

17
3102

20th Century History
OF
Butler and Butler County, Pa.
AND Representative Citizens

Edited and Compiled by
JAMES A. McKEE
Butler, Pa.

“History is Philosophy Teaching by Examples”

Published by
RICHMOND-ARNOLD PUBLISHING CO.,
Geo. Richmond, Pres. C. R. Arnold, Sec'y and Treas.
CHICAGO.

1909

PREFACE

THE aim of the publishers of this volume and of the author of the history has been to secure for the historical portion thereof full and accurate data respecting the history of the county from the time of its early settlement, and to condense it into a clear and interesting narrative. All topics and occurrences have been included that were essential to this object.

The reviews of resolute and strenuous lives which make up the biographical part of this volume, and whose authorship is for the most part independent of that of the history, are admirably calculated to foster local ties, to inculcate patriotism, and to emphasize the rewards of industry dominated by intelligent purpose. They constitute a most appropriate medium for perpetuating personal annals, and will be of incalculable value to the descendants of those commemorated. These sketches, replete with stirring incidents and intense experiences, are flavored with a strong human interest that will naturally prove to a large portion of the readers of the book its most attractive feature. In the aggregate of personal memoirs thus collated will be found a vivid epitome of the growth of Butler County, which will fitly supplement the historical statement, for its development is identified with that of the men and women to whom it is attributable.

The publishers have endeavored to pass over no feature of the work slightly, but to fittingly supplement the editor's labors by exercising care over the minutest details of publication, and thus give to the volume the three-fold value of a readable narrative, a useful work of reference, and a tasteful ornament to the library. We believe the result has justified the care thus exercised.

Special prominence has been given to the portraits of representative citizens which appear throughout the volume, and we believe that they will prove not its least interesting feature. We have sought in this department to illustrate the different spheres of industrial and professional achievement as conspicuously as possible. To all those who have kindly interested themselves in the preparation of this work, and who have voluntarily contributed most useful information, or rendered other assistance, we hereby tender our grateful acknowledgements.

THE PUBLISHERS.

Chicago, March, 1909.

NOTE

All the biographical sketches published in this volume were submitted to their respective subjects or to the subscribers, from whom the facts were primarily obtained, for their approval or correction before going to press; and a reasonable time was allowed in each case for the return of the typewritten copies. Most of them were returned to us within the time allotted, or before the work was printed, after being corrected or revised; and these may be regarded therefore as reasonably accurate.

A few, however, were not returned to us; and, as we have no means of knowing whether they contain errors or not, we cannot vouch for their accuracy. In justice to our readers, and to render this work more valuable for reference purposes, we have indicated these uncorrected sketches by a small asterisk (*), placed immediately after the name of the subject. They will all be found on the last pages of the book.

THE PUBLISHERS.

Contents

	Page.
CHAPTER I.
TOPOGRAPHICAL FEATURES AND MINERAL DEPOSITS.....	21
Advance of Civilization Along the Waterways—The County Created, Named, and Surveyed—Organization of Counties—Topography—The Soil, Valley and High Land—Elevations Above Tide Water—Thomas Collins' Salt Well—Webster Wilson's Well—John Negley Well—Eccentricities of the Oil Fields—Coal Fields—Other Mineral Deposits—Lead Mines—Forests—Archeology—Epidemics, Floods, and Storms.
CHAPTER II.
SETTLEMENT OF WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA.....	41
Indian Occupation—Early Maps—The Original People—The First White Men—Washington's Journey—England Takes Action—Cause of Indian Dissatisfaction—Christopher Gist—Frederick Post—Post Returns to the Delawares—Kaskaskunk—Pakanke—Glikkikin—Rev. John Rothe—Settlements up to 1804—Pioneer Settlers—Pioneer Anecdotes and Adventures—Destruction of Kittanning—The Story of Massy Harbison—Gen. Richard Butler.
CHAPTER III.
LAND TITLES.....	80
Naming of Pennsylvania—Extinguishment of the Indian Title—The Erie Triangle—Boundary Line Disputes—Ferguson's Wanton Act—The Depreciation Lands—The Donation Lands—Drawn by Lottery—The "Struck" District—The Settlement Law of 1792—Robert Morris—Agrarian Troubles—The Shooting of Maxwell—The End of the Land Jobbers—The McKee and Varnum Case.
CHAPTER IV.
ORGANIZATION OF BUTLER COUNTY.....	90
Accounts with Allegheny County—Location of County Seat—Original Townships—A New County Proposed—Present Division of Townships—Another New County Proposition—Transactions of the County Commissioners—Tax on Bachelors—The Northwestern Railroad—Dispute of Bounty Claims—1804 and 1908 Compared—Commissioners' Clerks—Conscience Money—Public Buildings—The Court House of 1884—Court House of 1908—County Jails—The First Stone Jail—Recent Jail Escapes—Capture and Death of the Biddle Brothers—The County Home—The Temperance Cause—W. C. T. U.—Non-partisan Temperance Union—Loyal Temperance Legion—Population Statistics.
CHAPTER V.
POLITICAL HISTORY.....	143
Senatorial and Representative Districts Established—First Elections—A New Judicial District—Fourteenth Congressional District Established—Campaign of 1828—Case of Hugh Lee—Constitutional Amendments—Twenty-fifth Congressional District—Anti-slavery Movement—The Know Nothing Party—Anti-Administration Party—The Republican Party—The New Representative District—Apportionment of 1871—The Constitutional Convention—Changes in 1874—Vote on Prohibition Amendment—Campaign of 1890—Judicial Campaigns of 1892-1902—The Union Party—Vote for President Roosevelt—New Primary Election Law—Congressional Districts—Senatorial Districts—Representative Districts—Judicial Districts—Public Officials—Appointment of Court Officials.

CHAPTER VI.

THE OIL AND GAS INDUSTRIES.....	169
Early Oil Discoveries—Petroleum Used as Medicine—Its Commercial Possibilities Realized—Oil Company Formed—First Shipment to Europe—Early Oil Wells—The Parker's Landing Field—Petrohia, Karus City and Fairview—Greece City—Troutman Farm—Millerstown Field—The Bald Ridge District—Thorn Creek—Thorn Creek Extension—Reibald Field—The Hundred-foot District—Brownsdale and Cooperstown—Speechley Field—The Pipe Lines—Producers and Refiners—Natural Gas as a Fuel—Deepest Well in the County—Nitro-glycerine—Flannegan's Well-cleaner—Accidents and Tragedies of the Business—Death of Holland—Butler County Woman Killed—Miscellaneous Incidents and Sketches—A Loaded Porker—William Smith—The Montcalm Letter—Dunc Karus—Richard Jennings—Taylor & Satterfield—Plummer's Ride—The Producers' Protective Association—Beating the Railroad Company—Parker City—The Devil's Half-acre—The Wickedest Man in the World—The Agrarian Trouble at Renfrew—Wilson's Iron Derrick—Fortunes That Were Missed—The Lawyer Pumper—The "Spotty" McBride Well—Hoffman's Luck—Oil Country Honor—Oil Men's Outing Association—Prices of Crude Oil—A Disastrous Fire—Thomas W. Phillips.

CHAPTER VII.

BENCH AND BAR.....	221
Early Court Officials—Early Courts—Origin of "Buckwheat County"—First Quarter Sessions Court—Civil Cases and Other Court Business—Division of Townships—Cattle Marks—The Court in 1805-06—Contempt of Court Case—Probate Court Created—McJunkin-Halleck Tragedy—Court Dockets Written Up—Bredin Appointed Judge—Mohawk Murder Trial—Election of Judges—The Nellis Murder—Duff Trial—Constable Ferguson Killed—Court of 1853—Election of McGuffin—Cooper Murder Trial—Addington Murder Trial—Hockenbury Trial—Schugart-Martin Trials—Constitution of 1873—Judicial Contest of 1884—Arrest of Counterfeiters—Harbison-Monks Baby Case—Lee Murder Trial—Hasler Murder—Judicial Contest of 1893—Election of 1902—Catherine Miller Case—McGrady Trial—The Hoffman Case—Ground Hog Case—The Kreditch Murder—McLaughlin-Hemphill Tragedy—The Schmidt Murder—The Bennett Riot—The Bench; Biographical Notice—The Bar—Biographical Notice—The Butler Bar in 1908.

CHAPTER VIII.

TRANSPORTATION FACILITIES.....	266
Public Roads—Stage Lines—Canals—Steam and Electric Railroads.

CHAPTER IX.

AGRICULTURE.....	280
Pioneer Methods—Primitive Appliances—Butler County Farmers Progressive—Agricultural Societies—The Butler Driving Park and Fair Association—Millerstown Fair Association—Chicoora Dairy Park and Fair Association—North Washington Agricultural Society.

CHAPTER X.

MILITARY HISTORY.....	290
Early Militia Organizations—Butler Invincibles—War of the Revolution—Butler County's Line of Descent—Military Organizations to which the First Settlers Belonged—Revolt of the Pennsylvania Line—A Hero of Stony Point—The Critchlow Brothers and Thomas Scott at Saratoga—War of 1812—Butler Volunteers at Erie—Organization of the Second Infantry—The 138th Infantry—Rough Treatment of a Tory—Mexican War—Civil War—The Various Commands—Bounty Act—Balaam Association—Jubilee Meeting—Soldiers' Monuments—Spanish-American War—Departure of 15th Regiment—Death of Private Watters—Patriotic Societies—Roster of Company E, 15th Regiment—Names of Volunteers—National Guard—Roster of Company L, 16th Regiment—Company G, 21st Regiment.

CHAPTER XI.

THE MEDICAL PROFESSION.....	323
The Old Doctor—Some Borough and County Physicians—Homeopaths—Osteopathy—Registered Physicians—Butler Medical Association—Typhoid Fever Epidemic—Relief Society Organized—Ladies' Auxiliary Committees—Dr. Batt's Work—Hospital Established—Supply Rooms—Diet Kitchen—Clara Barton's Visit—Relief Fund—History of the Water Supply—Financial Report—Butler County General Hospital—Nurses' Training School.

CONTENTS

13

CHAPTER XII.

BANKS AND BANKING.....	359
First Banking Institution—First National Bank—John Berg & Co.—Butler Savings Bank—Butler Savings and Trust Co.—Butler County National Bank—Farmers' National Bank of Butler—Guaranty Safe Deposit & Trust Co.—Standard Trust Co.—First National Bank of Harrisville—First National Bank of Zelenople—Citizens' National Bank of Slippery Rock—First National, Slippery Rock—Mars National Bank—First National Bank of Bruin—Citizens' National Bank of Evans City—Lyndorn National Bank—Harmony Savings Bank—Commercial Bank of Harmony—Prospect Savings Bank—Millerstown Savings Bank Association—Millerstown Deposit Bank—Butler County Bank—Fairview Banks—Argyle Savings Bank, Petrolia.

CHAPTER XIII.

THE PRESS	370
Newspapers and Editors of the Past and of the Present.

CHAPTER XIV.

EDUCATION	385
The First Schools—Progress of Education—Important Legislation—Teachers' Associations, Etc.

CHAPTER XV.

PUBLIC UTILITIES	393
Roads and Bridges—Electric Railways—Telephone and Telegraph—Bell Telephone—Postal Telegraph Company—People's Telephone Co.—Speechley Telephone Co.—Butler and Coyleville Telephone Co.—Burton Telephone Co.—Slippery Rock Telephone Co.—Saxonburg Telephone Co.—Butler County Telephone Co.—Harrisville Telephone Co.—Pittsburg and Butler Telephone Co.—Portersville Telephone Co.

CHAPTER XVI.

BUTLER BOROUGH	400
Founders of Butler—The County Seat—First Sale of Lots—Original Maps—Dispute about Title—First Settlers—Incorporation of the Town—First Public School Tax—Fire Department Considered—Extension of Borough and Street Lights—Light and Fuel Companies—Fire Insurance Companies—Water Companies—Railroads—Telegraph Lines—Board of Trade—Business Men's Association—Grocers' Association—Chamber of Commerce—Public Buildings—Taverns and Hotels—Manufactures—Machine Shops—Brick yards—Building and Loan Associations—Churches—Schools—Religious and Charitable Societies—Graveyards and Cemeteries—Postmasters.

CHAPTER XVII.

THE TOWNSHIPS	487
BIOGRAPHICAL	605

Index

Biographical

	Page		Page		Page
Abernethy, Dr.	334	Ball, Joseph	1450	Blakeley, Col. Archibald.....	246
Abrams, Edward E.	611	Bancroft, Prof. P. S.	1275	Blakeley, Col. William.....	246
Adams, George	1459	Barber, Dr. Walter.....	337	Blaney, Cyrus E.....	748
Adams, Josiah	784	Barber, William	1423	Book, Charles H.....	1266
Adams, Leander	1281	Bard, Jackson E.....	766	Book, William F.....	1486
Addison, Hon. Alexander.....	239	Barkey, Enos	1068	Boos, Jacob	779
Aggas, Warren	607	Barkeley, William J.....	939	Borland, Charles R.....	1348
Agnew, Dr.	326	Barnard, Carlton H.....	831	Bovard, J. Chambers.....	1152
Agnew, Hon. Daniel.....	240	Barney, H. M.....	1418	Bovard & Sons, J. C.....	1152
Akins, Andrew W.....	900	Barnhart, Andrew W.....	878	Bowers, Augustus	1259
Albert, Peter W.....	1473	Barnhart, Charles H.....	1134	Bowser, D. L.....	629
Alchorn, Dr. James P.....	337	Barnhart, Rudolph	903	Bowser, Ross M.....	1021
Aldinger, F. Augustus.....	1078	Barnhart, Victor A.....	1009	Bowser, S. F.....	257
Alexander, Thomas	613	Barron, Joseph	1391	Boyle, J. C., M. D.....	1129
Allen, Charles W.....	958	Bartley, James M.....	675	Braham, Samuel L.....	1063
Allen, Gideon R.....	1485	Bartley, Naaman F.....	1241	Brandberg, C. J.....	993
Allen, W. L.....	1097	Bartley, William J.....	1426	Brandon, Matthew H.....	643
Allen, William S.....	656	Bastian, David G.....	1244	Brandon, Washington D.....	257
Allison, Robert L., M. D.....	1347	Bauer, Charles	983	Brandon, J. Emory.....	916
Altwater, William G.....	1320	Bauer, George	1166	Brandon, Jacob C.....	911
Anderson, John F.....	691	Beachem, Charles	1229	Brandon, William S.....	907
Anderson, Ora H.....	1185	Beam, Samuel A.....	1409	Braunan, Isaac R.....	659
Anderson, Robert M.....	1029	Beatty, George M., M. D.....	1141	Bredin, Edward M.....	245
Angell, C. D.....	172	Beatty, Dr. J. W.....	335	Bredin, Hon. James.....	647
Angert, Joseph	889	Beck, Frank S.....	862	Bredin, Hon. John.....	240
Armbruster, J. George.....	984	Beck, Joseph L.....	862	Bredin, Joseph B.....	664
Arner, William C.....	1411	Behm, Augustus H.....	1007	Bredin, Dr. Stephen.....	329
Arnold, William	1195	Bell, Hon. Elmer E.....	954	Brennan, William J.....	849
Ash, Isaac	249	Bell, Dr. Harry A.....	329	Brewster, Alexander	671
Ash, Joseph	982	Bell, Samuel	1313	Briker, Hiram C.....	989
Atwell, J. Clinton, M. D.....	718	Bell, Samuel O.....	943	Briker, Dr. McCurdy.....	329
Atwell, Samuel	263	Bell, Dr. Sylvester D.....	329	Brittain, James F.....	256
Atwell, William J.....	1198	Bennett, David T.....	804	Brower, Dr. B. H. B.....	337
Avery, S. S.....	253	Bennett, William L.....	808	Brown, Charles M.....	1050
Ayres, Gen. William.....	243	Beringer, John	1100	Brown, C. N.....	204
Bachman, Charles E.....	1141	Berry, O. P.....	1430	Brown, Henry J.....	1140
Bachman, William	959	Bicker, Herman L.....	660	Brown, Peter P.....	1282
Badger, Frank W.....	895	Bicker, John F.....	663	Brown, Robert H.....	973
Badger, Sumner B.....	975	Binsack, Henry	902	Brown, T. H.....	995
Bailey, Dr. Raymond W.....	343	Black, Alfred J.....	943	Brown, William E.....	989
Baker, Everett M., M. D.....	1073	Black, A. T.....	255	Brown, Dr. William H.....	341
Baker, James W.....	667	Black, George A.....	256	Brunermer, George A.....	857
Baker, Thomas M.....	255	Black, John A.....	722	Buchanan, James C.....	1423
Baldwin, George	743	Black, Newton	254	Buffington, Hon. Joseph.....	243
Balfour, John	1451	Black, William H.....	256	Buhning, Henry	1291
		Blair, Marion E.....	750	Bullard, Dr. Henry.....	335

INDEX.

15

	Page		Page		Page
Burchard, Dr. H. C.	335	Coye, James, Jr.	761	Donaldson, William P.	759
Burk, John A.	1236	Craig, L. H.	848	Donley, Joseph T.	255
Burke, Richard	826	Cramer, John	926	Doobie, Henry Perry.	1254
Burton, William J.	994	Craumer, John T.	1074	Double, Joseph	635
Butler, Albert E.	987	Crawford, Dr. Frank	329	Douthett, Detmore W.	1023
Butler, Gen. Richard	75	Crawford, Joseph A.	780	Douthett, William G.	801
Byers, John	1386	Crawford, Walter G.	253	Dower, John H.	730
Byers, Dr. John E.	328	Cress, Milton	1476	Drake, Dr. Nannie B.	341
Byers, Josiah	1468	Criswell, David S.	1463	Drang, Philip A.	1351
		Criswell, John A.	1077	Rushel, Henry A.	945
		Criswell, Joseph	1310	Duff, Dr. P. S.	341
Caldwell, James B.	1101	Critchlow, Henry C.	762	Duffy, Peter	1126
Caldwell, John B.	1306	Cromling, Henry	1411	Dunbar, Charles I.	1002
Caler, Wilbert L.	1398	Cross, John A.	1093	Dunbar, Daniel L.	1091
Campbell, Andrew G.	1298	Crouse, Philip	843	Dunbar, Solomon	1143
Campbell, James I.	755	Crowe, John	840	Duncan, Gilmore A., D. D. S.	1365
Campbell, John S.	1289	Cubbins, William H.	798	Duncan, Nelson B.	1292
Campbell, Mrs. Josephine	1066	Culbertson, W. Clark	1446	Duncan, Sample C.	1233
Campbell, N. W.	256	Cummings, Paul	256	Dunlap, Malvain	1314
Campbell, O. P.	1107	Cummings, Stephen	738	DuPanchell, Dr.	327
Campbell, T. Chalmers	1010	Cunningham, Dr. Abelard V.	931
Campbell, Dr. Willard B.	1065	Cunningham, A. M.	254	Eagal, Orenzo W.	1483
Campbell, William	1306	Cunningham, David C.	245	Eakin, Robert	1399
Campbell, William, Sr.	1090	Cunningham, Francis W.	929	Eastman, Frank M.	255
Carpenter, John L.	1374	Currie, William B.	654	Eberhart, Andrew O.	681
Cashdollar, William S.	1117	Cypher, John C.	737	Eberle, C. P.	882
Chandler, George N.	797	Cypher, Philip	742	Eberle, H. W.	762
Christie, James L., M. D.	869			Emmer, J. Andrew	868
Christie, Samuel Plummer	1442	Dale, David E.	814	Ekas, Chester A.	1436
Christley, Alfred M.	260	Dambach, Adam J.	1165	Elliott, James M.	773
Christley, Curtis I.	1012	Dambaugh, Jacob	1026	Erick, Dr. J. H.	333
Christley, Laurrell E.	378	Dart, D. W.	1327	Erick, John M.	1040
Christley, William	1346	Daubenspeck, G. F.	838	Erick, Richard E.	1060
Christy, Alfred W.	761	Daubenspeck, Philip	870	Emmerling, Dr. Charles	326
Christy, Dr. J. L.	338	Daugherty, Joseph S.	849	Enrick, William J.	964
Clark, Julian A.	1318	Daugherty, W. H.	1443	Endres, Adam	876
Clark, J. B.	255	Davidson, A. W.	1414	Engelhart, Ernst F.	895
Clay, S. G.	1368	Davis, Dr. Harry M.	333	Evans, J. Bernard	1150
Cleland, David L.	692	Davison, Mrs. Priscilla	1017	Evans, Silas H.	796
Clevis, L. J.	253	Davy, P. H.	1004	Evans, Walter	798
Clinton, E. DeWitt	1277	Dean, Harold E.	839	Everts, J. H.	778
Clutton, Frank	1251	DeColiere, Dr. Henri	328	Ewing, Mrs. Ellsworth	1468
Cluxton, Dr. F. C.	335	DeHaven, Robert L.	768	Eyles, Fred	874
Coehrane, Calvin C.	870	Dennisson, Dr. B. E.	335
Coehran, Joseph H.	1058	Denny, James	253	Falkner, Matthew	1442
Colbert, W. H.	255	DeWolf, Charles L., M. D.	890	Falkner, Samuel	1434
Colestock, Joseph	671	DeWolfe, Dr. Eli G.	338	Fehl, Philip	958
Collins, Isaiah	668	DeWolfe, Dr. Henry C.	325	Fennell, Philip S.	789
Collins, John	1248	Dickey, David M.	844	Ferguson, John	988
Collins, Rev. Patrick K.	1134	Dindlinger, Hon. John	909	Ferrero, Eugene	249
Conley, James R. P.	1339	Dipner, Charles	766	Fetzer, Charles A.	614
Conley, Robert J.	1053	Dipner, John L.	773	Fiedler, Dr. Daniel W.	1479
Conn, Robert B.	1325	Dipner, William	766	Findley, William C.	260
Cookson, Thornley R.	1284	Dittmer, Joseph J.	697	Fisher, Robert	878
Cooper, Aphas A.	1453	Divener, Charles	847	Flegler, A. F.	648
Cooper, Joseph B.	966	Dixon, Winfield S.	1290	Flegler, Isaac M.	966
Cooper, Thomas F.	1179	Dodd, Samuel L.	1385	Fletcher, E. M.	698
Cornelius, Alexander M.	259	Dodds, David B.	1003	Flick, John H.	721
Cornelius, William M.	253	Dodds, Ernest J.	813	Follett, James S.	689
Coulter, Dr. G. W.	338	Dodds, John S.	965	Forecht, George	917
Coulter, Hunter E.	930	Dodds, Thomas J.	643	Forquer, Benjamin J.	1364
Coulter, John W.	264	Dombart, Nicholas A., M. D.	990	Forquer, Francis J.	1222
Cowden, Dr. John	328	Donahson Brothers	759	Forquer, William A.	254
Cowden, Dr. John V.	328	Donaldson, Clifford C.	759	Forstnyte, David	1032
Cowden, Dr. William R.	328	Donaldson, Harry A.	759	Poster, Dr. J. C.	343

	Page		Page		Page
Foster, Dr. Julia E.	342	Groom, Andrew D.	662	Hockenberry, B. M.	1486
Foster, Dr. W. C.	335	Grossman, Ashley W.	834	Hockenberry, Harvey D., M.D.	1378
Foster, William	687	Grossman, Dr. Eliza	341	Hoffman, Harry N.	216
Fox, George H.	626	Grossman, Harrison B.	834	Hogan, Ben	213
Fox, William J.	644	Grossman, Nathaniel S.	628	Hogg, Robert	1074
Frazier, Thomas A.	1131	Grossman, R. J., M.D.	660	Holbein, Joseph E.	1102
Frederick, Jacob	820	Gundlach, Conrad	668	Hoon, Clark W.	814
Frechling, John G.	703			Holland, James F.	204, 206
Frechling, Theodore H.	712	Hall, Amos	809	Hoon, Thomas R.	620
Frechling, William T.	1216	Hall, Amos M.	1484	Hoon, William T.	960
Frickenstein, Dr. Theo.	326	Hallack, Marshall Ney	754	Hoover, Michael	1383
Friskhorn, Frederick A.	768	Hallstein, John A.	1150	Hoover, Dr. Nicholas N.	330
		Halstead, John L. M., M.D.	1429	Hosford, Charles F.	1445
Galbreath, Hon. James M.	840	Hamer, G. D., J. C.	254	Howard, George E.	804
Galbraith, John	243, 373	Hamilton, Fred J. O.	1299	Howard, Dr. Lyman L.	338
Galbreth, Samuel W.	697	Hammer, Gustave A.	1456	Huff, F. J.	1045
Gallagher, Dennis E.	791	Harden, Dr. E. E.	343	Huffman, J. W.	748
Gallagher, Robert E., D.D.S.	923	Harper, Cyrus	855	Humphrey, Joseph A.	256
Galloway, John F.	1435	Harper, Dr. David	335	Humphrey, Sherman C.	1478
Gamble, W. E.	1212	Harper, Dr. Mary E.	341	Humphrey, William	1385
Gerard, Claude	1230	Harris, Dr. Edward H.	341	Hunter, William W.	1452
Gerlach, Charles	1040	Hartman, Hon. Joseph	605	Huselton, B. C.	1118
Germer, Henry	1467	Hartenstein, Louis	1365	Hutchinson, James W.	937
Garroway, J. L.	1057	Hartung, George M.	1082	Hutchinson, Darius L.	1259
Gillespie, Otto J.	1462	Harvey, Elridge	1482	Hutchison, James W.	260
Gillgrist, James A.	1469	Hays, Hon. Thomas	630	Hutzler, William C.	753
Gilliland, E. L.	1344	Hazen, Hon. Aaron L.	242	Hyle, C. Ferd.	987
Gilliland, John A.	676	Hazlett, Dr. Frank L.	330
Gilmore, Hon. Alfred	248	Hazlett, Leslie P.	617	Ifft, George	792
Gilmore, Hugh	1359	Hazlett, Leslie R.	676	Ifft, George N.	373
Gilmore, John	243	Hazlett, William	373	Ifft, Henry John	960
Gilmore, Hon. Samuel A.	248	Ileck, George B.	653	Iinan, Mrs. Martha E.	1174
Gilmore, W. R.	902	Heim, Martin	934	Irvin, Samuel P.	249
Glenn, James S.	1133	Heineman, Charles M.	1304	Irvine, Dr. William	334
Glenn, Samuel W.	1063	Heineman, Henry C.	1304	Irvin, George B.	1377
Goehring, Charles R.	873	Heiner, John H.	618	Irvin, Robert S.	1221
Goehring, W. H.	819	Heist, Leonard	896	Ivell, Robert	1298
Goerman, C. J.	1480	Helfrich, J. George	704
Goldthorp, Thomas J.	1281	Heller, George F.	717	Jack, D. H.	253
Goucher, Henderson H.	259	Heller, Henry E.	724	Jack, Jedediah	248
Gould, Perry E.	937	Helmbold, John R.	1463	Jack, R. P.	1318
Grabe, William H.	1327	Henninger, John R.	910	Jackson, John H.	264
Graham, Hon. George H.	1458	Hennon, Thomas H.	1404	Jacobs, George M.	774
Graham, Harry L.	1257	Henry, William	1283	Jamison, Archibald T.	1202
Graham, Hugh C.	250	Henshaw, Henry W.	1209	Jamison, William E.	777
Graham, Dr. James	325	Herman, Charles	715	Jeunings, Richard	209
Graham, John	245	Herold, Lewis A.	1081	Johns, Isaac N.	621
Graham, John A.	896	Herr, Charles E.	1305	Johnson, Albert C.	253
Graham, John C.	264	Herritt, John H.	689	Johnson, Harry Lee	731
Graham, Matthew	1136	Hervey, Joseph W.	1007	Johnston, C. C.	1068
Graham, Orin P.	1260	Heyl, Asa Waters, D.D.S.	1178	Johnston, John	1046
Graham, Dr. Samuel	327	Higb, Dr. Warren E.	330	Jones, Dr. Mary L.	341
Graham, Thomas J.	953	Hillard, Daniel R.	1191
Graham, Walter L.	1076	Hillard, Jonathan B.	1293	Kabel, Martin	828
Gray, Carson G.	1457	Hilliard, John W.	1413	Kaltenbach, John W.	976
Greer, Paul E.	642	Hincheberger, Joseph B.	1180	Kamerer, Samuel H.	1428
Greener, John	749	Hindman, DeLoss L.	1137	Karns, Sheridan C.	809
Greer, John B.	256	Hindman, H. C.	1297	Karns, Stephen D.	208
Greer, Hon. John M.	1444	Bindman, John C.	1171	Kauffman, George A.	1038
Greer, Matthew S.	970	Hindman, Robert S.	1385	Kauffman, W. L.	696
Greer, S. W.	1028	Hines, George W.	861	Kaylor, G. W.	1426
Greer, Thomas H.	256	Hines, James M.	1467	Kaylor, Isaac	1434
Gregg, John A.	1089	Hines, William P.	1390	Keasey, Henry C.	636
Gregg, Ralph	1278	Hobaugh, John S.	825	Keasey, Webster	832
Grener, Henry F.	1332	Hoch, A. A.	1354	Keck, Henry	920
Grimm, George F.	1163	Hoch, Hon. Ralph W. E.	883	Keck, Jacob	917

INDEX.

17

Page		Page		Page
Keek, Theo. C. H.	264	Leidecker, F. W.	743	McDonnell, Arens	246
Keister, Winfield S.	785	Lenzner, H. W.	1089	McDonald, Duncan	1345
Kelley, John C.	687	Lerner, Henry H.	722	McDonald, William T.	1398
Kelley, John K.	253	Leslie, Samuel A.	1454	McDowell, James A.	929
Kelley, Thomas J.	1093	Leslie, Samuel McBride	1057	McDowell, W. J.	1464
Kelly, Dr. Albert A.	334	Lester, William J.	648	McDowell, William	1159
Kelly, David P.	978	Lewis, John A.	1236	McElroy, James H., Sr.	850
Kelly, Milton H.	1481	Linn, L. G.	253	McElvain, Nelson	1192
Kelly, S. C.	821	Litzinger, Lewis P.	265	McFarland, A. B. C.	255
Kennedy, C. H.	932	Lloyd, Col. David D.	1083	McFarland, Thomas D.	1471
Kennedy, Charles L.	1085	Lloyd, R. Russell	963	McFarlin, Caleb B.	1462
Kennedy, Joe J.	703	Logan, David Henry	1402	McFarlin, Caleb B., Jr.	1428
Kennedy, L. Clyde	1132	Logan, James C.	709	McFerrin, Chas. A.	254
Kennedy, Peter H.	675	Logue, Patrick	843	McGaffie, W. H.	826
Kennedy, William	1237	Love, Sample	1039	McGeary, James	854
Kennedy, William J.	1174	Lowrie, Walter	138	McGeary, William B.	813
Kennedy, Hon. Wm. M.	1210	Lowrie, Walter H.	245	McGinnis, William	803
Kepple, A. D.	1397	Lowry, Col. Alexander	944	McGinnis, Hon. L. L.	241
Kepple, William L.	1320	Lowry, John P.	863	McGuirk, Dennis P.	1269
Kerr, Levi T.	1368	Lowry, Porter W.	688	McGuirk, Thomas H.	1357
Kerr, Thomas E.	1018	Lusk, Dr. Amos	336	McIntire, C. E.	1017
Kesselman, William	659	Lusk, Dr. Joseph S.	336	McIntyre, William	1475
King, Philo L.	1447	Lusk, Dr. Loring	336	McJunkin, Hon. Ebenezer	241
Kinsey, William P.	1102	Lusk, William H.	795	McJunkin, Hon. Ira	617
Kirk, James W.	248	Luton, W. W.	1197	McJunkin, James B.	258
Kirkpatrick, David L.	1023	Lynn, Dr. George	325	McJunkin, Hon. J. David	626
Kirkkaddon, J. C.	1455	Lyon, Edwin	249	McJunkin, Dr. Isaiah	326
Kison, John H.	1059	Lynn, Dr. H. C.	326	McKain, John	1212
Kleemann, Rudolph J.	767	Lyon, Thomas H.	259	McKain, Silas	1212
Klingler, Harry S.	633	Lytle, W. F.	1177	McKay, Samuel	887
Klingler, Herman J.	633	McAloo, Dr. Geo. K.	328	McKeel, James A.	607
Knael, George H.	1025	McAlpin, Dr. Jasmine	341	McKeel, Dr. James C.	331
Knauf, A. H.	1331	McBride, Dr. C. F.	329	McKeel, James F.	993
Knause, John	932	McBride, Col. Francis	244	McKeel, James W.	1325
Knouse, Charles E.	1163	McBride, Isaiah L.	707	McKeel, John S., B.D.	1340
Knox, James M.	753	McBride, John M.	1059	McKeel, Josiah D.	802
Koehler, John E.	727	McBride, Michael	250	McKeown, John	207
Koeh, John G.	844	McBride, Michael	250	McKinney, Henry B.	774
Kohler, Frank X.	261	McBride, Kerr H.	1164	McKinney, Joseph M.	820
Korona, Manuel A.	1426	McCafferty, William	1354	McKinney, Samuel	661
Kramer, Michael	786	McCall, Josiah P.	611	McMahon, Daniel	1270
Krause, Philip P.	1474	McCandless, Hon. Charles	241	McMahon, D. J.	1336
Krause, Robert	1068	McCandless, Dr. Geo. A.	337	McMichael, Dr. Josiah	334
Krause, William	853	McCandless, Humes A.	627	McMichael, Hon. John	242
Kribbs, Rev. John A.	1207	McCandless, James W.	1274	McMichael, Robert John, M.D.	1360
Kriess, Henry F.	1354	McCandless, Jennings C.	847	McMichael, Zenas	1230
Krut, Anton	696	McCandless, Joseph M.	1037	McMillan, Dr. Jackson	333
Kutsch, Albert	1300	McCandless, Joshua J.	642	McMurray, Mrs. Margaret	1217
Kutsch, Joseph	754	McCandless, Dr. Josiah	338	McNally, James M.	982
Kyle, D. J.	253	McCandless, J. R.	1173	McNamara, John R.	858
Kyle, Robert W.	1156	McCandless, O. G.	253	McQuiston, Livingston	257
Lackey, William E.	1276	McCandless, Capt. William H.	1343	McQuiston, William A.	838
Lambing Bros.	207	McCarthy, John	1160	McSweeney, Edward	253
Lang, Andrew J.	684	McChristy, Dr. C. A.	338	McTaggart, John E.	738
Lang, Erhart	677	McCafferty, James S.	881	Magee, William A.	814
Lasher, Dr. W. W.	337	McCalland, Charles S., M.D.	1119	Maharg, James N.	1108
Lauffer, Z. P.	1049	McClure, Robert M.	249	Maizland, John	1378
Langhner, Samuel N.	767	McCullough, Andrew W.	1183	Maltby, Albert E., A.M.	1406
Lawrence, Peter K.	1477	McCullough, David	1404	Mann, Dr. Jesse E.	341
Leake, Dr. E. N.	341	McCullough, N. C.	926	Manny, Joseph	710
Lechner, John	1037	McCullough, Peter	863	Marburger, George W.	1190
Leech, Lott I.	1144	McConnell, Dr. W. W.	1071	Marburger, John	1157
Leedom, J. H.	853	McOoy, John H.	1138	Markel, Lawrence O.	1168
Leedom, P. W.	1471	McOrea, D. F.	970	Marks, Robert A.	1189
Leemson, Andrew	1238	McOne, W. D., M.D.	1474	Marshall, A. A.	619
		McQuady, Dr. R. L.	333	Marshall, Henry N.	255

	Page		Page		Page
Marshall, James T.	1008	Murrin, John	1031	Pierce, Thomas M.	698
Marshall, John D.	260	Murrin, John F.	861	Pistorius, Jacob	825
Marshall, Kennedy	253	Murrin, Joseph T.	1252	Pistorius, Peter	718
Martin, Mrs. Nancy A.	1225	Murrin, William Z.	1031	Pollock, B. L.	256
Martin, Hon. J. Norman	242	Mutual Coal Mining Co.	1204	Palm, Charles O.	784
Martin, William H.	263	Myers, Charles M.	737	Poole, E. A.	1016
Martin, William T.	1207	Myers, Henry J.	1450	Powell, Dr. Anna H.	342
Martsoff, Henry	656	Negley, Edgar H.	265	Powell, Dr. R. B.	342
Martsoff, Lewis	1223	Negley, John H.	247	Powell, John Wesley	1425
Mates, James B.	259	Negley, William C.	1275	Poywell, William V.	622
Maurhorff, Alfred	1002	Nelson, Alfred R.	1057	Pringle, William	1045
Maxwell, Leslie Q.	255	Neubert, Emil F.	1190	Prugh, Rev. Peter C.	1319
Maxwell, R. L.	253	Neubert, Oliver	1172	Purucker, John E.	827
Maxwell, Dr. Thomas M.	332	Neu, Peter	1190	Purviance, Frank S.	254
Mays, Peter I.	1400	Neyman, Dr. A. M.	326	Purviance, Col. John	243
Meakin, John A.	1374	Neyman, Markle J.	1226	Purviance, Lewis K.	249
Meader, Albert H.	884	Nicholas, O. H.	875	Purviance, Gen. John N.	245
Meeder, Edwin	924	Nieklas, Mrs. Mary W.	822	Purviance, Parker C.	263
Meek, James	749	Nixon, Simeon	819	Purviance, Hon. Samuel A.	244
Meldren, Jacob L.	209	Northhine, L. C.	1057	Purviance, William A.	831
Menken, Henry	1447	Onkes, Scott	723	Purvis, Dr. Gray F.	343
Merkley, E. N., D. O.	342	Oesterling, Edward L.	1050	Purvis, Joseph L.	641
Merkley, W. A., D. O.	342	Oesterling, Eli	1097	Purvis, Samuel G.	884
Metz, Andrew B.	1328	Oesterling, Fred L.	709	Purvis, William B.	263
Metz, Dr. A. H.	337	Oesterling, John	904	Quirk, Michael	844
Michael, William L.	1130	Oesterling, Leonard, Jr.	915	Quinn, Harry M.	832
Milford, John J.	1460	Oesterling, Leonard, Sr.	915	Rader, B. J.	673
Miller, Andrew O.	625	Oesterling, Lewis B.	911	Rader, Lewis	1044
Miller, Charles R.	1032	Oesterling, William	957	Rader, William H.	1477
Miller, Ellsworth	1211	O'Hara, James	1305	Ralston, Everett L.	925
Miller, Eugene G.	253	Ohl, Charles Adam	1417	Ralston, Dr. James H.	918
Miller, Fred E.	1149	Oliver, Henderson	1397	Ralston, William A.	255
Miller, Dr. Gottlieb	326	Orr, Jobu	742	Ransey, Baxter R.	1334
Miller, G. Wilson	1071	Orr, Joseph H.	741	Ramsey, William H.	1203
Miller, John P.	1208	Orton, George W. P.	1358	Randall, James N.	1326
Miller, John P.	925	Orton, William H.	650	Randolph, Dr. W. J.	327
Miller, Peter	1480	Ostrandrer, Loree L.	1460	Rape, William	1010
Miller, William H.	1333	Owens, Dr. James	333	Ray, Perry F.	1417
Milliron, George	957	Painter, Howard I.	263	Reiber, Aaron E.	261
Milliron, James A.	1459	Painter, J. M.	262	Reiber, A. E.	996
Mitchell, Alexander	258	Palmer, Dr. Orrin D.	336	Reiber, Ferdinand	261
Mitchell, Ernan B.	253	Park, Albert A.	938	Reiber, George	724
Mitchell, Hon. John H.	247	Parker, C. H.	1074	Reihing, William H.	1124
Mitchell, Joseph	250	Passavant, Charles S., Jr.	678	Reith, Joseph	1410
Mitchell, Louis Z.	245	Patterson, Dr. A. M.	771	Reniek, Adam H.	803
Monks, Martiu	1012	Patterson, Dr. Ella A. H.	341	Reniek, Jacob G.	875
Montag, Henry Ernest	1406	Patterson, Prof. Gaylord H.	777	Renno, E. J.	833
Montag, J. E.	1131	Patterson, John W.	755	Richards, A. C.	867
Moore, James N.	259	Patterson, Dr. R. L.	334	Richardson, Dr. N. M.	338
Moore, Dr. J. W. F.	330	Patterson, Walter S., M. D.	716	Riddle, W. H. II.	807
Moore, John L.	889	Pearsof, Samuel H.	250	Rieger, Andrew	883
Moore, Lorenzo G.	888	Pearson, Dr. Benjamin	338	Rieger, Charles	894
Morgan, Edward	1109	Peffer, Alfred Z.	1303	Riimp, Charles	1168
Morgan, Samuel	644	Peffer, Fred	868	Ritner, Henry A.	613
Morrison, James H.	1124	Penfield, R. S.	682	Roach, Thomas V.	1420
Morrison, W. J.	801	Peoples, James A.	1243	Robb, Albert W.	1429
Morrow, Dr. Clara E.	342	Peoples, John F.	1243	Roberts, Hon. Samuel	240
Morrow, David R.	996	Präbe, Henry	1469	Robinson, Eli D.	606
Moser, J. G.	1363	Phillips, Thomas W.	219	Robinson, George E.	263
Moyer, Abram W.	867	Piekarf, William H.	1380	Robinson, Hon. Thomas	622
Muntz, John N.	786	Pierce Brothers	698	Rockenstein, A. F.	822
Murphy, Frank H.	263	Pierce, James R.	698	Roessing, W. P.	828
Murrin, A. P.	1379
Murrin, Hugh T.	1379

INDEX.

19

	Page
Rosebaugh, Andrew C.	690
Roth, John M.	253
Roth, Lewis M., D. D. S.	945
Ruch, Reuben F.	1438
Rudert, Paul	1149
Ruff, Albert	1108
Rumbangh, Jacob B.	1125
Rumberger, Dr. C. C.	335
Rumberger, William F.	1251
Runkle, James G.	856
Russell, Huston	1094
Russel, S. Nelson.	1144
Sager, William J.	1251
Sankey, Lewis C.	807
Sarver, A. H.	974
Satterfield, John A.	210
Sauter, Martin.	1428
Sauter, Theodore	1428
Say, John C.	981
Schaefer, Eugene	1021
Schaffner, John	1267
Schaffner, Samuel, Sr.	744
Schenck, Elmer W.	609
Schenck, George.	736
Schenck, Theodore L.	729
Schilling, Alexander	1084
Schilling, Herman	977
Schlagel, Sammel	653
Schlegel, Gus	723
Schmidt, Dr. F.	337
Schnur, George W.	887
Schoeffel, Andrew	1312
Schoenfeld, Charles	692
Schoentag, Charles F.	1334
Schultz, Stephen F.	1089
Schwalm, Henry	1073
Schwalm, William	1073
Scott, Albert T.	260
Scott, Dr. George H.	332
Scott, John Calvin.	1396
Scott, Dr. John M.	606
Scott, Robert P.	257
Scott, Winfield S.	933
Searing, George	1067
Seaton, Amos	1339
Seaton, Elias	1233
Seaton, William G.	1241
Sell, John G.	1470
Shaffer, William H.	1353
Shakely, Elias	1139
Shannon, John F.	1112
Shannon, Matthew W., Jr.	1082
Shanon, John J.	655
Shepard, William	1052
Sheridan, John J.	953
Sherman, Casper	1066
Sherwin, Samuel	1412
Shiever, Joseph F.	1180
Shira, C. C.	1086
Shoemaker, Hon. Jos. B., M. D.	331
Shroyack, Dr. Louisa M.	341
Shufflin, T. J.	839
Shull, J. P.	834
Sibert, Bernard B.	1292

	Page
Siebert, William	1142
Sipe, W. I.	909
Sitler, Alpheus.	1448
Slagle, John A.	1242
Slater, Mary A.	1116
Slater, William	816
Sloan, Berton Eugene.	1391
Sloan, David J.	1224
Sloan, Edward C.	1049
Sloan, Foster.	1384
Sloan, Harvey A.	1433
Smith, Albert	1395
Smith, Albert W.	1204
Smith, Charles A.	695
Smith, Dan.	202
Smith, John W.	1157
Smith, George W.	244
Smith, Leonard.	1373
Smith, Thomas V.	1021
Smith, William	207
Smith, William, D. O.	342
Snaman, Harry B.	625
Snell, William J.	1003
Snow, N. S.	803
Snyder, Ernest U., M. D.	1257
Snyder, Harvey	250
Snyder, John Harvey.	1420
Snyder, Sammel B.	1167
Spang, George A.	1175
Spargo, John S.	1473
Spear, William L.	1043
Speer, Dr. Matthew W.	337
Spihtaler, Martin.	1170
Spohn, Philip J.	890
Sproul, Hugh.	1313
Squire, Dr. E. P.	325
Stackpole, R. L., M. D.	1431
Staff, William	1352
Stalker, Henry B.	1195
Standard Coal Mining Co.	1203
Staples, John.	940
Stearns, Ernest L.	1229
Steel, Mrs. Eva M.	1343
Steele, Asa C.	702
Steele, Hugh G.	683
Steen, James H.	791
Steighner, Barney	570
Steigher, Christian.	888
Stein, Dr. Charles.	326
Stein, John	959
Stein, Louis.	967
Stein, William A.	1389
Stapp, Lawrence H., M. D.	1147
Stevenson, John	1035
Stewart, Frew H.	919
Stewart, Furman	1437
Stewart, George C.	256
Stewart, Robert W.	1064
Stewart, Thomas T.	1446
Stickle, William P.	1419
Stokey, Charles.	619
Stokey, Henry W.	637
Stoops, Stephen	792
Stoops, William C.	997
Storey, William	1392
Stoughton, Lester G.	750

	Page
Stoughton, Oliver W.	1270
Stoughton, Solomon R.	1001
Stracke, Louis F.	827
Stroecker, Charles J. D.	712
Struthers, James F.	890
Strutt, John G.	833
Sullivan, Charles A.	250
Sullivan, Hon. Charles C.	609
Sullivan, Col. John M.	246
Sullivan, John Q.	249
Sullivan, Moses.	250
Sutherland, Dr. J. H.	333
Sutton, D. Harper.	1155
Sutton, James M.	998
Sutton, Dr. John C.	342
Sutton, John H.	952
Swain, William A.	690
Sweeney, Timothy.	1234
Sweesy, Alpheus.	773
Taggart, Charles	790
Taggart, Samuel N.	1484
Taylor, Alexander.	864
Taylor, Elias K.	1254
Taylor, R. B.	215
Tebay, James Hall.	1217
Tebay, John H.	1332
Templeton, Samuel H.	1390
Tervilliger, Egbert A.	789
Thieleman, Christian H.	1016
Thomas, Dr. George D.	333
Thomas, Owen J.	638
Thompson, Andrew R.	1123
Thompson, David M.	1225
Thompson, E. C., M. D.	1399
Thompson, Gill M.	1414
Thompson, Harvey D.	732
Thompson, Hon. James.	246
Thompson, John H.	253
Thompson, Hon. Col. John M.	1072
Thompson, Joseph C.	1470
Thompson, Hon. Nelson H.	1480
Thompson, Oliver D.	259
Thompson, Solomon R.	1336
Thompson, William C.	262
Thompson, William G.	246
Thrower, John E.	1465
Timblin, William	245
Timmony, Joseph T.	253
Titley, Robert S.	1110
Totten, Frank	1427
Trautman, John.	760
Trautman, Louis P.	853
Trimble, Robert.	1165
Trimble, Samuel C.	1148
Trounman, Adam	1186
Trounman, Albert C.	1026
Trounman, George A.	662
Trounman, Henry N.	981
Trounman, J. Henry.	650
Trounman, W. J.	934
Turner, Harry T.	808
Turner, Dr. John F.	329
Turner, Sammel E.	1120
Twaddle, John C.	1201

	Page		Page		Page
Vance, James B.	1043	Welsh, William J.	1116	Winters, W. D.	784
Vanderlin, Joseph C.	258	Werner, Augustus F.	1031	Wise, Henry M.	909
Vandyke, Eli.	1465	Wetzel, Andrew Fred.	1343	Wise, Israel M.	711
Van Dyke, Jackson M.	1372	White, George R.	261	Wise, James E.	1025
Vogelely, Theodore.	1268	White, Lawrence M.	1483	Wise, Levi M.	264
Wade, Robert M.	1210	Whitener, Valentine.	1258	Wise, William H.	1191
Wagner, Henry.	744	Whitmore, John.	729	Witte, Frederick W.	655
Wahl, Henry.	1098	Whitmire, Robert J.	783	Wohlgemuth, Louis.	1035
Wahl, William.	1441	Whitmire, Thomas L.	730	Womer, John E.	1367
Waldron, Hon. William S.	1099	Wick, C. Foster.	1235	Worrall, George.	796
Walker, Clarence.	261	Wick, Eugene E.	1045	Wuller, Charles B.	682
Walker, Lewis P.	907	Wick, Leonard F.	1216	Wuller, Daniel.	216
Walker, Nathaniel.	772	Wick, Lewis C.	1405	Yost, Andrew.	684
Walker, Samuel.	264	Wick, W. S.	1011	Youkers, Albert W.	667
Walker, Samuel.	668	Widger, James C.	1430	Young, Aaron S.	1253
Walker, Capt. Samuel.	673	Wier, Samuel R.	1472	Young, Breaden.	1129
Walker, Samuel R.	716	Wiegand, Edward E.	816	Young, Charles.	1075
Walker, William G.	710	Wigton, John H.	1359	Young, Dallas M.	783
Wallet, Henry D.	1457	Wiles, John C.	837	Young, Elmer E.	260
Walter, Charles E.	741	Wiley, James.	721	Young, Col. Sam.	373
Walter, George.	741	Wilhelm, Rev. Jacob.	952	Young, William J.	641
Walters, Charles T.	1377	Wilkewitz, Godfrey.	1476	Youkins, Daniel.	749
Wasson, E. L., M. D.	1266	Williams, Andrew G.	258	Youkins, John.	621
Wasson, John H.	1410	Williams, Charles C.	779	Zehner, Edwin.	1294
Watson & Williams.	779	Williams, John C.	810	Zehner, Frederick.	893
Watson, Edwin A.	1184	Williams, Dr. Olin A.	341	Zeigler, Alfred.	1215
Watson, Roy A.	779	Wilson, Alexander.	765	Zeigler, Gottlieb M.	815
Watson, William.	968	Wilson, George N.	1352	Zeigler, Ira S.	948
Webber, W. C.	1449	Wilson, Dr. Harry M.	856	Zeigler, A. C.	1030
Weigand, Charles.	1466	Wilson, James S.	756	Ziegler, Alfred H., M. D.	701
Weigand, George.	1466	Wilson, John H.	946	Ziegler, Capt. Jacob.	371
Weisz, Isaac M.	649	Wilson, John Milton.	1357	Ziegler, W. G.	704
Welsh, Dr. George.	237	Wilson, Thomas.	1372	Zimmerman, Dr. George M.	326
Welsh, Henry C.	1265	Winter, Edward.	735
		Winters, Frederick J.	1112

INDEX OF VIEWS.

Alameda Park, Butler	429	Old People's Home, Zelenople	155
Barnhart Mill, Chicora	307	Old Witherpoon Institute	511
Beam Hotel, Zelenople	339	Orphans' Home, Zelenople	307
Bird's-eye View of Butler—Looking East from Butler County National Bank	429	Present Butler County Court House	251
Bird's-eye View of Butler—Looking West from Butler County National Bank	429	Public School, Bruin	511
Boydstown Reservoir of the Butler Water Co., Butler	233	Public School, Evans City	537
Dr. Boyle's Eye and Ear Hospital, Butler	567	Public School, Renfrew	511
B. P. O. E. Building, Butler	537	Public School, Zelenople	307
Broad Street School, Butler	389	Rapp's Seat, Harmony	59
Building Used for High School, Renfrew	537	RESIDENCES—
Butler County Court House, Built in 1807	251	E. E. Abrams, Butler	349
Butler County Court House of 1853	233	William Arnold, Bruin	1194
Butler County Court House of 1877	233	S. L. Braham, Harrisville	1062
Butler County Jail, Butler	233	Jacob Dambaugh, Zelenople	1027
Butler Engine and Foundry Company, Butler	775	Lewis A. Herold, Center Township	1080
Butler General Hospital, Butler	329	J. C. Kelley, Butler Township	349
Butler Roller Mills	283	William B. McGeary, Butler	349
C. H. Barnhart's House and Shop, Butler	329	James W. McKee, Butler	1323
Commercial Hotel, Butler	1362	The Reiber Home, Butler	349
Concordia Home, Marwood	339	W. H. H. Riddle, Butler	567
County Infirmary	155	Charles Rimp, Summit Township	1169
Country Club House, Butler	233	W. F. Rumberger, Butler	1249
Eau Claire Academy	537	Residence and Greenhouses of Geo. W. Schnur, Summit Township	886
English Lutheran Church, Butler	461	Philip J. Spohn, Summit Township	898
Episcopal Church, Butler	461	John Stevenson, Parker Township	1034
First Brick School Building, Butler	389	Sullivan Residence, Butler	349
First Presbyterian Church, Butler	461	Henry C. Welsh, Penn Township	1263
First School House—Built in 1808	115	Second Presbyterian Church, Butler	389
First Steel Jacket Kiln	193	Shooting of Cowden Bros.' No. 2 Well, Fennelton	193
German Lutheran Church, Butler	461	State Normal School, Slippery Rock	511
German Lutheran Church, Zelenople	537	St. John's Lutheran Home and Orphanage, Mars	155
Goehring & Richards Building, Butler	567	St. John's Reformed Church on Eberhart Farm, Butler Township	29
Grammar and High School, Mars	511	St. Patrick's Church, Sugar Creek, Donegal Township	339
Harmony U. P. Church	29	St. Peter's Catholic Church, Butler	461
Home of Alexander Hunter in Ireland	115	St. Paul's Catholic Church, Butler	461
Hotel Nixon, Butler	251	St. Paul's Orphan Home	155
L. O. O. F. Building, Butler	233	St. Paul's Parochial School, Butler	389
Knights of Pythias Home, Harmony	59	Stone House, Brady Township	59
Log Cabin, Built by Manassas Dugan	59	Store of Charles R. Borland, Harrisville	339
Lovly House, Butler	115	The Walter and Graham Mill	283
McBride Well	193	United Presbyterian Church, Butler	389
McCullough Barnard & Co.'s No. 1 Well and the Harry N. Hoffman Well	193	United Presbyterian Church, Eau Claire	115
M. E. Church and Parsonage, Connoquenessing	307	United Presbyterian Church, Fairview	29
Mechling Hotel	59	View of Evans City	307
M. E. Church, Butler	251	Waldorf Hotel and Barn, Evans City	115
Monastery at Herman Station	29	West Sunbury Academy	511
Muddy Creek Falls	59	White Oak Springs U. P. Church, Connoquenessing Township	29
New High School, Butler	389	Y. M. C. A. Building, Butler	251
North Washington Academy	537
Old Graveyard at Harmony	29

James A. McKee

History of Butler County.

CHAPTER I

TOPOGRAPHICAL FEATURES AND MINERAL DEPOSITS

Advance of Civilization Along the Waterways—The County Created, Named, and Surveyed—Organization of Counties—Topography—the Soil, Valley and High Land—Elevations Above Tide Water—Thomas Collins' Salt Well—Webster Wilson's Well—John Negley Well—Eccentricities of the Oil Fields—Coal Fields—Other Mineral Deposits—Lead Mines—Forests—Archeology—Epidemics, Floods, and Storms.

The history of the territory of which Butler County forms a part presents a variety of startling incidents, although none of the historic events of the hundred years preceding the advent of the white settlers happened within the present limits of the county. At various times the territory has been successively under the sovereignty of Great Britain, France, Great Britain again, Virginia, the United States, and lastly Pennsylvania.

ADVANCE OF CIVILIZATION ALONG THE WATERWAYS.

A glance at the map of western Pennsylvania will suggest to the thoughtful reader the fact, and the reasons for the fact, that Butler County was not the theater of any of those great actions which shaped the destiny of the Great West and the entire National domain. The chief villages and strongholds of the aboriginal inhabitants were along or near the great waterways, and when the European explorers came into the country in the beginning of the eighteenth century, they followed these natural highways. It thus resulted in this region as well as all others settled before the era of railroads, that the early homes and operations of the white men were along the navigable streams. The Allegheny River on the east, the Beaver on the west, and the Ohio on the south enclose Butler County in an irregular oval, in the interior of which are only small streams tributary to the larger rivers, and not navigable for the small boats of pioneer commerce.

Hence, during the periods of the French occupation, the long contest of the English for dominion, and during the Revolution, when events of far-reaching effect were occurring along the valleys of the Allegheny, and Ohio, and later when the pioneers pushed into the valley of the Beaver, the territory lying between the streams was an unbroken wilderness. During this time it was the wild retreat of the Indians who fell upon the outposts of civilization, and was probably the home of a few white men who had adopted the life of the savages and were living among them.

When William Penn came to America in 1682 to establish a form of government for his new possessions, the territory was divided into three counties, namely: Bucks, Philadelphia and Chester. The latter included the present limits of Delaware County and all of the territory southwest of the Schuylkill River to the extreme limits of the province. The limits of the other counties were defined in a similar manner as to the west and northern boundaries. As the pioneers pushed their way into the forests to the westward and northward, new counties were erected from time to time to accommodate the needs of the people.

In the line of descent, Butler County is the daughter of Chester County, as will be seen by reference to the table of the organization of counties. The first county to be taken from the territory of Chester County on the west was Lancaster, which was erected under the authority of an act of the provincial legislature in May, 1729. The western limits of Lancaster County were defined as the extreme limits of the province. As civilization advanced westward, other new counties were erected from time to time in the order named: Cumberland, Bedford, Westmoreland, Allegheny, and Butler.

After the purchase of the Indian land in 1784, the territory west and north of the Allegheny and Ohio Rivers was attached to Westmoreland County. In 1787 Allegheny County was created on the west of Westmoreland, and the northern limits of the county extended to the northern boundary of the state, including what is now Erie County, and all of the territory west of the Allegheny River and north of the Ohio. This territory included all of the present limits of Butler, Lawrence, Mercer, Crawford and Erie Counties, and parts of Armstrong, Beaver, Venango, and Warren Counties.

THE COUNTY CREATED, NAMED AND SURVEYED.

The act of the legislature creating Butler County was passed March 12, 1800. The county is named in honor of General Richard Butler, who was killed at St. Clair's defeat, a biographical sketch of whom appears in another chapter. It is bounded by Venango on the north, by Armstrong on the east, by Allegheny on the south, and by Beaver, Lawrence and Mercer Counties on the west. Its geographical center is in latitude 40 degrees 45 minutes north, and longitude, 2 degrees, 47 minutes and 30 seconds west of Washington, D. C. Its area is 814 miles or 529,960 acres, divided into thirty-three townships, and these are subdivided into seventy-one election precincts. The population of the county in 1908 (estimated) is about 79,000.

The year following the act creating the new county, commissioners were appointed to run the county lines. The persons appointed for this purpose were Samuel Rippey, Henry Evans, and John McBride, surveyors, and Beatty Quinn, as axeman. After this commission had made their report, the legislature appointed another committee to locate the county seat. They were Isaac Weaver, John Hamilton, Thos. Martin, James Brady, and Presley Carr Lane. The place selected by them is the present site of the borough of Butler, and is within four miles of the center of the county, as the act provided. The present limits of the county as determined by the surveys of 1854 are as follows: Beginning at the mouth of Buffalo Creek at Freeport; thence westward twenty-three miles to a corner on the west side of Alexander's district adjoining Beaver County; thence along said line and Beaver County northward twenty-three miles to a corner where the streams of Muddy Creek and Slippery Rock unite; thence along the Mercer County line north fifteen degrees east, fifteen miles to a corner near Harrisville; thence eastward fifteen miles to a corner near the Allegheny River near Emlenton; thence southward about thirty miles along the Armstrong County line to the place of beginning.

The first settlers of the county who came into the territory previous to 1800 were Scotch-Irish and Pennsylvania Germans who came from the eastern part of the state. Many of the men had been soldiers in the War of the Revolution and had purchased tracts of land in the donation and depreciation district upon which they made settlements. These were followed by a large number of Irish emigrants who came in from 1800 to 1820, and these were followed by the Germans, who came in 1838.

TOPOGRAPHY.

The chief and central figure in the topography of Butler County is the great dividing ridge between the waters of the Allegheny on the east and the tributaries of the Beaver on the west. This crest of the great water sheds sweeps through the eastern part of the county in a general direction nearly north and south. It enters the county in Middlesex Township, runs northeast through Clinton and Jefferson Townships to Dilks' Station on the Butler branch railroad, and thence northward in almost a straight line to Middletown in Concord Township. From the latter point it extends northward to North Washington and the village Annisville and rounding in a semi-circle the headwaters of Slippery Rock creek passes close to Ean Claire, and thence northward to the county line, along which it runs in a westerly direction, when it again sweeps to the north and runs off along a line between Mercer and Venango Counties. Two prominent ridges coming in from the west meet the great divide near Middletown. The most northern of these is that which lies near Muddy Creek and Slippery Rock, and runs nearly due east from the Lawrence County line through Worth, Brady and Clay townships. The more southern of these ridges is that which separates the waters of Muddy Creek and Connoquenessing. It passes close to Portersville and Prospect and runs nearly northeast through Center and Concord Townships to its junction with the great divide. The height of these dividing ridges reaches about 1,500 feet above tide water, and they are approximately 600 feet above the Allegheny River at Parker.

The center of the drainage system of the northern part of the county is at Middletown. In its immediate vicinity are the headwaters of Slippery Rock Creek, Muddy Creek, Bear Creek, Buffalo Creek, and Kearns' branch of the Connoquenessing. The northern part of the county is principally drained by Muddy Creek and Slippery Rock Creek on the west and Bear Creek on the east and their tributary streams. The southern half of the county is drained by the Connoquenessing Creek, which is formed by the confluence of several branches near Butler borough and flows in a general direction a little south of west through Butler, Penn, Forward, and Jackson Townships to the Beaver County line. While the general direction of the stream is almost in a straight line, it makes many bold sweeps to the north and south, and with one or two exceptions, all of its branches enter it from the south. The branches on the south are Thorn Creek, Glade Run, Breakneck Creek and Brush Creek, along the western limits of the county. The tributaries on the north are Yellow Creek and Little Connoquenessing, the latter flowing in from the northeast a little above Harmony, after running a general parallel course for many miles.

In the southeastern section of the county the small streams flow into Buffalo Creek on the east and Bull Creek on the south, and thence drained into the Allegheny River. Probably nine-tenths of the drainage of the county, however, is westward into the Beaver River.

THE SOIL—VALLEY AND HIGH LAND.

There is comparatively little valley land in the county. A broad and beautiful valley has been carved out by the Connoquenessing in the vicinity of Harmony and Zelienople, and the soil is there derived from the lower coal measures and is very rich and strong. This region is the garden spot of the county, and is probably one of the richest agricultural sections in the state. Well defined terraces exist here that do not appear elsewhere in the county to the knowledge of the geologist. They occur at twenty, sixty, and one hundred and ten feet above the stream, but can only be traced for a short distance along the valley.

Some fine bottom lands appear along the valley of the Slippery Rock from Anadale westward, and in the valley of Muddy Creek from Clay Township west to the Lawrence County line. Outside of the valleys mentioned and a small amount of bottom land along the tributaries of these streams the arable soils of the county are derived from what the geologists call the barren measure rocks. The streams cut down into the lower coal measures, but leave the hillsides so rugged that cultivation is rarely attempted. The farming lands lie back from the streams on the highlands composed of the barren measures, and from this it results that a large portion of the county has a light soil and requires constant fertilization.

Prof. I. C. White, author of the geological report on this district including southern Butler County, says upon this subject, that the farmers have very little in their favor with which to begin, and hence the use of fertilizers is necessary to secure a paying crop. The lower barren measure, from which nearly all of the soils of the district are derived, contain very little limestone, and hence the small amount of calcareous matter originally in the soil has nearly all been used up by the annual extraction of the crops, so that the land is literally famishing for lime. The northern section of the county is better situated in this particular than the southern. Along the Slippery Rock Creek in Slippery Rock, Worth, Brady, Cherry, Mercer and Marion Townships, much of the land is very much improved by the presence of limestone which outcrops in this section, and has been used in the past thirty years to a large extent for agricultural purposes. Prof. Chance, in the second geological survey, divides the soil of the northern section of the county into four classes: First, the soil of the bottom lands, found on Muddy Creek and Slippery Rock and their branches; second, the highlands of the barren measures, varying from a very thin, loose soil to a hard tough clay, much of it good farming land adapted to grazing, but needing a liberal application of lime; third, the highland of southern Brady, Clay, Concord, and Fairview Townships, formed by the outcrop of the Mahoning and Freeport sandstone; and fourth, the soil formed from the disintegration of the shales and sandstone of the lower productive coal measures, varying much in quality as the coal measure rocks vary in lithological character.

ELEVATIONS ABOVE TIDE WATER.

The surface of the county is broken by hills and valleys, the latter forming in the courses of its numerous streams. The elevations are decided, being higher in the northern than in the southern district of the county. At Butler Junction near the southeast corner of the county the elevation is 768.7 feet, and at Emlenton Station in the Allegheny Valley, near the northeast corner of the county, the elevation is 905.1 feet above ocean level. Within the county the following levels have been ascertained, the measurements being track levels at the various railroad stations: Southeast of Butler are Buffalo, 766.4; Harbison, 801.66; Monroe, 840; Sarvers, 1,026.8; Cabot, 1,200.9; Marwood, 1,224.2; Dilks, 1,307; Great Belt, 1,260; Herman, 1,300.6; Brinker Station, 1,301.6; Sunset, 1,317.1; Butler, at the West Penn Depot, 1,008 feet; corner of Butler County National Bank on Main Street, 1,077 feet.

Northeast of Butler are Chicora, 1,195 to 1,210 feet; St. Joe, 1,400; Carbon Center, 1,170; Greece City, 1,286; Modoc, 1,277; Argyle, 1,161; Petrolia, 1,175; Central Point, 1,184; Karns City, 1,204; Stone House, 1,089; Harts' Well on the Say farm in Parker Township, 1,407; Bruin, 1,104; High Point near Lawrenceburg, 1,096; Fairview, 1,247; High Point near Middletown, 1,420; Columbia Hill in Allegheny Township, 1,471; Hill near the southwest corner of Donegal Township, 1,430.

North of Butler Borough the level at Unionville in Center Township is 1,330 feet; at West Sunbury, 1,400; North Washington, 1,500; Eau Claire, 1,520; Annandale, 1,490; Venango Summit, near Eau Claire, 1,554; high point near Annisville, 1,530; and Murrinsville, 1,440.

West and northwest of Butler the level at Prospect is 1,330 feet; at Portersville, 1,360; at West Liberty, 1,190; at Slippery Rock Borough, 1,300; at the northwest corner of Mercer Township, 1,450; at the center of Slippery Rock Township, 1,300; at the middle of the west line of Brady Township, 1,470; at the angle of the west line of Worth Township, 1,350; at the center of Muddy Creek, 1,375; and at Harrisville Borough, 1,340.

From the foregoing it will be seen that the highest point in the county is a knob near the village of Eau Claire in Venango Township, which is 1,554 feet above ocean level, and the lowest point is at Buffalo on the Butler branch railroad in the southeastern corner of the county.

Lake Erie is 573 feet above ocean level; Kittanning at the curb outside of the Central House, 809.94; the Tarentum Depot on the West Penn Railroad, 778 feet; and Allegheny City on Sycamore Street, 741.40. From these levels the relation of Butler County to Lake Erie and lower Allegheny Valley levels may be known. If speculation may be indulged in with any show of reason, and if the theory advanced by geologists is correct, it may be said that the Allegheny and the Beaver Rivers once flowed from 500 to 800 feet above their present levels, and that the Connoquenesing, Slippery Rock, Muddy Creek, and other local creeks from 800 to 1,200 feet. In the lowering of the river and creek bottoms to depths far below their present bed, mighty agencies were at work. Instead of being mere conveyancers of clays, they were hewers of rock, leaving great ravines in the high plateaus, and preparing a way for the ice mountains which rolled over this section, pulverizing the massive sandstones and grinding the hard lime rock into boulders. The terraces and canons tell very plainly how this system of valley making was carried out, while the drill brings to light the method of filling up, which raised the river and creek bottoms to their present levels.

THOMAS COLLINS' SALT WELL.

In the search for oil in Butler County the earth has been bored in some places to a depth of over 4,000 feet, as in the test well on the Smith farm in Winfield Township. In very many places the drill has penetrated to a depth of 1,500 to 2,000 feet, showing the geological structure and the coal formations in the various townships. Among the earliest operations of this kind was a salt well driven by Thomas Collins in 1811-12, to a depth of seventy feet, on the James Kearns farm in Butler Township. This well was near the road leading from Butler to Chicora on what was known as the "Salt Lick." An outcrop of coal in the same locality made the location desirable for the manufacturing of salt, and accordingly this industry was carried on for a number of years. Petroleum was known to the pioneer settlers by the Indian name of Seneca oil, and was highly valued for its reputed medical virtues. A small flow of oil was obtained in this old salt well, which was sufficient to give its flavor to the brine and even to the salt produced. The pioneers did not realize the value of their discovery and the salt well was finally abandoned on account of the oily flavor it gave to the manufactured salt.

WEBSTER WILSON'S WELL.

In 1824 Webster Wilson of New Brighton drilled a salt well in Lancaster Township about 2,600 feet above the confluence of Yellow Creek and Connoquenessing. This well was drilled to a depth of 339 feet, and for a long time salt was manufactured by the panning system. Some idea of the slow progress made in drilling a hundred years ago may be had from the record made at this well. Water-power was used to drill and a year's time was taken in drilling to the depth of 339 feet. The drillers seldom got more than two or three feet in a day, and often only a few inches. Wilson's record of the well shows coal at a depth of fifty-three feet, fire clay at fifty-nine feet, hard sandstone at sixty-nine, Clarion coal at 150 feet, Piedmont sandstone at about 210 feet, five feet of coal at 255 feet, and underlying the coal three feet of fire clay. Nothing below the fire clay was found except shale till the bottom of the well was reached. The absence of ferriiferous limestone in this well may be accounted for by its being cut out by a hard bluish-white sandstone which occupied its place. In drilling the old salt well at Harmony a vein of good coal was found forty-five feet below what is known as the Darlington or Upper Kittanning coal location.

JOHN NEGLEY'S WELL.

A salt well was drilled at Butler about 1832 by John Negley, who invested about $8,000 in the enterprise. The site of this old well was a point on the south bank of the Connoquenessing Creek about two hundred feet west of the Main Street bridge, near the old mill dam. Salt water was found at a depth of 800 feet, and a salt factory was established on the pan system, which was continued for many years. Coal for fuel was taken from the bank on the hill above from the same veins that are now operated by John M. Muntz. Foot power was used in drilling the salt well, and eighty ten-foot hickory rods took the place of a rope or cable. The hole was only two and one-half inches in diameter. The enterprise was abandoned after a few years, on account of the brine being insufficient. Had the well been drilled 300 feet deeper, as subsequent borings have shown, an inexhaustible supply of salt water would have been found. The drillers were engaged for three years in drilling the hole to the depth of 800 feet, and during that time met with many discouragements, on several occasions having their tools stuck.

In 1857 the Orr salt well in Buffalo Township was drilled, but the flow of brine was small, and in 1858 it was sunk one hundred feet deeper, when a vein of water equal to twenty gallons per minute was struck.

ECCENTRICITIES OF THE OIL FIELDS.

The eccentricities of the Butler oil fields have proved that geologists know comparatively nothing of the origin of this oil or of the gas reservoirs with which it is associated. For almost forty years the geologists and the operator have been predicting the exhaustion of oil and gas in Butler County, notwithstanding the contradiction of their predictions by the discoveries of new deposits. Oil and gas are inseparable companions, and where one exists so does the other. Like coal deposits, they give out in time, and as new mines must be opened to supply the demand for coal, so new wells must be drilled to supply that for oil and gas. Wonderful exhibitions of the vagaries of the two fluids have been witnessed ever since the beginning of production in the Butler County fields. The pioneer wells in the Parker Township fields were drilled to the Third or Venango County sand. Outside of the Martinsburg region several sands have been discovered, such as the Fourth sand at Karns City, the Bradford, the Gordon, the Snee, and the Hundred-Foot and within the last ten years, the Speechley sand has been developed in Concord and Washington Townships. In more recent years wells have been discovered in the Berea sand in Muddy Creek Township. Early in May, 1886, the Fisher Oil Company drilled a well on the Reott farm near Herman Station to a depth of 2,650 feet with the object of tapping the Gordon sand that is found in Washington County. At a depth of 2,400 feet the Bradford sand was struck, or 140 feet below the Fourth sand. At 2,641 feet the shell of what would correspond with the Gordon sand was struck, but neither oil nor gas were obtained. The well on the Criswell farm was drilled to a depth of 3,500 feet, and the well on the Smith farm in Winfield Township to 4,000 feet, without other results than to further display the freakishness of the oil-bearing sands in Butler County. In the Bald Ridge field the Third and Fourth sands come together, and equally as strange phenomena are observed in other sections of the county.

COAL FIELDS OF THE COUNTY.

HISTORY, CANNEL COAL BEDS, FREAKS—EARLY OPERATIONS, OPERATIONS IN 1908.

A brief history of the coal fields and deposits of Butler County may be of interest, on account of their freakishness, and because of the extent of the operations being carried on at the present time. There are five distinct veins of coal known to the geologists in Butler County. They are the Upper Freeport, the Lower Freeport, called the Freeport group; the Upper Kittanning and the Lower Kittanning, called the Kittanning group; and the Clarion coal, the latter being found below the ferriferous limestone. The first two groups are found above the ferriferous limestone. These groups are known as the lower productive coals and are found in every township in the southern half of the county, and with a few exceptions in all of the townships in the northern half of the county, the outcrop showing along the hillsides of all of the streams.

In addition to the above groups, there are small areas covered by the Bakers-town, the Galitzin, and the Brush Creek coals, belonging to the upper series, the Eichenhauer freak series and the Sharon coal in the western part of the county, and what is known as the Slope vein in the northern tier of townships. The geological survey of 1837 located the Upper Freeport coal at Freeport and the Kittanning coal at Kittanning on the Allegheny River. The second survey in 1876 located the Lower Freeport and it was discovered that beneath the Upper Kittanning vein there was a second vein which had the appearance of cannel coal. The Kittanning group extends across the county, varying from two to five feet in thickness, and rises out of the bed of the Connoquenessing Creek seven miles above Harmony. The lower vein is forty feet below the creek at Harmony, and does not appear at the surface until Beaver County is reached. After the Kittanning group reaches Beaver County it becomes a cannel known as the Darlington coal, and it there reaches its great thickness of from ten to twelve feet.

The Freeport group outcrops along the streams in the southern half of the county, and in a few places in the northern half, and is the coal that has been most mined for domestic consumption by the farmers and by the private operators in the early history of the county.

The Clarion coal is seen on Rough Run and does not again appear in the southern half of the county until the western limits are reached, and there it is very thin. In the northern half this bed of coal is found in Marion and Washington Townships, and is of a workable thickness.

The Brookville coal appears on Rough Run in Winfield Township, but does not reach workable dimensions, and in the northern half of the county it is mined in Venango Township.

The Bakerstown coal has its origin from the town of that name in Allegheny County, and is developed along the head of Glade Run and Breakneck Creek, in southern Butler County.

The Brush Creek coal belongs to the upper coal series, and is seen along the hills of Brush Creek in Cranberry Township, and in one or two other places in the county. It is 527 feet below the Pittsburg coal and seventy-five feet above the Upper Freeport. This coal occupies the place of the Galitzin coal of Cambria and Somerset Counties, and the name is applied in several localities in Butler County.

One of the freak beds of coal is found on the Semiconon branch of the Little Connoquenessing Creek, and is from two to five feet thick. It is a rich bituminous coal much prized as a fuel, and occurs fifty feet above the Upper Freeport and twenty-five feet below the Galitzin or Brush Creek. This vein is called the Brush Creek coal in the geological reports of the state, but the author of the reports has doubts whether it is the same.

The Eichenhauer coal in Lancaster Township belongs to none of the groups mentioned, and is purely a local coal. It is a new feature to the geologists, introduced between the Lower Freeport and the Darlington or Kittanning group, and is found on the Eichenhauer farm and a few farms surrounding it. Seven feet of workable coal was found on the Eichenhauer farm, which was mined until the coal dipped below the water level of the creek, and the operations were then abandoned. The same vein was also mined at the mouth of Crab Run. In the latter township a bed of this coal has been mined for many years on the Coulter-McCandless farm.

The Brookville coal is found in Marion Township 120 feet below the cannel coal beds, and the Clarion coal is found in workable thickness in Washington Township. A thin outcrop of the Upper Freeport appears on a high knob in Venango Township, and in this locality the Brookville coal appears to take the place of the Lower Kittanning. Venango Township also presents a freak in the form of a deposit of limestone ore forty feet above the Brookville coal.

Brush Creek coal is encountered in Donegal Township near Chicora, and the Upper Freeport vein also appears in this locality.

In Mercer Township in the northwest section of the county the Harrisville vein appears, and has been mined extensively for over thirty years. What is known as the Burnett coal appears in Mercer, Marion, Venango, Cherry, Allegheny, Parker, and Washington Townships, and forty-five feet below the Burnett vein is the Slope vein which is a series of coal which has no classification and appears to be unknown to the geologists.

The Kittanning group which is visible throughout the entire northern half of the county, reaches an abnormal thickness in Washington and Cherry Townships, and in the eastern section of the county. Near Kaylor City in Armstrong County a deposit of this coal has been found which is eleven feet thick, but its area is small. Throughout Butler County the coal varies from three to six feet.

A duplicate of the Darlington coal is found at the mouth of Breakneck Creek, in Jackson Township, and has been mined extensively in recent years. The Welsh oil well record in Jefferson Township locates ten feet of Darlington coal in that district, but this record is not believed to be correct. At the point where the well was drilled the Darlington coal was found 146 feet below the level of Thorn Creek, and as the vein has never been worked in that locality, its exact thickness is not known.

CANNEL COAL.

The cannel coal beds of Butler County belong to the Kittanning group, which becomes the Darlington cannel coal in Beaver County. The deposits are irregular in the southern part of the county, being found at the Kearns farm in Butler Township, at the Weaver farm in Forward Township, in Jackson Township, and above the Eichenhauer coal in Lancaster Township. In Forward Township a small bed is found above the Freeport coal, which is out of the regular place for the cannel. In all of these localities the cannel beds are thin and the coal impure and of little merchantable value.

The cannel coal reaches its greatest thickness and commercial value in the northern section of the county where the beds vary from three to eight feet in Washington, Venango, Marion, Cherry and Center Townships.

EARLY OPERATIONS.

Coal mining was carried on at an early date in the county. The drilling of the salt well on the Kearns farm in Butler Township in 1811-12, was the means of opening a coal bank at the same place. The Harmony Society operated mines at the mouth of Yellow Creek as early as 1815, to supply fuel for the colony and to operate the salt manufacturing plant. In 1832 a mine was operated south of the creek in the present limits of Butler Borough. Coal was mined and coked at Winfield furnace in the fifties, and similar operations were carried on on Bear Creek and Slippery Rock as far back as the thirties.

The Muntz Mines of Butler are probably the oldest operations in the county. As early as the thirties coal was mined at an opening near the creek bank west of the Main Street bridge, and it is said by the older residents of the town that coal was mined here as early as 1810 and 1812. This mine was first operated by John Negley, who was a pioneer of Butler, and came into the possession of John G. Muntz in 1854. John M. Muntz, the present proprietor, took charge of the mine in 1872, and is the present operator. Other mines in the vicinity of Butler were the Lavery, Schaffner and Bredin, which supplied fuel for the town for many years.

In the fifties coal was mined on the Daniel Heck and Eli Eagal farms near Unionville in Center Township, which proved to be of value for coking purposes. Coke was manufactured at these mines and hauled to Prospect for use at the foundries which were in operation at that place. About the same time the product of the mine on Walker's Run in Buffalo Township was being hauled to Natrona to the salt works and shipped from Freeport to Pittsburg by boat. The Cable mines in Connoquenessing Township on the Little Connoquenessing Creek were operated extensively for many years and supplied fuel to Harmony and Zelienople, as well as the surrounding farmers. Many other small mining operations were carried on in the county, and at one time the mines were so numerous and the competition so sharp that the farmers could buy their winter supply of fuel at the banks for two cents per bushel.

The advent of natural gas as a fuel drove the private coal banks out of business, although there are yet many in operation throughout the county.

LARGE OPERATIONS.

The mining of coal on a large scale in the county had its inception with the coming of the railroads. As early as 1855 Hugh McKee and Thomas White of Butler explored the cannel coal beds in Washington and Venango Townships, and leased a large tract of land for the purpose of developing the territory. They had associated with them F. G. May of New York City. At that time there were no facilities for marketing the coal and railroads within the limits of the county had not been thought of.

The next move was made by Benjamin Niblock of Youngstown, Ohio; James M. Bredin, then of Butler, and Thompson Kyle, of Harrisville, who leased 50,000 acres of land lying in Mercer, Butler and Venango Counties. The lands in Butler County lay in Mercer, Marion, Cherry, Washington, Venango, Allegheny, and Parker Townships. The royalty paid to the land owners for these leases was ten cents per ton.

They then associated with them the firm of Wick, Wells & Company, of Youngstown, Ohio; Shryock, Reynolds & Gill, of Meadville, Pennsylvania; Cunard & McHenry, of London; and Jackson, of New York, and organized the Mercer Mining & Manufacturing Company. This company then opened mines at Pardoe, in Mercer County, and at Harrisville, Mercer Township, in Butler County.

In 1868-69 this company built the Shenango & Allegheny Railroad from Shenango to Pardoe, and in 1872 the line was extended to Harrisville and Branchton. In January, 1876, an extension of the line was completed to Hilliard, in Washington Township, and other extensions into the various coal fields were made in 1880, 1882 and 1883. In the latter years the connecting line was built from Branchton to Butler.

The coal enterprise was undertaken on the supposition that the so-called Harrisville vein, four feet thick, was the principal mining vein of coal in that locality. On investigation it was found that a second vein of good mining coal existed in Bull Valley in Cherry Township. This vein is from five to six feet thick and is called the Burnett vein in honor of the man who first located it. In the same valley the Slope vein was subsequently discovered, and has proved to be one of the most valuable coals found in the region now reached by the Bessemer Railroad and its various branches. The mines in this region were operated for a number of years by Mr. Burnett, who then sold out to a Philadelphia company. The Harrisville mine was operated by C. A. Jewell, who in 1882 opened the Oneida mine in Center Township. Both of these mines have been exhausted. Following the development of the Harrisville mine the Union Coal & Coke Company operated a mine at Gomersol, in Cherry Township. Other mines were the Allegheny, the Buckeye, and the Eichbar, and the Erie Coal Companies operated mines in the vicinity of Anadale and Hilliard. The Stage mines at Claytonia were opened in 1894 and later Steele & Blair opened the Standard Mine on the Bessemer Railroad.

OPERATIONS IN 1908.

In 1908 there were twenty-five coal companies operating in Butler County employing about 2,000 men. The total production of the mines for 1907 was about 865,000 tons. The principal operators in the district are The Great Lakes Coal Company, the Erie Coal & Coke Company, the Goff-Kerby Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, and the H. K. Wick Coal Company, of Youngstown, Ohio. Among the independent operators are W. K. Hamilton, Harry Hamilton, C. B. McFarland, the Turner Coal Company of Greenville, P. D. Sherwin of Butler, George Stage of Greenville. Butler is in the third bituminous district with Armstrong, Clarion, Beaver, Lawrence and Mercer Counties, and with the exception of Armstrong County has the largest production of any county in the district. The Butler district has been remarkably free from strikes and the various forms of labor troubles that the operators in other districts have encountered. The district has also been remarkably free from mine disasters and the usual run of accidents caused by mine explosions and gas. This is accounted for from the fact that all the mines in the county are above the water level, and are almost entirely free from gaseous formations. The coal mined along the Bessemer Railroad and the Western Allegheny Railroad is all of a superior quality for steam purposes and the entire output of the mines is shipped north for distribution along the Great Lakes.

In addition to the above companies, the New Castle Coal Company and the Filer mines, having openings in Mercer County close to the line, are taking coal out from under farms in Butler County, the value of which is not included in the reports of the production for this county. In the southeastern corner of the county the Clark Coal & Coke Company have an opening just across the line in Armstrong County, and their main entries run into the coal lands in Butler County. This company has several thousand acres of coal land leased in Buffalo Township. The Kerr Coal Company, a branch of the Gugenheimer interests, also have a large block of coal lands in Buffalo Township adjoining the Armstrong and Allegheny County lines, which was purchased outright from the farmers. This company has an opening at Lane Station on the Butler Branch from which the coal in Butler County will be mined. Along Buffalo Creek and Walker's Run the small mines operated by Wright, Kelley, Yeanig, and Beckman are still in operation and furnish fuel to the villages and farmers in the surrounding country.

The mines operating were as follows: The Sharon Coal & Lime Company, in Slippery Rock Township, operating the Buhl Mines Nos. 3 and 4, employed 177 men. Their output was 98,400 tons. These mines are on the Wolf Creek Branch of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

The Goff-Kirby Company of Cleveland, Ohio, were operating in Marion and Venango Townships at Anandale Station and Murrinsville under the title of Butts Cannel Coal Company. They employed 253 men, and the output of their Anandale mine No. 2 was 165,000 tons, and of their No. 3, 36,000 tons.

The Bessemer & Lake Erie Coal Company, operating the Jefferson mine, employed 120 men and had an output of 86,000 tons.

The Erie Coal & Coke Company employed eighty-nine men in their Keystone Mine No. 1 and had an output of 77,500 tons.

The Lochrie Brothers Coal Company at Argentine employed eighty men in their Pennsylvania Mine No. 1 and had an output of 59,000 tons. This company is operating in Washington and Venango Townships.

The Standard Coal Mining Company at Argentine employed eighty-nine men and had an output of 57,000 tons.

The Nellie Coal Company employed seventy-eight men at their Nellie Mine in the same district, and had an output of 49,000 tons.

The Mutual Coal Mining Company employed seventy-one men at the Royal Mine, in the Argentine district, and had an output of 43,768 tons.

The Chicora Coal & Coke Company at Chicora, on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, employed fifty men and had an output of 40,906 tons.

F. A. Mizner employed fifty-nine men at the Grant Mine in Venango Township, and had an output of 31,625 tons.

George Stage & Son employed forty-three men at the Stage Mine at Claytonia, and had an output of 18,000 tons.

The Pittsburg Coal & Fuel Company operating the Wahlville No. 2, in Jackson Township, employed thirty-five men and had an output of 15,340 tons.

Samuel Sherwin operating the Kinkade Mine near Karns City employed forty-six men and had an output of 13,216 tons.

The Maines Coal Company operating the Maines Mine in Center Township, three miles north of Butler, employed seventeen men and had an output of 8,884 tons.

The Erie Coal Mining Company employed twelve men at their Claytonia mine, on the Bessemer Railroad, and had an output of 7,420 tons.

Thomas Evans, lessee of the Butler Coal & Coke Company, employed twenty-two men at the Jamisonville mine, in the Bessemer Railroad, and had an output of 6,824 tons. This mine is now operated by Mariana & Smith.

The Grace Coal Company employed twenty-five men at the Evans City shaft on the main line of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and had an output of 5,500 tons. This mine is now operated by the Turners, of Greenville.

The Hallston Coal & Coke Company employed fifteen men at the Hallston mine on the Bessemer Railroad, and had an output of 4,784 tons.

The Branchton Coal Company employed seventeen men at the Branchton mine and had an output of 973 tons.

P. D. Sherwin employed fifty-eight men at the Sherwin mines on the Bessemer Railroad, and produced 23,000 tons. This mine is on the Dr. McCandless farm in Clay Township. The same operator employed thirty-three men at the Enterprise mine at Karns City and had an output of 10,000 tons. The Enterprise mine is on the Taylor and Riddle farms and has been in operation since 1886.

The future of the coal business in Butler County is full of promise. The operations for the past thirty years have all been confined to the northern half of the county and it is only recently that large mining operations have been carried on in the townships south of Butler. The Wahlville and Evans City mines on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad are the only ones of importance in this section, while the Kerr Company and the Clark Coal & Coke Company are operating in the southeastern corner of the county and have their openings in Armstrong County. The full extent of the coal beds in the southern townships have not been defined, except as they are located by the drill in operating for oil. These records are not reliable as to the exact thickness of the vein, but they are known to vary from three feet to at least eight or ten feet. All of the coal mined in Butler County is of an excellent quality both for fuel and steam purposes, and the close proximity of the fields to the Pittsburg district makes the future prospect very bright.

IRON ORE AND LIMESTONE.

The maker of the Universe used a lavish hand when he created the mineral resources of Butler County. The development of the petroleum and gas fields created wealth never dreamed of by Croesus, and no sooner had this wonderful source of riches begun to decline than men began to delve into the hills in search of minerals, with results that are astonishing to the expert mineralogist and almost unbelievable to the ordinary layman. The extent of the coal beds and their development in the last years has been already commented on. Iron ore and limestone are taken together for the reason that the only deposits of iron ore to be found in the county are on top of the ferriferous limestone and these deposits were worked as early as 1805. It was not until one hundred years later that the true value of the limestone was discovered and this many years after the old "tea kettle" furnaces had been dismantled and the manufacture of iron in the county abandoned.

