offended; that to reuenge this wrong, they raised a great Army, vnder the charge of a Captaine, named Pedro Fregoso, an excellent Warriour on the Sea. Hee ordered the matter in such sort, that beeing come to the Island, hee tooke the City by force of Armes, wherein was Iaques de Lusignam, who was also surprized & led to Genes, where (by appointment of the Senat) hee was shut vp in a strong Tower, with full purpose, that there hee should finish his daies. In this state, hee there continued for the space of nine years, not hoping of liberty, or any fauour else. But in the end, Fortune turning hir wheele, it chanced that K. Peter died without anie heire: by meanes whereof; they of the Island (sorrowing for the long detention of this Iaques in prison, & regarding that hee was neere Kinsman to their deceased Lord) elected him for their King, although hee was prisoner. Without which means of imprisonment, it may be, that hee had neuer come to such dignity, although he had got it by being at liberty, such are the wils and inclinations of men. After this election made by the Cypriots, they sent their Ambassadors to Genes, to the end, that with al the best conditions that might be, they should compasse the libertie of their King. Compositions being propounded, and his ransom paid, with great pompe and feasting hee was freed from captiuitie; & being magnificently brought to his ships, they set sail for Cyprus, where hee was welcomed as their king, crowned, obeyed, and raigned diuers yeares.

Iaques de Lusignam shut vp in prison.

Iaques de Lusignam elected King being then a prisoner at Genes.

Iaques cennaid from Genes to Cyprus.

CHAP. XXX.

A Paradox in defence of Hurts & Woundes, maintaining that the wounded man is in more happy estate, then hee which is whole and sound.

I Cannot well conceiue any reason, that should incite vs to such tender and delicate care of our bodies, seeing wee pretend to haue courage more hard then Iron, and lesse sensible then stones. Nor do I see any iust cause, why we should be so fearefull of wounds and stabs, seeing they can but pierce the Corset or false Coat of Defence, and no way hurt or offend the soule, which is the most Noble part of all, and can no way be iniured or wounded, but by our selues only in wicked cogitations, which are the blowes (indeede) that brings the greatest greefe, and most of all tormenteth a quiet settled spirit.

I haue many times smiled to my selfe; in noting such men, as haue wondered and complained verie grieuouly, when any of their friends and Kindered, were mortally wounded in diuers parts of their bodie: Neuer considering, that amongst all those wounds, but one only was fatall and deadly, for one bodie cannot indure many mortall wounds. So that if there be but one wound, that maketh the way open to death: it followeth of necessitie, that the other must be of lesse force, ordinarie harme; or (at the vttermost) void of any danger.

Iulius Caesar, had three and twentie woundes; notwithstanding, hee had but one onely, that tooke his life from him. I could gladly wish, that as manie men, as hate their members weakened or disabled, by hurts and Wounds, their pride of minde might thereby bee abated, and their swelling glorie made more coole and humble. The Princely Prophet, (in the Song of the blessed Virgin, and else-where of himselfe) singeth woonderfull sweetely: Thou Lorde, hast Humiliated the Pronde, euen as wee see him humbled, that hath beene well beaten or wounded.

For my part, whensoever I see anie one, that hath his Nose cut off, his head broken, or his body otherwise wounded; I neuer consider the wounde, but especially regard the matter and occasion thereof. For, as wee behold the faces of Valiant Soldiers and Captains commended, when in wars (for their Countries cause) they are cut, slasht, and mangled; which hurts are to them; as so many rich Diamonds or Rubies to adorn them withall: So on the contrary, they that are wounded in any base or bad quarrel, or dishonest enterprise, those hurts are the, as so many filthie

The soule is the most Noble part in man.

One mortall wound, is enough to expire life.

Iulius Caesar had three & twenty woundes.

Luke 1. 52.

Woundes the honourable badges of soldiers.

filthy spots, or staines of dirt vpon their faces.

Marcus Sergius maimed in Warre.

Marcus Sergius, fighting valiantly, and as became a man of worth; lost one of his handes. And when hee had caused another to bee forged of Steele for him: hee was rather a more famous Champion then before, no way appearing defective by his handes losse. This hath beene euermore, and yet may be obserued, in men of greatest dilligence and knowledge, that where Fortune granteth licence to hurt & wound; there Vertue her selfe is most pained and tormented. For we see it ordinarily happen to men, as it dooth to precious odours and the purest spices, which the more they are beaten and bruised; the sweeter sent and fauour they sende abroad, thereby expressing their more piercing and gracious power. And not to trouble yee with the Walnut, and other Trees; that by blowes and strokes do become the more fruitfull, as in like manner our wearing Garments, by brushing and beating are the better preferud. Euen so, when we see any man maimed, cut, or wounded, it giueth ample testimonie of his hearts greatnesse, as also of his vndoubted prowesse and Valiancy.

Vertue expresseth it self best by oppression.

To bee hurt through our owne wickednesse, is the greatest harm of all other.

Let vs confesse then, that it is not euill to bee hurt or mangled, in causes of Vertue & true honor: but let vs be heedfull of such cuttes and wounds, as come thorow our owne follies, or those badde stroakes, which proceed of wicked occasions; for they are much more daungerous to the soule, then those exterior hurts that happen vnto the body, by courage of heart, and valour of the minde. Because the inward wounds which ensue or are caused by our owne defectes, are truly such, as the Emplaysters and Medicines of the best Physitians and Chirurgions in the world, being applied to them, can neuer helpe, or soundly re-cure.

CHAP. XXXI.

Of the Crocodile, with a refutation of sundry Fables, which are found written, concerning the same Beast.

Know very well, that many men among vs, haue seene the stuffed skins of Crocodiles, & of great hugenessse, though not liuing. Of which Beast; I find some store of Fables to be written, which people (very peeuisly) haue beleued: wherefore, to take away those errors, I purpose in this chapter to confute them, according as I haue beene entrusted by many woorthy persons that haue made some long stay in those parts, wher the Beast it selfe abideth, who all (with one consent) haue confirmed what I finde faithfully Vvritten of the Crocodile.

This Beast is tearmed Amphibium, that implieth to liue partly in the Water, and partly on land. It is commonly credited, that Nilus onley, the Riuer of Egypt, is the perticuler breeding place. of this great and dreadfull creature. But how far this is from all truth, hath well beene obserued, since the Spaniards effected their long Navigations For the Riuer Ganges breedeth store of them; & many of them haue beene found in diuers partes of India, especially in those Islands, which are about the Cittie of Honorath, & in great Ethyopia, in the Lake of Zembera, and in the riuer of Darath, in the dition of great Negus or Necos: in which Lake and Riuer, the Crocodiles are much more cruell then those of Egypt; for if they can ouer-reach such as com to bath themselvs there, they hale them forthwith into the bottom of the water, and there deuoure them. As hapned (not long since) to a Gentleman of Portugal, who had two of his seruants deuoured, as they were bathing themselues in that Lake.

Leirus Vvriteth, in his Historie of America, that hee hath seene some little Crocodiles, onely of the length of two or three foote, and about the bignesse of a mans Thighe, which are no way cruell

Many Fables credited of the Crocodile.

Amphibium what it signifieth.

Crocodiles bred elsewhere then in Nilus.

Crocodiles more cruell then those in Egypt.

Of another kind of Crocodiles.

Linnus. in Hist. de Americ.

cruell or hurtfull; but so soon as the Brazilians haue taken them in the Riuer of Genebra, they giue them to their children to play withall, and they will do them no harme, albeit they haue Teeth, and can bite.

There are also of another kinde in the same Countrey, which keepe themselves in the Rockes, and will rush forth vpon Passengers, as well men as Beastes, and deuoure them: but if they stande vpon their owne defence, many times they flie away from them. He that hath written the generall Historie of the Indians, saith; That he hath seene some, neere or about Pauama, containing an hundred foote in length.

The Crocodile doth euerie way resemble (as well in his exterior, as inward parts) the Lizards liuing amongst vs. Many are found, to containe the length of sixe great strides of a man, and larger then three foote vpon the backe; beside others of lesser quantity. It is an horrible and fearefull sight, to beholde this monstrous Creature, for the passage of his Throate is so wide, that the head of a man may easily enter it. Hee hath Teeth, great, sharpe, and cleare, both aboue and beneath in his Iawes; and hee is onely saide (amongst all other Beastes, as yet euer hearde of) to moue the vpper-chap or Iaw.

Aristotle sayth, that he hath no tongue: but I my selfe haue seene both great and little Crocodiles, dead, and dried, in all which I found seuerally a tongue, but very short, flat, and large. There are no scales vpon his skinne, but it is like to the barke of a Tree, rising as embossed in many places; and it is so hard, that the point of a Pike, or Iron head of an Arrowe, cannot enter it; nay, it is saide, to be Harquebush prooffe. He is armed with verie sharpe and crooked Nails, his fore feete beeing very short; and yet runneth with great swiftnesse, when hee flyeth from such as stande not in feare of him.

It is not true, which some Authors haue Written, that this Beast keepeth himselfe in the day on the Land; & in the night in the water: For, it is quite contrary, and customarily he cometh forth of the Water, so soone as the Moone be- ginneth to shine, as is continuallie noted by them that dwell in those partes, as in Egypt, which is the nearest place of their being to vs.

Plinie, and Munster, the Germaine Cosmographer, following him, doo record another Iest, to wit: That there is an Island in Nilus, where men do mount on these Beastes, and ride them in like manner as on Horse-backe. For, when the Beast openeth his mouth to bite, the man clappes a Clubbe of Woodde in it thware-wise, and holdeth fast by cyther end of the saide Club; and so doth guide this furious Beast, whether himselfe pleaseth, euen as they ride a Horse for seruice in Spainie, with a Bridle: by which means, he is compelled to cast vppe such bodies as hee hath deuoured; to giue them better buriall: woulde any man wish for a more notable fable?

I cannot bee otherwise perswaded; but that if an hundred men stood in a ranke, and were well armed in the Riuer of Nile vp to the belly; or in anie other Riuer else-where, and did beholde but two such Crocodiles comming towards them, as I haue seene deade and dried; they woulde verie gladly betake themselves to flight, so exceeding hiddeous and dreadfull, are they to be seene in the Water.

It is certaine, that there is an Island; not farre off from Meroe, called (at this day) Cleomeny in Ethyopia, whereby Nilus passeth; and the people of this Isle, doo oppose themselves against the Crocodiles, with such wonderous boldnesse and courage, as they dare not (by anie meanes) tarrie their comming: but sending them by the smell (for this Beast hath that sense as subtle as a Dog) they flye speedily thereon, and will no longer abide.

Aristotle sayeth, that this Beast may be made tame, like vnto anie other beast of prey, for the benefite of eating his flesh: but I take this to bee meant of such as are young. As it happened in a part of Egypt, where Sacrifices were offered neere vnto Nile, & whereinto the Priests vsed to cast manie Bones; and other peeces of Flesh (which serued for no vse at all in their Sacrifices) and the Crocodiles woulde come to feede on them, not fearing anie men, and so became tame.

Strabo sayeth, that in the Cittie of Arsinoe, which is the Cittie of Crocodiles;

The error of Pliny & Munster.

The Authors opinion of the Crocodile.

People of whom Crocodiles stand in feare.

Crocodiles made tame.

The Crocodile is like to the Lizard.

The sight of a Crocodile verie dreadfull.

An error in Aristotle.

The Crocodiles skin of Harquebush prooffe.

The Crocodile is feareful.

Of the Crocodiles keeping in the water.

The Egyptians verie superstitious, taking Crocodiles to be Gods.

on Nile: there were some tame, and hallowed; to whome the Pilgrimes (which came in deuotion thither) would bring flesh, Bread, and Wine. One Priest, must open the Crocodiles mouth, and another put the foode into it; which being done, they afterward threw them into a Lake, which Nile had made neere to the Temple. The Egyptians (by perswasion of their Priests) beleued these beas-tes to be Goddesses, and diuers times suffered their Children to bee deuoured of them; not a little reioycing, that they did serue for food to their Gods.

Vpon a time, Demetrius the Macedonian, returning from pursuite of the Persians, his Armie being much disabled and destitute of meanes and money, passing thorough Egypt, after he had a while refreshed his men; he bethought himselfe, that seeing he had no money, hee would procure some from the Egyptians by a sleight. For, he well knowing, howe superstitious they had continued till then, in honouring those monstrous Crocodiles; he began to reprove them for it, assuring them, that they did great wrong to Iupiter and his Court, in honouring such horrid things. Wherefore, he had made a Vow to Iupiter, to reuenge this high iniury doone vnto him; and commanded his Souldiors to war vpon those Crocodile Gods.

Heereuppon, the fond and foolish Egyptians, made a generall and humble request to him, not to offer any wrong to their Goddesses; and they would giue him Garments and Money, wherewith to prouide his whole Armie. Whereto, he condescended, & limited them a time for payment of the Money. In the mean while his Army was well refreshed; and the promise being performed, he departed from them on his iourney. That they may be made tame, being young taken, is very credible; considering, that Serpents and Lizards are daily tamed, as may bee seene in many places.

The Crocodile is subtil and craftie in compassing his prey; for he rusheth on a man at vnawares, if he walk about Nilus, or any other place where hee swimmeth or haunteth. Some haue ouerthrowne Boats with their tailes (wherin they haue incredible strength) and so catching at men thus ouer turned in the Water, do there deuoure them. This they doo in the day time, & at night they com forth of the water; frequenting still those passages, wher they know any beasts to feed, be they wilde or domestike; or men trauailing thorow the Countrey, seazing on their feet with his teeth, and not with his clawes, because his strength in them will scarcely hold any thing. Thus hath Nature prouided for the life of this Beast, permitting him to moue his vpper Iawe, and not the neather, as no beast els doth the like: not any Fish or Beast can escape him, if either his pawes or teeth doe take hold on him.

There is not any Beast that I haue read of, which becommeth so great, of so smal a beginning, as the Crocodile: and al his actions are performed by the number of sixtie, for he hath sixtie teeth, and sixtie turning ioynts. At one time in the year, be continueth threescore dayes without feeding, and liueth no longer then sixtie yeares. The Female Crocodile layeth threescore Egges, in threescore dayes; and hatcheth them in other threescore dayes; by which time, they are hatched either on the banks of Nile, or any other Riuers where they resort, and her Egges are not greater then a Goose Egge. The Egyptians do affirme to this day, that a little before Selim (first of that name) besieged the great Cittie of Cayre, and tooke Egypt; for the space of eight daies together, a great number of these Crocodiles were seene, in all parts on the Bankes of Nile, and so thickely dispersed abroad in the fields, that whatsoeuer preyes they lighted on, they rent and tore with their long sharp teeth, as a presage of the mis-chiefe which befell to Egypt.

Elianus, and some other Authors do write, that the Crocodile filleth his Belly with the water of Nile; & hauing kept it so for some time, he casteth it vp again on some broad High way, and then goeth to hide himselfe not far off, breathing foorth a lamentable voice or noise, as if it were the murdering of some man.
But if any one (moued with pittie and compassion) come to see and lend succour, passing ouer that lubricke and slippery place where he vomitted the water, he falleth downe; and the subtil beast if-suing forth of his ambushment, easily de-uoureth him thus false vpon the ground.
How far this is estranged from any truth, is quickly discerned, because the Crocodile

The Crocodile moueth his vpper iaw as no Beast els doth.

The number of sixtie remarkeable in the Crocodile

The Egyptians presage of the Crocodile

Elianus, and other Authors concerning the Crocodile

A braue in-uention of a Soldier, wher by to get mo-nie of the Egyptians,

Prooue for taming Crocodiles.

The craft and subtilty of the Crocodile for his prey.

Aelianus and those Authors refuted.

dile hath no voyce at all. As also they write, that a man, beeing but toucht with a Feather of Ibis, a Bird belonging perticularly to Egypt; he remaineth immoueable, which euen is as false as the other. Thus hauing refuted these Fables, spread abroad of this monstrous Beast: I will end this Chapter, least the length thereof should proue offensive to the Reader; to write another, concerning mens endeouour, to rid the World of Crocodiles; as also to discourse of another Creature, vtter enemy to the Crocodile, and of his properties.

CHAP. XXXII.

Of some meanes obserued by Men, both to take and kill Crocodiles. And of Ichneumon, or the Rat of India, called Pharaohs Rat, deadly enemy to the Crocodile; And of his properties.

GOD, our Almighty Creator and Preseruer, by his great and wonted prouidence fore-seeing, that this monstrous Beast laboured to vsurnish the Riuer of Fishes, and the Land of Men and Cattle: gaue him an Enemy, to the end, that his multitude shall not so super-abound (beside the industry of men) but that great store of them might be destroyed. For the Aegyptians goe in the day time, (well armed and defenced) along the bancks of Nile, and seeke for the Egges of the Female; which they breake in peeces. They take also many of the young ones, especially Females, which then are not about the length of two foote, or sometimes lesse; and slaying off their skins, doe eat them, because they are very delicate meate. As for the greater Crocodiles, which are of more terrour, they can take them also without much labour, after any inuadation, or when the Arabes and Aegyptians perceiue the Water of Nile to decrease, as after an ouer-flow, and remaineth troubled, by reason of immundities, and washing the Land, couered with vncleanness. They then cast forth a long

An enemy giuen by God to the Crocodile.

Crocodiles very good meat to eate.

10 Cord, at the end whereof is fastned a hooke of Iron, large and strong, weighing about three poundes weight, and baited with a peece of Cammels flesh, or of any other Beast. When the Monster beholdeth the prey, immedi-
20 aly he leapeeth at it, and swalloweth it, and the Morfell (with the Hook) sticking fast in his throat: it would moue 30 much delight, to see what mountings he makes about Water. When the Beast is then taken, these barbarous people (by little and little) doe draw him to the Riuer side, and fastning the Cord about a Palme, or some other Tree; they hang him vp in the Ayre, as 40 fearing least hee should yet deuour them. Then with a Wooden Leauer they giue him many blowes on the belly, because it is the most soft and tender place about the Beast. Which being done, they flay off his skinne, and make
50 sale of his flesh: for it is excellent meat, and I my selfe haue eaten of it salted. As for the skinne, great sale of them is made to the Christian Maronites, Greekes, and Iewes, that dwell in Egypt: And beeing wrought or curried, they re-sell them to the Christian-Latines, that come thither for them, and bring them among vs.

As for the Beast before named, which God hath sent as an enemy to the Crocodile, and is no longer then a Cat, and as low, termed by our Elders Ichneumon: now a daies, that name is forgotten in Egypt, and it is called Pharaohs Rat, feeding on Serpents and Rats, killing all Dogges and Cats that it can 40 attaine vnto. The Aegyptians (by nourishing) haue made some of them tame, and it is one of the strongest and boldest beasts that is to be found, and sufficiently provided of vnderstanding. When this Beast is in the fields, he ceaseth not to sente, runne, and seeke about, where he can find the Crocodiles
50 Egges, to eate them. After his long quest, and finding them; hee eateth his fill of them, and breaketh all the rest in small pieces, that not any Crocodile may be hatched of them.

Sometimes hee lyes in waite, and watcheth so long, til he can espy a Crocodile lying along in the Sunne, with his belly vpward: for he obserueth his while behauiour, as an vsuall custome, onely

The Aegyptians cunning to take great Crocodiles.

Salte made of the flesh and skins of Crocodiles.

The Description of Pharaohs Rat and how hee seeketh for the Crocodiles Egges.

How Pharaohs rat surprizeth the Crocodile

while he sleepeth on the bankes of Nile, with his mouth wide open; to the end, that the Bird Trochilus (which is a very little Bird, and almost like to that which we call a Wren) may cleanse his teeth from the flesh sticking in them, or the knotted blood lying about thē. Which the Trochilus pecketh forth with his bill, hauing no other sustenance while hee liueth, and in this manner the Crocodile often sleepeth. This Ichneumon perceiuing, he steppeth vp on his belly, and byting and piercing it in three or 4. places; he enters in at those wounds, and so killeth him. This Beast hath such subtiltie in his doing it, and hideth himselfe so cunningly; that (albeit the Bird Trochilus hath a continuall watchfull eye, to giue warning to the Crocodile, least he should be hurt in his sleep, and therefore pecketh at the lids of his eyes to wake him;) yet notwithstanding this great care and loue, he is thus slaine before he can awake, and many of them are found dead in this manner vpon the shoares.

Ichneumon killeth the Crocodile cunningly.

The kind loue of the Bird Trochilus to the crocodile.

The false imagination of Herodotus.

Herodotus writeth, that this Rat of Pharaoh, enters in at the throat into the Crocodiles body, at such time as hee sleepeth, as hath formerly beene saide; where byting his entrails, and tearing the skinne of his belly, hee commeth forth thereat. But these are meere dreames, for I haue conferred with credible persons, that haue remained a long while in Ægypt; and they condemne this to be vtrerly false. Yet it is supposed by some, that because this little beast byteth the other by the belly, and will not let goe his hold, vntill hee be dead: that he enters in at the mouth, and issueth forth at the place of his byting, as being the tenderest part of all his body; neuerthelesse, the better iudgements doe hold this for a Fable.

A meere fiction of the Dolphins killing the crocodile.

Pliny, Appian, and Pausanias write, that the Dolphine hath certaine little wings or Finnes on his backe, as keene cutting as any Razor; where-with hee cutteth the Crocodiles belly in swimming, being soft and tender, and so killeth him. But these Allegations are fabulous likewise; for the Wings or Finnes on the Dolphins backe, are no way offensive, because I can assure ye, that I haue both seene and felt them. Beside, there are no Dolphins, or euer could any be seene, where the Crocodile haunteth. And although this Beast be so cruell and horrible, not onely towards other earthly and watery Creatures, but also to man: yet notwithstanding, in diuers and fundry parts of his body, are found many good remedies for especiall diseases. For beside that his flesh is verie nutritiue, and engendreth good blood: they that ordinarily vse it, shall neuer be tormented with the Gout, or Sciatica in the Hipples; and if they haue them before they vse it, yet it forthwith helpeth them. His Gaule put into the eyes, without all doubt, taketh away any Webbe or Cataract growing in them. His Grease or Fat is an especiall and singuler remedy, against all Ioynt-Agues, or other paines in the ioynts. The teeth of his right Iaw, bound about the Arme, dooth greatly prouoke the Act of Venerie: which the Ægyptians (to this day) make vse of, because they are much addicted thereto, and therefore do sell them at a deare rate. When any member of the body, is (for some defect) to be cut off; if it be annointed with the Ashes of his skinne in vineger, it so deadeth the sense, that the Patient shall not feele any paine. His Blood also greatly sharpneth the sight, and therefore the people of that Country, vnderstanding when any Crocodile is taken; doe speedily hast thither (I mean such as are bad sighted) to haue of it when he is newly kild, which they buy at a certaine appointed price, and bathing their eyes there-with, doe finde marueilous ease. The Hart of the Crocodile, wrapped in blacke Wooll pluckt from a blacke Sheepe, that was the first of his Damines eaning; cureth all Quartane Feauers. Ioell, a most famous Iew-Physicion, hath left written al these recited properties of the Crocodile; his dwelling was at Alexandria in Egypt, and the World beareth record of him, that he was a Man very deeply experienced in Physicke, and performed many singuler cures.

Many parts of the crocodile very soe-raigne for diuers diseases.

For the Gout and Sciatica.

For sore eyes.

For Ioynt-Agues.

For Venerie.

For dissection of some member.

For the eyesight.

For the Feuer Quartane.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXXIII.

Of strange accidents, which happened to a Prisoner, and by what meanes he was set at liberty.

Matters of admiration should not be ouer-lightly reported, nor haue I set downe any, which hath not bene certified by some faithfull Authour: as this now whereof I am to speake, recorded by Alexander of Alexandria, a man well skilled in the Sciences (as I haue formerly approued) who writeth this History for a certainty. He saith, that a in well knowne place of Italy (which he spareth to name, a Gouvernour ruled (whose name also he silenceth) that was a cruell Tyrant, and of fierce Nature. It fortun'd, that one of his people, had (by mischance) slaine a Grey-hound, which he highly esteemed, for which vnwilling offence, the Tyrant was so enraged against him; as he committed him to a strong and vn-fauoury Prison, lockt vp vnder many keies, and in very sure and safe custody. Some few daies after, he that had charge from the Gouvernour, to bring him his appointed allowance of sustenance, as daily he vsed to do; found all the doors fast and firme, as before he had left the: but looking in the place where the Prisoner vsed to sit, hee found him not there, yet all the Chaines and Bolts where with he was charged, were whole, sound, and not broken: This act being reputed a Miracle, was reported to the Gouvernour of the Cittie, who commanded al possible dilligence, with priuy searches from house to house, and yet no tydings could bee heard of him. And the case was accounted so much the more strange, because his Irons were ueyther filed nor broken: but remained intire in the Prison, euen as if the Prisoner had still worne them, the Prison and doores also not a jot impaired.

Three daies after, the doores remaining fast closed, euen as when the Prisoner

ner was there, and the Keepers little thinking thereon: they heard one cry in the same place, where the Prisoner was wont to be kept, and running in all halt thither, to see who it was that cryed, they found it to bee the Prisoner, who called for foode, and was as fast in his Irons as he had bene before; his face appearing very dreadfull, discoloured and wrinkled, his eyes sunke into his head, staring and wandring, and wholly resembling rather a dead Man, then one aliue. The laylers being not a little amazed heereat, demaunded where he had been; but he would make them no answer, except he might immediatly be brought before the Gouvernour: for he had much matter to say to him, and which concerned him very importantly. When the Gouvernour was acquainted there with, hee caused him to bee brought before him, in the presence of many others, before whom he would deliuer his charge. And recounting many wonderfull things, told the, that being in the obscure Prison, he fell into such despaire, that he called to the Deuill to helpe him, onely to deliuer him thence out of his misery. The Deuill came to him, in an euill fauoured and dreadfull shape, with whom hee made a complot, to be deliuered out of Prison: and no sooner had hee condiscended thereto, but he found himselfe presently to be in the Ayre, not knowing how, or by what meanes hee came thither. Suddenly he descended thence, thorough certaine horrible, tempestuous, obscure and tenebrous places, where he saw millions of millions of people, that suffred grieuous torments, both by fire, and otherwise, being tormented by an infinite number of Deuils. There did he see all sorts of people, both Kings, Popes, Dukes, Prelats, and many Men which hee perfectly knew. Hee gaue the Tyrant also perticularly to vnderstand, that in those frightfull Low-Countries, he saw a great Friend and companion of his, who demaunded tidings of him, concerning his life and manners, and whether he continued as cruell yet, as he was wont to bee. To whom the Prisoner said, he made answer, that the Gouvernour had not left his old behaviour, but rather fell from bad to worse. Whereon this friend

Alexander of Alexandria Authour of this discourse

A Prisoner strangely freed out of Prison.

The Prisoner found againe in the prison.

The speeches of the Prisoner to the gouernour.

The fearefull visions which the Prisoner beheld.

The prisoners words concerning the Gouernour.

friend requested the Prisoner, that when he should see the Governour next: hee would admonish him, to amend his life, not oppressing and vexing his subjects any more, with tributes and taxations, because (quoth this friend) I know full well that his place is already prepared in Hell, where he must be very grievously tormented, except he do quickly convert to amendment. And because he may the better credit my words, tell him from mee, that by vertue of this watch-word, which oftentime (in war) passed between him and me (and which Watch-word hee deliuered to the Prisoner) I wish him to beleue thee, and not to procrastinate his amendment.

All these things beeing heard, the Governour fell into a suddaine terrour and astonishment: for he was well assured, that none but God, his Friend, and himselfe onely, did know that Watch-word. Then demaunded he of the Prisoner, in what forme and habite hee found the Gentleman in that place? The Prisoner made answer, that he was in the same Garments, which he vsed to weare in this World, of Crimosine Sattin, and albeit his habite appeared to be such; yet was it laced and guarded with a terrible burning fire, and as I thought (quoth he) to touch it with my hand, to try whether it were fire or no: it burned my hand, as heere ye may behold. He spake of many other very fearefull things, to the great amazement and terrour of the Governour; who gaue the Prisoner present libertie, and sent him home to his house, where his Wife hardly knew him, or his Kinred cyther, by reason he looked so pale and meager. He liued some short while after, much troubled in his senses, weak, bare and poore, spending the remainder of his daies, in care for his Soules saluation, and true contrition for his sinnes. But what good this admonition wrought on the Governour; Alexander declareth not: but onely affirmeth the History to be true.

(* *)

CHAP. XXXIII.

That the Blood of a Bull, is death to such as drinke thereof; And who it was, that first tamed the Bull.

10 20 30 40
50
Eeing that the Bull is such a Domestick Creature, as his Fleshe is fed on, and the Beeues engendred by him, doe sustaine and nourish more then any other meates: me-thinkes it is quite contrary to nature, that his blood, separated from the flesh, and drunke when it is hot, should haue the power to procure a mans death. To approoue this true, Dioscorides and Pliny doe both say; that the fresh blood of a Bull is venomous, and killeth him that drinketh it. Plutarch writing of Mydas (euen hee of whom so many Histories and Fables doe make mention) saith; that beeing sicke of some fearefull imaginations, and waxing daily worse and worse, without finding any amendment: he determined to drinke the blood of a chafed Bull, wherof he dyed. It is written, that Themistocles the Athenian, a worthy Captaine, who defended Greece from the inuasions of Xerxes; being banished from his Countrey, went to the Court of King Artaxerxes, to whom (in anger and indignation conceiued against his Countrey) hee made promise, to enstruct him in the meanes of conquering all Greece. But when he was summoned by the King to keep his word: he chose rather to die, and in feigning a Sacrifice to the Goddesse Dyana; hee dranke the blood of a Bull, wherof he dyed instantlie, as is credibly affirmed by Plutarch.

The naturall reason which can be giuen, why the hot Blood of a Bull causeth the death of him that drinke it; is deliuered by Aristotle, Pliny, and Dioscorides, who say: That death ensueth thereby, because the blood of a Bull doth curdle, coagulate, and waxe hard immediatly; yea, much more sooner then the blood of any other Beast. So that attaining to some quantitie in the stomacke, it there congealeth, and procureth

A private watch-word sent to the Governour.

The Gentlemans apparel.

The Prisoner set at liberty by the Governour.

Dioscor in lib. 6
Plin in lib. 28.
Plutar in lib. de Superstit.

Plutar in vit. de Themist.

Arist. in lib. de Animal.
Plin in lib. 17.
Dioscor in lib. 6

cureth swooundings and suffocations, stopping the passages aspiratine and sensitive, by reason whereof sudden death enlueth. Pliny further saith, that Colewortes sodden in the blood of a Bull; doe prevent all opilations or obstructions. Thus we may perceine, that the blood of a Bull, is venomous of it selfe: but beeing in composition with some other thing, it is very medicinal.

Plin. in lib. 22.

Columella in his Agriculture

Plin. in lib. 22.

The first man that tamed the Bull. Diodor. Sic. in lib. 4. & c.

Plin. in lib. 7.

Vir. in Georgi.

The first Inuenter of husbandry.

Auldis King of Spaine.

Arist. in Lib. 3. de Animal.

Plin. in Lib. 9.

Man, to whom God hath subiected all thinges, deriveth great benefit and service from the Bull, and Cattle of his kinde: which is the cause, that Columella preferreth him before al other beasts. Beside, in former times it was great offence to kill a Bull; and Pliny reporteth, that a man was banished, because hee had kild one. The first Man that tooke in hand to tame a Bull, and make him doe service in the yoake; according to Diodorus, was named Denis, or Dionisius, the Sonne of Jupiter and Proserpina: but according to Pliny, in his seventh book, hee was named Briges, and a Natiue of Athens. Others doe maintaine, that it was Triptolemus, of whom it appeareth that Virgile spake, saying: The Infant Maister and inuenter of the curbed flesh. Seruius saith, that this to be vnderstood of Triptolemus, or of Osiris. I am of opinion, that Virgile couered the name of the inuenter of a labour so good and profitable: because (to speake vprightly) it could not be the inuention of one man onely; but contrariwise, the spirit of humane necessity found it out, so that some men inuented one part thereof, and others the rest.

In like manner, Trogus Pompeius saith, that Auldis, King of Spaine, was the first that tamed Bulles, and brought them to labour: but whosoever was the inuenter and actor, it was done very wel & profitably, for the life of Man. This Beast feedeth on the Grasse, contrary to all other, for hee continually draweth his food backward as he feedeth, and the other forward. Aristotle speaketh of certaine Bulles in Phrigia, whose Hornes doe not containe any strength of bone, neither grow but in the skinnie onely, and are as easily moued by them, as they doe their eares; Africanus maintaineth as much. The first that ranne with Bulls in Rome, and kild them; was Julius Caesar; whereof Pliny giueth testimony. This Beast hath another naturall qualitie: for he knoweth and Prognosticateth when it will raine, by smelling and bellowing wth the Ayre, and hiding himselfe more couertly then is accustomed.

The Bull a wizzard for weather.

20

20

30

40

50

CHAP. XXXV.

When was the first that established Religion in Rome, and ordained chiefe Byshoppes, Priests, and Vestall Virgines. In what manner they were put to death, when they were taken in Adulterie. Also, of their Vestiments, Vessels, and other Instruments, made for use of the Sacrifices.

In a former Chapter of old Rome, part of this Argument hath beene already handled, according to the description of M. Francesco Sansouino; what now further is to be said in this case, proceedeth from Anthony du Verdier, the Lord of Vaupriaz, not disallowing or finding fault with any thing before alledged: but rather as a supplement of some things wanting, and found more at large recorded in other Anthours. For all Histories are filled with the reuerence, which the ancient Romaines gaue to their prophane Gods, to whom they erected very sumptuous Temples; with institution of chiefe Byshops, and diuers Sacrifices. Numa Pompilius, second King of the Romaines, was the first that established Religion in Rome, with adoration of the Gods, and ordained many and sundrie Ceremonies for the honour of them. Himselfe would needs be the first high Byshop, which dignity was afterward referred to foure other persons; then to eyght, and at last to fiftene, which number was called the Colledge of Byshops. Ouer whom, as in place of greatest eminence, was appointed one of more notable race and authoritie then the rest, who was styled the great and chiefe Byshop, to whom all the other, and the King himselfe in the sacrifices,

The reason for this chapters addition.

Read Titus Livius in his first Booke, and Pintarch in the life of Numa Pompilius.

A chiefe Byshop appointed ouer the rest in Rome, and what his Office was.

fices, the Augures, Flamines, and Vestall Virgines, gaue obedience. He had super-intendencie ouer the Sacrifices and Ceremonies, and his Office was, to make new sollemne Prayers; to declare the daies of Feastes, and to what God ech day was dedicated: to keep registred in writing, the Annals or Histories of all notable thinges, which happened yearly; to iudge of matters concerning Religion; to punish the Vestall Virgines for any notorious delict; to repaire the Bridge, cald Sublicius, when it was broken, which Bridge was made of Wood, without any Iron or other Mettall, and accounted sacred; and this last charge gaue way to the name of Pontifex, as composed of these two Latine words, Pons & Facio.

Forty yeares after the building of Rome, Numa Pompilius erected a Temple to the Goddesse Vesta, forming it round, & men were forbidden entrance therinto: onely, choise was made of a number of Virgines, for seruice of the Goddesse Vesta. This word Vesta came from the Greekes, and was taken for fire, as Ouid saith in his sixt Booke ad Fest. and because the fire was called Virgin, these Virgines were appointed to the seruice of Vesta. And in regard also, that Fire engendreth nothing of it selfe: but no Image or Statue of her was placed in the Temple; because our Ancients tooke Vesta to be nothing else, but a Spirit and Diuine Fire, which could not be seene, but onely was to be conceiued in the vnderstanding. In this Temple was kept a perpetuall Fire, as they did the like at Athens, in the  Prytaneum*. And if thorow want of care, or negligence in any of the Virgines, the fire happened to be extinct; the cheefe Bishop caused the Virgine to be whipped with Rods: as did P. Licinius Crassus, being chiefe Byshop, according as Valerius Maximus writeth. And the fire being quenched, it was accounted prodigious, causing feare and terrour in the whole Senate and people of Rome: so that before they durst attempt any matter of consequence, they must needes expiate and appease their Goddesse, and to re-kinde the fire, it was done in this manner. The Vestall Nunne or Sister, tooke a Vessel of Copper, hauing three corners, and clearely shining, which she did set directly against the Sun beames, vntill the reuerberation of his mightie heat, should kinde the dry matter which was in the Vessel; and this being done, then she must carry the sacred fire, to the verie inner-most place of the Temple, and in this manner they vsed to kinde the Fire againe (being quenched) each yeare on the first day of March, in which Moneth they alwaies began the yeare among the Romans.

Some are of opinion, that these sacred matters of Vesta, was transported from Troy into the Land of the Latines, and from thence to Rome by Romulus. For which reason, some Authors do call Vesta Iliaca: but yet Numa Pompilius builded the Temple, in her honor, as I haue already saide. It was appointed, that these Virgines must be the Daughters of Free-men, not Slaues, Seruants, or of vile condition, perfect in all members of their bodies, and without any defect, light braind, or giddy headed. They were receiued into this Religion, from the age of sixe yeares, to ten, and aboue (as Labeo Antisthius and Aulus Gellius writeth) and after that they were become Vestalties; they must continue thirty yeares in virginity. In the ten latter yeares, they instructed young Sister-Nouices in the Sacrifices and Ceremonies. Neuerthelesse, after they had remained thirty years in the Temple: it was lawfull for them to depart thence, and marrie. But because it was perceiued, that much misfortune ensued to such as married: the most part of them remained in the Religion, to the ending of their daies. They were maintained by the publique Treasurie, and were chosen by the chiefe Byshop, onelie for their modesty, vertue, and exemption from any imperfection of body: by which chiefe Bishoppe they were admitted into the Religion, although it were without consent of their Fathers, if they themselues onelie consented: except they were the daughters of a high Byshop, of an Augure, of a Flamine, Dialis, or Quindecimuir; or a sounder on the Flutes to the Sacrifices; or one of the seauen Epulones, who were exempted, if they made refusall. As also no Maid could be compelled, whose Father had not three children, or more,

This Temple is at this day to be seene in Rome, neere vnto that of Ianus heard by Tyber.

Ouid in lib. 6. ad Fest.
Dionys. Halicarn. in Lib. 2 Diodor. in Antiquit.

*The councel house at Athens.

Valerius Maximus.
Strobo in Geograph.

How the Virgines re-kindled the Vestall fire when it was quenched.

The opinion of some Authors concerning Troy.

Labeo Antisthius. Aulus Gellius. lib. 1. cap. 1

When the Vestals might marry.

Aulus Gellius in lib. 1. cap. 12

or

or she whose Sister had formerlie been a Vestall. These Vestals could not succeed or inherit any goods, of him that dyed intestate, or had not made his Testament. In like maner, if they themselues deceased intestate, no man might plead to be their heire, but their goods went to publike vse.

The first Virgine that was admitted into this Mystery, was named Amata; which gaue occasion, that all the rest succeeding after her in that profession, were so called. For Aulus Gellius saith, when the chiefe Byshoppe receiued the Vestall Virgine from her Fathers hand: he would call her Amata, because the first Vestall Nunne had that name. She that was chiefe and principall among them, was tearmed Great Mistressse, and these Virgines were in great honour and reputation among the Romaines.

The wordes which the Bishop vsed, at the entertainment of any Vestall, are written in the first Booke of Fabius Pictor. To approoue this, Albinus, a Plebeian (as Titus Linius recordeth) meeting some of these Virgines, which had walked foorth of Rome on foote: descended both himselfe, his Wife, and Children from his Coach, to mount the Vestall Virgines therein, because they kept the perpetuall Fire in the Temple, the Palladium, and other holie thinges. The palladium, was the Image of Minerua, which Aeneas saued at the sacke of Troy, carrying it to Iliou, the chiefeest Fortresse in Troy: from whence hee brought it, with the great Goddess Penates, into Italie, and after the destruction of Alba the long, King Hosillius placed it in the Temple of Vesta.

When any of these Vestalles behaued themselues vnchastlie, or were taken in incestuous Whoredome, as were Porphiria, Minutia, Sextilia, Emilia, with their other Companions, and many more: they were put to death in this manner. First she was degraded, by taking off her Robes, and veile on hir head, and then laid on a Beere, whereto she was fast bound, with her face couered, and so carried (with wonderfull silence) through the midst of the Cittie, (which all the whole day was full of mourning) to the Port or Gate, called

* Salaria, neere to which Gate was a place, called, The wicked Fielde, where (expresly) a Sepulcher was made, vaulted in manner of a Caue vnder ground, hauing a little doore, and two little Windowes belonging to it: in the one of them stood a burning Lampe, and in the other, Water, Milke, and Hony. Being come to this place, the chiefe Bishop said some Prayers, with his hands heaued vp to Heanen, and afterward, they went in with the Beere at the little doore; while the people (then present) turned their faces a contrary way, not willing to behold so wofull a spectacle, whereof euery one had much compassion. So leaving the offender there entombed aliue, they returned with the empty Beere, and a great stone beeing rouled against the Graue doore, the people couered it ouer with earth, spending the rest of the day in griete and mourning.

The Temple of Vesta (by chance) afterward fell on fire, and L. Cecilius Metellus being chiefe Bishoppe, twice Consul, Dictatour, and Maister of the Horse, entred into it, and brought forth the Palladium, after it was halfe burned, with the losse of his owne eyes. Numa Pompilius created also three Priests, called Flamines: one in the honour of Iupiter; the second, of Mars; & the third, of Romulus Quirinus, wearing verie signal Robes, made much like to the Coapes, which Priests vse to wear in Churches; and round white Cappes vpon their heads, wherein stucke a branch of Olive, with a flock of wooll on the top thereof, and the Cappe must necessarilie be made of the Wooll of a Sheep, which was offered vnto Iupiter; and called Alba-Galera. Hee instituted also twelue other Sacerdotes or Priests, called Saly, in honour of Mars the Conquerour, Propugnator, Reuenger, and pacifier of all trifes. They were clothed with certaine fleuelesse Iackets, or painted Robes, and wore on their Breasts, Targets of Copper, enriched with Gold, Siluer, and precious stones. Religion so encreased among the Romaines afterward, and adoration of their Gods, that they exceeded thirty thousand in the number of them.

Pompilius did further augment the number

T t ber

* From the Sabines to Rome.

Seruius sup. lib. 2. de Aeneis.

Vestal virgins buried aliue for whoredome.

Ferretus lib. cap. 3.

The Flamines.

Priests called Saly, Priests of Mars.

Amata the first Vestal virgin.

Aulus Gellius in lib. 1. cap. 12

Titus Linius in lib. 10.

Of the Palladium. Read Dionysius, Halicanasus, Plutarch, and Quintus.

The order obserued by the Romaines, in punishing the Vestalles, when they committed whoredome.

Pater-Patrus Fecialis.
Epulones.
Augures.

* The Latines named it Alba Vestis.

Read Festus
Pompeius.
Præfericulum.

Patina, or Pa-
tera.
Achama.

Infula.

Acerrea.

Enclabris.

Enclabria.

Pausanias.
Secepsita.

Struppi. Verbe-
nes.

Aspergillum.

ber of Priests; to wit, the Pater-Patra- tus; the Fecialis; the Epulones, or Banqueters, and the Augures; who had such authoritie, as the Senate could not bee assembled without their permission.
And they were clothed with diuers vestiments, except when they performed the sacrifices: for then they all wore a like habite, which was a * Gowne or Albe of Linnen, large and long, which they girded to them with a Girdle, and this manner of Garment was called Cinctus Gabinus.

Moreover, they had many Instruments and Vessels made for vse in the Sacrifices, to wit; The Præfericulum, which was a Vessell of Brasse or Copper, without any handle, and broad as a Bason. The Patina, or Patera, was another Vessell, wherein the victimary emptied the blood of the Beast. The Achama was another little Vessell, in fashion of a Cup, and therein they tasted the wine of the Sacrifices. The Infula, was a veil of Linnen, which the Priestes and Sacrificers did weare on their heads. The Acerrea, or Acerra, was a little Chest or Coffer, wherein the Incense was kept.
That which had the name of Enclabris, was the Table where the sacred things remained: whereby the Vessels seruing for Sacrifice, were called Enclabria.
Thereon they laide the Sacrifice wide open, curiously to peruse his inward parts (to wit; the Hart, Lungs, and Liuer) with a Knife of Steele somewhat long, hauing a round Haft, made of Iuory, and obseruing the inward partes very diligently, to deriue from thence some diuination, as the Grecians also observed, according to the affirmation of Pausanias. The Secepsita, was the for-named knife, with a round haft of Iuory, and a Pommell garnished with Gold and Siluer, and nayled with Nails of Copper; and there-with the Sacrificer did cut the beasts throat, the Knife bee-ing so named, à secando. Struppi, were certaine bundles of Hearbes; tearmed Verbenes; as Laurell, Myrrhe, & Oliffe; accounted (by them) happy in all Sacrifices: which Hearbes they would wreath in Garlands, placing them on their Gods heads, and putting them in their eares. Aspergillum, was a branch of Hisop, which they dipped in water, that stood in a vessell of Marble, named

Labrum, placed at the entrance of their Temples; as the holy Water-pots now adaies vsed, & where-with they sprinkled all the people present. Suffibulum, or Subfibulum, was a white Veile, foure square and long, which the Vestall Vergines did weare on their heads, when they sacrificed. The ancient Romaines had many other Ceremonies, which I omit for breuities sake.

Labrum.

Suffibulum, or Subfibulum.

CHAP. XXXVI.

Of the Auncient manner of Marriages, as well among the Romaines, as diuers other Nations. What course the Romaines obserued in the repudiation of their wiues;
And who was the first that diuorced his Wife.

He very same honest excuse, which we pleaded in the beginning of our precedent chapter, must serue as our best buckler for this ensuing; because many points heerein, haue been before declared, as they were set down by Loys Guyon, Lord of Nauche.
And surely, I cannot hold it any offence to the Reader, to put him twice or thrice in minde of one and the same Argument; when worthy Authours doe enlarge the same, for his more ample satisfaction. List then what Pedro Mexia writes of ancient Marriages, and accept my pains, that (willingly) would not displease any man.

The cause
why this chapter is inserted.

The ancient Romaines obserued a custome, to decke the Woman when she married her Husband, in this manner.
First, they gaue her a Key in her hand, when she entred the House of her spouse: to signifie (saith Sextus Pompei- us) the facility of child-bearing. Or, which beareth a better vnderstanding, to let her know heereby; that the keeping and care of all Household matters, contained vnder that Key (as the house, administration and dispensation of all things therto belonging) were familiarly to her trust referred. Ouër the mans head, they held a Launce, quite pierced through the body with a Fencers Sword:

At a Maides marrying her Husband.

Sextus Pompei-us.

Sword: as signifying thereby, a readie punishment for violation of Marriage. Blondus saith, that she was girded with a Girdle, woven of Lambes Wooll; which her Husband taketh from her on the Marriage Bed. Vpon the Veile on her head (which they called Flammum, and she did weare in signe of good lucke, and that she should neuer be diuorced) was placed a garland of Verueine and other Hearbes intermingled, and this they crowned her withall; sitting on a Lamb or Sheeps skin: for no other cause (as I conceiue) but to set before her eyes, that she should alwayes haue Wooll neere her, to spinne her owne Garments. Festus Pompeius writeth, that when the Bride should goe to bee married, three Children (whose Fathers and Mothers were liuing) did beare her company. One carried a lighted Torch before her, made of the Hearb called Alba Spina, vulgarlie tearmed our Ladies Thistle (for they were married in the night time, as Plutarch saith in his Problemes:) and the other two Children went with her; one on the one side, and the other on the other. The Torch was carried lighted before her, in honor of Ceres; for as Ceres (who is held to be Mother of the Earth, and the Creator of all Fruites) nourisheth all mankind: euen so in like manner, the new married Bride, becoming Mother of the Familie; must haue care for nourishing of her Children. The like manner is yet obserued in many places, especially in England, that two Children (like Paranymphes) doe conduct the Bride to Church, and receiue (with her) holy Prayers and blessings among the Congregation. From thence, two Men do conduct her home againe, and the third youth (in stead of a flaming Torch) carryeth a Bride Cuppe of Gold or Silver.

Moreover, in the time of Marriage, the Romaines vsed oftentimes to name Thalassius, as the defender of Virginitie. Some hold it to be the Nuptiall Verie or Song; or else the God that governeth in marriage, called by the Greekes ἡμωαίος. But many speake diuerslie, of the reason why they make such acclamations in their Nuptials. Titus Livius and Plutarch, in the life of Romulus; saith, that among them which made stealth of the Virgins from the Sabines; some were found of slender quality, and yet they would be sure to seaze on such as surpasse the rest in wonder of beauty. And meeting some principall men of the Cittie by chance, they would haue taken the Virgines from them forcibly; and they had preuailed therein, had they not cryed out aloude (as they led them) to Thalassa, or Thalassius, who was a young man, much beloued and esteemed by euerie one. And when the other men heard, that it was for him whom they cryed; they were verie glad and ioyfull, commending them for expressing such affection towards him: so that as they accompanied them on the way, they would often-times turne backe, onely for the loue of Thalassius, with loud repetitiōs of his name. And thereon grew the Custome, that the Romaines sung at Weddings, the name of Thalassius, euen as the Greekes sung Hymeneus, as accounting it a happinesse to meet with a Wife.

Notwithstanding, there are others; of whom Varro is one, who alleageth, that this name was induced at Marriages to no other end: but to aduertise the new married couple, how they should thinke on labour and trauaile; especially the Woman to spinne. For they tearmed the litle Pannier or Basket of Oifiers, which held their Wool; Talassio, and the Latines called it by another name, as Calathus and Quasillus. Plutarch, in his Problemes, maketh this Vocable to descend from the Greekes, who tearme Wooll ταλάσιον. Moreover, the new espoused Woman hath three peeces of Money, which they call  Asses*, one whereof, she holdeth in her hand; and as if shee bought a man, shee giueth it to her Husband. Wherein may be noted the miserable condition of the Feminine Sexe; tyed to this hard Law, to bring great Riches with her, in getting a Husband: Wee giue good Wages to Varlets and Seruants, beside our large expences on their bellies: And Women, how faire soeuer they be, must bring to their husbands (whom wee may tearme their Maisters) a great Dowrie, which sometime exceedeth an hundred fold more; then the expences for their dyet and

T t 2 mainte-

Blond. in lib. 8. de Triumph. Rom.

Veruine tearmed holic Hearbe, or Iunoes teares.

Alba Spina, Our Ladies Thistle. Plut. in Proble. Plin. in lib. 10. Cap. 18. Where he speaketh of those torches

Thalassius the nuptiall song.

Fol. 34. A. Vird Tit. Livius in 1. lib. b. v. cont. Plutar. in vit. Romul.

Thalassius esteemed among the Romaines, as Hymeneus with the Greekes.

Marcus Varro.

Plutar. in Prob.

Fol. 86. A. Vird

 Suidas saith, that As was a piece of Money of Copper, containing the weight of a pound, & the value of foure deniers or pence among vs, or little more. It was taken also for another thing. See his learned Booke de Asses.*

Euripides in Medea.

maintenance; can amount vnto al their life time. Vpon which occasion, Euripides speaketh in his Medea, to this effect. Of all things produced by the Earth, that hath a vegetant and sensible Soule; there is nothing which surmounteth a woman in misery. She must haue great goods, wherewith to buy her a Husband; that must be the Maister of her body.

Poore vertue is poorely prized in these daies.

If the Maiden be poore, though of neuer so good and vertuous behaviour; small account is made of her, except to purchase her honour at a cheap rate: for shee may tarry a long time before she be maryed, vnlesse it be with one as poore as her selfe. Because Auarice reigneth so commaundingly; that rich Men couet to haue Wiues richer then themselues. Which Saint John Chrysostome seemeth to touch, saying. He that purposeth to marrie a Wife, doth hee enquire of her good manners, or education of the Maide he secketh after? Truelie no, but rather soundly to informe himselfe, what plentie of Gold and Siluer shee hath, and the bottome of her Inheritances, and valuation of her moouables. He questioneth very curiously after these thinges, euen as if hee would make a bargaine or exchange.

S. Ioan. Chrysost. in Homil. 74. sup. Math.

Of the other two peeces of Money.

The new married Wife carryeth another peece of the fore-named Money in hir stocking (Festus Pompeius saith, in her shoe) and then layes it on the Chimny-harth, where the Laues and familiar Gods doe resort. The third, she putteth in a Purse hanging by her side, opening and shutting it at euery streets corner. This was obserued as an ancient Law among the Romaines, and Boetius Seuerinus, in his Commentarie on the Topickes of Cicero, declareth another sollemnity of ciuill Law, vsed by them also, and whereby both the Man and Woman did interchangeably buy and purchase the others affection, which was tearmed Coemptio, and performed in this manner. The Man and Woman did interogate together, hee demanding of her; If she would bee Mother of his Family? Whereto shee answered; Yea, and then further demanded of him: Will you be Father of the Family? He replied; He nould. This done, they ioyned their right handes together, and kissed each the other. * And then the new troth-plighted Husband, gaue a Ring

Boetius Seuerinus in Comment sup. Topic. Ciccr.

* Read Tertulian, in his Booke of vei-of Gold to his new elected wife, in signe of earnest, and as a testimony of mutual dilection, or else, that by this gadge, their harts might be conioyned. This Ring, Tertullian in his Book of womens ornaments, tearmeth Pronubus: And it was put by her Husband on her fourth finger, meaning the next to her little finger, on her left hand. Because, saith Isidore, in regard of the Diuine Offices therein contained, there is in that finger a veine or nerue of blood, extraordinarily tender, which goeth and extendeth directly to the hart. The selfe-same reason is giuen by Aulus Gellius, following the opinion of Appian, and Atteius Capito: wherefore both the ancient Greeks and Romaines, in wearing the Ring on that finger of the left hand, did account it to be Phisicall. Pliny also testifieth, that (in his time) they had a custome, to send a Ring of Iron to the intended Bride, without any stone therein enchased. The Asirians took their daughters (which were marriageable) with the to the Markets, where men bought them, to enioy them in marriage. The Babylonians did the like. And the people of Thrace (as Herodotus writeth in his Terpsichore) did by their wiues (as a great price) of their Parents.

The Greekes in elder times, did buy their wiues together; and the same did the Indians. Iphidamas, the Son of Antenor (according as Homer writeth in the second Book of his Iliads) gaue an hundred Oxen to his Father in Law, vpon condition, that he would giue him his Daughter in marriage. The ancient Allemaignes, saith Petrus Crintus, brought dowries with them to their wiues; but their wiues not any to them. We haue Women now adades, that cause themselues to be well bought, for before their affianced friend can enioy her to his mind, or the first nights nuptials be nere hand; there is more spent in iewels, toyes, habits, and feastes, then halfe a good dowry amounteth vnto. So that, if restitution should take place, by death of the husband; the sum of the dowrie would be augmented aboute the moity; yea, to a third part (as we tearme it) in right of the wiues suruiuing; for so it hath been couenanted in marriage contracts: Thus we see a woman to be well bought. The people of * Taxila in India, could ling virgines. And in his Apologies, Chap. 6.

Pronubus annulus.

Isidor in lib. 2. Cap. 15.

Aulus Gellius. Appian. Atteius Capito.

Plin. in lib. 3. Cap. 2.

Aelianus in li. 4. Stobaeus Ser. 42. Herodot. in Terpsico.

Strabo in li. 15. Arist. in Polit. Lib. 2. cap. 6.

Homer. in Lib. 2. de Iliad.

Pet. Crint. in Lib. 12. cap. 8.

* A great City in India, betweene the Riuer Indus and Hydaspes.

could neuer enjoy any such happinesse as these men, to receiue Money with such Wines as they tooke in marriage: but contrariwise, they were glad, and feigne to furnish them. If pouerty be the hindrance of any maid, and no man will accept or giue her entertainment: then, in the floure of her youth, shee is brought into an open Market (as Horses to a common Faire) with sound of Trumpets and Clarions, and the people beeing assembled about the Maide, her backe partes are discouered vp so high as her Shoulders, and afterward, the like is done before. And if shee be found to be comely, well featured in all her members, and fit to content a Man; immediatlie shee shall haue a Husband. The like we haue formerly declared in the Custome of Carthage.

Plato, in the sixt Booke of his lawes, would haue none to bee deceiued in marriage: but that all ignorance being auoided, each Man might know, on whom he bestoweth his Daughter, and of what honest race eyther side is descended. For which cause, hee thought it conuenient, that sports and assemblies of young Boyes and Girles should bee permitted, hauing their bodies naked so farre, as modest shame might suffer: to the end, that by conuenable reason of that age, they should see each other; and bee seene in imperfection, or comlinesse of stature. For my part, I doe not allow of this opinion, neyther would I counsell young Maides or Weomen, to suffer themselves be nakedly seene of Men. For, as K. Gyges, the Son of Dastylus, speaketh in Herodot. ἡμεῖς δὲ χιτῶν ἐκὼν ὁμοίως σκεπόμεθα τῆς καὶ τῆς ἀνδρῶν, That is to say; The Woman that puts off her Smock, doth in like manner put off all shame and modesty. Which saying S. Hierome approueth, against Iouinian, and likewise Clemens Alexandrinus, in the second Book of Pedagogie; and Saint Cyprian consenteth with them, in his Booke of Virgines Habites, saying. The honour and shame of the bodie, are both together in the Garments couerture. And in another place of the same Booke; he findes himselfe much offended with women; that putting off their Garments; would goe naked into the Bathes and Stoues. Blondus writeth in his first chapter; That the feare of shame, may wel proue sufficient to cut off a Contract, although there be no feare of death, or torment: As if a man should despoile a woman, threatening to cast her forth starke naked.

But let vs leaue this, and pursue our purpose, concerning Customes in marriages of diuers Nations: and then returne againe to our Romaine Spouse, whom we haue left (I feare) too long. The Namasones, a people of Lybia, had a strange Custome, to cause the Bride (the first night of her Nuptials) to lye with all the Guestes, and thence forward, to keepe perpetuall chastity. The Anthropophages, Medes, and some of the Aethiopians, resort to their Mothers and Sisters when they are marryed. The Arabes make a Wife common to all the Kinred. The Numidians, Moores, Egyptians, Hebrues, Persians, Garamants, Parthyans, and almost all the Barbarians, haue each Man as many Wiues, as hee is able to maintaine; someten, and others more. The Athenians made their Wiues and Children common, and (like brute beasts) wallowed in all kinds of luxuries.

In Scotland it was sometime obserued as a Custome, that the Lord of the Soyle should haue the Brides Maiden head, before her Husband: which vnworthy dealing in any Christian Man, was abolished by Malcolme the third, King of Scotland, a very famous Prince; and deceased in the yeare 1090. And he ordained, that the new marryed couple, for redemption of their pudicitie, should pay to the Lords of the places, a peny of Gold, which (I heare) is yet to this day obserued. I should forbear to say; it is no long time since, that diuers Lords; yea, some of Ecclesiasticall order, held a right by auncient Custome, to lay one Legge naked in the Bed, on the first night of the Brides marriage; but some say; that the Leg was armed. And there was one man, who would needes exceede the limits of his duty, & abuse his priuiledge through his vnbridled lubricity, so that (with the price of his life) the custome was lost: But returne wet now to our first intention.

Before the new married Bride entred into her Husbands house; shee announ-Baldus sup Leg. interpositas C. de transact.

Herod. in Lib. 4.

Strabo in Lib. 16 de Geograph.

Herod. in lib. 6.

Strabo in lib. 15 de Geograph. A custome obserued in Scotland.

A Custome among some Ecclesiasticall persons.

Strabo in li. 15 de Geograph.

Plato in lib. 6. de Legib.

For auoiding of all ignorance on eyther side in marriage.

Herodot. in lib. Fol. 38. A. Verd

S Hierom. in li. 1. cont. Iouinian

Clem. Alexand. in Pedag. Lib. 2 Cap. 9. S. Cyprian in lib de Hab Virg.

P'm in lib. 28. cap. Seruius in lib. 4 de Aenead. Donatus sup. Scen. 2. Com. Terent. vocat. Hecyra. Polyd. Virgil. Isidor Etymolog Lib. 9. cap. ult. Sceno lib penult F de donat. int. vir.

Sext. Pompeius

Marc. Varro in lib. de lingu. Lat.

Of the Elements Fire and Water.

Oaths made vpon fire and water.

ted the doore thereof with a kinde of Lard: Pliny saith, the Grease of a wolfe; but Seruius saith, it was a certaine Oyle, to signifie thereby, that she chased away all annoyances. Donatus saith, that the name of Vxor, came first Ab vngendis postibus. And Polydore Virgill saith: Vnde ab vngendo Vxor dicta, quasi Vuxor. Afterward, the new Bride was presented at the doore, with Water and Fire, and she must touch both of them; according as the Lawyer Scenola maketh mention.

Sextus Pompeius giueth a reason, wherefore this Ceremonie was thus performed. The new married Wife, (saith he) was washed with Water, to shew, that she came pure and chaste to her Husband. Or else, that she participated with him in Fire and Water, two principall Elements, without which, the Creation of Man could not consist. I should inferre heereby, that the reason of this fire and water so presented to the Bride, implied thus much: Fire was to moue the carnall appetite of her Husband, and water to quench it. I will set downe the words of Varro, in his fourth Booke of the Lattine tongue, where he giueth another very good reason, as followeth. Igitur causam nascendi, duplex, aqua & ignis: Ideo ea in nuptijs in limine adhibebantur, quod coniungit. Hinc & mos ignis, quod ibi semen: aqua femina, quod factus ab eius humore & eorum coniunctione sumit Venus. Assuredly, when moysture and heat are tempered together, all thinges doe receiue original by the. For although fire be repugnant to water; yet the humide and moyst vapour createth all things, and their discordant agreement is proper to all generation: for one of them is as the Masculine Element, and the other Feminine; the one the actiue, the other the passiue. Hereupon, in Antiquity, when nuptiall alliances were instituted; they were approued by oaths sollemnely made on fire and water, because all creatures do receiue body and soule, by heat and moysture in their generation, and liue by them. For euerie beast is formed of a soule and body: the matter of the body consisting in moysture, and that of the soule in heat. As appeareth by the Egges of Fowles, which by reason of grosse humours, (whereof they are full) cannot be reduced into a body; and the body can haue no soule, if heat do not work his operation.

Moreouer, the Bride did not enter on her feete into her Husbands house; but was carried in: as declaring, that shee went not willinglie, but by constraint, to the place where she was to loose her virginity. The Romaines also would not marry in the Month of May, reputed it to bee vnfortunate for marriage, whereon there arose an auncient Proverb; Mense Maio nubunt male: Bad people marry in the Month of May. Whereon Ouid, in the fift of his Fastus, saith; Mense malas Maio nubere vulgus ait. There are some, that now in these daies do superstitiously make scruple, to marry in that Month, and only (as they say) to be free from iealousie, whereon I see no reason grounded. But happily it may be, that they haue heard by their predecessours, that the most part of Men and Women then obserued (by such as were married in the moneith of May) to agree badly together, and came (in the end) to diuorce or repudiation, which was in vse among the Romaines.

The Romaines had three severall kinds of separation in mariage. The first they called Repudiation; which was done by the Man, against the will of the Woman. And the first Man that thus repudiated his wife, was Spurius Caruilus, in the year after the building of Rome, sine hundred twenty three, because she was barren, and bare him no Children. Caius Sulpitius repudiated his wife, because she went out of his house, with her haire about her eares, and no veile on her head. Quintus Antisthius did the like to his wife; because she had bene seene to conferre secretly, with a woman a Libertine. P. Sempronius took offence; because his Wife was seene at publique spectacles, without his knowledge. And C. Caesar repudiated Pompeia, onely thorow siue suspition he had of Clodius, who was found in the habite of a woman among Ladies, at the Celebration of the sollemnitie for Bona Dea.

The second manner, was called Diuorce, and this was done with the consent of them both, and to either of the it was permitted to require it. But among the Hebrues, it was not lawful for a man

The Bride carried into her husbands house.

Frasin. Chilia. 1. Centur. 4.

The moneth of May vnfortunate for Marriage.

Three Kindes of separation among the Romaines. Dionys. Halicar. in lib. 2. Plutar. in vit. de Numa, cit. in An. 230. The first that repudiated their Wiues.

The second kind of separation, called Diuorce.

Deut. 24, 1.

S Hierom vp-on the matter of Diuorce.

Ioseph. in lib de
Antiq. 4 chap. 8

Math. 19, 8.

The thirde kinde, called Dirception.

man to leaue his wife. Moyfes, who was the first Author of Diuorce, appointed it so, for the reason deliuered by S. Hierom. Moyfes (saith he) seeing many of the Iewes mouued to Auarice: some for Domesticke disquietnesse, and other for Whoredome tormented their wiues, yea, oftentimes did put them to death, with intent to take other newe wiues; either richer, fairer, or younger then they. To remedy which euill, power was giuen them, to be diuorced from their first Wiues, with condition, that the Husband should giue his wife a Bill of Diuorce, to stand for hir warrant and security. To which Bill (saith Iosephus) the husband was then to write these wordes following: I PROMISE NEVER TO TAKE THEE MORE. And this was thus doone, because the Woman might marrie with another, and hee haue like power to seeke another Wife, for otherwise Diuorce might not be graunted.

Thus you see, that by the permission of Moyfes, and not his expresse commandement, Diuorce began at first amongst the Iewes. Iesus Christ giueth Testimony both of the one and other, in the nineteenth Chapter of Saint Matthewe, speaking thus to the Pharises: What God hath conioyned, let no man sepearat; adding a little after, Moyfes, because of the hardnes of your heart, suffered to put away your wiues, but from the beginning it was not so. He saith, for their hardnesse of heart, because they were cruell to their wiues, whom not to loue, was most hard & inhumaine. Neuerthelesse, Iesus Christ did not reiect Diuorce, so it were doone only for the cause of Whoredome and Adultery.

The third manner, was tearmed Dirception; for which, there was allowed separation in Marriage; and this was done according to the Princes will: whereof I purpose to speake more amply elsewhere, for I doubt I haue stood too long on this matter of marriages.

CHAP. XXXVII.

How manie Armies the Romain Emperours kept, and in what places.

I cannot varrie much from our purpose, to speake in this Chapter, of the Romain Armies, and the places of their abiding: as also of their name and number: to the end, that al the World may know the powerful strength of the Romaine Empire, while shee feasted in hir Royall Triumphs, which was from the time of Augustus, till Constantine transported the empire into the East. Whosoever shall duely consider Romes strength, and how many Prouinces were subiected to her, will account it no wonder that the Romains had two and twentie compleate Armies, and great store of people belonging to each one of them: For it requireth (saith Vlpian) a great number of armed men, if we intend to giue it the name of an Armie, because one or two Companies, make not an Army, but a great many conioyned together.

The first that was saide to be a double Armie, remained in the lower Mysia. That which was tearmed the Augustone Armie, abode in Scotia: The Galatian, in Phoenicia, now called Caramania. The Cyrenaicone, in Arabia; and another Augustane Armie in Numidia. The Flavian and Scythian in Soria, otherwise cald Numantia, in Spain. The Macedonian in Valachia. The conquering and victorious armie, in England. The Claudians, in Seruis and Bosnia. The Iron or rough Armie, being called the tenth, in Iudea. Another tenth, in Allemaigne or Germanie. Another Claudian, in Transsylvania. Another double Armie in Dacia: and the T wines in Pannonia. The dreadfull and Thundering Armie, in Egypt. The Apollonian in Cappadocia. The Valerian and second vanquishing Armie, in Bretaine. There was also another armie alwayes at Rome, for guard of the Emperour. And these were the two and twentie Armies, which the Romains kept continually, for the Defence of their Prouinces: to the end, that they

The time of Romes triumphs.

The name of Exercitus, cam of exercising a mans selfe.
Quia excedo fit melior (saith Varro and Vegetius lib. 2 ca.
23) Ab exerci-tio Exercitus nomen accipit.

The places of the Romain seuerall Armies.

10

20

30

40

50

they might be ready at all seasons for the appeasing of tumults & seditions whensoever they happened.

The number of men, Elephants, and Chariots, in the Romaine Armies

The Romaines had also in the fore-named Armies (acording as Appian writeth) two hundred thousand foot-men, and fortie thousand Horse-men, three hundred Elephants made apt for warre, and two thousand ready-furnished Chariots, beside three hundred thousand Armors for store-prouision. And their armie by Sea, consisted of two thousande Shippes, and fiftene hundred Gallies, from two to five Oares on a side. And beside these, they had eight hundred great ships, called Thalomegos, only for pomp, and to carrie the Emperors Golden and rich furnitures, in their prowes & pompes. They had likely sundrie military ensignes; as the Wolfe, the Minotaur, the little Horse, the wilde Boare, with many other beside: But the Eagle was the proper and principall Ensigne of the Romaines.

Their Armie by Sea.

Their Ensignes or Standards.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

Whether the Romaines did generally speake Latine, or no; Or whither they hadde two seueral Languages.

At the end, that we may not stand in doubt of the thing, which (in my iudgement) is plaine and euident enough, we will deliuer the testimonie of Cicero, who in the thirde Booke of his Orator, saith; The Romaines had a certaine, proper, & singuler Language in their Citty. Which he prooueth by the example of Lelia his Mother in law, who spake in such maner, as they that heard hir, imagined that they vnderstoode Plautus, or Neuius speaking, her phrase seemed so like vnto theirs. But, because no man should thinke, that Lelia had learned another Language, to wit, Latine; and yet knew a contrary, to wit, her Mother tongue, which she had (from her Cradle) naturally learned in the house, he saith a little after; There was no man maruelled,

Cic. in lib. 3. de Orat.

Lelia Ciceroes Mother in Law.

Cicero vbi sup.

that an Oratour spake Latine. For, if he did otherwise, they wold haue mockt him. And in the first Booke of his Tusculanes. The frequent assembly (saith he) in the Theater where were Women and Children, were moued, hearing so rich a phrase. Whereby it appeareth, that one only Language, & namely Latine, had beene, and was then common to all the Romaines, considering that Children and Women knewe the Latine tongue.

Cicero in lib. 1. ad Tuscul.

Neuerthelesse, he was expert in learning, that knew how to chuse his words, and waigh them by direct Iudgement of hearing, which no man could do, without Learning. For, all the Romaines speake Latine, but all knew it not by letters and Learning, as is manifest by Testimony of the saide Cicero, introducing Titus Pomponius, who (in his Brutus) hee maketh to speake thus: Thou seest the Latine tongue corrected, whereof such as haue beene commended, neuer had knowledge, by reason or science, but as it were by Custome. And a little after he addeth, I being a young Childe, haue seen Titus Flaminus, who was Consul with Q. Metellus to bee thought to speake Latine well: and yet notwithstanding he knew not the letters.

Concerning Iudgement & Learning.

Cicero in Tit. Pomp ad Brut.

Any man then may be freed from doubt heerein, considering that the Prince of Eloquence speaketh it.

And there was no other difference, but that which is likewise amongst vs at this day, to wit; that the Inhabitants of Rome spake more eloquently, then those that dwelt abroad. And in regard, that the Language is nowe otherwise in Rome, then in times past (speaking Italian, insted of Latine, and yet not so good vulgar as at Florence) it was occasioned by barbarous people and Nations; as the Goths and Vandales; and others; who gayning heeretofore ouermuch dominion in Italy, did likewise corrupt the language which then was in vse. So that by little and little, and by course of time; Antiquitie (by the frequentation of straungers; and corruption of manners) hath bin quite perverted and changed, and noueltie induced. But most true it is, that it is easy to discern their Originall of the Latine, The like peruertion and alteration, few Nations in the World, but haue as well felt, retaining very little, or none at all, of their prime Tongue and Language, which

The reason for the difference and alteration of the language.

Other countries Languages altered.

which they then enjoyed: and therefore, Romes change deserueth the lesse meruaile.

CHAP. XXXIX.

How necessarie Water is for the life of man: Of the excellency of this Element: and the meanes how to know good & wholesome Waters.

It plainly appeareth that there is not anie thing more necessary for the life of mā, then Water. For sometimes, when bread wanteth, a man may nourish himselfe with flesh, and other Viands. If fire faile him, hee findeth so many other things to feede on raw, as he may wel liue diuers years without fire. But let there be no water to be had, and then neither man, or anie creature else, is able to liue. There is no herb, or any kinde of plant, which can produce seed or fruite, without water: for al thinges haue neede of it, and must receyue moisture. This is so true, that Thales Mylesius, and likewise Hesiodus conceyued, that water was the beginning of all thinges, and the most ancient of all the Elements, as also the most potent. For, as Pliny and Isidore (in like manner) do say; Water both moisteneth and ruinateth great Mountaines, gooerneth the earth, quenchem fire, and conuerting it self into vapors, passeth thorough the ayres regions, whence afterwards it descendeth, to engender and product all things in the earth.

Likewise, God made such especiall esteeme of Water, that hauing resolued to regenerate man by Baptisme, hee ordained it to be done by the means of this Element. And when he diuided the waters in the beginning of the worlde, hee held it in such account, that the text saith, He placed the Waters aboue the Firmament of Heauen, without comprehending them that circuited the Earth. The verie greatest torment which the Romans inflicted on condemned persons, was interdiction from water and fire, preferring Water before Fire, as worthy of the highest degree and eminencie.

Seeing then, that water is so needfull for the life of man, we ought (with heedfull care) to seeke out the best: to which purpose, I will set downe some especiall properties thereof, alledged as wel by Vitruuius; as Aristotle, Plinie, and Dioscorides, with diuers other, that write of the election of waters.

The first instruction is, that if a man trauaile into straunge Countreyes, and would knowe, if the Waters there bee good and wholesome for him, and to carie with him elsewhere, according to his necessitie, let him obserue and note the rounde Neighbouring places, vnto the Welles, Springs, or Riuers; as also what the life and disposition is, of the people there inhabiting. Whither they be healthfull, strong, and well coloured in their faces, without any defects in their eies and legges; for such men do testifie the goodnesse of the water, and also the contrary if it be bad. But if the water bee newlie or lately found, whereby this experiment must needs faile, then there are other proofes to be made.

Let him take a Brazen Bason, verie cleanly scoured, and sprinkle some drops of the water (whereof he would make triall) therein: if after the water droppes be dried, no blemish appeare in the Bason by those droppes, it is a manifest signe of the waters goodnesse and puritie. This is also another good prooffe; to boil som of the water in the same Bason, and then suffer it quietly to stand and coole; then when it is emptied forth, if there appear no slime or sand in the bottome, it may be called excellent good; and of both the waters, that which hath the least slime is the better. In those Vesselles or other things, where any Graine is sodden, to make Brothes or Pottages; as Oatmeale, Pease, or any other Pulse, the best Water is that which seetheth them soonest.

To deliuer a sound and certain iudgment in waters, there must be good consideration vsed, concerning the places whence they haue their source; whether the ground be sandie, neate, and cleare, or whither it be muddy, troubled, & foule: likewise, if Ruishes, or other bad and pestiferous Herbes, doo grow thereabout.

The Romans denied water to condemned people.

Vitruuius in li. de Architect. Arist in Proble.

Seuerale experiments to be made of Water.

Waters goodnes approved by boyling.

For sound and infallible iudgment in Waters.

Water, the chiefe thing for support of life.

Plin. in lib: 2. cap. 4. Isidor. de Etym. lib. 3.

The regeneration of man by Water.

Genes: 1;7.

But

But the best and surest way, and to avoid drinking of an vncertain water, or where any doubt is made, is to seeth it with a soft fire, and then let it coole.

Plin. in Lib. 4. Cap. 2.

The reason for drinking boyled water.

Sodden water is not windie or swelling.

Well-water, not so wholesome as other water.

Lakes and Ponds haue the worst water.

The South-waters worse then them of the North.

Pliny saith, that the Emperor Nero caused Water to be so boyled and then cooled it in Snow, glorifying himself for finding out such an inuention. Now, the reason why boyled water is most holsom, is, because the water which we drinke, is not simple in his own Nature, but is mingled with the Earth and Aire. And by the fire, the windy part is exhaled, and resul-teth into smoake. The earthy part also, by Nature of the fire (which is to refine and seperate diuersity of natures) descendeth to the inferiour place, and there abideth; by meanes whereof, sodden water is the lesse enflating or swelling, because the windy part (which it hadde in the begin-ning) is wholly euaporated. It is also more light and subtle, by being purified from his earthy part; and therefore, the more easie to bee kept and preserued: so that it cooleth & moisteneth competently, without any obstructing or alteration. Whereby is perfectly knowne, that the water of Welles is not so good as other water, because it pertaketh most of the earth, and is no way purified, by the suns warme visitation, which makes it the apter for corruption. Notwithstanding, the more water we draw forth of the Well, the lesse hurtfull it is, because the conti-nuall motion hindereth the ordinary cor-ruption, which commeth to enclosed waters, and that haue no course. And then Nature sendeth new and fresh wa-ter in such measure, as present draught is made of that so lately sent. For this cause, the waters of standing Lakes and Ponds, is the worst of al other: for through want of course & current, it corrupteth it self, engendering euill things, and oftentimes infecting the ayre, causing diuers disea-ses thereabout.

It is further to be considered, that wa-ters that haue their course towards the South, are not so good as they that run towards the North; because in the Sou-therne quarter, the Ayre is much mingled with Vapors and Humidities which hurt the waters, and greatly endamage them. But in the Northern parts, the aire is more subtle, and lesse moist, whereby it swelles not the Waters, neither troubles them so much. In regard whereof, the water which is clearest, lightest, subtilest, and most purified, is the best; because (as we haue already said) it is lesse intermed- led with other Elements; and beside, be- ing neere to the fire, it rather heateth it then the other.

An experi- mental proof of two waters

It is also a singuler prooffe of two wa- ters, to obserue which of them wil be the soonest warmed by one & the same fire, & in like space of time: for they are both arguments of the most subtle and pene- trating substance. And because the mix- ture of the earth among the water, dooth argue his waightines, it is good to make election of the lightest Water, which may bee experimented in this manner. Take two pieces of Linnen cloath, which are of equall poise, and steepe the one in the one water, and the other in the other, till they bee thorowly soaked; then take them forth, and hang them in the Ayre, where the Sun (by no means) may come to them; and when they are drie, weigh them againe, and the piece which waigh- eth heauiest, wil declare which is the hea- uiest water. Some vse to waigh these wa- ters, in vesselles verie cleane and neat, & that are of an equall waight.

A triall of the lighnesse or, waight of wa- ter.

Aristotle and Pliny doo say, that the greatest cause which diuersifieth the qua- litie of waters, proceedeth from the sub- stance of the earth, from stones, trees, and Minerals, and Mettals; thorow which, Riuers and streames make their passage. In regard whereof, some do becom hot, others cold; som sweet, and others salt: for it is a most certaine rule, that the wa- ter which hath neither sauour nor odor, is alwayes knowne to be the best VWater. All such as haue written on this Argu- ment, doo maintaine; that that VWater which passeth thorow Mines of Gold, is the best water. And to approoue this, the most notable and excellent Riuers in the world, are such as engender and conserue Gold in their thin and fine sands. But be- cause we are elsewhere to discourse per- ticularly of the properties of some riuers and other waters, I meane now to wade into no further examples.

Arist. in Lib. 3. de Animal. Plin. in Lib. 22.

Waters pas- sing through Mines of gold

Seeing then, that we haue spoken of the waters of Riuers, VVells, and Foun- taines; reason requireth, that we should say somewhat concerning Raine-water, which is praised by some, and blamed by others. Vitruuius, Columella; and some Physitions, doo highly commend Raine- water

Of Rain-wa- ter.

Vitruuius in li.
de Architect.
Columella in Agricul.

The reason of raine-waters corruption.

Raine-water purelie taken and kept, lasteth lōg time

Plin. in lib. 32,
cap. 3.

Answers made by Pliny to the former reasons.

Against the impuritie of Raine-water.

water, when it falleth pure and clear. For (say they) it is light and not mixtured, because it commeth from the vapor, which by his great subtilty, is mounted into the Ayres Region; and therefore, it is to be credited, that heauie and waighty water remaineth in the earth. And albeit some say, that the water descending from heauen, corrupteth immediately, as wee behold in Fishponds, that engender a thousand filthes: yet it is not therefore to be saide, that this ensueth by defect in the water; but rather, because it is stayed in such a place, where Muddes, Infections, and other Vncleanlinesses are met together. And partly, by some filthinesse which it bringeth with it selfe, washing the ground as it passeth along, when as it raigneth in great abundance. Therefore, the cause of his sudden corruption proceedeth from hence; that it is subtle and delicate; and by meanes of the Sunnes heate, and humiditie of the water, being commixed with many Ordures. Neuerthelesse, if this water being subtle, purged and cleared, were gathered as it falleth from the couerture of verie clean houses, or else as it falleth from Heauen, passing thorow the ayre, without touching anie thing, and so conueyed into as clean vessels, it would be better then the other, and coude preserue it selfe for longer time.

There are some other Authors, who hold a contrarie opinion, and namelic; Pliny. He saith, It is so vniuersall that no man should drinke of it, because the vapors from whence it commeth, do proceed of many things, and by diuers wayes; whereby, it receiueth store of different qualities, as well such as are euil, as them that be good. And in deliuering other reasons, he answereth to them which we haue aledged, & saith: That the prooffe is not sufficient to say it is good, in shewing it to be the more light, by being drawne from the Region of the Aire; for such enaporations are exhaled alofte, by a secret vioience of the Sun. And that also, by the same reason, it is a vapour likewise, wherby hard Hail-stones are formed in the Ayre: which water is pestiferous; and so is Snow water. Hee saith moreouer, That Raine water (beside his other defects) infecteth it selfe by the heate and vapour of the earth, euen then when it raigneth: & to encrease his impuritie, it sufficeth to see, how quickly it putrifeth and corrupteth; where- of true experiment is made on the Sea, wher such water cannot be conserued: and therefore Wels and Cesternes are reprobued. Vpon all these opinions, euerie man deliuereth his owne, according as appeareth best to his owne iudgement. But as for mee, I affect Raine-water lesse then the other, although it be more necessarie. And Pliny who blames it, yet saith; That Fishes doo fatten in Pondes, Lakes, and Riues; and when it raineth, they are then best; because they haue need of the water of heauen. Theophrastus saith, That Garden Hearbes, and all other beside, beeing watered by neuer so much abundance of water, do not so plentifully encrease, as by Raine-water. In the like manner, Plinie speaketh of Reedes; that neede the water of heauen for their encrease. And Aristotle also, speaking on the abounding and encrease of Fishes.

Plin. 32. ca. 3.

Theophrastus.

CHAP. XL.

By what meanes a good quantitie of sweete and fresh Water, may be had out of the Sea. Why cold Water maketh a greater noise in his fall, then hot Water. And whither a Ship be of heauier weight on Salt water, then on fresh water.

30

40

50

Aristotle and Plinie do both aduise vs, for to make sundrie vesselles of waxe, hollow within; binding them so strongly, as possible may be, and free from any cracke, hole, or vent. So putting them into Nettes, or some such like matter, well fastened with long Cords, let them down into the sea, and keepe them there the space of a whol day. This being done, to draw them vp againe; and when yee open each of the Vesselles, ye shall find a good quantitie of fresh water, in each one of them, as sweet as anie in the riuer. The reason why salt water thus becommeth fresh & sweet entering thorow these vesselles of wax, is rendered by Aristotle, for hee saith; That wax being sweet and delicate, the Water penetrateth it, and the subtle part of the Sea water passing through it, sweetneth it self, leaving the earthie part which it hadde, in the superficies of the Wax.

Arist in Lib. de Animal.
Pl. lib. 32. cap. 4

Arist. ubi supra

In

vessels of wax make salt water fresh and sweet.

In verie truth, if this be true. (I say if it be true, because I my self neuer yet made experiment of this secret) it may do great seruice, in diuers necessities, which doo ordinarily happen. Notwithstanding; methinkes, that if salt water will become sweet, by entering into vessels of waxe, it should likewise become sweete; by softe trilling or gliding into wax, wherof such Vesselles may bee made, like vnto those which we haue of stone, to take away the saltnesse of the water. For, by the same reason, these things doe tend to one and the selfesame effect, although there may appeare some difference; by entering into empty vessels, and coming forth of full vessels, because there is an apparance of much greater force and violence; in coming forth of a full Vessell; neuertheless, the curious questionist may trie both the one and other.

An experiment of hot water & cold.

Yet, in kinde affection to such, as are delighted in like singuler experiences, I will disclose another thing wel worth the knowledge. Take two Bottelles, which are of equall opening and measure, and fill them with water, the one boyling, & the other cold: afterwards, emptie them both together, and the colde water will issue forth sooner then the hot, and make the more lowde and greater noise in his fall, then the hot water, which falls more deafely, and with lesse strength. The reason is, because hote water is lighter then the cold, for that by the heate of the fire, it is more euapored. Likewise, at the beginning of the cold waters issuing foorth of the vessell, the hindmost part striueth to be foremost, so that waightincesse is the cause, that cold water issueth forth sooner then hot, & maketh the greater noise in his fall, then the other can do.

Hot water lighter then cold.

This is the reason deliuered by Aristotle, who likewise telleth vs another thing, which wee beholde daily, to wit; that a Ship beareth much heavier charging on the Sea, then on fresh Water, because the water of the Sea is more grosse and thicke, and beareth on her bosome anie thing whatsoever, in much greater weight, then any fresh Water is able to do, which is more subtle. To approue the truth heereof, experience maketh daily demonstration. For, if a man cast an Egge into a fresh Water Riuer, immediately it sinketh vnto the bottome: but, throwe it into Salte Water, or the Sea,

A ship beareth a waigh-tier burden on the Sea, then on anie fresh Riuer.

and it floateth alofte thereof, and cannot sinke.

CHAP. XLI.

The Reason why all Creatures haue as many feete on the one side, as on the other:
And on which side, they first beginne to go, and for what cause.

Who soeuer hath duely considered, the order of Gate or going in al kind of creatures; hath also obserued, that their feete are numbered by paires, as well in those of two feet, as of foure, and more. It is likewise to be further noted, that they are in such manner diuided to them, as the one halfe is on the one side, and the rest on the other. The reason whereof, seemeth to proceed from some secret in Nature, and whereof I purpose to discourse, according to the opinion of the most sprightly, & best iudging Phylosophers. Among all which graue men, Aristotle handleth the manner of their common going, and maketh a disputation therof in his Problems. But for our better vnderstanding, we must presuppose, that the motion of all creatures, is composed of rest and trauaile: for to mooue one part, requireth to haue the other firme and in quiet; and afterwards it mooueth also; so that our motion in gate or going, appeareth to bee the one footes rest, while other marcheth: which is a rule most certaine and necessarie, except in leaping, which is formed by the whole body, without requiring the managing of the feet, ech after other. Why then it folleweh necessarily, that when one part or side of the feet do repose and rest themselues, the other mooneth; and afterward rest againe, while the other do aduance their march; and by this course the feete haue their motion alternatiuely.

10
20 30 40
50

All creatures
haue their feet by pairs.

Arist. in Probl.

The order of motion in all creatures.

Of Leaping.

One foote is not sufficient in any creature, neither a third foote.

To performe then this motion, there is necessarily required more then one foote; and beside, that they must be alike in number, that is to say, either two, or foure, or more, because in hauing three feete, the gate of going had not well bin ordered, ordered, or equall; for when two hadde mooued themselues, the third (of necessitie) must haue carried the whole burthen. And for the very same reason, all creatures, howe many feete soeuer they haue, either two, foure, or more; are numbered by paires; and they haue the one halfe on the one side of the body, & the other on the other side; to the ende, that the more orderly all the two partes may moue themselues in equal number, and in the manner of their trauaile. As we may obserue in Bees, Flies, & Beetles, which haue fixe feete: and likewise in other Vermine, some that haue forty, and others an hundred, yet are equally deuided by halues on either side. And albeit, that in these creatures hauing so many feete, inequality would appear insupportable: yet by auoyding of such confusion, Nature thus appointed them, for the more perfection.

It is also a matter most notable and memorable, which learned Aristotle hath determined in those Books before alledged. Hee saith, That Men, and all other kinde of Beasts or Creatures, doo euermore begin their motion on the right side, whereof wee haue verie euident experience in all things that we do. He that prepareth himselfe to runne a race, dooth alwayes set his left foot formost, to the end, that he may beginne to runne with the right foote, and so to proceed on in his course. If a man do beare any weightie thing, ordinarily he carrieth it on the left arme, or on the left side; because the right part of the bodie may be at libertie, to go on the more lightly. Whereby we discern, that when a man would moue himselfe to do any thing, except it be for some expresse cause, or by reason of a known inconuenience and hinderance, the first part of the bodie directed forward, is the leste, but the right hath the rule and preheminnence.

Likewise, we may behold, when a man would go about anie thing, hee turneth alwayes to the left side, to haue his right arme at full scope and libertie. If he be Dauncing, he turneth with his right arm toward the left. And in mounting on Hors-back, or on any other thing, wherein vse is required of the hands helpe: the right part is still the readiest, both in any mannuall work or motion, in mounting aloft, although a man do put his left foot into the stirrop, and hold by the left hand on the Saddles Pommell, to cast himself into the Saddle. So then wee perceyue; that these kinds of motion are in the left hand; but the right hand is the only chiefe guide and conductor.

Observation of turning, dancing, and mounting on horsebacke.

Bees, Flies, & Beetles haue six feet.

Arist. in Probl.

Motion in mē and Beastes, beginne th on the right side.

10

20

30

V. v

The End of the Fift Booke.

Faint, illegible text in the upper left quadrant of the page, possibly bleed-through from the reverse side.

Faint, illegible text in the upper right quadrant of the page, possibly bleed-through from the reverse side.

The End of the List Books

The Sixt Booke.

CHAP. I.

Of the Kingdome of Fez: Of the Lawes, Customes, and Manners therein obserued, with a true Description of the Common wealth.

Because the kingdome of Fez is great, as beeing the chiefest in all Barbarie, and the Cittie verie notable in his lawes and orders: I am the more willing to make a perticuler Description therof, not thinking that it can be vnthankfully taken: because it is the true food of man, to hear and know the most famous thinges which are in the world.

FEZ, is a verie great Cittie, engirt with high and goodly wals, and is (as it were) wholly Mountainy and Hilly. so that the middest onely of the Cittie is plain, but the fourth part thereof (as I haue saide) is all hillie. By two wayes the Water enters into the Cittie, because the Riuer deuideth it selfe into two partes: the one passeth besides new Fez, which is on the South part, and the other runneth vnto the West. As the Water makes his entrance into the Cit-

A description of Fez.

Of the Waters entrance into the City.

tie, it parteth it selfe into manie Channelles, which runne (for the most part) to the Cittizens Houses, and Courtiers Dwellings belonging to the King, and to diuers other Houses; as also, to all the temples, euery Oratory hauing his part of the Water, as the Innes, Hospitalles, and Colledges haue the like.

10 Neere to the Temples or Churches, are certain Houses of necessary vse, made after a foure-square manner, with little Chambers built rounde about in them, each hauing his feuerall doore for entrance: And in euerie one of them, is a Well-spring; which water issuing from the walles, falleth into certaine Channells of Marble; making an indifferent noyse with the fall; and running thence thorow those needfull houses, conuayeth all the filthinesse of the Cittie into the Riuer. 20 In the middest of these Houses is a lowe Well spring, about some three yardes in depth, foure in bredth, and twelue in length; about which, are diuers Channelles, wherein the water runneth, and passeth along vnder the houses; the whol number of these houses are an hundred and fiftie.

Houses of office in the open City.

30 The houses of dwelling in the Citie, are of Bricke and Stone, verie formallie builded, and the most part of them verie goodlie, beeing beautifed with Stone-woorke of variable Colours. The doores in like manner, are pauered with Bricke, and the Porches with Anticke Tyles of diuers Colours; like vnto the Dishes of China.

The manner or building their houses in the Cittie.

The toppes of the houses are painted with curious Vorkmanship, and costly Colours, as with Golde and Azure; the roofes

The height of their houses.

roofes being made flat like Tables, and plaine, for more commodious covering the whole house, with faire extended painted cloaths, and to sleepe in during the Summer season. Almost all the houses do consist of two Stories of height, & some of three, with sundrie Terrasses curiously framed, which do greatly adorne them, and serue as passages from Chamber to chamber vnder the rooffe, because the midst of the house is wide open, and the Lodgings are deuided, some on the one side, and some on the other. The Doors of the Chambers are made large and high, and men of what quality soeuer, haue their Chambers entrance formed of costly Woodde, verie curioullie Carued.

The Porches and Portal of their houses.

Each Chamber hath his Presse or Cupbord, verie fair and cunningly painted, of conuenient length to the Chambers largeness, which serue as VVardrobes for their best and costliest things. All the Portals of these houses, are made vpon Collumbes of paving stone, and beautified (well-neere half) with painted earth, like to that of China. Some also are mounted on Pillers of Marble, made with Arches, raised from one Collumbe to another, all couered with artificiall Checkie Stone-woorke: and the Transomes that are alofte on the Pillers, and do support (as it were) the severall Stories, are of VVood, Carued with ingenious labour, and colours of most curious painting.

Houses for preseruation
of Water.

There are also great store of Houses, made purposely for the pure preseruation of water, much like vnto our Conduites, made foure square, containing six or seauen yards in bredth, tenne in length, and about twelue in depth, all couered and bricked verie artificially. In the length of some of them, diuers pretty low fountains are made, appearing verie fayre to sight, and composed of the foresaid China stufte: in the midst whereof, are large Vessels of Marble, such as wee see in our Fountains of Europe. As these Fountains do fill themselves, the ouer-flowe of water is conuaid to the houses of preseruing water, couertly: and when those houses are full, it is likewise thence-carried by other priuate Water-courses, that neighbor to those preseruing houses, and haue their fall by little made wayes; and passing vnder the Houses of necessarie

Well Springs
& Fountaines

For conueyance of water thorough the City.

vse, runne with quicke streame into the Riuer.

On their houses, they haue Turrets or Towers, wherein are diuers apte and well adorned Chambers: in which Turrets, the women do most bestowe themselves, when they are wearied with their Household affaires, for out of those Turrets, they may suruey the whole City. Of Temples and Moschaes, there are about seauen hundred, and these are their places of Prayer. Fiftie of those Temples are very great, very well built, and beautified with Pillers of Marble, and other seemly Ornaments. Each of them hath a goodly fountaine, made of pure Marble, and other faire stones, not scene in Italy; and all the Collumbes haue curious Tribunes of Checky woorke vpon them, or Tables very ingeniously ingraued. The tops of the Temples are like to them in Europe, and couered accordingly, and the pauements in the Temples, are all couered with Mats, artificially made, and so cunningly ioyned together, as not a iot of the Floore can be seen. The wals are likewise couered with such Mats, but of no more heighth then the stature of a man. In each of these temples there is a Turret, wherinto such men go, as haue the charge to cry & proclaim the house appointed for ordinary praier. There is no more but one Priest belonging to each Temple, to whome appertaineth the Office of Prayer, and care of entrance into the Temple, to wit; Dilligently to keepe the accounts, to disperse to the Ministers of the said Temple, such as do light the Lampes by night, and the Porters of the doors; also, those Officers that haue the charge to cry (in the night time) on the Tower or Turret, and declare the houres of Prayer: because they that cry in the day time, haue not any wages, but is freed from all tenths and payments whatsoever.

In the City, there is a principal Temple, which is called the Temple of Caruen, and it is a very great Temple, containing in circuit a mile and a halfe; and it hath one and thirtie gates each one verie high: the couerture is an hundred & fifty Tustane yards in length, and little lesse in bredth then fourescore. The Tower wherin the Crier standeth, is likewise very high; and the couering or feeling in length, is sustained vpon 38. Arches, and

Turrets of pleasure in the houses.

Temples and Moschaes.

Fountains belonging to the Temples.

The Pauements & wals of the Temples.

Turrets in the Temples.

The Priest of the Temple.

The Crier in the Tower or Turret.

The great Temple of Caruen, & the Tower thereof

Store-houſes for the Oyle, Lampes, and Mats.

in bredth vpon twenty. Round about it, to wit, Eaſtward, Weſtward, & Northward, are certaine Porches, each beeing thirty cubits wide, and fortie in length. Vnder theſe Porches, are diuers Store-houſes, wherein are kept the Oyle, Lampes, and Mats, with al other things of neceſſarie uſe for the Temple: wherein are nine hundred Lampſ nightly lighted, becauſe euery Arch hath his Lampe, eſpecially thoſe Arches in order, which paſſe through the bodie of the Temple; and they only haue an hundred & fifty lampſ, in which rank alſo are diuers other great Luminaries, all made of braſſe. There are places for a thouſand and five hundred Lampſ, all which were made of Bels, wonne from diuers Citties of the Chriſtians, by the Kings of Fez.

The Pulpits and Readings in the temple

In the Temple, and as fixed to the walles, are Pulpits of all qualities, wherein many Learned Maſters do read to the people, matters concerning their Faith, and of the ſpirituall Lawes. They begin a little after the breake of day, and finiſh at the firſt houre in the day. In the Summer time they read not, but after the four and twenty houre, and their Readings do continue for an houre and an halfe in the night. And they read not only the faculties and Morrall Sciences; but thoſe ſpirituall alſo, according to the Lawe of Mahomet. The Readings in Summer, are perſourmed by none but by certaine priuate men, and none may reade, but ſuch men as are expert in the Lawes, and euerie one hath good and ample Wages for his Lectures, beſide their Bookes and Lights freely brought them. The Prieſt of this Temple, hath no other charge but to ſay Prayers: yet hee may take care of the mony and prouiſion which is offered in the Temple for young Children, and be Steward of ſuch guiſtes, as are left at the Gates entrances for the poor; as mony and Corne, which at euerie Feaſt is imparted vnto all the poore of the Cittie; to ſome more, and to ſome leſſe; according to the quallitie of their Family.

The Summer Readings.

The Prieſtes charge of the Temple.

He that taketh the Office on him, as Collector or Receiuer for the entrance Money of the Temple, hath a ſeperate office, and for his owne prouiſion, hath a Ducate each day allowed him, and fixe men to attend him, that gather the Rent Money of the Houſes, Shoppes, and

The collector or Receiuer of Temple.
mony

10

20

30

40

50

other profite, and each of theſe is allowed five in the hundred. He hath alſo about ſom twentie Factors, whoſe charge is to goe abroad, to make prouiſion for daily Labourers, ſuch as Delue in the grounds, looke to the Vines, and woorke in Gardens, and ſuch like offices, whoſe wages may amount vnto three Ducates, each man (monthly) of thoſe twenty. About a mile out of the Cittie, are ſome twenty Furnaces, where Lime is made, and as many more, for Bricke and other neceſſary furniture, for the buildings and poſſeſſions of the Temple, as alſo of the Temple it ſelfe, whoſe allowance is two hundred Ducats daily, but more is ſpent (by the halfe) in the fore-named occaſions. Beſide, thoſe Temples and Mofchaes that haue no reuennewes, are furniſhed from this Temple in manie things. And if any ouer-plus of benefits doo remaine, they are ſpent to common vtilitie of the Cittie, becauſe many poore Commoners haue little other benefit. And moſt true it is, that lately in our daies, the king cauſed great ſummes of money, to bee lent to the Prieſt of the Temple for theſe uſes, which as yet were neuer repayed backe againe.

In this Cittie, are two Colledges of Schollers, verie fairely builded, with manie Ornaments of embossed workes, and Carued Tranſomes, couered with fine Slates, and ſupported with goodlye Marble Pillers. In each of theſe Colledges, are manie Chambers, amounting to an hundered and more, all builded by diuers Kinges of the Houſe of Mari-no.

One of them is (in trueth) verie admirable, both for Greatneſſe and beautie, which was cauſed to bee builded by the King Abu Henon, hauing a verie rare and goodly Fountaine in it of Marble, the Bowle beeing able to containe two Tunnes of Water; and when it ouerfloweth, it paſſeth like a little Riuer in a faire Channell, the bottome whereof, is Paved with Marble, and diuers other Checky coloured ſtones.

In this Colledge, are three faire Galleries, with Beddes in them, verie coſtly couered, and round encompassed with pillers, fashioned into eight Cantons of diuers Colours, and ſo made faſt vnto the Walles. And on the heade of euerie Collumbe, are Arches bowing from

Twentie Fac-torſ and their wages.

Furnaces and Killes out of the Cittie.

The great Temples daily allowance.

Colledges in the Cittie of Schollers.

One Colledg
builded by K.
Abu Henon.

The height of the Colledge wals.

The Colledge Gates.

The Kinges viewe of the Colledge building.

Part of the building charges.

The allowances of readers

Former allowance for scholars.

from one to another, adorned with Pinnacles of strange moduling, embellished with Balles of Gold and Azure. The walles about the Colledge are no higher, then a man (standing close by) may reach with his hand, and thoroughout made al of Checquerd stone. And round about on the Walles, are Verses written, containing the yeare when the Colledge was built, and praises of the place and Founder; who was the King Abu Hengir: the Letters being grossely engraued, and in Blacke Carraeters on a White Field, for the better sight and reading farre off. The Colledge Gates are of Brasse, verie artificially and ingeniously Wrought, and each Chamber doore, of costly carued wood.

In the great Hall, where Orations are made, is a Pulpit, hauing nine steps or stair es vp to it, made of Iuory and Ebonie, almost myraculous to beholde. When the Colledge was finished, the King would see the Booke of his charges; and hauing not ouer-viewed the left part of the Booke, which arose to forty thousand Ducates, without any further inquisition, he tooke the Booke, tore it in pieces, and threw it into a little Riuer running by the Colledge; alledging two verses of a verie worthy Author among the Arabians, to this effect.

*Things deer & faire, can neuer be too deer,
And if they please, no man can pay too deer.*

But there was a Treasurer, Named Hibuulagi, who seeking to find out a certaine account, although hee came much short thereof, yet he could alledg the expences of four hundred & 4. score thousand Ducates. All the other Colledges of Fez, haue some correspondence with this; and in euerie Colledge, there are Readers in diuers Sciences; some, that read in the Mornings, and the other in the night, all hauing sufficient and verie excellent allowance left by the founders and builders.

In auncient times, euerie Scholler in this Colledge, was afforded his expences and Garments, for the space of seuen yeares. But now in these dayes, nothing is graunted but Chamber-roome, because in the warre of Sabid, many possessions and Gardens were spoyled, the benefit whereof went to these charges. So that now there remaine but some small fragments, where-with the Readers are maintained: some hauing two hundred, others an hundred Ducates, and some lesse. And this perhappes, may be the occasion of the decay of Vertue in Fez; and not only of Fez, but of all the Cities in Affrica.

None doo dwell in these Colledges, except certaine Schollers that are strangers, who haue their liuing of the Cittizens Almes, and from som parts of Fez. And if any haue their lodging in the Citie, they may not exceede the number of two. When any of the Lecturers will reade, a Scholler doth first deliuer the Text, and then the Lecturer comments thereon, inducing some expositions of his owne; and declaring all difficulties happening in the Argument. And sometimes, in presence of the Lecturer, the Schollers will fall to dispute amongst themselues, according to the subiect of the Reading or Lesson.

2. In Fez, there are many Hospitals, which in forme and beautie, are not inferior to the forenamed Colledges. And it was obserued (as a Custome) in former times, that straungers should haue three dayes entertainment in those Hospitals. There are many other without the gates, no lesse commendable then those within, and these Hospitalles were very rich: but in the time of Sabids warre, the King hauing neede of great summes of mony, was conuelled to sel their reuennues and allowances. The common people yeelding no consent thereto, an Atturney (belonging to the King) gaue them to vnderstand, that those Hospitals were builded vpon meere Almes; which had formerlie beene giuen by the predecessours to the present King, who now stobd in daunger of loosing his Kingdome: and therefore, it was better to sell those possessions, to chase away the common enemy, then to stand vpon such immediate perill, considering, the warre should be no sooner finished but now reuennues might be purchased. Heereupon, they were sold, and the King dyed, before any new purchasing followed; so that the Hospitalles remained poore, and in a maner, without any sustentation: yet now there is a Lodging allowed for some forraigne or traouailing Doctor, or to a Gentleman, but very

Strange schollers dwell in the Colledges

The order of Reading.

Of Hospital, and Stoues or Bathes.

Sabids warre, tooke away all the Hospitalles reuennues

The olde reuennues sold, but no newe purchased.

very poorely in the City, to releue foote trauailers, and sickly Strangers, and there is but one of them neither, yet without either Phisition or Phisick; onely lodging and expences is affoorded, till a poore weake man dye, or be recouered.

Respect of mad and irarique peoplc.

In this Hospitall are certaine Chambers, appointed for Lunaticke or distracted persons, that hurle stones in the streetes, and are otherwise dangerous; where they are kept lockt vp, and fast chained, and the doores of these chambers, which front the Galleries or Terrasses, are barred with Iron, both beneath and aloft, and the Windowes with Woodden barres, strongly knit with Iron. He that hath the charge of their dyet, when he perceiueh any one of them to behaue himselve disordetlie; he beats them with a Bastonado, which hee commonly carryeth ready for the purpose. Oftentimes it happeneth, that trauailers walking by those Chambers, the distracted persons will tal to them, and vse many lamentations, that they are cured of their infirmitie, and therefore should be discharged from imprisonment; protesting, that they endure infinite iniuries at the Officers handes. Some, being ouer credulous, will look in at the Windowes, and for their labour, are rewarded with an handfull of noysome filth in their faces. For, although these distracted persons haue their conueient Houses of Office; yet notwithstanding, they will empty their bellies in the midst of the floore, and watch opportunitie for these beastle pranckes: except the Officers (by their dilligence) cleane away the filth, or fore-warne strangers of such an iniury. To conclude, these Hospitals haue all such familiar Attendants, as are to discharge all fitting Offices: as Clarke, Factors, Protectours, Cookes, Butlers, and others for apt seruice to the infirme.

Chastisement for mad peoplc.

The brutish behaiour of lunatick peoplc.

Attending officers in the Hospitals.

Of the Stoues or Bathes.

There are also an hundred Stoues or Bathes, beautifully builded and adorned; some whereof are small, others greater: but all made after one forme and manner; to wit, euery one hath foure places or roomes, of the largnesse of great dining Haules. Without, are certaine Galleries somiewhat high, and ascent is made vnto them by diuers degrees or staires: where men vse to disrobe themselues, and leaue their garments in safety. In the midst are certain large Wels made, after the manner of their preserued waters; but much greater.

Now, when a man would go to one of these Bathes, when hee hath entred at the first gate, he passeth into a spacious place, which is coole, and there is a coole Well-spring to temper the Water, when it waxeth excessively hot. From thence (by another Gate) he goeth on to the second place, where the Water is hotter, and there are diuers Officers, that attend to wash and make cleane all Commers. From thence he passeth to the third, which is very hot; where he sweateth for a while, and here he endureth heat indeed, for the water is walled round with heate: but it hath conuayance forth into certain Buckets of wood, and to each man they must giue two Glasses of water, or more, to such as shall demaund them, for which courtesie, hee giueth to the attending party, a small peece of Coyne, called a Baio; or but two at the most; and to the Patrone or Maister of the Bath, he payeth no more then two Quatrines. The water is made thus hot with the Dung of Beasts; which the Maister of the Bath keepeth Boyes of purpose for to gather, who passing through the City, doe load themselues with Dung out of the Stables; and then carrying it forth of the Cittie, they doe make thereof a topping Dung-hill, and so it remaineth there two or three moneths drying. Afterward, to heat the Bath-houses and the water, it is burnt in stead of wood, or other fuell.

Wcomen also haue their seperate Stoues or Bathes, and many are kept for Wcomen and Men together: but men doe determine their time, which vsually is from the third houre; vntill the foureteenth, either more or lesse; according to the quality of the day, and the rest of the day, is perticularly appointed for Women. At the time of their entrance into the Bath, as a manifestation thereof, a Cord is thwarted at the doores passage, and then no man presumeth to enter. But if it happen, that any man then would speake with his Wife: he cannot, but some Seruant

The entrance into the Baths

The coole water, and severall degrees of the Baths

* Valuing two Italian pence.

* The fourth part of an English peny.

Bathes appointed for wcomen.

The order of womens entring into the Bath.

of

Youth vse the Bathes.	of the house must carry her his errand. Many times, the Men and Weomen of the City do banquet together in those Baths, & vsing diuers pleasures, in diuers kinds, singing very often with excellent voyces. The youth also of eyther kind, doe enter into them starke naked, without any shame or offence to either.	sembleth a sacrifice vsed by the ancient Affricanes , at such time as they were Gentiles, and continued in vse euen to our times; as likewise wee finde many notes of their Feastes, imitated by Christians, and as yet obserued, though scarcely well knowne, vpon what occasion those Feastes were vsed. But in euery City certaine Feastes were obserued, and left in vse to the Christians, when they gouerned Affrica .	A Sacrifice vsed by the Affricane Gentiles.
For men of good reputation.	But men of some condition and degree, doe enter with wiping Cloaths wrapped about them, and sit not in any common places: but haue the aduantage of certaine distinct little roomes, which euermore are made handsome, and fitting for men of reputation. When the Seruants and Attendants doe wash any body, they cause him to lye along, and then rub and chafe euery part of him, with Oyntment restoratiue, and sometime with such Instruments, as do take away all filthinesse. But when they wash a Lord, or one of great account;	3. In the said City, there are about two hundred Innes or Hostaries, verie handsomelie built and contriued. But some doe exceede the other in greatnesse: as those that are nere to the great Temple, and mounted three Sories in height, containing one hundred and twentie Lodgings, and some more. In euery one are fare Welles of Water, and Houses of Office, with their conuaying Channels, which quickly rid away all filth whatsoever. Like vnto these, are (in Italie) the Colledge of the Spanyards in Bologna , and the Pallace of the Cardinall of S. George in Rome , euerie Chamber doore entring vpon the Tarras . But albeit these Innes are faire and great, yet they doe afford but verie bad lodging: for there is neither Bed, Bed-stead, nor Sheeres, but euey guest hath a course Couerlet, or Irish Ruggle allowed him, & a handsome Mat to sleep vpon. And if he will care, hee must goe buy his Victuals himselfe, and deliuer them to the Cooke to bee drest.	Of Innes or Hostaries in the City.
For a Lord.	they cause him to lie downe on a cloth of Felt (such as Hats are made of) laying his head also vpon Pillowes of Felt, and so deale with him gently and tenderly.	To every one of these Bathes or Stones, are many Barbers belonging, who pay alike payment to the Maister, for vse of their Instruments there, and washing according to their profession. The most part of these Bathes, do hold their best estate of the Temples and Colledges, and doe pay them great rents: some an hundred, others an hundred and fiftie Ducates yearely, some more, some lesse, according to the greatnesse of the place. Nor will I conceale a familiar Feast, made once a yeare by the Seruants and Youth attending in these Bathes, which is performed in this manner. These young men doe inuite all their Friendes, and goe with Drums, Fifes and Trumpets, forth of the Cittie. Afterward, they take a great Onion, called an Onion of the Sea, and put it into a Bason of Copper, which when they haue couered with a faire linnen Towell: they march backe to the Cittie, sounding all the way to the Gate of the Bathe. Then they put the Onion into a Basket, and fastning it to the door of the house, say: This shall be a signe of benefit to the Bathe, because this yeare it shall bee frequented by many. But me-thinkes, this rather re-	What lodging the Innes doe yeild.
Barbers belonging to the Bathes.	The rents of the Bathes.	Poore Widdowes of the Cittie, that haue neither House, kintred, or Friends; are also allowed accesse to these Innes, where roomes are appointed for them, some seuerall, others two in a Chamber. The Hosts of these Innes are of a certaine generation, which they call Elchena , and go in womanish garments, adorning their persons after the fashion of Weomen: For they shaue close their Beards; and striue to imitate women in their speech. What doe I say, in speech? Yea, they will sow and spin. Each one of these base-minded men, doth keepe his Concubine, and vseth the very same familiaritie with her, as the Husband doth with his Wife: Other loose Weomen also haue resort thither, that make sale of their honesty,	Reliefe for poore widdowes.
A Feast made by the youth of the Bathes, euery yeare.	This shall be a signe of benefit to the Bathe, because this yeare it shall bee frequented by many. But me-thinkes, this rather re-	as	The Inne-keepers of the City, and their base qualities.

Bad guests to be allowed in Innes.

The Inne-keepers pay tribute to the Governour.

Men of much vertue in the Kingdome of Fez.

Inne-keepers forbidden entrance into the Temples, &c.

Of Milles in the City.

as the whores of Europe vse to do. These Inne-keepers haue authority, to buy and sell Wiues, without any dispensation from Court Officers: And in these Hosteries, men of the most foule and vilest life haue continuall resort; as to make themselues drunke, and to satisfie their lust with women of hire: because there they may exercise all brutallie of life, secure from the apprehension of Officers, and other such like deformities, which better besceimeth silence then vtterance. These so well-deseruing Inne-keepers, haue a Consull, and pay certaine tribute to the Castilian and Governour of the Citty: standing bound beside, when any Army is required for the King or Princes; to prouide a great retinue of their Seruants, to prepare foode for the Souldiours, because few other are able for that imployment.

Assuredly, if the strict Law had not enforced me, whereto a true Historian standeth bound, to reueale the truth in such general descriptions: I could more willingly haue buried these foule faults in silence, because they are the grossest blemishes in any Citty, wherein (beside) are many vertues. And setting apart these vices, the Kingdome of Fez containeth men of greater goodnes, than are in all the parts of Affrica. And therefore with those dishonest Hosts, (as is credibly auouched) few other haue any conuersation; but onely ribaid persons, of base blood & life: for neither Scholler, Merchant, or any honest Artezane, will so much as speake to them, and they are interdicted beside, from entering into the Temples, or the Market place of Merchants, the Bathes, or any of their Houses. Neuerthelesse, such as keep the Hosteries by the great Temple, are fauoured in lodging Merchants of rare qualitie, but the common people do nothing but scorne and mocke them: And because they do seruice (as I haue already said) to the Prince in the Felde, they are suffered to continue in that wretched kind of life.

4 Within this Citty, there are about some four hundred Milles, for the grinding of Corne, and they may easily amount to a thousand; considering, that the said Mills are made in the manner of a great Haule, and in Collomes, and in some of them are foure, fiue, or sixe seuerall Milles. There is a large streete in the Citty, wherein are nothing else but Mill-stones, and thither do resort certaine Traffiquers, tearmed Meale-men: who doe hold many of the Milles at rentage, and buying Graine for them, cause it there to be ground. 10 Afterward, they inake sale of the Meale in the Shoppes, which they also pay rent for, deriuing very good benefit thereby: because all the Trades-men, that haue no apt means to furnish themselves with Corne, doe buy the Meale in these Shoppes, and make it Bread in their owne Houses. But men of any degree, doe buy their Corne at the best aduantage, and then cause it to be 20 ground in certaine Milles, which are allowed by the Citizens, paying the Miller two Batces for the Buil-elles grinding. The most part of these Milles doe belong to the Temples and Colledges, so that but few appertaine to Citizens: and they pay great rent, two Duckets for euery Mill.

5 The Artes and Trades in this Citty, are separated one from another, and those of greatest worth and respect, are in the circuit, and neere neighbouring to the greatest Temple: As Notaries or Scriueners, and of them there are about fourscote Shoppes, one part of them being ioyned to the Wall of the Temple, and the other right against it, two Notaries sitting in each Shop. A little further off, toward the West-side, are about thirty Shops of Booke-sellers or Stationers: and toward the South side, are they that sell Shooes, whereof there are about an hundred and fiftie Shoppes. These onelie doe buy both Shooes, Buskins, and Stockings ready made, in very great store, and so inake sale of them againe: And not farre from them, are the Shoe-makers, that make Shooes for all degrees of persons, and of them are about fifty Shoppes. On the East-side of the Temple, the Sellers of Brasse and Copper haue their place, and right against the great gate, toward the West-side, stand they which sell Fruit, making (among them) other fifty Shoppes. Next to them are the Wax-sellers, that shew

A Streete of Millstones.

A Trade onely of selling Meale.

Of Artificers, Trades, Shops and Market places.

Scriueners.

Booke-sellers

Shoe-sellers, and Stocking-sellers.

Shoe-makers.

Brassers.

Fruiterers.

Wax-sellers.

Mercers.

Floure-sellers

Milke-sellers.

Sellers of Bombast.

Hemp-sellers

Sadlers.

Scabberd-makers.

Salte-sellers.

Pot-sellers.

Lorrayners.

Porters.

shew rare worke-deuises in Wax. And by them are the Mercers; but of both these there are not many Shops. Then follow the Sellers of Flouers, who likewise sell Citrones and Limons: but such as doe behold the rare diuersity of Floures, would imagine to see mid-April when the Fields are in their richest Livery, or when the Gardens make their best shew of beautie. Of these Shoppes there are about twenty: for such as vse to drinke Wine, will alwayes haue Hearbes and Floures with them.

Neere vnto them, are certaine sellers of Milke, whose Shops are well furnished with all China Vessels. They vse to buy their Milke of diuers Kine keepers, who make this kind of Merchandise of their Kine, and euery morning these Kine-keepers doe send their Milke in certain wodden vessels, bound about with Iron, very narrow at the mouth, but large in the bottome, and so sell it them of these Shoppes. Such as is milked at night, is bought by these Shopkeepers, and Butter made thereof: and that which is sower, commonly called Butter-Milke, they sell in like manner to the people; so that betweene sweet and sower Milke, fise and twenty Tubs of Milke is daily made sale of. Next to these, are the Sellers of Cotton and Bombast, making (betweene them) thirtie Shops. On the North-side, are the Traders in Hemp, that sell Halters, Horrie-Collers, Packe-thred, and all kind of Cords. By them, are the Makers of Saddle girts, riding Pantofles, and Head-stalles for Horses, some of Leather, and some of Silke. A little further off, are the Scabberd or Sheath-makers, for Swordes, Daggers, and Kniues, who likewise make Leather Breast-plates for Horses.

Next to them stand the Sellers of Salt and Whiting, which they buy in grosse, and sell by retaile. Then they that sell all kind of Stone-vessels, which are faire, and of perfect collours, some that be of one, and others of two collours; of all these there are about an hundred Shoppes. Then such as sell Bittes and Bridles for Horses, Saddles, and Stirrups, of which there are about fourescore Shoppes. Then there is a place for Porters, which are to the number of three hundred, who haue a chiefe or Commaunder among them, and he appointeth those men weekly, that are to labour and carry burthens, and they must duely attend on al occurrences, which happen in that weeke. When the weeke is ended, he deuiderh the Money duely and equally among them that haue laboured for it. And the Porters loue like Brethren, for when any one of them dyeth, and leaueh a young Child behinde him: they not onely (in common) do pay the widowes charges, vntill she marry againe; but also haue a louing and diligent care of the Cilde, till it be of age to vnder-take some Trade. When any of this ranke marrieth, or the birth of a Child is knowne among them: a Banquet is made for the whole Company, and at this meeting, no one escapeth without one present or other. And no man may enter into their profession, till he haue made a sociable meeting to the whole Company: Or else, if hee presume to enter in labour among them, hee must haue but the halfe moiety of his owne earnings. And they are priuiledged by the Lord of the City, from paying any penalties or taxations whatsoeuer, or the baking of their owne Bread at the Ouen. If any of them commit a fault deseruing death, it is not publikely punished. And when they follow their labour, they goe cloathed in garments all of one colour; but when the day concerneth not their labour, they are habited to their own liking: and to conclude, they are all accounted honest men, & of good life, sildome deseruing any reprehension.

Not farre from the place where these Porters do giue attendance, is the Market place for the cheefe of the Consuls, and Iudges of all things sold for foode. In the midst of this Market-place is a Serraglio of Canes, made foure square, wherein are solde Carrets, and other kinde of Garden Roots, by certain men thereto appointed, because none else but they may buy them of the Gardiners, as being thereto especially deputed, and they pay an order of custome therefore to the Receiver. And dailie shall ye see there sold fise hundred Horse-load of these Roots, and many times farre greater quantities, sold at verie very cheape rare, sometimes thirty, at (at least) twenty pound weight for a Baioc, and Beanes and Pease (at due seasons of the yeare) are sold very reasonably. Round about are certaine Shops, where they sel Vermicilli, and other like things, as flesh made into round balles, and fryed in Oyle, every ball beeing about the bignesse of a Figge: which are sold at fixe Quarrines the pound, and they are made of leane Beefe. Beside this Market-place, somewhat more North-erlie is the Hearb-market, where they sell Cabbages, Turnops, Colewortes, and other Hearbes, which they eat together with meate, and there are forty Shoppes of these Traders. Next is the Smoaky Market, where they fry certaine kinds of Bread in Oyle, like to the boiled Hony-Bread sold in Rome. These men haue sundry Instruments in their Shoppes, and Boyes singing al the day; for great quantity of this Bread is daily sold; because it is vsed in fasts, especially on Feast daies, and when they intend any solemne-fasting.

A louing amitie among men of mean qualitie.

Orders obserued among the Porters.

The Market-place for the Consuls.

These men vse not to roast their meat on Spits or Broaches, but they haue two Ouens or furnaces, made one ouer the other, and they put fire into the neathermost, and when that about is well heated: they put in the meate at a conuayance made aloft, because no fire shall offend their hands. By this means, the meat is exceedingly well Cookt, keepes a delicate colour, and hath a rare relish: because neither Smoke, nor smell of the fire can come at it, but is thus temperately dressed all the night time. In the morning, of this meat, and the Bread before named, there is daile sold to the value of two hundred Duc-kets, for there are fiftene of the Shops, and they haue no other exercise. They sell also, fryed Flesh, and fryed Fish, and other kinds of Bread, made into Paste, like Cakes; but yet somewhat thicker, being kneaded with Butter, and so with Butter and Hony they vse to eat it. They seeth likewise the feete of Beasts, like to our Neates secte or Trotters, & these are commonly sold to poor men, that labour in the grounds, who make their morning breake-fast of them, and afterward goe to their worke. Next vnto these, stand the Sellers of Oyle, Butter, salt and fresh, Hony, Cheese;

old and new, Oliues, Capers, Lemons, Skirrets, and Pottatoes, their Shoppes being furnished with China Dishes, making a farre greater shew then substance. They sell their Pots and Vessels of Butter and Oyle, in the same manner as we sell goods at an Out-cry, to them that will giue most, and they that cry these things, are certain Porters thereto purposely appointed, who measure forth the Oyle, when any great quantity thereof is sold together. The pots and Vessels do containe (seuerally) an hundred pound weight, and there the King-keepers doe stand bound, to see that this measure be duely performed, and as they are still emptied, to bee filled againe, and sold in the Cittie.

Neere vnto this place, is the Shambles or Butcherie, and there are about fortie shoppes of them, faire and large, as any of the other professions, where they cut orth meate, and sell it by waight of the Ballaunce. They vse not to kill anie beast in the Shambles, but in apt appointed slaughter houses, by the Riuer side, where they fley off the hides; and then cause them to be brought by Porters into the Market, from the slaughter house, but first they are presented before the Capro de Consoli; who hauing seene and examined the goodnesse thereof, he deliuereth the seller a Ticket in Writing, at what price he shall sell the flesh: and this Ticket is fastened by the Butcher to the meate, that euerie one may publickly see and read it. Beside the Butcherie, is another Market place, where wollen cloath (made in the Countrey) is sold, and containe about an hundred shoppes. If any man bring Cloath to be solde, hee must deliuer it to a Crier, who carries it on his shoulders, and so goeth on from shop to shoppe, crying the price thereof, and of these Criers; ther are threescore in number. The cry beginneth after mid-day, continuing till darke night, and the Crier is payed two Baiocs in the Ducate; but the Merchants trading in these affayres, haue verie great dealings. Next these, stand the Pollishers and Clensers of Armors and Weapons, as Swordes, Daggers, Partezans, and such like; whereof there are some that both cleanse and sell them. Then are the Fishermen or Fish-mongers, who Fish in the Cities Riuers, both within and without; selling manie good solde as by Out-cry.

The Butchery or Shambles.

The Wollen Cloth Market, and Cryers of Cloth.

Armourers.

Fishermen, or Fish-mongers

* A small cut Pistmeate, vsed in Italye to make potage withal.

The Hearb-market.

The Smoake-market.

Their maner of roasting meat.

Fried Flesh, & fried Fish.

Oyle, Butter, Salt and other comodities,

10

20 30

40

50

* The Chub, or Cheuin.	good and great Fishes at very easy price, at three Quatrinés the pound. They use to take great store of one kinde of Fish, which in Rom is called * Laccia , & they begin to Fish for them at the entrance of October, and so hold on to Aprill.	that hardly is any passage by them; and falling (many times) from scolding to fighting; are much thame to them- selues, and such as behold them.
Basket and Cadge-makers	Next, are the Makers of Cages, Pens, or Coopes, for Powltrei and Fowles, which commonly they make of Canes, and consist of about fortie Shoppes. For every Cittizen doth keepe a great manie to fatten; and (to auoyd noysomnes) they suffer them not to goe at libertie in their houses, but onely keepe them immured in these Cages.	Now returning to the West part, towards the Temple from the Gate, as we goe to Mecuasce , beyond the smoke market in the direct way: are they that make Buckets of Leather, vsed for ca- suall fires, and drawing Water out of Welles, of which Trade there are some foureteene Shoppes. There are also the makers of Hutches and re- ceipts for Meale and Corn, being about thirtie Shops in number. Next whom are Coblers and menders of old Shoes, purposely prepared for poore & meane people; of which, there are about an hundred and fifty Shoppes.	Bucket-ma- kers.
Sope-sellers.	A little further are the Sope-sellers, who sell verie licquid Sope, hauing all their Shoppes together, because they stand seperated by the street. This Sope is not made in the Cittie; but in the nei- ghoring Hillie Countrey, and among the Mountainers, whence the Mulerers doo bring it, and sell it to the owners of these Shoppes. Then are the Sellers of Flower and Meale, but there are not ma- ny shops of them in this Market, because they are elsewhere placed in the Milles- streete.	Then are the Target and Shield-ma- kers of Leather, according to the Afri- cane manner, and as wee see in some places of Europe . By them are the Lan- derers, which are diuers men of base condition keeping there sundry Shops, with Tubs and Water ready in them. Such as keepe no Maide-Seruants in their Houses, bring their Linnen to be washed by these men Landerers, which they also perform very diligently, hang- ing them afterward on lines to be dried, as they doe in Italy , appearing so pure and nearly washed, as no Wcomen could expresse more cleanly labour. Many other Markets and Trades there are beside, which beeing of meane and filly importance; I forbear to speake of them, and will now procede to the Merchants Market, or place of resort.	Coblers.
Meale-sellers	Next, the fellers of all kind of graine, both for seede, and other-wise; with great store of attending Porters, that carry it thence to mens houses on Hor- ses and Mules, according as it is measu- red out by the appointed measure, in three sackes vpon a Beasts backe, lying one aloft on the other, & men are espe- cially commaunded to haue care of the measuring and measures. Next is the Market-place, where Linnen and wol- len yarne is sold, and the same dressed in such manner as it ought to be. This Market consisteth of a goodly House, with foure seuerall Shops or abidings about it. In one of which sit the wea- uing Merchants, with certaine inferior Ministers or Officers, which weigh the yarne. In two other sit Women, that haue spunne, and come to sell the saide Yarne, and there is no small number of them: Their Market beginneth at noone, and lasteth till euening, making sale in great plenty. Diuers use to go see this Market place, because it is round planted with Mulberry-trees, which giue a comely shade to the Market wo- men sitting vnder them; and they as- semble there together in such crowdes,	6 This Market place is after the manner of a little Cittie, with a Wall built about it, containing in circuit twelue Gates or entrances: And each one of these Gates is ouer-thwarted with a Chaine, so that no Horses, or o- ther Beasts can enter in thereat. The Market-place is deuided into fiftene streetes or passages. Two of them be- longeth to Shoe-makers, that make Shooes for Gentlemen, of which cost and comlinessse, none other may weare them, neyther Artificer, Souldier, nor Courtier. Other two doe appertaine to Silke-men, or Merchants of Silke: One part whereof doe sell faire Tassels and Furnitures for Horses, and haue a- bout	Target-ma- kers. Lauderers that are men.
Corne-sellers	Linnen and Woollen Yarne.	The Market place of Mer- chants and Merchandise.
Weauing Merchants.	Mulbery Trects.	Shoe-makers for Gentle- men.
		Silke-men.

bout fifty Shoppes: The other do sell dyed and coloured Silkes, to worke in Linnen, or any other thinges else, and haue (very neere) as many shoppes. By these, stand some that make Belts and Girdles for women of wooll; but they are vnfighly. Others also, that make the like of Silke, but of no better or hanfomer fashion: because they make them in plaites or tresses, as great as a mans two fingers, some of them beeing thought strong enough to hold a Boat tied. Next to these are two other streets, where stand the Merchants of Wollen Cloth, such as come out of Europe, and all these Merchants are tearmed Granatini. There also stand they that sell all kinde of Sattins, Veluets, and other Silkes, Hats, and Bonnets, and raw Silkes. A little further off, stand they that make al kind of Bedding, Pillowes, Mattrasses, and such like necessary furniture. And by them is the place for Toules and Customes. For these cloths are likewise sold by way of out-cry, and such as take charge of them, doe bring them first to bee sealed in the Toule-House, and afterward walke crying them among the Merchants; there being also about sixty Cryers, each man hauing paid him a Baioc for a cloth. The there is two other streetes, wherein are the Taylors and Makers of Garments. By whom stand they that make diuers Bonnets of Cloath, to couer the head withal. And then are two other streets, where the Linnen weauing Merchants haue their due place, selling Shirtes, Smocks, and all other wearing Linnen for men and women. These are the richest Merchants in the Cittie; because they make quicker returne in their Negotiations, then al the rest together do. There is another street, where they sell all kind of Cloath-Garments, that are brought out of Europe, and euerie euening an out-cry is made of these Garments, such as are brought to the Cittizens to sell, some old, some new, and for all vses. Last of all, is a place, where all old Linnen is sold, as Shirtes, Sheets, Hand-towels, Wipers, and such like: And hard by are little Shoppes, where they cry Carpets, and Couetinges for Bedd...

7 All these streets are called together

Girdle-makers for women.
Granatini Merchants of wollen-cloath.
 Mercers.
 Upholsters.
 The Toule or Custom-house.
 Taylors.
 Bonnet-makers.
 Linnen-Merchants.
 Broakers and Sellers of old Garments.

Caisaria, an ancient word, and deriued of Cesar, as meaning Cesar, who was the greatest Lord of those times in all Europe.

For all the Citties from the Riuer of Mauritania, were gouerned by the Romaines, and afterward by the Gothes: and in euery one of them was such a Market-place, that bare the same name. The occasion heereof, is thus rendred by the Historians of Affrica, who say, that the Ministers and Officers of the Romaines and Gothes, were euery where intermingled in the Citties Store-houses, and Ware-houses, where the tribute accounts and collections wer kept together, which many times happened to be spoyled by the people. Hereupon an Emperour was aduised, to make a place like vnto a little Cittie, where all the Merchants of best reputation might assemble together, to make sale of their Wares; And likewise the Officers of the Treasury, to store vp such tributes and taxations, as should bee gathered. Wel assuring himselfe, that if the Cittizens would preferue and defend their owne goods, it was conuenient for them to doe the like to those of the Empire. For they could neuer consent to any spoile, but it returned also to their owne dammage. As many times hath beene obserued in Italy, when Souldiours (in particular fauour to some faction) haue entred into a city, & spoyling the contrary part: when the enemies faculties haue not proued sufficient, they ransacked also the houses of their friends.

20 20 30 40
 50

8 Neere vnto this little fashioned Cittie, on the North-side thereof, are the Apothecaries, who haue a strait goodly streete, wherein is about an hundred and fifty Shops. This street is shut in at eyther end & with two faire Gates, no lesse strong then large: and these Apothecaries doe keepe diuers Watch-men at their owne charge; that walke about in the night time, with Lanthornes, Dogges, and Weapons, to preuent all inconueniences that might ensue.

Here are sold all matters of Spicery, or belonging to Phisicke: but they doe not make any Sirrups, Conserues; or Electu-

Concerning the name of the streetes, call'd Caisaria, so named of Casar.

The reason of this generall Markets building.

Spoile in any City maketh no respect.

Of Apothecaries, & other Artes.

All matters of Spicery.

Electuaries, because the Phisitions do see these offices performed in their own Houses, and afterward send them to their owne Shoppes, keeping Seruants for the purpose, who doe see the receipts distributed, according to the Phisitions direction. And the most part of these Shoppes are so conioyned together, with them belonging to the Apothecaries: that the Common people know not the Phisitions from the other. These Apothecaries haue their Shops high, large, and fairely adorned, with beautifull roofes and rich furnishments. In all the World is not a streete of Apothecaries like vnto this. True it is, that in Tauris, a City of Persia, there is a goodly Marketplace of the same Arts-men: but the Shoppes haue darke entrances, yet curiously builded, and the Porches mounted on Pillers of Marble. But these of Fez are much more commended, for their benefit of aire and light; those of Tauris being too obscure. A little remote from this street, are many other Trades, whereof, because I haue else-where sufficiently spoken; I may be fauoured to passe them ouer.

Phisitions & Apothecaries haue shops together.

The Apothecaries of Tauris.

The second part of the City.

What Trades are in this part of the City.

9 The City toward the East, is ciuile, stored with goodly Pallaces, Temples, and Colledges: but (indeede) it is not so copious and abounding in Artes and Trades, as the other part is; because there are neither Merchants, Taylors, nor Hofiers, but of course and homely Cloth. There is a little Market-place of Apothecaries, wherein are no more then thirty Shops. Toward the Cittie Wall, are the Furnace men, Makers of Bricke, painted Tyles and Dishes. And hard by them, is a great Market-place, where they sell all kinde of Vessels for vse, but no Glasses; as Pots, Dishes, Pans, Treyes, &c. Then is the Market of the Garners, where they keepe all their Corne: And another stands right against the great Temple, hauing all the floore paved with painted Tyles, with diuers Shoppes of Arts about it. There are also, five hundred and twenty Houses of Cloth-Weauers, which houses are made like vnto great Pallaces, consisting of many roomes, with many fair Haules, in each of which are great store of Weauers: and the owners of these Houses do not handle any working Instrument, but onely the Worke-Maisters, who pay both the wages and rent of euery house. And this is the greatest of all the Artes in the City, for it consists of aboute twenty thousand Men, and as many more are daily exercised in the Milles. There are likewise an hundred and fifty houses of Whitesters of Yarne, all which Houses are builded (for the most part) by the Riuer side, and well furnished with pannies and Cauldrons, for boyling the Yarne, and other necessarie occasions. In the City are fundry great Houses, wherein they saw and cleaue Wood into diuers formes: which labour is performed by certaine Christian Bond-slaves, and of the Money they earne, their Patrones find them their maintenance. They are admitted no time of rest, but onely the halfe of Friday, from noone to the evening; and some eyght other dayes at seuerall seasons in the yeare, at which times are the Feastes of the Moores. There are publique Brothels or Stewes, where Strumpets are attendant at poore price: wherein they are fauored eyther by the * Bargello, or Gouernor of the City. There are also diuers men, who (without offence to the Court) do exercise the office of Bawds or Pandares, keeping Wine and Women in their houses, making benefit by their lewdnesse, and such as resort thither, doe it securelie. There are fixe hundred heads or Springs of Water, naturall Welles, hemd in with walles, and lockt with close Doores; because some are deuided into many parts, and runne along vnder-ground, passing by Channels to Houses, Temples, Colledges, and Innes. This Water is in much more estimation, then that of the Riuer: because it sometime faileth, especially in Summer. Here to is added, that when they wold make cleane the Kennels, the course of the Riuer runneth without the Cittie, which makes euerie one the more gladly to vse this other sweete Water. And though Gentlemen (in Summer time) haue of this Riuer Water in their Houses; yet will they haue store of the Springes Water, as being more fresh and sweete, but in Winter they doe otherwise. These Springes are (for the most Weauers the greatest trade in the Cittie.

Christian Bondslaves that cleaue and saw wood

* A Captaine of Sergeants.

Sixe hundred well-springs in the Cittie.

Spring water better then the Riuer.

Stores for Corne.

most part) on the West and South sides of the Cittie, because the part answering North-ward, is all Mountainie, being called Teuertino, and there are very great and deepe places, wherein they keepe much Corne for many yeares, some capable to containe two hundred quarters. And the Inhabitants in those places, who are common vulgar men, doe liue on the profit they make by the rentage of them; which is a quarter vpon euery hundred, at the beginning of the yeare.

Gardens on the Citties
south-side.

On the South-side, which is halfe inhabitable, are many Gardens, stored with good and delicate Fruits; as Lemmons, Citrones, Mellons, and very fragrant Flowres; among which are the Gessimine, Damaske-Rose, and Wall-floure, brought thither out of Europe, and much esteemed of by the Moores. In which Gardens also, are diuers beautifull Lodgings, Fountains, and prospects, round engirt with Gessimines, Roses, and other sweete floures. In the Spring-time, whosoever walketh neere those Gardens, shall smell a rare, delicate, and most pleasing odour; & they are no lesse answerable, in contenting the eye with their beauty and splendour. So that, to speake vprightly, no one of these Gardens but it doth appeare like an earthly Paradise; and this is the reason, that Gentlemen (possessors of them) doe dwell in them, from the beginning of Aprill, vntill the ending of September. On the west side, is the Rock-Fort, or Castle, which was builded in the time of the K. of Lontuna, and (in greatnesse) may equall an indifferent Cittie. This was the seat (in elder times) of the Governours and Lordes of Fez, that is to say; before it was a rofall Cittie: And afterward; when new Fez was builded by the Kings of the House of Marino, this Castle was left as a dwelling for the Governour only. In this Castle is a goodly temple; built in the time when it was much inhabited; and those faire Pallaces which then were there, are now quite ruinated, and Gardens made where they stood. Onely one remaineth, wherein the Governour dwelleth, and certaine other Houses for his Family. There are also many other places, where the Governour useth to giue audience to offenders; and afford them

Gardens compared to earthly Paradises.

The Castell Rocke, built by the King of Lontuna.

The Governours
Pallace in the Rocke-Castle.

10

20

30

40

50

Iustice. There is likewise a Prison, made in the likenesse of a dungeon, yet sustained with many pillers; which prison is so large, as it may well hold three thousand persons: for there is no separation, or secret deuision of one from another; because they vse not to keepe any man close Prisoner in Fez.

10. In the Cittie there are none but meane Officers and Magistrates, who haue the charge of administrating Iustice. The Governour is supream, both in causes ciuile and criminall. There is a Iudge, who is appointed for Canonial causes, that is; the Lawes contained in the Bookes of Mahomet. Another Iudge also, who is Lieutenant to the other, and he attendeth causes of Matrimony and repudiation; to examine witnesses, and vniuersally to render Iustice. Next is the Aduocate, with whom they vse to consult on the lawes, and to who they make their appeale from the Iudges; either when they deceiue them, or giue sentence by authority of some lesse excellent Doctor. The Governour enioyeth a great deal of Money, by condemnations made at diuers times: And the whole weight of Iustice, giuen to a guilty offender; is to be deprived of the Governours presence, and beaten with an 100. or 200. stripes. The Hang-man raketh the frustrated person, & putting a Chaine about his necke, leadeth him thorow the Cittie, starke naked, onely the partes of shame reserued, which is couered with a breech purposely made. The Bargello goeth along with them, & the Hang-man publisheth all the way, the fact wherein hee hath offended: which being done, he putteth on his Garments againe, and then is returned backe to Prison, but soimes times; many are led in this manner together.

The Governour hath of euery guiltie prisoner, a ducate & a quarter, or fourth part, and of euery one committed to prison, he hath a taxation, which is seuerally paid vnto him, by Merchants & Artificers, deputed onely to that office. But among all other benefits, he hath a Mount which yeildeth him seven thousand ducates of yearely rent. True it is, that he standeth bound to find the King three hundred Men and Horses, in the time of Warres, and (so long as they endure) to be their Pay-maister. The

The Governours
Prison.

Of Magistrates, and their maner of gouernment
in administration of Iustice, and customarie habites.

Of punishing some criminal persons.

The Governours
fees of Prisoners.

Judges in Cannonicall causes.	Judges for Cannonicall matters, haue neither wages or reward; because it is forbidden in the Law of Mahomet, that any payment whatsoever should be made to a Iudge, for such an Office. Therefore they liue vpon other wages; as on their readings, or by being a Priest in some Temple. In like manner, the Aduocates and Procuratours, are but simple and vulgar persons. The Iudges haue a certaine place, wherein Debtors are imprisoned, and others for light occasions, or of small moment. In the City are foure Bargelloes, and no more, who make their searches from the foure and twentieth houre, vntill the second houre of night: And they haue no wages neither, but a certaine tribute of them which they apprehend, by their retention; and for certaine smal punishments inflicted on them. But each of them may keep a Tauerne or Inne, and be a Bawd for Boyes or Strumpets. The Governour of the Cittie keepeth neither Iudge or Notary to attend him; but deliuereth the sentence from his owne mouth. There is but one man also, that hath chiefe charge in the Custome or Toule-houfe, who payeth thirty ducates daily to the Kings Chamber, and keepeth Guardians and Notaries at euery Gate, where all thinges (of small price) pay their due at the Gate. But others of greater value, are (by the Guardians) conducted from the Gate to the Custome-houfe, and Guardians & Notaries together, according to the quantity, haue certaine Stipends allowed them. Sometimes the Guardians do go forth of the Gates, to meete the Muleters, because they should not hide or conceale any thing: but if they finde any matter imbezeled, they pay double tribute for the offence. The ordinary payment, is two Ducates in the hundred: And of stone-fruit (wherof great plenty is daily brought thither) they pay the fourth part of the price; But for Wood, Corne, Cattle, and Poultry, they pay not any thing. Onely guelded beasts are not payed for, but in the Butchery, two Baiocs for every such Beast, and one to the Governour, who is the Capo di Consoli. For he keepeth a Court, with twelue Sergeants there attending. And he rideth oftentimes about the city, to approoue the weight of Bread,	Flesh, and other thinges that are sold: And if he find not the eeuē weight, he causeth the to be broken in many fragments, and giueth the Seller so many blowes in the necke with the Bastone, that he leaueth him (in a manner) dead, and the more of such thinges as he findeth too light, the more doth he breake, and publish their shame beside thorow the City. This Office is granted by the King to such Gentlemen as make suite for it: but in former times, it was onlie bestowed on learned men, and of especiall good fame; though now (by the Lordes meanes) priuate and ignorant persons do soonest enjoy it. The Dwellers in the Cittie, to wit; the Noble and worthy sort, are truly ciuill, and cloathe themselues in winter time, with garments of forraigne wollen Cloth. The manner of habite, is a long side Cassock or Coat, worne ouer the Shirt, with halfe Sleeues, and verie strait: ouer which hee weares a long Gowne, seamed or made fast before, & a hood hanging behind. On his head he hath a plaine bonnet, like them worn in Italy in the night time, but without eares: whereon is twice folded about the head certaine fine knotted Cloath, and vnderneath his beard. He weares no hosen, or halfe hosen, but only breeches of cloth: winter time excepted, or when he rideth, and then he weareth Buskins. The popular sort weare long skirted coates with hoods, without any such gownes ouer them as is formerlie named: and those kind of bonnets (simply) on their heads, of small price or estimation. Doctours and Gentlemen of some yeares, doe weare certaine Garments with wide sleeues, much like to the Gentlemen of Venice, who hold much more honorable office. In brieffe, such as are of meane and base condition, clothe themselues in Garments of white Wollen Cloth, made in their owne Countrey, and Hoods also after the same manner. The Women goe very comely clothed, but in hot weather, they weare a long large linnen Garment onely, guirded about the midst with some Girdle, rather rude and course, then otherwise: In Winter time, they weare certaine Gownes with large sleeues, seamed down before as the mens are: but when they	The best sort of Inhabitants in the City, and their Habites. The common sort of people The meanest sort of all. The habites of Women of all conditions
Aduocates & Attorneys.
Bargelloes Captaines of watch and searches.
The Governour giueth sentence himselfe.
Of the Custome or Toule houfe, and Officers thereto belonging.
Concerning tribute payments.
The Capo di Consoli his Court, and his riding thow the City.

they walke abroad, they weare close breeches, which reach so largely, as they couer their whole legs. They also weare a veile or Cloth on their heades, which couers their whole body, after the manner of Soria: Their faces likewise is couered with a fine Cloath, so that nothing can be discerned but their eies. In their eares they haue earrings of Gold, and very costly Jewels: but such as are not of the like condition, weare none but of Siluer, and without any Jewels. About their wrists, they weare Manillions or Bracelets of pure Gold, and on each arme, which Bracelets doe commonly weigh an hundred ducates. The ignoble and meaner women, haue their Bracelets of Siluer, and such also they weare about their Legs.

Veiles for womens faces

Of their manner of Dyet and feeding.

Three meals a day, & how obserued.

The vulgar people, and meanest Citizens.

The dyet of Europe & Fez compared together.

II. The Custome of dyet and feeding among the vulgar sort; is to eate fresh Flesh twice euery Weeke. But Gentlemen feede thereon euery daie, according to their appetite, and haue three meales a day. The first in the morning; is but as a light breake-fast, because it is of Bread or Fruite, and a kind of Broth or Pottage, made with Flower and Wheate, rather very thin, then otherwise. But in Winter, in stead of their Broth, they seeth therein powdred Flesh and Hearbs. At noone or mid day, they feede on light meates also; as Bread, light-salted Flesh and Hearbes, Olines, and Cheese; but in Summer time, this second meale is best. At night, their third meale is lightest of all, to wit; Bread & Mellons, or Egges, or Milke. In Winter, their best feeding is on boyld meats, with that kind of Pulse, which in Spain is called Cuske, or Cuscusu, made in Paste like Coriander Seeds, and stewed in a bored vessel, like to a Strainer, to receiue suine from another boyling vessel, and being afterward well mingled with Butter, is serued in with the broth. They vse not to eate any roasted meate, and this is the feeding of the common people, as also of Artificers, and other poore Citizens. But men of account, as aged Gentlemen, Merchants, & Courtiers; they liue in better sort, and fare more delicately.

But in comparison of the dyet vsed in Europe among Gentlemen of respect, the Affricanes is truly miserable and vile: not in regard of the small quantity of foode, but the rude and disorderlie manner of their feeding. Which is on the ground, vpon a very low Table, without Table-Cloth, Napkin, or Linnen of any kinde, or vsing any thing, but the hand onelie: And when they eate the Cuske or Cuscusu, all the Guests are serued in one dish, and grasp it with their fingers, without helpe of any spoone. And each man taketh which part of the meat himselfe pleaseth, tearing it from the rest without cutting, because they vse no knives; and tearing it with their teeth, they hold the rest in their hands, eating and deuouring it very greedily. And no man drinketh, vntil he be well satisfied with eating; then each man drinketh a Mazzer of water, containing the quantity of a quart, and this is the common vse. It may be, that some Doctor liueth more moderatly: but to conclude, the meanest Gentleman of Italy, liueth more sumptuously then the greatest Lord of Affrica.

12 As concerning Matrimony, this is the manner obserued among them. Whē any man is willing to take a wife, so soone as the Brides Father (if shee haue any) hath made promise to him of his daughter: they inuite and assemble their friends together at the Church or Temple, taking two Notaries with them, who draw the Bargaine and conditions of the Dowry, the Husband and Wife beeing there present. The indifferenter sort of Citizens, doe vse to giue them thirty Ducates in readie Mony, a Negro Seruant-Maid, of fifteen ducates price, a certaine piece of cloth, made of Silke and Linnen in diuers colours, Chekerwise, and other fine Cloathes of Silke, for her to weare on her head.

It is their custome also, to present her with a paire of Shoes, fairely wrought, and two paire of Choppinoes, painted with Gold and Siluer, and diuers other small gifts; as Combs, Fans, Perfumes, &c. After that the writings are drawn, and that both the one side and other are contented; the Husband taketh all his company there present, to dine with him; and the Father to the Bride, doth the like to all his bidden guests.

Their rude & grosse maner of feeding.

What maner of custome they obserue in their marriages.

The reasonable sort of Citizens gift.

What the Brides father may give to his daughter beside eu-rome.

The manner of furnishing the Bride.

Furniture for the house.

The manner of bringing the Bride home to her husbands house.

If the said Father will adorne his Daughter with any Garments, he may doe it in respect of his owne Gentility: because, beside the Money giuen to the Husband, he standeth not bound to any other charges; although hee may iustly be taxed with shame, if he be not more bountifull. Now adaies, beside the thirtie Ducates giuen in help of the Dowry; the Father (or hee that vnder-taketh the matter in-like case) spendeth two or three hundred ducates in furnishing the Bride, as well in garments, as furniture for household, but giueth neither House, Vine-yard, nor possession. The custome is, to make her 3. gownes of fine cloth, and three of Silke, cyther of Taffata, Sattin. or Damaske; many Smockes; many Sheets for bedding, listted with Silke on either side; Pillowes and Boulisters. She hath giuen her also eight Beds, foure to be laid vp in store, in conuenient Presses made for the purpose; two for present vse on the Bedsted, the Tikes whereof are grosse and strong, and two other made of leather, which are held as Ornaments to the Chamber. Three faire Couerlets, such as we tearme Quilts, but made of wol-len-cloth, and lined with linnen: one of which is first laid vpon the bed, and then another of Silke ouer it, whereof also she hath three in number, with others made conuenient for Summer; beside hangings for the Wals, fairely fringed and buttond with Silke; And this is as an addition to the Dowry, but many times much more, whereby many Gentlemen haue sustained great impou-erishing.

When the husband bringeth home his new wife to his house, she is first placed in a Tabernacle of wood, made with eight gazings or windowes, al couered with cloth of Gold and Silke, and carried by eight Porters on their heads; being accompanied with her Father, Friends, Husband, Flutes, Trompets, and Drums, beside a great number of lighted Torchcs, and the Friends to the Husband march before with their Torchcs, and the Father with his Friendes following, passing on to the great market place, by the great Temple. When they are come into the Market place, the Husband there salureth the Father and Kintred of his new wife; but shee, without any further attending, goeth home to the house, ther expecting him in her Chamber. The Father, Brother, and Vnckle, goe with her so farre as the Chamber doore, and there present her to her Husbands Mother. So soone as she is entred into the Chamber, the husband sets his foot vpon his wiuers foot, which being done, they are left there shut vp together: while they of the house prepare a banquet, & one woman remaineth at the Chamber doore, vntil the Bridegroom hath had the honour of the Brides virginity, and the woman then going to her, receiveth a Cloath from her somewhat tinctured with blood, wherewith she goeth among all then present at the banquet, shewing it openly in her hand, expressing with a loud voyce, that the Bride was found to be a virgine. Herevpon, the Husbands Kinred giues her food to eate, and afterward, being accompanied with other weomen, she goes to the House of her husbands mother, where she is likewise honoured, and set downe to meat. But if it so happen, that the Husband findes not his wife to be a virgin; he returnes her backe to her Father and mother, and no one wil eat a iot of the banquet, but depart discontented, as a manifest signe of her shame.

They vse three seuerall Feasts or meetings; The first, is the same night when the Bride is brought home; the second, is the next night after, and then none but women are inuited. The third, is the seauenth night following, whereat the Brides Father, Mother, and Kinred, are al present. On that day, the father vseth to send no meane presents to the Husbands house, beside Comfits, and other banqueting stufte, and it is seauen daies before the Husband goeth forth of his doores; in all which time of his not being scene abroad, a certaine quantity of Fishes is bought each day, and duclie brought him home to his house. Afterward, either the Mother, or some other woman (in her stead) doth cast those Fishes vpon the Brides feete; which they hold to be an exceeding good augurie, and beside, it hath bin a custome of very ancient vse among them: Beside these fore-named Feasts; there are two other also in the Fathers House. The one is, the day before he sends his Daugh-ter

The ceremony in the Bride Chamber.

The Brides shame, being found no virgine.

The Brides three Banquets.

An augury & obserued Custome.

The Feasts in the fathers house.

Of decking the Bride.

The Bride carried to bee publickely scene.

The Order obserued in their dancing among men,

The womans maner of dancing.

The dyet of Gentlemen & Merchants

The dyet of the poor

ter to her husband, & then inuiting the other friendes, the whole night is spent in Feasting and Dauncing. On the day following, the women come thither, that vse to decke and adorne the Bride, there they trim her haire, rub her cheekes, and paint them red, as also her hands & feete blacke, with a certaine tincture that continueth but a while, and this day the second Feast is performd. Then is the Bride placed vpon a caried Scaffold, to be publickly seen as she passeth along; in which time, meate is prepared and deliuered to all them that adorned the Bride. And when the wife is come to the house, all her Husbands dearest Friends, doo send thither certaine Dishes of Bread fryed in Oyle, with others made of Honey, and diuers pieces of roasted flesh; and the Husband (having inuited manie of his Friends) deuideth these seuerall presents among them.

In their Dancing, which continueth all the Night time, they haue both Musicians and Singers, who conforming their voyces to the Instruments, do make their Musicke verie pleasing. No more daunceth then one alone; and when hee hath finished his dance, he taketh a piece of money out of his mouth, and throwes it on the Table before the Singers. And if any friend will do honour to him that danceth, he performeth it on his knees; and then sticking diuers pieces of money on his face, the Musicians presently take it off. Women also haue their Dauncing, but seperately aside from the men, hauing likewise variety of Daunces; Singers, and Musitions, which order is especially obserued, when the bride commeth a Virgin vnto her Husband: but when shee commeth to a second time of marriage, the solemnity consisteth of the lesser reputation; and then they giue course Beefe in their feasting, Mutton of the Ewe, and boyled Hennes. But when they mingle diuers kindes of pottage with their meate, they vse to set twelue great dish-ful before the guests, in a great round platter made of Wood, the Feast consisting often or twelue persons; and this is obserued among Gentlemen and Merchants. The meaner sort of people, vse a kinde of pottage, made with round molded Bread in it, like to the Lajagna, used in Italy in their Menestra; & therein is cut great slices of coorse flesh, al mingled together in a large wooden Platter, which they eat with their handes, vsing no Spooones, and ten persons may feed at one of those Dishes.

They vse also another kind of feasting, at the circumcising of their Male-Children; which is seauen dayes after the Childes Birth; whereto the Father calleth the Barber, and other inuited frends, on whom he bestoweth a supper. Which being ended, euery one of the Guestes, giueth a gift to the Barber or Circumciser: some a Ducate, some two, some halfe a Ducate, some more or lesse, according to their seuerall ability. These perticuler gifts of money, are laid each after other, vpon the Barbers childs face (if he haue any, or some other for him:) which Childe pronounceth euery giuers name; quantity of gift, and thanketh him for it; and then the Barber circumciseth the child; which being done, they dance and feast in the fore-named manner. But if it bee a Daughter, lesse ioy is declared.

13. There remaineth also in Fez, certaine Trackes or Imitations, of some Feasts concerning the Christians, wherewith they vse diuers words vnkown vnto themselues. On Christmas day at night, (commonly called Christs birth day) they vse to eat a kind of Pottage, made of seuen sundrie diuersitie of Herbs, as Coleworts, Turnops, Carrets, and such like; being dressed and prepared with all kinds of round Pulse, as Beanes, Pease, & wheat, which is eaten that night, insted of a delicate confection.

The first day of the yeare, Children, masked with Vizards on their faces, vse to go to Gentlemens Houses; there to get variety of Fruits, singing diuers songs made fir for the purpose. Vpon the day, called S. Johns day, in euerie street they make verie great fires of straw. And as a Childe beginnes to haue his teeth grow, his Parents make a Feast for other Children, and they tearme this Feast Dentilla, which is a proper Latine word. They haue many other Customes and maners in recitall of their Auguries, which I haue scene obserued in Rome; & in some other Cities of Italy. A Ceremony also there is verie frequent amongst women, when as eyther their Husbandes, Fathers, Mothers, or Bre-

Circumcising their Children, and a feast therfore prepared.

The customary Order of their Feasts, and maner of mourning for the dead.

The first day of the yeare.

On S Johns day.

The feast called Dentilla.

A Custome amongst the women at the death of their Husbandes, &c

Brethren chance to dye, they then meet together, and despoiling them of their vsuall wearing Garments, do put on verie coorse sackcloath. They take the soile and filth from their pots and pans; and therewith do rub and besmeare their faces. Then causing some base and rude men to come to them, cloathed in Womanish Garments, beating on square Drummes; to the sound thereof, they sing extemporall Lamentations, and mournfull Verses, made in the praise of Death.

Funerall Songs and Complaints.

At the end of euery Verse, the Women crie with loude voyces, beating their Faces and Breasts so violently, that blood yssueth forth in great abundance: they rent and teare their haire likewise; mourning and crying bitterly all the way they passe along, and this behauiour lasteth seven dayes together. Afterward, hauing respited the space of forty daies, this time is no sooner finished, but they renewe againe their former complaininges, and so hold on, for the space of three dayes more.

No foode drest in the dead mans house, while his body is there.

This Custome is obserued amongst the Vulgar and common people: but they of better quality, do mourne more moderately, and without any such violent beating. Their friends vse to come and comfort them; and all their neere Kindred, doo send them diuers kindes of foode to eate: because in the dead bodies house, so long as it remaineth there, they vse not to dresse any meate, nor doe the Women accompanie the dead bodie, although it be their Father or Brother.

Of Dooles or Pigeons, and their manner of keeping them.

14. There are men in the Cittie, that take delight in keeping of Pigeons, whereof they haue store of such as are verie faire, and of diuers colours. They keepe them in certaine large Cages, on the top of their Houses, shaped after the manner of the Apothecaries shoppes: opening twice, euerie morning, and towards the Evening, because they conceiue much pleasure in seeing them flye, and such as flye oftencst, and speedyest, are most esteemed.

The feast day of Mahomets birth.

And because many times it hapneth, that one mans Pigeons do mingle themselves among anothers; they quarrel and fall out, yea, and go together by the eares about them; yet to prevent this distemper, they keepe men on purpose; who stand on the top of the Cages, with nets fastened to the end of long Canes; and when their Maisters Pigeons would flye among the Neighbours, they take them in that Net. In the rowe where the Colliers stand, are seauen or eight Shoppes, where nothing else but only Pigeons are solde.

10

15. Amongst the more ciuill and Gentler sort of men, no other kinde of play or sport is vsed, but the Chess onely, according to the ancient obseruation. They haue diuers other manner of Pastimes, but they are rude, and vsed by the vulgar people only. At certaine times of the yeare, the young men gather together, and they of one streete, doo fight against them of another, with Staues and Cudgels.

Their manner of Sportes & Pastimes.

The sporte of youth, proving (many times) from iest to earnest

20

Sometime it chaunceth, that eyther side do grow into such heat; as from iest they fall into earnest, yea, and kil one another, especially at the solemne Feastes, when the Assembly of these youthfull people is made out of the Cittie. When they can no longer fight with Cudgels, they fall to hurling stones at each other, & will not giue ouer so long as day-light lasteth. Whereupon, when the Bargello is not able to part them; he seazeth on some of them, and commits them to prison, afterward punishing them thorough the Cittie.

Dangerous sporte in the night time.

30

In the night time also, some Wilde bloodes will yssue forth of the City, carrying Weapons with them, and run into the Gardens and Fields. But if they meete with as hot resistors (as many times they do) they fight verie fiercely and cruelly together, bearing alwaies deadly hatred to each other: but manie times, they meete with sounde and seuaire chastisement.

Poets in their vulgarrongue

40

16. There are also many Poets, who compose Vulgar Verses of diuerse matters, but especially of loue; some describing their owne Loue, which they beare to Women, and other to Maids, many times setting downe the affected parties name, without vsing anie shame or respect. These Poets euerie yeare, on the Feast day of Mahomets Natjuitie, do write sundry Songs in praise thereof; and meeting together early in the morning, in the Market place of the Capo di Consoli,

The feast day of Mahomets birth.

50

Consoli, they ascend vp into his seat, wher euer y one (each after other) doth duellie rehearse his song in presence of the people. And he that is iudged to haue done best, and most elegantly declared his owne meaning, that man for the whole yeare ensuing, is called and accounted as Prince of al the other Poets.

A Prince of Poets.

But in the time of the famous Kinges of the house of Marino, the King that then liued, vsed to inuite all the Learned wits in the Cittie, where making a banquet for all the worthiest Poets, he would haue them to recite their Verses seuerally (made in commendation of Mahomets Birth) in his owne royall presence; but it was vpon an open Scaffold, and in the companie of many deepe vnderstanding men, according to whose iudgement, the most commended person had giuen him by the King, an hundred Ducats, a horse, a Woman-slauie, and all the Garments which the King at that time did weare. To all the rest he gaue fiftie Ducates for each man, that no one might depart from him vnrewarded. But it is nowe about an hundred and thirtie yeares, since (with the declination of the Kingdome) this custome ceased.

The bounty of a Heathen King to Poets

17. For Children to be enstructed in Learning, there are about two hundred Schooles, each bearing the forme of a goodly great Hall, with seats or degrees round about, for Children to sit on. The Master teacheth them to read and write, not in any Bookes, but in certaine great Tables. And the Lessons read each day vnto them, are sundry clauses of the Alchoran, which beeing fully reade ouer in two or three yeares, and then beginning at the Originall againe, a child learneth verie readily, and containeth euery thing well in memory, proceeding so stil on for the space of seauen yeates.

Schooles of learning for the instruction of Children.

No instruction in Bookes.

The Maister also teachieth them some fewe Rules of Orthographie; but both that kinde of erudition, and the Grammar, is ordinarily read in the Colledges, as likewise the other Sciences. These Maisters haue small stipendarie Wages, but as Children do learne to certaine limited places in the Alchoran, their Fathers stand obliged to gratifie their Maisters with some gift. And when the child hath learned the whole Alchoran, then Rules in Orthography.

The Schoole-Maister wages

his Father maketh a solemne Feast to all Schollers of that Schoole, wher at his Sonne is adorned with Garments like a Lords sonne; and riding vpon a goodlie great Horse, and of no meane Value, (which Horse, as also the Garments, the Castillane of the Cittie Royall, standeth bound to prouide him) al the other schollers, mounted likewise on horsebacke, do accompanie him home vnto his Fathers house; and as they enter in thereat, they sing many Songs in the praise of GOD; and of the Prophet Mahomet. And then is the Feast made to the Schollers, and al his Fathers Friends; each of the vvhich Friends, do giue some giift to the Maister: and then, the Sonne putteth on his owne Cloaths againe, because the other do appertaine to the Maister. And this is their yearly obserued custome.

The Schollers triumph for the best learner.

They vsed also, to make a Feaste for these Schollers, on the birth day of Mahomet, and then the Father must send a Torch to the Schoole, whereby euerie Childe bringeth his owne Torch: some whereof, do waigh thirty pound waight, some more, and some lesse, according to the persons quality. Those Torches are verie faire, well made, adorned and beautified round about, with diuers Frutages made of Wax, and these Torches doo burne from the breake of day, til the Sun be risen; all which time, the Master bringeth in diuers Singers, that sing the praises of Mahomet; and so soone as the Sun is risen, the Feast is furnished. These are the greatest profits of the Maisters, because sometime they sell their Waxe for an hundred Ducates, and sometime for more, according to the number of their Schollers. No man payeth anie Dutie for his Childes schooling, because the Schooles were founded on Almes, which were left vnto them by diuers persons. The Schollers, not only of these Schooles, but likewise of the Colledges, haue two dayes vacancie euerie weeke, and then they neither read, nor studie.

The Schollers Feast on Mahomets birth day.

The Maisters greatest benefit by their wax Torches.

18. There are a great number of Wizarde or Sooth-sayers, which deuide themselues into three kindes, or (as we may rather say) qualities. The first, are certaine men that Diuine and foretell things by the Art of Geomancy, making diuersity of figures; and are paid for euerie one of them, according as the vse

Of Sooth-sayers and Diuiners, or Foretellers of thinges to come.

Diuiners by the Art of Geomancie.

of

Diiners by a Basin of water.

Strange answers of De-uils in a Basin
of water.

Women Wizzards pretending great familiarity with Deuils.

Sabacat the Name of the woman Wiz-zard.

of them (for imployment) is needfully required. The second, are some others, who putting water into a Glasse Basin, and they letting fall a drop of Oyle into the saide water, which will appear bright and transparant, like a Glasse: they then tell the By-standers, that therein they do beholde Deuils, troope vpon troope, seeming like to an Armie of manie stoute Warriours, offering to plant down their Tents or Pauillions, euen as they march along the way; some on the water, and some on the Land. Then as the Wiz-zard pretendeth this confusion to be appeased, he demandeth of them that com for information, such matters as they seeke to be resolned in: whereof he then questioneth those Deuils in the Water, and they make him aunswere, by signes, noddess, becke of the hand, or winke of the eye. Beholde, what grossenesse is in them, that will credite these fallarions.
Sometimes, hee will put the Basin into the hands of a Childe, of eight or nine yeares old, and aske of him if he doe not see such & such a Deuill, whereunto the simple Child answereth, that he doth see such shapes as he tels him.

This do many Fooles verie constantly beleuee, and spend much mony on such shamelesse deceiuers. The third sort, are women, who perswade the common people, that they holde amitie with De-uils of diuers kindes: and therefore, they tearme some to be red Deuils; others they say are white Deuils, and others they affirme to be blacke Deuils. When they would fortel vpon any ones request, they perfume themselues with certaine sweet Odours, and then they perswade the par-tie, that the Deuill which shee then calleth, doth instantly enter into hir person.
Heereupon, suddenly shee changeth her voice, faigning that it is the spirite which speaketh by her tongue. Then the Man or Woman that is come to bee resolued in somewhat by her, demaundeth what shee pleaseth of the spirit, with great Re-uerence and Humility: and receyuing answere, leaueth a good gift for that deuill, and so departeth, euen as wise as when she came thither.

But such men, as haue ioyned VVisedome with honesty, and wel experiented such matters, doo tearme this VVo-man Soothsayer Sabacat, which aunswereth to the like Interpretatiō, as Fricatri- ces doth in the Latine toong. For indeed they haue a wicked Custome, in taking Carnall knowledge one of another; and therefore, cannot be expressed by an honester vocable.

Moreouer, when among such VVo-men as come to them, for information in things that they desire, they perceiue any one to be faire and beautiful, they becom enamored of her, euen as a young man of his affected Mistris. And then, in form of the Deuil, no other recompence is required of her, but amorous coniunction in familiar entertainment. The simple woman, beleeuing that shee shal haue the pleasures of a Spirit, sometimes is drawn to consent; and many haue beene therewith so delighted, that they grewe desirous for to ioyne in society with them.
Whereupon, counterfetting sickenesse, one of these Wizards must needs be sent for, and (many times) the foolish Husband is made the Messenger.

She presently discouereth her desire to the Wizard, who afterward reuealeth it to her Husband; telling him, that a Deuill is entered into her bodie, and that if he be desirous of her helth, it is very conuenient, that he giue her Liberty to make one in the number of that Societie; and secretly to practise the Art among them.
The Gull-Husbande beleeuing, giueth his consent; and (to expresse his greater folly) maketh a sumptuous Feast for the whole Order: whch being ended, they all fall to Dauncing, certaine Negroes playing on their Instruments, and so shee is referred to her fortune amongst them.
But some Husbandes will driue the Deuill out of their Wiues, with the solemn founde and blowes of a good Bastinado.
And others, dissembling themselues to be possessed, do deceyue the Deceyuer, euen by such meanes as his wife was beguiled.

19 There is likewise another sort of Wizards, who are called Muhazzimmin, that is, Enchanters. These are reputed to be verie powerful, in deliuering mad-men, or such as are possessed with euill spirits: not for any other reason, but that sometimes their endeuor sorteth to effect; but if it succede not, they tearme the Deuill to be an Infidell; or else, that he is some Celestiall spirit.

The maner of his Coniuring, is thus; he Fleahly fruits of Diuination

Of Women that desire to ioyne in society with these Wizards.

Fit Physicke for Foolish Women.

Of Enchaunters or Con-iurers.
Muhazzimin.

The manner of his Coniuration, & dealing with a party possessed.

* A hidden science of heavenly and Diuine mysteries, professed by the Rab- bies.

The order of making a Figure after their manner of Cabala.

The twelve Months after the Latines.

he writeth certaine Carracters, and formeth Circles on a Chimney Hearth, or other like place; afterward, hee painteth some signes on the hand or foreheade of the partie possessed; and then sweeteneth himselfe with diuers perfumes. Thus the enchantment being made, he demandeth of the Spirit how he entered into that bodie? By what part? What hee is? And how hee is named? At length, hee commaundeth him to depart. Some there are of another sort, that worke by a rule called Zairagia, that is, * Cabala. But they fetch not their operations from the Scripture, because this Science of theirs is held to be naturall. And indeed, many of them know howe to giue infallible answeres, to matters that are demanded of them. But such a rule is very difficult, because he that will preuaile therein, must needs bee no lesse a perfect Astrologer, then an Abbachist or Arithmatician. Sometimes, he maketh a Figure, which asketh so long time in making, as from Morning till night, in the Summer season; and it is in this forme.

He maketh many Circles one within another, & in the first he shapeth a crosse, at the Confines whereof, hee setteth downe the foure quarters, East, West, North, and South. Within the sayde Crosse, that is; where all his parts meet together, he formeth the two Poles; and without the first Circle, hee frameth the foure Elements. Afterwardes, diuiding the said Circle into foure parts, he deuideth the following Circle into as manie more; and then euery part he deuideth into seauen parts, noting downe in euery one of them, certaine great Arabian Carracters, which are twenty eight, or twentie nine Carracters for each of the Elements. In another Circle, hee shapeth the seauen Planets: In another, the xii. Signes: In another, the twelue Moneths of the yeare, according to the Latines: In another, the eight and twenty Tabernacles (or as we tearme them, Houses) of the Moon: In another, the three hundred, threescore and five daies of the year; and without all these, the foure principal windes. He taketh then one letter only, of the thing to bee demaunded; and then, multiplieth it with all the matters numbered, vntill he commeth to know what number the Carracter beareth. Afterward, he deuideth it in a certain manner, and then putteth it into some parts, according as the Carracter is; & in what Element it standeth, insomuch, that after the multiplication, diuision, and dimension, he perceiueth, that the Carracter agreeth with that number whereto it is aduanced. Then respecteth he that found Carracter, according as hee did the first; and so traducing it on from degree to degree, it passeth the eight and twentie seuerall places, or Carracters. Thereof then hee composeth a sentence, and of that sentence a short Oration, which is the answer to the question demaunded, and that Oration euermore agreeth with one measured Verse; beeing the first of those Arabian Verses, which are called Ethauil, consisting of eight and twelue Sillables, answerable to the Arabian Metricall Art.

In the said Verse then, is comprehended the fore-named Carracters, because of them it is compounded, and from thence ariseth a true and vndoubted answer: for first, is discerned the matter demaunded, and afterward the answer to the cause demaunded. The like course as this neuer erreth: and in this Cabala of theirs, consisteth an admirable Art: for, neuer was seene a matter (held to bee naturall) that appeareth more super-naturall and Diuine, then this their Cabala.

One of these Figures was sometimes made, in the Colledge of King Abululan in the Cittie of Fez, and the open place where it was made, was paved with fine smooth white Marble, euery quadrant of the place, containing fiftie yarden in length; and two third parts of the place, was employed with such things as belonged to the framing of the saide Figure: three seuerall persons also were verie seriously busied in making it, each man hauing the charge of a proportioned part; and yet they could scarcely conclude it in a whole day. Another was likewise made in Thunis, by a verie excellent Mayster, whose father had commented on the said rule in two Volumes; and such as be acquainted with this rule, are held to be verie singular men.

20 There are also many Learned men, who are stiled by the name of wise men, and morrall Phylosophers, who obserue some other Lawes then were commanded by Mahomet. Som of them are Arabian verses, tearmed Ethauil, wherin consisteth their chiefe Cabala.

An apparant prooue of this kinde of Figures, by seueral Masters performed.

Rules and diuersities in the Lawes of Mahomet.

are accounted Catholicke, and others not; but the vulgar people repute them to be Saints, although they admit many things for lawful, which were prohibited by the Lawes of Mahomet. As by way of example: The Law forbiddeth, that no song whatsoever of Loue, shalbe sung by the rules of Musicke; and yet these men say, that they may do it.

There are Orders in this Lawe, and many Rules, euerie one of which, hath his chiefe defence, and Doctors also, to defend those Rules, exercising manie Workes, concerning spirituall life. This Sect began fourescore yeares after Mahomet; and the first and most famous Author thereof, was named Elhesenibru Abilhasen, in the Cittie of Basra, who began to giue certain Rules to Schollers, but wrote downe none.

An hundred yeares after being passed, there was another most woorthy man in like manner, called Elbarit Ibnu Efed, of the Cittie of Bagaded, who wrote a learned worke Vniuersally to all his disciples. But afterward, both by the Lawyers and Byshoppes, his opinion was depraued, & all such condemned as obserued those Rules.

About foure-score yeares after, this Sect beganne to spring vppe againe, and had another verie famous man, as defender thereof, who was followed by manie Disciples, and preached the same Doctrine publickely. So that all the Lawiers (assisted by the Byshoppes) condemned both him and all his followers vnto death, concluding, that each man of them should loose his head. Which when the chiefe Leader of this sect herd, immediately he wrote a Letter vnto the Byshoppes, entreating them to afford him so much fauour, as that hee might Dispute with the Lawyers: and if they could conuince him, hee would willinglie dye: but if he could giue demonstration, that his Doctrine was better then theirs, it was no honest case, that so many poore Innocents (by false Calumnie) shoulde perish.

This request seemed to the Bishops to be lawfull and iust, and they graunted his tequest, so that the Learned man came to Dispute with them; and preuailed with such successe, that hee vanquished all the Lawyers, and the chiefe Byshop (in teares) conuerted to bee one of the same Sect: and (while he liued) continually fauoured it, causing many Monasteries and Colledges to be builded, for the followers of that man. This Sect continued for another hundred yeares, vntill out of the greater Asia, came Maliosath the Emperör, whose stirpe and originall was of the Turkes. He persecuted this Sect, some of them flying to Cairo, some into Arabia, and they continued twenty yeares in this expulsion, which was till the raigne of Caselsab, Nephewe to Maliosath, whose chiefe Counsellour (that was a man of great spirite, named Nidam Elmule) being of this sect, did set it on foote againe, planting and combining it in such firme manner, that by the labours of a very learned man, called Elgazuli (who composed a worthy work, deuided into seauen seuerall Bookes) the Lawyers and followers of this sect, were reconciled together. Whereupon, the Lawyers had the Title of Doctors, and Conseruers of the Prophets Lawes; and the other were nominated vnderstanders and Reformers of those Lawes. This Vnion continued, till the ouerthrowe of Bagaded by the Tartars, which was in the yeare, 556. of Lhegira. And as yet hath hapned no ditision, because all Affrica and Asia are full of those Disciples.

In those dayes, none might enter into this Sect; except learned men in euerie faculty; and (aboue al) deepe vnderstanders of the Scriptures; for the better defence of them, and confutation of the contrarie side. But now, within these hundred yeares, euerie ignorant fellowe will enter thereinto, affirming, that there is no neede of learning: because, after knowledge of the truth, the blessed Spirite is sufficient for them of cleane heart: This and other like weake reasons doo they alledge in their owne behalfe. So that leauing the commaundements as superfluous, yet necessarie to the rule in parte, these men intend no other Offices, but euen what the Lawyers do appoint, adding themselves vnto all the pleasures, which are helde lawfull by the rule; and therefore, they make many Feastings, sing wanton amorous songs, & vse long dances. At certaine times, some of these men, tearing off their Garments, according to the proposed matter of the song, or answerable to the idle fantastic then hapning in their brain, wil say: that euen then

The expulsion and persecution of this Sect.

The re-establisment of this Sect, and agreement with the Lawyers.

Who were admitted into this Sect in elder times.

Alteration of these latter dayes.

Feasts, wanton songs, and Dances.

The first Author of this Sect.

Another Author of the same Sect.

A third Author of this Sect.

A request made for disputation with Mahomets Lawyers.

then he is heated with the fire of Diuine loue. But I rather suppose him to bee warmed, with the superfluous plentie of meates, because euery one of these vnmanerly men, will deuoure so much meate, as is thought too much superfluitie for three men. Or which I rather thinke to bee more true, this heate proceedeth of intemperate desire, and lasciuious beaulty loue to yong beardless Boyes. For it is no rare matter, when a Gentleman inuiteth one of these chiefe Maisters to his wedding, bringing all his Schollers with him; they at the beginning of the Feast, do say Prayers, and sing diuine songs. But when all is finished, the elders putting off their gowns to dance, if any of them happen to fall, hee is quickly holpen on his feet by one of the yong Lads, who therefore is sequited with many lasciuious kisses. Heerupon grew a Prouerbe, That the Hermits banquet, is in euerie mans mouth in Fez. Signifying thereby, that the feast is no sooner ended, but euerie boy must serue as his Maisters bride; for, they may not take any Wiues, and therefore, they are termed Hermits.

21 Among this Sect, are certain rules held to be hereticall, both by the one and other sort of Doctors, because they not only differ from eithers Lawes, but also from their faith. For some there be, that haue a firme opinion, that a man by his owne good workes, by fasting, and by abstinence, may purchase to himself an Angellicall nature: because say they, they purify his heart and vnderstanding in such maner, as he cannot sin thogh he would, but it behooueth first, that he passe thowrow fifty degrees of discipline. And albeit he should sinne, before he haue passed those fifty degrees, yet God will not ascribe it to him as sin. And these men (at the first) do keepe very strange, & seldom seene the like Fast; but afterwarde, they fall to all pleasures in the World. They haue also a strict rule or order, made by an eloquent and Learned man, in four Volumes, his name was Esseueradi de Sebi auara, a City in Corasan. There was another Author named ibnulfarid, who compiled all his doctrine in verie elegant verses: but those verses are full of Allegories, seeming to intreate on nothing else but loue. VVherfore, one called Elfargani; Commented on the saide worke, and drew thence the rules and degrees which were to bee obserued.

This Poet was of such elegancie, as others (his followers of the same Sect) vsed to sing none but his Verses at their Feasts, so that for some 300. yeates since, not oong was held more polished and delicat, then that receiued from him.

These men are of the minde, that the Spheares, the Firmament, the Elements, the Planets, and all the Starres, are one God, and that no Law or Faith can bee in error, because they inuagine all men to honor in their souls, that which deserueth to be adored. They belieue also, that the knowledge of God is contained in a man, named Elcrob, elected and partaking with God; and, as concerning knowledge, a meere God. There are likewise, forty other men besides these, who are termed Elanted, that is, Boughs or branches, because they are of a lesser degree, and of more inferiour knowledge. But when the Elcrob dieth, another is created out of these fortie men, and he commeth out of the number of seauenty other.

There are likewise 75. other men, whose title I doo not verie well remember: but when one of these seauentie dieth, another is added from these to fulfill their number. Their Law bindeth them, to walke vnknowne in the world, disguised like fooles, or publicke noted sinners, or of the vilest men that can be. VVherfore, vnder these or the like shaddowes, many wicked minded men wander thorough Affrica, starke naked, making publicke apparence of their owne shame, & are of such vnbridled disposition, that euen without any respect at all, like vnto brute Beasts, in the midst of an open market place, they will deale carnallie with women; and yet notwithstanding, the Vulgar sort do repute them to be Saints. Of these base people, there are store in Thunis, but many more in Egypt, and especially in Cairo.

It happened on a time in Cairo, in the Market place, called Bain Eleasrain, one of these afore-named men, tooke a verie faire young Woman, that was newly come foorth of a Stoue or Bath, and bringing her into the middelt of the Market place, hee there hadde carnall knowledge of her. So soone as hee hadde lefte the Woman, all the Beholders came ruining to touch her Garments

The custome at a Gentlemans marriage.

A Prouerbe in Fez.

Concerning Rules, Sects, and superfluous credulity in manie men.

A strange opinion of mans begetting an Angellicall Nature.

Esseueradi de Sebi auara.

Ibnulfarid.

Elfargani.

An elegant Poet.

The strange opinion of some men.

Elcrob, knowing as a God.

Elections out of diuers degrees.

A counterfeit cloake for much wickednesse.

Horrible brutishnesse.

A true History of their vilenesse, done in an open Market place in Cairo.

ments, as a matter of Deuotion, because she had beene touched by an holy man. And they saide among themselues, that the holy man did but faigne the action of sinne, and did not commit the deede. When the matter was made knowne to her husband, hee accounted it as a verie gracious fortune befallne him; and praying God for it, made a solemne Feast & Banquet, giuing Almes also for, so happy a blessing. The Iudges and learned men in the Lawes, sought all means how to punish the runnagate: but they were in danger to be slaine by the people, because (as I haue formerly saide) such villaines are held in especiall veneration amongst the common people, and they will bestowe great gifts and presents on them.

22 Certaine other rules, are obserued among some, that tearme themselues to be Cabalistes, who haue a strange order of Fasting; not eating the Flesh of anie creature: but haue certaine meates, and appointed Habites, ordained for euerie houre both of the day and Night. They haue also perticuler Praiers, according to the dayes and Moneths, deliuering those Prayers, by the way of number; and wearing on their bodies certain Quadrets, painted with Carracters, and engrauen numbers. They vse to say, that good spirits do appeare vnto them, and speake with them, giuing them notife of all thinges vniuersally done in the world. Of this sort, there was an excellent Doctor, named El Boni, who composed their Rules & Prayers, as also their Quadrets.

His most famous Workes are about eight in number, one whereof is named Ellumba Ennoramita, that is; The Demonstration of Light, and therein is appointed their Prayers and Fastes. Another is termed Semful Mcharif, that is, The Sun of Knowledge, wherein is contained the manner of making the Quadrets, and it declareth the benefit ensuing by them. A third, is entituled Sirru Lasme; Elchafue, that is, The Vertue contained in the ninety nine names of God, &c.

There is an Order in this Sect, which is called the Order of Sunach, that is; of certaine Eremites, who liue in Woodes and solitarie places, and feed on nothing but Hearbes, Rootes, and wilde fruites;

no man beeing any way able to vnderstand their liues, because they flye and shunne all dwellings of men. But I shall wander too farre from my intended purpose, if I should perticulerly followe the relation of all the Mahometane sundrie Sects.

Therefore, whosoever is desirous of further intelligence in this case, let him read the Workes of one who is named Elacfani, who defusedly discourseth on the diuersitie of Sects, proceeding from the Religion of Mahomet, which are seuentie two especiall sects, and euerie one holdeth his owne to be good and true, as hoping thereby for saluation. But the truth is, in this present age, there are no more of these Sects to be found, but two. One is that of Lesburi, which extendeth it selfe thorow all Affrica, Egypt, Soria, Arabia, and all Turkey. The other of Imamia, which runneth through all Persia, and some Citties of Corasan. This held the Sophi King of Persia, and by the like Sects was almost all Asia destroyed, because they held (before) that of Lesburi; yet the saide King fought by strength of Armes oftentimes, to contayne himselfe in his owne Religion: but most certaine it is, that one Sect onely, is embraced within all the Mahometane Dominions.

23 In Fez also, there are certaine men, who are called Elcanesin, that attend only to finde out Treasures, which they beleeeue to haue beene buried in the Foundations of auncient ruines. This iddeot kinde of people, will go forth of the Cittie, entering into many Caues & Grottes, seeking there to finde the forenamed Treasures. For, they hold a verie strong and true opinion, that when the Romaines were enforced from the Emperie of Affrica, and fled to the Spanish Batica, they were enforced to burie vnder grounde, many verie rich and precious things, which they could by no means beare away with them, but left them there enchanted; and therefore, other Enchanters must be had to find out those treasures. Nor is there any want of such men, as will swear; that in such Caues they haue scene Golde and other Jewels of Siluer: but they could not get them thence, because they had not their enchantments readie, and their fitting perfumes.

Of the Cabalistes, & some other Sects.

Their manner of diet.

Their habite & Prayers.

Their apparitions.

El Boni, a famous Doctor

Ellumba Ennoramita.

Semful Mcharif.

Sirru Lasme; Elchafue.

The order of Sunach, being Hermites in Woodes.

Elacfani, who declareth all the Mahometan Sects.

The two severall Sectes at this day remaining.

Of Investigators or searchers for hidden treasures

* Now called Granado.

Greedines of gaine beguileth many ignorant people, and some beside, that thinke themselves wi. e.

Of Alchimists and what manner of men they are.

Geber a Greeke Alchimist.

Attogrehi another Author.

Mugaribi, of Granada.

Two sortes of Alchimists.

20 21

Of cozening beggerly Mountebanks,

perfumes. Whereupon, the people being led by this vain credality, do make search in the groundes, ouer-throwing thereby (oftentimes) many goodly buildings and Tombes, wandering (at some times) ten or twelue dayes iourney from Fez, because the Riches was drawne by enchantment so farre off. Nay more, they haue Bookes, wherein mention is made of certaine hills, and other obscure places, wherein manie wonderfull Treasures lye hidden, and are there kept by especiall Oracles.

24. Nor is there any want of Alchimists, but they abound in verie great number, that bestow their studie in this foolish vanity. And what are they? None but lowtith filthie Fellowes, that soil and pollute the world (more then any other) with sulphurous, noysome, and offensive smelles. In the night time, manie of them, doo ordinarily meete together in the great Temple, and there dispute on their false imaginations. For they haue many Bookes of that Art, composed by eloquent men: the first & cheefest whereof is intituled Geber, who liued an hundred yeares after Mahomet, and was reputed to bee a Greeke Renegado; whose workes, and all his receipts are Written in Allegories. They haue another Author; who hath written another great labour, called Attogrehi, that was Secretary to the Soldane of Bagaded. Likewise another Volume, composed in Songes, reuealing all the Articles of that Art, and the Maister was named Mugaribi, said to be of Granado. And it was Commented on by a Mamaluke of Damasco, who was a verie learned man in the Arte; but his Comment is more difficult to be vnderstood, then the Text it selfe. These Alchimists are of two kinds, the one labourereth in search of the Elixer, which is the materiall substance, that toucheth euerie Metall and Vaine; and the other seeketh after the multiplication of the quantities of Mettalles, by meanes of commixing one with another. But both their proper ends, is oftnest found to be falsifying monies, as may be noted in the most parts of Fez, without handling.

25. In this great Citie, there is also as great store of that vnprofitable rascality, which in Italy are known by the name of cozening Beggers and Mountebanks. These men go vp and downe the Market place, singing Romants, fabulous Songs, and such like follies, playing on Timbrils Viols, Harps, and other Instruments, selling to the ignorant multitude, certaine Mottos, and briefe words, which (they say) are much auailable against diuers euils. With these are ioyned another sort of vile men, who are all of a familie and Kindred, and they walke thorow the Citie, making Apes and Monkees to dance; and they haue liue Snakes and Adders Writhed about their naked neckes and armes. They can also make some figures of Geomancy, & pretend to fortell what shall happen to women. They lead goodly Stallions along with them, and for a certain price, will cause their Mares to be couered, that are thereto disposed, with promise of successfull speeding.

Heer could I pursu other perticularities; of like base minded men in the Citie, but it shall suffice to say; that (for the most part) they are displeasing and badly affected to straungers, albeit there is no great number of strangers, because the Citie is aboue an hundred miles distant from the Sea; and from the Sea thither, the waies are sharpe; and vneasie for trauailing strangers. I could say also, that the Seigniores are very proud, insomuch as fewe haue dealing with them. The like are the Doctors and Iudges, who (for reputations sake) will conuerse but with very few. Neuerthelesse, my conclusion is, that the Citie is faire, commodious, and wel ordered. Only in winter time, the streets are very dirty, so that men can hardlie passe along; but with certaine hie Choppinoes which they weare; yet much avoidance is made by the Channelles, for (by them) many streets are washed clean. But where there are no channells, the filthie is gathered vp, and conueyed thence vpon Beasts backs, and thrown into the riuer.

26. Without the Citie, on the west side, there is a Town or Burrough, which maketh about fine hundred fires: but all the houses are verie rude, and inhabited by vile people, such as are the Drivers of Cammells, the Carriers of Water, and Wood-cleauers for the Kinges provision. Yet is this Towne furnished with many shoppes, and all kindes of Artificers. There dwel likewise the cozening and dissembing Comurers.

Cozeners with liuing Snakes and Adders about their neckes.

The Authors excuse from further progression in this kinde.

Townes and Burroughes out of the Citie, & of what householdes they consist.

The chiefe street of the Towne, containing Garners for corn.

Beggars, the players on Instrumentes of small esteeme; and great store of Strumpets, but they are brutish, base, and fluttish. In the chiefe street of this towne, are many Ditches or Trenches, made by working Toolles and Instrumentes, because they are hewed out of a hard rock, where the Corne (for the great Lordes) was wont to be kept, when none els dwelt there, but the Keepers of Corne. But after the warres began, and the Corne was violently carried thence, the Granaries were made in the new Cittie of Fez; and these which were without, vtterly abandoned. These Trenches are of wonderfull greatnes; for, the verie least of them will containe a thousande quarters of Corn, and there are an hundred and fifty of those Trenches, which now are layde wide open, and many people (vnawares) haue falne into them: wherefore, certain little wals haue since beene made about them.

When secret executions are done, how they bestowe the dead bodies.

The Castellane of Fez, when it happeneth, that he performeth any secret execution, the offenders bodies are throwne into these Trenches, for there is a priuie doore out of the Rocke, made answerable and fitting for these places. In this Towne, all cozenages at Dice are lawfully permitted; and heere euerie man selleth Wine, keepeth a Tauerne, and publicke vse of Whoores: whereby it is iustly saide, that this Towne is the receite for all the filth in the City. After the twentieth houre is past, not one man is to be found in any of the shops, for then euerie one falleth to dauncing, sporting, drabbing, and drinking.

A Towne of Leapers only were relieved & maintained

There is another Burrough belonging to the Cittie, wherein diseased Leapers only are dwelling, containing about 200 houses. These sickly people, haue their Priour or chiefe Gouvernor, who gathereth the reuennues of many possessions, giuen only for Gods sake, by Gentlemen and others; and they are attended on in such good maner, as they find no want of any needful thing. This Priour hath the charge to see the City free from any such infected person: and if so be, that he find any one so diseased, to take himselfe presently out of the City, and bring him to this place appointed for the purpose. If any one happen to die there without heires, the one half of his estate is deliuered to the community of the Town; and the other belongeth to him that can shew best right for it. But if the leprous partie haue Children, his goodes are his Childrens.

The Office of the Priour, concerning his charge.

10

It is further to be noted, that in the number of these diseased Leapers, such also are included, as haue any white scabs or scurfe on their bodies, and other incurable infirmities. A little further from this Towne, there is another, wherein dwell none but Muleters, Potters, Bricklayers, & Carpenters, and this Towne maketh about 150. fires. Again, further yet westward is another great Towne, which can make about 400. fires: but they are very simple houses, and inhabited by poore wretched people, that either cannot, or will not abide in any better place. Neere to this Towne, is a great champain field, which extendeth it selfe from this Town to the Riuer, about two miles in length, and three in full bredth Westward. In this field, is a Market held euerie Thursday, and great store of people resort together with all kinde of Cattell. The Shoppe-Keepers also, dooth carrie thither their commodities, and make sale of them there in open Tents. They haue a custome, that some few Gentlemen being gathered together, they cause a Butcher to kill a Sheepe; and diuiding the body among themselues, they giue him nothing but the head and feete for his labour, for his skin they sell to the Wooll Merchant. Litle tol is paid for the goods sold in this Market; and yet I must tel ye, that neither in Affrica, Asia, nor in Italy, are so many people seen at a market, as at this, and such store of prouision, which surely is an vnvaluable matter.

20

30

40

50

Without the Cittie, are verie steepe Clifts or Rockes, which do engirt a large Trench of two Miles long: and on these Cliftes, they hew out the stones, wherewith they make their Lime and Chalke, whereby manie Gentlemen growe Rich, but none that are of any Nobilitie. Again, on the West part without the Cittie, are some hundered Cottages, erected on the Riuer side; which are kept by such as vse to White cloaths, and then spread them abroad in a faire field, neere to these Cottages, where they haue euerie thing fit and apt for the purpose, euen as wee see vsed in any other Nation elsewhere.

A Towne of Muleters, Potters, &c.

A great town of 400 house-holds.

A Custom on the Market day.

Rockes and Clifts without the Cittie.

Whitsters of cloath.

27 There

Of Common Graues and buriall without the Citie.

27 There are diuers Fields about the Cittie, wherein they burie their dead bodies; and these fields were giuen (for Gods sake) by sundry Gentlemen, onely for common buriall. They lay a Stone made Triangle-wise, but long and faire, vpon each graue. But on men of more woorth and reputation, they place at his head a Table of Marble, and another at his fecte, whereon Verses are engrauen of consolation after so harde and bitter a passage.

Somewhat lower, is his name sette downe, his house of descent, & likewise, the day and yeare of his death. Among these Verses, some are apt to cause ioy and comfort in death; but others, do rather encrease grieffe and Melancholy, yet patience must be vsed both in the one & other.

28 Without the Cittie likewise, is a faire Pallace towards the North, vpon an high hill, wherein manie Sepulchres are to bee seene, of diuers Kinges of the house of Marino, becing adorned with goodly Ornaments, stones of Marble, & Epitaphes verie ingeniously deuised; so that the cost and colours, do (in a maner) fill the Beholders eyes with much admired pleasure.

29 On the North side also, & Eastward and Southward, are many goodlie Gardens and Orchardes, stored with all kind of Fruits, growing on Trees, great and high. By the Gardens entrance, do diuers Armes of Riuer run along: but by the thicke growing of the Trees, the Orchardes appeare to be goodly woodes. The month of May doth water them verie plentifully, which is the chiefe cause of the fruits abounding, and alare of perfect goodnesse, except Peaches, which haue not any pleasing rellish. And it is imagined, that in due season of the yeare, 500. horse-loads of these fruits are sold dailie: and all those horse-loads of Fruite; are brought to one certaine place in the Citie, where they pay a limited taxation, and are there sold by out-cry, in presence of the Fruiterers. In the same market place also, are sold the Negro Bondslaues, and an appointed tax paide for euerie one of them. Moreouer towards the West, is a large plot of ground, containing xv. mile in bredth, and 30. in length, which is all

Of the Kings burial & Sepulchre.

Of Gardens and Orchardes

The Gardens and Orchardes yeilde great plentie of fruits.

The sale of Negro Bondslaues.

10

20

30

40

50

full of Springes and little Brooks, belonging to the great Temple. This place, is rented by the Gardiners; and there they sow Line, Mellons, Pompions, Citrons, Carrets, Nanons, Reddishes, Coleworts Cabbages, and such like Garden fruits in great plenty: so that it is verily supposed, that this place yeeldeth in Summer time, fiftene thousande horse-loades of these fruits, and as many in Winter. But verie true it is, that the Ayre there is verie bad, and the most part of the inhabitants haue their faces of a yellow colour, being continually subiect to Feauers, and verie many do die of them.

30 The New City of Fez, is round enguirte with two verie faire, high, and strong wals, being built on a verie goodly plaine, neere to the Riuer, distant from the olde Cittie (on the West part, and somewhat leaning toward the South) the space of a mile. Betweene the two wals, entereth and passeth the Riuer along, to wit, on the North side, where the Milles are; and the other current of the Riuer, is diuided into two streams: one running betweene new Fez and the olde, on the rocke side; and the other glideth on further, by certajn Vallies & Gardens neere to old Fez, vntil it getteth entrance thereinto on the South side. The other part of the riuer, enters at the Rocke, and passeth by the Colledge of King Abuttimam. This Citie was builded by Iacob, Son to Abdu Isch, first King of the house of Marino, who wonne the Kingdome of Marocco, and displaced the king, as such time as he was in warre with the King of Marocco; the King of Telenso, did very much mollest him, being leagued with the king of Marocco; because the house of Marino should not encrease.

So soone as Iacob had ended the war of Marocco, he bethought himselfe to be reuenged on the King of Telenso, and purposed warre against him, as being cotious of his Dominion, yet wel perceiuing, that the strongest Forts of the kingdome, were faire off distant from Telenso it selfe; whereon he concluded, to erect the Cittie in this place, and to translate thither the royall seate of Marocco, which he accordingly performd, naming the Cittie Bianca, but the vulgar people afterward called it new Fez.

The King caused the City to be diuided into

Of the Newe City of Fez, and the scituation thereof, as also the description of the Riuer current.

Who was the first Founder of New Fez, and vpon what occasion

New Fez named Bianca by the Founder.

The diuision of the City in to three parts

The first part

The 2. part.

The Market place of the City.

The Custos of the City.

The 3. part.

Temples in the Market-place, and stoues.

The Mint for Coyning money.

The place of the Golde-smiths.

into three parts, euerie one seperat from the other. In one part, he appointed his owne Pallace-Royall, and other Pallaces for his Children and Brethren, commanding each one to haue their Gardens of pleasure; and neere to his owne Pallace, he builded a verie goodly Temple, beautified in meruailous stately manner. In the second part of the Cittie, were erected faire great Stables, for the Horsses belonging to his Royall person, and many sumptuous Pallaces for his Captains, and men of greatest esteeme in his court. From the Gate on the West side, to the gate that looketh Eastward, was appointed and made the market place of the Cittie, containing in length, little lesse then a mile and a halfe, and there are the shops for Merchants, and Handi-crafts men of all sorts.

Neer to the West gate, by the second wall, is a verie goodly lodging, with many other thereto belonging, where the Custos of the Cittie, with his Soldiers & Officers, do make their abiding. And neere thereto, is two other great Muzes or Stables, well able to containe aboue three hundred Horsses, deputed only for seruice and guard of the Pallace. The third part of the Cittie, was assigned for dwellings to the Guard of the Kings roiall person, who were certaine stout men of the East, armed with long Bowes, because the vse of Crosse-browes, was not (as then) knowne in those parts. Now, at this present, are many goodly temples in the fore-named Market place, and very stately Stoues or Baths, made with great cost and charge. And neere to the Kings Pallace, is a place where the Money is coined, which is named the Zecca, which is made in forme of a quadrant Market place, with certaine Lodgings round about it, and those are the houses of the Maisters. In the middest thereof, is another faire dwelling, which is the house of the Lord of the Mint, where hee and his Notarie daily sit together; because the saide Mint (as in all other Countreyes) is an Office belonging to the King, and for his benefit.

Neere vnto the Mint, is another Market place, wher are the Goldsmiths shops, with their Consull; and he that keeps the Seale and stampe of the Monyes. In Fez they may not make any Ring, or anie other work of gold or Siluer, til the met-tall be first sealed or stamped, on paine of great losse to the feller: but being sealed, an appointed price is paide, and then it may be vsed, as they do their mony. The greater number of the Goldsmithes, are Iewes, who worke al their labour in new Fez, and then bring it to sell in olde Fez, at a Market place assigned to them; next to the Apothecaries, because in old Fez, no Gold or Siluer may bee hammered; neither may any Mahometan vse the Art of a Goldsmith, because they terme it v-furie, to sell things made of Golde or Siluer, for anie greater valu then the waight only; but the Lords giue Libertie to the Iewes to do it, because they are accounted Vsurers. There are verie few, that make any worke for the Cittizens onely, neither haue they any other recompence then for the making. And that part of the Cittie, where (in elder times) the Guard of Archers dwelt, is now allotted to the Iewes onely, because the Modern Kings haue not kept such Guards, but such as haue first dwelt in the old Cittie, and at all such times as a King died, they were expelled by the Moores. And it was a great trouble to the King Abusabih, to translate the Iewes from the old City to the new, imposing a Tribute vpon them: and nowe there they remaine, in a verie long and large Market place, where they haue their Shoppes, Houses, and Synagogues. And they are increased to such a number, as verie hardly can they bee counted, especially since the Iewes were expelled by the King of Spaine. They are contemned of all men, and none of them may weare any Shooes; but they vse certaine Pantofles, made of Sea-Bulrushes, and on their heads they haue blacke Tolibants; and they that will weare Hats or Caps, must haue a piece of red cloth fastened thereon, to bee publickely noted from other men. Their tribute is to pay the King of Fez foure hundred Ducates euery month.

In brieft, this City was within the space of an hundred and forty years, furnished with strong Walles, Pallaces, Temples, Colledges, & al those Ornaments which a City can haue: and I am of the minde, that the cost was greater, bestowed on those ornaments, then on the wals which do engirt it.

VVithout the City, are manie great wheels made, to mount the water out of the

A Seale or stamp appointed for Gold and Siluer.

Concerning the Iewes in Fez.

The Iewes dwelling place assigned by it self.

The great number of the Iewes, & how they are despised generally.

The time of the Citties compleating.

Wheels for conuayance of water into the Cittie.

Who deuised the water Channels.

Who inuented the wheels.

Menthat refuse Offices in Court.

The order of the K. of Fez his Court.

The Law of Mahomet against temporall Lordes.

Forcible dominion, both in the East and West.

the Riuer, conuaying it vpon the City wal, where certain Channel gutters are made, which carry it to the Pallaces, Temples, and Gardens. And these Wheels haue been made in our time, to wit, within an hundred yeares: because before, the Water came into the Cittie by Channels, that is, by Water-guides, which issued from a Spring or Fount, distant from the Cittie the space of ten miles, which Channels were made vpon certaine Arches, very formal and artefiiall. And it is said, that those conuayances were inuented by a skilfull man of Geneway, at such time as Merchants were much faouored by the King. And the Wheels were made by a Spanyard, which are (indeed) very admirable thinges; especially, because in such a power of Water, they turne no more but foure and twenty times both by day and night. I should adde to this discourse, that not many Noble men dwell in this Cittie, or such as are allied to Lords, or Courtyers, because all the rest are meane people, and imployed in base offices. For men of reputation and quality, thinke scorne of admission to any Court offices: beside, they hold it a disgrace vnto them, to match their Daughters with any that are of the Kings house.

31. Among all the Lords of Affrica, it is not found, that any was created King or Prince, by election of the people, or called from any Prouince or City. By the Law of Mahomet, there was not any Temporall Lord, that could tearme himselfe ligitimate, except the chiefe Priests or Bishops. But after that this authority consisted in the Bishops onely; all the heads or commanders of the people, which liued in the deserts, began to approach to inhabited Countries, and (by force of Armes) instituted diuers Lordes against the Law of Mahomet, and likewise against the Bishops prerogatiues. As it happened in the West, that the Turks, Curdes, and Tartares, with others comming from those parts, got dominion of what Lands they could attaine vnto. Also in the East raigned the people of Zeneta, and they likewise of Lontuna; afterward the Pradiatores, and after them, the family of Marino ruled there. True it is, that the men of Lontuna, came in ayde and fauour of the western people, to deliuer them from the handes of Heretiques: and heerein the Lordes were Friendes to the people, vntill they began to grow to tyranny, as apparantlie hath beene noted. Vpon which occasion, no Lordes are now made by true inheritance, nor by election of the people, or by the greatest, or by some Captaine: but euery Prince, before hee dyeth, leagueth and bindeth the greater and most potent men of his Court, to create (as Prince) after his death, either his Sonne, or Brother of the said Son. Wherein many times an Oath is giuen them, or else (as it hath often hapned) they would elect for their Lord whom themselues pleased. In this manner have they vsed to create the Kinges of Fez, & so soone as the King is publickly named; he maketh one of his noblest persons his chiefe Counseller, assigning him a third part of his Kingdomes Reuenues. Then doth he elect a Secretary, who serueth for Secretary, Treasurer, and chiefe Steward of his House. Afterward, hee createth the Captaines of his Cauallerie, who are deputed to the Kingdoms custody, and therefore are most times ready with their Horses in the field. Then, for euery City is a Governour established, who enioyeth the benefits of the City vnder Obligation; to keep such a number of Horses at his owne charge, ready for the Kinges commaund; that is, so often as he shall neede to leuy an Armie.

Next, certain Comissaries are made, and Agents ouer the people that dwell in the Mountaines; and likewise ouer the Arabes that are his Subiects. The Comissaries doe administer Iustice, according to the diuersitie of Lawes, appointed for the people. The Agents stand charged, to gather the Reuenues, and keepe diligent account of ordinary payments, as also such as are not ordinary. Then are certaine Barrons appointed, who are tearmed in their language, Custodes: euery one of them hath a Castle, or else one or two Villages, from whence they deriue certaine allowances for liuelode, and to maintaine their quality and condition, in accompanying the King with his Armies.

Also,

The order of Princes creation at this present in Fez

After publike nomination of the King, the Creation of new Officers

Arabes Subiects to the King of Fez.

Comissaries and Agents, and their seuerall offices.

Allowance for keeping Light-horses.

Christian slaves, Servants of the Stable.

The Commissary for the Camels.

The Steward for the Kings provision.

Officers of the Kitchin.

Maister of the Horfe.

The Commissary for Corne, and his vnder Officers.

A Captain of fifty Horfe.

Captaine of the Guard.

Also, they keepe light Horses, whose charges they beare when they are in Fielde: but in times of peace, Corne, Butter, and powdred flesh is allowed them all the yeare, but very little Monney; and they take charge of the Horses abroad, no lesse then in the Cittie, because the King furnisheth them with all things. And all the Seruants of the Stable are Christian Slaues, who doe wear great Iron Chaines at their feet: but when the Army goeth abroad, the said Christians doe ride on Camels of burden

There is another Commissary ouer the Camels, who giueth entertainment to the Shepherds, and other Hards, & dispenseth with them for the fieldes, being a Prouider also for a number of Camels, only for imployment in the kings businesse, and every Cameller keepeth two Camels in ordinary, for the Kings carriages onely, and according as commaund is giuen. Then there is a Steward, who hath charge to furnish, provide, keepe and lay forth Monies, for providing the Kinges dyet, and for the Army, and he keepeth tenne or twelue great Pauillions, wherein he disposeth the Victualls, still changing and rechanging the burdened Camels; to the end, the Army may suffer no want, and vnder his controule are the Officers of the Kitchin. Then there is a Maister of the Stable, who hath care of all the Horses, Mules, and Camels, belonging to the King; and he prouideth all thinges necessary for them, and for the familie vnder his charge, laying out whatsoeuer is therein thought expedient. He hath also vnder him a Commissarie for the Corn or Graine, conuaying the Oates, Barlye, and other provision for the Beastes, from place to place: and this Commissarie hath Chancellours and Clearkes, who doe set downe all the Corne which is spent, and yeildeth an account thereof to the Maister of the Houshold.

There is likewise a Captaine of fiftie Horfe, who (after the manner of Cursors) doe ride to lay impositions, on behalfe of the Secretary to the King, and in the Kinges name. And there is another much more honorable Captaine, who is chiefe of the secret Guard, and hath authoritie (in the Kings name) ouer the Officers that doe executions, and for confiscations in cases of Iustice. Hee may apprehend the greatest persons, commit them to prison, and vse seueritie of Iustice on them, when hee is commaunded by the King. The King hath also neere him a faithfull Chancellour, in whose keeping is the Kinges Seale; and he writeth the Letters that passe the Kings hand, sealing them with the same Seale.

Of Lackeyes and Footmen there are a great number, who haue a Captaine ouer them, that entertaineth, dischargeth and deuideth among them their most and least Wages, according as he iudgeth of their sufficiency. And when the King graunteth audience, the saide Captaine is alwaies present, and exerciseth the Office (as it were) of a cheefe Chamberlaine. There is also a Captaine of the carriages, whose Office is, to the conuay Tents and Pauillions fro place to place, wherein the Kings light Horse-men are lodged: but the Kinges Pauillions are carried on Mules, & those of the Souldjors on Camels. There is a company of Ensigne-bearers, that carry the Streamers and Standards on the waies: but one of them goeth alwayes before the Army, bearing a verie high pointed Standard. And all these Ensigne-bearers are guides, knowing the waies and passages ouer Riuers, woods, and Deserts, keeping a great companie of Drummers, that play vpon Drums made of Copper, like vnto great Kettles, broad aboue, and narrow beneath, being couered aboue with Skinnes, and they carrie them on Horfe-backe, with certaine counterpoizes directly against the Drummes, because their weight is heauie. These Horses are of the best, and swiftest of pace that can be gotten: for it is held as a very great shame, when any drum is lost. And those drummes sound so strongly, and with such a loud noise: that they may bee heard (a long while) a great way off, making the horses and men to tremble; and they play vpon them with Buls Pizzels.

The Trumpets are not kept at the Kings charge, but they of the Cittie are bound to keepe a certaine number of them, at their owne cost: and they attend vpon the Kings table, as also when he goeth to battaile. There is a Maister

The Lord Chancellour.

Captaine of the Lackeyes

Captaine of the carriages.

Ensigne-bearers, & drums of Copper, carried on horfe-backe.

Great shame to loose a Drum in war.

The trumpets

Maister of the Ceremonies, and his office

The Kinges Household Negro slaues, and his Wre.

The Kinges dominion and reuenues.

The manner of payments.

Toule paid in the great Citie onely.

Mahomets law against reuenues.

Concerning Lands, and reliefe of the poore.

Tyranny and vsurpation in the Lords.

ster of the Ceremonies, who when the King calleth his Counsell, or admitteth audience; alwaies standeth at the Beds feet, or-lering their places, and causing them to speake each after other, according to their degree and dignity. The Kings Family or Houshold, are (for the most part) Negro-slaues, and of them also are the Chamber-Maides and Women: Neuerthelesse, he hath his Wife alwaies white. Hee hath also diuers Christian slaues, and they are Spaniards or Portugals; And all the Weomen are vnder the Guard of Eunuches, who are all Negro-slaues.

This King (in truth) hath a great dominion, but smal reuenues, which hardly doe amount to the value of three hundred thousand Ducates. And the fift part thereof also commeth not to his hands, because the residue is assigned, as we haue formerly declared: and the one halfe of those Reuenues, is in Graine, Cattle, Oyle, & Butter, comming in by diuers wayes. Some places doe pay for so much Land, as can be Ploughed in a day by a paire of Oxen, a Ducate and a quarter. Others pay for euery Chimney or Fire, as much. Other places there are, where for euery Man (from fifteene yeares vpward) is paide as much, and in other plces, both for Men and Women. Nor is there any other oppression of Toule, but in the great Cittie onely.

I may not conceale, that (by the law of Mahomet) Temporall Lordes might not hold any Reuenues or Rents, except the tribute appointed to them, which was: that euery person who had an hundred ducates in ready Mony, stood bound to pay the Lord (out of that summe) two ducates and a halfe yearly, so long as such a quantity lasted. And euery one, that gathered of his owne Land tenne quarters of Corne, was bound to deliuer the tenth part: And such rentages were yeilded into the Bishops hands, who, beside the Kings supplic, made store of the ouer-plus to common benefit, wherewith were relieved the poore sickely persons, Widdowes, and warre maintained against the Enemy. But from the time that the Bishops power failed, the Lords (as hath beene said) began to vse tyranny: and it did not suffice them to vsurpe on those Reuenues, spending them according to their owne appetites; but they annexed vnto them new tributes, so that, thow all Affrica, few Countrey people are found, that can allow themselves so much, as wil be sufficient for their food and rayment onely. And hence ensued it, that no learned man, or of honest conuersation, will haue familiaritie with temporall Lords, nor seede with them at one Table; much lesse accept any gift or present from them, because they account the faculties of those Lords, to be worse then robbery.

The K. of Fez, keepeth continually in pay, sixe thousand Horse, five hundred Crosse-bowes, and as many Shot, all on horse-backe, and ready in order at euery command: but in times of peace, they are kept a mile off from his person; that is, when the King is out of the field, for being in Fez, he careth not for any guard. If it happen, that Warre is to be made with the Arabes his enemies; then those sixe thousand Horse are not sufficient, but he calleth such Arabes as are his Subiects to his ayde, of whom a great number are leuyed at their own charge, and they (indeede) are more practised in warre, then the sixe thousand belonging to the King. The pomp and Ceremonies of this King is verie small, and not many are willingly done vnto him: but at Feastes, or in some publike shewes; of necessity then they must be afforded, as in this manner. When the King will ride abroad, first of all, the Maister of the Ceremonies makeith it knowne to all the Cursores in the Kinges Name; then they giue intelligence thereof to the Kings Kintred, to the Captaines, Custodes, and to the other Cavallery, who meete all together in the Market-place, which is before his Pallace; comming thither by al the neereft waies. And as the King issueth forth of the Pallace, the Cursores doe deuide all the Horse-men in order.

First do the Ensignes lead the way; next the Drummes; then the Maister of the Stable, with all his Officers and Familiars; then the Steward with his Attendants; then the Custodes; after them comes the Maister of the Ceremonies; then the Kings Secretarie, the Treasurer, the Iudge, and the Captaine of Contempt of the temporall Lords.

The Kinges continuall preparation for warre.

Of war with the Arabes.

The pompe & ceremonies of the King.

When the K. rideth abroad the order of euery degree in their feuerall places.

The King and his attendants of the Army. In the next place rideth the King, with his chiefe great Counsellour, and with some other Princes: certaine Officers riding directly before the Kings person; one bearing a sword; another a Shield; another carrying the Kings Crosse-bow; with all the Footmen and Lackyes round about them. One of them beareth the Kings Partizane; another the Couering for the Saddle, and Head-stall for the Horffe. When the King alighteth on foot, the Saddle is covered with the couerture, and the Head-stall put ouer the Bridle, to hold the Horffe by. Another Foote-man carrieth the kings Pantofles, which are wrought with great cost and curiosity. After the King rideth the Capitaine of the Foot-men; next the Eunuches; and then the Kinges Household. Then follow the light Horsemen; and next them the Crosse-bowes and Caliuers.

The footmen and their office when the King is alighteth

The Kings weareing garments.

The habite which the King then weareth, is meane and honest, and such as know him not, will scarcely think he is a King: because his Foote-men are more proudly cloathed, in rich cloath, curiouslie embroidered. No King, or Mahometane Lord, weareth any crown or any thing that may resemble it; because the Law of Mahomet doth forbid it. When the King remaineth in the

The King weareth no Crowne.

The order of the Kings being in the field.

Field, first the great Tabernacle of the King is planted in the midst, which is made like to the Walles of a Castle, with Turrets and Quadrants on each side, containing fifty yardes in length; and on the top of euery side, are little Towers, made of Cloth, with Spires, Piramides, and round balles on each Turret, which seeme to be of Golde. This Tabernacle hath foure Gates, at euery onewhereof standeth the Guard of Eunuches, and in the midst thereof there is another Pauillion. The Chamber wherein the King sleepeth, is made in such manner, that it may be very easily taken vppe, and set downe againe as occasion serueth. About this Tabernacle, are the lodgings of the Officers; and such Courtiers as are most fauoured by the King: And round about them againe, are placed the Tents of the Custodes, which are made of Goats skines, like to them of the Arabes. Euen as it were in the midst, are

The Kinges resting chamber in the field.

The Custodes Tents.

the Buttry, Pantry, Seller, and Kitchen, belonging to the King, and they are all verie great Pauillions. Not far from them, are Tents wherein the Light-horsemen Souldiors have their lodging, who doe all feede on the Kinges common dyning boord, but in very base manner. A little further off is the Stable, being certaine covered places, wherein the Horffes are kept one by another. Without the circuit of these Lodgings, are the Muleters abydings for the Kings carriages, as also diuers Boothes of Butchers, Pedlers, and other retailers. Merchants & Artificers that follow the Fielde, are ranked by the Muleters. So that all the Lodgings about the Kings Pauillions, do appeare like a builded City; because the Custodes Tents serue in stead of Wals, which are made and planted one by another, that no man can enter into the saide Lodgings, except it bee by appointed waies. About the Kinges Tabernacle, is the watch kept al night; but the watch men are silly persons, no better then Armour-bearers. The like Guard is about the Stable of Horffes; but by the simplicity of these Watch-men, not onely are the Kings Horffes many times stolne; but also diuers enemies vnto the King haue entred, with purpose to kill the King. The King (almost all times of the yeare) is in the fiede, as well for safety of the Kingdome; as to preserue in peace and amity the Arabes his Subjects, wher they spend the time in hunting, or playing at the Chess.

the Buttry, Pantry, Seller, and Kitchen, belonging to the King, and they are all verie great Pauillions.

Not far from them, are Tents wherein the Light-horsemen Souldiors have their lodging, who doe all feede on the Kinges common dyning boord, but in very base manner. A little further off is the Stable, being certaine covered places, wherein the Horffes are kept one by another. Without the circuit of these Lodgings, are the Muleters abydings for the Kings carriages, as also diuers Boothes of Butchers, Pedlers, and other retailers. Merchants & Artificers that follow the Fielde, are ranked by the Muleters. So that all the Lodgings about the Kings Pauillions, do appeare like a builded City; because the Custodes Tents serue in stead of Wals, which are made and planted one by another, that no man can enter into the saide Lodgings, except it bee by appointed waies. About the Kinges Tabernacle, is the watch kept al night; but the watch men are silly persons, no better then Armour-bearers. The like Guard is about the Stable of Horffes; but by the simplicity of these Watch-men, not onely are the Kings Horffes many times stolne; but also diuers enemies vnto the King haue entred, with purpose to kill the King. The King (almost all times of the yeare) is in the fiede, as well for safety of the Kingdome; as to preserue in peace and amity the Arabes his Subjects, wher they spend the time in hunting, or playing at the Chess.

The Light-horsemens Tents.

The Stable.

The Muleters Tents.

Merchants & Artificers.

Watch about the Kings Tabernacle, and about the stable of horffes.

The King in field well neere the whole yeare.

CHAP. II.

Of diuers Customes and manners of burying the dead; Of ancient Obsequies, and their Ceremonies. Who was the first Inuenter of them; And how the dead haue haue beene lamented for.

Numa Pompilius was the first Inuenter of Obsequies for the dead, and instituted a chiefe Bishop, who had the care and charge thereof. The ancient Numa Pompilius first deuised Obsequies.

ancient Romaines had two kindes of burying their dead. One was, to lay them in the ground, and cover them with earth. And the other was, to burne the body in a pile of Wood, which they rearm'd * Rogus: but this manner of behauour continued not long, and the first of the Senators that was burned, being dead, was Sylla. The order obserued therein, was thus: First marched the Torch-bearers, and after them all the Colledges of Priests. Then followed an Image of Waxe, made in true resemblance of the dead party; before which also went a man, who should counterfeit the deceased in countenance, called * Archimimus. The bodie was carried in a bed, with many Escutchions of Armes fastned thereon, before which went the founders of Trumpets, if he were a man mature of years: but those of young daies, were carried with the sound of Flutes, and followed with Songs. For Macrobius saith, those Auncients verily beleued, that Soules being deliuered out of their bodily Prisons, returned to the original of Musical sweetnesse, that is to say, to Heauen. Some thinke, that it was so done, because the Soule is held by many, to be harmonious, which Herophyus first of all credited. When they came to the place where the fire was prepared, the body was laid therein, and there burned, which done being in presence of the Parents, neereft kinred, allyes and friends to the dead party: they gathered vp the Ashes, which being put into Vnes, or other vessels, was placed in some tomb, with other pots full of Wine & Milke, and fire in others; that burned for many yeares, it was so wonderfully composed. Then one of the neereft Kinred, pronounced a Funerall Oration in his praise, which being ended, the woman, who was hyred to lament and mourne for the dead, being called * Præsica, would cry with a loud voyce these last wordes, I, Licet; as if shee would haue said, Ire Licet, as much to say, as He must needes depart. Then the bones and ashes were put into a Sepulcher, before which (as Seruius saith) an Altar was readie furnished. All these Ceremonies being finished, the last Adieu was deliuered with a loud voyce, in this manner, Adieu, Adieu, Adieu; Mee must follow

* The buryall Fire.

Cornel. Tacitus in lib. 3.

* The chiefe Actor.

The manner of carrying the body.

Macrobius.

Alexander Aphrodisens (in his Problemes) giueth another reason.

Of burning the dead body.

* A Woman mourner, going before the Corps.

Vide L. Gregor. Giral. et Seruius.

chee; according as the course of Nature shall permit vs.

And because heere a question may be made, to wit; how it should be possible, to select and know the Ashes of the body, from among them of the Wood and Faggots, all of them being burned together: I will set downe that which I haue read in the Geography of Raphaell Volaterranus. Hee saith, that the bodies of great Lords were sowed vp in a Cloath, made of the Stone called Amiantus, which neuer can be consumed in Fire, but onely that which is enclosed in it; and that Cloath was made in the Isle of Eubæa, now called Negropont, in the Towne Carystos, very neere to Chios. This custome of burning dead bodies, continued among the Romaines, til the time of the Antonine Emperours, when then they began againe to bury them in the earth.

The first Honour which they vsed to performe in the Obsequies of famous persons, was, to commend the partie by an Oration: And the first that made Funerall Oration, in praise of the dead, was Valerius Publicola, on the death of Brutus. The second Honour, was the play of the Gladiatores or Fencers: And Marcus and Decius, the Sonnes of Iunius Brutus, were the first that made shew thereof, in honour of their Father. The third honour, was to make a banquet of magnificent furnishment. The fourth, was a distribution of flesh to all the common people. They had likewise an order, that within some while after the Obsequies, they would strew diuers flowers and swete odours vpon the Sepulcher: as the Romaine people did on Scipio. And such as could not be buried with the like, and so great pomp (for the expences were insupportable) were buried in the night time, by some which were thereto deputed, who were rearm'd Vespillons, that carried the dead body to the graue, clothed in white, and he or shee that were neereft of Kinred, closed vp his eies.

No long time after the sicke person had surrendred vp his Soule, the Chamber was set wide open, and all of the Household were permitted to enter, as also the Neighbours, and three of them (with a loud voyce) called him by his name three times. Afterward, his body

Of knowing the Ashes of the body..

Raphaell Volaterranus in Geography.

* Some say Salamanders haue.

The Honours done in the Obsequies of great men. The first Honour.

The second Honour.

The third Honour.

The fourth Honour.

Another Custome.

Of buriall in the night time by the Vespillons.

Ouid in 6. de Fast. After the soul was departed.

Of Tarquines washing.

Plat. in Lib. 12 de Legib.

The order of Funerall pompe in Plo-toes Citty of Athens.

Of carrying h'm to the Graue.

The manner of buriall in other nations

Of the Greeks

The Funerall of Patroclus.

Of the Persians.

Of the Massagetes and Derbices, who did care their dy was washed with warme water, and this Office was done by certaine good Weomen, according as Euaius reporteth. The good Woman, that washed and annointed the bodie of Tarquine; the Heire gaue her the House, with some other rewards thereto designed: And ouer the doore of the house, were boughes of Cypres thickely placed. If the party deceased were a worthy man, and of authoritie; the Cittizens were inuited to his Obsequies, by one to whose trust the office was referred, and the Wife of the dead Man, with al the Women of his Kinne, went along with the Corpes in white Garments. Plato writeth, that the Funerall pompe in his Citty, was in this manner. Such as were in white habites, neither shed any teares, or vsed any lamentations. Two Quires of Singers, the one of fifteene Boyes, and the other of as manie Maidens, continued about the Coffin, while the Priests (ioyning with them) sung all the praises of the dead person; and this lasted the whole day, in commendation of his felicity. On the morrow following, early in the mornig, the younger sort carryed him to his Graue, and chaste men, that neuer had beene married, rode before on Horse backe, and then came next, the band of footemen in their Armour. The young Lads followed, singing Hymnes in their paternall language. The Maides accompanied with aged Women, came after, and then he was ensepulurde, as we vnder-ground lay our dead in a vault.

But among other Nations, the custome of burying their dead was diuers. The Greekes also were burned after death, as Lucian witnesseth. The Noble-men among them, were neuer burned alone, as Homer recordeth in the Song at the Funerals of Patroclus; for with him were burned Oxen, Sheepe, Dogges, Horses, and twelue stout and valiant Sonnes of Noble Troyans. And Achilles would needs haue his haire burned, with the dead body of Patroclus. In Persia they neuer interred the bodies of the dead; except they had formely beene torne and dismembred by Dogs or Fowles.

The Massagates and Derbices, people of Scythia, did account them to be most miserable, that died by any oppression of sicknesse. For when their Fathers, Mothers, and Kinred, had passed the age of seauenty yeares; they would cut their throats; and deuiding their bodies in pieces and gobb. Q did eate them among their Mutton, Goat, Veale, and other flesh: accounting it much more conuenient, thus to sustaine their owne bodies with their friends, then to suffer them to be deuoured of Wormes. Only the bodies of old women they would not touch, but abstaining from them; when they had first stified them, then they buryed them. Which custome, most sauage, Tertullian in his Bookes against Marcion, attributeth to the Pontique people, saying: They serued their Tables at Feasts, with the Flesh of the bodies of their slaine Parents, eating them with other Beastes. Such as ended not their liues in this kind, their death was reputed most vnhappy vnto them.

*Stobeu*s writeth, that they of Colchos neuer buried their dead, but hung their bodies vpon Trees, and this kind of Sepulture they teatmed Ayry. The Egyptians, so soone as any one among them was dead; they would draw his braines forth at his Nosthrils with an Iron Instrument, filling the place againe with sweete perfumes. Then they made incision into his belly, with an Aethyopian Stone, called Laigne, and hauing taken out his bowels; filled the body againe with many sorts of sweete odours, beaten and compounded together. Then, for the space of seuentie daies together, they salted the body with Niter, and annointing it with Gumme, wrapped it in a Sheete. And the neereft kinred to the partie dead, hauing made an hallow Image or Statue of Wood, according to his resemblance; therein they enclosed the dead body, and then buried it. The Scythians vsed to bury in the Graue with the dead body, such as were dearest and nearest to him. The Bactrians and Hircanians kept Dogges publicely, and some privately in their chiefest Citties; by which Dogges (each man according to his degree and faculty keeping them) they were after death torne and dismembred. For they held this kind of buriall to the best, and they called those Dogges by a vocable in their owne Language, to wit; Sepulchraux. Which cruell and inhumaine behaviour, dead Fathers and Mothers.

Tertul. in lib. cont. Marcion.

Of the Colchians.

Of the Egyptians, and how they buried their dead.

Of the Scythians.

Of the Bactrians, and Hircanians.

Nicanor Lieutenant to great Alexander.

our, when Nicanor (Lieutenant to Alexander the Great, against the Bactrians) fought to reforme; hee lost almost the whole Kingdome. Saint Hierome saith, that the Hyrcanians were not only torne by Dogs after their death; but were also throwne halfe aliue to the Fowles of the ayre. As the Poet Lucretius singeth; Viva vident viuo sepeltri viscera busto.

The Poet Lucretius.

*Sauage people nere to Mexolis, and the Riphcean hills.

Which is as much to say; That in a living Sepulcher, they saw their entrailles buried aliue. The * Effedones, Scythians of Asia, celebrated the Funerals of their Fathers and Mothers, with Songes of great ioy, & all the kinred being assembled; would teare their members in pieces with their teeth, mingling it in their banquet with the flesh of other beastes, as formerly we haue said of the Massagates.

Solinus in Polihist. Cap. 25.

And they vsed the skull of the head, called Cranes, in stead of a Cup or Mazzer to drinke in, it being round enchased with Gold: And this (saith Pliny) was accounted an especiall great Office of piety.

Plin. in lib. 9.

The Thracians buried their dead laughing, and highly reioyced, because (as they said) That they departed were from euill, & arrived at beatituade.

Pomp. Mela. in lib. 2. Cap. 1. Herodot. in Melpom. Stobaeus de For. Ser. 7

The Celtes, neighbors to the ocean (as Stobaeus affirmeth) accounted it as a villainous shame to shunne the ruine of a Wall or House when it fell to the ground. And when any inuadation of the Sea happened, they would run out armed, and withstand (so long as they could) the waters fury, euen til they were drowned in the deepe; least, by flight away, they should be reputed fearefull of death.

Strabo in lib. 4.

The wise Brachmanes, a people of India, did wonderfully despise death, and (as Strabo reporteth) did greatly exercise themselves in contempt thereof.

Vide Arrianus de Gest. Alexā.

The history of Calan the Philosopher, one of the Gymnosophists of India, is very notable; who when he was resolved to dye, threw himselfe voluntarily into a great fire. The like did Zarmanocheegas the Indian, in Athens, vpon whose tomb was written these wordes following.

Zarmanocheegas his Epitaph. Plutar. in vit. Numa Pom.

Zαρμανοχηγας υψος ετιο βλεπει τις κατ'επιταφια ενδραπει εν ευατορ ανδραποδιστος. That is to say; Zarmanocheegas, the Indian of Bargas, making himselfe immortal, according to the customes of the Countrey of India; lyeth heere. Numa Pompilius prohibited the Romaines, to vse any sorrow for deceased Infants; or vnder three yeares olde: and for such as had passed that time, he appointed so many moneths mourning, as they were yeares aged. Women vsed to mourne for their Husbands, ten months at the least: and if any one married againe, before the time of mourning were expired, shee was very greatly blamed and reprobud. It was also a custome among weomen, when their Husbands were dead; to teare their haire, harne their faces, and beat their handes one against another, which sottishnesse is yet to this day obserued in Rome. For many times, I haue seen Matrones & Ladies of Rome, to teare the faire tresses of their Haire, and throw themselues on the dead bodies of their Husbands.

How long women mourned for their Husbands.

An idle custome yet obserued in Rome.

CHAP. III.

Whence the custome grew, of saying to such as sneeze; God saue ye, or Christ help ye. And for what reason, a man maketh the signe of the Crosse on his mouth, when he yawneeth or gapeth.

He yeare of our saluation, 619. in Italy happened a strong and very strange diseased, that when men sneezed, they died suddenly. Which gaue admittance and entrance thence-forward, to a good and commendable custome: that when any were seene or heard to sneeze; every one present, or neere, would say, GOD help ye, Christ blesse ye; and from that time hitherto, the custome hath not vnprofitably continued. Yawning and gaping, was likewise an occasion of as sudden death, without ability of bringing the iawes together againe. For remedy whereof, and to preuaile (so faire as men might) against this hurtfull inconuenience; whē any one yawned, he was aduised to vse the like good words inwardly, as Cod defende me, or Christ keep me, and (withall) to make the signe of the crosse on his mouth; and it pleased God that this sudden euill ceased. For which cause, it hath not bin thought discommendable, to keep the same fashion

A strange disease appearing in Italie, in the yeare 619.

Yawning and gaping caused people suddenly to dye.

The reason of making the signe of the Crosse.

Tertulian lib. de Corona. Milit.

Farre be superstition fro any Christian foule.

still in remembrance, and in all Christian Nations, the vse thereof is maintained. Yea, and so much the rather, because the signe of the Crosse is our first badge of Christianity, and we receiue it in Baptisme; to the end, that when further yeares shall enable vs, wee may not be ashamed to fight vnder that standard, being a reuerent signe and memoriall of our Redeemers passion, who would suffer on the Crosse, for the sal-uation of all his people. To which purpose, Tertullian saith, in his Booke of the Crowne of Warfare, as followeth. *Ad omnem progressum, atque promotum; Ad omnem aditum & exitum;
Ad vestitum & calceatum; Ad lauacra;
Ad mensas; Ad limina; Ad cubilia; Ad sedilia; quacunq; nos conuersatio exercet, frontem signaculo terimus.* That is. At eue-ry steppe, and moouing; At euey entring, and departing; At apparrelling, and vncloathing; At washing; At the Table; At the doore Threshold; At bedding, sitting still, or what conuersation else soeuer is vsed; this signe on the forehead is not offensive. Not that any superstitious opinion is conceiued thereof, or that the bare signe hath any power to defend, without the maine helpe of all, which is Gods gracious assistance: for wel we know, it is not the signe, but he that was thereon so cruelly handled.

CHAP. III.

Concerning the Originall, of vsing these wordes: Ie vous baife les mains; I kisse your hands.

Romponius Letus writeth, that the vse of kif-sing handes, did come from the ancient Em-perors, who first of all gaue their handes to Noble-men, and then after came the kisse; but to meaner people, they gaue forth the knee to be kissed. And thence, as I am perswaded ensued this manner of speech; I kisse your hand, as declaring that so should the man be saluted, who is worthy of empire and soueraigne-tie. Else, it may be thought to be de-

For two reasons, we say, I kisse your hand.

riued from the Carthagenians, who meeting each other, vsed no salutations by wordes; but in signe of friendly amitie, closed with their right handes, and so each of them kissed the others hand.
I am of the minde, that wee doe not hold this Custome from so long a continuance; but my opinion is, that it rather proceeded from the homage of some Vassailes and Lidge men, that stood obliged to doe such seruice to their Lordes, Iustices, and Guides: for in many places, in stead of this homage, some stand bound to kisse the knee, in case of a new Recognisance. For some prooffe hereof, I haue a Court-roule of rents appertaining to me, called De Luriac, made in the yeare 1352. which ma-keth Affidavit heereof, in euery one of the Tenants answers, where it is set downe in the words following. Pro quibus rebus, fundis & possessionibus ipse fecit homagium ligium dicto Domino de Luriaco, vt assuetum est genibus flexit, manus suas iunctas tenendo inter manus ipsius Domini, eiusque pollices osculando.
That is: For; and in consideration of all which Landes, Goods, and Possessions; hee maketh himselfe a Liege Man in homage, to the said Lord of Luriac. So that, vsually, vpon his bended knees, and his hands ioyntly vpheld, between the handes of the said Lord, he kisse his Fingers.

The Authors
coniecture of the originall of this cour-tesie.

Prooffe by a president of his owne.

CHAP. V.

Of the denision of the yeare, and diuersitie thereof among the Romaines. Who first found out the Houres, and made Clockes and Dyals. What is meant by the Bissex-tile; by a Month; by a day naturall; a weeke, fortnight, houre, point, minute, ounce, and Atome.

Most certaine it is (as Iosephus writeth, in the first and fourth Bookes of his Iewish Antiquities) that the He-brues deuided the yeare into twelue moneths, and so ordained it afterward in Aegypt: for the auncient Aegyptians made the yeare to consist
of

*Ioseph. in lib. de Iudaic. Anti-
quit. lib. 1. et 4.*

The Hebrues deuided the yeare into 12. months.

The Romaines conformable with the Greeks.

Julius Caesar his ordination of the yeare.

Dies intercalares, the odde day of the leap yeare, which falleth euery fourth yeare.

* L. Quum Bis sextus F. dezer. signifi.

Julius Caesar his deuisions of the yeare, months, weeks, daies, houres, &c.

Of the begin- ning of the yeare among the Romaines.

of two moneths, and afterward of foure. The Arcadians of three; the Carians and Arcanians, of fixe. The Greekes accounted their yeare, to bee three hundred fifty foure daies: And the Romaines, from the time of Romulus, finished their yeare in as many daies as the Greekes did; comprehending it in ten months, and beginning it in March, though it disagreed with the course of the Sunne and Moone; to the circumference whereof Numa Pompilius brought it, by addition of fifty six daies. And yet the yeare being not fully sufficient, Julius Caesar made it apt to the course of the Sunne, making it to containe 365. daies, and in taking away the Dies intercalares, said he did it; because that a day might be added to the month of February, which then was the last of the yeare, and that day wanted to make the yeare compleate. Whereupon hee concluded, that from foure to foure yeares, one day should be added to the month of February, which was called Bissextilis Annus, the Leape yeare. And the reason of this name, was, that two daies of equall degree, were tearmed the sixt of the Calends of March, euen as now we find it to be, * and therefore do account two daies for one.

The same Caesar deuided the yeare into twelue months; the month into foure weeks, and some odde daies: each weeke into seauen daies; the day into foure partes, and to each part hee appointed fixe houres. And to euerie houre, foure points or quarters; to the point or quarter, ten moments or minutes; to a moment, two and twentie ounces; and to an ounce, forty seauen Atomes, that is to say, numbers indiuisible; for ἀτομος in Greeke, is as much to say, as without diuision. The month is part of the Solary yeare; the Weeke, foure partes of the month; the naturall weeke day, part of the weeke; the Quadrant, foure partes of the day; the hour, the sixt part of the quadrant; the point, the fourth part of the houre; the moment or minute, the tenth part of the point; the ounce, the twelfth part of the minute; and the Atome, the fourth part of the ounce.

The ancient Romaines hauing dedicated the Moneth of March to their God Mars; began the yeare with that month. Afterward they tooke Ianuary for the first month of the yeare, as Plutarch writeth; because that after the Kinges were expelled, the first Consuls were created in the Calends of Ianuary. Wherefore, this they did, in memorie of their liberties reconery, and vtter abolition of tyranny. They obserued also the great yeare (called by some the Platonickall yeare) which they saide was to bee ended, when all the Planets should haue made their intire reuolution, and were returned to the same place againe. And concerning this yeare, Authours haue not well accorded. For some say, that it finisheth in 2484. yeares; and others in 5552. Some doe hold, that it cannot be concluded, but in 49000. Romaine yeares; and others say, in 36000. Iosephus hath left written, that the great yeare consisteth of 1000. yeares. Our ancients began the yeare diuersly. The Greekes (in the first place) making their glory in the destruction of Troy, began their yeare at that time. The Romaines counted from the building of Rome. The Mahometanes counted, and yet doe, their time, from the daies of the false Prophet, and imposture Mahomet. And we Christians do deriue our date, from the Natiuitie of our Lord Iesus Christ, the true Son of the euer-living God, or else from his Incarnation, which we hold to bee the truest course.

The houres tooke their name of the Sun, which in the Aegyptian language is cald Horus. Hermes Trismegistus hauing obserued in Aegypt, that a certaine Beatt (consecrated to Serapis) pissed twelue times in a day, keeping euermore equal space of time: deuised, to part the day into twelue houres, and this number of houres, was long time obserued, and afterward deuided into 24. The Sun dyal, whereof the shaddow (which is called Gnomon, that is to say, Measure) demonstrateth the houres: was first inuented at Lacedaemon, by Anaximenes the Milestian, and he called it Sciathericon, ἑὸς τῆς οὐραε; that is to say, Of the shaddow. Ctesippus Alexandrinus, inuented the Clepsidra, or water dyall, to discover the passage of houres, by drops of water falling from a vessell; expressely made for the purpose, like to a Garden watering pot, whereof Cicero maketh mention.

Platoes great and wonderfull yeare, about which the Authours much vary.

The Grecians.

The Romaines. The Tutks & Mahometanes

Christians.

How the houres tooke their name. V. de Macrobi Saturnal Lib. 1 Cap. 21. * A God in forme of an Oxe among the Aegyptians. The inuenter of the dayes deuision into houres. Of the Sundyall.

Of the water dyall.

Vitruvius in lib 9 de Architect. Cicero in Lib. 2 de natur. Deor. & 2. Tuscul.

The vsuall Dyall.

Of Clockes.

Afterward, by diuine and ingenious cunning, the Horologe or dyall of mettall or Iron, was found out, euen such as we now make vse of in these daies; with toothed Wheelles and counterpoises, which declared the houres, partly by shew; and partly by the sound of Belles. These did so naturally represent (by the same artefice) the course of all the Planets, Sunne and Moone: as it would seem to ye, that ye discerned the very same heauen. Like vnto that which is at Venice, on the place before Saint Marke, all richly guilded, & made with infinite cost.

CHAP. VI.

Vpon what occasion, and wherefore the daies of the week were called FERIA, HOLIDAYES, or FESTIUAL daies.

Pope Syluester the first, altered the daies of the weeke from the Gentiles custome.

Pope Syluester, the first of that name, labouring to extirpate the memory of vaine and false Gods: ordaind, that the daies of the weeke, which before did beare name of the Gods of the Gentiles, & Idolaters, should be otherwise altered and tearmed. For whereas our Sabbath day bare the name of the Sun; Munday, of the Moone; Tuesday, of Mars; Wednesday, of Mercury; Thursday, of Ioue or Jupiter; Friday, of Venus; and Saturday, of Saturne: they were deuided to the number of FERIA, or Holy-daies, and called the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth FERIA, after the same manner as the Hebrues had distinguished their daies, by the name of Sabbats, or Sabaoths. He called the day of Saturne, Sabaoth, according to the ancient vocable of the Law, which is interpreted Rest, or Repose; and imposed the name of Dies Dominicus, which we call Sunday, on the first FERIA, as a day sacred to the Lord, and which before had carried the name of the Sunne. This he did (as is said) at the request of the Emperour Constantine; albeit the Apostles had dedicated this day to God: because vpon the like or same day, our Lord and Re-

Feria prima, Sunday. Feria secunda, Munday, and so of the rest, not intending Holy-dayes only, but any day of the weeke.

The Apostles dedication.

deemer arose from the dead.

Yet so it is, that this name of FERIA, hath not, nor is obserued; but in matters Diuine and Ecclesiasticall; onely the daies of Sunday & Saturday excepted, which are not to be called FERIA. Likewise, the other fiue (among the Layicks) haue recouered their ancient names: a matter (questionlesse) much to be moaned, and whereat wee may blush with shame, because no more care was had in former times, to giue other Christian names to al those daies, to the end, that all memory of the Gentiles Gods might be lost among vs. These FERIA (among our ancients) were such daies, as it was not lawfull to trauaile on them, & were so named, a feriendis victimis, Of smiting the beasts in the sacrifices: Or else, a ferendis epulis, Of bringing victuals, which then were principally giuen to be eaten. The Romains sollemnized infinite feasts, causing them to be published by a common Cryer to the people, to the end, that they should not bee transgressed. Moreouer, they would haue no worke to be done on those daies; for hee that gaine-saied, was grieuouly punished.

Of the ordinary fiue daies in the weeke.

The FERIA in elder times were Festiual daies.

Feasts of the Romaines.

10

20

30

CHAP. VII.

How, and by what meanes, Phisitions learned to take blood from diseased persons: And who it was that first wrote concerning Hearbes.

40

Phisition learned to recouer sickly people (by that which is tearmed Phlebotomy, or blood-letting) of the Hippopotamus, which is called the Horse of the Riuer. It is a Beast of Nylus, who when hee feeleth himselfe filled with ouer-much meate, and to bee immeasurably fat or foggy: he commeth forth vpon the banck, seeking for new cut Canes and Reedes. And when hee feeleth any that are verie sharpe indeed, pressing downe his body vpon them; he pierceth a veine, whence blood immediatly issueth, and by this meanes, his body is discharged of the former sicknesse, and he closeth the wound againe with his owne Dung.

Plin. in Lib. 8. Cap. 26.

A beast liuing in the Riuer Nylus, hauing feete like to an Oxe, his backe & mane like a Horse, with a winding taile, and tusked like a Boare.

50

There

* A Bird in Egypt that killeth Serpents.

Polid. Virgil. in Lib. 1. cap. 21.

There is likewise a Bird in the same Agypt, called * Ibis, somewhat like to the Storke, which Bird doth wash that part with her crooked Bill, where all Fowles doe annoyd their Excrements; and thereby (saith Polydore Virgile) came Phisitions to the knowledge of giving Glisters. Orpheus was the first, that of all other (bearing memory) wrote carefully concerning Hearbs, and (after him) Museus: albeit, some are of the mind, that they both liued in one and the same time. Dioscorides came after them, and Pompeius Lenus Libertinus; who being enfranchised by Pompey the great, traduced the Bookes of Mithridates out of Greeke into Latine, which concerned the property and nature of of Hearbs.