According to the geological maps of Pennsylvania the entire area of Butler County is underlaid with a bed of ferri-ferous limestone that varies from eighteen feet at the Harrisville mines in the Northwest section of the county to twenty-eight feet at West Winfield in the Southeast section. This limestone outcrops along the hills of Slippery Rock and Muddy and Wolf Creeks in Muddy Creek, Brady, Cherry, Washington, Venango, Marion, Mercer, Slippery Rock, and Worth Townships. In the Northeast section of the county the outcrop is in Allegheny and Parker Townships, along Big Bear Creek and Little Bear Creek, while the only outcrop in the Southeast section is along Rough Run in Winfield Township. Following the direction of the Harrisville and Brady's Bend anticlinals, this bed of limestone dips to the Southwest at the rate of seventeen feet to the mile, and in the vicinity of Butler Borough is two hundred and fifty feet under the surface. In the Southern tier of townships it is from three to four hundred feet, and in the Northern part of Allegheny County it is six hundred feet beneath the Pittsburg coal.

The only other limestone in the county is known as the Crinoidal, and is found in but one locality. That is, at the top of the hill, one mile East of Sarvers Station in Buffalo Township, near Buffalo Presbyterian church. The Crinoidal is found five hundred and fifty feet above the ferri-ferous limestone, near the top of the hills and has little merchantable value.

EARLY FURNACES AND OPERATIONS.

The pioneers soon discovered the ferri-ferous limestone and the deposits of iron ore that accompany it and a number of small furnaces were early established along the valleys of the Connoquenessing, the Slippery Rock, Bear Creek and Rough Run. The iron ore at these places was found in pockets and in sufficient quantities for the small operations of that day, and the limestone proved to be of an excellent quality for fluxing purposes.

The first furnace was built in the Connoquenessing valley by Dr. Detmar Basse Muller, and was in operation as early as 1805. It was just outside the limits of Butler County, at the mouth of Pine Run. The product of this furnace was manufactured into stoves and farm implements for the use of the residents of the Connoquenessing Valley in Butler County long before Pittsburg was thought of as an iron town.

Mount Etna furnace was built in 1822 on Slippery Rock Creek by Dr. John Thompson, who came from New Lisbon, Ohio, and purchased a large tract of land in Slippery Rock Township. He erected a cold blast charcoal furnace for the manufacture of pig iron, and in 1823 he erected a forge for the manufacture of bar iron, built a saw-mill and a grist-mill, employed many men and did an extensive business. Financial difficulties overtook him in 1829 and the property was sold at sheriff's sale, David McJunkin becoming the purchaser. Thompson afterward returned and paid every dollar of his indebtedness. McJunkin operated the property for about seven years and then rented it to Ephraim Rose, John Near & Co., and Robert McGowan, successively. William S. Bingham also operated the furnace before it went out of blast in 1840. The capacity of the plant was fifteen tons a week and the iron was hauled to Pittsburg at a cost of five dollars per ton. The location of this old iron plant is at Etna mills on the Butler and Mercer Road.

HICKORY FURNACE.

The second furnace to be built on the Slippery Rock was at the site of Kiester's mill, a few miles further up the creek from Etna furnace, and was known as Hickory furnace. Joseph C. Swearingen, who owned five hundred acres of land in the vicinity of the old Slippery Rock park, built the furnace in 1836 and projected a large business, which ruined him financially. The property was sold to Charles C. Sullivan, of Butler, and William Stewart, who rented the plant to William Jack. After a few years the owners took charge and under the management of Stewart the property was operated at a profit. The Kiester grist-mill, now operated by S. M. Cheesman, was built in 1843 by Stewart and Sullivan. Robert Allen operated the old furnace for a few years before it went out of blast in 1860. Good iron was made at both the Etna and Hickory furnaces, but they were driven out of the market by the competition of concerns having better advantages for shipping.

MARION FURNACE.

Marion furnace was built in 1850 by Robert Braden and James Kerr in the present limits of Marion Township. It was a cold blast, charcoal furnace, and was the third one built in the valley of the Slippery Rock. The capacity of the furnace was about eighteen tons per week, and the product was shipped to Pittsburg. The owners operated the plant until 1862, when it was abandoned.

MAPLE AND KENSINGTON FURNACES.

The first operations on Bear Creek were in 1844, when George and James Bovard built Maple furnace. It was a stone stack, cold blast, charcoal furnace, but was afterward run with a steam engine. In 1847 the property was purchased by Henry Graff of Pittsburg, and in 1854 M. S. Adams became the owner and operated the plant until 1865, when it was abandoned on account of scarcity of ore. This furnace produced about forty tons of iron per week and gave employment to thirty to forty men.

Kensington furnace was built in 1846 by Church, Carothers and Crawford and was operated by them for five years. It was a charcoal furnace and had a capacity of six tons of iron per day. It was abandoned for the same reason as Maple furnace. The iron ore in this locality is irregular in its formation and runs to pockets. Both these furnaces are in Allegheny Township.

WINFIELD FURNACE.

Winfield furnace on Rough Run in Winfield Township, was built in 1844 by William Spear, who operated it until 1856, when the property was purchased by the Winfield Coal & Iron Company. Soon after William Stewart, who had successfully operated Hickory furnace, became owner and conducted the business until 1864, when the enterprise was abandoned. The original furnace was a thirty-foot stack set on a twenty-foot base, and was fired with charcoal, which was manufactured on the furnace property. The blast was first run by water power and later by steam. Its capacity was about forty tons of iron per day, which was hauled to Freeport and shipped by rail or boat to Pittsburg. To the casual observer of the day the closing of the furnaces on Bear Creek and Rough Run was the expiring act of the iron industry in Butler County and there was little to be hoped for in the future. Destiny had other things in store for the county and fifty years later the site of the "tea kettle" furnace was to be the scene of a great industrial activity.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF LIMESTONE.

About the time the last furnace was closed in Butler County the oil fields began to attract attention and for thirty years the iron ore and limestone beds were forgotten. In the meantime there had been wonderful development in the Pittsburg district in the manufacture of iron and steel, in railroads, in the construction of public roads, and the manufacture of Portland cements. All of these industries used immense quantities of lime and limestone and they began to look about for a source of supply. One of the first men to see the possibilities of the limestone business in Butler County was Webster Keasey, of Winfield Township, who was raised near the site of the old furnace.

THE WEST WINFIELD RAILROAD.

In 1890 Joseph Brittain, of Butler, who was then carrying on a number of enterprises in the county, went to Rough Run to buy timber to be manufactured into railroad ties and billstuff. Webster Keasey met him and pointed out the possibilities of the lime, coal, and fire clay industries at the old furnace site, if a railroad could be built into the place. Brittain was a man of action and was quick to formulate a plan. He purchased the Henry Keasey tract of land, which adjoins the furnace property, that day and the next day he closed a deal with the manager of the furnace property in Pittsburg by which the latter agreed to furnish $40,000 and Brittain $40,000 to build a railroad from the Butler branch to Winfield furnace. Armed with this agreement Brittain went direct to the head men of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company at Philadelphia and presented his proposition. The next day he came away with a contract which bound the railroad company to build the branch road within a stipulated time. The strange part of the story is that Brittain did not have a dollar in cash when he closed the contract with the railroad company, and he had no financial backing; his part of the contract was to be paid in railroad ties. Brittain died before the road was completed and his enterprises failed, with the single exception of the railroad.

In 1891 the Rough Run Manufacturing Company purchased the Henry Keasey farm of 177 acres adjoining the furnace tract and erected a salt works, which they operated until 1893, when the business became unprofitable; the plant was closed down and the land was leased to the lime company.

The limestone industry had its inception in 1893 when Webster Keasey and J. A. Ransom leased the tract of the Rough Run Manufacturing Company and opened the mine that is in operation at the present time. Later the Acme Lime Company, Limited, was organized with J. A. Ransom president, J. J. Haas secretary and treasurer, and Webster Keasey superintendent.

The lime company operated three kilns, one patent steel jacket kiln, one steam drill, and one stone crusher with a daily capacity of two hundred tons of crushed stone. The daily capacity of the kilns was six hundred bushels of burnt lime. Houston Brothers of Pittsburg were the successors of the Acme Lime Company, and they in turn disposed of the plant to the A. G. Morris Lime & Stone Company of Tyrone, Pennsylvania, which had formerly been a competitor of the West Winfield Company. The Morris company has a capital of two hundred thousand dollars invested in the plant that is now in operation, and the daily output is ten acres of raw stone and from three to five cars of burned lime. The raw stone is used for fluxing purposes in the manufacture of iron and steel and of late years a large percentage of the output of this mine is used in the construction of State highways.

The ferriferous limestone at this point is twenty-eight feet thick and the lower edge of the stratum is twenty-five feet above the water level of Rough Run. Its analysis shows ninety-six per cent. of carbonate of lime, and it is considered one of the best gray limes in the country. The strata is the same as that of Buffalo furnace and Brady's Bend, and extends from the northeast to the southwest through Winfield and Buffalo Townships. The limestone in West Winfield is being mined the same as coal, and the Morris company is one of the largest plants—the only one of its kind—in the world. At this point the limestone lies in three separate veins, and has developed an abnormal thickness of twenty-eight feet. The two lower veins are being mined, and the top vein is left in as a roof. The value of this limestone deposit may be estimated in a rough way by anyone who cares to make the calculation. The land owner is paid a royalty of three cents per ton for the raw stone. Estimating the weight of the limestone at one hundred and forty pounds per cubic foot, the value per acre varies from one thousand dollars to twenty-five hundred dollars, depending on the thickness of the stratum.

OTHER MINERAL DEPOSITS.

The wealth of this part of the county in minerals cannot be estimated by the value of the limestone. In addition to the ferri-ferous limestone, six veins of coal are found above the limestone which run from two feet six inches to four feet. These veins are the Upper Freeport, Lower Freeport, and Upper Kittanning Coals, while the Clarion coal bed lies twenty-five feet beneath the limestone. The Summit iron ore underlies the Freeport coal, and was the source of supply of the old Winfield furnace and the Buffalo furnace in Armstrong County. This iron ore was also the supply for the Brady's Bend operations in the middle of the last century, and outcrops in Clarion County. The Buhrstone iron ore is also found in this locality under the lower Kittanning coal. The Mahoning sandstone is found in the upper strata, and the Homewood sandstone is found twenty-five feet above Rough Run.

The Clarion County fire clay is also found, and varies from ten to fifteen feet in thickness. This vein of fire clay is also being operated as is also the Homewood sandstone, and is a source of large profits to the owners of the land.

In the northwest section of the count, limestone was developed in a small way at an early date and was used for fluxing purposes at the old furnaces, and by the farmers for fertilizing purposes on their land.

About 1895 the attention of the superintendent of mines of the Carnegie steel interests was called to the limestone formation along the Bessemer Railroad in Butler County as a possible source of supply for the Carnegie Steel Mills. Then an investigation of the territory and an analysis of samples of the ferri-ferous limestone showed that the limestone of Slippery Rock, Mercer and Cherry Townships was admirably suited for manufacturing purposes, and that it contained ninety-six per cent. of carbonate of lime. Following out the suggestion, the Carnegie company leased a large block of territory and opened the mines at Wick Station and Harrisville Station on the Bessemer Railroad, which now furnishes employment for a large number of men and is one of the principal sources of supply for the United States steel industries. The limestone stratum at this point is only a few feet beneath the surface, and is obtained by first stripping the soil from the top. These operations are among the most extensive of the Carnegie interests.

Ochre was found along the Connoquenessing Creek at an early day, and was used in mixing paints. A frame house erected by Walter Lowrie where the jail now stands was painted with this yellow clay ground in oil.

LEAD MINES.

Lead is said to exist along the valley of the Connoquenessing, although the geologists have never been able to locate it. The early pioneers related stories about the Indians who came to Butler as early as 1820 and offered to tell the settlers where to find lead on payment of a sum of money. These Indians, it is said, went down along the creek below Butler and returned with all the lead they could carry and took it home with them. They would not allow anybody to go with them when they were mining their lead, and the white men were never able to discover its location. As late as 1850 an Indian of the Cornplanter tribe is said to have come to Butler and stopped at the old Beatty Hotel over night. The next morning he went down along the Connoquenessing Creek alone and returned in the evening with all the lead he could carry. The next day he returned by stage to his home. Day's "Historical Collections of Pennsylvania" says that a lead mine existed at an early day near Harmony, and that the first settlers in that section of the county found a small furnace that the Indians had used in melting the lead. No white man has ever been able to discover these lead deposits which were known to the Indians, and whether or not they are phantoms is left to the reader to judge for himself.

FORESTS.

With the exception of the southeastern townships, a tract in Parker Township, and a few groves in other townships, the pine and the hemlock are absent. Vast forests of oak, elm, chestnut, walnut, ash, hickory, maple, and other hard wood trees abounded in every township in the county, and for many years was the source of a great lumber supply. In the matter of orchards, the apple tree holds first place, the peach tree second, while the pear and the plum are cultivated to a large extent. Much of the territory in the county is fitted for vine culture, but little attention is given thereto. Thirty years ago extensive vineyards were planted in Butler County which flourished for a few years. The vines were attacked by a blight which continued until this branch of industry has been abandoned.

There are one hundred species of mammals known in Butler County, and the list of birds includes three hundred and thirty species, of which one hundred and fifteen are natives. The panther was the lion of the wilderness whose scream was as familiar to the pioneer as the bark of a dog is to the people of the present day. Many stories of adventure are told concerning the "painter," several of which are related in the adventures of the pioneers. Contradictory stories are told about the last panther killed within the limits of the county. Some say it was in 1856, some place it earlier, and some later. The Bear grew to gigantic stature in this district, and the wolf attained his greatest strength, and both animals were a source of danger, loss and trouble to the early settlers. The county was a paradise for hunters, who found along the deer-licks enjoyment and profit. It was the practice of the hunters in the winter time to hunt deer and carry their carcasses to Pittsburg where they were sold for cash. Adam Brown of Forward Township, who was considered a great hunter of his day, shot forty-eight deer in one winter, and hauled them to Pittsburg on a sled. Jacob Ekas was another deer hunter equally as famous, and many others could be mentioned. The greed of the hunters led to the annihilation of the deer and the bounty laws tended toward the extermination of the wild animals. The otter and the beaver abounded on Bear Creek and on Muddy Creek, but they have long since disappeared. The last of the otter tribe vanished from Bear Creek about 1872 and a few years later they had disappeared from Muddy Creek.

The birds, however, have largely held their own, and are still with us. In November, 1881, a golden eagle measuring seven feet from tip to tip was captured in Penn Township by Elijah T. Phillips. The owl, the hawk, and other predatory birds are numerous, but the species are kept from increasing by the hunters. Game birds and song birds are protected by law.

ARCHEOLOGY.

Butler County is not without interest from an archeological point of view. On the site of old Indian towns along the old Indian trails, and even in places where no signs of Indian habitations were found by the early settlers, arrowheads, stone chisels, and other reminders of the original inhabitants of the land are frequently brought to light. As late as 1907 arrowheads were found in the northern part of Connoquenessing Township and in many other localities in the county similar discoveries have been made where Indian camps and villages are known to have existed. In 1893 a butternut tree and butternuts were found petrified within a rock in the outcrop south of the Connoquenessing Creek, opposite the borough of Butler. When that tree was covered with sand, or when the sand was converted into rock, are secrets of nature which invite the attention of the scientist. A few years later in excavating for the foundation of the Broad Street School building in Butler, the workmen discovered a petrified log at the depth of twenty-five feet and a section of a laurel bush of gigantic size, which had doubtless been the growth of some prehistoric age.

FLOODS AND STORMS, AND EPIDEMICS.

High waters in the creeks in the county have not been unusual, but the damage was generally confined to buildings on the lowlands, and the bridges across the streams, and no lives were lost. The flood which carried away a large portion of Petrolia was the most disastrous one known within that period. The drouths of 1854 and of the summer of 1894 were the most serious in the history of the county entailing heavy losses on the farmers, and rendering water exceedingly scarce by drying up many of the streams. The tornado which carried away part of Coaltown, and the rainstorm of June 21, 1872, which damaged a few houses in Butler are the only disastrous visitations of the elements worthy of mention. In 1832 the locusts ravaged the county and again in 1849 they threatened the crops, but disappeared during the last week in June of that year. The frost of June 5, 1859, was one of the disasters of the middle of the century which effected the entire county. Fruit was killed and the prospects of a harvest were dashed to the ground.

In 1838 scarlet fever and catarrhal fever were epidemic in Butler and vicinity, and the typhoid fever epidemic of 1903-4 is the subject of a separate article in this work.

CHAPTER II

SETTLEMENT OF WESTERN PENNSYLVANIA

Indian Occupation—Early Maps—The Original People—The First White Men—Washington's Journey—England Takes Action—Cause of Indian Dissatisfaction—Christopher Gist—Frederick Post—Post Returns to the Delawares—Kaskaskunk—Pakanke—Glikkikin—Rev. John Rothe—Settlements up to 1804—Pioneer Settlers—Pioneer Anecdotes and Adventures—Destruction of Kittanning—The Story of Massy Harbison—Gen. Richard Butler.

There appears to be much mystery as to who the original inhabitants of Western Pennsylvania were. The only evidences of the Indian occupation found here by the pioneers from 1790 to 1800 were the old Indian trails and the traces of Indian villages to be found in various part of the county. The Senecas were the occupants of this part of the State south of Lake Erie, but at the time the tide of immigration reached the east bank of the Allegheny the country was claimed by several tribes, including remnants of the Delaware, the Shawanese, Munceys, and Senecas. These tribes, under the leadership of the Tory Scotch-Irishmen, Simon Girty, Alexander McKee, and Captain Elliott, were allies of the British during the Revolution.

EARLY MAPS OF THE COUNTY.

The maps of the Historical Society of Western Pennsylvania published in 1875 show the Indian towns of what is now Butler County to have been Cusheusking, on Wolf Creek in the present limits of Slippery Rock Township; Kaskaskunk, west of Holyoke Church in Center Township near the Franklin Township line; Sakonk on the west line of Alexander's District, where it intersects Connoquenessing Creek near Harmony; and another Indian town named Sakonk, which stood near the mouth of the Beaver River. Logstown was located on the northeast bank of the Ohio, a few miles southwest of the southwest corner of Butler County; and Shannopin Town stood across the Allegheny River opposite the Indian town of Allegheny. The map does not mention Murdering Town which stood north of Amberson's Bridge on Connoquenessing Creek; the Indian village that at one time existed near the mouth of Breakneck Creek; the Indian village in Buffalo Township on the Jacob Simmers farm; the Indian town that once existed in the northeastern section of the county near the present town of Bruin; the Indian village in Franklin Township about one mile south of Prospect on the old White farm; nor the Indian camps that were known to exist at Buhl's Mill in Forward Township, near Mechanicsburg in Worth Township, and on the present site of Harrisville in Mercer Township. Nor is any mention made of the old Indian camping place on the Kearns farm in Butler Township at what is now known as the Transfer, nor the Indian camp within the present limits of Butler borough on the site of the courthouse. A small band of Indians lived in the village near Bruin as late as 1796 when the first settlers came to that district, and a small band of Moravian Indians lived in a village near West Liberty as late as 1812.

No mention is made of the Indian trails or paths leading across Butler County, of which there were a large number. As early as 1750 there was known to be an Indian trail or great path leading from Philadelphia across the mountains to Kittanning on the Allegheny River; and thence west to the Ohio line, probably passing the town of Kaskaskunk north of Butler. A path led north from Kittanning along the river bank to Franklin and traces of an old north and south path were found in Buffalo Township by the early settlers. The old Venango trail led from the forks of the Ohio River north through Cranberry and Jackson Townships, passing Murdering Town and in the vicinity of Prospect and Harrisville. Traces of this path are yet to be seen on the west line of the Greer McCandless farm in Connoquenessing Township. The old Logstown path, followed by George Washington and his party in 1753, came up Beaver River and Connoquenessing Creek and intersected the Venango path at some point near Murdering Town. Another old path existed in early days leading from Murdering Town along the banks of the Connoquenessing Creek to Butler, and thence east toward Kittanning. The early settlers of Butler Township and the southern part of the county say that an Indian trail once existed leading from the present site of Butler directly south to the present site of Pittsburg. Many of these old Indian trails were marked on the Colonial and State documents as being the property of the Cornplanter Indians, and they were used by these tribes when the pioneers first came to occupy the land in the county. The narrative of Massy Harbison indicates that an Indian settlement of some proportion existed at an early day on the Connoquenessing Creek north of Butler, but there are no records to show who inhabited the place.

THE ORIGINAL PEOPLE.

While the Senecas, the Delawares and the Shawanese occupied the territory west of the Allegheny River and north of the Ohio at the time the first white men came into the country, they were by no means the first inhabitants of the land. A tradition about the origin of the Delaware Indians is of interest at this point on account of the fact that this nation of Indians occupied the territory, of which Butler County is a part, prior to emigrating to the eastern part of the State. When the Englishmen first came to the shores of America they found that the Lenni Lenape occupied the shores of the Delaware River in Pennsylvania, hence the name Delaware Indians. In the Indian language Lenni Lenape means the "original people." The tradition is that many centuries ago the Lenni Lenape came from west of the Mississippi River. When they reached the shores of the Mississippi they fell in with the Mengwe, or Iroquois, who were also of western origin, and had come from the far west near the source of the Mississippi River. They found that the country east of the Mississippi River was occupied by a people called the Allegewi, who lived in fortified towns and occupied all the territory as far east as the Allegheny River. The Allegheny River and the Allegheny Mountains derived their names from this tribe of people, who were said to be tall and stout and many of them of gigantic stature. Vestiges of these people are yet to be seen in the historic mounds of southern Ohio and in Allegheny County in western Pennsylvania.

The Lenape requested permission of the Allegheni to occupy the country, but the request was refused. After a long council, however, the chiefs of the Allegheni granted permission for the strangers to cross the river, pass through the country, and occupy the lands to the eastward. When the Allegheni saw the numbers of the strangers passing the river they became alarmed and assailed and destroyed many of those who had reached the eastern shore. A long war ensued in which the Allegheni were driven out of the country never to return. The Lenape called the Mississippi River the Namaesi Sipu, or the river of fish. After the Allegheni had been conquered, the Lenape and the Iroquois divided the territory, the former occupying the lands south and along the Ohio River, and the latter the country in the neighborhood of the Great Lakes.

The conquerors lived in harmony for many generations. Finally a band of hunters of the Lenape tribe crossed the Allegheny Mountains and discovered the great rivers and bays of the Susquehanna and Delaware, going as far east as the Hudson. After a long absence they returned to their people and told of the discovery of a new land which abounded in game, fish, fowls and fruit, and in which no inhabitants lived. The Lenape immediately emigrated to the new country, establishing their principal towns on the Delaware River, and occupying the country as far as the Hudson River and south to the Potomac. All of their nation, however, did not cross the Mississippi River, but some remained behind, and because of the wars with the Allegheni they became frightened and went to the far west. They thus became divided into three parts, those that inhabited the Atlantic coast, those that inhabited the land between the Allegheny and the Mississippi, and those west of the Mississippi. The Lenape that occupied the Atlantic coast were divided into three tribes, called the Turtle, the Turkey, and the Wolf. The Minsi, or Wolf tribe, formed a barrier in central Pennsylvania between their nation and the Iroquois on the north and became known as the "Monseys." Forty tribes of Indians are said to be traceable to the Lenape, among which is the Shawanese. The latter tribe are said to be of southern origin and came from the basin of the Cumberland River to the Susquehanna Valley in Pennsylvania in 1673. In 1698 seventy families of this tribe settled on Conestoga and Pequea Creek under their principal chief, Opessa. They followed the west branch of the Susquehanna River and in 1728 were in the Ohio region. In 1832 the whole tribe occupied the tributaries of the Ohio in what is now western Pennsylvania and eastern Ohio, and there is no doubt but that many of the Indian villages and camps in Butler County were occupied by these people either as hunting lodges or principal places of residence. The Delaware Indians who inhabited western Pennsylvania, or at least that part of the State west of the Allegheny River, were no doubt descendants of that part of the Lenape family that remained east of the Mississippi River when the principal part of the tribe emigrated to the Atlantic coast.

Notwithstanding the facts that the Indians of the Allegheny River were well known to the French soldiers in 1753-59, the names of but few have been preserved in the pages of American history. Custaloga and Kiassuta, or Guyasutha, the hunter, were the great chiefs here in the middle of the eighteenth century. Washington met the first at Venango on French Creek in 1753, and the latter was one of his guides on that historical expedition. Both of these Indians after proving recreant to the French became earnest supporters of the British, and during the Revolution took part in many a bloody foray into the settlements east of the Allegheny River and Mountains. Early historians do not mention the fact that about the time Washington made his visit to Fort Venango, one of the principal Indian towns was Kaskunk in the present limits of Butler County, which was then inhabited by the Delaware Indians under the noted chief Pakanke, and the celebrated warrior and Indian orator, Glikkikin.

THE FIRST WHITE MEN.

The pioneer white men of western Pennsylvania, as they were also of the Mississippi and Ohio Valleys, were the French. Their claims to the right of possession were based on the discoveries of LaSalle, who, about 1669-1670, started south from the Great Lakes, struck the head waters of the Allegheny River, and followed that stream to the Ohio and thence to the falls at Louisville, returning to Canada the same year.

In 1749 Gallissionere, the governor of Canada, organized an expedition which he placed under the command of Capt. Pierre Joseph Céloron, the object of which was to connect the French possession in Canada with Louisiana by a chain of forts reaching from the lakes to the Ohio River and thence south. Advancing by way of Lakes Erie and Chautauqua, and Conewango Creek to the Allegheny River, Céloron proceeded down that stream to the Ohio. In descending the Allegheny, he crossed the northeast and the southeast corners of Butler County, and this therefore takes rank as the first white exploration of western Pennsylvania. Céloron took formal possession of the country in the name of Louis XV., King of France, and buried leaden plates at certain points as evidence of possession. One of these plates was buried at the junction of the Allegheny and Monongahela Rivers. The mathematician, geographer, and chaplain of this expedition was a Jesuit priest named Rev. Joseph Peter de Bonnacamp.

In 1753, four years after the first French expedition, the French erected a fort at Erie called Presque Isle, one at Waterford called Fort LeBoeuf, and took possession of John Frazier's cabin at the mouth of French Creek on the site of Franklin. Upon the crest of this cabin they placed the flag of France, and left the place in charge of a half-breed French officer named Capt. Chabert de Joncaire. Fort Machault, called Venango by the English, was erected in the spring of 1754.

English jealousy being aroused by these proceedings, Governor Dinwiddie, of Virginia, sent Maj. George Washington, afterward immortalized in American history, to learn from the French commandant his intentions, and to protest against the French occupying the Allegheny Valley, to which the English laid claim. Early in 1754 the governor of Virginia sent a small force to the confluence of the Allegheny and Ohio Rivers and commenced the erection of a fort for the purpose of heading off the French, but the latter descended the Allegheny River, drove the English away, and completed the fort, which they named Duquesne. This was the beginning of the long and bloody contest known as the French and Indian War, which closed in 1759, with the expulsion of the French from western Pennsylvania. The Pontiac conspiracy in 1763 resulted in widespread havoc and wiped out the three forts north of Fort Pitt. The last mentioned was garrisoned by the English until the Revolution, when the Americans became master of the country.

WASHINGTON'S JOURNEY.

In 1753 Governor Dinwiddie of Virginia, as above noted, sent George Washington to the French post at Venango and Fort LeBoeuf. Washington carried letters of instruction dated at the city of Williamsburg the 30th day of October and he set out on his journey the same day. He employed a French interpreter and upon the 14th of November arrived at Will's Creek. Here he engaged Christopher Gist, one of the most noted pioneers and woodsmen upon the stage during the troublous times from 1750 to 1783, and also four others as servants. The party then proceeded to the mouth of Turtle Creek, which point they reached on the 22d of November, and from there they went to the forks of the Ohio, now the site of Pittsburg, and Washington spent some time in viewing the river and the land between the Allegheny and the Monongahela, which he thought extremely well situated for a fort. The party then proceeded down the Ohio River to Logstown, where Washington met the Half-King Tannac Harrison, who gave him much information concerning the French and the route he must pursue to meet their commandant. On the 30th of November, Washington and his party, accompanied by the Half-King, left Logstown and proceeded to Venango where they arrived on the 4th of December. Washington described Venango as an old town situated on the mouth of French Creek on the Ohio River. It appears from this entry in Washington's journal that the Allegheny was called the Ohio at this period, which accounts in a measure for some of the confusing statements about the location of Indian towns in the early histories. At Venango the English found the French colors hoisted at the house of John Frazier, an English subject, and Washington immediately repaired there to learn where the French commandant resided. There were three French officers at Frazier's house, one of whom was said to have command of the Ohio, but they told the commissioner of the English that there was a general officer at Fort LeBoeuf, now Waterford, Erie County, and advised Washington to apply there for an answer to his inquiry. The officers at Venango told Washington that it was the intention of the French to take possession of the Ohio, and added with an oath that they would do it, although they knew that the English could raise two men to their one. In his journal Washington says that "the French pretended to have an undoubted right to the river from the discovery made by one LaSalle sixty years previous to that time, and that the rise of this expedition is to prevent English settlement on the river or the waters of it." Washington journeyed on to Fort LeBoeuf where he arrived on the 11th of December and remained until the 16th, holding an unsatisfactory conference with the commander Legardur LaPierre.

On the journey to Venango, Washington and his party traveled from Logstown to Murdering Town on the Connoquenessing Creek in the present limits of Butler County, and thence followed the old Venango trail, which traverses the western section of the county, probably passing the vicinity of Prospect and Harrisville. On the return trip the party reached Venango on the 22d of December, where they were obliged to give up their horses on account of the weakened condition of the animals after making the long and arduous journey. Washington, being anxious to make a report of his expedition as quickly as possible, left the rest of the party at Venango and with Christopher Gist as his sole companion, started on foot for the forks of the Ohio. On the second day they reached Murdering Town, and it was on the evening of this day that Washington had an adventure with an Indian, which is briefly touched upon in his journal. Washington's journal says at this point that it was the intention to leave the trail at Murdering Town and steer across the country to Shannopin Town, an Indian village situated on the east bank of the Allegheny near the forks of the Ohio. It is probable that they intended using the old trail that existed at an early day, and which ran from the forks of the Ohio north through what is now Cranberry and Jackson Townships, intersecting the Logstown trail at or near Murdering Town—called the Venango trail.

Just after they had passed Murdering Town, Washington and Gist fell in with a party of French Indians, and the incident which is casually alluded to in Washington's journal, is related at some length in the journal kept by Gist. According to Gist, they arrived at Murdering Town about two o'clock in the afternoon. Gist says that at Murdering Town he met an Indian who called him by his Indian name and pretended to be glad to see him. The Indian accompanied them on their journey and when about two miles from Murdering Town he remarked that he could hear a gun from his cabin, and steered the party in a more northerly direction. The Indian also remarked that he could hear two war whoops and acted altogether in such a suspicious manner that both Washington and Gist became uneasy. Washington remarked that they would stay for the night at the next water. They came to the water, passed it, and came to a clear meadow where the Indian made a stop, turned about, and discharged his gun directly at Washington. His aim was unsteady and both Washington and Gist escaped injury, although they were close together. Gist wanted to kill the Indian, but yielding to the persuasion of Washington, they captured him, made him make a fire for them and pretended that they were going to camp at the spot for the night. They relieved the Indian of his gun and told him to go to his home, which was but a little way off, and said that they would follow him to his cabin in the morning. Gist followed the Indian until he was out of the way and then he and Washington set their compass and traveled all night, arriving at the head of Pine Creek in Allegheny County about daylight in the morning. The clear meadow mentioned in the narrative is supposed to have been in the vicinity of Buhl's Mill and the route followed by Gist and Washington must have passed very near the location of Evans City.

It thus seems a fair inference that Washington's life was imperiled on the 27th of December, 1753, and that it was near or upon the waters of the Breakneck that the incident occurred. He arrived at Williamsburg on the 16th of January, 1754, and made his report to Governor Dinwiddie. This concluded the first important public service of George Washington.

ENGLAND TAKES ACTION.

The English government, having learned of the designs and operation of the French on the Allegheny and the Ohio Rivers, resolved to oppose force with force, and in the spring of 1754 began the erection of a stockade and fort at the forks of the Ohio, now the city of Pittsburg. Ensign Ward was in charge of this work. Before he had completed his stockade the French came down the Allegheny River and drove him away. The French and Indian War followed, in which the Indians were at first allied with the French, and later with the English, and concluded with Pontiac's conspiracy in 1763.

CAUSE OF INDIAN DISSATISFACTION.

In order to combine the efforts of the colonies in this war, a conference was held at Albany, New York, in July, 1754, which was attended by the chiefs of the Six Nations, two commissioners on the part of the Council of New York, and two on the part of the Province of Pennsylvania, the latter being Robert Morris and Benjamin Franklin. The result of the conference was unsatisfactory to the Council, but Franklin and Morris secured from the Six Nations a great part of the land in the Province of Pennsylvania to which the Indian title had not become extinct. By this sale the Delawares, the Shawanese, and the Munseys found all of their land on the Juniata, the Susquehanna and the Allegheny Rivers sold from under their feet, which the Six Nations had guaranteed to them on their removal from the eastern waters.

Previous to 1754 the Six Nations and the Delawares on the Atlantic coast had been at war with each other and the latter had been conquered. A treaty of peace was made in which the Six Nations guaranteed the Delawares, the Shawanese and the Munseys certain lands on the river above mentioned in consideration of their removal from their former homes in the east. This act of the Six Nations in selling the land in central and western Pennsylvania was highly dissatisfactory to these tribes, and was a partial cause of their alienation from the English.

DESTRUCTION OF KITTANNING.

The destruction of the Indian town on the east bank of the Allegheny River at Kittanning in 1756 by Colonel Armstrong was a part of the operations of the army of the Province during the war with the French and Indians. King Shingas, the Delaware chief who met Frederick Post at Cusheushking in 1758, was in this battle, as was also Captain Jacobs, the latter being killed. An excellent description of the destruction of Kittanning is given in the narrative of the Kirkpatrick family in this work.

The Indian town of Kittanning was used as a sort of storehouse by the French, and was a central point from which the Delawares, the Shawanese and the Munseys made forays into the central and eastern part of the State, causing widespread devastation among the frontier settlement. So desperate had the situation become that the authorities of the Province about this time offered a bounty of 150 Spanish dollars for the scalp of every male Indian that was killed by the frontiersmen, and half that amount for a female or a child. To the credit of the frontiersmen and settlers, be it said, there is no record of an Indian being wantonly killed for the sake of securing the bounty. The destruction of Kittanning was a severe blow to the Indian tribes in western Pennsylvania, and they retired subsequently to the territory west of the Allegheny River of which Butler County is a part.

CHRISTOPHER GIST.

Christopher Gist, who accompanied Washington on his expedition to Venango, was a native of England and first became known in North Carolina as a good surveyor, a bold and skillful woodsman, and an intrepid explorer. As agent for the Ohio company he made a journey to the wilderness west of the Allegheny in 1750, went as far as the Scioto and Miami Rivers in Ohio, and was the first explorer of Kentucky. He was again with Washington in the Fort Necessity campaign in 1754, and was chief guide of Braddock's army. In 1756 he went south and enlisted the Cherokees in the English interests. He became Indian agent in the south for the British government, and died somewhere in one of the southern States. He had three sons who were men of note, one of them being a colonel in the Revolutionary army.

FREDERICK POST.

The next appearance of white men within the limits of Butler County was in 1758, when Frederick Post, the Moravian missionary and political messenger, was sent among the Indians west of the Allegheny River, north of the Ohio, to detach them from their friendly relations with the French. His topographical references connect him with the Indian towns of Butler County, but he does not always distinguish between the headquarters town of the savages and their hunting town or lodge of the same name. Post was acting in the capacity of a spy, and was at Venango, August 8, 1758. His companion on this trip was Pesquetum, and from a minute made in his journal on August 8, they intended to visit Cusheushking in the Slippery Rock district. On August 10 they learned from an English trader, whom they met, that they were then within twenty miles of Fort Duquesne. On the 12th they came to an old town on the Connoquenessing Creek and there heard that Cushcushking (written Koshkoshkung, Cushcushkee, and otherwise) was fifteen miles distant. Post sent a messenger to Cushcushking with four strings of wampum to announce his arrival. It appears that he was well received by the Indians at Cushcushking, and that here he met several Indians of the Shawanese tribe from the Wyoming Valley who knew him. The principal chief at Cushcushking was King Beaver who lodged Post and his friends in a large house and entertained them royally. In the evening Beaver called on the preacher to say that a council ordered the men to be summoned but that they could not assemble for five days. Later ten chiefs came into the house and sat by Post's fire until midnight. The 13th of the month appears to have been Sunday, and Post did not transact any business on that day. The following day he resumed his mission among the savages and witnessed fifteen French mechanics building houses for the very people who were promising to aid the enemies of their benefactors.

During the next few days some time was spent in speech-making and festivities, and on the 17th of August a space in the center of the town was cleared and prepared for holding the council. About noon two messengers from the Duquesne savages arrived, accompanied by a French captain and fifteen soldiers. The messengers wish Post to go at once to Duquesne where representatives of eight nations wished to speak to him. The Indian representatives with the soldiers were Kuckquetackton and Killbuck, and their treatment of Post was so formal and cold that King Beaver took the preacher to his own wigwam. The five days having expired the council was opened on August 18th, the visitors being addressed by King Beaver, King Shingas and Delaware George. On the following day, the 19th, the council was concluded and on the 20th Post, accompanied by twenty-five mounted men and fifteen men on foot, set out from Cushcushking for Sakonk. Here the messenger was received with hostile demonstrations, which were only allayed by the interposition of the Indians accompanying him. On the next evening fifteen savages from Cushcushking arrived at Sakonk, bringing the number of male Indians up to 120, and on the 22nd twenty savages of the Shawanese and Mingo tribes appeared, who informed Post that he was wanted at Duquesne. The next day Post left Sakonk and proceeded to Duquesne by way of Logstown, arriving at the French fort on the 24th. While the French officers watched Post closely at the meetings held with the Indians at the fort, and suspected the object of his visit, they did not once violate French courtesy by ordering him off. Post placed so much reliance in French honor that on the 27th of August he was back in Sakonk on his way to Cushcushking. King Shingas and nineteen other savages accompanied him to the Indian town. On the 29th a party of nine Tawa Indians arrived at Cushcushking on their way to the French fort, and on September 1st, the savages began to consider the proposals for alliance with the English submitted by Post. When they suggested that the main object of the English was to get possession of their lands, Post called on God to witness that such an idea was never entertained by his employers. He also made other statements that the Indians did not believe but which they did not dispute, being willing to deceive the English as they were then deceiving the French. On the 3rd of September a treaty of friendship with the English was signed by the following named counselors and chiefs: King Beaver, Captain Peter, Awakanomin, Delaware George, Macomal, Cushawmekwy, Pisquetumen, Killbuck, Keyheynapalin, Tasucamin, Popauce, John Hickomen, Washacautaut, and Cochquaquehltton.

On September 8th Post left Cusheushing, accompanied by Tom Hickman and Pisquetumen. He reported at Fort Augusta September 22, 1758, with a long story of Indian treachery and narrow escapes and charging his Indian companion Pisquetumen with being a perfidious scoundrel, which charge would seem, from subsequent events, to have been not altogether without some foundation.

POST RETURNS TO THE DELAWARES.

In the latter part of October, 1758, a council of the Five Nations with the Governor of the Province and other representatives of the English was held at Easton, Pennsylvania, which was attended by Post. After the council was over, Post returned to the Delaware towns west of the Allegheny River; under escort. The escort left him at the Allegheny River and on their way back to Easton were ambushed and killed by the very Indians who had pretended friendship to the English. Pisquetumen was concerned in this treachery.

KASKASKUNK—PAKANKE, GLIKKIKIN.

The first white men to set foot within the limits of Butler County were, so far as is known, Christopher Gist and Major George Washington, when they made the expedition to Fort Venango in 1753, and they were followed by Frederick Post, the Moravian missionary and political messenger of the English in 1758. It would appear from the evidence available on the subject that the next expedition of white men did not occur until after the Revolution, and about 1790. Loskiel's History and Map of the Missions of the "Church of Jesus Christ of North America" which was published in 1794, gives some light on this subject.

The first Moravian missionaries were sent out in 1732 and established missions in the eastern part of Pennsylvania in the vicinity of Bethlehem and on the Susquehanna River. David Zeisberger, who was one of the early missionaries of that society, was among the Indians at Onondaga in 1750, and in 1767, Zeisberger and two converted Indians named Anthony and John Papuhank came to the Seneca tribe at a town on the Allegheny River north of Fort Venango, called Goshgoshuenk. The town was described as containing three villages under the command of a blind chief named Allemewi. The missionaries succeeded in converting the chief and a woman of the tribe said to be 100 years old. In the following year, 1768, Zeisberger and a fellow missionary named Gottlieb Senseman, returned to Goshgoshuenk with three Indians named Anthony, Abraham and Peter, and in the following two years established a mission on the west side of the Allegheny River at an Indian town named Lawunakhannock. In 1770, trouble arose at this Indian town between the Seneca tribe of Indians and the Cherokees. A treaty that had been made between the tribes had been violated by the murder of two or three Cherokees by the Senecas. The Cherokees caught two of the Seneca warriors, cut their fingers off, and sent them home with this message: "Now because you will not hold the chains of friendship with your hands, we will cut them off and send you herewith a specimen." During his visit to Lawunakhannock in 1768, Zeisberger had met Pakanke, the chief of the Delawares, at Kaskaskunk, and Glikkikin, the noted warrior, who had become converted, and when the trouble arose in 1770, Pakanke requested the missionaries and their friends to come and live with him. Accordingly on the 17th of April, 1770, the two missionaries set out with sixteen canoes loaded with their Indian congregation and converts, and all of their baggage, descended the Al-leghey River to the Ohio, thence to the mouth of Beaver Creek or River, and from there ascended that stream to the falls of the Beaver, where they arrived on the 3rd day of May. They then took the overland route to the village of Kaskaskunk in Butler County, and were met on the road by Glikkikin, who had provided horses for them. After two days' journey they arrived at the Indian town and were made welcome by Chief Pakanke. Shortly after their arrival the missionaries and their followers established the mission of Friedenstadt, or the "Town of Peace." Here they built bark huts, erected a large hut for meetings, and cultivated crops. The mission of Friedenstadt, according to Loskiel's map, was located on Beaver Creek in what is now Lawrence County, near the present site of New Castle. This map does not locate the town of Kaskaskunk nor any of the Indian villages and towns in western Pennsylvania, except where missions were established. The blind Chief Solomon was baptized at Kaskaskunk by one of the missionaries, probably Zeisberger, as he was the leader. Glikkikin, who had previously been a great warrior, became tired of this pursuit, and after his conversion declared his intention of taking up his residence with the missionaries at Friedenstadt. This decision on the part of Glikkikin caused a quarrel between him and Pakanke. The old chief became reconciled, however, and about a year later his son was baptized by one of the missionaries. Zeisberger and Senseman were afterwards adopted by the Delaware tribe and wielded a great influence over the Indians of western Pennsylvania and eastern Ohio.

REV. JOHN ROTHE.

Rev. John Rothe appears to have succeeded Zeisberger and Senseman at Friedenstadt and in 1773, when the congregation decided to move to Guadenhuetten on the Muskingum River in Ohio, he led the party that traveled overland, while the old people and the invalids traveled by way of boat down the Beaver River to the Ohio, and thence to the mouth of the Muskingum.

It is proper to mention something of the work accomplished by Rev. Rothe at this point, as part of his labors among the Indians was performed in this county and his remains lie at rest in the little cemetery at Prospect. He first came to Nain in the vicinity of Bethlehem in 1753, and was one of the missionaries sent to Friedenshuetten on the Susquehanna River in 1765. He established a congregation among the Indians a short distance from Friedenshuetten at an Indian town named Tsebehschequannunk, and in 1772 when the congregations at these two points decided to move to Schoenbrun in Ohio. Rev. Rothe and another Moravian missionary conducted this expedition. Part of the expedition went by boat down the main stream of the Susquehanna, and then up the west branch to its head waters. Here they were met by the overland party led by Rev. Rothe and the united company, composed of 240 persons, seventy head of oxen and as many horses, proceeded through the forests to the Allegheny River at Kittanning. A description of this passage of the wilderness is a thrilling narrative. Mrs. Rothe and her young child accompanied the expedition. The path led through the forests and over blind roads. On one occasion Mrs. Rothe's horse fell and pitched her headlong, but she escaped without serious injury. On another occasion she fell into a morass and was rescued with difficulty. At Kittanning boats were built and the expedition was divided, part going by the way of the Allegheny and Ohio Rivers, and part under the leadership of Rev. Rothe, traveling across the country to Friedenstadt, which point they reached, after many hardships, on the 5th of August. Their route lay through Butler County and no doubt followed the old

HARDWARE STORE OF F. A. FRISHKORN, ZELIENOPLE

Indian trail from Kittanning to the Ohio line, which lay some distance north of the borough of Butler, and probably passed Kaskaskunk. The passage of the wilderness was attended with many hardships and some casualties. Several of the members of the party died from exhaustion, among the number being an Indian boy who was a cripple. The boy had recently been converted and expressed to his pastor, Rev. Rothe, his great joy in his new-found religion, and his willingness to die.

While at the mission station on the Susquehanna River, Rev. Rothe baptized the noted Indian chief, James David, on the 18th of May, 1755. Chief David was one of the leaders of the Indian settlement at Friedenshuetten, and a member of the "Cajuga" tribe. After conducting the congregation from Friedenstadt to the Muskingum River in 1773, Rev. Rothe returned to eastern Pennsylvania and became the pastor of a Lutheran congregation at York, Pennsylvania, where he lived until his death. He took a prominent part in colonial affairs during the Revolution and was one of the first chaplains to the United States Congress. He also assisted Zeisberger in translating the New Testament and the hymns into the Delaware Indian language. In the latter part of the nineteenth century his remains were brought to Butler County by his grandson, Rev. David Luther Rothe, and interred in the Lutheran cemetery in Prospect by the side of his son, Col. David Rothe.

Col. David Rothe commanded an eastern regiment in the War of 1812, and was a member of the State Legislature from Lehigh County before removing to Butler County. He settled at Prospect and became the progenitor of the Rothe family of Butler County.

THE CONVERSION OF GLIKKIKIN.

Previous histories accredit Frederick Post, the Moravian missionary, with being at some of the Indian towns in the present limits of Butler County in 1758 or shortly thereafter. The Indian towns which he visited were probably Kuskushkee on Wolf Creek in Slippery Rock Township, and the Indian town on the Connoquenessing Creek above Amberson's, known as "Murdering Town." Day's "Historical Collections of Pennsylvania" mentions the Indian town, Kaskaskunk, as being located eight or ten miles northwest of Butler, but which was really located in Center Township a short distance west of Holyoke Church, and says that this Indian village was the home of Pakanke, a noted chief of the Delaware tribe of Indians who inhabited this district about the time Post made his visit to the western part of the state. Glikkikin, who was a great warrior and an orator, resided in the same village, and when he heard that the Moravian missionaries were at Venango and coming into the country to teach the Indians, he went to refute them. Glikkikin was a Canadian Indian and had been initiated into the Catholic Church by the priests of Canada, and was acting as a sort of educator among the Indians with whom he lived. A converted Indian named Anthony arranged a meeting between Glikkikin and the Moravian missionary (who proved to be David Zeisberger), at Murdering Town. Anthony invited the missionary and the Indian orator to dine with him with the result that Glikkikin was converted to the Moravian faith. Loskiel's "History of Missions in North America," published in 1794, relates the incident about Zeisberger converting Glikkikin and also states that about a year afterwards a son of the great Pakanke was baptized.

SETTLEMENTS UP TO 1804—THE PIONEERS.

From 1773 to 1790 the only white men to come within the limits of Butler County were the frontier scouts, such as Captain Brady, Captain Crawford, John Harbison, James Amberson and such hunters as cared to risk their scalps for the sake of the pelts of the beaver and otter they could catch during the trapping season. Cush-cushking was occupied by the Seneca Indians and Kaskaskunk by the Delawares until after the Revolution and roving bands of Shawanese occupied camps and villages within the limits of the county. They were all allies of the British and enemies to be feared by the most adventurous frontiersmen.

After the close of the Revolutionary War the revival of the migratory and land-hunting spirit of the older counties as well as the renewal of immigration from foreign lands, caused an influx of settlers to that section of the state north of Allegheny County and west of the Allegheny River. Although the land was not open for settlement until 1795, there were adventurous spirits among the pioneers who made their appearance within the boundaries of Butler County as early as 1790. This advance guard was composed of hunters and trappers whose purpose was to spy out the land, and at the same time make a profit out of the furs to be obtained from the wild animals that then abounded in this region. These men usually came here in the beginning of the hunting season, and returned at its close to their homes in the eastern counties, to market the product of their trap and gun.

The Delaware and Shawanese tribes of Indians who had inhabited the greater part of Butler County, were hostile and opposed to the westward march of civilization; and made the life of the hunter a hazardous one, but a tribe of the Senecas who had a village in the county near Slippery Rock Creek were friendly to the whites, and many of the hunters and trappers were kindly received by them. The treaty of Greenville, made in 1795 removed all the Indian tribes from the territory except a small band which lived in the village, near West Liberty, that were friendly to the whites, and remained in that vicinity as late as 1812.

There are many conflicting stories told about who were the first white men to settle in the county, and in the absence of absolute records, the statements given by their descendants must be taken as within reasonable bounds of accuracy. The first men who came into the county for the purpose of becoming permanent settlers were David Studebaker and Abraham Snyder, of Westmoreland County, who crossed the Allegheny River at Logan's Ferry, in the fall of 1790, camped for the night on the site of Butler borough and then proceeded to the village of the Seneca Indians on Slippery Rock Creek, where they remained for the winter. The original party that left Westmoreland County was composed of twelve persons who started out for the purpose of exploring the extreme western part of the county, for Westmoreland County then extended as far west as the Ohio line and as far north as Erie. When they arrived at Logan's Ferry they were told stories about the Indian depredations against the whiteskins in the territory west of the Allegheny River and all the party except Studebaker and Snyder returned home.

The two hunters remained with the Indians about three months, spending the time in hunting and fishing and exploring the county. They then returned to their homes near Greensburg and in 1792 David Studebaker again came to Butler County, bringing with him his youngest sister as housekeeper. They took possession of the little cabin in Worth Township built by the hunters the previous year and became permanent settlers. After a time the young girl, unable longer to endure the loneliness of the forest, begged her brother to take her home. Her brother complied with this request, and brought back an older sister to take her place. David Studebaker's father was Joseph Studebaker of Westmoreland County, who in early boyhood was taken captive along with his younger sister by the Indians, and held by them for nine years. The sister grew up to be a young woman among the Indians, became quite a favorite with them, and was treated with the utmost courtesy and civility. Shortly before her brother was released by the Indians she was thrown from her pony while riding through the woods and instantly killed. Joseph Studebaker was liberated at a place called Muskingum in southeastern Ohio in 1764, returned to the settlements in Pennsylvania and took a part in the War of the Revolution. He came to Butler County, made his home with his son, David, in Worth Township, and died there in 1815.

James Glover, a Revolutionary soldier, born in Essex County, New Jersey, about 1754, came to Butler County in 1792, and in the fall of that year erected a cabin at Deer Lick in what is now Adams Township. He occupied this cabin until 1796, when he entered four hundred acres of land, became a permanent settler, and remained in the county until his death in 1844. Glover, who was a blacksmith, after the Revolution settled in Pittsburg, where he worked at his trade. He subsequently purchased a farm in what is now the heart of the north side of Pittsburg, and in 1815 or 1816 he leased this farm in perpetuity for $75 per year, retaining the ownership after he came to this county. The Glover lease and a few others of a similar character caused the legislature of Pennsylvania to pass a law prohibiting leases in perpetuity.

Peter McKinney, who was a noted hunter, and a soldier in the Pennsylvania Line during the Revolutionary War, built a cabin in what is now Forward Township in 1792. It is said that in his youth he came with his parents from Ireland, and that he was left an orphan before he had reached maturity. He was a drummer and fifer in the War of the Revolution, and afterwards saw service in the Indian troubles, and was a drummer in Capt. Abraham Brinker's Company, raised in Butler County in the War of 1812. Mr. McKinney was married at Braddock field, Westmoreland County, in 1791, to Mary Shorts, who came with him to Butler County. His daughter, Elizabeth, is said to have been the first white child born in the county, the date of her nativity being March 23, 1792. His wife died in 1839 and his own death occurred in 1844. Petersville, in Connoquenessing Township, now the borough of Connoquenessing, was named after this pioneer.

Another pioneer who is said to have come to the county in 1792 was Patrick Harvey, who settled in Clinton Township. He was guided to the location by John Harbison, the Indian scout and spy who afterwards came to the county, and they marked the boundaries of the farm they had selected by blazing the forest trees. The following year Harvey went into Sugar Creek Township, Armstrong County, and selected a farm on which his cousin, John Patton, afterwards settled. In the spring of 1794 he returned to his Butler County farm that he had selected two years previous, and in May, 1795, he brought his family to their new home where a year later his third child, Martha, was born. His wife died in 1831, his own death occurring in 1849.

David Armstrong came to Worth Township in 1794 from Westmoreland County, bringing with him his son George, and his daughter, Rebecca. They made their temporary home in a wigwam until fall, when the father and daughter returned to Westmoreland County, and the following year the entire family came to Butler County and settled on the land held during the winter by the son.

A pioneer hunter named Daniels came into the county in 1794, built a cabin and cultivated a small garden on the land in Marion Township afterwards owned by Robert Vanderlin. He was scared away by the Indians before the arrival of the other settlers.

Thomas Girty and his wife Ann, and their son Thomas, were among the first settlers of Connoquenessing Township. Thomas Girty was a brother of the notorious George, James and Simon Girty, and his death is supposed to have occurred some time previous to 1803. Various accounts of the Girty family and the death of Mrs. Ann Girty have been published in previous histories, none of which are correct. The account given in the sketch of the Girty family in this publication has been verified by Mr. A. McCollough of Butler, and others who have taken pains to hunt up the true story. The story of Ann Girty's death, told in another part of this chapter, was related in 1875 by David Shannon, who was one of the pioneers of Connoquenessing Township, and who was at Mrs. Girty's funeral.

In 1793 William Elliott, John Elliott and John Dennison, three land hunters from Wilkesburg, came into Butler County and took up 1,400 acres of land in Middlesex Township. William Elliott, in order to secure more than the allotment of 400 acres, selected the tracts of land amounting to 1,400 acres and located the other members of his party on them to hold them for him.

James Hall, Abraham Fryer, James Harbison and William Hultz, hunters from east of the Allegheny Mountains, came into the county January 10, 1793, by way of Logan's Ferry, below Tarentum, and camped in the forests of Middlesex Township. The next day they marked their camping place by engraving their names on the trees, and returned to their homes. A year later they returned to Middlesex Township, and settled on land on and around the site of their former camp. During their absence George Hays, Thomas Martin and James Fulton came into the township and selected land, thus becoming the first settlers there.

During the year 1795 Samuel and Thomas Cross, Jacob and John Pisor, Henry Steintorf, settled in Worth Township. James Hemphill, Rudolph Barnhart, Adam and John Hemphill, Jacob Barnhart, Sr., and Jacob Barnhart, Jr., made settlements the same year in Donegal and Fairview Townships, around the site of Chicora. James Hemphill, who was a noted hunter, with Rudolph Barnhart, had been in the county the previous year and marked out the land. Samuel Wallace settled in Fairview Township in 1795, and Robert Elliott in Buffalo Township; Edward Graham located on land in Concord Township; George Bell settled in the vicinity of Bell's Knob, and Archibald Kelley built a cabin in Parker Township.

During the years 1795 and 1796 James McKee and William Kearns came to Butler Township; Daniel McConnell, William McConnell, William McNees and Benjamin Jack came to Worth Township; Aaron Moore and John McCandless settled in Franklin Township; Dunning McNair, a land speculator, and John Ekin settled in Connoquenessing Township; William Thompson and Silas Miller, a noted hunter, were early settlers of Middlesex Township; John Parker, the pioneer and progenitor of the Parker family at Parker's Landing, settled in Parker Township; and Eli Scholar settled in Lancaster Township.

PIONEER ANECDOTES AND ADVENTURES.

THE RATHBUN FAMILY.

Clark Rathbun, who was a native of New England, moved to Pennsylvania and engaged in the milling business on the Youghiogheny River above Elizabethtown. Previous to 1797 he purchased a tract of land in what is now the southwestern part of Penn Township, Butler County, and erected a cabin and brought hither his son Thomas and his daughter Ruth, the latter being a girl of about thirteen years of age. Leaving his two children to keep possession of the place, he returned to Allegheny County, to his business of milling at Robbins's mill during the winter. After a short stay, Thomas became weary of living in the woods, and desired to return to his father's and attend school. The plan was talked over, and Ruth consented to it. Accordingly, Thomas returned to his former home, and Ruth kept house alone for three months, her only companion being a large faithful dog. The nearest neighbors lived two miles from the cabin, and as the house was secure against wild beasts, she had no fear of robbers. Wolves howled about the dwelling at night, and all her surroundings were of the wildest character conceivable, but the girl remained at her post showing a magnanimous courage and self-sacrifice that has been the wonder and admiration of her descendants. The following season the Rathbun family took up their abode in the wilderness, and lived here a few years, after which nearly all of the members went to Ohio. Ruth Rathbun married Robert Brown, who was one of the first settlers of Penn Township. They were the parents of thirteen children, all of whom grew up to maturity, and became residents of the county. Mrs. Brown died in 1850, and her husband in 1853.

AMBERSON AND THE INDIAN.

Among the celebrated Indian scouts that patrolled the woods in northwestern Pennsylvania previous to 1792, when the territory was opened for settlement, were James Amberson, James Jeffries, and Capt. Samuel Brady. Amberson afterwards settled in Forward Township in the Connoqueussing Valley and was one of the pioneers of that district. These Indian scouts had all the hatred of the Indian that was possessed by Brady and other noted frontiersmen, and in their estimation there was no more harm in killing an Indian than in destroying a noxious animal. The story is related that many years after the Indian tribes had left Butler County, Amberson and a companion were out one day in the woods near the old Venango trail that passes through a portion of Forward Township, and that they saw a big Indian approaching along the trail alone. Amberson proposed to his companion that they kill the Indian, to which the companion objected. After some parley about the matter, Amberson got his way and the Indian was accordingly shot and his body was hid in a hollow tree not far from the trail. The act was a wanton murder, but the old Indian scouts and frontiersmen did not regard the killing of an Indian in the light of a crime.

CAPT. SAMUEL BRADY.

That Captain Samuel Brady, the famous scout, was often in the forests of Butler County in 1780 and 1781, is substantially a matter of historical record. At that time General Broadhead was the commander at Fort Pitt, and Brady was depended upon by him to undertake hazardous enterprises against the Indians. His success in these enterprises, and his daring exploits in general, aroused the jealousy of the officers at the fort, and it was a long time before they could be convinced that his methods of warfare against the savages were more effectual than their own. They were, however, finally convinced of the fact from the following circumstance.

General Broadhead having organized a force to punish the Indians who had been guilty of massacring the settlers of Sewickley in 1780, Brady, owing to the jealousy of the officers as above referred to, was not allowed to accompany the troops. He obtained permission, however, to organize an independent party. With five white men and a friendly Indian scout, he set out and in a short time located the war party of which he was in search at the Indian camp near Kittanning. Making a cautious approach after dark, he waited until the morning and then, with the first pale light of dawn, made his attack, seven rifles ringing out simultaneously and without warning in the morning air. The Indians, who were gathered around the campfire, exulting over the scalps and spoils taken at Sewickley, were effectually surprised, five of them dropping dead on the instant. Another, as it was afterwards ascertained, was mortally wounded, though he escaped for the time being. After a short pursuit Brady and his men returned to the fort with the canoes and other property of the Indians, while soon after the soldiers came in empty-handed to report that the enemy had escaped them. It is said that they henceforth recognized Brady's superiority as an Indian fighter.

There is another story which has to do with the escape of this famous scout from a party of Indians who were pursuing him, by leaping twenty-three feet across a deep chasm. There has been some dispute as to the location where this remarkable leap took place. It is said by many to have occurred somewhere on Slippery Rock Creek, while others have placed it on Bear Creek. Wherever it was, he successfully leaped from one bank to the other of the stream, to the great mortification of the pursuing savages, who were close behind, and who thus saw one of their most feared and relentless enemies escape them to prove a thorn in their flesh on many a subsequent occasion. This is said to have occurred in 1781 or 1782.

THE RESCUE OF ISAAC ZANE.

The first white man to set foot within the present limits of Butler borough appears to have been Isaac Zane, who was a prominent character on the frontier of western Pennsylvania and Ohio in the days previous to the Revolution. Zane was born in Virginia in 1753, and when nine years of age was taken prisoner by the Wyandot Indians and carried to Detroit. He grew up with the Indians and when a young man was employed by the government. About the time of the Revolution Zane and a party of frontiersmen were sent on a mission to some of the forts in New York State. They came to old Fort Venango in Pennsylvania, where they made a flat boat and descended the Allegheny River to Pittsburg, passing old Fort Duquesne and Logtown on the Ohio River and reaching the mouth of the Muskingum River at Marietta without any serious adventure. Here they decided to proceed up the Muskingum River to Detroit and thence to Erie. They were warned, however, that such a course would be dangerous on account of the Indians being on the war path. Disregarding the warning, they set out, but had not proceeded more than a day or so on their journey when the party was captured by a band of Delawares, and Zane was selected as the prisoner to be taken back east to the Indian rendezvous near Kittanning, Pennsylvania. In their route to Kittanning they passed the present town of Coshocton, Ohio, struck the old Indian trail at the mouth of Connoquenessing Creek on the Beaver River, and thence followed the creek past "Murdering Town," near Amberson's bridge, and arrived at the present site of Butler in the evening, where they camped on the hill on the site of the court house.

It appears that Zane was well known among the Indians of Ohio, and when the fact of his capture was ascertained, an Indian girl, presumably one of the Wyandot tribe, undertook to accomplish his rescue. She followed the Delaware war party across the trackless forests of eastern Ohio from the Muskingum River to Butler, a distance of almost two hundred miles and overtook the party at the camp here in the evening. She held a parley with the chief of the war party and persuaded him to release Zane and allow her lover to return to Ohio. After his return to Ohio, Zane married the Indian girl, and it is said that many families in the vicinity of Zanesville or Marietta point with pride to the fact that they are descendants of this noted couple. After the Revolution Zane settled on a large tract of land near Zanesville, Ohio, where he died in 1816. Howe's "Historical Collections of Ohio" states that Zane's wife was a half-breed French girl from Canada, but does not mention the romantic rescue above related. The story of the rescue was published in recent years in the newspapers of Marietta, Ohio, and its authenticity was unquestioned at that time.

DESTRUCTION OF KITTANNING.

The following account of the rescue of Fort Shirley, the destruction of the Indian town of Kittanning, and the adventure of James Kirkpatrick with the Indians is taken from a manuscript in possession of J. D. Kirkpatrick, of Renfrew, Butler County, who is a grandson of the pioneer mentioned in the narrative. The Kirkpatrick family were in the Allegheny Valley about the time that the Harbison family located at Reed's Station, opposite Freeport, and were no doubt among the earliest settlers in the territory west of the Allegheny River. In the Kirkpatrick narrative, the last murder by Indians is said to have occurred in April, 1791, while the raid on Reed's Station, according to the story of Massy Harbison, occurred in 1792. These are discrepancies for which the reader of local history can make due allowance. Both narratives are authentic, and the Kirkpatrick story is published for the first time in a history of Butler County. The narrative reads as follows:

"After the defeat of Braddock on the Monongahela, the incursions of the Indians into the frontier settlements of Virginia and Maryland became more frequent and bold. Indeed, so terrible had become their ravages that most of the settlers had fled for protection, either to the nearest stockade forts, or to the older settlements east and south of the mountains.

"Emboldened by the success of their forays into these provinces, the savage hordes swept over the border into Pennsylvania, and laid waste the beautiful valley of the Juniata and the Kiskiminitas, carrying away whole families of women and children prisoners to their towns north of the Ohio, while statistics show that upward of 1,000 white settlers were killed during these incursions.

"Washington had been recently appointed Commander-in-Chief of all the forces then raised or to be raised, in the colony of Virginia. But the militia laws of the province were so inadequate to the enforcement of proper discipline that he had a sorry time bringing to subordination the beggarly array of recruits who reported for duty after an urgent call. At this time there came to the young commander heart-rending appeals from the border for protection. He was deeply moved at the deplorable condition of the helpless people, and resolved that a speedy and decisive blow should be struck at their stealthy and deadly foe.

"Scouts had brought in word that tracks of a numerous band had been discovered, tending toward Fort Duquesne, and an escaped prisoner reported that they were hostile Delawares and Shawnees, that Washington's former ally, Shingis, and another chief called Captain Jacobs, were their leaders, and that they had a rendezvous on the Allegheny, twenty-five or thirty miles above Fort Duquesne, called Kittanning, whither they carried their prisoners and plunder. Colonel John Armstrong, of the Pennsylvania militia, undertook the punishment of this murderous band. He took with him Washington's beloved friend and neighbor, Captain Hugh Mercer, who, the year before, had been severely wounded at Braddock's field and from the thicket, where he lay disabled, had witnessed the atrocities of the Indians.

"With 280 picked men, well mounted, and with reliable scouts in advance, they marched rapidly and silently over the mountains and through the forest to the Allegheny River.

"Irving says they kept on till they reached the Ohio. This is a geographical error, unless he applies the name to the Allegheny, which prior to 1748 was called the Ohio, as well as the river below Pittsburg, by the Senecas and several other tribes. Yet as early as 1753 Washington, in the report of his mission to Venango, designates the north fork of the Ohio as the Allegheny, and other contemporary writers do the same. Setting out, as Armstrong's party did, from Fort Shirley in the Juniata Valley, and celerity and secrecy being the essence of the undertaking, their most direct and secluded route would be through the defiles of the mountains, in or near the Conemaugh region, and thence through the valley of the Kiskiminitas to the Allegheny.

"On the 7th, in the evening, being within six miles of Kittanning, the scout discovered a fire in the road and reported that there were two or at most four Indians at it. It was not thought advisable to surprise those Indians at that time, as if one should escape the town might be alarmed. So Lieutenant Hogg, with twelve men, was left to watch them, with orders not to fall upon them till daybreak, and our forces turned out of the path and passed by without disturbing them.

"It was afterward a cause of wonderment and chagrin to M. Dumas, then in command at Fort Duquesne, and to his red allies, that so large a force of mounted men could march undiscovered into their enemy's country, where Indian scouts and detachments of French soldiers were constantly on the alert.

"It was a clear moonlight night in September when the avengers neared the end of their perilous ride. They were guided to the town by the whoops and yells of the savages, who had just returned from another murdering foray, and were celebrating their triumphs with the hideous scalp dance. It would require the pen of Hugo or the pencil of Dore to do justice to this weird and awful scene, in which the warriors, fantastically decorated with feathers, beads and war paint, circled about a great fire in the monotonous dance, carrying aloft on the ends of poles the variously colored scalps of their recent victims. Armstrong's men had secreted their horses some distance back in the woods, and had cautiously made their way on foot to a dip in the land about 100 yards from the place. Here they were ordered to 'lie still and hush' till moonset. From this cover they had a full view of the horrid spectacle.

"The stalwart dancers went round and round, and as the moonlight and firelight gleamed suddenly on the snow-white tresses of an aged woman lifted high by a sinewy arm, the fury of the white men could hardly be restrained. But, remembering that the success of the attack depended upon its being a complete surprise, they controlled their wrath. The savage rites were long, but they ended at last, and such Indians as had huts retired to them, and those who had not, built fires in a neighboring cornfield to protect them from the myriads of guats that infested the place, and lay down there to rest. The last guttural 'Ugh! Ugh!' had died away and all slept heavily. But there was another weary wait for the white men till the moon set and the fires burned low.

ARMSTRONG'S ATTACK.

"History says that as the first streak of dawn revealed the outlines of the lodges, Armstrong divided his men into two parties and they made a simultaneous attack upon the corn field and the village. Chief Jacobs being roused by the first shot, sounded the war whoop, and the braves in the field, although surprised, hearing the cry of their chief, fought desperately till several of their number were killed. But Armstrong's report says:

"As soon as day appeared and the town could be seen, the attack on the cornfield began, through which our people charged, killing several of the enemy, and

KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS HOME, HARMONY

RAPP'S SEAT, HARMONY

MUDDY CREEK FALLS

STONE HOUSE, BRADY TOWNSHIP

MECHLING HOTEL
(Where Gen. Lafayette was entertained in 1824)

LOG CABIN, BUILT BY MANASSAS DUGAN

entered the town.' The lodges, some thirty in number, were set on fire, and Chief Jacobs and his people, within, ordered to surrender. They refused. But as the fire made headway, many of them rushed from their burning homes. A few escaped, but many were killed and scalped after their own fashion. Among the latter were Chief Jacobs and his giant son, said to have been seven feet high. The women and children fled to the woods, says Irving, Bancroft and Lossing, but older accounts state that many of them perished in the town.

"Armstrong's account of the affair, which he sent by an express to Governor Denny in Philadelphia, and which is found published in the Portsmouth (New Hampshire) Gazette for October 7, 1756 (a copy of which is in possession of Mr. Joseph Forsythe of Pittsburg), relates that Jacobs's squaw was killed and scalped as she attempted to escape through a window, and says further:

"The Indians had a number of spare arms in their houses, loaded, which went off as the fire came to them, and quantities of gunpowder, which had been stored in every house, blew up from time to time, throwing some of their bodies a great height into the air."

"Armstrong also says that 'a squaw was heard crying in one of the burning houses.' It is therefore inferred that she, and perhaps others of her sex, perished in the flames, as the leg of a child was blown by one of the explosions into the midst of the white troops. The discharge of spare guns and the heavy explosions referred to, attest how well French emissaries kept the savages supplied with the munitions of war.

"In the action seventeen of the whites were killed, thirteen wounded and nineteen missing at roll call. Among the wounded were Colonel Armstrong and his second-in-command, Captain Mercer. It does not appear from the various accounts of the affair that the faithless Shingis was present at the destruction of Kittanning. It is probable that he had gone to Fort Duquesne, as his tribe was accustomed to transport thither their most valuable prisoners and booty, and it is known that they obtained from the French commandant at that place part of their supplies. Armstrong's dispatch to Philadelphia also says:

"Seven English prisoners were released and brought away, who informed the colonel that besides the powder (of which the Indians boasted they had enough for ten years' war with the English) there was a great quantity of goods burnt, which the French had made them a present of but ten days before."

"The timeliness of Armstrong's attack is proved by further testimony of the rescued prisoners, given in his Philadelphia dispatch:

"The prisoners also informed us that that very day two bateaux of Frenchmen, with a large party of Delaware and French Indians, were to join Captain Jacobs, to march and take Fort Shirley; and that twenty-five warriors had set out before them the preceding evening, which proved to be the party that had kindled the fire the night before; for our people returning found Lieutenant Hogg wounded in three places, and learned he had in the morning attacked the supposed party of three or four at the fire, according to order, but found them too numerous for him. He killed three of them, however, at the first fire and fought them for an hour, when he lost three of his best men and fled, the enemy pursuing them. Lieutenant Hogg soon after died of his wounds."

Armstrong relates further concerning the Kittanning raid:

"Captain Mercer, being wounded in the action, was carried off by his ensign and eleven men, who left the main body in their return to take another road, and were not come in when the express came away.

He had four of the recovered prisoners with him, and some of the scalps.'

"At the foot of Armstrong's dispatch the Gazette adds:

"Since receiving the above return from Fort Lyttleton, we are informed Captain Mercer and twenty-five persons are returned safe, which makes up the missing, and the four released prisoners.'

"The Gazette account has been freely quoted because it differs in some particulars from that in the histories, and contains information not to be found there. Also, because it is direct from the commander of the expedition, who presumably gave an accurate report. It is surprising that the historians are content to comment upon the signal blow suffered by the enemy in the loss of their most famous leader and their depot of supplies, but make no mention of the very important immediate results of that blow, viz.: the scattering of the assembling forces destined for the attack on Fort Shirley, and that, too, at the last critical moment, for had Armstrong's troops arrived in the vicinity of Kittanning twelve hours later they would in all probability have been cut to pieces, and Fort Shirley, with its meager garrison would have fallen into the hands of Jacobs, as did Fort Granville, or Fort Granby, as Armstrong calls it, the preceding year, and the Juniata Valley would have been laid as waste and desolate as was Wyoming twenty-two years later.

"It was daylight when the work of destruction was finished, and the sun rose upon the smoking ruins. There was not a moment to lose, for, says Armstrong's report:

"A body of the enemy on the other side of the river fired on our people, and being seen to cross the river at a distance, as if to surround our men, they collected some Indian horses found near the town to carry off the wounded and retreated, without going back to the cornfield to pick up the scalps of those killed there in the beginning of the action.'

"Taking with them the released prisoners, the troops hurried back to the woods where their horses were corralled, mounted in haste, and made their way homeward as silently and cautiously as they had come. The fact that a body of the enemy fired upon Armstrong's party from the opposite side of the river seems further to confirm the testimony of the rescued prisoners concerning the proposed attack upon Fort Shirley. It is reasonable to suppose that they were a body destined for the expedition, arriving thus early at the rendezvous.

"The astonishment and alarm of the Ohio tribes at this direful visitation of the colonists put an end to their outrages for some time to come. On the frontier a feeling of security was, in a measure, restored, and the settlers in large numbers returned to the homes they had abandoned. It is pleasing to note in connection with this daring exploit of Armstrong's militia that the populous town of the white men, with the foundries and rolling mills, and its beautiful homes and churches that now covers the site of the old Indian rallying place, has not been rechristened, but retains the musical Delaware name of Kittanning. Keekewelder, the best authority on Lenni Lenape significations, says it is a corruption of Kithan-nick, which means the main stream, or on the main stream, and with the Delawares denoted the stream as well as the town.

"It is also in accordance with the eternal fitness of things that the county of which Kittanning is the capital, bears the name of Armstrong in honor of the man who, by a signal act of retaliation, opened the way for its settlement. The corporation of Philadelphia presented Colonel Armstrong with a piece of plate, and also gave to him and to each of his officers a silver medal and to every private in the troop a medal and a small present of money in recognition of their intrepid conduct on the expedition.

ADVENTURE OF JAMES KIRKPATRICK.

“The treaty of Fontainebleau did not bring to the borders the tranquillity so earnestly hoped for, and not until after the close of Pontiac’s war was there actual safety for settlers beyond the shadow of the forts. After a few years, however, the remnants of such tribes as remained north of the Ohio, being now at peace with the English emigrants, and tempted by the cheap and fertile land, began to push farther west and north of the manor tracts of Pennsylvania.

“With these came James Kirkpatrick, of Franklin County, Pennsylvania, bringing with him his wife and three children, the youngest not yet a year old. They crossed the Allegheny River at a point where, a quarter of a century before, had stood the Indian town of Kittanning. Here they piled their household effects on the backs of pack-horses and pushed into the wilderness some ten miles beyond and to a little stream called Cherry Run.

“With the help of a distant neighbor Kirkpatrick built a cabin and began to clear his land. Encouraged by the quality of their purchase he and his wife toiled cheerfully, for both were young, buoyant with health and hope, and charmed with the novelty of their woodland life. The elder children, too, were happy as linnets in the midst of their surroundings, and as the ax was lustily plied, watched with eager interest the swaying of each tree, and heard with boisterous shouts the crash when the great trunk shook the earth with its fall.

“So the boundaries of the clearing extended farther and farther as time went by, and the crops grew apace in the rich, new soil. A few Indians remained in a camp not many miles away, but they were friendly, and sometimes came to the colonists to barter moccasins and furs for potatoes, turnips and other products of the soil, and the latch string of the pioneers was always out to the few travelers who passed their way, but beyond an occasional party of surveyors, a hunter or a militia man or two going or coming from the blockhouse district, they had few visitors.

“Born of religious parents, the young people kept up in their new home the pious observances to which they had been always accustomed. Indeed, their isolated situation gave new fervency to their devotions. It so happened on the morning of the 28th of April, 1791, a day ever after memorable to them, that George Miller, who was the first white man who had settled in this section, coming in 1766, and another militia man, had stopped at the cabin. Young Kirkpatrick, as was his habit, before beginning work for the day, read a chapter in the Bible, and all present knelt in prayer.

“As they arose from their knees, one of the militia men hearing some stir outside, opened the door to ascertain the cause. As he did so, an Indian standing near the house, fired at him, inflicting a terrible wound in his side. He was falling out of the open door when his companions, Miller and Kirkpatrick, springing forward, dragged him in and barred the door. Miller then barricaded the window with bedding, table and such other articles of household furniture as would help to make it bullet-proof, while Kirkpatrick, seizing his rifle, ran up the ladder to the loft and began shooting through a loophole in the chinking. Having been entirely engrossed with the labors of his farm, and not expecting hostility from the Indians at that late date, he had run no bullets for some time, and so had but few in his pouch. He had not fired many rounds, when a shot aimed by the assailant sped through the crack above the large wooden door latch, struck the innocent baby, and it fell back, bleeding and gasping.

“At this moment Kirkpatrick called down the ladder to his wife to mold some bullets as fast as possible, for his supply was nearly exhausted. There was no time now to wash blood stains from the cruel wound or to pillow the drooping head upon her throbbing breast; no time to give way to a mother’s yearning or anguish—only time to lay, with trembling hands, the tiny, limp form in the sugar-trough cradle, that might never again rock him to slumber; only time to snatch with nervous haste the lead, the mold and the ladle for melting from the rude shelf, rake the embers from under the back log and essay her difficult task that her husband might save their lives or sell them as dearly as he could.

“It was easy enough to melt the lead on the glowing coals, but the shaking fingers could not guide the molten stream into the throat of the mold. Seeing this, the wounded militiaman, holding together with one hand the gaping edges of his wound, crawled to the fireplace, and with the other hand steadied the ladle for her. In this way they filled and emptied the mold many times over, while Miller, having secured the house as well as he could, stood at the foot of the ladder, trimmed the bullets, loaded the spare gun, passed it up to Kirkpatrick, took his empty one, loaded it and exchanged, loaded and exchanged again and again.

“Counting the shots and the intervals between them, the white men judged there were three assailants. After a time, however, the shots were less frequent and farther off. They concluded from this that one of the Indians was either killed or badly wounded. The other two had by this time moved to the edge of the clearing and far enough away from the house to be seen from the loop hole. One of them had just fired his piece, the charge burying itself in the log near Kirkpatrick’s head. The other one was in the act of loading. Kirkpatrick now for the first time having a chance to take a deliberate aim, leveled his rifle and fired; his bullet struck the ramrod out of the Indian’s hand and entered his body. He threw up his arms and fell to the ground, but scrambled to his feet again and tottered into the woods. The other one ran away at full speed and firing ceased.

“When the besieged white men opened the door and looked warily out, an Indian lay dead in the yard with a bullet hole through his head. Assured that they were at last alone, every effort was made to alleviate the sufferings of the wounded man and child. But the soldier was beyond all aid; he lingered in great agony until near noon, when death came to his relief. The baby lay breathing feebly and white as marble. The brave husband could not tarry to soothe the grief of his wife or the terror of his children, but hastily prepared to carry them to a place of safety, lest the savages might return in greater numbers and massacre them all.

“A white boy, at that time a prisoner with the tribe among whom the three Indians were living, after his escape told Kirkpatrick that they had expected to find him alone with his family, and that but one of the three returned to camp. Kirkpatrick collected as many of his effects as could be packed on the horse behind his wife and children, and taking Miller, the surviving militiaman, as guard, hurried his family off by a circuitous route to the block house at Hannahstown; the mother carrying her wounded child on a pillow upon her lap. It was a dangerous and painful ride of nearly forty miles, and scarcely had they entered the sheltering walls of the fort when the baby boy breathed his last.

“As far as there is any record, this was the last murderous attack by Indians upon a settler’s home in western Pennsylvania. There have been published no less than four different versions of the story, including the one in Massy Harbison’s book, which Mr. J. T. Kirkpatrick, a grandson of the pioneer James Kirkpatrick, pronounced incorrect in several particulars. It is believed the account here given is the true one, as it was obtained directly from Mr. J. T. Kirkpatrick, who had it from his grandparents, who were actors in the scene.

"The scene of the tragedy is on the old road running north from Kittanning. A jaunting party passing through that region some time ago, found the old cabin still standing, for the woodmen of those days builded better than they knew. It is true, the clapboard roof, as clapboards will do, had curled up like fur on the back of an angry cat; the sash was gone from the small, square window, and the door from its hinges, but the four log walls and the chinking were almost as perfect as when young Kirkpatrick built it."

THE GIRTY TRAGEDY.

Among the first settlers who came to the northern part of Connoquenessing Township was Thomas Girty, his wife Ann, and his son Thomas, Jr., who located near Whitestown about 1795 or 1796. The elder Girty died some time previous to 1803, and was probably buried at Girty's Run in Allegheny County, where the family came from. The tax duplicates of Butler County issued by the commissioners of Allegheny County in 1803, show that Thomas Girty, a single man, was assessed with four hundred acres of land in Connoquenessing Township, besides other personal property. The young man lived on the farm with his mother, and because of the belief among the settlers that they were relatives of the notorious Simon Girty, the family was avoided, and many false stories have been told about them.

During the absence of Thomas Girty, Jr., in Ohio in 1803, Davy Kerr, who was a squatter on the four hundred acre tract of land taken up by the Girtys, went one night to the cabin where Mrs. Ann Girty lived, determined either to drive her off the premises or scare her so that she would leave him in undisputed possession of the land. Before going to the cabin he had armed himself with a horse-pistol which he had loaded with buckshot. He stated the purpose of his visit to Mrs. Girty, and when she refused to leave made threats of violence, at which Mrs. Girty seized a burning firebrand from the fire and struck Kerr in the face. In the fight that ensued Kerr shot Mrs. Girty in the breast, inflicting wounds from which she died six weeks later. Because of the feeling that existed against the Girty family in the neighborhood, and partly because a settlement had been arranged, before Mrs. Girty's death, Kerr was never prosecuted for his crime and shortly afterwards he gave up his claim to the land and left. So bitter was the feeling against Mrs. Ann Girty that the trustees of Mt. Nebo Cemetery, near Whitestown, refused to allow her to be buried at that place, and she was interred on the farm where she lived. For many years this grave was marked by a fence made of chestnut rails and the spot was avoided by children because they believed that Mrs. Girty was a witch, and capable of working great mischief in the neighborhood. Thomas Girty, Jr., the son, never returned to Butler County after the death of his mother, and he lived and died in Adams County, Ohio.

The suspicion that this Girty family was connected with the notorious Simon Girty was correct, although the Girty family in Butler County could never be charged with anything more serious than attending to their own business and living a quiet existence. Howe's "Historical Collections of Ohio" says that the original Girty family lived in Pennsylvania and that the elder Girty was a man of violent disposition, given to drinking, who abused his wife and family so much that his wife deserted him for a young pioneer in the neighborhood named John Turner. It was alleged that in order to get rid of the obnoxious Girty,

Turner knocked him on the head. Girty left four sons, viz.: George, James, Thomas, and Simon. All of the sons were captured by the Indians during Braddock's campaign and were subsequently adopted by various Indian tribes, with the exception of Thomas. George was adopted by the Delaware Indians and died in a drunken fit. James was adopted by the Shawanese, became notorious on the frontier, and met a violent death in Kentucky. Simon was adopted by the Seneca Indians and became the notorious white renegade who was so much feared and hated by the pioneers. Accounts differ as to how Simon met his death, one authority saying he was hacked to pieces by Colonel Johnson's mounted men at Proctor's defeat, and another that he died at Malden about 1815. The white renegades, Simon Girty, Col. Alexander McKee, and Captain Elliott, were at the battle of Fallen Timbers—1794—with about seventy Canadians, but did not take part in the fight.

Thomas Girty was one of the white men that was a prisoner at Kittanning in 1756 when Col. Armstrong made his famous expedition and destroyed that Indian stronghold. He subsequently settled on Girty's Run in Allegheny County, and when the territory of which Butler County is a part was opened for settlement, he came to this county. It was alleged that during the Revolution and the Indian wars Thomas Girty was as vicious as his brothers in his treatment of the white settlers, and that his wife Ann made the bullets with which he shot down the frontiersmen in their fight with the Indians.

A sister of the Girty men was married to Israel Gibson and came to Butler County with her husband previous to 1800. She died in 1801, and was the third person buried in the Mt. Nebo Cemetery, where two years later the officials of the cemetery would not permit her sister-in-law to be buried. The Girty tract lay west of the Franklin Road and about one mile south of Whitestown. After the death of Mrs. Girty, Israel Gibson lived on the farm, and in later years it was known as the Abdiel McClure farm. It is now known as the Coates farm.

It is said that Thomas Girty was at one time loyal to the colonies, and that he was employed as a scout along with James Amberson, James Jeffries and Capt. Samuel Brady. For some reason he turned against his former compatriots and became an outlaw.

M'KEE AND ELLIOTT.

While Butler County was not the field of any of the fiendish barbarities committed by the renegades, Simon Girty, Alexander McKee and Captain Elliott, it is a fact, however, that this territory was the rendezvous and hiding place of the marauding tribes of Indians who terrorized the frontier and the Cumberland and Tuscarora Valleys during the Revolution and for a number of years later, and who were led by these white men. McKee and Elliott were residents of Path Valley, Pennsylvania, previous to the Revolution, where both men were leaders of the Tory element among the settlers. On account of their sympathies with the British, they were compelled to leave the valley, and both men joined the Shawanese tribe of Indians and became leaders of the Indian tribe in all the depredations that were committed in western Pennsylvania during the period of the Revolution, and which were chiefly instigated by the British. They married Indian wives, adopted Indian habits, and became as ferocious in their treatment of the white settlers as the Girtys. In consideration of their treachery, McKee was given the rank as colonel and Elliott the rank of captain in the British army, and after the Revolution both men were appointed agents for the Indians by the British government and were stationed in the southern part of Canada.

THE STORY OF MASSY HARBISON.

The story of Massy Harbison and her terrible experiences with the Indians is one of the most thrilling narratives in the annals of the west. While the capture of Mrs. Harbison took place in Westmoreland County, the terrible experiences of the several days that followed and her escape from the Indians took place in Butler County, and is an authentic narrative of adventure within the territory of the county. It has been published before, but its inherent interest and its value as an illustration of the hardships and perils that sometimes fell to the lot of the early settlers in this region, entitle it to republication in this volume.

Massy White was the daughter of Edward White, a Revolutionary soldier, and was born in Amwell Township, Somerset County, New Jersey, March 18, 1770. After the establishment of peace in 1782, the family removed west and settled at Red Stone Fort, now Brownsville, in the Monongahela Valley. In 1787 Massy White was married to John Harbison with whom she removed to the headwaters of Chartiers Creek, in Westmoreland County. John Harbison was an Indian scout and frontiersman and was with St. Clair's army in Ohio in 1791, when the latter met defeat by the Indians.

The Indians, who had been the allies of the British, during the Revolutionary War, afterwards continued to harass the white settlers along the Ohio and Allegheny frontier. So great were their atrocities and depredations that the government in 1790 again inaugurated hostilities against them. During the period from this date until General Wayne's victory, in 1794, and even after that until the treaty of Greenville in 1795, numerous murders were committed and many persons taken prisoners. Along the Allegheny River and near the boundaries of what is now Butler County, a number of outrages were committed in 1791. In March of that year a Mr. Thomas Dick and his wife, living near the mouth of Deer Creek on the east side of the River, were captured, and a young man who lived with them was killed and scalped. Four days later a band of Indians appeared at the house of Abram Russ, two miles further up the river, protested their friendship, and asked for food. Having been received kindly, the Indians turned on their benefactors, massacred four men, a woman and six children. Several persons escaped and the news of this slaughter was quickly carried through the scattered settlements and the inhabitants, taking with them only such articles as could be hastily gotten together, fled to James Paul's, on Pine Run. By sunrise on the 23d of March there were between seventy and eighty women and children collected at this retreat, and all but four of the men had left in pursuit of the Indians. Massy Harbison and her two children were among the number who sought safety at James Paul's. After the murder on the night of March 22d, 1791, above the mouth of Bull Creek, from Pine Creek these people proceeded to a point on the eastern bank of the Allegheny River, a mile below the mouth of Kiskiminetas, and opposite the side of Freeport, and there erected a block house to which all the families who had fled from the neighborhood returned within two weeks. Here they remained in safety during the summer, although several murders were committed along the river and David McKee and another young man were killed and scalped within seven miles of the blockhouse. This blockhouse received the name of Reeds Station. Soon after the several families were provided for at the blockhouse in the spring of 1791, John Harbison, the husband of Massy Harbison, enlisted in the six months' service in Captain Guthrie's company, went out in the expedition against the Indians, under command of the unfortunate General St. Clair. He did not return until the 24th of December, and when he came home he brought a memento of St. Clair's defeat in the shape of an ugly wound. On his recovery from his wound Harbison was appointed as spy and ordered to the woods on duty in March, 1792. While no depredations had been committed during the winter, the inhabitants at Reed Station feared trouble, and resorted to the spy system as a protection against the Indians. Having faith in the woods rangers to protect them, the settlers moved out from the blockhouse in which they had so long been confined and scattered to their habitations. Mrs. Harbison lived in a cabin within sight of the blockhouse and not more than two hundred yards distant from it. The spies in their long detours through the forest saw no signs of Indians, and nothing to alarm them. They frequently came to the Harbison cabin to receive refreshments and lodging and Mr. Harbison came home only once in eight or ten days. It appeared that Mrs. Harbison had apprehensions that something terrible would happen and she had entreated her husband to remove the family to some more secure place. On the night of the 21st of May, 1792, two of the spies, James Davis and a Mr. Sutton, came to lodge at the Harbison cabin, and at day-break on the following morning when the horn was blown at the blockhouse, they got up and went out. Mrs. Harbison was awake when the spies left the cabin, saw that the door was open, and intended to rise and shut it, but fell asleep again. While she slumbered Davis and Sutton returned, and after fastening the cabin door returned to the blockhouse. The woman awoke to find herself in the hands of a band of savages, who pulled her from the bed by her feet. The terrible events that followed are best narrated by Mrs. Harbison.