CHAP. VIII.

A true and admirable History, of a Maiden in Poictu, who for the space of three years, and more, liued without receiuing eyther meat or drinke.

The wish of Euripides.

Euripides desired, that either we might liue dumb, in perpetuall silence; or else, that dumbe thinges (without any Ambiguitie of wordes) might speake to vs. As for my selfe, I could wish, that eyther wee were like those Indian people called Aslomi, whom Pliny describeth to liue without mouthes: or else, contented like them, with the sole benefit of ayre, we might heere spend our time without eating or drinking. For, by this meanes, it might come to passe, that our Spirit, (which with a firme eye, cannot contemplate naturall things, no more then the Owle is able to looke on the bright raies of the Sunne) being freed from those Mistes and thicke Vapours, occasioned by the vse of msates; would comprehend with one looke, the Ideas and formes of things nakedly, & according as they are indeede. Chrissippus then, should not neede to take Helleborus with such obseruance, for the purging of his vnderstanding; to the end, he might the more subtilly see the strength of his Arguments. Our soule (against her nature) would be no heavy burden at all vnto vs, for she should not serue as salt to our body, to keepe it from corrupting: But rather she would be there like to a Pharos, which (in our Diuine Navigation) would discouer the way, for our attaining to the Land of Heauen.

Plin. in lib. 7. Cap. 1.

The disability of the spirit in naturall things.

Heracl.

But in regard, that our life is maintained by the bodies nourishment; and that (by one mutuall assistance) both together do conserue themselves; euen while wee our selues doe study how to support this life, by continuall care for furnishing it with foodes: It ensueth, that thereby we altogether abase, and cast downe that part of the soule to the earth, which otherwise (of it selfe) would couet nothing more, then to eleuate it selfe to high and heauenly things. Notwithstanding, Plato was perswaded, that Man is provided of store of repletion, & cloying for the entrails or intestines; to shew thereby, that God created him a Creature full of reason; without which, as Plantes are continually tyed to their Rootes, for their feeding; so should he alwaies haue meate in his mouth, or else (like the beasts) his mind would be perpetually labouring, in seeking after nothing but fresh pasture. You may see it thus verified. While the food doth conuay it selfe by the passages of the belly, the Spirit naturallie sendeth hir strength vegetatiue and nutritiue thorow the body; and by this commixture, life, and the motion of the body is maintained so well, that this more sublime part of Nature would passe on much further, to declare the effects of her power and vertue: if (after food hath sustained the body) the Spirit were not called to the desire of new meats, and compelled to yeelde it selfe to the bellies appetite. For there is nothing (saith Pliny) more painefull to a man, then his belly; for contentment whereof, the most part of Men haue employed their whole life time.
This importuning vessell of the body; is euermore at hand with vs, like to a greedy Creditor, summoning vs many times in the day to his attendance: but he must not be listned alwaies when he calleth; if he haue had his due paid him; no more then the young Scholler, who would not allow his Tutor the charges

Life preferred by feeding the body

Plato in his Timæus, concerning mans provision.

A very apt comparison in this case.

Plin. in lib. 26. cap. 8.

The appetite of the belly is neuer satisfied.

The De. alim. pap. prest. c.

The Stoickes did eate, to a- noid eating.

* A very great Riuer in Col- chis

One Instru- ment of life, giuen to all Creatures naturall heat.

The triple substance of the body.

Hippocras in lib. 1 Aphorism. 14

Hippocras in lib. 1 Aphorism. 13.

of his feeding, as if hee liued on winde, hauing bin neuerthelesse with him, and fed on his purffe. But whosoever shall, or doth deale so, the Emperour adiudged him not receiueable, but let him go seeke his dyet else-where. Notwithstand- ing, it is so, that the bellies necessity is so borne with vs; as the Stoickes them- selves; who excluding all the sense of mā, were constrained to feel the bellies gripings and murmuring, and did eate, but how? To the end, they might shun eating! Quite contrary to many Gour- mands and Gluttons, who eat & drinke, only because they would encrease their eating and drinking; hauing no other God but their bellie, whereon they be- stow whatsoeuer serues to excite their luxury: for maintenance whereof, the Seas are trauerfed, euen so far as the Ri- uer * Phasis, ransacked her entrailles, for contention agreeing with an insatiable appetite. And this is that part, where- in we come the neereft to brute beasts, who (by their proper nature) are led to desire whatsoeuer their belly demands, and with whom we haue (in common) this necessity of eating & drinking. For Nature hath giuen one Instrument of life to all Creatures, which is naturall heat, that (euen as our wood in the fire) hath his Seate in the triple substance of our body; to wit, solide, humorall and spirituou, which (without intermissi- on) he ruinate and consumeth. So that in a very small while, all would bee quite wasted, if it were not maintained by a fresh supply of Meats and dringes; neyther more or lesse, then as the flame of a Lampe, which extinguisheth it selfe, so soone as the Oyle is consu- med, if no more bee put thereinto, for longer lasting. And hereupon, Hippocra- tes, the Prince of Phisitions said; That the bodies of young Men haue neede of more nourishment, then others: because they haue more heate then they; For otherwise (saith he) their bodies would consume them- selues. Contrariwise, the bodies of old men; because they haue but little store of heate; they neede therefore as little nourishing.

Hence may we draw a confirmed argu- ment, by that which Hippocrates himselve hath said: That old men very ea- sily endure Fasting; next to them, such as are in the strength of their age, yet much lesse then they that are in youth-hood; and Infants least of all other, especially such as are liueliest, and readiest in their bodily functions. For the smalnesse of heat, the tenacitie of the primitiue moysture, and the density or thicknesse of the bo- dy, hindereth in old men, that the triple substance cannot wast it selfe at all. From whence it proceedeth, that they haue not such great need of meate, and desire or appetite after food (if I may so say) which is hunger; is in them much languishing. As contrariwise, in young men it is so much the more ar- dent; as the naturall heate is super-a- boundant, the vitall humor more fluxi- ble, and the composition of the body more thin, and lesse heaped together. Which three things, as they cause the receiued food to consume: euen so (by little and little) they repaire any defect there arising.

To approue the truth heereof; The substance of euery Creature dissolues it selfe into the ayre, by the pores of the skin which enuiron it, saith Galen. It followeth then of necessity, that the very neereft parts of the skinne, should bee first destitute of nouriture, and that by their owne force and vertue, they should draw nourishment from other neighbouring partes, to restore that which (through want of sustentation) is impaired: those there, from the veines; these heere, from the Liuer; the Liuer, from the in- testnies and ventricle (by the mesentery veines) calling what is most con- uenient to their nature. Then the ven- tricle, seeing her selfe empty; by a meer naturall vnderstanding which shee hath of her owne want, is incited to desire meates, where-with she may be sustai- ned.

But if there be some bodie, which hath small store of heat, and more of the radical moisture; wherto the pores and Respiracles of the skinne do giue place: there cannot be made any great Euacuation of the triple substance, and so consequentlie, there is no neede at all of great nourishment. Neither is it altogether necessary (as Galen testi- fieth) in those places, where (beside that already saide) the Ayre which encom- passeth vs, is cold, and the body heavy, berummed, and without motion: be- cause the little troughes or openings in Old men haue not such need of food, as young mē.

Galen. de Simp- tom... Caus. 7.

The particu- lar parts of supply.

Concerning some particu- lar bodies.

Galen de veris- sict. aduers. Eras.

Aproued examples in diuers Beastes, which keepe their Dens al Winter.

in the skin, are as mouths, and yet little or nothing at all passeth out at them. This he giueth to vnderstand, by the example of sauage Beasts, which (in all the time of winter) will not forsake their Dens and Cauernes: in regard whereof, he calleth them φωλεούσια ζῶα, such as are Beares, Bats, or Dormice, Serpents, Lizards, and diuers other. Al which, hauing at spring time (by warmth and heat) the conuoiues of their bodies released & opened: when they finde that the inward warmth is resolved, and they beginne to bee hungry, they come foorth (by their owne proper motion) out of their prisons, and (guided by Nature only) do seeke in al parts, such feeding as is aptest for them. From whence he gathereth, that assidue blowing or breathing, which is performed by respiration, causeth this defect, and it also prouoketh the appetite and desire of eating. For Nature hath giuen this property to the empty part, that it shold demand to be re-filled. So that, if the causes ceased, for which the body hath need of nourishment, it would ensue as necessarily, that euen penury it selfe, & meere vnderstanding what hunger is, by little and little would cease also: and that for this reason, the Beasts which are hidden in dennes of the earth, may liue without the vse of food.

In like manner, by the report of notable men, and well worthy credence, there haue beene found in the Lanthornes and Boxes of Pixes, of Altars and aged Sepulchres, burning Lampes, which the inscriptions (on the saide Tombes & places) haue witnessed, that they were put thereinto, almost infinite yeares before the finding of them. As that wherof Lodouicus Viues speaketh, discovered about the yeare, 1,00. which Hermolaus Barbarus saith, was found in the Territories of Pania, without date of day, or of Confull indeede: but yet notwithstanding, it hath beene there enclosed aboue eight hundred yeares, as P. Appianus gathered by the inscription. Such Lampes then were preserued or maintained, so long a time, with little or no supply, because the very moisture of the places, doth strongly enable them, and they perish but very little. V hether it may bee thought by the humidity (which the Alchimistes tearme Radical) of Gold, which only among all naturall bodies, is beleeued to

The guifte of nature to the empty parte, to require sustentation.

S. August. de Ciuit. Dei lib. 21. Cap. 6.

Lodouicus Viues. Hermolaus Barbarus.

P. Appianus. A Lamp last-ed burning aboue 800 yeares, without any supply.

suffer no diminution of his substance, or of something else, neere enclining to his Nature, I am not able to censure. But so it plainly appeared, by the Testification engrauen on a Vessell of earth, which Barbarus (before mentioned) hath written downe in these words:

10 *Plutoni sacrum munus ne attingite fures,
Ignotum est vobis hoc quod in orbe latet
Namq; elemēta graui clausit digesta labore,
Vase sub hoc modico maximus Oiybius.
Adsit fecundo custos sibi copia cornu,
Ne pretium tanti depereat laticis.*

Hermolaus Barbarus his Latine Verses.

And these lines which follow, were written or carued on another vessell of earth, and enclosed within the former in this manner:

20 30 40
50
*ABITE. HINC. PESSUMI.
FVRES.
VOS. QUID. VOLITIS. CVM.
VOSTRIS. OCVLIS. EMIS-SITIIS.
ABITE. HINC. VOSTRO.
CVM. MERCVRIO. PETA-SATO. CADUCEATOQVE.
MAXVMVS. MAXVMVM.
DONVM. PLVTONI HOC SACRVM. FACIT.*

Other Latine lines founde on another earthen vessell

In this Earthen Vessell, was and had beene kept this Lampe, placed betweene two Flagons or Bottels, the one of gold, the other of Siluer, and these were imagined, to haue giuen nutriment vnto the Lampe, that continued burning for so many ages. The same Barbarus, called this Licquor, Heauenly Water, or rather, the Alchimis Diuine water, which he also noteth to haue beene called (by Democritus and Mercurius Trismegistus) sometimes Diuine Water, sometimes the Scythian Drinke; sometimes Spiritual, that is to say, a spirite drawne from the Celestial Nature, and * Fifte Essence of things, whereof Aurum Potabile is composed, and the Phylosophers stone or sand, in search whereof, so many people haue vainly consumed themselues. To this Diuine Licquor of Golde, I knowe not whether I may attribute, or no, the meruaile of a Lampe continually burning, whereof Cedrenus speaketh, which from the time of the Emperour Iustinian, was found in the Cittie of * Edeffa, with an Image

How the Lampe was placed in the founte.

Heauenly Water.

The Alchymists Diuine water.

Scythian Drinke.

* Or Quintessence. Aurum Potabile.

Cedrenus in the Abridgement of his Histories.

* A City of Syria, beyond Euphrates.

A Lamp burning 500. yeares.

A matter of great meruel

This was written in the yeare, 1602.

The Maid of Confolans, and her Parents.

A Feauer seizing on her body.

Speechles 28. dayes.

A benumbing of all her senses.

Oesophagus.

Image of our Saviour Christ. It had bin inclosed or hidden ouer a certaine Gate, immediately after the passion of Christ: and yet neuerthelesse, it had also remained there five hundred yeares, without extinguishing.

Moreouer, some of the Oyle which was found in the saide Lampe, being cast into the neereft fire to that place: it burned (intirely) all the warlike troopes of Chosroes, King of the Perstans, who was an enemy to the Christians. But bee it howfoeuer, neither this, or any thing els before alledged, do I account to bee so strange, as an example now to be apparently scene; a matter rare, and almost incredible, but that both our eyes and iudgements haue bene witnesses thereof, happening within our owne quarters of Poictu, to wit, the wonderfull Faste or abstinence from foode, of a Mayden of Confolans or Conflans, in France, who for the space of three yeares hath liued, and as yet dooth liue without receiuing anie bodily food or sustenance.

This Maiden is about fourteen years of age, and is named Jane Balan, her Father Iohn Balan, a Locksmith by profession, and her Mother, Laurencia Chambel-la. Her stature is answerable to her age, she being somewhat Countrey-like of behauiour, a Natiue of the Towne of Confolans, vpon the Riuer of Vienna, in the Confines of Limofin, and also of Poictu.

In the cleauenth yeare of hir age, being seized on by a continuall Feauer, the 16. day of February, 1599. she hath since then, bene assailed with the excessse of many other sicknesses, and (beyond all the rest) with a continuall casting or Vomitting, for the space of twenty daies together. The Feauer hauing somewhat left her, she grew to be speechlesse, & so continued eight and twentie dayes, without the deliery of any one word. At the end of which time, shee came to her-selfe againe, and spake as she had done before, sauing that her words were full of feare, and void of good sence. Then came a weakenesse vpon her, and a benumbing of all her senses & bodily motions, from beneath the head, in such sort, that Oesophagus it selfe (being that part of the stomach, which serues as a conduct for passage of meate and drinke, into that which we terme the little belly) being dissolued, it lost the power attractiue. Since which time, not any one coulde perswade this Maiden (in any manner) to eate: albeit they made triall to haue her but sucke, or to licke delicate meates, fruits, and sweet things, agreeable to one of soyoung years. Neuerthelesse, the vse and motion of her members, came to her againe, about sixe months after, only one hip excepted; on which side, she yet goes with some difficulty. And one onely impotency remaineth to her, that shee cannot swallow or let downe any thing: for both meates and dringes, she altogether loaths, and mightily abhorreth.

In this time (a thing most strange) the inferiour part of her belly, by little & little grew leane in such manner, and so dried vp, that downe from her sides, and along from her Nauill, there remaineth nothing of the belly which he hadde before. There is only in this place, or insted thereof (to wit, vnder the auncient belly, where we may say it hath bene) a Cartilage or Gristle, hanging pointed downe (from Thorax*, or Sternum) after the manner of an Eaves or Pent-house, which throwes off from the building, all the water that falles on the top or couerture. Heere hence, and from the points of these Bastard-sides, the skinne (vnderneath) doth suffer great pain and feeling, both of extension and diuulsion, as may easily be perceiued, by the moanes which the Maid her selfe maketh. And hence it ensueth, that all the Muscles, Intestines, Bowelles, and other parts of the belly, being withdrawne and annihilated by want of foode, one would iudge, that they had been rackt or rent away; for there remaineth nothing else but Lappings and Filaments; for, all the Fleshie substance which filled those partes, is perished and gone.

As concerning the other parts of her bodie, it would bee thought conuenient, that there should be likewise an answerable diminution: and yet she hath a large Breast, her pappes prettie and round, her armes and thighs fleshy, her face also indifferent round, but brownish. Her Lips (indeede) are drawne inward a little; and yet her words are prompt and ready, her head couered with haire of good length: for her haire and nailes doo keep their due encrease, in each beseeing parte. There comes no excrement from hir, hir belly

Recouerie of her senses againe.

Loathing of meates and dringes.

Her bellie dried vp.

*That part of the Breast, wher the ribs meet & ioyne together.

Shewes of moane made by her selfe.

The other parts of her body.

No auoydance of Excrements.

belly yeelds no Ordure, neyther doth any Vrine at all passe from her body, or is the matrix impeached by her Menstruall Flowers. Her head is not charged with Scurfe or Dandriffe, but sheweth it selfe very sound and well, as well in the exte-riour part of the skin, as in the inwarde Organes of sence. For, neither doo her nose or eares yeeld any excrements; but only from her mouth comes a little spet-tle, and sometimes from her eies issueth a little moisture, or few teares.

The bodie yeild des no sweat.

The whol bodie ouer, yeelds no sweat at all, but we (and such as haue touched her) do find all her skin to bee colde and drie, and not heated or chafed by anie motion (except the arme-pits, and those parts which Neighbor neer to the hart.)
Yet shee doth trauaile about the house, go to the Market for Victualles, sweepe the house, spin at her Wheele, Reele off her Quill; and giues her selfe to all ser-uiceable Offices in a family, and seemes as if she were not defectiue in any part of sence, or motion of her body.

When the bodie receiueth encrease, it hath most neede of nourishment.

By all which thinges, we may gather the rarity and meruailous nouelty of this example. For, the accident hapneth in such an age, when as the bodie receyues encreasng, and those things which doo encrease haue need of good store of nouriture: but especially, in bodies of such Constitution, as this Maidens is, slender, thinne, and colde, where the internall parts are accustomed to bee most hote.
Hence comes it, that our Ancients haue saide: Our Bellies in Winter are more hot,
then at other times, with causeth a much readier concoction, and an hunger lesse tollerable, especially when it is prouoked by exercises, whereof this Mayden ma-keth no spare, especially such as her age is capeable off, the ayre and soyle also wherein she liueth, affoordes the people to be verie hungry. All which occasions of appetite and hunger, were taken from her by the accident of her continual Fea-uer: and in the end, all her naturall functions became asswaged, and seized on by a kind of dead palsie.

Hippocrat. lib. 1.
Aphor. 15.

The exercises of the Maide.

And now to begin with the first and principall, the little belly or maw (which otherwise is the receptacle of foode, and Officer for the first Concoction) being lagde and rent by the Ordure of Crude & raw humors, hath languished in such fort, as it had no power either to retaine

Of the little belly or maw.
Hermocrates in Hippocrates.

the meats therein enclosed, or to receiue in any other. Euen so in Hippocrates, Her-mocrates being surprized with an extream burning Feauer, did euermore cast the Food he receiued; because this facultie had lost his strength, and that was quenched in him (saith Gale in the same place) whereof the Office was, to feele lacke in health, and to desire what was familiar for him.

Many woulde attribute the cause of this Symptome, or passion ensuing sick-nesse, to some wicked power in an Apple, which an old Woman had giuen to this young Maiden, two or three months before; because when he had eaten it, she had a distast of her meats, and felte some alteration of her spirits. But in regarde, that (besides this) nothing hath hapned to her, which outwardly hath impeached her health, or her naturall functions, vntill shee became surprized by the aforementioned Feauer: I see no reason at al, that yeelds any subiect to beleue, how the euill power in the Apple, could re-maine so long time hidden, without yel-ding any effect. Her vomiting ceasing, shee became dumbe, by reason of those Nerues resolution, which we call, sur-rent (that happened to her soone after, thorow all her bodie) the Flegme colde and raw, being liquified by the heate of the Feauer, which (by this means) wrought a debilitie in the Braine, and caused that she could not be sound or well in spirite.
Heere hence it necessarily ensued, that she must needs loose the sense of tast and sucking; and likewise the vse of swallowing meate and drinke; which onely hath procured abolition of the animall appetite; and by little and little, it hath bene followed by a total priuation of the natural appetite, which Hippocrates noteth by these words, γίνεσθαι δὲ δυνήσασθαι, if we may giue credit to his most graue Interpreter Galen. And hee casts the cause of this passion, vpon some blame in the Liuer; who being the beginning of the Ve-getant and Natural soule, so soone as she is wounded, shee is constrained, that her auxiliary or succouring faculties (to wit;
the Attractrice, the Retentrice, the Assi-miliatrice, & the Expulsatrice, in whom lies al the power of nourishing) must needs sinke and fall, and so consequently, the appetite which cannot be compleat and perfect, but by attraction. The same Au-

Opinion con-ceiued of an Apple giuen to the Maide.

An answer to that obiection.

The Nerues
tearmed recurrent.

The reason of loosing her tast and vse of meats.

Galen his con-iecture of the passions cause

The helping faculties four in number.

Caten. 1. Epid. Sect. 3.

Heraclides his sicknesse.

The Liuer is the fountaine of the Naturall facultie.

Galen. 5. Deloc. affect. Cap. 1.

Her naturall heate quite dried vp.

A reason for this Fast and abstinence from meates.

Galen 1. De loc. affect. 1.

Author gathers it to be the sicknesse of the liuer in Hermocrates, by this, that the sixt day of his sicknesse, he was noted to looke yellow: and yet notwithstanding, in all the course of his disease (which was for 27. dayes) this yellownesse neuer left him, as it had don in Heraclides, to whom the selfesame passion happened, and on the very same day, neither by sweating, neither by the voyding of much choller, nor by the conuoy of his belly, nor by Vrine, nor yet by vomiting. And therefore, it was easie to be seene, that the naturall faculty (whereof the Liuer is the Fountaine) was ouerthrowne in verie strange manner. Which being so, all the strength of appetite doth becom so weakened, saith Galen, that sicke folkes desire rather to die, then to receiue in anie thing at their mouths, or haue it so much as but to touch their lips.

In the Maid, of whom we speak at this present (who hath not bin dealt with, by any cunning or helps to Nature) the Liuer hath beene so besieged with the burthen of hurtfull humors, that her Naturall heate being broken, and hauing no more force, it hath (by little and little) dried quite vp, with all the neather parts of the Belly, yea & so, as there is nothing indeed to be wondered at, when we perceiue the functions of the naturall Oeconomy to be also abolished. This then is one of the causes of this distast of meates, and of the Fast or abstinence thereon ensuing, that this drying vp of the Liuer, and of all those parts seruing to nourishment; from whence attraction beeing taken, it hath bin followed; with a priuation of sucking or swallowing, which is the beginning of hunger.

In this opinion, I haue Galen for my warrant, who saith; By reason of the liuers debility, the bodie can receiue no nourishment. And yet notwithstanding, it may subsist a long time, to wit; so long as the heart remaineth sound. Neuerthelesse, Hermocrates died at 27. dayes end, because the corruption of humors had gained the substance of the hart, which likewise the quality of the Feauers heate (by altering) had consumed, after it had chased away the Naturall heate. But this Maide hath beene preserued, in regarde, that the Feauers fire beeing extinct, the Naturall heate which remainned, beeing but weake, hath beene detained in a bodie fast locked vp, couered with a wrinkled colde and drie skinne. By making but small decay of this heate in her, shee hath not much neede of maintaining it; and this may serue for a second and third reason, of this defect in appetite.

For all that shee exhaleth by the meanes of respiration, as breath and Naturall heate, the same is still supplied and repaired, first of all, by the ayre drawne as well by inspiration, and receyued at the heart, by the Pipes and Organes of the Lunges and Lights: as by this insensible transpiration, which (according as I can iudge by her disposition, is almost vtterly wasted in her) receiued in the whole bodye, by the Arteries. After this, Nature (thus lagde, and scantly vigorous) delights her selfe with this crude rhumie Humour, which cannot otherwise in this young bodie, but must needs (of it selfe) much abounde and encrease, according to the qualitie of her sexe and age.

And the same more especiallie may be now discerned, by some litte Decadence of her bodie thorough the pallsie, which is not (as yet) perfectly cured. Now this Humour (in time) doth seeth it selfe, and conuertes into foode, proper and aptest for nourishing of the bodie. And there is no want of manie other thinges, which haue their maintenance in our bodies, wherewith Nature may serue her selfe; when (pressed by Hunger) shee pleaseth to vse them for sustenance: As Fat, Marrowe in the Bones, and Phlegme; all which thinges, the despoyled partes of the bodie dooth drawe to their Naturall seatings, to furnish well their owne expences withall; and they receiue them (like a dispersed Dew) thorow their whole substances.

The reason of the Maides preseruing in this maner.

Her exhaling by respiration

Natures delighting her selfe.

The Maide troubled with the Pallsie.

Many things in the body to supply nature withall.

CHAP. VII.

A further Discourse on Fasting, approving that manie Creatures do fast in verie strange maner.

Proceeding on further in this Argument, concerning Fasting, I finde one that saith, Snailles in the Ayre, having drought, if no dew fall to them from Heaven, they live by sucking of themselves. And hence grew it, that Plautus said:

Quasi, cum caletur, cochleæ in occulto latet, suo sibi succo vivunt, ros si non cadit.

And so the Snailles on the earth, when they will defend themselves against the sharpe cold of Winter, they make a certaine white covering before their shelles entrance, hard like Plaister, and live so within (sixe months together) vnder the ground, neere to the rootes of Hearbes; sustained only by the internall humour; which redoundeth from themselves. And diuers other kinds of creatures; do the same; such as are accustomed to decline from the rigour of Winter; by withdrawing into Dennes: As Serpents, Frogges, Flies, Wormes, Dormice, Rats of the Mountaines, Turtle Doues, Swallows, &c.

As concerning Serpents, almost all of them (shunning the colde) doo remaine all Winter hid within the earth, as Aristotle saith. From whom, albeit Plinie hath borrowed that which he saith concerning Serpents, he hath (neuerthelesse) against reason, taken Aristotles intent contrary to sense, there where hee saith; That of all Serpents, the Viper only seeketh places vnder ground: and the other, the hollowes of Trees, and of Rockes. Whereas (quite contrarie) Aristotle hath written truely; That the Viper is well nigh alone, that during the Winter, withdrawes himselfe vnder stones or Rockes, and the other vnderground; for then sleepe serues them instead of foode. Nay, and much more, Vipers do endure a whole yeares hunger together, without counting the time of Winters cold, so saith Pliny. Which we haue knowne by experience, wee that haue abundance of them heere: of whom, we haue kept some (a yeare) enclosed in Bottles of Glasse, without anie Foode at all.

As for Frogges, whom Pliny thinkes (after a life of sixe moneths) to resolute themselves into slime and mud, and reuiue again at the Spring times comming Waters, they are soundly deaded with colde, but yet not reduced to nothing, as Pliny holdeth. For, they remaine in the Cauernes on the Coasts, where not only they abstaine from al nourishment: but are likewise halfe dead, and they may be seene in this estate, in your Fennes on the Sea-coasts (which are not subiect to Freezing) at all seasons of the yeate. So likewise in the Ditches, whether they are retired; where you shal not only see their young ones, but also the Frogges of the other yeare.

Your Flies benumbed with the colde of Winter, remaine hidden in Riffes of Planchers, and pieces of Woode; and come not out, but by Fire Artificiall, or by the renewing heate of the Spring or Summer. During this numnesse, they live not so much by reason of their Bodies smalnesse, or littlenesse (as Aristotle argueth) as by the cold which is in them. For that which is hot, desireth Foode, and digests it verie soone: Contrariwise, that which is cold, doth very easilie let it alone.

Among Flies, they that make Honey, do forbear to come foorth in the same time, and abide close in their litle Hines, yet without eating: whereof we may easily make prooffe; in that, if one bring food, and set it before them, they wil not so much as touch it. And if it chaunce, that any one gets forth; you shal see the same to haue a transparant bodie, vterlic emptie of all nourishment: From the heart of Winter, vntill the yeares renewing, they live in sleepe, without any nouriture, so saith Pliny.

Above all other Creatures, the Grasshopper doth fast the longest: for the moisture (which is super-abundant in their bodies) doth sufficiently furnish them with store of nourishment.

Wormes, growing to bee olde, their skin

Plin. in hist. Nat. Lib. 8. Cap. 39.

Plin. in hist. Nat. Lib. 3. Cap. 40. Of Frogges.

Of Flies.

Ari. de part. Anim. lib. 4. ca. 5.

Arist. Lib. 8. Cap. 14. Of Bees.

Plin. in hist. Nat. lib. 11. Cap. 16.

Grasshoppers Arist. lib. 4. cap. 5. de part. Anim.

Of Wormes.

Symmach. lib. 1. Epist. 33.

Plaut. in Capti.

Arist. in Hist. Au. l. 3. Cap. 13

Creatures that do inwardly sustain themselves.

Of Serpents.

Arist. in Hist. Animal. lib. 8. Cap. 15.

Plin. in hist. nat. Lib. 8. Cap. 39.

Pliny reprooved.

10

20

30

40

50

Chrysalides.
Aurelie.

skinne doth outwardly waxe very harde, and because (that skinne) then lookes of Gold or yellow colour, the Greeks were wont to call them Chrysalides, and the Latines named them Aurelie. After they haue once taken this forme, they will receiue nothing more into their bodies, neither doe they voidc or cast anie thing forth.

Of the Silke-Worme.

Among these, the Silke-worm sheweth a Myracle in Nature about the midst of Summer, for being then fast closed vp within her huske of Silk, she liues (at the least) for fortie dayes together, not onely without eating; but imployeth besides, verie much of hir substance in making of silke. And comming forth of her shell or couerture, shee becommeth a Butter fly; & yet this liberty maketh her not to seeke any nourishment.

Of the Bat or Dormouse.
Arist. lib. 8. c. 7.
Plin lib. 8. c. 57

The Bat or Dormouse, remains hidden (all Wintet) in a perpetuall sleepe: and during all this time, shee hath no other nourishment then sleepe.

Of the Mountain Rattes.
Arist. lib. 8. cap.
17.

The Rattes of the Mountains, like vnto Dormice, do sleepe hidden al the winter, and for sixe moneths together, in full continuance, they are busied in such a profound sleepe, as being cast vp out of the grounde, by digging, or otherwise, they will not awake at all vntil such time as they be brought into the sunne, or laid before the fire, and they beginne to feele heat. They carrie Hay, Chaffe, & such like other things into their Cauerns, onely to keepe them from colde: but yet all this, hinders them not from sleeping soundly.

Prouision to keepe them from cold.

Of the earth
Tortoise.

The Tortoise of the earth, lieth al winter within the earth, and ther passeth that season, like as the other creatures doo. And Rondeletius witnesses, that not only in Winter, but likewise at all times, shee can liue longest without any foode, yea, albeit shee haue her head cleft or cut off, and this is by the power of the cold moisture within her selfe.

Rondelet in lib.
de Amphib.

Of the Loriot
Arist. in Lib. 9.
Cap. 29.
Plin. in lib. 10.
Cap. 24.

The Loriot, a kind of Bird hauing this Nature, that if a man see her, when he is sicke of the Jaundise, the man shall wax whole, and the Bird die immediately: lyeth all the Winter hidden in the earth, and sheweth not her selfe, till about the Solstice of Summer.

Of Swallows.
Arist. in lib. 8.
Cap. 16.
Plin. 10. c. 24.

Your Swallowes, as well those of houses, as they that are wilde, to shunne the sharpnessse of Winter, when it draweth neere, do retire themselues to secret places in the Neighbouring Mountaines, where you shall finde them Naked, and without any Feathers on them. And you may see them (almost) in the same condition, euen at the Spring time. As for them which are called Swallowes of the Sea-coasts, they withdraw themselues to the sides of Riuers, Lakes, Marishes, and of the Seas, where the Rockes doe serue them for a retirement: There shall you see them in multitudes together, as newly assembled to chase one another. In such sort, that (as Agricola saith) the Fishermen many times, take them out of the Waters, so fast tied and ioyned together, that our New Phylosophers, may cease henceforward, to fordge their new Colonies in Affrick, and other places beyond the Seas.

Swallowes of the Seacoasts

Turtle-Doues, they beginne to hide themselues when they are fatte; and although they leaue their Feathers in their holes, yet notwithstanding, they keepe their fatnesse.

Of Turtle-
Doues.
Arist. in lib. 8.
cap. 16. Hist.

Some one peradventure (becing a more diligent searcher into natural things) may discover a great number of other Birds, which might be thought to be strangers, because (in Winter time) they hide themselues thus; and yet neuertheless are of our country; As Kites, Stock-Doues, Black-birds, Stares, Hoops, Backs Gripes, Owles, and others; which are sustained and fed by the fat within themselues; in all which time, the course and office of the belly ceaseth. For Galen holdeth; That when hunger is not thoroughlie contented, the fat, Marrow, and Flegme, do gieve nourishment to the Naturall heate.

Other Foules
of like nature

Whence also we may relieue a doubt, arising from that which Hippocrates hath written; and maintaineth, that a man can hardly liue out the seauenth day, without eating; which day, although he chaunce to ouer-passe; yet notwithstanding, hee will die soone after. For, albeit it may be true, and that which hee hath Written might haue been manifested in this maid of Consolans, the Intestine receyuing no foode at all, did during this time, so shut vp it selfe, that it could not afterward admit the receipt of any, yet notwithstanding, it is not altogether so constrained, that by this restriction of the Entrayles, death should follow thereon so readilie. For, it is recorded of the Scythians, that

Galen. 4. vstiperi. & Com. 2.
de rat. viti. acut

Hippocrat. in
lib. de carn.

Comparison with the Fasting Maide.

if

Long fasting endured by the Scythians.

A Maide of Spire, that fasted 3. yeares

Observations concerning the Maide of Spire.

A lerned Phisition in France writing on the Maide of Spire.

Plat. in Lib. de Repub.

Herus Pamphilus.

Plin lib. 11. Cap. 54.

Diog. Laertius. ex testi. Diceac.

if by any occasion happening them, they are to endure long Fasting, they wil bind vp their bellies strictly with large bands, to the end, that hunger may not charge them so soone, because they haue lefte little or no space at al, for the bellies conuoy. Moreouer, the maide of Spire, of who ran such great report, that she had bene three yeares without eating: yet, after the superabounding humor in her was consumed, she returned (according as they report that wrote thereof) euen as one from banishment, to hir first right course and vse of feeding, beginning (as it is very likely) with Pottages and liquid thinges, if it bee true which those Authours haue recorded. Or rather, if the mother of the Maide, did not impose this on the honest people (as the rumor ran) therefore, there hath bin some occasion of remaining in doubt, by their owne proper writing. For it might be noted, that hir Nose voided much filth, her ears wanted no part of their Ordure, and that she deliuered abundance of teares at her eyes: which sheweth, that the languishing powers haue bin often releued with some food, albeit not solid, whereby these Excrements (by a secret posier in Nature) were sent into proper Organs.

Nor dooth this make any thing at all, against the Paradox, which M. Ioubert hath in the second Booke of the first Decade, where (among many other examples, of long fasting and abstinence) hee produceth, as an Hypothesis or argument disputed, that Historie of the Mayde of Spire. For, beside a great number of observations of the same qualitie, which he placeth before, & that haue bin approued by the auouching of manie graue Authours, we haue also notable confirmations, as well by experience of elder ages, as of our moderne, newer, and later. Plato in his Commonwealth, maketh report of a certaine man, named Herus Pamphilus, who remained ten dayes together, among the dead bodies of the which had bin slaine in a battell. And two daies after that he was broght thence, as hee was laying on the pile of wood to bee burned among other dead bodies, he was found to be aliu. As for Pliny, he is not perswadable, that thorow lacke of foode, a man should yeild to death at the 7. daies end. Diogenes Laertius declareth by the testimony of Dicearchus, that Pythagoras the chief master of abstinence continued 40. daies together without drinking: by whos doctrine also, Apollonius Thyaneus lerned (out of long vse & custome) to endure fasting for many daies. Pliny assures vs, that drought or thirst may be surmounted by constant perseuerance, and that the Roman noble Knight, Iulius Viator, hauing had warning (in his yong years) by Physitians not to drink any water at all, by reason of an indisposition in him, leaning to the dropsie, so turned the custom of Nature, that he passed al his age without drinking

Fresh yet in our memory, & all France hath seene the same in the person of the Lord Marquesse of Pisani, who is a man of such merit, as the K. himselfe employes his seruice in matters of great importace. There are many Books of deuout enstructions, which do recount meruails of diuers frequent and voluntary abstinences, as of P. Aleantara, a Monk in Spainne, and that for 8. daies & more in euery month. But beyond all others, there is a historie verie famous, of a certaine Maide, named Catharine, a Natiue in the land of Colberberg, who hath bin known to liue 7. years together, without drinking or eating any thing whatsoever. She was carefully tended by Henry Smetius, at this time Professor in Heildeberge, & John Iac. Theod. Physitions, till the 24. of Nouember, 1584. by the commandement of John Cestmir, Count Palatine. And since then also, foure graue Matrons were appointed to keepe hir company. who haue acknowledged with the Physitions, that this fast or abstinence is most true. Three yeares after, this History was traduced into French, & printed at Frankford, by John Wetzel, in the yeare, 1587. with an aduertisement in the end, that the maide then liued still in that maner, without drinking, eating, sleeping, or deliuering any excrements. Beside all those, Ioubert (concerning this argument) hath set downe such pregnant & necessary reasons, as I cannot thinke, that any one needs to make doubt thereof.

Neuerthelesse, being my self afterward to discourse on the same subiect, I happened (being in a Booke-sellers Shoppe) as mine eyes wandered ouer vewes of the Bookes, to light on a little Treatise, bearing this Title in the forehead: Fieri non posse, vt quis sine cibo & potu plures dies & annos transingat. I tooke the book, which in regarde it was VV ritten by I. Haract, Apollon. Thyaneus. Plin lib. 7. cap. 18.

Iulius Viator a famous Roman Knight, drank not in all his age.

The Lotde Marquesse of Pisani.

P Aleantara a Spanish monk

Catharine of Colberberg fasted 7. yeares.

Prooffe made of the truth in this case, by diuers Phisitions of great credit.

The Authors discoursing on the same Argument.

I. Haruet, Doctor of Physicke.

In Page 74.

The reason of his further pursuit in this point, to satisfie D. Haruet.

Triall made by persons of Honour and respect.

Eye-experience is an vndoubted persuasion.

The validitie of Iouberts writing.

a Doctor of Physick, of the same condition with vs, and as we are;) I read it verie seriously from the one end to the other. But coming to the place, where he argues on the negligence of the Authours of so manie notable examples, who (hee saith) haue beene somewhat deceyued, by the inueterate beleefe of this extraordinary fasting, I thought good that hee should be satisfied in this point; and passed my promise thereon, in the name of our Maide of Consolans. Albeit during so many months and yeares, I could not giue my selfe to consider all her actions and motions: Neuerthelesse, it is verie likely, by that which in all places is sayde of her, to approue the three yeares Faste now in question. And yet such as haue seene her naked, as we haue done, could coniecture no otherwise, if shee bee not changed since the last time I sawe her, which was in the moneth of Iulie last, 1602.

Some say, that she is a little more full of flesh, and yet she hath neuer receiued any foode at all, that could possiblie bee knowne. Beside, this truth ought to receiue credite generally, by the faithfull report of so many persons of honor and goodly quality, who (for trials sake) haue kept her in their Houses amongst their Maids and Children, some for three, others for foure months and more. If anie one bee further desirous, and would willingly see her, he hath free liberty, & the Maide her selfe will not contradict, what other proofes he or she can make of her. But in my minde, Ioubert would haue receiued no meane contentment, by the sight of an accident so strange: For, if to so many pertinent reasons he could haue had but an eye-experience, he should not nowe (perhaps) haue had Haruet for his aduersary. Who being in the humour to combate both against sence and reason, it may bee, it would then bee the harder for him, to vndergoe the demonstration of Ioubert. For they are vnder-propped with principles soundly assured, & drawn from the Oracles, euen of the great Dictator of Nature.

CHAP. X.

The matter and manner of so straunge Fasting, disputed betweene Ioubert and Haruet, with many excellent and approued examples, tending thereto.

First of all, Aristotle enstructeth vs, that all kinds of creatures, haue a certaine naturall heate in them, which is combined to the soule with so strict a Bond, as the one cannot bee without the other, and those Creatures (while they liue) haue this heat, but death approaching, they are cold immediatly. In another place, There is (saith he) in the seede of all Creatures, the thing that causeth fecunditie, and that it is it which wee call heate. Further he saith; In the earth, and in the Waters, the Creatures and plantes doe ingender, because in the earth there is a moisture, and in the moisture is a spirite; and in this great substance is the animall heat, to the end, that all things should be somewhat full of soule. Thus he doth hold that all things are made by heat, and that all functions are performed thereby. Galen also is of the same opinion, and sayth; That heate is either the substance of the faculties, or at least, the most chiefe and necessarie Instrument of them.

It is no meruaile then, if Haruet think it strange, that Ioubert saith (according to Aristotle) That life dependeth vpon heat only. For that it must needes be so, life is nothing else, but an abiding and attendance of the soule with heate, according to the same Aristotles iudgement. And wee cannot in this obscuritie of thinges, finde any more assurance of this present life, then by the functions thereof: of all which, heate (as the especial instrument, and without other means, is the author, the motiue cause and effecter.

Nor hath Ioubert (vnaduisedly) defined life by heate, when Aristotle hath designed death by the extinction of the same heate: for Ioubert groundeth on this Axiom, that of two contraries, the con-

Arist. in lib. de vita & mors, & resp.

Arist. in lib. 2. de gen. Anim. Cap. 3.

The animall heate which performeth all things.

Galen in lib. ad Glauc. & in lib 4 de usu par.

What life is. Arist. in lib de resp.

Ioubert defined life by heate.

consequents are contrary. And Galen himselfe (who holdeth death to arrive then, when heate, being weakened and broken by frequent action, becoms faint, and that the temper of the Elementarie qualities, which are in vs (being out of square) comes to yeelde it selfe vnder the tyranny of one alone) giues thereby, reasonably to vnderstand, that the course of life keeps it selfe for so long time, as naturall heate doth abundantly disperse it selfe about the radicall humor, and that the Elementarie qualitie do hold a good simparchie amongst themselues, in their harmonie and kinde accorde, which we call temperature. And therefore, it is blameles to define life by these two causes, Heate and Temperature; because it behooueth to take the definition, from and by the cause which is most neere. Now, heate is the most neere Instrument of the soule, and temperature next vnto that of Naturall heate, which disposeth and accommodates it vnto diuerse actions. Then this causeall definition, is well deriued from the chiefe and principall occasion of Life, which heere we haue alledged by the Authoritie of Aristotle.

Neuerthelesse, Haruet goes after another fashion, he defineth the life of man, to bee an action of the reasonable soule, producted into the bodie of man: but this definition is not subtle enough. For first and formost, life is no action of the soule, otherwise it should bee the soule that liueth, and not the bodie. But, as it hath bene saide already, life is an abiding, or an Vnion of the soule with the bodie, according as Aristotle describeth in another of his Bookes, whereof action proceedeth afterward. Heere to I adde, that the actions of life being to vnderstand, to smell, to mooue, and to nourish: if life were an action, why then it should be an action of action, which is most absurd. Or else, if life bee an action of the reasonable soule; insomuch as she is reasonable, the corporeall parts should bee driuen to performe their operations, as receiuing food for nourishment, and to beget hir like, only by reason of the intellect, and not by any natural sence. But per aduventure, Haruet hauing drawn his definition from others, hath read, that life is an act of the reasonable soule; which word of act, hee hath conuerted into action.

How long the course of life keepeth it selfe.

How to take a definition in his right form

After what maner Haruet defineth the life of man.

Arist in 8. Act.

The actions of life.

The bodily parts in their operations.

10

20

30

40

50

Now let me tell ye, Act is that which the Greeks call εντελεχεια, which is a perfection, energy, & mouing power of it selfe, far enough differing from that which they terme εργον. And so one may (to some purpose) define life: an Act of the soule in the body, that is to say, a power & vertue of the soule, by the vnion therof with the body. Whence is easily vnderstood, that taking life generally, it should rather bee imputed to naturall heate, as to the Organ of the soule, then vnto reason. In case notwithstanding, that this heate doe still abide vnited with the radicall Moisture; which although it be (day by day) consumed by this heate: yet nature prouideth a daily subrogation of new, which shee borrows from the nouritures we receyue, as hath bin said already heerebefore.

But Haruet imagineth, that these nourishments doo yet serue to another vse, which is (saith he) to releue and fortifye the spirits; the which Iouber hath omitted: as if vnder this name of radical moisture, we should comprehend only moisture by it selfe, & not the spirits likewise. And what is hee, who will deny, that the spirits are not restored and strengthened, both by eating and drinking? But to speak truly, many things are piled and heaped vp in the body, very vnprofitably, and to small purpose. Moreover, that which he proposeth against Hippocrates in the 14. Aphorisme of his second Booke, is altogether Paradoxical, to wit; That hee in whom heate is most languishing, hath the more neede of nourishment: which he proueth by example of a fortie yeares aged man, who (sayeth hee) receyueh more Foode, then an Infant of two or three dayes: in whom notwithstanding, there is greater aduantage of this heate, according to Hippocrates.

Beholde (in my iudgement) a verie feeble Argument, if all should be alledged that he failes in; and also, if we should oppose the Organes of both kindes, the one against the other. For, to the ende, that vnder this worde Infant, no cauillation may be couered, I call all them Infants, which are vnder foureteene yeares of Age, in the verie same manner as the Greekes do vnderstand the word παιδιον. They, I say, that according to the proportion of their Mawe or little Bellie, do take more foode then men of middle and perfect age: as well by reason of Act insted of action.

Life an act of the soule in the body.

Heat abiding with the radicall moisture.

The vse of nourishments.

The spirits restored by eating and drinking.

Hippocr Lib. 2. Aphor. 14.

Comparison of an Infant, and a man of fortie yeares.

Cauillation auoyded about the word Infant.

the power of the facultie, which seeths or boyles the foode (whence proceedeth a speedie riddance thereof) as by their frequent exercises: during which time, good store of their substance, glides it selfe thorow the pores of the skinne. Heere also I may bee silent, in those two necessities alledged by Hippocrates, which Infants haue of eating, to witte; for Nourishing, and to giue encreasing to the bodie.

The two necessities in Infants in feeding.

Of the facultie that boyleth the food in the stomack.

Nowe, the strength of the facultie which boiles the meate in our stomacke, dependeth much vpon temperature and moderation, but that is, when it is excited and prouoked on by naturall heate; which, albeit that after one foode bee digested, the introduceth not any other nouriture of her selfe, as Haruet sayeth; yet notwithstanding, in regard that this first foode is digested by heate, there growes immediately, a feeling of penury & want of foode, at the mouth of the Ventricle, which we call hunger. For this cause, Galen. in Com. 2. Aphor. 13.

Ioubert referreth onely to heate (as the principall Agent) the quantitie of those meates, which are afterward receyued, and gouerned by the appetite of hunger. The facility of supporting hunger (sayth Galen) acknowledgeth it selfe, when anie one hath no appetite to meate; and yet neuertheless, feelth not thereby some endamage-ment or defect. Which Haruet brings in thus, that such as are restored from sicknesse, haue a good appetite; and yet notwithstanding, no such meates are giuen them, as their appetites doo desire: but when aduise is giuen for restoring their powers it behoueth also to haue regard to the infirmitie of Naturall heat, which must not be ouerthrowne, bur still supported. This is thus doone, because that the temperature, beeing not (as yet thoroughly recouered, and the naturall Faculties feeling themselues (as yet) diseased; the Organs cannot boile the meates received in too great a quantitie. Now

For restoration of the powers, and maintenance of the temperature.

Old men haue not neede of often feeding

Ioubert in his demonstration, is vnderstoode to speake of the healthfull, not of the sicke, or else of them that are neutral. And therefore he concludeth, that olde men haue not neede of meate often, because they do not desire or apeteite often, principally considering, that they haue cold bodies: whereto Haruet in no wise wil agree, for he saith; That al the action of mixed bodies, cometh from that qua-

The action of mixed bodies

litie, which wins the vpper hand in the Elements assembling. Now, so it is, that in liuing bodies, heate ruleth ouer the other qualities; of which heate, euery action hath his originall, and not of colde. I willingly admit the proposition with Aristotle, as concerning mixt inanimat things, and which acknowledge the simple forms of the elements for their principles. But in animate bodies, which haue a more noble forme, and wherein are contained those other more ignoble (euen as the Triangle within the Quadrangle) it is not a thing so easie. For, they acknowledge, (as principall of their functions) that nature, which I say is properly called the soule, that is; the moouing vertue of the body naturall and organicall, liuing by power.

Arist. in Lib 2. de gen. anim. c. 5

Of bodies that haue soules, and their forme.

As concerning that which Haruet placeth in the assumption of his argument, to wit; that heate (in the liuing bodie) surmounteth the other elementarie qualities, I cannot allow thereof, except hee will haue vnderstood by this heate, that it (being diffused thorow the bodie) gouerneth and moderateth the whol Oeconomy therof; and so long as it is in essence, maintaineth life; but approaching neere quenching, then death of necessity must follow. This also surmounteth and subiecteth to it selfe, not only the cold, moyst, and drie elementary quality, but euen the hot elementarie Nature also, as beeing (in it selfe) truly celestiaall. For, if hee meane the predominant heate of the Elementary heate, as it seemeth to ensue by his Sylogisme: then let me set the Salamander before him, which (in his mixture) is composed of so colde a temperament, as his verie touch doth quench the fire, euen as if it wer ice. He liueth neuertheless, yet not by the heat mixed or elementary, which being weak in it self, cannot exceed the power of this cold. It followeth then, that it must needs be by celestiaall heate, which likewise maintaineth life in Serpentes, and euery one knowes them to be temperately cold.

Of heate, surmounting the other elementary qualities and the power thereof.

The predominating heat of the Elementary heat

How the Salamander liueth by celestiaall heate.

This then which hath bene said, that cold (in Olde men) maketh them to hate the abounding of foode; it must bee, that Haruet meanes it in such sorte, as that cold hath no Dominion or superioritie ouer human bodies, neither that actually it can haue. Put for the cold of Hippocrates, it is the same which Galen, & all

Hip. in Com. 1. Aphor. 14. Galen Com. 3. Aphor. 15.

Phy-

Physitions (by comparison) do call a soft heate : and therefore, their weak and feeble heate, hath need of some small helpe. Euen as the slender flame of a Lampe is maintained, by putting in Oyle by little and little, but it is easily extinguished, in being smothered by a superabundant effusion.

Hitherto we haue spoken of Naturall heate, as beeing the Primitiue Agent; wherein wee haue defended for M. Iou- bert, that according to the aboundance or tenuitie thereof, the bodye hath neede of much or little nourishment. Let vs now speake of the Primitiue humor patient, and of his Nature, and how it is subiected to this heat.

With consent of all Physitions, wee haue constituted heate, to bee the first essentiall cause of our life, and haue sayde; that thee cannot product any effect of her Functions, without a proper aliment or foode, which is the radicall moysture and primitiue abounding, mingled with her heate in the seede and Menstruall blood, the principles of our generation.

But by the swift flight of yeares, it greatly decayeth and diminisheth it selfe, to our harme, by continuall embracement of her heate: for retardiment whereof, as we do warily renew the Oyle in the burning Lampe, euen so do we as diligently giue feeding to this heate; feeding, I say, which serueth to restore this humiditie, & deliuer it from so strict an embracing.

So that, if in the bodie there be some superabounding humour, which the partes cannot any way disperse, Galen calles the same. πρωτογενεσ υποληπτικου, and the Schooles, An unprofitable excrement.

As that, saith he, which remaineth within the little hollow places of the Bones; like the froathy humidity in the Lunge, the Clewy humour in the ioyntes, the seede in the Testicles, and Pipes whereby it is voided forth, or as spettle vpon the tongue, and Milke in the Breastes: euen so this holdeth a place of Foode, and serueth the fomentation and kindling of naturall heate, as Ioubert hath verie am- plic

Written in his Paradoxe, and wee our selues haue heeretofore declared. Therefore, so long as this humour remaineth in the body, there is no neede of meat or drinke; and yet it is all this while, nourished; and liueth: Which Haruet verie obstinately denieth, and reiecteth al the reasons of this demonstration. But for our owne credite and respect, without further amusing our selues, to cul out his writings by parcels, where himselfe both maketh and faigneth Obiection, answering also to them, as any newe Appren- tize in Physicke might doo the like: wee will confound those reasons, which seem to bee best furnished with apparance: albeit, wee cannot endure any error, how little soeuer it be, in matters of such moment.

In the beginning of this proposition, hee imposeth on Ioubert, who hath Written, that not onely the smallest heat helpeth, to make abstinence or Fasting the more easie, but also in this regarde, that the superfluous humor, and which holdeth the place of Naturall heat, might be more abundant.

This dooth Haruet interprete in his sence, as if Ioubert hadde sayde, that the sole smallest heate, not only helpeth vnto render abstinence the more easie: but also causeth, that the superfluous humour, which holds the place of Naturall heate, should bee the more plentifull. From whence hee deriueth this following proposition, that the least heate causeth the superfluous Humours abounding. Against which proposition, he so distilleth out his owne Spirite, and Tormentes it so tediously, euen as if it were on Iouberts himselfe.

Next, hee makes it a great case, and thinkes hee hath attempted an acte be- seeming another Hercules, in shewing; that the Excrement dooth sometime sup- plie the place of Foode, and that Nature serues her selfe with vñ thereof, and it can repaire that, which is impaired by the power of heate. In trueth, the Excre- ments do not fall vnder one and the same consideration: For, there be some which are quite against Nature, and vterly un- profitable, & which haue no resemblance at all with vs: and therefore, can neuer conuert themselues to our vse, to bee in- corporated with vs. The Greekes call them by an apt name πρωτογενεσ, as the Ordure, Vrine, sweat, &c.

There bee others more according to nature, which are profitable to som part of the bodie: and yet are excrements, not in regard of the whol body, but for some part

Haruets obsti- nate denial a- gainst appa- rant truth.

Haru in pag: 47

Iouberts words not truly in- terprete d by Haruet, but wrested to his own purpose.

In pagina 52.

The Excre- ments not all vnder one co- sideration.

Excrements that are aun- swercable to nature, and profitable to some parts of the body.

Natural heat the primitiue Agent.

Repetition of what hath for- merly bin said

Swift course of yeares decayeth the life of men.

Galen in Lib. 5 Apbor: 39.

The superabounding humour, and in what manner it alideth in the body.

Of the Chylus or white iuyce converted into blood.

The Spleene, and her superfluous euacuation.

Gal. 2. de fact. nat.

The two partes of blood.

Of the diuers kinds of choller, and the Serofities.

H. vnes obiection of rhume or Flegme.

The answer. Galen. De fact. nat. 2.

part thereof only. Like as the Chylus, or white iuyce, proceeding of the meat digested in the stomacke, whereof blood is engendred, after that the Ventricle is satisfied, it is sent to the Intestines, as an excrement and vnprofitable charge. When it is drawne by the Liuer, then that which was an excrement of the ventricle, is made an aliment vnto the liuer. There while blood is made of the Chylus, the Spleene and the bladder of the Gall or Choller, do attract gall both from the one and other, being their familiar nourishment, and yet the excrements of the Liuer. Hauing receiued their conuenable portion, they send away the rest as an excrement, which can doe no more Seruice, nor yeeld contentment to anie one part. The Spleene sends that which shee holds superfluous, by a little Vessel at the bottome of the Ventricle; and somtimes by the Hemorrhodes, and from thence to the Intestines. The Vessel of the Gall or Choller, sends it by the Parancholidocum, to Duodenum, or Intestinum primum, and other parts. By which demonstration, Galen induceth, that all these two parts of blood (to wit, the thick and earthy, which the Spleene draweth, and the most subtle of all, drawne by the bladder of the Gall or choller, which hauing past the examen of heat, converts it selfe into choller) are according to nature, and do serue her to some vse, because their proper vessels were ordained for them, and to be receiued thereinto.

But as concerning the sundrie kinds of choller, and all the sorts of Serofities (being the watterishnesse, or thinner partes of the masse of blood, like to Whay in Milke, which floats vpon it, after it hath bin let out of a Vaine) because they are things vnprofitable, and out of Nature, there is not any vessell allowed to them. Only to Flegme or Rhume, nature fayled in allowing it a perticuler receptacle, although it be beneficial: but rather hath lodged it in the vaines with the blood, there to bee boyled, and made capeable for nourishing the bodie. Haruet obiection, that this Rume or Flegme, holdes no part of an excrement, but is Naturall and Elementarie, to wit; a fourth humor of blood: I answer, that by conference of other humors, which are of the nature of Excrements, it appeareth manifestly, that by that place of Galen, excrementall

Flegme, is meere vnderstoode. For thus hee compareth all the excrements. As (saith he) among the diuers kindes of Gall, one is profitable and Naturall in the Creature, the other vnprofitable and out of Nature: Euen so, in Flegme, that which is sweete, is healthfull and Naturall in the liuing creature; but that which is salt, is out of Nature.

10 Moreouer, to approue this, in euery concoction, there is some excrement separated from the blood, which then shall bee the excrement of the Elementarie Flegme. For example, the Melancholy iuyce hath his excrement; the billious or Chollericke hath also his, and yet it is not that which is lodged in the stomack, and in the Intestines: for it hath not (as yet) attained so farre as the Liuer, which is the Shop or Work-house of this concoction.

20 In brieft, Flegme is not held to haue any perticuler Instrument, because, that if somtimes thorow want of eating, there shall be a defect of blood, the same turning it selfe on the blood side, shall serue as nutriment to those parts. For naturall Flegme it nourisheth and maintaineth continually, not by power and want of Food only, but the parts colde and moist actually.

30 It is then an excrement, but profitable, which Galen in the place before alledged, saith; That abyding in the bodie it may be changed. And he doth not any way contradict the same, in the first of his Prognostickes, where hee calleth it (not as he doth heere) Nourishment halfe boyled, but an Excrement of the nourishment halfe boyled, whereof the bodie being filled, men may (so saith Hippocrates) not only bide from eating once a day, but also much more easily, endure an extraordinary hunger.

40 Haruet obiectioneth two things. The first in the Dropsie, named Anasarcha* (which the Latines call Intericus) all the parts of the body being swoln with flegm or Rheume; and yet notwithstanding, the patient must haue food giuen him at all times, whereof if there be any want, he seemeth readie euery houre, to giue vp the Ghost. I answer, that all Flegme is not proper to nourish the body, but only that which is sweete. Now, that of the Dropsy is salt, by reason whereof, it putrifieth and sendeth noisom sauors to the *Galen*s comparisons.

Prooffe of concoctions, by euident example.

Flegme hath anie perticuler instrument.

Of Naturall Flegme.

Galen ubi sup.

Galen, in 1. de Prog.

Hippocrat. 2. de ac. sec.

*A Dropsie vniuersallie spread ouer the body, betweene the skin, and the flesh.

The answer to *Haruet*s obiection.

the parts which it toucheth. And Galen calleth it earthy, or deadly, because, beeing commixed with some other humours: he not only changeth his true and naturall colour (as Galen saith in the same place) but also his temperature. So that, both by Hippocrates and Galen, it is more often designed by the word Water, then of the Phlegme or Rhume. Vpon which occasion, Serenus calleth it Aquosus languor. And Horace tearmeth it, Aquosus albo corpore languor.

This solution may also satisfie the obiection which he makes soone after, concerning the excrements of sick persons, which (saith he) if they haue power to nourish during the disease, wherefore then (they being consumed) doth not the sicknesse it selfe cease also? And if the sicknesse cease, why then are all the parts in the body depressed? Alas (good man) those excrements are wholly contrary to Nature, and the body desires nothing more, then to be deliuered of them, as Galen speaketh of the Sereons waterish humour. That is more strong, which hee alleadgeth a little before; that Ioubert doth not conclude well, saying; that if the ventricle (being filled with the Phlegmaticke humour) hath no appetite: in like maner, all the partes of the body (being filled) can haue no desire or hunger. For the appetite of the ventricle (now in question) is animall appetite, which being not in the other partes, this Phlegme cannot communicate it selfe vnto them in the same kind.

I answere, that there are two sortes of appetites in the ventricle, the animall, and the naturall. The Animall appetite is a certaine molestation and anguish of the ventricle, proceeding from the sucking, or compression of the food; whereby (being made angry or offended) it desireth meate. But the naturall appetite, is a power, bred and borne in all parts of the body, which continually desireth what it wanteth, and is thereto agreeable. The one is appeased by vapour of the meats receiued, and by (how little soeuer) it be of substance; the other, by the only application of foode. The Animall appetite is perticuler to the sole-ventricle: the naturall is common, as well to the ventricle, as to all the other parts, whereby (being carried to the Superiour Orifice of the same Ventricle; he exciteth the Animall appetite, which serues vs as a Spurre for the taking of our meats. So long then, as the raw and Phlegmaticke humour remaineth at the ventricle, and that there (by naturall strength thereof) it is boyied and brought into good estate: the tunicles (which make the body of the ventricle, in taking their competent portion; yea, and the very best thereof) doe conuert the same to their owne profit. So, the naturall appetite being contented, the animall appetite is not offended, neither complains at entrance of the ventricle. If all the body were full of one and the same humour, all the parts (whereto this appetite is common, and communicateth the strength of this emotion) would borow thereof, and draw thence what should be seruiciable for them.

These are the Arguments, wherewith the learned Ioubert hath fortified his opinion: Arguments, which (in my iudgement) vntill this instant houre, there could be no man found, that did know (deseruedly) how to stand against them. Whereto there are adioyned many examples, both of Plants and other Creatures: that not onely preserue themselves many daies, but many yeares also, without any nourishment outwardly taken. As in Plants; the Onion and the Garlike, &c. In Graine, Wheate, Rie, Barley, Oates, Millet, and others. In and among Beasts, Serpents, Lizards, Dormise, Beares, Crocodiles, and Camelions. The authority of which examples, Harnet labourerth to eneuuate, by opposition of dissimilitude, and great disproportion, which is betweene the life of brute beasts (yea much more of Plants) and that of man: because his principall is referred to the reasonable soule, and theirs to the soule irrationall. Beside, that heart (the instrument of both) is much more noble in man, then in the vntreasonable Soule; and yet is more in the vntreasonable soule, then in the Plant. Whereto I answere, that the similitude of these examples doe very well agree together in that kind of life, whereof we speake in this place; which is, The faculty of feeding, and nourishing the body, and which is equally

The superior Orifice of the ventricle.

The Coat-armours of the ventricle.

The body is not filld with one humour.

The strength of Iouberts Arguments.

Examples of Plants, Grain and beasts.

Dissimilitude of life in men and brute beasts.

The similitude of life defended.

Gal in 1. de Prog. Hippoc. in Aphor. 6. 14. & sect. 2. Galen Aphor. 482. couc. Serenus. Aur. in Od. Lib. 2. pag. 66.

Concerning men in time of sicknesse.

Gal. 2. De nat. fac.

The appetite of the ventricle.

Two appetites, animall and naturall.

The appeasing of both the appetites.

*Arist. in Lib. de
Gen. 2. Cap. 5.*

In Pagina. 78.

The humour abounding in crudity.

Abounding of Phlegme to to cause the Apoplexie.

*Gal. in Com. 3.
Aphor. 20.*

Concerning
life.

*Arist. in Lib. de
gen. 2. Cap. 9.*

A vegetatiue
soule in man.

Arist. ubi supra.

equally distributed, as well in beastes as in Plants, saith Aristotle. Moreouer, that they agree in kind of the cause, to wit, the raw and Phlegmaticke humour; where with their bodies are as well filled, as those of men. But who can, (saith Haruet) support such a great abundance of Phlegme in Diaphragma, without a palpitation of the heart, sicknesse of the stomacke, and paine of the collicke and raines? And who can retaine them in the head, without an Apoplexie? I answer, that this humour, doth there seeth it selfe in the body, and yet not corrupt it selfe. For, being according to nature, it cannot create any accidents or diseases against nature. Perhaps he will obiect, that the very abounding of Phlegme, causeth an Apoplexie.

But (I say) that it is an Excrement properly of the braine, which hath not bene wont to goe lodge it selfe at the ventricles thereof, neither doth, except it be driven by the spirit, or the vapour. He may say, that in these Natures, the Spirits are more languishing, and have not power sufficient, to make an impetuosity so violent. Whereto I reply, that albeit (otherwise) exercise of the body is healthfull, according to Galen: yet notwithstanding, if ye will exercise a Man full of Phlegme, or subiect to one and the other choller, or else full of blood; ye shall forward him (by such exercise) either to an Epilepsie, or Apoplexie.

Now, whereas he saith, that our life is differing from that of Plants and beastes, and that her principle (which is the soule) is much more noble the theirs: what is he that will deny it? Seeing Aristotle himselfe believed, that she onely was diuine, and came from somewhere else abroad, to lodge within our body. But because he encloseth within his obiection, the vegetatiue Soule of Plants, and the sensitiue of beastes: it behooueth to let him know, that our body hath a vegetatiue Soule, and nourisheth it selfe as a Plant; senseth or senseth as as brute beast, and hath discourse of reason, of which it maketh vse like to a man. Marke but his beginning, saith the same Aristotle; he liueth as the Plant, and hath onely then the vegetatiue Soule. Afterward (in time) hee gaines the sensitiue; and at length, comes to the intellectuall and reasonable, which bringeth all perfections with it. For he is not wholly (at one time) both animall and man; neyther an Animall and an Horse (though this kind of reasoning is scant seemely, in the mouth of a Christian Philosopher.) He must bee first of all an Hearbe, as a Beete or Lettise; afterward a Dogge, Horse, or the like thing; and last of all he comes to be Cesar or Caro.

But Haruet holdes on yet, and pro-ueth by Hippocrates, that our fore-fathers would neuer haue sought out a proper manner of feeding for man; if one selfe-same eating and drinking had bene sufficient, for the nourishment both of men and beastes. Neuertheless, he omitteth that which Hippocrates addeth; that in the first age, men vsed one and the same kind of food, as other Creatures did, because the inuention of sowing and planting was (as yet) vnknowne to them. Then they fed on such Fruites, as nature (in her owne kindnesse) produced, without any tillage. Howbeit, the omnipotent Creator of man, had a will from the beginning, that he should not liue onely by the fruits of the earth; but also that he should vse the vnreasonable Creatures for his nourishment. What would he haue Hippocr. more to say? That which our ancients did, declared a wil, to provide for the infirmity of our naturall heat, which being vnable (sometimes) to digest meats of such crudity; is much better supplied and maintained, by those that are prepared and corrected by art and experience, in doing whereof, the health of man is the lesse subiect to perrill. Otherwise, a man (if he had been vsed thereto) might feed on Hemlocke (dangerlesse) with the Stare; and on Helleborus with the Quaille; or vse poysons (as Mithridates did) and not be poisoned: for man being invred to such a custome, they would be to him as naturall viands.

In like manner, an old Woman of Athens (recorded by Galen) vsed familiarly to eate Hemlocke; as Thrasias did Helleborus, by report of Theophrastus: A maide being sent by the King of the Indias to Alexander, did (for long time) feede in the sight of all beholders, on

Napellus,

Of mans being both animall and man

Hippocrat. de Prisca. Med.

Mens food in the first age, before tillage was knowne.

The care of our elders in the first age, for naturall heat.

What meats a man might eate in some kinds.

*Gal. in lib. 3. de Simpl. fact.
Theophrast. in
lib. 9. Hist. plant.
Cap. 18.
Arist. de reg.
pr. in.*

Napellus, commonly called Woolfesbane, without any prejudice vnto her health.

But without all these, hath not our good Mother the Earth, yeilded (out of her bosome) many other things necessary to maintaine life? Yes truelie hath she, and euen in such estate as shee receiued vs, when wee arrived in the Inne of this World; in the very same manner shee doth both entertaine and sustaine vs: shewing her selfe euermore benigne, sweete, indulgent, and readie to doe (whatsoever she can deuise) to serue our vse. When she is tilled and husbanded, what diuersity of foodes doth shee produce, apt and proper for our nourishing? How plentifully is she furnished without Tillage? What Oudours? What Sauours? What Iuyces? What Colours? And yet (all this while) we will needes exercise our cruelty vpon brute beasts. We will keepe those Creatures imprisoned, on whom Nature hath freely bestowed, the large and spacious Pallace of Heauen Why are not we more curious, to make banquets in simplicity, and without Butchery (after the manner of Pythagoras) rather then warre in the Ayre; aduventure life on the Seas and Riuers, and rage ouer the Earth, as wee doe? Our Elders report, the age which we tearm the Golden Age, was happy in this; that it sullied not her mouth with the blood of Creatures.

The Philosopher Appolonius Thyaneus, being demaunded by the Emperour Domitian, why he kept not the common manner of feeding, which consisted in the vse of Flesh; but rather fed on Roots and Fruites, such as the earth yeilded? Returned this answer. All that the Earth bringeth forth to vs, is wholesome and healthfull. Ineede not then goe seeke after the Fowles of the Riuer Phasis, or the Francotines in Ionia. Alasse, with me (as with Countrey Horace) much better agreeth the Oliue, gathered from the Trees fat Braunches, or Sorrell, growing in the field, or Mallowes, wholesome for wearied bodies.

Haruet pursueth, to confute the alleadged examples, saying; That that which is reported of Serpents, Dormise, &c. is meere lie fabulous. For, as concerning Serpents, that abide all the Winter in their Dennes: they nourish themselves with Earth. Bears and Dormise, they make their prouision of food in Autumne, whereon they liue like vnto the Ant. The Camelion feedes himselfe with Flyes. The Crocodile cannot liue long out of the Water, according to Aristotle, &c. Whereto I answer. That the Serpent should nourish himselfe with earth onely, the reason of the same Philosopher doth repugne. For, he saith; A mixed body cannot be nourished, with one sole and simple Element; whereto also, the successe in thinges is conformable. For we haue many times obserued, that as among Fishes, the great ones eate vp the smaller Fry: the selfe-same is in practise among Vipers, Adders, Snakes, and such like. But that Serpents can liue very long without foode, Aristotle shewes the same, by experience of such as haue bene kept by Apothecaries, whereof we haue spoken heeretofore. And as concerning that which was said to the Serpent, in the third of Genesis; Thou shalt eate earth all the daies of thy life; this nothing at all concerneth our earthly Serpents, but onely the ancient Enemy to mankind, whose slauiish Seruants doe eate earth, that is to say; they can relish nothing but earthly thinges, according as our learned Diuines haue expounded it.

Aristotle writes, that the Dormouse (in Winter) is not onely hid in the Caves of the earth, but also in the hollowes of Trees, and that (during this season) he fattens by sleeping. Haruet thinkes, that he eates the prouision he hath hidden; and labours himselfe against Aristotle, saying: That sleep euacuates the body, when as the ventricle is emptied, by reason of heat, which euermore consumeth moysture. But behold heere the Aphorisme of Hippocrates, which is flatly against him. They (saith Hippocrates) which in the night time doe become altered in body, and thirsty; it is best for them to sleepe, although they be neuer so dry. For sleepe (aboue all thinges else, doth keepe the body moyst, very pleasantly: yet not that body which is wholelie empty and dry, but that which is filled with foode, or with crude moysture. For the natural faculty (all this while) bestoweth her vttermost power, in concoction of the meats

Of Serpents. Of Beares & Dormise.

The Camelion The Crocodile. Arist in lib. 2. de gener. An. m.

A comparison of Fishes with Vipers, &c.

Arist. Anim. lib. 8. Cap. 7.

Gen. 3. 14.

D. Aug. in Gen.

Arist. in lib. 8. Hist. Cap. 17.

Hippo. in lib. 5. Aphor. 27.

How necessary sleepe is for the body.

Our Mother the earths care for our maintenance.

The earths plenty without tillage.

The freedom bestowed on Creatures by nature.

Ouid. 1. Metam.

Domitian his demaund of Appolonius I by aneus.

The Philosophers answer.

In Pagin. 67. 68. 69.

Plin in Lib. 11. Cap. penult.

and raw humours. Who will make any doubt then, that a sloathfull Creature, and full of cruditie, may not fatten himselfe by sleeping? Pliny saith; It is best making concoction in the time of sleepe, for gathering corpulence, that is. to say, for fatning of the body. And Martiall, willing to waken those Students, which sleepe away (as one saith) the fat of the morning, hath addressed these two verses to them.

Martiall.

Doruitis nimium, glives, vituliq, marini, Nil mirum si vos crassa Minerua premit.

Gal in lib. 2. de Temp.

We see many beasts, which (at Spring-time) comming forth of their dens; are fatter then other, because they haue found the time fauourable to the. And Galen saith, Women are more fat then men; by reason that they are more cold, and greater sitters in the house, then vsually men are. Aristotle prooueth by two reasons, that Bears do not eat any thing, during the time of their winter retirement: the one, because they come not forth at all; the other, in regard their bellies are restrict, and their intestines empty. But Haruet wrangleth against the first; because (saith he) they haue wherewith to feed on. But a beast of such greatnesse, what store (I pray ye) needes there, of Roots, apples, or such like, for all those daies, and all those months? As for the second reason, Aristotle iustifieth the same by eye-experience. For one saith, that their intestines (thorow lack of eating) do close vp in such sort, that they almost touch or cling together. And therefore, when they come abroad againe, they feed on a certaine hearb, called * Aron, onely to get loose their entrailes. The first seauen daies that they lie hidden in their Caues, they are so soundly ouercome with sleepe, that although one smite vpon them, yet they awake not; so saith Pliny & Olaus. They say both, that they fatten wondrously by this heauy sleep; and principally, by licking their right foot. Which is to be vnderstood in this manner, that after they haue past 14. daies in sleepe; they arise and sit on their buttocks, & lue by licking their foremost fecte, vntill such time as the Spring comes againe, and then they issue forth. As concerning the Male Beares, they are very fat: but Arist. in Hist. Anim. Cap. 17. Lib. 8.

Of the Bears feeding in Winter.

* Wake-wort to vnloose the Beares entrailes.

Plin in hist. nat. lib. 8. Cap. 26. Olaus in Hist. Septentr. lib. 18

10

20

30

40

50

not the Females, because (at this time) they nourish their whelps. Nor are they any such masse or lumpe, of white and deformed flesh, which by little and litle (in licking) they bring to a forme, as ignorantly hath bin credited of antiquity: but a young litle Beare, well formed, such as great Scaliger witnesseth, to haue been found (not long since) in the belly of a She-Bear, which one rent in pieces.

The same Scaliger, first (before Haruet) declareth, that the Lord John des Landes, when he was in Syria, bought a Camelion. And it was noted, that by prompt mouing of his tongue (which he can cast and recast (in an Infant) out of his mouth) hee tooke a Fly that was on his breast. This was newes to them, who supposed it onely (among all others Creatures) to liue without foode or drinking: and onely to nourish himselfe by the Ayre, euermore fasting, without enduring any languishment, as Tertullian saith. Neuerthelesse, it is not altogether from the purpose, to imagine, that he should liue by the aire: because he hath beene obserued to passe a whole yeare together, without eating any thing, as the same Scaliger testifieth. Also, that after he hath yawnd or gapt, and taken ayre: hee hath shut his lawes, & then his belly became blowne full (like a bladder) with this ayry substance. There be some, that say, that turning himselfe to the Sun; he seemes to swallow downe his beames, and so pursues them (yawning) all about. Tertullian hath auouched as much, when (speaking of the Camelion) he saith, He nourisheth himselfe by yausking and yawning, he chawes, and blows vp himselfe like a foot-ball, the wind is all his food.

The Crocodile, by the testimony of Aristotle, and (after him) Pliny, passeth alwaies sixe moneths of Winter in his Caue, without eating. Aelianus saith, that he remaineth threescore daies only so hidden, during which time he eateth nothing. Symmachus, one of a Consuls quality among the Romaines, caused Crocodiles to be brought into the Theater before the people, after hee had made them to fast fifty daies. Long time afterward, he kept two, without giuing them any foode: reseruing them, to haue them seene at the arriual of certaine friends of his. Albeit (saith hee) they

The Male Beares very fat, but not the females.

Scalig. Exerc. 6 15.

Exercit. 196. 4.

That the Camelion can catch Flies.

Tertul. De pag.

Scalig. vbi sup.

Tertul. in Lib. de Mans.

Arist. in Hist. An. lib. 2. ca. 13. Plin. in Hist. Nat. lib. 8. Cap. 25.

Symmach in lib 8. Epist. 14.

Arist. in Hist. Anim. lib. 8. cap. 20.

* That live as well on Land, as in the water. Lib. 2. cap. 20.

Of the Bird of Paradise.

How the Bird of Paradise nourisheth her selfe in the Ayre.

Cardan in lib. 9 cap. 20.

they made shew, not to live long time without eating. As for that which Haruet alleadgeth from Aristotle, that the Crocodile, being out of the Water, cannot live any long time. It receiveth interpretation, by the very same place, where he writes. Albeit the Crocodile delights her selfe in the Water, and that in such sort, as she cannot live, being enclosed out of watry places: Nevertheless, shee dyes, if she receiveth not Ayre, as she is wont to doe, and nourishing her young ones out of the Water. For as much then, as she is a Creature partly watery, and partly earthy; he holds, that she is to be ranked among those Creatures, called * Amphibij, which are not of a staid Nature, whom he calleth επιαμφοτεριστοι. Other wise hee should contrary himselfe having written before: That she spendes the day on the Land, and the night in the Water: both the one and other shee affecteth, by reason of the warme moisture she loveth. Which he would have to be vnderstood, of the time when shee doth not hide her selfe, because cold is so contrary to her: as when it is faire seasonable weather, she must needs be on the Land in the day time, and in the water all the night.

I might here avouch the Indian Birds without feete, which the Sacrificers to Mahomet, did somtime make the King of the Molucques to beleue, that it dropt downe out of Paradise: because she is not found but in vnknowne places, separated from resort of the world; in regard whereof, they of that Countrey call it, the Bird of Paradise. Shee lives continually in the Ayre, and neuer at any time toucheth the earth, till after she be dead: whereon then she lieth, and preferueth her selfe (long time) without corrupting. This Bird dooth not nourish her selfe on Mushromes, & other insect thinges, as Sparrowes and Swallowes doe. For she liueth in the middle Region of the Ayre, where are no Creatures (knowne to men) whereon she may feede: but vpon the Ayre onely, or on the vapour arising from the Isles of Molucques, which doe send forth (on all sides) a very sweete and Aromaticall saour. Cardanus holdeth, that shee cannot live of the ayre alone, and perfectly, because it is very subtil in those Countries. But he that gaue her the Ayre for food, hath power likewise so to thicken the aire: as to render it selfe apt enough for her nourishment.

And no lesse admirable is the Bird, which Plutarch calleth Rhintaces, verie common in Persia; which hath nothing emptie in her body, but is all full of fat within (as are the * Benericks in Languedoc.) And yet notwithstanding, this Aythour saith, that shee lives not but of the Ayre, and of the dew therein. Aristotle the Prince of truth, writes, that in the Furnaces in Cyprus, where the Melters and Casters of Copper are, they haue a little Creature, of the bignesse of a great Fly, which they call Pyrusita, that hath Winges and four feet. So long as there is fire in the Furnace, this worme or Fly liueth: but let it be neuer so little off from it, it dyes presently. And yet notwithstanding, this Creature is most cold, hauing no other maintenance, then the heat of the Fire onely.

But why should I dwell on these examples, whereof Haruet (in euery place) holds, that (by them) wee can draw no consequent to men. Peraduenture then, some examples (deduced from men themselves) may make him to acknowledge a truth. And therefore I will produce one, which is out of all scruple, and whereof Princes (worthy of beliefe) made recitall to King Henry the third, being in Poland. He had there many great Lords of France, Councillers, beside Physitions, &c. And among others, Monsieur Piduxius, our Deane, skilfull not onely in the Phisicke, but likewise in whatsoever concerned knowledge of the naturall Historie. He was then Physition to my Lord the Duke of Neuers, and called to Counsell with the Kings owne Physitions. From him was it, that we verbally heard this History, which also is written by Alexander Guaguinus of Verona, Captaine of the Foot-men in the Cittadell of Virebcka, on the Limits of Mosconia, and in his description of the said Country.

He saith, that there are certaine people in Lucomoria (which is a Region, in the vtmost Confines of the Sarmates, towards the North) which dye (or rather remaine entranced, like Frogges and Swallowes) euery year, the twentie Plutarch in vit. Artocer.

* The little Blacke-Bird, called a Gnat snapper.

Arist. in hist. A. n. m. lib. 5. ca. 9. Plin. in lib. 11. cap. 36.

Examples concerning men.

Manifested to Henry the third, K. of France.

Alexand. Guaguig. Veronens.

People in Lucomoria, neede the Sarmates, that dye, or are entranced.

ty leauen day of the month of Nouember, by reason of the extreame cold in that part of the Country. Afterward, at the Spring-times returne, the twenty foure day of Aprill, they come to life againe.

People called Grustintzians & Sperponomptzians.

These people make their Commercers with their Neighbours, who are the Grustintzians and Sperponomptzians, after this manner. When they feele the time of their entrancing to draw nere; they then locke vp their Merchandises in certaine places, and the Grustintzians and Sperponomptzians doe there take them, and leaue other (in their stead) of answerable value. The time beeing come of their reuiuing, they take the Merchandises left in exchange, if they perceiue they may make profit of them: if not, they demaund backe their owne againe, whereby ariseth (oftentimes) quarrels and wartes betweene them. By this sleepey trance, the naturall heat in these bodies (which otherwise are accustomed to this Ayre, and boyled againe, (as Albertus Crantzianus saith) is no whit extinct: because all the pores, places, passages, and conuoyes (beeing lockt vp and stopt) it gathers it selfe about the entrailes, and by this Antiperistasis, or repulsion of euery part; shee encreaseth her selfe, and makes her power the more vigorous for the Spring time ensuing.

The reason of this sleepey trance in this people.

Above all other parts of the body, the daunger lyeth principally in the braine; which hath great store of large openings, and (among others) the nostrils: were it not, that when they be ginne to waxe stiffe with cold; a tart rhume or moisture distilleth from the Nostrils; which (by report of the said Lord Piduxius) euen as it flowes, congealeth it selfe, no lesse then the spittle doth, and so it waxeth hard, before they fall to the ground, according as Sigismond de Herbestein describeth in the Historie of Moscovia. By meanes whereof, the Nostrils and other parts beeing so lockt vp; the mallice of the ayre cannot so easily pierce vp into the braine. And if any one of them, to shunne this cold vnfriendliness of the Ayre, doe thinke (by couering himselfe with skins and other things) to forestal the Icles hanging at the Nostrils and mouth, &c. immediatly the Ayre (being exces-

The greatest danger in the braine.

Their eyes, ears, nostrils,
and mouthes, are softly frozen vp, before they fall into this trance.
Sigif. Herb. in Hist. Moscoui.

Daunger in seeking to preuent this cold.

siuely cold) steppes vp into the braine, and there extinguisheth the naturall heate. So that these Lucomerians, in stead of a temporall entrancing, doe then fall into one perpetuall and endlesse. But the time being come, that the Sunne gaineth rule ouer the world, and brings againe the sweetnesse of the Spring season: the Ice moysture (at the parts fore-named) melting it selfe; heate (by little and little) insinuateth into the bones; feeling and vigour creeperth againe into all the members, and then hath the body the same Oeconomy, which it had before.

The manner of the peoples recouery.

Haruet concludeth this whole discourse, with the fasting of Moyse, Helias, and our blessed Sauour, which (saith he) would be held as no Miracles; if (according to Nature) so long an abstinence might be endured. Ioubert hath answered, that in sicke persons, and such as are subiect to much sicknesse; long Fasting or abstinence is naturall: but supernaturall in such bodies, as are otherwise perfectlie well, and of good temperature.

Haruets conclusion of his discourse.

And Haruets obiecting the place of Auicenne, cited by Ioubert: That the same might also happen to healthfull Men. For our selues, wee will embrace Iouberts opinion in such sort, as we holde the accident heere happening among vs, occasioned by a sicknesse against Nature, and yet (in time) may be recouered. But as for men of such rare sanctitie, we are not so deuillish; as to thinke, that their Fasting should ensue by any sicknesse: but onely by the especiall will of God, and that naturall appetite is returnable againe, at such time as is limited by his prouidence.

Auicenne his opinion of healthfull me.

Last of all, where he exhorteth euery one, to imitate a certaine Gentleman, who (by care and dilligence) discovered the imposture of an Hermit in Sauoy, that (by feigned Fastings) had long time deceiued the peoples opinion: For our selues, not knowing how to goe against authoritie, of so many rare and cleare sighted Phisitions, nor how to steale into our eyes, the credence of what they haue seene: wee loue rather to referre the causes of such extraordinary workes in nature, euen to the most curious Enquisitour, then (like to the companions of Vlisses) charmed

Haruets finall exhortation.

An Hermit
imposture in Sauoy.

* A Tree in Affrick, cald the Lor-tree.

charmed with the Fruit of the * Alister, or Lot-tree; to serue or know no other Gods, then Edusa and Potina.

CHAP. XI.

Of the authority giuen to the Germanes, to make election of the Emperour: What and who the Electors are. Also, of the manner which the ancient Romaines obserued, in consecrating their Emperours, and ranking them in number with the Gods after their death.

Pope Gregory the fift; a Native of the Countrey of Saxony in Germany, & Kinsman to the Emp. Otho, to the end, that the Empire might remain in their hands, who wer of his nation, made a law (but with consent of the said Otho) as concerning the election of the Emperour: which afterward was obserued, euen to our time, and so is (as yet) maintained. Whereby it was lawfull, and permitted to the Germanes onely; to elect the Prince, that should be called Cesar, and King of the Romaines. Also, to be stiled the Emperour Augustus; when the Byshop of Rome had approued and confirmed the election. The said Pope likewise gaue authourity, to be elected by three Ecclesiasticall, and foure Lay persons, to wit: To the Arch-Byshops of Magonce, Treuers, and Colongne: And to the Marquesse of Brandenbourg; to the Count-Palatine of Rhine; to the Duke of Saxony; and to the King of Bohemia; and to their Successours in all those dignities: And the said King of Bohemia, was added as the seauenth Electour, to take away all differences, which might happen in the election, and to iudge aboue them all.

Now I hold it very conuenient, being in a matter of this Argument; that I should also say somewhat in this place, concerning the maner obserued by the ancient Romaines, of inserting their Emperours in number with the Gods, after they were dead. They buried the deceased body with sumptuous Funerall pomp, making an Effigy or Image of Waxe, so neere resembling the dead Corps as possibly might bee, wan and pale, like to a sicke person. This Image was laide in an high and stately Bed of Iuory, at the entrance of the Imperiall Pallace. About this Bed (for the more part of the day) were seated in this order: first, all those of the Senate on the left side, cloathed in mourning; then on the right side, the Noble Matrones, all in white Robes, but wearing neither Chaines nor Jewels: This order was continued seauen daies together; and euery day the Phisitions came to the bed side, saying (after they had seen the Image) that he daily waxed worse and worse. The seauen daies being ended, and he reputed to be dead, the youngest Noble-men (chosen among the orders of Knights and Senators) carried the Bed vpon their shoulders; first, to the old Market place; then to Campo Martio without the Citty, where a Tabernacle was prepared; after the fashion of a Tower, on that side where the fiede was most spacious. This Tabernacle was filled within; with old dry Logges and Faggots, and a great quantity of sweet saouours: without, it was adorned with rich Cloath of Gold, faire Images of Iuory, and sundry sortes of beautifull Pictures. The Bed, and the Image in it, was shut vp within this goodly Tabernacle, and when the accustomed Ceremonies (in such cases) were finished: he who was the neereft to succede in the Empire, hauing a lighted Torch in his hand, first began to giue fire to it, and consequently all the other, fiering it on all sides: so that, in short time it was wholly burned. Then from some high place, suddenly was an Eagle let loose, by which Bird the people verily beleued, that their Princes Soule was carried to Heauen: And by these means, the Emperours were honoured among the other Goddes. Whosoever is desirous, to be further acquainted, with all the ceremonies touching this case: let him read Herodian, at the beginning of the fourth Booke of his Histories.

The Imperial Bed, and the attendants about it.

The carying of the Imperial bed.

The burning of the Imperial Bed and Image, & the Eagle's flight.

The Electors of the Emperour, were created by Pope Gregory the fift

This Law was made in the yeare 1001.

The seauen Princes Electors by their seuerall names.

How the ancient Romaines defied their Emperours after death.

CHAP. XII.

Who first found out the Art of Nauigation; deuising Ships, Gallies, Oares, Sayles, Ankers, Rudders: And who first of al fought vpon the Sea.

NEptune inuented the Art of Nauigation, if wee may credit Diodorus, speaking thus. Neptune (as the Candians say) hauing found out the Art of sayling; leuied an Army, whereof he made Saturne chiefe Commaunder. Which hath bin the occasion, that such as succeeded him, did verily belecue, that Neptune had full power on the Seas. The men of Misia, and the Troyans, found Skiffes, made of many pieces of wood fastned together, like to a Raft or Float-boat of Timber; whereon they began to Nauigate, passing on the Hellespont to encounter the Thracians. Some others doe giue assurance, that such vessels were first seene in the Brittain Ocean, which were made of Leather. The Sydonians builded some such of Oziers and Reeds, and with the went not onely a Fishing; but made no doubt of sayling in them on the chiefest Seas. In a long space of time after, the Inhabitants of the Isle of Coronta, aduentured to build Gondolots of wood onely, without any Oziers or Leather skins. Pliny saith, that the Nasselles or Skiffes were first put in vse vpon the red Sea, and that King Erytheus first sayled with them among the Islands. Thus, from the beginning, men frequented the Seas. But afterward, hauing left these small Boats, wherein (at first) they had practised nauigation: they began to builde ships as great as houses, therein to traueise all the Seas. Iason was the first that made vse of a long Ship; and the inuention thereof is (by Diodorus) attributed to Sesostris, King of Ægypt. The Erythreans deuised the Galliot, called the light-Galliot, with two Oares. The Gally (according to the opinion of Eusebius) had original, by the Samothracians, or (as Clemens will haue it) of Atlas: but Pliny saith, that Danaus brought it out of Ægypt into Greece. The Trireme, or Gallie with three Oares on a banck; was inuented by Aminocles the Corinthian. The Quadrireme, or for 4. Oares at a banke, was the Carthagenians inuention, as it is affirmed by Aristotle. That of five Oares for a banke, called by the Grecians πεντήρης: was first of al made by Nesichron of Salamina, and such kinde of Gallies did the Romaines build in Italie; in the time of their first wars in Affrica. The Gally of six orders, or of six Oares for a bank (which the Latines knew not how to expresse in one word, and Titus Linius was constrained, to call it by the Greeke name Hexeres) was deuised by Zenagoras of Syracuse. The said Titus Linius, maketh mention also, of Gallies of 7. and of eight oares for a banke; which he tearmed Hepteres, and Octeres. Nesegiton was the deuiser of them of tenne Oares for a banke. The Enneres, of eleuen Oares, were much vsed by Ptolomeus Philadelphus, who had a great number of Gallies: as some of 13. Oares, some of 14. others of 20. yea, and of thirty orders, according as Athenens writeth. Alexander the Great, deuised the Gally of 12. orders, to wit, of twelue oares for a bank. Ptolomeus Soter inuented the Gally of fiftene Oares. Ptolomeus Philopater, that of forty Oares; and it was two hundred and fourscore cubits in length; and in height to the top, about eight and forty cubits.

Hippias the Tyrean, was the Inuenter of ships of burden, or Merchants boats, which vulgarly in Flemish, are called Hulques; and by Appian and Thucidides, they are tearmed Holcades: of which kind were the Wine-Boates, the verie greatest whereof, we tearme Bottomes or Lighters, carying sometimes fifteen hundred Tuns, and the least, which are called Lusandes, doe carry but three hundred. Vlpian calleth them Vintners Shippes. Of the same kind are the woden Boats, for carying of Sand, Hay, & Coales. Such Ships of burden as these, are those for the transportation of Souldiours, which Thucidides (in his eyght Book) plainly calleth στρατιώτικα, of carying Souldiours, that the Grecians named τοὺς στρατιώτας, which name our vulgar hath retained to this day, in taking away onely one letter: for he cals Stradiot a man at Armes, armed for lightnesse. The Hippagines or Hippagoges, were certaine

Diod. in lib. 6.

Skiffes founded by the Mysians and Troyans.

Skiffes of leather on the Brittain Ocean.

Gondolot is a Venetian wherry.

Plin. in lib. 7. Cap. 3.

Leauing smal Boats, they builded tall Ships.

Diod. in lib. 6.

The Light Galliot.

The Gally. Plin. in lib. 7. Cap. 56.

Plin. vbi sup.

Arist. in lib. 6.

Polib. in Lib. 2. Tit. Linius in Lib. 7. Deca. 4.

Tit. Lin. in Lib. 7. Deca. 5.

Athenens in lib 5. Cap. 4.

Plin. in Lib. 9.

Plutar. in vit. Demetr.

Appian de Bel. Ciuil Lib. 5. Thuci in Lib. 6.

Vlpian in Lib. Vulgar. F. de furt.

Thuci. in Lib. 8.

Tit. Liv. Deca. 5
Lib. 4.

Cesar in Com.

Foylts and Brigandines.

Tit. Liv. Deca.
3. Lib. 3.

Discouerie of the Punick Army at Marseilles.

Plin. in lib. 7.
Cap. 56.

The Germans
nere Danubie.

* A City of Beotia, nere Cepbisus.

Diodor. in lib. 6.

Plin. in lib. 7.
Cap. 57.

certaine Ships among the Greekes, for cariage of Horses, as well on Rivers, as on the Seas, being imployed for the service of warre: which were invented by them of Salamina, and in our language are cald Passe-horses. There is another sort of Ships, which the Latines named Actuarias naues, and Cesar calleth them Victoria navigia. These comprehend all kinds of light Foylts, as Brigandines and others: which onely were invented for pleasure, and with the swiftest legerity; to cut through the Seas. These Foyltes were not ordained for any war-service, but to be as Seruitors to other Vessels: and for this reason, they were named by the Greekes ὑπερίπτα, as Seruiants.

There are many kindes of Actuary Ships, among which, are the Explorators and Speculators, which we tearme spies or scouts, being very swift of saile, and are vsually sent to discover the enemies forces. Two of these *speculatory Galliot*s, which were sent forth by the of Marseilles: brought tidings back, that the Punicke Army was at the mourh of the Rivers entrance. The Lembus is likewise in number of the Actuary Vessels, and was invented by the Cyrenenses. So is the Cymba or Barke, which the Phoenicians first made vse of. The Celox, so called for her swiftnesse, was first deuised by the Rhodians. The Cypriots doe attribute vnto themselues, the invention of the Cercuron, which is ranked in number of the Actuary vessels: albeit Nonius Marcellus saith, that it should be a very great Ship. The Illirians first founded the Squiffe, called in Latine Scapha, ἀπο τοῦ ἐκκέντησι, ab excavando; because first of all, they began to hew them out of very great trees. The Germanis which dwell about Danubius, invented little Boats, made of hollow trees: which the neighboring Rivers made vse of, in sted of Ferry-Boats. The people of Copa, invented Oares and Skuls; and Icarus deuised Sailes, though Diodorus doth say, that Aeolus first found them out. Dedalus deuised the Mast and Crossyards, with their fit furniture belonging to them. Pisens invented the Stem or Beak-head of the ship: And the Tyrrenians the Anker, which Eupalimus first made with two fangs or teeth. Anacharsis found out the grapling hooks or Irons for ships; And Tiphis the Rudder, or Instrument to gouerne Shippes or Gallies. What else the Reader would further bee enformed in, concerning these matters, he may more amply see set downe in the Book, which Lazarus de Baif hath written of Nauall affaires. Minos was the first that made war on the Sea, as Pliny hath confirmed.

Plin. in lib. 7.
cap. 44.

10

CHAP. XIII.

Whence the custome came, of giuing New-yeares gifts. The originall of Masques and Momimeries: As also of our Shroue-tide.

20

30

40

50

THE custome of giuing new-yeares Gift, to wit, the Gift whereof a present is made at the beginning of the year; came first from the ancient Romaines. For the Knights vsed euerie year, on the first day of Ianuary, to offer new-yeares gifts in the Capitole, to Cesar Augustus, although he were then absent: which maner of behavior, hath since those daies descended to vs, albeit in sundry kinds of vses. For in Italy, the greatest persons doe giue to the meanest: And in England, Subiects giue to their Princes; and Princes to the King, who returneth the some Gift in recompence. We imitate those Ancients, in the representation of spectacles, plaies, huntings, lousts, running of Horses, & likewise in the reciting of Comedies, euen in the same manner as they did: during their sollemnities of the Quinquatria, certaine daies dedicated to Minerva. Also of the Megalesian Playes, done in honor of the great Mother of the Gods: going Masked, wearing false vizages through the Citty. So haue wee learned a custome, to make Masques or Masqueradoes, not for a day or two, as they did in their Sacrifices; but euen for two months together before Lent: which giuing the greater licence to sin, hath bene the occasion of many mischiefes each day committed, yet passing without any punishment. As if it were lawful (by these meanes) to be vicious, or else, as if men imagined that they did not sin, because their faces could not be seene: And as God saw nothing at all, who is wholly iust, in recompencing both vices and vertues, assigning paines to the wicked, and praises to the good.

New-yeares gifts came from the old Romaines.

Of Italy and England.

Other imitations of our Elders.

Quinquatrie.

Megalesian
Playes.

Of Maskes & Masquera-
does.

Maskes haue bin the cause of many milchiefes.

Ops and Fer-ra, Rhea, Bere-combis, and Pessantia.

Of Mommeries.

Mimicke scoffers and Plaiers.

How the name of Mom-mer first rose.

Sueton. in lib. 4.

A witnesse re-proued for being a Player.

The meaning of Socrates.

Knowledge of mens dispositions veiled vnder maskes

The great
hurt and villainy committed vnder this colour, in pretending loue to women, &c

* I haue read, that the Corybants, Priests belonging to the Goddesse Cybele, first inuented Masques and Mommeries, & sullied their faces with blacke: from whence grew the name of smearing, which is tearmed in Italian Mascarati, a Masqued face. Varro writeth, that one of Aeneas cōpanions, which he brought with him into Italy, brought likewise Mommeries first into vse, which the Peazants and Country Boores only exercised, dancing in the Sacrifices of Bacchus, wearing false vizards, made of the barks of trees. Then the Mimicks, that is to say, Scoffers and lesters in Playes and Enterludes, vsed such Masques and counterfeited vizards: to the end, they might the more boldly reprehend and mocke at men, and make countenances both apish and ridiculous. For the Maske could not blush, even as yet the Italian Commedians doe obserue in their Zanies. And this name of Mommer, came of the Latine word Momus; that is, a Mocker; a very conuenable name for such masked men, who come to no mans house but to mocke, although themselues doe better deserue to be mocked. According as Suetonius exprobrated to Nero, who by often masking himselfe, sullied the pure glory of royal Maiesty. And the very truth is, Maskes, Mommeries, & such floutings, do instly carry infamy with them. For I haue haue heard a witnes reproched in iudgment, for hauing plaid in publike vpon a Stage, the part or person of a masked Bawd. And as concerning Maskes and Mommeries, they are nothing else, but to shew a man otherwise then he is indeed: quite contrary to the intention of Socrates, who said. Nature failed greatly, by not making windowes in our breastes, or Lattices at the least; to the end, that by those meanes, the courage, thought, and disposition of vs all, might be discerned. But nowadaies, men study how to hide vnder these false vizards, the small iudgement which can bee gathered, either of the goodnesse or badnesse of men, by plaine appearance of their reall face; & which (in truth of nature) they know not how to dissemble so deeply, as by the aduantageable helpe and cunning of these counterfeited Maskes. I speak not of the robberies and assassines, which vnder the shaddow of these vizards are committed. I speak not of the obscenity procured by these Maskes; occasioning many times, that good women shall be solicited, and pursued in quest of their honor; yea, and in the end debauched. Some hold opinion, that ther is no better meanes of making loue to a woman, then by being thus masked: for then they hold theselues vnder safe defence, to giue Rings, Jewels, Letters, &c. to Ladies, which cannot bee free from an immodest signification. If a man would but well consider, the power and preuailance in Gyges ring, which made men to walke inuisible, and wherein was suspicion of nothing else but liberty. But if to the girdles of Ladies such rings were fastned, as whilome was to the Ceston or girdle of Venus; Husbands would (by no meanes) suffer their wiues to receiue of Maskers such Girdles, which manie times are too liberally giuen them, and wherewith they are ouer-readie in girding themselves, because they thereby oblige and tie themselves to the giuers. Here I may not forget to tell ye, that such disguisings and changings of habits, are highly reprooued by the holie Scriptures: For God menaceth malediction, against all such as vse them, speaking thus by his Prophet Sophony: I will visit all such as are clothed with strange apparrell. And in Deuteronomy he maketh this prohibition. The woman shal not wear that which pertainerh to a man, neither shal a man put on womans raiment: For all that doe so, are an abomination vnto the Lord thy God. But we doe very badly obserue the commaundements of God. And herein, England stands exempted only, for euer hauing there vsed any such maskings, or euer will admit them. And the English-men haue a law, which forbiddeth any man so to maske himselfe, vpon the paine of life. Now, because Lent followeth so suddenly after Shrouetide; we Christians are then very curious, in eating dainty meates, being ouer-much addicted to care for the belly, eating immeasurably without any necessity: euen as if wee would supply abstinence before hand, with that which ought to follow, after we haue gluttonously deuoured flesh, like brute beasts. For Shrouetide is held but for a kind of little ceremony, yet to too great abuse, by hauing all thinges then

Example of the Ring of Gyges.

Venus her Ceston or girdle.

Disguising of apparrell reprooued by the Scriptures.

Sophon. cap. 1. 8

Deut. 22. 5.

England only exempted from such Masquings.

Of Shrouetide and Lent among vs Christians.

The extreame excesse of Shroucide, more then at any other time.

then in extreame of excesse, feeding and consuming, as if they then made a celebration for the bursting of their own guts; according as one hath very well said. This is so much the worse, in that it is done among Christians, and that they should make such slender esteeme of Lent: without any feare of God; in meere contempt of the Magistrate, and transgressing the ordinances of the Church, at such time as good and religious lawes are appointed, for a fit and conuenient season of Fasting.

CHAP. XIII.

When, and what time it was, that Heresies had their Originall and beginning: and who was the first Heretick & Schismatick.

NO Citty, no people, no Common-weale, did euer continue in such vnion and concord: but the Cittizens (about some occasion) haue been deu-ided into diuersity of opinions; a matter so euident and notorious, to such as are skilfull in Histories, as there needeth no further speech thereof. From hence (then) did Sects deriue their sourse and originall, which made deuision both in Citties, and in Religion, and was tear-med by the Greeks, Heresies of choise: because euery one made election of his maner of life, and which was best to his own liking, as among the variable sects of the Philosophers. The people of the Jewes in like maner, albeit they held one and the same Law: yet were they deu-ided into diuers sects, as much to say; as Heresies, to wit; the Pharises, Essians, Sadduces, Samaritaines, Nazarians, and Herodians. But be it howsoeuer, we haue the Apostles of God Authours of our Religion, who made no election or choise of any, to be recelued or embraced after their fantasie: but faithfullie taught all people, and Nations, the Doctrine of Iesus Christ, truely God and Man. It is not then lawfull for vs, to introduce or elect any nouell things: but to follow those, which haue bin ordained by the holy Apostles, & confirmed by counsels of learned Bishops and Fathers. Wherefore, and in this respect, the vocable Heretic, is esteemed among vs impious. And therefore our Diuines or Theologians, do tearme that Christian an Hereticke, that shall deuise or follow any Sect, contrary to the foundation of Christian Religion. Of which accursed impiety, to wit, of all Heresie, Simon the Samaritaine, called the Sorcerer, was chiefe Authour, with his im-modest Wife Selena, his companion in all wickednesse, and whom he had taken out of the common Steues.

This Simon Magus, causing himselfe to be baptized in Samarita, by Philip, one of the seauen Deacons; was the first of all that endeouored himselfe, to corrupt the Christian faith. And of him, al supposts and counterfeits, were tearmed Symoniacques, who would sell the grace of the holy Ghost, and preached, that our nature proceeded not from God; but of (I know not what) power from aboue, and supernaturall vertue. In this maner, Simon (from the beginning) sowed a deadly poyson, only to kill the roots of encreasing Religion. Against which hurt, the Apostles could make no better resistance, then by rooting vp & disannulling it altogether: because, that continually there would bee false Prophets, of whom we should be well advised, and stand vpon our guard; Being such as come vnto vs in the habit of sheepe, but inwardly are rauenous wolues. This Simon well perceiuing, that the Apostles gaue the blessed Spirit to such as they touched, who were sound of hart, and had a good zeale to be conuerted: effaied to obtain that of S. Peter by the price of Mony, which was not to be purchased but by faith and piety. But the Apostle said vnto him. Thy Mony perish with thee, because thou thinkest, that the giift of God may be obtained with Mony. Thou hast not any part in this faith: for thine heart is not right before God. Simon being thus expulsed from S. Peter, hee remained (alwaies after) his sworne enemy. Com-ming fro Samarita to Rome, in the raig-ne of the Emp. Claudius: he began there to exercise his works of Magicke, becom-ming thereby very famous, and much renowned. Within a while after; in the time of the Emp. Nero, he made himself better knowne and reuerenced: so that he was reputed as a God in the City of Rome, and a Statue was erected in his honour, beeing placed ouer Tyber, between two Bridges, bearing this inscription

* He was of a village in Samarita, called Triton, according to Tertullian in lib. 1.
de Heres

Simon Magus was christened in Samarita, by Phillip, one of the seauen Deacons.

Christ's admo-nition of false Prophets.
Math. 19. 34.

Simons dealing with *S.
Peter*.

Acts 8. 26. 21.

Simon Magus
his going fro Samarita to Rome.

Vnity & concord broken by diuersity in opinion.

Heresies of choise.

Sects among the Jewes.

The Apostles
of God.

Election of nouelties vtterly prohibited.

Definition of an Hereticke.

Read Iustine
Martin in his Apologies.

Symon contended with S.
Peter in working Miracles

Symon Magus
flyeth in the Ayre.

S. Peter prayeth to God.

Symon falleth, and died soon after in Affrica.

Iren. in Prefat.
lib. 1. de Heres.
& in cap. 20.

Seets that ensued
Symon
Magus by severall forgeries.

Elymas the Sorcerer in the Isle of of Paphos.

tion aloft: TO SYMON THE HOLY GOD. In the end, he grew to so great and audacious folly, that hee dared to contend with S. Peter, in working of Miracles. And as he employed his Art, to raise a dead Childe to life, which was neere of kinne to Nero: he made it to stirre a little, but the bodie budged not a jot from the place, being stiffe, and stretched out long. But S. Peter, after he had called on the name of Christ: raised the dead child to life. For which Miracle, Symon (moued with no mean fury) made an offer, that he would flye in presence of all the people, from Mons Capitolinus, to Mons Auentinus: prouided, that S. Peter would follow him, and that this piece of work should declare, which of them two was best beloued of God. Thus Symon (by his diabolicall Art) did put forth himselfe to fly, and Saint Peter exalting his hands to Heauen, desired of God, that he would not permit so famous a people to be abused, and deceiued by such Magicall charmes. His prayer being ended, the Magitiõ hauing fled halfe way between the two Mountaines: fell downe to the ground, and brake one of his Legs, and through the pain thereof, he died soone after in Affrica, whither hee was caried by his owne followers, after he had receiued so great a shame. He held horrible propositions, which are particularly declared in Ireneus, Epiphanius, Philaster, and Theodoret; and therefore, to auoyd prolixity, I spare but onely to speake of them heere. But very true it is, that Ireneus, in the Preface before his third Booke of Heresies, saith. That Symon was the Father of all Heretickes. And in another place he writeth: That all Heresies came of him.

Many sorts of Seets issued from this Monster, to wit; the Dositheans; the Cleobanians; the Georthenians; the Masbothenians; the Adrianists; the Eutyichists; and the Canists: all which severall seets (hauing forged some peruerse mutations of this one wicked deuiser) could haue no long continuance, but soon fell into vtter obliuion. There was also in the Isle of Paphos, a false Prophet, a Jew Magitian, and a Disciple to Symon Magus, named Elymas Bar-Iehu, who deceiued many persons by his illusions and enchantments, and resisted against the Doctrin of the Gospell; when he perceiued that the Proconsull Sergius, leained somewhat to the Doctrin which Paul preached. Who being a man led by the spirit of God, expressing grauity in his countenance, and fixing his eyes stedfastly on Elymas, thus reprovod him saying. O man, ful of al fraud and mischiese, child of the Dewill, and enemy of all righteousnesse: wilt thou not cease to peruert the strait waies of the Lord? Now therefore behold, the hand of the Lord is vpon thee, and thou shalt be blind, and not see the Sun for a season. And immediatly there fell on him a mist and darknesse, and he went about, seeking some to lead him by the hand.

After Symon Magus, succeeded a certaine Samaritain, named Menander, who in the time of Titus ruling the Empire, abused many people with false doctriens: going beyond his Maister in malice and deuillish Arts, making very admirable enchantments. He made his vant, that the Angels were vanquished by his Magick. He tearmed himselfe to be the Sauiour, that descended from Heauen for mens saluation; and no man could conquer Deuils, without beeing armed by him in Magick art, and made immortall by his Baptisme, which he deliuered after a contrary maner. Eusebius writeth, that the maine end of his Heresie, tended to obscure the merits of the Son of God Christ Iesus, and the doctriene concerning the peoples saluation, and the Resurrection.

It is said, that the Heresie of the Nicholaitaines, had his beginning from Nicholas the Profolite of Antioche, one of the seuen Deacons, which were instituted with S. Stephen by the Apostles: vnder the Empire of Domitian, and Pontificacy of Anacletus, about the yeare of our Lord, 83. This man beeing ieaious of his Wife, was reprovod by the Apostles, before whom he brought her, and there forooke her, to him that would haue her. And hence it came, that such as (inconsiderately) followed his Act, and embraced his Heresie: did repute it lawfull, to haue their wiues comon, and to paillardise impudently. And yet, according as Eusebius declareth, Nicholas neuer thought to do any such deed, neither euet had conuersation with any other Woman, but her to whom hee was espoused. But as honest a man as he was,

Act. 13. 10. 11.

Menander, disciple to Symon
Magus, excell-ling his Maister in deuillish Arts.

Euseb. in lib. 3.
Cap. 26.

Nicholas the Profolite of Antioche, of whom came the Nicholai- taines.
Acts 6. 5.

Euseb. in lib. 3.
Cap. 29.

was, and full of pietie, being very obedient to the Apostles: he brought his wife in publicke before the Apostles, to reiect the crime imposed on him, and to purge himselfe, because it was said, that he was ieaalous of hir. It was also to demonstrate, that carnall delectation was more to bee contemned, then followed. This Heresy then proceeded of a false imitation. These Nicholaitans were in Asia, and S. Iohn maketh mention of them in his Apocalypse, where speaking of the Church of Pergamus, hee saith: Thou hast them that hold the Doctrine of the Nicholaitans. Saint Ignatius, in his Epistle to the Trallians, speaketh thus: Flye from those most foule Nicholaitaines, louers of voluptuousnesse, wicked Calumniators. Read Rupertus also vpon the Apocalypse, what mention there he maketh of them.

Cerintus, another Hereticke, well inured to wicked manners, affirmed, that it behoued to obserue Circumcision, contrary to the precept of Saint Paule to the Galathians, where he saith; If you bee circumcised, Christ shall profite you nothing. And in the matter of Baptisme also, wher it is said, God is not pleased that wee shoulde fall into this damnable Heresie, which falsly affirmeth, that wee must obserue the Lawe with the Gospel; and Circumcision with Baptisme; and that (necessarily) we must keepe the Lawe of Moyses. This Cerintus sayde, that the God of the Iewes was not God, but an Angell: And that Christ was the naturall sonne of Ioseph, and of Mary; & man only, hauing in him nothing more then other men, onely he surpassed them in Wisedome and Vertue.

Hee taught moreouer, that the Kingdome of Christ should be earthlie, after the resurrection, wherein the Saints shold liue at Ierusalem, with iouissance of all delights, aboundance of meats, women, and all temporall commodities: in which estate (he saide) they should continue the space of a thousand yeares. And for this cause, the Disciples and followers of this Cerintus (who were in their full power in the raigne of the Emperour Adrian, and Pope Nixtus, first of that name, & about the yeare of our Lord, 130.) were called Chiliastes, that is to say, Millenarias. Saint Marke in the twelfth Chapter of his gospell, reprobued the foresaide Sect, saying; In the Kingdome of Heauen, neyther Men marry, nor wines are married, but are like unto Angels.

It should appeare, that the Mother to the Sons of Zebedeus, was attainted with this Heresy of Cerintus, to wit; that the Kingdome of Iesus Christ was earthlie: when she desired, that her two Sonnes might sit, the one on the right hand, and the other on the left, in his kingdom. Historians haue left no memory, of what Countrey or Nation he was. I thinke notwithstanding, that he was a Iewe and in the number of them, who (as it is said in the Acts of the Apottles) descending from Iudea, taught the Brethren, saying; Except ye be circumcised after the maner of Moyses, ye cannot be saved; about whose dissention, the first Counsell was Celebrated by the Apottles.

It appeareth, that this Cerintus liued in the time of Saint Iohn the Euangelist, by that which is testified by S. Ireneus, when speaking of S. Polycarpus, he sayth; That S. Iohn, comming once to the Bathes, found there the Heretick Cerintus in company of his followers, disputing verie vehemently, and like a bolde Blasphemer, impudently denied Iesus Christ to be God. Saint Iohn arising, admonished such friends of his as were there; to depart out of that place with him; for God would no longer suffer such impudent blasphemies. And so soone as they were gone out of the doors suddenly the house fell to the ground, and slew Cerintus with his adherents: which was a manifest example of the Diuine vengeance against them, who being full of impietie, blasphemed the name of God, and his Holie Doctrine, which the iust wrath of God would not permit to passe vnpunished.

The Ebionites began about the eightieth yeare of Iesus Christ, vnder the Empire of Titus, & Prelacie of Anacletus: A certaine man, named Ebion, was Authour of that Heresie, which proceeded of a commixture with the Iewish Religion. Nicephorus saith, that they were called Beggers, according to the word Ebion, which by interpretation is a Begger, because they were poore, beggerly, and destitute of true faith. They maintained, that Iesus Christ was not before his Mother. To confound and destroy such an erroneous opinion; Saint Iohn who wrot his gospell last of all, being desired by the Priests of Asia, and willing to declare the Diuine Nature

Clemens in lib.3

Nicephorus in lib.3. Cap. 15.

Apoc. 2, 15. S. Ignat. in Epi. ad Tral.

Rupert sup Apoca lib:4 cap:9

Cerintus the Hereticke, of whom came the Cerinthians Galath. 5, 2.

Extravag. Bap. Cap. Maiores:

Tertul. in lib:2 cont. Heres.

The Heresies of Cerintus in his doctrin.

The Disciples of Cerintus, at what time they florished

Thousand-yeares-men.

Marke 12, 25

The Mother of Zebedeus children supposed to be a Cerinthian.

Cerintus imagined to be a Iew.

Acts 15, 2.

S. Ireneus in lib. 3 Cont. Her. cap. 3

Cerintus an horrible blasphemer.

The death of Cerintus, and some of his followers.

The Ebionites came of Ebion the Hereticke.

Niceph. in lib. 3. Cap. 13.

The Heresie of the Ebionites.

John 1, 1.

Tertul. in lib. de Preser. de heres.Irenæus in lib. 2
Cap. 26.Of Martion
the Heretick.Cerdon and Valentine, He-reticks.

Eus. in l. 4. c. 30.

The Gnosticks.

The Heresie of Cerdon and Martion.Irenæus in lib. 1
Cap. 26.The reason of Cerdons opinion of the iust
God.

Nature of Christ, began to speake aloud thereof, in this manner; In the beginning was the word, and the word was with God, and God was the word. They wold receiue no more of the New Testament, but the Gospell according to Saint Mathew, and reiected the Epistles of Saint Paul. whom they tearned an Apostat, because he reuolted from the Law of Moyse. These members of Sathan preached also, that men ought to keepe the Lawes and manners of the Iewes. This Sect began according to the testimony of Epiphanius, in the Village of Cocaba, and spread it selfe thorough the Region of the Bisanites, after that Ierusalem was destroyed.

Afterward, about the year of our Saluation, one hundred and nine, in the time of Thelesphorus, Byshop of Rome, and first of that name, Martion, a Stoycall Phylosopher, a Natiue of Pontus, & Sonne to the Bishop of the said country, sowed his Heresie, and followed the Errors and Blasphemies of Cerdon and Valentine, who liued in the time of Martion. And some say, that they were all three together in the Cittie of Rome: Albeit some others do hold, that they came thither one after other. But Eusebius sayeth, that all of them came thither vnder Higinus, in the yeare of our Lord, one hundred forty three.

Martion held the same opinion, as the Gnostiques did; and made profession of Cerdons Heresie, from whose hand hee receiued it: but hee added something thereto, out of his owne craftie Braine. Cerdon and Martion were so bolde in folly, as to say: That there were two beginnings, and two Gods; one good, and the other bad: the good God did perfourme good thinges, and the bad God, wicked thinges.

Moreouer (as Irenæus sayeth) Cerdon maintained, that one of those Gods was iust, and the other euill. And, that that God, which was fore-told by the Lawe and the Prophets, was not the Father of Iesus Christ: and that the God which made and created Heauen was knowne, but the Father of Iesus Christ was vnkowne. And the cause which mooued Cerdon to say, that one of the Gods was good and iust, was: That the iust GOD had commaunded in the Law, that an eye should be taken from him, who did put out another mans eye, and a tooth taken for losse of anothers tooth. But the God which he called good, had commanded in the Gospell, that a man shoulde turne his right Cheek, to him that had smitten his left: And to him that had taken away his Coate, he should giue him his cloak also.

Besides, the iust God had appointed men to loue their Friends, and hate their enemies: but the good God had enioyned them to loue their enemies. Martion agreed heerein with Cerdon. But Epiphanius addeth, that Martion had set downe three beginniges, to wit; the first inuisible, the second visible, or the worker; the thirde, a meanes betweene the inuisible and visible, which was the Deuill. Theodoret the Byshop affirmeth, that Martion had forged foure increate substances, and taught his Disciples (saith Iustin Martir) to deny God the Creator, and that they must belieue in another God much greater then the Creator.

It is further auouched, that he forged two Christes: One that was reuealed in the time of Tyberius, for saluation of the Gentiles: the other, he whom the Creatour had destinied, and should one day come to re-establish the state of the Iews. This Hereticke, affirmed Christ to be borne, and had endured only by opinion and imagination, and onely in the shape of a seruant, but not in verie deede. And his reason was (as himselfe saide) that Nature would neuer suffer, that a Virgine should bring forth a Childe. For which blasphemies, and other detestable propositions, held by this wicked Martion, Irenæus called him, The Mouth of the Deuill. The Martionites his followeis, dared to maintaine, that the Serpent was better, and more excellent then the Creator, because the Creator did forbidde to participate of the Tree of knowing good and Euill, and the Serpent freelic did permit it.

As concerning the Heresye of Valentine, a Platonist, and the imitater of Basilides, Carpocrates and Prödicus, hereticks; it had beginning in the sixte yeare of the Empire of Antoninus Pius, and in the yeare of our Lord, an hundred forty sixe. This wicked man saide, that there were many Gods, because the Prophets hadde tearned God by diuers names, to witte; Eloy, Sabbahot, Adonay, and others. He laboured to prooue, that God the Creator

His reason for the good GodEpiphan. lib. 4.
Three beginnings maintained by Martion.Foure increated substances.Tertul. in lib. 4.
cont. Martion.His blasphemous opinion
concerning Christ.Iren in lib. 3.
cap. 14.Valentine the Hereticke.Heresy of many Goddes.

Math. 12, 17.

His Heresie concerning Christ, & the blessed virgin

Marke a Magician and an Hereticke.

The spreading of his heresies.

The successors of Valentine, & Sectes issuing out of his Schoole.

The Cataphrygian Hereticks.

Apollinaris the Hereticke.

Montanus the Hereticke.

Priscilla and Maximilla feined Prophetesses.

tor of the world, was another God, then he that was the Father of Christ. And because it is said in the Gospell: No man hath knowne the Father, but the Sonne; by this place, he saide, it was very likely, that the God knowne of the Prophets, and declared by them; was not the Father of Iesus Christ. He said moreouer, that the Sonne of God brought his flesh downe from heauen with him; and receiued nothing of the Virgin Mary: but passed thorow her, as water dooth in a Brooke or Chanell. And therefore he vsed to say in this manner: Iesus, borne by the Virgin, but not of the Virgin. He was of opinion, with one Marke, a Sorcerer and an Heretique, that mens soules onely were saued, and not their bodies. And his reason was, because Saint Paule said, That flesh and bloud could not inherite the Kingdome of heauen. Before such time as Valentine came to Rome; he had declared his peruerse Doctrine, and left some feedes thereof in sundry partes of Egypt; to wit: in Atropatia, Prosoyatia, Arsenoria, and Thebais, which are the inferior partes of the maritime Region, and vnder the gouernment of the Alexandriapolites. He and his sectaries vsed all thinges in common, and at free liberty, hauing their wiues common, and addicted themselues inordinately, to all kinds of villainies, Whordomes, Addulteries, and Incests. His successours were Ptolomeus, Secundus, Heracleon, Bassus, Colarbasus; and many sects (of very strange Names) yssued out of this Schoole of Valentine: As the Barbeliotes or Borborians, Naasimians, Strationitaines, Pheunionitains, Sethianians, otherwise called, Ophites, Cainnians, who commended Caine and Judas, Antitactes, and Perates.

In the time of Pope Pius, first of that name, the heresie of the Cataphrygians beganne and encreased, in the seauenth yeare of the Emperour Commodus, and after the incarnation of our Lord, one hundred, eighty five yeares. The heresie of Apollinaris, was the occasion and entrance thereof. And these Cataphrygians ensued the heretike Montanus, who became Frantique and distracted in his senses, by hauing seene some vision; and admitted mad women into his company, namely; Priscilla, and Maximilla, that stiled themselues by the Title of Prophetesses, the more easily to allure men into their errorrs. These were called Montanists, who held a strong opinion, that the Holy-Ghost was not giuen to the Apostles, but only to them.

At the verie same, a man named Tatian, a Syrian by Nation, and very learned, who had read Rhetoricke at Rome, with great honor and grauitie, puffed vp by a foolish perswasion of eloquence and ambition; seperated himselfe from the Church, and became the chiefe of the Encratites heresie. A name but badly agreeing with their actions; and which is as much to say, as men of abstinence. They would drinke no Wine, and abstained from eating flesh, and all other things that had a soule. Neuertheles, they would giue License to all filthie finnies; and shadding themselues vnder this modest and honest name, condemned Marriage, saying; that it was an inuention of the Deuill, and that a woman was the Workmanship of the Deuill, or Sathan.

By a verie ridiculous reason, these Encrates saide they, were followers of Iesus Christ, because hee was neuer married. There were other Heretickes that descended of this Tatian, and hee was the author likewise of their Sect, who were named Hydoparastes, because they presented water in stead of Wine, in celebrating the Supper. And some others were of this band, in the quarters of the higher Easterne Countreyes, who were named Seucrians; of a certaine man called Seuerus, that helde all the opinions of Tatian and of the Encratites.

They beleueed no part of the Olde Testament, nor the resurrection of all Flesh, neyther would they drinke anie Wine, because they were foolishly perswaded, that the Deuill and the earth had brought foorth the Vine. They helde Opinion, that man was composed of two parts: One by God, and the other by the Deuil (to wit;) that part from the Nauill vpward, was the work of God; and that part thence downward, the worke of Sathan.

Florinus and Blastus, two other Heretickes, continued on the Heresy of Valentine, about the time of the Prelacy of Eleutherus the first. Irenaeus wrote against them both, to wit; against Blastus; in an Epistle bearing Title of Schisme: and against Florinus, in another Epistle of Tatian the chiefe of the Encratites. Irenaeus in lib. 2 de heres. ca. 30. Hier. sup. Amos. & Epiphanius in lib. 2. con. 80 Heres.

False imitators of Iesus Christ.

Hereticks called Hydoparastes.

Seucrians Heretickes.

Nicephorus in lib. 4. cap. 4.

Man composed of two parts.

Florinus and Blastus, two Heretickes.

Euseb. in lib. 5. Cap. 5.

of the Monarchy. Wherein hee declared, that the opinion which he helde of God (to be the worker of euill) was false. For Florinus and Blastus both held, that God was the Author of euill things, contrarie to this saying; GOD hath made all things good.

The Helchefsaites, hereticks

These men were in the yeare, 230. Euseb. in Hist. Eccles. l. 6. ca. 28 Nicephorus in lib. 5. cap. 24.

Novatus a Romaine Priest, the author of Schisme.

Novatus his ambition and lewdnes perceived, and therefore forsaken by som of his followers.

Catharians, vnspotted people, and their errors.

The Helchefsaites, so named of a false Prophet, called Helchefsaites, diuulged their Heresie, in the time of Pope Fabian the first. These men did altogether reprove the Apostle Saint Paul, renewing the errors of Cerinthus, Ebion, and of the Nazarians, saying; It was no sin to denie Iesus Christ in the time of persecution, because it was a matter of no importance; provided, that a man had a good and sound heart, with a willing intention to continue in faith. And for prooffe heereof (saide they) God hath more regard to the heart, then to the tongue. Cirigen confounded their errors, as likewise he did those of some others, who affirmed, that the soules of men died so soon as their bodies and yet afterward, should newly be raised againe with those bodies, in the generall resurrection.

From such priuate and perticuler opinions in men, which wee call Heresie, came those publick discords, called Schismes in the Greeke Language, whereof Novatus (a Romaine Priest) was the Author. This man, seeing himselfe frustrated in the attempt of a Byshoppricke, which hee vnder-hand laboured for, and being verie much offended, that he could not attaine to such a dignity (albeit hee faigned another matter which hee hadde then in his heart) raised vp a new heresie, drawing vnto him some honest meaning Priests, to assise him with their ayde and fauour. But they, hauing well perceiued the ambition, periuries, deceits, & lies of this afronter, seperred themselues from him, and returned againe to the church, only such excepted, as found themselues euery way equal to him. He would needs enforce, that all such as followed his sect, should be called Catharians, that is to say, pure and cleane persons. He condemned second Marriages, and saide moreover, that such men ought no more to be receiued into the Church, as had once false, or were in Apostasie, although they were repentant therefore. And by this place of Scripture, I will disclaime such as shall disclaime me, hee made his foundation, to proue, that the repentance of such as had false, was vaine, and of no value. Vpon this occasion, a Counsell was celebrated at Rome, of seauenty Byshops, and of as many Priests, beside many deacons: by whom, the heresie of Novatus, and of Novatian his Disciple, was reprooued as false: because (according to the example of Iesus Christ, al repentants ought to be pardoned, and then were all of that Sect condemned as Schismatickes and Heretickes.

Thus Novatus, in the yeare two hundred fifty five, was Authour of the first Schism, as Saint Cyprian witnesseth, writing to Cornelius, where after he had spoken many things, he addeth; This is the same Novatus, that kindled the fire of Discord and Schisme. Socrates in the 4. Book of his Ecclesiasticall history, Writeth; That Novatus was executed to death, in the time of the Emperor Valerian. And yet notwithstanding, his heresie extended verie farre, and lasted a long time, before it could be laid to sleepe.

In the time when Sixtus held the See of Rome, neere to Ptolomais there arose a false Doctrine, full of blasphemies; against God the Father, and Iesus Christ, denying him to be the Sonne of God, & begotten before all other Creatures, and taking away also the intellect of the blessed Spirit. The Sectaries of this doctrine were tearmed Sabellians, of Sabellius, the Scholler to one Noctus: and it had been debated in Affrica, by Praxeus and Hermogenes, before there was any speech of Sabellius. He held, that the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy-Ghost, were onelie one substance, and one person, hauing three Names. And to approoue this, he tooke his reasons out of the Olde and New Testament, though ill vnderstoode, and worse applied, as these that ensue. I am God, and there is none other then I: I & my Father are one: Heare Israel, the Lorde thy God is only God, I am the God of your fathers: I am the first, and wil be heereafter. Thou shalt haue no other Gods before mee. They shal worship in thee, and make prayers in thee: for there is no other but God. I am in my Father, and my Father in me. Saint Basile writing to the Neocesarians, reporteth another reason and foundation, of this peruerse opinion in Sabellius, which is this: Because our Lorde Iesus Christ had saide; Go, teach all Nations, baptizing them

A Counsell holden at Rome against Novatus, & his scholler Novatian.

S. Cyprian in Epist. ad Cornel.

Socrates in lib. 4. de Hist. Eccles. Anno 247.

Sabellius the Hereticke, of whom came the Sabellians.

The Heresie held by Sabellius.

S. Hillar in lib. de Trinit.

S. Basile in Epist. ad Neoces.

them in the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy-ghost: Having said (quoth he) in the Name, and not in the Names; it is not therefore conuenient, that there should be three persons. Was not this a goodly Consequence?

There was likewise, one of the Byshops of Egypt, named Nepos; who fel into the error of the Chilistes, determining certaine thousands of yeares, for pleasures and voluptuous delights, and saying; that the Saints shoulde raigne on earth with Iesus Christ, in all kinds of Delectations. Which he supposed, to haue well approued by the Apocalipse of S. Iohn, and dared also to write a Booke, which hee entituled of Allegoristes. This heresy was long time much debated in the City of Arsenoria in Egypt; and the Sectaries thereof were called Nepotians, according to the name of the Author.

At the same time, Paulus Samosatenus, a Byshop of Antioche, began to renew the heresie of Artemon, to gratifye Zenobia, Queen of the Palmyrians, whom the Persians after their victorie, obtained against the Romaines, had established as their Regent in Syria. He was of the same opinion with the Jews, who reiected not the heresie of Arteman.

The Byshoppes were assembled many times in Antioche, to refute the errors of this Paulus. And in the last Counsell congregated against him, being in the yeare, 273. He was publickly conuincd, & his heresie condemned: he was named Samosatenus, in regard of Samosata, a City in Mesopotamia of Syria, scituate on the Riuer of Euphrates, whereof he was a Native.

In the fourth yeare of the Emperour Aurelianus, the error of the Manicheans did spread it selfe in the world. Of which heresie, one Manes a Persian, was the author, and of him, S. Augustine (almost in euery place) maketh mention, and in sted of Manes, calleth him Manichean, a word that signifies one out of hit wits. For this Manes was a Demoniacke, and a madde man, and I am of the minde, that thereof came the word Maniacus. The same reuerend Father addeth further, that the disciples of Manes, had formerly chaunged the name into Greeke, and called the author of their opinion Manicheus; that is to say (quoth they) A Distributer or Disperser of Manna, only thereby to auoyde

the other Title of madnesse. This wicked man (as Epiphanius reporteth) called into his Companie, twentie two Disciples. Eusebius speaketh but of twelue, after the imitation of Iesus Christ our Saviour: among which number, three of them wer named Thomas, Hermas, and Abdas, and they helde the most false and monstrous Opinions, as euer were heard of. Afterward, the King of Persia caused him to be flayed aliue, with a Reede or Cane, because his Sonne died in his custodie, hauing taken him foorth of the Physitians hands, with an absolute promise to cure him. When he had beene thus flayed, his skinnie was stuffed with Straw: and it is kept (as yet to this day) in Persia, according as Suidas for credit affirmeth.

After Manes, arose vp Hierax, in Leontis of Egipt, who promulgated another heresie: hee was a man exceedingly well learned, and perfectly seene in the Sciences of the Egyptians; as also, in the Documents of the Grecians, with the addition of Physicke and Astrologie, which he had not only read, but made profession of Magicke also: he was admitted into Christian Religion, but in the end he forsooke it; to deale in those nouell Errors, and dyed aged about ninety yeares.

In the time of great Constantine, and when Siluester was Pope, Arrius the Priest raised a great heresy in Alexandria, which verie mightily afflicted the Catholicke Church, and endured a long time. This man, beeing more adorned with outward apparance, and comly stature, then any inward Vertue, began to sow discorde in the faith of Iesus Christ, and laboured by his damnable opinion, to seperate the sonne of the eternall and ineffable substance from the Father, not beleeuing the Sonne to be together with the Father, in one selfesame substance & equalitie of dignitie. Which pestiferous conceite, was condemned in the Counsell of Nice.

Afterward, during the Prelacy of Iulius the first, the Emperour Constantine (fauouring Arrius and his Sect, and compelling his owne people to like thereof.) appointed a Counsell in Laodicia, a City of Syria (or as some others say) in the city of Tyre, where met a great company of Catholicke Fathers, and Arrians also, disputing there daily, whither Iesus christ ought to be consubstantiall with the Father;

Epiph. in l. cont. 80. Heres.

Euseb. in lib. 4. cap. 12.

Manes the hereticke was flayed aliue.

Hierax the Hereticke of Leontis in Egypt.

Arrius the hereticke of Alexandria.

The Heresie of Arrius.

This was in the year, 315. Constantinus being Emperour.

Nepos a Bysh. of Egypt, an Hereticke.

This was in the yeare of Iesus Christ, 264.

Paulus Samosatenus reuiu'd the heresy of Artemon.

Paulus Samosatenus conuinc'd, and his Heresy condemned.

The Heresie of Manes the Persian, of whom came the Manicheans.

A spreader abroad of Manna.

ther, or not.

Athanasius Byshop of Alexandria.

Athanasius accused by Arrius to be a Magician.

Ioan. Carion in Chronol.

Athanasius repeald from banishment.

The Byshops praier against Arrius.

The iust and deserud deeth of Arrius.

Pelagians, Donatists, Abigenis, and other hereticks.

Athanasius Byshop of Alexandria (a man of great and profounde Learning) maintained the Son to be consubstantiall with the Father, which he approoued by good Reasons, and strong Arguments. But Arrius being vnable to make any auailing answere (ore-lying only vpon impudent and villanous Calumnies), Athanasius was accused by him to be a Sorcerer. In regard whereof, the holy and Religious Father was condemned by Constantius, and being constrained to flight, remained hidden (for the space of seauen yeares) in a Cisterne that had no Water in it. And yet Ioan. Carion speaketh nothing heereof, but only saith; That Athanasius being proscribed by Constantius, came out of Egypt to Treuers. And albeit, the flight was very long, yet was hee compelled to continue banished, and lay hidden verie secretly, for the space of eight yeares. Yet was he repeald afterward by Constantine the Brother to Constantius. And this holy Byshop made the worthy Symbole & Song, which beginneth thus; Quicumque vult saluus esse, &c. Whereby he taught the Son of God to bee ὁμοτιμος with the Father, that is to say, of one selfsame substance, and equall with him that begotte him. While matter thus continued, Alexander, Byshop of Alexandria, was to dispute with Arrius, vpon a day appointed by the Emperour. The Byshop spent the whole night before in Prayer, desiring of God so to shew his power in the Temple, that he would permit the poison of Arrius to spread it selfe no further. On the Morrow morning, when the hour of disputation was come, as Arrius entered among the Auditory, a sudden pain in the belly began to seize him, in presence of a great multitude of Byshops, & the common people. So that, being constrained to go to some secret place, to discharge the burthen of his belly, his bowelles and entrailles fell from him, into the Priuy, & there he died suddenly. Vndoubtedly, a death well befitting so wicked a man; and yet notwithstanding, the Heresy of Arrius ceased not, but continued verie long time after.

There were many other Hereticks & Schismatickes, as the Pelagians, Donatists, Albigensis, & others, which I ouer passe, because I would not make a Volume of them, rather then a Chapter. It remayneth now to report, what penalties such Authors of Heresies is to vndergo. Saint Paule, writing to Titus, sayth; Resect the man that is the Author of Sectes, after the first and second admonition, knowing, that he that is such, is peruered and sinneth, being damned of his owne selfe. Theodosius and Valentinian, Emperours, ordained, that Heretickes should be punished by ignominies, stripes, banishment, and death: as is contained in the Code, titled, De Heretic. l. Arriani, where the Law commandeth, to punish this wicked kind of men with the vttermost punishment. Hostiensis, expounding this Edict, in his Summe on the Titles of the Decretales, saith; Albeit that in Heresie, the Law imposeth the last punishment, which is another Law, ff. de penis interpreteth to be death: yet notwithstanding, the custome (for such people) is to be burned.

Abbas Siculus was of the same minde, after Hostiensis, on the Chapter, Ab abolendam extra. de Heretic. Writing thus; But the Ciuill Law punisheth an Heretique with capitall punishments, to wit; death, by the Lawe Arriani, Codi de Heretic. & l. vltimum supplicium. ff. de penis. Now, the Canonically, Ciuill, and Common Lawes do consent heerein, that the Hereticke should commonly bee punished with the paine of fire, as thinking it most conuenient.

The Emperour Fredericke, first of that Name, in the yeare of our Saluation, one hundred eightie, made a Law, to burne Heretickes, as appeareth in one of his Constitutions, beginning, Vt Commissi. And Pope Lucius, thirde of that Name, ordayned, that whosoever was a Priest, and furnished himselfe with Sacred Orders, becomming an Hereticke, hee should first of all bee degraded; and afterwarde, deliuered vnto the Magistrates of the place, to put him to death by Fire; as it is declared in the said Chapter, Ad abolendam.

And this appeareth, to be sufficiently receiued and approoued, by the institutions of Moyse, who (first of all other) had ordained to punish (with death) wicked Doctors, and Maisters of pestiferous Doctrines, when in the thirteenth Chapter of Deuteronomy, hee speaketh in this manner:

If there arise among you a Prophet, or a Dreamer of Dreames, and shall say vnto ye: Let

Tit. 3, 10, 11.

Lawes of Emperours against Heretickes.

Code. de Heretic. Arriani.

Hos. in Sum. tit. Decret.

Ab Sicul. sup. Cap. Ad. &c.

All Lawes ad- iudge the hereticke to bee burned.

The Emperour Fredericke, his Law to burne Heretickes.

Pope Lucius the third.

The Lawe of Moyse.

Deut. 13, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10.

Gods triall of his Children, whither they loue him, or no.

No naturall consanguinity must turne vs away from God.

The fals Prophet must die the death.

Whence grew the custom of burning Hereticks.

Let vs go after other Goddes, which thou hast not knowne, and let vs serue them. Thou shalt not hearken vnto the wordes of that Prophet, or to that dreamer of dreams: for the Lord your God proueth ye, to know, whether ye loue the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your soule, or not. Yee shall walke after the Lorde your GOD, and feare him, and shal keepe his Commandements, and obey his voyce, and yee shall serue him, and cleaue vnto him.

But the false Prophet shalbe put to death, because hee hath spoken to turne yee away from your eternal God.

And a little after, he addeth; If thine owne Brother, or thy Sonne, or thy Daughter, or thy Wife, or thy Friend woulde perswade thee to the like:

Thou shalt not consent vnto him, nor heare him, neither shall thine eye pittie him, nor shew Mercie, nor keepe him secret.

But thou shalt kill him, thine hande shall bee first vpon him, to put him to death: and afterwarde, the handes of all the people.

And thou shalt stone him with stones, that hee die: because he hath gone about to draw thee from the Lord thy GOD, which brought thee out of the Land of Egypt, from the house of Bondage.

Hee further addeth, When thou shalt heare say, that in any of thy Citties, Wicked men are gone out from among you, and haue seduced the Inhabitants of the City.

Thou shalt seeke and make search, and enquire diligently: and if it be true, and the thing certaine, that such abomination is wrought among you.

Thou shalt euen slay the Inhabitantes of that Cittie, with the edge of the sword, and destroy it utterly.

And thou shalt gather all the spoiles of it in the midst of the streets thereof, & burne with fire the City, and all the spoile thereof euerie whit.

Hence (as is supposed) came the obserued custome of condemning heretiks to death, and burning them aliue.

CHAP. XIII.

Of the sottish and ydle opinions, obserued among the Sects of Phylosophers: disco- uering (briefely) all Sci-nces, Arts, and Doctrines, with their abuses and vanities.

Having (cursorilie) run ouer he Sectes of some Heretickes and finding heere a meete and conuenient place, to speak of those men which were called Phylosophers, I wil proceed to a succinct declaration of them: Questionlesse, all the whole troope of them were contentious persons, Couctous of Glorie, Proud and Contumelious: and, to vse the very words of the Poet Homer, An vnprofitable masse of men on the earth. They were al dissonant in their opinions, and fell into many Sects, and diuers Labyrinthes of excogitated fallacies. Some were called Platonists; others, Pythagorians, Peripatetiques, Academiques, Ceanethliques, Stoicks, Cinicks, &c.

Some other called themselves, by names much more ridiculous & foolish. After they had once vsurped on the venerable name of Vertue, they walked about with exalted countenances, and I know not what manner of mishapen habites. In outward behauiour, they made shew of detesting all other men whatsoever, vsing such lockes and actions, as is frequent among Players of Comedies & Tragedies: from whom, if their Maskes, false Vizards and habits were taken, nothing of matter remained in them. They were such as I say, Vniuersall Despisers of all men but themselves. They kepte Schooles of vaine propositions, and full of Ambiguities, preaching and enstruc-ting their Schollers, to commend & extoll temperance and modestie, containing (with bitter execrations) worldlie Riches and pleasures.

But when they were alone by themselves, they needed no enstruc-tions how to tosse the Wine-Bowles, as being en-

ccc. clined

This begin-ning is taken out of Homer & out of Lucian in his Dia-logues.

Several sects of Philoso-phers.

Their out-ward shape, & apparance.

Their Doc-trine in their schooles.

They were men vterlie vaprofitable.	clined and burning in libidinous Concupiscence, and Carnall immundities. And that which (among all things else) was most grienous, they did not any thing auailable, either in publicke or priuate: but remained vnbeneficiall, because they were neuer found good, either in counsell, or for polliticke or ciuill administration of Iustice.	anouched (vnder Oath) that the Sunne was a massie body, as hot as fire; Vnder which, the Moone had her motion. And that the Starres were watery substances, or steeped in Water, which the Sunne had drawne vnto them out of the sea, euen as if hee had powred it out of a Bucket, and so distributed vnto them all their waterish humor. It was not possible for any man to know the woonderfull repugnancie, which consisted in their seuerall sayings.	Their iudgement concerning the Sun.
Their disputations.	They would do nothing but dispute of incertainties, straunge beginniges, and conclusions of thinges, with an heape of Transmutations, Metamorphosis, Symbolizations, Corruptions, and Generations of foure Elements, hauing foure principall qualities in them, which they affirmed to be subiect to Corruption & mutation in this fraile world.	10 First of all, they held diuers and dissonant opinions, concerning the vniuersall world. Some saide, as Aristotle and his followers, that it was without beginning and seemed to him that it shoulde neuer haue ending. Others, as Plato and his Academists affirmed, that it was made by some Workeman. Their disputations of	Repugnancie in their sayings.
Their vsuall kind of talke.	Also, they talked of Realities, Identities, and infinite Ideaes, that is to say; Formes, Figures, or Originall kindes of thinges: and each one of them woulde constrain beleefe by his alledged reason, albeit no Co-herence did ensue thereon.	20 Ideaes, and of things incorporeall, as also of Dreames, which they tearmed to bee finite and infinite, was wonderfull. One described and defined a certaine ending vniuersally. Others on the contrary, wold say, that it was not possible to finde anie ending. They made demonstration, that there were many worldes, and blamed such as arrested their disputes vpon one	Aristotles opinion of the world. Platos opiniõ. One contradicting another.
Their opinion of supernatural iudgment in them selues.	There were some among them, who being meerely blinde thorow age, would yet say, that they saw the Circumference and endes of Heauen. They measured the Sunne by their owne immaginations, and not satisfied with knowledge of palpable and Visible thinges in this neather World, they mounted vp to places about the Moone, and (as if they were newly descended downe from Heauen) measured the greatnesse of the Wandering Starres and Planets, and would describe the Figures of the Signes and Starres, with all their Vertues and Effects.	30 onely. One wise man stept vp, and maintained discord to bee the cause of the generation of all things. Another replied, that it was amity, and a naturall and symbolizing colligation. Some thought the Diuinity to be I know not what, without body, and without forme: but others imagined it to be some certain body. Some held the Firmament and world, to bee supported without anie Lord or guide.	The cause of generating all things.
A blinde kind of Cosmography in such high matters.	Many times, such as scarcely knew ten miles by Cosmography, would bee so bold as to declare, how many Cubites, Miles, or Stades, was between the Sun and the Moone. They would measure likewise the height and wideness of the Ayre, the profundity of the Sea, the circuite of the whole earth, the distance of one Towne or Cittie from another; the Longitude and latitude of all Regions & Climates, according to the measure and consideration of the degrees and minuts of heauen.	40 Others defended, that the Heauens and the superior world, were gouerned by celestiall intelligences of the Diuine Ens, which is the Father, Creator of all things. They wer very curious in enquiring, how great the Moone was, and what was the cause, whereby she increased and decreased. Some said, as Anaximander; That it was a Circle, full of fire. Heraclitus held, That it was a land, round inuironed with one cloud. Pythagoras supposed, that it was an enflamed body. Others saide, that she was as a Glasse or mirrour, hanging ouer the Sea, and that the light which she had, was respectiuey proceeding from the Sun. They had no fitall determination in their sayings, but still drew the eyes and spirits of vnskilfull men into admiration.	Of the Heauens and superior world. Anaximander his opinion of the Moone. Heraclitus. Pythagoras.
	Moreouer, they designed and portrayed Triangles vpon Quadrangles, with Sphericall Paintings, whereby they would measure al heauen. Some of them	50	In

Descriptions in Astrology, familiarly cauzed among the Philosophers.

12. Signes of the Zodiacke.

The two Solstices.

No subiection to death aboue the Moone.

Of the soules of men in their humain bodies.

Of the Stoicks, and their pecuni opinions.

In talking of the Hemispheres, of Poles Articke and Antarticke, of the Circles, Epyciles, and Celestiall Houses; of dimensions and Paralels, as well of the Inferiour worlde, as superiour; Of Horoscopes, Aspects of the Planets, both good and euill: Of the Ascendent, Descendent, Triplicities, Quadruplicities, Sextiles, and all that which concerneth the intellection of the Vertue, and Influence of the Starres, and celestiall Orbes: they hadde verie admirable apprehensions.

Also, of the tweiue Signes of the Zodiacke, thorow which the Sunne maketh his anuall course, descending so far as the Circle of Capricorn, and mounting againe to the Circle of Cancer. These Circkles are the two Solstices, by meanes whereof are made the verie longest and shortest dayes, and the Dayes like to the Nights; the dayes being called Equinoctiall. These are in two seasons of the yeare, that is to say, at Spring time and Autumne, when hee passeth by the Equinoctiall Circle.

Some of them haue saide, that there were many Moones and Sunnes, and that all aboue the Moone is not subiecte to death, but euer liuing: and all vnder it subiected to mortality. Some woulde maintaine, that we are gouerned by Diuine providence: but others said, by fortune, and aduenturous accident. Some reputed the soules of men to be mortall: Others affirmed them to bee immortall. Some supposed them to be sent into bodies of brute beasts: but others thought they would speake more mannerly, affecting rather to say, that the soule was a winde or vnloosed spirit, diffused & spread thorow the body of man.

To contrary which coniecture, some stucke not to say; That it was a Quintessence, or a Nature without any bodie, euermore moouing it selfe, being totally immortall: but when it departed from the bodie, it flewe away with other thinges, which are of that Nature.

As for the stoicks, they had a perswasion, that the soule of him, who had not liued vertuously in this world; died immediately with the bodie; But that the soule of an honest and Vertuous man, with all her powers and perfections; tooke her seate in the highest Celestiall places, albeit some others constituted the end of goodnesse in the bodye; and their contraries referred it to the minde or reasonable soule.

There were also some amongst them, that abused themselues in the apprehension of diuers vnprofitable and Diabolical Sciences, getting them sundrie spirits by perticuler Names, which serued them in diuers Offices, by vsing manie Carracters, wherein the Names of them were written about them. Then there were some that Diuined by water; Others; by the earth, by the Ayre, by hurling points of Kniues, of Bodkins, and such like: By Aspect and regard of mens Faces, by the flight of Birds, and by carrying of Phitonicall Spirites in Ringes or Jewelles; which spirits, they made subiect and bound vnto them for euery day, to make answere of all matters, either in the Ayre, on the Earth, or in the fire, because some of them were said to bee Iouialists, others Mercurialists, others Venerists, and so of many and diuers complexions. Nay they would mount much higher, presuming to meddle with the Great Worke, to make subiect vnto them those four great Princes, which gouerne ouer the nine Princes, and all the Legions of the saide spirits, which they saide to bee in number sixtie sixe thousand. To them (on certaine dayes) they offered Sacrifices, giuing them swordes of Golde and Siluer, with some strange Virgin Parchmentes, Licensing them with Amber, Muske, & other abhominable and infamous gifts, which they offered to them; and (indeed) deserue not to be written. For they adapted all the high and diuine names to such Idolatries, illusions, and follies: As Adonay, Agius, Athanatos, Alpha et O Primogenitus, Propheta, Potestas, Redemptor, Altissimus, Paracletus, Trinitas, and others.

They had many kinds and manners of Sciences, for some leatned Astrology diuinatory or iudiciary, which spake of the reuolutions of yeares; of questions, elections, intentions, cogitations, & vertues; to know al future things, without any exception. Also they would know by Phisognomy, the affections of the soule and body; and what should be the fortunes & destinies of men, by pronoking one vnder Mercury, another vnder Sol, and another vnder Mars. By Metroposcopy (they saide) they knew (beholding a mans forehead)

Magical Arts and Sciences.

Sundry kind of diuinations

Phitonicall spirites, wonne in Ringes, Jewels &c.

The Great worke of the spirits.

Sacrifices offered to spirits

High, Holie, and Diuine Names, by them abused.

Of Diuinatory & Iudiciall Astrology.

Phisognomy.

	head) his reall Nature and inclination, the progresions of his life, & how shold be his ending.		Naturall Magicke.
Chiromancy.	Chiromantie they obserued, by looking in the palme of the hand: for, in regarde of the Planets number, they formed seauen Mountaines or Hilles, and by Lines there discerned, the Complexions of men were known, their liues, affections, and fortunes.		Scrutators of Nature.
Pyromancy.	Pyromancy, was that, which taught them to Diuine by fire: as when a man obserueth thunder, and the Lightninges flash, to gather thereby what the Fire may signify.	10 Angels of Light. Naturall Magicke, is to gain knowledge in the greatest and most Soueraigne power, of the forces and vertues of all Naturall things. There are likewise Scrutators or searchers into Nature, who by Mathematicall Scriptures only (the influxions of the Heauens being appeased) make diuers bodies to goe and mooue, which (notwithstanding) haue not their Animall Vertues. Veneficall Magicke, or that tearmed Pharmatitall, is a Science wherein Beuerages, Potions, and sundry poysonous Medicaments are vsed.	Poysonous or Pharmatitall Magicke.
Hydromancy.	Hydromancy is performed by Water, and was the principall, and most of all, vsed by Numa Pompilius: yet thereby hee was deceiued, beholding the formes and Images of some dead persons in the Water, which the Deuils would haue had to be reputed for Gods.	20 Heereby Democritus made his Children fortunate, making his Birds also to speake. And by Ceremoniall Magicke, which is Turgie & Goetie, they couenanted with false spirites, whom they called by certaine words, charmes, and vnlawfull Ceremonies. These men (by the meanes of euill spirits) enchanted other people, and brought spirits to them, called Paradres: in exercise whereof, they made vse of Infants, Virgins, and Innocents, causing them to looke in a Basen of water, and on their Nails, which they annoint with Oyle, and then call Diuels to them, who make answeere to such questions as they demand of them. And to attain to the effect of their Coniurations, they sometimes menace Heauen, and the Elements, attributing Signes and Characters to them.	Ceremoniall Magicke.
Geomancie.	Geomancy declares it selfe, by pointes throwne at peradventure, or by the power of some figures, or thinges attributed Celestiall, composed by number, Par & impar (or Euen and odde, as wee vse to say) and by those Figures the Diuination is made. And there is another kind of this cunning, which is done by some Coniectures taken from similitudes, by noyse and sound of the earth or motion, or by a loud cry, or by thunder.		Paradres.
Par & impar.	Almadack the Arabian was the Inuenter thereof, & Pythagoras therein was instructed. But Magicke Arts were before this, and the Inuenter of them was Zoroastres, King of the Bactrians.	30	Abuse of Infants, virgins & innocents.
Almadack the Arabian.	Concerning Augury, they seemed thereby to haue a kinde of light of presaging, descending ouer each creature in this neather world, as especiall signes obserued by their flight, moouing, gesture, sitting, progresion, voice, food, and colour, so that by al these things they could foretell somewhat. The Art Speculatory, made Interpretation of Thunders, lightninges, and other impresions of the Elements, by signes and prodegies; and yet notwithstanding, they had no other help therein, but by coniecture only. They say, that Turgie is profitable to purge the spirituall part of the soule, to witte; the fantasticke or imaginative part: because by this Art, men are made to see the Images of Goddes, who are nothing else but Deuils, that trans-figure themselves into	40	A further relation concerning Turgie.
Zoroastres was Inuenter of Magicall arts			The Signes of the Zodiack, and the seuen Planets.
Augury.		50	Prestigators in Magicke.
The Speculatorie Art.			Ma-

Mathematicall Magicke.
 Necromancy.
 Aruspicy.
 Capnomancy.
 Botonomancy.
 Cleronomancy.
 Ichthyonomancy.
 Coscinomancy.
 Afcinomancy.
 Gastronomancy.
Au. 7. in et 8. de Civ. Dei.
 The Sciences of the Cabala.
 Vnwritten Theology.
 Knowledge of the angels.
 Princes and Angelles of Light.

Mathematicall Magicke cannot be vnderstood or knowne, without her naturall Vertues; neither without Disciplines and Mathematicall Sciences. It finds out the meanes to attract the influences of the Starres, to such occasions as men would make them; and in this Science, Albertus Magnus was very expert.

Necromancy or Necromancie, maketh Diuination and prediction of things, by Conference with dead bodies raised.

Aruspicy considereth the flight, songs and gestures of Birds in their flying.

Capnomancie, is a Diuination made by fumes and smoakes.

Botonomancie, is performed by hearbs, and is the only proper Art of Sorceries, with Goetia or Witch craft, whereof we haue formerly spoken.

Cleronomancie, is a Sooth-saying by Lottes.

Ichthyonomancie, is by Fishes. And yet there are diuers others, as Coscinomancie by a Siue; Afcinomancie; and Gastronomancie; which are spoken of by Proclus, Porphyrus, Iamblicus, Colophonius, Apuleius, Cornelius Agrippa, and Saint Augustine, in his seuenth & eight Books of the City of God. O good God, what brags, arrogances, and Bedlem-trickes? What contentions and Vanities; with scrupulous words, prodigies, & enchantments? What lost labors, Lyes, ambages, and all manner of deceiuings are among them?

And yet there are some other, who would pretend to knowe the Sciences of the Cabala, and say, that such as can rightly vnderstand them, haue so much power as to raise vp dead bodies. Now, such as haue knowledge heerin, must be irreprehensible of sinne, and of holy life and conuersation. Moreouer, Reuslin and some others haue written, that this Science is nothing else; but a kinde of vn-written Theologie; and that therein is a much greater part of beleefe and speculation, then of discipline. For it consisteth in knowledge of the Angels, that somtimes did administer both sciences and doctrines of inuisible things to men: And these Sectaries do hold, that in liuing holilie, and neere vnto the Angellicall life; so far as the flesh and rude bodie can imitate; verie great intelligences are to be receiued. And by hauing knowledge in the names of some Princes and Angels of Light, a man may attaine vnto the perfection of things, resembling (or truly being) myracles. But because it is not receiued, but by denuntation of the Father to the son, and that the Hebrewes (on whom it depended) haue written nothing for reuerence of the Mystery: there are but fewe people, so full of erudition, as to produce such effects, as it did customarily restore. Som termed the Art Cabala, diuine Magicke, which diuideth it selfe into the Science, named Berefcith, and Merana.

Berefcith, according to the Hebrewes; discourseth of beginnings, Originals, and causes of creatures, as also of their properties and inclinations. Merana speaketh of things sublime and high, as of the diuine and Angellicall vertues, of holie Names, which haue great signification and mysteries in them, with Letters, Numbers, Figures, Names, and little pointes of Letters, Lines, Punctuations, and Accents. Merana also diuideth it selfe into two Sciences, to wit; Arythmancie, and Theomancie. Arythmancie is as much to say, as diuination made by number, which hath consideration and contemplation of Angellicall Vertues; of Names, Signacles, Natures, and Conditions, both of diuels and other creatures.

Theomancie is a Diuination and Vaticination of Diuine things, which consider the Mysteries of the Diuine Maiesty, the Emanations, the holie and sacred names. This Science (according to many opinions) Moses had, by means whereof, he wrought so many signes and Miracles, as when he transformd his rod into a Serpent, changed water into blood, into Frogs, Flies, Lice, Locusts, and other things contained in Exodus.

There is another science depending on the aforesaide Cabala, called Cosmologie, which consistes in the reason, consideration and contemplation of the world. It expoundeth (by Phylosophicall reasons) the great secrets of the Law; and of the Bible. Other fooles (abusing themselves) labor to Philosophize by Mettals; weening to deriue cunning from the sun and Moon, and therein haue proceeded in many maners. For Merlin said, That the Philosophers stone was of many colors, participating of the 4. Elements, beeing by nature Ayry, earthy, watry, and fry; drie in a soft degree and hidden, but hot in a high degree, and manifest; moist & cold; of all these complexions, one is made.

Merlins words of the Phylo-sophers stone.

It is not farre off from the Nature of fire, and of the Flame; and yet is Licquid and flowing, like to the Oyle of the Oliue. It engrosseth it selfe, and of it selfe is conceiued and engendered. It liueth of it selfe, and by it selfe; and yet it killeth it selfe. This stone hath a red dye, white & chearfull, and yet it conceiueth and maketh Gold, if it be ioyned vnto the white fume or smoake. It is the way wherby we liue; and by which, the true and purest Gold is made. Thus farre are the verie words of Merlin.

Geber his Relation concerning the Phylosophers
stone:

Geber, speaking thereof, sayeth; Our Art consisteth not in the multitude of things, neither is any iot perfected in or by them. For it is a Stone onely, which is a Medicine, wherein the Maisterie and height of our Art relyeth. And it is to be vnderstood, that we adde nothing thereto, that should be; or is a stranger, neyther do wee diminish any thing; except they bee such matters as are superfluous in preparation of the saide Stone. And we conclude, that it is nothing else, but an vnsauoury smelling spirit, and a liuing Vault or Graue, which we may wel term dry, washed by an naturall (yet liuely) proportion of such an vnion, as it cannot go out of his essence, by the things whereto it is annexed, and is couered in abreuating the worke, hauing an extenuated & perfect bodie.

What the stone is.

Cornel. Agrippa
in lib. de Philos.
Ocult.

Cornelius Agrippa, in his Booke of secret Philosophy, saith; Fire is an Element which penetrateth and ouer-commeth all things. It is a thing created by God, a subiect of all mutability, which can be in heauen, and in the earth. It is moreouer, a thing actually animall, Vegetall and Minerall, that is to say, which seemeth to haue soule and vegetation, and an effectiue Vertue and quality of mineral things. This thing so high and Noble, is not found out by many people, nor knowne by any person, or well expressed in his proper name: but is continually hidde in numbers, Figures, and Enigmaes; without which (neuerthelesse) neither the Art of Alchimy, nor of Magicke, can attaine to, or haue their perfects ends. Augurellus saith; This Stone is White, and is nothing els but a powder, long time boyled; and so conuerted from a White, into a redde colour. Gregory Rech, in his Marguarite of Philosophy, saith; The Art of making this Stone is not by any labour; but is (as one

A strange and hidden secret

Augurellus:

Gregor. Rech.
in Marg. Phil.

saith) The worke of Women, and the sport of children. Virgil, in the sixt Booke of his Eneidos, speaking of the branch of Gold, which is hidden within a calignious tree, intirely describeth the perfection of this worke.

Virgil lib. 6. de Eneid.

Others do proceed heerin by another manner of way, which is dangerous for the soul, for the creature being kept captiue 9. moneths, which they nourish and feede with straunge meats, mingled with the iuice of hearbs, Mercury, and Siluer, it maketh him to change his nature, and so (with other creatures) is taken and put to confect in a potte very close couered, wherin also they put seuen sorts of herbs, the most part wherof doo congeale the Mercurie. And the principal is the hearb called Lunaria maior, which turneth the water against the streame, & yet maketh it to returne againe at the houre when it is cut. And after the fire hath wrought, then Cibele makes her operation, & Titan also for two or three times the principal of the subiect beeing receiued, from that which is aboue vs. And when the proiection should woorke it selfe within the pottes, then vse is made of common Salt, Arsenick sublimite, and Salarmoniack; and hitherto there is no offence at all. But afterward, for the perfection, casting the matter in the said pots, and seeing to conuert the Saturn or lead which is therein; the action cannot but be dangerous. For euery faithful soul knoweth, that this came not from the inuention of men, but from some vile and wicked spirits: for the siluer which is taken forth of the pots, prooueth as good as the naturall siluer. Then for augmentation of Gold, they make an adaption of Vermilion, Siluer, Crocum Ferri, and other matters by number; which they say passeth the Teste, and Ciment-Royall. A man would be amazed to behold them all differing in their opinions, yet each one to anouch sufficient vnderstanding in the Science.

Another Philosophers
stone, which is written E-nigmaticall, comming fro
the inuention of euill spirits

The proiection in working it selfe.

The making of Gold.

Very true it is, that by the Artefice of Fire, verie singuler things are made, and almost as faire as those produced by nature, to wit; Emeraldes, Iacintes, Saphires, Rubies, Pearles, Corral, Amber, Glasses, and Vessels mingled with diuers Colours: and the principall is, to haue good and fresh stufes, and knowledge in the Art of Fire. But leauing this Argument,

What things may be made by the workmanship of Fire.

Variety of mens studies.

ment, let vs come to the application of other studies, according to mens severall inclinations.

Logick.

Some haue delighted most in Logick, which is a Science of disputing, and reasoning in all things. Others affected the Art of Lullijn; to wit, the invention of Sophistry, which sheweth a Doctrine of quaint beguiling (and had name first of one named Lullius;) it enstructeth how to circumvent in words, by craft, calumnie, fiction, and caullation.

The Art of Sophistry.

The Mathematickes.

Others, desired to know the Mathematickes, which taketh it selfe (in generall properly) for all naturall Sciences, euen for all them that can be taught to man.

Cosmometry.

Cosmometrie, sheweth the reason of the World, by measures of degrees and minutes of the Heauens, and the differences of Climats, Daies, and Nights; the Eleuation of the Poles; diuersity of the Noone-tides, and shaddowes in Dyals, and deuideth it selfe into Cosmographie and Geography. Cosmographie is the generall description and measure of the World; And Geography sheweth how to measure the Earth by Stades, Leagues, and Miles; by Mountaines, Woods, Forrests, Lakes, Riuer, and Seas.

Cosmography. Geography.

The Art of Memory. Cicero in lib. de Quest. Inst.

It likewise maketh knowne, the difference and distinction of Nations, Kingdomes, Prouinces, Citties, Ports, Hauens, and whatsoever is throughout the earth. Some others doe practise the Art of Memorie, which is nothing else (according to Cicero) but an indiction and reason of certaine rules, consisting in places, Images, and Carracters: which doe as much seruice, as proper Writings presented to his eyes, who would speake of, or remember any thing whatsoever. This Science was inuented by Symonides Melicus, borne in the Isle of Cea, who also first deuised the Verses called Lyrici.

Symonides Melicus.

The parts of Ethick Philosophy.

Nor must this be thought any disparagement, to the true Philosophy of the Ethiques, which enstructed men how to liue well among themselues; and likewise in generall, without any carke or care for any kind of Prouision. And the Oeconomique also, giuing rules for well liuing in Domesticke Community, and for best ordering of a Family. The Pollitique, it gaue Documents of good life, for publique community among Cittizens: because it discoursed on common Ciuility, and in it are comprehended all secular estates. There is yet another part of Philosophy, which is principall, and in double manner; that is to say: Abstracted from mouing, and conioyned with mouing. Abstracted from motion, is called Metaphisique, which discourseth on the highest matters of God, and of intelligence, exceeding our sense and imagination; and the Science is tearmed Metaphisique, because it transcendeth Nature.

Oeconomick Philosophy.

Another part of Philosophy

Metaphisique

That part conioyned with motion, speaketh of moueable things, and is named Phisique: which considereth and speculateth the beginnings and causes of naturall things, and accordinglie beereunto hath eight parts of Philosophy. These doe speake of Heauen and the World; of Generation and Corruption; of Meteors; of Mines in the Earth; of Vegetable things; of Plants, and the Naturies of Creatures; of watching and sleeping; of Memory, and all other powers of the Soule. Then there is Morall Philosophy, treating of Vices & Vertues; and disputing wherein consisteth humane Felicity; as also distinguishing good from euill. And the Word Philosopher, is nothing else but to tearme a Man, a Louer of wisdom.

Phisicke, with her 8. parts of Philosophy.

Morall Philosophy.

Wee come now to the seauen liberall Sciences. First Grammer, whereby is knowne the difference, between congruate and incongruate speaking. Logicke, describeth the false proposition from the true. Rhetoricke, demonstrateth how to speake with ornament of choise words, and elegantly. Astrology, obserueth the course and influence of the Starres, Celestiall bodies, Mansions, Parasanges, Hemispheres, and the Poles Articke, and Antartick. Geometry, describeth the dimension and measure of the Earth; with the distance of one place from another. Arithmeticke delighteth most in numbers; And Musique, how to play and sing By due measure: Nor may we omit the Art and Stile of Poesie, very highly and greatly commended. As that named Elegiacall, which is a rescription of miseries, reciting the calamities of men, the querimonies

The seauen liberall Sciences. Grammer. Logicke.

Rhetoricke.

Astrology.

Geometry.

Arithmeticke Musicke.

The Art and Stile of Poesie.

Elegies.

Satires.	rimonies of loue, and deploration of the dead. Satires , are inuectiues and reprehensions, composed in verse, repro- uing Vices, and discovering the secret finnes of men. Comedy , describeth the affections of men, rauishment of Vir- gines, and facetious matters. Tragedie , discourseth the calamities of Kings and great Lords, giuing them enstruptions for amendment of life. But Theologicall	occasions. So that she onely presageth and foretelleth, the aduentures of acci- dents which are to ensue, and accord- ingly with-holdeth and hindereth the entrance of casuall & sinister fortunes. Temperance, contemneth all Corporal voluptuousnesse, for (in her) the order of our whole life is discerned; because she holdes the firme and Moderne Do- minion of reason, against all Vices whatsoeuer.	Temperance, and her pre- rogatiue.
Comedy.
Tragedy.
Diuine Poets	or Diuine Poets, were they that wrote Songs and Hymnes of the Gods: de- scribing Heroycally the deeds and gests of Noble-men and Warlike people, with Martiall attempts, and Militarie Stratagemes.	10
Heroyckes.			Fortitude & her authority, discerned three wayes.
Seauen Me- chanical arts. Husbandry.	The seauen Mechanicall Arts also, are very comendable; as Agriculture or Husbandry: whereby the Art of la- bouring in the ground is perfectlie known, with planting of Vines, and en- tring young Trees. Cloathing, com- prehendeth all endeouours, vsed eyther in Wooll, Linnen, Haire, Silke, and semblable things. Nauigation, com- priseth the Art of all Mariners & Ship- men, as well on the Seas, as other Riuers. Hunting, containeth vnder that name, all manner of Fowling for Birds, and taking of all Beastes and Fi- shes. The Art of Fabricke or Archite- cture, containeth the condition of Car- pentry, Masonry, Imagery, Gold-smi- thery, & whatsoeuer is to be wrought, either in Wood, Stone, or Mettalles.	20
Cloathing.
Nauigation.	And the Art of Medicine, comprehen- deth in that one Word, both Chirur- gians, Apothecaries, Hearbalists, Mai- sters of Bathes, and Barbers. The Art Military, bringeth vnder her protecti- on, all subtilties and secret conducts of war, with all good Regiments and Go- uernments of Captaines.	30	Justice & her preheminece
Hunting.			The Ciuile & Canon lawes.
Architcture.
Medicine.
Military Dis- cipline.	Heere may we not omit the due and desertfull praises of the foure Morrall Vertues. As Prudence, which is the cause of direct and vpright govern- ment in all thinges, with fore-sight and good ordination. This Vertue respec- teth all the actions of humaine life, ru- ling, conducting, and consulting (by reason) on great and doubtfull matters, both by syllogismes, and sound deba- tings. It compareth and conioyneth thinges already past, with such as are present; and by due discussion made of them, giueth iudgement also on future	40	Faith.
The four Mo- rall vertues.			The summe of Faith.
Prudence, & her sacred power.		50	Charity.
			Hope.
			What men ought most to esteeme.
			else

The praise of the word of God.

The power of the Scriptures

Of our Saviour Iesus Christ.

The Gospell and meaning thereof.

The great benefits received by Iesus Christ.

The great Ambassadour from the Father.

else whatsoever; because those things are vaine, wherein the knowledge of God is not. For, by knowledge of the heavenly word, and obseruation of that which is commaunded vs in the Gospell: we are made the Lords Children, fellow Cittizens with the Saints in the Kingdome of Heauen, and Heires of God with Iesus Christ. By them, the poore are made rich; the feeble, strong; Fooles, wise; Sinners, iustified; the desolate, comforted; the doubtfull, resolved; and Seruants enfranchised. There is the way and the truth, and the Key which openeth the Kingdome of Heauen to the faithfull, releasing them from sinne: because the Gospell is the Testament, and new Couenant of our Saviour Iesus Christ. He is both New and Eternall, that waxeth not old, and faileth not for euer. For he hath been and is the Mediatour, and he hath ratified and confirmed the Scriptures by his death: accomplishing in them, plenarie, and intire remission of all preuarications, that remained vnder the first Testament.

The Scripture is called the Gospell, that is to say, good and glad tydings: because therein Iesus Christ is declared, to be the onely, naturall, and eternall Son of the liuing God, and was made Man for vs, to make vs the Sons of God his Father by adoption. In like manner, he is our Saviour, in whom intirely lyeth our Redemption, Peace, Iustice, Sanctification, Saluation and life.

He dyed for our sinnes, and rose againe for our Iustification. He ascended vp into Heauen, to make our entrance thither. He tooke possession for vs, and in our name; euermore to assist vs before his Father, as our Aduocate and perpetuall Sacrificer. He sitteth on his right hand, as constituted King, Lord, and Maister ouer all: to the end, that he might repaire all things both in heauen and on earth, which none other else was able to doe. He was the great Ambassadour, sent from his Father, here below to performe the saluation of all men. All things are demonstrated, declared, written, and signed in his Testament; whereby hee hath made vs heires of the Kingdome of God his Father, and appointed vs his will, to put the same in execution he being: the only way, life, and saluation. In breese, if we haue him with vs, we shall finde nothing so accursed, but it shall be blessed by him; nothing so execrable, but it shall bee sanctified; nothing so wicked, but it shall turne to our good.

This is Isaac, the dearely beloued Sonne of his Father, who was offered in sacrifice; and yet (notwithstanding) could not be overcome by death. This is the vigilant Shepheard Jacob, which had so great care of the Sheepe committed to his keeping. This is the good, louing, and pittiful Ioseph, who accounted it no shame to him, to acknowledge his poore Brethren, even in his greatest glory. This is the chiefe Sacrificer and Byshop Melchisedech, who made the eternall Sacrifice once for all, and for all the sinnes of the World. This is the Soueraigne Law-giner Moyse, writing his Law in the Table of our hearts; by his sanctifying Spirit. This is the faithfull guide and Captain Iosuah, that conducteth vs to the Land of Promise. This is the Noble and vertuous King Dauid, subiecting (by his hand) all rebellious powers.

This is the Magnificent and Triumphant King Salomon, governing his Kingdom in peace and prosperitie. And this is the strong and vertuous Sampson, who (by his owne death) ouerthrew all his enemies. He hath paid the debt for all mankind; and he to whom no death was due, hath yet for vs endured most bitter and cruell death.

Hee that was innocent, was written downe among malefactours. Hee was ranked among debtors, that was free from any kind of debt, and therefore payed the debt of Nature. And when he suffered death without any deseruing; hee deliuered from death all such as had deserued it. And when he was vniustly apprehended; he deliuered out of prison; such as were there iustly detained. Behold (O bitter death) the obligation of nature discharged. Behold it fast fixed vnto his Crosse. Behold the Ensignes of sinne there torne in peeces. Behold no more memory of any mallicious subscription. For the eyes of his body, paid the debt of those eyes that had wickedly wandred. His cares made satisfaction, for those which had listned to impure perswasions: Likewise, his tongue

Figures of our Lord and Saviour Iesus Christ. Isaac. Jacob.

Ioseph.

Melchisedech

Moyse.

Iosuah.

Dauid.

Salomon.

Sampson.

Theodore the Cyprian bishop; in his Sermons on the prouidence of God

The benefit received by Christs crosse

The maine debt discharged.

tongue, handes, and other members, satisfied for those members of Man, that had committed all their severall euilles. Seeing then that so great a debt is discharged, it remaineth verie conueniently; that such as continued Prisoners therefore, should bee deliuered out of prison, enioying their auncient libertie, and to returne home into their first borne Country.

The Authors Conclusion.

To conclude, it is he that hath regenerated vs in liuing hope, redeemed vs out of darknesse, and humbled himselfe, to exalt vs. Hee became a Seruant, to set vs free from seruice; became poore, to enrich vs; was solde, that we might be redeemed; was made a Captiue, for our deliuerance; and was condemned, that we might be acquitted. For our Benediction, hee was made Malediction; the Obligation of Sinne, for our righteousnesse; and vtterly disfigured, to bring vs into a perfect figure.

The triumphs of the death of Iesus Christ.

He died for our life; so that (by him) rudenesse became sweetnesse; angers appeased; darkenesse illumined; In-iustice made righteousnesse; weakenesse made vertuously strong; discomfort consolation; Sinne impeached; contempt disuised; feare assured; debt discharged; labour asswaged; sorrow reioyced; misfortune happinesse; difficultie easinesse; disorder conformitie; deuision vnity; ignominy fame; rebellion subiected; menaces out-menaced; Ambushes scattered; assaults confronted; power ouer-awed; Combats out-combatted; Warre ouer-warred; vengeance reuenged; torments tormented; damnation damned; perdition perished; abisme ingulffed; Hell harried; Death killed; and mortality made immortality. In brieife, Mercy hath swallowed vp all miserie, and goodnes all wickednesse; so that, wee may well glorifie our selues, and say now with

1 Cor. 15. 55.

Saint Paule: O Death, where is thy sting? O Hell, where is thy Victorie?

The glory of a true Christian.

CHAP. XVI.

A profitable Interpretation for all Christians, of some words being Hebrue, Greeke, and Syrian, contained in certaine places of the sacred Scriptures.

Ecause in many places of the holie Scriptures, and in the seruice vsed in the Church, wee finde some wordes deriued from the Hebrue, Greeke, and Syrian, vnderstood by few persons, to whom they seeme somewhat strange: I thought it a matter very necessary, to make a further relation of them in this manner. Iesus is an Hebrue name, which (by Interpretation) signifieth a Sauiour; the Etymology whereof, the Angell Gabriell declared to the blessed Virgine Mary, saying in Saint Mathew: And his Name shall be Iesus, because hee shall saue his people from their sinnes. There was one named Iosedech, a great Priest, the Sonne of Iosedech, who figured Iesus Christ our Sauiour; as likewise Zorobabell, who was of his royall Linage, and (according to spirituall intelligence) signified him. Iosedech is turned (saith Saint Hierome) יהוה, that is to say, God Iust. In like manner, Iesus Christ is the Sonne of the Iust GOD. Messias is an Hebrue word, which signifieth as much as Christ in Greeke; and both of them are interpreted Anointed. Saint Augustine writeth, that Messias signifieth in the Punicke Language, as much as Anointed; and the Hebrue, Punicke, and Syrian tongues, do come very nere and resemble one another. The Patriarches (in the Olde Testament) were called Christes, of whom it is written in the hundred and fift Psalme; Touch not mine Anointed; and doe my Prophets no harme. And in the first Booke of Paralipomenon, or the Chronicles, al those which departed or came out of Aegipt, were cald Christes. The same S. August. saith, that the word Christus cometh of Christmata: because as the ancient Kings were anointed with holy Interpretatio of Hebrue, Greeke, and Syrian words.

Hierom. sup. 5. Math. Cap. 2.

Aug. de verb. Apost. Sermon. 3. Et cont. Pelag. Lib. 2.

August. sup. Agge. Cap. 1.

Aug. sup. 10. 1. 1 tract.

Conference of languages.

Psal. 105. 15.

1 Reg. 12. 19

Aug. in Scrm. clxxxi. de Temp.

holy Oyle; so our Saviour Iesus Christ was filled with the infusion of the blessed Spirit.

We read in the thirtieth Chapter of Exodus, of the Priest-hoodes vnction, or the Oyle of holy Oyntment, wherewith (afterward) the Priestes (in Leviticus) are said to be annointed. Then there was another Oyle, wherewith Kings were annointed in their Kingdomes, and whereof the Prophet Esay maketh mention in his forty five Chapter: The Lord spake these things to his annointed Cyrus. Yet there was a Propheticall vnction, wherewith Helias was commanded to annoint Heliseus: And Heliseus, the Sonne of Shaphat of Abell Moholash, shalt thou annoint to bee Prophet in thy roome.

But about all other kindes of vnctions, there is one called Spiritual; The vnction of Gladnesse, wherewith our blessed Saviour was annointed, and it was said to him: For this cause, thy God hath annointed thee with the Oyle of Gladnesse, above thy Fellowes. I hold this word Fellowes, to concerne them, to whom S. Iohn speaketh in his second Chapter of his first Epistle, saying: But yee haue an Oyntment from that holy one, and know all things. And a little after, he addeth: But the annointing which ye receiued of him, remaineth in you, and ye haue no neede that any man teach you.

Emanuel is an Hebrue word, and signifieth as much, as God with vs. Our Saviour obtained this name, by the effect which followed, to wit: that hee who was God, pleased to cloath himselfe with our flesh, and to conuerse with vs. Nazarian or Nazarite, signifieth Holy. The seauenty Interpreters turned the word Nazarite, to Sanctified; and Symmachus, to Separates. Rabbi is interpreted Maister, or Lord. Paracletus is a Greeke word, signifying Aduocate, Doctor, Comforter. Paschall is an Hebrue Vocabule, and a Greeke name, as Saint Hierome affirmeth, expressing as much in speaking, as passage, or Passouer. Epiphany in Greeke, sounded apparition, manifestation, or demonstration, in our vulgar tongue: because as on that day, our Redeemer was made knowne by a Starre.

Pentecost is a Greeke word, and is as much in expression, as fifty; because, from the Resurrection of Iesus Christ, untill the time of this sollemnity, there were fifty daies of Interuallam. Scenofagia, is an Hebrue word, declaring the making of Tabernacles or Tents, which was a very sollemn Feastiuall. Encenia were the Feast daies among the Iewes, cald the Feast of Dedication of the Temple of Ierusalem. Kyria-eleison, is a word composed of κύριε, that is to say, Lord, and of ἐλεησον, that is, Haue mercy. Alleluya, are also two wordes in Hebrue, which signifie, Praise God: for (as Saint Hierome testifieth) there are ten seuerall names, whereby the Hebrues tearmed God. * Antiphona in Greeke, is a Song deliuered at times, and it may be turned into one word, as the resfrer, burthen, or downe of any Song.

Homilie, is a Greeke word, signifying, as when we vse to say, a Sermon, Canon, or Rule. Osanna in the Hebrue Language, is as much, as if we should say; O Lord saue me. Sabbahot is thus interpreted; Lord Almighty, Lord of vertue, or of Armies and Hoasts. Eucharistia is a Greeke diction, thus conuerted, into Giuing of Thankes, and intending also the Sacrament of the Lordes Supper. Euangelium, or Gospell, signifyeth Good, or Glad Tydings. Paradise in Greeke, and a Garden engraffed with Apples, is all one. Parable is a Greeke word, signifying a similitude or comparison. Symbote is an assembly or congregation; as when a man putteth his part in common, and euery one hath his share or proportion. Peter, in Greeke, signifieth a Flint-stone, or Rocke-stone, as Cephas dooth the like in the Syrian tongue: hauing this implication, of solidity and firmenesse, because Saint Peter was firme in confession of the truth. Philacteria is a Greeke word, signifying keeping or preseruing; because in warily-kept Scroles of Parchment, the memories of the Iewes Lawes were conserued.

That which the Greekes called a Si-nagogue or Church; we may well expound to be an Assembly. Mammori, according to the opinion of S. Hierom, is a Syrian name, of the Singular number, and Masculine Gender, signifying Riches. Eschnicke is a Greeke word, signifying a man that is a Gentile, Pagan, or some other Sect. Profelite is a Greek word also, and (by Interpretation) is as much

The Feast of Tabernacles.

The Feast of Dedication.

Ten names for God. * Vox reciproca duobus choris alternatim psallentibus.

The Iewes beeing of Willow branches.

Eucharistia.

Euangelium.

Similitude or comparison.

Scroles of Parchment among the Pharises.

Hierom. sup. Math. Cap. 17.

The Iewes manner of a Profelite.

The Oyle of holy oyntment Exod. 30. 25.

Annointing of Kings. Esay 45. 1.

Prophetical Vnction.

1 Reg. 19. 16.

The Oyle of gladnesse. Psalme 45. 8.

1 Ioh. 2. 20. 27

Hierom. sup. cap. 9. de Esay.

Augu. in Sermon. 4. de Natiuit.

παράκλητος

Hierom. sup. Ioan. ap. 14.

The wise mens Star.

Pentecost.

The place of dead mens skulls.

The Mount Calvary.

The Treasure of the Temple among the Iewes.

Hierom. sup. Ioan. Cap. 7.

Visions by dreames.

much to say, as a Stranger. And the Iewes vsed to tearme him so, that (being of another Nation) conuerted to their Law and Religion. Scandalize, is a Greeke Verbe, and valueth as much, as to offend: euen as Angaria (a Persian word) signifieth to smite and expulse. Golgotha is Syrian Vocable, which Saint Hierome declareth, to bee the place of Baldnesse or Nakednesse, tearmed in Latine Caluaria: So was a place in Ierusalem called, by the Mount Sion, towards the North: because there lay the heads of such as were condemned to death, and our Sauour Iesus Christ being crucified in that place, did there accomplish the saluation of all mankind. Corkona, or Gazaphylacium, composed of words Persian and Greeke, relateth a Chest or Coffer, wherein the Mony was reposed, giuen for vse of the Ministers which serued in the Temple. According to that which was said: He that serueth at the Altar, ought to line of the Altar, for Corbone signifyeth a guift. Eleemosyna or Almes being a Greeke word, implyeth Pitty or Mercy. Diabolus, Deuill, is interpreted a Calumniatour. Beelzebub, is the Father of Flyes, as by the word Fly an Idoll is specified. For S. Hierome enstrueth, that Bel, Beel, and Baal, was among the Hebrues, as the Word Idoll with the Greekes. And Zebub, Fly, as if a man should say, the Idol of a Fly: for ἰδωλον is a simulacre or statue. That which the Greekes called phantasma, and the Latines spectrum; wee tearme a vision by dreame, or else some vgly dreadfull Image. But to conclude, Amen is an Hebrue word, signifying so much as So be it: but when it is found to be repeated two seuerall times; as Amen, Amen; then it implyeth Veritie, Verily, for confirmation of a truth.

CHAP. XVII.

Examples of grosse errors in Politicians, and worldly wise men. Also, how farre a man may trust a reconciled enemy.

Lewes the eleauenth, King of France, and one of the most politique Princes that France euer had, being at war with his owne Brother Charles, Duke of Normandy; Frances, Duke of Brittaine; and Charles, Duke of Burgundy, and desiring greatly to separate the last from the other two, to the end that he might be the better reuenged on them: sollicit him by his Ambassadors, to come to conferre with him. Which the Duke yeilded vnto, so that the meeting might bee in a Towne of his owne, in the frontiers of Flanders and France, for his better security; where-with the King was well contented. The meeting therefore being appointed at Peronne (whether the Duke was come with his Army) and safe-conduct sent to the King, by a Letter of the Dukes owne hand: the King went thither without any forces or Guard, to shew the confidence hee had in the Duke, to the end, to oblige him the more, and to gaine his goodwill. But the Duke seeing now his Enemy in his owne power, and vnderstanding at the same time, that Liege was reuolted from him, by the sollicitation of certaine Ambassadors of the King: tooke him Prisoner, and would not release him, vntill he had recouered the Towne of Liege, whither he forced him to beare him company; with no small danger of his person. And in the end, hauing made him to grant to some hard conditions, in fauour of his confederates (against whom the King had especially plotted that conference and treaty) he released him.

Now then, who seeth not in this example, how grossely this great Politike erred in two things, wherein it might be presumed, that a man (of any experience) could not haue beene deceiued. The one, that hauing imployed certaine Agents or Ambassadors, to stirre vpthe Towne of Liege against the Duke: hee did not countermaund it, when he resolved to put himselfe into his handes. For who could be so simple, as not to consider, that if the practise should take effect (as it did) whiles he should be in his power: not onely the peace and amity which he desired to make, would be hindred thereby; but also his person endangered? For that the Duke should haue iust cause to detzine him, at least, vntil he had done him reparation of the wrong.

Phillip de Comines de reb. gest. Lodouici, 11. in Cap. 33.

Lewes the 11 king of France ouertaken in his owne policy.

Liege reuolted from the Duke of Beutgundy.

The manifest error of King Lewes in two kinds.

The first part of his error.

Consideration is the conduct to safety

The

The other note of the Kings great folly.

What learning K. Lewis the eleventh required in his Sonne.

Math. 7. 2.

Micha. Princ. Cesar Borgia Duke of Valence, the patterne of Machiuel's Prince, overthrowne by his owne pollicy.

Guicciard. Hist. Lib. 6.

The other error was, that he would (vpon any security or safe conduct) put himselfe into the courtesie and mercy of his Enemy, without any vrgent and ineuitable necessity: knowing how little assurance is many times in wordes or Oathes, when present commoditie (eyther priuate or publique) is offered by the breach thereof. Besides that, his own rule (which he was wont to say, & was all the Latine hee would haue his Sonne to learne, to wit; Qui nescit dissimulare, nescit regnare, Hee which knoweth not how to dissemble, knoweth not how to raigne) might haue mooued him to haue doubted in his Enemy, that which he practised in himselfe, and was apt enough to suspect in his best friends: And this he had iust cause to feare in the Duke of Burgundy, whom hee had deceiued before by a false composition, which hee made with him at Constans, and brake presently after: whereby he had both incited, and also taught him, to pay him with Money of the same stamp. Wherein may bee noted, as well his notable error, as also Gods providence and Iustice, in punishing his double dealing with the like, according to the saying of our Saviour. Qua mensura, &c. What measure you shall make or giue to others, the same shall bee measured or made vnto you againe.

An example no lesse notable, both of the one and other, may be obserued in Cesar Borgia, Duke of Valence, whose great wisdom Machiuel so much admireth; that he maketh him a Mitrouir and Patterne for a Prince: whom hee might (more iustly) haue made a Mirrouir of mischiese, and patterne of all perfidiousnesse, cruelty, and impietie. This Cesar, being (after the death of his Father) spoyled of all the estates, which he had by force and fraud laid together in Italie, and in danger (as he thought) of his life, or liberty at least, by the displeasure of Pope Iulius the second, then governing: resolved to flye (for his security) to Hernando Gonçales, Generall in the Kingdome of Naples, for Ferdinando, King of Arragon and Castile. Forgetting, or not considering, the manifold causes of offence which hee had giuen to him, and to the King his Maister in sundry occasions. And so, trusting to his safe conduct, hee put himselfe into his hands, and was (shortly after) sent by him Prisoner into Spaine, by order from the King. Whereof Gonçales excused himselfe, pretending, that his Faith and safe conduct, ought not to hinder the execution of the King his Maisters commandment, against whom (he said) he could giue no security. And so the Arch-politick of his time, who had by subtilty and treachery overthrowne very many: was himselfe (by Gods iust iudgment) ouer-reached, and (as I may well tearme it) tript in his owne play; to his vter ruine and overthrow, as (vpon another occasion) shal be declared more amply hereafter.

Therefore, what was become of all his accustomed craft? Where were all his profound pollicies, that excellent iudgement, that sharpnesse of wit, and those rare inuentions, which made him such a worthy patterne of Machiuel's Princes? For, whether we respect true wisdom, or the common craft and subtiltie of worldly men (which is now commonlie called Machiwillian pollicie) he erred in the principles of both. For subtilty and craft (which excludeth all Charity) teacheth so to distrust; as neuer to trust, nor to pardon an Enemy: nor to leaue to hate, hurt, and reuenge; when opportunity is offered, notwithstanding any reconciliation. Besides that, the mallice of men so farre extendeth it selfe in such cases: that Politikes hold it not secure for him that doth offend any man, to trust him euer after. To which purpose, the Italian Prouerb saith: Chi offende, non perdona mai. Whereby it is signified, that he which dooth any notable iniury to another man, can neuer after (with his owne safety) trust him, or yet spare him; if he may overthrow him; for feare least (at some time or other) he may seeke to be reuenged. So then, this Arch-politicke (according to the rules of his owne art and profession) should neuer haue put his life into the hands, of one whom he had once offended, and much lesse of an enemy reconciled.

And as for true wisdom, though it euer keepe it selfe within the bounds of Charity, and teacheth vs, not onely to pardon, but also to loue our enemies; yea, and to doe them what plea-

Cesar Borgia the Arch-politicke of his time.

How faire a man may trust a reconciled enemy.

The large extendure of mens mallice

An Italian Prouerbe.

A lesson for crafty Politicians.

Concerning true wisdom.

Seneca Epist. 5. A reconciled enemy not to be trusted.

sure wee conueniently may : yet it so ioyneth The prudence of the Serpent, with the simplicity of the Doue; that it warneth vs to be beware of them, and not to trust our liues or states in their handes, when we may auoyd it. Remembring euer the counsell of Seneca, who saith: Neuer beleue that he will be faithfull vnto thee, who of an Enemy is become thy Friend.

Eccle. 12, 10, 11, 12.

Which also the Holy-Ghost teacheth in the Booke of Ecclesiasticus, where it is said. Neuer beleue or trust thy enemy, for as old Iron groweth euerie day more rusty then other; so encreaseth his rancour. And if he humble himselfe, and crouch vnto thee: yet haue an eye vnto him, and keepe thy selfe from him. Place him not neere vnto thee, least he put thee out of thy place, and make thee know (to thy cost) how true my wordes are. And againe to the same purpose, Salomon saith in his Prouerbs. When thy Enemy shall speake softly vnto thee (that is to say, shal flatter thee, or speake thee faire) then trust him not, for then is his heart full of mischief. In all which, the holy Ghost enstructeth, and aduiseeth vs to be wary, but not malicious; to be circumspect; but not suspitious; to haue an eye to a reconciled Enemy, but not to hate or hurt him, or to reuenge olde wrongs.

Prouer. 12, 25

Aduise giuen by the blessed Spirit.

Therefore Salomon counterpeyseth the fore-saide Doctrine, with precepts of compassion, and charitie towards our Enemies, saying. When thine Enemy falleth, bee not glad thereof, and let not thine heart reioyce in his ruine; least the Lord seeing it, be displeas'd with thee, and turne his wrath from him. And in another place. If thine Enemy (saith he) be hungry, giue him meat, if he be thirsty, giue him drinke: For thou shalt lay coals vpon his head, and our Lord shall reward thee. Thus farre this King and Prophet, whose words also Saint Paule reciteth, and our Sauiour confirmeth by his Commaundement, saying: Loue your Enemies, and doe good to them which hate you, &c. And the like in sundry other places.

Prouer. 24, 17.

Pro. 25, 21, 22

Thus we see, how true Wisedome and Christian Charitie doe concurre, and how the prudence of the Serpent, is to bee ioyned with the simplicity of the Doue. In so distrusting our Enemies, that we leaue not to loue the, and yet louing them so, that we trust them no further, then may stand with our owne safety; euer fearing the mallice of mans Nature, which is so abstruse and hidden, that no man can bee assured of his best Friend, but much lesse of a reconciled enemy.

Rom. 12, 14.

In which respect, it is Wisedome so to loue and trust our Friends, that wee remember withall; that they may become our Enemies. And therefore Seneca aduiseeth vs so to liue: That our actions may bee as iustifiable before our Friendes, as before our Enemies. To which purpose also, the Holy Ghost in the Booke of Ecclesiasticus, saith: Ab inimicis tuis separare, & ab amicis tuis attende. Separate thy selfe from thine Enemies, and beware euen of thy Friends. And in another place. A filijs tuis & domesticis attende. Take heede of thine owne Children, and of thy Household-Seruants. Which neuerthelesse, is not to bee vnderstood, as though a Man should trust no body; which were not onely a miserable case, but also extreame follie. For, as Seneca saith. It is as foule a fault, and as great folly in a Man, to beleue and trust no body; as to beleue and trust euery Man. And many (saith he) whiles they feare to be deceiued; doe teach men how to deceiue them, vrging them iustly therevnto, by suspecting them wrongfully. The which Plutarck also confirmeth, saying: That Fooles for lacke of wit, to prouide other-wayes for their owne securitie; doe thinke it the safest and wisest way, to distrust all men, and so (in the ende) they procure their owne ruine. Therefore, in this point of confidence and diffidence, the wisdome consisteth (as all vertue dooth) in the meane, to wit: that wee neither trust nor distrust all Men, neyther commit our liues and whole estates, to any Mans will and pleasure. But onely in case of necessitie, and then also, to make choise of approoued, wise, and vertuous friends; but neuer of a reconciled Enemy. And in this sence, it is well and wisely saide, that Diffidentia est mater securitatis, Distrust is the Mother of Security.

10

20

30

40

50

the Doue. In so distrusting our Enemies, that we leaue not to loue the, and yet louing them so, that we trust them no further, then may stand with our owne safety; euer fearing the mallice of mans Nature, which is so abstruse and hidden, that no man can bee assured of his best Friend, but much lesse of a reconciled enemy.

In which respect, it is Wisedome so to loue and trust our Friends, that wee remember withall; that they may become our Enemies. And therefore Seneca aduiseeth vs so to liue: That our actions may bee as iustifiable before our Friendes, as before our Enemies. To which purpose also, the Holy Ghost in the Booke of Ecclesiasticus, saith: Ab inimicis tuis separare, & ab amicis tuis attende. Separate thy selfe from thine Enemies, and beware euen of thy Friends. And in another place. A filijs tuis & domesticis attende. Take heede of thine owne Children, and of thy Household-Seruants. Which neuerthelesse, is not to bee vnderstood, as though a Man should trust no body; which were not onely a miserable case, but also extreame follie. For, as Seneca saith. It is as foule a fault, and as great folly in a Man, to beleue and trust no body; as to beleue and trust euery Man. And many (saith he) whiles they feare to be deceiued; doe teach men how to deceiue them, vrging them iustly therevnto, by suspecting them wrongfully. The which Plutarck also confirmeth, saying: That Fooles for lacke of wit, to prouide other-wayes for their owne securitie; doe thinke it the safest and wisest way, to distrust all men, and so (in the ende) they procure their owne ruine. Therefore, in this point of confidence and diffidence, the wisdome consisteth (as all vertue dooth) in the meane, to wit: that wee neither trust nor distrust all Men, neyther commit our liues and whole estates, to any Mans will and pleasure. But onely in case of necessitie, and then also, to make choise of approoued, wise, and vertuous friends; but neuer of a reconciled Enemy. And in this sence, it is well and wisely saide, that Diffidentia est mater securitatis, Distrust is the Mother of Security.

But now perhaps you will aske me, how the rule of perfect Charitie, and of

of

of

of

of

of

In what manner we may distrust our enemies.

How to loue our friends.

Seneca Epist. 3.

Eccle. 6. 13.

Eccle. 32, 22.

Seneca Epist. 3. No lesse folly to distrust all men, then to trust euery man.

Plutar. in Diom.

Of confidence & diffidence.

How distrust may be called the mother of security.

How distrust and suspicion may stand with true prudence and charity.

1. Cor. 13, 5. Chris. Hom. 33. in 1. Cor. 13.

1. Cor. 13, 5.

Chris. ubi. sup.

How suspicion is excluded from prudent circumspection.

An ancient witty English Proverb.

Chris. in Hom. de S. Susanna.

of true prudence can agree herein? Seeing Charity (as Saint Paule saith) Non cogitat malum, Doth thinke no euill; that is to say (as Saint Chrysostome expoundeth it) suspecteth no euill. How then can I distrust my reconciled enemy, but I must suspect that hee will betray mee? Whereto I answer, that two things are to be considered in Charity. The one, that it beginneth at a mans owne selfe; for no man is bound so to loue another, that hee hurt himselfe. The other, that as Saint Paule testifieth of Charitie; Non agit perperam, It dooth nothing foolishly or unadvisedly. For as Saint Chrysostome saith, expounding the same place; Charitas non est temeraria, &c. Charity is not rash and heady, for it maketh a man wise, graue, and constant.

Now then, to shew how suspicion is excluded from this prudent circumspection, which Charity admitteth: is to be vnderstood, that I may bee wary and circumspect, though I doe not suspect, but onelie vpon a generall supposition, of mans ordinary frailty and mallice, and the inscrutability of his hart.

In such a doubtfull case I may take the surest way, to wit; that although I verily hope, that my reconciled Enemy be so good and honest a Man, that there resteth no mallice in his heart towards me: Neuerthelesse, I will be so considerate and prouident, that, put the case he should haue the will for to hurt me; yet he shall not haue the oportunitie, or occasion to doe it by any Act of mine. In which sence, our English Proverbe may be well vnderstood, which saith: If my Friend betray me, I beshrew him; but if mine enemy betray me, I beshrew my selfe. And this aduised and wary proceeding, is so farre from the breach of any Charity: that it standeth well with all kinde of loue and friendship; betwixt Friend and Friend, Father and Child, Brother and Brother, Man and Wife, Prince and Subiect. And therefore, in respect that it seemeth to include some kinde of suspicion, and (withall) admitteth all charitable affection: it is called by some, Beneuola suspitio, A friendlie or louing suspicion. In which sence, Saint Chrysostome saith: Maleuola suspitiones sunt calumniantium; beneuola suspitiones sunt gubernantium. Mallicious suspitions are proper to Calumniators; beneuolous and friendlie suspitions, belong vnto Gouernours.

Therefore, to returne to Duke Valentine. Hereby we may see, that he was destitute, not onely of true wisdom: but also of all wit and reasonable discourse, when he, in whose handes, no Brother or Friend could euer be secure; expected security in the handes of his Enemy, and perswaded himselfe, that Faith should bee kept with him, who had neuer kept it with any man. But because I shall haue more occasion to speake of him heereafter; I will passe to Moderne example, of mans ignorance and weaknesse, in the miserable end of Monsieur Chastillion, Admirall of France, massacred at Paris: who for the great opinion of his Wisdom and prudence, had no meane conduct of chiefe affaires in France, some yeares in the first troubles of King Charles the ninth.

After some yeares of cruell warre, betwixt the Catholiques and the Protestants; peace was concluded in the year 1570. And for the better assurance thereof, a marriage was agreed on, betwixt the King of Navarre. (afterward, the most Christian King of France) and the Sister of Charles the ninth, then King of France. All the chiefe heads and leaders of the Protestants were invited to the Court, as well for the sollemnization of the marriage, as for confirmation of the peace. Whereupon, there was held an assembly of the Protestants at Rochell, to determine: whether it were conuenient, that they should all goe to the Court, or no. And it seeming good vnto them, that some of the principall should stay at home (especially the Lord Admirall) to preuent the worst, in case there should be any double dealing on the Kinges part: The Admirall onely was of opinion, that it was conuenient they al, and especially himselfe should goe, and alleaged many reasons to that purpose. Yet finding them (neuerthelesse) vnwilling therto; he did put them in minde, how often hee had yeilded to them (contrary to his owne opinion) in diuers consultations. And therefore requested them, that they would condescend vnto him: not doub-

His returne to D. Valentine.

The great Admirall of France.

Monsieur Castillon sought his owne destruction.

The massacre of the Protestants at Paris 1570.

Boldnesse and vndaunted spirit, working against it selfe.

The error of the pollicke Admirall of of France.

Eslien Pasquier
lib. 5. Epist.

The answer
of the Admi-rall of France to the King.

him; yea, and forced him to make a dis-ting, but it would turne to the publike benefit of their cause. Well, to bee briefe, they yeilded vnto him: rather to satisfie his importunity, then for any liking they had therto, and so he went with the rest: And within a few dayes after their arriuall at Paris; both he and they all (by damnable treachery) except some two or three that escaped by chance, were slaine by order from the King. Who doth not here behold, an e-uident example of mans weaknesse and ignorance in pollicy, especial in the Ad-mirall, who hauing lit so many occasions (before this time of his ouerthrow) shewne himselfe so prudent and prou-dent; that he could neither be ouercom-by force, nor circumented by fraud: yet had not so much wit, as to follow the aduise of others, but thought it safe and secure for him and them, to aduenture (as a man may say) al their goods in one bottome, yea, and without any necessity, to put themselues to the mercy of a Soueraign King, whom they had highly offended. And this may be the more wondred at in the Admirall, for that in the beginning of the second troubles, he wisely foresaw the like danger & inconuenience to himselfe, and warily auoy-ded it. For the King, hauing gotten some inckling of new broyles intended, and fearing most the Admirall, in respect of his great iudgement and experience, both in matters of war and peace: sent vnto him Monsieur du Tore his Cozin, to aduertise him that he had great and important affaires to communicate with him, wherein hee would gladlie haue his aduise, and therefore desired him to repaire to the Court with speed.
The Admirall hearing the message, and suspecting (as it should seeme) that the King meant no good towards him: said to Monsieur du Tore, that he should tell the King from him; That there were no Count Egmontes in France. Meaning, that he would not so easily suffer his head to be cut off, as Count Egmonte had done lately before in Flanders; and this was all the answer hee would giue him.
Whereby it appeareth, how circum-spect and suspicious he was of the king, when (as yet) he had giuen him far lesse cause of offence, then afterwards, when he had the second time rebelled against honorable peace. And yet notwithstanding, he could not be dissuaded, from putting himselfe, and all the rest of his friends into his hands. So blinde is the wisedome and pollicy of man, when God determineth to punnish him: for then, the first blow that God commonly giueth him, is in the braine, whereby he taketh from him his iudgement, that he may run headlong vpon his own ruine. And as the Psalmist saith of vngod-ly men: That they are ouer-taken in the craftie wilines; which they themselues haue devised and imagined.

Now, it shall not be amisse to consider here, by occasion of the former examples; whether the most valiant, prudent, and pious Emperour Charles the fift, committed an error or no, when (after many yeares warre, betwixt him and Frances, the first of that name, king of France, and the said Kings disgrace at Pavia, and his imprisonment in Spaine) he passed notwithstanding thorough Fraunce, vpon a safe conduct giuen by the King, to giue remedy to the tumults lately before raised in Gant. Wherein, the good successe, as wel of his safe passage, as of the speedy pacification of those troubles, may seem to be no small Argument of his prudent designment.
Neuerthelesse, weighing the matter according to reason of State, and not according to the successe (which depending wholly on the hand of God, is many times good and fortunate, though the counsell and designment be imprudent) I cannot approue his resolution therein, for the reasons before declared, and the extreame danger that he exposed himselfe vnto, and the small profit he could expect to receiue thereby; in comparison of the dammage that might haue succeeded to him and his estate, if he had bin made away, or detained. For, although it imported him very much, presently to quench that fire kindled in Flanders, before it should grow to a greater combustion: yet the danger thereof was so great, as would haue bene in the inconuenience of his death or imprisonment, if it should haue chanced.

For, the reuolt of the Country might haue bene remedied, either by force, or perhaps by faire means, as long as hee had life and liberty: but the other had bene

The first blow that GOD giueth to a wicked man when hee will destroy him, is in the brain

Psalme 10. 2.

The passage of Charles the fift thorow
France into Flanders.

*Sirius in Com-mentariis rerum
in orbe gestarum.
Anno. 1539.*

Consideratio
according to State.

Quenching
the fire begun in Flanders.

Liberty and life are the assistants of many great occasions.

beene remedilasse, and the great detriment that could befall him, and therefore not to be aduentured vpon, but only when it could not be auoided. And this (no doubt) was his owne opinion when he came into France, being admonished of his great danger, not onely by his Sister, then Queene of France: but also (as some men thinke) by the Kings owne Son the Dolphin, who, in respect of the good affection he did beare him, from the time that he had been hostage for his Father in Spaine; cast himselfe vp behind the Emperour on his Horse, at his arriual before he alighted, and clapping him vpon the shoulder (vnder colour to giue him a familiar welcome) said openly and merrily to him; Yield thy selfe Emperour: but after told him secretly in his eare, of the Counsels resolution to stay him. Whereupon, the Em-perour thinking it necessary to gaine Madame d'Estampes (who was greatlie fauoured by the King, and thought to be his Enemy) took occasion as he was talking with her, to let fall before her a rich Diamond, as it were by chance, and when she in courtesie tooke it vp to restore it vnto him: he would not receiue it againe at her handes, but entreated her to accept it as his giuft. Whereby (as also by his good perswasions) it was thought hee procured her friendship, which concurring with the endeauors of his Sister the Queene of France, and his owne good dilligences done with diuers of his Counsell; was thought to facilitate his escape.

But who, or whatsoeuer was the meanes thereof, it is not to be doubted;
 but that it proceeded principally, from the providence and mercy of Almightie God towards him. To which purpose it is to be considered, that it was reported, not onely by his owne Ser-uants; but also by the Ambassadors of Flanders, who attended vpon him in all that iourney: that hee spent two or three houres euery night in prayer on his knees, and as much euery morning secretly in his Chamber.

In regard whereof, and of the great seruice he had done, and was to doe to Gods Church: no doubt but God did especially fauour and protect him.
 Wherof also it pleased his Diuine Maiestly also to giue publike testimony, by deliuering him twice (while he was in France) from euident daunger of death.

 One time, from stifeling in a smoake, that vpon a sudden was raised (in great aboundance) by an arteficiall fire, vpon a staire as he was going from his chamber. The other time, from the fall of a great boord, that did light (some part of it) vpon his head, and brake it. And although it might haue been conceiued, that these thinges proceeded of some practise (in which respect, the King would haue punnished the Authours thereof with death, for better satisfaction of the Emperour;) yet hee would not suffer it, but obtained their pardons.

By these daungers, and the happy escapes of the Emperour (inferiour in wisdome to no Prince in his time) three thinges may euidently be gathered. The first, his error; the second, the infirmity and weakenesse of mans wit; the third, Gods most mercifull and prouident care, in the preseruation of his Seruants, whom he suffereth sometime to erre, and to fall into great difficulties and dangers: partly for their hu-miliation, and to exercise their Faith; patience & confidence in him, for their greater good; and partly to make manifest, as well to themselues, as to all others, the louing care which he hath of them. And that, as the Psalmist saith;
Salus iustorum à Domino, & protector eorum in tempore tribulationis; The saluation of the righteous commeth of the Lord, and he is their Protector in the time of trouble. Heere then may all Princes learne of this prudent and pious Emperour, what is their best remedy in like cases of danger, to wit: to haue recourse (as he had) to Almighty God, and to craue his assistance, saying with the worthy King and Prophet; Oculi mei semper ad Dominum quoniam ipse euellet de laqueo pedes meos: Mine eyes are euer looking vnto the Lord, for he will deliuer my feet out of the snare.

The danger that Charles the first escaped in passing thorow
France.
Surius ibidem.

Madame d' Estampes the Kings fauorite.

The great piery and deu-tion of the Emperour
Charls the first.
Surius ibidem.

The Emperors admirable escape twice from death.
Surius ibidem.

The Emperor inferiour in wisdome to no Prince in his time.

Why God suffereth his ser-uants to fall into dangers.

Psal. 37:40.

Psalme 25:14

CHAP. XVIII.

¶ Of Errors committed by whole Senates, namely of Rome and Venice, &c.

Hat maruaile is it, that particular men (bee they neuer so wise) are overseen in matters of State: seeing that the most wise and grauest Senates, haue also erred therein many times? Whereof I will (for breuities sake) alleadge onely three or foure examples. Cicero reporteth, that the Senate of Rome hauing taken great summes of Money, of certaine tributarie Citties, to make them free: forced them afterward to pay their old tribute, without restoring them the Mony that they had paid for their freedom. Which he saith, was Turpe imperio, A shame to their Empire. Piratorum enim (saith he) melior fuit fides, quam Senatus: For the Faith of Pirats, was better then the Faith of the Senate. This then being so great a fraud, that (in any well-gouerned Common-wealth) it could not passe vnpunished in priuate men: must needs be a foule and shamefull fault in a whole Senate, not onely for the In-justice of the fact; but also for the errour they committed in gouernment, to wit; in giuing to their Subjects, an example of fraudulent and deceitfull dealing, which being authorised (as it were) by their publike Act, would the more easily insinuate it selfe into the Common-wealth, euen to the great detriment thereof. To which purpose, Cicero saith: Princes and Gouernours, when they offend, doe not onely endamage the Common-wealth, in that they are corrupted themselues; but also, in that they corrupt others, and hurt more by their euill example, then by the offence it selfe.

Seeing then nothing can bee more pernicious to any State, then that fraud and In-justice should haue course therein (for, as Cicero saith, Faith is the foundation of Justice, and Justice the stay of State) the Romaine Senate did erre most absurdly, in opening the gap to all kind of Cicero. in lib. 3. de Officijs.

An errour of the Senate of Rome.

A whole Senates errour exceedeth that of any priuate man.

Cicero. in lib. 5. de Legibus.

Cicero. in lib. de Officijs 2. et 2.

10

20

30

40

50

cozenage in the Common-wealth, by their owne bad example. Besides the losse of reputation, which must needs follow thereon to their Empire, as well with their owne Subjects, as also with their Friends and Confederats. A thing so daungerous to State, that the same Senate (in former times beeing better aduised) did make restitution and reparation of like wronges, to recouer credite with their Friends and Confederates. And therefore they restored to the Ardeatines, a piece of Land which the people of Rome (against all reason and equity) adiuaged and had taken to themselues some yeares before, when the said Ardeatines, and the Aricinians being in controuersy for that land; had remitted themselues and their cause to their iudgement.

Likewise at other times, the Senate resolved to deliuer most notable Men to their enemies; rather then to infringe Iustice, and incurre the infamie of fraud and deceit. In which respect, T. Verturius, & Spurius Posthumus, both of them Consuls, and T. Mutius, & Quintus Aemilius, Tribunes of the people, were deliuered Prisoners to the Samnites: rather then the Senate would ratifie the peace they had made with the. Besides that, the famous Consull, M. Attilius Regulus, being taken Prisoner in Affricke, and dismissed vpon condition, that the Prisoners of the Carthaginians should also be deliuered: was (by his owne motion) sent back by the Senate; because they neither thought good to deliuer the Prisoners, nor yet to loose their credite and reputation of Iustice; by recouery of their Consull, contrarie to the condition.

But perhaps you will say, that the error which I here reprove, was committed when the Common-wealth was growne to corruption, and declined from the integrity of vertue and Iustice, wherein it flourished in former times. Therefore, let vs consider the same common-wealth in her purity, I meane in her beginning, about 120. yeares after the expulsion of the Kings. For although the Senate did (at that time) giue many notable examples of singuler prouidence and exact Iustice: yet it failed sometimes in both, to the great damage of the State.

When

Restitution made by the Senate of Rome by the Ardeatines.

Tit. Livi. Dec. 1. Lib. 4. Idem. Dec. 1. Lib. 3.

The great care that the Romains had of their credit & reputation.

Cicero in lib. 3. de Officijs.

Romes Common-wealth growne to corruption.

Another error of the Romaine Senate.

When Brennos the Brittain (as some say) being Captaine of the Gauls that passed into Italy, besiedged a Towne called Clusium, beyond the Alpes, and demanded of the Inhabitants some part of their Territory: the Clusians finding themselvs too weake to resist them, craued succour of the Romaines, who sent Ambassadors to treate peaceably with the Gauls in their behalfe.

The sledge of Clusium by the Gauls.

During which treaty and siege, there chanced to passe some acte of Hostilitie, betwixt the Gauls & the Clusians, wherein the Gauls perceiued, that the Roman Ambassadors (contrary to the Lawe of Armes) had borne armes against them, and killed a principal personage of theirs. Whereupon, they presently sent to Rome, to enquire the Romaines to punish their Ambassadors, for reparation of the wrong which they had done them. But the Senators, although (as Liuy confesseth) they knew well enough, that the Gauls demanded no more then was reasonable: yet they were partly so partiall in behalfe of the Ambassadors; and partly so confident of their owne forces, that they not only refused to do them Iustice, but also made the same Ambassadors generals of an Army, to be sent in succour of the Clusians.

Tit. Liuius in Dec. 1. Lib. 5.

Great Injustice done by the Romaines.

Vppon the knowledge whereof, the Gauls were incensed with such fury, that calling God and man to witness of the wrong, they presently raised their sledge from Clusium, and went directlie in all hast to Rome, and ouerthrowing (by the way) the Armie of the Romaines, they entered the Cittie, sacked, spoiled, and burnt it, with the greatest damage & disgrace to their state, that euer the Romans receiued, in the space of aboue 1100. yeares after that Rome was built, I mean, vntill the first sacke thereof by the Goths.

Rome sacked and spoyled by the Gauls.

Gods iudgement inflicted on the Romaines, for their iniustice and pride.

The which may be ascribed, partly to Gods iust Iudgement, in punishing their Iniustice; and partly to their error, in that they so much contemned, so huge an army of so valiant people, as to exasperate them by open iniuries, and to draw them vpon themselues with a redoubled furie. Whereas (in all reason of State) they should haue sought to pacify and diuert them by all conuenient meanes; considering, he is no Wiseman that feareth not the doubtfull euent of warre, especially at home, where the victorie of an enemy is most dangerous, and in case most of all, where the whole State was to bee aduentured, against an out-ragious multitude of desperate Vagabonds, that hadde nothing to loose. So that this error, was no lesse costly to the Common-wealth, then inexcusable in the Senate.

A despeerat hazard to fight against a beggerly multitude.

10

Heere to I might adde diuers examples of the Senate of Venice, to the which, Guicciardine saith: It is fatall some yeares to be deceiued diuers times. But two examples shall suffice. The first may bee their resolution, to make League with Lewes the twelth, King of France, to assilt him in the Conquest of Millaine, against Lodouico Sforza, Duke thereof, following the opinion of Antonius Grimanni, which Guicciardine saith, proceeded partly of passion, and partly of desire to enlarge their Dominions, by ioyning Cremona to the rest of their States in Italy: notwithstanding, that Marchio Trenisano, had dissuaded the same, with most strong and pregnant reasons, representing vnto them (by examples then fresh in memory) how dangerous it would be for them, to bring the French into Italy, & to haue so potent a neighbor, in the state of Millaine, as a King of France, whereof they sawe the effect shortly after, when King Lewes hadde it in possession. For then were they in such feares of his forces, as they durst deny him nothing that hee demanded of them, as Guicciardine noteth; in their deliuering of the Cardinall Ascanius, Brother vnto Duke Lodouico, and Viscount Baptista, and diuers other Noblemen of Millaine, who had put themselues in their protection; vppon their publick safe conduct, with expresse mention of safegard against the French.

Guic. Hist. lib. 4

Ibid. lib. 4. hist.

20

The error of the Venetians in making league with Lewes the 12. K. of France.

30

Guic. lib. 4 in fine.

40

Another error of theirs, more dangerous and dammageable to them then the former, was their great ouer-sight, as well in their vnadvised proceedinges, towards their Confederate and Friend, Frances the first of that name, King of France, as also in the iniuries which they did to the Emperour Maximilian; and to the Pope, whereby they droue them all (that before were deuided) to vnite themselues with the King of Castile, and diuers other Princes, against them in the league of Cambray. And neuerthelesse, when the Pope demanded of them the restitution of a Towne or two of his, vpon condition,

Guicciard. lib. 8. iunto.

50

The error of the Venetians in ioyning with K. Frances of France. Anno 1508.

dition, not to enter into that league, nor to ratifie the same, but rather to procure the dissolution thereof, they refused it by the perswasion of Dominicus Treuisano, Procurator of Saint Markes, though other of the Graue and Wifest Senators, were of contrary opinion.

Therefore, the yssue of the matter was, that all these Princes (ioyning their forces together, according vnto their agreement) spoyled them of all their possessions in Italy, and diuided the same amongst themselves. And had prosecuted their victory further, if the Pope had not beene a mediator for them, and procured their peace; vpon their humble submission to the Emperour, whome they most wronged.

Seeing then, these famous and renowned Senates, consisting of so manie wise and Graue men, haue committed such grosse errors, to their owne great preiudice and danger of their States, what assurance can any man haue, of mans wit, plots, and designments, if so bee he confide either in himselfe alone, or in the only counsell and iudgement of man. How vngratefull & simple then are those men, that presume so farte on their owne wits and sufficiency; that neither for their priuate, nor for their publicke affayres, they make any account at all of Gods helpe and assistance? Vngratefull, I say, for that hauing good parts and Talents, and many temporall blessings, which nature and reason teacheth them, not to come of their owne purchase and prouision, but of the Liberality and bountie of Almighty God, they do neuertheless, so admire the giift, that they forget the giuer, and so enioy the benefite, that they do not so much as thanke him that bestowed it vpon them; yea, and in steade of thanks, praise, honor, and seruice which they owe him, do render him contempt, dishonor, and no seruice at all. And therefore no meruaile, if Almighty God in punishment of so great ingratitude, do giue them ouer sometime to a reprobate sence, to the end, that as they offend him by an ouer-weening of their owne Wisdome, so they may be punished, yea, and perish by their owne folly. This ingratitude of man, Saint Augustine worthilie calleth, The roote of ail spirituall Euill, the drie and burning Winde that blasteth al our Corne, and stoppeth vp the Fountaine

The issue and clusio against the Venetians, to their great losse.

A consideration of mans imbecility, & weaknesse of wit, and of the neede he hath of Gods direction.

The ingratitude of such as do not acknowledge the bountie of God towards them.

Proud men giuen ouer to a Reprobate sence.

Aug. in l. Soliloq

of Gods mercy towards vs.

But heerein appeareth not onely the ingratitude, but also the extreame follie of such men (be they accounted neuer so wise) seeing that their weaknesse and imbecility is so manifest, euen to themselves if they list to consider it, that they may easily perceiue, that they are not absolute of themselves, but do depend vpon an higher power. And yet neuertheless, they are so vnadvised, as to cast themselves into the innumerable dangers & difficulties of this Worlde, without any regard, yea with contempt and offence of him, on whome they depend, and who can direct & guide them aright. Wherein they may be compared vnto some simple and selfe-willed fellow, that will needs put himselfe to Sea in a terrible tempest, without a Pilot, or vndertake a iourney thorough a dangerous desert in a darke Night, either without a guide; or els, hauing a deere and louing friend to directe him, vseth him so vnkindly and contemptuously by the way, that he forceth him to forsake him in the midst of the Wildernesse, and so perisheth worthily, thorough his owne folly and ingratitude.

Therefore, I conclide with these notable words of Saint Augustine, speaking to man: Thou receiuest (sayth he) the benefite, and doost not acknowledge the author thereof. The giift is manifest, and though the giuer bee hidden, yet thine owne reason may teach thee, that it is not thy due, but the giift of another. And therefore, whosoever the giuer bee, thou maist thinke, that as he hath bestowed exceeding much vpon thee, so hee hath loued thee much, seeing hee would giue thee so much. And this being so, what extreame folly is it, not to seeke and desire the loue of such a potent and kind louer? And what peruerse ingratitude and impiety is it, not to loue one that loueth thee so exceedingly? If then, thou Loue and esteeme his giifts, loue him that bestowed them vpon thee, and loue them as things that are subiect vnto thee, and as things that should serue thee, as pledges of thy Spouse, as giifts of thy Friend, as benefites of thy Lord; & so, as thou maist euer be mindfull, how much thou art his debter; yea, and loue his giiftes, not for themselves, but for his sake, not together with him, but for him. And lastly, loue them so, that thou maist loue him by them,

The extreame folly of such men as trust whollie in themselves.

An apt comparison of wilful minded men.

Aug. in Lib. 4. Meditat.

A notable discourse of S. Augustine concerning the ingratitude of man towards God.

them, and about them. Thus saith this Famous and Learned Father, which I wish all men would print in their hearts, and practise in their actions. So shoulde their Counfels and deliberations be free from error, and their actions from ill successe, which manie times is not so properly the fruite of mans infirmitie, as a punishment of God for presumptuous sinne, as may appeare by the examples already alledged.

CHAP. XIX.

At what time publicke and Generall Counfelles beganne to bee holden: And who was the first Byshop or Pope that Celebrated a Counfel.

He Hebrewes and other Nations had an ancient custome, to hold Counfels, & to deliberate in them on such matters as they haddé to deale withall. And by the Testimony of Josephus, it appeareth that Moyses and Josuah, assembling the people oftentimes together, were likewise accustomed so to do.

The like vse was among the Egyptians and Persians, according as Herodotus reporteth. So amongst the Apostles assembled in one place, when they receiued Matthias into the number of the cleauen, when they elected seuen deacons; when by the Authority of S. Peter and S. James, it was ordained, that the conuerted Gentiles should not bee charged with the burthen of Moyses Law. But only that they should abstaine from the foyle of Idols, Whoredome, strangled Meats, and from Blood. For, as then the Synod, as well of the Apostles, as of the Priests and Elders had beene assembled, as Saint Luke testifieth in the Actes of the Apostles, Writing there in the same manner.

Now, some of the Sect of the Pharisees, which had belceued, raised vp themselves, saying; that they ought to be circumcised, and commanded them to keep the Law of Moyses: whereupon, the Apostles and Elders met together, to take order in this businesse. So that heereby it is easie to iudge, from whence proceeded the Institution of holding Counfells.

The first Counfell that was celebrated in Rome, is saide to be when Cornelius was Byshop: wherein were assembled threescore Byshops, as many Priests, and many Deacons; and there the Nouatian Heresie was condemned.

We read also in Eusebius, that the Fathers assembled themselves two seuerall times in Antioche; the first, in the time of Dionisius; and the other, of Faelix, Popes, at the encountering of Paulus Samosatenus, Byshop of the sayde Cittie, who being a man of insupportable arrogancie, when he was first created Bishop, beganne to walke abroad in the Fieldes, accompanied with a great number of Soldiers, both before and behinde him, reading and speaking all the way with woonderfull insolence; thorough which audacious pride, Christian Religion grew into much contempt amongst manie.

I think (sayth Polydore Virgil) that our Byshops in these dayes, Learned of this Hereticke, the order of their pomps, and the traines which they leade with them. Do ye not see some of them, what Harquebushiers they haue marching before them, and what a crue of Swashi-bucklers follow them, horrible blasphemers of the name of God? And do ye not see the Bishops themselves, in stead of preaching to their Diocesians, seeke what meanes they may to prolong them in War and strifes? O times! O manners! We haue good occasion to praise God, who hath graciously prouided vs of so Learned, Venerable, Verruous, and Worthie an Arch-Bishop, as is my Lorde of Epimac; who like a good Prelate, and vigilant Pastor, administreth the spirituall foode of the soule, which is the word of God; and preacheth often in his Church, and so Diuinely, as all Learned people are raiused with admiration. God continue him in so holy and good an Office, and defend him from all incomberances.

Well, in the end, Paulus Samosatenus who denied two Natures to bee in Iesus Christ, and affirmed him to be man only, was condemned in this Counsell. But the.

Whence holding Counfells first proceeded.

The first Counsell at Rome.

Two Counfells holden at Antioche.

Paulus Samosatenus Bishop of Antioche.

The words of Polydore Virgil.

Paulus Samosatenus his heretical opinion.

The Authors charitable aduise.

Counfels amongst the Iewes and other Nations.

The Egyptians and Persians. Acts 1, 26. Acts 6, 3.

The conuerted Gentile, freed from the Lawe of Moyses.

Liberty granted for Christian religion and the first publicke General counsel

The Counsel at Constantinople.

The Counsel of Ephesus.

The Council of Chalcedon.

The 4. chiefe general counfels.

S. Gregories words of the foure Counfels.

The 5. Counsell at Constantinople.

the Romaine Emperors being (as then.) Maisters of all the World; were enemies to the Name of Christians: so that we must needs thinke, that those Counselles were then rather priuate, then publicke, vntill the time of Constantine, who (by Gods omnipotent permission) embraced the Holy Faith; and then permitted publicke discoursing, concerning the points of Christian Religion. So that by Commission from Constantine, the Counsell of Nice in Bythiniq; was held in the yeare, 324. and it was the first, and (before all other) solemnly celebrated, and in publicke, wherein 318. Byshops gaue their assistance, and (with common consent) declared Arius to be conuincd of Heresie.

Afterwards, in the time of Pope Damasus, the Counsell was holden at Constantinople, where Macedonius and Eudoxus, that denied the Holy-Ghost to be God, were both condemned. The Counsell of Ephesus, is saide to be held in the time of Celestine the first; and therein was condemned Nestorius, Byshop of Constantinople, who saide; That the blessed Virgin Marie was the Mother of Christ as man, and not as God.

The Council of Chalcedon, is reputed to be holden in the time of Leo the first, and there the Heresy of Eutichus, was examined. This man was an Abbot of Constantinople. & affirmed, that Iesus Christ after he had taken on him humane flesh, was not of two Natures, but consented to his Diuine Nature only. These were the foure Sacred Counfels, that augmented and encreased Christian Religion; and which S. Gregory reputed worthy to be receiued, saying; Euen as I confesse to haue receiued, and holde in reuerence the foure Bookes of Holy-Gospel, so do I these foure Counfels; I imbrace them with all my heart, and I will keepe them by most entire approbation, because the foundation of Faith is builded on them, as on a foure cornerd stone, and the rule of common life and action (howsoeuer it be) consisteth in them.

The fift Counsell was assembled at Constantinople, in the time of Pope Vigilius, and therein were debated and confuted, the impious errors of Theodorus, who maintained; That the Virgin Mary was deliuered of Christ, as man only, & not as God and man. Therefore in this Councell was concluded, that the Mother of Christ should be called THEOTOKOS, Mother of God. Constantine the Emperour, fourth of that name, caused the sixt Councell to be holden at Constantinople, at the humble entreaty of Pope Agathon, which was holden by 289. Byshops; and therein was reprov'd Mascharius Byshop of Antioche, who iudged one onelie will and operation to bee in Iesus Christ. Of this sixt Counsell, Beda discourseth verie amply, in the Booke which hee wrote of Times. Many other Councelles were held in sundry places, as are set down by Gratian in his Decretales, which I silently ouerpasse, because I would not bee tedious to the Reader.

10

20

30

40

50

CHAP. XX.

Heere ensueth summarily, that which was decreed in the Council of Nice, held by Constantine the Great; in the yeare, 325. to wit; what was to bee beleueed concerning the blessed Trinitie. As it appeareth in the Ecclesiastical History, the tenth Booke, and sixt Chapter.

WE beleue in God the Father Almighty, Creator of all things, as wel visible as inuisible. And in our Lord Iesus Christ, the only Sonne of God, borne and begotten of him: that is to say, of his proper substance, and therefore God of God, Light of Light, very God of verie God, borne, and not made of the same substance of the Father. By which Sonne, were all thinges made, as well in Heauen as in earth, and among vs men. Who also for the loue of vs men, and for our saluation, descended from the Heauens, and tooke humane flesh on him, and made himself man. And so he suffered death and passion, and afterward rose againe the thirde day. Afterward, he ascended vppe into Heauen; and finally shall come to iudge the liuing and the dead. We beleue also in the Holy-Ghost. And all such as say, that the saide Sonne was in any time when he was not, and was not before hee was born on earth, and that he was created

The 6. Counsell at Constantinople.

Beda on this sixt Counsell, in lib. de Temp.

The constant Faith of the Fathers assembled in the Counsell of Nice.

ted of nothing, or of any other substance whatsoeuer, then only of the Father; or, that hee is the Sonne of God, but Conuertible and mutable: the holye Catholicke and Apostolicke Church, doth excommunicate and accurse them.

CHAP. XXI.

That which was Concluded, Decreed, and Ordained, in the Counsell holden at Rome, in the year, 376. against Apollinarius, Concerning what ought to be beleued of the Sacred Trinity, contained in the Tripartite History.

Ecause, that after the Councell of Nice, such errors hapned, as some haue presumed to say, with a prophane and vnhalloved mouth, that the Holy-Ghost was made by the Sonne: we Curse and Excommunicate all such, as doo not confesse, and frelie preach the Holy-ghost to be of one selfesame substance and power with the Father and Sonne.

Likewise, we curffe such, as following the error of Sabellius, doo say; That the Father and the Sonne are both one, and the same thing.

We Curse Arrius and Eunomius, who by semblable impietie, albeit differing in words, do affirme the Son and the Holyghost to be creatures.

We Curse the Macedonians, who polluted from the Roote of Arrianisme, haue changed not the impietie, but the name.

We excommunicate Photinus, who renewing the Heresie of Ebion, confeseth our Lord Iesus Christ, to be but only borne of the Virgin Mary.

We excommunicate likewise all such, as confesse two Sonnes, one before the World, and the other after the incarnation of flesh of the Virgin.

We excommunicate all such; as for the reasonable soule, do affirme, that the word diuine, was conuerted into humain flesh.

If any one doo not confesse, that the Father hath euermore been, and the son, and the blessed Spirit, let him be excommunicated.

If any one do not say and confesse the Son to be truly borne of the Father, that is to say of the Diuine substance, let him be excommunicated.

If any one do not say and confesse the Sonne to bee very God, as the Father is very God, and that he can do all thinges, and knoweth all things, and that he is equal with the Father, let him be excommunicated.

If any one shall say, that the Son of God hauing humane flesh, when hee was on earth, was not at all in Heauen, nor with the Father, let him bee excommunicated.

If any one shall say, that the Sonne of God, God himselte, hath endured in his pation the paine of the Crosse, and not the flesh with the soule, whereby he was cloathed in the forme of a seruant, which hee tooke vppon him, as the holy Scripture sayeth: Let him bee excommunicated.

If any one do not say and confesse, that in the flesh which hee tooke on him, hee sitteth on the right hand of the Father, & wherewith also he shal com to iudge the liuing and the dead: let him bee excommunicated.

If any one do not say and confesse the Holyghost to bee truly and properly of the Father, euen as the Sonne of the Diuine substance, and the worde Diuine to bee God, let him bee excommunicated.

If any one doo not say and confesse, that the Holy-ghost can doe all thinges; and that he is in all things, as the Father and the Sonne, let him bee excommunicated.

If any one shall not say and confesse, the Father to haue done all by the Sonne and the Holy-Ghost, that is to say, all things visible and inuisible, let him bee excommunicated.

If any one shall not say and confesse, one selfesame Deity of the Father, of the Sonne, and of the Holy-Ghost, one selfesame Power, Diuinity, Vertue, and one selfesame Glory, Dominion, Empire; one selfesame will and veritie, let him be excommunicated.

If any one shall nor say and confesse, the three persons to bee true, of the Father;

Father, Son, & Holyghost.

The Son very God.

Denial of the Godhead.

The suffering of Christ.

The humanity of Christ.

The Holy-Ghost.

The power of the Holighost

The Deity of the 3. persons.

The Reason of this Counsels assembly at Rome.

Sabellius.

Arrius and Eunomius.

Photinus.

Two Sonnes.

The word diuine.

The equalitie of the three persons.

ther, of the Son, and of the Holy-ghost, equall, alwayes liuing, containing all things visible & inuisible, doing all thin-ges, iudging all things, Viuifying all things, creating al things, and fairing all things : Let him bee Excommunicated.

Adoration of the holighost.

If any one shall not say and confesse, that the Holy-ghost ought to bee Worshipped of all Creatures, euen as the Father and the Son: let him bee excommunicated.

Of despising
the holighost.

If any one doo thinke well of the Father, and of the Sonne, but neither be-leeueth, nor thinketh well of the Holy-Ghost, he is an Hereticke. For all He-retickes, which conceite not well of the Sonne and Holy-Ghost, are conuincd of incredulitie with the Iewes and Pagans.

CHAP. XXII.

The Confession of a Christian, to the Confutation of all Atheistes, Heretiques, &c.

Whosoever shall refuse to make this confession, is worthy to be excommunicated and accurfed.

Confesse in trueth of heart, purely and intirely; that Iesus Christ our Lord, is truly God and man; and that al his hea-uenly Doctrine, containeth such a firme and assured Veritie, as no one point thereof cannot bee decei-ued. Moreouer, that the holy Church is so assuredly grounded on the firme Rocke, that the Gates of hell can haue no power against it. That it is he, who is our mouth, whereby wee speake to the Father: Our eye, whereby wee see the Father: Our right hand, whereby we offer to the Father. The Glasse without staine or spotte, to giue vs knowledge of our pollutions. The Lauer or cleare Fountaine, to wash and make vs cleane.
And the infinite Treasure, to make satisffaction to all our Creditors. In whom, and by whome, the Diuine Iustice hath beene fully answered, for the sinnes of al them that haue beene, are, and shalbe to the consummation of the world.

Of the holic
Catholicke &
Apostolicke
Church.

Of Iesus Christ, and what he is to a Christian loule.

All my hope, refuge, health, life, and resurrection, is in the death of him. My merite is his mercie; and therefore, I beleeue and confesse his condemnation, to be my absolution; his crucifying, to bee my deliuerance; his descending into hel, my mounting vp to Heauen; his death,
my life; his obedience, our plenary satisfactions.

10 That by his intercessions, our Prayers are heard. That hee is our Protectour, and faithfull defender. And that he onlie beganne and perfected in vs, life truelie happie and euerlasting. That his blood is our Washing, whereby we are cleansed, purified, and made White. And that hee hath purchased for vs, Righte-ousnesse and life by his resurrection. And whosoever shall not do him this honour, 20 to beleue, that hee shall bee Iustified and Sanctified, by his Death, Worde, and Sacraments, let him for euer bee accurfed.

CHAP. XXIII.

30 A Summary and brieft Discourse against Atheists, Written upon occasion of the Authors Conference with an Atheist.

Onuersing one day with an Atheist, who vsed to haunt neere the place of my abyding, hee fully acquainted mee with his Wicked and 40 abhorrible opinions, such and the like as Epicurus, Democritus, and others had maintained; and whereof some in these Moderne times, being transported with vanity of spirit, are not ashamed to make bolde profession. Which beeing so vile, and without any foundation or reason, I forbear to declare them, saue onely some few in the end of the succeeding Chapter. For, they are woorse 50 (without comparison) then those of all the Heretiques, that haue beene since our Sauior Iesus Christ, euen to this instant.

The Authours whereof, were Iudas and Theudas Magitians. The Symonians, Menandrians, Ebionites, Cherinthians, Nycholattanes, Saturnians, Carpocratians, Gnosti-

Epicurus, Democritus, and other Atheists

The names of the Sects and Heresies, which have bin since the time of Iesus christ vntil this present.

Gnosticians, Valentiniens, Marcionites, Cleobians, Dorothians, Gorthemians, Masubertians, Encratites, Basilides, Cataphrizes, Arabes, Helchesaites, Novatians, Cuthares, Sabellians, Manicheans, Arrians, Pelagians, Helonitians, Hermogenians, Reputians, Quintillians, Colliridians, Priscillians, Hemerobaptists, Anachropomorphits, Chilliasts or Millenarians, Masseians, Dimocrites, Garastians, Paterons, Poore Men of Lyons, Arnoldists, Speronists, Fraticelles, Adamites, Orebiters, Taborites, Noetians, Hydroparastates, Artotyrites, Ptholemaits, Staroicques, Phibionites, Helionites, Heracleonites, Anticades, Perades, Phrygiens, Hierachites, Colarbasians, Docetes, Borborians, Zacheans, Naasarians, Phenyonitians, Sethrians, Caymians, Codians, Ophites, Seuerians, Paulianists, Catabaptists, Arbigeois, Archontiques, Hierarchites, Seclentians, Felicians, Nestorians, Jacobitians, Monothelitans. The Acephalick Sects of Barcotabas, Cerdon, Tatian, Redon, Apelles, Basilicus, Sirenius, Montanus, Theodorus, Paulus Samosatenuus, Ogdoades, Artemon, Natalis, Galien, Berillus, Nepos, Liberius, Macedoncus, Heluidius, Ethicianus, Hermogenes, Epiphanes, Pontinus, Sincrus, Prepon, Pithon, Cleobulus, Praxeas, Asclepiodotus, Hermophilus, Apolonides, Themison, Theodotus, Florinus, Blastus, Isidorus, Secundus, Portitus, Bardesianus, Symmachus, Theodotion, Pope Ione, Lucius, Apolinarius, Acatius, Donatus, Olimpius, Adimantius, Alogios, Bertoldus, Balsardus the Phylosopher, Americke, Guillaume of Holy Lone, Hermand, Durcine, Quintinists, Anabaptists, Seuerists, Campanistes, and an infinite number more, which are amply declared in the Holye Councils, Canons, and Decretales, and in the Ecclesiasticall History of Eusebius the Casarian, Platina, Saint Augustin, and others.

Mahomet's horrible Sect beyond all the other Hereticke.

But the verie greatest Sect, the vilest and most Wicked of all, is that of the false seducing Prophet, which hath suborned, wasted, and lost more then halfe the world. He took his Alchoran, Arsurcan, Law, Collections, and Preceptes, out of the Heresies of all the Hereticke before named; but most principaly aided himselfe with the Olde and Newe Testaments, and some Visions and Interpretations, which he said were declared to him by the Aungell Gabriell. And yet this Wretch, as wicked as he was, did neuer-theless confesse, that there was one only God, and that Iesus Christ was his Sonne, his Soule, Image, Spirite, and Wisedome of him. That he was borne of the Virgin Mary, and was a great Prophet; but saide himselfe to bee a much more greater Prophet then Iesus Christ, and that himselfe was the last; and after him, no other was to be expected. For he saide; that God had more fully reuealed his secrets to him, then to any other Prophet that had beene before him; and that he hadde giuen him an estate, and a rule more perfect, then that of Iesus. Confessing withall, that before hee was sent of God, and had receiued the reuelation of his rule: euerie one liued, according to that of Iesus Christ, and thereby was saued, and such also should be saued, as liued thereafter. But yet they could not be made so perfect, as by keeping that order appointed to him.

To confute the errors of this false Prophet, there were many Apologetical and defensiu Bookes made, by sundry great personages, as by Iohannes Cantacuzenus the Constantinople Emperour, Theodorus Bibliander, Lodouicus Valentinus, Nicholais de Cusa, Cardinall; Bartholomeus Picenus, Aeneas Syluius, who was Pope Pius, Hierom de Saunardota, Phillip Melancthon, and many others: who wrote all so well, and with such vehemency, against this Diabolicall Sect, full of Lucianist fables and folly, that they confuted them, as matters most enormous and detestable, in hauing no foundation, Reason, testimony, neither any true miracles whatsoever. And yet the saide Mahomet, and all the other Hereticke together, continued not a jot of their opinion; in such a foolish and freneticall manner; as at any time to deny one onely God, albeit they failed wickedly, in their opinions & particular Sectes. And this Atheist denyed vnto mee, that there was any God at all, demanding further, what I could obiekt against his opinion; in approouing the contrary? Whereupon I answered, that I would alledge but one Author only, to conuince both him, and all other of his wicked minde.

Then, I produced Hermes Trismegistus, the Prince of ancient Diuinity, who had beene three times, the most great King, Sacrificer, and Phylosopher, that euer was. And these are his verie wordes Mahomet confessed one onely GOD, which the Atheist will not do.

Mahomet's abusing the peopie with most blasphemous Lies.

Books writte against Mahomet's errors

No Sect so wicked as Atheists are.

Herm. Trismegistus, High-priest & King of Egypt.

Ecc which which follow, wherewith I made my reply to the Atheist.

CHAP. XXIII.

An Excellent Discourse, out of Hermes Trismegistus, approving what God

Hermes Trismegistus in his Booke of the power of god, and greatnes of his wisdom Dial. 2.

OD, is the existent cause of all things, helping generally, and in perticuler: for there is not any thing, vnto which a being is permitted, but of him, and in him, it obtayneth his life, sourse, and Originall. And that which is much more, there is not anie thing in this world, which dooth not receiue his byrth and production from that which was made and created by him: because there is not any thing that can take or haue his being from that which is nothing, considering, that that which is nothing, hath not any Nature, whereby it could be made any thing. God is the Thought, Spirit, and Light, it is conuenient to honour him by these two names, to wit; Goodnesse and Paternitie, which are proper to him, without a competitor in any manner whatsoever: As being alwayes immutable, yet changing all things; inuisible, yet seeing all things; immortal, without place, and without end; inseperable, ineffable, inscrutable, inestimable; immoouable, yet moouing all things; and woorthy of all Honour and Reuerence.

Goodnesse & Father-hood.

God is not to be apprehended by mans vnderstanding, in regarde of his substance.

Hee is the supream good, and none other, who cannot be knowne or apprehended by humane sence, as concerning his substance, because hee is a power not limited.

Not were we created of him, but on-ly to this intent, to beholde the discourse of the Starres, which are his most excellent, Magnificent, and Soueraigne workes, with the discourse of Nature, the example and imitation of goodnesse. Finally, the knowledge of his diuine power & Maiesty, of which knowledge he hath giuen a part and portion, to know, iudge, and discerne betweene good and euill.

But principally, to search the high and meruailous Artefice of the chiefe good; the which, with all other thinges, were made by his word Iesus Christ: by whom he hath created, constituted, and ordayned euery thing in his order and degree, by his only will. And that is nothing else, but an only infinite and incomprehensible goodnes, which is such, as it can appertaine to none but to him onely. And therefore, we must surpasse the Celestiall bodies, the Hierarchies of Angelles, and the circuite and discourse of the Starres, to attaine to the knowledge of him. For, this knowledge is insuperable, inuincible, and infinite, without any limitation: not hauing (as concerning himselfe) any beginning, whereas to humain knowledge there is allowed some beginning.

Iesus Christ, the worde of the Father. Dial. 4.