In her narrative, she says: "I then looked up and saw the house full of Indians, every one having his gun in his left hand and his tomahawk in his right. Beholding the dangerous situation in which I was, I immediately jumped to the floor upon my feet, with the young child in my arms. I then took up a petticoat to put on, having only the one in which I slept; but the Indians took it from me, and as many as I attempted to put on, they succeeded in taking from me, so that I had to go just as I had been in bed. While I was struggling with some of the savages for clothing, others of them went and took the two children out of another bed, and immediately took the two feather beds to the door and emptied them. The savages immediately began their work of plunder and devastation. What they were unable to carry with them, they destroyed. While they were at their work, I made to the door and succeeded in getting out with one child in my arms and another by my side; but the other little boy was so much displeased at being so early disturbed in the morning that he would not come to the door.

"When I got out, I saw Mr. Wolf, one of the soldiers, going to the spring for water, and beheld two or three of the savages attempting to get between him and the blockhouse; but Mr. Wolf was unconscious of his danger, for the savages had not yet been discovered. I then gave a terrific scream, by which means Mr. Wolf discovered his danger, and started to run for the blockhouse. Seven or eight of the Indians fired at him, but the only injury that he received was a bullet in his arm, which broke it. He succeeded in making his escape to the blockhouse. When I raised the alarm, one of the Indians came up to me with his tomahawk, as though about to take my life; a second came and placed his hand before my mouth and told me to hush, when a third came with a lifted tomahawk and attempted to give me a blow; but the first that came raised his tomahawk and averted the blow; and claimed me as his squaw.

"The commissary and his waiter who had been sleeping in the store-room, near the blockhouse, being aroused by Mrs. Harbison's scream and the report of the Indian's guns, attempted to make their escape. The commissary succeeded in reaching the blockhouse amid a rain of bullets, one or two of which cut the handkerchief which he wore about his head. The waiter, on coming to the door, was met by two Indians who fired at him, and he fell dead. The savages then set up their tremendous and terrifying yells, and pushed forward and attempted to scalp the men that they had killed, but they were prevented by the heavy fire which was kept up through the port-holes of the blockhouse.

"In this scene of horror and alarm," says Mrs. Harbison, "I began to meditate on escape, and for that purpose I attempted to direct the attention of the Indians from me, and to fix it on the blockhouse, and thought that if I could succeed in this I would retreat to a subterranean rock with which I was acquainted, which was in the run near which we were. For this purpose I began to converse with some of those who were near me, respecting the strength of the blockhouse, the number of men in it, etc., and, being informed that there were forty men there, and that they were excellent marksmen, they immediately came to the determination to retreat and for this purpose they ran to those who were besieging the blockhouse and brought them away. They then began to flog me with their wiping-sticks, and to order me along. Thus what I intended as a means of my escape was the means of accelerating my departure in the hands of the savages. But it was no doubt ordered by a kind Providence for the preservation of the fort and its inhabitants, for, when the savages gave up the attack and retreated, some of the men in the house had the last load of ammunition in their guns, and there was no possibility of procuring more, for it was all fastened up in the storehouse which was inaccessible.

"The Indians, when they had flogged me away along with them, took my oldest boy, a lad about five years of age, along with them, for he was still at the door by my side. My middle little boy, who was about three years of age, had by this time obtained a situation by the fire in the house, and was crying bitterly to me not to go, and making bitter complaints of the deprivations of the savages.

"But these monsters were not willing to let the child remain behind them; they took him by the hand to drag him along with them, but he was so very unwilling to go, and made such a noise by crying, that they took him by the feet and dashed his brains out against the threshold of the door. They then scalped and stabbed him and left him for dead.

"When I witnessed this inhuman butchery of my own child, I gave a most indescribable and terrific scream, and felt a dimness come over my eyes next to blindness, and my senses were nearly gone. The savages then gave me a blow across my face and head, and brought me to my sight and recollection again. During the whole of this agonizing scene I kept my infant in my arms.

"As soon as their murder was effected, they marched me along to the top of the bank, about forty or sixty rods, and there they stopped and divided the plunder which they had taken from our house, and here I counted their number, and found them to be thirty-two, two of whom were white men painted as Indians.

"Several of the Indians could speak English well. I knew several of them well, having seen them go up and down the Allegheny River. I knew two of them to be from the Seneca tribe of Indians, and two of them Munseys; for they had called at the shop to get their guns repaired, and I saw them there.

"We then went from this place about forty rods, and they then caught my uncle, John Currie's, horses, and two of them, into whose custody I was put, started with me on the horses toward the mouth of the Kiskiminetas, and the rest of them went off toward Puckety. When they came to the bank which descended toward the Allegheny, the bank was so very steep, and there appeared so much danger in descending it on horseback, that I threw myself off the horse in opposition to the will and command of the savages.

"My horse descended without falling, but the one on which the Indian rode who had my little boy, in descending, fell, and rolled over repeatedly, and my little boy fell back over the horse, but was not materially injured. He was taken up by one of the Indians, and we got to the bank of the river, where they had secreted some bark canoes, under the rocks opposite the island that lies between the Kiskiminetas and Buffalo. They attempted in vain to make the horses take the river. After trying for some time to effect this, they left the horses behind them and took us in one of the canoes to the point of the island, and there they left the canoe.

"Here I beheld another hard scene, for, as soon as we landed my little boy, who was still mourning and lamenting about his little brother, and who complained that he was injured by the fall in descending the bank, was murdered.

"One of the Indians ordered me along, probably that I should not see the horrid deed about to be perpetrated. The other then took his tomahawk from his side, killed and scalped him. When I beheld the second scene of inhuman butchery, I fell to the ground senseless, with my infant in my arms, it being under, with its little hands in the hair of my head. How long I remained in this state of insensibility I knew not.

"The first thing I remember was my raising my head from the ground, and my feeling myself exceedingly overcome with sleep. I cast my eyes around and saw the scalp of my dear little boy, fresh bleeding from his head, in the hand of one of the savages, and sank down to the earth again upon my infant child. The first thing I remember after witnessing this spectacle of woe was the severe blows I was receiving from the hands of the savages, though at that time I was unconscious of the injuries I was sustaining. After a severe castigation, they assisted me in getting up, and supported me when up.

"Here I cannot help contemplating the peculiar interposition of Divine Providence in my behalf. How easily might they have murdered me. What a wonder their cruelty did not lead them to effect it. But instead of this, the scalp of my little boy was hid from my view, and in order to bring me to my senses again, they took me back to the river and led me in, knee-deep. This had the intended effect. But 'the tender mercies of the wicked are cruel.'

"We now proceeded on our journey by crossing the island, and coming to a shallow place where we could wade out, and so arrive to the Indian side of the country. Here they pushed me into the river before them, and had to conduct me through it. The water was up to my breast but I suspended my child above the water, and, through the assistance of the savages, got safely out.

"From thence we rapidly proceeded forward, and came to Big Buffalo. Here the stream was very rapid and the Indians had again to assist me. When we had crossed this creek, we made a straight line to the Connoquenessing Creek, the very place where Butler now stands, and from thence we traveled five or six miles to Little Buffalo, and crossed it at the very place where Mr. B. Sarver's mill now (1836) stands, and ascended the hill."

[The foregoing paragraph is quite obscure and misleading. The Indians, of course, did not go to "the very place where Butler now stands" and then retrace their way to Little Buffalo. They crossed Little Buffalo on the way to the Connoquenessing at the place where Sarver's mill stood in later years, and where now is Sarversville. They undoubtedly crossed the Connoquenessing where the Cunninghams afterward built their mill, and where now stands the George Walter mill in Butler borough, at the foot of Washington Street. At this place the rocks originally projected far over the water, and the narrow chasm could be easily spanned by a log. The crossing was a favorite one with the Indians, and the rocks on either side of the creek bore hieroglyphic inscriptions. These rocks were recently destroyed in grading for the tracks of the Bessemer Railroad.]

The journal continues: "I now felt weary of my life, and had a full determination to make the savages kill me, thinking that death would be exceedingly welcome when compared with the fatigue, cruelties and miseries I had the prospects of enduring. To have my purpose effected, I stood still, one of the savages before me, and the other walking on behind me, and I took from off my shoulder a large powder-horn they made me carry, in addition to my child, who was one year and four days old. I threw the horn on the ground, closed my eyes and expected every moment to feel the deadly tomahawk. But, to my surprise, the Indians took it up, cursed me bitterly and put it on my shoulders again. I took it off the second time and threw it on the ground, and again closed my eyes with the assurance that I should meet death; but, instead of this, one of the savages again took up the horn, and with an indignant, frightful countenance, came and placed it on again. I took it off a third time, and was determined to effect it, and therefore threw it as far as I was able to over the rocks. The savages immediately went after it, while the one who had claimed me as his squaw, and who had stood and witnessed the transaction, came up to me and said, 'Well done, that I did right and was a good squaw, and that the other was a lazy ———, he might carry it himself.' I cannot now sufficiently admire the indulgent care of a gracious God, that, at this moment, preserved me amid so many temptations from the tomahawk and the scalping-knife.

"The savages now changed their position, and the one who claimed me as his squaw went behind. This movement, I believe, was to prevent the other from doing me an injury; and we went on until we struck the Connoquenessing at the salt lick about two miles above Butler, where was an Indian camp, where we arrived a little before dark."

[This camp was in the ravine which opens into the valley near the Kearns farm. The distance from Butler is considerably less than two miles.]

"The camp was made of stakes driven into the ground, sloping, and covered with chestnut bark, and appeared sufficiently long for fifty men. The camp appeared to have been occupied for some time. It was very much beaten, and large beaten paths went out of it in various directions.

"That night, they took me from the camp about three hundred yards, where they cut the brush in a thicket and placed a blanket on the ground, and permitted me to sit down with my child. Then they pinioned my arms back, only with a little liberty, so that it was with difficulty I managed my child. Here in this dreary situation, without fire or refreshment, having an infant to take care of, and my arms bound behind me, and having a savage on each side of me who had killed two of my dear children that day, I had to pass the first night of my captivity.

"The trials and dangers of the day I had passed had so completely exhausted nature, that, notwithstanding my unpleasant situation and my determination to escape if possible, I insensibly fell asleep, and repeatedly dreamed of my escape and safe arrival in Pittsburg, and several things relating to the town, of which I knew nothing at the time, but found to be true when I got there. The first night passed away, and I found no means of escape, for the savages kept watch the whole of the night, without any sleep.

"In the morning, one of them left us to watch the trail or path we had come, to see if any white people were pursuing us. During the absence of the Indian, who was the one that claimed me, the one who remained with me, and who was the murderer of my last boy, took from his bosom his scalp and prepared a hoop, and stretched the scalp on it. * * * I meditated revenge! While he was in the very act, I attempted to take his tomahawk, which hung by his side and rested on the ground, and had nearly succeeded, and was, as I thought, about to give the fatal blow, when, alas! I was detected."

The Indian who went upon the lookout in the morning became Massy Harbison's guard in the afternoon, asked her many questions concerning the whites and the strength of the armies they proposed sending out, and boasted largely about the Indians' achievements the preceding fall at the defeat of St. Clair. He gave the woman a small piece of dry venison, but, owing to the blows she had received about the face and jaws, she was unable to eat, and broke it into pieces for her child. On the second night (May 23), she was removed to another station in the same small valley or ravine, and there guarded as she had been the night before. When the day broke, one of the Indians went away, as upon the preceding morning, to watch the trail, and the other fell asleep.

Then Massy Harbison concluded it was time to escape. She thought of the vengeance, but found it was impossible to injure the sleeping savage, for she could effect nothing without putting her child down and she feared that if she did it would cry and defeat her design of flight.

She contented herself with taking from a pillow-case of plunder the Indians had stolen from her house a short gown, handkerchief, and child's frock, and so made her escape. The sun was about half an hour high. She at first, to deceive the Indians, took a course leading in an opposite direction from her home, and then went over a hill and came to the Connoque-nessing about two miles from the place where she had crossed it the day before with her captors, and went down the stream till about two o'clock in the afternoon, over rocks, precipices, thorns, briars, etc., suffering great pain, as her feet and legs were bare, but fleeing on unmindful of it, to put as great a distance between herself and the savage enemy as was possible. She discovered, by the sun and the running of the stream, that she was going from, instead of toward home, and changed her course. She ascended a hill and sat there until the evening star made its appearance, when she discovered the way she should travel the next morning, and having collected some leaves, she made a bed, lay down and slept, although her feet, being full of thorns, caused her much pain. She had no food for herself or child. At daybreak, she resumed her travel toward the Allegheny River. Nothing very material occurred during the day.

"In the evening" (we again quote from Massy Harbison's narrative), "about the going down of the sun, a moderate rain came on, and I began preparing for my bed, by collecting some leaves together, as I had done the night before, but could not collect a sufficient quantity without setting my little boy on the ground; but as soon as I had put him out of my arms he began to cry. Fearful of the consequences of his noise in this situation, I took him in my arms and put him on my breast immediately, and he became quiet. I then stood and listened, and distinctly heard the footsteps of a man coming after me, in the same direction I had come! The ground over which I had been traveling was good and the mold light. I had, therefore, left my footmarks, and thus exposed myself to a second captivity. Alarmed at my perilous situation, I looked around for a place of safety, and, providentially, saw a large tree, which had fallen, into the tops of which I crept, with my child in my arms, and there I hid myself securely under the limbs. The darkness of the night greatly assisted me, and prevented me from detection.

"The footsteps I heard were those of a savage. He heard the cry of the child, and came to the very spot where child cried, and there he halted, put down his gun, and was at this time so near that I heard the wiping-stick strike against the gun distinctly.

All was still and quiet; the savage was listening, if, by possibility, he might again hear the cry he had heard before. My own heart was the only thing I feared, and that beat so loud that I was apprehensive it would betray me. It is almost impossible to conceive or to believe the wonderful effect my situation produced upon my whole system.

"After the savage had stood and listened, with nearly the stillness of death, for two hours, the sound of a bell, and a cry like that of a night owl—signals which were given to him from his savage companions—induced him to answer, and, after he had given a most horrid yell, which was calculated to harrow up my soul, he started and went off to join them."

After the retreat of the Indian, Mrs. Harbison concluded that it was unsafe to remain where she was until morning, lest a second and more thorough search should be made, which would result in her recapture, with difficulty arose and traveled on a mile or two. Then, sinking down at the foot of a great tree, she rested until daybreak. The night was cold, and rain fell.

On the morning of the fifth day of her suffering and strange experience, Massy Harbison, wet and exhausted, hungry and wretched, started again on her way toward the Allegheny. About the middle of the forenoon, she came to the waters of Pine Creek, which falls into the Allegheny about four miles above Pittsburg. She knew not at the time what stream it was she had reached, but crossed it and followed a path along its bank. Presently she was alarmed at seeing moecassin tracks, made by men traveling in the same direction she was. After she had walked about three miles, she came to a fire burning on the bank of the stream, where the men whose tracks she had seen had eaten their breakfast. She was in doubt whether the men were white or Indians, and determined to leave the path. She ascended a hill, crossed a ridge toward Squaw Run, and came upon a trail. While she stood meditating whether to follow the path or seek her way through the underbrush, she saw three deer coming toward her at full speed. They turned to look at their pursuers. She looked, too, and saw the flash of a gun. She saw some dogs start after the deer, and, thinking that the chase would lead by the place where she stood, fled, and concealed herself behind a log. She had scarcely crouched in her hiding-place before she found that, almost within reach of her outstretched hand, was a nest of rattlesnakes. She was compelled to leave, and did so, fearing that she would be apprehended by the hunters, whom she supposed were Indians.

The woman now changed her course, and, bearing to the left, came to Squaw Run, which she followed the remainder of the day. During the day it rained, and so cold and shivering was the fugitive, that, in spite of her struggles to remain silent, an occasional groan escaped her. She sufferred also intensely from hunger. Her jaws had so far recovered from the blows of the Indians that she was able to eat food, if she could have procured it. She picked grape-vines and obtained a little substance from them.

In the evening, she came within a mile of the Allegheny, but was ignorant of it. There, under a tree, in a tremendous rain-storm, from which she sheltered her babe as well as she could, she remained all night.

Upon the morning of the fifth day (Sunday, May 27), she found herself unable, for a considerable time, to arise from the ground, and when, after a long struggle, she regained her feet, nature was so nearly exhausted, and her spirits so completely depressed, that she made very slow progress. After going a short distance, she came to a path, which, as it had been traveled by cattle, she imagined would lead her to the abode of white people, but she came to an uninhabited cabin. Here she was filled with a feeling of despair, and concluded that she would enter the cabin and lie down and die; but the thought of what then would be the fate of her babe spurred her courage. She heard the sound of a cow-bell, which imparted a gleam of hope. Pushing on with all of the strength she could command in the direction from which the sound came, she arrived at the bank of the Allegheny, opposite the blockhouse, at Six Mile Island, and was safe. Three men appeared on the opposite bank, and, after some delay, caused by the suspicion that she was sent there as a decoy from the Indians, one of them, James Crozier, came over in a canoe and took her to the south side of the river. Crozier had been one of the nearest neighbors of Massy Harbison before she was captured by the Indians, but so greatly was she altered by the horrors she had witnessed, the cruelty practiced upon her, and by exposure, fatigue and starvation, that he did not know her.

When she landed on the inhabited side of the river and found herself secure, the brave woman, who had endured so much, gave way under the terrible strain, and was carried to the fort by the people, who came running from it to see her. During the terrible six days, in which she had seen two of her children murdered, had herself been severely beaten by the inhuman savages, and had suffered the keenest anguish and despair, she had not shed a tear; but now that danger was removed, the tears flowed freely "and imparted a happiness," reads her narrative, "beyond what I have ever experienced before, or expect to experience in this world."

After careful treatment Massy Harbison recovered her health and senses. Two of the women in the fort, Sarah Carter and Mary A. Crozier, drew the thorns from her feet and Mr. Felix Negley, who had the curiosity to count them, found that one hundred and fifty had been removed. Afterward more were taken out at Pittsburg. At the request of the magistrates of Pittsburg, Mrs. Harbison made a deposition detailing the atrocities committed by her captors, which was soon afterward published in all the leading newspapers throughout the country. The truthfulness of Massy Harbison's story was attested to by Robert Scott, an early pioneer of Butler who was on the Allegheny River from 1790 to 1800. Subsequently "A Narrative of the Sufferings of Massy Harbison from Indian Barbarity," communicated by herself, was edited and published in 1825 by John Winter. This publication run through four editions up to 1836, and the narrative has been incorporated in Brackenridge's "Recollections of the West" and other histories of Western Pennsylvania.

Mrs. Harbison met her husband in Pittsburg and shortly after went with him to Coe Station in Westmoreland County. After the lands northwest of the Allegheny were opened for settlement they removed to Buffalo Township, Butler County, where John Harbison carried on a mill for a number of years. The descendants of Massy Harbison still reside in Buffalo and Clinton Townships, some of them only a few miles distant from the place where she was captured and her children murdered on the 22d of May, 1792. The location of the old Massy Harbison farm in Buffalo Township has been known in later years as the Weaver farm. The children of John and Massy Harbison were John, James, Betsy, Peggy, William, Mattie, Thomas, Nelly Jane, Benjamin, and Sina. Two were killed by the Indians, and John was the child she carried in her arms at the time of her escape from the captivity of the savages. He grew to manhood, went west, and died at the age of eighty-eight.

GEN. RICHARD BUTLER

The hunters who were after the deer seen by the woman on the fifth day of her adventure were James Anderson and John Thompson belonging to the detail known as spies. Had her thoughts not been deferred by the rattlesnakes she would have discovered them to be friends and escaped a day which felt like eternity.

GEN. RICHARD BUTLER.

The following sketch of the life of Gen. Richard Butler was written in 1893 by Dr. Egai, State Librarian of Harrisburg, who was the ablest historian of his day in Pennsylvania. It has been published in previous histories of the county, but its value is inestimable and it is worthy of preservation.

“Richard Butler, the eldest child of Thomas and Eleanor Butler, emigrants from the North of Ireland, was probably born in what is now York County, Pennsylvania, April 1, 1743, although most biographers state he was born in Ireland. He was educated at the school of Rev. Mr. Allison, Chester County, and studied the profession of law. He served as an ensign in Capt. James Hendrick’s Company, of the First Pennsylvania Battalion, in Col. Henry Bouquet’s expedition of 1764, and there received his first experience in the military art. At the outset of the Revolutionary struggle he entered the Pennsylvania Line as major of the Eighth Regiment, commissioned July 20, 1776; was promoted lieutenant-colonel March 12, 1777, ranking from August 28, 1776, and transferred to lieutenant-colonel of Morgan’s rifle command, June 9, 1777, whom he afterward succeeded, and distinguished himself on many occasions. This regiment was made up of picked men detached from the several regiments of the Pennsylvania, Maryland and Virginia Line. He was considered by Washington and General Wayne one of the ablest partisan officers of the Revolution and most familiar with Indian life and affairs. It is said that he knew several Indian dialects, and had been requested by the commander-in-chief to compile an Indian vocabulary.

“When General Burgoyne advanced against General Gates, Washington sent Butler’s Rifles from the banks of the Delaware to protect the flank and rear of Gates from the Indians under Brant; and after participating most efficiently and successfully in the battle of Saratoga, October, 1777, were ordered back to Washington’s headquarters. The same regiment distinguished itself at the battle of Monmouth, June, 1778, and when Washington, in a dispatch to Congress, unadverted on the conduct of Gen. Charles Lee on that occasion, he also stated that ‘Colonel Butler’s was the only command which fired a gun.’ He was promoted colonel of the Ninth Pennsylvania, and under his command this regiment took a prominent and honorable share in the capture of Stony Point; and St. Clair to Reed, in a letter dated July 25, 1779, says: ‘My friend, Colonel Butler, commanded one of the attacks and distinguished himself.’

“After the revolt in the Pennsylvania Line, the Ninth Regiment generally reën-

listed under their old colonel and his captains in the Fifth Pennsylvania, who commanded it during the campaign under General Wayne in the south. Of his career in that department we have extant a characteristic letter to Gen. William Irvine, published in the first volume of 'Pennsylvania in the War of the Revolution.' Gen. Henry Lee, in his 'Memoirs of the War in the Southern Department of the United States,' alludes to the incidents referred to in that letter as follows:

While in his camp before Williamsburg the British general learned that we had some boats and stores on the Chickahominy River. Hither he detached Lieutenant-colonel Simcoe, with his corps and the Yagers, to destroy them. This service was promptly performed; but the American general, having discovered from his exploring parties the march of Simcoe, detached on the 26th, Lieutenant-colonel Butler, of the Pennsylvania Line, the renowned second and rival of Morgan at Saratoga. The rifle corps, under Majors Call and Willis, and the cavalry, which did not in the whole exceed one hundred and twenty effectives, composed Butler's van. Major MacPherson of Pennsylvania led this corps, and having mounted some infantry behind the remnant of Armand's Dragoons, overtook Simcoe on his return near Spencer's plantation, six or seven miles above Williamsburg. The suddenness of MacPherson's attack threw the Yagers into confusion; but the Queen's Rangers quickly deployed, and advanced to the support of the Yagers.

Call and Willis had now got up to MacPherson's support with their riflemen, and the action became fierce. Lieutenant Lollar, at the head of a squadron of Simcoe's Hussars, fell on Armand's remnant and drove it out of line, making Lieutenant Breso and several privates prisoners. Following his blow, Lollar turned upon our riflemen, then pressing upon the Queen's Rangers; and at the same moment, Captain Ogilvie, of the Legion Cavalry, who had been sent that morning from camp with his troops for the collection of forage, accidentally appeared on our left flank. The rifle corps fell back in confusion upon Butler, drawn up in the rear with his Continentals. Satisfied with the repulse of the assailing troops, Lieutenant-colonel Simcoe began to retire; nor was he further pressed by Butler, as Cornwallis had moved with the main body, on hearing the first fire, to shield Simcoe.

"In October following, in view of Colonel Butler's valuable services prior to and at the capture of Yorktown, he was honorably designated to plant our flag upon the British works after the surrender of Cornwallis; and though Colonel Butler detailed for this purpose his ensign, Maj. Ebenezer Denny, being probably partial to him as coming from his own town, Carlisle, where the families were near neighbors, yet Baron Steuben, unexpectedly and offensively, appropriated this honor to himself, and Colonel Butler that night 'sent the arrogant foreigner a message, as everyone expected, and it took all the influence of Rochambeau and Washington to prevent a hostile meeting.' In this business, however, we have the following statement, according to which the baron's conduct was approved: When the commissioners were discussing and arranging the terms of surrender, Lafayette, whose turn it was next to command the trenches, marched with his division to relieve the baron. The latter refused to be relieved, urging that having received the flag, the rules of European warfare secured him the right to retain the command until the surrender of the place. Lafayette appealed to Washington who, after consulting Count Rochambeau, and other foreign officers, informed him that the baron was entitled to the command, and must retain it until the matter under discussion should be decided.

"On a plan of Carlisle, made in 1764, the Butler home is then and there indicated as being on lot 61, West Main Street. We have some letters written by him, and afterwards by his widow, as well as letters which we carefully copied from the originals now among the archives of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, written by him to a friend, Gen. William Irvine, then commissioner of public accounts in New York, and they indicate Carlisle as his home. These letters, which are dated at Carlisle, besides some written by him thither when absent in the field of military service, extend from September, 1782, to July, 1789. In September, 1789, his letters begin to be dated at Pittsburg, and the last one we have, posted from Pittsburg, is in August, 1790. It was the next year that he was killed in battle. We are thus particular, as these facts are not generally known, and in order to establish the claims of Carlisle to him as being a resident and citizen of the place the greater part of his life.

"After the close of the Revolutionary War, and when residing in Carlisle, the public service repeatedly called his attention and presence elsewhere, especially to Fort Pitt, on business relating to the Indians, with whom he was well acquainted, and a very trusted commissioner of the Government among them, and hence he was generally and favorably known in that place. As an evidence of this statement, we will here mention what might now be regarded as a small matter, but, in the olden time, it was intended as a marked compliment and tribute to a great and popular man. Brackenridge, in his 'Recollections,' speaking of taverns and tavern-keepers of Pittsburg, says: 'When I can first remember, the sign of General Butler kept by Patrick Murphy, was the head tavern, and the first hotel in the town, just as the painted portrait of Washington or Lafayette or Jackson, or Perry, was often hoisted at the front of a public house to dignify and distinguish it, and to attract patronage. Throughout these many years a street in Pittsburg bears his name. Many a partial parent called a son after him. General O'Hara, of Pittsburg, gave the name of Richard Butler to one of his sons, with whom we were intimately acquainted, whose family we often visited at Guyasutha Place, and where still resides his only living daughter, Mrs. William M. Darlington. Butler County, as well as the town of Butler, was named in honor of the general, and the same honorable name has been conferred on counties, and towns, and townships in other sections of the Union.'

"But what had been his character and public services? We answer briefly: He was a brave and intrepid soldier, quick to perceive duty and as quick to perform it, and he possessed in a high degree the attachment of his men and the confidence of Washington.

"Colonel Butler was at Fort McIntosh, now Beaver, on the 29th of September, 1785, as his will, to which we shall presently refer, was dated at that place. 'The will,' writes Judge M. C. Herman, of Carlisle, to whom we are indebted for some of the facts here given, 'appears to have been written hurriedly, and on the eve of some dangerous expedition, for he says':

Being in perfect health and senses think it my duty (as I am going far from my family, and into some degree of danger more than generally attend at my happy and peaceful home), to make such arrangement of my worldly affairs as I wish and desire may take place in case of my death, which I hope for the sake of my family, the Great and Almighty God will avert.

"Upon the return from this expedition, Colonel Butler remained at Pittsburg, and owning considerable property in that neighborhood, he was quite prominent in securing the formation of the new county of Allegheny. The Supreme Executive Council of Pennsylvania, appointed him, September 30, 1788, lieutenant for that county, and on the 2nd of October following, the General Assembly appointed him commissioner, with Col. John Gibson, to purchase from the Indians their claim to the triangle on Lake Erie. In November, 1788, in connection with his brother, William Butler, James Robinson and Daniel Elliott, made purchase of the reserved lots opposite the town of Pittsburg. He was commissioned one of the judges of the Court of Common Pleas of Allegheny County, November 21, 1788, which he resigned in December, 1790, having been elected to the Assembly from the district composed of Allegheny and Westmoreland Counties.

"Upon the expiration of his term of service in the Assembly, Colonel Butler returned to Pittsburg. The failure of Gen. Josiah Harmer's expedition against the western Indians occurred in the autumn of 1790. Gen. Arthur St. Clair was then appointed commander-in-chief of the United States army. Colonel Butler was appointed major-general, and second in command, and fell, when that army was defeated on the Miami, in the bloody battle fought against the allied Indians under Brant, on the 4th of November, 1791. The expedition had originally numbered about 2,000 men; on the day of action it had been reduced to about 1,400, and of this force 913 were killed, wounded and missing. A battalion of artillery was almost entirely destroyed. St. Clair was a great civilian and brave soldier, but, like the unfortunate Braddock, probably did not sufficiently understand and appreciate Indian warfare, or his army may not have been properly trained and disciplined to meet such a foe; and many believed that if Butler had had the command, the result would have been different. Two of his brothers, Cols. Thomas and Edward Butler, were also in the disastrous battle in which the general had fallen, and the first was severely wounded. Maj. Ebenezer Denny, the aid-de-camp of General St. Clair (he had previously been the aid-de-camp to General Harmer, after whom he named his eldest son, and he named his youngest son after St. Clair), gives a detailed account of that battle in his military journal; and his son, Dr. William H. Denny, in his admirable memoir of his father, thus speaks of it:

After General Butler had received his first wound, he continued to walk in front, close along the line, with his coat off and his arm in a sling, encouraging the men, and retired only after receiving a second wound in the side. The commander-in-chief sent Major Denny, with his compliments, to inquire how he was. He found him in the middle of the camp, in a sitting posture, supported by knap-sacks; the rifle balls of the Indians, who now surrounded closely the whole camp, concentrated upon that point. One of the wounded general's servants and two horses were shot here. He seemed, however, to have no anxiety, and to the inquiry of the aid-de-camp, he answered that he felt well. Whilst making this reply, a young cadet from Virginia, who stood by his side, was hit on the cap of the knee by a spent ball, and cried so loudly with the pain and the alarm, that General Butler actually shook his wounded side with laughter. This satisfied Major Denny that the second wound was not mortal, that the General being very fleshy, the ball might not have penetrated a vital part. He always believed that he might have been brought away and his life saved. Probably his own aid-de-camp, Maj. John Morgan, may have offered to bring him off, as was his duty, and the wounded General declined, conscious that his weight and helplessness would only encumber his brave young friend for no use, and hinder him from saving himself.

“About the time to which reference is here made, it is reliably stated that the youngest brother, Capt. Edward Butler, removed the general from the field and placed him near the road by which he knew the army must retreat, and on returning to the field found his other brother, Maj. Thomas Butler, shot through both legs. He then removed him to the side of the general, who, learning that the army was in retreat, insisted on being left alone, as he was mortally wounded, and that he should endeavor to save their wounded brother. He consequently placed Thomas on an artillery horse captured from a retreating soldier, and taking a sad leave of their gallant and noble brother, ‘they left him in his glory.’ A letter from Edward Butler to his Brother Pierce, of Kentucky, dated Fort Washington, now Cincinnati, November 11, 1791, says:

Yesterday I arrived here with our worthy brother, Major Thomas Butler, who is illy wounded, he having one leg broken and shot through the other. I hope, however, he will do well. He has borne the hard fortune of that day with the soldierly fortitude you might have expected from so brave a man. We left the worthiest of brothers, Gen. Richard Butler, in the hands of the savages, but so nearly dead that, I hope, he was not sensible of any cruelty they might willingly wreak upon him.

“We do not know just when he died or how he died. All we know of his end is, that, out of regard for the welfare of others, and with a heroic and self-sacrificing spirit, he desired to be left behind. His desire was granted, sadly and reluctantly, and we, too, can only hope that he was not conscious of any savage indignity. In the autumn of 1793, General Wayne, who had succeeded General St. Clair, in his expedition against the allied Indians, obtained possession of the ground on which the Americans had been defeated in 1791.

which he fortified and named Fort Recovery. Here he carefully collected, and with the honors of war, interred the bones of the slain of the 4th of November, 1791.

“Sixty years after the death of General Butler, his nephew, Col. E. G. W. Butler, son of Col. Edward Butler, received his Uncle Richard’s sword, a ‘Toledo,’ from Gen. W. L. Gaither, of Maryland, who said it had been presented to his ancestor, Major Gaither, by General Butler, after his brothers had left him, and handed down through two generations with the injunction of the former, ‘never to wipe from the blade the blood of Butler.’ It was given to Colonel Butler because of the efforts of his father to save the life of its gallant owner, and by its side rests the sword of his wounded brother, Thomas, given to Colonel Butler by his eldest son, because the father of the former saved his father’s life. Both bear the motto, in French: ‘Draw me not without just cause’; and on the other side: ‘Sheath me not without honor.’

“Col. William D. Wilkins, son of the late venerable Judge Ross Wilkins, of Michigan, has the military journal of Gen. Richard Butler during the campaign of 1791, at the back of which are recorded the roster of officers for duty, and also General Butler’s mess account and memoranda of expenditures. The order of battle and march was being entered at the very moment of the attack by the enemy, and the change in the handwriting, from a very fair caligraphy to the nervous, blotted writing of an agitated and excited man, is quite significant.

“Then follows a hiatus of several days and the series of orders recommences at Fort Washington, now Cincinnati, to which the army fell back after its defeat, with a melancholy list of the killed and wounded, in which Butler’s command (embracing the first and second Pennsylvania levies and battalion of Kentucky militia) suffered fearfully. The book is a very curious picture and record of the ancient military life, discipline and manners of the DeKalb and Steuben period, and shows General Butler to have been a skillful, judicious and accomplished officer, well versed in his profession, thoughtful of the welfare of his men, and solicitous for the honor of his country.

“Gen. Richard Butler’s will,” as stated, was dated September 29, 1785, and is recorded at Carlisle. In it he mentions his wife Mary, and children, William and Mary, the rearing and educating of whom is entrusted to his wife. His estate consisted of a ‘house and lot in Carlisle,’ ‘furniture, plate, etc.,’ tract of land ‘warranted in the name of John Beard, situate on Plumb Creek, Westmoreland County, adjoining land of the late Col. George Croghan’; tract of land in Allegheny County; lots in Pittsburg, adjoining lots of William Butler; one thousand acres of land, being a donation of the State of Pennsylvania, and six hundred acres of land, a donation of the United States in Congress—‘these donations are for my services as colonel in the Army of the United States,’ and other property, including ‘horses, cows and farming utensils at and near Carlisle.’ The executors named in his will are his wife Mary, his brother William, his ‘respected friend Thomas Smith, Esq., attorney-at-law, Carlisle, and my friend John Montgomery, Esq.’”

CHAPTER III

LAND TITLES

Naming of Pennsylvania—Extinguishment of the Indian Title—The Erie Triangle—Boundary Line Disputes—Ferguson's Wanton Act—The Depreciation Lands—The Donation Lands—Drawn by Lottery—The "Struck" District—The Settlement Law of 1792—Robert Morris—Agrarian Troubles—The Shooting of Maxwell—The End of the Land Jobbers—The McKee and Varnum Case.

It is commonly supposed that Pennsylvania was so named by her founder in honor of himself. As a matter of fact, Penn wished to call his province New Wales, but King Charles II. objected. In view of the fact that the country was heavily timbered, Penn proposed the name Sylvania. The king agreed to this as a portion of the title, and to do honor to the distinguished admiral, the father of William Penn, he prefixed the word Penn to Sylvania, and named the province Pennsylvania. Admiral Penn at the time of his death had claims against the crown amounting to sixteen thousand pounds, or about eighty thousand dollars. It was in liquidation of these claims that the title to all of the lands in the charter limits of Pennsylvania was vested in William Penn. The charter conveying the magnificent province dated March 4, 1681, is the foundation of all land titles in the State. The province contained about thirty-five million, three hundred and sixty-one thousand, six hundred acres. The final adjustment of the charter boundaries with Virginia, Maryland and New York did not take place for many years after the grant of the charter. Penn died in 1718, and by his will, made in 1712, he devised his lands, rents, etc., in trust to his wife, Hannah, to dispose of so much as was necessary to pay his debts, and then to convey forty thousand acres to William Penn, Jr., his son by a former wife, and the rest of his vast estate to his children by his second wife. The title was vested in them until 1778, when it was assumed by the State or colony.

EXTINGUISHMENT OF INDIAN TITLE.

The first Indian purchase after the charter was made by William Markham, a relative of the proprietor, in July, 1682, and secured the right to a small territory about the size of Bucks County. In 1683, 1684, and 1685 deeds were executed for small parcels of land west of the Schuylkill and on the Susquehanna.

In 1686 the deed for the much disputed "walking purchase," of which one of the boundaries was "as far as a man can go in one day and a half," is said to have been obtained. Other lands were purchased from the Indians in 1696, and in subsequent years, but the lands freed from their claim were of comparatively small extent prior to 1718. The most important relinquishment of Indian titles were made by deeds and treaties executed in 1736, 1749, 1754, 1768, and 1784. It is with the last of these treaties that the reader of the history of Butler County is most concerned. The Indian title to the land north-west of the Allegheny River was extinguished by the treaty of Fort Stanwix in 1784. Since the year 1768, when the first treaty of Fort Stanwix was made, the northwestern boundary of the Indian purchases in the State ran from the Susquehanna on the New York line to Towanda Creek, thence to the head of Pine Creek in Lycoming County, and down the Allegheny and the Ohio to the west lines of the State. The purchase of 1784 included all of the lands in the State except a triangle in Erie County, embracing the present counties of Butler, Clarion, Jefferson, Elk, Cameron, Potter, Kane, Warren, Forrest, Venango, Crawford, Mercer, and Lawrence, and parts of the counties of Beaver, Erie, Allegheny, Armstrong, Indiana, Clearfield, Clinton, Lycoming, Tioga and Bradford.

Distinguished men represented the United States at the treaty of Fort Stanwix, among whom are Gen. Richard Butler, Oliver Wolcott, and Arthur Lee. General Lafayette was also present. The Indian tribes represented were the Mohawks, Onondagas, Senecas, Cayugas, Tuscaroras, and the Cornplanter band of Senecas. Among the chieftains present were Cornplanter and Red Jacket. The latter was opposed to peace and made a war speech, which Lafayette said was a masterpiece. Cornplanter saw the folly of waging a war single-handed, and exerted all of his powers for peace. After a long conference, the treaty was signed on the 22d of October.

THE ERIE TRIANGLE.

What is known as the triangle of the northern part of Erie County was not within the charter boundaries of the province. This tract containing an area of 202,187 acres was by the cessions of New York in 1781, by Massachusetts in 1785, and by Connecticut in 1786, left out of the jurisdiction of any particular State. While surveying the donation land of northwestern Pennsylvania, General Irvine discovered that the northern charter boundary of the State would strike Lake Erie so as to leave but a few miles of lake coast, and that without a harbor in the State. In consequence of his representations a movement was set on foot to secure from the Indians and the United States the cession of the triangle to Pennsylvania. This cession was secured in 1792.

BOUNDARY LINE DISPUTES.

The settlement of boundary lines between Pennsylvania and surrounding colonies was attended with much difficulty. Had the claim of Lord Baltimore of Maryland been conceded, the line would have been run twenty miles or more north of the present boundary, and Pennsylvania would have lost about three million acres of her most fertile land. Had Penn's claim been conceded, the consequences would have been still more serious to Maryland. She would have lost all of her territory north of Annapolis, including the site of Baltimore and several other towns, which includes about two-thirds of the area of the State. The existing boundary known as Mason and Dixon line was run in the years 1767 and 1768, and the agreement was ratified by the king in 1769.

The controversy between Virginia and Pennsylvania in regard to the ownership of territory assumed its most important aspect about the time the Maryland question was settled. The Pittsburg region appears to have first been the subject of controversy in 1752, when Thomas Penn wrote to the governor of the province desiring him to enter into any reasonable measures to assist the governor of Virginia to build a fort at the forks of the Ohio, and take some acknowledgment from him that this settlement should not be made use of to prejudice the rights of the proprietor of the country.

Governor Dinwiddie, of Virginia, on the 19th of February, 1754, announced his intentions of building a fort on the Ohio to oppose the encroachments of the French and offered the men who were to be engaged in the work over and above their pay two hundred thousand acres of land, one hundred thousand acres of which should be contiguous to the fort, and the other one hundred thousand on or near the river. This proclamation was transmitted to Governor Hamilton, of Pennsylvania, and the latter replied that, having inquired into the extent of the province westwardly, he had the greatest reasons to believe that the lands intended to be granted were within the limits of the province of Pennsylvania. Governor Dinwiddie was equally firm in his belief that the land and fort were within the jurisdiction of Virginia, and thus it came about that the region around Pittsburg became the bone of double contention. England and France went to war about it, and Virginia and Pennsylvania began a controversy which endured for more than twenty years, in the course of which much ill blood and angry feeling were displayed. The matter was not finally settled until 1782, when the present line between Pennsylvania and West Virginia was agreed upon, which is an extension of Mason and Dixon's line. The line was not completed and permanently marked until 1784.

The new purchase of 1784 was confirmed by the Wyandotte and Delaware Indians January 21, 1885, and soon after settlers began to flock into the territory from the west branch of the Susquehanna. It was not until 1795 that the early pioneers crossed the Allegheny River and penetrated the vast wildernesses of Butler County and the territory lying north to Lake Erie.

The record of the treaties made with the Indians after the famous "walking purchase," reflects no great amount of credits on the white invaders of the country. The new comers from the north of Ireland had no thought for the original occupiers of the land, and, as proved by their determined opposition to Penn's surveyors and rent collectors in the Gettysburg country, did not even respect the claims of the proprietors of the province where such claims interfered with their own interest. Strong and warlike and without mercy in war, they marched forward to occupy the land and began the commencement of the end at the neighboring town of Kittanning on the Allegheny River. Then followed treaties which were broken with impunity by the whites whenever it was to their interest to do so, while the Indians were held to a strict compliance with them. The first treaty of Fort Stanwix in 1768 was an affair of this kind. The colony or proprietary then got a show of title eastward to the Allegheny south of Kittanning. In 1878 the title became vested in the State of Pennsylvania, and from that period to 1794 the war was between her citizens and the Indians.

As the years passed by, the Indians realized the plans of the invaders, and determined to hold in check the advance of the white race. They expressed themselves plainly, but the aggressive people of trade and commerce disregarded the warning, and pushing forward their advantages, brought on the Indian wars that terrorized the western section of the State for half a century. The first organized attack made by the English-speaking colonists in the vicinity of Butler County was that on the Delaware Indian town at Kittanning. This attack was made by three hundred and seven soldiers under Lieutenant-Colonel Armstrong in September, 1756. The Indian town was burned and with it many Indian women and children.

The colonists lost seventeen killed, thirteen wounded, and nineteen missing. A number of whites held captives by the Indians were released.

FERGUSON'S WANTON ACT.

In 1796 while John Gibson and William Ferguson were en route to Butler County they discovered a canoe full of Indians on the river near Brady's Bend. More than one of Ferguson's relations had been murdered by the savages, and as a consequence, he bore no love for the redskins. Here was an opportunity for revenge, and availing himself of it, he fired on the party and killed one of the savages. He then fled toward Butler County and made his escape. The following year John Alexander and Hugh Gibson settled permanently on land selected in the limits of the county the previous year. Soon after their arrival, two giant Indians presented themselves at the cabin door. Hugh Gibson, a boy of fifteen, was alone at the cabin and was very much scared, but the Indians merely asked for something to eat and when their hunger was satisfied with some cucumbers and cake furnished by young Gibson they passed on.

As late as 1818 the Cornplanter Indians visited Butler County for their annual hunt during the winter season. As the animals would fall, the wild hunters would dress them carefully and then hang the carcass high up in the branches of a tree beyond the reach of wolves, and in places where bears would not venture. In later years straggling Indians from the Seneca reservation visited the county, but after the murder of the Wigton family in 1842 by Mohawk, the representatives of the Indian tribes avoided Butler County.

THE DEPRECIATION LANDS.

Before the title to the region northwest of the Ohio and Allegheny Rivers and Conewango Creek had been secured, the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania was taking steps for disposing of these lands.

During the later years of the Revolution the value of the bills of credit issued by Pennsylvania, as well as those issued by Congress, gradually depreciated until they fell to a mere nominal value. Consequently great losses were experienced by the holders of the State certificates. The officers and soldiers of the Pennsylvania line and the State troops especially suffered, as they received the certificates in payment for their services. Disputes constantly arose in relation to the deductions to be made from the face of the certificates. To remedy this inconvenience, the State legislature on the 3rd of April, 1781, passed an act fixing a scale of depreciation varying from 1½ to 75 per cent. for each month between the years 1777 and 1781. According to which the accounts of the army could be settled. Unable otherwise to pay its troops, the State gave the officers and soldiers certificates in conformity with the prescribed scale, which were made receivable in payment for lands sold by the State. These were called "Depreciation Certificates," and the lands thus purchased were called the "Depreciation Lands."

In order to provide for the redemption of these Depreciation Certificates, an act was passed on the 12th of March, 1783, which described the boundaries of the Depreciation Lands. The boundary began at a point where the western line of the State crosses the Ohio River; thence up the said river to Fort Pitt; thence up the Allegheny River to the mouth of Mahoning Creek; thence by a west line to the western boundary of the State; thence south by said boundary to the place of beginning, "reserving to the use of the State 3,000 acres in an oblong not less than one mile in depth, from the Allegheny and Ohio Rivers and up and down the said rivers from Fort Pitt as far as may be necessary to include the same; and a further quantity of 3,000 acres on the Ohio River on both sides of Beaver Creek, in cluding Fort McIntosh." The surveyor general of the State was instructed to cause the aforesaid tract of land to be laid out in lots of not less than two hundred, nor more than three hundred and fifty acres each, numbering the same lots numerically on the draft or plat of the country aforesaid, and "shall as soon as the same, or one hundred lots thereof, are surveyed, together with the secretary of the land office and receiver general, proceed to sell the same lots under such regulations as shall be appointed by the Supreme Executive Council. The full consideration bid at such sales shall be paid into the receiver general's office either in gold or silver, or in the certificates aforesaid, upon full payment of which consideration and the expense of surveying, together with all fees of the different offices, patents shall be issued in the usual form to the several buyers or vendors and the different sums in specie that may be paid into the receiver general's office, shall be by him paid over to the treasury of this State for the purpose of redeeming such certificates as may remain unsatisfied at the end of such sales."

The northern boundary line of the Depreciation Lands passed east and west almost centrally through Butler County, through the center of Donegal, Oakland, Center, Franklin, and Muddy Creek Townships, passing close to the village of North Oakland, Holyoke Church, and south of the village of Portersville. It was about four miles north of the borough of Butler. The southern half of the townships above mentioned and all of the townships in the southern part of the county including Butler Borough were included in these lands.

The Depreciation Lands were divided into districts which were assigned to a deputy surveyor and the dividing lines ran southward from the northern boundary line to the Allegheny or Ohio River, as the case might be, and were parallel. The districts were named after the surveyors, and are numbered from east to west beginning at the Allegheny River. The first district in Butler County is known as Elder's district, and extended about four miles west of the eastern boundary of the county. The territory comprised the eastern sections of Buffalo, Winfield, Clearfield, and Donegal Townships to the northern boundary. The second district was known as James Cunningham's, and was the largest district in the county. It extended from the western boundary of Elder's district ten miles west to a point about one-half mile from the western line of Middlesex, Peim, Butler, and Center Townships, and in addition to these townships included part of Oakland, all of Summit, Jefferson and Clinton, and parts of Donegal, Clearfield, Winfield and Buffalo. The area of this district within the limits of Butler County was approximately 150,000 acres, and within the limits of Allegheny County nearly as much more. West of the Cunningham district was Jones' district, which comprised part of Franklin Township, all of Connoquenessing, Forward and Adams Townships, including the villages of Mt. Chestnut, Prospect, Whitestown, Connoquenessing, and the town of Mars. The fourth district was Nicholson's, and the fifth district was Alexander's, the dividing line between the two being about four miles east of the western boundary of the county, and dividing the townships of Cranberry, Jackson, Lancaster, and Muddy Creek. Evans City is in Nicholson's district, and the towns of Harmony and Zelienople and the village of Middle Lancaster are in Alexander's district. Other districts were created in a similar manner extending to the western boundary of the State. As a rule the western districts were much smaller than those of Butler County.

THE DONATION LANDS.

By a legislative act passed March 7, 1780, the faith of the State was pledged to bestow upon the officers and privates of the Federal army belonging to the State, certain donations and quantities of land according to their several ranks, to be surveyed and divided off to them severally at the close of the war.

For the purpose of effectually complying with the intention of the act, the legislature on the 12th of March, 1783, ordained "that there be and there is hereby declared to be located and laid off a certain tract of country beginning at the mouth of Mahoning Creek; thence up the mouth of the Allegheny River to Conewango Creek; thence due north to the northern boundary of this State; thence west by the said boundary to the northwest corner of the State; thence south by the western boundary of the State to the northwest corner of the Depreciation Lands, and thence by the same lands east to the place of beginning, which said tract of land shall be reserved and set apart for the only and sole use of carrying into execution the said resolve."

The act provided that all officers and privates entitled to land as aforesaid, should make their respective claims for the same within two years after peace had been declared, and in the case of failure to make such application in person or in that of their legal representatives within one year after their decease, then it may be lawful for any person or persons to apply to the land office, locate and take up such parts or parcels of land upon such terms as the legislature shall direct.

The legislature passed an act on the 24th of March, 1785, providing that the Donation lands should be laid off in lots of four descriptions, one to contain five hundred acres each, another three hundred acres each, another two hundred and fifty acres each, and another two hundred acres each, with the usual allowances.

The allotment made for major-generals, brigadier-generals, colonels, captains, and two-thirds of the lieutenant-colonels, was five hundred acres each. Regimental surgeons, surgeons' mates, chaplains, majors, and ensigns, were allotted three hundred acres each. One-third of the lieutenant-colonels, sergeants, sergeant-majors, and quartermaster-sergeants were allotted two hundred and fifty acres each. Lieutenants, corporals, drummers, fifers, fife-majors, drum-majors and privates, were allotted two hundred acres each.

DRAWN BY LOTTERY.

A lottery was provided for the impartial distribution of these donations. Each applicant, if a major-general, should draw four tickets from the wheel containing the numbers on the five hundred acre lots; if a brigadier-general, three tickets; if a colonel, two tickets; if a lieutenant-colonel, one ticket from the wheel containing five hundred acre lots, and one from the wheel containing the numbers of the two hundred and fifty acre lots; if a surgeon, chaplain or major, two tickets from the wheel containing the numbers on the three hundred acre lots; if a captain, one ticket from the wheel containing the five hundred acre lots; if a lieutenant, two tickets from the wheel containing the two hundred acre lots; if an ensign, or surgeon's mate, one ticket from the wheel containing the three hundred acre lots; if a sergeant, sergeant-major, or quartermaster-sergeant, one ticket from the wheel containing the two hundred and fifty acre lots; and if a drummer, drum-major, fife-major, fifer, corporal or private, one ticket from the wheel containing the numbers of the two hundred acre lots.

The Donation Lands in this county lie in the northern and northwestern portion and are comprised of Districts No. 1 and No. 2. District No. 1 is composed of parts of Franklin, Clay, Brady, Muddy Creek and Worth Townships, and District No. 2 is composed of parts of Cherry, Clay, Washington, Brady, and Slippery Rock Townships.

THE "STRUCK DISTRICT."

Under the law of 1785, an agent was appointed whose duty it was to explore the Donation and Depreciation districts, examine the quality of the lands, and especially to report such as was in his opinion unfit for cultivation. This duty was attended to by General Irvine, who explored Butler County, and reported that a part of the second division of the Donation Lands was generally unfit for cultivation, and in consequence, the lots included in it were withdrawn from the lottery and from this circumstance it was known as the "Struck District."

A portion of the "Struck District" is in Butler County, and comprises the northeastern quarter, which in the last forty years has been the most valuable portion of the Butler, or lower oil region. A large proportion of the lands in Butler County thus reserved from the distribution of the soldiers, were originally as valuable as those in any part of the donation tract, and the oil development which came later made them the richest lands in the county. The "Struck District" comprised what is now Allegheny, Venango, Marion, Mercer, Parker, Fairview, Concord, and parts of Donegal, Oakland, Center, Clay, Washington, Cherry, and Slippery Rock Townships.

The lands in the "Struck District" were disposed of by warrant and patent the same as other lands of western Pennsylvania under the settlement law of 1792. These lands were sold by the State to the settlers from April 3, 1792, to the 28th of March, 1813, for $20 per one hundred acres.

THE SETTLEMENT LAW OF 1792.

The lands in the triangle in Erie County, the "Struck District," and the residue of the lands in the depreciation and donation districts, including the greater portion of them not taken up by the claims of the officers and the soldiers of the Revolutionary army, were offered for sale under the act of the 3rd of April, 1792, which is known as the Settlement Law of that year. The price of the vacant lands within the purchase of 1768, excepting such lands as had been previously settled on or improved, was reduced to the sum of fifty shillings for every one hundred acres, and the price of vacant lands within the purchase of 1784 and lying east of the Allegheny River and Conewango Creek, was reduced to the sum of five pounds for every hundred acres. All of the lands lying north and west of the Ohio and Allegheny Rivers, including Butler County, except those appropriated to public or charitable uses, was offered for sale at seven pounds, ten shillings, or twenty dollars, for every one hundred acres, with an allowance of six per cent. for roads and highways. This purchase act implied actual settlement of the land and improvements such as is now enforced in homesteading United States lands.

The Indian wars to which reference has been made in a previous chapter rendered it impossible for the pioneers who located warrants under the old acts, or bought lands under the act of 1792, to effect a settlement in this county prior to the proclamation of the treaty of Greenville negotiated by General Wayne in 1795, and as a consequence the homestead or improvement sections of that act were nullified by the circumstances of the case, and later by the acts of speculators, until 1805, when the United States Court, through Chief Justice Marshall, gave a judgment on the main question, the lesser points in the controversy being settled by legislative enactments.

Much controversy arose out of the act of 1792 between the actual settlers and the land speculators, or jobbers as they were called, in Butler County. The jobbers claimed that non-compliance with the provisions of the law requiring settlement to be made within two years after the passage of the act, forfeited the right of ownership. On the other hand the settlers contended that settlement was impossible prior to 1796, because of the Indian war, and that two years succeeding passification should be allowed for the making of actual settlements and improvements prescribed. There was great diversity of opinion upon the bench as to the meaning of the act, and the controversy was finally carried up to the United States Supreme Court.

ROBERT MORRIS.

Robert Morris, the Revolutionary patriot and Washington's secretary of the treasury, became a large owner of Butler County land, and many of the land owners of today hold title through this celebrated, but unfortunate, patriot. Morris was the holder of a large amount of the depreciated scrip redeemable in western Pennsylvania lands, and influenced by James Cunningham, one of the surveyors of the depreciated lands, and afterwards his agent, located a great number of warrants in the present limits of Butler County. This he was able to do by a process which, although undoubtedly contrary to the spirit of the law of 1792, was not in violation of any of its provisions. The warrants were made out in the year 1794 in the names of sundry citizens of Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, most of them Germans, and then assigned to Morris. The latter paid the moneys demanded, and eventually secured patents to most of the tracts of land, but they bore on the maps of the surveyors the names of the Lancaster County men, obligingly lent for the purpose of assisting the speculator. Morris located three hundred and eleven warrants in Cunningham's district, which had been issued to men who served in the Pennsylvania Line of the Continental army. The area covered by these warrants embraced about 90,000 acres of land in the northern part of the district including the site of the borough of Butler. This wholesale system of land purchase was carried on in other counties until loaded down with real estate, the patriot lost all, and from 1796 to 1802 was in a debtor's prison. He died May 8, 1806.

AGRARIAN TROUBLES.

Litigation concerning title to land was more common within the limits of the Cunningham district than elsewhere in Butler County. Robert Morris' effects were sold in 1807 at marshal's sale in Philadelphia, and the warrants for the Butler County lands went into the hands of Stephen Lowrey of Maryland and other speculators. Lowrey's purchase consisted of one hundred and seven warrants, which covered many tracts on which the pioneers had many permanent improvements, and the real troubles between the contending speculators and the holders of the land began. Many of the settlers who had no warrants for the land were summarily dispossessed of their squatter homes by the land jobbers, and others were compelled to make terms as best they could. The feeling against the speculators ran very high, and considering the character of the frontiersmen with whom they had to deal, it is surprising that war did not result from the controversy other than that which was carried on in the courts. As it was, much ill feeling was engendered and on one occasion at least blood was shed.

THE SHOOTING OF MAXWELL.

The agrarian trouble on the Duffy farm west of the borough of Butler in 1815 was the direct outcome of the persecutions of the settlers by the land speculators which had been going on relentlessly for a period of almost twenty years. The land in question was part of the Morris estate which had been purchased by Stephen Lowrey, and the latter claimed ownership in 1815. Previous to this time the farm had been entered by Abraham Maxwell on the ground that no previous settlement had been made on the tract in accordance with the act of 1782, and he was advised by his attorney, William Ayres, Esq., of Butler, that his claim was valid. He accordingly built a cabin on the ground and made quite an extensive clearing. The land was covered, however, by one of Morris's warrants which had been taken out in the name of Christian Stake, and was one of the 107 tracts which came into the hands of Lowrey at the sale of Morris's estate.

In the spring of 1814 Maxwell leased the property to Samuel Robb, and soon afterward Lowrey brought suit of ejectment against the owner and the lessee and obtained a judgment in the United States court at Philadelphia. By reason of the defendant's default of appearance, the order of ejectment was placed in the hands of a deputy marshal named Parchment, who made preparations to dispossess Robb. The latter refused to give peaceable possession, and he was backed in his decision by the farmers in the surrounding country, many of whom had located on land claimed by Lowrey and had suffered or expected to suffer ejectment. The officer did not then attempt to use violence, but one morning in October, 1815, he returned to Butler with an organized posse for the purpose of carrying out the order of the court. The officer and his posse assembled at the old hotel on South Main Street, where the Willard Hotel now stands, and there met a number of farmers from the surrounding country, all of whom were bitterly opposed to land jobbers in general, and Lowrey in particular. Both parties were armed with rifles. When the officer and his posse including the land owner, Lowrey, started out upon the road leading along the creek to Maxwell's cabin, they were closely followed by the farmers, who were determined to oppose the ejectment of Robb. The two parties met again at Robb's cabin, where Robb met them at the door and refused the deputy marshal possession. The members of the officer's party, the armed farmers, and the little squad of men and boys from the village who had followed the contestants to the spot from curiosity to see what the outcome would be, crowded around Parchment and Robb. When they heard the refusal of the latter to yield to the officer's demand, and saw that no immediate effort was to be made to take forcible possession of the premises, they fell back and broke into little groups to talk over the situation. Lowrey and Maxwell were standing close together conversing by the side of a rail fence which ran from the cabin to the public road when the confused sound of the many voices was suddenly pierced by the sharp crack of a rifle. Maxwell cried out, "I'm shot; I'm shot," and fell to the ground. Persons whose attention was not immediately drawn toward Maxwell saw a man, rifle in hand, bounding through the bushes up the hillside. Excitement and consternation prevailed among the group of men at the cabin. Maxwell was apparently dying, and his friends believed that the murderer shot was fired by one of Lowrey's followers. The farmers excitedly abused Lowrey as the instigator of the crime, and threatened violence, and for a time it looked as though a serious riot would result. The arguments of the cooler heads among the crowd finally prevailed, and the land speculator and the officers were allowed to depart in peace. Maxwell's wounds were of a serious nature and his life hung in the balance for many days, but he finally recovered, and at the end of two months was removed from Robb's cabin to his own home a few miles distant.

The fact that Maxwell was shot led to the belief that one of the land speculator's party was guilty of the crime, but later when all the circumstances were reviewed, it became the opinion of most of the people that the man who fired the shot was one of the farmers who sympathized with Maxwell and that he was endeavoring to kill or at least wound, Lowrey. In the confusion he accidentally shot Maxwell, who was the champion of the squatters. It was never positively known who fired the shot, though it is said that Abraham McCandless, at one time sheriff of Butler County, who died in 1893, was present at the tragedy and with a playmate, Jacob Brinker, saw and recognized the man who fired the shot but whose identity, however, they never revealed.

This occurrence was the means of changing most radically the policy of the land speculators. Up to this time they had almost invariably dispossessed the settlers of their land by suits of ejectment, but after the shooting of Maxwell almost all of the contested claims for lands were compromised, the farmer being allowed a certain portion of the tract on which he was settled for his improvement, or granted the whole upon payment of a nominal sum of money.

THE END OF THE LAND JOBBERS.

From the close of October, 1815 to July, 1818, the land speculators resorted to compromise and arbitration rather than to law. In July, 1818, Dunning McNair, of Glade Mills, then called Woodville, gave notice through the papers published in Butler that as Colonel Stephen Lowrey made sales and received money for lands in the Cunningham district, which were the property of Robert Morris and said McNair, buyers in the future should deal directly with him, as he could not conceive by what authority Mr. Lowrey had the right or power to interfere. This notice was continued unanswered until March 17th, 1819, when Stephen Lowrey published a friendly caution in the same paper, in which he invited all persons interested to call upon him in the town of Butler when he would show them in whom the title to the lands was really vested.

Owing to the reversion of the lands to the State under the acts of 1792, 1795, and 1799, the time for applying for donation land was extended to 1810. In the meanwhile the board of property, misconstruing the act of April, 1802, placed tickets for the bad land in the wheels from which the soldiers drew.

THE M'KEE AND VARNUM CASE.

Under the act of reversion, Andrew McKee bought two hundred acres in the second Donation District, for which a patent was issued February 8, 1804. Enoch Varnum claimed the greater part of the tract as a settler and improver of 1797, and the State Supreme Court decided in his favor some time prior to 1823. The legislature accepted the law but in justice to McKee, who held a patent from the estate, an indemnity was granted to him. Thus the claim of the actual settler was recognized and the error of the board properly corrected. The question of squatter sovereignty slept until after the oil fields were opened, when it was revived in several localities, the most notable case occurring at Renfrew in the days of the oil excitement. This case grew out of the ownership of the Purviance land and was the most stirring agrarian trouble since 1815.

CHAPTER IV

ORGANIZATION OF BUTLER COUNTY

Accounts with Allegheny County—Location of County Seat—Original Townships—A New County Proposed—Present Division of Townships—Another New County Proposition—Transactions of the County Commissioners—Tax on Bachelors—The Northwestern Railroad—Dispute of Bounty Claims—1804 and 1908 Compared—Commissioners' Clerks—Conscience Money—Public Buildings—The Court House of 1884—Court House of 1908—County Jails—The First Stone Jail—Recent Jail Escapes—Capture and Death of the Biddle Brothers—The County Home—The Temperance Cause—W. C. T. U.—Non-partisan Temperance Union—Loyal Temperance Legion—Population Statistics.

The act of the legislature of Pennsylvania, erecting Butler County, was approved March 12, 1800. The act also provided for its attachment for administrative purposes to Allegheny County, and described its boundaries as follows: Beginning at a locust tree on the south side of Buffalo Creek; thence along the Allegheny line twenty-three miles, to Alexander's District; thence due north twenty-three miles along that line and Beaver County to a corner near the confluence of Muddy Creek and Slippery Rock; thence north fifteen degrees east fifteen miles along the Mercer County line to a white oak tree in the Third Donation District; thence due east along the Venango County line to the Allegheny River; thence due south along the Armstrong County line to the place of beginning.

The county was named after General Richard Butler, who was killed at St. Clair's defeat, and a sketch of whose life has been given in the preceding chapter of this volume.

ACCOUNTS WITH ALLEGHENY COUNTY.

The transcript of accounts between Butler and Allegheny Counties from May 7, 1800, to December 3, 1803, shows that the sum of $5,528.90½ was collected in the townships of Butler County, all of which was expended by the commissioners of Allegheny County in the manner set forth in the itemized statements contained in records now in the possession of the commissioners of Butler County. At the close of 1803 the total receipts from Butler County aggregated $5,079.51, and the expenditures on account of Butler County were $5,528.90½, showing an indebtedness to Allegheny County of $449.391½, which the commissioners of Butler County agreed to pay at the time the settlement was made. The settlement of the accounts between the commissioners of Allegheny County and of Butler County appears to have been attended with some difficulty, as the transactions of the commissioners of Butler County show as late as September, 1812, that the disputes had not all been settled.

The tax levy in the original township of Connoquenessing in 1800 was $176.99; in 1801, $204.06; in 1802, $450.53; and in 1803, $452.92, or a total of $1,234.50 for the four years.

In Middlesex Township the tax given for the four years was as follows: $183.58; $284.28; $438.09; and $444.53; a total of $1,350.48.

In Slippery Rock Township the tax amounted to $345.98; $214.50; $281.36; and $341.33; a total of $1,183.17.

In Buffalo Township the tax amounted to $82.53; $108.80; $135.15; $161.01; a total of $487.49.

LOCATION OF THE COUNTY SEAT.

The original act provided that the county seat was not to be at a greater distance from the center of the county than four miles. The year following the passage of the act the governor appointed Samuel Rippey, Henry Evans, and John McBride surveyors, with Beatty Quinn as their axeman, commissioners to run the county line. After these commissioners had performed their duties and made the proper report the legislature appointed John David, William Elliott, and Samuel Ewalt commissioners to locate the county seats of Armstrong, Butler and Mercer Counties.

A supplementary act was passed April 6, 1802, authorizing the governor to appoint a commission who would locate the seats of justice in Armstrong, Butler and Mercer Counties, and the executive acting under this authority appointed Isaac Weaver, John Hamilton, Thomas Morton, James Brady, and P. Carr Lane.

The next step taken toward establishing the county seats was under the act of March 8, 1803, in which John McBride, William Elliott, and John David were appointed trustees for the county, and authorized to survey three hundred acres on the north side of Connoquenessing Creek, near the site of Cunningham's mill, agreeable to the grant and obligation secured from Samuel Cunningham, John Cunningham and Robert Graham. The trustees were authorized to lay out a lot, or lots of land not exceeding five acres for county buildings, the residue in town lots which were to be sold at public sale. Under this act the grounds for the county buildings were laid off and the first sale of lots was held August 10, 1803. (See Butler Borough.)

ORIGINAL TOWNSHIPS.

When the first commissioners of the county took charge of affairs in 1804, they found the four townships named in the statement of the Allegheny County commissioners to be sufficient for the purposes at that time. These townships were Connoquenessing, Middlesex, Slippery Rock and Buffalo. The inhabitants of the county were not satisfied with the division of townships, and in February, 1804, a petition was presented to Judge Moore, then holding court in Butler, praying for a change in the order of townships. The petition stated:

"That Middlesex Township at present extends from the southern boundary to the township of Slippery Rock, a distance of more than twenty-three miles - - - and we pray your honors to erect that part of Middlesex and Buffalo Townships south of said northern boundary into separate townships.

This petition was signed by John Quinn, Patrick McGee, Bernard McGee, Hugh McGee, Robert Maxwell, Robert Kennedy, William M. Kennedy, Joseph Sutton, David Sutton, Daniel Sutton, James Guffey, John David, David Kerr, Matthew Wigfield, John Bittiger, Henry Sofire, and James Shields. The court held the petition under advisement until the May term of court, 1804, when this endorsement was made: "The court considers that the necessity of acting on this petition is superseded by an appointment of viewers at the present session to divide the whole county of Butler into separate districts to be erected into townships.—J. Moore.”

Another petition for the erection of townships was presented May 15, 1804. This petition represented that the inhabitants of the county at large labored under a great inconvenience for want of a sufficient number of townships in said county, and that they therefore prayed the honorable court to appoint suitable persons to lay out a competent number of townships, and make report of their proceedings at the next session of court. The signers of this document were Matthew White, Jacob Meehling, James Bovard, John Negley, William Ayres, John Gilmore, Robert Hays, David Dongal, Josiah Crawford, John McCandless, Alexander White, Samuel Kinkaid, Samuel A. Rippy, William Skeer, William B. Young, James Thompson, John McBride, John David, William Elliott, Samuel Cunningham, Henry Evans, and William Wasson. Pursuant to this petition Judge Moore appointed John Cunningham, John David, and Barnett Gilliland a committee to inquire into the propriety of granting the prayer of the petitioners, and to execute all other acts and duties required by the act of assembly in such case provided.

At the session of court held in August, 1804, the committee named tendered their report, in which they stated that they are of the opinion that it is absolutely necessary that the county should be divided into a convenient number of townships, and submitted plan No. 1 and plan No. 2 for the consideration and determination of the court. This report was endorsed by John Parker who was then holding court in Butler, and continued under advisement until the next session. Plan No. 2 referred to in the report showed nine divisions, each seven and three-fourths miles square; one division thirteen miles, ninety-eight perches by five and one-half miles; one division ten miles by five and one-half miles; one division in the northwest corner of the county ten miles by five and one-half miles; and one division in the northwest corner five miles one hundred and fifty-two perches on the north line by five and one-half miles on the east line. The only township name given on the report is “Slippery Rock.”

Report No. 1, or the minority report, was drawn to a scale and the townships named as follows: Connoquenessing in the southwest corner, Middlesex next, and Buffalo in the southeast corner. In the second tier Muhler, Butler and Connaught; in the third tier Muddyreek, Heidelberg, and Clearfield; in the fourth tier Slippery Rock and Parker; and in the fifth, or northern tier, Mercer in the northwest corner and Venango in the northeast corner. The minority report was practically adopted, but amended so far as the names were concerned, and the division of townships approved November 15, 1804, by Judge Parker. The names of the townships, as amended, were: Cranberry, Middlesex and Buffalo in the first tier; Connoquenessing, Butler and Clearfield in the second tier; Muddyreek, Center and Donegal in the third; Slippery Rock and Parker in the fourth; and Mercer and Venango in the fifth tier, making in all thirteen townships. Previous to this time the county had been divided into six election districts, and these districts were superseded by the new order of townships.

During the years intervening between 1804 and 1853, six additional townships were created, making in all nineteen. A line extending from the west line of Butler to the Connoquenessing Creek and thence along that stream to the east line, divided the original Butler Township into North and South Butler. Connoquenessing Township was divided by a north and south line, creating East Connoquenessing and West Connoquenessing. Muddyreek was similarly divided, and the east half of the township was given the name of Franklin. A north and south line divided Slippery Rock Township, and the eastern half was given the name of Cherry. Allegheny Township was created out of the eastern half of Venango, and Washington and Fairview composed the other two townships.

On June 16, 1847, a petition for the erection of a township out of parts of Middlesex, South Butler, Cranberry, and East Connoquenessing, to be called Ringold Township, was signed by ninety-three residents of those districts and presented to court. This petition was met by seven counter-petitions from the old townships, supplemented by an account of the large meeting held at Breakneck, now Evans City, to protest against the establishment of such a township. The opposition was led by Samuel Marshall, Andrew Boggs, Joseph Johnson, David Garvin, and Daniel Boggs, residents of the southwest portion of the county.

From the records it appears that in 1849 the school directors of Middlesex and Cranberry Townships flatly refused to create a sub-school district for the accommodation of the citizens of those two townships. On the 10th of March the matter was considered at a meeting held at A. M. Brown's store and a petition was prepared to be presented to court asking for the erection of a new township, and for the increase of school districts. The petitioners submitted a plat of the territory and asked the court to order the establishment of a new township and name it "Ringold." The court did not take kindly to this petition and marked it with his disapproval.

A NEW COUNTY PROPOSED.

The snub inflicted by the court on the southwestern portion of the county burned in the breasts of its citizens for a number of years, and the desire for a change in the division of the townships took another shape in 1849, when a proposition was made to the Legislature to create a new county to be named Lawrence out of parts of Beaver, Mercer, and Butler Counties. The measure received little support from Butler County people, who were pleased with Butler County as it stood, and the movement finally resulted in the creation of Lawrence County out of parts of Beaver and Mercer, the territory of Butler County remaining intact.

In 1853, on the petition of citizens of Buffalo, Middlesex and Cranberry Townships, the Legislature passed an act creating ten townships out of the three named. The governor did not sign the act, but referred the question of the grievances of the citizens to the courts of Butler County.

PRESENT DIVISION OF TOWNSHIPS.

In the meantime there was growing dissatisfaction in the county over the division of school districts, and the townships, and a movement was undertaken which resulted in the division of the county into the thirty-three districts that exist today. The new movement was born in a little schoolhouse in which the late Maj. Cyrus Anderson, of Butler, then presided as teacher. The miserable condition of the building was called to the attention of the directors who were unable to afford relief until new townships or districts were formed, one of which at least they could govern. A petition was drawn up and circulated for signers and the work of the reconstruction of the county begun. On the 18th of June, 1853, a petition bearing forty-five signatures was presented to court asking that the prior petition of the people of Buffalo, Middlesex and Cranberry Townships be denied, and that the act of the Legislature erecting ten townships be set aside. The prayer of the petitioners was granted, the court appointing three viewers to devise a plan for the division of the county into townships.

A petition of sundry citizens of the county asking for the division of the county into townships five miles square was presented to court on June 18, 1853. The signers set forth that the petitions from the people of Buffalo, Middlesex and Cranberry Townships to the State Legislature asking that ten townships be erected out of the three named, were granted, and that an act was passed in accordance with the prayer of the petitioners; that the governor did not approve of that act, but remanded the whole question to the courts of Butler County, and that now the people of Butler County desire their disapproval of the petitioners' prayer as it would result in the division of the county into forty-three small townships.

The signers of this remonstrance asked the court to order that the whole county be divided into townships, each as nearly five miles square as possible. The court acquiesced in this opinion and the same day—June 18, 1853—appointed Hugh McKee, Samuel M. Lane, and James T. McJunkin commissioners to inquire into the propriety of granting the petition and to make a draft of the townships and of the division lines proposed, as well as of the lines of townships proposed to be altered, and to make a report before the next term of court. On November 19, 1853, the committee filed their report and opinion which were presented to Judge Agnew and associate judges. The report of the committee is an elaborate document in which is set forth the advantages of the new division of townships, and which also considers the objections urged in connection with the disarrangement of school districts. The committee found it necessary to ascertain the exact dimensions of the county by actual survey, which was done by Hugh McKee.

According to this survey the county averages twenty-four miles and a fraction east and west, and thirty-three miles and a fraction north and south. To carry out the wish of the petitioners to create townships five miles square would, it was said, leave a fractional range of townships on two sides of the county, and a ground for future complaints, but by dividing the distance and approximating the direction of the order of court, five ranges of townships north and south, and seven east and west were secured, making in all thirty-three townships. Thirty-one of the townships are almost five miles square and contain about twenty-four square miles, the other two, owing to the diagonal northwestern boundary line of the county, varying a little from that size. The expense attending the proposed division which was one of the objections urged against it, was estimated by the committee at $600, or an average of about eight cents to each taxable. The report was signed by Hugh McKee and James T. McJunkin, the other member of the committee being absent, but was not immediately acted upon by the court. David Scott was appointed viewer to succeed Mr. Lane, and on March 6, 1854, signed the final report which was presented and considered by the court on March 29 that year. This provided for the establishment of thirty-three townships, all except three being nearly twenty-four square miles in area. The township of Mercer having four unequal sides lacked about one-third of a proportionate area, while the townships of Slippery Rock and Worth, owing to the division of the triangle lying to the north and west of them, contained a little more territory than an equal proportion. The triangle contained about six square miles, and it was apportioned to the two townships named, each of which would lack a fraction of being the regular size without such addition. The order of court approving this division and creating the townships was signed March 29, 1854, and the thirty-three townships are named in order, beginning at the northwestern township of the northern range and running east, as follows: Mercer, Marion, Venango, and Allegheny in the first tier; Slippery Rock, Cherry, Washington, Parker in the second; Worth, Brady, Clay, Concord, and Fairview in the third; Muddycreek, Franklin, Center, Oakland, and Donegal in the fourth; Lancaster, Connoquenessing, Butler, Summit, and Clearfield in the fifth; Jackson, Forward, Penn, Jefferson, and Winfield in the sixth; Cranberry, Adams, Middlesex, Clinton, and Buffalo in the seventh.

Under the new order of townships an election of township officers and justices of the peace was ordered to be held April 28, 1854, under the act of that year.

At the March term of court, 1854, a petition was filed asking for the modification of the line between Slippery Rock and Worth Townships. This petition was signed by Stephen Morrison, A. H. Boyle, A. Murphy, Thomas Kelly, Jr., John W. Martin, Thomas Kelly, A. G. Dennison, John Stoughten, William Gallagher, Thomas Boyle, C. Nussell, John Stoughten and John Brant.

On March 6, 1854, a remonstrance against the order of survey signed by forty-six citizens was filed, showing the whole plan to be disadvantageous to a large number of citizens. A long list of reasons are given in this remonstrance, the sixth of which is as follows: "We apprehend that the surveyors in their hurry to finish their work and influenced perhaps by the representations of a few individuals lying north of the line, have unintentionally done injury and incommodated the whole township by accommodating a few at the expense of thirty or forty men."

NEW COUNTIES PROPOSED.

The dissatisfaction over new township lines took shape again in a proposition to carve part of a new county out of Butler County territory, which was presented to the Legislature in April, 1854. An act passed the House of Representatives and was carried through the Senate providing for the erection of a new county out of parts of Westmoreland, Allegheny, Armstrong and Butler. The plotters succeeded in getting the bill through the House and the Senate without the knowledge of the people of Butler County, but they could not win any real support in Butler County, and hence the project fell through.

In February, 1856, the committee of the Legislature on new counties reported a bill for the erection of parts of Allegheny, Butler and Westmoreland into a county to be named Madison. According to this bill the townships of Middlesex, Clinton and Buffalo would have been detached from Butler County.

In January, 1861, a bill was introduced in the Legislature annexing the Anderson farm in West Deer Township, Allegheny County, to Butler County. The people of Butler were inclined to ignore additions as well as subtractions and this project met the fate of its predecessors.

The last attempt to filch territory from Butler County occurred in 1871, when the people of East Brady asked for the formation of a new county out of parts of Armstrong, Butler, Clarion, and Venango Counties. This was at the time the Great Western Iron Works were in operation at Brady's Bend, and the development of the oil fields along the Allegheny River had reached Parker's Landing and the north-eastern section of Butler County. The Northwestern Independent, a paper published by Clark Wilson at Parker, was the official organ of the agitators. In June, 1872, a bill authorizing the change of boundary between Butler and Armstrong Counties was defeated in the House of Representatives, and shortly after the agitation about a new county ceased. Since that time the question of forming new counties out of Butler and parts of surrounding counties has been agitated several times, but no definite movement has ever been made.

TRANSACTIONS OF THE COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

The first meeting of the commissioners of Butler County was held November 9, 1803, in a log house on the site of the Nixon Hotel on South Diamond Street, which was afterward used for holding court and such other public purposes as was required until the erection of the county building. Two of the commissioners, Matthew White and James Bovard, took the oath of office on that date, but Jacob Mechling, the third commissioner, did not qualify until November 16, on which day the organization was completed and a term of four days begun. The time seems to have been employed in making estimates and adjusting a variety of business relative to the establishing of the office. On November 21, Mr. Mechling reported that districts Nos. 1 and 2 were laid off and the lines surveyed by Thomas Grimes at a cost of $5. Commissioners White and Bovard reported that districts Nos. 3, 4, 5 and 6 had been laid off by John Cunningham at a cost of $15. These districts were laid out under the act of Assembly of April 4, 1803, providing for the appointment of justices of the peace. On November 28, the commissioners were at Pittsburg consulting with the commissioners of Allegheny County in regard to transferring the official records to Butler County, but little seems to have been accomplished prior to December 8, 1803, when duplicates of the records were received from Allegheny County showing the receipts and disbursements in the four townships of Butler County. The next item of business in December was the issuing of the first wolf order to John Cooper, the collector of Buffalo Township. At the same time a contract was entered into with John Negley for "a place to accommodate the courts of justice of the town of Butler."

Toward the close of December the commissioners again visited the commissioners of Allegheny County for the purpose of obtaining certain books and copies of records, but seem to have failed in their mission. They returned, however, with a copy of Reed's Digest which proved very useful to David Dougal, the commissioners' clerk. With so much written law at hand the commissioners were able to transact any public business that came before them, and the first public contract of importance appears to have been the awarding of the contract on January 16, 1804, to Samuel Meals for iron work of the "Public Prison." The tax duplicates of the several townships were issued on April 11, the amounts being:

For Slippery Rock	$ 364.00
For Middlesex	480.32
For Buffalo	166.32
For Connoquenessing	465.27
Total	$1,475.91

From the beginning of 1804 to October 25 of that year the county commissioners rented a room for office purposes from William B. Young, to whom they paid $6 rent on that date.

In November, 1804, James Scott took the place of Jacob Mechling as a commissioner, and with Messrs. White and Bovard composed the board. The business of the month seems to have been the drawing of warrants to the judges and clerks of the general election held in October.

TAX ON BACHELORS.

An important item in the transaction of the county commissioners in December was the petition of Hugh Smith for relief of the disabilities under which single men labored at that time. The tax on single blessedness was 75 cents, but Hugh could now protest, and on the certificate of Squire Robert Galbreath, that he was married before the date of the petition. The commissioners exonerated him from the payment of an unjust tribute. The transactions of the county commissioners did not require all of their time, as will appear from the record made by Clerk David Dougal at the close of 1804. On the 29th of December the clerk credited Commissioner White with ninety-four days' services, Bovard with one hundred three and one-half days, Scott with eleven days, and himself with eighty-three days.

On January 4, 1805, the question of estimates was disposed of, and a tax levy of $2,500 was ordered. On the 17th of the month John Negley received $28.89 for his services as treasurer of Butler County, from April 11 to December 31, 1804, being at the rate of $40 per year. In February John Negley received $50 in full for rent of courthouse from February 1, 1804, to February 1, 1805. John Negley was re-appointed treasurer for the year 1805, and required to give a bond in the sum of $3,000. In March, 1805, William McDonald, the coroner, held an inquest on the body of a child named Catherine Barrickman at the house of Benjamin Thomas, and was paid $15.14 for his services. During this year the work of redistricting the county into thirteen townships appears to have been completed, and the commissioners paid David Dougal, James Bovard and James Scott, surveyors, Edward Grimes, George Scott and Alexander White, chain carriers and blazers, for their services in surveying and establishing the township line. In April the tax duplicates for the year were issued as follows:

Slippery Rock Township	$ 351.81
Mercer Township	161.84
Parker Township	178.53
Venango Township	116.28
Donegal Township	205.63 ¹ / ₂
Clearfield Township	118.45
Buffalo Township	170.17
Middlesex Township	232.71
Butler Township	262.55
Center Township	273.33
Muddyereek Township	260.48
Connoqueensing Township	312.89 ¹ / ₂
Cranberry Township	153.34 ¹ / ₂
Total	$2,798.02 ¹ / ₂

The total tax levied was $2,798.02¹/₂.

A distinction seems to have been made in the amount of the tax levied in the various townships, but for what purpose the records do not state. In the first four named townships the rate was six mills, and in the others five mills.

In May and June public roads appear to have taken the time of the commissioners. A road was viewed from McClure's in the direction of Beaver and from the Mercer County line through Zelenople to the Butler County line. This road afterward being known as the Pittsburg and Franklin Pike.

On the 9th of November, Abner Coats qualified as county commissioner and took the place of James Bovard. John Negley was reappointed treasurer, and William Campbell was paid $13.50 for making two jury wheels.

The making out of tax duplicates, orders for auditors, jurors, etc., and the payment of election judges and clerks kept the commissioners busy in the early part of the year. The tax duplicates issued in May were as follows:

Slippery Rock	$519.46
Mercer	243.38
Parker	278.89 ¹ / ₂
Venango	180.94
Donegal	312.39
Clearfield	198.06 ¹ / ₂
Buffalo	263.38
Middlesex	306.87
Butler	450.50 ¹ / ₂
Center	383.25
Muddyereek	386.46
Connoqueensing	332.27 ¹ / ₂
Cranberry	260.56

In August the commissioners awarded a contract for cutting the State Road through Butler County, while the month of September was given to the issuing of warrants and payment for jury services, and witness fees and other expenses connected with the Circuit Court. William Elliott, John McBride and John David, who were the trustees in the matter of the county seat lots, delivered their trust to commissioners White, Coats and Scott on June 19, 1806. On November 7, the commissioners paid David Dougal $20 for drawing a map of Butler County for the use of the commissioners. Contracts were awarded for the construction of a bridge over Connoquenessing Creek at Butler and for other bridges in the county during the same month, and constituted the last items of business recorded in the first minute-book kept by the commissioners.

Jacob Smith qualified as county commissioner on December 2, 1806, and took the place of Matthew White. Nothing of importance was transacted during the remainder of the year.

The most important item of business at the opening of 1807 was the awarding of a contract on January 6 to Alexander Hill for the building of the courthouse. This contract was sealed and approved by the court on the 18th of the month. On the 7th of March, Abraham Brinker was appointed commissioner vice Jacob Smith, but there appears to be no record of the resignation, removal or death of Smith. Under date of April 14, Mr. Coats was paid $2 for "laying out courthouse and going to Justice Scott's on business relating to courthouse." The county jail received some attention in the same month as the bill of John Negley for carpenter work and materials on jail building was ordered to be paid.

The organization of the Board of Commissioners in 1808 contains the names of Abner Coats, John Negley, Francis Anderson as commissioners, and Walter Lowrie clerk. A warrant was drawn in February to John Purviance for rent of courthouse from March, 1808, to March, 1809, for the sum of $50, while on March 12 George Young was paid $15 for courthouse rent up to April, 1808. Another item paid was a bill of D. C. Cunningham to the county commissioners for $2 for legal advice. In the fall of 1808, James Scott succeeded Abner Coats as commissioner, and on October 27, 1809, Thomas Dodds and Joseph Williamson qualified as the successors of Negley and Anderson. During the years of 1808 and 1809 much of the time of the commissioners was occupied in the erection of the courthouse, the construction of bridges and the opening of public roads in the county.

Walter Lowrie qualified as county commissioner in October, 1810, and with Joseph Williamson and James Scott formed the board. The principal work done by the board was fixing the budget for 1811 and making a schedule of values of land, horses, cows, mills and stills for the guidance of assessors. The estimate of expenditure for the ensuing year was $4,800. Samuel Williamson was appointed treasurer, his bond of $6,000 being signed by John Negley and Samuel Deniston.

The records of the commissioners' office for 1811 say that the commissioners were engaged in April "in compromising" with Alexander Hill the builder of the courthouse for $600, and gave him a draft on the Bank of Deposit and Discount at Pittsburg. In October William Balph was elected commissioner to succeed James Scott, letting contract for the State Road and issuing warrants formed the work of the officials up to December, when the board settled with John McGinnis for finishing the sheriff's office.

The accounts with Allegheny County, as closed in 1803, had never been settled, and in September, 1812, commissioners Williamson and Lowrie visited Pittsburg for that purpose, but their mission proved a failure. In October, Robert Martin was elected commissioner, also Ephriam Harris vice Lowrie, resigned. They with William Balph formed the board on January 1, 1813, with Robert Scott clerk.

The term of Harris expired in November, 1813, and James McKee qualified as his successor. Robert Scott was continued as clerk at $1.23 per day. The auditors appointed in the fall of 1813 were John Christy, Robert Lemmon, and Moses Sullivan, who reported an account up to January 1, 1814.

Nothing out of the routine of issuing orders was accomplished until October 29, 1814, when the contract for building a bridge at Amberson's on Connoquenessing Creek was considered. On November 8, John Negley gave a bond for the completion of this bridge. At this time John Christy qualified as commissioner in place of William Balph whose term had expired. It appears that a new jail building was in process of erection by John Negley at this time, the work having been begun in 1812; That a new bridge at "race grounds" was contemplated and three bridges were built at Slippery Rock on the State Road.

The race ground mentioned was known in later years as Stehle's field and was the baseball ground up until 1902, when the ground was plotted into lots and sold. It is now that part of the west end of the city which is bounded by Pillow Street, Race Street, and Fourth Avenue.

The expenses of the county in 1815, as shown by the five hundred and ten warrants issued, aggregated $3,466.47, a large part of which represented court expenses and election expenses. On November 4, William Campbell took the oath of office as the successor of Robert Martin whose term had expired. The new jail building having been practically completed John Negley, who also furnished the floor and partitions for the second story of the courthouse, received on the latter contract the sum of $175.

During the year warrants for $42 were given to John Ralston, John Burkhart, Daniel Graham and John Burtner for the scalps of fourteen wolf puppies, while John Reniston received $8 for a full grown wolf head. The principal item of public improvement was the completion of the bridge over Wolf Creek, which was built by Daniel Foster for the county. In November, Thomas McCleary qualified as commissioner to succeed James McKee, whose term expired. The expenses of the county for the year, as shown by the auditor's report, were $5,858.

The important events of the year were the completion of the county jail by John Negley, which had been in course of construction for five years, and the plastering of the courthouse later by John Dunbar. The expenses of the county for the year were $4,074.35, which included the repairs of the public buildings and the final payments on the county jail. Francis Fryer was elected commissioner in October and took the place of John Christy whose term had expired.

Comparatively little business was transacted in 1818; the county disbursements being $3,986.92½. No public improvements were made during this year. Abraham Brinker qualified as commissioner in November and he with McCleary and Fryer formed the board for the ensuing year.

During 1819 a new bridge was built at Harmony by David Townsend at a cost of $399, also one at Bassenheim and one at Zelicople. Robert Lemmon qualified as county commissioner in November, 1819, and John Dodds qualified as commissioner in 1820. The disbursements of the county for the two years 1819 and 1820 were $3,000.57 and $4,752.28, respectively. On November 6, Thomas McCleary was appointed clerk to the commissioners to succeed Robert Scott. The commissioners reserved the right to dismiss him at the close of three months if his work was not satisfactory. The salary of the clerk for that year was fixed at $100.