Hee containeth all, in his inuestigable Treasures and secrets, and is the sole and only Father of all thinges, from whome proceeded one onely Sonne, who gaue himselfe so strongly to be vnderstood by vs, as it is a verie easie matter to touche him. He assigned to the Sea his bornes and Limits, and gaue commaund that it should passe no further: he apointed the earth his full waight, and made his containdure in the midst of the heauens. If then it bee so, that an Image or painting cannot be done, without the industrie of the Image maker or Painter, cau we imagine, that so great and woonderfull a building as the worlde is, could possibly be made without a workmā? O man too much blinded! O man too wicked and miserable! O man, buried in the bottom lesse darknesse of ignorance, to think the contrary! Looke to thy selfe well, when thou seekest to rob the workeman of his worke: and inuoke the Lord incessantly, and commend him with singularity, and with a name that can bee attributed vnto none, but him only; holding him continually, to bee the proper and Naturall Father of all thinges, as well visible as inuisible. And that is the onely eternall God, then which most excellent, incompareable, and best of all Names, not anie creature can deuise any other to giue him. He is entirely all that I am, al that I do, all that I thinke, and is all in all; and there is not any thing, but it commeth from him, neither any thing created or increate, but he is the same.

God is the on-ly Father of all things. Dial. 5.

An inuectiue against Atheists, and their miserable condition

He is the Vnderstanding, vnderstanding all

The essential parts and powers in God.

Dial. 6.

The intire & perfect parts of God.

Dial. 8.

Of the knowledge of God Dial. 9.

Of knowing and vnderstanding God Dial. 10.

No presuming or comparing with God.

The prooffe of one onely true God. Dial. 11.

all things; the eternall Father, building all things; the onely God, woorking all things; the Soueraigne good, creating all goodnesse; the most pure and entire cause of euery matter; Ayre of the ayre, Soule of the soul thought of the thought; and finally God. By whom all things moue themselfes, & in whom, no choise can be made, but of all goodnesse. For about his essence, is a super-eminency of all goodnesse, more pure, cleare, and bright shining; then either can be spoken or expressed. And the entirist and perfectest parts of God, are Beauty and Bounty; which are his inseperable Kinamen; and beloued about all other things. For in him is such a Beauty, as admitteth no eomparison; and such a Bounty as alloweth no imitation: whereby the Worlde proceeded of him; and consisteth in him: Man made in the Worlde, and to command the Worlde. For, God is the beginning of all things, and containeth & ordaineth euery one in his order & proportion. Hee that knoweth him, not only is fulfilled with all blessednesse, but also vnderstandeth and comprehendeth all Diuine knowledges, hardly like to any other. The knowledge of him, is nothing else but a Diuine silence, and an attentive application of all the senses. He that vnderstandeth him, can think on nothing else: and he that heareth him, can heare no other thing.

No Lawe admitteth any man of this World, so much power, as to contemplate the Beautie & Excellency of God, except he be first regenerated, reformed, and transubstantiated into him. He doth all that can bee doone, either present, or heereafter to bee spoken or thought on. His action is a power inuincible, and not equiparable, and that is the reason, that no one ought for to attempt or presume with him, or he to be compared with any other, be he diuine or humaint, eyther in heauen or on earth.

Now, to approoue that this is the power of one onely true God, is evidently enough declared: for there is likewise but one World, one Sunne, one Moone, & but one Diuinity. And as concerning God, we beleue vndoubtedly, that there can be but one, and he onely, that made each thing into many. Dooft thou thinke that it should be a matter difficult or Laborious, for God to make life, soule, immortality, and changes of times? Why, thou thy selfe can do as much, & as great things. Thou Seeft, thou Hearst, thou Smellest, thou Tasteit, thou Touchest; thou speakest, thou goest, thou breathest, and thou vnderstandest without anie other then thy selfe; for all these things are performed by thy selfe. And euen as a man knew not how to liue, but by life; in like manner, God could not liue, without producing all things continually, and inspiring life into them. Vnderstand then, that if thou wilt not make thy selfe equall to God; nor appeare like vnto him; thou shalt neuer comprehend or vnderstande him: considering, that the like is euer more knowne by the like.

Extend thy selfe then into an infinite greatnesse; go out of this body, surpass all times, be eternity, and so finally thou shalt know God. Exalt thy selfe more high then all highnesse; be throw al the parts of the worlde; in Heauen; on the earth, in the Sea; euen from the beginning, to this present. Dwell out of the Vessell of this bodie; and thinkest thou then that any thing can perish by death? Comprehend all these things together; to know all places, all times, all wasgit, all lightnesse, all qualities and quantities; and then at length thou shalt vnderstand what God is. For, the verie greatest miserie that can happen to any man, is not to knowe him; and yet hee made all his workes, to the end that he might be known by them.

He hath not about him, either greatnesse, place, qualitie, Figure; Nouriture: because he is all these, and being all, hath all these about him, and euerie where else.

This is the diuine word Iesus Christ, therefore honor and worshippe him: and this Honour and Adoration consisteth onely, in being no way wicked; but flying from sinne, with all thy might & vertue. It is he that made regeneration, & tooke on him our humanity, to redeeme vs from the Captiuitie of darkenesse, and seruitude of Sathan: and he will be magnified and praised in Silence, that is to say; with the Heart, and Vnderstanding. Likewise, hee will bee called GOD, in regarde of his Power; Maker, by reason of his Workes; and finally Father, for the Loue of his Goodnesse, which appertanith onely to him.

Ecc 2

If

What wonderful things are done by man.

This is vnderstood by knowing GOD rightly.

Necessarie comprehensions for him that knoweth not God.

Dial. 13: The word diuine, Iesus Christ.

Dial. 13:

Dial. 14:

A familiar
Comparison.

If it be lawfull for a Painter, to figure so many and diuers things; as Heauens, Earth, Seas, Men, Beasts, Trees, and all other things that haue no life; shall we bee so insolent to say, that the power of dooing all these, must bee denied to one onely God? O man too foolish, and vnprouided of vnderstanding! O blindfold man, and without any Diuine knowledg, that darest belecue, thinke, or speake, to the contrary.

Lac. in Institut.
Diuin. l. 1. cap. 5

Sybilla Erythrea could say; That there was onely God increate, and exceeding all Creatures. He is the only Soueraigne that made the Heauens, and diuided the Lights; that is only thorow all Worlds, and before all Worlds; that gaue Life, Generation and Nature vnto all things. Plato, in his Booke called Timeus, sayth; The Worlde is governed by the power and prouidence of one only God, the power and Maieſty of whom is so great, that in regard of this inestimable might, no man can conceiue him in his vnderstanding, neither expresse him by words.

Plat. in lib. Tim.

Lac. in l. 4. c. 29.

Of the father
and the son.

This Soueraigne and only God, cannot be adored, but by the meanes of his only Sonne: and whosoever thinketh to worship the Father onely, and giue no honour to the Sonne, hee can no way adore the Father. But he that receyueth the Sonne, and beareth his name, he truly honoureth the Father with the Sonne, because the Sonne is the Ambassadour, Messenger, and Priest to the Soueraigne father. He is the gate of the most great temple; the Way of Light, the Conductor to saluation, and the entrance into Life. The word Diuine, Luminous, and Celestiall: Sonne of the Almighty, Eternall and liuing God. King of al worlds, visible and inuisible; the wisdom of the Father; Splendour of his Glory and Eternall Light; Image of his substance; Prince and Captaine of Peace & Faith; Principall Shepheard; his best beloued Sonne, the Vapour of his Vertue; pure emanation or sending forth of his brightness; the spotlesse mirrour of his Maieſty, Goodnesse and Eternity; and the beginning of his creature.

The names & Titles of our Lorde Iesus
Christ.

The seuerall applications of Christ to man.

He is our Sanctification, Propitiation, Wisdom, Iustice, Satisfaction, & Redemption: Maister of our Requestes, our Aduocate and Mediator, in whome repositeth all the Spirits of GOD; and in whome, are hidden all the Treasures of Wisdom and Knowledge. Hee was made the Oblation and Sacrifice of a sweete smelling sauour, our ample ransom, sufficient price, the onely branch and Diuine roote. The sole way of life, the Councell of the Eternall, the Doore of the Sheepfold, and the good Shepheard; the true Cælestiall Breade, and Treasury of felicity. One totall, consisting of all Vertues and Powers, the author of regeneration, Lorde of Glorie, King of Kings, Doctor of righteousness, the faithfull witness of trueth, trueth it selfe, and the Originall of Life and Concorde. He is the Prince and Consummator of Faith, the Apostle of our Confession, the Angell of great Councell, the Saluation and Sauour of the World.

10

20

30

40

50

In brieſe, hee is the Sonne of God, who by the mouth of the most wise King Salomon (full of the Diuine spirite) hath saide; God hath begotten mee in the beginning of his wayes and workes, before the worlds. He begot me at the beginning, before there was any earth made by him, and before he ordained the Seas and Deepes. Before that the Riuers issued forth of their Springs, and before the Mountaines were made, hee begot mee. God made Regions and Lands habitable vnder Heauen: when he appointed the Heauens, I was with him; and when hee deuided his seat: when he made the mighty Clouds ouer the Winds, when he placed the high hilles vnder Heauen; and when he laide the strong foundations of the earth, I was with him in the disposing of all.

I was he, in whom he delighted him selfe, and euery day I reioyced my selfe before his face, when hee tooke pleasure to see the worlde created and perfected. And for this cause, Trismegistus calleth him, The Workeman of God. And Sybilla calleth him, the Counsellor, who was filled by God the Father with so great Wisdom and Vertue, that hee used his Counsell and power, in creating the world. S. Augustine in his tenth Booke of the Cittie of God, saith; That he found in the Books of Plato, that Ante omnia tempora, & supra omnia tempora, incommutabiliter manet unigenitus filius tuus coeternus tibi: Et quia de plenitudine eius accipiunt, ut beati sint, & participatione manentis in se sapientia renouantur, ut sapientes sint.

Lac. in l. 4. Ca. 6

Concerning
the words of King Salomon.

Hermes Trismegistus & Sybilla

Aug. in lib. 10. de Ciu. Dei.

Be-

The Authors words to the Atheist.

The Atheists ydle Allegations.

Good mens misery & bad mens prosperous.

Old & young all one to Death.

Providence not to any purpose.

No Hell.

No humane society, or love of our Neighbour.

Lac. Firm. in lib 3. Cap. 16. et in lib. 7. Cap. 5.

Behoide now, what aunswere I haue made thee, to make thee vnderstand what God is. And if thou wouldst haue anie more great, certaine, and euident Testimonies, looke into the holye Scriptures, and read there what is spoken by the Patriarkes, Prophets, and Apostles; but more especially Saint Augustine, in his Booke of the City of God. As for the Idle Disputes which thou hast hadde with me, alledging and saying: What profite receiued God by the making of man for himselfe? Because thou beholdest, that to a good man there doth dayly happen aduersities, Pouerties, labors, banishment, and losse of friends. On the contrarie also, thou seest wicked men to be very happy, raised to honours, and encreasing in goods. Thou seest the innocent in daunger, and the vicious to passe unpunished. That men louing Religion and Piety, are afflicted. And death, hauing no regarde to the condition of men, or respecting their ages, exerciseth his crueltie vpon many, before they can arriue at the state of many yeares, and euen the most bolde and stoutest spirits, do die soonest, or are foiled in battailes. That Temples are burned by Thunder and Lightnings; & many things are doone otherwise then they ought to be done. That providence auayleth not any thing, in the Creation, and generation of creatures. That the paines of hell are not to bee feared, because there is no hell at all, and that all soules do die with their bodies. That pleasure and Voluptuousnes is the chiefest happinesse. That there ought not to be any humane society, but euery man to haue care of his perticuler profit. And not to loue his Neighbour, but for his own aduantage. With many other things which thou alledgest, that are the very same disputes of Epicurus, Democritus, Lucian, and Dicearchus.

In these cases therefore, I wil send thee for further resolution, to Lanctantius Firmianus, who hath conuincd al their sottish errors. So that, such as haue seene what he hath written, and they that haue expounded the Psalme, Dixit insipiens in corde suo, non est Deus, woulde neuer fall into such diseases, so farre from sence and vnderstanding, as thy freneticall Follye and madnesse reacheth vnto. Vnder-

10

20

30

40

50

stand but what the Wiseman sayth; That such as are great searchers into the Majesty eternal, shalbe confounded with glory. Attempt not then such things as are hidden with God: but referue plaine sight vnto their due times and seasons. Beleeue Salomon, who saith: We are not to say, what is this, what is that, and to what end. For all things are created vnto their seueral uses.

Seeke not after things that are too high for thee, neither enquire after matters that are too strong for thee, but euermore thinke on those things which God hath commaunded thee, and remember him in sobriety and simplicity of heart. Vnderstand what Saint Paul saith, O the deepnesse of the Riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God; how vnsearcheable are his iudgements, and his wayes incomprehensible, past finding out?

Therefore it behoueth vs, not vnwisely to enterprize impossible things; but with all our vertue and vnderstanding, to wonder at, and to praise the workes Diuine. For wee are able to speake by experience, that such as haue studied most, & practised how to behold the Sunne more then neede required, saw no such things as they stroue to see; but spoyled their owne sight; and were drawne into darknesse. And oftentimes, when a man (by contention and folly) struieth to seek for that which is hidden in the earth, or to know the foundation thereof; & whereupon it dependeth, or things about in Heauen, and out of this vniuersal world, not onely hee cannot finde what hee seeketh for, but filleth his owne soule full of troubles and darknesse; such is the infirmity of the spirit. For we know wel what Saint Paul saith, by good admonishment. If any man imagineth himself to know something, he hath not yet learned what appertaineth to knowledge. Let vs then not seek so farre into things, which we are not possible to attaine vnto: but let vs be content with that which we haue receiued; and, according to our best power, blesse the Lorde, his dearely beloued Sonne Iesus Christ, and the Holyghost, vnto whome equally, belongeth all power, might, maiesty, and dominion, for euer and euer.

Theodoret the Syrian Bishop, in his Sermons of life eternall, and the Diuine prouidence.

Rom. 11, 33.

Gazing on the bright sun doth but dazle the sight.

Rom. 11, 19.

CHAP. XXV.

The Atheist further confuted, by allegation of Magicall Sciences; because he denied, that there were any such Sciences, or any Devils or Spirits.

Saint Augustine, in his one and twentieth Book of the Citie of God, saith, There is no contradiction of Magicall Arts, except we will gainsay the Scriptures; and they are spoken of in many places of the Bible; namely, that the first, second, and third signe, which Moyses did performe, the Magitians or Sorcerers of Pharaoh, did accomplish the same. And when (afterward) they could not attain to the performance of other great signes and myracles, then they could say; This is the finger of God, in the power whereof those things are doone. Read the twenty eight Chapter of the first Booke of Samuell, howe King Saule went to Edor or Endor, to see a Woman that had a Phitonicall spirite, who raised vp the likenesse of the Prophet Samuell, that had long time bin dead, & the spirit saide vnto him: After to morrow, the Philistims shal giue thee Battell, thou shalt loose the day; and both thou and all thy Children shal dye, only Lame Mephiboseth reserved, and this fell out to be true.

In the eighteenth Chapter of Deutonomy it is sayde; When thou shalt come into the Land which the Lorde thy GOD giueth thee, thou shalt not learne to doo after the abominations of those Nations. Let none be found among ye, that maketh his Sonne or his Daughter to go thorough the Fire, or useth Witch-craft; or is a regarder of times, or a marker of the Flying of Birds, or a Sorcerer, or a Charmer, or a man that asketh Councel of familiar Spirites, or a Diuiner, that demaundeth aduise of the dead. For all these thinges, and they that do them, are abomination to the Lord: And because of these abominations, the Lord thy God doth cast them out before thy Face. See in the Actes of the Apostles, Symon Magus, and what hee did by Art Magicke; together

Aug. de Ciu. dei lib. 21. cap. 6.

Exo. 7, 10, 11.

Exod. 8, 19. 1. Sam. 28, 8. Saule consulted with a Witche, whē God had refused him.

Deut. 18, 9, 10. The abominations of the Gentiles to be auoyded.

Acts 8, c. Symon Magus.

with the Chamberlaine, which gayned his Maisters life by Magicke.

We finde also in the Ecclesiastical historie, Written by Eusebius the Casarian, how a man named Manes, an Hereticke, mounted himselfe vp into the Ayre, before a great number of people, flying quite out of their sight. In the same Historie, we shall also see, that the Emperours Maxentius, Maximinus, & others, vsed Magicall Arts, and had no Gouvernours, Captaines, or Officers, but such as were entrusted therein: nor woulde they do any good, or giue anie advancement, but to them that vnderstood those Sciences.

In the fift Booke of Lactantius Firmianus, in his Diuine Institutions, he speaketh of the God Apollonius, whome the Emperour Domitian should haue pnt to death: but in the presence of the said emperor and al his assistants, he made himselfe inuisible, so that no one knew what was become of him.

Lactantius Disputing against Democritus, Epicurus, and Dicaearchus, who sayd, that the soule was mortall, plainly telleth them; That they durst not abide in the presence of Magitians, who by charmes and Enchantments, called and made deceased soules to come out of Hell, and shewed them to bee seene before the eyes of men, speaking and foretelling of things to come.

Wee reade in the Historie of Ioseph, that it is saide to his Bretheren, You haue taken and stolne the drinking Cup, wherein my Lord is wont to performe his Auguries and Diuinations.

In Platina, who Wrote the Liues of the Popes, wee may see; that Gilbert (who was Named Pope Syluester the second) a Religious man, in the Monastrie of Saint Benoist de Fleury, neere Orleans, & had bin School maister vnto the Emperour Otho; Robert King of France, and to Lotharius, Arch-Bishop of Sens, saide himselfe; that because (by his Councell and Magicke) hee gaue his soule to the Deuill, hee obtained the Papacy. For which, he was afterward verie sorrie and penitent; and confessed generally & publickely, the great sinne and offence which he had committed, Platina and others do likewise testify, that Ioan the Papeesse, obtained the Romaine primacy by Magick, which she had long time studied at Manes the hereticke. Eusebius in his Ecclesiastical History. The Emperours Maxentius & Maximinus.

Lact. Firm. in Lib. 5. cap. 3. de Institut. Diuin. The God Apollonius.

Lact. Firm. in lib 7. cap. 13. Democritus, Epicurus, Dicaearchus.

The bretheren of Ioseph accused. Gen. 44. 5.

Plat. in Vit. Pa. Of Pope Syluester the 2. that gaue his soul to the diuel to be pope Ioane the Papeesse got the Primacie of Rome by Magicall Arts.

at Athens. Comming thence to Rome, she read there publikely; and disputed against all Commers; not any one being found equall in knowledge to her. So that after the death of Pope Leo, by consent and voyce of all the Cleargy: she was elected in the Papacy, not knowing that she was a woman. The Seat she held two yeares, one month, and foure daies, euen vntill shee fell in trauaile of child publikely, in going to the Church of Laterane; in which trauaile she dyed, being an English Woman by birth.

The death of the Papasse Ione.

Aug. in lib. 9. de Ciuil. Dei.

Apuleius, Labeo, Varro, Porphyrius, &c.

Lares, Lemures, Manes, Goblins, &c.

Incubus and Succubus.

Lactan Firm. in Lib. 2. de Diuina Iustit. Cap. 15.

Marcus Varro.

Augustine, at his being in Italy.

Circes metamorphosed the friends of Vlisses.

Saint Augustine, in his Celestiall Citie, writing against Apuleius, who wrote a Book of the Demon of Socrates, that had a Deuill, which told him whatsoever hee should doe: sheweth by great disputation (as well against the saide Apuleius, Labeo, Varro, Porphyrius, as others) wonderfull things of those cursed and forbidden Sciences, discoursing of them more then any other matter, and in a great number of Chapters. He saith, that he himselfe hath seene some, speaking in all kinds and manner of deuils, good and bad, and the places where they make their abiding: as also such as haunt among men, which were called Lares and Lemures, beeing inuisible Deuils; whom they tearmed priuate Gods, and Manes, Goblins and Spirits. The euill Angels they named Syluani and Fauni, otherwise tearmed Incubus, and Succubus. Incubus is the Man deuill, & Succubus the woman; by whom they accomplish their wil with women. The deuils called Dufians haue done the like. Lactantius, in the second Book of his Diuine Institutions, discourseth largelie on this matter, as well concerning Deuils, as the Magicall Arts.

Marcus Varro speaketh meruailous things, of the transformation of Men, who made themselues to be Wolues; and he speaketh of one that continued so ten yeares, and yet afterward returned to his shape againe. And Saint Augustine saith, that he being in Italy, heard that there were certaine Women, who in giuing impoysoned Cheese to Men: conuerted them into Mares, and afterward they came to be men againe, and lost no vse of their reason. Circes also transformed the companions of Vlisses into Swine, by a certaine kind of drink which she gaue them. Yet Saint Augustine saith, that these are but illusions, and it appeareth to such as are transformed, that they are in a Dreame. Neuerthelesse, the Deuils doe carry the deceit in such manner: according as he speaketh of one Prestantius, who dreamed that he was in great paine and torments, by carying victuals to the camp of his Enemies. And albeit he was all this while in his bed; yet hee found it truly irkesome, and very offensiue to him.

Aug. in Lib. 11. de Ciuil. Dei.

10

20

30

40

50

Hee that wrote the manner of the Turks liuing, a man of great knowledge and experience, & who remained more then twenty yeares Prisoner in their hands, saith: that the very greatest part of their religious men, are Enchanters and Magitians. Moreouer, that there was one in his time, who in all hidden and concealed matters, could giue a true and certaine iudgement, especiallie of any thing lost, or stolne: by meanes whereof, all the Theeues in the Countrey were grieuouly punished, which caused, that no Theefe durst come nere the place where hee dwelt. And that which is most to be marueild at; before such as came vnto him, could declare the occasion of their iourney: himselfe would intirely tell them the truth, of whatsoever they were to demand. And to the end, that they may the sooner draw the people to their false Faith, by Miracles, Prodigies, Illusions, & lyes: they make Sathan the Deuill to appear in the shape of a man, and raise vp dead bodies, which they onely see to moue, but liue not. They can likewise cure all kinds of diseases, and reueale the secrets of mens harts, as also places where any treasures lye hidden; for the Authour speaketh in these very wordes. Videbis mortuos resuscitare, omnis generis morbos currari, secreta cordium reuelari, & abscondita à seculo Thefaurorū loca reperiri.

The Authour of the Turkes liues, in his 18 Chapter.

Handwritten note

A cunning Magitian in Turkey.

Deceits and illusions of the Turkish Enchanters.

The ancient Greekes and Latines, what strange tales are recorded by them:

All the Histories and Bookes of the Ancient Greekes and Latines, are full of such as haue vsed Magicall Arts. As of the Serpent that followed Æsculapius: The Gods which Æneas brought with him from Troy: The Virgine that brought a Sieve full of Water to the Temple of Vesta, without spilling one drop: The great Waxe Taper of the Goddesse Venus, whereof Saint Augustine speaketh, that it could not be extinguish-Trithemius and Himbaldus two ancient Historians.

Pharamond the first King of France.

Numa Pompilius, his Books burned.

The Law of the twelue Tables.

All kindes of Magick haue before bene declared.

Apuleius accused of sorcery

In Code Lib. 9. Cap. 13.

Magicke Arts vterly prohibited.

tinguished. The Sorceries of Medea, and an infinite number more, which are to be found in Trithemius and Himbaldus, two very auncient Historiographers. They also record, that before Pharamond, and the fortie Kinges and two Dukes, which raigned before him, and before the Kinges of France receiued the holy Charracter of Baptisme: there were many that vsed, and made profession of those Sciences, and especiallie the King named Basan. Yet well we know, that such thinges haue euer more bin forbidden, vpon paine of corporall punishment.

We read, that the Bookes of Numa Pompilius were burned (after they had bene found in a vaulted Caue in his Sepulcher) by the counsell and commaund of the Romaine Senate. And by the Law of the twelue Tables, hee that vsed this Art had bodily punishment. According as we finde in the Chronicles of France, that the Count of Fouex was put to death, for hauing made a compact and couenant with deuils. So we may yet daily behold witches and Sorcerers punished, who haue any way cōpromitted with Spirits: for euery Sunday they are proclaimed and accursed, and all such, as ad-here vnto them. And not onely such as beleue in Magicke; but also in the Sciences thereon depedding, whercof we haue already spoken sufficiently. Apuleius, who was accused before the Christian Princes, for vsing those Sciences: durst not defend them, albeit he saide, and wrote more then any other. In the Code of the ninth Booke, & thirteenth Chapter, you shall finde, that Ars Mathematica damnabilis & interdicta est omnimodo, & que eorum scientia punienda, & seuerissimis merito legibus vindicanda est. The sacred Scriptures, the Church, Canons, and Decrees, doe forbid the vse thereof on paine of damnation; although there should be any truth therein, because the Lord himselfe hath prohibited it.

I haue seene and heard by a number of wise men, who haue assured me, that they haue seene very strange and admirable thinges, which would be tedious heere to rehearse. That by a certaine number of daies, a man may obtaine so many Spirits, and haue them all made subiect to him; by the vertue of high, Diuine, and Celestiall Names, in performing the great worke. The foure great Princes, which gouerne ouer the nine Princes, and sixty sixe thousand Legions of Spirits, that obey according to their Charracters, and promises made vnto them, wherein are vsed great Ceremonies, Homages, presents, Idolatries, and things most enorme and detestable, which are not to be written, and which a faithfull mind, that hath placed his hope among the heauenly Inhabitants; will hold all such foolish censures in horror and detestation. But all that I haue hitherto spoken, is to no other end; but to exclude the sottishnesse of idle-headed Atheists, in denying and gaine-saying, that there are not any Deuils.

And Lactantius Firmianus, speaking against them, saith. Seeing that alreadie such people are lost, in hauing no beleefe: I would counsell them to learn those Sciences, whereby they may attaine to haue some Spirits familiar with them. And hauing gotten them, according to such rules as will be giuen them: they shall know by them, that there is a God, to whom they obey, and doe tremble when his holy name is vttered. Yea, they will say, affirme and beare witnesse, that if they will not be obedient to the Lord of might: they shall be damned with them, for God is the onely true and great God.

CHAP. XXVI.

A briefe description of the Table of Apelles, the most excellent Painter of the World in his time: which Table made a liuelie representation of humaine life.

APELLES, the admired Painter, ingeniously drew a Picture, concerning the life of man and the abuse of drunkenesse. Whereby this man of incomparable skill plainly declared, that his Soule was no lesse exercised in Philosophy, then his hand in painting. In this Table, he liuely portrayed, and presented to all beholders, the

The great worke in Magicke.

The ceremonies in Magicke.

The reason of inserting this Chapter.

Lac. Firm. in lib 7. cap. 13.

The deformity of drunkenesse.

A faire Garden and an Arbour.

The entrance into the Garden, on the right hand.

Another little entrance on the left hand.

Preparation before the first gate.

Sobriety the Mistres, and her waiting-Maides.

Of Sports & pastimes.

Their order after Refection, in such as were guests.

the whole estate of humain life. In the first place he Painted a Garden, with a very pleasant Arbour in it, which was embellished with Hearbes and Floures of all sorts, that might be thought able to yeilde delectation, to such as should enter into this Garden; as well in regard of their beauty and appearance, as for their fruites and pleasing saour. At the entrance into this Garden or Orchard, there was a great Gate figured on the right hand, the way and passage whereof was very delightful, & much frequented: for thereby resorted thither (from many other by-pathes) all sorts of people, young and old. On the other side, beeing the left hand, there was another little doore, very strait, & narrow to passe in and out at, which had a sharpe and difficult way thereto, all covered with Bushes, Brambles, and Thornes, and that way seemed very little frequented. Before the first gate, there were goodly Tents erected, with beautifull Seates and Lodgings, fit for royall entertainment: and there stood also faire Tables, ready furnished with all Viands necessary for the life of man, disposed in very good order, and all commers sate presently downe, banqueting together very iocundlie.

The Hostes or Mistres of the place, named her selfe Sobriety, who had all her Chamber-maids about her, waiting on the Table very honestly, with all diligence and exceeding good grace. One of them tearmed her selfe Chearefulness; another Modesty; and the third Honesty. They had also the Graces (their Sisters) with them in this place of pleasure, where Sobriety pleased to liue with her Household. Some gaue themselues to Wrestling; Others delighted in other honest pastimes; without any debate or discontentment. Some also conferred together; and others wore awaie the time, in playing vpon muscalle Instruments, while others sung sweet and honest songs to them.

In breefe, they had all seemely pastimes, both to exercise and recreate themselues, before and after their repasts, according as was thought requisite for the support of health. After they had honestlie taken their refecti-on, one part of them retired (very merrily, and in good order) home to their houses and affaires; after they had first thanked, and taken leaue of their Lady Sobriety. But the rest that remained being a faire greater number then they that returned, not contented with this hauing receiued good fare, and spending the time so much as was thought requisite: would needes passe on further, and entred into the Garden at the great Gate, without making any account of Sobriety their first Hostesse, or yeilding her any thankfull requitall.

At the entrance of the Arbour, there sate a Woman, looking euery where about her, she being very grosse and fat: her Cheekes swolne and puffed vp; her Lippes great and red, and her Face like a flat platter: and shewing her selfe very seruiceable, she called to the troope of people, making them courteous signes with her head, and shewing them (with both her hands) the doores open entrance.

This Woman was called Gurmandise, or Gluttony. In the midst of the Arbour sate another Woman, in Garments like a Queen: but she was drunk, yet she gouerned there, and was chiefe Mistresse of the Lodging. She had a Crown of young Vine sprouts on hir head, and held a great Cup in both her handes, as one that was alwaies readie to drinke: beeing attended and accompanied with her Ladies and waiting-Maides, who serued all such as entred presently with drinke. The first was named Folly; the second Madnesse; and the third Luxury; on whom still waited her Brother Excesse, all of them fitted with Garments according to their conditions.

A fourth Hand-maide was also present by, called Forgetfulness, who seemed to stand as one astonied: And then there was another, sitting on the ground, called Stoiffulness, Sister vnto Idlenesse, and Daughter to Carlesnesse. She sitting halfe asleep, as it were; held a Cuppe of Wine in her hand, which (neglectly) shee spilled on the ground, Scurrility and Scoffing, with Taunting their Brother, and Brabbling their Sister, took her Kinsman Debate by the hand, who was not far of, but sate closly conferring with Infamy, Rage, & Fury, who (for want of better company) supplied the last place.

This

The description of Gurmandise and Gluttony.

The Image of drunkennesse

The Ladies & waighting women attending on drunkennesse, described in their severall qualities and conditions.

Men transformed into all kinds of beasts, by drunkenesse

Horror to behold men changed into beasts, & what strange filthinesse then issued from them.

Debates, quarels, and contentions in Drunkennes.

The vnwholsome and vn-sauoury sleeping of drun-kards.

Their returning out at the narrow gate.

This comely company, were guarded and enuironned (as by hedges and bushes) with Beares, Bulles, Goates, great Asses, Horses, huge Mastiues, bleating Cattle, Hares, Buckes, Apes, Marmosets, Wolues; Swine, and all other kinds of Beasts; that (of liuing Men) had bene Metamorphosed into such Monsters, after they had drunke of the Wine, from the hand of the Lady. When they entered first to her, they were all Men; and so continued (for some time) in their humane shape: but when they had thoroughly tasted of her drinke, they lost their true formes, and were suddenly changed into Beasts. But it was a horrour to behold their countenances, and the life which these beasts led, crying and howling altogether, with a most confused harmony, and accord.

Vpon the one side, some were discharging their stomackes of Wine, & then they which were Dogges, came and licked vp this loathsomnesse againe. The Swine wallowed in filthy puddles, vomiting horrible Serpents and Lizards.
The Bulles and Kine, they did cast vp Frogs and Flyes: The Buckes, Pearles:
The Asses, Bookes: The Bears, swords and Glauiues: The Wolues, Cats and Mice; But the Apes and Marmosets, they skipped & danced about very pleasantly. Contrariwise, the Beares and Wolues bit, and fought very furiously each against other, so that their bodies were torne and mangled.

Vpon the left hand, where the narrow passage was, whereof we haue formerly spoken, and the small path so sil-dome haunted: lay the bodies of beasts stretched out along, sleeping verie foundly, although it was in their owne Dung and Vomiting. All were wounded with Wine, and many other hurts, and there they lay heaped, as a Hill of dead bodies. Some arose vp faintlie, after they had slept and digested their Wine, and afterward returned speedily to their former behauiour; but hauing on still their skinnes of sauage Beasts.

These men, after they were well wearied with drunkenesse, went staggering forth of the Arbour, and found a passage out at the strait or narrow gate:
but many of them in this returning,

were halt and lame of their members;
others were halfe Men, & halfe beasts;
as Centaures, Satyes, and Sauages.
When they were out of the little doore, there they met with aged people, that kept the passage, who came vnto them with Bonds and Chaines, where-with they bound them hand and foote, and afterward did beate them very foundlie.

10 If any one offered to rebelt; they gaue him many blowes with a Bastinado:
and they would not suffer any to escape them, vntill they had made their account with them.

11 The most dangerous old fellow of al
the rest, that gaue the most blowes, and (indeede) was most cruell; named himselfe the Gout, who had a very hideous shape. He had his members lanke; 20 his ioynts grosse; his hands and fingers knit with great knots, and crooked.

The second, had one while a pale countenance, and another while it was as red as any fire: and hee tearmed himselfe the Feauer, or Ague. The third was the Dropsie, very big swolne, with a colour like to Lead and Sulpher: and he was also a threwd smiter, tormenting verie cruelly. For in some, he blew vp

30 their bellies as big as Drums; others, their Legges; others, their stomacke and face; others, their whole body, and brought them into such an alteration: as they could neuer bee satisfied with drinke, but the more they dranke, so much the more thirsty were they,
and insatiable. Hard at his heeles followed the Palsie, who seemed to be who-ly impotent, and that he had not any 40 Nerues, which were not broken: but such as he could lay hold on, he bound them in such strong and sure bonds; as he made them quite impotent cyther in halfe of their body, or all their members.

The fift, called Apoplexie, or the dead
Palsie, tooke some strictly by the collar, and beat them so about the head: that they remained as halfe dead, without any vnderstanding or moouing. The 50 Itch and Scab accompanied all these, but closely pursued by their Sister Leprosie, who did so beat those poore tame Roysters, that all their bodies became an hard crust, and their faces adorned with goodly Saphires. Their Noses also cost more the painting; then if they had bin limned

Aged people that contemded with Drunkards.

The most angry old man, was the Gout

The Feauer.
The Dropsie.

The Palsie,

The Apo-plexie,

The Itch,
Scab, and Leprosie.

The Custome of Lazars and Rogues.

So many men so many diseases. The Falling sicknesse. The catarrhe

The falling sicknesse not so bad as the dead Palsie.

Of the Catarrhe or Rhume.

Pouerty in his best brauery.

Old age and death.

limned with Gold and Siluer. These fel a tugging one another by the eares, & so cruelly fighting; that hardly any one of them remained aliue.

Thus grew such a number of diseases among men; that most of them could lay claim to a seuerall name. But among the rest, there was the Falling euill or sicknesse, and the Catarrhe, which continually lay buffeting about the head. The Falling sicknesse lay al along, beating his head against the ground, and against hard stones: that many times it brake; and the blood followed; with foaming at the mouth like an angry Swine. But woe to him whom he could fasten on; for he would fall downe vpon him, and make him in as bad a case as himselfe. Neuerthelesse, hee was not so cruell as his Kinsman Apoplexy, for albeit he took away al vnderstanding: yet he left some motion, and rested satisfied with offending himselfe onely. Catarrhe, or the Rhume, had a grosse head, so heauie and sleepey, as very hardly could he support himselfe. His gorge was like a Sinke, euermore casting forth vnsauory smels. His Nose like a Limbeck, alwaies distilling: but not Rose-water; for it was foule sniuell, like to such corruption as he bred himselfe. And such a deale of Water came forth of his head, onely to quench the heat of wine: that the smell thereof annoyed many, and almost stifled others.

Among all these old wretches, there was one that had more then five hundred thousand pieces and patches on his Garment, his face was covered verie thicke with dirt and filth, and he looked very meager and hideous: which made all the rest, seeing him to be such a poor Snake, and one vnworthy to hold ranck with them; to beat and bruisse him, till the blood issued forth. This Picture of misery was called Pouerty. After al these before named, came Old decrepite Age, mounted on a Charriot made of dead mens bones, and his next Neighbour Death triumphed ouer him. The Charriot wheelles went ouer both young and old, breaking them in pieces as it went along. Thus may you see by the Picture of Apelles, a lively description of Sobriety and Drunkennesse; deliuering apparently to euery eye, both the good and euill that happeneth to men.

CHAP. XXVII.

The Morall of Apelles Table, is by the Author more significantly Interpreted.

10

20

30

40

50

Concerning this Table of Apelles, wee must first consider, that it expresth two seuerall kindes of life, and two manners of liuing which are among men. That is to say, the one, of Abstinence and Sobriety; the other, of Gurmandise, Gluttony, and Drunkennesse. The first is reputed necessarie for al men, for, as we cannot liue without eating and drinking, considering we are not Angels, but Mortal Men: euen so as needfull is it, to gouerne our life by the rule of Sobriety. Therefore we should all enter into the House of Sobriety, without desiring to passe any further: for wee liue not to eate, but eate to liue. And because tasting is one of the senses, which wee haue most in common with other creatures: it is very requisite, that man should moderate and temper the same, both by Abstinence and Sobriety, as also reason which onely is giuen him; if he will not only shew himselfe to bee a beast, but that which is more, worse then a beast. For this cause, Apelles figured the dwelling of Sobriety without the Garden or Orchard, to let vs vnderstand thereby; that we are not to passe any further, to venter on excesse: but to rest contented, with receiuing our refection honestly, for satisfying the necessities of nature. In like manner, he gaue no other abiding to Sobriety, then Tents, Pauillions, & Tabernacles, to signifie: that we should make no long sitting at the Table, no more then Passengers do in their Inne, who enter not to remaine there alwaies, but onely to content nature, and then to passe on vpon their iourney.

If Apelles, who was no other then a Pagan, could take knowledge heereof: much more ought we to consider the same,

Two seuerall kindes of life, and liuing among men.

The habitati- on of Sobriety.

The reason of Sobrieties dwelling with out the Garden.

Tents and Pauillions allowed to Sobriety

Apelles was a Pagane.

Great helpes that a Christian man hath.

The Feast of Tabernacles.

Short feasting auoydeth surfeiting.

Honest sports and pleasures allowed to mans life.

Eccle. 3. 4.

God permit- teth vs al honest pleasures

The other brutish kinde of life in the dwelling of drunkenesse same then he, considering that we haue the testimony of holy Scripture, which admonisheth vs; That we haue heere no permanent Cittie; That we dwell in this body, as in a Tabernacle, vntill such time as it shall please the Lord, that gaue vs such Lodging, to dislodge vs hence. I thinke also, that he gaue vs admonishment heerein, by the Feast of Tabernacles, and the life which the ancient Israelites led in the Wildernesse. Because our life is so short, & as we feed but to lengthen and continue the same: we should therefore bee fearefull of diminishing and curtalling our time, in spending the most part of our life at the Table, where many crackes and flawes are made by excesse. Therefore they may well be counted wise, and woorthy to beare the name of men, that would goe on no further: but returned honestly to their home affaires, after they had soberly receiued their sustenance.

By the Sportes, Pastimes, Musique, and Songs, which were exercised in this Meadow of Sobriety; I thinke hee purposed to demonstrate, that the life of Man hath some honest pleasures and recreations allowed it. For God doth not prohibite vs, to vse such good gifts as he hath bestowed on vs; liuing in moderate ioy, when the time so requireth. It is written: That there is a time to laugh and a time to mourne; a time for ioy, and a time for sadnesse. And therefore a Christian man may learne, to vse both the one and other well, and all to the glory of God.

Most certaine it is, that God permit- teth vs honest pleasures and delightes, which he hath not forbidden, or are to his dishonour, or any occasion of euill. All honest and vertuous exercises are permitted vnto vs, in rendring thanks to God for them, and acknowledging his benefits by them: prouided also, that we keepe our selues alwaies within the rule of Sobriety, Modesty, and Honesty. Thus we see one manner of life, and that which most conuenientlie becometh man.

The other is more brutish, then humane, the sense and description whereof, taketh it selfe thus. First, for the large and common beaten way, whereby men entred into the Garden, and concerning the vnbrideled multitude that made vse thereof: I vnderstand his meaning to be thus; that euery man affecteth ease, idlenesse, and voluptuous pleasures.

Some knew how to giue a meane to their desires, and tooke not so much Meat and Wine, as should trouble their vnderstanding: but could well returne to their ordinary businesse, and vse reason in all thinges. Now, there were others, that knew not any meane or measure, neither had regard to time or place: but would needs venter further, and fell into such extremitie of follie, as they lost their senses, vnderstanding, and memory. So that thereby they became brute beasts, and could no way retire from this disordered battaile: till diseases, pouerty, and necessity admonished them of their duty. For they are the last Companions of drunkenesse, and the Wages for all Carrow- sers, that doe her the greatest honour. By the Hand-maides or waiting Weomen on drunkenesse: I vnderstand those seueral vices, as their apt Names doe signifie, and they are the meetest for her company. And by the drinckes which shee gaue to her Quassers, hee meaneth the venome and poyson of voluptuous excesse, which maketh such a transport of mens vnderstandings: that they grow like vnto brute beastes, according as they take lesse or more, & according to the complexions they are of; representing euen those very beasts, whose nature and manners they come neere vnto, and refusing all friendlie counsell and aduise; do delight more in such barbarous and viciuill courses, then any other manners that should shew them to be men.

CHAP. XXVIII.

A Paradoxe in praise of imprisonment; maintaining, that it is more healthful & profitable to be in Prison, then at libertie.

If goods lockt vp in the smallest houses, are of greatest price and most in request; yea, with more diligence looked

The Scholers of ioyt and excesse.

Diseases, Pouerty and necessity, the last companions of Drunkenesse.

The greatest treasures lye in the smallest roomes.

The tearme of Prison and Prisoner no way offensive

The words of Saint Paule.

The great benefit of imprisonment to men.

Reward of greafe by imprisonment.

looked vnto and preferued, then those displayed and exposed to their iudgements, that haue a will (by them) to offend others: I may then by good reason maintain, that the Prison is better then the publike place of liberty, which often times turnes to his greatest dammage, that had the highest desire vnto it. Nor ought (vnder correction) the tearms of Prison and Prisoner, be so offensive to the eares of any man, as if they were sharp pricking Thorns, neither to bring such molestation to their minds, as to make them sometimes tremble, quake, and ready to f. wound with feare. Considering, that in this City wherein wee dwell, euery man may well call and repute himselfe to be a Prisoner; but especially in this world, where no one can call himselfe free, vntill the breath bee forth of his body. And this was the reason, why the holy Apostle of God so loudly demanded: What was he that could deliuer him fro this mortal prison? He ment the prison of this fleshly body, which appears to me, to be nolesse profitable to the life of man; then a strong Prison walled with stone, that serues him as a rampier and safe defence, against al dangers which might daily assaile him.

I may speake this, by the example of many great personages, to whom imprisonment brought no meane happinesse: as keeping them in assurance fro their enemies, and thereby made their poore life the more tranquile to them. Lastly, when it became hatefull to the: then it more apparantly witnessed, what good it had done them. For they were no sooner deliuered, and set at libertie; but they were miserably flaine by their Aduersaries.

Poore wits, that are ignorant of prison benefit; vnderstand not the priuiledges ensuing thereby: which indeede are such, as neuer can iustly make any man agreeued. If it do, for a little while; it recompenceth it afterward with vertue, glory, and honour. If not in this World; yet it failes not in the other, which is perpetuall and euerlasting: as we haue gathered by diuers Saints and iust persons, who (after the imprisonment of this world) haue (vndoubtedly) entred into eternall liberty. And for proof of the blessed recompence, which imprisonment bringeth to men of ver-

tue, let vs take example by Marius, honoured with the great Empire of Cesar. By King Matthias, who after he had bin detained in Hungaria, by King Ladislaws: from Prison entred suddainely to the Crowne. Lewes the twelfth, scarcely was he set in assured liberty, and out of Prison: but immediatly hee was made King of Fraunce. Ye shall finde an infinite number, who after they were restored to freedom from imprisonment; became more glorious and excellent persons, then euer they had beene all their whole life time before.

Now, as I will not deny, but imprisonment, stocks, chains, and manacles, may somewhat impeach ouer worldlie operations: yet dare I then (withall) maintaine, that they cannot any way disturb them, if they be honest and holy cogitations, nor the noble and vertuous conceits of men, or their high, hopefull, and excellent enterprises. For, in despite of all those meanes, as were imployed to hinder this resolution: it held credit, not onely in the Castle and Prison at Paris, in the Dungeon at Rouen, in the Hell-house at Flourence, the Limbo at Morce, and the Stone-house at Luca; but had power beside, to passe the Crosse of Theodorius Cyrenensis, to enter the Bull of fierce Phalaris; and penetrate into the cruell Tunne of Atilius Regulus.

To prooue this, Signior Ascanio Colonna (who was kept in the Prisons of Andrea Damia) could not by all extremities vsed against him, be any way impeached in his most rare prudence, when (after long consideration thereof) the saide Damia, of a Capitall enemy, became a most faithfull and affectionate Seruant of the Emperour.

Let vs consider the infinite benefits, wherof imprisonment is the only cause. First of all, it keepes the Spirit of man, fro comitting many enormous sins; his eyes, from beholding spectacles to offend them, or motions stirring vp carnall concupisence; his eares from hearing irkesome and infecting speeches, and the ouer readie and sintull tongue, from blaspheming the holy name of Almighty God.

Beside these, he liueth more sober and temperately, and is in safe securitie,

The recompence of vertuous men, by imprisonment.

Impeachment of worldlie operations.

Prooue of honorable and resolute constancy.

The infinite benefits ensuing by imprisonment to men.

The vertues of Patience and Humility.

The chastising of lewd and disobedient Children.

The Marques
Paulo Vicino.

The Lord of Rosses Bishop of Pavia.

Peter Fatinell of Luca.

The strange alteration of a Knight of France.

be it in the times of peace, war, or pestilence. Prisoners are exempted from paying taxations, borrowings, or house-rents. They cannot be suspected to haunt euill companies, the frequenting whereof, is oftentimes the cause of ten thousand excesses. Lastly, in this holy place, easily are obtained the vertues of patience and humility.

Haue we not seene, and do yet daily behold, that good Fathers (to chastise the disobedience or pride of their misgouerned Children) cause them for a while to be shut vp in Prison? Whence they returne soone after, endued with better manners and behaviour: then if they had spent more space, in the Schoole of wise Socrates, or in the Academy of most prudent Philosophers. Was not that marueilous, of the Viscount Paulo Vicino, who, being for some cause (whereof hee was accused) Captiue vnder the power of Duke Frances: gaue himselfe wholly to the study of diuine Letters? Wherein (during the time of his imprisonment) he became so feruent and frequent, as few were found to excell him in Religion. And this was a matter, whereof (in all his former life time) he neuer had so much as a thought: albeit he enjoyed the substance of a right good Byshop, and of a better Abby. I may not omit in this place, my Lord of Rosses, Bishop of Pavia, who at the houre when he entred Prison; gaue himselfe wholly to God, where as yet he liueth like a right Hermit. Peter Fatinell, a Cittizen of Luca, hauing liued many yeares most miserably, neuer comming to the Church, nor knowing God to be his Superiour: so soone as he was brought into Prison, he desired that a Priest might be sent vnto him, to talke with him concerning his Soules health; and from thence forward, he liued in all duty and obedience.

What shall wee say of a Knight in France, whose haire (by being some few daies in Prison) became all white, onlie by the alteration of his former life: so that, neither by Head, Beard, behaviour, or speeches, he could be knowne to be the man he had beene before. The like may be said of an Italian President, who parting (in his latest houre) from the Prison; declared by his wordes and diuine perswasions, in cōparable sanctitie. The Prison then is found, to be the best Schoole of Philosophy, and the onely singuler Academy: wherein to learne all Morall vertues and Christian profession, and no place else may compare, with the Diuine and most praiseworthy Prison.

10 O holy and glorious house! Wherein the Maker and Redeemer of the world vouchsafed to lodge. The house of al goodnesse and vertues: and which ought more to be desired for peerelesse holinesse, then the Pallaces of Kinges and greatest Princes. For they are more semblable to some Hell, or place of eternall death; then is the blessed and deuout Prison: wherein men may passe their liues more religiously, then among all the obseruant Fryers in the World. For there shall no man plead against ye, or picke any iniurious quarrell with ye. There they sildome swear, or very little. There ye shall continually hear, an infinite number of faire vowes made; with a thousand Prayers and supplications, both by day and night.

20 O life most sweet, and full of repose! How much more consolation is to bee found in thee, then in following the Courts of the mightiest Princes? For there, no right from wrong can be discerned, or any other good; then trauaile and vnquietnesse, both of the body and minde. Seeing then it is so, that imprisonment bringeth with it so manie commodities, as I haue already declared vnto ye: I may easily conclude, that we ought not to be grieued, when we are made subiect thereunto. But rather highly to praise the name of God, for bestowing on vs (thereby) the most singuler benefit, which in this World we can receiue from him.

CHAP. XXIX.

30 A brieffe Summarie, of the first Booke of Ciceroes Tusculanes; concerning the misprisall and contempt of the World.

THE whole life of a wise man, is nothing else but a memorial, and continuall

The Prison is the best, schoole of Philosophy.

The glory of imprisonment

The holy priuiledge of imprisonment.

The Authors Conclusion.

The life time of a wise man continuall regard made of death. Nor can any man iustly speake against it; in regard I am verily perswaded, that all things else are hurtfull to man, and that there can be no greater happinesse then this: because it is most certaine, that after our fraile life is ended, we shall bee with God. The grieffe is litle or nothing at all in death: for it is oftentimes without feeling, and sometimes with pleasure. In what manner soeuer it be, it can be of no account: because the paine is past in a moment, and we should not be fearefull thereof, but rather long and desire to embrace it. For after we haue made that happy passage, there remaineth no more care or sollicitude for vs. It is but a departing hence, to goe into another Countrey, wherethey doe al-

Little or no grieffe at all in death.

Our departure into another Country ready dwell, which are departed out of this life. It is therefore a matter of ioy and felicity, and a man should march thither with a cherefull courage, and not thinke much to dye, euen during his fairest fortunes, because therein is no paine, grieffe, or vexation. Neither doth it procure any extinction of the Spirit, but is only a change of habitation, from earth to Heauen, which is the proper dwelling of the Soule. Wee ought not then to feare that, which cannot be auoyded, and is likewise necessary for all in generall; therefore no one can be esteemed miserable therein. If therefore we be mindfull thereof, and of our latest daies; we shall neuer sinne. But may safely say with Saint Paule: Iesus Christ is our life, and Death aduantage.

No quenching of the Spirit.

Fff 3

The End of the Sixt Booke.

The first part of the book is a description of the various kinds of plants which grow in the country. The second part is a description of the various kinds of animals which are found in the country. The third part is a description of the various kinds of minerals which are found in the country.

The End of the Book

The Seauenth Booke.

CHAP. I.

Of the Kingdome of Tunis; The Lawes, Customs, and Ceremonies used among the people, and other Observations well deseruing memory.

The City of Thunis, or Tunis, being very great, was by the Latines cald Tunetum, & of the Arabians Tunus:

but they do hold that name to be a very corrupt vocable, because (in their Language) Tunus doth not signifie any thing. This City was anciently called Tharsus, as that other which is in Asia, and was at the first but a very little City, builded by the Africanes, vpon the Lake which was formed vpon the Goletta, distant from the Mediterranean Sea, about twelue miles. But after that Carthage was destroyed, then did the City begin to encrease, both in number of Habitations and dwellers: in regard that the Armies which surpris'd Carthage, being vnwilling to tarry there (for feare of fresh supplies from Europe) came to abide at Tunis, and there they builded many houses.

Not long after, there came thither

a Captaine, named Hucha di Vmen, who gaue them to vnderstand, that an Army ought not to shut vp it selfe in any City, that should touch or be neere vnto the Sea: And therefore they made a City, which they named Cairoan, about the distance of thirty sixe Miles from the Sea, and accounted to be an hundred miles from Tunis. Then did the Armies forsake Tunis, and inhabited this new City: other people gouerning those houses in Tunis, which had beene abandoned by the Armies.

After this, about three hundred and fifty yeares, the City of Cairoan was destroyed by the Arabians; so that the Rector or Ruler thereof, fled thence into the West, and raigned in Buggia, as also ouer all the neighbouring partes: but ther remained in Tunis, a Familie or kindred of the said Rector or Gouernor, that fled from Cairoan, who still possessed the same, as Soueraigne Lordes thereof. About ten yeares after, they of Buggia were expulsed by Ioseph, the Sonne of Tessino, and beholding the humility and kindnes of those Lords: they left the State to them, wherein they continued in tranquillitie, so long as the Familie of Ioseph raigned. Wherefore Abdul Mumen, King of Marocco, hauing regained Mabdia, which had bin taken by the Christians: passed homeward (in his retrerne) by Tunis, where he tooke on him the gouernment. Therefore, all the time that Abdul Mumen liued, and Ioseph his Sonne, with their Successours, Iacob and Mansor: Tunis continued in peace, vnder Hucha di Vmen a valiant Captaine.

Cairoan, a new city builded.

Cairoan destroyed by the Arabes.

Tunis gouerned by the Kings of Marocco.

The ancient name of Tunis.

The destruction of Carthage.

Mahumet Ennasir, warred on the King of Spaine.

Tunis besieged by the Arabes.

Tunis deliue-red from the Arabes.

Abu Zaccherias
K. of Marocco.

The death of Abu Zaccherias

The declining of the Kingdome of Ma-rocco, and ri-

the rule of the Kings of Marocco. After the death of Mansor, his Sonne Mahumet Ennasir mooued Warre against the King of Spaine: but was ouercome and forced to flight, whereupon he retyred backe to Marocco, and liued there some few yeares after his foyle. Then election was made of his Brother Ioseph, who was slaine by certaine Souldiers to the King of Telesin.

Now, in the interim, betweene the ouerthrow of Mahumet, his death, as also the murthuring of his Brother Ioseph; the Arabes returned backe on Tunis, and besieged it. But the Gouvernour of Tunis, gaue notice thereof to the King of Marocco, and that if he sent him not some immediate succour: hee should bee constrained to deliuer the Citty to the Arabes. The King well considering, on a case of such importance; did as became a man of his high Spirit and experience; electing (aboue all other in his Court) one borne in Ciuill, a Cittie of Granado, named Habdulwahidi, whom hee forth-with sent thither, with the very same authoritie, as if he had gone himselfe in person. Being accompanied with twenty goodlie great Shippes, hee arriued at Tunis, which he found euen halfe vanquished by the Arabes. But by his wisdome, prouidence, and flowing eloquence, he foyled the enemy, pacified the State, set all thinges in good order, and made the Countries entrance sure against all Intruders. After him, his Sonne succeeded, named Abu Zaccherias, who in wisdome and learning excelled his Father. He caused to be builded in Tunis (on the West side of the Citties very highest part) a mightie great Rocke, and many goodly Pallaces in the Citty: with a beautifull Temple, which had an high Tower on the top thereof, round engirt with strong walles.

This Abu Zaccherias went likewise to Tripoli, where his valour won him such renoune, and his wisdome made so good benefit of the Countrey: that (at his death) he left an infinite Masse of treasure behinde him. He being dead, his Sonne succeeded him, who was an ambitious proud young man, & would no longer suffer himselfe to be gouerned by the Lordes of Marocco: because hee saw their declining and downefall, and that the Family of Marino began to set in footing, rainging ouer the Regions of Fez, as Beni Zeiren did in Telesin, and in Granado.

10 These two great Potentates began to Warre vpon each other, and to contend for priority of State: but by this their discord, the power of the Lordes of Tunis encreased, so that they went with an Army against Telesin, and compelled them to pay them tribute. Whereupon, the King that new arose from the House of Marino, and had bin at the surprizall of Marocco: sent many rich presents to the Gouvernour of Tunis, recommending both himselfe, and his whole State vnto his fauour. The Gouvernour accepted him as a Friend: alwayes prouided, that he should be inferior to him. And so hee returned in triumph to Tunis, causing himselfe to be called King of Affrica: which Title was thought very desertful for him, because (as then) there was not a more powerfull Prince in all Affrica, then he.

20 He began then to ordaine his Court Royall, with Secretaries, Councillers, and a Captaine Generall: vsing all those Ceremonies, that the Kinges of Marocco formerlie had done. And from the time of this Prince, euen vnto our daies: Tunis held on the same encreasing Dignitie, as well in Habitations, as in Ciuility; so that it became the onely and singuler Cittie of Affrica. After his death, his Sonne, to whom the Royall Crowne came in right; caused certaine Townes or Burroughes to be builded about the Cittie. 30 One, without the Gate, called Bedsuuaica, containing about some three hundred Houses. Another, without the Gate, called Bed Elmanera, amounting to a thousand Households. And these two Townes are full of infinite Artificers. As of Fisher-men, Apothecaries, and diuers other.

40 In the last named Borrough, there is a separate streete, as if it were another little Towne by it selfe: wherein doe dwell the Christians of Tunis, that are imployed in the Princes guard, and in other Offices, which the Moores cannot, nor are permitted to doe. Afterward, another Towne was added, which is without the Gate, called 50

ing of that of Fez.

Entercourse between Marocco and Tunis.

The King of Tunis King of Affrica.

Ordination of the Court Royall and Councillers.

Building of Townes and villages without the Citty.

The Christians of Tunis.

Bed

Bed and Bahar, that is the Marine or sea-gate, which is neere to the Lake of the Goletta, about halfe a Mile.

In this Towne, doo lodge Christian Merchants, and Strangers; as the Genewaves, Venetians, and Catalanes, who do allhold their Ware-houses & their Lodgings seperately, of the Moores. This Towne is bigge enough, and maketh about three hundred fires, betweene the Christians and the Moores: but the houses are little. So that, between the walled Cittie, and the Townes about it, may be accounted some nine or tenne thousand Households.

The Cittie it selfe, is faire and well ordered, to wit; euey Art is seuerall by it selfe. Beside, it is very populous, and well inhabited: but the Inhabitanes (for the most part) are Artificers, and especially Weauers of Cloath, because in Tunis is made a very great quantity of most perfect cloath, which is sold thorow all Affrica. And they are very choise, in hauing their cloath to be strong and good, for the Women of the Cittie, are excellent Spinners; and when they Spin, they vse to sit in some place, that the Spindle may descend downe low, or out of some Window, answering to some Court of the house; or by some hole, made out of one roome into another: so that by the waightinesse of the Spindle, descending such a depth, the thredde is well drawne; made round and euen.

In this City, is a market place, whereon standeth a great number of Shoppes, appertaining to Merchants, Trading in Cloath, and they are helde to be the Richest men in Tunis.

There are other Merchants and Artzans; as Apothecaries and such as sel Sirrops, Electuaries, Perfumes: And Silkenmen, Taylors, Sadlers, and other Handicraftes men. The people are verie benigne and louing, and the Tradesmen, Merchants, Priests, Doctors, and al they that haue the managing of any office, do go well Garmented, wearing great Tulipantes on their heads, made vp of a long and large Towell. Thus do the men of the Kinges Court weare, and Soldiers; but there they do not vse to couer theyr heads.

Of wealthy men indeede, there are but few, in regarde of the great dearth of Graine: for the ordinary price of a measure vsed amongst them (valning with vs a quarter Sacke) is three Doubles, which are four Ducates of them of Venice. And this scarcety ensueth, by reason that the people of the City, cannot husband their Neighboring grounds, thorow the great mollestation which they haue by the Arabes. Therefore, their Corne is faine to come conducted from farre thither, as from Trbs, from Buggia, and from Bona. Some of the Cittizens haue certaine little Farme-houses neere to the Cittie and well walled about, where they sowe such small portions of grounde as they haue, with Barley or Wheate. And those grounds must be well watered; therefore in euerie Farme they haue a Well, out of which they draw water by the help of a Wheel, and so conuey it then by channels, ingeniously deuised and made. The Wheele is turned about by a Mule, or a Cammell; and so the Water running along, by men the ground is watred therewith.

As for the quantity of Corn that may be produced from one of these smal Farmes, and Husbanded with such paine & endeuour: It will not last the owner for halfe the yeares space; and yet notwithstanding, the Bread is fair, white and well Baked. For, they do not boul out any Flower, but let it go wholly together, although it asketh much labour in the making: especially, when they conuert it into PASTE, which they beat with great Pestles, made after the manner of those, wherewith they beat Rice and Flax in the Countrey of Egypt.

The Merchants, Artzanes, and Cittizens, haue an equall Custome, to eate (in the day time) a vile and rude meate, which is Bailey Dow, steeped in Water, and reduced like a kinde of Glew: then is it put into a little Oile, or the Iuice of Limons, or some of Orenge: and this coorse kind of food they swallow down, without any chewing, receiuing it by little and little, and calling it Besbis, but indeed they eate it very beastly.

There is a Market place, where nothing else is sold but Barley Meale; and it is onely bought to make that kinde of meate. They vse another meate, which is somewhat more cleanly and handsom. They take a light kinde of PASTE, and then boyle it in water, and when it is well sodden, they put it into an Earthen Vessell; and

The Warehouses of Christian Merchants.

The Cittie it selfe, and manner thereof among the Inhabitants.

The women of Tunis are singular spinners.

The Market place of the City, & howe it is traded.

The condition of the people in their seuerall degrees.

Great scarcety of Graine, & the cause thereof.

Cittizens farmehouses without the City.

The great drought of their grounds

The perfection of their Bread.

A rude kinde of food eaten by them.

The Barley market place.

No Water-Mills within or without the City.

& gathering it together in the midst of the Dish; they poure Oyle vppon it, or the broath of fat meate, and so eate it as they do the other, and this kind of food is termed among them Bruzin. Neither within nor without the Cittie, is there anie Mill, that grindeth on the water, but they are all mooued by Beastes; so that a Mill can hardly grinde a Seame of Corne in a day.

Wells of water reserved for the prince

There are no Springs, nor Riues, or VVelles of wholsome water: but out of Cesternes, wherein they gather raine water. A little without the Cittie, there is a Poole of running water, but it is somewhat brackish, and thither resorts all the Water-bearers, with their Beastes and other cariages; where when they are filled, they make sale of them in the Cittie, and the people vse to drinke it, as beeing more wholsome then the Cesterne Water. Other Wells there be of verie good water; but they are for the Prince, & for his Courtiers.

Temples in the City.

There is a verie faire Temple, and great in Circumference, furnished not onely with a number of Priests; but also, with great Rentes and Reuennewes. Other Temples there are in the Cittie, and neighbouring Townes, but of much lesse and vnable quality.

Colledges of Schollers and Monasteries.

Many Colledges of Schollers there are, and Monasteries of some Religious people, for whom the Almes of the people is their best allowance. If any one be a Natiue of Tunis, and his follie doo lead him, to hurle stones about the streetes, their wisdome is so great, that they repute that ydle Ass to be a Saint. The more part of the houses are beautifull enough formed, and made of squared stone, verie morkemanly: On the roofes whereof, are goodly Ornaments, and curious Carued Plaister, painted with Azure, and other fine Colours. And thus they do, because Woode and Timber is verie scarce in Tunis; and therefore their Wood-worke must needs bee verie vnhandsome.

The maner of their houses.

Pauing of their streets.

They were wont to paue the Streetes before their Doores, with certaine calcinated and shining stone; and the Courts within, with equal squared broade stone, glistering and shining in like manner: which yet is obserued in many places, & euery house generally hath his Tarras. The doores or entrances are very beautiful, shewing as if they were between two Porches, one toward the streete, and the other, betweene the entraunce and the house, ascending vp certaine degrees or staires, of verie comely and wel wrought stone. Eucry one striueth to haue his houses entrance most curious, & indeed, more costly then all the rest of the house: because the Cittizens do most commonly sit at their doors, conferring there with any of their Friendes, and apting what businesse is to be done by their seruants.

The doores and entrance into the houses.

10

20

30

40

50

VVithout the Cittie are goodlie possessions of fruits, which grow but in smal quantity, yet are all good. Of Gardens there are almost an infinit number, planted with Orenge, Lemmons, Roses, and verie sweet floures: especially, in one place called the Bardo, where are the gardens and Noble Pallaces belonging vnto the King, verie proudly builded, and excellling in Carued woorkes, and curious Colours.

Orchards & Gardens without the City.

Round about the Cittie, for welneere the space of fiue or sixe miles on euerie side, are lands of Oliue trees, which yeild such plentiful quantitie of Oyle, as not only furnisheth the Cittie and neighboring parts; but also great store sent into Egypt. Of the Oliue tree VVood also, they make a kind of Coales, which is very helpful to the Cittie, and other partes of the wood they burne beside. The women go neatly clothed and adorned, and (out of their owne houses) their faces are couered: and they spende most of their care, in fine polishing and perfuming of themselues; for the Perfumers Shoppes are the latest open in all the Citie. As concerning the Magistrates of the sayde Cittie, they follow in their due Descriptions.

Great store of Oliue trees

The order for their women.

1. THE King of Tunis, is created by inheritance, and by election of his Father, with Oath taken of the principal Officers; as the Captains, Doctors Priests, Iudges, and Readers. So soon as the King dyeth, his successour is immediately placed on the Seat Royal, and al do yeild him their obeyfance. VVhich being doone, they present him before the man, that holdeth the greatest degree in office, who is called the Munafid, and is as a Vize-King in gouerning the Kingdome. This Munafid rendereth an account of all occasions by him administered,

The election of the King of Tunis after his Fathers death

The Munafid, or chiefe officer next the King.

red, euen to the present day, and (with the Kings consent) he disposeth of Officers, deliuering full information of all Mandates, and for the prouision of the Soldiers.

The Mesuar, the second great officer.

2 Next to the Munafid, the second man of dignity in the Kingdome, is the Mesuar, who is as a Captaine Generall; hauing full authority ouer the Soldiers, and ouer the Kinges Guard. Hee may dispend, encrease, and diminish the Soldiers Wages, as seemeth best to himself. He may make election according to his owne will: Either in remoouing the Armies, or doing any thing, euen as if the King himselfe did ouersee all things.

The Castellano, or keeper of the Tower, and such occasions as concerne his Office.

3 In the thirde degree, followeth the Castellano, or Lieutenant of the Tower, a man of much reputation, who is appointed vnto all businesse concerning the Tower or Castle. He hath charge of the Soldiers planted therein; and for all buildings of Castels and Pallaces belonging to the King, as also of all prisoners committed to the Tower. Wherefore, it is a Custome obserued amongst them, that whē any important offence is found to be done, the transgressors are referred for imprisonment to the Castle; as nowe adayes is vsed in the Court of Rome. He hath likewise Authority (as a Iustice of Peace) to examine all Offenders coming before him; and no otherwise, then as if the King himselfe were there in proper person.

The Governour of the Citty.

4 The Governour of the Citty, is the fourth man of the Kingdome, and is superiour ouer all Capital causes. He chastiseth al such as commit Ribaldry, or any euill actions in what Nature soeuer: And to speake al in a word, he is displeas'd at al things that go against Iustice.

The cheefe Secretarie of Estate to the King for all Occurrences

5 The cheefe Secretarie of Estate, is he that receiueth Letters from al parts of the world to the King, or writeth vnto them in the same Nature: Hee hath Authority to open all Letters out of the Kinges presence: those onely excepted from the fore-named Governour, and the Castilian. When he hath read the Letters to the King, hee writes and answeres in his name, according as hee is directed by the King: And questionlesse, hee is a man of great reputation, as he that knoweth all the secrets, yea, and most concealed in his Soueraignes brest. Vnder him are many inferiour Secretaries, appointed for Supplications, Mandates, & other occuring businesse, which depend most of all vpon the Kings mouth.

Maister of the Haul, and authority of his Office.

6 He that is stiled Maister of the Haule, on such daies as the Councell doe meet together; hath eare to adorne the place with Tapistry, and the walles with Hangings: assigning each Councell (at his entrance) to his meet place, and commaunding the Curfores or Messengers (in the Kinges name) to dispatch al such businesse as they are sent about by the Councell, or to apprehend any man by them appointed. And this Maister hath great familiarity and discourse with the King; because he goeth in and out, and conferreth with him, when, and as often as himselfe pleaseth.

7 The Treasurer standeth bound to receiue the Monies of the Officers, and to assigne the same to others deputed for the Cash, and to lay it out according to the Kinges commaund. His Office is very important and Honourable.

The Treasurer and his charge.

8 The eighth man in order, of any credit, is the Customer, or Receiner of Tolls and Customes. He gathereth the Tolls for things, which come into the Citty from al parts by Land. He collecteth the dues of Merchants-Strangers, which is two parts and an halfe on euery hundred. He keepeth a great number of Officers and Catch-poles, who, as they see any Stranger enter, that appeareth to be a man of any account or credit: doe present him to the Customer; or if he be not present, or at leysure, they keepe the party in Prison; vntill such time as best opportunity serueth. And then he is compelled to pay such a summe of Money, as he imposeth on him, vrging him thereto by many oaths.

The Officer for deceipt of Tolls and Customes.

9 There is another Tolle-taker or Customer, that gathereth the Tolls brought and carried from forth the Citty, or are to be sent away by Sea, from any Port vpon the Coast. And the place of this Tolle-Takers abiding, is on the Lake of the Goletta, neere to the Citty.

The Officer for Sea dues and Collections.

10 Next vnto the forenamed Officers, there is a Spenditore, or Steward. He is (in effect) Maister of the Household, and hath the charge of furnishing the

The Authority of the Stewarde or Spenditore.

the Kings Pallace, with Bread, flesh, and all other things necessary for the Court. As apparrell, to cloath the Women and Ladies attending on the King; the Eunuches, and the Negro slaues, who are as Chamber-waiters to the King, and attending on the Nurses. Hee hath charge also, to despende with the Offices that happen in the Castle, or out of the Castle, among the Christian Slaues, and prouideth them of meat and raiment, according as necessity requireth. His care likewise extendeth, for the expences of the Kinges Children, and all their Nurses.

Other Officers of lower esteeme and repute.

II. Beside all these forenamed degrees in the Court Royall, and those in greatest place, by whom the State is gouerned: there are other Officers of meanner reputation: As the Maister of the Stable, the Maister of the Guardrobe, the Chaplaine, the Iudge for the Fielde, the Maister of the Kinges Children, the Commander of the Footmen, and such like. The King keepeth a thousand & five hundred Light-horse, who for the most part, are Christian Renegadoes, and eue-ry one of them hath prouision for his owne person and Horse.ouer them, there is a Captaine appointed, who placeth or dismisseth them after his owne pleasure. There are also an hundred and fifty horse of Natiue Moores, who ordinarily do giue counsell to the King, in matters appertaining to the wars, and serue as Maisters of the campe. Also 150. Crosse-bowes, who are all Christian Renegadoes, and these do alwayes go about the King, when hee rideth either in the City, or abroad. But the most secret & especiall Guard vnto the King, which alwayes are nearest to his person, consisteth wholly of Christians, that dwell in a certaine neere bordering Towne. Before the King, there goeth another Guard on foote, and they are all Turkes, armed with Bowes and Pistols.

Christian Renegadoes.

Christians are the speciall Guard to the King.

Then before the King, rideth the Commander of the Footemen: and on his one side, rideth hee that beareth the Kings Partezane, and on the other, hee that carrieth his Target; and next behind his horse, he that beareth his Crosse-bow. About him, rode diuers other Officers; as the Constables, the Mace-bearers, who are appertaining vnto the Ceremonies. The goldend ucat of the King, wai-gheth 24. Carrats, and is one Ducat and a third part, of those Ducates which are currant thorow Europe. They stampe also certaine Mony of Siluer, foure square, containing the weight of a Carrate; and thirty or two and thirty of them, do make a Ducate. Their Money is termed Nasari; and in Italy, their Ducate is called a Double.

The waight of the Kinges Gold Ducat.

10

CHAP. II.

Of the most potent King, called Great Tamburlaine; What Kingdome and Prouinces were Conquered by him; And the manner of his Military Discipline.

20

Mong the Greeks, Romaines, Carthagenians, and other Nations, were manie verie excellent Captains and Soldiers, who as they Captains and Soldiours of note & name, in diuers Nations.

30 were Wise, and very fortunate in warre, so they were as happie in hauing Historians, that wrote most amplye of their generous actions.

40

But in our time, there is found a notable man, who may be saide (deseruedlie) to equall all the other, how excellent any way foeuer they were; and yet (notwithstanding) vnfortunate in this, that hee could finde no man to write or describe his deeds. So that I, beeing desirous to say somewhat of him, haue been constrained to begge and borrow among manie; and yet I shall speake but little, and confusedly also of him.

50

The man was named Great Tamburlaine, who (at his beginning) was a toyling Labourer in the Fields, or (as some others say) a poore Soldier: and yet neuertheless, he attained to so great Seignories and Victories, that hee could bee thought no lesse then mighty Alexander, or if he were, it was very little; and this man raigned, about the yeare three hundred and ninety.

The description of Tamburlaine, at his beginning.

1390.

Some do report, that hee was descended of the parthians, a people much feared in the Romaines time, and yet notwithstanding, slenderly renowned. His Father and Mother were poore people, and yet himselfe of good and gentle disposition; position: well composed of his members, strong, and lusty, a man quicke and sudden, sharpe of spirit, and of good and resolute iudgement.

The descent & parentage of Tamburlaine and his Description.

Euermore, his thoughtes aimed at haughtie matters, as wel during the time of his pouertie, as after his attaining vnto wealth & riches. He was of great Courage, so that euen from his Infancy, hee was Naturally enclined to warre, and he gaue his minde thereto with such sollicitude, and studious endeouour in learning the Art Military, as it seemed verie hard to iudge, wherein he was most happy, either in valour and dexterity, or in Wise-dome and a fetled spirite. With which Vertues and promptitudes, beside such as we are to speake of heereafter, he won (in small time) the very greatest reputation, that euer man could reach vnto.

His beginning, according as Baptista Fulgosa declareth, was, that hee being the Sonne of a poore man, and keeping Cattle in the Field, with other Boyes of the same profession, it hapned vppon a day, that his Companions and hee sporting together, they would needes make choise of him to be their King. Now, albeit this their election was doone but in iest; yet he whose spirit applyed it selfe to great occasions, in the serious pursuite of their sport and play, made them all swear vnto him, that they would do whatsoeuer he commanded them, and to obey him, as if he were their King indeede.

After he had taken this oath of them, he commanded that euery one shoulde sell his Cattle; and leauing this base seruility of life, to follow the exercise of Armes, retaining him as their King & Captaine. All which they did; and within few dayes after, five hundred Herdsmen were gotten together, by whose assistance, the first acte that euer he did, was to rob Merchants, as they passed that way; and afterward, he diuided the booties so iustly amongst his Companions, that they vowed their following seruice vnto him, with all vnfaigned loue and fidelitie, and this course of life, drew many other new seruants to him.

These matters being vnderstoode by the King of Persia, he sent one of his Captaines with a thousand horse, to take him and all his Consorts. When the Captaine was come vnto him, hee handled the case so ingenuously with him, that of an enemy, he made him an intimat friend, yea, and his companion and Coadiutor. So that they ioyned their forces together, and beganne to vndergoe greater enterprises, then any which formerly had bin done.

During these entercouises, there hapned discord betweene the King of Persia, and one of his Brethren; by means whereof, Tamberlain tooke part with the kings Brother, and ordered all thinges so well by his industry, that helping him to win the Victory, and making him King, the King indeede was quite destroyed. Afterward, in requitall of this fauour the new King created Tamberlaine, Captaine of the great part of his Armies, hee pretending to win new Countries for him; and for accomplishment whereof, he mustered more store of people together. In the performance whereof, he found the meanes to make them reuolt, and grow rebellious against their new King. Against whom he went with his owne forces suddenly, and taking the kingdom from him (which hee did helpe him to Conquer) made himselfe King of Persia, which questionlesse he could neuer haue don, without most great industry, and very admirable deeds of armes.

This done, he did set his owne Countrey at libertie, which long time had bin seruite to the Sarazins, and Kings of Persia, and by being himselfe King, released them out of thraldome. Afterward, hauing such a goodly great armie in readinesse, he raised Rebellions in the Neighbouring Prouinces; & by these meanes (in proesse of time) conquered Syria, Armenia, Babylon, Mesopotamia, Scythia, Asiatica, Albania, Media, and other prouinces, with many great and most strong Townes, and famous Citty.

Now, albeit there is nothing set down in Writing, concerning his stout warres and battailes, in the acquisition of these Lands and Countries, yet it must needes be presupposed, that wonderfull inuentions, and incredible deeds of armes were by him performed. For all such as haue Written any thing, do plainly say, That great things were done by this excellent man, and that alwayes hee carryed such good gouernment in his Army, as neuer could be found any mutiny therein. For he was very faithfull and liberall, bestowing Honors on all such as followed him, and War between the King of Persia, and his Brother.

Tamberlaine maketh himselfe King of Persia.

The conquests of Tamberlaine.

No memorie in recorde, of his warres and battailes.

The great & happy inclination of Tamberlaine.

Baptista Fulgosa, of Tamberlaine's Originall.

Tamberlaine made a King in sport among Boyes.

Tamberlaine's first acte, was robbing of Merchants.

The King of Persia's Captaine, and his power ioyned with Tamberlaine.

His discrete order among his men of Warre.

and each one according to his merrite, wherby he was both beloued and feared. He instructed and ledde his men in such good readinesse, that euen in an instant (when he saw time to fauour him) by a meere signe which hee made, each man knew what hee had to doo, and how to come againe into his meete place. For (indeede) he led so powerful and great an Armie, as the World would hold it rare in any man to do the like.

His Iustice in carriage of his Campe.

In brieffe, his Camp resembled one of the best Citties in the world, because all Officers were there in good order, euen as if yee beheld a great number of Merchants, well furnished with all things necessary for the field. He would not suffer any Pillings, Pilferies, Theftes, Forcings, or Violences, but chasticed such as were guilty therein, very rigorously. By these meanes, he carried his Campe so well provided of al things, as the best City of any Land (in the most assured times of peace) could desire no better. Hee would haue his Souldiers to make their glory in their valiant behaiour, vertues, and prouidence. And in those regards, he would see them well payed, honored, praised, and cherished them, and (yet for all this) held them in strong subiection.

His delight in his soldiers Tamberlaine both King & Emperor.

Being becom thus both King & Emperor, of manie kingdomes and Prouinces in Asia, he had an infinite number of people resorting to him from all partes, (beside them that depended on him) only for the faire renoune of his Royall Vertues, so that he commanded a farre greater Army, then euer did King Darius or Xerxes. For they that speake of him, do say, that he had foure hundred thousand Horsmen, and sixe hundered thousand foot Soldiers, with whom he went in conquest of the lesser Asia. Whereof when the great Turke (named Baiazeth) was aduertised, who was Lord thereof, and held then his siege before Constantinople, hauing formerly conquered many Prouinces in Greece, and her Neighbouring Territories, making himselfe the richest and most feared king on the earth, he was constrained (immediatly) to rayse his siege, and passe into Asia with all his people, mustering vp so many more as hee could all the way he went. It is reported, that he had as many horsmen as Tamberlaine, and a great number of foote men, all well experienced: especially in regard of the wars, wherein hee had long before exercised them against the christians. So Baiazeth, like a worthy-minded Captain, perceiuing he could by no other meanes resist this puissant Emperour, resolved to make head against him, & giue him battell, confiding infallibly in the great Vertue of his followers. Wherefore, being come neere to the confines of Armenia, where each of the hauing prepared their people like aproued good warriors, euen vpon the point of day-breake, they began the most braue & cruell battel (as I think) that euer was fought, considering the great number of their men, with the solid experience declared on either side in cases of warre, sustained by valour and dexterity in all their Captaines. So that they fought most cruelly all the whole day, killing themselues, because they could not conquer one another, nor behold to which side the victory enclined. Til towards the Euening, when the Turks power began to faile and stoop, yet more by multitude then power; for there dyed the greater number of them: and (as one saith) there remained 200000. men on his part, but al the rest were discomfited, and turned their backs.

Baiazeth the great Turke besieging Constantinople.

Baiazeth resolued on battel against Tamberlaine.

A whole day spent in the battell.

When Baiazeth behelde this aduersé Fortune, to giue fresh courage vnto his warriors, and to turne them to a Newe fight, he shewed the true valor of an vnconquerable spirit, and ran amongst his enemies, with royall indignation. All which notwithstanding, hee was so ouercharged with blowes, that he was beaten from his horse, and taken before any help could rescue him. Then was he brought to great conquering Tamberlaine, who caused him to be shut vp in a Cage of Iron, and led along with him wheresoeuer he went. He was fed with the crums of Bread that came from Tamberlaines Table, and with scraps and morselles which were throwne vnto him, as if hee had bin a Dog, as alreadie wee haue declared in the life of Baiazeth: which may serue to vs as a memorable example, lest we should glorify our selues in the flatteries of worldly pompe and riches. For he who (but yesterday) was such a powerful ruler ouer men, was brought to day into such extreanity, as to feede like a Dogge, and in Dogges company. And this happened by the Fortune of one man, who formerly had beene but a fillie Heardef-man, Baiazeths army foyled, & he taken prisoner, & kept in an Iron Cage.

The great & nuserable deiection of Baiazeth, to be fed and vied like a Dogge.

or

or (as others say) a poore Soldier, grown vp to such an estate of greatnesse; as (in his time) not any one could bee found, that durst or might equall himselfe with him. As for the other, who was borne in such height and magnificence, behold how one day could quite ouerthrowe him. These things are sufficient in themselves, wholly to reclaime men from worldly affectations, onely to loue and desire the fauour of Gods blessings.

Great Tamberlaine hauing thus ouercom all Asia the lesser, which before was subiect to the Turke; he turned towardes Egypt, and razed all Syria, Phoenicia, and Palestine, with all their Neighboring Iurisdiccions, taking (by force of arms) many notable and famous Citties. And among others, Smyrna, Antioche, Tripoli, Sebasta, and Damas. Afterward, beeing come into Egypt, the Soldane and the King of Arabia, beside many other Provinces assembled themselues against him: but in trying the fortune of battaile, they were throwne into the rout, spoiled and vanquished. so that the Soldan was glad to saue himselfe by flight. Neuerthelesse, the Conqueror might easilie haue taken Egypt from him, had hee not found it ouer-difficult, to conduct so puissant an Army thorow the sharpe deserts. For which cause hee deferred to pursue him any further, but contented himselfe (as then) with subduing the rest of the limittrophing parts.

One reporteth, that he was euer very iocund, when hee found any stout resistance in his enemy, because it afforded him the better occasion, for employment of his wit and industrie. As it happened to him at the Cittie of Damas; for after he had taken it by power, the cheefe and principall men that were within it, withdrewe themselues into so strong a Fortresse, as was verily reputed to bee impregnable for any humaine strength. Yet afterward, they would com to composition with him, which he vtterly refused, and would haue them either to fight it out, or else to submit themselues to his mercie. And perceyuing the scituati- on of the place to be good & high; within few dayes, he builded a strong Forte, both neere and much higher then the other, wherein hee vsed such speedy expedition, as the enemy could not by anie means hinder the erection thereof. And hauing finished it to his owne liking, his battry plaied so mainly on the other Fort both Night and day, that they could enioy no rest, vntill he had it in his full possession.

Another Author also hath recorded, that he obserued certaine Ceremonious Customes in his assaults. For first he would haue a White Tent or Panillion, to bee erected before the City or Towne which he came to besiedge. Heereby hee signified to the Inhabitantes, that if on that day, while his White Tent stode vp, they had any will to yeeld themselues to him, hee graunted their liues; and all their goods in safety.

The second day, a Red coloured Tent was set in the same place of the other, & thereby he declared, that if (as yet) they submitted themselues to saue the residue, the Heades and Maisters of each house, should be put to death, and all the other liues preserued.

But on the third day, his dismal black Tent was aduanced; whereby hee gaue them plainly to vnderstand, that the gate of all clemencie & compasfion, was now quite shut vppe; and whosoever on that day, or any day after, either yeelded, or were taken; men or Weomen (without any regard of sex or quality) were all certaine of death, and the City it selfe both sacked and burned.

I herefore, it cannot be denyed, but that the man was very cruell, albeit hee was otherwise endued with many excellent vertues. In this respect, it was especially obserued and reputed, that God had raised this man, to chastice insolent Kings, and proud people. For confirmation whereof Pope Pius, who lived in his time, or at the utmost, within eight or ten yeares after, wrote of him in this manner:

Tamberlaine beeing come to besiedge a strong Citie, that would not submit it self, neither the first or second daies, which were the limitations for pittie and mercie: The third day being come, the Inhabitants confiding on an vncertaine hope, as perswaded, that they should begge compasfion of him, did set open their gates; and marshalling their Weomen and Children in the foremost rankes, all cloathed in White, and carryeng Olive Branches in their handes, cryed ons with lowde voyces, humbly desiring mercy, which doubtlesse they could not haue sayed

Ggg of Great Tamberlaine proceedeth on in his conquests.

The Soldane of Egypt, saued his lite by flight.

The City of Damas taken by Tamberlaine

The strong Fort of Damas spoyled by Tamberlaine.

Three Ceremonious conditions obserued by Tamberlaine.

His White Tent.

His Red tent.

His Blacke Tent.

Tamberlaine was thought to be raised of God, for a scourge vnto Kinges and proud men.

Pope Pius his Wordes concerning Tamberlaine.

of in any other. But notwithstanding al this humiliation, when Tamberlaine behelde them in this equipage, he declared not anie signe of mildnesse, but in a contrary rough and sterne humour, called for a Squadron of his Horsemen, and commaunded them to Gallop fiercely on them, and treade them all to death with their Horses, and not to spare the life of one. Which presently they did, according to his command: and afterward, he burned and defaced the City, euen to the lowest foundation thereof.

A Geneway Merchant, much faouered by Tamberlaine

Another good Writer addeth to this of Pope Pius, that there was (at the verie same time of this bloody acte) a Geneway Merchant in the Campe, a man in high respect and familiar fauour with Tamberlaine, for continually he would conuerse friendly with him. This cruell deede, seeming horrid and hatefull to this Merchant, hee would needes enter into such boldnesse, as to demand of him: wherefore, he vsed such crueltie, to them that yeilded, and humbly sued for mercie? He entering into immeasurable choller, his face fiered with rage, and his eyes seeming to shoote foorth fiery sparckles, returned this answer vnto the Merchant. It appeareth to thee, that I am a meer man; but therein thou much abusest thy iudgement. For I am none other thing, then the wrath of God, and the destruction of the World: therefore, looke wel to thy self, that thou presume no more into my presence, except thou meanest to bee punished, according as thy audacious folly well deserueth. Which Wordes, when the Merchant had heard, he departed suddenlie, and was neuer afterwarde seene within his Tent.

His answer to the Merchant.

The returne of Tamberlaine home to his Countrey, after all his victories.

These things beeing thus accomplished; and this Great Man hauing Conquered most potent Countreyes; as also preuayled against, and slaine many Kings and great Lordes, not finding anie in all Asia able for to resist him: hee returned home to his owne Countrey, laden with infinite spoyles and riches, beside woonperfull supplies of people, from all the parts he went thorow, where the thirde moitie of their wealth also, was willinglie brought vnto him.

There he caused to be builded, a very strong magnificent Cittie, and inhabited by those people, which (as wee haue already saide) he brought home with him, from the lands and straunge kingdomes, subiected to his obedience: which Companies of so manie Nations, were great personages, and abounding in Treasure: and therefore (by the helpe of Tamberlaine) they made it the most sumptuous Cittie in the world, in regard of so many people, which enlarged it both in circuit and amplenesse, so that it abounded in pompe and wealth.

The most sumptuous Cittie in the world builded by Tamberlaine

10 But in the end, this great Emperour Tamberlaine, albeit he maintained his estate in so powerfull authority, yet notwithstanding (as a fraile man) hee payed the debt due to Nature; and ending his dayes, left two Sonnes behinde him. But they differed very farre from their father, as appeared by most euident signes, not only in regard of the great discord which was betweene them, but also their incapacity, not knowing how to keepe and maintaine so great an Empire, as their father had conquered and left vnto them. For the Sonnes of Baiazeth (whome they kept as prisoners) beeing aduertised of their dissention, got away into Asia, wher what by vertue of their great spirite, and diligence vsed among the people (whom they found willing and forward in their assistance) they recouered their former lost goodes and possessions; the like did the other Kings & Princes, whom Tamberlaine had despoiled of their estates. So, by succession of time, the Empire began in such sort to decline, as coming to our daies, ther is found no mention made of him or his linage.

His death and discord between his two Sonnes.

The Sons of Baiazeth recouered their lost possessions.

40 True it is, that Baptista Ignatius, a great inquisitor into Antiquities, saith, that he left two Sonnes, in possession of those Countries and Prouinces which their father had conquerd in the parts about Euphrates, & that their successors inherited them, vnto the time of K. Vsancafanus, against whom, Mahomet the Turke waged battell. It is also said, that the heirs of this King Vsancafanus (according to the opinion of many) came to bee first Sophye, and from them the Sophies Empire was deriued, which to this day, maintaineth it selfe as a great enemy against the Turke. 50 But bee it howsoeuer, it is easily presupposed, that the history of this great man (if it had bin really set downe in writing) would haue bin most memorable, because many worthy things, might haue bin therein obserued. As for my selfe, I haue neither seene or read more then ye haue Baptista Ignatius, a famous Historian, concerning the historie of Tamberlaine.

The Sophies Empire came from Tamberlains heirs

Fortune did neuer truly turn hir back on Tamberlaine.

Baptist. Fulgos. in lib. de Colloc. Pap. Pius in descrip. Orb. pars 2 Plat. in vit. Bon. 9.

heard; and I am verily perswaded, that there is not much more recorded of him. One onely thing is confirmed by all that haue written of him, that he neuer sawe fortune to turne her backe against him: neuer could he be any way vanquished; neuer did he enterprize any thing, but he effected it; and neuer did his industrie and courage faile him, in any attempt whatsoeuer. And therefore wee may (by good reason) equall him, with any other (without exception) of the most renowned in former ages. And al this discourse I haue collected out of Baptista Fulgosa, Pope Pius in his second part of the worldes description; Platina, in the life of Boniface the 9. Baptista Ignatius, Mattheus Palmierus, and out of Campinus, in his history of the Turkes.

10

20

30

40

50

or divulging of their memory, least the people might thereby bee infected, and their successours should heare, that such abomination hath bene tollerated and supported by men, or such enorme and sinfull acts committed. Neuer helesse, I am constrained to write of him, who (in all kinds of iniquity) out-went all his predecessors, and admitteth no comparison of any other that followed him, how peruerse and wicked soeuer hee was. And therefore, I say, that our Naturall Philosophers, who described the Nature of hearbes, did no way lessen their benefit and aduantage, by declaring such as were hurtfull and venemous, to the end, that we might shunne them: then in reuealing those of greatest Vertue, for our vse and seruice. For a Prince now liuing, and he that shall come after, by beholding how detestable the one was and is, in the memory of men, he will shun all occasion of his resemblance. And likewise, any people, that haue a good, wise, and vertuous King, knowing howe much other Nations haue been or are afflicted by the turbulent and wicked gouernement of euill Princes, will be the more thankfull to God, and esteeme themselues verie happie, in meeting with such a wise and well-minded Prince. So praying for the life of such a Soueraigne, they will serue him with the greater loue and loyaltie. And those people, that haue an euill and bad disposed Prince, wil patiently indure him, knowing, that there haue bin some more wicked then he. Moreouer, the Reader, by perusing the liues and deeds of those euill Princes; well considering, what vnfortunat ends they haue had, and the paucity of time that their raigne lasted.

Comparison by the nature of hearbs.

Example by good and bad Princes.

Example of people toward good Princes and Tyrant.

Heliogabalus the Sonne of Antoninus Caracalla.

Opilus Macrinus elected Emperor, and soone after slaine in Bythina.

CHAP. III.

Of Heliogabalus, Emperour of Rome; his most strange vices, and deformitie of life.

WE haue spoken of a valiant and famous man, who by the meanes of his worth & valour, attained to the verie highest degree of Fortune. But now I am desirous to speake of another man, the most voluptuous & impertinent person that euer was; named Heliogabalus, Emperour of Rome contrary to all right and reason. I am the rather desirous to speake of him, to the end, that these contrarieties being compared together, the strength and wisdom of the one may be the more clearly discerned; and the sin and pusillanimity of the other auoided. And yet let me tell yee, that the vices and disorders of Heliogabalus. (and many other like him, & as vicious as he) were in so great number, as it is no way possible for me to recount them all. Beside, I haue euer helde it fitting, to leaue such horride infamy vtterly vnspoken of, euen for the preservation of comon honesty. For, in very deede, there haue bin some kings and Emperours so vicious and wicked, that meere modesty forbiddeth any speech of them, to auoide dispersion

The reason why the Author speaketh of Heliogabalus

The wicked liues of some Emperors & Kings, and omission of their publication.

Heliogabalus chosen Emperor, & confirmed by the Senate.

The incontinent and luxurious life of Heliogabalus.

His pusillanimity and cowardice.

A Senate or Congregation of women.

Women attending on him instead of Pages, & a chamber of women of Antoninus Heliogabalus, who getting the greater part of the Romaine Army to ioyne with him, attained to such reputation in the Army (by Challenging the Antonines name, so highly renowned in Rome) that immediately after the death of Macrinus, he was chosen Emperor by the Soldiers; which hee accepted, and sent his Letters to Rome, where hee was also confirmed Emperor by the Senate: vnder this hope and perswasion, that hee would proue to be a good Prince. Returning home afterward to the Cittie, and perceiuing himselfe to bee both well receyued and obeyed, he made no long delay of discouering his bad life. And because I desire not to tardie his History, or stay at any perticuler points thereof, I would come to his manners, whereby he was knowne so much shamelesse and depraued in his Carnall Concupisences, lubricious affections towards women, & other abominations in Luxurie, as (I thinke) no man can be found so copious in words, that could bee able to expresse them. Beside, hee was so cowardly faint-hearted & subiected to women, that at the first time he entred the Senat, he brought his mother with him to make his entrance, and would haue her opinion and Iudgement to be demaunded, vpon the difference of occurring occasions, so that she was alwayes present, at all determinations and Statutes of the Senate, which neuer before had beene seene or heard of, that any womans voice was allowed in the Senate.

Not contented heerewith, he erected a Senate and congregation of women, to iudge and discide matters of State; and such things as appertained to their Feminine Lawes and customes; in which Senate, women only ruled & commanded.ouer & beside this, he had in his pallace (in steade of Pages and braue attending Squires) a company of imodest & common women; in whose conuersation he tooke such pleasure, that he brought into Rome (from al parts of his empire) al such women as were found to be of that quality. Of them he made a publick Chapter, and came himselfe amongst them in the habit of a woman, and (like a valiant Captaine amongst his warlicke troopes) made a long Oration to them, calling them his Companions in armes; which are the proper tearmes of our worthiest

Captaines, when they purpose to congratulate their Soldiers. Whatsoever he deliberated and consulted in this Senate of Strumpets, was newe and vnsuall fashions, of immodest and veneriall behaviour, wherewith his lustfull appetite could neuer be satisfied. After this Senat and Capitoll of common Whores, hee made a receptacle or Colledge of both he and the Bauds, and of lewd shameles Children, which prostituted themselues publickely: for whose prouision and nourishment, hee appointed certaine great sums of money.

This vnwoorthy and immodest man, was so copious in all kinds of wickednes; that albeit he was (by nature) a very comly personage: yet he would paint himself, as vaine Women vse to do. Nay more, he declared his disposition to bee so effeminate, and desirous to be a woman indeed; that, for his better attaining thereto, he assembled the most excellent Physicians and Chirurgions of those times, and suffered them to make woundes and open places in his body, whersoever they could best deuise them; prouided, that he might thereby bee the more enabled, to haue the companie of a man, euen as with a Woman. And resolving to become so indeede, hee caused the secret parts of a man to be taken from him, to the end, that hee might receiue delight by the one lewdnesse, when hee was past the other. The most infamous and abhominable villaines in this lubricity, were his most esteemed friends and fauourites, and while his authority continued, hee gaue them the full administration of the Empire, and gouerned himselfe only by their Counsell, banishing all the wise & learned men; amongst whom, were expelled out of Rome, those two most famous and renowned Lawyers, Sabinus and Vlpianus. He was very curious in finding out new lasciuious inuentions, and meanes for Paillardise, such as (before) had neuer beene thought of. Hee would bee drawne in his Chariot by great and mighty Dogges; and other whiles by tamed Lyons, but that was seldom; and oftentimes hee was starke naked, sitting so in his Chaire, and then hee would bee drawne thorough the Cittie, by four the fairest and youngest Weomen, who likewise must bee wholly naked, to manifest publickely his excessiue turpitude. His vtmost

His consultation among his three-Senators.

A Colledge of three and hee Bauds.

He coueted to shew himselfe euery way like a woman

Sensuality the like seldom heard of.

Sabinus & Vlpianus banisht out of Rome.

How he rode in his chariot thorow Rome

vtmost intention and principall end, was to decke, paint, and so compose himselfe, that he might therby incite others of the like humor, to pursue his wickedness in the same Nature.

Beside all this, he violated one of the Nunnes and Vestall Virgins, who (in the Romaines vaine Religion) were held to be most sacred, and in them, Chastitie was aboute all things most commended. Onely in such skirmishes and battayles, this dishonourable Emperour spent most of his life time.

In like manner, hee employed not his riches and reuenues in the warres, or in publicke buildings, but to inuent and finde out all meanes, whereby to incite and prouoke people, to bee insatiable in beastly Luxury, voluptuous lubricity, & other Vices whereof we shal speak hereafter; but especially his lauish expences were intollerable, in delicate and delicious Viands, such as were rare, and neuer vsed before. Neuer would he sit downe, but amongst Flowers and odoriferous smels, of Muske, Amber, with other singular and excellent fauours. Neuer would he eat any meats whatsoever, except they were of vnauewable price, for it was his vsuall saying; That there could be no better sauce or appetite, then by deerenesse. Hee clothed himselfe in Garments of Gold and Purple, enriched with Pearles and other precious Stones. Not so much as his shooes, but they were decked with stones of inestimable value: for they were cut and carued with Medalles and other Engrauings, of extraordinary and admirable Art and cost. In these things, hee spent more then the reuenues of al the Princes, as well Christian as Heathen; & yet they sufficed not.

The Chaire wherein he sat, was wholly couered with rich Silks and Gold. His Chambers & Guardrobes, al ouer thick strewed with Roses and others Flowers. And from his bed-chamber to his chaire of State; and from thence, to the place where he mounted on horsebacke, it was all ouer adorned with costly Tapistries, great Pearles, Diamonds, and inestimable precious Stones.

At such times as he pleased to mount on hors back, he would haue the ground couered with the dust of Golde and Siluer, especially where he should sette his feete, because he scorned to tread vpon

the earth, as other men did. His Chambers, Hals, and other places of delectation, were alwaies couered with Roses, Violets and Lillies. He would neuer put on a shirt twice, nor lye in linnen sheetes after they were washed. Hee neuer wore a Garment, Hose, or shooes, two seueral times; and Rings which he hadde once pluckt off his Fingers, hee would neuer put them on againe. Likewise he would neuer drinke twice in one Cup, whither it were of Gold or Siluer, but it remained onely to him, whose Office was that day attending on that seruice. His beds wher-on hee vsed to take his rest, were not of Wooll, Feathers, Purfled Silke, or such like, as those of other men: but made of the soft skinnes of Hares, and the smallest Down Feathers of Partridges Bellies. His Tables, Couches, Chests, Seats, and al other things, either for his Chamber kitchen, and his whole house, were al of fine Gold, yea, euen to the vessell employed for the basest seruice belonging to man. In sted of vsing Oyle in his Lampes, hee caused them to be filled with the richest Balmes that could be brought out of Indea and Arabia. Nay, his very Vrials of priuate seruice, were carued out of Christall, and deckt with precious stones.

When he rode abroad into the fields, to take the Ayre, there went with him six hundred Chariots and Litters, full of vnchast Damosels and bugging Boyes, with Maquereaux and Maquerellaes: and he was so strangely addicted to lust, that hee would neuer haue knowledge twice of one Woman. His meats (as we haue formerly saide) were of wonderful charges; for he neuer had a meal, which cost lesse then threescore Markes of Golde, which (according to common Computation) do value 2500. Ducates nowe in vse: and sometimes hee was so riotous, that a dinner would cost more then 60000. Ducats. He sought out al means, such as the like was neuer heard of, to be extream in expences: & to make it more apparantly knowne, he would promise aboute 2000. Marks of gold, that he might eate of a Phoenix, vwhereof it was said, to be but one onely in the vworld; and hee gaue the money, that search might bee made for that matchlesse Foule. In the greatest heate of Summer, hee would haue Snow brought to his Pallace from the Mountaines. When he was vpon

His wonderful singularity in many things by himselfe, as neuer the like was heard of.

His disorderly riding abroad, with Whoores, Boyes and Bawds.

His costly meales & feeding.

His large offer to eate of a Phoenix.

He rauished one of the vestal virgins.

His wasting of the wealth and treasure.

His sitting, diet, & feeding.

His costly apparel, & his shooes.

His excess in expences.

The decking of his Chambers.

Gold & siluer dust spred like pin dust, where he should tread.

His delight in contrary diet.

Impossible meats to be had, best pleased him.

The prodigal diet of his Courtiers, & food of his Grey-hounds Dogges, and Lyons.

The emperor went beyond the Deuill, in one new de-uice.

Heliogabalus was extreame in all his behaviour.

the Sea-coasts, he would not feed on any Fish, but dainty Fowles and Birds, fetcht the furthest off: and when hee was most remote from the Sea, then he would eat nothing else but Fish, which must be brought in all post haste, to the end, that it might cost the dearer, and appear impossible to be had; for otherwise, he took no pleasure in his meat. He would feede on such things as were neuer herd of, for he would haue Pies made of diuers strange Foods: As of the crests of Cocks, & the tongues of Peacocks and Nightingales, excusing his pride heerein, by saying, that such meats were wholsom against the Epileptic, or falling sicknesse: hee would haue all of his Court to eate verie Delicate meats: As the Liuers of Pea-cocks, Partridges Egges; heads of Parrates and Popiniayes, Phefants, and Pea-cockes. He had a great number of Grey-hounds and other Dogges, which were fed with nothing else but the flesh of Swans and Geese. His Lyons that had bene made tame, were fed with Parrats, Popiniayes, and Phefants. Whereby it may be euidently discerned, that his whole delight was in incredible expences. When he passed thorow the streets of Rome, and saw nothing but ordinary things: hee would say, That he had compassion of the publicke Iouerty.

The disorders of the Emperour were such, and in so great a number, as they can no way be declared, but in a confused order. He ordained for the good gouernment of Rome, and for a new manner of vice, one especiall and singuler conceyte whereof the Deuill, himselfe neuer was aduised. For he gaue strict commaund, that those workes which ordinarilie were performed by day, should be done in the night time, and those of the night to be done in the day. So that, men arose when the Sunne began to set, and when they should salute each other with a Good night, they vsed then to giue a Good Morrow, whereby it should appear, that the world went wholly backward. Hee was extreame in all things. The Baths wherein he vsed to bath himself, were all filled with most precious Vnguents; and onely for this cause.

He made many Bathes in sundrie places, because hee neuer would wash himselfe but once in a Bathe: for then, it must be broken in pieces, onely to prepare other new Bathes for him. When he came to any Port or Hauen on the Sea, whatsoeuer Ships of Merchandizes were riding there, must be drowned with all their Wealth, only to please his idle fancie. Hee was reprooued by a verie deare friend, because his lauish expences were such, as must portend the issue of pueritie, whereto he replied, That there could be no better fortune for him in the Worlde, then to be heyre to himselfe, and to his wife. He saide moreouer, That he did not desire to haue any Children, because they should not conspire any way against him. For, if the Gods should giue him any, perhappes they would proue to be such in nature, as he himselfe was to others.

He had Bouffones, Stage-players, and idle Iesters, vpon whom (in sport, and to please his humour) he would haue sometimes so many Roses and Flowers cast, as some one among them, was sure to be stifted with the verie smell of them. Vpon a time, hee would needs haue them serued at a dinner, with all such meats as were serued to his owne Table, which were great and many in number, and excessiue in cost.

At another time, he caused the same kind of seruice to be set before them: but their meats were all made counterfet, eyther of Marble or wood, so that they wer kept at the Table, without eating of any thing. And yet afterward, they must wash their handes before they rose, euen as if they had fedde of all kinds of meats: and during this dinner time, drinke was offered them, but yet they might taste none. One while he would pretend an honorable inuitation of them, and all the vessels belonging to the seruice, were of curious Glasse, and all the counterfet meates in them, were of the same stufte. Another while, their seruice was of nothing else, but Wood, painted and figured in a liuely resemblance, so that in stead of satisfying their hunger, hee delighted to starue them. Many times, he would make feasts wherto none might be bidden guests, but eight Baldheaded men, other eight, lame crook-backt men; other eight, very gouty men, & deafe men, & dumb men, eight Moors, & very lean men, & very fat men, & of the least men that could be founde, and eight other of the greatest and Tallest men: onely, that these seuerall diuersities of men, might make a confused

iarring

His Answer
vpon reproof of his lauish prodigality.

How he dealt with Bouf-fones, Stage-players, &c.
in apparant scorn & moc-kage of them

A Dinner of Glasse, & another of wood

As confused feasts as euer were heard of, onely to please & delight himselfe

iarring among themselves, and thereby fill his spleene with the more laughter. Afterward, when the Feast was ended, he would bestow vpon these Guests, all the Gold and Siluer Plate wherein they had beene serued at the Table.

His bounty to his Cookes & deuifers of new and strange meats

He had very excellent Cookes, vpon whom he bestowed great Wages; beside, he was extraordinarily liberall and bountifull, to such as deuised, or found out new inuentions, of Daintie, Delicate, and vn-vs'd Meats. If any Cooke had prepared a new kind of food, which himselfe much commended, & yet was disliked by the Emperour: he that had so dressed and prouided it, should feed himselfe with no other Victuals, vntill he could inuent some other, which (by the nouelty thereof) might yeilde him contentment. When he had inuited many of his Friends to Dinner or Supper, and made them drunke with variety of Wines, till sleepinesse should lay hold vpon them: He would then make fast the doores vpon them, and (by a secret prepared way) send in Beares and Lyons, which had neither teeth nor claws, so that by the behavior of those Beasts, many of the Guests haue beene found to be dead with feare. He was continually at very great and excessiue expences, by keeping all kindes of furious Beastes in Rome, which were brought thither from all strange and farre off Countries. Behold the verie best and honestest exercises, of this humorous Emperour.

His kindnesse to his friends, when he had made them all drunke.

Heliogabalus had deuised and prepared means for his owne death.

But being wearie with speaking of so bad a man, let me tell ye what his ende was: albeit himselfe had determined to worke his owne death, by other meanes then it happened to him. For, he had prouided diuers precious Instruments, where-with to take away his owne life, whensoever any necessity should there-to enforce him. And it was a common speech vs'd by himselfe: That as his life had beene extreame, euen so he would haue his death to be; to the end, that all men might say; No Man euer liued and dyed like him.

He had prepared sundry Cordes or Halters of Silke, where-with to strangle himselfe when neede required: because wicked and bad minded men, doe continually liue in feare. He had also a Poyson readie, very quicke and speedie for death, which he kept enclosed in vials made of Emeralds and Iacincts, onely for the excellencie thereof. He had likewise made an high Tower, wholly couered and engirt with Leaues and Plates of Gold and Siluer: the pavement whereof was of rich and inestimable sharpe-pointed Stones: whereon he purposed to cast himselfe naked and head-long downe, when misfortune should reduce him into such extremity. And yet notwithstanding, none of these deuises did any way auaille him; because (long time before) a secret conspiracy was contriued & vowed against him.

Tyrants and leud men liue daily in feare.

A conspiracy deuised and sworn against him.

After that the Souldiers of his own Guard, had slaine all his ad-herents and fauourites in the Pallace: they found him hidden in a darke nooke or corner of a Chamber, where, without permitting him to make any election of his death, or the least leysure that could be; they stabd him with their Weapons. Afterward, hauing drawne him (like a Dogge) thorow all the streets and precincts of Rome: they fastned two verie great stones about his necke, and then threw him into the Riuer of Tyber, to the end, that his body might neuer after be found, but so to remaine without any other Sepulcher; and this was done by consent of all the people. And as concerning the Senate, order was taken among them, that the name of the Antonini (which had beene attributed to him) should be taken away: and when any speech was to be made of him, they should tearme him the Tyberine, or the trailed through the streetes, because these names would preserue a memoriall of his death. Which (indeed) was worthy and conformable vnto his life; for any good minded man, when he maketh due consideration thereof, will be both satisfied and comforted, approouing the righteous iudgements of God.

The manner of his death, and casting his bodie into the Riuer of Tyber.

The decree of the Senate for altring his name.

These things are related in the life of this Emperour, by diuers learned and worthy Authours, among whom particularly, as men of good note and credit, are Aelius Lampridius; and Iulius Capitolinus speaketh a little thereof, in the life of Macrinus. Spartianus, in the life of Septimius Seuerus; And likewise Sex-tus Aurelius Victor; beside Eutropius. And Aelius Lampridius. Iulius Capitolinus. in vit. Macrin. Spartian. in vit. Septim. Seuer.

And because the matters which I have declared, may appeare hardly to be beleued: I thought good to alleadge the Authours names, for testimony of the truth, and mens further satisfaction; especially in such strange cases, depending vpon so great a difficultie of credence.

CHAP. III.

The Admirable Continency, both of Alexander and of Scipio; And which of them was most to be preferred for that vertue.

The fauour of vertue taketh away the foul smell of vice.

How Scipio entreated a young beautiful Lady of Carthage.

How Alexander the Great vsed the wife and mother to king Darius

HAuing read the abominable deedes and vices of wicked Heliogabalus: mee thinkes, it fitteth best, to declare the vertuous actions of some Princes, only to take away the foule tast and fauour, which our senses haue receiued by his horrid pollutions. And among the most remarkable, I finde Alexander and Scipio, of whom Aulus Gellius made a Probleme, to wit: which of them both was most vertuously enclined. Scipio entring by force of Armes into the new City of Carthage, among other Captiues and Prisoners brought vnto him: there was a young Gentlewoman (of admired beauty) presented vnto him. He being then in the very floure of his youth; could easily conquer his owne affections, and would commit no act of dishonour with the Virgine. But after he was informed, that she was of great birth, noble house, and affianced to a worthy Lord of Spaine: he sent for her Parents and betrothed Husband, to whom hee gaue (as a dowry) the whole ransome both for her selfe and Father; which (vndoubtedly) was a signe of great continency, in a victorious Captaine towards his Captiue.

We reade likewise of Alexander the Great, who hauing ouer-come King Darius in battaile; his Souldiours took (in flight) the wife and Mother of that powerfull King. This Queene was of such exquisite perfection in beauty, as in all Asia she had not her equall. She was young, and of a most gracious countenance. He also was of like years to this Lady, and had no superiour ouer him, to whom hee should yeild an account of his actions. And yet, albeit he was aduertised by all his people, of her rarity in beautie: yet would he not haue an euill thought towards her, but sent an especiall fauourite of his, named Leonatus, to comfort her. And, to the end that he might auoid all occasion of suspition; he would not see her, neither suffer that she should bee brought before him: but caused her to bee serued with no lesse honour and reuerence, then as if she had bene his naturall Sister. Hephestion, a Greek Author, hath so set it downe; Aulus Gellius referreth the Historie to him, and Plutarch credibly confirmeth it. And yet neuertheless, Aulus Gellius leaueth it in doubt, in which of these two great men appeared the greatest continency.

It may be saide, that they were both equall, because they both determined to containe themselues, the occasions being equall: but, for my selfe, I would open the way to dispute on this question. And mee thinkes, he that would defend in fauour of Scipio, may say, that he assured himselfe most on his continence; and had very great iudgement therein: considering, that he durst suffer so sweete and faire a Virgine, to bee brought into his presence, by the sight of whom, no inordinate appetite could so preuaile over him, as to stirre him one iot from his first resolved purpose. But it was not so in Alexander, who stood in feare of seeing his Lady, and knew not what he might be forced vnto, if he should see her. On the other side, a man may alleage on the behalfe of Alexander, that (in this case) he merited more then Scipio, and excelled him in one point: to wit, in that he would not see the Queene, because hee would not sinne so much as in thought. For in his vertue, hee had a much greater fancy to preferue his continence, in regard, that (knowing humane frailtie) he would shun all occasion that might happen, whereby he should be drawne into perill. And heerein we may safelie say

Hephestion.
Aulus Gellius.
Plutarch.

The difference in whom appeared the most continency.

Scipio preferred before Alexander.

Alexander excelled beyond Scipio.

lay, that hee equalled Scipio in continence; yea, & exceeded him in thought, and diligence for preseruing it. I haue but touched these two pointes, to the end, that euery man may iudge according to his owne mind.

Quintus Curtius.
Diodorus Siculus in vit. Alexander.

Neuerthelesse, true it is, that Quintus Curtius, and Diodorus Siculus, doe write in the life of Alexander; that hee saw and saluted both the Wife and mother of Darius, on the day after the victorie, and that then he vsed wordes of good and true amity. For, as he entred into the place where they were, with a purpose to see them; he was accompanied with his intimate friend Hephestion, who resembled him both in age and habits.

Whereupon, the Mother to King Darius, thinking him to be Alexander; saluted him with such reuerence, as be-seemed a Prisoner to behold her Conquerour. But finding her selfe (afterward) to be deceiued; as ashamed thereof, shee lookt red, to excuse her errour, which Alexander perceiuing, he said vnto her: Mother, doe not displease thy selfe for that which thou hast done, because there is no error committed: for this man is Alexander as well as my selfe. Declaring by these wordes, that his Friend was another selfe to him. It seemeth, that this visitation contradicteth that which others say, reporting that he would not see these Weomen. And yet notwithstanding, both these opinions may be maintained. For they which say, that he would not see the Wife of King Darius: doe inferre thereby, that he would not immediatly see her, so soone as she was taken, but sent to visite her by Leonatus. And after her greefe was in some measure qualified: he went in person, both to see and honour her. But be it howsoeuer, it was an Act of great honesty, and if it were not greater then that of Scipioes: yet (in my mind) it may be equalled with it.

The words of Alexander to the Mother of K. Darius.

The Authors defence of both the opinions.

CHAP. V.

Of diuers Lakes, Springes, Fountaines, and Riuers, the waters whereof haue contained very strange and wonderfull properties.

IN a former Chapter, where we discoursed of waters, we made a promise to relate more at large, concerning the effects and properties of some other particular Waters. The first whereof, shall be that of the Lake in India, named * Asphaltites, or Asfaltida, which since hath bene called, Mare mortuum, The dead Sea. Of this water, many things are reported by Pliny, Columella, and by Diodorus Siculus. First of all, one affirmeth, that it engendreth neither Fish, Fowle, or any other liuing thing, and that not any thing (hauing life) can be sunke or drowned therein. So that if a man, or any other Creature be throwne thereinto, bound in such sort, as no way able to moue stir, or swimme; yet no drowning is to be doubted, these things are declared by Pliny.

And Aristotle, to yeild a naturall reason for this cause, saith: That the water of this Lake is grosse, very salt and thicke. Cornelius Tacitus addeth also this property, that by reason of some strong Winds blowing thereon; it should vse motion, and yet it stirreth not at all, neither is sailed on. The same Author, and likewise Soyinus in his Polyhist, saith, that at certain times, there is bred in this Lake a kind of Scumme or Lees, which is a most strong Ciment, & glueth or holdeth more strictly, then any Pitch whatsoever; and it is called (by Diodorus Siculus) Bitumen and Asfaltis. Whereupon it appeareth, that the vocable Asphaltis or Asfaltis, was deriued of this Lake named Asphaltida. We read beside of other Pooles and Lakes, which yeilded the like Ciment or Morter; as of one neere vnto Babylon, with the Morter whereof, Semiramis caused the

* A poole full of Brimstone, and neuer meue th.

Plin. in lib. 8. di. in Meteor Lib. 2.

Cornel. Tacit. in Lib. .

Iul. Solin. in Polyhist.

Diodor. Siculus Bitumen or Asfaltis.

The walles about Babylon cimented together.

Plin in lib. 5. Cap. 3.
* A Lake dedicated to the God of Hell, and thought to be an entry into Hell.

Theophrastus. Plin. in Lib. 5. Cap. 7.

Pompon. Mela. Jul. Solin. in Polyhist.

Vitruvius.

Solin. in Polybi. Theophrastus. Isidorus.

Ari. in Quest. Nat.

the stones to be knit together, which builded the great and renowned Cittie Wallies of Babylon. The River Jordane (the Water whereof is good and excellent) falleth into this Lake of Iudea: but through the discommoditie of the Lake, and falling into it; the Water loseth his vertue and goodnesse. It is reported, that Domitian sent thither to make tryall thereof, and found it to be very true.

Pliny writeth of another Water, in Campania in Italy, named * Auernus, neere to the Sea, by the Gulfe of Bayas, and this Poole hath such a propertie, that no Bird or Fowle flyeth ouer it, but it falleth downe dead into the Water: The like is said to be in Pusola. The Poet Lucretius, in rendring a naturall reason about it, saith: That through the thicknesse of Trees growing about it, and a mighty shadow thereby occasioned: a grosse and infectious vapor ariseth from it, which meerey stifeth the Birdes in their flight. Whereto he addeth, that the chiefe cause proceedeth from great Mines of Sulphure, which are in like manner neere it. Theophrastus and Pliny doe speake of a Fountaine, named Lycos, which is in Iudea, and of another in Aethiopia, the Waters whereof, haue a like power and efficacy, containing the very property of Oyle; for when it is put into Lampes, it burneth brightly.

Pomponius Mela, and Solinus, writing of Aethiopia, doe relate, that there is a Poole or Lake, the Water whereof is sweet and cleare: and yet notwithstanding, if a man doe bath himselfe therein, his body is in like sort annoiued, as if he came out of a bath full of Oyle. The like is affirmed by Vitruvius, and he saith moreouer, that there is a River in Cilicia, and likewise a Fountaine or Spring neere to Carthage, which haue the very same properties.

Solinus, Theophrastus, and Isidorus, speaking of two Welles, doe auouch, that if a woman drinke of one of them, she shall become barren. And contrariwise, if a sterrile Woman do drinke of the other Well, it causeth her to be very fruitfull. They write moreouer, that there is another well in Arcadia, whereof whosoever drinketh, dyeth immediately. Aristotle in his naturall questions, speaketh of one that is in Thrace, which worketh the like effect, and also of another in Sarmatia. In like manner, Herodotus saith in his fourth Muse, and Pliny and Solinus doe affirme the same, that the River Hypanis, which is great, and descendeth out of Scythia, hath his water sweete and good. And yet notwithstanding, there is a little Well or Fountaine entring into it, and so farre as his stream extendeth: the bitterness of the water of this Well, maketh the rest of the Water in the River so bitter, as no man can possibly endure to drinke thereof.

The very same Authours, and likewise Isidorus, doe write of two other Fountains that are in Boetia; the one of which doth cause the utter losse of memory; and the other is no meane comfort thereto, procuring withal, that such as drinke thereof, shall remember all thinges, whatsoever they haue before forgotten. They speake also of one Well, which temperateth and appeaseth the enusing prickles or Spurres of the flesh; And then of another, which as sharply dooth incite them. There is a River in Sicilie, named Arethusa; of which (beside their recordation of abounding in numberlesse shoales of Fishes, and such as seeme very good for foode) they write one wonderfull thing, to wit; that oftentimes there hath beene found in this River diuers notable things that were throwne into the River Alpheus, which is in Achaia, a Countrey of Greece. For this cause, they doe all maintaine, that the Water of this River, passeth through the entrails of the Earth (from the maine Fountaine) quite vnderneath the Sea, which is betweene Sicilie and Achaia.

The Authours that make this report, are such great persons, and worthy of credit; as they may well giue boldnesse to any man to write and certifie the same. Seneca affirmeth it; so doth Pliny; Pomponius Mela, Strabo, and Seruius, vpon the tenth Eclogue of Virgill.

Solinus and Isidorus make mention of of a well-spring, on the water whereof, if a man (that is to take an oath) do lay his hand; he must be carefull that hee take his oath truly and iustly, for if it be otherwise, his eyes will dry vp, and dye

Herodotus. Plin. in lib. 5. Jul. Solin. in Polyhist.

Two Fountains in Boetia of very strange quality.

The River Arethusa in Sicilie.

Alpheus a River of Achaia in Greece.

Seneca in lib. 3. de Quest. Nat. Plin. in lib. 7. Pom. Mel. lib. 2. Strabo in lib. 6. Seruius sup. 10. Eclo. Virg.

dye in his head. Pliny maketh the like relation of another Riuer, which will burne a periured persons hand, swearing thereby, and putting his hand into the water.

Philostratus, in his second Booke of the life of Appolonius Thianens, saith, that there is a Riuer, wherein if a Man doe wash his hands and feete, after hee hath taken a false and periured oath; he shall be immediatly covered ouer with Leprosie. Diodorus Siculus affirmeth as much of another Riuer. Now, if it do appear to any man, that these things are very hardly to be beleued: let him know, that Isidorus, a religious, holic, and most learned man, hath at large deliuered these reports out of no meane Authours. As also of Jacobs Well in Idumea, iustifying, that foure times in the yeare it changeth colour; and that from three moneths to three moneths, it becommeth troubled of it selfe; swelleth, looketh red; then greene; and yet afterward receiueth cleerenesse againe. He speaketh also of a Lake which is among the Troglodytes, that three times (by day and night) changeth his sweet rellish into bitternesse, and from bitternesse, to sweetnesse againe. Likewise, of another little streame in Iudea, which euery Sabbaoth day, waxeth dry of it selfe.

And the same is verified by Pliny, where he describeth another Fountaine, that is in the Countrey of the * Garamantes: which in the day time is sweet, but yet so cold, as it is impossible to bee drunke of. And in the night time it is so extreame hot, as whosoever putteth his hand thereinto, is sure to burne it; and it was called the Fountaine of the Sunne. Concerning this Fountaine, and that it is a matter of truth, diuers good Authours haue written: As Arianus, Diodorus Siculus, Solinus, and Quintus Curtius, in his History of Alexander the Great, and Lucretius the naturall Poet, yeildeth a reason for it.

But now I shall speake of a wonderfull thing indeed, concerning the Well or Fountaine Eleusina, which is a reposed, settled, and most cleere water. Neuerthelesse, if any Instrument be sounded (or plaid on) so neere it, as the water may be said (in opinion) to be within compasse of hearing the sound: it beginneeth immediatly to boyle so extreame, as the water swelleth and seetheth aboue his bounds, euen as if it reioyced at the sound of Musique. This is credibly confirmed by Aristotle, in his Booke of the meruailes of Nature; by Solinus in his Polyhystor; and by the Ancient Poet Ennius.

Vitruuius speaketh of a Riuer, named Chimera, the Water whereof is verie sweet: and yet notwithstanding, where it deuideth it selfe into two small streames or gullets; the one is sweete, and the other bitter. Wherefore it is to be presumed, that it draweth this bitter tast, from the earth where it glideth along, and therein appeareth to be the lesse maruailous. In which respect; as easily may be credited, the sundry properties of so many Riuers, whereof we haue already spoken: which would seeme no matter of wonder vnto vs, if their true occasions were apparantly knowne; no more the Riuer * Silarus, (auouched by the same Authours) which conuerteth into stone, any wand, slick, or branch throwne thereinto, as in many other places the like hath beene noted.

There is a Well in Illirica, the water whereof is sweete: but it burneth all things put into it, euen as if they were cast into a fire. Also in Epirus is another Well, whereinto if a flaming Torch be put, it quenchem it: but let it be put in before it be lighted, and of it selfe it giueth flame thereto. Alwaies till noone; and after, it waxeth ebbe and dry: but as the day declineth, it beginneeth to encrease in such abounding manner, that by mid-night it is top-full, and floweth ouer the brimme. It is said, that there is a Well in Persia, which causeth their teeth to fall out of their heads, that doe drinke thereof.

In Arcadia there are certaine Wells or Fountains, which doe deriue their Source and Current, out of diuers hills & Mountains, whose waters are so extreame cold; as no vessell, cyther of Gold, Siluer, or any other Metall can contain them, but whatsoeuer measure is filled there-with, is presently broken in pieces, for they cannot be contained in any other Vessels, but such as are made of the Horne-hoofe of a Mule. We should hardly belecue, that Riuers (though Philostratus in lib. 2. de vit. Appol. Thian.

The writings of Isidorus doe carry good credit.

Jacobs Well in Idumea.

A Lake among the Troglodytes.

* People in the midst of Lybia, next to the Pssylli.

Arianus. Diodo. Siculus. Sol. in Polyhist. Quint. Curtius in Hist. Alexan. Lucre. in lib. 6.

The strange Fountaine Eleusina.

Arist. in lib de Mirab. Nat. Solin. in Polyh. Ennius in lib. 4.

The Riuer Chimera, recorded by Vitruuius.

* A Riuer of Lucania, deuiding it from Picenum.

The Riuer in Epirus, that lighteth a quenched Torch.

Of strange Fountains or Springs in Arcadia.

Riuers falling into the earth and rising vp againe great distances of.

Fresh Riuer floating on the salt Seas.

The Riuer Nilus.

Two Riuer in Boetia.

* A Riuer in Macedonia.

* Where Silk wormes were first found.

A poole in Thrace.

A rare Riuer in Pontus.

Waters of riuer that cure diseases.

For Women great with Child.

(though exceeding in greatnesse) some of them should haue a sudden fall into the earth, concealing themselves there quite out of sight; and yet breake vp againe many miles of. We haue sundry good examples, to ease our doubt in this case: As Vadiana in Spain; Tygris doing the like in Armenia, though it be in Mesopotamia; and Lycus in Asia. There are likewise sundry Riuer of sweete and fresh Water, which entring into the Sea, doe passe along vpon the salt water, neuer mingling there-with. In number whereof, one is betweene Sicilie, and an Island, called Enaria, vpon the Coast of Naples.

We know very well, that in Egypt it neuer raineth, but (euen by Nature) the Riuer Nilus disbordeth it selfe, and watering all the Countrey, leaueth it moist, and apt to yeild fruite. There are two Riuer in Boetia, one of them is the cause, that such Sheepe as drinke thereof, doe beare blacke Wooll; and the other (in like manner) beareth all white Wooll. In Arabia is a Well, which maketh the VVooll of Sheepe, (drinking thereof) to looke Vermillion red: And of all those Riuer that haue this propertie, Aristotle hath spoken very largely. The Riuer * Lyncestris hath this quality, to make all men drunke that drinke thereof, euen as if it were with wine. In the Isle of * Cea (according to Pliny) there is a well, which whosoever drinketh thereof, becommeth nummed in all his senses.

In Thrace there is a Poole, which causeth the death of him, that eyther drinketh of it, or batheth himselfe therein. In Pontus also is a Riuer, which yeildeth a kind of stones that do burn, and when any winde ariseth, they breake into a flame, and the more they are in the water, the longer while they burne. These Authours haue also written of diuers Waters, that doe heale many diseases: whereof one is in Italie, named Ziza, which cureth all harmes happening to the eyes. Another is in Achaia, which if women doe drinke of, that are great with Childe; they shall haue a safe and speedy deliuerance. Many other there are, that doe cure infinite other infirmities: as the Stone; the Leprosie; the Feauer Tertian and Quartane, whereof more is said by Theophrastus, Pliny, and Vitruuius. In Mesopotamia is a Riuer, whose water is most sweet and pleasing to smell. Baptista Fulgosa, in his Booke of Collections, recordeth, that there is a well in England, which if any kind of wood be cast into it; in lesse space then a yeare, it is conuerted into stone.

The same man also testifieth, what likewise is confirmed by Albertus Magnus, concerning a Well in the higher Germany. And Albertus saith, that hee himselfe hauing a little wooden Boxe in his hand, did hold it in the Water: & so much of it as was within the water, became truly stone; but the rest remaining in his hand, continued Wood, as it was before.

Fulgosa further relateth the property of another Well, which is very strange indeede. For, if a man do walke about it, looking stedfastly into it, and keeping silence, not speaking a word, or vsing any voyce at all: the Water then continueth (as before) cleare and still. But if he speake (being by it) how little so euer it be, or neuer so low, eyther in going on, or in his returning: the Water presently troubleth it selfe, and becommeth to boyle in very strange manner. And hee deliuereth this vpon his own credit, as hauing (in person) made prooffe thereof. For, while he heedfully looked into the Water, not whispering, noysing, or speaking one sillable; he beheld it to be faire and cleare. But when he spake, the water was so strongly mooued and troubled; as if some liuing body had bin in it, to perplexe it in that disorder.

There is record made of a VWell in France, which is extreamely cold; and yet notwithstanding, great flashes and flames of fire haue beene seene to rise out of it. Pliny plainly saith, that many men make a conscience, in giuing any credence to these thinges: but they may well say, and assure themselves, that Natures great and wonderfull workes, doe demonstrate their power more apparantly in this one Element of water, then in all the rest beside. And maruailes doe hence arise, in so great number, that we should not repute any thing to be impossible: especially such as are warranted by so good writers, as those which formerlie I haue alleadged.

Baptist. Fulgos.
in lib. 7.

An experiment made by Albertus Magnus.

Baptist. Fulgos.
in lib. 7.

A wonderfull property in a water.

A strange well in France.

Plin. in Lib. 23
cap. 9.

Nothing should be esteemed impossible.

More-

Ferro in the Ile of the Canaries.

Water distilling out of a Tree in abundant manner, for the reliefe
of a whole Nation.

Simple people will credit nothing, but what they see themselvs.

Heate of the Sea in winter, and sundry other strange properties thereof.

A matter efpecially to be observed, concerning waters.

Morcouer, we are sufficiently enough certified, by testimony of those which haue scene it in our time, that in one of the Canarie Islandes, named Ferra, a place well inhabited with people, where, both there, and a great space likewise round about it, the Inhabitants haue vse of no other Water (as is very well knowne) but what they can (in a Bason or other Vessell) get from the weeping or distilling, which sweateth it selfe (in some abounding and plentiful manner) out of a Tree, which is in the midst of the Island. And yet, neither at the foote of this Tree, nor in any place neere about, is there any Spring, Well, or Riuer: all which notwithstanding, the Tree is continuallie full of moysture, so that from the Leaues, Branches, & Boughs, into such Vessels as are placed there for the purpose; the Water distilleth forth both day and night, and sufficient store is still fetcht thence, to serue the necessities and seruices of all the dwellers in the Island. And yet wee should hardly beleue this, if it were but recorded by Writing onelic, and not maintained by liuing eye-Witnesses: Therefore, let no man account that strange, which wee haue already declared: in regard that this Element of Water is so powerfull and necessarie, as his strength and qualities can neuer be sufficientlie knowne.

As for the Sea, it is saide to be more hot in Winter, then it can be in Summer, and more salt in Autumne, then at any other time else: but this is a matter of greater maruaile, that by throwing Oyle into the Sea, his rage and violence is thereby appeased. Beside, wee know it for most certaine, that into those partes of the Sea, which are furthest off from any firme Land, neuer any Snow doth fall; at what time soeuer.

For all which thinges, many good reasons haue bene deliuered; the most part whereof, are attributed vnto the propertie and qualitie of the Earth, and to Mines, where Springes haue their originall, and win their Current into Lakes, Welles, and Riuers. For prooffe whereof, it is manifested by that which wee daily behold, both in Vines and other Fruits of the Earth: that

10

20

30

40

50

they prooue better in one place, then they doe in another; because some are sweete, and others sharpe and sower; some good and very profitable, others hurtfull and mortiferous. The Ayre also becommeth corrupt and pestilentiall, in passing over an vnwholesome and noysome Countrey. What maruaile is it then, if Water, which pierceth and washeth the Earth, the stones, Mettals, Hearbs, Plants, and Rootes of Trees: should receiue their good or euill conditions, in whatsoeuer strange Nature it be; especially, being ayded by the power of the Starres and Planets?

CHAP. VI.

On what day of the yeare was the Incarnation, Natiuity, and Passion of our Lord Iesus Christ; And at what Age hee dyed. Of the auncient Houres; And of the error which is now in our common yeares.

WE haue declared already, in the Chapter of the World, how long the time was since the Creation thereof, vnto those daies of our Lord Iesus Christ, God & Man, when he pleased to take humane Flesh on him, and to bee borne of the most pure, holy, and immaculate Virgine Mary. Therefore I hold it both good and profitable; to relate and specifie, vpon what day of the yeare, and at what houre (with this blessed Natiuity) happened his holie Incarnation, and afterward his death; according to those sacred, true, and approued Historians which haue written thereof. We must vnderstand then, that the Emperor Octauius reigning at Rome, was the first that properlie might stile himselfe, to be Monarch and Emperour of all the World: for his Vnckle Julius Caesar was Dictatour onelic, and but for a small time too. This Monarch, hauing also shut vppe the Gates of Ianus Temple, and made peace vniuersallie throughout the World; In the two

H h and

Example of Fruits.

Example of the Ayre, and lastly of the Earth.

The Authors reason, vpon what cause he added this Chapter.

Octauius was the first Monarch and Emperour of the world.

Paulus Orosius. in lib. 7.

Aug. in lib. 15. 13. & 21. de Ser. in Natiuit.

Leo Papa. in Dist. Cap. 75. Quod die.

Sunday the day of christ's birth.

Wis. 18, 14, 15

Of the Angels salutation to the virgine, and her conception.

The hours of our Lordes birth and Incarnation, compared with the hour of his death and passion.

and fortith yeare of his Empire, and seuen hundred and one and forty yeares from the foundation of Rome (according to Paulus Orosius, and others Authours) the five and twentieth day of December, was our Lord, Saviour, and Redeemer Iesus Christ borne. Saint Augustine attesteth the same, following the Ecclesiasticall History, and other Historians.

It is further to be vnderstood, that this day was the shortest day in the whole yeare: because the Winter Solstice was then the five and twentieth day of December. The same Saint Augustine goeth on further, in his Sermons on the Natiuity: and yet notwithstanding, we shall speake hereafter, of those daies of December, whereon we haue the Solstice in our times. The holie Saints of Gods Church haue also written, that the day of our Lords birth, was the Sunday; so affirmeth Pope Leo likewise, and Vincentius the Historialist, in his Histories: and the hour of his being borne into this World, was midnight; according as the Church giueth vs to vnderstand, by this authority out of the Booke of Wisedome.

Dum quietum silentium tenerent omnia, & nox in suo cursu medium iter haberet: sermo tuus Domine a regalibus sedibus venit, &c. While all thinges were in quiet silence, and the night was in the midst of her swift course: Thine Almighty word came downe from Heauen, &c.

The most part of Historians doe hold, that at midnight also, the salutation of the Angell was made to the virgine Marie; and that she conceived on a Fryday, beeing the Equinoctiall of March. True it is, that some doe maintaine this conception to be in the euening, and at the beginning of the night. So then we may conclude, that his Natiuity or birth was on a Sundaie at mid-night, and his Incarnation or conception on a Friday, at the beginning of the night. Now, according to the most common opinion, at the like hour of his natiuity in December, and his Incarnation in March: the death & passion of our Lord (according as all do agree) was at the same hour of his In-

10 carnation, hauing accomplished those yeares, that it pleased him to remaine here on earth with men, and that it was the five and twentieth day of March. S. Augustine saith so in the places before alleaged; so doth Tertullian; S. Chrysostome; S. Cyrill; S. Hierome, and other holy Doctores. And it was in the Equinoctiall of the Spring time, according to S. Augustine in his Books of the Trinity, and his fore-named Sermons. Also, Paulus Orosius saith, that he should come the five and twentieth of March, and that this equality of daies and nights, named Equinoctiall, was then in those dayes which wee haue spoken of. Prophane Historians doe say as much, especially Macrobius, and others. To this purpose, there is one thing to be noted, whereof few people haue made any regard, and I thinke not very many vnderstood it: to wit, whosoener hath wel considered the true course of the Sunne, and of the yeare, and the day whereon our Lord came to be borne; the same day cometh not now to be as the five & twentieth day of December, neither his death and passion, to be the five and twentieth day of March, because the Winter Solstice is aduanced, and is now the eleauenth day of December; and the Equinoctiall of the Spring time, is now likewise the eleauenth day of March, little more or lesse, as any Man may easilie know, that hath but attained to any beginning in the knowledge of Astrologie. So that, to speake of our instant dayes, the yeare of the birth of our Lord, doth perfectlie compleate it selfe the eleauenth day of December; and the yeares of the Incarnation and Passion, on the eleauenth day of March. Because now at this present, the Sunne effecteth at these seuerall eleauen dayes, that which hee was wont to doe in those seuerall five and twenty daies.

40 And albeit, it would require some length of time, to declare the cause of this variation: yet I hold it not much amisse to speake somewhat heerein, to satisfie the mindes of honest meaning Men. Let me then tell ye, that this alteration ensuing, by reason of the accustomed yeare, where-with ordinarie account is now made, and which was so ordained by Iulius Caesar: dooth not conforme

Aug. in lib. do Trinit. & in Serm. de Nat. Paulus Orosius. in lib. 7.

Macro. in lib. 1.

An especiall matter of obseruation, whereof but slender regard hath bin made, concerning dayes and yeares.

A reason deliuered, concerning the variation of times

The common yeare, what it containeth in daies & hours

forme it selfe perfectlie with the true solitary or Solarie yeare, which containeth in it selfe, the true course and reuelution of the Sunne. For the common yeare (as makers of Alma-nackes, and other Computers of Ca-lenders doe demonstrate) is presupposed to haue three hundred sixtie five dayes, and sixe houres. Foure yeares make one day more (by those odde houres) aboute the yeare, which nameth it selfe Bissextile.

The true year and course of the Sunne.

Neuerthelesse, in this obseruance, there is a generall error, because to speake vprightlie; the true yeare, and course of the Sunne, hath three hundered sixty five daies, five houres, fortie nine minuts, and sixe seconds or more,
which are five sixe partes of an houre, or verie little lesse. Wherefore, these sixe houres being not perfected, but remaining defectiue by a sixt part: the four yeares cannot make an intire day offoure and twenty houres, there wanting two thirds of an houre, and some small matter more beside.

A consideration how the error ensueth by the ouerplus-houfe.

Then wee may say truely, that this error is as a small Pilfering Thiefe, stealing away (in foure yeares onelie) two thirds of an houre and somewhat more: how much preuaileth hee then in a thousand, sixe hundred, and the ouer-plus yeares? And yet in all this times great space, there are but foure-teene or fiftene dayes: which is the cause, that these especiall and remarke-able dayes, are come to the seuerall eleauenth daies of December and March, which were wont to bee on those other seuerall five and twentieth daies.

The error proceedeth not from our Astrologers.

Now, concerning this error, it may not be said (for all this) to proceed from our Astrologers; for they make their account perfect of the yeare, by the true and intire course of the Sunne.
Neuerthelesse, our Callendarians and Computers; doe hold the common yeare, making it to consist of three hundred sixtie five dayes, and sixe houres, albeit that the quantitie is lesse; as wee haue already approoued. By this meanes it happeneth oftentimes, that Easter, and some other of the moouable Feastes, are celebrated on other dayes then they ought to bee: in regard of the rules and orders, which

Of Easter, & other mouea-ble Feastis.

our fore-fathers obserued in making their Calenders and Almanackes, who held assuredlie in their pre-supposing, that the Equinoctiall continued firme.

Now, considering that this imported nothing to the saluation of mens Soules, little account was and hath bin made thereof: yet it were good (notwithstanding) this error should bee corrected. And I thinke, in the first generall Counsell heereafter to be assembled; there would bee prouision made for this case, as thereto fitly appertai-neth: For many worthy men haue written sundry Treatises on this Argument;
as Stoeflerus, Alberius, Poggius, Ioannes
Fernelius, and diuers others.

Authors that haue written on this alteratio of daies.

10

20

30

40

50

But returning againe to our purpose, to know of what age our Redeemer was when he died, the most part of ho-lie Doctours that haue spoken thereof, doe say: that he was aged thirtie three yeares and somewhat more; by so much as was from the day of his Natiuitie; the five and twentieth of December, to the like day of the moneth of March, when hee suffered. Others are of the mind, that hee dyed at two and thirtie yeares; and three moneths: And for eyther of these opinions, there are very apparant reasons, albeit I am loath to weary my Readers with the recitall of them. The Passion of our Lorde; was in the eighteenth yeare of the Empire of Tiberius, Successour to Octaui-us; according as Eusebius reporteth, and Beda in his Booke of Times. As for such as write, that he suffered in the fifteenth yeare of Tiberius raigne (as Eutropius, Lactantius, and others) it appeareth to mee, that they haue much fay-led therein; because themselues do say, that hee was borne in the two and fortith yeare of Octauius his Empire. So then, considering that this Emperour raigned yet fiftene yeares after, and confirming the time to the age of Iesus Christ: it may bee verie evidently knowne, that Tiberius had raigned eigh-teene yeares, when our Lord and Sauour suffered.ouer and beside these things, I remember one more high and especiall matter, found out and noted by Albertus Magnus, in his Booke of vni-uersall occasions, and which (in my judgment) is very notable, and this it is.

Of our Sau-
ours age whe
he died, sundry opinions.

*Euseb. in Hist.
Eccles. Cap. 7.
Beda in lib. de Temp.*

The time co-pared by iust account.

*Alber. Magnus
in lib. de Reb.
Vniuers.*

A matter well worth the observation.

The exaltation of the Son of Iustice.

Of our Sau-ours suffering at mid-day.

The Iewes diuision of daies and nights.

*Twelue for the day, and twelue for the night.

The daie of our Sauours suffering equall with the night.

It being a most certaine thing (saith he) as it is approoued by the authoritie of holie Fathers, that our Sauour was borne, the Sunne then being in the first degree of the signe of Capricorne, and iustly at midnight: in the selfe-same instant, mounted in the Horizon of the East parts, the signe of Virgo. Whereby appeareth, that the Starres declared, that he which was to bee borne of a Virgine, had for ascendent the signe Virgo. And in like manner, when the Sunne of Iustice or righteousnesse. dyed, and was exalted on the Tree of the Crosse (which was at mid-daie, as the Euangelistes doe confirme:) the Plannet of the Sunne was in the signe of Aries the Ramme, where it made the Equinoctiall, and where was then his exaltation; And this signe was accompanied with thirteene Starres, which might signifie Christ and his twelue Apostles. I set not downe this discourse to any other end, but onelie to shew; That all thinges obeyed, and yeilded themselues to the will of their Creatour, as is more amply declared by Albertus Magnus.

Now, that it should bee most true, that our Sauour suffered at mid-day; I hope to prooue it very apparantly. The holie Euangelists doe write, that hee was crucified at the houre called the sixt houre, and that he died at the ninth houre. It is to bee vnderstood then, that the sixt houre was iust at mid-day. For the Iewes and other Nations deuided (anciently) all the daies of the year, (how great or little soeuer they were) and likewise the nightes, into twelue equall portions, which they called * Planeticke houres. So that the houres of the daies in Winter, were small or short, and those of Summer great and long; and the houres of the night likewise opposite.

The houres of day began at the Suns rising; and the houres of the night, at his setting: by this meanes, at sixe houres it was mid-day, and at nine houres, it was three houres after mid-day. For the daie whereon our Sauour suffered, was equall to the night, as we haue already saide: and therefore the houres of the day then and there, were equally with ours now here. In which respect, it is to be vnderstood, that the houres then, were meant for such whereof our Sauour spake, saying: Are there not twelue houres in the daie?

Of the same houres it is spoken in the Gospell, of the Vineyard, that the Father of the Family went out at the eleuenth houre, to hyre Worke-men for his Vine-yard, and he payed the latest Commers as well as the other, which had been at the businesse from the daies beginning. In regard whereof, the first Workemen complained, saying: These last haue wrought but one houre, and wilt thou equall them with vs? Whereby may clearly be discerned, that from eleuen to twelue hours, was the ending of the day, because they said; These Men haue wrought but one houre: for if those eleuen houres had been as now, then it had beene other-wise. Againe, S. Luke saith in the place of the Passion; That the Sunne was darkned from the sixt houre; vntill the ninth houre. Whereby then we may know, that the sixt houre was the houre of mid-day, and the darknesse endured vntill the ninth houre; that is (with vs) three hours after mid-day. For if he had meant at sixe houres, as now in these dayes, it had beene a thing but naturall, for the Sunne to set, and bee obscured at sixe houres of the euening in March: but the sixt houre then, being our mid-day now, it was therefore a great and wonderfull Miracle.

CHAP. VII.

Of many thinges that happened at the birth and death of our Sauour Iesus Christ, declared by diuers learned and worthy Historians; beside those which are recorded by the holy Euangelists.

Lbeit that those things certified by the blessed Euangelists, happening both at the birth and death of Christ, were not only great and miraculous, but worthy (beside) of all Faith and beleefe: yet I account it verie conuenable, to make mention of some other admirable accidents, which were seene and recorded by other persons.

Paulus

Math. 20. 12.

Luke 23. 44.

Difference
of the houres then and in these dayes.

Paulus Orosius, and Eutropius, Historians in the time of Octavius.

A Spring of Oyle arising out of the ground in Rome, when Christ was borne.

A bright circle seene about the Sun in the day time.

Commeſtor in lib. de Hiſt. Scholaſt.

Templum Pacis fell to the ground at the birth of Christ.

Lucas de Tuy, Chronicler of Spaine, in the Authentick History of Spaine.

Paulus Orosius, and Eutropius, Writers belonging to Octavius, and Eusebius also doth say, that at such time as Iesus Christ was borne on earth, there happened in Rome, that in a common Inne or Tauerne; a Well or Spring of pure and excellent Oyle brake vp out of the ground, which for the space of a whole day, ran and issued forth incessantlie in great aboundance. It should seeme, that this Spring of Oyle, made application to the comming of Christ, which Word signifieth Anointed, in whom likewise all Christians are annointed. And that the common Tauern, whereinto all people were (indifferently) entertained and housed: should expresse our holy and true Mother of Church, the great Inne or common Harbour for all Christians, from whence should continually issue forth, all Christians, Catholickes, and louers of God. Eutropius addeth moreouer, that in Rome, and the neighbouring places there-about, euen in the full, plaine, calme and clearest time of the day; a circle was seene about the Sun, of as bright splendour and radiance, as the Sun in it selfe. The same Paulus Orosius further saith, that at the very same time, the Senate and people of Rome made free offer to Octavius Augustus, to entitle him chiefe Lorde: which hee refused, and by no meanes would accept; prognosticating to himselfe (yet without thinking thereon) that a much greater Lord then hee was then on the Earth, to whom that Title more worthily appertained.

Commeſtor, in his Scholaſtick Historie, affirmeth, that in Rome, vpon the same day: the Temple dedicated by the Romaines to Peace the Goddesse, fell in ruines to the earth. For they had formerly consulted with the Oracle of Apollo, to know how long the Temple should stand in good estate, and answer was made them; Vntill a Virgine should bring forth a Child, which they reputed to be vtterly impossible, and therefore their temple should stand for euer. Notwithstanding, at the Virgines deliuerance, Mother to the King of Heauen; it fell to the ground.

Hereupon, Lucas de Tuy, in his Chronicles of Spaine writeth, that hee found in the auncient Histories of his Countrey (hauing conferred and made iust

10

20

30

40

50

account of the time) that the very same night wherein our Sauour was borne, and at the very houre of mid-night: there appeared a Cloud visibly seene in Spaine, which gaue so bright a splendor, as if it had beene then the middle time of the day.

It is also to bee remembred, what I haue read in Saint Hierome, that at the same time as the virgine fled into Aegipt with her young Son; all their false Gods and Images fell downe, and vtterly defaced themselues. Also, the Oracles of those Gods, or Devils rather, as wee may more iustlie rearme them, where-with the people in those times were deluded: ceased their idle babling, and neuer afterward gaue any answer. This Miracle alleaged by Saint Hierome, seemeth to be approoued by that excellent man Plutarch; albeit hee was a Pagan. For, without giuing credit to those thinges, nor knowing wherefore they thus happened: hee made a particular Treatise, of the imperfections of Oracles. For euen then in his time, (which was soone after the Passion of Christ) men began apparantly to perceiue; that Oracles failed, and were full of defects. And he could alleage no other reason for it, in that Treatise: but that (as he imagined) some Demons or Spirits were dead. But he spake this as a man vncapable of Faith; because he vnderstood not, that Spirits were immortal.

Neuerthelesse, this matter is maruclous, and truely worthy of great consideration, to note how evidently the deuill thewed himselfe (euen suddenlie) to bee ouercome and conquered, and that after our blessed Sauours death, he remained so confounded: that he neuer durst presume to giue any answer. And the Gentiles themselves, without any capacity of the reason; could haue knowledge of this defailance. By means whereof, Plutarch wrote that Tract, wherein he did set downe these words, whereof Eusebius maketh mention, writing to Theodorus, as of a most notable thing.

I remember (saith he) that I haue heard (concerning the Demons death) of Emilianus the Orator, an humble, wise, and worthy man, and well knowne to some of you; that his Father comming (or a time)

Hhh 3 by

The downfall of all the false Gods & Idols

Plutarch in Tra. de imperf. Orat. The defaylance of Oracles in those daies.

The Devils plaine manifestation of his foyle and overthrow.

Euseb. in Hist. Eccle. lib. ad 11. codo.

Ataman a very sk hull Pilote of Egypt.

The death of the great
God Pan.

The coming of the ship to the gulfe of Laguna.

Ataman deliuereth the message as he was commanded.

The Devils
euery where complained of our Sauiors Natiuity.

by Sea towards Italy, passing and coasting (in the night time) an inhabited Island, named Paraxis, at what time, all the men in the Ship were in silence and repose: they heard a graat & feareful voyce, which came out of the Island, and the voyce called Ataman (for so was the Pilot of the Ship named, who was a Native of Egypt.) And albeit that this voyce was heard once or twice by Ataman, and others: yet had they not so much hardinesse, as to returne any answer, untill the third time. And then hee said: Who is there? Who is it that calleth mee? What wouldst thou with me? then the voice spake much louder then before, and said vnto him. Ataman, my desire is, that when thou shalt passe by the Gulfe, called Laguna: that there thou remember to cry aloud, and giue it to vnderstand; that the great God Pan is dead. This being thus vnderstood, all in the Shippe were in great feare and terrour, and aduised the Patrone of the Shippe, to make no account thereof, neither to speake one word, or make any stay at the Gulfe: but if the time prooued fauourable; to passe on further, and entend the finishing of the voyage. But beeing come to ioyne with the place, whereof the voyce had spoken and made designement: the Shippe stayed, the Sea was becalmed, and no winde stirred, so that (indeede) they could sayle no further. Bymeanes whereof, they all resolued, that Ataman should deliuer his message. And that he might the better performe it, he went vp vpon the poupe of the Shippe, and there hee cryed out so loud as possiblie he could, saying: I giue ye to know, that the Great God Pan is dead. But so soone as he had vttered these wordes, they heard so many voyces crying and complaining, that all the Sea resounded their dreadfull Ecchoes, and this wofull lamenting continued a long while, to the no little amazement of all them in the Shippe. But finding the wind immediatly prosperous, they sayled on-ward, and arriuing afterward at Rome; there they declared the whole aduenture. Which comming to the eare of the Emperour Tyberius; hee would needes be further informed thereof, and found it to bee most true.

Whereby it is plaine and manifest, that (euen in all parts) the Devils complained on the Natiuity of our Lord, because it was their vtter destruction. For by the supputation of times, it is found, that these things hapned, at such time as he suffered for vs; or a little before, when they were chased and banished out of the world. And hath beene presupposed, that this great Pan (according to the imitation of the shepheards great God Pan) whom they said to bee dead: was some Maister Deuill, which (as then) lost his Dominion, as all the rest did. Beside these thinges, Iosephus the Jew writeth: That in those very daies, a voyce was heard in the Temple of Ierusalem (albeit there was then no liuing Creature in it.) Let vs speedily bee gone, and leaue this Countrey. That is to say, they plainly perceiued, what persecution they were to suffer, and that he was not far from them, and that their destruction should ensue by the giuer of life. In the Nazarites Gospell it is found; that on the day of his Passion; the Gate of the Temple fell downe, which was so sumptuous, and thought to continue for euer. Thus we may see, what wonderfull things hapned in those times, although the Euangelistes doe make no mention of them; as being no necessary matters, or worth their remembring.

We are likewise to consider, that the great Eclipse of the Sunne, which lasted three houres, so long as Christ was on his Crosse: was no natural matter, like those which we sometimes behold, by coniunction of the Sun and the Moone; but indeede was miraculous, and contrary to all naturall course or order. Therefore, such as are ignorant, how the Sunne becommeth Eclipsed; must know, that it canot be, but by the coniunction of the Sun and the Moon, the Moone being interposed betweene the Sunne and the Earth. And yet notwithstanding, the Eclipse which happened then at our Lordes Passion, was in opposition, the Moon being at ful, and distant from the Sun by an hundred and fourescore degrees, in another Hemisphere, inferior to the City of Ierusalem. To shew that this is true, beside that which is written by sundry good Historians; the Text of the holy Scripture maketh prooffe thereof. For it is most certain, that they neuer vsed to sacrifice the Lambe, but on the 14. day of the Moone: which Lambe was eaten by Christ & his Disciples, the very day before his death; according as it was commanded quit. Iud. lib. 2.*

*Ioseph. in Anti-

Three houres Eclipse of the Sun, while Christ was on the Crosse.

The reason of the Sunnes Eclipse in his vsuall course.

The sacrificing of the Lambe,

Exod. 12, 6.
Leuit. 23, 5.

manded in Exodus, and in Leuiticus. And on the morrow, which was the Feast of vnleavened bread, Christ (the immaculate Lambe) was crucified; the Moone being then on necessity in her full, & opposite to the Sunne, which then coulde no more Eclipse the Sunne, then anie other Planet had power to do. Therefore it was very myraculous, contrary to the order of Nature, and onely done by the omnipotency of God, who deprived the Sunne of his light for all that space of time.

Dionisius Areopagita in Athens, whē the Sunne was darkned, and his words.

Furthermore, in regard of this admirable accident, Dionisius Areopagita being on that day in Athens: and beholding the Sunne to bee so strangely obscured; knowing also (as a man learned and skilfull in Astrology, & the Celestiall courses) that this Eclipse was contrary vnto the rule of Nature, he cried out with a lowd voyce, saying; Either the world will finish, or the God of Nature suffereth. For this cause faith one, that the Wisemen of Athens being amazed heereat, caused an Altar immediately to bee builded to the Vnknowne God. And Saint Paule arriuing there afterwarde, declared vnto them, what and who that vnknowne God was: that it was Christ our Redeemer, God and man, who had then suffered, by meanes whereof, he conuerted many people to the faith.

An Altar erected to the vnknowne God.

Some haue bene doubtfull and desirous to know, whither this Eclipse and darknesse of the Sunne, was Vniuersally throughout the whole world; and builded their argument on this; that when the Euangelist saide, ouer all the Earth, that is to say; by a manner of speaking, all the Country thereabout, and Origen was of this opinion. But yet wee see, that in Greece; and namely in Athens, this darknesse was visibly seene, which maketh me verily beleue, that such an Eclipse was vniuersall throughout all our Hemisphere, and through all partes where the Sun could be seene.

Concerning the vniuersal darknesse.

I speake to this end, because in all the other Hemisphere, where it was then night, nothing could be seene, nor the sight of the Sunne be any way discerned. For he cannot illuminate in one instant, but the moitie or halfe of the earth, in regard of the shadow which hee maketh of himselfe. Neuerthelesse, wee must know, that the Moone being then in her full, and hauing no light, but what shee receiueth from the splendor of the Sun; and being also in the Hemisphere which is inuicely vnder vs, becam then likewise to bee violently eclipsed and darkened, onely thorough the lacke of the Sunnes beauty and clearnesse. And therefore, it may be iustly saide, that an vniuersall obscurity was thoroughout the world; because, neyther the Moone or the Starres coulde yeelde any light, but what they themselues must first borrowed from the Sunne.

Concerning the Hemisphere vnderneath vs.

10

An vniuersal darknes thoroughout the world.

20

Of many passages and places, quoted and cited by diuers Learned Authours, which doo make mention of Christ, and of his life.

CHAP. VIII.

30

Haue many times heard fundrie curious questions moued. yet proceeding from men of good Learning; what should bee the cause, that the 40

Gentiles and Ethnicks (in their writings and Doctrines) haue made so slender mention of the life of Iesus Christ, and of his Myrales, they beeing so great in number, yea, so publicke and manifest; especially by his Disciples? Considering, that the Ethnicks make large mention in their Bookes, of other perticular things happening in those times, albeit they were not of so maine importance as the other. Whereunto I answere first of all, that it were meere against the truth, to say, that prophane writers haue not spoken thereof, because there are an infinite number, from whome, I haue deduced some examples for their ease, that haue no knowledge in ancient Histories: My second reason to bee considered in this case, is, that the holy Faith, and Lawe of grace giuen by Christ, beganne in him, and by him and his Apostles, they were published to the world, and was embraced and receiued by some, who determined to liue and die therein. Albeit there were others, more obstinate in their sins and vices, that not onely made refusall thereof; but also persecuted it vnto their

The Gentiles and Ethnicks small remembrancers of Christ.

50

The Authors first reason of answere.

His second Reason.

The Holye Faith & Lawe of Grace.

vttter

Timorous & weak-hearted people.

The Worlde diuided into three opinions.

The first, holy beginners.

The second, wicked Con-temners.

The 3. sort, fearfull time-feruers.

A very excellent comparison of concealing the truth.

Allusion to the comparison.

uttermoſt power. There were yet ſome others (who held the middle ranke) that though this Doctrin ſeemed to them to be good: yet for feare of Tyrants and perſecuters, with other humane conſiderations, that this holie profeſſion would be deſpiſed, they likewiſe grew careleſſe of embracing and entertaining it.

The World then being diuided into three opinions, they which confeſſed Chriſt, did notable and marvellous things, many of which gaue great teſtimony of the truth. And amongeſt this number, were Dionifius Areopagita, Tertullian, Laſtantius Firmianus, Eufebius, Paulus Oroſius, and many others, who would require too long time to recite them particularly.

The other wicked ſorte, that perfected this profeſſion, as a matter ſtraunge and hatefull to their Law, laboring wholly to confounde it, and to hide the myſtacles, life and Doctrin of Chriſt, were ſuch as (in this reſpect) would haue no ſpeech thereof amongſt them; or if they did make any report at all, it was done to this end, onely to obſcure, contemn and darken the glory thereof. As did the wicked Porphyrius, Iuhan, Vicentius, Celſus, Affricanus, Lucian, and other ſuch like diuellish minded men: againſt whome, Wrote very learnedly, Cyprian, Origen, S. Auguſtine, and others.

The third number, who for feare, or other worldly conſiderations, held backe from becomming chriſtians, and to loue and know the truth: for the verie ſame cauſes reſuſed to ſpeake thereof, but if they yſed any litle touch or ſpeech, it was done in ſcoffing and lying manner, or in a negligent and curſory kinde. All which notwithstanding, euen as when a man ſtriueth to conceale a matter of truth, vnder the Vaile of lying and deceitful colours, many times it comes to paſſe, that by a meere hidden property of truth it ſelfe, hee that would ſo faire obſcure it, doth diſguiſe and palliate it in ſuch bungerly manner, that his iowne lies and trecheries are not onely thereby made manifeſt, but concealed truth ſhineth in the fairer luſter. Euen ſo ſell it out in this nature, with both theſe fornamed people; for althogh they ſtroue mainly to exterminate & deſtroy the miracles of Chriſt and his Doctrin; yet which way ſoever they framed their ſpeech, ſomething ſtill came from them, whereby their owne malice was apparantly diſcerned, and the goodneſſe of truths Doctrin farre more ſoundly warranted.

I could ſpeake of many things, which were both vttered and written by the Sybilles: but in regard that whatſoever they did, proceeded not from their own proper iudgement, but thorow the ſpिरite of Propheſie, and according as God hadde communicated thoſe guiltes vnto them, (notwithſtanding they were Infidelles) I will be ſilent of them, and proceede to other authorities.

Our firſt and moſt euident teſtimony (albeit not the leaſt common) ſhal therefore bee deriued from our greateſt Enemies; among whoſe number is Iosephus, not only a Iew by Lineage and Nation, but alſo by his life and profeſſion, & theſe are his very words. At the ſame time liued

Ieſus, a very Wiſe man, if it bee lawfull to tearme him a man, becauſe indeed and verity, he did wonderful things, and was Maſter and Doctour to ſuch as loued and ſought for truth. He aſſembled and was followed by great troopes of Iewes and Gentiles, and he was Chriſt. And although he was afterward accuſed by the principall men of our Faith, and crucified: yet hee was not abandoned of them which had formerly followed him: but three dayes after his death, he appeared a line again vnto them, according as the Prophets (inſpired of God) had foretolde and propheſied of him. And euen in theſe dayes of ours, the Doctrin and Name of chriſtians, perſeuereth to thorow world. Behold, theſe are the words of Iosephus, who wrote of the deſtruction of Ieruſalem, as an eye-witneſſe of beholding it, which happened forty yeares after the paſſion of Chriſt.

Pilate, in like manner, who had pronounced the ſentence of death vpon him did beare witneſſe (neuertheleſſe) of his great myſtacles, commending them by his Letters to the Emperour Tiberius. So that he conſulted with the ſenat, to know whether they wold receiue Ieſus Chriſt to be God: and albeit they woulde not conſent thereto, yet Tiberius expreſſely prohibited, that Chriſtians ſhoulde not be abuſed and perſecuted. As concerning the trembling and quaking of the earth, with the darkening of the Sunne, during ſuch time as Chriſt ſuffered vpon his Croſſe, we haue likewiſe diuers teſtimonies

The ten famous Sybils, viz. Perſica, Libica, Delphica, Cumæa, Erythraea, Samia, Cumana, Hellespontia Phrygia, Tiburtina.

Ios in lib. 2. de Antiq.

The deſtruction of Ieruſalem ſome yeares after Chriſt.

Pilate a Witneſſe of Chriſts myſtacles.

Phlegonius a Grecian born in Asia, recorded by Suidas monies of Ethnickes. Phlegonius, a Greek Historian, of whom Suidas maketh especial mention, reporteth for a wonderfull thing: That in the fourth yeare of the two hundred and tenth Olympiade (which by iust account, was in the eighteenth yeare of the raigine of Tiberius, and at which time our Sauour suffered) There was an Eclipse of the Sunne, the very greatest that euer had beene seene, or euer foande to be written of, and that it continued from the sixt houre, vntill the ninth houre. And that during this Eclipse, the trembling of the earth was so great in Asia and in Bythinia, that infinite strong builde houses fell to the ground.

It appeareth moreouer, that besides this Phlegonius (who should seem to liue at the verie same time) Pliny also felt and wrote of the selfsame matter, for he saith; In the time of the Emperor Tiberius, the quaking of the earth was much greater, then euer before had beene. By meanes whereof, (saith another) twelue Citties were ruined and ouerthrowne in Asia, with infinit other goodly buildings and houses. So that, the Historiographers amongst the Gentiles, (albeit they knewe not the cause) did not forbear to write of the Miracles of Christ.

The other Myracle, of the Vaile of the Temple, which rent in sunder, Iosephus also giueth faithfull testimonie thereof. Of the cruell murder or massacre committed by Herod on poore harmlesse Innocents, mention is made by another Jew, named Philo, an Historian of great authority, in his Abridgement of times, where he saith; Herod caused certain Children to be slaine, and his owne Sonne with them: because he had heard, that the Christ a King promised to the Hebrewes, was then borne. And this Author liued in the same time of the other Herod, named the Tetrach, as himselfe hath said.

This History of the Innocents, is yet much more amply declared by Macrobius, who was a verie ancient Ethnick, and Latine Historian; for, in discoursing som iouiall and facetious matters of the Emperor Octavius (in whose time our Lord and Sauour was borne) hee sayeth; The Emperor hauing heard of the cruelty of Herod, both toward his owne Sonne, and the other Ghildren, said; He had rather be a hog in Herods house, then his Sonne. And this he spake, because the Iewes neuer vsed to kill their Swine, or eate their flesh. This pleasant iest is also alledged by Dion the Greeke, in the life of the same Emperor. So that there were great store of miracles, whereof both the Iewes & Gentiles (without thinking on them) beare witness to be doone by Christ, ouer and beside them which are written by Christians.

What shal we further say, concerning the ancient Emperours, and what opinion they had of our faith; as also their cruell proceeding against Gods seruantes? The first good Byshop, Saint Peter and Saint Paule likewise, were put to death by the commaunde of the Emperour Nero, thirty sixe yeares after the death of our Sauour; and then, was the Churches greatest persecution, whereof the Gentiles spared not to make mention; and perticulerly, Suetonius Tranquillus, and Cornelius Tacitus, who liud in those times and were of great authority. Suetonius in the life of Nero, speaking concerning some of his ordinance, saith; He tormented and afflicted (with great paines and punishments) a kinde of people, that cald themselves Christians, and followed a new manner of beleefe and Religion. And Cornelius Tacitus, displaying the deedes of the same Nero, saith: He persecuted and chastised with terrible torments, a sort of people, which were vulgarly called Christians. And the Author of that Name, was Christ of Ierusalem, whom Pilat the Governour of Iewry caused to be crucified. And by the meanes of his death his Doctrine began to exalt it selfe. Now let vs obserue what some other Gentils haue written, who were no way of any lesse reputation.

Plinie the younger, in one of his Elegant Epistles, demanded of the Emperour Traiane, for whom he was Pro-Consull in Asia, how he would haue the Christians to be punished, which were accused and brought before him? And the better to informe his Lorde concerning such matters as hee found to be objected against them, he wrote thus: Amongst other thinges, these Christians doo rise at certaine houres in the night, and assemble themselves together, to sing Hymnes & songs of praise to Iesus Christ, whome they honor as their God. And beside their meeting in such Congregations, they make solemne vowes, not to do any euill;

The auncient Emp. against the Christians.

S. Peter & Paule put to death by Nero.

Suet. Tranquillus & Cornel. Tacitus.

The words of Corn. Tacitus.

Plin. Secund. in Epi ad Traian.

The accusations laid to the Christians charge.

Plin. in Lib. 7.

12. Citties in Asia, ruined by the Earthquake of Christs death.

Ios. in l. 2. de an.

Philo. Iudaic. in Abbr. Tép.

Macrobius an ancient Ethnick, and Latine Writer.

Dion. in vit. Oc.

euill, or any harme to other men : but promise that they wil not steal any thing; that they will not be adulterers; that they will not falsifie their promises or Oathes; & not to deny whatsoeuer is left in their charge and keeping.

The causes why Christians were persecuted.

This Pliny saith moreouer : They feede all together, without possessing any thing, as priuate or perticuler. Whereby may be knowne, what the exercises of Christians were, and for what cause the worlde abhorred and persecuted them. These things were written by an Infidell and Idolater, threescore yeares after the passion of our Lord and Sauour. Vnto which Letters, the Emperour returned this answer.

The Emperours answer to his Pro-Confull.

Forasmuch, as they are accused of no other abuse or euil doing, let them not in any wise be afflicted or punished, neither make anie further inquisition against them. Neuerthelesse, when they shall bee est-soenes accused before thee, do thy best to withdraw them from that Religion : but if in no wise they wil forsake it, yet see that thou doe not offer them any ^{extremity} eternitie. Howbeit, very true it is, that this Emperour Traian, had formerly (and like an Infidell, deceyued by the guile of false accusers) persecuted the Christians.

Elius Lampridius in vii. Ad.

After him his Nephew Adrian succeeded in the Empire, of whom Aelius Lampridius the Historiographer Writeth, that hee was an Infidell and an Idolater : and yet neuerthelesse, he began to honor the Christians, permitting them to liue in their Religion : and himselfe also worshipped Christ with diuers others, and caused Temples to be newly erected. Yet afterward, he altered his minde, and became both odious and cruell towards the Christians, being deceyued and abused by the Maisters of his false Ceremonies, and by the Bishops attending vpon his idle Gods. For they perswaded him, that if any way he fauored the Christians : the whole world wold be conuerted to their Religion, and so the faith of the Goddes should be ouerthrowne. And this is credibly auouched by Petrus Crinitus. It is writen in the life of Saturnius, that a letter was sent from Seucrinius the Confull, to the same Emperour Adrian; wherein he declared to him, that there were diuerse Christians in Egypt : amongst whom, some called themselues Bishops, whereof no one was found Idle at any time: but Adrian the Emp. perswaded against the Christians.

Read more of this in the life of Saturnius, concerning the life and behaviour of Christians.

still seriously employed about one exercise or other, and euen (to the blind and Gowty) all liued by the labour of their hands; and yet they all worshipped one GOD, who also had bene ordered by the Iewes.

The false investigations of the corrupt Bishops.

We read also in the Histories of those times, that this Emperour hauing begun to misintreat the Christians by perswasion of his false High-Priests; there was a certaine Ambassador of his, named Seranus Eranius, an Ethnicke; like him that had written the Letter to him, who gaue his opinion, that the cruelty of consenting to oppresse the Christians (being accused of nothing else, but obseruing their Religion, and could not iustly be charged with any other crimes or offences) deserued mitigation. And so by the means of this Letter, the Emperour Andrian inhibited Minutius Fondanus, then Pro-confull in Asia: not to condemne any Christian, except he were conuincd of some other offence, then that concerning his Christian Religion.

Minutius Fondanus Pro-confull in Asia.

CHAP. IX.

What opinion the Auncient Emperours did hold, concerning the people that followed Christ and Christianity, by those testimonies which are deriud out of Ethnicke Histories.

40

After this Emperour Adrian (of whome wee spake in our last chapters) succeeded Antoninus the Debonaire, or meek, who, albeit he Antoninus the meeke succeeded Adrian.

50

had that Gentle name, yet was hee peruerse and Wicked; for hee misliked the Faith of Christ, and persecuted the Christians. But Marcus Aurelius his successor, became therein much more moderate: for in stead of persecuting them; he led them along with him in his Armies, and by their deuout Prayers, he was deliuered from a daunger which hee was in, thorough want of Water, which his enemies had cut from him, wherein God only holpe him, and bestowed Lightning and thunders vpon his aduersaries. Himselfe

Marc. Aurelius was milde to the christians

felfe maketh mention of thefe things in one of his Letters; and Iulius Capitolinus speaketh the fame; howbeit hee doth not attribute it wholly to the Christians. And thefe things hapned about 145. yeares, after the death and Paffion of our Sauiour.

About 15 or 20. yeares following, Ælius Spartianus (an Ethnicke, as himfelfe confefseth) writeth, that Seuerus was elected Emperor; and hee made a Lawe, prohibiting (vnder great penalties) that no man fhould conuert to be either Christian or Iew. After which, Seuerus, Antoninus Hellogabalus was Emp. whose diffolute life we haue already described; and Lampridius reporteth (who wrote his life) that he builded a Temple in Rome, dedicated to his God only, and hee would haue had the Christians to offer vp their Sacrifices therein; but they by no means would yeeld thereto. The fucceffor vnto this Hellogabalus, was the Emperor Alexander Seuerus, in the yeare of our Lord, 192. and much ado was made, becaufe he would haue become a Christian.

Wee finde moreouer recorded in his History, that hee held a good opinion of our faith, and honoured the Christians verie highly graunting vnto them places and precincts in Rome, where to haue their Temples and Oratories. Himfelfe alfo had an Oratory, wherein he kept the Image or figure of Christ, according as it is testified by Elius Lampridius, where he speaketh largely of the Christians. Adding withall, that many Cookes and Tauerners went to the Emperour, to complain againft the Christians, faying, That they had taken their houfes and Lodginges from them, therein to make vfe of their hypocrifies, and that they obserued a Religion contrarie to that of the Romaines. To which complaint the Emperour answered: Hee thought it more conuenient, that God fhould there be honoured, then their affayres and vocations be vainly followed.

This Seuerus being dead, Maximinus fucceeded him, an enemy and perfecuter of the Christians: but he liued not long, and finished his dayes by an euill death. After whom, and two others befide, that had but fmall continuance, the Empire came into the hands of Phillip, who was baptized, as diuers do confirme; and the firft that receiued the Christians: and yet Eusebius maintaineth, that the Gentiles

Hiftories do fpeake nothing thereof.

Day by day after (though by fmall degrees) God gaue illumination vnto the hearts of men; and a great number were conuerted to the Faith, in defpight of the Emperors Decius, Diocleſian, and fuch other, vntill fuch time, as being wearie of persecuting) they difsembled their cruelty, and fuffered them to liue peaceably a while: as moft plainly appeareth, by a Letter of Maximinus the Emperour, companion with Diocleſian, which was aboute two hundred yeares after our Redemption: The Letter followeth thus in our Language.

Tyrants wearie of perfecuting the christians.

CÆſar Maximinus, Inuincible great High-Prieft of Germany, of Egypt, Thebes, Sarmatia, Persia, Armenia, Carpia, and victorious (b-fides) ouer the Medes: And for his Conqueſtes, named nine times Emperour, and eight times Conſull, and Father of his Country, &c. At the beginning of Our Empire, amongeſt other things which wee determined to do for publicke good, Wee ordained, that the Order to be held in all things, ſhould be conforme vnto the Auncient Lawes, and the publicke Discipline of Rome conſerued. And by the ſame means Wee commanded, that the Men which name themſelues Christians; and who haue left Our ancient Religion, ſhoulde be preſſed, conſtrained, and enforced to leaue the New which they haue taken; & that they ſhould obſerue Our Auncient, eſtabliſhed by Our Predeceſſors. But it being come to Our knowledge, that notwithstanding this command, and rigors vſed againſt them, to make them obſerue it, they haue left off to follow Our Will, and are ſo firm and conſtant in their purpoſe, as neither force, nor any grieuous puniſhments whatſoever, can withdrawe them from their Religion, and cauſe the to keepe Ours; but rather, they deſire to expoſe themſelues to more bitter Torments and death: continuing ſtill to this day, in the ſame conſtancie, without any will or intent to honor any of our Gods of Rome: Wee being memoratiue of our wonted clemency and pittie, do purpoſe to expreſſe the ſame towards theſe Christians. And therefore we do permit, that from hence forward any man may make and name himſelfe a Christian, to haue places

The emperor Maximus his Letter, concerning the chriſtians

The woorthy and conſtant reſolution of the chriſtians.

Iul. Capitolinus.

Elius Spartianus concerning Seuerus.

Hellogabalus his Temple in Rome.

Alex. Seuerus.

The Christians much fauoured by Alexan. Seuerus.

The Christians complained on, & the Emperors answered.

The Emperor Phillip baptized.

The Christians bound to doo nothing against the weal-publick.

places for their assemblies, and to build Temples, wherein to offer their Sacrifices and Prayers. Which License and faculty we graunt vnto them, vnder condition that they shall doo nothing against Our Weale-publike and Religion; and that (in other things) they shall keep Our Lawes and Constitutions. Moreouer, that in acknowledgement of this permission, they shal stand obliged, to pray vnto their God for our life and health; and likewise for the good estate of the Roman Commonwealth, that the City continuing safe and in prosperity, they themselues may liue by their labor in repose and security.

The Christians must remember the Emperour in their prayers

Well may we terme this man a most infortunate Emperour, for if he sought to compell the Christians, to forsake and renounce their faith, as being badde and wicked: why then, would he haue them to praie for him, and tie them to be mindful of him in their Prayers? But this letter maketh sufficiently against him, because himselfe doth thereby testify, what constancy, vertue, and spirit appeared in the Martirs and holy christians, suffering patiently (for so long time) such torments and punnishments, as were inflicted on them for the loue of Christ. Within some while after Maximinus, Constantine came to succeed in the Empire, who was fir-named the Great, Son to the good Q. Helena, that found the Crosse of Christ, which was about 290. yeares after the redemption of mankind. Hee was a good Christian, and performed so manie worthy actions, in the honor of God, and his holy Church, and likewise to the Ministers therein, as would require too long a time to recite. He permitted all men indifferently to becom Christians, for whom he builded sumptuous Temples: and such as formerly had bin dedicated to the seruice of Idols, were nowe consecrated to the seruice of Christ and his seruants.

The emperor Constantine the great, became a good Christian.

Idolaterous Temples reduced to the seruice of god

Christ honored in most places of the World.

After this time, although the Church of God suffered some scandales and persecutions, as those of Iulian the Apostata and others: yet notwithstanding, dayly, and in many parts of the worlde, Christ became to be publickely adored. And from thenceforward, all Histories are full of the Saints deeds; moreouer, the most part of the subsequent Emperours, were faithfull Catholickes, as Theodosius, Iustinian, and others of the same minde. I could alledge many more Authorities of Ethnick Historians, who haue spoken of Christ, but this small number shall now suffice me, because they are both famous and of great approbation.

10

CHAP. X.

That a man of meane birth or condition, should not therefore desist or forbear from honourable attempts; but endeavour (by all meanes possible) to winne fame and preferment: With sundry examples tending to that purpose and argument.

20

WE see, that (euen naturally) men descended of high and generous Linage, do oftentimes become the greatest and most excellent persons, by imitating the natie Noblenesse, and ancient vertue of their ancestors. Neuerthelesse, because there is not any Law or rule so certaine, which admitteth not some kind of exception: this also may be allowed to passe in that number. For many times, a wise, vertuous, learned, and well-disposed Father, doth beget idle, abiect, indiscrete, and bad qualited Children. And yet for all this, if this rule were more certaine, and of lesse infallibilitie, then indeede it is: yet it standeth not as any expresse inhibition, that such are deriued of meane and poor parentage, shold not eleuate their humble eyes, and (by any paine or trauaile whatsoever) climbe to the faire abiding of vertue and honor. And so much the rather, because the most auncient, noble, and best esteemed families of these daies, had their soure & originall from the well-head of vertue, & therby ennobled their succeeding posterity. Therefore, the better to encourage men, to mount vp their depressed minds, and to aime at matters of moment and eminency, I will relate a few examples of some, that haue descended from poore parents, who (neuerthelesse) becam great men, illustrious and excelling both in Vertue and Nobility.

30

40

50

Natie Nobilitie the true Nurse of honor.

No inhibition against true & reall Vertue.

A Spurre to humble and lowly minds, none greater then vertue.

We

Viriatu a Portuguize, seuere again't the Romains.

We will begin with Viriatu, a Portuguize, so much renowned among Historians, and especially the Romans; in whose blood so many times hedied his weapon.
This man was the Son of a poore Shep-heard in the Fields; and all his younger yeares help his Father to tend his flocks:
but his thoughts lifting themselues vnto much higher occasions, he leste this domesticke and priuate kind of life, depending on tame and harmlesse Creatures, to pursue those of sauage and sterner Nature; and so (indeede) became a great Hunter. It hapned afterward, that the Romains comming to invade spaine, he leauied a great troope of his Companions together; by whose assistance he gaue the enemy many bolde skirmishes, and spared not also his Natiue friends, onlie for practise, and to whet on his youthful spirit. He prooued so valiant and apte to Armes, that (in very short time) he had won people enowe about him, to make vp an whole army, and shew themselues resolutely in the Field. VVith them, he made warre vpon the Romans, in defence of his owne Country; and the wars continued about 14. yeares: in which time, he won many great & famous victories against them. Thus liued he powerfully, honourably, and feared of his enemies:
but in the end, he was vnfortunatly slaine by Treason, to the no little grieefe of his VVarre-Companions, by whom, hee was most Noble brought vnto his Graue.

Arsaces; King of the Parthians, was of such meane and simple Parentage, that no mans memorie could make report either of his Father or Mother. After hee had retired himselfe from subiection and obedience to Alexander the Great, hee was the first that constituted a kingdome among the Parthians, the people so much renowned and feared of the Romans. And by the meanes of his manhood and vali-ancy, the Kings successors (in reuerend respect and memory of his name, albeit they helde not the Kingdome by Hereditarie succession) were in regard of him named Arsacides, as the Romaine Emperors tooke first the name of Cesar, in affection to the name of great Cesar Octauianus Augustus.

The excellent Captaine Agathocles, who for his wisdom and dantlesse spirit was King of Sicily, and made most cruell

VVarre on the Carthagenians, was of so poore and humble birth, as at the vtmost, he could be said to be but a poor. Potters Son: and yet neuertheless, he attayned in time, to the honour and dignitie of a King. Whensoever he made his royal Feasts and Banquets, among his Vessels of Gold and Siluer, wherewith hee was serued at his Table, hee would also haue set before him, Cups, Pots, and earthen Vesselles, to declare that he was not vnmindfull from what pouerty of place his first Originall grew. There is another, as memorable an example of Ptolomey, one of the chiefest Captaines to Alexander;
after whose death, hee was King both of Egypt and Syria: yet such was his fame, as all his Successors, the Kings of Egypt, were named Ptolomeyes, in remembrance of him. This Ptolomey, was Soune to an Esquire, called Lagus, who neuer had any higher preferment, then as a Squire in Alexanders Army.

Iphicrates the Athenian, was most excellent in the Science of Militarie Discipline, for he conquered the Lacedemonians in a fought battell, and valiantly resisted the impetuositie of Epaminondas, the excellent Captaine of Thebes. The same was the man, whom Artaxerxes King of Persia, elected to be Lieutenant General ouer his Armies, when he purposed any Waire against the Egyptians. And yet notwithstanding these eminent aduancements: al such as haue written of him, do confesse him to be no better borne, then a poore Coblers Sonne.

I had almost forgot Eumenes, one of the most excellent Captaines that Alexander had, both in valour, knowledge, & good Counsell, whose life and woorthy deeds of Armes, are written by Plutarch and Paulus Emilius. This man, although he was not faouered (like the other) in riches, and the goods of fortune: yet could no man march before him in the Art of warre: For his vertues and glories grew out of himself, gaining no aduancement but by his owne labours: he being son to a man but of mean condition, & (as some write) a poore Carter:

Among our worldly Dominions and Gouernements, none euer was so great and powerfull, as the Roman Empire, and ruled and commanded by many most excellent men, both in Manners and Ver-tues. And yet neuertheless, manie haue Iii aspired

Ptolomey king of Egypt and Syria.

Iphicrates the warlick Athenian, the Son of a poore Cobler.

Eumenes recorded by Plutark & Emilius

The Romain
Empire greatest of all other.

The Romans
proceede to make warre in Spaine.

Viriatu slaine
by treason.

The poore birth of Arsaces K. of the Parthians.

The Kings of Parthia. namd
Arsacides

Agathocles K. of Sicilie a poor Potters son.

Elius Pertinax an Artificers
Sonne.

Dioclesian was the Son of a Scriuener.

Valentinian, a Rope-makers
sonne.

Probus a Gardiners sonne.

Maximinus a Smiths sonne.

M. Julius Lici-nius & Bonofus

Examples of the Bishops
Sea of Rome.

Pope Iohn the 22. a shomakers son.

Pope Nicholas
5. a Powlers
sonne.

aspired and attained to that Soueraigne degree of Authority, who were but of poore and meane descent. Elius Pertinax Emperor of Rome, was the Sonne of an Artificer, his Grand-father was a Liber-tine (that is to say) such a one as sometime had bin a Bondslaue, and afterward had purchased his liberty. And yet notwithstanding, in regard both of his vertue and valour, he came to be the Romain Empe-10 ror. Afterward, to leaue an example to others of poore parentage, and to encourage them to vertuous attempts, hee covered with costly & fine carued Marble, all the Shoppes where his Father hadde wrought to get his liuing. Nor was this 20 Elius the onely man of meane birth, that attained vnto the Empire; for Dioclesian, who made Rome so gloriously shine with triumphant victories, was only the son of a Scribe or Notary. Some say, that his Father was a Booke-binder, and himself a bondslaue. Valentinian also came to the Empire, albeit he was but a poore Rope-
30 makers Son. The Emperor Probus, was the Son of a Gardiner. Aurelius, whose fame and vertues were so great, was of such meane and poore descent: that Authors could neuer agree, concerning the place where he was borne. Maximinus was the Sonne of a Smith; but others say that his Father was a Waggon-Wright. Marcus Iulius Licinius, and likewise Bono-40 sus, they did both gouerne the Romaine Empire: and yet the first was but an husbandmans sonne of Dacia, and the other the sonne of a poore stipendary Schoole-
50 maister.

Many other Emperors of this degree, were in Rome, whom I spare to speake of, for breuities sake, as Mauritus Iustinus, predecessor to Iustinian and Galerus, who first were Shepherds, before they came to be Emperors. From this high and sup-40 preame dignitie, let vs come to the Prelacie of the Romaine Sea, whereto likewise men of as humble a condition haue attained. Pope Iohn, the two and twen-
50 tith of that name, was a Shooe makers Sonne, and borne in Fraunce, yet by his learning and wisdome he came to that degree, and encreased the patrimonie & power of the Church. Pope Nicholas the fift, formerlie named Thomas, was the sonne of verie poore parents, that went about the Cittie, selling Egges & Poultrie. Pope Sixtus the fourth, first named

Frances, and a Cordelier, was the sonne of a Mariner, or Sea-faring man. I coulde name a number more, whom purposely I do omit; because this dignitie is not to be had by Nobilitie of blood; but onelic by vertue. Iesus Christ himselfe left vs an example thereof, for the first man by him appointed to that Office, is saide to bee 10 Saint Peter, who formerly sought his li-20 uing in the Seas, like a poore Fisherman, but he brought him from thence to bee a Fisher of men.

Comming now to a suruey of Kinges and Princes, we finde, that the Romaines elected Tarquinius Priscus for their king, who was the sonne of a Merchant of Co-30 rinth, and one that was banished from his owne Countrey. Yet he comming to bee King, enlarged the Confines of his 40 Kingdome, and the number of Senators, as also of his Cauallerie: Hee instituted new estates for the seruice and Ceremo-
50 nies of their Gods; so that the people neuer repented themselues for electing him their King, although he was a straunger to them. Seruius Tullius, who was like-
60 wise King of Rome, raigned long time with verie great victories, and triumphed three feuerall times, in pompe and power of an excellent King: and yet hee was 70 knowne by many, to be the son of a poor Bond-woman: from whence (for euer after) he held the name of Seruius.

The Kinges of the Lombards, although they were not of such Antiquity, as the Kinges of Rome, yet (in due respect) they had as great puissance. The third of them being named Lamusius, was the sonne of a poore common woman, who was deli-
80 uered at the same time, of two other Sonnes. And yet, like a lewde and wicked woman, she threw them into a deep ditch wherein was some small store of Water. It fortun-
90 ed, that King Agelmond passing that way, espyed the Infant (well-neere) drowned in the Water. And hauing a Launce then in his hand, hee touched it gently with the end thereof, to perceiue 100 further what it was. But the Infant (as young as it was) feeling himselfe pierced with the Launces point, caught holde thereon with his hand, and would not let it go. Which when the King beheld, woondering not a little, that so young a creature should declare so much strength, he caused him to bee taken foorth of the water, and to bee nursed with great care and

Pope Sixtus 4. a Marriners
sonne.

S. Peter repu-
red to be the first Bishop of Rome.

Tarq. Priscus, a Merchant
sonne.

Seruius Tullius
the sonne of a poore bond woman.

Lamusius K. of the Lombard-des a Strump-pets sonne.

K. Agelmond finding the yong child in the water, causeth it to bee
well nursed.

The reason of calling him Lamusius.

and cost. And because the name of the place (where hee found him) was called Lamus, he was fir-named Lamusius, and became so greatly fauoured by Fortune, that he was King of the Lombards, & his succession continued to King Alboin, in whose time that Kingdome was vtterly ruined.

Of Primislaus
K. of Bohemia

Another accident (of no lesse raritie then this) happened in the Kingdome of Bohemia, where a man named Primislaus (Sonne to a Peazant of the Countrey) was chosen to be king, euen when he was labouring the ground in the fields. For, the Bohemians being then in some doubt, whom they should elect to be their king, sent foorth a Horse vnbrideled into the wilde fields, suffering him to run whither foeuer he would, being fully determined to elect him their King, with whome the horse stayed.

A strange election of a king

It came so to passe, that the horse made his stay directly before Primislaus, euen as he was holding the plough in the field: whereupon they made choise of him to be their King, and hee gouerned them both excellently and wisely. He ordained many good and profitable Lawes, and enclosed the City of Prage with strong walles, performing many other notable things.

Great Tam-berlaine.

Great Tamberlaine, whose woorthie deeds are in some measure before remembred, was but a Heardsman at his beginning. The valiant and vertuous Captain, Father to Frances Sforza, whose sons and successors euen to our time, haue continued Dukes of Millaine, was borne in a poore Villaine, called Cotignol, and Son to a needie labouring man. But being naturally addicted to Armes, and endued with a dauntieffe spirit: hee forfooke his Fathers silly vocation, and followed a band of Souldiers passing thorough the Countrey, and so became a very famous Warriour.

The Father to Frances Sforza, Duke of Millaine.

Caius Marius, Consul of Rome, being issued of poore parents, and born in a silly Country Village, called Arpinum, was one of the best and worthiest Warriours in his time, as is well known to the whole world; for hee was seauen times chosen

Caius Marius, Consull of Rome.

Consul. During which space, he won many great victories, and had two magnificent triumphs in Rome.

Marcus Tullius Cicero, the Princely Father of eloquent Latine, and most lerned in all Disciplines, was Consull in Rome, and Pro-consull in Asia: and yet notwithstanding, his original was from the poor Tuguriole of Arpinum, the most abiect & meanest parentage that could be. Ventidius a poore mans sonne, was a Muleter: but leauing that base vocation, hee came to be of note in Cæsars warres, thorough whose fauours, only by his vertue and valour, he came to bee Commanner of a band of men, afterward Marshall of the Field, next to the High Priest, and then Consull of Rome.

M.T. Cicero, Consull of Rome, and Pro-consull in Asia.

Ventidius a poor Muleter his rare Fortunes.

10

20

30

40

50

In fighting against the Parthians, he ouercame and triumphed over them; and was the first man that brought the most apparant & notable victory from them. It would require too long a labor, to set downe examples of meane descended persons, who (thorough Learning, Vertue, and Knowledge) haue attained vnto great degrees and renowne. Virgill was no better then a poore Potters son; and yet he was the best Poet amongst the Latines. Q. Horace, Eustatius, and Pepinus, all excelling in Poesie, yet the sonnes of enfranchised Bondslanes. The admyred Phylosopher Theophrastus, was the Son of a Botcher, or mender of Garmentes. And Menedemus the Phylosopher, vnto whome the Athenians erected a costlie Statue, onely in regard of his Learning, was a meane Handy-crafts mans Sonne. By al which examples we may easily perceiue, that a man of what condition foeuer he be borne, may (if himselfe wil) attaine to greatnesse, if he but followe the steppes of Vertue; for which there is no better Schoolemaister then paine & trauel; yet not wandering out of the way to Heauen. For he that swerueth from that only path, the acquisition and aduantage of the worlds glorie, cannot ransome his soule from perpetuall and neuer-ending torments.

Virgill a poore
Potters sonne

Horace, Eustatius and Pepinus.

Theophrastus
and Menedemus Phylosophers.

CHAP. XI.

Of diuers things which happened to the Emperor Iustinian, and many other of his time: with some memory also concerning Lodouicus Sforza.

IN the year 686. the Empire being reduced to Constantinople, Iustinian the 2. was chosen Emperor, albeit (by some others) he hath bene named Iustine, being but a bad Christian, and addicted to most Wicked inclinations. At the beginning of his raigne, his affaires succeeded very well, because the Sarazins (who had vsurped Affrica) made peace with his Captaines. But in regard of his cruelty, he was ill-affected, so that he receiued deserued punishment. For, in the tenth yeare of his Empire, a Conspiracy was contriued against him, by Leontius a Senator of Constantinople, and Galenus the Patriark, euen at such time, as he imagined himselfe to bee in his very greatest prosperity.

This Leontius armed with the peoples fauour, and some of the cheefest of the Empire, came to the Pallace, where without finding any resistance, he tooke Iustinian, and cut off his nose. Some others do report, that hee did cut out his tongue likewise. And entitling himselfe to be Emperor, banished Iustinian to the Towne of Cherronesus, on the Pontique Sea, where he remained alone, poor, and so disfigured. Leontius hauing thus attained vnto his owne intention, and seeing himselfe permitted Emperor in peace, he sent one of his Captaines, named John, into Affrica against the Sarrazins, who as yet kept possession there. Hauing gotten the victory over them, and left his armie there in such good order and equipage, as best he could, he returned home vnto Leontius, to render an account of his employment.

But in the meane while, one named Asmarus, attained to some respect in the Army, and afterward was called Tiberius by the Soldiers. This man (by generall consent) taking vpon him to be Emperor, matters succeeded so happilie with him: as (with all diligence) hee came to Constantinople: where laying holde of Leontius (who had bene Emperor three yeares) he caused his Nose to be cut off, according as he had dealt with Iustinian, & commaunded him prisoner into a Monastery, to make his torment worse then death to him; and yet afterward, did put him to death also.

In like manner, he expulsed and banished into Cephalenia, one named Phillippicus, because he dreamed, that an Eagle had seated her self on his head: which (by presage) appeared to him, that the Empire should come into his command. By which meanes, Tiberius continued Emperor peaceably, and raigned fixe or seauen yeares, without feare of any man. In which quiet time of gouernment, the deuill preuailed so farre with him, that hee must needs determine the death of Iustinian, as doubting least hee should deuise some machination against him. But Iustinian getting aduertisement therof, fled for safety to the house of a Prince of Barbary, by whom he was kindly entertained, with promise of his daughter in marriage, and many other great matters besides. Thus remaining there in some hope, and no further cause of feare appearing vnto him: he had secret intelligence, that his new made Father in Law (for a summe of money promised by Tiberius) meant suddenly to seize him, and sende him forth with vnto his enemy. Which made him vndertake a second flight, & betake himselfe to the King of Bugaria, named Ouellus, by whose assistance (hauing promised to receiue his Sister in Marriage) he leuiued an Armie, which he conducted with him against Tiberius, and overthrew him in battaile. Which hee neuer could haue done, if Tiberius would haue permitted him to liue in quiet, without molesting him in his exile: for this now prooued Iustinians best helpe vnto the recovery of his Empire, though not of his Nose, which he had in a manner forgotten, but was vtterly hopelesse of, hauing had experience of Fortunes power, who (for all this fauour) frowned agayne on him.

Beeing come vnto Constantinople, hee found Leontius there in prison, who had disfigured his face, and thrust him into ba-

Iustinian the Emperor, named by some Iustine.

A conspiracie plotted against Iustinia.

Iustinian taken his nose cut off, and banished to Cherronesus by Leontius, who made himself Emperor.

Asmarus, otherwise called Tiberius, chosen Emperor.

*An Island in the Ionian Sea beyond Coryra.

The death of Iustinian deuised by Tiberius.

Iustinian to be betrayed againe, and therefore enforced to a second flight.

Iustinian soiled Tiberius, and recovered his Empire againe.

The death of Leontius and Tiberius.

Iustinian purposeth the death of Phillipicus, for his dream of the Eagle.

Phillipicus resolved to defend himself, & cutteth off Iustinians head and his Sons.

Anastasius taketh the Empire from Phillipicus.

A true testimony of Fortunes frailtie, both in Iustinian & others banishment: in requitall whereof (after many torments) he caused both him and Tiberius to be put to death; and as many times as he remembered the cutting off of his nose, one of them that had conspired against him, was sure to dy. When he was fully re integrated in his dignitie, he began to thinke vpon one thing, which was the cause of loosing his Empire againe: for he would needs haue that Phillipicus put to death, of whome wee haue already spoken, that was banished for the Dreame of the Eagle, and liued quietlie in his exile, not thinking on any thing to be contriued against him.

In like manner, he quarrelled with the Inhabitants of Cherronesus, saying; That they hadde not well entreated him in the time of his exile; and therefore, leauied men to worke his intention, albeit he was most earnestly desired, to be compassionate towards the poore banished man, whose offence was nothing but an ydle dreame; and yet he would by no meanes be dissuaded. Heereupon, when Phillipicus perceiued the Emperour to bend himselfe against Cherronesus, like a man wholly desperate, euen on meere constraint, he tooke courage to defend himselfe; and having no other remedie, with so many men as he could assemble together, hee went against Iustinian, vanquished him in fight, and cut off both his head and his Sonnes; which being done, banished as he was, hee made himselfe Emperour.

In this manner, it pleased Fortune to play with Iustinian, vntill she had bereft him both of life and Empire. And the very same successe she bestowed on Phillipicus; for at the end of fixe months, one, named Anastasius, arose against him; and after he had pluckt out his eyes, he tooke the Empire from him, retaining it in his owne possession. And yet but for the space of a yeare only: because about that very time, another man, called Theosus, banded his power against him; and causing him to bee shorne a Monk, deprived him of the Empire also.

Thus you may see, how Fortune shewed her true ficklenesse, both with Iustinian and diuers other, in making exiles Emperours, & Emperours exiles, restoring to the dispossessed, more then they had before; that her despoyle of them, might bee the more notable, proving in the end cruell to them all; not dooing anie good to one, in regard of the euill endured by each other; for from some shee tooke that which shee gaue to others, to take away all from them in the conclusion.

At the beginning, she would bestowe but little on them, vntill shee had lifted them vp to lofty estates; and shee exalted them the higher, to make their downfall the lower; giuing them abundance, because shee scorned to take final things from them. She would not suffer any of them to die in his prosperity; but hee must see himselfe dispossessed of all, before he dyed. Now, albeit these Histories wer most true, and might well haue serued for other mens examples: yet, in following successe of times, euermore one or other would be climbing, and grewe desirous of Empire: As whosoever readeth Blondus, Platina, Antoninus, and other good Authors, may fit their owne turne, with many more like Histories.

Having thus related, howe Fortune delt with many, now I purpose to declare what course shee tooke with one man only, who was Duke of Millaine, named Lodowick, Brother to Galeas Sforza, Duke of Millaine, named by some John Andrea; whom he nourished and brought vp, and slew in the Church of S. Stephen in Millaine, as hee was there present at the hearing of Masse; albeit, they were both Sons to the famous Warriour, Frances Sforza.

This Lodowick was educated with his other Bretheren, in great estate and power, as beeing Children vnto one of the most Worthy Princes of his time; and who was in like manner, a verie Famous Soldiour. By the death of Galeas, a Sonne of his (Named John, and verie young in yeares) remained his successor, in the tutelage and Government of Bonna his Mother; and of one, called Chico, a Native of Calabria; who hadde beene much faouored, by the father and grandfather.

This Chico, immediately banished the Bretheren vnto the deceased Duke, by meanes whereof, Lodowick (being one of them) wandering as a Fugitiue thorowe strange Countreyes, learned to tast the mutabilities of Fortune; or to speake more truly, of the World. And indeed his griefes must needs bee great, beholding

The downfall of Great men should serue as examples to others.

The true History of Lodowick Sforza.

Lodowick, and his Bretheren banished.

Lodowick forcibly entered into Millaine.

Lodowick sole Governour a boue 20. years

Lodowicks great honors won in warre and peace.

His defending the Duke of Ferrara against the Venetians.

His helpe to the King of Naples.

His aid to the D. of Sauoy.

ding (at an instant, and at the verie entrance of his youth) his Brother slaine by treason, and the right of his Nephew, which in reason he ought to administer, to be in the hand of a stranger, of base & wretched condition; in regard whereof, little assurance was to bee had of his life. Neuerthelesse, this Wheele turned, and he (like a man of wisdom and courage) sought the meanes of fortunes fauor and assistance, and found it. For hee entered forcibly into Millaine, and expeld thence both Bonna and Chico, whereby he continued a peaceable Governour of all the Fathers goods. His Nephew was so weake, and himselfe so valiant, that he ruled all, for the space of aboue xx. yeares: during which time, his great wisdom and spirit so ordered all things, that he increased the publick good both in war & peace; Millaine growing rich, feared, and well affected throughout Italy, and himselfe perticularly very highly esteemed. He attained to great honors in the time of peace, but much more in war, especially that which the Florentines then had, against Pope Sixtus the 4. and against Ferrand, K. of Naples. In which warre the Florentines were in danger to be destroyed & ruined: but the authority of Lodowicke was their speedy remedy, reducing them to peace and safety. King Lerrand also hauing lost some places in those warres, which hee had in Calabria against the Turk: he gaue him present succour both with men and money, whereby those losses were quickly recovered.

By Armes likewise, hee defended the Duke of Ferrara, against the power of the Venetians, who had brought him to such extremitie, as he could no longer make resistance. And then the Venetians making war vpon him, he withstoode them so powerfully, as he entred into their landes, and brought it in compasse of his owne power, to agree peace with them when he pleased, and no sooner. At another time, the king of Naples being much molested by some great men of his country, that rose in rebellion against him: he lent him such aide and support, as kepte himselfe within his owne Kingdome, and all his estates. Genes rebelling against him, and Bonna his Sister in Law, hee brought them vnder his obedience: and gaue such supply to the Duke of Sauoy, whose subjects would not endure his government; that he made them obediently to submit themselves to him. Knowing also, that Pope Alexander the 6. so soone as he was elected, fell into great necessity, hee succoured him graciously with a great sum of mony. He married the duke his nephew to the King of Naples daughter, & gaue his Neece as wife to Maximilian King of the Romaines. He reuealed the Marquesse of Saluces in his estate & possessions. After all these prosperities, his nephew John died, leauing a childe very young: wherefore, he as absolute Lord, by the permission of the Emperor Maximilian, entituled himselfe Duke of Millaine.

At this time he was aged, standing on the height of his honours and successes; when fortune began to turne her backe vpon him, and the Venetians became his enemies, in fauour of Lewes the twelfth, King of France, who pretended the Dutchy of Millaine to appertaine to him in the right of his Mother. For this cause, he had war on both sides; and although he was a very potent Prince, yet notwithstanding, either because he grew distrustfull of his people, or helde himselfe not strong enough to withstand such combustions, without the backing & assistance of some of those Princes, who had receiued from him so many helpes and good turnes; hee resolved not to attend the shocke or brunt, but taking the best Order (for all things) that hee could deuise, forooke his estate, which in lesse then a month, was vtterly lost. And yet not long after, Fortune kindled some sparkes of hope againe; for being fled into Germany, hee found there such succour and assistance, as at the expiration of 5. moneths, he returned with a great army and his entraunce prooued very successfull, because he tooke many places and towns in his owne territories, and was in good hope to recover all.

But when he stood ready for the fight, not onely the Switzers refused the battle; but they seized him, and deliuered him into the Frenchmens handes; who led him with them into France, where (at length) he dyed prisoner in the Castle of Loches in Touraine. It nothing auailed him, that he had been rich and mightie, for Fortune gaue him all those Glasse Felicities, to loade him (in the end) with the more greater Aduersities. These are the very best blessings, that this

The marriages of his nephew & niece

Fortune turneth hir backe on him, after all his good successes, and in his age.

A flattering smile of faire hope againe.

The Switzers deliuerd him to the French, and his death in Torraine.

He that hath little, is sure not to loose much.

this World can afford vs. Wherefore I say, he that hath least, and least desireth; liueth in the most contentment & assurance. O that men then would rest satisfied with such goods as they haue, making vse and seruice of them in peace, and as God hath bestowed them on them: for I haue read of diuers, who haue coueted many thinges, which (after the enioying of them) haue beene the onely cause of loosing their liues, and God knoweth best, what became of their Soules, by such extreame dealing.

CHAP. XII.

What opinion the Romaines, and others (our Ancient Predecessors) had of Fortune: How she was numbred among the Goddesses. In what forme and figure they used to paint her. With apparant prooffe, that (among vs Christians) there is no Fortune; because all thinges are referred to God.

Vpon what cause this Chapter is inducd.

Because wee haue shewne the instabillity of the world, by sundry examples of men, which some haue falsely attributed to Fortune: I hold it fit and reasonable, that we should a little conferre in this case, on those vanities holden by the Gentiles and Ethnickes, and afterward to conclude with Christians. Among those other errours, which the wise Philosophers held, concerning humane sapience (they beeing deprivied of the true and diuine) this was the chiefe and principall occasion. For, in not knowing the causes whence effects proceeded, neither vnderstanding who made and ordained them: many among them, tearmed them to be the workes of Fortune, with all sudden happenings, and things neuer hoped, or before thought on. And yet they could not be contented to stay themselues there (Fortune being nothing else, but a meere imagination without Essence) but many of them verily beleeued, that Fortune was

The onelic ground of the Philosophers errors.

Fortune reputed to be a Diuinity and Goddess.

a Diuinitie, and a particular Goddess: to whom they ascribed all humane accidents; whether they were of prosperity, or of aduerlity. To her they referred gouernance and administration, of all things eyther good or euill. Nay, this folke tooke so strong a head, that Virgill named her Almighty; And Cicero in his Offices, dared to vse these words: What is he, who knoweth not, that the power of Fortune is most great equally in good and euill? Because, if shee doe ayde vs with her prosperous winde, wee shall come to the issue of our desires: if she deale contrary, we shall be afflicted euen to extremity. Salust, an eloquent and learned Historiographer, saide: Fortune is the Lady and Mistresse of all thinges. Iuuenall consented with them, saying; If Fortune please, of a simple Aduocate, thou shalt be made a Consull: but if she be contrary, thou shalt of a Consull, become a sillie Aduocate. So that they ascribed all powerfullnesse to Fortune.

10

20

30

40

50

And yet notwithstanding, it is a wonderful thing, that beeing in this opinion; they would blasphemie so mightily against her, imposing names and Epithites on her, which were voyd of any reuerence and honour. Pliny said, Vndoubtedly, in all the world, in all places, at all houres, and by all persons; onely Fortune is innoked, she onely is called, she onely accused and pursued. She alone is thought on, commended, and blamed with iniuries and reproaches. She onely is honoured, esteemed; yet reputed mutable, and (by some) blinde, vncertaine, inconstant, treacherous, and fauourable to the vnworthy. To her solie, is referred all expences and receipts, and in all matters and reasons of Mortall men, she filleth vp all the Pages of our ratioll book. So that; by these wordes, wee are in a most subiected condition, for if we shall repute Fortune to be a God or Goddess; we must thereby approoue God to be most vncertaine.

In those elder daies also, they made Statues and Images to her, in sundrie shapes and figures, according to such effects as they perswaded themselues to be in her. Whē they attributed victorie vnto her; then they formed her strong and manly, and they had a Temple likewise, particularly dedicated to invincible Fortune, which (according to Titus Liuius) was built by Camillus the Consull, Virg in lib. 8. de Aenei.

Cicero in lib. 2. Officijs.

Salust his opinion of Fortune.

Iuuenall his words.

Plin. in lib. 2. Cap. 7.

How Fortune is both blamed and honored.

Variety of Statues and Images erected to Fortune.

A Temple built to Fortune by Camillus the Consul

Another temple built out of Rome to Fortune.

A third Temple dedicated to euill Fortune.

The Deuill is the Authour of these deludings.

Galba, his taking a Chain of Gold from the Image of Fortune.

A Statue of bearded Fortune, to send young men beards.

full, with the prey and spoyle which he tooke from the Hetrurians. And long time after it was ordained, that her sol-lemne Feast should be celebrated, on the five and twentieth day of Iune: because, as on that day, Hasdruball was defeated and foyled; and King Massinissa, a Friend to the Romaines, the selfe same day vanquished King Siphax.

Moreover, the Romaines erected another Temple to her, about two little miles from Rome, where she was figured in the shape of a Woman; because in that place, Coriolanus coming in Armes against his Countrey, hauing listened to the entreaties of his Mother:
became gracious, and returned, pardoning Rome, which he had formerlie determined to sacke and spoile, even from the top to the bottome. Into this forme of a Womans mounted Statue, the deuill made his entrance, giuing answer therein many times, and so reputed to be an Oracle. They had another Temple also, which was dedicated particularly to euill Fortune, and such was their blindness in deuotion, as they verily beleued, that he who was deuout-ly addicted to this Fortune; all things should happen well vnto him. But hee that did the contrary, all thinges with him should turne to unhappinesse. Of all which delusions and abusings, the Deuill onely was the Authour, to make men relye and trust on him the more confidently. As it happened to Galba, who hauing taken a Collar or Chaine of Gold from this Image of Fortune, to bestow it (as an offering) on the Goddesse Venus, as it is recorded by di-uers Historians: Fortune her selfe appeared to him the night following, and threatned him, whereon (soone after) his death ensued.

The vanitie of these people was so extreame, that they had also another Statue, of a bearded Fortune, perswading themselves; that such youthes as did hold her in veneration, should the sooner haue Beards and comely proportion: but such as contemned her, should both want beards, and all good disposition. All these things they did, for diuersitie of respects and considerations: and yet their maine intent, was to signifie the whole power, which (according to their opinion) remained in her, and the contrarietie of her nature, they declared also in diuers kinds.

The Philosopher Cebes, painted her in the shape of a Woman, but furious, blind, and without vnderstanding: hauing her feete placed vpon a round stone, thereby to demonstrate her in-stabilitie. Vupalus was the first in Greece, that made an Image to Fortune in the City of Smyrna: she had the Heauens ouer her head, and in one of her hands a Horne of aboundance. The Scythians made her a Woman without feete, hauing (neuerthelesse) handes and wings.
Others figured her with the stearne or guide of a Shippe in one of her hands, and in the other a Cornucopia: inferring thereby, that she gouerned all thinges, and graunted blessings to the World.
Others made her of Glasse; because she was fraile, and broken in pieces with the least mischance.

There were others, who painted her turning a Wheele, on the top whereof somewere seated; others climbing to get vp, and others thrown down quite vnderneath it. One tearmed her to be like a Comedie, wherein some persons entred (one while) like Kings and great Lords, and presently changing their Garments, entred againe like Slaves & Seruants: because our humane life is gouerned in like manner, for men are to day rich and pompous; but to morrow poore, abiect, and miserable. Socrates compared her to a publike place, or disordered Theater, wherein many times it commeth to passe, that the best persons sit in the worst places. Those of ancient times, described her to be blind, and to that purpose, Apuleius hath these words in his Golden Ass. Not without cause, did men of old learning, paint Fortune to be blinde: considering, she continually bestoweth riches on peruerse people, & such as are unworthy of them, neuer making any good election among men; but most commonly fauoureth and communica-teth her selfe to wicked people, whom (if she had eyes) she would fly and shunne.

There are an infinite number of authorities, which might bee produced, concerning the good and bad names attributed to Fortune. Valerius and Claudian called her Enuious. Ouid in his Fasts tearmeth her strong and doubtfull; and in his Epistles, wicked. Iuuenal in his Satires,

Cebes his figure of Fortune.

Vupalus his picture of Fortune.

The Scythians
Fortune.

Diuers shapes and figures of Fortune.

Compared to a Comedie.

Socrates his comparison
of Fortune.

Apuleius in his Golden Ass, concerning Fortune.

Valerius Maximus, Claudian,
Ouid in Fasts, Iuuenal in Sat.

Lucian.

Satires, calleth her Vile and peruerse. Lucian, Traitresse and periured. Siluius Italianus, Craftie and subtile. Virgil in one place, calleth her Omnipotent; and elsewhere he railerth on her, saying; shee is Inconstant, faithlesse, and disloyall Cicero, of whom we haue already spoken, and who attributed vnto her so much power as to entile her; The Guide and conduct of Men in liuing well: faith yet beside, That there is nothing so contrarie to reason and constancie, as Fortune is. And yet neuerthelesse, the vanity of the ancient Romaines was so great, that they would adore her, whom they knew to be blind, false, and inconstant, building Temples to her. And so curious were they in imployment of their superstitions; that the Emperours of Rome kept the Image of Fortune, in the very same Chambers where they vsed to sleepe: and when any of them dyed, shee was transported from his Chamber, into that of his Successour.

Cicero in lib. de Orat.

The vanities of the ancient Romaines.

The superstition of the Romaine Emperours.

Seruius Tullius Plutarc. in Lib. de Rom. Fort.

The first that erected a Temple to her in Rome (according as Titus Linius declareth) was Seruius Tullius, sixt King of the Romaines. Yet Plutarch, in his Booke of the Romaines Fortune, saith (of virile or manly Fortune) That albit Martius, fourth King, was the first that builded a Temple to her: yet it was Seruius Tullius, that imposed many names on her, for each of which names, they made her a Temple. One to manly Fortune; others to little Fortune; prosperous Fortune; aduerse or bad Fortune; and to triumphant Fortune, with other such like names.

The names of Fortune stem pies.

The Temple of manly Fortune, for marriageable maides.

The Temple of virile or manly Fortune, was builded neere to the Riuer of Tyber, and (according to some others) hard by a Lake or Poole. In this Temple, all such Maides as were of marriageable yeares, came and presented themselves in great deuotion, despoiling themselves into their Smocks, before the Statue of Fortune. If they had any blemishes or imperfections on their bodies, they would discover them vnto her: beleeuing verily, that Fortune would keepe them hidden and concealed, and order the matter in such sort, that such as were to enjoy them in marriage, should neuer perceiue them; this is testified by Ouid in his Fasts, & much more beside.

Ouid in lib. de Fast.

Now, as the power of the Romains grew to encrease and enlarge it selfe, so much the more was this Religion of Fortune aduanced; and still new Temples were builded to her, answerable to such names as wer imposed on her: not onely in Rome, or there-about, but likewise in diuers Countries of Italie. This then must be our conceipt, that not onely these vanities, but many more which might be discovered to this effect: were meere deceiuings, and deluding of men walking in darknesse, confiding onelie in their owne knowledge and wisdom. For, according to truth, all things that can bee done in the vniuersall World, be it in Earth or in Heauen, yea, or in Hell; they proceed from the vnsearchable prouidence, and supream wisdom of God. They ensue neither by Fortune, Chance, or Aduenture: for all things haue their being in him, and so are continued in their course and order.

The enlarging o. Fortunes religio.

How men are to iudge according to truth.

10

20

30

Moreouer, be it that among vs men, (thorough want of knowledge and vnderstanding oftentimes) some causes are begotten of others, which come not by accidentall Chance: yet in the end, all thinges make their stay on the first and chiefest cause, which is God, the Motiue, Maker, and Governour of them all, and this is that truth, which ought to bee beleued, knowne, and held, by euery true and faithfull Christian.

God the motiue, maker & governour of all things.

40

Lactantius Firmianus, wisely mocked such men; as attributed the accidents of this World to Fortune. And Saint Augustine in his Retractions, denyeth that, which (by common manner of speaking) he had formerly attributed to Fortune, concerning the happy successe of a man. In the same place also, he commendeth Dauid, because hee ascribed all his tribulations to the indgment of God: and so ought euery Christian to hold, that all thinges still doe proceede from God.

Lactantius Firmianus.

Aug in lib. de Retract.

50

Many of the Ancients had some tast of this truth, for Salust could say: Each man is the principall cause and motiue of his owne Fortune. And in his Proheme to the Warre of Iugurth, he saith. Slothfull and negligent persons, make their complaint on Fortune, without any occasion. Iuuenall in his tenth Satire, speakeh more cleare-

The words of Salust. In Prohem. Bel Iugurt.

Iuue in Sat. 10.

clearly: That where Prudence is, Fortune hath no power or dignity, although we make her to be a Goddesse, and extoll her to the Heavens. Other Philosophers there were, who although they said; That Fortune (of her owne proper vertue and power) could not do any thing: yet they credited, that she was the Minister and Instrument of the Diuine prouidence; as if God should stand in neede of some other, to performe his workes for him, which is no lesse vaine, then those opinions before recited, and others that might be heere remembred, which I auoyd for prolixities sake.

The opinion of some Philosophers.

Neuerthelesse, I could wish that simple Christian people (too ignorant in many thinges) would forsake that bad Custome which they haue held ouer long: in making their complaint on Fortune, when any thing happeneth contrary to their hope or expectation. For it is an infallible rule, that there is not any thing whatsoeuer; but God is the only disposer thereof, and recourse should be made to none but him, in all our wordly wants and necessities.

An aduise to ignorant Christians.

CHAP. XIII.

That ouer and beside the properties of Elementary thinges; There are great store of other concealed and wonderfull properties, which be not of the Elements.

Some of the ancient Philosophers, hauing discovered by their knowledge, infinite properties and vertues of herbs, Plants, & Stones, I speake of those which the Spirit and industry of Men could hardly attaine vnto, but that necessitie, and time (ioyned with experience) haue declared, and from whence so many remedies and benefits haue descended; In regard also, that humain vnderstanding neuer taketh rest, or can bee satisfied in perfectly knowing things, vntil it reach also their causes and reasons, and beholdeth their qualities and effects: It hath therefore bene the occasion, that men haue made narrow search, and dying into their originall, from whence such power and vertues should ensue, and haue found (in this contemplation) certaine occasions, which they could know and vnderstand, consisting particularly, on some naturall principles and apprehensions, of the qualities of the Elements, whereof all inferiour things are composed. And such are the causes and properties of those thinges, which we call Elementary; as to make hot, to coole, to moysten, and to dry, which name themselues, as principall or first qualities.

Desires and affections in men, are fit-dome capable of any rest.

The naturall qualities of the Elements in their severall degrees.

These Philosophers did likewise know, that these proceeded from the foure Elements; Water, Earth, Ayre, and Fire, whose qualities are Colde, Drought, Moysture, and Heat. There are beside, sundry other qualities in thinges, which they knew also to deriue themselues of the Elements, and by the mixtion of them; and they were named second qualities: As one thing had the property to assuage; another to mollifie; sundry other in their kindes; to strengthen; to comfort; to be sweet or sower. Which forces or properties, are found in thinges composed of the foure Elements, although they know none of the foure Elements simply; but because the commixture of them causeth such properties.

Other deriuations of the Elements, tearmed second qualities

Therefore, such men as did vnderstand whence the causes proceeded, did hold them for cleare and certaine. Neuerthelesse, there are other proprieties and vertues in thinges, which name themselues concealed and meruailous: because no man knoweth from whence they come, neither is their reason any way vnderstood. Howbeit, a Man may plainly perceiue, that they deriue not themselues from the Elementary qualities: and of such thinges as these wee purpose to speake, as of matters most desired, and least apprehended. We see that the Adamant or Load-stone, otherwise called the Calamite, exalteth peeces of Iron and Steele from the ground, which doe poize the fourth part of his weight; as any occasion may easily make manifest, although we well know, that this quality proceedeth not of the Elements.

Of other secret and wonderful things, not knowne from whence they proceed.

Example of the Adamant, Loadstone, or Calamite, which hath no elementary quality.

It is neither the heat of Fire, which causeth causeth it, nor the drinesse of the earth; but another hidden and secret vertue. Moreouer, this Calamite Stone; hath not this propriety perticular to it selfe, but dooth communicate it to other things.

To approue the truth heereof, if one whet the point of a Knife thereon, the point receiueth and pertaketh so much of his vertue; as it will take vp a Naile, a Needle, or some other small peece of Iron or Steel, without any touch (then) of the stone it selfe. In like manner, a Needle touched with this Stone, receiueth another meruaylous propriety, for being at his owne liberty; it prepareth and turneth it selfe towards the Pole Articke, or Northerne Region. Vpon which occasion, Marriners did inuent the vse of the Compasse, not knowing how or whence that this vertue cometh.

It is knowne likewise for a thing most certaine, that a very little Fish, called in Greeke * Echeneis, and in Latine Remora, if it cleaue fast to the Keele of a ship (though it float neuer so fast vnder saile:) it with-holdeth it from stirring, and will not let it goe. And yet wee know it a matter impossible, that this can be done by strength of Man: neither can this Fish (being so small of it selfe) doe it by any power it hath; but by some hidden vertue and propriety. Agarick, purgeth Phlegme; Rubarbe, dryeth and expelleth Choller; and the Hearb called Epythimon, cleanseth away Melancholly, yet no man knoweth, from whence these concealed vertues doe proceede.

If I shall be answered, the reason ensueth, because these Drugges are hot: it should then as well follow, that Orpiment (which is hot also) should work the like effect: and yet we see, that (of his owne Nature) it heateth and restricteth. The Ostridge eateth and consumeth Iron, and that by some secret property; and not in regard of her heat: for the Lyon is much more hotter, and yet cannot doe it. Quales do feed on Helleborus, without receiuing any hurt at all thereby; and yet if other Birds do eat thereof, they die immediatlie. Fire burneth and consumeth all things: and yet we read it (and auouched by good Authours) that the Salamander, and a Fly, named by the Greekes Pyrantha, by some secret in Nature; Fire is to them both life and nourishment. I read, that a man, if hee haue a Dogge with him, and doe smite an Adder once, shee dyeth: but if he strike a second blow, she reuiueth againe.

The Iasper, and some other Stones, haue the power to stench bleeding. The precious Stone called a Carbuncle, glistereth, and brightly shineth in night and darknesse. The Iacynth (according to some Writers) is good against thunder and lightning. The Turqueis is helpfull, to keep a man from casuall falling: For, by breaking it selfe against the Luer Veine, it preserueth the man from any harme. The Diamond is good for Weomen great with Childe. Now, if demaund be made, from whence ariseth all these admirable properties, few Men (I am perswaded) can make any answer.

In these powers and properties so secret and wonderfull, there is another thing worthy of consideration; to wit; that some of these thinges, do containe the power wholly in the matter alleaged, and in part. According as we haue spoken of the Fish Echeneis, or Remora, that is able to retain the swiftest course of a Shippe: this is not proper to any one part of the Fish, but to the whole body. In like manner, the shadow of the Hyenna maketh the Hounds hoarse and broken voyced: but it is to be vnderstood, that it is the shadow of the whole body, and not any part thereof. There are other things, whose properties consist not onely in whole, but also in part. As the Hearb Selandine (tearmed in French Esclere) which is good for the sight, both in whole and in part; the roote being as good, as the Leaues and Seedes. Of other thinges, there are some that haue these secret vertues in part onely by it selfe; as we read concerning the eyes of a Wolfe, if they first behold a man, before he do behold the Beast, the Man becommeth hoarse and wheezing.

The Hyenna also, hath a particular property in his eyes: for, if he looke on a Beast, seated any where to rest himselfe: the looke onely maketh the beast sleepey, and so drouisie headed, as he hath no ability to stirre himselfe. The Basiliske

The Salamander, and the Fly Pyranth

Of the Adder

Of sundry precious stones, and their vertues.

The power of these properties consisting wholly in the thing, and not in part.

Not onely in the whole, but also in part.

In part onely, and not all.

Of a Needle touched by the Adamant stone.

* A Sackstone or Sea Lamprey, a verie small Fish, that can hold a ship a floating vnder sayle.

Of Agaricke, Rubarbe, and Epithymon, purgatiue Drugges.

Orpiment.

The Ostridge eateth and digesteth Iron.

Quales eat Helleborus.

10

20

30

40

50

The Hart of a Dog.

The Gaule of a Goat.

Properties in some things, during life, & in others after death.

What vertues men haue found by search, they will not confesse.

Alexan. Aphro. in Problem.

Theophrastus. Dioscorides. Isaac. Iudaic.

The opinion of Plato and the Scho lists.

like onely hath poyson in his eyes, and killeth with his very sight. It is saide, that the Hart of a Dogge hath this property, that if a man beare it about him; it causeth all Dogges to auoid and shun him. And the Gaule of a Goat beeing put into a Vessell of Brasse, and set in a place where Frogges and Paddockes are; they will all presently gather about it.

Here we are further to obserue, that some one of these thinges, and namely in Beasts; do not containe the property, but while they are liuing, and then by death they are lost: yet some others do continue after death. As the Eagle, who in her life time is victorious ouer all Birdes or Fowles: likewise after death, her Feather being put among others, it deuoureth and consumeth them. The Skinne of a Lyon, spoyleth the Skinnes of other Beastes: And the Skinne of a Wolfe, eateth and consumeth the Skinne of a Lambe. We behold also in Hearbes, that after they are withered and dryed; yet they cease not to keepe and preserue their properties. These vertues, and diuers other, haue both beene seene and knowne by mens curious Inquisition, who yet haue refused to tearme them secret or concealed vertues, because they did not hold them for certaine: albeit they had made good experiment of them, and no one of them could deliuer the cause, whence any of these vertues should proceede.

Alexander Aphrodiseus, in the beginning of his Problemes, tearmeth them Vnknowne Vertues, saying morcouer: That they are knowne to God onely, the Authour of all thinges. There are likewise some other writers, who haue discoursed on the properties of diuers thinges, making the causes of them, to bee as matters out of their knowledge; and of this minde were Theophrastus, Dioscorides, Isaac the Jew, and many others. And yet notwithstanding, there were others beside, who being loath to confesse their ignorance in these thinges; gaue them yet some originall, but were very different in their opinions. Plato and the Academickes, attributed the originall of this vertue, to the Idea of all thinges immediatly; which they intended to be God, as the Originall, beginning and first cause of all. Other naturall Philosophers, attributed the causes of these operations, to Celestiall Spirits, or Angels.

Albertus Magnus thinketh it to come, from the especiall forme and substance of each thing: whereto consenteth Leonardus Camillus, in his second Booke of the Myrror of Stones. Hermes, and many other Astrologers, with whom also ioyneth Marsilius Phicinus; attributing the whole power to the Starres and Celestiall figures. And this is the most common opinion which wee follow now adades: although it appeareth that they hold one opinion by conformity of subiect, arresting all vpon God, who is the first cause and Creator of all thinges.

But returning to our Starres and Planets, which are the Instruments and Governours of this neather World: for these secrets and perticular properties whereof we haue spoken, should seeme to forme their deriuation thence. It is then to be vnderstood, that these secret powers in thinges, are in a like manner diuers and variable, as they be subiected to diuers and variable Starres and celestiall Images. Because that of the sundry natures and forces of influention, which the Starres haue with their light (considering the Celestiall motion in inferiour thinges, which perticularly they are subiected vnto) the particular excellencies in any thing is caused. And thereby moreouer happeneth, that one thing may haue two vertues, and secret properties, onely by the influence of diuers Starres. And these powers beeing so singular, doe worke the much greater effectes and efficacy; when the elementary qualities of the thinges, are not thereto repugnant and contrary. And because examples will make these matters the more cleare and euident; wee will giue ye a tast of some. But whosoeuer is desirous of further information; let him read Porphyrius, Sinesius, Marsilius Phicinus, Leonardus Camillus, in his Mirroure of Stones, Cornelius Agrippa, Albertus Magnus, and others.

Naturall Philosophers.

Alber. Magnus.

Leonard. Camillus.

Marsilius Phicinus.

The stars and Planets, Governours of our lower World.

The diuersity of Natures in the stars, causeth diuersity of vertue in thinges.

The Elementarie qualities not repugnāt.

Marsil. Phicinus in lib. de trip. vit.

CHAP.

CHAP. XIII.

Of many meruailous properties in sundrie things; And to what Stars and Planets they are subiected naturally.

Ist of all, we will speak of Saffron, which hath the power to awake or rouse vp dull spirits, and his vertue goeth immediatly to the hart, procuring ioy, gladnesse, and smiles. It is saide, that these properties are imparted thereto, by particular influence of the Sun, wherto it is subiect: and by him therefore is assisted, thorow his subtil nature, splendant and Aromaticall. Mirrhe, Incense, Balme, wood of Aloes, Spikenard, these also are subiect to the sun. It is said moreover, that Gold, in being of the nature of the Sun, hath therefore the vertue, to comfort and glad the hart, & to be shining. The same Sun also giueth vertue to the Carbunckle, to be so splendant in the night, and to bee powerfull against poyson. The propertie which the Iacinth hath, against thunder and lightning, is held to proceede from the influence of the Planet Iupiter: for which cause it hath bene thought very conuenient, that a man should alwaies carry it about him. The Eagle-stone, being commonlie found in an Eagles nest, among al other vertues, is meruailously proper for women great with Child, and at the time of their deliuerance: which is occasioned by the vertue of Venus, and of the Moon; and Rasis affirmeth, that he hath made experiment thereof. If a man be but touched with the hearbe Piony, otherwise called Kinges-bloome, or Rose of the Mount, especially of that which is the Male: the party so touched, shall be defended from the falling sicknes. And this onely commeth by the Sunnes influence, to whom this hearb is alwaies subiect. The Corall, and the Chalcidony, which is a kind of Onix stone, doe contain the selfe-same efficacy, thorow the perticular influences of Iupiter and Venus.

The vertue of Saffron receiued from the Sunne.

Other things subiect to the Sunne. Gold.

The Carbunckle.

The Iacinth, by Iupiter.

The Eagle-stone by Venus and the Moone.

The Hearbe Piony, by the Sunne.

Corall and Chalcidony, by Iupiter and Venus.

By the vertue of the Sun, and which it communicateth to Ginger: it is receiued among meates, and is very proper against weaknesse and emptinesse of the stomacke. Iupiter lendeth vertue to Sage, and maketh it soueraigne against the Palsie. Those beasts which are subiect to the Sunne, and doe receiue influence from him: are couragious and valiant, affecting superiority and dominion ouer others. Among whom is the Lyon, much more then all the rest; the Crocodile and the Bull, and according as one Planet or one Starre yeildeth advantage of influence more then another, either vpon beast, or any other thing: euen so is the influxion thereby receiued of superiority in excellency, either in beasts or other things subiected to this Planet. And therefore you may note, how it hapneth to the Lyon, of whom we haue already made relation, that he standeth in feare of the Cock, & flyeth from him. The reason is, because they are both subiect to the Sunne, and the Cocke is superiour in that order or degree, by meanes whereof, he danteth the Lyon. The power and vertue of the Adamant, is infused by the Celestiall Image, cald Vrsa minor, or Charles waine, which containeth seauen and twentic Stars. Now, because Steele is subiect to these Stars, and the stone is by them more qualified, or raised into the higher degree: it vrgeth thence the sufficiency of mouing or attracting, and so by Vrsa Minor is this vertue imparted vnto the Stone.

Some do hold, that the Eagle is subiect to the sun; others say, to Iupiter, & that this perperty is deriued from Iupiter, that it can (at no time) bee smitten with lightning or thunder. But if we speak of the cause concerning the Sun, & his influence: then the is said to haue another wonderful property; which is, to be chiefe Lady; to make all other Birds stand in feare of her, and to haue the most pure, cleare, and perfect sight beyond all other. Beside, that her Feathers should consume them of other Fouls, whensoever they are mingled together. The Moone imparteth as much vertue, to the stone cald Selenitis, which is found in Arabia, whereof Pliny speaketh, saying; Within the body of this Stone, the Moon apparantly sheweth her selfe, and Ginger, by vertue of the Sunne.

Sage, by Iupiter.

Beasts subiect to the sun, and how they receiue their vertues.

The Lyon & the Cocke, both subiect to the Sunne.

The Adamant, subiect to Vrsa Minor.

Opinions concerning the Eagle, by the Sunne, or by Iupiter.

The Stone, Selenitis, gouerned by the Moone. Plm. in lib. 9. Cap. 3.

increaseth or decreaseth, as shee doth her course in Heauen.

Of Cats, subiect to the Moone.

Pantaurus the most excellent stone of the Sun, a preservative against poyson.

The Stone Acat, subiect to Mercury.

Beasts subiected to Mercury.

The Palme & Laurell, subiect to the Sunne.

The Stone Heliotropium, subiect to the Sunne.

The Iacynth, to the Sunne and Iupiter.

Cats haue a peculiar property by domination of the Moone, that the haire which grow on their eye-edges, do increase or decrease euery day, according to the diurnall course of the Moon, and her aspects: as any man may apparantly behold, at what time he pleaseth to make proof thereof. Among the very worthiest Stones of the Sunne, that which hath the most power, is the stone called Pantaurus, which is reported to be first found by Apollonius Thianens. The Sun giueth such force and vertue to this Stone; that it draweth all other Stones vnto it, euen as the Adament doth Steele or Iron: and hee that beareth this Stone about him, cannot sustaine any harme by poyson. It is saide moreouer, that this one Stone hath included in it, the properties and vertues of all other Stones. Pliny, and all the rest doe affirme, that the Stone called Acat, by the domination of Mercury, helpeth greatly his eye-sight that carrieth it about, causing him to speake freely and liberallie, and yet it is wholly poyson. Mercury in like manner, by influxion which he bestoweth on some Beastes, that are subiected to him, as Dogges, Apes, Foxes, and other such like; endueth them with wonderfull vnderstanding, craft, and subtilty.

The Palme and the Laurell or Bay-Tree, are likewise subiected to the Sun, and from him doe receiue their perticuler properties; against lightning, tempests, and stormes, as also against all venimes and poysons. By the same occasion, the Ywe, Cedar, and the Ash trees, are proper against venimes, and doe hold their perfect greenenesse all the yeare long. In like manner, the Stone, called Heliotropium, wherof Pliny and many other do report wonderful things; to wit, that it prolongeth life, and that it maketh a man constant and verie well willed; moreouer, that it can cause a man to walk inuisible: all these properties are deriued vnto it by influence of the Sun.

The Iacynth Stone, by communication of the Sunne, to whom it is perticulerly subiect, and also to Iupiter, if a man doe beare it about him, and rouch his flesh there-with neuer so little: it defendeth and preserueth him from all poysons, as also against all euill vapours and corrupted ayres. It gladeth and comforteth the Hart and Spirit, and is reputed beside, to make Men or Weomen very amiable, and well enclined. There is likewise another kind of Iacynth, named the Chrysolite, which shineth with a golden colour quite thorow, and pertaketh of the Suns vertue: it is also very good against frenzy or madnesse, melancholly humours, as also against strange imaginations and euill visions. The Scarabe, which is otherwise commonly called the Beetle-flye, a little old Creature, is maruelously subiect to the Moon, and thereof is found both written, and by experience: That she gathereth or maketh little pellets, or little round bals, of Mens Excrements, and therein encloseth her young Egges, keeping the Pellets hid in the ground eight and twenty daies; during which time the Moone maketh her course, & the nine and twentieth day shee taketh them foorth, and then hideth them againe vnder the Earth. Then, at such time as the Moone is conioyned with the Sunne, which wee vsually tearme the New Moone: they all issue forth aliue, and flye about. The Moone also hath Soueraignery and dominion ouer many thinges, and particularly on such as are white and greene, and (among Mettals) ouer Siluer especially. For this cause, all Trees (in the encreasing and waine of the Moone) doe extend or shut vp their moysture and strength. Also, all Birdes or Fowles, which hant and liue in Riuers, or Marishes and marine places, are subiect to the Moone. And likewise the Camelion, who receiueth (from her) his property of changing, and altring into such colours as are laid before or neere him.

The properties of Myrabolanes are infinite. They doe nourish and preserue the life of all such as shall often eat them. They prolong youth; strengthen the senses and Spirits of Man; causing quicknesse of memorie; comforting the stomacke; and chearing the heart. All these gifts and vertues, doe proceede from the Planets Iupiter and Mercurie, according as it is testified by very many learned and great personages. The Iasper stone, by influence of the

The Chrysolite to the Sunne.

The Scarabe-Fly, subiect to the Moone

Coniunction of the Sunne with the Moone.

The Moones power ouer thinges white and greene.

The East-Indian Plum, called a Myrabolane Plum, subiect to Mercury & Iupiter.

The Jasper stone, subiect to Saturne.

the Planet Saturne; hath the power and vertue to mitigate and remooue the prickings of the Flesh; and to stay excessive of bleeding at the Nose, or any wound receiued. Heere might wee enter into a much larger discourse, of many other properties (verie strange, great, and meruailous) and singular qualities, both of Stones and other things; which the seauen Planets, and principall Starres (being in the Orbes of the Heauens) doe graunt by their influence to things heere beneath. But those which wee haue already related, shall serue and suffice. And now, we will proceede, to speake of such vertues in certain things, as do ensue from the fixed Starres of the eight Heauen, which haue great domination and power ouer those things, that partake with such qualities, which the other Planets giue influence vnto.

Concerning the fixed stars of the eyght Heauen.

Medusæes head, subiect to Iupiter and Saturne.

The Starre called Medusæes head, yeildeth force and vertue to the Diamond, and to the Hearbe called Mugworte, or Saint Johns Hearbe: causing them that carry them about them, to be bold and hardy of heart and Spirit; and this Starre is of the nature of Iupiter and Saturne. The Starres, named the Pleiades*, haue power ouer Christall, and ouer Fennell-seede: And thence it ensueth, that these are comfortable and beneficial to the eye-sight, because that these Starres are Lunarie and Martiall. The selfe-same Hearbe Mugworte, Mandrake, or Mandragon; Mint or Mints; the Saphire and the Rubie, doe receiue their influence from the Goate-Statre; and it is saide, that whosoever weareth them in Ringes or otherwise, shall bee pleasing and amiable.

* The seauen Stars, subiect to the Moone and Mars.

The Saphire and Ruby, to the Goat.

The vertue whereof we haue last spoken, is likewise imparted to the Agate Stone: and it is reported to proceede also, from another Celestiall Image; called the Little Dogge. The vertue of the Emeralde, and of Sage, is communicated vnto them by the Virgines Starre, or the Starre that appeared at Christs birth. The power of the Stone Celidontus, of Celandine, and of Masticke, to represser melanchollie humours; commeth from the Starre called the Lyons Hart, or the Royall Starre, which is of the Nature of Iupiter and

The Agate, to the little dog.

The stone Celidontus, Celandine, and Masticke, to the Lyons heart.

Mars. The Blood Stone, receiuethe his vertue of staying or stanching bleeding, from the Starre called Ariameth, or Bootes in Greeke. The Topase Stone, and the Trifoyle or Three-leaued grasse, which containe the property of Chastity, to represser the Flesh, and to cause ioyfulness in the bearer of them: doe receiue their vertue from the Starre named Alpheta, or the Septentrionall Crowne; being of the nature of Venus, and of Mars. The Amatist, and the Hearbe called Aristologie, or Aristolochia Sarmentitia, Saracens Hearbe, commonly termed Long Hartwort, or Birtworte, and Saffron also; doe cause a faire complexion, and viuacity of Spirit in him that beares them about him, and are said to be the meanes of chasing away euill Spirits. All which vertues are imparted to them; by the Starre called the Scorpions Hart, of the nature of Iupiter and Mars.

The Blood, to Bootes.

The Topase and Trifoyle, to the Northernne crowne

The Amatist and Aristologie, to the Scorpions hart.

By these examples then, concerning the secret properties of things, which proceede not from the Elements, but by the influence of Starres they ought to bee highlie esteemed, and not misprized; especially, because they haue bene written by such worthy men, and approoued by good experience. We likewise read in the third Booke of Kinges, and in the eight Chapter of Wisdom; that Salomon knew the occasion of things, the Natures of Creatures, and the vertue of Hearbes. Iosephus also (because I would not be ouer-long) writes in his Booke of the Jewes Warres, of a Roote named Barbaras, growing neere vnto a place called Mecheranta, and saith, that it shineth in the night time like fire, and hath the vertue to cure such as are possessed with Spirits, beside diuers other excellent properties.

None of these proceeding from the Elements.

Ioseph. in lib. de Bel. Iudaic.

A Roote that cureth men possessed with Spirits.

But there is so much labour bestowed in the gathering thereof, as verie few or none can attaine vnto it; because although they see and discern it a farre off: yet notwithstanding, when they approach neere vnto it, they can neither take or touch it. And yet by much endeauer (making experience of that which the Devill, or rather the Angell pleased to discover) it grew to be found out, that a man, bashing him-

A dangerous adventuring to gather the root.

selfe in the Vrine of a Woman, when she spendeth her floures, might both touch, take, and gather it. Neuerthelesse, he that thus tooke it vp, was sure to dye, except he carried such another like Root thither with him. Or, for his greater safety, when hee should see the root (after bathing as before is said) he must dig the earth round about it, and fastning a strong Cord about the root, binde a Dogge as fast to the other end thereof, who seeing himselfe so strictly hampered, with struggling and striving would plucke vp the Root, and then die immediatly. This beeing thus done, any man might then safely come to it, and make vse thereof for his best seruice. The Authors that doe auouch the truth of these things, are they whom I haue alleaged in the former Chapter, and many others beside, of whom I spare to spake, to auoyde tediousnesse.

CHAP. XV.

¶ That brute Beasts haue instructed many Men, in sundry Medicines, and Remedies for hurts receiued; And in the properties of great store of other things.

It is no matter deseruing meruaile, if men haue attained to the knowledge of the properties of things: considering that beasts (by meere naturall instinct) are very skilfull in the knowledge also of many things, which they can apply to themselves as cures and Medicines. Nay, we may presume to say further, that Beasts haue shewen and declared Medicines to men; by beholding how they haue healed themselves, and found out their owne Remedies, without other helpes. Notwithstanding, we al know wel enough, that men neither could, or can skill of any cures; but such as they haue heard of, and learned from others that went before them.

In regard whereof, Pliny had good cause to say: That men ought to be thank-

Plin. in lib. 10. Cap. 7.

Beasts intelligent in curing their owne harmes.

full to Beastes, for many medicines and remedies, which they haue learned of them. The hart first shewed vs, that the hearb called Dittanie, or Dittander, is good to draw out an Arrow-head, or the pieces of the Shaft, when he is wounded there-with: because the Hart himselfe (being so hurt) vseth it as his onely remedy. Aristotle saith, that the Wilde Goats of Candie doe obserue the verie same. Harts also, when they are bitten or stung by a venomous kinde of Spiders, called Phalanges; they heale themselves by eating Creuisses, though other do hold, that it is by an Hearb growing in the water. The property of the hearb Celandine, otherwise called Esclere, was taught vs by Swallowes, to be apt and conuenient for our eye-sight; because they make vse thereof, to the eyes of their young ones.

The Tortoise, by eating wilde Marierome, defendeth himselfe against Serpents: and thereby the property of the Hearbe was first found and knowne, to be good against poyson. The Weezell eateth Rew, or Hearb-Grace, when he purposeth to fight with Rats. Wilde Boares doe heale all their diseases or harmes, with feeding on Iuy, or the Hearbe called Ale-Hoofe, and some say on Creuisses; especially such as the Sea throweth vp on the shoare. The Snake or Adder, to dispoile himselfe of his writhen skinne; keepes in the earth (in the Winter time) feeding on nothing but the iuyce of Fennel. And to cleare his eye-sight, which he hath much impaired and offended, by being so long vnder-ground in darknesse; he rubbeth and streaketh his eyes vppon Fennel, which the Greekes called Marathrum, that both restoreth and cleareth his eyesight, and thereby may the vertue of this Hearb be wel known. The Bear being poysoned by the Hearbe named Mandragoras, Mandrake, or Mandragon; doth purge his body by the eating of Ants or Pismires. There is no Hearbe, how venomous soeuer it bee, that can hurt the Hart, Stag, or Red-Deere; if he haue eaten of a Thistle or Cardoone, which is called by learned Pliny, Cynata. The Dragon, by feeding on wilde Lettice, purgeth and cureth any harme receiued. It hath beene daily obserued, that Dogges, by eating on an Hearbe, which Dittany, cold Garden Ginger.