The expenditures for the county in 1821 were $3,390.10½. John Brandon was the new commissioner elected in October, and in November Robert Scott was restored to his old position as clerk. An account for coal supplied to the county for the years 1820 and 1821 was settled and a warrant drawn to Martin and Bowers.

The construction of a bridge at Lowrie's mills was decided upon in 1822 and repairs on the courthouse and jail were authorized. On November 4 the commissioners organized with Messrs. John Dodds, John Brandon, and John Covert, the last named being the new member. William Gibson was appointed treasurer for the ensuing year. The appointment of John Walsh as clerk to succeed Robert Scott was made November 29. The expenditures for the year were distributed by 592 warrants aggregating $3,589.80¹.

One of the items of expense for the year 1823 was a warrant drawn to John Brandon for "goose-quills" bought in Simon Reed's store.

The case of William Hogg, who had been drawn for grand jury service in June, was adjudicated by the commissioners in July. It appears that Hogg had been discharged from service on the grand jury on account of being a Scotchman or an Englishman who never became a citizen. Hogg demanded pay for his services, which was at first refused, but at a later hearing of the case the commissioners issued the warrant.

In July, William Purviance surveyed a number of outlots east of the borough of Butler, which were sold by the commissioners in October. These outlots now constitute a part of the town east of McKean Street, and compose some of the most valuable property in the city.

John McQuistion was elected commissioner to succeed John Dodds, whose term had expired and the new board organized on the 5th of November. John Sullivan was appointed treasurer for the ensuing year, and Hugh McLaughlin was authorized to make certain repairs on the courthouse. An item of expense incurred by the commissioners' office was the purchase of two pairs of snuffers and a box of candles. The business of the year closed with the payment of the contractors for the Lick bridge over the Connoquenessing at what is now known as the Transfer north of Butler, and the improving of the Harmony bridge. The expenses of the county for all purposes that year were $3,755.58.

The commissioners of 1824 had in mind the education of poor children in the community whose parents were not able to provide for such education. Among the items for that year is one for $6.43 to William Reed "for schooling poor children." Later in the year another warrant was drawn to John Alward for the same purpose. On the 5th of November, Hugh McKee qualified as commissioner to succeed John Brandon, and William Gibson was appointed as clerk to succeed John Walsh.

The most important item of business transacted by the commissioners in 1825 was the adoption of a uniform standard for the triennial assessment. On November 25 the board was composed of Robert Scott, Hugh McKee and John McQuistion.

In January, 1826, Isaiah Niblock, of Butler, was appointed treasurer, his salary being based on one and one-half per cent. of the expenditures. This appointment was strongly opposed by John McQuistion, a member of the board of commissioners, but the reasons for the opposition are not given. It is probable that the opposing member did not believe that ministerial and secular work could be combined, the new incumbent of the treasurer's office being a minister of the gospel and pastor of the Associate Reformed Church, now the United Presbyterian Church of Butler. The same year the commissioners entered into a twelve-year contract with Andrew Marshall to keep the Harmony bridge in repair for that term at the stated consideration of $312.50. At the close of October, David Dougal qualified as commissioner and succeeded John McQuistion. The disbursements of the county for this year were $4,456.91.

In February, 1827, Samuel A. Purviance was appointed clerk to the commissioners. A bridge over Connoquenessing Creek opposite the borough was completed by John Stephenson and the courthouse was subjected to general repairs by the authority of the board. John McNeese was elected commissioner in October to succeed Hugh McKee. The expenditures of the county for the year were $6,198.40, as certified by the auditors, Robert Martin, Maurice Bredin and Joseph Bryson.

From January 1 to October 29 in 1828, sufficient business was transacted to occupy the time of commissioner Scott for eighty-three days, Dougal for eighty-one and one-half days, and McNeese for fifty-eight days. The clerk, Samuel S. Purviance, was employed in the office for one hundred nine and one-half days of his second term down to March 6, 1828, and sixty-one days additional to October 29. Alexander Graham succeeded Scott as commissioner, October 29, and served sixteen days before the close of December. Christian Meehling was appointed clerk for a short term on October 28. At the close of the year, Treasurer Thompson reported a revenue of $6,710.98, of which $1,437.63¹/₂ were unexpended.

The question of appointing a treasurer was decided January 21, 1829, when James Thompson was chosen and he served until the reorganization of the board of commissioners in October, when Francis McBride was appointed to succeed him. Joseph McQuiston was elected commissioner to succeed David Dougal and John N. Purviance was reappointed clerk at a salary of $75 per year. He had previously been appointed clerk in February to succeed Meehling, the short-term appointee of the previous year.

Public roads and bridges occupied most of the time of the commissioners during the year 1830. Among the roads opened was one from James McCandless' house to the brick meeting-house in Connoque-nessing Township, and the State Road from Kittanning to Evans's Ferry on French Creek received some attention, in August. Among the bridges projected was one opposite the former home of Detmar Basse Muller; one over Muddy Creek near Kennedy's mill, one over Wolf Creek and one over Slippery Rock Creek where the graded road from Butler to Mercer crosses that stream. In October, John McCandless qualified as commissioner as successor to McNeese. The salary of Clerk Purviance was increased to $90, and the financial reports show receipts to the amount of $6,574.57, of which $699.86 remained in the treasury.

In January, 1831, Francis McBride was appointed treasurer and William Ayres was employed as attorney at salary of $25.

It appears that the associate judges had something to do with the classification of merchants for taxable purposes about this time. One of the items on the minute-book of the commissioners is the record of a meeting held with the merchants of the county who appealed from the tax classification made by the commissioners and the associate judges of that year.

It may appear strange that one of the commissioners had to go to Pittsburg to procure iron and nails and other supplies for the use of repair of jail and courthouse, and attend to having the same hauled from Pittsburg. In August of that year Bennett Dobbs was employed to place sheet-iron on the western wall of the prison room of the jail. Previous to this time there appears to have been no iron work on the inside of the prison except that provided for the doors and the windows which was of a very light character. During the year the Breakneck Creek bridge, opposite Boggs' house, was constructed by Sylvester Ash, and contractor Charles Duffy began work on the bridge over the Connoquenessing at the Salt Lick north of Butler. At the reorganization of the board in October, William Pillow qualified as commissioner and succeeded Alexander Graham. John N. Purviance was reappointed clerk at a salary of $1 per day. Andrew Sproul was appointed treasurer in December, and William Ayres was succeeded as attorney by Samuel A. Purviance and the salary fixed at $25 per year. Auditor William Moore reported a revenue of $6,946.07, and a balance in the treasury for the year of $1,278.57.

In March, 1832, the commissioners awarded to George Miller, of Butler, the contract for repairing the courthouse and the plastering thereof to Philip Varnum. About the same time a new roof was ordered to be placed on the jail. B. G. Gall and A. Ziegler were given a contract to build a bridge over the Connoquenessing Creek at Harmony. Robert Graham qualified as commissioner in October to succeed Joseph McQuistion, and William Campbell, Jr., was appointed clerk at a salary of $70 per annum. The finances of the county were in excellent shape that year and showed a balance over expenditures of $670.56. The total receipts for the year were $8,394.57.

Charles C. Sullivan was appointed attorney to the commissioners in 1833 at a salary of $25 and Andrew Sproul was appointed treasurer. John Vanderlin was elected to succeed John McCandless as commissioner and William Campbell, Jr., was reappointed clerk at a salary of $1 per day. Toward the close of the year George Miller was appointed treasurer to succeed Andrew Sproul and John McLelland was appointed attorney to succeed Charles C. Sullivan, the salary remaining at $25 per year. The receipts for the year were $5,614.10 and the balance unexpended, $224.83.

In 1834 the commissioners were John McCandless, Robert Graham and Joseph Graham, the latter having been elected to succeed William Pillow, whose term had expired. The expenditures for the year were $6,802.94 and the receipts from taxes $6,446.33, showing an indebtedness of $356.61.

William Campbell, Jr., was reappointed clerk, George Miller treasurer and John McLelland attorney, for 1835. In April of that year Moses Crispin was employed as janitor of the courthouse and bell-ringer. It was the duty of the bell-ringer not only to ring the courthouse bell for the sessions of court, but to ring it on Sunday morning to indicate the hour for church services, and this custom existed as late as 1883, when the courthouse was destroyed by fire. After the completion of the new courthouse in 1885, the custom was not revived. In October, Hugh Stevenson was elected commissioner to succeed Robert Graham, whose term had expired, and Jacob Zeigler was appointed clerk to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Campbell. Under date of October 17 this minute was recorded in the transactions of the commissioners, "employed in fighting with Joseph McQuistion." The cause of the battle and its result remain untold. It appears that John Vanderlin was then a member of the board.

Early in 1836 John N. Purviance was reappointed counsel to the commissioners and the salary increased to $35. John B. McGlanhlin was appointed treasurer and the salary of that office fixed at two per cent. on the tax levy. Nathan Skeer qualified as commissioner to succeed Vanderlin at the organization of the board in October. The auditor's report shows a revenue of $8,314.59, and a balance in the treasury of $1,136.12.

William Criswell was elected to succeed Joseph Graham as commissioner in this year, and John N. Purviance was reappointed counselor at a salary of $30 per annum. Bridge matters formed an important item in the year's business and contracts were awarded for a bridge over the Connoquenessing below Butler, one near Boyd's mill, one at Malachi Richardson's and one at Gilleland's. The treasurer's receipts for the year amounted to $8,372.16, and the balance unexpended was $2,743.47.

Jacob Shanor qualified as commissioner October 28. James Frazier was appointed treasurer and Jacob Zeigler clerk. These appointments were made in January. The treasurer's receipts for the year were $8,177.28, and the unexpended balance at the end of the year $1,005.84.

In January, 1839, Jacob Zeigler was chosen clerk and counselor to the commissioners, his pay as clerk being $1.25 per day, and as counselor $30 per annum. This arrangement was not of long duration, for on January 5, George Zeigler was appointed clerk at $1.25 per day, John N. Purviance counselor at $35 per annum, and Jacob Mechling, Jr., treasurer at three and one-half per cent. on the tax levy. The change in the clerkship was caused by the election of Jacob Zeigler as prothonotary. Thomas R. McMillen qualified as commissioner in October, as the successor of Nathan Skeer, whose term had expired. The sum audited for 1839 was $8,030.47, including $166.76 advanced by the treasurer to meet bills against the county.

The appointments made in 1840 were: E. M. Bredin, attorney; William Campbell, treasurer; George W. Zeigler, clerk; and John McCollough, bell-ringer. Toward the close of October, George Miller qualified as commissioner to take the place of Criswell. The receipts of the county for the year were $9,403.83.

The appointments made by the commissioners in 1841 were: Andrew Carns, treasurer; William Timblin, clerk; George W. Smith, attorney; and William Johnson, bell-ringer. The bell-ringer appears to have been a boy of rather tender years, for one of the incidents of the year was the receipt of a petition from leading citizens of Butler borough against continuing a boy of William Johnson's years as bell-ringer and custodian of public buildings, and recommending the employment of John McCollough, Jr. The commissioners acquiesced in this petition without delay and McCollough was duly installed as bell-ringer. In August of this year John Ross was awarded a contract for painting the courthouse and public offices.

THE VOTE FOR COMMISSIONER.

The elections held in October of 1841 resulted in a tie vote for county commissioner, and the contest that resulted was heard on November 10 by commissioners McMillen and Miller sitting with the Court of Quarter Sessions. The claims of McCurdy and Moyer, two of the contestants, were set aside, and John Ray, of Donegal Township, was chosen, the new member taking his seat on November 20. The revenues of 1841 amounted to $9,237.52, all of which were disbursed. The school fund then amounted to $254.15, or $111.66 from unseated land tax, and $142.49 paid by former treasurer.

In January, 1842, the trustee of the Butler Academy owed the sum of $2,457.70. This sum included $1,101.36, the amount of John Negley's judgment, and $150 subscribed toward the support of the institution.

Under the constitution of 1838 the office of county treasurer became elective and the first election held in the county after the new law went into effect was in 1841, when Andrew Carns was chosen county treasurer for the term of two years. He presented his certificate of election in October, and qualified January 1, 1842. Alexander S. McBride was appointed clerk, George W. Smith attorney, and Samuel R. Williams bell-ringer, for the year. In October, John Ray was reelected commissioner and Abraham Moyer, who was one of the defeated candidates in the contest of 1841, was also elected commissioner, and with Thomas R. McMillen formed the board for the ensuing year. The warrants issued for the year represented $8,309.75.

In the early part of 1843 Alexander McNair was appointed attorney at a salary of $25 per annum, and John Gold bell-ringer at a salary of $50. Maurice Bredin qualified as commissioner on October 14. The total treasurer's credit amounted to $11,677.21; and the value of warrants, $7,292.47.

Daniel Coll qualified as treasurer on the 1st of January, 1844, and Alexander S. McBride was reappointed clerk, and John Gold bell-ringer. On October 26, W. W. Dodds qualified as commissioner.

The board of commissioners in January, 1845, consisted of W. W. Dodds, Maurice Bredin and Abraham Moyer. The firm of Gilmore & Purviance were appointed county attorneys, and the reappointment of Alexander S. McBride clerk, and John Gold bell-ringer are mentioned. Thomas H. Bracken was elected commissioner at the October election, and took the place of Abraham Moyer.

John Bredin, Jr., was appointed clerk at the meeting held the 1st of January, 1846, Oren Baldwin attorney, and John Gold bell-ringer. In April, David Douthett was appointed commissioner as the successor of Maurice Bredin, and on October 24, Lewis Z. Mitchell was appointed mercantile appraiser under the act of April 22, 1846. This was the first appointment made for this position. John Anderson qualified as commissioner on the 27th of October as the successor to David Douthett, who had been appointed to fill a vacancy.

George W. Crozier was appointed clerk to the commissioners in January, 1847, and the salary increased to $1.50 per day. John Borland was appointed attorney and John McCollough bell-ringer. At the October election Joseph Douthett was chosen to succeed Commissioner W. W.

Dodds, and William Timblin was appointed mercantile appraiser.

Andrew Simpson succeeded Bracken as a member of the board in 1848, and immediately after the organization of the board a resolution was adopted changing the system of fuel contract for the public buildings. The resolution was as follows: "That the coal should be shipped by those who will supply it at four cents per bushel and not take more than four hundred bushels from any one at any one time; also to supply the jail in the same way."

The year 1849 appears to have been one of disasters and floods. An entry refers to the floods of July and speaks of county bridges being damaged at Amberson's, at Robb's, and one on Breakneck Creek. George W. Crozier was reappointed clerk, and John Sullivan counsel and mercantile appraiser. Thomas Kelly was elected commissioner this year to succeed Anderson.

In January, 1850, George W. Crozier was reappointed clerk, and John McCollough bell-ringer, and William Timblin attorney, at a salary of $25 per year. The board was composed of Thomas Kelly, Andrew Simpson and Joseph Douthett. Thomas Welsh was elected commissioner in October to succeed Joseph Douthett, and at the organization of the board in November, James White, of Prospect, was appointed mercantile appraiser.

The appointments made by the commissioners in 1851 were: James A. McNair, clerk; Arcus McDermit, attorney; and William Williamson, bell-ringer. McNair resigned as clerk in October, and John Sullivan was appointed to fill the vacancy at the last meeting of the old board. James Mitchell succeeded Andrew Simpson as commissioner on October 28, and on the last day of the year John Greer, of Prospect, was appointed mercantile appraiser.

The principal business before the commissioners in 1852 was the building of a new courthouse. In January John Sullivan was appointed clerk, Ebenezer McJunkin, attorney, and John McCullough, bell-ringer. On the 28th of May of this year, Architect Barr was in consultation with the commissioners over the plans for the proposed new courthouse. Subsequently the commissioners, Kelly, Welsh and Mitchell, spent twelve days visiting the county seats of Lawrence, Beaver, Allegheny, Washington, Green, Fayette, Blair, and Indiana counties to obtain information relative to the courthouse buildings, and continued to give this subject their attention until July 16, when they awarded the contract to William Bell, of Warren, Pennsylvania. John Miller succeeded Thomas Kelly as commissioner in November, and David McDonald was appointed mercantile appraiser.

THE NORTHWESTERN RAILROAD.

There are no changes in the appointment of the commissioners in 1853, until the close of January, when George W. Crozier was appointed temporary clerk. The Northwestern Railroad, which was the first project of the kind started in Butler County, was a subject of consideration by the county commissioners in March, 1853. It was proposed to build this road from New Castle to Butler, and thence to Freeport. On the 31st of March, the commissioners unanimously agreed to subscribe $250,000 to the capital stock of the Northwestern Railroad Company, as recommended and found by the grand jury, and in accordance with the act incorporating that company. This resolution was duly signed by the commissioners, and the clerk, John Sullivan. The Northwestern Railroad Company afterwards failed and the road was never completed, while the commissioners of the county were involved in litigation over the subscription made to the capital stock of the concern.

At this time the commissioners were also engaged in watching the progress of the new courthouse, and in making repairs on the jail so that their positions were anything but sinecures. One of the sanitary acts of this period must be credited to the board; this was the construction of a sewer from the jail to the creek, which was the first improvement of this class made in this section of Pennsylvania. Another important item of business transacted by the commissioners in this year, was the re-districting of the county into thirty-three townships, and the establishing of the township lines. At the October election, William C. Campbell was elected commissioner to succeed Welsh.

Pursuant to the action taken the previous year the commissioners issued railroad bonds in October, 1854, to pay for the subscription to the capital stock of the Northwestern Railroad Company, and in the same month a contract was made for a new courthouse bell. John Kennedy was elected commissioner and qualified in November.

The new courthouse was finished during the summer of 1855, and the commissioners were engaged in purchasing furniture and office fixtures for it. There is no minute to the effect that contractor Bell ever finished the structure, or of its acceptance by the commissioners, but a minute recorded on December 7, 1855, in regard to the cleaning of the interior of the courthouse, indicates that Bell had observed a notice to finish his contract. Samuel Marks was appointed clerk for that year.

In January, 1856, the commissioners re-appointed Samuel Marks, clerk, E. McJunkin, attorney, and John McCullough, bell-ringer. In August, Architect Barr and Contractor Bell met with the commissioners and made the final settlement for the construction of the new courthouse.

General dissatisfaction seemed to exist over the affairs of the Northwestern Railroad Company, and in February, 1857, John Graham was appointed agent of the county and ordered to visit Philadelphia to attend a meeting of the directors of the Northwestern Railroad, on March 3d, and find out the condition and policy of that corporation. Little satisfaction was obtained at this meeting, and towards the latter part of the year the members of the board visited the directors at Pittsburg. On March 11th of that year Contractor Bell was given a warrant for the final payment of work done on the courthouse. Samuel P. Irvine was appointed clerk.

Anxiety about the intentions of the railroad company prevailed in 1858 and occupied considerable time of the county commissioners. Bridges at Evansburg, Black's mill, Boyard's mill, and Zelenople were repaired or built during the year, and mention is made of a law suit in which the commissioners were interested, being tried at Pittsburg. Subsequently the case is referred to as Duberry vs. William Harbison, Charles McClung, and Butler County.

In 1860 the board was composed of William Harbison, Charles McClung, and Thomas McNeese. Samuel P. Irvine was reappointed clerk, and appointed attorney for the board. Irvine resigned the clerkship in August, and Samuel Marks was appointed.

The board in 1861 was composed of Matthew Greer, Thomas McNeese, and Charles McClung. William S. Jack was appointed clerk, and John M. Thompson attorney. On April 30th Jack resigned and enlisted for service in the war, and John H. Niblock was appointed his successor as clerk.

The board in 1862 was Abner Bartley, Matthew Greer, and Thomas McNeese. John H. Niblock was reappointed clerk, but resigned in March, and Harvey Colbert of Butler was appointed his successor and continued in the office until the close of 1866. Early in 1862 mention is made of the relief work of the board, and on July 31st of the commissioners agreeing to give each volunteer in three companies of nine months' men, $25.00 each as soon as mustered in. On August 26th this bounty was paid to the soldiers of Capt. Anderson's company. In October, John M. Thompson having resigned to enter the United States service, Charles McCandless was chosen attorney. Commissioner Greer attended the court of Pittsburg for several days during this year in the matter of the railroad suit, and was credited with 209 days' service from January 1 to December 31, together with 36 days' service in 1861, as against 477 days of Mr. McNeese.

DISPUTE OF BOUNTY CLAIMS.

The payment of bounties to soldiers appears to have been the cause of trouble in 1863, when certain citizens who resided near the line of Lawrence County, succeeded in imposing on the commissioners of Butler County, and were paid bounties they did not deserve. In April, 1863, a meeting of the commissioners of Lawrence and Butler Counties was held to settle some disputed points about soldiers' bounties, and determine on which side of the line certain claimants for bounty lived. To avoid further trouble in the matter it was suggested that on whichever side of the line the home was, the land could be assessed in that county, and the soldier paid the bounty from the treasury of that county. A meeting was held at Portersville, September 17th to fix the boundary line, when Messrs. Sutton, Wilson, Greer and Bartley were appointed to take the southern end of the line and James Forrest, Thomas McNeese and Harvey Colbert the northern end. Samuel Leason was elected commissioner to succeed Thomas McNeese in October, and with commissioners Bartley and Greer brought the business of the year and the boundary line question to a satisfactory close.

No changes were made in the appointments for 1864, and in February a tax of fifteen mills on assessed value of property was authorized; being four mills for county purposes, three mills for state purposes, and eight mills for railroad charges. The auditors for the year 1864 apparently did not associate the 314-day services charge by the commissioner's clerk with the increased work of the times; but the commissioners did. At the close of their report auditors John H. Cratty, W. H. H. Riddle and Simeon Nixon made the following note: "We, the undersigned auditors of Butler County, having examined the foregoing account of the commissioners' clerk of Butler County, do report that Congress must either make more days in the year, or we shall compel the commissioners to commute his rations." The commissioners evidently did not agree with the auditors, for Harvey Colbert was reappointed clerk two days after the report was filed. The report of taxables in the county for 1864 showed that there were 216 citizens of the county assessed five per cent. of their incomes under the law providing for an income tax. A. C. Christy was elected a member of the board in October, 1864.

Under date of March 15, 1865, a minute was entered which recalls a tragic national event. It reads as follows: "Abraham Lincoln, president of the United States, was shot last night in Washington City by an assassin, and died this morning—requiescat in pace."

The fight against the railroad company was carried on this year by commissioners Bartley and Leason. In October William Dick was elected commissioner to succeed Abner Bartley.

In January, 1866, the commissioners reappointed the old officers, but in the latter part of the month Clerk Harvey Colbert resigned, and George W. Kneiss was appointed to succeed him. In November a vacancy was caused in the office of county treasurer by the death of W. E. Moore, and

J. Christy Moore, of Center Township, was appointed to fill the vacancy.

The tax rate of 1866 was eight mills, or nine mills lower than the rate of 1865. This rate was continued for 1867.

In May, 1867, the commissioners received bids for the erection of a new jail and sheriff's residence, and on June 14th the contract was awarded to S. G. Purvis & Company of Butler. There were no changes made in the appointments this year. Charles Hoffman was elected commissioner at the October election.

At the meeting of the board in January, 1868, the clerk's salary was placed at $700 and the attorney's was still held down to $25; but the bell-ringer had his pay increased to $150. James M. Lowe was the commissioner elected in October.

The new commissioner elected in 1869 was John S. Campbell. In September of that year George Kneiss resigned as clerk and Thomas B. White was appointed to fill the vacancy. On November 6th of this year the board elected a president in the person of Charles Hoffman, he being the first to serve under that title. One of the transactions of the commissioners for the year was to discard the old digest purchased in 1804, and to purchase a new edition of Purdon for the office.

The transaction of the commissioners in January appears to have been fixing a tax levy of seven mills and awarding the contracts for printing the auditor's report to John H. Negley for $50. Railroad matters came up again in February, and in that month the commissioners borrowed from the First National Bank for ninety days the sum of $1,500, and in March a warrant for $116,798 was issued to Robinson, banker, for railroad bonds and coupons. This transaction seems to close the business between the commissioners and the old Northwestern Railroad Company. In November, James Lowe was chosen president of the board, and before the close of the year W. H. Black was appointed attorney, and the clerk and bell-ringer were re-appointed. An estimate of the expenditures for the current year was placed at $40,000.

In April, 1871, Thomas B. White resigned as clerk to the commissioners to become postmaster of Butler, and William L. Spear succeeded him as clerk. In June the commissioners had under consideration the claims of John M. Thompson and Charles McCandless for defending Butler County in the case of Lawrence County vs. Butler County growing out of the subscription of the Northwestern Railroad Company. The claim, which was a bill for a fee of $10,000, was finally tabled until "equitably adjusted either by law or compromise." In July when the trial was resumed, James Bredin was employed to represent Butler County, the consideration being a fee of $500 and traveling expenses.

The use of iron in the superstructure of bridges in the county is first mentioned in the transaction of the commissioners in regard to bridge work in 1872. The records say that the new iron bridge in Cherry Township was completed in October and an iron bridge at Harmony near Enslens was also finished.

The commissioners appear to have led a strenuous life during 1872. Part of the trouble was caused by a threat to proceed according to law against collectors who neglected to pay off their tax duplicates before January 1, 1872. On January 8th, a record is made that every one having business with the office had fault to find with everyone and everything. Mention is made at this time of the overseers of the poor and from the entry it appears that the poor people of the county were sent to Dixmont Hospital in Allegheny County. In March, the financial embarrassment of the county treasury was relieved by an unexpected draft from Harrisburg, which enabled the commissioners to lift an overdue note of $600 held by Mrs. S. C. Sullivan. In June it appears that one-half the jurors were excused and the commissioners hurried payments to them, saying, "they are no use here—the sooner they are discharged the better for the county." On the 22nd of June an entry states that on the previous day the hardest rain that the oldest citizens remember of had fallen in the southwestern part of the county, taking away bridges and doing much damage to fences and grain. Heavy rains in August of that year damaged bridges and delayed the rebuilding of those that had already been destroyed by the floods in June.

It would appear from an entry made on October 29th, that the residents of Clearfield Township were keeping up the Irish reputation as lovers of a strenuous life and combat. After settling with the witnesses in attendance at court, the commissioners caused the following entry to be made on the minute book: "The witnesses are all from Clearfield, and a hard set of fellows they are to get along with." And again under date of October 31, "Court in session. Trying Dutchman for burning a barn near Saxonburg; found him guilty, being out only fifteen minutes."

The matter of the $10,000 fee for legal services claimed by Thompson and McCandless was under consideration in this month, and on December 22nd arbitrators were appointed. On the 28th of December Judge Kerr, James F. Robinson and Judge Mitchell met under the appointment, but nothing was accomplished. Robert Barron became a member of the board in November, 1872, and on the 25th of the month John B. McQuiston was appointed clerk to fill the vacancy caused by the death of William L. Spear, which occurred on November 24th.

The board in 1873 was composed of James P. Christley, Robert Barron, and Benjamin F. Garvin. The most important item of business transacted was the carrying out of the order of court made in September, to have all books and docket-boards, and such docket-boards as were mutilated transcribed and bound. In order to meet payment of bills and current expenses, a temporary loan of $2,448 from John Berg & Company, with the understanding that the money was to remain in the bank "to be drawn out as needed."

The board in 1874 was composed of John C. Riddle, James P. Christley and Robert Barron. E. J. Cratty was appointed clerk to succeed John B. McQuiston, and Thomas Robinson as attorney to succeed W. H. Black. The business of the commissioner's office for the year appears to have been unimportant and consisted of routine work.

James C. Donaldson was the new member elected in 1875, and was the last officer elected under the old law, which required one commissioner to be elected each year. At the meeting of the board held in February, I. S. P. DeWolf was chosen clerk at a salary of $700 per year, and Clarence Walker, attorney, at $40 per annum. In June, George Maxwell of Center Township was appointed clerk to succeed DeWolf. Affairs about the courthouse were enlivened on the night of October 18th, by an attempt made by burglars to blow up the safe in the treasurer's office. The attempt proved a failure, in so far as getting the safe doors open was concerned, and the force of the explosion wrecked the inside of the office. As a consequence of the damage to the doors of the safe, payment of warrants was checked for a few days until experts could be sent for and the doors of the safe opened. The burglars were never apprehended.

Under the new law, which provided for the election of three commissioners to serve for three years and for minority representation on the board, the following were chosen at the fall election held in November, 1875, and qualified on the first Monday of January, 1876, to serve until the first Monday of January, 1879: Robert Barron, J. T. Donaldson, and William A. Christy. Samuel McClymonds was appointed clerk for the term of three years.

In March the dispute about the treasurer's salary for the year was in progress, the board offering $2,250, believing that this was the legal interpretation of the court's decision in the matter. The case was appealed to the Supreme Court and that tribunal decided in favor of the treasurer, fixing the salary on the percentage basis. In June, 1876, the removal of the old courthouse cupola was decided upon, and a new one fitted as a clock tower ordered to be constructed. The clock for this structure was not to cost more than $900, of which the county was to pay $300 and the borough of Butler $600.

In January, 1879, the board of commissioners was composed of J. C. Donaldson, James Gribben and Jonathan Mayburry. Samuel McClymonds was reappointed clerk, and H. W. Nichols was appointed janitor, or bell-ringer, to succeed the veteran janitor, John McCollough. Clarence Walker was reappointed counsel.

The board in 1882 was composed of Charles Cochran, George W. Hays and James Collins. At the election held in November, 1881, T. I. Wilson was chosen minority member of the board, but his death occurring prior to January, Collins was appointed to fill the vacancy. Samuel T. Marshall was appointed clerk and Thomas Robinson, attorney, and the commission of the treasurer, J. H. Miller, was fixed at four per cent. of all money paid out to the amount of $55,000, and one-half per cent. of any sum over that amount. The courthouse having burned down in December, 1883, the commissioners at a meeting held in March, 1884, levied a tax of five mills for county purposes and two mills for building purposes. In June of this year, Architect J. P. Bailey was allowed four per cent. for plans, specifications and superintendence of the proposed new courthouse, and in August the proceeds of the insurance on the old building, amounting to $23,500, were set apart for the new building, together with about $19,500 from the duplicate tax list of 1884, and two mills per cent. on duplicate for ensuing six years. In December, 1884, the board authorized the issue of $65,000 in bonds in blocks of $6,000 annually, the interest not to exceed four per cent. The commissioners do not seem to have been unanimous on the bond proposition, as Mr. Collins voted against it. The contract for the erection of the courthouse was awarded to R. B. Taylor on the 2nd of December and on the 3rd of the month the sum of $21,933.33 was received from the insurance company, together with $329 interest.

An item of importance at this time was the order of Judge Hazen to have the old record book rebound and copies made of those that had been mutilated.

The commissioners who qualified on January 5, 1885, were J. C. Bredin, John C. Kelly, and J. M. Turner. Robert N. Emery was appointed clerk in January, but resigned in March and was succeeded by F. M. Shira. Dr. Linn, who was appointed first county physician in 1879, was reappointed in 1885. S. F. Bowser was appointed attorney. The principal business of the commissioners for the year was the completion of the courthouse, and routine office work. Gas was introduced as fuel in the public offices for the first time, and the commissioners seem to have had some doubt about the ultimate success of the venture, for they state in their records that the new fuel was taken on trial. Robert N. Emery, who resigned as clerk in March, was afterwards appointed courthouse watchman, and in February, 1886, Samuel T. Marshall was reelected clerk to succeed F. M. Shira. Nothing of importance was recorded during the remainder of this term.

The new board, in January, 1888, was composed of A. J. Hutchison, John C. Kelly, and B. M. Duncan. Samuel T. Marshall was reelected clerk, Newton Black attorney, and Samuel Graham jail physician.

On January 7, 1889, Enos McDonald was chosen clerk to succeed Samuel T. Marshall, and on the 10th of January, 1890, John Humphrey was appointed commissioner to succeed John C. Kelly, who had resigned.

The board in 1891 was composed of John Humphrey, Samuel T. Marshall and J. C. Kiskaddon. On the 2nd of February, Isaac Meals was elected clerk, and served through the term of three years.

The board in 1894 was composed of S. W. McCollough, Richard Kelly, and George W. Wilson. Isaac Meals was reelected clerk. Richard Kelly died in the latter part of July, 1895, and John Mitchell was appointed to fill the vacancy.

In January, 1894, the board of commissioners was composed of S. W. McCollough, Richard Kelly, and George W. Wilson. The appointments made by the board were Isaac Meals, clerk; Adam Kamerer, janitor; J. M. Painter, attorney; and Dr. J. W. Miller, jail physician. Dr. Miller died during the latter part of the year, and Dr. S. M. Bippus of Butler, was appointed to fill the vacancy, and reappointed in January, 1895. There were no changes in the appointments in 1896 and the board closed its work in December of that year with a good record.

The board was organized in January, 1897, with John Mitchell, president; D. H. Sutton, secretary; and Harmon Seaton composing the third member of the board. J. C. Kiskaddon was appointed chief clerk and L. E. Shira, transcribing clerk; George E. Robinson was appointed attorney, and Dr. S. M. Bippus was reappointed jail physician. Adam Kamerer was continued as courthouse janitor in 1897 and 1898, and in January, 1899, Dr. J. W. F. Moore was appointed jail physician. Adam Kamerer, the courthouse janitor, died in 1898, and was succeeded by Hugh Morgan.

The rebuilding of the county jail in 1898, the purchase of the county farm, and the erection of the buildings thereon, in 1899, occupied the attention of this board for a greater part of their time, and these duties were discharged with a fidelity that reflect much credit on the individual members of the board.

In January, 1900, the board was composed of John W. Gillespie, J. J. McGarvey, and John A. Eichert. J. C. Kiskaddon was reappointed clerk, Porter Lowry attorney for three years, at a salary of $400 per year, and Hugh Morgan, janitor of the courthouse. The most important business transacted by the board during the year was the completion of the building at the County Home, and the installing of the inmates. In January, 1901, the board appointed Joseph Graham superintendent of the County Home at an annual salary of $500, Mrs. Joseph Graham, matron, at a salary of $300, and Dr. A. M. Neyman, physician, at an annual salary of $225. The tax levy for this year was four and three-fourths mills for county purposes, and one and three-fourths mills for the expenses of the poor district, and the payment of bonds and interest on the County Home.

On June 25th, 1902, Solomon Dunbar was appointed commissioner to fill the vacancy caused by the death of John W. Gillespie.

The commissioners who qualified on the 1st of January, 1903, were James L. Patterson, Robert McClung, and Greer McCandless. The appointments made by the board at their first meeting were as follows: E. L. Ralston, attorney for the term of three years, at an annual salary of $400; J. C. Kiskaddon was reappointed clerk at a salary of $800 per year; E. A. McPherson, janitor of the courthouse; Dr. L. R. Hazlett, jail physician, and Miss Laura B. McClung and Mary J. Patterson, transcribing clerks.

Dr. A. M. Neyman was reappointed physician of the County Home, and the salary increased to $400 per year; Joseph Graham was reappointed superintendent, Mrs. Graham, matron, and Miss Mary Graham, assistant matron. S. M. Wright was appointed engineer.

In January, 1904, Dr. L. R. Hazlett was appointed physician to the County Home at a salary of $400 per year; Howard Graham was appointed farmer at a salary of $25 per month; Jennie Wilson, laundress at a salary of $5 per week; Sadie English, cook, at a salary of $1 per day; and S. M. Wright was continued as engineer. Dr. W. B. Clark was appointed jail physician, and Miss McClung and Miss Patterson were continued as transcribing clerks in the commissioners' office.

On the 2nd of January, 1905, the commissioners in the minutes of their meeting noted the death of Robert McClung, one of their members. On the 14th of the month John T. Kelly was appointed to fill the vacancy.

James Scott was appointed farmer at the County Home and Edward Sloan was continued as engineer. With these exceptions the officials appointed the previous year were continued. On account of the increased clerical work in the commissioners' office, caused by the county poor district and the County Home, the salary of the commissioners' clerk was increased this year to $950.

William Seibert, N. S. Grossman, and G. F. Easley qualified as commissioners in 1906, and composed the board at the close of 1908. The appointments made by the board in January, 1906, were Robert K. Grossman, clerk; James B. McJunkin, attorney; Dr. McCurdy Bricker, physician to the County Home; Dr. W. J. Grossman, jail physician; Laura McClung, Irene Easley, and Emma Seibert, transcribing clerks in the commissioners' office; E. A. McPherson, janitor of the courthouse; and Harry Grieb, caretaker of the courthouse clock. The appointment of superintendent ent of the County Home was passed over until February 1, and O. W. Stoughton was appointed superintendent at a salary of $650 per year, and Mrs. O. W. Stoughton, matron, at a salary of $350. Dr. McCurdy Bricker died in the early part of 1908, and Dr. J. C. Caldwell was appointed physician to the County Home to fill the vacancy.

A large amount of business was transacted by the board of commissioners during the term, including the repairs on the courthouse, a large amount of bridge work, and the macadamizing of a number of public roads under the direction of the State Highway Department. The first petition for improved roads under the new law was filed with the county commissioners March 6, 1906, and was for a road in Mercer Township, but the first work done was on the Three Degree Road leading from the Plank Road to Bredinville, south of Butler, in 1906. Since that time the Franklin Road has been completed in Center Township, a road to Buffalo Township, two roads in Mercer Township, a road from Valencia to the Allegheny County line, and three miles of the Butler and New Castle road in Butler Township. The record of the present board is one of hard work and a faithful performance of their public duty.

Previous to 1890 the county commissioners were paid a salary of $2.50 per day, for each day they were actively engaged in the duties of their office. In the latter year the General Assembly passed an act increasing the pay of these officers to $3.50 per day, and in 1906 a new act went into effect which fixed the salary of the commissioners at $1,200 per year.

1804 AND 1908 COMPARED.

The tax duplicates issued by the county commissioners in April, 1804, amounted to $1,475.81, distributed among the four townships. In 1905, the tax levy amounted to $2,798.02¹, distributed among the thirteen townships, as shown in the table given in this chapter. In 1906, the number of taxables given in the county was 1,644, and the tax levy was $4,116.30, distributed among the thirteen townships as given in the table published in 1906. The total valuation of taxable property is not given in any of the transactions of the commissioners' office, but it did not exceed $400,000 during any of these years.

In the table given below will be found the number of taxables, the total value of all taxable property, the amount of money at interest, and the value of all taxable real estate in the county, given by townships, for the year 1908. It must be remembered, however, that the valuation of real estate for taxable purposes in the county rarely exceeds 50 per cent. of the market or cash value, and that the real value of the real estate in the county approximates forty-six to fifty million dollars. The table below is taken from the return made by the county commissioners to the secretary of the commonwealth in 1908:

	1908.
	Number of Taxables.	Total Value of all Taxable Property.	Money at Interest.	Value of all Real Estate Taxable.
Adams Tp.....	412	$ 420,260	$ 132,830	$ 395,076
Allegheny Tp.....	339	294,819	22,541	266,722
Buffalo Tp.....	425	516,243	55,262	493,306
Butler Tp.....	1,028	905,259	127,586	846,955
Brady Tp.....	187	178,978	30,667	167,608
Clinton Tp.....	326	470,730	70,931	442,542
Clay Tp.....	441	418,235	63,114	287,107
Center Tp.....	310	414,687	32,730	388,836
Clearfield Tp.....	316	343,042	32,237	322,809
Cherry Tp.....	349	315,055	32,102	293,203
Cranberry Tp.....	310	466,724	164,514	442,603
Connoquessing Tp.....	345	530,782	87,084	335,770
Concord Tp.....	437	430,648	146,060	391,723
Donnell Tp.....	453	355,749	59,540	326,809
Forward Tp.....	355	421,029	211,703	400,320
Fairview Tp.....	494	378,412	77,660	342,844
Franklin Tp.....	311	349,174	39,843	325,451
Jefferson Tp.....	420	531,907	127,574	496,855
Jackson Tp.....	424	489,524	135,855	456,777
Lancaster Tp.....	295	351,702	49,442	329,406
Marion Tp.....	330	266,926	36,127	246,098
Mercer Tp.....	249	220,791	41,916	200,199
Middlesex Tp.....	427	492,511	216,299	449,396
Muddy Creek Tp.....	258	296,161	9,413	281,864
Oakland Tp.....	342	372,051	72,255	355,033
Penn Tp.....	545	529,761	202,343	480,821
Parker Tp.....	338	285,037	21,534	290,315
Summit Tp.....	520	541,148	113,808	506,613
Slippery Rock Tp.....	486	437,335	30,437	397,885
Venango Tp.....	464	307,765	30,099	274,758
Washington Tp.....	563	428,310	78,670	383,315

Windham Tp.	481	568,849	159,902	506,018
Worth Tp.	275	398,426	38,599	379,017
Butler Borough. .	7,516	8,687,412	1,724,669	8,234,599
Braun Boro.	188	90,327	24,184	75,008
Consequeness In g. Boro.	121	89,775	17,941	78,550
Callery Boro.	124	53,412	2,755	45,435
Evans City Boro. .	441	266,727	193,281	231,237
Eau Claire Boro. .	124	70,526	17,163	68,290
Fairview Boro.	106	42,384	20,574	34,474
Harmony Boro.	263	163,418	84,615	143,293
Harrisville Boro. .	150	88,579	144,153	75,830
Karns City Boro. .	125	51,500	21,020	44,064
Chicago Boro.	208	214,343	293,008	177,130
Mars Boro.	455	354,773	106,910	320,853
Prospect Boro. .	163	86,745	69,066	73,170
Portersville Boro. .	66	61,136	22,803	54,176
Petrolia Boro.	141	61,001	27,819	48,821
Slippery Rock Boro.	304	210,769	171,105	182,702
Saxtonburg Boro. .	161	126,213	124,958	113,248
Valencia Boro.	105	78,580	36,447	72,995
West Suburby Boro.	100	66,638	18,980	58,855
West Liberty Boro.	78	62,889	7,382	57,447
Zelienople Boro. .	465	393,271	235,220	337,941
Total	25,229	$24,855,792	$6,456,596	$23,119,696

The number of acres of cleared land in the county in 1908, 398,903; number of acres of timber land, 77,316; value of real estate, exempt from taxation, $1,806,815; number of horses and mules, 10,624; value of horses and mules, $577,208; number of neat cattle, 11,480; value of neat cattle, $207,773; value of salaries and emoluments of office, $971,115; value of stages and omnibuses, $4,142; amount of tax assessed for county purposes in 1908, $99,425; aggregate amount of state tax assessed, $25,842.

COMMISSIONERS' CLERKS.

On the 16th of November, 1803, David Dougal was appointed clerk to the county commissioners and served until January, 1808; since that time the following appointments have been made: Walter Lowrie, 1808-9-10 and 11; Robert Scott, 1812-13-14-15-16-17-18-19-20; Thomas McCleary was appointed in 1821 and his salary fixed at $100 for the year; Robert Scott was again appointed in 1822 and 1823; John Welsh in 1824; William Gibson in 1825; Campbell Purviance in 1827; Christian Meehling, 1828 and 1829; Meehling resigned February 17, 1829, and Nelson Purviance was appointed at a salary of $50;

1830-31 and 32 Nelson Purviance filled the appointment, beginning at a salary of $90 per year, which in the latter year was increased to $1 per day; William Campbell was appointed for the years 1833-34 and 35. His salary was at first $70 per year, the second year it was $1 per day, and the third year $1.25 per day. Jacob Zeigler was appointed in 1836; George W. Zeigler in 1840; William Timblin, 1841; A. S. McBride, 1842-43-44; John Bredin, Jr., 1845; George W. Crozier in 1847; James A. McNair, 1851; John Sullivan, 1851-52 and 53; Thomas Robinson, 1854; Samuel Marks, 1855-56-57; S. P. Irvine, 1858; W. S. Jack, 1861; John Niblock was appointed in the latter part of 1861 to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Jack. In the early part of 1862 Niblock resigned and Harvey Colbert was appointed; Colbert was reappointed in 1863-64-65-66; George Kneiss, 1867 and 68; in 1869 Thomas B. White. White resigned April 8, 1871, to become postmaster of Butler, and William Spear was appointed to fill the vacancy. Spear died in December, 1872, and J. B. McQuiston was appointed for the remainder of that year and for 1873. Eli Cratty in 1874 and 75; I. S. P. DeWolf was appointed February 13, 1875, and on May 21 J. B. Storey was appointed; Samuel McMlymonds, 1876-77-78-79-80 and 81; Samuel T. Marshall 1882-83 and 84; Robert N. Emery, 1885, resigned in March and F. M. Shira was appointed. Samuel T. Marshall, 1886-87 and 88, resigned in December and Enos McDonald was appointed; 1889, and 1890, Enos McDonald; 1891-92-93-94-95 and 96, Isaac Meals; 1897-98-99-1900-1-2-3-4-5, J. C. Kiskaddon; 1906-7 and 1908, Robert K. Grossman.

CONSCIENCE MONEY.

"Happy is the man that keeps a good conscience." The following incident is related by Rev. Loyal Young, deceased, in his book entitled "From Dawn to Dusk," and which is a record of events that happened in a busy life of fifty years, most of which was spent in Butler. Rev. Young was pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Butler from 1832 to 1867, and the incident that he relates happened in 1850. On his way to prayer meeting on the evening of May 29th of that year, he passed the postoffice and received a letter post marked Cincinnati. The letter was written with a pen, but in imitation of print. On opening the letter Rev. Young found enclosed bank bills amounting to $240. The following note, also in imitation of print, was attached to the bill: "Rev. Loyal Young, I am told you are an honest man. This money belongs to the county of Butler. Pay it to the county treasurer." There was no name signed to the note and no way of identifying the person who had sent the money. Rev. Young held the matter under advisement and the following day he handed the money to the county commissioners as the proper medium through which to put it in the possession of the treasurer. The commissioners afterwards handed Rev. Young $10 as a donation for his services in helping to save the county the money. Rev. Young accepted the money with reluctance, but never felt satisfied that he had done so, and his own mind was never completely at ease until he had paid back the money to the county treasurer with interest. He argued in his own mind thus: "If this $240 belongs to the county, it all belongs to the county; and though the commissioners have a right in the circumstances to make a donation, the receiver can hardly be justified in retaining a dollar of what the sender of the money desired to go to the county." In writing about the circumstance Rev. Young concludes with these words: "When a dishonest act has been secretly perpetrated and restitution made, why need any one know it but the perpetrator and his all-seeing Maker?"

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

COURTHOUSES.

From the organization of the county until 1807 the business of the courts was transacted in rented quarters. The sessions of the court were held in a log building that stood on the south side of the Diamond on the present site of the Nixon Hotel, and the court records and dockets were kept at various houses in the town. In 1807 a brick courthouse was built on the site of the present building. It was a plain, but substantial building, having east and west gables and a wooden cupola in the center of the roof, in which was hung a bell, which is said to be still doing duty upon one of the churches in Prospect. The original building was in the form of a rectangle and stood on the property line, facing the east. North and south wings were added, which were used for the county offices. The courtroom was on the first floor and was paved with brick. The bar was separated from the audience room by a high wooden partition and a rail that was almost the height of a man's head. The furniture was plain and substantial as befitted the time. The north wing of the building was divided into two offices, the one facing Main Street, being occupied by the county commissioners, and that in the rear by the registrar and recorder. These offices had an entrance from Main Street and from the North Diamond. The south wing was divided in the same way, the front office being occupied by the prothonotary, and that in the rear by the sheriff. In addition to the Main Street and Diamond Street doors, the sheriff's office had a door that opened into the court room inside of the bar. In the rear of the building was a large yard with a brick wall around it, about eight or nine feet high. This yard was paved with brick and contained the coal house and a number of small outbuildings. The second floor of

U. P. CHURCH, EAU CLAIRE

HOME OF ALEXANDER HUNTER IN IRELAND

WALDORF HOTEL AND BARN, EVANS CITY

LOWRY HOUSE, BUTLER

FIRST SCHOOL HOUSE—BUILT IN 1808
(On So. McKean St.)

the main building was divided into four apartments for the use of the grand jury, jury rooms and waiting rooms. This building was used for school purposes in its early history until school buildings could be provided in the borough. It was also frequently used for holding religious services by congregations without a regular house of worship of their own, and for holding Sunday schools which were organized at an early date.

The records of the county commissioners show that on January 6, 1807, the contract for erecting this building was let to Alexander Hill, and that from February 7, 1807, to September 8, 1809, he was paid the sum of $4,793.34, less $325.27 deducted by the referees for arbitrators to whom the differences between himself and the commissioners were submitted. A number of disbursements were made in 1824 for doors in the jail and courthouse, glazing windows and placing extra irons in and around the jail. Just when the north and south wings were built, it is not definitely known, but old residents of the town who can remember something about the first courthouse say that they were not built until some time after the original building was erected.

This building answered the purposes of the county until 1851, when the question of erecting new public buildings in Butler was presented to the county. As has always been the case when extensive improvements were suggested, the proposition met with some opposition on the part of the tax-payers. The fact that the public buildings of the county were not located near its geographical center had been the cause of complaint on the part of some of the residents in the country districts, and on January 26, 1852, the opponents of the scheme to rebuild the courthouse met at the Associate Reformed Church near Sunbury, and organized by electing John Murrin president, Thomas C. Thompson, Capt. James Stewart, Robert McCandless, John Prior, William Carothers, Alexander Gallagher, vice-presidents, and George Boyd, J. W. Christy, S. S. Mahard, Allen Wilson and Patrick McBride, secretaries. A series of resolutions were adopted, the gist of which was that were new buildings to be erected, the center of the county should be selected, and the commissioners should be empowered to purchase a tract of land in such central position, and plot the area not required for public purposes into lots. The friends of this proposition saw in it an easy method of obtaining new buildings without increasing taxation; but they did not consider the vested interests of the people of Butler. This removal of the public building to the center of the county would have located the county seat at or near the present site of Holyoke Church in Center Township, the location originally selected by the committee appointed by the governor of the state in 1800 to locate the county seats of the new counties that had been erected that year, but which was changed to Butler at the suggestion of the Cunninghams.

The question of removing the county seat seems to have been seriously considered throughout the county, and on the 19th of February, 1852, an anti-removal meeting was held at Butler, which was presided over by John White of Franklin Township. At this meeting it was decided to take active and aggressive measures toward preventing the removal of the county seat to another location and to that end township committees were appointed to obtain signatures to a petition which was to be presented to the legislature on the subject.

The petition, bearing numerous signatures, was presented to the legislature, and in May that body passed a bill authorizing the commissioners of Butler County to borrow $20,000, at six per cent, for a period of twenty years to be expended in the erection of public buildings. The act also provided that the lenders of the sum of money mentioned should not be subject to taxation for that sum. This action of the legislature settled the county seat removal project for all time, and insured the erection of a new courthouse at Butler.

After the passage of this bill by the legislature and its approval by the governor, the board of commissioners secured the services of Architect Barr, and afterwards, in their official capacity, spent twelve days visiting the county seats of Lawrence, Beaver, Allegheny, Washington, Green, Fayette, Blair and Indiana Counties, examining their buildings. As the result of this trip the commissioners decided to build a more imposing and costly edifice than was at first contemplated, and this measure met with more opposition on the part of those who favored the county seat removal scheme. It was argued by the opposition that a much cheaper building would answer the purpose just as well and that a great amount of money would thus be saved to the taxpayers. Nevertheless bids were received for the proposed building, and on July 16, 1852, the contract was awarded to William Bell for $37,000. This amount was increased by extras to $40,000. After its completion the new courthouse was regarded as one of the largest and best public buildings in western Pennsylvania, and remained the pride of the county for more than a third of a century.

Work on the new building was commenced in 1853, but it was not completed until 1855. During the period of construction of the new courthouse, court was held in the basement story of the old Presbyterian Church on East Jefferson Street, and the county officers had their quarters in various parts of the town. A writer in the Butler Eagle in the latter part of the eighties thus describes the courthouse of 1853:

"It was built of excellent materials, native sandstone and brick, the stone work being cut in a substantial manner, and of a style of architecture which possessed great dignity and beauty. The Goddess of Liberty with scales so delicately balanced in her right hand and the sword of Justice in the other so ingeniously carved on the front gable was suggestive and the statue of Gen. Richard Butler, who fell at St. Clair's defeat in 1791 and after whom the town and county were named, was admired by all who viewed the structure. So much was this statue prized that when it became necessary to remove the building somewhat, it was carefully lowered and finally placed on the comb of the roof in front of the improved court house of 1877. This improvement was made in the fall of 1877 under the supervision of the then board of commissioners, J. C. Donaldson, Robert Barrons and W. A. Christy. The improvement cost about $10,000. It consisted of a new roof and a change in the shape of the ceiling, replastering, frescoing and a modification of the cupola with the addition of a clock. It was much improved in appearance, but was still not large enough for present uses. Malcolm Graham, then of Butler, had the contract. With the purchase of additional buildings for some of the offices, it would have answered the needs of the county for perhaps fifty years. This idea would have been probably carried out had the building not been destroyed by fire December 11, 1883."

The courthouse of 1853 stood back from the property line of the street some distance, and was surrounded by an iron picket fence about six feet high. A similar iron fence at one time surrounded the Diamond Park on the east side of Main Street. At the time of the controversy over the removal of the county building to a central location the population of the county was a little more than thirty thousand and the population of Butler borough according to the census of 1850 was 1,148.

The addition of the town block in the cupola of the courthouse in 1877 was the beginning of a new era in the customs of the people of Butler. Previous to that time the ringing of the courthouse bell at 11 o'clock on Sunday mornings called the people to divine services held in the various churches. This custom had prevailed for many years and the official bell-ringer for probably a quarter of a century was John McCollough, who was janitor of the courthouse, and who is still residing in Butler. The old courthouse bell had a magnificent tone, and on a clear day could be heard nine or ten miles from the town, and after the establishing of the clock in the cupola it was the custom of the country people for four or five miles out of town to set their time-pieces by the striking of the hour by the "Town Clock." This bell was destroyed in the fire of December 11, 1883. The custom was not revived after the new courthouse was completed.

THE COURTHOUSE OF 1884.

Immediately after the fire of December 11, 1883, the commissioners set about to get temporary quarters for the court and county offices. The basement of the Methodist Episcopal Church was secured for the holding of court, and it was so used for the balance of the December term of Quarter Sessions, which was in session at the time of the fire. The county offices were established in different parts of the town for the time being, or until the commissioners could provide places for them. After some discussion and examination the English Lutheran Church building, formerly Witherspoon Institute, was leased for a term of two years, and was occupied by the court and county officers.

At the March term of the Quarter Sessions Court held in 1884, the first legal step was taken toward the erection of a new courthouse. During the session of the regular term of court the commissioners presented a paper to the court announcing the destruction of the courthouse by fire and accompanied with the statement of the financial condition of the county. Judge James Bredin, who was then presiding, submitted the question to the grand jury of which James D. Anderson, of Penn Township, was foreman. The court amplified his remarks on the subject by suggesting to the grand jury the wisdom of erecting a commodious and substantial building. The grand jury in their final presentment to court reported favorably, and advising the county commissioners to proceed with the rebuilding of the courthouse with whatever enlargements might be found necessary for the accommodation of the public business and recommending that they avail themselves of the services of experienced architects. In their presentment, the jury expressed the belief that such a building could be erected at a cost of $85,000.

The recommendation of the grand jury and the suggestion of an $85,000 building caused opposition, and when the question was again submitted to the grand jury at the June term of court, Judge McJunkin, who was then presiding, discouraged the proposition to erect an expensive building and expressed his views on the subject to the grand jury. This grand jury, of which the late Nathan M. Slater, of Butler, was the foreman, reported in favor of the new building, but placed the probable cost at $50,000. Some question having been raised as to the regularity of the drawing of the jury for the March and June sessions, nothing further was done until the September court, when the question was again referred to the grand jury, of which Henry Buhl, of Forward Township, was the foreman. This grand jury recommended that the new courthouse be built of stone or brick, or such materials as the commissioners of the county, after diligent search and inquiry of good mechanics and master workmen, think best, and the jury further recommended that the commissioners use all economy possible in the construction of a durable and sufficient building.

In the meantime James P. Bailey, of Pittsburg, had been selected as architect and the general plan of the building agreed upon. Three months were occupied in preparing the plans and specifications. Sealed bids were invited by publication for the erection of the building which were opened by S. T. Marshall, clerk of the commissioners, on the 13th day of September, 1884, in the courtroom and in the presence of the judges of the court, and a large number of citizens. The bids, of which there were fifteen, ranging from $117,700 to $182,000, were read aloud by Jacob Zeigler, of the Butler Herald, and were transcribed on the commissioner's minute book by the clerk of courts, W. B. Dodds.

The commissioners left the matter open for discussion for some time after the bids were opened, and they finally awarded the contract to R. B. Taylor, who was the lowest bidder and invited him to enter into a contract. Taylor's bid of $117,700 included all the work except that of frescoing, heating apparatus and the furniture for the bench and bar. Nothing was done by the commissioners until the meeting of the December court, when a bill of equity was filed on the part of those who were opposed to erecting such an expensive building. A preliminary injunction was granted, as prayed for, by Judge McJunkin, and on their petitions to court, Taylor, the contractor, and Bailey, the architect, were permitted to become co-defendants to the bill with the commissioners. Upon this, rules to show cause were issued and answers were filed. After hearing, the rules were made absolute. The December grand jury, of which D. R. Kennedy, of Muddy creek Township, was foreman, protested against the erection of the courthouse on the Bailey plan as being too expensive and extravagant, condemned the stone walls proposed and wanted a fire-proof building erected at the cost of $76,000. The old board of commissioners retired at the close of 1884, and the new board, composed of John M. Turner, of Parker Township; J. C. Bredin, of Clay Township, and John C. Kelly, of Adams Township, took their seats on the first Monday of January, 1885. The litigation over the contract for the new courthouse was resumed by Bailey and Taylor, who took out a writ of error and the case was heard on January 23, 1885, in the Supreme Court, then in session in Philadelphia. After a hearing this tribunal dissolved the injunction granted by the courts of Butler County, at the cost of the plaintiffs. After some further delay the commissioners ratified the contract entered into by the old board with Bailey and Taylor.

Owing to the delay caused by the legal controversy over the letting of the contract, work was not begun on the new building until April 6, 1885, and was completed in July of the following year.

COURTHOUSE OF 1908.

When the new courthouse was completed and occupied in 1885, it was imagined that the county would be amply provided for for at least fifty years. The constant increase in population and the consequent increase in business of the court of the county in the last twenty-five years created the necessity of enlarging the quarters of the public officers and providing means for the adequate protection of the county dockets and court records. On the 1st of March, 1906, N. S. Grossman, William Seibert, and G. F. Easley, county commissioners, employed J. C. Fulton, of Uniontown, Pennsylvania, as architect to prepare plans and specifications for the remodeling and enlarging of the courthouse. On March 8, 1907, a contract was let to George Schenck, of Butler, and work was commenced in the same month. The repairs included the moving of the side walls out to the street line, the addition of a third story, a new roof, and the fire-proofing of the vaults in all the offices of the first floor, and in the basement. The total cost of the improvements was about $155,000, to provide for the payment of which, the commissioners issued bonds to the amount of $125,000 on October 1, 1907, and the second issue of bonds on October 1, 1908, to the amount of $30,000. On May 8, 1907, the documents of the various offices of the courthouse were removed to the sixth floor of the Butler County National Bank Building, where quarters were provided during the time that the repair work was being done.

The heating plant in the new building was installed by the Armstrong Warming and Ventilating Company, of Pittsburg. The decorating was done by the William G. Andrews Decorative Company, of Clinton, Iowa; the marble wainscoting and file floors by the Logan Company, of Pittsburg; the fire-proofing by the Expanded Metal Fire Proofing Company, of Pittsburg; the fixtures by the Morreau Gas Fixture Manufacturing Company, of Cleveland, Ohio; the counters by the Art Metal Construction Company, of Jamestown, New York; the furniture by A. H. Andrews Company, of Chicago, Ill.; the slate roofing by Carl Barnard, of Butler, and the gutters and valleys by J. G. & W. Campbell, of Butler. The building was completed and ready for occupancy the middle of October, 1908.

When the first steps were taken towards the remodeling of the courthouse in March, 1906, an advisory committee composed of five members of the bar and two local contractors were appointed to assist the commissioners and architect in preparing the plan and specifications. This committee, which rendered valuable and acceptable services, consisted of Hon. James M. Galbreath, Alexander Mitchell, Levi M. Wise, Everett L. Ralston, and S. F. Bowser, of the bar, and George Schenck and Ed. Weigand, of the local contractors and builders.

The courthouse of 1908 is an edifice that the people of Butler County can call the attention of the passing stranger to with some pride. The interior is well finished, the decorations beautiful, and the mural paintings illustrating historic places and scenes in the county, show an artistic taste in keeping with the age. The building is well heated, well lighted, and absolutely fireproof. Compared to its predecessors it is a magnificent palace, but yet not out of keeping with the dignity and the important position the county holds in the commonwealth, and it will long stand as a credit to its builders and the public spirit of the citizens of the county.

COUNTY JAILS.

According to Brackenridge's "History of Western Pennsylvania," the first prison in Butler was Bowen's pig-pen, which stood a short distance east of the log house in which the first court of the county was held in 1803. The first jail of which there is any definite record in the county was built by Abraham Brinker and stood on the corner of South Washington Street and the Vogeley Alley, on the site now occupied by the residence of Mrs. Schultz. This old building was constructed of logs and brick and was used for many years as a cabinet-maker's repair shop, and was only torn down about the beginning of the present century. From the records of the transactions of the county commissioners in 1804, it would appear that work had been commenced on the public building, for on January 16th a warrant was drawn to Samuel Meals for "iron work on the public prison." In May of the same year James Blashford was paid for carpenter work done on the jail, and on the 7th of June the commissioners settled with Abraham Brinker for building the jail "according to agreement." Later in the year warrants were drawn to William Freeman for plank used in the jail, and to Matthew Thompson for making spikes. In the following year Benjamin White was paid for thirty logs and one thousand brick, for the county jail, and in 1806 Paris Bratton was paid for building a picket fence about the jail lot. This old log building appears to have answered the purpose of a public prison until 1817, when the new stone jail was finished.

THE FIRST STONE JAIL.

From the same records in the commissioners' office it appears that John Negley of Butler began the erection of a stone jail on the site of the present jail in 1812. From various causes the work was delayed and the building was not completed until 1817. This building answered the purposes of the county for almost half a century, and was not replaced until 1867. In 1821 the commissioners authorized the jail doors to be covered with sheet iron and in 1830, sheet iron was placed on the west wall of the prison room, and other repairs were made to add to the security of the building. The iron used in these repairs was secured with much difficulty and was hauled from Pittsburg on wagons.

The old prison was a gloomy enough affair, and while it would not be regarded as a safe place in which to keep criminals of the present day, it answered its purpose very well. During these years the jail yard was surrounded by a stone wall and the prisoners were allowed to exercise in the yard for an hour or so every day. The old prison was provided with a dunegon, which was located in the basement, and was used only for the safe keeping of desperate criminals. A large iron ring was fastened in the stone floor of this dungeon, to which heavy iron shackles were fastened, and when the prisoner was thus secured he had little chance of escape. It is said that Mohawk was confined in this part of the jail a part of the time while he was kept a prisoner, and after his execution the iron shackles and manacles were kept hanging on the wall and were a source of terror and wonder to the bad boys of the town who heard many weird stories about them.

In May, 1867, the county commissioners awarded a contract to S. G. Purvis & Company of Butler for building a new jail. The stone prison was enlarged to its present dimensions and the sheriff's residence was built on the street line in front of the prison. With some repairs and additional cells constructed of boiler plate, this prison lasted until 1898, when the interior was torn out and the building remodeled.

On the 5th of January, 1898, the county commissioners opened bids for the construction of the jail and sheriff's residence and the contract was awarded to the Van Dorn Iron Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, for $19,924. On March 4th of the same year the commissioners issued bonds to the amount of $20,000 at three and one-half per cent. interest to pay for the expenses of remodeling the jail. The stone work on the prison was sublet to George Schaffner of Butler and the contract for the carpenter work and finishing was let to George Schenck of Butler. While the building was being repaired, Sheriff W. B. Dodds kept his prisoners in the Mercer County jail. The new prison is provided with two tiers of cells and will accommodate about forty prisoners. On the third floor there is located a separate apartment for women and children and a hospital room for the care of the sick. The entire building is brick, with the best sanitary appliances, and compares favorably with similar prisons in the state.

RECENT JAIL ESCAPES.

During the existence of the old jail built in 1867 there were a number of jail escapes and deliveries, the most important of which was that of May 4, 1892, when James F. Mills (the murderer of Dugan), James Britton, Jesse Smith, T. J. Black, Charles Miller and Joseph Gibson succeeded in "jimmying" the locks of their cells and escaping to the roof of the building and thence to the street. Mills, Britton and Smith were recaptured, and the others have never been heard of since.

When the new prison was built in 1898 it was guaranteed to be "pig tight and bull strong." In fact it was supposed to be so secure that it would be impossible for anyone to break out. As a matter of fact no one has broken out, but there have been a number of clever escapes effected with the aid of outsiders.

In May, 1902, Clyde Adams was confined in the county jail on the charge of larceny. On the evening of May 7th his escape was accomplished in a clever manner while the family of Sheriff Hoon were in the parlor of the jail residence and fancied that everything about the prison was secure. Adams was assisted by his sweetheart, Maggie Houck, who was a domestic employed by the sheriff's family, and by Lee Coovert and Abbie Houck, who were on the outside of the jail. The conspirators had arranged their plans so that Maggie Houck managed to secure the keys to the prison when no one in the sheriff's family was watching her, and unlocking the prison door, allowed Adams to walk out of the front door of the sheriff's residence. Adams was met on the outside by Coovert and the two girls, and the party made their escape into Ohio. Subsequently Adams and Maggie Houck were married and they were living in the vicinity of Youngstown when they were apprehended and brought back to Butler. Adams pleaded guilty to the charge of jail breaking at the December term of court of 1902, and was sent six months to the workhouse. His wife and her sister, Abbie Houck, stood trial on the charge of assisting a prisoner to escape, were found guilty and sentenced to pay fines, which they served out in jail. Coovert entered the plea of nolle contendere to the charge against him, and was sentenced to three months to jail.

On the night of January 14, 1906, John Mininger broke jail by sawing the bars in one of the windows and letting himself down to the street by means of a rope. He had previously secured tools and saws from an unknown source and had tampered with the lock on his cell door.

John Rushnough escaped on the night of May 9, 1906, by the use of a skeleton key with which he unlocked the iron doors leading into the hall of the sheriff's residence and relocked them again as he passed out. This escape was accomplished in a clever manner and the prisoner was never apprehended.

A daylight delivery took place on September 14, 1906, when Jerry Hall, who was in jail on the charge of horse stealing, and Larry Campbell, who had been committed on the charge of larceny, succeeded in "jimmying" the door from the men's corridor into the elevator shaft of the prison and dropping down to the first floor. This was accomplished about dinner time, and when the attendants at the jail went to give the prisoners their dinner and opened the door into the elevator shaft, the two prisoners rushed out, gained the street, and succeeded in making their escape.

THE CAPTURE AND DEATH OF THE BIDDLE BROTHERS.

THEIR CRIME.

During the winter of 1901 the city of Pittsburg and the suburban towns were terrorized by a series of robberies, hold-ups and murders committed by a gang of desperate characters who made the city their headquarters. On the morning of April 12, 1901, the residence of Thomas H. Kahney, who lived at Mt. Washington, Pittsburg, was entered by masked burglars who attempted to chloroform Mrs. Kahney and shot and instantly killed Mr. Kahney. This robbery was the boldest that had been committed that year and the murder was wanton and uncalled for. The leaders of the gang of robbers were supposed to be Ed Biddle and his brother, John Biddle, and their accomplice was Walter Dorman. These men were under suspicion for the Kahney murder, and on the day following the murder, County Detective Robinson, of Allegheny County, Officer Fitzgerald of the city detective force of Pittsburg, Inspector Gray, of the police force, and Patrolman Wess of the police force, went to a house where they had been informed that three men and a woman were in hiding, who were wanted by the officers. The officers entered the house and arrested John Biddle without any trouble. They then went up to the second floor where they found Ed Biddle and a woman named Jessie Bodyne. A fight ensued in which revolvers were used, and Officer Fitzgerald was instantly killed, while Ed Biddle was shot twice and dangerously wounded. Having secured their prisoners the officers went immediately to a house on Webster Avenue, where they found Walter Dorman and Jennie Seebers and arrested them.

Ed Biddle was taken to Mercy Hospital where his wounds were treated and after his recovery was taken to the Allegheny County jail and confined there with his brother "Jack" and Walter Dorman. Jack Biddle was tried for the murder of Thomas H. Kahney and Ed Biddle was tried on the charge of being an accomplice. They were convicted and sentenced to die on December 12, 1901. Walter Dorman turned state's evidence at the trial and received a penitentiary sentence. After his conviction and sentence, Ed Biddle sent a plea to the governor asking that he be not langed on the same day with his brother, but that the executions take place on separate days. In compliance with this petition, the governor changed the time for the execution of Jack Biddle to January 14, 1902, and that of Ed to January 16. In the meantime a plea for commutation of sentence to life imprisonment was prepared and sent to the governor and a reprieve was granted to February 25th for the execution of Jack Biddle, and February 27th, 1902, for Ed Biddle. Jessie Bodyne and Jennie Seebers, the two women who were arrested with the Biddles and Dorman, had been released on their own recognizance by the court, their being no charges against them.

THE ESCAPE.

Pending the execution of their sentence, the two Biddle men were confined in murderers' row in the Allegheny County jail, at Pittsburg, and were under heavy guard. Having previously sawed the bars of their cells and having been supplied with revolvers and ammunition, the two Biddle men broke out of their cells early on Thursday morning, January 30, 1902, overpowered the prison guard and made their escape through the house of the warden of the jail, onto the streets. Before leaving the prison they had locked the prison guards in the cells that they had vacated, and had supplied themselves with citizens' clothing taken from the guard's wardrobe. After leaving the jail the two convicts went to a house in Allegheny where they remained all day in hiding and until late that night. The escape of the Biddles was not discovered until after daylight on Thursday morning, and then it was found that they had been assisted in their escape by Mrs. Kate Soffel, wife of Peter K. Soffel, the warden of the jail, and that she had supplied the prisoners with the steel saws, the revolvers, and the keys with which they had unlocked the doors of the prison into the warden's residence and thence made their escape to the street. Mrs. Soffel was said to be in love with Ed Biddle and as she had disappeared and could not be found, it was believed that she had gone away with the fugitives. The entire police force of the city of Pittsburg and the detectives of Allegheny County were put to work on the case, but were unable to find any trace of either of the Biddles or of Mrs. Soffel.

It afterward developed that the fugitives after escaping from jail had gone to a house in Allegheny where they met Mrs. Soffel, and remained until Thursday night. They then left the city by way of the Perrysville Road, and at Etna they stole a horse and sleigh and drove over the Plank Road to Cooperstown in Butler County. They arrived at the boarding-house of J. A. Snyder, in Cooperstown, on Friday morning, January 31, where they called for breakfast and had their horse fed. From Cooperstown they drove over the Plank Road to Butler, crossed over to Springdale, and drove in the direction of Herman Station. They turned, however, crossed over the Lookout Avenue bridge to the north side, drove out Penn Street to Mercer Street, thence to New Castle Street, and thence followed the New Castle Road to Mt. Chestnut, where they arrived at the hotel of James J. Stevenson a little after noon, and called for their dinner. After they had eaten their dinner Mrs. Soffel and Ed Biddle, who represented themselves to be husband and wife, retired to a room on the second floor of the hotel, while Jack Biddle remained on watch on the outside.

THE PURSUIT.

The Pittsburg officers were entirely at sea on Friday morning, and no trace of the fugitives had been found in Allegheny County. Butler County officers did not believe that they would attempt to escape through Butler County, and when the report came from Cooperstown that two men and a woman had been seen at that place, who were believed to be the Biddle brothers and Mrs. Soffel, the story was laughed at. About half past eight o'clock, Edward Brown, of Cooperstown, called up Harry T. Rattigan of the Herald office at Butler, on the telephone, and told him that the Biddles had passed through Cooperstown on their way toward Butler, and asked him to notify the officers. An hour later Frank Holliday, of Cooperstown, drove into Butler, and notified Deputy Sheriff J. R. Hoon that he had seen the Biddles on the Plank Road on their way to Butler, and that they were only a short distance behind him driving in. A posse was organized, consisting of Deputy Sheriff J. R. Hoon, Chief of Police Robert Ray, Aaron E. Thompson, and Frank Holliday, and the pursuit was commenced.

The rig driven by the fugitives was easily traced from the peculiar manner in which the horse was hitched to the sleigh and from the fact that the parties in the sleigh did not have lap robes, although it was a bitterly cold day. The Butler posse followed the fugitives toward Herman Station, but finding that they were off the trail returned to Butler and took up the trail again at New Castle Street in the afternoon.

In the meantime the Pittsburg officers were notified and at three o'clock in the afternoon Detectives John Roach, A. H. Swinehart and Charles McGovern, of the Bureau of Detectives of Pittsburg, arrived at Butler on the Bessemer train and were met at the depot by J. A. Snyder, of Cooperstown, with a team and sleigh ready for the road. The county commissioners of Allegheny County had offered a reward of $5,000 for the return of the two Biddle men dead or alive, or $2,500 for either one of them. The Biddles were known to be men of desperate character, capable of committing any crime to effect their escape, and it was believed that they would die before they would allow themselves to be recaptured. The Pittsburg officers had the death of Fitzgerald in mind and a long list of crimes committed by the Biddles, and they came prepared for a desperate encounter. The officers were armed with Winchester repeating shot-guns loaded with buck-shot, and each man carried his revolver in his pocket. By this time the trail of the fugitives was easily found, and the Pittsburg posse left at once in the direction of Prospect, traveling over the New Castle Road. At Mt. Chestnut they inquired at William Watson's store and were told that a rig answering the description given had passed the store a little after dinner going in the direction of Prospect. The posse drove on to Prospect, where they met the Butler officers, but at that point the trail had been lost. The tired horses were changed at this place for fresh ones and the officers telephoned to the surrounding points in the county endeavoring to pick up the lost trail. While they were waiting, a telephone message from Mt. Chestnut said that the Biddles had just left the hotel at Mt. Chestnut, going in the direction of Prospect. The two posses then started back toward Butler together.

While this pursuit was going on Mrs. Soffel and Ed Biddle were resting quietly at the Stevenson Hotel in Mt. Chestnut and Jack Biddle was keeping watch on the outside. When the second posse passed Mt. Chestnut, Jack Biddle hitched up the horse and sleigh, called his companions, and they left Mt. Chestnut, following the New Castle Road. Ignorance of the roads in the country and the general direction in which they were traveling caused them to keep to the main road, and to drive directly to their death. About a mile from Mt. Chestnut they stopped at the farm house of J. F. Wagner, which one of the Biddles entered and stole a shot-gun, but fortunately could find no ammunition. They then went on, and about midway between Mt. Chestnut and Prospect at a dip of the road, near the farm of Elliott Robb, they encountered the officers.

When about one hundred yards from the Biddles the officers identified the rig and immediately got ready for action. The horses were placed in charge of J. A. Snyder, and the two posses formed a line across the road and called for the fugitives to halt. Ed Biddle rose in the sleigh and fired his revolver at the posse, and a general battle ensued, in which both Ed and Jack Biddle were mortally wounded and Mrs. Soffel was slightly wounded by a shot from a revolver. Deputy Sheriff Hoon took charge of the prisoners and they were brought to Butler and lodged in jail about six o'clock in the evening. The shooting took place about five o'clock in the evening, and as the prisoners had to be hauled a distance of seven miles through a blinding snowstorm which had come up, their condition was a pitiable one when they arrived in Butler. The two Biddles were taken to the third floor of the jail where they were given surgical attention, and Mrs. Soffel was taken to the Butler County General Hospital where she was kept under guard. Realizing that death was near at hand, Ed Biddle asked for a priest, and Rev. Father Walsh, of Butler, was sent for and heard his confession on Friday night, and the confession of Jack Biddle on Saturday afternoon. Jack Biddle died at 7:35 p. m. on Saturday, February 1, and Ed Biddle died at 11 o'clock Saturday night.

The news that the Biddles had been captured reached Pittsburg about 6 o'clock Friday evening, and caused the greatest excitement. The Pittsburg newspapers chartered a special train and about 10 o'clock in the evening arrived in Butler, bringing with them all the newspaper reporters available in the city, the chief of police of Pittsburg, and a number of the officers of Detective Bureau of Allegheny County, as well as a number of extra telegraph operators sent out by the Western Union and the Postal Telegraph companies to handle the news. That night all the telegraph wires leading out of Butler were kept hot and inquiries came pouring in from newspapers all over the United States, asking for an account of the battle. During the two days following special writers from Chicago and New York papers were on the ground and artists from several of the large weekly illustrated papers of the country were here taking pictures of the various places at which the Biddles had stopped and of the battle-ground.

On Sunday, February 2, Coroner John L. Jones held an inquest on the bodies of the Biddle brothers, which was attended by John R. Henninger, district attorney of Butler County, and A. M. Christley, and William Z. Murrin on the part of Sheriff Thomas R. Hoon. The jury was composed of William A. Stein, Louis B. Stein, Jacob Keck, Esq., J. A. Walter, A. M. Flack and Harry T. Rattigan. The witnesses before the inquest were John Roach, A. H. Swinehart, A. E. Thompson, Frank Holliday, J. A. Snyder and Deputy Sheriff J. R. Hoon. Previous to the holding of the inquest an autopsy was held by Dr. J. C. Atwell and Dr. McCurdy Bricker, which was witnessed by Drs. George K. McAdoo, J. J. Schultis, W. C. McCandless, G. J. Peters, J. McAlpin, R. H. Pillow and J. C. Boyle.

ED BIDDLE A SUICIDE.

The evidence presented before the inquest was that when the posse met the Biddles on the road, Ed Biddle pulled a revolver and began to shoot. Then the shooting became general on both sides. The autopsy revealed the fact that after shooting at the officers Ed Biddle had turned his revolver on himself and inflicted a wound in the region of the heart that would in itself have proved fatal. The verdict returned by the coroner's jury after hearing all the evidence, was that Ed Biddle had come to his death by a gun shot wound inflicted by himself, and that John Biddle had come to his death while resisting arrest. The jury relieved the officers of all responsibility and commended them for their brave conduct. The fact that the Biddles intended to cheat the gallows in the event that they failed in making their escape from jail was developed after the inquest, when on examining their clothing a quantity of strychnine pellets were discovered hidden in the waistband of Jack Biddle's trousers.

On Sunday evening the bodies of the Biddles were placed in the corridor of the residence part of the jail and the doors opened to the public. For three hours a continuous stream of people passed the coffins of the dead desperadoes. On Monday, February 3, the bodies were taken to Pittsburg by the Butler County officers and turned over to the officials of Allegheny County. Subsequently a controversy arose over the reward offered by the commissioners of Allegheny County, the Pittsburg officers putting in a claim for all of it. The Butler County officers contested the claim and carried the matter into the courts of Allegheny County, but a settlement was agreed upon and the reward was divided among all the officers connected with the capture.

Mrs. Soffel, who had taken such a prominent part in the escape of the Biddles, was kept at the Butler County General Hospital until she had recovered from the shock brought on by the exposure to the inclement weather on Friday, January 31, and the bullet wound she received in the breast, and was then returned to Allegheny County. She was tried on the charge of assisting the Biddle brothers in escaping from jail, convicted and served her sentence in the penitentiary. Subsequently she attempted to go on the stage in a play entitled "A Desperate Chance," but was refused admission to the theaters in western Pennsylvania, and her career as an actress was doomed to failure. Several dramas were written in which the escape of the Biddle brothers and their subsequent capture was used as the basis of the play, but they did not meet with popular approval.

In May, 1902, some persons who were supposed to be friends of the Biddle boys, or else sentimentally inclined, erected a stone marker at the roadside where the Biddles were shot in Franklin Township. On Decoration Day this stone marker was decorated with flowers. The residents of the community did not appreciate this memorial, and the marker was taken away.

THE COUNTY HOME.

From the formation of the county until 1898 each township and borough was constituted a separate poor district and provided for the care of the paupers and indigent persons within their respective districts. While this arrangement had its advantages it proved unsatisfactory in many ways and in 1898 the county commissioners submitted the question of erecting a county home to a vote of the people at the spring election held on February 15. While the proposition was vigorously opposed in some localities it was carried by a good majority in the county and immediate steps were taken toward purchasing a farm and erecting suitable buildings on it. On December 24, 1898, commissioners John Mitchell, Harmon Seaton and D. H. Sutton employed Owesley and Boucherle, architects of Youngstown, Ohio, to prepare plans and specifications for buildings. In the meantime the question of a suitable site was under discussion and the commissioners were offered the choice of three or four locations; one of these was the Wall farm near Evans City, another was the Stevenson and Bach farms on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad at the present site of East Butler, and the third was the John Doerr farm in Butler Township south of the borough line. The Adams farm at Wick Station on the Bessemer road was also offered. On January 25, 1899, the commissioners considered a resolution to the effect that the John Doerr farm of two hundred acres could be purchased at the price of $70 per acre. The board was hopelessly divided on the resolution and the vote stood Mitchell and Seaton for and Sutton against it. It was argued by the opposers of the Doerr farm location that it was too far away from the railroad and that it would be difficult to procure and maintain a sufficient supply of water. An appeal was taken from the action of the commissioners by D. H. Sutton and others and the matter was brought before Judge John M. Greer for a hearing.

A number of witnesses from surrounding counties were put on the stand by the opposition to show that the Doerr farm was not a suitable location and after a lengthy hearing the court decided that it did not have jurisdiction in the matter and that the choice of a location lay with a majority of the board of commissioners. On March 20, 1899, the commissioners passed a resolution to the effect that the Doerr farm be purchased and at the same time issued bonds to the amount of $15,000 for the purchase of the farm. Pending the issuing of the bonds the commissioners secured a temporary loan of $8,000 to apply on the first payment on the farm. On the 5th of April the commissioners employed Owesley and Boucherle as architects to supervise the construction of the building and on the 28th of June the architects' plans were adopted. Bids were advertised for and opened on July 25, 1899, for the erection of the building. The following bids were received at that time:

William Feigle of Butler.....	$61,798
Henry Schenck of Erie.....	67,611
Constable Bros. of Erie.....	65,985
G. Krutt & Co., Findlay, Ohio.....	63,657
Thomas Lightbody, Youngstown, Ohio.....	57,876
George Schenck, Butler.....	56,590
Edward Dunbaugh, Evans City.....	64,260
Fred Rausher, Butler.....	61,726

On the basis of the above bids and certain changes in the plans amounting to $1,132, making a total of $57,722, the contract was awarded to George Schenck, of Butler, for the erection of the buildings. Other contracts awarded were the heating and ventilating to McGinnis, Smith & Co., of Pittsburg, for $23,511; electric wiring to the Youngstown Electric Light Company, Youngstown, Ohio, $3,286; plumbing to Frank Huff, of Butler, for $4,372; sewage system to C. F. L. McQuiston, of Butler, for $4,250; water tower and tank to C. F. L. McQuiston, of Butler, for $1,850; combination electric light and gas fixtures to the Butler Light, Heat & Motor Company, for $904. On August 22, 1899, the plans for the buildings were presented to the court for approval. Judge Greer took exceptions to the location of the buildings on the north-western corner of the farm, favoring a location on the Saxonburg Road, and took occasion to say that he was powerless in the matter as the question of location lay entirely with the commissioners. The commissioners were not unanimous on many other matters pertaining to the purchase of the county farm and the erection of the buildings as well as the matter of the location, and on the resolution selecting the present location of the buildings Commissioner Sutton voted nay. On September 29, 1899, the commissioners issued bonds to the amount of $100,000 at 3½ per cent. for the purpose of paying the expenses of building. The estimated cost of the buildings and improvements upon which the bond issue was based is as follows:

Buildings	$57,872
Heating and ventilating	23,511
Plumbing	4,372
Sewage	4,200
Storm sewer	1,000
Water tower and tank	2,000
Electric wiring	1,683
Water well	257
Inspector's services	200
Architect's services	4,925

On August 14, 1900, commissioners awarded the contract to Fred Winters for the masonry of a barn and the contract for the superstructure to Cooper Brothers, of Valencia. The buildings were completed in October, 1900, and on the 25th of that month the poor from the north end of the county were received and installed in the new home.

The buildings are constructed of brick with Berea stone trimmings and are equipped with every modern appliance for the comfort and security of the inmates. When the commissioners settled with the contractor on September 11, 1900, extras were allowed to amount to $10,056. At the same time a bond issue was made to the amount of $1,600 bearing 3½ per cent. interest to pay for the additional expenses and buildings that had not been counted in the regular estimate. The total cost of the farm and buildings to the county was about $132,000.

When the county farm was opened for the reception of inmates in October, 1900, Joseph Graham, of Whitestown, was installed as superintendent and farmer, and Mrs. Joseph Graham as matron, and Dr. A. M. Neyman, of Butler, was appointed physician. Hiram Gillespie was employed as engineer December 11, 1900, and remained until January, 1904, when he was succeeded by S. M. Wright. Edward Sloan is the present incumbent. In January, 1904, Mrs. Mary Graham was appointed assistant matron, and the same year Dr. L. R. Hazlett was appointed physician. In January, 1906, Oliver W. Stoughten was appointed superintendent to succeed Joseph Graham, who had resigned, and Mrs. Oliver Stoughten was appointed matron. Dr. McCurdy Bricker was appointed physician, and at his death in 1908 Dr. J. C. Caldwell was appointed to fill the vacancy.

THE TEMPERANCE CAUSE.

The pioneer temperance worker in Butler County was John Welsh, a soldier of the Revolution, who settled in Connoquenessing Township about 1800. He was for many years a total abstainer, and was one of the early advocates of the temperance movement. The year 1829 saw the beginning of temperance agitation in the county, a county temperance society being organized at Butler February 9, with Rev. John Coulter as president. Another was organized the same year at Mount Nebo Church at Whitestown, which was presided over by Rev. Reid Bracken, with Robert Walker as secretary and Matthew McClure treasurer. This society had twenty-four members enrolled on April 28, 1829, who pledged themselves against supporting any man for office who was known to be an habitual drinker of liquor. The action taken by this society is probably the first movement taken by the temperance people in the way of associating temperance with politics.

An anti-temperance society was formed in Concord Township, August 21, 1830, with Andrew Christie president and John Christie secretary. The movement gained votaries in every township before the close of 1830, while the Theobald Matthew idea of temperance, as inculcated in Ireland, spread rapidly throughout the counties of this commonwealth.

A temperance wave swept over the county in 1831 and 1832, when William Campbell and Matthew S. Lowrie visited every house in Butler and tendered the pledge, which was generally signed by the women and children. Another pledge was presented to the people of the borough in 1836, and was signed by a majority of the residents of the town. These recurring temperance waves continued from 1829 until 1840, each organization taking a share in teaching the wisdom of abstaining from strong drink, and each was credited with the accomplishment of much good. The movement received a temporary setback, however, in the political campaign of 1840 and 1844, which appears to have demoralized the county socially and many of the converts to temperance returned to their old convivial ways. In 1848 the moralists again resumed hostilities and attacking the evil of strong drink with fresh vigor soon saw encouraging results.

TEMPERANCE ORGANIZATIONS.

Butler Division No. 207, Sons of Temperance, was organized in April, 1848, by Robert Carnahan. This was followed by the organization of township and borough branches throughout the county and ultimately by the organization of the youth into temperance companies.

The Boys' Hope Section, Cadets of Temperance, was organized in April, 1850, but the organization died out before the close of the year.

The Independent Order of Good Templers was a secret order organized for the purpose of carrying on temperance work. Several lodges were organized in Butler County, and the society at one time had a large membership. While the Good Templers accomplished much good, yet the liquor traffic grew and prospered from year to year with little abatement of the evils arising therefrom. Finally many of the earnest women of the county became enlisted in the temperance cause and offered themselves as soldiers of the new crusade which had its inception at Hillsboro, Ohio, in December, 1873. The "Woman's Crusade" led to the organization of the "Woman's Christian Temperance Union" in 1874, which spread through Pennsylvania the following year and invaded Butler County in 1880.

The pioneer branch of the "Woman's Christian Temperance Union" in Butler County was organized at Harrisville, July 22, 1880, with eleven members. On November 23, 1881, the Butler County Woman's Christian Temperance Union was organized in the First Presbyterian Church of Butler by Mrs. Frances L. Swift, president, and Mrs. Ellen M. Watson, secretary, of the State W. C. T. U., with but seven members. Miss Mary E. Sullivan was elected president of the county union, and Mrs. Nanny D. Black, secretary, both of Butler. While a vice-president was named for each township in the county. The local Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Butler Borough was organized by Miss Mary E. Sullivan in the United Presbyterian Church, February 13, 1882, with fourteen members. Miss Sullivan and Mrs. Black were elected president and secretary of the local union. At the close of the first year a second call was sent out for a county W. C. T. U. convention to be held in Butler and in response to this call about thirty women met in the First Presbyterian Church in Butler, November 6, 1882, when the State organizer, Miss Narcissa E. White, assisted by Mrs. Frances L. Swift, reorganized the county auxiliary to the State W. C. T. U. Mrs. Elizabeth R. Daine, of Buffalo Township, was elected president of the county union, and Miss Mary E. Sullivan corresponding secretary. Mrs. Nanny D. Black was elected recording secretary, Miss Aggie Shaw, of Harrisville, treasurer, and Mrs. A. G. Brown, of Renfrew, vice-president. At the State convention held at Oil City, October 11 and 12, 1882, the Butler union was represented by Mrs. N. A. Bryson and Mrs. Isaiah J. McBride, and the Harrisville union by Mrs. Chester and Mrs. Webster. The work of the organization was continued for the next five or six years until nearly every part of the county had been reached, and over five hundred members had been enrolled in the various local unions.

The South Side Branch of Butler was organized October 18, 1888, with Mrs. James S. Henry, president; Mrs. J. H. Negley, vice-president; Mrs. A. Stewart, corresponding secretary; Mrs. L. L. Christy, recording secretary; Mrs. D. L. Aiken, treasurer; and Mrs. T. Steen, delegate to the county convention.

The Central Branch of Butler was organized December 4, 1888, with Mrs. M. E. Nicholls, president; Mrs. Lizzie K. Ayres, vice-president; Mrs. I. J. McBride, corresponding secretary; Mrs. M. K. Byers, recording secretary; and Mrs. U. D. Fisher, treasurer.

The Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union, an auxiliary of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, organized its first branch in Butler County at Harrisville, May 8, 1884, Mrs. Mary B. Reese being the organizer. On March 7, 1885, a branch at Butler was organized containing eighty-two members. In the same year unions were organized at Evans City, Centerville, and Unionville, and during the following year at Concord, Prospect, Bethel, Jacksville, North Hope, and Millerstown. Local temperance work was carried on by these unions in every part of the county, and the object of those engaged in the agitation was partially achieved but the membership of the organization was finally absorbed by the older unions, after the division of 1889.

The sixth annual convention of the Butler County Union was held at Butler November 2-3, 1887, and was presided over by Mrs. Frances L. Swift, Mrs. E. R. Dain having died June 11, 1887. Mrs. S. M. McKee, of Butler, was elected president, and Mrs. J. B. Showalter, of Millerstown, corresponding secretary. Mrs. L. J. McKinney, of Myoma, was chosen recorder, and Mrs. Lizzie K. Ayres, of Harrisville, retained as treasurer. The following year a campaign was prosecuted against the granting of license, but without other result than the accumulation of a debt, the stirring up of local strife, and the crippling of the unions in means and influence. Previous to 1888 the Butler County Union had always declared itself to be non-partisan, but in the annual convention in November of that year, a motion to revive such action was defeated, owing to the desire on the part of many and both parties to keep the disturbing element of politics out of the convention, if possible. Mrs. Lucy H. Washington, of Port Jearvis, New York, presided at the election of officers at this convention, at which time Mrs. J. B. Showalter was elected president and Mrs. S. M. McKee corresponding secretary. Mrs. M. J. Earhart, of Petrolia, was elected delegate to the national convention held at New York City that year. The event of the year 1889 was the vote on the prohibitory amendment, and the campaign that preceded it. The county union took an active part in this campaign, and in several places the Young Women's Unions drilled the Loyal Temperance Legions, and marched the children singing on the streets and past the polls, while banners and mottoes were placed wherever they were allowed. This agitation led to a majority for the amendment in this county, but it was defeated in the State.

Nine delegates were sent from Butler County to the State convention in Philadelphia, in October, 1889, and Mrs. N. C. Core, of Butler, was the delegate to the national convention at Chicago held in November of that year. The event of the State convention in October was the refusal of Mrs. Frances L. Swift, Mrs. Ellen M. Watson and Mrs. J. D. Weeks to accept reelection to offices in the State union, and the subsequent passing of that organization into the hands of those identified with Miss Frances Willard's policy of endorsing prohibition wherever it might be found. This event and the subsequent adherence of the National Union to its position induced Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, the leader of the opposition to withdraw from the convention in Chicago, along with thirteen delegates from Iowa.

The position taken by the National Union at Chicago was the subject of much difference of opinion among the women of the Butler County Union, and the County Convention held at Butler November 21, 1889, was marked by the secession of thirteen members who did not agree with the position taken by the National Union. Prior to this disagreement the condition of the Butler County Union is shown by the following figures: Number of unions, 37; paying members, 487; moneys raised, $1,607.30; juvenile unions, 14; membership, 604. The results of the disagreement in the convention of 1889 were noted in the reports of the convention held in 1890. The number of unions in that year reported was twenty-five, and the membership 435, a loss of twelve local unions and fifty-two members; nine juvenile organizations were reported with a membership of 315, while $1,349.83 were raised for temperance purposes.

At the County Convention held at Mars in 1891 two new local unions were reported, while the Loyal Temperance Legion contained 569 members. In 1892 twenty-five unions were reported, and the principal work done was the circulation of petitions for the anti-narcotic bill, for the signing of the Brussels Treaty, and for the closing of the World's Fair on Sunday. In 1893, twenty-two active unions were reported, petitions were circulated for the closing of saloons on Memorial Day, for the local option bill against the repeal of local prohibitory laws, and for the Pennsylvania Sunday law. Mrs. A. M. Rice, of Petrolia, was sent as a delegate to the National Convention at Chicago this year. The County Convention of 1903 was held in St. John's Reformed Church, Butler, and the following officers were elected: Mrs. M. D. Dodds, president; Mrs. J. W. Orr, of Bruin, vice-president; Mrs. M. S. Templeton, of Butler, corresponding secretary; Mrs. L. C. Wick, of Butler, recording secretary; and Mrs. A. M. Rice, of Petrolia, treasurer. The presentation of banners to unions showing a certain increase in membership was one of the features of this convention.

The convention of 1894 reelected the old officers with the exception of vice-president. A department of railroad work was established this year, and Mrs. T. J. Steen, of Butler, was elected superintendent of the department. At the convention held in 1895 the only change made in the officers was in vice-president, Mrs. Harry M. Greenlee, of Butler, being elected to that position.

In 1896 the convention was held at Petrolia, at which Mrs. A. M. Rice, of Petrolia, was elected president; Mrs. M. D. Dodds, vice-president; Mrs. M. S. Templeton, corresponding secretary; and Mrs. Florence Wick, recording secretary.

At the convention held at Butler in 1897 Mrs. Rice was continued as president, Mrs. Eli Miller, of Butler, was chosen vice-president, Mrs. Templeton was continued as corresponding secretary, Mrs. M. M. Sutton was elected treasurer, and Miss Bertha A. Bottner, of Petrolia, was elected corresponding secretary.

In 1898 the convention was held at Mars, and the old officers were continued. The following year the convention was held at Slippery Rock, at which Mrs. Margaret Dunwoody was elected corresponding secretary, in the place of Mrs. M. S. Templeton. The County Convention in 1900 was held at Zelenople at which four Loyal Temperance Legions were reported organized in the county with a total membership of 200. Butler County was reported third in Loyal Temperance Legion work in the State for that year. The officers elected in 1900 were Mrs. C. E. McIntire, of Butler, president; Mrs. Eli Miller, vice-president; Mrs. R. M. Moone, corresponding secretary; Miss Maud McClymonds, of Slippery Rock, recording secretary; and Mrs. M. M. Sutton, treasurer.

At the convention held in Butler in 1901, Mrs. C. E. McIntire was continued as president, Mrs. C. D. Greenlee was chosen vice-president, Mrs. R. M. Moone corresponding secretary, and Mrs. J. W. McKee, of Butler, treasurer, a position which she still holds.

In 1902 Miss Maud McClymonds was elected president, Mrs. C. E. McIntire vice-president, Mrs. E. E. Bell, of Butler, corresponding secretary, and Mrs. O. M. Russell, of Butler, recording secretary.

In 1903 the superintendent of foreign work in the county reported a mission started among the foreigners at Lyndora. This department has continued to circulate temperance literature among the foreign-speaking element in the county, consisting of tracts and pamphlets published in foreign languages. The officers elected for the ensuing year were Miss Maud McClymonds, president; Mrs. J. H. Heiner, of Butler, vice-president; Mrs. E. N. Mc-Adoo, of Butler, recording secretary; Miss Adelaide Robinson, of Butler, corresponding secretary.

The officers of the county society elected in 1904 were Miss Bertha A. Bottner, of Petrolia, president; Mrs. Ethel Coulter, vice-president; Miss Cora E. White, recording secretary; Miss Adelaide Robinson, corresponding secretary; and Mrs. J. W. McKee continued as treasurer.

The officers elected in 1905 were Miss Bertha A. Bottner, continued as president; Mrs. C. E. McIntire, vice-president; Mrs. L. C. Wick, recording secretary; Miss Maud McClymonds, corresponding secretary; and Mrs. J. W. McKee continued as treasurer.

The twenty-fifth Annual Convention of the County Union was held in the First Presbyterian Church of Butler, September 20, 1906, on the anniversary of the organization of the Butler County Union. A special program had been prepared and the event was celebrated in an appropriate manner. The officers elected for the ensuing year were Miss Bertha A. Bottner, president; Mrs. F. B. Denman, vice-president; Miss Maud McClymonds, corresponding secretary; Mrs. W. L. Kelley, recording secretary; and Mrs. J. W. McKee, treasurer.

The officers elected in 1907 were Miss Maud McClymonds, president; Mrs. William Cooper, vice-president; Miss Bertha A. Bottner, corresponding secretary; Mrs. F. D. Denman, recording secretary; Mrs. J. W. McKee, treasurer.

The officers in 1908 are Miss Virginia Cookson, of Evans City, president; Mrs. J. C. Toy, of Mars, vice-president; Mrs. E. H. Cronenwett, recording secretary; Miss Bertha Bottner, corresponding secretary; and Mrs. J. W. McKee, treasurer. The department superintendents are as follows: Foreign work, Miss Mary McKee, of Butler; Sabbath observance, Mrs. M. P. Forsythe, of Butler; flower missions, Mrs. E. H. Cronenwett, of Butler; scientific temperance and narcotics, Mrs. Frank Miller, of Slippery Rock; prison and jail work, Mrs. Harriet Cooper, of Butler; literature and press, Miss Bertha Bottner, of Petrolia.

The work accomplished by the temperance women of the county in the past twenty-seven years is to be admired for the wonderful persistence with which they pursued their object. The Butler County Union materially assisted the State Union in 1885 in having the "Temperance Education Law" passed and by their zeal induced the court to close every drinking-place in the county. They have waged incessant warfare on narcotics and have been the means of procuring legislation preventing the sale of cigarettes and tobacco to minors under the age of eighteen. In 1881 there were forty-five saloons in the county. In 1885 there were none, and in 1894 there were none, and chiefly through the influence of the temperance workers the number of drinking places in the county in 1908 was limited to half the number there were twenty-five years ago.

The great Murphy meetings of 1886 and 1887 were manifestations of the power of the movement at that time, while the gradual moulding of public opinion in opposition to the liquor traffic has been principally due to the untiring agitation of the temperance unions. The battle for the prohibitory amendment in 1889 was lost to the state, but in Butler County a majority of 2,423 votes in favor of the amendment was given. The vote by districts in the county is given in a table in the political chapter.

The County Union has accomplished much good through its departmental work and is carrying on a campaign of education with unabated vigor. One department of this work is the circulating of temperance literature among the foreign speaking residents of the county and the establishing of night schools among the foreigners for the teaching of the English language, temperance, and good citizenship. Through the efforts of this department assisted by the Y. M. C. A., the night school for foreigners was established at Lyndora in 1906, which is now supported by the citizens of Butler and the Standard Steel Car Company.

In 1908 there were fourteen local unions in the county as follows: Bethel, Brownsdale, Bruin, Butler, Connoquenessing, Mars, Chicora, Myoma, Petrolia, Slippery Rock, Springdale, Unionville, Zelenople, and Harmony. The total membership was about five hundred.

W. C. T. A.

When the thirteen members of the County W. C. T. U. seceded, and left the convention of November 21, 1889, held at Butler, the seceders held a convention the same day at which a declaration was read in the meeting by Mrs. N. C. Core, in which the following leading points were set forth: That while the society held a neutral position between Church and State, its members were a unit in opposing intemperance. That for some years the original central idea was being undermined by a political idea, and that since the convention appears to adhere to views which cannot be otherwise than damaging to the best interests of the cause, it is necessary to organize a non-sectarian and a non-political association. The document as read was signed by Madames N. C. Core, Isaiah J. McBride, M. K. Byers, M. E. Nicholls, F. Bailey, R. I. Boggs, D. Garrett, K. H. Miller, J. R. Miller, Cynthia Gilmore, L. K. Ayres, and Patton Kearns, with the Misses Mary E. Sullivan, Celia Cubbison, and Margaret Wick. After the reading Madames J. L. Henry, M. J. Fay, E. S. Bartley, and Miss L. E. Young signed the declaration. That evening Mrs. M. E. Nicholls presided over a meeting of twenty-seven non-partisan workers who organized a bureau of correspondence with Mrs. Nicholls president, Miss Young, secretary, and Mrs. Byers, treasurer. The actual organization of the Woman's Christian Temperance Alliance was not effected until September 18, 1890, when Mrs. Ellen J. Phinney, president of the National Alliance, came to Butler and organized the Butler County Alliance. The officers then elected were: Mrs. Margaret J. Earhart, of Petrolia, president; Mrs. J. B. Showalter, of Chicora, vice-president; Mrs. M. E. Nicholls, of Butler, corresponding secretary; Miss May Hopkins, recording secretary; and Miss L. E. Young, treasurer. The title then adopted for the new association of temperance workers was Woman's Christian Temperance Alliance.

The second conference was held November 6, 1891, and resulted in the choice of Mrs. J. B. Showalter, for president; Mrs. M. J. Earhart, vice-president; Mrs. Emily Robinson, of Butler, corresponding secretary; Mrs. E. J. Calvert, recording secretary; and Miss L. E. Young, treasurer. The third conference held at Millerstown in 1892 resulted in the re-election of the old officers, with the exception of recording secretary, Mrs. U. D. Fisher, of Butler, being chosen for that position.

The fourth conference was held at Butler in September, 1893, when the following named officers were chosen: President, Mrs. Isaiah J. McBride, of Butler; vice-president, Mrs. N. C. Core, of Butler; corresponding secretary, Mrs. J. E. Byers, of Butler; recording secretary, Mrs. U. D. Fisher; and treasurer, Miss L. E. Young.

NON-PARTISAN TEMPERANCE UNION.

The Non-Partisan Temperance Union of Butler, which appears to have been organized September 19, 1890, was the Woman's Christian Temperance Alliance under a new name. The officers chosen by the Non-Partisan Union were Miss L. E. Young, of Butler, president; Mrs. J. E. Byers, of Butler, secretary; and Mrs. U. D. Fisher, treasurer. The organization was extended during the next few years to other parts of the county, and local unions were established at Chicora, Karns City and in Fairview Township. These unions eventually died out, and on account of the removal and deaths of a number of the leaders of the County Union, the latter organization was finally abandoned. The last officers elected by the Non-Partisan Union in 1899 were Miss L. E. Young, president; Mrs. J. E. Byers, secretary; and Mrs. D. L. Cleeland, of Butler, treasurer.

LOYAL TEMPERANCE LEGION.

The Loyal Temperance Legion, which was an auxiliary of the W. C. T. U., was organized for juvenile work, and at the County Convention of the W. C. T. U. held at Mars in 1898, the County Loyal Temperance Legion was organized with the following officers: President, G. A. Bailey; vice-president, Harry Flowers; recording secretary, Newton Eppinger; corresponding secretary, Artemesia Goddard; treasurer, Bert Little. At the same time the following superintendents of departments were appointed: literature, Annie Sanderson; flower mission, Mand Staples; mercy, Della Elliott; railroad, Jessie L. Otterman; county superintendent, Mrs. A. G. Otterman. At the convention held May 17, 1899, Harry Flowers was elected president; Ray Goddard, vice-president; Bertha Weigle, corresponding secretary; and Bert Little, treasurer. Jessie Otterman was continued as superintendent of railroad work; Agnes Staples was appointed superintendent of flower mission; Luella Baker, superintendent of the department of mercy; and Miss Jennie E. Dean, music director. While the Butler County Legion was third in the state in 1899, the organization was abandoned in a few years, and its work was taken up by one of the departments of the County W. C. T. U.

STATISTICS OF POPULATION.

The following table exhibits the population of the county by townships and boroughs at each decennial census since its organization:

STATISTICS OF POPULATION.

	1810.	1820.	1830.	1840.	1850.	1860.	1870.	1880.	1890.	1900.	Esti- mated 1908.	Registry of Vot- ers for 1908.
Adams Township.....	1810.	1820.	1830.	1840.	1850.	1860.	1870.	1880.	1890.	1900.	1908.	1908.
Allegheny Township.....	866	873	1,156	1,817	1,910	1,910	1,455
Alley Township.....	881	890	2,287	1,224	1,004	1,080	216
Bradley Township.....	701	600	772	729	721	655	131
Buffalo Township.....	375	582	1,042	1,830	2,221	1,905	1,495	1,263	1,131	1,121	1,525	305
Butler Borough.....	580	861	1,148	1,399	1,314	3,163	8,734
Butler, 1st Ward.....	2,597	4,075	815
Butler, 2nd Ward.....	2,548	4,215	843
Butler, 3rd Ward.....	2,031	4,845	969
Butler, 4th Ward.....	1,783	3,683	625
Butler, 5th Ward.....	1,896	5,495	1,099
Butler Township.....	453	472	768	1,389	2,622	1,198	984	1,007	1,297	1,591	2,850	570
Bruin Borough.....	735	147
Center Township.....	742	972	1,322	1,834	1,495	829	843	986	1,065	855	1,945	209
Centerville Borough.....	366	418	448	993	1,075	215
Cherry Township.....	625	970	907	903	1,161	1,433	1,021	1,190	238
Clay Township.....	1,039	1,062	1,036	1,076	1,134	1,620	324
Clearfield Township.....	288	1,027	1,056	841	813	1,925	205
Clinton Township.....	1,021	1,132	1,048	918	900	1,065	213
Concord Township.....	855	926	1,054	1,138	1,086	1,440	288
Connoqueensing Borough.....	343	435	87
Connoqueensing Townsh. ¹	1,284	977	1,944	2,232	2,548	1,068	1,051	1,189	1,593	960	1,080	216
Cranberry Township.....	543	765	1,046	1,822	2,236	931	945	983	969	981	1,065	217
Dougal Township.....	671	960	1,085	1,615	1,174	999	852	2,156	1,617	1,204	1,520	304
Eau Claire Borough.....	450	90
Evans City Borough.....	1,455	299
Fairview Borough.....	333	303	235	265	53
Fairview Township.....	1,078	1,101	1,078	3,930	1,996	1,437	1,630	326
Forward Township.....	1,020	1,025	1,133	1,724	1,515	1,235	247
Franklin Township.....	1,119	1,860	1,044	1,047	999	924	1,055	231
Harmony Borough.....	497	585	645	849	199
Harrisville Borough.....	352	386	396	319	555
Jackson Township.....	1,117	1,137	1,267	1,154	1,406	1,505	301
Jefferson Township.....	1,457	1,234	1,214	1,600	1,422	1,405	281
Karus City Borough.....	265	73
Lancaster Township.....	1,130	1,055	1,070	946	834	1,035	207
Lancaster Township.....	789	850	1,086	965	878	1,215	243
Mars Borough.....	777	1,125	245
Mercer Township.....	641	1,944	2,232	2,548	1,068	1,051	1,189	1,593	960	1,080	216
Middlesex Township.....	538	1,010	1,231	1,692	2,259	1,034	1,010	1,100	1,078	1,541	1,500	300
Millersport Borough.....	497	1,108	1,162	950	1,452	285
Muddy Creek Township.....	395	868	1,317	1,998	1,142	1,094	972	790	785	799	945	189
Oakland Township.....	919	926	1,039	1,138	940	1,195
Parker Township.....	399	659	945	1,364	769	1,170	1,309	2,516	1,710	1,317	910	182
Penn Township.....	914	837	1,131	1,814	1,712	1,945	389
Petrolia Borough.....	1,186	546	350	475	95
Portersville Borough.....	198	216	190	196	54
Prospect Borough.....	271	362	342	361	102
Saxonburg Borough.....	295	319	258	307	500
Slippery Rock Borough.....
Slippery Rock Township.....	658	865	1,541	1,507	1,196	993	879	1,007	1,247	1,555	1,715	348
Summit Township.....	939	1,304	1,266	1,287	1,260	1,840	368
Valencia Borough.....	149	270	54
Venango Township.....	377	353	499	822	1,473	836	902	1,322	1,147	1,342	1,385	277
Washington Township.....	1,003	963	996	1,287	1,351	1,508	1,800	360
West Liberty Borough.....	216	243	280	56
West Sunbury Borough.....	238	254	61
Winfield Township.....	1,124	1,121	1,092	1,087	1,395	1,680	336
Worth Township.....	928	893	1,076	939	837	1,090	218
Zelienople Borough.....	387	497	638	962	1,450	330
	7,346	10,193	14,683	22,371	30,346	35,594	36,510	52,536	55,339	56,962	79,290	15,984

The total population of the county in 1800 was 3,916. The figures given in the column 1908 are estimated on the basis of five of a population for each registered voter. The number of registered voters in the county as returned by the registry assessors in June, 1908, is given in the last column.

Centerville Borough given in the above table is now Slippery Rock Borough, and it will be noticed that Butler Borough is dropped in the last three columns and Butler, 1st, 2d, 4th and 5th Wards substituted. The population of Butler Borough in 1900 was 10,823, and the estimated population in 1908, 21,205. These figures do not include the population of Lyndora in Butler Township nor the foreign population of Red Row. The total number of voters registered in the borough in 1908 was 4,261.

The statistics of population of 1900 gives the number of white males in the county as 26,492, and the white females as 27,361. The foreign population was 3,100, and of the colored population 119. The estimates of the foreign population in 1908 vary from 12,000 to 15,000, about 60 per cent of which are in the district surrounding Butler Borough.

In 1880 the village of Eldorado had a population of 53; Madoo, 127; Greese City, 142; Forestville, 233; Hilliard, 111; Mechanicsburg, 52; Middleburg, 94; Martinsburg, 287; North Washington, 147; Petersville, 90; Sarversville, 37; Troutman, 320; Unalovine, 41; West Liberty, 63; and Whitestown, 90. In 1900 many of these villages had disappeared and others had been converted into boroughs. The population of Evans City, originally called Evansburg, jumped from 68 in 1880 to 637 in 1890, and to 1,200 in 1900. Forestville has decreased in population, while the villages of Eldorado, Greese City and Madoo have almost entirely disappeared. The population of these villages is included in the census of their respective townships. Martinsburg has been converted into a borough and the name changed to Bruin, and its population has increased from 287 in 1880 to about 750. Petersville has been changed to Connoquenessing Borough, and has increased in population from 90 in 1880 to 435. West Liberty Borough has been created since the census of 1900, and its population is now 305. Other boroughs that have been created since 1890 are Mars, with a population of about 1,200, Valencia with a population of 270, Eau Claire with a population of 450, and West Liberty with 280.

Callery Borough was created under a charter granted June 8, 1905, and is not included in the above table. The population in 1900 was included in Adams Township, and the estimated population in 1908 is 300. No return was made by the registry assessor of the voters for 1908, and the number of taxables for that year were 111.

SOME NOTABLE PIONEERS.

DAVID DOUGAL was one of the best known citizens in Butler County throughout his long and eventful career, and his name is inseparably linked with its history for a period surpassing the allotted life of man. He was a native of Franklin County, Pennsylvania, born near Fannetsburg, September 23, 1778, and was the son of a Presbyterian minister. He obtained a good English education, and in early manhood left home and went to Huntingdon, where he clerked in the prothonotary's office. Here he studied the art of surveying, afterwards went to Pittsburg, and later to Kentucky, where he acquired a taste for adventure and free outdoor life. He next went to Detroit and acted as clerk in a trading post, meeting hundreds of Indians there, and subsequently spent some time among the Indian tribes of Ohio. These associations had a marked influence on his character that remained with him to the day of his death. He finally returned to Huntingdon, whence, about the year 1800, he came to Butler County. Upon the organization of this county he was appointed the first clerk of the board of county commissioners, and later served one term in that body. At the first sales of lots in Butler borough, Mr. Dougal proved his faith in the new county seat by purchasing several lots, some of which he owned until he died. He was one of the pioneer merchants of the town for a short time, but soon abandoned merchandising to pursue the more congenial vocation of a surveyor, which profession he followed until the infirmities of old age compelled him to retire from active life. He loved nothing so well as to roam through the primitive forest, running lines, establishing corners and blazing trees to mark boundaries. He did the greater part of the early surveying in this county, and his wonderful memory retained in old age the most precise and exact knowledge of lines and surveys made by himself during the first years of the county's history. He was recognized by courts and lawyers as a high and almost infallible authority on such matters.

Mr. Dougal was the agent of Stephen Lowrey, and later of his daughter, Mrs. Sarah Collins, who inherited a large portion of her father's lands in this county, and he continued in this capacity for the heirs of Mrs. Collins until his retirement from active business. This responsible position afforded him the opportunity of acquiring property, and he became quite an extensive land owner. Scrupulously honest in all his dealings; correct and careful in his business habits; possessing an extensive and valuable fund of general information, fine conversational abilities and remarkable mental power, he commanded the respect of the best people of the community. There were few branches of scientific lore in which he was not well versed. In pleasant weather Mr. Dougal would sit in front of his modest home on South Main Street and converse with those who chose to listen or be entertained. His manner of speech was calm, deliberate and dignified, and his subjects were history, political economy, geography, geology, topography, climate and astronomy. He possessed an extensive and accurate knowledge of the last mentioned science, and was always happy when gazing at the starry firmament or discoursing upon its wondrous beauty and grandeur. His store of local history, too, embraced the minutest details of the annals of Butler County from its erection until the year of his death.

With all these advantages he was, nevertheless, a peculiar and eccentric character, and is principally remembered by the present generation because of the manner in which he lived. Though he possessed plenty of this world's goods, and might have enjoyed the usual comforts of life, he refused to improve his property, and persisted in living in one of the smallest and plainest of the frame buildings in Dougal's row until he removed to his farm in Summit Township, a few years prior to his death. Surrounded by rubbish of all kinds, including his surveying instruments, maps, charts, books, etc., with a few broken chairs and a bed that defied description, he despised and discarded modern fashions and modes of living, and seemed to take a peculiar delight in the slovenly dress and unrestrained life of the rudest pioneer backwoodsman. Nevertheless, when occasion required, he would appear as a well-dressed gentleman in refined society, and was thoroughly familiar with all the courtesies pertaining to it. Though he lived with the most rigid frugality, he was not a miser, but was generous, kind and charitable to the poor and needy. If his tenants could not pay their rents, he permitted them to remain or move away without molestation.

This gifted, strange and eccentric man never married, and died on his farm in Summit Township, November 8, 1881, at the extraordinary age of 103 years, leaving much valuable property to relatives, and also to some friends who cared for him in his declining age. In appearance he was tall and erect in carriage, grave, serious and dignified in bearing, and remarkably independent in thought and action. Not only to the severe simplicity of his mode of living, but to the wonderful evenness of his temper, which he rarely suffered to be ruffled by any excitement, was largely due the uniformly good health he enjoyed throughout his life and the great longevity he attained. Mr. Dougal was pre-eminently a peacemaker. His opportunities as a surveyor were always used to settle disputes and avoid litigation, and, as the natural result of this policy, he was often appealed to by disputants as final arbiter. In politics, he was a Whig, until the formation of the Republican party, and ever afterward a Republican. While he did not profess any particular religious faith nor attend church, he was a firm believer in the fundamental principles of christianity, and had an utter contempt for the man who treated the forms of religion with levity. The leading minds of Butler County looked upon him not only as a learned man, but a philosopher, and his name will be respected as long as a single one of those who knew him best is left to do justice to his memory.

HON. WALTER LOWRIE was one of the most distinguished sons of Butler County, and none of her citizens ever attained greater eminence or labored in a broader field. He was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, December 10, 1784, and came to the United States with his parents, John and Catherine (Cameron) Lowrie, in 1792. The family settled in Huntingdon County, Pennsylvania, whence they removed to what is now Allegheny Township, Butler County, in 1797. Here his parents spent the remaining years of their lives, his mother dying in 1837 and his father in 1840. Their children were as follows: Matthew B., who removed to Pittsburg, became quite a prominent man of that city, and served as mayor several terms; Walter; John L.; Ann, who married Andrew Porter; Elizabeth, who first married John Stevens, and after his death, Robert S. Whann; Jane, who became the wife of William Porterfield; and Catherine, who married Andrew McCashin. John Lowrie, Sr., owned a farm and a grist- and saw-mill, and was one of the prosperous citizens of the county. He was one of the founders of Scrubgrass Presbyterian Church in Venango County, and a man of sturdy character, excellent moral traits and high mental qualities. After clearing up his farm and living upon it for about forty years, he died there, and is buried in Scrubgrass Presbyterian cemetery.

WALTER LOURIE

The subject of this sketch was reared upon his father's farm, and his primary education consisted of an occasional term at a subscription school and home instruction of winter nights. His parents being devout Presbyterians, Walter was carefully trained in that faith, and at an early age entered upon a course of study with the ministry in view, and pursued the Latin, Greek and Hebrew languages under Rev. John McPherrin. He came to Butler in 1807 to engage in teaching, was soon after appointed clerk in the commissioner's office, was later elected a member of the board, and also filled the office of justice of the peace, thus commencing a public career that lasted continuously for almost thirty years. In the meantime, he and his brother Matthew B., opened a store in Butler, which was conducted principally by clerks, the greater part of his time being devoted to his public duties. In 1811 he was elected on the Democratic ticket to the Legislature, and the following year to the State Senate. He was reelected to the latter, and served in that body seven years. In 1818, while still a member of the State Senate, he was elected to the United States Senate, and served in that body with ability and distinction for six years. This period was one of great interest in the history of our country. Such distinguished men as Webster, Clay, Calhoun, Randolph and Benton were members of the Senate, and among these eminent statesmen Walter Lowrie occupied a position of honorable prominence. His staunch integrity won their confidence, while his practical judgment led them to seek his advice and rely upon his opinions. He was regarded by the Senators who knew him best as an authority upon all questions of political history and constitutional law.

During the discussion of the celebrated Missouri Compromise, he made a speech of great power and force of argument, in which he took strong grounds against the extension of slavery, and uttered a vigorous protest against the establishment of slave labor upon a single foot of free territory. His influence in the Senate was not only that of a statesman, but also of a Christian. He was one of the founders of the Congressional Prayer Meeting, as well as of the Congressional Temperance Society. For a long time he was a member of the executive committee of the American Colonization Society, also of the Senate committee on Indian affairs. At the expiration of his senatorial term, in March, 1825, he was elected secretary of the Senate, an office which he held for twelve years, resigning it in 1836 to become secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, which, under his vigorous and sagacious policy, was built up from an obscure institution to its subsequent importance and prosperity. He brought to his new field of action the same strength of mind and earnestness of purpose that had characterized his previous career, and became the efficient head of a great missionary work. His labors only terminated with his death, which occurred in New York City, December 14, 1868.

Senator Lowrie was twice married. His first marriage occurred in 1808, to Amelia McPherrin, a daughter of Rev. John McPherrin, his preceptor, and one of the founders of the Presbyterianism in Butler County. She died in 1832, and he afterward married Mary K. Childs. The children of his first marriage were as follows: John C.; Matthew S., an early member of the Butler bar; Mary, who married Samuel Baird, a merchant of Pittsburg; Eliza; Walter M.; Jonathan Roberts, a well remembered attorney of Hollidaysburg; Reuben P., and Henry M. John C., Walter M., and Reuben P. became missionaries of the Presbyterian church. Reuben P. fell a victim to overwork in the enervating climate of China, and Walter M. was murdered by Chinese pirates, August 19, 1847. Rev. John C. Lowrie, D. D., spent two years on missionary work in India, when he returned to New York and was appointed assistant to his father in the office of the Board of Foreign Missions, and after his father's death he succeeded him as secretary, which position he filled continuously for several years. Senator Lowrie exhibited a rare example of obedience to the dictates of duty in resigning the secretaryship of the United States Senate, and accepting that of the Board of Foreign Missions. He relinquished a home surrounded by every comfort, a position of ease and large emolument, the society of a wide circle of eminent men, with whom he was on terms of the closest intimacy, for a life in humble quarters, in a city with which he was unfamiliar and to assume an arduous position, the remuneration of which was scarcely sufficient to sustain him. Notwithstanding his many varied talents, he was a modest and unassuming gentleman, whose public career was marked by the same rigid morals and principles that guided his private life.

REV. JOHN MCPHERRIN was one of the founders of Presbyterianism in western Pennsylvania, the pioneer minister of that denomination in Butler County, and the first pastor of the Butler church. He was a native of what is now Adams County, Pennsylvania, born November 15, 1757, whence the family removed to Westmoreland County. His preparatory studies were pursued under Rev. Robert Smith, D. D., of Pequea, Pennsylvania, and he graduated at Dickinson College in 1788. He studied theology under the direction of Rev. John Clark, of Allegheny County, and was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Redstone, August 20, 1789. On September 22, 1790, he was ordained by the same Presbytery, and installed pastor of the congregations of Salem and Unity, in Westmoreland County, where he remained until 1803. In the meantime, however, he had visited this portion of the State on a missionary tour, coming here in the summer of 1799 and preaching to a congregation under the spreading branches of a large tree that stood near the site of Concord Presbyterian church, in what is now Concord Township, Butler County. Several of his audience requested him to name the embryo church, which he did, calling it "Concord," the title it has borne to the present day.

In 1803 Mr. McPherrin returned to this county and accepted calls from Concord and Muddy Creek churches, both of which he took charge of the same year. In 1805 he became a member of the Presbytery of Erie, and continued to minister to the congregations mentioned until 1813, when he resigned the Muddy Creek charge, having been installed pastor of the Butler church April 7, 1813, in connection with the church of Concord. It is also said he was pastor of Harmony church for several years. He remained pastor of Butler and Concord churches until his death, which occurred at Butler, February 10, 1822. Before coming to Butler County, Mr. McPherrin was married to Mary Stevenson, a daughter of John Stevenson, of Washington County. His children were as follows: Amelia, who married Walter Lowrie; William; Samuel; John; Clark; Mary, who married John Sullivan; Ebenezer; Josiah, and Anderson.

REV. ISAAH NIBLOCK, D. D., was one of the pioneer ministers of what is now known as the United Presbyterian church of Butler. He was a native of County Monaghan, Ireland, born in the year 1794, studied divinity under Rev. John Dick, D. D., professor of theology in the United Sessions church, Glasgow, Scotland, and was licensed to preach in 1817. The following year he emigrated to New York, and preached in Philadelphia in the fall of 1818. Soon after he crossed the Allegheny Mountains on horseback, arriving in Pittsburg on the 20th of December, 1818, where he was appointed to supply vacancies for three months in this section of the State. Three days later he came to Butler and preached in the courthouse on the last Sunday of the year. He continued to preach as a supply until April 23, 1819, when he received a call from the congregations of Butler and White Oak Springs, which he accepted, and after filling his previous engagements, was ordained and installed as their pastor by the Monongahela Associate Reformed Presbytery, and preached his first sermon as pastor of the Butler church on the third Sunday in May, 1819. This pastorate continued for more than forty-five years, or until his death in Butler, June 29, 1864, although he was unable to preach for nearly five months preceding that event. When Mr. Niblock became pastor of the Butler church it consisted of but one elder and nine communicants. Under his ministry there were added to the Butler, White Oak Springs and Union congregations about 1,100 members. He baptized about 2,000 children and adults, and united in marriage more than 200 couples. After coming to Butler, Dr. Niblock was married to Rachel Alexander, of Pittsburg, who became the mother of six children, viz.: Mary J.; James; Alexander; John, a United Presbyterian minister; Hugh; Mrs. Maria Zimmerman, and Harriet.

REV. WILLIAM WHITE, D. D., the honored and respected rector of St. Peter's Protestant Episcopal Church of Butler for half a century, was a native of Stewartstown, County Tyrone, Ireland. He was born March 18, 1811, and grew to manhood in his native land. In 1832 he came to Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, and entered the Western University, graduating from that institution in 1834. He graduated from the General Theological Seminary of New York in 1837, was ordained a deacon by Bishop Onderdonk, in Christ Church, Philadelphia, the same year, and was sent to take charge of the Freeport and Butler congregations. In 1838 he was ordained a priest by the same bishop, and remained in charge of both churches mentioned until 1842, when he gave up the Freeport charge and confined his labors to Butler and vicinity. Dr. White was married October 7, 1840, to Mary Bredin, a daughter of James Bredin, of Carlisle, Pennsylvania, to whom have been born six children, as follows: Annie; Isabella; Thomas, an Episcopal minister of East Albany, New York; George R., attorney at law at Butler; James B. and William, both deceased. For several years Dr. White combined with his parochial duties those of a teacher in the old Butler Academy, and many of the leading men of Western Pennsylvania look up to him with pride as their preceptor. He continued as pastor of the Butler congregation until 1877, when the infirmities of advancing age induced him to lay down the burden, although he occasionally performed the offices of his sacred calling in the adjoining counties of Armstrong and Clarion until his death. For nearly sixty years his name was closely associated with the religious and educational life of Butler County, and few of its citizens have won to a greater degree the unbounded love and confidence of the whole people than this venerable patriarch whose rare usefulness throughout that period was gladly acknowledged by all.

REV. LOYAL YOUNG, D. D., was pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Butler for nearly thirty-five years, and his name is a familiar one in many of the homes in Butler County. He was a son of Robert and Lydia (Gould) Young, of Charlemont, Franklin County, Massachusetts, where he was born July 1, 1806. When Loyal was five years old his parents removed to French Creek, Harrison County, Virginia. He obtained a good English education in the schools of that locality, entered Jefferson College, in 1826, and graduated from that institution in the fall of 1828. After teaching a private family school in Virginia one year, he entered the Western Theological Seminary, at Allegheny City, Pennsylvania, and was licensed to preach the gospel by the Presbytery of Ohio, June 21, 1832. On the 25th of October following, he was married to Margaret P. Johnston, a daughter of Rev. Robert Johnston, the first pastor of the Sernbrgrass Presbyterian Church, Venango County, to which union were born seven sons and one daughter. Four of their sons, Robert J., Watson J., Torrence F., and James W., were soldiers in the Union Army.

Mr. Young came to Butler County soon after he was licensed to preach, his first sermon in Butler being delivered August 29, 1832. The following summer he preached as a candidate, and was ordained and installed as the third pastor of the Butler congregation, by the Presbytery of Allegheny, December 4, 1833. For nearly thirty-five years he labored faithfully and assiduously in building up the church. During his ministry here he baptized about 800 children and adults, united in marriage over 200 couples, and nearly 450 persons were brought into the Butler church. He delivered his farewell sermon May 10, 1868, and the same month took charge of French Creek and Buckhannon churches in West Virginia. He remained at French Creek eight years, and was then installed as pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Parkersburg, in the same State, which position he filled five years. His next charge was the Winfield, Point Pleasant and Pleasant Flats churches of West Virginia, which he ministered to from 1880 to 1885. He then removed to Washington, Pennsylvania, and became a supply for a few years. Here his wife died December 29, 1887, and soon after he returned to Butler, where he continued to follow the ministry up to within a few weeks of his death, which occurred October 11, 1890.

While pastor of the Butler church, in 1858, the degree of D. D. was conferred upon him by Washington College. Dr. Young was twice moderator of the Synod of Pittsburg, once of the Erie Synod, and represented the Presbytery at the General Assembly several times. He was also the author of the following works: "Commentary on the Book of Ecclesiastes," "Hidden Treasure," "Interviews With Inspired Men," "Communion," and "From Dawn to Dusk." A few weeks before his death he completed a commentary on the Book of Proverbs. To Dr. Young more than to any other man was due the establishment of Witherspoon Institute at Butler. He was the guiding spirit in calling the convention which brought that school into existence, in preparing the charter, in raising money, and placing the Institute on a solid foundation. He was its principal for quite a long period, and his name is closely interwoven with its early growth and progress.

CHAPTER V

POLITICAL HISTORY

Senatorial and Representative Districts Established—First Elections—A New Judicial District—Fourteenth Congressional District Established—Campaign of 1828—Case of Hugh Lee—Constitutional Amendments—Twenty-fifth Congressional District—Anti-slavery Movement—The Know Nothing Party—Anti-Administration Party—The Republican Party—The New Representative District—Apportionment of 1871—The Constitutional Convention—Changes in 1874—Vote on Prohibition Amendment—Campaign of 1890—Judicial Campaigns of 1892-1902—The Union Party—Vote for President Roosevelt—New Primary Election Law—Congressional Districts—Senatorial Districts—Representative Districts—Judicial Districts—Public Officials—Appointment of Court Officials.

In addition to exercising a fostering care over her own internal political affairs, Butler County has played an important part in the various congressional, senatorial and judicial districts to which she has belonged. Her citizens have ever valued and protected their political rights and have exercised them in the manner which to their minds was best calculated to conserve the highest interests of the nation and the state.

The act of the legislature creating Butler County was approved March 12, 1800. Besides defining the boundaries of the county, this act made temporary provision for her political status by assigning her to the same senatorial district as Allegheny, Washington, and Green Counties. The representative district was made up of Beaver, Butler, Mercer, Crawford, Erie, Warren, and Venango Counties and was entitled to two representatives in the general assembly.

Under the Constitution of 1790, then in force, the members of the State Senate were elected every three years and the members of the House of Representatives every year. No member could serve more than four years in seven. Elections were held on the second Tuesday in October of each year, save for President and Vice-President of the United States, which were held in November, as at present. The terms of service of state senators and representatives began on the fourth Monday of October.

The state Capitol was at Lancaster and the Senators and Representatives, as well as other citizens having business there, usually made the journey on horse-back, that being the only mode of conveyance outside of walking, previous to the establishment of a stage-coach line and the canal. Occasionally a prudent member took his own provisions with him.

The act above referred to also provided that:

“The inhabitants of that part of the county of Butler in Elder’s district of the depreciated lands, who heretofore held their elections at the town of Freeport, shall be annexed to the district known by the name of McClure's district and vote with the inhabitants thereof at the house of Andrew McClure. And the inhabitants of that part of Butler County in any of the donation districts, who have heretofore held their elections at the town of Freeport shall be annexed to what is called Buchanan's district and vote with the inhabitants thereof."

SIXTH JUDICIAL DISTRICT.

The act of April 2, 1803, assigned Butler County to the sixth judicial district with Beaver, Mercer, and Erie Counties, of which the Honorable Jesse Moore was the first presiding judge to sit in Butler.

ELEVENTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT.

An act of the General Assembly of April 11, 1803, divided the state into eleven congressional districts, the eleventh district being composed of Allegheny, Beaver, Butler, Crawford, Mercer, Venango, Warren, and Erie Counties.

FIRST ELECTIONS.

The first general election in the county was held in 1804, at which members of congress, representatives to the general assembly and county commissioners were voted for. The same year at the election held on the first Monday in November, presidential electors were voted for.

The candidates for Congress were J. B. C. Lucas, Democratic Republican, and James O'Hara, Federalist. The latter was a resident of Pittsburg, a Revolutionary soldier, and, as the name of his party indicates, an adherent of the Hamiltonian idea of a strong government. That his ideas were not well received in Butler County may be seen from the records of the vote cast in the six election districts into which the county was divided at that time. Lucas received 408 votes in the county and O'Hara 118.

The election that year in the first district was held at the home of Ezekiel Bredin, formerly James Buchanan's, where William Gault, Jacob Smith, and Ephraim Harris were judges. In the second district the polling place was at the residence of Alexander Ramsey, the judges being Benjamin Fletcher, W. Furgeson, and James Coulter. The judges of election and polling places are not recorded for the third and fourth districts. The judges of the fifth district were W. Johnson, Samuel Duncan, and Moses Bolton. The place of holding election is not mentioned. In the sixth district the judges were, Abdiel McLure, William Campbell and George Shannon. At Butler the judges were William Ayres, John Cunningham, and John Gilmore. There were no returns from the fourth district.

CANDIDATES.	1st Dist.	2d Dist.	3d Dist.	4th Dist.	5th Dist.	6th Dist.
CONGRESS—
John B. C. Lucas.....	32	76	188	..	61	51
James O'Hara.....	32	6	63	..	9	8
Assembly—
James Boyard.....	82
George Robinson.....	32	46	84	..	60	58
Jacob Mechling.....	50	76	78	..	25	4
Abner Laycock.....	32	22	80	..	43	58
John McBride.....	32	8	196	..	43	66
Jonathan Coulter.....	32	34	50	..	25	5
Jacob Ferree.....	12	6	51	..	7	9
John Negley.....	102
Commissioners—
Abner Coats.....	12	..	40	60
James Scott.....	18	42	121	..	4	2
Francis Kearns.....	1	..	72	..	23	3
David Armstrong.....	27	3	..
Hugh Lee.....	13	40	1
William Brown.....	8	..	53	1

At the election held for state senators in the county in 1805, David Martin received 207 votes and Samuel Ewalt 149 votes. The election, however, seems to have fallen to the lot of one of the other counties in the district, and Butler County did not elect a state senator until 1811.

The following year Jacob Mechling of Butler was elected to the legislature, receiving 229 votes in this county. Abner Laycock received 232 votes and Francis McLure 231 votes.

A NEW JUDICIAL DISTRICT.

By an act of the legislature approved February 24, 1806, the sixth judicial district was reconstructed, Butler County being placed in the same district with Mercer, Butler, Venango, Crawford, and Erie. The same act provided for the holding of court in Butler on the first Monday in March, June, September and December of each year, for terms of one week.

The act of March 21, 1808, put Allegheny, Beaver and Butler Counties in the same senatorial district and Allegheny and Butler Counties in the same representative district and entitled the two counties to four representatives.

The act of April 4, 1809, changed the time of holding court in Butler to the second Mondays of the months given above. An act was also passed in 1809 to validate the acts of justices of the peace from the erection of the county in 1800 to November 1, 1808.

Francis McLure and Samuel Ewalt appear to have been the candidates for state senate in Butler County in 1809, but failed of election in the district. The same year John Negley of Butler was elected representative.

In 1810 James Patterson, the candidate for representative, received a majority of the votes in this county, but failed of election. In the same year Walter Lowrie of Butler was elected to the legislature and in 1811 to the state senate. He was re-elected in 1814 and elected United States Senator in 1818.

THE FOURTEENTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT.

The Legislature of 1812, on March 20, passed an act apportioning the State into fifteen congressional districts. Butler and Allegheny Counties constituted the Fourteenth District. The political machinery of those days was much simpler than at present. The candidates ran largely on their personal merit and popularity, and as the representatives of the political ideas and principles which were then dividing the people into parties. The Democratic-Republicans, who were followers of Jefferson, were in a majority in the county for many years. Sometimes a candidate would achieve success by sheer dint of personal popularity, this more frequently happening when too many candidates from the leading party sought the same office. The "scrub race," however, gradually fell into disrepute, as was inevitable, and served to pave the way for the delegate system which succeeded it and which continued in operation almost until the close of the last century, when it too gave way to the system of nomination by popular vote now in use.

As an indication of the tendency toward the delegate method in 1814, an advertisement which appeared in the Pittsburg paper of that year is of interest:

"At a general meeting of the Democratic-Republican delegates from the different townships of the county of Butler, held at the Court House in the town of Butler, on the 4th day of July, 1814, for the purpose of putting in nomination suitable persons to be supported at the next general election, the following persons were unanimously agreed upon: Governor, Simon Snyder; Assembly, John Potts. It was resolved, That Hugh McKee and Robert Scott be delegates to meet two delegates from Allegheny County at Mr. James Carnahan's at such time as may be agreed upon; and that they be instructed to support John Potts for a member of the House of Representatives in the State in conjunction with three members from Allegheny County; and also after a conference with the delegates from Allegheny County to put in nomination a suitable person to be supported for a member of Congress from this district. Resolved, That the proceedings of this meeting be signed by the chairman and secretary and published in the Pittsburg papers."

The minutes of the meeting were signed by Robert Martin as chairman and Robert Lennon as secretary. Mr. Potts who was a citizen of Butler County was elected to the Assembly.

John Gilmore was elected representative to the General Assembly from Butler County in 1816-17-18-19 and in 1821. In the year last mentioned he was chosen speaker of the House. He was a candidate for state senator in 1821 and again in 1825, but was not elected, although he received a majority of the votes cast in the county.

Moses Sullivan, a brother of Hon. Charles C. Sullivan, was elected representative in 1822 and 1823, and state senator in 1824, serving three terms in the Senate.

In 1825 the congressional district was composed of Beaver, Butler and Armstrong Counties, and Robert Orr was elected to Congress, receiving 5,157 votes in the district. The vote on the proposed Constitutional Amendment of that year was 624 for and 691 against the amendment. At the same election John Brown, James Powers, William Beatty and William B. Foster were elected representatives from the district composed of Allegheny and Butler Counties. William Beatty was a citizen of Butler County and was re-elected in 1826 and 1827. Moses Sullivan was elected State Senator in 1825 from the district composed of Allegheny, Beaver and Butler Counties.

CAMPAIGN OF 1828.

The campaign of 1828 saw three tickets in the field. They were known as the "American System," "Independent," and "Jackson." William Purviance, of Butler, was a candidate for the Assembly on the first named ticket, Robert Stewart on the second, and James McKee on the third. McKee was elected, receiving 3,250 votes in the district, of which 720 were given him in Butler County. The vote of the county was 1,068 for Andrew Jackson and 610 for John Quincy Adams, a majority of 458 for "Old Hickory." The campaign of that year was marked by much bitterness of feeling and many heated discussions over the relative merit of the opposing presidential candidate. Occasionally there was violence resorted to on the part of some over-rash champion of "Old Hickory," which was usually met in kind by the advocates of Adams, but no serious damage was done outside of a few bloody noses and blackened eyes. The spirit engendered by that campaign is forcibly expressed in a toast expressed on the 4th of July and on training day. It is as follows:

"May the skins of the enemies of Jackson be converted into carpeting for his friends to dance upon."

Notwithstanding the free expression of such strong sentiments personal enconters and deeds of violence were rare as the result of political differences.

THE CASE OF HUGH LEE.

The case of Hugh Lee, of Butler County, attracted general attention in the legislature in March, 1829. Lee had filled the office of justice of the peace from 1808 to 1829 and was charged with being an alien. This charge was carried forward from court to court and ultimately came before the legislature for adjudication. Lee refuted the charge with the evidence that he had been naturalized in New Orleans prior to coming to Butler County. After a lengthy discussion the legislature disposed of the matter by adjourning the debate by a vote of 54 to 28. Lee completed his term as justice of the peace in 1830, and was not again molested by his persecutors.

By the act of April 29, 1829, Butler and Beaver Counties were made a senatorial district, and Butler County created a representative district entitled to one member of the House of Representatives.

The opposition to Free Masonry, due primarily to the disappearance of William Morgan in 1826, appears to have been the leading issue in Butler County in 1830. A meeting of the "antis" was held at the courthouse on February 6 of that year and presided over by General Ayres. Another meeting was held on February 17, at which George W. Smith was chosen as a delegate to the State Anti-Masonic Convention, and a Committee of Vigilance was appointed.

In 1832 the State was again apportioned into Congressional districts and Butler County was placed in the same district with Armstrong and Clearfield Counties. William Ayres, the candidate for Congress from Butler County that year received 1,254 votes in the district, but failed of an election in the district.

At the October election in 1835, Butler County cast 1,780 votes against the proposed Constitutional Convention to be held in 1838, and 541 votes in favor of it. William Ayres and Thomas Denny were chosen senatorial delegates and Samuel A. Purviance representative delegate.

The campaign of 1838 was an exciting one in Butler. Previous to the election in October, the Whigs raised a flag on the Mechling corner, concealing their project so well under the cover of darkness that the Democrats did not discover it until the next morning. A Whig flag in Butler in 1838 was out of the question, and as soon as the amazed Democracy discovered the streamer flapping defiance in the morning breeze, they immediately removed it without ceremony. The chief actor in the removal of the flag and the flagpole was Paulhemas, the blacksmith.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS.

The Constitutional amendments submitted at the election in 1838, received a majority of 1,671 votes in the county, the vote for them being 2,383 and against them 712. Under the new Constitution the offices of recorder and prothonotary were made elective, and at the election of October 11, 1839, candidates for these offices were voted for, for the first time. Joseph McQuiston and William Walker, candidates for register and recorder, received 1,219 and 1,093 votes respectively, while Jacob Zeigler and John Levis received 1,318 and 1,021 votes respectively for prothonotary. For academy trustees the vote was: John Gilmore and Rev. Loyal Young, 1,146 votes; John Duffy and Dr. James Graham received 1,143 votes.

At the election held in October, 1840, for members of Congress, Joseph Buffington received 2,100 votes; William Wilkins 1,804 votes, and David Tarbox 5 votes. Buffington was afterward elected to Congress in the district in 1842 and served two terms.

THE TWENTY-FIFTH CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICT.

The Act of Assembly of March 25, 1843, placed Butler County in the Twenty-fifth Congressional District, with Armstrong, Indiana and Clearfield Counties. The Act of April 14 of the same year placed Allegheny and Butler Counties in the Twenty-fourth Senatorial District, which was entitled to two members, while Butler County was continued as a Representative District, with one member.

THE ANTI-SLAVERY MOVEMENT.

A new ticket was in the field in 1844. The Anti-slavery and Liberty men organized in that year at a meeting held at the courthouse at which John Waldron presided and John Smith was secretary. One of the resolutions adopted asserted: "That in organizing a Liberty party in Butler County we do it from the sense of duty to God and are determined to support no man or party in the management of political affairs further than measures and men in office are governed by the Bible, which we take as our supreme law to which all other laws must conform."

In the election that followed, the Liberty party candidate, John Shryock, received 146 votes for county commissioner, while Dodds, the Democrat, received 2,103, and Bracken, Whig, received 2,066 votes.

The Anti-Masonic advocates were active in 1846 and placed a full ticket in the nomination under the title of the Anti-Masonic Whig Party. In March, 1847, the people voted on the Option, or Liquor Law, giving 1,960 votes for the sale of liquor and 1,225 against such sale. The same year a new road law was voted for and resulted in 695 votes for the new law, and 1,771 for the old law.

On July 29, 1848, the Free Soilers and Free Laborites held a meeting at Portersville to prepare for the conventions of their party, but little was accomplished.

The same year the charter of the Columbia Bank was the cause of much discussion and a debate in the Assembly at Harrisburg in March.

The anti-slavery movement appears to have been gathering some force in Butler County in 1850. In October of that year an anti-slavery meeting was held at Centreville, now Slippery Rock Borough, for the purpose of considering the provisions of the new Fugitive Slave Law. The meeting was presided over by John Hays and Thomas Stephenson, and a committee was appointed to draft a petition to Congress for the repeal of the law.

The Free Soil element were active in the campaign of 1853 and succeeded in defeating the Democratic candidates for judge of the Supreme Court in the county that year. The decrease in the total vote of 1853 over the preceding year was 1600, the Democratic party suffering the most from the defection of the Free Soil element. The vote cast on October 11, for Thomas A. Budd, Whig candidate, for judge of the Supreme Court, was 1952, for John C. Knox, Democratic candidate, 1835, and for William A. Stephenson, Free Soil candidate, 95. The Whig candidates that year were successful for both the state and county offices.

THE KNOW NOTHING PARTY.

The first election in the county held after the organization of the thirty-three townships and the four boroughs of the county brought into light the dangers of introducing "isms" into politics. While the Know Nothing Party had a state ticket that year, it secretly gave its support to the Whig candidates, and by this means defeated the Democratic ticket. In the local election the Know Nothings supported those candidates in the Whig and Democratic tickets, who were members of their (so-called) "dark-lantern organization," or whom they believed to be in sympathy with it.

The Whig candidate for governor received 2955 votes. William Bigler, the Democratic candidate, 2381, and Ben R. Bradford, the Know Nothing candidate, fourteen. The highest Know Nothing vote cast for assemblyman was sixty-one for H. F. Aderhold, while W. McClelland, T. Barry and John Cowden each received seventeen votes. Samuel A. Purviance, Whig candidate for Congress, received 2903 votes against 2367 cast for O. D. Palmer, Democrat. In county affairs, John McKee, Democrat, received 2675 votes for sheriff, against 2553 cast for J. A. Gibson; Matthew F. White received 2732 votes for prothonotary against 2445 cast for his Whig opponent, Nathan Brown. This vote was reversed in the battle for register and recorder, I. S. P. DeWolf, Whig, being victorious. John Graham, Democrat, was elected clerk of courts. Jacob Bentel, Whig, was elected coroner and William Smith, Whig, auditor. The vote for the proposed liquor law that year was 2301 for the law and 2293 against it.

The full strength of the Know Nothings was represented in the vote for Thomas H. Baird, candidate for judge of the Supreme Court, who received 1189 votes. The total Whig vote cast was 2955 and the total Democratic vote 2381.

THE ANTI-ADMINISTRATION PARTY.

Following the example of members of the legislature, a large number of citizens signed a call for a union meeting to be held at Butler March 19, 1856, at which the "Anti-Administration Party," or "Unionists for the sake of the Union," was organized. This meeting was largely attended by members of both the Whig and the Democratic Party, and was the beginning of the Republican Party in Butler County, as it now exists. The campaign of that year was one of the most exciting in the history of the state. Party spirit ran high, and the battle for political supremacy was waged fiercely in every district. Butler County was the scene of many torch-light processions and campaign rallies. The entire interest of the campaign centered on the presidential contest, the leading candidates being James Buchanan, of Pennsylvania, Democrat, and John C. Fremont, Republican. The result of the election was an unexpected and disagreeable surprise to the Democrats. While Buchanan was elected president, the Republicans carried the state and county ticket, and for many years after political honors in the county were more evenly divided between the two great parties. The vote cast for president was as follows: Fremont, Republican, 3401; Buchanan, Democrat, 2648; Fillmore, Know Nothing, 67; Fillmore (repeaters), 14; Samuel A. Purviance, Republican, received 3092 votes for Congress; James A. Gibson, Democrat, 2581; Alexander Wardlaw, Know Nothing, thirteen. For state senator, John R. Harris, Republican, received 3090 votes; John H. Negley, Democrat, 2562. For the legislature, A. W. Crawford, Republican, received 3101 votes; DeLorna Imbrie, Republican, 3103; George P. Shaw, Republican, 3102; Thomas J. Layton, Democrat, 2565; Charles H. Shriner, Democrat, 2566; Jacob Criss, Democrat, 2566. For district attorney, Eugene Ferrero, Republican, received 3106 votes; James M. Bredin, Democrat, 2546. For associate judge, Thomas Stephenson, Republican, received 3070 votes; Jacob Meehling, Jr., Republican, 3011; Samuel Marshall, Democrat, 2617; J. Bovard, Democrat, 2549. For county commissioner, P. Hilliard, Republican, received 3003 votes; J. W. Martin, Democrat, 2644. For county surveyor, David Scott, Republican, received 3114 votes; Charles Cramer, Democrat, 2529. For county auditor, William S. Waldron, Republican, received 3050 votes; R. B. Maxwell, Democrat, 2565. For academy trustees, Archibald Blakeley, Republican, 3052 votes; Thomas H. Bracken, Republican, 3051; W. C. Pollock, Democrat, 2552; William Borland, Democrat, 2554.

The Know Nothing Party, which had cut considerable figure in the politics of the county in 1854, fell into decadence and at the October election, 1857, the total vote polled by this party for Hazellhurst, their candidate for governor, was fifty-three. David Wilmot, the Republican candidate for governor, received 2,831 votes and William F. Packer, the Democratic candidate, 2361.

The People's Reformed ticket of 1858 presented the names of James Kerr, of Harrisville, for Congress; R. J. Gregg, of Buffalo Township, and John O. Jack, of Center Township, for the legislature. Thomas Dodds of Connoquenessing for commissioner, and William McKinney of the same township for auditor.

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.

The Republican party again swept the county in 1860, when the campaign was formerly opened in Butler by a ratification meeting held to ratify the nomination of Abraham Lincoln, the presidential nominee of the party. The bitterness of the campaign survived the election and individual members of the minority party were proscribed for their political views. In 1862 the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania decided that the act of extending the right of suffrage to soldiers in the field was unconstitutional. The legislature the following year offered an amendment to the Constitution providing a remedy for this injustice to a volunteer army and the amendments were voted on at a special election held in August, 1863. The vote in Butler County was 2,679 for the amendment and 1,237 against it. The vote for governor the same year was for Curtin, Republican, 3,328, and Woodward, Democrat, 2,054.

THE NEW REPRESENTATIVE DISTRICT.

In 1857 Butler County was constituted as a separate representative district, and elected two representatives. The representatives under this arrangement elected from the county were W. W. Dodds, John M. Thompson, William S. Graham, Thomas Robinson, Hiram C. McCoy, H. W. Grant, and in 1863, John H. Negley and William Hazlett. In 1864 the district was enlarged by the addition of Lawrence and Mercer Counties and was entitled to four representatives, all the counties voting for the nominees. In this year William Hazlett and John H. Negley of Butler, Samuel McKinley of Lawrence County and Col. Josiah McPherrin, a native of Butler, but a resident of Mercer County, were the successful candidates. In 1865, John H. Negley and Capt. Henry Pillow of Butler were elected, as were also McKinley and McPherrin.

The returns of the presidential election of 1864 show that the civil and military vote of Butler County for president was for Lincoln, 3,475, and for McClelland, 2,937. The returns of Marion Township which gave Lincoln fifty-three and McClelland 102 votes came in too late, so it was alleged, to be counted.

In 1868 Louis Z. Mitchell, Democrat, received 3,317 votes for Congress and Darwin Phelps received 3,396 in this county.

THE APPORTIONMENT OF 1871.

The legislature made a new apportionment of the state in 1871, in which Butler County was placed in a representative district with Beaver and Washington Counties. Capt. Geo. W. Fleeger, of Butler, was one of the members elected under this apportionment.

At the same session of the legislature Butler County was placed in the twenty-sixth Senatorial District with Beaver and Washington Counties. This arrangement only lasted until a convening of the constitutional convention in 1873 and the legislature of the following year reapportioned the state to carry out the provisions of the new constitution.

THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION.

The question of calling a convention to revise the state constitution was submitted to the people at the fall election in 1872, and was carried in Butler County by a decisive majority, the vote being 3,377 for, and 496 against it. General John N. Purviance and Louis Z. Mitchell of Butler were chosen delegates from this county, and the convention thus provided for met in the city of Philadelphia, in 1873, and concluded its labors on November 3d of that year. The new constitution, except wherein otherwise provided, went into effect January 1, 1874. This constitution provided for the election of state senators every four years instead of every three and members of the House of Representatives every two years instead of every year. It also provided for biennial instead of annual sessions of the general assembly and fixed the date of meeting for the first Tuesday of January of every second year. The date of holding the general election in the state was changed from the second Tuesday of October to "the Tuesday next following the first Monday of November," of each year. In order to make effective the provision of the new constitution changing the terms of state senator from three to four years, the legislature of 1874 reapportioned the state, placing Butler and Armstrong Counties in the Forty-first Senatorial District, and providing that at the general election of that year the senator should be chosen in the district for a term of two years and that at the general election of 1876 the senator should be elected for four years. This apportionment is still in force.

Under the act of 1874 Butler County became a representative district alone and entitled to two members. The Congressional apportionment made the same year placed Butler in the Twenty-sixth Congressional district with Mercer and Crawford Counties.

CHANGES IN 1874.

The abnormal increase of population caused by the development of the Butler County oil field, from 1869 to 1874, changed the manners and customs of the people and gave rise to new conditions in local politics. The men who followed the oil excitements were usually self-assertive and independent in character and were disposed to consider men and measures rather than party lines in the political campaigns of the last quarter of the century. While the Republican party had a nominal majority in the county for the fifteen years previous to this time and the majority kept increasing as the population of the county increased, the independent element in the oil country exercised such an influence as to be able to elect dark horses or a Democrat who was favorable to their interests at the most unexpected times. The increase in the business of the Courts having kept pace with that population, the question of electing two judges for the district was presented at the Republican primary held in 1874. The legislature had recently passed an act authorizing the election of an additional law judge in Butler County and Hon. Charles McCandless had been appointed to fill the position until the fall election. At the Republican primary election of that year more votes were recorded than had been cast by both parties at the preceding fall election.

When the result of the primaries in this county was presented to the conventions held in Butler it was found that the vote for Charles McCandless exceeded that for Mr. McJunkin by forty-one. The friends of Mr. McJunkin were dissatisfied with the results and held a convention opposite the Willard House and nominated him. The regular Republican nominees in the district were Charles McCandless, of Butler, and Hon. L. L. McGuffin, of New Castle, while the Democratic nominees were James Bredin, of Butler, and John McMichael, of New Castle. Mr. McJunkin thus became the choice of the independent Republicans. Party lines were obliterated for the time and the contest resulted in the election of Judges McJunkin and Bredin.

While the Prohibition sentiment had received more or less encouragement in the county since 1830, no ticket was placed in the field until 1876, when the temperance people of the county nominated John Brandon, of Connoquenessing Township, for the assembly, and John G. Christy for associate judge. The Republican vote of the county at the fall election of 1876 was 5,643; the Democratic, 4,830; Prohibitionist, 57; and the Greenback Party, 21. The battle of that year was for representatives in the state legislature and the vote cast was the largest in the history of the county down to that time. R. A. Mifflin received 5,424 and William Irvine 5,359 votes on the Republican ticket. George H. Graham received 5,076 and James Humphrey 4,779 votes on the Democratic ticket. Brandon, the Prohibition candidate, received sixty-six votes and Christy seventy-six votes.

Two years later the Democrats turned the tables on the Republicans on the legislative ticket by electing George H. Graham and James Humphrey. In 1882 the legislative ticket was split, the Democrats electing "Uncle Jake" Zeigler, and the Republicans Joseph T. Donly.

The judicial campaign of 1884 was one of the bitterest in the history of the county and was marked with many sensational features. The Republican nominees were John M. Greer of Butler and A. L. Hazen of New Castle, while the Democratic nominees were Hon. James Bredin of Butler for reelection and John McMichael of New Castle. The independent Republicans of Butler nominated Hon. E. McJunkin. At the same time a half interest in the weekly Times was purchased and one-half of the paper was devoted to the interest of Judge McJunkin's campaign and was edited by Frank Eastman of Butler. Capt. George W. Fleeger was the Republican candidate for Congress in the district composed of Butler, Mercer and Crawford Counties, and he came in for a share of the vituperations and invective that were heaped on the opposers of McJunkin's campaign. The campaign was carried on with such bitterness as to estrange friends and was the cause of libel suits being instituted against the local paper; but after the election the suits were never pressed and were finally dropped.

The election resulted in favor of A. L. Hazen and John McMichael, the candidates from the Lawrence County end of the judicial district, while Capt. Fleegeer was elected to Congress.

Being dissatisfied with the result of the election Judge Bredin instituted a contest which was heard in Butler and finally decided in favor of Hazen and McMichael.

In 1887 the State legislature reapportioned the congressional district and Butler County was placed in the Twenty-fifth District with Beaver, Lawrence, and Mercer Counties, and the same year the legislative apportionment was made which is still in force. Under this apportionment Butler County constitutes a single district and is entitled to two members who are elected every two years.

THE VOTE ON THE PROHIBITION AMENDMENT.

The question of amending Section 1, Article 19, of the constitution, so as to prohibit the manufacture, sale or keeping for sale of intoxicating liquors, was submitted to a vote of the people at a special election held June 18, 1889. The proposed amendment was vigorously discussed in a campaign of several months previous to the election, and while the proposition was defeated by a majority of 190,000 votes in the state, Butler County gave a handsome majority in favor of the amendment. The vote by districts was as follows:

	For	Against
Butler, 1st Ward.....	198	43
Butler, 2d Ward.....	144	92
Butler, 3d Ward.....	143	82
Butler, 4th Ward.....	145	48

Butler, 5th Ward.....	165	55
Adams Township N.....	91	28
Adams Township S.....	136	15
Allegheny Twp.....	155	31
Bald Ridge.....	105	25
Brady Twp.....	99	39
Buffalo Twp.....	110	104
Butler Twp.....	66	96
Center Twp.....	105	63
Cherry Twp. N.....	73	13
Cherry Twp. S.....	112	35
Clearfield Twp.....	35	106
Clinton Twp.....	188	60
Concord Twp.....	195	13
Connoquenessing Twp. N.....	75	36
Connoquenessing Twp. S.....	70	32
Cranberry Twp.....	69	110
Clay Twp.....	157	40
Donegal Twp.....	125	164
Fairview Twp. E.....	86	35
Fairview Twp. W.....	127	51
Forward Twp.....	137	79
Franklin Twp.....	112	81
Jackson Twp. E.....	26	34
Jackson Twp. W.....	29	103
Jefferson Twp.....	68	165
Laneaster Twp.....	31	126
Marion Twp.....	120	31
Mercer Twp.....	169	34
Middlesex Twp.....	117	13
Muddyreek Twp.....	150	34
Oakland Twp.....	114	98
Parker Twp.....	223	50
Penn Twp.....	182	42
Slippery Rock Twp.....	147	44
Summit Twp.....	38	169
Venango Twp.....	147	47
Washington Twp. N.....	45	33
Washington Twp. S.....	122	8
Winfield Twp.....	51	130
Worth Twp.....	146	32
Centerville Boro.....	71	19
Evans City Boro.....	72	25
Fairview Boro.....	44	10
Karns City Boro.....	32	18
Karns Boro.....	38	33
Chicago Boro.....	116	44
Prospect Boro.....	59	16
Petrolia Boro.....	56	34
Saxonburg Boro.....	1	76
Sunbury Boro.....	49	4
Zelienople Boro.....	31	78
	5716	3126

CAMPAIGN OF 1890.

The Congressional campaign of 1890, as well as that for governor, was one of the never-to-be-forgotten political fights of the county. The Republican party had nominated George W. Delamater of Meadville for governor, who was distasteful to a large element of the party throughout the oil country. The Democratic nominee was the late Robert E. Pattison, ex-governor of the State. Lewis Emery, Jr., an independent Republican and antagonistic to the Delamater wing of the party, took the stump for ex-Governor Pattison. The disaffection within the ranks of the Republican party that year spread into the Congressional districts, and the Twenty-fifth District, of which Butler County was then a part, had a three-cornered fight on between Thomas R. Phillips, the regular Republican nominee, E. P. Gillespie, of Mercer, the Democratic nominee, and Alexander McDowell, of Sharon, Independent. The vote at the fall election resulted as follows: Pattison for governor, 4,722; Delamater, 4,097; John D. McGill, Prohibition, 418. Pattison's majority over Delamater, 625. For Congress, E. P. Gillespie received 3,837 votes; T. R. Phillips, 3,773; McDowell, 1,326; W. P. Braham, Prohibition, 318. Gillespie's majority over Phillips, 111. Gillespie was elected in the district. Two years later Mr. Phillips was elected to succeed Mr. Gillespie, and re-elected in 1894.

THE JUDICIAL CAMPAIGN 1892-1902.

In 1892 a vacancy was caused on the bench in the seventeenth judicial district by the death of John McMichael. Hon. Norman L. Martin, of New Castle, was appointed to fill the vacancy until the next election, which was held in November of that year. The candidates were Hon. John M. Greer, of Butler on the Republican ticket, and Norman L. Martin of New Castle on the Democratic ticket. Mr. Greer was elected and became assistant law judge of the district. September 1, 1893, Butler County was constituted as a separate judicial district, and known as the Seventeenth, the same number it held under the old apportionment, until the act of 1901 was passed, which constitutes Butler County as the Fiftieth district.

At the judicial election held in 1902.

Judge Greer was a candidate for re-election, but was defeated at the Republican primaries by James M. Galbreath, who became the party candidate. The Democratic candidate was Hon. Livingston McQuiston, of Butler, and the campaign that preceded the election was one of the hardest contested in the history of the district.

1896.

In the presidential election of 1896, when the free coinage of silver was the absorbing question before the public, Butler County voters were intensely interested. McKinley, Republican, received 6,807 votes, while W. J. Bryan, the free silver Democrat, received 4,947 votes. The vote cast for the other tickets in the field were as follows: Levering, Republican, 285; Bryan, People's party, 79; Mitchell, Socialist Labor, 3; Bentley, National, 46; Bryan, Free Silver, 101; McKinley, Independent, 14; Palmer, Jefferson Party, 26.

The same year the Republican candidate for Congress, J. J. Davidson, of Beaver County, received 26,529 votes in the district, against 17,050 cast for the Democratic candidate, J. G. McConeghy, of New Castle, and 1,034 cast for the Prohibition candidate, Ralph P. Allen. Mr. Davidson, the Congressman elect, died in January, 1897, and Dr. J. B. Showalter, of Butler County, was appointed to fill the vacancy, and at the election held April 20, 1897, was elected for the unexpired term. The vote cast for Showalter at this election was 12,221 in the district, against his Democratic competitor, Dr. Salem Heilman, of Sharon, who received 6,222. The vote in Butler County was 3,134 for Showalter, and 1,530 for Heilman.

The Senatorial contest in the 41st District in 1896, resulted in a warm contest between W. B. Meredith, Republican, of Armstrong County, P. R. Burke, Democrat, of Karns City, Butler County, and W. H. Ritter, Citizens' Ticket, of Butler. The three-cornered fight was caused by dissat isfaction among the Republicans of Butler County over the result of the Senatorial conference held in Butler, at which Meredith was nominated. Meredith was elected by the small majority of 581 over his closest competitor. The vote in the district being as follows: Meredith, 9,423; Burke, 8,842; Ritter, 1,358; Sherrard, Prohibition, 99. The vote in Butler County was as follows: Meredith, 3,945; Burke, 5,144; Ritter, 1,205; Sherrard, eighty.

Some life was infused in the campaign of 1898 by a factional quarrel in the Republican party, in which the re-election to the Legislature of James X. Moore was made an issue. Moore secured his nomination and also his election after one of the most bitter fights that the county has witnessed. The same year the choice of the Republican party for Congress was Dr. J. B. Showalter, who was candidate for reelection, and the choice of the Democrat was M. L. Lockwood, of Zelenople. Lockwood carried on an aggressive campaign, and succeeded in reducing his competitor's majority in Butler County to 286. The vote in the Congressional district was as follows: Showalter, 18,220; Lockwood, 15,271; J. A. Bailey, Prohibition, 2,006. Showalter's majority over Lockwood in the district, 2,949. The vote of Butler County was, Showalter, 4,675; Lockwood, 4,389; Bailey, 343. Showalter's majority over Lockwood, 286.

In 1900 Showalter was again the nominee of the Republican party and Lockwood was the choice of the Democrats in the district. The campaign was as full of sensational features as that of 1898, and Lockwood succeeded in reducing his opponent's majority in Butler County to 693. The vote in the District was, Showalter, 23,831; Lockwood, 19,641. Showalter's majority, 5,190. In the county, Showalter received 5,939 votes and Lockwood, 5,246.

In the Forty-first Senatorial District, in 1900, A. G. Williams, of Butler, was the choice of the Republicans for the honor; and James S. Gallagher, of Freeport, was the Democratic candidate. Gallagher conducted an unusually aggressive campaign, and though defeated, swept the majority of his competitor below that usually given to the Republican candidate in the district. The vote in the district was, Williams, 11,676; Gallagher, 8,810; in the county, for Williams, 5,887; for Gallagher, 4,902. Williams's majority in the district, 2,866; in the county, 985.

There was very little change in the voting on the Presidential ticket in 1900 over that of 1896 in the county, the principal contest being for Congress and State Senate. The vote for President was as follows: McKinley, Republican, 6,303; Bryan, Democrat, 4,465; Wooley, Prohibition, 492; Mallory, Socialist Labor, five; Barker, People's party, seven; Debs, Socialist, thirteen. McKinley's majority over Bryan, 1838.

ACT OF 1901.

The act of the legislature in 1901 reapportioning the congressional districts, placed Butler County in the Twenty-second District with Westmoreland County. The first election held under this arrangement in 1902 resulted in the election of George F. Huff of Greensburg, and his subsequent election in 1904 and 1906. The vote in the district in 1902 was Huff, Republican, 18,827; C. M. Heineman, Democrat, 13,084; Woodburn, Prohibition, 778. The vote in Butler County was for Huff, 6,007; Heineman, 4,590; Woodburn, 200. The vote for Congress in the district in 1904 was Huff, 21,547; C. M. Heineman, Democrat, 9,824; C. D. Greenlee, Prohibition, 1,536. The vote in the county was Huff, 5,898; Heineman, 3,068; Greenlee, 410. In 1906, Huff's vote for Congress in the district was 15,924; S. A. Kline, Democrat of Greensburg, 10,102; Kerr, Prohibition, 35; Stull, Socialist Labor, 523; Kline, Lincoln party, 458.

ST. PAUL'S ORPHANS' HOME

COUNTY INFIRMARY

ST. JOHN'S LUTHERAN HOME AND ORPHANAGE, MARS

OLD PEOPLE'S HOME, ZIELENOPOLE

THE UNION PARTY.

The Union party filed nomination papers in the county in 1901. The papers were signed by F. A. Grace, H. L. Brandon, F. E. Brandon, George M. Graham and Frank Lavery. At the election in November, John Henninger, Democrat, was elected district attorney and George M. Graham, Independent Republican, was elected clerk of courts.

The disclosure of frauds in connection with the erection of the State capital at Harrisburg and the dissatisfaction generally felt throughout the state in regard to the management of the state treasury were the causes of a political upheaval in the state which landed William H. Berry, a Democrat, in the state treasurer's office, this being the first time in almost fifty years that a Democrat had been elected to that office. Berry's campaign was regarded as something of a joke, but the results at the election were a disagreeable surprise to the Republican party in the state. The vote cast in Butler County was as follows: Plummer, Republican, 3,796; Berry, Democrat, 3,159; Berry, Prohibition, 678; Berry, Independent, 523; Berry, Lincoln party, eighty-one; Ringer, Socialist, thirty-three; Dingman, Socialist Labor, nine; Plummer, Citizens, eighty-five. Berry's majority over Plummer, 644.

CONTEST OF 1906.

The contest for governor in the state in 1906 was very bitter and Butler County had its share in the exciting events of the campaign. Lewis Emery, Jr., who was the Democratic candidate, and also the candidate of the Lincoln party, was remembered in Butler County by the old-line Republicans as the man who had deserted the party in 1890, and supported Governor Pattison. The vote at the election was as follows: Edwin Stewart, Republican, 3,813; Lewis Emery, Jr., Democrat, 2,537; H. L. Castle, Prohibition, 375; Stewart, Citizens ticket, eighty-one; Emery, Lincoln party ticket, 609; Emery, Referendum, six; Emery, United Labor, ten. The campaign was distinguished by the vitriolic attacks made by Homer L. Castle, the Prohibition candidate, on Mr. Emery.

THE VOTE FOR PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT.

The presidential campaign of 1904 was an unusually quiet one. Neither of the old parties indulged in the campaign methods that had been much in use in the past fifty years. The vote cast for presidential electors was as follows: Roosevelt, Republican, 6,596; Parker, Democrat, 3,183; Swallow, Prohibition, 511; Socialist Labor, Corrigan, eighteen; Debs, Socialist, eighty-seven; Parker and Davis, Independent, four. Roosevelt's majority over Parker was 3,413, the largest majority ever given a presidential candidate in the county.

In the congressional campaign of 1894 the vote cast in the district was as follows: Thomas W. Phillips, 22,156; Joseph Vanderlin, 10,435; Joseph White, Prohibition, 1,475; William Kirker, Peoples party, 1,919; Thomas W. Phillips, Independent, six votes in Butler County.

THE NEW PRIMARY ELECTION LAW.

The primary election law passed by the legislature February 17, 1906, provided for a uniform system of holding primary elections by all parties in the state. Under this system the primary elections held in 1908 caused unusual interest in Butler County on account of nominating candidates for Congress and State Senate. Butler County Republicans presented the name of Hon. J. D. McMunkin of Butler for Congress, while Westmoreland County presented Hon. George F. Huff for reelection for the fourth term. Huff's campaign caused considerable feeling among the Republicans in Butler County because of an agreement entered into by the party leaders of the district at the time the new apportionment was made, by which it was understood that Westmoreland County was to have the Congressman for three terms and Butler County for two terms in the ten years that the apportionment would exist. Colonel Huff having been elected for three terms and then announcing himself as a candidate for the fourth term was the means of bringing about a bitter contest in which the Westmoreland County candidate won.

The Democrats of the district nominated Thomas A. Kline of Greensburg for congressional honors.

In the senatorial district a sharp contest was waged at the Republican primaries between Hon. G. W. McNeese of Armstrong County, who was a candidate for reelection, and Hon. Thomas Hays of Butler, who had previously served three terms in the legislature. Mr. Hays not only had a majority in his own county, but defeated McNeese and Armstrong County, and became the Republican nominee for the district. The Democrats nominated Dr. R. J. Grossman, of Butler for senatorial honors and the county thus had the distinction of having both candidates in the senatorial field.

A. M. Christley, of Butler, was elected a delegate in the twenty-second congressional district to the Republican National Convention at Chicago, which nominated William H. Taft for president, and Livingston McQuiston of Butler was chosen a delegate in the same district to the Democratic National Convention at Denver, which nominated William J. Bryan for president.

CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICTS.

Since the organization of the county there have been eight apportionments made of Congressional districts, and at various times Butler County has been in the same district with nearly every county in the western part of the State.

In 1800 the Eleventh Congressional District was composed of Allegheny, Beaver, Butler, Mercer, Crawford, Venango, Warren, and Erie.

In 1812 Butler was assigned to the fourteenth district with Allegheny County.

In 1825 Butler, Beaver and Armstrong Counties composed the district.

In 1832 another change was made and Butler, Armstrong, and Clearfield Counties were assigned to the same district.

In 1843 Butler, Armstrong, Indiana and Clearfield Counties constituted the district.

In 1874 the Twenty-sixth Congressional District was composed of Butler, Mercer, and Crawford Counties.

In 1887 the Twenty-fifth Congressional District was composed of Butler, Beaver, Lawrence and Mercer Counties.

In 1901 Butler and Westmoreland Counties constituted the Twenty-second Congressional District. This apportionment still exists.

SENATORIAL DISTRICTS.

In 1800 Butler County was assigned to the senatorial district with Allegheny, Washington and Green Counties.

In 1808 Allegheny, Beaver and Butler Counties composed the district.

In 1829 an act of legislature was passed creating a senatorial district out of Beaver and Butler Counties.

In 1843 Allegheny and Butler Counties constituted a senatorial district, and was entitled to elect two members.

The act of 1871 created the twenty-sixth senatorial district out of Butler, Beaver and Washington Counties.

The act of 1874 created the forty-first senatorial district out of Butler and Armstrong Counties, and the act of 1906 made no change in the district.

REPRESENTATIVE DISTRICTS.

In 1800 the representative district was composed of Butler, Beaver, Mercer, Crawford, Erie, Warren and Venango Counties.

In 1808 Butler County was assigned to the district with Allegheny County.

In 1825 by an act of the legislature Butler County was continued in the same district with Allegheny County.

In 1829 the legislature constituted Butler County a district by itself and entitled to one representative.

In 1843 a reapportionment of the state was made and Butler County was continued alone as a district, and entitled to one representative.

In 1857 Butler County alone constituted the district and membership was increased to two.

In 1864 the district was enlarged by adding Lawrence and Mercer Counties and entitled to four members.

In 1871 Butler, Beaver and Washington Counties constituted a legislative district and was entitled to four members.

In 1876 Butler County alone constituted the district and was entitled to two members. This apportionment still exists.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

In 1803 the sixth judicial district was composed of Butler, Beaver, Mercer, and Erie Counties, with Hon. Jesse Moore as presiding judge.

In 1806 the district was composed of Butler, Mercer, Venango, Crawford and Erie Counties.

In 1873 under the new apportionment of the state, Butler County constituted the Seventeenth Judicial District with Lawrence County attached.

In 1893 Butler County alone became the seventeenth district and Lawrence County became a separate district.

In 1906 the legislature passed a judicial apportionment act in which Butler County was constituted the Fiftieth Judicial District.

PUBLIC OFFICIALS.

United States Senators.—Walter Lowrie, who was a resident of Butler, served in the United States Senate from March 4, 1819, to March 4, 1825. At the expiration of his term as a United States Senator he was elected secretary of the Senate, which position he held until 1836. He resigned his position in the Senate in that year to accept the secretaryship of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, which under his vigorous and sagacious policy was built up from an obscure institution to its subsequent importance and prosperity.

John H. Mitchell, formerly a resident of Butler County, was elected United States Senator from Oregon for three successive terms beginning in 1872 and was a member of that body when his death occurred in 1905.

Representatives in Congress.—John Gilmore, of Butler, 1829 to 1831; William Beatty, of Butler, 1837 to 1841; Joseph Buffington, of Kittaning, 1843 to 1845; Alfred Gilmore, of Butler, 1849 to 1851; Samuel A. Purviance, of Butler, 1855 to 1859; Ebenezer McJunkin, of Butler, 1871 to 1874; Col. John M. Thompson of Butler, 1875 to 1878; Capt. George W. Fleeher, of Butler, 1885 to 1887; Thomas W. Phillips, of New Castle, 1893 to 1897; Dr. Joseph B. Showalter, of Chicora, 1897 to 1903; George F. Huff, of Greensburg, was elected from the 22nd District composed of Butler and Westmoreland Counties in the fall of 1902 and was reelected in 1904 and 1906.

James Thompson, a native of Butler County, served two terms in Congress from Erie County, Pennsylvania; he was elected in 1846 and reelected in 1848.

William G. Thompson, who was a brother of Col. John M. Thompson, was elected from the 5th District of Iowa and served in the Forty-seventh and Forty-eighth Congresses.

Augustus M. Martin, who was a native of Connoquenessing Township, Butler County, was a member of Congress from Indiana in 1892, and was one of the distinguished attorneys of that state.

Presidential Electors.—James G. Campbell, 1856; E. McJunkin, 1864; Dr. S. D.

Bell, 1888; E. E. Abrams, 1896; John H. Negley, 1904; A. W. McCollough, 1908.

Federal Appointees.—John M. Sullivan, of Butler, revenue collector, 1867 to 1882; Alexander W. Crawford, consul at Antwerp, Belgium, in 1861; Edwin Lyon, consul at Elpasso, Mexico; Hugh McKee, surveyor of the territory of Kansas, 1858; Charles McCandless, chief justice of New Mexico, 1877; Samuel Black, governor of the territory of Nebraska, 1859; Matthew N. Greer, of Buffalo Township, clerk in the Document Room in the House of Representatives, 1908; James G. Campbell, marshal of the Western District of Pennsylvania; John N. Purviance, R. L. Maxwell, and H. H. Goucher, registers in bankruptcy; J. W. Kirker, provost marshal, 1863 to 1865; John H. Negley, enrolling officer, 1861; John C. O'Donnell, appointed post-master of Pittsburg in 1894; James B. Mates, census enumerator, 1890; James W. Hutchison, commissioner in bankruptcy, 1904 to 1908; James H. Tebay, of Zelenople, and Benjamin R. Williams, of Butler, United States Revenue Service in 1908; George Sutton, a native of Penn Township, was chief inspector in the United States postal service for a district comprising five southern states, with headquarters at Atlanta, Georgia, in 1908.

State Officials.—John Gilmore, treasurer in 1841; Moses Sullivan, president of Canal Commission in 1835; John N. Purviance, auditor general, 1845 to 1851; John M. Sullivan, deputy secretary of state, 1855 to 1858, and assistant clerk of the State Senate from 1847 to 1850, chief clerk from 1852 to 1853, and deputy superintendent of common schools from 1858 to 1860; John Gilmore, speaker of the House in 1841; James Thompson, speaker of the House in 1835; associate justice of the Supreme Court, 1857 to 1867, and chief justice, 1867 to 1872; Walter H. Lowrie, associate justice of the Supreme Court, 1851 to 1857, and chief justice from 1857 to 1863; Samuel A. Purviance, attorney general, 1861;

Jacob Zeigler, transcribing clerk of the Senate, 1843, assistant clerk of the House in 1858, and chief clerk of the senate in 1871; James M. Carson, reading clerk of the Senate, 1896 to 1897; Porter W. Lowry, reading clerk of the senate, 1903; James N. Moore, journal clerk of the House, 1904 and 1906, and assistant clerk of the House in 1907; Carl Shanor, of Prospect, journal clerk of the House, 1903; O. G. Mechling, Butler, pastor and folder in the House, 1907; Frank Stauffer, Butler, assistant door keeper in the House of Representatives, 1900; Jefferson Burtner, chief clerk in the auditor general's office, 1890 to 1908.

County medical inspector for the State Board of Health, Dr. H. D. Hockenberry, of West Sunbury; deputy factory inspector, J. C. McClymond, of Portersville; member of the State Board of Agriculture, W. H. H. Riddle.

Delegates to the Constitutional Convention.—William Ayres and Samuel A. Purviance to the convention of 1838; Louis Z. Mitchell and John N. Purviance to the convention of 1873 (James H. Walker and Samuel A. Purviance were delegates-at-large to the same convention); Porter W. Lowry, Levingston McQuiston and M. F. Leason to the convention of 1891.

State Senators.—Walter Lowrie, 1811 to 1819; Moses Sullivan elected in 1824 and served three terms; William Purviance in 1836; Charles C. Sullivan, 1841 and 1844; William Hazlett, 1849; John R. Harris, 1856; Charles McCandless, 1862; James Kerr, 1868; John M. Greer, 1876 and 1880; Joseph B. Showalter, 1888; Andrew G. Williams, 1894; Capt. Thomas Hayes, 1908.