Arist. in lib. de Anim. Cap. 12.

Spiders called Phalanges.

Celandine for the eye sight.

Wilde Marierome, good against poyson

Rew or hearb Grace.

Iuy, or Ale-Hoofe.

Iuyce of Fennel, for the eye-sight.

How the Adder cleareth his eye-sight.

Ants a purge for Beares.

Plin. in lib. 8.

Wild-Lettice

which Pliny saith he knew no name of (though others haue tearmed it Dog-grasse, or Knot-grasse) haue prouoked themselues to vomit, and so cleansed their stomackes, when they haue been very sickly. Ringdoues or Woodculuers, Iayes, Mearles, or Black-Birds, & Partridges, do vse the leaues of Laurell or Bayes for their purging. Other Pidgeons, Turtles, and Fowles, to purge themselues; doe take Pellitories, which Pliny calleth Helxine, which is an hearb that groweth vpon wals. Drakes, Mallards, Wild-geese, and other Fowles of Riuers or waters, do serue themselues also for their health, with an hearb called Sideritis or Feuerfew. Cranes and such like Birds, make vse of Marish-Rushes.

The Bird named Ibis, when she feeleth her selfe not well dispoled; purgeth her body by the meanes of her owne beake or bill, with Water comming forth of her lower parts. And Pliny saith, that (by this Bird) men learned how to remedy themselues by Glisters. When a Dog doth receiue any wound whatsoever, if hee can reach thereto with his tongue; he hath no better meanes then licking the sore, and so helpeth himself.

When the Panther (which Auicenne calleth a Leopard) hath fed on a venomous hearb, named * Pardalianches: he recouereth himselfe, by eating the dung or excrements of men. Which being knowne to Hunts-men, they conuay it into a vessell (apt for the purpose) and hang it on the highest branch of a Tree, where the Panther staying, and labouring by hopefull meanes how to get it; the Huntsmen haue opportunity to kill him. Aristotle writeth hereof, and Pliny much more amply then he; so doth Albertus Magnus. And Pliny saith moreouer, that by the meere enstructions of these Creatures: men both haue, and may learne to auoyd many perils; yea, and death sometimes. Because (saith he) when any house is in danger of falling, Rats and Mice do get them gone, and quite forsake it; declaring to men; that they should do the like. Spiders also do shun all such wals as run to ruine, or are like to be ouerthrowne. Where to he adde; That Swallowes will neuer stay, or build their nests, in places ruinous, or ready to fall.

Dog-grasse, or Knotgrasse

Laurell or Bayes.

Paritarie, or Pellitory of the Wall.

Sideritis, or Feuerfew.

Ibis a Bird of Egypt.

Plin. in Lib. 8.

A kind of Aconitum, called Leaopards-bane.

Arist. in lib. Anim. Plin. in lib. 6. Albert. Mag. in Lib. de Anim.

Rats & Mice.

Spydres.

Swallowes.

CHAP. XVI.

Of many Beastes and other Creatures, that (by meere instinct of nature) haue fore-knowledge of things to happen afterward. And that diuers little Creatures, haue caused some Countries to be desolate and uninhabited.

Not onely the natural instinct of some beastes, hath been sufficient for vs, in giuing vs knowledge, concerning the innated properties of diuers things, and what vse or seruice we might make also of them, either for Phisick, Medicines, or otherwise: but many more of them beside, as well earthy as ayry; haue knowledge of the mutation of times, and when any rough winds, raines, tempests, or fair weather shall ensue, and thereof doe deliuer apparant signes to men, euen as true predictions. For example, when Sheep do mount and skip about the felde, as seeming very iocund and merry; it prognosticateth immediat raine. The like is declared to vs by the Oxe or Bullocke; when he licketh himselfe against the haire; and listeth vp his Nose towardes Heauen; or loweth and snuffeth on the ground, striuing to feed ouer-hastily, & more then he was wont to doe. When the Ewe diggeth the ground with her foot; and Goats, when they sleepe too nere one another; when Ants also walk the thickest, and more then in vsuall numbers, meeting together confusedly, all these are manifest signes of raine. If Lyons dislodg themselves, out of one Countrey into another; it is a certaine signe, that the yeare following shall be droughty. Ælianus writeth of the Goats of Lybia, that they knew the comming of the Caniculer or Dog-daies, and declare both by smell and shew, when it is likest to raine. When Wolues are noted to enter houses, to walk on ploughed Lands; or approach neere to people; it is said, that they doe it, to shun some great tempest neere at hand.

10

20

30

40

50

Fishes also haue wonderfull properties,

The rare intelligence & vnderstanding in many Creatures.

The skipping of sheep.

The licking of Oxen, and nosing the ayre.

Ewes, Goats, and Antes.

Dislodgings of Lyons from one foyle to another.

The Goats of Lybia.

Wolues walks

Dolphins playing in the water, and troubling the water.

The Frogges singing.

Of Sea-Fowls coming on Land.

Cranes flying in the Ayre.

The Crow flying to the sea.

The Owles song.

The Crowes hoarse note.

Rauens, Crowes, and Pyes flocking together.

White Fowles assembling together.

Our household Poultry.

The Larkes early singing, and Duckes bathing.

ties, in knowing & expressing the changes of times. When Dolphins leap and play in the seas, discovering themselves about the Water: it is then saide, that great winds will arise from those parts, whence the Dolphins seeme to come. And when they trouble the water, and but bath or beat themselves therein; it is a signe of serenity, calme and faire weather. When the Frog is heard singing loudest, and more strongly then his wont: it is a plaine shew of raine and tempest. Birds likewise are not voyd of this priuiledge, for wee can speake as much, or rather more of them (to this purpose) then of all the Beasts. When the watery Foules do leaue the Sea, & enter farre vpon the Land, it is a signe of stormes, raine, and tempests. If Cranes fly in the ayre & make no noise; it presageth fair weather. But if they cry, and fly out of order; then looke for the contrarie. When the Crow flyeth directly towards the Sea; it prognosticath raine, as also when she keepeth still on the Sea shoare, in melancholly manner, and her notes are sorrowfull. If the Owle sing (after her manner) in rainy weather, it denoteth a suddaine change to faire breaking vp: but if she sing in calme and sweete weather, it is an immediate signe of raine. Plutarch saith, that when the Crowes notes come from a hoarse voyce, and he flap-peth or beateth his Winges; it is a signe of winds and tempests. The same is also to be gathered, if when the Sun is low declining into the west, Rauens, Crowes and Pyes flocking together, do sing, mount and fly vp towards heauen, and then descend downe againe, renewing their former notes: these are saide to be predictions of cold and windie raines. The congregating of many white Fowles together, doth ordinarily proceede from some great tempests and stormes.

When Household Poultry, as Cocks, Capons, Hennes, &c. doe beate their Wings, and mount vp, (merily chattering or reioycing) it is an euident testimony, that they feele winde and raine approaching. When the Larke singeth very early in the morning, and Duckes doe willingly bath themselves, with picking, imping, and pruning their Feathers with their billes; it is a relation of wind and tempests. When the Swallowes flye so neere vnto the Water, that they seeme to smite it with their Winges; it fore-telleth raine presently to follow.

Ælianus affirmeth, that the Snite knoweth the waxing and waining of the Moone. But gentle Friends, I feare I haue beene too vnseasonable in the precedent examples, therefore I will cease any further pursuite in that kind: but will now speake of certaine Beasts, which haue expelled and driuen people out of their Countties and dwellings; yet being no Creatures of hugeness or stature, but very weake, little and finally regarded. Ælianus writeth (to this purpose) concerning diuers places in Italy, where mighty multitudes of Rats, made such spoile and destruction of the Roots of Trees, Hearbes, and Grasse: that the Inhabitants (not knowing how to kil or spoile them) endured extream famine, and were enforced to forsake the Country. Marcus Varro testifieth, that a great Towne in Spain, being builded in a sandy ground, was so delued and vndermined by Conies: that in the end it sunke, and was quite ruined, to the great danger of the people.

Nor haue these things happened on-ly in firme and maine Land; but also in Islands enuironed with the Sea, where both Rats and Mice haue so abundantly swarmed, and with such vnresistable boldnesse: that the Inhabitants haue bin glad to saue themselves by flight. Hereof beareth testimony Gyarus, or Gyara, one of the Isles of Cyclades, or Sporades, in the Ægeum sea; which (by the means of this vermin) became vtterly desolate, and no way habitable. The same Authors doe further report; that there was a Towne in France, which also fell into ruine and dispeopling, thorow the ouer-abounding of Frogs and Toades. The like chance happened in Affrica, by Locustes, or Grasshoppers. Theophrastus recordeth another Countrey, which was uninhabitable by Caterpillers: Another Prouince in Lybia, all the men were thence expelled by Lyons. Now, wee hold it no great disparagement, for men to be surmounted by lions, when humaine weaknesse is sufficientlie declared, by that which Pliny reporteth, concerning a Prouince on the limits Swallows flying neere the Water.

Beasts expelling men from their habitations.

Rats compelled men to fly their country.

A Towne vndermined by Conies.

Islands swarming with Rats & Mice.

Frogges and Toades destroyed a Towne in France.

The like done by Caterpillers.

Plin. in lib. 9.

limits of Ethyopia, where Antes, Scorpions, and other little Wormes, such as the * Palmer Worme, were the meanes of exiling thence all the dwellers.

Flies also forced the Inhabitanes of Megara in Greece, to leaue their Countrey: And Waspes did the like to the Ephesians. Anthenor writing of the Isle of Crete (with whom also ioyneth Ælianus) saith, that a great multitude of Bees, chased al the dwellers out of a City, and vsed their Houses in stead of Hiues. Manie other like strange things haue happened in the Worlde, which are to bee read in ancient Histories.

* A Worme with manie feete, called in Latino Bruchus, or Campe.

Of Waspes & Bees.

CHAP. XVII.

The subtle and ingenious deuise of Archimides the Phylofopher, to know there by, how much Siluer was mingled with Gold, in a Crowne of Gold (by a Goldsmith) without any breach or iniurie done to the Crowne in the triall.

Historians haue declared themselues, to be neuer slack or weary, in reporting the ingenious inuentions of spirite, and great skil of Archimedes the Syracusan, but especially, in Astrology and Geometry. Among all which, I purpose to relate a verie singular conceit, notably denised by himselfe, according as it is reported by Vitruuius. This Phylofopher liued in Syracusa, a City of Sicily, at such time as Hieron raigned there, a verie rich King, & highly beloued of the Romans.

In the second warre of Carthage, this King caused a Crowne of Golde to bee made by a Goldsmith, which was a verie excellent Worke-man, because hee had made a promise thereof to his Goddes, and Religion bounde him to the performance. After that the fashion, price, & value was agreed on, which indeede was great: the King commaunded so much Gold to be deliuered to the Workman, according as he purposed the iust weight of the Crowne. With great ingenuitie and admirable skill, the Goldsmith made this goodly Crowne, and of the same Gold which had been deliuered him: neuerthelesse, like a cunning and crafty deceiuer, hee had falsified it, by intermedling some quantity of Siluer among the Golde.

The great skil of Archimedes.

Rich Hieron King of Sicily, did make a crown of Golde for his Gods.

The Crowne beeing thus finished, it was presented to the King, who causing it to bee waighed, and finding his full waight, was well contented, and thoroughly satisfied the Workeman for his paines. But being (within a while after) certified, that there was a suspition of some Siluer to be mingled among the Gold: the King grew exceeding desirous to knowe what quantity of Siluer there might be, yet without defacing or breaking the Crowne.

Archimedes being a man of no meane esteeme in that Countrey, made tender of his seruice (in this case) to the King, & the whole trust and charge thereof was reposed in him. Sitting alone by himselfe, studying by what meanes he might best accomplish this difficult trial; it chanced, that his Bath stood readie prepared by him; for they held it as a religious custome, to cleanse and wash their bodies, before they enterprized on any doubtful occasions.

As he entered into his Bathing Tub, which was full of Water, he considered (as Learned men doe hardly omitte anie thing, without obseruation) that so much Water did ouerflow the Tub, as his bodie had emptied in place thereof. Making vse of this conceite in further iudgement and vnderstanding, hee departed thence ioyfully; assuring himselfe, that he had found what he sought for.

Heereupon, he caused two Ingots to be made of equall waight; the one being of Golde, and the other of Siluer; & the ponderousnesse of each Ingot, was equal to that of the Crowne. Afterward, he had a Vessell made for him of sufficient greatnesse, apt and correspondent to his owne intention, which he filled with water, and then did put thereinto the Ingot of Siluer: when presently came foorth of the Vessell so much water, as else would haue supplied the Ingots place. Now, to knowe what quantity of water this ouerflowing amounted vnto, subtilly he took forth the Ingot, and by another Vessel or Measure for the purpose, he kept iust account

The Goldsmith falsified the Crowne with Siluer.

Archimedes vnder taketh the Crowns trial.

He findeth out his means of trial very strangeiy.

The manner how he made his experiment by Ingots of Golde and Siluer.

10

20

30

40

50 count

His valewing of the waters ouer-flow.

count of so much Water, as then did fill vp the vessell againe. So by this account and measure (for he well vnderstood the Ingots waight) hee knew what quantitie of Water, the marke or waight of Siluer had sent out of the vessell, by meanes of the rest remaining still in it, and by the poize of the Ingot.

Triall made
of the water,
by both the Ingots.

When he had made this estimation, perswading himselfe, the mark or waight of the Siluer, supplied the roome of so many measures of water, he would then make the like prooffe of the Gold, which was of answerable poize to that of siluer. But there issued not forth any such store of water, as formerly did, when the Ingot of Siluer was in the same place, although they were both equall in waight: because that (as euery man knoweth) the answerable weight of Gold doth not fill vp so much spaciousnesse as that of Siluer; and therefore, it sheddeth the lesse water.

Triall made by the crown it selfe in the water.

After he had taken forth the Gold, he filled the Vessell by the same measure, as he formerly did to the poize of Siluer, & in counting the measures as they were put in, he also kept iust reckoning, how much water each mark or waight of gold & siluer, had truly deliuered out. Which being done, keeping stil in memory both the measures, he tooke the Crown made by the Goldsmith, containing the same weight with either of the Ingots of Gold and Siluer; and putting it into the vessell, the water ouer-flowed according to the greatnesse thereof.

Heereupon, hee tooke it out agayne, and measured the Water, which sufficed not to fill vp the vessell. And so he found, that it had throwne forth more Water, then the Ingot of Gold had done, & lesse then the Ingot of Siluer: wherby he perceiued, how much there wanted in iust poize, to make each measure meete and answerable to the other; whereupon he began to make his account in this manner.

In what manner Archimedes made his vauation, by trial of the Crowne, and both the Ingots.

This Crowne did eieft forth so manie vessells full of Water, more then the Ingot of Gold hath done: then consequent-ly, there is as much Siluer mingled with the Gold in the Crowne, as it hath cast or thrown out more Water then the Ingot of Gold did, which is easie to be vnderstood. For, if the Crowne had bin intirely all Gold, it would haue emptied no greater a quantity of water out of the vessell, then the Ingot of Gold did: but because it hath cast forth more, that more giueth plainly to bee knowne, that substance which it hath of Siluer mingled with it. For we know very wel, that two Ingots (consisting of one weight, and of one selfesame Metall) must necessarilie be of a like bodie and quantity; & therefore, beeing put into a Vessell full of water, they must voide out a like quantitie of Water; in regarde, that two bodies cannot be in one and the same place. But by putting the body of the Golde or of the Siluer into the water, the water must needs voide out, and yeelde them place; and so much the greater the bodie is, so much the more water it emptieth forth. And hence it ensueth, that the Crowne sent out more Water, then the Ingot of Golde; because the Crowne made vse of the place with equall poize.

Verily, this inuention of Archimides, was subtle and ingenuous; albeit manie other thinges (of much greater importance) were found out by the spirite and industry of this man. And such as are desirous to know more singuler matters concerning him: let them read Plutarch in the life of Marcus Marcellus, and Titus Liuius, in the fourth and fiftie Bookes of the third Decade. Where they shall find, that the Engines and frames onely, made by the inuention of Archimedes, were sufficient (for long time) to defend Syracusa against the Romaines. And amongst other thinges, recitall is made, that no strength of men, beeing able (with infinit Instruments) to draw a great Ship out of the Water, Archimedes onely brought it foorth, euen as if it had floated vpon the Sea.

While the Romaines maintained their sledge before Syracusa, hee deuised such Engines, that by throwing great grappling hookes of Iron from off the Walles, fast bound by equall counterpoize in the City, he mounted a Gally aloft in the ayre, which destroyed and sunke many men in the Sea. For he could let it fall when hee listed and d. fl. both it selfe & other Gallies in pieces: so that by this meanes, and other grappling Instruments, hee would dragge the enemies Gallies and Shippes so powerfully, that they should breake & split themselues against Rockes, they being no way able to make resistance. He framed Consideration of the Crowne, by the Ingot of Gold.

Plut. in Vit.
Marc. Marcel.
Tit. Liui. in lib.
4. & 5. Deca. 3.

A great Ship brought out of the water
by Archimedes

A gally mounted aloft in the Ayre, to destroy other Shipping.

Mar. Marcellus a Noble Captaine of the Romanes, enforced to forsake his siege to Syracuse.

framed the like Engines vpon the Lande, whereby he could daily destroy manie of the enemies. And such was the bold withstanding, which Archimedes performed within the Cittie; that Marcus Marcellus (a most excellent Captaine of the Romanes) was enforced to chaunge his course of martiall discipline for assaying the Cittie, because he saw himselfe in verie great perill, and his people in confusion. For Archimedes had thrown such feare and terror among the Romaine soldiers, that when they beheld but some chain or silly beame, descend from off the Cittie Walles, they would runne backe and retire with all possible speede only to auoid the daunger, so highly were they feareful of the Engines and Instruments, dayly deuised and performed by this excellent man.

Cicero attributeth also to this famous Phylosopher, that hee first inuented and made the materiall Spheare, wherein the eye might easily apprehend the motions of all the Planets, with their course, passions, and Aspects. And Claudian sayth, that he made one of Christal; which seemeth also to haue bene confessed by Ouid. He was no lesse studious & contemplatiue, then learned and skilfull. But at length, when Syracuse was surprized and taken by force after so long and admirable resistaunce made by Archimedes: Marcellus prohibited (vpon paine of death) that no man should be so bolde as to kill him, although hee had bene the death of so many worthy Romains. Neuerthelesse, a Souldier finding him by chance (and not knowing him) as he was making a figure vpon the ground, the soldier demanded what hee was: but others say, that he commanded him, to go along with him to Marcellus. Archimedes returning him no answer, either that he would or would not, but was seriously busied in minde about his Circle; and the Soldier growing angry thereat, flewe him; which was verie highly displeasing vnto Marcellus, who made him an honorable and worthy Sepulchre.

This is written by Pliny, Valerius Maximus, Titus Linius, and Plutarch. Cicero reputeth it as a great glorie to himselfe, that he found the Graue of Archimedes, and maketh high account thereof. For, (saith he) The spirit and industry of a Lear-

Cic. in Lib. 1. de Tusculan.

Cla. in Lib. 4. Ouid. in lib. 6. de Fast.

Archimedes slaine by a Roman soldier and much be-moaned by Marcellus.

Cicer. in lib. 1. de Tusculan.

ned man, hath much more power then a thousand ignorant mens. By the endeuour of Wisemen, fierce and terrible Beasts haue bene made tame; strong things haue bene reduced to weakenes, and weak matters made strong. By them a small number haue bene victorious ouer a great: because a disordered multitude, and without industry, do but break themselues, and runne vpon their owne ruine.

The endeuor and industrie of Wisemen.

CHAP. XVIII.

Of the manner, whereby Socrates perswaded Alcibiades, to become an Orator.

NE of the verie hardest matters in mine opinion, yet most commendable for a man to haue in himselfe, is to speake in such sorte, that

To speake well and orderly is a difficult thing.

hee may giue occasion thereby, to be listened vnto with heed and attention. For this cause, Orators that spake publickely in elder times, were highly prayfed: how much more then becometh this excellent quality, in such as are Preachers now adayes? Which beeing well considered by Alcibiades the Athenian, and hee but young in yeares; he durst not make anie publick speech, albeit it was a vsual thing, and necessarie for the cheefest men in the Cittie, amongst which number hee was one.

Alcibiades fearefull to speake in publicke.

The great Phylosopher Socrates taking notice therof; and being desirous to giue him encouragement, with perswasion also to become an Orator, hee practised a subtle and cunning meanes, whereby he ouercame such fearefulnesse in him, and the ouer-curious consideration, which preuailed too much with him. For, meeting him one day in the streete, among a great multitude of people of diuerse degrees, he saide vnto him; Telle me Alcibiades, Art thou not affraide to speake before this Cobler? Whereunto hee answered, No truly Socrates. Then hee demaunded againe: Art thou then more timorous, to speake before a Trompet? Shalt thou stand in more feare of him, then of this man? Alcibiades, said no; and that he stood not in feare to speak before any such people. Then Socrates named many other men, who were of trades and mean condition; naming afterward, men of great quality, whereto Alcibiades still replied, that hee durst speak before euerie one of them.

Socrates practised to imbolden Alcibiades in speaking, by diuers questions.

Socrates his Allusion vnto his former demands.

Then Socrates said vnto him; The people are composed of all (such as I haue named vnto thee, and not of any other: and of all these, the Athenian Auditorie (where thou oughtest to speake) doth consist. So then, this auoyding of feare, in speaking from one to one, should take away all terror in thee, of speaking to them when they are assembled together: for they which before stood deuided a part, are but then united in one Congregation. By which reason, Alcibiades was conquered; and making due consideration thereof, hee lost the false feare that before had possessed him; then making practise of this exhortation, hee became afterward a most excellent Orator. Whereby may be obserued, of what value good Councell is, when it is giuen in due time and season.

CHAP. XIX.

The beginning, and the causes of the Factions of the Guelphes and the Gibelines.

IN the time of the Emperour Frederick, second of that name and of Pope Gregory the ninth, betweene whom was great discord & contention: there were two factions of people, in the City of * Pistorium, or Pistoia in Italie: the one whereof, was called the Panciatiques; and the other, the Chancellers. Now it fortun'd, that two Brethren; the one called Guelph, and the other Gibeline, held diuers opinions in this City; whereof some followed the one side, & others the other. From whence it proceeded, that of these two verie famous men, one part began to entitle it selfe the Guelphes, and the other, the Gibelines: And that side which was the Guelphs, expulsed the Gibelines out of the Cittie. And because it was a matter somewhat note-worthie, to behold two Brethren of such contrary disposition, each of these factions woon the fauour of many neighboring people, So that euen as a contagious Pestilence, this diuorce of amity, dispersed it selfe by little and little, thorough all Italy; and all causes and Controuersies, must bee discussed and discided by the Guelphes and Gibelines.

*A City in the middle of Tuscia.

The Original of the Guelphes and the Gibelines.

This fire beeing thus fatally kindled; the Emperour Frederick, who was a Capitall enimie to the Pope, beeing at that time in the Cittie of Pisa, in the yeare, one thousand, three hundred, and forty; and not knowing which faction would be on his side; and which would pertake with the Pope, made publicke declaration, that he vnderooke the name & part of the Gibelines. Which being done, hee managed cruell warre vpon the Guelphes; and by reason of this open publication, all Italy diuided it selfe into these two names; and therby grew great scandals and mortalities in euery Cittie: yea, euen in pertiuler Families, where the Sonne deuided himselfe from his Father, Brother against Brother, Wife against her Husband. Yet vpon no other ground, but because the one affected the Guelphian faction, and the other the Gibeline, and so pursued each the other. It was daily seen, that the stronger side ruined and ouerthrew houses to the ground, following still on the weaker, euen to vtter hauocke and destruction: and such was the continuance of this quarrell, as neuer were greater cruelties heard of, betweene the Infidels and Christians, in their greediest furies.

Antoninus, Arch-bishop of Florence, writeth; that by these factions, fise and thirtie of the verie woorthiest houses in the Cittie of Florence, were rased to the earth; and that those contentions were thoroughout all Italy. Many people bearing name with the Emperour, expulsed the Guelphes wheresoeuer they came, and the Gibelines did the like by them. The greater part of Rome, by taking the Emperours cause in hand, had already runne into too much forwardnesse: which the Pope perceiuing, he made a solemn procession, wherein he carried the Keyes of Saint Peter, and Saint Paule, desiring of God,

The Emperour Fredericke enimy vnto the Pope.

All Italy deuided into the factions of the Guelphes and Gibelines.

Antoninus Arch-Bishop of Florence in his History.

A solemn procession made in Rome by the Pope, and after an Oration to the people.

God, that this cruelty might bee rooted vp out of mens hearts. And after the procession, hee made a publicke Oration to the people, or rather a Sermon, declaring what folly it was, for men so to persecute and kill one another: onely in fa-uour and affection vnto two perticuler Names, which the Deuill had brought into the field, for the generall spoile and ruine of all Italy.

Moreouer, hee declared manie other things of such great efficacy, as compelled the people to leaue their wilful opinion, & to take part with the Pope against the Emperor Fredericke, who was in very good hope to destroy all the Guelphian faction. These bleeding woundes (for the finnes of men) continued too long a time in Italy, and was the death of manie thousands of men, beside a great number banished, and grieuously oppressed, infinite faire buildings destroyed, and many goodly houses burned. The Authors that record these thinges, are Platina, in the life of Pope Gregory the ninth, and Antonius Sabellicus, in the thirde part of his Histories, and many other men of great knowledge.

The Emp pur-posed to destroy all the Guelphian
faction.

Plat. in vit.
Gregor. 9.
Anton. Sabel. in par. 3. Hist.

CHAP. XX.

Of the first Martyrs: And of the Persecutions of the Christians.

ESVS Christ our Sauour came into the world, to instruct men in the truth, as himselſe testifieth in Saint John, saying: For this cause am I come into the World, that I might bear witness of the truth. Whosoever is of the truth, heareth my voice. By these wordes, the Iewes conceiued enuy against the son of God, so that they would putte him to death, without any cause of offence. And thus truth begot hatred to men, such as were professours thereof, and for their loue to the truth, they grew to be deadly malliced and persecuted, especially if they did but speake in truths defence. Therefore, the first persecution which Christians suffered, began by the Iewes. For, as the Apostles (following the tracke and

The Iewes enemies to the sonne of God

The first persecutions of christians be-ganne by the Iewes.

steppes of their Maister) proclaimed the word of trueth, and S. Peter (more then any of the other) reprobued the Iewes, because they had killed Christ, and exhorted them therefore to repentaunce: they entered into such violence and fury, that they stoned Saint Stephen the Deacon, who (almost two yeares after the Passion of our Redeemer) disputed in the full Synagogue, against the Alexandrians, Cyreneans, as also against them of Cilicia & Asia. Among whom, though manie of them coueted to appeare most learned,
yet could they not resist one man onely:
but being confounded by Celestial wise-dome (wherein the young man was graciously instructed) they enuironed him with rage and indignation; and hardlie could containe themselues from layeng hands on him, vexing in their hearts, and grinning their teeth against him. But he being full of the Holy-Ghost, hauing his eyes eleuated to heauen, there he beheld the glory of God, and Iesus standing vp-on his right hand, whereon he saide; Behold, I see the Heauens open, and the Sonne of man standing on the right hand of GOD.
Whereat they all cried out aloud, and stopped their eares, and running on him as with one consent, they, threwe him forth of the Citty, and stoned him vnto death with stones. Thus S. Stephen being the first that publickly defended Christs Religion, was martired, that is to say; bare witness or testimony, by torment and death, which hee willingly suffered, only for the Faith of Iesus Christ; for the word Martyre in Greek, signifies a Wit-nesse. Saint John the Baptist, more then a Prophet, and not ignorant in these thin-ges to come, was the first man slaine for defending the truth; to wit, because hee detested the incestuous marriage of Herodias, according as Saint Luke saith; or after the saying of Iosephus, because the number of the people which came vnto him, made Herod suspicious of some new Commotions, whereby he feared to lose his Tetrarchs place. In which respect, it may well be said, that S. John Baptist was the first Martir. But, as all the Mysteries of our Christian Religion, did receiue beginning at the Passion of our Saviour Iesus Christ (according to Saint Hierom against Iouinian, who saith, The Gospel also was not before the Crosse of Christ.) So by this reason, S. Stephen the Leuite, of whom

Acts 7, 58.

The extreme malice against
S. Stephen for the truth.

Acts 7, 56, 57.

The worde Martyre in Greeke ex-presseth a Witnessse.

S. John Baptist, the first man slaine for the truth.

S. Iohn Baptist, the first Martyr, reputed by some.

Hier. cont. Iouin

whom we formerly spake) being the first of all Christians that suffered death for the name of Iesus Christ, is held to be the first Martyr.

Saint Cyprian, deriuing the matter from a much longer continuance, attributeth that degree of Honour to Iust Abel, saying; Most deare Bretheren, let vs follow Abel the Iust, in whom Martyrdom began, when hee was the first slaine for his righteousnesse. But we discourse heere of the beginning of Martyrs, and the other opinion is the more receyueable.

After Sainr Stephen, the cruell Emperor Nero, vnderstanding that Saint Peter and Saint Paule, preached the Doctrine of the Gospell at Rome, labouring to introduce a new kinde of Religion, beeing very wrathfull thereat, he made no long delay, vntill hee hadde put them both to death, which was the second persecution against the Christians: for the first was moued by the Iewes, as we haue shewn already.

Some neuerthelesse doe allow this of Nero to be the first, as being first begun by Commission from the Emperors: and this wicked man, to make Christians far more odious to the Romaine people, be-thought himselfe of such wickednesse as after followed. Hauing exercised all kinds of cruelties, euen as a plague to human generation, both in refusing to pity and pardon his owne Countrey, and defacing and depopulating all the auncient buildinges, desiring (as some haue Written) to see a Fire, which might bee like to that of Troy; the verie greatest and chiefest part of Rome Citty, hee caused to be burned.

This flaming fire, continued the space of sixe dayes, and as many nights, whereby the Temples, houses, and goodes of numberlesse Cittizens, were consumed. And then to set a colour on this impiety, and stand in defence of such a shamelesse act, he imposed the blame and horror of this ruine, vpon the innocent obseruers of the truth, and produced diuers, falsely to accuse the Christians, to make them culpable of so great a dammage: whereupon, many of them were imprisoned, and some dearly paid the price of their liues. But that the Christians were innocent of such wickednesse, Cornelius Tacitus, an enemy to the name of a christian, is constrained to confesse it, where hee saith; Those men, not so much for the Fires fault, as because they had the hated of al, were conuincd.

Afterward, he saith; To their Deathes were added slanders and disgraces. They were couered with the skins of diuers wiide Beasts, and then torne in pietes with Dogs. Some others were Crucified; and others, when day light serued not to burne them; they made darke night look like bright day, with the flaming Fires whercin they consumed them.

Domitian ordained (afterwardes) the third persecution against the Christian Church. Traian the fourth. Marcus Antoninus, Lucus Aurelius, and Commodus the fift, Seuerus Pertinax the sixte, Maximinus the seuenth, Decius the eight, Valerian the ninth, Aurelianus the tenth, and Dioclesian the eleauenth, counting that performed by the Iewes. For, if wee begin with Neroes time, then there are but ten in number, according as som Historians haue obserued: and that was the most cruell and longest in continuance, of all the other.

Holy Bookes were burned, Churches raced and ruined. And if any Christian had the dignity or office of a Magistrate, it was taken from him, and beeing deprivued thereof, he remained infamous. The seruants that attended vpon Christians, could not bee manumised, that is to say; they could not bee freed, or enioy their liberty, as enfranchised men should doo. In like manner, men of warre, and Christian Soldiers, were compelled to sacrifice to the Heathen Idols, or to lose their liues.

Finally, Maxentius, Licinius, and Maximinus, who ioyntly helde the Empyre with Constantine, did very great annoyance to the Christians: but the three first being slaine (as they iustly deserued) Constantine remained Emperor alone, who gaue certaine and assured peace vnto the Christians. Which worthy professors, notwithstanding so many great persecutions, & cruell torments inflicted on them by Tyraunt Emperours, neuer failed in their faith, neither regarded the Commands and Menaces of Infidell Princes; but still maintained their Christian Religion; and chearefully (for Gods cause) yeilded their bodies to whatsoever Torments were prepared for them, to the end, that they might winne the perpetu-

all

S. Cyprian his words, approving iust Abel to be the first Martyr.

S. Peter & S. Paul put vnto death by Nero, the second persecution against the Christians.

The cruelties of Nero to his owne Countrey.

Malicious dealing in Nero against the Christians.

Corn. Tacitus concerning the christians in their persecution.

The persecutions in the succeeding of the emperors

Nero his persecution the cruellest of all the other.

Extremities inflicted on Christians.

The emperor Constantine gaue peaceto the christians

all Crowne of glory, and beare in theyr hands the Palmes of Martyrdome. For as the Apostle saith, Hee that hath not fought couragiously, shal not bee Crowned. Our Sauour also giueth vs the same verie same counsell, when he saith: If any man wil come to me, he must deny himselfe, and take vp his Crosse, and follow me. Like Wages is promised vnto such as followe him, where he saith; Hee that loseth his life for my sake, shall finde it. Seeing then, that the entrance into Heauen, must bee thorowe many aduersities and tribulations, true Christians ought patiently to endure all iniuries and opprobious speeches, for the name of the Sonne of God, and account themselues happie therein: for by them the way to eternall glorie is laide open.

CHAP. XXI.

Of such men and Nations, as haue been reputed to bee the first Inuenters and deuisers of diuers things.

The Lydians a people of Asia, inuented the sportes or Games of the Chesse-play, the Dice, and the Tennis; wherupon Rhodigiannus saith, Ludis a Lydis uideri possunt appellati. The Egyptians found out the burning of Lampes. And Anacharsis of Scythia, deuised the Bellows, wherewith to kindle fire. Pyrhus, King of the Epirotes, was the first that had Couriers, Posts, or swift riders. For, as hee had three Armies in diuerse parts of the world; and himselfe remayned continually in the Cittie of Tarentum, he would haue newes from Rome in one day; out of France in two dayes; out of Germany in three dayes; and out of Asia in five dayes; yea, and that in such manner, as his tydings seemed rather to flye, then brought on roade waies.

The first Inke wherewith our elders vsed to Write, was made of a certayne Fish, called Xibia or Xiphia: which afterwards they conuerted to blacke colour: then to a Vermillion; next to Azure, and at length compounded it with Gum Arabick, Gaules, Vitrioll, and Wine; or rather water. The first Bolters for meale, or Searces of haire, had their beginning in Fraunce: and Spaine yeilded the first Siues.

Praxiteles was the first Inuenter of the Looking-Glasse, which was then called the Siluer Glasse, in the time of Pompey the Great: but it is not certainly known, who deuised the Glasses of Steele, Iron, Lead, Christall, and of other commixed matters. Ceres found out Corne, and instructed the maner also, how to knead, molde, and make Bread. To her is ascribed likewise, the making of Wicker Baskets, or Panniers of Chiers. Pseusippus gaue first instruction for making of hollow Tunnes, or Vesselles of Woodde, which now a-dayes are called Caske. Medea inuented the meanes to colour W comens haire; and Libatis to poule or cut the haire, when it grewe too long. The Thebanes deuised Hunting. Rhecius and Theodorus of Sarnia, were the inuenters of melting and Casting of Mettalles, whereof they made Images or Statues to the Goddesses.

The Curetes in the Isle of Negropont, (who were the Corybantes, Sybilis Priests, and Idai Dactyli) found out Iron & steel, wherewith they made Cuyrasses, Corcelets, Targets, and other defensue Ornaments for the body. Cacus was the first Theefe knowne to bee in Italy. Arachne of Colophon, found out the vse of Linnen, and to spin thread: And Clesterius (saide to be her sonne) deuised the Spindle for Wooll. Pamphyla, a Grecian Ladie, was the first that gathered Cotton from off old Shrubbes, hanging loosely thereon. And hauing washed and Combed it, fastened it on a Distaffe, and so spunne it, instructing afterwarde how to weare it for cloath.

Erichonius the Athenian, found out the meanes how to make Horses drawe Chariots or Coaches. Iupiter inuented the Militarie or Warlike Ensigne, making it of Red colour, wherein was also figured an Eagle. And our ancient Forefathers, instead of Ensigns did bind bundles or handfuls of Hearbes vpon long Poles, which in Latine were called Manipuli; and they that carried them, were termed Manipulares.

In the time of Augustus, there was one named Horsius, who made Mirrours of Looking-Glasses in such strange maner, Bolters and Searces.

Looking glass.

Corne and bread.

Baskets of Officers.

Tuns or cask.

Colored hair.

Hunting. Melting Mettals.

Cuyrasses, corcelets, Targets &c.

Spinning linnen & wollen

Spinning cotton Wooll.

Chariots or Coaches.

Ensignes for war, & what was vsed instead of them.

Ephes. 6, 16.

Math. 10, 38.

Math. 10, 39.

The Lydians.

The Egyptians. Anacharsis of Scythia. Pyrrhus K. of Epyre.

Messages by Posts.

The first kind of Inke to write withall.

Strange Looking Glasses, deliuering as strange representations.

that they presented any thing to seeme much greater then it was; for a mans finger would therein appeare to bee as long and great as the measure of his arme. Another made a Glasse likewise, wherein a man might behold another mans figure, and not his owne. He made some beside of such quality, as being set in an vncertaine place, nothing at all would bee discerned: but being brought thence, many semblances might be discovered. He had one Glasse perticularly, which would shew all shapes the wrong way, or vpside downward; and one thing also shoulde seeme in many formes. Diuers other things might heere be spoken of: but because their very best is but idle and vaine, I am the more willing to ouerslip them.

CHAP. XXII.

Of manie Famous and Woorthy men, that haue contemned and despised Riches.

RE read of diuers illustrious and great personages, that neglected and made no account at all of Riches: but they of most honor and renowne, were Valerius Publico'a, Menius Agrippa, and the most iust Aristides. All these men dying, were buried with the money of the publicke purse, in regarde of their pouertie and lacke of wealth. After the death of Epaminondas, whose victories were so famous, and spoiles so manie by him atchieued, there was no other moueable found in his house, but onhe the Iron head of a Launce. This was the man, that refused two * thousande Crownes, which Iason (a Prince of Thessals, and a Confederat with the Thebans) sent him as a guift. But hee rather affected, to borrow of a Cittizen of Thebes, fiftie Drachmaes of Siluer (which could be of no greater value then five crownes) to maintaine himselfe in the voyage and expedition which hee had vnderooke, and with so small store of money; hee entered in Armes into Peloponnesus. Afterward, Artaxerxes the great King of Persia, sent him thirtie thousand piéces of

Val. Publicola. Menen. Ag. ip. Aristides Iustus

Bap. Fuzoso, in lib. 4. cap. 4.

Iustin. in lib. 6. Plut. in Apoth.

* Erasmus saith 1000 crownes, for victuall & provisions fit for his armie.

Golde, of his money called * Daricks: In regard whereof, he grew verie seuearelie angry with Diomedes Cyzicenus, saying vnto him: Hast thou dared to enterprize so long a Navigation, as hoping to corrupt Epaminondas? Returne againe, and say to thy King, that for as much as he would giue to purchase the good and we'fare of the Thebanes, he shall haue mee as his friend, without any of this cost: but in seeking to do the wrong and iniurie, tell him, I am his chiefest enemy.

After that Marcus Curius, Consull of Rome, had ouercome the Samnites in battaile; Ambassadors were sent from them, who brought him a great quantity of Gold and Siluer, as a gift; yet finding him sitting by a Fires side, scraping, and putting roots into a pot, that they might seeth for his Dinner; and to them hee returned this answer: Beare all this Golde and Siluer backe with yee, and bestow it on such Captaines, as scorne to dresse their own dinners in earthen vessels: For, I desire no greater riches, then to be the Lorde of such Plate, and the possessions within them. As if he would haue saide; Hee that contenteth himselfe with such a dinner, hath nothing to do either with Golde or Siluer. But, in commanding ouer such as haue them, they seeme thinges more great and honourable, then if hee himselfe had them.

Of this Honourable Band were Apolonius Thyaneus, Paulus Emilius, Phocion, Attilius Regulus, Quintus Cincinnatus, Fabritius, Sextus Emilius, Carus & Marcus Manius. Abdolonius, being created King of the Sydonians, immediatly refused the Kingdome: as knowing verie well, what trauailes and troubles were hidden & enclosed, vnder the vain splendor of wealth and riches.

The Poet Anacreon in like manner, hauing receiued (as a guift) from Polycrates the tyrant of the Samiens, five hundred Attique Talents, continued two Dayes and two Nightes, without arie sleepe. At length, to free himselfe from the Torment whereinto this present had brought him, hee re-delivered the guifte backe vnto the Tyrant, with Wordes well beseming so fayre a minde, in so meane a Fortune to make such a refusal.

Seneca vsed to say, Hee was a great man, that made employment of earthen vessels.

* An auncient Coine, with the Image of Darius on it.

Epaminondas to Diomedes Cyzicenus.

M. Curius conquering the Samnites.

His answer to the Ambassadors.

The Application.

A band of Riches scorers

Abdolonius K. of the Sydonians.

The Poet Anacreon, & Polycrates the tyrant.

The saying of Seneca.

Crates the Phylosopher of Thebes.

sels, as if they were of Siluer: but much greater is that man who soeuer, that useth Siluer, as if it were earth: Crates the Thebane Phylosopher, at his departing from Athens, to followe his study in Phylosophy, threw all his substance of Gold and Siluer into the Sea, holding it for an infallible Maxime, that hee could not possesse Vertue and Riches together. The like did Socrates.

The dwellers in the Belears Islandes had neither Gold nor Siluer.

The Inhabitants of the Islands Belears, would neuer haue any Golde, Siluer, Silkes, nor precious Stones to bee seene in their Countreyes: Whereby such happinesse befell them, that for the space of foure hundered yeares, in all which time, they had warres with the Romains, Carthagenians, Gaules, and Spaniards, yet not any one of these nations euer stirred, to go make a Conquest of those Countreyes, because they knew assuredly, that they hadde neyther Golde or Siluer to make pillage of, and bring away with them.

CHAP. XXIII.

The Sentence or Verdict of Apollonius Thyaneus, against an Eunnuch to the King of Babylon, who was found somewhat too familiar with one of the kings faire fauourites.

Apollonius in his Booke of Hierogliphical letters, writeth; That when the Egyptians woulde make a representation of loue, they did set down the figure of a grin or snare: onely because (as I thinke) it conducteth vs daily to a most miserable condition. Philostratus writeth, that in the time of Apollonius Thyaneus, an Eunnuche was found in loue pleasures (as his abilitie would permit him) with one of the Concubines to the King of Babylon, the verie fairest and best beloued beyonde all the other. Being take in the act, he was dragd (by the haire) out of the Serralia, from the other Women, by his Eunnuchs, and brought before the King. To whom, the most ancient of the Eunnuches declared, that he had found by heedfull obseruation, how the Eunnuch was become amorous of the Woman, and thereof had giuen him admonishment; that he should not speake to her, nor (in anie manner whatsoeuer) touch her necke; breasts, or hands, and abstaine also from helping to put on her Garments. All which notwithstanding, he had beene now surprized in bed with her, and found in performing the veneriall act.

How the Egyptians figured Loue.

Phil. in vit. Apol. Thyan. lib. 1 Cap. 23.

The Serralia is the place for the Concubines of the King.

The King waxing extreame angrie at this report, turned himselfe towardes Apollonius Thyaneus (who was at that time in his Court) saying: What punishment do you deeme fittest for me, to inflict vpon this Villaine? Whereto Apollonius answered: It is enough (O King) to let him liue. How! (replied the King, as ashamed of this answer) doo not you iudge him worthy of many cruell deaths, that dared so boldly to violate my bed? My answer (quoth Apollonius) doth not imply any pardon to bee granted to him, but rather to lay the heauier tormentis on him, by suffering him to liue. For, so long as he shall remaine alie, he must abide infinite afflictions, too sharpe and difficult for him to endure. Hee shall not be able to eate or drinke, to receiue any pleasure in shewes, sports, or Pastimes, which easily may delight both you & yours. His heart will faile him oftentimes, his dreams and sleepes wil be gastly and fearefull, such as are saide (most especially) to pursue amorous persons. Then neuer doubt Sir, but loue wil force him to feele most bitter and insupportable Martyrdomes. For like vnto the silly Fly, the miserable man wil follow both Fire and death, and yet at an instant, both life and death shal appeare most hateful vnto him. Such was the answer of Apollonius, which the King found to bee so wise and pleasing, that being thereby perswaded, the Eunnuch enjoyed the benefite of life.

And to speake vprightly, Loue is an extreame passion, a meere fury or madnesse in a Woman, and a quenchelesse heate in a young man, whose vitermost refuge is death onely. And for this cause, Epicletus among other definitions which he made of death, called it, Nuncium Amantium, because Louers do oftentimes call death to helpe them; and seeme as if they would run willingly thereto, as vnto their surest Anker-hold, as another saith. Who is it but knoweth that loue took away the

The displeas'd K. craveth aduise for the Eunnuch; punishment of Apollonius.

The answer of Apollonius.

The Eunnuch permitted to enjoy his life.

Epicletus in his conference with the Emperor Adrian of long life.

Examples of loues violēce
in diuers.

The Authour
returneth to his matter, concerning Eunuches.

A conference betweene A- pollonius and his friend Da- mis, of Eu-nuchs abilitie in venery.

The power of affecting, and carnally knowing.

Of the desires & affections of the minde.

The Law and office of temperance.

fences of Wise Salomon, and made him violate the Sacred Lawe? Loue moued Biblis to be enamored on her owne Brother Caunus; and Pasiphae to companie with a Bull. Of manie other inconueniences Loue hath been the only cause. But to come again to our precedent purpose. Some few dayes before this disaſter happened to the Eunuch, Apollonius (who had made some obseruation thereof) fell into discourse with his companion Damis, concerning the power and ability of Eunuches, in the acte of venery, beginning thus.

Friend Damis, I am now considering with my selfe, what reason barbarous nations haue, to imagine modesty in their Eunuchs, & to make vse of their seruice waiting on their Wiues? I thinke (answered Damis) the cause is cleare and manifest; yea, euen to a childe. For after their spermaticke Vesselles are cut away, which inciteth carnall embracing and action, they may be permitted to keep their Wiues, and are expressely employed in that charge, euen as if they suffered them to lodge in bed with them. You conceit then (replied Apollonius) that the power of affecting and knowing Women carnally, is by that meanes quite taken from them? Both the one and other answered Damis, in regard, that if the part be taken from them, whereby the body is prouoked vnto the acte of Venus, I am of the minde, that they cannot haue any inclination to loue.

You haue a present testimony (answered Apollonius) that Eunuchs can and do loue; and that desire which is introduced by the eye, cannot be quenched in them, but continueth still hot and vigorous in the body: and many things may be alledged, whereby your reasons will be easily confuted. If there do consist any such Art in man, as can gouerne and expell such desires and affections out of the minde: it appeareth then to me, that Eunuchs shold not by any probable reason, bee reckoned or admitted in the number of chaste and temperate men. For you hold those men to bee wholly deprived of Loue, as constrained thereto, by such an act of violence done on them. Whereas the Office of temperance is, that hee which coueteth, affecteth, or desireth, shold not be surmounted or overcome by lasciuious affections and Concupiscences: but wholly for to abstaine from them, and not to bee vanquished by any greefe or passion, which induceth desire to the matter coueted or affected. All this is saide by Apollonius in Philostratus. But if the Eunuches thorough defect of the Instruments of generation, haue not the power to engender, and to auoyde foorth seede: yet notwithstanding, they are manie time ouercomes with heates, and striue with themselues, both to know and to abuse women, euen as wee do oftentimes behold, that Geldings wil offer to leape and couer Mares.

CHAP. XXIII.

An excellent and memorable example of Continencie, in the famous Prince Frances Sforza.

AM loath to omit a verie singuler example of continencie, in the most honourable and worthy Prince, Frances Sforza, well deseruing to bee compared with those of Alexander the Great, and warlicke Scipio. He being Coronell Generall of the Florentines, at such time as Casanoua Chasteau, and Forteresses des Luquois, was surprized by force of Armes. During the sacke of that small Cittie, certaine of his Soldiers had taken a young married woman prisoner, of admirable beautie and faire perfections. As they drew hir forcibly out of her house, she cried to them, that she would submit her selfe vnto the Count Frances, and not vnto any other. They that thought to haue made vse of her for themselues, hearing her voluntary Challenge, and dreading the displeasure of the Count, made no long delay, but forthwith brought her before him. The Coronell Sforza, who in regarde of his youths verdure, sweet disposition & complexion of body, was much addicted to carnall pleasures, albeit he was violently surprized with the young Womans rare

Phil. in vit. A-pol. Thyan. Lib.
1. Cap. 23.

Frances Sforza
the Count, Coronell of the Florentines

The young Weman was brought before Count Frances.

rare beautie : yet notwithstanding, hee demanded of her, whether shee would more willingly yeeld her self to him, then remaine in their power that had taken hir as their prize? Whereto the young woman answered, that shee would alwayes be ready to obey his will, provided, that he should deliuer her out of their hands, that then detained her as their prisoner. Heereupon, Count Sforza commanded that she should be carried to his Tent. Night being come, before hee would go to bed, he demanded of her againe, if hir former resolution did yet hold or no, or whether she had changed her purpose? Whereto she answered, that shee helde the same opinion which shee did before. Which when the Count perceiued, he commanded her to prepare her selfe, for shee should lodge with him that Night. She was no sooner entered into his bed, but espying the picture of the virgin Mary (which the Count both in custom and Deuotion, had alwayes hanging as a fair Table in his Tent) beeing stroken full of feare and shame, weeping incessantly, & kneeling with great reuerence, she vttered these words to the Count. My Lord I beseech yee, for that H. ly Virgines sake, whose remembrance and figure is heree fixed before vs, that you would bee pleased to preserue my Chastity, and by your clemencie to restore me, not polluted but vnstayed, to my late married Husband, who is among the rest of your prisoners. And although I made ye promise to submit my selfe to your will, and am heere subiected to your pleasure: yet no other respect moued mee thereto; but onely to be freed from them, who doubtlesse would haue rauished mee. And in regard of the Iustice and pietie, that I haue often heard to be alwayes in you; those vertues are my firme hope and perswasion, that I shal (by you) be defended from al shame & violence.

These words, accompanied with floudes of teares, which showed downe her faire checkes, found such gracious entrance into the benign and generous hart of the Captaine; and so great was his continency (considering he had a Woman of such exquisite beauty, and in his naked bed by him, being also his captiue and prisoner taken in warre) notwithstanding all these aduantages: vnchast, hot, and lustfull appetite was quite extinct in him; and presently he leapt forth of the bed, leaving her there to rest in safetie. On the morrow morning, hee sent to make enquiry for her husbandes, whose ranfome he payed to his Soldiers out of his owne money. And then deliuered his Wife vnto him, with a solemne Sacred Oath, that he restored her as chaste, vntoucht or vnknowne of him in any vnciuill manner whatsoever, as when she was brought a prisoner to him. The Husband falling to the ground on his knees before him, with sighes and teares, spake in this manner: Honourab' e Lord, your deedes do amply declare, the great renown which enerie where is iustly famed of ye, to wit; that there is no man liuing on the earth, that can equall yee in humanitie and clemencie. The highest God, who can do all in all, wil giue you sufficient recompence for vs; that can returne no conuenable guerdon vnto your worth and vertues.

The Count would haue giuen them great stoore of Goods and Moouables, taken as pillage in the City: but the young Woman would not accept of any. Affirming, that when her Neighbours should see such giftes, they would repute them to be the prizes of her lost honour, and so she should line in endlesse infamy, which she desired rather to shunne, then death it selfe. So, hauing leaue and License to depart from Count Sforza, they were safely conducted home to their house.

CHAP. XXV.

Of many Woorthy and Learned men, both Ancient and Moderne, whose eyes and deathes haue beene wretched and miserable.

Hemistocles the Athenian, being banished by enny in the Cittizens of Athens, withdrew himselfe to K. Artaxerxes, by who being constrained to warre against his owne Countrey, hee made a willing change of death for life, by drinking the blood of a Bull. Gallus the Poet slewe himselfe. Demosthenes the Athenian

A second demand of the Count to the faire young woman.

The speeches of the young woman vnto Count Sforza being in his bed.

A rare testimony of continency, both for time, place & oportunitie.

The words of the husband to the Count.

Bountie and humanitie in Count Sforza

Plu. in vit. The.

Amia. Marcellinus in lib. 17.

A high Hill in Sicily, out of which ariseth horrible smoake and flames of fire

Laer. lib. 1. c. 10
*Plaies of naked & anointed men.

Plut. in Moral. Lib. 4. Cap. 2.

Pl. in li. 7. c. 53.

Greg. Nazian. in Orat. cont. Iul. Imperat.

Athenian, hauing incurred the displeasure of Antipater, successor to Alexander, fled into Calabria, an Island in the Aegeum Sea, where he was entrapped by the Sergeants of Antipater: and hauing taken a pen, as if hee purposed to Write therewith, hee sucked vp certaine poyson, (enclosed therein) and so died. Phine was burnt to death, with the fire of Mount Etna, which at this present is called Gibello Monte. The same end also had Empedocles the Agrigentine Poet.

Many other worthy men likewise haue dyed as miserably: among whom was Socrates, that (by commaundement of the Magistrate) dranke the iuice of Hemlock in prison, and died by the draught. Thales Milesius died of drought, by heate of the Sunne as he was beholding the Gymnick Playes. Zeno was slaine by the commaundement of Phalaris the Tyrant. Anaxarchus died by command from Nicochreon, in strange diuersity of torments; and being ouercome with the extremitie of paine, he bit off his tongue betweene his teeth, and threw it in the Tyrantes face. Archimedes the Phylosopher, and most excellent Mathematician, was slaine by the Soldiers of Marcellus. Pythagoras was burned aliue by rhe Cylonians, as Plutarch saith: But others write, that warre being moued betweene the Agrigentines and Syracusans, Pythagoras going forth to succour the Agrigentines, was massacred (with seuenty of his Schollers) in a fielde of Beanes, by the Syracusans.

Anacharsis was slaine by his owne followers, because he would haue enduced the Religion and Goddes of the Grecians into Scythia. Diodorus Cronos the Logitian, dyed with sorrow and shame, because he could not resolue a question in Sophistry, which was propounded to him (in iest) by Stilpo. Aristotle, after hee had lost the grace and fauour of Alexander, not knowing the nature and cause of Euripus, which is in Cha'cis. that is to say, the flowing and ebbing of a Sea, that happeneth continually seauen times, in the space of a day and night, returning into Aulis of Beotia, being a Hauen in Eubaea, grewe weary of his life, only through griefe and sorrow conceiued, because he could not render a sufficient reason for it; and some say, that he drowned himselfe in the Sea, and in the same place. His scholler Calsithenes had his Nose and lips cut off, and being shut vp betweene two walles, dyed of the disease which the Greekes called φρέσωνις, and the Latines, Morbus Perdicen'aris. Marcus Tullius Cicero hadde his head and hands cut off, and his Tongue pulled out. Terençe the Poet, drowned himselfe with greefe, because he had lost 108. Comedies which were Written in Greeke by Menander; and had bin by him conuerted into Latine. The Poet Lucretius hauing drunke an amorous potion, fell into such a fury, that he slew himselfe with his owne hande, being aged about forty yeares.

Seneca, being compelled by his Scholler Nero, to make choise of what kind of death he best affected, caused a Veine to be opened in his foote, as he helde it in a Bason of water; and so by the meanes of loosing his blood, lost his life also. Auerroes was crushed to death with a wheele which went ouer his stomacke. John Duns, otherwise called Scotus, reading in England, in a sudden tumult of schollers, was slaine with the stabs of Bodkins, such as (in ancient times) they wrote withal in Table-bookes of Woodde, or on the Barkes of Trees. But if I were to sette downe the miserable ends of all the learned men in elder dayes; no mean or reasonable compasse could containe mee. Therefore, I will conclude this Chapter, with rehearfall of some more Moderne and later. Frances Petrarche dyed suddenly. Demetrius Calderinus died of he plagu. The Reconciler or Peace-maker, was burned after his death; hauing lined but a small while. Laurentius Laurentianus, the Physition of Florence, drowned himselfe in a well. Petrus Leonis, of Spoletu, Physition and Astrologer, was likewise throwne into a Well by the commaund of Peter de Medicis, because during the sicknesse of Lawrence de Medicis his Father, he had giuen good hope of his life, by saying, that there was no daunger of death in his disease, as he collected by the rules of his starres; and yet he died. Sir Thomas More, Lord Chancellor of England; was beheaded at London, for withstanding King Henry of England, in his claime of supremacy.

CHAP.

Cælius Rbodignus in l. 9. c. 36.

An ill rewarde of a scholler to hir Master.

Volat. in lib. 21.

Learned men of our Moderne times.

*A Cittie of Vmbria in Italy.

CHAP. XXVI.

¶ Of a simple Groome, borne in Cremona, who vainely perswaded himselfe, that he was the Pope. And of another, that beleued he was the Emperour. Of diuers others also, who had sundry strange kinds of folly in their braines.

Hifitions haue generally held opinion, that there are many & sundry kinds of folly. Not many yeares since, there was a meane

Groome or Seruant (borne in Cremona) in the City of Millayne, who verily perswaded himselfe, that he was the Pope, and had formed a Consistory of Cardinals, Arch-bishops, and Bishoppes, in his Chamber. At a certaine hoire in the day (when he had obtained leaue of his Maister) he would seate himselfe in a Chaire, like a new created Pope; deliuering forth his feete to be kissed, entertaining Ambassadors; making Cardinals; dispatching Bulles; and ordaining Officers for the See Apostolique. This honourable kind of folly (wherein he conceived wonderfull pleasure) being qualified and remooued out of his braine: he would returne home againe to his accustomed seruices, without any disturbance, or appearance, that hee was any such manner of man, but onely when his idle fit was vpon him.

The Lord Pedro de Vbaldini, a worthy Gentleman and Knight in the City of Urbine, had a Horse-keeper, named Triumpho de Camarino, who when hee came first into his seruice, made it in condition of his bargaine: that hee would haue one hoire in the day allowed him, for his owne pleasure and recreation. During which while, hee would locke himselfe close within a Chamber, where no one could come to him without his owne permission: and there he spreads a Curtaine of black Cloath vpon the Wall, whereon the Pope was painted with his Cardinals, euen as when he holdeth his full Con-

Folly in some heads, hath a wonderfull kind of perswasion.

Folly (for the time) mightily preuaileth.

Triumpho de Camarino, a Horse-keeper of Urbine, who imagined himselfe to be the Emperour.

istorie, with many Kinges, Princes, Lords, and Christian Captaines. He taking vpon him to be the person of the Emperour (as in his mind he was verily perswaded so to be) hauing a Crowne of Paper vpon his head, and a Bedstaffe (for a Scepter) in his hand: he sate down as among them, and began in the Popes person, to propose diuers thinges concerning the State of Christendome, after this manner.

My deare Brethren and Children in Iesus Christ, the effect of our meeting thus together; is to aduise ye, that you loue one another with mutuall affection. And likewise to command ye, to gouerne your people in all pietie, laying downe Armes, and ceasing Warres among your selues; onelic to fight for the defence of the Christian Faith, afflicted and vexed by Inside's and enraged Turkes. If you doe not (with high and resolu'd courage) embrace this my proposition; you will at length loose the grace of this world, and the glory of Heauen, and be sent into the infernall Kingdomes, where you shall be tormented eternally. Wherefore my most happy Children, vnderstand my words louingly, and follow my counsell. Triumpho hauing deliuered these and diuers matters more, in name of the Pope, spitting oftentimes betweene, for shew of greater pontificality: he would answer after ward in the Emperours name (whose habit hee seemed to haue on his backe, and Crowne vpon his head, with these words.

Saint Peter, you haue said very well, and it would be very fitting, to doe as your Holinesse hath propounded. But would you haue Men to belecue your perswasions? Begin then your selfe (like a good Pastor) to giue vs good example. And if you cannot doe it: I intend (for mine owne part) to enioy my Kingdomes, without any feare of Turkes, or of Hell it selfe, where I am sure there is some good abiding. For this last night, I dreamed that I was there, in exceeding great contentment, and pleasure of minde. There did I play at Tennis, with many great Lords and Barons. Afterward, we mounted on light and swifter Coursers; then either Sicily, Apulia, Calabria, or Iberia could euer yeild the like. At length, as I was resting and playing with some of the fayrest and wantonnest Ladies of the world: I espied Lucifer (whose teeth stuck a great way out of his head) issuing forth of a proud

The Oration of the imagined Emperour (being Triumpho the Horse-keeper) but deliuered in person of the Pope.

Triumpho his answer; as in the Emperours person.

Triumpho his dreame of being in Hell, & what pleasures he saw there.

The Devils
kindnesse to Triumpho.

The conclusion of Triumpho, in his serious consultations.

Bridle, sponge and Currie-Combe, the Trophies of this imaginari-
-Emperour.

proud Pallace, to get vp on Horsebacke. And as I purposed to run towards him, to hold his Stirrup with great reuerence: one bad me that I should not goe, for feare he would denoure me. Neuerthelesse, I went on boldly without feare, and the gentle Lord gaue me the kindest entertainment, that the world could afford, saying to me. My Sonne, thou art now, and at all times shalt be most hartily welcome hether. And hauing mounted on horsebacke, hee rode thorow his Kingdome, which is inhabited with many people. Afterward, as I was parting thence to goe to dinner; a Gentle Squire came, and said vnto me: Whither goest thou Christian Emperour? Thou mayest dine heere. Then I answered; Doe Men eate in this place? Excellently well and gallantlie, replied the Squire. Why then (quoth I) if there be such good cheare heere, I wil depart no more from hence, no, in despite of Saint Anthonies Beard: seeing a man may triumph euer heere, spend the time iocundlie, and lead a merrie life. As for you Holy Father (speaking to the Pope) I vnderstand, that such pleasures as you take, are domestick and priuate, yet more then all other mens, with your children the Cardinals of the holie See, which should be much more lawfull for me. Triumpho hauing deliuered these dreames and idle fancies, giuing a loud shout: caperd vp from the ground, and began to discourse of great actions, Warres, and garboyles. And taking vp a Curry-combe in his hand, before the supposed Kinges, Princes, and Lordes, (in name of them all) hee vttered more friuolous fopperies, then I am able here to write, or relate vpon. And bethinking himselfe, that his houre or limitation was (by this time) expired; for, at some of his priuacies, his follies would extend into more length, then they did at another: he left his Chamber, departing thence with his Bridle, Sponge, & Curry-Combe, to execute his Office about his Horses, to make cleane his Stable, and diligently performe all other seruices, without any opinion of his precedent conceited dignity.

The Lord Pedro meruailing not a little, how the Groome of his Stable should daily bestow this licensed hour: concluded to make some prooffe thereof, and see how his affaires were then managed. Whereupon, hiding himselfe one day in the next lodging to Tri- umphoes Chamber; at a rift or cranny in the Wall, he wonne an eye-sight to the whole pastime. Calling some other of his Household-Seruants beside, to be pertaker in this Comical sport; where they heard all the Horse-keepers enterparlance with his owne opinion; and saw euerie iot of his fantasticke behaviour. At last, when the Lord Pedro perceiued that his mans serious busines was almost concluded, he called out aloud to him, saying; Well done Triumpho, I am highly glad, both of thine owne consolation and thy Countries, that of a poor Horse keeper, thou art become the Emperour of Christendome. Let mee therefore entreat thee, while Fortune holdes thee thus happily on the height of her wheele; thou wouldest bee pleased, to haue some remembrance of thy poore Maister. Triumpho hearing himselfe thus called, and perceiuing his priuate conceit to be discovered: stood amazed like a Bell-founder, when his Metall hath not taken good successe. And such was his fury, that he snatcht his Curtaine from the Wall, and with it he instantly forooke the House, without taking leaue of his Maister, or any one else: nor could it at any time after be knowne, whether he went, or what became of him. By this we may obserue, that it is the naturall property of a Foole, to thinke himselfe wise.

And therefore I conclude, that in this World there is no greater quietnesse, then for a Man to content himselfe with his owne estate, as did this poore Triumpho de Camarino: who perswading himselfe to be an Emperour, the meere imagination auailed as much with him, as if he had bin really the very man indeede.

Thrasyllus Axoneus fell into so strange a follie, that he verilie beleued, that all the Shippes which arriued in the Port or Hauen, were his owne. And therefore (vpon this stronge perswasion) alwaies before they came to take landing: with a chearefull countenance, and hart highlie contended; he would walke forth (a large distance from the road) to meete them as they came. In like manner, when they did set out againe on any voyage, either for the East or West: he would beare them company a great way, and praying them to be care-

Triumphoes Comedy was discouered by his Lord and Maister.

The words of Lord Pedro to Triumpho.

The fury of Triumpho vpon his disco-uery.

Contentation is an especiall benefit.

Elianus in his fourth Booke calleth him Thrasyllus.

Athenus in lib
12. cap. vlt.

careful of his goods and Merchandizes, with them all fortunate successe. This humour being noted by his Brother Criston, newly there arriued with his Merchandise from Sicilie: he caused diuers wise and learned Phisitions, to take paines for his recouery, who in helping this fond humour, robd him of his chiefest contentment. And beeing afterward remembred of this strange folly: he would sigh many times, & sollemnly sweare, that hee neuer liued more pleasingly, then while that perswasion held him, because in all that time, hee neuer felt any greefe, sadnesse, or annoyance. They make report of another Man, who kept diuers Cats, wherein he took great delight and pleasure; perswading himselfe, and telling to others, that they were Lyons.

Aristotle declareth, that there was a Man in Abydos, who beeing ouercome with a foolish humour, would go daily to the Theater, & there (as if he would recite a whole Comedy himselfe) performe al the actions in such cases required, not respecting who beheld or heard him; and yet this humour afterward left him. He saith moreouer, that there was an Hoast in Tarentum, who would walke abroad all the night time, and diligently attend his businesse all the day; carrying (both night and day) the Key of his Hoastory hanging at his Girdle; neuer loosing it, neither could it bee stolne or got from him, by very cautious and crafty attempts.

Plutarch reporteth in his Morals, that the Mylelian Virgines were ouercome with a wonderfull folly; for, without any respect, teares, entreaties, and perswasions of Parents and Friends; they would suddenly strangle and hang themselves, neither could any remedy bee found to preuent them. At length, the Mylelians being assembled in the Senate house, to deliberate on this strange inconuenience: one among them (being a very graue and wise man) aduised them to make a Law, that if any more of them should so destroy themselves, of what condition soeuer she were, she should be stript starke naked, and so bee laid in the midst of the Market-place, to be shamefully seene of all the world, and haue no other buriall allowed her. This councill being generally approoued, and published by Edict: the Virgines were thereby stricken with such feare and terrour, that the humour which made them dreadlesse of death, immediatly ceased. As being more fearefull and respectiue of dishonour and infamy, then of paine or death: because they could by no meanes endure, that their naked bodies should be seene, either aliue or dead, and shaine (after death) they reputed to bee a Virgines highest dishonour.

Shame after death more respected and feared, then death it selfe.

CHAP. XXVII.

Of diuers Men and Weomen that haue voluntarie staine and destroyed themselves.

In the first Ages, there were many, that voluntarily shortned their owne liues, among whom, Aelianus recordeth Hippona, a Grecian Lady, who being taken by Pyrates, and hearing a determination among them, that they purposed to make spoile of her virginity: she so choisely prized the honour of her chastity, that, seeing no other waie left to preferue it, she leapt into the Sea, & so (by drowning) saued hir Virgine vertue. Calanus the Indian Philosopher, one of the learned and wise Brachmanes, hauing bidden farewell to Alexander the Great and his Macedonians, at such time as he desired to leaue this life: caused a pile of Wood to bee prepared ready, which was dry, sweet, and odoriferous (to wit, of Cedar, Cypress, Myrrhe, and Laurell) in a Towne of Babylon. And making a wreath of Reede Leaves; hee crowned his head there with, then inounted, and laid himselfe along vpon the pile, honouring the Sunne. So, covering his face; the Macedonians gaue fire to the pile, and he neuer stirred a iot, when the fire flamed fiercely about him; but lay still constantly; without moouing eyther hand or foot, and in this sacrifice yeildeth vp his Soule. Herevpon one saith, that Alexander wondering at this constancy

Aelianus in lib. 5. Cap. 7.

Hippona a Lady of Greece.

Strabo in Lib. 15. Calanus, one of the Brachmanes.

Valerius Maximus in lib. 1. Cap. 8.

Aelianus in lib. 4. Cap. 7.

Arist. in lib. 6. de Anim.

Arist. ubi. sup.

Plutarch in Moral. Cap. 9. A strange folly in virgines to destroy themselves.

10

20

30

40

50

The words of Alexander concerning Calanus.

Cicero in lib. 1.
de diuinat.

Cicero in lib. 1.
de Tusculan.

Valerius Maximus, in tit. de Iust.

Plutar. in vit.
de Hannib.

Valer. Maxim.
in lib. 2. cap. 7.

* People by the Riuer Indus.

stancy, instantly said: Calanus hath conquered more potent Enemies, then euer I could doe. For I haue but fought against Porus, Taxiles, and Darius onely: but Calanus hath fought both against labour and Death. Cicero writeth, that when Calanus went to death, and mounted vpon the pile of Wood, he said. O faire departure from life, seeing (as it happened to Hercules) after that this Mortall bodie is burned, the Spirit then goeth into light.

Cleombrotus of Ambracia, hauing read Platoes Booke of the Immortality of the Soule: threw himselfe from an high Wall, head-long into the Sea. Cato Utican, hauing read also the same Booke;
pierced his owne body with a Dagger.
Aristarchus the Alexandrian Grammarian, Schoole-maister to the Sonne of Ptolomie Philomator, being sicke of the Dropie; suffered himselfe to dye thro-row want of eating. The like did Era-to Athenes the Cyrenean, Scholler to the Poet Callimachus, & keeper of the Library to Ptolomy Philadelphus. Charondas the Thebane, made a law, that no man shold come armed into the Councell Consi-storie: was once found himselfe there armed (not thinking thereon) as hee came newly out of the field. And after that hee which fate next him, had put him in mind of the said Law: hee stabd his Ponyard into his owne breast, albeit he might well haue dissembled, or defended his fault. Hanniball being vanquished by Sciopio, fled to Prusias, King of Bythinia, for safety: but being doubt-full of his fidelitic, because he beheld Flaminius sent thither, as Ambassadour from the Romaines; hee poysoned himselfe, of his owne meere motion therevnto.

Mithridates the younger, hauing maintained Warre for the space of sixe and fifty yeares against the Romaines; seized Asia; imprisoned the chiefe commaunders of the * Opiæ, and of Aquilia; besiedged Rhodes; and wonne Athens by Archelaus his Lieutenant. After all these great fortunes, he being first conquered by Lucullus, next by Pompey, and afterward by Pharnax, his owne most ingratefull Sonne, who forsooke his Father, and tooke part with Pompey:
drunke a poyson; whereof being not able to die (in regard of an Antidote and counter-poyson, which he was compelled to take) slew himselfe, by the helpe of a French Souldiour, named Vitigiuss.

Monyma the Mylelian Lady, and Veronica, borne in Chios, both Wiues to the fore-named Mithridates, after they vn-derstood (by the Eunuch Bacchides) the miserable fortune of their Husband;
they would liue no longer in further dis-after. Monyma hung or strangled her selfe, and because the Cord brake, by weight of her body; shee compelled Bacchides to cut her throat. And Veronica kneeling mournfully by her, dranke vp a full Cup of poyson. Statira and Roxana, Sisters also to the same Mithridates, who had kept their virginity the space of forty yeares: bare company with their Brother in death, by drinking each a draught of poyson.

Decebalus, King of the Dacians (as Dion Cassianus reporteth) beeing vanquished by Traiane: slew himselfe with his owne hand, because he would not fall-into the Romaines power, and yet not withstanding, his head was afterward carried to Rome. Sardanapalus threw himselfe into a flaming fire. Lucretia, a worthy Romaine Ladie, and the bright Lampe of Chastitie, hauing her honor violated by the infamous Tyrant Tarquine, Sonne to proud Tarquine: pub-likely slew her selfe, by stabbing a Dagger in her faire breast, to the end, that the people might reuenge her iniurie and shame, and abolish the Dominion of the Kings in Rome.

Portia, Daughter to Cato, hearing tydings of her Husband Brutus, that he was conquered, and slaine in the fieldes before Philippi: when she could come by no Weapon to destroy her selfe, shee deuoured burning Coales, and so pursued her Husband in death. Cleopatra, Queene of Aegypt, after the death of Marke Anthony, the remaining Captiue in the power of Augustus: compassed her death by the byting of a Serpent, as Cesar himselfe made representation of the manner, in an Image which he brought with him in triumph to Rome, as one of his Trophees of that victory.
Naera, and Charmione, wayting Maides on Queene Cleopatra, followed her presently also by voluntary death.

Many other great persons haue perished, in the like disastrous and miserable manner, whose Histories would aske ouer

Monyma and Veronica, the wiues to Mithridates.

Statira and Roxana, sisters to Mithridates.

Dion. Cassianus
in lib. 4.

Titus Linius in
lib. 1. Dcca. 1.

Portia the Daughter to graue and wife Cato.

Cleopatra Q.
of Egypt.

The names of many that yeilded themselves to voluntary death

ouer long time in repetition, and therefore I will but set downe their names onely. As Dolabella, Licinius Macer, L. Syllanus, C. Marius the younger, and Fannius Cepio. Nero, Otho, Galerius, Adrian, Florian, Iulian, and Dioclesian, Emperors. Gordianus the elder, Labeo Marses, and Papyrius the Romaine. M. Lollius, Proculeius, Magnentius, Argobastus, Gunimilda, wife to Asmund, King of the Danes. Hadingo, Rolnond, and Starcaterus, Kings of the Danes. Pedro des Vignes, the Lawyer of Capua, in the time of Ferdinand the second Emperor, Eccelinus the Tyrant, and Galeatenus Mantuanus, who more voluntarily & foolishly (then any of the other before named) ranne vpon his owne death; as Iouianus Pontanus hath recorded. For he wintering at Pauia, became very extreamelie enamoured of a beautifull young Damosell, and would oftentimes tell her: that he could endure a thousand harms (if so many were possible to be suffered) for her sake, if she but pleased to command him. Whereupon, she commanded him (in iest) to leap into the River: which he presently did, and was there drowned, before he could be relieved.

Iouianus Pontanus, concerning the death of Galeas of Mantua.

Baiazeth Prince and Emperour of the Turkes.

Baiazeth, Prince and Emperour of the Turkes, being taken on the Confines of Armenia, in a great conflict and battaile betweene him and Great Tamberlaine: was brought before the Scythian King, who caused him to be put vp in a Cage of Iron, and led along with him wherefoeuer he went; letting him liue by no other meates, but what fell (as scraps) from his Table, and pieces of bread cast to him, euen as contemptuously as men do to Dogs. At all times likewise, when he would mount vp on horsebacke, or into his chariot: Baiazeth must be taken forth out of his Cage, and brought before him, fast bound in mighty and massie Chaines of Gold, and he would set his feet on his back, so to get vp into his Chariot, or on horseback. This should serue as a mirror to miserable men, neuer to repose any confidence in greatness, or vaine wealth of this World: considering, that he who had conquered so many people, and won so many Citties; was taken, and made Slaue to him, that had bin but a silly heardsman, and ended his daies miserably in a Cage of Iron. When Tamberlaine was returned home into Scythia, he made a magnificent triumph, for his victory obtained against this Baiazeth. And hauing prepared an vnualueable Feast, with all sumptuous furnishment thereto appertaining, for all his principall Lords and Commaunders in Scythia: he caused the Cage to be brought before the, where in was Baiazeth, his Emperesse and wife also (who was taken with him) attending thereon. With whom this barbarous man dealt so inhumanly, that her garments were cut off iust at hir Nauil, whereby her parts of shame and secrecy were nakedly discerned; and thus did she waite there before his guests. The miserable Prince of Turks, seeing his Queen thus despightfully entreated; grieved beyond measure, and deuised how hee might best end his wearisome life. But being destitute of all meanes, or any Instrument for the speedier execution: he did beat his head so often and violentlie against the bars of Iron; that his brains starting forth, hee there concluded his wretched and infortunate life.

Greatnesse, Riches, and al this worlds pompe is but meere vanity.

Tamberlaine his vnualueable viage to Baiazeths Q.

CHAP. XXVIII.

How good and profitable it is, for a Man to liue soberly. And that all such as were Enemies thereto; haue likewise bin haters to Honor and Vertue.

It is no way to be doubted, but that Nature can content & suffice her selfe with little; and feeding out of order and excessiuely, hath bin the occasion of many diseases. To approue the truth hereof, let the vnbeleuer read the ancient Bookes of Physick, wherein he shall find, that our betters and predecessors, were such friends to sobriety: that they would eat but a piece of Bread in the morning onely, and feed on a little flesh at supper, without any other diuersitie of Viands, such as are vsed in these daies of ours, with numberlesse Sauces, and meates vpon meats, and then a second course afterward. During all which seruices, Abono ad mala, a man is forced to sit at the Table two or three hours at the least. And this

The least allowance contenteth nature.

The healthful diet of our fore-fathers, was the onely reason of their long life and this is the reason, why those of elder times (who knew no such superfluities) liued to long, and free from so many monstrous diseases. In regard heereof also, the Romaines, Arcadians, and Lusitanians, or Portugalles, remained so long a time without Phisitions, and sobriety of life (onely) defended them from all infirmities.

The Spartanes choysest delicates.

The Persians dyet.

K. Artaxerxes his food.

Pompey his fare in Egypt, in a poore Countrey mans house.

The Lord Antonio d'Ona a Spaniard.

Sobriety is the occasion of long life.

The enemies to Honor and Vertue.

The very greatest delicates, which the Spartanes vsed in their dyet, was a certaine kind of blacke Broath or Potage, much liketo melted Pitch; the cost whereof, did not amount to aboue three Solz, tenne whereof doe make an English Penny. The Persians, Men so exceedingly disciplined, did neuer eate any other Meate with their Bread, but a few Water-Carres, or Cresses. Artaxerxes, Brother to Cyrus, beeing put to flight by his Enemies: fed on dryed Figs and Barly Bread, and greatly complained, that he had liued so long, without experimenting so sweete and sauoury a kind of food.

Pompey, trauayling thorough Ægypt, where his people could hardlie follow him, he beeing verie hungry, with-drew himselfe to the small Cottage of a poore Countrey Husbandman, who gaue him a piece of Rie-bread to feed on. And this great King swore, that (in all his life time) hee did neuer tast better foode; and euer afterward, he held all costly and precious kindes of Bread in scorne, which hee had formerly vsed. The Lord Antonio d'Ona, a Spaniard, hauing entertained an old man (aged aboue an hundred yeares) to dine with him, and setting excessiue fare before him, as hee vsed to all others that came to his Table; the good olde man said vnto him. My Lord, if I had bin dieted (in my youth) at such Tables as yours; you must think, I had neuer attained to these yeares: but by liuing soberly, you see how God hath blessed me. We need then make no doubt; but that sobriety of life, is the occasion of our long continuance in this world, & our preseruacion in soundnesse of health. All such as haue beene contemners therof, their liues haue had no length, and they were vtter enemies to honor and vertue. Such was Caligula, Claudius, Heliogabalus, Vitellius, Verus, Tiberius, Maximinus, and infinite others. On the contrary side, it hath beene obserued, that the affecters of sober life, (men, as it were, euen made of Diuinity, such as Augustus, Alexander Seuerus, Paulus Æmilius, Epaminondas, &c.) witnessed their loue to Honour and Vertue, and dyed in all the fulnesse of their daies.

The Louers of Sobriety.

CHAP. XXIX.

Of Rodericke, the last King of the race Royall of the Gothes: And how (thorow his owne incontineny) he lost not onely his Kingdome, but his life also.

IN the yeare of our saluation, 747. Rodericke raigned King in Spaine, who being pierced to the quicke, with the litle God and blinde Archers Arrowes: became exceedingly passionate, for the loue of the daughter to Count Iulian of Cantabria. And coueting (in ouer-burning desires) to gather the fruites of his hot affections: he essayed all meanes possible to compass his pleasure. But in regard that the honest and sober countenance of the Virgine, as also the presence of her Father, were maine opposites to him in reaching the height of his appetite; hee therfore sent Count Iulian Ambassador into France, and in the meane while, made a rape of his Daughters chastitie. Iulian; at his returning into Spain, heard (far enough off) the shame & violence committed on his daughter. And when he vnderstood it also by her owne complaint, both the meanes, manner, and euerie circumstance: hee dissembled it cunningly in the Kinges presence, as if he knew not of such sinne committed; but champed on the bit for diuers daies together, still pondering on the aptest occasions, whereby he might compass to be reuenged.

Rodericke affecteth the Daughter to Iulian, Count of Cantabria, & in the absence of her father, rauisheth her.

Count Iulian concealeth the knowledg of his Daughters wrongs.

After he had considered sufficientlie on his wrong, hee with-drew himselfe into Affrica, to the City of Leptis*, where resorting to Muzza, Governour of Affrica: he declared vnto him, point by point, the iniury which King Rodericke had done him. Whereto he added,

Leptis Sarrana* the City Mahmeta in Affrica, between the two Sirres

ded, that for reparation of this wrong, he was thus come to implore his assistance: in recompence whereof, he offered him a verie rich and goodly Empire, which he would reduce vnder his obedience. For he told him, that the time was now come, when hee might reuenge those Arabes, which had beene slaine in the precedent yeares, by the Armies of King Bamba: Hee further assured him, that he was so much faoured by the very greatest Lords in Spain, beside his owne Friendes and Kinred; who (in meere pittie of his disgrace) would all be in readinesse to helpe this enterprife. For the King was mortally hated of them all, in regard of his rapes, cruelties, and extortions, which continually he imposed vpon his people.

Muzza hauing heard the Countes speeches, sent him to King Vlit, residing them in Arabia, and he hauing likewise deliberated on Count Iulians iust complaint: returned him backe againe with his Letters to Muzza, commaunding him to lend him ayde, and what fauour else hee could affoord in so vrgent a case. After that Muzza had received this aduise from his King, hee gaue him an hundred Horse, and foure hundred foote Souldiers: vnder the charge and conduct of a valiant Captaine, named Tariffa, who crossing the Seas, came into Spain with his troups. And that he might giue the more assured pain and molestation to the enemy; his people builded a Citty, which (after their Captaines name) they called Tariffa. Iulian hauing made knowne to his Friends and Confederates in Spain; the occasion of his thus returning, and the desire he had (in Iustice and reason) to reuenge the outrage doone by the King: many of them (vnder-taking his cause) ioyned themselves with the Arabes, over-running and rauaging all the Country of Algazara, where the saide Count Iulian had before bin Gouvernor for the said King.

The Arabes of Affrica, perceiuing the successfull progresse of the Count, in sollemne earnest, and without deceit: they sent him twelue thousand Horse more, and a great number of the Infanterie, youthfull, gallant, & braue resolued Spirits. Vpon this occasion, King Rodericke expedited a great Army against them, vnder the conduct of his Cozin Don Ynigo: who fighting many times with the Moores (but still with bad successe) not onely lost his life, but all the rest were likewise hewen in pieces: The Moores proceeding on still without impeachment, ouer-ran and spoyled a great part of Spain; by meanes whereof, Rodericke raised a much greater Army then the former, and came himselfe hand to hand with the Moores: so that a dreadfull and terrible battaile happened betweene them, which continued eight whole daies together, for in the night time, they retired into their Rampires. But the two Sonnes to the late King Vitizzo (whom the Brother to Rodericke had slaine, and vsurped the Kingdome) reuolting from him: were the cause of the Moores becomming Conquerors. And Rodericke, though he carried himselfe so valiantly, and performed (in his owne person) incredible seruices: yet was he (neuerthelesse) vanquished and slaine, and all his pertakers forces broken and foyled. This battaile was begun on Sunday, beeing the first day of Iuly, betweene the breake of day and Sun-rising, in the yeare of our Redemption 750. neere to Xeres, and by the Riuer Bedalack. This History may serue as an enstruction to Princes, that before they offer shame or outrage to any one; they would well aduise and consider with themselves, what may be the end of such bad attempts.

CHAP. XXX.

Of Sargua, who craftily deceiued Stirades, a most Noble young Gentleman, and put him cruelly to death.

Mong the Ladies that attended on Queené Valasca, there was one, named Sargua, endued with goodlie feature, both of face & body: but prouided of as bad a mind, maliciously enclined to all wickednes. She bethinking her selfe, how to be reuenged on a young Bohemian Knight, called Stirades, a very Noble Youth, Rodericke sent his Cozin Don Ynigo with a power against the Moores.

A Battaille lasting eyght whole dayes together.

King Rodericke foyled and slaine.

Read Aeneas Sylvius, in his History of Bohemia, the 8. Chapter.

Muzza sent Count Iulian to King Vlit in Arabia, who commaunded assistance in the wronged Counts behalfe.

Count Iulian acquainted his Friends in Spain with his returne.

The supply sent to the Count by the Arabes of Affrica.

M m m that that sharply pursued Valasca and all her traine, so that she had no greater an Enemy thē he : concluded to betray him, and in such manner as shall be declared. She calling some of the other Ladies to hir, caused them to binde her fast by the hands and feete, to the body of a Tree in a very thick Forrest : leauing a Huntsmans Horne by her, and a Bottle full of liquor, called Medon. Being thus fast bound, the rest of the warlike Ladyes, ambushed themselues in the Wood, somewhat out of the way, but not far from the place of her abiding.

Stirades vsed often to hunt in this Forrest, and comming thither this day, (as he did at other times) with his Men and Hounds, riding on in the wood; he espied the Lady fastned to the Tree. And being moued with compassion, stayed his Horse, demaunding, how, and for what cause she was thus brought thither? Whereunto Sarquua thus replied. It cannot be (good Gentleman) but you are very well acquainted with the disorders committed by Valasca in this Countrey, while shee attributeth the Kingdomes authority to her selfe. I (too much vnaduised) haue beene of her faction, and delighted (for a while) to follow her follies, wherein I failed (I confesse) and repenting at length so foule a transgression : I resolved to forsake so bad a Mistresse. Seeking to haue a companion in my flight and escape; I was betrayed, discovered, surprized, and brought hither, where the murderesse purposed to behold my punishment. But as she and her company were all about me, and had bound me in this manner as you see: they heard the opening of your Hounds, and neighing of your Horses, which made them take their flight, and leaue mee in the case you found me. Seeing then that Fortune hath conducted you to this place, and in such a needfull season for mee: I beseech ye (valiant Sir) euen by your true Noblenes, that you would be pleased to pittie a miserable Creature. Vnbind me (I intreat ye) and guid me some where else; if the guiltinesse of my sin be no hindrance, for obtaining such an especiall blessing from ye. Otherwise, draw forth your Sword, and pierce me there-with to the hart, rather then permit me to liue in this torment. For you shall be no sooner departed hence; but all those cruell women will come again, and then they will fall vpon mee like so many Serpents, to teare my body, and make me liue in inmultiplicity of tormētts.

Stirades, being moued to pittie, partly by the Ladies teares, which flowed in some aboundance from her eyes, and partly by some sudden apprehension of her beauty: alighted from his Horse, cut the Cords which bound her to the tree, & comforting her with gentle language, desired to know, what might be the meaning of the Horne and Bottle? Where to (still weeping) she thus answered. Know Sir, that those murderers brought hither this Bottle, to lengthen out my life by the liquor therein, to the end that my torments might bee the greater. But blessed be God for our ariuall here in so happy an hour, to be my release, and the meanes of my drinking now in safty. This said, she set the Bottell to her mouth and dranke, and then deliuering it to Stirades, he dreading no danger, but to expresse his kindnesse & affection to the Lady, in regard he was thirstie also, drunke of the deceiuing drinke to any other then her selfe; for it was compounded of white Hony, according to a custome obserued among the Bohemians, healthful for women, but irkesome and offensiue to men. And indeed, Sarquua (being as arteficiall a Poysoner and Soceresse, as her Mistresse) had charmed the drinke with Hearbs & enchantments in such manner, that, by little and little, it tooke away all sense and vnderstanding from Stirades. Then the false woman seeing him nere to such condition as she sought to bring him in; tooke the horn, and said vnto him. This horne they intended to hang about my necke when I was dead, as a marke and ensigne to such as shold passe this way, that (in my life time) I had bin a Huntresse. But now, in meere despight of them, I will winde this Horne, to let them know, to their shame, that I am still liuing. So, winding the Horne, she blew a blast; that made all the wood to ring with the sound thereof. Instantlie rushed foorth Valasca, with a band of her Ladies all armed, who killing al that accompanied the deceiued Gentleman: seized on him, and binding him fast, led him along with them, till they came before

The treason plotted against young Stirades.

The deceitful speeches vsed by Sarquua to Stirades.

The wonderful trecherie in a woman.

Stirades tooke pittie on his subtile betrayer.

A deceitfull drink, healthful to women, but hurtful to men.

Valasca & her band of armed Ladies killed the followers of Stirades, and afterward tormented him vpon the wheele to death.

before the Castle of Vissagrada, where, in the sight of Primislavus, King of the Bohemians, and all the people that were on the Walles: they did put him to death by the torment of the Whèele, a death which the Bohemians did repute, to be the most infamous of all other. Such was the end, of the gentle, valiant, young and wealthy Strades; beguiled by the feigned teares and subtile persuasions, of cruell and disloyall Weomen.

CHAP. XXXI.

Of three Gentle-women, who became all amorous of a Gentleman at one instant, without any suite or motion made vnto them; And by what meanes it happened.

The City of Vrbine, is reputed to be one of the most ancient Citties in all Italy, as may be gathered by the Books of Pliny, and of Cornelius Tacitus. It is not now above sixscore yeares, since this Cittie was subdued by the Countes of Ferrara, and of those Countes descended one, named Otho, who made himselfe Duke of Vrbine, and who suffered himselfe to be so ouer-swayed by voluptuous pleasures: that both by power and violence, he abused, defloured, and violated, not onely many virgins, but likewise married wiues of very worthy houses, inferiour to none in the City or Dukedome of Vrbine, without any respect, eyther of consanguinitie, Nobilitie in blood, or age. In breesfe, his abuse was generall, and his owne will euerie where followed; being accompanied with another, as bad as himselfe, who was called the Pregnotary of Carpa. And therefore they were both slaine at one time, in a popular tumult, because their insolencies were insupportable. Also, their priuy members were put into their mouths, and their naked bodies laid in the open Market place: to serue as an example to all other, that afterward should abuse the honesty of weomen.

Vrbine a City of great antiquity.

An impudent and lasciuious Prince.

A iust and deserved punishment for such leud incontinency.

This wicked Father; had yet a good Son, that succeeded him, named Guydo, who feared God, was valiant and magnanimous, and was so fortunate in his marriage, that his wife descended of the house of the Colomes. And this Dutches (for her great vertues) was held to be the chiefest, both for good grace and modesty, that liued in those times. And therefore many Noble and worthy persons, as well Men as Women, had a desire to the house of this Duke of Vrbine, and to be of his Court. Among others, was the Lord Gastar Paluoisine, one of the most valiant Gentlemen in all Lombardie. Casar Gonzagua, Robert de Barry, Frederick Fregosa, who was Archbishop of Salerne. Count Lodowicke, who was Byshop of Bayeux. The Lord Octavian, who was Duke of Gennes. Bernardo Bibierua, who was Cardinall de Saint Marie aux Portiques. The Magnifico, who was Duke of Nemours; and Great Maister of Frances. France Maria Rouero, who was Prefect or Bayliffe of Rome, and many other, not forgetting Pietro Bembo, who was Secretarie to Pope Leo.

Guydo a good Prince, & the dignity of his Court in Noble attendants.

As for Ladies and Gentle-women, it shall be needlesse to name them: onelie I am to speake of three, who were then in his Court, and who became all amorous (at one time) of one Gentleman, without any suite or sollicitation made vnto them. By which discourse, wee may perceiue the great power of Loue, and learne, not to mock or scorne at such, as fall into the like accidents: because, that all Men and Women are subiect thereunto, at least, very few, that can tearm themselves to be free or exempted. Because I will hold the Reader no longer in suspence, we will proceede to the History.

Three Gentlewomen of the Court.

The Soueraigne power and prerogative of loue.

It happened on a day, that a faire and honest Gentlewoman, attending on the fore-said Dutchesse of Vrbine; reputed to be vertuous and well aduised (being of the house of the Vlpades of Florence, Gentlemen of great Antiquity) did vse amity towards a Gentleman of Sienna, attending also in the Duke of Vrbines Court. Day by day affection encreased, and the young Gentleman declared like correspondency; but the meanes wanted of sight, and conferring together. Because, as euerie one verie well knoweth, that the Weomen and Maidens

The Vlpades of Florence, a house of great antiquity.

Women and Maids of Italy kept in continual subiection.

of Italie, haue (from all times of Antiquitie) beene held in great subiection.

The Gentle-woman, incited by extremitie of passion; discovered her minde to another Woman, by whose meanes she hoped to finde some conuenient remedy. This other Gentlewoman, neither in Nobility, or in beauty, was any iot inferior to the first. Wherupon it happened, that she hearing the other speake so affectionately of the Gentleman, whom she had neuer seen, and knowing withall; that the Gentlewoman (reputed very discrete, and of good iudgement) did affect him in all extremitie: she began to imagine immediatly; that he was the very goodliest, wisest, most discrete, and absolute Gentleman, and best worthy to be beloved, before any other man in the World. And so, without hauing euer seene him likewise, she grew so strongly enamoured of him: that shee began (soone after) not for her friend; but for her selfe, to acquire and purchase his equall correspondency in loue to her. Which to do, it had beene no Herculean labour for her: because in very deed, she was more worthy to be sued vnto, then in her selfe to sue to any other.

But now we must lend attention to another matter, much more worthy of admiration. Within some short while after, it came to passe, that a Letter, (written by this latter Gentlewoman to her Louer) happened to the hands of a third very Noble and vertuous Ladie. Who being (as the most part of Women are) curious, and inquisitiue in the knowledge of secrets, especially of other Women: opened the Letter, and as she read it, she well perceiued; that it was written by one, who was ouer head and eares (as we vse to say) in extremitie of affection. For the words were set downe so graciously, and carryed such a sprightly heate in reading: that, first of all, they vrged her to compassionate the Gentle-woman, because she well knew, from whom the missiue came, and to whom it was directed. Next, they were of such force and efficacy, that laying them to her owne heart, and considering withall, what kind of man he must needes bee, that could induce this Gentle-woman to to such feruent affection: presently likewise she grew amouros of him, and the power of the Letter was as preuailling with her, euen as if it had bin sent from her selfe to the Gentleman. And, as many times it comes to passe, that poison prepared in meat for some great Lord, killeth the first that tasteth of it: so fared it with this poore Lady, who being ouer greedy, swallowed downe the amouros venome, which was prepared for another body.

What should I neede to write any more? The effect sufficiently declared it selfe. And it often falleth out, that many Ladies and Gentle-women (beside these of whom wee speake) partly to worke despight to others, and partlie to do as others do: they labour with all paine and industry, to preuent or forestall one another in their loues, sporting with their owne affections, as children doe with Cherries; til they fall into the like opinion conceiued by these Gentle-women, each of them prouing the Spurre, to the others amouros incitation.

Valentinus Barruchius, a Spaniard writeth; that a Dutchesse of Sauoy, became extreame-ly amouros of a Spanish Knight, of the Family of the Mendozaes; albeit shee had neuer seene him. But only heard a Sister of the said Mendoza (named Isabella) say, that in going to Rome on Pilgrimage for deuotion, she met the said Dutchesse (beeing an English-woman by Nation) on the way, taking the ayre for her recreation, by the River of Pau, and seeing her, saide aloud. O would it pleased GOD, that this Princesse and my Brother were married together: one might then safely say, they were the most excellent couple (for beauty and perfection) that all Europe afforded. Vpon these very words, the Dutchesse grew so exceedingly passionate in loue, to the Knight whom she had neuer seene: that shee feigned a sicknesse, euen to the death, making a vow, whereby she promised, that if she escaped, she would goe on foote to Saint James de Compostella in Spaine, onelie to winne occasion and meanes, whereby to see her beloved Mendoza, and so shee did. But this hypocrisie and counterfeit deuotion, had almost valued her life and honor; yea, and Mendozaes also. Neuerthelesse,

The diuers & sundry effects of Loue.

Loue is iustly tearmed to be a blind guide.

Ouer-much curiosity and enquiry, doth great harme oitentimes.

The wonderfull power & efficacy of a Letter.

An apt similitude or comparison.

The Dutchesse of Sauoy became amouros of Don Mendoza, a Spaniard, hauing neuer seene him.

Loue can enforce a feigned Religion, and vowes.

thelesse, God preserved them both in the greatest danger, and suffered them to be married together, some few years after. But because the History is written at large in so many Languages; I forbear any further relation thereof.

To conclude, it appeareth by these, and many other Histories, that among all the most grievous passions, which ordinarily doe besiege the mindes of Men and Women; Loue hath almost daily held the chiefest place. For, after he hath once fastned hold vpon some generous Subiect, he pursueth the Nature of the corrupting humor, as in such as haue a Feauer: which taketh his originall at the hart, and then walketh (incurably) through all the sensible partes of a mans body. Whereof our fore cited Histories, do make ample prooffe, being no lesse admirable, then true and certaine.

Loue is the chiefest of all other passions

CHAP. XXXII.

That the change of Habits and Apparrell, taken by one people from another; hath oftentimes proued a certaine signe, of being foyled, rauaged, or mollened by that Nation, whom they affected to imitate in their Garments.

He Lord de la Nouë, allegeth in his learned discourses, many signes or shewes, when any Estate tendeth to his owne ruine: drawne both from naturall things in Diuinitie, and sententious sayings, of auncient prophane Authors. Neuerthelesse, he hath forgotten one thing, to wit; change or alteration of our wearing Garments: which hath beene heedefully obserued, not onely in our daies, but likewise in all former antiquity. For, when a people tooke a fantasticke pleasure, to attire and cloath themselves, after the fashions of some strange Nation: it fell out very often, that they were mollened, warred vpon, yea, and subiected by the Nation, whom they apishlie imitated Monfieur de la Nouë, in his French discourses.

Prognosticke euent by wearing of other country garments.

in their idle fashions of Habits. We will beginne then with such matters, as haue beene knowne to happen in our times.

The greater part of the Grecians, which dwelled in Citties, and followed the Warres, about the yeare 420. before they were made Slaues vnto the Turkes, they cloathed and apparrelled themselves after the Turkish manner: And that which is more, they that were were wont to weare long beards; which well became them, and gaue them faire Ornaments; they would shaue them cleane away, except the long Mustachioes onely, and practise how else to follow them in all their actions. As was too well noted in them of Chalcondilla, who likewise (very soone after) fell into their seruile subiection.

Grecians that imitated the Turkes in their fantasticke Garments.

The Portugalles, a little before they lost their King, named Don Sebastian, who was slaine in Affrica, in a battaile giuen against the King of Fez: attired themselves after the Castillian manner, and all the Noblest persons and Courtiers, practised nothing more then to speake Castillian; forsaking their owne natural language, which is the most orate and eloquent tongue, that euer was spoken in all the Spaines. It came to passe, that the saide King Sebastian, hauing left no Successour behinde him in Portugall: King Phillip of Castille, King of all the other Realmes of the Spaines, found himselfe to be the neereft in succession, and made himselfe King, partly by right; and partly by terrour, as beeing a most potent Monarcke. And the Portugalles obeyed him, and (euen to this day) are vnder his commaund: notwithstanding, the deadlie hatred borne them by the Portugals, for foure hundred years hitherto, or thereabout; albeit, that the Kingdome of Portugall was Feudatorie to the King of Castile.

The Portugals clothed themselves like to Castilians.

The * Liouians, a Northerne people. inhabiting not farre off from Russia (ouer whom the Brothers, called Porte-glaiues, other-wise reamed Knights Teutones commaunded) some yeares before they were subiected by the Duke of Moscovia; those Knights went in Habite verie like to the Moscovites, greatly following them in their manners, and barbarous behaviour

* A people in a part of Sarmatia, very far North, beyond Lithuania. Knights Teutones, or Alle-migne Knights of life. For they became Deceiuers, Exaeters; Drunkards, went cloathed in long Gownes, making reuerence after the order of our Cowledreligious Monkes, as the Moscouites vse to doe, in bowing or ducking their heades forward. Also, when they drinke and Baechanallize, they say, they doe it like the Moscouites. In breefe, it was such an ill presage for them, that within a small while afterward (which was in the year 1502.) they were ouercome in warre by the cruell Moscouite, and the said Knights, hauing lost such a goodly estate; were all flaine, or kept as Captiues.

The Gaules (saith Iulius Caesar) when they were deuided among themselues; some wore Garments after the Romaine fashion; others, like the Allemaignes, and left the vse of their owne short habites, and long close Breeches: which prooued an indiction, that the Gaules were soone after reduced into a Province, & made subiect to the Romains. Then, re-conquered againe afterward (two hundred yeares, or there-about) from the Romaines, by the Franconians, a people of Germany.

The Iewes, thirty yeares before that their Countrey was whollie ruined, and they made Slaues to the Romaines, vnder the Emperours, Titus and Vespasian: imposed no other Names on their Children, but such as were Romaine, neither would they weare any Garments, but after the Romaine guise. Their Armes for Warre, and Souldiours Cassockes, were (in all respectes) like vnto theirs; yea, they stroue to imitate their fashions and actions very intirely: whereby they fell afterward into large expence of blood, euen throughout their whole Dominions, and neuer since could regaine their libertie.

What may we prognosticate, by the vnhappy humours of our French-men, and which haue kept them company for these last forty yeares? Some going in habite like to Spaniards; Others after the manner of Reistres; And others like Suitzers. For well neere all our Courtiers, since the year 1557. as also the Youthes in Citties, Noble-men, and Souldiours for the Warres, must haue their Hats and habits for the body, meerely Spanish; Their Cloakes and Hose, like the Reistres, and their Haire also; Saddles for Horses, Boots, Spurs, and Armes, all made Rutter-fashion. Hath not this beene a presage, of plots, practises, and intelligences, betweene Spaniards and seditious Frenchmen, contriued against the Kingdome of France? Haue they not made vse of the best places in Brittaine, Champaigne, Piccardie, with Amiens, Dorlan, Calays, and other? They tearmed Paris their good Cittie; there they had Garrison of Hispaniolized French; there they made commotion of the Estates, beside many other mollestations, which they brought to the Kingdome. The chiefest French of their faction, went all in Spanish Garments, to testifie the good affection which they bare to that Nation. And the fashions of Cloaks, Doublets, hose, and other garnishments, worne by the Suitzers, Reistres, Lansquenets, and other Allemaignes, fell out to be apparant predictions, that the Kingdome should be pilled, pouled, and rauaged by them. Hath not all the Money in the Realmes Coffers been exhausted, to pay for this fond pride? I appeale to both sides, during the deuision. Nay, is it not so daily seene? I am sure it was so, within these three daies.

Count Baltazar held opinion, that the first fashion of Garments vsed by the Italians, was a signe of libertie and freedome, as the nouell habites were a presage of seruitude, which we haue beheld to fall out verie truelie. And as one writeth, that Darius King of all the East, hauing the yeare before hee fought against Alexander, caused the Sword that he wore by his owne side, (which was a Persian blade) to be made after the manner of those of Macedon: It was interpreted by his Diuiners or Soothsayers, to signifie, that they (according to whose fashion, Darius had altered the forme of his Persian Sword) should come to Domineere, and be Superiours, or Lordes of Persia. Euen so (saith he) in hauing changed our Italian Habits, into those of Strangers; it seemeth to me, that it should signifie, that they into whose habilliments wee haue altered ours, should come to ouer-awe vs. Which was found to be most true, for

The fantastick behaviour of the Gaules in their apparrell.

The Iewes changing their names & garments.

French men apparrelled like Spaniards, Rutters, and Suitzers.

Affection which France very dearely paid for.

Strange disguises worne among the Italians.

King Darius his alteration of his Sword.

to this day, there is scantly any Nation in the world, to whom Italie hath not been a prey.

It was no matter of meruall, if Vegetius cried out against the Souldiers of his time, who had leste the waighty, yet actiue Armor of the ancient Romains, and went naked (as it were) to warre, which was the verie cause, that ledde them the way vnto the losse of many foughten battailes. For, those Soldiers came at length to weare, a verie barbarous and Gothish kinde of furniture, far differing from the Legionaries order, that flourished vnder the good Emperors, such as were Traian, Adrian, Antoninus Pius, & Marcus Aurelius, vnder whom, the men of warre, as well for foote as horse, were in their strength and vigour, and Armes, and Military Discipline, in most high reputation. For, in stead of Corlets and Cuirasses of Iron or Steel, our nouelists would weare Coats of Wool, and counter-pointed cottons, imposing an vnvsual name on this Armor, as Thorocomachs or Iackes; and euen to this day, those habits doe retaine that name, which signifieth nothing else, but a Thorax or Cuirasse for warre, vsed in stead of the Militarie Corlet, which our Elders most esteemed.

Those chaunges of Warlicke habiliments, which the latter Romaine Soldiers made, besides the losses which they had brought with them, signified also the perdition of the Easterne Empire, which the Gothes inuaded; for they made themselves Lords of Italy, Spaine, and of other great Prouinces. Wherefore, I conclude (because that which hath been noted by experience, standeth in no neede of any other demonstration) that the often chaunges and habits of a Nation, can declare nothing else, but some future domination, or ruine to be receyued from those people, of whom they borrow the fashion of Garments, as hath beene proued in this chapter, by sundry examples.

Vegetius complaint on Roman Soldiers for leauing their ancient Armour.

Newe names imposed on new martiall Garments.

The reason of loosing the Eastern Empire.

CHAP. XXIII.

A Discourse on the vocation and life of S. Luke, Physitian, Euangelist, & Scholler of the Apostles, which may serue as an Apo'logie for Physitions, falsely calumniated.

THE reason that moued me to write a Discourse on the life of Saint Luke, Physitian, Euangelist, and Scholler to the Apostles: was, in regard that a great number of people, (yea, and some of the Learned sort, reputed of the best aduised) haue beleueed and affirmed, by a certaine kinde of brute, receyued of long time from Father to the son, that Physitions giue no credit vnto God, but to Nature only. Or else, if they doo beleuee in him, then they think ill on the Catholick faith. I haue been many times very much amazed, from whence this so strange an opinion should arise, considering, that I haue frequented diuers Philosophers and Physitians, & could neuer tast in them any of those erroneious imaginations.

I thinke that this may seem to receiue Originall from Aristotle, by some that did not well vnderstand his writing: and therefore haue not spared to publish, that he did not acknowledge any god, neither any prouidence of his, but that all things went by a naturall brandling, and the world to be either without beginning or ending. Hence is conceiued, that Physitions, as taking the beginning of their Art from his Bookes: do in these things wholly follow his opinions. I say that it may well bee, that in some places of his workes, such things do seem to be spoken by him: but let vs see the Catastrophe of his intention. Marke what he saith in his Booke of the world God is the engenderer and the conseruer of all that is in this world, in what fashion soeuer it bee. And in his Metaphisicks also, after he hath reiected the opinion of diuers, concerning the principles. That man (saith hee) who hath saide, that God, or the Vnderstanding, is cause and Author, not only of the creatures,

The Authors reason for writing this Chapter.

Aristotle presupposed to be the Originall of this error.

Arist. in lib. de Mund. Aristotle defended fr: 6 slander & calumny.

Arist. in Metaph.

but of Nature it selfe, and of the world, & of all the order therein contained: seemeth to speake aduisedly, and as well awaked; but all other, rashly, and inconsiderately. And they which do thinke so, haue very wel placed that cause, to bee the beginning of all whatsoeuer: euen such a beginning or principle, as gaue motion to all things. And in his Booke of meruailous things, he speaketh more clearly. That Naturally the Sea would couer the earth, as beeing more high then it: but God hath kept it backe, to the end, that the earth might bee discovered, both for the vse of man, and all the Creatures.

Aris. in Lib. de Reb. Mirac.

Thus we see plainly, that Aristotle beleued there was a God aboue Nature. And that the worlde had beene created, and was not eternall; and that there was a Paradise. In his Booke also of Heauen and in the ninth Chapter, he saith. Above the Heauens, there is neither euacuation, or time; That which abideth or dwelleth there, is subiect neither to place, to motion, to mutation, nor yet to any effecti- on: but that there is in this vniuersall eternity, a most happy and contented life. In like manner, Aristotle had beene Scholler to Plato, who had taught and instructed him in these things.

Aris. in lib. de Coel. cap. 9.

To alledge, that Hippocrates might be the cause of this conceite, there doth not appeare any likely reason: because al that he re-commendeth to his Disciples, is to call vpon God, and to exercise Charitie towards the sicke. As may be seene in his Booke, Of Conuenable, decent, and honest comportement in a Physition. And in the protestation and Oath which he maketh that day, when hee goeth to exercise his Art, which was performed before an infinite number of men, within the temple of Apollo, and in a solemn Sacrifice. This he caused his Schollers to do, so long as he liued: which I am the more willing to set downe, word by word, according as it is set downe by himselfe, at the beginning of his Workes, in this manner:

Hippocrates beleued that there was a God.

The Protestation and oath made by Hippocrates & his Schollers.

I sweare by Apollo, Physition, Æsculapius, Hygea, Panacea, and by al the other Goddesses: and I cal all the Goddesses to witnessse, that with al my power, and so long as I shal liue, I wil keepe this protestation and Oath which I make, deliuering it in writing presently, sincerely, and as becommeth an honest man, so wit: that he who hath taught me the Art of Physicke, I wil respect & honor him as my Father; and that I will lay downe my life for him, and assist him with al my meanes in his necessities. I wil keep and regard his Children as mine owne: and if they bee willing to bee instructed in this Art, I wil do it in meere gratuity. In like manner, I wil not hide any iot of all that I know, from such Schollers as I shal stand obliged to teach. Ouer and aboue what hath beene saide, I make thereto this Addition more.

10

Concerning due respect, of gouerning & healing the diseased by diet or otherwise, I will appoint such vnto them, as I shal deeme necessarie for their health, hindering by all my vtmost, that they shal not fall into inconuenience by them. I wil neuer suffer my self to be perswaded, by the procurement of who-soeuer, to impoyson any one by anie meanes, much lesse, giue any aduise whereby it may be done. Likewise, I will neuer giue any Pessary, Suppositorie, or other medicament, to cause abortiueneesse in any woman: but wil liue heerin holily, and exercising my Art vertuously. I wil neuer make any essay, to fetch stones out of the bladder: but leaue that worke to be done, by such as are experienced in that Arte. Al houses that I shal enter into, or be called for my helpe, I will not go, except it may be for their profit, keeping alwayes my will and body chaste, vsing secrecie and silence in al things that are not honest, or fit to be vttered. Graunt then O you Goddesses, that so long as I shal keep this Oath and Protestation, I may happily (and with your blessing) prosper in mine Art towards all men. And doing the contrary, that I may be iustlie punnished. This was the manner of his protestation: Nay, he did very well beside; for, in the first Booke of his Prognostickes, he giueth especiall aduertisement to a Physition, to bee verie carefull, that the sicknesse do not fauor of any Diuine cause: that is to say, some extraordinary matter sent from God, to punish men for their sinnes; or whether it followeth the common course of Nature. I am of the mind, that who-soeuer readeth these thinges, will neuer tearme Hippocrates to be an Atheist, much lesse, a wicked man. And therefore, such men as shall read his Books, can learn nothing in them, but how to liue as becommeth good people, and faithfully to exercise the Art of Physicke.

20

30

40

50

That they should learne Atheisme of Galen, is altogether false: for he beleued

in

A further addition to the Oath & Protestation.

The Prayer or imprecation vnto the Goddesses.

Hip. in lib. 1. de Prog. Cap. 5.

Gal. in lib. 3. de usu part. Hom.

Galen Sung a Song to the glory and honor of God.

Gal. in lib. supra diff. Cap. 17.

An excellent and woorthy resolution in Galen.

What nature is.

Obiection.

in one God, and rendereth thanks vnto him for his admirable works, in the third Booke of the vse of the partes of our human bodies; & these are his very words. Heere will I compose a true Song, in the honor of our Creator: for, I doe perswade my selfe, that it is truly such seruice as he requi- reth. Not that I should Sacrifice Bulls vnto him by hundreds, or burne Incense on heaps before him: but that I should knowe, and make knowne to others; what, and howe great is his wisdom, power, and goodnesse. I hold, that this is a demonstration of a perfect goodnesse; & therefore ought his goodnesse to bee celebrated for euer, for hauing found the manner how things became so richly embellished. This sheweth a soueraign wisdom, in accomplishing and perfecting all things, which he had formerly destined & ordained. And a might and power that cannot any way be surmounted.

In the seuenteenth chapter of the said Booke. Whosoeuer (saith he) shal consider, the structure and composition of euery creature, will finde, that therein is contained a prooffe of the Creators wisdom: Seeing then, that in the midst of this receptacle of humours, a soule dwelleth in euery one, which hath so many vertues: by much greater reason, let him admire the woorth and excellency of that vnderstanding which abideth in Heauen. In the fifteenth Chapter also. I confesse (saith he) that I do not know what the Soule is, although I haue searched very diligently for it. Neither know I which way to yeelde a reason how an Infant is formed. But I verie well perceiue, that in this verie cause, there is great Art, and wonderful wisdom. And therefore, I am of the minde, that no man should meddle in the search thereof; but let it suffice vs, that our Creator pleased, things should bee in that manner. For in such cases, which (but by Anatomie) wee neuer knew to be made, shal we dare to contest, and seek by what reason they haue become made? That is, as if hee would haue saide, Nature whom we doe admire so much, is nothing els, but what it hath pleased God to command. These words also, do not relish of an Atheist; but of him that beleued in one onelie God, and honoured and admired him in his workes.

I make no doubt, of any Obiection to be made, in reproouing Moyse and the Christians, in saying; that God is omnipotent or Almighty: and that if he pleafed, he could suddenly of a stone, make a man, or of ashes, a horse. Himselfe answereth: Nature is not wont to make anie such things; and God maketh nothing, but by the common order of Nature which hee hath instituted. And such was the opinion of Plato, concurring with his. This ought to bee taken, as coming from a Phylo- sopher that beleued in God: Neuerthe- lesse, not as yet instructed in the Law, as well of the Olde as New Testaments. And it is not to be doubted, but that all the Grecian Physitions (before and after Hippocrates and Galen) did scarcely know, reuerence, and worship God according as he is described in the holy Scriptures. Notwithstanding, since Galen, who liued in the yeare of Iesus Christ, one hundred thirtie eight: all the Grecian Physitions haue beene Christians: as Paulus Egin- tus, Alexander, Trallianus, Actuarius, Nicholans Myrepsicus, and others. Now because there were two Sectes of princi- pall Physitions, to wit; Greeks & Arabes, we hauing already proued the Grecians to be men of honesty, and to haue in them both the knowledge and feare of GOD. Let vs now see, if the Arabes (all saide to be of the Sarazin and Mahomet Religion) did not beleue in God. And we will be- gin with Mesius, who liued about the yeare, 1045: a such time as Godfrey of Buillon, was King of Ierusalem. He com- posed three Bookes of Physicke; and in his Preface before them, hee beginneth thus, in these verie words.

In the name of the mercifull God. (by the grace of whom, these Words & writings receiue Grace, and their Doctrine perfecti- on) these workes and writings are begunne by Iohn, the Sonne of Mesius, the Sonne of Hamech, the Sonne of Hely, the Sonne of Abdela, King of Damas. And Auicenne, who liued in the time of Almerick, Brother to Baldwine King of Ierusalem, & of Frederick Barbarossa, Emperor in the West; and of Emanuell Empror in the East, in the yeare, 1165. Before all things (saith he) I would render praise and thanks to God, according as the Greatness of his Maieſtie, and the merit of his benefits requireth: the mercie of whome, exceedeth that of all the Prophets. Then in the end of the chapter, he further saith: May it please God, to grant mee life and time, for the finishing of this Booke, I wil take paines to compose others. The like hath been done by diuers other

Phyſi

Galen in lib. 11 de usu part.

All did not know God a right.

Physitions among the Grecians that wer Christians.

Mesius in Pte.

Physitions among the Arabians that beleued in God.

Mesius in Pte.

*Auerroes in lib.
3. de Anim.*

Physitions; as Hamech, Novus, Almanfor, Zachary, Rasis, and others. I am sure they will not obiect Auerroes vnto mee, who approued not the Mahumetists Law
(as being full of grossenesse and vices, viz: Whoredomes, Theftes, and such like) neither that of the Christians: but was altogether Aristotelian, as may be noted in his third Booke of the soule, which hee wrote vppon Aristotle. And thereby may be gathered, that he knew one God, and him to be the Creator of all things.

That Physitions are not found in faith

Well then, concerning the other detection, that if they are not Atheists; yet they are not found in faith, which should seeme to ensue: because they are not superstitious, neither do giue credite to so many foolish superstitions, wherein the people repose too much beleefe. As for example; to guesse how great the sole of the left foot is, of him that hath the oppilation of the Spleen, or the Feauer Quartaine; the rinde of a Walnut gathered before day, will help him. Also, to write the word Ioannes vpon a Bay-leaf, and then lay it vpon the fore-head of him or her whofoeuer, that hath the Head-ache, and it is a present helpe.

Superstitious belief in some people.

*Plin. in lib. 22.
cap. 14.*

The ancient Græcians, instead of Ioannes, vsed to write Atenea, so saith Pliny. Antiquitie also beleeued, that a man (offended with the palsy) holding a green Frogge in his healthfull hand, and speaking the word Apollo three seuerall times, it would restore him. Some haue written that by writing in a little Paper, these two barbarous words, Abra, Cadabra, and to speake them backward, beginning with the latter Letters, and so going on, it is an infallible helpe for the Quartaine Ague.
Physitions, because they would not credit such fables, were reputed but badlie addicted to the faith of those times. And some Physitions, not to incurre so vile reputation, either of the times passed before, or present: haue beene constrained to auouch such superstitions, as Alexander Trallianus, who writeth; that if a man did beare about him this verse of Homer, Orbis terreque tremor, it would cure him of all Gouts.

Idle and vain opinions, for curing some diseases.

Cardanus, a most learned Physition.

Cardanus, a great Phylosopher and Physition, recounteth things much more absurd, only because hee would not bee thought incredulous. All these thinges, and others of like Nature, haue not only bin reprobued by learned Physitions; but likewise by catholick Diuines, euer since the Primitiue Church.

Now, for as much as Religion is one of the cheefest Vertues, which consisteth in the midst of two extreame vices, to wit; Atheisme and Superstition; and in regard that Physitions are neither Atheistes, nor superstitious, as euery one well knoweth, and as I haue already proued:
it followeth then, that they are Religious, and full of piety.

There was somtime a Physition (whose name I could not easily attain vnto) that builded a goodly Temple, in honour of the Virgin Mary, in the same place wher Babylon stood in Egypt; and not farre off from where the Graund Caire standeth at this present, there being now but a ve-rie small Village. Vnder this Temple, there is a Vault, wherein (as some haue thought) shee hid her Sonne Iesus, when he was sought for by Herod to be murdered.

Eusebius, in his Ecclesiasticall Histo-rie, writeth; that a Physition, named Alexander, a Natiue in Frisia, highly beloued and esteemed of euerie one, for bee-ing Religious, prudent, vertuous, and inriched with all good manners, in the persecution vnder the Emperour Seuerus, as they were leading Christian prisoners before the Iudges Tribunall at Lyons, to vnderstand whether they would persist, or denie their Christianity; hee made a signe to them with his head secretly (in the best maner he could deuise) that they should continue constant in their Faith.
The Guards and people standing by, hauing perceiued it, accused him immediately; whereupon, he was martyred, and indured the torments long and constantly, euen to his latest gaspe of life. If I would, I could alledge many others: but I am forced to leaue them, for feare of being too prolix. Yet let me remember Porphyrius, who liued in the yeare, 224.
a cruell enemy vnto the Christians (yet esteemed the most Learned Phylosopher of those times. Hee scorned and mocked many Physitions then with him, because they had left Paganisme, and embraced Christianity: but Origen answered him so well, that he stopt his mouth from further deprauing.

50

Messire Angelo Cattho, who was first in seruice with Charls Duke of Bourgognz, and after that, entertained by Lewes, ele-uenth

The Authors
argument, which he alo-weth for good

Bel. in l. 2. ca. 38

*Euseb. in Eccles.
Hist. lib. 5. ca. 3.*

Alexander, a worthy Physion & Martyr.

Porphyrius the Apostata.

M. Angelo Cat-tho, a Prophe-tical Physition

uenth of that Name, King of France, being a Physition well learned in the Mathematickes, becam afterward (in regard of his good life & great deuotion) Arch-Bishop of Vienna Gauloise.ouer and beside his deepe knowledge, hee hadde the guift of Prophesie: for hee foretolde the saide Duke, of the battailes which he lost against the Suisses, and in the end, the manner of his death, according as it happened afterward; which was the cause that he left the saide Dukes Court. For on a day, as Masse was celebrating before K. Lewes, in the Church of Saint Martin at Tours (distant from the Towne of Nancy ten good dayes iourney at the west, which Towne the Duke had then besieged) hee offering the King the Pax to kisse, because he serued that day as Almoner, hee vttered these wordes: The Lord God hath giuen you peace and repose, & you may haue it if you will. For, your enemy the Duke of Bourgogne, is a dead man: hee commeth to be slaine, and his Army discomfited. The day and instant was iustly obserued, the King sent, and it was found to bee verie true.

He foretold likewise many other things to diuers great and honourable personages, which accordingly came to passe. And ordinarily, Physitions do gather by obseruation, some presaging of the day and houre, of the health or death of the sicke patient; which ensueth not so much by their Art, as the speciall grace of God giuen them, in regard of their pietie and firm faith in him, hauing continually the admirable prouidence of GOD before their eyes, being mainly thereto incited by their Art.

Marcilius Phicinus the Florentine; a Phylosopher, and reputed to bee one of the most learned men, that liued after Aristotle and Galen. He was a Priest full of sanctity, and published manie Bookes, which serue for the benefite of health. Also, he Commented vpon Plato, whom he made to speake Christianly: he liued in the yeare, 1475. Petrus Belonius, a Frenchman, and Physition in the Cittie of Mans, in meere deuotion made a voyage to Ierusalem, which was troublefom, long, and full of many difficulties. But it may be obiected to me, that many Physitions of our time, haue withdrawn themselves from the Catholicke Romaine Church.

I answer, some haue done, but very few: and a great part of people, of Germany, Flanders, England, France, of the Suisses, & diuers Prelates also, yea, Kings, Queenes, and Princeesses; haue done as much, as seeking for their soules saluation; and perswading themselves to doo well therein; in which case, we must referre them to God, the onely searcher of the heart and Reines, and that disposeth of all things, as seemeth best to his diuine wisdom. But that this hath bene per-ticuler to Physitions, more then to anie other, I flatly deny.

Some will alledge Rabelais vnto mee, an excellent Physition; who is thought one while to speake like an Atheist; another while like a Luthierian. I answer, that it is a difficult matter to iudge in such cases, and to comprehend a mans intention: especially, in such people as haue no knowledge, neither any solide iudgement. But they that looke vpon him a little neerer, shall find, that he is a Democritus, laughing at all our humane actions. Or a Lucian, who maketh a mockery of such abuses, as daily are committed among men: but he medleth not with anything, which toucheth the Apostolical Church. Neuerthelesse, I am of opinion; that, for the better orders sake; and in regarde of such obscuritie in conceiuing his intention, that he should bee neither read, nor receiued; for so he was censured by the Counsell of Trent. But as for the last Booke that is added among his woorkes, which is entituled L'Isle Sonnante; and seemeth (indeede) to blame and mocke at men, bearing office in the Church: I protest, that he neuer composed it, for it was made a long while after his death. I my selfe was at Paris when it was done, and I knew very well the Author thereof, who neuer was any Physition.

Let vs nowe come to Saint Luke, the Physition and Euangelist: God pleased to make vse of his seruice, in writing the life and actions of our Lord Iesus Christ, according as he heard them declared by the Apostles & Disciples, who had seene him and them; as also the things hapning after his resurrection, by hauing seene them, which none of the other Euangelists had done. For, but by him, the Ascension had bene vnknowne to vs; the descent of the Holy Ghost, vpon the Apostles

A prediction concerning the death of the Duke of Bourgogne.

Physitions skill in life or death of their Patients.

Marcilius Phicinus, a learned Florentine.

Petrus Bellonius a deuoute Physition.

Of leaving the Romaine Church.

Diuers opinions, concerning the book of Rabelais.

The Book of the founding Island.

Concerning S. Luke, Physition, & Euangelist.

S. Luke wrote more then all the other E-uangelists.

S. Luke elected to bee the Secretarie of the New-Testament.

The great modestie in S. Luke.

Acts 17, 34.

Colof. 4, 14. 2 Tim. 4, 11.

The Authors aduise in conclusion.

postles and Disciples; the variety of tongues which they spake; their eloquence and great knowledge. The testimonie of the Resurrection and Ascension of Iesus which they preached before euerie one, without any feare. Their imprisonments, their myraculous deliuerances. The conuersion of S. Paule, his actions, his myracles, and of some other of the Apostles. His Voyages and sufferinges, euen vntill he was brought to Rome, there to bee put to death, which he neuer gainfayed. Some do hold that Luke was conuerted by him, hauing conferred with him; and hauing obserued in his myracles, the great Vertue of God. And it seemeth, that he was the rather made choise of, to be Notarie and Secretary of the New-Testament, as being more apt to that vocation, then any other, to the end, that his writings might be the better receyued and credited.

There is great modesty acknowledged in him, because (doubtlesse) he did performe some miracles, as well as the other; and yet he neuer speaketh of them. He disputed at Athens against the Philosophers, with S. Paul, where many were conuerted; and among other, S. Dionysius Areopagita, &c. He wrote in the Greek tongue, which he seemed rather to haue by the giuft of the blessed Spirit, then by his studies: for his mother tongue was in Syraque, as being borne and brought vp in Antioche. He was brieft, but very intelligible in his writings. In summe, the whole Church oweth him much obligation, in regard of his woorkes: for, they haue serued, and shall do, to confirm many in the Christian faith. S. Hierom ranketh him in number of Virgins; and that he liued fourescore and foure yeares, dying in Bythina, Titus being Emperour. I wold gladly giue aduise by this discourse, that heereafter none should exprobrate against the Physitions, that either they are Religion lesse, or conceite ill of our faith, which we haue approued to be false by our former relation.

CHAP. XXXIII.

Of the great Prouince of Moscouia. As also the Manners, Religion, and power of the Prince, ruling ouer that people.

Was the more willingly induced, to make a perticuler Chapter, for description of the country of Moscouia, the peoples Manners, Religion, and power of their Prince: because very manie, inhabiting in our neerer regions, are ignoraunt thereof, the men of those parts hauing so small frequentation with vs. Neuerthelesse, it is the terror of Poland, yea, to all Germany, as much or rather more, then the Turke; as Laurentius Surius the Germaine giueth assurance: for within few yeares, they haue Conquered all Lithuania, and other great Prouinces.

Moscouia, is a verie large Northerlie Region; containing very neere fiae hundred leagues in length. The principall Cittie therof being called Mosca, or Moscouua, greater then the Cittie Paris in France, and seated on the Riuer of Mosqua. There was wont to be a large squared stone, in the middest of the Market place belonging to the Cittie; whereon whosoeuer could first mount himselfe (in vacancie of the Crowne) without beating down, he was held as Prince of the countrey, and obtained the principality. The Inhabitants haue had great fightes and combates, each against other, about the prioritie of mounting on that stone. He that comes to be Prince of the countrey, cannot call himselfe King, but Duke; being contented with that popular Name, and differeth not in his Garmentes from other Noblemen of the Land; saue onlie that he weareth a higher Bonnet on his head.

It is a Countrey rich in Siluer, and so strongly guarded thoroughout, that not onely their owne people, but stranngers likewise, can passe away without the Princes Letters. The Countrey is flat and

The Moscouits are a dreadful Nation.

The greatest of Moscouia.

A strange election of the D. of Moscouia

Concerning the Country, flat, Plainy, & not mountainic.

Store of beastes skinned.	and plaine, without any Mountaines: therefore, that which is faide of the Ryphæan Mountaines, and that they are in this Countrey, are meereley fabulouſ; for there is no ſuch Hill at all. There are great ſtore of Forreſts, abounding with wilde Beaſts, which are daily chaſed: and great profit is made (by Traffick) for the ſkinnes of thoſe Beaſtes; as of Hartes, Wolues, Ermines, Martines, Zubelines, Fouoynes, and diuers other of great value and worth.	in the fore-named Citie, as alſo in diuers other places; men verie learned and wiſe, whoſe retirement is where the Schooles are kept.	The Moscouite tributary to the Tartar
The countries confines	This Prouince, confineth Liunia on the one ſide, Tartaria on the other; and on the thirde quarter it hath the Euxine Sea. It containeth many Prouinces in it, ſo that the Prince can (in very fewe dayes) leaue four hundred thouſand men on foote, to beginne warre withall. They drinke nothing but a kinde of Beere; and yet none but the rich may drinke thereof: for they haue no Wine, but what is brought from other Countreyes: They be ſubiect vnto drunkenneſſe, as al Northerly people are: and Winter is there ſo ſharpe, long, and extreame, that if water be but ſprinkled or caſt vpe into the Ayre, it freezeth before it can fall to the earth.	The Moscouite is Tributarie vnto the King of Tartaria, who ouercame them in the yeare of the world, 6745. according as their Annals doe teſtific. For, their Chronicles are not after our obſeruati- on, in accounting by the yeares of Ieſus Chriſt. When the Tartarian Ambaſſadors are ſent to the Moscouite Princes he ſtandeth vp on his feet, and bare-headed before them, and they ſit couered. Hee hath (wel-neere) daily warres againſt the Polonians and Scythians, who albeit they are ſubiects to other Kings, yet doth hee much enlarge his dominions ouer them.	Plenty of fiſh in Riuers.
Men readie for the warre.	Their Corne neuer perfectly ripens, but when they haue reaped it, they dry it in their Stoues or Hotte-houſes. The Spring is verie cold with them, and their Summer, which laſteth but two months onely, is extreame hot. They haue not any uſe of monies; but in ſtead thereof, they haue Plates of Gold or Siluer, ſquared, without any marke or ſtampe thereon, which are taken in Merchandize, for aſmuch as they waigh. As for their Garments, they go cloathed like Turkes, in long Gownes or Robes, hauing narrow ſleeues, and guarded about the middle. Their buildings and manner of life, doo differ verie little from theirs of Poland & Bohemia: They are Chriſtians like vnto the Greeks, receiuing order of Prieſthood, from the Patriarche of Conſtantinople, ſaying ſeruice (in their Temples) in their vulgar tongue, which is the Sclauonian Language, and their Characters are Greeke.	The Country is very plentiful in Fiſh, by the goodly and great Riuers which runne along thorough it; wherein they haue their breeding: As Oxos, Drunus, and Boryſthenes, which is alſo called Depnerus. There is great ſtore of Paſture grounds; all kinde of Oxen, Kine, and ſuch like Beaſts, as alſo Horſes & Mares; but of ſlender corpulence and lean. They haue not any ſweete fruites growing among them, except it be Cherries: neyther is there any fruites to make Oyle of, as of Oliues, Walnuts, Filbeardes, Almonds, and ſuch like. But all kinde of Pulſe are there in abundance, and Corne that they make bread of. The verie beſt harueſt which they haue or gather, conſiſteth in waxe and Honie, by meanes of their Bees, which do not make their abiding in Hiues, but in hollow Trees in the Forreſtes, in wonderfull great plentifulneſſe.	Paſture ground, and Cattle.
Long & ſharpe Winter.	The abyding of the Prince, is in a goodly great Pallace, in the City of Moscoua, built after the Italian manner; being ſo ſtrong and ſpacious, as (in our times) the like hath not bene ſcene. There are	The Prince in all ſuch Countries as he conquereth from the Scythians, compelleth them to become Chriſtians; ſo that the laſt Prince Iohn (within the ſpace of threſcore yeares) won many Countreyes from them: as Perne, Corela, Peruſca, Iura, Cetiremiſa, Baacquid, and many other Idolaterous people, whom hee conſtrained to receiue Baptiſm. He gaue them alſo a Biſhoppe, named Stephen, whom thoſe barbarous wretches ſlayed aliue, after the ſaide Prince was gone forth of their Countrey. But when he hard tydings thereof, he returned againe vpon them; and cauſing them to feel the rigour of his warre, they were gladde to continue Chriſtians. They haue Poaſts	Fruits, Pulſe, and Corne.
Their Drink and Corne.		N n n or	Wax & Honie in great plenty.
Their Spring & Summer.			Countreyes won to Chriſtianity.
Their money.			Stephen a Biſhop martyred
Their Garments.			Swift Poaſts.
Their buildings, life, and Religion.
The Court or abiding of the Prince.

or swift Curriers in Moscouia, which rid more way, and in shorter time then is doone amongst vs: although their Horses are verie badly bredde, and small of bodie.

These Princes, in former times, contented themselues with the name of Duke only, vntill the dayes of his Father nowe reigning, who vsurped the name of King, giuing himself great Titles in his patents, which continued to his Son succeeding him, in manner following. The Great Lord Basilius, Great Duke of Velodimeria, Moscouia, Nouogardia, Plescouia, Sureluchia, Tuneria, Ingaria, Permia, Vraquia, Bulgaria; Great Lorde and Duke of the Lands in Nouagardia the lower, of Geruigonia, Rezania, Volotia, Riscouia, Belloya, Iaroslania, Bierosolia, Vdoria, Obdoria, Condidia, &c. By which large pluralitic of Names, and of so manie Seigneuries, it appeareth, that he is farre more potent, then some haue imagined him to be. But concerning his keeping himselfe in vassalage to the Great King of Tartaria, hee should hold it no dishonor to him, for he hath this end in it. While hee keepeth peace with him, he reduceth much more easly vnder his obedience; all the neere neighbouring people and territories: & with the power of the Great Tartarre, he is ten times stronger then of himself. For the mightie Tartarre, bringeth ordinarily, a million of men with him to the field, all well appointed for warre, with two or three hundreded pieces of Cannon, and 300000. Horse.

He hath beene Tributary, euer since the year, one thousand two hundred, when Baty King of the Tartarres, an Idolater in Religion, subdued, wasted, and pilled a great part of Christian Europe, with an Army of a Million of men. Euen then, when Pope Innocent, fourth of that name, sent verie Learned and Religious men towards Baty; with entreatance, to deport himselfe from any further mollestation of the Christians; and that himselfe would become a Christian. Shewing him withall, that the Sunne and the Moone which he adored, were onely but Creatures of God, subiect to mutation, and must haue an ending. He gaue consent to truce for siue yeares, promising; That thenceforward, he would do no more displeasure vnto Christians; and that hee had a desire to bee instructed in Christian Religion.

The Popes Ambassadors, being verie ioyfull of this successe, made hast homeward, in hope to returne againe speedily. But they were no sooner departed, but others were sent thither from the Sultan of Egypt, Mahometanes, who dissuaded the well-minded Prince, not to lend any eare to Christians, but much lesse to embrace their Religion, full of many superstitions. For, they told him, it contained prohibition, from vsing certaine meates at certaine times, and commaunded Fasting, Chastitie, continency, and other laborious matters. It rather fitted him, to accept and receiue into his countries, the Mahometist Religion, full of al pleasures and contentments. Whereby it was lawfull for him, to admit as manie Women as men to his bed, as himselfe best liked; and euerie one was allowed, (without any diffrence) to vse such meats as his appetite required.

In the end, Baty suffering himselfe to be swallowed vppe in the Gulphe of all Libertie and Voluptuous desires, receyued immediately the Mahometane Law. So did the most part of his Subiects, by his example; and which they did and do keepe it to this present day. I am sorry to write, what I heare from such, as haue & do frequent those Countreyes, to witte: that the King or Precep at this time, accommodateth himselfe to al kinds of Religion. For, with Christians, he wil Christianize; with Iewes, he will Iudaize; and with Idolaters, carrie himselfe in like manner: but commonly, hee is more Mahometan then any other, louing euerie one with his Religion.

This Baty, the Tartarian King, hauing dealt like Paris the Trojan, who loued carnall delights, better then all Heauenly wisdom, died within a short while after, hauing then great store of Ciuill Warres in his Kingdome. During which time, the Tartarres (who were distributed among the Prouinces in Garrisons) retired themselues, as willing to take part in those Ciuill Warres, and so were called from one place to another, still to yeeld their assistance. By which meanes, diuers of the Prouinces, seeing themselues free without Governours, and cleare from Garrisons of their enemies, returned againe to their former libertie; and (aboue all other) of the Moscouites.

But

The King of Moscouias
Titles.

The policy of the Moscouite, in being Tributarie to the Tartar.

Howe long since hee be-cam tributary

A humain answer of the K.
of Tartaria.

Good intentions do often meete with bad preuentions.

The Tartarian
King yeildeth to become a Mahometist.

The Tartares
vse all Religions.

The death of Baty King of Tartaria.

Liberty is the onely ground of disobedience.

But within some yeares afterward, perceiuing the Tartarian Ciuill VVarres to be ended, and no more Kings commanding but one, as before had doone: fearing to be reuisited again by the Tartars, they yeelded themselues backe againe as their Tributaries; but yet with condition, that they should obserue Christian Religion.

No Metals in Moscovia.

There groweth not any Mettall in Moscovia, how vile or base soeuer it be; no not so much as Iron, or Quarries of stone: whatsoeuer Mettalles, Jewelles, or Stones they haue, is brought thither from straunge Countreyes, wherewith the *VV*omen decke themselues, and make pendants of them to hang in their eares.

Wholesome Ayre free fro Pestilence.

The Ayre is verie healthfull, neuer engendering any Pest; or contagious diseases. Thus you may discern in these few words, what I could collect concerning this Countrey, which is no vnvsual distance from vs: but may well serue to acquaint the Reader, (that is not versed or scene in Cosmography, neyther hath trauailed) both what the Country is, and the people.

CHAP. XXXV.

Concerning those clauses, inserted by the Romaine Emperors in their Edicts, to wit; Such is Our pleasure; And, Of Our Owne meere motion.

Many Emperors haue bin Tyrants.

We finde it recorded, that manie tyrant Emperors, made diuers vnadvised Edictes, which redounded to great detriment of the Common-wealth. And because they would not haue them passe by the Senate, they make addttions of these words or Clauses: Such is Our pleasure: Or, Being done by Our meere motion. A thing contrary to their Oath: howbeit, that those inserted words, are the true markes of a Soueraigne Prince.

Mark Anthony tearing himselfe Emperour of the East, sent by expresse wordes, and without delay, that a like imposition should be leauied, as hee had caused to bee done the same yeare before, which was insupportable. And albeit the Prouinces and Citties sent vnto him, to shew him the indigence and pouertie of the Country, as well thorow barrenesse of the grounds, as in regard of the wars, which had preceeded in the passed years. And that if it so fell out, that hee would needes impose such a tax vpon the people, yet to let it be done in such manner, as they might haue two Haruestes, and two Vintages: Neuerthelesse, in this matter, hee would haue no other aduise but his owne, and saide; It was His Will, that it should be raised vpon the people, for such was His pleasure. This Patent was the cause of the perdition of his estate, and of his life also.

Plutarch in vita Mar. Ant.

M. Anthony by his Edicts lost both his State & life.

Theodosius, a Christian Emperour, commaunded by Edict, that so manie of the Thessalians as could be found, should bee slaine and massacred; and sent Men of warre, to execute the same in Thessalie, whereuppon (in two or three dayes) seauen or eight thousand was pnt to death. And these were the words in the patents; Such is My Will, and of Mine owne proper motion. Nay, a much greater murdering had beene committed, if Saint Ambrose (who liued then) by holy and learned documents had not stayed it. But afterward he made another Edict, whereby he willed, that if he sent to command the death of any one, the matter should rest vpon intermission, for the space of thirty daies before execution, and heartily repented him for the former offence. I could easily alledge many other Histories, which are full of such Edicts proceeding from the meere motion of Princes, & contrary to the lawes of Nature; but they wold require too long a space, being irksome also to the Reader, when he perceyeth, what discomoditie they haue brought to Kingdomes, causing their total ruine, and the Princes also.

Theodosius made an Edict against Nature.

Repentance & reuocation of vniust Edicts.

The Kings of France, hauing more power ouer their people, then euer the Emperors in those times had, wold yet insert this clause. Neuerthelesse, it was neuer known, that they made any edicts against nature, albeit, against ciuil lawes and customs of the kingdom, thorow il counsel, and not of their owne proper motion. King Lewes the eleauenth (dissembling vnto the vttermost) made some Edictes which were vniust, and contrarie to the ancient Lawes of the Realme of France. The Court of Parliament at Paris, refused the publication of them; although they had receyued expresse command (twice or thrice) from his Maiesty, euen so farre as menaces to the losse of their liues. The President Lauacrie, accompanied with a number of the Counsell (attired in their Parliament Robes) went to attend the King, shewing him the iniquity of his Edicts, and what threatnings he had sent to the Court. He beholding the Port, grauitie and dignitie of the men, who would forgo their honours, their seuerall charges, yea, and loose their liues, rather then verisye such Edicts as he hadde sent them, was not a little amazed. But redoubling the authoritie of Parliament, he tore the Edicts in pieces before their faces, entreating them, to continue on stil in doing Iustice; and sware vnto them beside, that he would neuer more vrge any Edict, which should not be both iust and reasonable.

The Kings of France, greater soveraigns then the Emperors.

This was an acte of very great importance, to maintaine the King in obedience of reason, who had alwaies before, vsed absolute power. And at the time when he was but Dau'phine of France, he sent for the Presidents of the Court, and saide vnto them: that they shoulde blot out the clause of expresse commaunde) which the Court had set downe, as verification of the priuiledges graunted vnto the Count du Mayne: Otherwise, that he would not depart out of Paris except it were done; and that they shoulde leaue the Commission which the King had giuen them.

The Court ordained, that the wordes should be defaced. But because it might be seene, what was rased, they appointed; that the Register should be kept; and the same is yet to bee seene, in what order it was ordained, in the date of the twentie eight of Iuly, one thousand four hundred forty three.

According to the example of that good President, and the Counsellors assisting him; all other Magistrates ought to do the like vpon new Edicts, which tend to nothing else, but to the grinding of the people and the Common-wealth.

But not to alter auncient Lawes or Customes, long before enacted and published, because a Magistrate that is allowed, taketh Oath, strictly to obserue the ordinances already confirmed. But in the case of Nouelties, that appeare vnworthy of any embracing, he should vse remonstrances to the Prince and importune him so much as possibly he may, vntill he bee reduced to reason. Which was well put in practise, by the Chancellor to the Duke of Bourgogne, who would not passe or seale any vniust commaund: but declaring the matter to the Duke, offered resignation of the Seale, rather then he would bee forsworne in his Office.

The Duke beholding the constancie of his Chancellour, reuoked the Edict. And oftentimes, this firmenesse & constancie in a Magistrate, preserueth the honor of the Prince, & maintaineth the Commonwealth in her greatnesse, when she standeth supported vpright by Naturall equity.

The Tolomeyes, successour vnto him that was Kinsman to Alexander the great (I meane not heere to speake of the Pharaohs;) caused their Magistrats to sweare, neuer to obey any of their Mandates, if they gaue commaund to iudge vniustlie, as we read in the sentences of the Kinges of Egypt; deliuered and spoken of by Plutarch.

For Conclusion, all good and Vertuous Soueraigne Princes, although they may sette downe the sayde Words (Such is our Pleasure, and, Of our meere motion) yet they should frame all their Edictes and Mandations, by good Councill and aduise; that they bring not anie damage (how little or great soeuer) to their Subiectes. But rather, to vse such clauses as auncient Princes were woont to doe, to wit; Si qua mihi causa iusti videtur, which was interpreted after this manner: If it appeare to me to bee iust and equall.

And, for the inferiour Magistrate to the Soueraigne Prince, if hee giue commaund to publish an vniust Edict (provided, that it bee not against Gods Honour, and the Naturall Lawes) hauing diuers and sundrie times, shewne the Prince, the iniquitie of the charge on him imposed, hee then ought for to lette it passe, & cause it to be published, for it is

com-

Lewes the 11.
reuoked his Edicts, & vpon
what reason.

Lewes the 11.
somewhat opiniuie and headstrong

The dutie of good & faithful Magistrats

The Chancellor to Phillip Duke of Bourgogne.

Example of the Egyptian Magistrates.

Clauses obserued by good and auncient Princes.

The carriage of Magistrars in no well Edicts.

commanded by God, that we should be obedient to Soueraigne Princes. Or els, to delay the publication, and detain it in sufferance so much as he may: for manie times it cometh to passe, that Princes (euen of themselues) reuoke what they haue done, either by the lapse of time, or by the death of some bad Counseller, the cause thereof, or by the death of the Prince himselfe.

As it happened to Caligula the Roman Emperour, who made an Edict, whereby he commanded, that his Statues should be set vp, and honoured in all the Temples of his Empire; whereunto the Jewes made refusall of obeying. Petronius, who had the charge of executing this Edicte, perceiuing the matter to be so detestable and repugnant (oppositively) to the honor of God, and the Lawes of the Jewes, deferred the execution, and sent vnto the Emperour, shewing him the great difficultie he had, to execute the Edict. In the end, vpon this temporizing, Caligula was slaine, and the Jewes were deliuered.

It hath beene many times obserued, that the Generall Assessors of Subsidies in France, did not so promptly impose all those monies on the people, as they were commanded to impose and set downe by Royall Patents, and namely: when they were extraordinarie. But haue made som deferrance, sending back to his Maiesty, shewing him the pouertie of the people. Whereupon, the King hath sometimes made reuocation, or (in Grace) remitted the moity, or some part; or deferred the payment to some other season, whereby the people might be so much the more eased.

Now, whither a Magistrate ought, or may denie, if the Prince constrain him to publish an vnjust Edict. I answer, that he neither may, or ought. Otherwise, the title of Maiestie should be but illusorie; and people might thereby be ouer apt to reuoltes, and all things might then runne to ruine in the Common wealth. But, then it is to be noted withall, that the right of Emperours cannot warrant these wordes, Such is Our Will or Pleasure. For they do protest at their election, to acknowledge the Senate aboue them, in controlling or verifying their Edicts, and to enterprise nothing without their know-

The iustice & equitie in Petronius a worthy Romaine Captaine.

Generall Assessors, verie good officers.

Obedience must be performed vnto Princes.

The Senate superiour to Emperors.

ledge and consent: for Emperour is but a Title of Office. But the Royaltie of France is an estate Soueraigne, that hath no Senate for superiour or Companion.

CHAP. XXXVI.

That Oratours, Pleaders, and others, that make profession of well or eloquent speaking, are dangerous men, and may easily overthrowe the estate of any Common wealth.

Cicero giueth the definition of an Orator, saying; He should be an honest man, speaking well, and elegantly. I finde this definition to be probable; but it appeareth then in very few Orators, because among an hundred of them which we finde in Histories, as well Greeke as Latine, Germaine, French, Italian; or of what Nation else soeuer, hardly there is to be found one honest man. For, the greater number of them, preach according as they haue practised amongst the seditious: Eloquence hath so much power, as it can overthrowe the Estates of Princes, and of whole Common-Weales.

Our ancient predecessours, in their Medalles and Paintings, to represent the power of Eloquence, faigned a Cecricke Hercules, in shape of an olde man, drawing the people after him, chained and fastened vnto him with Chaines, hanging downe from his mouth; and tyed to their eares. Declaring thereby, that the Armes and power of Princes and Monarches, are not so strong as the heat and vehemencie of an eloquent man, which exciteth and inflameth the basest coward to overcome and vanquish the most valiant person.

It droppes downe Weapons out of the most fiercest hand: It turneth cruelty into wonderfull mildenesse; Barbarisme into humanity. It altereth Common-wealths, Cicero his definition of an Orator.

How our Ancients in elder times figured Eloquence.

The great power of Eloquence.

What eloquence is,

The greater part of eloquent Orators scarce honest men,

A view of some Orators & eloquent men.

Cicero & Demosthenes both Orators, were slain for their eloquent tongues.

The King of Marocco, expelled by means of a pleasing speaker.

weales, and playeth with people at his owne pleasure. Nor do I speake this, as in praise of eloquence, but to shew what might it hath; and which many times is imployed rather to euill then goodnesse. For, seeing it is nothing else, but a disguising of trueth, an Arteficiall cunning to make euill appeare good, wrong right; yea, to make a great matter of nothing; of an Ant to raise an Elephant, or (in plaine tearmes) to lye ingenuously. It is not to be doubted, but that for one man, who vseth this Art honestly, an hundred may be found that do abuse it. And as hard is it, among an hundred Orators, to picke out one honest man: for, it is a thing contrary to that profession, to pursue any matters of truth; because trueth (being naked) is euen then in her best and richest Ornament.

Let but a perusall be made, of al them that haue had fame to bee worthy speakers and Orators; and we shall finde; that they haue moued the people to seditions; yea, many haue chaunged Lawes, Customes, Religion, Common-weals, euen to the vtter ruine of them, & they themselves, haue (wel-neere all of them) had violent deaths.

Marke Anthonie, who contended for the Romaine Empire, against Augustus; thought hee could neuer come to it, so long as Cicero the Orator liued: & therefore, he procured his death. And Antipater the successor to Alexander, perswaded himselfe, that so long as Demosthenes the Athenian Orator liued, he should neuer be intire King of all Greece: & therefore, he gaue order for his death. And indeede it was true, for that his eloquent toong did him more hurt, then al the armies of the Athenians could do, or all other among the Gracians. We may well perceiue then, by the ends of these two famous Orators, what power their eloquence had; in hindering two so great Princes, from attaining to domination in their Common-wealths: and yet notwithstanding, they were reputed to bee men of honest conuersation.

But leauing these Greeke and Romaine Orators, let vs come to them of our age, who employed their paines so well; that all the Empire of Affrica, and of the East, may make report thereof, and are yet vp in Armes. Nay, it is found recorded, that by their eloquence, Kings haue been expulsed, and their estates seized on. As it happened to the Kings of Marocco, who were of the house of Ioseph: from whom a Preacher, vnder the Vaile of Mahometane Religion, tooke both Scepter and Crowne.

Now, albeit he was called The Knight of the Asse, yet he could speake so wel and pleasingly, that he assembled an Armie together, of aboute sixe score thousande men. In like manner, he that was called the first Sophie, seized on the kingdom of Persia: and no long time since, hauing expelled the legitimate Children of K. Vsancaffanus, vnder the same pretext of Mahometan religion.

In Germany, a reuolted Priest, named Thomas Muncerus; and Phiferus an Apostate Monke, both conceiuing ill of the Catholicke faith, preuailed so much by their eloquent tongues, that they caused aboute an hundred thousand Countrey Peazants (poore ouer-credulous people) to vndertake Armes against the Clergie, Nobility, and Officers that executed Iustice.

In the same yeare, the Rustickes and Countrey Boores met together in many places, desirous to vndergo some nouell kind of liberty: so that they committed a thousand outrages, and incredible indignities. They quickly massacred Lewes, Counte d'Heluesten, who hadde espoused the Naturall Daughter to the Emperour Maximillian, and burned more then two hundred Monasteries and Castelles, in the sole Countrey of Franconia.

It is also a matter verie manifest, and well knowne vnto euery one, that this tumult had ruined all Germanie; yea, and laide it on a heape, with all the Neighboring Prouinces, if the Lords hadde not speedily entered into Armes, and foyled them in diuers battailes. But in the end, the two Apostataes were taken, and grieuouly punished.

Nestorius the Hereticke, in all his Sermons preached before the Emperours Theodosius and Valentinian; at Constantinople, would speake out alowd, and verie elegantly; Giue mee the Land emptied of Hereticke (for so he termed Catholicks) and I will giue thee Heauen. Ingulph and swallow me vp with the Hereticke, and I will therewith ruinate the power of the Persians. Heereupon, he was called a Boutefeu, for if the Emperour had beleueed him,

The Knight of the Asse.

The first Persian Sophie.

Seditious speakers and Oratours amongst the Germanes.

Lewes, Counte d'Heluesten, son in Law to the Emp. Maximillian.

Nestorius the Hereticke, a Boutefeu or fire brand of sedition.

An apt comparison.

What an Orator may doe, being an honest man.

Plato in his Timæus.

Tyrants doe stand in feare of Orators.

him; he had put to death the more part, and almost all his Subiects, and Nestorius the chiefe.

Like as a Knife is very dangerous, in the hand of a furious or mad man: euen so is eloquence or well adorned speech, in the mouth of a mutinous Oratour. And yet notwithstanding, it is the meanes (in such as can well vse it) to reduce people from barbarousnesse, to humanitie. It is the Instrument for correcting of manners, reformation of Lawes, chastising of Tyrants, banishment of Vices, and maintenance of Vertues. And like as men vse to charme Aspicks, Vipers, and other Serpents, with certaine words: euen so can Oratours charme the most sauage and cruell men, by the meere sweetnesse of eloquence, so saith Plato. He further addeth, that there is no better meanes, to appease seditions, and contain subiects in their Princes obedience: then to haue a wise and vertuous speaker. For by his pleasing words, he can bow and bend sweetly, the hearts of the stubborn and most rebellious. And there is not anything, that is more dreadfull to a Tyrant; then an Oratours Eloquence: for it begetteth the peoples full voyce, especially if he be in neuer so little hatred.

CHAP. XXXVII.

A Contradiction of the common Prouerbe, (approouing it not very likely to be true) when we vse to say: That the Viper neuer seeth his Mother aliue, nor the Wolfe his lining Syre.

Doe not know, from whence Aristotle, Pliny, Alianus, and the common people haue conceiued; that the viper neuer beholdeth his Damme or Breeder aliue. Because they hold it, as a matter most certaine, that when the Female producteth her brood of Vipers: they bite her entrails in sunder, to get their issuing foorth, whereof she dyeth. And that it is done, as by Diuine vengeance, in regard, that she her selfe slew her begetter, at the coniunction: by grasping or byting off his head, thorow the extreame delight she conceiued in her copulation. And thus, as being but badly informed in the Nature of Creatures; they adde lie vpon lye. But in matters that haue had ocularie testimony: there shall be no neede of any other demonstration. Because in these daies; there are Vipers (of both Sexes) kept and nourished in Cages, that haue beneene seene to produce their young ones. Which (to speake truely) are not brought into the World, after the manner of other Serpents, that first of all (after the Seede) are engendred of Egges, then sitten on, and hatched: But young Vipers are enclosed within the membranes, or vpper most skinne, as are all fore-footed creatures on the Earth, and men in the Matrixe of their Mothers, which they open and vnlace, the birth time beeing come, determined by nature. And those leasings of Antiquitie, haue receiued sound root; onely thorow want of better obseruation.

The opinion of Aristotle, Plinie, Alianus, &c. concerning the Viper.

10

20

30

40

50

As concerning that which is spoken of Wolues, that they also neuer see their Syres or Begetters: this is likewise well neere as false, as the precedent report. And they alleadge this reason, to wit; the Wolues coupling together like Dogges and Bitches; are likewise fast tyed by the Members, while the Female is retaining the Males auoyding. Then other Male Wolues, hauing pursued this Female or Bitch-Wolfe, being in extremity of heate, and finding them thus conioyned together: they doe kill that Male Wolfe, whereby shee hath conceiued, and so the young Whelpes which are to proceede of this copulation, doe neuer behold their Syres aliue.

I wonder, and am much amazed also, from whence this second Fable should proceede: for it is much more easie to behold the natural behavior of wolues, then of Vipers. And I am very certaine; that during the last pestilence (which was in the Towne of Vserche, where my dwelling is) walking abroad one day into the Fieldes, to take the Ayre, being accompanied with a Countrey Swaine,

How the Viper is engendred, & cometh into the World.

The Fable of the He and She-Wolues copulation.

The Authour maketh mention hereof; as being an eye-witnesse.

Eight Male Wolues followed one Female.

Another
prooffe concerning the
She-wolfe.

A vile & base nature noted in many Women

Swaine, of good and bold Spirit: as I returned homeward to my House, after Sunne setting, in the month of February, we perceiued eight Wolues, that followed a She-Wolfe in her heate of pride, their eyes glaring as brightly, as if they had beene so many Candles. We hauing no Weapons of defence, climbed vp suddenly into a Tree, for our owne safetie, where we were forced to stay aboute three houres. In which time, we could discern plainely, that that this company of Wolues followed but this one She-Wolfe, as hath beene said, and hee that made himselfe strongest againtt the other, by keeping them off, and often wounding them with his teeth: became at last fastned to the Female, none of the rest then stirring at him, neither killing or byting him. And this verily I think to be their customary vse, as I haue also heard credibly the like reported, by Collyers and Wood-fellers, who dwell ordinarily in Forrests, and hath assured me thereof:

It hath (neuerthelesse) beene also affirmed, that the She-Wolfe, being salt or proud (as we term it) and followed by many Wolues; could not be couered or lined, because they still hindred one another, by their byting and hurting. And hauing thus pursued her ten or twelue daies together, they being all wearied with trauaile, hauing eaten nothing, and gone such an extreame compassse of ground: haue couched themselves downe by her, and false fast asleepe, which when shee her selfe hath espyed, she hath risen secretly and softly, gone and awaked the most Truant, scurvy, itchy, and mishapen Currier in all the troupe, to make him possesse her. And then the other Wolues (awaking with their noyse) finding them coupled, haue taken and torne him with their teeth. And thus you may see, from whence came the Prouerbe, vsed by old, in-discreete and lasciuious Women, that make the like measure of their owne brutall Nature; affecting (more commonly) an euill fauoured and lothsome man, then one of comely feature, sweete, gentle, and honest disposition.

Also, it is commonly seene, that in a Country, where there is but one Male, and another Female Wolfe, who coupling together, and no other Wolues there to impeach them; the Sire of the young ones, cannot be slaine, and therefore such Whelpes as come of him, by that coniunction, must needs see their Syre. We may then gather by this discourse, how farre these Prouerbes are from truth, and that this case deserued some consideration; to take away the error of such people, as assuredly credited these idle vanities.

The Sires of Wolues, and the Whelpes engendred by them, are of contrary Natures, for the young ones, when they are but a yeare old, and addict themselves to prey and purchase: although they haue not seen their Sire and Damme in two or three moneths, yet when they meet, they will do them reuerence, and vse a thousand flatteries to them.

Contrariwise, the Sire-Wolfe, giueth no helpe (at most, very little) in nourishing them. For, when the yong ones sucke no more, but grow to some bignesse: then the Dam bringeth them food; which he taketh and feedeth on, not suffering the Whelps, to eat a jot, vntill he haue filled his owne belly. But if she returne home, and bring no food with her; then doth the Male beate her outrageously. But then the Female hath this subtiltie, not to bring home any food, so long as he keepeth in the Kennell: but hydeth it secretly, till he be wandred abroad for purchase; whereby we may discern their different Natures. All these thinges are written by the Lord of Clauourgan, and Olaus Maagnus, Arch-bishop of Westphalia, which doe nothing approoue the common saying; That the Wolfe neuer seeth his Sire.

Seeing we haue formerly spoken of Vipers, I now call to minde some Serpents, which are oftentimes found, to breede in the blaines and botches of old Wolues, neere the backe-bone, containing the length of a foote, and some as long as a mans Finger, and others lesse. These leane Serpents, by successe of time, doe cause the Wolues death, and continuing in their rotten putrifaction, conuert themselves to Vipers, and Serpents very venomous. It may then well be said, in such a case as this, that these kinde of Vipers doe neuer see (such as engende-

Another
prooffe concerning wolues.

Of Wolues & their young ones, & how vnnatural the Sire is to his owne whelps.

Different ver-tues in the Male and Female.

Serpents and Vipers, which are often found in the raines of Wolues.

engendered them) aliue. But this concerneth not any of the other kinde, which are so much sought for by the Compounders of Treacle: whereunto so many vertues are attributed, against all poysons, infections of the Ayre, and many diseases, appertaining to the field Vipers.

There are diuers diffetences of Wolues, for some are called White-10 Wolues, who being at their prey, and feeding on it: if they perceiue any thing which is more proper for them; they leaue the first purchase, and quite forgetting it, follow after the other. There is another kinde (although it should not be differing from the other) which is called the Man-kinde Wolfe, and liueth only by humane Flesh. The reason whereof is, that when they haue
 20 once tasted of mans Flesh, by following Armies, and seeking such places where battails are fought; or when they haue eaten dead carcases faln from Gibbets. From that time forward, though they should perish and starue with hunger; yet will they not feede on any thing else, especially if they be old. Heereupon they ranne at Children, and Sheep-
 30 hearsds keeping their flockes; yea, they wil enter Townes and Villages, and carry Children out of their Cradles, or any they can meete within the streetes, hazarding Mens and Weomens liues, except they do the better defend themselves. And let them passe by whole Heardes of Cattle, Sheepe, or other: yet will they not touch one of them, but Mans Flesh onelie, and chiefelie, where they haue been well resisted and beaten.

Some hold opinion, that a full-fed or glutted Wolfe, neuer doth any harme, or if any food remaine to him, which he hath hidden in the ground, and doe not feele himselfe hungry. They say beside, that many times he will play with his prey, as a Lambe, Sheep, Kid, Goat, Hare, or such like, euen as a Cat playeth with a Rat, before she eats it.
 50 But seeing we are entred into the play or sport of Wolues, I will describe an History, which was reported (my selfe being present) by Monsieur de Humtere, vpon Saint Andrewes day, 1563. before Monsieur, Brother to King Charles, who afterward was Henry the third, King of France. In Piccardie, in the Forrests of Ardenne, certain Gentlemen and Countrey Yeomen (belonging to diuers Parishes) assembled themselues together, to vndertake a hunting of Wolues, which had done them many harms and mischances. And as they had giuen chase to about a dozen of them: some were taken in Snares and Nets, others kild with Caliuers, and (among the rest) they slew a She-Wolfe, that was followed by a young Infant starke naked, aged about seauen yeares, of strange complexion; with faire curled Hayre, that (seeing the Wolfe dead) ran fiercely at them which had slaine it. But he was beset with so many men, that they tooke him, and found the Nails (both on his hands and feete) bowed inward: and nothing he spake, but gaue forth an inarticulate voyce, like to a Calfe. They brought him thence to a Gentlemans House (a Man of good account, and well knowne) in a great Village not far off, where (not without much difficulty) they put Iron Manacles on his hands and feete. In the end, by hauing long fasted, he became more mild and tame, and, within the space of seuen months, they had taught him to speake. Then they walked abroad with him, to Cities, Townes, Villages, Noble-mens Houses, and Castles, & they that were his Guardians, got great store of Mony by him.

Now, to hold the Reader in no longer delay, concerning how this Infant should come into the company of Wolues; you must vnderstand, that about the Feast of All-Saints (commonly called All-hallontide) the weather then beeing very cold; young Boyes, Girles, and poore Weomen of a Village (the name whereof I doe not well remember) went into the neereff Forrest Royall, to cut downe and gather stickes of Trees. It was at the euening time, the sky cold, dimme, and cloudy, which caused them to make hast, binding vp their burdens like little Fagots, and so intended to beare them thence: but the Guardes and Forresters coming vpon them, and they being fearefull, both of imprisonment and other hard vsage, fled, some one way, some another, leauing their Hatchets and burdens behind them. Among the rest, one

A strange History of a young Infant taken by a Wolfe.

The manner of finding the Childe in the Forrest.

How the child came into the Forrest among the Wolues.

White wolues engendred between a Hind and a Wolfe.

The man-kind Wolfe, feeding on mans Flesh.

The bloody nature of the Man-kind Wolfe.

The Wolfe being glutted or full-fed, will doe no harme.

A poore Woman that cam to gather sticks, mother to the Childe.

Sorrow perswadeth it selfe on any likely occasion.

The poore womans enquiry after hir child

one of the poore women, had brought her Childe in her Armes thither, being not aboue nine months old, not having any body in her House, to tend it when she was absent: for her Husband was a daily labouring man, that came not home to his house, but on Sundaies or Feast daies. Having set downe her Childe, and being frighted, as before is said; she made escape into the Forrest, as thinking their pursuite seuerely followed her. But perceiuing that safety friended her, and the watches of her eies descried no perill (for indeede, the Forresters were gone, and darke night drew swiftly on) she came againe to the place where she left her burden, which the Guards had caried away with them. Finding neither her Child nor Wood, yet seeking still about with teares and complaints; at length, throwing off both greefe and feare, her hopes gathered this perswasion: that the Forresters had seized her Child for her other offence, and now it stood her on, notwithstanding, whatsoever amends or satisfaction they should demaund, to them she must goe, and re-obtaine her Childe.

Vpon this perswasion, she returned home to her dwelling, and enquired of all those that went to the Forrest with her, if they could tell her any tydings of her Infant. Having no comfort of them, she ran to the Village, where the Forresters made their vsual retreat, and found them in a Tauerne drinking Wine, the bundles of wood, Hatchets and other furniture (which they had brought with them from the Forrest) lying by them, and in teares she required her Childe of them. But they, reproving and threatning her for her offence, by sollemne oathes and protestations; assured her, that they saw no such Childe. On the morrow morning, poore Soule, she went to the Forrest againe, and made another search, but all inuaine. And her Husband being returned from his labour, by reason of the Feastiuall daie, hearing the wofull losse of his Childe, and what informations the Harpyes of Iustice made against them (because it was alleaged, that thorow their default, the Babe was exposed to sauage beastes) after a long and bootlesse perquisition in the Forrests; the Father and Mother of the Childe, dreading least Law would punish them for the Childe, because they could yeild no better reckoning of it, forsooke the Countrey, and neuer any tydings was heard afterward of their being.

Now, it may well bee presupposed, that the fore-remembered She-Wolfe, searching some prey to beare vnto her Whelps; found the Childe so forsaken of the Mother, as before hath bene saide, and carried it away with her. And (indeede) it is very likely, for a Wolfe will carry a Sheepe in her mouth, or a young Beast (how big or weighty soeuer it be) without any offence, halfe a mile and more, yet neuer resting her selfe, euen as a Grey-hound dooth a Hare. It is well knowne, that if she find a Horffe or a Cow dead, in any hollow or Dith: she will easily drage it forth to feed on, which a Horse (well harnessed thereto) can hardly doe. And hauing brought this Infant to her young ones (as the She-Wolfe doth al young Beastes that shee can seize on, to teach them how to looke their living:) the Whelpes, perchance beeing suffised, would play with the Child before they fed on it. The Damme being laid among her Whelps, the Childe finding the teates of the Wolfe, tooke one of them in his mouth, and suckt it, as weening it had bene the Dugge of his true Mother, which caused the Wolfe, (thence forward) to loue it as her own. For She-Wolues doe take delight and pleasing, when their teates are tickled, suckt, or plaid withall, and all Female beastes haue the like naturall inclination. For, if the teat or dugge be giuen to a Creature, although it be of a different and very contrary kind, yet it will loue the Giuer: As we haue noted in Bitches, that haue nourished Cats; Goats that haue fostred young VVhelpes; Kine, Serpents, and Lambs, Hennes, that haue loued them all their life time.

And so it may be, that thus it fell out with this She-wolfe, her VVhelpes, and this younge Infant. And beside, albeit the whelps grew to foure or fise yeares age: yet, in regard of the long continuance, and finding the Infant neuer to wander, but still their owne Dam was in his company; they would bee the more

The Father & Mother of the Child, banish themselves.

The Authors imagination in this case.

The ability of a Wolues carriage.

A supposition concerning the nourishing of the Childe by the wolfe.

The iudgement and knowledge of Wolues when they affect.

more familiar, gambould, frisk, and leap vpon him, after the maner of playing Puppies, and all other Wolues of that Countrey would neuer hurt him. I think also, that the matter which best preferred the Childe, was: that not only the She-wolfe, but her young ones likewise, tooke great delight in the Childes Excrements; for he should no sooner performe the office of Nature, but both she and her VVhelpes would runne in hast to him, to deuour his deiections; yea, they would eate the verie Earth whereon his Vrine ranne along, and so, while she kept society with him, shee made this the best and contentedst part of her prey.

This Childe liued on raw flesh, about the space of sixe yeares, by that which himselfe declared afterward, as hauing good memory of all things happening vnto him. And hauing attained to the age of foure yeares, guided on still by Nature; hee kept no other course; so that they had much labour, to bring him to feed on other prepared meates, but rather affected still his former nourishment. He told them moreover, that euery yeare the VVolfe had a Litter of VVhelpes, and he had the charge of keeping them, when she went abroad in quest of her prey. Also, that she would snarle, snappe, and bite the Male wolfe, when he came to look on them: by which meanes, both he, or any other Males, in that time resorted very sildome thither.

After his taking, as before you haue heard; his naked body being brought to the wearing of Garments, himselfe instructed how to speake, and made domestically, hauing changed his brutish, to a more ciuill kind of life, appearing like to other Children in behauiour: by an especiall marke or note, to wit, sixe Fingers on either hand; he was knowne to be the Sonne of the fore-mentioned poore woman, and the age which hee then was of, agreed with the iust time of his losse. Hee was made a Heardsman of Sheepe, and other Beastes, for the space of other seauen yeares, in al which time, VVolues neuer made any attempt on the troupes committed to his charge: albeit he kept great store of Cattle, as Oxen, Kine, Calues, Horses, Mares, and Poultry. This was very well obserued, by the Inhabitants of the Village where he had dwelling; and therefore, that other Heafdes might participate in this benefit or priuiledge: the Husbandmen of other Villages, & their Shepheards, would drine and bring their flocks where he kept his; and desire him but to stroke his hands vpon them, which he would doe, with some of his Phlegme or spittle on them. After which done (let others coniecture as best shal please them) for the space of fiteene dayes; Dogges of the greatest fury, nor any VVolues, would by any urgency touch them. By this meanes he got a great deale of Mony; for hee would haue a Double-Turnois, for euery beast that he so laid his hand on; or stroaked their eares.

But as all thinges haue a certaine period, so this Childe, hauing attained to the age of about foureteen yeares: the vertue which he had, to hinder wolues from doing harme to his Heafdes of Beasts, or those that he stroaked on the backe, or handled their eares; was lost; and left him. I guesse that this happened, because he had changed his natural complexion and temperature at that age; and by hauing fed so long a time on other nourishment, then his former woluish dyet. And this was well obserued by himselfe, by reason, that wolues would not come so neere him, as they were wont to doe; but kept aloofe off, as being feareful of him. The former propertie sayling him; hee gained no more then the meanest Shepheard did, whereat he tooke such dislike: that hee forsooke his Pastorall life, and went abroad in the fields, to seeke his fortune. At length, he heard where warres were in hand, and there he became a Boy to attend on a Souldiour: afterward, hee prooued himselfe to bee a Souldiour; braue, bold, and verie valiant; but fell in the end to be a Theefe, excelling all other in craft and subtilty. Hee was slaine in the yeare 1572. by the followers to the Duke of Alba, being among the companies of Gehlis; which he conducted in Flanders; against the King of Spaine, who made war on the States of the Low-Countries: where he behaied himselfe manfully, and sold his life at a deare rate.

Hauing ended the Historie of this Child,

The child was fed with raw flesh sixe yeares.

What hapned to the Childe after his taking, and how he came to be knowne.

An admirable property, naturally intufed into the Child.

turnois of two pence
in that Countrey.

* The value of two pence in that Countrey.

The alteration of the Childs natural vertue.

The alteration of the Childs natural vertue.

He became a Souldiours Boy, and then a Souldiour himselfe.

In what manner he was slaine in the Low Countries.

One mans good fortune is no warrant to others in the success.

The honor & benefit of hunting the wolf, in regard of his harmes & annoyances.

All aduantages against a Wolfe, are tollerable.

A Wolfes skin may be good vse made of.

Childe, so borne away, and nourished by the Wolfe; I am of the mind, that notwithstanding all the kindnesse he receiued from her, as being a matter rare and extraordinary: yet, in regard of the detriments and annoyances, which they bring to all sortes of Men, and in all Countries, except in the Kingdomes of England and Scotland; that both Princes and Noble-men, as well as Countrey Yeomen and meaner persons, should striue to exterminate the race of such pernicious Creatures, which by their breath and sight, not onely doe make men hoarse and wheeze, if they meete them, but also doe bereaue them of all power to speake or cry out. Great men then ought to be the first beginners, to haue the larger interest in honour: and so much the rather, because it is the fairest and most beneficiall kind of hunting, beyond all other. For Princes, great Lordes, and others, exercising themselves in this pastime: shall be the more hardy, valiant, and apt to Armes. In like manner, by this kind of hunting, they shall deliuer the Countrey from wicked and pernicious Beasts, that (among a thousand other discommodities) doe rob Kings and Princes of their young Fawnes, Hindes, and Fallow-Deere; yea, Husbandmen loose al their young breeds about their Houses, and in their Fieldes, which were determined and hoped for future profit, and enlargement of store. And, a matter much more to be pittied, many times they set vpon young Children, Women great with Childe, and sometimes on people of more strength and ability.

Good strong Dogges, are fittest against them, or the Irish Grey-hound, or Grinnes, Snares, or pits, all aduantages are faire and commendable, the Beast is so much despighted. Hee is worth nothing, but vnprofitable to all Men. He is neuer tamed, but he will then doe (daily) a thousand mischiefes: for such is his Nature, so long as he enioyeth life. But being dead, there may then some commodity be deriued from him. For his skinne, being prepared by a Leather-dresser, is very good for Cloakes, the Furre (in cold weather) worne inwardlie, giueth great warmth to the body: and the hairy-side worne outwardly when it raineth, will neuer be pierced thorow with any moysture, how long soeuer it lasteth. A couerlet made of Wolues skines, and laid on any Bed whatsoeuer; it shall continually be free from Fleas, Bed-Punies, or any other Vermine. The most inconuenience is, that Dogs will euer be pissing against it.

The Fat or Grease of a Wolfe, is singularly good against all Aches of Gouts, Palsies, Luxations, Fractures, or verolicke anguishes. His Liuer, which is made like the Naile in a Horse hoofe, being dried in an Ouen, and beaten into powder, and then drunke with Succory Water: recouereth the Liuer of a man, how altered or corrupted soeuer it be. Galen saith, that a Phisition of his time, cured as many people subiect to the Collick, as could be brought vnto him, without refusing any one: onely by causing them to drinke the Dung of a Wolfe. And such as would not, or could not take it; did wear it hanging vpon their bellie, and there it expressed the same operation. There are also certaine little bones found in his Excrements, which being washed, and held vpon the tooth that is pained, and it appeaseth the anguish immediatlie. The head of an old Wolfe, fastned on the doore of a mans house, impeacheth all Charmes or Sorceries from entring therein. Also, the great teeth of a wolfe, are good for all diseases in the throat, mouth, or teeth, if they bee but held therein a while.

It is a matter very certaine, and hath bene experimented, that if a Woman be in trauaile of Childe-bearing, how difficult or doubtfull soeuer it bee: let but a little Flesh of a Wolfe bee giuen her to eat, and she shall suddenslie bee deliuered, both of the Fruite and after burden; or if a Man that hath eaten any, stand hood-winckt by, it auaileth. A Wolfes right foote before, is yerie Soueraigne Phisicke for all paines in womens breasts, and for the swellings of the Swine-poxe.

The Wolfe is of so wicked and peruerse Nature, that if he come among a Heard, be it of Swine, Pigges, Sheepe, or Lambes: the whole troupe is sure to dye, if he haue the opportunitie. And if it happen, that a Horse doe set his foote where a wolfe hath trod: he will after-

The Grease or Fat of a Wolfe.

The Wolfes Liuer.

Wolues dung

An old woues head.

A Wolues great teeth.

The flesh of a Wolfe.

A wolfes right foote before.

Vile discommodities ensuing by the Wolfe.

afterward become heavy, dull, & slothfull. Moreouer, if a man make any Gowne or other Garment, of a Beasts Wooll that hath been kild by a Wolfe, or if the Wooll of the Beast slaine by the Wolfe, be but mingled among any other Wooll, whereof the Gowne or Garment is made: it wil continually be lousie, or infected with Vermine.

Thus you see, what I haue learned and collected, concerning the severall Natures of the Viper and the Wolfe, as well by good experience which I my selfe haue made, as read in sound and approued Authors. As for the History of the Infant so carried away, and nourished by the Female Wolfe, beside the Princes presence, before whom it was reported verie faithfully: I haue enquired (since then) of many more, beside mine own vnderstanding it by the Lord of Humiere; As of M. John Kussell, Abbat of Vigoeas in Lymosine, a Piccard by Nation, and borne in the same place. De la Vaquerie, who assured me, that the History was very true, and that he himselfe saw the Childe, after it was taken from the Wolfe, and educated, as you haue heard. As much did the Lord of Valen tell me, a Gentleman of great honour, and who is yet living. For when this strange case happened, he had some employment and comandat Rocroy, a frontire Towne of Piccardie, neere to the Forrests of Ardenne. He was then present at the killing of the wolues, and taking of the naked Childe. At this instant, he dwelleth in Lymosine, as overseer for the Lands and Seigneuries of Monsieur de la Guiche, sometime Great Maister of the Artillery of France; and at this present, he is Lieutenant to the King, and Gouvernor of the Countries of Lyornois, Forests, and Beauilois, &c. And since this accident was within compasse of mine owne knowledge; I do not hold that rare or strange, recorded by Titus Linius, beside other Roman Historians: that the first Founders of Rome, young and newly borne, to wit; Remus and Romulus, being exposed to disastrous fortune, were preserued and nourished by a She-Wolfe.

The Conclusion of this Chapter.

Eye witnesses approving the truth of the History of the Infant & the Wolfe.

Titus Linius concerning Remus and Romulus.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

Whether Lucius Apuleius, Sir-named Platonicus, were transformed into an Asse, or no: And whether he were a Sorcerer or Magitian.

10

20

30

40

50

Here needeth no further question or doubt, whether Lucius Apuleius Platonicus, were a Sorcerer, and likewise transformed into an Asse: because he was dealt with all in Iustice, before the Pro-consull of Affrica, in the time of the Emperour Antoninus the first, sir-named the Pittifull, and in the yeare of Iesus Christ, 150. As Apollonius Thyaneus (long time before him) vnder Dioclesian, An. 60. was impleaded for the same fact. And more then three hundred yeares after, this fame still continued, euen to the time of S. Augustine, who was an Affricane; he also wrote and confirmed the same: auouching likewise, that in his time, the Father of one Prestantius was transformed into a Horse, and this is also affirmed by Saint Augustine.

This Lucius (the Theame of our instant discourse) was learned, for, in his younger yeares, he studied at Carthage, where the Romaines had founded diuers good Schooles. Afterward, hauing passed his youth-hood, his Father sent him to Athens: where he learned the doctrine of Plato; and profited so well, that hee was sir-named a Platonist. Then his desires drew him to study Magick, and for his better proceeding therein, he transported himselfe into Theffalie; because, in that Countrey, there were Men and Women, that made profession of such enstruction; but yet very secretly, in regard, that (by the Romain lawes) all such were punished, as addicted themselues thereto. In brieft, hauing taried there so long time (as valued his succeeding transformation, to learne those deuillish sciences) he returned home to his Fathers

Ooo House:

Lucius Apuleius tried by Iustice before the Proconsull.

The testimony of Saint Augustine.

Lucius Apuleius a Student at Carthage and Athens.

His passage into Theffalie, where he learned Magick.

His going to Rome.

House: who thought he had lost him, and therefore sent him to Rome, for found apprehension of the Latine tongue, to the end he might be provided of some estate in his Countrey, by the Romaines. He was of so excellent a spirit; that (with smal paines, & in short time) he became so ingenious a Latinist: as he was reputed for one of the chiefest Aduocates, and most eloquent in pleading before the Senate; as is yet to be seene by his famous Orations, remaining extant in our eyes.

His returne home, into his own country, from Rome.

From Rome he returned to Malaura, a Cittie of Numidia, his owne Countrey, and a Colonie of the Romaines: his Father being yet liuing, named Theseus, who had exercised (in that Countrey) the estate of an Ædilis, with some other Offices for many yeares, and was verie wealthy. His Mothers name was Salvia, being of the linage to Plutarch, and the learned Philosopher Sextus his nephew, vnto whom, Marcus Aurelius the Emperor, had sometime bin Scholler and Auditor. Being there arriued, all the Orators of Malaura, and the neighbouring Citties, made a prize, which should be giuen to him, that could declame most elegantly. Easily did he win the honour from them all, in regard whereof: beside the prize, two Statues were erected to him, one at * Oea, and the other at Carthage.

The great eloquence of Lucius Apuleius

* One of the three Citties of the Countrey Tripolis in Affrica.

Imputations concerning Lucius in his marriage and otherwise.

His Father beeing dead, in a small while he wasted the greater part of his goods, about his Magicall Artes, and to preuent pouertie; he compassed to marry with Pudentilla, a verie rich widow (for long time) in Oea. With her he continued till she died, and soon after, her onely Son and Heire, whom she had by her other Husband, Matters passing on in this manner, made some to coniecture, that by magick art he had seduced Pudentilla; whom many worthy men laboured to possesse in marriage, onely in hope of her Sons great riches. It was reported also, that he had a Dæmon or familiar Deuill, because by such great and profound knowledge, he ordinarily resolued strange and difficult questions, exceeding the common capacity of other men. Moreouer, he had beene noted to doe many admirable things; as to go inuisible; other whiles to transforme himselfe into the shape of a Horse, or of a Bird; to pierce himselfe through the body with a Sword, yet without wounding, and diuers such like thinges. Which caused the Ethnickes of those times, to esteeme slenderly of the miracles, which the Disciples of the Primitiue Church performed, being of the second time; yea, or those of Iesus Christ: but they admired them of Apuleius, of Thyaneus, and others of the same stampe. In the end, he was accused by one Sicilius Æmilianus, the Censor, before Claudius Maximus, Pro-consull of Affrica, who was said to be a Christian; but no condemnation was found or approued against him.

Wonders performed by Apuleius.

Lucius accused before the Proconsull, and quitted.

Now, notwithstanding his learned defensue Orations, the same continued of him (to be a Sorcerer vndoubtedlie) yea, euen to the time of Saint Augustine, who liued about three hundred yeares after. And that which brought him in more suspicion among the Christians to be such a one: was, that hee vsed the sacrificing, and the same manner of Priest-hood among the Paganes, in his Countrey of Affrica, whereof Saint Augustine giueth assurance. For the Priests of the Paganes at that time, were (well-neere) all Sorcerers: onely to make the people (by their false Miracles) to beleue, that their Religion was true, and not dissembled. To approue the truth hereof, in the time of the said Apuleius, there was a certaine Image of Iupiter made, called Phyleus, that is to say; Amiable, composed by Art Magicke in such manner: that it wrought wonders, and gaue many answers, and among others, this. Hence-forward, let not the Christians be suffered to dwell in Citties, nor any where neere about them: but let them be driuen the furthest off that may be.

Aug. de Ciuit. Dei. lib. 7. cap. 18.

A strange I-doll made of Iupiter.

Ruffinus in lib. 10. Cap. 33.

He wrote a Booke, which he entituled, The God of Socrates; wherein hee sheweth, that there was not any God, but a Dæmon, and of what kind, and after the maner of Socrates, he made himselfe familiar, by whom he was still aduertised, concerning things to come, or absent. And because his Booke should bring no scandall to the Reader; he rather chose to entitle it the God, then the Dæmon, or Deuill of Socrates: by which Booke, he gaue sufficient testimony,

His Booke of the Dæmon of Socrates.

mony, that he was skilfull in Magicke:

For his transformation into an Asse, Saint Augustine holdeth it very certainly, hauing read it in diuers good Authors, and well deseruing beleefe, beside his owne being of the same Country. And this transformation happened vnto him in Theffalie (before hee had knowledge in Magicke) by a Sorcerer, that so sold him: and yet recouered him again, after he had done the drudgery of an Asse for some years, hauing the same strength, and behauiour in eating and braying, as other Asses had; yet his reasonable Soule (neuerthelesse) remained sound and intire, as himselfe auoucheth. Now, because, this fact might bee couered, by reason of the rumour then bruided abroad to be so, and very likely: he composed a Booke, which he called The Golden Asse, intermedled with Fables and discourses, to demonstrate the vices of men in those times, which hee had heard spoken, or scene done, during his transformation; beside many paines and trauailes, which hee suffered in his transformation.

That it might be so, the said S. Augustine, in his Booke of the City of God, declareth, that (in his time) there were certaine women witches, or Sorcerers on the Alpes, which would giue a kinde of Cheese to Passengers, whereby they were suddenly transformed into Asses, or some other Beasts of burden. And they would make them carry their luggage, to such places as themselfes pleased; which being performed, they restored them to their former condition againe.

The Byshop of Tyre, the Historian, writeth, that in his time, which seemeth to be, about 1220. there were certaine English-men, whom their King had sent to assist the Christians, then warring in the Holy Land: who being arriued in the Hauen of Cyprus, a woman Sorcerer transformed a young English Souldior into an Asse. And he, being willing to returne to his companions in the Ship, was beaten back with Stones and Staues. Being thus returned to the Witch, he continued in this estate, vntill at length it was perceiued, that the Asse entred into a Church, and there fell on his knees, expressing such signes and actions, as could not but proceed from a reasonable creature. Vpon this speaking suspition, the witch (whom he serued) being apprehended by the authority of Iustice: restored him to his humaine shape againe, three yeares after his transformation; and shee in the open field was executed to death.

We read, that Ammonius, the Peripateticke Philosopher, at such times as he ordinarily read and taught in the Schoole, had an Asse still present by: which was in the time of Lucius Septimus Seuerus, Emperour, and in the yeare of our Lord Iesus Christ, 196. Some said, that he had been first the Schoolemaister of Origen, and a Christian: but did not perseuere, fearing martirdome, as Porphyrus saith. I am of the mind also, that this Asse had formerly beene a Man, and could well comprehend what Ammonius did teach: for in such persons as are transformed, their reason still remaineth with them, as Saint Augustine maintaineth, and many other Authors.

Fulgosus writeth, that in the time of Pope Leo, who liued in the yeare 930. that there were two Witches in Germany, Hostesses of Innes, who made a practise or custome, of changing their Guests into Beasts. Vpon a time, they Metamorphosed a young Lad (who was a Mountebanke or Iugler) into an Asse, causing him to shew a thousand trickes and gambaulds before al Passengers, yet retaining still his naturall reason. One of their neighbours bought this Asse at a deare price, but they forewarned the Buyer, that they could not make any warrant of the Beast: onelic they feared, that if the Asse went into any Riuer or Water, they would be in danger of loosing him. On a day, the Asse escaping from his guide, ranne into the neereft Lake, and plunging himselfe well in the Water; he recouered againe his former shape. And Apuleius telleth vs, that he regained his shape of Man, by hauing fed on Roses.

It is yet (at this day) to bee scene in Egypt, that some will bring Asses into a publike place, where they will make them shew diuers feates of agility, and Apish-like trickes: Vnderstanding all that is commaunded them, and executing the same. As, to reueale the fairest

Aug de ciuit. Dei. Lib. 7. Cap. 18.

His transformation into an Asse.

His Booke of the golden Asse.

Aug. De ciuit. Dei Lib. 18. Cap. 17. 18.

An Englishman transformed into an Asse, in the Isle of Cyprus.

An Asse that came to Lectures, read in the school.

Eaptist. Fulgosus in lib. 3. cap. 2.

A young Iugler turned into an Asse.

Asses in Egypt that appeare to haue vnderstanding.

Sorcerers are euer wicked wretches.

fairest Woman in the company, which they doe, and many other thinges (hard to be credited) which they perform, according as Belonius declareth, in such obseruations as he hath noted, and diuers other beside, who haue bin there, and auouched euery thing to me. Thus then you see my conclusion, which is (concerning the Metamorphosis of Lucius Apuleius) that he was changed into an Asse, and exercised Magicall Artes: albeit he was one of the learnedst Men of his time, and neuer was provided of any honourable estate, as (willingly) no Sorcerers will be. For they are but abiekt Wretches, and keepe themselues concealed among the people, according as Saint Augustine saith.

CHAP. XXXIX.

Of a Taylor, named Iohn Leyden, a Hollander, who by his smooth tongue, was elected King of Munster, in the Countrey of Germany.

He reason that moued me to remember Iohn Leyden, who made himselfe a King, though hee was no more then a miserable poore Tailor: was, in regard of a former Chapter, where I discoursed of such, as abused the eloquence which Nature bestowed on them, and (many times) came to violent deaths, according as this man did, of whom I will describe the true History, recorded by Sleydan, Surius, and others, that were in Germany at the very same time.

Authors being eye-witnesses,

We must first vnderstand, that in Westphalia (a Countrey of Germanie, subiekt partly to the Arch-bishop of Cologne, and partly to the Dukes of Saxonie) there is a faire, great, and opulent Citie, named Munster, seated vpon a goodlie Riuer. In which Citie, in the yeare 1534. were abyding so many Anabaptists; as durst boldly enterprise to make themselues Maisters of the Citie: expulsiug the Arch-bishop, and all other of the Inhabitants, that would not take part with them, not suffering them to cary any thing away with them. They deposed the Magistrates, creating others according to their owne pleasures, which beeing thus done, people of many neighbouring partes resorted thither, being infected with the same error: and (among others) a Taylor, that was an Hollander, expert and eloquent, who would needs mingle preaching among these mutinies. So well he preuailed by his smooth speaking, that he perswaded them: That GOD had appointed him to be King of Israell; and of Iustice, as Dauid was; and that he should extend Gods Dominion and Rightes ouer the whole Earth. But in the accomplishing hereof, he must put all them to death, that would refuse to embrace the Faith, and be subiekt to righteousnesse.

The bold and impudent Anabaptists of Munster.

This Taylor beeing established a King, omitted no occasion whatsoever, to make himselfe starke drunke in all voluptuousnesse, which possibly hee could dreame of. According to the manner of the Mahometists, hee married many Wiues; hee instituted his Court and Officers, euery one hauing charge and Office in his House, and all cloathed in Gownes tissued with Gold and Siluer, euen as himselfe was, and all came of those goods which he had robd from the Churches.

He wore vpon his Head a Diadem of three Crownes, made of the best Gold that could be gotten, and then hee had a Chaine of Gold, enriched with precious Stones, and a Pommander of Gold hanging at it, whercon was engrauen a little Crosse, with this Inscription; The King of Iustice vpon the Earth. In brieft, his Sword was of inestimable price, and nothing wanting to adorne him most richlie: but it would require too long a time, to set down all the rablement of this Royalty so much admired, and then to be noted in that distracted Citty.

For the maintenance of his estate, when he had made attribution to himselfe of all their goods and moouables that were vnder his obedience, as well Ecclesiasticall as Lay-men: hee sent forth strong bands of Souldiours (for he had both Horse and Foote, at the least

A poore Taylor would needes make himselfe a King.

The creation of his Court and Officers, in their pomp and magnificence.

The King of Iustice on earth.

The defence and maintenance of his authority.

least five or six thousand) which were partly of Munster, partly of Holland, Saxonic, and other neere neighbouring places, all of the Anabaptists Religion, who ouer-ranne and spoyled the plaine Countrey, making all such their Prisoners, as they could entrap or seaze on, of what Age or Sexe soeuer they were. And this Taylor King, tooke the third part of the Monies, which ensued by their ransomes and other thefts: the rest was distributed among the Souldiours, who left neyther Horses, Mules, Mares, Coltes, or any other kinde of labouring Beast whatsoever, (beside Sheepe, Kine, or other Cattle) within tenne miles compasse round about. They left not a handfull of Graine in any Towne or Village: providing themselves of all kind of Weapons, fortifying the Bulwarkes, Casemates, Spurs, Trenches, and Ditches, not omitting any artefice or defence of the Cittie.

To the end also, that their Heresie might spread it selfe in length and largenesse, the King commanded; that some should be sent vnto the neighbouring Townes, and this commaund was as speedily effected. Wheretupon, one of his Prophets made a conuocation (by sound of Trumpet) of all the people, in the great Shippe of the great Church, so that there came about four thousand Men, and found there their Supper ready prepared, with no meane abundance of all kind of meats, and being all set, they were serued by the King and Queene. At the ending of Supper, the King presented to euery one, a piece of Bread, speaking these words: Take, eate, and declare the death of the Lord. The Queene likewise presented them the Cup, saying; Drink, and declare the death of the Lord. When this company had supped, there were about a thousand more, who had stood as Guards all this while; and they sate downe to Supper, even as the other had done. The whole Supper being finished, the fore-named Royall Taylor and Prophet, sitting on an high seate, demanded; if they would bee all obedient to the word of God? whereto they answered, yea. Then he added, that it was the wil of the Father, that certaine men should be sent from the cittie, to sowe the Doctrin abroad which they had embraced.

In a Roule brought before the King, the names of eight and twentie Men were rehearsed, of which number, eight were sent to Suaburg, and as many to Coffeld: eight more were commaunded to goe to Susac; and the other eight to Vuaremdorp. All these beeing good Townes of that Countrey, and had entertained Garrisons, to defend themselves from the surprises and inuasions of the Munsterians and Anabaptists. This being done, the King & the Queen with all their Seruants and delegate Apostles, went and supped againe at their owne liking. And as the King sate at the Table, hee rose, and gaue a lofty leape, saying: That the Father had commaunded him some thing to be done. And forthwith, hee imposed vpon a Souldiour, that he was a Traytour, and instantlie did cut off his head. Then returning to the Table againe, he did nothing but maintaine talke, of the bloody and horrible deede done by himselfe, which made the supper much more execrable.

Afterward, hee dispatched away his worthy Apostles, and the King gaue a crown to euery one of them (beside the Mony they had of their owne) to buy all necessary thinges: because they should leaue those places (where their doctrin would not be received) in testimony of their perdition. These things were full of admiration and folly, hardly to bee credited by posterity: but there is not any matter whatsoever, which such men wil not voluntarily execute, that are deprived of the light of truth, and their owne best senses, beeing made drunke with the dregs of the Deuill.

On went those fond headed fellowes, according as he had commanded them, and cryed out horribly at their assigned places: admonishing the people to bee repentant, or else they should perish very soone. They would presume so farre as the iudgement Bars, and there spread a Gowne on the ground before the Magistrate, casting also downe the fore-mentioned Crown: giuing assurance, that they were sent thither by the Father, to proclaim peace. Which if they receiued, they must then make all their goods in common: but if they refused so to do, they testified by that Crowne,

Their thefts and spoyles.

The fortification of Munster, and their courses.

Five thousand men bidden to supper in a Church.

A very strange kind of communion.

The sending abroad of his counterfeit Apostles.

The King at his supper performeth the act of a Hang-man.

The Kings liberality to his Apostles.

The behavior and doctrine of these idle-headed Apostles.

Horrible and blasphemous pretences.

The apprehension of the Apostles.

The false Apostles put to death.

The City of Munster besieged.

The Kings Hangman beheaded one of his Queenes.

Diuorce of Wiues allowed by his laws that they had dinorced peace, when she was presented to them. For they saide, the time (fore-tolde by the Prophets) was now come, wherein Gods pleasure was, that Iustice should bee exercised on earth. And when as the King (doing his office) had sowed and dispersed Iustice throug hout the world: that then, Iesus Christ would resigne the Kingdome to his Father.

These Apostles were taken, and first of all, examined without any punishment, afterward, tortures were thought conuenient, to vnderstand their Faith and beleefe, and concerning the surprizall and fortifying of the Citty, with such like matters, as were very necessary to be enquired. Among other things, their answere was, that they onely had the true doctrine, neither more or lesse then other Christians. In breefe, none of these warlike Apostles, willing to be dismounted from their high horsed frenzies; were conducted to death, only one escaped.

Soone after the Citty was besieged, by means of the Byshop, assisted by many Princes of Germany, as well Catholikes as Protestants; and especiallie the Arch-bishop of Cologne. The siede continued before Munster (very neere) teu months, and was so strictly shut vp on all sides: as they imagined to tast of daintie delicates, when they could feed on Rats and Mice; yea, to eate dried parched skinned in stead of Bread; all which notwithstanding, the King felt no want of any thing. It happened, that as many dyed with famine, one of the Wiues to the King (moued with pittie towards the poore men) saide to some other; that the calamitie of these miserable Soules, appeared to her, not pleasing God. Which being vnderstood by the King: he brought her (with his other Wiues) to the place appointed, & there saw her head cut off. Whereat the other began to sing, and rendred thanks to the heauenly Father: so that the King himselfe began to dance, and perswaded his people to do the like, although they had no food to whet their teeth on.

He had established by his lawes, the repudiation of wiues, and marrying of as many as a man would: in which case, he had more then two hundred causes in his Court of Audience; and onelic brought before himselfe. The dearth of all things grew so extreame (during this siede) in the Citty: that two Men escaped out to the Byshop; of whom he learned, which side of the Citty was most compelable. And heereupon, the Byshop exhorted the besieged, to yeild themselues, because pardon should be granted to the poore abused people; and the more part of them would gladly have gone forth: for the Byshop had appointed twelue expert Captaines, who gaue so diligent guard and attendance, that they who were within, could not scape any way. The Inhabitants of the Citty, in the presence of their King, made answere by Bertrand Rotman, that they would neuer forsake their first apprehension. Vpon this refusal, fiftene hundred men (conducted by the two Fugitiues) won one of the Bastions of the Citty, where they slew all them that were the Guards, and suddenly entered into the citty, where fighting awhile against the Citizens, they opened the Gates to the rest of the Army. Then all the rest entered crowding in, and put all to the Sword; yet notwithstanding, pardon was graunted to some, that required mercy. The King, and Knipperdolling were taken, and the wretched beggarly Bertrand Rotman, who was (well-neere) the sole cause of all the tragicall action: but breaking away very desperately, to thwart his resistors; he was massacred among them, and his Soule sent to the highest Disposer.

After this, the King, his Councillers, Knipperdolling, and Crechring, hauing bene in Prison some moneths: to the mockery of the whole world, they were punished; in the yeare one thousand, five hundred, thirtie sixe, with such a punishment as they had well deserued. For, being bound to the Trunkes of diuers Trees; they were nayled thereto all along, and then the Sword passing thorough their bodies, their liues were ended. Then were they enclosed in Cages of Iron, and so hanged on the top of the highest Tower in the Citty: the Kings body hanging in the midst, and higher then all the rest. Such was the conclusion of these wretched men, who (questionlesse) had brought the Land

Pardon offered to the people.

The Cittyes answere.

The City of Munster taken by the Bishops forces, and the King and his Councillers.

The Taylor King and his companions put to death, and in such manner as they had iustly deserued.

Land to ruine and confusion, as hee refo-re the Gothes and Vandales did: if the diuine prouidence, which euermore is asistaunt in our humane actions, had not broken & dissipated their desseigns:

CHAP. XL.

Of the Order and manner, which ought to be obserued in laughter; and prouoca-tion thereto. Of the cause of Laughter, with manie discourses tending there-unto.

Albeit, that it is the propertie of man (as all the Phylosophers, and men of greatest knowledge haue written) to Laugh, or else, speaking in another manner, that man is a laughing creature: yet may not wee thereby inferre, that he ought to Laugh without reason, to no purpose, or out of measure; neither to prouoke others to laughter, but in good sort and ciuillie.

For, such is the quality of people, without vnderstanding, Bouffons and dissolute persons, who by their Lyes, Tales, and villanous Ribaldries, doe scandalize honest Natures, & raise laughter in such as are as bad as themselves. For all things which incite laughing, and gladdeth the spirit, by yeelding pleasure thereto: doth not yet permit; that in this point, men should bee vnmindfull of greuaunces, which are as naturall attendants vpon life. Therefore, we may well say, that Laughter is verie agreeable to men, and commendable also in the procurer, so it bee done in good sort, and at apt seasons.

In regard whereof, we beholde many things, which men haue deuised to this effect, as Feasts, and diuers kinds of pleasing spectacles. And because wee affect such, as are the cause of those recreati-ons wherein we take delight, the Kings in ancient times, the Romaines, the Athenians, and many more beside, to purchase the good liking of their people, & to feed their eies and minds in whole multitudes together; had a custome, to make great

Theaters, and other publicke buildinges, where new Playes might bee exhibited, courses of Horses and Chariots, Com-bates of strange Beasts; Comedies, Tragedies, and Morisco Daunces. And yet these spectacles were not so disordered, but seuerer Phylosophers would bee present at them; where manie times, by such delectations, or representations of that kinde, or else at Banquets; they founde a relaxation of their spirits, being formerly busied & wearied with high discourse, and Diuine thoughtes. As all manner of men, euen in these daies can affoord the like. For, not onely Labourers, and all such as take the greatest paines and trauell of body: but likewise religious holie men, yea, and prisoners, that awaite the stroake of death from houre to houre, would neuerthelesse, seeke some Medicine and remedie for theyr Recreation.

The causes of Laughter, are a certain kinde of deformity, in regarde, that wee laugh at such things; which do not concord in themselves, but seeme vnfitly, albeit they are not; I know not howe to expresse them otherwise. But whosoeuer considereth wel with himself in this case, will finde; that euen daily (as it were) the matter which is laughed at, is a thing that hath no conueniency, and yet notwithstanding, it is not ill be seeming. I will shew ye, what means a discreet person ought to vse, for the moouing of laughter, and euen vpon what tearmes: because it is not alwayes conuenable, that he should vse it, neither in such maner, as is vsed by Fooles, Drunkards, Sottes, Iesters, and namely Bouffones. And albeit such manner of people are faouored in Courts, yet howsoeuer, they deserue not to be called wise or discreet, but eue-rie one by his name, and to be esteemed as he is. For this cause was it, that Marcius Aurelius dismissed one of his Sonnes Schoole-maisters (although he was learned) for Laughing out of measure in a Theater. And the Sonneto Phillip the Emperor, looked on his Father with an vnfriendly countenance, because he had likewise Laughed in the Theater disorderly.

It is fit likewise to be well considered, what limit and measure should be obserued in pointing, girding, or taunting, & who it is that is thus dealt withal, because he cannot induce or procure Laughter, by

Seuerer Phylosophers present at pleasing shewes.

Euerie one desirous of merriment.

A definition of the causes of laughter.

The manner
and means to moue Laughter.

Examples al-legged in this case.

No scorn or mockery is to be made of poore infortunate persons

It is both ci-uill to laugh, & to procure laughter with modesty.

To be merrie with a mixture of sorrow.

Occasions which haue bin deuised for laughter.

by mocking or deriding a poore, wretched, or vnfortunate man, neither at any wicked, notorious, or publick badde bodie. For, in mine opinion, such people of the first degree, deserue rather to be pittied and relieued, and the other to be seuerely punnished, then Laughed or mocked at. And manly Spirites, cannot easilie encline themselues, to Laugh at miserie or pouertie, except it bee in this lowe and down-cast condition, presumption, Pride, or Arrogancie bee too palpable,

Laughing & mocking very dangerous, & therefore to be wel regarded.

How a man may deride honest cause of Laughter.

Care is to bee had also, of such as are rich, beloued, and respected of euerie one, because in Laughing at such, a man may beget very dangerous enemies. And therefore, it is fittest to Laugh and smile at such vices, as flowe from men that are not so miserable, as may moue compassion, neither so wicked and unhappie, as death were more fitting for them; nor yet so great, as their smallest spight and enuy, may incurre too much daunger. Heerewith we are to know, that in places where words do prouoke Laughter, they may lift also to graue sentences, both of praise and dispraise, sometimes expressed in one and the same words. As, in commending a liberal man, saying; he makes his wealth common, at the command of his friends: the very same may be spoken to his disgrace, if hee haue gotten it by Theft, or any other euill purchase, because it is neither his to vse, nor theirs. Of a Ladie of honor, or voluptuous carriage, in condemning or commending, no more neede be saide, but that, She is a Lady of much.

Concerning newes and iests.

Report of Nouelties, and prety leasfs may bee vsed, with some imitation of them whome they concerne, reseruing alwayes the dignity of a discrete person, without dishonest speeches, or actions of lesse qualitie. Not scruiing the Countenance, nor writhing the bodie, but carried with such demeanor, and mooued in such manner, that he who vnderstandeth and beholdeth our motion, gesture, and words, may imagine much more then he seeth, or readily vnderstandeth; and thereby be the better induced to Laughter. As in a Nouell, which was related before the Duke d' Aumale, one made his complaint to the Maire d' Auxonne, the Capitall Town in the Vicountie of Bourgogne, because one had robd him of his Report of a Nouell, that may yeeld no offence.

Asse, saying; My Lord, if you had but seen mine Asse, you would know what great occasion I haue to complaine, and much more then (as yet) you haue heard by mee. For, when he had his pannel on his backe, he looked verily like Marten. And Marten then was the Maiors name. And another, that was rehearsed before King Henry the 3. of one, who meeting with a Hearde of Goats, made his stay, and (with a verie straunge countenance, because the foremost was a great Male Goat, leading the way, and hauing a long Beard) saide: Behold this goodly Goate, doth he not look like Plato? And an infinite other of like Nature, which can offend no man.

Some haue been noted oftentimes, to Laughe and weepe at one and the same thing. As a man is seen to be very ioyfull to succeed in the goodes of some deceased person: and neuertheless mourneth, after his reioycing with his friendes, both which do well agree with that which the Poet saith:

Heredis fletus sub persona risus est.

Which is as much to say, as: The teares of an heire, are nothing but smiles & ioyes. As a yong Maiden in the County of Limosine, shewing her self iocund & laughing on her wedding day: but when shee should be had out of her Fathers house, she hung about her Mothers necke, bitterly weeping; and held her so stronglie, as very hardly could her Armes bee loosed, only for beeing to depart out of her paternall dwelling. The like may be saide of Iulius Caesar, for when hee was presented with the head of Pompey, Historians say, hee turned his lookes aside, weeping at so harsh and vnpleasing a spectacle, & said; Hath there been betweene vs so long intelligence, for managing of the publick affaires? Such Community of fortunes? So many reciprocall Offices and Alliances? And yet could it bee immagined, that this Face would proue false and counterfet? But breaking off this discourse, he was verie ioyfull, and laughed heartily, to see himselfe without a Competitor in the Empire of the world.

Laughing & weeping at one and the same things.

Anew married Wife in the Country of Limosine.

Iulius Caesar hauing Pompey's head presented him.

Alexander the Great laughed in his chiefest mishaps.

Many illustrious and great men, haue laughed in their chiefe aduersities, as Alexander the Great (according as Plinie testifyeth) who beeing on the very point and instant to giue the battel against Darius, the Disputing then betweene them, was for the whole Empire of the East, he

he laughed and reioyced with his friends. Titus Livius hath left in writing, that whē the Carthaginians were reduced to such estate, as to pay tribute to the Romaines, all of them wept, except Hanniball, who had foreseene that fortune, because they of the Barchan faction wer his hindrance, that no succour could be sent him, he being in Italy. Brutus, by his continuall Laughing, faigned himselfe to be a fool, albeit he was extraordinarily wise. Mark Antonie, in all the losses of his battels & estates. yea, during his very flights, would laugh continually.

To speake now my iudgment, which of the conditions was more tollerable in the two Phylosophers, to wit; Democritus that Laughed ordinarily; or, Heraclitus, who wept in the like extremitie? Surely I should say (yet submitting vnto more solid opinion) that that of Democritus was the most allowable: because hēe found humane condition to be vain and ridiculous; and therefore, was neuer seene in publicke, but with a smiling and mocking countenance.

Heraclitus, taking pittie and compassion on the same wretched estate, carried a sad face continually, and his eyes overflowing with teares. I affect rather the first humor (not that I take more delight in Laughing then weeping) but because it is more disdainfull, and accuseth vs far beyond the other: and me thinkes, euen but according to our owne merites, we neuer can bee sufficiently contemned. Complaints and Commiseration, are mingled with some esteem of the thing which wee mourne for.

Those things which we mocke at, are of vaine account, and without anie Value: and I cannot thinke, that there is so much infelicity in vs, as there is vanitie; neither so much maliciousnesse, as there is folly; for wee are not so miserable, as we are vaine. Diogenes, who trifled the time alone by himselfe, rolling his Tub, and nodding his head at Great Alexander, thought him & vs all, to be no better then Butter-flies, or as bladders blowne vp with winde.

Now, albeit that no Naturlist, hath as yet expressed, what Laughter is, and whence it proceedeth: yet to content the curious Reader, I will deliuer my opinion thereof. To speake no more then truth, it is a matter of much amazement (as at any turbulent commotion) to behold so strange effects. As when a man seemes extraordinarily chearefull, yet his eyes to ouer-abound with teares, that the voyce, face, Linges, and all the breast, shake, mooue, and are blowne vp thereby, euen without any possibility (in many bodies) to maister such an assault: without a respect either of persons, place, or time, presented then before their eyes. No man could euer (as yet) satisfie me heerein; and I know not, whither I shall satisfie you, or no, with such breuitie as I am bound vnto.

This cause of so little apparance, consisteth (in mine opinion) in a tickling of the blood, which is in some more sensible then in others, according as they contain most of the bilious or sanguine Complexion: for other men can verie hardlie Laugh, that haue their blood colde and fast settled as it were. Now, al that which maketh an ouerture or opening in our apprehension, pricking sweetly, softly, & as it were, by stealth, is the propper subject of Laughter, such as are wordes and fashions of making it, either by some folly, or at a sudden and industrious Nouelty. For that which contrarywise, is familiar to vs, and wee haue often tasted or knowne, looseth all power of motion in vs, and moouing is the chiefest thing of all. As it happeneth with our Comedians or Stage-Players, in double repetition of one and the same thing: or Mirth-makers, that are not skilled in diuersifying their Iests and merriments. For in verie deede, nothing but variety robbes vs of a former glutting, and begets a newe birth of liuely conceit; and such frequentie procureth the oftner motion, euen of it selfe.

The blood then, which (as one sayth) is the Father, Nurse, and Host of all pleasure, is that which first of all, receyueth such an effect within vs; and then giueth encrease to his Laughing impression, as it taketh hold of our immagination, and disperseth it selfe lightly thorough the Veines, Arteries, and braine, euen to the puffing vp, or pressing downe of the body, yea, to start or gush teares out at the eyes, causing many prouokings in some, of those things that are pleasing to them, and engendering the like in others. Much like vnto a stone cast into the Water, which of one circkle maketh manie, and mul-

The laughter of Hanniball.

Brutus & Marcus Antonius.

Laughing is more allowable in a man, then weeping

Democritus preferred before Heraclitus.

Teares and smiles compared in our own condition.

What maner of thing Laughter is.

The Authors Proposition, from what part laughing cometh.

The sanguine and Choleric, & matter of nouelty

Variety is the best for prouoking laughter.

The Blood is the Father, Nurse, & entertainer of all pleasure.

Apt Similitudes to this purpose.

multiply so fast, that the first loosing it selfe, re-delivereth to this Element, his equality and smoothnesse. And as a quaking or shiuering, which from one certaine place, runneth suddenly ouer al the body, when a man is vncloathed, vntill heate bee regained, and chafeth it away. Thus is it easie to know, how Laughter beginneth, continueth, and redoubleth of it selfe.

Laughter ensuing by tickling.

It is not in all men alike, to Laugh on constraint, to wit; hee that is tickled vnder the Arme-pits, it is then attributed to a trauersing of the breast or Diaphragma; the harine or offence whereof, produceth an itching, which (according to the authority of some Bookes) maketh men to dye with Laughter. It is not then to bee doubted, that these two kindes of Laughter, Naturall, and constrained, haue one and the same Original, neither doe arise of a suddennesse, surprize, or a tickling, not awaited or expected, or else by such an inward maturity, that (as we vse to say) stiflith by custome, befor e-casion be giuen.

Two kinds of Laughter not alike.

Of tickling & prouoking to Laughter, in some that can endure it, and others not.

Which may appear to be so, by proof of them, who perceyuing that they must be tickled, or made to Laugh, by putting a mans hand to the sole of the foot, or in the necke, do resolue themselues against it; and with a deliberate purpose, make a setting of their bloode; by this meanes, they shall in a manner, not be moued a jot. On the contrary part, some cannot suffer it, when they striue most to defend themselues from it: aswel, because meere imagination giueth them such a feeling, as by reason of motion, which presserth the Veines, & still encreaseth such a tickling. So one saieth, that the best makers of witty Iests or conceites, are neuer the first Laughers; for thereby they shoulde beget losse of that perswasion, which they haue of others, that shall see or heare them. Therefore, a word to win Laughter, must be quickly decocted, working vpon some sudden & vnexpected thing: whereof man only is capable, by a qualitie perticularly giuen to him. In briefe, all that can be said, concerning the cause of Laughter, is comprized in these foure Verses:

Man only (among al creatures) capable of Laughter.

Within the Braine I breede, and to the Liuer fall,
By tickling I controule, and make all yeelde to me:
On Man I onely waite, but come before he call,
And in his face set smiles, how sad so ere he be.

CH AP. XLI.

Of the Nature of Common-Weales. And of their naturall mutability and instability, exemplified in Empires, Kingdomes, and other Estates.

10

BEfore wee enter into Discourse of a Commonwelth wee must first consider the Naturall mutabilitie and instability thereof; which consisting of men, must needs be subiect vnto the same mutation and corruption, whereto all men and humain things, are subiect by an inuolable decree and Law of God, the Author of nature. He hath irreuocably ordained, that whatsoever is compounded, either Naturally of Elements, or artificially by the industrie of men, shall be dissolved; and whatsoever groweth and encreaseth, shall likewise decrease and perish. Therefore we see, that all earthly things haue theyr beginning, their growth, and encrease, their state and consistance, their declination & decay; and finally, their dissolution. For beside infinite externall causes, by which they are sooner or later corrupted and consumed: euery thing breedeth in it selfe an internall sicknesse, which in the end, doth ineuitably bring it vnto corruption. The Iron and other Mettals breed a rust; Corne and other fruits, a Worm; Cloth, a Moath; Mens bodies, and other living Creatures, diseases, which destroy them in the end. So in like manner, Commonwealth engendereth in it selfe, disorders, discordes, and dissensions, which sooner or later bring it to ruine.

20

30

40

50

For the better explication heereof, & the Nature of Common-wealth it is further to be noted, that, as the health and integrity of euery thing, that is compounded of different and contrarie qualities, consisteth in the equall temperature of the saide qualities: so by the distemperature and inequality thereof, groweth the corruption and dissolution of the sayde compound. For, where there is a continuall conflict of contrarieties (euerie one working according to his owne Nature

The naturall mutability & instabilitie of Common-wealths.

Euery thing hath in it selfe an inward sicknesse.

The Nature of Common-wealth.

A continuall conflict of contrarieties.

ture

ture and property) it cannot be, but that in time, one will abounde, and another decay; one weare and wast another; and so in the end, one ouercome and extinguish the other, whereby the composition must needs, sooner or later be dissolved.

And this we see verified, not onely in all Naturall bodies, compounded of naturall humours or Elements (as in men, Beasts, Hearbes, Trees, Plants, and such like) but also in the polliticke bodie, that is to say, in the Common-wealth it selfe, which consisteth in the Combination of persons of different Sexes, Orders, Degrees, and qualities. As of men and Women, Prince and Subiect, Rich & poor, Noble and Base, Bound and Free, Good and Bad, and of innumerable perticuler men, differing among themselues in profession of Life, Faculties, Trades, and Occupations, in maners and affections: and yet all vnited and combined together in the Communion of one Law and gouernment.

Wherefore, euen as mens bodyes, being compacted of contrary Elements, and affected with different and contrarie humors, are so much the more healthful found and dureable, by howe much the saide humors are better and more equally tempered amongst themselues (which neuerthelesse, can neuer haue such an exact and perfect temperature, but that in time, they will consume one another; and consequently, destroy the body with the effect.) Euen so, the polliticke bodie that is to say, the Common-wealth, is so much the sounder, and flourisheth the longer; by howe much the temperature of the diffrent Orders and degrees therein is better, and more equally composed. Which temperature, Plato calleth; A Harmony consisting in an equal and concordant disparity, or inequality, wherewith the Common-wealth is (as it were with a certaine bond) knitte and vnited in it selfe.

But forasmuch, as it is not possible, that the saide polliticke hermony & consonance, can be for euer preserued, in the continual discord and conflict of contrarie degrees, humors, inclinations, affections, and passions, it must needs follow, that the bond, that is to say, the hermony being interrupted and broken, the Common-wealth shall fall to disorder, and consequently decay. As both Aristotle and Plato do teach; and is also most manifest by the experience of all ages and times, and of all Kingdomes & Commonwealthes, either past or present. As to say somewhat briefly of both, wee see evidently in the ancient Kingdomes of Iuda and Israell, of Egypt, Macedon, Persia, Parthia, Lacedemon, and in the Commonwealthes of the Carthagenians, Athenians, Corinthians, Thebanes, and such others; all of them famous in times past, & some of them no lesse flourishing in all kindes of Learning and humane VVisedome, then in Armes and militarie Discipline: yet now vtterly perished, insomuch, that there is scant any monument or memory of them. And hath not also the like hapned, to the mighty and potent Empyres of the Affyrians, the Medes, the Greekes, and the Romans? VVherof tne last which was the mightiest aboue all the rest, had so many changes in a few Ages, to witte; in sixe hundered yeares space, that it receiued all formes and kinds of gouernment.

Passing first, from Kings to Decemviri; that is to say, ten Gouernors. From the Decemviri, to Kings againe. From them to Consuls. From Consulles againe, to Decemviri. From them, to the Tribunes of Soldiers. From Tribunes to Consuls. From them, to Perpetuall Dictatours. From Dictatours, to Triumviri. And from them to Emperors; vnder whome, the Empire being miserably rent and torne with Ciuill warres, became in the end, to be a prey and spoyle to all barbarous Nations.

And, if wee looke to the Kingdomes and Commonwealthes, which stande on foote at this day, as namely, our owne Countrey; and what changes and mutations there haue beene therein, since it was first Conquered by the Romains: how many Kings it hath had at once, to wit, seauen? How oft it hath been conquered by strangers; as by Saxons, Danes, and Normans? VVhat Ciuill warres and bloodie battels there haue been since the Conquest? First, in the time of King Stephen. After, in the Barons wars. And after againe, betwixt the Houses of Lancaster and Yorke; for the space of aboue thirtie yeares, wherein we read, that onely one King, to wit; Edward the fourth, was present and fought himselfe, in eight Arist. in Polit. lib. 5. cap. 12. Plato in Lib. de Repub. 80.

The desolation and ruine of many ancient Kingdomes.

The often change of gouernors in the Romane Empire.

Titus Livius.

The diuerse mutations in Britaine, since the Romains conquered it. Pol. Virg. in hist. Angl.

Wherein, and of whome a Common-wealth consisteth.

A Comparison of the composition of mens bodies.

Plato in lib. 8. de Repub.

Of politicke Hermony & agreement.

The reuolutions and de-uisions in the Realmes of Scotland, France Flanders, and other King-domes adioyning.
Phil. Com. in hist. de reb. gest.
Lodo. cap. 10.
Ioan. Laf de Orig. Scot.
Proyard.
Poplinier.
Mercurius Gallo Belgicus.

Rode. Toletan.
Ioan. Vassius.

The often changes and innouations of diuers States in Italy

Blond. Sabel.
Lib. Singonius.
Guic.

Goths, Vandals Alaires, Huns, and Lombards, ruinating Ita- ly.

or nine seuerall battails; and that, during the same time, there were slaine and banished, fourescore Princes of the bloode Royall. Againe, if we adde thereto, the depositions, expulsions, imprisonments, and murthers of Kinges, in diuers ages and times; and the frequent rebellions of subiects against their Princes, for exactions, extortions, and innouations. If we also consider in Scotland, our next neighbor, the like, or rather greater reuoluti-ons, which caused the vntimely death of eight or nine Kings and Regents, in these two last ages. The great mutations and domesticall deuisions, which haue miserably distracted, & almost ruined France, no lesse heeretofore at diuers times, then now of late. Also the most frequent, or rather continuall commotions in Flan- ders, sildom or neuer quiet in times past, and in great garboiles at this present. Againe, if we cast our eyes somewhat further, to the Countries next adioyning, as to the Empire in Germany, very potent in former times, and now much decaid. Or to Spaine, first subiect to the Romans, after to the Gothes, and then conquered by the Moors (solicited and brought in by the Spaniards themselues) then diuided into six or seuen seuerall Kingdoms & States. And now at length, after continuall ciuill war, for six or seauen hundred years together; reduced againe (not many years ago) to one Monarchy. Finally, for breuities sake (to range no further abroad then Italy, if wee waigh the innouations that haue succeeded therein, as well in this last age, by the bloody wars betwixt the French and the Spanish, for the States of Millaine and Naples, subiect somtimes to Kings and Princes of their owne, and now made Prouinces to Spaine) as also the mutation in former times, not onely in the saide States; but also in Rome it selfe, taken and sacked, or at least besieged thirteene or fourteene seuerall times, and in all other parts of Italy, miserably distressed, spoyled, and ruined, partly by the frequent irruptions and inuadations of barbarous Nations (as Goths, Vandals, Alanes, Hunnes, and Lombards) and partly by inuasions of Germane Emperours; and lastly, by Domesticall and ciuill wars, proceeding other-whiles, of the ambitions of Tyrants in many perticuler Cit-ties; and sometimes, by the furious factions of the Guelfes and Gibelines (which, for some yeares, filled all States, Citties, Townes, yea, and priuate houses, with cruel slaughters and murders of parents, Kinsfolkes, Friends, and all sorts of people.) Sometimes again, by popular tumults and seditions, whereby there hath bin noted in Geneway, ten notable changes of that State, in the space of thirtie yeares. Sometimes the common people preuailing against the Nobilitie; and sometimes the Nobility against the people: by which meanes, they are brought now to so low an ebbe, that wheras they were able in times past, to holde competence with the State of Venice; yea, and took the duke of Venice prisoner in a battell at Sea (wherein they had 200. Gallies of their owne) they haue not now past 25 and the same also waged and payd by the Catholicke King. If we waigh and consider al this, we may draw from thence two notable documerts.

First, the casualty and vanity of al humane Power, Honor, Dignity, Dominion, and Glory, seeing they do not onely perish sooner or later: but also are subiect (while they last) vnto such mutation, and accompanied with infinit corrosiues and afflictions. Which consideration may iustly moue vs, to lift vp our cogitations from earthly delightes, to the contemplation and desire of heauenlie, that are ineffable, incomprehensible, and eternal. For as Seneca saith; Nothing is more contemptible, then man: if he doo not raise and eleuate himselfe aboue himselfe.

The other Document is, that considering the Natural mobility, inconstancie, and infirmity, as wel of anie Commonwealth, as of man himselfe, and of al humane creatures, no humane wit or power, is more able to defend any kingdom or Commonwealth, from declination and decay, then to preferue a man from al sicknesse and mortality, or earthlie things from corruption.

CHAP.

The State of Geneway changed ten times in 30. yeares.

Two Documents cōcer-ning the mutabilitie and chaung: of States.

Sen. Praes. in Lib. 1. Natural.
Quest.

CHAP. XLII.

Who was the first that used Circumcision: From whence it proceeded. Of the use thereof: What people have used it, and who do yet use it.

N this Chapter, the Christian Reader may Learne, by howe much the Christian Church is more happie, and full of holy Libertie, then the Jewes Synagogie; for therein were long Ceremonies, irkesome and tedious, Sacrifices of great cost and charge, & such commaundements, as no man was euer found, that did, or coule accomplish that Lawe, but onely Iesus Christ, true God, and true man; and after it was fulfilled by him, the Law immediately ceased.

In that Mosaicall Iewish Lawe, there were such commandements, as whosoever exceeded the least iot in the worlde, without hauing regard to euey true circumstance, was put to death. As hee that had kindled a little fire on the Sabath day; vpon some necessitie, was publickely stoned to death. That euerie infant male, that was not circumcised, at, or within eight daies after his byrthe, should perish, and neuer obtaine saluation, with many other such like commandements.

This Circumcision whereof I speake in this Chapter, was practised first in Abraham, in the Lande of Charan, from whence he departed by Gods commandement, because the inhabitantes were Idolaters, and for many other occasions, which the Reader may finde in the holyc Bible, to be in that manner ordayned of God. Abraham, passing into strange Countreyes, with his family which was great, leading a Pastorall life, abounding in Cattle, slaues, and many other moueables of great value; God inioyned him that hee should circumcise himselfe, his children, and al the males that wer in his house, as a signe that the true God was their God, in whom only they shold put their trust. This was the most auncient commaund that euer God made, before the Law was giuen, which was 292. years, or thereabout, after the Deluge. Moreouer, hee commanded, that all the male Infants of the Israelites, should bee Circumcised within the saide eight daies, vpon paine of death, vnto him that should not be.

10 The Iudaicall Circumcision, was performed with a sharpe cutting stone, and not with any Knife of iron steeled, a thing which was most dolourous; and wherby the young tender infants sometimes got a Feauer, whereof they after died. Howbeit, they had enough to doo with other occasions, as the cutting and fall of the Nauell, whereby Hippocrates giueth assurance; that Children doe incurre diuers daungers.

20 Theuet, and manie others, who haue voyaged into the Countries, where this Circumcision is vsed, doe say; that they hane seen store of yong people dy, grown to indifferent stature; and yong children of eight dayes old, onely by being Circumcised. Which may manifestly be proved by the sacred histories. The sonnes of Jacob, after they had fraudulently elrcumcised al the males in the City of Sichem, scituate in the land of Canaan, they tooke them the third day after their circucision & madethem passe the edg' of the sword: for they well knew, that they were so sore and tormented with paine, as they could not stand vpon their owne defence.

30 Next to our speaking of the originall of circumcison, and the first that suffered it to be done vpon himselfe, we come to the definition of the word. Circumcision is as much to say, as to make incision, and cut round about; and to speak more properly, it is a cutting away a part of the prepuce, and double skin, which covered the head or extremitie of Virga Virilis. Moses, the first Ecclesiasticall Historiographer of the world, hath giue no other reason of this circumcison, but only that it was a certaine and assured signe, that God would be a protector & defender of the circumcised. But many holy men, learned, and of great Authoritie, haue stroue to yeelde a more pregnant answer. Amongst others, Saint Cyprian saith; That as the time of publication of the Lawe drew neere, GOD ordayned and appointed Circumcision, and would haue

The most ancient commandement of God before the Law.

How the Iewes Circumcision was performed

Great dolors & dangers in Circumcision

Countreyes where Circumcision is still vsed.

Genes. 34, 26.

The definition of circucision.

Moses his reason for Circumcision.

S. Cyprian his reason why Circumcision was commanded.

The Christiana Fayth much more happie then the Iewish Law.

Seueritie of the Iewish Law.

Abraham was the first that vsed Circumcision, apointed by God, to him & his household.

Genes. 37, 23

that that part of the bodie, wherein the seed of voluptuousnesse lyeth, and the shape of Paillardise, should be cut from litle infants. To the end, that they should offer the first frutes of their blood to him, who should shed all his, for our liues and saluation. And that the common Sacrifice of euerie one, shoulde preceede the great and singuler Holocaust, which hee offered for our Redemption.

Another reason by S. Paul and Origen.

Another reason is alledged by Saint Paule, and afterward by Origen, to witte; That all the circumcised part, declared what ought to be plainly pure, cleane, & no way taxed with pollution. And euen so it behooueth, that our hearts should be offered vp to God, wide open, pure, and clenfed from all sinne.

S. Iohn Chrysoft.

S. Iohn Chrysoftom saith; It was the most ancient of all the Commandements that God gaue, and serued to the Iewes (according as Saint Cyprian declareth) to wipe away Original sinne, as Baptisme dooth at this present among Christians. But after the resurrection and Ascension of our Lorde Iesus Christ, Circumcision ceased, and was no more vsed: but onely to baptize young Infants, as well Males as females; yea, Men and VVomen of all ages, that is to say, to be washed with the water of Baptisme; and by that meanes, be receyued into the lap of the Church holy and Catholicke, out of which there is not any saluation.

At what time Circumcision was abolished

The Apostles condemned Circumcision

There was a Counsell held by the Apostles, concerning the acte of Circumcision; and they were of the minde, that the Gentiles by no meanes should vse it. Afterward, some Iewes, making profession of Christian Faith, caused themselues to bee circumcised; not that there was any need thereof, or commanded by the Apostles; but to the end, that they might the more willingly be accepted of other Iewes, to instruct and aduance them in the Faith, & to be admitted into the Synagogues, according as Saint Paule did to Timothie. But in the end, the Iewes that were conuerted vnto the Christian Faith, left Circumcision as vnprofitable, and a matter of great mollestation to the Christians.

Christians being Ethyopians, do onely vse Circumcision.

Neuerthelesse, the Christians, called Abyssines who liue in great Ethyopia, they are cicatrized with the hotte Iron in the forehead, as wee may perceiue by them that are sent to Rome, who remaine all in one house, behinde the Tribunall of Saint Peter, to whom Pope Paule founded a reuennue for their maintenaunce. But, besides this cicatrizing in the forehead; and Baptisme, they are also Circumcised, which is a verie great error. It is to be presumed, that they haue neuer seene the Booke of the Acts of the Apostles, written by Saint Luke: or els, they haue not (as yet) receiued and approued it. I haue not read or heard of any Christians, that haue vsed, or do vse Circumcision, but only the Ethyopians. Verie wel I know, that in the primitiue church, many Iewes (who had beene conuerted) would haue circumcised to be continued. But this matter was discided at Antioche, where Saint Peter presided, as hath formerly beene saide. And it was not knowne, that any Christian vsed it, but the Abyssine Church only, which helde very manie great Prouinces. Al the other Christians, as Maronites, Georgians, Armenians, Iacobites, Greekes, Nestorians, and other of that Liuerie, neuer vsed it at all.

10

20

30

40

50

Yet this is not enough, for not onely they which liue after the Abyssine manner, transgressed the aduise & command of the Apostles; but haue added sin vpon sinne, and error vpon error; for they cause their females to bee circumcised, whom they call Cophles. A thing, which was neuer practised in Moysses Law, neyther was there euer founde any expresse commaundement to do it. I know not where the noselesse Moors learned it, for they cut their females; although they be of Marriage estate, taking away a certain Apophysis, or excrescence of musculous skin, that descendeth from the superiour part of the matrix, which some cal Nympha or Hymenea, one growing on eyther side, euen so far as the orifice of the neck of the bladder, which serue the erection to coition. Many women both heere and elsewhere, haue caused themselues to bee cut, as being ouer great, and exceeding Nature, but not for any matter of Religion. The Mahometans of Affrica, doo circumcise themselues, because that a Prophet named Homar, commaunded them. And there are Wemen, that haue this Office of cutting them, but practise it not in the presence of men; which act is thought well of in the women. And they go crying in the streetes of Citties, Townes, and Villages, to make knowne what

Hier. Giglo an Italian.

The Abyssins being Christians, onely vse Circumcision.

Women that are circumcised.

Moors that haue no Noses, doo Circumcise maides marriageable.

Wemen in Affrica, that are Circumcisers.

Turkish Hereticks vnder the Sophy.

what they can do, carying themselues so wisely in the deed, that they cut but a little of the superficies; for otherwise, there would follow a great flux of blood. But the Turkish people of Asia, and of Europe (subiects to the Emperor of Turkes) do not vse it: except it be such as are vnder the Dition of the Sophye, whom they tearme to be Turkish Heretickes.

Plin. l. 30. c. 17

Plinie writeth, that the Egyptians haue from Antiquity, vsed Circumcision, and they of Cholcos, as wel as the Iews, which I hardly beleue. Well it may be, that it was vsed by some Iewes, who liued among them, euen as they do at this day, liuing among vs. Count Ferdinand, in his voyage of Mexico, in the first Island where he landed, named Ascamil, found, that the people of the Isle vsed Circumcision, and yet they were Idolaters, vsing oftentimes to sacrifice men, and to eate the flesh of them. Notwithstanding, it could nener yet be knowne, that eyther Iew or Christian had beene there before him, nor so much as any tract of foote of man.

Sauage people that vsed Circumcision

Neuer was Circumcision vsed in so many Countries, as it is at this day, because the Iewes haue lefte no place vn-sought, where they could inhabite or get dwelling for their money; except it bee in France and Spain; where heeretofore they regented liberally, and both were & are allowed euer heereafter to enter, but Circumcision not so frequent as it hath bin. In like manner, the Mahometan law, which vseth Circumcision, spreading it selfe both in power and Doctrine, thorow the verie greatest parts of the earth; gineth a large passage thereto; for, they which entertaine it in their Empires, are the most potent Monarkes of the world. As the Prince of Turkes; the Sophy of Persia; the most mighty King of the Tartars; Cham, and al the great Kings of the Indiaes, which dwell in the Countreyes, where the Riuer Indus and Ganges run along, and likewise all Africa.

A reason why Circumcision is vsed yet to this day, in so manie Countries.

A large compasse of the world.

Slaues & captiues not forced, to be circumcised among the Turkes.

Such as haue conuersed with the Turkes, do say; that they constraine not their Slaues or Captiues to be circumcised: true it is, that they haue better entertainment, if it may be called so. But afterward, if they come into the handes of Christians, they are searched; and being found to be cut, they are handled by the inselfsame manner as the Turkes doe.

And nothing can they say, but that in their hearts they are Christians; & were otherwise forced.

Therefore, we are to thanke our Lord Iesus Christ, who hath beene so gracious vnto vs, as by his death and passion, to free vs from Circumcision, graunting vs Baptisme, thereby to wash away Originall sinne. And heerein it may bee euidently seene, how greatly the Echyopian Church doeth erre, to vse Circumcision with Baptisme.

10

20

30

40

50

CHAP. XLIII.

A Paradox, in the defence of Bastardie: Approouing, that the Bastard is more worthy to be esteemed, then he that is lawfully borne, or Legitimate.

HE great Pruiledges, which I see are duely appertayning to Bastards, and illegitimate Children, (whom the Italians in high contempt, do terme Mules Foales) makes mee vndertake the boldnesse, to preferre them before other; and to shew by good reasons, that they are greatly superiour to such, whom we call legitimate and lawfull borne Children. First of all (Gentlemen) I entreate yee to consider, that Bastards generally, are begot in more heat and vigour of loue, with more agreeable conformity of willes, and farre sweeter Vnion of the spirites. then the most part of our Legitimate Children. Consider withall, that their conception is performed by stolne opportunities, warie preuentions, watchfull discretion, and an infinite number of more ingenious deceits, and amorous actions, then eyther needeth, or is required, in a setled condition of marriage, free from that fierie feate, which is the sole spurte vnto a longing appetite. Such Conceptions (many times) are acted without anie gayetic of heart, without anie fauourie pleasing of both the souls, or that height of affection and delight, that makes an act well done, before it be halfe doone. Which is the reason (as I thinke) why we see many sightly and formall Fathers, to haue Children dul of spirite, lame of disposition, and deformed in body.

Bastards termed by the Italians Mules Foales.

The actiue, willing, and reciprocall loue in the act of Bastardes.

How Bastards (for the most part) do yeeld preface of themselves.

Contrarywise, yee shall not find a Bastard (for the most part of them) but he is ingenious, of sprightly iudgement, and commonly accompanied with befeeming corpulence of bodie; and some other faire fore-telling rules, of good aduventure and Fortune. Beside, it seemeth as a certainty, that Nature had some peculiar respect of Bastardes, in squaring them forth such liberall allowances, as to erect and builde magnificent houses, in places of solemne and publick note, yea, in most celebrate and stupendious Citties, as hauing this care, that in following times, they should rise to great request and honour. And that it must needs be so, wee may euidently discern by al Bastard thinges, be it but in fruits, Horses, or anie other matter to be alledged, that they are better, feater, and fairer then any other are.

Examples deuied from Bastard thinges.

Of Mules.

To begin with Mules or Mulets, which are Beasts that we cannot (although wee would) in reason blame or despise. For, what is he, who can deny, that these kinds of Beasts do not endure all paines, and al turmoiles we can deuise to put them to? Notwithstanding, they eat very little, beare heauier burdens, and pace more smooth, and for mens ease, then naturall Horses do or can. And this is the reason, why reuerend and Religious Prelates, men of graue and great iudgement, especially Physitions, for the ease and health of their bodies, make choise of their daily riding on these Beastes, rather then other.

Of Bastards fruits, being grafted vpon contrary stockes.

If we speake of fruits, we shal find, that the daintiest and most excellent of all other, are such as are grafted vpon contrary stockes, which are called constryained, or Bastard fruits. They commonly, are greater, faire, sweeter, and more fauoury, then such as come of Naturall plants: & as for insensible things, we shal finde, that the name of Bastard hath bin giuen to weapons of warre: witnesse the Bastard Sword, Crosse-bow, Musket, Culuering, Cannon, and manie more, which would bee too too tronble to recount.

Insensible things.

But let vs come to men againe, & beginne with Romulus and Remus, Founders of the verie greatest City in the worlde, were they not both Bastardes? What was Ismael, Hercules, Perses, and Ramires, King of Arragon: a Prince (beyond all other in his time) most vertuous and famous? What was King Arthur, & the Emperour Alexander, who for his deeds was sur-named Great? And, not to alledge Iugurth, let vs speake of Constantine, Emperour of the Romaines: of Mercurius Trismegistus, and others of elder time, whose memories are not of inferior reputation, to them that haue bene accounted legitimate. But let vs come to moderne and present times, and wee shall finde, the greatest houses of Princes in Fraunce, Italy, Germany, Spaine, and elsewhere, to be renowned by Bastardes: and Histories are filled with their knightly deedes and valour. Witnesse Duke William of Normandie, who Conquered England. The Duke of Borse; the Lorde John Sforza, and many more.

Examples deuied of men famous in diuers ages of olde.

Moderne and later times.

Let vs see howe manie learned men, the stolne pleasures and sweete embracings of women, haue yeelded vs. And we will not shame to beginne with worthy Peter Lombard, who yet to this day, (for honours sake) is called, The Master of the Sentences; who like wise hadde two Btetheren, adorned with the selfe-same Learning and sanctity as hee was. Such embracinges likewise left vs, the skilfull Iason du Main, who was reckoned the verie incompareable Index or Protocle, of the direct Cannon, and Ciuill Lawes. VVee had also, by the same meanes, Erasmus Roterodamus, who though a reuerend Abbot of Flanders, was saide to be his Father, yet in the iudgement of the best Learned, he was most deepe in Diuinitie, and more then meanely excellent, in the Arts of Grammar and Rhetoricke.

Examples of Learned men & great Writers.

The praises of Erasmus Roterodamus.

His industry, not only stirred vp good Letters in Germanie, Brabant, and England, but also restored and amended infinite good Authours which were before mangled and depraued; yea, his excellent Learned workes, furnished all the Studies and Libraries of Europe.

I will not speake of the Wise Christopher Longueil, of Malignes; whom a Good and Vertuous Byshoppe leste vs, as a true Cicero of our time; besides the great

The scituati-
on of the kingdome of Mossul.

Haelon king of the Tartars, stirred to armes by the Eastern Prince.

Baldach a very welthy Citie, and trading to the Indiæes.

The Caliphe
leuied forces for safetie of his Land.

Alland maketh a Vow to take the City.

yeare of Grace, when the Emperor Fredericke Barbarossa, with many Christians was gone into Syria against the Sarazins, and in the time of Pope Gregorie the 9. a great and potent Emperour came out of Tartaria, named Alland (yet cald by some others Haelon) with an Armie of foure hundred thousand men on foot, & three hundred thousand horse, being iurged so to doo, by some Easterne Princes and Christians, to refraine the audaciousnes of the Sarazins, he being a warlick man, and endued with many Vertues. He was neyther Christian nor Mahumetist, and yet a Pagan that worshipped the Sunne and Moone.

After he had fought against the people of Condares, the Paricanes, Bactrians, Bomareans, Rosanes, Dahes, and manie other puissant Realms of the Scythians, he came into Arabia, where he subdued also foure Kings; and so iourning on in Armenia, passed neere to Baldach, the chiefe Cittie (as hath beene saide already) of the kingdome of Mossul. This Citie was rich and opulent by reason of great traffick which the Inhabitanes made to the Indiæes, by helpe of a goodly Riuer passing through the middest thereof; and taking his Originall in the Cittie of Chisy, by which riuer, within eightene dayes they coulde faile to the Indiæes. There is made great quantity of Silke, and cloath; of Gold & Siluer, with an infinite number of other faire and rich commodities.

The Caliph of Baldach, vnderstanding that this Prince approached so neere his Lands, and with an army of such power sent into Arabia and Numidia, to make a leauy of Soldiers to place in Garrisons in all the tenable Townes of his Kingdom; and among others, in his capitall Cittie of Baldach. Alland, making no doubt of taking this Cittie, did his best endeauour to get entrance: but founde it very difficult, in regard of their resolution that defended it within. Neuerthelesse, he made an Oath and Vow, that he would not budge thence, vntill he had taken the Cittie. By meanes whereof, the siege lasted longer time then the Caliphe dreamt of: for victuals begin to faile them, although they were still conueyed in secretly, but sold at verie deare rates.

The Soldiers and other people, consumed all their meanes in nourishing themselfes; and when they had no further supplies, they desired but a quarter of such things, as were not able to content the, or but the left part of their wages before hand, onely to withstande the stroke of extreame necessity. The Caliph made them answere, that he was naked of money; but he would impose a Taxation on the people; and therewith, they should be paide. The inhabitants, by reason of the long sledge, were quite emptied both of victuals and money, as well as the Soldiers, who perceiued wel inough how matters went; and therefore, all of them (with one consent) did conspire against the Caliphe, that had a wonderful abundance of Treasure, and yet refused to helpe them, who had no cause of being there, but for the safetie of his life. Wherefore, some selected persones, in name of all the rest, went forth secretlie to the enemy, capitulating with him, that they would surrender vp the City: conditionally, that it should neither be pilled, nor burned; nor any one put to death, but only the Caliphe, and his house & treasures to remaine at his disposing.

The Emperor of Tartaria being wise, and one of the discreetest Princes of his time: vnderstanding, what they of Baldach had willingly offered, accepted their honest offer; and in the night time, hee sent in thirty thousand men, who tooke the Caliphe, sleeping securely among his mucke, and committing his body to prison, saw all things safe looked vnto til the next morning. At which time, Alland entred the City; and the base-minded Caliph was presented vnto him, of whose greedy Auarice he had been sufficiently informed. Forthwith he caused him to bee brought along with him to a strong Tower, where he had lockt vp his infinit treasures, because he would himselfe be a witness, whether they were answerable to the report, or no. After he hadde a while looked on his wealth, it mooued some admiration in him; because hee found there 16000. Markes of Gold and in Siluer, three times as much, besides numberlesse precious Stones, and other Jewels of inestimable price. Hee tooke forth all the victuals which were there as carefully enclosed as his wealth, only for his owne bellies satiety; & then shutting vp the wretch himselfe among his riches, would vse no long Oration to him, but spake as followeth.