Representatives.—On account of the various changes in the apportionment of the county, it is difficult to obtain absolutely reliable data about the representatives to the legislature elected from the county previous to the Constitution of 1873. The figures used in the list following indicate the year in which the election was held and the member elected served in the session of the year following. The representatives elected since 1804 are as follows: John McBride, 1804; Jacob Mechling, 1805, 1806, 1807 and 1808; John Nagley, 1809 and 1820; Walter Lowrie, 1810; James Potts, 1814; Andrew Christie, 1815; John Gilmore, 1816-17-18-19-21 (Mr. Gilmore was elected speaker of the House in 1821); Moses Sullivan, 1822 and 1823; William Beatty, 1825-6-7; James McKee, 1828; William Purviance, 1830-31; Joseph Bryson, 1832; Samuel Kerr, 1833-34; George W. Smith, 1835; Samuel A. Gilmore, 1836-37; Samuel A. Purviance, 1838; George Potts, 1839; Isaac S. Pearson, 1840; Samuel M. Lane, 1841; Joseph Cummings, 1842-43; Joseph Cross, 1844; William Hazlett, 1844; Joseph Cross, 1845; D. H. B. Brower, 1845; John R. Harris, 1846; Jacob Zeigler, 1847; Robert Hansen, 1848; D. H. B. Brower, 1850; William Stewart and R. B. McCombs, 1853-54; Alexander W. Crawford, 1855-56-57; W. W. Dodds, 1857; John M. Thompson, 1858-59; William M. Graham, 1859-60; Thomas Robinson, 1860; Hiram C. McCoy, 1861-62; H. W. Grant, 1861-62; William Haslett, 1863-64; John H. Negley, 1863-64-65; Henry Pillow, 1865; James T. McJunkin, 1867; Alexander Leslie, 1868-69; George W. Fleeger, 1870-71; Dr. Jos. S. Lusk, 1871-74-76; David McKee, 1872-73; William S. Waldron, 1872; A. L. Campbell, 1873.

Previous to 1873, Butler, Lawrence, and Mercer Counties formed the Representative District. Under the new Constitution of 1873 Butler County became a separate district and entitled to two members. The constitution also provided for biennial sessions and election of representatives every two years. Representatives elected from the county since that time are as follows: 1876 R. A. Miffin and Dr. William Irvine; 1878 James Humphrey and George H. Graham; 1880 Dr. S. D. Bell and William P. Braham; 1882 Joseph Donley and Jacob Zeigler; 1884 Joseph Hartman and J. M.

Leighner; 1886 Josiah M. Thompson and J. B. Showalter; 1888 Joseph Thomas, Jr., and R. I. Boggs; 1890 Andrew G. Williams and Josiah M. Thompson; 1892 James B. Mates and David B. Douthett; 1894 David B. Douthett and James N. Moore; 1896 John Dindinger and James N. Moore; 1898 John Dindinger and James N. Moore; 1900 James B. Mates and Nelson Thompson; 1902 A. M. Douthett and Thomas Hays; 1904 Dr. W. R. Hockenberry and Thomas Hays; 1906 Ira McJunkin and Rev. J. M. Dight; 1908 Dr. E. G. Wasson and Ira McJunkin.

President Judges.—Under the old system the president judges of the state were commissioned during good behavior. The Constitution of 1838 fixed the term at ten years, and in 1851 the office became elective instead of appointive. The judges under the old and new systems are as follows, being named in the order of their commission: Jesse Moore, February, 1804; Jonathan Roberts, 1818; William Wilkins, 1821; Charles Shaler, 1824; John Bredin, 1831; Daniel Agnew, 1851 and 1863; Lawrence L. McGuffen, 1863; Charles McCandless (appointed) 1874; Ebenezer McJunkin, 1874; James Bredin, 1874; Aaron L. Hazen, 1884; John M. Greer, additional law judge in 1892, and president judge of the Seventeenth District, September 1, 1893, Lawrence County being created the Fifty-first District with Aaron L. Hazen president judge; James M. Galbreath, present incumbent, was elected in 1902.

John McMichael of New Castle was elected additional law judge in the district in 1884 and served until his death in 1902. Norman L. Martin, a member of the New Castle Bar, was appointed to fill the vacancy until the succeeding election, at which Hon. John M. Greer of Butler County was elected an additional law judge.

Associate Judges.—The associate judges of the state were at first commissioned by the governor to serve during life, but in 1838 the constitutional term of service was fixed at five years, and the officers declared to be elective. The first associate judges of Butler County were Samuel Flindley, John Parker and James Bovard, who were commissioned in 1803. John Duffy was commissioned in 1840 and Christian Buhl in 1845. Under the new law the first elections were held in 1851 and Samuel Marshall and John McCandless were chosen. Jacob Mechling, Jr., and Thomas Stephenson were elected in 1856; James Kerr and James Mitchell in 1861; Joseph Cummings and Thomas Garvey in 1866. The death of Judge Cummings and the appointment of Hiram C. McCoy as his successor in 1870 disturbed somewhat the order of judges. Samuel Marshall defeated McCoy for the office in the fall of 1870, and when the latter's term expired in 1871, Daniel Fiedler was elected. In 1875 Samuel Marshall was reelected and in 1876 Robert Storey was chosen to succeed Judge Fiedler. Abraham McCandless was elected in 1880, A. D. Weir in 1881, and Jacob Keck in 1885. The Supreme Court in 1885 decided that the new legislation abolished the office of associate judge in the different judicial districts, and Mr. Keck did not qualify in Butler County.

District Attorneys.—The office of district attorney in Butler County was not created until 1851. Previous to that time the prosecuting attorney for the commonwealth was known as deputy attorney general, and the incumbents were appointed by the governor. Under the old law the office was first held by John Gilmore and he was succeeded in the order named by Charles Wilkins, Robert Moore, John Bredin, W. W. Fetterman, Samuel A. Gilmore, John N. Purviance, Dunlap McLaughlin, Parker C. Purviance, John Graham, John Negley, and E. McJunkin. Under the law of 1850 the following named persons have filled the office: John H. Negley, 1850; Archibald Blakely, 1853;

Engene Ferero, 1856; James W. Kirker, 1859; Robert M. McClure, 1862; W. H. H. Riddle, 1865; John M. Greer, 1868; Ferdinand Reiber, 1871; Livingston McQuiston, 1874; W. A. Forquer, 1877; A. M. Cunningham, 1880; S. B. Snyder, 1883; Charles A. McPherrin, 1886; Aaron L. Reiber, 1889; Ira McJunkin, 1882; A. M. Christley, 1895; Jacob M. Painter, 1898; John R. Henninger, 1901; Samuel Walker, 1904; Albert C. Troutman, 1907.

Sheriffs.—The Constitution of 1790 provided that the office of sheriff was an elective one, and the first incumbent of the office elected in Butler County was John McCandless, in 1803. His successors in the order named have been: Eliakim Anderson, 1806; William Campbell, 1809; Samuel Williamson, 1812; James McKee, 1815; Henry Evans, 1818; William Beatty, 1821; Abraham Maxwell, 1824; John Welsh, 1827; Jacob Brinker, 1830; Francis McBride, 1833; John Pollock, 1836; John B. McLaughlin, 1839; James G. Campbell, 1842; George W. Reed, 1845; Andrew Kearns, 1848; Arthur McGill, 1841; John McKee, 1854; Abraham McCandless, 1857; John Scott, 1860; William O. Breckenridge, 1863; James B. Storey, 1866; Harvey D. Thompson, 1869; John T. Kelley, 1872; George Walter, 1875; John Mitchell (appointed to fill vacancy), 1877; William H. Hoffman, 1878; Thomas Donaghy, 1881; Peter Kramer, 1884; Oliver C. Redic, 1887; William M. Brown, 1890; A. G. Campbell, 1893; W. B. Dodds, 1896; Thomas R. Hoon, 1899; Martin L. Gibson, 1902; A. M. Campbell, 1905; John B. Caldwell, 1909.

The Deputy Sheriffs appointed since 1893 were as follows: A. M. Campbell, 1893; T. James Dodds, 1896; J. Rainey Hoon, 1899; A. O. Hepler, 1902; Curt Vorous, 1904 and 1905; T. James Dodds and Curt Vorous, 1909.

Prothonotaries.—Prior to 1839 the prothonotaries were appointed by the governor for terms of three years. Since that time the office has been elective. Down to 1850 the incumbents of the prothonotary's office discharged the duties of the clerk of courts, but in that year the office of clerk of courts became a separate one, its incumbent being elected every three years. The first prothonotary of Butler County was William Ayres, who was commissioned by the governor July 4, 1803. His successors have been Jacob Mechling in 1809; John Negley in 1818; William Campbell, 1821; John Neyman, 1824; William Stewart, 1827; Peter Duffy, 1833; John Sullivan, 1836; Jacob Zeigler, 1839; Jacob Mechling, Jr., 1842; James McGlaughlin, 1845; C. E. Purviance, 1848; John T. Bard, 1851; Matthew F. White, 1854; Nathan Brown, 1857; Allen Wilson, 1860; William Stoops, 1863; James B. Clark, 1866; Cyrus E. Anderson, 1869; Eli Conn, 1872; James H. Tebay, 1875; Alexander Russell, 1878; Matthew N. Greer, 1881; William M. Shira, 1884; J. W. Brown, 1887; reëlected in 1890; S. M. Seaton, 1893; R. B. Thompson, 1896; J. N. McCollough, 1899; John B. Clark, 1902; William A. Lowry, 1905; J. M. Cruikshank, 1909.

The deputies appointed since 1893 are: Alexander Russell in 1894; Angie Thompson, 1897; Kenneth McCollough, 1900; H. E. Stewart, 1903; S. M. Seaton, 1903; John B. Clark, 1906; John Clark and Miss Lulu Cruikshank, 1909.

Clerk of Courts.—Previous to 1850 the duties of the clerk of courts were discharged by the prothonotary. In that year the office of the clerk of court became a separate one, the incumbent being elected every three years. Louis Z. Mitchell was elected in 1851; J. Graham in 1854; Mr. Graham died while in office and W. K. Potts was elected to fill the vacancy; Emil Maurhoff, 1857; Robert A. Mifflin, 1860; Watson J. Young, 1863; Frank M. Eastman, 1866; Jefferson Burtner, 1869; John H. Sutton, 1872; Louis N. Cochran, 1875; W. A. Wright, 1878; W. B. Dodds, 1881; Reuben McElvain, 1884, reëlected in 1887;

Joseph Criswell, 1890; reëlected in 1893; Isaac Meals, 1896; William P. Turner, 1899; W. H. Campbell (appointed to fill vacancy), in 1901; George M. Graham, 1901; L. E. Christley, 1904; R. M. McFarland, 1907; R. M. McFarland, 1909.

Treasurers.—John Negley, 1804; John Potts, 1807; Samuel Williamson, 1810; William Campbell, 1813; Hugh McKee, 1816; John Gilkey, 1819; William Gibson, 1822; John Sullivan, 1823; Isaiah Niblock, 1826; James Thompson, 1828; Francis McBride, 1829; Andrew Sproul, 1832; George Miller, 1833; John B. McGlaughlin, 1835; James Frazier and Jacob Mechling, Jr., 1839; William Campbell, 1840; Andrew Kearns, 1841, was the first treasurer elected under the new law; Daniel Coll, 1843; Isaac Colbert, 1846; Michael Zimmerman, 1848; Samuel C. Stewart, 1850; John Martin, 1851; William B. Lemmon, 1853; James Kearns, 1856; Samuel Marks, 1857; James Deer, 1859; George W. Reed, 1861; Nathaniel Walker, 1863; William E. Moore, 1865; J. Christy Moore (to fill vacancy), November, 1866; Hugh Morrison, 1867; John Haney, 1869; Francis Anderson, 1871; Joseph F. Campbell, 1873; David Cupps, 1875; J. H. Miller, 1878; A. L. Craig, 1881; J. A. McMarlin, 1884; Amos Seaton, 1887; James S. Wilson, 1890; John T. Martin, 1893; Cyrus Harper, 1896; Daniel Rankin, 1899; W. S. Dixon, 1902; Thomas Alexander, 1905; S. C. Trimble, 1909.

The deputy treasurers appointed since 1900 are John Rankin, 1900; C. W. Dixon, 1903; J. A. Kiskaddon, 1906; Homer Dixon, 1909.

Commissioners.—The county was governed by the commissioners of Allegheny County from 1800 to 1803. Those who have held the office in this county since the latter year are as follows:

Matthew White and James Bovard, November 9, 1803, and Jacob Mechling, November 16, 1803, formed the first board; James Scott, 1804 and 1810; Abner Coats, November 9, 1805; Jacob Smith, December 2, 1806; Abraham Brinker, March 7, 1807; John Negley and Francis Anderson, 1808 and 1809; Thomas Dodds and Joseph Williamson, October 27, 1809; Walter Lowrie, October, 1810; William Balph, October, 1811; Robert Martin, October, 1812 and 1815; Ephraim Harris, October, 1812, vice Lowrie, resigned; James McKee, January, 1813; William Campbell, November, 1815; Thomas McCleary, October, 1816; F. Fryer, October, 1817; Abraham Brinker, November, 1818; Robert Lemmon, October, 1818; J. Dodds, November, 1820; John Brandon, October, 1821; John Covert, November, 1822; Hugh McKee, November, 1824; Robert Scott, November, 1825; John McQuiston, November, 1825; David Dougal, October, 1826; John McNees, October, 1827; Alexander Graham, October, 1828; Joseph McQuiston, 1829; John McCandless, 1830; William Pillow, 1831; Robert Graham, 1832; Joseph Graham, 1835; Hugh Stephenson, 1835; Nathan Skeer, 1836; William Criswell, 1837; Jacob Shannon, October, 1838; Thomas R. McMillen, October, 1839; George Miller, 1840; John Ray, November, 1841; John Ray, October, 1842; Abraham Moyer, October, 1842; Maurice Bredin, 1843; W. W. Dodds, 1844; T. H. Bracken, October, 1845; David Douthett, appointed in April, 1846, to succeed Bredin; John Anderson, October, 1846; Joseph Douthett, October, 1847; Andrew Simpson, 1848; Thomas Kelly, 1849; Thomas Welsh, October, 1850; James Mitchell, October, 1851; John Miller, November, 1852; William C. Campbell, 1853; John Kennedy, 1854; Andrew Boggs, 1855; P. Hilliard, 1856; Isaac Robb, 1857; William Harbison, 1858; Charles McClung, 1859; Thomas McNees, 1860; Matthew Greer, 1861; Abner Bartley, 1862; Samuel Leason, 1863; A. C. Christie, 1864; William Dick, 1865; John W. Brandon, 1866; Charles Hoffman, 1867; James M. Lowe, 1868; John S. Campbell, 1869; William L. Bartley, 1870; Benjamin F. Garvin, 1871;

Robert Barron, 1872; James P. Christley, 1873; John C. Riddle, 1874; James C. Donaldson, 1875.

Under the article of the Constitution of 1873, providing for the election of three commissioners, to serve three years, and for the minority representation on the board, the following named were chosen in November, 1875: Robert Barron, J. C. Donaldson and William A. Christie, to serve until January, 1879, when James Gribben, Jonathan Maybury and J. C. Donaldson qualified. In the fall of 1881, Charles Cochrane, George W. Hays and T. I. Wilson were elected, but the last named died prior to January, and James Collins, appointed to fill the vacancy, took the oath of office as the third member; J. C. Breaden, John C. Kelley and J. M. Turner were elected in 1884; A. J. Hutchison, John C. Kelly and B. M. Duncan, in 1887; John Humphrey was appointed to succeed Kelly, resigned, January 10, 1890; and he with S. F. Marshall and J. C. Kiskaddon, were elected in November, 1890. In 1893, S. W. McCollough, Richard Kelly and George W. Wilson were elected; in 1896, John Mitchell, Harmon G. Seaton and D. H. Sutton; in 1899, John W. Gillespie, J. J. McGarvey and John A. Eichert; on June 20, 1902, Solomon Dunbar was appointed to fill the vacancy on the board caused by the death of John W. Gillespie; in 1902, James L. Patterson, Robert McClung and Greer McCandless were elected; on January 14, 1905, John T. Kelly was appointed to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Robert McClung; in 1905, N. S. Grossman, William Seibert and G. F. Easley were elected. In 1909 the Board is composed of J. C. Kiskaddon, president; Charles Keiger, secretary; W. H. Grabe; clerk, W. B. Scott, with three transcribing clerks—Miss Mabel S. Graham, Miss Catherine Reiger and Miss Jennie Martin.

Coroners.—William McDonald, commissioned October 4, 1803; Robert Stewart, 1806; Isaac Evans, 1809; James McKee, 1812; Connell Rogers, 1815; William Gibson, 1818; David Shannon, 1821; Jacob Brinker, 1824; George Miller, 1827; Robert St. Clair, 1830; James Spencer, 1833; Thomas McKee, 1836; James Hoon, 1839; Matthias Cypher, 1842; George W. Crozier, 1845; James White, 1848; Archibald Critchlow, 1851; Jacob Bentle, 1845; Neal Duffy, 1857; John Lefever, 1860; W. Brewer, 1863; James Kearns, 1866; George Burkhardt, 1869; David Kirkpatrick, 1872; W. R. Conn, 1875; J. J. Campbell, 1878; William Kennedy, 1881; William Campbell, 1884; Alexander Storey, 1887; John Kennedy, 1890; G. M. Graham, 1893; John L. Jones, 1896; reelected in 1899; Dr. J. C. Atwell was appointed to fill the vacancy caused by the death of John L. Jones, April 22, 1902, and was elected at the November election of 1902; Dr. W. S. Patterson, 1905; Dr. R. L. Stackpole, 1909 (deputy, Fred Poessing).

Register and Recorder.—Prior to 1839 this office was an appointive one, and during the first fifteen years of the county's existence was administered by the prothonotary. On July 4, 1803, William Ayres was commissioned prothonotary, clerk of the court of oyer and terminer, clerk of quarter sessions, clerk of the orphans' court, recorder, register of wills, administrator of oaths of office, etc. Jacob Mechling succeeded Ayres in January, 1810, in all these capacities; but in 1818, Robert Scott became register and recorder. The incumbents, appointed or elected since that time, are named as follows: Maurice Bredin, 1832; John Welsh, 1836; William W. Brandon, 1838; Joseph McQuiston (first election), 1839; William Balph, 1842, reelected in 1844; James T. McJunkin, 1848, reelected in 1851; Isaac S. P. DeWolf, 1854; Adam Elkas, 1857; Cyrus E. Anderson, 1860; James S. Kennedy, 1863; Simon Nixon, 1866; George W. Kneiss, 1869; Matthew N. Greer, 1872; James D. Anderson, 1875; H. H. Gallagher, 1878; H. W. Christie, 1881; M. H. Byerly, 1884; H. A.

Ayres, 1887; David E. Dale, 1890; J. S. Wick, 1893; W. J. Adams, 1896, reelected, 1899; J. P. David, 1902; Porter Wilson, 1905; Julian Clark, 1909 (deputy, E. I. Brugh).

Jury Commissioners.—William A. Christie and Charles McClung, 1867; John A. Brown and Peter Emery, 1870; T. W. Kennedy and John M. McCandless, 1873; Samuel Balfour and Thomas Jameson, 1876; Hugh McCrean and J. W. Monks, 1879; Daniel Walleit and Robert McClung, 1882; Z. McMichael and Frederick Henninger, 1885; W. F. Campbell and Charles Rielly, 1888; William R. Patterson and John McCafferty, 1891. George H. Graham was appointed commissioner, vice John McCafferty, deceased, in November, 1892, to serve until January 1, 1895. James Griffen, H. W. Nicholas, 1894; Nicholas died in March, 1896, and A. O. Everhart was appointed to fill the vacancy. A. O. Everhart and Charles Redick were elected in 1897; A. D. Nicholas and John D. Christie in 1900; A. O. Everhart and A. L. Cooper in 1903; Dale Thorne and John Leise, in 1906; Dale Thorn and John Leise, 1909.

Surveyors.—Prior to 1850 this office was an appointive one. David Dougal, James Scott and James Bovard were the first surveyors who performed work under the order of the commissioners. Their successors have been James Irvine, Thomas Graham, 1809 to 1814; William Purviance, 1823; Hugh Conway, 1827; James Hoeg, James Dunlap, appointed in 1839; Thomas H. Lyon and Peter Murrin, served prior to 1850; William Purviance, 1853; David Scott, 1859; W. D. McCandless, 1862; Nathan M. Slater, 1865, 1868, 1871, appointed to fill vacancy in 1875, and elected in 1880; F. Wilt, 1874 (died in office); James M. Denny, 1877 and 1880; B. F. Hilliard, 1883 and 1886; C. F. L. McQuiston, 1889 and 1892; F. E. McQuiston, 1895; Isaiah Meals, 1898; B. F. Hilliard, 1901; C. F. B. Awtey, 1904; reelected in 1907; C. F. B. Awtey, 1909.

County Auditors.—1896, W. S. Moore, O. R. Thorne, F. P. McBride; 1899, J. W. Patterson, P. H. Sechler, J. A. McGowen; 1902, Howard C. Hazlett, W. D. Deitrich, George S. Hinselton; 1905, W. B. Scott, George N. Wilson, David Cupps; 1909, H. E. Heberlin, E. W. Thompson and Robert A. White.

Superintendent of County Home, 1909, O. W. Stoughton.

Early Justices of the Peace.—The justices of the First Election District of Butler County, from 1804 to 1838 were as follows: Melzer Tannehill, Jacob Smith and Ephraim Harris, 1804; William Adams, 1805; Thomas Elder, 1806; Hugh Lee, 1808; Hugh Henderson, 1809; James McKee, 1812; Robert Reed, 1820; W. McMichael and Andrew Donaldson, 1824; John Reynolds, 1826; Samuel E. Harris, 1828; Samuel Kerr, 1830; John Murrin, 1834; John Neal and Thomas Stephenson, 1835; Joseph Justice, W. H. McGill and Alexander McBride, 1836; William Jack, 1837; Henry C. Linn and John Black, 1838. In 1820 this district comprised Mercer and Slippery Rock Townships.

The justices of the peace for the same period in the Second District were: Jacob Meehling, 1804; Washington Parker and John Stewart, 1805; A. Young, 1808; Matthew B. Lowrie, 1812 and 1813; John Christy, 1815; Joseph Kerr, 1817; John Murrin, 1823; Andrew Donaldson and Benjamin Fletcher, 1827; William Turner, 1828; David Kelly, 1834; Levi Duchess and John Anderson, 1835; Jacob Hilliard, 1836; and Josiah Fletcher, 1838.

In District Number 3 the justices of the peace were: William Johnston, James Bovard and James Scott, 1804; Thomas Gilchrist and Samuel Kinkaid, 1805; Reuben Ayres and Patrick Hagerty, 1808; Walter Lowrie, 1809; Joseph Williamson, 1812; William Hutcheson and William Campbell, 1813; Robert Scott, 1815; Samuel Kinkaid, John Neyman and John Duffy, 1816; Abraham Brinker, 1817; William Robb, 1818; Maurice Bredin, 1821; Thomas McCleary and Francis McBride, 1825; James McCurdy and John Sweeney, 1826; Daniel McLaughlin, 1827; Moses Hanlen, 1828; James Cunningham, 1829; Hugh McKee, 1830; David McCandless, 1832; John McClelland, 1834; Robert Carnahan, 1835; Bennet Dobbs, 1836; P. C. Purviance, 1837. In 1815, the townships of Butler, Centre, Clearfield and Donegal, were included in this district as well as some other territory.

The justices of the peace in District Number 4 were: Robert Galbreath and Francis Anderson, 1804; John David, 1806. Owing to changes in 1807 it does not appear that justices were elected or appointed for this district. William Campbell, 1822; Isaac Lefever, 1825; James Potts, William Walker, John Dodds and James Brown, 1829; W. R. Elliott, 1830; William Dixon and Johnston White, 1835; Emil Maurhoff, 1838. This district comprised Buffalo, Clearfield, Butler and Middlesex, in 1822, Clearfield and Butler Townships being detached from the Third District.

The justices of the peace in District Number 5 were: Robert Hays, 1804; Stephen Stone, 1806; Joshua Stoolfire, 1810; Christian Buhl, 1813; Robert Boggs, 1820; John Oakley, 1822; Daniel Belts Hoover and Robert Brown, 1823; William McLean (resigned in 1836), and Jacob Grossenor, 1824; William Simpson and B. G. Goll, 1825; Andrew White, 1827; Samuel Kirk, 1832; James Frazier, 1823; Daniel Graham and John Henry, 1836; David Spear, 1837; W. Cunningham and Henry Umstead, 1838; Thomas Fletcher, 1839. In 1810, Cranberry Township constituted the Fifth District; in 1813, Connoquenessing Township, then organized, was added, and, in 1820, these two townships with Middlesex and Butler formed the district.

In District Number 6 the justices of the peace were: Eliakim Anderson, 1804;

John Brackney, 1805; A. Bryson and Thomas Christy, 1808; William Dodds, 1812; Robert Martin, 1815; Thomas Sullivan, 1819; Thomas Christie, 1820; John Thompson, 1827; Henry Dufford, 1830; Robert Hampson, 1813; George A. Kirkpatrick, 1832; Thomas Stewart, 1833.

Commissions were issued to the following justices of the peace in the county in 1907: George Graham, Fairview Borough; W. F. Lytle, Butler Borough; T. H. Wheeler, Harmony Borough; P. P. Brown, West Sunbury Borough; A. R. Thompson, West Sunbury Borough; M. J. Leonard, Chicora; James F. McKee, Prospect Borough; A. D. Groome, Parker Township; W. P. Day, Fairview Township; J. P. Gettman, Lancaster Township; O. P. Graham, Cranberry Township; Isaac N. Wright, Cranberry Township; W. H. H. Campbell, Venango Township; Solomon Pontins, Donegal Township; W. P. Higgins, Oakland Township; John F. McCoy, Cherry Township; J. T. Black, Marion Township; James McMichael, Clay Township; Philip Hilliard, Washington Township; Charles Snyder, Harrisville Borough; John A. Eichert, Jackson Township; H. L. Allen, Allegheny Township.

In 1908 commissions were issued to the following justices of the peace: Zenas McMichael, Zelenople Borough; Joseph Criswell and James M. McNally, Butler Township; J. N. McBride, Franklin Township; John S. Campbell, Cherry Township; John C. Dight, Adams Township; John W. Kaltenbaugh, Penn Township; W. H. Bovard, Slippery Rock Township; P. G. Groome, Washington Township; J. W. Heslop, Marion Township; John Blair, Venango Township; U. H. Book, Cherry Township; F. H. Davy, Butler Borough; Geo. W. Huselton, Chicora; Alexander Lurting, Mars Borough; Carl Butzer, Petrolia Borough; A. J. Smathers, Evans City Borough; H. M. Wise, Harmony Borough; S. W. McCollough, Fairview Township; Charles Ifft, Mercer Township.

APPOINTMENT OF COURT OFFICIALS.

Since 1893, the following court officials have been appointed by the various judges sitting on the bench:

Court Criers.—B. L. Hockenberry, appointed in 1894 and served until September, 1902, when he resigned and J. S. Campbell was appointed to fill the vacancy; Joseph Criswell was appointed in 1903, and William H. Walker, June 9, 1906.

Court Stenographers.—Ed. S. Riddle, appointed December 11, 1894, by Judge Greer, and reappointed January 1, 1903, by Judge Galbreath; Miss Ada Findley was appointed assistant court stenographer January 9, 1903; Miss Georgie Christie was appointed assistant court stenographer May 4, 1908, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Miss Findley.

Court Auditors.—1893, Frank Stauffer; 1894, W. C. Findley; 1895, Harry L. Graham; 1896, Raymond L. Cornelius; 1897, E. H. Negley; 1898, F. H. Murphy; 1899, Kennedy Marshall; 1900, John W. Coulter; 1901, T. James Dodds; 1902, John H. Jackson; 1903, Charles B. Adams; 1904, Charles H. Miller; 1905, James B. Mates; 1906, Thomas Watson; 1907, Samuel S. Atwell.

Tipstaves appointed by the court since 1893.—At the March term of court, 1895, the following appointments were made: John Mitchell, John Shaffner, Elias Boyer, and Robert McElhaney. In August of the same year John Mitchell resigned and James C. Welsh was appointed to fill the vacancy. In 1898 the court made the following appointments: Hugh Morgan, Robert Harbison, and Christ Henchberger. In 1900, W. W. Maxwell, O. P. Campbell and R. O. Lewis were appointed. In 1903, Joseph Henchberger, Harmon Seaton, Capt. John G. Bippus and F. M. Renno. The same year the court fixed the compensation of these officers at $2 per day. At the December term, 1905, W. H. Aber and George W. Campbell were appointed to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of F. M. Renno and Joseph Henchberger. In 1907 W. H. McCandless and James A. McMarlin were appointed and the same year the pay of these officers was increased by order of court to $2.50 per day.

CHAPTER VI

THE OIL AND GAS INDUSTRIES

Early Oil Discoveries—Petroleum Used as Medicine—Its Commercial Possibilities Realized—Oil Company Formed—First Shipment to Europe—Early Oil Wells—The Parker's Landing Field—Petrolia, Karns City and Fairview—Greece City—Troutman Farm—Millerstown Field—The Bald Ridge District—Thorn Creek—Thorn Creek Extension—Reibald Field—The Hundred-foot District—Brownsdale and Cooperstown—Speechley Field—The Pipe Lines—Producers and Refiners—Natural Gas as a Fuel—Deepest Well in the County—Nitro-glycerine—Flanagan's Well-cleaner—Accidents and Tragedies of the Business—Death of Holland—Butler County Woman Killed—Miscellaneous Incidents and Sketches—A Loaded Porker—William Smith—The Montcalm Letter—Dunc Karns—Richard Jennings—Taylor & Satterfield—Plummer's Ride—The Producers' Protective Association—Beating the Railroad Company—Parker City—The Devil's Half-acre—The Wickedest Man in the World—The Agrarian Trouble at Renfrew—Wilson's Iron Derrick—Fortunes That Were Missed—The Lawyer Pumper—The "Spotty" McBride Well—Hoffman's Luck—Oil Country Honor—Oil Men's Outing Association—Prices of Crude Oil—A Disastrous Fire—Thomas W. Phillips.

Petroleum was first discovered within the present boundaries of the United States about 1627 or 1629 by the Franciscan Father, Joseph de la Roche D'Allion, who located a bituminous spring at Cuba, in Allegheny County, New York. Little attention seems to have been paid to the matter at the time, however, but occasionally, at long intervals, we hear of other oil discoveries, as, for instance, in 1694, when Eele Hancock and Portloch obtained patents for making "oile" out of a peculiar kind of rock. Again, in 1761, we find that oils were distilled from bituminous shale for medical purposes.

About the middle of the Eighteenth century the presence of oil in the region now included within Butler, Armstrong, and Venango Counties seems to have attracted the attention of some of the French officers commanding forces in the Northwestern territory. Among them was Captain Jonaicaire, commander of the French expedition down the Allegheny in 1749, who located an oil spring above Fort Venango on the Allegheny. According to a formerly accepted account, Contrecoeur in the following year, in his official dispatches to Montcalm, makes mention of the presence of oil in this field and describes an Indian ceremonial which seemed to furnish proof that some, at least, of the Indians in his day were fire-worshippers. This letter, the authenticity of which has been denied (see account of its origin in the article entitled "The Montcalm Letter," in the latter part of this chapter) read as follows:

"I would desire to assure you that this is a most delightful land. Some of the most astonishing natural wonders have been discovered by our people. While descending the Allegheny, fifteen leagues below the mouth of the Conewango and three above the Venango (French Creek), we were invited by the chief of the Senecas to attend a religious ceremony of his tribe. We landed and drew up our canoes on a point where a small stream entered the river. The tribe appeared unusually solemn. We marched up the stream about a half league, where the company, a band it appeared, had arrived some days before us. Gigantic hills begirt us on every side. The scene was really sublime. The great chief then recited the conquests and heroism of their ancestors. The surface of the stream was covered with a thick scum, which, upon applying a torch at a given signal, burst into a complete conflagration. At the sight of the flames the Indians gave forth a triumphant shout that made the hills and valleys re-echo again. Here then, is revived the ancient fire-worship of the East; here then, are the children of the Sun."

In 1779, when Broadhead's division of General Sullivan's army was advancing against the Seneca Indians, signs of oil were observed and reported in various localities along the Allegheny River.

In the vicinity of Titusville, on the west side of Oil Creek, there have been found evidences of somewhat primitive oil operations in a number of pits—several hundred in all—sunken in the flats of the creek, and measuring each about seven feet in length by six in depth and four in width. These pits had a clay bottom and were walled with halved logs. When the debris was cleared from them by the early discoverers they gradually filled with water, on top of which floated a thin coat of oil. The Indian Cornplanter could give no account of their origin, nor has any definite information ever been ascertained in regard to it.

THE OIL USED AS MEDICINE.

The Indians and early white settlers made use of the oil for medicinal purposes. In 1806 a man named Carey obtained it from Oil Creek and sold it under the name of Seneca oil. It was found serviceable in rheumatism, in weakness of the stomach, in curing bruises and sore breasts, and as a gentle cathartic, and had been previously credited with these valuable properties, in 1789, by Jedediah Morse, in the American Universal Geography, published at Charlestown, Mass. That its virtues were not generally known is proved by the fact that when General Hays, of Franklin, subsequent to 1806, shipped several barrels of the oil by wagon to Baltimore, the merchant to whom they were consigned emptied them into Chesapeake Bay.

ITS COMMERCIAL POSSIBILITIES REALIZED.

The distillation of petroleum had been carried on in Truseovitch, Austria, as early as 1810, and in 1853 one Schrenier first used it for illuminating purposes; but the first practical method of refining was introduced by an Austrian named Toeh, who built a refinery at Tarentum for Peterson and Dale. It was about half a century ago that interest in this peculiar product began to assume a practical form. A prize of $1,000 was offered by S. Kier for the invention of a lamp that would burn the oil, and in 1857, largely through the efforts of Nevin & McKeown, it began to be known as an article of commerce.

In the meanwhile efforts were being made to find some practical method of obtaining a large and steady supply of the product. In 1858 a well in Canada was excavated by pick and shovel to the oil sand, and in the same year a well 400 feet deep was drilled by T. W. Nevin and Co. at Greensburg, Penna., though without success. The pioneer producer was found in Col. Drake, who in 1859 drilled the first well on Oil Creek, Venango County. Thus it appears that J. M. Williams, who excavated the Canada well above mentioned was the first man on this continent within the historic period to dig down to the petroleum; T. W. Nevin was the first to drill expressly for it, and Colonel Drake was the first to drill for it with success.

The era of commercial activity in this field began at once after the success of Colonel Drake. In February, 1860, the Butler Oil Company was organized to drill for oil in the vicinity of Butler. The members of the company kept the project pretty quiet at first and the press took little notice of it, as all felt that they were treading on uncertain ground, and they wished to blare no trumpets that might only serve to emphasize and advertise a possible failure. There were not wanting others, however, to take the risks involved in view of a possible great reward, and almost daily reports of new discoveries, some on farms in various parts of the county, fed the excitement until the oil fever was endemic over the greater part of this region.

In the meanwhile developments were proceeding on Oil Creek that commanded the attention of the country, and indeed, of the world.

OIL COMPANY FORMED.

At a meeting held in Zimmerman's Hotel in Butler, January 19, 1861, a company was organized to develop the oil sand in the neighborhood of Butler. The proceedings of the company were very dignified and were conducted with a due appreciation for all the proprieties, William Campbell presided at the meeting, and J. G. Muntz acted as secretary. Committees were appointed to draft articles of association and select a site for operation. The company began business under the title of the "Butler Pioneer Oil Company," and on February 5, 1861, commenced operations on the lot near the brewery southwest of the borough, and drilled a well to the depth of 800 feet without striking oil. Believing their enterprise to be a failure, the company abandoned the well. This well was located on the Negley property between Water Street and the Connoquenessing Creek in the third ward of Butler borough, and a short distance from Walter's Mill.

The next oil company organized in Butler County was the Enterprise Oil Company at Prospect in 1862. Rev. A. H. Waters was president of this company and A. W. McCollough, secretary. The unofficial stockholders were J. K. Kennedy, John W. Forrester, D. C. Roth, G. B. Warren, Mrs. Ann Bredin, all of the Prospect neighborhood, with E. McJunkin, Jacob Zeigler and James T. McJunkin, of Butler. This company drilled three wells at Harris' Ford on Slippery Rock Creek, one of which had a good showing of heavy oil. The wells were drilled wet and failed to pan out. The company finally abandoned these wells.

FIRST SHIPMENT TO EUROPE.

The credit of making the first shipment of petroleum to European markets belongs to H. Julius Klingler and John Berg, of Butler. In 1863 Messrs. Klingler and Berg were engaged in shipping oil from the Venango County field to Pittsburg. The oil was shipped in barrels and transported from Titusville or Oil City by means of flat-boats, and when the cargo reached Pittsburg, the barrels were stored in large freight yards near the boat-landing. The shipment of the first cargo of oil to Europe was the result of "pernicious activity" on the part of the authorities of the city of Pittsburg. Many firms were engaged in shipping oil to Pittsburg by boat and storing it in freight yards from whence it was subsequently shipped by railroad to eastern markets. Many thousands of barrels of oil were stored in the yards within the city limits, and the residents of that portion of the city became alarmed for fear of a fire. The city authorities investigated the matter and ordered the owners of the oil to move it. This order suggested the idea to Messrs. Klingler and Berg of shipping a consignment of oil to London and seeking a market for it there. Accordingly they loaded one thousand barrels on to the cars at Pittsburg, shipped them to Philadelphia, and thence by clipper to Liverpool, England, where they were consigned to Boulton, English and Brandon, who bought the oil by the ton.

EARLY OIL WELLS.

The first oil well in the upper fields of Butler County was, it is said, drilled on the Joseph Meals farm in Washington Township, later the Dr. A. M. Hoover farm. It was drilled by hand to a depth of three hundred feet, and was abandoned on account of a flow of water, which stopped further operation. In 1889 a well was drilled within seventy-five feet of this oil well, which was a good producer and on the same farm and on the Shira, Clark, Bell, Miller and other farms, producing wells were obtained in 1893 and 1894.

The first oil well in the Millerstown field, now Chicora, was drilled in 1861 to a depth of two hundred and fifty feet, but the company were from nine hundred to eleven hundred feet short in their calculations and consequently failed of their object.

Great excitement was caused in January, 1865, by the oil discoveries on Slippery Rock Creek. On February 2, Dr. Egbert, the oil operator of Franklin who had leased thousands of acres on the Slippery Rock, completed a well near Harlansburg that yielded a barrel of oil every thirty minutes. In March, 1865, the Smith and Collins well on the Campbell farm on Slippery Rock Creek, was drilled in and operated as a mystery. Some claimed it to be a hundred barrel producer, and others rated it as high as two hundred. The same year a heavy producer for the time was struck on Muddy Creek and one by the Clark Company near the village of Wurttemberg, just outside of the western limits of the county. In May, 1865, a well was drilled on the Robert Glenn farm in Marion Township, then owned by Robert Vanderlin and at the same time a well was drilled at Buhl's Mill in Forward Township, on Connoquenessing Creek.

The Smbury Oil Company drilled a well at West Sunbury immediately after the Civil War, and made their first sale of oil at Pittsburg in September, 1866, receiving eleven hundred dollars for the first product of their two wells in Butler County. The oil was barreled and hauled to Pittsburg by wagon.

In August, 1865, the Butler Oil Company leased twelve thousand acres of land between the village of Martinsburg (now Bruin), and Millerstown, and controlled the land from Millerstown to Herman in Summit Township. This company drilled five wells, not one of which reached the Butler sand, and thus in an ocean of oil they found disappointment. The territory held by this company subsequently produced some of the largest wells found in the Butler field. The company dissolved after this experience, but later its members were found identified with more successful operations.

C. D. Angell who in 1867 was operating on the Island property at Scrubgrass, came into Butler County and found every indication of oil on a line extending to Harmony through Bull Valley and Prospect, and in a western direction on a line between Raynilton in Venango County and Slippery Rock in Butler County. In later years Angell became identified with the Butler County fields and was one of the largest producers in the district.

In 1868 the Jacobs Oil Company was organized by Butler men, being named in honor of Captain Jacob Ziegler, who never for a moment lost faith in Butler County as an oil field. This company entered the field of Martinsburg, and drilled a well which started to flow at the rate of sixty barrels per day after it had been shot, and was the first paying well produced in the limits of Butler County. This well was purchased by Robert Black in 1872 for $4,000, and continued a small producer until 1880.

THE PARKER'S LANDING FIELD.

In the year 1860 Thomas McConnell, W. D. Robinson, Smith K. Campbell, and Col.

J. B. Finley, purchased two acres of land on the west bank of the Allegheny River about ninety rods north of Tom's Run, from Elisha Robinson, Sr., and organized the Foxburg Oil Company. A well was drilled to the depth of 460 feet, when an accident occurred, which obstructed the operations for a few days. In the interval the war broke out and the excitement incident thereto stopped all further proceedings and the well was abandoned.

Subsequently the same parties purchased one hundred acres known as the Tom's Run tract from Mr. Robinson, and in 1865 a well was drilled which was the first producer in that locality. It is a remarkable fact that the well drilled in 1860 was on territory that the operations of subsequent years proved to be dry. Had the well been completed in 1860 it would probably have prevented all future developments in that region for many years. The well completed in 1865 was known as Clarion No. 1, and yielded eighteen barrels a day until 1869, when it became a twenty-five barrel producer. In July, 1869, there were twenty-five producing wells at Parker's Landing yielding 310 barrels daily. At the close of that month there were twenty-two wells rigging and eighteen wells drilling, so that the total in August was sixty-four. The old town of Lawrenceburg was invaded by the vanguard of operators and drillers before the close of August and many Butler men went thither to share in the work and profits. Oil agreements were printed in the newspapers of Butler and everything pointed towards busy days. By the middle of November, 1859, there were 1,058 wells in the Parker and Lawrenceburg field. The first oil fire in the district was reported November 21, when the Enterprise well above the Landing was destroyed. This well was the property of J. W. Christy, Col. John M. Thompson, Allen Wilson, W. K. Potts, and other Butler men.

The Valley well at Church Run on the Emerton-Parker farm, was completed in January, 1870, and was owned by M. E. Adams, John Scott, John M. Thompson, George Purviance, B. C. Huseilton, and William McClung. The Barnes and Terrell well near by and the new well above the mouth of Bear Creek were also completed in January, 1870. Before the close of the month a five-barrel well was struck at Martinsburg on the Farren farm, which was known as the Berg well. This well was owned by S. D. Karns, Herman J. Berg, and others. The Atlantic well in that neighborhood owned by Patrick McBride and others was reported in February, 1870.

The Thorn Creek Oil Company was organized February 2, 1870, with Harvey Osborne, president; Francis Laube, secretary; E. A. Helmbold, superintendent; E. F. Aderhold, treasurer; J. M. Dowler and H. T. Markel, auditors, and R. M. Douthett and James Gribben, business managers. This company operated in the Parker and Martinsburg district and brought in the "Maple Shade" near Risk Village, the "Isabel" on Thorn Creek, the "Walnut Shade" on the Fox farm, near Emlenton, and the "Church Run" well on the Marshall farm above the Valley well. These wells came in in March, 1870. Then followed the "Golden Gate," the "Shepherd," near Lawrenceburg, the "Wyona" on the Farren farm, the "Number 12" south of Bear Creek, the "North West," the "Cataract," the "Eclipse," and other wells. The "Golden Gate" was owned by Butler men.

In April, 1870, oil was discovered on the Aaron Beery farm in Middlesex Township. James Sutton and other Butler County men brought in some wells on the Anchor farm on Fowler Run, and the Smith and Stewart well on the Fowler farm were brought in in April. The Glade Run and Cherry Valley Oil Company was organized in April and began active operation in the Parker Township field. Among the wells brought in were the "Dingbat" near the old furnace on Bear Creek, the "Hoover" and the "California." These were followed by the "Rush," the "Washington," and the Turk and Shira wells, all in the first half of the year. In August the Parsons Brothers struck oil near Farentown on the Martinsburg Road and brought in three wells that were fine producers. Dr. Guthrie and William Gill of Butler brought in the "Millbrook" well on the Conelly farm. Dr. Cowden and Jacob Ziegler of Butler brought in the "Estella" on the Logue farm, and Dr. Cowden, S. H. Bailey, and Newton of Portersville, drilled the "Udora" No. 2 on the Bailey farm. Other wells drilled were the "Nancy Adams" on the John B. Leonard farm, and the "Mullen," or "Glory Hole," were twenty-barrel producers. McGee and Atwell drilled the Ida May well on the Faren farm in 1870, and Gen. John N. Purviance of Butler owned the Oak well on the Robinson farm.

The Cherry valley well drilled in Venango Township in November, 1870, to a depth of 650 feet, showed the same sand as the Parker's Landing field. The Wolf Creek Oil and Salt Testing Company, of Centerville, of which C. O. Kingsbury was president, began operations late in 1870, and the Thorn Creek Oil Company organized the same year, began operations in Parker and Venango Townships.

The Wolf Creek well No. 1 was drilled in 1870 for a Centerville syndicate, but was abandoned at a little over 800 feet. The tools were stuck in the well, the fishing tackle lost, and a heavy flow of gas drove the drillers away from their work. On one occasion the pressure of gas in this well raised a column of water one hundred feet above the derrick, and nothing was done to control the flow of water and what was probably one of the strongest gas wells struck in the county was literally drowned out. In 1871 the same company drilled at a point in the hollow near the creek two miles northwest of Centerville (Slippery Rock) to a depth of 1,423 feet, obtaining a small show of oil and gas. This well was productive of some geological knowledge, but was a financial failure.

The first well drilled in the southwestern section of the county was on the Muller farm near Zelenople in 1870. This well was drilled to a depth of 825 feet and then abandoned. Twenty years later the Harmony and Lancaster pools were developed in the vicinity of the Muller well.

A man named Whann, who had been a partner of J. A. Satterfield at Pithole, made the second attempt to find oil at Millerstown in 1870. He got the rig partly up when a two-inch plank fell on the head of the contractor and put a quietus on operations for two years.

In 1866 a well was drilled on the Adam Ritzert farm in Oakland Township, which showed the existence of oil and lead many people to predict that Butler County would yet prove an extensive oil field. The drilling of new wells around Martinsburg (Bruin) in August, 1871, and the extension of the field southwest towards Karns City and Petrolia showed that the time for predicting was past, and that oil reservoirs existed in many places throughout the county. During this year the Borland well was drilled on the Robert Black farm, the famous Bennett well on the Stone House farm in Parker Township; two wells were drilled by Badger and Karns on the Stone House farm, the Heiner well was completed on the Say farm, the Lambing well on the Fletcher, and a well on the Martin farm.

PETROLIA, KARNS CITY AND FAIRVIEW.

The Campbell farm became the front of operations in November, 1871, when a sixty-five barrel well responded to the drill. This was followed by a well on the Walker farm adjoining Campbell, which became a noted producer, and was purchased in May, 1872, by B. B. Campbell and the Walker brothers. These wells were the beginning of the village of Argyle, which was one of the mushroom oil towns of Fairview Township. Within six years the R. D. Campbell and the A. L. Campbell farms were celebrated for at least a dozen of great wells that made fortunes for their owners as well as the farmers.

The "Maple Shade" well was completed on the Widow Hutchison farm in Parker Township south of Bear Creek early in the spring of 1872 by A. W. McCollough. It started off with 100 barrels a day and for a time was known as the largest producer south of the creek.

Other wells completed in 1872 were the Lambing well on the Shakely farm, the "Lib," "Walnut," the "Fannie," and the Collins No. 2 on the Milford farm, and the wells on the Jamison farm. The success of the "Maple Shade" well on the Hutchison farm led to an invasion of the territory around Martinsburg, and the success of the Columbia Oil Company on the Reddick farm, and the wells drilled on the Wilt farm, Campbell, Shepherd, the Matthew Cannon tract, the Martin farms, and others south of Martinsburg, pointed to an extension of the field.

A scramble for leases resulted in large profits to the land owners. James Say leased his 100 acre farm at $200 per acre, and one-eighth royalty, while other farmers were equally as fortunate. In April, 1872, the Lambing brothers struck a hundred-barrel well on the Gibson farm near Fairview, and the McPherson well on that farm proved a paying property. Around the village of Argyle land was sold from $500 to $1,000 per acre. The principal operators in this district were the Lambing brothers, B. B. and A. L. Campbell, J. B. Findley, C. D. Angell, McKinney and Nesbitt, and McPherson and Blaney.

During the year 1872 the scouts of the oil army were locating and drilling wells in advance of the Parker field. A well was drilled on the John Smith farm in Cherry Township, on the David Stewart and the Rumbaugh farms in Washington Township, on the J. H. Hindman farm in Clay Township, on the W. C. Campbell farm in Fairview Township, at Ralston's Mill in Concord Township, at Millerstown in Donegal Township, at James Stephenson's Mill in Summit Township, and along Thorn Creek. The greatest advances were made in Fairview Township. The well on the W. C. Campbell farm produced a little oil and turned out to be the greatest gas well that had been struck in oildom up to that time. The "Fanny Jane" was struck in May, 1872, and in four months' time the town of Petrolia had sprung up with a population greater than that of the county seat. In the same month oil was found on the S. S. Jamison farm two miles north of Boydstown in Concord Township, and the town of Greece City sprung up like a mushroom in the night. This was the first oil discovered in the Connoquenessing Valley. The Bonny Brook well at Brinker's Mill in Summit Township, now East Butler, was completed in June, 1872, but proved a disappointment to its owners. The McClymonds farm, now the site of Karns City, became famous as an oil center the same year.

In December, 1871, Cooper Brothers leased fifteen acres of land from Hugh P. McClymonds and fifteen acres from Samuel L. Riddle. The first well was located in the valley near the line between the two leases on the McClymonds land. In June, 1872, this well was producing 120 barrels a day. On the 29th of May, "Dunc" Kearns had leased for a bonus of $200 an acre and one-eighth royalty, the entire 214 acres of the McClymonds farm, the owner reserving the Cooper lease and fourteen acres around the farm buildings. On the first of June Mr. Kearns also leased on the same terms 204 acres of the Saml. L. Riddle farm, the owner reserving the Cooper lease and ten acres about the farm buildings. At this time oil was selling at $4 a barrel, and there was a fierce competition among the operators for the McClymonds farm. This was finally comprised on June 18, 1872, when McClymonds sold his farm for $60,000, reserving his farm buildings and the surface of fourteen acres. The purchasers were O. G. Emery, "Dunc" Kearns, William Thompson, William Parker, and John H. Haines. Soon after a town sprung up which was named Karns City in honor of "Dunc" Karns, who was at that time the largest individual operator in the Butler County field. He was also the promoter of the Parker and Karns City Railroad, and interested in a number of the pipe lines that were laid from the Butler County field to the Allegheny river. Within the year Fairview Township had three booming oil towns. They were Petrolia, Karns City, and Fairview.

GREECE CITY.

The Morrison well on the S. S. Jamison farm in Concord Township came in August 22, 1872, and started to flow at the rate of about 700 barrels a day. Within a few hours, however, the rig caught fire and about 200 barrels of oil were consumed before the well was under control. The yield soon dropped to 300 barrels, then to 200, and in the latter part of August the well was producing only 150 barrels a day. This well was believed to be the third sand when it was first struck, but later development proved it to be the first fourth sand well developed in Butler County. Greece City sprung up as if by magic, and in the fall of 1872 the surrounding country was dotted with derricks and drilling wells and a number of gushers were brought in during the winter. The field proved freakish, however, and the wells soon became exhausted. The Oil Man's Journal of August 31, 1872, referring to the large strike at Greece City, recognized the fact that the theories of "Uncle Jake" Ziegler concerning the oil regions of Butler County were correct, and that the Morrison well should be regarded as the beginning of Butler County's new oil development.

TROUTMAN FARM.

The beginning of the developments on the Troutman farm and Modoc city was in March, 1873, when a fourth sand well was tapped. In regard to the discovery of the fourth sand, Hon. A. L. Campbell, who was one of the largest operators in the territory, and who was a life-long resident of Petrolia, made the following statement in a letter published in 1894:

"In the latter part of the summer of 1873 Foster Hindman, William Banks, Charles C. Stewart, and John H. Gailey drilled a well on the Scott heirs farm near the corner of McEler and J. B. Campbell farms west of Karns City, and when deep enough as they thought, there was but little show of oil. Taek, Morehead and Company had finished No. 1 McEler nearby where I was superintendent of the farm and part owner, and had kept a record of the strata as the well progressed. Charles C. Stewart was around frequently when I took samples of the stratas, and he claimed that in their well they did not finish in the same sand as we had in McEler No. 1, which showed for a fair producer. Gailey and Company concluded they were down and dry, all agreeing to that opinion except Mr. Stewart, and on a proposition to drill the well deeper Mr. Gailey refused to pay any more expense. Stewart and Banks came to my office at Argyle with their measurements and consulted my register and the samples I had taken at No. 1 McEler. From the calculations and investigations made that day it was decided their well was not deep enough. Drilling was begun again, and before oil was obtained all the others had sold their interests to Stewart. After drilling to some depth, sixty-nine feet I think, oil was struck in what afterwards was called the fourth sand. West of this well a short distance we were drilling No. 2 McEler, and soon were finished in the fourth sand. We then pulled out No. 1 McEler and drilled her down. We paid $100 to each of our men to say nothing about the fourth sand, but it was not many days until Mr. Jennings and all others in the neighborhood began drilling their wells deeper. The man that first risked his money in the enterprise is entitled to the credit, and he was Charles C. Stewart, now of Brady Township, Butler County, I believe."

Since the publication of the above, Mr. Stewart and Mr. Campbell have died. There may be honest differences of opinion as to whom credit is due for the discovery and first development of this sand, but there can be no conflict as to the wonderful influence they had in stimulating the oil business. The fourth sand fever raged throughout the entire district affected, and nearly every operator hurried on the work of deepening his old wells and drilling new ones. Around Petrolia, Karns City, Troutman, Modoc and Greece City, the excitement continued to grow and there were perhaps never so many large wells struck in so short a period in a limited area in the history of the oil industry. During the autumn of 1873 and the year of 1874 wells ranging from 100 to 4,000 barrels a day were reported in quick succession.

The first well in Washington Township was developed contemporaneously with the first at Greece City. Three months after striking the sand the owners tubed it when it yielded seven barrels a day. One hundred and fifty rods southwest of the old well another well was drilled into a closer sand which produced five barrels per day for nearly two years. On the David Shira farm east of the Rumbaugh, James Frazier and James Monroe struck a four-barrel well. A. Sheidenmante drilled a well on the Alfred Shira farm and other parties drilled on the Alexander Clark and on the D. F. Campbell farms. These were the pioneer development in the oil fields of this township, which in later years produced some of the largest wells in the Speechley district.

The forerunner of the oil developments in Forward Township was the Evans well which was drilled in 1872 about 2,600 feet above Buhl's bridge on Connoquenessing Creek. This well was drilled to a depth of 626 feet when it was abandoned. The well on the Denny lands in Winfield Township was drilled in November, 1872, when a flow of gas was struck. David Morrison, Curtis Jamison, Daniel Denny and William Stewart were the projectors and owners of this well.

Several wells were drilled in the vicinity of Millerstown in the fall of 1872. The Preston McKinney well drilled to a depth of 1,600 feet was dry, while the Lincoln well on the McClymonds farm, the Carpenter brothers' well and the Brown and Stoughten well on the W. C. Adams farm, a well on the Banks farm, and Preston and Nesbit's well on the Smith farm, were small producers.

Dr. Findley, Wm. Yeates, Thomas Connell, Sr., Dr. Taylor and E. S. Golden and others, composing the Euresco Oil Company, began oil developments on the Peter Miller farm southeast of Petrolia and on the McGarvey farm in December, 1872. Before the close of the year a well was drilled on the Boyd farm in Clearfield Township and one on the Stephen McCue farm across the line in Armstrong County. Before the close of the year a well had been completed on the Storey farm one mile east of Buena Vista, and other wells had been completed on the Jamison farm and in Fairview Township.

In January, 1873, a well was drilled at Bonny Brook in Summit Township to a depth of 1,040 feet, when a heavy flow of salt water was struck. Interest in the Petrolia field was stimulated by a 500-barrel gusher on the J. B. Campbell farm, and on the Blaney farm near Argyle there were nine producing wells. The Spider well between Petrolia and Fairview was drilled in February, 1873, and produced 150 barrels, and the Karns well forty rods east of Karns City came in at 140 rods.

H. L. Taylor & Company who began operation in Butler County in 1871 and owned 300 wells, among them being the "Boss," which produced 2,000 barrels a day, sold their forty producers in the Petrolia, Millerstown and Karns City fields in 1874 for $100,000.

The old Divener well of 1873 which yielded 1,400 barrels a day at the beginning and 700 barrels for a long period was the cause of the Millerstown stampede.

In February, 1873, Berg and Lambing drilled a well on Bonny Brook in Summit Township to a depth of 1,500 feet without striking oil. The same year the old Rumbaugh well two miles northwest of North Washington, was drilled in March, and oil was found at 1,265 to 1,365 feet. This well produced seven barrels a day for a long time but the expense of freighting the product to Parker ate up all of the profits, and the well was abandoned after it had been drilled to a depth of 1,690 feet. In 1876 or 1877 Trumbull and Croll drilled a well west of the old Rumbaugh well on the same farm, and got a four barrel producer, which was a profitable investment at that time. Other wells were drilled along the south branch of the Slippery Rock Creek but without results.

MILLERSTOWN FIELD.

The famous Millerstown district, in Donegal Township, was opened in April, 1873, when A. W. McCollough, A. L. Campbell, and Charles Hewens drilled the Shreve well on the Adam Stewart farm. The contractors of this well were Kingsley and Shreve, and it was for one of the drillers that the well was named. The Shreve well was a good example of how fortunes are sometimes missed in the oil country. The work of grading for the foundations for the derrick was commenced in the winter time, and the first location was near a spring on a hillside. Someone familiar with the local conditions suggested to the owners of the well that they had chosen a bad location to drill in the winter time, as the spring from which they expected to get water for their boilers always froze up and went dry. Acting on this suggestion the location was changed to lower ground along the bank of the run where there was plenty of water close to the well. This well came in for eighty-five barrels, and of course the owners felt well repaid for their trouble. The following summer other parties secured a lease and drilled on the first location made for the Shreve well, and to the utter amazement of everybody in the district the well came in for 1,200 barrels per day. Like the famous Col. Sellers, the owners of the Shreve well had a million in sight and didn't know it.

The Shreve well was the pioneer of that district and to it must be credited the beginning of the Millerstown field. This well was followed by the McFarland & Company well on the Thorn farm, Parker, Thompson & Company on the Barnhart, and James M. Lambing on the Forquer farm. South of the village were the Green wells on the Johnson tract, the Gillespie wells operated by J. Birchfield, the Hemphill tract operated by McKinney, Gailey & Company, and the Egbert lease on the Widow Hemphill farm controlled by Duffy, McCandless, Stoughton and others. All these wells tended to change Millerstown from a wayside village into a bustling oil town, and inside of a year it had a population of four or five thousand people.

The same year Hart and Konkle drilled a well near the old distillery on the McCandless farm about half a mile northwest of Butler. It proved to be a heavy gas well, but had no oil. The owners of this well offered to sell it to Col. Thompson and others of Butler for the price of the casing, but the offer was refused.

The Zeigler and Mylert well at Greece City was struck in the third sand on June 7, 1873, and immediately began to flow oil and gas. The gas caught fire from the boilers and the flames caught two workmen—James Wherry and James Crowley—who received fatal burns.

The Meade wells on the Neu farm in the southwest corner of Donegal Township, were drilled in 1875 to an average depth of 1,565 feet. The Bulger well on the same farm was drilled the same year and reached the third sand at 1,555 feet. The extension of the Millerstown field south and the striking of these wells gave rise to the booming oil town of St. Joe. Plummer, three miles west of Millerstown; Danville, a mile from St. Joe, and Greer, a postoffice named for North Oakland Station on the Narrow Gauge railroad, were oil towns that developed from the Millerstown field.

A well drilled on the McClymonds farm December 4, 1875, for Mattison and McDonald struck the third sand at 1,390 feet and produced an amber green colored oil at the rate of seventy-five barrels per day. This well was opened 1,244 feet above ocean level. The fourth sand was found in this well at 1,490 feet, or 246 feet below (?) ocean level.

The three Woodward wells on the McClymonds farm were drilled in 1875 for George G. Stage, J. R. Woodward and James Shakeley. One of these wells yielded 1,900 barrels a day at the start, and the others were good producers. The Carbon Center field, south of St. Joe, was developed in 1875, when the Forcht No. 1 came in at 100 barrels a day.

The Gibson and Ecock well on the Fron-singer farm was opened about 1,382 feet above ocean level and struck a fifteen foot bed of limestone at a depth of 285 feet. The mountain sand was reached at 568 feet, the first sand at 825 feet, the second sand at 1,160 feet, and oil sand rock at 1,402 feet. The drill penetrated the oil sand rock sixteen feet, bringing the exploration to 1,418 feet, or 36 feet below ocean level.

Two miles northwest of Parker in Allegheny Township the Columbia Oil Company completed a well on the Reddick farm January 10, 1876. At 1,277 feet the drill struck a pocket and dropped to 1,280 feet. The elevation of this farm is 1,485 feet above the ocean, while the third sand was found at a depth of 1,250 feet, extending twenty feet from the soap-stone to the slate beds beneath. This well yielded fifteen barrels per day for some months, but decreased to three and one-half barrels in August, 1876.

The centennial year witnessed a crude oil advance from $1.55 a barrel to $4. It also witnessed the market threatened by the striking of a 125 barrel well near Greece City, and beheld the consolidation of oil-refining interests and pipe lines and activity in every part of the field. During the year 1877 there were 1,002 wells drilled in the Butler-Armstrong field, while 171 dry holes were struck, the total production being 9,904 barrels per day.

The Eastern Belt theory was developed in 1878 by the completion of a well on the Mrs. Kaylor farm near the east line of Fairview Township, by George H. Graham and Samuel Banks. This well was known as the "Ghost," and while its owners sold it for a good price the buyers made a poor bargain. The Eastern Belt theory gave rise to the oil town of Kaylor City, which is just over the line in Armstrong County.

Venango Township came in for an exploration in 1878 by the drilling of the Prentice well on the James Higgins farm near the second coal bank. This well was drilled to a depth of 1,600 feet and pumped a small quantity of oil, but not sufficient to pay expenses. Forty feet below the level of the coal bank a thick bed of limestone was struck in this well.

The pioneer well in the Six Points neighborhood in Allegheny Township was drilled on the Chambers land two miles east of the village in 1871. No oil was obtained in this well. In 1877-78 a number of wells were drilled to the third sand, which was reached at a depth of 1,200 feet below the ferriferous limestone. A mountain sand two hundred feet deep resting on twenty-five feet of loose grain salt-water rock was discovered in these wells. The oil produced by the fifty-foot was lighter in color but of a greater gravity than that produced by the third sand.

THE BALD RIDGE DISTRICT.

After the drilling and operation of the extensive oil belt reaching from Parker's Landing to St. Joe south of Millerstown ceased, Butler County was practically neglected by the oil scouts who had all moved to the Bradford field. The Bald Ridge district southwest of Butler had its inception in July, 1880, when Reiber and Huselton of Butler leased 780 acres in Penn and Forward Townships, and started to drill a well at the intersection of the Angel twenty-two and a half degree line on the Robert McKee farm and the Greece City line near Bald Ridge, now Renfrew. W. C. Neely contracted to drill the proposed well at $1.00 per foot and hold one-fourth of the $3,250 of stock. Owing to the scarcity of water the location was changed to a point on the Smith farm 1,100 feet south and drilling was commenced September 1, 1880. Oil was struck at 1,620 feet, but the drilling was continued to the depth of 1,750 feet, and the work was finished at a six-barrel well March 8, 1881.

In April, 1881, the Bald Ridge Oil Company was incorporated, the stated capital being $16,000. No. 2 well was commenced in June, 1881, and completed the 1st of October. After being shot it made sixteen barrels. No. 3 was drilled on the Crowe farm in Forward Township in November, 1881, and the same month Simeox and Myers began drilling a well on the Hamill farm. This well was completed March 20, 1882, and came in for 100 barrels. Up to December 19, 1883, forty-seven wells were drilled in this field of which thirty-seven were producing 642 barrels a day.

Early in 1882 the McCalmont farm at McCalmont station north of Renfrew was purchased by Agnew and Egbert for $104,000. This farm contained 1,110 acres and proved to be one of the most valuable tracts in the Bald Ridge district. The Forrest Oil Company purchased a tract from Simeox and Myers, A. Sheidemantle completed a well on the Webber farm in 1882, and Yeagle and Campbell completed a well on the Smith farm in August, 1883.

The Bald Ridge Oil and Transportation Company was chartered May 24, 1881, the charter being signed by Governor Hoyt and Secretary Clay. The capital stock, $16,000, was divided into 320 shares of $50 each, all of which were held by J. D. MeJunkin, John S. Campbell, Ferd Reiber, S. H. Pearsol, W. D. Brandon, W. H. Hoffmann, W. H. Ritter, R. P. Scott, G. W. Fleege, John N. Patterson, D. A. Heck, H. A. Krug, Jr., George Krug, Henry Bauer, Philip Bauer, and B. C. Huselton, M. Reiber, Sr., Harvey Colbert, Henry Eitenmiller, Simon Yetter, Jacob Reiber, and J. A. Hawk, O. D. Thompson, H. L. Westermann, and W. C. Neely. In August, 1882, the company sold their leases and equipment to Phillips Brothers for $160,000. After this sale a pipe line was extended south of Petrolia to the new field, and the country from Reibold Station to Butler was invaded by speculators seeking leases of land. About the time that the Bald Ridge Oil & Transportation Company made their sale to Phillips Brothers another sale was made in which Simeox and Myers disposed of a half interest in their Bald Ridge leases for $75,000 to the Forrest Oil Company and Richard Jennings & Son. This field may be said to have been really opened in the fall of 1881 by the Simeox and Myers 100-barrel well and the Sheidemantle 600-barrel well. Previous to that time the well that had been drilled were southwest of the town of Renfrew. The Phillips Brothers also secured the Wallace farm and began drilling on it in December, 1882, and developed one of the most valuable farms in the district outside of the McCalmont tract.

In March, 1882, John Johnson of Templeton, sold seventy acres of land at the junction of the Butler Branch of the Pittsburgh & Western Railroad at Butler for $6,000, the purchasers intending to establish a town at that point and drill for oil. The enterprise proved to be a failure.

Early in the spring of 1882 the drillers on the Stewart farm in Winfield Township struck the greatest gas vein discovered in the county down to that time, and in the fall of 1882 wells were completed on the

W. Brown farm and the Mahood farms in the Bald Ridge district. The well on the Webber farm near Evans City yielded over 2,000 barrels in twelve days ending August 9, 1882, and was the opening of a new district.

In December, 1883, the company leased 2,000 acres in Cranberry and Adams Townships adjoining Allegheny County, and early in 1884 began drilling near the William Thielman saw-mill.

THORN CREEK.

The Thorn Creek field owes its development to the foresight of Thomas W. Phillips, who had operated extensively in what is known as the Bullion field in Venango County and afterwards in the Troutman district. When the general exodus began to the McKean County oil fields, Mr. Phillips did not join the throng, but remained in Butler County. He conceived the idea that oil in large quantities would be found near the Bald Ridge wells and in 1881 began leasing on an extensive scale southwest of Butler on Connoquenessing and Thorn Creek. The first wells drilled were small, but the character of the rock in which they were found confirmed the theory that a rich deposit was near and on August 16, 1884, he was rewarded by striking a well on the Williamson Bartley farm which proved to be the largest well found down to that time. It began producing at the rate of forty barrels an hour and was increased by deeper drilling to 180 barrels per hour. Its greatest day's production was fully 4,000 barrels, and was equal to any of the wells struck in the northern fields of the county.

The striking of this well caused a stampede from the upper fields and in a short time Thorn Creek was the scene of one of the largest excitements since the days of Millerstown. Extensive operations were carried on in this field by Mr. Phillips and others and in a few months the production had reached 16,000 barrels a day. The Phillips gusher attracted attention all over the country and special excursion trains were run from Pittsburg to the well.

The Semple, Boyd and Armstrong No. 8 on the Marshall farm was the next gusher recorded in the county. It was drilled through the sand October 25, 1884, but owing to the quantity of salt water present it made no show of oil. The owners of the well though not expecting much from this part of the field, refused an offer for their well from Mr. Phillips and proceeded to have it shot as the final act in the drama in which they expected to lose a lot of money. When the well was shot it began to flow at the rate of 400 to 500 barrels per hour and the lack of faith on the part of the owners in not putting up tankage was punished by the loss of over 2,500 barrels of oil. It is said that at one time during the day the well flowed at least 500 barrels an hour or 12,000 barrels a day. It was by all odds the "Jumbo" of wells in the Pennsylvania oil field. A correct gauge of this well was never obtained, but it is said that the pipe line company allowed the owners credit for 10,000 barrels of oil per day. It gradually decreased and in a short time fell to the 500-barrel level and from that point it decreased still lower to a small pumper. The well has long since been abandoned. The shooting of this well was one of the phenomenal sights of the oil country, and is described in the chapter devoted to nitro-glycerine and torpedoes.

In November, 1884, following the Armstrong No. 2 on the Marshall farm, Phillips Brothers were drilling six new wells on the Bartley and Dodds farms. Christie brothers had eight wells and other operators in the field were Boyd and Semple, Commer and Fishel, Greenlee & Company, Gibson & Company, Fisher brothers, Boyd & Company, Lappe & Company and a host of small operators were hovering around the outer edges of the pool. In December there were twenty-four wells completed, including three dry ones, on the Wallace, Marshall, Bartley, Dodds, Henderson, Brown and Webber farms, while twenty-nine new wells were commenced on these farms and on the Patterson, McCandless, McCormick, Kennedy, and adjoining lands. The Fisher Oil Company began operations on the McJunkin farm east of Butler, C. Eliason on the Leibler farm in Butler Township, and Showalter and Hartman near the old fair ground southwest of the borough of Butler.

The second well of importance struck on the Bartley farm reached the fourth sand October 11, 1884, and began to flow at the rate of forty barrels an hour. On the 13th the well was drilled deeper and made 150 barrels, and on the following day it was yielding 250 barrels an hour, or at the rate of 6,000 barrels a day. The owners of this well were Henderson W., Calvin G., and Thomas G. Christie, of Butler, who had leased twenty-eight or thirty acres adjoining the great oil lease of the Phillips brothers. This was the largest strike of the district until the Armstrong No. 2 which came in about ten days later.

The famous McBride well in the Bold Ridge field was shot December 12, 1884, when a flow of 200 barrels an hour followed the torpedo. Before the close of the month the Producers' Association purchased the leases, wells and equipments of McBride and Campbell, Christie brothers and Phillips and Simpson.

The summer of 1884 brought in another field in Butler County when the Grandmother well was completed for Bolard, Greenlee and Smith, one mile west of Saxonburg. This well became a great gusher and was the foundation of Golden City. The fields about Saxonburg and Jefferson Center were developed later.

In 1885, owing to the uncertainties of the oil field, the once busy towns of Philip City and McBride City in Penn Township fell into decay, and Hooks City in Parker township began to boom. Philips City sprang up after the striking of the first Phillips well in the Thorn Creek field in August, 1884, and flourished for over a year. The striking of the McBride well on the Plank Road on Thorn Creek gave rise to McBride City which was named in honor of the owner of the well. Philip City has long since passed into oblivion and the building of the Bessemer Railroad up the valley of Thorn Creek rescued McBride City from a similar fate. It is now a station on the railroad.

In the spring of 1885 Hooks brothers drilled a well on the Kelly farm in Parker Township and found oil in the boulder rock. The well was torpedoed and became a 100-barrel producer. In August of that year there were fourteen producing wells at Hooks City yielding 500 barrels, and a flourishing little town had sprung up in the vicinity of the first well. At the close of September, 1885, the Ott farm east of Millerstown was the most active place in that field where Westerman & Company had brought in a 100-barrel producer. Owen Brady was operating the same year southeast of Millerstown, and Joseph Hartman was operating on the O'Brien farm.

One of the freaks in the Thorn Creek field was developed on the Mangel farm on May 17, 1885, when Conners and Fishel completed a well, without any show of oil. The well was then cased to shut off the salt water and rigged up for pumping and for several days a steady stream of salt water was pumped. On the 21st of May oil began to flow at intervals through the casing, and shortly after a flow of sixty barrels per hour was recorded. It became a 1,000-barrel well and was one of the largest struck that year.

In June, 1885, there were 147 producing wells in the Thorn Creek field, many of which were pumping from ninety to 120 barrels a day. The Armstrong No. 1 was yielding about 1,000 barrels a month, and at the close of July the production of the entire field had decreased to 2,800 barrels a day.

The Midnight Mystery was drilled in September, 1885, by the Leideckers of Butler in Winfield Township. The well was worked as a mystery and for twenty-one days the oil scouts could not learn whether the new well was a gusher or a dry hole. The well was completed on September 10th and a week later it yielded thirty-five barrels in nineteen minutes. Many tracts were leased in the new field and extraordinary prices paid which did not justify the operators.

In November, 1885, a well was drilled in Middlesex Township for Dr. McCandless, Charles Neely and others, which was a small producer, and in the same month the Pittsburg Producers Company completed a well on the John Balfour farm in Adams Township west of Mars, which began to flow at a depth of 1,400 feet. This well was the inception of an extensive field that was developed west of Mars in Adams and Cranberry Townships and extending almost to Hendersonville.

During 1885 efforts were made to extend the Butler County fields in Brady Township where a well was drilled on the William Mayer farm near West Liberty to a depth of 1,400 feet. No oil was obtained, but the well produced a small supply of gas. Early in 1886 Sincox and Myers, who were among the first operators in the Bald Ridge district, leased a tract of 1,000 acres in Center Township, and drilled a well on the John Byers farm. This well proved a failure and the leases were abandoned.

The Jefferson Township field was developed in May, 1886, by the Extension Oil Company, which was composed of R. B. Taylor, O. K. Waldron, Loyal S. McJunkin, W. P. Roessing, J. A. McMarlin, and others, who drilled a well on the W. J. Welsh farm. This well produced 100 barrels a day for a short period and was the beginning of later developments which extended over a wide area in that township.

THORN CREEK EXTENSION.

Thinking that the belt from Thorn Creek would extend nearly east and west, Thomas W. Phillips, who opened up this field, leased a large body of land embracing about 15,000 acres extending east to the Armstrong County line, and drilled wells to test his theory. Small wells were obtained in a number of tests, but no outlet was found for the Thorn Creek belt. Retaining this body of leases when the Thorn Creek field began to wane, Mr. Phillips returned and looked for a southwest extension of the field in August, 1886. The first well was struck on the Critchlow farm in that month which produced 120 barrels a day, and opened up the Glade Run field. This field increased in richness towards the southwest, and in 1887 Mr. Phillips struck a number of wells producing over 100 barrels per hour. His largest month's production in this field averaged about 6,000 barrels per day and his production that year from this and other fields reached 1,100,000 barrels, notwithstanding the fact that half of his production was shut in for the last two months of the year. The number of his wells in the Thorn Creek field and extension numbered 125, while he held 7,500 acres in leases. He sold this production and leases in June, 1890, and then turned his attention to the development of the leases which he retained east of Thorn Creek. In that year he obtained paying wells in Jefferson Township, and in January, 1891, struck the Fisher farm well north of Jefferson Center, which flowed 135 barrels an hour. In July, 1892, he struck a well on the Wolf farm which started flowing at forty barrels an hour and increased to 125 when drilled deeper. The following month he drilled on the Barr farm adjoining, and got a well that produced fifty barrels an hour. In June, 1893, he struck a well on the Eichenlaub farm near Herman Station, which produced forty barrels an hour, and opened up the Herman field.

GLADE RUN FIELD.

This field may be said to have been opened in 1886, as a southwest extension of the Thorn Creek field when the 125-barrel well on the Critchlow farm was completed by Mr. Phillips. The Phillips interests were bought in 1890 by the Southern Oil Company, and the district became a veritable oil center for several years. Wells were drilled on the Critchlow, Spithaler, Hyde, Markel, Widow Croft, and other farms, some of which produced over 100 barrels per hour, and many of them 350 barrels a day.

REIBOLD FIELD.

The Reibold field came into prominence in September, 1887, when the Beam well No. 6 was drilled into the sand. About the middle of the afternoon of September 14, the well yielded ten barrels an hour when the drill was twenty-four feet in the sand, six barrels of which came from the one hundred-foot. At three o'clock a flow of 120 barrels was recorded, and five minutes later the force of the flow was so strong that it lifted the tools in the hole until the temper-screw struck the walking-beam. When completed the well flowed 140 barrels an hour. This well was about 600 feet west of No. 5, drilled by the same company, which was producing eighty-five barrels an hour when No. 6 was commenced. Other producing wells in this district at that time were Peiffer No. 2, Coast and Company No. 2, Root and Johnson No. 4 and 5, and the Phillips wells, and the total production of the field was about 9,000 barrels a day.

The development on the Henry Lonitz farm one and one-half miles west of Sax-ouburg in October, 1887, was one of the surprises of the oil field. Bolard, Smith and Greenlee completed a well September 1, which produced sixty barrels per day. Golden and McBride's well yielded 200 barrels in October, and then Bolard, Smith and Greenlee's No. 2 came in with a gusher producing 2,500 barrels a day, at a depth of 1,767 feet.

The extension of the development up Glade Run began in 1887, and the first wells were obtained on the Nancy Adams farm that year. These wells were obtained in the Hundred-Foot, and were the first demonstrations of how to handle water wells in connection with oil.

The "Mystery" well on the H. D. Thompson farm in Center Township was drilled in June, 1887, and attracted much attention for some time. The well was drilled by Albert and Morrison, and a show of oil was obtained, but the hopes of its promoters that a new field would be developed were never realized.

THE HUNDRED-FOOT DISTRICT.

What is known as the "Hundred-Foot" field in Connoquenessing Township was opened in the spring of 1889, when John A. Steele drilled the first well on the Irvine Anderson farm on Connoquenessing Creek. This well proved to be a good producer. Acting on the theory that the field extended in the direction of Little Connoquenessing Creek, Steele employed Leslie P. Hazlett, Esq., to take up a tract of land in the vicinity of Graham schoolhouse near the White Oak Springs Church. Hazlett leased a block 800 acres, one of the considerations being that the first well should be drilled within half a mile of the schoolhouse. This well was drilled on the W. M. Humphrey farm by Mr. Steele, and came in for about 500 barrels a day in the Hundred-Foot sand. This well opened up one of the most prolific Hundred-Foot fields in the county. Operators flocked to the field, and in a short time hundreds of wells were drilled on the Humphrey, John Brandon, Thomas Graham, Hiram Graham, Knauff, Amberson and L. P. Hazlett farms, many of which produced from 500 to 900 barrels a day. One of the most valuable farms in the district was the Peter Rader, which produced over 1,000,000 barrels of oil. The Humphrey farm produced approximately the same amount, and the farms next in importance were the Brandon and Hazlett. The field extended from the Anderson farm along Big Creek to the mouth of Little Connoquenessing, and up the Little Connoquenessing to the Graham schoolhouse. The field was at its height during the summer of 1890, and the following winter, but the wells declined rapidly, and in the course of four or five years the territory was practically abandoned. Operations have been carried on on a small scale, and some small wells obtained in the search for an extension of the field, but no large wells have been struck in the district within recent years.

BROWNSDALE AND COOPERSTOWN.

The principal developments in Butler County in 1892 were confined to Jefferson, Cranberry, Lancaster and Penn Townships. The Brownsdale field in Penn Township was opened that year. A 750-barrel well was struck in January, 1893, on the Johnson farm and this was followed by wells on the Anderson, Blair, Marsh, Critchlow, Warner, Heckert, S. Thompson, and William Thompson farms.

The Sutton well on the Hemphill farm near Zelenople, completed in November, 1891, was an index to the extension of that pool. It yielded twenty-five barrels a day at the start, and the Kneiss well on the Cunningham farm, which came in soon after, produced four hundred barrels.

Henshaw and Company drilled a well on the Muddy Creek field in November, 1891, which yielded forty barrels a day, and was then the largest well that had been struck in that field.

In January, 1892, the production of the Harmony and Zelenople fields amounted to 5,000 barrels a day, with twenty-one strings of tools running and eight new rigs building. The principal operations at that time were on the O'Donnel, five miles southwest of Zelenople, on the Knauff and Cunningham farms on what is known as the Island, on the Horne farm, on the Fanker farm. In what is specifically known as the Harmony field, Golden and Company had drilled their No. 3 on the Shiever farm, and struck a 400-barrel producer, while their No. 2 on the same farm was showing up at the rate of 250 barrels a day. The Eicholtz farm was the scene of operations by the Evans City Oil Company and the Kennedy Company.

Another pool was opened in 1893 south of Evans City on the R. J. Conelly farm in Adams Township. In September of that year a well that had been drilled on this farm in 1890 and abandoned, was cleaned out for Burk and Company and started pumping. Gibson and Gahagan drilled a well on the Robert Anderson farm through the hundred foot to a lower sand, but without success. A dry hole was drilled on the Wagner farm in the Brownsdale field in the same year, while a number of wells drilled by T. W. Phillips & Company in the McCalmont district proved to be fair producers. In the Washington Township field new wells were drilled on the Alexander Bell, R. O. Shira, Geo. Meals and Samuel Shira farms. An extension of the Petersville district was also worked that year by the Forest Oil Company, and the same concern was engaged in operations at Mars Station. A well drilled on the Reiber farm, and the Reiber and Bradner well on the Knauff lands northwest of the Thompson farm, were fair producers.

In 1893 operations were revived in the old Greece City district by the Grocer's Oil Co., Stewart & Co., and Matthew Bowers, who found fair producers on the Sanderson and Clymer farms east of the old town of Greece City. An attempt to find a northern outlet for the hundred foot was made by Charles Hazlett, who drilled a well on the Jacob Shiever farm near Whitestown without success. P. C. Fredrick struck a fair producer the same year in the vicinity of Hendersonville in Cranberry Township, and wells were found on the Byers farm, and on the Pontius farm east of Chicora. The Tebay well near North Washington and two miles in advance of developments, was completed in December, 1893, and proved a paying one. Other successful ventures of the same year was Purviance & Company's well on the Shorts farm in Connoquenessing Township. The Phillips Company's wells on the Eichenlaub and Oertell farms at Herman Station, and the well on the William Polhemus farm in Center Township.

The Brownsdale field in the Hundred-Foot district proved to be one of the best producing territories of the last decade of the century, and took its name from the hamlet of Brownsdale. Its developments to the southeast and the successful outcome of the Reiber and Bradner ventures in Middlesex Township in 1893-4 brought the territory into wide prominence, and was the means of developing the Cooperstown field, which occupied the attention of producers until 1898. The Cooperstown field was the direct result of a long and continuous effort under very discouraging conditions made by Reiber and Bradner, and which ended in the striking of a paying well on the Knauff farm. In September, 1894, this firm was offered the sum of $250,000 for their holdings, which they refused. Scores of operators flocked into the territory, and the quiet village of Cooperstown took on the activity of a booming oil town of the early seventies. Operations spread into Adams Township, and on the east into Clinton Township, and the most sanguine anticipations of the operators were more than realized. The deepest producer in the county was drilled in this district on the Campbell heirs' farm in Middlesex Township by McJunkin and Brandon in January, 1894, to a depth of 2,005 feet. The drill penetrated the fourth sand at this depth and the well started to produce 120 barrels per day.

The same month a well was drilled on the widow Brown farm in the Brownsdale district to a depth of 2,750 feet, but proved a dry hole. At 2,675 feet in this well the Speechley sand of the Venango group was struck with a show of oil and gas, and the red sand was also found for the first time in this field.

SPEECHLEY FIELD.

The Cooperstown field was the last of the large developments in the county up to the close of the century, and it was predicted that the end of the oil industry, so far as Butler County was concerned, was almost in sight. In 1900 the fourth sand districts of Concord and Washington Townships furnished a genuine surprise when a well was struck in Campbell Hollow in the Speechley sand. This was the beginning of the Speechley field which in the course of four or five years produced over 3,000,000 barrels of oil. A rush was made for the district by operators, and large prices were paid for lands throughout the entire district.

The next pool of importance opened in the county was the Spotty McBride well in Butler Township in 1905. McBride obtained a block of 215 acres and drilled a well on the Dr. O. K. Waldron farm which turned out to be a 2,500-barrel gusher. The field proved to be limited and the wells of short duration. Efforts to find a northeastern outlet were awarded in 1907-8 by wells on the Frazier, McCandless, and White farms near Alameda Park in Butler Township. These wells are over two miles northeast of the McBride gusher.

The Fennelton field was opened in 1906, by the Cowden brothers, of Butler, who have produced a number of good wells. Nothing phenomenal has been struck in the district, but a number of paying wells have been brought in by the various operators in this field.

The Petersville pool belongs to the freak class and cannot be accounted for by any law of oil formation. This field was opened in 1906 and continues to produce some paying wells, though the territory was drilled over in 1889-90 at the time of the Little Creek excitement.

The Muddy Creek field had its inception in January, 1908, when the Prospect Gas Company drilled a well on the Wallace farm northwest of Prospect for gas, and was rewarded with a paying oil well. Land was taken up rapidly, and large bonuses paid for leases, but the field has not yet produced any very large wells.

The Hoffman well on the Dodds farm south of Thorn Creek in Penn Township came in for 250 barrels a day in May, 1908, and was the inception of a drilling boom in that locality. The Hoffman well was considered a rank wildcat, and the lucky strike was the means of booming prices for land in that district. Several good wells have been obtained, but none of them have equalled the production of the first one. The South Penn Oil Company, The Phillips Gas & Oil Company, Culbertson & McKee, and McCollough & Bernard have brought in good wells in the district.

Center Township in the vicinity of Oneida Station was the scene of operations in the winter of 1907-8 on the O'Brien and Hewings farm, but nothing has been developed to indicate a very extensive field.

THE PIPE LINES.

In the early days of the oil excitement at Titusville and Oil City, the problem of storing the production and transporting it to the markets was a serious one to the producer. Most of the production was barreled at the well and shipped to Pittsburg on flat-boats or carried elsewhere by the railroad, and thousands of men and teams were given employment hauling the barreled oil from the wells to the shipping point on the Allegheny River and on the railroad. When the development reached Parkers Landing and the northeast corner of Butler County in 1868, the wagon and the flat-boat were the only means of transportation and only two small pipe lines were in operation in the upper district at Pithole and the Shaffer farm. The story of the early pipe line companies, their struggles for existence, the consolidation of the small lines for the protection of their interests, out of which grew up the most gigantic trust in the world, is familiar history. As Butler County was the field of the early beginning of the independent pipe line companies, so it became the battle-ground in later years of the most determined and successful opposition that the Standard Oil Company have ever met.

According to the Oil Well Driller, the first suggestion of a pipe line as a means of carrying oil was made by Gen. S. D. Kearns in 1860. He proposed to lay a line from Burning Spring in West Virginia to Parkersburg, a distance of thirty-six miles, and carry oil by gravity. This line was never built, and it was several years before the first pipe line was in operation in Pennsylvania.

The first attempt to start the pipe line business in Pennsylvania was in 1862, when the state legislature attempted to pass a bill authorizing the construction of a pipe line from Oil City to Kittanning on the Allegheny River. This line would have cut the edge of Butler County. Strangely enough this bill met with such opposition from the oil country teamsters that its promoters abandoned all attempts to pass it at that term of the legislature. It was argued against the bill that there were four thousand or five thousand teamsters employed in the oil country hauling oil and that the building of a pipe line would ruin their business and impoverish their families, and besides, would throw many laborers out of employment.

The credit of building the first pipe line in the state belongs to Samuel VanSyckle.

who built a line in 1865 from Pithole to the Miller farm near Titusville. This line was four miles long, and carried eight barrels of oil per day. The construction of the line involved VanSyckle in debt and in 1866 the venture was considered a failure.

In 1866 Henry Harley constructed a pipe line from Benninghoff Run to the Shaffer farm. This line met with a fierce opposition from the oil country teamsters, who blamed Harley for impoverishing them and ruining their business. Violence and incendiarism were resorted to. Harley's oil tanks were burned, and his pipe line was torn up and disjointed. Harley was a man of determination, however, and not easily scared. Detectives were set to work and in a few weeks twenty men who were the leaders of the riot of teamsters were lodged in jail in Franklin. This put an end to the teamsters' opposition, and the pipe line proved a success.

The first free oil pipe line bill was passed by the legislature in 1868 by consent of Thomas A. Scott, who was at that time the "Political Anaconda" of the Pennsylvania Railroad. This bill gave the right of free pipe lines in eight counties of the state, namely: Allegheny, Armstrong, Butler, Clarion, Venango, Crawford, Warren, and Forest, with the proviso that no pipe line should enter the city of Pittsburg or Allegheny. The purpose of this proviso was to keep the pipe line owners from using the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad at Pittsburg.

Following the passage of the free oil pipe line bill, S. D. Karns built a line from Parker's Landing to the Allegheny Valley Railroad on the opposite side of the Allegheny River. The same year Parker, Thompson & Company built a line west of the river and the following year Fulerton Parker joined Karns under the name of The Karns & Parker Pipe Line. After about a year of competition the two companies combined under the name of The Union Pipe Line.

With the extension of developments into the Butler County oil fields other pipe lines were organized. The Grant Line, a competitor of The Union Pipe Line Company, was organized at Parker by Col. D. B. Allen and Thomas McConnell.

The Fairview Pipe Line Company was organized in 1872 and built a line from Fairview to Karns City in Butler County.

The Relief Pipe Line Company built a line from Karns City and Petrolia to Parker's Landing in 1872, and in 1874 and 1875 the line was extended to Millerstown, now Chicora.

The Butler Pipe Line Company constructed a line from the Butler county oil field to the loading-racks at Parker's Landing in 1872.

The Cleveland Pipe Line Company was organized by S. D. Karns in 1873, and constructed a line from Karns City and Petrolia to Parker's Landing.

Vandergrift and Foreman constructed a line about the same year into Concord Township and the Greece City field. One of the competitors of this line was The Mutual Pipe Line Company organized in 1871 and doing business in Butler, Armstrong, Clarion and Venango Counties.

In 1872 the legislature passed a bill repealing the Scott proviso in the free oil pipe line bill of 1868, which allowed pipe lines in only eighty counties, and passed a new free pipe line bill. The next two or three years saw a wonderful development in the pipe line business. Short competing lines were constructed all over the oil field and competing companies waged war on each other to the point of cutting rates to a figure where they did business at a loss. This condition of affairs soon worked havoc among the competing pipe lines as well as among the producers. All of the pipe line companies paid for their oil in certificates and the producer was often at a loss to know whether the certificates were good or not. To make matters worse the producer was reduced to the choice of taking the certificates or not running his oil. The conditions in the Butler County field were far from satisfactory, and were the causes of many financial disasters among the competing pipe line companies as well as hardships among the producers. This unsatisfactory state of affairs led to the consolidation of the interests of the Mutual Pipe Line Company and Vandergrift & Foreman, in one united pipe line system.

The advantages of the consolidation of the smaller lines quickly commended itself and the organization of The United Pipe Line was the first step taken toward establishing for all times the question of transportation of oil by pipe line.

The United Pipe Line bought or combined The Warren Pipe Line, The Oil City Pipe Line, The Antwerp Line, The Pennsylvania Transportation Company, the Clarion Division of the American Transfer Company, The Prentice Pipe Line, and the following lines in Butler County: The Cleveland (Karns), The Union, The Grant, The Relief, The Mutual Pipe Line Company, Vandergrift & Foreman and the Columbia Conduit Company. The latter company was organized in 1875, and had constructed a line from Pittsburg to the oil fields at Millerstown. This was the line built by Dr. Hostetter. The United Pipe-Line Company conducted the business until 1884, when it was taken over by the National Transit Company and became part of the Standard Oil Company.

The Western and Atlantic Pipe Line Company began business in 1887 and in 1888 built loading-racks at Mars on the old Pittsburg and Western Railroad, now the Baltimore and Ohio in this county. This line was known as the Western and Atlantic and the Craig, Elkins and Kimble Company. It was sold to the National Transit Company in 1889 and the loading-racks and tanks at Mars have since been abandoned.

From the combination of the Mutual Pipe Line Company and the Vandergrift and Foreman interests in 1875, there grew in fifteen years the great giant of all combinations, The Standard Oil Company. Whatever may be said about the business methods of the "Octopus" and the manner in which it dealt with competing companies and the independent producer and refiner, the effect of the combination was to place the oil-producing business on a substantial cash basis. The pipe line companies paid cash for the oil, and the producer knew that if he had a thousand barrels of oil in the line or in the tank that it represented so much money at the current price of oil. The new system did away with the old pipe line certificate of uncertain value and substituted a cash value regulated by the market.

The pipe line combination fixed the price of oil and this led to dissatisfaction among the independent producers and refiners and the consequent organization of independent companies. The most prominent and aggressive of the independent concerns in the field today is the Pure Oil Company, which was organized in 1895 under the laws of New Jersey with a capital stock of $1,000,000. The incorporators were David Kirk, Jerome B. Aiken, M. L. Lockwood, of Zelienople, C. H. Duncan, W. A. Dennison, Thomas Westgate, James W. Lee, Adolphus A. Hoch of Chicora, Ferdinand Reiber of Butler, Lewis Walz, Rufus Scott, Lewis Emery Jr., M. Murphy, W. L. Curtis, Thomas W. Phillips, and Clarence Walker of Butler.

The officials of the company were, David Kirk, president; Clarence Walker, secretary, and C. H. Duncan, treasurer.

The Butler Pipe Line was constructed in January, 1873, from Greece City in Concord Township to the loading racks at Parker's Landing. The promoter and head of the company was William Parker. The time for the first run of oil from the wells above Boydstown to the receiving tanks at Parker was five hours and thirty-five minutes.

The Allen and McConnell line was completed from the Grant farm to Parker in 1873.

The first trunk line was placed in 1875, from Carbon Center in Butler County to Brilliant Station near Pittsburg, a four-inch pipe being used. Following the construction of the Carbon Center line, a line was constructed from Bear Creek in Butler County to the first pumping station at Hilliard, in Washington Township. This line was extended from Hilliards to Cleveland, a distance of 110 miles. Following the construction of these two lines other trunk lines were built from the Pennsylvania field and other oil fields to Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Tidewater. These were the McKean and Philadelphia line, with Baltimore branch, the Olean and Buffalo, the Olean and New York, the Rexford and Bayonne, N. J., the Morgantown, West Virginia and Philadelphia, the Mellon line from Greggs to Linwood, and the United States Pipe Line from Titusville to Athens.

The United States Pipe Line Company, or Producers Line, was organized in 1892, and began the transportation of oil early in 1893. This company was the first to prove the fallacy of the idea that refined oil lost its color when sent through pipes in hot weather, and during the first year of its existence transported many millions of gallons through its lines to the seaboard with satisfactory results.

The cost of carrying a barrel of oil from Pithole to New York in 1865 was $5.55. From the Butler County fields by way of Pittsburg was $4.59 per barrel. Today the price is $.50 or less from any part of the region to the seaboard. The price by rail and pipe line has been the same since 1879.

PRODUCERS AND REFINERS.

The Producers and Refiners' Pipe Line Company, which is the principal competitor of the Standard Oil Company in the Butler County field, are operating a line from Trail Run, Ohio, to Sistersville, West Virginia, thence to Pine Grove Station, thence to Taylorstown Station, Pennsylvania, thence to Washington Junction, Pennsylvania, thence to Primrose, and from Primrose by way of McDonald, Noblestown, Oakdale, to Adams Station in Butler County; from Adams Station to Butler, from Butler to Karns City, and from Karns City by way of Dotter's Station to Oil City, and thence to Titusville, where it intersects with the United States Pipe Line.

NATURAL GAS AS A FUEL.

The two great sources of natural gas on this continent are along the western slope of the Apalachian Mountains and the great Cincinnati Arch. The Apalachian gas deposits occur in the small folds of the anticlinals, which exist in the strata as they rise toward the Allegheny Mountains from the synclinals that lies to the westward. The gas deposits of Butler County are found in the first, second, third and fifth oil sands, the Speechley, the Warren, the Bradford, Tiona sands. The Butler gas sand and the Hundred-foot belong to the Butler Venango group and are known as the most productive gas sands in the United States, because of their vast extent. The first, second, and third sands exist in Butler, Armstrong, Clarion, Venango, Crawford, and Forrest Counties, and in Armstrong, Westmoreland, Allegheny and Washington Counties; the upper layers are known as the Murraysville, or salt sand, and the Hundred-foot. The Hundred-foot is divided into the Thirty-foot, and Fifty-foot and the lower layer into the Gordon, the Gordon stray, fourth and fifth sands, the Baird and Elizabeth sands.

The thick layer of sandstone north of Pittsburg lies two or three hundred feet above the first sand, and outcrops in the hilltops of Butler and Venango Counties. This is known as the Mountain sand, and south of Pittsburg becomes the "Big Injun." It is productive of oil in some localities.

Natural gas as a fuel was used at Fredonia, New York, as early as 1824. In tearing down an old mill the workmen discovered inflammable bubbles on the waters of Canodonay Creek. They took the hint from this discovery and drilled a one and a half-inch hole into the limestone rock in the bottom of the creek, and the gas followed the hole. The supply of gas obtained from this source was utilized in the town and furnished fuel for about one hundred houses and for the new mill for many years.

The light-house at Erie was lighted by natural gas in 1831 from a burning spring that existed in the vicinity. A cone-shaped tower was built over the spring which collected the gas, and it was carried to the light-house by means of wooden pipes.

In the early days of the oil developments at Oil Creek, natural gas was used for fuel at the drilling and pumping wells as early as 1862, but it was ten years later before it was generally used for domestic and manufacturing purposes, and piped any distance from the wells to the place of consumption.

"Sketches In Crude Oil" by John J. Mc-Lauren gives John Criswell of New Castle the credit of producing the first natural gas and utilizing it for manufacturing purposes in Butler County. Criswell drilled a salt well near Slippery Rock in 1840 and at a depth of 700 feet struck a flow of natural gas which he used to heat the pans at his salt factory.

In 1872 a well was drilled on the W. C. Campbell farm near Fairview to a depth of 1,335 feet for oil and was abandoned on account of a flow of gas and salt water. After the well had been abandoned for some two months the pressure became so strong that it blew the water entirely out of the hole and in the autumn of the same year a company was formed to utilize the gas. This was done by laying a line of 3½-inch casing from the well to Fairview, a distance of two miles, and thence to Petrolia, two miles from Fairview. Pressure of the well on a steam-gauge was eighty-one pounds and it had an escape through a six-inch pipe. The noise of the escaping gas could be heard a distance of two miles from the well.

The correspondent of the "Titusville Herald," under date of September 3, 1873, gave a graphic account of this remarkable well:

"The roar of the escaping fluid was equal to the sound of Niagara, and the iron tools that penetrated the rock were raised and tossed in the hole with as much ease as a skiff is rocked on the surface of an angry ocean. So strong was the gas giant that one man might have held the tools out of the hole without the aid of an engine. It would toss a hundred pound rock to the height of forty or fifty feet, and an ordinary club when launched in the upward stream would be tossed seventy or eighty feet. For a few weeks this well shrieked and howled and whistled, making night hideous and day tedious with its ceaseless yells until the arms of science opened to receive the wasting fuel. When finally controlled, this well supplied the towns of Argyle, Fairview, Karns City, and Petrolia, besides furnishing fuel for forty pumping and drilling wells, eight pump stations, two hundred gas burners, and forty cooking stoves, all of which were supplied from seven miles of pipe line."

This well was drilled by the Lambing Brothers in April, 1872, and soon after the gas began to flow the well was accidentally lighted. The flames rose to a height of seventy-five feet and could be seen a distance of ten miles. To extinguish it the contractor spent $500, which was finally accomplished after several days' hard work, by smothering the blaze with clay.

So far as is known, the Campbell well was the first gasser to be utilized for domestic purposes, and the gas piped to any distance from the well. It is claimed that the Newton well at Titusville was drilled in 1872, and in August of that year the gas was piped to Titusville, where it was utilized in the dwelling houses and in the mills. It is probable that the Butler County well was under control and in use a couple of months before the Titusville well was struck.

About 1873 Hart and Conkle drilled a well on the McCandless farm about a half a mile northwest of the borough of Butler, and struck a tremendous flow of gas. This well was accidentally lighted and burned for years, the fuel being allowed to go to waste. The owners of the well offered to sell it to Col. John M. Thompson and Hon. Charles McCandless, of Butler, for the price of the casing, but the offer was refused. The possibilities of natural gas for fuel and lighting purposes was not appreciated at that time, and inability to control the well induced the Butler parties to turn down the proposition that contained a fortune. Twelve years later a company was organized to supply the town with natural gas, but in the meantime the Hart and Conkle well had been drowned out with water. In the latter part of the eighties the Standard Plate Glass Company of Butler drilled a well for gas within three hundred feet of the old Hart & Conkle well, which was a complete failure. The water had evidently destroyed the gas pool in that locality.

About the same year that the Hart and Conkle well was drilled Butler parties drilled a well on Wolf Creek at the Woolen Mill, which was one of the largest gas wells struck in the county that year. This well blew and whistled for months, finally catching fire and destroying the rig. The flaming torch burned fully one hundred feet in the air and lighted the surrounding country until water finally drowned out the flow of gas. The pressure of gas in this well was so strong that it permeated the ground for many rods around it, and when a crowbar was driven into the soil a blue flame would shoot up for several feet.

In November, 1874, the famous Harvey well was struck, at Lardin's Mill, in Clinton Township. Gas was obtained in heavy quantities at 1,145 feet. At 420 feet the "Blue Monday" and "Lightning Rock" was reached and it required six weeks of drilling to pass through the one hundred feet of this hard, white limestone. Sandstone and gas showed at a depth of 1,115 feet, and a heavy flow was struck at 1,145. The gas from this well was conveyed a distance of 150 feet in a six-inch iron pipe from which it discharged with the force of steam. The well was located between abrupt hills in a valley about three hundred feet wide, and in the night time when the gas was burning the surrounding valley looked like a self-feeding furnace. As described by J. Cunningham, of Tarentum, the United States Signal Service officer who visited the place in February, 1875, at night, the scene was incomparable. When he came within its immediate influence he saw the trees wrapped in light and their trunks and branches silvered to their tops by the great torch—a burning flame fifteen feet wide and forty feet high—throwing into brilliant illumination the hundreds of interested faces. This, with the intense heat and brilliancy, and the terrific noise of the escaping fluid, made a sight not soon to be forgotten by any who witnessed it. When this well was finally brought under control a gas pipe line was laid from the well to the Spang and Chalfant Mill at Etna, a distance of about seventeen miles. This was the first pipe line laid to convey gas for manufacturing purposes in the United States.

In 1875 John Burns drilled a gas well at St. Joe to a depth of 1,600 feet. This well was on the Duffy farm and is known by some as the Duffy well, by others as the Burns well. Its mouth was 1,298 feet above ocean level and when the well was enclosed with 5 $\frac{3}{4}$ -inch casing, with a cap,

THE MCCOLLTUGH BARNARD & CO. NO. 1 WELL AND THE HARRY
N. HOFFMAN WELL.

SHOOTING OF COWDEN BROS.
NO. 2 WELL, PENNELLTON, PA.

FIRST STEEL JACKET KILN
(Erected at West Winfield, Pa., 1893)

MCBRIDE WELL

the pressure was strong enough to lift the casing. To avoid damage the gas was allowed to escape. The gas in this well was piped to Freeport and the pressure at that place on the line was 125 pounds. The output of this well averaged 12,000,000 feet of gas per day and was considered the largest well of that period.

The Delamater well, one half mile from the Burns well, was an oil producer in the third sand. When the owners drilled below the third sand they lost a ten-barrel oil well and struck what appeared to be an inexhaustible reservoir of gas.

The Denny wells in the northeastern corner of Winfield Township were drilled for oil about 1872, but became great gas producers and were the forerunners of some of the largest gas wells in Western Pennsylvania which were afterwards drilled in that township. These wells were drilled by the Denny brothers, who owned the Denny Mills, and William Stewart, who at that time owned the furnace tract. The gas from these wells was used at the mill and the dwelling houses for over a quarter of a century.

What is known as the Saxon City gas well was drilled at Cabot Station in 1874 to a depth of 1,857 feet. The gas from this well was piped to Etna and Sharpsburg and it proved to be one of the most consistent producers in the Butler County field.

Middlesex Township was the scene of operations for oil and gas in 1875, when a well was drilled on the J. B. Mahan farm, one and one-half miles east of Glade Mills. At a depth of 1,420 feet an amber oil was found in a thick bed of white sand stone. The well showed a production of five barrels but was drilled to 732 feet, where the flow of oil was increased to ten barrels. A heavy flow of gas was also found from 1,732 to 1,745 feet. Blood red slate was found at 1,880 feet, and this formation continued to 1,930 feet, when drilling ceased.

The Chantler No. 1 was drilled in Clinton Township two miles south of the Jefferson Township line, where gas was struck at 1,340 feet. Another well was drilled on the Westerman farm just south of the Chantler, where gas was found at 1,340 feet, and oil and gas at 1,495 feet in the second sand. The product of these two wells was piped to the mills at Etna. About 1886 a well on the Criswell farm in the same township was drilled by Klingensmith for the Standard Plate Glass Company of Butler to a depth of 3,500 feet.

In 1875 a gas well was drilled on the Robert Thompson farm two miles south of St. Joe at Carbon Center in Clearfield Township. This well was drilled to a depth of 1,558 feet and for four months produced eight barrels of oil per day from the third sand. It was afterwards drilled to the fourth sand, when the oil gave way to a heavy flow of gas. The well caught fire and burned the rig down and after it was controlled it was turned to account as fuel for the boilers in that section of the Clearfield and Donegal oil fields.

The Jack well at North Washington struck gas in the fourth sand at a depth of 1,500 feet, and was the first gas well in that section. Its volume decreased fifty per cent. the first year, although it was the only well in that locality.

In 1877 a gas well drilled on McMurray's Run in Marion Township which presented the same phenomena as the Jack well. This well was drilled for oil, by Emerson and Bronson, but their enterprise was rewarded by a flow of gas and water. The latter produced in a column reaching about thirty-five feet above the derrick.

The discovery of gas in the Phillips Brothers' well on the McJunkin farm, about one mile and one-half east of the borough of Butler, promised the citizens of that town a cheap and clean fuel. This well was drilled in 1882, and gas was struck at a depth of 1,000 feet. It was the introduction to later wells that were drilled on the McCrea farm on the hill south of the town in 1886 and 1887.

In 1887 the Fisher Brothers drilled a well to the gas sand on the McCrea farm just outside of the borough limits. The well filled up with water and appeared to be a failure. It afterwards came into the possession of David Kirk, who bailed the water out and was rewarded by the largest flow of gas struck near the town since the Hart and Conkle well. Kirk afterwards promoted the Mutual Gas Company of Butler, which supplied the town with light and fuel. The well on the McCrea farm was sold to the Shenango Gas Company and the gas was piped to New Castle in the fall of 1887.

The Mahoning Gas Company drilled a well on the Shields farm in Mercer Township in 1886 and other wells in Slippery Rock Township which supplied the towns in the northwestern part of the county and in Mercer County with fuel for more than twenty years.

The greatest gas producer ever drilled in Butler County was on the Casper Fruhling farm in Winfield Township in 1889. This well was drilled by A. W. McCollough of Butler, who in the previous year had taken up a large block of leases in Winfield, Clinton, and Buffalo Townships for the Pittsburg Plate Glass Company. The company drilled a dozen or more wells and in 1889 completed the Fruhling farm well and the well on the John Cruikshank farm. The former produced 15,000,000 feet of gas daily and the latter 12,000,000 feet. The gas in these two wells was found in the lower member of the hundred foot or the Venango first sand, or the second sand and fifty foot of the Parker field. Two large pipe lines were laid from this field to the Plate Glass Works at Ford City on the Allegheny River, while two more lines were laid to Butler borough by the Home Natural Gas Company and the Standard Plate Glass Company. This was the greatest gas reservoir ever opened in Butler County. Many pools have been opened since which have proved good producers, but nothing has ever equalled the Fruhling and Cruikshank wells. A few miles east in Armstrong County the Phillips Oil Company struck the famous Kerr farm well in the Speechley sand. This well produced 30,000,000 feet daily, and was the largest well in the Butler and Armstrong district.

DEEPEST WELL IN THE COUNTY.

The deepest test well for gas ever drilled in the county was that on the Robert Smith farm in Winfield Township. This exploration was made by the Pittsburg Plate Glass Company under the direction of A. W. McCollough of Butler in 1891. The mouth of this well is found at the top of the Mahoning sandstone, 1,351 feet above ocean level. The ferriferous limestone is reached at the depth of 475 feet; the mountain sand or "Big Injun" at 852 feet; the bottom of mountain sand at 1,032 feet; the top of Butler gas sand at 1,372 feet, and the top of the hundred-foot or Venango first sand at 1,514 feet. A good flow of gas was struck in the lower member of the hundred-foot, and through it an eight-inch hole was drilled which was cased with 6¼-inch casing so as to carry off the gas into the Ford City pipe line.

Meantime a six-inch hole was drilled through the lower strata of the Venango sand and the drill passed on through the interval of the Warren group, the Speechley, the Bradford, the Kane and the Wilcox, deep into the Chemung sands without encountering gas or oil or finding a matrix for either. The last 1,500 feet were drilled through easily, only a shell being struck at intervals until a depth of 4,000 feet was recorded and operations were suspended. The bottom of this well is 2,649 feet below ocean level, being almost 500 feet deeper than any well ever drilled in the county.

In January, 1893, Guckert and Steele drilled a well on the Beighley farm a mile and one-half northeast of Harmony, and struck a gas pool at the top of the Butler gas sand. This well showed a pressure of 150 pounds and was the beginning of extensive operations in the southwestern part of the county in which the Breakneck, Glade Run and Thorn Creek oil fields took a prominent part.

In November, 1893, the Citizens' Gas Company drilled a well on the Bauldoff farm near Herman Station in Summit Township proved a good fourth sand gasser, and the same year the Brown and Brewster wells on the Alexander Brewster farm in Center Township showed the extension of the gas fields in a new direction. The second well on that farm had a rock pressure of 1,600 pounds. The gas from these wells was piped to Butler and utilized by the various fuel companies and the glass works.

It is nearly always the case that where an oil field is found there is a corresponding gas pool not far away. Oil and gas were undoubtedly formed and placed in the sand rocks by the same agency. The process that filled the oil rocks also filled the gas rocks. They run parallel and so long as oil is found within the domain of Butler County, gas will be found in the same vicinity. Many gas wells in Butler, Warren, Venango, Armstrong and Washington Counties have been producing gas ever since wells in the same locality have been producing oil. Gas wells have often been abandoned because the pressure has so decreased that they could not force the product through the lines as against wells of higher pressure. The introduction of the gas-pump in the last fifteen years has worked a revolution in the manner of producing and transporting natural gas, and has made it profitable to deliver gas from wells of light pressure. At the present time to abandon a gas well when it ceases to be strong enough to force its way through the pipe line would be like abandoning an oil well because it had ceased to flow.

The first accident resulting from the use of natural gas for fuel and lighting purposes in the county occurred in Fairview about 1875, and resulted in the death of Mrs. Robert Patton and the serious injury of Rev. I. D. Decker. The gas pipe line which was laid from the famous Lambing well on the Campbell farm through Fairview to Petrolia passed in front of the Patton house. Through some fault in the laying of the line gas escaped in the winter time and worked its way under the frozen ground into the cellar of the Patton house. One evening Mr. Patton went to the cellar on an errand carrying a lighted lamp in his hand. An explosion followed which wrecked the house, instantly killed Mrs. Patton, and seriously burned Mr. Decker about the face. Mr. Patton was seriously injured, but recovered.

A similar accident occurred in Butler in 1886, when the residence of John Gates on Lookout Avenue was destroyed by an explosion of gas, and John Gates, Jr., was killed. Through improper piping the gas had escaped from the main line on the street and worked its way in the winter time under the frozen ground under the cellar of the Gates house. Young Gates had gone to the cellar on an errand with a lighted lamp in his hand, when the explosion occurred. The house was built of brick and young Gates was crushed to death by the walls falling in on him.

It has been twenty-six years since natural gas came into general use for domestic and manufacturing purposes, although it was used for fuel at the wells in the oil country as early as 1860. In 1882 the total value of gas produced in the United States was $215,000, Pennsylvania producing $75,000 of this amount. For the first ten years the increase in consumption was slow. In 1907 the output in the United States reached the enormous total of 388,842,562,000 cubic feet, an equivalent of nineteen and a half million tons of coal. The value of this output in round numbers was $46,800,000. Pennsylvania's share of this product was $18,000,000, and the state stood first in the production of natural gas. West Virginia was second, and Ohio third. The consumption of natural gas is increasing at the rate of ten per cent. per year, and it is estimated that the value of the output for 1908 will be about $56,000,000. About forty per cent. of this output belongs to Pennsylvania and the balance is distributed among the other gas-producing states. The southwestern states are coming to the front and will play an important part in the future. The value of the natural gas produced in Butler County can only be approximated from the foregoing figures, as there are no statistics at hand on the subject. At the close of 1908 there was more gas in sight and more developed territory than in the history of the natural gas business.

NITRO-GLYCERINE.

The discovery of nitro-glycerine dates back to 1846, when a patient European chemist, Professor Ascania Sobrero, hit upon a new compound by mixing fuming nitric acid, sulphuric acid, and common glycerine. At first he didn't know it was loaded. Neither of the three ingredients is an explosive by itself and the product of the three looks harmless, having the appearance of lard oil. The first discoverer found that it would burn in lamps, emitting a gentle white light. Concension proved that the meek-looking stuff was an explosive more powerful than gunpowder or gum-cotton. Strangely enough, it was first put up as a homeopathic remedy for headache, because a few drops rubbed on any part of the body would cause a severe headache. It is still prescribed as a medicine, but its commercial value is found in its use as a high explosive. It was first used as a high explosive in Europe in 1861 by Alfred B. Noble, a Swedish engineer, at Helenborg, Sweden.

A small consignment of nitro-glycerine shipped to New York City as a specimen accidentally exploded in the street. This accident caused widespread comment among the newspapers as to the cause. Investigation solved the mystery, and miners and contractors gradually learned its value for removing rocks and for heavy blasting. A five-pound jar of the stuff was suspended against the side of the steamer "Scotland," sunk off Sandy Hook, and exploded. It cut a fissure twelve feet wide along the side of the vessel, and nitro-glycerine was used thereafter in clearing up wrecks. The destructive power of nitro-glycerine has been fully demonstrated by its use in the mining regions and in the oil country. It has played an important part in the production of oil, but its use was not generally adopted until about twenty years after its first discovery.

The unrelenting foe of oil wells is paraffine. It clogged and choked some of the largest wells on Oil Creek and diminished the yield of other wells in every quarter of the field. It incrusts the veins of the rocks and the pipes, just as lime in water coats the tubes of a steam boiler or the inside of a tea kettle.

At first the operators steamed their wells, and later benzine was used with the same results. Some genius patented a liquid that would boil and fizz and remove all the paraffine attached, cleaning the tubing as much as caustic-soda scours the waste pipe of a sink. All of these methods were limited in their scope and worked satisfactorily as a rule in the shallow wells. The idea of exploding powder at the bottom of the holes drilled for oil occurred in 1860. Powder had been used in water wells with good results, and the idea of trying the experiment with oil wells suggested itself to Henry H. Dennis, who drilled the first well at Tideoute in 1860. Dennis had struck the tools in drilling the well. He procured three feet of two-inch copper pipe, plugged it with wood at one end, inserted a fuse-cord, and exploded the charge in the presence of six men. The hole was full of water and oil, and after the explosion the smell of oil was so much stronger that people passing the well noticed it. The same year William Reed developed the idea of the Reed torpedo, which he used in a number of wells. The torpedo was made of tin casing and filled with gunpowder. This torpedo was used in the A. W. Raymond well at Franklin, and it was expected that "Coldstream" Barry, who built the first telegraph line between Pittsburg and Franklin through Butler County would fire the shot by electricity. Barry failed to get there, and an attempt to explode the torpedo with a fuse failed. Reed went on with his experiments, and in 1863 made a can strong enough to resist the pressure of the water and let it down the Criswell well on Cherry Run. Failing to discharge it by electricity, he exploded it by sliding a hollow weight down a string to strike a percussion cap.

The experiments with the torpedo demonstrated the fact that the yield of oil had been increased by exploding powder hundreds of feet under the water, and in November, 1864, Col. E. A. L. Roberts applied for a patent for "a process of increasing the productiveness of oil wells by causing an explosion of gunpowder or its equivalent, at or near the oil-bearing point in connection with superincumbent fluid-tamping." He claimed that the action of a shell at Fredericksburg in 1862 which exploded in the mill-race suggested to him the idea of bombarding oil wells. He constructed six torpedoes and arrived at Titusville in January, 1865, and made the first test of his process in the Ladies' well owned by Captain Mills. Two torpedoes were exploded at the Ladies' well, and subsequent experiments proved the Roberts torpedo to be a success. Reed, who made the first torpedo in the oil country, John F. Harper, William Skinner, and others who had been experimenting along the same line from 1860 to 1865 filed applications for patents and commenced proceedings against Colonel Roberts for interference. The suits dragged for two years in court and were decided in favor of Roberts, who secured the patent that was to become a grievous monopoly in the oil country. Roberts organized a company in New York to construct torpedoes and carry on the business extensively. During 1867 many suits for infringement of the Roberts patent were entered, and Roberts seemed to have the courts on his side. He obtained injunctions against all of the parties using his patents and compelled the operators to come to his terms.

The operators were at first skeptical as to the advantages of the Roberts method, fearing that the torpedoes would destroy the wells. In December, 1866, the Woodin well, a dry hole on the Blood farm, received two shots, and started to pump eighty barrels a day. Roberts substituted nitro-glycerine for gunpowder about 1867, and established a factory at Titusville. The torpedo war became general and uncompromising. The Reed Company which had continued to manufacture torpedoes, were driven out of the business by the Roberts injunction. The monopoly charged $200 for a medium shot which was an exorbitant price, even for that day of high finance in the oil country.

The war with Roberts resulted in an army of "moon lighters" invading the country, who made a business of manufacturing torpedoes and shooting wells at night. The Roberts crowd hired emissaries to spy on these nocturnal well-shooters, and many of them were arrested and sent to jail. About two thousand prosecutions were threatened, and most of them begun, against producers accused of violating the law by engaging "moon lighters." An imposing array of counsel was engaged by the torpedo company and the defendants were represented by attorneys of international reputation, among the number being Keller and Blake of New York, and Gen. Benjamin F. Butler. Most of the individual suits were settled, the operators making such terms as they could. By this means the Roberts brothers and their torpedo company rolled up millions of dollars.

The Roberts patent was re-issued in June, 1873, perpetuating the burdensome load upon the oil producers until after 1883. Col. E. A. L. Roberts died in Titusville in March, 1881. The litigation over the patent and infringements attracted widespread attention. He was responsible for more lawsuits than any other man in the United States, and a week before his death he said that he had expended a quarter million dollars in torpedo litigation. His brother, Dr. Walter B. Roberts, was a partner in the torpedo business, and was actively engaged in the management of the company. He was elected mayor of Titusville in 1872, and had an ambition to serve his district in Congress. He succeeded in his profession and in the management of his business, but he was never able to gain his goal in the field of politics. He was once a candidate for Congress in his district, but the oil producers, whom the vexatious torpedo suits had irritated to the point of exasperation, opposed him and caused his defeat.

Gradually the quantity of explosive in a torpedo has been increased in order to shatter a wider area of oil-bearing rock. From five pounds of gunpowder which was used in the first torpedo the amount had been brought up to more than one hundred quarts of nitro-glycerine for a single shot. In such instances the glycerine is lowered into the well in cans, one resting upon another at the bottom of the hole until the desired amount is in place. A cap is adjusted to the top of the last can, the cord that lowered the nitro-glycerine is pulled up, a weight is dropped upon the cap, and an explosion equal to the force of a ton of gunpowder ensues. In a few seconds a shower of water, oil, mud and pebbles ascends, saturating the derrick and pelting broken stone in every direction.

One of the most graphic scenes ever witnessed in the oil country occurred at the Semple, Boyd and Armstrong well in the Thorn Creek field, in Butler County, in 1884. This well was drilled on the Marshall farm and reached the sand October 25, 1884. It had all the appearances of a dry hole, but the owners concluded to try a shot before abandoning the well. The scene that followed is thus described by Frank H. Taylor:

"On October twenty-seventh, 1884, those who stood at the brick school-house and telegraph-offices in the Thorn Creek district and saw the Semple, Boyd & Armstrong No. 2 torpedoed, gazed upon the grandest scene ever witnessed in Oildom. When the shot took effect and the barren rock, as if smitten by the rod of Moses, poured forth its torrent of oil, it was such a magnificent and awful spectacle that no painter's brush or poet's pen could do it justice. Men familiar with the wonderful sights of the oil country were struck dumb with astonishment, as they beheld the mighty display of Nature's forces. There was no sudden reaction after the torpedo was exploded. A column of water rose eight or ten feet and fell back again, some time elapsed before the force of the explosion emptied the hole and the burnt glycerine, mud and sand rushed up in the derrick in a black stream. The blackness gradually changed to yellow; then, with a mighty roar, the gas burst forth with a deafening noise, like the thunder-bolt set free. For a moment the cloud of gas hid the derrick from sight and then, as this cleared away, a solid golden column half a foot in diameter shot from the derrick floor eighty feet through the air, till it broke in fragments on the crown-pulley and fell in a shower of yellow rain for rods around. For over an hour that grand column of oil, rushing swifter than any torrent and straight as a mountain pine, united derrick floor and top. In a few moments the ground around the derrick was covered inches deep with petroleum. The branches of the oak trees were like huge yellow plumes and a stream as large as a man's body ran down the hill to the road. It filled the space beneath the small bridge and, continuing down the hill through the woods beyond, spread out upon the flats where the Johnson well is. In two hours these flats were covered with a flood of oil. The hill side was as if a yellow freshet had passed over it. Heavy clouds of gas, almost obscuring the derrick, hung low in the woods, and still that mighty rush continued. Some of those who witnessed it estimated the well to be flowing five-hundred barrels per hour. Dams were built across the stream, that its production might be estimated; the dams overflowed and were swept away before they could be completed. People living along Thorn Creek packed up their household goods and fled to the hillsides. The pump station, a mile and a half down the creek, had to extinguish its fires that night on account of gas. All fires around the district were put out. It was literally a flood of oil. It was estimated that the production was ten thousand barrels the first twenty-four hours. The foreman, endeavoring to get the tools into the well, was overcome by the gas and fell under the bull-wheels. He was rescued immediately and medical aid summoned. He remained unconscious two hours, but subsequently recovered fully. Several men volunteered to undertake the job of shutting in the largest well ever struck in the oil region. The packer for the oil saver was tied on the bull wheel shaft, the tools were placed over the hole and run in. But the pressure of the solid stream of oil against it prevented its going lower, even with the suspended weight of the two thousand pound tools. One thousand pounds additional weight were added before the cap was fitted and the well closed. A casing connection and tubing lines connected the well with a tank."

Nitro-glycerine continues to be the agency for removing paraffine and increasing the flow of oil wells. Methods of handling it have changed in the last twenty years, but the operation in the main is the same as used in the seventies. In recent years the tin tubing that encased the old torpedo has been discarded and the nitro-glycerine is now poured into the hole out of a bucket or a can, and allowed to permeate the crevices of the rock at the bottom. It is then exploded by the use of a squib and a go-devil. This method is used where there is no water in the well or where the water can be bailed out easily.

FLANNEGAN'S WELL CLEANER.

Many devices have been invented to remove paraffine without the use of nitro-glycerine, but none have proved of sufficient merit to take the place of the old torpedo or become generally used throughout the oil country. The most noteworthy invention of recent years is that of Francis B. Flannegan, a native of Butler, who is now a resident of Washington City. About 1896 Mr. Flannegan patented an electric appliance for removing paraffine from oil wells and experimented successfully on a number of wells in Butler County. This appliance consisted of an electric coil about six feet long and three inches in diameter which was used as a heater. To the end of the heater was attached a reel of copper wire, and this was lowered to the bottom of the well. The copper feed wire was then connected with a dynamo and the paraffine in the rock was melted by heat. The electric appliance was then removed and the paraffine was then pumped or bailed out. Flannegan had his dynamo and machinery mounted on a four-wheel truck so that it could be easily removed from one location to another, and he apparently had a fortune staring him in the face. Although the experiment proved successful in a number of cases in Butler County, the inventor was never able to perfect his machine so that it could be used in all kinds of territory.

ACCIDENTS AND TRAGEDIES OF THE BUSINESS.

Torpedoing wells is a hazardous business. A professional well shooter must have nerves of iron, be of temperate habits and keenly alive to the fact that a careless movement or a misstep may send him flying into space. Notwithstanding all the care taken in the handling of the treacherous stuff, it has left a long list of accidents and tragedies in its wake throughout the entire oil country. It never gives any warning, is quick as lightning, and the first intimation that the community has of an impending tragedy is a shivering shock that indicates that a life has been snuffed out, and that there is probably nothing left of the unfortunate victim but a few shreds of flesh and clothing. The first fatality from its use in the oil regions befell William Munsen in the summer of 1867, at Renno. Munsen was a well owner, and had a factory where he made torpedoes under the Reed patent. His new industry went along quietly for months, but one morning in August he was seen entering the building and shortly after an explosion occurred that tore the building to atoms and utterly annihilated Munsen. The force of the explosion was felt at Oil City, three miles away, where houses trembled on their foundations, windows were shattered and the people were driven into the streets, horror-stricken.

Three years later a tragedy occurred in the Scrubgrass region near the northern edge of Butler County, which is familiar history to the residents of the Parker and Karns City fields. R. W. Redfield, an agent for a torpedo company, hid a can of glycerine in the bushes in August, 1870, expecting to return the next day and use it. Mrs. George Fetterman while picking berries saw the can and, thinking it contained lard oil, handed it to her husband. Fetterman poured some of the stuff into a vessel and sent it to his wells which he was operating. A day or two later, noticing a heated journal on one of his engines, he put a little of the supposed oil on the axle with the engine in rapid motion. A furious explosion followed which wrecked the engine house and stunned three men who were at work on the derrick. Fetterman's body was found terribly mangled, with one arm torn off and his head crushed into a jelly. The mystery was not solved until some one thought of investigating the oil can and found that it contained nitro-glycerine.

Probably the first accident in the Butler County field happened in Bear Creek Valley, two miles below Parker, in 1874. John Osborne, a youth who was well known and well liked, was driving a buckboard loaded with nitro-glycerine down the valley, when the cargo let go at a rough place on the road. The concussion was felt for three miles, and when the frightened people of the community went to investigate the cause of the explosion, they found a deep hole in the road, and scarcely a shred of the boy, horse, or buckboard to be found anywhere.

Alonzo Taylor was the next victim and his death occurred at Troutman in the summer of 1875. Taylor had placed a torpedo in a well, and the drop weight had failed to explode the percussion cap. He then drew up the torpedo, got it safely out of the hole, and took it to a hill nearby to examine the priming. This was a risky business and had cost several men their lives. A few seconds after his arrival at the hill a stunning explosion occurred, and Taylor's body was found badly mangled. The torpedo in this case was made of giant powder, instead of nitro-glycerine. The damage to surrounding property was not very great, as giant powder expends its force downward.

In 1878 Gotham's Nitro-Glycerine Factory was located along Bear Creek near Petrolia. On the morning of October 27, W. O. Gotham, John Fowler and Harry French went to their usual work at the factory. An explosion occurred during the forenoon which tore Fowler into shreds, mutilated French and landed Gotham's dead body in the creek, fifty yards away. The factory was reduced to kindling wood. Gotham had a family and was widely known throughout the oil country. The other two men were strangers to the community.

One of the best known shooters in the Petrolia district in 1877 was Dan Smith. Familiarity with danger makes people careless, and this led to the undoing of Smith, who was employed by the Roberts Torpedo Company. A teamster was employed to haul the glycerine from a factory in Venango County to Petrolia, where it was stored in an abandoned coal bank. Smith and the teamster had been in the habit of tossing the glycerine cans from one to the other in loading and unloading their wagon, like the teamsters in the city do brick. The driver would toss the cans to Smith, who would catch them and carry them into the magazine. One morning in January, 1877, the two men were seen driving to the magazine with a heavy wagon loaded with glycerine. Shortly after a terrific explosion was heard. All that could be found of the two men was buried in a cigar box. It was presumed that they had been tossing the cans and that a misstep or a slip had caused the tragedy.

After the Petrolia accident, Butler County was remarkably free from nitro-glycerine tragedies for over ten years. In 1889 Humes Brothers had a factory and magazine in Bean Hollow, about a mile and one-half south of Butler Borough. On the morning of the 10th of December, 1889, James Woods and William Medill, two experienced shooters, went to the magazine to get a load of nitro-glycerine for their wells. About ten o'clock a fearful explosion was heard which broke window-glass and caused the houses to tremble in Butler. Twenty minutes later an eighteen-year-old boy ran to the Court House and told the tragedy that had occurred at the nitro-glycerine magazine. The boy had been at the magazine and had left just a few minutes before the explosion occurred. Nothing could be found of either men, except a few pieces of flesh which could not be identified, and the only evidences of the existence of a magazine was a large hole in the ground along the side of which lay four dead horses. The factory building which stood across the run from the magazine was wrecked, but was subsequently rebuilt and used as a factory for five or six years.

Six years later almost to a day a similar explosion occurred at the same factory and magazine which snuffed out the lives of two Butler men. On the 4th of December, 1895, George Bester of Butler, an oil well shooter, went to the Humes magazine to get a load of nitro-glycerine. Louis Black, a boy of about twenty years of age, went with Bester as a companion. An explosion occurred in which Bester was almost totally annihilated, Black's body mangled, the horses killed, and the nitro-glycerine factory reduced to a pile of kindling wood. The left arm of Black was found in the top of a tree three hundred feet from the scene of the explosion, and the tire off of one of the wheels of the wagon was found wrapped around the limb of a white oak as tightly as though it had been a coil of rope, one hundred yards away. The supposition is that Bester was removing a can of glycerine from the shelf in one of the magazines when the explosion occurred. About seven hundred pounds of glycerine were stored in the magazine about fifty yards from the one that exploded, and protected by a steep bluff of the hill. Had this magazine let go, the amount of damage done would have been immense. The force of this explosion almost caused a panic in Butler. Houses trembled on their foundations, window glass was broken all over the town, the plaster was loosened on the McKean Street school building, causing a panic among the children. The John Shaffner house on the hill south of the town was badly damaged, and his barn was moved almost a foot off its foundation. George Bester was twenty-eight years of age and had a wife and two small children. Black was a single man and lived with his parents in Butler.

On the 17th of December, 1901, the town of Butler was shaken by an explosion of nitro-glycerine which occurred at the magazine on the Bredin farm about a mile southwest of the town. Thomas L. Edwards, a partner of James F. Holland, and Charles D. Parker, a shooter employed by the Pennsylvania Torpedo Company, went to the magazine about four o'clock in the afternoon to prepare their loads for work on the following day. The two men were last seen as they were driving out of town with their wagons in the direction of the magazine. The people who went to the scene of the explosion found the dead horses lying beside a great hole in the ground where the magazine had once stood. The only thing found by which the two unfortunate men could be identified were a few bits of clothing and a few pieces of human flesh and bones. The force of the explosion shook the houses in Butler, broke window glass, and broke the glass in the store front of Cooper's tailor shop on the corner of Main and Diamond Streets. Edwards was about forty years of age and had a wife and three children. He was a native of Armstrong County, but had resided in Butler for a number of years and was among the best known shooters in the district. Parker came to Butler from Virginia, where he had been employed in the torpedo business and had resided in Butler but a short time. He left a wife and two small children.

C. N. Brown, known as "Brownie," was one of the oldest and best known shooters in the Butler County field. He had been with Fred Hinman at Petrolia and for twenty years had shot wells in every field south of the Venango County line. He came to Butler in the nineties, purchased a comfortable home and decided to quit the business. In April, 1897, he went to Evans City to shoot a well on the Ramsey farm, which was to be his last job. It was in truth, for while carrying two cans into the derrick an explosion occurred which wrecked the derrick, and snuffed out "Brownie's" life as quick as a flash. He was one of the most popular men that ever rode a torpedo wagon and was known from one end of the district to the other as "Brownie, the torpedo man." He had a wife and several children, who are still residing in Butler.

DEATH OF HOLLAND.

The last fatality in the torpedo business in Butler County happened November 29, 1907, when James F. Holland of Butler was killed at Boydstown. Holland had gone to shoot a well for Squire Higgins on the Whitmire farm, near Boydstown, and had delayed his work until about four o'clock in the evening, until after the school children had left the public school building, which was near the well that he intended shooting. The shot had been successfully lowered, and the go-devil dropped, but for some reason the torpedo did not explode. Holland had gone back to the derrick to ascertain the cause of the trouble, and was accompanied by Higgins and Irvine Whitmire. It was almost dark by this time, and the men were working with the aid of a lighted lantern. Holland had left a couple of cans partly filled with glycerine on the derrick floor, and for some unaccountable reason these exploded. Holland was hurled under the bull wheels and so badly injured that his death occurred within an hour. Whitmire was thrown thirty feet out of the derrick and badly injured, but subsequently recovered. Higgins was stunned by the force of the explosion but received no serious injury. Holland was one of the best known shooters in the Butler County field, and was regarded as one of the most careful and reliable men in the business. He was about fifty-five years of age, and had a wife and two children.

A WOMAN KILLED.

In the history of the oil country and the handling of torpedoes, there have been but two women who lost their lives from explosions of nitro-glycerine. One of these occurred at Tideoute in 1873, and the other at Butler in 1890. One morning in April, 1873, the little town at Dennis Run, half a mile from Tideoute, was shaken by an explosion. The explosion occurred at a frame structure on the side of the hill occupied by Andrew Dalrymple as a dwelling and engine house. Dalrymple was a moonlighter, and had been engaged in manufacturing torpedoes at night at his house to avoid detection by the Roberts spotters. He was probably filling a shell at the time the explosion occurred. It knocked the tenement house into splinters, killed Dalrymple outright, and injured Mrs. Dalrymple so badly that she died a few hours later. She was unconscious when found, and was never able to tell how the accident happened. The first persons to reach the place after the explosion were surprised to hear a feeble cry arising from beneath the rubbish. Two feet under the pile of splintered boards and timbers they found the Dalrymple baby, twenty months old, alive and intact with scarcely a scratch on its body. Further search revealed the unconscious mother and the dead father. Kind-hearted people of Tideonte took charge of the little orphan, who was later adopted by a wealthy family of the town, and grew up to be a beautiful young woman.

On the evening of April 30, 1890, the people of Butler heard an explosion which had the sound of nitro-glycerine. The sound of the explosion came from the south side of the creek in the vicinity of the plank road, and the people at once started for the magazine at Humes' factory, expecting that another accident had occurred there. It was soon discovered, however, that Mrs. Annie Edwards, who lived alone near the toll gate, was found dead in her yard, and that the explosion had occurred at her house. It was the custom at this time for oil well shooters to drive to the Thorn Creek and McCalmont fields to hide their empty cans in fence corners and various places on their way back to town, instead of driving back to the magazines, which were a considerable distance off the road. An investigation revealed the fact that Mrs. Edwards had found several of these empty nitro-glycerine cans and carried them to her house. How the accident happened is not known. It is presumed, however, that Mrs. Edwards was on the side porch of her house and had attempted to knock the top off a can with a hatchet. Fragments of the cans and hatchet were found in the vicinity, and Mrs. Edwards' dead body was found in the yard forty feet from the porch. It was evident that her pet cat was by her side when the explosion occurred, for its dead body was found a few feet away from Mrs. Edwards. Mrs. Edwards was about eighty years of age, and was connected with one of the pioneer families of Butler. She preferred to live alone, and being ignorant of the deadly nature of glycerine, was unconsciously the means of her own death. She lived on the property now owned by the estate of W. A. Marks on the Plank Road.

Numberless hairbreadth escapes have been reported in the handling of nitro-glycerine, many of which sound almost like fairy tales. Once in a while a shooter goes through the experience of having an explosion and living to tell about it. One of these was John McCleary, who was known from Bradford to McDonald as one of the best men in the business. While filling a shell at a well in Washington County in 1881, the well flowed and threw down the shell. The glycerine promptly exploded and wrecked the derrick. When McCleary saw the trouble coming he took to his heels and ran. The first explosion knocked him down and covered him with mud. He rose to his feet just as four cans on the derrick floor cut loose and the force of the second explosion carried McCleary fifty feet farther and filled his back full of hemlock splinters. He fell stunned and bleeding, but was not seriously injured. He lived to shoot many more wells and finally met his fate like the general run of oil well shooters, while placing a torpedo in a well in one of the southern fields. McCleary was known as "Jack" and operated extensively in the Butler County fields from Parker to Thorn Creek.

The placing of a torpedo in a well that is likely to make a flow of oil or salt water is a dangerous piece of business. Charlie Ford, who was a well known shooter of Butler in the latter part of the eighties, had an experience of this kind while shooting a well for the Krug Brothers east of Butler. Ford was filling the shell when the well suddenly began to flow. There were several men in the derrick at the time who immediately ran for their lives. Ford had his nerve with him, however, and unhooking the bail of the torpedo shell, he waited until the flow raised it out of the hole, and then grasping it in his hands, carried it to the corner of the derrick and set it down in a safe place. He was almost overcome by the gas and could not resume his work for some time, but when the well ceased flowing he replaced the torpedo and made a successful shot. Ford's nerve was doubtless the means of saving several lives as well as his own, and he, too, like Jack McCleary, ultimately met his fate while handling this dangerous stuff.

One of the most remarkable escapes that happened in the oil region is credited to James F. Holland, whose death is mentioned above. Holland on one occasion took a load of nitro-glycerine from his magazine near Butler into the edge of Armstrong County, where he was to shoot a well. It was in the winter time and the roads were covered with snow and ice. The well was located in a deep ravine and was reached by means of a road that descended along the side of the hill. In making the descent of this hill Holland's wagon suddenly skidded sidewise and went over the bank, spilling the glycerine cans along the side of the hill for several rods. Nothing daunted by this adventure, Holland righted his wagon and proceeded to gather up the cans of nitro-glycerine and carry them back to the road. In this operation he slipped once and fell, and the two cans he was carrying rolled for some distance. He finally succeeded in getting his wagon reloaded, and shooting the well without any further mishap.

On another occasion Holland was driving down the McCalmont hill at McCalmont station at night, with a heavy load of nitro-glycerine on his wagon, when his team became unmanageable. The horses dashed down the hill and across the railroad tracks at McCalmont station just as the passenger train, which was overdue, for Butler, whistled for the crossing. The hind wheels of the wagon had barely crossed the tracks when the train dashed by, and Holland breathed a sigh of relief. Had the train struck the wagon the results would have been terrible, as the coaches were heavily loaded with people traveling to the county seat.

MISCELLANEOUS INCIDENTS AND SKETCHES.

The following incidents of the Butler County oil field and brief sketches of a few of the men who were prominently identified with the operations from Parker to Millerstown forty years ago will be found interesting to many of the readers of this volume. Most of the incidents were published in the newspapers at the time, and all of them are familiar history in the oil country. The names of Frederick Prentice, Captain Vandergrift, George V. Foreman, "Dunc" Karns, Lambing Brothers, Satterfield and Taylor, C. D. Angell, George W. Delamater, John Pitcairn, Thomas W. Phillips, Isaac Phillips, John McKeown, and many others are indelibly linked with the early history of oil in Butler County. Among those who came into the field later were the McKineys, James Guffey, John Gailey, M. L. Lockwood, Dr. J. B. Showalter, Hon. Thomas W. Hays, George H. Graham, A. L. Campbell, and others who were natives of the county. Andrew Carnegie, the great steel baron, was once associated with the early history of oil in Butler County, being a stockholder in the Columbia Oil Company, and at the same time superintendent of the Allegheny Valley Railroad.

A large share of the credit of opening the Butler County field is due to James Lambing, who drilled the "Ursus Major" well in 1871, on the B. B. Campbell farm near Martinsburg. Heavy tools were used in this well for the first time in the oil country, and the driller was Charley Cramer. The tool-dresser was A. M. Lambing, who is now a well-known priest of the Roman Catholic Church in the Pittsburgh Diocese. The Lambing brothers came from Armstrong County, and at one time were the heaviest operators in the Butler field.

A prominent figure in the early days was John McKeown, who was known all over the oil country as one of the largest operators and one of the wealthiest men in the oil business. McKeown started in the Parker's Landing field without a penny of money, and the only resources he had was a supply of Irish pluck and an indomitable courage. He drilled the first well on the Widow Nolan farm at Millerstown, and subsequently operated at Modoc, Petrolia and Martinsburg. He joined the exodus to Bradford where he was the partner of Hon. Thomas W. Hays. From Bradford he went to McDonald and was one of the largest operators in that field. He died at the age of fifty-three, leaving a fortune estimated from three to ten million dollars. McKeown started as a poor boy and worked his way to the front rank of producers and financiers of the country. Although a millionaire he disliked the ostentation and display of wealth and had a fancy for disguising himself when transacting business where he was not known. On one occasion he dressed as a laboring man and went to consult Dr. Agnew, a Philadelphia specialist, in regard to his health. He explained to the physician that he was a poor man and unable to pay a large fee. The physician performed the services asked, and charged a fee of ten dollars, which the patient was to pay when he had earned the money. The next day McKeown returned dressed in a business suit, introduced himself and gave the astonished doctor a check for $100. On another occasion he went to Baltimore to purchase some real estate which was being sold at a forced sale to satisfy creditors. McKeown deposited a million dollars in the Baltimore bank, disguised himself as a farmer, and attended the sale. The mortgagor expected to buy the real estate at a nominal sum, much less than its real value, and when the stranger began bidding the other buyers, who were on the ground, intimated to the farmer that he had a good deal of nerve and inquired if he had the money to put up for his bid. The farmer replied that he usually had the cash to pay for what he purchased. The block was finally knocked down to the stranger for $600,000, and he astonished the creditors by calling up a local bank and producing the cash inside of a half hour.

William Smith, who drilled the first well for Colonel Drake at Titusville in 1859, was born in Butler County in 1812. He learned the blacksmiths' trade at Freeport, worked for a while at Pittsburg, and in the forties moved to Tarentum where he was employed making tools for Samuel M. Kier, and drilling salt water wells. When Colonel Drake took the contract to drill his well he found it difficult to get a practical borer to sink it. He went to Tarentum and engaged a man to drill the well, but the driller failed to make his appearance. He made the second trip to Tarentum and was referred by F. N. Humes, who was cleaning out salt wells, to William Smith, who was a blacksmith and maker of drilling tools. Smith accepted the offer to manufacture tools and drill the well and took with him his two sons, James and William. One of the sons subsequently purchased a farm in Winfield Township, Butler County, upon which he resided until his death.

One of the operators in the Millerstownpetrolia field in the seventies was George W. Delamater of Meadville. His father was Hon. George B. Delamater, was a prominent banker and oil operator of Meadville, who represented that district in the State Senate in 1869. The son, George W., operated at Petrolia, entered politics, was elected mayor of Meadville and State senator, and in 1890 was the machine candidate for governor on the Republican ticket against Robert E. Patison. Delamater was opposed by such men in his own party as Lewis Emery Jr., Joseph W. Lee and a host of independent oil producers and the campaign of that year was one of the most bitter in the political history of the county. Delamater was defeated for governor and Butler County for the first time in many years gave the Democratic candidate for State office a majority. Delamater was ruined financially by this campaign, and subsequently went to the northwest and started life anew as a lawyer at Seattle. About 1906 he gave up his practice in Seattle and returned to Pittsburg, where his death occurred under sad circumstances.

THE MONTCALM LETTER.

No latter day work on petroleum, no book, sketch or magazine article of any pretensions has failed to reproduce part of a letter purporting to have been sent out in 1750 by Joneair, the commander of the French fort at Duquesne, now Pittsburg, to General Montcalm, commander of the French possessions of Canada. It has been quoted as throwing light on the religious character of the Indians and offered as evidence of their affinity with the fire worshippers of the East. J. J. McLauren, author of "Sketches in Crude Oil," who was familiar with the early history of Franklin, and the upper oil country, has declared this story to be a "fake." Butler County's interest in the story is due to the fact that a Butler County boy was one of the authors of the "fake." Franklin has been dubbed the nursery of great men, and the one that gave birth to the Montcalm "fake" letter first saw the light of day in Butler County. According to McLauren a young lawyer opened an office in Franklin about seventy-five years ago and soon took a leading rank among the members of his profession. The same year a talented young minister was called to the pastorate of the Presbyterian Church of Franklin. The two young men became fast friends, and cultivated their literary tastes by writing for the village paper. Among others they prepared a series of fictitious articles based upon the early settlement of Northwestern Pennsylvania which were designed to whet the appetite for historic and legendary lore. In one of these sketches the alleged letter to Montcalm was included. The average readers supposed the minute descriptions and bold narratives to be rock-ribbed facts, and at length the French commander's letter began to be reprinted as actual history. One of the two writers, who coined this interesting fake, was Hon. James Thompson, the eminent jurist, who learned the printing trade in Butler, practiced law in Venango County, served three terms in the State legislature, one in Congress, was district judge for six years, and sat on the Supreme bench for fifteen years, serving as Chief Justice the last five years of his term. Judge Thompson's literary co-worker was the Rev. Cyrus Dickson, D. D., who resigned his first charge in Franklin in 1848, and removed to the east, where he gained distinction in the pulpit and as a forceful writer. The Montcalm letter is referred to in the opening of the chapter on oil and gas.

"DUNC" KARNS.

One of the picturesque figures in the Armstrong-Butler oil district was Stephen Duncan Karns. With his two uncles, Karns operated the first West Virginia well at the mouth of Burning Spring Run in 1860. He gained experience in drilling wells with his father, who operated the salt wells at Tarentum. The firing on Fort Sumter put an end to the operations on the Kanawha River in West Virginia, and young Karns enlisted in the United States service for three years and did not get back to Pennsylvania until the close of the war in 1865. In 1866 he leased one acre of land at Parker's Landing from Fullerton Parker and drilled a well. This well produced a barrel of oil a day at the start, and in the course of a few months increased its production to twelve barrels, incidentally made its owner twenty thousand dollars. Karns next leased a farm from the Miles Oil Company of New York that had an abandoned well on it. He drilled this well to the sand and got a twenty-five-barrel producer. This well settled the question of oil south of Parker. His next venture was the leasing of the Farren farm on Bear Creek and the Stone House farm of three hundred acres in Butler County. In 1872 he had an income from his wells amounting to $5,000 a day. He bought the Cooper well on the McClymonds farm, a mile south of Petrolia, which the owners had abandoned, drilled it deeper, and in two days had a hundred-barrel flowing well. The town of Karns City sprung up like a mushroom in the night and was named in his honor. Karns promoted the Parker and Karns City Railroad, built pipe lines, controlled the Exchange Bank, the Parker bridge and for a year or more was the largest producer in the oil region. He built a fifty thousand dollar mansion on the Allegheny River at Glen Cairn, kept a string of race horses, and played the part of a royal host. He went to Europe and was at Paris during the siege. Returning from Europe he built the Fredericksburg and Orange Railroad in Virginia. The drop in the price of crude oil to forty cents in 1874 and various financial losses compelled Karns to surrender all of his property to his creditors and the man who was worth millions in 1872 and 1873 was obliged to start life anew. In 1880 Karns induced E. O. Emerson of Titusville to start a cattle ranch in Western Colorado, and for six years the former oil king superintended the ranch. Emerson had bought the Riddle farm at Karns City from Karns for eleven thousand dollars. He deepened one well—supposed to be dry—to the fourth sand. He struck a six hundred-barrel gusher and sold the property for $90,000. Karns returned from the West, practiced law for a while at Philadelphia and then came to Pittsburg, where he published a Populist paper. When Coxy's "Army of Commonweal" marched through the "Smoky City" Karns walked at the head of the parade. Karns lived a more or less spectacular existence until his death, but never regained his fortune. He was known through the oil country as "Dunc," a name that is familiar to every one in the Butler county fields.

RICHARD JENNINGS.

Richard Jennings and his brother-in-law, Jacob L. Meldren, did much to develop the territory east of Petrolia. Jennings came from England to Armstrong County about 1850 and located at Queens-town. Meldren bought the farm at the head of Armstrong Run on which the noted Armstrong well was drilled in 1870. It opened the "Cross Belt" which ran at right angles to the main lines and upset the theories of geologists and operators. This cross belt was remarkable for mammoth gushers and extended from Petrolia into Armstrong County. Richard Jennings was one of the largest operators in this district and laid the foundations for the large fortune which he left to his sons who are now carrying on the business. The sons operated in the McDonald field and are now prominent in the banking business in the city of Pittsburg. The story is told of Richard Jennings that in the days of the Petrolia excitement he sent his foreman, Daniel Evans, to secure the Daugherty farm on the southern edge of the town. This farm was owned by two maiden sisters, and all efforts to lease it had failed. Faithful to his duty, the foreman knocked at the door of the Daugherty residence and engaged board for a week. Before the week expired he was engaged to the elder sister and had the pleasure of securing the lease of the farm for his employer. He reaped a harvest of greenbacks in due course of time from the property, and his widow, who died recently, left an estate valued at more than $100,000.

Inspired by the success of Evans, another gay and festive operator attempted to lease a farm from a maiden lady near Millerstown. After he had exhausted every art to get the lease he hinted at matrimony. The indignant lady exploded like a bomb-shell, and seizing a broom compelled the bold visitor to beat a hasty retreat minus his hat and gloves.

TAYLOR AND SATTERFIELD.

Among the large operators of the Butler County field in 1870 were Taylor and Satterfield. Their policy was to buy lands tested by one or more wells and avoid the risk of wild-cattng. In this way they acquired productive farms in every part of the field from Parker to Millerstown, and their transactions footed up millions of dollars annually. They established banks at Petrolia and Millerstown, employed an army of drillers and pumpers, and in company with Vandergrift and Forman, John Pitcairn, and Fisher Brothers, they built the Fairview pipe line from Argyle to Brady, which was the nucleus of the National transit system of oil transportation. Capt. J. J. Vandergrift, George V. Forman, and John Pitcairn were associated with them in their producing operations in 1879, which extended to the Bradford field, and grew to such magnitude that the Union Oil Company was formed in 1881 with $5,000,000 capital. In 1883 Forman was paid a million dollars for his holdings in this concern in Allegheny County, which up to that date was the largest individual sale in the region. All of its properties were eventually sold to the Forrest Oil Company, and the Union Oil Company went out of existence.

John A. Satterfield remained in the oil business after the dissolution of the Union Oil Company, and eventually turned his attention to banking in Buffalo. He was born in Mercer County, served four years in the Civil War, and in 1865 opened a grocery at Pithole with James A. Waugh as a partner. Later he engaged in the oil business, coming to Parker in 1870 and to Millerstown in 1873, where he resided for four years. His work in the Butler fields increased his reputation for honesty and enterprise, and at the time of his death he occupied a position among the leading financiers of the country.

PLUMMER'S RIDE.

In the days of the Millerstown excitement there was a lively scramble for leases, and various operators had cast longing eyes on the Divener farm, two miles south of Millerstown. The farm contained two hundred acres and the Bennett well, which came in for 300 barrels on the Boyle farm, made the Divener farm very desirable. The Divener couple were old and childish, and not wishing to move out of the house in which they had resided for many years, they positively declined to lease or sell. Lee and Plummer were two young men from New Castle who were looking for leases in the new field, and were on the anxious seat in regard to the Divener place. One morning Plummer overheard an operator tell his foreman to offer three hundred dollars an acre for the Divener farm. Plummer lost no time. He mounted a fast horse and rode at a gallop to the Divener house and offered the old couple $200 an acre for their land, one-eighth of the oil, and permission to stay in the house. The aged pair consulted a moment, and accepted the offer. The ink was not dry on the lease when the foreman rode up, but Plummer met him at the gate, and informed him that it was "too late." The first well drilled by Lee and Plummer on this farm paid for the entire expense of the lease in thirty days, and they subsequently sold their holdings to Satterfield and Taylor for $90,000. With a fine sense of appreciation the first well was labeled "Plummer's Ride to Divener," and in the estimation of the Millerstown hustlers, it discounted "Sheridan's Ride to Winchester." Lee and Plummer were among the few operators in the field who could quit when they had a good thing. Dividing their money after the sale of their lease, they said good-bye to the oil field and went back to New Castle, where they engaged successfully in business that did not have so many elements of chance.

THE PRODUCERS' PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION.

The unsatisfactory condition of the oil business in 1874 led to the organization of producers' protective associations, and the inauguration of a shut-down in the entire oil field. Operations were suspended all along the line and for a couple of months scarcely any oil was produced. The purposes of the movement might have been carried out but for the violation of their agreements on the part of some of the operators who had pumping wells. Some of these operated their wells at night and shut them down in day time and when this became known it practically broke up the association. Some of the operators who carried out their agreement were financial losers by the operation on account of their wells being flooded with water and practically ruined.

In 1878 another movement was made to organize the independent producers, and what was known as the Petroleum Producers' Association was organized throughout the entire oil field. The purpose of this organization was to buy, sell and transport crude petroleum, and for a number of years it had a wide influence in the oil country. The association built pipe lines, erected tankage and went into the business of buying and selling petroleum on a large scale. It built a seaboard pipe line and for a number of years was an active competitor of the Standard Oil Company. Branches of the association were organized at Petrolia, Karns City, Millerstown, and Troutman in Butler County. Among the active members of the Petrolia Association were George H. Graham and Hon. Thomas W. Hays, and the promoters of the Karns City Association were Alexander McDowell, A. J. Salisbury, A. W. Gordon and E. V. Rigney. Each of the associations had from eighty to one hundred members, all of whom were extensive operators in the Butler County field.

BEATING THE RAILROAD COMPANY.

The independent producers and pipe line operators in the seventies often had trouble in obtaining cars to ship their oil. Discrimination was indulged in by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, of which Andrew Carnegie was then superintendent of the Allegheny Valley division. The Armstrong and Butler County producers who were shipping oil from Brady's Bend had made complaint to the railroad company about their treatment in the matter of distributing cars for shipping oil and their request had been treated with indifference, and in some cases ignored. The oil operators of that day were men of resources. They quietly gauged their tanks and when they were full, run the oil onto the ground. They then presented the bill for the oil at the current market price to the railroad company. The railroad company saw the point made by the operators, settled the bills and thereafter furnished cars when asked for.

The last shut-down in the oil county occurred in 1886 at the time the Thorn Creek field was at its height, and the Phillips and Armstrong gushers had been spouting oil at the rate of several thousand barrels per day. The price of crude petroleum went down to $.62½, and in the hope that a suspension of operations and limiting the production would stimulate prices, the movement was inaugurated. The price of crude petroleum dropped to $.52 in 1891 and since that time it has gradually increased to $1.78, which has been the price paid by all the pipe line companies for the last two years.

PARKER CITY.

When the advance guard of the oil army reached Parker's Landing in 1869 there was nothing there but a few houses, and a ferry across the river. In a comparatively short space of time there was a full-blown city under a city charter, large business blocks, banking houses, opera houses, daily newspapers, an oil exchange, and Ben Hogan's Floating Palace on the river bank. Part of the resident portion of the city extended into Butler County. Ben Hogan's place was too tough for the town, which was noted for its toughness, and one night the guy ropes that held the palace to the shore were cut with an axe and Hogau, his collection of vile women, gamblers, and blacklegs floated down stream never to return to Parker.

The oil exchange at Parker attracted a large number of speculators in oil, and it was really one of the show places of oil-dom. Someone has said that it is as dangerous to speculate in kerosene as it is to start a fire with it. This proved true with the oil exchanges, of which there were several in Butler County. Many fortunes were lost in the Parker Exchange and a few made. George Darr was the agent and Thomas B. Simpson was the largest operator. Daniel Goettel is credited with engineering the largest bull movement in the history of oil at this exchange. The patrons of the exchange were representative young men from all over the United States, many of whom have since become prominent in the affairs of the State and Nation, and the names of some are familiar to every household in the county today. Christ Ball and Henry Loomis were two brokers who cleared up $60,000 in one year, which was a snug fortune in the seventies. A young German farmer of New York State staked all his money on the market one day and made $22,000. He retired to New York State, bought a farm, and the oil country and the oil exchange knew him no more.

With the exodus to Bradford trade slackened, and the Parker exchange met the same fate as the boom city. The building was sold for ground rent, and the $5,000 library was removed to Oil City. The expensive paintings and furniture sold for a pittance and the Wall Street of Parker has long since only existed in memory.

THE DEVIL'S HALF ACRE.

What is known as the Devil's Half Acre was a small lease in Penn Township owned by Judge James Bredin of Butler, for which there was a lively scramble by the operators. When the Thorn Creek field was opened up in 1884 it was discovered that about a half acre of land lying on the old Pittsburg Turnpike had no apparent owner, and on account of this lack of ownership it was called the "Devil's Half Acre." The oil developments made the half acre valuable property and the operators began to look around for the owner. It was then discovered that the piece of ground had originally belonged to a tract owned by Judge Bredin, and that when he had sold the tract five years previous, a strip of ground amounting to about half an acre had been conveyed as a right of way to another tract of land that lay back from the public road. In the subsequent years both pieces of land had been conveyed to other parties, the half acre was never used for the purpose for which it was intended and the circumstances surrounding the first sale had been forgotten. Bredin received a handsome bonus for the lease of the half acre, and the operators were rewarded by a paying well.

Another instance of land becoming valuable that had been considered worthless occurred in the Hundred-foot District in Connoquenessing Township in 1889. About 1880 the heirs of Daniel Graham sold a tract of land on Little Connoquenessing Creek and when the deed was executed the new purchaser discarded about fifteen acres of the tract lying on the creek bottom as being utterly worthless. The ground was covered with rocks, brush and rattlesnakes, and was not considered fit for pasture land. The property was assessed as vacant land and the Graham heirs kept it without much thought that it would ever prove valuable. The striking of the gusher on the Humphrey farm and the subsequent development on the Brandon and other farms brought the fifteen-acre tract into prominence and a large bonus was paid for the lease of the ground and several large wells were drilled on it. The heirs of the Graham estate subsequently realized a neat fortune out of the land that had been discarded as worthless.

“THE WICKEDEST MAN IN THE WORLD.”

A sketch of the oil country from 1860 to 1890 would be considered incomplete without mention of Ben Hogan, who flourished during the palmy days of Oil Creek, Parker and Petrolia. Nearly all of the mushroom oil towns were infested with a crowd of sports, gamblers, and plug-uglies who stole, gambled, caroused and did their best to break all the commandments at once. Hapless wretches were driven to desperation and fitted for the infernal regions, while lust and liquor goaded men to frenzy, resulting sometimes in homicide or suicide. The chief of the sinners in catering to this class of people was Ben Hogan, who had a reputation as wide as the oil fields and called himself “the wickedest man in the world.” Hogan had been a prize fighter on land and a pirate on the seas, a bounty jumper and a blockade runner during the Civil War, and for one of his crimes had been sentenced to death. He was pardoned by President Abraham Lincoln, and in the summer of 1865 he came to Oil Creek and ran a variety show at Pithole. His companion and mistress was “French Kate,” who was said to be a Confederate spy during the days of the Civil War, and a leader of the demi-monde of Washington City. The character of the place that the pair ran at Pithole was so malodorous that the authorities drove them out of the county, and they were next heard of at Parker in 1872, where Hogan built what was known as the “Floating Palace.” This palace was built on boats and anchored on the Allegheny River bank, and was consequently out of the jurisdiction of the local authorities. He ran a dance hall, sold whiskey, and made himself so generally obnoxious that he was forced to leave, and in the winter of 1873, he came to Petrolia, where he opened an opera house and conducted a gilded palace of sin known as “Hogan’s Castle.” Hogan put on airs, dressed in a loud style and would have been elected burgess of the town but it is said that the election board counted him out. The “castle” became so notorious that a newspaper took up the cudgel against Hogan and forced him to leave Petrolia. From Petrolia he went west and there engaged in some swindle, after which, in 1875, he returned to the oil region and followed his old occupation at Elk City, Bullion, Tarport and Bradford. His residence was of short duration in all of these places, but he met with financial success and was about to depart for Paris when he met in New York City the converted drunkard, Charles Sawyer. Hogan was deeply impressed with Sawyer's preaching and became converted. He signed the pledge, quit drinking and from that time until his death he devoted all of his time to evangelistic work and in trying to offset as far as possible his former misdeeds.

After Hogan's conversion he married "French Kate," who also professed religion at the time, but it didn't have any very lasting effect with her as she eloped with a tough a couple of years later. Evangelist Moody met Hogan and advised him to go into the Evangelistic work. Hogan traversed the oil country, visiting all the towns where he had formerly conducted his dens of vice, and conducted evangelistic meetings at which he told of his conversion and his desire to lead a better life. He visited Butler in 1893 and held several large meetings in the old opera house. When Hogan came to the oil country in 1865 it is said that he could not read nor write, and that all the education he ever had was given him by "French Kate." He made good his promises to Evangelist Moody and so far as is known he led a consistent Christian life for many years previous to his death.

THE AGRARIAN TROUBLE AT RENFREW.

A lease fight that attracted general attention all over the country and obtained almost national notoriety by publication in the newspapers occurred at Renfrew in the Bald Ridge district in 1883. David A. Renfrew had leased a tract of land in Penn Township south of the Connoquenessing Creek and west of the Meridian road to the Bald Ridge Oil Company. The oil company subsequently sold the lease to Simcox and Myers. The surveyors employed to run the lines of the lease discovered a strip of land containing about six acres which was not described in the titles to any of the adjoining tracts. The six-acre strip immediately became the subject of contention, three parties claiming the land. David A. Renfrew claimed it by right of purchase, Charles C. Sullivan of Butler claimed a part of it, having secured a patent from the state, and the third claimants were the heirs of William Purviance, who had surveyed and owned the original tract. The Purviance heirs were represented by Miss Elizabeth Purviance, J. F. Purviance, Miss S. S. Purviance, H. C. Purviance, W. A. Purviance and B. F. Purviance. The Purviance family had taken possession of the tract and were living in a building that had been erected on the premises. The other claimants to the title entered a suit of ejectment and the Purviances were ordered to vacate, which they refused to do. Simcox and Myers demanded possession of the lease, which was refused them, and they called on Renfrew to assist in dispossessing the tenants of the property. One morning a posse composed of David A. Renfrew, John Renfrew, Edward Alshouse, Porter Phipps, J. J. Myers, Hugh Strawick, A. A. Dickey, F. Stroup, Simeon Phipps, James Ross, John Renfrew, Grant Anderson, Samuel Ross and Charles Heeter, went to the lease to dispossess the tenants who were then holding possession. The Purviances had prepared for trouble, barricaded the doors of the house, and offered a strong resistance to the posse. The posse battered down the doors of the building, overpowered the inmates, and by force of numbers carried them off the premises. Among the inmates of the house were Miss Elizabeth and Miss S. S. Purviance, who were roughly handled in the process of eviction. Criminal suits followed in which the men engaged by Renfrew in evicting the tenants were indicted for riot and assault and battery, and cross-suits were instituted against various members of the Purviance family. The litigation was also carried on in the civil courts in the form of ejectment suits, but the Purviance family lost their claim to the six acres, which proved to be one of the most valuable oil leases in that part of the Bald Ridge district.

The proceedings at the time the eviction was made developed into a riot and was the most exciting agrarian trouble since the Maxwell affair in 1815 mentioned in another chapter.

WILSON'S IRON DERRICK.

The idea of substituting iron for wood in building oil derricks has been attempted several times, but was never successfully carried out until the latter part of the nineties, when Amos C. Wilson, of Butler, secured a patent for building derricks from sections of pipe. The legs of the derrick were fitted into metal sockets and so arranged that the pieces could be easily put together and taken apart and the braces and girders were made of the same material. Wilson erected one of his derricks on a lot near the Walter's Mill in Butler and drilled a well with it, and several other tests were made of the derrick in the Pennsylvania oil fields, but they never became popular, and Wilson finally abandoned his plan of placing his invention on the market.

FORTUNES THAT WERE MISSED.

No story of missed fortunes in the oil country is more interesting than that of the Lambing brothers, who were among the heavy operators that followed the inland developments from Parker's Landing in the early part of the seventies. They drilled the famous Campbell gas well and in 1872 owned leases on 16,000 acres of land in Concord, Fairview and Parker Townships, and had drilled the Ralston Mill well in Concord Township. When the Ralston well was completed it filled up with water and there were no indications of oil. The well stood in that condition for about twenty months when the casing was purchased by Kittanning parties. In the meantime there had been a decline in the price of crude oil, the Lambing brothers had become financially embarrassed along with many other producers and had given up their leases. When the workmen undertook to pull the casing out of the Ralston well they discovered after they had pulled up about half of it that two or three sections were split. This suggested that the water had not been cased off, and that probably the well was good for some oil if it were properly cased. The new owner skirmished around and got new pieces of casing to replace the split sections and re-cased the well. The water was then bailed out and to the surprise of everybody concerned, the well made 120 barrels a day. Had the Lambing brothers discovered the split casing when the well was drilled, their holdings would have been worth a million dollars to them.

THE LAWYER PUMPER.

One of the notable characters that came to the Millerstown field in 1873 was M. Augustus Perry. Perry was a New Englander by birth, and in the early days of the Oil Creek excitement had come to Titusville with $1,100,000.00. Along with other capitalists from the east he engaged in producing and speculating and eventually lost his entire fortune, and at the time mentioned he was pumping on the Shreve well for $2.50 a day. Perry was a man of education, a lawyer by profession, and had exceedingly fine literary tastes. He still had faith in his lucky star and was looking forward to the day when he would regain his lost fortune.

R. B. TAYLOR AND DAN WULLER.

An instance of how fortunes are sometimes made in the oil fields occurred in the Hundred-foot District in Connoquenessing Township in 1889. R. B. Taylor of Butler, who was a well known contractor and builder, had secured a lease on the Daniel Cable farm on Little Connoquenessing Creek. When he attempted to organize a company to drill on the lease he met with many discouragements from old operators who had no faith in the location of the lease. Taylor finally drilled the well himself, with the exception of a one-eighth interest that was carried by another party, and struck a gusher that flowed over 500 barrels a day. After the well had produced enough of oil to pay the expenses of the lease and the drilling, Taylor sold out for $90,000.

Another instance occurred in the Cooperstown field in 1893. Daniel Wuller of Butler was a well known druggist and at that time was operating some in the local oil fields. One night he had been out with some good fellows and the next morning he awoke with a queer feeling in his head and a faint recollection of the proceedings of the evening before. When he balanced his cash he found that he had paid $250 for a lease in the Cooperstown field and that the fellows who sold him the lease were spending his money and enjoying a hearty laugh over the manner in which they had done up the druggist. The lease was considered "no good," and when Wuller attempted to form a company to drill it he was laughed at. He decided to turn the tables on the practical jokers and proceeded to drill a well himself. The first well came in good and others followed, and in the course of a few months Wuller sold out at a clean profit of $50,000.

THE "SPOTTY" M'BRIDE WELL.

The decline of the Speechley field in Washington and Concord Townships was followed by the usual crop of predictions that Butler County had produced her last oil pool, and that the shades of oblivion would soon cover the entire district. In the winter of 1904-5 Isaac L. (Spotty) McBride leased a block of 215 acres of land in the southwestern section of Butler Township about three miles from Butler, and located a well on the O. K. Waldron farm. After much hard labor and many disappointments he formed a partnership with P. F. McCool, Harry Hinchberger, and Mike Finnegan, and let the contract for the drilling of the well. McBride had been in the oil country for over thirty years and had more than the usual run of bad luck. He had drilled numerous dry holes, and when he undertook the drilling of the well on the Waldron farm he was obliged to work on the well as a driller in order to carry his one-fourth interest. The well was completed May 9, 1905, and began to flow at the rate of 2,500 barrels per day. It was by all odds the largest well struck since the days of Thorn Creek, and "Spotty's" fortune was made. A mad scramble for leases followed the striking of the well, and fancy prices were paid. The Simon Barrickman farm of forty acres was leased for $11,000 and the eighth royalty. Two thousand dollars were paid for twenty acres of the Samuel Schlager farm, and $10,000 for the Ihmsen farm, while equally as fancy prices were paid for other farms in the vicinity. After the McBride well had flowed about 30,000 barrels of oil the owner sold the property for $200,000. Spotty's one-quarter interest represented a neat profit of a little more than $50,000, and he is now living on "Easy Street."

The McBride pool proved to be a freak of the first water. Other wells were drilled but all of them turned out to be small producers and the entire field was a money loser to nearly every one but the owners of the first well.

HOFFMAN'S LUCK.

In May, 1908, Harry N. Hoffman, a pumper for the Southern Oil Company in Penn Township, secured a ten-acre lease on the Dodds farm, on which he proposed to drill a well. About twenty-two years ago an operator named Jones had obtained a lease on the same piece of land and erected a derrick. Before the drill was started a dry well or two had been drilled in the neighborhood, and Jones concluded that his was a losing chance. He accordingly gave up his lease and sold the rig without drilling. Hoffman knew about the location and always had faith in it. When he secured his lease and started to drill he had to give up his job with the oil company, and when he tried to get financial backing he was met with polite refusals and some few intimations that he was crazy to drill on the location that he had solicited. Nothing daunted, he mortgaged his home for all it would carry, borrowed all the money he could get from other sources to pay the contractors, and on the day that the well reached the top of the sand he stood to lose every penny he had saved in twenty-five or thirty years' work or make a fortune. When the driller started to run the last bit, the hole was apparently as dry as the proverbial "powder horn." Hoffman was sitting on the anvil in the derrick watching the tools descend their hole, and remarked to the drilling crew, "Well, boys, I am all in." "Never say die until the last bit has been drilled," replied the driller, who really felt sorry for Hoffman. Sure enough, when the bit came up in the course of an hour it was dripping with grease, and before the day was over the Hoffman No. 1 was flowing at the rate of 250 barrels a day. The Hoffman well opened an extensive pool in Penn Township which has produced a number of wells in the 100-barrel class, but none of the wells have equalled the first gusher. Hoffman was offered $30,000 for a half interest in the well ten days after it was struck, but refused to sell. He drilled other wells on his lease and is on the high road to fortune. The striking of the gusher caused a scramble for leases and high prices were paid for land in the immediate vicinity of the well.

OIL COUNTRY HONOR.

Much has been written and said about the code of honor among oil men in the oil country twenty-five or thirty years ago. An instance occurred in connection with the Hoffman well which brings the subject down to the present date. Newton Maharg owns a farm adjoining the Hoffman lease on the Dodds tract. When Hoffman started to drill his well he went to Maharg and asked him for a ten-acre lease to protect his well. Maharg had no faith in the venture, and refused the lease, but not wishing to discourage Hoffman, he said, "Go ahead with your drilling, and if you get a well I will give you a ten-acre lease for nothing, and all I will ask is the usual royalty." Hoffman took Maharg at his word, and when the gusher came in he went after the lease and got it, although it would have been several thousand dollars to Maharg's advantage to go back on his word. The land surrounding the two leases sold as high as $200 an acre, and Maharg could have easily received the top price for the asking.

THE OIL MEN'S OUTING ASSOCIATION.

The Oil Men's Outing Association had its inception in 1886, when the employes of the National Transit Company and their friends held a picnic at Slippery Rock Park on the Bessemer Railroad. The affair was such a pronounced success that it was decided to hold an outing every year and include all the oil men and their friends in the entire oil field. The place of holding the annual outing was changed to Conneaut Lake, and a permanent organization was effected. One of the features is the publication of the Oil and Gas Magazine which is devoted to oil region reminiscences, and contains much valuable information about the oil business. The officers of the association in 1908 were J. W. McKee, president; Hon. E. L. Watson, vice-president; C. R. Watson, secretary and treasurer; Charles H. Olliver, chairman of the executive committee, with the following active members of the committee: William M. Starr, Samuel C. Redie, Z. P. Lauffer, J. K. Wood, M. M. McKinney, H. A. Evans, and Dr. W. R. Cowden.

The production of Pennsylvania crude petroleum in 1859 was 1,873 barrels. In 1860 it was 547,439 barrels, and the high-water mark in production was reached in 1891, when 35,742,152 barrels were produced.

The lowest monthly average price of crude petroleum in 1859 was $20 per barrel. It dropped to $2.75 in 1860 and to $.10 in 1861 and 1862. The $4 mark was reached in 1864 and the average price for the year was $9.87½. The highest monthly average for the same year was $12.12½. In 1874 the price declined to $.55 and the production was 11,000,000 barrels. The steady decline in the price of crude oil caused financial disasters in the oil country, and Butler County suffered along with the others. It has been said that during the period of depression that over 2,000 executions were issued by the sheriffs in the oil country, and this county had its proportionate share.

PRICES OF CRUDE OIL.

The average price of pipe line certificates of Pennsylvania crude petroleum as well as the price in January of each year, is given below:

Year.	Price in January.	Yearly average.
1860.....	$19.25	$9.59
1861.....	1.00	.49
1862.....	.10	1.05
1863.....	2.25	3.15
1864.....	4.00	8.06
1865.....	8.25	6.59
1866.....	4.50	3.74
1867.....	1.87½	2.41
1868.....	1.95	3.62½
1869.....	5.75	5.63½
1870.....	4.52½	3.86
1871.....	3.82½	4.34
1872.....	4.02½	3.64
1873.....	2.60	1.83
1874.....	1.20	1.17
1875.....	1.03	1.35
1876.....	1.80	2.56½
1877.....	3.53¼	2.42
1878.....	1.43	1.19

1879.....	1.03	.85½
1880.....	1.10¼	.94½
1881.....	.95½	.85½
1882.....	.83½	.78½
1883.....	.93¾	1.05¾
1884.....	1.11	.83½
1885.....	.70½	.87½
1886.....	.88¾	.71¼
1887.....	.70	.66¾
1888.....	.91¼	.87¾
1889.....	.86¾	.94¼
1890.....	1.05¾	.86¼
1891.....	.74¼	.67
1892.....	.62¾	.55¾
1893.....	.53½	.64
1894.....	.79¾	.83¾
1895.....	.99	1.35½
1896.....	1.42¾	1.17¾
1897.....	.88	.75¾
1898.....	.65	.91¾
1899.....	1.17	1.29¾
1900.....	1.66¾	1.35¼
1901.....	1.19½	1.21
1902.....	1.15	1.23¾
1903.....	1.52½	1.59

Since 1904 there was a steady advance until March 9, 1907, when the price of credit balances was quoted at $1.78. There has been no change since.

A DISASTROUS FIRE.

The first disastrous fire in the oil region occurred at the Merrick well near Rouseville, April 17, 1861, at which forty-two men were more or less seriously burned, nineteen died from their injuries, and two were incinerated on the scene of the fire. One of the victims of the tragedy was Henry R. Rouse, one of the pioneer oil operators of that region, and the man for whom Rouseville in Venango County is named. The Merrick well had been drilled in on the day of the fire, and started to flow at the rate of two thousand barrels a day. Two or three hundred people had gathered around the well to watch it flow, when suddenly there was a tremendous explosion. The oil and gas took fire and those who were able to get away from the place fled for their lives. Among the victims were two strange men who had come that day from Oil City, each carrying a valise. They were among the missing, and when the fire was under control their charred bodies were found near the well. Who they were has never been learned. Among the nineteen who were fatally burned was James Walker, of Butler County, and among the list of injured were Levi Walker and John Glass, both of Butler County.

THOMAS W. PHILLIPS.

The development of the oil field of Butler County and the oil business generally in western Pennsylvania owes more to Hon. Thomas W. Phillips than any other man living or dead, since the beginning of oil operations in 1859. Mr. Phillips is a native of Lawrence County and a resident of New Castle, and much of his success and prominence in the development of the oil field have been attained in Butler County. Mr. Phillips went to Oil Creek early in the sixties in partnership with his brother Isaac, followed the developments down the river to Parker and thence into Butler County, and in 1873 the Phillips Brothers were among the large producers in the Parker and Troutman field. When the financial panic struck the country in 1873 the Phillips Brothers met with financial reverses which threatened them in bankruptcy. At that time they owed about $800,000, and they had about $2,000,000 of property throughout the oil country which would have been sold at a sacrifice, but the creditors at a meeting held in Parker City decided to give the two brothers ten years' time in which to pay their obligation, and appointed them trustees to take charge of the estate. A situation which would have appalled less courageous men only served to bring out their strong character, and with magnificent energy they launched into oil-producing on a vast scale on a plan which was originated by Thomas W. Phillips, and in the short term of fifteen years the entire indebtedness of $800,000 was paid off. In the meantime, Isaac Phillips had died and the greater part of the burden fell on the surviving brother. When the exodus of oil men to Bradford began, Thomas W. Phillips remained in Butler County and gave his attention to the development of the Thorn Creek field, Glade Run and Thorn Creek extension, and it was in these fields that he had made the money to pay the losses of 1873. He not only paid his indebtedness, but accumulated a handsome fortune in addition and established the business now being conducted by the Phillips Gas and Oil Company. Mr. Phillips had been interested in every movement for the protection or improvement of the producing industry, and the producers and operators of western Pennsylvania owe him a debt of gratitude for his watchful care in thwarting hostile legislation. When the movement was undertaken to limit the production and thus reduce the excessive stock of oil on hand, Mr. Phillips refused to curtail operations until a satisfactory provision, which he proposed, was made to compensate and protect the labor engaged in the industry by setting aside 2,000,000 barrels of oil for its benefit.

Mr. Phillips came into public life prominently in 1880, during the Garfield campaign. He conceived and planned the Republican text book of that campaign, the first ever published, and was its financial backer. His work in this campaign brought him into prominence in Pennsylvania, and in the subsequent contest in the legislature for United States Senator he repeatedly received votes in the open convention of both Houses. In the fall of 1890, owing to the dissatisfaction existing in the Republican party over the manner in which the successful candidate for Congress obtained his nomination, Mr. Phillips was prevailed upon to be an independent candidate and nominated at a convention of representatives of the district held at Harmony. He was defeated at the fall election, but he ran such a large vote that he received the party nomination in 1892 and was elected^{ed} by the largest majority ever given in the Twenty-fifth District, which was then composed of Beaver, Butler, Lawrence and Mercer Counties. Mr. Phillips was reelected in 1894, and in 1896 declined a nomination to give his time to the labor commission of which he was then a member. While a member of the House, Mr. Phillips was a member of the Committee on Labor, and also that on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. In the extra session of the Fifty-third Congress he introduced a bill for the free coinage of silver based on the natural law of supply and demand, believing that there has been no sensible silver legislation since the Rebellion. This bill was favorably commented on by the press and men of recognized financial ability. At the second session of the Fifty-third Congress he introduced the bill authorizing the appointment of a non-partisan commission to collate information on the labor and industrial problems and was made a member of the commission which afterwards performed valuable services. Although past three score years and ten, Mr. Phillips takes an active interest in the affairs of the company which bears his name, and in 1908 he represented his district in the Republican national convention at Chicago, and was one of the three delegates from Pennsylvania who voted for Roosevelt on the first and only ballot taken.

CHAPTER VII

BENCH AND BAR

Early Court Officials—Early Courts—Origin of "Buckwheat County"—First Quarter Sessions Court—Civil Cases and Other Court Business—Division of Townships—Cattle Marks—The Court in 1805-06—Contempt of Court Case—Probate Court Created—McJunkin-Halleck Tragedy—Court Dockets Written Up—Bredin Appointed Judge—Mohawk Murder Trial—Election of Judges—The Nellis Murder—Duff Trial—Constable Ferguson Killed—Court of 1853—Election of McGuffin—Cooper Murder Trial—Addlington Murder Trial—Hockenbury Trial—Schugart-Martin Trials—Constitution of 1873—Judicial Contest of 1884—Arrest of Counterfeiters—Harbison-Monks Baby Case—Lee Murder Trial—Hasler Murder—Judicial Contest of 1893—Election of 1902—Catherine Miller Case—McGrady Trial—The Hoffman Case—Ground Hog Case—The Kreditch Murder—McLaughlin-Hemphill Tragedy—The Schmidt Murder—The Bennett Riot—The Bench; Biographical Notice—The Bar—Biographical Notice—The Butler Bar in 1908.