A Conspiracy against the Caliphe, and vpon what reason.

A purpose of surrendering vp the Citie.

The Emperors acceptance of the offer, surprisal of the Caliph, and sending to prison.

The wonderful riches of the Caliphe.

If

The speeches of Alland to the Caliphe.

If thou hadst not beene so much affected, to the preservation of thy Riches, thou hadst the meanes of deliuering thy selfe, them, and the Cittie also. Now use thy Treasures as thou canst, which thou hast so dearely loued, eate them, and drinke them, at thine owne pleasure. So, making fast the doores vpon him, he placed good and sufficient Guards about the Tower, that no sustenance might any way be brought vnto him: and on the seauenth day, the poore and rich auaritious Wretch dyed. During which time, the Emperour sojourned in the Cittie, refreshing his Army, and people came from diuers Prouinces, and Kinges of neere neighbouring Confines, to conferre with him, bringing great store of prouision for his Souldiours, which he payed very truly and liberally for. I find it faithfully written, that this was one of the richest Armies, that euer was knowne to passe into Europe. Hee distributed the abundant riches of the Caliphe, in part, among them that had yeilded the Cittie, and the rest to his Army, reseruing not a iot thereof for himselfe. Thus this infortunate man, was he that enioyed least of his owne Treasures, so greedily scraped together; and yet many people fared much the better by the, after his wretched death.

The death of the Caliphe.

The distribution of the Caliphe wealth.

Guil. Anglic. Episc. Tyricensis

Fourescore yeares before, or there about, according to the Sarrazine Histories, there was another Caliphe, & King of Ægypt, who resided at Cayre (for, as I haue already said, the Caliphes did then raig in those quarters) and feared the great multitude of the Christians, which were come out of Europe, for recovery of the Holy Land. And because it was thought impossible (if they surprized Palestine) to preserue whatsoever was possessed in Ægypt, the power of the Christians being so much doubted: he called Saladine to his ayde, who was King of some part of Tartaria, a young Man, and couetous of glorie, honours, and principalities: who came with a worthy troupe of Souldiours, well invred to Warres, to helpe the Caliphe. It fell out so, that they reconquered such places as had beene taken from him, and won one notable battel; wherein, such Christians as remained, capitulated for their passage, had promise to auoyde the Country. Saladine

The Caliphe called Saladine to his assistance.

having ended the expedition for which he came, demaunded recompence; and paiment for his men of warre; who had (as yet) touched no Money, but two quarters; and so hee purposed present returne home againe.

Saladine demaundeth recompence for his paines; & men.

10 The vnthankfull Caliphe Priest, made him answer; that at the instant, his Coffers were emptied of Mony, by reason of his long Warres maintenance: and therefore he was voyd of all meanes, to recompence him as he had worthily deserved. But, after a small time of breathing and repose, sufficient recompence should be sent him. As for his Souldiours, he needed not to giue them any Wages, considering, they had dailie held the field, feeding on the Country, where-with they might well rest themselves contented, and the spoyles of the Enemy.

The ingratitude of the Caliphes answer to Saladine.

20 Saladine, who was aduertised; that the Caliphe had gathered vnualueable Treasures, and was somewhat impatient, that he could haue no other payment but wordes: suddenly smote him on the head with an Iron Mace, and slew him. When the Guards and others heard the death of this couetous Wretch, in stead of taking vengeance, they saluted him as their King, and exercised large liberalitie of those ill gotten goods, to al the Army, and chiefest Men of Ægypt. Whereby they made a settled assurance of their State; and after him, his Successours haue raigned peaceably in Ægypt, for the space of four hundred yeares.

Saladine suddenly slue the Caliphe.

30 In like manner, it happened to a Patriarch of Constantinople, and the Chansons of Saint Sophia, who suffered the Grecian Empire to bee lost; because no assistance of treasure could be had (from them that had gripply hoarded it vp a long time) for the Emperour Constantine Paleologus, besieged by the Turke; to pay the Hungares, Italians, French, Spanish, and other Nations which came to succour him. So that, in the end, the Turkes became full possessors thereof, and they were all made Slaues, as all the rest of Greece was dealt with beside.

Saladine is made King of Ægypt.

The Empire of Greece lost thotow couetousnesse

40 You may see then, what recompence auaritious men do iustly receiue; who may well bee compared to Rats, that liue in rich Mines, and gnaw on Gold and

The Empire of Greece lost thotow couetousnesse

Couetous mē
compared to Rats in Mines of Gold and

and Siluer, and yet (notwithstanding) gaine no benefit thereby. But when they are taken, and vnbowelled, then their rich stuffing is found: and so they make others wealthy, though altogether against their wils. They are likewise relembled to Pipes, Channels, or Conuoyes of Waters from Fountaine heads, that disgorge their carriage for all other mens affaires, and keepe nothing for themselves. The same may we iustly say of such miserable minded men, of whose wealth no man can haue benefit, till after their death; as hath appeared by these two Mahometane Caliphes.

CHAP. XLV.

Of certaine Beastes, and other Creatures, that (by a naturall instinct) do beare enuie to Man, in some things, which they thinke may be profitable to him; yet kept or remaining in their power. And therefore doe strine (by all their uttermost meanes) to hinder him from enjoying the benefit of them.

The opinion of the learned concerning Enuie.

Any learned Diuines, Philosophers and Poets, haue left vs in their Writings, that there is not any greater torment, or passion of the Spirit, which more meagereth the body, or disfigureth the face, then Enuie. And truely, this vice is not onelic a possessor of men; but likewise of reptile creatures, Foure-footed beastes, waterie inhabitants, yea, of Dæmons. For there are many of them, that (by meere instinct of nature) do know some thinges to be abyding in themselves, which may returne som commoditie to Man, without any touch or preiudice, either to their life or health, or returning them the least discommoditie in the World, although it consisteth but in an Excrement, or some superfluitie issuing from their bodies. And yet notwithstanding, such is their mallice to man, as to frustrate him thereof: some will hide it vnder-ground; others deuour it, or in some other manner pro-

Naturall en-uy in Beastes and other creatures against man.

cure the losse of it.

As an inducement to others, we will begin with the Stellio, which almost is like vnto the Lizzards among vs; they hide themselves in Walles, and there is little difference betweene them, but onely in small spottes of their skines, which do resemble little Stars. But this Stellio will not looke a man in the face, as the Lizzard doth, and seemeth to take a delight therein. For he shunneth him by all meanes, except hee can hurt him, by byting, or otherwise; which is most venomous if he doe it. They are different also in their Excrements, for that of the Stellio, mingled among complexion or painting, raiseth ouglines & deformitie in them that vse it. Contrariwise, those Excrements of the Lacertes, or Lizzards, doe greatly embellish them that make vse of them among their Vnguent, such as they apply to their faces, to make them looke the more amiably. And questionlesse, if the Stellio did know, that his Dung were profitable to Man: he would take order, that it should (by no meanes) be found.

Whereas, the Lizzard, louing men, and knowing that his ordure bringeth him som benefit: he empties it in a publike and cleanelly place; as vpon stones, where it may be gathered of euery one, to make what vse he pleaseth thereof. The Stellio (indeed) doth as much, but it is to another end: for he leaueth it openly to be found, because it hath some neere resemblance with the Lizzards, to the end, that when vse is made thereof by man, it may make him more deformed and loathsome, then a confirmed Lazer.

Beside what hath already beene said, he hath a propertie, which is, that euery yeare (at Spring time) he casteth his skinne, as Serpents doe: but knowing, that it serueth Man, as an assured and siguler remedie, against the wofull disease of the Falling-Sicknesse, to deprive man of the benefit, which (harmlesse to himselfe) hee might receiue thereby, so soone as he hath left or cast it off, presently he deuouret it. And this is the reason, why they are so rare and deare, and that (for to be possessed of them) people giue such watchfull attendance in the Spring time, to get them,

The Stellio is an euill creature.

Difference
betweene the Stellio and the Lizzard.

The Excre-
ments of the Lizzard.

The Excre-
ments of the Stellio.

An excellent propertie of the skinne of the Stellio.

In what manner the Stelio casteth his skinne.

Great difficulty in getting the skinne.

A memorable History of a Gentlewoman at Lyons, known for a truth.

A matter of truth, and knowne to the Authour.

The Hart or Stag enuious against Man.

them, so soone as they are despoyled or throwne off, which is in the extreamest heat of the day, and in some remote place out of haunt, by rubbing himselfe against some stone. When he is discharged of it (as by their dilligent attendance they doe discern) he would presently eate and swallow it, but that it requireth longer time: and therefore they seeke to entrap him, or hunt him, or else to kill him as he is feeding on it; and by these means they recouer it, yet not without great vigilancy and carefulnesse.

In the yeare 1586. there was a Turke at Lyons, who had to the number of a dozen of those skins, and none of them being greater then the finger of a Child of seauen yeares old, yet he sold them at ten Crownes apiece. A Gentleman of Auvergne, that was then at Lyons, being come thither, to be cured of the Epileisie or Falling-Sicknesse: an Apothecary named Vymarde, gaue her counsell in the case, and so shee bought two of the skinnes. They being beaten into powder, she was to drinke them in one and twenty daies: to wit, the weight of three graines, with an ounce and a halfe of Piony Water, euery morning fasting; after which, shee felt her selfe not touched therewith, in the least manner whatsoeuer.

I my selfe saw three of these skinnes, which an Apothecary of Paris (a Man very excellently experienced in his Art, and curious in thinges that were rare and strange) named Peter Cucthe, shewed me. With one of them he pleased a Knight of Malta, who was subiect also to the same infirmitie; and albeit he was a Man of threescore yeares old, yet it fully cured him. It may appeare to many, that these thinges which I write, are almost impossible; because they seeme to happen, against any precepts of the Physition, and daily experience. But let such doubtfull men know, that secrets in nature are day by day discovered, which (before) were neuer dreamt or thought on, expressing rare and admirable effects, as hath beene obserued (weill neere) in all ages.

The Hart or Stag likewise, is as enuious towards man, as the Stelio is, because when he casteth his first Head, especially, that on the right side: he hideth it in the earth, or within some hollow Tree, or otherwise as best he may, but very subtilly, because men should deriue no benefit by it, which (indeed) is very great and excellent, if it can be found. For I am well assured, that there is not any Antidote among the Apothecaries, nor remedy read in the Books of Physicke, that can compare therewith, although it were the true Horne of a Vnicorne. For, if a man be distracted in his senses, or meere mad, if he take the filing of this Horne, no more but seauen Graines thereof, in a draught of white Wine, or of Baulme-water, twenty daies together, it will perfectly restore him.

Moreover, whosoever taketh nine Graines of it fasting, with the Syrope of Lymons; vndoubtedly, that day he shall not be smitten with the pestilence. It preserueth from all poysons. And they that drinke of the Water, or haue it tempered with some of this Horne burned, standing steepy four and twenty houres: it both killeth and auoydeth all Wormes; in any that are offended with them. It is also very singular, being Clysterized to dissenteriques. By approoued experience, it helpeth also the Falling-sicknesse, if during thirtie dayes, the weight of twenty Graines be taken, either with some decoction, or soueraigne Water. But the partie must beginne to take it, the first daie, when the Sunne entreth into the signe of Aries. This Horne hath many other vertuous properties; As, to voide the stone out of the raines, and out of the bladder. The decoction thereof, not onely easeth the paine, but also intirely cureth the Gout: if wee may giue credit to the great Grecian Physition, Alexander Trallianus. All which vertues, and many more, for breuities sake I am enforced to passe over: because I come next to the Mare, which beareth as much enemy to mens delights, as any of the former.

When the Mare hath foaled, shee hath this bad qualitie, that with her teeth, she suddenly snatcheth or biteth from the young Foales fore-head, a little Morfell of Flesh there growing, about the bignesse of a small green Fig, which the Greekes vsed to call Hippomanes. And it hath so great and excellent

The vertue of the head or horn first cast by the Stag, as well against all poysons, as many dangerous diseases.

A prescription for the time of taking this medicine

The malicious nature of the Mare.

Hippomanes, what it is, and wherefore it is profitable.

a property, that if either man or woman doe beare it about them, and can compasse the meanes, to conferre with him or her, on whom they dote so much in affection, as they are desirous of carnal knowledge or copulation; the weight of three Graines only, mingled among any Meates or Confections, will (in a very short while) vrge affection in him or her that receiueth the Drug; albeit they were (before) neuer so vnwilling. This Hippomanes is very difficult to be recovered, and he must not be a dull or slothfull body, that goeth about to get it: but one that is most watchfull, and quicke of Spirit, which will appeare by his paines, if he endeouour to haue it. For, to speake vprightly, if it could be easily come by; many notorious abuses would be committed thereby. But God who hath created all thinges to be vsed well, and for the benefit of man: taketh away all commodious meanes, from loose and voluptuous people, in easilie getting this peece of flesh, because they should not lewdly abuse themselues.

This Hippomanes, doth not serue onely to procure loose and veneriall loue; but likewise it causeth honest and vertuous affection: provided, that it be ioyned with the Stone called an Emerald, for then (by a strange & vnkown property to vs) it maketh men happie and successfull, in all their Negotiations; as also hardy, couragious, & martially disposed. A Gentleman by birth, an Angeuine, who made no meane esteeme of my friendship; often shewed mee one of these Hippomanes, which he wore about his necke, in a case of Christall, being dried, and about the bignes of a Filberd, somewhat hard, and blacke of colour. He hath bin so fortunate, that in fise seueral combats or Duelloes, man to man: he was still the vanquisher, and himselfe little hurt. In the end, he was so louingly respected by the duke of Anjou (who afterward was King of France and Poland) that when the said Lord left the Crown and Countrey of Poland, to claime his right in the Kingdome of France: passing thorough Germany, the Emperour espied this Gentleman attending on the King, but he grew so extraordinarily affected towards him, that he won both the Kings fauour and his, for abiding with him, which hee promised to recompence very royally, as afterward he did. The Emperour so dearly respected the Gentleman, that he aduanced him to a worthy mariage in Austria, where he had very rich & noble gouernments, and commaunded ouer the Emperours Armies against the Turke. The sum of all is, that all happinesse, which could accompany a man of honor, was found in him, and not only my selfe, but many more, not meanly or triuially acquainted with him, did imagine this felicity (next to Heauens fauour) to proceede from nothing else, but onely the Hippomanes, which he alwaies bore about him. One thing I am well assured of, that he was beloued of diuers worthy Ladies; from whom hee deriued many regardful fauours: which kindnes could not proceede from any beautie or handsomnesse in him, because hee was very hard-fauoured, and much crookebackt. Himselfe told me many times, that it cost him much pain & diligence, to recouer the Hippomanes, relying vpon no mans trust, but his owne watchfull care, and awaited til the Mare was newly discharged of her Foale. He vsed such meanes, that he did cut it from the foals forehead, albeit the Mare both bit, and smote him often with her heeles: but when she found it gone, she would neither feed, nor let the Foal suck; but died within three daies after. Euery man may beleue as best him pleaseth. I protest, that I do not set down any thing in this case, but what I heard fro him that had the thing it selfe, and shewed me the manner therof. But to come to our first purpose, the Hippomanes hath beene as well knowne to our elders, as to vs; as wee may read in Virgill. Marullus speaketh of one, that was not natural, but compounded: the composition wherof I wil not here set downe, because it is vnworthie to be declared. I hath as powerfull operation, in procuring affection, as the other: but most often, in such extreimity of louing, it maketh men mad and foolish, and therefore I refrain to set down any more. I think, that nature, the handmaid to God, produced the first Hippomanes, for a medicinable vse to such, who being ioyned in marriage, doe not loue one another, or cannot enioy the benefit of mariage, by reason of natures coldnesse: in which case, it is a most soueraigne remedy, and I haue knowen it very successiuelly practised in such a case.

Dull or negligent persons cannot come by this Hippomanes.

Hippomanes procureth honest and vertuous affection.

The History of a Gentleman, that had an Hippomanes

This K. was named Henric the third.

Opinion conceiued of the Gentlemans felicity, the Author himselfe being an eye-witnesse.

How the Gentleman recouered the Hippomanes.

Another Hippomanes described by Marullus.

The Authors opinion concerning the first Hippomanes.

A vse not to be discommended.

It is therefore presupposed, that the Mare, by a meere naturall instinct; knowing what a helpe and benefit this Hippomanes would be to Man: as enuious, that he should enioy so much goodnesse by her, maketh as speedie a deuouring thereof, as the Stellio doth of her skinne.

Now, not onely do these Foure-footed beasts on earth, bear such mallice to Man, but Fishes in the Water doe the like, as (very many) that haue frequented the Seas, haue seene and obserued. Among other Fishes liuing in the Water, they haue noted the Sea-Hare to be touched with enuy, as much as any of the foresaid Creatures, although she seemeth to haue no vnderstanding of the act. For it is a Fish, drouisie, sleepey, snorting, lumpish, deformed, and vnwholsom. This foule fish, hath a kind of Curd within her, which so soone as she shooteth or casteth, she presently deuoueth it againe: onely because shee hath a naturall vnderstanding, that it hath many secret vertues, to help both Men and Women. For it is a singuler remedy to ease Women that haue the bearing downe of the Mother. And being taken inwardly, or applyed outwardly, it is a soueraingne help against the byting of all venomous Beasts. It prouoketh Weomens Floures, when they are verie grieuouly staied: and bringeth away a Child dead in the Mothers Wombe, with the after burthen or birth also. Being drunke with Vineger, it preferueth against poyson, and is succourable for the Chollicke, frettings or grindings in the belly, and all clotted or congealed bloods. When it is Clysterized, it awaketh all Lethargies, and preuaileth against all benummings whatsoeuer. Receiued in drinke, it is good against all tremblings, swounings, and all griefes and defects in the Nerues. Aelianus hath recorded, that the Sea-Calf hath oftentimes beene seene to sucke her selfe, and draw her owne Milke: because men should haue no vse thereof, in regard it is very much auayling against all the fore-named diseases.

The Vrchin or Hedge-hog well knoweth, that he is not followed by Huntsmen, by any desire to eate his Flesh, for it is of most vile digestion: but the pur-suite is onely for his skinne; which hath many good properties. For, being burned, the Ashes thereof is very helpfull for such, as cannot auoide their Vrine, but drop by drop. It is also verie precious, for Vlcers or scarrified wounds, being put into them. Now, because he would not afford Man any such remedy, hee shuts himselfe (like a round Footeball) vp in his skinne, and so auoydeth his owne vrine in it, which conuerteth to venome, and killeth him in his skin. As for this beast, it seemeth that he is not much ashamed of spoiling his skin; because he looseth it and his life together.

The Lynx likewise knoweth, that his Vrine is medicinable, for so soone as he yeildeth it, it conuerteth into a Stone: and then he hydeth or couereth it with Earth, to the end it may not be perceiued by any man, and (indeede) it is a thing very rare, and hard to bee found. The Vrine of the Lynx, thus stonified; taketh away all spots and wrinckles. It whiteth; and maketh a faire colour in the faces, of such as annoint themselues therewith; especially, being mingled with the Oyle of sweet Almonds, there is nothing more assured, or that whiteth and taketh away all corruption of the teeth.

Euill Spirits doe beare mallice to Man, as well as these Creatures; not onely to procure his damnation, or depriving him of the vse of Gold and Silver, which is found in Mines, and the bowels of the earth: but likewise, that (being in this Mortall life) he should finde no remedy of bodily infirmities. For we finde, by good authority, that Spirits doe bite or nibble off the roote of a Plant, which is cald Succisa, otherwise tearmed Morsus Diaboli, or Devils bit: because it hath beene iudged in all times, that the Deuill himselfe byteth these rootes, and yet could neuer pluck them wholly out of the ground, whatsoeuer paines and diligence he bestowed on them, yet still they are found to be bitten, and al opinion hath held, that the Deuill is the Authour and doer thereof. It is an Hearbe sufficientlie knowne; and frequent among vs, in the vse of many, and serueth most conuenientlie; for the ripening of pestilentiall sores and Carbuncles, being bruised

Rondelet. in Lib. de Pisc. 16. Cap. 17.

The Sea-hare that hath a Curd, naturally good for many causes.

Notes worth the obseruation.

Aelianus in Lib. 3. Cap. 18 The Sea-Calf.

Of the vrchin or Hedg-hog, and vertue of his skinne.

The Lynx, & the vertue of his vrine.

The mallice of euill Spirits to man.

Succisa, or Morsus Diaboli and the vertues thereof, as it is to be applied to diuers grieuous diseases.

fed in a Morter, and laid thereon. The decoction of it in Wine, being drunke in the morning, it both healeth and preserueth from the plague, seruing also most soueraignely, against the paines of the Mother. The powder of this roote, is good to kill all Wormes in the belly. It is likewise proper, for the taking away of al black spots, paleness, & bruises. By these Histories, borrowed out of Ælianus, an ancient Greeke Authour, thou mayst (friendly Reader) obserue the workes of God, worthy of admiration; and wherein he is to be praised and honoured.

Ælianus in lib. 2. cap. 18. 19. &c.

CHAP. XLVI.

The unfortunate and successelesse Loues, of Strato and Aristoclia: And of Achamas, the Sonne of Theseus, with his miserable death.

IN the City of Astarta in Bocotia, was a most goodly, rich, young and Noble Virgine, of whom, two gallant worthy youths became extraordinarily enamoured: to wit, Strato, the Orchomenian, and Calisthenes Aliarnus, each of them coueting to enioy her in marriage. In the end, it was agreed, that Calisthenes, because he was of her Countrey, and a Kins-man, should most conueniently enioy her. The day of Nuptials drawing neere, the Parents of Aristoclia (in regard of his intire kindnesse and affection) invited Strato also to the solemne marriage dinner. But he, whose fiery loue could not easily be quenched: had ambushed a troupe of young Gallants by the way, in whose company he seized on the Bride, as she was going home to her Husbands house. And being possessed of her, he held her very strictly in his Armes, purposing to makelike rape of her, as Paris did of Helen. Calisthenes, the new married Bridegroom, laboured by all means to recouer her from him: but the yong

* Orchomenus, a Towne in Bocotia, by a Riuer of the same name.

The violence of loue, when it exceedeth government.

Lady (being detained by Strato and his Friendes so violently) also tyred and ouer-spent with striuing; dyed in his Armes. Strato beholding his deare affected Aristoclia soulelesse, slew himselfe vpon her body: giuing the world thereby to know, how highly hee prized the life of his beloued Aristoclia, without whom he could not liue, and therefore requited her death with his owne.

10

Achamas, the Sonne of Theseus, after the sacke and spoyle of Troy, came with certaine Shippes among the * Bisaltes, a people of Thrace, where hee was intirely beloued by Phillis, Daughter to the Lord and Gouvernour of that Region: and her hee tooke to Wife, vnder condition, that (after her Fathers death he should succede in the Kingdome. It fortunated, that Achamas, being desirous to visite his owne Countrey, and to see some of his Kinred and Friends: desired (with very earnest instance) both of his Wife and Father in Law, that he might bee fauoured with so much liberty; promising to returne with all possible speede. Hauing obtained his request, Phillis bare him company a great deale on the way, and gaue him a little Casket or Coffer fast lockt vp, entreating him; that in regard of the loue he bare to her, he should neuer open it: but when he had an absolute determination; neuer to returne to her againe. So, with many kisses, and mutuall embracings, they gaue a louing Adieu to each other, and parted. Achamas being arriued at Cyprus, hauing no respect of promise made to Phillis, for returning againe to her: set downe his resolution, to continue there, and therefore was the more forward in desire, to open the Casket that his Wife had giuen him. Which he had no sooner done: but a sudden furie seized on him, inciting him to a distracted madnesse, in which violent Phrenzie, falling with his bare breast on the point of his Rapyer; he ranne it quite thorough his body, and thereby suffered the punishment of his owne wilfull periurie.

20

30

40

50

Others do repute this Achamas to be the Sonne of Antenor. * A free Countrey of Macedon, by the riuer Strymon.

The integrity of loue, teare full of obliuion.

Wilfull periurie in loue, iustly reuenged.

The End of the Seventh Booke.

The Eight Booke.

CHAP. I.

Of the Kings of Poland; their Lawes, Customs, administration of Iustice, and all things else deserving memorie.

POLAND, in elder times called Sarmatia, is saide to receive that name of the word Pole, which (in that Language) is as much to say, as plain, smooth or ecuen. And so much the rather it is to be credited; because all the Country is plaine, spacious, full of thicke Woods, and very few Hills or Mountaines in it. The Earth is cold and freezing, whereby it produceth little store of Wine or oyle: but contrariwise, it yeildeth much Graine, and diuers other kinds of Pulse. It aboundeth in Cattle, Flesh, Honny, Milke, Butrer, Waxe, and Fruits of all sorts. It affoordeth perfect Lead, and Salt in great plenty: It hath Mines of Iron, Gold, and Silver, which are found in diuers Hilles, and in certaine Rivers: but there is no search made for them, onely thorow their negligence. There are also (in some places) pits of Brimstone and Sulphure: but as concerning any Bathes, produced by nature; Poland is very barren, and scarce of them.

Of the name, manner, and scituation of Poland.

Such commodities as Poland affordeth.

Zechus and Lechus, or Lethus, were the first that euer gouerned in Polonia, or builded there any Cittie or Castle. They both held the Regiment for some time, but after the whole race of Lechus was extirpated: the Barons of the kingdom, being assembled about the Successors of Lechus; concluded to liue at libertie, and without any farther check or controule. Neuerthelesse, that Iustice might be administred to the people, and they gouerned as necessity required: they ordained twelue Vaiuodes, or Paladines, which order hath continued in that Kingdome, euen to our daies, but not without great hurt to the whole Land. For there was no change of these Officers, but the dignity lasted their life time: although they carried themselves badly in their authority, despising their betters, and euill entreating their inferiors. Among these Vaiuodes, such as were Castillians, Commanders of Castles, Capraines, Iudges, and such like great Magistrates, holding these offices til they died: did what themselves pleased, whereby ensued, that this Kingdome could neuer haue any great progression in Armes, being so oppressed and kept vnder by such pettie, and no potent or mightie Lords. But, in no long while after, the faction of Lechus (growing in hatred of the Vaiuodes or Paladines government) would needes haue one peculiar Prince. And therefore they made choise of a worthy and valiant man, named Gracchus, who dwelt at the foot of the Samaritan Mountaines, neere vnto the River Pistula.

10

20

30

40

He builded a city, calling it Graccotia, Q q q (which

Zechus and Lechus, the first Rulers or Gouernours in Poland.

The election of twelue Vaiuodes, otherwise called Paladines.

Magistrates during their life time.

Gracchus chosen to be the first Prince of Poland.

(which is now corruptly named Cracouia) a Citty greatly blessed, both in beaury and scituation, as also infinite Merchandizes, which is there Traffiqued from all Nations of the World, it beeing the Metropolis of the whole Kingdome.

The Citty is round engirt with the Riuier Rudis, which entering into the Land by sundry Channels, spreadeth it selfe ouer all the Market places. It hath seauen Gates, and many honorable Palaces, belonging to great men: and a Fort also, builded in a very conuenient place, wherein there is a most excellent colledge of Students. On the other side of the Riuier Vistula, vppon the shoare banck, directly fronting Cracouia, there is a Castle, cald Casimira, after the name of King Casimirus. This citty, as we haue already said, being the only Mistresse of the whole Land, is very beautifull, rich, and best edified beyond all other. The people, vniuersally, are wise, pleasing to Strangers, delighting much in their owne Natiue drinke, for there is verie small store of wine. The earth is plenti- full in all good things; and in brieft, it is a fat and beneficiall Countrey.

The race of Gracchus failing, it returned againe to the government of twelue Paladines, but with much infelicities: because, in contending for Competitors, diuers factions grew among them, and (consequently) Insurrections in Armes, to withstand one another, whereby great dammage happened to the whole Land. Among these turbulent Spirits, there was a Polander, named Priaristlaus, a man expert in armes, of quicke apprehension, and one that could well fish in such troubled Waters. The people reuolted all to his faction, they made him their King, and he was the fift Governour of that Prouince, after the first Lechus or Leschus. After his death, another Gallant young Man succeeded him, tearmed by the Polacks, Leschus the second, who proued to be a Man of singuler prudence: but, made old with time, and dying, he left it to his Son Leschus the third.

This man made his Sonne Pompilius legitimate, but deuided the Kingdome betweene twenty other, that were his Bastards, to the great detriment of the Country. But Pompilius being the law-full King, entred againe on the government, and leauing Cracouia, appointed his Seate in another Citty, called Gneza: but finding it too molestuous, hee transferred the State to another Citty, named Crusincza. In this Citty he dyed of the Stone, according as himselfe had continually fore-told, that in such manner his death would be. And the chiefe Lordes being assembled in Councell, they concluded, that no more of Pompilius his Posterity should raigne ouer them: but (with one consent) made choise of a Countrey Gentleman, named Piastus, one of no great stature, yet strong, and well sinnewed. This was the first branch of those Kings, that continued to the time of Casimirus the second, and of Lodowick: of which selfe same race also, descended the Moderne Princes of Slesia.

This Piastus accepting the government, would take on him but the Title of Duke only, whose succession comming at length to Boleslaus, in the yeare D.CCCC.XC. IX. he was then made King by Otho the third, Emperour. But the Kingdome comming to another Boleslaus, successor to the former; he was expelled thence, and dyed. Whereupon, the Polonians aduanced in his place, his Brother Vladislaus, in the yeare MLXXII. by the Title of Duke. But in yeare MCCXCV. the Title of King was taken againe, by Primislaus the second, who (at first) was Duke of the greater Poland, and of Pomerania, or Pomerland, and so continued the succession, euen to Ladislaus, the first begotten Sonne of Casimirus, who (while his Father liued) was designed to bee King of Hungaria, and of Bohemia. He tooke in marriage Anne, Daughter to the King of Fraunce, by whom he had Lodowicke and Anne. Lodowick succeeded his Father in both the Kingdomes, and tooke to Wife Marie, Sister vnto Charles the Emperour. But in the yeare of Christ, MCCCCXCII. the Barons of Polonia, (at a dyet) elected after the death of Casimirus, his Son Iohn Albertus. His continuance was but a while, therefore, by the greater part of the Barons, Alexander, Great Duke of Lithuania, was elected: who going in Armes against the Tartarres, died in Vilna, aged fife and forty yeares.

Sigismund

The Citty rounded with the riuier Rudis.

Concerning the Citties building and behauiour of the people.

The government of Paladines aduanced againe.

A K. created againe, named Priaristlaus.

Poland deuided among twenty Bastards.

Cracouia forsaken by the K. and the State transferred to another Citty.

Piastus chosen king of Poland

Piastus refused the name of King, calling himselfe Duke of Poland.

The order & lineal descent of the Kings of Poland and Bohemia.

Alexander great Duke of Lithuania, elected King of Poland.

Sigismund, his younger Brother succeeded him, in the year MC. and he had the title of King, in Anno. MCVI. and made great war vpon the neighbouring Nations; especially on the Moscovites, of whom he slew thirty thousand, in the yeare MDXIII. He deceasing, Augustus Sigismund took his place, and after him, succeeded Henry the third, brother to Charls the ninth, King of France, who was chosen and made King. But his brother dying, and hee affecting his paternall Kingdome, more then the other: forsooke Poland, and went into France, to his rightfull inheritance. The Polanders being thus forsaken, they made choise of Maximilian the second, being Emperor, to be their King. But he, not resolving to accept it, and the kingdom standing on some doubtfull tearmes: Stephano Battori, Prince of Transilvania (being a man of great valour) came into Poland with a slender power, where he was created King, and so continued.

1 Next vnto the King are the Paladines, and next to them, the Castilians, on whom (in very deed) dependeth the whole gouernment of the Prouince. Neuerthelesse, there are Iudges, both criminall and ciuill: and others, that take order for occasions of warre or peace, as in all other States and Kingdomes. They can make a very great Army of Horsemen, and they are reputed sufficiently valiant. In briefe, it is they that curbe and controule the Tartarres, from presuming into those partes and limits. It is to be noted, that the Paladine of Cracouia, is the chiefe of al other in dignity, and next to him, the Castellano of Cracouia, vnder whom are (well neere) infinite Captaineships.

2 Polonia is deuided into two parts, the one being tearmed the Lesser, and the other the greater. In the lesser Poland, which is at the head of the Riuer Vistula, is the Cittie of Cracouia, a verie Noble and famous Cittie. But the greater Poland, is that which containeth in it Gnezna and Posnania, two worthie Citties, with other especiall and honorable places.

Moreover, it hath the gouerning of Prussia, and part of Pomerania. In Poland the very greatest Dukedome, is that of Mazouia, and it is feudatary to the King.

The Archbishoppricks of the Kingdom are two: the one in the Cittie of Gnezna, a Cittie of the greater Poland; and the other in Theopolis, of Austria.

Two Arch-Bishops Sees.

CHAP. II.

Of many famous and worthy men, who, hauing left gouerning in the Commonwealth: made their retirement, to a priuate and solitary kind of life.

One of the Catoes, hauing attained to the age of eight and fifty years; gaue ouer his publique charge and trauaile, in affaires of the Romaine Commonwealth, and went to weare out the remainder of hys daies, neere to Naples, in a Country village, which then was called Picenum, but now it is named Marca de Aeona. Where he maintained his faculties, and nourished himselfe, which such reuenues, as his poore Landes and Liuing afforded him. This good and vertuous Cato, keeping a simple Cottage, one while perusing his Bookes, and otherwhiles looking to his Vines and Plants: his Neighbours had written (with a Coale) ouer his doore, these wordes. How happy a Man art thou (o Cato) because thou onely knowest, what it is to liue in this world, among other men?

This was not the Censull, for he neuer gaue ouer-medling in the publique occasions. Neither was it he of Vitcas that slew himselfe.

40 Lucullus the Confull and Romaine Captaine, continued at the wars against the Parthians, sixteene yeares together: during which time, he won much honour to Rome, many Prouinces to the Commonwealth, great renowne to himselfe, and mighty Treasures for his House. This man, after his returne from Asia to Rome, found the Statefull of partialities and dissentions, through the quarrels betweene Marius and Sulla. He resolved to leaue Rome, which forth-with he did put in effect, causing certaine places of sumptuous workmanship, to be builded neere Naples, along by the Sea side, in a place now cald Castello di Lupo. Ther he made his sojourn Lucullus the Confull, Captaine against the Parthians.

*Stabie, a Towne in Campania, destroyed by Sulla.

1500

Henry, heire to the Crown of France, K. of Poland.

Stephano Battori, Prince of Transilvania.

The Gouernours in degrees next to the King.

The Paladine of Cracouia.

Poland deuided in two parts, the greater and lesser.

ning for the space of eighteene yeares, in quiet repose and silent pleasure; free from all the turmoyles and trauailes of State, and in this contentment he ended his daies.

The Emperor Dioclesian forsaketh his Empire of Rome.

* A Region in Bithynia.

The answer of Dioclesian to the Ambassadors of Rome.

Dioclesian invited to the marriage of Constantius, when excuses would not auaile him, poisoned himself.

Dioclesian, after he had gouerned Rome eighteene yeares, and had attained to very old age: he gaue ouer the Empire, from whence he dismissed himselfe into Nicomedia, with no other intention, but onely to returne home to his owne House, and there in peace and quiet to spend the rest of his life. So, he having taken his leaue and farewell from pomp and dignity, came to * Salon, which was the place of his birth, prouoked thereto (as I am perswaded) with the naturall loue, that all men do beare to their natiue Country, and there he dealt in husbandry ten yeares together. Two yeares after he had cast off the Empires Clog, the Romaines sent two worthy Ambassadors vnto him, to entreat (if he were so pleased) to returne to Rome againe. The Ambassadors being come thither, they found him in a gardē by his house, weeding his Beds of Lettice and other Hearbs: but when hee had heard their Legation, he made them this aunswere. My Friendes, do not you thinke it more honest and better, that hee who digged and planted these Lettice, should eat them peaceably and quietly in his owne house: then to forsake such wholesome fare, and returne to the tumults and rumours of Rome? I haue now made good prooffe, both what it is to commaund, and what benefit ensueth, by labouring and deluing in the ground. Leaueme then to my selfe I entreat ye, in this priuate state of life: for I much rather affect, to maintaine my life by the labour of my hands, then to be troubled with the charge of the Romaine Empire. With this aunswere the Ambassadors tooke their leaue, and parted. At another time afterward, he made the like excuse, being invited to the marriage of Constantius, by the Emperours Constantine and Licinius, alleaging his weaknesse, and infirmity of old age. But the Emperours sent againe vnto him, writing Letters full of terror and threatnings, that his excuses were not allowable in this case. Whereupon, he began to suspect, that they intended some shamefull death for him, because he had lend ayde and fauour to Maxentius and Maximinus. And therefore dranke a certaine poyson, whereof he dyed, being aged seauenty yeares and more.

Doris the Athenian, hauing gouerned the Common-wealth fixe and thirtie yeares, in vpright sinceritie and Iustice; became aged, and weary with publike negotiations. Wherefore he dislodged from Athens, and went to a Country-House or Farme, which he had in a not far distant Village: and there, reading Bookes of husbandry in the night time, and practising the exercise of those instructions in the day time, he wore out the space of fiftene yeares. Vpon the frontispice of his Gate, these wordes were engrauen. Fortune and Hope, Adieu to ye both, seeing I haue found the true entrance to rest and contentment.

Scipio Africanus, was one of the most dearest esteemed, and reuerenced Captaines, that euer Rome had; for, during the space of fixe and twenty yeares, being the continuance of his Warres in Spaine, in Affrica, and in Asia, hee neuer committed any dishonest action, neuer lost any battaile, nor euer failed in Iustice to any one. He subdued Affrica, ruined Carthage, conquered Hanniball, destroyed * Numantia, and re-established Rome; which Cittie, after the battell of Cannas, he (almost, or altogether) neuer vtterly forooke. Notwithstanding, in the two and fiftith yeare of his age, parting from Rome; he retired himselfe to a small inheritance of his owne, between Pozzuolo and Capona, and neuer after would be scene againe in Rome.

All these excellent men, of whom we haue spoken, and an infinite number more, left their Kingdomes, Consulats, Dignities, Gouernments, Citties, Palaces, Favours, Courts; and Riches, to the end, that they might liue peacefully. And it is the more memorable, in that no slanderous tongne can auouch, that any of them forooke their Countries, as being infamous, wretchedly poore, or banished: but onely beeing thereto moued, in pure and simple goodnesse, and on their owne liberall free will, for the more commodious order and direction of their liues, before death should tyrannize ouer them.

Doris the worthy Athenian, that forooke State, and followed husbandry.

The glory & honour of Rome, Scipio Africanus.

* A Cittie of Celtiberia in Spaine, besieged foureteen yeares by the Romains, yet destroyed at last by Scipio.

Vertue onely was the object of all these worthy mens intentions, and no enforcement by shame or villainy.

CHAP. III.

¶ Of the impefection of Politicall Science, with a consideration of the imbecillitie of Law-makers, &c.

IN a former Chapter, we have signified, that there are such multitudes of people, such difference of degrees, qualities & conditions, such peruerfity of wils, humours, and affections in euery Cowmon-wealth: that no humane wit is able to reduce them to that perfect temperature and hermony, which is requisite for the cōseruation of ciuill vnity and amity. To the end; that all may continually concur, in the obedience of one Law, in one kind of government, and liue therein contented, each one in his vocation, in security, peace, and plenty, which euery Law-maker or Gouvernour of a Common-wealth ought to procure. Which may partly be iudged by the government of a Family, be it great or little, because it is many times turned vpside downe, and dissolved by the peruerse humour of some one or two; being not corrigible by any counsell, or chastisement of the head or Maister. What maruaile is it then, if in whole Kingdomes and Common-weales; among so many thousands of different persons, and of different humors: there are so many exorbitant and turbulent Spirits, that no wit or power of man can bee able to tame or temper them? And do we not see many times, that the couetousnesse, or the lust, or the treason, temerity or folly, or the ambition of some one man, endangereth or overthroweth a whole Empire? The Kingdome of Macedon was lost through the couetousnesse of Perseus, King thereof. The treason of one Count Iuhan, offended by the lust of Rodoricke, King of Spain (who deflowered his daughter) was the cause that the *Moore*s conquered Spain, and possessed it sixe or seauen hundred yeares. The temerity of Terentius

Varro, when he was Consull of Rome, & gaue battell to Hanniball: caused the great ouerthrow which the Romaines receiued at Canna, to the great daunger of the Common-wealth, which (in the end) was vterly ouerthrowne by the ambition of Iulius Caesar.

10 But what should I speake of a King of Macedon, or a King of Spaine, a Consull of Rome, or a Iulius Caesar; when the turbulent humor of a base fellow, or a pety Companion, such a one I meane, as a Blacke-Smith, or a Iacke-Straw, or a Iack-Cade: hath bin able to put al England in a garboile, to the great daunger of the State? Seeing then, that the fault or error of some one man, may ruine or endanger a Kingdome: how shal mans wit or pollicy bee able, sufficiently to prevent the inconueniences, which must needs grow thorow infinite faults and errors, that (in tract of time) are committed in euery Common-wealth, by so many thousands as are therein; through the folly or mallice of men?

20 Furthermore; if we consider, what pollicke science (whereby Common-wealths are instituted and gouerned) is able to performe, and how farre it may extend it selfe: we shall easily see, how little perfection and establishment any State can receiue, by the Law-maker or Gouvernour thereof, be he neuer so pollicke. For whereas other Sciences and Arts were (as Aristoile teacheth) inuented by some, augmented and amplified by others, and brought in time to perfection: it falleth out otherwise in the pollicke science, which is so vncertain & variable, that although the rules & precepts therof, were many hundred years ago deliuered by most famous Philosophers, and explicated & enlarged since, by infinite Authors, Ancient and Moderne; yet; both reason and experience sheweth, that it neuer arriueth, neither can reach to intire perfection. For, neyther one and the selfe-same pollicie, is fit and conuenient for all Common-wealthes, (as one Art or Science is not fit and conuenient for all kinde of Men) neither is a Common-wealth so dureable in one manner and forme of government: that the selfe-same pollicy will euer serue for the same State. Seeing all Common-weales are subiect to mutation, & many times, one is engendered

Titus Livius. Dec. 3. Lib. 2. Part. in 1st. Cesare.

The Garboils and tumults in England, raised by Iacke Straw and his fellows. Stow, Haule Holmhed.

How farre Pollicke Science may extend it selfe.

Arist. in Lib. 7. Ethic. Cap. ultimo.

All common weals subiect to alteration.

In the one & forty Chapter of the last Booke.

Comparison by the government of a Familie.

One man ofentimes causeth the destruction of a whole Empire

Plut. in Paulo Aemilio.

Roderic, Totolan. in Lib. 5. de reb. Hispan. Cap. 14. 15. 16. 17. 18. 19.

engendred by the corrupting of another, euery one requiring different lawes, and a different pollicie.

And although the Common-wealth doe remaine in one forme of government, as either in a Monarchy, Aristocracy, or a Populare State: yet such is the variety of times, and instability of the humors and affections of men, that new Lawes and different pollicies will be necessary thereto. And therefore, whereas the Romains had foure kinds of lawes; as Cicero testifieth: yet one was De abrogandis legibus, to abrogate and repeale lawes; by the vertue and authority whereof, many lawes (made by very wise men) were afterward (by their posterity) annulled and repealed, as vnprofitable and inconuenient. The same may be obserued in the very Lawes of God, which haue varied, according to the different state of man and times: as it is euident by the Law of Nature; the Law of Moyse; and now lastly, the law of Grace. The reason whereof, S. Augu. giueth, saying. It is not to be wondred at, that God made different Lawes, in different times: seeing that in one day, and in one house, and in one man, one thing is conuenient to amend another, and one thing to one man; and another, to another, and that the thing which is expedient now, will (an hour hence) bee vnlawfull and inconuenient. Whereby it appeareth, that time, which breedeth certainty of iudgment, and experiencé in men, for the perfection of other Sciences and Arts: doth so change and abolish lawes and pollicies, that it causeth in Law-makers and Governours, ignorance, error, and confusion. For this cause, Plato affirmeth expressly, that no man, be he neuer so excellent of wit, or neuer so prudent & practised in affairs; can be able (without the inspiration and assistance of God) to make sufficient Lawes, for the perfect establishment of a Common-wealth. And therefore, in the institution of his owne written Common-wealth, and lawes thereof: he craueth helpe of Almighty God, and otherw here saith. As brute Beasts cannot be happily gouerned by Beasts, without the helpe of Man: so Man cannot be well and happily gouerned by man, without the helpe of God. And againe, in another place he teacheth. That as men cannot lue without lawes; so neither could men haue had sufficient Lawes from Promethus (that is to say, from the prouidence of men) if Iupiter himselfe, the creator of all, had not sent Mercury to men with lawes, to bee the Interpreter of his Diuine will. Whereby he signifieth (mistically after his manner) that without Gods especiall assistance: no wit or prouidence of man can suffice to institute, and conserue any State or Common-wealth, either by the meanes of lawes or otherwise. This also Salomon well knew and acknowledged, who therefore craued Wisedome of Almighty God, for the government of his people, adding. Quis enim potest iudicare populum istum, populum tuum hunc multum? For who can, without thy help, iudge and gouerne this thy people, so many in number? And againe. Giue me (o Lord) that wisedome which assisteth thy Seat. For I am thy Seruant, a weake Man: Et minor ad intellectum iudicij & legum; And not of capacitie to vnderstand, what is Iudgement and Law. Thus said this prudent King, considering, and humbly acknowledging his own imperfection. In respect whereof, Almighty God gaue him greater wisdome, honor, and glory, then euer had any earthly Prince.

But now, for the further prooffe of this matter, let vs examine some of the Lawes, of three or foure of the most famous Law-makers that euer were: that, by discouerie of their errours, the weaknesse of mans wit, in the institution and administration of a Common-wealth, may the better appeare. And whereas some haue founded and instituted many Comwon-wealths indeede, and some in writing, to serue for Patterns to others: I will here speake only of foure, of greatest fame, of either sort two; As of Solon the Athenian; Lycurgus, the Lacedemonian; Plato the Diuine; and Aristotle, Maister to Alexander the Great. When the Comonwealth of the Athenians (hauing beene gouerned for many yeares together by the Lawes of Draco) was falne to decay, through the excesssiue couetousnes and rigor of rich men, whom the poorer sort (being laden with debts, and not able to pay the) were forced to serue as Slaues, by the sentence of the Iudges, wherupon there arose daily infinite tumults and seditions: it seemed good to them all, to recom-

Foure kindes of Lawes among the Romains. Cicero de legib.

The lawes of God haue varied according to the different state of man, and times.

August. De Confess. lib. 3. cap. 7.

Time breedeth maturity of iudgement.

Gods inspiration necessary for the making of good Lawes.

Plato in lib. 4. De Legibus.

Idem in Minoe Idem in Protogara.

2 Chron. 2. 11
2. Cron. 3. 7.
Wisd 9. 4. 5.

Salomans humble acknowledgement of his weaknesse

The lawes of foure famous Law makers, examined & reprobued.

The Athenians were gouerned many yeares by Dracoes lawes.

re-commend the reformation of their whole state to Solon, a man so highlie esteemed for his wisdome, that hee was accounted one of the wisemen of Greece: who perswading himselfe, that it could not be conueniently reformed, except the poore were releued and eased of their debts, imparted his minde therein, to some of his friends first; who, perceiuing his resolution, borrowed great store of money, and employed it in Lande. Whereupon it folowed, that when Solon had published his New Law, (which he cald seysacthia, that is to say, A discharge of Debts) they remained exceedingly enriched, their Creditors defrauded, and he much suspected of deceite, as to haue secret intelligence with his friends, and part of their gaine.

And although it seemeth, that therein he had wrong (for he lost by his own Law as some haue written, fiteene Talentes, which were owing him) yet he cannot be excused in two things. The one, in that he caused not his friendes to restore the money, which they had guilefully borrowed. And the other, that without examination of the perticuler causes & reasons of euerie mans debt, hee ordained a generall abolition of all debts, good and bad; whereby, as well those which were able to pay, as the vnable, were discharged: and all creditors (without diffrence) defrauded, contrary to all equitie and iustice. Which as Cicero saith, speaking of the like case, Requireth aboue all thinges, that euerie man haue his owne. And that equall regard be had to the right, as wel of the rich, as of the poore. And that is no way obserued saith he, Cum locupletes suum perdunt, & debitores lucrentur alienum, when rich men loose their owne, and debtors gaine that which belongeth vnto others. Besides, in this case, the necessitie was not such, to breake Iustice so notoriously, because the incouenience might haue beene redeemed otherwise, without iniury to any. As partly by the means which he himselfe also practised, to wit; by raising the money: and partly, by borrowing some great summes, with the which he might (at least) haue made some composition with the Creditours, in behalfe of the Debtors, and haue repayed the money after in time, by penalties, confiscations, and some moderate taxes, whereby the poore might haue beene for the present releued, and no man wronged.

Therefore, Cicero greatly commendeth Aratus, who when the Citty called Syciona*, had beene oppressed, 0. yeares by Tyrants, and himselfe banished with fixe hundered others, of the verie richest men to bee found therein: first founde meanes to kill the Tyrant; and after, hauing called home all those that were banished: and finding difficultie, in restoring them to their goods & liuings (whiche were in the possession of other wien, and had beene in fifty yeares space, alienated by many Contracts, and bargaines of sale, Dowries, Leases, and such like) thought it not conuenient, either to take the said liuings from those that possessed them; or yet to leaue the other vnatisfied. And therefore, he borrowed a great summe of mony, of Protomy, King of Alexandria; and examining euerie mans cause, and making an inestimate of the Lands, dealt so between the parties, that for ready mony, some of them were content to leaue their possession; and others to sell their right, and so surcease their claime whereby peace and concord was made. Et sic par est (saith Cicero) cum Ciuibus agere, & non alijs sua eripere, alijs dare aliena. So it is fit to deale with subiects, and not to take from some their owne, & to giue it to others to whom it did not belong, as Solon did, who therefore was to be blamed, not only for error, but also for Injustice.

I omit other errorrs of Solon, which might be obserued in the forme of Commonwealth, to come to the examination of one of his Lawes, whereby hee ordained: That whosoener in any publick sedition should be newtrall, and take neyther parte, shou'd remaine euer after infamous. His reason was, because hee thought it not conuenient, that any man shold so much loue his owne ease, as not to participate in the trouble of the Commonwealth, whereof he was a member. Which reason, together with the law, Plutarch wisely reiecteth; for that it would be an assured meanes, to put (as it were) Fire vnto Gun-powder, & to set all the Commonwealth on a flame, without hope of anie internall remedy.

For (saith he) euen as in a sicke bodie, all the hope of helpe within it selfe, is to bee expected from the partes that are sound. And there-

The Reformation of the Commonwealth of the Athenians by Solon. Plut. in Solone.

Two foule errors of Solon, about the reformation of the Athenian Commonwealth

Cic. in lib. 2. de Offic.

Great iniustice committed by Solon. Cicero ubi sup.

How Solon might haue reformed the Commonwealth without the breach of Iustice.

*An old Ciry of Peloponnesus neere Corinth. Cicero in lib. 2. de Offic.

The wisdome of Aratus, in reforming the Citty of Sicyona.

Cic. ubi supra.

An absurde Law of Solon, forbidding newtrallitie in a publicke sedition. Plut. in Solone.

Idem in his Booke of enstructions, for such as deale in matters of State.

therefore, when the bodie is wholly corrupted, there is no helpe of remedie but from abroad: euen so, in a politick body, sicke with sedition, all the interal remedie, is to come from the whole and sounde partes thereof.

Solons Lawe reiected by Plutarch.

Ibidem. A principall point of politicke science, either to prevent seditions, or quickly to appease them.

Plutar. Ibidem. A storie of the dissention of two young men of Syracuse.

Good aduise neglected causeth much harme.

The danger that groweth to a Prince by maintaining diuision among his subiects.

That is to say, from such as are newtrals, who may labour with the one part, and with the other, to compound the quarrell: for otherwise, where all is in tumult, no remedie can bee expected, except it come from abroad. And therefore, Plutarch holdeth it for the highest and principall point of politicke Science in anie Governour, to know, how either to prevent seditions that they neuer grow; or else quickly to appease them, when they are growne, be they neuer so little. For, euen as the least sparke that is, may fall into such a matter, that it may set a whole house on fire: so the least ciuill sedition, may fall among such persons, and in such a time, that it may put a whol Commonwealth in combustion, and vtterlie ruine it. And for this cause, wise Governours haue an eye, not only to dissentions concerning the Commonwealth, & publick matters: but also, to priuate quarrelles, though they be among meane men, because (many times) they redound to publicke detriment, whereof Plutarch recounteth a very notable example.

Two young men of Syracusa, were so great Friends, that the one of them being to go abroad vpon occasion, recommended vnto the other the care of his Concubine. Hee in his friends absence, being ouercome with loue and lust, abused her. In reuenge whereof, his friend (at his return) corrupted the others wife; by which meanes, there grewe a great quarrell betwixt them. And the matter coming to the notice of the Senate, a wise Senator gaue aduise, to bannish both, least their priuate quarrell might breed some publicke sedition. But his Counsell was neglected; whereupon followed, that the Friends on eyther side taking parties, made (within a while) such a tumult and ciuill warre in the Cittie, that the whole state was ouerthrowne thereby.

But, as all priuate quarrels may proue dangerous to the Commonwealth, so most of all is it, when they grow betwixt the greatest personages. In which respect, Phillip de Comines greatly blameth such Princes, as do not seeke to compose dissensions and quarrelles, among some of their greater subiects: but rather nourish them, by fauoring one partie more then another, wherein they do no other (saith he) but helpe to set their owne house on fire. Whereof hee alledgeth two notable examples, the one of the Queene of England, wife to King Henrie the sixt, who taking part with the Duke of Sommerset, against the Earle of Warwicke, was an especiall cause of that Warre, which the Earle made (many years together) against the King and House of Lancaster, to their vtter ouerthrow. And therefore (sayth he) the Queene shoulde haue done much more wisely, if she had shewed her selfe at the first indifferent betwixt the two parties, & holpen to agree them.

The other example which hee alledgeth, is of Charles the seauenth, King of France; who, when hee was Daulphine, tooke part with the Duke of Orleance, against the Duke of Burgundy, in a priuate quarrell of theirs. In reuenge whereof the Duke of Burgundy, called Henrie the fift, King of England, into Fraunce, and helped to Crowne him, and his son after him, Kings in Paris.

And whereas, Phillip de Comines, seemeth to take it for no inconuenience, that a young Prince, should sometimes for his sport and pleasure, nourish some iarres and quarrelles among the Ladyes and Gentlewomen of his Court, I cannot but dissent from him therein, because Womens iarres, may make mens wars. And experience hath taught, that mutations haue sometimes hapned in States, by womens quarrels. As in Rome, where Fabius Ambustus hauing married his two Daughters; the elder, vnto a Nobleman called Sulpitius, who was after made consull; and the younger to a Plebeian, called Licinius Stolo, who (by the Lawes) was not capeable of that dignity. It chanced, that a disgust fell betwixt the two Sisters; for that the younger, visiting the elder, who was then wife to the Consull, and holding her selfe to bee contemned of her, in respect of her meane estate, lamented so pittifully to her Father, that to appease her, he practised with the people, to make his Sonne in Law, Licinius Stolo Consull, in derogation of the ancient Law and Custome, which excluded the Plebeians from the Consulship. And although the chiefe Senatours, opposed them-

Phil. de Com. Cron. du Roy Louis. Cap. 138

War in England betwixt the King, and the Earle of Warwicke.

Henrie the fift K. of England Crowned in France.

Phillip de Comines, reproued, for allowing in a yong Prince, to nourish quarrrels amongst the Ladies of his Court. Plin. de viris illust. Tit. Liii. Dec. 1. Lib. 6.

The trouble that often ariseth by the dissentions of Women.

themselues thereto with might & maine, as to a great noueltie, and a matter verie preiudiciall to the dignity of the Senate, yet he preuailed; and not only procured a Decree, that from thenceforward, the Plebeians might be Consuls, but also obtained the election of Licinius Stolo, his Sonne in Law. And this was done, to satisfie the disdain of a woman against hir owne Sister.

But more dangerous and lamentable, was the quarrel of two Sisters in England in the time of King Edward the sixt, one of them being Queene Katherine Parre, lately before, wife to King Henrie the 8. and then married to the Lorde Thomas Seymer, Admirall of England; and the other was the Dutchesse of Sommerset, VVife to the Lorde Protector of England, Brother to the Admirall. These two Ladies, falling at variaunce for the precedence which either of them challenged; the one, as Qui. Dowager, and the other as wife to the Protector, who then gouerned the King and all the Realme, drew their Husbandes into the quarrell, and so incensed the one against the other, that the Protector procured the death of the Admirall his Brother: whereon also followed his owne destruction shortly after. For, being depriued of the assistance and support of his Brother, he was easily ouerthrowne by the Duke of Northumberland, who caused him to be conuicted of felony, and beheaded. Beholde what inconuenience followed, by the falling out of two women. Therefore Aristotle wisely aduiseeth Princes, To haue care that their wiues doe no disgraces, nor giue iust cause of disgust vnto the Wiues of their subiects, because Commonweiths haue bin ouerthrown by such meanes.

But what meruaile is it, if the quarels of weomen may bee dangerous vnto a Commonwealth, seeing a famous and pernicious faction in Italy, began by the occasion of a quarrel betwixt two Boyes, whereof the one gaue the other a box on the eare. In reuenge whereof, the father of the Boy that was stricken, cut off the hand of the other which gaue the blow. VVhose Father, making the quarrell his owne, sought reuenge of the iniury done to his sonne, and began the faction of the Neri, and the Bianchi, that is to say, Black and White: which presently spred it selfe thoroughout Italy, and was the occasion of spilling much Christian blood.

VVhereby we may see, how necessary it is, for Gouernors, to haue an eye vnto quarrels, though among mean persons: And how dangerous it is for a Prince, to make deuision in his State, betwixt great persons, to ballance and counterpoize one of them with another, to the ende; that they shall not conspire against him. As Machiauel counselleth absurdly, following the olde tyrannicall Precept; Si vis regnare, diuide. If thou wilt Raigne, make diuision. As though it should bee alwayes in the Princes power, to moderate the same at his pleasure, whereof no mortall creature can assure himselfe, bee he neuer so wise or potent. And therefore, we may say of such dangerous courses, as saith the Booke of Ecclesiasticus, Qui amat periculū peribit in illo, He that loveth danger, shall perish in it.

Neuerthelesse, to returne now vnto Solons Law, which condemneth neutrality in publicke seditions or factions; although in some cases, the said law would be pernicious to a Commonwealth: yet in some other, I holde it so necessarie, as that no man could do his dutie eyther to God or his Countrey, except he should put the same in practise.

As for example, if the quarrell were for matter of Religion, or touching either the seruice of God, or the publicke good of the Commonwealth; or for the iust defence of the rightfull Prince, and Gouernour thereof. In these cases, all neutrality were vnlawfull. For, when there is question of Gods seruice; to bee then neutral, were nothing else but to betray Gods cause, and to declare a Mans selfe to be his owne enemy. According to our Sauours saying; Qui non est mecum, contra me est, & qui non colligit mecum dispergit. Hee that is not with mee, is against me: And he that gathereth not with me, scattereth. And therefore, the Neutralls in that case, are those whome the Holy Ghost calleth Tepidi, men that are lukewarme, of whom the Scripture saith in the person of God. Vtinam esses aut calidus, aut frigidus. Sed quia tepidus es, euomam te ex ore meo. I wold thou wert eyther hot, or cold. But because thou art but luke-warme, I wil therefore spet thee out of my mouth.

Againe in the other case, where the Controuersie concerneth the good of the

The dissenti- on betwixt the Dutches of Somerset, & Q. Katherine Par in England

Beholde the fruits of mallice & spleene in Women.

Aristot. in Pol. Lib. 5. Cap. 2.

A quarrel began in Italic, betwixt two Boyes, which caused much blood shed.

Tarcagnota hist Mund par. 2. lib. 15.

The danger of Machiauel's doctrine, concerning diuision.

Eccles. 3, 27.

In what cases neutrality is to be allowed or disallowed

Neutrallie vnlawfull in deuisions concerning Gods seruice.

Luke 11, 23.

Apoc. 3, 15, 16.

Neutrality condemned, in matters concerning the iust defence of the Prince or Commonwealth.

the Commonwealth, or the iust defence of the King or Gouvernor: Neutrality in this case, were meere treason, and should iustly deserue not onely the note of infamy (as Solons Law ordained) but also any rigorous punishment whatsoever. And therefore in all such cases, all men are bound in conscience and duty, without any delay, to declare at least their good willes and affections, for maintenance of so iust a cause. And where persuasions will not suffice, then to employ all force, yea, and their liues, for suppressing of such seditious wretches, rather then to suffer that they may any way preuaile.

Neutrality in priuate quarrels condemned.

But in other cases, as when some particuler mens priuate dissentions do grow to a publicke sedition; or, when the contention is not betwixt the head, and some of the members, but betwixt the members themselves; to adhere to either partie (as Solons Lawe commaunded) were no other, then in stead of Water where-with to quench fire, to cast on Oyle, to nourish and augment it, to the great danger and detriment of the whole State. Therefore, in such a case, the neutrall & indifferent man, may best helpe to remedie the disease of the Commonwealth, putting on (as Plutarch saith) the Bushkin of Theramines, which serued for both feet. That is to say, dealing indifferently with both parties, to draw them to a composition; not for his owne ease, or to auoyde the participation of publick or common calamity, as Solon in his Law supposed of Neutrals, but to extinguish the fire kindled in the Commonwealth, or at least, not to minister further matter therto, by any act of his.

Plutarch in his instructions for such as deale in matters of State.

Thus then we see, how Solon erred in his Lawes and ordinances, though Aristotle seemeth to preferre him before all other Law-makers, censuring & controlling all the rest, and excusing him in that wherein others reprehend, and concluding him to be an excellent Law maker. So doth Plato, who for patternes of all such as shall institute Commonwealthes and Lawes, proposeth Minos, Solon, and Lycurgus, of which last man I meane to speake.

Plato de Legib.

CHAP. III.

The Weaknesse of Law-makers, exemplified in certaine wicked and absurd Lawes, of Lycurgus, Plato, and Aristotle. With certaine Obseruations, no lesse pious, then Politicall.

10

Lycurgus was no lesse famous for his royall Birth, then for his great wisdom. For, he being Brother to Polidectes king of Lacedemonia, succeeded him in the Kingdome, at the earnest request of the people, in regard, that his Brother left no yssue, but only his Wife great with Childe. And beeing earnestly solicted by her, to marrie with her, with promise to destroy the Childe in her wombe, to the end, that his Kingdome might bee the more assured: hee did not only refuse it; but also, when the Childe was borne, and proued a Sonne, he proclaimed him King, taking onely to himselfe the tutelage of him, and the gouernment of the Realme during his minority. With intention in the meane time, to reforme it, beeing growne to great corruption, and almost vtterly decayed. And therefore, he abolished most of the olde Lawes, and ordained newe; by the vse whereof, the Lacedemonians flourished many yeares, aboue all the rest of the Gracians; insomuch, that they hadde the Dominion of al Greece, for some certain time.

20

30

40

50

Neuerthelesse, if we examine his Commonwealth, and the Lawes therof, we shall finde, that hee failed both in true prudence, & immortall Vertue. For whereas a good Law maker, ought to frame his Commonwealth, no lesse to Religion, Iustice, and Temperance, then to Fortitude, that it may stand and flourish, as well in time of peace, as in warre: his Lawes tended principally, to make the people valiant and warlike: whereupon it followed, that the Lacedemonians flourished so long as they had warres. But when they came to enioy peace, they fel to decay within a while, as Aristotle noteth, whereby the error of Lycurgus evidently appea-

Plato in Licurgus.

Lycurgus earnestly solicted by his Brothers wife to mary with her.

Of the lawes of the Lacedemonians, reformed by Licurgus.

How Licurgus erred in framing his Commonwealth rather for warre then peace.

Arist. in Polit. Lib. 2. cap. 7.

appeared. For, as peace is not ordayned for warre, but warre for peace, as motion and labour is ordained for rest (in which respect, Cicero saith: Warre is to be vnderaken, so that peace may bee attained thereby.) So in like manner, a Commonwealth is rather to bee framed and ordained for peace, then for warre, and yet for both, that it may stand by both. In which respect, the Commonwealth of the Athenians, as Plutarch writeth, chose Pallas for their Patronesse, who was called both Polemica and Politica, thar is to say, Warlike and Ciuill. As also the Thebanes had for theirs, Hermonie, which was helde to bee the Daughter of Mars and Venus: whereby they signified, that the hermony of a Commonwealth, consisteth in the consonance and coniunction of Military and Ciuill Discipline. Which also Iustinian specified, in the institutes of the Ciuill Law, saying; Imperatorium maiestatem, &c. It is conuenient, that the Imperial Maiestie bee not onely decked and adorned with Armes, but also defended with Lawes.

But in the Commonwealth of the Lacedemonians, this was no way performed. For the Lawes of Licurgus, tending only to make them strong, laborious, and valiant: could not make them Religious, iust, and truly temperate, which for Ciuill Discipline, and peaceable gouernment, is most requisite. As for Lawes tending to Religion, we find none made by Lycurgus, nor any religious act of his, but onely one more ridiculous then Religious. As hee that dedicated an Image to Laughter, which hee made a God, or (at least) would haue to be worshipped as a God, to make the people mery at their publicke Feasts and meetings. And as for Lawes pertaining to Iustice, he made few, and one among the rest, which opened a great gappe to Iniustice, and to all cozenages and deceipt. For he ordained that it should be lawfull for any man, to steale any kinde of meate, so that he were not taken or discovered in the dooing of it. And that Boyes and Children should haue so little allowed them to eate, that they should be forced to proule & steale for their better prouision, to make them thereby the more industrious, nimble, & quicke of spirit: and others, more warie and watchfull, to keepe well that which they had in so much, that he which could steal most cunningly, was most commended.

But who doth not see, that this was the next way to fill the Commonwealth with Theeues? For, is it likely, that they (who from their Infancie) are brought vppe in stealing & pilfering trifles, wil afterward (when they haue got the full habit thereof) not forbear to steale things of greater importaunce? Or, can Theeues practise their occupation with more safetie ane way, to become in the end most expert, and thereby pernicious to the Commonwealth, then with the warrant, and vnder protection of the Lawe? Seeing the penaltie ordained for them that were taken with the manner, was not inflicted for the Iniustice of the fact, but for their lack of skil and dexterity in the performance, which must needs make euery one labor to excell in the act of Theeuery. Finally, when the Law not onely permitteth but also induceth men to deceiue somtimes, and in some thinges, doth it not also dispose, and, as it were, direct them to deceiue as often, and howsoeuer they may? Therefore, good and wise Law-Makers seeke to preuent euils, and to cut off the occasions of vice; and not to administer matter or occasion thereto, which in our corrupt Natures, breedeth a bridle to restraine it, and not a spurre to pricke it forward.

And this may also be saide, in respect of another Law of Lycurgus, inducing to intemperance, and al kind of incontincie. For, although hee ordayned some thinges notably, for the education of youth, tending (as it seemed) vnto the repression of Concupiscence and dissolute life (as a verie spare and homely diet, hard bedding of Reeds, or as some write, no beds at al, continual labor and exercife, one only Garment for the whole yeare, and such like) yet it appeareth, that his meaning was no other therein, but only to make them able to endure the labour and toile of warre.

For he ordained other lawes, so much in fauour and furtherance of Lust and all carnality, yea in the verie worst kind, that it may be iustly saide, he made his whole Commonwealth, worse then a Burdello. For he instituted certaine W rafflings & Daunces, with other exercifes of Boyes and Wenches naked, to be done in publicke at diuers times in the yeare, in the pre-

Cicer. in Offic. lib. 2.

Plut. in Phocione & pelopida.

Iustin. Institut. in prœmio.

Whereto the Lawes of Licurgus tended.

A ridiculous Law of Licurgus.

Plut. in Licurgo

Cunning Theft and deccit allowed of in the laws of Licurgus.

Contending for excellēce in theeuetic.

The care and respect of good Law-makers.

Another Law of Licurgus, inducing intemperancie and incontincie.

Iustine in lib. 3.

Plut. in Licurgo

Abfurd lawes of Licurgus, tending to lafciviousneffe.

Leuit. 20. 10. Lex Inlia.

Adultery permitted by Lycurgus.

Plut. in Licurgo

Arist. in Polit. Sib. 2. Cap. 7. The overthrow of the Lacedemonians at the plaine of Leuctra. Plut. Narrati- one amator. Diod. Siculus in l. 15. c. 14. cap. 20. m. 3.

Licurgus and Solon accounted by antiquity, mirrors of Law-makers.

presence of both old and young men. but what effect it might worke in the mindes and manners of their Cittizens, a man may easily iudge. Especially, seeing both their Lawes and Customes permitted, that men should be enamored of Boyes, which was held for lawdable, and necessarie for their good education: it beeing presumed, that their louers woulde carefully enstruct them in vertue and honesty.

Furthermore, Adultery, which was punnished with death, not onely by the law of Moyfes, but also by the law of the Romaines, and other Nations, as a thing pernicious to any Commonwealth, was not onely permitted, but also approoued by Lycurgus his law. Ordaining, that if an olde man married a yong Wife, shee might (with her husbands license) make choise with any yong man that she liked, to haue a childe by him, which hir Husband brought vp as his owne. And if a valiant or vertuous man (as good Souldiers were there termed) liked well of anothers mans wife, hee might demaunde leaue of her husband, to haue yssue by her, which was not denied, but thought conuenient for their Commonwealth, to maintaine a good race or breede of Valiant man therein, as Plutarch testifyeth, in defence of this Law of Lycurgus. This then being so, what meruaile is it, that al sinne of the flesh and beastlines, raigned more in Lacedemon, then any where else in Greece, as Aristotle witnesseth? Nay what wonder was it, that almighty God (of his iust iudgement) plagued them for it in the end, with a memorable overthrow at the plaine of Leuctra? Where they lost the Dominion of Greece, by the occasion, and for the punnishment of an horrible Rape, committed by two of their Cittizens.

But to conclude, concerning Licurgus and Solon, I will not stand vpon other things, reproued by Aristotle in the lawes of Lycurgus: seeing it is euident inough, by that which I haue touched before; that these two mirrors of Law makers (for so were Solon and Licurgus accompted of al antiquity) may serue no lesse then others of meaner marke, for examples of mens infirmities, and weaknesse of wit in matters of Commonwealth. To whom, I will now adde Plato and Aristotle, who, although they founded no Commonwealths, as the other two did; yet, they framed (in writing) either of them one, wherein they laboured to shew, both the excellencie of their owne wit, and the perfection of humane policy; yet therein notwithstanding, they euidently declared the weaknesse of both.

For, what can bee more absurd or impious, then the community which Plato ordained in his Commonwealth? Not only of goodes and possessions, but also of women? which was done to the end, that no man should haue any thing proper or peculiar to himselfe: infomuch, that fathers & mothers should not know their own children, neither yet any child know his owne Parents. VWhereby hee thought, to establish such a perfect vnity in the Commonwealth, that no man should be able to say; this is mine, or this is thine, but euerie man haue a generall care of all. Whereas, if that Lawe were put in practise, the vtter ouerthrow of the Commonwealth, and of all humane society must needs follow thereon. For Matrimonie beeing taken away, and such a promiscuous and beastly procreation introduced: the Naturall loue betwixt Parentes and their Children; Bretheren, Kinsfolkes, and Allies, all Consanguinity, Kindred, and Affinity, wold be quite abolished. Horrible Incest betweene Kinsfolkes, Brother and Sister, Father and Daughter, Mother and Son (which all Nations abhorre) would ordinarily be committed, and in occasion of quarrels (which somtimes could not be auoided) one Brother would kill another, the Father the Sonne, and the Son the Father, through want of knowing one another: beside very manie other inconueniences, declared verie perticularly, and at large, by Aristotle in his Politickes. He proueth also very euidently, that the vnitie which Plato sought to establish in his Commonwealth by law, would not follow thereon, whereby appeared his double error. All which I omit for breuities sake, to speake a worde or two of another Lawe of his. Hauing ordained, that young men shold for encrease of their strength and agilitie of bodie, exercise themselues Naked at certaine times, and in certaine places appointed for that purpose, called Gymnasia; he commanded also (not as Licurgus did in Lacedemonia, that young Girles and Wenches should daunce Naked among Boyes; but farre more absurdlie) that

Plato in lib. de Legibus.

The impious Lawes of Plato in his Commonwealth.

Promiscuous and beastly Procreation in the Lawes of Plato.

Arist. in Polit. l. 2. c. 1, 2, 3, 4.

Another most absurd Platonicall Law.

that Weomen, in the flower of their youth, should Dance, Wraſtle, Runne, Ride, and do all exerciſes with yong Naked men, as well as they. Which (ſaith he) whoſoeuer miſliketh, vnderſtandeth not howe profitable it is for the Common-wealth.

But who coulde imagine, that the Prince of Phyloſophers (for ſo was Plato eſteemed) could ſo farre forget himſelfe, as, hauing inſtituted and framed his Commonwealth, to all kinde of vertue; as the onely meanes to arriue at perfect felicity: for which purpoſe, he gaue notable documents and Precepts; & made excellent Lawes concerning all vertues: and among the reſt, touching chaſtitie: who, I ſay, conſidering this, could imagine, that this Profeſſor, Maiſter, and teacher of Vertue; this commender and Commander of Chaſtitie; woulde not onely permit, but alſo ordaine a thing ſo contrarie to his owne profeſſion, to the end of his Commonwealth, and vnto his owne Lawes, Precepts, and Counſels, as the laſciuious Aſpect of naked women? Whereby, the fire of Concupiſcence being kindled in men, and the bridle of Naturall modeſtie taken from weomen: what elſe could followe thereon, but all beaſtly diſſolution, and Carnallitie of life, as well in the one, as other?

For, Precepts are giuen, and Lawes ordained in vaine, againſt incontinency; when the occaſions, prouocations, and nourishments thereof, are permitted. Which whoſoeuer vſeth to admit, playeth with the flame, as the Flie doth, and commonly is burned thereby. How many do wee ſee daily ouercome with vice, and eſpecially that of the fleſh, becauſe they will not forbear the occaſions? we may put fire to ſtraw when wee will, but we cannot quench it when wee will. It is in our owne power and choiſe to combat with our enemy, but the victorie is not in our hands. Euen ſo, we may eaſily enter into the conſlict; and admit the allurements of ſinne when we liſt, but cannot ſo eaſily ouercome it, nor yet retyre our ſelues when we liſt: And therefore, in this kinde of combat, the verieſt Coward gets the victorie, that is to ſay, hee which flieth away at the firſt, or rather dare not abide, to ſee ſo much as the face of his enemies. In which reſpect, the Holy-ghoſt aduiſeth vs, Fugite a fornicatione, Fly from fornication. And, Iuueni'ia deſideria fuge, Fly from all the luſts of youth. And again, Sicut a facie Colubri, fuge peccata, As from the face of a Serpent, ſo fly & run away from ſinne. Whoſoeuer delighteth to admit the occaſions; whoſoeuer, I ſay, doth not ſhut vp the doores and windowes of his eyes & ears, againſt the enticements of luſt, but is content to entertaine them into the ſecret Cabinet of his heart, although hee were ſtronger then Sampſon, holier then Dauid, and wiſer then Salomon, let him make account to be vanquiſhed as they were.

Therefore Ariſtoile, Platoes Scholler, knowing how eaſily men are corrupted, by the hearing and ſight of wanton and laſciuious obiects; and eſpecially, Children (whoſe firſt impreſſions of good or bad, are hardly remoued euer after) ordained in his written Commonwealth, that they ſhould be kept from the hearing of wanton talk, and from the ſight of laſciuious Comedies, and ſuch other representations as might moue them to carnal cogitations, which enflame concupiſcence to all inordinate appetites. In reſpect whereof, hee commaunded, that Magiſtrates ſhould not ſuffer in the Commonwealth, any diſhoneſt Images, or wanton pictures, which might repreſent anie vn-cleane or laſciuious act to the beholders: Which when I conſider, I cannot but lament the little care that is commonlie had thereof, in any Chriſtian Commonwealthes; where, not onely moſt mens mouths overflow with beaſtly and diſhoneſt talke, but alſo al places are furniſhed with wanton and laſciuious pictures and Images, euen as with ſpecial ornaments. Being kept likewise in their Bed-chambers, and moſt ſecret Cloſets and Retreats, for ſatiſying their libidinous eies; and prouoking their ſpent and languiſhing Luſt, with the frequent and greedie aſpect of them. I am aſhamed to ſay the reſt, or that I haue ſayed ſo much, conſtrained thereto by the iuſt grieſe, which I conceiue for ſo great an abuſe, that hauing beene forbidden and diſallowed by Paynims, is neuertheleſſe permitted among Chriſtians.

But to returne from whence I digreſſed. I conclude, that theſe Platonical laws had been more fit for a Sardanapalus, or a Rrr Helio.

1. Cor. 6, 18.
2. Timi 2, 22.
Ecclef. 2 1; 2.

Sin prevented, is halfe conquered.

an- his on

An excellent order taken by Ariſtoile, forbidding wan on talk, and laſciuious pictures. Ariſt. in Polit. Lib. 7 Cap. 17.

The ſmal care in Chriſtian Commonwealthes be- moaned.

That which hath beene diſallowed by Paynims, is ſuffered by Chriſtians.

Plato accounted to be the Prince of Philoſophers.

Plato contrary to himſelfe, allowing young women in the companie of naked men.

Lawes ordained in vaine againſt Vice, when the occaſions thereof are permitted.

What remaineth not in our power we haue no command of.

Plato professed to bee a Physition of soules.

Heliogabalus, if they had written of Commonwealth affairs: then for a Plato, who professed himselfe to bee a Physition of soules, a reformer of manners, a teacher of temperance, and the Schoolemaister of all Vertue; so blinde is man, be hee neuer so wise, without the light of Gods grace. But perhaps, some may thinke that Aristotle, his Scholler (who was the wonder of the world for his wit, and vnderooke to censure and findicate him, and all other Lawe-makers before him) saw clearer into matters of Law & Commonwealth, then they. Let vs then examine him a little, and we shall find, that he erred more absurdly, then anie one of them.

Arist. in Polit. lib. 2. cap. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8.

Two absurde Lawes of Aristotle.

As may appeare by two of his lawes: whereof the one was, that if a man had any deformed or lame child, he should cast it out like a whelp, and expose it to perrish. And the other was, that if a man had about a certain number of children, which number hee would haue to be determined, according to euery mans abilitie, his wife should destroy the fruite in her wombe, when she found that she had conceiued. Wherin he shewed himselfe more vnnaturall and inhuman, then the verie brute beasts. For, as Cicero saith verie well. These two thinges cannot agree together, to wit; that Nature would haue procreation; and yet, when the Creature is borne, that it should nos be beloued and conserued. Which appeareth evidently, saith he, in brute Beastes, whose labour and care in conseruation of that which is borne of them is such, that we may acknowledge the force and voyce of Nature therein. Wherefore, it is manifest, that as we Naturally shun and abhorre all kinde of grieffe, so should we bee likewise moued to loue the yssue of our Bodies. Elsewhere also he saith; Whereas it is common to all liuing creatures, to haue a care of those things which they haue brought forth: Euen so, Nature hath giuen specially to man, a loue to his Children, and a care to prouide them of all things necessarie. Thus saith he, and common experience teacheth as much.

Arist. in Polit. lib. 7. cap. 16.

Cicero de finib. Lib. 13.

Cicero in Offic. lib. 1.

The absurdity and inhumanitie of Aristotles Lawe, for the exposition of lame & deformed Children.

What then can bee more dissonant from reason and Nature, then that a mā who is borne, and Naturally enclined to Clemencie, Humanity, and Pietie; should shew himselfe vnkinde and inhumaine, not towards Beasts, but towards men; not towards strangers, Friendes, or Seruants, but towards his own children? And that for no fault of theirs, but for some defectes or deformitie of bodie, which they could not remedy, but ought rather to moue pittie and compalsion in a man, then rigour or crueltie. Beside, such corporall defectes, doo not for the most part, hinder the operation of the minde and vnderstanding. Therefore, it may well happen (by execution of this inhumaine Lawe of Aristotle) that not onely a Father thalbe deprived of a good Sonne: but the Commonwealth also, looseth a necessarie and notable Member. For as Seneca saith: Ex casa vir magnus exire potest, et ex deformi, humilique corpusculo formosus animus, & magnus. A notable man may come out of a poore Cottage: and a beautifull and high minde, out of a lowe and deformed body. Could Corporall imperfections and deformities exclude AEsop from the number of Phylosophers? Or take from Cræsus the reputation of a most excellent & wise prince? Hee Wrote of himselfe (hauing inuited Anacharsis the Phylosopher to come to his Court) That although Nature hadde made him deformed, Crook backt, one eyed, lame of a Legge, a Dwarfse, and, as it were a Monster among men: yet he thought himselfe so monstrous in nothing, as in that hee had no Phylosopher in his Court, and of his Counsell.

10

20

30

40

50

The like may bee saide of a notable, though verie deformed Byshop of Cullen; of whose great Wisedome and Vertue, William of Malmesbury, giueth testimonie, declaring the occasion of his advancement, to that great Arch-Byshoppricke, in this manner:

*An Emperor of Germanie, saith hee, being a Hunting, and wandering by chance with verie few or none with him, in a Morning, vpon the Sunday before Lent, cal'ed Quinquagesima, came vnto a poore parish Church, dissembling himselfe to bee a Souldier, and desired to heare Masse. The Parish Priest, being a man so deformed of bodye, that he was Pex portentum Naturæ, almost a Monster of Nature, saide Masse before him. And as the Emperor wondered with himselfe, that Almighty God, who is of infinite beauty and Maestie, would suffer so deformed a creature to do him such high se uice, it chanced that the Priest, reading*

Deformity of body doth not preiudice the beauty of the minde.

Sen. ad Lucul. Epist.

King Cræsus, very deformed of body, yet a wise and excellent Prince.

Gnevara in vita Mar. Aurely

Guicli. Malmf. lib. 2. cap. 10.

A Storie of a deformed Priest, made Archbyshop of Cullen.

Psalme 100, 2

A note well strained, & in apt houre.

Arist. in lib. Ethic. 5. Cap. 11. Aristotle against himself

Arist. in Polit. lib. 7. Cap. 16. The absurdity of Aristotles law, concerning the destruction of children in their mothers wombe. Cic. in Orat. pro Cluentio.

ff. de penis Lib. Si aliquid parat. qui abortiu.

ding the Verse of the Tract, which was that day; Scitote, quoniam Dominus, &c. Know you that our Lorde is God, and that he made vs, and not we our selues; he pronounced that in such a different tune and voice, from that which he hadde reade before, that the Emperour tooke it as an apte answer to his present cogitation, and began to conceiue so reuerently of the Priest, (being further enformed of his life and vertue) that he made him Archbysbop of Gal- len, much against his wil, &c. Whereby appeareth the absurdity of Aristotles law. For, if it had beene in force; where this deformed Byshop was borne, the church had wanted a notable Pastour, and the Common wealth an excellent and spiri- tuall member.

Furthermore, it is manifest by Ari- stotle himselfe, that this Law of exposi- tion of Children, is most vniust and iniuri- ous vnto the Commonwealth. For, whereas he prooueth in his Ethicks, That a man may not kill himselfe: hee affirmeth among other thinges, That hee which be- sides the course and forme of Law, doth hurt another, who neither defendeth him selfe, nor hurteth him, doth iniury to the Comon- wealth. Therefore, how much more in- iurie is it, to destroy an innocent Childe, that can neither defende himselfe, nor hurt any other, and may (in processe of time) doo notable seruice to the Com- monwealth?

The like also may be said of the other Law of Aristotle, concerning abortion, or destruction of the Childe in the Mo- thers womb, being a thing seuerely puni- shed, by all good Lawes, as iniurious not only to Nature, but also to the common- wealth, which is thereby deprived of a designed Cittizen, as Cicero termeth it. So speaketh he of a Woman of Milesus in Asia, who hauing procured the abor- tion of her Child, a little before hir time of trauaile, was condemned vnto death. Neque iniuria (saith hee) quia designatum Reip. ciuem sustulisset. And verie iustly for that she made away one, that was designed to be a Cittizen of the Commonwealth. In which regard, the Ciuill Law doth grie- uously punnish all wilfull abortion, after Conception, whether the Childe haue life, or no: inflicting death, if the Childe were already quicke; and otherwayes, banishment, with Confiscation of the Offenders Goodes, if they be Noble, or

10

20

30

40

50

of account; and condemnation to digge in the Mines, if they be poore. Besides, our Cannonists do holde it to be a dead- ly sinne, either to procure abortion after conception (though the childe bee not quicke or voluntarily to hinder concep- tion, or to cause sterility: because it is (say they) Contra bonum prolis generanda; Against the good of generation, which Na- ture ordaineth, for the continuation of mankind, and maintenance of humane society. Therefore, whereas Aristotle himselfe aduiseeth, that the abortion bee procured after conception, before the Childe haue life, adding this reason, For that to do it after, were Nefas, a Wicked act.

His reason excuseth not his absurditie in this Lawe, and condemneth him of wickednesse in the former, concerning the exposition of Children. For, if it be a wicked act, to kill a quick Child before it be borne: much more wicked and cruell is the act; to expose it vnto destruction and death after it is borne; when it hath farre more sence and feeling of hurte; and Naturally mooueth more to com- passion.

But perhappes some will say, that hee which exposeth or layeth forth a Child, dooth not kill it: for, that it may happe (as manie times it hath) that the Childe may bee taken by some other, and nou- rished: as it chanced vnto Moyses, Romu- lus and Remus, Cyrus King of Persia, and diuers others.

Whereto I aunswere, that although the prouidence of GOD, ouercommeth manie times the mallice of man; yea, and turneth it to good: yet mans offence, is neuer a iotte the lesse, neyther can anie chance that happeneth after an acte, al- ter the Nature of the acte. I meane, it can neither rectifye it, if it bee ill done; nor make it ill, if so bee that it bee well done.

And therefore, I say, seeing reason and the Lawe of Nature commaundeth (as I haue shewed before) that euery one haue an especiall care, of the life & con- uersation of his Children, he which not onely forsaketh his owne Childe, that hath not anie way offended him; but al- so exposeth it to the perill of death, can- not be excused of vnnaturall dealing, in- humanitie and impietic; although some strager thold chance afterward, to proue

Syluester verb. Abortus. Arimlia ibid.

Arist. ibid. ut supra.

Aristotle con- futed by his own assertion

An obiection made & aun- swered.

Exod. 2, 5. Plat. in Remus. Iustin. in lib. 2.

A note well worth the ob- seruation in Fathers and Mothers.

more humane and pious toward it, then the Father himfelfe.

Well then, to conclude this point. I say of Aristotle, as Augustus Caesar said of King Herod (when he vnderstoode, that among the Innocents which he had caused to be killed, after the birth of our Sauiour, one of his owne Sons was flaine) It is better, quoth he, to be Herods Pigge, then his Sonne. And this he said, in regard that Piggess were not killed in Iudea, because the Iewes did not eate anie Swines Flesh. And euen so I say, it were better to bee a Beast in Aristotles Commonwealth, then a man, for Beastes shoulde bee assuredly cared and prouided for by their Dammes: whereas the Children of men, should bee in daunger to be forsaken both of Father and Mother, and so perish.

And heere I cannot forbear to say somewhat, of another Constitution of his, which I knowe not, whither it were more absurd or ridiculous. We made mention a little before, of a notable Law of his, forbidding in his Commonwealth, the vse of lasciuious Pictures & Images; least young men, and especialy children, might be corrupted in manners by sight of them. Neuerthelesse, he excepteth in the same Law, the Images and Pictures of certaine Gods: In whom (saith he) Custom alloweth Lasciuiousnesse. Meaning no doubt, the painted and graued Stories of the Adulteries of Iupiter, Mars, and Venus, and other Gods and Goddesses, set foorth euery where amongest the Paynims, as well in publicke places, as in their priuate Houses and Temples. Wherein may bee obserued, the ridiculous absurdity of this great Phylosopher, not only in matter appertaining to Religion, but also in matter of Commonwealth; yea, and concerning his owne law formerly mentiond. For, what could it auaille, to take away all other wanton pictures and representations that might corrupt the minds of youth, when he expressly alloweth the vse of Lasciuious Gods pictures, which must needs corrupt them much more, and as it were, instill into them, vicious affections & wils together, with their Religion, and by example of their Goddesses? For, by their imitation, they could not but hope to attaine, as well to perfection of Vertue, as to eternall beatitude and felicite, belee-

uing as they did; that they were true Gods?

For, how could any man bee perswaded, that Adulteric deserued punnishment, or was not a great, yea, a Diuine Vertue, seeing Mars taken tardy with Venus, or Iupiter stealing away Europa, in the shape of a Bull; or violating Leda, in the forme of a Swanne; or entering into the house of Danae (by the Louer) in a Golden showre? Would not anie man that were Religiously deuoted vnto these Gods, bee animated by sight of them to do the like? Yea, and Children, learning their Religion, and not only hearing, but also seeing euery where, by Pictures and Images, that such actes were committed by their Gods, could they imagine, that the same were euill, and not to be imitated?

This is verie well declared by Lucian, of his owne experience, who, in his Dialogues, maketh Menippus say thus: *When I was yet but a Boy, and heard out of Homer and Hesiodes, of the Adulteries, Fornications, Rapes, and seditions of the Gods, Truly I thought, that those thinges were very excellent, and began euen then, to be greatly affected towards them. For I could not imagine that the Goddess themselves would euer haue committed Adultery, if they had not esteemed the same to bee lawfull and good. The like also signifyeth Cherea in Terence, who beholding a Table, wherein was painted how Iupiter deceiued Danae, when he came in at the top of the house, saith; that hee was greatlie encouraged to defloire a yong Maid, by the example of so great a God. At quem Deum? (saith he) *Qui templa caeli summa sonitu concutit. Ego hominico hoc non facerem? Ego vero illud ita feci & lubens. But what God was this? Euen hee, which shakes the highest Temples of the Heauens vwith Thunder. And therefore, might not I, that am but a poore wretch, doe the like? Yes truely, I did it, and that with all my heart.

These are the effects, that the sight of such Lasciuious Pictures of the Goddesses, must needs worke in their minds which beholde them; and are withall, Religiously affected towards them. And therefore, Aristotle permitting these, and forbidding all other, to preuent thereby the wonderfull corruption of youth, may verie fitly bee compared vnto one, that should Macrob lib. 2.

Saturnal. cap. 4.

Herus owne onne slain among the In-nocents.

Another absurd error of Aristotle.

Lasciuious pictures and Images of Gods, absurdly allowed by Aristotle.

If Gods do a-misse, men presume to follow.

Mens mindes corrupted a-mongest the Gentiles, by the sight of the lasciuious pictures of their Goddesses.

Lucian in *Me-
nippo*.

Ter. in Eunuc.

Aristotles absurdity made plaine & manifest.

A verie true and apt Comparifon.

should make a Law to prohibite the burning of houfes, except it were with fome artificiall wilde fire, that could not bee extinguished. For fuch may be faid to be the fire of Concupifcence, kindled in the minds of men or Children, by Religious acts or representations, which maketh fuch impreffions, as neuer after can be rafed out againe, fo long as affection to the fame Religion remaineth. Which maketh me therefore to conclude, that Aristotle failed and erred no leffe, or rather more abfurdly, then the other Law-makers, whose errors hee censured and controlled.

Heereby two things are inferred, and do appeare evidently. The one, the weakneffe of mans wit, when it is not fupported and directed by the grace of GOD. And the infufficiencie of humaine lawes, through the weakneffe of the Law-Makers, who intending (manie times) to make good and wholefome Lawes, for benefit of the Commonwealth, doo ordaine things very inconuenient and prejudiciall thereto: which Cicero obserueth in fome of the Wifeft men of his time. I can tell you (faith hee) of Marcus Cotta, whose Law concerning priuate iudgements, was abrogated by his own Brother, the fame yeare that it was made. And the Lawes of Licia and Mutia, made by two most wife Consulles, were in the iudgements of al men not onely vnprofitable, but alfo, pernicious to the Commonwealth. As alfo the Lawes called Liuiæ, were abrogated by the Senate in an instant. And in like manner, I holde the Lawes Seixæ and Apulia to be nothing worth. Thus farre Cicero.

The like whereof might be exemplified in euery Commonwealth, but this fhall fuffice at this time, concerning Law-makers. Now let vs confider Law in it felfe, what it is; to what end it is ordained; and what it can perform in a Commonwealth, for the perfection & establishment thereof.

The weaknes of mans wit, and the imperfection of Lawes inferd vpon the premises.

Cic. de Reip. in fragmentis.

CHAP. V.

What Law is: To what end it was ordained.
And what it can performe in a Commonwealth.

10

20

30

40

50

Plato, speaking generally of all Law, as well written as vnwritten, defineth it to be, A reasonable rule, leading and directing men to theyr due end; for a publicke good, ordaining Penalties for them that transgresse, and Rewards for them that obey. And Cicero more briefly thus: Law is (saith hee) the highest or chiefe reason grasted in nature, commaunding those things which are to be doone, and forbidding the contrary. And againe, Law is the force of Nature; the vnderstanding and reason of a Wiseman; the rule of right and wrong. And speaking more perticularly of written Lawe, hee saith; It is the reason & vnderstanding of a Wiseman, who ordaineth in writing what he thinketh good by way either of commandement, or of Prohibitions. Lastly, the Ciuitians, most briefly and properly defineth it thus. Lex est sanctio sancta, iubens honesta, prohibens contraria. Law is a holy decree, that is to say, A Decree which ought not to be broken, commaunding good and holy things; and forbidding the contrary.

This Law, Plato calleth, The soule, that giueth forme and life to the Commonwealth, and the Anchor that staieth and assureth it. And Cicero sayth; That neither any house, nor Cittie, nor Nation, nor yet humaine kinde, can stand without Law. Neuerthelesse, how excellent or defectiue soeuer it is for a Commonwealth, yet it is to be vnderstood, that all Lawes whatsoever (which are meerey humaine) are Defectiue and insufficient, for the perfect Governement of a State. For whereas humaine Lawes consisteth eyther in Written Statutes or Decrees, or in the Commandements and Ordinances of a wise Magistrate (which Magistrate, Cicero therefore calleth, A Speaking Lawe; as he also calleth the Lawe, A dumb Magistrate,

*Pla. in Mino. de
Rep. et de Leg.*

*Cic. in lib. 1. de Legibus.
Idem.*

The definitiõ of written Law.

*Accus. in instit.
ff. de Legib. ci Scnat. cons. 3.*

Plato de Legib.

Cic. in lib. 3. de Legib.

All Lawes written or vn written, are defectiue.

The Magistrate a Speaking Law: & the Lawe a dumbe Magistrate.

gistrate) yet it is euident, that neyther of both apart, nor yet both concurring, can suffice.

For the first, whereas written Lawes are vniuersall, and concerne the action of men, which are infinite and perticuler, it is not possible, that any Law-Maker should extend his Lawes so farre, that they may sufficiently prouide for all cases that may occurre; but that hee must leaue place for the determination and iudgement of men, according to equity.

As not onely Aristotle, but also the Ciuilians themselues, doe teach, and experience is daily seene thereof. In the necessity of interpretation and mittigation of Lawes; in Dispensations, and in Appellations from Law to Conscience; whereby the imperfection of al written Lawes, sufficiently appeareth. And as for the ordinances of wise Magistrates, it is manifest (by that which I haue sayde before, concerning the errours of wise Gouvernors and Law-makers) that the weaknesse and blindnesse of mans wit, and the corruption of his Nature, is such; that hee can neither see so clearely in all cases, nor yet be so voide of affection and passion, that he can be able to determine, decree, and iudge according to equity. In which respect, Aristotle disputeth, Whether it were better, That a Commonwealth should be gouerned by good Lawes, or by the wil of the best man? And he preferreth the Gouvernment of Lawes, before the other, saying; The Law is (as it were) a pure and cleare vnderstanding: whereas the vnderstanding of the best man, is ioyned with sensual appetite, whereby it may bee corrupted.

And therefore, where the Law gouerneth, there God gouerneth: but where man gouerneth, be he neuer so wise and vertuous, there a cruell Beast (to witte; Concupiscence and Passion) entreth into the gouernment with him, and manie times obscureth his vnderstanding. For which cause, the Magistrate ought in all cases, wherein the meaning of the Law is cleare: to iudge and determine according to the prescript thereof, as the Ciuill Law it selfe ordaineth. And Cicero saith: As the Magistrate gouerneth the people, so shou'd the Law gouerne the Magistrate. Whereupon I inferre, that seeing no Law-maker can so sufficientlie prouide for the gouernement, and direct ruling of a Common-wealth, by the Letter of the Law; but he must leaue infinite cases, yea, and the interpretation of the Lawe themselues, to the determination and iudgement of men, who are also (on their part) defectiue, to wit; subiect vnto passion and error: It followeth then, that neither the Law without the Magistrate, nor the Magistrate without the Law, nor yet both concurring, can suffice for the perfect gouernment of a commonwealth, but should bee to supply the defectes of each other. And therefore I conclude, that there is no sufficient and assured meanes, to establish any State by humaine Lawes.

This will be more euident, if wee consider, what are the especiall ends whereto Lawes were ordained, and what they can perform. Two things are principaly intended by them. The one, the administration of Iustice, by the decision of causes, controuersies, and suites, betwixt partie and partie. The other, is the reformation of manners, and repression of vice, for that it is pernicious to a Commonwealth. Of the first I haue already spoken sufficientlie, as well in the weakenesse of the Law-maker and Magistrat, as imperfection of the Law, in the determination of causes. And therefore, I will a little further enlarge my selfe, concerning the latter; which is, suppression of Vice, and reformation of manners: and I will declare, that humaine Lawes cannot sufficientlie performe, either the one or other.

If Lawes were able to reforme mens maners, or to repress vice, they must do it, either by Precept; or by Prohibition, or by Permission, or by Rewarding, or by Punishing, for in these fiue things, consist al the force of human lawes, as the Lawiers do testify of themselues. For the two first, to wit; Precept & Prohibition, they are altogether vnable and insufficient, to bring the corrupt nature of man to any perfection or vertue. For, what other help haue we thereby, but only the knowledge of our duty? which knowledge alone, as Aristotle saith, Helpeth little or nothing to vertue, the praise and commendation whereof, consisteth in action and operation. Because it nothing auaieth, though wee know neuer so much, if we do not put our knowledge in practise. And as little it profiteth a sickeman, to know what meat is good for him: when hee hath such a loathing vnto it, that hee cannot eat it. Euen so, the

The imperfection of written lawes.

Arist. in Ethic. lib. 5. cap. 10. Iul. lib. 10. ad edictum ff. de legib. & Senatus constit. 3. et Iul. Lib. 89. diges.

The imperfection of vn-written lawes

Better to be gouerned by good Lawes, then by the wil of the best man, & why. Arist. in Polit. lib. 3. cap. 12.

Where good Lawes gouern God doth gouerne.

As a Magistrate should gouerne the people, so should the law gouerne the Magistrate. Iul. lib. 15. diges. ff. de legi. & Senat. constit. 3.

Cicer de legibus

No sufficient meanes to make a perfect Commonwelth, by humane Lawes & Magistrats.

Two principall endes wherinto humane Lawes do tend.

A reference to the former discourse.

ff. de legib. & Senat. constit. tit. 3. Isidor. l. b. 5. Etimol.

The force of human lawes consisteth in Precept, Prohibition, Permission, Reward and Punishment.

Arist. in Ethic. lib. 2. cap. 4.

the corrupt nature of man hath litle help or remedy by the knowledge of his duty: when vertue is so loathsome vnto him, that he cannot brooke it. For, as Seneca saith. Nihil proderit dare precepta, nisi prius amoueris obstantia preceptis. It is to litle purpose to giue precepts, except thou first remooue the obstacles of them. And therefore the Poet saide truely

*Si possem, sanior essem;
Sed trahit inuitum, noui vis, aliudq; cupido,
Mens alius suadet, video meliora, proboq;
Deteriora sequor.*

That is to say;
I would bee better, if I could; but a new and strange force draweth me against my will. Sensuallity perswades me one thing, and reason another. I see and approoue the better, but I follow the worse.

Also, the Apostle speaking in the person of our corrupt nature, testifieth the same, saying. Scio quia non habitat in me, &c. I know that there dwelleth no goodnes in me, that is to say, in my flesh: For I haue a good will or desire, but I cannot performe it. For I doe not the good which I desire to doe; but I do the euill which I would not do.

Thus farre the Apostle. Whereupon it followeth, that precept and prohibition of the Law (whereby wee haue the onely knowledge of good and euill) litle auayleth vs for the attayning of vertue; except the infirmitie and corruption of Nature, be cured by some other meanes. For Animus (saith Seneca) ut ad precepta possit ire, soluendus est. The Soule must be loosed from the bonds that tie and entangle it, or otherwise, it cannot follow the good precepts that are giuen.

But what if the prohibition of euill doe hurt also, if it be not otherwise holpen? The Apostle prooueth this clearly. Peccatum (saith he) non cognoui, &c. I knew not sinne, but by the Law, for I know not concupiscence, but because the law said: Thou shalt not lust. And sinne, by occasion of the Commaundement, hath wrought all concupiscence in me. And how true this is; common experience may teach vs, seeing nothing is more proper and peculiar to the mallice of mans Nature; then desire to doe that which is forbidden, and commonly for no other reason, but because it is forbidden. Which the Poet signifieth elegantly, saying;

*Cui peccare licet, peccat minus; ipsa potestas
Semina nequitia languidiora facit, &c.
Nitimur inuetitū semper, cupimusq; negasic interdictis imminet ager aquis.* (ta:

He which hath leaue to sinne, sinnes lesse: for the libertie to sinne, weakeneth the very roots and seeds of sinne. We alwaies strue to doe that which is forbidden vs, like to the sicke Man, who thirstes most after forbidden Water.

And another Poet saith to the same purpose. Gens humana ruit per vetitum nefas. Mankind runneth head long to sinne, when it is forbidden him. For euen as a torrent or Land-flood, running a violent and precipitous course, and meeting with any stop by the way, becomes the more furious, and with re-doubled force makes it selfe passage, bearing downe ail before it: Euen so, mans corrupt Nature, being carryed head-long with vabrideled desires, and finding it selfe repressed or hindred, by any Law or Commaundement; breaketh down the bankes or bounds of dutie with re-doubled fury, in such sort, that it committeth double offence, to wit; it doth not onely the desired euill, but breaketh the Law also. As the Apostle insinuateth, saying: Lex iram operatur, &c. The Law worketh or causeth wrath, for where there is no Law, there is no breach of Law. Whereupon Saint Augustine saith. The letter of the Law killeth, for it makes a man rather know euill, then eschew it, and by that meanes, rather encreaseth then diminisheth sinne: because mans concupiscence or unlawfull desire, is accompanied also with breach of the Law. Whereby it appeareth, that the Law in commaunding or forbidding, helpeth not sufficiently the reformation of mans corrupt nature.

But can Permission, or conuenience with euill (which is another point of the Law) worke any greater effect? Who seeth not, that it dooth nothing else, but bewray the imbecilitie and imperfection of the Law? Because it is forced to permit that, which it gladlie would, and should remedy, but cannot. And therefore I will proceede, to treat of Reward and Punishment, wherein, as Solon was wont to say, principally consisteth the gouernment of a Commonwealth. And Isidorus saith; Legis premio

Ouid. Lib. 3. de Arte amandi.

Mans corrupt nature thirsteth after things forbidden.

Horatius i. Carminū Od. 3:

An excellent comparison.

Rom. 4: 15.

In decerptis ex S. August.

Permission sheweth the imbecility of the Law.

Isidor. Lib. 5. Etimol.

Senec. Epist. 95
Precepts alone litle auale to the obtaining of vertue.

Rom. 7. 18. 19.

The precept and prohibition of the Law.

Senec. Epist. 95.

Rom. 7. 7. 8.

Prohibition (of it selfe) rather hurteth then otherwise.

10

20

30

40

50 aut

Of reward & punishment.

aut pana, vita moderatur humana. Mans life is wholly governed by reward or punishment of the Law.

Now then, for as much as these two have all their operation, about the effects of Vertue or Vice; that is to say; about good or bad actions (which are onely rewarded and punished by Law) and not about the rootes and causes thereof, to wit; the good or bad habits or affections of the mind, from whence doe spring all good and euill actions: It is manifest, that though they may be Motiues to good; yet they cannot be effectually and sufficient meanes to work it. For, so long as the cause remaineth; so long will the effects follow thereof, at one time or other. We see that trees are yearely lopped, and Vines cropped: yet while the rootes remaine sound, they bud afresh, and bring foorth new Boughes, Leaues, and Fruits. Euen so, although euill and sinfull Acts be punished in wicked men, yet if the causes from whence they proceede (to wit, inordinate affections and passions) be not taken away; they produce the very same effects sooner or later, openly or secretly. For, what commonly followeth on the punishment of a vicious Act, when the habit of the Vice remaineth: but that the offender sinneth more warilie another time? And how often do men offend the lawes, without punishment, yea, without any feare or danger thereof? That Man (saith Cicero) who feares nothing but a Iudge and a Witnesse: what will he not do in the dark? Or when he finds a weak and rich man alone, of whom he may safely haue the spoile?

Example by the yearely lopping of trees & vines.

Cicero de legib.

How many waies the penalties of politicall Lawes may be escaped.

Plutar. in Solon

Furthermore, how many waies may the penaltie of the Law bee auoyded? Some escape it by their power, in which respect, Anacharsis compared Lawes to the Spiders Web: which takes onelie the little Flyes, while the great ones breake thorough it. Some againe auoyde it by corruption, either of the Iudge, Witnesse, or Iurie. And some by fauour or friendship. Others by negligence of Officers, which doe not execute the Lawes: And some by the Princes pardon. But what shall we say of such, who offend the Law, not onelie without punishment; but also with reward? To the ende, that this may the better appeare, and that wee may see

10

20

30

40

50

(withall) what force Law may haue, for suppressing the mallice of mans nature: let vs consider the power of a contrarie Law, which encountreth euery Common-wealth, and impugneith Politicall Law, to wit, the Law of the Flesh, whereof the Apostle saith. Video aliam legem, &c. I see another Law in my body, repugnant to the Law of my minde. And for as much, as this Law hath also her Precepts, Prohibitions, Rewards, and Punishments: Let vs put it in a Ballance with the Ciuill and Politicall Law, weighing the one with the other, that we may see, whether wil be like to ouercome, in a man deuoyd of Gods grace, & consequently in Common-wealths, that relye onely vpon humane pollicie and power.

Rom. 7. 23.

An exact comparison of politicall Law, with the Law of the Flesh, to shew the aduantage of the later.

It is therefore to be considered, that the Carnall Law, flowing from the very bottome of mans corrupt Nature; is so much stronger, and more forcible, then the other, to moue and draw him: by how much it is more internall and familiar with him, and the end or scope thereof more agreeable, and consonant to his corrupt humour, will, and affection. For Politicall Law tendeth onely to Bonum verum, and Bonum commune, A true good, and the common good, consisting in solide & perfect vertue: whereas the Carnall Law tendeth to Bonum apparens, and Bonum priuatum; An apparent and priuate good, consisting onely in a Mans owne profit, pleasure, and delectation, whereto every one is (of his owne corrupt nature) enclined.

Wherunto the Politicall and Carnall Lawes doe tend.

The like also may be said, of the Statutes and Decrees both of the one and other, that is to say; their Precepts and Prohibitions: consisting in Commaundements Negatiue and Affirmatiue. Wherein the Carnal Law hath also the like aduantage, in respect of the greater facilitie of the precepts thereof, and difficulty of the things it forbiddeth. For, whereas the Ciuill and Politicall Lawe commaundeth vs, to loue our Neighbours as our selues, and to preferre the publique good before our priuate; to be temperate and continent; not to Steale; not to deceiue; not to commit Fornication or Adultery: The Law of the Flesh, being opposite in all, commaundeth the contrary; as to loue our selues better then our Neighbours; to prefer

The Statutes of both the Lawes, politicall and carnall.

The opposition of the law of the flesh.

The Carnall Laws precept

preferre our priuate good before the publique; to steale; to deceiue for our commodity; and to commit Fornication and Adultery for our pleasure And to conclude all, in one precept, it saith:
Ede, bibe, lude, post mortem nulla vo-luptas. Eate, drinke, and be merry, for after death there is no pleasure.

Wisd. 2, 6, 7, 8
10, 11.

The Statutes of the carnall Law.

The Statutes of the Carnall Law, the Holy Ghost layeth downe notably, in the Booke of Wisedome, speaking of wicked men, in these wordes. *Dixerunt impij, &c. The wicked said. Let vs enioy the goods that we haue, and vse the Creature in this time of our youth, without delay. Let vs fill our selues with Wine and Oyntments, and let vs not loose the floure of the time, &c. Let vs leaue euery where the signes of our mirth, for this is our part, and this is our lot. Let vs oppresse the poore iust Man, and let vs not spare the Widdow, nor haue respect to the hoary Haires of any.
And let our strength be the Law of injustice.* These are the Statutes of the Flesh, which how much more consonant and agreeable they are to mans corrupt Nature, and how much more easie to be performed, then the statutes and decrees of Politicall Law, which commaunds and forbids the contrarye;
I neede not to declare.

Mans prompt nesse and for-wardnesse to learne euill.

But who knoweth not, that to learn Vice, a man hath no neede of any great wit, or of a Councillour, or of compulsion? who is so simple, that he hath not wit enough to be wicked? Whereas, to be vertuous, we neede not onely wit and capacity, Maisters & Teachers:
but also Lawes, stripes, Prisons, Giues and Gibbets. And yet, as Seneca saith;
We may thinke we profit well, if we be none of the worst. So that, he which is eyther left to his own corrupt Nature, or hath no other then humane help: is drowned in vice and sinne, before hee come within a kenning of vertues port. We are (saith Seneca) taken vp by the way; wee labour to come to Vertue, being already entangled and intercepted by vice: And no maruaile, seeing men voyde of Grace, (for such I speake of) haue neither sufficient Armes to defend themselues, nor refuge where to saue themselues. For reason, which is their onely Weapon, not being strengthened by Grace: is so weak and brickle, that it breaketh at the first blow. And Morall Vertue (where-Seneca in Epist.

75.

Seneca ubi supra.

Reason the only weapon, being strengthened by grace.

in consisteth all their hope and refuge) is so hard to be attained: that a man receiueth many deadly wounds of his Enemy, before he can arriue where it is.
Besides, his danger is the greater, because his Warre is so domesticall and intestine; that hee is not secure from harne himselfe. For, he is to fight, not onely with the World and the Deuill:
but also with his owne passions and affections, in so much, that his greatest feare may be; least he himselfe betray himselfe, and render himselfe Prisoner to his Enemy.

Furthermore, wee see that our pro-cliuity to Vice, and auersion from Ver-tue, is such, that as it sufficeth to flesh a Dogge onelie once vpon a Sheepe, to make him a Sheepe-wurrier as long as he liues: Euen so, one onely tast of vice is enough, to make a man vicious euer after. Whereas contrariwise, many acts are requird, to the attaining the ha-bite of any one vertue, and so timely is mans friendship with sensualitie, the Mother of Vice, and so late his knowledge and vse of reason, which leadeth to vertue: that he hath gone halfe the way to Vice, before hee know where Vertue dwels.

By meanes whereof, he commonlie groweth to bee vicious very earlie; to wit, in his Childe-hood, and vertuous very late, if euer he prooue vertuous at all. For the way to vertue is long, and full of difficulties; but the way to al kinde of vice, is easie, and, as Sa'omon saith; Complanata lapidibus, Made plaine with stones, euen, and wel paved, short, and gone in a trice. Hesiodus saith, Haud procul illa habitant, breuis est via qua sit eundem. Vice dwelleth not farre from vs, the way is short, and all in a descent. Whervpon the Poet saith; Facilis descensus Auerni; The descent to Hell is very easie. Finally, of these two waies our Sauiour saith. *Lata porta & spatiosa via est, &c.
The way is broad and spacious that leadeth to perdition, and many enter in thereat: but the Gate is strait, and the way is narrow, which leadeth to life, and few men finde it.*
Thus we see, what great aduantage the Law of the flesh hath, of the Politicall Law, in respect of the facilitie that men finde, to fulfill the precepts thereof, which (in some) are nothing else, but to be vicious.

Vice is very easily learned but vertue very hardly.

Men learne halfe the way to vice, before they know vertues dwell-ling.

Eccle. 27, 10.

Hesiodus.

Virgil in Lib. 6
Aeniad.

Mat. 7, 13, 14.

The aduan-tage that the carnall Law hath of the politicall law.

The Carnall Law hath her Aduocates, Orators, Philosophers and Teachers.

The doctrine of Epicurus & his followers.

Metrodorus a Disciple of Epicurus.

Idem in his Treatise, that a man cannot liue merily in the Sect of Epicurus.

Phil. 3, 19.

Youth corrupted by lasciuious books and ballads.

But wanteth it any thing, wherewith Politicall Lawe is furnished? Hath not she them in as high a degree, and able to hold equall competence? Hath not this Carnall Law (thinke you) her Aduocates, Orators, Philosophers, & Teachers, to publish and proclaime it, to plead it, to teach it? What say ye to all the Sect of Epicurus? Whose Doctrine consisted principally in the Precepts of this Law, and impugning (as much as he durst) the Ciuill and Politicall Law? In which respect, al Epicurians were banished out of many good Common-wealthes of Greece; as Plutarch testifieth, and that worthily. For Epicurus hauing made a demaund, in certaine questions which hee wrote, whether a wise man would not doe against the Political Law, if he might be sure to escape vnpunished? answered freely thereto himselfe, Yes truly. And writing to Idomeneus, one of his Schollers, he admonished him seriously; not to subiect himselfe to the Lawes and opinions of Men, when soeuer he might hope to auoid the penalty of the lawes. And Metrodorus, a Disciple and familiar friend of his, writing to his Brother: forbad him to go to the warres, or endanger himselfe for the good of all Greece; aduising him, rather to drinke good Wine at home, and entreate himselfe well, that his body might receiue all pleasure and contentment. Concluding, that the chiefe and soueraigne good, consisteth in the belly, and in the pleasures therof. This is the Philosophy that belongeth to the Law of the flesh, and experience sheweth, what number of professors there are thereof in euery Common-wealth. Quorum Deus venter est, as the Apostle saith; Whose bellies are their Gods. Whose endeours tend to nothing, but to their priuate pleasure & commodity. Who imploy their wits, studies, and pens, to nothing so much, as to publish and promulgate the Carnall Law, in amorous and lasciuious Books, wanton Poems, and scurrillous bawdy Ballads, which abound euery where, to the corruption of youth, and consequently, to the prejudice of the Commonweale, & to the great shame of Magistrates, that see and suffer it.

Moreouer, to the end we may see, that this Carnall Law will yeild in nothing to the Politicall: hath it not also Common-wealths wherein it gouerneth, and a prudence and pollicy appropriate vnto it? Yea, pollicicke Princes and Magistrates that practise it, and politick writers that teach and maintaine it? Looke vpon all tyrannicall States, where all is ruled according to the precepts of this Law: doe Magistrates and Gouvernours practise any other pollicy, but Prudentiam carnis; as the Apostle calleth it, The Prudence and wisdom of the flesh? And Machiauell, whose workes are so highly esteemed of many men at this day: doth he teach any other government, then that which proceedeth from the principles of this law, to wit; from selfe loue, and perticuler interest? Yet this were not so much to be wondred; at if it had not also a Religion conforme to it selfe, with Doctours and Diuines, to Preach and defend it. For as Politicall Law, hauing the help and assistance of true Religion, is more perfect, and worketh far greater effects in the Common-wealth, for the establishment and conseruation thereof: So also hath the Carnall Law, being masked with the Vizard of some Religion, eyther true or false, is of farre greater force, to ouerthrow or destroy any Common-wealth. And therefore it seeketh alwaies, to haue eyther the apparance and shew of true Religion, (in which respect, Machianell teacheth his Tyrant to be an Hippocrite) or else it serueth it selfe, with some new fangled and false Religion: which the Apostle signifieth, when amongst Opera carnis, The workes of the flesh, he numbred Sects of Heresies.

But perhaps you will say, that the other Law (in rewarding and punishing) surmounteth this, and represseth it in such sort, that it can haue no force in any wel gouerned Commonwealth. Let vs then examine this a little, and we shal finde: that the Politicall Law hath no oddes of this in that point, for it hath rewards and punishments also, as well as the other. The rewards which this Law proposeth, are diuets; for it promiseth (for some thinges) the pleasure & delight which is taken in the action, with the which, the party thinketh himselfe so well satisfied: that he is contented (many times) to bestow his Mony, yea, to venter his life to obtaine it.

Some-

The Carnall Law hath Common-wealths wherein it gouerneth.

Rom. 8.6.

Machiauell de Principe.

The Carnall Law hath Religion and doctours and Preachers.

Gal. 5.20.

The rewards which the law of the Flesh proposeth.

Sometimes againe, it proposeth some commoditie or benefit, which may accompany or follow the fact. And lastly, it findeth meanes (otherwhiles) to rob vertue of her reward, and apply it to it selfe: in so much, that there is no remuneration promised by the Politicall Law, whereof the Carnall may not sometimes giue hope, to such as follow it. As I will make eident, by comparison of the one with the other: whereby it shall appeare, that the Carnall Law hath euery where the aduantage.

Therefore (I say) that the rewardes proposed for Vertue by the Politicall Law, are vncertaine, in respect of the other, for neither is ther any at all assigned for very many good actes, neyther are all those rewards promised, performed. Whereas on the contrary, the rewards of Vice, are commonly more certaine, for eyther they goe before the act (as it falleth out in bribes, and many other cases of vnlawfull gaine, where the reward is paid before hand) or else they accompany the fact (as in all cases of intemperance and incontinen- cy, wherein onely pleasure is sought, or in cosenages and deceipts, which bring present gaine) or else they follow vpon the deede, as when some vnlawfull act is done, vpon promise of future pay. So that, for Vice the reward is alwaies eyther assured, or (at least) hoped for and expected; which is no smal Motiue to induce men thereto. But for vertue, neither is there any reward to bee had many times, nor yet hope of any by politicall Law, as we see by experience in very many Men, who liue laudably in the Common-wealth all their liues: and yet are so farre from hauing any remuneration, or from expecting any; that they thinke themselues happy, in that they can escape the penalties of the Law.

But let vs procede a little further. Is there any reward for vertue, so assured by Politicall Law, that Vice cannot; yea, doth not obtaine it daily? Hath it not honour (many times) for reward, as well as Vertue? Who sooner riseth to the highest offices, and credit in some Courts: then the Ministers of the Princes pleasures, or Instruments of his wickednesse? As Seianus, vnder the Empe- ror Tiberius. Two Slaues, called Narcis- sus and Pallas, vnder Claudius. Tigellinus, vnder Nero. Pexennius, Cleander, Regi- us, Iulianus, and other Slaues, vnder Comodus. All which men, governed both the Emperours, and the Empire: to whom I might adde diuers other, if I thought it conuenient. For, whether wee looke to former times, or to the present: we shall finde euery where, as many aduanced by euill meanes, as by good. For no man is so wicked: but if he haue Mony, he may hope for any pre- ferment whatsoeuer.

Curia pauperibus clausa est, dat census hono- Censu amicitias, pauper ubiq; iacet. (res,

The Court (saith the Poet) is shut vp to poore men: but wealth giueth honours, wealth giueth friendship, and the poore Man lyeth euery where in the dust.

And if we consider also, how Princes doe commonly bestow their rewardes: wee shall see that merit is least respec- ted. Which Phillip de Comines sheweth by a pleasant example, of Lewes the elea- uenth, King of Fraunce, and Charles Duke of Bourgundy. Who, after the battaile (which was fought betwixt them at Montlebery in France) being de- termined to reward and punish such, as had deserued well or ill in their Arnies, and finding, that diuers ranne away on both sides, while the battel was doubt- full (some on the one side an hundred Miles East-ward, and others on the o- ther side, as many West-ward) the K. of France tooke from one of his Subiects, all his Offices and dignities for running away, and gaue it to another that ranne ten miles further then he. The Duke of Bourgundie deprived also one of his, of all his goods and authority, for the like cause, & within a while after, gaue him more then euer hee had before. Whereby (saith Comines) it appeareth, that Princes bestow their rewardes and fa- uours, not like Angels, but like Men, as they are.

Seeing then, that Vice hath not one- ly perticular rewardes, either of gaine or commoditie, or of pleasure at least, (which contenteth some more then Gold) but also hope of the rewards due to vertue it selfe, eyther by the Princes error or infirmitie, or by his fauour, or by

The two laws compared to- gether.

The reward for vertue ve- ry vncertain.

The rewards of vice are certaine, for the most part.

Good men dy many times, yet neuer re- spected.

The ministers of vice so- nest exalted to honour.

Sueton. in Tibe- rio, Claudio, Nerone.

Lamprid. Hero. Pedro Mexia. de vitis Impe- ra

Ouid. Eleg. 7.

Philip de Comi- nes in Cron. du Roy Louys. Ca. 7

Rewards gi- uen without any desert.

Kingdomes & Crownes oftentimes are obtained by wickednesse.

Wicked men honoured for Gods in elder times.

Wicked men sometimes get rakes and topes in stead of dignities.

Vertuous men disgraced and punished.

Read Plutarch in the liues of all these men

by purchase, or by accident and chance, (whereby many wicked men are also aduanced.) What aduantage can the Political Law haue of the other; by proposing reward, though it be neuer so great? Doe we not see Crownes and Soueraignties (wherin most men place the greatest felicity of this life) procured by murders, mischiefes, and most wicked meanes? And doth Machiauell propose any lesse reward to his Prince (for extreame wickednesse) then assurance in Soueraignty? So that the most wicked man that is, hauing hope to get or conferue a Crowne, (or rather, Soueraigne State) by some murder or mischiefe: what greater, or so great a reward, could he expect for all the vertue in the world, by obeying Political laws? Did not very many (in old time) get diuine honours, though they were most wicked men: as Iupiter, Venus, Bacchus, Hercules, Tiberius Caesar, and diuers Emperours as bad as he? And so it would still fall out, if Christian Religion had not expelled Idolatry out of the world. Whereby we see, Political Lawes, without the helpe of Gods Grace and Religion (for I consider them here) cannot assigne so great a reward for vertue: but that the wickedst man in the world may hope also to haue it, though he follow and obey the lusts of the flesh.

But a man may say, that many wicked men, which promise themselves great gaine or aduancement, by some wicked act: get nothing in the end, but rakes and ropes in recompence thereof. This I grant, but then let vs also consider on the other side, how many notable Men, cyther loose their liues in actions, for which they should be rewarded, or, in stead of the reward which they deserue, get nothing but ignominy, banishment, hatred of their Princes or people, death, and vtter ruine? As Marcus Coriolanus, Furius Camillus, Scipio, Cicero, Themistocles, Aristides, Phocion, Dion the Sicilian, and infinite others. Some of which men, were deprived of their Dignities, others banished their Countries, and others shamefully put to death by publike authoritie; after they had done great seruices to their Common-weales and States, wherein they liued. And did not Lewes the eleuenth, King of France, discover a great secret, concerning the humors of Princes, in rewarding seruices past, when he said; il perd souuent d'auoir trop bien serui; It ouerthroweth Men many times, to haue done too good seruice? Signifying, that Princes are more willing to haue others beholding to them; then to bee themselves beholding to any. And some, as well Princes as others, are of such Nature, that when they see their obligation so great to any man, as they thinke that they cannot commodiously reward him, according to his satisfaction and merit: they hold him then but for an eye-fore, and seek to rid him one way or other. Therefore, how vncertaine and casuall is the reward of vertue by Political Lawes, seeing the distribution thereof is in the hands of such: as for some perticular respect, or interest of their owne, may not onely forbear to reward, but also (sometimes) vndoe and destroy those, that haue best deserued of them and the Commonwealth? Thus much of Reward.

Now, to speake of Punishment, wherein consisteth the greatest force of any Political Law, for the represson of mans mallice: let vs see, what are the penalties or punishments, where-with the Law of the flesh terrifieth men, to diuert them from vertue, and to draw them to vice. For, although it cannot (of it selfe) inflict any punishment vpon the true louers of vertue, who tread downe and triumph ouer all power of the flesh, and Lawes thereof: yet it setteth vp certaine Scarre-Crowes, to fright such simple Soules as it deceiueth, proposing vnto them farre greater difficulties, labour, and paine, then there is (indeed) in the practise and exercise of vertue. Which difficultie, they hold for no other then continuall affliction, and (as it were) a penalty or punishment, inflicted vpon such as labour to be vertuous. By meanes whereof, they contemne the penalties of Political Lawes, esteeming them, not only more easie to bee auoyded, but also more tollerable to bee borne, then the other. I say, more easie to be auoyded, for that, neither there is a penalty imposed for eucry offence, neither are those that be ordained, alwaies exacted vpon offenders. For, as I haue noted before, they are many times escaped, either

Philip de Comines Cap. 92.

The vncertainty of the reward of vertue, by Political law.

The penalties and punishments which the Carnall Law threatneth.

The Scarre-crowes and false frights of the carnall Law.

The escapes of the carnall Law.

ther by power, or by fauour, or by corruption of Officers, or by their negligence, or by their Princes pardō, wheras the paines that worldly men conceiue to accompany vertue, seeme to them ineuitable, except vertue it selfe be auoyded: whereto no man can arriue, but by the strait, narrow, and painefull way, which I haue before described.

And againe, the penalties of Politicall Lawes, doe seeme to them more tollerable then the other, because all penal mulcts, consist either in payment of Mony, or in Infamy, or in corporall or Capitall punishment. If in Mony, they feare it not much; for they are content to buy their satisfying there-with, and many we see doe voluntarily begger themselves, to obtaine their pleasures. If the penalties consist in Infamy; what care they for it, who hold sinne for no shame, but as an honour? And (as the Psalmist saith) Gloriantur in malitia; They glory in wickednesse. Et laetantur (saith Salomon) cum male fecerint, & exultant rebus pessimis, quorum via peruersa, quorum gressus infames sunt. Who reioyce when they haue done amisse, and exalt in the worst thinges. Whose waies are peruerse, whose steppes are infamous. If the punishment be Corporall, or Capitall, they esteeme the practise of vertue more painefull. For, what affliction, Prison, restraint of liberty, torment or death, can seeme so grieuous to a Man giuen ouer to lust and pleasure, as to afflict himselfe by restraint of his owne will? To conquer and subdue his owne vnbrideled affections? To chastise his body, that it may be made obedient to the Spirit? To mortifie and crucifie himselfe? To dye to his Lust and Concupifcence? Yea, and to bee (as it were) his owne Butcher and Hang-man? To execute ail this vpon himselfe, not for once or twice, or for a day or two, or for now and then: but daily, continually, and without intermission: for otherwise, true vertue can neither be attained, nor conserued. Can any thing (I say) seeme more irkesome, or any punishment more corporall, or capitall, to sensual & fleshy men, destitute of grace? Qui non percipiunt ea quae sunt spiritus dei; Who haue no feeling or apprehension of matters be.onging to the spirit of God?

Corporall torments they think (with 10 Epicurus) the greater they are, the sooner they dispatch a Man out of paine, & the lesse they be, the more tollerable they are, and death they hold for an end of misery: But the labours and paines, which they imagine to be in continuall exercise of vertue: they take for a continuall and neuer dying torment; & for an euerlasting death. So that, very many are so disgusted with the onely conceit & apprehension thereof: that they will not take so much as a tast of vertue, to auoid any penalty of Law whatsoeuer: as we see daily in many Malefactors that are incorrigible. And again, diuers that haue already made some entrance, into the course and way of vertue, are thereby so wearied within a while: that they vtterly despaire, euer to arriue at any perfection therein, such men (I mean) as haue no light or help of Gods grace. Infomuch, that one Sexius, a Gentleman Romaine, of whom Plutarch writeth, hauing giuen himselfe to the study of Philosophy, and the practise of morall vertue, was within a while so discouraged: that his friendes had much ado to keepe him from drowning himselfe. Aemilius Probus testifieth, that the Son of the famous Dion of Sicile, being restrained by his Father, from the licentious life which hee had led (for some long time) in his Fathers banishment: did desperately cast himselfe from the top of the house, and brake his necke.

20 30 40
50
But put the case, that Subiects might be made vertuous, by the feare of punishment: what remedy is there for the Prince, when he is of a bad and maligne Nature? Truelie none, for he feareth no penaltie of the Law, being himselfe aboute the Law: and as for good counsell, if any man dare giue it, hee dare contemne it. What good did the good counsell and precepts, of the Diuine Plato, and of famous Dion, to the two Tyrants of Sicily, the Father & the Son, called Dionysius? In requitall of their good enstruptions, was not Plato solde for a Slaue, and Dion bannished out of Sicilie? What benefit reaped the wicked and cruell Nero, by all the good discipline he receiued from the wise Seneca? Did he exercise any lesse cruelty on him, then vpon all others? And what good effect wrought the good education, example, and enstruptions, which the Epicurus his opinion of corporall torments.

The great auersion of wicked men from vertue.

Plutar. in Lib. de Tranquil. animi.

Aemilius Probus in Dione.

No meanes in politicall law, to reforme a vicious prince

Dionysius Father and Son, two Tyrants of Sicily.

Nero & Seneca

Penalties of the politicall law seeme more tollerable to wicked men, then the penalties of the carnall law.

Psalme 52, 7.

Prou. 2, 15. 16

Nothing more tedious and irksome to euill men, then vertue.

A hard lesson for a worldly man.

1. Cor. 2. 14.

Marcus Aurelius and his Son Commodus

The Princes life is a great example to the Common wealth.

Plin. in lib. 4. Epist.

No sufficient means in Politicall Law, to make the Prince and Common-wealth truly vertuous.

Al the premises examined ouer in due order for a Conclusion.

Emperour Marcus Aurelius (called the Philosopher) gaue to his Sonne Commodus? Succeeding him in the Empire; was not he far more detestable and hatefull for vice, then his Father was renoued & beloued for vertue? If then there be no sufficient meanes, by lawes, education, counsell, or exhortation, to reforme the vicious and corrupt Nature of a wicked Prince: who seeth not, that (by consequence) there is no assured meanes, to make the Common-wealth vertuous? For though it bee neuer so well ordered and disposed in the body: yet it may receiue such corruption from the head, that it may perish thereby. For, as Plinie saith; Euen as in Mens bodies, so in Common-weales, the disease is most grieuous and dangerous, which proceedeth from the head. And we commonlie see, that the maners of the people, are conforme to the maners of the Prince.

Now then to conclude. What sufficient meanes there is in Politicall Law, to suppress the Law of the Flesh, and to make the Prince and people truly vertuous? Is it precepts or Prohibitions? Nothing lesse. For, if they consist but in wordes; they are easily contemned. And (as I haue said before) Prohibition doth encrease the disease, that is to say; the offence and sin, rather then remedie it. And as for permission of euill, it doth but bewray the weaknesse of the Politicall Law, and shew the force of carnall Law: which the other is faine to permit, because it cannot redresse it. What then? Is it punishment or reward? Neither of both. For, as I haue signified, either the offences are so secret, that they are not subiect to punishment: or the Law is deluded, and the penaltie many waies auoyded. Or if not, yet in respect of the paines, that wicked men imagine to be in the exercise of vertue, they are litle feared. And as for reward, what reward (ordained by Law) can so satisfie a sensuall man, as pleasure? Which he holdeth for his Soueraigne and chiefe good, and for the onely felicity of his life? In so much, that I haue heard some men, most wickedly protest and sweare, that if it were not for the pleasures of the flesh; their liues would be loathsome and hatefull vnto them. Therefore Licurgus (with great reason) despaired, to make either the King, or the Subiects in his Common-wealth, vertuous by the force of Lawes. For which cause, he ordained (as Aristotle saith) that the Kinges of Lacedemonia should not be perpetuall, but gouerne for a time: least some euill King, if his gouernment were for tearme of life, might destroy the Common-wealth.

The insufficiency of Politicall Law for the reformation of vice acknowledged by Licurgus. Arist. in Polit. Lib. 2. Cap. 7.

10

CHAP. VI.

Of Sleepe and Rest; And what manner of seating, or lying in our Beds, ought to be obserued in our sleeping, as well for ciuility as for health.

20

BY good reason did Galen say; That sleepe is the repose of the whole body, and principally of the animall faculties, and without sleepe, a Man could not subsist: therefore there are certaine rules to be obserued in sleeping, as necessary as in eating and drinking. For it is not enough, that a man sleepe seauen or eight houres in a night; rise early in the morning; shun sleepe after dinner, vpon an indigested stomack, &c. But he is to vnderstand withall, what comperment or behaiour is conuenient for him in sleepe. Beasts and other animals, do heerein lend vs some enstruction, for they do not fall downe backward, when they prepare to rest; but couch downe vpon one of their sides, and (almost ordinarily) on the right side, and according to Nature, neuer faile therein. Neuerthelesse, albeit that men are endued with reason, yet very hardly shall three men bee found, lying in on Bed, or in one company, that do take their rest after one and the same manner. For one will haue his head raised high, another low. One lyeth to sleepe on the right side, and others on the left very ordinarily. Some on their bellies, or on their backs. In regard whereof, many people (thorow want of due obseruation) doe fall into grieuous diseases, which proue (oftentimes) incurable, or are found stifled in their sleeping, which falleth out too ordinary.

Galen his definition of Sleepe.

Beasts do giue enstruction for sleep.

Man onelie is disordered in the maner of his sleeping.

30

40

50

The man that desireth to preferue his health,

What behauour is to be obserued in sleeping.

health, should sleepe on his right side, during the time of his first sleepe to the end, that the meates may descend into the bottome of the stomack: because it is fleshy, and lesse full of membranes then the vpper part; and so, by consequent, more hot and proper for concoction. Afterward, for his second sleepe; hauing continued some foure houres; or therabout, on the right side: he may turne on the left, to the end, that the liuer may the better extend it selfe, and rest vpon the stomacke. In doing thus; digestion is made perfect; because the Liuer is hotter then the belly, and embracing al, serueth as if it were a warmth of fire. But if a man be constrained to keep his bed long, at one time & other, he must obserue turnings, one while on the one side, and then on the other.

Of sleeping on the belly, what inconueniences are caused thereby.

To sleepe vpon the belly auaileth nothing, except in such as are of bad digestion, for such manner of lying heateth the stomacke so well, that it facilitateth and accelerates concoction: but then it bringeth a great discommodity; to wit, that it filleth the eyes full of defluxions, and (consequently) troubleth the sight, hindereth the excrements also, in their auoydance out of the belly. To sleepe vpon the backe and reines, doth manie times engender stones & sand in them, and being no way helpfull to digestion, causeth the Rhume to rise, which couereth most vp to the throat, and hastneth a man to the Falling-sicknes, Apoplexies, and other capitall diseases, beside the puffing vp or swelling of the Lights, and the Midriffe or Diaphragma. Wherefore, of al healthful situations for sleepe, there is none better (as hath beene said) then to rest on the sides: for beside all other benefits ensuing thereby, the body being turned one while on the right side, and then againe on the left, seeleth pleasure, contentment, and sweetest ease.

Of sleeping
on the backe and reines.

Of sleeping
on the sides.

The bodies figure in a healthfull
mans sleeping

The body then ought not to bee so much extended or stretched out, being turned on either side: but that the thighs and legs must be somewhat bended or retired, for such is the figure of a healthfull mans sleeping. The head should not be laid too high; nor too low: for being raised too high, it prepareth a man to the Cough, and infirmitie of the Lunges, and causeth that he cannot sleepe soundlie. And being laid too low, it procureth broken and painefull sleepes, and engendereth offensive dreames.

Of an apt Bouister for the head.

Of sleeping with open eyes.

To sleepe with wide open eyes, indurates (all along) the Tunickles or couering skinnes of them, and so by consequent, begetteth a short or nere hand sight, because that the visuall Spirit cannot penetrate crosse-wise. It may also happen, that some thing falling strangely into them, may greatly harne and perish the sight. And in any sharpe or extraordinarie disease, to sleepe with the eyes open, it is an assured signe of death: except the party have been long invred thereto; or haue had some great fluxe of the belly; or taken some violent purgation; or else hath endured long watchings.

To sleepe with the mouth open, is very contrarie and incommodious to the health of a man, because hee draweth abundantly to him (by the vocall Artery) all the ayre that it meeteth withall: which commonly (in the night time) is very impure and troubled. By meanes whereof, the Conduits whereby a man respireth, being ouer-moystened: either it maketh the voyce hoarse, or dull and feeble. Whereas, if a man sleepe with his mouth closed; then the exterior ayre (by little and little, and not in any excessiue quantitie) entereth at both the passages of the Nosthrils, and so goeth on to the Lights, where it moderateth the heate of the heart. Which is the cause; that they which sleepe with their Lippes fast shut; doe feele themselves the lesse disturbed. For they that sleepe open throated, by reason of the breath, which entereth and issueth forth abundantly: the tongue and rooffe of the mouth becommeth very much dried, which makes them, both in the night time; and in the morning, to finde themselves much altered.

Of sleeing with the mouth open.

Of sleeping with the mouth close shut.

The lips fast
shut.

Sleeping open throated, how dangerous it is.

A good Comparison.

In like manner, when the breath is some way kept and retained, concoction is made the more strongly & soundly: euen as meat is the better boyled in a couered pot. There may happen many other inconueniences beside, for in sleeping open throated; a Feather may fall, and passe into the body, which will cause a continuall Cough, by reason that neuer, or very hardly, it can

A deadly Phtisicke.

After what manner to hold the arms

Of talking in the night time, how hurtfull it is.

Of snoring or snorting in our sleepe.

A pretty Receipt against snoring in sleepe.

* Myrrhis, Mockberuill, an Hearb like to Hemlocke. Some call it Kex or Kexes.

be auoyded, and so grow to a deadly Phtisicke. A Serpent Stellio, Spider, or some such venomous Creature, may also get his passage, without all meanes of recouery, as I haue knowne too often.

As concerning the Armes, if they be held crosse-wise, like the signe of the Crosse, or else halfe courbed, and the hands resting vpon the little belly; it is very healthfull. But one thing (kinde Reader) take as a warning, that it is a very euill custome, to talke in the night time, and a notorious inciuitie. For such as are vsed to prattle at their wakings, doe very hardly fall to fasten on sleepe againe. And so consequently, such wakings doe cause Crudities in them: because their sleeps haue not bin sufficient, to boyle the meates receiued into the stomacke. Another reason is, that it impeacheth and interrupteth the rest of others, who (perhaps) take little delight in talking at such vnfit houres: but when once they haue made custome of it, they keepe it as an especiall habite.

Some, in their sleepe, are subiect to snore or snort, especially fat and round bellied people. It is a thing very odious and offensive, to lie by such a body, or in the Chamber where such a one resteth. A man were almost as good, to lodge in a Styre among the Swine, as neere or with such persons, especiallie, such as delight in liuing ciuilly and honestly. Therefore I will set downe a prettie receipt, which a Portugall Apothecarie (but yet a Jew by his Religion) taught me against this vndecency, and the receipt is thus. He that is subiect to this infirmity, halfe an houre before he goeth to rest, let him eate a little Conserue of an Hearbe called Persil d'Asne, Asse-Perselie, or Wilde Chervill. It is an Hearbe very sufficiently knowne, and the Conserue must be made of the root thereof. I haue made good experience of it many times. Or else let him gargarize a pretty deale of good Vineger, made somewhat warme, a quarter of an houre before he lyeth downe. This last remedy was practised by a Courtier (in the time of King Charles the ninth) with very happy successe: for, if he had snored neuer so little (as he was much subiect thereto) hee had lost the gracious fauours of a Gentlewoman, who admitted him to her owne Lodging, her Husband being absent.

Therefore I would gladlie perswade Fathers and Mothers; yea, Schoolemaisters and others, who haue the charge of youth and young Children, to constraîne and accustome them in their tender yeares, to honest, decent, and wholesome lodging in their Beds: For, beside the comlineesse and ciuility, it is no meane propagation of their health. And let me tell ye more, thorough such vndecent behauiour in bed; I haue knowne many vnhappy quarrels and debates, sometimes betwixt the Husband and Wife.

The Authors friendly aduertisement.

CHAP. VII.

Concerning the constancy, of some Lacedemonian, Romaine, and French women: At the decease of their Children, hurts, and nursing of them.

That Commonwealth may tearm it selfe happy, wher the Weomen are not onely chaste: but likewise endued with manly Spirits, full of constancy and magnanimity, for of such Women (commonly) are Heroicall Children bred and borne. Which Argument giueth me leaue, to speake of some Weomen among the Lacedemonians; then the Romaines, and lastly the French: but first we will begin with the most generous Lacedemonians.

Of good and generous women come worthy Children.

Lacedemon, Sparta, and Laconia, were all but one, to wit, a people and Country scituated in Peloponnesus, a Region of Greece, where Lycurgus had not onely beene King, but also was their Law-Maker. He left them many good lawes and Morall precepts, which while both the Men and Weomen knew how to keepe: they continued Lords of themselves, liuing in all enfranchisement and

The seuerall names, of Lacedemon, & scituation thereof.

What benefit ensued by keeping the Lawes of Lycurgus.

and libertie. But so soone as they wandered and swerved, from those good manners which the said Lycurgus had taught them: they became forthwith Seruants and Slaues vnto others. During such time, as they were obseruers of his Morall precepts; it happened, that the Athenians made Warre, in hope to subdue them: but as they were farre inferior to them in their forces, so were they as stoutly and valiantly resisted.

Of a mother and her onely Son.

Among the women of Sparta, there was one, that had but one only Sonne, who was grievously wounded in the foote, and greatly complained, of the yrkesome paines which thereby he endured: but his Mother saide vnto him.

Good & courageous counsell of a Mother.

My Sonne, if thou didst see vertue before thine eyes; not onely would this anguish bee forgotten: but (in reuenge thereof) thou wouldst shew thy selfe valiant. But the Mothers of our Countries, doe customarily augment the grieuances of their Children, by teares and cōckerings, too frequent among them. Whereas this worthy Mother, did breath her Spirit into his Heart, to teach him, how hee should suffer harmes manfully, and not to complaine, like a cowardly woman.

Foolish Mothers of these times.

Another Lacedemonian Woman likewise, hauing tidings brought her, that one of her Sonnes was slaine in the battaile, said: Why, he was one of my Sons reioysing in the generositie of her Son, and neuer mourning for his death. Contrariwise, another woman, hearing that her Sonne fled away cowardly; quoth she. He neuer was any Son of mine. Intimating thereby, that such Sons deserued no acknowledgement, who degenerated from the vertue of their Ancestours.

Two honorable minded Mothers.

I cannot forget another Laconian Woman, who had five Sonnes, and all of them lost their liues, fighting valiantly for the freedome of their Countrey. She, going into the Subburbs of the City, to know the issue of the battaile, meeting with a Vant-curret; demanded how all matters went? And he told hir the fatall hap of her five Sonnes. Wicked Slaue (quoth she) this is no answer to my demand. I pray thee to tell mee, in what estate stands the affaires of the Commonwealth? Hee told her, that the victorie went with the Lacedemonians. Why now

Another Mother worthy of immortal commendation.

(quoth she) thou art an honest man, and I beare my Childrens death patiently. Was not this a Woman full of honour, and endued with an incomparable Spirit; to prefer the welfare of the Commonwealth, before so many liues of her dear esteemed Sons?

Cicero alleadgeth another, who was a noble Romaine Lady, no lesse to be esteemed then the Laconian women. She beholding her Sonne, named Spurius Caluidius, that could go no other wise; but euen as Beastes doe, on all foure, through the greatest wounds he had received in the warres, fighting for his Countries liberty, and percciuing him to bee ashamed, because one had scorned him for going in that manner; she said vnto him. Thou shouldst be the more iocund, and proud of thy valour, that made thee go in this crooked manner; then grieue at that poore spirit, that dare not shew his face where thou hast beene.

Cicero in lib. de Orat. 3.

A most valiant Romaine Mother.

But let me tell ye, that neither Lacedemon nor Rome, contained all the generous Weomen: for in our Natiue Country of France, there haue bin very many, and yet are at this present, of whom I will (for breuities sake) alledge but two. The first shall bee Madame Margaret de Sauoye, Wife to the deceased Anne de Montmorency, Constable of France, who had five Children, all worthily educated, and euermore most lovingly affected vnto the Crowne of France, as beeing very remarkable for their fidelitie, as also well prouided of honourable estates. When newes was brought her, that one of her Sons was dead, named Mombrun, whom she most dearly affected aboue all the rest, and was slaine in the battaile at Dreux, fought against the French Protestants, in the yeare 1562. and also that her Husband (being wounded) was there surprized: She said. Blessed be God, as well for the bad as the good, and gaue him hartie thanks, not onely because her Sonne was slaine; but that her Husband remained wounded, and a Frisner, for the seruice of his King, &c.

Generous women of France

The Battaille at Dreux, in Anno 1562.

The braue resolution of Margaret de Sauoye.

Madame de Blacar, wife to the Marschall Biron.

Madame de Saint Blancar, Wife to the late magnanimous Marschall de Biron, was visited by a Lady of great Birth, who brought with her very goodlie workes of Silke, which shee and her Daughters had wrought in Samplers.

Madame de Biron of a vertuous & manly courage.

She brought with her also one of her Children ; that daunced delicately, and played sweetly on the Gitterne, whom she shewed to the said Lady Marshall, that she and her Children, should learn to spend their time in the like delightful exercises. Madame Marshall made her answer ; That shee could not devise any better works exercises, wherein to instruct her Sons and Daughters ; then in the fear of God, and good maners ; whereby their hearts would become magnanimious, to do seruice for their King, according as their Father had formerly done. And indeed, all the Male children issuing of her, were very braue minded and valiant men. As for her Daughters, ouer and beside their happinesse, to marrie with wise and worthy Knights : so were they well eductated in household discipline, by their excellent breeding, and famous houses of generous nourishing. As Madame the Countesse de Chasteauneuf, whose Husband is (at this present) Lieutenant to the King, in higher and lower Lymosine. Madame de Force, & others that I know.

A generous Exhortation of the Author to Ladies of greatest birth and others.

Let then great Ladies of blood, and others of meaner birth, bee aduertised by this discourse, that if it happen, that their Husbands and Children dye, or become maimed in their Kings seruice, and for the good of the Commonwealth: they would not bee so weake hearted, as to lament, grieue, or beate their heads against walles, because such behaiour is not seene, but in Women of ignoble and slender worth. But fixing rather before their eyes, the generous Spirits of these Laconian, Romaine, and French Ladies, formerly exemplified; to account themselues happy, when focuer the like disasters shall happen to them. Considering withall, that they whom they esteeme to be dead, do liue, and they shall see them again at the day of resurrection, accompanied with much glory and honor.

The greatest to any Christian soule.

The bountifull mercy of God to Job.

In the case of Death, how Parents ought to comfort theselues

To Job, all his goods and wealth were redoubled, onely his Children excepted, for he begat but such a number, and in the like number he had them againe. Yet heerein the promise of God was as well accomplished, as in his other goods : for he knew that they were not dead, but should be raised againe, and re-knowne of their Father and Mother. It may be presumed, that such women as are so full of sorrow and vexation; do not beleue any resurrection. Otherwise they would embrace aduise and instruction, to teach their Sons & daughters al such exercises, as might redound to the benefit of the Common-wealth. As their Sons to haue learning, to manage Armes and Horses, with all vertues becomming man-hood. Their Daughter to feare God, and learne womens huswiuery : not idle Samplery, or Silken follies, which (else-where) is the exercise of Eunuches & Slaues. I would wish them to hold as firme a purpose, as did Madame Katherine du Salaignat, Wife to the late Messiere Geffrey de Saille, a braue and hardy Knight in his life time. She sending her Sonnes (in their very young yeares) to Paris for instruction, was aduised by some familiar Friend, to keepe them (as yet) at home, because they were but young and tender. She made answer. That her Children resembled Vessels wholly new, wherein if good liquor were put at the first, they would saunour thereof so long as Nature lasted. In like manner, if Children embrace good doctrine in their young age, they will rellish alwaies after thereof, euen to old age. Which they cannot doe, being kept vnder the Mothers Wing, as wee tearme it, where neither are like Masters, or commodious meanes, as is in such places, wher all vertues are taught, to such as will seeke for them. For this good Lady added, That she desired rather to be without Children, then that they shold be not vertuous. And indeed, such did her Sons proue to be, and good Seruitours to their King, notwithstanding all the partialities in France.

Example of the Lady Katherine de Salaignat.

A worthy president for all cockering and nice Mothers.

CHAP. VIII.

Against Obtrection, or Detraction. And why it is more vnseemly for men, to speake euill of Women, then Women of Men.

All Diuines and Philosophers, as well Auncient as Moderne, haue held, and doe maintaine, that detraction is one of the braunches of Enuy, which Detraction one of the branches of Enuy.

which delighteth and nourisheth it selfe by calumny and lying : whereby people of honest conuersation, do continually receiue most greuous wounds; by giuing ouer light beleefe, to such as haue a felicity in lying. And therefore, Diogenes the Cinick being demaunded, what bite of any Beast was most hurtfull and dangerous, answered: Amongst furious and wilde Beasts, none like the Detractor, and among tame or gentle, only the Soother and Flatterer. Vpon the same words, Themistocles the Thebane, said; There is no greater paine or miserie in the worlde, then to know and behold the honor of an honest and good man, to be in the mercy of a venomous tongue, there to be outraged by detraacting speeches.

Diogenes his answer, concerning Detractors and Flatterers.

Good fame is the greatest riches in the world.

Princes subiect to heare flatterers and Detractors.

An excellent Comparison of the deprauers.

Of Medius, chiefe of the Flatterers about King Alexander.

Full wel we know, that vertuous fame and good renowne, is more precious then any treasure whatsoever. No lesse shame and wrong is done to a man, in taking away his honest name and good esteeme, then as if hee were robbed and despoiled of all his substance. But about all other, Detraction and calumny yeeldeth most pernicious effects, when Princes do willingly lend eare to deprauers; by whom, euen themselues doe become at length corrupted. For the enuious detractor, dealeth like a bad Painter; who when he hath made a mishapen Cocke, commandeth his Boy, to driue all Naturall Cockes farre enough off from his foule handy-worke. So hee, from such as he would command or gouerne, hee striues to keep off al honest minded men, for hee cannot worke his intent openlie, because hee stands in feare of their Vertue, whom he hateth in his heart. Hee maketh a shew of honouring, admiring, and affectuous embracing: but vnderhand, and behinde his backe, hee casteth forth and soweth all seditious slanders. But if his claudestine, and secret-wounding reports of the absent, do not quickly beget the yssue of his intent: hee hath yet alwayes readye in his memory, that which in elder times was obserued by Medius.

This Medius of whom we are to speak was as the Maister, or chiefe of all the troope of flatterers, that houered about the mightie Alexander, euen more bandying against well disposed people in his Court. Hee gaue instruction, that no one should bee so bolde, as to backebite openly, or vse the power of calumnie too apparantly. But rather in such sort (quoth he) that albeit the partie bitten doe recouer his harme; yet that the gripes or scratches may remaine incurable. Euen so, by such scarres and gripes of lies and false accusations, or to call them better (according to Plutarch) by such Cankers and Gangeues, many great persons haue suffered themselues to be corrupted and retained still in their memory, detestable vnruth, deliuered of vertuous men, to their innocent ouerthrowe, and their owne great dishonor.

All the enmities and quarrelles, as well among great as meaner persons, whence haue ensued so manie slaughters, as daily are behelde with great greefe: neuer had any other ground or Originall, but onely detraacting the honour or repute of absent people. Now, albeit this Vice in generall, is most infamous, and about all other, vnshightly and il-seeming in persons of honor: yet, of both the sexes, I hold it to be more inciuil and disgraceful to a man, then to a woman. Howbeit, I know, that there are manie people, that are of contrarie opinion vnto my present purpose of speech. My first reason is, that among all the Nations of the world, there is a natural Law, obseruing it selfe; whereby a dissolute life is not held as any Vice, defect, or infamie in men: but in women it is an opprobrie, & so extreame a shame, that she of whom an evil report hath once passed (be it true or false in the imposition) she standeth for euer blamed or branded. Therefore, a wel aduised man, wil neuer touch the honor of women.

There is likewise another reason, to wit; That Weomen beeing imperfect creatures, and of little or no dignitie at al, in respect of men, it were verie requisite, that (seeing of themselues they are not capeable, to performe any vertuous action) some bridle or restriction were imposed on them, by shame and feare of infamy, that any good qualitie (though it were perforce) might bee planted in them. And it seemeth, that continency was thought more necessariē for them, then any other, for the better certitude of their Children. Now, because this hath bene enforced, euen by all ingenuous subtilties, Arts, and possible meanes or wayes, to make Ladies become continē;

The Wicked speeches of detraacting Medius.

Detraction the ground of quarrels and murders.

Detraction is more vnbe-seeming in men then women, and the reasons why.

The first reason.

The second reason.

Continencie thogh most conuenient in women.

Women allowed to commit all error, their chastitie referued.

An aduertisement to Ladies, and also other women.

An act of piety to defend womens honor.

A History alledged by Valentinus Barruchius of Tolledo, concerning the false accusation of a Dutcheffe of Sauoy.

10 20 30 40
 50 60
 70
 80
 90 100
 110
 120 130 140
 150
 160
 170
 180
 190 200 210
 220
 230
 240
 250 260 270
 280
 290 300
 310
 320
 330
 340
 350 360
 370
 380 390
 400
 410 420
 430
 440
 450
 460
 470
 480
 490
 500
 510
 520
 530 540
 550 560
 570
 580
 590 600
 610
 620
 630
 640
 650
 660 670
 680
 690
 700
 710
 720
 730
 740
 750
 760
 770
 780
 790
 800 810
 820
 830
 840
 850
 860
 870
 880
 890
 900 910
 920
 930
 940
 950
 960
 970
 980 990
 1000

tinient; yea, it hath appeased, and (as it were) consented thereto by themselues, that in all other things they are of no validity, but continually they doe the contrary to all that they ought to do. Wherefore, seeing it is lawfull for them, to commit all other errors without blame, let them neuer bee taxed with those imperfections that they haue done, they being all permitted to them, which (in this respect) must not be iudged inconuenient, or carelessly regarded by them; prouided, that their Chastitie be preserued.

And yet for all this, I doe not inferre that it is lawfull for weomen to depraue or mispeake by any means: for, as I haue saide, it is one of the very greatest imperfections, and draweth vnto it more contempt and disgrace, then any other Vice whatsoeuer. But I would aduise honorable and worthy women, if at anie time it happen, that a Woman haue spoken reproachfully of them, or such as do appertaine vnto them, to tollerate & make no account thereof, for the reasons forementioned. But on the contrarie, it is a worke of piety, to offend their quarrel, if any do presume to defend their honor. And so much the rather, because it was neuer knowne, that euerie any Knight, who vndertooke the Combat, to support the honor of a woman, was at anie time vanquished.

Wee haue some prooffe thereof, by a History, which Valentinus Barruchius, a Natiue of Tolledo in Spain, hath sette downe in a great Latine Tome, most exactly written, and in verie elegant phrase, the brieffe whereof, is thus: A Daughter to the King of England, being married to a Duke of Sauoy, & Prince of Piedmont; by not yeilding to the immodest requests of the Count of Pancalier (whome the Duke her husband, had left Regent and Lieutenant of all his Lands in his absence while he was busied in the wars of France; because hee was there Constable) falsely imposed on her the crime of Adulterie, which he saide she had committed with his Nephew. And being to combat against all such, as woulde gainsay the truth of his deposition, he presented himselfe in the Lists.

In the end, as a matter proceeding from Diuine inspiration, a Knight of the Noble house of Mendoza, who although he was farre inferiour in bodily strength, not only in regard of a former long sickness, but also by so long a way of trauel, which had so tired himselfe and his horses: yet he accepted the cause and Combat, to maintaine the honor of that vertuous Princeffe. He foiled him in fight, and made him confesse his damnable imposture. After which, partly by some grieuous wounds receiued, but more by meere spight and hatefull malice, he died within few daies. And yet the said Count was one of the most valiant and strongest Knights (of his time) in all Lombardy.

In Fraunce, about the space of threescore yeares since, the combat was granted by King Frances, first of that name, to two French Knights, the one named La Chastaigneraye, and the other Iarnac. It was a great quarrell to bee discided, because the Lord de la Chastaigneraye, had offended the honor of a Ladie, that appertained in blood to the Lord de Iarnac. These two Knightes, fighting in the single Duello, and according to the Kinges iudgement, the whole Court, and all the spectators, it appeared that La Chastaigneraye, would haue the vpper hande, as hauing made good prooffe of his person, in diuers battailes, and single combates: yet notwithstanding, Iarnac slew La Chastaigneraye, and, as manie people were perswaded in Conscience, by the iust iudgement of God, for hauing defamed so worthy a Ladie. If it might be permitted, I could alledge infinite other Histories, tending to this purpose: but feare of offending, is my onely hinderance. And therefore, I will conclude with the Prouerbe, more then true: That neuer were Women depraued, but by a Knaue or a Coward.

The Noble Mendoza of Spain, defended the cause of the wronged Princeffe.

A Combate tried between two French Knights.

General opinion is oftentimes deceyued in prooffe.

An auncient Prouerbe.

CHAP.

CHAP. IX.

How Pythagoras founde out (verie ingeniously) the iust measure and proportion of the bodie of great Hercules.

IT is verie memorable, & therefore not to bee let passe in silence, the ingenious inuentio found out in a subtile and curious maner, concerning the true shape and measure of Hercules his body. When it was knowne, that the place where the Olympian Games were solemnized (from five years to five yeares) in Achaya, neere Elis*, & before the Temple of Iupiter Olympus, had been measured by Hercules, who hadde there made a Stadium, containing six hundred and five and twentie foote, by the measure of his owne foote. Vnderstanding also, that the other Stadiums, which his successors afterward ordained throughout all Greece, did hold the like length of sixe hundred and five and twentie foote, it appeared yet neuerthelesse, that they were much shorter, then that of Hercules. For, Pythagoras knew easly by this proportion, how much the foote of Hercules contained in greatnesse, from the ordinarie feete of other men. And hauing thus vnderstoode, the size or measure of his foote, hee comprehended thereby: that the whole bodie of Hercules, must needs be (according to that proportion) much greater then the bodies of all other men, in regard that his Stadium surpassed al the rest.

*A Towne in the west part of Peloponnesus, neere the Riuer Alpheus where the Olympia games were performed.

CHAP. X.

How the Iewes did continually, and from time to time, giue Law and Religion to such as were their Conquerours and Commanders.

10

20

30

40

50

S*eneca* fel into great admiration, so did diuers others, how it shold come to passe, that the vanquished Iewes, dispersed and scattered vnto the foure Corners of the world, should administer Law and Religion to their vanquishers. For, as concerning their subiectio, they are a people that haue beene troden vnder foote by the Egyptians, Assyrians, Persians, Gracians, Romaines, Turkes, &c. and how many Maisters soeuer they hadde, yet they neuer changed or altered their Law. Amongst other people, in matter of their Law and Faith, hath beene found some semblable constancie: but that the subdued, transported, vilified, made slaues, led in triumph thorowe Empires; that such men, I say, should not only subdue the hearts of their Triumphers to God, but (in a manner of speaking) traine their Gods also themselues, in triumph after them, is verie admirable. That the Conquerour could not giue Law to the conquered, but that the vanquished hath done it to the victor; the subiect vnto the Prince; the Captiue to the Maister; and the condemned vnto the Iudge; Who would beleue this, I pray ye, except he saw it? And hauing seene it, how can he say otherwise, but that GOD onelie did it?

But if Seneca could hear me peaceably, I woulde deliuer him from this astonishment and admiration, so strangely conceited, as thus. Those Gods which the Iewes had caused to be left to the people (commonly called inuolable and immortal) consisted of dumbe and insensible Statues, disguised like men, Beastes, and Fishes; and some of them, resembled hideous Monsters. So that infamous Demons, possessed themselues of these Statues and Symulacres, and in them requi-

Seneca in his Booke of Superstition.

The Iewes euermore subiect vnto be made captiues.

A rare & vnsuall thing in common obseruation for the vanquished to be victor.

The Idols of the Gentiles wer Demons, without anie vertue.

red

red worse matters of men, then did the most detestable Tyrants that euer were. As, that a man should geld himself, lame himselfe, kill himselfe, yea, and that men should Sacrifice Women, Virgins, and Children to them.

But when the people heard speech of one only true God, the Creator of heauen and earth; and that he would be serued in heart and spirit: these wordes, although they came forth of a poor slaues mouth, made Captiues of the men themselves that heard them, and subdued their Gods. What then shall we say of the Iewes transmigrations, and flitting from place to place: but that they were as so many Colonies and Preachers, to proclaim the true GOD, and euen as so many armies, to extirpate Idolles?

That it could be no otherwise, Daniell and his associats, being as the rest) transported into Assyria, he shewed vnto the King, that the Idoll Bell (which hee caused to be worshipped, and had daily deliuered him such quantities of bread made of the finest Flower, a great number of Sheepe and fatted Cattle, and six * Amphores of Wine) was no true God, though he himselfe worshipped him, and went euery day to adore him, as believing that he deuoured all that meate and wine. He made it apparant to him, that it was but a meere manifest deceite, performed by his Priests & Sacrificers, who with their Wiues and Children, came in the night time, and ate vp al the Viands set before the Idoll, for which they were deservedly punished.

After he had thus shewne to the Assyrian King, the vanitie of the Idoll Bel, the King tooke him, and shewd him a mighty great Dragon, which the Babylonians, and himselfe, as well as the rest, worshipped beside the saide Idoll Bel. The King saide to Daniel, Thou wilt not say that this is of Brasse, like the other, this cannot be denied to be a God. Daniel hauing obtayned leaue to kill the Draggon, without the help either of sword or staffe, with pitch, fat, and haire (which he boyled altogether) made rounde balles thereof, and threw them into the Draggons throate, which made him burst in sunder. And then said Daniel, Behold what ye haue worshipped. But for these thinges, the people threw Daniell into a denne of hungry Lyons, of which Beasts hee was not deuou-red, although he had nothing giuen him to eate, in the space of seauen dayes before. At the end of which time, the King finding Daniel yet liuing amongst the Lyons: caused him to be taken forth, and forsaking all Idolatrie, worshipped the true GOD, the God of the Iewes. Were not these worthy slaues, that conuerted this great King, and thus triumphed?

Who gaue intelligence to Cyrus, K. of Persia, concerning the true God, the God of the Israelites and Iewes, and to cause him send home the captiued Iewish people, giuing them meanes to repayre the Temple, ruined by the Assyrians, commanding them also, to pray to God for his prosperity; but euen the same Slaues of the Iewes? May we not likewise say as much, of Alexander the Great? He was brought to worship the true God, throwing and prostrating himself before Iadus the High-priest, who came before him with all the people of Ierusalem, hauing their heads and feete bare, to implore his mercie, and not to bee put to death by him, because they gaue him no aide with men and victualles, when hee besieged Tyre. Notwithstanding, these conquered and halfe-dead Iewes, by their humble maner of behauiour, but Gods grace more especially woorking, caused that great and inuincible Monarch, to fall on his Knees before their chiefe Priest; and not onely so, but to embrace them with amitie, and graunt them manie gracious priuiledges. And to their Neighbors the Samaritans, who obserued not the same Religion, he gaue inhibition and countermand, of enioying the same immunities. And himselfe would confesse, that the Iewish Law was good, but the Grecians Law was of no worth.

Did they not impose the selfsame Law on the Egyptians; who likewise led them into Captiuitie? Wee may read in the Greeke Histories, that after the death of Alexander, many of his Kindred, & some of his aduanced fauourites, possessed themselves (as best they could) on diuers portions of his Monarchy. And among the rest, Ptolomy seized on Egypt, and on many other adiacent Prouinces. And purposing to do as much on Iudea, he was impeached by the Iewish people, who would acknowledge no other superiour, but their High-priest and Sacrificer.

Where-

The Transmigration of the Iews, was for the honor and glorie of God.

Daniel discovereth the Idoll Bel to the King of Persia

* An ancient measure, containing 36. quarters.

The King shewed Daniel the great dragon.

Daniel killed the great dragon.

Daniel cast into the den of Lyons.

Daniel deliuered, and the K. conuerted.

Cyrus, King of Persia, beleeued in God.

Quintus Curtius in the life of Great Alexander.

Alexander inspired by God to his humility.

Ptolomy got the possession of Egypt, and spoyled Iudea

The Jews led Captiues into Egypt.

Whereupon, Ptolomy entred into Palestine, made there great deuastation and spoile, beating down diuers strong forts, and led away many thousands of them, as captiues into Egypt, where they were ill entreated, and employed in the basest & vilest slaueries. All which notwithstanding, poore soules, they ceased not to cry and call to the Egyptians, that their Religion was false, and that they had manie monstrous Gods: As Onions, a Cow, a Crocodile, and others.

The captiue Jewes did shew the error of the Egyptians.

In the end, their declarations were so manifest, and their cries so violent on their Idolatries, that the verie wisest men of the Countrey, with their King Philadelphus (one of the successors to the former King, who led the poore Jews awaie as Captiues) lent eare vnto them, and found all true, which the miserable and distressed Jewes had preached to them. In regard whereof, the King wold needs make more ample enquiry, concerning their Law and Religion. He caused all the Books of the Old Testament to be translated out of Hebrewe into the Greeke tongue, by seauenty Interpreters of the Jewes (most learned in the said tongues) seperately, so that they could not confer one with another, to know whether they agreed in their traduction of the Booke of the Old Testament, or no. When he had found a meruailous concordance in the seuerall translations, and had read, and read againe the saide Booke; hee acknowledged, that his Captiues the Jewes had saide nothing but the truth; and that there was but one God, the GOD of the Israclites, and the Jewes. Wherefore, he afterward embraced the feare of God in his heart, reformed his life, and set at liberty all the Captiue Jewes, thoroughout his Land. Thus you may see, how the vanquished gaue Law and Religion to the victor.

The Bible translated out of Hebrewe into Greeke.

The vanquished gaue law to the Victor.

The Syrians warred on the Jewes.

When that the Egyptians had suffered the Jewes to liue in peace, the Syrians within a while after, conceiued hatred against the Jewes, and perceiuing Ciuill dissentions to be among them, they also warred on them. Antiochus their King (by the meanes of Traitors) was brought into Ierusalem, where hee placed Idols in the Temple, rauaged all Iudea, and ledde away a great number of Captiues, according as Zonarus declareth. Yet the poore captiued Jewes shewed vnto the Syrians,

10

20

30

40

50

that they had done verie euill, in polluting the Temple of the true GOD, for which they should be seuerely punished. As afterwarde it came to passe, for the saide King Antiochus was conquered by the Romaines, and paide tribute to them. Then could the Syrians and their King, remember the predictions of their poore captiues, whom they did gladly set at libertie, and entreated, that they woulde pray to God for them, being afterwarde in the Romaines safegard.

It were a matter impossible for me, to set downe all the Kingdomes, where the Jewes haue beene kept Captiues, & persecuted: and yet neuerthelesse, still acknowledged, that they worshipped the only true God, and brought diuers kings and people to discern their Lawe. And some verie speculatiue Diuines, haue bin perswaded, that these Captiuities of the Jewes, had not beene permitted by God, but onely to the end, that they shoulde beare testimonie in all the quarters of the earth: that the Histories of the Olde-Testament were true, and that the God of the Jewes, was the only true God. Therefore, it was no such matter of wonder, as Seneca made it, that euermore the Jewes gaue Law to the Conquerours, and such as kept them in captiuitie. For the law of the Gentiles, was nothing else but vanitie and lies: but that of the Jewes, was grounded on the knowledge of the true God.

The Syrians instructed by the Jewes.

The captiuitie of the Jewes vnexpressible.

The cause of the Transmigrations of the Jewes.

The Lawe of the Gentiles.

CHAP. XI.

Of Sorrow or Mourning for the dead. How it hath beene obserued, and yet is to this day, in manie Prouinces and Countries of the world.

MO mourne and sorrowe for Parents, Kindred, & Friends deceased, is not any matter of Nouelty, but most ancient. For it is found, that seauen score and ten yeares after the floode, and threescore yeares after the death of Noah, and in the year of the world, two thousand sixtie, according to the calculation

The antiquity of mourning for the dead.

lation of Carion, and of other Chroniclers, that Abraham mourned and sorrowed for his wife Sara, the space of thirtie dayes. I thinke, that the Iewes afterward continued (and yet do to this day) the custome of mourning, for no more then 30 dayes. But Christians, belonging to the Church of God, vsed mourning a whole yeare, to wit; cloathed in blacke for the most part: but Women, were cloathed partly in white, and partly in blacke; especially in some Countreyes, which was done according to the diuersity of Nations. But the ancient Romaines, before they were Christians, mourned 9. moneths onely. Heere we are to know, that if a Christian man or woman, in those parts, wearing mourning, came to agree againe in a second marriage, during the yeare appointed for mourning, the Matrimony was stayed; but thence-forward, hee nor shee were bound to weare any more mourning.

Mourning vsed amongst the christians

Mourning of the Latine Christians.

The mourning of the Greeke church.

Terence and Plautus.

The Mourning of the Malabrians & Iapparians.

Poste in lib. 2. De Repub. F.

The mourning of the Turkes.

The people of the Greeke Church, mourned a whole yeare, like to them of the Latine and Romaine, and neuer made any motion of a second marriage during the limited yeares space: but did much more, for euerie day of that yeare, at a certaine appointed houre, all the people of the house, vsed lamentations, and very greuous cries, for the party deceased. But at the renewing of the year, they left off their mourning habits, and Funerall sorrowings. In the times of Terence and Plautus, Commicall Poets; the like was practised.

They that inhabit the great Isle of Iapparia, and (wel-neere) thorow al the Prouinces, which are called Malabria, after that the dead mans bodie is publickelic throwne into a fire, and one of his liuing wiues therewith, the nearest in Kindred to the deceased party, weareth a garment of Violet colour, and neuer putteth it off for a whole yeares space, eating also but one meale a day during that yeare.

They that are of the Mahometan Religion dwelling in the lesser Asia, Europe, and Affrica, do mourne no longer for any man or woman deceased, but onelie eight dayes; & that it is the limited time for mourning. Their Garments are of coarse wollen cloath, gray of colour (called among them, Chenine or Felte) and whereof couerings are made for horses. But such as will not weare them of this fashion, do carry a white Linnen Cloath, hanging down from the Turbant so low as the Girdle, and so go on with Teares and cries to the graue.

If the deceased Turk be a man of qualitie, and had Dogges and Horses, before he bee brought forth of his dwelling to buriall, they rub their noses with some sharpe graine or hearbe, to vrge teares out of their eyes, that they may appeare to mourne for their deceased Maister, & they are made to follow the bodye to the Graue, which commonly is without the Cittie, and so they continue on the mourning for eight dayes. Al which notwithstanding once euerie day (during this short time of sorrow, at a certaine limited hour in the day time, all the Kindred and friends do meet at the graue, to pray to God for the dead mans soule. The eight dayes being ouer-passed, all mourning is laide aside, and then they make a Feast: which beeing likewise ended, the suruiuer may then seeke after a seconde match.

Some do Write, that the Parents or Kindred of the dead, during the space of a whole yeare, do giue order to certaine men, called Saintons, to read euerie daie in the Achoran ouer the Graue, for the saluation of the deceased parties soule. In like maner, that some women very much deuoted to the Mahometan Religion, do leaue diuers Legacies, -to such as vse the wars, during the space of a year after their husbands death, to bring them home the heades of Christians, to offer vpon their graues. And commonly, they allow a * Sultain of Gold, to bee giuen for euerie head: but he must produce good witness and testimony, and it must bee soundly verified, that it is a Christians head. Most vsually they do but bring the skin or form of the face, but sildome the whole head. And this is the mourning of the Turkes.

It was my chance to find another mourning, of much longer continuance, then those formerly recited; which is vsed in a great Prouince, named Cermos, subject to the Persian, and professing the Mahometan Religion. This Prouince lyeth in so hot a country, that the inhabitants are wholly black. Neuerthelesse, the Lande is rich, abounding in Horses, gold, Silver, and Precious stones, of inestimable value for many rare and beautifull embellishings. Notwithstanding, the aire is meruailous

Beasts made apt to mourn for the dead.

The Turkes vse praier for the dead, and Feasting.

Of certaine Turkish Women, cruelly superstitious.

* A Turkish Coin of gold, valewing 7.s. 6.d. Sterling.

Mar. Paulus in lib. 1. cap. 23.

The women of Cormos doe mourne for their husbands death, the space of foure yeares.

lous vnhealthfull for Straungers, and therefore (very often) it causeth their death. The Vice-Roy of the place, knoweth well enough how to appropriate to himselfe (by way of Eschetage) what goods soeuer doe belong to strangers, being no Natiues of the Counery. And therefore when any one there dyeth, the wife of the dead man doth weare mourning the space of foure yeares, and neuer marieth againe during that time. But all that long and irksom limitation, she hath certaine sequestred houres daily, to kneel in her Chamber, accompanied with some of her neere kinred & friends; to make moanes, lamentations and funerall complaints, for the losse of her deceased Husband. As concerning the Men of this Country, and so of Turky; I cannot giue ye any assurance, of their mourning for the death of their Wiues: because their King despenseth with them, for the marrying of manie wiues. But the women of this Prouince of Cormos, are much to be commended for their chastity, beyond many of them remaining among vs, who rarely will tarry a yeares space of mourning.

CHAP. XII.

¶ Of diuers Paganes, that tooke the matter very offensive y, and a great dishonour to themselves; that any one should misprize, or contemne their Religion.

Ausanius reporteth, that neere the City of * Mantineia in Arcadia, there was a Temple consecrated to Neptune, the enterance whereof was interdited to men: and yet notwithstanding, it had no other guard or defence, but certaine little woollen cords, placed before the Gate, which caused such dreadfull fears, as the place thereby was accounted very reuerent. It chanced, that Aepythes, Son to Hippotes, King of Arcadia, a man slenderly affected to Religion, without any reuerence or respect, did cut the saide cords, and as he would haue entred into the Temple: the Waters of the Sea

Pausa. in lib. 10
* A City of Arcadia, some times also called Antigonia.

Aepythes, Son to Hippotes, King of Arcadia.

gushed forth abundantly vpon him, and wholly blinded him, so that hauing lost his eyes in this manner, he presently died. The auncient fame and report was, that the Waters were noted and obserued to rest in that Temple: And it was reputed to bee the greater Miracle, because the Sea was three miles, or thereabout, distant from that place.

10 In the City of Cabiria in Beotia; within a mile of Thebes, there stood a Temple dedicated to Ceres, and entrance therinto was granted to none; but only the Cabirians. It so fell out, that Mardonius, one of the Captaines to Xerxes, entring therinto with his Souldiours; to rob and bereaue it of the Treasures: both he & all the rest of his Army, were (in an instant) surprized with such a sudden fury, that casting themselues down headlong into very deep ditches, and from the tops of Rocks and Mountains; they all dyed most miserably. The like 20 happened to the Souldiers of great Alexander, who hauing taken Thebes by power, they would likewise enter into the said temple: but being smitten with lightning from heauen, they ended their liues cruelly, which proued a mightie terror to the Nation of that age. Phlegyas, King of the Orchomenians; or (according to Virgil) of the * Lapithes, hauing done infinite damniages in Greece, surprizing many Townes and Cities: became (in the end) so ouer-weening & foolish-bold, that he sacked the Temple of Apollo in Delphos, and slew Philamon, who brought a power of people to rescue the Temple. But it came to passe, that within no long while after, all the 30 Countrey of the Phlegyans was vterlie ruined, by a violent earthquake, and flaming Arrowes shot from Heauen, which killed most of the people, & they few that remained, died of the plague. Vpon which sacrilege, and contempt of the Gods, Virgil saith, that their king Phlegyas is grievously punished in Hell:

50 Phlegyas miserimus omnes
Admonet, & magni teliatur voce per umbras,
Discite iustitiam moniti, et non temere Dinos.

Which Verses were thus translated by Masures:

Phlegyas in that place,
Forewarneth all, of his great misery,
And as sad witness of such wretched case,
In those dim shades he cryes out wofully:
Learn to do Iustice: And by my contempt
Of the high Gods, do you like fate prevent.

Paus. in Lib. 9.
A Temple in Beotia dedicated to Ceres.

Another accident concerning the same Temple.

* A people dwelling in a part of Thessalic.

Philamon a cunning Harper, Sonne to Apollo.

Virg in Lib. 6.
de Aenid.

* Betweene the two Riuers, Sybaris and Crathis.

* The place where Apollo made answer.

The Historic
of a slaue bearen by his Lord and Maister.

That which could not be gained in re-uerence of the Gods, was for a Fathers sake won.

Amirys makes open sale of all his goods, fearing what was to follow.

King Cambyfes his vnhallo-wed intent against the

The Sybarites, people of a * citty in great Grece, (so called, by reason of a Riuer which passeth there along, named Sybaris) being desirous to vnderstand the future felicity of themselves and their Citty: sent to consult with the Oracle of Delphos, to be resolued in the matter. Wher-to Apollo in his * Pytheum, gaue them this answer. Your Land shall run to perdition, & your felicity shal haue end; when you begin to make more account of men, then of the Goddes. The Ambassadors hauing heard this answer, made report thereof to the Sybarites: who tooke good courage to them, perswading themselves assuredlie, that such disauster should neuer happen to them, and therefore their felicity would be eternall. But within some pretty while after, it happened, that a Maister beating his Slaue neere to the Temple: the Slaue fled from him, & knowing that the temple afforded refuge, ran thereinto, and mounting vp to the Altar, embraced the Image. His Lord pursued him, & hauing forcibly recouered him from the Statue, without any reuerence of the place, began againe to giue him many Bastonades. The seruant fled frō him once more, ran to saue himselfe at the Tombe of his Lords deceased Father: but then, in meer paternall duty, hee left punnishing any more, and pardoned the fault which hee had committed. All this being noted by Amirys, one of them that had bin Ambassador to Delphos: hee cald to remembrance the former words of the Oracle, and declared to some other of his Friends, that the time for accomplishment of Apolloes answer; was euen now come. But they giuing no credit to his words; imagined that hee was become foolish. Which when he perceiued, he took hold of their supposition, and (soone after) counterfeited as if he were growne somewhat distracted in his senses. So that, making publike sale of all his goods, and getting a large summe of Mony together: he departed suddenly thence, & went to dwell in Morea, expecting continually the fate of his Country. It fortun'd, that within no long time after, the Citty of the Sybarites (by what accident I know not) was rased, rent, and torne, and vterly made a heap of stones.

Cambyfes, the Son of Cyrus, sent fiftie thousand men to destroy the Temple of Iupiter Hammon: but by a sudden furious tempest, they were al quite ouerwhelmed with heaps of sand, before they could get thither, and so perished most wretchedly, without executing their pernicious desaigne. All they which were with Quintus Cepio, at the robbery of the Gold out of the Temples of Tholouse in France, to the quantity of one hundred & ten thousand markes of Gold, and 500. Millions of markes in Siluer: dyed euery Man of them (with all their kinred and Families) within that yeares compasse, and not aboue one of them, did carry so much as one piece thereof home to his own house. Strabo hath left it written, that this Treasure of Tholouse, was a part of the Delphian riches. For Brennus, Captaine of the Gauls, being assisted by the * Tectosages, had ransacked Delphos: according as we find it recorded by Iustine the Historian. As then these Tectosages made their retreat to Tholouse, which was their auncient Country: the plague began to assaile them, and neuer ceased, vntill such time, (as answer came from the Diuines) that they had drowned al the Gold and Siluer (gotten by sacrilege) in the bottome of the Thoulouzan Lake. Out of which place it was (long time after) won and gotten, by Q. Cepio & his followers, who carried it thence to their owne deare detriment. The Romains hauing surprized Carthage, certaine of them despoyled the Statue of Apollo, of a costly robe of Gold worne about him: but the hands of him that committed this sacrilege, wer found cut off, and fastned to the same garment. And Brennus, captain of the forenamed Gauls, entred forcibly into the Temple of Apollo at Delphos: and hauing committed it to publike spoile, was so furiously possessed, that he slue himselfe with his own hands.

CHAP. XI.

Of the Seiane Horse. And of the admirable Statue of a Horse, erected in Altina, a Citty in the Country of Olympia.

Caius Bassus, in his Comentaries, and Iulius Modestinus, in his second Booke of confused Questions (agreeing with that which Aulus Gellius reporteth in his Attick nights) do relate a memorable History, concerning the Seiane horse, & in this maner. In the Prouince of Argos, there Temple of Iupiter Hammon.

Aul. Gell. in lib. 3. Cap. 9.

Strabo in lib. 4.

People of the west part of Narbon, towards the Pyrene Mountaines. Iust. in Lib. 32.

The Romains at their surprizal of Carthage.

Caius Bassus in Comentar. lib. 3. Cap. 10. Iul. Modest. in Quæst. lib. 2. Cap. 1. Aul. Gellius. in Noct. Attic.

there was a horse bred, reported to be of the race of those Horses, belonging vnto Diomedes the Thracian, which horse Hercules brought with him into Greece, after he had slain the said Diomedes. This horse was of a Bay colour, and of vnusual greatnesse; his Maine yellowish and long; his Nostrils very wide and open; his eyes great; his legges well formed; his breast goodly, and his taile long: in briefe, hee was perfectly faire, well limbd, stout, and full of courage for the wars. In the time of his beeing but a Colte, great rumour ran abroad of him, in Asia, Iudea, Thebes, Pentapolis, and all ouer Greece, procuring very many (from all these parts, and many more beside) to trauaile to see him; others to buy him; and diuers to draw his figure or proportion. But this goodly Beast had such an vnfortunate destinie, that whosoever was his Maister; must needs perish, with his Familier, House, and Goods whatsoever. For prooffe wherof, such as bought him, and mounted on his backe (which were five worthy Knights) dyed all both miserably and infamously. The first that bought and backt him, beeing then little aboue two yeares old: was Cneus Seianus, a Romaine Confull, and of great birth, as also verie verie wise in gouerning the Commonwealth, who being to returne out of Persia to Rome, followed the faction of Octavius Augustus; in regard whereof, sixe moneths after hee had bought the saide Horse, Marke Anthony caused his head to be smitten off in Greece, and commanded that his body should remaine without any buriall. Now, because that Cneus Seianus was the first Buier and Maister of this Horse, and also had (by his death) first experimented his fatall fortune: hee was therefore called the Seiane Horse.

Afterward, a Romaine, named Cornelius Dolabella, Confull also: bought this horse at an hundred thousand Sester-tiaes, which amounted to the value of two thousand Duckets. But if hee had knowne, that hee bought misfortune at so deare a rate: he neuer would haue accepted him in gift: For within lesse then a yeares space after hee had him, the vnfortunate Dolabella was massacred in Syria, in a mutiny of people that rose against him, and being thus slaine, his body (in meere despight) was dragd along the streets. Dolabella being thus dead, Cas- us Cassius, who had great commaund in Rome, performd many warlike exploits in Asia, and had besiedged and ouercom Dolabella in that sedition: took the horse for his owne imployment; but hee had not kept him any long while, till his troups being vanquished, and his Armie quite broken, himselfe dyed very miserablie.

10 Thus writeth Aulus Gellius, howbeit, I haue else-where read, that at a Dinner, both Hee, his Wife and Children, were poysoned, and all them dyed within an houre after. Vpon the death of Cassius, this vnhappy and disastrous Horse hapned into the power of great Marke Anthony, who found him so faire; and well fitting his owne minde, that hee gaue in recompence to the bringer of the horse, as much as hee would haue giuen him if he had bought him. Marke Anthony was vanquished by Augustus Caesar, in a bat-taile on the Sea neere to Actium; and sau-ing himselfe by flight into Alexandria, (where likewise he was engirt, with sharp besiedging;) hee stabd his owne Sword into his belly, and so perished by a violent and contemptible death. When Marke Anthony was thus dead, a Knight of Asia, named Nigidius, bought the Horse, at a reasonable price, because now hee grew to waxe olde: but his successe proued as deare and fatall, as any of the former owners, and much more notori-ous. For within the years time of buying this Horse, as he rode with him ouer the Riuer * Marathon: the Horse stumbling in the Water, could by meanes recouer himselfe, but there, both Maister and Horse were drowned, and neuer after any tydings heard of them. This Historie made way to the ancient and well known Prouerb, to wit; He had the Seiane Horse, which continuallie was spoken of him, that came to any miserable and vnfortu-nate end. As the like was otherwise vte-red, He met with the Gold of Tholouse, for the reasons remembred in the precedent Chapter.

50 A very admirable matter is likewise remembred, of the Statue of the Horse of Phormius, erected in Altina, a Citty of Olympia in Elis. There stood a horse of Brasse, without any taile; yet appearing very goodly, and forged by the hands of Dionysus the Argiue, in honor of Phormi-us the Arcaatan, as was plainely giuen to Cassius, third Maister of the Horse.

Mark Anthony the fourth Maister of the Horse.

* A Towne & Promontory of Epire, where Augustus, after he had foiled M. Anthony and Cleopatra, built the Citty of Nicopolis.

Belonging to a Towne so named, tenne miles distant from Athens.

Erasmus Chilia. 1. Cent. Lib. 10.

The Statue of Phormius his Horse.

Great affecti-on to a Horse that had so fatall a destiny.

Cneus Seianus, first bought the Horse.

Cornelius Dolabella the Con-full, second Maister of the Horse.

A strange perswasion of the Elians.

This is recorded by diuers good Authors for a truth.

be vnderstood, by certaine Carracters or Letters engrauen on his side. And the Elians were verily perswaded, and held it for infallible, that Stallions and Mares should both beget and bring forth the goodlier Beastes, if the act were performed before this Statue. And whether it consisted in some matter of enchantmēt, or any other vnknowne mystery, I know not; but if a man rode on any Stallion by this Statue: his rider could not be able to sit him, but he would breake al his Furniture, Bridle, Raines, Girts, &c. of what strength soeuer, and neuer cease till hee were at liberty, offering then to couer the Statue, as if it had bin a liuing Mare. And this was not don in the Spring time only, whē these beasts are said to be most thereto inclinable; but euen at other times likewise, contrary to the naturall custome of Horses. And he could not be had thence, but by violent strokes, and great compulsion.

CHAP. XIII.

*Of Lais, the famous Courtezan of Greece;
And the Epitaph engrauen vpon hir Tomb.*

Lais in her tender youth, taken & sold
among slaues

*L*ais was borne in a Towne of Sicily, named Hiccarā, and being a young Girle, when Nicias, Duke and Capitaine of the Athenians, surprized both Catania & Hiccarā: she was also taken by some of the Souldiers, and brought to Corinthe, where she was sold among diuers other Slaues, in the open Market. Being afterward enfranchised and set at liberty: ouer-much licence, want of respect and correction (being absent from her Parents and Friendes, whose care should haue extended, for her good education in honest and ciuill manners) was the onely cause of making a booty of her honor, to him that wold giue the most for it. So that, through wanton carriage in men, as forward as shee to all loosenesse: she won the fame and reputation, of the most queint and witty Courtezan (of her time) in all Greece. Wherupon, the Corinthians did esteem her as a great glory to them, and held themselues to be not a little honoured

Lais the onely famous Courtezan in all Greece, and reputed as an honour to the Corinthians.

by her, infomucht, hat they stiled her to be a native of their Country, and left it recorded in their Bookes and writings. Some say, that shee remained a great while in the Camp of King Pyrrhus, and went along with him into Italy: from whence returning againe to Corinthe, there she made her retirement altogether. This amorous woman, was endued with such exquisite beauty, that the chiefest Painters (according as Athenaus reporteth) came expressly to Corinthe to see her, to draw her Picture, & beare thence the true figure of her face, breasts, & whole body. She was of such entising nature, that men of the greatest wealth, would giue a knocke at her doore; yea, many Kings, Princes, and great Lords cam, not only from Europe, but from Affrica likewise, to serue, court and require her fauour. In brieft, shee was generally affected, highly esteemed, and enflamed all Greece, to woe & win her. For either in speaking, singing, dauncing, or what else, she could performe it with so absolute a grace: that shee meerly rauished the harts of all men to behold her, and hardly could they refraine to be out of her company, such a commanding power had her beautie ouer them. Notwithstanding, she would neuer yeild her selfe to one Man; albeit Aristippus, Demosthenes, and Diogenes, were extraordinarily enamoured of hir. True it is, that Aristippus made his vant, that he had Lais alone in his owne priuate possession; whereas others did desire that they could haue the like fauor. Demosthenes came once from Athens to Corinthe, in a disguised habit, to see Lais, and enjoy her if he could. But before she would open the doore to him, shee bad him first send her 10000. Drachmaes (which valued 1000. Crownes, but else wher I haue read 8000.) for one nights lodging with her: he was so amazed at the demaund, that preuailing ouer the heat of his affections, hee went away, saying out aloud; I will neuer buy repentance at so deare a price. Anulus Gellius recordeth it in this manner. ὄνι ἄνδρα, μισθίου δραχμῶν μετὰ μέλειαν. That is to say: I will not buy repentance with a thousand Drachmaes. This hee spake (as I thinke) according to the saying of Diogenes, to wit: That every Creature is sad after the Veneriall Act.

Athenaus a worthy Philoopher of Cilicia in Augustus time.

From far and neere they came to Corinth to see Lais.

Lais in Lib.
3. Cap. 14.

Anul. Gell. in lib.
1. Cap. 14.
Macrob. in Sat.
Lib. 2. Cap. 2.

I haue read that the Drachmae was a piece of Mo-ny valuing three shilings sixe pence.

One

The Answer of Lais concerning the Phylosophers of Athens.

One day, in the presence of Lais, there was one that verie highly commended the Phylosophers of Athens to be excellent Wisemen, lerned & honest. Wher-to Lais answered thus: I knowe not what great Learning is in your Phylosophers, much lesse what they studie, or what Bookes they read: considering, that I who am a woman, and neuer was in Athens, do beholde them to come hither: & being Phylosophers I can make them to bee Louers. And yet notwithstanding, they cannot make anie of my other fauourites, Phylosophers.

*A Countrie in Africa, called also Pentapolitana, of the five Cities Beronic, Arsinoc, Ptoimais, Apollonia, and Cyrena. Athen. in li. 13. Cap. 20.

Aristippus the Phylosopher, borne in Syrenaitica, of whom, I haue formerlie made mention did yearely continue for the space of two moneths, in the time of the Neptuanales (Feasts Dedicated vnto Neptune) with Lais in Egypt. And being reprooued by a familiar friend of his, because he spent so much money vpon that woman, who would neuertheless entertaine Diogenes without anie salarie, returned this answer. I giue bountifullie to Lais, because I would haue my fill of content with her; and yet not to hinder anie other from enioying her. Diogenes on a time said vnto him: Aristippus, thou thinkest that thou hast thy pleasure alone with Lais, and yet she is a common Whore: Either lead thy life like a Cynick, as I do, or else leaue hir I would aduise thee. Aristippus presentlie replied. Diogenes, Doest thou deeme it inconuenient, to liue in an house where one hath dwelt before thee? Or to venter in the same ship, where many others haue formerly successessfully sailed? Compare my case then on the contrarie, that feare not to affect the Woman, where many fauourites haue beene accepted before me.

Discourse betwene Aristippus & Diogenes, concerning Lais.

If Lais knew in hir youthful time, how to make sale of her kind entertainment to her Louers, and at so deare a rate, as beuty was sildom bought at the like cost: we must needs conceit, that when more mature and riper yeares came vpon her, she could much better skill of making hir Market, being so well plied with bountifull Pay-maisters. Moreouer, when her gallant flourishing daies were passed ouer, that her faire complexion began to faile, and futrowed wrinkles appeared in her face: she flew not then so loftie a pitch, but was content to welcome both young and olde, rich and poore, faire and deformed, lusty bloods, and cooler spirits; and to be briefe, all goers; and commers

Lais was skilful in making vse of hir vain time, yet stooped to al prices in her elder dayes.

indifferently, without exception, and at how meane a price soeuer. As Iphicrates painted her forth, in liuely colours, by those Verses which Athenens wrote of her, the substance whereof, are to this effect. Lais is a very slothful drunken Woman, doing nothing but eat and drink all the day long. I thinke she hath experimented the behaviour and custome of Eagles, vwho when they are young, do scize on Sheepe & Hares on the highest Mountaines, lifting them aloft by the gripes of their Talents, but when olde age stealeth on them, then they leaue that bigger prey, and flye at none but young and smallest Birds. Euen so, Lais beeing yong and gallant, had great sums of Money giuen for enioying her fauours; but when many yeares came on her, and blemished the beauty of her former cariage, she wold go then whither any man pleased, the Carolus* or the Sons, serued insted of a Crowne of former offers, and old or yong was not to be reiected.

Athen in li. 13. Cap. 20.

Authors do not agree, concerning the place where Lais died; some say, it was at Corinth, she being aged 72. yeares, and that the Corinthians made her a magnificent Tomb without the Citie where she dwelled (for they did not allowe anie Whores or Harlots to abide within the City, neither vsed they to bury their dead within their wals) and that on the top of hir Sepulcher stood a catued Lionnesse in Brasse, holding a male Goat betweene her former feete. Some others, do holde it assuredly, that hir death happened in Thessa'y, whether she had followed one, named Hippostrates, whom Athenens calleth Pausanias; and Plutarch Heppolochus the Thessalian. She doating in affection towards him, forsooke the Mount of Acro-Corinthus* (continually bedewed with fresh springs & waters) & escaped secretly without the knowledge of anie of her louers, into the field of Alexander, where other women, being both ielious and eniuous of her fame, forcibly drew her into the Temple of Venus, and there stoned hir to death with stones. Athenens saith, with seats and tooles: for which cause, it was after called the Temple of Venus the Murdresse: otherwise tearmed αγορα των ασεβων. Of Impious Venus. Her Tombe was found in Thessaly, neere to the Riuer Renens, whereon was made an Vrne of stone, and thereon was engrauen certain Greeke Verses, which were translated thus in Latine.

*Woorth an English penny, but valewing ten pence Tour.

Variance among authors about the death of Lais.

Athenens vbi sup. Pausanias in Lib. 2. *A high Hill in Merca.

Lais beaten to death with stones.

A Riuer running betwene Ossa and Oymus.

*Roboris inuicti animi sit Græcia quamuis,
Victa tamen formæ paruit illa suæ.
Laidis ipse parens amor est, aluitq; corinthus
Ac nunc ipsa tenet inclita Thessalia.*

By the Author thus turned into French.

*Bien que la Grece soit d'invincible courage,
Vaincue toutesfois a cede au visage
De sa chere Lais, belle comme la iouy,
Brave et Pimpante en tout, fille du Dieu Amour:
Aux meilleurs de ses ans Corinthe la nourrie,
Et ores ses os sont gardez en Thessalie.*

And thus by the Translator into English.

Though Greece was of vnconquerable might,
Yet ne'rtheless it yeelded, and gaue way
To the faire lookes of Lais, bright as the day:
Feate in all forme, the Loue-Gods deare delight,
Corinth gaue breeding to her better daies,
But Thessaly keepes both her Bones and praise.

CHAP. XV.

Of Androchia and Alcida, who were Sisters. Also of Macharia, Daughter to Hercules: Which Ladies, for the safety of their Countries, slew themselves.

Ophocles maketh mention, in one of his Tragedies, that at Thebes, in the temple of Diana Euclyia, were buried two Virgines; daughters to Antipenus the Thebane Cittizen; the one, being named Androchia, and the other Alcida.

Oph. in Antig. pp.

*A Tyrant whome Hercules draue out of the City Orchomeni.

The rare resolution of two famous Virgins.

It happened that * Erginus, King of the Orchomenians, hauing besiedged the Cittie of Thebes, with full determination to ruinate it, in reuenge of the death of his Father Climon: the Thebanes consulted with the Oracle, concerning their fortune in this extremitie. Afterward, when the two fore-named young virgins had vnderstood from the Oracle, that if two such Virgines were to bee found (of Noble Family) and would bee so courageous as to kill themselves: they shoulde thereby be the cause of their Citties freedom, and ouerthrowe of the Enemy. These two young Ladies, desiring to be that happie paire of Virgins, and preferring their Countryes deliuerance before their owne liues: killed themselves presently, and the enemy returned ashamed and foiled; whereby both honor and victorie remained to the Thebanes, to the eternall praise & memories of those two worthy Virgins.

Hercules escaping the power of * Euristheus, went into Thrace, where hee remained til the time of his deth. He being dead, Euristheus demanded his Children of Seix, Lord and commander of Thrace, who fearing their liues losse, sent them to Theseus at Athens, to whose especiall care and trust hee re.commended them. When Euristheus had intelligence thereof, he proclaimed war against the Athenians: who as well for their owne safetie, as the Children of Hercules, determined constant resistance against Ceix. But consulting with the Oracle, which side shold be the Conquerour in this doubtfull triall, the Oracle gaue answere, that they should haue the dayes victory, provided, that one of Hercules his Children, must first die. This was no sooner heard by Macharia, Daughter to Hercules: but instantly she slew her selfe, and the Athenians were the Conquerors. Thus you may see, how the Deuill could get himself sacrifices, and make humain creatures prodigall of their liues to him, in those darke dayes of ignoraunce, when almost the whole world beleued those deluding Oracles: wherein, for any one truth, infinite Lies, Riddles, and Ambages, were deliuered vnto the poore ouer-credulous people.

*The King of Greece, the Theame of Iunoes reuêge on Hercules.

Macharia daughter to Hercules slew her selfe, for the Athenians deliuerance.

CHAP. XVI.

From whence came at first, our Orange and Cedar Trees. And how the Cedar is verie good and soueraigne, against the poysen of Serpents.

Oranges, Citrons, and Cedars, were neuer in ancient times known to be good to eat: but onely they were giuen as Offeringes vnto the Gods, and esteemed most especiallie for their beauty and fight; & being shut vp in chests Oranges, Citrons, & Cedars offered to the Gods.

Iuba, in his Histories.

The Historie of two men condemned to death in Egypt.

Deuouring Serpents refused to touch poor condemned men, only because they had eaten Cedar.

10 chests or coffers, to yeild a pleasing fauor to Cloathes and Garments, as also to preserue them from Mothes & worms. Then, in regard that they first came out of Persia and Media: men vsed to call them Persian Apples, and Median Apples; Howbeit, Iuba, in his Histories, rearmes them Apples of Gold, or Apples of the Hesperides. In no long while after, men began to eate of the Cedar, and thereupon appeared, that a meruailous vertue was found therein, against the venome and poyson of Serpents & Aspicks. To approue the truth therof, we finde it credibly recorded, that two men, being condemned to death in Ægypt, their sentence was; that they should be exposed to Serpents, to bee deuoured by them, which kind of death had bene vsed among them from olde Antiquitie. The day being come wheron they should dye, one of them was (accidentally) visited by a friend of his in the Prison, who was champing and chewing a piece of Cedar in his mouth, and bestowed some little part thereof on the condemned Prisoner; which hee accepted very thankfully, and byting thereon, gaue some also to his deathes companion, in meere simplicity, and without knowledge of any secret vertue therein.

20 They being brought to the place of death, and thrust out to the greedy Serpents; they would by no meanes come neere them, or touch them, but auoyded so farre as possibly they could from them. The Officers of Iustice beeing there present, began to examine, what might be the reason of this sildome scene wonder: whereupon they found, that the Cedar (eaten by both the Prisoners) was the onely cause. But in regard they intended a more ample proof thereof, on the next day following, they caused one of the condemned Men to eate of the Cedar againe, but gaue to the other his accustomed food, and bringing them both to the place of execution: all the people beheld, that the Serpent ran fiercely on him that was fasting from Cedar, tearing and renting him in infinite morsels; but left the other againe without any touch, who died also the day following by the same Serpents, according as his fellow had done before him.

CHAP. XVII.

How hurtfull a thing it is to endure fasting or hunger: And what the reason is, that aged people are more capable thereof, the youthfull bodies, yet without any prejudice. Also, whence it proceedeth, and upon what occasion, that fasting is hurtfull to chollericke persons, and profitable to the Phlegmaticke.

20 Phistitions doe hold opinion, that two principall inconueniences doe ensue by Hunger and Fasting: the one is, the naturall heate is therby consumed; and the other, that the humiditie of the stomach is thereby weakened. The body that is most offended by these two harms, endureth hunger with exceeding great difficulty: but whereas these annoyances do cause no oppression, it is suffered with the greater ease. The Infant then that encreaseth, hath his naturall heat in sufficient strength, and radicall moysture verie subtile: which resolueth it selfe much more by equall proportion, in not enduring hunger then, then it can doe in any other degree of age.

30 Moreouer the sensitiue vertue is then forcibly mooued, whereby it suffereth hunger with much passion and damage, which causeth both heat & the naturall Spirit to diminish mightily, & keeping nourishment then from him: is the maine hinderance to his growth and encreasing. By which occasion we may perceiue, that an Infant or young child is more iniured by hunger, then all persons else in any other age.

40 The young man, that hath attained to his intire and perfect encreasing, although his naturall heate bee as strong as that of the Infant: yet notwithstanding, he hath his naturall humiditie more grosse, and therefore it cannot so soone dissolue, as that in the Childe. In which respect, hunger doth no way so much offend a Man of middle age, as a 50 young

Two inconueniences caused by hunger

Of naturall heat in Infants, and radicall moysture.

The hinderance of an Infants growing.

Of the young man in his full state of encreasing.

younger Child or Infant. For it is vniuersally obserued, that in Adolescence, Youth-hood, or when a man is neere to his original: with so much the more paine and difficultie hee endureth hunger, because his naturall moysture is more subtile and resolueable.

Of the Aged or old man, in his declining estate.

The old, or aged man, hath his naturall heat much abased or deiected, and his humidity greatly thickned or closed together, which cannot so easily resolue it selfe. The sensitiue vertue also is highly decayed in him, and senteth nothing so perfectly, as when hee was an Infant, a Youth, or in his strength and best of yeares. And therefore, hee endureth not so much paine and damage then, as in the precedent conditions. But he who is the decrepite, or very old man, although he haue his naturall moysture much more grosse, his heate very feeble, and his sensible vertue farre more imperfect, then is in all the other Ages, as being Neighbour and neere to his extinction: yet for all that, how little soeuer he suffereth the accident or discommoditie of hunger; it endangereth the quite quenching of his naturall heat, whercon immediatlie he dyeth. And therefore it is very needfull, that food should be as often giuen to the decrepite man, as to the young Infant, but yet diuersly. For the Infant must haue enough at euery time giuen him, and but litle to the decrepite man: because, if he should receiue ouer much, it would suffocate the small quantity of heate remaining in him; as we see by a slender flame, when too much Oyle is put into the Lamp.

Of Decripite or the lowest age of all.

The decrepite old must be as often fed as a child, but in another kind.

How hunger is caused in man, and in all creatures els.

The Melancholly humor

Hunger is caused in vs, and all other Creatures else, by reason that naturall heate continually consumeth, and dryeth the humiditie of our members, which being consumed, consumeth likewise the moysture of the veines, and their consumption causeth attraction from the Liuer, and the Liuer from the stomacke. These humours thus consumed, the Soueraigne Creator hath ordained in vs, that the Spleene or Milt should conuay the Melancholly humor to the stomack, which being eager and corrosiue, consumeth likewise the substantiall humiditie in the stomacke it selfe, and so inciteth a desire of foode, from whence ensueth the occasion of Hunger. Which is very hurtfull to Chollericke bodies, because whensoever they suffer hunger, their cholier descendeth into the stomacke, and wil not let them eate; but are possessed with fumes and vapours while cholier so mounteth, which afterward (when they doe eate) corrupteth and putrifieth the meates receiued. But in Phlegmaticke complexions, there is humidity enough in the stomacke, and in all the members. And therefore it is profitable for them to endure hunger; for by their sufferance thereof, their bad and ill-affected humours are consumed away by cholier.

The Chollerick humour.

The Phlegmaticke complexion.

CHAP. XVIII.

That there is not any thing in the World, which is more hurtfull to man, or procurereth him more losse and danger, then the Tongue: with many notable Examples to that effect.

Anacharsis the Philosopher, being one daie conuersing with his Schollers, concerning the tongue, spake thus vnto them. Not without great Art and Mystery (o my Schollers) did Nature bestow on vs two Fecte, two Legges, two Armes, two Hands, two Eyes, two Eares, and no more but one tongue. As signifying thereby, that eyther to goe, see, or heare, are offices which we can doe as often as we please: but to speake well, wisely, and modestly, is more then we can easily attaine vnto. He said moreouer, For no other occasion hath Nature left our face vncouered, our eyes, eares, hands, fecte, and all the rest of our body, except the tongue: which she impaled with lawes, and walled about with teeth, and afterward defended it with lippes: but onely to let vs vnderstand, that (in this present life) there is nothing that deserueth a stronger guard, then the vnbrideled tongue. We haue no part belonging to our body, which Nature hath so surely Rampiard vp, as the tongue. Before it is placed a Bulwarke of teeth, to the end, that it should be obedient

The speech vsed by Anacharsis the Philosopher to his Schollers concerning the tongue.

Nature left all our parts else vncouered, but the tongue.

The teeth ordained to punish the tongue.

Anacharsis at a Banquet with Solon.

Prou. 18.21.

Erasmus Enchir. Cap. 9.

Pittacus his comparison of the tongue

The answer of Afranius the Philosopher.

Plutar. in Lib. Exil. cap. 4.

bedient to reason, which restraines it, (as with a strong bridle) within: but if it will not be kept backe, her intemperance may be iustly punnished, with a bloody gripe betweene the teeth.

The same Philosopher banqueting one day with Solon, was esteemed to be wise, because being a-sleepe afterward, hee was noted by one or two: to hold his right hand on his mouth, and the left vpon his naturall partes of secrecie, as thereby declaring, that the tongue had neede of a much stronger Bridle, then the other partes of Nature. For the tongue containeth in it both good and euill; And Salomon saith: Both life and death is in the power of the Tongue. If we vse the tongue well (saith Erasmus) it is as a Horne of plentie or aboundance: but if it want a Gouvernour, there is nothing more offensive. The Philosopher Pittacus saide. The Tongue resembleth to the world, the forme of a Lances point, but is much more dangerous: for the Lance woundeth the Flesh onelie, but the Tongue striketh quite thorough the Heart.

Afranius, another Philosopher, was one day demaunded, wherefore he spent the most part of his time, in walking among the Mountaines, hazzarding his life euerie houre, where so many wilde Beastes might suddenlie deuour him? Hee presentlie replied. Beastes haue no other weapons but their teeth, where-with to teare me: but Men cease not daily to commit outrage with their members, and to defame with their mallicious Tongues.

Plutarck, in his Booke of Banishment, declareth, that the Lydians had a Law among them, that such Men as had bad and wicked tongues: should be bannished and confined for halfe a yeare, into some distant seperate place, without power of speaking to any one whatsoeuer. And many times it happened, that some of them chose rather three yeares slavery in the Gallies, then to be so bard of speaking for halfe a yeare.

Demosthenes, a Man of great authoritie, and preuailance in speaking; was much feared throughout all Greece, and therefore talked at his owne pleasure. In regard whereof, all the chiefe of the 10

20

30

40

50

Athenians met together on a day, and at a meet appointed place, concluding to bestow a large recompence, and liberall Wages also on him beside. And calling him in among them, to let him vnderstand their bounty and beneuolence; one (in name of the rest) spake thus vnto him. Demosthenes, we doe not bestow this great gifte, either because thou hast spoken, or that thou shouldst speak: but onely to the end, that thou shouldst hold thy peace.

Marke Anthony caused the Father of Eloquence to be slaine, vpon no other occasion: but because hee had spoken too aduantageously on his behalfe. Which was manifestly declared by Fulvia, Wife to Marke Anthonie, when shee procured Ciceroes Tongue to bee puld out; for his false speaking, and pierced it thorough (in many places) with Needles. Salust, the Romaine Oratour, was verie odious vnto Strangers, and seuerely pursued by his owne Companions: because he neuer tooke Penne in his hand to Write; but it was against some especiall persons; neither would he open his mouth, but it was to depraue some others. The Lydians had an inuiolable Law, to punnish Detractors with death, but Homicides and Men-killers, they condemned them to labour in their Gallies: So that among those barbarous people; for one Man to depraue or defame another: it was reputed a far greater offence, then if he had slaine him.

As King Darius sat one day at Dinner in his Tent; such as hee pleased to accept in companie at his owne Table, beganne to mooue some Millitary Argument, concerning the warlike affaires of Alexander the Great. In which discourse, a Captaine, named Mygdonius, (one very highly fauoured of Darius) deliuered some reproachfull speeches of Alexander, whereupon Darius suddenlie saide. Hold thy Tongue Mygdonius, and know, that I brought thee not with mee to this Warre, to defame Alexander with thy Tongue; but onelie to conquer him in Armes, if thou canst. By which example, we may perceiue, how detestable and odious the Vice of Detraction is: because it is apparant, that euen Enemies themselves

The manner how the Athenians recompensed Demosthenes.

Mark Anthony caused the death of Cicero.

Of Salust the Romaine Orator.

The Lydians law against Detractors.

An honorable mind in King Darius towards his enemy.

This Mygdonius learned by some Mignus.

Over-much talke is a great blemish to Honor.

selues cannot endure, to heare disgrace-full wordes of one another. Pytheus, Duke of Athens, was a very honorable Prince, full of courage and resolution:
but yet so ouer-abounding in talke, that it greatly diminished the glorie of all his other atchieuements. A Philosopher beeing bidden to a sollemne Banquet, spake not one word while the feasting continued, which made euery one maruaile at his so long silence, and demanded, for what reason he was so sparing of speech? Whereto he returned this answer. It is much better to know the time when a Man should speake, then barely how to speake: For nature hath taught vs the one, but wisedome is the enstrueter in the other.

Read Plutarc.
in his little Tracte of too much talking.
Of him that found the empty Bottle in the Temple of Iuno Chalcoecos.

No Man (at any time) repented himselfe for beeing silent, but many haue done it for too much talking, because one word hath sometimes beene the price of a mans life. Let him be a Wit-nesse, who interpreted the signification of the emptie Bottle, found in the Temple of Iuno Chalcoecos in Lacedemonia, after it was stolne thence: by ouer-la-uish pratling, when no man demanded any question of him, hee lost his life, with his owne consent. He could then haue wisht his wordes in his belly againe, but it was too late, and time past: for a word cannot be recouered againe, when it is out of the mouth, no more then a Bird, when she is let go at libertie: whereupon it was saide: That Words haue winges. Sildome hath an vttered word returned any such seruice, as profit hath ensued by diuers neuer spoken: For wee may alwaies deliuer that wel, which is yet within vs, but neuer call that backe to mending, which is gone from vs.

Of Epimenides
the Painter of Rhodes, that trauailed into Asia.

Epimenides, a Painter, parting from Rhodes, trauailing into Asia, where hee continued many yeares together: but at length returned to Rhodes againe, yet no one in the Cittie could heare one word of him, concerning what he had done and scene in Asia. Wheremat the Rhodians making no little maruaile, they entreated him, to acquaint them with some discourse of his long trauailes; whereupon, he gaue this answer. I was ten yeares on the Seas, to make me apt for parting from place to place: Other tenne yeares I tarryed in Asia, to better my skill in Epimenides his answere to the men of Rhodes.

*painting: And sixe yeares afterward I studied in Greece, onely to learne how to hold my peace. Your comming to me now, is, that I should vse wordes to ye, and tell ye newes.
Come to me no more (kinde Countrey-men) to any such intent: For you may see Pictures in my House, if you please to buy them, but I haue no newes to feede your eares withall.*
In my poor opinion, he answered them like a verie wise man, for, by reporting matters of farre Countries, which are rare and diuers: people (of weake capacity) giue no credit to them; others, make a mockery, and most are doubtful of them.

Pythagoras being seriously questioned, what was the reason that hee kept so strict silence in his Academie (because in the space of two yeares, all Schollers that came to be enstrueted there, might not speake one word, being thereto en-ioyned by his seuer commaund) returned this answer. In the Schooles of other Philosophers, they teach their Schollers to speake; but mine learne onely how to bee silent. And vndoubtedly, concerning the life of man, there is no higher or fairer Philosophy, that this World can affoord; then how to restrain the tongue, when it is most needfull.

Reporters of tales & newes are sildome well credited.

CHAP. XIX.

What Feasts and Banquets were used in ancient times; And how Augustus prohibited in Rome, that any Man should in-uite another to eate in his house.

Mong the Spartanes, there were certaine Banquets vsed, which they commonly tearmed Phiditia*, and therein they fed on Bread and Swines Flesh sodden in Water, without any thing else for their first seruice. For their last course, which those Auncients called, the second Table: they were serued with Oliues, Cheese, and Figges. And to close vp the feast, they had certaine baked cakes, made of fine Flower and Oyle, cut vp-on Bay-leaves: without any Perfumes at their Tables, curious backt meates,

* Common Suppers among the La-cedemonians.
kept in the open streets.

or

Athenicus in Lib. 4. Cap. 5. Feasts in Crete free for all commers.

The manner and preparation of the Feasts.

The chiefe Lady and disposer of the Banquet.

Their Table talke, after Dinner or Supper.

A notable encouragement for youthfull spirits.

or choise sauces of sundry tastes, thinges in those dayes neuer heard or thought on, their Feasts & Banquets being much more modest then ours now are. In those elder dayes, thorough al the citties in Crete, on certaine dayes of the yeare; they were wont to make Banquets; common for who soeuer pleased to come to them. For maintenance whereof; euery Cittizen gaue the tenth part of all his fruites, which were gathered duely at the Citties entrance, by some of the society thereto deputed. The care and charge of the whole Banquet: was referred to a worthy Lady, who had (vnder her) three or foure weomen of more inferiour degree, beside two seruants, that fed the Fire with wood. In the house appointed for the Feast, first of all were prepared two Tables for the Cittizens, and two other, onely for strangers. The assistants were all serued with equall allowance: but younger people had lesse flesh meates affoorded them, then the elder. At each Table there was appointed a Vessell full of Wine, well qualified with water, whereof they dranke in common, and after they had indifferently eaten, they had other wine brought them, of better qualitie then the first: whereof the grauer fort dranke so much as they pleased, but the younger: in more moderate manner.

The Noble Lady, who helde the supreme authority of the Feast, accompanied with some other Ladyes; brought the most delicious meates to them, that in times of warre or peace, had done any famous and remarkeable deede, as being those that best deserued honour. When this Dinner, or Supper (as it fell out to be) was ended, they would sit still, consulting first together on publique affaires and afterward on matters appertaining to the warres, with repetition of their names and seruices, that had best deserued of the Common-wealth; profited their Country; beene beneficiall to the Temples, and household Gods of euery Familie; and were dreadlesse of death in all good actions. These wanted not their due praise and commendation, to the end, that yong men hearing the memory of such vertuous persons, might adiect them-selues to the like endeaours, and (finally) be pertakers of their glory. This beeing done, they arose from the

10

20

30

40

50

Tables, and departed thence about their occasions.

The Lacedemonians, at their marriage Feasts; would permit no more but nine persons to dine together, which they did as in reuerence to the nine Muses. And this was conditioned also, that if any man talked at the Table, no wine should be giuen him to drinke; so that if a man desired to drinke, hee must be sure to holde his peace. This law would serue to good purpose in these dayes, because both in our marriage Feasts and other Banquets, nothing is more vsually heard then noise; rumour and babling, and they are best esteemed, that can maintaine the longest prating. The * Nanratites in the hallowed Feasts, which they celebrated in honour of their Father Dionysius, or Bacchus, in the Pritaneum, were all clothed in white Albes, then called Pritanean Gownes, and when they had heard the voice of the publique Cryer; they would al fall down on their knees to the ground, and hauing saide certaine priuate prayers, seate themselues at the Table, euery one receiuing two measures of wine; the Priests of Apollo Pitheus, and of Bacchus only excepted, who were allowed a double portion, as well of wine, as of all other thinges beside. Afterward the vse was, that euery one should haue a fayre large slice of very pure bread giuen him, and thereon a piece of courser Bread, with a morsell of Swines Flesh on it, beside a Cake of Barly Bread fryed, or else so much Meale fryed, or a messe of Portage made of Hearbes, according to the season of the yeare, two Egges, a cantle of Cheefe, dried Figs, and a Cake crowned with a Garland. If any one (in these sacrifices) prouided any other meats then those aboue rehearsed, he was to be amerced with a pecuniarie fine.

The vse of making Feastes and Banquets (as Aristotle writeth) was inuented by Italus, a very auncient King of Italy, who kept company with grosse and boorish people, feeding among them, obliging them (by that meanes) to yeeld him the more obeyfance, and he drawing the also thereby to a more humane, ciuill and pleasing kinde of life. Suetonius Tranquillus declareth, that the Emperor Octavius Augustus prohibited in Rome, that any of his subiects should inuite one another, to dine or suppe with him: but yet

Marriage Feasts among the Lacedemonians.

* Nanratitis, a City in Egypt.

The allowance of the Priests.

The Dole giuen at the Feast, and no preparation else, was to be allowed.

Arist in Lib. 9. Cap. 16. The first inuenter of Feasts and Banquets.

Sueton. Tranq. in vit. Imp. Octa. August.

The Empe-
rors answere for prohibiting bankets and Playes.

Cicero in lib. 4.
de Offic.

The words of Cato Censorius, concerning
one Friend inuiting another.

The answere of Eschines the Oratour.

Of Pericles
the honourable Athenian.

The Authors
generall conclusion on this Argument.

yet they might so much honor one another, as to send part of his Viands to the others Table, but not to partake in eating thereof. But being demaunded, what was his reason for making this Law, he answered. The occasion that moued me to forbid Playes and Feastings, was for nothing else: but because in those plaies, Men cannot abstaine from blaspheming the Gods, and (at Feastes) one Neighbour defameth or backbiteth another. Cicero writeth, that Cato the Censor, being at the point of death, deliuered these wordes. Among other thinges done by me, not as became a good Romaine Cittizen, but rather like a presumptuous and barbarous Man; was this: I being once entreated by a friend of mine, that I would come and dine with him: suffered my selfe to be ouer-ruled, and went vnto him, which I ought not to haue done. For to speake vprightly, no generos and vertuous man, should goe to eat in the House of any Friend, or other: because, hee thereby looseth his owne liberty, and hazardeth his reputation and grauity in extraordinary perill. A certaine man demaunded of Eschines the Oratour, what hee should doe, to be esteemed a good and honest man? To whom he thus answered. If thou wuldst bee a perfect honest Grecian, thou must go to the Temples willingly, and to warre vpon necessity: but to Feastes or Banquets, neither on thine owne free will, or any importunitie; An answer well deseruing eternall memory.

Pericles, a man of great account among the Athenians, did so highly detest the custome of Feastes and Bankets, and the prouision appointed for them: as hee did neuer dine or sup with any Friend of his, but onely Eurystolemus, on the day of his Nuptials. And yet he was a man of great honor, very liberall, and maintained many people with his goods. Nor doe I (for all this) wholelie condemne Feastes and Banquets: prouided, that mediocrity bee obserued in them. For I hold it very vicious and vnseemely, to shun honest conuersation, and ciuill resort to feede together: as is obserued in Societies and Companies, as well Religious, as others, in their Refectories or dining Haules, as we vse to tearme them. For, not onely Nature, but amity also necessarily requirereth; that we should support this Custome of Banquets, which the Latines

(our betters) vsed to tearme Conuictum, of Cousuendo, as a familiar kinde of life, when men louingly feede together at one Table. Neuerthelesse, I much mislike, and iudge it worthy of great reprehension; to super-exceede both in pompe and superfluitie in our Feastes, with such diuersity of meates, as (many times) prooues to a mans vndoing. For nothing makes vs so much like vnto brute beasts; as gluttonous gurmandise, and study wholly applyed for the belly.

CHAP. XX.

¶ Of many Men, that by their Prodigalitie and lawish kinde of life, made expence of all their faculties in very short time.

He most Prodigall Man of Auncient times, was Epicharides the Athenian, surnamed the Little Man; who in sixe daies, consumed all his wealthy Patrimony. Paschisyus king of Crete, after he had spent all that hee had, and could make beside: at length sold his Kingdome, and liued afterward priuately, in the City of * Amathunta, where he dyed miserably. Aethiops, the Corinthian, sold to Archias, all his lands and inheritance, both what hee had in present possession, and was to enioy by his Birth-right: onely to maintaine his excessiue drinking. Cleops, King of Aegypt, hauing laide out vnspeakable expences, for the building of a mightie huge Pyramides, was brought to such extreame necessity; that for his owne meere maintenance, he was enforced to expose his Daughters virginity to public sale, to make Money of her lasciuious and dishonest pleasures. Marcus Tigellus was so prodigall in expences, that all his Flatterers, Picke-thankes, Players, Pypers, and loose Companions, who deriued exceeding benefit daily from him: bemoand his death, & wept bitterly for him. Of him, Horace maketh mention, saying.

Societies

Conuictum à Cousuendo.

Epicharides the Athenian.

* A City of Cyprus dedicated to Venus.

Cleops, King of Egypt, that made sale of his daughters virginity.

Horace in Satir
2. Lib. 2. et in Satyr. 3. Lib. 2.

Societies of Flatterers infinite,
That follow furnishd Tables day and night :
Sellers of Vngvents, sweets : And Mountebancks, Lasciuious Women, vsing wanton Pranks.
All these Horse-leaches rufully complaine
Tigellus death, whose life was all their gaine.

Elianus in Lib.
4. Cap. 7.

The prodigality and voluptuous life of Pericles ; of Callias, the Sonne of Hipponicus ; and of Nicias, brought them to extreame pouerty, and when Money failed them : they all three, (each after other) receiued Hemlock for their drink at their last banquet, and so ended their daies. Of Callias, Atheneus maketh mention, and Aristophanes, in his Comedie (of Preachers, and Lysias writeth, that his Father Hipponicus was the very richest man in all Greece. Demades the Oratour, had gathered such a masse of Riches, as himselfe confessed, that hee felt not the want of any thing : neuerthelesse, in the end (thorow his intemperance and dissolution) he so wasted and consumed al his wealth, that he was banished from the City, because he had beene seauen times accused, for not payment of such fines, wherein the men of Athens had condemned him. And Antipater the Pooet of Sidon mocking him, said : He had nothing but his toong and belly left him, for he had wasted and offered vp all to his owne sensuality, &c. * Ctesippus, Son to Chabrias, was so Prodigal, that after he had laushly consumed all his goods: he sold the very stones of his Fathers Tomb, in the building whereof, the Athenians disburssed a thousand Drachmaes, Cornelius Lentulus, fir-named Sura, a man of Noble race, but of very bad government, spent ouer-vainely, and foolishly (beside his owne possessions) a great sum of Mony belonging to the Common-wealth, when he was Quaestor.

Atheneus in
Lib. 4. Cap. 12.
Aristophanes in
Com. Predic.
Lysias

Volat. Anthrop.
Lib. 15.

* Who after his Fathers death was brought vp by Phocion.

G. Caesar * Caligula surpassed all Prodigals, in inuentions of profuse expence and dissolutions. He inuented a new kind of Bath, and diuers sortes (neuer before seene) of Viands and Banque-tings: for hee would bathe himselfe in curious sweet waters, and cause Pearles of inestimable value to be dissolued with Vineger, and set before them that hee feasted, having his Breads and Meates all guilded ouer. Moreover, he commanded light Gallies or Foists to bee made (which were called Liburnian Foists) of Cedar wood, hauing all their

* So called of harnessse bootes, called calige, which he was wont to weate being a Child
*Dion in vit. G.
Caes. Calig.*

10

20

30

40

50 poopes covered ouer with precious stones. He had large and goodly stoues or Hot-houses, with rare perfumed chambers in them, where he would sit and banquet in the night season : but in the day time, hee had variety of costlie Arbors, Bowers, and Vines, abounding in the plenty of their fruits, wherein he would sit with his Consorts of Musiti-ons, sweetly singing among them. And when he pleased to take the open ayre, it was on the Sea-shoare of Campania, which was reputed (though beeing in Italy) to be the most pleasant and fertile ground in the whole World. As for his buildings and Houses of pleasure, abroad in the spacious fields, in groues, Woods, and other delightfull places :

they exceeded all compasse of reason, for hee coueted nothing more, then to effect such things as appeared to be impossible. In briefe, in lesse space then a yeare, he consumed immense riches, with the twenty seauen thousand times
* H. S. being an hundred thousand smal Sestertiales, which Tiberius had left him, amounting to threescore and seauen Millions ; and fifty thousand Crownes, allowing fortie fixe Sols for the crowne.
But when Money began to fayle him, and he waxed needy : he then gaue his mind to leuying of roubles, and excessive tributes ; yea, hee exercised rapines by diuers meanes, beside calumnies and confiscations of his subiects goods.

Caligula obserued no measure in his expences and prodigality.

* A Coine among the Ro-mains, wher-of Denarius containen fourre, and was marked with H. S. which signified 2. lib. et
dim. &c.

The Emperour Nero, his Nephew, was not a iot inferiour to him in Prodigality, for hee obserued no order or measure in spending and giuing : accounting them to be wretches and auaritious villaines, that kept any written Register of their expences. But contrariwise, he esteemed them to be honorable and magnanimious, that could soonest runne thorough their whole estate in spending. He gaue to Tyridates (as a daily allowance) eight hundred thousand Nummaes, valuing twenty thousand Crownes of our Coyne, a matter almost incredible. He made a present of two goodly Pallaces ; the one to Menebrates, a Player on the Harpe ; and the other to Spectillus, the Mirmillon Fencer or Sword-Player. He would neuer ride abroad, or on any journey, without a thousand Chariots at the least. His Mules were shodde with V v v Silver,

*Sueton in Lib.
6. Cap. 50.*
The prodigality of the Em-perour Nero. ¶

Excessive pampe and prodigality, not to any purpose.

* Famous for fine wool of crimson colour.

Ioseph in Lib. de bel. Iudae. 5. Cap. 13.

The Emperour Vitellius and his foure meales daily.

A Prodigall defined by Vlpian the Lawyer.

Laws in ancient times ordained against prodigall persons.

Such a law would now doe well, to curbe the Prodigals of these times.

Siluer, and all his Mulets Saddles and furnitures, were of Cloth of * Canusium, a Towne in Apulia. Moreouer, he neuer would weare any Garment twice.

Iosephus, in his History of the Iewes warres, maketh mention of the prodigallitie of the Emperour Vitellius; who helde the Empire no longer then eight months and five dayes. If his life had bene of any longer continuance (saith Iosephus) I beleene, that the whole Empire could not haue sufficed his excesse and prodigallity. This Vitellius was so dissolute and prodigall, that he would haue foure seueral meales each day allowed him; which he thus deuided, into Breake-fast, Dinner, Supper, and Collation. At such time as hee came to Rome, his Brother made him a Supper, whereat hee was serued with two thousand daintie and rare Fishes, and seauen thousand as delicate Fowles and Birdes. Which pompe he exceeded in another Feast, of more excessiue and sumptuous cost; which he made at the dedication of the ground-plot, that (for the admirable greatnesse thereof) hee called the Shield of Minerva.

A Prodigall (saith Vlpian, in the first law ff. de cura. furio) is he that hath no time or end of his spending: but scattereth and consumeth his goods beyond sence or reason, and is tearmed in Greeke ἀσώτως, because that hee looseth himselfe, and wasteth his patrimony. Our graue and worthy fore-fathers, did establish Lawes against spend-thriftes and prodigalles. Solon, the famous Grecian, ordained, that they should be made infamous. The Arcopagites and criminall Iudges of Athens, appealed prodigal persons in iudgment, and being proued and conuined for such offendours, were punished accordingly.

The Auncients, called the ten men, prohibited by their lawes, that prodigals should haue the government of their owne goods, but all such authoritie was taken from them: and a Guardian or Ouer-seer was appointed thē by the Iudge, as is to be seene in the law Iulianus. ff. de cura. furio. Therefore they could not sell or alienate (by any valuable meanes) their Lands or goods, neither make any transport of them: moreouer, they were disabled by the Law, of making any wils or Testaments, as appeareth plainly in the Law. Is cui bonis. F. de verb. obliga.

Whereupon, they were compared by the Iurisconsultes, to madde men; scillet, quod furiosum exitum pariat prodigalitas.

And as for the paine and punishment due to wast-full spend-thrifts, the Grecians had a law, whereby it was especially ordained, that whosoever consumed his patrimony lauishly; he might not be permitted Buriall in the Graue of his Father, but abroad, among such as were strangers and vnknowne. The Law of the twelue Tables, interdicted all prodigall persons, from any administration of their owne goods; and in the end, all the Lenders (by commaund of the Iudges) might let them haue no more monies, on pawnes or otherwise: but Suruayers or Comptroullers were set ouer them, according to the example and order for mad men or Lunaticks, and all manning of their owne affayres, was also prohibited them in this forme or manner.

Quando bonatua paterna anitaque nequitia disperdis, liberosque tuos ad egestatem perducis; ob eam rem tibi ea re commercioque interdico. In this very manner, Q. Pompeius, Pretor, perceiuing that Q. Fabius, (Sonne to Q. Fabius the Great, surnamed Allobrogicus, because he conquered the * Allobroges, and Bituilus, Captaine and Duke, or King (as some write) of the * Aluernes) was extraordinarily dissolute and prodigall in his expences: deprived him of his Fathers Lands and goods. For euery one pittied, and much lamented, to see so much Gold and Siluer wasted in lewdnesse and luxurie; which rather should haue supported the splendour and Nobilitie, of so glorious a race and Family, as were the Fabij.

Dion writeth, that the Emperour Tiberius did set a Tutour, ouer a certaine Senatour, who was void of all good gouernement; to order him, as if he had bene his pupill. Iouianus Pontanus, in his Booke of Bounty or Liberallity, maketh a question, to wit: which of the two, either the prodigall person, or the auaritious, is worst and most pernicious? Whereunto, himselfe maketh answer thus. This doubt (saith he) is very easly discied. For first of all, the Prodigall person is beneficiall and profitable to many, on whom he bestoweth his goodes bountifullly: whereas the couetous Miser is not commodious to him-selfe, but maketh use Alexan. de Alexandrin. in Die. Genial. Lib. 6. Cap. 14.

The law of the twelue Tables against all prodigall spenders.

Valerius Maximus in Lib. 3. Cap. 5.

* People of Sauoy and Daulphiny. * People of France.

Dion in Lib. 57

Iouian Pontanus in Lib. de Liberalit.

The Niggard is not good to himselfe, or any other.

The nature of the covetous mans giftes.

Covetous wretches of more base quality then Prodigals.

use of his goodes, as if he had them not, at least-wise very sparingly. He will not cate halfe so much, as is needfull for the meere maintenance of his owne life: which makes him looke with a wanne, pale, and meager complection. In the second place, the Prodigall giueth liberally, and gustes passe from him with a free, generous, and good heart: especially, when he exceedeth not the bounds of reason, and his gifts are giuen to some honest and commendable purpose. But the covetous mans gifts are quite contrary, with a griple and pinching heart, and a villaines disposition. Moreover, as the greedy wretch encreaseth his store day by day; euen so doth the Prodigall change his naturall inclination and manner of life, as well by course of time, as age drawing on him: which at length letteth him know, that he must needs become poore, and fall into want. Whereby many times it comes to passe, that his manners grow to better reformation then before, and yeares diminishing his laishnesse; by little and little he recouereth health and strength againe. Whereas (on the contrary) Auarice is an everlasting and incurable disease. By which reasons it appeareth, that covetous and auaritious Misers, are of a more vile, base, and abiect condition; then those that be prodigall.

CHAP. XXI.

The Magnificent Triumphe of Antigonus Epiphanes, made in despite of the Consull Paulus Amylius his Triumphe, for his victory obtained against the Macedonians.

Antigonus, King of Syria, fir-named Epiphanes, that is to say, Famous or illustrious, hauing heard recitall deliuered of the magnificent Triumphe, made by the Consull Paulus Amylius, for the victory which he won against the Macedonians, when Persus their King was taken Prisoner: he conceined such enuy and disdain thereat, that in meere vanity and arrogancy, hee resolved to make another Triumphe, that should farre excell and goe beyond the Consuls. Vpon this occasion, hee made it publiquelic knowne throughout his Kingdome, that on such a day, as he purposely appointed; he would be in person at Daphneia, a City of Asia, where wonderful sports and delights were to be performed. Which caused, that not onely the people of Greece, but infinite numbers also (from other Regions) repayed thither; and the order of the royall intended spectacie began in this manner.

First of all, as the formost leaders to the famous troups following, marched five thousand young men, supposed to be the very Gallantest Spirits in all Greece, they being armed according to the Romaine manner. After them followed as many of Mysia, armed as the Custome of their owne Countrey required: beeing pursued by three thousand Thracians, and five thousand Galatians, and they were seconded with many other, who, because they carried certaine Bucklers or Targets of Siluer, were fir-named *Argyraspides. Next vnto these, marched twenty five rankes of Gladiatores, Sworders, or Fencers; and subsequently a thousand knights, whose Horses were all barbed and caparasoned with Gold and Siluer, and each of them a Garland of Gold on his head. After them followed another thousand Knights, who were tearmed Fellowes, or Companions; and with them another company, that were called Friends to the King: who likewise had a thousand Noblemen following them, and a thousand other braue Knights, called the Kings Band. In the next place, marched fiftene hundred Knights, armed all guilt with Armor, ouer which Armor, each man did weare a military Roab or Mantle, embroydered all with Gold & Siluer, and enriched with many costlie Figures of Beastes. Then followed an hundred Chariots, each one drawne by sixe Horses, and forty other Chariots, each drawne by foure Horses.

One wonderfull sumptuous Chariot, drawn by ten Elephants, followed next, being pursued by sixe and thirty other Elephants; beside eight hundred gallant Youths, wearing Garlands or Crowns of Golde on their heads, embellished with many precious stones, and then followed a thousand fat Oxen, and 800.

The order & proceeding in this purposed royall triumph

* Some doe hold these Warriours to be of the Isle Tapharane.

Fellowes, companions, and Friends to the King.

The spare Chariot that was to serue the King when he pleased.

Polybius in the 26. Booke of his Histories, calleth him Epimanes, that is to say, mad, or vnreasonable.

Memory continued of worthy deeds, to example others in the like.

The Kings Pages & chief Ladies to beautifie the show.

* A place for all kindes of exercises, either of minde or bodie.

teeth of Indian Elephants, carryed by Men, purposely thereto appointed. After these, were borne aloft, an infinite number of Statues and Images, not onely of Gods, but of Dæmons likewise, and of many men, that had bene most excellent in any profession whatsoever, which Images were attired in rich Garments of Gold and Siluer, beside other costly deckings of vnualueable Stones and Jewels. And at each Statues feete, hung a little Tablet of Gold, wherein was engrauen the Name, Titles, and honourable actions, that had bene performed by the party whom the figure expressed, and for whose sake it was thus dignified. Other Images were carried also; as of Day, Night, Heauen, Morning and Noone, beside an infinite number of Vessels of Gold and Siluer, reputed to be of inestimable worth, al which were carried by Slaues and Bond-men.

Then followed sixe hundred Pages, attending on the King, all cloathed in Gold; next to whom, came two hundred Ladies, each bearing a golden Bottle in her hand, casting perfumes and sweet waters euery way about her: On them attended fifty Litters of Siluer, and as many more of Gold, wherein sat fourescore other Ladies, attyred in most sumptuous manner, exceeding al possibility of expression. This Triumph continued thirty daies, during which time, Antigonus caused diuers kindes of Playes and sports to be exercised, and al this while, it was lawfull for any, that were so minded or pleased, to enter into the publique * Gymnasium, and there to annoint himselfe with fiftene sortes of vnguents; as of Saffron, Spicknard, Cinamon, Telin, Amazacin, Lillies, &c. Beside, in sundry places, were prepared aboue a thousand and five hundred Tables, covered most royally, with all possible diuersity of precious dainties and delicates, where euery man might freely feede, without any exception.

CHAP. XXII.

That Gold and Siluer were not in any frequent vse, among our reuerent Auncestours: And at what time they began to be employed more largely. Also, what deuises were found out by Timotheus the Athenian, and Condalus, Captaine to Mausolus, for the gaining of Mony.

HE vse of those Mettals, called Golde and Siluer, which wer found in Thrace, neere to the Riuer * Pangæus; was very rare and strange among our fore-fathers. For the Lacedemonians, beeing desirous to guilde the Image or Statue of Apollo * Amycleus: made diligent search thorow all Greece, and yet could not finde any Gold: And therefore they were constrained, to send and buy some of Croesus, King of Lydia. Hiero, the Tyrant of Syracusa, hauing likewise vowed to dedicate a Table of Gold, to Apollo De'phicus, caused search to be made throughout Greece and Italie, without finding any: nor euer had done, but of * Architelles the Corinthian, who (by litte and litte) in a long space had got it together. The people of * phocis, hauing afterward sacked the Temple of De'phos, and Alexander carrying thence the prey or booty into Asia: the vse of Gold began so fast to encrease, that diuers Vesselles were made thereof, euen from such as they washed their handes in, to them that they vsed in the Kitchin. The first stamp that euer was beaten vpon Gold Coine, was at Rome, in the Temple of Scipio the Affricane.

The Athenians making long warres against the people of * Olynthus; Mony beganne to faile very greatly in the Armie; which the Souldiours perceiuing, and with what difficultie it was to bee expected from Athens: they entered into a mutinie or tumult, for appeasing whereof, Timotheus, there Captaine, bethought himselfe of a new and sudden deuised meanes. Hauing first covenanted and agreed with such Merchants,

* A Promontory of Thrace, whereof the Riuer receiued name.

* A Citty of Laconia, wher Castor and Pollux were borne.

* He is called (by some) Archimedes.

* A little country of Greece, by the Gulfe, Criffæus.

The first stamping.

* A Citty of Thrace, neere to the Country of Athens.

The deuise of Timotheus to pay his Souldiours.

chants, as were (in this case) to fit and furnish him, vpon this faithfull promise, of exchange and repaiment when time better serued: he caused Mony of Copper to be made, wherewith he paid his Souldiours. And within no long while after, when Mony of Siluer was sent from Athens; he not onely satisfied the Marchants & Victualers liberally: but also receiued in all the Copper Coyne againe, and gaue due restitution for it in Siluer.

Arist. in Polit. Lib. 7. Cap. 9.

Aristotle writeth in his Politiques, that Condalus, Captaine to Mausolus, King of Caria, being in Lycia (a Prouince of the Lesser Asia, situate betweene Pamphylia and Caria) with an Armie, and want of Mony growing greatlie among them: hee inuented a meanes, though some-what ridiculous, yet well answering to his owne expectation. He knew very perfectly, that the people of Lycia tooke delight (aboue all thinges else) to weare their lockes of Haire very long: Whereupon, he called diuers of the chiefeest persons of that Prouince to him, and saide vnto them, after this manner. That much against his mind, and to his no little greefe, he was constrained to acquaint them with a Commission, which hee had (that instant) receiued from his King, and which hee likewise knew, could not chuse but be greatly offensiue to them. For King Mausolus (youth hee) commaundeth, that all the Lycians must be presently shauen, and all their goodlie long Lockes be powled from their Heades, to be sent vnto him into Caria: because hee will haue a new and strange kinde of Apparrell made of them, in honour of the King of Persia.

Pretended pitty is oftentimes the greest preuayler, in matters of no meane moment.

Condalus continuing on his speech, pretending much compassion towards them in this case; further added: That if they would follow his counsell, he would finde out a meanes, whereby, not onely their faire Haire should be saued; but the Kinges intent should also be answered, without cutting them off in any such manner. Whereunto the Lycians answered, that they would gladly follow his direction in all things; provided, that their Lockes of Haire might be kept from defacing. Condalus then aduised them, to prepare Money

10

20

30

40

50

among them (appointing a round and indifferent summe, which they might gather by the poule, eyther more or lesse, according as their Lockes were in fashion) and then to send that Money into Greece, where plenty of such haire he would easily help them to, and afterward send it to King Mausolus, and cause it to bee receiued, as if it were their owne. The Lycians, with all possible hast that might be vsed, leuyed such a Masse of Mony together; as (without any great dicultrie) would haue bought them goodly Perriwigs; yea, if they had beene all of Gold. Which summe of Money they deliuered to Condalus, who, feigning as if he sent it into Greece; discharged all his Souldiours wants there-with, and yet no way displeased the people.

Folly accounteth nothing deare, so it selfe be satisfied.

CHAP. XXIII.

What a cominendable thing it is, euermore to speake the truth; And what a detestable vice lying is, with many examples concerning each Argument.

Epimenides the Philosopher was asked by the Rhodians, what thing that Vertue was, which Men call Truth? where- to he answered.

Truth is that thing, whereof (more then al other) the Gods doe make profession; and the vertue thereof heateth the Heauens; illuminateth the Earth; maintaineth Iustice; gouerneth the Common-wealth, and cannot endure any wicked thing neer it, but maketh all doubtfull matters to bee cleare and apparant.

Epimenides his answer, concerning truth

The Corinthians also demaunded of Chilo the Philosopher, what this Truth was? And he replied. It is an assured Gage, which neuer diminisheth it selfe: A Buckler or Shielde, that neuer can bee pierced thorough: A time, which neuer is troubled in it selfe: An Armie, neuer daunted or dismaied: A Floure, that neuer fadeth Chilo his answer of truth to the Corinthians.

Anaxarchus his answer to the Lacedemonians

Aeschines concerning truth

The opinion
of a Romaine Philosopher.

The Emperour
Octavius Augustus triumphing ouer
Mark Antonie and Cleopatra.

Spartianus his report of Pam-philus the famous Lier of Rome.

*fadeth or withereth: A Sea, that neuer feareth Fortune: And a Hauē, wherein no Man shall euer suffer perill. The Lacede-monians likewise entreated Anaxarchus the Philosopher, to resolue them what Truth was, and he made answere. It is a perpetuall health and welfare; A life without ending; A Sirope that healeth all infirmities; A Sunne alwaies shining; A Moon that neuer suffereth Eclipse; An Hearbe e-uer growing; A Gate neuer shut against any; And a iourney, wherein no Man can waxe weary. Aeschines also said of Truth.
It is a vertue, without which, all strength is feeble and infirme; Iustice bloody; Humility a Traytresse; Patience counterfeit; Chastity vaine; Liberty a Prisoner; and Piety superfluous. And another Philosopher, beeing demaunded by the Romaines, what he thought Truth to be; gaue them this answere. Truth is the Center, whercin all thinges doe rest;
The Sea-mans Card, whereby all the Marriuers doe gouerne themselues; That Wise-dome, which is the guide and directer to all Men; A height, on the top whereof is all fulnesse of repose; And a light, whereby the whole world is illumined.*

The Emperour Augustus, in the Triumphe which he made of Marke Anthony and Cleopatra; brought with him to Rome a Priest of Ægypt, aged three-score yeares, who in all the daies of his life, had neuer told any lye. In regard whereof, the Senate presently ordained, that he should be made free, and created Great Priest: Also, that a Statue should be erected for him, and placed among those of the most renowned mē of all the Ancients. Spartianus relateth an example much dissemblable from this last, and saith. In the time of the Emperour Claudius, there died a Man in Rome, named Pamphylus, who (as it was most euidently iustified) neuer told any matter of truth in all his life time; but euermore had his chiefe delight in lying, which caused the Emperour to goue commaund, that no Graue should be graunted to his body: but his goods were confiscated, his House ruined, and his Wife and Children banished out of Rome; to the end, that no memorie might remain in the Commonwealth, of such a venomous Beast. At the time when these two notable effects hapned, the Romaines were Mortall enemies to the Ægyptians, whereby may worthilie be obserued, how wonderful the power of truth is: in regard that the Romaines would aduance a Statue, in the honour of their enemy, onely because he was a Man of truth, and depriue their Cittie-born son of a Sepulcher, because he was such a notorious Lier. It is no way to be doubted, but that a true man may freely walke, and practise in all places, without feare of being accused by any person. He may also (in safetie & dreadlesse) reprehend any Lier, and speake boldly in face of all the world, going alwaies with an erected and dauntlesse countenance. But the Lier is fled of all Men, like to a noysome pestilence, and so long as hee lineth; yea, after death likewise, he is infamous to all Posterity.

His reward and wages, is, that if hee chance to speake truth, no man wil beleeue him: For, by being so knowne a Lier, truth (in his mouth) standeth alwaies suspected.

CHAP. XXIII.

30 What a benefit the Inuention of Letters was vnto man: Who first found out and deuised them. Of the Hebrue Charracters, & what signification they haue of themselues, differing from all other Letters else in any Nation.

40 IF those men may iustly & commendation, that were the first deuisers of liberall and mechanical Arts, and they likewise, that found out diuers Doctrines and enstructions, not onely appertaining to the rule and direction of the Soule, but likewise for bodily vse and behauiour:
how much more great and especiall honor then is due to him, that was the first Inuenter and deuifer of Letters? Those 50 incomparable Instruments, which haue bin the certaine guards and conseruers, of all other inuentions whatsoever: for without them, not any deuise could haue bene preserued, whereto we may adde moreouer, that Letters haue made Men halfe immortall.

Such

An excellent obseruation of the power of Truth.

Difference
betweene the true man and Lier.

Diuersity of merit, according to the nature and qualitie of things.

The power and prerogative of Letters, and what hath ensued (by their meanes) from times of Antiquity.

No memory had remained but by Letters, for else, all precedent accidents had bin vtterly lost.

Diuersity of opinions about the invention of Letters.

Pliny. in Lib. 7. Cap. 12.

Cadmus Captaine of the Phœnicians, brought Letters into Greece; being then but sixteene in number.

Such hath bin their power and prerogative, that matters of a thousand yeares past, are (by them) so familiarly presented vnto vs; as if there had beene no distance or deuision of time. By them are apprehended all kindes of Disciplines. They make knowne to men of this instant age, whatsoever our grane fore-goers learned and made vse off, or any famous actions by them perfourmed: And those things which these dayes affoord (as deseruing future knowledge) by them, are left as Legacies to vtmost posteritie. They shew and represent vnto the eye, matters once done, euen as if they were in continuall action, and as full of life in the instant, as in the precedent: which neuer could haue beene done, if Letters hadde neuer beene deuised. For neither Plato, Aristotle, nor a great number of other wise Philosophers, had carried such reputation with vs, as now they doe; but onely by their sacred meanes. For conclusion then, we may very well say; that the onely best and greatest thing (among all humaine inuentions) was that of Letters. Whosoever is doubtfull, or maketh any question in this case; let him but reade and consider what is left written to vs, whereby he shall well perceiue: that all those famous memories and antiquities, had beene vtterly lost, and no record remained of them, but onely by Letters.

Seeing then, that they are the cause of so great a happinesse; reason (in meere Iustice) requireth, that we should know, to whom wee are beholding for them. And yet I finde it to bee a matter of no meane difficultie, because opinions are so various and doubtfull in this case. The Gentiles doe much disagree heerein with our Christians, and Christians also haue not well concorded together. Pliny setteth downe many opinions, and then addeth his owne, which (in my iudgement) cometh much neerer to truth, then the other. First of all he saith, that Letters were found out by the Assyrians in Assyria: but others doe affirme, that Mercury founde them first in Egypt. Some (beside) are of the minde, that the Pelagians brought them into Italy; or else that they were carried into Greece by the Phœnicians, with Cadmus, who was their Captaine, who had no more of them then, but sixteene in number: but in the warre of Troy, Palamedes added foure more vnto them. After Plinies report of all these, and some opinions beside, he concludeth according to his owne iudgement: That Letters were eternall, which is as much to say, that they had beene from the beginning of the world.

Now, concerning the bringing of Letters into Greece by the Phœnicians, Herodotus and diuers others doe affirme it. The Egyptians also doe make their vaunt, that the inuention of Artes and Letters came first from them. Diodorus Siculus is of the minde, that Mercury founde them out in Egypt. Howbeit, the same Diodorus saith in his 4. Booke, that some are of opinion, that the *Ethiopian*s had Letters first of all, and that the Egyptians receiued their first vse of Letters from them. Vpon this Argument, there are diuers other, as well Iewes as Christians, who doe plainly auouch, that *Moyse*s was the first finder out of Letters in the world: for he was much more ancient, then any letters or writings among the Gentiles, because the same Cadmus (of whom we haue formerly spoken, and that he should bring Letters into Greece) liued in the time of Othoniell, Duke and Captaine of Israell, and raigned forty seauen years, after that the written lawes were giuen to *Moyse*s, as is euidently proued.

They that are of this opinion (among whom were Eupolemus and Artabanus, Ethnique Historians) doe maintaine, that the Egyptians learned Letters of *Moyse*s, and that they gaue them first to the people of Phœntia, from whence (afterward) Cadmus transported them into Greece. The fore-named Artabanus iustificeth, that the man, named Mercurius or Mercury (whom also affirme to haue taught Letters in Egypt;) was *Moyse*s, but called Mercurius by the Egyptians. Philo the Iew, a man of great authority, maketh Letters to be more auncient: for he saith, that they were found out by Abraham. But the truth is, that they were inuented by Adam, or (at least) by his Sonnes, or Sonnes Sonnes, in the first age of the world, and before the Floud. Then were they conserued to Noah and his Successors, euen to the coming of Abraham, and so afterward to *Moyse*s: And this is the iudgement and opinion of S. Augustine. Moreouer, this is yet further verified, by the authoritie of Iosephus.

Herodotus, for the Phœnicians, bringing Letters into Greece.

Diod. Sic. in li. 4.

*Moyse*s said to be the first inuenter of Letters.

Othoniell, Duke and Captaine of Israell.

The Egyptians learned Letters of *Moyse*s.

*Moyse*s called Mercurius by the Egyptians.

Adam or his Children the first inuenter of Letters.

August. in Lib. 18. de Ciuit. Dei.

Ioseph. in Lib. 1. de Antiquit.

Iosephus, in saying; That the Nephewes of Adam, the Sonnes of Seth, made two Collobes, the one of Stone, and the other of Earth, whereon they wrote and insculpted all the Artes. He also affirmeth, that himselfe had seene one of those Pillers in Syria.

Preferuation of Letters frō Adam and his Sonnes to Noah.

We finde also, that Saint Iude the Apostle, alleadged in one of his Epistles, the Booke of Enoch, which was before the Flood. So then, it is not to be doubted, but that Adam and his Sonnes (who were all so wise, and had intelligence in so many thinges) were the onely first Inuenter of Letters. And that Noah also, who was both lettered and learned, preferued them with him in the Arke. Howbeit, that afterward, in the confusion of Tongues, which happened at the building of the Tower of Babell: it might come to passe, that the greater part of the World lost the knowledge of those Letters, which remained onely in the Family of Heber, of whom (afterward) the Hebrues descended, who, as we haue already said, lost not their first Language. Saint Augustine auoucheth as much, in his book before alleadged; the like doth Eusebius also, in his first Booke of the Euangelicall preparation, and the greater part of the learnedst men of our times.

The stock of Heber lost not their first language.

Eusebius in lib. 1. de Preparat. Euan.

Philo the Jew and diuers others deceiued in their opinion.

Wherefore Philo, and such beside him, as supposed, that *Moyse*s was the Inuenter of Letters; were greatly deceiued in their owne imaginations: because it is a matter most notorious, that the Bookes and Histories written by *Moyse*s, were not the first before all other, nor before the Philosophy and Wisedome of the Greekes, as Saint Augustine prooueth sufficiently in the saide Booke; and Iosephus also, against Appion the famous Grammarians of Ægypt: and likewise Eusebius and Iustine Martire. He and they should haue concluded then, that Letters were before the time of *Moyse*s; because we finde it written, that *Moyse*s learned in Ægypt, all the Arts and Sciences of the Ægyptians, which he could not haue doone, except there had beene Letters before. And yet we know moreouer, that there were Hieroglyphicall Figures, whereby (as we formerly prooued in the first

Iosephus cont. Appion. Gram.

*Moyse*s learned the Arts of the Egyptians

Booke) they had vnderstanding of one anothers mind.

10

We will therefore set downe our resolue, that Letters were from the dayes of Adam, and afterward, that Abraham had knowledge of them in Syria: and thence it ensued, that Plinie varried in so many opinions before related. It shall be needlesse therefore, to make any further curious search, as touching the Originall and causes of Charracters and Letters: because they may be made according to any mans mind or will; euen as now-adaies wee see, that Ciphers, Figures, or what else, are formed, after the fancy of the Writer or Deuiser, and sometimes signes or shapes in stead of Letters.

The Authors conclusion concerning Letters.

Originall and causes of charracters and Letters.

20

So saith Saint Hierome, in his Prologue before the Booke of the Lawes, and that when Esdras, the great Scribe and Doctour of the Law, re-writ and restored them againe: hee found new Charracters or formes of Letters, whereof the Iewes did make, vse to the time of Saint Hierome, euen as yet they doe to these dayes of ours. And those Hebrue Letters or Charracters, haue a secret propriety, not incident to the Letters of any other Nation: for the voyce, sound, or name of each one of them, yeildeth a signification of some thing else beside.

Hierom. in Prefat. Lib. de Leg.

Hebrew Letters haue a priuate propriety to themselves in signification.

30

The first Letter, which is tearmed Aleph, doth signify Discipline. The second, named Beth, signifyeth a House. Gymell, which is another Letter, relateth replenishing, or aboundance. And Daleth, Tables or Bookes. All the rest of the Letters, doe interpret some one thing or other, which I forbear to speake of, to auoyd prolixitie. Such as are more curious Inquisitours into these occasions: let them read Eusebius, in his first Booke, De Preparatione Euangelica.

40

50

CHAP.

CHAP. XXV.

How our Auncients wrote, and whereon, before the invention of Paper, and with what Instrument. How Paper and Parchment were first found out, and by whom.

WE haue spoken briefly in the preccident Chapter, concerning the inuention of Letters: it now remaineth, that we should say somewhat, of the matter whereon our fore-fathers vsed to write. Now, albeit wee cannot exactly set downe, what it was that our first Fathers (in the first Age, and before the Flood) did write vpon, as being a case very doubtfull; to wit, whether then they had the vse of Letters, although we haue made prooffe thereof by the authority of Iosephus, assisted by some other reasons beside: yet it evidently appears (according to the generall iudgement of Writers) that such as wrote in those elder times, had not, neither knew what Paper was; but onely did write on Leaues of the Palme or Date Tree, from whence followed the common word (yet vsed) the Leaues or Leafes of Bookes. Afterward they wrote vpon other Leaues of Trees, but principally such as came easiest from each Tree: as the Birche, the Platane, the Ash, and the Elme. From these Trees they tooke the inner-most Rinde, which groweth betweene the Wood and the thicke blacke Barke, and these soft skinned being subtilly smoothed and plained: of them they formed the Leaues of their Bookes, ioyning them arteificially one within another, that they might the more firmly hold together. And because (in those reuerend daies) the Latines termed those inner-most Rindes of Trees, by the Name of Libri: it thence ensued, that they gaue the Title of Liber to one of their Bookes, though afterward they refused all further vse of those meanes. Within some while after, they found out another helpe for Writing, which was vpon Plates of Lead, ingentoullie made thin and plyant: whereof, some Men (that were more curious and speculative) made likewise Collombes or Pillers, as well as Bookes, whereon they registred all publique actions. Those Ancient Fathers, found out yet another manner of Writing, which was on Linnen Cloath, smoothed and polished with a certain kind of colour. But heere we are to obserue; that they vsed not then to write with Pennes; but with a little Cane or Reede, which yet is called by vs (as then) in Latine Calamus, and wherewith some doe stili vse to write.

Afterward, another kinde of Paper was deuised to write vpon, which they made of diuers little Shrubs of Trees, cald by them Papers: by reason of another addition thereto, to wit; of a certaine kind of Rushes, growing ordinarily in the Moores and Marishes of Nylus, and the name of this Rush in Latine, is called * Papyrus. Pliny saith, that there is yet growing in Syria, neere to the River Euphrates, certaine Papers or Rushes, that haue sundry little Leaues, Rindes, or Skinned, growing naturally betweene the Pith and Barke: which being cunningly drawne out with the point of a needle, and intermedled with a kinde of Glue, made of Meale (verie finely searced or boulded) and tempered with boyling Water and Vineger; Paper is made thereof, apt and very good to write vpon. But that skinned which is neere to the Pith, maketh the best and smoothest Paper: whereby we may gather, that according to the sorts and differences; so are the Papers diuersly named. And in regard that this Reede, Rush, or little Shrub, was named Papyrus; the Name of Paper hath so continued, and was likewise imposed on those kinds of Paper, which were (since then) made of Shreds, rags, and smallest peeces of Linnen Cloath, past all kind of seruice, and fit for no other vse.

Marcus Varro saith, that the first Inuention of making Leaues of Paper, either of Shrubs, Rushes, or otherwise: was found out in the time of Alexander the Great, and at such time also, as the Cittie of Alexandria was first founded. Notwithstanding, Pliny prooueth it much Plates of lead made apt to write vpon.

Linnen cloth polished with a colour, to write on.

No Pen. written with, but Reeds.

* Papyrus is a great Rush in Egypt, growing in Fenne, or Moorish groundes: whereof (in elder times) they made leasus to write on, & whereof the first paper was made and now it is vsed for printing Paper. Plin. in lib. 13. Cap. 11. & 2.

Marc. Varro. in Lib. 7.

Doubt of that whereon our first Fathers wrote before the flood.

First writing was on Palme Tree Leaues.

The first manner of writing Bookes.

Liber, the inward peece or rinde of a Tree.

Plin. in Lib. 13. Cap. 11.

Numa Pompilius his Tomb and Bookes.

Tit. Linius. dec. 4. Cap. 9.

Plin. in Lib. 13. Cap. 9.

* A famous city in Affrica enuironed almost with the Sea, and rebuilt by Queene Dido. Writing Tables vsed in elder dayes.

Parch-ment written on, before our kindes of Paper.

* That ouer-came Antiochus by Sardes.

Plin. in Lib. 12. Cap. 9. Iosephus. in Lib. 12. de Antiquit much more auncient, by those Bookes which Cneus Terentius found, by digging in one of his Inheritances, which Books had formerly belonged to Numa Pompilius, King of Rome, and had beene hid- den in a Temple, where himselfe was bu- ried, and the leaues of those Bookes were made of the said Rushes or shrubbes. It is held for a certainty, that Numa liued long time before Alexander. And yet Titus Linius reporteth otherwise of this Tombe, affirming, that two such Tombs were found by L. Patilius. Lactantius and Plutarch doe heerein agree with Titus Linius: and yet notwithstanding, the intention of Pliny is most approued.

Now concerning the word Carta, or Charta, some doe holde, that this name came of a City, scituated neere to Tyre, which was called Charta, or Cartha; whence Dido (altring the name) called it afterward * Carthage. I read also, that those reuerend men of former times, did write on waxed Tablet-leaues. made thin smooth and slippery: they likewise formed their letters, with sharpe pointed Bodkins or Punchions, which they tear- med Table-Pinnes, but others called the Stiles, whereon, he that (by expertnesse) wrote most perfect, was said to haue a good stile in writing, deriuing the worde from the instrument, and not by the inte- gritie in Art or method.

Moreouer, it is to be noated, that be- fore such Paper (as we vse to write on) was inuented: an auncient custome was obserued, (without seeing any other help or meanes) to write onely vpon Parch- ment, which they made of Sheeps Skins, whereof Herodotus maketh relation. The inuention thereof is attributed (by Marcus Varro) to the people that inhabited the Country of Pergamus, or Pergama, who had (at that time) * Eumenes to be their King; where-vpon (in Latine) it bare the name of Pergamenum, which we do com- monly call Parchment. And whereas in Latine also, it was called Membrana: yet it appeareth to take name of the In- uenter. Notwithstanding, in my iudg- ment, such skinnes were written on long before the time assigned by Varro; men- tioned (after him) in like manner by Pli- ny: because Iosephus writeth, that the Books of the Hebrewes (which were long before the dayes of Eumenes) and many other Bookes beside, were written on such Skinnes.

In like manner, when he declareth, that Eleazer, Prince of the Priestes, sent the Bookes of the sacred Scriptures to Ptolemus Philadelphus, with the seauen- ty two Interpreters, that they might bee translated out of the Hebrew tongue in- to Greeke, he saith; King Ptolomy was amazed, and wondred very much, at the ingenious coniunction of those Skinnes of Parchment. Whereby may be obser- ued, that the lines written on Parchment, were much more easily perfourmed, and of longer continuance; then on any other Skinnes or Leaues whatsoever, although they were of greater antiquity. In re- gard whereof, vse of Parchment neuer failed, neither euer will, especially for se- rious seruices: albeit, the Paper which is now in vse among vs, perhaps is easier and cheaper to be had, and may better fit the passage of infinite Letters, which ordinarily are entercoursed vpon all oc- casions, and necessitie of hast.

Having thus farre proceeded in dis- course, concerning the first inuention of Letters, Paper, Parchment and writing: me thinkes, I should very much forget my selfe, if the famous Art of Printing should passe vnspoken of, whereby so many Bookes are Imprinted, with no meane expedition, and which I doe in- geniously confesse, to be the best inuen- tion in the world. By one Authour, the deuiser therof is said to be an Allemaigne or Germaine, of the City of Mentz, na- med John Faustus, (although Po'idore Vir- gill doe call him Peter) yet others tearme him John Cuthenberg, confessing him al- so to be a Germaine, and a Knight, and that the first impression of any Booke, was in the yeare of our Lord, 1453.

About which time also, or soone after (as Volateranus affirmeth) this worthy Science was brought into Italy by two Brethren, named Conrades, printing first in Rome, and in the house of the Maximes: where, the first Booke that euer was prin- ted, was S. Augustine de Ciuitate Dei, & next, the diuine Institutions of Lactantius Firmianus. Exemplaries of them were not long since (and I thinke yet are) in the Library of the most reuerend Bishop of Sarno, the Lord Luodouico Gomes, a Spaniard, a man of singuler learning, be- ing Auditour of Roua, Regent of the Pe- netentiarie, and Referendarie of both the Ptolemic Philadelphus, and the 72. Inter- preters.

Parchment of longer conti- nuance then Paper.

Concerning the incompa- rable Art of Printing.

At what time the inuention of Printing was found out, and by whom.

The first Bookes prin- ted in Rome, in the yeate 1465.

Signa-

Printing began in Venice in the year 1483.

Especially men excellent in Printing, in diuers Countries.

Printing was the onely meanes to make learned men euery wher famous.

Very great errors formerly committed in the writing of Bookes, which (by Printing) haue bene iudiciously corrected.

An obiection against the ouer-general vte of Printing, where by much hurt hath ensued

Signatures. After that, Nicholas Gerson, being a Frenchman, honoured Venice therewith, in the time of Duke Augustine Barbarigo. And, as an inuention of such merit could not be concealed; so succeeded it to many Countries, and by diuers worthy men, who beside their Art of Printing; were learned and iudicious Correcters of errors and falsifications, easily ouer-slipped by vnskillful worke-men. Among these men of noat, are especially commended, Aldus Manutius at Venice, who made a fresh restoring of the Latine tongue: Francis Priscianez, at Rome: Baldus Colinetus, Frobenius and Oporinus, at Basle: Sebastian Gryphius at Lyons: Robert Stephanus at Paris and Anwerpe; and William Caxton at London in England, besides many more, whose names I omit, for breuity.

By these famous helpes, and furtherers of Learning, a number of Bookes hidden, obscured and vtterly lost (as it were) receiued fresh life and light again; to the no meane enstruction and benefit of many men, whose learning hath made it selfe manifest (onely by the meanes of Printing) throughtout all Christendome, yea, and else-where: whereas, before so sacred an assistant was inuented, much greater paine and labour was employed; whereof the fruit could neuer be so generall, or any such perfection appeare in Learning. And, if we doe graunt, that this deuise was not the chiefe and principall cause: yet assuredly (I am of the mind) it was the very greatest and most absolute; because, with much lesse paine and labour, Bookes (full of imperfections) haue bene found to be corrected, and purged from those macculations, blots, and blemishes, which ordinarilie doe attend on writing. Againe, if written corrected Copies had past from some one or two: yet they were so rare to come by, and not to be perused by many earnest and desirous mindes; that it hindered much forward endeouour, which this vniuersality hath liberally friended. But, to speake truely, since immeasurable Licencc tooke hold of Imprinting Bookes, especially of Fables and fruitlesse labours; it hath bene iudged by some (yet none of meanest wisdome) that Printing might well haue bene spared from so general knowledge, or neuer bene vsed at all; rather then such idle toys should passe the Presse, to the preuarication and impoysoning of diuers good minds, especially the younger sort, who rather affect such vaine deuises, then studies much more commendable, and fitting for them.

But leauing further speech of Printing; Hand-writing must not bee condemned, hauing (in these dayes) attayned to more intire perfection; then euer was knowne in former times. Whereof Quintillian hath giuen good rules, well deseruing obseruation; likewise the learned Erasmus, in his Booke of good and true pronounciation. And heerein Erasmus must be my directour, because he saith: Blinde men haue bene instructed in good writing. For they had Tables made of Porphirie, Bone, or of some Metall, wherein were insculpted the letters of A. B. C. D. E. &c. Then the blinde partie tooke some sharpe pointed Instrument in his hand (made apt and able to vse impression, yet with ease and facilitie) and his hand being guided by the enstructers: vse and practise framed a shape of each Letter in the blinde mans minde, according to the remembrance of true forme and fashion; wherof customarie acquaintaince (by heed and attention) gaue an Image, and of euery Letter really in his memory; which afterward he could (with ease) forme vpon the Table, or any thing else of respect, whereto his minde stood most affected. Wherin might appeare some defect or impediment; but yet it would be well made, and indifferently leageable. After which often experimented proof, he may write vpon Paper, in true order and Method: or any else, that (blind-folded) shal make vse thereof, concerning any matter that best fitteth his fantasie.

10 20 30 40
50

Of writing, and the perfection thereof in these dayes.

Erasmus Rotterd. in Libde ver. pro.

Blinde men that could write very perfectly, and by what manner of practise.

Vse is the Mother of perfection.

CHAP

CHAP. XXVI.

Of the first Libraries in the world: As also, what Pictures and Portraitures of memorable men, were obsequiously preserved in them.

T is not to be doubted, but that the first Bookes and Libraries that euer were in the world, must needes bee among the Hebrue people.

For, as it is certaine, that Letters were by them first knowne, and vse made of them: so is it likewise to be presumed, that they were not neglect or carelesse in keeping them, or whatsoeuer they committed to writing. This is iustified by the authority of Iosephus, before alleadged, as also, by that which we reade in the holy Scriptures. Isidorus relateth, that after the Chadaans had burned the Library of the Hebrewes, with all the Bookes of the Lawes: the Hebrewes being gon backe againe to Ierusalem, the Prophet Esdras (being thereto lightened by the blessed Spirit) repaired that losse, by writing those Bookes ouer againe, reducing them into the number of two and twenty Bookes, according to the number of the Alphabet letters. Whereby may be gathered, that after Moyses had written: the Hebrewes had a Library, wherein they preserved the Books of the Law, as well those which we haue of the old Testament, as the rest, whereof wee haue already made mention. Among which, was the Booke of Enoch, alleadged by Saint Iude the Apostle in his Epistle, spoken of also before: And the Book of the warres of the Lord, whereof memory is made in the twenty one Chapter of Numbers: And the Booke of the iust seruants of the Lord, alleadged in the first Booke of the Kings: and the Booke of Samuel, recorded in the last Chapter of the first Booke of Paralipomenon: And the Booke of Nathan the Prophet, with

The first Libraries among the Hebrue people.

The Chaldeans burned all the Bookes of the Hebrues Librarie.

The Prophet Esdras re-writ the Bookes, according to the dumber of the Hebrue Alphabet.

Iude. Cap. 1. 4.

Numb. 2 1. 24.

2. Kings. 1. 18.

1. Chron. 29. 29

many other beside, which appeared to haue bin burned and lost. Therefore we may plainly perceiue, that the Iewes had Libraries, and that those which appertained to the Gentiles, were both after the other, and of later time.

All the Grecians doe declare, that hee who first made any publique Library, was named Pisistratus, a Tyrant ouer the Athenians: but afterward, it was greatly increased by those people. In following time, when Xerxes came to Athens, he carried thence all those Bookes, and transported them into Persia: but a long while after, the King Selucus (called Nicanor) bought them, and caused them to be carried backe to Athens againe. This affirmation proceedeth from Aulus Gellius and Isidorus; adding moreouer, that this Library was afterward very largely increased. Notwithstanding, that Library of Alexandria in Egypt, which the King Ptolomy Philadelphus made; was (in very truth) the most excellent of all other in the world beside: because therein was the old Testament, and all the sacred writings of the seauentie two Interpreters, and a great multitude of all other bookes whatsoeuer. Yet Piny auoucheth, that King Eumenes made another Library in the City of Pergama, in enuy of that which Ptolomie had founded. Aulus Gellius and Amianus Marcellinus doe say, that in the Library of Alexandria in Egypt, there were seauen hundred thousand Bookes. Seneca doth (in a manner) agree concerning the number, which although it seeme to be excessiue, yet notwithstanding, whosoever hath read of the expences and great cost, which the Kings of Egypt haue wasted, in the making of Obeliskes, Pyramides, Temples, Houses, Shippes, and other thinges of inestimable charge (some part of which matters are spoken of by Budens, in his Annotations on the Pandectes, and Lazarus de Baif, in his Art of Nauigation) this Library will not appeare impossible to their iudgement.

Bookes were brought to this Library from al the Nations of the whole world, and also in all Languages: and they that had the charge thereof, were all of them very learned men. One part was appointed for Bookes of Poetry, others also for Histories, and elsewhere for all the Sciences and faculties: but all this learning

The Iewes had Libraries long before the Gentiles.

Pisistratus of Athens, made the first publique Librarie.

Aulus Gellius. in L. b. 6. Isidor. in lib. 6.

The Library of Alexandria in Egypt.

Aulus Gellius. in Lib. 6. Amian. Marcel. in Lib. 7. Cap. 9.

Budens in Annot. de Pand. Lazarus de Baif. in Ars Naualis

Cæsars Souldiours burned this goodly Library.

Plutarc. in vit. Marc. Anton.

Strabo in lib. 7. Cap. 18.

Strabo contra- dicteth other Authors.

The first publike Library in Rome made by Asinius Pollio.

All the Libraries in Rome burned and spoyled.

Domitian the Emperor restored the Libraries losse.

Paulus Orosius in lib. 9.

learning thus brought together, was burned by the Soldiers of Julius Cæsar, when he pursued Pompey thither, and fought against the people of Ptolomie, who was brought vnto Cleopatra. As for that other Librarie, which was made by Eumenes in Pergama: Plutarch saith in the life of Marke Anthonie, that it consisted of two hundred thousand Bookes.

The Lybrarie which we read of in Greece, Strabo saith, that Aristotle was the first that made a Collection of Bookes together, and framed a Library of Bookes in the City of Athens. But therein he contradiceth the other Historians, who doe all maintaine, that it was Pisistratus, who liued long time before Aristotle. Therefore it is to be vnderstood, that Straboes meaning aymed at some one particular Man, who was neither King or Prince, as Pisistratus was: howbeit, it may be pregnantly coniectured, that Aristotle was therein much succoured and assisted by Alexander.

Later Libraries and Letters, wherein the Cittie of Rome, and the first that erected a publique Lybrarie there, was Asinius Pollio, of whom Pliny saith: That of the Spirits of Men he made a publique matter. The first man that brought thither any great quantitie of Bookes, was Paulus Æmilius, when he had vanquished Perseus: And next to him, L. Lucullus, from the bootie of Pontus. Julius Cæsar also augmented and enriched the Lybraries, which he committed to the charge and keeping of Marcus Varro: but all the Lybraries in Rome, were afterward burnt and brought to nothing, by the frequent Warres, and often spoyles made of the Cittie. And yet this great losse was repaired againe, by the Emperour Domitian, for he caused search to bee made thorough all Countries, for Bookes of any Nature whatsoever; yea, he sent into Ægypt, to haue the Lybrarie that remained there, to bee transported to Rome. Whereby it verie plainly appeareth, that all King Ptolomies Bookes were not destroyed (as formerly hath bene said) because a great part of them were afterward recovered. And Paulus Orosius doth heere perswade me, when he saith; Four hundred thousand of the Bookes were burned: And by the confirmation of other Historians; we finde, that there were seauen hundred thousand in all, and three hundred thousand doe then appeare to be saued; howbeit, some would faine enforce, that they were all burned.

10 But returning to the Lybrarie of Rome againe, the same Paulus Orosius saith, that in the time of the Emperour Commodus, it was once more burned: neuertheless, Gordianus the Emperour regained a great number of Bookes, to the estimate of seauentie and two thousand Volumes. And that (which is much more notable) hee enjoyed them by the last Will and Testament of Seranus Samonicus, to whom they first appertained, according as Julius Capitolinus recordeth: There were many other great and goodlie Lybraries among those of elder times, as well priuate and meane persons, as Princes and great Lords. But the first Librarie among the Christians, was that (as Isidorus testifieth) of Pamphilius the Martire, whose life is registred by Eusebius, and that he had thirty thousand volums in his Library.

30 We read of a common Custome obserued among those graue Men, chiefly in their Lybraries: where they preserved the Pictures, Portraites, and Statues, of such men as had been most excellent in Learning. Pliny also saith, that Marcus Varro (even in his life time) so merited by his learning: that his Statue was kept in the Library of Asinius Pollio. Cicero wrote to Fabianus the Gaule; that he should buy him some Statues and Portraites, wherewith to grace and beautifie his Lybrarie. The younger Pliny, writing to Julius Senerus, saith; that Herennius Senerus (a very excellent learned man) placed in his Librarie (among other Pictures) those of Cornelius and Titus Arius; sufficient testimony haue we of all those things.

50 Now, concerning these recited Lybraries, and those of many other learned men, and of Princes also, in imitation of their example: they were all destroyed and ranaged by the Gothes, Alaines, and Vandales, vntill such time as Xxx (by

Romes Library burned again in the time of the Emperour Commodus.

* This man was fetched from the Plough, and made Senator of Rome.

The first Lybrary among the Christians.

Pictures of famous learned men preserved in Libraries.

Plin. in lib. 9. Cap. 7.

Plin. secundus in lib. 4.

Who were the notorious destroyers of Libraries and Learning.

Our Bookes not equalling the tenth part of our Ancients.

(by the goodnesse of God) both in our daies, and those of our fore-fathers, many learned and studious men liued, whose paines and endeouirs created infinite others, from whom haue proceeded heapes of huge Volumes; albeit I thinke them not the tenth part, compared with those which their graue Auncients left in Writing. Beside, such as haue beene found, were so vncorrected, corrupted and badlie written: that had it not beene for the indulgent trauaile, of diuers great and worthy personages, they could hardly haue beene reduced to any order and perfection.

CHAP. XXVII.

The Interpretation of the Imperiall Titles, heretofore giuen by the Romaine Emperours, as they haue beene found registered in the Bookes De Iurisprudentia, abbreviated and re-collected by commandement of the Emperour Iustinian, to wit: Of the Gothes, Allemaignes, Germanes, Alanes, Vandals, Affricanes, Gætes, Girdides, &c. and of many other Nations, appertaining to the same kinde of Argument.

Vaine Titles affixed by the Romaine
Emperours.

HE Romaine Emperours, in their Imperiall Titles of honour and renowne, did not onely obserue and giue vnto themselves, the Names or Appellations of those Provinces wonne by them, and reduced vnder the yoake of their Empire: but likewise of such Nations and people, as left their own Countries (in abounding multitudes) and entred on the Landes and possession of others, thence to chase and expell the naturall Inhabitants, to plant there their owne abiding, by giuing them sundry battailes, and some way surmounting, though not wholly exterminating them. Vpon which reason, Iustinian would entitle himselfe, of the Goths, Allemaignes, Vandales, and of others. Of which Nations, I purpose to speake in some measure, what people they were, and whence they came: because (at length) they ruined the great Romain Empire. Whereto I am the rather induced, to enstruct such as are little skilled in Histories (not onely Cosmographicall, but likewise Geographicall) how those people did not onely weaken and ruinate the saide Empire: but also did cast out the true and naturall Dwellers, of the verie greatest part of our Hemisphere.

Moreouer, they compelled the Emperours to graunt them places, wherein to liue (afterward) in peace and quietnesse: for these Nations were the cause, whereby many Countries changed both their manners, Language, and Religion, which matters are necessarie to be spoken off, as nerely appertaining to our argument.

We will begin then first with the Goths, because they were the first, that forsooke their owne Natiue Country: which was called Gothia, or Gothland, as signifying a good Land, it being a Northerne Prouince of Germanie. This Land abounded in Graine, Fruits, Cattle, Woodes, Riuers, Mettalles: but especiallie in Copper, and Skinnes seruing to make Fures. At all times, and as yet (to this instant daie) is to be discerned, the Kingdome of Sweßia, or Sweuia, hath beene comprized vnder the Dominion of the Goths. As the Countrey was fertile in Fruits of the Earth; euen so were the Weomen thereof likewise in Children: for, as they were strong, and of great stature, so had they vsually two Children at a birth, which was the cause then, and so it yet continueth, that they had more people, then could well liue together, the Countrey not being sufficient to yeilde sustenance for so many. In like manner, they were very great feeders, eating much more then they that liue in the Easterne or Meridionall parts.

These people of the Goths, perceiuing, and aduisedly pondering on the fore-specified reasons: leuyed the more part of the youngest and strongest men of their Countrey, to the number of three

Strange people and Nations that weakened and ruined the Romain Empire.

Of the Goths, their original Country, and nature.

More plenty of people, the Countrey was able to feed and nourish.

A leuy of three hundred thousand able men among the Goths.

three hundred thousand; and married such as were not, to ridde themselves of the charge of Daughters, as well as of Sonnes, for the Countrey ordinarily abounded in the Feminine, more then in the Masculine Sexe. So, being well provided of all necessaries for Warre, and leaving a chiefe Commander at home, of the Royall lineage: they wandered abroad thorow the Fieldes, to winne by power, or compasse by Loue, some new habitation wherein to liue.

The Gothes wander to seeke a new dwelling.

Trebellius.

Many Authours, and, among the rest, Trebellius saith, that the first rumour of this their straying, was vnder the raigne of the Emperour Flauius Claudius, about the yeare of our Lord Iesus Christ, two hundred seuentie two. And that they passed thorow Germany, Hungaria, Thrace, Greece, Gaule, and so farre as Italie. They lost many battailes, and wonne likewise as many, against the Romaines and other people, maintaining themselves so well: that they raigned in Italie (euen in despite of the Italians and Emperours) the space of seauentie and one yeares; as Procopius auoucheth, At length they went into Spaine, whence (afterward) they would not remooue: for the Catholique Kinges of Spaine that then raigned by succession, and raigne yet to this present, descended from the race and line of their Kinges, who were (indeed) very generous people.

Procopius, concerning the Gothes in Italy and Spain.

The reason of the Gothes maintenance and continuance.

Now, it is to be imagined, that in regard of such a mighty muster of men, the Countrey of Gothia, or Goth-land, or the Neighboring Borders, remained not without Inhabitants, or the rule of Kinges: For there were euen then left behind, so many as the Land was able to nourish, who had their Kinges in authority ouer them, and strength sufficient to withstand any inuasion of the Countrey. As for the conquering Armies abroad, they continued in honour for a verie long time; albeit, they lost great store of men in battailes, encounters, surprizals, and passages of Riuers: for these disadvantages were still supplied, by the daily birth of Children among them, because they had their Wiues in all places among them. And perhaps some Straungers mingled among them, who wearing their habites, and learning their Language; helpt still to encrease the trie of this people.

The conquering Armies abroad in trauaile.

Such as haue beene named Ostrogothes, were a people of the same Countrey of Gothia or Gotteland, from a place which is called Ostrogothia, the principall Cities whereof, are Scheing and Lincept. This people made their warre apart by themselves, beeing separated from the Gothes, yet ranging abroad in the wide World, according as they did.

Of the Ostrogothes, & their Countrey.

The Westrogothes (in like manner) came out of a Countrey called Westrogothia, among whom, the chiefest Cities, yet to this present daie, are termed Scaris and Veruen. Wisigots, or Bisigots, came forth of a Countrey named Visbi, the very principall whereof, is yet stiled Visbi. I was the more willing to make this description, because I haue heard of diuers (who are but slenderly experienced in Cosmography) that they do term those Ostrogothes, to be Gothes Orientall, or of the East; and the Westrogothes, Occidentall Gothes, or dwelling in the West, and so contrariwise of the other. Albeit, they are all descended, and came out of the Kingdome of Gothia, or Gotteland, according as Munster hath very well obserued.

Of the Westrogothes.

Wisigots or Bisigots.

The error of some young Cosmographers.

Munster.

The Vandals, in the erroneous judgement of Procopius, a learned Grecke Authour, are saide for to be of the verie same Nation, and that all the severall people of the Gothes, Vandalles, Alaines, Hunnes, and diuers others, (whom I am heereafter to describe vnto you) were deriued out of one and the selfe-same Land, and are all comprehended vnder the name of Sauromates, or Sarmates, and haue no other difference, but onelie by the names of their Captaines or Kinges. But I must maintaine against him, that the Land of the Vandales is distant from Gothland, about the space of two hundred leagues, and therefore they cannot be one people with the Gothes. True it is, that this Nation is Septentrionall, or in the North, as the others are, and in a Maritime Countrey also, named yet to this day Vandalia, as I haue already ready said, yet very far off the one from the other.

The error of Procopius concerning the Vandals.

Gothes and Vandals two severall people.

This people did (almost) as much hurt to the Romaine Empire, as the Gothes did, for, ioyning diuers other people with them (as the Alaines, Sua- bes and Franconians:) they trauerfed the Rheine, Gauderichus beeing then their King, and passing among the Gaules, wasted and spoyled them very greatlie. Then went they into Spaine, and (in de- spite of the Gothes) tooke possession of that part of the Countrey, which ioyneth to the Kingdome of Granada, and is (to this day) called Vandalia, or (by corrupting the Word) Vandalusia, albeit the Spaniards mince it more nice- ly, and nick-name it to be Andalusia. To be briefe, they were (after much wast and spoyle) expulsed foorth of Spaine wholly, in the yeare foure hundred thir- tie one, vnder another of their Kinges, named Gensericus, and passed thence in- to Affrica, where they raigned seauenty sixe yeares. From thence they were compelled to auoyde, in the seauenth yeare of the Emperour Iustinian, in Anno. Domino. 528. by the valour of one of his Captaines, named Belisari- us.

The Hunnes also departed out of their Countrey, for. the selfe-same cause as the Goths did, about the yeare one hundred sixtie eight, onely to seek some other Land, where they might liue after the Scythians Religion: first getting possession of Pannonia, where they alwaies so strongly kept and guar- ded it, that (according to their owne name) it became to be called Hungaria. This people came from that part of Scythia, which was tearmed * Hunos, no long distance from the River Tanaïs: but it is in a miserable estate at this day, and vnder subiection of the Mosco- uite. Having vsurped Pannonia, they kept it manfully against the Romaines, and two hundred yeares after, Attila their King, accompanied with some people of the Allemaignes or Germaines; as Bohemians, Gepydes or Gyrpides, Sch'e- sites, Werlies, Thuringians, Gothes, Ostro- gothes, and others, making (in all) a- bout the number of sixe hundred thou- sand Men: passed thorough Allemaigne, which they very much endammaged.

Then went he into France, where hee lost a battaile, in which perished a great number of his men. This battaile was giuen him by the Romaines, Gaules, and certaine Gothes allyed together, and he lost (as some Authours doe affirme) about two hundred thousand men. At length he iournyed into Italie, which he (wel-neere) vtterlie ruined, and reti- ring afterward home into his owne Countrey of Hungaria: he dyed within some few following moneths, and on the day of his Nuptials, which was in the yeare of Iesus Christ, foure hundred forty three.

The Lombardes were a Northerne people, issuing out of Denmarke, as Eusebius maintaineth, and no other reason had they to leaue their Natiue Countrey; but onely a desire to winne some other. There happened in the time of one Seno, or Sweno (yet some tearme him Snio) a very great dearth or scarcitie of victuals in the Land, and because the people endured it verie im- patientlie: it was concluded by the King and his Councell (to ease the Countrey of so many men as were ready to fa- mish) that all such persons as were vn- able, eyther for Warre, or labour of the Ground; should be slaine, whether they were old or young. But this se- uere Edict being reuoked, they then re- solved to make a leuy of all sortes of people, that (by the helpe of Armes) might trauaile to finde out some other dwelling, so to discharge the Countries heauy burthen.

This being put in Execution, they trauailed so farre, and carryed them- selues so couragiously in trauerfing di- uers Landes: that they came at last in- to Italie, and there conquered the Countrey, which was called Istria, making themselves absolute Maisters thereof. Now, because these people were long and taule of stature: the Ita- lians and Istrians tearmed them long Barbarians, which by corruption of the Word, and succession of times, made them to be called Longbardes, or Lombardes. Some are of opinion, that vnder the raigne of Valentinian the Emperour, they beganne to make themselves first knowne; which was about the yeare of our Sauour Iesus Christ,

The trauailes of the Vandals into diuers Countries.

They posses- sed Spaine & Affrica, which in the end wer delected by them.

The Vandals expulsed out of Affrica by Belisarius.

The Hunnes of Scythia, and their trauails.

* Hunos a part of Scythia, in- habited by the Hunnes.

Attila King of the Hunnes.

The great losse that At- tila sustained in France.

Of the Lom- bardes, and whence they descended.

A very seuer and cruell E- dict, but speedily recalled, and better meanes deuifed.

Istria in Italy conquered & new-named Lombardie.

Petrus Diaconus concerning them barbares.

Christ 385. and that they became Commaunders in Istria, in the yeare 570. Likewise, according to Petrus Diaconus, the Emperours made peace with them; in the yeare, seuen hundred and thirtie, and euer since they haue held that Countrey, which at this day is named Lombardy.

Daces or Dani-ans, peo^r of Danemar.

Let it heere be further noted, that where (in any Historie) mention is made of people tearmed Daces, or Danians; the Nation of Danemarke, is thereby vnderstood. Out of which Countrey, many great Armies haue trauailed at sundry times, and haue mightily troubled diuers Kingdomes: among which, they continued a long time in England, but were thence expelled, about the yeare eight hundred sixtie, as is generally granted.

The Norms issued from Nordnegia, & Normania.

The Normanes were people of Nordnegia, or otherwise called Normania, a Northerne Countrey, being much addicted to crueltie and inhumanitie, because they vsed many great Piracies on the Seas. An hundred and fifty thousand Men (of this Nation) bestowed themselues in Vessels on the Sea, and tooke possession of that part of Gaulè, or France, which was then named Neustria, now Normandie, and this was done in the yeare of Iesus Christ, sixe hundred; and others say, eight hundred eightie foure, and in the time of Charles Le Gros. But be it howsoeuer, they haue (since then) kept it against all encounters of the Emperours, Kings of France and England, preserving it still by the name of Normandy, and themselues reckoned to be people of vndaunted courage. There are diuers others, that doe fauour of this their first Originall, and doe yet proule vpon the Seas, committing many Thefts and Robberies.

Neustria now named Normandy, & hath so continued long time.

Suesses or Zuitzers came out of Suenia.

The Nation which we call Suesses, or Sweues, but more vulgarlie Zuitzers, and are (at this day) auxiliarie vnto the French: came out of Suetia, Suenia, or Sweueland, a Northerly Region like to the other: They likewise, by reason of the dearth of foode among them: departed forth of their owne Countrey, about the yeare of Grace, eight hundred, and went so farre as the Rheine, which they would haue passed;

but were hindred by the Franconians. Thence went they to the Land of the Heluetians, who despising the Suesses, (because they were poorely and wretchedly apparrelled, rude in their feeding, and not looking like Souldiours) suffered them to wander about their Countrey.

The Suesses despised by the Heluetians

10

20

30

40

50

At length, perceiuing the kinde sufferance of the Heluetians: they fought to abide in a certaine Canton of their Land. Which when the Heluetians noted, they demaunded of them; to what end they thus wandered about the World? They answered, That they were poore people, and fought but to weare out their liues in trauaile, by deliuing or labouring in the Earth. And seeing that there was wast ground in those partes, vnlaboured, or any vse made of (it being Hilles and Vailyes, enuironed with diuers Lakes) they desired the Heluetians, to permit them to labour in those rough Fieldes, as yet not cultiue: and they should receiue the gaine and benefit thereof, onely allowing them but nourishment for their paines: This was all that they seemed to pretend, iustifying their requests with many sollemne Oaths and protestations. Their desire was granted, and not long after, the Countrey wherein they liued, was not onely called Suessia, in regard of the Suessians there dwelling: but likewise the Auncient Inhabitants had the same Name given them, and (in truth) the Country is very mountainie, and vnapt for riding.

Their pover-ty among the Heluetians, & their request to them.

The Heluetians did grant the Suesses requests.

Of the Allemaignes and whence they were deriued.

Iustinian, and other Emperours, (both before and after him) entitled themselues Lordes of the Allemaignes, by hauing receiued some victories against the Allemaignes. But this may not be saide (as some haue done heere-tofore) that those victories were obtained against the Germanes: for euen at this present daie, when that wee speake or Write of Allemaigne; therein is comprehended all the Nations, which are contained throughout Germanie, and that doe speake the language of the Teutones. But as concerning Allemaigne it selfe, and Allemaignes; the Romaines neuer vnderstood, or meant any other people, then those of Suaba. And, to speake vprightly, they euer haue beene (and are) the true and Auncient Allemaignes; as Cornelius Tacitus plainly confirmeth. Drusus Nero was the first, that styled himselfe Germanicus: for hauing rather angered the Germanes, then foyled them; as diuers other Emperours afterward did. Moreouer, by Germanie is to be vnderstood nine and forty great Prouinces, as well of the lower part, as of the higher part of the said Germanie, comprizing the Countries of the Switzers and Heluetians.

The true Allemaignes were of Suaba.

Drusus Nero Germanicus.

Germany containeth 49. great Prouinces.

Of the Alains, and what people they were ouer and beside the fore-named Titles, they vsed the word Analicus, which by translation, implyeth Alaines. Many haue supposed, that these were a people of Germanie, but therein they were and are deceiued: for Ptolomy knew them well; and placed them in a part of Scythia. Capito inus bestowes them in Dacia; Marcellinus, Pliny, & Dionisius the Poet, doe graunt them a being in Sarmatia of Europe.

Iosephus, in his last Book, affirmeth their aboad to be betweene the riuer Tanais, and the Palus Maotides: and saith moreouer, that (in his time) these Alaines or Alanes, accompanied with the Hircanians; both robbed and spoyled all the Region of the Medes. As for my selfe, by that which I haue gathered, from such as haue written on the actions of the Gothes: I am perswaded, that those Alaines were their Companions, and that oftentimes (in their Warres) for their owne aduantage, they sundred themselves from them, as one while they did with the Vandales. But questionlesse, their descent was from Scythia, according to the affirmation of Ptolomy.

The Alaines companions with the Goths in their wars.

Of the Gepides, Gyrpides, or Iupides.

If we shall speake of the Gepides, Gyrpides, or Iupides, and what people they were: there are opinions enow concerning them. Some say, that they were (at the first) of Scythia, and came thence (as the Lombards did) into Italy. But hauing made a more curious and diligent search; I find, that they were a people of Germanie, being then called Gepudij, or Sepusij, and (according to Ptolomeus Mataueſtus) now at this day, Siebensburgs; who followed the Gothes, the Vandals and the Normanes also, they being erring and vagabond people. Till Gepudij or Sepusij.

at length they ventred on the Seas, and went to inhabite the Isles of the Orchades, whereof Thille is the latest inhabited, as Volateranus auoucheth, and now is subiect to the Kings of Scotland.

Of the Getes, a fanis warlike pple.

The Getes haue beene, and are yet a warlike people, instantly much mollested by the Turkes; but they found the Romaines work enough to doe, consisting of Transiluanians, Wallachians, Moldauians, and other Countries about the Riuer Ister, which falleth into the Ponticke Sea.

I may not be forgetful of the Bourguignons, because I my selfe descended of that Nation. Orosius holdeth, that they are deriued out of Germany; And Volateranus saith, that Iouinianus the Emperour vanquished such a people, which liued by the Riuer of Rheine. But there is nothing more certaine (according as I haue gathered by the Germane Histories) then that they issued from some remaines of the Gothes, Vandales, and Hunnes, who beeing altogether chased by the Romaines; threw themselves vpon that part of Gaule, which they stiled after their owne name, and there (perforce) enthroned themselves. For afterward, they could so well resist the Romaines, that they were constrained to yeild them tolleration, and let them liue in the saide Gountrey amongst the first Inhabitants. There they builded Fortes, Villages, and Townes, which they tearmed Bourgs or Bouroughes of Gothes and Hunnes. And then coucting (corruptly) to speake it in one Word: from Bourg-Goth-Hunnes, they came to be called Bourguignons, as much to say, as a warring people.

Of the Bourguigns, and whee they are iud.

Burgougne named after the Bourguignons.

Of their own first names.

Aetius, Lieutenant to the Emperour Theodosius, gaue them a battaile in the yeare of Christ, 435. and won the day: but it cost him so deare, that he would neuer after meddle any more with them. About the yeare 430. they receiued and embraced the Christian Faith. These people grew on in great ciuility, and became as much addicted to Learning, as to Armes: For they haue a goodly vniuersity, founded by one of the Dukes of Bourgongne, wherein many Lectures are read of all the Sciences, to Schollers of all Nations, at Dola, the capitall City of that part of Bourgongne, which is vnder command of the house

Aetius foyled the Bourguignons.

A faire vniuersity, builded by a duke of Bourgongne.

of

of Austria, and there they hold a Parliament also. As for the other part of Bourgogne, in obedience to the crown of France: Digeon is the Metropolitan City thereof, where likewise is held another Parliament. And these two Bourgognes are maintained in very good peace, albeit they are in obedience to diuers Princes.

The fore-named Emperours did also stile themselves by names of Franques, as hauing fought with and repulsed the Franconians, who were risen vp in arms, and departed out of their Countrey of Germany. But so slender were their impeachings, that they inuaded the Gauls, which then were Prouinces of the Romaines, notwithstanding, all the best meanes they could make. They were entituled Affricanes likewise, for hauing obtained some Conquests in Affrica: And Parthians also, for hauing wonne some victories ouer the Parthians. Stephanus ranketh them among the people of Scythia: but I neuer knew, or read, that the Romaines made the Parthians tributary, being their best Friendes, for they had more victories ouer the Romans, then euer the Romans had against them. They did not leaue their Countries, and sought after a new habitation, eyther for pouertie or necessitie: but rather to conquer Kingdomes and Prouinces; as Media, Hircania, Armenia, Caramania, and many other. The Riuer Euphrates was the limits between them and the Romaines: but those Romaine Emperours, vpon the declining of their Empire, were Princes full of follie and vain-glory, attributing Titles to themselves, without any matter of right or merit.

They gaue themselves also the Title of Happy and Prosperous, albeit they were (oftentimes) the most infortunate men al of other, as wel in their home affaires, as the Negotiations of the Empire. For (day by day) they lost their Prouinces, which precedent Auncient Captaines (endowed with many vertues) and worthy Romaine Consuls had won, by no meane expence of paines, and effusion of their blood.

Moreouer, the most part of the Emperours, beheld their Wiues, Children, and Friends, murdered and massacred; yea, and themselves subiect to no better fortune in the end: as Iustinian, who was cast out of his Empire by Florianus. They would likewise be called inclytes, that is to say; Princes of glorious renowne, victorious, triumphing, and euermore Augustus, as much to say; as enlargers of the Romaine Empire: but, as I formerly said, these were but such Titles as Flatterers gaue them, for the greater number of those Emperours, after that these stiles of honour were imposed on them; could boast of no such happinesse, but rather came farre short of any such felicities.

Thus haue ye briefly seene the originall of all those people, which those Emperours made vaunt to haue foyled and vanquished: howbeit, though they were tearmed barbarous by them, yet (by little and little) they rent and tore their Empire in pieces. At this day they are all become ciuilized, and (well-neere all) Christians: onely the Parthians excepted, who are Mahometists, pertaking in the Turkes Religion.

But hauing spoken of so many Nations, who are al said to be deriued from the Scythians: wee may not omit to say some-what of the Picts, who (by the opinion of most Writers) do beare the name of a people of Germanie, that had their Originall out of Scythia, descending of the * Agathyrsi in Sarmatia, that vsed to paint and couler their faces, and thereupon were named Picts. Before they entred into Brittaine, they inhabited the Isle of Orkney for a long time together, ferrying ouer into Cathnesse daily, multiplying so in power and number: that (getting vp further into the Land) they possessed Rosse, Murreyland, Merne and Angusse, whence passing into Fife and Louthian, they droue thence the Britaine Inhabitants, who were onelie poore people, that liued by nourishing & breeding Cattle. This their enterance into Albion (for so was it then called) was in the yeare of the Worlds Creation 3633.

Cruthneus Camelonus is said to be the first King of the Picts, and that he builded a famous City on the banke of the Riuer cald Caron, appointing it to be the chiefe City of all the Pictish Kingdom. He builded also the Towne of Agueda, afterward called Edenbrough, of Ethius, King of the Picts, and the Castle, named

The

Digeon the Metropolitan City.

Of the Franks or Franconians

Affricanes and Parthians.

Stephanus.

Euphrates the boundes betweene the Parthians and Romaines.

Titles full of vanity and fond self-conceit.

The misery of most of the Romain Emperors.

The signification of Augustus.

Those Nations are all become Christians.

The originall of the Picts, & their coming into the Isle of Orkney

* A rich people bordering on the Scythians.

They were named Picts, of painting their faces.

Cruthneus Camelonus first King of the Picts.

The Castle of Maydens, because the Pictish Kinges kept their Daughter there, vnder strict custody, and in all good exercises, till their meete yeares for marriage.

Concerning the warres, strifes, and bloody contentions betweene the Albion Scots and Pictes, thorow all their Kings raigne, till their vtter ouerthrow, and quite dissolation of Pictland, by Kenneth the victorious King of Scots: I referre it to fitter time and place, onely letting ye know, that this subuersion & and vtter ruine of the Pictes, happened in the yeare of our redemption, 839. in the sixt yeare of King Kenneths glorious raigne, and 1168. yeares after their first Plantation in Albion.

Kenneth King of Scots quite desolated Pictland.

CHAP. XXVIII.

What benefit Musique bringeth to a Common-wealth; And how it hath bene naturally giuen to all Nations in the world, and (by the iudgement of some Historians) hath cured diuers infirmities and diseases of the mind.

Very certain it is, that some Law-makers, peeuish, troublesome, and ouer-hard in many matters, whereof Lycurgus was one: did expel Musick out of their Commonwealths, affirming, that it made people effeminate, negligent, and idle. But I am of a quite contrary minde, and dare maintaine, that such as will truely consider Musique, and what it is in it selfe: shall finde, that it can make men bold, hardy, modest, and chaste, especially being well and vertuously vsed. Vnder this kind of Musique, I comprehend not onely that which is sung by Art and mellodiously, as by the voyces of Men, Weomen, or Children: but also I presuppose (within the same compasse) all Instruments; as Flutes, Lutes, Viols, Drums, Trumpets, Organes, Virginals, Harpes, and others. And there is not any thing, that maketh men more ciuilly minded, or preserueth them in better concord and amitie, then Musique.

The folly of some ouer-curious Law-makers.

The Authors comprehension of Musick.

Polybius declareth, that the great Common-wealth of the * Cynethenses in Arcadia, falling from the delight they formerly had in Musique: grew soone after into seditious humors, & ciuil wars among themselues, wherein there wanted not any kind of crueltie. And when all their Neighbors round about them, were meerey confounded with admiration, as wondring how these people should become so harsh, barbarous, and rude, considering that all the other people of Arabia, had by them been reduced to curtesie and humane tractability: Polybius was the first that took notice thereof, and auouched, that it onely proceeded, by leauing the vse of Musique, which (from all Antiquity) had euermore bene prized and honoured in Arcadia, more then in any other place of the World. For it was especially ordained, by the customes and decrees of the Countrey, that euery one should make vse thereof for the space of thirty yeares; yea, vpon very great paines and penalties. And this was the reason (saith Polybius) that the first Law-makers among those people, ordained and appointed continuall vse thereof: onely to cause ciuility & humanity, in regard, that (of their owne naturall disposition) they were wilde, fierce, and barbarous, as all people inhabiting the Mountaines, and cold Countries are.

Perhaps the like iudgement might passe on the Gaules of former times, whom Julian the Emperour tearmed the barbarous people of his daies: which Nation (neuerthelesse) became afterward so courteous and tractable, as any other people whatsoever in Europe, whereat all Straungers wondred not a little. And yet it is generally knowne, that no people did more practise Musique, or sung more sweetely, then they: nay, and that which goeth farre beyond this, they could daunce any daunce in France, were it Ionian or Lydian, that is to say; consisting of five or seauen notes or strains. Which were expressly forbidden to Youth, by Plato and Aristotle, because they had a great power and preuailance, in softning and humbling the hearts of men. They would also exercise their Children to the * Dorian Musique, which was the first or chiefest note, to maintaine them in an harmonious sweetnesse, accom-

Polyb. in Lib. 4. Cap. 7.
* A Citty in Arcadia, nere Leprum.

A Common-wealth quite ouerthrowne by leauing Musicke.

Lawes and Customes for the vse of Musicke.

Of the Gaules

Jul. imp. in Epi. ad Antioch.

The Gaules were generally addicted to Musick.

Plato in Lib. de Leg. et Republ.

* A certaine kind of Musick representing grauity.

panied with grauitie, which was the Dorian proper effect.

Such prohibition might better haue beene vsed in the lesser Asia, where they had no other dances; but of five or seuen straines, especially in the Countreyes of Ionian and Lydia. But people inhabiting the Northern parts; cold, Mountainous, and Rocky, who are ordinarily more sauage, or lesse courteous then the Inhabitants of the South, or dwelling on Plaines, neuer can be better qualified or softened, then by vsing the Ionian & Lydian hermony, which was also forbidden in the Primitiue Church: and nothing was there permitted to bee sung, but of the first note, which is now most of all frequented in Churches. And like as men do disarm sauage Beasts of furie & violence, to make them of a more tractable Nature: euen so, the Lydian and Ionian Musicke or hermony, disarmeth the verie rudest and most barbarous Nations, of all their former, sauage, and cruell Natures, causing them to become milde, pliant, and affable. According as it fell out with the Gaules, who (it may be) could not haue beene tamed & made obedient vnto the ciuill Lawes and Ordinances of a Monarchy, if their former sterne Nature (which the Emperour Iulian said, was so high, and vn-sufferable of seruitude) had not bin mollified and sweetened by Musicke.

Musick, is one of the members of the Mathematickes, as beeing a Science attracted from numbers: because that by them; the proportion Hermonicall is found out. Platoes will was, that Children should learne to sing, for recreation of their owne spirites, and to prayse God by Hymnes. And in truth, there is nothing that more taketh away offensuennesse, or easeth matter of great and laborious tranaile (as woorking in the ground, Masonry, Carpentry, and exercising other Arts, painefull to the bodie) then singing doth.

In like manner, all Artezans, following any Trade or profession, doe vse to sing: as Hay-makers, Haruesters, Gardiners, Deluers, Children and Weomen weeding grounds, doe weare awaie the irkesomnesse of their labour by singing, either in heate or colde, Winds or Rain, it maketh paine the more supportable to them.

Soldiers, euen when they goe (manie times) to be slaine in a battell, will yet sing by the way: the beating of Drums, and sounding of Fifes and Trompets, giueth courage to the Soldier for his cariage in Warre, making him hardie, bold, and valiant. Nor is it to bee doubted, that Nature gaue Musicke and melodie to man, but onely for his good and benefit; as yong Children do apparantly manifest vnto vs: for, when their Nursses would haue them to sleepe, and keepe them in their Cradles: euen when they are most impatient and froward nothing sooner asswageth and preuayleth with them, then mellodie and singing. In so manie Barbarour Nations, as haue bin discovered in former Antiquitie, and in our dayes, in that part of the earth which is called the New-found World, Flutes haue beene found among them, Drums, Hoboyes, and other Instruments, and both priuately and publickely, as also in their Temples, singing of Psalmes hath beene obserued.

Many creatures, as diuers kindes of Birds, when they are in any chearfull disposition, will sing to solace and delight themselues: as the Nightingale, the Tarrine, the Thrush, Linnet, Blackbird, and others; among which Birds, many haue beene taught to sing by men, as daylie in most places is discerned. As concerning foure-footed Beasts, diuers of them doe take much pleasure in Musicke, as namely Camels: for if such as guide and Gouerne them, doe not ordinarily sing or whistle to them, they will not trauel with any spirit or chearfulnesse. All such as haue beene in the East Countreyes, and noted the Carauannes, which are troops of Camelles laden with Merchandizes, haue affirmed as much. Horses that are dressed by their Keepers, and daily sung vnto as they do it, are made verie manageable, gentle, and apt for the Saddle. Aboue all other Beasts, the Hart or Stag how wilde soeuer he bee, if hee heare a man play on a Violl, or on a Lute, he wil (by stealths) draw neerer and neerer, yea and suffer himselfe to bee touched, as I my selfe haue seene by experience.

Musicke hath mighty power and Authority ouer the spirits and affections of men: and amongst many examples, the first may be of Timotheus, who by pleasing sounds and chaunges of his Instrument, Dances vsed in the Lesser Asia.

Songes of the first note or sound, not vsed in the primitiue church

The stern nature of the Gaules, softened by Musicke.

Musick a member of the Mathematicks

Musicke maketh all labor seeme light and easie.

Nature gaue Musicke vnto man for his benefit.

Musicke in Countries of the New-found world.

Birdes that take delight in Musicke.

Camelles are pleased with singing.

The Hart or Stag, a great affecter of Musicke.

The reason
why Alexan- der went from a Banquet.

Agamemnon & his Wife Cly- temnestra.

K. David delighted highlie in his Pfalteri-
on.

Moyfes apoin-ted Musick in the Temple
of God.

Musick obserued amongest
the Grecians

Of the first Inuenters of Musicke and Instruments.

Gen. 41, 21.

ment, constrained Alexander (as ouer-ioyed with pleasure) for to depart from a banquet. Next, we may speake of Agamemnon, who was loath to part from his Countrey, and go to the sledge of Troy, because he was doubtfull of the modesty of his wife Clytemnestra; and therefore, he left a Musition on the Harp with her;
the sound whereof, should incite her to bashfulness and continence, so that Æ- gistus could not abuse her, without killing the Musition. But in speaking of this Harper, it maketh me to remember the Royall Psalmist David, who of himselfe, was a man verie strong and seuer, yet much guided and detained by his Psalterion.
Nor are we to thinke, that the hermonie of this Instrument, was common or vulgar, whereof the sacred Scripture maketh mention so many times, and which was iudged only (among al other) meete to celebrate the praises of God. It is composed of seauentie two stringes, in forme trilaterall, and the consonance thereof, is incomparable.

It was ordained by Moyfes, that God should be praised in his Temple, with voices and Instruments; and Christians (afterward) made continuance thereof by singing Psalmes, both with voices and Organs, which greatly incited Deuotion in the verie dullest minds. It was an ef-peciall note of ciuilitie among the Greci- ans, euen as it is to this day after any feast or Banquet, to play vpon some Musical Instrument, or to sing anie Ode melodi-ously. Which obseruation, reached into Italy, Germany, Spaine, and France, where much more account is made of a cunning Musition that can ſing wel, play on Musical Instruments, Dance, vse loftie trickes, yet keepe both tune and time, that the cadence of his feete may fit with the Instrument, then of any ydle, neglect or ignorant fellow.

Manie haue attributed the inuention of Musicke, and playing on the Lyre or Harpe, to Orpheus; others, to Amphion; the Grecians to Dionysius or Bacchus; but others, to the people of Arcadia, because the men of that Countrey, were naturally addicted thereto. The Hebrewes, as Moyfes and Iosephus, doe say; that Inball the Sonne of Lamech (who liued in the yeare of the worlde, 1040. manie Ages before Amphion, and al other Musitions, was the Father of all that play vpon the Harpe and Organs; and that he did first finde out the concords of Musicke; nay more, that hee carefully addicted himselfe, and played both on the Psalterion, and on the Harpe. As concerning my selfe, I will not deny, that all the forenamed men were good Musitions, but that any one man of them should bee the sole inuenter, I can verie hardly therein bee perswaded.

Rather I am of the minde, that euerie singuler man, according vnto the Ages wherein they liued, made addition of their skill and knowledge; and so brought it to the perfection wherein we now find it to bee. And in these verie dayes of ours, there haue liued men so excellent and skilfull, as haue added diuers Rules, which neuer were knowne before; and brought the name of Musick to admired perfection, some inuenters whereof are knowne, but other vncertaine.

Before the Conclusion of this Chapter, I am desirous to set downe two seuerall experiences, concerning the efficacy and might of Musick: which my self saw practised vpon two Gentlewomen; one of them being de la March, neer to Garet, young, vertuous, and passable for beau-tie. This Gentlewoman fell into such a furie (by reason of a reporte made vnto her, of her husbandes inclination, to change and nouell affection) that at eue-ry sudden moment of time, shee woulde throw her selfe headlong into the fire, or out at a Window, or into a Fish-ponde neere to her house; out of which, she had beene rescued two seuerall times; and therefore committed to more dilligent keeping.

Physitions could returne no good by their paines and endeouours, but a religious Capucine passing that way, and crauing his Passade or Almes, at the doore of this Gentlewomans house; and hearing the strange accident befall her, gaue them aduise, that some skilfull man, well experienced in playing vpon the Lute, should vse his cunning by her, and not to part from her in some prettie length of time, because it would proue verie help-full to her. Further hee added, that in the night time, some pleasing Ditties might well consort with the Musicke, which accordingly was performed; and within lesse then three months space, the violent passion forsooke her; and she remaineth

That no one man could be the onelic Inuenter of Mu-sicke.

Musicke brought vnto perfection in our dayes.

Two experiments made of the power of Musicke.

A Gentlewo-man distracted with iea-lously cured, and how.

The aduise of a Capucine frier.

The Historie of another Gentlewoman of Honor.

maineth at this time sound both in mind and bodie.

I likewise knew another Gentlewo-man of honor at Rohen, whose name may best be knowne by du Parreau, that al her life time, did neuer vse the helpe of anie Physicke, how great or grieuous soeuer her infirmities were. But in all hir diseases, griefes, hurts, Childe-weakenesses, and lameness, shee neuer desired anie better Physitian, then one that could artificially play on the Taber and Pipe, and him shee would entitle her true Physiti-on.

Griefes and great infirmities cured by Musicke.

This Gentlewoman being well entred into Age, it happened, that an extreame paine seized on her knee, immagined to proceede from some taste of the Gowte.
Whereupon, she would haue her Taborer instantly, to play her a pleasaunt and liuely Carranto. The Taborer being verie willing to please his Mistris, made such hast to touch his Taber, and sounde his Pipe in the best manner: that striuing to excede himselfe in Art and dexteritie, both in readinesse of his winde, and agility of hand, he fell down in a swoond vpon the Floore. Hee being disabled from playing any longer, and all there present wondering not a little, to see him lye in such straunge estate, without anie recouery of strength or knowledge, for the space almost, of three quarters of an houre: the Gentlewoman her selfe, euen then complained, that her paine and affliction was neuer so extraordinarie on her, as in the time of the Musicks so sud-daine cessation.

A strange accident vnto a Taborer.

The Taborer hauing recouered strength and iudgement againe, and indifferentlie refreshed with a sprightly Cup of Wine, fell afresh to his former skilfull Muscical playing, and the Gentlewoman felte her paine immediately to leaue her. I my selfe was in the Chamber when these accidents happened; and do auouch vpon my credit, that the Gentlewoman thus liued an hundred and six yeares.

The Authour
auoucheth the truth of this Historie.

The Authors
conclusion.

In briefe, in all well pollicied and ordered Commonweales, men should enstruēt their Sons and Daughters in Mu-sicke, because it mollifieth angrie hearts, asswageth sadnesse, preferueth people in kinde concord and amitie, healeth many melancholy diseases, and is no mean ex-citer of the minde to deuotion. Plato was of the minde, that the Heauens (in their motion and stirring) doth make so great and melodious an hermonie, that if man could be able to vnderstand it, he would neuer be wearied with abiding in this world.

Musicke and melody in the heauens motion.

CHAP. XXIX.

Of Gold, the properties & excellency thereof: Where it is found: How it is extracted, purified: and what paine is bestowed in getting it.

He thinkes, I shoulde offer great wrong to Nature, if hauing written on so manie sundry things, I shold not say somewhat concerning Gold, it beeing the most excellent of all other mettals; yea (in a maner) surpassing all things created in this neather world. For, it is saide to be immortall; exempted from all rust and corruption;
infomuch, that lying hidden in the earth,
in the Water, or in the most putrified heape of filth, for so manie yeares as any one pleaseth, yet it wil neuer receyue or tast of any imperfection; or let it be continually kept in the fire, yet it neuer dimi-nisheth, neither receiueh any change or alteration.

Gold reputed to be imortal and free from filth or putri-
faction.

His colour carrieth resemblance with the beames of the Sunne, which reioyceth or cheareth melancholy people. It hath no euil fauour or tast, neither soileth their hands that meddle with it, as all other Mettals else do; which likewise float aloft aboue Quick-siluer, but Gold only goes to the bottome. If it be receiued into the bodie, it neuer offendeth the stomacke, be it either in powder, or solidly in Mornelles: but contrarywise, giueth chearefulnesse to the heart, and comforteth the vital spirits, whereto other Met-tals are often offensiuē.

The colour, properties, & perfections of Gold.

Therefore, let no man enter into anie meruaile, if the World doth make such estimation thereof, and prize it aboue all other thinges. For, as concerning the matter whereof it consisteth, a Learned Authour sayeth: That it is composed
of

The matter wherof Gold is composed, being two Elementarie substances.

Elementarie conuerted Metally bodies.

All actions & endeouours tend vnto nothing more, then to the getting of Gold.

of two Elementarie substances, iustlie and equally proportioned. These substances then so mingled, being equall and vnited in proprietic, can endure nothing else, but this amiable and concordiall Commixtion, which perfecteth it selfe in the fermentation and knitting together, making such an interligation, and absolute vnion of the one with the other; that it appeareth meerly impossible to dissolue or seperate them. So that, bee it that this ensueth by the influence of the Celestiall bodies, or by the diurnity and power of time, or by the admirable operation of Nature; or else, that all these are therein assisting: yet notwithstanding, these Elementarie substances do conuert themselues into a Mettally bodie, which is tearmed Golde. The temperature whereof, with the Colligation and Vnion, maketh it so firme and solide, that not only it begetteth a common and vulgar permanencie: but receiueth likewise an incorruptible temperature, as it were, hauing (I know not how) some-what in him, that enricheth and honoureth him, with al the forenamed excellent properties.

Merchants saile by Sea, trauell on the Land, with infinite cares, dangers, and paines, only to get this Gold. The maine intent of Soldiers, that expose themselues euerie moment into the pawes of death, or danger of her perpetuall thraldome, is only to winne Golde. For be it, that they surprize a Cittie by assault, or winne the day by triall of battaile: they wil seeke after no other Luggage or Moouables, but Gold onely: and if prisoners labor to redeeme their liues, the ransome must be Gold only. Schollers, and men experienced in all Arts, their studie & practise is to no other end, but to gaine Golde. If a payment be made to any great person, it must be in faire Gold. If gifts to Princes, none fitter then Golde. If but betweene Friend and Friend, the courtesie doth best expresse it selfe in Gold.

Kinges, Emperours, and Princes, by the meanes of Golde, haue made themselues redoubted and dreadfull, and conquered manie potent Prouinces. Let Phillip King of Macedon remaine as a testimonie; who causing a re-search to bee made in the Mines of Gold which were in his Countreyes (that formerly had bin thoroughly digged, and quite giuen ouer) found yet so much remaining, as yeilded him the whole Conquest of Greece, and Alexander his Sonne afterward, of all the East. And many times, by the meanes of this excellling Mettall, the same King Phillip, caused impregnable places to bee surrendered to him, which he neuer could haue surprized by power.

To approue the truth heerof, Plutarke reporteth of the same Phillip, that he hauing besiedged a place, by Nature so inexpugnable, that his owne followers aduised him to withdraw from thence: he demaunded of him that had best experience of the saide place, if there were no meanes, to let an Ass (laden with Gold) but goe about it. Whereto aunswere was made, yes doubtlesse. Then Phillip assured himselfe of taking the place, for he that was the Commauder in it, comming to parlie, and touching the Gold, submitted himselfe to King Phillip, & the place also.

The Indies, which be so farre off, are sought for with danger of death, and vspeakable trauails of so manie thousands of men, which the Kings of Spaine haue continually sent thither: onely for the Mines of Golde, and rich sands so frequently found in the Riuer. Which neuer would be so fiercely followed, if I were able to recount, how manie men and women grow negligent of their own honor and good fame, onely by the base affection of Gold. But let vs now see, where this Golde is found; and in what manner it is come by: which I will relate in a Chapter by it selfe, least this should be offensive to the Reader by length.

Kingdomes & great Prouinces wonne by Gold.

Impregnable places made passable by Gold.

The reason why the Indies are so much trau. y. led & sought after.

CHAP.

CHAP. XXX.

How Mines of Gold are known where they are: And in what manner the Golde is taken forth & washed.

I would require too long a labour to relate all those Regions where Golde is found; for I am perswaded, that if men did bestow their paines in seeking, Mines wold be found (almost in euerie Country: yet more in some one, then in other; and of greater ease to be obtained. In manie parts of Germany, Gold is found, as in Bohemia, Transyluana, Lauris, Sibebourg, and many other Countreyes. In England in some few places. In Macedonia in a place called Syderocapsa. In diuers parts of Affrica, as in Ethiopia, and beyond the rest, in the New worlde, which we improperly tearme India, where Gold is had with much lesse labour, then amongst vs.

Yet howsoeuer it be, nothing can be obtained without labour; and wee must not thinke, that when men are in the Indias, they finde Ingots readie made to their hands, and gather vp Golde, as we do stones vppon the High-ways. Surely it cannot be so, for we finde by the Spanish Histories, that the more part of the Naturall Indians, do meereley dye with labouring in the Mines of Golde, as being ouer-enforced and constrained vnto hard toyles, and verie badly vsed by the Spaniards.

Now adayes, no such plentie of Gold is brought thence, as formerly hath bin, for that which was sent hither, and in so great quantities, had long time before bene gathered by the Indians. And so much the rather, because the greater part of their Idolles, were made of massy Gold; the verie soles of their Shooes, Vessels, and wearing Garments. Their Temples and Royall Pallaces, were all covered quite ouer with Golde, as ours are with Lead, and manie other moouables, which were too long and tedious to relate.

Next; the great and admirable ransomes of manie of their Kinges, I passe ouer in silence, as being at large discoursed in diuers other Bookes. But nowe at this present, a new kind of search must bee made for Golde, with much difficult labour, and great expence of time, especially, to recouer anie such quantitie. Therefore, let vs examine the places where it is to be had, and what proceeding is vsed therein.

Mettally matters haue their propper seating in Mountaines, in the same manner, as Trees haue their roots, Trunkes Braunches, and Leaues. And those hilles, whose toppes tend towardes the South, and their feete stretch towardes the North, dooth giue a demonstration to haue Mettall in them, because Mettalles doe engender themselues of a verie thicke and grosse humour, which may bee knowne by the colour and sa- uour; for, it yeeldeth a Blacke coloured earth, in regard of the Golde and Siluer, and such is the fauour also.

If yee breake two stones, of one and the same hill, if any Mettall be beneath in the bowelles thereof, yee shall apparently perceiue, that the Stones will fauour exceedingly of Sulphure. Whereby is to bee vnderstoode, that the first creation or composure of Golde, is in the verie top and highest part of Mountaines, or other loftie places, becaule the Sunne there purifieth that, which is ouermuch earthy. But when Raynes and Torrents, doe (by little and little) distill vppon the hilles, they beare the Golde along downe with them vnto the lower partes of those hilles: whence likewise ensaeth, that the earth rifting by the Raine, Golde therein encloseth it selfe.

Hauiug declared sufficiently (as I thinke) the true Originall of Golde, and of his Mines, I come now to relate, how it is come by, as wel in Germany, as in Calicut, Fern, and other Prouinces, be they in the East, West, North, or South, in which places there are diuers diuersities of Mines. Because they must either fish for Graines of Golde in the Riuers, or

Matters of Mettals, are in Mountains and discerned by colour and smell of the earth.

Gold is created in Mountains or high Hills, and in what manner

Howe manie diuersities of Mines of gold there are, & how they are severally termed.

Y y delue

All Countries supposed to haue Mines of Golde, but not alike in quantity.

Men find not Ingots of gold ready made to their hands.

No such store of Gold now as in former times.

The Newe World emptied of her Gold.

delue and digge in the Rockes & Mountaines, according vnto the places where such Mines are discovered. For knowledge whereof, it is to bee vnderstoode, that there be Mines, which are tearmed pendant or hanging Mines; others called lying or settled; others, oblique, or winding diuers waies: and others beside, that are streaming or gliding gently along in the earth or water.

Of Pendant Mines.

Of lying or settled Mines.

Of oblique or winding Mines.

Of riuersthat haue pure & fine graines of Golde, and how they wer discerned.

Ceremonies obserued by Idolaters in getting Gold out of the earth.

Diuellish Visions and Deceptions.

The pendant Mines, be those which are found in the sommitie or superficies of hilles or Mountaines, and haue (from thence) earth vnderneath them. Those that bee called lying or settled, are such as are beneath in the bottome, or playne firme ground, being carried downe (either by Torrents and outragious Raines. And the other which are sayde to be oblique or Circkling, haue their courses thwarting or trauersing, eyther in those which hang, or in the Lying Mines. And all of these, doo disperse and spred themselves (by the meanes of little Pearling Gullets of Warer) into the neereft neighbouring Riuer: from whence ensueth, that there are Riuer, generallie thoroughout the World, wherein is Sande and Grauell, appearing as if it were Azure and Golden in Colour, and therein are pure and fine graines of good Gold.

But returning to the pendant or hanging Mine, it behooueth heere to know, after what maner the Indians (and diuers other Nations, where such matter is in vse and practise) do gouerne and carrie themselves, in getting or deriuing this Mettall out of the earths entrails.

Before we enter vpon the worke, it is necessarie to knowe, that in the Easterne Countreyes, where the people are Idolaters, such men as intend to goe and digge for Gold, and neuer were before at any Mines opening: doe abstaine from their Wiues, & all other pleasures of the body, vsing verie soleinne Fastes and abstinences, adoring the Sun with earnest prayers. And this they doe, not onely because they hold a firme opinion, that Gold must needs be a sacred thing: but also to arme and settle themselves against Diabolicall Visions and illusions, which they are often subiect to in solitarie places, where they raise vp and finde so precious a Mettall, as they that haue beene in Peru, and the other Neighbouring Countreyes, confessed to haue seen, during the time of their there present abiding.

Gold there is found in the earth, and in Rockie places, bee they the plaines or hilly grounds, where there is no verdure, but all naked and bare. In such partes as are without Water, as the experimented and skilful in the Veyns of Mines (knowing for a certainty what can be in such an earth) do first wash the place very cleane where they purpose to digge; which being done, they delue about eight or ten foote in depth; and as much in length and largenesse; then, in a certaine vessell made of purpose, they still doe wash the earth, as it is digged vp. If thus by washing, they finde any Golde, they continue on the labour: but if they find none, they will not yet giue ouer, vntill by digging deeper; they finde out the Rocke, which they breake and pierce thorough with their Instruments, vaulting it daylie as they goe on, with Engines and strong defences of Woodde, that the earth or stones may not fall downe vpon them. Concerning such Mines as are sought for in plaine grounds, they beginne digging (so neere as possibly they may) vnto some Brooke, Riuer, Current, or Lake: because thereby (in washing the earth) they may the sooner perceiue the Gold; or when any cometh to them, for otherwise, the labour would be too insupportable. And this is the reason, that the richest men in the Indias, haue store of Slaues, whom they onely employ in digging and deluing, beside other laborers, that bring or draw vpe the earth in Baskets, and others that carrie it to the Water in Panniers or Doffers. In the Water, bee it Riuer, Lake, Brooke, or Spring, there are diuers other slaues, that stand vp aboute the Knees, washing the saide earth (as it is brought vnto them) in Siues or Searces, making vse of no more water then is needfull. and so dexteriously seperating the Golde from the Earth, that as the earth (by little and little) glydeth away, so the Golde remaineth behinde in the Siue or Searce, then afterward, making (as it were) a second kinde of seperation, it is put into a Vessell by it selfe, and more earth brought to washing in like maner, and vsed accordingly. Heer is to be remembred, that they which wash the Mettall in these Siues or Searces, are most commonly Women, who haue

The first manner of digging for gold, in groundes haue no Water.

Of digging til they come to the Rocke, and what is done after.

Of Mines in plaingrounds

Rich men in India, haue store of slaues and how they are employed

Of washing the earth in Siues or Searces.

two men, standing ready to fill their sines; two others, which bring the Earth or Oare to them; two more for lading, and two for fetching, drawing it vp from the Diggers. So much shall suffice for the first manner of bringing Golde from the Mine.

There are other meanes, and in another manner; as also the place where the Golde is founde, is altogether different. Considering, that there are riuers, where in both sande and Graines of Golde are found; which for the more ease in recovering, if the Riuer bee small and little, the Indians labour to emptie and draw it drie. Then taking the sande and Earth in the bottome, they wash it in such sort as hath been declared.

But if the Riuer or Spring bee such, as it cannot bee made drie: they change and turne the course some other waie, quite from his Naturall Bedde or Current. Which beeing done, they go to seeke for Gold in the very middest of the Channell, amongst the Pebbles and Flintes: and more profite returneth by this kinde of Fishing, then by washing the digged Earth, as I haue truely found by obseruation.

But howsoever the Metall of Golde is thus found out in Riuers, or in the Plaine Fieldes: yet it is helde for most certaine and infallible, that it was first bredde in the Sommetie and toppes of Hilles or Mountaines; and the vehement showres and falles of Raine (when this Earth was baked and conuerted into Golde, by the radiant and splendant beames of the Sunne) by softe and slow slydings, carried it downe into neere adjoining Riuers and Brookes, which lye apt and readie to receyue whatsoever is sent downe by Torrents from the Mountaines; as also, into the vnder-eeuen grounds.

Therefore, there is no further question to be vrged, but that Golde hath his Originall in the superficies of the Earth, and breedeth in the most secret partes thereof. So that Mines are oftentimes made like vnto Cavernes and Grottes; whereof, and likewise of Mines in the Mountaines, wee doe now purpose to speake.

The Indians, doe vse another kinde of meanes for the finding of Golde, which is much more dangerous; and is also obserued in those Countreyes; falselie called the West Indies: yea, it is likewise vsed in the Northerne Regions, towards the higher Suessia, Gothia, and partes of the Varines, all ioyning to the kingdome of Norway.

This manner of emptying Mines, is obserued in those that are pendant, to wit; Mines of the Mountaines. In which labour, diuers Engines are employed, and vaulted Tables vsed, to hinder the daunger hourelly to bee feared, because great perilles dooth ordinarily happen. For, some haue bene noted, in working to vndermine the Rocke, to be on the suddaine murdered, with the fall of great Stones, breaking out of the hollowe riftes. Others, that climbe and grapple along the sharpe steeple Rockes, with Doffers and Baskets fastened vnto their backes, seeking for the Oare of the Mines, to carrie it vnto the VVater, by beeing altogether vnable to holde their owne waight any longer, fall downe and are destroyed.

But, that this businesse might be put in execution, with much lesse daunger, some haue inuented a verie great wheele, guided and directed (in some places) by Horsses: but for lacke of such help, men do therein employ their strength and industrie. By the meanes of this wheele, they let downe and mount vppe againe, the Deluers and Diggers in the Mine; and those also that carrie the Oare to washing. This VVheele serueth likewise, to conuey away the VVater which the Diggers happen to light on, verie deepe in the Earth. Another great daunger which I do obserue in this search, is the noysome exhalations yssuing out of the Mines, whereby many people haue been stifled, not being able to endure so grosse an Ayre. Many times also, rauines and inuadations of water happeneth, suddenly breaking forth, by some ouerture of the source or Spring, and ouertaketh or rather surmounteth them sooner, then they can haue respite for giuing warning to them alofte, for drawing of them vppe. And therefore, those as bee employed in this laborious paines & trauaile, commonly are such as haue deferred the Halter: or else, they ovne Slaues, whose Liues are of lesse esteeme vnto them, then are some of their best Beasts.

How Gold is gotten out of pendant Mines which properly are called Mines of the Mountaines.

Great danger in the pendant or Mountaine Mines.

A commodious Wheele for ease of Workmen in the Golden Mines.

The noysome fauors & exhalations in Mines.

The qualitie of such as vndergoe the greatest daunger.

Other means and waies for the finding out of Gold.

Of Golde found within Brooks or Riuers.

Fishing for Gold, is better then washing the earth

The powerfull beames of the Sunne, createth gold

Gold hath his Originall in the superficies of the earth.

Wee are further to knowe, that the Golde which is found in the Indiaes, is not so much charged with Mettalles, as that which is hadde in Europe, Asia, or Affrica: because it is farre more pure, and yeldeth not so much labour to the Purifier. For that Golde of the Indiaes, is fined or purified only by fire: but that elsewhere (ouer and beside the fire) is beaten and re-beaten with the strokes of hammers; and then in the end, refined with strong Water. Also, rarely or sildome do they find any pure Gold in the Mine: but it is intermedled with Siluer, or some other Mettals.

As for the Golde in Graines, which is found in Riuers and perling Brookes, they vsed (in some parts) to gather it with the helpe of Sheepes skinnes, that hadde the Wool on them: but because it appeared to bee ouer-laborious, the vse of Quicke-siluer was deuised; whereby it is easily knowne among the sand. From which maner of trying or finding Gold, the Fable of the Golden Fleece was inuented, which Iason and his Argonantes, sayled for to Pontus. And hauing attained so farre as the Riuer Phasis, where the Countrey people found out and gathered their Golde, with such Wool skinnes: they deriued thence, many good Golden Arguments, and could tel store of Tales, at their returning home. But bee it how soeuer Iason and his followers Fleeced, and got all the Golde from the Colchians, which they had gathered for manie yeares together, with their sheep-skinnes: And then gaue it out in a mockery, that they had conquered and woonne the Fleece of Gold.

Gold in grainnes beeing founde in Riuers.

The Interpretation of the Fable of the Goldē-fleece

CHAP. XXXI.

Whence the diuersitie of Golde proceedeth: His Medicinable Vertues. Of visions and illusions that are mette withall in Mines. And of the deceite that is committed in the composition, which is called Aurum potable.

Some do hold, that in the whole vniuersall Worlde, there is but one kinde of Gold only; and that (generally) wheresoeuer it is found, or whence soeuer it commeth: if it be well refined and purified without any commixtion, it is continuallie good Gold. Also, that that which is drawne out of the verie coldest Regions in the world, is as good as that of the verie hottest parts. And that of the East is no more excellent, then the other of the West. But when Finers, Gold-smiths, and Monnoyers, do attribute diuersitie of Names thereto, esteeming one kinde to bee of much greater price and value then another (as we may note for example; one is tearmed Ducate Golde, another Crown Gold, another Maille Golde, or Or de Maille, another Pistolet Gold, valewing xxi. Carrats, another eighteene, and so of others; some more, some lesse:) Questionlesse, these Names and dignities, did receiue their birth and Original in diuers Countries, where Gold had bene adulterated and sophisticated, by the vnfaithfulness of Workemen, and multiplied with other minglings of Metals, of much lesser value, and farre inferiour in puritie to the other. Which multiplication, hath bene inuented, according vnto their will and humour, that laboured to augment our moderne Moneyes. As for Ducates, Crownes, * Philippus, * Angelots, and * Portugaloises, they were diuersly forged of pure and impure Gold, and the inuention hath not bene Moderne.

For wee finde, that from the time of the Romaines Greatnesse, the Commonwealth

Opinion conceived of one kind of Gold only.

Original of the diuers kinds of gold, and of their feveral terms by valewatio.

Multiplication began in Moderne monies.

* A Golden Coine worth iii. s. Sterling.

* Our English Argell.

* The Portegue, worth iii. li. x. s. Sterling.

mon-wealth being not able to supply the expences of their warres; did sometimes diminish the prices of their moneyes, for an ouer-plus gaine and aduantage. Likewise, they sophisticated their purest Siluer, enter-mingling it with an eyght part of Copper, onely because they wold encrease it.

Some (neuerthelesse) contrarie to the opinion of Antiquitie, and of many, verie skillfull in matter of Mettals, doe say the contrary, to wit; That the Easterne Golde is much better then the Northerne; and better in one Country then in another. Bvt as for my selfe, I holde the first Opinion, as being perswaded, that Nature neuer tooke delight, in making one Elementarie substance of gold, more fine or perfect then another. For, hee is so much the neater and purer in his qualitie, as the Elements are simple, whereof hee is framed or composed.

It is no shame then to vs, if we hold Golde in such excellent estimation, farr above all other Riches, and valew it in our iudgement, to bee more precious then all other Mettalles whatsoever. For, Nature consulting with her selfe, to compose it of an equall quantitie, truely correspondent to the Symmetric and iust proportion of the Elementes, yeeldeth it readilie purified from the verie Originall, according as the selfesame Elements were truely simple. And by Coniunction of those Elements, being in Vertue equall together, was engendered such a Delicate and perfect mixtion of indissoluble Vnion, composing the Connexion so intirely and faithfully: that it formed an incorruptible Paste or substance, which is permanent vnto all Eternitie both in goodnesse and excellencie.

And this is the cause, why it cannot bee Conquered by the iniuries of Antiquity, and that it will not containe in it selfe, neyther endure anie excrescence and superfluity of fowle commixtion. For, although it remaineth as buried in the Water, or in the Fire, for some long space of time: yet notwithstanding, it is neuer blemished, neyther receyueth anie other qualitie or defect, as I haue formerly sayde. This is the priuiledge, which is alone perticuler vnto Golde onely, above all other Mettalles what-soener. Now, albeit the Gracians haue spoken nothing of his properties and Medicinable vertues: yet the Arabians were not therein forgetfull, because they appointed it in prepared Medicaments, to euacuate fullen and Melancholie Humors.

Item, to make an actuall Caustic, especially in his Soueraigne qualitie, it must onelie be done with Golde: for the Wound which it maketh and Vlcerates, is much more the sooner healed. Golde held within the mouth, maketh the breath good and sweete. The Filidust of Golde, pounded or beaten smallest on a Marble stone, is verie good in such Medicines, as are giuen for the re growing of Haire againe, after it hath been formerly lost: or for Ring wormes and Tettors, when it is so small beaten, as it may bee scarce discerned vnder the Thumbe Naile: then putting it into the eyes, it is very soueraigne for clearing of the sight. It is drunke also, for a preseruatue against the accidents and dauntings of the heart.

Water, wherein an Ingot of Golde (made red hotte in the Fire) hath beene some few times quenched: or, wanting an Ingot, a Ducate, Portugue, or some such other thick and great piece of gold: that Water, mingled with wine, helpeth the Quartaine Feauer, purgeth the Melancholy humor, diminisheth the puffed vp Spleene or Milte, and is also a singulare remedy against the Dropsie.

Nor are those reports to be reputed as Fables, concerning euill Spirites or Demons, which haue bin seene and heard in Mines: for this is the most irkesom and dangerous thing, that hurteth and offendeth the poore Mettally Pioners. And manie times, they behold the rowling of great stones from the maine Rocke, their Engines suddenly broken all to peeces; their Ladders ouerthrowne, and the Cords (whereby they holde) broken in sunder; so that the parties fall beyond all recovery.

Others haue bin rapt and transported suddenly away, and neuer after eyther seen or heard of. These hurtful spiritis, are thought also to do them infinit small seruices, as to them that draw vp the Mine; and cleaue the great stones of the Rock, (which is thought sometimes impossible

The Medicinable properties & vertues of Gold.

Causticizing with Golde.

Gold maketh sweet breath.

Gold restoreth lost haire

Gold preseruethe eyesight, & conforteth the heart.

Gold quenched in Water, helpeth the Quartaine Ague & Dropsie

Spiritis haunting Mines, are verie dangerous to the poor Pioners.

Spiritis seruiceable for a while, and hurtful afterward.

Opinion contrary to Antiquity & men of skil in Mettals.

There is onely but one kind of Gold, and the reason to aproue it.

The purity of Golde from the first Originall therof.

Gold cannot endure an excrescence of fowle Commixtion.

to be done, without such strange help) & counterfeiting a thousand voices, with as manie Apish and fantasticke trickes, for the pastime and pleasure of such poore people in their labour. But verie soon after, except they be aduised and careful of themselves, a peece of the Rocke falls on their heades, and then this ioy is conuerted into teares and sad complaintes. And this happeneth more in the Indiæ, and amongst those Idolaterous people, then where any Christians are, or frequent.

More among the idolatrous Indians, then any wher els.

Belonius his Historie of a metallie spirit.

Belonius reporteth, that when he was in Greece, at the Mountaine of Syderocapsa, where the Mines are, that appertaine to the Turke: himselfe went to peepe in, at one of the spiracles or breathing holes of a Mine, which had formerlie beene, (but not for a long while) of great reuennue to his Maister, who was a Iew; but as then hee was constrained to forsake it, because it was haunted with a Mettallie Spirit. And because he had very often shewne himselfe, in the forme and likeness of a Goate, with faire and goodlie Hornes of Golde, they called that hole or Spiracle, Huaris Cabron, which was at the top of a Village, named Pianits, in the same Mountaine, and neer to the Brook, tearmed Rotas. But this was such a discontented Deuil, as none might be suffered to labour there, neither in company, nor alone.

An angry discontented spirit.

He affirmeth also, that in other Mines, there were diuers other metallie Spirits, that would doe no harme to anie of the Workemen, but helpe them many waies in their labours. Munster, who had visited sundry Mines in Germanie, records the verie same. To yeelde a reason for these matters, I cannot: but referre it to such as are better seene in such thinges, then I am my selfe: yet Saint Augustine speaketh verie amply thereof, in his book of the Cittie of God.

Aug. in lib. 9. de Ciuit. Dei.

But before I end this Chapter, I wold aduertise the well minded Reader, to beware of certaine gadding Emperickes or Mountebankes, making profession of Physicke, who giue vnto sickely people a kinde of powder, or a certaine liquor to drinke, which enforceth the bodie for to purge so violently both vppward & downward, that verie many haue died thereby. Concerning mine owne iudgment herein, I take it to be Antimonie, though they Deceite committed by Quacksaluers & Empericks.

please to tearme it, Aurum Potabile. For, if it were Gold, it could not do any harm: for whatsoever proceedeth of Gold, cannot but be good, and free from hurt. But vnder the shadow of his Sacred vertue, such Conseruers haue taken occasion, to commit thereby verie great abuses. As there are some also, that Nursing young Children after their owne manner, doo let them champe double Ducats in their mouths: and then their slauer or spettle is to be preserved: affirming it to be verie helpful to diuers diseases.

Aurum Potabile.

Yong Children driuell or slauer.

But because these are euident and apparant tromperies; I am of the minde, that it wil not passe any long time unpunished.

Thus you see, what I haue Collected out of manie good Authôrs, both Ancient and Moderne; as also the iudgement of approoued good Metallers, concerning the true History of this so excellent & much affected Mettal: which althogh it looke sometimes verie pale, it only proceedeth thorough the enuie and desire, that euerie man (Naturally) beareth vnto it.

CHAP. XXXII.

The Interpretation of those three severall Titles, Democratia, Aristocratia, & Monarchia, which are three diuers kindes of Gouvernement in a Commonwealt, to vnderstand which of them, is the best and most expedient.

Did purposely insert this Chapter, to declare the great error of manie in these our dayes, who beholding seditious troubles to offend the authoritie of Soueraign Princes (without any cause or subiect) in too manie countries and parts of Christendome; would haue Commonweales formed, according to their perticular affections, some being Democratiques, others, Aristocratiques, and are all vtter Enemies vnto absolute Monarchy. Nowe, because these three

The Authors reason for this Chapters inserting.

These three words not easily vnderstood by euery man.

The definition of Democracia.

Of Aristocratia

When this kind of gouernment is allowed.

Of Monarchia

The Soueraigne authority of Royalty.

Many things seeme good, that are not so indeed.

Their reasons that defend the way of Popularity.

three wordes are not easily vnderstood, except it be by such men as haue knowledge in the Greeke tongue; the courteous Reader shall finde my honest furtherance therein; albeit Monsieur du Verdier, Lord of Vauprinaz, hath written and related somewhat thereof, yet very succinctly. But I will alleadge the reasons both of the one and other, to the end it may be knowne, which of these kindes of Common-wealth is the best, and likeliest to be of longest continuance.

Democratia, or popular estate and preheminance, is a Common-weale, where the free and poorest (beeing the greatest number) do ouer-rule and command all the rest. Aristocratia, is that which we may interpret in our language, to be the power of the most vertuous, and in Latine, Optimarum Principatus: in regard, that they are reputed to be very good and vertuous, as commonly wee hold our best Gentlemen to be. This forme of gouernment taketh place, when as few Noblemen are approoued vertuous, either in learning or good manners; to sway the Soueraignete of the whole body, and minister Lawes to the rest of the people, as well in general, as in perticular. Monarchia, is that awefull authority, when one alone hath the sole power ouer all the people, both Nobles and others, commanding absolutely.

This forme of gouernment in any Common-weale, is called Royaltie. And me-thinkes, now that I haue giuen yee the signification of these three Titles: it would not much vary from our purpose, to set downe which of them is the most profitable to the people, tolerable, and of longest continuance. For many reasons and Arguments may be produced on either side, some whereof will seeme to be receivable: which neuerthelesse are not, and therefore I hold it fittest, to let them bee tried by open euidence.

First then, such as approue the estate of Democratia, or popularitie, will alleage vnto vs: that there haue been Democraties, of the very worthiest men in Armes, and that by the Lawes of the very greatest Iurisconsults, Oratours, and Artezans, there should not be any other Common-weales, where the faction of a few Lords among them, or

10

20

30

40

50

the ieaousie of one sole Monarch, should hinder the subiects in any great attempts. And, which is more, it appeareth, that the true note of a Common-wealth, should consist in a popular estate onely: for then, all the people enjoy the publike good, each man per-taking in common good fortunes, spoyles, wages, and conquests. Whereas a few Lords in Aristocratia, and one alone in Monarchy; conuert the publike benefit to perticular interest. In briefe, if there be nothing more to be desired, then that Magistrates should be obedient to the Lawes, and subiects to Magistrates: it appeareth also, that these may be best obserued in a popular estate, where there is nothing else but Law, who is the Lady and Mistresse of all. These are the principall points that can be alleaged, to vphold popular authority, which carrieth a goodly luster in apparence: but indeed, all these reasons are nothing else in effect, but meer Spiders webs, soft, gentle and cunningly wouen, yet of no validity or strength at all.

To refute that which hath been said, of a popular estate, or Common-wealth, we will begin with the first Allegation: that therein hath been found more Law-makers, Orators, good captaines, and Handy-crafts men, then in any other. It is very certaine, that the cause of so many Law-makers in this estate, proceeded from the contrarietie of Lawes, one repugnant to another, which Magistrates suffered to liue in suspence, during the time as they exercised their Offices; neuer caring or respecting, whether they were beneficial or hurtfull, but onely that some memory might remaine of them, after the expiration of their authority. This was an ordinary custome in Rome, as may be noted, when the Consull Cassius proclaimed by the sound of a Trumpet; that all the Latines and Hernians, which had no Houses in Rome, should auoide and get them gone. Virginus, his companion in rule, caused the contrary also to be published, to make the people capable of such a Law as he would promulgate, and to flesh the Inhabitants (in the hart of the City) against the Strangers. By reason of these two contrarie Lawes, some were found, that studied Generall benefit of the people.

Law the Lady and Mistresse of all.

A restation of the reasons formerly alleaged.

The cause why there were so many Law-makers.

Example of the Consull Cassius, and Virginus his associate.

The cause of such store of Captaines.

War is more beneficial for Souldiours, then Citizens

Of Oratours, and eloquent Speakers.

Ignorant people affect praises.

Confusion is among multitude of people.

Titus Livius in Lib. 7. et 8.

studied how to glose and accord these differences, and they that medled most busily therein, were termed great Law-makers. If (in this condition) such great Captains haue bin found; it grew by no other occasion, but that in such popular estates, ciuill Warres were orderlie very frequent. Heereof let Rome be a Witnesse, where oftentimes the people were beheld in a heape on the one side, and the Nobility on another side, sometimes in three deuisions. Or, if they had peace among themselues; then they were at Warre with their Neighbours. And indeed, through this continuall exercise of Armes, there were many good Captaines and Souldiours made; but with the dear expence of the Citizens blood and liues.

For Oratours, because any people that commonly are without Letters or learning, or any store of indgement, doe affect such as praise them; he that can best please by those meanes, tickling the eare with finery wordes: shall be sure to be esteemed among such people, and eloquence is very dangerous, except it be well vsed. For the attaining of which degree, Oratours haue ordinarily no other obiekt, but contend in the Art of Rhetoricke, who shall speake smoothest. And it is no matter of meruaile, if excellent Orators bee found in popular estates: for there was a Demosthenes in Athens, and a Cicero in Rome. Moreouer, to aske counsell of the people, as anciently it was don in popular Comonweales: were nothing else, but to request Wisedome from furious mad men, and it hath long past as a well knowne Prouerbe; Wise Men propound, and Fooles giue resolution. Moreouer, we know very well, that in an assembly of people, nothing can be kept secret, which is a most pernicious thing. The difficulties ensuing, by conuentickling a multitude of people in one place, the disorder among croudes and throngs, the variety of voyces, and inconstancy of men of many minds; all these I passe ouer.

The people, of their owne Nature (saith Titus Livius) are insolent and excessive in all liberty and licence, when matters goe well with them; and as dejected or downe-pressed are they, vpon the least losse: for vicious, and impudent men, are aduanced among them, but the honest and vertuous are thrust out by the eares. As for in-Iustice, the people say, let no care be had thereof: provided, that profit may bee deriued from iudgements, and sold to the fairest offerer: that good meanes may bee had, to ruinate, Rich, Noble, and honest men, hurrying them without any cause, but meere capitall hatred to such good mindes, contrary to the many-headed humour and Nature. For this cause, the popular estate or Common-weale, is the sourse and refuge of all turbulent spirits, mutiners, seditions, and exiles: who giue counsell, comfort and resistance to the sillier sort, to make hauocke and spoile of the greater.

But yet there is a more capitall plague, attending vpon those popular Common-weales, to wit: impunity of wicked persons, provided, that they bee Citizens, that is to say, petty Kinges. For in a popular estate of the Romaines, it was prohibited to all the Magistrates, on paine of death: to condemne a Cittizen to naturall or ciuill death, or to deprive him of his libertie or Bourgeship, or to whip him with Rods, were his offence neuer so foule. Yet we read, that Verres was accused, attainted, and conuined, to haue robbed, stolne, and committed an hundred thousand concussions, or publike extortions, and false iudgements: neuertheless, by parting out of Rome, & leauing a good moiety of those thefts behind him; he was quitted. And yet Rutillius, Metellus, Corio'anus, the two Scipioes, and Cicero, they could haue no better fauour then banishment. Ephesus also could banish the vertuous* Hermodorus: Athens expulsed iust Aristides: Themistocles died in exile; Miltiades in Pilsen; Socrates was put to death; and* Phocion, the most intire and vertuous man of his age, after he had bin chosen five and forty times chiefe Captain and Commaunder, neuer receiving any blame or taxation; yet notwithstanding without admittance of any answer, he was condemned to death, with forty other famous men, onely because they were his friends. States & degrees were there sold also, euen as they did at Rome: for Marius durst boldly bring Sumpters laden with Money, to buy the voyces of the people; and Pompey did the like.

Bad men aduanced, and good men no way regarded

A popular estate is the Nurse of infinite mischiefs

Titus Livius in Lib. 7. et 8.

Vices which doe ordinarily accompany popular Common-weales.

Offenders spared, and Innocents banished.

* He caused the twelue Tables to be made.

* He was Scholler to Plato and Xenocrates, and of wonderfull constancy & grauity.

Degrees and Offices bought with Money.

The

The concussions beside were an incredible matter, made in the face of judgement, and before the eyes of all beholders.

Much conformable to this, was that of Statocles, and Democrides, Athenians, who when they took possession of their Offices. Come on (quoth they) let us now goe to the Harvest of Gold. If then such estates, degrees, and Justice it selfe were so unworthily sold, in two such great Common-weales, enriched with the spoyle of other people: what then may men iudge of the popular preheminece, where the poore are alwaies needy, wretched and indigent? Wee haue an example of the Megarences, who hauing expulsed their Prince Theagines, established such an irregular populare government, that it was lawfull for the poore to liue in rich mens Houses, as Plato hath very well recorded.

Now we are to know, that if the Common-weales of the Romaines, Athenians, or others, hadde some time of flourishing: it was onely occasioned, by hauing (in those tempestuous daies) a Senate, full of men of honour, as also of worthy and vertuous Captaines, that kept the people from disordering themselves, and serued (indeed) as a bridle to them; As in Rome there a Mennius Agrippa, a Camillus, a Papyrius Cursor, a Fabius Maximus, a Scipio, a Cato, a Scaurus, and a Pompey. In Athens, there was a Senate of the Ariopagitas, And a Pericle (saith Thucidides) who was the true Monarch thereof, though in appearance it was meerly populare. In brieffe, the popular estate can haue no long subsisting; if there be not some especiall Wise-men, that haue an eye to the government.

But some will obiekt vnto me, and say: doe we not see the Lordes of Leagues and Confederacies, that they haue built vp a goodly popular estate, and continued in the government thereof, more then three hundred and fiftie yeares? Are they not also (by these meanes) warranted not onely from tyranny, but likewise haue ginen chase to Tyrants, insulting on their Neighbors? To a double demaund, we must needes returne a double answer. First, the Country it selfe, and naturall disposition of the people, is very conuenable for a popular estate. In the second place, they that are most quarrellous & mutinous, doe goe to the seruice of other strange Princes: the rest of the milder people, apt and easie to be ordered, they haue no great care how the State stands.

Moreouer, all the Lords of Leagues, and popular Common-weales, do enter into confederation offensive and defensive, and are vnitd strictly together: Not much vnlike to such as walke in darke nights, or goe ouer slipperie places, where is danger of downe-falls, they hold one another fast by the hand; and in this manner they maintaine themselves, against the power of Monarchies, as the Athenians and Thebans did in those elder daies. Yet one thing more may not bee forgotten, the foundation of their popular estate: was builded and cimented with the blood of Nobility, and of those that were the very richest.

Our auncient Predecessours, for the better assurance of their estates, did striue to equalize all their Cittizens in Goods, Honours, Power, and recompences, and if there were some one, more iust, more vertuous, and more wise then the rest: if he were not banished, he was vsed as badly, for al things possible was taken from him, euen as it was a common practise in the Common-weale of Athens. It is an act of great in-Justice, to take away the goods of a rich man (which he hath obtained by his care and industry) and make them equall to another, of no merit or worthy qualitie. It is also contrary to the Law of God, who hath expressely commaunded, that the proprietie of mens goods, should be kept to themselves. It behooueth not then to say, that nature made al things in common: for the law of the Mother, can no way be contrary to the commaundement of the Father.

And as for the power of commaunding, wherin popular men would equal one another: there is much lesse appearance then in goods: for wisdom and providence is not giuen by an equall distribution, and therefore (on meere necessity) election must bee made in a popular estate, of the most sufficient Magistrates, for the better commaund and Extortion & in-Justice committed in the iudgment place.

Example of the Megarences to their Prince.

Plato in lib. de Leg.

The reason why any popular estate hath some time of continuance.

Thucidides in Lib. 4.

Lords of Leagues and Confederacies, in their gouerning.

The reason why the common wealth of the Switzers hath continued so long.

A very apt comparison.

Equality is alwaies most respected in a popular Commonwealth.

Gods law for the propriety of mens goods.

Danger of electing Magistrates and Officers in a popular estate.

Equalitie of Authority in all men.

A remedy for the maintenance of popular estate.

Where lawes and ordinances are not feuerely kept, the state can hardly indure

and delivery of Iustice. But who is he then, that perceiueth not at first sight, that among men there are some, who haue lesse iudgement then brute beasts: yet others againe, who haue the diuine Character so clearly, that they appear rather to bee Angels, then Men? All which notwithstanding, they that seeke after equality; would haue authoritie giuen to furious, ignorant, and insensible Men, as well as to the wise, and best vnderstanding. For the voyce of such assemblies is not poyzed by weight, and euermore the number of Fooles, wicked and ignorants, is a thousand times greater then people of respect: therefore Salomon said truely, Hardly ye shall finde one among a thousand.

For conclusion, seeing it is not in the power of good Cittizens and wise politiques, to change the populer estate into Monarchie; the principall foundation of popular sway, consisteth in the strict obseruation of Edicts and Ordinances. For in as much as the popular estate is established, contrarie to the course and order of Nature, which bestoweth commaund and preheminance on the verie wisest: this appeareth incompatible to the vulgar people, who will not receiue any commaund in a collectiue name, neither set good lawes and ordinances before their eyes, as bright Torches for their better direction; therefore such an estate must needs be quickly ouerthrowne. And this is the reason, why those Lordes of Leagues doe so strictly keepe Edicts and Ordinances: otherwise, their estate had long since beene sunke. Now, in regard that this Chapter seemeth ample enough, and (I hope) not wearysome to the Reader: the matter of Aristocratia and Monarchia, shall be handled (by themselves) in the following Chapter.

CHAP. XXXIII.

That Monarchia ought most especially to be preferred, before Democratia or Aristocratia.

Y naturall reason, that Seignurie or Dominion is cald Aristocraticall, where there be many Cittizens, and the lesser part of them doe hold the estate: or more properly, where the best and woorthiest people are onely receiued and aduanced. And yet it may be saide, that soueraignetic ought to be giuen to the richest persons only, as to them that haue therein the greatest interest: considering also, that they beare much heauier charge then the poorer sort, who hauing nothing to loose, meere neede maketh them to forgoe authority. It appeareth then, that Aristocratia should be preferred before the popular estate, but not before Monarchia. And yet doubtlesse, they that doe well consider what Aristocratia is; will finde it full of maine incommodities. That it must needs be so, make some obseruation. In a great Common-wealth, ye shall haue many Lords that wil command, and the more Lords there be, the greater store of factions: among whom, deliberations being difficult to resolue on, they rather vanish away like smoake, then are seriously considered. For this cause is it, that Aristocraticall authorities haue bin much longer durable and assured, wher there haue bin the fewer Lords: As the Lacedemonians with thirty Lordes, and the Pharsalians with one and twentie, did long time maintaine their rule, but others not halfe the while.

It may be obiected vnto me, that they which gouerne the Aristocratical estate; must be prouident, valiant, wise, and rich. I answer, that it is very hard to finde such men there, but at length they will be touched with ambition: and if there happen any to be conscientious, or religiously affected; as commonlie they are the fewest in number, so shall they

The meaning
of the Aristocraticall go-uernment.

The reasons of them that maintaine Aristocratia.

The fewer Lords, the firmer go-uernment in Aristocratia.

An obiection and answer thereto.

they be sure to haue the lesse respect & partakers. In which regard, wicked and ambitious men gaining eminency; their conclusions passe for autenticall, and they may the easter tyrannize ouer the people.

But to be briefe, it is daily seene, that the more heads there are in gouerning, the more disputes there will be, and the lesse resolution. For this cause, and to shun the inconueniences before alleadged; the Seigneury of Venice, doe refer the managing of their State affaires to a dozen persons, but more often to seauen: especially, for the detaining of matters in secrecy, wherein lieth the soule and safety of any Estare.

Let vs put the case, that the private Council in Aristocrasia should be so secret, that nothing could touch the ayre or wind: yet it will bee a very difficult thing, for so few Lordes, to maintaine their estate against all the people, that haue no part at all in their honourable qualitie, considering, that euen the Lordes themselues doe continually despise popularitie, and the poorer sort also cary as cōtemptible hatred against great men. So that, thorough the meanest sedition of Lordes among them, (which is ineuitable, if they bee people of martiall stomacke and disposition) the most ambitious and troublesome, will fall into the peoples mercy, and then comes the downefall and ruine of Aristocrasia. And this was the onely occasion that ouerthrew many Seigneuries and Common-weales; as of Gennes, Sienna, Florence, Coloyne, Zuricke, Strafbourg, Lindaw: And the ancient * Phocenses, * Samians, * Cnydians, * Mytilenians, and many other.

If an Aristocraticall Common-weale haue warre against a Stranger, and doe come to the losse of a battel: the estate stands in danger, and as little assurance haue the Stangers also, fearing to bee foyled by the other. To which dangers the popular estate is not so much subiect, each man hauing a part & interest in the State. Aristocraticall gouernment then, is not onely in danger of Straungers as enemies: but also of the people, who must be contented, or restrained by power. To content them, without giuing them part in the estate is verie difficult: and impossible also to accept them in honorable charges and offices, without changing the estate of Aristocrasia, into popular rule. To restraints them by might, is no matter of certainty, or easie when to be performed: because it were an open entrance into feare and distrust of them, that rather are to be won by benefits and courtesie. For otherwise, the least warre of Strangers against the Seigneury, or of Lordes among them; will make the people vnder take Armes, onely to throw off the yoake.

For this reason, the Venetians (to maintaine their Aristocraticall estate) do bestow some small Offices on part of the people; contracting loue and alliance with them, & vse borrowings of them; to binde them the better for the States maintenance; yet wholly disarming them. And to the end, that they may be the more milde and plyable: they grant them freedome, and all kindes of pleasures, yeilding sometimes the right of Bourgeships, to the richest Cittizens. Also, if they haue War against a Stranger; they haue appointment therein, at what rate soeuer it be. But aboue all thinges else, they labour to quench partialities and hatreds among their Gentlemen, which procureth: that the rich beeing drunke with pleasures, and the poorer sort hauing meanes to Traffick, and exercise theselues in all Mechanical Arts, with commodity of the Maritimie partes, and naturall strength; they can haue no great occasion, but much lesse the power of rebellishing among themselues.

These are the onely meanes, which (next vnto God) hath principally maintained their estate: and not the Nature of Aristocrasia, as many haue imagined. And yet notwithstanding, within these foure hundred yeares, or there-about, they haue hardly out-stood many ciuill Warres and seditions, of the Bocchouians, Falerians, Tepolians, Baiamontanes, and cruell factions of the Iustinians, Scuolares, Selians, Bastianes; the murders of eightene Dukes, and a great number of Senators, as may be read in their own Histories.

If the worthy men that gouerned this Common-wealth, were generous and martiall minded: they seized the State, as Cæsar did at Rome, and as Sylla before him.

The inconueniences happening in the estate Aristocraticall.

The Seigneury of Venice.

An allegation concerning council.

The ruine & ouerthrow of an Aristocraticall estate.

* A little country of Greece, by the gulfe Criffens.

* An Isle before Ionia, ouer against Fphesus.

* A City of Cavia.

* A Cittie in Lebos.

People very hard to be ordered and kept in quiet.

The wisdom and discretion of the Venetians among themselues.

Partialities and hatreds qualified among Gentlemen.

Troubles happening within four hundred yeares.

10

20

30

40

50

Dauger of Martial Commaunders in an Aristocrati-
call estate.

The princi-pall foundation of Aristo-cratia.

The long continuance of some Aristocraticall Common-weales.

Care of new election is an especiall matter.

The discom-modities ensuing by Monarchia.

him. Or as Hanniball at Carthage, who mooued Warre against the Komaines, whereby he became the cause of ruinating the estate of his Countrey: in regard of the Barchian faction, which was quity contrary to him, and hindred, that men and succour should bee sent vnto him in Italy. We may perceiue then, that the principall foundation of Aristocratia, consisteth in the mutu-all amity of Lords: for if they agree and consent together, they will maintaine and gouerne much better then the people. But if there be any faction among them, there is no estate more difficult to be kept, for the reasons before specified; and namely if the Lords be Mar-tiall, for men of war doe brooke nothing so badly, as peace.

It is no maruaile then, if the Aristocra-tia of the Venetians, Ragusians, and Lucanes haue continued some ages: confidering, that they doe not addict themselues to armes, neither hold any thing in more recommendation, the Traffick, and vse of Mony. And, to speake all in one word, there is not any forme of Aristocratia more lightly or assured, then that which maketh choise of Lordes of reputation and vertue, or (at least) that are not infamous: especially when due care is had, of substituting another honest man, in the place of him that dieth, and by true election, as continuallie is done in Venice. Thus you see the commodities and discommodities of the A-ristocraticall estate: Let vs now speake somewhat concerning Monarchy, which all the best and chiefeft men haue commended before al other commonweals.

It may be objected vnto me, by such as approoue Aristocratia or Democratia, that in Monarchia, when the death of the Monarch happeneth: new desseignes doe thereon ensue, new Lawes, new Officers, new Friends, new Enemies, new Habits, and new forme of life. For Princes delight to please themselves, by changing and remouing (well-nere)
all things, to make speech of their own nouelties: which oftentimes causeth great discommodities, not onely to the Subiects in perticular, but likewise to the whole bodie of the Commonwealth, holding the forme of Monarchy.

If things do not fall out in this manner, but that the Prince is the wisest that can be wished: yet the alliances & loues made with the Predecessor, do v-sually end in him. And such fauours and respects beeing finished, Princes doe thereon betake themselves to Armes; and then the strongest assayleth the weakest, or (at the least) will giue him Law. Which cannot so fall out in Estates Popular and Aristocratical, where perpetuall alliances are made, confidering that the people dye not. This oc-casioneth, that those other Princes, and particulars, do continually affect rather to contract with a Seignoury, then with one Prince, for the assurance of Treaties and Obligations, whereto the Successours of Princes stand not obliged.

Moreover, Monarchies that make their Kings by election, do oftentimes fall into ciuill Warres, by diuisions among such as aspire to the Crowne, which draw after them the ruine of the whole Estate many times: considering that even in the right of succession, there is no meane perill, if there be di-uers in the same degree, who sometimes do murder one another, or make diuision among the Subiects, whereof too many examples are extant to our eyes; yea, it often falleth out, that the lawfull Successour is expulsed, by him that hath no right at all. But admit we the case, that there is not any contention in Monarchia, yet if the Monarch be a Child: there will be deuision for his gouernment, betweene his Mother and the Princes, or else among the Princes themselves. And if the Child haue a Tutour or Guardian, by ordinance of the Predecessour, or else by Custom: there is then some daunger, least this Guardian should make himselfe Sole Commaunder, which is the most to be feared, if he marry with the Mother of his Pupill. And although (to auoyde this daunger) the government be giuen to the neerest, and the Childes Nurfing to his Moier: yet notwithstanding, there haue some Mothers beene found to be Murderers, and haue not onely made sale of the estate, but also of their Childrens liues. And sometimes the Tutour continueth in the gouernment, and leaueth nothing vnto the King but the bare Titic: as the Fauours of one Prince,

sildome suc-
ceede in another.

The affection of Princes & particulars.

Of wars and their sources in Monarchia.

If the King
be a Childe, what dangers are depending thereon.

Danger in the Mother of the Prince.

The danger in Tutours and Guardians.

Vices whereunto Monarchies are oftentimes subiect.

Of a Martiall minded Prince.

A wife & well ordred Prince

Contrariety in the natures of Princes, & their severall dangers.

Tyranny filldome dreameth on maiesty.

Seditious, ciuill wars, and partialities for Offices, in Democracia & Aristocracia.

The right of Soueraignty is, onely in Monarchia.

the Duke of Northumberland did to the K. of England, Edw. 6. And as Apelles did to yong Phillip King of Macedon, who could not enioy his owne estate, till hee had slaine his Tutor. I know likewise, some one will tell mee, that many times it commeth to passe, when a yong prince attaineth to the Crown, he wil not allow the gouernment of Maisters, that are placed neere him for instruction, but bee ruled by his owne fansy, being addicted to Playes, Masques, and such like. In brief many times his Court shews like a meer Burdellae, falling into a thousand Vices, and the people following their Prince in imitation. If the Prince be a Soldier, he may expose his person and kingdome to many hazards. Admit that none of these afore said things doe happen, yet it hath bin obserued, that Princes being wise & well mannered, when they arise to the Monarchie, Soueraignty hath had this hard fortune, that the very wisest haue proued fooles, the most valiant turned coward, and the very best to be most bad.

If the Prince be subtle and wicked, he will establish tyranny; If cruell, he makes a butchery of the Commonwealth; If couetous, he will haue both the haire & the hide of his subiects; If Prodigall, he will suck both the blood and Marrow, to glut some dozen of Horse-leaches that attend about him. And if he be ignorant and sottish, then is tyranny so much the more to be feared, when as he hath neither Maister nor Companion that dare make head against him. These are the dangers that attend on Monarchies.

But yet there is much more perrill in the Estate Aristocraticall, and a great deale more too, in the popular condition: for these daungers which wee haue proposed, ceaseth for the most part, when the Monarchy is deuolued by successiue right. But seditious, partialities, and ciuill wars are ordinary, and continually (as it were) arising in greatnesse, for the vnder-handing of Offices in the commonweale Seignourall and Populary, then in the estate of Monarchy, which will endure no sedition for Offices, or for anie Estate, except after the Princes death, and but seldome then too. But the principall point of a Commonwelth, which is the right of Soueraignty, cannot bee, neither subsist (to speake properlie) but only in Monarchy: for none can be So-ueraigne in a Commonweale, but one only. If there be two, three, or more, the one is no Soueraigne, because one can neither giue, or yet receiue lawe of his companion. And although we may imagine a body of many Lords, or of a people, to hold Soueraignty: yet it is most certaine, that there is not any true subiect, or any support, if there bee not one head with Soueraigne power, to vnite one with another, which one simple Magistrate neuer can do, without Soueraigne Preheminance and authority.

The difficulties are daily noted, which continually haue accompanied popular Commonweales and Seignouries, when both the one and other do hold contrary parts, and by diuers Magistrates: Some calling for peace, others war; One will haue this law, another a quite contrary; One wil haue this man to be chiefe, another aimeth at his friend and pertaker, and the like in diuers other matters.

Moreover, in a Seignourall and Popular estate, the greater part are continually made to beleue things, howbeit, the wise and vertuous are alwaies the lesser number: by which means (diuers times) the more sound and better sort of people, are constrained to stoope vnder the greater, to please the appetite of som seditious fellow, or effronted Oration-maker: But the Soueraigne Monarch, hee can alwayes ioyne with the more healthfull spirited and meener part, making choise of wise men, and such as vnderstand the State affaires: whereas quite contrary, necessity compelleth the popular and Aristocraticall estates, to entertain and embrace both fooles and Wisemen together.

When the Commonwealt of the Romaines was in perrill; they made a Soueraigne Magistrate; according to which dignitie, hee had no Appellation, but commanded soueraignely, and they teamed him Dictator. The Venetians created a Prouidadore; the Lacedemonians an Harmoste, & each of them did so, considering Monarchia to bee the most assured estate. Me thinkes, that these reasons, and manie other, which might bee drawne in perticularly, are sufficient to shew, that amongst the three kindes of lawfull Commonwealt, the right of Monarchie is most excellent; and among them of Ryot and Disorder; the Imaginations are alwayes irrigular and offensive.

Contrary opinions in popular Commonweales, very hard to be reconciled.

Wise men constrained to stoope to Parasites.

Monarchia alwayes alloweth the best counsell.

Comparison by diuers commonweales.

Monarchia is more durable then all other kinds of Common-wealth.

Comparifon of both kinds.

Monarchia is figured and represented in the Stars, and in other Creatures.

Read the History of the Turkes, and there this example is at large related.

popular estate is the most vicious. Lawfull borne Monarchie, as a strong and potent bodie, may easilie maintaine it selfe: but populare qualitie, and Dominion of a few people (as being very weak and feeble) are subiect vnto many diseases, and must of necessity bee governed by dyet and prescriptions. Neuer were Aristocratiaes and Democratiaes seene to continue so long as Monarchiaes, which we finde (by writing) to haue endured a thousand or twelue hundered yeares, as those of the Persians; Assyrians, Medes, and others: but the Populary or Aristocraticall, three or foure hundered yeares onely.

Therefore, it shall be needelesse to insist any longer, in approving Monarchia to be the most assured estate: considering, that a Family (which is the true Image of a Common-wealth) can indure to haue but one head only, as wee haue approoued. And all the Lawes of Nature are our guides to Monarchy; be it, that wee respect the little Worlde Man, who hath but one bodye, and but one Head, as chiefe of all the other Members: on whom, dependeth the wil, motion, and vnderstanding. Or bee it, that we looke vppon the great world, which hath but one Soueraigne God. If we eleuate our eyes to Heauen, wee shall see there but one Sunne. If we descend to sociable Creatures, we may plainly perceiue, that they cannot suffer many kinges, or many Lordes, how good soeuer they be.

This is the very same example, which Solyman, King of the Turkes, vsed in Anno Dom. 1552. hauing heard the lowd acclamations and shouts of ioy, which the whole Armie made for the Sultane Mustapha his Son, at his returning from Persia. Commanding him to bee strangled in his Chamber of presence. When he was dead, he threw his bodie foorth before the whole army, and cried out aloud, There is no more but one God in heauen, and one Sultan on Earth. Two dayes after, he did put to death Sultan Gobeus, because hee wept for his Brother, and Sultane Mehemet the third, because hee fled away for feare, and would leaue no more but one only, to shun the inconueniences ensuing by many Lordes and Commanders. Euen so we haue beheld all the people vpon Earth, from the furthest date of Antiquity, and when they were guided by one light onely: to like nor allow of any other forme of Commonwealth, but absolute Monarchy.

An example deriued from Antiquity.

CHAP. XXXVII.

Of the Vertues & secret properties of the Nut-megge: That it was vnkowne to our ancient predecessors, with diuers obseruations, worthy due regarding.

HERE are manie things, which being ordinarily worn or carried about a man, do impaire & grow vnto lesse estimation: as som precious stones, which though they are of a hard and solide matter: yet notwithstanding they waxe old, and loose much of their valew.

There are very few things but they grow aged by vse, and lose their vertue.

Cinnamon, Cloues, and Pepper, borne about vs, do drie of themselues; and loose their sweet saour. Contrarywise, the Nut megge (on whose behalfe I haue written this Chapter, termed by the Latines, Nux mixistica) being worne or carried about a man, doth encrease it selfe, and becommeth much the better. I found this rare effect of Nature, in the lower Germanie, where the Inhabitants of those Countreyes, doth vsuallie hang Nutmegs about their Childrens necks; and being so worne five or sixe yeares together: they were then much more Oily and moyst, then they were the first yeare. After I had considered on diuers reasons inducing to this purpose, I could finde but one especially which I will declare: submitting my selfe neuerthelesse, to any other, that can alleadge a better, and more profitable.

Where the Author made his first obseruation of the Nutmegge.

Nutmegges (doubtlesse) beeing long time kepte in Spiceries, bee it in places dry or moist, and well packt vp together, do yet drie of themselues, become fustie, full of holes, and of bad tast, euen like to worme-eaten and rotten wood. Neuerthelesse, a young man bearing a nutmeg about about him, & exposed to the open aire; dooth encrease and make it much the better thereby.

How Nutmegs looses their Vertue and saour.

Now, to comprehend whence this proceedeth, we must vnderstande, that this is not proper to all Nutmegs, worne by all men indifferently: but it is to bee considered, of such as is about an infant or elder Childe, a youth, or anie other young man, not hauing attained to the age of fortie yeares, as commonlie the Belgians are, and those of the nether Germany, beeing of verie good habitude, euen as vulgarly they are. This is easilie knowne, by the goodlie proportion of their bodies, the chearefull countenance and complexion of their faces, and firm fleshinesse of their limbes, by their Ordinarie appetite to feeding, strong digestion, and beeing liuely disposed in all their ioynts and members; alwayes trauiailing couragiously, rarelie troubled with sicknesse or diseases, shunning and auoyding the riotous excesse, and lauish desire of gourmandizing, whereof they are verie carefull, mingling wholesome Spices continually amongst their meats; and scarcely anie one of them, but wearing some about them, especiallie Nutmegges.

The yonger sort do weare them about their Neckes, because they hold opinion: that they make stay of the Rheume which falleth downe on the stomacke, and is a grieue ensuing by ouermuch eating and drinking; suffocating thereby, the Naturall heate. And because such Nutmegs as are worne about the necke, for the space of foure, fise, or six yeares, (some more, some lesse) do neither wast or consume, but appeare to bee more weighty and Oily: it seemeth to proceed by this commendable temperance, from whence it exhaleth a vapour somewhat delicate and humecting, wherewith the Nut-megges (which they weare) are plenteously stored, which causeth that their Oily nature, cannot by no meanes becom dry, but rather is much the more encreased.

Nor is this to bee accounted any way straunge, because wee finde in Learned mens writings, that from the bodies of diuers personnes, haue yssued very sweet and odoriferous sweats. Among whom we read of Alexander the Great, whose Garments receyued a wonderful sweetnesse (as one recordeth) from his verie bodie, and so continued in them most pleasingly, without any other Arté or cunning. I my selfe sawe an Indian at Nantes, who though he was stark naked, and his bodie seeming of a wilde Oliue colour: yet, when mens handes were streaked thereon, they brought thence a sweete sauour, very answerable vnto Ciuit.

As for Maides and young Women, such matter is not acknowledged of them: and therefore I thinke, that the hinderance proceedeth from this, that Naturall heate is more imbecille, and of lesse power in them, then it is men; and their exhalation is nothing so temperat; and in regard also, that they are fuller of Excrements, as hath beene declared in the precedent Chapter. But if wee shall speake of aged people, they do resemble trees ouer-spent with yeares, full of Putrifactionous humors: which maketh them white-headed, wrinkled, and full of defects, hauing no more strength to grow or encrease, whereby to produce matter of anie worth. Otherwise, they are so drie, that no exhalation at all commeth from their bodies; for age is nothing els but a meere exsiccation of the Radicall humour, and an extinction of the Naturall heate. Whereby may appeare, that they can no way better a Nutmeg by their exhalation. The Reader may content himselfe (if he please) with this reason, which many learned men haue approoued, as well as my selfe. It shall now not be much amis, to discourse a little further of the Nut-megge, concerning the manner of his growth, in what Countreyes; and likewise of the faculties thereof.

That Nutmegges were vnknowne to our reuerend Auncients, is verie easie to be comprehended: because, neyther Theophrastus, Dioscorides, nor Galen, did euer make any mention of them. And it serueth to no purpose, to alledge, that they haue spoken of Maces: for, I say, that the Macer* of the Greekes, was not the Maces of the Arabes, which is a hide or skinned dooth cover the Nutmegge. And it is verie likelie, that if they had hadde anie knowledge of the Maces, questionlesse they would haue leste something Written thereof. Neyther could wee attaine vnto anie

A a a a know-

The reason how a Nutmegge is bettered by wearing, about a Child & yong man.

The ordinary disposition of the Belgians.

The reason why Nutmegges are worne about the necke.

The Sweates of some mens bodies are very sweete and pleasant.

A naked Indian at Nantes.

Concerning Maids and young Women.

Aged men or women haue lost their temperature.

A definition of Age.

Nut-megges and Maces vterly vnknowne vnto our Auncients.

* Not Maces, but a reddish Aromaticall and attringent Rinde of a certaine Indian roote.

knowledge in this case, till after that the Arabes had gotten vnto some authority, who taught manie medicines, vtterly vnkowne to the Grecians, because they were much neerer vnto the Indiaes then they.

A description of the Nutmegge and Mace Tree.

The outward Rinde of the Nut-megge.

The first appearing of the Maces, & alteration of their coullour afterward.

In what places the Nutmegge Trees doe vsually most grow.

The choyce of Nut-megs.

The Tree which beareth these Nutmegges, and the Maces is as great as a Peare tree, hauing the like Leaues, but shorter and rounder. It carryeth his Nutlike fruite, couered with a very hard rinde: which (when the ripening season is come) cleaueth or openeth of it selfe; and sheweth the filme or skinne, that encloseth the Nut-megge, like a seale or shell; and that is it which wee call the Maces or Mace. I meane not the exteriour or outward rinde, albeit (in diuers parts) they vse to Confect it with Suger, and is much commended in the Countrey where it groweth, that the smell & taste thereof, is verie wholesome against the paine of the Collicke, and the disease of the Reines.

The fruite being ripe, and the sayde rinde exteriour opening (like to the shell or scale that encloseth the Chestnuts of Lymosine;) the Mace appeareth as red as Scarlet, wonderfull goodly to beholde, especially, when the Trees are wel charged and laden, and beare more then is their vsuall custome. The Nutmeg drying, the Mace still keepeth close and fast about it, till loosing his red colour, hee begetteth another, which is like a Golden Complexion: And these Maces are solde at three times dearer rate, then the Nutmegges.

This Tree that beareth these Nuttes, groweth in one of the Islands of the Molucques, which is called Bandano. It is found also in diuers other places, as in Banda, Bandornica, Herma, Tharod, Machedad, Lyzamath, Cares, and in Zeylan, which are the most fruitfull Landes, and better then anie other. The people of the Countrey do vse to gather them, some more in one place, then in another, according as they can get them: for, in the most parts of all the Islands, all things are in common, without any priuate claime. This is affirmed by Garcias d'Horta, who trauided himself into those parts.

They that be fresh, and not drie, withered or worme-eaten, are the best nutmegs; likewise, they that were waightie, masie, oyle, & abounding in moisture: so that by pricking them with a pinne or Needle, they send forth a sweete fauour. Nutmegges (according to the Arabians opinion) are hot and drie, in the second degree compleat: they are astringent, & (by champing in the mouth) doe make the breath sweet: they take awaie spottes and blemishes out of the face, sharpen the sight, and strengthen the Liuer and stomacke: they diminish the Spleene or Milt, prouoke Vrine, stay the course and Flux of the Belly, expelling all Windnesse, and helpe greatly against the Disease of the Mother, proceeding of Frigiditie. In briefe, they haue the very same Vertues and properties, as the Cloaues haue. Nutmegs do yeilde a licquor or iuice, being freshly pounded, heated in a pan, and presently pressed: which iuice being let stand til it be cold, becommeth like virgin wax, and senteth very sweetly. This vnguent is very soueraigne for cold Gowts, and to make a man gracious in the fauor of Ladies. Thus much haue I gathered concerning the Nut-meg.

Naturall properties of the Nut-megge.

A soueraigne Oyntment made of Nutmegges.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

A Paradox purposely written in the defence of Warre, approving and maintaining it to be much more famous, honorable, & meritorious of commendation, then Peace.

Ecause many sufficient men haue (heeretofore) verie plentifully discoursed, on the praises of peace among which, wee haue Erasmus Roterodamus, Romulus Amaseus, Claudius Ptolomeus, and Adriano Bentiuoli; all of them (with others of no lesse elegancy) hauing spoken soundlie, and to the purpose, as being Orators of no lesse learning, then fluent and eloquent in the tongues: the two first in Latine, and the other in the Tuscan language, all hauing discretely employed their paines: yet notwithstanding, al their defences bestowed on the behalfe of Peace, I cannot forbear to maintaine the contrarie, and Such Authors as haue written in the defence of Peace.

Opposition made against the former defences.

and will approue with resolu'd corage, that they haue done mightie iniurie vnto themselves, in making such description of commendations, by multiplicite of ydle arguments, which now I will not trouble my selfe withall, either to improoue or confute. But so many onely will I produce and aduertise yec of, as shall happen to my memorie, in fauour of honourable combustion & war, and appeare to the manifest discredite of Peace.

The apparant harmes and iniuries ensuing by Peace.

For the first of my reasons, I say, that in the time of Peace, Militarie Discipline is lost, and commeth to nothing: which (neuerthelesse) hath beene at all times in reckoning, and allowed as a matter most necessarie, for Conquest, enlarging and conseruing of Empires, Prouinces, and the verie greatest and ciuilest Iurisdiccions thoroughout the world.

* A Field ten miles distant from Athens, where Thebes slew a terrible Bull.

Witnesses heereof, are * Marathon Salamina, * Thermopye, * Platee, * Leuce, and many other places, not meanelly renowned by the Heroycall Actions of Armes. By the meanes of warre, Horatius Cocles was made immortall; and the three Decij helde for three Demie Goddes. Hence arose the great & infinite praises (so sweetly sung and Celebrated by Poets, and our ancient Historians of both the Scipios and honourable Marcellus. To whome, I would gladlie see who can be iustly compared, vnder Correction of whatsoeuer hath beene said by fore-named Authours, in honour of their Gowne-men, the onelic especiall louers and faouers of peace.

* A long Mountaine passing from Leucadia, through the midst of Greece

* A Towne of Beotia by Cytheron neere to Thebes.

* A Towne in the borders of Ionia, and an Isle called Achillea in Pontus.

We see also by experience, that (welneere) all auncient Statues or Figures, both were and are formed in military habits. And it was not lawfull (by the customes of all elder and noble Nations) for a Citizen to weare any other Garment, then a party coloured coate: vntill hee had slaine, or (at least) vanquish't two of his Countreyes enemies. In this case, the Carthagenians had a most notable obseruation; for, looke how manie times a Soldier had beene seene in the face of the enemy so many Plumes, helmets, or Horsses, should bee bestowed vpon each seuerall man: but contrarywise, as often as they were absent from the field, so manie Larbes and Capons wer sent them, as remembrances of their Auncient customes for the habits of Citizens.

Worthy encouragement for Soldiers: and as great disgrace to Cowards.

cravenly cowardise. Li' ewise by publick agreement, it was not lawfull for any ma to marry, except hee had first seru'd in sundry foughten battailes, or performed some one or other honourable exploite, in the defence of his Country.

Law for marriage.

10

Let vs consider the great honor which Warre maintaineth euen to this verie instant, to such as either haue or do bear Armes for safety and defence of our holy Christian faith. In memorie whereof, Noble and famous Orders of Knight-hood were aunciently established. As Knights of Ierusalem, of hodes, of Malta, of Saint Iames, of Holie Lazarus, of Iesus Christ in Portugall, of the Round Table, and of the Garter in England, with diuers other Dignities for Religious warfare, onely for the performance of meruailous and excellent Actions. Whereas contrarywise, the mindes that were thus fired to haughty atchieuements, in the sloathfull times of peace, would too easily (euen of themselves) be conuerted to proud and insolent attempts.

Honour perpetuated by deedes of Armes.

Orders of Knight-hood to eternize the memory of Armes.

20

30

To prooue this true, that they which in the times of Warre, doo accomplish deeds of Vertue; and in the dull daies of peace) fall into quite contrary behaviours, we may perceiue by great Marius, the Conqueror of the Cymbrians. When warre did set an edge vpon his true temper, he had not his equall for valour and prowesse: but, in the trifling times of peace, he was the most wicked and dangerous man in all the Countrey. In like manner, wee shall finde it for most certaine, that Peace quenchereth whatsoeuer is good in anie man; and quickneth or giueth life vnto all such thinges, as are in him most hurtfull and dammageable.

Examination of the several times of War and peace.

Peace the quencher of all goodnesse in men.

40

50

Let mee moue a question (in meere Courtesie) vnto such as are the greatest blamers and depraers of warre. What can they call Hatreds, Quarrelles, and Seditions, but the onelic true and perfect Instruments, whereby Nature oftentimes helpeth to perfourme manie verie lawdable actions? Ye may imagine, that it was not without very great reason, that VVarre (by the Latines) was called Bella, Fayre, Pleasaunt, and Commodious: for such indeede is the true Nature thereof, albeit our new vstart gaine-sayers dooth affirme, that Concerning Hatreds, Quarrels and Seditions.

The name giuen to warre by the Latines

it is meant in a contrarie sence. But if it were lawfull, to compare the losses in peace, with them that ensue onely by warre: the report would be pittifull, and the remembrance verie Tragicall.

How many goodly Armies haue bin broken, defeated and destroyed, by the meanes (I will not say of peace) of truce onely? Which, though it bee Warres neereft Kinsman, yet it is sworne enemy vnto all Vertue and Valor. The strength and powers of Truce, ministers the meanes (euen as Peace doth) to lessen and impaire Citties, Townes, and whole Prouinces, by straunge Lawes and Ordinances: beside, it engendereth infinit secret hatreds, and vpholdeth Princes in roughnesse and seueritie against their Subiects. In time of peace, the dispositions of men, which (but for it) would be highly exalted with enflamed desire to expresse their brauerie and roialty, do become sleepe, drowsie, pensue, slothfull, lasciuious, and effeminate.

But to prooue that Warre hath bin faouered and esteemed by our Lorde God himselfe, tell mee (I pray yee) was he not called by the Children of Israell, The Great God of Battailles, The Lorde of Hostes and Armies? Looke in the Olde Testament, how manie mightie ouerthrowes and slaughters were executed in his Name, vpon them that were the Aduersaries of his people? Howe manie were slaine by Moyse, Iosuah, Gedon, Sampson, and diuers other? Howe manie slew Abraham, Dauid, Indas Machabeus, and they that wer in those times? What shall wee say of Saint Michaell the Arch-Angell; who (euen in Heauen it selfe) made such a sharpe Conflict against the Draggon? And, to continue on this discourse, euen to the New Law, if GOD had beene displeas'd with Warre, would hee haue commaunded his Apostles to sel their cloaks, and buy each of them a Sword? If Saint Iohn Baptist, had hated Soldiers, or Militarie Discipline, would he haue appointed them this Law and Ordinance (when they demaunded of him, what way they should take, whereby to attaine to the saluation of their soules) That they should content themselves with their Wages, and not rob or pille from the poore people. Hee would then rather haue commaunded them, to leaue that estate, and betake them vnto some Hermitage; or else, to deale in some affayres of Merchandize, or in some such like employments. No, content your selues (quoth hee) in your Garrisons with your ordinarie pay, and offer no shame, violence, or extortion, to any one. For your calling (which is the Art Militarie) will not let or hinder ye from your saluation: because manie of your profession, haue thereby wonne their safest security.

This in briefe, and in my conceipt, is that which blessed Saint Iohns words intended, if I bee no bad Paraphrast or Interpreter. If hee had beene willing to discommend Warre, yet he wold haue forborne it: perceyuing what pride and insolence was crept into rich mens mindes, during the pampring daies of peace and no way so soone to be cured or corrected, as by the worthy discipline obserued in warre.

How many haue beene obserued, of great Gentlemen, Merchants, Countrey-men, and other of all conditions, who were woont to bee most proud and arrogant: suddenly to become kind and tractable, onely by meanes of the bridle of Warre? This is it, which deliuereth vs from a number of mishaps by theeuers ydle Vagabonds, Gamesters, Pipers, Players, young Rogues, Cozeners, Ruffians, and High-way watchers. It serues to whet and waken the spirites of Men, making their bodies to become more strong, light, nimble, patient; yea, and emboldened against all hard and sinister fortunes.

Consider the sweetnesse and delight which the Cymbrians founde in VVarre, vsing it as the Conseruation of theyr Countrey: and when they went to fight, they would sing as chearefullie, as if they had beene going vnto a wedding. Imagine what pleasure was taken therein by furious Hanniball, Valiaunt Marcellus, Vertuous Scipio, Couragious Camillus, and that Victorious Alexander.

I say moreouer, whosoever is ignorant in taking good order for publique affayres, there is no place or Schoole, wherein hee may more easily attaine thereto; then by noting the preparation and conducting of an Armie. Besides, whosoever knoweth not the deceptes, sleights, and trickes of ingenious prudence,

Famous Armies destroyed by the meanes of truce.

Princes made rough and stearne to their people, by peace.

Warre, faouered and allowed by god himselfe, and what names were giuen him.

Examples alleaged out of sacred Scripture in the old Testament.

Examples out of the new Testament.

The implication of S. Iohns words to the Souldiers, according to the authors interpretation.

Warre is the only bridle to many notorious insolencies and abuses

The Cimbrians had a great felicity in Warre.

Warre the Schoole for publique affaires, and ingenious prouidence.

dence, or how to stand vpon his garde, to know what he should auoyd, and what he ought principally to followe: let him but liue in war a month or two for pleasure; and in that time he shallern more then all the Bookes of Peace shall euer be able to teach him.

Furthermore, hee that couets to vnderstand the true Nature of inuiolable obedience, strict diligence, incomparable vigilance, vnspeakeable promptitude of heart, and inestimable strength of the bodie: let him but vouchsafe so much leysure, as (for a while) to follow a field well manned and prepared, there to obserue carefully, what hee may behold for his owne benefit. If hee finde not himselfe well satisfied; yea, & more then contented in verie few dayes, I will yeeld, and loose my credite in this cause. Which therefore shall serue me to conclude withall, maintaining still that war is to be preferred before peace, as deerly beloued, and with choicest praïses commended. Beside, our Prayers should continually bee made to God; to create such chearfull hearts in our Princes, that wee may not any long time, remaine in want, of such a precious and vnualueable Jewell.

CHAP. XXXIX.

Of the Indian Beare: And of those Beares in our owne Native Countreyes, howe different they are in their severall Natures.

Nature hath verie many times expressed hir care and prouidence (as a dutifull handmaid attending on God) whē there are any store of hurtfull creatures in some country, that may impeach the inhabiting of men, or Liues of other beasts and animals, to engender some other of contrary kinds, to destroy the ouer-abounding of such harmefull things. As we may obserue in Serpents, which do deuoure vp Toads & Lizards: Serpents also themselves, are eaten by Storks, and many times they themselves do feede one vpon another. Cats also do deuoure Rats. and so in diuers more beside. I speake this the rather, because we finde recorded in the generall historie of the Indiæes, that in Quiloa, a certaine Countrey of the New-world, there are such extraordinarie swarmes of Antes, that they consume the seeds and rootes of all Trees and plants. So that, if there were no Beares; which Nature in especial fauour hath there appointed, and in great plentie) ther could not be any possibilitie of dwelling there, because they would make the Countrey to bee quite barren.

The Beare of this Region, liueth only (without anie other foode or Pastorage) by eating those Antes, whose beddes and Nests hee easily findeth, and so with his tongue (which is verie broade and large) hee is so quicke and readie in licking of them vp, that hee is onely nourished by them. There are also great store of those Bears, but they are not fierce, wild and harmefull, as those in other partes: for they will not set vpon men; neyther mount vppe vpon Trees, to deuoure the young sprouts and fruites, but are verie easily made tame and tractable by the Indians.

There is no need of plucking out their eyes, or boaring their lippes, to thruste Rings of Iron thorough them, onely to tame them. For euen of themselves, they are (well-neere) Domesticall: and, if it were not for these Beares, neither men, and great store of other creatures, could not liue there: but they encrease in those parts so abundantly, that they suffice to destroy the plentie of Antes; in which respect, the Countrey may well account it selfe to be most happy.

I haue not well bene informed, whether it bee the Nature of the Beares in this Countrey; that (according as hath bene reported) the shee-Bear yeildeth or whelpeth a Male of Flesh, without anie forme or apparance of life: and that the Damme, onely by the Vertue of licking, giueth it true shape.

Of this opinion, were manie Learned and graue men, as Aristotle, Plutarke, Plinie, Elianus, and Du Bartas: but it is a manifestt error, as experience hath plainly declared vnto vs, because in manie enclosed places of Germanie, and of Francoe also, Beares of both sexes

A a a 3 are

Quiloa a Region in the New-found World.

The Indian Beare feedeth on Antes only.

The Indian Beare is gentle and tractable.

The error of Aristotle and many other learned men beside.

Lessons to be learned in a Field of Battale, for any mans benefit during life.

The conclusio

All kinds of Creatures haue their contraries appointed, to appease their hurtfulness.

A strait obseruation by Nature.

are kept, which haue engendered young ones, verie well formed in all their members. For, it is an order, obserued by nature verie strictly in our terrestriall Animals, that in theyr passage out of the Matrixe, they are fully compleated in all their parts, without any need of further forming, encreasing verie well in those three dimensions, length, largeness, & depth.

Concerning teeth in yong Infants, that they are not bred after their birth.

It serueth to no purpose, to alledge, that Childrens teeth are engendered or formed after their birth. For I answer, that they bring then with them from the Mothers wombe: as I haue seene in the dissection of many young infants, newly borne and dead, whose gummes being opened in the pit'es and hollowes of the Iawes, the Teeth haue bene plainly found.

A view of young whelps in the Dams belly.

But indeede, no outward appearance is made of them, vntill certaine moneths determined by Nature; in which time, they grow greater and stronger, & pierce their passage through the gummes. For mine owne part, in the Mountaines of Saint Claude, in La franche Comte de Bourgogne, I haue seene a shee-Bear flaine: whose Belly being presently opened, three young Whelpes were there found, fully formed and hairy, and (as I thinke) verie soone to haue bene whelped, and that which is affirmed by eye-testimony, I hope hath no neede of further probation. Scaliger, a great Physition and Phylosopher, also affirmeth; That he being once at the taking and killing of a Shee-Bear on the Alpes, the young Whelpes in her belly were found to be wholly formed, as I haue formerly iustified by mine owne sight.

The testimonie of Scaliger

How long time the Shee-Bear goeth with her yong and manner of her whelps.

Plinie saith, that the thirtieth day after her conception, the shee-Bear deliuereth her young ones: but Elianus sayeth, within three moneths after, which is the more likely and credible, because all great creatures, do beare their burthens longer, then such as are small and little. When they are broght into the world, they are about the bignesse of Weezels: and there is good apparance, that they can be no bigger, because they are carried no longer time, as Kine doo theyr Calues, Mares theyr Foales; and other great Beasts their young ones; and these Shee-Bears hath commonlie three or fve.

10

20

30

40

50

So soone as shee hath conceiued, she commeth no more into the males fight. VVhen desire of coupling with the male is kindled in her, shee is so greatly ashamed thereof: that she hideth her selfe in the remotest obscure places, and the male neuer seeketh after her. At length, being pressed by Nature, and desire of generation, shee commeth to finde the male, and tumbling and playing before him, lyeth directly vpon her backe; and so hee coupleth with her, euen as men and women vse to doe. And this is the reason, why it should not bee accounted so straunge, that Beares haue had actual dealing with VVoimen, wandering thorow the Forrests and Mountaynes, and conceyued by them, as I shall declare more at large in the next following Chapter.

They helpe themselues with their Pawes and Feete, euen as men do with their handes and feete; for, they can goe vpright along while together, and hurle or throwe stones with theyr foremost Pawes, smite with a Staffe, and whatsoeuer else themselues will doo, as well as we.

They are almost continuallie troubled with paine and Ache in the head, and in such violent manner, that oftentimes (as madded therwith) they throw themselues downe from very high rocks their heads going forwardes, covering their eyes with their pawes, because their sight is verie feeble, and by covering their eyes, they seeme to find some ease.

They espie out such places, where Bees doe make their Honie and VVax, onely to make them angrie, and to the end, they may bee pricked and pierced by the Bees stinges, both in their heade, and about their eyes: wherby their sight is amended, and their head greefe much asswaged. They feede indifferently on all kindes of Foode, be it Flesh, Fruites, Hearbes, sprouts of Trees, and Honey. They will assaile and kill (if they can) all wild and sauage Beasts; as Harts, Hinds, Boares; yea, and VVilde Bulles manie times.

The Shee-Bear feeling her selfe to be bagde, or conceyued with yong (which most commonly is in the winter rime) with-draweth her selfe into her Caue, which shee prepareth in a strong defended

How the Shee-Bear coupleth with the Male.

Beares haue dealt carnally with womē.

Actions performed by Beares.

Beares troubled with head-ach.

Beares haue bad eye sight, and how they helpe it.

The feeding and hunting of Beares.

When the Female is bagde with yong.

How long time the She-Beare fasteth, and of her comming forth of her Cave.

fenced place, far from common resort,
and well covered with earth, boughes, and braunches; entring thereinto alwaies backward, because it should not be knowne, or found by Huntsmen.
There she remaineth forty daies together, without any food or sustentation; doing nothing else, but licke her right paw, whereby she liueth all that while.
Afterward, she commeth forth againe, and then eateth all the Antes she can come by: yet not for any nourishment (like to to the Indian Beare) but onely to prouoke her to vomit, to the ende that she may feed the better. Which when she hath done, she then seeketh after food, and because she hath continued the space of forty dayes, and eaten nothing: her intestines are fast clinged together; so that, no meate can haue entrance, but is instantly cast vp againe, and therefore she eates the Hearb called
* Aron, which gineth dilatation and open spreading to her bowels againe.

As for her Whelpes or young ones, they do not teate or sucke, like to other Creatures, because Munster reporteth
(but I know not from whom) that one Demetrius a Moscouite, who was sent thence as an Ambassadour to Rome, declared for a certainty to some perticuler Men of credit: that in his Countrey of Mosconia, there were great store of Beares, big in stature of body, and very fierce, that after their birth (for the space of foureteene daies) liued without eating any thing, continuing in so profound a sleepe, that nothing could waken them, no, though they were prickt and pierced very deeply. After that time is passed ouer, they do then awake, and fal to licking of their formost paws, and lue (onely by this licking) till the Spring time, when they begin to come abroad with their Dammes, and nibble on tender Hearbs, as they see them do.
Now, to speake vprightly, I can hardly be induced to beleue this, because Nature hath giuen Breasts, or Dugges to She-Beares, as I my selfe haue seene, and then they should haue their Milke in vaine.

Moreover, that if they be pursued by Hunters, hauing their young ones in their company, and they vnable to escape, in regard of their weaknesse:
the Damme carryeth some on her back,

and one in her mouth, and so climbeth vp vpon a high Tree, to preferue her selte and them in this manner. This maketh me to remember, that which is recited by Ælianus, of a She-Beare and two Lyons.

He saith, that he heard it reported by one Eudemus, that a She-Beare of * Pangæus, a Mountaine in Thrace, chanced to finde a Denne; wherein were young Lyon-whelpes, and neither the Sire or Damme there present, to defend them from this She-Beare, therefore she killed them, & afterward departed thence.
Within a short while after, the Lyon and his Lyonnesse returned to their den, bringing preyes to nourish their young Whelpes withall: but finding them dead, and gathering (by their sente) how they were murdered; they instantly pursued the She-Beares footing by the smell, and discerning her a farre off, drew neerer and neerer still, deuising their best meanes, how to en-trap her. Which the She-Beare also perceiuing, and knowing her strength farre in-sufficient, to deliuer her from these displeased Lyons: forthwith shee began to climbe a Tree, and got vp to the very top thereof. These enraged Beasts seeing they could compasse no amends from the murtheresse; tormented themselues exceedingly, and the Lyonnesse lying downe at the foote of the Tree, kept it as besiedged, to be reuen-ged on her Enemy. But the Sire or male Lyon, he ran vp and downe from Hill to Dale, making the Mountaines to tremble with his loud out-cryes, and all the other Beasts to be very fearefull. At length, hee lighted on a man a Wood-feller, who was hewing downe a Tree in the Forrest, and perceiuing the Lyon to make towards him; with extrean-ity of dismay, the Axe fell out of his hands, and faine he would haue fled for his owne safety. The Lyon approaching neere vnto him, made signes of humble and gentle fawning on him, and in such pleasing manner, as we see Dogges to do: licking his hands and garments, oftentimes prostrating himselfe at his feete, euen as if he implored his help in some vrgent occasion.

At length, he took him by the cloaths with his teeth, as if hee would bee his guide and conduct to some place, often patting

*Ælianus in lib.
3. cap. 30.*

* A Promontory of Thrace

A strange History of a She-Beare and a Lyonnesse.

Beasts discouer the killers of their young ones, by their sente or smell that did the deed.

The Lionnesse
lyeth downe to beleager her enemy.

Admirable humanity in Lyons, to doe themselues good.

* Call's foot,
Ram Starch
wort or Cuce-pint.

Fab reported Demetrius Moscouia ambassadour to Rome.

ture hath en breasts dugges to e Beares.

hen a She-are & her ung ones
e pursued.

The Lyon giueth directions to the mā, to goe along with him.

As expressing what losse in nature he had sustained, by so euident a testimony.

The She-Bear dismembred in many pieces.

The Beare useth to eate the flesh of no beasts, but such as he himselfe killeth.

Munster. ex Demetri.

A pretty History, and no way vnlkely, of a mans life saued by a Beare.

patting his paw vpon the Axe, that the Wood-feller should take it vp againe : which the fearefull man being not able to comprehend (though the beast still vrged it by diuers perswasive signs) the Lyon took it vp with his teeth, and carried it himselfe. So, winding his taile about one of the mans legs, he conducted him, first to the place where the young whelps lay murdred, which was not far from the Tree whereon the she-Bear was mounted. Thither also he brought him, and the Lyonnesse seeing them comming, she arose (with chearful disposition) to meete them, equalling, or rather exceeding the Male Lyons affability to the Man. In brieft, both the beasts made such apparant signes to the Carpenter, that hee not onely saw the She-Bear aloft on the Tree; but gathered also by their moanes, that shee had killed their young Whelpes, and therefore they would haue him to cut downe the Tree; because, by no means else, they could be auenged on her. The man did quickly cut downe the Tree, & as it fell, so did the She-Bear: which was so sooner on the ground, but instantly they rent her in infinite peeces, returning many gratefull signes to the poore Carpenter, and conducting him safely to his former working place againe.

But returne we now againe, to the naturall disposition of the Beare. He will neuer eate the Flesh of any Beast, which he findeth dead, or readily killed for him. It is saide also, that if a man counterfeit himselfe to be dead, and retaineth his breath while he smelleth to him; hee will not doe him any harme. He driueth all Rats out of his Denne, and will not abide therein, if there bee but one left in it. He will neuer eate any Hony out of the Hine, where he findes the Bees to be dead.

Munster declareth (by direction from the fore-named Demetrius) that a Beare saued the life of Man, in the very remotest and vastest Forrest of all Moscouia, in the yeare, one thousand five hundred and thirty, and after this manner. A man inhabiting in a neighbouring Village, went into the Forrest to gather Waxe and Hony: because in those Countries, the Bees vse to make their Hony in hollow Trees in the Forrests, whereof there are no meane number, and hee thereby maketh his best benefit, that is most diligent in searck, and getteth the greatest quantity.

The poore Countrey-man, standing with his Legges extended abroad in a hollow Tree, for his better gathering of his Hony-Combs: the slender hold (which supported his feete) chanced to breake, and downe he fell further into the hollow of the Tree, till hee was vp to the Chin in Waxe and Hony; destitute of all strength for helping himselfe, or hope of any succour, because no Passengers frequented that way (at least-wise, very sildome) that might heare his wofull complaints, so that he continued there for the space of two daies.

Now, it fortun'd, or rather, the especiall Grace of God so directing, that a Beare came by the Tree, and smelling the Hony, climbed vp the Tree, and descended downe to the place where the poore man was. The Beare being fearefull when he beheld the man, turned to get vp againe out of the Tree: but the poore man caught hold on one of his hinmost feet, and held so strongly with both his hands, that the Beare brought vp himselfe and the man out of the Tree, and both fell downe together on the out-side of the Tree, somewhat astonied with the fall, but no way hurt, the Beare returning into the Woodes, and the man to his home. Thus the Beare saued the poore Countrey-mans life, without declaring any signe of hurting or offending him.

Bachiles Anchisus saith, that in the Northerly Countries, there are white Beares, that liue both in Waters, and on the Land: beside, that either with hurling stones, or branches of Trees, or with their clawes, they will break open the Ices in Riuiers, and in the Sea, only to catch Fishes to feed on. Moreover, that they are not so malicious or harmful, as other Beares are, neither are lustfull, or seeking after women: As one, whereof I am now to speake, and whereby a Lady conceived, after the maner of women, witnessed for truth, by Ioannes Saxonius, in his large History, and Ioannes Magnus, Arch-bishop of Upsalia in Swetia; & lastly, by Arch-bishop Olaus, his

The poore Countv man in grea distresse i a hollow tre.

Whethe hope is weest, heau is the front.

A verreat and morable derace

Bachil'chiso, or Aus, concey white bs.

Ioannes nius. Ioannes Episc. V Olaus E. Vspal. his his Successour, who in his Writings a- uoucheth the very same, according as I haue selected it from them in this ensu- ing Chapter.

CHAP. XL.

Of a Lady of Swetia, that was conceiued with child by a Beare, and afterward what ensued thereon.

N a part of the King- dome of Swetia or Swe- uia, there stood some- time a goodly Castle, builded neere vnto a Mountaine, by a weal- thy Lord, and one of great authoritie. This Lord had a very faire Daughter, who walked abroad in an euening, ac- companied with some other Gentle- women, to take the open ayre in the Fields. As they walked together, plea- santly talking and discoursing; a Beare (by chance) had strayed abroad from the thickets on the Mountaine, of verie huge stature, fierce and terrible, making directly towards this faire troupe, who (in great feare) when they espyed the Beare, fled, some one way, and the rest another, for their best deliuerance. The Beare laying hold on the chiefest Ladie of all the rest, lifting her forcibly vpon his backe: ran (so fast as he could) into the thickest of the Forrest, not meeting any resistance by the way, because the fore-saide Ladies came soorth alone of themseluee, not hauing any man in their company.

Now, albeit the Beare had thus wan- dered abroad, in search of some prey, for appeasing his hunger: yet (referring the maine point heerein, to Gods mer- cifull and omnipotent preservation) the Beare, moued by some instinct of na- ture (farre differing from that in Beasts of the same kind) would not kill her for his foode, but carried her to his Caue, which was in a very darke and deep val- ly. There his wonted, rough and sterne nature, became conuerted into loue- like embracings and careffes, which were so extremely pursued and conti- nued: that the Lady apprehended his lustfull intention, which, though it was monstrous and vnnaturall, yet it qualli- fied some part of her former feare. And, as she durst not (in this extremitie) re- sist the fury and power of the Beare, dreading each houre the losse of her life: so (questionlesse) much against her will or liking, shee was enforced to con- sent, and endure such companying with him, as you may better imagine, then I expresse.

The Beare would daily issue forth of his den, hunt and kill all kinds of Beasts, and bring them home as food for him- selfe and the Lady: who (in this vrging necessity) was glad to eat raw flesh, wilde Fruits, and some other foodes familiar to men; as Cheese, Bread, and such like victuals, which he would get from the that kept Cattle in the fieldes, or such as trauailed to Faires and Markets. Her daily drinke, was Water of a cleare running Brooke at the Caues entrance, shaddowed with a louely thicket of young Trees: and thus shee liued, in hope that (one day) God would deliuer her. Many times (while the Beare was abroad at his prey and purchase) shee purposed to make an escape thence: yet durst not attempt it, least hee should a- gaine recouer her, and then kill her; be- side, she feared the rauinous fury of o- ther sauage Beastes, whereof no meane store frequented the Mountaine.

As thus she spent some moneths in this haplesse manner, it fortunod, that certaine Huntsmen (pursuing their de- lightfull sporting ouer the Mountaine) with their Grey-hounds and Beagles, followed this Beare so mainly; that he being falne into their snares, they there slew him. And although this was vn- known to the Lady, yet when she heard the voyces of men, and they appearing to be neere the Caue: she came soorth vnto them, to their no little dread and admiration. Yet looking more adui- sedly on her, they perfectly knew her, and had heard of her losse; with gene- rall supposition of her death: whereup- on they conducted her home to her Fa- ther and Mother, who scarcely knew her, her complexion had been so great- ly altered. In this time, Nature (who sometimes worketh wonderfull things,

What kind of nourishment the Lady had in the Beares Denne.

The Ladies diuers deter- minations to escape from the Beare.

The happy manner of the wofull Ladies deli- uerance from the Beare.

The Lady was brought home to her Father and Mother.

* Swetia bor- dereth on Ba- uaria, Hallsatia, the Riuer Rhene and the Alpes.

The lady sur- prized by the Beare, and carried away to his Denne, notwithstanding all her vttermolt re- sistance.

Behaiour of the Beare to the Lady whē she was in his Den.

The Lady was deliuered of a goodly Sonne, and he was named Beare.

Beare slew all them that killed the Beare his begetter.

The descent of Beare, according to the reporte in Chronicles.

The Kings of Dacia and Sveuia descended of a Beare.

The Authors affirmation out of his own knowledge.

and contrary to common order) had disposed so of the Beasts seed in her bodie; that she being growne great, and generally expected to be deliuered of a monster: it prooued to bee a goodly Male Childe, not any way pertaking in the Sires bestiall forme or appearance, saying that his body was much more hairy all ouer, then is seene in other Children. He was carefully nursed, and the name of Beare imposed on him: but when he grew to mans estate, hee became so strong and powerfull, that euery one stood in great feare of him. The Huntsmen that killed the Beare, his begetter, would often boast in his company, after what manner they had deliuered his Mother: but hee was the Deathsmán of them all, saying; Albeit, he had receiued such a fauour by them, yet notwithstanding, he stood bound in nature, to reuenge the death of his Father.

This Man begat Trugillus Sprachaleg, who was a very valiant Souldiour and Captaine; and he begat Vlfen, a man of high deseruing: of whom, the Chronicles of the Countries of Dannemarch, Sveuia, and Gothia, doe make most large mention, for he was the Father of Suegus, who was King of Dacia; whereupon, all Histories doe affirme, that at the Kings of Dacia, and of Sveuia, proceeded from this race, and all the fore recited Authours (who are of the same Countries) doe maintaine as much. Concerning my selfe, I haue seene many tame and domesticke Beares, amorous of Women, and She-Bears to be the like of Men, although their eyes have beene pluckt out, and very few are ignorant of the truth in this case: therefore this history sufficiently approueth, that these beastes doe couple after the manner of men.

Now, let vs admit the Beare to bee cruell and vile in all his actions; yet notwithstanding, Nature hath bestowed diuers medicinable properties, on some peculiar parts of his body. His head is held venomous, to such as eat thereof, and to procure raging madnesse: in which regard, the Inhabitants of these Northerly Countries, doe vse to burne those heads, and the Ashes of them are exceeding good, for them that haue the Foule-cuill, or Falling-sicknesse, by often washing the diseased parties head, with Lye, made of the saide Ashes or Cinders. If they be mingled also among Hony, it will cause Haire to grow againe, where it hath long time wanted: euen as the Fat or Grease of the Beare doth the like, when men haue lost their Haire; helping likewise the paines of the Sciatica, and other Gouts. Also his Flesh is wholesome to bee eaten, and hath no euill taste. The Scythians, Getes, and other Northerne Countries do fasten Beares heads on the Gates of their Citties and Townes, perswading themselves; that they doe preserue them, from being hurt by their enemies. Thus you see, what I collected out of good, ancient, and approoued Authours, concerning the Nature of the Indian Beare, and those of other Countries, better knowne to vs.

Sundry medicinable properties belonging to certaine partes of the Beare.

For the foule cuill or falling sicknesse.

For restoring lost haire, & helping the Sciatica and Goutes.

The Scythians, Getes and Northerne Nations.

The End of the Eight Booke.

The Ninth Booke.

CHAP. I.

Of the Great Turkes Court, more commonly cald (in these daies) the Court of the Gret Signior: His Pompe, State, Officers, and Attendants; As also their daily Wages and Allowances, according to their degrees, and places of Service, &c.

WE have alreadie spoken sufficiently (though briefly) concerning the Originall of the Turkish Empire, and in what manner they attained to such height and greatness: Our purpose therefore, in this present Chapter, is, to discourse onely of the Government, and Order observed in the Court, vsually rearm'd by themselves, the Porta or Court of the Grand Signior; whereto I am the more willingly induced, because the Pompe, Might, and Maiesty thereof, may bee publikely discerned.

The Cittie of Constantinople, wherein the Great Signior Turke (with his Court Royal) maketh his most residing; was in former times called Bizantium, and new Rome, containing now in circuit, about eighteene Miles. It hath seauen small Hills, not of any great height, and it is rounded with old ruined wals, being full of Houses, though none of the best, yet composed of Clay, wood, and some few of stones. There are many Groves or Thickets of Trees in the City, vn-inhabited, consisting of Cipresse Trees, and diuers others there growing in like maner. In Constantinople is the Serraglio of the Signior Turke, which is a singuler thing, & very great, as we shall relate hereafter. There is the Serraglio of Weomen, for the Great Signior; The Serraglio of Ianissaries; The Patriarkes Pallace; The Pallace of Constantine the Emperor, which is partly ruinated; The Church of Saint Sophia, which was builded by the Emperor Iustinian, of admirable fine stone, and curious Marble, as yet (though very ancient and excellent) is to be scene, part whereof, the Great Signior imployeth as a Stable for his Horses. There is also the Moschea of the Sultane Mehemet, which hath an Amarato (that is as an Hospitall or Almes-house) ioyned vnto it, wherein is enterrained and lodged men of all Nations and Religions, that will enter into it, and there they are allowed three dayes acceptance and food, as Hony, Rice, Bread, Water, and a Chamber to rest in. There is belonging to this Hospitall, goodly Bathes, and rare Fountaines or Springs of Water, very delightfull to behold. There are also the Moscheas of Sultane, Biazeth, of Sultane Selim; and of diuers other Lords, which are very beautifull and and costly builded: whereby it appeareth, that when they pleased, they knew how to make houses, and Pallaces most magni-

Il Serraglio del Signor Turco.

The Pallaces in Constantinople.

The goodly Church of S. Sophia.

An Hospitall for people of all Nations, and three dayes entertainment.

Diuers Moscheas in the City.

In the 25. Chapter of the first Book.

The great Signior maketh his most abiding in Constantinople, with some briete description thereof.

* A courting or running place for Horses.

The curious Needle in the Hippodromo.

The three headed Serpent of Brasse

The great Colossus.

Antiquities in passage thro-row the city.

Gardens and goodly Houses.
Private Mos-
chees.

The hills of Asia, now called Natolia.

Castles Scu-tari.
Chalcedonia in the Hellepont.

The site or seate of Constantinople exceeding description.

magnificent and sumptuous.
There is likewise the * Hippodromo, which is a place, where anciently they vsed to breake and run their Horses, in the forme of a Theater or circle in the midst of which Hippodromo, there standeth a sharp Spire or Pinnacle, being an ingenious Piller, made in the fashion of a Needle, very faire, well wrought, and without any Lime or Morter: yet made of fine Stone, and framed in such manner, that it riseth aboue fifty fadome in height, obseruing still the true shape of a Needle, and resting vpon foure round Bals of Marble. There is also a Piller of Brasse, in forme of a Serpent with three heads: and a Hercules of Brasse, brought thither from Hungaria; and in the midst of all these, standeth a frame or deuise, made like a Colossus, of diuers kindes of beautifull Marble, whereon is curiously engrauen, the Histories of all the fore-named thinges; and others, that were wont to be in the Theater or Hippodromo. Thorow the City, there are diuers tracts or pathies of Antiquity, Arches, Colloms of Porphiry, Springes tercht from Danubie, & other neere neighbouring Riuers: many Gardens with goodly Houses in them; many Moscheas belonging to priuate Lordes, and great store of Bathes, annexed to the Moscheas of publike Magistrates, and other priuate persons.
On the other side of the Sea, and at the head of the Serraglio, are the hills of Asia, containing the iourney of two miles, little more or lesse: which Asia, vnder one name only is now cald Natolia, and there (on the shoaring banckes) are diuers little Castles, termed Scutari. Next, there is that which they call Chalcedonia, seated in a corner of the Hellepont; where diuers notes of Antiquitie are to be obserued, and (in many places) the foundation of auncient Churches many be seene, as well of Christians, as of the Gentiles, being now goodly places, and abounding in Fruits. The site or scituation of Constantinople is such, as not only it exceedeth all description, equal to the due merit thereof: but also can as hardly be conceived in thought, in regard of the beauty and delicate composure therof, so that (vndoubtedly) it may rather be reputed diuine, then otherwise, and whatsoever hee be that shall behold it, will iudge it worthy to be preferred, before all other fitted Citities in the world.

In the City, beside Turkes, there are Jewes, being * Marrani, fled, or repulsd out of Spaine; and these are they that haue taught, and do yet teach, all kinds of Trades to the Turkes, and the most part of all the Shoppes and Boothes for Trades, are kept and exercised by those Marrani. There is a place named Bisestano, where is bought and sold all kinde of Cloathes, and Turkish Commodities, Silkes, wollen and Linnen Cloath, Siluer and Gold wrought into all formes, Bowes, Slaues, Horses, and all kinds of thinges else to be had in Constantinople, which continually are brought to this Market, and which is euery day kept open in full sale, except Friday onely. Constantinople is in Thrace, and the terminations thereof are in this manner. On the East, is the Propontis, and mouth of the great Sea, from the streights of Hellepont, to Bosphorus Thracius. On the West, is part of Bu'geria, and part of Macedonia. On the North, Bassina; And on the South, Aegæem Mare, with part of Macedonia, which turneth towards the Riuer Nessana, anciently called * Nessus Fluiuius. This most Noble City is inhabited with Turks, who (by the writings of diuers approoued Authours, for confirmation, and many of the Turkes themselues also) had their Original from Scythia, which now is part of Tartaria, a Nottherly Region, and deuided into two parts by the Riuer * Tana-is; one part whereof is in Europe, & the other in Asia. That part of Europe is confined (on the one side) with Pontus, and on the other side, with the Riphean Mountaines, being backed also with Asia it selfe, and with the Riuer Thaspiis. By Ptolomie, these two Scythiaes are named, the one, *Intra * Iannum montem*, and the other, Extra Iannum, as is more at large else where to be seene.
This people, being parted from Scythia, as formerly hath been said, and beginning (in their own confines) to make commodities and irruptions, proceeding on still further: in short time they ouer-ruled a great part of Asia; but in regard they knew not how to maintain themselues vnder one Head or Commaunder, they could not make any firme

* A Nickname for Infidell Renegado Spaniards.

The Eisestano or chief Market-place in Constantinople.

In what manner Constantinople is bounded or limit-ted on all sides.

* Where stood a City of Thrace, built by Constantine.

* A Riuer of Scythia, parting Asia from Europe

* In the lesser of the Isles called Ba'cares.

The Turkes
issuing forth of their owne confines.

Ottoman, a man of bold and sprightly courage.

Ottoman discovered his secret purpose.

Very liberall and large promises.

The conditions accepted and prosecuted.

The Marcalogi descended Michaele Greco

The Malcozoli, of Malco Greco.

The Euracastli, of Aurami.

Succession that ensued after Ottoman.

Orchanes. Amurath. 1.

Baiazeth. 1. Calapine.

Mahomet. 1.

firme or settled foundation. Which being well perceived and considered by one, who was named Ottoman (a man of more condition then common baseness, being of high spright and valiant minded) he consulted with his owne thoughts, that if he could compasse the arme and furtherance of some ingenious man that had authority: hee might easily have the people and whol Country vnder obedience, and encrease the same as occasion still serued. Hereupon, he discovered his priuate intention to three men, whom he thought more apt and conuenient for this businesse, then any of the rest: promising them, that if he could compasse the hope he ayimed at; both they and their of-spring should be continued and maintained in such high state and dignity, answerable to so great a benefit as he receiued by them. Moreover, that not any one of their posterity, should be vnder-handed, or left to the mercy of Law, except they offended very grieuouly. The conditions were accepted by these men, and they conspired together against the chiefest Soueraignty: in which progression, what by art, craft, threatnings, & much expence of blood, all was obtained to their full desire. These three men, one of them was named Michaele Greco, made a Turke: of whom are descended the Marcalogi, & one of them (is at this instant) Saniack of Bofsina. The second was called Malco Greco, a Renegado: of whom also came the Malcozoli, and there is but one onely left of them, who is Saniack in Grecia. The third was Aurami, a Natiue Turke, the descendants of whom were tearmed Euracastli, and it is not knowne, whether any of them bee left, or no. When the Race and Family of Ottoman failed, these other pretended right to the principalitie, and therefore they were very highly respected. This Ottoman came to the Government, in the yeare one thousand, three hundred, or there-about, and liued in the regiment, twenty eight yeares. After whom succeeded Orchanes, who liued twenty two yeares in the dominion. Next, Amurath raigning twenty three yeares. After him Baiazeth; Then Cyrisclebes, or (as others will haue it) Calapine, who liued fixe yeares. Next him was Mahomet, who raigned foureteeen yeares. Then

10

20

30

40

50

Amurath the second, who ruled one and thirty yeares. Then Mahomet the second, who raigned two and thirty yeares, and was called the first Emperour of the Turkes in Constantinople. Next, Baiazeth the second, who raigned one and thirty yeares. Then Selim, eight yeares; To whom succeeded Sultan Soliman, who raigned forty seauen yeares: And after him, Selim the second, raigning eyght yeares. Then Amurath the third, who raigned one and twenty yeares. Next to him, Mahomet the third, ruling nine yeares: And lastly Achmeth, or Achmet, who came to the Empire, being but seuenteeen yeares old, and raigneth yet at this present.

1 THE Great Signior hath a Serraglio in a part of Constantinople, at the two Seas deuision, which containeth (in circuit) about three miles: and therein is his chiefe Seat and Court, which is called the Porta. This Serraglio, because it was begun to be builded by the Sultane Mahomet: when hee dyed, hee would haue it leuelled with his Moschea, and that a thousand Aspers should be dailie paid towards the charges, which Aspers doe amount to twenty Ducates; and this payment is as yet obserued. In the said Serraglio are very many goodly Chambers, but one (aboue all the rest) appointed for the Great Signior, and wherein he sleepeth, where doe attend fixe Youthes (supposed by some to be Weomen) who onely doe awaite on his person. Of these fixe, two are appointed daily for seruice in the Chamber, and of the Signior, and by them at night time, the Office of Guard is performed, one standing at his head, and the other at his feete (continually vigilant) with two lighted Torches in their hands.

These two doe helpe in the morning, to put on the Signiors Garments, the vppermost whereof being called Castanno; hath two Pockets: into one whereof, the Pages do put a thousand Aspers, and into the other, twenty Ducates of Gold euery morning, which Mony, if (in the day time) it bee not giuen away by the Signior; it remaineth to them that maketh him vnreadie at night,

Amurath. 2. Mahomet. 2.

Baiazeth. 2.

Selim. 1.

Sultan Soliman

Selim. 2.

Amurath. 3.

Mahomet. 3.

Achmeth or Achmet, the Turke or great Signior now raigning. 1613.

Of the Porta or Court, wherein is the great Signiors chiefe State.

Six youths that wait on the great Signior in his Chamber, & order of their seruice.

The guarding and watching of him in his sleeping in the night time.

What Money he daily carrieth about him, being put into his pockets by his Pages.

The Casnadar-Bashae, the Signiors chiefe Treasurer.

The six yong Pages, and what belongeth to their severall Offices, and their wadges.

Capagassi Eunuch.

Casnadar-Bashae, Eunuch.

Chilergi-Bashae Eunuch.

Saraidar-Bashae, Eunuch.

Twelve Eunuchs.

Five hundred young Weomen, who are Concubines to the great Signior, and kept in an especiall Serraglio.

for he neuer putteth on those garments againe, neither weareth any twice, as is credibly affirmed. When he rideth abroad on pleasure, either to hunt, or any other sportfull exercise, beside the forenamed Money which he carryeth about him; the Casnadar-Bashae, who is his chiefe Treasurer, rideth next behind him, who carrieth great sums of Money, which the Signior commaundeth to be giuen away. The Offices of the forenamed sixe young Pages, are alred according to the Signiors will and pleasure. One of them is called the Chiuchter, that is he which carrieth the Pantofles of the Signior; The second, Seilichtar, who beareth his Bow and Arrowes; The third, Chiocadar, who carrieth his cloak or Mantle; The fourth, Saraptar, who carrieth his Vial of water; The fift, Schemeligli, who beareth his stoole or seat; And the last is Oda-Bashae, who is chiefe of the Chamber. These Pages haue firm and setled allowance of Wages; some fifteen, and others twenty, but the Oda-Bashae thirty Aspers daily.

The Capagassi Eunuch, that is he which is chiefe of the Porta or Court, hath threescore Aspers daily.

The Casnadar-Bashae Eunuch, chiefe of all the other Treasurers, hath threescore and ten Aspers daily.

The Chilergi-Bashae Eunuch, chiefe of all the other Dispensers or Stewards, hath forty Aspers daily.

The Saraidar-Bashae, Eunuch of the Serraglio, when the Signior is in Prograce, hath fifty Aspers daily.

Twelve Eunuches, subiect, or at commaund of these fore-named, haue some ten, and some fifteen Aspers each man daily.

In the next place, we are to speake of five hundred young Women, from the age of eight, to the yeares of twentie, who are kept in a Serraglio, and are the choise delights of the Grand Signior. They haue ten and twelue Aspers daily each one of them, and are enstructed in diuers Arts, according to their ablest apprehension: but most especially in Reading, Writing, and Doctrine of their Law or Religion, and in riding. Their Maisters or Tutours, are ancient Talifmani, called Cozza, that is to say, Doctours of the Law.

These young Women, at the time of Bairono, which is (among vs) the Feast of Easter, are all allowed Garments by the Great Signior, which are of Silke and of Cloath, without any forme of Liucry. Their Head Attires are all of Gold, and they haue Semitarics and Bowes, like Amazones: but they neuer go forth of the said Serraglio, till they attaine to such yeares, as the Signior thinketh them apt for some Office, and then they are made eyther Spacoglani, or Seilichtari, or of some greater degree, according to their carriage, or grace that they haue won with the Signior. Euery tenne of these Women are kept by an Eunuch, called Capoglano, that is to say, chiefe of the younger Women, and euery one of them hath a night-Slaue, and toucheth not him that lyeth neereft him. They lodge in goodlie Roomes, like great and spacious Halls, verie full of lights, and their Eunuches doe sleepe in the middest of those Roomes. There is a Garden belonging to the Serraglio, containing in compasse more then a mile, whereto appertaineth five and thirtie Gardiners, called Bostangi, who are decayed and aged Ianissaries: and these Bostangi haue (from three to five Aspers) each man dailie, and euery one hath a Liucry of Turkish Cloath, and a Shirt yearelie allowed him. When they depart out of the Serraglio, they remaine Ianissaries, or Solachchi, or Capigi, or otherwise, according to their qualitie.

The Bostangi-Bashae, who is chiefe of the Gardiners, hath fifty Aspers daylie allowed him, and many other royall fauours beside.

The Protogero, who is as Lieutenant to the Gardiners, hath twentie Aspers daily, and euery ten hath a chiefe, called Boluch-Bashae. Out of this Garden, which is very great, well laboured, and full of excellent Fruits of all sortes, there is yearely gathered such plentie: that the benefit made onely thereby, sufficeth for the Signiors expences in dyet, beside a good ouer-plus remaining for other vses. Neere to the Garden, doe two Foystes or small Barks continually attend, which are rowed by the Gardiners, when the Signior pleaseth to follace himselfe on the Water, and the Boluch-Bashae gouerneth the Helme.

There

Talifmani. Cozza, Doctour of the Lawes, Schoole-Maisters to the Concubines.

Offices bestowed on Concubines when the Signior pleaseth.

Eunuchs and Night-Slaues that attend on the Concubines in their Lodgings.

Bostangi, Gardiners belonging to the Weomens Serraglio, and their daily allowance.

Bostangi-Bashae chiefe Gardiner.

Protogero, Lieutenant to the Gardiners.

Boluch-Bashae.

Foysts for the Signiors recreation on the Water.

Aji-Bashae, chiefe of the Cooke.

There is one called Aji-Bashae, who is chiefe of the Cooks, with fifty Cooks vnder him, that haue each man fiftie Aspers by the day, vnder Cookes four, who haue fixe Aspers; and fixe others, eight Aspers each man.

Cawalgi-Bashae Maister of the Confectionarie.

Cawalgi-Bashae, is chiefe of the Confectionarie, hauing forty Aspers daylie allowed him: and he hath thirty other Companions, who haue some fixe, others fixe Aspers each man.

Casnagir-Bashae,
the chief Butler.

The Casnagir-Bashae, who is Maister of the Butlers, or chiefe Butler to the Great Signior, hath forty Aspers daily. Morning and Eueing hee bringeth in his hand, the Cuppe which the Signior drinketh in, and hath an hundred Casnegeri vnder him, who haue from thirtie, to sixtie Aspers each man daylie.

Mutpachemin,
the chiefe
Steward.

The Mutpachemin, who is the chiefe Steward, hath fortie Aspers daily, and keepeth a Clarke vnder him, that hath twenty Aspers daily.

Janissarie-
Wood carti-
ers.

An hundred decayed Janissaries, which with Carts doe carry Wood to the Serraglio, they haue from three, to fixe Aspers a man daily, and are cloathed also.

Sacca, water-bearers.

Ten Sacca, which carry Water on Horses in Bouges, haue each man from three, to fixe Aspers daily.

The Signiors
daily expen-ces for his weomen, &c.

The expences which is graunted by the Grand Signiors allowance, to his women and their Eunuches, with other persons, to the number of a thousand, or thereabout, amounteth to fixe thousand Aspers every day.

His Stable of Horses in the Serraglio.

There is a Stable in the Serraglio, with two hundred Horses for the Signiors person, and two hundred men to manage and keepe them, who haue from fixe, to eight Aspers each man daily.

Capigi-Bashaes, Captaines of the Gates, who comānd ouer the Capigi.

Three Capigi-Bashaes, who are Captaines of the Portes or Gates, that haue an hundred Aspers by the day, and are cloathed yearely. Vnder them they commaund two hundred and fifty Capigi, that haue each man from fixe, to seauen Aspers daylie. Each Capigi-Bashae, standeth obliged (with a third nūber of the Capigi) to keepe a Guard at the Gate of the Grand Signior, beeing changed still day by day. And when Ambassadors, or others doe come to kisse the Grand Signiors hand: all of them are presented with Garments, or else Mo-ny, according to the degree of him that is brought to that honor.

A Capigichechessi, who is as Protogero of the Capigi, and hath forty Aspers daily.

Capigichechessi, Protogero to the Capigi.

10 Four Bashaes, called Visirs, that is, chiefe Councillers to the Signior. He that is greatest in authority, hath foure and twenty thousand Ducates by the yeare, and the other of them, haue fixeteene and eighteene thousand yearely each man. They hold (beside) so much Land of him, as yeildeth three times more benefit, then is their allowance and prouision of Money: wheretō are added the rich garments giuen them by the Signior; the great presents of Suits, and others; beside the royalties held by their Offices, which are infinite.

Bashaes Visirs, chiefe Coun-cellers and States men to the great Signior.

20 These Bashaes liue and goe cloathed very pompously, hauing Slaues, both Men and Women, to whom they giue Wages, Horses, Garments, Head-attires of Gold, Girdies of Siluer, according to such Office and degree, as they hold about them: and by these (with his owne prouision) is each Bashae serued, euen as the Signior is serued by his attendants. They haue fixe and twenty, or 30 thirty Secretaries granted them by the Signior, who are men of good esteem, and haue fixe and twenty or thirty Aspers ech man daily, beside Slaues, some more, som lesse, according to ech mans quality and estate. These Bashaes doe go in and out to the Signior, about matters and occasions of State, & are they (in brieft) that gouerne and manage all things after their owne liking.

Secretaries allowed by the Signior, to attend on his four Bashaes Visirs.

40 Next, there is the Mophy, who is the Interpreter and chiefe of the Law or Religion: And he is not troubled with any other matters, but in cases belonging to Religion, and concerning their Faith. His Office and Dignity is, as presenting the person of the chiefe Priest or Bishop.

Mophy, the chiefe Priest or Bishop.

50 Two Cadi Leschieri Talismani, who are Doctors of the Law for the Armie, one of Greece, the other of Nato'ia, and they hold very worthy Offices. They sit at the Court gate, and do proceed or go before the Bashaes Visirs, albeit the other are more esteemed. They are Executors of the Lawes, and with consent of the Bashaes. They place and displace the Cadi, who are as Potestates and chiefe

Cadi Leschieri Talisanani, Doctours of Law for the Army.

Cadi, Maiors or Poteftates through the Land.

Mochtur-Bashacs, as Mai-fters of the Hortle.

Difterdari, Mai-fters of the Rents & Re-
uenues.

The great Signiors Vicar and Lieutenant in Con-ftantinople.

Cafiz, the Treafure belonging to the Signior.

Rofunamegi, Maifters, or Clarke-Comptrollers

Defnadar, weighers of Money.

Saraffieri, bankers or Money-Changers.

Magift rates thorow the Countries. They hold in Lands (each man) about feauen thousand ducates yearely, and do keep two hundred or three hundred Slaues feuerally: being alfo allowed by the Signior, ten Secretaries, and two Mochtur-Bafhaes, who performe the Office of Cauallery, and liue on the royalties, whereof they haue good ftore.

There are two Difterdari, or rather, (as we vfe to tearme them) Gouvernors of the rents and reuenues. One of them hath the collection, & keeping of thofe accounts, which come from one third part of Greece: to wit, thofe parts which are towardes Danubie; and next, from Asia, Soria, and Aegypt, with Landes of ten thousand Ducates yearely, albeit, (with their royalties) hee raifeth three times as much. The other hath charge of the other two third partes of Grecia, but when the great Signior goeth forth into the Field: he remaineth as his Vicar and Lientenant in Constantinople, and hath fixe thousand ducates in lands, whereof he maketh three times the value, and their feuerally Offices are of great dignitie. They keepe vnder them fifty Clarke, with many coadiutores, who haue care of the Cafiz accounts, that is, of the Signiors Treafure: and thefe Clarke are allowed wages by the Signior, from fifteene, to fifty Aspers each man daily. Alfo thefe Difterdari, each one of them hath 1000. Slaues, & the other five hundred: Likewise, the Clarke, they haue from two, to twenty Slaues, each man allowed him.

Two Rofunamegi, Maifters of the Clarke, that receiue the Monies, and make difburfement thereof again when need requireth, who haue xxv. affiftants betweene them. Thefe two men are allowed forty Aspers apiece; and the five and twenty haue from eight, to ten Aspers each man daily.

Defnadar, whereof there are two, whose office is to weigh the Aspers and Ducates, with five and twenty Aspers allowance daily for the one, and thirtie for the other.

Sixe Saraffieri, as Bankers or Lombards, who know the true estimate of Gold and Siluer, and haue from ten to fifteene Aspers, each man daily.

Then there is a Neffangi-Bafhae, who figneth the Commaunds, and publique

Writings, with the Signe or Marke of the Signior. His Office is, as Great or chiefe Chancellour, and he is a man of much reputation. He fitteth in the Porta, next to the Beglerbey, and hath eight thousand ducates of annuall Lands, befide very honorable places, with aboue three hundred Slaues.

There is a Cafnadar-Bafhae abroad, or at large, as common Treafurer, with ten Cafnadri vnder him: himfelfe hath fifty Aspers daily, and the ten other fifteene each man.

The Determin, who is as Surueyer of the Lands, and keepeth a Register of them all. He hath forty Aspers dailie, and vnder him are ten Clarke, rewarded from ten, to fifteene Aspers dailie each man.

Then there are fourefcore Mutafcrache, who are as Demy-Lances or light Horfemen to the Signior, carying their Launces alwaies, whenfoeuer he rideth abroad, and acknowledging no other Head or Commaunder, but the Grand Signior himfelfe onely. Afterward, when either by art or desert, any one of them can attaine fo farre into his fauor; he is made Aga, that is a Captain. The meanest of them haue ten, and the better fort, fourefcore Aspers a man daily.

There is a Chiaus-Bafhae, who is chiefe of the Sergeants for the Army, and holdeth fuch credit with euey man: that when he is fent by command from the Signior, to any Bafhae, Saniack, or Cadi, with order, to caufe the head of any one to be fmitten off: he is obeyed, without receipt of any Letter by him, or commaundment in writing, and euen no otherwife, then as if the Signior himfelfe were there in perfon, and commaunded it to be done. This man hath an hundred Aspers by the day, and keepeth an hundred Slaues vnder him, for whom he is allowed from five & twenty, to forty Aspers for each man daily.

The Mechter-Bafhae, is Maifter of them, that doe difplay or fpread abroad the Tents or Pauillions, and the Tapeftry that covers the Floores in the Court, with fuch like bufinesses there-to belonging. He hath forty Aspers dailie; one Protogero, and five and twenty Aspers allowance: threescore Mechters, waged from five, to eyght Aspers

Neffangi-Ba-shae, the Lord high Chancellor.

Cafnadar-Ba-shae, Treafurer at large.

Determin, Suruayer of the Lands.

Mutafcrache,
Demie-Launces or Light-Horfe-men.

Chiaus-Bafhae,
as Sergeant Maior.

A very great and especiall preheminece.

Mechter-Ba-shae, Maifter of the Tents and Tapeftry.

Aspers each man, and their yearelie Liueries from the Signior.

The Aga, that is, Captaine of the Ianissaries, who hath a thousand Aspers and more daily, and sixe thousand Ducats in Lands yearely. This Aga, when Court is kept, which is commonly twice or thrice euery weeke, standeth obliged, to feede the Ianissaries, with Bread, Rice, Mutton, Hony, and Water. He hath a Checaya vnder him; or rather a Protogero of the Ianissaries, who is as his Vice-gerent, and hath two hundred Aspers daily in ready Mony, and thirty thousand in Lands yearely. He also hath a Clarke of the Ianissaries, called Ianissariaſis, waged with an hundred Aspers daily.

The Sechmem-Basha, is Maister of the Hounds for Hunting: he hath an hundred Aspers daily, and to the number of almost two thousand Ianissaries vnder him.

The Zagarzi-Basha, is Maister of the Beagle-Hounds, beeing allowed fiftie Aspers daily, and hath about seauen hundred Ianissaries vnder him.

There are to the number of twelue thousand Ianissaries, that haue from three, to eight Aspers wages, each man daily allowed them. Euery ten haue their Oda-Basha, and euery hundred haue their Boluch-Basha: but these chief Men of the tens and hundreds, do ride on Horsebacke, the Oda-Bashas beeing allowed forty Aspers each man dailie, and the Boluch-Bashas sixtie, the rest of the Ianissaries doe goe on foote, beeing cloathed once a yeare by the Signior, in coorse Azure cloath.

Their dwelling is in two partes of Constantinople, freely giuen them by the Signior, wherein dwell they that haue no W iues; but such as be married, do inhabite diuers places of the Citty. For their liuing together in friendly manner, euery Man layeth downe his perticular proportion; And they haue a Steward, and a Cooke, who make preparation of their dyet: but such as come short in stipend to the rest, are bound by obligation to attend on the other, and take their leauings. Euery hundred of them, when they go to the Field, do carry their Tent or Pauillion with them, being all Foot-men: and part of them Shot, other Halbardiers, and some that vse the Semitary onely, euery three Men having a Horse, for carriage of their necessaries. When they grow into yeares, or (in some other respects) their seruice seemeth not pleasing to the Signior: they are cashiered out of the Ianissaries Booke, and are tearmed Assareri, that is to say; Guards for Castles, & then they haue Commanders appointed them for that purpose, who are called Castillians, with equall allowance to the wages which formerly they had, so that no one of them falleth into distresse:

Some of them there be who speede so successfullie in the Warres: that they come to be made Vauoides, and exalted to great Dignitie. They begin the exercise of Armes when they be but young Lads, and are entrusted by the most expert: beeing chosen of healthfull disposition, strongly limbde, yet quick and agile, but (about all) courageous, and much rather to bee cruell, then any way pittiful. In these men consisteth the strength and full firmenesse of all the Turkish Armies: who because they are continually exercised thereto, and (altogether) become one sole body as it were, are (indeede) to bee feared and doubted.

Of Ianissaries there are elected an hundred and fiftie Solacchi, who are as Foot-men to the Signior, with allowance from fiteene, to twentie Aspers each man daily: and they go euermore about his person, at all times when hee rideth abroad.

Two Solach-Bashes, are chiefe of the Solacchi, and ride on horsebacke; being allowed thirty Aspers daily each man, and the Solacchi are vnder obedience to the Aga of the Ianissaries.

The Aga of the Spaccoglani, a very honourable Office, hath in Lands and day Wages, ten Duckets continually, and great store of Slaues, with a Checaya vnder him, or else a Protogero; who hath (betweene Lands and Wages) an hundred Aspers daily, beside a Ianzgi, that is, a Clarke, having thirty Aspers, and sufficient regalities.

There be of the Spaccoglani, who are young lustie men on horsebacke (for so meaneth the Word Spaccoglano) three thousand, beeing waged from twentie, to fortie aspers each man daily, & euery

Assareri, keepers of Castles.

Vauoides are subordinate Rulers or Lords, advanced by their merits in seruice.

Solacchi Foot-men to the Signior.

Solach-Bashes, Maisters of the Solacchi.

Aga of the Spaccoglani.

Ianzgi, an attendant Clarke.

Spaccoglani, young Gallants on Horsebacke, and their seruice.

Aga, Captain of the Ianissaries.

Checaya, Vice-gerent of the Ianissaries.

Sechmem-Basha, Maister of the hunting Hounds.

Zagarzi-Basha for the Beagles.

The number of the Ianissaries, and their allowances & Commanders

The Ianissaries dietting together.

How they go to the Field by hundreds.

Education of the Spaccogla-ni from their Child-hood.

twenty hath a Boluch-Basbae. These do serue on Horse-backe, with five or fixe Slaues, and as many Horses for each man; giuing their attendance alwaies (and lodging likewise) on the right hand of the Signior. They are men of sufficiency, ouer whom the Signior appointeth no head or Controller, but onely himselfe. They are first brought vp or educated, in the Serraglio of yong Boyes, and as they grow in yeares and goodnesse, choyse is made of them, and so they do attaine to this degree, which serueth as a Ladder for them, whereby to mount to much greater grace, fauor, and preferment.

Aga of the Silichtari.

The Aga of the Silichtari, who hath thirty Aspers by the day, and vnder him a Protogero, a Clarke, and a Checaia, that are allowed thirty Aspers each man daily, and more.

The differēce
betweene the Silichtari and the *Spaccogla-
ni*.

Of these Silichtari, there are three thousand, who ride on horsebacke likewise, and lodge on the left hand of the Signior, hauing from twenty, to five and twenty Aspers each man daily: with four or five Slaues, and as many Horses, beside Lands for their better maintenance. These men are educated in the same manner, as the Spacchi or Spacco-glani, and there is no other difference betweene them: but that the Spacchi attend on the right hand, and these on the left, of the Signior.

Olofagi-Ba-shawes, Commaunders ouer the Soul-diers.

Two Olofagi-Basbaes, who are chiefe of the Souldiours, with two thousand Olofagi, that serue on the right and left hand of the Signior. The two chiefe Commaunders, haue an hundred and twenty Aspers each man daily, and the other, from eight, to sixteen each man.
Moreouer, the two haue vnder them, a Checaia, a Clarke and a Protogero, with Slaues and Horses, the one more, the other lesse.

Agaes of the Caripoglani, poore young men.

Two Agaes, Maisters or Rulers of the Caripoglani (who are poore young men) with fourscore Aspers of allowance for each man. Their Protogeri haue thirtie Aspers, their Clearks five and twentie:
And they haue vnder them, about two thousand Caripoglani (who are waged from seauen to foureteene Aspers each man) and they haue Slaues and Horses beside.

Bracor-Basbaes
chiefe Groomes of the Stable.

Two Bracor-Basbaes, who are Maisters or chiefe Quiries of the Stable, one aboue the other in Office. The better hath five hundred Aspers by the day, & the other two hundred; beside Protoge-ri and Checaiaes, and others that are waged from thirty, to forty Aspers dailie each man.

10

Then there are to the number of sixteene thousand; some tearmed Saracchi, who make Bridles and Saddles; others Ceissi, Seruants or Grooms of the Stable; others Carmandari, that attend on the Mules; others Denegi, that waite on the Camels; and Cauriligi, that feed the Heards of Horses in diuers places, who are waged from two, to twentic
Aspers each man daily.

Seracchi, as Sadlers.

Ceissi, Grooms of the Stable.
Carmandari, Muleters.
Denegi, Cam-
mellers.
Caurigili, Herds for Horses.

20

Next there is betweene thirty and forty Peichi, Foote-Poasts, or Lackyes, who were brought vp (from their younger yeares) in knowledge of the miles, & dispatch much ground in short while, and with wonderfull swiftnesse. When the Grand Signior, is to ride abroad, they are continually ready, because they are imployed still in many businesses.

Peichi, Foote-Poasts or Lackies.

30

Of elected and choise Horses, there are about foure thousand, for the person of the Signior: which are ridden by the youthes of the Serraglio, and by the Eunuches, as a daily practise and exercise.

Foure thousand choise Horses for the Signior.

40

There is a Zachergi-Basbae, Maister of the yong Hauks, and another Zachergi-Basbae, Commaunder of all the Faulconers. The first hath an hundred and fiftie Aspers daily, and the other but fourescore; with their Checaiaes, Proto-geri, and others, that are waged each Man daily, from ten, to five and twenty Aspers. Vnder these, are about two hundred Zaniglieri, one hundred wher-of, haue onely tenne Aspers each man daily: but the rest hold Landes, or else exemption from taxations, and follow the fields as pleaserh the Signior.

Zachergi-Ba-shaes, chiefe Faulconers.

Zaniglieri, atendants on the chiefe
Faulconers.

50

The Gebegi-Basbae, is Maister of the Armour, hauing threescore Aspers daily, a Protogero, and Clarke, with twenty Aspers each Man dailie. Vnder him are a thousand and five hundred Gebegi, waged from seauen to foure-teene Aspers dailie each man, and they all goe on foot with the Signior to the Field.

Gebegi-Basbae, Maister of the Armour.

The Topci-Basbae, is M. of the Muskettiers, hauing threescore Aspers dailie;

Topci-Basbae, Maister of the Musketiers.

a Protogero, and a Clarke, with twenty Aspers, each man daily. And vnder him are two thousand Topci, waged from six, to ten Aspers, each man dayly going on foote.

The Arabagi-Bashae, is Maister of the Carts, Waggon, and Carriages, hauing fortie Aspers daily, a Protogero and Clarke, at twentie Aspers allowaunce, each man daily: & vnder him, are 3000. Arabagi, waged from three, to six Aspers each man daily.

A Mechter Bashae, is Maister of the Trompets and Drummes, hauing thirtie Aspers daily allowance, a Protogero and Clarke, at twelue Aspers a man daily. Vnder him, are a thousand and two hundred Mechters, partly on foote, and partly on horsebacke, from three to five Aspers, each man daily.

Imerelem-Aga, who carrieth the grand Signiors Standard, hauing two hundred Aspers daily, and he is (beside) Captaine ouer all the Mechters.

The Arpaemin, hee is Purueyer for Corne, hauing a Protogero, and a Chancellor: himselfe hath sixtie Aspers, the Protogero thirtie, and the Chancellor twenty daily. This Arpaemin hath xx. persons vnder him, who are allowed dayly amongst them, eight hundred Aspers.

The Saraemin, is Purueyer or prouider in common: for hee looketh to the streets of Constantinople, and al the waies whereby the Signior passeth forth to Warre. He hath charge also of publick Buildings; of Springs, Wells, and Water-conduct. He is allowed fifty Aspers daily, and hath foure hundred men vnder him: among whom, is giuen a thousand Aspers: hauing a Protogero, and a Clarke also, with 38. Aspers, allowed each man daily.

The Baratemin, who is appointed to deliuer the Signiors commands in writing, and to receiue his house moneyes: hauing fortie Aspers daily, and attended with two *Clarke*s, and two Ouer-seers, with twenty Aspers daily each man.

The Dragoman, who is Interpreter of all Languages, which Office is as highly reputed, as is the Vertue and Wisedom of him that exerciseth it. He hath five hundred Ducates in firme Prouision euerie yeare, besides, his enioyning as much in Landes, and aboue foure times as much in extraordinarie fauours, being alwayes verie especiallie respected of them.

The Womens Serraglio, differing from the other.

2. OVer and beside all the forenamed matters, there is another Serraglio of the Signiors Women, containing in circuite more then a mile and a halfe: being richly furnished with diuers goodly Chambers, and other retirements, wherein the Signiors Children are kept, seperately one from another, with their Mothers, and a great number of Eunuchs allowed for their keeping & seruice. There is also the Sultana, that is to say, the chiefe Mother, or the Signiors Wife, by whom he is said to haue his first Child.

In this place also, are three hundred young Damosels, brought thither Virgins, and deliuered to the gouernement of many Matrons: which Virgines, are entrusted in al kinds of curious imbroidery and workes: and euery one is allowed from ten to twentie Aspers daylie, as wages, and euery yeare, at the two Bairranoes, they haue costly Garments of silke giuen them. Among these, hee maketh choise (to his owne liking) of such as hee will admit to his priuate companie: and when he hath lien with any of them, hee giueth her a rich head attire of Golde, & ten thousand Aspers, placing hir then in another lodging, seperate from the other Virgins, encreasing still hir ordinarie wages.

To this Serraglio belongeth an Aga of the Eunuches, who hath an hundred score Aspers for him & his: three Capigi-Bashaes, and a hundred Aspers amongst their Capigi-Ianissaries at the Gates: among whom are daily giuen six hundred Aspers. The Saccaes, that bringeth in Water, who haue in al forty aspers daily. These Damosels are thus serued and entrusted, till they be five and twentie yeares of age, the Matrons beeing their Mistresses, and the seruants are the verie yongest of them. When they are five and twenty yeares olde, if the Signiour please to make no more vse of them, they are then married to the Spaccoglani, and som other of the Slaues about the court, according to the qualitie and degree on eyther

Arabagi-Bashae Maister of the Carriages.

Mechter Bashae, Maister of the Drums & Trumpets.

Imerelem-Aga,
the Signiors
Standard-Bearer.

Arpaemin, Purueyer of grain and Corne.

Saraemin, Provider in generall.

Baratemin, Steward of the Signiors commands.

Dragoman, the Interpreter of Languages, or Maister of the Ceremonies.

The great Signior his second Serraglio of weomen & for his Children.

The Sultana or the Signiors wife.

Three hundred Virgins for the Signi-ors vse.

His reward to each virgin after her company.

Attendants on the Serraglio, and their wages daily.

How long the Damosels continue for the Signiors vse, and what be-cometh of them afterward.

either part, and insted of the ones losse, another is admitted.

The Serraglio of Children.

There is another Serraglio neere to Pera, consisting of about foure hundred Children, who are waged each one from sixe, to ten Aspers daily, and are cloathed with Silke twice euerie yeare. These Children haue an Aga and Euniches, euen as the great Serraglio hath, with Capagi, young Ianissaries, and an hundred Maisters of diuers Artes and profesions: amongst whom, are giuen eight hundred Aspers daily. They are not so Nobly borne, neyther of so seemelie presence or ingenuity, as these that bee with the Signior: and yet neuerthelesse, many of them do attaine to greatnesse: and choise is made amongst them of many, that are admitted to the great Serraglio. Especialy, in Adrianople, called by some Andrianople, there is a Serraglio of three hundred Children with Wages, Aga, Eunuchs, Capigi, Ianissaries, & two hundred Maisters, that haue amongst them, two thousand and eight hundred Aspers daily.

These children are of a third or more inferiour quality; and therefore, are the more respectiue enstructed and restrained, euen as all the rest (in ciuill manner) are of them, according vnto their spirit and behaiour, choise is also made for their further aduancement. There is likewise in the same Countrey, another Serraglio, newly made with a goodly great Garden belonging to it, and seated on the Riuer Mariza: wherein ther is about three hundred yong Ianissaries, who dispend each man yearely, a thousand and two hundred Aspers. They haue an Aga, allowed fortie Aspers, a Protogero, and a Clarke, each thitty Aspers daylie. In diuers other places of Adrianople, there are Gardens, continually belonging (euen as in Deposito) to a thousande and five hundred young Ianissaries, selected out of these youths, as they grow to yeares and qualitie: hauing Agaes, and Clarckes on whom are bestowed six thousand Aspers euerie yeare, or very little lesse.

There is then an Aga of the Azamoglani, called young vntutord or vnciuill Ianissaries, that abide in Constantinople, and haue threescore Aspers dayly: there being vnder his commaund, about five thousand of these wilde-headed Ianissaries, who are cloathed twice euerie year, and haue Maisters for their instruction; among whom, is spent tenne thousande Aspers yearely. These do attend about the Ship-wrights, bringing them wood to supply their building, and diuers other affayres beside. Some practise Cookerie, and so become seruants to the Ianissaries, whereby (at length) they attain to bee Ianissaries themselues. Euerie fourth yeare, the Signiour sendeth into Grecia and Natolia, to take and surprize Children from the Christians, and then ten or twelue thousand of these men are sent out at a time, that doth bring verie many christian children back with them: who are then conueyed vppe further into Natolia, towards Bursia, now called Mysia, or into Caramania, where they are brought vp in digging the Ground, because they may bee invred to labour, and also to learn the Turkish Language. These Children are thus kept three or foure yeares; and then sent out to allure other in like manner: being then giuen to the gouernment and Discipline of the Aga Azamoglani. No wages or allowance is granted to these by the Signieur, so long as they abide in Natolia, because they are both fedde and cloathed at their cost, in whose seruice, they delue the grounds, or doo any other labours for them.

I thought good to make mention (in this place) of all the *Serraglio*s, because they are as appendixes on that belonging to the Signior, and reckoned in the whole expences, returned into the books of charge, belonging to the great Serraglio of the Signior. Into which accounts are also called the Moneyes laid out for cloathing (twice yearely) the Bashaes, the Cadilescheri, the Difterdari, the Beglerbeyes, and the Nessangi-Bashaes: which expences, allowed to them that be in extraordinary, do amount to, and exceed the summe of a Million of aspers yearely.

Of the Arsenale, or Store-house of Munition.

3. There is also an Arsenale on that part of Pera, not of anie bigge

* Galatea or Galatia in Gallogrecia, in Asia the lesse, ioyning to Phrygia and Lydia.

Maisters for enstructing the youths in the Serraglio.

* A City of Thrace, built vpon the Riuer Hebrus. The Serraglio of Adrianople.

* In Thrace, rising out of Rhodope by Adrianople, into which Riuer the head of Orpheus was cast.

Gardens belonging to young Ianissaries.

Azamoglani, are young Ianissaries, that be (as yet) rude and vntutourd.

Attendants on the Ship-wrights.

Ianissaries imployed by the Signior for the stealeth of Christians Children.

* A Country in Asia by Hellepont, bordering on Troas. * Now called Narsinga, in Asia minor, betweene Persia and India.

Aga Azamoglani.

All the *Serraglio*s are limbs or branches of the Signiors great Serraglio.

Charges allowed extraordinarily.

The Arsenale in Pera.

Workemen in the Arsenale and their wages in their severall degrees and places.

bigge or large circuite, which hath on the Sea-shore, to the number of ninetic two Arches, and containeth so little ground within: as not onely the Gallies, but also their other appurtenances, and Timber for worke, can hardly bee there placed. In this Arsenale, do about two hundred men labour ordinarily euerie day; who, with their Maisters and Ouerseers, haue daily two thousand Aspers among them. There are a thousande Asapi, who haue foure thousand Aspers among them.

Proti, or Workemaisters, to the number of fiftie, who when they are idle and labour not, haue sixe Aspers dayly, but when they work, twelue Aspers each man.

The Emino hath fortie Aspers, the Clarke five and twenty, with ten clarks more vnder him, that haue an hundred Aspers daily. All these, when neede requireth, do performe their severall Offices. But if they intend badly vnto their Trades, or labour not effectually in the building of Gallies, whereby no such benefit ensueth on their paines, or like expedition as is vsed among vs: if the fault be found by any Christian, he is well recompenced, and the other verie seuerely punished.

Care for furtherance of labour.

Of the Beglerbey.

4. AS Commander ouer the Arsenale, and all the rest, there is one that is called the Beglerbey of the Sea, as much to say, as Lord of Lords, an Office newly created: for, in times past, he was alwaies woont to bee called Captaine of the Sea. He that was Saniack of Callipolis, and is now the first that had the degree of Cairedinbei, was called Barbarossa, and afterward created the 4. Bashae. To him is giuen the gouernment of all the Nauie, and he hath in prouision euerie yeare (both in Lands and Ducates) fourteene thousand, collected on Rhodes, Negropont, and Mystelene, albeit he gathereth a double aduantage. There is not any other especiall man, appertaining to matters of the State, and charge of the Sea, that deserueth Annotation, and therefore comming to land affaires, I will proceed in this manner.

Beglerbey of the Sea is chiefe Commander in the Arsenale.

His authority and yearely allowance.

There is one called the Beglerbey of Gracia, wherein is comprehended all the Countreyes which the Great Signiour enioyeth in Europe. This Beglerbey, is the greatest of all the rest, hauing in Lands sixteene thousand ducates yearly, but his benefite amounteth to twice as much more.

10 Hee sitteth in the Porta, behinde the chiefe Bashae, and is of great reputation with euerie one. He hath beside his slaues (which are aboue a thousand) a Desterdaro, Landed at three thousand Ducates yearely: An hundred Clearks, that keep the Bookes and accounts of the Landes, assigned to the Sub-Bashaes, Cadi, Spacchi, and others; among whom, is yearely giuen ten thousand Ducats. Thirtie seauen Saniacks, who are al vnder his obedience: and haue each man from five to twelue thousand Ducats yearly.

Concerning the Beglerbey of Grecia, and his authority.

His dignity in the Court, & his attendants A Desterdaro.

Sub-Bashaes, Cadi, Spacchi, &c.

Saniacks.

The Office of the Saniack.

Exercise of the Spacchi, and their imployment.

20 These men, are distributed into the Prouinces, where they remaine so long as pleaseth the Signior; and are thence translated or changed (as hee thinketh good) into some other Prouinces. Their Office, is to gouerne the Spacchi, to see them well exercised in Armes, and to be kept in due obedience. Foure hundred Sub-Bashaes, who haue in landes among them, foure hundred thousand Ducates. Thirtie thousand Spacchi, who are Souldiers on Horsebacke, diuided for best order of seruice: partly of the Beglerbeis of Grecia, and partly of all the Saniacks of Grecia. They haue (one by another) in Lands, two hundred Ducats, and each one of them, for euerie hundred of Ducates, is bounde to keepe a man armed on Horsebacke, with his Launce: and beside the saide armed man, they haue, some two, some foure, and others five Seruants and Horses. These Spacchi, are all slaues to the Signior, and the sonnes of slaues, and of Spacchi.

The Beglerbeys and Saniacks of Grecia.

30 Next, there are twentie thousand Timariotti, who haue from tenne to fortie Ducates in Lands, each man yearly: but because their compensation ariseth not to an hundred Ducates each man, they are not called Spacchi. These haue a horse and two or three seruants for each man, seruing distributively to all the Saniacks of Grecia. That which they call Timari, is the assignation or appointment of landes, the Rents, Fees, or Reuenues of which assignations are deriued, partly from the Fee-farme, letting, or deuising: but the greater Timariotti, are such as liue vpon timarros, holding Land in Knight-seruice vnder the Signior.

Timari, assignation of Landes, Liuinges, Farmes or states, lately conquered by the Signior's Forces.

greater part, is from the tenths of all the reuennues granted from the Turkes as well as Christians, and from the leauies which are five and twenty Aspers (Per poule, as we vse to say) of the Christians onely, and from the impositions on cattell, Trees, and other things, which taxes are ouer and aboue those, that are paid ordinarily to the Signiour. Sixteene thousand Archengi, those are aduenterers on horsebacke, set downe thorough the Countrey of Grecia, and bounde to follow the warres without any pay; and therefore are exempted from all taxation: the Citties and Townes are tied to find their prouision of victuals onely, from place to place where they serue.

There are in Grecia, that is, throughout the whole Countrey thereof in towns, Villages, and other places, as well of Turkes and Christians, enioyned to seruice, about the number of threescore & eight thousand.

Next, there are six Beglerbeyes in Asia, and one by himselfe in Egypt. The first, is called the Beglerbey of Nato'ia. which (in elder times) was Asia minor: he hath fourteene thousand Ducates in Landes annually, but hee maketh much greater benefit thereof. This man hath vnder him, and in his gouernment, Pontus, Bythmia, all Asia, Lydia, Caria, and Lycia; all which Prouinces (vnder one Name only) is at this day cald Natolia. His place in the Borta, is next to the Beglerbey of Grecia, and he hath (beside his own proper Slaues) aboue a thousand more vnder him; and twelue Saniacks landed from foure to six thousand Ducats each man; Spacchi, ten thousand; from five to ten Aspers, each man dayly, besides much more in Landes, and those serue vnder him, according vnto euerie ones degree.

The Beglerbey of Caramania, which aunciently was Celicia and Pamphilia, with tenne thousand Ducats in Landes. Hee hath vnder him seauen Saniacks, from foure to sixe thousande Ducates, each man in Landes. And five thousande Spacchi, from five to tenne Aspers, each man daily beside their lands.

The Beglerbey of Amasia and Toccatto which was Cappadocia and Galatia, with eight thousand Ducates in Landes. Of Saniacks he hath eight from six, to eight thousand Ducates each man in Landes:

Spacchi, foure thousand, from fyue to ten Aspers daily each man, and lands.

The Beglerbey of Aladula, which is a place betweene Soria, Caramania, and Toccatto, aunciently called Paphlagonia, & is the one halfe of the lesser Armenia. He hath ten thousand ducates in landes, and Saniacks seuen (sometimes four, & sometimes six) from foure to six thousand ducates in lands: Spacchi six thousand, from 5. to ten Aspers daily each man & lands. In this Prouince of Aladula, it is sayde, that when the Signior was there, beside the stipendarie men; thirtie thousand other personnes were obliged to ride on with him, at the charges of two villages onely.

The Beglerbey of Mesopotamia, vnder whom is the rest of Armenia Minor, and part of the greater, the other appertayning to the Sophie, and the Cordi, which confyneth with Bagadeth, or Baldacoo, aunciently called Babylon. His Landes amount to aboue thirtie thousande Ducates: and beside his owne slaues, hee hath more then two thousand. Vnder him are twelue Saniacks, landed from foure to sixe thousand Ducates yearelie each man: Spacchi, ten thousande, from ten to fyfteene Aspers each man daylie, and verie well landed, because they liue on the Sophies Confynes, with whome they haue continually bickerings.

The Beglerbey of Damasco, Soria, and Iudea, Landed foure and twentie thousand Ducates. Hee hath aboue two thousand slaues, and twelue Saniacks vnder him, Landed from fyue vnto seauen thousand Ducates: Spacchi, twentie thousande, with Aspers from tenne, to fyfteene each man daylie, and good Lands.

The Beglerbey of Cairo, whose iurisdiction extendeth so farre as Amech, that is in Aralia, and the Arabiaes are possessed by the Signiour, in the same manner as hee is possessed of Albania, where hee challengeth no such obedience, as all other States and Countries doo yeelde vnto him of his owne: yet, Arabia Felix is nowe in farre more subiection to him, then the other. He hath thirtie thousand Ducates in Landes, and Slaues aboue foure thousand. Sixteene Saniacks; Landed from sixe vnto eight thousand Ducates each one of them; and sixteene thousande Spacchi, from fyfteene Archengi, are aduenterous seruitours on Horse-backe.

What number serue the Signior thotow Grecia.

1 The Beglerbey of Natolia, and the places vnder his command.

His place in the Court.

2 The Beglerbey of Caramania and his command.

3 The Beglerbey of Amasia and Toccatto.

4 The Beglerbey of Aladula, and his command.

The Signiors being in Aladula.

5 The Beglerbey of Mesopotamia, and his command.

6 The Beglerbey of Damasco, Soria, and Iudea, and his command.

7 The Beglerbey of Cairo, & his large extenture.

fifteene, to twentie Aspers daylie each man.

Betweene Amech, and the Countrey of the Sophie, there are some Arabian Lords, that owe no obedience to anie bodie. The rest of the Sophies land, confineth on Mesopotamia, wherein is Maldacco, passing Mesopotamia, the Sophye also confineth the plaine of Nasinam; then toucheth Esdum and Ersun, which are principall places in Armenia Maior, and confine with the Hyberi* and Georgiani*. In these Armeniaes, both the great and lesser, are many of the Cordi*, people liuing in the Mountaines, yet warlick and Martiall: those of the greater Armenia being in obedience, partly to the Signior, and partly to the Sophie, but those of the lesser, not to any one. Trabisonde* confineth with the Georgiani and Mengrelli, and part of the Hyberi, which people were anciently called Colehians. Azemia*, which in elder times was Assyria, belongeth to the Sophie, and hee is the absolute Lord thereof.

In this Natolia, I mean in the whole Country which the Signio possesseth in Asia, Citties, Townes, and Villages belonging both to Turkes and Christians, are seauenty two thousand, besides them in Egypt, whereof there are great store.

Of the Saniacks.

5. THE Saniacks assuredlie (as I haue already saide) haue gouernment in the Prouinces, committed vnto them by the Beglerbeys, and are men of much reputation and great esteeme, especially in warlike occasions, whom I will also set downe, by the names of those places, which are giuen and assigned vnder their regiments.

First, the Beglerbey of Grecia, appointeth his Saniackats to these places: first toward Solonichi, & then follow the other of Cassa, and of Silistria, Nicopolis, Vidin, Samandria, Serua and Belgrada, Sournich Boffina, and Ersech, which is Serua, and called a Dukedome; Scutari, Valona, Iauina, Carlali, Lepanto, Morea, Negropont, Tricala, Callipolis, Chrichelissa, that is, forty Churches, Visa, Cirmē, Chiostandill, Vo. citrin, Prisdren, Oeria, Alazaassar, Elbassan, Voinug, Cinghene, and Taiazza. These are thirty, which were wont to be fve and thirty; but the fve are vnited to the propinquent places, as Philippolis, Sophia, Dyrrachium or Durace, Albania, and Scopia.

Natolia, that is Asia Minor, hath Pontus, thinia, Lydia, Caria, and Lycia: The Saniackats of this Beglerbey, are in Chiothachia, and the rest in Chiogacli, as Boli, Castamoni, Anguri, Cangri, Therchieli, Mateffeli, Aidineli, Hallaice, Buga and Magnesia, which appertained to the Sultane Mustafa, the Signiors first borne son, and which place is half hemd in with the sea.

Amasia and Tocatto, that is Paphlagonia, Galatia, and Cappadocia. The Saniackat of the Beglerbey, is in Amasia, and the rest in Chiorma, Gianich, Charaiffer, Sasum, and Trabisonde.

Caramania, that is Cilicia by the midst of Cyprus and Pamphilia. The Saniackat of the Beglerbey is in Giogna, and the other stretch into Naranda, Axar, Eschissar, Versageli and Siurassar.

Aladula, that is Armenia Minor. The Saniackat of the Beglerbey is in Maras, & those of the other, in Sarmussacli, Albi-Stancrassi, Adana & Tersis.

Dierbech, which is Mesopotamia, and part of Armenia Maior, for the rest belongeth to the Sophy, and to the Cordi. The Saniackat of the Beglerbey, is in Dierbech: and the rest haue their abiding in Charaenit, Argui, Tolgich, Cassanchief, Meridin, Charput, Mussul, Efrum, Payburt, Eythlis and Maxiuancuassi.

Soria and Iudea. The Saniackat is in Damasco, and the other in Melathia, Diuitchi, Antep, Antiochia, Aleppo, Tripoli, Chama or Aman, Camps, Scepheto, Ierusalem, and Gazara.

Egypt, with part of Desert Arabia, to Alziden l'Almach, with all Arabia felix, where are many Arabian Lords, which are partly at the deuotion of the Grand Signior, and partly to no bodie. The Saniackat of the Beglerbey is in Cayro, & some other places.

All the fore-recited Saniacks, Beglerbeyes, Bashaes, and other Officers, haue Lands and Wages (as hath beene saide) firmly in ordinarie pay: and get much more extraordinarily, liuing chiefly by the benefit of their slaves, whome they must of necessity cloath, and allow some Wages to keepe them from stealing. What the Rents and Reuennews of this Signior is, may bee considered by the mighty

The Saniackats belonging to the Beglerbey of Natolia.

Saniackats of the Beglerbey of Amasia.

Saniackats of the Beglerbey of Caramania.

Saniackats of the Beglerbey of Aladula.

Saniackats of the Beglerbey of Dierbech.

Saniackats of the Beglerbey of Soria and Iudea.

Egypt and the Saniackats of her Beglerbey.

A briefe Summary of all the forenamed Officers and Offices.

Lords vnder no controule.

* A Region in Asia, enuironed with the Hill Caucasus. * People of Scythia in Asia. * Mountaine people of both the Armeniaes. * In the edge of Macedonia by the Euxine Sea. * Assyria.

The whole Country of Natolia.

The Saniacks are warlike men and of great account

The Saniackats of the Beglerbey for Grecia, according to their names and places.

Yearly Re-uenues com-ming into the
the Grand Signior.

mightie expences he is at daily, the whiche reuennues is collected of the Caraz- zo or impositions, proceeding frō those subiectes that are not Turkes, yeelding yearely a Million and a halfe of ducates .
The Customes or towle for cattell, yeeldeth eight hundered thousand Ducates ; and the Mettall Mines affoord sixe hundred thousand Ducates.

There are infinite other Customes and payments, imposed on Salte, Commands, dead folkes goods, gifts, the reuennues of Egypt, beside other Moneyes, Rents, and Tributes, which are so much, as not only do supplie the ex-pences ouer and aboue the Landes and readie Moneyes, and bringing daily into the great Casnar or Treasurie, aboue twelue thousand Ducates, besides other great aduantages, and ouerplus summes of Moneyes. And it is supposed, that the least reckoning of the ordinary reue-nues, may be about fyteene thousande Millions of Gold: Fiue whereof onelic enter into the Casnar, but the other ten remaine for the Ministers of the warres employments.

An inestimable of the whole
in generall.

CHAP. II.

*Of the lawfull meanes, whereby to compasse
the esteeme and reputation, of being trnely and excellentlie Couragious & valiant.*

A demaund made to Aug- ustus, and his worthy an-swere.

AT was demaunded of Augustus, in what hee could best obserue the valour of a man of war .
Thus (quoth he) when his effort and endeuour, hath relish (in common) with that of his Fellowes, but that some perticuler matter appeareth in his attempt, which is no way due to the Armies general victory, wherein himselfe fighteth under the Captaynes charge, yet as if himselfe were no chiefe in respect. Such a man among the Albani- ans, was George Castriot, who hadde to deale with two of the verie greatest, and most dreaded Princes of the East, against whose Iniustice he opposed himselfe on-

George Castriot,
surnamed Scanderbeg.

ly, and manie times wonne verie goodly victory ouer them : yea, and compelling them sometimes to require peace, yet without anie other aide, then his owne perfect valour, accompanied with Discretion and Equity. Which yet (neuer-thelesse) at length hee lost, both to his owne ruine and all Albania, by the entermises and medlings of the Pope, and of the Byshop of Durace, who constrayned him (iniuriously) to breake his faith promised vnto Mahomet the second, being at that time in Warre against the Venetians.

He could freely auouch, that (as naked and all alone) hee vndertooke warre against the Great Signior, and that hee did it onely by the bright beautie of his courage: which could no way gather apprehension of surmounting, fighting in so iust a cause as the Christians generall quarrell against the Turk. And he might also as freely confesse, that the losse of his estates, and of his sonnes (which hee had not till after his death) was onlie con-ceiued in the wombe of a Popes and By-shoppes rashnesse, who more enflamed with spleene, then strengthened with men of armes, ouer bare the modestie of this poore Lord, who died in a weake estate, yet not wholly troden downe; but in leauing nothing to his heires, whereby to make a fresh reply vpon Mahomet. Hee ruined Christianity in Greece, thorough the insolencie of these two men of the Church, who were more apte to command a sedition, then anie way to apease it, and had more Cowardise in giuing bad counsell to their friends, then corage to helpe them out of the losses bredde by them, euen as in a fourse of infallible and vndrainable misfortunes. Whereinto also they threwe Hungary headlong, hauing counselled a young King vnadui-sedly to violate peace with the Great Turke : who (thorough this error onely) is at this day victorious, and remayneth possessor of the Hungars whole estate; & afterward fell vpon Austria, where hee hath (almost) as great a share as the Em-perour. And he, though endued with perfect valiancie, hath had much payne and care to repaire those wide gaps and breaches, which these rash & presumptuous men made, without any necessitie or ouuert profitable consideration vnto Christendome, but well-nere to the vt-ter

The Pope & Bishop of Du- race medled in Warre matters.

The freedom of confession imputed to George Castriot,

Christianity ouerthrowne in Greece, by two Church
mens meanes.

Further harmes that ensued by them, in Hun- garia, and else where.

ter subuersion of the Easterne people in those parts.

Leonides also is one of them, to whom iustly may be attributed the glorie and perfection of intire man-hood, considering, that without any curious inquisition for himselfe, eyther of good or euill, and carelesse of any intention for prayse or misprision: he vnderooke to oppose himself (at the Thermopylae) against great king Xerxes, the astonisher of the world, who had filled all Greece with horroure and affrightments, both of Soldiers and horses, hauing no lesse prouision (beside this equipage) of power & fighting men on the Sea, which they did nothing else, but meere ly smite and beate with their Oares, euen as if hee would haue compelled the insensible Elements, to the vnderstanding and fauouring of his enterprises.

All which notwithstanding, the worthy Leonides, accompanied onelie with foure thousand men, fought against him with such sprightly resolution and Vertue: that he left vs more matter and subiect of amazement, then capacity of imitation. I must send ye amongst the Greekes, there to admire the whole History, which is the most remarkable in all Antiquity.

Brasidas must not be forgotten, who trauerfed the Campe of the enemy, at the siege of * Methone, and by a necessary endeauor, accomplished and woon immortall Fame and Renowne, which serueth yet (to this day) for a common Prouerbe, by the wonderfull perfection of his courage, whose picture is plentifull among the Greekes; only with this Motto.

Be as valiant as Brasidas.

Hysparmenes, Captaine to Darius, is woorthy to holde ranke amongst them, that not onely had a beame, but an entire Starre of true valiancy. For, his Master, and the fortune of all Asia, bowing vnder the yoake of Great Alexander, he would not yeeld himselfe vnto the Conquerour, though his Castle was no longer holdable, the Cittie of Susa beeing brought in subiection to the Macedonians, to whom he made this answer. I do not resist against Great Alexander with any hope to overcome him: but only to Conquer mine owne misfortune, which may well suffer me to dye, yet not at the discretion of any other, thin of my selfe, who would force the fortune of your Master, if hope were answerable to my dutie. Yet, all that I can hope, is now not lawfu', because the royal Darius is dead.

Hyrtius Mela, purchased most signale glorie, in perfection of courage, when seeing the Cittie wherein he dwelt, called * Præneste, wholly destroyed from the toppe to the bottome, and by his Guest Sylla, who (in the right of Hospitality) graunted him both grace and life: hee valiantly made refusall with this exclamation against the Tyrant. Is it possible, O thou most barbarous and cruel of all men, that thou wouldst be so bloody to thine Hoste, as to let him liue, after so many cruelties which thy rage hath exercised on an innocent people? Thou art not pittifull to me, but onely to afflict me more, & wouldst bestow life on me once, to make me thereby dye a Million of times. Hast thou slaine my Companions, Fellow Cittizeus, Kindered and Friends, and wou'dst thou now compel mee to liue? Speaking these words, hee stabbed with a Poniard, Mutius Listrio, the principall Instrument and Organ of Syllaes cruelties; yea, the only Authour and motiue of Prænestes ruine. To whose Ashes, this good and Famous Cittizen, sacrificed his owne life, by the death of the dearest Friend vnto the Tyrant, who instantly commaunded, that hee should be massacred & throwe into the common Sinke, or Lay-fall of the Cittie.

Quintus Curtius, that Honourable Romaine Knight, did a deede of absolute and respectiue manhoode. For, when he had Learned from the Oracle, that the wide gaping Gulfe in the midst of Rome, which infected the Cittie with pestilence and most noysom aires, could no way be closed againe, but by the Voluntarie leaping of a man into that infernall and darke downefall, he gladly threw himselfe thereinto, for to end the Romaines miserie, and sauing the liues of infinite people of all degrees. The Inscription on his Brasen Statue was thus.

Cccc This

Leonides, King of Lacedaemon slaine at Thermopylae fighting against Xerxes.

Leonides vnder-taketh the fight with 4000. men.

A valiant Captaine of Lacedaemon. * The Cittie Methone by the Sea side in Peloponnesus.

Darius conquered by great Alexander.

* A noble Cittie betwene Persia and Babylon, where was the sumptuous Pallace of Cyrus.

* The Cittie Præneste of Latium in Italy.

The courageous wordes of Hyrtius Mela to Sylla.

Hyrtius Mela slew Mutius Listrio, the causer of his Citties overthrow.

The memorable act of Quintus Curtius, for the deliuerance of his Country.

His Statue of Brasse yet standing in Rome;

*This was the acceptable Sacrifice to the Goddess, and the Saviour of his Country. This was the Heire to the vertues of the chiefeſt Romaines, and the ſcandal of al cowardly men.
This was he that could not die, but by being profitable to the liues of his Fellow-Cittizens.*

Domitius reſ-cued from a dangerous Elephant.

A Noble nature in a true hearted Souldiour.

Fulvius Naſſus an honourable Romaine.
* A Lake in Hetruria.

The liues of many preferred before any care for his owne.

Mutius Scauola, a perpetuall mirrour to all poſterity.

Cneius Cepio, made his manly corage to appeare, in a matter worthy to be obserued. For, when hee beheld a huge mighty Elephant, stouping and make offer to seize on Domitius his Captaine: he preuented him quickly, by throwing himselfe vnderneath his bellie, which he stabd with so many stroakes of his Poniard, that the Elephant being faynt with paine, violence of his wounds, and losse of blood, fell downe dead, and with his fal, crushed him also to death, who made no spare of his owne life, to speede his Generals with safety.

Fulvius Naſſus, was carefull to winne himselfe faire reputation in Arms, when the Romaines his Companions and war-fellowes) being vanquished by Hannibal at the Lake of Thrasymena, and flying away like Cowards, hee stept betweene their pursuite and attaint, allowing them time for running, by making a wall, as it were, of himselfe and his horse in a narrow passage, where the flight of the one side, and following of the other, was meerey logd vp. The death of his horse was frightfull and terrible to the Horses of his enemies, and a safegarde also for himselfe, that he could not suddenlie bee surprized by many Numidians. So that, thorough his long resistance, euen vnto death, he saued the remainder of the Romaines liues, that fled from foorth their owne field of battell.

The valour of Mutius Scauola cannot be conflicted by eternity of ages. For he (all alone) amazed a victorious Prince, ready to possess himself of Rome, which must needs haue yeilded in verie fewe dayes, or be compelled to render or ruin it selfe, by falling into the Tarquins handes, and the people of Hetruria, verie desperate enemies.

This braue and Couragious Scauola, (without any communication of his desseigne) threw himselfe into his Enemies Army, not as a friend, but as an open enemy. He sought for King Porſenna in all places of the field, he found his Royall Pauillion, and slew the intendant on his affayres, as guesing by the riches of his habite, and the honour generallie done vnto him, that it had beene the King himselfe. Heereuppon, hee was apprehended, and brought before the King Porſenna, who suddenly conuerting rage into admiration, and admyration into pardon, sent backe Noble Scauola to Rome. And which is much more, he raised his siedege, as beeing fearefull, that some other courage, more fortunat then that of Mutius) should make a second attempt, and so prooue to bee his death indeede. But what gratitude did Scauola returne for this high fauor? that you shall perceiue by his owne wordes, which are these: Sir, for the kinnesse I haue receyued from your Maieſty, I purpose neuer to rest vnthankfull. Let me then tell ye, that there are yet in Rome, foure hundred gallant young men, who haue proiected how to kil you, or else to loose themselues in the aduerture.

Androcides the Samian, made the most aduantageable essay in Courage and perfection of valour, that anie of vs can desire to accomplish. For, being prisoner vnto Eupolemus the great Pyrate, who (vnaduisedly) had tolde him, that the verie next Night, hee purposed to surprise the Cittie of Samos (as doubtlesse the enterprife would haue beene infallible, because all the ableſt fighting Sami-ans were restrained in Peloponnesus) hee preuented him halfe a day before, by giuing him so strong a blowe with a Candlesticke vnder the eare, that so dyed the losse of his Countrey, and he together that had intended it. A matter questionlesse exceeding beleefe, that a man to saue a Cittie, and the Inhabitanes, would run into such a certainty of death, whereto hee meerey prostituted his life, because hee would not behold the place of his birth and Natiuitie, in the mercie of such an infamous and outragious Pirate.

It is in such actions (you my braue masters, & dainty sweet perfumed Courtiers, that true courage makes it selfe to be best seen: and not in committing effronteries and impudencies in our publicke streets,

He slew the Secretary to King Porſenna, as taking him
to bee the King.

The gratulation of Mutius
Scauola to K.
Porſenna.

Eupolemus the proud Pirate, that intended the subuerſion of Samos.

To such as are rather dishonour to Princes
Courts, then any credit at all.

streets, in bawdy-houses, yea, and in the frequent company of our best friendes. We are like to Lyons, that make no acknowledgement of their fostering nurses, Gouvernors or Guardians, if the colour and fashion of their garments be neuer so little changed. If all their humors that keepe vs company, do not iumpe and correspond with ours; immediately one is an Ass, another a Nouice; this fellow hath no complement, that neuer came where courage was; either hee is too sad, or too merrie, or else he hath no taste of our Court ayre: these are our most familiar discourings; yea, and (many times) all that we can say. Make a little better search into your selues henceforward, for som such faire occasions to appeare in, and that our outward shewe may not be by starts and passions, but on well formed and compleat desseigns. Regard aduisedly, wherein we may be profitable to our Prince and Countrie; and thereon immediately resolute, to effect some such one thing or other, as may be worthy each of the other. Let it appeare (then) that we are Captaines indeed, lest we be not reckoned worse then silly Soldiers: and let it be seene, that we are necessary helps then, when men would iudge vs vtterly vnprofitable. Let it be noted, that we haue courage then, euen when it faileth in our fellowes: and yet without accusing them of any cowardise but onely by attempting and executing more then they. Let vs then (in good earnest) performe the Rodomontade of Scipio Africanus, who was wont to say: I seeke not to be known to man by man, but I wou'd only make my selfe known to al the world.

Seleucus hearing and perceiuing, that euery man boasted and flattred him, that he was worthy to inherit the fortune and vertue of Alexander; returned this answer, You should bid me satisfie the credulity, which you haue conceived of my valor, and then you would quickly emptie mee of courage in aspyring, when you but make me to remember Alexander, who perfourmed more then a man can thinke, or anie way is able to do. He also said; Asia is yet the same field of battaile, where his Captains disputed about his heritage: but no man was to be found, that could answer his deseruings. Let vs striue to imitate the valiancy, and necessarie courage of Bertrand du Guesclin, who conquerd the fortune, enuy, hazards of war, and furie of the victorious. Let vs read the histories of such as (heeretofores) opposed themselues, against the good successe and vertue of the English men. Let vs not make esteeme only, but forme in example and singuler study, the valor of those ancient knights, that made this State of ours inuincible, and drew it out of decayed ruines, yea, out of a bottomlesse gulfe, wherein it appeared to be sunk, and (welneere) wholly swallowed. In dooing so, it is not to bee feared, that although we were no more then perticuler men, or Gentlemen, or Captaines, or Soldiers, yet we should attaine to worke woonders, and to arriue before the eyes of Commonweals, of Empires, Monarchies, and of their Princes, by whom (at length we should be admired, sought for, acknowledged; and recompenced, according to our owne wishes, and contrarie to the mediocrity of a wel gouerned hope. Aboue all, our courage declares it selfe, not checkable by a weake man, or one that is not so valiant as our selues; provided, that it be stil vnder our own charge, and can commaund in some such case, where it may well come off with dutie discharged. Otherwise, it will happen to vs, as Sophocles said:

Who lets his furious tongue walke liberally,
In checking some disordered quality:
And hath no reason but his owne bare braine,
Must looke himselfe to finde the like againe.

I haue seene some to misprize their own companions so mainly, that they offered much iniurie to Armes, and to the whol companie, whereof themselues were but poore dependants, seeming more in outward shew, then inward substance. For, a Vertuous Souldier, or he that is a man indeed, should alwayes bee consorted with iudgement, to supply the defects of such as are lesse then himselfe, and say; that although they bee not qualified in some one kinde, yet in some other, they owe nothing to him. One may bee a worthy Seruitor on Horseback, another on foote, euerie way equall to him, and so likewise in the other degrees of Manhood.

The eie is the most excellent part of the countenance, yea of the whol body: and yet notwithstanding, if a man were composed of eies only, he would rather be a monster, then any piece of perfection &

Bertrand du Guesclin a famous Souldier of France.

Practise and example are the best noats of good men, and to renowne their names to endlesse posterity.

Courage cannot be reproued by weaknesse.

Sophocles in Tragedy of Antiphon.

Of a vertuous Souldier and man indeed, how he maketh his best appearance.

A very excellent comparison.

A noated humour in ouer-many idle Gallants.

A deuise how to be beneficiall both to Prince and Country by care, forwardnesse & manly behauiour.

The vsuall brauadoe of Scipio Africanus.

The worthy answeres of Seleucus to his Parasites and Flatterers.

What kind of men are most to be contemned.

When Ignorance is not to be reckoned as a vice.

Of taking offence or displeasure.

Homer in Lib. 1 de Odys.

The picture of a constant wise man.

The words of noble Brasidas.

excellencie. Let vs neuet note then, whether a man be inferiour to vs in anie one vertue: but rather consider, that manie other Vertues are needfull for vs, which we bestow no paines to purchase. Let vs expresse contempt of vile and detestable men, that serue as spurs to whoring, Sodomy, Flatterie, and softnesse, which (among vices) are not onely enemies to true and perfect valour, but to the generall society of men, and Authours of scandall to all Nations. Ignorance is not to be counted as a Vice, when it is accompanied with simplicitie and naturall care for the auoyding of euill. But misprision of Vertue, and disdayne to compasse it, is not onely an odious brutality amongst true men: but (which is much more) a crime punishable by fyre and sword, and all other inflictions Customarily due, to the perseuerance of foule and guilty offenders or euil doers.

There is no necessity, that a valiaunt man should be apt to spleene or offence, through the riots of a Court Minion, of a Buffone, or of some young Sir, that hath not as yet learned how to be silent, or when to speake to purpose. A Gentleman of couragious perfection indeed, should bee of the humour of inuincible Hercules, of whom Homer deliuereth testimony in the first Booke of Odissaes.

He made no more account of frowards words,
Then of the Fle, that silly harme affords.
He differed (in all) from common kinde:
And Fortunes frownes with him were as the wind.

Hee ought likewise, in all his other actions, to correspond with these precepts.

The constant wise, is euer like himselfe,
And neare shrinkes courage at the losse of pelfe:
The death of Children cannot make him dye,
But, when help fails, Hope doth the place supply.

He should not conceite, that he is to deale with some small enemy, but rather to crie out with couragious Brasidas, of whom wee haue already spoken. O God, there is not anie thing of so weake power; but, if it durst defend it selfe: it could finde meanes whereby co preserve it owne life. Hee vsed these words, in regarde of a Mousse that bit him by the Finger, as he thrust his hande into a Fraile of drye Figges.

Demetrius beeing at Thebes, advisedly noted a man that was Lame of all his

Members; and of whom, a Court Musk-Minion, made a subiect of scornefull Laughter, saying: This is not he, that hath (til this day) tardied our victorie, for Nature hath made him a Cripple. it is true (answered Demetrius) but how doost thou know, whether reuenge and disdain haue any other weapons then hands onely, considering that mine haue done no seruice at al for the surprizing of this Cittie?

CHAP. III.

Of those meanes which Princes ought to obserue, for beeing well attended with Gentlemen and valiaunt Captaines of true perfection.

Princes that seeke the Conseruation of their subiects, and to leaue peaceable estates and dominions vnto theyr Children, ought Religiously to ordaine (next to the establishment of Iustice) that lawes should be allowed to perticuler families, wherby children may bee educated euen from theyr infancy, as destenied to the inclination of such Artes, as (by manifest experience) their nature is subiected vnto, by the secret power of the more or lesse great blessings of God, and as it pleaseth him to extend or shut vppe his graces in one more then tn another. Yet notwithstanding, as accommodating the diuers inclinations of men, to perfect that great hermony which maintaineth the world, and combineth humain societie with so strict a bond, that (as it often commeth to passe) the very greatest haue neede of the meanest mens help, & al sciences, yea, euen the silliest, do tend to one selfesame end, by diuers precepts & contrary manners, yet all for the seruice of nature. For otherwise it would fal out, that common weales would conuert into deserts: and men (being apt but to one exercise only, how excellent soeuer) should haue no commerce togither, but only in words & vse of the Elements, which being wholly contrary (as it seemeth) in that common concord,

That the meanest or silliest creature is not to be despised

Lawes for the education of Children, euen frō their Infancy.

The blessings of God not limited to any bounds or measure.

No one exercise, how excellent soeuer, is fit for all men.

concord, for fortifying and maintaining this great building; and the lesser also, which boasts his owne mirror and liuely figure: doth teach vs, that wee ought to haue a generall vertue of profiting: and yet neuertheles, that it is necessary therein to make vse of different effects and proprieties. This was well knowne to Hesiodus, when he said:

*The very darkest sullen night,
Helpes Nature with as deere delight,
As the brightest Sun-shine day,
That the Gods most honor may.
They both most necessary be,
Healthfull alike in each degree.*

Let me then tell ye, that neuer (throughout all the ancient Monarchies) was the like inuented, for the institutiō of youth; as the Discipline vsed by the Great Signior, towards the Amasoglants, and children of the tribes. The only euill (which is great, in regard of God, yet litle according to his estate & maner of gouerning) is, in that Christians are compeld to renounce their Religion, to imbrace that of Mahomet, which (at this day) is the verie greatest, and most respected in all the East. Take off this defect, and then there is not any thing (I say) in the worlde, neither did all former ages euer afford the like. For you may behold in Constantinople, a Carauani or numberlesse troope of yong Boies, that are carefully tended by Maisters of all estates in al such things as they are most apt vnto, without any constraint of Nature, and for the space of a yeare, they are permitted all kinds of exercises; to the end, that becomming indiges of themselues, each one may afterward pursue his owne instinct, and best inclination. Some are found to be fit for warre, and they are as quickly recommended to Maisters meete for such instruction: yet with so great an obseruation, that time shall rather bee wanting, then care of their employment. Such as are noted to please themselues, in the composing of ships or gallies, with paper sailes, and pack thred tacklings, or anie other stufte, more assiduate to their yong fancies, then other; they are forthwith bestowed in the Sea Arsenale, & instructed in al affaires fit for the sea. These docible and debonaire spirits are differently employd: some to Phisick, others to priesthood, & some beside to iudiciary seruices. Finally, such as are of so grosse temper, that no faire apprehension shineth in them, are imployed in Gardening, a middle sort in Architecture, Painting, & Horology. They that seeme wholly disgraced by nature, are instructed in Carpentry, Taylory, and twisting of Cables, making of sailes and many other mean offices: which are by their aptnesse (in them) very gracious in the great Signiors respect, & begeteth them both lands & perpetual pensions.

It is necessary in a Christian Oeconomy, to make the like practise, as we plainly behold in the fabrick of man. If we look vpon our bodies, or those of beasts, wee may perceiue many members to haue their distinct operations; without the intrusion of any others office, or that the enuy of inferiors discontent themselues at the dignity of their superiors, or any of them (either through discord or partiality) do refuse to lend one another their assistance. It behooueth I say, that in well ordered Commonweales, but especially among Christians, the same course should bee kept and maintained one with another: and although our charges and estates are different, yet that wee should euermore continue vnited in our spirits; and with a iust desire, to supply the defects of our associates, and also to assift them. For it is very requisit, that we should be all like to traualers, wandering by diuers wayes, yet all to arriue at one hauē in the end.

But aboue all, a King ought to constrain his Nobility, to cause young Gentlemen to be instructed in good Letters, for Capacity of administring the great and soveraign Magistracies of his kingdom: for thereby must needs ensue, that dignity will be more venerable, iustice in better respect, and iudgements more legitimate. We may see (to our shame) that at this day the greater part of Magistrates in all our Parliaments of France, receiue their originall from plaine Plebeians and Yeomen, who neuer could haue honour so liuely imprinted in their brows and souls; as they that naturally are heires, to I know not what admirable and holy vertue, which (with no meane aduantage) appeareth rather in young spirits of Nobilitie, then in them of the thirde ranke, who alwayes haue but feeble Conceptions, and neuer eleuate or rayse their thoughts, except it bee to euill, as either to sedition, or infamous and dishonest againe.

Hesiodus his verses, thus translated out of Greeke.

The institution obserued by the great Signior for youth.

How young Boyes are tended by diligent Maisters.

The pursuite of severall inclinations.

For Warre.

For making of Ships and Gallies.

Phisick, Religion, & Law.

Gardening, Painting, and Clocke-making.

Our Christian rule or disposition, compared to the body of man, or of Beastes.

Gouernment in Christian Commonweales.

The stronger are to support the weaker.

The especiall Office and duty of a King.

The disgrace of France at this present day.

Owles are no way to bee compared with young Eagles.

The worth of Sunne bright Nobility.

Of presidents and Councellors in the Courtes of Kings.

Base gripple Slavery, is alwayes enemy to Gentil-
lity.

A great error in the Gentry of these daies.

Many are made capable of warre, against their naturall inclination.

What spirits are reputed fit for Warre, by pertaking in the degrees of heate.

again. Whereunto wee may ad also, that their courages are cowardly, standing amazed and confounded at the smallest accidents; neyther are they so apt to outstand tumults and ciuill inconueniences, as Sun-bright Nobility, which euen of it selfe is engirt with some celestiaall flame, that causeth the vulgar people to apprehende more in their opposition against them, then in thousands of poore spirits that are of their owne quality, whose fathers at the best, were but Farmers, keepers of Granges and Dairies, which they helde at a certaine price, and annuall Rent.

Nobilitie then doth shame to it selfe, by not seeking to appeare in the venerable authority of the Senate: considring, that Presidents and Counsellors in Courtes Soueraigne, seeme to be voluntarie Tutors to the Prince, and as Noble Guards to his inuiolable Greatnesse. By this meanes they would free them from the gripes of a huge heape of wretched Officers, and they should neuer be subiected to the mercenary iudgment of their subiects, who mistake themselues verie suddenly, and dispose both of the liues and goods of Gentlemen drawn into action: euen like to their Shop-keeping fathers, in their esteeme of paltry wares. In this manner, the King should haue a more sound, sure, and strong election of men meete for warre, which now adayes hee cannot haue: because Gentlemen doo (indifferently) imploy all their sonnes to such trades, as is impossible in conueniency for them, considering the dissimilitude of their natures, repugnancy of their humors, and contrariety of their spirits, which is more, or which is lesse apt vnto one office then to another. I doubt not, but at length thorough the great scarcety to be found of martiall minded men: all sorts of Gentlemen will not know howe to appeare in the diuersitie of warre hazards, whither they be ciuill or straunge. Yet I may verie well say, that there are many carried thereto, contrarie to the first conception of their Genius, who (neuerthelesse) being apt to diuers thinges: can accommodate their spirits therto, albeit it is much lesse natural to them, then somthing els. This is the reason why Aristotle saide, that lukewarme water was cold, in regard of that which is boiling, and yet esteemd hot, in consideration of that which is ycie. This is asmuch to say, as that the moderat spirits of gentlemen, pertaking in the thirde or fourth degree of heat, may serue for warre. If so, much better then should they be apt and profytable for the affayres of State and policy. Such also, as encline to the fourth or fift degree, do pertake of an influence more strong and pregnant for war, then anie other exercise else. This is to bee discerned in the Nature or case of our infancie, which telleth vs by our yongest carriage, what will be the inclination of our most solide age, and inciteth, nay, meerey exalteth vs (with a certaine violence) to acknowledge that which shall (one day) be either necessary or profitable at the least. According to the saying of Hesiodus.

All Infant Pleasures, Playes, and Ioyes,
All youthfull Apish trickes and toyes,
Our Cradle-power, which breaks no bands:
Our first essayes in riper houres,
Our weaknesse, strength, or what else ours,
As in a painted Table stands:
For following yeares therein to see,
What good or bad successe will bee.

Hesiodus, concerning our yeares of infancie, expressing thereby, what our stronger age will be.

Princes and great Lordes ought to enstruct their Pages in such exercises, as do best answere vnto the condition of true Gentlemen, and should make no vse of their seruice, in seruile, base, or abiect occasions: as in these daies they do, without any care of gouernment, or prescribing them some honest forme of conduction. I protest, as I see the carriage of these ill taught times, I had much rather place my son or Kinsman, with a Spittle Maister, or Hospitall Keeper, then with a Prince: considering how badly Pages are entertained, and so slenderlie enstructed in anie vertuous actions, as wee cannot distinguish them from common Lackeyes, but by the outward appellati- on, beeing else employed for all vses; euen all one, with the verie foulest condition Varlet of the house. One while they are Gourmands, by some Groome of the Chamber; another while beaten by a Scullion of the Kitchen: and beaten they bee at euerie moment, but not to any good purpose; and more for Ceremonie, then with any vertuous intent of their Correction. They are baselie reputed, and badly nourished, whereby they constraime them, yea, and of themselves are meerey constrained to forget and

How Princes and Lords should educate their Pages.

Pages very hardly distinguished from common Lackies.

The little care and respect that Gentlemen haue of their Pages.

The Page is heere put to the Lackies Office.

These are tearmed our gracelesse Gallants.

The maine & chiefeft inconuenience about all other.

Of Gentlemen, still in the Princes sight.

and decline, from their owne first faire and naturall disposition, to sharke and get by vnlawfull meanes, such things as are most needfull for them: Some teach them how to be dissolute at their Table, for a Trencher can be no sooner offered: but it is presently swept ouer with the Nailes and Fingers; yea, with the whole hand, and tongue too sometimes. Afterward, perhaps Nature being scarce halfe contented: poore Youthes, they trot after their Galloping Maisters, who rid a great deale of ground in a very short while, whē their Pages follow not so fast with their feet; as with frequent and disordred passions. By which meanes, Youth neither do or can learne any thing among them, but forgetfulnesse of vertue and good manners, by the example of indiscretion & folly in their Maisters.

Moreouer, we may see our streetes crowded with a heap of young Gentlemen, who haue much adoe to maintain themselves: and yet they must haue attending Pages, to trudge with Tokens or Loue-scripts, to Madame or Mistris Many-better. And then come they poasting after, euen through the chiefeft parts of the Citty, not shaming to let the world see their gracelesse insolence. Now; the very great hurt of all, consisteth in this, that the whole multitude of Pages (as well those about Princes, as them that follow great Lords and lesser Gentlemen, being themselves ill bred, and worse disciplinde:) are compelled to bastardise their naturall splendour, by putting on a new habite, of disordred, shamelesse, and monstrous behauiour; that (afterward) they looke rather like wilde and barbarous Albani-ans, then any true borne Gentlemen of blood. By which meanes, Commonweales are afflicted, Kinges lewdly serued, Magistrates scarcely obeyed, the Lawes dispised, and confusion embraced.

Beside, a Gentleman brought vp out of the Princes eye, beginneth to grow disdainfull of him, when hee once apprehendeth (and maliciously enough) that he is not in any obligation to him: he waxeth proud, and such a man soone forgetteth al proportion and measure. The very highest degree of such a mans seruice, is to domineere and rule, to mount into the Seat of his Maister, Lord, or Prince: for, whatsoeuer hee seeth beneath, or on either side, is nothing to him, and the World (all this while) honoureth none more; then such a man.

Howbeit, the Paganes did euermore acknowledge, that Generositie is more familiar with good, then vicious men, and, that valour is more domestick and naturall to a man that is temperate, peaceable, and milde, then the proud and ambitious, who is of the condition of a weake stomacke, which coueteth more meat, then it can resolute and digest. Princes ought to be respectiue, of such a rich and sanctified enstruction, and not admit such ouerture to the desseignes of Gentlemen; ouer greedie and couetous, in aspiring daily to some nouell degree, yet no one of them seeing the way, by the eye of his owne power, or Iustice of his merit. Thus all runs wrong, for God blesseth no Mans actions, but his that doth well, & withdraweth his eye from wicked inclinations: who wil haue no other King, then the State, or any Law, but such as may bring him in some benefite. Vertue is the Primum mobile of courage, that seemeth (by his owne power) to attract all things to it selfe, that is required in the perfection of valour: which is onely borne to be entrusted, and entrusted to serue, and (by seruice) to yeild it selfe not onely beneficiall, but necessarie also.

Princes in these daies, are faultie of too little care, that Nobility should be more forward in the exercise of vertue: and themselves also doe lend most imployment, to such as are more commended to them, then fit for vse. Vertue giueth no more hire to the intercessions of a Courtier, made honorable and rich altogether; then to one of her owne breeding and bringing vp. Hence should arise all the Officers of a Crowne, and hence are aborted all the Creatures of a King, that leaneth wholly to passion, & nothing to vertue. He ought then to hold the list in his owne hand, to foresee each man in his profession and degree, and hence he will deriue: that his Financiers or Cherker-men, shal bee without fraud; his Councillours free from partialitie, and his Governours voyde

The nature of an ambitious man.

The Pagans opinion concerning Generosity.

An especiall duty imposed on Princes.

What endeauors are blessed of God.

Vertue the onely first mouer of Courage.

The ouer-much neglect of Princes in these dayes.

The check-roule should be held in the Kings owne hand, for the election of his followers.

voyde of faction. All their ayme and scope, will be to iustifie by their effects, the good choyse and lawfull election, which the Prince hath made of such persons. And although they should come somewhat short of merit, yet would they stretch their endeouour; to deserue the voyces of the honestest Men, and the grace of their second Creator.

Honor aduanced, is the peoples best contentment.

What ensueth by the advancement of bad and vnworthy men.

The feare of God is to be preferred before all things else whatsoever.

The opinion of some wicked Machiuelists.

Instructions giuen out of Gods Booke, for the seruice of Kings.

When a Man of Honor is aduanced, the people doe looke on it with a pleasing eye, and discerne (therein) the wisdom of their Prince: who instantly is exalted to admiration; from admiration, to intire loue of his Subiects; and from thence to the blessing of GOD, who plausibly entertaineth the suffrages of the Common-weals suppliants, for the health and preservation of their Prince. Contrariwise, all is in disorder, when bad men hold the best places of credit: then the people mutiny; the Princes iudgement is scandalized; common affection cooleth; the curse of God embraceth, and bringeth the latest cauter that cleaueth to this euill. Aboue all, I wish that he, of whose seruice a Prince shall make vse, should haue the feare of God before his eyes; without which: all Wisedome will easily be conuerted into craft; valour into violence; Iustice into Crueltie; Pollicy into Monopolies; and without which (I say) all those things which heauen hath best bestowed on vs for the best, will only be Instruments of the worst. Without this, our very affections, are as so many violent torments, and cruell Hels both to the Soule and Body, and our reason is nothing else, but meere trumpery and deceipt. O what inflictions could I wish to some Machiuelists, who maintaine, that such as bee bound to Conscience, reason, and Lawes, are no meete Seruants to attend on Princes: but that flattery is to be preferred, both aboue Lawes and Nature.

If it be so, that those blessed Quires of Gods Booke, do beare witnessse, that No Man can serue two Maisters. Commanding vs also else-where; To feare God, and honor the King: it is then a matter very euident, that the most part of all other Seruants, doe yeilde nothing else but eye-seruice onely. And this is the reason, that Kinges are euill serued farre off, and betrayed in secret. They that being Seruants to their King, will also do seruice to God; they euermore walke after one manner. They serue to content their Conscience, and not they eye of their Maister. They propose God before their eyes, as both the Beholder of their actions, and searcher of their harts. They waite for his grace and Wages: being assured of recompence and reward on his part, when they doe their dutie, although it bee to vnthankfull Maisters. This is the Seed from whence Kinges should gather all hope, of being maintained, strengthened, and wel serued. From hence ought they alwaies to chuse their Councillors of State, and al the, to whom they will communicate their power and authoritie.

The Prince that desireth to accomplish all these things, both for the quiet of his owne Conscience, and happy administration of his Estate: must be sure to haue no Flatterers about him, vnprofitable persons, Loue-Brokers, voluptuous and Epicurian Courtiers, that make the publike Purse, serue for the expences of their perticular Luxurie, gormandize and pomp, while (in the meantime) the vertuous, and such as haue deserued much better of the State: remaine far enough off, slenderly known, without Grace, and without Honour, (I meane no other, then that of their owne proper merit) who neuertheless are (ostentimes) inestimable, and more worthy of administration; then of the blind and briske (let mee not say faint-hearted) fauours, which the Princes of these times vse towardes some young Gallants, that smell more of Ciuet, then the Cannons Powder, and much more of the Woman, then Man: yet vnworthy of eyther Sexe, their depraued Natures are so highly subiected to infamous Vices, which sunder them fro those common proprieties, that do let vs know a Man, to be truly a Man, and a Woman, truly a Woman. I am perswaded, that it was of them, which that Great Man spake, on the Grecian Theater, saying:

You Swinish men, that haue no other care,
But onely for such food, as you prepare
To gorge your foule polluted trunkes withall:
Meere Swine you ate, and such your actions all.
Like

Such as serue God and their Prince.

The Seede that yieldeth Kings the best encrease.

Especially observations for a Prince, that would be serued with good men indeed.

These are Carpet Squiers, not Knights fit for a Field.

A Mirrour for many, that dare not behold it.

Like them you run, such is your leaden pace ;
Nor Soule, nor reason shineth in your face.
Stabled you are within the Courts of Kings,
Not fit for Councell, Armour, or such things
As to your Natures are contrary quite.
Ea'sly you can faire Ornaments disgrace,
Therefore you fit not such a royall place:
Kings loose them elues, that doe in you delight.

Great men will not willingly looke vpon serious and weighty considerations.

But why do I seeke to instruct Gentlemen, seeing they strive (as much as possible that they may) not to behold any lawfull action: because their Soules should bring no iudgement against themselves for the excesses which they haue committed? It is enough for them, to make some essay of that which is written in Saint John, to wit: That if all Testimonies of Scripture, and lawfull imitations doe faile vs: yet notwithstanding our Conscience, and Nature it selfe doth sufficiently shew, what is our dutie. Looking thorow all Windowes of Equity, Iustice, and Reason; Pagane Authours tooke knowledge, yea, and did set down in Writing: that there were Furies, who inflicted reuenge on the iniuries, as also on the sinnes of Men, which is nothing else, but the torments of vile and wicked Consciences.

The Window of Equity, Iustice, and Reason, acknowledged by the Pagans.

This is the worme whereof the Prophet Esay speaketh; it is the Worme (I say) that neuer dyeth, but byteth and teareth without intermission. These are the Tapers and Torches, which terrifie and burne our harts: This is that which is called, the remembrance of our wicked and abhominable liues. Epicurus himselfe, being an enemy to the Deitie, could yet confesse, that the very great paine of such as sinned, was, that they had sinned: for the punishment of wickednesse, is wickednesse it selfe. The Man that is attainted with this great scruple in his Soule, is of no worth, neither can be valiant, or come any thing neere to that happy quality. For he that is a perfect knight indeed, ought not onely to win the Conquest of his Enemies: but must also triumphe over the Passions of his owne Soule, which must be cleane, and exempt from all vnlawfull desires, or absurde and base villainies. That which was presented to the Emperour Theodosius, is well worthy to be followed by him, in whom I would decypher perfect valiancie, as thus.

The confession of Epicurus concerning Sinners.

The Anatomy of a true and perfect Knight indeed

10
Though in rich India, or a further Land,
Thou art adorde, and dost o're men commaund,
Although the Medes and Arabes stoupe to thee:
Yet, if not iust, valiant thou canst not be.
Thou art no Man, if terror sway thy Soule,
Nor can be valiant, if weake thoughts contoule.
Such follies leaue thee to thy selfe alone,
In torment, sadnesse, and despairing mone.
But when thou dost o're maister fond desires:
Then thy faire Soule to her true pitch aspires,
And makes thee meet for Kingdomes, or all Nations;
Hauiug once conquerd thine owne priuate passions.
Vertue doth neuer fight, but for successe.
If then base thoughts the Soule of Man possesse,
And be not trod downe, at their first arise:
In suffering them, the greatest peril lies.
Then boldly check thy inward dull conceaits,
Shun those deepe blames that on neglect awaites,
Let not the Lawes reprocue thy care and heed:
So shalt thou be a Man, in name and deed.

This other of Clandian, is very little different.

20
If th' action, which is tearmed valiance,
Be not in vertue: then tis impudence.

30
Knights of greatest courtesie, Captaines most remarkable, and Kinges of highest fame, did euermore accompany their Armes, and strengthen them by a gentle and liberall knowledge in Vertue: whereby they could best decipher such about them; as were most or least apt for Warre seruices, making distinction of their valour; according to the circumstances and ordinary manner of Souldiours; were it in apparrelling themselves for fight, or in firming the breaches happening in their Field, or in exercising and applying themselves to some other seruice, conuenient to the time, place, and commaundement giuen them. By this meanes, Men of merit addressed themselves vnto the Prince, who made profession to be careful and respectiue, of every perticular wise and hardy mans courage, and vpon good note thereof: to render double recompence, that is to say, by benefis, and by iust commendations. For hee must neuer hope to see vertuous Men flourish, or their actions in true apparance: if they be not recompenced, and some way satisfied.

40
50
The Prince that desireth to finde valiancy in his men of Warre, ought to imitate the discipline of Alexander Seuerus, the Romaine Emperour: who would haue his Souldiours to be well armed, well instructed, and continually to haue some Mony in their Purfes, but (by no meanes) of that humour, as Sphicrates the

The present, giuen to the Emperour Theodosius.

Vertue hath alwayes bin the best ground to bulde all actions on.

The eye of the Prince to be fixed vpon each mans due worth and merit.

The Warre-discipline of Alexander Seuerus, Emperour of Rome.

Iphicrates of contrary mind to Alexander Scuerus.

Julius Caesar concerning his Souldiers.

The saying of Thucidides.

The Great Turkes ordering of his Souldiers now adayes.

Tartarians continually in pay with the Turke.

The only encouragement of Souldiers, when they are well payed and respected.

the Captaine wished his Warre-followers to be, to wit; avaritious, amorous, and full of voluptuousnesse. For he was wont to say, that as they were persecuted by those three violent passions; euen so would they prostitute themselves, and forsake all perill, to satisfie their own desseignes, and the free compassing of their base desires.

True it is, that Caesar wished his Souldiers, to haue faire and rich Armes, because they might haue the more occasion to be knowne, for auoyding the shame of flight; & not to fight so much for the worth of their Armes, as for their liues. But he was deceiued, considering as Thucidides saith. The valiant Man is alwaies himselfe, and his vertue appeareth much more, when he is disadvantaged and afflicted: then when he strengtheneth himselfe with some apparance, if it be not necessary.

The Great Turke, who continueth (euen at this day) the Military Arte of the Romaines, and causeth it to be much more obserued, then the Spaniards doe, (who are in very deede, but Apes of the Turkes conduct) hath so admirable an obseruation: that a troupe of an hundred thousand men, do resemble rather a peaceable Congregation of people, assembled together to heare a Sermon; then an Army to fight against the World. The Great Turke (I say) is euermore accompanied with an incredible multitude of valorous men, which he winneth out of Tartaria, and a great his Wages and endlesse pay; like as the Switzers are in France. He helpeth himselfe also with the Souldiers of Mysia; of Europe; of the Albanians, sometimes called Epirottes; of the Thessalians, now called Fullaires; and of the Arabes, that tearme themselves Alarbes. All these glorious Nations (for their Armes) are so cherished by the Othomans, that there is no day ouer-passeth them: but they doe receiue some honourable and notable reward and respect, from the Generals of the Turkish Armies, who employ them at euery moment, in verie great and perilous enterprises, wherein (neuertheless) all these Men do carrie themselves, with such prudence and iudgement, as is not to be a little wondered at.

New and fresh Armes is provided them, vpon the quickest and suddainest returne, and albeit their successe hath not answered to the premeditated desseigne: yet, in the very least performance of well doing, they are not left vnacknowledged, but vsed, as if the attempt had beene happily ended. Hence ensued those great Stratagems at Modon, Chely, Siget, Schaffarin in the Georgie, and at Traneils. In all which places, they surmounted the valour and fortune of the Romaines, the hardinesse of the Parthians, and the cunning and industry of the Christians; whose troupes resembled Carauans of Goates, that make motion with their mouths on all thinges indifferently, how profitable or hurtfull soeuer they be.

The Persians, who seeme to be more ciuillized then the Turkes, and yet (notwithstanding) are lesse prouident and capable of great matters, doe shut vp their Children of good Birth, in certain places of the Field-Country, which they call Spitaf Kier Belti, that is to say; The entrance into the Signeury of vertue, where they haue Maisters to enstruct them, according to their inclinations: but at the charges of their Parents, vntill such time as it may be known, whether the Youthis wil afterward be beneficiall to the Sophy, or no. For thenceforward, they are taken and maintained at his expences, to the number of two thousand, and are then called, Spiers Kiram Sophy, that is to say; Children of the Signior Sophy.

These people, whom we tearme barbarous, and their Kings, called Tyrants by vs; I feare shall find (at the latter day) more grace in the grace of the Soueraigne Iudge: then the Princes and people of Europe, who make no account, or verie little (at the most) of the Youth that is vnder their Empire, or the order and discipline Oeconominall of the State, which is much lesse obserued with them, I will not I say then among the common people of Asia; but euen among the Toupinanbous & Magistrats, who doe enstruct their Children in the Historie of their Ancestours, the Father telling to his Sonne; what fights they haue had against their Neighbors; what victories were obtained; and the routes which they endured. All these thinges are deliuered with fatherly exhortations,

Good will wanteth not though successe oftentimes faileth.

Comparison of the Persians with the Turkes, and the education of their Children.

Children of the Signior Sophy.

Christendom hath lesse care of youth, then Heathen Nations haue.

Instructions of Pagan Fathers to their Sonnes.

hortations, to continue them in well doing, for publike benefit, and to shew themselves ieaious imitatets of their fore-goers, who (they tell them) are in Heauen, full of Glory and Triumphe: because they continually maintained the cause of their Countrey, and defended their poore Cottages, from the inuasions of their ordinarie Enemies.

The care of the Parthians for their yong Nobility in former times.

In former times, the Parthians had such diligent care, for husbanding the Spirits of their young Nobility, that the more part of their Lawes discourfied on nothing else. By which meanes they were inuincible, and euermore equall to the Romaine Empire, yet there was more Soueraignty, and lesse Barbarisme, in the commaundes of the Arfacides, their Kinges: then in the Empire of the Cesars, who were (almost all of them) so abhominable, as all the Vices of the World, did beget their most monstrous qualities, from the imperfections of those Tyrants of Europe.

Comparison of the Parthian Arfacides with the Romaine Cesars.

Finallie, they lost Europe at length, yeilding it to the transport of the Mahometanes, who keepe it (at this day) more stronglie, then we doe therest. And, if we obserue no better discipline, then that which now wee doe: it is to bee feared, that before many yeares passe ouer our heades, the Rheine will scarcely serue for Frontiers to the Othomans Monarchie, who extend the Threds of their ambitious couetousnesse, not onely vpon Germanie, which can hardlie defend it selfe; but on the rest of Christendomes happinesse; yea, ouer all that is further off from the East, then the East is from their felicitie, and the West from ours. Because it is impossible, yea, almost vniust, that the hand of God should bee succourable to such, as obserue no Equity; but contemne his Lawes, despise Soueraigne Magistracy, making themselves in all, and by al, vterly vnworthy of his diuine blessings, which must be sought for with humble and lowly harts. The Paganes themselves do confesse.

The couetous ambition of the Othomans, for enlarging their Dominion.

The writing and confession of the Pagans.

The Goddess, by prayers are satisfied, When some iust Soules are applied, To satisfie their Deities: For generall iniquities.

Ouer and beside all, the onely meanes to haue men valiant, is, to make no ac-

10

20

30

40

50

count of Cowards, and such as are but prating companions, nor to admit them (in any manner whatsoever) to any Offices and dignities of War: though (in these daies) the quite contrary is practised: for Regiments are giuen to simple Clerks, that surrender them againe the very same day; Treasurers places are bestowed on impudent persons, and the Princes lodging is kept by such, as scarcely are any sound well-willers. All degrees are valued by Mony, buying & selling are openly allowed, so that there is no recompence or respect made of true valor; onely hee that hath wherewithall, may bee a Governour in some place, which he may likewise sel again, to the most-giuer. In all the Empire of the Turk, which is more (by halfe) then the Romans had: there are but 216. Forts or Holds, which also are seated on the Frontiers, as well of the Sea, as of the firme Land. At euery three yeares end, the Governours are changed, or receiue new power to bee longer continued. They can receiue no other dead-payes, then the Soldiers of the old bands, who being ouer-spent in war, or laden with wounds, or crazed by age: are to be receiued into the Grand Signiors fortresses, where an honorable pension is bestowed on them, which they tearme Timar. Hereby ensueth, that all men are made vse of in this bright Monarchy, for such as are aged people, gouty, or lame, do keep the walles, while the younger doe fortifie the Prince and his Lieutenants in the Field, hoping (one day) to haue entertainment in those Fortes. By this means, Souldiers are neuer in miserable quality in the great Turks iurisdctions, which maketh them the more hardy & valiant: knowing, that (in their retreat from seruice) they shall neuer want, by any discommodity (whatsoever) happening to them.

The onely meanes to be assured of such as are valiant men.

All degrees and Offices passe currant for mony by buying and selling.

The Turkes Fortresses, and Governours of the.

All men are made vse of in the Turkes dominions, that no one may be seene in any miserable condition, for the discouraging of others.

Five Mosques in Natolia, for young and old, that none may be seene in pouerty.

For, beside those Fortresses on the Confines of Asia, and Europe, there are five Mosques in Natolia, some whereof were builded by the Mahometane Emperors, and others by their Bashaes, and the least reuenues belonging to any one of them, is forty thousand Ducats of annual Rents. There is a publike Schoole, where the poore are instructed, and beside, there is a verie goodly House, well fitted with most exquisite Bathes, where, where, all that are billeted by the Aga, Colonell of the Infantry; are nourished, maintained, and well tended, being sickly, weake, or aged, and all things are so well ordered, as no one can bee wearie, or dislike of their entertainment, or iudge it other then it ought to be.

The bestowing of honourable charges for the wars.

All honourable charges of men for the Warres, are imparted to such, as have best reputation among the Souldiours. If at any time some offence be committed, vnworthy of the former opinion conceiued of mans valour, he is dismissed from his authority: yet without any infamous note, or desperate hope of being againe reintegrated, by course of time, which moderateth all things, and changeth the counsels and humours of Princes, who appeare (by an indifferent chastisement) to haue satisfied both the Law and their owne lenity, in one selfe same subiect.

Abra-Bashae, repealed from his place, and Sinan-Bashae advanced thereto.

Thence came it, that Bashae-Abra, hauing disordred himselfe in the Georgie, was repealed and disgraced, and Sinan-Bashae placed in his stead, who succeeding in the room, of a Man ill handled for his faults: stood bound (by all these considerations) to behaue himselfe so well; that the Great Signior could receiue no mislike in his carriage, for hee regained what his Predecessour had lost, beating and chasing the Persians with so large an vsury of vengeance; that his Military seruices performed in the vpper Asia, were little indebted to the of Alexander the Great, although he was of no such temper. Longtime after, returning home with triumph and victory, in the Cittie of Constantinople: he was slaine by a Foole, that begd an Almes of him, and which Sinan made himselfe ready also to giue him. Wherein may bee obserued, that this great and fortunate Mirrour dyed, in doing the Office of a Christian, and not of a Turke, that is to say; in giuing an Almes, and rendring Justice to the Porta. After his death, the other was admitted to his charge againe; and then he redeemed the iniuries formerly receiued, by such worthy actions of seruice, as surruied the obliuion of his first defects.

Sinan-Bashae coming with triumph and victory to Constantinople was slaine by a Foole.

Sinan-Bashae being dead, Abra-Bashae was readuanced.

I referre now to your owne iudgements, if these people (which we call barbarous) may not iustly (and in good earnest) make vs blush, considering, that the greater part of them, which hold great charges among vs in these daies: doe declare themf lues vtterly vnworthy of them, and because there is no punishment for them, men are as little regarded, as a Varlet of the Chamber. Hence ensueth it, that the Prince is miserable, and confusion is so great among his Followers, that were it not for the huge throng and multitude of Noblemen, which ardently accost and company him, to couer this imperfection: within short while we should be buried in the State ruines, which in the end must needes fall out, if no better order be prescribed for Souldiours, and some endeour vsed, for maintaining daily a sufficient number, that may serue as a bound or banke, against the tempestuous billowes of Strangers, who doubtlesse will triumph ouer vs continuallie, vtill we haue provided for this important necessity, wherof (notwithstanding) no account at all is made.

Though it bee most true, that the Romaine Empire began to loose it selfe, from the day, when Military policy was violated, for, afterward, they that durst not so much as dreame of Italye: made no doubt at all to assault it, yea, and to force it, to the shame and confusion of them, that contemned the order religiously obserued by their Predecessours. The infamous corruption in State Councillours of Princes, was the only cause thereof: yet some others are perswaded, that the vniuersall generous ruine, ensued perticularly to them; when they sold their Country to their enemies, as Aeneas and Antenor did, of whom (I think) they are descended. For all was set to sale for Money, both the offices of Magistrats, and seats of Iudges.

And euen so is it in these daies, honours of Warre cannot be had, without such manner of commerce, so that (at length) publike commodity will be brought into a monstrous Caos, the first Sepulcher of the Elements. Armes will be made subiect to Mony, euen as they were among the Romaines, whose Prætorian troupes sold the Empire for good ready Mony, as bringing it to the common Out-cry, fairest offerer, and latest

Barbarous Nations may iustly make vs Christians to blush at our behauiour.

Danger of Buriall in the ruines of the State.

By what means the Romaine Empire began to confound it selfe.

The infamous corruption in Councillours of Estate to Princes.

Warre honours are bartered, bought and sold, euen as they were among the Romaines.

The saying of an Affricane Prince, concerning Rome.

Bad men thrust better deseruers out of all fauour and respect.

The Authors Conclusion and wish, to the Nobilitie of France.

The vertues of other Princes, ought to be a spurre to ours in these dayes.

latest Purchaser. So that, it may be said of France, as a Prince of Affrica was wont to do of Rome: Oh goodly City to be sold, if any man had Money enough to buy it. And very certaine it is, that if the King of Spain had neuer so little intelligence in this Kingdome, as hee hath had too much: he should not neede to desire it. He can forme Creatures enow heere, to be buyers for him, and (it may bee) that haue long since bought the Pillers of the State, with Monies meete for so glorious an exploit. We are all carried thither, the Market beginneth to open, the Traffiques hope is not a little, neyther is there any danger in the desseign, for impunity raigneth generally. The wicked doe thrust good men out of all fauour, accounting them vnprofitable Members, and desertfull of no Name, among such a number of strange Cabalists, who thinke France to be no better then a Mart or Staple: where gaine is preferred before Honor; Mony before Merit; an Enemy before a Friend; a Seruant before the Son of the Family; and a Seruant, before a Domesticke borne.

Behold what may be said, on the behalfe of perfect valour, and the sold or necessary meanes, for the gaining of worthy men: to make Kinges triumph, perpetuate their estates, and leane eternity to their Monarchies. My hearty wish and desire is, that some benefit may ensue by my poore trauaile (as infallibly will) to our French Nobility, if this may be communicated (how little soeuer) to the eyes of their souls, which hauing heretofore been eluuated to the honest search of vertue, and especiallie that which shold be most familiar with them: will render them absolute in the perfection of this discourse, whereof I couer more to be the God-Father, then the true Fatlier indeed. Because all the wonders of honor, grace, and valiancy therein alleaged, haue beene selected from the Oracles and Miracles of the onely renowned Princes in the World, of whom I haue figured the very fairest conditions. To the end, that ours of this Age, may commendably emy such glory, and go as far beyond theirs, as they did all other whatsoeuer.

CHAP. IIII.

Of Wisedome, Prudence, and Pollicy; and what difference is betweene them. Also, a consideration of the difficulties & dangers, incident to matters of State.

10

Because our present intended discourse, may stand cleare from obloquy and detection: we wil first declare what Wisedome is, and wherein it consisteth. For Pollicie being but (as it were) a branch thereof; it shall therefore be convenient, first to consider the nature of the root or Tree, that thereby we may know the property of the braunch. And to this end, it is to be considered, first whence wisedom is, and afterwards, what it is: whereby it will appeare, that true wisedom, and (consequently) true Pollicy, can no way stand with wickednesse.

20

30

40

50

For the first, it is euident, by the doctrine as wel of the best Philosophers, as of our holy Scriptures; that wisedom is the especiall giust of God, which Plato taught, not onely concerning absolute wisedom (consisting in the speculation and knowledge of diuine things) but also of ciuill or politicall Wisedome and Prudence: which he saith. Is neither giuen to man by nature, nor taught by Philosophy, nor got by industry or experience. And therefore in his Book of Politicall Lawes, he craueth it of Almighty God as his especiall giust, acknowledging: That no humain wit can (without his particular inspiration and assistance) ordaine sufficient lawes for the government of a Commonwealth; as partly hath beene elsewhere approued.

This also our Scriptures doe abundantly teach, deriuing al wisedom from Almighty God, as from the Fountaine thereof, saying. Omnis sapientia à Domino Deo est, All Wisedome commeth of the Lord. Et à Deo profecta est sapientia, &c. Wisedome came from GOD, and it shall abound in the mouth of the faithfull man, and the gouernor or Lord of all will giue it thee. And againe, Fons sapientie verbum Dei in excelsis. The Fountaine of wisedom

Dddd

Pollicy is but a Branch of wisedom.

Wisedom the especiall gift of God, according to Plato.

Plato in Lib. 4. de Legib. et in Minoe. Wisedome nor giuen by Nature, nor taught by Philosophy, nor got by industry.

Eccles. 1. 1. 6. God the only Authour and giuer of wisedom, according to the Scriptures. Eccles. 15. 3.

James. 2, 5.
1 King. 3, 9.

Salomon and Iesus the sonne of Sirach obtained wifedome of God
by Prayer.
Eccles. 5, 13.
17.

Plato in Theage. et in Epist.
ad Syracusan.
What wifedome is, according to Plato.

A soule defiled with sinne not capable of wifedome.
Wisd. 1. 4.
Eccles. 43, 33.

What wifedome is, and wherein it consisteth, according to our sacred Scriptures.
Iob. 28, 12, 13,
et 28.

Eccles. 19, 20.

True wifedome consisteth in the feare of God, and the execution of his Law.

is the word of God on high. That is to say, the Son of God, who is therefore called Sapientia Patris, The Wisedome of God the Father. For this cause S. James aduiseeth vs. Si quis uestrum (saith he) indiget sapientia, postulet à Deo, & dabitur ei. If any of you lacke wifedome, let him aske it of God, and it shall be giuen him. And Salomon craued it of Almighty God, and obtained it. And Iesus the Son of Sirach saith of himselfe. Cum adhuc iunior sum, &c. When I was yet yong, or euer I went abroad, I desired wifedome openly in my prayer. And I profited by her, therefore will I ascribe the glory vnto him that giueth me wifedome.

Seeing then true wifedome is (according to the opinion both of Philosophers and Diuines) and especiall gift of Almighty God: it must needs follow, that it haue no communication with sin and wickednesse, or with any thing offensive to God. And therefore Plato (with all his followers) doe teach, that forasmuch as true wifedome is nothing else, but (as it were) The light of the chiefe and true good (that is to say, of Almighty God) reflected vpon the soules of Men: no Soule defiled with sinne, is any whit more capable of this light of true Wifedome, then the ayre (beeing ouer-cast with Clouds) is capable of the Sunne. And this Doctrine of Plato agreeth notably with our holy Scriptures, which teach, that In maculam animam, &c. Wifedome wil not enter into a wicked soule, nor dwell in the body that is subiect to sin. And therefore it is said, That God giueth wifedome to such as feare him.

This will be more eident, by the consideration of what Wifedome is, and wherem it principally consisteth. Therefore, first to speak of the Doctrin of our holy Scriptures; and after, of the opinion of Philosophers: Iob hauing asked, Where is Wifedome found, and where is the place of vnderstanding? Answereth himselfe, saying; Ecce timor Domini, ipsa est sapientia, & recedere à malo intelligentia. Behold, the feare of God is wifedome it selfe, and to forsake euil is vnderstanding. Thus saith Iob; which the Preacher confirmeth, saying. Omnis sapientia timor Dei, et in omni sapientia dispositio legis. The feare of God is all Wifedome, and the performing of the Law is perfect wifedome. That is to say (as we read in the Greeke Text) Factio et operatio legis, The doing & working of the Law, signifying: That all wifedome consisteth in the feare of God, and in the execution of his Law; which is as much to saie, as in the keeping of his Commaundements, whereof three reasons may well be giuen.

The first, because hee which feareth God, & fulfilleth his commaundements; hath the ground and principall part of wifedome, for in all his actions he principally respecteth two things: the one, the glory of God (for which, Man and all other creatures were chiefly ordained) and the other, the eternall good of his owne soule; which most importeth him. For, as our Sauour saith; What shall it profit a Man, though he should winne the whole world, if he loose his own soule. Therefore the Preacher saith well, Sapiens est anima sua sapiens: He which is wise, is wise for his Soule. The second reason is, for that he which feareth God, and keepeth his commaundements, doth therein work wisely, not onely for his eternall good, but also for his temporall and worldlie good: Seeing thereby hee consecrateth himselfe, in the protection and fauor of him, who is the Authour and Giuer as well of the one as other, and hath an especial care of such as feare and serue him. For, as the Psalmist saith; Oculi Domini super metuentes eum; The eyes of the Lord are vpon them that feare him. Et aures eius in preces eorum, And his eares are open to their prayers. Such also is his loue towards them, and the regard he hath of them, that, as our Sauour saith; Hee numbrellh the very haire's of their beads. Et custodit (saith the Psalmist) omnia ossa eorum; He keepeth all their bones, to the end, that there shall not any one of them perish.

Therefore, as no man is, or can be counted wise or happy, who (by contempt of Almighty God, and breach of his Commaundements) exposeth himselfe to his indignation, whereby both he and his may vtterly perish: so he likewise, that by the feare of God, and obseruation of his law, obtained his continuall fauor and protection, is not only truly wise, but also truly happy. Which Aristotle himselfe acknowledged, who teaching, that true wifedome and felicity, doe chiefly consist, in the contemplation of God and heavenly things: affirmeth the wisest man to be the happiest of al other, because he is most gratefull

The principal part of wifedome, to respect in all things the glory of God, and our eternall good.

Mat. 16, 26.

Wisd. 37, 18.

He which truly feareth God, is wise, for his temporall good, and why.

Psalme 33, 17.
Psalme. 34, 14

Math. 10, 30.
Psalme. 34, 19.

No man is wise in exposing himselfe to Gods indignation.

Arist. in lib. Ethic. 10. Cap. 7.
Idé Ibid. cap. 8.

The law of God, is the rule of all prudent actions.

The difference betwixt wisdome and Prudence.

The object of wisdome.

The definition of wisdome.

Cicero. in Lib. 2. de Offic. August. in lib. 14. de Trinit. Cap. 5.

The Office of Prudence.

Basil. in princip. Prouer.

Arist. Moral. Nicom. Lib. 7. Cap. 5. & Ethic. Lib. 6.

Tho. Aquin. 22. q. 27. 2.

Cicero de nat. Deor. Lib. 3.

August. Lib. 83. quest. 31.

The definition of Prudence.

Arist. in Lib. 6. Ethic. Cap. 4.

The end of euery action truly prudent, must needs bee good.

The meanes of euery prudent action, to be good and iust.

Arist. in Ethic. Idem. li. 6. ca. 12.

full to God, best beloued of him, and protected by him continually.

The third reason, why the fear of God, & the keeping of his commandements, is true wisdome, is: because the Law of God is the true rule, whereby al prudent actions are to bee measured, for it comprehendeth in it selfe, and teacheth all true vertue and goodnesse, without the which, there can be no true Prudence, as shall appeare by the circumstances due and requisite thereto, according to the Doctrine of Philosophers: Wherein is to bee noted, that though Wisdome and Prudence (in common speech) are commonly confounded: yet there is betwixt them this difference, that Wisdome hath for her object, not only humane, but also Diuine things. And therefore is defined, both by Philosophers and Diuines, to be Scientia diuinarum humanarumque rerum, et eorumque illarum rerum sunt causa. The knowledge of things diuine and humane, and of their other causes. Whereas the office of Prudence, is duely to consider, and wel to direct humane affaires, and is called by Thomas Aquinas, Sapientia in humanis rebus, Wisdome in humane things: consisting, as Cicero and S. Augustine teach, in the knowledge of Things good, bad, & indifferent, and is defined, Rerum expectandarum, fugiendarumque scientia, The knowledge of things to be desired or fled. Or as S. Basile saith, Eorum que agenda et non agenda sunt cognitio; The knowledge of those things which are to be done, or not to be done: whereto three circumstances are principally required.

The first is, that the end of euery action bee truly good, which Aristotle teacheth, to be the first & principal circumstance requisite to Prudence. And he affirmeth, that whosoever applieth his wit to worke for an euill end: although he haue neuer so good successe therein, yet he cannot bee called truelie wise or prudent, but crafty and subtile.

The second circumstance is, not onlie that the end of euery action bee good; but also, that the meanes to attaine to that end, be correspondent therto, that is to say, that they be all good and iust, yea, wel and iustly done. To which purpose, Aristotle prescribeth circumstances, of due time, place, and manner, to be considered in euery Prudent action.

10

20

30

40

50

Teaching withall, that whosoever sayeth in any one of the circumstances: is not vertuous, nor (by consequent) prudent, because Vertue & Prudence are so ioyned, that the one cannot possibly be without the other. Macrobius assigning (out of Plato) six parts of Prudence; accounteth circumspection for one, which (he saith) consisteth in consideration of the circumstances of euery action, that the same be most lawful, good, and iust. Whereupon Saint Basile saith. Quisquis prudentiam recte fecit atus fuerit, &c. Whosoever followeth the rule of Prudence truly; he shall neuer swerue from vertue, nor fall into vice. The third circumstance to be considered in euery prudent action, is, that whereas there are certaine degrees of goodnes in things, some being good, others better, and one the best of all, (wherto all other things are to be referred, which is called by the Philosophers Summū bonū, The chiefe good; And also, Finis bonorum, The end of al good things) it is (I say) especially required in Prudence: to make a true estimate of the worth of euery thing, & not only to reiect things absolutely euil, or of euils, to chuse the least (as the Lacedemonians said, he had done, that married a very little wife) but also of good things to chuse the best: preferring those things which are absolutely good, before all other goods whatsoever, and making the chiefe good, the scope & end of al his actions.

Now then, seeing these three circumstances are requisite to true Prudence, to wit; to chuse a good end; to practise good & vertuous means; and to esteem euery good thing in the degree that it deserueth: it is euident, that he who feareth God, and keepeth his Commandements, performes all these three things, not only in euery perticular action, but also throughout the whole course of his life, tending in al things to goodnes and vertue, vsing al iust & vertuous means, and esteeming euery thing according to the true worth thereof. For, he preferreth the Soule before the body; eternal things before temporall; the goods of the body, before the goods of Fortune; and the goods of the mind before them both. Finally, he referreth and directeth all his actions, and the whole course of his life, to the seruice and glory of God, whom both diuines and Phi-

Vertue and Prudence so ioyned, that they cannot be seperated.

Macrobius in Somno Scip. Lib. 1.

Basil. in princip. Prouerb.

Cicero de finibus. Lib. 1. 2. 3. 4. & 5. Et Offic. Lib. 3.

Prudence preferreth the greater good before the lesse; and the chiefe good before all other.

Plutarch. de amore Fratris. Arist. Ethic. Lib. 6. Thom. Aquin. 2. 2. q. 27. ar. 2.

How he that feareth God, practiseth the three chiefe pointes of Prudence.

Apoc. 1. 8.
Arist. Metaph.
Lib. 1.
Trismegist. inpeman. Cap. 3.

A difficulty propofed concerning other parts of Prudence.
Arist. Ethic. lib.
8. Cap 9, et 10.

The fatisfaction of the difficulty propo-fed.

No man is fo wife, that he alwayes knoeth what is conuenient for himfelfe.

The light of Gods grace necessary for the perfection of Prudence.

Ecclef. 11, 16.

Prouer. 4, 18, 19.
The wifef worldly men are as it were blind-fold.

Pfalme. 19, 8.

lofophers do teach; To bee the beginning and end of all Creatures, as partly hath bin before declared.

But here (perhaps) some will say, that there are necessarily required to Prudence, certain other parts, which I haue not yet mentioned: As sagacity of wit, a good memory, and a sound iudgment, whereby wise men do prudently consider, iudge, counsell, ordaine, and execute, and that these partes (as Aristotle teacheth) proceede partly of a naturall hability, and partly of long experience. In which respect, he most approoueth the iudgement and counsel of old men. Whereupon it followeth, that it sufficeth not to Prudence, to feare God, and keepe his Commaundements: except a Man haue (withall) the other partes aboue mentioned, which many good & holy men want, either in respect of som naturall defect of Wit, Memory, and Iudgement, or for lacke of experience.

For the better satisfaction hereof, one thing is to be considered, to wit, the naturall imbecility of mans wit, which is such in the wisest worldly man that liueth; that he knoweth not what is conuenient for himselfe, and much lesse for others, whereby he seeketh (many times) that which turneth to his owne ruine. Therefore, the most necessary part, for consummation & perfection of humain Prudence, is some supernaturall and diuine light, to illuminate the vnderstanding of men, to moue and encline their wils to make choice of that, which may be most conuenient for the and others. Without which light, the wisest worldly men (I mean such as haue most excellent talents and parts of nature, and are wicked withall) are but like to blinde men, and go (as it were) groping in the dark. Wherefore the Preacher saith, Error and darknesst are appointed for Sinners: that is to say, ignorance and blindnesse are connaturall to wicked men. And againe. The way of the wicked is as the darknesse, and they know not where they shal fal. Whereas on the contrary side, The way of the righteous (that is to say, of those that feare God, and keep his commaundments) shineth as the light, that shineth more and more vnto the perfit day. And for this cause, the Psalmist saith of the Law of God; That it is cleare and bright, and shineth light to the eies. That is to say, the light of grace, whereby the naturall good abilities of Gods Seruants are encreased and perfit: doth also prosper their actions, so farre forth, as God Almighty thinketh it necessary for their good, his glory, and the execution of his will. Whereunto I adde, that also the defects of nature may be, and many times are, supplied by the light of Grace; in such sort, that Gods Seruants do many times, attaine to performe all the parts of Prudence, though they haue no naturall ability for the same, such being the effectes of Grace, that it perfecteth humane nature: which although it aspire and tend to perfection, yet it cannot possibly attaine thereto, without some supernaturall help. And for the better prooffe of the matter in hand, I will lay downe some examples of Gods seruants, who, notwithstanding either their naturall defects & imperfections, or their want of experience: haue (by the conduct of Gods grace) most wisely behaued themselues, in most important matters. Who seemed more vnfit to vnder- take the iudgement of great causes, then Daniel, whiles he was a child of 12. yeares old (as Theodore testifieth) or, as other ancient Fathers affirm, not much older, and therefore no lesse vnripe in experience, then in yeares? And yet neuerthelesse, being assisted by the spirit of God, he confounded the adulterous Iudges in the cause of Susanna, which he most prudently determined. Besides, the Scripture witnesseth, that God gaue such profound knowledge and wisdom, not only to him, but also to Ananias, Misael, and Azarias, while they were all Children: that they far surpassed all the wise and learned Chaldeans.

And was there euer any glorious enterprise, more wisely continued, more couragiously attempted, or more heroically performed, then the ouerthrow of Holofernes: slaine by a holy Woman, no lesse timerous of nature, then weake of iudgement, and void of experience, through the infirmity of her Sexe?

Again, what sufficiency was there in Moyse, for the performance of so great a charge, as Almighty God laid on him; first, in his ambassage to Pharao, and afterward in the government and conduct of his people, thorow so manie kind of daungers and difficulties? This

The good abilities of nature are encreased and perfected by Grace.

The defects of Nature may be, and often are supplied by the light of grace.

Examples of diuers, in who grace supplied naturall defects.

Daniel being but a Child of twelue yeares olde, iudged the cause of Susanna. Dan. 13. Theod. in Cap. 1. Ezech. Ignat. Mari. in Epist. ad Magnes. Sulpicius Scuerus in Lib. 2. Sacre Histor. August. in Ser. 242. Dan. Cap. 1. Ananias, Misael and Azarias.

Judith heroically and wisely perfourmed a glorious enterprise Judith. Cap. 7, 8, 9, &c.

Exod. 3, 10, 11. Moes acknowledged his insufficiency for the conduct of Gods people.

was

was acknowledged by Moyſes himſelfe, who confeſſeth his owne inſufficiencie and weaknes, ſaying to Almighty God; Quis ſum ego; &c. Who am I a Lord? That is to ſay, what is there in mee? That I ſhould goe unto Pharaoh, and that I ſhould conduct the Children of Iſraell out of Egypt? And againe afterwarde; being vtterly discouraged, with the conſideration of his want of eloqueſſe and utterance, & of his other infirmities; he deſired to be excuſed, ſaying. Obſecro Domine, mitte quę miſſurus es; I beſeech thee, o Lord, ſend eſſe whom it pleaſe thee. Whereupon God did not only promiſe him his owne continuall aſſiſtance: but alſo appointed Aaron to help him, and to ſpeak for him to the people in all occaſions, promiſing withall, to be the mouths of them both. Beſides, Jethro, Father in Law to Moyſes; did alſo afterwarde (by Gods great providence) teach him a notable point of pollicy, for government of the people. Wherein may be noted by the way, how ſweetely Almighty God guideth his Seruants concurring with them, and moouing them ſometimes immediatly by ſecret inſpiration, and ſometimes by the help and meanes of others. Whereby, Moyſes being (as it ſeemeth) altogether vnſkillfull, and vnexpert in matters of State: did (neuertheleſſe) many years moſt prudently and happily gouern the people of God, as well in warlike, as in other ciuill affaires.

In like manner, if we conſider either the yeares of the education of Dauid, when (being very young) he was called from the Sheep-coat to the Court, and ſhortly after annointed King. If we weigh withall, his wiſe, victorious and glorious gouernment for forty yeares together: we muſt needs confeſſe, that the ſame proceeded of Gods aſſiſtance, and not of his own ſufficiencie, whereof Almighty God admoniſhed him by Nathan the Prophet, ſaying. Ego tuiſte, &c. I tooke thee from the Paſtures, when thou followeſt thy flockes, and made thee King of my people of Iſrael. And I was with thee, and aſſiſted thee in all things whereſoeuer thou didſt go. I kild all thine enemies before thy face, and haue magnified thy Name among the great ones of the earth. Thus ſpake the Prophet Nathan in the perſon of Almighty God: and this Dauid himſelfe, (who beſt knew himſelfe, & the fauors which God had done him) gratefully acknowledged: calling almighty God His Protector, his ſtay, his refuge, his buckler or ſhield, his ſtrength, his hope, his glory; and humbly beſeeching him in all his occaſions; to illuminate him, to protect. and defend him, to direct his courſe, & to guide his ſteps. To omit diuers other examples for breuities ſake, ſeeing by theſe it ſufficiently appeareth, how true that is which the Plalmiſt ſaith Lex Domini ſapientiam præſtat paruulis, The Law of GOD giueth wiſedome to Children. That is to ſay, to ſimple and ignorant men, & the reaſon is, for that the Law of God containeth the precepts of all true Wiſedome and Prudence: teaching vs, what is our duty to God, to our Neighbour, to our Superiors, Inferiors, & equals: how to command, how to obey; to what end to direct our intents and our actions; how to liue, how to die; and laſtly, how to arriue (after the ſtorms and tempeſts of this life) at the ſecure port of eternall felicity, whereto true wiſedome directeth and addreſſeth her whole courſe.

And this is not only to be vnderſtood of the written Law of God, that is to ſay, the holy Scriptures of the Old and New Teſtament (in the which as Saint Chryſoſtome ſaith, Non eſt ſilaba vel apiculus, &c. There is not a ſillable, nor ſo much as a tittle, wherein there is not hidden ſome great treaſure) but much more it is to be vnderſtood, of the Law of God vnwritten, inſufed into the hearts of Gods Seruants. Whereof Almighty God ſaid by the Prophet: Dabo legē meam, &c. I will giue them my law in their bowels, and I will write it in their hearts. Which vnwritten Law, is (as S. Auguſtine ſaith) nothing elſe, but Ipsa præſentia Spiritus Sancti, &c. The very preſence of the Holy Ghoſt, &c. by whom Charity is ſpread and printed in our hearts, which charity is the conſummation of the Law, and end of the Commaundement.

Thus ſaith S. Auguſtine of the inſufed law of God, which doth not only teach men true wiſedome (as doth the written Law) but doth alſo giue it them: making them the temples of God, and habitacles of the Holy Ghoſt. By whoſe Grace, the good Talents of many Seruants of God are encreaſed and perfected, their defects ſupplied, their infirmities cured, the eies of their vnderſtanding illuminated, and their iudgements

Pſalme. 17, c. 143.

Pſalme. 17, 16, 15, 24, 133.

Pſalme. 10, 3. How the law of God giueth wiſedome.

The written law of God full of all wiſedome. Chryſoſt. in Pſal. 14.

The inſufed law of God. Ierem. 13, 12.

Auguſt. in Lib. de ſpir. et litera. Cap. 21.

The inſufed Law both teacheth and giueth true wiſedome.

Gloſſa interlin.
How God ſupplied the defects of Moyſes.

Exod. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23. &c.

God concur-
reth with his ſeruants ſome times immediatly, and ſometimes by meanes of others.

1. Sam. 16, 11, 22.

2. Sam. 2, 4. Dauid directed and guided in all his Gouernment by Almighty God.

2. Sam. 7, 8, 9.

Dauid gratefully acknowledged Gods aſſiſtance.

The parts of true Prudence.

directed. By meanes whereof, they are replenished with heavenly Wisedome, and enabled to performe all the parts of true Prudence, to wit; to deliberate maturely; to iudge soundly; to counsel securely; to ordaine and commaund exactly, and execute effectually. And so they work in al things, no lesse prudently then happily, being mooued and led by the onely Author of wisedome and happinesse: in whose hand are the harts of all men, and vpon whose wil, dependeth the successe of all actions whatsoever.

The first conclusion.

Eccles. 1. 15. 20.

The feare of God is the beginning & perfection of Wisedome, and why,

All humane wisedome is of it selfe lame and vnperfect.

The wisest worldly man is a foole in that which most imports him.

How the seruants of God are wise.

Why the simplest seruant of God is wiser then the wisest wicked man.

Therefore I will inferre heereupon certaine conclusions. The first, that, as the Preacher saith, the feare of God is not onely Initium & radix; The beginning and roote; but also Plenitudo sapientia; The consummation and perfection of Wisedome. For those that sincerely feare God, haue (consequently) the light and helpe of his grace, whereby they may, and many times do arriue to the perfection of Wisedome and Prudence: whereas otherwise, there is no possibilitie of attaining thereto, all humane wisedome being (of it selfe) lame and imperfect, vncertaine, and subiect to infinite errors. So that, wicked men, though they haue neuer so good partes of wit and iudgement naturally, and may by the force and meanes thereof, doe many things prudently and wisely: yet, forasmuch as they alwaies play the Fooles notably, in that which importeth them most, to wit; in thinges pertaining to their eternall good or euill, and do also erre very blindly and absurdly (many times) in temporall affaires; they neuer haue any perfection of wisedome, nor can be counted truly wise.

Whereas on the other side, the Seruants of God, who haue alwayes good naturall parts, and the light and helpe of grace withall, do not onely worke most prudently alwaies, in matters that concerne their eternall good or euill: but also deale in all things whatsoever, with farre more light, certaintie and securitie, then wicked Men, of like good partes and Talents naturall. And although the Seruants of God haue (sometimes) some naturall defects of wit and iudgement; yet forasmuch, as such also doe alwayes discharge the partes of true Prudence, in matters which import the most, and may haue also, and many times haue (with the help of grace) such a supplement of their naturall imperfections, that all of them may, and many of them doe, performe the Office of prudent and Wise men in all affaires, which wicked men neither do, nor possibly can doe: I will therefore conclude, that the perfection of humane Wisedome, consisteth in Gods grace, and that the very simplest Seruant of God, may more truly be accounted Wise, then the wisest, I meane the subtlest and craftiest wicked Man whatsoever.

10

20

b This the Royall Prophet acknowledged in himselfe, comparing the Wisedome and Prudence which God had giuen him, by the obseruation of his commandements; with the Wisedome and Prudence of his Enemies, and of the wisest Worldlings, saying. Super inimicos meos, &c. Thou hast made me (O Lord) wiser then mine enemies, through thy Commandement or Law, and I haue understood more, then all they which taught me. I am wiser then the aged, because I haue sought to keepe thy Commandements.

30

The second Conclusion is, that (as the Booke of Ecclesiasticus signifieth.) Non est sapientia nequitia discipina, & non est cogitatus peccatorum prudentia. The knowledge of wickednesse is not wisedome, neither is there prudence whereas the counsell of Sinners is. For, seeing true Wisedome consisteth in the feare of God, & in the obseruation of his Commandements: nothing that is offensive to God, or contrary to his Law, can stand with true Wisedome. And againe, seeing Prudence and Morall Vertue are so conioyned, that they cannot be separated; yea, and that not onely the end of euery prudent action, but also the meanes must necessarily bee good and vertuous: it must needs follow, that whatsoever is vicious, impious, or wicked, is excluded from true Prudence. In which respect, Prudence is called in the 40

Scriptures, Scientia Sanctorum. And therefore Salomon saith. Principium sapientia timor Domini, & scientia sanctorum prudentia. The feare of God is the beginning of Wisedome, and the knowledge of holy things is Prudence Hereupon also follow two other Conclusions, concerning policy. The one that no true pollicy can

50 admit

The perfection of humane wisedome consisteth in Gods grace.

Dauids acknowledgement in himselfe.

Psalme. 119. 2. 3.

The second conclusion.

Eccles. 19. 22. Nothing that is offensive to God, can stand with true wisedome or Prudence.

Prouer. 9. 10. Prudence called in Scripture the knowledge of holy things.

The third Conclusion.

No true Policy admitteth any impiety.

Policy a part of Prudence. Prudence divided into three parts. Personal Prudence. Oeconomical Prudence. Politicall Prudence.

Pollicie cannot disagree from Prudence.

The fourth Conclusion.

All humane pollicie is vnperfect and defectuous, without the light of grace.

The imprudence of those that presume to meddle in matters of State, without any regard of Gods assistance.

admit any impiety, wickednesse, or offence of God. The other, that all policy humaine (without the light and help of Gods grace) is vncertaine and defectuous. And for the better vnderstanding heereof, it is to bee considered, that as Prudence is a part of wisedome: so Policy is a part of Prudence, and that Prudence also is diuided into three partes. The first, Personall; the second, Oeconomical; and the third, Politicall. Personall Prudence, consisteth in the speculation and practise of such things, as belong onely to perticuler men. Oeconomical prudence, respecteth all things belonging to houtholde affayres. And Politicall prudence is that, which considereth matters appertaining vnto commonwealth, and this kind of Prudence is properly called Policy.

Therefore, as Prudence (being a branch of Wisedome) cannot disagree from the Nature thereof, no more then the braunch from the Nature of the tree; so also, Pollicie being a part of Prudence, must needs bee conforme and agreeable together; in which respect, euerie Politicall Art must needs bee prudent, and euerie prudent act (concerning Commonwealth) must needs bee Politicall. Whereuppon it followeth, that seeing true Prudence excludeth all wickednesse and impiety, true Pollicie also dooth exclude the same.

And againe, seeing true Wisedome and Prudence are the especiall guiftes of God (as I haue shewed) and that without the light and helpe of Gods grace, all humaine wisedome is full of imperfection, obscurity, vncertainty, and error, it followeth also by the like consequence, that the like iudgement is to be giuen of all humaine policy, to wit: that it is (of it selfe) imperfect, vncertaine, obscure, and erroneous; and to be perfected, assured, rectified, and guided by the light of grace, which is the point that I haue especially laboured to proue throughout this whole discourse.

Therefore, to conclude this Chapter, I cannot but lament and wonder at the imprudence of two sorts of men. The one is of those, who make no doubt to deale in matters of Policy & State, without any care or regard of Gods help and assistance; yea, and with offence of god. Whereby they expose not only the matters (which they mannage) to dangerous errors, yea, and to all euill successe: but also, the Princes whom they Councell, and the Common-wealthes where they gouerne, to Gods indignation, and consequently to vtter ruine, as hath bene formerly proued.

The other sort of impudent men (in my fancy) are those, who are so far transported, eyther with conceit of their own wit and sufficiency, or with a desire to deale in great matters, that they aspire to nothing more, then to meddle in matters of State, yea, and boldly embarke themselves in the very greatest that doe occurre, before they haue any experience or practise thereof in the world, or haue so much as reflected vpon the Naturall imbecility of mans wit; and the weaknesse of humaine pollicie, or of the insuperable difficulties and dangers incident to matters of State, which are such, as do many times, ouerthrow & disgrace the most wise and expertest Negotiators.

And therefore it happeneth verie often to those, who so greedily and vnadvisedly seeke such employments, as it doth to man, that (in faire weather) putteth himselfe to Sea, in a little Boate or Frigot for his recreation; and vpon the sudden there ariseth a storme which carrieth him into the miane Sea, and so tosseth him too and fro: that he not onelie looseth all the pleasure which he expected, but also escapeth verie hardlye with life. And therefore, with many a sighe and heauy grone, he looketh back to the Land from whence he came; but neuertheles is forced to go whither the winds and tempest carry him, and perhaps perisheth in the ende, by violence of the storme. Euen so I say, it fareth manie times, with those that embarke themselves vnadvisedly in matters of State: for, within a while, they find themselves so perplexed, that they desire to returne to their former repose and quietnes. But yet they are forced to goe, whither the course, streame and current of theyr affaires doth carry them; yea, and sometimes perish amidst the manifolde dangers, which commonly doe accompany State-matters, the practise whereof may well be compared to the practise of Physicke. For, although some Physitions exercise their Science, with more iudgement

The imprudence of those that presume to meddle in the greatest matters of State, without experience.

What happeneth to those which vnadvisedly seeke great employments.

Expectation of pleasure endeth often times in paine

The danger of dealing in matters of State.

The practise of matters of State like the practise of Physicke.

Young Statists marre many matters before they make one.

He is the wisest that erreth the least, but he the happiest, that meeleth least in matters of State.

Dangerous for very yong men, to deale in matters of State.

Plutarch in his Treatise, whether an old man should deale in matters of State.

ment and better successe then others: yet none is so skilfull and fortunate, that he can alwayes warrant the cure of his patient; and young beginners many times kill three, before they saue one. Euen so, young Statists, how expert soeuer they be, can neuer warrant the good successe of their plots and designments: but (for the most part) at the first do marre many matters, before they make one. Inso-much, that I account him no lesse happy then wise, who can be the wiser not only by other mens errors, but also by his owne. And, as I hold him for the Wisest man, which erreth the least: so I take him for the happiest & best at ease, who meddleth the least, or not at all in matters of State, seeing there was neuer any that dealt in many, but he erred in some. And sometimes we see, that the least error worketh both his ouerthrowe who committed it: and also, the ruine of whole Kingdomes and Commonweals. Wherefore, I conclude with the Spanish Prouerbe, Aquel Rey, que nunca vio Rey, Hee is a King that neuer sawe King. That is to say, hee is a happy man, who neuer had to deale with the affayres of Princes, or State-matters.

I speake not this, to dehort or diswade all men from the dealing with matters of State, which is a thing so necessary for the seruice of God and Princes, and for the good of a Commonwealth, that it is both honourable, yea, and highly deseruing, when it is done with circumstance conuenient and requisit thereto. But my meaning is to signifye with what great consideration and circumspection all men ought to vndertake such Negotiations especially young men, who haue not had any experience or practise thereof, and therefore cannot haue the mature and ripe iudgement, which is necessary thereto. For which cause, the Athenians did ordaine, that no man (vnder fifty yeares of age) should bee called to giue aduise in the affaires of their Commonwealth. And although a man may be (as verie manie are no doubt) sooner ripe and able, to mannage anie matter whatsoeuer: yet reason and experience teach, that the yonger a man is, and the lesse practise he hath, the more he is like to erre. Wherefore I craue thy patience (gentle Reader) while I set downe heere a few general Rules for yong beginners, as well for their enstruction: as also, for the discouery of the difficulties, which occurre in the gouernement of a Commonwealth.

CHAP. V.

Certaine general Rules or Aduises, no lesse pious then Politicall, for the instruction of such as desire to manage matters of State, and haue no experience thereof, to the end, that they may deal therein with lesse danger and diffculty.

First, hee that meaneth to apply himselfe to matters of State, must see that his intention be clear & pure, that is to say: that hee bee not moued thereto by vainglory, ambition, couetousnesse, or any vicious or vnlawfull desire, because they are ouerweake foundations to vpholde waightie affayres, being accompanied not onelie with the offence of God; but also, with passion; whereby mans iudgement is blinded, and many times drawn to error. And therefore, the chiefe and principall intention of a Statist ought to bee, the seruice of God and his Prince, and the publicke good of his Country, whereto euery man ought principally to direct & leuell all his actions, which otherwise, cannot be truly vertuous and wise, nor yet haue the assistance and blessing of Almighty God, which for the good successe of all mens affaires, is most exquisite. For, as the Royall Prophet sayeth: Nisi Dominus edificauerit domum in vanum laborauerunt qui edificant eam. Except the Lord do build the house, they labor in vaine which build the same.

This foundation being laide, any Negotiation, be it neuer so waighty and important, may be built thereon, for foure reasons. First, for that a mans reason and iudgement being free from passion and selfe loue, he shall the more clearlie and soundly both deliberate and worke in all occasions. Secondly, for that it is most likely, that Almighty God (seeing his good

A pure and good intention most necessary for a Statist.

What the intention of a Statist ought to be.

Psalm. 127, 1.

The commodities of a good intention in vnder-taking matters of State. Foure especiall Reasons.

good and holy intention) will concur & co-operate with him in all his Negotiations.

Thirdly, though it would not please Almighty God (for his secret iudgements) to blesse and prosper his actions: yet vndoubtedly, his good intentions shall not faile of their due recompence and reward.

Lastly, for that in case hee fall into the great difficulties and dangers, which are incident vnto dealing in matters of State, yet he shall haue the comfort and consolation of a good and cleare Conscience, which as the Poet could say, is Murus ahaneus, A Brazen Wall, and the most assured Anchor in all the stormes and tempests of this life. Quæ etiam obruta delectat, saith Seneca, which euen when it is oppressed or ouerwhelmed, dooth then delight. Thus much concerning the first rule.

Secondly, it shall be conuenient for a young Statist, well to weigh and foresee the difficulties and daungers, which he may (by all likelyhood) incur by dealing in matters of State, either thorough the nature and condition of the matters which he is to handle, or thorough the treachery and perfidiousnesse of those, with whom he is to deale; or thorough the malice and emulations (either publicke or priuate) which in Courts neuer want; or thorough the ieaalousy of Princes, who (as Comineus well noteth) Do easily suspect and distrust their best Seruants, in matters concerning their State. Or lastly, thorow the vncertaintie of the successe of businesse, which is in no mans hand to warrant, as hath bin sufficiently proued. By all which meanes, we see (many times) most important matters miscarry, to the great grief, disgrace, yea and vtter ouerthrow of the Negotiators, especially if they haue not foreseen the same. Whereas, by consideration and foresight, they might perhaps haue prevented inconuenience; or, at the least, haue bin better armed, to beare their misfortune with patience.

Therefore, Plutarch worthily compareth improuident and vnadvised Negotiators, to one that shoulde fall (before he were aware) into a Coal-pit or Mine; where, though perhaps hee escape with life: yet commonly hee receyueth some hurt, or (at the least) is wonderfully astonished and amazed, not onely with the fall, but also with the obscurity and horror of the place, which, to those that go in of purpose, and with resolution to indure it, is nothing so offensive or noysome.

Thirdly, he ought alwayes to obserue three things. The first, is the imbecility and weaknesse of mans wit: the second, the vncertainty of the successe of all mens actions. The thirde, the prouidence of God, in the disposition of all humane affaires. These three things I say, euerie Statist should haue continuallie before his eyes, to the end, that seeing his own infirmity, and vncertainty of the successe of all his designments, hee may consider his danger, as well of error in his determinations, as of euill hap in his actions; and consequently, haue recourse to the remedies ordained for the same, by the prouidence and mercy of God. According to the aduise which old Tobias gaue to his son, for the direction of his whole course of life, to whom (amongst manie other notable precepts) hee gaue this. Aske Counsel alwayes of the wise, and despyse not any counsel that is profitable. Blesse thy Lord God alwayes, & desire of him that thy wayes may bee made strait, and that all thy purposes & counsels may prosper. Thus said Tobias, or rather the Holy-Ghost by his mouth, aduising notably two things, necessary to be practised of all men, for the remedy of their naturall imbecilitie, to wit; to aske counsell of wise men, and to craue the assistance of God. Because we are neither so absolute of our selues, but that we neede (in all thinges) Gods helpe and assistance; neither yet so gouerned and guided by Almighty God, that we ought to contemne the helpe of man, such being the course of his diuine prouidence in humane affaires, that hee doth his will not only in men, but also by them, and with their co-operations. In which respect, Saint Paul did not stick to call himselfe, and the other Apostles, Adiutores Dei, The helpers of God, in the conuersion of the Gentiles.

Therefore, as it were great folly, pride, and presumption in man, so to trust in himselfe, or in humane Wisedome or power, as to neglect the prouidence and assistance of God: so wer it on the other side, extreame negligence, yea, and a tempting of God, so to relie vpon him,

Three things to be considered of Statists.

The counsell of Tobias to his Sonne. 1. ob. 4. 18. 19.

Two things to be practised of all Statists.

1. Cor. 4. 9.

Extreame folly in man, to trust wholly in humane wisedome & power. A tempting of God, to contenten in humane helpe and counsell.

Horat. in Lib. 1. Epist. ad Mæcenat.
A cleare conscience is a Brazen wall. Seneca. in lib. 4. de Benefic. Cap. 21.

The difficulties and dangers to be considered in matters of State.

Phil. Com. Cron. Lodouic. 11. Cap. 26.

The benefit of fore-sight and prouidence in Statists.

Plutarch in his Treatise of instruction for Statists.

as to contemne all humaine helpe and councell. Which we may learne by the example of Moyſes, who though he was enſtricted, inſpired, and conducted by almighty God himſelfe: yet refuſed not the good councell of Iethro, for the manner of his Gouvernement, which almighty God alſo allowed in him.

1. Reg. 20.
2. Reg. 19, et 16.
1. Reg. 21, 22.
22.

On the other ſide alſo, King David, although hee tooke the councell of his Friends, Councillers, and Seruants, as of Jonathan, Achitophel, Ioab, and others; and vſed alſo his owne prudence, as well in the deliberations, as in the execution of his affaires: yet hee neuer omitted to conſult with almighty God by his Prophets and Priests, when he might conueniently do it, yea, and as I haue ſignified elſewhere, continually craued the aſſiſtance, illumination, and direction of almighty God in all his actions whatſo- euer.

Concurrence of humane diligence with diuine helpe neceſſarie.
Iudg. 7, 18, 20.

And this concurrence of Diuine help with humane diligence, is notable expreſſed in the Scriptures, where it is ſignified, that Gedeon gaue order vnto his Soldiers, to crie in their conſlict with the Madianites, Domino & Gedeoni, For the Lord, and for Gedeon. And Gladius Domini, & Gedeonis, The ſword of God & of Gedeon. And againe, in the relation of the great victorie, which Aſa K. of Iuda had againſt the Ethyopians, the Scripture ſaith: Cadente Domino contriti ſunt, et exercitus illius proliante, They were utterly ouerthrowne, the Lord God ſmiting them, and the Army of Aſa fighting, which is as much to ſay, as man doing his endeour, and God giuing the ſucceſſe. This alſo the very Paynims knew, and obſerued ſo well, that Plutarch noteth it ſeriouſlie, in the battaile betwixt Perſeus King of Macedon, and Paulus Æmilius the Romaine.

Paralip. 14, 12, 13.

Plutarch in vit. Paul. Æmil.

Prefumption is no way permitted by God.

For, whereas Perſeus when hee ſhould haue fought, withdrew himſelfe from the ſielde, vnder colour of Sacrificing to Hercules, he ſaith; That God doth not fauour ſuch ydle fellowes, as preſume on his helpe, and wil do nothing themſelues. For God (ſaith hee) hath ſo ordained, that he which wil hit the marke, muſt ſhoote, & hee which wil winne the Goale, muſt run, and hee which wil haue the victorie, muſt fight. And therefore, God fauoured and helped Paulus Æmilius, who craued force & victory with his weapons in his hands:

Gods aſſiſtance bleſſing mans endeauour.

A Dios rogando (as the Spaniſh Prouerbe ſaith) y con la maça dando, Praying to God, and laying on load with his Club.

10

But to ſay ſomewhat heere perticulerlie of an eſpeciall meanes to winne the helpe and aſſiſtance of GOD, nothing behooueth a Statist more, then daylye to re-commend his actions vnto his Diuine Maieſty, by feruent and deuoute Prayer, the force and benefit whereof, is vnſpeakeable, no leſſe in all kind of temporall matters, then in ſpirituall. For the which, wee haue not onely our Sauiours Doctrines and warrant: but alſo, infinite examples of holie and wiſe men, both in Diuine and humane Hiſtories. While Joſuah fought with Amalek, Moyſes prayed vppon the Moutaine, and obtained of God the Victory. The two Annaes beeing barren, were by Prayer made Mothers; the one of the Prophet Samuel, and the other, of the Virgine Mary.

20

Salomon, by Prayer obtained Wiſdome. King Hezekias recovered health, and had victorie againſt the Aſſyrians. The three Children alſo (by praier) were deliuered from fire. And to ſpeake of later times, Theodoſius the Emperour, ſirnamed the Great (as Saint Auguſtine witneſſeth) preuailed againſt the Tyrant Eugenius, more by Praier, then by force. And the like alſo is teſtified by Graue Writers, as of Narſes the Eunuch, Lieutenant to Iuſtinus the Emperour, whoſe great victories were attributed vnto his zealous prayers, and manly endeouours exerciſed in armes.

30

In like manner, the famous victories which Heraclius the Emperour gaue vnto Cofroes, King of Perſia (of whom hee recovered Ieruſalem and all the Eaſt parts) are aſcribed by the beſt historiographers that write thereof, to the earneſt Deuotions and Prayers which hee dailie vſed; and commaunded alſo to be performed, for his good ſucceſſe in that warre. We read in our Engliſh Hiſtories, that King Ethelred, c'der Brother to the famous Alfred or Alured, founder of the Vniuerſity of Oxford, beeing encamped againſt the Danes, and aduertified by his Captaines (when he was going to heare Diuine Seruice, and to perſourme his duty to God, as dayly hee was accuſtomed to doo) that his Brother Alfred, with the reſidue of his Captaines, had ioyned

40

50

The benefit and neceſſity of prayer, for the good ſucceſſe of matters of State.

Math. 6, & 7.
Marke. 11.
Luke. 11.
Exod. 17. 12.
1 Sam. 1. 12.
Luke. 1, 13.
Examples of the great force of deuoute prayer
Ioan. Damasc. in Orat. de nat. B. virg.
Aug. in Lib. 5. de Ciuit. Dei. Cap. 26.
Procop. de bel. Goth. Euagrius in lib. 4. cap. 23.

Paul. Diacon. Lib. 18.
Cedren. Theophan.
Nauelex. Baron. Anno. 521. 622. 623.
Guiliel. Malmesb. de geſt. reg. Angl. Lib. 2. Cap. 3.
Roger. de Hoveden.
Annal. par. 1. An. 871.
Baron. An. condem.

ioyned battail with the enemy, and were in great daunger to be ouerthrowne: he had no sooner ended his Diuine Orisons, but he came himselfe in person, and finding his Soldiers ready for flight, recalled them backe to the battel, thrusting himselfe into the middest thereof. Cum virtute (saith the Historie) Dei miraculo: By whose valour, and the myraculous helpe of God, the Danes were put to flight, and their King slaine, with diuers of their Nobility, and manie thousands of the Soldiers.

To this purpose also may serue, those examples of the famous victories of Edward the third, King of England, against the French, at Cressie in Piccardie, and of the Christians against the Turkes, at Lepanto in our dayes; as also, of manie other admirable victories which I refer the Reader vnto. And will end concerning Prayer, with this sentence of Saint Chrysostome. Vis orationis (saith he) Vim magnis extinguit, &c. The power of praier hath extinguished the force of fire, shut vp the mouthes of Lyons, giuen victories in warre, appeased stormes and tempests, expelled Devils, opened the gates of Heauen, broken the bands of death, cured diseases, reconciled enemies, deliuered Citties from Earth-quakes, and defended them as well from the punishments of God, as from the Treasons and attempts of men. Finallie, it hath overcome all sorts of euils. Thus saith Saint Chrysostome, of the wonderfull efficacy of prayer, and thus much concerning Prayer and Diuine helpe.

Now, to speake a word or two more, concerning humane counsell, the Holyghost giueth a notable aduice. saying: Fili sine consilio nihil facias, & post factum non penitebis. My Son, do nothing without aduice and counsell, so shall it not repent thee after the deed. And againe, Qui agunt omnia cum consilio, reguntur sapientia. They which do all things with Counsell, are governed with wisdom. And this point I hold to be absolutely necessarie, not onely for young men, or others of small experience: but also for the eldest and most expert. For, Nemo omnibus horis sapit, No man is wise at all houres. And as the Prouerbe saith, Two eyes see more then one.

Therefore the famous Scipio Africanus, did ever consult all his affaires with Caius Laelius. And Cicero confesseth, that in his Consulship, hee did nothing without the aduise of the Philosopher, Publius Regulus. And for this cause, Princes haue diuers Councellors, to the end, that matters being pondered by diuers, all circumstances may be duly examined and considered. For as Salomon saith, Ubi sunt plures consilium, confiduntur cogitationes. Plots and designments are confirmed and established, where there are many Councellors. For some find out one inconuenience, and some another, some one remedy, and some another, whereof I shall haue occasion to say more hereafter.

Therefore, I conclude for the present, that a young Statist following the rule and counsell of Tobias, that is to say, fixing his heart and hopes vpon Almighty God, adding the continual vse of deuout and feruent Prayer, to humane counsell and diligence; and loyning thereby, The Wisedome of the Serpent, with the simplicity of the Doue, Piety with Pollicy, giuistes of Grace, with ability of Nature; and finally, the Wisedome of God, with the Prudence of Man, shall deliberate and worke in all occasions, no lesse happily then wisely. And this shall suffice for the third rule.

Fourthly, it importeth greatly, that after mature consultation of any matter of State, and serious re-commendation thereof, to Almighty God, no time of action be fore-slowed with needlesse delayes; after the matter determined. For time may so alter the state of any affaire, be it neuer so well and wiselic resolved: that the opportunity of execution may be vtterly lost, and the businesse it selfe withall. And therefore, the common Prouerbe aduiseeth, To strike while the Iron is hot. For the Poet could say, Nocuit differre paratis, Delay is alwayes hurtfull, to those who are ready to execute. But especially in matters, wherein there is any competence of enemies, who euer watch diligently to take all opportunities: and do often helpe themselves very greatly, by the negligence and delayes of their aduersaries.

And although this aduise is necessary in all matters of State, yet is most behoouefull and requisite in warlick affairs; wherein we see many times, that speede and diligence is more important, then great force. For speed being commonly accomther an olde man should deale with matters of State.

Prouer. 17, 22. Many Councellors necessary for Princes.

The conclusion concerning the concurrence of deuoute praier and humane counsell. Mat. 10, 16.

Time not to be fore-slowed or lost.

Lucan. in lib. 1. The danger of needlesse delay.

Speedy execution is most necessary in matters of Warre.

Guil. Malra. de hispra.

Chrysost. de nat. Dei. Hom. 5. The testimony of Saint Chrysostome concerning the force of Prayer.

The necessity of humane counsell. Eccles. 32, 20.

Prouer. 15, 21.

Pantarch in his Treatise in vtuled, whe-

The force of sudden feare.	accompanied with sudden terrour and feare : doth open the way to small force, and enable the same to woorke great effects. And therefore Agathocles, one of the Tyrants of Sicily, hauing but a few Soldiers, and exhorting them vnto the speedie and sudden inuasion of Carthage, said: In repentino metu non modicum victoria momentum. Sudden feare will be of no smal moment and importance, for obtaining of the victory. Which was pro- ued to be true by the euent, and is daillie seene by the experience of surprizes, camifadoes, and all other sudden enterprises of warre.	in another.	A Statist ought to measure the matters he vnder-taketh, with his owne ability.
Iust. in lib. 42.	To conclude this aduise, one generall rule is to be held, that to temporize or delay time is neuer good, but in three cases. The first, when matters are not maturely consulted, and well digested: wherein (neuerthelesse) al due diligence is to be vsed, least time and opportunitie of action, bee lost and spent in consulta- tion.	Now then, it is conuenient for euery one, as well to weigh his owne Talents, and how they sort with the businesse in which he is to be employed. As if he be to perswade, whether hee haue the giift of vtterance and eloquence. If he bee to passe Couenants and Conventions of Leagues or Marriages; whether he be a Lawyer. And if he be to treat on mat- ters of warre, whether hee be a Soldier, and so in like cases. For otherwise, hee shall prooue, Asinus ad Liram, An Asse at an Harpe, as the Prouerbe saieth, and not only disgrace himself, and them that sent him: but also, loose his labour and businesse.	Who they are commonly that vnder- take greater matters, then they can per- forme.
In what cases delay is necessary.	The second case is, when there is som iust and important impediment of the execution. The third, is in cases of ex- tremitie, which surpasse a mans power and wisdom to helpe; for then the on- ly remedy is to temporize and win time, which produceth many accidents, that could neuer be foreseen or imagined, and discovereth soueraigne remedies, for the most desperate diseases. And therefore Pericles was wont to say, Time is the wisest Councillor that is. Thus much for the fourth aduise.	They that erre in this point, are those (commonly) which either haue such an inordinate desire to be meddling in great matters, that they care not what they vnder- take, so they be doing; or else haue an extraordinary conceit of their owne wit and sufficiency. And therefore, it shall be good for euery one, to moderate in himselfe, as for the first, the desire of dealing; so for a remedy to the later, it shall be secure for any man in my fancy, not to relie wholly vpon his owne opi- nion, concerning his sufficiency, but partly vpon the iudgement of others, receyuing rather imployment from his Prince, or other superiours, then offer- ing or intruding himselfe thereto, til he haue made some good triall of himselfe. For by that meanes, if the busines speed well, hee shall haue the thanks and honor of it: and if it succede otherwise, hee shall auoyde a verie great part of the blame.	A young Sta- tist should not make himself Iudge of his owne sufficiency.
The first case.	Fiftly, let euery young Statist consi- der, and measure his owne ability, to the end, that he do not vnder- take anie mat- ter about his reach or capacity: for no man (how excellent soeuer he bee) is so perfect, that he excelleth in all things. And therefore the Poets faigned, that the Goddesses themselues had not al giftes alike; but that some excelled in one, and some in another. And the Apostle saith, that God distributeth his gifts vnto men, diuersly. Diuidens singulis prout vult. Di- uiding them to euery one as pleaseth him, to the end we may haue need one of another. And this also, common experi- ence teacheth; for some excell in depth of iudgement; others, in sharpeuesse of wit; others, in eloquence; others in me- mory; others, in Science and learning; and of them, some in one kind, and some	But if he find, that his superiours know him not so well as he doth himselfe, and yet would employ him in matters, wher- in hee hath neither experience nor abili- tie, it shall be lesse shame for him to con- fesse his defect, and either to refuse the Commission, or to craue an associate, furnished with the parts that he wanteth then to accept the charge, and so faile in the performance.	Better for a Statist to ac- knowledge his owne de- fect, then to accept a charge which he cannot performe.
The 2. case.	And of them, some in one kind, and some	Moses being commanded by almigh- tie God, to go in Embassage to Pharaoh King of Egypt, for the deliuerie of the Children of Israel, humbly excused him selfe, as vnfit for such a waighty charge, by reason of the impediment of his speech: for the remedy whereof, God gaue	Exod. 3, 11, 12.
The 3. case.
Plutarch in Pericle. Time the best Councillour that is.
A mans owne abilitie well to be weighed
1 Cor. 12, 11.

Instruction both for Princes and Subjects.

A yong Statist ought to begin his practise with small matters.

A yong Statist like to a Phisition.

A yong Statist compared to the Iuic Tree.

The assistance of wise & sincere friends, most necessary in great employments.

The practise of the Lacedemonians in great employing Ambassadors.
Aristot. in Lib. Polit. 2. Cap. 7.

gaue him an assistant, to wit; his brother Aaron, who being verie eloquent, might speake for them both. Whereby, not onely Subjects, which are to be employed, may learne to consider and acknowledge their owne defectes: but Princes also may learne so to employ their Subjects, that one may haue the partes another wanteth, and supply each one the defectes of another.

Sixtly, it shall not be amisse (in mine opinion) for a young beginner to enter into his first practise, with matters of small importance, and to proceede vnto greater by degrees, as his experience and ability shall growe and encrease. Like vnto the wise Phisition, who when hee beginneth to practise, taketh easie cures in hand, and medleth not with inueterat and dangerous diseases, vntill hee hath got both experience and credit. And so woulde I wish a young beginner in matters of State, to flye businesse of great weight and difficulty; and rather to procure at first, some honorable Commission or Embassage of congratulation, or condoling, including some ouerture of an important treaty, rather then to deale in the treatie it selfe, which requireth great practise, Experience, and Wisdom.

And, if hee be employed in any such treaty, I wold wish him to be contented, rather to be a second or an assistant, then chiefe in Commission, and so to growe (for a while) like the Vine or Iuy, by the support of another tree. Or, if his dignity be such, as cannot admit a seconde place; then, to procure (so much as may be) to haue such assistants, as are not onely men of sounde iudgement and Wisdom, but also his sincere friends. Such being commonly the emulation and ambition in Courts, that he may otherwise make account, that his owne associates and Companions, will curiously obserue euery little error of his, and take aduantage thereof for their owne better credits.

To which purpose is to be considered that the Lacedemonians vsed to choose such to send on their Embassages, as wereyther publicke, or at least of secret enemies: to the end that one of them might serue as a spie over the others actions. And the like may still be vsed, and is (no doubt) many times. And Phillip de Co-

10

20

30

40

50

mines noteth of Lewes the eleuenth King of France, that he was woont sometimes when hee sent a great Ambassadour, to giue secret Commission (apart) to some meancier man in his company, vsing the other for a shew, and for matters of complement; or perhaps to the end, that he should beare the greatest part of the embassage charges, as commonly greatmen do, rather then for the dispatch of important affaires. And the like of both these examples may well be practised by Princes, when they send great Ambassadors, and especially when he that is chief in commission, is raw & vnexpert. And therefore, it shall be conuenient for such a one, to consider the same, to the end, that hee may the better looke and regard his owne carriage, and procure (as I haue already said before, to haue about him, wise and assured Friends: least otherwise, his owne assistants, may let him commit some grosse and absurd errors; and so handle the matter, that all the Negotiation, shall turne to their owne Honour, by the discouerie of his imbecility.

And this hee may feare, not onely in his associates and fellowes in Commission, but also in his followers and Seruants: among whom, some one of more spirit and talent then the rest, may seeke to make aduantage of his maisters weakness. As chanced to an Ambassador (whom I knew) whose Secretary noting in him some negligence in the dispatch of aduises; when occasion required, pretended commonly his Maisters Letters with his owne. Besides, being employed by his Maister, to procure aduises and intelligences, he concealed the most important matters from him, and wrote them himselfe to some principall Councillours, whose good grace hee gayned so farre thereby, that they procured his aduancement at his home return: whereas, the Ambassadour himselfe, was helde altogether vnwoorthy of further honor and preferment, and liued euer after in disgrace.

Seauenthy, I would aduise a young beginner, not to charge himselfe with many matters at once, as some do, that cannot endure to see any man employed, but themselves. Whereon it followeth, that some one or two busineses succeeding il (as comonly among many

Phillip Com in Cron du Roy Louis, Cap. 26.

The practise of King Lewes 11. of France, when he implored a great Ambassadour.

The danger of associates in Commission, when they are not sincere friends.

The treachery of seruants to be feared in weighly employments.

Many matters not to be vnder taken at once, by a yong Statist.

A yong Statist like to a man of a weak Stomack.

An aduertisement to the Favourites of Princes.

The danger that the Favourites of Princes doe incurre by hatred of the people.

Polidor. Virgil. in Hist. Angl.

Secrecy in matters of State, most necessary.

do) they receiue more disgrace thereby, then reputation or thanks for all the rest, though they succede neuer so well. Therefore, it is wisdom for anie man (especially for such as be Nouices in affayres of State) to take but few matters in hand, and to dispatch them well. Like to a man that hath but a weake stomach, who is to take heede, that he neuer ouerlay it with quantitie: nor yet to pester it with diuersitie of meates, because one thing will let and hinder the digestion of another.

And this I wish to be considered especially, by such as are the fauourites of Princes, who (manie times) desiring to haue al in their owne hands, do not stick to charge themselues with much more, then they can attend to dispatch in due manner and season, to the exceeding great detriment, as well of perticuler men, as of the State ingenerall. Whereby also, they expose not onely themselues, but their Princes likewise, to such hatred of the Nobilitie and people, that thereon doth follow (manie times) commotions, and rebellions, insomuch, that their Princes are either forced to abandon them to their enemies, or else to perish with them. As to omit forraigne examples, we haue seene by experience in England, in the times of King Edward the second, and King Richard the second against whom, the Nobilitie and Commons did take Armes, for the hatred they bare to their fauourites, Pierce Gausson, the two Spencers, Robert de la Vere, Earle of Oxford, and others theyr Adherents: vpon whose persons they discharged their fury, euercising all kind of cruelty on them, except vpon the Earle of Oxford, who saued his life by flight into Holland, and ended his dayes in banishment. And heereto also may partly be ascribed, the vnfortunate endes of both those Kinges, who were afterwards deposed, and cruelly and Treacherously murdered.

Eightly, nothing is more necessary in handling matters of State, then Secrecy, I meane matters intended and consulted, before they come to execution: for, they are like to a Mine, which hauing any vent, is wholly frustrate, and of no effect. Therefore, Peter King of Arragon, being demanded of Pope Martine the fourth, what hee meant to do with the great Fleete, wherewith hee afterward recouerd Sicily from the French, made this aunswere vnto him: That if he thought his Shirt did know ic, hee would e burne it.

But, because I am to speake of this point of Secrecie heereafter, I wil heere onely giue a generall rule to be helde and practised by young Statistes: which is, not to communicate anie important matter of State, to any man whatsoever; except he is to be employed, or his counsell to be vsed therein. For, whosoever fayleth in this point, is not fit to handle any matter of importance, nor shall euer haue credit with Princes, who esteeme nothing more in their Seruants, then Secrecy. Insomuch, that a Prince in these dayes (whom for some respects I forbear to name) caused a faithfull seruant of his (whom he also loued dearly) to be killed, for feare he should reueale a secret, which (by chaunce) hee came to know: whereby we may perceiue, howe dangerous a thing it is, to be pertakers of Princes secrets. And therefore, Philippides the Comedian, being willed by king Lysimachus to aske some fauour of him, beseeched him to doo him what fauour else he pleased, so that he imparted none of his secrets vnto him. And thus much for this point.

Ninthly, a young Statist is to haue especiall care, to auoyde all kinde of vnlawfull employments, as to be an Instrument of any wickednesse for his Princes seruice: for, beside the offence to God, (who will assuredly punish the same sooner or later) he may well thinke, that his Prince also will neuer after trust him, howsoeuer hee bee satisfied with the seruice for the present. For, Princes manie times are contented, to take the benefit of a seruice done by euill meanes, and yet (euer after) holde suspected, and hate the enuious and mallicious nature and disposition of him that did it: for, they make vse of such men, no otherwise then as of poyson, onely to serue theyr turne, though they detest the malignitie of it. And therefore, Augustus Caesar was wont to say, I lone the Treason, but I hate the Traytor. And allwise Princes hold it for a rule, that where there is no bridle of Conscience, and feare of God, there is no fidelity towards man to be expected.

A generall rule to be held concerning Secrecy.

Princes esteeme nothing more in their seruants then Secrecy.

Dangerous to be pertakers of Princes Secrets.

Plutarch in his Treatise of talking too much.

Vnlawfull employments by Princes to be auoyded.

Plutarch in his Apotheg, of Kings and Captaines.

Princes loue the Treason but hate the Traitor.

We

He that is false to God, will not be true to man.

Polidorus Virgil, in Henry. 5.

When Princes are wise and learne to know themselves.

Princes sometimes disauow their commissions after the fact.

Gods Justice vpon euill instruments.

Lustin. in lib. 12.

Cornel. Tacitus. in Lib. 1. Annal.

We read, that Constantius Caesar, father vnto the Emperour Constantine the Great, hauing commanded, that al such christians as would not adore his Gods, should depart from his seruice: did (neuerthelesse banish all those that denyed their Faith, and retained the others in his seruice and fauour. Whereof hee gaue this reason: That those who had so little Consciencia as to bee false vnto their GOD, could not be true to him. And Henrie the sifst, King of England, presently after his Fathers death, banished from the court all such as had beent Councillours, Instruments, or Companions of his ryots before, perswading himselfe, that they were not to bee trusted about his person. And so it commonly falleth out; when Princes are wise, and enter into due consideration of themselves, and of their consciences.

But such other Princes, as giue themselves ouer vnto detestable Vices and sinnes, and maketh no Conscience of anie thing, do not onely disauowe theyr owne Commissions, after that some Wicked acte is committed by their order: but also vse to picke quarrelles, or to take verie small occasions, wherby to make away the Instruments of their owne Wickednesse, eyther to rid themselves of the suspicion, reproach, or infamy thereof, or for the ieaousie which they haue of the maligne Natures of their Instruments; or for feare they may discover their practises if they liue; or sometimes for some other respects, God so disposing (by his most iust Iudgements) to make them onely serue for the Executors of his Iustice vpon those, who preferred their owne seruice before his.

So did Alexander the Great at his fathers Obsequies, command publicke Iustice to be done vpon those, whom hee himselfe had secretly employed for to kill him. So did Tiberius the Emperour, disauow his Commission giuen vnto a Soldiour, to kill Agrippa, telling him, that hee should aunswere the matter before the Senate: As hee did also put to death Seianus his great fauourite, and Instrument of much mischief. And in the like sorte, dealt Caesar Borgia with a fauourite of his. And so also haue some in these our dayes, by diuers and sundrie deuises, beene made awaie in many seuerall Courtes and Countreyes, when they had serued the appetites of some great personages, whome (for iust respects) I will heere forbear to Name. Which may serue for an aduertisement and warning vnto all men, to take heed how they suffer themselves to be imployed by any man, in matters which are vnlawfull and offensive vnto GOD, Et felix quem faciunt aliena pericula cautum; Happte is hee, who can take heede by other mens harmes.

The tenth aduise which I giue vnto a young Statist, is, that if his Prince doo him the honour, to make him of his Councill, to consider well, what is the dutie of a Councillour, to which purpose, I will also set downe some Rules. Wherein neuerthelesse, I meane not to frame an exact Councillour, as Cicero did an Orator; and Xenophon a Prince; and Castiglione a Courtier; neyther yet do I take vpon me, to aduise old Councillours, whose experience must needs surpasse mine. But onely to giue some aduertisements, vnto such as haue not anie great experience or practise in matters of State. And forasmuch, as it requireth some larger discourse, then were fit and conuenient to prosecute in this Chapter, it shall serue for the subiect of the next.

CHAP. VI.

40 Other Generall Rules for a young Statist, aduanced by his Princes fauour to be considered in himselfe; in his prince, and in the matters that are to be consulted. And first, concerning the Councillour himselfe.

50

HE poyntes which (in my fancy) are principally to be considered by a young Councillor, though they might be diuided

E e e e 2 into

Hippy is he that taketh heed by another mans harmes.

Of the dutie of a Councillor, more at large to be handled in the following Chapter.

The points that are to be considered in a yong Councillor, reduced to three heads.

Eight points to be considered in the Councillor himselfe. A Councillor ought to be truly vertuous and Religious. God doth assist and illuminate good men in matters of Councill.

Numb. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, &c.

Vertue giueth reputation to the possessors thereof.

Ambrosius de Officiis lib. 2. cap. 10.

Where vertue and wisdom concurre all good counsell is to be expected.

Ambrosius ibid.

The dignity of vertue is such, that euill men beare respect thereto.

into manie members, yet may be well reduced to three heads. The first, concerning himselfe; the second, concerning his Prince, and the third, touching the matters that are to be consulted. Of all which I will say somewhat, with such perspicuity and breuity that conueniently I may.

As for that which toucheth himselfe, he is to regard chiefly eight points. The first, that he procure by all good means, not onelie to haue the reputation of vertue and religion: but also to be (indeed) truly vertuous and Religious, for two causes. The first, to obtain thereby the assistance of Gods grace, which howe necessarie it is, for the illumination of mans vnderstanding: appeareth in our former Chapter of true Wisedome, Prudence, and Pollicie, to bee the especiall giustes and graces of Almighty GOD, and no otherwaies to bee obtained, but by the obseruation of his commandements.

The other cause, why it behooueth a Councillor to bee truly Religious and Vertuous, is, for that such is the force of Vertue, that it giueth credite to the possessors thereof, and dooth make them more easily to bee beleued: and their counsell the better accepted. And therefore we see, that all men of discretion and iudgement, do demaund Councill rather of those that are reputed wise and vertuous, then of wicked men, who onely haue a reputation of Wisedome. For, as Saint Ambrose sayeth; Where Wisedome and Vertue are conioyned, Magna erit consiliorum salubritas, There is all good and wholesome counsell to be had. And all men (saith he) are willing to heare the wise and vertuous man, as well for the admiration of his wisedome, as for the loue of his vertue. In which respect also he saith, that men addresse themselues commonly for Councill, to those who are more vertuous then themselues. For no man (saith he) hath reason to thinke him who is inferiour vnto himselfe in manners, to bee his superiour in Wisedome and counsell.

Furthermore, such is the dignitie and authoritie of Vertue, that euill men beare a reuerend respect thereto, and stand (as it were) in awe of good men. Whereof we haue an example in Herod, who although he held Saint Iohn Baptist in prison, and would not followe his counsell in the matter of his Diuorce: yet, for the reuerence which hee bare vnto his Vertue, hee consulted many other thinges with him, and followed his aduice therein. And, as the Holye Scripture sayth also, Metuebat eum, Hee feared him.

And no doubt but wise and Vertuous Princes, much more esteeme and respect the counsell of wise men that are vertuous; then of others; of equall wit and iudgement, that are vicious and wicked; knowing that, as Salomon sayth, Consilia impiorum fraudulenta, The Counsell of the wicked are fraudulent. And that hee who hath no care of his Conscience, and dutie towardes God, will haue no lesse care of his dutie towardes men.

The second point, is, that hee also giue satisfaction vnto the worlde of his wisedome, by the good and wise government of his family. For no wise Prince can thinke him a fitte man to Councill him; or to gouerne vnder him, that cannot gouerne himselfe and his owne Family. And therefore, Basilus the Emperour aduised his Sonne, to choose those for his Councillors, who hadde giuen prooffe and experience of theyr Wisedome, in the good conducte and direction of theyr owne priuate affayres.

Whereuppon also, Saint Ambrose sayeth, An idoneum putabo, qui mihi & consilium, qui non dat sibi? Can I thinke him fit to counsell me, that cannot Councill himselfe? For, hee that is a Foole in his owne businesse, can neuer bee wise in the businesse of other men. And therefore Saint Paule declaring the dutie of a Byshop, requireth, that hee bee such a one, as gouerneth well his owne family. For, Si quis (saith he) domini iura praesse nescit, quomodo Ecclesia Dei dirigentiam habebit. If a man cannot gouerne his owne house, how shal hee gouerne the Church of God.

The third point is, that in all his speeches and Conference with his Prince, hee vse all sincerity, trueth, and playnesse, without Flatterie. For, although the common Prouerbe say; Obsequium vnicos, Veritas oarum parit, Flattery gayneth

Marke. 6. 20.

Prouer. 12. 9. The counsell of wicked men is euer more fraudulent.

A Councillor ought to haue great regard to the government of his Family, and priuate affayres.

Ambrosius in Lib. 2. de Officiis. Cap. 112.

No man fit to counsell another, that cannot counsell himselfe. 1 Tim. 3. 2. 5.

A Councillor ought to auoide all flattery Terentius in Andri.

with friends, and Truth hatred: yet, as there is nothing more pernicious to Princes the flattery; so (by consequent) there is nothing more unfit to be vsed of Councillors. Whose office is, and especiall care should bee, to vndeceiue their Prince in all things, wherein he is any way deceiued, and to labour therein so much the more, by how much the lesse other men do it. Seeing one of the greatest infelicities of Princes, is, that all, or most Men flatter and sooth them in all things, and few or none dare deale sincerely or plainly with them. In which respect Seneca saith; Quid omnia possidentibus deest? Ille qui verum dicat. What wants he that hath all? A Man to tell him the truth. Which therefore the faithfull Councillor should doe, for otherwise, the Prince shall liue in continuall error and ignorance of his owne Estate, and especiallie of his imperfections, yea, and in great perrill of ruine. For, as Quintus Curtius saith. Regum opes, &c. The States of Princes are oftener ouerthrowne by flattery, then by force.

Neuerthelesse, if the Councillor haue occasion to admonish his Prince, in any error or fault of his: he ought to doe it with great discreation and moderation. Vling (as Parisatis, Mother to Cyrus, was wont to say) words of Silke, and launcing the sore (like a good Chirurgion) with such dexteritie: that hee may cure it, and not exasperate his Prince, and make him lesse capable of his good counsell. Those that offend in this kind, are commonly such, as presume ouer-much, either on their owne wits and power; or on their Princes weakenesse; or on his ouer-great fauour and familiarity; or on the neede that he hath of them: or else perhaps, are of nature seuerer, insolent, and passionate, for such sometimes doe forget themselues, yea, and take a pride in contradicting or admonishing their Princes, with lesse duty and respect, then were conuenient.

Such a one was Calisthenes, of whom Arrianus Writeth, that he made himselfe odious to Alexander the Great: Tum ob intempestiuam libertatem, tum ob superbam stultitiam: Both for his vnseasonable libertie of speech, as also for his proud follie.

Such a one also was a Philosopher, that liued in the Court of Dionysius the elder, a Tyrant of Sicilie. For, whereas the Tyrant (being delighted with his own Poems) was wont to impart them publicquely to certaine Philosophers, which liued in his Court, to haue their opinions: there was one among the rest, who could not flatter, nor endure the vanitie of the Tyrants humour; but told him plainly, that his Verses were nothing worth, and that it was a shame to heare them. Where-with the Tyrant was so offended, that he commanded his Guard to take him presentlie away, and to carry him to the Mines, to worke there among other condemned persons.

Afterward, the same Philosopher being released, & returned to the Court, at the suite of his Friends: it chanced, that the Tyrant caused a certaine Poeme of his owne, to bee read againe in the presence of him, and all the other Philosophers, commaunding them to speake their opinions thereof. All the rest extolled the worke to the Skies; some praying the inuention, and others the vaine and grace of the Verse, euery one striuing who should commend them most: vntill it came to the turne of this Philosopher, who, in stead of giuing his censure, called suddentlie to the Guards of the Tyrant, saying; Come Maisters, carry me away to the Mines, for I cannot endure this extreame folly. The Tyrant being (as it chanced) in a good humour, tooke it not ill: but was content to put it off to a iest, and laughed well at it.

But this Philosopher seeking to auoyd Silla, fell into Charibdis, for, by flying base flattery, he fell into another extremity, to wit, impudent insolency, which is no lesse unfit and absurd for Councillors: who are to imitate the discreet & prudent modesty of Hephestion, Councillor to Alexander the Great. For, although he alwaies admonished Alexander discreetly and freely, as occasion serued: yet he euer did it in such sort, that it seemed rather to be Alexanders will and pleasure he should so do; then that hee challenged any such right to himselfe.

The like stile ought a Councillor to vse, in contradicting or admonishing his

Eeee 3 Prince,

Princes that haue all, want one to tell them the truth.

Flattery the ruine of Princes States. Quint. Curtius. in Lib. 8.

How a Councillor ought to admonish his Prince of his error. Plutarch in his Treatise of Flattery.

Who they are that commonly ouer shoot themselves in admonishing or contradicting their Princes.

Arrian. in Lib. 8. de rebus Alexand. Vnseasonable liberty of speech odious to Princes

Plutarch.

A pleasant example of a rude Philosopher, and the Tyrant Dionysius of Sicily.

A bold, plaine and resolute Philosopher.

The discrete modesty of Hephestion Councillor to Alexander. Quint. Curtius. de reb. gestis Alexand.

In what manner Princes are to be spoken too, and admonished.

All speech proceeding of passion, insolency, or contempt, are odious to Princes. A wound at a friends hand better then the kisse of an enemy. Prouer. 27. 6.

How a Councillor ought to speake to his Prince, and of his Prince.

Councillours by coniuency, are pertakers of their Princes faults.

Plutarch in Themistocles.

A Councillor ought to be constant in his opinions.

Prince, obseruing exactly his disposition and humor, because no man is alwayes disposed alike, either to receiue contradiction, or to heare of his faults, especially in the presence of others. And therefore, fit time and place is alwayes to be chosen for that purpose, and some plausible preamble to be vsed of the Princes praises, for some good parts of his: which (in such case) is no flattery, but a spurre to Vertue, and may serue for a preparatiue to the pill of admonition, which hee meaneth to giue him. So that hee deliuer it in so good tearmes, and with such dutifull respect, that the Prince may perceiue, it proceedeth not of passion, or of a spirit of contradiction, or of audacious insolencie, or of contempt (al which are to Princes most odious, but of intyre loue and affection, for so will hee (if hee be wise) take the admonition in good part, and say with Salomon, A wound at a Friends hand, is better then the Kisse of an enemy.

To conclude, a Councillor may hold this rule, to speake alwayes in this manner freely vnto the Prince himselfe, although it be of his errors, but neuer to others of him, otherwise then in his honour and commendation. And though the Prince bee neuer a whit the better, for the admonition, yet it may suffice his Councillor, to haue done his dutie, and not to be pertaker of his Princes faultes, as otherwise he should be, if he should not (in all dutifull maner) aduise and admonish him, as occasion should require. And therefore, though he should feare to incurre his displeasure for his plainnesse, yet he ought to discharge his conscience, and to say as Themistocles did to Euryades, who took vp a staffe to strike him from his free speech: Strike mee so, that you heare me heereafter.

Finally, a Councillor should not expect, that his Prince should alwayes follow his aduise, nor afflict himselfe much, if he do not. For, though Princes giue vnto their Councillors great libertie, to say what they will: yet they do reserue a greater to themselues, that is to do what they list. And thus much for the third part.

The fourth point that a Councillor is to consider in himselfe, is, that it behoeth him to be graue and constant in his opinions, for lenity and inconstancie is a most euident signe of folly. And to this end, it shall be necessarie for him, maturely to deliberate, and fully to consider the matter propounded, before hee deliuer his opinion. For, as Seneca saith, Sunt duo contraria consilio, festinatio et inertia, Two things are contrarie to Councell, Hast, and Anger. And againe, Deliberandum est diu (saith he) quod statuumendum est semel. The thing that is once to be determined, is to be deliberated by leysure. And to the same purpose Aristotle saith, That a Wiseman ought to counsell slowly, and to execute speedily. Therefore, he excludeth verie young men from councell in matters of State. For that (saith he) their naturall heate maketh them ouer-hastie and headlong, in giuing their opinions. Besides, by reason of their want of experience, there doth not occure vnto them many reasons or difficulties to be considered: in which respect, they resolue easily and speedily, and with lesse iudgement. Whereas ancient men, both by reason of their colder humour, and also of their greater experience (which ministreth vnto them more matter of discourse, and more doubts to be resolued) do determine slowly, and with far more iudgement. So that speedy resolutions, are arguments of weaknesse of witte, or want of iudgement; and therefore, to bee shunned of all Councillors, as one farre more proper vnto Women: whose Councell (men commonly say) is neuer to bee taken, but vpon a suddaine, whereof I shall declare the reason heereafter.

The fift point, is, to auoyde the other extremitie opposite to lenitie, to wit; Obstinacie and Wilfulnesse, which is no lesse vnfit for a Wise Councillor, then the other. For, obstinacie is euermore accompanied with contempte of others mens Opinions, and contention, and is therefore a verie great Enemy vnto Resolution; which can neuer bee taken, where Obstinacie and Contentious men, do meete together in a Councell.

This Defect, proceedeth commonlie, either thorough great Pride and Presumption of a mans owne witte, or else, of a false conceite, that manie men haue, that it is a shame for a Wise man, to change his opinion; which is farre otherwise. For although a wise man ought not Lenity and inconstancy, an euident signe of folly.

Seneca in Pro-ucribijs. Ibidem. Arist. in Ethic. Lib. 6.

Why young men are not fit to giue councell.

Why old men resolue slowly and maturely

Women's councell to be taken on the sudden.

Obstinacy in opinion vnfit for Councillours.

From whence obstinacy in opinion proceedeth.

Folly for a wise man not to change his opinion, when there is iust cause.

Seneca in lib. 4. de Benef. Cap. 34.

A necessary exception to be vnderstood in the opinion of a wise man. Idem. Ibid.

Plato in Lib. 10. de Rep. Cap. 9.

A wise man compared to a good Gamester by Plato.

In what case a wise man may change his opinion.

While the chiefe and fundamentall reasons of the designement doe stand good, the councill is not to be changed.

Time alwaies affordeth new difficulties.

not to doe it lightly, and without great reason; yet, when there is sufficient cause, it were great shame and folly not to do it. And therefore Seneca the Stoick, who, according to the opinion of those of his Sect, held; That a wise man neuer changeth his opinion: expoundeth it in such sort, that he includeth in the opinion of a Wise Man, a necessary exception, to wit; if nothing happen that may alter the case. And therefore hee also saith, that, It is the property of fooles, to assure themselves (ouer-much) of their counsels and determinations. And that a wise Man knoweth, what sway error beareth in the affaires of Men; How vncertain all humaine things are; And how many accidents hinder good and wise designements. Whereupon he concludeth; That it is no shame for wise men to alter their opinions when occasion requireth. And Plato compareth a wise man to a good Gamester, Who doth accommodate his play to the chances of the Dice. And so (saith he) should a wise Man accommodate his counsels and course of life to the occasions, which changing and varying with the time, doe often require new deliberation.

Neuerthelesse, it is heerein to be considered, that this change (with the occasions) is conuenient only, when the occasions change the fundamentall and chiefe reason of the first resolution. For whereas in all matters of counsell, many reasons may concur to one end, whereof some may be more important then other, and some one (perhaps) the ground and foundation of the rest: it falleth out other-whiles, that change of times and variety of occasions, doe alter some considerations and circumstances, and not the grounds and fundamentall reasons of the matter; in which case, the resolution is not to be changed. For otherwise, men should be like Weather-cockes, which change with euery winde: seeing time alwaies produceth some new difficulties, and changeth some part of the reasons in all matters, that require any long time for the execution. Whereupon, there may follow some alteration of circumstance in the designement; though the resolution may stand good for the principall.

Wherefore, it were great temeritie and lenity in any Man, to condemne other mens counsels; because some of the Morines that induced them thereto, haue failed; or because the successe hath not (in the beginning) answered their expectations. As may appeare by the wise Phocion of Athens who hauing dissuaded the Athenians, from a certain enterprise which succeeded well, and being reproached therewith by some of his Aduersaries, saide: I am right glad of the good successe, yet nothing repenteth me of mine opinion. This he said, partly, because he fore-saw a bad sequell of their good beginning (as after it fel out) and partly, because a wise man dischargeth his part and duty, if his counsell be wel grounded vpon good and sound reasons, although the successe bee not so good as he expected. Considering, that the euent of all mens counsels is onely in the hands of God, and cannot assuredly be fore-seene; but much lesse warranted by the wisdom of Man.

To conclude this point, a Wise man ought alwaies so to ground his opinions and counsels vpon reason, conscience, and Iustice: that whatsoeuer succeedeth; he shall haue no iust cause to repent or retract the same. And therefore Aristides, hauing said to Dionysius the Tyrant (who demaunded one of his Daughters in marriage) That he had rather see her burned; then married to a Tyrant: would neuer retract or recall his words againe, although it did cost him the life of his Sonne. For, when the Tyrant had slaine his Sonne, and asked him, whether he was still of the same minde, concerning the marriage of his Daughter? He answered. Although I am sorry for that which hath happened to my Sonne; yet I doe not repent me of that which I haue said. Which constancy of Aristides, Plutarch greatly commendeth: As proceeding (saith he) of a notable and compleat vertue. And thus much for this first point.

The sixth point necessary in a Councillour, is Secrecy, whereof I haue said somewhat before, and heere adde: That Councillours must vnderstand, that their mouths are sealed vp by their Princes; as Hephestions mouth was by Alexander the Great, who hauing shewn him a secret Letter, said nothing else to him, but tooke off his sealing Ring, and put it to his hippe. This (I say)

A Councill not to be condemned, because some of the morines haue failed.

Plutarch in Timoleon, et in Phocion.

A good beginning hath many times a bad sequell.

Counsell grounded vpon reason, conscience, and Iustice, neuer to be repented.

Plutarch in Timoleon.

The constancy of Aristides.

Secrecy most requisite in a Councillour.

Plutarch in Alexandrio.

Secrecy the best and surest bond of matters of State. Valer. Max. in Lib. 2. Cap. 2. The Persians honoured Silence as a God. Amian. Marcellin. in Lib. 21.

Tit. Livius. in Lib. 42. The admirable secrecie of the Romaine Senate. Valer. Max. in Lib. 2. Cap. 2.

Some men are over-secret, and some too open.

The danger of taking information by obscure questions.

2. b. 1. p. 1.

Some intending to be secret, do thereby discover their secrets.

say) a young Councillour must vnderstand, to passe betweene his Praince and him, when his Prince doth him the honour, to make him of his Councill, or to treat with him of matters of State. Wherof secrecy is (as Valerius Maximus saith.) Optimum & tutissimum vinculum, The best and surest bond. And therefore it was so much esteemed among the Persians, that they honoured Silence for a God. And such was the care and respect that the Romaines had thereto, that when King Eumenes came into the Senate, to demaund assistance against King Perseus: it was neuer vnderstood, (as Liue witnesseth) either what he said, or what any answered, vntill the warre (which the Romans made at his request) was ended. Such being the secrecie of the Romaine Senatours (though verie many in number) that, as Valerius saith, it seemed, that Not so much as one Man heard, that which was committed to the eares of so many.

Neuerthelesse, great discretion is to be vsed herein: for a Man may as wel be ouer-secret in some cases, as too open. I haue noted sometimes, that some great Princes and Councillors, for fear of discovering their designements, haue eyther for-borne to take sufficient information and instruction, of such as could best informe them, and might haue bene trusted, whereby they haue gone blindly to work: or else they haue sought to inform themselues in clouds, by such darke and obscure questions, that they haue bene falsly and ill informed. For the parties with whom they conferred, making a false coniecture of their drift, and answering them according to their owne sense (far otherwise then they would haue done, if they had knowne their meaning) haue abused them against their wils.

Again, some there are, who intending to be very secret, play, as a man may say, wilyly beguile theselues. I knew a Councillor, who being commaunded by his Prince, to giue him his opinion in a matter of exceeding great importance and secrecy: thought to informe himselfe of some circumstances so cunningly, that his meaning should not bee so much as guessed at. But the party with whom he treated, being of an excellent iudgment, presently vnderstood it, and though he answered him to his great satisfaction: yet, not thinking himselfe any way bound to secrecy (because the Councillor neither had taken his oath, nor his word, nor had shewne any confidence in him for that matter) wrote it to a great personage, with whom he had correspondence, by which meanes, it was (within a month) so publike, that it came into the Gazetta of Rome, & from thence was published throughout Christendome, as the Councillor himselfe hath since told me. So that, in seeking information by Riddles, & obscure questions, two inconueniences may be feared: the one, to receiue a false information; and the other, to discover the designement against a mans will.

Therefore, to prevent these inconueniences, that when information must needs be taken (as in some cases it is absolutely necessary, especially for enterprises to be made in forraign countries, vnknowne to him who would lay the plot) it shall be conuenient, if a sufficient enformer may bee found, who is knowne to be of sincere conscience: to deale plainly with him, & to shew confidence in him, taking (neuerthelesse) his oath for secrecy, to binde him the more, and to vse other meanes of courtesie and benefits to oblige him; yet to do this with the leaue of the Prince, for the Councillors better discharge. But when such a confident and sincere enformer cannot bee had; my opinion is, that although it shall be good, to vse all possible meanes, to vnderstand what may be learned, without discovering the intention: yet neuerthelesse, no great foundation is to be made of an information taken by such a meanes; except it be of a matter of fact, wher in, no man (that knoweth the truth) can falsly enforme, except he will wilfullie lye. For, in matters of discourse, depending vpon the iudgement of the enformer, be hec neuer so wise: small reckoning is to be made, whē he doth not fully vnderstand the intention of the propounder. Thus much concerning the sixt point.

The seauenth point, which a Councillor should consider in himselfe, is, that in the deliberation of all matters whatsoeuer: he be cleare and free from all passion and perticuler affection, that

An example to very good purpose in this case.

Information by Riddles.

How informations are to be taken in important matters.

When a confident informer is not to be found.

An information little to be esteemed, when the Informer doth not fully vnderstand the drift of the propounder.

A Councillor ought to be free from passion and peticular affection.

Salust. in Cate- lin. Passion and affection doe blinde the judgement.

Iustin. in lib. 19.

Enny maketh a man sometimes enemy to his owne good.

Plutarch in his Apotheg of Kings and Princes.

Councillors should leaue their quarrels at the Councell-Chamber doore.

Respects of other mens greatnesse pernicious in Councils.

is to say, from all respects, eyther of loue, haired, or enuy to any. And this I say, for wise Princes are wont, exactly to obserue the humours and dispositions of their Councillors, & to make small account of the aduise or persons of such, as they finde to be subiect to any of the foresaid imperfections. And with very great reason, for, as Salust saith. Non facile animus, &c. The minde doth not easily see the truth, where passion and affection beareth sway. Beside, passion not only blindeth the vnderstanding of Man, but also dooth so corrupt his will: that although he see the truth, yet he will not embrace it. Which Iustine obserued very well in King Antiochus, for, when Hanniball had counselled him to invade Italie: his Councell (saith Iustine) was reiected, partly, because the chiefe Councillors and Fauourites of Antiochus feared, that if it were admitted, Hanniball might grow in more credite and fauour with Antiochus, then they; and partly, because Antiochus himselfe doubted, least his owne glorie might (in some part) be obscured, if he should be thought to doe any thing by Hannibals aduise. So pestilent is the passion of enuy and emulation; that it maketh a Man (sometimes) Enemy to his owne good, no lesse then of the publique.

Therefore Aristides of Athens, being sent Ambassadour with Themistocles, who was his Enemy, willed him at their departure out of the Cittie: that they might leaue all their emulations behinde them at the Gates, least their priuate passions might hinder the publique good of the Common-wealth. And so in like manner, all Councillors that haue any peticular quarrels, or disgusts among themselves: should leaue them at the Councell Chamber doore, when they enter in. And the like may also be said, of the respects of priuate friendship, or of other mens greatnesse and fauour with the Prince: which respects are (many times) no lesse hurtfull in Councils, then Enuie or Hatred. For they make men con- ceale their owne iudgements, because they will not disgust some Friend or great Man, that holdeth a contrary opi- tion. In so much, that it falleth out many times, that some fauourite of the Prince, hauing once vttered his conceit, albeit none of the wisest: carryeth after him all the rest without contradiction, and so the best opinions are either concealed, or not so well debated as were conuenient.

For the preuention and remedy of this inconuenience, the wise Cosmo de Medices, Duke of Florence, and Phillip the second, last King of Spaine, vsed to propound their most important mat- ters to their Councillors, first by Wri- ting, commaunding them: to set down their opinions also, in Writing, with their reasons, and not to communicate the same with any other. Afterward, if they thought it needfull, they assem- bled them in their presence, to heare them debate and defend their owne opi- nions; which proceeding (in my fancy) was very prudent. For so, every Coun- cellour gaue his opinion freely, with- out passion, or respect to any other: & (for his owne honour and reputation) defended it so far as reason would beare him, whereby, matters were thorowlie beated and discussed.

To conclude this point, Councillors must say of all peticular respects, as Popilius the Romaine (being sent Amba- sadour to King Antiochus, his old friend) saide vnto him of their former amity: Facessit priuata amicitia, &c. Farewell priuate friendship, when publique matters are in hand. This (I say) should Coun- cellors, when they come to the Coun- cell-Table, both say and practise, lay- ing aside all priuate and peticular re- spects, eyther to one or other, or vnto themselves. As hauing nothing else befor their eyes, in all their deliberati- ons: but the publique good; to wit, the the seruice of God, their Prince, and their Countrey.

The eight and last point, which I would wish a young Councillour to consider, concerning himselfe, is: the danger of punishment, both humane and Diuine, which he shall incurre, if he seduce or corrupt his Prince by euill Councell. Because the Prince himselfe, if euer he haue the grace to see his own errour: cannot but hate and detest the Authour and Councillour thereof. As did King Henrie the fift, who repenting the riotous course of his youth: banni- shed from the Court, all those which had

A prudent practise of the wise Cosmo de Medices, Duke of Florence, & of Phillip the second, last King of Spaine.

The freedom of every Coun- cellors opinion on to be giuen

Iustin in libro 2. Priuate friend ship not to be respected, when publique matters are in hand.

What Coun- cellors ought to haue al- wayes before their eyes.

The dangers that Councel- lors incurre, by giuing eu- ill counsell to their Prin- ces.

Euill Coun- cellors hate- ful sometimes to their Prin- ces.

had misled and seduced him, as I have partly noted before. And though he escape the disgrace and punishment of his Prince: yet he may iustly feare the hatred of the people, and his owne destruction to ensue thereof, as I have also signified before (vpon another occasion) in Pierce Ganesstone, the Spencers, and other Councillours of King Edward the second, and King Richard the second.

To whom I may adde Emson and Dudley, put to death by King Henry the eight, in the beginning of his raigne, to satisfie the importunity of the people: who demaunded Iustice against them, for the euill councill they had giuen to King Henrie the seauenth, in matters of exactions, impositions, and pecuniarie penalties.

And Plutarch also noteth, that the Councillours and Fauourites of Apolodorus, Phalaris, Dionysius, Nero, and other Tyrants, were racked, flayed, burned, and other-wise most cruelly tormented by the people. And iustlie (saith he) for that he which corrupteth or seducteth a Prince, deserueth no lesse to be abhorred of all Men: then one that should poyson a publique Fountaine, whereof all Men must drinke. Seeing that vpon the Princes example and authority, dependeth on the good or euill estate of all his Subiects. And therefore, hee which misleadeth the Prince, doth notable iniurie to the Common-wealth: and oweth the penalie thereof, as well to the people, as to the Prince himselfe. In which respect, Plutarch also noteth of Tigellinus, a wicked Councillour and Corrupter of Nero, that the people (after the death of Nero) made continuall instance for his punishment: as for publique debt due to the Common-wealth, which at length they obtained of Otho, Successour to Galba.

But though neither the Prince nor the people, doe exact this debt of a wicked Councillour: yet hee shall be sure to pay it eternally to Almighty God, if he respect not, and satisfie his Iustice otherwise. For, if Not one'y they which doe euill, are worthy of death (as the Apostle saith) but also those, Qui consentiunt facientibus, which consent thereto: much more guiltie are the Councillors of euill, who are either the principall Authours thereof, if they inuent it; or abettors and associates in the highest degree, if they approue and ratific it. And therefore, how hatefull such are to Almighty God, it appeareth by the examples of Achitophell and Haman, the one Councillour to Absolon, and the other to Ahasnerus, whose wicked counsels God did not onely Frustrate and Infatuate; as the Scripture speaketh: but also punnish most exemplarily in this life, making the one of them his Instrument, to execute Iustice vpon himselfe, and turning the wicked councill of the other, to his owne destruction. Also the like may bee obserued in Gods iust punishment, vpon Cardinall Wolsey, and some other Councillours of latter times.

And Phillip de Commines seriously noteth, how a Councillor vnto the Duke of Bourgundie, called Monseur Contay, having giuen cruell Councill vnto the Duke (to put to death certaine Hostages of Liege) lined not long after. Which some (who were present, and heard him) did in a manner prognosticate, saying; That they would warrant him, he would not liue a yeare to an end. Which (saith he) fell out to be true, for he dyed within a short while after. Thus then it appeareth, how true the Latine Prouerbe is: Consilium malum consultori pessimum, Euill Councill is worst to the Councillor. This shall suffice for those points which a young Councillour ought to consider in himselfe.

CHAP. VII.

What a Councillour ought to consider in his Prince: Namely; his Conscience; his Commodity; and his Reputation.

A Councillor is to consider in his Prince, (principally) three thinges: his Conscience, his Commodity, and his Reputation. Of which three, I place a Commodity in the midst, because it is to bee ballanced and weighed with both the other:

Polid. Virg. and Iohn. Stow in Hen. 5.

Euill Councillors hatefull to the people, and punished by them. In Stowe. in Henry. 8.

Plutarch in his Treatise that Philosophers should conuerse with Princes.

The wicked Councillors of diuers Tyrants notably punnished.

A wicked Councillor like to one that poysoneth a publique Fountaine.

Plutarch in Otho. The punishment of a wicked Councillor, is a debt due to the Common-wealth.

The danger of eternall damnation to a wicked Councillor.

Rom. 7, 31.

1 Sam 7, 23. Hester. 7, 10.

Haman and Achitophell punished by Almighty God in this life for their wicked councill.

Phil. Com in Cron du Roy. Louis 21. Ca. 28.

What Commines noateth of a Councillor to the Duke of Bourgundy.

Hofiodus. Euill Councill worst to the Councillor.

A Councillor is to consider in his Prince, his conscience commodity, and reputation.

other: seeing, nothing can bee truelie commodious, which is not agreeable to both, and no temporall commoditie can recompence the losse of eyther of them.

And first, to speake of Conscience. The word Conscience is diuersly vnderstood, and commonly taken for an Act, consisting in the application of our knowledge to our actions. For that, Conscientia is Scientia cum alio, Knowledge with another thing. In which sense, Conscience may erre, when we erre in Knowledge, or apply our true Knowledge erroneously to our actions. And therefore I will not treat of Conscience heere in this sense; but onely as it is the first natural habite in the Soule of man, which neuer erreth. And so Conscience is the surest and highest part of reason, whereby we doe naturally discern betwixt good and euill, reiecting the euill, and approving the good. Wherevpon groweth remorse and repentance in our Soules, after an euill act; and contentment, after a good. In which respect, Origen saith, that Conscience, is Rektor & pedagogus anime, &c. The Governour and pedagogue of the Soule, whereby it is diuerted from euill, moued to good, admonished, reprooued, and chastised.

Saint Basile, as Thomas Aquinas noteth, called it Naturale iudicarium, The Natural facultie of iudgement. Whereof S. Augustine speaketh, when he saith, that there are in the Soule of Man, Certaine infalible rules, true and incommutable lights of vertue, whereby euery one conceiveth and iudgeth truely, of the generall principles of the office and ducie of Man. S. Chrysostome, speaking of Conscience, saith. Almighty God hath placed it in the Soule of man, as a Iudge, which is ever vigilant, and attentive to his actions, incorruptible, inexorable, inflexible, and searching into his very cogitations and intentions. Whereupon it followeth, that after any sinne or offence is committed, a mans owne Conscience iustly iudgeth and condemneth him, without any other Accuser or Witnessse, then himselfe.

Lastly, Thomas Aquinas calleth it Lex naturalis, A naturall Law, or the Law of Nature, by the light whereof, the verie Painims know those thinges which are commaunded by the Law of God, as the Apostle testifieth, saying: The Gentiles who haue not the Law (that is to say, the written Law of God) doe by nature the thinges contained in the Law, they hauing not the Law, are a Law vnto themselves. Which shew the effectes of the Law written in their Hearts, their Conscience also bearing witness, and their thoughts accusing one another, or excusing, in the day of Iudgement. Thus saith the Apostle. Wherby it appeareth, that those which liue according to the rule of reason, the Law of God, and the Law of Nature (which are alwaies conforme one to another) do according to Conscience: and and on the contrary side, those which decline and swerue from any of them, do against conscience.

Now then, forasmuch as eternall felicitie dependeth, vpon the integritie & purity of Conscience, in which respect our Sauior saith; Beati mundo corde, &c. Blessed are the cleane in heart, for they shall see God: it followeth, that nothing can be truly commodious, which is contrary to Conscience. For, whatsoeuer hindreth our greatest good & commodity, that is say; our Saluation, and draweth vs also to the greatest miserie that can be, to wit; to eternall damnation: the same is not good and profitable, but mischieuous and pernicious. For, as I noted (else-where) out of our Sauiors words; What doth it profit a man to gain the whole world, if he loose his soule? And therefore Saint Augustine saith very well, that hee which counsell:th a Man contrary to his Saluation, hath Pallium consulentis, & venenum perimentis; The Cloake of a Councillor, and the Poyson of a Killer.

Whereupon it followeth, that the first and principall thing, which euery Councillour ought to regard, is, that his counsell be so grounded vpon Conscience: that God be not offended, nor his Princes conscience wounded therewith, which latter were (of it selfe) no small infelicity, though God should not otherwise punish the euill act. For, as on the one side; There can be no greater happinesse in the life of Man, then the tranquillity and quietnesse of Conscience, as S. Augustine saith: So, on the other side, there can bee no greater miserie or torment, then Nocte, dieque suum gestare in pectore restem, To carrie day and night, the agreeable to the Law of God. Rom. 2, 14, 15, 16.

Who doe according to Conscience, or against Conscience.

Math. 5, 8. Nothing truly commodious that is against Conscience.

Mat. 16, 26.

August. in Psalme. 119.

The principal thing that a Councillor ought to regard.

No greater happinesse in this life, then tranquillity of Conscience.

August. de ciui. Dei. in Lib. 21.

Iuuenall.

What the word Conscience signifieth.

Thom. Aquin. 2. P. 2. Q. 2. Ar. Cap. 4.

Idem. 1. P. 79. Q. 79. Ar. 13. in Cor.

The definition of Conscience.

Remorse of Conscience.

Origen. in Lib. 2 in Epist. ad Rom. Cap. 2.

S. Basile. apud D. Thom. 1. P. Q. 79. Ar. 13. Ca.

August. in lib. 2. de Lib. arbit. Cap. .o.

Chrysost. To 2. concio. 4. de Lazararo.

Conscience placed in the soule of man as a Iudge of his actions.

D. Tho. quod li. 2. Ar. 6. 1. Conscience is a natural law, alwayes a-

Testimony

Testimonie of a Mans wickednesse in his owne breast.

And although Princes do not alwaies (at the first) feele the pricke of Conscience, while the pleasure or commodity of wicked counsell is yet fresh: neuerthelesse, afterward they are stung, and vexed there-with at one time or other. Such beeing the Nature of the Worme of Conscience, that though sometimes it seem to sleepe: yet otherwhiles it gnaweth and biteth bitterlie, as Saint Chrysostome witnesseth. Least if it were continuall, it should not bee supported, and if it were not frequent, it might quickly be contemned or forgotten. But howsoever it may seem to sleep in prosperity, it neuer faileth to prick and sting in aduersity, giuing testimony to wicked men, of Gods iust iudgement vpon them. For, as S. Gregorie saith; Culpa claudit oculos, & pena aperit; Offence, or sin shuts the eyes, and punishment openeth them. To which purpose also, Job saith; Cum reddiderit Deus, tunc scient; When God shall reward him, according to his deserts, then he shall know it, that he hath sinned. The Children of Jacob, being taken for spies, and detained in Egypt: fell presently into account of their sin, in selling their Brother Ioseph, saying; Merito hoc patimur, &c. We suffer this worthily. And Mauritius the Emperour, seeing his Children slaine before his face, and himselfe also designed for the slaughter, acknowledged Gods Iustice, saying; Iustus es Domine, &c. Thou art iust o Lord, and thy iudgement is right, and full of equity. The like may be noted in Alphonfus King of Naples, of whom I haue formerly spoken, and infinite others, whom I omit for breuities sake.

And this al wicked Councillors ought well to consider and feare, in respect of the hurt that may ensue thereby, as well to themselues, as to their Princes: because the worm of conscience breedeth not onely remorse, & repentance of the euill act; but also hatred, both of the counsell and the Councillor. As it did King Adelstane, the first Monark of England, after the entrie of the Saxons, who being seduced by the bad counsell, and false suggestions of one of his favorites: banished his Brother Eadwin vniustly, commaunding him to bee sent to Sea, with onely one Seruant, and in a Boat without Oare or saile, wherein he perished. Which when King Adelstane vnderstood, he fell into the account of his owne offence, and so much repented it, that he not only tooke vpon him seuen yeares hartly contrition: but also grew by little and little, to detest and abhorre his fauourite, who had counselled him thereto, insomuch, that in the end, he did cut off his head, taking occasion vpon certaine words of his. For he beeing his Cup-bearer, and coming one day to giue him drinke, in a sollemne publique feast: chanced to stumble with one foote, and yet to recouer himselfe with the other, saying; So one Brother helps another. Whereupon, the King remembering the losse of his Brother, was so moued therewith: that hee caused him presently to be taken and executed.

Furthermore, a Councillor is to consider, that counselling his Prince against his conscience: he endangereth not onely his Princes Soule, but also his temporall state, exposing him and it to the iust punishment of Almighty God, vpon whose will dependeth the States of all Princes, as I haue largely prooued already. Beside, no man knoweth, for how small an offence, in the sight of man; God may punish a Prince in his person or State. Moyse, for a litle distrust in the promise of God, dyed before he entred into the Land of promise. King Saule was reiected of Almighty God, and dispossessed of his kingdom; for reseruing some part of the spoile of Amalecke, at the request of the people, contrary to the commaundement of the Prophet. Dauid was punished with the losse of 70000. of his Subiects, for numbring them. And Ezechias for his vaine glory, in shewing his treasure to the Ambassadors of the King of Babylon: was threatened by the Prophet, with the spoile of his Pallace, and captiuitie of his posterity, which afterward was fulfilled.

But of al other acts against conscience, for which God punisheth Princes and their States, none are more pernicious to State: then such as are committed, with intention and hope to benefit the State. For, how little soever some of them may seeme to be in their owne nature: yet they haue one circumstance, which doth greatly agrauate them, and maketh them very haynous in the sight of

No greater misery, then a tormented Conscience.

The worme of conscience byreth at one time or other.

Chryso. in 16. Luc. Concio. 4. Why the sting of Conscience is frequent, and not continuall.

Gregor. in Job. 21. Sinne shuttes the eyes, and punishment openeth the. Job. 21, 19.

Gen. 42, 21.

Nicophorus. in Lib. 8. Cap. 40.

Guicciard. in Lib. 1. Cap. 22. Numb. 6, 7, 8.

Remorse of Conscience breedeth hatred of the euill counsell and of the Councillor.

Guicciard. in Lib. 2. Cap. 6. Matth. westm. 28. 934.

A memorable example of K. Adelstane, and his Cup-Bearer.

How a wicked Councillor endangereth the State of his Prince. No man knoweth for how small an offence, God will punish a Prince in his person or State.

Num. 20, 14. 1 Reg. 15, 11. Deut. 1, 33.

Example of Moyse, Dauid, Saule, and Ezechias.

4. Reg. 20. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17.

No wicked counsel more pernicious to State, then that which is giuen for the benefit of State, and why.

God doth justly turne Machiullian policies to the ouerthrow of the contriuers.

Prouer. 10, 24

An example of Pharaoh,
Exod. 1, 16.

Exod. 12, 36.
Exod. 14, 28.

An example of the Iewes,
Iohn. 11, 57.

August. Tract.
40. in Ioan.

Iustin. in Lib. 1.
An example of King Asti-ages.

Iustin.
3, 4. in Lib.

of God, seeing that wicked pollicies do commonly proceed, of distrust or lacke of belec in the prouidence of God. For no man, who sincerely belieueth, that all States depend vpon Gods will and prouidence, can with any reason perswade himselfe: that any thing which is offensiuē to god, may be good for state. And therefore no maruaile, if Almighty God, who of his Iustice punisheth sins many times, euen by the same means whereby they offend him: dooth often turne the wicked pollicies of Machiullians to their owne ouerthrow, or dayning that (as Sa'omon saith.) Quod timet impius ueniat super eum; That which the wicked man feareth, may fall vpon him.

So it fell out to Pharaoh, who fearing least the Children of Israel might multiply ouer-much, to the daunger of his State: oppressed them wrongtully, and commaunding that their Male children should be cast into the Riuer, as soone as they were borne. Neuerthelesse, the more they were oppressed, the more they encreased and multiplied: and, thorow the special prouidence of God; Moyses was saued drowning, and nourished by Pharaohs owne Daughter. And by his ministry, the Children of Israell wer deliuered, Ægypt spoyled, and Pharaoh himselfe with all his Army drowned. So it also fell out to the Iewes, who fearing least Christ (if he should liue any time) would draw so many to belieue in him, that the Romains might easily destroy their Nation and Temple, for want of people to defend the same: resolved to kill him, and so drew vpon themselves & their Temple, the destruction which they sought to preuent. God so disposing, for punishment of their wickednesse, that the Romains did afterward vtterly destroy their Temple and Countrey, as I haue amply related before. And Herevpon S. Augustine notably saith; That while for feare of loosing their temporall State; they contemned the eternall; they iustly lost both.

Also, the like Iustice and iudgement of Almighty God, may be noted in King Astiages, who fearing that his Daughters issue might deprive him of the Kingdome: thought to preuent it, by the murder of her Sonne Cyrus, commaunding Harpagus to destroy him as soone as he was borne. But God so

10

20

30

40

50

disposed, that the Child was saued, contrary to the expectation of them both; and that afterward, he dispossessed Astiages of his Kingdome, with the assistance of Harpagus, whom Astiages had made the Instrument of his wickednesse. So also it happened to Amulius, who thinking to assure his owne State, by the murder of his two Nephewes, Romulus and Remus: caused them to be layed foorth in the Woods, when they were new borne, to the end, that they might be deuoured of wilde beastes, or perish other-waies. Whom (neuerthelesse) it pleased God to preserue them, and by the meanes of Romulus, to dispossesse Amulus of his Kingdome.

But to speake of Christians. In the time of the Emperour Valentinian the third, Attila, the Scythian, and King of the Hunnes (who called himselfe Flagellum Dei; The Scourge of God) invaded the Romaine Empire, with an Armie of eleauen hundred thousand Men, and hauing already possessed himselfe of all Pannonia, (called Hungaria euer since) passed thorough Germany into France, vsing all kindes of cruelties vpon all forres of Christian people; threatening vtter ruine and destruction, as well to Christian Religion, as to the Romaine Empire. Wherevpon, the famous Captaine Aetius, being assisted with Theodoricke, King of the Gothes, and diuers other Princes; presented him battaile in France, not farre from Orleans. In which battaile, there were slaine an hundred foure score thousand on both sides, and Attila ouerthrowne in such sort; that he had no meanes to saue his owne person, but by retyring himselfe into his Campe, where hee fortified himselfe. Neuerthelesse, hee might haue beene eyther slaine or taken, and Christendome thereby deliuered of a most potent Enemie; if Aetius would haue done his endeouour thereto. But he preferring reason of State, before true Christian zeale, and Gods seruice, spared him, fearing lest if he were vtterly ouerthrown: the Gothes (who had already conquered all Spaine, and a great part of France) would be far more dangerous to the Romaine Empire, being then free from the feare of Attila, who was comon enemy to both. For which respect, he suffered him to escape with

Plutarch in Romulo
An example of King Amu-lius.

Paul. Diac. in
Lib. 15.
Attila, King of the Hunnes, that tearmed himselfe the scourge of God.

An hundred and foure score thousand men slaine in one battaile.

The famous Captaine Aetius, preferring reason of State before conscience destroyed himselfe, and endangered the Romaine Empire.

the Reliques of his Army into Hungary: which (by the iust iudgement of God) turned as well to the destruction of Ætius, as to the great daunger of the Empire. For Ætius being returned most triumphant to Rome, fell shortly after into the disgrace of the Emperor, who suspected; that he had spared Ætius, to the end, to make himselfe Emperour by his assistance, whereupon he slew Ætius with his owne hand. And Attila having (within a while) repaired his Army: was more terrible and noisome to the Roman Empire, then he had bin before. For he came into Italy, putting all to Fire and sword: he razed Aquilleia to the ground, tooke *Paui*a, sacked and destroyed Milaine, and marched towards Rome to besiege it. Which he had done, if he had not beene diuerted from it by Pope Leo the great: who going himselfe in person to him, perswaded him to desist from his enterprise, and to retire himselfe into Hungary, which he did presently. But to return to Ætius; we see herein the bad successe of his policy, & how it turned to his owne destruction, when he preferred reason of state, before conscience, and the seruice of Almighty God.

Hereto I may adde some others of later time, of whom I haue also spoken before, vpon other occasions; as Cesar Borgia, the Mirror of Machiauels Prince: who determining to poyson Cardinall Cornetti, poysoned his own Father and himselfe. In like manner, the Queen of Hungarie, thinking to maintain her selfe and her Son, in the vniust possession of that kingdome, against Ferdinand, then King of the Romains, and afterward Emperor: craued ayde of Solyman the great Turke, by whom, both she and her Son were depriued thereof. Hereby it may appeare, how dangerous and pernitiuous all Councelles or attempts against conscience, are to State; in respect of the offence of him; on whose will depend all States, and who, as Iob saith; Apprehendit sapientes in asturia eorum, &c. Overtaketh the wise Men of the World in their owne craft and subtilty, and the counsell of the wicked is made foolish. Therefore it may be truly said of Machiaullian Princes, and their wicked Councillors; as the Prophet said of the King and Councillors of Ægypt. Stulti

Principes, &c. The Princes are Fooles, and their wise Councillours haue giuen foolish Councill; the Lord hath cast among them the Spirit of giddinesse, and hath made them stagger and erre in all their works, like a reeling and vomiting drunken Man.

As for reputation, which is also called Honour, Estimation, Fame, Good-Name, or Credit, no small regard is to be had thereto, when there is any question of the Princes commodity: considering, that of all externall goods, it is the principall and most precious, and (as Thomas Aquinas affirmeth) Most like to the goods of the minde. Wherevpon Salomon saith: Melius est bonum nomen, quam diuitia multa, A good Name is better then great Riches. Which is most euident in matter of State, for that reputation conserueth the States of Princes many times, no lesse (or rather more) then wealth and force.

In which respect, Tiberius Cesar was wont to say, as Tacitus noteth. That although the deliberations of all other men, doe commonly consist in the consideration of utility and profit: yet the State of a Prince is such, that he ought principally to respect Fame and Reputation. And the reason is, for that the losse of reputation, is not onely the signe, and (as I may say) the preamble of a Princes fall: but also the occasion thereof many times. Because, therewith decayeth and falleth (commonly) the affection of friends, and the respect, feare, and obedience of Subiects, whereupon followeth the subuersion of States.

Now then, whereas the reputation of Princes consisteth especially in foure things, to wit; Wisedome, Valor, Vertue, and Power: all counsell (tending to commodity) is to bee weighed with the estimation thereof, for nothing that may impair the honour of the Prince in any of these, can be accounted truelie commodious for him. Therefore Phillip de Comines aduise, touching the Princes Wisedome, that if he bee not verie wise, and of good partes: great care be had, that Strangers be not admitted to his presence, especiallie to treat with him, least the discouerie of his imperfection in that behalfe, may blemish his Reputation, and animate his Enemies to contemne him. For the French Historiographers affirme, that Attila more hurtful to the Romaine Empire, then before his sparing by Actius.

Blondus in Decad. 1. Lib. 2. Sabellie. Ennead. 8. Lib. 1. Baron. An. 452.

Cesar Borgia the mirrour of Machiauels Prince. Guicciard. in Lib. 6. Hist.

The Queene of Hungary. Syrus in Commen. An. 1542.

Iob. 5, 13.

Esay. 16, 9, 10

The reputation of the Prince greatly to be regarded of a Councillor, and why.

D. Thom. 2. 2. 9. 73. Ar. 2 & 3. Prouer. 22, 1.

Cornel. Tacitus. Lib. 4. Annal.

The danger of the losse of a Princes reputation.

Wherein the reputation of a Prince consisteth.

Phillip. de Com. Cap. 57.

Du Haillan in Charles le sage.

that the opinion which men had, of the Wisedome of Charles the first, King of Fraunce, called the Wise: auayed him more against the English, then his force, in so much, that the dispatches which he made in his Chamber, were more feared then his Armies in the Fielde.

The reputation of valour in a Prince.

The like also is to be said, of the opinion of Valour in a Prince, which maketh him no lesse redoubtable vnto his Enemies, then beloued of his Friends and Subiects. Whereas the opinion of his effeminacy or baseneise of mind, maketh him contemptible to all men, and often causeth the deposition and destruction of Princes: as it did to Sardanapalus, the great Asirian King; to Chilperick, King of Fraunce; to Wenceslaus the Emperour, and to many others beside.

In Justin. in Lib. 1. Paulus Aemilius in Chilper. Naucler. Chron. 1400.

Arist. in Lib. 5. Polit. The reputation of vertue and Religion.

And as for vertue (wherein I include Religion also) Aristotle teacheth, that the onely reputation and opinion thereof: is a notable stay and prop to a Princes State. In respect, that all Men commonly conceiue, that a vertuous and religious Prince, is in the fauour and protection of Almighty GOD. And therefore Achior, chiefe Captaine of the Ammonites, councelled Holophernes, when hee made Warre vpon the Children of Israell: To informe himself, whether they had committed any great offences towards their God, whereby they might loose his fauour. Assuring him, that otherwise it would bee in vaine to assaile them, because their God would defend them. And the like conceit it seemeth, that Leolin, Prince of Wales, had of Henrie the third, King of England, for, when certaine Bishops (who were sent to treat with him, to reduce him to his obedience) threatned him with the Kings great power and forces: he answered. That he feared more his Prayers and Almes giuing, then his Armies. Meaning, that hee doubted, least in respect of his Piety and Charity, God would protect and assist him: and that otherwise, he would little esteeme his force and power. So much it importeth a Prince, to haue the reputation of vertue and Religion, which serueth for a Bridle to his Enemies, both Domestickall and Forraigne, to with-hold them from all attempys against him: Beside, it Judich. 5, 20, 21.

Matthews Paris. in Henric. 3

Piety and Charity great beauties in a Prince.

causeth that his faults and errors are eyther not beleued; or more easily excused, and the blame thereof laid vpon his Councillors.

And for these causes, Machiauell also counceileth his Prince, to procure (by all meanes) to haue the reputation of a religious, iust, and vertuous Prince: though he teach him withall, to bee a most wicked Tyrant. Wherein I cannot omit by the way, to note the absurditie of his doctrine, notably repugning and contradicting it selfe. Seeing, he will haue his Prince to seeme a Lambe; and be a Wolfe, and to make shew of a Saint, and yet to be a Deuill indeede. Which is more possible, then, as the Comickall Poet saith; Cum ratione insauire; To bee made with reason. For all feigned thinges (saith Cicero) fade and fall away like Flowers, and nothing that is dissembled, can long last. Where our Sauiour himselfe also confirmeth, saying expressely of Hypocrisie. Attendite, &c. Beware of the Leauen of the Pharises, That is to say; of Hypocrisie. For nothing is secret that shall not be reuealed, nor any thing hidde that shall not bee knowne.

And this is more euident in dissembling and hypocriticall Tyrants, then in any other sort of Men. Because, so violent is the flame of tyranny; that it breaketh through the weake and clouien Walles of Hypocrisie, and discoouereth it selfe to the World. Such being the State of publique persons, and especiallie of Princes (whose actions are subiect to the eyes and censures of all Men) that their least faultes cannot passe, eyther vnknowne, or vncontrouled of the people.

As Plutarch affirmeth, notably aduising Princes, to haue an especiall regard vnto all their actions: because their very least defects or imperfections are noted. Which he confirmeth with examples of diuers Princes; as of Pompey the Great, noted of singularity, for scratching his Head with one Finger; Lucullus, censured to be ouer-delicate in his Dyet; the famous Scipio, blamed for much sleeping; and Cesar, for going ill girded. What shall wee say of tyrannickall Actes, such as Machiauell commendeth in his Prince: I meane Murthers, breach of promises, and oaths,

Machi. in Princ. Machiauell aduise his Prince, to seeke to haue the reputation of Religion and Vertue. The absurdity of Machiauel's Doctrine.

Terent. in Eunuch.

Cicero. de Offic. Nothing that is dissembled can last long.

Math. 16, 6.

Tyrannie cannot be hid or concealed.

The least defects of Princes are commonly noted and knowne to their Subiects.

Plutarch in his Instructions for those that manage matters of state.

No hypocri-fic can suffise to couer
Tyrranny.

Hypocrisie encreaseth
the hatred of God and man against a Tyrant.
Iob. 20, 27.

The reputation of true & not of feigned vertue requisite in any Prince.

What true vertue in the Prince work-eth in the subiects.

What are the effects of vice in a Prince.

Concerning
truth and fidelity in any Prince, in his Oaths, promises and word.

Falshood and deceit, dangerous and damnable.

oaths, frauds and deceit, and all kind of in-Iustice? can any man of reason think, that the same can be covered with any Cloak of Hypocrisie? Or can a people be so simple or senselesse, as not to know and see a tyranny, when they behold the manifest effects, and see too heauie a weight thereof in themselues? Therefore, what else can follow of Hypocrisy in a Tyrant, but that his Subiects shall hate him much more, and the sooner conspire his ouerthrow, as of one no lesse odious to God then to man? wher by the Scripture shal be fulfilled, which saith; The heauens shall reueale the iniquity of the Hypocrite, and the Earth shall rise against him.

Now, concerning the reputation of Vertue, which is necessary for the conseruation of a Prince: it must be grounded vpon true vertue, and not vpon vain shewes, & hypocriticall dissimulations. For, as true Religion, Iustice, & Vertue (ioyned with princely power) do engender in the Subiects admiration, respect, reuerence, & loue towards their Prince: euen so impiety, in-iustice, and intemperance in him, do breed in the subiects either hatred, or cōtempt of his person. For of the crimes of impiety and in-Iustice (as periury, deceit, and crueltie) proceedeth hatred; and of the vices of intemperance (as lasciuiousnesse, drunkennesse, and such like) is engendred contempt, whereof I purpose to discourse more at large hereafter. Neuerthelesse, I think good to say somewhat more in this place, concerning one speciall vertue, very requisite in a Prince for his reputation: to wit; truth, fidelity, and constancy, in the exact obseruation of his oaths, promises, and word. Wherof I am the more willing to treat, because Machiauell alloweth and commendeth all maner of falshood, deceit, treachery, and periury in a Prince, when he may hope to gaine, or to benefit his state thereby. But how impious and absurd his doctrine is in that behalfe, yea, and how pernicious to Princes & their States: it will the more euidentlie appear, if we consider, how dangerous and damnable all falshood and deceit is to any Common-wealth, for the conseruation whereof, nothing is more necessary then truth and fidelity, as well in the Prince, as in the people.

Therefore Cicero teacheth, that Fides, which we may call Fidelitie (consisting, as he saith, in Veritie, and constant performance of vvordes, Promises, and Couenants) is Fundamentam Iustitie, The Foundation of Iustice, which is the especiall prop and stay of State. In which respect, he calleth it; Commune omnium præsidium; The common defence or refuge of all Men. And also saith, that Nul-lares vehementius rempublicam continet, quam fides. Nothing doth more firmelie vnite and hold together the Common-wealth, then Fidelitie. And Valerius Maximus calleth it; Venerabile nomen, & certissimum humane salutis pignus; A venerable and Diuine power, and the most sure pledge of humane securitie. And the Romaines so much esteemed it, that they builded and dedicated a Temple to it, as to a Goddesse, in which Temple, all Leagues, Truces, Couenants, and important Bargaines, were publicly made and sworne: which were so religiously obserued, that whosoever brake them; was held for a cursed and damned Creature, and vnworthy to liue in humane societie. And with great reason, for, if falshood and fraud were permitted to haue course in common-wealths: what Traffique or Commerce with Straungers or Friendes? What assurance in Leagues with Forraigne Princes, in Contracts and Marriages, in Promises and Bargaines, and in buying and selling? What Loue? What Society? What Commonwealth? Which consisteth in the communication of Commodities one with another; and flourish so much the more, by how much euery one tendereth, and desireth the publique good, more then his owne: in which respect, it is called Respublica, that is to say, Weale-publique. And therefore, if trustie and faithfull dealing should faile among Men: there wold beno more ciuill societie amongst men, then amongst Tygers and Beares, Foxes and Wolues, Cats and Dogges. Which the Apostle insinuateth notably, when hee exhorteth the Ephesians, and (in them) all other Christians, to vse all Sincerity and truth one with another, because wee are all combined in one Mystical Bodie. Propter quod (saith hee) deponentes mendaciam, &c. Therefore, laying aside all lies, let euery

Cicero in Lib. I de Offic. Wherein Fidelity consisteth.

Idem. pro Sext. Ref.

Idem. Lib. 2. de Offic.

Valer. Max. in Lib. 6. cap. 6. Dionis. Halicar. in Lib. 2. Tit. Liii. in Lib. 2. et 3.

If falshood & fraude were permitted amongst men, no Commonwealth could stand.

Respublica, the Commonweale or publique good.

everie one speake the truth to his Neighbour; Quoniam sumus invicem membra; Because wee are all Members one of another.

Heerevpon it followeth, that fidelity is not only necessary in the Subjects, but also in the Prince, for the conseruation of the Common-wealth. For, seeing nothing is more requisite, for maintenance of the Politicall body, the vnion of the head with the members thereof, that is to say; of the Prince with the people, and nothing more necessary thereto, then their trust and confidence one in another, which cannot be, where there is no fidelity: It followeth, that nothing is more requisite, for conseruation both of the Prince and people, then fidelity in both; without the which, neither can the subjects assure themselves of their Princes protection, nor the Prince be satisfied of his Subjects Loyalty.

And to speake heere particularly of the Prince, it is to bee considered, that the want of fidelity and sincerity in him, is most dangerous: not onely vnto the Common-wealth, but also to himselfe. As it will be euident, if wee weigh the force and effect, of the good or bad example of the Prince, and how potent a Motiue it is, to induce his Subjects to vertue or vice. Seeing, as Salomon saith, Qualis est Rector Ciuitatis, tales sunt habitantes in ea; What manner of Man the Ruler of the Cittie is, such are they that dwell therein. Therefore (I say) that as the example of the Princes fidelity, dooth redound both to the good of the Common-wealth, and also to his owne security (because the people doe learne thereby, to be not onely faithfull vnto one another, but also dutifull and loyal towards him:) euen so, the example of perfidious and double dealing in him, dooth worke the contrary effect, and teacheth his Subjects to be no lesse faithlesse and treacherous toward him, then fraudulent and treacherous one to another, which may turne as wel to his destruction, as to the hurt of the Common-wealth.

But perhaps some Machiavillian will say, that although the Prince (for his owne commodity) do vse sometimes to violate his faith: yet he may so seuerely punnish it in his Subjects, that no in-

Fidelitie most necessary in the Prince for conseruation of the Common-wealth.

Trust & confidence one in another most requisite

The force of the Princes good or bad example in the Common-wealth.

Eccles. 10, 2.

How the fidelitie of the Prince redoundeth to his owne good.

A perfidious Prince teacheth his subjects to be traitorous to himselfe.

conuenience shall followe of his example, eyther to the Commonwealth, or to himselfe. Wheretof I answer, that the Prince cannot (with reason) expect, that the seuerity of Lawes, or other politike meanes, shall repress any vice in his Commonwealth: which shall be anie way Authorized by the example of his owne practise. For as the Poet saith, Totus componitur orbis Regis ad exemplum, nec sic inflectere sensus Humanos edicta valent, ut vita regentis.

That is to say, All the world is framed after the model of the King, and no Lawes or Edicts can so much mooue the mindes of men, as dooth the life of the Governour. Which Plutarke confirmeth notabiye, saying: That euen as a squire or rule must be straight in it selfe, befre it can make other things strait: So the Prince, who is (as it were) the rule of his Subiectes, ought first to rectifie himselfe, before hee go about (by Lawes or other meanes) to rectifie his Commonwealth. For, he that is falling (saith Plutarke) is not fit to upholde others, nor hee that is ignorant, to Teach; nor he that is incorrigible, to Correct; nor he that is himselfe disordered, to put others in order.

Thus saith he, giuing to vnderstand, that a vicious Prince, who seeketh to make his Subiects vertuous by rigor of Lawes, laboureth in vaine, like to one, that buildeth with one hand, and pulleth downe with the other; and so destroyeth more in one day, then he can builde in many. For so do the bad example of the Prince, corrupt more in a day, then his Lawes can correct or amend in a yeare.

This the ancient Romans so well considered, that their Magistrats & Senate were most exact and punctuall, in the obseruation of Oaths and promises eue to their very enemies: for the regarde they had, not onely to Iustice, and to their own reputation: but also the consequence of their good example in the Commonwealth, as vpon other occasions, I haue formerly proued, by the examples of Marcus Atilius Regulus, T. Veturius & Spurius Posthumus, Consuls; and of T. Mutius and Q. Emilius, Tribunes of the Temple.

The Princes bad example ouer weigheth good Lawes.

Claudian.

Plutarke de doctrina principum.

The Prince is the rule of his subiects.

A bad Prince who maketh good lawes, buildeth with one hand, and pulleth downe with the other.

The Romaine Senate and Magistrats most exact in the obseruation of Oaths and promises.

Sextus Pompeius would not breake his Oath, to be Emperor of all the world. Plutarch in Anton.

The like notable examples of perticular men among Paganes, may also be alledged, whereof I will onely relate one or two, for breuities sake. Sextus Pompeius, Sonne to Pompey the Great, hauing warres with Antonius the Triumuir, and meeting with him at the Sea side, vpon a treatie of peace: invited him to Supper in his Gally, giuing him his oath for his assurance. And beeing secretly demaunded by Metrodorus, the Pyrate, whether he should weigh Anker, and set saile, and so make himselfe Lord of all the World? Answered. That it was not his custome or condition to forswear himselfe: esteeming it neither honourable nor profitable for him, to gaine the Empire of the World by per- iurie.

The care which Licurgus had of his fidelity. Plutarch in Licurgus.

No lesse care of fidelity had Licurgus, Brother to Polidektes; King of Lacedemonia. For, hauing taken vpon him the gouernment, of the Kingdome after his Brothers death, at the instance of the people, vntill his Brothers Wife (who was great with Childe) should be brought to Bed, and the Child of years to gouerne. And being sollicitated by her, to marrie with her, vpon her promise to kill the Child in her Womb, thereby to assure his State: he not onely refused it, but also proclaimed her Sonne King, as soone as he was borne, taking only the tuition of him, vntill he came to age, as partly hath been before declared.

An vnnatural motion of a Mother.

I neede not adde heereunto any examples of Christian Princes, whose Religion both teacheth and birdeth them, to be more exact and precise then Painims in this case. Neuerthelesse, I cannot forbear to speake of a notable act in this kind, of the most Christian and vertuous Prince Ferdinand, Brother to Henry the third of that Name, King of Castile. This Ferdinand, being left by his Brothers Testament, Tutour to his Sonne King John the second (an Infant of eight moneths old) and being vrged greatly by the three States of Castile, to take the Crowne to himselfe: he would by (no means) consent thereto, saying. That he would neuer be false, eyther to his Brother dead, or to his Nephew liuing, to whom he had promised his fidelity. For which faithfulnessse (no doubt) God blessed him, and (within Ferdinand, Brother to Henry, King of Castile.

Lucas Marin. Siculus, de Reb. Hisp. Lib. 11.

fixe yeares after) gaue him the Kingdome of Arragon, where he was chosen by the free election of the Nobility and Commons of the Realme. Behold then, how great respect, not onely this Christian Prince, but also the Paganes before named, had to sincerity and fidelitie, as well for the causes before mentioned: as also for the verie detestation and hatred of perfidiousnesse, being a vice (of it selfe) most odious, and vnworthy of Princelie Dignitie.

For whereas all other vices and sinnes (for the most part) are, or may be attributed either to frailtie or errour, whereby they seeme (many times) the more woorthy of pardon: perfidiousnesse is euer presumed, to proceed from a treacherous; maligne, vile and base nature, and therefore not excusable in Princes, whose proceedings ought to be (in al thinges) Reall, Generous, Noble and Heroicall. In which respect, one false and trecherous acte, may suffice to ecclipse, and obscure the glory of many great vertues in a Prince. As Plutarke noteth in Alexander the Great, who causing certaine Indian Souldiours to bee slaine, after they had rendered themselues vnto him vpon his worde: Spotted and stained (sath he) the renowne of all his glorious Conquests and Royall vertues, with the ignominie of that one Acte. And the reason is, because so delicate is mans credite and reputation, in matter of trust and confidence: that it is like vnto a Glasse, which beeing once broken, is not repayrable. And therefore, he that is once knowne for a Lyer, is not beleued when he saith true: and he that is once reputed to bee false, is euer after held in suspition. And according vnto the generall rule of the Law; Semper presumitur malus in eodem genere mali; Is euer presumed to be wicked in the same kind of wickednesse. Wherevpon it followeth, that a faithlesse Prince is hated of his Subiects; suspected of his best Friends; irreconciliable with his Enemies; beloued and trusted of none; and betrayed or forsaken of all Men in his greatest necessities. And that worthily, seeing hee himselfe giueth the euill example, which other Men follow to his own utter ouerthrow and destruction.

The care of sincerity and fidelity manifested.

Perfidiousnes is a signe of a base and vile nature.

Plutarke in Alexandro.

Once false, euer after is suspected.

L. 1. Si cuius de accusat. Bart. in li. Cassius de Sena.

The dangers, which accompany perfidiousnesse in a Prince.

But

The Politick or Machiavillians obiectio.

But the Politick or Machiavillian will say, that a wise Prince hath sufficient remedies against these inconveniences, to wit; strong Gards, Garrisons, Forts, and Fortresses, besides his owne policy, assisted with the prudence of faithfull and vigilant Councillors, whereby hee may securely make his commoditie in all occasions, without feare of anie damage that may ensue thereof to his person or state.

The insufficiency of Machiavillian remedies.

Thus saith the Machiavillian, most absurdly, as it will appeare, if wee consider whence groweth the danger, that the Prince incurreth, by perfidious and deceitfull dealing, which being most hateful, not only to man, but also to God, doth draw vpon him both Diuine and humain punishment, against the which, neither these, nor any other Machiavillian remedies can warrant him.

Falshood hateful to God and man.

And first to speake of the offence of God, and diuine punishment ensuing thereon. We finde in holy Scriptures, that nothing is more detestable vnto almighty God, then a deceitfull or double man. And therefore, the Holyghost saith in the Parables, Os bilingue detestor, I do detest a double tongued mouth. And againe in the same Booke, Abominatio Domini est omnis illusor, Every deceyuer is abominable before God. And the Royall Prophet, coupling the deceyuer with the blood-sucker, saith of them both, Virum sanguinum & dolosum abominator Dominus, God dooth abhorre the bloudie and deceitful man. And speaking of the guilefull tongue of Doeg, hee threatneth the vengeance of God to him, and all such, saying: Lingua dolosa, propterea, &c. A deceitful tongue, God will therefore destroy thee eternally, he will plucke thee up, and remoue from thee from thy Tabernacle, and root thee out of the Land of the liuing.

Prouer. 8, 13.

Prouer. 3, 32.

Psalme. 52, 9.

Psalme. 11, 8.

Lo the, how odious fraudulent and double dealing is to Almighty God, who being Ipsa veritas, Truth it self; exacteth nothing more of man (created in his Image) then verity and truth. But much more of a Prince, then of any other priuate person, because the Prince is his Image, not only by reason of the naturall gifts of his soule, as all other men are: but also in respect of his Office, whereby he representeth his person (as his Lieutenant) in the administration of Justice, whereof Fidelitie and truth is the Foun-

God exacteth nothing more of man, then Truth.

A Prince is the Image of God in two respects.

dation, as I haue sufficiently declared before.

Wherein (neuerthelesse) it is to be understood, that although all real, plain and true dealing bee most requisite in a Prince: yet hee is to vse great discretion and prudence therein, because infinite occasions do occurre, wherein Princes ought to conceale and couer their intentions, with more care and circumspection then all other men, especiallye in matters to be executed. Wherefore, great difference is to be noted, betwixt telling a lye, and concealing the truth, which the Latines do signify in two proper words, to wit; Simulatio and Dissimulatio. Whereof the first, which we may tearme Simulation or fiction, is euer vnlawfull, and therefore neuer to be vsed. But the latter which we may call discrete dissimulation, is both lawfull & commendable; yea, and so necessarie sometimes in Princes, that it may well and truly be said: Qui nescit dissimulare, nescit regnare: He which knowes not how to dissemble, that is to say, discreetly to couer and cloake his intentions when occasion requireth, knoweth not howe to raigne. But I say with Salomon who was himselfe a most wise and potent Prince; that, Non decet principem labium mentiens: A lying lip or mouth, dooth not be seeme a Prince. In which respect, he also prayeth to Almighty God; Verba mendacia longe fac a me, O Lord preserue and keepe me far from lying words. And againe in another Parable, he saith; Qui nititur mendacijs, pascit ventus; He which trusts to lies, seas the winde. That is to say, as Saint Augustin expoundeth it; Fis esca spiritibus malis, He becomes the meat or prey of euill spirits, or of the Deuill, whose immitator, or rather whose childe hee maketh himselfe. For, as our Saviour saith, the Deuill is Mendax & pater eius, A Lye, and the Father of lyes; and is therefore called Diabolus, which signifieth a deceiuer.

What then shall wee say of such a Prince as Machiavil frameth; to witte; a most treacherous, perfidious, and periured person? Can he deserue to be called the Image, Lieutenant, or Minister of God, whose similitude and likeness he defaceth in himselfe; whose Commission he abuseth, & whose holy name he shamefully prophane? What else can he expect at the hands of God, but seuer

Great prudence to be vled of Princes in plainesse.

Great difference to be noted, betwixt telling a lye, and concealing the Truth. The difference betwixt fiction and discrete dissimulation. Discrete dissimulation commendable in a Prince.

Prouer. 17, 7. A lye most vnseemely in a Princes mouth.

Pouer. 30, 8. Prouer. 10, 25.

August. cont. crescon. Lib. 3. Cap. 9.

A lye the Child of the Deuill. Iohn. 8, 44.

Machiavels Prince perfidious and periured.

A heauy and fearefull expectation.

seuere punnishment, not onelie in the world to come, but also in this life, if he repent not?

This may appeare by manifold examples, whereof I will alledge some out of approoued Authiours, both auncient and Moderne, to shew the impious absurditie of Machiauels doctrine, allowing perfidioufnesse and periury in a Prince, as necessary sometimes for the benefite of his State.

Gen. 49, 7, 8. Simeon and Leui curfied by their Father Iacob, for violating their league with Sichem and Hemor.

But first, to speake of our holy Scriptures. We read in Genesis, that Simeon and Leui, the Children of Iacob, wer curfied by their Father at his death, because they had violated their league made with Sichem and Hemor, whom they destroyed with all their Citty, contrary vnto theyr promise and covenant. Maledictus (saith Iacob) furor eorum, quia pertinax, &c. Cursed be their furie, because it was obstinate. And prophesying further of the temporall punnishment, which God woulde inflict vpon their posterity for the same, he added. Diuidam eos in Iacob, & dispergam in Israel. I will diuide them in Iacob, and disperse them among the Children of Israel. Which was fulfilled afterward, as Saint Hierom witnesseth, for that their Tribes had not their habitation apart, as the others had: for the Tribe of Leui was distributed in diuers Cirties, amongst the other Tribes, to bee their Leuites and Priests. And the Tribe of Simeon, had their dwelling with the Tribes of Iuda, & (as the Hebrewes affirme) serued for School-Maisters in all the other Tribes, and got their living onely by teaching Children.

Hierom in Tradition. Hebraicis in Genesim.

Petrus in Genes Cap. 47.

2. Reg. 21, 17. Iosuah, 9, 12. Sauls posterity punnished for his breach of league with the Gabaonites.

In like manner, the punnishment of God was notable vpon King Saules posterity, for his breach of League which Iosuah made with the Gabaonites. Wherein it is to bee noted; that although the Gabaonites craftily circumuented Iosuah, and induced him by fraud and deceit to make league with them, putting on their olde shooes, and torne cloaths, and affirming, that they were a people dwelling in a farre Countrey, and that being moued with the fame of his victories: they were come so many dayes iourney to meeete him, that they had worne out their shooes and cloaths in their voyage; whereas, they dwelt not farre off, and in the very Land of promise, which GOD had giuen to the Children of Israel. Ne-

The great regard that Iosuah had of his Oath and league with the Gabaonites.

uerthelesse, when Iosuah discovered their deceit, he had such regard to his Oath, that hee would by no meanes violate it. But answered to the Children of Israel, when they murmured against him. Iurauimus eis (saith hee) We haue sworne vnto them, in the name of the Lord God of Israel; and therefore wee may not touch them, least the wrath of God fall vpon vs, if wee breake our Oath.

Iosuah, 9, 19.

10

Thus saith Iosuah: whereby we may learne, how great is the Obligation of all iust and lawfull Leagues, or other Covenants passed by Oath, and how daungerous is the breach thereof, in respecte of Gods iust and seuere iudgements, vpon the offenders in that behalfe. Whereof the experience was seene, aboue three hundred yeares after Iosuahs time, in the breach of that league by Saule. For the which, the Children of Israel were afflicted with three yeares famine in Dauids time, and seauen of Saules Children and family, were deliuered into the handes of the Gabaonites, and hanged by them in punishment of Saules offence.

The obligation of lawfull leagues.

The iudgement happened 300. yeares after, in Saules time.

20

Furthermore, we read in the Booke of Machabees, that Andronicus a Fauourite of King Antiochus, was by the iust iudgement of God, and the commaundement of Antiochus himselfe, shamefully put to death: euen in the verie same place, where he had killed Onias the Highpriest, who had rendred himselfe vnto him vpon his promise of security. Also the examples heereof, are verie notable amongst the Ethnicks, who obserued (diligently) the iudgements of God, vpon traitorous and perfidious persons. And therefore when Tissaphernes the Persian, made war against the Grecians, and brake Truce, which he had made with them for three months, Agesilaus reioyced greatly, saying; We are beholding to Tissaphernes, for making the Goddes his enemies, and our friends, therefore let vs boldly giue him battell. And so he did, and gaue him a great ouerthrow.

2. Reg. 21. 9.

2. Mac. 4, 38. Andronicus punnished for his Treachery towards Onias.

30

How the Paynims obserued Gods iudgements vpon perfidious persons.

40

Plutarch also recounteth a notable historie, of Cleomines King of Lacedemonia, who hauing made truce with the Argians for seauen dayes: set vpon their camp in the night, and taking them vnprouided by reason of the truce, made great slaughter of them. But being reproched with his breach of promise and oath, he iested at it, saying; That hee sware Truce for Polien. in Lib. 2.

50

Plutarch in Apoph. Lacedem. Gods notable iudgement vpon Cleomines, for his periury.

A shamefull repulse giuen by weomen.

Plutarch in Dione. Calippus punished by Almighty God for his periurie.

Matters in controuersie decided by Oaths at the Tombes of Martires in the primitiue Church.

August. Epist. 137. What Saint Augustine affirmeth of his knowledge.

A notable example of a Noble man of England, iustly punished for his periurie.

for the dayes, but not for the nights. But so it fell out (saith Plutarch) in punishment of his falshood and periury; that it serued him to no purpose. For whereas, he assailed the Cittie presently, hoping for to take it with all facility, hee had a shamefull repulse by the women which dwelt therein. And afterward falling furiously mad, he tooke a Knife, and ript vp his owne body, from the very heele to the heart, and so dyed laughing.

The same Author also signifyeth, that one Calippus, being iustly charged with a conspiracie against Dion of Sicilie, and hauing denyed it with manie solemne Oaths) in the Temple of Ceres, was (by Gods iust iudgement) slaine with the same Dagger wherewith Dion was killed before by his consent. I omit diuers other examples, which might be alleadged out of prophane Historiographers, to adde a few out of Christian & more Moderne Authors.

The seuerer iudgements of God vpon men, for the sinne of periury, haue been alwayes so incident among Christians: that the custome was in the Primitiue Church, to discide matters in Controuersie by Oaths, at certaine holy places, and the Tombes of Martyrs, where Almighty God did ordinarily extend his Iustice vpon periured persons. Which Custom (as Saint Augustine witnesseth) was in vre in his time, at Millan, where of he saith, Nos nominus Mediolani, &c. I my selfe haue knowne in Milaine, at the Momories of Saints, a certaine Theefe, who went thither with intention to deceiue by periury, was compelled to confesse his Theft, and to restore that which hee had stole.

But of this matter, we haue a most famous and autenticall example in our owne Histories. Elfred or Alfred, a Nobleman of England, in the time of King Adelstane, conspired against him vvith certaine others: and beeing accused thereof, stood vpon the deniall, and because the prouers were not sufficient to conuince him, he was sent to Rome (as the Custome was then) to make his purgation by Oath, at the Altar of S. Peter, where he swore contrary to his Conscience, and presently fell down before the Altar, and dyed within three daies after. Vpon aduertisement whereof, King Adelstane gaue all the Lands of Elfred, to the Church of Saint Peter in the Abbey of Malmesbury, by his Letters Patents; wherein, after the graunt of the sayde Lands, he declared the whole matter as it passed:

Also some yeares after, in the same age, Lotharius King of Austrasia (which contained all Lorraine, Flanders, & some part of Germany, Burgundy, and France) came to Rome, accompanied with his Nobility, in the time of Adrian the second, because he had bin excommunicated, for his diuorce frō his lawful wife Theutperga, and married with Walrada his Concubine. Now he was content, for his purgation thereof, to receiue the blessed Sacrament at the hands of Pope Adrian, together with his Nobility, whiche he did, protesting for his part, that he stood cleare of those things wherewith he was accused, which also his Nobility affirmed. But, as they departed from Rome homewards, there hapned such a strange disease among them, that Lotharius (having seene the death of most of his Noblemen) before he came to Luca, fell sicke there himselfe, and died within a few dayes after at Placentia; so that of all those that receiued the Sacrament with him, there liued not any one to the yeares end.

And nowe to returne vnto our owne Countrey. Earle Godwin, Father to K. Harold, hauing procured the vntimelie death of Alfred, Brother to King Edward the Confessor, denied it continually with solemne Oathes; and especiallie once, when he dined with the King. At what time, occasion beeing offered to speake of that matter, he took a piece of bread, and prayed to God, that the same might be his last, if he were any way consenting or priuy therto. And so eating the bread was choaked therewith, and died there in the Kings presence.

It is also obserued and testified by most of the old Historiographers of our countrey, that the ouerthrow of King Harolde by William the Conqueror, was a iust punishment of God vpon him for his periury, the Story is briefly thus. Harold being in Normandy with Duke William, in the time of King Edward the Confessor, promised for to assise him after the Kings death, in his pretence to the crown of England, which he also confirmed by solemne Oath. Whereupon, Duke William Guliel. Malmesb. de gest. Reg. Angl. Lib. 2. cap. 6.

Regino. Chron. Agmoniu. Sigon. de Reg. Ital. An. 869. Naucler. Chron. An. 867. Baron. An. 868.

Henry Huntend in Hist. Lib. 6. Ingulphus Hist. Angl. 113. Polidor. Hist. Angl. Periury notably punished in Earle Godwine, Father to King Harold.

King Harold slaine by Duke William the Conqueror, in punishment of his periury.

liam affianced his Daughter to him, and because she was not then of yeares to be married: he tooke Harolds oath, to perform the mariage within a certain time after. But when the time appointed for the mariage came, and Harold shewed no care to perform any part of his promises, the Duke sent Messengers vnto him, to request of him the accomplishment thereof. But he, in stead of giuing satisfaction to the Duke: derided his Messengers, causing some of their Horses tailes to be cut off, and others to be lamed. Also, afterward, when King Edward dyed, he practised not onely to exclude the Duke from the Crowne: but also procured it for himself, pretending that his promise to the Duke, was made for feare, & therefore it could not binde him.

When the Duke was entred into England with his Army, and sollicitated him by Messengers, to haue care of his conscience, representing vnto him the seuerer iudgements of God on periured persons, offering to come to some reasonable composition with him: he made no account thereof, neither yet of the admonition of his owne Brother Gurth or Girth. Who aduised him seriously before the battaile, to retire himselfe, and leaue the conduct of the Army to him and others, who were not bound to the Duke vpon any oath or promise: least otherwise, GOD might suffer them all to bee quite ouerthrowne for his cause.

Whereto hee answered; That he would put it in venter, and that God should be the Iudge thereof. And so giuing the battaile, was slaine himselfe, and all his Army ouerthrowne. And although the said Conquest might seeme to be a punishment of God vpon the whol Realm; for the peoples sins: yet the perticuler disgrace, which happened to King Harolds person, may well bee thought to haue proceeded (by Gods iust iudgment) for his periurie, and so the English Chroniclers, which wrote in that age, doe signifie: As Iugulphus, William of Malmsburie, Henry Huntendon, Mathew of Westminster, Matthew Paris, and Roger Houedon, who speaking of the victory, saith. Vere & absq; dubio, Dei iudicio a scribenda est, qui puniendo, scelus periurij, ostendit se Deum nolentem iniquitatem. Truly and without doubt, it is to bee ascribed to the iudgement of God, who punishing the sin of periurie, declared thereby, that hee is a GOD, who doth not like nor allow of iniquity.

10 But to come neerer to our time, Phillip de Comines noteth the manifest Iustice of God, in the disgracefull death of Charles, the last Duke of Bourgundy, thorough the treason of Compobachio, an Italian, shortly after that the saide Charles had betraied the Count S. Paule, and sent him Prisoner to Lewes the cleauenth, King of France; notwithstanding, that he had ginen him safe conduct to come into his Country.

20 Furthermore, I cannot omit Cesar Borgia, though I haue spoken of him diuers times before. For, as Machiauell worthily maketh him a Mirrour for his Tyranny, in respect of his manifold vices: so he may as worthily be proposed for an example of Gods Iustice, in regard of the manifold iudgements of God diuersly extended vpon him. And perticularly, in the punishment of his perfidioussesse and periury, whereby hee had deceiued and ruined diuers other principall personages: As Liuerotto, Vitellozzo, Pagolo Vrsino, and the duke of Grauina, whom he caused to be strangled; after they had rendred themselves to him vpon composition, and employed themselves faithfully in his seruice. Wherein Gods Iustice may bee noted, (by the way) in Liuerotto, who (a little before) had cruelly and trayterously murdered his owne Vnckle, and diuers other principall Cittizens of Fermo; hauing inuited them to a banquet in his owne house.

30 40 50 Which perfidious treachery of his, God punished (as it seemed) by the treachery and perfidioussesse of Cesar Borgia: who also receiued the like measure himselfe, by others. For, whereas he had taken an oath of fortie principall personages, to assist him after his Fathers death: he was forsaken of them all, and putting himselfe (afterward) into the handes of Henando Gonçales, Governour of Naples, vpon his safe conduct; he was also betrayed by him, and sent Prisoner into Spaine, as else-where is signified.

The words of Roger Houeden, an ancient Chronicler.

Phil. de Com. Chron. du Roy Louis. Cap. 83. & 91.

Charles Duke of Bourgundy worthily betrayed.

Cesar Borgia punished iustly for his perfidious Treachery.

Guicciardin in Lib. 8. Hist.

Liuerotto hauing traiterously murdered his Vnckle, was traiterously murdered himselfe.

Idem Ibid.

Regard of Oath and promises vtterly forgotten by Harold.

Duke Williams honourable proceeding with Harold, at his entrance into England.

The vnaduised answer of Harold to his kind Brother Girth.

The ancient Antiquaries that auouch this History.

The

Swius An. 1517
Another example of Chri-stiern, King of Denmarke and Norwy.

Olaus. Mag. in
Lib. 8. Cap. 39.

Christiern expulsed from his kingdome
by his owne subiects, and after ward poysoned in Prison.

Munster. Geo-graph. Lib. 4.

Martin du Bel-
ley. An. 1527.
The Duke of Bourbon slaine at the sledge of Rome in punnishment of his periury.

The like Iustice of God may bee noted also in Christiern, King of Denmarke and Norway, who married a Sister of the Emperour Charles the fift, in the time of Henry the eight, King of England. This Christiern besiedging Stockholme in Swe- tia, tooke it by composition, binding himselſe to certaine conditions, not only by Oath, but also by receyving the blessed Sacrament. Which conditions, he obserued for some few dayes, till hee had the Castle, and all the strongest places of the towne in his owne hands, and that hee had furnished them with men and munition. But then, inuiting all the Noblemen and Magistrates to a Banquet, to the number of ninety foure persons: he imprisoned and after kild them, with a great number of the Cittizens.
And finding, that verie manie escaped him, by hiding themselues, he promised (by Proclamation) life and libertie to all those which were left aliue, whereupon they all shewed themselues, and were all miserably slaine. But within a while after, he was driuen out of his kingdome by his owne subiects; and when he hadde wandered from Countrey to Countrey in all pouerty and misery for the space of ten yeaes, he was receiued again by some of the chiefest Nobility, who although they promised him obedience and assistance vnto their handes and seales, yet they tooke him prisoner vpon his ente-rance, and (within a while) poysoned him in prison: thus was his perfidious falshood iustly repayed with the like. After whose deposition and death, his Vnkle Fredericke a worthy Prince, was chosen King of Denmark.

About the same time, the Duke of Bourbon, being fled from France the first King of France, to the seruice of the Em-perour Charles the fift, Emperour, and made by him Governour of Millayne: he so exasperated the people by his exaci-ons and crueltie, that they rose against him.

Insomuch, that to pacifye them, he bound himselſe by Oath to certaine conditions, praying withall to Almightye God, that in case he did not exactly per-forme them, he might be slaine by a bullet, in the first occasion of warre which he offered. Neuerthelesse, hee fell afterward againe to his former course, without regard of his Oath, and being (within a while after) made Generall of the Emperours Army in Italy, he was timul-tuously carried by his Souldiers (against his will) to the sledge of Rome, where he was presently slaine with a piece of Artillery of his owne, negligently discharged by his Soldiers, and so payed the penaltie of his periury, according vnto the iudgement and sentence which hee had (prophetically as it were) giuen against himselſe.

Now then, I wish all Machiullians to consider heere three thinges, which are eident by these alledged examples. The first, how detestable all periury and per-fidiousnesse is in the sight of God. The second, how dangerous it is to Princes, in respect of Gods wrath, which may falvpon them and their states for the same through the seuerity of Gods Iustice; against which, no humane policy or power is able to defend them. The third, is a necessary consequent of these two, to wit; that all Machiullian remedies (consisting partly in humane prudence and diligence; and partly in force, and strength of Guards, Garrisons, Fortref-ses, and such like) are most friuolous and vaine when God is offended; and will punish for sinne. Whereupon it fol-loweth also, that the aforesaid remedies are (in like manner) insufficient, to protect a perfidious Prince from the danger of humane punishment, which is comly but a sequel and effect of the iust iudgments of God. In whose hand, are the hearts and willes of all men, and who v-seth the same as his Instruments, to execute his Iustice vpon Princes, when they deserue it.

Besides, it is eident enough in true reason of state, that although there were no danger at all of Gods wrath: yet these and such other Machiullian pollicies, are not only insufficient to prevent or remedy the inconueniences, which Wicked Princes incurre by the hatred of Men, but also do (many times) encrease theyr dangers, and helpe to prapitate them to the vtter destruction, whereof I shall haue better occasion to speake heereafter.

In the meane time, this shall suffice, for so much as concerneth the Vertue of fidelity in a Prince, with this conclusion.
That because the danger which groweth vnto Princes by fraud and deceite; proceedeth

Paulus Iouinus
de expug. orbis Romae.

Three things to be considered and noated of Machi-uillians in the premisses.

The insufficiency and vanity of Machiuillian pol-licie, for the defence of a wicked Prince

Concerning the danger of mens harred, that may be a meanes to further detriment.

All reputation of vertue ought to be grounded vpon sincerity and truth.

Prover. 10, 9, 10, 11

The reputation of the Princes power and great-nesse.

Opinion of the Princes weaknesse is the Mother of conspiracies.

Augustus Caesar laboured greatly to conferue the reputation of his greatnesse
Cor. Tacit. in
Lib. 1. Annal.
Iustin. in Lib. 3.

Great Xerxes ruined by the losse of reputation.

ceedeth principally from the iust Iudgements of God; therefore, the yong Statist and Councillor (whom I labour to informe) ought to vnderstand concerning this, as well as all other Vertues, that the reputation thereof, which he is to desire and procure in his Prince, is to be grounded not vpon vaine shewes and apparances of counterfeit vertue (which God of his Iustice will discouer, and punish sooner or later) but vpon the solide Foundation of all sinceritie and trueth, which is the surest piller and stay of all humain actions, and most grateful both to God and man. And therefore, the Wiseman sayeth; Qui ambulat simpliciter, ambulat confidentur. He that walketh simply and plainly, walketh boldly and surely. Et qui deprauat vias suas, manifestus erit. And he which runneth an indirect course, shalbe made manifest.

It resteth now, that I saie some-what, (though verie briefly) of the reputation of a Princes power and greatnesse, the losse and decay whereof, emboldneth his enemies, discourageth his friends, and layeth open his person to the contempt of all men, yea, and his state to infinite daungers. For, as the reputation of a Princes greatnesse, wealth, and power, striketh a feare and terror into the hearts as well of his owne subiects, as strangers, and with-holdeth them from conspiring against him: euen so, the opinion of his weaknesse, worketh the contrary effect, and is the verie Mother and Nurffe of Rebellions, Conspiracies, and all hostile attempts. And no man knoweth howe small an enterprize may ouerthrow the greatest State in the world, seeing it dependeth vpon the successe which no man can warrant, and many times is such that it deceyueth all mens expectations. Therefore, the surest and wisest way is, to vse all preuentions, that nothing bee attempted against the State.

To which purpose, the reputation of a Princes power, force, and greatnesse, is highly auailable, the which Augustus Caesar knew so well, that hauing lost an Army in Germany, of 40000. men: yet he continued the warre for no other reason or necessity (as Tacitus noteth) then to maintaine the opinion and reputation of his power, least otherwise, the might grow to be contemned as the great Xerxes was; who hauing terrified all Greece, with his huge Armie of a Million of men, was (vpon his ouerthrowe and returne into Persia) so despised, that he was slaine by one of his owne subiectes. So dangerous it is, and damageable vnto a Prince, to loose reputation; how great soeuer it be. Whereupon I conclude, that it importeth a wise Councillour to measure and waigh all the commoditie and benefite of his Prince: as well with his reputation, as with his Conscience, though not in the like degree.

For, although reputation be the chief externall good of man: yet it is inferior to the internall, that is to say, vnto the goods of the mind, whereof a pure conscience is the principall, because therein consisteth the chiefe felicity of man, as Saint Ambrose saith. Beside, the benefite which redoundeth to Princes, by clearnesse of Conscience, is the fauour and protection of Almighty God, to them and their States heere in this world, and eternall saluation of their soules in the next. And the damage that ensueth of a corrupt and sinfull Conscience, is Gods indignation in this life (whereby the greatest Monarkes and their Monarkies, haue perished) and euerlasting damnation in the world to come. Whereas (on the other side) all the benefit or damage which the gaine or losse of reputation, can yeild (beeing considered in it selfe) extendeth no further then the fauour or disfauour of men: who can neither vphold him whom GOD ouerthroweth, nor ouerthrow the man whom God protecteth. For, as the Apostle saith, Si Deus pro nobis, &c. If God be for vs, what matter makes it who is against vs?

Whereupon it followeth; that whether we regard the dignity and benefit of Conscience and Reputation, or else the damage that ensueth by the blemish of either of them: the respect of conscience is farre to be preferred before the other, and the losse of reputation is then principally to be feared, when Conscience is foully stained and polluted. For then the Prince lying open to the contempt and hatred, as well of God as man, hath no defence, but may well feare and expect punishment from both. And so much the rather, because the losse and want of reputation, is one especiall meanes whereby God vseth to execute his iust iudgement on wicked Princes: it being

All benefite of the Prince to be weighed with his reputation & conscience, but not in like degree.

Reputation, though it be the chiefe ex-ternall good,
is inferior to Conscience.
Ambr. in Lib. 1.
de Offic. Cap. 12

The damage that ensueth to the Prince, by a bad Conscience.

How farre the gaine or losse of reputation may hurt or auaile.
Rom. 8, 31.

The losse of reputation is chiefely to be feared when Conscience is stained.

They that contemne God, shall iuftly be condemned by men.

The losse of reputation is nothing fo dangerous when confci-ence is cleare.

The comfort of a good Confci-ence.

2 Cor. 1, 12.

A good de-figment is not to be left off, for feare of falfe Rumours.

Plutarch in Fa- bio. Cicero in Lib. 1. de Offic.

The noble faying of Fa- bious Maximus.

Ennius apud Cicero. Lib. 1. de Offic.

ing moft confont to Iuftice and Rea- fon, that they who contemne and difobey their Soueraigne Lord, King and Crea- tor, fhould be ruined by the contempt, hatred, and difobedience of their owne fubiefts. And this danger (I fay) is iuftlie to be feared, when both reputation and confci-ence are ftained.

But when Confci-ence is pure and en- tire, the losse and reputation is nothing fo dangerous. For, although the iuftest and beft men, are fometimes fo calumni- ated, that they incurre great infamie and difgrace through the praftifes of the wicked: yet forafmuch as the fame hath no ground at all, it vanifheth away like fmoak, and is euer through Gods iuftice) difcouered & cleared in the end, to their greater reputation and honour. In the meane time, they haue the comfort, not only of Gods protection, as I haue formerly faid: but alfo of their owne Con- fciences, the good reputation whereof, giueth (in fuch cafes) inestimable confo- lation. And therefore, the blessed Apo- ftle, faith; Gloria noſtra hac eſt testi- monium confciencia noſtra: The Testimonie of our Confci-ence is our glory. In which reſpect, Wiſe, and Vertuous Princes, though they haue due care of their re- putation, yet doe not fo much regarde falſe rumors when their Confci-ence is cleare, as to forbear the execution of any good and neceſſary deſignment, for the feare thereof. But rather follow the Councell and example of the Wiſe and valiant Conſull, Fabius Maximus, Qui non penebat rumores ante ſalutem; Who preferred not rumors, before the good of the Commonwealth. For, although his delays againſt Hannibal, were (through the malice of his enemies) much calu- niated and generally condemned by the common people, as proceeding of Co- wardiſe, yet hee was nothing mooued therewith, holding it, as he ſaid, A greater Cowardiſe to leaue a good purpoſe, for feare of mens tongues, then to leaue the field, for feare of an enemy. In which re- ſpect he continued his courſe, vntill hee had thereby, waſted and conſumed the forces of Hannibal, with ſecuritie to the Romain State. For which, he was after- ward highly commended, becauſe (as En- nius ſaith) Cunctando reſtituit rem: By delays, hee repaired and reſtored the ſtate of the Romaines.

10

20

30

40

50

Neuertheſſe, in ſuch caſes alſo, al di- ligence is to be vſed by Princes and their Councillors, to take away the ſcandall and aſperſions, that may growe by erro- neous conceit of their actions, although their Conſciences be neuer ſo cleare. Whereupon S. Auguſtine ſaith, That he which neglecteth his fame or good, truſting to his Conſci-ence, is cruel. And thereof he yeildeth a reaſon: Becauſe (ſaith hee) he killeth the ſoules of others. For, although he do not the euill that is ſuppoſed, yet the very ſuſpition thereof, ſerueth as a ſtumbling blocke. to ouerthrow ſuch as are weak and ill diſpoſed. And therefore, S. Auguſtine alſo ſaith, That conſci-ence & fame being two thinges, the one of them is neceſſary for vs; & the other for our neigh- bor. And, that he which keepeth his conſci-ence cleare, doth good to himſelfe: but hee which preſerueth his fame, doth good to o- thers.

For this cauſe alſo, Plato requireth in euery good and vertuous man, that hee haue eſpeciall care, to leaue behind him an eternall reputation and fame of his vertues, to the end, to ſtirre vp not onely men of his time, but all poſterity alſo, to the imitation thereof. Which is moſt ne- ceſſarie in publick perſons, and eſpecial- ly in Princes, becauſe their example inci- teth to vertue or vice, much more then the example of priuat men. And therefore not only by reaſon of ſtate, but alſo con- ſci-ence bindeth them, to be moſt careful of their reputation and good name, and not to permit the leaſt blemish thereof, (though it be neuer ſo vniuſt) if it may be conueniently remedied. But when it can- not be holpen, without ſome greater de- triment to themſelues, or to the Com- monwealth, then it is to be endured with patience. For, both reaſon and equity re- quire, that the publicke and common good be preferred before any mans per- ticuler benefit, and that of two inconue- niences the leſſe is to be preferred and choſen, wherof Conſci-ence alſo is to be Iudge.

Therefore I conclude, that whereas Commoditie, Conſci-ence, and Reputa- tion are to be reſpected in all Deli- berations concerning Princes affayres, Conſci-ence ought to predominate, and to ſerue for the touchſtone and rule, as well of reputation, as of all Temporall commodities. And therein a Councillor

G g g g shall

Good fame not to be contemned, vpon confidence of a good Conſci-ence. Auguſt Ser. 49. Cap. 1. et de bo- no viduitatis. Cap. 21.

The prefer- uation of a mans good name, is ne- ceſſary for his Neighbour. Auguſt. ibid.

Plutarch. Epiſt. ad Dionyſium. 2. Why a man ſhould ſeeke to leaue an euerlaſting Fame.

In what caſe an vniuſt blemish of reputa- tion is to be tollerated.

Publique good alwayes to be prefer- red before particuler be- nefite.

Conſci-ence is the Touch- ſtone of all reputation & commodity.

Cicero in Lib. 1. de Offic. A Councillor should holde for a ground, that nothing is profitable, that is not honest.

shall well discharge his dutie, if in al consultations, he hold the knowne Axiome of Cicero for his ground, to wjt: Nil est utile quod non sit honestum, Nothing is profitable, that is not honest. Which point Cicero discourseth, and teacheth notably in his Offices.

CHAP. VIII.

What a Councillor is to consider in the matters which are to be consulted.

Concerning matters to be consulted.

And now to com to the last point of my diuision, that is, what a Councillor is to regard, in the matter it selfe that is to be consulted: it is to be vnderstood, that although the affaires of state are infinit, and therefore, cannot sufficiently bee reduced to perticular rules, yet some things are generally to be considered in all matters, whereof I wil touch some few.

It is necessary for a Councillor to know the state of forreigne Princes.

First, for a necessary preamble and preparatiue to all deliberations in matters of State, it is to be considered, that in respect of the connexion, which perticular affairs of State either haue, or may haue, with the general state of forrain Princes it is conuenient for a councillor to haue bin a traoueller, or els to procure by all means to haue an exact knowledge, not only of his own Princes state and affairs, but also of the estates and affaires of other Princes, especially of such as are his Princes neighbors, enemies or confederates. To this end, two things are requisite, that he be affable and courteous to al men, and willing to hear them, and confer with them, especially strangers, because he may learn by them many things more, then otherwise he can attayne to know, concerning the state of forraigne Princes and countries. For as the Spanish Prouerb saith, Mas sabe el necio en su casa, que el cuerdo en la ageno, A foole knoweth more in his owne house, then a wiseman doth in another mans. And although a Councillor may be many times troubled with impertinent matters, yet hee shall withall vnderstand many thinges, which may import him much to know. And there is no man so wise, but he may somtimes heare of a simple man, somewhat that may serue him to verie good purpose: therefore the trouble (in this case is to bee borne with patience, in respect of the benefit that he may reap thereby.

A Councillor should bee courteous and affable to strangers, and why.

A Spanish Prouerbe to good purpose.

The wisest man may learne something of the simplest.

A Councillor ought to procure frequent intelligences out of forreigne Countries, and of what matters.

10

The other thing necessary for a councillor better information, is to procure frequent aduises and intelligences, by Letters from all parts, of the State, humors, and disposition of forraign Princes; of all changes and innouations in their Courts and Countreyes: Of the Mariages and Alliances of them, their Children, and their most powerful subjects: Of Ambassages too and fro, and their Treaties: Of prouisions and preparations for warre, both by Sea and Land, and their intentions therein: Of all Taxes and impositions laid vpon the people, or other leauies of Monies: Of the diuisions that fall out amongst the Nobility or common people, and of their discontentments: Finally, of al matters that may tend to the establishment and strengthening, or to the weakening and innouating of other Princes States. For, although a Councillor shal by this meanes, heare manie vntruths: yet hee shall verie often receiue aduise of important matters, whereof he may make good vse and benefit.

20

30

And being a man of iudgement, and hauing intelligence with manie, he may easily discern truths from falshoods, by conferring their aduises together, especially, if hee take order that his Intelligencers doe not know of one anothers employment.

What benefit a Councillor shall reape by frequent intelligence, although hee may hear many vntruths.

40

Finally, he shal by this meanes, not only iudge better and more clearly of al matters occurring for his Princes seruice, but shal also make himselfe much more grateful to his Prince, by his diligence: and be more intrinsical with him, by occasion of his frequent aduices of forren newes, which Princes are alwayes most desirous to heare. And thus much for the first point.

50

Secondly, a Councillor is to consider, that in all matters of Council, 3. things are especially to be respected, as Thomas Aquinas (following Aristotle) noateth. The fyrst, a due end. The second, conuenient meanes. And the third fyt time and season, that is to say, that the end and meanes be not only lawfull, iust, and honorable in themselves, and in their owne Nature: but also to the person, state, and power of the Prince. For, if there bee any

Three things especially to be respected in euery matter. Tho Aquin 2. 2. Q. 51. Aristot. in Lib. 6. Ethic.

any inconuenience or disproportion in any of these, I meane, if the meanes bee not conuenient, for the obtaining of the end; or, if the end or meanes be impossible, or aboue the might and power of the Prince, or base, or any way vnfit for his state and person, or if the counsell be giuen out of due time and season, especially too late: it loofeth all grace, & cannot be accounted either good or prudent.

To this purpose I say, that according to Platoes rule, he who is to giue his opinion of any matter, ought first to vnderstand & know full y the state ther of with all the circumstances. For mans iudgement is grounded on his knowledge, and guided therby, & some one litle circumstance vnknowne may wholly alter the case: Inasmuch, that a simple man may iudg more wisely thereof, then a far wiser man that knoweth lesse. And the reason why wise men do not alwaies iudg with like wisdom and prudence in all causes, is, because they do not vnderstand them alike.

But to proceed, the state and circumstances of the matter beeing once fullie knowne to the Councillor, he is then to passe to the consideration of the inconueniences, difficulties, dangers, discommodities, & commodities therof, which may minister diffrent arguments, Pro et contra, in the discussion wherof, the prudence of a Councillor is especially seen. And heere I note by the way (thogh perhaps I may seeme to digresse from the matter) that some men, who haue great viuacity and sharpnes of wit, to find out inconueniences to foresee dangers, and to propound obiections, doubts, and difficulties, haue no maturity of iudgement, to clear and deside them, or to find out remedies. And some others, who are of more sound iudgement, are lesse sharp of wit. Again, some who are of good capacity, haue so litle corage, that they are dismayd with euery difficulty, and therefore cannot easily resolue on anie thing. Whereas some others, of lesse capacitie, and more corage, resolue more easily in any occasion. So that we may say with the Poet, Non omnia possumus omnes, We cannot al do al things. And therefore Phil. de Comines, obserueth very wel, that it is conuenient for Princes to haue many counsellors, to the end, that one of them may supply the defects of another For the wisest (saith he) erre oft-times either through passion, or through hate or affection, or thorough the indisposition of the persons, especially after dinner. And if any thinke, that such ought not to be made Councillors, it may be answered, that we are al men. And whosoever wil haue none to be of a Princes council, that erre at any time in speech or opinion, or are otherwhiles mooued, and led with passion or affection, he must seek them in heauen, for in earth, none such are to be found. Thus saith he, who was himselfe a graue and wise counsellor, which I note heere by the way, to the end, that young Councillors may learne, neither to assure themselves much on their owne opinions, nor rashly to condemne others of their fellow-Councillors, if they erre and be deceiued sometimes.

10

20

30

40

50

And to prosecute this digression yet a little further, I also adde, that it is necessary for a Prince, to haue his Councill composed like mans body, that is, of men of different complexions & humors, to the end, that the Chollerick heate, and hasty feaour of some, may bee tempered with the Flegmatick coldnesse, and slow resolution of some other, and that the pinacity of some mens sanguine spirites, may be somewhat depressed and counterpoized with the maturity of some others melancholy iudgements, which Aristotle holdeth to be the soundest in matters of State. Whereby the whole bodie of the Councill, may be reduced vnto a perfect temperature, so that the predominant qualitie therein be found in most, or in some at the least, which may helpe to correct the peccant and offensive humors of the rest, restrain the superfluity of ouer flowing conceits, cleare doubts and difficulties, and satisfye Obiections which proceedeth (manie times) from them who are not able to resolue them, yet serue to great purpose in Councils, to whet the wits, and open the vnderstanding of men of iudgement. This I haue thought good to touch by the way, that the young Councillor, whom I aduise, may vnderstande somewhat, as well of the Nature and Condition of a Councill, as of the Office and duty of a Councillor.

But now to return to the consideration of matters to be consulted, it is requisite, that a Councillor do prudently weigh and compare the discommodities with the comodities, & inconueniences with

All Councillors erre at one time or other.

A Princes Councill ought to be composed of men of different humours.

The melancholly iudgement most sounde.

Arist. in Proble. Sect. 30. quest. 1.

To whet the wit, and open the vnderstanding.

Consideration of matters to be consulted.

Plato in Phedro. Necessary to know the state of the matter, with all the circumstances. One litle circumstance vnknowne, may cause great error in resolution. Why wise men doe not alwaies iudg with like prudence.

What is particularly to be considered in euery matter.

The difference that may be noated in the ability of Councillors.

Mature and sound iudgement. Sharpnesse of witte. Lacke of corage.

Phil. Com. in Chron. du Roy Louis Cap. 27. Why it is conuenient for Princes to haue many Councillors.

No commodity without a discommodity.

What is to be foreseene and provided for in euery matter.

He that will hazard nothing shall win nothing.

What is to be considered concerning danger, and the prevention thereof.

Better one Bird in the hand, then two in the Bush.
Cor. Tacit. in Annal.
Resolutions are to be grounded vpon probable reasons and sufficient meanes.

Nothing of importance is to be left to chance.

the remedies, the difficulties & dangers, with the possibility and probability to ouercome them. And not to reiect a verie commodious and honorable designment, because it is costly, or some way discommodious or difficult and hard, or some way dangerous. For as the prouerb saith; There is no commodity without discommodity, nor any thing honorable, which is not difficult. And therefore, it is to be foreseene and provided, that the commodities may ouerweigh the damages, that the gaine quite the cost, that euery inconuenience haue a due remedie; that euery difficulty be some way facilitated; that euery important danger may be probably prevented or escaped; that of commodities (which cannot be had together) the greater be chosen; and of inconueniences (when all cannot be auoided) the least be admitted. All which being foreseene, and probably provided for, anie important action whatsoever, may be determined, councelled, and vnder taken, notwithstanding some dangers may be incident thereto. For he that will not take paines to cracke the Nut, cannot eat the kernell, and he that will hazarde nothing, shall win nothing: for nought venter (saith the Prouerb; nought haue.

Yet this is to be vnderstood; that the danger be not ouer-great, which may partly be provided for, if it be foreseene, that the greatest danger rather doth concerne some circumstance of the matter, then the principall partes, or the whole body of the plot; that the benefit expected, exceed the losse which may be feared; that no certaine thing of moment be aduantaged, for a thing vncertain. For better one Bird in the hand, then two in the bush: that of matters doubtfull, which cannot fully be resolued, the lesse doubtfull, or more assured be preferred. And finally, that the hope of benefit be grounded vpon probable reason, and sufficient meanes to atchieue the same, and not vpon chance, which is so vncertain, that no man may safely build any important matter thereon. And therefore, Tiberius Caesar helde it for a ground, as Cornelius Tacitus witnesseth, Non omittre caput rerum, neque se in casum dare, Not to let slip the first opportunities, nor to adventure himselfe or his estate vpon chance That is to say, not to hazard himselfe or his state in any enterprize, when he hath not sufficient probability of good successe.

For, although the euent of al plots that are put in execution, is casual, depending vpon the will of God: yet it is a wise mans part, to do that which lieth in him, to assure it by all probable and conuenient meanes, and then to leaue the rest to Gods disposition. For otherwise, hee should tempt God, and offend him by his negligence: and therefore, without this probability of assurance, no matter of importance ought to be attempted by a wise man. Except in desperat cases, when the necessity is so great and so sudden (as sometimes it falleth out to be) that there is no time or place for discourse. For, then there is no remedie; but to trust only to God and a mans good fortune, which falleth out many times better, then by humane discourse can be expected or immagined. As it did to Iulius Caesar, who finding himselfe vnable to giue battel to Pompey, because his forces wer not arriued, and being (in the meane time) constrained to go to sea in a litle Frigot, in such stormy rough seas, that the Pilot wold not passe forth, discovered himself, and bad him set sail and go forward in any case, because he carried Caesar and his fortune: which succeeded wel, for thereby he escaped at that time, and afterward ouerthrew Pompey, and became Emperor of the world. But this he did, because he had no other remedie, thinking it better to put himselfe to the mercy of the seas, then of his enimie.

And in such desperat and sudden exigents, when there is no time and place for wisdom and discourse, the counsell of some woman or simple fellow, may be better then of the wisest man. For that (as Aristotle sayth) some such being by the giift of God, born fortunate, and following the impulse and motion of nature, may aduise or execute more happily, then men of great wisdom, who pondering all things in the ballance of reason and discourse, do not followe many times, a fortunat motion in themselves, nor happy counsell of others, because they see not some good and probable or reasonable ground for the same wherby they forgoe and loose their good fortune. And this is the reason, why the common Prouerbe saith, That a Womans Counsell is neuer good but vpon the sudden. For when Women counsell according to their first motion, they

What euery wife man should very diligently obserue.

In extremities a man must trust to God and his good Fortune.

Of Iulius Caesar, and his Fortune.
Plutarch in Iulio Caesar.

In extremities, the counsell of a simple man may be good, and why.
Aristot. de bona Fortuna.

Why a womans Counsell is neuer good but vpon the sudden they may counsell fortunately, either by chance, or by some naturall impulse or motion: whereas, falling to discourse of reason, or to deliberation, they sildom or neuer counsell wisely, through the infirmity and weaknesse of their iudgement. And to this purpose, Aristotle alledgeth the old Prouerb, Fortuna fauet fatuis, fortune fauoureth fooles, as I haue signified before, concerning this point.

Heerupon I conclude two things. The one, that except in case of necessity, a wise-man ought to leaue nothing vnto chance, that may be any way assured by reasonable meanes, in respect of the danger that may ensue thereby. For, although dangerous counsels (grounded vpon hope of good fortune) speede well somtimes by meer chance, yet they proued most commonly pernicious. And therefore, the Wiseman sayeth wiselie: Qui amat periculum peribit in illo, He that loueth danger, shal perish therein.

The other Conclusion is, that seeing men are many times put to such sudden extremitities, that they haue no time or opportunity to aduise themselues, or to consult with others: it is most necessaric that they arme and prouide themselues against the same, by frequent Praier, and by dayly recommending al their actions to almighty God, the authour and giuer of all good successe. To the end, that he may (in such cases) guide, protect, and prosper them: and this I hold to bee the foundest aduise, that any counsellor can giue to his Prince. Thus much for the second consideration.

The third, shall be to ponder and examine diligently, not onely the present state of the matter, and the immediate or next sequel thereof: but also, what may be like to succeed from time to time: and especially, what may be the conclusion, or (as I may terme it) the vpshot of the whol. For many times it falleth out, that designments prosper wel for a while, and yet ouerthrow the authors or attempters in the end: not so much by Fortune or chance, as by ouer-sight in the counsellor or contriuer thereof. For hee being deceiued with the appearaunce or hope of some present, or neere commoditie, fore seeth not, or else neglecteth some future and finall disgrace. Much like vnto the sicke-man, who following his owne appetite, eateth or drinketh some one thing, which refresheth and contenteth him for the present, yet augmenteth his disease, or killeth him in the end.

In this point, all wicked and Machiwillian Councelles fayle for the most part, which do often succede well for a time, thorough Gods permission, for secret causes best knowne vnto his Diuine Wisedome: but in the end, do destroy Princes and their States, partlie thorough the Iustice of almighty God, and partly by the errour and negligence of the Councellours in true reason of State, as shall be more at large prooued heereafter.

In the meane time I adde for the present, a fourth Consideration to the same purpose, to wit; that a Wise Counsellor ought to weigh the Commoditie of euery thing, with the stability and security thereof: and not to aduise his Prince with a fewe yeares present pleasure or benefit, to purchase manie yeares future paine or discommoditie. But, rather to endure some disaduantage or damage for a time, when thereby he may attaine to some stable and permanent good afterward.

And this he may learne, by the course that Nature holdeth in humain affaires, ordaining Motion for rest, businessse for repose, Labour for ease, and payne for pleasure. In which respect, a Wiseman labourereth when he is young, to rest in his Olde age, and taketh a loathsome Potion, or bitter Pill, to recouer health, and willingly endureth all Temporall miserie, to attaine in the end to eternall Felicitie. This (I say) not onely Nature, but also true Wisedome) which alwayes followeth the course and steps thereof) doth teach vs no lesse in matters of State, then in all other humayne affayres.

Therefore by the same reason, a counsellor ought also to prefer a certain and durable commodity, though it be lesse, before a greater, that is short and vncertaine. To which purpose, Theopompus K. of Licedemonia, answered the Queen his wife very well, when shee lamented to him, that he wold leaue his roiall authority lesse to his children, then he had receiued it, because he had ordained certaine Controllers of Kings, called Ephori, No (quoth he) I shal leaue it the greater,

Some impro- uident Coun- cellors com- pared to sicke men.

Wherein all wicked and Machiwillian counsels fail: for the most part.

Commodity to be weighed with stability and security.

The course of Nature to be followed in the delibera- tion of mat- ters of State.

Plutarch in his Treatise whe- ther a Prince ought to be learned.

Aristot. de bona Fortuna.

Nothing is to be left to chance, but in case of necessity.

Eccles. 3, 27. He which loües danger, shall perish in it.

The necessity of daily re- commendati- on of our acti- ons to God.

Diligent pon- dering and examination in the present state of the matter, & fu- ture successe.

The ouer- sight in some Councillors.

10

20

30

40

50

The greatnes of Princely authority to be measured by the Stability thereof.

What is chiefly to be considered, concerning Stability

True Stability is Eternity.

Sufficient rules cannot be giuen, in perticular concerning matters of State.

Concerning the maintenance of a ciuill warre in a forreigne Country.

because it shalbe more firme and sure. Thus sayd he, wisely measuring the benefite of Princely Authority, was so much by greatnesse, as by surety and stabilitie, whereto all the Councelles and endeaours of Wise Councillours and Statists ought chiefly to tend: yet with this consideration, that although of worldly things, some are more stable and permanent then others: yet there is no true stability in any of them; and that therefore, all Wisemens Councelles are especially directed, to the attaining of Heauenlye things, wherein is true stability and eternity. Thus much for considerations to be had in generall, concerning matters to be consulted.

And, forasmuch as sufficient Rules cannot be giuen in perticular, concerning the same, in respect that the affaires of State are infinite and variable, by reason of the infinite occasions & accidents which fall out dayly to be considered (all which may require different considerations, according to the different Nature and quality of the matters, and the sundrie circumstances of times, places, and persons) I haue therefore thought good (for examples sake, and the instruction of young Statists) to handle and debate heere, some one matter of State, by way of discourse. And because occasion is offered oftentimes, to deliberate about the maintenance of a Ciuill Warre in a forraigne Countrey, I will set downe mine Opinion, what aduise a yong Statist may safely giue, concerning the same.

CHAP. IX.

For the better enstruction, and more perticular information of a young Councillour, concerning matters to be consulted: a matter of State is debated, to wit; What is to be considered in a deliberation, touching the maintenance of a Ciuill Warre, in a forraigne Countrey.

Who soeuer shall giue aduice concerning the maintenance of a Ciuill warre, in a Forraigne Countrey, it shal be conuenient for him (in my fancy) for to consider principally these points following.

First, the Equity and Iustice of the cause, as well on his Princes part, to wit; whither it may be iust and lawful in him, to giue the assistance demanded: as also, whether their quarrell, which demand the same, be lawfull and iust, or no. For, if Iustice and Equitie want in cyther of both, no commodity that a Prince can receyue or expect, can counteruaile the dishonor, danger, and damage which he shall assuredly incurre by the offence of Almighty God. Qui auferit spiritum Principum; & terribilis est apud Reges terra. Who taketh the spirit of Princes away and is terrible to the Kinges of the Earth. And will assuredly exact the penaltie thereof on him, or perhaps on his state, or on both, sooner or later. Which is the chiefe and highest point of state, to be considered in all deliberations of princes, seeing the vtter destruction and ruin of them and their estates, proceedeth principally from the offence of God, as hath bin more at large before discussed.

It is also to be considered, what good and iust motiues his Prince may haue on his own part, to giue the succors demanded, which may be reduced to four cases. The first, when he may thereby do some notable seruice to God, which is alwaies in it selfe not only honorable but profitable, as it were mony put to intrest, in respect of the reward which hee shall assuredly receiue at gods hands for the same howsoeuer it succeed for the present.

The second case is, when he is bound by Oath, promise, or gratitude, to succour the party that craueth his aide. For in such case, the omission thereof (when it may iustly and conueniently be done) were both offensiue to God, & also, dishonorable and dangerous to a Prince, as wel in respect of Gods punishment for his periury, as also for the bad example, and iust occasion he should giue vnto others his Allies and confederats, yea, and to his owne subiects to forsake him in his necessity.

The third case is, when the Prince of whom the succour is demanded, hath a iust pretence vnto a forraigne Crowne or State, for the obtayning whereof, he may hope to haue a party, by maintaining a iust quarrell in the same State or Country. Wherein respect is to be had, that

The equity of the cause to be considered two wayes.

Psalm. 76. 11.

The highest point of State, to be considered.

Iust motiues on the Princes part to giue succour.

Some notable seruice to God.

Obligation by oath, promise, or gratitude.

A iust pretence to a forreigne Crowne or State.

that the Princes own forces be sufficient for the execution of his enterprife, that he shall not neede to relie further vpon his partie; then onely to facilitate the same. For, if his hope of good successe, eyther in obtaining his pretence, or in conseruing or maintaining it afterward, doe chiefly depend vpon the good will, fidelity, and strength of such a party: he buildes (as a man may say) vpon the Sand, and puts in aduerture his labour, charges, and reputation.

Heereof wee haue had a lamentable example not many yeares past, in Sebastian, King of Portugall, who hoped to make himselfe King of Marocco, vnder colour to restore thereto Muley Mahomet, whereof he made so sure account; that he carryed a Crowne with him, to Crowne himselfe King there. Not considering, that his aduersary Muley Molucco (who was in possession of that kingdome) was not onely most valiant for his person: but able also to put into the field for his defence, about 100000. Horse and foote.

Against whom neuerthelesse, King Sebastian vndertook the enterprife, with an Army of 13000. Souldiors, or there about, the most of them vntained: beside, neither he himselfe, nor any that did commaund the Army vnder him, had euer borne Armes before. In so much, that he trusted (as it seemed) to the conduct and forces of Muley Mahomet his Confederate, who when hee came to tryall, was not able to bring to the fiede 2000. men. So that, aduentering with so few, to fight with about 40000. Horse, and 10000. Foote, and (as some say) a farre greater number: his Army was presently enclosed on all sides, and so opprest with multitudes, that he lost both the battaile, and his life. So perilous a thing it is for a Prince to ground any designement of a forraigne War: eyther on the weakenesse of an Enemy, or on the strength of a Confederate, and not vpon sufficient forces of his owne. But to proceede.

The fourth case is, when to auoyde some imminent danger, of inuasion or Warre at home, or other great vexation: a Prince is forced to holde his Enemy occupied in his owne Countrey, by supporting there a iust quarrell against him. Wherein, though he spend largely, without fear of losse, in respect of the present security which hee purchaseth, and exemption from greater expences and daunger at home: neuerthelesse, it shall be Wisedome for him, (in my fancy) to practise the counsell which Alcibiades the Athenian gaue to Tissaphernes in like case, to wit. Not to giue greater succor, then may suffice to keep the warre still on foote, as well to gain time, which often remedieth the greatest inconuenience; as also to extenuate and wearie both parties, in such sort, that whether the warre end by victorie or composition, they may haue no ability to assaile him. Which he may well feare, though the party which he assisteth should preuaile.

For this purpose, it is to be considered, that Ciuill dissentions end many times, to the cost of the Forreigne Prince who maintained them: whether they end by victorie of the enemy, or of his Confederate, or else by their composition. For, his enemy, if hee ouercome, remaineth more irretated, and more obliged to seek reuenge then before. And his Confederate, if hee vanquish the other, and succeed him in his State: is more like to proue an enemy then a friend, especiallie, if the quarrell of the other was not personall (that is to say, proceeding of some perticuler iniurie done to his person) but a quarrell of State, as commonly it is, for in that case, whosoever shall be Governour of the same State, will be his enemy, notwithstanding, any benefit receiued. For experience teacheth, that respect of gratitude for benefits past, little auai-leth, when it is any way encountred with reason of State.

Which (as Guicciardin saith) Vince ogni partito, Doth (with Princes) ouer-weigh all other considerations. And is so varriable, according to the variety of occasions, and successe of affaires: that it changeth daily, and of a Friend this day, maketh an enemy to morrow. In which respect, the Leagues & amities of Princes, is commonly very vn-sure, bee the obligation neuer so great.

Moreover, it commonly falleth out, that the party whom a forreign Prince helpeth to aduance, remaineth his debtor for the charges bestowed in his succour: wherevpon it followeth many times,

A forreigne warre not to be grounded principally vpon hope of a partie.

A lamentable example of Sebastian King of Portugall. Hieron. Cone. Regio de' unio de li Reg. di Portugallo lib. 2.

A very indiscrete and vnkingly aduerture.

A perilous resolution in a Prince.

A forreigne warre to be maintained, to auoide a domesticall.

Good counsell of Alcibiades, concerning the maintenance of a forreigne warre.

Ciuill warres end to the cost of the Forreignener that maintained them.

Respect of gratitude encountred with reason of State, little auayleth.

Guicciardinelli, Auiso 10. it. Reason of State very variable.

Mony lent to maintaine a forreigne war in danger to be lost.

Edward the blacke Prince.

Polidor. Virgil. in Hist. Angl. Lib. 19.

Places or Townes giuen in pawne for money make enemies of friends.

Composition of deuided parties against the forreigner.

The Barrons warres in England. Polidor. Virgil. in Hist. Angl. Lib. 15. Paul. Acmil. in Phillip. 2.

Phillip. Duke of Bourguindy.

Pol dor. Virgil. in Hen. 5. & 6.

times, that the Creditour loofeth both his Friend and his Money. For, if he trust to bare promises of repayment, he is in danger to be serued, as was Edward the Blacke Prince, who going in person (with a great Army into Spaine) to succour Peter the King of Castile, vpon his promise to repay him all his expences: was after the victorie) so delayed and deluded by him, that hee was faine to returne without any satisfaction. By meanes whereof, hee was constrained to lay such impositions vpon his owne Subiects in Aquitaine, for the payment of his Souldiours: that they rebelled; and hee lost the greatest part of that Country.

And put the case, that hee haue any places or Towns deliuered him, in consideration of his expences, or his better security, which any Prince that giueth succour to Forraigners) hath reason to seek: then his friend many times (for reason of State) becomes his Enemy, to recouer those places which he gaue him before. And so it falleth out commonly, when soeuer ciuill wars and disentions come to end; by composition of the parties deuided: who willingly agree, and ioyne themselues against the Forraigner that maintained their deuision. Especially, if he haue any hold or footing in their Countrey, though it were at the first with their owne consent; whereof I wil alleage a few examples, as well Ancient as Moderne.

In the Barons wars in England, in the time of King John, Lewes the eight, then Son to Phillip the second king of France, assisted the Barons against their King, and being called by them into England, and proclaimed King therof: was shortly after (by common consent; as well of them, as of al the other English) driuen out againe.

Also Phillip, Duke of Bourguindy, to be reuenged on the Duke of Orleans, & on Charles the seauenth, while hee was yet but Dolphin: called Henry fift, King of England into France; & assisted him first to make him Regent, & after to crown not only him, but also Henry the sixt his Son, King of France in Paris. Yet in the end, he made his peace with King Charles aforefaide, and helped him to depriue the English of all that, which either they had got by his meanes, or otherwise.

In like manner, Charles the eyght, King of France, was most earnestly solicited to the Conquest of Naples, euen by the Neapolitans themselues: who, neuerthelesse) shortly after helped to expel the Garisons and forces which he had left ther, notwithstanding they had receiued great benefits of him.

In this age also, the late Queene of England, of glorious memory, gaue some support in the first troubles of France, to her great charges. But when peace was made in the year of our Lord 1562. they all ioyned against her, to recouer Haure de Grace from her, which they had before giuen her, for assurance of the Mony, by her lent them.

And lastly, notwithstanding the costly succours of Men and Mony, that the French Catholikes receiued from the Catholike King of Spaine: yet they forsook him almost all in the end, and ioyned with his and their aduerse partie, and made War against him, to recouer of him som few Towns in the frontiers of Flanders, which they had giuen him before; for his and their security.

Therefore, although these things doe not alwaies succeed in this manner, yet forasmuch as most commonly they do, and that nothing is more vncertaine, then that which dependeth on the will, affection, or gratitude of other men, or vpon reason of state; which varieth and changeth daily, according to the variety of occasions. I hold it for a speciall point of prudence in a Prince, to take the surest way, to wit; not to engage himself too far, nor to aduenture more, then he careth not to loose, in the maintenance of a ciuill Warre in a forraigne Country; except, when either the seruice of God, som iust obligation, or the conseruation of his own state doth necessarily require it. Thus much concerning the behalfe of the Prince that is to giue the succour. Furthermore, great consideration is to be had, of the State and condition of the parties which demaund it: as, whether they bee able to ouercome their aduersaries, or (at least) to stand and maintaine their quarrell, with the assistance which they craue, or may be giuen them. For otherwise, it were great impudence in any Prince, to vndertake their maintenance: but rather to endeaour by way of treaty

Charles 8. King of France. Phillip. Comm. in Carol. 2. Cap. 2. & 39.

Elizabeth Q. of England.

Phillip the second King of Spaine.

Nothing more vncertaine, then that which dependeth on the will of men, or reason of State.

Considerations concerning those which demaund succour.

ty (betwixt them and their aduersarie) to compound the quarrell, and thereby to make himselfe gratefull to both parties.

And for as much as it many times falleth out, that the ability and power of the party which craueth assistance, consisteth not in the strength of some one potent and absolute Prince, but in the force of many Princes, Townes, or States; confederated and leagued together: it is in such case specially to be considered, how, or vpon what reasons, the said partie is vnited.

To this purpose it is to be noted, that in all confederacies and leagues, wherein many do vnite themselues: the confederates are moued thereto, cyther with one motiue or end (as in the Cantons of the Switzers, or in the League which the Pope, the King of the Romaines, the King of Spain, the Venetians, and the Duke of Milaine, made against Charles the eight King of France, for the defence of Italie;) Or else they are moued thereto with diuers and sundry motiues, some with one, and som with another.

As for example, in the late French League or vnion; some entered onelic for conseruation of the Catholike Religion (which was the common and pretended end of all that partie) others entred for perticular respects; as either for passion or ambition, or for the friendship of some one Man on the one side, or hatred of some on the other, or for hope of future gaine, or for present profit and commoditie; or such like.

Now then, those that are led by perticular respects, doe not (for the most part) remaine any longer in any league, then they may hope to obtaine their desires. And when they are perswaded, that they may sooner obtaine the same, by adhearing to the aduerser partie; they are easily induced thereto: and hereupon followeth commonly, the dissolution of such leagues and confederacies. For which cause, the strength and power of any leagues, is not to be measured so much by the multitude of confederates, be they neuer so great and potent: as by their concurrence and agreement in one and the same end. For, as a few vnder one head, are stronger then many, vnder many and different heads;

as Phillip de Comminaus noteth very well: so a few principall persons or Townes, vnited together for one and the selfesame cause, are to be reputed far stronger, and more like to stand; then verie many (though much more potent) if they haue many and different ends.

Therefore it much importeth a Prince, that shall support a Forraigne League, to discouer (as much as hee may) what end or motiue induced the Heades and principall Confederates, to make their entrance. Whereby he shall the better discern, what their force and strength may be; and how they are like to stand, and to maintaine their quarrell. For, if they haue al but one end, they may be reputed the stronger: but if their endes be diuers, they cannot long stand. As wee haue seene lately in the French League, which, notwithstanding the great succours (both of Men and Money) giuen them by the Catholique King: dissolved rather of it selfe, then by any forces of enemies, by reason that many of the Governours of Townes, and chiefe Pillers thereof, concurred not in one end with the whole league. And therefore, when they received satisfaction for their perticular desires, or saw themselues out of hope thereof, they easily changed their party.

To such Leagues (I say) vnited onely in exterior shew, and not in one common end: I hold it not secure or conuenient for a Prince to giue succour; except he be moued thereto by some imminent danger of inuasion, or other great dammage. Which he may feare to receiue from the enemy occupied, as I haue signified before, while he neyther prepares for his better defence at home, or at least may winne time; which in all extremities is to be sought, and often remedie the very greatest inueniences.

Moreover, forasmuch as the succours demanded or giuen, consist commonly eyther in Money, Men, or in both, and that it may import a Prince (for the furtherance of some iust pretence. or obligation of his own, or for some publique good) to imploy not only his forces, but also his Mony largely, to maintaine and support a Forraigne League: I will adde somewhat concerning the same, to the end, that a young Statist may many vnder different heads. Phillip. Com Chron. du Roy Louis. Cap. 26.

Necessary for a Prince to discouer the ends of the principall confederates.

The dissolution of the French league through the diuersity of ends.

In what case a Prince may support a forreigne league, not vnited in one end.

The succours demanded consist either in mony, men, or in both.

Concerning Townes or States confederated.

The motiues or ends of leagues to be considered.

Phillip. de Com. Chron du Roy Charles Cap. 23

The common end of the French league.

The perticular endes of many in the French league.

Diuersity of ends causeth the dissolution of leagues.

A few vnder one head is stronger then may the better vnderstand, both what to aduise, and also how to deale therein.

Therefore, first concerning the bestowing of Mony, I say, that although it cannot be denied, but that Mony may doe very much in all busineses of this quality. (For, Quid non mortalia pectora cogit auri sacra fames? What doth not the detestable hunger of Gold compell Men to do?) Yet ordinarily, the effect that Mony can worke, is but to dispose the wils and mindes of Men to the desired end. Which disposition (neuerthelesse) in some that receiue the Mony, is none at all, in others very little, and in most very doubtfull, and to be suspected. For those to whom thou giuest thy Mony, either are thine enemies, or thy friends, or else neutrall. If they be thine Enemies, commonly they take thy Mony, to impouerish thee, to enrich themselves, and to imploy thine owne Mony against thee, when they shall see time.

If they bee thy Friends, thy Money worketh little; because their own good will and friendship, bindeth them more vnto thee, then thy Mony can doe. If they be neutrall, & become thy Friends for the profit they haue by thee: their friendship will last no longer then the profit continueth. And when they may think to get more by thine enemy, then by thee: they will be his friendes for the same reason, that they were thine. And although they shall haue neuer so great benefit by thee; yet they will perswade themselves, that thou seekest thine own Commodity, and not theirs, and that thou art beholding vnto them, for that they doe vouchsafe to take any thing of thee.

And forasmuch, as the hunger and desire of Mony, doth encrease with the possession and vse thereof: the more thou giuest them, the more they will desire. For, as Cicero saith; Fit deterior qui accipit, & ad idem semper expectandum paratior; He which taketh or receiueth Mony, is made worse thereby, and alwayes the more ready to expect the like. So that, if thou doe not euer giue them, when, and how much they shall expect or demand of thee: they will hate thee more for that which thou dost not giue them, then they haue loued thee for that which they haue receiued already. For, as Seneca saith. Vetus & nota ingratitude est, dati immemores meminisse negati, ideoque rara & tepentes gratia feruida & frequentes querela. It is an old and notorious ingratitude; to forget a benefit receiued; and still to remember a benefit denied. Whereupon it followeth, that thankes are care and cold; and Complaints, feruent and frequent.

I speake not this, for that I thinke it not conuenient to negotiate with Mony, to gaine and entertaine the affections of men: but to signifie, that it is to be don with great consideration. For, as P.iny saith. Inconsiderate largitionis comes penitentia est. Repentance euer accompanieth the inconsiderate imployment of Mony. Therefore to say some what of this point, my opinion is, that it is conuenient for any man, that doth negotiate with Mony in a strange Country: to haue his Purse alwaies open, for such as are true Friendes to him and the League, as well to gratifie them, and to recompence their good wils and good Offices; as also to helpe their necessities, and to enable them to vphold their partie.

And those may bee accounted true Friends, whose end is eyther the common end of the whole League: or so dependant thereon; that it cannot be otherwise obtained, but by the good successe of the League. And to such, Mony may euer bee securely giuen, when their necessities, or the publike good of the League shall require it. But vnto others, little or nothing is to be giuen (in my fancy) except it bee to buy of them some important places; or to recompence intelligences, or seruices already done. And therefore it shall bee conuenient, to vse all diligence (as before I haue signified) to discouer the true Motiues, that induced euery one to whom Mony is to be giuen, to enter into the League.

And in case it may seeme needful, to aduenture some what, to entertaine some few principall men, though neutrals, or suspected, to diuert them from compounding with the enemy: it shall bee conuenient (in my fancy) to giue them largely, and more then the Enemy is like to giue them, and precisely to accomplish what else shall be promised.

For

How money is to be bestowed in the maintenance of a forreigne league.

What effect money may worke.

Money is giuen to such as eyther are friends, enemies, or neutrall, and in what nature it worketh with eyther of them.

The desire of money encreaseth with the vse and possession thereof. Cicero in Offic. Lib. 2.

Seneca in Lib. 2. de Ira. Ca. 14. A benefit receiued, soone forgotten: a benefit deuided, remembered euer.

Plin. lib. 7. Epist. Monie to be bestowed with great consideration.

Liberality to be vsed towards true friends, and who they are.

How mony is to be bestowed vpon suspected persons.

Remembrance still to be had of the motiues.

Of entertaining some few principall men.

The danger of breach of promise.

Example of the league in France, witnessed by the Author.

Money and forces concurring, doe worke great effects.

The Oracle to Phillip of Macedon.

No trust in affection bought with monie.

Cicero in Offic. Lib. 2.

A man corrupted with monie, will be faithfull to no man.

For otherwise, they will acknowledge no Obligation, and when the Enemy shall giue them more, they will follow him: and if promise bee not kept with them, they will esteeme themselves to be mocked, and (for very disdain) will passe to the Enemy: and of all this, I saw daily experience in the time of the League in France. There the Catholike King bestowed many Millions, in Pensions, in entertainments, which many receiued, and after became his open Enemies. Some of them, because they were not punctually paid their entertainments; Others, because (as they pretended) promise was not kept with them in other things; And some others againe, either because they could not haue whatsoever they demanded, or because that others had more then they.

But how much soeuer shall be bestowed vpon one or other, there is no security or assurance, in negotiating with Money alone: except the same be eyther accompanied, or shortly seconded with sufficient forces, which concurring therewith, may work great effect. And therefore the Oracle saide to Phillip of Macedon: Hastis pugna argentatis, & omnia vinces: Fight with s. uered shields, and thou shalt overcome all: aduising him thereby, to imploy Mony and Forces together. For, as for negotiation with mony alone, the longer it continueth; the more danger there is, both to loose the Mony and the businesse. For no trust is to be had in affection bought with Mony, and not grounded on reason & vertue. In which respect Phillip King of Macedon, saide very well to his Sonne Alexander, who sought to gaine from him the good wils of the Macedonians, with guitts and bribes. What mischief (quoth he) perswadeth thee to thinke, that those will bee faithfull to thee, whom thou hast corrupted with Mony?

Thus much for this matter, whereof much more might be said, if the question were reduced to perticular persons and Countries; which might minister other important considerations of difficulties, according vnto the Nature, strength, or weakenesse of the places, and the conditions and abilities of the persons, who were to bee succoured or impugned. Which I forbear to prosecute any further, to passe to another matter: meaning to debate, whether the remedies which Politiques teach, against the daungers and inconueniences growing of wickednesse be sufficient (in reason and true pollicy) to assure the State of a wicked Prince. By occasiō whereof, I will examine diuers principles of Machiuillian Doctrine, and shew the absurdity thereof. To the end, that the young Statist, whom I labour to informe, may vnderstand as well what to auoyde, as what to embrace in matter of pollicy, and that a Princes State cannot be assured by wickednesse.

CHAP. X.

Another Question is debated, for the further enstruction of a young Statist, to wit: whether a Princes State can be assured by wicked pollicy? By the occasion whereof, many principles of Machiauell, and of the Politiques his followers, are examined and confuted by reason of state without the consideration of Gods Iustice.

O Man that is endued with reason, will denie, that wickednesse in a Prince, maketh him hatefull to his Subiects, and (consequently) endangereth his Estate. Which al Machiauellians and Politiques knew so well; that the greatest part of their pollicy, consisteth in deuising remedies against the same. To the ende, that their Prince may bee securely wicked, that is to say, that he may purchase and enjoy all Worldly pleasures and commodities, Perfas & nefas, By right or wrong: without danger of any reuenge of Man, and not fearing the wrath and Iustice of God, because they beleue not, that there is a God, or (at least) that he medleth not with the affaires of Men.

First let vs see some of their Remedies. One of the principall (according to the Doctrine of their Maister Machiauell)

The Argumēt proposed in the ensuing Chapter.

Wherein consisteth the greatest part of Machiauels pollicies.

All to be compassed by right or wrong.

Machia. de princip.

Machiauels principall remedy consisteth in extremity of wickednesse.

Machiauell would haue a Prince to be either a Saint or a Deuill

Machiauels absurdity in seeking to remedie a disease, by encreasing the cause thereof.

Excessiue wickednesse exposeth a Prince to excessiue hatred Cicero in Offic. Lib. 2.

No force or power can sufficiently resist the hatred of many. Politiques seeke absurdly to remedie hatred by feare.

Feare concurring with hate makes it more dangerous to him which is hated, and why.

auill) is, extreimity of all mischiefe and wickednesse, which Machiauell teacheth to be far more secure for a Prince, then mediocrity betwixt vertue and vice. Therefore he would haue his Prince to bee, either the best man liuing, or the worst: that is to say, either to be a Saint or a Deuill. Whereof his reason must needs be (if he haue any) that he which holdeth the middle way betwixt vertue and vice, and doth sometimes well, and sometimes ill: must needs incur the offence and hatred of some men, whereby he shall be endangered. Therefore he thinketh it conuenient for such a one, to practise the common Prouerb, to wit; Qui semel verecundia fines transierit, &c. He that hath once past the bounds of shame, must be notably impudent. That is to say, he that is once ouer the shooes in sinne; must (for his safety) goe ouer head and eares. As though the way to remedie a disease, were to norish and encrease the cause thereof: as to cure a drop sic with continuall drinking, or a burning feauer with hot Wines and Spices, or to cast Oyle into the fire, to the end to quench it. For so do Machiauellians, who, to remedie the danger that groweth to a wicked Prince by hatred, doe make him more hatefull, and by the excessse of wickednesse, expose him to the extream & excessiue hatred of all men, and consequently, to ruine and perdition. For, as Cicero saith; Multorum odijs nulla opes, nulla vires poterunt resistere. No force, power, or wealth, can suffice, to resist the hatred of many, and much lesse of all Men. Yes, say they; Oderint dum metuant; Let them hate him (be they neuer so many) so that they feare him. For feare shall so repress their hatred: that they shall not dare to attempt any thing to his preiudice. Thus say they, but most absurdly: for feare (in a mind posselt with hate) is nothing else, but as it were Vnguis in ulcere: A mans naile or a scratch in an vlcere or botch, which is exasperated thereby, and the paine of the patient greatly aggravated. And although feare doe (in some sort) delay and repress the fury of hatred: yet it makes it much more secure for the hater, and more dangerous to him that is hated.

For those that hate without feare, do many times attempt (vnadvisedly) to their own destruction: but those which both hate and feare, do deliberate, and execute with much more maturity and consideration, and (consequently) with lesse daunger to themselues, and more to their enemy. So that, whē the Prince doth adde feare to the hate of his Subiects: he redoubleth both his own feare, and also his owne perill. Whereupon the Tragical Poet saith.

10 Qui sceptrā duro seuus imperio regit, Timet timentes, metus in autorem redit.

That is to say. He which gouerneth by severity and cruelty, feareth those which feare him, and the feare turneth vpon the Author or cause thereof. And, as Seneca the Stoick saith. Nesse est vt multos timeat, quem multi timent. He must needs be in feare of many, whom many feare. Also Cicero, following Ennius the Poet, saith notably thus. Quem metuunt oderunt, &c. Men hate him whom they feare, and euery one desireth the destruction of him whom he hateth: And no force or power of Empire (bee it neuer so great) can long stand, if it be prest with continuall feare of the Subiects. Thus saith Cicero, declaring the daunger that groweth to a Prince by hatred & feare, which are the most forcible and vrgent Motiues that may be, to moue a people to conspiracies, as well among themselues, as with forraigners: both to deliuer themselues of the feare, as also to discharge their hatred & ire vpon their Prince. Wherefore Aristotle doth reckon hatred and feare, among the principall causes, of the destruction of Monarchies and tyrannies.

40 But heere say the Machiauellians. For, this cause hath the Prince his Guardes, Armies, and Fortresses, to defend himselfe from all attempts, both Forraigne and Domesticall; beside the vigilancy and pollicy which he vseth, for the prevention of conspiracies; disarming and impouersishing his Subiects; forbidding their assemblies and publike conuentions; and all other meanes, which may breed loue, trust, and confidence among them. Terrifying thē (oftentimes) with the frequent shew of his Guardes and Garrisons, to make them seruile & base minded; suffering them to be vicious & dissolute of life, to make them effeminate: nor permitting them the vse of Schooles, or other meanes, whereby they may become learned, wise, & politike. Employing his spies euery where, for

The Prince adding feare to the hatred of his subiects redoubleth his own feare and danger.

Seneca Traged.

Feare turneth vpon the Author.

Cicero in Offic. Lib. 2.

Hatred and feare are the causes of conspiracies.

Arist. in Polit. Lib. 5.

Machiauellian remedies against conspiracies, deliuered according to the rules of their Doctrine.

for the discovery of every mans intention. Nourishing divisions among the greatest, to counterpeize one with another. Suspecting all men, be they never so much bound to him. And finally, cutting off (by one means or other) al those whose power, courage, or wit, he may thinke to bee dangerous to his State: wherby he shall be secure from the dangers which may grow to his person or State, by the hatred of his Subjects.

Whereto I answer, that if Machiauell, or some other Politicke in these our daies, had bin the first inventers of these policies, and that they had never bin yet tried: it might with more reason be supposed, that there were, or might be some assurance therein for a wicked Prince. But seeing all this, or whatsoever else Machiauel, or any Politicke doth teach, for the conservation of a Tyrant, hath bin practised in all times & ages, by Tyrants and wicked Princes, who (nevertheless) have al, or the most part of the perished by the hatred of men: who seeeth not the insufficiency thereof, for the assurance of a Prince in wickednesse?

Can Machiauell, or any other Politick, teach more to this purpose, than we find written about 2000. yeares ago by Aristotle in his Politickes? Who shewing the meanes, whereby Tyrants seeke to preserve themselves and their states: ministrereth to Machiauell and his fellows, al the matter and substance of their wicked policies. Which nevertheless, were not approved by Aristotle, as sufficient for the conservation of tyranny: but vterly reiected by him. In which respect, he declareth how vnsure tyranny is, and exemplifieth the same in all tyrannicall state, which had beene before, or in his time. Shewing how speedily they all perished, excepting only foure: whereof the first continued 100. yeares, the second 73. and sixe months; the third, 33. and the fourth, 22. yeares. And the cause of the long continuance of the first and second, he ascribeth to the moderate and iust government of the Tyrants, who though they got their States tyrannicall, and held them by vsurpation (in regard whereof they are called Tyrants;) yet they governed with such moderation and Iustice, that they were greatly beloved of their Subjects.

To which purpose Aristotle also observeth, that the state of a Tyrant is so much the more sure: by how much more moderate it is, and neerer to his iust government of a King. Wherein al Machiauellians may note, both by the doctrine and experience of Aristotle, that the extremitie of wickednesse and tyranny, is the high way to carry a Prince headlong to his destruction, notwithstanding all their preventions aforesaid. Whereof some part are most necessary for the conservation of any Princes state: as Guardes, Garrisons, Fortresses; vigilance of Councillors, dilligence of Spies and Intelligencers, as also such other parts of those policies; as is conforme to reason, Iustice, & conscience. But the rest, I mean those points of hindring loue and confidence among Subjects, immoderate pilling and poulling them, making them effeminate, ignorant, & base minded; nourishing debate amongst great persons, and cutting off such as are more eminent in credit, power, courage, and wit, then the rest: these I say, and all such as are against charity, Iustice, and Conscience, are against all true pollicy, and so farre from helping a Tyrant, that they help to ruine him, as heere in this Chapter shall appear, concerning some of these pointes in perticuler, and some in generall.

And now to speake of some of them. What can be more contrary to true reason of State: then to hinder trust, confidence, and loue among the people, without the which there can be no commonwealth? For, without loue & confidence, there can be no fidelity; & without fidelity, no Iustice; and without Iustice, no Commonwealth, as you have read in the necessity of fidelity in the Prince. For this cause, all ancient Lawmakers, and founders of commonwealths, have ordained in all Countries and Cities, publike Feasts, Playes, and assemblies, where the people may meet together: not onely for recreation; but to make them also known one to another. To the end, that of their conversation, may grow loue and friendship; and the same redound to generall vnity, for the conservation of peace in the whole Commonwealth. And therefore Aristotle saith, that friendship is; Maximū bonum civitatibus; The greatest good that can be to Commonwealths. For saith he, By means Hhhh thereof.

Arist. Ibid. Cap. 11.

Machiauellian policies contrary to Aristotles doctrine and experience.

What is to be reiected and what allowed in the Machiauellian remedies aboue mentioned.

Machiauels Doctrine concerning deuision confuted.

Why publike Feastes and Playes were first instituted

The benefit of loue and friendship in Commonwealths.

Aristot. in Polit. Lib. 2. Cap. 2.

Machiauell was not the Inuenter of his pollicies.

Machiauellian pollicies knowne and practised in all ages, by wicked Princes to their ruine.

Arist. in Polit. Lib. 5. Cap. 11. Machiauellian pollicies reiected by Aristotle about 2000 yeares agoe.

The speedy fal of tyrannicall states noted by Aristotle. Aristot. Ibid. Cap. 12.

Plutarch, in Solon.

What Common-wealth Solon liked best.

The loue & vnion of members of the politicall body, most necessary, for the conseruation thereof.

Seneca, in Lib. 2. de Ira. Cap. 31.

Why Machiauellians doe thinke; that factions among subiects are good for Princes.

A Machiauellian Prouerbe, and principle confuted.

thereof, they shall be free from sedition. Also, So, on esteemed this amity and vnion of minds, to be so necessary for the conseruation of humaine Society, that, being demanded, what Common-wealth was best, and most like to continue: Such a one (saith he) wherein euery Man doth take the iniury which is don to another, to be done to himselfe. And to the same purpose he made a law in Athens, giuing leaue to euery one, to take vpon him the iust quarrel of any other, and to demand reparation of the wrong, as if the matter concerned himself. Which constitution of Solon, Plutarch commendeth greatly. As a means (saith he) to accustom the people, to feele and redresse the griefes & iniuries one of another, as being al members of one body. Whereby he may vnderstand, that the vnion and loue, of the political body (that is to say, the Common-wealth) is no lesse necessary; then the combination of the parts in the body naturall. Which Seneca teacheth notably in these words. Vt omnia inter se membra, &c. As all the members and parts of mans body, do agree together for the conseruation of the whole, which also redoundeth to the good of euery part in particular: So all men ought to agree to the benefit one of another, because we are borne to liue in societie, which cannot be conserued, but by the agreement and loue of the parts thereof. Thus saith Seneca.

How then can it stand with true pollicie, or reason of State, to hinder this vnion and loue of the people, or to sow and nourish factions among them, and especiallie among great personages; whereby seditions, tumults, and garboyles may grow in the Common-wealth? Yes, say the Machiauellians, it standeth notably wel with the reason of our Princes State, who seeketh not the generall good of the Commonwealth: but his particular benefit. And therefore, forasmuch as the vnion and friendship of subiects, may enable them the rather to conspire against him; it is good pollicy & reason of State for him, to maintaine factions among them, according to the old saying. Si vis regnare, diuide. If thou wilt raigne, make diuision.

Thus say they. Of whom I wold gladly learne, how they can (in this case) seperate the perill of the Common-wealth, from the perill of the Prince, to make this good pollicy for him? Can the body be in danger, without the perill of the head? Hath it not bin seen many times, that some priuate quarrell, growne at first betwixt meane personages: hath after passed further to a multitude, and (from them) come to be general to the ruine of a whole State? And therefore, Plutarch wisely compareth sedition to a little sparke of fire, which falling into straw, or other dry matter in some corner of a house: setteth the same on fire, whereby (in the end) a whole Towne is burnt. In which respect, he counteth it for one of the most speciall pointes of political Science: to take away all occasion of sedition, and when it groweth, to appease it quickly.

Aristotle also teacheth the same verie seriously, affirming, that Sedition is the chiefe cause, of the mutation and subuerfion of Common-wealths. Shewing how many waies it may rise, and how it may be remedied, & that it is alwaies dangerous; but then most petnitious, when it groweth among great personages. And therefore he aduiseh, to remedy the same (if it be possible) in the very beginning, because: Principium dicitur esse, dimidium totius: The beginning is saide to be the one halfe of the whole. And little seditions at the first, grow after to be great, especially among great men: Whose discord (saith hee) draweth the whole Common-wealth after them. Whereby it may appeare, how dangerous and absurd is the counsell, which Machiauellians giue to their Princes; to norish factions in their Common-wealth, & especially among great personages: as if Princes were omnipotent, and had the harts and wils of al men in their hands, to moue, sway, incense, or temper in such manner and measure, as it shall please them, which only is in Gods hand and power to do. So then it is eident in this case, that the Machiauellians expose their Prince to manifest danger, without any assurance, or sufficient probability of remedie, which in matter of State is most absurd.

The like may also be said, of their other pestilent pollicies before mentioned, consisting in all kind of cruelty, iniustice, and wickednesse: whereby they make their Prince most odious to all men, and (by consequent) do draw them into manifest dangers, from which they are

The good & ill of the Common-wealth and of the Prince are conioyned. Factions in the Common-wealth dangerous to Princes.

Plutarch in his enltructions, for such as deale in matters of state.

Arist. in Polit. Lib. 5. Cap. 2. 3. & 4.

Sedition a principall cause of the subuerfion of States.

Idem Ibid. ca. 4.

Factions among great men most dangerous.

Princes may make factions but cannot afterward hinder the bad effects thereof.

Machiauellian pollicies make Princes odious to their subiects.

are notable to warrant or defend them by all their pollicies. As it may appear by the experience of all ages & former times, vnto this wherein we liue, seeing all Histories doe testifie, that the more wicked and tyrannical Princes haue bin, and the more they haue incurred the hatred of men: the sooner they haue bin ruined; some by open rebellions of their subiects; some others, by their general description in fauour of strangers; others by secret conspiracies of a few; and others also, by the desperate attempt of some one man, notwithstanding all their pollicies, power, force of Guards, Armies, Fortresses, or other humane meanes.

This point Cicero proneth, by the examples of Phalaris a most cruell Tyrant, whom all the people of the Agrigentines oppressed in a general tumult: and of Alexander, the Tyrants of Phara, killed by his owne craft: And of Demetrius, King of Macedon, forsaken of all his subiects, in fauour of King Pyrrhus. To whom we may adde Romulus, the first founder of the Romain Empire, who hauning made himselfe hateful to his Senators: was murdered by them in the very Senate house. As L. Tarquinius Priscus, his third Successor, being odious to the people for his In-justice, and fraud towards the Children of Ancus Martius, whom he deprived of their Kingdome, though he was left their Tutor by their Father: was slaine by two Shepheards. In like manner, Tarquinius Superbus, the seauenth and last King of the Romaines, who vsed all the tyrannicall pollices aboue mentioned, violated all Lawes humane and diuine, for the conseruation of his estate: was neuerthelessse driuen out of his kingdom by his subiects, and the name of King and kingly authority, abolished among the Romaines (in hatred of him) for the space of 500. yeares.

And if wee looke into the Romaine Empire after Iulius Caesar, we shal finde, that neither pollicy nor power, could defend many Emperors of Rome & Constantinople, against the hatred of Men. As, to omit many others, who perished vpon other occasions; it may appear by (a) Iulius Caesar himselfe, Caius Caligula, Claudius, Nero, Domitian, (b) Commodus, (c) Digijs, Iulianus, (d) Caracalla, (e) Opilius Macrinus, and his Son Diadumenus, (f) Heliogabalus, Alexander Seuerus, Iulius Maximus, (g) Galienus, (h) Philippus, (i) Aurelianus, (k) Constans the first, (l) Gratian, Valentinian the third, Basiliscus, Zeno, Mauritius, Phocas, Heraclion, with his Mother Martina, Constans the second, Iustinian the second, Phillipicus, Constantinus the first, Nicephorus Stauratus, Leo Armenius, Michael the Son of Theophilus, Nicephorus, surnamed Phocas, Ioannes Zemisces, Michael Calaphrates, Stratioticus, Michael Parapinaceus, Andronicus Comnenus, and diuers others, who hauning incurred the hatred, either of their Subiects in generall, or of some particuler persons, were some of them poysoned, and others violently slaine, eyther by the fury of the people, or by their Nobility, or by their own Guards and Soldiours, or by their wines, Concubines, or seruants, or by other particuler men. Besides, some others of them were deposed, and eyther confined into Monasteries, or deprived as well of their eyes and noses, as of their Empire. And one among the rest, to wit, Zeno, a most cruell and crafty Tyrant, was put into his Sepulcher aline (by the consent of his Wife) while he was drunke, or, as some write; taken with a fit of the falling sicknesse. Being also so hated of his owne Seruants and Guards, that when hee came to himselfe, and cried for help out of the sepulcher: no man assisted or pitied him, and so he died raging, and tearing his flesh with his teeth, as it appeared afterward when the Tombe was opened.

And although euery one of these was not so subtile, nor so pollitike, nor yet so wicked, as Machiavill would haue his Prince to be: yet it is euident in them all, that the hatred of Subiects, is most pernicious to Princes. And in some of them it appeareth manifestly, that no humane power, or wicked pollicy, can warrant and assure them the State of a Prince generally hated: seeing that diuers of them before named, excelled not onely in imperiall power; but also in subtiltie, craft, perfidiousnesse, periury, deepe dissimulation, crueltie, and all such kinde of wickednesse, as Machiavill requireth in his Prince. As (to omit others, for breuities sake) the last whom I named of the Emperors of

The hatred of subiects most dangerous to Princes, by the experience of all Ages.

Cicero in Offic. Lib. 2.

The danger of hatred exemplified by Cicero. Diuers of the first Kings of Rome ruined by hatred.

Tit. Livius. Dec. 1. Lib. 1.

Examples in the Empire of Rome and Constantinople. a Sueton Tranquil. b Aelius Lampridius. c Spartianus. d Iulius Capitolinus. e Lampridius.

f Trebellius Pollio. g Sextus Aurelius Victor. h Flavius Vopiscus. i Porphyrius Laeta. j Ioannes Baptista Egnatius. k Zonaras. l Nicetas Choniates.

Zeno a most cruell and crafty Tyrant buried aline.

Cedrenus in Comp. Zonarus Annal. T. 3. Ioan Baptista Egnatius in Zenone.

The hatred of Subiects, is most pernicious to Princes.

Epito. Ioan. Bap. Egnatius.

Nicetas Choniates in Andronico Comneno. Lib. 1.

Constantinople, to wit; Andronicus Comnenus, was so eminent and egregious in all tyrannicall Pollicy: that Egnatius worthily calleth him; Callidissimum mortalium; The most crafty of all Mortal men. Of whose manner of government I wil say somewhat briefly, to the end it may appeare: how little security a Prince may haue by wicked pollicies, against the hatred of men.

The History of Andronicus Comnenus, Emperour of Constantinople, an egregious Politique.

This Andronicus, hauing with great art and subtilty, obtained to be Tutour to the young Emperour Alexius, Son to Emanuel: made himselfe (thortly after) his Companion in the Empire, procuring the death of the Empreffe, Mother to Alexius, and of diuers others, whose liues hee thought to be preiudiciall to his pretence. Within a while also, hee caused the young Emperour himselfe to be murdered, notwithstanding, his former oath of fidelity, sollemnely confirmed with receiuing the blessed Sacrament. And being then Emperour alone, and finding himselfe to be hateful to his people: he practised all the tyrannicall Pollicies, that could be deuised for his own conseruation. He guarded his Pallace and person, with strong Guards of barbarous Strangers, and the most desperate Fellowes that could bee found, who could neither speake nor vnderstand the language of the Country: and he had (beside) every night at his chamber door, a huge Mastiue dog, so fierce, that he durst fight body to body with a Lyon, or with an armed man on horsebacke. He was also provided of wicked Instruments, for the execution of his will in all cases: as Spies, Promoters, and false witnesses, whereby many Noblemen were slaine, imprisoned, or banished. Yet for no other cause, but for that he feared, that either their credit with the people, or their power, or their wealth, or their wit, might prooue in time dangerous to his State.

Idem. Lib. 2.

His Guards of barbarous strangers, and his great dog.

Idem. Lib. 2. His wicked Instruments.

Idem. Lib. 2. His care of the administration of Iustice in all things which did not concerne his particular benefit or pleasure

Neuerthelesse, knowing right well, that the more his Empire flourished in Iustice, the more it would be his honor, benefit, and security: hee shewed such espeicall care thereof, that hee excelled many notable Princes therein, not onely providing for the election of iust and wise officers: but also feuerely punishing those, who eyther did, or permitted any wrong to bee done, to the meanest or poorest subiect he had. Beside, he ordained, and gaue most liberall allowance, to al Magistrats for their maintenance, to the end: that they should not haue any need or pretence to take bribes. And such as were prooued to be corrupt, he punished so exemplarly: that (within a while) no Magistrate durst take so much as a present of any man, though it was neuer so voluntarily offered. He shewed himselfe affable and courteous vnto the poore, and seemed full of pittie and compassion, whensoever hee heard their complaints, and did them exact Iustice. Furthermore, he tooke such order, for the releefe of the necessities of the common people: that all kinde of victuals were most plentifull and cheape; the ground well tilled and mannured, the Countries well inhabited; Villages and Citties much augmented, & the Common-wealth greatly enriched.

10

20

30

40

50

Such was the care he seemed to haue of Iustice, and of the publique good, which (neuerthelesse) he respected no further: then it might turne to his own particular benefit or pleasure, whereof he preferred the consideration, before all things else whatsoever. For, as he provided the Commonwealth of notable Magistrates: so he furnished his Court with wicked Councillours and Iudges, voyd of all conscience, who executed his will, vpon all such as incurred his dislike or suspicion. Some they banished, spoiled others of their goods; deprived others of their eies; murdered others secretly, and condemned many publikely, vpon false pretences, of whom (neuerthelesse) he himselfe would seem to haue great compassion. As for example, vnderstanding that one Isacius, a Noble-man, had taken Armes against him in the Island of Cyprus: he picked a quarrel against two of his own trustiest Seruants and Favourites; because they were great friends to the other, causing them to bee accused of Treason, condemned, and executed. And when suite was made vnto him, after their deaths, that their Bodies (which were hanged vp) might be taken downe and buried: hee seemed so much to pittie their case, that hee shed abundance of teares, lamenting that the sentence of the Iudges, and the feueritie and authoritie of Law, must needs ouerweigh his Idem Ibid. His kindnesse and affability to the poore, and prouision for plenty of all things.

He furnished his Common-wealth with good Magistrates, and his Courte with wicked Councillours and Iudges.

Idem. Lib. 1. He suspected and made away his most familiare Seruants.

His deepe dissimulation and feigned pittie.

Idem, Lib. 2.

His horrible cruelty craftily couered.

Andronicus had the Quintessence of Machiauis policies, long before Machiavel was born.

Idem, Ibid.

His daily feares and suspitions,

His Sorceries and witchcraftes.

his desire, and the affection that he bare them. And when any were touched with matter of sedition: not onely they themselves, but also al the whole kindred and families were condemned and ruined, to the end, that none should be left of their race to reuenge it. The which (neuertheless) he seemed rather to permit, and suffer to be done, then himselfe to ordaine it. For he caused his Iudges and Magistrates, to giue those sentences by publique Edict, with plausible preambles: shewing their care of the Emperours person, and referring it not to his commaundement; but to diuine inspiration, as a thing necessary for the seruice of God, and the good of the Common-wealth.

Heere now I appeale to any Machiauilian, whether Andronicus had not the Quintessence of Machiauis Policy, long before Machiauil was born? And whether he wanted eyther desire, wit, or wickednes, to conserue his state against the hatred of men, if it had bene possible to haue done it by wicked meanes? Therefore, let vs see the end, which was such, that it may well serue for an exemplare warning, to all Machiauilian Politiques.

While Andronicus gouerned in this manner, his cruelty and in-Iustice did purchase him more hatred, then the good that he did for the publike, could recompence. Which filled him euery day with new feares, suspitions, and iealosies: especially, after that he was pressed with warres by William King of Sicily. Who hauing ouerthrown some of his armies, and taken Theffalonica, and other towns of importance: marched towards Constantinople, wherwith the people began to take courage, and to discouer their hatred to Andronicus daily more and more. This did put him in such feare of Conspiracies, that hee consulted with Sorceres and Witches: especially with one Sethus a Magitian, who deuined by a Bason of Water. And one day, when Andronicus desired to know the name of his Successor; Sethus shewed him in the water, the two Letters, I. and S. wherby he & his Councillors coniectured, that it should be Isacius, who had rebelled against him in the Island of Cyprus, as before hath bin declared. Neuertheless, forasmuch as there was another Isacius

(sir-named Angelus) at the same time in the Court, a man of so quiet a Spirit, and so small courage, that Andronicus himselfe did no way suspect him: one of his speciall Councillours suggested to him; that it were good to command the said Isacius Angelus, to be taken and put into prison, to prevent the worst. Least (saith he) we may seeke the Viper abroad in the field. when perhaps we haue him in our bosome. And although Andronicus seemed (at the first) to contemne Isacius, as a man no way to be feared: yet at last it was resolved by him and his Councill, that he should be taken. And for that purpose, Stephanus, one of his chiefe Councillours and worst Instruments, went himselfe (with certain of his catchpoules) to the house of Isacius, who defending himselfe: killed Stephanus, & ran presently (with his sword bloody in his hand) through the Market place, to take Sanctuary in the chiefe Church of the towne, imploring (as he went) the ayd of the people, declaring what hee had done, and why. The people flocked after him to the Church, pittying greatly his case, and commending his act, and at length, their courage encreasing with their multitude: they began to embolden one another; first to defend Isacius, and afterward to make him Emperour. Which being propounded to the whol assembly, was accepted of them all: thogh he himselfe neither desired it, nor so much as dreamt of it, but thought himselfe well payed, if he could saue his life. This resolution being taken among them, they proclaimed him Emp: first in the Church, and after in the streetes: which was approued with general consent of the Nobility, and all the people of the Citty, who came to yeild him obedience, and to assist him. Andronicus seeing himselfe forsaken of all his Subjects, durst neither trust to the strength of his Pallace, nor of his Guards, nor of his great Dog: but fled away in a Boat, and was shortly after taken, and brought backe loaden with Iron Chaines. Hee was scorned and reuiled by the people; his haire of his head and beard pulled away; his teeth stricken out; his right hand cut off; and (a few daies after) one of his eyes pulled out of his Head. Then was he set vpon a scabbed Camel, apparrelled ridiculousslie, and carryed
H h h h 3 through

How he was ouer reached in his Sorceries.

Wickednesse neuer wants as wicked Councill.

How his wickednesse turned to his owne ouerthrow.

Isacius feareing to loose his life, was suddenly made Emperour.

Andronicus forsaken of all his Subjects.

The reward and miserable end of Andronicus for his Tyranny.

through the streetes to be shewn to the people: who threw vpon him all kinde of ordure and filth, euery one contending, who should deride or abuse him most. And at the last, he was hanged vp by the heeles, his apparrell torne from him, and his naked body wounded, by whosoever would strike him, as many did in diuers manners: some for sport; some for reuenge of iniuries; some to try their swords, & some their strength, till (at the length) he was hackt and hewed in pieces. Behold here the fruit of Machiaullian Pollicy, the lamentable issue of wikednesse and tyranny, and the small assurance that Tyrants haue, against the hatred of their Subiects, eyther by vsurped power, or impious polly. Whereto I might adde an especiall obseruation of Gods iust iudgements: but that I promised not to vrge the same in this Chapter. Thus much concerning the Roman and Greek Emperors.

I might also produce many other notable examples of this matter, out of Histories as well of our own Country, as of al others. For, what caused the destruction of Edmond Ironside, who was murdered vpon a priuy; or the continual rebellions in the time of K. John; Or the vntimely death of Edward the second, broached with a hot spit; Or of Richard the second, first deposed, and after slain in Prison; Or yet of Richard the third, forsaken of all his Nobility and Commons, and slaine at Bosworth Fielde; what else (I say) was the cause thereof, but the hatred of their Subiects? And as for the last of these, I meane Richard the third, if we consider his malignant and treacherous Nature, his cruelty, his deepe dissimulation, his deuillish deuises and inuentions, as well to get the Crown, as after to conferue it: we shall not finde him inferiour, to the most famous tyrants of former times, for al impious and wicked pollicies, which neuerthelesse could not free him from the danger of destruction, which the hatred of his Subiects iustly drew vpon him.

But what neede I alledge other examples, seeing the Mirror of Machiauis owne Prince, Cesar Borgia, may serue for a Witnesse of this matter? For, though he so far surpassed al former Tyrants, in wickednesse and tyrannical power, that Machiauis made choise of him, to frame his Prince by the modell of his tyranny: yet could he not vphold and conferue his State, against the hatred of Men. But beeing abandoned by his Subiects and Friends: became a notable example, not onely of humane imbecility, but also of the wofull end, of such as trust to wicked Pollicies, as I haue declared before vpon other occasions.

Hereupon it followeth, that no Princes power or pollicy, can sufficientlie warrant and assure his estate, against the vniuersal hatred of men; specially, considering the little security, that wicked Princes (when they grow to be hated) haue of their owne Guards or Armies. For, though they are the special means of their defence; yet they serue (many times) for another end, then to butcher and slaughter them: As hath formerlie been auouched, by the examples of (a) Caligula, (b) Caracalla, (c) Heliogabalus, (d) Phillip, (e) Galien, Macrinus, (f) Aurelianus, (g) Maximinus, and others, slaine partly by their Guards, and partlie by their Souldiours, notwithstanding, the great liberality, which many of these Emperours vsed, to buy their affections and fidelity. As it may be well obserued (to omit diuers other) in Maximinus, of whom Iulius Capitolinus saith. Ea astutia fuit, vt milites non solum virtute regeret, sed etiam premijs et lucris sui amanti ssimos redderet. He was so crafty, that hee did not onely gouerne his Souldiours by vertue, but also wan their affections by gifts and rewards. And yet neuerthelesse, they conspired diuers times against him, and at length, when he was denounced public enemy by the Senate, and somewhat distressed in his march towardes Rome for lacke of victuals: they slew him and his Sonne in their Tents, and sent their heads to Rome.

And heerein I wish two things to be noted. The one, the fruit of cruelty; for this Maximinus beeing made Emperour tyrannically by his Souldiours, against the wil of the Senate: followed the principles which Machiauis teacheth his Prince, perswading himselfe, as Iulius Capitolinus testifieth: Nisi crudelitate impertum non teneri: That he could not holde the Empire but by cruelty. Wherewith he so exceeded, that some called him Cyclops; some Busris; some Scyron; some Typhon; and

The fruit and benefit of Machiaullian pollicie.

Examples out of our English Histories.

Polidor Virgil. Lib. 7.

Idem. Lib. Idem. Lib. Idem. Lib.

Sir Thomas Moore in King Richard the thirds life.

Richard the third, not inferior to the famous Tyrants of former times.

Example of Machiauis owne Prince Cesar Borgia.

Guicciard. lib. 6.

The little security that wicked Princes haue of their Guards or Armies.

^a Suetonius.
^b Spartianus.
^c Lampridius.
^d Trebellius Pollio.
^e Flavius Vopiscus.
^f Iulius Capitolinus.

Iulius Capitolinus in Maxi.

Two things to be considered. The fruit of Cruelty.

Idem. Ibidem.

and some Phalaris. And therefore (in the end) he receiued the iust reward thereof at the handes of his owne Soldiers, to whom, notwithstanding his great Donatiues, he became no lesse odious then to other men.

The other thing which I wish to be obserued, is the great infelicite of such Princes as seeke rather to be feared, then to be beloued. For, though they are forced for their owne safety to become slaues to those, by whom they keepe others in slavery, yet they are not secure thereby, but still in danger, not onely of others, but also of them that should defend them. Whose mercenarie mindes are so inconstant, and subiect to corruption, that the liues of the princes whom they guard, are euer salable, and therefore neuer warrantable, by any humaine pollicy. For let the Prince giue them neuer so much, to binde them to his Seruice, yet he that shall giue, yea, or promise more, may win them from him. As it hath falne out many times to the Romaine Emperors, who haue bin sold by their Guards and Soldiers not for readie money, but for the promise of greater summes, then could be expected at their hands. As Plutarch noteth in the Guards & Soldiers of Nero, corrupted by Nymphidius in fauour of Galba, vpon promise of a greater Donatiue, then could afterward be performed. Which, sayth hee, caused the destruction both of Nero and Galba: for the Soldiers forsooke Nero, in hope of the payment promised, and then killed Galba because he could not pay it. So tickle is the trust that Princes repose in Mercenary men; and so vnshure the state that is to be vpholden by such incertaine and weak props, which many times faile, when there is the most neede of them.

Furthermore, another especiall and ineuitable danger is to be noted, which any Prince (generally hated) must needs incurre, to wit; the defection of his subiects, in all occasions of inuasions from forraigne Countreies. For, although he be neuer so strong at home, in Gards, Garrisons, and Fortresses, and his Subiects also so poore and weake, that they neither dare nor can rise against him: yet if forreigne Princes doe inuade him, eyther vpon a quarrell of state (which among Princes that are Neighbours neuer wanteth) or vpon Ambition to enlarge their Dominions; what remedie hath he against the generall hatred of his people, who haue then sufficient opportunity and meanes, to bee reuenged on him, and to free them-selues from the yoake of his turranny, by taking part with the forreigner, the experience whereof hath bene scene often times.

10 Wee reade in Iustine, that the Subiects of Demetrius, King of Syria, abandoned him for the hatred which they bare him, and tooke part with a knowne Counterfeit, calling himselfe Alexander, pretending and naming himselfe to be of the royall race, as Perkin Warbeck did in England. This Alexander they accepted for their King, being so incensed against Demetrius: That they were content
20 (saith Iustine) to admit any whosoener, to be rid of him. Also the last Kings of Naples, no lesse rich and potent, then wickedly pollitique, being most hatefull to their Subiects for their Tirrannicall gouernment: were forsaken of them all; & betrayed to the French, to whom they yeilded them-selues without any resistance.

30 Also Lodouico Sforza, Duke of Milaine, may serue for a notable example of this matter. For when Lewes the 12. King of France, made warre against him, and had already taken diuers principall Townes and Fortes in the state of Milayne: Duke Lodowick (knowing himselfe to be very odious to his Subiects, for his great exactions and impositions, and fearing least they would abandon him) assembled the people of Milayne, to recover their good willes, and not only remitted diuers taxes which he had imposed vpon them; but also gaue them many reasons and excuses for his former proceedings. Neuerthelesse, such was the hatred which they had conceiued against him, that within a few daies after, they tooke Armes, slew Antonio Landriano his Treasurer, forced him to fly, called in the French, and yeilded the town and them-selues to their obedience. Haue we not scene also the like effect of hatred in England, in the time of K. Iohn, whom the Barons and Nobility of the Realme, called in Lewes the eight, King of France while he was Dolphin, and proclaymed him King? Choosing rather to liue vnder the Naturall King. Who, as Mathew
50 of

No remedy against the peoples generall hatred.

Iustin. in li. 20 Demetrius king of Syria.

Guicciard. in Lib. 6. Pbi. sp. Comm. in Carlo 8. Alphonso and Ferdinand Kings of Naples.

Lodouico Sforza, Duke of Milayne Guicciard. in lib. 4.

Polidor Virgil. in Io. 17. King Iohn of England.

Math. Westmin. 19 Anno. 12. 16.

The infelicity of such Princes as seeke rather to be feared, then to be beloued.

Romaine Emperors sold by their Guards and Soldiers.

Plutarch. in Galba.

Nero forsaken and Galba slaine.

An ineuitable danger which a Prince generally hated must needs incurre.

of Westminster writeth, Exosum se prae- buit, &c. Made himselfe hateful to them, as wel for the murder of his Nephewe Arthur, as for his adulteries, tyranny and exactions, the continual seruitude wherein he kept England, and lastly, for the war which his deserts procured. In respect whereof, Vix alicuius meruit lamentatione deplorari:
He deserued not to be lamented scarcely of any man. Thus saith he, I forbear to alledge many other notable histories vnto the same purpose, because I do holde it needlesse in a matter so euident.

Machiauell seeking to ex-pell and reme-die one poyson with another, poysoneth his Prince double.

What then shall we say of Machiauel's pestilent Precepts, for the preseruation of a Prince already infected and poyso-ned with wickednesse? Can wee saie ought else, but that while he seeketh by one poison to expel or remedy another, hee poysoneth him double, and killeth him out-right? For, a wicked Prince, adding (as Machiauel aduise) wickednesse to wickednesse, and cruelty to cruelty, doth accumulate vpon himselfe, hatred vpon hatred, which, as I haue declared, will breake out sooner or later to his ouerthrow.

The danger which Tirants incurre by the ordinary errors proceeding of humaine im-becility.

Neither can the Machiwillian help his Maisters cause, by saying, that such wicked Princes as haue perished by the hatred of men, haue committed som error or other, which they shoulde or might haue foreseene and auoided. For, the imbecility of mans wit and power is such that no man liuing, is able to foresee and preuent all the daungers and accidents, which may occurre in the affairs of men,
 to the ouerthrow of their designments.
 As hath bin already prooued by the examples of the absurd errors, as well of the wisest Senates and Councelles, as of most pollicicke men. Whereupon, it followeth, that the Prince which expo-seth himselfe vnto the generall hatred of all men, incurreth many notable dangers.

Examples of Townes of warre & Fortresses wanting enemies.

For, euen as Townes of Warre, or Fortresses which haue no enemy neere, do, or may commit many errors (in matters appertaining to their defence) without danger; but being besieged by their enemies, are sometimes surprized, by occasion of their least ouer-sight or negligence. Euen so, it fareth with Princes, who so long as they are generally beloued, are little or nothing preiudiced by many errors which fall out in their Go-uernment, but beeing once (as I may tearme it) besieged with the hatred of their Subiects and Neighbours, they are ruined sometimes with the least error, which they or their Magistrats do commit.

Euery little errour of a Prince generally hated, is very dangerous.

For, the hatred of men when it is generall, may bee compared to a swelling Sea, which enuironing a Ship on euery side, dooth otherwhiles ouerwhelme it with the impetuosity of Waues, and sometimes againe entereth in at euerie leake or rift, and so sinketh it. In like manner, the general hatred of men, doth not only ouerthrow a Princes state, by potent and powerfull attempts: but also by taking aduantage of euery little error or accident, which may helpe to ruine it.

And therefore, forasmuch as the weaknesse of mans witte, and the varietie of times and occasions, do produce alwaies some dangerous accidents in the States of Princes, either by their errors or otherwise: whereupon their industrious & watchful enemies (especialy at home) may take aduantage: it followeth, that no Prince generally hated, can liue long in securitie, bee he neuer so Dilligent, vigilant, or suspicious of all Men, as Machiauel would wish to haue his prince to be.

No Prince generally hated, can liue long in security.

Who could vse greater vigilancie or diligence for his owne conseruation; or be more suspitious, then Alexander the Tyrant of Pheres? Who though he loued his Wife Thebes verie deerly, yet neuer came he to her chamber, but he caused both her Coffers and her selfe to be searched, to see whither she had any weapon hid in her Garments. And yet ne-uerthelesse, hee was killed by her, in the end.

Cicero in 2. lib.
de Offic.

No vigilancy sufficeth against the hatred of all men ingene-rall.

Could any man bee more prouident for his safety, then was Claudius the Emperor? He would neuer goe to any ban-ket, but where his owne Guardes and Souldiers seued the Table; and neuer visited any sicke man, whose Chamber was not searched before by some of his Guards, euen to the verie beds and bedstraw, and yet he was poysoned at last by his owne Taster, whom he neuer suspected. What should we say of Domitian the Emperor? Hee was so fearefull and suspitious of all men, that hee made the walles of his Galleries where he used to walke,

Suetonius in Claudio.

Idem in Domiti-tiano.

The Stone
Phengius.

Most prou-dent and politique Tyrants, ouer-throwne some times by th^e whom they most feared, and sometimes by their owne polli-
cies.

Another danger proceeding of humaine institution.

Example of Iulius Cesar.
Plutarch in Iulio Cesar.

Idem. in Peiopi-da.
Archias a Tyrant of Thebes.

Phillip. Comin.
in Lodouico. 11.
cap. 83. & 91.
Charles the last Duke of Bourgundy.

walke, to be set full of bright and cleare Stone, cald Phengites, wherin he might see whatsoeuer was done behinde him:
and neuerthelesse, he was murdered by his owne Chamberlins.

Many such other examples might be alleged of Princes, who besides their great Guards and Armies, for defence of their persons, vsed al human diligence also, being iealous and suspitious of all men: and yet neuerthelesse, were ouerreached, sometimes by those whom they most feared; and sometimes by those whom they least suspected, or best trusted. Whereto I adde (as I haue elsewhere noted, and cannot repeat too often) that sometimes the most prouident and pollicicke Princes, are (through the imbelicity of humane wit) ouerthrowne by their owne policies, that is to say, by the verie same meanes wherby they seek either to benefit themselues, or to hurt and destroy others, as hath sufficientlie appeared by many feuerall famous examples.

But what security can a wicked prince haue by Guards, or other humane pro-uidence and diligence, seeing sometimes, that the wisest and best guarded, being aduertised of some imminent daunger, ey-ther haue not the hope to vnderstand it, or the wit to beleue it? So it happened to Iulius Cesar, who, as he was going to the Senat, receiued a memorial, wherein the Conspiratours against him were discouered, and beeing willed to read it presently, because it imported him greatly: was so troubled with the presse and importunity of suiters, that he could not attend vnto it, and so was slain the same day in the Senate house. Archias also, a Tyrant in Thebes, being inuited vnto a Supper, where his death was conspired, receiued a Letter from a Friende of his, containing an aduise of the Conspiracy.
And beeing requested (by him that brought it) to read it out of hande, for that it concerned matters of great importance: made aunswere, that it vvas then no time to negotiate, and so laying it aside, was slain within two houres after.

In like manner, Charles the last Duke of Bourgundie, who, as I haue declared before, was slain at Nancy, by the treason of Campobachio an Italian: was aduertised and fore-warned thereof, by Lewes the eleauenth, King of France. Neuerthelesse, perswading himselfe, that his ad-uertisement proceeded either of malice to Campobachia, or out of a desire to depriue him of his most necessary and trustie seruant, he would not beleue it, but loued him the better for it. Beside, one that was priuy to the conspiracy, being condemned to die for another matter, and determining to reueale it vnto the Duke, thereby to obtaine his pardon, made suite vnto him to speake with him, promising to aduertise him of som thin-ges, which it imported him greatlie to know, but the Duke would not bee in-treated so much as to heare him, for the man was executed, and the Duke slaine within a few daies after.

Now then, I would gladlie knowe of Machiauel and his followers, what security they can promise their Prince in wickednesse, seeing it is euident by the reasons and examples alledged, that the extreame hatred, which extreame wickednesse draweth vpon them, doth (notwithstanding all their power and policy) worke their ouerthrow by so many mea-nes as hath beene declared? As by open Rebellions, or the generall insurrection of a whole people, by enterprise of a few by the attempt of some one man; by the disloyalty and treachery of a false wife, faigned Friends, fauourites, Soldiers, & Guards, by the defection of Subiects. in faueur of some enemy forraigne or Do-mesticall; by the negligence of Officers and Ministers, by the casualty of all humaine affayres and designments; & lastly, by the errors whereto all human wit and policy is subiect, which to Princes (that be generally beloued) are nothing so dangerous. By all which meanes, the strongest, mightiest, and most politique Tyrants haue bin ouerthrowne at one time or another.

So that the absurditie of Machlauel is most manifest, in true reason of state, seeing that, in counselling Princes to wickednesse and tyranny, vpon confidence of humaine force and policy, hee exposeth them to an assured danger, and doth not giue them any certaine or probable remedy, but rather heapeth danger vpon danger, by encrease of cruelty, and of all Tyranical impiety. Insomuch, that it may be saide to Machiauels Prince, as Diogenes saide to a Disciple of his, whom he

When an euill is destined, there can be no preuention.

How many wayes a wicked Prince is endangered, without any meanes of auoyding the perill.

Machiauel ex-poseth his Prince to an assured danger, & giueth him not so much as a probable remedie.

Plutarch in his Treatise,
How to know whether a man haue profit in vertue.

he had forbidden the Tauerne. For, seeing him one day running from the Tauerne doore, where he stood into the Tauerne to hide himselfe from him, he called vnto him, saying, Com back thou foole, for the further thou goest forward, the more thou art in the Tauerne.

The further a Prince proceedeth in Machiauels pollicies, the more he endangereth himselfe.

And so may we say to Machiauels Prince, that the further he proceedeth in his dangerous course of wicked pollicy, the more he endangereth himselfe. And (as the Poet saith) Incidit in Scillam, cupiens vitare Charibdim, that is to say; Seeking to auoyde Scilla, he falleth into Charibds; or as our English Prouerbe saith, Hee leapeeth out of the Frying pan, into the fire.

The torment of conscience which tyrants doe endure.

But put the case, that a Machiullian or wicked Prince, could (by Machiauels Pollicy) assure his estate from all forren and domesticall dangers, yet hee should infallibly pay such a grieuous penalty of his wickednes thereby. For, such excesse of impiety, as Machiauel requireth in his Prince, as euer accompanied, not onely with hatred of men and infamy, but also with griefe and anguill of mind, infinit suspitions and feares, weary dayes, restlesse Nights, dreadfull dreames, besides continuall torment and horror of Conscience, yea, and many times with distraction, madnesse, and despaire.

Cicero in Tusculan. Quest. 1. Dionysius the elder, a Tyrant of Sicily, suspitious of his owne Daughters.

The elder Dionysius, a Tyrant of Sicily, though hee raigned 38. yeares, in great wealth and magnificence, yet liued in such continuall feare, ielousie, and suspicion of al men, that he durst neuer trust any Barber to trim him. Hee taught his own daughters to shauie while they were yong, and when they came to be of any yeares, hee would not suffer them to vse the Razor, but made them burne away the haire of his head with wal-nut shels made red hot. And hauing two Wives, hee alwayes caused them to be searched, before he would come to them: & when he had any thing to treat with the people, he spake vnto them from the top of an high Tower. And howe miserable also his whole life and state was, he himselfe declared sufficiently, when Damocles (one of his Flatterers) admyring his great wealth, dominion, Magnificence, and Maiestie, sayde; That hee thought no man liuing, more happy then he. Whereupon Dionysius asked him, whether hee would trie how happie hee was, and take a taste of his felicity? And when Damo-

Idem. Ibidem.

How Dionysius repented to Damocles the miserable life of a Tyrant.

cles was contented therewith, he caused him to bee set vpon a sumptuous bedde, (as the vse was then) richly couered, and Cupbords of Plate to be furnished with Siluer and Golden Vesselles, Tables replenished with al kinde of delicat meats, and most beautifull Boyes attending thereon.

10

Besides, there was no want of precious ointments and sweete perfumes, excellent Musicke, and whatsoeuer else might delight the senses, insomuch, that Damocles thought himselfe to bee a most happie man. But at length, casting vp his eyes, hee was aware of a bright and sharpe sword, hanging ouer his head by an haire, with the point downward (for so had Dionysius ordained) which when he saw, hee had no more pleasure in beholding his faire Boyes, or his rich furniture, or to eate of his dainties, or to heare his Musicke, but desired the tyrant to giue him leaue to be gone, for that he would no longer be happy. Thus did Dionysius well expresse the infelicity and misery of wicked tyrants, how pompous, potent, or magnificent soeuer they may seeme to be.

20

30

I omit to speake of the Emperors Nero, Claudius, and Domitian, and of Alphonsus King of Naples, of whom I haue sufficiently spoken before: and will only touch the wretched estate of King Richard the third, after hee had murdered his Nephewes, as Sir Thomas More, described it in the Story of his life, euen in these words.

Sir Thomas Moore in the Story of King Richard the third.

40

I haue heard (saith hee) *by credible report of such as were secret with his Chamberer, that after this abhominable deede done, he neuer had quiet in his minde, nor euer thought himselfe sure. When he went abroad, his eyes whirled about, his bodye was priuily fenced, his hand euer on his dagger, his countenance and manner, like one alwayes readie to strike. He tooke no rest a nightes, but lay long wvaking and musing (sore wearied with watch and care) rather slumbred then slept, troubled with fearful dreames: suddenly sometimes started up, leapt out of his bedde, and ranne about the Chamber. So much was his restlesse heart tossed and tumbled with the tedious impression, and stormie remembrance of his abhominable deeds. Thus saith *Sir Thomas More.

The tormented Conscience of King Richard the third, after he had murdered his Nephewes.

50

Where-

Plutarch that wickednesse sufficeth to make a man miserable. Ibidem.

An obiection made in favour of Machiavilians.

Cicero in Tuscul. Quest. Lib. 5.

Plutarch in Solon.

Tyranny like to a Labyrinth which hath no Issue.

Whereby wee may see, that Plutarch had great reason to say, that wickednesse is of it selfe sufficient to make a man miserable. And that Wicked men, the longer they live, the more miserab'le they are. And that The dolesal and Tragicall endes which most Tyrants haue, cannot be so properly counted the temporall punnishments due to their wickednesse in this life; as the consummation and end thereof. I conclude that although there were no other punishment Diuine nor humane, to bee feared for wickednesse, nor anie danger to follow thereof to a Princes state, neither any Hell or Heauen after this life; yet this continuall torment and anguish of mind, this hell and horror of Conscience, might suffice to make all Princes detest and abhor the abominable precepts of Machiauel, who wold perswade Princes to conserue their states by wickednesse.

But perhaps our Machiavilians wil heere say (in defence of their Maisters doctrin) that although it should nor bee amis for those, who come iustly and lawfully to Soueraignty (as by succession or election) to procure the loue and good wil of all men, by their vertuous and iust Government: yet a Prince, who commeth to his State by intrusion and Iniustice, as by Murders and Mischiefes, to the preiudice of the right Heires or Owners thereof, cannot hope to conserue and maintain himselfe therein, by vertue and Iustice, or by the peoples loue, whose hatred hee hath already incurred, but by force and feare, and by continuall wickednesse and in tyranny. Which indeed, Cicero may seeme to haue insinuated by Dionysius the tyrant of Sicily, of whom he saith, that Saluus esse non posset, si sanus esse cepisset, Hee could not haue bin safe, if he had begun to be sound. That is to say, he could not haue bin secure, if he had become iust and vertuous. The which also, wise Solon the Athenian, may seeme to haue signified of all Tyrants: for, when he was moued by his friendes, to make himselfe Tyrant of Athens, with intention to gouerne wel and iustly afterwards: he refused it, saying, Tyranny is like to a Labyrinth, which hath no Issue. Meaning (as it may seeme) that a tyraunt cannot with his security, retorne from wickednesse to yertue: but that he must proceed and go on in impiety and tirany, hauing as it were, a Wolfe by the eares, whom if he let go, he sets vpon himselfe. Thus say the Machiavilians, or at least may say, for I am content to plead their cause for them.

For the satisfaction heereof, it is to be considered, that Cicero and Solon spake thus, not because that the way and passage from Vice to Vertue, is not open as well for Tyrants, as for other Men: but to signifie the malignity of their impious Natures, and theyr miserable estate.

For, Tyrants are (commonly) of so vile, maligne, and Beastlie Nature, that it is seldom seen, that any of them come to embrace Vertue: in which respect, Cicero thought Tyrants to bee most miserable. Beside, Solon beeing most wise and prudent, was not ignorant, that Honors (as the Prouerbe sayeth) chaungeth manners. And therefore, he greatly feared, that if he should once giue waie to ambition, and violate Iustice by oppression of the Commonwealth, hee should hardly repaire the wracke of his owne Conscience afterward.

For, whosoever shall loose (as I may teame it) the Anker of integrity, and suffer himselfe to be so farre carryed away with the winde of ambition, that he runne the Shippe of Conscience, against the Rockes of tyranny: let him not maruaile, if he make an irreparable shipwracke of all Iustice and Vertue. Neuerthelesse, if a Prince that hath got a Crowne or State vniustly, doe hold such a vertuous course, that he conuert his tyranny into a regall and iust government: it is euident (both by reason and experience) though he hold not his ill gotten State lawfully, yet hee shall possesse it with farre lesse daunger, and much more security.

And this is conforme, not onely to the opinion and doctrine of Aristotle, as I haue declared before in this Chapter: but also of Plato, who counselled the two Tyrants of Sicilie (the Father and the Sonne, each called by the name of Dionysius) to change their tyrannicall course, into a iust manner of gouernment, assuring them, that they could not otherwise long conserue and assure their Estates. The truth whereof appeared sufficiently, as well by the miserable life of the father, so lately spoken of before,

The maligne nature and miserable estate of Tyrants, signified by Cicero and Solon.

Honor chaungeth manners.

A Tyrant ouerring his tyranny to a royall and iust government, shall be much more secured thereby, then by continuance of Tyranny.

Plutarch in Dion Plato his counsell to the two Tyrants of Sicily, Father and Sonne.

Plutarch in Dion.

before, as also by the ignominious banishment, and vnfortunate end of the Sonne, whom Dion (with verie smal forces) cast out of his Kingdome, by reason that he was hated and forsaken of all his Subiects. Whereas diuers other tyrants, as well of Sicilie as other countries, changing their course of Tyrannie, to a iust and Vertuous Gouvernement, liued and raigned no lesse gloriously, then securely.

Anaxilauus.
Iustine, in lib. 4.
Examples of Tyrants that assured their estates by Iustice and vertue.

Such a one, was Anaxilauus a Tyrant of Sicily, of whom Iustine Writeth thus. Ex Tyrannorum numero Anaxilauus, &c. Anaxilauus, who was one of the Tyrantes, did strue to surpassse the crueltie and impietie of others, with his Iustice and Vertue, which wrought a wonderful effect. For, when he died, and left his Children (verie young) in the tuition of Nicithus a slave of his, whom he dearly loued for his Fidelitie: such was the loue that al his Subiects beare vnto the memory of him, that they chose rather to obey his S'auie, then to forsake his Children and all his Nobility, forgetting their dignity, and the maiesty of their Kingdome, did offer themselves to bee governed by a Slave. Thus saith Iustine.

Plutarch de seranum. vindict.
Hierom.
Gelon. Pisistratus.

Plutarke also testifieth, that Hieron & Gelon, Tyrants of Sicily, and Pisistratus the Sonne of Hippocrates, hauing most wickedly possesed themselves of theyr estates, did neuerthelessse, gouerne afterward with such Moderation, Iustice, and Equity, that they became very popular Princes. As also, that Lisades the tyrant, restored vnto his subiects their old Lawes and priuiledges: and afterwards, dyed gloriously in the field, in defence of his Countrey.

Dion in Augusto
Examples of Augustus Cesar

In like manner, Augustus Cesar, after he had suppress his Commonwealth by force of Armes, and vsed such crueltie for many yeares together) that hee was hated of all men, insomuch, that hee could neither eate, drinke, nor sleepe in quiet, for feare of Conspiracies: chaunged his course by the Councell of his Friends, and gaue himselfe wholly to the exercise of Vertue, Pietie, and Iustice, whereby he was (at length) exceedingly beloued of al his Subiects, and esteemed to be Pater Patrie. The Father of his countrey, and passed the rest of his life in no lesse securitie, then honor and felicitie. Whereas verie manie of his successors, trusting partly to the strength of theyr

Pater Patrie,
The Father of his Country.

Guards, Garrisons, and Armies, and partly to their policies, lost their honor, empire, and liues, by the continuance of their cruelty and wickednesse. Wherby it appeareth, that it is better (according to the Latine Prouerbe) To bee late wise, then neuer; and that it is not onely easie, but also most secure, for a tyrannicall Prince, to passe from cruelty to clemency, from vice to vertue, and from tyranny, to Iustice and Piety.

10

But doe you (saith the Machiwillian) count it Wisedome for a Prince, so to confide in Iustice and Vertue, that he may trust those, whom he hath once iniured? Or, that he may thinke himselfe secure from them, so long as they liue? The Italian Prouerbe saith, Chi offende non perdona mai. He which offendeth, that is to say, hee which deserueth thine iniury, neuer pardoneth, and much lesse, hee which reciueth it.

20

Heere to I answer: That I graunt to the Machiwillian, that his Tyrant shall neuer repose so great confidence in anie reconciled enemy, that hee shall put his life or state into his handes: for I haue formerly prooued, that the Wisdom of the Serpent, is to bee conioyned with the simplicity of the Doue, in pardoning, yea, and louing our enemies: and yet in being warie and circumspect, how we trust them. But that which I require of a Tyrant for his securitie, is, that he cease to heape Coales vpon his owne heade, by continuance and encrease of In-iustice, Cruelty, and Tyrannie: and that he labor (by all conuenient meanes) to pacify the exasperated minds of those whome hee offended, not only with words, but also with deeds; recompensing iniuries with benefits, and disgraces with fauors; Cruelty and seuerity, with clemency, benignitie, and affabilitie; doing Iustice to all men, and shewing himselfe to haue a particular care of the Commonwealth. To preferre the publicke good, before his owne priuate pleasure or commodity, to be the Patron and Protector of Vertue, the punisher of Vice, a refuge vnto the poore afflicted; and finally, a Father to all.

40

50

Heereby he shall purchase to himselfe the generall and vniuersall loue of al, and either extinguish the hatred of those whom he hath offended and wronged: or at least, so temper and mitigate the same,

Better late wise, then neuer.

Another
Objection of the Machiwillians

The Answer to the obiection.

The wisdom of the Serpent, and the Doues simplicity ioyned together.

How a Tyrant may make himselfe generally beloued, and all his former Cruelties to be vtterly forgotten.

Generall and vniuersall
loue.

same, that it shall be much lesse dangerous vnto him, when all men generallie honor and loue him.

Moreouer, I allow not only to a reformed Tyrant, but also to the most lawfull and best Prince liuing, all lawfull meanes of defence; as strong Guards, Garisons, Armies, Fortresses, the vigilance of Councillors and Magistrates, the dilligence of Spies, and all other lawfull policies. All which concurring with the vertuous & iust government of a prince, and beeing fortified with the general loue of his people, which Vertue and iustice only engendereth, shall yeelde him the greatest assurance and security, that can be had, by any humaine means whatsoever.

But perhaps the Machiullians will yet reply, and say: That (for all this) I make not the reformed Tyrant, no, nor anie other lawfull Prince secure. For, although he shall neuer be so well beloued generally: yet (as I haue already proued) some one man offended, may (notwithstanding all his force and lawfull Policies) be reuenged on his person. And therefore, the only remedy for the Prince (say they) in that case, should be to cut off by some meanes or other) all such as hee may thinke likely to seeke reuenge, or to be any way daungerous vnto his State. For, as Theodosius sayde vnto Ptolomey King of Egypt, when as hee councelled him for to murder Pompey, Mortui non mordent; Dead Men bite not. So say they.

But what neede the dead to bite him, when not onely his owne Conscience shall bite and sting him: but also, there shall be men enow left aliue, to seek the reuenge; as their Children, if they haue any; or their Kinsfolkes, Seruants, or Friends. As for example, Frotho King of Denmarke, first of that name, caused his owne Brother to be murdered, and afterward killed the mur herer, least hee might reueale it; all which notwithstanding, he was smothered with smoake by his Brothers Children.

Valentinian the third Emperor of that name, hauing vngratefully killed the famous Captaine Aetius with his owne hand, was slaine by two Soldiers of Aetius, in reuenge thereof. Also Amurathes, Emperour of the Turkes, the first of that Name, was slaine with a dagger by a seruant of Lascarus, the Despot or Lord of Seruaia, for reuenge of his Lord and Maisters death: notwithstanding, this Amurathes was one of the most crafty and vigilant Princes, that the Turkes euer had, according as Paulus Iouius reported.

10 But amongst all those, who haue sought to assure their estate by murders none euer exceeded Andronicus Comnenus, Emperour of Constantinople, who as I haue declared before) vsed to condemn and extirpate whole families, for the suspicion which hee had (diuers times) of some one man, thereby to free himselfe from all feare of reuenge. Which (neuertheless) was reuenged on him: most notoriously, not onely by the friends and well-willers of the dead, but also by all the people, such being the horror of Injustice and cruelty, that it doth not only offend those which are iniuried; but also all other men.

20 And therefore it hath been often seen, that Subiectes haue attempted against the state or person of a Prince, for the hatred of some murder, or off me one cruell acte. Iustine Writeth, that when Seleucus, King of Syria, beganne his Goernment with the murder of Berenice his Steppe-Mother, and of her Sonne his owne Brother: all the Citties which were subiect to him in Asia, Exemplo crudelitatis territa, Being frightea with this example of crueltie, suddenic renoulted from him, and yeilded themselues to the subiection and obedience of Ptolomey King of Egypt, Tantum illi odom (sayth Iustine) parricidiale scelus attulerat: So great was the hatred which his wicked and parricidial acte caused in his Subiectes towards him. So vn Timer and daungerous is the remedie of daungers by murder and crueltie, that the danger is manie times increased and redoubled thereby.

30 40 50 But now the Politicke may aske mee heere, whither I (who inculcate so oft the daunger of wicked policy) can assure a Princes state by vertue & iustice, in such sort, that the same shall not be subiect to any inconueniences? Wherto I answer, that though the naturall infirmitie and condition of mans state bee such, and so infinite the hazards whereto hee is subiect, & such also the malice of euil men, that no humaine force or policy can war-

Wherein the greatest security which can be had by humane meanes consisteth.

A Reply of the Machiullians, inferring the necessity of murders sometimes, for a Princes security.

Plutarch. in Pompeio.

A Machiullian Prouerbe and principle confuted.

Olaus. Mag. in Lib. 8. Cap. 26. Saxo Gram. in Lib. 7. Paul. Diacon. in Lib. 15. Cassiodor Chron. An. 454. & 455. Euagri. in Lib. 2. Cap. 7. Paulus Iouius in Amurathes.

Idem. Ibidem. Nicetas Comiat. in Andronico Comneno. lib. 2.

The horror of in Justice and Cruelty.

Iustine. in Lib. 37. Seleucus King of Syria forsaken of his Subiects for murder.

Iustine ubi supra.

Dangers not remedied but increased by Cruelty.

Whether any Princes state can be assured by Justice and morrall vertue.

All the security that a Prince can haue by humane means, is to be attained principally by vertue.

The least dangers and inconueniences are to be chosen by wise men.

The greatest security of Princes consisteth in the loue of their Subiects, which vertue procureth.

Machiauell might haue noted the miserable end of all Tyrants in all Histories.

rant the best Prince liuing, from all perilles incident to his person and state, yet the assurance and security, which any Prince may possibly haue of the one or other by humane meanes, is to be attained principally by Vertue and Iustice, & such policies as are grounded thereon, and not on Iniustice, impiety, and wicked policy. For whereas the iustest Prince may haue some one or a few enemies that may endaunger him, the wicked must needs haue many, and the more wicked and cruell he is, the more Enemies he shall haue; and (consequenrly) the greater shall be his danger. For, if a Prince cannot be secure from one enemy or a few, hee shall be much lesse secure from many, and least of al from the generall hatred of all men, which (infallibly) groweth of such excessiue cruelty and wickednesse, as Machiauel requireth in his Prince.

Therefore, forasmuch as it is the part of all Wisemen (especialy in matters of State) to choose the least of all daungers or inconueniences, which cannot be remedied, and to seeke to preuent and auoyd the worst, as is sufficiently declared in the rules for young Statists, it is euident, that as no thing is more dangerous to Princes and their States, then Iniustice and wickednesse; which maketh them odious to all men; so nothing is more to be eschewed and auoyded of them, then the same, and the contrarie meanes of Iustice and Vertue, to be embraced and practised.

For, thereby they may purchase the generall loue of their Subiects, wherein consisteth the greatest security of Princes, such being the force and effect of loue, that it causeth in the louers as great a care of the beloued, as of themselues. In which respect, Seneca saith: Vnum est inexpugnabile munimentum amor ciuium. The only inexpugnable fortresse of Princes, is the loue of their people.

And this is so manifest, that Machiauel himselfe acknowledgeth it sufficiently, teaching that excellent vertue may conferue a Princes State, though he absurdly attributes the like force and effect vnto wickednesse. Which truely may be wondered at, if we consider, that hee being well read in Histories as it may seem, could not but see (if he were not wilfully blind) that all such Tyrants as haue been noted to be excessiue in crueltye & wickednesse, haue perished miserablye one way or other, which hath bene obserued in all ages.

And therefore, Cicero speaking of the violent death of a Tyrant, saith: Haud fere quisquam eorum similem interitum effugit. There is scantly any Tyrant to be found, that escapeth the like Destruction. And thereupon, the Tragical Poet saith:

*Quota pars moritur tempore fati?
Quos felices Cinthia vidit?
Vidit miseris abitura dies,
Rarum est felix idemque senex.*

Seneca.

The sence whereof, is, That few of them liue out the course of Nature, and that it is a rare thing, to see any of them olde and happy. Whereof another Poet sayeth thus:

Few Tyrants liue out the course of nature.

Ad generum ceteris, sine cade & sanguine, pauci Descendant reges, & sicca morte tyranni.

That is to say, Few Tyrants dye their Natural death, or without blood. Which Machiauel might haue noted, if not in other Histories, yet at least in the life of Titus Linius, vpon the which, he made certaine discourses.

For, of seauen Kings of Rome, from Romulus, to Tarquinius Superbus, foure, who got their Estates, or (at the least) maintained and gouerned them most Tyrannically, were three of them murdered, and the fourth Tyrant banished, as I haue obserued heretofore in Romulus, Lucius Tarquinius, Seruius Tullius, and Tarquinius Superbus. Whereas, the other three, to wit; Numa Pompilius, Tullius Hostilius; and Ancus Martius, who were lawfully elected by the Senat, and gouerned iustly and vertuously, liued in securitie and safetie, and dyed beloued and lamented of all the people.

Tit. Linius. Dec. 1. Lib. 1.

Kings lawfully elected by the Senate, and gouerned iustly.

The like also, might bee verie well ob.

observed in the Romaine Emperors, after Julius Caesar, if it were needfull.

But that which seemeth to mee most strange in Machiavil, is, that hee coulde not see the experience thereof (at least) in Cesar Borgia, whom, as I haue often signified before, he proposeth to his prince for a mirror of tyrannicall policy. Notwithstanding that the successe thereof, was such in him, that all Princes may learne thereby to detest it, seeing he who was (in Machiavils opinion) most exact in the speculation and practise thereof, was vtterly overthrowne thereby, as well as all other Tyrants of former times.

Which cannot be attributed to chance, as the politick would haue it, but either to the iust iudgement of God vpon wicked men, which indeede is the principall cause thereof; or at least to the next and immediate cause, which (for the most part) is the hatred of men. And therefore, seeing the miserable end of Wicked Tyrants, not only hath notorious & known causes, but also is frequent and common that it hath alwaies bin held matter of common experience: it cannot be referd to chace or Fortune, which are vnderstood to be in such things only as are rare, and haue no knowne or ordinary cause. So that it may rather be counted casuall, or a matter of chance, if any notable tyrant do com to a good end: because the same hath bin sildome seene, and the cause thereof secret, or at least vncertaine.

Therefore I conclude, that Machiavil cannot bee excused, either of grosse ignorance, if he knew not that which common experience teacheth, to witte; that wicked Tyrants do commonly perish miserably: or of extreame malice if hee knew it, and yet laboured to enduce Princes to wickednesse and tyranny. The later whereof is now sufficiently acknowledged by some Florentines of no meane iudgement, his owne Countreymen and friends, who in their ordinary discourses concerning his policies, do not sticke to confesse, that he himselfe knew them to be contrary to true reason of State; and pernicious to Princes. And that neuerthelesse, desiring to overthrow those of the house of Medices, which opprest the Commonwealth in his time, he published his Pestilent Doctrine, hoping that they would embrace it, and ruine themselves by the practise thereof, wherby the state of Florence, might return to the old Democratie, or popular gouernement wherein it had continued manie yeares before. And this shall suffice, for the examination of Machiuillian policies, by only reason of State.

CHAP. XI.

Of Loue and Hatred, Amity and Enmity, which (by some secret propriety in Nature) is betweene many creatures.

Heraclitus the auncient Phylosopher, and manie more as well as he, were of opinion, that all things were caused by concorde and discord, and that thiorow peace and Enmity (which in all humaine thinges) ensueth the generation and corruption of them. Of which Philosophicall coniecture, I am not now minded to speake, as well in regard of the difficulty, as slender delight it will yeeld to the Reader. Neuerthelesse, wee will discourse of such amity and enmity, as is known and found to be among many things, albeit no man knoweth truely, from whence the cause thereof proceedeth, which to speake vprightly, is a matter very maruailous. As, for our first instance, the discord betweene the Dogge and the Cat, between Oile and Pitch, the Hart and the Adder, and such like, whereof we are instantly to discourse, that do naturally hate one another; and it is imagined, that this Enmity ensueth from the Elements. For the contrariety and discord which is among all thinges created, is manifest and euident: As we do discern, that Water is an enemy to Fire, because the Fire is hot and dry, and Water is cold and moist, so that these two Elements are wholly contrary. Water and Earth are friendes, in regard that they are both cold: and yet, there is a contrariety in them, because water is moyst, and Earth is dry. Betweene the Fire and the Earth, there is a conformity, in regard of the driness of them: and yet a difference too, by reason of the Fires heat, and Earths coldnes. In like Machiavell might haue noted the miserable end of Tyrants in Cesar Borgia. Guicciard. in Lib. 6.

The miserable end of Tyrants cannot be attributed to chance, and why.

The miserable end of Tyrants is very frequent, and hath a known cause, and therefore is not casuall.

It may be referred to chance, if any notable Tyrant come to a good end.

Machiavell's other grossely ignorant, or extreame malicious.

How Machiavell's friends excuse him at this day.

Machiavell's Doctrine acknowledged by his friends to be pernicious to Princes.

from the

from the

Concord and Discord the occasion of all things.

No man knoweth truely whence the cause of this variance ensueth.

The contrariety among all things created.

Of Water and Fire.

Of Water & Earth.

Of Fire and Earth.

All things are composed of the Elements.

Of the most gouernment of the Elemē-
tary qualities.

Another kind of Enmity not proceeding from the Elements.

* Like great Fenell, called Fenell Gyant, or hearbe Sagapene.

Hatred of men at their very first fight.

Loue of men at the first fight.

like manner, among the Elements there is contrariety: and yet neuerthelesse, in part of them there is some kindnesse and conformity. All things then being composed of these Elements, it followeth by necessity, that there should be such contradiction or conformity, as is amongst those Elements whereof they are compounded. Wherefore, that thing wherin the Elementary quality gouerneth most, receiueth name from the qualitie, and that we tearme hot or colde, moyst or drie, some in more high degree then others, according as the thing is most qualified, by one of those first and chiefest qualities. Thus we may obserue, how one thing is contrary to another, working diuers effects: which contradiction is very apparant, and thereby we com to render a reason thereof.

11. But that the other kinde of Enmitie, which procedes not from the elements, but by a hidden and secret proprietie, or from some superiour influence, doth wel require a further contemplation, and search into the cause whence it shoulde ensue. The Dogge and the Cat (as wee haue formerly said) do wish il vnto each other, and yet the reason is not knowne wherefore. There are other thinges likewise, which doe entirely loue one another; and yet this loue proceedeth not from the Elements whereof they are composed. Asses do desire, and well like of an Hearbe, called * Ferula; and yet it is venomous to al other horses or mares. Foxes are friends to Adders or Snakes, that are enemies to all other Beasts. This is a matter of no lesse consideration among men, then in brute beasts, in regard, that not knowing whence or how it should proceed, one man, at the verie sight of another, hauing neuer known or seene him before, is very enuious and disdainful towards him, and yet another man is very pleasing and acceptable vnto him, vpon the as like sudden sight. Sometimes also, so soone as he sees a man that he knowes not, hee will beare affection to him, and hold him in reuerend regard although he bee much neerer then himselfe: and another shall happen to bee despised by him, although he be som worthy personage or great Lorde. We see some others, that are born (as it seemeth) to giue enstruction. Beside, we may note in two men, that the one suffers himselfe to bee gouerned by the other: in which kind many times, the Maister is ruled by his seruant, euen as if hee were naturally subiect to him, and yet no reason rendered therefore. And the very like hapneth among Beasts and Birds also, euen in the same enmities and subiections, as wee may holde betweene the Eagle and the Swanne, the Crow and the Kite: for the Kite is many times so aduenturous, that shee daureth to snatch a prey out of the Crowes gripes. Like hatred is there betweene the Kite and the Chough, and the Eagle and the Goose: so that, if but the Feather of an Eagle bee mingled among them of the Goose, it quite consumeth them all. The Hart is a great persecuter of Adders or Snakes, for, by his strong breathing about the entraunce of the hole where they hide themselves, he draweth them forth by his breath onely, and presently eateth them. And to proue it true, that there is such deadlie hatred between them, the experiment hath bin made, by burning the Harts horne, the smoak whereof no Adder is able to endure. As great enmity also, there is between the Crow, Asses, & Bulls, because the Crowe smiteth at them continuallie with her beake, and endenoureth by all meanes to pecke out their eies. The Eagle, being the greatest of all Birdes, pursueth the small Coot, Moore, Henne, or Fen-Ducke: And the Coot or Moore-Hen is harmefull to the Larke, and spoileth her Egges.

The Fowle called Flora, counterfeteth the whinnowing of a Horse, whereby she feareth and astonisheth him, euen as he doth the like by her. The very greatest enemies to the Wolfe, are the Fox, the Ass, and the Bull. There is likewise continuall quarrell between the Vulture and the Eele. The Lyon dreadeth and flyeth from the Cocke, shunning Fire also, and the noise of a Cart or Wagon. The Panther holds the Hienna as his Enemy; and the Scorpion pursueth the Tarantula to death, which is tearmed by the Latines Phalanges: for whose byting (as one Author affirmeth) there is no remedy, but by Musick only. And so great is the hatred betweene these two Creatures, that whosoever is bitten by the Scorpion, must be healed by the Oyle, wherein the Tarantulaes are drowned. The Elephant beeing a mighty and powerful

The Maister gouerned by his seruant.

Deadly hatred between diuers Foules

The hatred of the Hart, to Adders & Snakes.

Of the Crow,
Asses & Bulls.

Greatnesse
enuieth smal-nesse.

A Bird that couerfeiteth the Horses
whinnoing.

The Cock
dreadfull to the Lyon.

Of the Hienna and Tarantula.

The feare of the Elephant.

werfull Beast, not only feareth and shunneth the Snake, but also shaketh at the sight of a Sheepe, yea, and trembleth at the very grunting of a Swine. Horses, Asses, and Mules, by no meanes can endure the Weezell: the Francoline and House-Cocke, are greatly envious of each other. There is a kind of Faulcone, which Aristotle termeth Tico, that maintaineth great war and debate against the Fox, pursuing and fighting with him at all times, wherefoever he meets or finds him. Elianus tels vs, that there is appealelesse hatred, betweene the Crow & another kind of Faulcon, which hee calleth Pelagra; and likewise between the Crow and the harmlesse Turtle, the Owle and the Storke, the Partridge and the Tortois. The Pelican persecuteth the Quaille about all other Fowles; and the Horse is more affraid of the Camell, then of any other Beast whatsoever.

Among Fishes also, there is the like Naturall enmity: for the Crenis or crab of the Sea, keepes no societie with the Poulpe or Preake, but they auoide each others sight: as the Dolphin dooth the Whale, and as the Conger is Naturall enemy to the Lamprey. The Poulpe or Preake, hath such domination ouer the Eeek, and the Eeek is in such feare of the Poulpe, that she dieth with the verie fight of him.

There is extreame warre between the Sea-Wolfe, and the Fish called * Mengilla, or Mugra. If the Snake doth see a man cloathed, or hauing his Garments on, he wisheth him deadly harme, and laboureth to offend him; but let him behold him naked, and then he shunneth him as swiftly as he can Rats and Snakes or Adders, are mortall enemies, especially when they hatch their Egges in winter, and come not abroad to bee scene; for then they persecute each other verie cruelly. And because (by instinct of Nature) they know each others malice, they make such prouision of foode in theyr Nestes, as may glut them with feeding, and so to get them gone, without anie more contending. The malice of Woolues towards Sheepe is so naturall, that if a Drum be made of a Woolues skinn, Sheepe will with like fearefulnesse, flye from the sound thereof, euen as if the Wolfe were liuing, and nere vnto the Flocke.

Nay more, some Authors doe maintaine, that if eyther Viall or Lute bee strung, with strings made of the guts of a Wolfe or Sheepe; it is impossible to accord them together, or to make anie anie pleasing hermonie with them. If the skinn of a Wolfe, bee hanged in a Stall or Stable, or in any such like place where Sheepe are to bee fedde: the very feare which they conceiue thereof, doth forthwith compell them to cease from feeding.

The Monkey fearefully shunneth the Tortoise: And Rattes (by some hidden qualitie) are so contrarie to Scorpions, that the byting of a Scorpion is soonest healed, if a Ratte be but layde vpon it. The Snake and Viper, do woonderfullie dread the Crab, who hath (Naturally) such power ouer those two other Creatures, that if a Swine should bee bitten by a Viper, hee helpeth himselfe by eating of a Crabbe: And that which is much more to be admired, when the Sunne is in the signe of Cancer, both these kinde of Serpents, doe suffer verie extreame anguish and paine. The Scorpion Fish, and the Crocodile, haue continuall warre together, each killing the other most maliciously.

The Panther so dreads the Ounce, that (as is auouched) he suffereth her to kill him, without vsing any defence for himselfe. And if the skin of the Panther bee hung nere to the skinn of the Ounce, that of the Panther wil wast and consume away. The Enmity betweene the Chough and the Daw is so thecullish that (as Aristotle reporteth) they rob & destroy each others Egges. The VVaspe is at fierce feud with the Spider, euen like as the Coote and Mallard are with Rats and Mice, killing and eating each others young ones. The Kite and the Foxe are hatefull enemies.

There is a kinde of Hawke, of small groweth (which Plinie nameth Fsalon) who is so enuiously malicious vnto the Crow, that hee neuer ceaseth search for their Nest, onely to breake her Egges in pieces. Swine are Naturallie hatefull to VVezels. The white wolfe and the Lyon are such fatall enemies, that being dead, their blood cannot be mingled together. Moles or W ants are so bent against Ants; that they shunne any tree where they haue any being.

Arist. in Lib. 7. de Anim. cap. 3.

Elianus in lib. 9

The Owle & Storke.

Deadly hatred among Fishes in the Sea.

* Called also by some Pour contrail, a Fish with many feete.

* A kinde of Mullet.

The Snake beholding a naked man.

Of Rats and Snakes.

Of woolues and Sheepe, and a Drum made of the woolfes Skin.

A strange secret in nature

Of the Scorpion and the Ratt.

Of the Scorpion Fish and the Crocodile

Of the Panther and Ounce.

Arist. in Lib. 7. de Anim. cap. 3.

Plin. in Lib. 8. Cap. 10.

Of the wolfe and Lyon.

Of the Moles and W ants

Plin. in Lib. 7. Cap. 14.

Of the Spider & the Adder.

Enmity among other things that lacke life.

A strange property in the Olive.

Of Salt water becoming sweete and fit to drinke.

Things that mutually loue each other. Arist. in Lib. 7. de Anim. cap 3.

Sparrowes that doe cleanse the Crocodiles teeth.

Talpa Marina, that serueth as a guide to the huge Whale.

The Spider is at sterne warre with the Adder, as Pliny saith, that shee compasseth his death in this manner. When the Spider perceiueth the Adder to sleepe vnder any Tree where she worketh, shee descendeth by the small twine of hir own making; and getting into his braine pan, ther biteth and stingeth him in such sort, that she neuer leaueth him, vntill she see him quite dead by her venom.

Among other inanimate thinges also, there is the like contradiction and enmity. For, Oyle is an enemy to Pitch; because, if Oyle be put into a Vessel which is pitched within, the pitch consumeth all the Oyle. Oyle is likewise enemy vnto water, as Lime is; but Lime and Oyle do ioyne together, and seemeth to loue each other naturally.

The Olive hath an admirable secret Vertue, against Carnall and luxurious desire; yea, and in such sort, as I finde it credibly written, that if an vnchast womans hand do plant it, it will receyue no roote, but withereth and dyeth. Coleworts cannot prosper, if they grow neere to the Hearb Maricrom of England. Salt water becommeth fresh and sweete, being mixed with Wheaten floure, so that within two houres after, a man may very well drinke thereof. I could alleadge so many examples, concerning natural hatred betweene things both animate and inanimate, as were able to tire a very patient Reader.

The like could I do of things that mutually loue together, as the Peacock and the Pigeon; the Turtle and the Popinay; the Blackbird and the Feldfare. Aristotle reporteth, that there is such kinde-nesse betweene certaine Birdes or Sparrowes, and the monstrous Crocodile, that the huge Beast wil open his mouth, to suffer these small Birdes to picke and cleanse his teeth with their billes, also to purge his gummes when they paine and offend him; and alledgeth withall, that these Birdes are onelic nourished thereby. It is said moreouer, that there is great amity betweene the Fox and the Crow, the Dawe and the Henne of India; the Larke, and another Bird called a Ioncke. The Fox is neuer harmed by the Snake, nor the Sheepe likewise. Pigeons and Turtles agree well together; and the Partridge with her louer the Ring-doue. The Fish (called in Latin Talpa Marina) is, beyond all other, affected most of the Whale: for, as Pliny affirmeth, it swimmeth alwayes before him, to giue him warning of whirlpits, and daungerous deepe places.

Thus you see the woonderfull workes of nature, disperfed and limitted by the prouidence of God, and partly occasioned by the influence of Starres and Planets. All which, we finde sufficientlie authorized and warranted by good Authors: as Pliny, Aristotle, Albertus Magnus, Elianus, and the Poet Marbodeus, in his Booke of Stones, beside manie other both ancient and Moderne, that haue written on the Nature of Beastes, and other things else.

Marbodeus in Lib. 2. de Lapid.

CHAP. XII.

By what meanes and occasions, the natures of Amity and Enmity, are said to proceede from the Celestiall Influences: and the reason, why one loueth or hateth another.

30

N the Chapter of secret and hidden occasions, we haue already proued that there are some Planets & stars, that do hold perticuler dominion ouer some things more then other, & do infuse perticuler proprieties, which are not caused by any quality of the elemets.

Some Starres and Planets of more pre-dominance then other.

40

And yet notwithstanding, we canot properly say, that the Planets, Starres, and Signes of heauen, haue any discorde or enmity among themselues. Neuertheles, ancient Philosophers and Astrologians, considering the contrary and diuers effects of the Influences, which the Stars and Planets do cause in things, by their irradiation and motion, haue attributed diuers qualities to them, and likewise great enmity betweene them.

The opinion of ancient Philosophers and Astrologers.

50

According to Guydo Bonatus, Schonerus, and many more beside, we finde, that Mars and Venus, are enemies to the Planet Saturne. Iupiter and Mercury are enemies also. The Sunne, Moone, and all the Planets, are Friends to Iupiter, Mars, onely excepted, who is enemy to them all, sauing Venus. Iupiter and Venus loue the Guydo Bonatus, Schonerus.

Of Amity and Enmity among the Planets.

the Sunne; and their opposites or contraries are Mars, Mercurie, and the Moone. Venus is affected of them all; except Saturne. Thus then there is such Amity and Enmity among them; as I must now cease to discourse on, onely for breuities sake.

Now seeing that matters stand thus, such things as are vnder the order and government of one Planet: must (by naturall inclination) be Friends or Enemies to those, which are obedient to another Planet, Signe, or Constellation, according to the conformity or diuersity, that is betweene the Starres ruling those things. And this enmity is likewise the greater, and of the more efficacy; when among the nature and qualities of the Planets (to whom they are subiect) there is the greater repugnancy. As contrariwise, the amity or loue will be much more liuely, when there is greatest conformity betweene the Planets.

This is to be vnderstood, as well to extend it self to men; as in dominion ouer brute beasts. Neuerthelesse, Men being of a free and liberall will, although they feele this repugnancy or inclination; yet they may (by grace) with-stand and resist it. But beasts, who are exempt and deprivied of this priuiledge: must needs be governed according to their natural inclination, and doe put the same in execution, so much as in them lyeth, euen as Hearbes and Plants doe the like.

Concerning mutuall affection among Men, the Astrologers doe maintaine, especially Ptolomy their Prince, that such Men as (at their birth) haue one and the selfe-same Signe, for Lord of the ascendent; will sympathize in an equall nature of loue and agreement; yea, and that very pleasingly: as also such as haue the Sunne and the Moone in one selfe-same Signe. Moreouer, they say, that in such as haue one and the same Signe for Governour at their natiuity: it infuseth and begetteth (naturallie) a like loue and conformity in nature. And albeit, that one Planet be not answerable to them both: yet it is sufficient, that the two Planets are friendes, and not enemies; or else, that they both do lenda fauourable and auspicious eye. This is easilie discerned, by erecting the Figures of both the Natiuities, and much helpe ensueth to this conformity: and if Fortunes be harbourous and friendly in the same Signe or House, and that the House or Signe of the Moones being in at the ones Natiuity, doe affoord a gracious aspect to the others birth. For as they do more or lesse consent and agree in these conditions: euen so (more or lesse) is the quality of naturall loue.

Hence it ensueth, that two Men being imployed about one businesse: a third man (being a By-stander) wil lend a very heedfull and affecting eye to the one, despising and condemning the other mans painfull endeuour, although he neuer iniured or any way offended him: Which might happen to two persons, that had their ascendent signes repugnant in their quality, and of contrary triplicitie, and the Planets (beeing Lordes of their Natiuity) enemies and contrarie one to another. As the Sun and Moon, being in opposition and diuers signes, and those of one birth, casting an euill aspect on another: for, by reason of these things, & others which we could speake of, ensueth the cause of one mans beholding another, with inward contentment or disliking. As appeareth very plainely, in seeing two Men playing at any game together: the stander by, not beeing any way obliged eyther to the one or other, nor (perhaps) knowing either of them; yet his minde is more affectionate to the one then the other, and he wisheth him better successe then the other.

As for the other Argument, of one mans feare and dread of another, suffering himselfe to be ouer-awed and governed by him, although hee be much inferiour to him; we see the case cleare by common experience. The reason of these accidents is rendred by Ptolomy, saying: That he which at his birth, shall haue an ascendent Signe, as (by way of example) the one in the East, and the other ouer the South: that man shall naturally haue a kind of subiection and reuerence done vnto him by the other. The like shall ensue to him, that (in his Natiuity) hath the Signe governing, and the other Mans obeying. But if two Men shall haue one and the same signe for Lord of the ascendent, or else one Planet governing Matters vnder one Planet are friends or enemies to them that be vnder another.

The like power is ouer men & beasts, but not in a like nature.

Of mutable loue and Amitie betweene man and man, according to the equality in their birth.

If one Planet be not alike to two mens births.

Example of two men dealing in one businesse.

The Sunne and Moone in opposition and contrary signes.

Example of affection and dislike.

One man standing in awe and feare of another.

A reason alleged by Ptolomy, Prince of Astrologie, for superiority in birth.

One Lord of the ascendent governing two mens births.

ning both: he that in the power and order of that Planet shall be Superior (as we haue already declared of Beastes). shall not naturally haue dominion ouer the other.

Now, when this aduantage happeneth in him, who is a Friend and Fauorer of another; the fauour and affection encreaseth so much in him, that the others gouernment is the more gladlie yeilded to him. If this happen in the case of a Seruant: doubtlesse, he will be loyall, faithfull, and very obedient. If betwecne two Friends, equall in birth, Goods, and Fortune, as it hath beene, and yet is oftentimes obserued: their affections are mutually found to bee perfect and intire, and the one willingly is gouerned (for the more part) by the other.

Examples of this accident happening in sundry degrees.

CHAP. XIII.

¶ Whence it ensueth, that a Way of like length, seemeth more short and euen or plaine, and is lesse offensive: then that which is long and euen, is yrkesom and distastfull. And why our turning in going, procureth falling.

Albeit, this Chapter seemeth not to bee of such importance as the precedent: yet the Argument is not to be despised, in regard that Aristotle thought it no disgrace to him, to determine the doubt. We doe oftentimes behold, that he which goeth by a Way that is short, as if you would say, halfe a Mile, eyther more or lesse, if the same Way be plaine and euen, without Hills and Dales: hee is nothing so soone weary or lagged then, as if it were crooked, vnenen, and rugged. But if the way be long, as of eight or ten miles, more or lesse, and smooth and euen: in very truth, it will be more wearisome to him, then if he had some Hilles and Vallies to passe. The reason is, that a Man becommeth weary, for two causes. The first, because trauaile is long and durable, though it appeare

Arist. in Lib. 3. de Anim. Cap. 9.

Of an euen or smooth way, & that which hath Hilles and Dales.

Two causes why a man is weary in his walking.

not very sharpe. The other, in regard it is sharp, though it lasteth but a little while.

Concerning the first point whereof we haue spoken, that the way which is short, hilly, and side-long, weareth a man more, then that which is plain and euen, though of the selfe-same length: we are to vnderstand, that this labour, although it be little, is more sharpe and tedious, then when a man walketh plainly. For it is a matter more repugnant to our nature, to goe as if it were climbing and iumping: then to walke on in an euen and smooth way.

Now, for the long and plain passage, that it wearieth more, then the other that hath some Hills or Dales: the reason ensueth of a long and semblable Way, in regard, that the members doe hold on in pacing, all after one manner, without any alteration or chaunging, which (ordinarily) yeildeth some repose and ease. So that, albeit mounting appeareth to be more painefull, then walking on a plaine and euen Way: yet it is so, that this mutation affoordeth ease and refreshing, because the Members doe thereby apprehend a nouell forme; and their motion is in another manner. As we may very well obserue in them that ride on Horse-backe, who (though it be much more painfull, then trauailing on foote) doe oftentimes descend or alight, and walke a while to ease theselues. In like case it fareth with a long and euen way, that the Members do then hold but an equal motion, and are in one order or kinde: without extendure or stretching, and retiring or with-drawing themselues, more at one time then another. And therefore, when the iourney continueth for a long time; it is the more offensive and wearisome. And although that mounting and descending, doe endure longer then the plaine trodden path: yet the plaine and euen waies among it, doth cause a mutation therewithall, whereby the members do receiue some ease and lightning of toyle. Whereof wee may make a good example, by a man that sitteth a long while together, and resteth himselfe without any walking: yet is hee glad (oftentimes) to stretch out his Members, to put them forth, and pull them in to him. These are the opinions of

10

20

30

40

50

Of the short, Hilly, and tedious way.

A repugnancy to our nature in trauailing.

Alteration in going affoordeth some ease.

Mounting not so painfull as euen walking.

Ryding more painefull then trauaile on foote.

Of mounting and descending.

Example of a mans long time of sitting, without walking. Alexand. A. phrod. in Probl.

Macrob. in Somn Scipionis. Lib 1. Plato. in Tim.

of Alexander Aphrodiseus, in his Problemes: and Macrobius, in the first Book of Scipioes Dreame; as also Plato, in his Timeus.

They haue likewise vrged this question: wherefore a Man, in suddaine turning, or beeing brought by or from another Man: it falleth out so hurtfull vnto him, that his sight becomnieth dazeled, and he hardly auoydeth stumbling or falling? Wherunto all of them make aunswere, especiallie Macrobius, saying. That the moouings of all corporall thinges, are seauen in number. One whereof, is; the moouing from beneath, to aloft, or on high. A second, is from on high, to below or beneath. A third, is from one place to another forward. A fourth, is from forward, backward, without either mounting or descending. A fift, is to the right side. A sixt, is to the left. And the last, is turning round about: which is neyther on high nor below; nor to the right side or left, but in a round circle, as it were. And this is the proper motion or moouing of the Heauens, the qualitie whereof, is to turne in that manner: and is not so common or ordinary to man, as the other sixe, or every one of them are.

From thenceit ensueth, that in neuer hauing beenefecne, nor done by man, when hee so mooueth of himselfe, or else by another: he findes himselfe feared and troubled, and then some notable accident or imitation happeneth to him, because hee is troubled in the braine, all his spirits, and an alteration appeareth in the humours of his head, so that the Organes of vnderstanding, cannot receiue their vertue and animall power. And so, our bodilie charge and weighinesse, beeing not sustained by the Soule: falleth downe to the ground, without power, without sight, and void of any supporting strength. But if a man doe performe this motion aduisidly, and by little and little: nature findeth no impeachment, but without daunger it may very well be done.

Macrob. ubi sup.

Seauen seuerall kinde of motion or moouing.

The true moouing of the Heauens, not common or ordinary vnto man.

The reason of falling in sudden turning.

CHAP. XIII.

How excellent a thing the Memory of Man is. And what is the reason, that such as are endued with an acute Spirit, haue but weak retention. Moreover, what is the cause that Men haue so good remembrance of their youth, or younger yeares.

Among all the inward perfections of Man, Memory is the most excellent: as being the Treasurer and Guardian of all the other. The blessing bestowed by God on Men, in giuing them Memory, is so great and precious: that onely the very praises thereof, and recitall of the benefits which come to them thereby, might well consume a great space of time, in Writing and repeating; yea, Paper would want to relate so worthy an Argument.

Cicero saith, Memory is the Theame or discourse of the Soules immortality, and diuinity of Man. Pliny calleth it such a benefit; As is absolute necessary to life. And Plutarch stileth it; The Antistrophe of diuinitie: that is to say, equiualent or semblable to the Diuinitie, considering, that of passed thinges, shee maketh a present obseruation. For, the time that is past, may bee compared to him, that is carried away with a swift Water current: but Memorie maketh retention, and appeareth to vse strong resistance against that swift course, with a meere essence of that, which other-wise were lost and gone. Others call Memorie; The Tresurie of Knowledge. And hence it came, that Wisedome is counted the Daughter of Memory, and also of Experience: because Memory is as a Coffer or Cabinet, containing all such thinges as we learne, behold, and vnderstand. The Sauour and Redeemer of all the World, did highly make esteem thereof, considering, that when he left vs the blessed Sacrament of his bodie and blood, he said: Doe you this, in the Memorie Memory is the chiefest of all other perfections in man.

Cicero. in Lib. 1. de Offic.

Plin. Secund. in Lib. 4. Cap. 7.

Plutarch. in Moral.

An apt Comparison of the times past.

Valer. Max. in Lib. 7. Cap. 14.

Example of our blessed Sauour.

Luke. 22. 19.

Pfalme. 18, 6.

The iudge-ment of Oratours concerning Memory.
Quintil. in Lib. de Institut.

Use and exercise increaseth Memory.

Memory habitually pursued is not easily retained.

Two meanes for the apprehension of Memory, confirmed by example.

*Arist. in Lib. 4.
de Ethic.*

Plutarch his comparison, how Memory commeth to men.

Memorie or remembrance of me; meaning that in his Memory wee ought to receive them. The Church both saith and singeth; The iust shall live in eternall Memory. We must needs say then, that the place of happinesse belonging to this Memory, is very great and gracious.

But let vs come now to humane learning. Our Oratours doe reckon Memory, as one of the principall parts of speaking. We are taught in vain (saith Quintillian) if we forget that which wee haue learned. Therefore himselfe commaundeth, that this powerfull vertue should be often exercised; because by use and exercise, it is increased. It is a meruailous thing, that in setting Memory to her worke, and holding her in due commendation, she should be so memoratiue of passed occasions: And yet he that pursueth her with greatest affection, is least able of apprehending her, and contrariwise, he to whom she appeareth most painfull and laborious, for finding out difficult matters past, she rendreth her selfe the readiest afterward. We are therefore to vnderstand, that there are two means appertaining to this vertue.

A man that hath his Memory prompt and very ready, to entertaine such instructions as are giuen him; cannot keep them for any long time. But another man, who is long in apprehending, preferueth (what is taught him) in much better manner. The naturall reason whereof is giuen vs by Aristotle, saying. Men that haue linely and sharpe Spirits, are (at the first sight) easie to be instructed, yet very weake in their retention. Contrariwise, more rude and duller Spirits, that apprehend and conserue with great difficulty; are capable of farre better retayning.

Plutarch affirmeth, that these things happen to men, as it doth to a Pot or Vessell, which hath a little mouth or entrance, and therefore is the harder to be filled, as also voyde of the lesse danger, in emptying it againe: and such Vessels (such saith hee) doe represent men of rude vnderstanding. But they that haue a quicke and agile Spirit; doe resemble Vesselles with wide mouthes and large entrance; and as they are easily filled, euen so are they as quickly emptied of all that they containe.

The learned Thomas Aquinas, who omitted nothing, or (at the least) very little, which he did not iudiciously peruse and examine; speaketh to this purpose. By diuers corporeall dispositions, doe ensue the diuers promptitudes and operations of the Soule. For as we behold, that those things wherein are made some impressions or Characters with paine and difficulty (as in stone or Mettals) doe preferue those prints more substantiallie, then other things that are much easier imprinted, as in Waxe, and other matter of like softnesse: Euen so the Memory (which is the Guardian of all instruction) being in the head of a Man of hard vnderstanding, when she receiveth any thing wel figured and stamped, she preferueth it the better in this hard habitation, because it was entertained with paine and difficulty. But as for them that are sprightly, prompt, and ready, and doe entertaine thinges with lesse trauaile: they are euen as speedy in forgetting, and vtterlosse of them.

There is another thing in the Memory, which is likewise worthy to be noted, to wit: That such things as we behold, to be imprinted in the tender Spirit of Infancy, are not forgotten in the estate of Man-hood. Auicenne, in his sixt Booke of naturall thinges, saith. The reason hercof is, that such as haue their vnderstanding at quirt, and with ought the charge of great occasions: haue their Memory the more certine. And for this cause, those things which Children do learne in their chiefest Infancy: they retain them for a long time, by not being mollensted with weighty thoughtes and trauailes. Thomas Aquinas rendreth another reason, and (in mine opinion) more auailable, saying. That thing, which is the occasion of most notable motion in Man, remaineth the firmest in his Memory: as namely, matters of greatest novelty and admiration: And therefore, as all thinges appeare to Children, to be newell, strange, and of great importance: so are they the cause, that they are the more solidly stamped in their Memory.

But let vs leau Infancy, and come to Men, of whom, some haue been obserued, to be of such capable and singular vnderstanding; that it hath appeared, to be a matter of no meane meruaile.

*Tho. Aquina.
Sum. 1. Dist. 9
Sect. 13.*

Example of difficult staps or impressions, & others of more easi-
nesse.

Such things as are apprehended in our infancy, we doe not forget in manhood.

*Auicenne de Reb.
Nat. Lib. 6.*

Tho. Aquinas. ubi supra.

Examples of men of admirable vnder-standing.

Plin. in Lib. 7.
Solin. in Lib. 1.
Quintil in li. 1.
Of Cyrus.

uaile. Pliny, Solinus, & Quintillian, haue set vs downe diuers and sundry exam- ples. We read of Cyrus, that he knew all the Men in his Army, which was of wonderfull greatnesse: and hee could call them all by their names and fir- names, a thing deseruing to be admir- ed.

Of Lucius Sci- pio.

Solinus writeth as much of Lucius Sci- pio; and yet notwithstanding, though this doe appeare to be meruailous: yet it is supposed, that by frequent and con- tinued cōuersation, he might wel do it. That which is reported of Cineas, Am- bassador from K. Pyrrhus to the Romains, dooth vrge much greater amazement. For, hauing been in Rome but two daies onely: he knew all the Senators names, albeit there was a great number of the. He knew likewise the names of all the Gentlemen, and principall persons in the Citty, apprehending them readilie at a second sight, and spake to them e- uery man by his name. Spartianus, in the life of Adrian, doth highly com- mend his Memory, saying. If a Booke were read in his presence, albeit he had ne- uer seene, or heard thereof before: yet af- ter the whole reading was finished, he wold recite (word by word) all matters contain- ed in the Booke, without fayling in any thing. And hee did perfectly (euer after- ward) know them, that had but once spoken to him.

Of Cineas Ambassadour to the Ro- maines.

Spartianus in vit. Adrian. Imp

A memora- ble History of Age, counter- feiting youth, in presence of the Emperour Adrian.

I remember, that (not long since) I read a pretty discourse, of a Man that was aged, hauing his head and Beard long and white; and somewhat hee had petitioned of his Prince, wherein hee was denied. Whereupon, this aged Man afterward caused his haire to bee close cut, and his Beard to bee shauen, making vse of a false and counterfeit Perry-wig, as if he were become a yong Man againe: And by this occasion (as I gesse) came vp our borrowed haire, which nowa-daies are in the same re- quest. In this manner hee returned to the Emperour Adrian, vrging the same suite, which he had formerly denied him. The Emperour well knowing him, and smiling to himselfe, that his deniaill had made the aged man, thus to becom (in his own conceit) of younger yeares, as hoping thereby to ouer-reach him: he made him this answere. My Friend, very willinglie could I graunt thy request:

An excellent and witty an- swere.

but that (some few dayes since) thy Father was with me, and moued me in the very same suite. Now in my iudgement, I hold it not agreeing eyther with Honor or Reason, to grant that to the Sonne, that I haue already denied to his graue and reuerend Father. With this reply, the (olde imagined) young man went away con- founded with the conceite of his owne folly, and iustly was dealt withall as he had deserued.

10

Wee reade of Mithridates, King of Pontus, that his Scepter commanded ouer two and twenty seuerall Langua- ges, and that he gaue audience vnto all these Nations, without any Interpre- ter, and answered euery one of them in his owne tongue. The Memory of Themistocles was also very great, for Ci- cero speaking of him, saith: He learned and apprehended whatsoeuer he would, and desired to forget many things, of lesse worth then he esteemed them to be, but hee could not. Symonides (on a time) demanded of him, if hee would haue an excellent receipt: for the maintenance of a good Memory; whereto Themistocles reply- ed. He would gladly find out a meanes, to forget many things, for he had no neede of encreasing his Memory. Quintillian re- porteth of Publius Crassus, that in one instant, he gaue audience to fise kindes of tongues vsed in Greece; and gaue an- swere also presently in each one of the. Seneca, in the Prologue of his Decla- mations, saith; that Porcius Latronius (who so much renowned the Schooles of the learned Rodolphus Agricola) had (both by Nature and Art) such a Me- mory, that it appeared to be incredible: because what-soeuer he learned, he re- tained still faithfully. And being come to the degree of an Oratour; all the O- rations which he had suddenly made, he could recite them by heart, without fayling in any one word. Hee saide, This was a more profitable labour then wri- ting; because he could write all his inuenti- ons in his Memory. Cicero writeth the like of Hortensius the great Oratour, and saith. As he directed his Oration, so hee wrote, and afterward pronounced it, with- out fayling in a word. Seneca, in his Book before alleaged, speaketh of the same Hortensius, saying. He was selling cer- taine goods by an Inuentory, and the sale continued for the space of a whole day. But 20

30

40

50

Two and twenty seue- rall tongues vnderstood by Mithridates.

Cicero in Lib. 4. de Offic.

Themistocles his answere to Symonides. Quintil in li. 1. Of Publius Crassus.

Seneca in Pro- hem. Declamat. Porcius Latro- nius. Rodolphus A- gricola.

Writing re- proued by an Oratour. Cicero of Hor- tensius the fa- mous Ora- tour.

Seneca in Pro- hem. Declamat.

after

after all was done, he recited (orderly and by art) all things which had bin sold, rehearsing euery bodies name that had bought them, & the seuerall prices of each thing sold, not fayling in a iote, as they had beene set downe in the Inuenty order.

Seneca in the report of his owne memory in his youth.

An admirable Memory.

The Memory of Iulius Cesar.

Plin. in Lib. 9. Cap. 4.

Spartianus. in vit. Adrian. Imp.

The contention between Scipio Africanus Secundus, and Appius Claudius for the Controuership of Rome.

Cicero. in Tusculan Quintil. in Lib. de Inuent. Ioan. Camertes. sup. Cap. 7. Solin.

Seneca, writing of himselfe, as being best witnesse of himselfe, saith; that he had such a perfit memory in his youth, as if one had declared to him, the names of two thousand seuerall thinges: hee could repeate them all againe, euen in the same maner, as they had bin named, without fayling in any one. He saith moreouer, that in the time of his being a Scholler, two hundred Schollers came before the Maister, reciting (each one) a seuerall Latine verse: and when they all had ended; hee beganne, and repeated them all againe one after another, and failed not in a fillable. Among these examples of so great capacity, Iulius Cesar deserueth to be remembered: who at one instant time, gaue enstructions to foure Secretaries, to write Letters vnto foure distinct persons, and of different occasions Pliny writeth of him, that at one and the same time, he gaue directions for a Letter to one of his Secretaries, and read in a Booke, and heard another speaking to him. Spartianus writeth the like of the Emperor Adrian.

To this purpose, I cal to mind the ingenious answer of Scipio Africanus the younger, who contended with Appius Claudius for the office of Controuler of Rome. Claudius, to attract the people to his part; cald each Roman by his name, saying: This was a good signe, that they were all beloued of him, because his memory was so good, as to name them all; whereas (contrariwise) Scipio knew not one of them, neither was acquainted with their Names. Whereto Scipio thus answered. It is true Claudius, that I neuer sought (by purchase) to make my selfe knowne: but such haue beene my actions and behaviours, as there is no man in the City, but hee might take knowledge of me. I could wade further in plenty of other examples, concerning the admirable memory of men; but he that is desirous of more, may read the Tusculanes of Cicero, Quintilian, and the Histories recited by Ioannes Camertes, vpon the vij. Chapter of Solinus.

CHAP. XV.

How the Memory may be hurt and offended: And how it may also (by Art and good meanes) be strengthened and comforted.

10

20 30

40

50

As the Memory is held to be most noble and excellent: euen so likewise it is very dainety and delicate, and easily corrupted or offended by many occasions; as diseases, bruises, and wounds in the head, age, sudden feare, and falling from some piace of height. All these thinges are troublesome to Memory; because they doe endamage the place, the Organes and Instruments thereof. This is moreouer to bee noted, that some men, by weaknesse of their Memory, are forgetfull in all thinges; and some others will erre or wander atray therein, especially in some part thereof. As Pliny writeth of Messala Corninus, who, by reason of a sicknesse, grew to such forgetfulnesse: that he could neuer remember his own name, nor when he was especiallly demanded thereof. Valerius also, speaking of miraculous occasions, maketh report of a learned man, who by the blow of a stone, which bruised his head: forgot al that he had learned in the Arts and Sciences, and yet was very memoratiue in all other matters. Another Man, by meanes of a fall; lost the knowledge of his Mother, Kintred, and acquaintance. I haue read, and heard it reported by many, that Franciscus Barbarus, a man of our time, and very learned; especiallie in the Greek tongue: by the meanes of a disease he had, forgot (peticularly) whatsoeuer he knew in Greek, remaining (otherwise) as he did before, a thing (in my opinion) very meruailous. It is likewise said, that Georgius Trabazonius, a man well learned, and liued in our Fathers daies: did forget in his age, al that he had learned in his life time before.

Now, as we find, that the Memory is peticularly iniured by some occasions: so likewise do we read of sundrie Men, that

The Memory is subiect to many meanes of offending.

Plin. in Lib. 7. Cap. 24. O Messala Corninus.

Valer. Maxim. in Lib. 3. cap. 7.

Of Franciscus Barbarus the great Grecian.

Of Georgius Trabazonius.

Of men very weake and feeble in their Memory.

Suetonius in vit. Claud. Imp.

Of the Sonne to Herodotus the Sophister.

Of sudden feare and alteration, being hurtfull to Memory.

Of Demosthenes the famous Oratour, before King Phillip of Macedon.

Theophrastus before the Areopagites.

Herodes the Athenian. Heraclides Licus.

Bartholomeus Socinus Senensis.

that (meerely by nature) haue bin therein very weake and feeble. The Emperor Claudius was so vntable of Memory, that (as Suetonius writeth in his life) he hauing his wife somtimes accōpanying him in bed : after he had once spoken to her, he remembered her no more, but would demand of others, what was the cause, why she did not come to bed to him? Once he commaunded one of his Councillers to be put to death; and the next day following, demanded, wherefore he came not to counsell. Herodotus the Sophister had a Son of such poore Memory and vnderstanding: that hee could not (by any meanes) learne and retaine the Letters of the Alphabet. And yet the Father was so desirous of his learning, that hee caused foure and twenty Children (of the same age as he was) to be tutord with him, and imposed vpon each one of them, the name of each Letter in the Alphabet; to the end, that by naming and knowing his companions, he might thereby likewise learne the Letters.

I haue formerly saide, that suddaine feare or astonishment, is a great let and hinderance to Memory, and thereto I may well adde, that although such feare do not wholly destroy the Memory: yet it hath evidently appeared, to make mē vterly forget such thinges, as formerly had bin wel determined in the mind. As it happened to Demosthenes the famous Orator, who being sent as Ambassador to King Phillip of Macedon; fell suddenly into such a strange alteration, by being in the presence of so great a Prince: that hauing begun his Oration (which he had well composed and committed to Memory) he was at a Non-plus, and vterly forgot what he had to say. We read the very same, of Theophrastus, who was to speake in presence of the Councill and Areopagites of Athens. And the like of Herodes the Athenian, beeing in presence of the Emperor Marke Anthony. And of Heraclides Licus, in presence of Seuerus the Emperour, according as Philostratus recordeth. And euen in our time, as it were, Bartholomeus Socinus, a Natiue of Sienna, being a man very learned, in the Lawes, and Ambassador for his Country to Pope Alexander, began his Oration, which he had very perfectly studied and prepared: but he became suddenly so altered, by seeing so many great Princes then there present; that he forgot all, and was not able to remember or vtter one word. My selfe, who haue beene the traducer of this Booke, do testifie of my selfe, that the very like alteration as befell Demosthenes (not that (in thought) I compare my selfe with him) happned to me, in the presence of men of great iudgement; and the intirenesse of affection, which then I had to the Iustice and true deliury of my speech: did alter me in such maner, as I was not able to hold on (the least while) from my beginning; albeir I wanted no study or premeditation, euen so much as my hart could desire.

Now, that Memory may be holpen and conserued by artificial meanes; is a matter most certaine, and I finde manie good authors that do affirm as much: as Solinus in his Polyhistor, Petrus Crotius, and Quintillian, all along in his Institutions. We finde recorded, that Cineas, Ambassadour to King Pyrrhus, was very practique therein. Plinie and Solinus doe say, that Symonides was the Inuenter of the Art of Memory: albeit the same Plinie affirmeth, that Metrodorus brought it to perfection, and help himselfe extraordinarie thereby. Cicero, in the Booke of his Oratour, Quintillian, in his Institutions, and Valerius in his Miracles, doe all affirme, that Symonides being inuited to a Feast, with many others: the Haule wherein they banqueted fell, and all there died, Symonides excepted, who (by thance) was called thence in that instant, by some one of his friends, and was gone forth without any knowledge of him that called him, by which meanes his life was saued. Historians say, that in viewing the dead bodies, which had bin thither inuited, and who were a great number: Symonides noted them all & declared, in what order they were seated at the table when the hal fell. The examples which might be alledged to this purpose, are infinit: but these already spoken of) shall suffice at this time. Another thing is to be noted, to wit; that the naturall Philosophers, and especially Aristotle, do make a difference betweene the Memory and Remēbrance. For say they, Memory may be in beasts, as well as in Men, though it be more imperfectly: but remēbrance is in man onely,

Example of the Author him selfe.

Solin in Polyhist. Petrus Crotius in Lib. 5. Cap. 3. Quintil. in Institut. Pin. in Lib. 7. Cap. 8. Solin. in Polyhist. The first inuenter of the Art of Memory. Cicero in Lib. de Orat. Quintil. in Lib. de Institut. Valer. Max. in Mirac.

The strange preservation of Symonides, among a great many other that perished.

A difference alleaged betweene Memory and Remēbrance, exemplified both in men and beasts.

only, who is to make recordation of himselfe, to use discourse, and to thinke on things; as by way of contemplantion, describing a generall from particulars, by circumstances of time and place, with consideration and vnderstanding. In beasts, there is nothing to be remembred, but of some place where they haue once salne: as in a Horse, of a fault by him committed, in some part of his ordinary way, and so in other beasts likewise more or lesse, and in diuers degrees. But as we haue formerly saide, remembrance in Man is much more perfect, with intelligence and discourse, running from one thing to another. And therefore, according to Aristotle, this dignity in men, who haue their vnderstanding most apprehensiu & liuely: haue also most remembrance, albeit another man may be more abound in memory. Because remembrance is a manner of search and Inquisition, which awaketh and stirreth vp Memory, to some such thing as is to be recorded. Wherefore, the best and liueliest vnderstanding, yeildeth occasion of the best meanes, and (in that respect) is prouided of the best remembrance. The Greekes, among other vanities of their Gods, had a Goddesse, of Memory: so that the memoriall vnderstanding hath euermore beene very highly esteemed. Thus you may perceiue, how much men are bound to extol and thank God, for such a precious & inestimable benefit, and how carefull they ought to be in the preservation thereof. Marcilius Ficinus, in the Booke which he made of tripple life, setteth downe excellent receipts and enstruptions, for the conseruation of Memory.

CHAP. XVI.

How the Ancient Prouerb is to be interpreted, or vnderstood: That a bad Man may be a good King.

N grosse eares, and such as are not vsed and accustomed, to weigh one thing with another (indifferently) in the ballance of reason; I make no doubt, but the common

Prouerb appeareth to be very strange, to wit: That of a bad Man, he may become a good King: and so much the rather, because it is necessary to vnderstand and know, what the true meaning of this word bad or lewd, doth imply in it selfe. In the old and autentique French Language, Vn meschant, a bad, lewd, or naughty man, is not said to be such a one, as is full of all vices, as a Brigande, a Robber, an Exactor, a Detractour, a Quarreller, a Violater of Womens modesties, and a Committer of other villainous acts. But we are rather to vnderstand, that it signifieth such a person, as suffereth himselfe not to be led and gouerned, by the appetite and passions of other men, who prodigally do wast and consume the goods that are in his power; and is not difficult in access of importunate persons, that make demaund of vnreasonable requests; that will know such as feede on his meanes; that lendeth no eare to flatterers; that opposeth himselfe seuerely against such, as do mollest others without reason, or any, doing these or the like thinges. Whosoever readeth auncient Bookes, turned or cōposed in the French toong, shall finde, that by a bad or naughty Prince; a good and well aduised King is meant and vnderstood. They that haue translated Homer, do oftentimes tearme Jupiter, and other Deities beside, bad, wicked, and euill, when they were irritated against the Greekes or Troyans, throwing thunder-bolts and lightnings on them, or darkening the ayre, or suffering the waters to mount out of their bounds, and work great damages on the earth. Contrariwise, as well in time of Antiquity, as euen in these present daies, by a good man, hath bin, and is vnderstood: one that is simple, slow conceited, dull of vnderstanding, a man that sees himselfe deceiued at all times, and vnder speeches of the smoothest language; a man that suffereth al things, yea, euen to the silly point; that his wife bestowes a Cuckolds creast vpon him, and enery man calls him Good Man, or Good John.

Such men as are of this opinion, doe much abuse themselves, in praying and adoring the goodnesse of a Prince, that is soft, simple, gracious, and courteous: for such simplicity, without prudence,

The perfection of Remembrance in man.

A definition of Remembrance, and how to be obserued.

A Goddesse of Memory among the Greekes.

Marcil. Ficin. in Lib. de triplici vite.

The interpretation of the name or word of bad and good man.

Vn meschant in le Vieille language Françoise.

How and in what sence such a man is to be comprehended and vnderstood.

According to the auncient language of France.

Examples tending to the purpose.

The dammages ensuing by the simplicity of a Prince.

Of sufferance & lacke of experience in a good Prince.

dence, is most dangerous and pernicious; yea, and much more to bee feared, then the cruelrie of a Prince, that is seuer, melancholly, hoarse in speech, auaritious, and vnaccessable. By sufferance, and vnexperienced simplicitie in too good a Prince, it many times cometh to passe: that flatterers, busie-braines, Knaues, Varlets, and the vilest persons, beare away the Offices, charges, benefits, and very best guiftes, wasting and consuming the Reuenues of a State, and by this means, the poore people are bitten, euen vnto the bare bones, and cruelly made seruile to such as are greatest, so that in stead of one Tyrant, there are ten thousand. In like manner, through this ouer-much mildnesse and goodnesse, wee may daily behold: impunity of wicked persons, murderers, Concussionaries, or publike extortioners, and such like Catterpillers of a Common-wealth, for the King (in meere grace) may take no knowledge of them.

In brieffe, vnder such a Prince, the publique good is conuerted into some perticulers, and al the charges or heavy loads, doe light vpon the poorest peoples backes. As we may obserue by Catterres, and defluxions; in a delicate, weak, and sickly body, and that alwaies they happen to the vnablest persons. I could verifie what I haue written by abundance of examples, as well of the Emperors of Rome, as Kings of France. Domitian was terrible and wicked to the Senate, to the Nobility, to the great Lords and Gouvernours of the Empire: & yet notwithstanding, after his death, the people and Prouinces did highlie commend him, because there were neuer better Officers and Magistrates, then they that gouerned in his time, onely through the respect and feare they had of him. Vnder the two Emperors, that were both named Seuerus, the Affricaine and the Syrian, the Empire (almost wholly ruined, by the Emperors Heliogabalus and Pertinax) was re-established by seuerity and Imperiall austeritie, and reduced into her former splendour and Maiesty, to the wonderfull contentment of the Princes and people.

The Realme of France, was imagined ready to sinke, and appeared wel-neere, wasted and desolate; vnder the raigne of Charles, first named the simple, and another Charles also, who was tearmed. Donothing. Yet afterward, it became great, rich, and flourishing, both in Armes and Lawes, towards the end of King Frances the first; when he grew to be Waspath, vnaccessable, and no Man durst come neere, to demand any thing of him. For then, Estates, Offices, and charges of import were not giuen, but by the merit of worthy persons, & idle gifts were so cut off: that when he died, there was found in the Treasury or Exchequer, a Million of Gold, and seauen hundred thousand Crownes.

Within some dozzen yeares after, when his Sonne King Henrie the second reigned (whose goodnesse and kindnesse was so great, that he could not be equaled by any Prince of his age) the State became quite altered. For, as he was soft, milde, gracious, and debonnaire; euen so, he could not deny any matter demanded of him. Whereby, the Reuenues of his Father being (in a short while) lauishly consumed: estates were (more then euer before) set to open sale, guifts bestowed, without any respect, Magistrates giuen to the fairest offerers, and (by consequent) to the vnworthiest persons. And the Imposts being far greater then euer they had been, when he dyed, the Treasuries of France were (neuerthelessse) found to stand charged, with two and forty Millions of Mony. If the gentlenes of this King, had beene tempered, or accompanied with seuerity, his goodnesse with strictnesse, his softnesse with austeritie: there could not haue beene drawne from him such abundance, nor euery one to preuaile so easily as they did.

And thus this ancient Prouerbe is to be vnderstood; That a bad Man, may be a good King: which may relish somewhat harshly, if wee take the bare proprietie of the word, & leaue out this application, that it signifieth nothing else, but an austere, rough, and steare Nature. And in this sense, wee are not to tearme a Prince a Tyrant, because he is so seuer or rigorous: provided, that he goe not against the Lawes of, God and Nature.

Frances the first hard to be endured, yet the good that proceeded from him

A great difference betwene the Father and Sonne.

Henry the second too good & milde a King.

The Treasuries of France charged with 42. Millions of Money.

The Authors application of the Prouerbe.

Publique good conuerted into perticulers.

How Domitian was saide to be good and bad.

The two Emperors named Seuerus of Affrica and Syria.

Charles the Simple, and Charles Doe nothing.

CHAP. XVII.

¶ Of Constantine the Great; and whether hee were the first Christian Emperour or no.

Have made all the diligent examination, that possibly I could devise to use, to know, whether there were any Christian Emperour before Constantine the Great, as many have thought, and dared to speake. I can finde no acknowledgement of any, that had good opinion of Christian Religion, except it were one: or else they did it very secretly, in regard they persecuted such as made profession thereof, and the authority of the Senate intermeddling therein. For there were many of the Romaine Senators, and of their Families, that were possessed of their great spirituall Revenues, and which ought likewise to have beene so called themselves: in regard they had original from publike expences, or of some certaine particulars, for worshipp of the Gods among them.

There is no apparance, that Marcus Antonius was a Christian, or that he had any vnderstanding of Christian Religion: considering, he was a man very superstitious in the the Pagan profession, and yet learned, and of good iudgment. I am of opinion, that by some good naturall instinct, he did not approoue the cruell and hard persecutions, which wer imposed on the Christians. For, without any frowne or distast, he accepted a request presented to him, by Iustine, a Christian Philosopher, wherein he declared the Christians innocencie, and the crimes which falsly were laide vpon them, onely to make them the mote odious. He made an Edict, which he caused to bee confirmed by the Senate. It prohibited any more molestation to the Christians for their Religion, & that he which imposed any crime falsly vpon them; should forth-with be proceeded against, and punished with the selfe-same Lawes, that were ordained against the Christians. This Mandate was published in Ephesus, in a generall assembly.

Adrian, who was before him, about twenty yeares, after he had permitted, that the Christians should bee strictlie persecuted: yet taking acknowledgement, that (with much shame) they were thus cruelly proceeded against; he made the like Edict as Antonius formerly had done. And perceiuing the Iewes to liue like Vagabonds, without any Land or abiding, as euen (to this day) they are in no better estate: he suffered them to dwell in Palestine, and to re-edifie the Temple and City of Ierusalem. But when they were at a little ease and liberty, they rebelled against the said Adrian; who (not without great labour) overcame them. He was no way a Christian, and much lesse of the Iewish Religion: but very true it is, that he had (naturally) a good iudgement, and degenerated not from the true parts of a Man.

There was some likely-hood, that Alexander Seuerus, the two and twentieth Emperour; raigning in the yeare of Iesus Christ, 225. had some vnderstanding, though hee made no demonstration thereof. And yet hee would often say: That he ought to loue his Neighbor as himselfe; and should not do that to another man, which he would not haue done vnto himselfe. Doubtlesse, he had read in the Bookes of the Old and New Testaments, or learned it of some Christians: because Paganes were neuer so charitable, as to use any such language.

Mammaea, Mother to the said Seuerus, was truly a Christian; for shee sent to seeke Origen, who taught in Alexandria of Egypt, and he remained at Rome with her in the Pallace, for some time, to be instructed more amplie by him, then formerly she had bin in the Catholique Faith. If the Emperour himselfe had any feeling of Christianity; he kept it verie secretly. And yet, during the space of thirteene yeares, while hee was Emperour: he exercised great deeds of charity vnto the poore, a thing neuer put in practise before hee did it. The persecutions as well in Gaule, as in the East, were very great: and I am of the mind, that neyther hee or his Mother euer

Adrian was good both to the Christians and Iewes.

The Iewes rebelled against the Emperour Adrian.

Alexander Seuerus the 22. Emperour.

A Christian saying of Seuerus.

Mammaea, Mother to the Emperour Seuerus, a Christian.

Seuerus very charitable to the poore.

The occasion of this Chapter.

Wherefore the Romaine Senate persecuted the Christians.

Marcus Antonius Aurelius caused the persecutions to cease.

Eusebius in Lib. 4. Cap. 10.

The Proconsuls greedy of proscriptions against the Christians.

knew how to stay them. For the Proconsuls or gouernors of the Prouinces, hauing a lickorous appetite after the confiscations of Christians goods; did all according to their owne fantasies. In the end Seuerus was slaine (beeing aged twenty nine yeares) with his Mother Mammaea, traitorously by Theeues, that in the time of Heliogabalus (hauing held places of honour) were delected, and throwne out of their Offices and dignities.

The Christians most cruelly persecuted by the Emperor Maximinus.

After that Alexander Seuerus had raigned about foureteene yeares, hee was slaine by the conspiracies of Maximinus. The Christians (this Maximinus being created Emperour) were more cruelly persecuted then euer they had bin: for the first moued the sixt persecution, and especially against the Doctours of the Church, in hatred of the fore-named Mammaea, Mother to Alexander his predecessor, and murdred (with his owne hands) the Domesticks and Seruants of the said Alexander. This Maximinus hauing raigned three yeares, in the yeare of Iesus Christ 237. he was slain at Rome for his tyrannies; And Gordianus being elected by the Senate; shewed himselfe a Prince of noble disposition. We finde not any where recorded, that he made any cruell Edict against the Christians: yet he was no Christian, that euer any man could take knowledge of. He was slain fraudulently by Phillip that succeeded him.

Maximinus murdered for his Cruelties and Gordianus elected Emperour.

Phillip very hardly accepted to be Emperour, because he was said to be a Christian.

This M. Iulius Phillip, by Nation an Arabian, was elected Emperour (as we haue saide) notwithstanding hee found many difficulties in his acceptation. For it was said he might not be, because he was a Christian, and no one of that Religion, ought to hold any Office in the Empire of the Romains, by many Edicts, as well of Emperours, as of the Senate. But the most of the assistants, that were at his election and Imperiall salutation, made answer: That such Edicts held no place for the present time, in regard, that they were Christians also, as well as he. Whereupon he was accepted, and his Son likewise ioyned with him. He made publike profession of Christianity, and was conuerted by Pontianus, or Pontius, a Romaine Senator, and baptized by Fabian (who was then Byshop and Pope of Rome) with Seuera, Mother to the said Iulius Phillip. Yet Fabian would not admit him into the latter Vigils of Easter (although he had great desire to assist in the congregation, and prayers of the Christians) vntill hee had made confession of his sin (which was a murder in the opinion of many) but was enioyned in company among such, of whom enquiry was made, by reason of their sins, and so was placed in ranke of the repentants; as Eusebius declareth in his sixt Booke, and 24. Chapter. All which Phillip refused not to doe, but accomplished that whereto he was enioyned by Fabian. This Man rheus the first of the Christian Emperours.

Phillip conuerted to Christianity and Christened by Fabian Bishop of Rome.

Phillip ranked among the penitents. Eusebius. in Hist. Eccl. Lib. 6. Cap. 24.

At length, and during his Empire, it is held, that all the people of his House, receiued the Christian doctrine, and renounced the Idolatries of the Paganes. But this felicity lasted not long in the Church: for, as Phillip had dealt with Gordianus, his Predecessor: euen so was he serued by his Successor Decius; yea, and his Son also, who was slain at Rome, and the Father at Verona; such was their end, after they had raigned seauen yeares. After him, till the time of Constantine the Great, there were nine Emperours, all of them being great Persecuters of the Christians: except Galien, who suffered the Christians to liue in peace, but he was neuer Christian himselfe. I am of opinion, that this permission was occasioned, by reason that he had some Christians of his Councell.

Decius murdered, both Phillip and his Sonne.

Decius favoured the Christians but was none himself.

Constantine the Great, was the second Emperour, that made confession publicly of Christianity, and, in despight of all enemies, he ceased the proscriptions against the Christians, in the yeare of Iesus Christ, 312. From thence forward, his Imperiall Successors were all Christian Catholiques, or Schismatickes, euen to our time: except Iulian, fir-named the Apostata, who returned from Christianity, to Paganisme, and liued no more but two yeares Emperour; for he was slaine in the warres against the Parthians. And this is al that I can finde recorded of the first Emperours of the Christians.

Constantine the Great, was the second Christian Emperour.

Iulian the Apostata.

CHAP. XVIII.

Who discovered the people called Cynocephali, or Cynocephales, that is to say; men having heads like unto Dogs; And what they are, that doe inhabite daily among them.

Any have held opinion, that Pliny and Aulus Gellius were loud lyers, when they wrote and published: that there lived a certaine kinde of people in Scythia, which had Dogges heads, and that they howled like Dogs, in stead of speaking as other men doe. What these two worthy Men have written, is true in part, but not in all. I say in part, because some people that have beene discovered, within the space of these threescore yeares, and somewhat more: have a forme and figure, neere in resemblance, to the head and shape of a Dogs head; to wit, of those little pretty flat-nose Dogs, which Ladies keepe for pleasure, in their Chambers, yet not naturally, but artificially. For these people, from the time of all Antiquity, did alwaies hold it for a singular beauty to them; to have their noses flatted or falne downe. And this is the reason, that when their Children are newly borne, and have their bones very tender: the Fathers and Mothers neuer faile, to quash or flat downe that part of the face, which is betweene the eyes and the mouth, as the like hath bin done to little Dogges. And to speake truly, being thus dealt withall: they differ very little in their looks, from the resemblance of Dogges. But they meddle not with their eares, to make them pointed or hanging down, as commonly is vsed to those Creatures. Yet true it is, that when they are grown to manly stature, the bore or pierce holes thorow their eares (euen as is done heere among vs) to hang therein fine coloured stones, or else the bones of certaine Fishes.

On the other side, that they have not

(in part) reported any fable, is very certaine, when they say, that these people doe dwell in a part of Scythia: because all the Countries have beene discovered, and doth not declare any deformity on the peoples bodies. But they of whom I make mention, are placed betweene the Equinoctiall, and the Tropic of Capricorne, on that side which is called America: because Americk Vesputius, a Portugall, was the first that discovered this Country, the length whereof containeth aboute fife hundered Leagues, and is other-wise tearmed the Countrey of Brasile, Caniballes, or Anthrophages, that is to say; Eaters of Men. I would not bee thought to speake of all America, which is accounted to be the fourth part of the World: but only of that part, which containeth these Cynocephales.

Now, that they howle or barke, as Dogs do, is vtterly false: for they speak a Language disertly, briefly, and properly accented, which is supposed to be the Greeke tongue. And they are moulourdens or loutish people, but of a lively and chearefull spirit, quicke, cautious, magnanimious, and taking knowledge (very well) of any pleasure or displeasure done them, as also the time and place. They goe starke naked, as we vse to say; onely accepted (as a token or note of their brauery) a Plumassery, or wreath of Feathers, which circleth their heads, and a Cord or band of Cotten (hanging in manner of a Scarffe) which descendeth downe to the raines of the backe, there to sustaine other Plumasseries of diuers colours, that do round engirt them about the middle. They neuer walke along the Countrey, but they carry their Bowes, & Quiuers full of Arrowes, and many times a Club, containing eight or ten foote in length, of Brasile wood.

They eate not their Flesh or Fish (which they get in Rivers, or in the Sea, by helpe of their Arrowes, or other wise) raw, as some Men have imagined; but they vse both boyling and roasting of them. But true it is, that they eate the flesh of Men, yet boyled or roasted: and it is onely of their Enemies, against whom they war, and such as then can take Prisoners, but neuer any of their owne people or Country.

They

The situation of the Country, where the men doe inhabite that have heads like vnto Dogges.

Americk Vesputius, the first discoverer of America.

What kind of Language is vsed among these men, and the manner of their behaviour.

Of their ornaments for pride and brauery.

Whatsoener flesh or fish they eate, it is not raw, but boyled or roasted.

Plin. in Lib. 7. Cap. 4. Aulus Gellius in Lib. 9. cap. 7

People discovered within these last 60. yeares. &c.

An auncient custome obserued amongst them, whereby their heads doe seeme like Dogs heads.

The cynocephales enemies vnto long beards, and how they vse to weare their haire.

Their stature and manner of dwelling.

Their warre with their Neighbours.

Their Ships, and the number of their men of warre.

What manner of Weapon they war withall.

No vse of Gold, Siluer, or any other metall among them.

They are very hatefull against such, as haue their Beards long, or suffer the hair to grow much vnder their arme pits, and in other places of the bodie, be they men or women, but pull and teare it away very stearnely. Yet the hairy locks on their heads, they weare somewhat long, hanging all downe behind, but none before: as for the women, they vse their haire of like length as we doe, and weare it both before and behinde. They are people of goodly stature, and sightly presence, all sauing the face, which much resemb eth a flat-nosed Dogge, and is done by Artifice, as I haue already sayde. They obserue many of the fashions of the Prouëcaux, and it is thought, that they dwell almost in the like Climate, beeing all of an Oliue colour. They haue no Citties or Townes, but dwell onely in Villages, which are not farre distant one from another.

They maintaine war against a neighbouring people, whom they call Margaias, that haue the very same manners, behaviour of life, and Dogges heads, like theirs; and them they seeke to pursue; both by Land and sea. They make Boats or Vessels of the barks of great Trees, like Shippes, ioyning one vnto another, without failes: and they vse to surprize their enemies, without any seruice of Heralds of Armes, to denounce or proclaime their warre: yet their Armies do commonly consist of fiftene or twentie thousand men, and sometimes of lesse. The Weapons wherewith they defend themselves, are Bowes of a fadome and a halfe long; and their Arrowes halfe a fadome in length, which are sharp pointed with the bones of a certaine Fish, & woundeth very dangerously. They vse also great Maces or Clubbes of Brasile wood. And they neuer giue ouer battel, vntill the night doth hinder them: then each man returneth to his abiding, leading his prisoner (if he haue anie) along with him.

They haue not any vse, either of gold or Siluer, or any other Metall, neyther of any Cloath, Wollen, or Linnen. The reason why these people with Dogges heads, do war one against another, being of the same Language, complexion, or colour, and custome in life; is not to vsurp on their Lands, or the riches of eyther, or to make them tributarie, or for glorie and honor, neither doe they eate their prisoners for gourmandize, or thorough want of victuals. But it hath been held from all Antiquity, as well on the one side, as the other, and stil they continue the same opinion, that they did eate each others predecessors. And therefore he that is the Conqueror, bringing prisoners from the warre, whether they be men or women, they kill them; and solemnly eate them with their friends, boyled and roasted on a grate of green wood, made in forme of a Gridyron, exalted somewhat higher from the ground, then our custome is, and he that hath doone most seruice, slaine and eaten, is the most honoured.

They haue no vse of bred also among them, as we in these parts: but in steade thereof, they haue two kinds of Rootes, which they call Aypi and Maniot, the nature whereof, is, to grow in the Ground (within the space of three or foure Moneths) as great as a mans Thigh, and in length a foot and a halfe, som more, and some lesse. VWhen they are gathered, the women (for the men are not busied therabout) after they haue dried them ouer a Fire, on their high wooden Gridyrons, by brusing them vpon certaine sharpe-pointed stones while they are greene, or else punning the on pieces of flat smooth wood, they bring them to resemble meal or Flower, which they seeth with water, in a great earthen Vessel, stirring it still with a good bigge staffe, till it bee like a Poultrisse, or very pleasing boyled meat, light and crusty, answerable in taste to the * Pain Mollet of Paris. As concerning this Aypi, it is not only very good in Dough or Flower, and so to be boyled: but also being sodden to dry dust, it then hath the rellish of Chestnuts, as the Marrons of Lyons. They can neuer make any bread of the Flower of those roots.

They haue a kind of Grain or Corne, which they call Anaty, and they of Peru tearme it Maiz, but elsewhere, they name it Corne of Turkey, or of the Sarrazins. For wantonneffe and curiosity, it is sown in many parts of France, it being a flatte Graine, Tawny of colour, and sometimes very ruddy. They boyle that also with water, but it is nothing so pleasing as the other, made of the fore-named Rootes. They sometimes do eate the raw Paste of the Rootes, and of Maiz likewise, though it

The reason of this peoples warring one with another.

No bread vsed among them, but matter made of Rootes and after boyled.

The manner how they vse those Rootes.

* A very light, crusty and saouory white bread, full of eyes, leauen and salte.

Anaty and Maiz, a kind of Corne which they vse to eate, and some of it is sown in France.

it be very thinne: yet they can conuey it dexteriously into their mouths, without any shame or soyling themselues.

They haue no foure-footed Beastes, Domesticke, or made tame, but the men do exercise Hunting, not only for Venison, but also to kill other most harmefull Beasts. The first and cheefest Beasts of chase among them, and tearmed by the name of Venison, is one that is halfe a Cowe, and halfe an Assle, pertaking of both those Natures, being of the greatnesse and grosnesse of a Cow, but without any Hornes, and they call him a Tapirassou. And heere is it to be remembred, that they haue not any such Beasts there, as are among vs. They hunt also another Beast, which they call a Seouassous, participating in the kinde of a Hart and Hinde: yet nothing so great as those among vs, nor horned likewise. Another they haue, which is a kinde of Wilde Boare, and they call him Toiassou, that hath a hole in the Chine bone of his backe, whereby he respireth and receyueth winde. Then they haue a straunge kinde of Pigge, which they term Argoniti. Also, a kinde of Hare, cald by them Tapitis. More, they haue great store of red Rats, that liue in their Woods, and the flesh of them is very delicate to eate. Then they haue another Beast, tearmed Pag, about the bignesse of a mean Mastie Dog, his head being of diuers colours, and he is able to do much harme; yet his flesh hath almost the selfsame tast as our Calfe or Veale. There is also another creature, called Taton, which is a kinde of Hedge-hogge.

They do commonly eat Crocodiles, which are no way hurtfull to them: for, as they take them out of the Riuers, they giue them to their children to play withall, before they kil them, beeing of the bignesse of a mans Thigh, and more in length, and they cal them Jacraes. They eat also great Lizards, not green as ours are, but Gray; hauing their skins as slick as our little Lizards, and they take them on the Riuers sides, like as wee doe our Frogges.

They mingle likewise amongst their meats, Serpents, as great as a mans arm, and as long as an Eele of Paris* measure: they haue no venom in them, and they seeth them in great wodden Trunkes. I do not inferre heereby, that they haue no other Serpentes; and principally in their Riuers, where they are to be found of great length and bignesse, as green as Grasse, and the byting of them is verie dangerous.

They haue Lizards also, Venomous and horrible, as bigge as the bodye of a man, and they make a dreadfull noise or hissing. Their Toads are as great as the head of a man, yet they serue them for food, without taking away either the skin or belly, as they do of other beastes. They vse to hunt another Beast, which they do name Ianouara, and is a great deuourer, killer, and eater of men: this Beast, they pursue to his Denne, and there kill him, by multiplicity of Arrowes shot at him. They haue Apes, Monkies, and Marmosets; but they are little, in comparison of others.

They feede also on Fowles and Birds, as Turkey hennes, and their owne common Hennes: but they hold their Egges to be Venomous; and therefore eat none of them, neither do the Hennes lay any, but very seldome. There is great store of Indian Duckes or Mallards, but they eat none of them, neither any other heauie Fowle whatsoever it bee, because their gate and flight is very lumpish & heauy. They vse to feed on Pheasants, which are as grosse and great as our very biggest Capons heere among vs. And of two kinds of Partridges, woodculuers, Turtles, and of many other Fowles, far differing from those in these Countries, that haue their feet and beakes very crooked, like vnto our Parrats, and other of that kinde, and aboue al thinges else, they are very fairely plumed with feathers. In like manner, the best and goodliest Parats of the World, are in those Countries both great and small.

There are also Battes, or Reremice, no way like to ours but very great, which enter into their houses in the night time; and if they finde any one sleeping, that hath his feet naked or discouered out of his lodging, they will pecke and suck the blood betweene his great toes, in great quantity, without the parties feeling any thing. There are Scorpions likewise, as poysonous as those in these partes; and they know how to kill by picking, as others naturally do.

And as they are thus stored with four-footed Beastes, Fowles, Birdes, and creeping

What flesh of Beasts are most common among them, for their chase and hunting.

Tapirassou, halfe an Cow and halfe an Assle.

Seouassous, like a Hart and Hinde.

Toiassou their wilde Beare.

Argoniti a Pig. Tapitis a Hare. Red Rattes.

Pag a kinde of mastiue Dogge.

Taton a Hedge-hogge.

They eate Crocodiles, Serpents, Lizards, Toades, and such like with out any danger.

* Three foot, two thurds of an inch, and the fiftieth part of a foot.

Venomous Lizzards.

Toads as big as a mans head, and good meate.

Ianouara a rauerous Beast that feedeth on men.

Of what kindes of Fowles and Birds they vse to feed on.

Indian Duckes or Mallards. Pheasants. Partridges. Woodcockes. Turtles.

The sayrest Parrats in the world, are among these people.

Battes or Reremice, that sucke mens blood.

How and after what manner they catch F. sh.

ping Creatures, though different from ours: so we are to credit the like, concerning Fishes, as well in the fresh Riuer, as the Sea. Which they vse to take, some with their Bowes or Arrowes, baites of fat Lard, and others, by swimming, which they diue for into the bottom of the Waters. Some also, doth make vse of the Line, after the order of Angling, and they make Flower of some Fishes, after they haue well dried them ouer the fire, and then they eat it so, or else baked or boyled. Their Fishing hookes are made of Thornes, and we must know, that they are the best swimmers in the world. We may constantly credit as much, concerning the diuersitie of their trees & fruits; as of the contrarietie of their beasts.

I haue seene a Dozen of these men at Rouen, which the Normans brought home with them, who had a braue and Soldierlike behauiour, yet neuer would be couered with any garments, how hot or cold soeuer it were. They are not vnder obedience to any Kings, but the most ancient of them doth command in their warres, and make Orations to the rest, that they may fight the more valiantlie. And aboue all they assure them, that if they behaue themselues Couragiously, their soules shall passe ouer beyond the Mountaines, to dance, leape, and leade a sprightly & Iouiall life, with their worthy predecessors. They also that are ancient and eldest among them, doe prohibit the beating of their Wiues, because they will (many times) smite them down to the ground, with vnreasonable blows of an vnfitting staffe, especially, when they are iealous of them. He that marrieth most Wiues, is the most esteemed, and yet we must not conceite, that a man may lawfully take what Maid he pleases, but hee must equire her first of her Parents, as we do in these parts, and if refusal be made, there must not any quarrell grow thereon, but vpon agreement, the Nuptials are performed.

In the interim while, and very respectfully, they do naturally obserue some degrees of Consanguinity, for the Son neuer marrieth with his Mother, nor the Brother his Sister; other degrees of Parentage they do not keepe. They hate to the death a couetous miser, that wil giue nothing: but they are glad and reioice in liberal minded men, and such a one, as will talke or discourse with them; Also; they are verie knowledgeable of any kind of fauour done them.

They content not themselues, no more then other Nations do, to vse water onely for their drinke, but haue an artificijall kind of Beuerage, which they make in this manner. The Women cutte the Rootes of Aypt and Maniot, into final slices, or champe them in their mouthes, without swallowing down; or tear them with their fingers, and then put them into an Earthen Vessel, boiling them ouer a fire, and stirring them continually with a sticke. But being boyled a-while, they take it from off the fire, and then it purifieth it selfe like vnto wine. They doe the like, with the graine of great * Millet, or Hirse. Heere wee are to vnderstand, that before they mash these Rootes, or Sarrazin Millet, they cut them in halfes, and hold this superstition; that if men meddle in the making of ths drinke, it is not worth anie thing. These Beuerages haue a good strong taste, and if anie one take more thereof then reason requireth, it wil make him drunke. They drinke not in their time of eating; but, after they haue dined or supped: and they terme it by the name of Canouin.

There are manie of the minde, that these Cynocephales are verie hairy, saying; that they haue heard it credibly reported by some of credite, that they haue seene them. Most certaine it is, that the brauest and lustiest men among them, that would prepare themselues to be present at some marriage feast, or the eating of a taken prisoner by some intimate friend of theirs in the warre; and thereupon had made a solemne inuitation, doe vse to chafe and rub their bodies with a certain Gumme, whereon afterward they soe stick Feathers in the Gumme; and being thus furnished, men would imagine them to be hairie; and this is the truth of their hairinesse.

Before the French, Spaniards, and Portugals frequented with them, they knew no vse of Axes or Sawes, whereby to fell their woods, but onely made a fire at the roote of a Tree, which beeing burned, caused the whole bodie to fall. Then, setting the trunkes of Trees one against another, intending them to serue for their dwelling Houses, they couered them with the broad large leaues of certaine Trees

What manner of drinke they vse, and how it is made.

* Called by some Sarrazin Millet, French wheat, Buck-wheate, or Boymong.

A lye, and fable, that these people are very hairy.

No vse of Axes or Sawes among them.

How they vse to build their dwelling houses.

Flower for Bread made of Fishes.

Cynocephales the best Swimmers.

Cynocephales seene at Rouen, by the Authour.

Of their Commaunders in warre, and their Orations.

Against beating their wiues.

He that marrieth the most wiues, is the most commended.

Degrees of Marriage among them.

Couetousnes hated among these people.

Trees, which they wrought together so industriously, as no raine could fall in vpon them any way. They do yet continue this manner of building among them, hauing no wals or other defences to their houses.

Commerce
betweene the and the Christians.

The Christians in their Commerce with the, do giue them Kniues, Combs, Belles, Pins, Points, Fish-hookes, little Looking-Glasses, and other Wares of slender value: and they (in recompence of them) do returne vnto the Christians diuers kinds of victuals, which they very gladly do bring them aboard to their Shippes: As also Brasile Wood, cut into round Blockes or Trunkes, as we see them heere among our Merchants. For if they were not cut round in that manner; the people (being naked) should hurt and wound their Armes and bodies very grieuouly.

Goodes and victualles brought to the Christians.

They were not wont to haue any vse of Candles; but contented themselues with such light, as they receiued from Fires made of Wood in the night time. But now (of late) they haue bin taught to make Candles of Waxe: for in that Country they haue Bees, which resemble our little Flyes in these partes, that make their Waxe and Hony, in hollow Trees in their Forrests. They haue no other Iustice among them, but if any one doe offend another in quarrelling, as by breaking a Leg or Arme, beating out an eye, or any other iniury: he rendereth the like to him againe, if he can, and all his Kinred and Friendes are assistant to him in the cause, which being so done, they remaine satisfied: This is all their forme of Iustice.

No vse of Candles among them, till of late time.

What manner of Iustice is vsed among them.

Now, as I haue already saide, there are many Prouinces that liue after this manner, without Temples or Churches, and without assemblies, eyther for Prayers to God or Idolles: as they doe in other Countries, siue hundred Leagues off from thence. Some of of which Countries are called Ouetacas; others, Margaias; others, Tonoupinambouts; and many other, that manage Warre one against another, as hath beene declared.

They pray not to God, neyther in assemblies, nor in particular.

Their belcefe and Religion.

They belieue the immortalitie of the soule, and that such Men as haue fought brauely for the defence of their Countrey: shall goe and liue with * Topan,

* The God of Peace and Ioy.

after their decease, and dance and drink in goodly Gardens, with their Predecessours and Friends. And on the contrary, that Theeues and Villaines shall bee tormented of * Aygnan, that is a Deuill: of whom, such persons haue visibly beene seen to be beaten and tormented in this World, in company among many others, as some haue faithfully auouched, that haue seene it. Behold what I haue gathered from the Writings of Plinie, and other good Authors, that spake of a certaine people which haue Dogges Heades: beside, what I haue else collected out of faithful Writers, that haue frequented with these people, and spoken and conuersed with them; as the Lord of Villegaignon, and of Lery.

* A Deuill visibly seene of them sometimes.

10

20

30

40

50

Marcus Paulus the Venetian, assureth vs, that there is an Island, named Daganian, the Inhabitants whereof haue heades like vnto Dogges, and liue by feeding on humane Flesh. And euen now it appeareth vnto me (as a matter nothing differing from our purpose) to set downe a Historie, not of Men that haue Dogges Heads: but of a people, who are credible auouched, to be originally descended of a Dog and a Woman.

Marcus Paulus
Venet. in Lib.
3. Cap. 21.
The Isle of Daganian.

The Historie which Ioannes de Barros, Chronickler vnto the King of Portugall, hath Written, is much more strange and wonderfull, then all that hitherto hath beene said, if wee had as sufficient Testimonie to beleue it. Writing on the affaires of Pegu, as also that of Sian, which are on the other side of the River Ganges, he saith; that all the people of these Kingdomes doe hold it for a matter most certaine and indubitable, that this Countrey was wholly desert and Mountaine, not inhabited by any person, but generallie possessed by sauage Beastes, so that a great number of men were not sufficient to dwell there, without vnauoyable daunger. It chanced, that a Shippe, which came from the Kingdome of China; by torment and tempestuous violence of Weather, was driuen vpon this Coast, all the people in the Shippe being dead and lost, onely a Woman, and a great euill faouered Dogge excepted. This Dogge defended her from

Ioannes de Barros Chrono-grapher to the King of Portugall.

Of a strange People descended of a Dogge and a woman.

A brutish behaviour among saluage people.

from the sauage beastes, which else (by many fierce attempts) had surely deuoured her. She being of young and tender yeares, and not acquainted with the courses and modesty becomming Women: permitted the dogge to haue vse of her body, and so conceiuing, was (at due time) deliuered of a Sonne. Ha- uing brought vp her Son to good and able yeares, he likewise had knowledge of his Mother, and begat diuers other Children of her, that afterward multi- plied in such liberall manner, as these two great Kingdomes grew to be inha- bited. And for this cause, they holde Dogges in very reuerent respect, by beleeuing most assuredly, that they had their originall and beginning from the I am very certaine, that (at this instant) the people of these Kingdoms are most ciuill, not pertaking any way in a dog- gish nature, and each man may credit this, as himselfe best liketh.

Volateranus in Lib. 25.

Hermippus. alleadging Aristotle for his Authour, saith; that there is a peo- ple in Æthiopia, which are ruled or com- manded by a Dog, euen as if they were to obey his iniunctions.

CHAP. XIX.

Of Omphale, a Lady of Lydia, who by the helpe of other Weomen, made her selfe Commaunder of that Prouince, by rea- son of the insolent liues of the Lydians.

Clearchus in Commen. ca. 14. The Lydians vsed Eunuchs in stead of weomen.

Clearchus in his Com- mentaries, hath left written, that the Ly- dians were the first that expelled Weo- men, and made choyce of Eunu- ches (to sport withall) in stead of them: proceeding on also in such licentious follie, especially such as were the migh- tiest among them; that they would vse the Wiues and Daughters of other Men: And to a certaine place, reamed by them D o v x (it may be on the same occasion) they would conuey them by force, or faire meanes, and their vjolate their chastities: growing to such a beast-

10

20 30

40

50

ly and dishonett manner of lte, as ma- king spare of no body, or without any difference of Sexe; they dealt with men and Boyes; in stead of their owne Wiues. For which cause, Omphale, a Lady of stout and manly courage, not forgetting such a dishonourable iniury; grew offended at this brutish kinde of life. And procuring the assistance of o- ther Weomen of that Countrey: shee became Lady and Mistresse over the Men, onely through their basenesse and negligence; and exercised (deserued) no meane punishment vpon them.

Omphale ra- kerh on her to reforme the mens bru- tish liues.

Moreover, to reuenge the disgrace- full wrongs done to Weomen, and to pay them in Coyne of the same valua- tion: the Women assembled with their Daughters, in the same place called D o v x: where, in meece despight of their Husbands, they suffered them- selues to be dishonored by their Slaves and Seruants, or any other that would abuse them. In this sort she reuenged her Sexe, and remained Gouvernesse of all Lydia.

CHAP. XX.

A notable sleight or Stratagem, performed by Melanthus the Athenian, being in sin- gle Combate with Xanthus, Lord of the Beotians.

The Athenians being in con- trouersie with the Beotians, concerning their Confines and Limitations, and could haue no agreement toge- ther: after they had fought many bat- taitles, both sides concluded, that their Princes combatting body to body; should cease all the difference, and the Conquerour to enioy the Landes that were in controuersie: Xanthus was then Governour of the Beotians, a man verie valiant, and well experienced in Armes: and Thimotes ruled the Athenians, a man more apt for matters of peace, then any way disposed to Warre. Yet being desirous of his Countries Welfare, though himselfe refused the Combate: hee proclaimed by the sound of Trum- per,

Discord be- tweene the Athenians and Beotians about their lands.

The disc- o- rence be- tweene the two Gouer- nours.

peft, that whofoever had the courage to fight againft Xanthius, he would furrender the principallitie of Athens vnto his good fucceffe. Which being vnderftood by Melanthus, a man of doubtleffe Spirit: he accepted the Combate, and the day being come whereon it was to bee performed; they both entred the Lifts, and began to declare their manhood each againft the other. But Melanthus finding Xanthius to bee ouerftong and hardy for him: deuifed a fudaine Shift to help himfelfe withall, faid: I maruaile thou cameft not alone into the felde, according to our compact, but haft brought another to helpe thee? Xanthius crediting the words of Melanthus, turned his face, to fee who durft offer him fuch an iniurie to his reputation: in which little fpace, Melanthus (taking aduantage therof) gaue him a great ftroke with his Cemitarie, which cleauing his head, caufed him instantly to fall down dead in the felde. By this meanes hee got the Empire of the Athenians, who (in memory of his Act) instituted certaine Feaftes, that lafted for foure whole daies together, which they called Apatenores, or Apatenores, that is to fay, of fraud and deceit.

An ingenious Stratagem to over-reach an enemy.

Feaftes of Fraude.

CHAP. XXI.

The politique deuife of Anaximenes, of Lampfacum, which he vfed to Alexander the Great, for the fafety and freedom of his Countrey.

Alexander the Great, hauing vanquifhed Darius, and ouerthrowne all his countreies: determined to reuenge himfelfe on the Inhabitants; that had giuen ayde to Darius againft him. Which when the people of Lampfacum heard, not knowing what counceill to take againft the anger of Alexander: concluded in the end, to fend Anaximenes on Ambaffage to him, who formerly had beene well knowne to Phillip, Alexanders Father, &

Alexanders cruell intent againft the Subiects of Darius.

* A Towne by Hellefont, on the coaft of Asia.

also himfelfe. He had commiffion, to appeafe his fury by all the beft meanes he could deuife, as alfo to craue pardon of him in their behalfe, for whatfoeuer offences they had committed againft him. Alexander hearing of his comming, began to confider with himfelfe, wherefore Anaximenes was thus fent vnto him: and therupon, that he might haue a iuft and lawfull excufe, to refufe all grace and fauour; he follemnely fwore an oath, not to graunt any thing that Anaximenes desired. This likewife came to the eares of Anaximenes, a Man of prompt, ready, and dexterious capacity; who as readily bethought him of a fubtile inuention, to crosse the inconuenience purpofed by the King, and as his refusall fhould be rash and peremptory, euen fo would he meete with him, by applying a contrary fenfe in wordes, to the true intent of his Embaffie. Beeing brought before Alexander, hee humbly declared the caufe of his comming, and to defire an efppeciall fauour of him. Which was, to deftroy and ruinate the City of Lampfacum, from the toppe to the bottome, and to make publique fale of all, as well Cittizens, as other men, Women and Children. When Alexander had heard the Ambaffadors request, deliuered with fuch earnestneffe of fpirit: hee qualified his intended rage, perceiuing that (againft his will) he muft needs be charitable, and maintaine his owne oath, and fo pardoned the people of Lampfacum. Thus Anaximenes, by wifedome and good difcretion, faued his Countrey worthily, and was moft honourably received by his fellow Cittizens at his returne: and fo long as he liued afterward, was iuftly reuerenced of them all, as the fole preferuer of them and theirs.

Alexander preuented in his owne bloody purpose by Anaximenes.

Wifedome doth eafily forefee and preuent the greateft dangers.

Alexander conquered very honourably by Anaximenes.

CHAP. XXII.

An excellent example of faithleffe and double dealing, in a Wife towards her Husband: Approoued by the memorable Hiftorie, of Canarus the honourable Celtique Gaule, and Erippe the Mylefian, Wife to Xanthus.

After

Read Parthenius Nicenus, a learned Greek Author.

* A Towne in the borders of Ionia and Caria.

The Gauls carrie away with them the Myleſian weomen.

Xanthus, a man of great honour in Miletum.

Xanthus traualleth, to recover againe his loſt wife.

The meeting of Xanthus with his wife Erippe.

After that the Gauls had trauesed thorow Italy, Pannonia, and Greece; they came to Ionia, a Prouince of Asia; ſituate on the Sea, which they likewise raged, robbing and pilling there many Citties and Townes. It hapned, that in the yeare of our ſaluation; 300. the ſacrifices of Ceres, called Theſmophories; were celebrated in the Citie of * Miletum: the wiues and women being then aſſembled in the Temple, ſom little diſtance off from the Citie. During the Feaſt time, a troupe of Gauls came running vpon the vnprovided Myleſians; and caried their wiues away with them: the moſt part whereof were ſoone after redeemed, by payment of great ſums of Mony for them. But ſome of thoſe men that belonged to Celtique Gaule, would not part with their prizes of Weomen: but led them thence into their owne Countrey, and brought them to familiar conuerſation with them. Among theſe thus conducted thence, was a moſt faire young Lady, named Erippe, wife to one Xanthus, a man of Noble birth; and one of the worthieſt perſons in the whole Countrey. She had left a young Son of hers, aged about two yeares, with his father at Miletum, who was vtterly comfortleſſe and deſolate, for the loſſe of his faire wife, whom he loued moſt intirely, & ſold the moſt part of al his goods, conuerting them into a great ſumme of Gold and Siluer, wherewith he betook himſelte to trauaile, in hope to recouer againe ſo deare a loſſe. Being ſhippt to Sea, he firſt came into Italy; where hee was knowne by ſome that were kinde well-willers to him. From thence, accompanied with ſome of thoſe friends, he went to Marſailles, and then into Celtique Gaule, direclly to the houſe of him that had his wife; who was one of the greateſt Lords in the Countrey, named Cauarus, and whoſe ſeruants (according to the gracious cuſtom of the country) granted him friendly entertainment.

So ſoone as he was entred into the Houſe, he beheld his Wife, and ſhe her Husband; who ran and embraced each other very louingly, ſhe conducting him further into her Chamber. When the Lord of the houſe was come, Erippe acquainted him with the arriual of her Husband, that he had trauailed thither for her ſake, and to pay her ranſome: which he no way gaine-ſaide, but commended the louing mind of Xanthus, that he wold oppoſe his life to ſuch dangers, both by Sea & Land, and make ſo long a iourney to recouer his wife. So, calling his friendes together, he gaue him very magnificent entertainment: cauſing Erippe to lodge with Xanthus all the feſting time; for it was an anciēt cuſtom obſerued among them, to eate their refections couched on their beds. Afterward, he demaunded of him, what ſum of Mony hee had brought for her ranſome? Whereto Xanthus replyed; That the vttermoſt he could make, was 1000. Crownes. The Gaule then commanded him, to make foure parts of the ſumme; and to take three of them for his Wife and Son, and to leaue him the fourth part, as the ranſom for his wife: wherewith the Myleſian was wonderfully contented, and returned him many heartie thankes. But Erippe ſleeping that night with Xanthus; was greatly offended with him, and vſed theſe words vnto him, in meere extreimity of anger. Alas my husband and friend, I am ſorry for the anſwere which you haue made to my Lord, becauſe you haue not ſo much Mony to pay him, as you promiſed, and he expected. It is impoſſible that you ſhould me thence with ye, for I perceiue we are both vtterly vndone, except you keep your word with him. Miſerable that I am, would it had pleaſed the Goddeſſe, that you had not beene ſo liberall of your tongue. Good Wife (anſwered Xanthus) take you no care, for al things wil go well with vs, and now I wil diſcouer the truth vnto ye. I haue a thouſand Crownes more, beſide them promiſed to the Lord, which are ſowed vp in the ſhoes of my followers and friends. For I did perſwade my ſelfe, not to finde a Barbarian, (ſo did the Greekes vſe to call all other nations) ſo gentle and benigne as this man hath declared himſelfe, and that hee would demaund a much greater ranſome.

Erippe committed this ſecret to memory, & the day following, ſo ſoone as ſhe was riſen out of her bed; ſhee went to find Cauarus, ſpeaking to him in this manner. My Lord, ſo pleaſe you to credit me, I haue this night vnderſtood good tidings for you. For I haue ſo cunningly wormed my

LIII husband

An ancient cuſtome obſerued among the Gauls.

Extraordinary courteſie in Cauarus the Gaule.

The words of Erippe to her Husband.

The anſwere of Xanthus to his wife, wherby the betrayed him.

The falſhood and treachery in a ſuppoſed louing wife to her husband.

husband in the nose; that he hath discovered vnto me, more Mony then hee acquainted you withall: as namelie, a thousand crownes, sowed vp in the shooes of his friends and followers. Wherein he hath villainously lyed to you, and mocked you heere in your own country and house, where you haue so honourably entreated and vsed him. Breake then your word with him, and take possession of all his Mony and furnishment; yea, kill him, for you haue iust occasion so to do. And for mine owne part, I most earnestly desire ye to doe it; because you shall therein performe the greatest good (beyond all thinges else) that can happen vnto me: for I beare him deadly hatred, and neither Country, or Child, do I affect or couet so much, as I am desirous of your company, and wish you to finish the remainder of my dayes.

Most vile and wicked speeches in a wife.

Cauarus ceaseth to loue Erippe, and intendeth iust punishment for her double dealing.

Cauarus was greatly amazed at the words of this Woman, whom now he began to hate, and purposed to punish, as her double dealing and villainy iustlie deserued. When Xanthus prepared himselfe to depart thence, the honourable minded Celte, louingly graunted him leaue and licence so to do; both for his returne home to Ionia, and to take his wife Erippe along with. But to expresse his kindnesse the more, he called diuers of his friends and seruants, purposing to accompany them so farre as the Mountains, where ended the Confines of Celtique Gaule. Being come thither, he said, that there he would offer sacrifice to the Gods, before they parted from each other; which was much liked by all the company, who instantly provided a very low Altar, and presented a Lamb, or fom other beast for the oblation, bound in due manner for starting away. Neuerthelesse, he commaunded Erippe to hold it fast, whereto shee declared herselfe very obedient. Then, exalting his Courtlax to strike the stroke; in stead of letting it fall on the beast, he gaue it full strength on the necke of Mylelian Erippe, so that her head fell forthwith from her shoulders. Xanthus was not a little astonished, when he beheld the Celte thus to handle so bright a beauty; and now hee had no hope of his owne life, beside the losse of all his Mony, being thus alone in a strange Country, and in the power of a barbarous Man, who had committed such an inhumaine act. But he found himselfe deceiued; for the iust Gaule, not Cauarus offereth sacrifice, before his departing from Xanthus.

The death of Erippe for her falshood.

onely comforted him with most kinde words: but also related the double dealing, and wicked treason of his Wife towards him. And (quoth he) till thus she would haue betrayed so louing a Husband, I neuer conceiued a bad thought of her: but so vile a Wife deserued not to liue with a man of such vertue. Here, take all the Coyne thou broughtest hither for me, bear it all hence with thee, for I will not haue one farthing of thee. And if thou stand anyway in neede of me; do but speake the word, & no spare shall be made, of whatsoeuer thou wilt desire. Depart (when thou pleasest) towards Ionia, and let the Milesians vnderstand, the deserued chastisement of thy disloyall wife, to remaine as an example for all wiues to their husbands. Let the also know, that the Gauls (whom you vse to tearm Barbarians) are courteous: and do exercise no cruelty, except it bee on Women of such wicked minds.

The extraordinary loue and friendship of Cauarus extended toward Xanthus, and their courteous parting.

CHAP. XXIII.

The reuolt and rebellion of the first Slaues: And of Drimacus, a valiant Man, who was their Captaine.

He first men that bought any Slaues, were they of the Isle Chios, who vsing them very inhumainely: gaue them occasion to reuolt from them, and hauing created a valiant man to bee their Captaine, named Drimacus, they went to liue in craggy and stony Mountaines, for their better securitie against their Maisters; descending thence oftentimes vpon them, to work what villainies themselves pleased, bringing pillage and booties daily from them. The Inhabitants of Chios had many battailes with them, but perceiuing it impossible to ouercome them: they tooke a truce for a certaine time with them, during which cessation of warre, Drimacus gaue assurance by hostages on eyther side, and came to parle with them in this manner as followeth.

Yon men of Chios, I haue determined for your greater good; that for the time

The men of Chios bought the first Slaues.

Truce taken with the Slaues for a limited time.

The Oration of Drimachus to the men of Chios.

For: ed T

Drimachus deli- uereth them his Ring, as a confirmation of his promise

A league of peace establi- shed firmly betweene them.

Drimachus grow- ing aged & weake, desi- reth to lue no longer.

time hereafter, there shall be no more war or incursions among vs: provided, that on your part, there be no default of performing our peace. And for this cause I am come hither on the behalfe of our whole Army, that haue revolted, and rebelled against you, only through the intollerable oppressions which you enforced them to suffer. I say to you, in name of them all, that if you will permit the Inhabitants of this Country, to furnish vs with necessarie foode, paying iustly and truly for all such provision: we will cease our wonted rages and Thefts, and make an inuiolable League of peace with you. And as an earnest or honest confirmation of my words; I will leaue this Ring with you, and while you keepe it, I will not at any time hereafter, eyther buy or receiue any Slaue or Seruant, that shall flye away from you, till I haue first vnderstood the cause of his departure. If then it shall appeare vnto me, that hee hath been mistreated by you, beyond measure or ability of sufferance: you must then (of necessity) yeelde consent, that he shall remaine among vs. But if I perceiue that hee hath no iust reason to forsake your seruice: I will not onelie severely punish him, but will send him also backe againe to his Maister. These conditions duely considered on: you are freely deliuered from our molestations, and we fully satisfied in all our requests.

The Inhabitants of Chios, hauing heard the honest demaunds of Drimachus: concluded to accept peace, on the forenamed conditions, by means whereof, they were neuer afterward assailed by the Slaues; but liued secure from all thefts and incursions. Neither did any Slaue (at any time) flye from his Maister: for they stood more in fear of Drimachus his seuerity, then the very hardest vsage, that could be inflicted vpon them by their Maisters.

This peace continued for many yeares, and Drimachus being growne very aged, his body also (by reason of many woundes formerly receiued) so disabled, that he found himselfe vncapable, of longer governing such an vnrule Armie: on a day, he called a young man aside, whom he earnestly affected, and entreated him to cut off his head, and carry it to the men of Chios, for so hee should be well recompenced and rewarded by the deede; because it would be most pleasing to them of Chios, and a fauour very acceptable to himselfe, dying by the hand of his dearest friend. He vrged moreouer, that he could not die at a more conuenient time, because the ouer-plus of his yeares were irksome to him; and his daies full of paine and anguish, which he was no way able to endure.

This strange motion of Drimachus, could not (at the first moouing) win any place, or induce the young man to so bloody an enterprize: as well, because he imagined, that Drimachus vsed these speeches but to try him, as also in regard that his heart would not serue him, to doe a deed so harsh and vnnatural; because hee stood obliged to him by infinite fauours. Neuerthelesse, so often and earnest were his sollicitations, praying and re praying him (numberlesse times) to kill him, putting the weapon in his hand, and laying downe his head to endure the stroke: that the young man at length (seeing Drimachus so constant in his deliberation, and his importunities no way to be auoyded) smote off his head from his Shoulders, and hauing given buriall to the body, he deliuered the head to the Men of Chios. Whereat the people were exceedingly ioyfull, applauding and clapping their handes iocundly, for deliuerance from so great an enemy. And as a deserued recompence, they gaue manumission and liberty to him, that had done the deed, with a very bountifull summe of Mony beside.

The vse of Slaues in Grece, was very great in elder times: as Timotheus writeth, that the Corinthians had aboute four hundred thousand Slaues. And Etesicles saith in his Histories, that in the Region of Attica, a description was made of such men; and the number was found to consist, of foure hundred and thirtie thousand Slaues. Xenophon declareth, that Nicias, the Sonne of Nicerates, had a thousand Slaues alone to himselfe, which he gaue vnto Soscius, a man of Thrace, to dig in his Mines, for finding the veines of Mettals. Aristotle hath recorded, that the Aegenites hadde more then foure hundred thousand Slaues:

Good natures are not easily won to grant vnnatural requests.

The young man smote off the head of Drimachus, and gaue it to the men of Chios.

Thimotheus of the Corinthians Slaues. Etesicles in Hist.

Arist in Lib 7. Cap. 4. de Mund.

Slaues : which number conferred with them of the Romaines, would seeme but small : for some one Romaine had tenne thousand, and some other 20000.

CHAP. XXIII.

At what time Cookes (in daies of Antiquity) began to grow in estimation. Who were the first that began to vse multiplicity of meates : And of many Gourmands and grosse feeders.

The people of Asia were the first that liued out of order in diet.

THE people of Asia were the first, that began to liue void of measure, and without any discretion : which plague (as Titus Linius declareth) entred into Rome, after the victory or Conquest of Asia, and then, Cooks, whom the men of precedent & auncient times, held to bee as most vile and vnecessary Seruants, beganne to grow in some reputation, and the profession which formerly was reputed odious, began to be esteemed an honourable art. The care and endeuour whereof, consisted altogether, in seeking (euery where) appetites for the belly, and what quality of viands might be swallowed vp in gourmandise. Apitius the Romaine, vsurped the glory of this occupation, or beyond all other in his daies, according as Seneca recounteth, saying. Apitius liued in our time, who taught publicly, the science of the Kitchen in that City, where Philosophers formerly had expelled it thence, as the only corruption of youth; and (by his discipline) infected the world, the end whereof was this. When he had spent a thousand Sestertiaes on a Kitchen Dinner, and afterwards robd the publike purse, with the taxations of the Capitole, and in gifts to Princes: he saw himselfe pressed with debts, so that being constrained to cast ouer his accounts; that (al his debts deducted) there remained no more of his owne proper wealth, then an hundred Sestertiaes. Afterward, his credit not seruing to borrow an hundred Sestertiaes, and he ready to sterue with hunger, he dyed, by poysoning himselfe. Plinie called him; The bottomlesse Gulfe of all prodigality and wastfull spenders.

Apitius the Romaine, famous for Gluttony. Seneca in Lib. de Consolat. ad Albin.

Read Dion Nicomus in the life of Tiberius

Plin. in Lib. 7. Cap. 18.

One, named Archistratus, trauailed (very diligently) al Lands & Countries, and crossed the Seas, expressly, and to no other end, but to find out all voluptuous fare, and whatsoever might concerne exceesse in feeding. In his * Gastrologie, he writeth downe the places, where all the best viands are to be had: euen with no lesse study and dilligence, then they that make description of the World, and of their Navigations. Finally, the diuersity of meates grew to such encrease; and so many Instruments were found out for the belly: that Law and order enforced restraint; of superfluous prouision in the Kitchen. Notwithstanding all which, these daies of ours, do surpasse (beyond measure) the great pomps and magnificent Feasts of former ages, when there were diuillishly (if I durst say so) inuented; so manie Lawes, Customes, and Ceremonies of the Table, such store of seruices, different and disguised meats: that the most sumptuous banqueters of the Asians, Medes, Sirabites, Tarontines, yea, of Sardapalus, Xerxes, Claudius, Tiberius, Vitelius, and Heliogabalus, who (as all Historians doe auouch) exceeding all other Nations in the World, in costly preparations for the mouth; yet are valued as nothing, to the pride and prodigalitie of Feastes now adaiies vsed: in regard whereof, the very greatest banquets, may stand as small Breake-feasts or collations, if they were to bee compared with ours.

For, we stand not only, on the delicacy of eating and drinking; but the multiplicity of meats, euen in extremity of abundance, able to tire and wearie * Milo the Crotonian, who at one Supper, did eat vp thirty Loaves of Bread, beside all his other meates. Or Fagonius, who at the Table of Aurelianus the Emperor, deuoured a whole wilde Boare at a meale, beside an hundred Loaves of Bread, and dranke afterward (with a kinde of Pepper or Powder) more then was imagined a whale could do. Moreover, such feasts as are now vsed, would be irksome to Albinus, who (at one supper) did eat vp an hundred Fishes, ten Mellones, five hundred Figs, and three hundred Oysters. Also, to Maximinus the Emperor, who in one day, did eat vp foure hundred pound of Flesh, and dranke

Archistratus the belly trauailer.

* The Art of Gourmandise

The exceffe of these times beyond all antiquity.

Nations and men of greatest disorder in diet.

* Who slew a Bull with his bare hand, & carried him away on his shoulders, and the same day did eat him vp euery morsell. Fagonius the great feeder.

Albinus.

Maximinus the Emperor.

Geta the Emperor.
*Alexand. Nea-polit. in Lib. 5.
Cap. 21.*

Meats serued into the Table, according to the order of the Alphabet.

dranke the eight part of a Tun of wine. And Geta, another Emperour, who saie at the Table three daies together, without rising, and all his meats were serued in according to the order of the Alphabet. To wit, such whose names began with each Letter of the Alphabet; as for example, the Letter P. Pullets, Partridges, Pheasants, Poike, Pyes, Plovers, &c. and so of the other. Seeing then that God and nature hath ordained, that we should eat and drink, for the maintenance of health & strength: what more hurtful and dangerous thing can we do, then to fill the belly with such a number of meats, arteficially composed, and to take more then nature can carry. In the doing wherof, we distemper our bodies with incurable diseases, and by that meanes, procure the shortning of our daies.

CHAP. XXV.

Of those causes, wherby the life time of men or women, are lengthned or shortned.

He naturall cause, of the length or breuitie of mans life, according to the iudgment of som Philosophers, is the ayre: because wee know & perceiue it to be the operative and inductive Instrument, of the vertue of life. Wherfore, according to the proportion of the spirit or ayre; life it selfe is also squared and proportioned. For, when it is over-little; then (by weakness) it abridgeth life, as in mellancholy bodies. And when it is over abundant: it quenchem heat by blowing, as we see the wind to extinguish a Torch or Candle: if it be grosse and thicke, certainly it hindereth the operations of the vitall vertues. Likewise, when it is over-thin or slender, then the party breatheth and respireth very easily. Now, the vndoubted conclusion of Aristotle, & the whole Schoole of other Philosophers, is: that heate and humidity are the beginners and causes of long life in men. That it must needs bee so, for so long time as heate can continue with moysture: it neyther consumeth nor corrupteth; and so long as moysture can be brought and conuerted by the heat; so long (doubtlesse) the life of every mortall body lasteth. The which measure consisteth principally in three things: to wit, in the quantity; secondly, in the quality of the selfesame heat and moysture; and thirdly, in the quality of the members and vessels, wherein they work together, as more amply is declared by Aristotle, in his Booke of life and death.

When then in the body of a Man, any discordance is found, or that the heate and drinesse deuidenth it selfe, from this radicall moysture, or consumeth or corrupteth: it followeth then necessaillie, that the life of the man must needs be shortned. And this diuision or deprauation commeth by the humor of diuers causes, according to the Writings of Phisitians, and naturall Philosophers. And yet notwithstanding, we may note this most easily in Princes, who imagin themselves to bee as good Maisters and Commaunders of their stomackes and bellies, as of all their Subiects. Euerie day, and in all places, they feed only on precious delicates, and sauoury meats, diuersly prepared, & drink diuers kinds of Wines. Now, because a man eateth in much greater quantity, and feedeth beyond measure on meates, which hee findeth to bee sauoury and delicate; it necessarily ensueth, that by this diuersity of viands, the stomach must needs be griened. For by this kind of feeding, the appetite looseth it selfe, ventosities blow vp the belly, trembling of the members are occasioned, Feauers engendred, and in the end death entreth. For this cause was it, that Aristotle said. There is not any thing; that more prolongeth the life of man; then to shun the superfluitie of meates. And nothing more shortneth life, then to adde meate to meate, and continue at banquets. A man should eate to liue, and not liue to eate. Hippocrates kept so good a dyet, that hee could well endure the weaknesse of his body: affecting rather to liue weake and leane, then to dye fat and fullsome.

Men then, but Princes especially, shold not place their affection on eating and drinking; as did the Emperour Gaius, who when he brought him tidings, that the Romaine people were much displeas'd, because his Father Valerianus was

Three things
wherein the measure chiefly consisteth.

*Arist. in Lib. de
Mors et vita.*

The deprauation happene-th by diuersity of causes.

An obseruation concerning Princes.

The danger's ensuing by curiosity in diet.

Arist. ubi supra.

Hippocrates his care of dyet.

Princes shold not delight in grosse feeding.

The Ayre is the operative and inductive instrument of life.

The proportion of life answerable to the proportion of Ayre.

Heate and moysture the beginning & causes of long life.

The Emperor Galen nunded nothing more then his belly.

The Romaine
Empire inuaded by thirty Tyrants.

Seneca writing to Paulinus, concerning the breuity of mans life.

Life is not short to men, but they make it short to themselues

Captaine to the Parthians: turned himselfe to them that stood about him, saying, How now? Haue wee nothing to dine withall? Oh abhominable answer. The same gurmard Emperour, being plunged in numberlesse voluptuous dissolu-tions (for from the paunch, comes your daunce, according to the common Prouerb) when newes were brought him, that Egypt was reuolted against him.
What (quoth he) shal we spread our Tablecloths no more in Egypt? He was so drowned in belly-delights, as hee cared for nothing else, but to make good cheare, and feed his owne guts, being whollie addicted to drunkenesse. Moreover, he suffered weomen (before his face) to gouerne most ignominiously the Empire. And these things were the cause, that the Romaine Empire was inuaded by thirty Tyrants, and that their owne people murdered them.

I will conclude this Chapter, with those reasons deliuered by Seneca, concerning the shortnesse of humaine life.
Phisitions (saith he) cry out, that life is short, and their Art long. One complain-eth, that nature hath granted beastes, to liue five or ten ages; & to men, born for many great matters, a short tearme of life is ordained. We haue no long date of time, and yet we loose the most part of it, for life were long enough, if it might all be wel imployed. But when it glides away by accesse & negligence, and no good action is performed therein: at length, by constraint of the latest necessity, if we haue not learned how to walke, wee shall feele the payment for what is past. For life is not made short to vs, but we haue made it so our selues;
and wee are not needy, but prodigall thereof. Like as magnificent and royall riches, comming into a bad Maisters managing, are suddenly wasted and consumed, and smal store amounteth to infinites, being in the custody of a discreet Guardian: euen so the age of man is of long continuance, to him that is a good disposer thereof. Wherefore then shold we make any complaint against nature, who hath carried her selfe louinglie on mens behalfe? Life is long enough, if thou know how to vse it.

CHAP. XXVI.

Of Lawes and Ordinances, appointed by our Auncients, for the cutting off of excesse in feeding, and superfluities of wearing Garments.

T is no matter to bee meruailed at, if our fore fathers in the first Age liued so long: for they fed on the fruits of the Earth, and contented themselues with very sparing dyet. But after that inordinate appetite, to feede and drinke (beyond compasse or measure) came into vse and frequentation:
the life-time of men began to diminish, and not to containe a quarter of the former space. Which some wise and excellent men (among those reuerend Aun-cients) wel obseruing: they established good and wholesome Lawes to moderate the superfluity of grosse feeding.
C. Fannius, the Romain Consul, ordained by a Law, which was receiued and embraced before the third Punick warre, in the yeare twenty two, after the Law Orchia: that no Romaine should vse at any meale, any other Foule or Bird, then a Hen, not fatted (as in these daies, pulling out their eies to fatten their bodies, and cooping vp Geese in Pens, to make them fat.) Also, that in their banquets, no excesse or dissolution shold abound:
except in the time of the * Saturnalia, and the Playes of the Romaines. Whosoever did other-wise, was sure to bee mulckt at a great payment.

The occasion of this Law (as Sammonicus Serenus saith) was, in regard that the Romaine Common-wealth endured great damages, only thorow the excesse of Feasts and banquets: And it grew to such extreimity among them, that many Sons and Daughters of free condition, lusting after lickorish desire of gurmandise; would thereby make sale both of their liberty and honesty. Beside, so many of the Romaine people, when their heades were much distempered with wine:

Difference
betweene the diet of our fore-fathers of the first age, and ours.

Macrobius.
Saturninus in
Lib. 3. Cap. 17.

* Feests kept in December, in the honour of Saturnus.

Sammonicus Serenus, for the reason of this Law.

Difference betweene this Law, and that of Orchia.

Of the Lawes Didia, Licinia, and Cornelia, and the makers of them.

The Law Cibaria made by the Confull Lepidus.

Stobaeus in Serm. 17.

Lawes against the superfluitie of Garments.

Aelianus in Lib. 14. The Lacedemonians care of their Citizens apparell.

Solons Law for apparell.

wine: would presume in to the Senate, and being drunk, deliuer then their opinions, in matters concerning the weal-publike. The severity of this Law, went beyonde that of Orchia, in that by the precedent; the number of Banquets on-ly were restrained, accordingly it was permitted to euery man; to spend his goods among a few people. But this Law, tearmed Fannia, limited the mea-
 10 sure of expences. The Law Didia, made on the same occasion eightene yeares after; and the Licinia, made by P. Licinius Crassus the Rich, followed it. After-ward; that of Cornelia, so tearmed of Cornelius Sylla the Dictator, and caused it to be put into execution. Yet in these there was no prohibition for the mag-
 20 nificence of Banquets, nor any certaine rule established: but all kinds of victuals were put to a taxation, and vnder-
 30 prized; which fauoured not of any good care, for by this meanes, men were incited to buy great quantities of meates, and so gaue themselues the more to 40 gluttony, though their faculties were neuer so great or vnable. Sylla being dead, the Confull Lepidus made another Law, which was called Cibaria, that is to say, appertaining to food.

The excellent wise man Phocion, con-
 50 structed his Son, to liue soberlie, con- sidering that nature is contented with lit-
 60 tle: but if she be ouer-charged with too many meates; paine and annoyance is enermore ready at hand. As daily wee may obserue in our fields, where a horse is at continuall feeding, without any o-
 70 tlier exercise or imployment; which encreaseth in him diuersity of noysome diseases. Our venerable Ancients, and some great personages among them, made as great ordinances and constitu-
 80 tions, concerning the superfluitie of Habits and Garments, as for meates. Aelianus saith, that the Lacedemonians did not onely make Lawes against the 90 excesse of wearing Garments: but also commandement was giuen to the Ephori (Magistrates of Lacedemon) to haue daily an eye, on the manner of the Cit-
 100 izens garments; and punish rigorously (by the Lawe) such as were noted, to wear any thing vnbecoming, or repug-
 110 nant to modest ornament and clothing. Solon, the Athesian Law-maker, prohi-120 bited by Lawe, that no person should have any more then three Garments. Dyonisius, the younger Syracusane, pun-130 nished all delinquents in this case, verie grieuously: and yet notwithstanding, he would pardon all such as were 140 Theeves and stealers of Garments, to the end; that the Syracusans might the more easily abstaine from the superflu-150 ty of them.

10 Tiberius Caesar inhibited the wearing of Garments of Silke. Statilius, and L. Libonius being Consuls; Alexander Seuerus, Caesar, would not permit his 20 Wife to weare any richer Ornament, or any other Iewelles, then the other Ladies did. And when any pretious
 30 Stones or Jewels were giuen her, hee caused them to be sold, or else to be placed in Temples, for the better beauti-
 40 fying of them, saying; It is not my mind, that any example of superfluitie or expence, shall be deriued from my Wife. Ioannes Du-50 cas, Emperour of Constantinople, beholding the Riches of the Romaine Cit-60 izens, to be wasted and spent on strange Silken Garments, fashioned after the 70 manner of the Asyrians, Babylonians, and Italians, by ingenious art and cunning: ordained by an especiall Edict, that no
 80 any of his Subjects, of what estate or quality soeuer, should weare any such Habits; on paine to be noted of infam-90 y, and obserued the same in himselfe, and familie. Commanding them fur-100 ther, to content themselues with such Garments, as the Romaine Prouinces had formerly made vse of, and were 110 framed by their owne handes. Lewes the Debonnaire, Emperour and King of 120 France, Sonne to Great Charlemaigne, tooke away the wearing of Golde and Silke from his Souldiors, and if he espied 130 any one in his Armie, to haue a Silken Garment, or any Gold embellished on it; he would say vnto him. Thou art the 140 veriest Foole among all Mortals. Is it not sufficient for thee to dye; except thou leaue 150 such a spoile to the Enemy, to make him so rich therby, that (in the end) he shall the more easily, and at his owne pleasure, not onely be 160 able to resist, but also to conquer vs?

In a Synode of many Bishoppes, which was helde at Aix la Chapelle in 170 Germanie, it was decreed, and enioyned to all Bishoppes, and Ecclesiasticall persons, of what order or decree soe-180 uer; to weare any sumptuous habite, as

Alexander A-lexandrian in Lib. 5. Cap. 13.

Dion in the hite of Tiberius Caesar.

Epistola Fulgo-ron in Lib. 1. ca. 4.

John Ducas, Emperour of Constantinople.

Read the Chronicles of Constantinople, where more is to be obserued of this famous exam-ple.

Lewes the meeke, Emperour and King of France, his words to his Souldiors.

This was in the yeare of Christ, 820.

A decree con- cerning Ec- clesiasticall persons.

of Silke, or Scarlet, or to wear any precious Stones on their fingers, as Diamonds, Rubies, Topazes, Saphires, or Emeralds, set in Rings of Gold: except when they were sacrificing to God at the Altar.

The vntruly and misgouerned world wherein we now liue, not able to yeeld any distinguishing of persons.

If all these honest minded people, were liuing now in these times; I beleue, they would blush (with meere conceite of shame) to see vs liue in such an vntruly World, euen from the greatest to the least, and the excessiue liberty of the meaner people, without any exception in degree; to weare such rich garments, Imbroydered with Veluet, in a thousand iagges and cuts, and lacing their Gloakes, Doublets, and Hose, with passement laces of fine Gold. So that now-adaies, we can hardly know a great Lord, Duke, or Earle, from a common Souldiour, or some other meaner man, that hath no greater Wealth, then his Cloake and Sword, and with them to giue his attendance too. And if we speak of the habite of one man only; the King himselfe hardly weareth any fairer, then ordinarily doth a silly Courtier. Which ought not to bee so permitted, for it is easie to iudge, that such ouer-braue new vpstarts, not hauing wherewithal to furnish their expences: this cost must needs be supplied by vnlawfull means. Or else, they are reamed * Enfans de la matre (so called, because they mate all such as they can cozen or cheate) or Court-Stables, Theues, Robbers, Murderers, or Ruffians. King Phillippe Bel, in the yeare 1294. made an ordinance, for the abridging of superfluities in meats and Garments, which I found among some auncient papers of my Predecessors, and because it had neuer bin formerly printed: I was the more willing to insert it heere. To the end, that such as are desirous of note-worthy observations, might perceiue thereby; how much the prices of thinges are enhaunced, since those daies; and how the excesse of meates haue also encreased, to the detriment and ruine of mens bodies. For all that France can boast of, since those times; is only her language, which by little and little) hath greatlie enriched it selfe, euen to the bright luster of perfection: but al good manners are quite out of vse. These are the verie words of the fore-said ordinance.

A meane Courtier as richly inhabited as the King himselfe.

* A Rascally place in Paris, whereat common Gamesters, Cheaters, Conycatchers and Cutpurfes vsually meet.

A worthy Ordinance of King Phillippe Bel.

CHAP. XXVII.

The Ordinance of King Phillip le Bel, against excesse and superfluitie in al manner of persons in the yeare 1294. Extracted out of a little Book, in the chamber of Accounts at Paris, the forty foure Lease.

10

O Cittizen, or Cittizens Wife, shall weare any Greene or Gray, neither any Ermines: but shall free themselus from such as they haue, from Easter next, within a yeare. And shall not weare, or cause to be worne, any pretious Stones, neyther any Girdles, adorned with Gold or Pearles.

For Cittizens and Cittizens wiues.

20

Item, no Clarke, if he be not a Prelate, or established in a Parsonage, or in some dignity; shall weare any Greene, Gray, or Furre of Ermines, no, not so much as in his hood onely.

For Clerks being no Prelates.

30

Item, Dukes, Earles, and Barons, of fixe thousand pounds yearely Rent, or more: may make foure paires of Roabs yearely, but no more, and as many for their Wiues.

For Dukes, Earles and Barons.

All the Prelates shall haue two paire of Roabes only, allowed them for each yeare.

For Prelates.

All Knights shall haue but two paire of Roabes onely, yearely, neither by guift, buying, or any other manner.

For Knights.

40

The Knight that holdeth three thousand pounds in Lands, or beareth most Banners: may haue three pair of Roabs yearely, and no more, and one of those three paires of Roabs, he may make for his Summer wearing.

A Knight of most Banners.

No Esquire shal haue aboute two pair of Roabs, either by guift, by buying, or in any other manner.

For an Esquire.

50

Boyes or Lads, shall haue but one paire of Roabes yearely.

For Boyes.

No Gentlewoman, except she bee a Chastellaine, or Lady of two thousand pounds in Lands, or more: shall haue aboute one paire of Roabs yearely; but if two paire bee permitted her, shee must not then vse any more.

For Gentlewomen.

No

For wax Torches.	No Cittizen, or Cittizens wife, neyther any Esquire or Clearke, except hee be in preferment, or in a Parsonage, or in a greater condition, shall wear or carrie any Torch of wax.	two thousand poundes Tournois , and a boue, may make Robes of more then xii. Sols, and nine Deniers Tournois , the Elle of Paris , and their Wiues of 16. Solles at the most.	Cittizens of good valie, and their wiues.
Orders for dyet in feeding.	None shall addict themselves to great feeding, but of two meats only, and one kind of fat pottage, without any fraude, and in the least eating, to vse one kinde of meat, and some one other choyse dish. If it be vpon fasting dayes, he may haue two Pottages made with Herings, and two other like Meats. One manner of Flesh, shall also serue for one Dish only, and likewise one kind of fish, without any other fraud. Grosse flesh also shall be accounted for good meats, and we do not allow Cheefe for a seruice, except it be made into Paste, or boyled in water.	And these Ordinances are commaunded to be kept, by all Dukes, Earles, Barons, Prelates and Clearkes, and by all maner of people that are in the faith with vs, and vpon the Faith which they are bound to keepe. So that al Dukes, Earls, Barons and Prelates, that dare contradict this ordinance, shall pay an 100. poundes Tournois , as a due punishment, and shall stand bounde to keepe the establishment heereof in their subiectes, of what estate or condition soeuer. And in such manner, that if the Lord of any Royaltie doe make offence heerein, he shall paie fiftie pounds Tournois . And Knightes & their followers 25. poundes: Deanes, Archdeacons, Priours, and other Clearkes, that held dignity, 25 poundes Tournois . And if Lay-men offend, of what estate soeuer they be, if valewing a thousand pound of Paris mony, they shall pay fiue and twentie poundes each man. And if of lesser value, they shall pay an hundred Sols Tournois . Other Clearkes, that are without dignities, and haue no Parsonages, offending against this ordinance, shall pay each man, an hundred Sols Tournois , and so for others.	Penalties enioyned vpon breach of these Ordinances. Dukes, Earles &c.
For fasting dayes.	None shall addict themselves to great feeding, but of two meats only, and one kind of fat pottage, without any fraude, and in the least eating, to vse one kinde of meat, and some one other choyse dish. If it be vpon fasting dayes, he may haue two Pottages made with Herings, and two other like Meats. One manner of Flesh, shall also serue for one Dish only, and likewise one kind of fish, without any other fraud. Grosse flesh also shall be accounted for good meats, and we do not allow Cheefe for a seruice, except it be made into Paste, or boyled in water.	And these Ordinances are commaunded to be kept, by all Dukes, Earles, Barons, Prelates and Clearkes, and by all maner of people that are in the faith with vs, and vpon the Faith which they are bound to keepe. So that al Dukes, Earls, Barons and Prelates, that dare contradict this ordinance, shall pay an 100. poundes Tournois , as a due punishment, and shall stand bounde to keepe the establishment heereof in their subiectes, of what estate or condition soeuer. And in such manner, that if the Lord of any Royaltie doe make offence heerein, he shall paie fiftie pounds Tournois . And Knightes & their followers 25. poundes: Deanes, Archdeacons, Priours, and other Clearkes, that held dignity, 25 poundes Tournois . And if Lay-men offend, of what estate soeuer they be, if valewing a thousand pound of Paris mony, they shall pay fiue and twentie poundes each man. And if of lesser value, they shall pay an hundred Sols Tournois . Other Clearkes, that are without dignities, and haue no Parsonages, offending against this ordinance, shall pay each man, an hundred Sols Tournois , and so for others.	Lots of Royalties.
One manner of flesh in one dish only, and so of fish.	It is ordained by our declaration; concerning that which hath bene spoken of Garments, that no Prelates or Barones, how great soeuer the person be, shall haue any Robe belonging to his body, valuing more then 25. Sols Tournois , the Paris Elle. The Wiues of Barons also, according to the same rate.	And these Ordinances are commaunded to be kept, by all Dukes, Earles, Barons, Prelates and Clearkes, and by all maner of people that are in the faith with vs, and vpon the Faith which they are bound to keepe. So that al Dukes, Earls, Barons and Prelates, that dare contradict this ordinance, shall pay an 100. poundes Tournois , as a due punishment, and shall stand bounde to keepe the establishment heereof in their subiectes, of what estate or condition soeuer. And in such manner, that if the Lord of any Royaltie doe make offence heerein, he shall paie fiftie pounds Tournois . And Knightes & their followers 25. poundes: Deanes, Archdeacons, Priours, and other Clearkes, that held dignity, 25 poundes Tournois . And if Lay-men offend, of what estate soeuer they be, if valewing a thousand pound of Paris mony, they shall pay fiue and twentie poundes each man. And if of lesser value, they shall pay an hundred Sols Tournois . Other Clearkes, that are without dignities, and haue no Parsonages, offending against this ordinance, shall pay each man, an hundred Sols Tournois , and so for others.	Knightes. Deanes, Archdeacons, Priours, Clearkes. Lay men of account.
The price of Cloth by the Elle of Paris .	Earles and Barons shall giue no Liueries to their followers, to cost more then 18. Sols the Paris Elle.	And these Ordinances are commaunded to be kept, by all Dukes, Earles, Barons, Prelates and Clearkes, and by all maner of people that are in the faith with vs, and vpon the Faith which they are bound to keepe. So that al Dukes, Earls, Barons and Prelates, that dare contradict this ordinance, shall pay an 100. poundes Tournois , as a due punishment, and shall stand bounde to keepe the establishment heereof in their subiectes, of what estate or condition soeuer. And in such manner, that if the Lord of any Royaltie doe make offence heerein, he shall paie fiftie pounds Tournois . And Knightes & their followers 25. poundes: Deanes, Archdeacons, Priours, and other Clearkes, that held dignity, 25 poundes Tournois . And if Lay-men offend, of what estate soeuer they be, if valewing a thousand pound of Paris mony, they shall pay fiue and twentie poundes each man. And if of lesser value, they shall pay an hundred Sols Tournois . Other Clearkes, that are without dignities, and haue no Parsonages, offending against this ordinance, shall pay each man, an hundred Sols Tournois , and so for others.	Lay men of lesse value. Clearkes without dignities.
Liueries for Seruants.	Bannerets and Castillians, shall haue no Garmentes for their bodies, costing more then eightene Sols the Paris Elle, and their Wiues at the same rate; theyr followers at xv. Sols the Elle.	And these Ordinances are commaunded to be kept, by all Dukes, Earles, Barons, Prelates and Clearkes, and by all maner of people that are in the faith with vs, and vpon the Faith which they are bound to keepe. So that al Dukes, Earls, Barons and Prelates, that dare contradict this ordinance, shall pay an 100. poundes Tournois , as a due punishment, and shall stand bounde to keepe the establishment heereof in their subiectes, of what estate or condition soeuer. And in such manner, that if the Lord of any Royaltie doe make offence heerein, he shall paie fiftie pounds Tournois . And Knightes & their followers 25. poundes: Deanes, Archdeacons, Priours, and other Clearkes, that held dignity, 25 poundes Tournois . And if Lay-men offend, of what estate soeuer they be, if valewing a thousand pound of Paris mony, they shall pay fiue and twentie poundes each man. And if of lesser value, they shall pay an hundred Sols Tournois . Other Clearkes, that are without dignities, and haue no Parsonages, offending against this ordinance, shall pay each man, an hundred Sols Tournois , and so for others.	Lay people of all degrees.
Bannerets & Castillians.	Squires, the Sons of Barons, Bannerets, and Castillians, must wear no Robe of greater price, then xv. Sols the Elle of Paris .	And these Ordinances are commaunded to be kept, by all Dukes, Earles, Barons, Prelates and Clearkes, and by all maner of people that are in the faith with vs, and vpon the Faith which they are bound to keepe. So that al Dukes, Earls, Barons and Prelates, that dare contradict this ordinance, shall pay an 100. poundes Tournois , as a due punishment, and shall stand bounde to keepe the establishment heereof in their subiectes, of what estate or condition soeuer. And in such manner, that if the Lord of any Royaltie doe make offence heerein, he shall paie fiftie pounds Tournois . And Knightes & their followers 25. poundes: Deanes, Archdeacons, Priours, and other Clearkes, that held dignity, 25 poundes Tournois . And if Lay-men offend, of what estate soeuer they be, if valewing a thousand pound of Paris mony, they shall pay fiue and twentie poundes each man. And if of lesser value, they shall pay an hundred Sols Tournois . Other Clearkes, that are without dignities, and haue no Parsonages, offending against this ordinance, shall pay each man, an hundred Sols Tournois , and so for others.	Imposition of the fines and forfeits.
Allowance for Esquires.	Prelates, Earles, Lordes of Royalties, and Castillians, shall giue no Garments to their Squires, valewing more then seven or eight Sols Tournois , the Elle of Paris .	And these Ordinances are commaunded to be kept, by all Dukes, Earles, Barons, Prelates and Clearkes, and by all maner of people that are in the faith with vs, and vpon the Faith which they are bound to keepe. So that al Dukes, Earls, Barons and Prelates, that dare contradict this ordinance, shall pay an 100. poundes Tournois , as a due punishment, and shall stand bounde to keepe the establishment heereof in their subiectes, of what estate or condition soeuer. And in such manner, that if the Lord of any Royaltie doe make offence heerein, he shall paie fiftie pounds Tournois . And Knightes & their followers 25. poundes: Deanes, Archdeacons, Priours, and other Clearkes, that held dignity, 25 poundes Tournois . And if Lay-men offend, of what estate soeuer they be, if valewing a thousand pound of Paris mony, they shall pay fiue and twentie poundes each man. And if of lesser value, they shall pay an hundred Sols Tournois . Other Clearkes, that are without dignities, and haue no Parsonages, offending against this ordinance, shall pay each man, an hundred Sols Tournois , and so for others.	For the accuser.
Liueries for attendant Esquires.	Other Squires, that are not household Attendants, but cloth themselves of their owne proper cost and means, shall wear no Garment of more then ten Solles the Elle.	And these Ordinances are commaunded to be kept, by all Dukes, Earles, Barons, Prelates and Clearkes, and by all maner of people that are in the faith with vs, and vpon the Faith which they are bound to keepe. So that al Dukes, Earls, Barons and Prelates, that dare contradict this ordinance, shall pay an 100. poundes Tournois , as a due punishment, and shall stand bounde to keepe the establishment heereof in their subiectes, of what estate or condition soeuer. And in such manner, that if the Lord of any Royaltie doe make offence heerein, he shall paie fiftie pounds Tournois . And Knightes & their followers 25. poundes: Deanes, Archdeacons, Priours, and other Clearkes, that held dignity, 25 poundes Tournois . And if Lay-men offend, of what estate soeuer they be, if valewing a thousand pound of Paris mony, they shall pay fiue and twentie poundes each man. And if of lesser value, they shall pay an hundred Sols Tournois . Other Clearkes, that are without dignities, and haue no Parsonages, offending against this ordinance, shall pay each man, an hundred Sols Tournois , and so for others.	Purgation by Oath, before the Lord of the soyle.
Esquires no household attendants.	Clearkes, that make robes for themselves, shall weare none to exceede the price of twelue Solles, and sixe Deniers Tournois , the Elle. But if they be Canons of a Cathedrall church, of fiftene Sols, and no more.	And these Ordinances are commaunded to be kept, by all Dukes, Earles, Barons, Prelates and Clearkes, and by all maner of people that are in the faith with vs, and vpon the Faith which they are bound to keepe. So that al Dukes, Earls, Barons and Prelates, that dare contradict this ordinance, shall pay an 100. poundes Tournois , as a due punishment, and shall stand bounde to keepe the establishment heereof in their subiectes, of what estate or condition soeuer. And in such manner, that if the Lord of any Royaltie doe make offence heerein, he shall paie fiftie pounds Tournois . And Knightes & their followers 25. poundes: Deanes, Archdeacons, Priours, and other Clearkes, that held dignity, 25 poundes Tournois . And if Lay-men offend, of what estate soeuer they be, if valewing a thousand pound of Paris mony, they shall pay fiue and twentie poundes each man. And if of lesser value, they shall pay an hundred Sols Tournois . Other Clearkes, that are without dignities, and haue no Parsonages, offending against this ordinance, shall pay each man, an hundred Sols Tournois , and so for others.	LIII 4 CHAP.
Clearkes and Canons of Cathedrall Churches.	Cittizens, that may spend the value of	This Law was made and ordained at Paris , in the yeate of Grace, 1294.	LIII 4 CHAP.

CHAP. XXVIII.

¶ Of a Law made by Solon, and the Corinthians; concerning ydle and negligent persons: And such as would weare brane Apparrell, and make great cheare; yet themselues having no goodes or meanes, whereby to maintaine such expences.

He famous Law-giuer of the Athenians, Solon made a Law, whereof it is saide, that Amasis, King of Ægypt, had formerly been the Author, according as Herodotus reporteth in his Enterpe, and these are the very words of the Law. ἀποδείκνύναι ἕτερος ἐκάστῳ τῶ νόμῳ ἅπαντι τὴν ἀ Αἰγυπτίῳ, ἵερ βίστα. μηδὲ ποιεῖν τὰ ταῦτα, μηδὲ ἀποφαινο τὰ δικαίω λόῳ, ἰθύναδζ δαυάτω. That is to say. That euery one shall yearly declare and shew how, and in what manner hee liueth, euen before the Magistrate: which if he refuse to doe, he shall be punished with death. This Law is recited by Diodorus Siculus; and was also obserued by the Corinthians, as Diphilus saith in his Senaries, alleadged by Atheneus, and traduced by Erasmus in his Adages, whereof the substance is thus.

It was ordained heretofore, as a Law to the Corinthians, that if any one were noted to make great cheare daily, and to spend largely; we are then to enquire of his means, and to demaund of him, if he know what he doth? If we do perceiue, that he hath goods, and that the reuennues of them is sufficient to discharge such expences; we are to suffer his proceeding therein. But if it so fall out, that he spendeth more then his Reuennues will amount vnto: we must commaund him to leaue off such wast, and neuer afterward to doe the like againe. If he refuse, and will not be obedient; he is to be condemned in a great penalty. And if he that hath nothing at all to maintaine him, doe liue excessiue; he is to be deliuered to the Hangman or Executioner, vnder this Oath: * By Hercules. For the presumption is great, that a Man

Herodotus in Enterpe.

Diodor. Sicul. in Lib. 2. de Antiquit. Diphilus in Sen. Atheneus. Erasmus in Adag.

The very words of the Law.

* This was an Oath obserued among our Auncients.

cannot lead such a kind of life; without committing Thefts, and other wicked actions. For it will be necessarily supposed, that hee hunteth in the night time, to catch his prey; that hee hooketh in at houses, or breaketh the walles of them; or else is a complice and Companion with them that doe so, and then hath his share with them. Or else, that hee is a false Witnesse, or false Accuser. All such manner of people are to be chased from our Cittie, as hatefull and abhominable.

CHAP. XXIX.

How excellent a thing Friendship is; What they are, that maybe termed true friends: How many friends a Man ought to haue, and of what condition; with many notable examples thereof.

Old is good, so is Siluer; Kinred & Allyes is good, and Mony is good: but true Friendes are much better, and there is no comparison betweene them. For all the fore-named things are not sufficient; but must be taken from vs on necessity: but true Friends, in regard of any thing, wherein consisteth the interest of a Friend; will admit no pardon to their purse, nor spare the expences of their goods; yea, feare not to expose their liues to dangers, to take long voyages, on them, to vndergo quarrels, & suites, to embrace voluntary paines, and to imploy the vttermost of their power, for the assistance of a Friend. Spartianus, in the life of the Emperour Traiane, reporteth, that one euening, as the Emperour sate at Supper, they that were admitted to sit at his Table; entred into discourse, concerning the fidelitie of Friends. During this conference, hee told them: That he could not remember, in all his life time, that he euer had any one Friend, which might not haue beene iustly tearmed good, loyall, and sincere. Then they humbly entreated him, that, if it stood with his liking; he would acquaint them with the reason of this his extraordinary happinesse. Whereupon he thus answered. The cause

No comparison with true and faithfull friends.

All worldly things are defectiue, except a true friend.

Spartianus in vit. Imp. Traian.

An extraordinary happinesse in a man.

The answer of the Emperor Traiane.

cause why I haue beene so happy in this matter, was in this respect: that I would neuer admit any Man to be my Friend, if he were couetous, or a Lyer. For in that man, in whom auarice or lying reigneth; neuer can dwell true and perfect friendship.

The coming of King Herod to Rome, and his wordes to Augustus.

King Herod, after that Marke Anthony was conquered by Augustus, came to Rome, and hauing layed his Crowne at the feete of Octauius; with a bold and vndaunted courage, hee spake these wordes. You must know (O Great Augustus) that if Marke Anthonie would haue beleewed me, and not Cleopatra: you should haue made better prooffe, how great an enemy he was to you; and you should well haue understood beside, how loyall and faithfull a Friend I was to him. But he that would rather be gouerned by the will of a woman, then follow those courses which reason commaunded: tooke onely Momy of me, and all his Counsels of Cleopatra. Herod continued yet on further his speeches in this manner. You behold at this instant (quoth he) that my Kingdome, person, and crown, is laid by me at your feet, and I offer them all at your seruice, at all times, and as often as you shall make acceptance thereof. But yet, vpon these conditions (Inuincible Augustus) that you shall neuer commaund mee to heare, nor speake any euill of Marke Anthony, my Lord and deare Friend, although he is dead. For you know right well, that true Friendes ought not to be forgotten, eyther by absence or death. Iulius Caesar held such intire friendship with Cornelius Faber, the Consull, that they passing the Alpes together, and darke night hauing stolne vpon them, they being vnprovided of any other lodging, then a little narrow Grot or Caue in the side of a Rock, which they found out by chance, and Cornelius being then sickely and ill: Iulius Caesar left all the Caue to him, that he might the better repose at his ease, walking himselfe (all the night) in the frost and Snow, without any shelter or conerture to shield him.

The harme of being gouerned by a womans will.

A memorable example of a faithfull friend indeed.

The friendship betweene Iulius Caesar & Cornelius Faber.

Friendship is true and perpetuall, and holdeth no contraction with many persons.

It is also a matter worthy of our knowledge, that friendshippe maketh it selfe true and perpetuall, and ought not to be contracted with many persons, according as Seneca, Writing to Lucillus saith. My Friend Lucillus, I counsell thee to be a Friend but to one, and Enemy vnto none. To haue many Friends, it bringeth with it some kind of importunitie, which must needs (of it selfe) diminish friendship. For, if we consider the liberty or freedome of the heart; it is a matter impossible, that one onely thing should conforme it selfe, to the conditions of many: much lesse, that manie can bee satisfied & contented with those of one alone. Cicero and Salust were two Oratours, the most renowned among the Romaines; and yet deadly Enemies to each other. Cicero had all the whole Senate as his fast Friendes; and Salust (throughout all Rome) had no one but Marke Anthony only. Vpon a day, some cause of quarrell or contention happening between these two men, & words on cyther side entercoursed: Cicero, in great anger and disdain, spake thus to Salust. How darest thou any way contend with me? What power art thou able to raise against me? Full well thou knowest, that in all the City of Rome, thou hast but one Friend onely, and that is Marke Anthonie; and I haue no Enemy, but he onely. Wherunto Salust thus answered: Thou gloriest thy selfe (O Cicero) in hauing but one Enemy onely, and tauntest mee, because I haue no more but one Friend onely. But I hope (the help of the immortal Goddes assisting) that this one enemy of thine, shall be sufficient to ouerthrow thee; and this one onely Friend of mine, will bee enow to warrant me from all harmes, and to defend me in all mine affaires. After these words passing thus betweene them, within some very few daies: Marke Anthony declared the friendshippe which he bare to the one, and his hatred against the other. For, he caused Ciceroes Head to bee smitten off, and exalted Salust vnto great Honors.

Many do commend themselves, and hold it as a great glory to them, to haue multiplicity of friends: but, when they haue well surueyed, to what end this abundance of Friendes serueth; they shall finde their help to no other effect, but onely to eate, drinke, walke, sport, and prattle together. Not to succour one another with Monies in their necessities; or to lend any fauourable assistance in nauailes; nor to giue reproofe of such vices, as may (perhaps) too much abound on either side. For where true and intimate friendship is mutually embraced: neyther my friend to me, or I to him, ought to vse any dissimulation,

The freedom and liberty of the heart.

The enmity betweene Cicero and Salust, two famous Oratours.

Cicero his wordes to Salust.

Salust his answer to Cicero.

An euident prooffe of Friendship and hatred.

The end and effect of hauing many Friends.

The Office and duty of true friends one toward another in aduersity or prosperitie.

Friendship ceaseth not after death.

Of electing one friend among many, and the danger therein.

The principall conditions which ought to be in a friend.

on, or to conceale one anothers faultes and vices, which we may euidently see in each other; that amendment may ensue vpon friendly admonishment. There is no riches or treasure in this world, that equalleth the worth of a true and loyall Friend: because, when a Man hath a faithfull Friend: he may safely discover the secrets of his hart vnto him; recount his passions; trust his honor in his brest; yeilde his goods to his keeping; receiue succour from him in his trauailes; have counsell and comfort in perils; he will reioyce in his prosperities, and greeue when any inconueniences doe afflict him. Finally, I conclude, that hee will neuer cease friendly seruices to him during life, and mournfull complaints for his misse, after death.

Being then to make choise of a friend, and of no more then one, euerie Man ought to bee very carefull, that he bee not deceiued in his election. For many times it falleth out, that such as vse but slender consideration heerein: doe but bestow their friendship on him that is ouer-couetous, impatient, a pratler, contentious, arrogant, and presumptuous; yea, and in such sort, that it is more safe for him to entertaine a knowne enemy, then such a halfe-harted Friend. Among other conditions, which ought to be in him that is elected as a Cordiall Friend, these are the principall. He must be humane of nature; of stout courage in trauailes; patient in iniuries; honest in dyet; modest in talke; graue in counsell and aduise; and (aboue all) constant in amitie, and faithfull in secrecy. We may vndoubtedly accept such a man for a friend, whō we know to be prouided of these qualities: but if he be defectiue in any one of them; we are to shun his society, as a pestilence. For we hold as a thing most certaine, that the friendship of a fantasticke and variable Friend, is worse then the hatred of a discovered Enemy. Wee may assuredly trust our hart in the hands of the one; but we shal hardly defend our liues, against the trecheries of the other.

CHAP. XXX.

¶ Of many very strange and merueilous things, recorded by diuers good and credible Authours, and here collected together in one Chapter.

10

20

30

40

50

Herodotus writeth, that the Sunne did two seueral times, set and hide it self, in that place which at this present, is the East. Seruius, the Commenter vpon Virgill, saith, that the Army of Xeuxes being vnder full sail, did drinke dry the Riuer Symoenta: and the like is recorded (by Herodotus) to be done on the Riuer Scamander. Pliny writeth, that the great or formost Toe, of the right foote of King Pyrrhus; gaue present helpe to such that were pained with the Spleene, and that it could not be burned (with the rest of his body) in the Obsequies. Caelius Rhodiginus affirmeth, that Elephants haue sometimes beene knowne to write. Milo the Crotoman, as Aulus Gellius auoucheth, did breake a great Iron Chaine into diuers pieces, with his hands onely. The hart of Aristomenes, was found to be all hairy. Many Oblations and Sacrifices of of Beasts, were found to haue no harts in them. Pliny reporteth (if it be a matter to bee credited) that Lelia Cossuria, being a Woman, was turned into a Man, vpon the day of her mariage. The blacke Statue of Memnon deliuered an audible voyce, at all times when the mouth thereof was touched with the beames of the Sunne. The Ants in India, are greater then Foxes. In the second Punick Warre, an Oxe was heard to speake, and saide to Cneus Domitius: Take thou heed o Rome! The Partridges in Paphlagonia, haue two harts in their bodies, according to Theophrastus.

The Babylonians being great Hunters, when they are in some Forrest, or place of solitude, where they haue no means of boyling their meat: they set an Egge vp on end in the Sand, which they turn and Herodot. in Enterpe.

Seruius in Comment. Virgil.

Herodot. in lib. 7. Plin. in Lib. 9. Cap. 7.

Coel. Rhodigin. in Lib. 12. cap. 3.

Aulus Gellius. in lib. 15. ca. 16. Valer. Max. in tit. de Mirac.

Cicero in Lib. de Diuinat.

Herodot. in Lib. 3.

A Rhod. in Lib. 5. Cap. 12.

Theophrast. in Lib. 7. Cap. 17.

A. Rhod. in Lib. 7. Cap. 1.

and rowle about, vntill it bee baked by continuall turning.

Diodor. Sicul. in Lib. 4. Cap. 18.

The Tortoises in the Indian Sea, are so great, that the people Saile in their shels on the Riuers, euen as well as in little Cock-boats, according to the report of Diodorus: Nilus falling from the hie Mountains, yeeldeth thereby so great a noise, that it maketh the Inhabitants of those places, to bee starke deafe. The Sonne of Cræsus beeing dumbe by Nature, seeing a Souldier of the Persian Troopes, that would kill his Father; yet hee not knowing him, as hee offered hie Weapon to his throat, hee cried out a-Cicero in Somn. Scipionis.

lowd in this manner, Oh doe not Kill the King.

Aulus Gellius. in lib. 4. Cap. 9

In Selencia, after that the Romaynes had ruined the Temple, there was found a narrow strait passage, which the Diuines of Chaldea had formerly stopped vp: but when by Military Engins it was opened, there yssued foorth a deadly vapour, which infected from thence (being in Persia) so farre as to the Gaules. In the City of Hermynia, the people worshipped a Bull, that changed his colour euery houre in the day.

A. Rhod. in Lib. 7. Cap. 2.

Macrob. in Lib. 1. Cap. 27.

FINIS.

Faint, illegible text in the upper left quadrant, possibly bleed-through from the reverse side of the page.

Faint, illegible text in the upper right quadrant, possibly bleed-through from the reverse side of the page.

313817

A Table of all the feuerall Bookes and Chapters, with their perticuler Arguments, contained in this Volume.

The First Booke.

OF God. Chap. 1.
Of the Workes which God created in sixe dayes. And what dayes the Angels were created, vwith diuers other high and special matters, worthy our knowledge. Chap. 2.
Of the good Angels, and of their orders and Offices. Chap. 3.
Of the Earthly or Terrestrial Paradise, &c. Chap. 4.
Of the difference betweene the Celestial Kingdom, and that of Paradise, &c. Chap. 5.
Of Hell, and of the fire that is saide to burne there continually. Chap. 6.
Of Man (the Image of God) to what end he was created, with the signification of those two wordes, Image of God, and Similitude or Likenesse of God. Chap. 7.
Of the Age of man, &c. Chap. 8.
That the opinion of such, as supposed the yeares in elder times to be shorter then now they are at this instant, is utterly false. Also, of the first Cittie that euer was in the world. Chap. 9.
Wherefore the deuill made choise of the Serpents shape, when hee tempted the first woman, &c. Chap. 10.
Of Death, & that God neuer vvas the Author thereof. Chap. 11.
The strange opinion of the Egiptians, concerning the scope of a mans life, iudging it to be the proportion of the hart, &c. Chap. 12.
The reason wherfore man goeth 2 p-right, &c. Chap. 13.
Of the supreme dignity of the head about all the other members of the bodie, &c. Chap. 14.
Whither euil Demons or spirits can foretel things to come, they hauing no certaine knowledge. Chap. 15.
Of the sign of the Crosse, that it was in great estimation long before our Sa-uiour Christ was crucified thereon, &c. Cap: 16

The excellency of Secrecy, and with what care it is to be kept, &c. Cap: 17
How commendable it is to speake little. Cap: 18
Of the famous Phylosopher Plutarch, his learned Letter to the great Emperor Traian, &c. Cap: 19
The Original of the Art Military, &c. Cap: 20
The rare fortune of two Women, who by wearing the habits of men, the one attained to be Pope of Rome, & the other to be Emperor. Cap: 21
The first beginning of the Amazons, &c. Cap: 22
Of the Antiquity of Constantino-ple, and howe it became conquered by the Turkes Cap: 23
Of what Nation & race the Imposture Mahomet was, &c. Cap: 24
The Original of the Turkes, and their first government, &c. Cap: 25
That the death of man or woman, is to be reckoned happy or unhappy, according to the estate whercin the party dyeth &c. Cap: 26
How many Bishoppes and Popes of Rome there hath bin since Saint Peter &c. Cap: 27
The cause of those daies which are called Dies Caniculares, or Doggedayes, and wherefore they are so called, &c. Cap: 28
Of the admirable Art of Man in swimming, with the Fable of the Fish Colas. Cap: 29
Of men liuing in the Sea, called Mare-men, or Seamen, &c. Cap: 30

The Second Booke.

WHat maner of speech was used at the beginning of the world: And of the diuision of languages. ca: 1

Of the diuision of the worlds Ages. Also the beginning of Kingdomes and Commonweales. Cap: 2
Of the Gouvernement of the Spartanes, &c. Cap: 3
Of the Government & Laws used among the ancient Athenians. Cap: 4
In which of al the feuerall Heuens, God is said to abide. Cap: 5
Of the error committed by the ancient Mathematicians & Astrologers, yea, and such as haue continued to this day, in calling the Planets by Diabolical names, and attributing a Diuinitie to them. Cap: 6
Of the cause why the christian Philosopher Origen did dismember himselfe. Cap: 7
The reproach which the Emperour Cublay gaue to the Iews, Mahometists, and Pagans, &c. Cap: 8
From whence the name of Sarazins came at the first, &c. Cap: 9
Of the Title or name of Seruaunt, Slaue, Bondslaue, & such like. Ca: 10
Of Slaues made by the Turkes and Mahometans, &c. Cap: 11.
Of the subuersion of the most potent Empire of the Chaldens, and of the City of Babylon. Cap: 12
Of the destruction of Ierusalem, & the woful calamities of the Iews euer since Cap: 13
Of a crafty Physitiou, who gouerned or ouerswayed Lewes 11. King of France that was accounted the most ingenious Prince of his time Cap: 14
That, Princes and other persons of great degree, ought not to giue over-much confidence vnto Tasters, nor to the wearing of precious stones or Annelets. Cap: 15
Why the liues of Princes are more attempted by peyson, then by Armes, &c. Cap: 16
Of impostoring by sweet Pommanders, Fumes of Turches, Tapers, Candles, &c. Ca.

The Table.

That all venoms and poysons haue not the power to kil the hart, &c. cap: 18 To know if an imppoysoner can so artificially accomodate his poysons, that he may limit the houre, day, week, month, and yeare, &c. cap: 19 What maner of people they were, that had the Title of Gymnosophists. cap: 20 Of such men as do thinke, that the Septentrional Countries which bee vnder the North, are vnfruitful and uninhabitable. cap: 21 A Paradox approving, that the meanest place of birth, maketh a man to bee truly most Noble. cap: 22 A pleasant Allegorical description of Charon, called the Ferry man of Hell. cap: 23	Of a strange accident hapning in the Islandes of the Mulocoes, about the yeare, 1525. cap: 13 Of some, who haue counterfeted sicknesses, to exempt themselues from busines. &c. cap: 14 Of the Vertue and excellency of Hony, &c. cap: 15 How Hony is made, whence Manna proceedeth, of ayry Hony, and of Sugar, cap: 16 How the Gothes elect their Kings fat and corpulent. Contrarywise howe the Sarazins choose their Kings Meager, lean, and low of stature. cap: 17 Of the abuse committed, in wearing Drugs, powders, perfumes, &c. cap: 18 Of Amber-Greece, from whence it is brought, &c. cap: 19 Of Muske, Ciuil, &c. cap: 20 Of an Edict made by Dyonisius the elder, King of Sicily, &c. cap: 21 Of the word or name Gramarian, and what it is truly and properly. cap: 22 A paradox, maintaining, that speedye death is more to be desirous, then a long and tedious date of life. ca: 23 The saying of Plato interpreted, that Kings should be Phylosophers, or Phylosophers raigne. cap: 24	to two Princes of Castile. cap: 10 The strange complexions of two Philosophers, &c. cap: 11 Of some perticuler occasions, hapning in one and the same manner, &c. ca: 12 That diuers men haue been so really alike, that they haue bin many times taken one for another. cap: 13 Of a strange and admirable fortune hapning to two Knights of Rome. ca: 14 The Ages of Man seuerally distinguished, &c. cap: 15 Of certaine yeares in the life of man, iudged by our Ancients, to be more dangerous then any other. cap: 16 That Orpheus, Homer, Pythagoras, Plato, & others, did read the Books of Moyse, and haue taken perticuler points out of them. cap: 17 A Mystical signification, concerning the body of Elisens, &c. cap: 18 The Interpretation of Nabuchodonosors dreame. cap: 19 Of the end of the world, &c. cap: 20 The conquest of the kingdom of Naples, by Charles 8. King of France. ca: 21 Of a Courtier, and what manner of man he ought to be. cap: 22 How a man may commend himselfe without preiudice to others. cap: 23 How Frances Sforza and Nicholas Pichiniue won the renowne of beeing the most skilful men in the Art Military. cap: 24 That the Lyon naturally feareth the Cocke, &c. cap: 25 Who was the first man that tamed the Lyon, &c. chap: 26 That the most part of the people in the world spake at the first but one Language onely, &c. cap: 27 Of Graving or caruing, & of Painting, which of them is the most ancient and excellent. cap: 28 Against such aged persons, as thinke nothing to be wel done, but what was doone by themselues, &c. cap: 29 A comparison between the buildings Feasts, Garments of men and Weomen, Armes, and maner of making warre in the dayes of our fore-fathers; and those that are used in these daies. cap: 30 Of the Antiquity of Fraternities, Br other hoods, Fellowships, Societies or Companies, &c. cap: 31 Of Polybius the Romaine Ambassador, &c. cap: 32 Of a strange opinion in the women of Mosco.
<hr/> The third Booke. <hr/>
Of Old Rome: And of her first Religion Lawes, Magistrates, Ciuil Policies, &c. cap: 1 Of Rome in hir Moderne estate, since the Pope came to keepe his Court there. &c. cap: 2 A briefe Collection of the Original of the Knightes of the Order of S. Iohn of Ierusalem, who were afterwards called the Knights of Rhodes and of Malta, &c. cap: 23 The seuerall Orders of Knightthode, both Ecclesiastick and Secular. cap: 4 Of a straunge Custome used by the people of Cathay, for the marriage of their daughters, when they want means of dowry. cap: 5 Of a good Custome made among the Locrians, &c. cap: 6 Of the strange life of Diogenes the Cynick Phylosopher, &c. cap: 7 Of variable Natures in men, beyond vsual and natural inclination, &c. ca: 8 Of the great and large extendure of the Roman Empire, &c. cap: 9 The History of the Romaine Empyre further prosecuted, with the surprizall of Rome by the Gothes. cap: 10 That there is no valour, courage, or Manhood (truly commendable) but such as is necessary, and grounded in Vertue. cap: 11 That those which had no other Vertue but meere valiancy, haue ended theyr daies very unfortunately. ca: 12	Of the kingdom of Persia, &c. ca: 1 Against Iulius Caesar, in calling the Gauls (at this day Frenchmen) Barbarians. cap: 2 How long it is since the Switzers wer Cantonned, &c. cap: 3 Of the Excellency of Trauel, and what great dangers do ensue on yllenes. ca: 4 The reason why the Palm-tree was giuen to Conquerours, and Lawrell as a signe of victory. cap: 5 Of Cruelty, how horrid it is to humaine Nature, &c. cap: 6 How that oftentimes, wicked Kinges and Tyrants are Gods Ministers, and yet commonly come to euil ends. cap: 7 The strange fortune which hapned to the Son of Croesus King of Lydia, and likewise to the son of another king, &c. cap: 8 Of a Woman that was married diuers times, and of a man that hadde manie wiues: and hapned (at length) to ioyne in wedlocke together. cap: 9 The strange fortunes which hapned	to two Princes of Castile. cap: 10 The strange complexions of two Philosophers, &c. cap: 11 Of some perticuler occasions, hapning in one and the same manner, &c. ca: 12 That diuers men haue been so really alike, that they haue bin many times taken one for another. cap: 13 Of a strange and admirable fortune hapning to two Knights of Rome. ca: 14 The Ages of Man seuerally distinguished, &c. cap: 15 Of certaine yeares in the life of man, iudged by our Ancients, to be more dangerous then any other. cap: 16 That Orpheus, Homer, Pythagoras, Plato, & others, did read the Books of Moyse, and haue taken perticuler points out of them. cap: 17 A Mystical signification, concerning the body of Elisens, &c. cap: 18 The Interpretation of Nabuchodonosors dreame. cap: 19 Of the end of the world, &c. cap: 20 The conquest of the kingdom of Naples, by Charles 8. King of France. ca: 21 Of a Courtier, and what manner of man he ought to be. cap: 22 How a man may commend himselfe without preiudice to others. cap: 23 How Frances Sforza and Nicholas Pichiniue won the renowne of beeing the most skilful men in the Art Military. cap: 24 That the Lyon naturally feareth the Cocke, &c. cap: 25 Who was the first man that tamed the Lyon, &c. chap: 26 That the most part of the people in the world spake at the first but one Language onely, &c. cap: 27 Of Graving or caruing, & of Painting, which of them is the most ancient and excellent. cap: 28 Against such aged persons, as thinke nothing to be wel done, but what was doone by themselues, &c. cap: 29 A comparison between the buildings Feasts, Garments of men and Weomen, Armes, and maner of making warre in the dayes of our fore-fathers; and those that are used in these daies. cap: 30 Of the Antiquity of Fraternities, Br other hoods, Fellowships, Societies or Companies, &c. cap: 31 Of Polybius the Romaine Ambassador, &c. cap: 32 Of a strange opinion in the women of Mosco.
<hr/> The Fourth Booke. <hr/>

The Table.

Moscovia, &c. Chap: 33
 That those things which some Authors have left written concerning the destruction of Troy, are true. Chap: 34
 How a man may know what kind of drinke wil soonest make a man drunke, &c. Cap: 35
 Against the Axiome, which maintaineth, that all Repletion is naught, &c. Cap: 36
 Of the Swallowes properties, & the Nature of the Bird. Cap: 37
 A Paradox in defence of hard lodging, &c. Cap: 38
 Of some, that have bin punished, for hauing done better then they wer commanded: And others because they did wel without command. Cap: 39

The Fift Booke.

OF the Emperor of Ethiopia, called Prete-Ian or Prester-Iohn, of his Original, &c. Cap: 1
 Of the ouergreat Superstition of the Queen of Maugy, &c. Cap: 2
 Of the order and Knighthood of the Templers, &c. Cap: 3
 By what means the holy Apostolicall Seat was transferred into France, how long it continued there, and how it returned againe to Rome. Cap: 4
 How dangerous it is to murmur against Princes, &c. Cap: 5
 That Imagination is one of the most principal inward powers, &c. Cap: 6
 Of Pontius Pilate, of the Lake named Pilates Lake, &c. Cap: 7
 Of negligence of Iustice in Offenders, and for the sins of the flesh. Cap: 8
 Of the inuention of Bels. Also, who were the first that coniurd diuils. Ca: 9
 Of a combate fought betweene two Knights of Castile. Cap: 10
 Of many admirable things hapning in diuers parts of the world. Cap: 11
 The variable opinion of Philosophers concerning humaine Lignage, & of the original of Mariage. Cap: 12
 Of what yeares or age a man should be married to a woman. Cap: 13
 Of the cordial leue and amity which ought to be in marriage, &c. Cap: 14
 Diuers Customes obserued by our ancient forefathers in their Marriages,

&c. Cap: 15
 Who were the first Inuenters of Letters, and of Latine Syllables Cap: 16
 Of Valasca a Lady of Bohemia &c. Cap: 17
 Of the first Inuenters of Hospitals, at what time, and on what occasion. C: 18
 Of an Embassage sent to Hippocrates the Physitian, &c. Cap: 19
 How Hippocrates found Democritus continually laughing, and of the Conference they had together. Cap: 20
 Of the two excellent Painters, Appelles and Protogenes. Cap: 21
 Of what forme a Man ought to bee, to appeare in his true proportion. C: 22
 Of three Princes, who ended their daies miserably, for disobeying their fathers. Cap: 23
 From whence it ensueth, that some Dreames are sad, and others ioyful. 24
 Of some Princes Drames, which afterward came to passe. Cap: 25
 Of three seueral personnes, that thorough Melancholy, fel into very admirable imaginations. Cap: 26
 Of a strange maner of Bannishment used by the Athenians. Cap: 27
 Of many worthy men, that by the ingratitude of their Countries endured banishment. Cap: 28
 Of two seueral men, who being apprehended for Homicides, were neuertheless made Kings, &c. Cap: 29
 A Paradox maintaining, that the wounded man is better then hee which is whole and sound. Cap: 30
 Of the Crocodile, with the refutation of sundry of that Beast. ca: 31
 How to take and kil Crocodiles, & also the properties of the Ichneumon or the Rat of India. Cap: 32
 Of strange accidents hapning to a prisoner, & how he was deliuerd. ca: 33
 That the blood of a Bul is death to such as drinke thereof, &c. Cap: 34
 Who was the first establisher of Religion in Rome, and ordained chief byshops, Priests, Vestal Virgins, &c. C: 35
 Of ancient mariages, aswel among the Romanes, as diuers other Nations, &c. Cap: 36
 How manie Armies the Romaine Emperors kept, and where. Cap: 37
 Whether the Romans did generally speake Latine, or whither they had two seueral Languages. Cap: 38

How necessary water is for the life of man, &c. cap: 39
 By what meanes a good quantity of fresh water may be hadde out of the Sea, &c. Cap: 40
 The reason why al Creatures haue as many feet on the one side, as the other, &c. Cap: 1

The Sixt Booke.

OF the Kingdom of Fez, &c. Ch. 1
 Of diuers Customes and maners of burying the dead, &c. Chap: 2
 Whence the Custom grew, of saying to such as Sneeze, God saue yee, or Christ helpe ye, and for what reason a man maketh the signe of the crosse on his mouth, when he yawneth. Chap: 3
 Concerning the Original of using of these words, Je vous baise les mains, I Kisse your hands. Chap: 4
 Of the diuision of the yeare. Who first found out the houres, and made Cocks and Dials, &c. Chap: 5
 Why the dayes of the week were called Feriæ, Holydayes or Feastial dayes Chap: 6
 How Physitians learned to take blood from the diseased; & who first wrote concerning hearbes. Chap: 7
 A true History of a Maid in Poictu, who for the space of three yeares, liued without any sustenance. Cap: 8
 A further discourse on fasting, Ca: 9
 The maner of so strange fasting, disputed betweene Ioubert & Haruet, &c. Cap: 10
 Of the Authority giuen to the Germanes, to make election of the Emperor; &c. Cap: 11
 Who first found out the Art of Navigation, deuising ships, Gallies, Oars, &c. Cap: 12
 Whence the custome came of giuing New-yeares gifts, &c. Cap: 13
 At what time Heresies had their Original, &c. Cap: 14
 Of the sottish opinions obserued among the Philosophers, discovering briefly, al Sciences, Artes, and Doctrines, with their abuses and vanities. Cap: 15
 A profitable Interpretation of some words, being Hebrue, Greek, and Syriac, contained in certaine piaces of the sacred sacred scriptures. Cap: 16

Examples of grosse errors in Politicians. Also how far a man may trust a reconciled enemy. Cap: 17
Of Errors committed by whole Senates, &c. Cap: 18
When publick & generall Councelles were first holden, &c. Cap: 19
Of that which was decreed by the Council of Nice, held by Constantine the Great, in the year, 325, &c. Cap: 20
That which was decreed and ordained in the councill holden at Rome, in the yeare, 376, &c. Cap: 21
The confession of a Christian, to the confutation of al Atheists. Cap: 22
A brieffe discourse against Atheistes, &c. Cap: 23
An excellent discourse of Hermes Trifmegistus, approving what God is. Cap: 24
The Atheist further confuted, &c. Cap: 25
Of Apelles Table, the most excellent Painter of the world, &c. Cap: 26
The Morrall of Apelles Table, is by the Authour more significantly Interpreted. Cap: 27
A Paradoxe in praise of imprisonment, &c. Cap: 28
Of the first Booke of Ciceroes Tusculanes, concerning the misprizall and contempt of the world. Cap: 29

The Seuenth Booke.

Of the Kingdome of Tunis, with their Lawes, Customs, and Ceremonies, &c. Ca: 1
Of the most potent King, called Great Tamberlaine, &c. Cap: 2
Of Heliogabalus Emperour of Rome, his most strange vices, and deformitie of life. Chap: 3
The admirable continency of Alexander and Scipio, &c. cap: 4
Of diuers Lakes, Springs, Fountains, Wells, Rivers, and their properties. ca: 5
On what day of the yeare was the incarnation, Natiuity, and Passion of our Lord Iesus Christ, &c. cap: 6
Of many thinges that hapned at the birth and death of our Saviour, &c. c. 7
Of many places quoted by diuers learned Authours, which make mention of Christ and his life. Cap: 8
What opinion the ancient Emperors held, concerning such as followed Christ and Christianity, &c. Cap: 9

That a man of mean birth, should not therefore desist from honourable Attempts, &c. Cap: 10
Of diuers things which happened to the Emperour Iustinian, &c. Cap: 11
What opinion the Romaines, and others (our Ancient predecessers) had of Fortune, how she was numbred among the Goddess, &c. Ca: 12
That there are great store of other wonderful properties, which remaine not of the Elements. Cap: 13
Of many meruailous properties in sundry things, &c. ca: 14
That brute Beastes haue instructed many men in sundry Medicines for hurts receiued, &c. Cap: 15
Of many Beasts and other creatures, that by instinct of Nature, haue foreknowledge of things to come, &c. Ca: 16
How Archimides the Phylosopher, knew howe much Siluer was mingled with Gold, in a Crowne of Golde (by a Goldsmith) without any iniury done to the same in the trial. Cap: 17
How Socrates perswaded Alcibiades to become an Orator. Cap: 18
The beginning of the factions of the Guelphs and Gibelines. Cap: 19
Of the first Martyrs, and the persecutions of the Christians. Cap: 20
Of such men and nations as are said to be the first inuenters of diuers things
Of the Contempt of Riches. Chap: 22
The Sentence of Apollonius Thianeus, against an Eunuch to the King of Babylon, &c. Cap: 23
An excellent example of continency in the famous Prince Sforza. Cap: 24
Of many worthy men, whose deaths haue bin wretched & miserable. ca: 25
Of a simple Groome, who vainly perswaded himselfe to be Pope, &c. Ca: 26
Of diuers men and women, that voluntarily slew themselues. Cap: 27
How good and profitable it is for a man to liue soberly, &c. Cap: 28
Of Rodericke the last King of the Gothes, &c. Cap: 29
Of Sarqua, who craftily deceiued Stirades a Noble yong Gentleman, & put him to death. Cap: 30
Of three Gentlewomen, who became al amourous of a Gentleman at one instant time, &c. Cap: 31
That the change of Apparrel, taken by one people from another, hath oftentimes turned to their destruction. c. 32

A Discourse on the life of S. Luke, Physitian, Euangelist, and Scholler of the Apostles, &c. cap: 33
Of the great Prouince of Moscouia, &c. cap: 34
Concerning those clauses inserted by the Roman Emperors in their edicts, to wit, Such is Our pleasure, and of Our Owne meere Motion, Cap: 35
That Orators, Pleadars, & such like may easily ouerthrow a Commonwealh, Cap: 36
A contradiction of the common Prouerbe, approving it not likely to be true, when we vse to say, That the Viper neuer seeth his Mother aloue, nor the Wolfe his Sire. Cap: 37
Whether Lucius Apuleius, surnamed Platonicus, were transformed into an Asse, or no, &c. Cap: 38
Of a Taylor named Iohn Leyden, a Hollander, &c. Cap: 39
Of Laughter, and the causes thereof, Ca: 40
Of the Nature of Commonweales, &c. cap: 41
Who was the first that inuented circumcision, from whence it proceeded, &c. Cap: 42
A Paradox in the defence of Bastardy, Approouing that the Bastard is more worthy to be esteemed, then hee that is lawfully borne or Legittimate. cap: 43
Of the disastrous death, of two Mahometan rich Caliphes. cap: 44
Of certain Beasts, and other creatures, that beare enuy to man, &c. cap: 45
The vnfortunate Loues of Strabo & Aristoclia, &c. Chap: 46

The eight Booke.

Of the Kinges of Poland, their Lawes, customes, administration of Iustice, &c. Cap: 1
Of many famous men, who haue left their gouernment, and retired to a solitary life. Cap: 2
Of the imperfection of Political Science with the imbecility of Lawmakers. ca: 3 Certaine wicked and absurd Lawes of Lycurgus, Plato, and Aristotle. Ca: 4
What Law is, wheresore it was ordained, and what it can perform in a Commonwealh. cap: 5
Of sleepe, and what manner of sleeping ought

The Table.

ought to be obserued therein, &c. C: 6 concerning the constancy of some Laedemonian, Roman, and French women, at the decease of their Chil- dren, &c. Cap: 7 Against Obtraction or detraction &c. Cap: 8 Howe Pythagoras founde out the measure of Great Hercules. Cap: 9 How the Iewes did continually giue Law and Religion to their Conquerors or Commaunders. Cap: 10 Of Sorrowing for the dead, and the obseruations thereof, &c. Cap: 11 Of diuers Pagans, that took the mat- ter very offensively, that any one should contemne their Religion. Cap: 12 Of the Seian Horse, &c. Cap: 13 Of Lais, the famous Curtezane of Greece, &c. Cap: 14 Of two Ladies that for the safety of their Country slew themselues Cap: 15 Of the Orange and Cedar Trees, & how the Cedar is very good against the poyson of Serpents. Cap: 16 How hurtful it is to endure long fa- sting, &c. Cap: 17 That there is nothing more hurtful & dangerous to man, then the tongue, with many notable examples to that effect. Cap: 18 Of Feasts and Bankets used in An- cient times, &c. Cap: 19 Of many men that by their Prodigal- ity, made expence of a' their faculties in short space. Cap: 20 The magnificent triumph of Antigon- us Epiphanes, for his victory against the Macedonians. Cap: 21 That Gold and Siluer were not fre- quent among our reuerend ancestors, &c. Cap: 22 How commendable it is to speake the truth, and how hateful a vice lying is, &c. Cap: 23 What a benefit the inuention of let- ters was to man, &c. Cap: 24 How and with what instrument our Auncients wrote, before Paper was knowne, &c. Cap: 25 Of the first Libraries in the Worlde, &c. Cap: 26 The Interpretation of the Imperiall Titles, heerebefore giuen by the Roman Emperors, &c. Cap: 27 What benefit Musicke bringeth vnto a Commonwealth, &c. Cap: 28	Of Gold, the properties and excellencie thereof, &c. Cap: 29 How Mines of Gold are to be found, &c. Cap: 30 Whence Gold proceedeth. And of vi- sions that are seene in Mines. Cap: 31 The interpretation of these three words, Democratia, Aristocratia, & Monarchia, &c. Cap: 32 That Monarchy ought to be prefer- red before Democratic or Aristocra- tie. Chap: 33 Of the Vertues and secret proderities of the Nutmeg, &c. Chap: 37 A Paradox, maintaining war to bee much more famous and honorable then peace. Cap: 38 Of the Indian Beare, &c. Cap: 39 Of a Lady of Swetia, that was con- ceiued with child by a Beare, &c. C: 40 <hr/> The Ninth Booke. <hr/> OF the Great Turkes Court, nowe called the Court of the Great Sig- neur, &c. Chap: 1 Of the lawfull meanes, whereby to compasse the esteeme of being truly va- liant. Chap: 2 Of those meanes which Princes ought to obserue in his Attendants. Chap: 3 Of Wisedome, Prudence, and Pollicie. Also a consideration of the matters in- cident to State. Chap: 4 Certaine general rules for the enstru- ction of such as desire to manage state, that they may deale therein with lesse danger and difficulty, &c. Cap: 5 Other general rules for yong Statists, as what he is to consider in himse fe, in his Prince, and in the matters that are to be consulted. Chap: 5 What a Counsellor ought to consider in his Prince, &c. Cap: 7 What a Councillor is to consider in the matters which are to be consulted. C: 8 For the better instruction of a yong Councillor, a matter of State is deba- ted, to wit; What is to bee considered, touching the maintenance of a Ciuill war, in a forren countrey. chap: 9 Of wicked Po'icies, &c. Cap: 10 Of Love and Hatred, Amity, and Enmity, &c. Cap: 11 By what meanes the natures of Ami-	ty and Enmity, are said to proceed from the Celestial Influences, &c. Cap: 12 Whence it ensueth, that a way of like length being not plaine and euen, see- meth more short, and is lesse offensue, then that which is euen. Cap: 13 Of the excellency of Memory, &c. Cap: 14 How the Memory may be both offe- ded and comforted, &c. Cap: 15 How the auncient Prouerbe is to bee understood, That a bad man may bee a good King. Cap: 16 Whether Constantine were the first Christian Emperor, or no. Cap: 17 Who they were, that first discovered the people cald Cynocephali men hauing heads like to Dogs, &c. Ch. 18 Of Omphale, a Lady of Lydia, who by the helpe of other women, attained to the command of that Prouince. Ca: 19 A notable stratagem, performed by Melanthus the Athenian, being in sin- gle combat with Xanthus, Lord of the Boctians. Cap: 20 The politicke deuise of Anaximenes, of Lapuscum, which he used to Alex- ander the Great. cap: 21 An excellent example of double dea- ling in a Wife towards her Husbande, &c. Cap: 22 The rebellion of the first slaues, and of Drimacus their Captaine. Cap: 23 At what time Cookes (in daies of An- tiquity) began to grow in estimation. Who were the first that beganne to use multiplicity of meates: And of many Gurmands and grosse feeders. Cap: 24 Of those causes wherby the life time of Men or women are lengthned or shortned. Ca: 25 Of Lawes and Ordinances appointed by our auncients, against excessiue fee- ding and Apparrel. Cap: 26 The Oraimance of Phillip le Bel, &c. Cap: 27 Of a Lawe made by Solon, concerning negligent and idle persons. chap: 28 Of the excellencie of friends and friend- ship, &c. Cap: 29 Of many mirueilous things, recorded by very credible Authours. Cap: 30 <hr/> FINIS.
--	--	--