For some time after the erection of Butler County the legal affairs of the district were administered by the courts and the attorneys of Pittsburg, Butler County being attached to Allegheny County, for administrative purposes and composing a part of the Fifth judicial district. Since the beginning of the administration of justice in the county, many men have sat on the bench, and many more have appeared as attorneys at the bar and as prosecutors and defenders in a long list of cases that go to make up the civil and criminal docket of her courts. The early judges and attorneys compare favorably with the bench and bar of today in point of learning and ability. The early judges were usually men of education, dignified, courteous, and always gentlemen. The reading of law books was limited and as their libraries were usually small, they were unable to draw the nice distinctions which enter into the mysteries of the practice of the profession today. In the absence of law and precedent they fell back on their common sense, which is the basis of all law, and the records made by these early jurists are bright lights in the history of the country.

The early lawyer was handicapped in the same manner as the jurist, and it was his custom to find a principle to fit the case, or a precedent, and failing in either to rely on impassioned eloquence to convince the jury, more susceptible then than now to the almost irresistible influence of magnetic oratory. Politics and the law were closely allied in those days and the early lawyers were good speakers on the stump as well as eloquent advocates before the bar, and when they assembled at the county seats their tilts in court, and out, were listened to with admiration by their friends. They were usually a hard-worked set of men. Until the advent of the stage-coach they were compelled to ride the circuits on horseback, journeying from county to county as their duties called them, undergoing many hardships and oftentimes in danger. The lawyer was usually his own clerk and he was compelled to write out his briefs in longhand, with a goose-quill pen, and oftentimes during the session of the court, spent the entire night in preparation of legal papers and documents, which are today turned over to the skillful stenographer and typewriter. There were no printed blanks in those days and all forms of legal papers, documents, deeds and conveyances, had to be written with the pen and involved an immense amount of labor.

As might be expected from their surroundings, the lawyers of the early day were men of intellect, self-reliance, and marked individuality, and filled with the idea of being leaders among their fellow men. In fact, the early lawyer was always a politician and he was compelled to take an active part in the political affairs of his district. Butler County produced her share of this class of men among her pioneers, as witness the names of Col. John Purviance, Gen. William Ayers, Samuel A. Purviance, John Nelson Purviance, Samuel A. Gilmore, George W. Smith, Charles Craven Sullivan, and others who were prominent in the county in the first fifty years of her existence.

The forties and fifties produced another set of men who were prominent in state and national affairs and who took a leading rank among the legal profession of the state, in the latter half of the century. The names of Hon. Ebenezer McJunkin, Louis Z. Mitchell, Hon. Charles McCandless, and Col. John M. Thompson form a galaxy that had few equals and no superiors in the courts of western Pennsylvania.

EARLY SHERIFFS OF THE COUNTY.

The early officials of Butler County were a self-reliant lot of men of vigorous body and mind, and trained to the hardships of a frontier and backwoods life. They had a rough set of men to deal with, as is shown in Brackenridge's narrative, but they had the physical ability to cope with the emergencies. John McCandless, the first sheriff of the county, was said to be a man without fear, and it was something unusual for the sheriff or the deputy to carry arms.

James McKee, who was the fifth sheriff of the county, never carried a weapon or a pair of handcuffs.

James Gilmore Campbell, who was sheriff of Butler County in 1843, was a man of great physical strength and undoubted loyalty to his country. On one occasion a stranger who was visiting in the town was discussing politics in front of the old court house with a party of men and took occasion to express his disgust for the Republican form of government, and his preference for the government of England. Campbell promptly knocked him down, and then informed him that if he wished to express tory opinions the best place for him was across the Canadian line, where he had come from.

One of the sheriffs in the fifties, it is said, was deficient in education, and thinking that he would please the court he always attempted to write his official returns in the Latin terms used in court practice. During one of the sessions of court presided over by Judge McGuffin, the court issued a process for the arrest of a witness who had failed to answer a subpoena. The papers were placed in the hands of the sheriff and the party was traced to Muddy Creek Valley, where the sheriff found him sitting on a stump, in the midst of a swamp. The swamp had overflowed with water and there was no way of getting at the fugitive except by a boat. The sheriff returned to Butler and made a return of the writ on the back of which he made the following endorsement to the effect that the party named in the writ was "In swampum, up stumpum, non-est-cumatum." This return convulsed the court and the members of the bar, but Judge McGuffin gravely received it and discharged the sheriff from further duties in the case.

EARLY COURTS OF THE COUNTY.

The first Court of Common Pleas and Quarter Sessions held in Butler County, under the Act of April 2, 1802, was presided over by Hon. Jesse Moore, who was a fine specimen of judicial dignity and a great stickler for the observance of court rules. Judge Moore was a gentleman of the colonial pattern, mild, faithful and firm, who administered justice for justice sake. He had a high sense of the dignity to be observed among the members of the bar outside, as well as in the court room, which, however, was often upset by the fun loving attorneys.

Henry M. Brackenridge, who came to Butler from Pittsburg in 1803, as clerk to Gen. William Ayres, the first prothonotary of the county, and who was also one of the early members of the Butler County bar, being admitted to practice in 1815, in his "Recollections of the West," thus describes in part the first court held in Butler:

"The first court held in Butler drew the whole population to the town, some on account of business, some to make business, but the greater part from idle curiosity. They were at that time chiefly Irish, who had all the characteristics of the nation. A log cabin, just raised and covered, but without windows, sash or doors or daubing, was prepared for the hall of justice. A carpenter's bench, with three chairs upon it, was the judge's seat. The bar of Pittsburg attended, and the presiding judge, a stiff, formal and pedantic old bachelor, took his seat, supported by two associate judges, who were common farmers, one of whom was blind of an eye. The hall was barely sufficient to contain the bench, bar, jurors and constables. But few of the spectators could be accommodated on the lower floor, the only one yet laid; many, therefore, clambered up the walls, and placing their hands and feet in the open interstices, between the logs, hung there suspended like so many enormous Madagascar bats." * * *

John McQuiston Smith, who was born in Butler Borough in 1828, and is now probably the oldest living native born citizen of the town, has an excellent recollection of people and events previous to 1850. He says that the log cabin above mentioned stood on east Diamond Street on the site of the Nixon Hotel. As he remembers the building, it was a two-story log affair, with a hall-way through the middle. This building was used as a court house until the first court house was built. A pig-pen, belonging to a man named Bowen, which stood on the same lot about where the residence of Clarence Walker now stands, was on the occasion of this court used as a temporary jail. Mr. Smith dug the foundation for the Walker house in 1851, and he remembers tearing up the foundation of an old pig-pen that stood in the alley. The first actual jail erected in Butler was a log building that stood on the corner of the Vogeley Alley and South Washington Street, on the ground now occupied by the residence of Mrs. Shultz.

ORIGIN OF "THE BUCKWHEAT COUNTY."

The early attorneys who came here from Pittsburg to attend upon the sessions of the court were much given to telling stories and cracking jests about the poverty of Butler County and her people. It was these same lawyers who, in later years, when the Butler Hotel tables added to their bills of fare the toothsome buckwheat cake, conferred upon Butler County the title of "the Buckwheat County," which name has been perpetuated up to the present time.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE FIRST QUARTER SESSIONS COURT.

The first record of the Court of Quarter Session is dated February 13, 1804. The commission of Hon. Jesse Moore as president judge of the Court of Common Pleas of the counties of Butler, Beaver, Mercer, Crawford, and Erie, was read, as well as those issued to Samuel Findley and John Parker as associate judges of Butler County. The following attorneys were then admitted to practice for the courts, on motion of Steel Semple, William Irwine, Alexander W. Foster, William Wilkins, Isaac Mason, Henry Haslett, Thomas Collins, Henry Baldwin, Cunningham S. Semple, John Gilmore and James Mountain. Steel Semple was then admitted upon motion of Thomas Collins. On February 14, Joseph Shannon was enrolled as a member of this bar, and William Nellis and William McDonald were appointed constables.

FIRST GRAND JURY.

The first grand jury empanelled in the county was at the May Session of court, 1804, at which the same judges presided. From the number of indictments for assault found at this term, it is inferred that the pioneers of Butler County were imbued with the same spirit of combat that is found among the foreign element in Lyndora in 1908.

CIVIL CASES TRIED.

The first civil case tried in the county was that of Sturgeon's lessee and Robert Willowby vs. Thompson. The suit was for possession of four hundred acres of land, the outcome being the confession of "lease, entry and ouster," plaintiff suffering non-suit and jury paid by William Ayres. This case was tried at the May term, 1804, before Judge Moore and his associates. On May 19th a "deed poll" was acknowledged from John McCandless, sheriff, to the president and directors of the bank of North America for twenty tracts of land in this county.

TAVERN LICENSES GRANTED.

The granting of tavern licenses seems to have been one of the duties imposed on the early Courts of the county. At the May Session, 1804, John Moser, Robert Graham, George Bowers, and William Brown, of the town of Butler, and Guy Hilliard, Robert Boggs and Matthew White, of Connoquenessing Township were recommended to the court as proper persons to keep tavern and licenses were ordered to be issued to them. As the population of the town of Butler in 1804 was less than five hundred, the number of licenses granted to hotel keepers would appear to be excessive under present conditions. In August of the same year tavern licenses were granted to Robert Reed of Slippery Rock, David Sutton of Middlesex, and Benjamin Garvin of Connoquenessing Township.

DIVISION OF TOWNSHIPS.

Previous to this time Butler County was subdivided into four townships, viz.: Buffalo, Middlesex, Connoquenessing, and Slippery Rock. In 1803 six election districts were created in the county, the commissioners being Jacob Mechling, James Bovard and Matthew White. At the August term of court, 1804, the county was divided into thirteen townships, as follows: Cranberry, Middlesex, Buffalo, Connoquenessing, Butler, Clearfield, Muddyereek, Center, Donegal, Slippery Rock, Parker, Mercer and Venango. Nine of these townships were approximately eight miles square, and four of them in the northern part of the county were irregular in shape. During the years intervening between 1804 and 1853, six additional townships were erected, making in all nineteen. A line extending from the west line of Butler Township eastward to the Connoquenessing Creek divided the original Butler into north and south Butler. Connoquenessing Township was divided by a north and south line, and Muddy creek similarly divided, the eastern half being given the name of Franklin. The eastern half of Slippery Rock Township was set apart as Cherry, and the other townships created were Allegheny, Washington, and Fairview.

CATTLE MARKS REGISTERED.

On account of their cattle ranging the woods in the early days, the settlers adopted marks for the purpose of identifying their stock. At the August term of court in 1804, Benjamin Zerber registered his cattle mark, which had then been in use for five years. The mark is described as follows: "A crop of the right or off ears to wit: one-fourth of the ear cut off."

THE COURT IN 1805-1806.

The court was formed in 1805 with Hon. Jesse Moore as president judge and John Parker and James Bovard associates. John McCandless, the first sheriff of the county, took the oath of office in October of that year. In February, 1806, associate judges Findley, Parker, and Bovard were present, and they, with Judge Moore, formed the court. Among the jurors at that term of court were Philip Hartman, Robert Leason, A. McMahan, and Thomas Dougan.

Hon. Jasper Yeates, Judge of the Supreme Court, was present in September, 1806, and judge of the Circuit Court of this county, and Hon. Thomas Smith presided here in the same capacity in September, 1807. Hon. H. H. Breckenridge of Pittsburg presided as circuit judge at the September Session of court in 1808. March 6, 1809, John Gilmore, who was the first prosecuting attorney of the county, or deputy attorney general, resigned, and Charles Wilkins was appointed to fill the vacancy.

Chief Justice William Tilghman presided as circuit judge in September, 1809, and in 1810 John Gilmore was appointed prosecutor.

CONTEMPT OF COURT CASES.

The early judges and officers of the court appeared to have a due regard for the gentler sex. The court records of May 11, 1811, show that Sarah Shorts was adjudged to be in contempt of court for not obeying a subpoena in the case of Hays vs. Ash. There is no record that she was ever punished for the disobedience, and it is said that her sex saved her from the wrath of the court. At the November session in 1811 John Elliott, William Downing, Hugh Flemming and Ben. Fletcher had attachments issued against them for not responding to subpoenas and in 1813 this dereliction on the part of witnesses became so common as to make the adoption of stringent measures necessary to secure their attendance.

At the May term of court, in 1815, William Martin was found guilty of an assault on Sheriff Samuel Williamson, while the latter was in the execution of his office, and was fined ten dollars, with three months imprisonment and compelled to furnish a bond of five hundred dollars to keep the peace—especially toward Samuel Williamson, Esq., and to pay all the costs of the prosecution.

Samuel Roberts took his seat as president judge in the court of Butler County November 9, 1818. His associates were Judges Parker and Bovard. The commission of William Wilkins as president judge of the 5th judicial district, of which Butler County was part, was read in open court April 2, 1821.

In October, 1824, Charles Shaler presided as judge with John Parker and James Bovard associates.

PROBATE COURT CREATED.

Owing to deaths occurring among the pioneers probate business was added to the work of the court in this year (1824).

THE M'JUNKIN-HALLECK TRAGEDY.

The year 1824 was marked by an unfortunate tragedy in the county. In the latter part of June, a young man named Franklin B. Halleck, who had been boarding at Mechling's tavern in Butler, left owing a day's board. Mechling swore out a capias, which was placed in the hands of the sheriff, who started in pursuit of Halleck. It appears that Halleck's route lay through what is now Brady Township, and as the sheriff was passing the house of David McJunkin he met the latter, who was just starting on a hunt. He ordered McJunkin to pursue the fugitive, and the latter did so. Overtaking Halleck, McJunkin commanded him to halt. The command being unheeded, McJunkin raised his rifle and fired, the ball striking Halleck near the spine, and inflicting a wound from the effect of which he died eleven days later. McJunkin was arrested on charge of murder. At the trial he was found guilty of voluntary manslaughter and was sentenced to two years confinement at hard labor in the penitentiary at Philadelphia.

COURT DOCKETS WRITTEN UP.

In April, 1828, Judge Shaler ordered a complete index from the continuance docket to be made and a copy of the execution docket from February, 1813, to April, 1824, to be written. An abuse was corrected in January, 1829, when Judge Shaler ordered that no executions could be issued upon a judgment on a bond given to the treasurer for surplus moneys which might become due by purchases of land for taxes until scire facias should first issue. In July of this year William Stewart, clerk of the Orphans' Court, was ordered to make a copy of the Orphans' Court docket from 1803 to July 11, 1829, in a legible hand.

BREDIN APPOINTED JUDGE.

In 1831 John Bredin, of Butler, was appointed judge of the district, and with his associates presided over the courts of Butler County until 1851.

THE COOLY MURDER TRIAL.

September 11, 1833, Robert B. Cooly was found guilty of murder in the second degree and sentenced to seven years in the penitentiary of the western district at Allegheny.

From 1833 to 1840 the records of the court show no cases of special importance. John Parker and James Bovard were associate justices during this period and at the September term, 1840, John Duffy qualified as associate judge, thus placing three Irishmen, all natives of the same county in Ireland, on the bench at the same time.

In November, 1841, John Ray was chosen by the court to fill a vacancy on the board of county commissioners caused by a failure to elect in the preceding October election.

THE MOHAWK TRIAL.

The celebrated trial of the Commonwealth vs. Samuel Mohawk, charged with the murder on Saturday, June 30, 1843, in Slippery Rock Township, of Mrs. James Wigton and her five children, was begun December 13, 1843, before Judges John Bredin and John Duffy and the following named jurors: John Brandon, Isaac Boyer, Henry Barnhart, Robert E. Hays, John Olliver, Robert Hay, Robert Lemmon, Samuel Marshall, George A. Kirkpatrick, John Gilmore, William Cunningham, and John Dull. The trial, which lasted several days, during which forty-eight witnesses were examined, resulted in a verdict of guilty, a sentence of death, and the hanging of the murderer in Butler, March 22, 1844.

The crime for which Mohawk paid the extreme penalty of the law was one of the most horrible in the history of the state, and created such excitement among the people of the entire county that it was only through the most earnest efforts of those upholding the supremacy of the law that a lynching was prevented, and his legal conviction and execution rendered possible. Even after his trial and conviction a posse of citizens was organized in the northern part of the county and started for Butler with the determination to take the prisoner from the authorities and hang him. Word had been received in Butler of the intentions of the party and James G. Campbell, who was then sheriff, with the assistance of the late Judge Ebenezer McJunkin, the late John H. Neglay, and other citizens of the town, organized a garrison and barricaded the jail. They were assisted in this work by Capt. McCall, a retired army officer, who was at that time living in the property recently occupied by St. Paul's Orphans' Home. The party of countrymen came as far as the old Sleppy Tavern on the Sunbury Road, where they were met by a delegation of citizens from Butler, who gave them assurances that the dignity of the law would be maintained and that Mohawk would be executed according to the order of the court. Having their fears allayed, the party disbanded and went to their homes.

Samuel Mohawk, who was a Cornplanter Indian, was born December 25, 1807, on the Cattaraugus Reservation in New York. He attended a Quaker school in his youth and subsequently engaged in hunting and farming. He was married about 1832 to Lydia Kypp, from whom he secured a divorce, and he afterwards married Sara Silverheels, a member of his tribe. On the day before the murder he made his appearance in Butler, where he put up at Brinker's Tavern, and spent his time drinking. It is supposed that he came to Butler from Pittsburg, as was the custom of the Indians at the headwaters of the Allegheny River to go to Pittsburg on rafts and to return to their homes either by way of the old Franklin through the western part of Butler County, or over the Pittsburg and Butler Pike through Butler. On the same evening he left Butler, taking the stage for the Stone House Tavern, at the intersection of the Franklin Pike and the Butler and Mercer Pike. The same evening he appeared at a tavern in Prospect, and on account of his unruly and ugly disposition caused by drinking, he was thrown out of the house. He is supposed to have spent the night in the vicinity of the Stone House, and the next morning he proceeded to the house of James Wigton. What occurred there is best told in the words of his confession of the crime committed by him. It is as follows:

" Opened the door, entered and saw the woman, asked her for a ax; she said she had none; then asked her for a knife, which she gave me, and I cut at her, and I think I hit her on the arm. She attempted to escape, went out of doors, I followed, she returned into the house and tried to close the door on me, but I pushed it in with both hands and entered. She went out again, I followed and caught her about five rods from the door. She succeeded in taking the knife from me and threw me, but she held the knife while I held her wrists. In the struggle the knife cut the back of my head, when I pushed the woman off and struck her with my fist. She said, ' you mustn't kill—I'll give you money,' but I took up a stick of some size and struck her on the head, when she fell. I then took a stone, struck her and thought she was dead. I went into the house with the same stone, saw a child of five or six years of age which I struck and killed; saw another small child in the cradle, which I killed at once, then heard a child crying up stairs, went up with a stick and struck the three children on the head and next went to the spring to get a drink; went back to the house and heard a child crying up stairs, got a large stick, and went up stairs, struck one of the children, on the large bed, that was moaning, and it made no more noise. On coming down, saw the woman moving and struck her with a stone on the head three times."⁷

At the very time that this fearful crime was being committed, James Wigton, the husband and father of the family, was at his father's house, less than a mile distant. The murder was discovered before his return by Lemuel Davis, who, with his wife and son, had arrived at the Wigton home to help him with some hoeing. The alarm was given and the entire neighborhood was aroused. Suspicion at once pointed to Samuel Mohawk, who had passed Joseph Kennedy's house that morning and had thrown a stone at a young son of Kennedy's. Pursuit was organized, and the murderer was captured, after a struggle, at the house of Philip Kiester, of which he had taken forcible possession, after terrorizing and putting to flight the women, there being no men at home.

After his capture he was taken to the Wigton home, where he confessed his crime. A determination on the part of those present to lynch him was only overcome by the strong appeals of a few of the cooler headed present. After being turned over to Sheriff Campbell, he was taken to Butler, lodged in jail, and in the course of a few months tried for the murder, found guilty, sentenced, and executed in the manner set forth. Although Mohawk confessed his crime, and made a profession of religion before his execution, his body was denied burial in any of the cemeteries of Butler, and it was interred in a secluded spot near the St. Paul's Orphans' Home, in what is now called Oakland Place in the northeastern section of Butler Borough.

THE NELLIS MURDER.

In January, 1844, Elijah Nellis was tried for the murder of his wife, Margaret, whom he had strangled. He was convicted of murder in the second degree and sentenced for twelve years to the penitentiary.

COURT OF 1845.

In June, 1845, Christian Buhl qualified as associate judge, and with Judges Bredin and Duffy, composed the court.

ELECTION OF JUDGES.

A Constitutional amendment was adopted in 1850, making the office of president judge and associate judges elective, and fixing the term of the former at ten years, and the latter at five years. This amendment was made effective by an act of the Legislature approved April 15, 1851, and providing for the election of presiding and associate judges.

Daniel Agnew was appointed judge of the district in 1851, and elected under the new law in 1853, for a term of ten years.

THE DUFF MURDER TRIAL.

November 5, 1851, John Duff was tried for the murder of his twin brother, William. The State was represented by the late John H. Negley, then deputy attorney general for the county, while Smith and Mitchell appeared for the defense. The evidence developed the fact that the accused had repeatedly made threats against his brother's life. A verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree resulted, followed by a motion for a new trial, which was granted in January, 1852. At the second trial the murderer withdrew his plea of not guilty and pleaded guilty to murder in the second degree. He was sentenced to the penitentiary for a term of eleven and one-half years, and served his full time.

CONSTABLE FERGUSON KILLED.

In 1853 Constable Ferguson was killed in what is now Jefferson Township, while attempting to arrest Casper Lampartner. Lampartner and his wife, Emeranza, were tried for the murder at the May term of court. The former was convicted, but afterwards made his escape from jail and was never recaptured. His wife was acquitted. The state was represented in this case by John H. Negley.

THE COURT IN 1853.

In June, 1853, the court consisted of Hon. Daniel Agnew, president judge, and John McCandless and Samuel Marshall, associate judges. The particular event of this term of court, which is remembered by the older citizens, was the charge of Judge Agnew to the jury that tried the case of the Commonwealth vs. Francis Croft. Croft was indicted for plowing up a burial ground, but owing to a defect in the act of the assembly of 1849, providing punishment for such desecration, the judge directed the jury to bring in a verdict of acquittal. This, however, did not prevent the learned judge from expressing his views on the question of desecrating grave yards.

THE COOPER MURDER TRIAL.

George Cooper, who was the keeper of a hotel at Glade Mills, became involved in a quarrel with Matthew Ramsey on the night of October 9, 1856. A crowd had gathered at the hotel on election night, and during the evening Ramsey had become boisterous. In endeavoring to preserve order in his house, Mr. Cooper attempted to eject Ramsey and in the scuffle struck him on the left temple. Ramsey died from the effects of the blow, and Cooper was indicted for murder, tried before Judge Agnew, and acquitted.

A change was made in the associate judges in 1856, and Jacob Mechling, Jr., and Thomas Stevenson took their places on the bench, with Judge Agnew.

There appears to have been no events of importance recorded until June, 1860, when a record was made of the first conviction of the county for selling liquor without a license. In December, 1861, James Mitchell and James Kerr were the associates of Judge Agnew.

M'GUFFIN ELECTED JUDGE.

In December, 1863, Hon. Lawrence L. McGuffin, who had been elected to succeed Judge Agnew, presided, his associates being Judges Kerr and Mitchell. Another change was made in the associate judges in December, 1866, when Joseph Cummings and Thomas Garvey qualified.

THE ADDLINGTON MURDER TRIAL.

The trial of John B. Addlington, charged with the murder of Sydney B. Cunningham and Mr. Teeples at a dance in Portersville, on the night of December 25, 1866, was begun March 6, 1867, before Judges McGuffin, Cummings and Garvey. The state was represented by W. H. H. Riddle, E. McJunkin and L. Z. Mitchell, and the defendant by C. McCarthy, Charles McCandless, John N. Purviance, John M. Thompson, and T. E. J. Lyon. The trial continued until March 21, and resulted in a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree. In 1868, upon a rehearing, Addlington pleaded guilty to murder in the second degree, and was sentenced to a term of twenty-five years in the penitentiary. After serving six years, he received a pardon, owing partly to the fact that others concerned in the tragedy had never been brought to trial. Addlington died about 1898 at the Soldiers' Home, in Erie, Pennsylvania.

Cunningham and Teeples, who were the innocent victims of this tragedy, were residents of New Castle, and were attending the dance, which was held at a hotel in Portersville. It appeared that Addlington was jealous of the attentions paid by one of his neighbors to Mrs. Addlington, and that he went to the party for the purpose of taking vengeance on the destroyer of his home. A fight started in the office of the hotel, the lights were put out, and in the darkness a free-for-all melee occurred. When order was restored, Cunningham and Teeples were found on the floor, both mortally wounded.

THE HOCKENBERRY TRIAL.

The trial of Zachary Taylor Hockenberry for the murder of Nancy Ann McCandless, October 3, 1868, took place before Judge McGuffin and associates, April 19, 1869. The Commonwealth was represented by District Attorney John M. Greer and E. McJunkin, and the accused's attorneys were John M. Thompson and Charles McCandless. A verdict of guilty was returned April 28, a sentence of death was pronounced September 10th by Judge McGuffin, and carried into effect December 7th, 1869, when Hockenberry was hanged at the Butler jail. His crime was caused by jealousy. Intending to disfigure the face of Miss McCandless, he fired at her with a rifle through a window, while the family were sitting at supper. His aim was too true, however, and instead of disfiguring the object of his affections, he killed her instantly.

SCHUGART-MARTIN TRIALS.

In July, 1869, Philopoena Schugart was found guilty of murder in poisoning her husband, Jacob Schugart, of Butler Borough. Owing to there being some doubt of her sanity, the death penalty was not inflicted, and she was sent to Dixmont Asylum.

In the following January, Joseph Martin, charged with being her accomplice, was acquitted. The Commonwealth was represented in these two cases by District Attorney John M. Greer.

CONSTITUTION OF 1873.

The Constitution of 1873 provided that "whenever a county shall contain forty thousand inhabitants it shall constitute a separate judicial district and shall elect one judge learned in the law and the general assembly shall provide for additional judges as the business of such district may require. Counties containing a population less than is sufficient to constitute separate districts shall be formed into convenient single districts, or, if necessary, may be attached to contiguous districts as the general assembly may provide. The office of associate judge not learned in the law, is abolished in counties forming separate districts, etc." In accordance with this amendment, Butler County having more than forty thousand inhabitants, was erected into the Seventh Judicial District in 1874, with Lawrence County attached. Associate judges were elected until 1885, when the question arising, the supreme court decided that Butler County being a separate judicial district and entitled to the presiding judgeship, the office of associate judge was abolished in the county. The business of the courts of the Seventeenth Judicial District having increased to such an extent that an additional judge was necessary, the Legislature of 1874 passed an act creating an additional law judge for Butler and Lawrence Counties, and Hon. Charles McCandless was accordingly appointed additional law judge to serve until the next succeeding election.

In the fall of 1874 Hon. E. McJunkin and James Bredin were elected judges for the district and took their places on the bench January, 1875. By casting lots Judge McJunkin became president judge of the district and Judge Bredin additional law judge. Judge McJunkin had resigned his seat in Congress to accept the office of judge, and Col. John M. Thompson was appointed to fill that vacancy.

THE JUDICIAL CONTEST OF 1884.

The candidates for judicial honors in 1884 were James Bredin, John M. Greer, Ebenezer McJunkin, of Butler, and John McMichael and Aaron L. Hazen, of New Castle. The vote of the two counties was as follows: John McMichael, 7,252; Aaron L. Hazen, 7,199; John M. Greer, 7,054; James Bredin, 5,345, and Ebenezer McJunkin, 3,784. The returns of each county showed that James Bredin received 4,457 and John M. Greer 4,288 votes in Butler County alone, and on this showing the former claimed to have been elected judge of the Seventeenth District in opposition to the certificate of the canvassing board, who declared John McMichael and Aaron L. Hazen, who were the Lawrence County candidates, the judges-elect.

The political canvass that preceded this election was one of the bitterest in the history of Butler County. Judge Bredin was a candidate for reelection on the Democratic ticket, and Judge McJunkin, who had been a candidate at the Republican primaries for reelection, was defeated by John M. Greer. Judge McJunkin then ran as an independent candidate at the fall election with the result that all the Butler County candidates were defeated. Owing to the contention arising that Butler County alone constituted the Seventeenth Judicial District, and that she had a right to elect at least one law judge for that district under the act of August 7, 1883, Judge Bredin began a contest. The matter was heard before a court which convened at Butler December 22, 1884, and which was composed of Hon. Henry Hice of the Thirty-sixth Judicial District, Hon. James B. Neale of the Thirty-third Judicial District, and Hon. Samuel S. Mahard, of the Thirty-fifth Judicial District. The question submitted was, whether Butler County alone constituted the Seventeenth Judicial District, and her right to elect at least one law judge for that district under the act of August 7, 1883. In that act Butler County was set apart as the Seventeenth district; Lawrence County was attached for judicial purposes, and the election of two judges, one of whom must reside in New Castle, was ordered. The election of November, 1884, was held under this act. Judges Hice and Mahard held that Butler County, under the act of 1883, did not have the right to elect one judge for her courts, but that with Lawrence County she should elect two judges, whose jurisdiction was equal in both counties. Judge Neale dissented from this opinion and so the petition of James Bredin was dismissed. No appeals having been taken, commissions were issued to the Judges McMichael and Hazen. Judge Hazen became the president judge of the district, and resided in Butler, while Judge Me-

Michael became the additional law judge, and resided in New Castle.

THE ARREST OF COUNTERFEITERS.

During the latter part of the year 1887, and the beginning of 1888, a great deal of counterfeit money was placed in circulation in the northern part of Butler County. After considerable work on the part of the secret service officers, United States Marshall McSweeney and deputies acting on previous information, made a raid in the northern part of the county in February, 1888, and succeeded in capturing a number of persons engaged in counterfeiting, with the appliances used in their illegal business. Several of those arrested were well-known residents of Butler County and the arrests were the sensation and talk of that year. The men were all taken to Pittsburg, where their trial took place and a number of them sent to United States prisons; others against whom there was no evidence to connect them with the crime, were discharged.

THE HARBISON-MONKS BABY CASE.

The celebrated baby case got into the courts of Butler County in 1887 and was not closed until the following year. Robert Harbison and his wife were residents of the southeastern section of the county and connected with prominent families. Following the birth of their child trouble arose between the two, the matter coming into the court in August, 1887. On the order of Judge Hazen, who was on the bench at that time, the child was placed in the father's care. A few days later, however, Mrs. Harbison succeeded in abducting her child and fled with him to Kansas. She was assisted in getting away by her brothers, Martin and John Monks, and Wendell Hickey. The abduction was followed by the arrest of the two Monks boys and Hickey for contempt of court, but they were released on bail so that they could produce the child in court. On the 12th of May, 1888, they produced both the infant and the mother.

The legal battle that followed was one of the most interesting witnessed in the courts of Butler County in the last quarter of the century. The father was represented by Hon. Charles McCandless and Col. John M. Thompson, while ex-Judge E. McJunkin, James M. Galbreath, and S. F. Bowser represented the mother, infant and young men. After a hearing Judge Hazen discharged the writ of habeas corpus and remanded the defendants to the sheriff's custody, except the infant, which was ordered to be placed in the keeping of its father. At this point the mother declared she would never surrender the child, which she was holding in her arms at the time, and the judge ordered Sheriff O. C. Redic to enforce the order. He accordingly went to Mrs. Harbison and demanded the child, which she refused to surrender. Not wishing to get into a struggle with the woman in the courtroom, Sheriff Redic refused to proceed further, and the court then authorized him to deputize some one to carry out its orders. Acting on this suggestion, Sheriff Redic summoned the child's father. Having this power conferred upon him, Harbison attempted to grasp the infant from its mother's arms, but the frantic mother held on stoutly, and he was unable to carry out his purpose. At this point in the proceedings the scene in the courtroom was verging on a riot. Public sympathy was with the mother and infant, and a sentiment was growing among the large crowd of men assembled in the courtroom that boded no good for the court and the officials who attempted to carry out the inhumane order. Strong men left the court in tears, pitying the law that could countenance such barbarity, and even the lawyers for the prosecution became abashed and asked the court to direct Mrs. Harbison's brothers to take the babe from their sister. Luckily the judge did not respond to this request, and for a little while there was calm in the courtroom. Another writ was issued ordering the surrender of the child, but the brave mother defied the court and was ordered to jail. Along with her they sent her two brothers and young Hickey. The case was taken up again on Saturday, May 14th, and when the plaintiff arrived in Butler to continue the case against his wife, he met here a crowd of angry neighbors and a large crowd of determined citizens whose looks portended trouble of a serious nature if any attempt was made to force Mrs. Harbison to surrender her baby. The incarceration of the mother and baby in the local jail had been the talk of the streets for two days and the angry crowd that had assembled were on the verge of riot. Harbison's determination to obtain his child was somewhat shaken in the forenoon, but his friends and counsel urged him on. Mrs. Harbison and her baby were again brought into court, and the determined woman, hearing the rumor that was current that the sheriff would be compelled to take the child from her, had procured a chain and padlock, with which she secured the child to herself, declaring that if it was taken from her it would be over her dead body. When court adjourned at noon mother and baby were again returned to jail while the situation in the courtroom and on the streets was most critical. Open threats of violence were made and the angry mob were determined that if Harbison sent his wife and baby to prison again he would not get out of the town that night and that the woman and baby would not remain in prison over Sunday. Some of the cooler-headed friends of Harbison got hold of him at the noon hour and persuaded him to dismiss his counsel, which he did, and later he became a client of John M. Greer. Mr. Greer became active in his endeavors to settle the case and when court called at two o'clock he asked that his client's petition and all rulings

BUTLER COUNTY COURT HOUSE OF 1853

BUTLER COUNTY COURT HOUSE
OF 1877

COUNTRY CLUB HOUSE, BUTLER

BOYDSTOWN RESERVOIR OF THE BUTLER
WATER CO., BUTLER

I. O. O. F. BUILDING, BUTLER

BUTLER COUNTY JAIL, BUTLER

under it be set aside, and the mother and infant, the two Monks boys and young Hickey discharged from jail. It was a welcome denouement for Judge Hazen and he did not neglect to express his gratification at the pleasant turn of affairs. The baby in this case is now a prominent farmer in Clinton Township.

THE LEE MURDER TRIAL.

The trial of Thomas E. Lee for the murder of John McCall at Evans City on the night of October 31, 1889, commenced in December following. The state was represented by Hon. Charles McCandless and District Attorney Charles A. McPherrin, while Thompson and Son and W. A. Forquer appeared for the defendant. The evidence showed that McCall was killed while participating at a ball given by a secret order known as the Junior Order of United American Mechanics. Lee was found guilty of murder in the second degree and sentenced to a term of six and one-half years of solitary confinement in the penitentiary.

JAIL DELIVERY IN 1892.

A jail delivery occurred on the night of March 4, 1892, during the term of Sheriff William Brown, the escaping criminals being James F. Mills, the murderer of Peter Dugan, with James Brittain and Joseph Gibson, colored, and Jesse Smith, T. J. Black and Charles Miller. Brittain was re-arrested at Callery and Black at Renfrew the day after, while Smith was caught on March 6th. The capture of Mills was affected about a week later after an exciting chase through the northern part of the state. Mills was returned to Butler where his trial took place on March 21st. The capture of the other criminals was also finally effected.

THE MILLS MURDER TRIAL.

Peter Dugan, who was a pumper on the Welsh farm in Connoquenessing Township, was killed on the evening of December 22, 1891, while sleeping in his boiler-house. Suspicion pointed to James F. Mills, who was a pumper on the adjoining lease and who had been seen with Dugan late that afternoon. The two men had been at Renfrew and had been drinking. A ten-year old boy, who was sleeping in the boiler-house with Dugan at the time, was awakened by a noise and saw Mills leave the boiler-house. Dugan's head had been crushed by a blacksmith's hammer. Mills was arrested on the charge of murder and tried at the March term of court, 1892. The Commonwealth was represented by District Attorney Aaron E. Reiber and S. F. Bowser, while Forquer, McQuistion, McCandless and Thompson defended the accused. The last named lawyer protested that the court was not legally convened, raising the point that unless a case was in progress, at the close of the second week of a quarter session's term, the term could not be extended beyond two weeks. In proof of this claim he presented a ruling that was made in 1850, when another murderer named Mills was brought to justice. Attorney Reiber and Judge Hazen opposed this logic, and the court ordered the jury to be impaneled. Two days were taken up in securing a jury, and several days more in the trial of the case. The counsel for the defense succeeded in saving the prisoner's life, but they could not save him from the penitentiary, where he was sent for twelve years. Mills' plea in his own defense was, that he was drunk and had no knowledge of committing any crime, and his attorneys set up the plea of "acute alcoholic mania," which probably had some effect on the jury. Mills completed his sentence in the penitentiary and is still living.

THE MURDER OF MRS. HASLER.

The murder of Mrs. Hasler and her daughter Mrs. Flora Martin by Harper Whitmire took place near St. Joe Station December 5, 1893. Whitmire was a son-in-law of Mrs. Hasler, and the evening previous to the murder had been visiting at the Hasler home. After committing the crime Whitmire walked to the residence of his brother near Greece City, where he told what he had done. He then went to the barn and committed suicide, thus relieving the county of the onus and cost of the prosecution, the only legal action being taken by the coroner.

COURT ORDERS.

In 1899 Judge Greer made an order changing the time of holding the June term of Quarter Sessions Court, from the 1st Monday of June to the 3rd Monday of May, and the time for the meeting of the grand jury and the holding of License Court was changed to correspond with the Quarter Sessions Court in May. Previous to this time the License Court had been held in March and the new arrangement caused the closing of the hotel bars in the county on the 1st of April to the 1st of July in that year. Under the new order the hotel licenses did not go into effect until the 1st of July. This order of court was effective until June 11, 1903, when Judge Galbreath made an order changing the time of holding Quarter Sessions Court back to the 1st Monday of June, and the time for holding License Court to the March term.

THE JUDICIAL CONTEST OF 1893.

The death of Judge McMichael in 1892 caused a vacancy on that bench and Hon. Norman L. Martin of New Castle was appointed assistant law judge to serve until the next succeeding election. At the election held in November of that year, Judge Martin was opposed by John M. Greer, of Butler and the latter was elected. In the following year, 1893, Butler County alone was designated as the Seventh Judicial District, and Lawrence County as the Fifty-third District. Judge Greer thus became president judge of Butler County and Judge Hazen returned to Lawrence County as president judge of that district.

THE ELECTION OF 1902.

In the spring of 1902 Judge Greer was candidate for the nomination of his party and was opposed by James M. Galbreath. The campaign will go down in history as one of the hardest primary election fights in the county. The Democratic nominee for judge was Hon. Levingstone McQuisition, who was opposed for the nomination by Everett L. Ralston and J. D. Marshall. At the election held in November James M. Galbreath was elected.

THE CATHERINE MILLER CASE.

For five years following the Mills case there were no murder trials in the courts of Butler County. On June 9, 1898, Mrs. Catherine Miller was indicted for the murder of her husband, John W. Miller, of Center Township. The case was called for trial on the 17th of June before Judge Greer and the defendant, through her attorney, J. D. Marshall, entered a plea of guilty of murder in the second degree, which was accepted by the court. She was sentenced to twelve years in the penitentiary, but only lived about six months after her sentence. The circumstances of the case are as follows: John W. Miller was a farmer, about seventy years of age, and lived with his wife, who was a few years his junior, on a small farm in Center township. One morning a neighbor called at the house on an errand and found Miller lying at the foot of the cellar stairs in a helpless condition, his head terribly cut and other marks of violence upon him. Miller died a few hours later from the effects of his injuries but before his death told that Mrs. Miller had pushed him down the cellar stairs. The arrest of Mrs. Miller followed and a court trial was avoided by the defendant entering a plea of guilty of murder in the second degree.

THE M'GRADY MURDER TRIAL.

A murder trial that attracted attention and created much sympathy for the defendant was that of James McGrady in 1902. McGrady, who was a policeman in Butler Borough, shot John Miller while attempting to make an arrest in the Island district on the night of December 1, 1902. Miller, whose real name was John Bitte, died in the hospital the next day and McGrady was arrested on the charge of manslaughter. The case was called for trial December 10, 1902, and December 12th the jury returned a verdict of guilty. On account of extenuating circumstances in the case Judge Galbreath sentenced McGrady to serve two years imprisonment in the county jail.

THE HOFFMAN CASE.

One of the most peculiar cases ever tried in the county was that of Henry Hoffman, of Connoquenessing Borough, who was indicted on May 21, 1903, on the charge of manslaughter. Hoffman is a member of a religious sect which believes that disease can be cured by the laying on of hands and prayer, and that the services of doctors and the use of medicines are unnecessary. In May, 1903, several children in the Hoffman family were taken ill with scarlet fever, and on the 18th of the month Myrl, a son, aged two and a half years, died, it was alleged, without medical attention, the father contenting himself with the laying on of hands and prayer. The matter was reported to the county authorities who had Hoffman indicted and the case was called for trial on the 16th of September. District Attorney John R. Henninger represented the commonwealth and S. F. Bowser the defendant. Judge James M. Galbreath was on the bench. The case was stubbornly contested on both sides, and on September 19th the jury returned a verdict of guilty of manslaughter, as indicted, and recommended the defendant to the mercy of the court. The same day Mr. Bowser, for the defendant, made a motion for a new trial and the arrest of judgment, pending the hearing of the motion. Hoffman was released on bail, and on the 4th of August, 1904, Judge Galbreath handed down an opinion refusing the new trial. Hoffman has never been called into court for sentence and the case remains open on the docket.

THE GROUND HOG CASE.

What is known as the Ground Hog Case in the criminal courts of the county originated in Venango Township. Newton Tannehill, Howard Rumbaugh and Fred Hall were out in the fields shooting at a mark with a rifle. Tannehill saw an object moving behind some bushes at a long range, which had the appearance of a ground hog, and fired at it. When the party went to look for their quarry, they found that the object they had seen was an Italian named Ajanto Isabella, and that he was fatally wounded. The shooting took place on the 5th of September, 1904, and the Italian died the same day. On the 9th of September the grand jury returned a true bill against the hunters on the charge of murder, and the case was called for trial on the 16th. It became apparent early in the trial that the shooting was purely accidental, and a verdict of acquittal was rendered.

A BRUTAL MURDER.

The murder of Mary Kreditch by her husband, Max Kreditch, was one of the most brutal crimes ever committed in Butler County. Mrs. Kreditch kept a boarding house in Lyndora and her husband spent his time drinking. On the night of December 20th, 1906, Kreditch became enraged because his wife reproved him for drinking and struck her a terrible blow on the head, killing her almost instantly. He displayed the greatest indifference when arrested and told the officers that the woman was his wife, and that he could do as he pleased with her. Kreditch was placed on trial March 16th, 1907, before Judge Galbreath, and the same day the jury returned a verdict of guilty of murder in the second degree. The case for the commonwealth was conducted by District Attorney Samuel Walker and the defendant was represented by William H. Martin, Harry L. Graham and Howard I. Painter, who were appointed by the court. The attorneys for the defendant in this case received a fee of fifty dollars each from the county, which was the first fee of the kind paid by the county under the act of Assembly, which provided that the commonwealth shall pay a fee of one hundred and fifty dollars to the attorneys for the defendant in a murder trial, where the defendant has no means to provide private counsel, and the court is obliged to appoint counsel to defend the prisoner. Since the trial of the Kreditch case the supreme court has declared the act unconstitutional. Kreditch was sentenced sixteen years to the penitentiary and received his sentence with the same stolid indifference that he displayed at his trial.

THE M'LAUGHLIN-HEMPHILL TRAGEDY.

The trial of John B. McLaughlin for the murder of William J. Hemphill in 1905 was one of the real tragedies of Butler County. The two men resided in Clinton Township on adjoining farms and were close neighbors. Both were prosperous farmers, useful citizens, and respected by the community in which they lived. Hemphill's farm buildings were separated from one of McLaughlin's fields by a public road, and it appears that the latter was greatly annoyed by his neighbor's chickens making a running ground of his field. On the morning of May 5th, 1905, McLaughlin went to the field and shot several of his neighbor's chickens that he found there. Hemphill was employed with several men repairing his house at the time, and when his attention was called to the shooting of his chickens, he left his work, crossed the public road into the field where McLaughlin was. There were no eye-witnesses to the tragedy that followed. The men employed at the Hemphill house heard a shot fired, and looking toward the men, saw Hemphill lying on the ground and McLaughlin walking away, carrying a shotgun in his hand. Hemphill was carried to his home, where he died in a few hours from the effects of his wounds. McLaughlin did not wait to see the results of the shooting, but came directly to Butler and surrendered himself to Sheriff M. L. Gibson. The fact that both men were married and had families of small children made the tragedy the more deplorable.

McLaughlin was indicted on the charge of murder and on June 7th the grand jury returned a true bill. The trial of the case was postponed to the September term and on the 18th of September it was taken up before Judge Galbreath. The Commonwealth was represented by District Attorney Samuel Walker, S. F. Bowser and Levi M. Wise, and the defendant's counsel were Hon. John M. Greer, William Z. Murrin and Joseph B. Bredin. Every step of the trial was bitterly contested and not since the trial of Mills did a murder case attract so much public attention in the county. Two days were taken up in the selection of a jury and three days in the trial of the case. On September 24th the jury returned a verdict of guilty of murder in the second degree and McLaughlin was sentenced to fourteen years in the penitentiary. The terrible ordeal he had gone through and the nervous strain he was subjected to during his trial, impaired McLaughlin's health and he died in prison within a year after his sentence.

THE SCHMIDT MURDER.

One of the most brutal and uncalled for murders in the county was committed on March 6, 1902, near Cabot Station, in Winfield Township. Henry B. Schmidt and his wife were an aged couple that resided on a farm a short distance from the station. On the night mentioned, between the hours of ten and twelve o'clock, three masked men broke into the house, shot Mr. Schmidt in cold blood, bound and gagged Mrs. Schmidt, and ransacked the house for money. Mrs. Schmidt was found in a pitiable condition the next morning and while she was able to tell what had happened, she was unable to identify any of the murderers; though diligent search was made, the men who committed the crime have never been apprehended.

THE BENNET RIOT.

The Jerry Bennet affair forms an incident in the history of the county on account of the nature of Bennet's crime, and the serious consequences that followed. On the night of September 13, 1902, Bennet, who had a bad previous reputation, committed a criminal assault on the eight-year-old daughter of John H. Wagner of Butler. The scene of the crime was near the West Penn depot and the criminal was caught in the act. Cool-headed citizens prevented Wagner from killing Bennet on the spot, and with the aid of the police, Bennet was hurried to the county jail for safe keeping. The affair happened about eight o'clock in the evening, when there was a large crowd of people on the streets, who, fortunately for Bennet, did not know the nature of his crime. In a few minutes after Bennet was locked up an angry mob had surrounded the jail and gathered in the streets in front of the courthouse. Threats of lynching were made, and the leaders of the mob proposed battering down the doors of the prison, taking the prisoner out by force and hanging him to a lamp post.

Anticipating trouble, Sheriff Thomas R. Hoon prepared to resist the mob and protect the prisoner. By ten o'clock the mob was beyond the control of the local police and an assault was made on the residence part of the jail. The front door was battered down with a piece of heavy timber, used as a battering-ram, and every window in the front part of the building was broken by stones and brick-bats hurled by the rioters. Sheriff Hoon, who was a physical giant, displayed a courage possessed by few men as he stood in the doorway, unarmed, vainly attempting to persuade the rioters to disperse. He was hit with stones and roughly handled, but held his ground, and the mob did not get beyond the street entrance. A shot fired by one of the jail guards had the effect of dispersing the crowd, and in a few minutes only the curious and a small body of the rioters remained about the county buildings.

The attack did not last twenty minutes, but in that time the residence part of the jail was wrecked and several members of the sheriff's family had narrow escapes from serious injury. Fearing that the leaders of the mob would return and attempt to carry out their threat to blow up the prison with dynamite, Sheriff Hoon secured rifles and ammunition from the local military company and placed a strong armed guard about the jail. The rioters did not return and at midnight the streets were quiet. The guard remained on duty at the jail all night and the following day (Sunday), but no further attempts at violence were made.

Two days later, September 16th, Bennet went into court and entered a plea of nolle contendere to the charge made against him, and was sentenced to fifteen years in the penitentiary by Judge Samuel Miller, of Mercer, specially presiding.

THE BENCH.

Before the organization of Butler County, when, as previously intimated, her territory was attached to Allegheny County for judicial purposes, thus coming under the jurisdiction of the court of the latter county, the presiding judge of the District was the Hon. Alexander Addison, a native of Scotland, who, in 1794, aided the authorities in quelling the "Whiskey Insurrection." In performing this service he made many enemies. Judge Addison was fearless and determined and in 1802 refused to permit an associate judge to charge the jury after he had delivered his address. For this offense he was summoned before the higher courts which dismissed the complaint against him. His enemies were not content, however, with the decision of the court and the matter was carried to the legislature. He was impeached by the House of Representatives, tried by the Senate, found guilty as charged and sentenced to removal from office. His enemies secured ample revenge as he was disqualified from again filling any judicial position in Pennsylvania. He died in Pittsburg November 27, 1807.

The successor of Judge Addison was the Hon. Jesse Moore, a native of Montgomery County, who was commissioned president judge of the Sixth Judicial District of Pennsylvania, April 5th, 1803. Previous to that time he had practiced law for some years at Sunbury, Penna. Judge Moore was said to be a solemn, dignified and austere man both in his official and private life. Dressing after the fashion of the colonial days, and punctilious in observing the old-time manner, he adhered to the old-time dress coat, knee-breeches, buckles and stockings as well as the powdered wig and buckled shoes which caused him to be long remembered by the early settlers of the county. He presided over the Courts of Common Pleas in Butler County from 1804 to 1818. His death occurred December 21, 1854.

Hon. Samuel Roberts was appointed president judge of the district including Butler County in 1818 and held the office until his death in 1820. He was born in Philadelphia, December 8, 1763, and was admitted to the bar in that city in 1793. He practiced in Sunbury, Pennsylvania, previous to his appointment to the bench.

Hon. William Wilkins was the successor of Judge Roberts. He presided in Butler County from April 2, 1821, until July, 1824.

Hon. Charles Shaler was commissioned judge of this district July 5, 1824. His term of office was marked by a large amount of litigation and his rulings, especially in land cases, disclosed an intimate knowledge of the intricacies of the law.

Hon. John Bredin was born in the town of Stranorlar, Donegal County, Ireland, in 1794. He came to Butler County with his parents in 1802 and at the age of sixteen, he went to Pittsburg and took a position as a clerk in a general store. He purchased a tract of wild land in what is now Summit Township, Butler County, when he was eighteen years of age, and in 1817 he was employed as a clerk in the prothonotary office in Butler. He began reading law under Gen. William Ayres and the year 1824 found him in the newspaper business with his brother Maurice, combining law and journalism until 1830. He was appointed president judge of the judicial district in 1831 and filled the position with marked ability until his death in 1851. His association as a student with General Ayres, who was a well-known lawyer and land owner, gave him an insight into the land business and an acquaintance with the early land laws that proved of great value to him, not only in his practice, but in the discharge of his duties on the bench. For more than a quarter of a century he was regarded as an authority in land title disputes.

He was married in 1829 to Miss Nancy McClelland of Franklin, Venango County.

The president judge of this district from 1851 to 1863 was Hon. Daniel Agnew, a son of Dr. Agnew, who was one of the early practicing physicians in Butler and at Harmony. Judge Agnew was afterwards associate justice and chief justice of the supreme court of Pennsylvania. He was a man of eminent ability as a lawyer and a jurist and his decisions were very rarely reversed on appeals. After his retirement from the supreme bench he removed to Beaver, Penna., where he died.

Hon. Lawrence L. McGuffin was president judge from 1863 to 1874. His term was marked by a number of important criminal and civil trials, among which were the Addlington murder trial from Portersville in 1867, and the trial of Zachary Taylor Hockenberry for the murder of Nancy Ann McCandless in October, 1868. Judge McGuffin was deservedly popular, an able lawyer and made an excellent record on the bench.

Hon. Charles McCandless was born in Center Township, Butler County, November 27, 1834. He was educated in the common schools of the county and at the old Witherspoon Institute in Butler, which was then one of the leading academies in Western Pennsylvania, and after leaving school read law in the office of his uncle, Charles C. Sullivan. He was admitted to practice in June 14, 1858, and became a partner of his preceptor. This partnership continued until 1860 when Mr. Sullivan died and Mr. McCandless succeeded to his large practice. He was elected to the State Senate in 1862 for a term of three years and in 1872 was a delegate to the Republican national convention in Philadelphia which nominated Grant and Wilson. Under the constitution of 1873 Butler County became a separate judicial district with Lawrence County attached, and was entitled to an additional law judge. Judge McGuffin was president judge and Mr. McCandless was appointed by Governor Hartranft assistant law judge of the Seventh Judicial District to fill the vacancy. He was one of the Republican candidates for the office at the ensuing election but was defeated. He was appointed chief justice of New Mexico in February, 1878, by President James A. Garfield, but resigned in the following October and returned to Butler, where he continued to practice until his death, March 4, 1893.

Hon. Ebenezer McJunkin was born in Center Township, Butler County, March 28, 1819, and was the son of David McJunkin, a pioneer settler of that township. He was graduated from Jefferson College at Canonsburg in 1841 and began the study of law in the office of Charles C. Sullivan of Butler, being admitted to the bar September 12, 1843. He was a partner of his preceptor until 1849, when he was appointed deputy attorney general and began to practice on his own account. In politics he was first a Whig and afterwards a Republican, being one of the organizers of the Republican party in Butler County. He was a delegate to the national Republican convention in Chicago in 1860 and a member of the Electoral College in 1864. He was elected to Congress from this district in 1870 and was reelected in 1872. In 1874 he ran as an independent Republican candidate for the office of judge of the Seventh Judicial District and was elected, resigning his seat in Congress to accept that office. He drew lots with his colleague, Hon. James Bredin, for the president judgeship which he won, filling the position until January, 1885. After his retirement from the bench he devoted himself to the practice of his profession until failing health compelled him to retire. His death occurred in Butler, November, 1907.

Hon. James Bredin was a son of Hon. John Bredin and was born in Butler, Pennsylvania, May 9, 1831. He was educated at the local schools and at Washington College and in the Naval School at Annapolis. He participated in the naval operations in the Gulf of Mexico during the Mexican war and early in 1850, he resigned and returned to Butler, and began reading law in his father's office. After his father's death, in 1851, he continued his studies in the office of Hon. Ebenezer McJunkin and was admitted to the bar June 14, 1853. He did not at once begin practice, but engaged in the banking business with James Campbell, S. M. Lane and others and established a bank in Butler and a branch at New Castle. He returned to the profession, however, in 1855 and 1871 removed to Allegheny, where he practiced until 1874, when he was elected one of the judges of the Seventeenth District and served ten years. After his retirement from the bench in 1855 he removed again to Allegheny, where he continued to practice until his death, November, 1906. He was recognized as an able lawyer and was held in high esteem by the legal profession and the public, and his record on the bench in Butler County was an excellent one.

Hon. Aaron L. Hazen is a native of Shenango Township, Lawrence County, and was born February 19, 1837. He was educated in the district schools and in Beaver Academy and Jefferson College at Canonsburg, Pennsylvania, graduating from the latter institution in 1861. He enlisted April 19, 1861, in the Twelfth Pennsylvania Volunteers, but being disqualified from service in the ranks on account of deafness, he became a clerk in the paymaster's department in the army and served until the close of the war. He was admitted to the bar in New Castle in September, 1855, was elected district attorney in 1870, and reelected in 1873. He was elected one of the two judges of the Seventeenth Judicial District, then embracing Butler and Lawrence Counties, in 1884, and after his election took up his residence in Butler as president judge. Under the division of the judicial district in 1893, Lawrence became a separate judicial district and Butler County alone became the Seventeenth Judicial District. Judge Hazen then became president judge of Lawrence County and removed to New Castle. His term of office expired in 1895 and since that time he has engaged in practice of his profession at New Castle, and enjoys a large clientele as well as the confidence of the community.

Hon. John McMichael, a member of the Lawrence County Bar, was elected assistant law judge in 1884, and served until his death in 1892.

Hon. J. Norman Martin, a member of the Lawrence County Bar, was admitted to practice at the Butler Bar, September 3rd, 1889. He was appointed assistant law judge to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Judge McMichael, and served until January 1st, 1893.

Hon. John M. Greer is a native of Jefferson Township, Butler County, where he was born August 3rd, 1844. At the age of eighteen, in July 1862, he enlisted in the defense of the Union, and remained in the service until February, 1866, when he was mustered out. He taught school after his return from the army and read law in the office of Charles McCandless. He was admitted to practice September 23rd, 1867, and in 1868 was elected district attorney for a term of three years. He was elected state senator in 1876 and reelected in 1880. In 1882 he was nominated as secretary of internal affairs but suffered defeat with the entire Republican ticket that year. He was one of the two nominees of the Republican party for judge of the Seventeenth Judicial District in 1884, but failed of election, the candidates from the Lawrence County end of the district, both being successful. He was engaged from 1887 to 1891 as inspector and examiner of the Soldiers' Orphans' School, and in 1892, on the death of Judge McMichael, he was elected as his successor as additional law judge of the Seventeenth Judicial District. Under the operation of a special act of the legislature in 1893, Butler County alone became the Seventeenth Judicial District, and Lawrence County was erected into a new district, with Judge Hazen as president judge. Judge Greer then succeeded to the judgeship of the Seventeenth Judicial District and served until the expiration of his term in 1903. Judge Greer made an excellent record on the bench and was one of the most popular judges that have ever occupied that position. Since his retirement from the bench he has devoted his time to the practice of his profession and has associated with him his two sons, Thomas H. Greer and John B. Greer.

Hon. James M. Galbreath is the second son of Robert Galbreath and was born in Winfield Township, Butler County, September 27th, 1852. He received a common school education and subsequently attended Slate Lick Academy, Armstrong County, and Witherspoon Institute, Butler. He then entered Princeton College, where he graduated in 1880, and commenced reading law with W. D. Brandon, Butler. He was admitted to the bar, March 6th, 1882, and in 1884 he formed a partnership with James B. McJunkin, which was continued until 1901. He was elected president judge of the Seventeenth Judicial District in 1902 and has filled the position with marked ability.

THE BAR.

John Gilmore was prominent as a lawyer and politician in the early years of the county's history. He was a son of James Gilmore, a native of Ireland, who came to Sumerset County, Pennsylvania, prior to or during the Revolution, in which county John Gilmore was born in 1780. His youth and manhood were passed in Washington County, Pennsylvania. Admitted to the bar at the age of twenty-one years, he shortly afterwards began the practice of law in Pittsburg, and in 1803 came to Butler as deputy attorney general. He served several terms in the legislature from Butler County, was speaker of the House in 1821, and was prominent in the legal and political history of the county during the first twenty-five years of his existence. He died in 1845, after a long, useful and honorable career.

Col. John Purviance was born in Washington County, Penna., September 28, 1781. He came to Butler as a practicing attorney in 1804 and was among the first attorneys admitted to the Butler Bar after the organization of the court of the county. He was the legal adviser of the Harmony Society from 1805 to 1815, with the exception of the time passed on the frontier as Colonel of the Second Pennsylvania Militia Regiment during the War of 1812. Col. Purviance was a brother-in-law of John Gilmore, having married an elder sister of Mrs. Gilmore. The family returned to Washington, Penna., in 1814, where Col. Purviance died December 28, 1820.

Gen. William Ayres came to western Pennsylvania in 1794 with the troops sent to quell "the whiskey insurrection" in the southwestern part of the state. He began the study of law in the office of Judge Breckenridge, of Pittsburg, and was admitted to the bar in 1809. When Butler County was organized Gen. Ayres was appointed to the office of prothonotary, which at that time included the duties of the clerk of courts and of registrar and recorder. He became a large land owner and a powerful factor in the political life of the county. Although a bachelor, he built for himself a comfortable and well-furnished home on the site now occupied by the residence of the late Judge Ebenezer McJunkin, on South Main Street, and lived in what was then considered an affluent and luxurious life. At his death in 1843 he left an estate valued at $150,000.

John Galbraith, who was admitted to the Butler bar November 10, 1818, was also the pioneer newspaper man of the county. He studied law in Butler under Gen. William Ayres and after he was admitted to the bar he took up newspaper work and established the Butler Palladium and Republican Star, which was the first newspaper published in Butler County. In 1819 he removed to Franklin and became one of the prominent lawyers of Venango County. He afterwards removed to Erie, where he became president judge of the district.

Hon. Joseph Buffington began his career in Butler as editor of a weekly paper called the Repository. He read law under Gen. William Ayres and was admitted to the Butler bar July 4, 1826. About a year afterwards he moved to Kittanning. He was elected to Congress in 1842 and served two terms. In 1849 he was appointed judge of the Eighteenth Judicial District and in 1852 was tendered, but declined, the chief judgeship of Utah. He was appointed judge of the Tenth Judicial District in 1855 to fill a vacancy, and was elected in 1856 and reelected in 1866. Owing to failing health he resigned in 1871, and his death occurred February 3, 1872. Judge Buffington took high rank as a jurist.

Col. Francis McBride, who kept a hotel where the Lowry House now stands, and who was sheriff of the county in 1830, studied law and became the partner of the late Louis Z. Mitchell. He lived for a while in the old Walter Lowry residence.

Hon. Samuel A. Purviance, who became a man of national note in his lifetime, was born in Butler, January 10, 1809, and was the son of Col. John Purviance. He was largely self educated and prepared himself for a professional career by reading law in the office of Gen. William Ayres, being admitted to practice October 2, 1827. He began his legal career in Warren County, Pennsylvania, where he was appointed deputy attorney general, but within a few years he returned to Butler County. He was a member of the convention that framed the Constitution of 1838, his colleague from Butler County being Gen. William Ayres. He was a member of the House of Representatives from Butler County in the General Assemblies of 1838 and 1839 and in 1844 he was elected a delegate to the Whig National Convention, which nominated Henry Clay for president. He was also a member of the first Republican National Convention held in 1852, and was recognized as one of the founders of the Republican party. He was elected to Congress from this district in 1854 and reelected in 1856, and took a prominent part in the Kansas-Nebraska debates, opposing with his voice and his vote the attempt of slave power to extend its dominion over the western territory. After the expiration of his term in Congress Mr. Purviance moved to Pittsburg. He was chosen delegate to the Republican National Convention in Chicago in 1860, which nominated Abraham Lincoln. In 1861 he was elected attorney general of Pennsylvania and in the same year he was tendered an important diplomatic appointment by President Lincoln, but declined it. He was chosen delegate to the Republican National Convention of 1864 and aided in a nomination of President Lincoln for a second term, and in 1868 he was a delegate to the convention that nominated General Grant as presidential candidate of the Republican party. This convention also chose Mr. Purviance as a member of the National executive committee. In 1872 Mr. Purviance was prominently mentioned as a candidate for the nomination of vice president on the Republican ticket, and in 1873 he was chosen a member of the convention that framed the state constitution of that year. His public career closed with the discharge of his duties as a member of that notable assemblage, and his death occurred at his home in Pittsburg, February 14, 1882. From his first appearance in public life to the signing of the constitution of 1873 Mr. Purviance had given his native state over forty years of able, faithful and distinguished service and had secured the respect and esteem of her citizens. His widow died in Pittsburg in December, 1891.

George W. Smith was one of the early attorneys at the Butler bar who attained prominence in the west. He was born in Mercer County, Pennsylvania, in 1806, and he came to Butler to work in the woolen factory. He began to study law in the office of Gen. William Ayres and was admitted to the bar April 7, 1829. He was elected to the legislature from Butler County in 1835 and in 1848 he was the Whig candidate for Congress in this district, but was defeated by that popular Democrat, Alfred Gilmore, of Butler, who carried the district by a very small majority. In 1855 Mr. Smith went to Kansas and subsequently became a prominent factor in the politics of that State, at one time being speaker in the legislature. He died in the city of Lawrence, Kansas, September 28, 1878.

Walter H. Lowrie, who was admitted to the bar July 6, 1830, was a native of Butler County and a son of Matthew P. Lowrie, of Allegheny Township. His grandfather, John Lowrie, was one of the pioneer settlers of the northeastern section of the county. Walter H. Lowrie was chief justice of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania from 1857 to 1863.

One of the ablest members of the Butler bar for many years was Hon. Charles Craven Sullivan. He was born in Franklin Township, Butler County, March 10, 1807, and was the son of Charles Sullivan, who was a native of Northumberland County, Virginia. After graduating from Jefferson College in 1828 Mr. Sullivan became a law student in the office of Gen. William Ayres and was admitted to the bar October 10, 1831. He was elected to the state Senate in 1841 and reelected in 1844. Mr. Sullivan was an able lawyer and a successful advocate and his legal practice grew to be very large. He died February 27, 1860. His widow is still living in the old Sullivan homestead on West Diamond Street.

David C. Cunningham, a brother of the Cunninghams who founded the borough of Butler, was admitted to practice in 1804, and was well known to the bench and bar of the earlier years of the county's history.

General John N. Purviance, who was prominent in the affairs of Butler County for more than fifty years, was the son of Col. John Purviance and was born in Butler, September 27, 1810. He was educated in the old schools of Butler and the Butler Academy and at the age of sixteen filled the position of clerk in Foxe's store on the Clarion River. After serving as clerk to the county commissioners, he completed his law studies in the office of Hon. John Bredin, and in 1832 was admitted to the bar. Mr. Purviance took an active interest in the early militia organization of the county, and in 1843 he was commissioned major-general of the military division comprising Butler, Mercer and Beaver Counties. In 1861 he was captain of the Butler Blues, which was mustered into the United States service as Company H of the Thirteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and at the organization of the regiment in Harrisburg on April 25, 1861, he was promoted to lieutenant-colonel. He was auditor-general of the State from 1845 to 1851 as well as escheater-general and a member of the board of property. His death occurred in Butler in 1885.

Edward M. Bredin, who was regarded as one of the ablest advisers of the bar of Butler County in the middle of the last century, was a nephew of Hon. John Bredin and was born at Carlisle, Pennsylvania, in 1819. He came to Butler when a youth, read law in the office of his uncle and was admitted to the bar of Butler County October 2, 1839. His death occurred August 9, 1887.

William Timblin, a native of Center Township, Butler County, read law in the office of Samuel A. Purviance and was admitted to the bar September 14, 1841. His death occurred in Butler in 1856.

John Graham was a native of Connoquenessing Township, Butler County, and was born in 1821. In 1842 he began the study of law in the office of Samuel A. Gilmore. He was admitted the bar in 1844, and in 1845 he was appointed deputy attorney general, making for himself a good legal reputation. His death occurred in 1860.

Louis Z. Mitchell was born in Dauphin

County, Pennsylvania, September 12, 1824, and came to Butler County when about ten years of age. He began the study of law in the office of Samuel A. Purviance about 1843 and was admitted to the bar February 11, 1845. For almost half a century he was one of the leading members of the bar in Butler County and won an excellent reputation both as advocate and counsellor. His death occurred in Butler August 28, 1904.

Colonel John McPherin Sullivan was born in Butler, August 9, 1822. He was educated at the Old Stone Academy at Butler, and at Jefferson College, graduating from the latter institution in 1843. After leaving college he became a law student in the office of Hon. Samuel A. Gilmore of Butler, and was admitted to practice in September, 1845. A few months later he formed a law partnership with his preceptor, which continued until 1855. He subsequently occupied many public positions, his official career closing about 1882, after he had filled the position of collector of internal revenue of the Twenty-third District for nearly fifteen years. He died in Butler in 1899.

Arcus McDermitt, a native of Butler County, studied law under C. C. Sullivan and was admitted to practice September 30, 1850. He moved to Mercer County, Pennsylvania, a few years later and in 1874 was elected judge of that district under the new Constitution.

Col. Archibald Blakeley was born in Forward Township July 16, 1827. He began life as a school teacher, read law with George W. Smith of Butler, and was admitted to the bar November 10, 1852. In 1853 he was elected district attorney, and in 1855 he was chosen delegate from Butler County to the first Republican state convention held at Pittsburg. During the Civil War he served as lieutenant colonel and colonel of the Seventy-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers for three years, and made an excellent war record. Upon his return to civil life he practiced law at Franklin, Pennsylv-vania, from 1864 to 1868, when he removed to Pittsburg.

Hon. James Thompson, eminent in the legal annals of Pennsylvania, was born in Middlesex Township, Butler County, in 1805, being the youngest son of William Thompson. He entered the active duties of life as the first printer's "devil" in the office of the Butler Palladium, the pioneer newspaper of the county. In 1826 he began reading law under John Gilmore, at that time a leading member of the Butler bar, and he completed his studies at Kittanning under Thomas Blair, and was admitted to the Butler Bar April 9, 1828. He located later at Franklin, Pennsylvania, where he resided for thirteen years. He was elected to the general assembly in 1832, 1833 and 1834, and during his last term was chosen speaker of the House. In 1839 he was appointed judge of a special district, created to dispose of accumulated business, and in 1842 he removed to Erie, Pennsylvania. In 1844 he was elected to Congress and re-elected in 1848. He was elected on the Democratic ticket associate justice of the supreme court, in 1857, and served the last five years of his fifteen-year term as chief justice. With the beginning of his term on the supreme bench he took up his residence in Philadelphia, where he passed the remainder of his life. One of his sons, Samuel Gustine Thompson, succeeded his father on the supreme bench, retiring in 1893.

William G. Thompson was a native of Brady Township, Butler County, and a brother of the late Colonel John M. Thompson, of Butler. He read law under William Timblin, of Butler, and was admitted to the bar November 15, 1853. He moved to Iowa shortly afterward, settling in Linn County. During the Civil War he served as major of an Iowa regiment, and later represented his district in the Forty-seventh and Forty-eighth Congresses.

Colonel William Blakeley was a native of Butler County, and was admitted to the bar March 24, 1856. He removed to Kittanning the same year and was elected district attorney of Armstrong County in 1859. In 1862 he resigned his office to become lieutenant colonel of the Fourteenth Pennsylvania Cavalry, and in 1865 was brevetted brigadier general in recognition of his services. The same year he formed a law partnership with his brother, Col. Archibald Blakeley at Franklin, and in 1868 he removed to Pittsburg, where he became a leading member of the bar of that city. His death occurred in Butler October 2, 1899.

Hon. John H. Mitchell was a native of Washington County, Pennsylvania, where he was born June 22, 1835. When he was two years old his parents removed to Butler County, where young Mitchell grew to manhood. Completing his literary education at Witherspoon Institute, Butler, he entered the law office of Purviance and Thompson and was admitted to the bar March 22, 1858. In 1860 he went to the Pacific Coast and located in California. After a brief sojourn in that state he located permanently at Portland, Oregon, and soon took rank among the leaders of the bar of the northwest. He filled many important offices, and was a member of the United State Senate at the time of his death in 1905.

John H. Negley was a son of the pioneer John Negley and was born in Butler Borough February 7, 1823. He was educated at the old Butler Academy and at Washington College, Washington, Pennsylvania, and in 1843 he began the study of law in the office of Hon. John Bredin. He was admitted to the bar March 25, 1845, and three years later was appointed deputy attorney general for Butler County, and under the new constitution was elected district attorney in 1850. In 1855 he entered the field of journalism as editor of the Herald. In 1861 he was appointed enrolling officer of Butler County and in 1863 was elected a member of the legislature and was reelected in 1864 and 1865. He was engaged in law practice from 1866 to April, 1869, when he resumed journalism as editor of the Citizen. In 1870 and 1871 he was assistant assessor of internal revenue for this county, which was the last official position he held. He retained editorial control of the Citizen until 1888, when his son, William F. Negley, became owner. After his retirement from newspaper work Mr. Negley resumed the practice of law, which he continued until a short time before his death, which occurred June 17, 1908.

Thomas Robinson was born in County Armagh, Ireland, July 4, 1825. Accompanied by his parents he came to America in 1832, and to Penn Township, Butler County, in 1835. He entered the office of George W. Smith of Butler as a student of law and was admitted to the bar September 25, 1855. Mr. Robinson was by nature a politician more than a lawyer and the greater part of his life was devoted to politics. At first a Whig, he afterwards became a Republican and was a delegate from Butler County to the first state convention of the Republican party in 1855. In 1860 he was elected to the legislature and for more than forty years was one of the local leaders of his party. In 1863 Mr. Robinson and Major Cyrus E. Anderson established the American Citizen, of which Mr. Robinson was political editor, and in 1870 he was one of the organizers and directors of a company that established the Butler Eagle. In 1871 Mr. Robinson became sole owner of the Eagle and remained in control until 1879, when he sold the paper to his son, Eli D. Robinson. He was appointed state printer at Harrisburg in 1893, a position which he resigned on account of ill health. Upon his retirement Mr. Robinson returned to Butler and took up the practice of law, which he continued until his death in 1907.

Col. John M. Thompson was born in Brady Township, Butler County, January 4, 1830, and was the eldest son of William H. and Jane (McCandless) Thompson.

After completing an academic course at Witherspoon Institute he read law in the office of Hon. Samuel A. Purviance and was admitted to the bar February 24, 1854. He became a partner in the office of Purviance and Sullivan and soon developed marked forensic ability and took a leading position in the bar. He was elected to the legislature on the Republican ticket in 1858, and reelected in 1859, serving as speaker pro tem. of the house at the latter session. He entered the army in 1862 as major of the 134th Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was promoted to lieutenant colonel. He resigned his commission in the army in 1863 and returned to Butler to resume the practice of law. He was delegate to the Republican national convention at Chicago in 1868, which nominated General Grant for the presidency, and he was one of the presidential electors of Pennsylvania in 1872. In 1875 he was elected to Congress from this district to fill a vacancy caused by the resignation of Hon. E. McJunkin, and he was again elected in 1876, for a full term of two years. Colonel Thompson was one of the ablest members of the Butler bar, and enjoyed a large and lucrative practice. His death occurred in Butler September 8, 1903.

John B. Gibson, who was one of the early attorneys of Butler Borough, registering here in 1804, was afterwards appointed to the supreme court bench of the state and became chief justice.

Hon. Samuel A. Gilmore, who was born in Butler Borough, January 21, 1806, and died in 1873, was the son of John Gilmore and was admitted to the bar in January, 1828. He was elected to the legislature from Butler County in 1836 and 1837, and filled the position of secretary of the Constitutional Convention of 1838. He was appointed judge of the district composed of Washington, Fayette, and Green Counties in 1845, by Gov. Shunk, and when that office became elective, he carried the district and was its president judge at the time of his death.

Hon. Alfred Gilmore was a native of Butler Borough and a son of John Gilmore. He read law in the office of Samuel A. Gilmore, and was admitted to the bar March 15, 1836. He was elected to Congress from this district in 1849 and served four years. At the expiration of his term he became a citizen of Massachusetts, and afterwards of Scranton, Penna., where he died in 1890 or 1891.

John H. Hopkins was admitted to the Butler Bar October 10, 1822, and afterwards gave up the law for the ministry. He entered the Episcopal Church and at the time of his death was bishop of Vermont.

Moses Hampton, who practiced in Butler in 1846, removed to Pittsburg and became one of the judges of the district.

Jedediah Jack, who was admitted to the Butler bar in 1840, and was a well-known citizen of the town, went to Illinois and was there killed.

James W. Kirker, a native of Butler County, was admitted to the bar in 1856. He served one term as district attorney of the county, beginning in 1859, and was afterwards removed to Pittsburg, where he died in 1893. He was commissioned provost marshal of the Twenty-third District of Pennsylvania by President Lincoln, with the rank of captain of cavalry on the 18th of April, 1863, and served as such until the first of October, 1865, when he was mustered out of service by reason of the close of the war.

James Potts, a native of Butler, was admitted to practice law on the 11th of June, 1850, and afterwards removed to Johnstown, Cambria County, where he became president judge of the independent judicial district of which Johnstown was the center.

Alexander McBride, a native of Middlesex Township, Butler County, was admitted to the Butler Bar September 15, 1841. He was considered a young man of culture and talent, but after he left Butler little was known about him.

Engene Ferrero read law in Col. Thompson's office and was admitted to the bar in September, 1855. He was elected district attorney in 1857, and county superintendent of the common schools in 1860. He then practiced law in Venango County for some time, after which he removed to Cincinnati. Mr. Ferrero was a gentleman of culture and scholarly attainments.

Walter L. Graham was born in Butler, Pennsylvania, October 25, 1831. He was educated at the old Butler Academy, Witherspoon Institute, and Jefferson College, graduating from the latter institution in 1854. He read law with Samuel A. Purviance and Charles C. Sullivan, and was admitted to the Butler County Bar in 1855. With the exception of a few years that he spent in California and a short time in Pittsburg, Mr. Graham continued the practice in Butler until the time of his death, November 1, 1900. He was a Republican in politics and was a delegate to the National Convention in 1860 that nominated Lincoln for President. During his lifetime he took a deep interest in local affairs, served several terms as president of the borough council, and held other offices of trust in the community. Mr. Graham enlisted in Company G, Fourteenth Pennsylvania Militia, that went out to assist in repelling Lee's invasion.

Robert M. McClure was a native of Prospect, Butler County, and read law with the late Louis Z. Mitchell. He was admitted to the bar in 1856, and his death occurred about 1882. Mr. McClure was a gentleman of culture and considerable native talent, but a brilliant career was ruined by an unfortunate taste for liquor, which he could not control. His death occurred under sad circumstances in Butler, and caused universal regret among his acquaintances.

Samuel P. Irvin, a native of Adams Township, Butler County, was admitted to the bar in January, 1858. Previous to his admission to the bar he followed school teaching for a number of years, and for many years he was one of the prominent characters in the oil country.

Edwin Lyon was born in Middlesex Township, Butler County, and was a son of T. H. Lyon of that township. He read law with Col. John M. Thompson and in 1862 he enlisted in the One Hundred and Thirty-fourth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and became captain of Company K. He was wounded at the Battle of Fredericksburg, and was discharged for physical disability March 16, 1863. After his return home he took up literature and became quite a humorous writer. His health having become impaired, he accepted the consulship to a Mexican city, where he remained for a short time only to return home and die.

Isaac Ash, a native of Forward Township, read law in the office of Col. John M. Thompson, and was admitted to the bar in January, 1859. He practiced for some time in Butler and afterward located in Oil City, Venango County, where he continued in the practice of his profession until his death. Mr. Ash was a lawyer pure and simple and attained a leading rank in his profession in Venango County.

John Q. Sullivan was born in Prospect, Butler County, April 2, 1839. He was educated at Jefferson College and was admitted to the Butler bar in June, 1861. He was afterwards admitted to practice in the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania. He was actively engaged in the practice of his profession for about twenty-five years, but has now retired and is living in Winfield Township.

Lewis K. Purviance, a native of Butler, read law with his uncle, John M. Purviance, and was admitted to the bar in September, 1875. He removed to Bradford, Pennsylvania, where he is now practicing.

Hugh C. Graham, a native of Connoquenessing Township, Butler County, read law with Col. John M. Thompson, and was admitted to the bar in March, 1861. The same year he formed a law partnership with Hon. Chas. McCandless, which continued until August, 1863, when he enlisted in Company G, 137th Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was mustered out with his regiment in 1863. After his return from the army Mr. Graham removed to Oil City, where he resumed the practice of law and became eminently successful in his chosen profession.

Thomas H. Lyon, a native of Middlesex Township, Butler County commenced the study of law with Col. John M. Thompson, of Butler and completed it with William G. Thompson (a brother of Col. John M. Thompson) of Lynn County, Iowa, where he was admitted to the bar in 1868. Returning to his native state he was admitted as a member of the Butler County bar in July, 1882, and practiced in Butler until 1895, when he removed to Middlesex Township, where he is now residing.

George A. Black, a native of Butler County, read law with Gen. John N. Purviance, and was admitted to the Butler bar in September, 1865. After practicing his profession in Butler for some time he removed to Kansas City, Missouri, where he practiced for several years, finally returning to Butler, where he died of consumption.

Moses Sullivan, a brother of Charles A. Sullivan, and a son of Charles Craven Sullivan, who was a distinguished member of the Butler bar, read law with Hon. E. McJunkin, and was admitted to the bar on the 14th of June, 1869. He commenced the practice of his profession in Butler, but afterwards moved to Bradford, Pennsylvania, where he is now one of the leading members of the McKean County bar.

Samuel H. Pearsol was born in Beaver County, Pennsylvania. After acquiring a classical and scientific education at Mount Union College, Ohio, he read law with Hon. Ebenezer McJunkin and was admitted to the bar in Butler June 14, 1869. He was also admitted to the bar of the Supreme Court, Pennsylvania. Mr. Pearsol continued his practice in Butler until about 1899, when he removed to Pittsburg, where his death occurred in 1901.

Charles A. Sullivan, the eldest son of Hon. C. C. Sullivan, was born in Butler and received his primary education in the public schools of his native town, and later took a classical course at West Chester, Pennsylvania. He read law with Hon. James Bredin and was admitted to the bar March 15, 1870. He practiced in Butler until 1880, when he removed to Pittsburg.

Joseph Mitchell, a son of Louis Z. Mitchell, read law with his father and was admitted to the bar in June, 1870. He was a young man of good qualities, and at an early date death closed his career.

Harvey Snyder, a native of Brady Township, Butler County, was admitted to practice at the Butler bar from the 10th of June, 1870. He afterwards removed to Kittanning and became district attorney of Armstrong County for one term.

A. J. McCafferty was born in Fairview Township, Butler County, August 15, 1846. He was educated in Witherspoon Institute, Edinborough State Normal School and Allegheny College at Meadville, and was admitted to the bar in 1870. He was a young man of promise, but died of consumption 1876.

Michael McBride was the son of John McBride, one of the early settlers of Clearfield Township. He read law with Hon. E. McJunkin and was admitted to the bar in 1871. Subsequently he attended a course of lectures in the University of Michigan and from there went to Chicago, Ill., where he practiced until the great fire of October, 1871, which destroyed his library and effects and caused him to change his location to Paxton, that state. He returned to Butler County in 1874 and located at Chi-

BUTLER COUNTY COURT HOUSE,
BUILT IN 1807

PRESENT BUTLER COUNTY COURT HOUSE

M. E. CHURCH, BUTLER

HOTEL NIXON, BUTLER

Y. M. C. A., BUTLER

cora, where he continued in practice until his death.

S. S. Avery was admitted to practice at the Butler bar on the 14th of June, 1872. He was a victim of consumption and died a few years later.

Walter G. Crawford, a native of Allegheny County, read law in Butler with his uncle, Walter L. Graham, and was admitted to the bar in January, 1874. He is now practicing law in the city of Pittsburg.

R. L. Maxwell was born in Butler County and was admitted to the bar on the 12th of January, 1874. He gave evidence of good legal attainments and was building up a fine practice when his death occurred from consumption.

Albert C. Johnson, a native of Adams Township, Butler County, read law with Hon. Charles McCandless, and was admitted to practice in the several courts of Butler County in March, 1874. He removed to Pittsburg in 1876 and has resided there ever since.

D. J. Kyle, son of Thompson Kyle, of Harrisville, was admitted to practice at the Butler bar in December, 1878.

John H. Thompson read law with Col. John M. Thompson, and was admitted to the bar in April, 1879. He is now practicing in Pittsburg.

Kennedy Marshall was born in Adams Township July 21, 1834. He graduated from Jefferson College in the fall of 1857, and the same year entered the law office of Marshall and Brown in Pittsburg, as a student of law. He was admitted to the Allegheny County bar in 1859, and in October, 1860, he was elected to represent Allegheny County in the state legislature and served one term. He was subsequently employed by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company; his office was in Boston, Mass., and in 1872 he removed to Butler, where he became a member of the Butler bar. In 1904 he removed to Tulsa, Oklahoma, where he is now residing.

James M. Denny, of Winfield Township, read law in the office of Col. John M. Thompson, and was admitted to the bar March 2, 1880.

John K. Kelley, son of Patrick Kelley, Esq., an early settler of Butler, read law in the office of Miller Brothers, and was admitted on the 2nd of March, 1880.

William M. Cornelius, a native of Worth Township, was admitted to practice at the Butler bar, March, 1880. He soon afterward located in Nebraska, where he still resides.

D. H. Jack, son of Joseph Jack of Butler, was admitted to the bar June 1, 1880. He is now in Bradford, Pennsylvania.

Joseph T. Timmony studied law under Hon. Charles McCandless, and was admitted to practice in April, 1874. After following his profession for several years in Butler he removed to St. Joe, where he has since resided.

L. G. Linn, a native of Butler County, and a son of Dr. George Linn, of West Sunbury, read law with Hon. Charles McCandless and was admitted to the bar on the 4th of December, 1874. After practicing in Butler for a number of years he moved to the west where he engaged in mining.

Edward McSweeney, who became prominent in legal circles in McKean County, read law in Butler with Louis Z. Mitchell and was admitted to the Butler bar on the 4th of November, 1875. During the oil excitement at Karns City and Petrolia he had an office at the latter place, and about 1880 he removed to Bradford.

Erman B. Mitchell was admitted to practice law in the Butler bar, October, 1875. He went west.

John M. Roth, of Prospect, was admitted to the practice of law at the Butler bar in November, 1875.

L. J. Clevis read law with Col. John M. Thompson, and was admitted to the bar June 13, 1876. He went to Colorado the same year.

Eugene G. Miller, a native of Butler, read law with his brother, John M. Miller, and was admitted to the Butler bar in October, 1876. After practicing a few years in Butler he removed to Bradford, McKean County.

G. D. Hamer read law with Hon. Louis Z. Mitchell and was admitted to the bar June 6, 1876.

Frank S. Purviance, a son of Gen. John N. Purviance, read law with his father in Butler and was admitted to the bar March 19, 1878. He is now practicing in Philadelphia.

A. M. Cunningham, a native of Butler County and a son of Rev. Alexander Cunningham, deceased, read law with Miller Brothers, and was admitted to the bar in June, 1878. He was elected district attorney of Butler County in 1880, and after serving his term of office located in the west.

Samuel B. Snyder, a native of North Liberty, Mercer County, read law with Hon. J. D. McJunkin, and was admitted to the bar March 3, 1882. He was elected district attorney of Butler County, and after serving a term went to the west, locating in Omaha, Nebraska.

Charles A. McPherrin, a native of Butler County, was admitted to the bar March, 1883. He was elected district attorney in 1886, serving one term. In 1890 he removed to Pittsburg, where he practiced for a few years and then went west.

Capt. George W. Fleeger was born in Center Township, Butler County, March 13, 1839, and was the son of Peter and Mary (Rider) Fleeger. After honorable service in the Civil War as a member of the Eleventh Pennsylvania Reserve, he entered the office of Col. John M. Thompson as law student and was admitted to the bar in 1866. He was associated in practice with George A. Black until 1869, and from 1887 to 1889 was in partnership with James M. Moore. He was elected to the legislature in 1871 on the Republican ticket, was chairman of the Republican County Committee in 1874, and was the delegate to the State Convention in 1882 and 1890. He was also Deputy Revenue Collector of this district in 1869. In 1884 Captain Fleeger was elected to the United States House of Representatives and served in the Forty-ninth Congress. His death occurred in Butler on June 28, 1904.

Newton Black, son of James and Nancy A. (Russell) Black, was born in Marion Township, Butler County, November 22, 1844, and died in Butler in 1902. He read law with the late Charles McCandless and Hon. John M. Greer, and was admitted to the bar in 1876. In March, 1864, he enlisted in Company I, 112th Pennsylvania Volunteers, and served until the close of the war. He was severely wounded in the head in the engagement at Fort Harrison, September 29, 1864, and this wound was the ultimate cause of his death. Mr. Black won his way to a leading rank in his profession and was one of the popular members of the bar. He was twice the choice of the Republicans of the county for Congress, but failed to get the nomination in the district conference.

William A. Forquer was born in Washington Township, Butler County, March 19, 1845, and was the son of William and Margaret (Murrin) Forquer. He began reading law in the office of Col. John M. Thompson in 1872. He was admitted to the bar in 1874, and in 1877 he was elected district attorney, a position he held for three years. A Democrat in politics he took an active part in the councils of his party and was county chairman in 1875. He was a delegate from this district to the National Democratic Convention at St. Louis in 1888 that nominated Cleveland and Thurman and was president of the Democratic Club of Butler in 1892. He was a member of the Town Council from 1889 to 1892 and was city solicitor for several terms. Mr. Forquer was attorney for the Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburg railroad and secured the right of way for the company when the road was built through Butler County. He made the exceptional record of transacting the immense amount of legal business required without involving the railroad company in a single law suit in the Butler County courts. His death occurred April 9, 1902.

J. B. Clark, who was admitted to practice at the Butler bar in 1864, removed to Seattle, Washington, where he died March 3, 1907.

W. H. Colbert, a son of William S. Colbert, of Butler, read law with Hon. John M. Greer and was admitted to practice October 25, 1879. His death occurred in Butler in 1885.

Henry N. Marshall, a native of Portersville, Butler County, read law with his brother, John D. Marshall, of Butler, and was admitted to the bar in September, 1888. He practiced in Butler and Ellwood City, and in the latter part of the nineties went to Colorado.

Leslie Q. Maxwell, a native of Butler Township, was admitted to the Butler bar in 1878. He removed to Lincoln, Nebraska, about 1880 and he is now in Seattle, Washington.

O. G. McCandless read law with Hon. James M. Galbreath and was admitted to the bar in February, 1900. He did not follow his profession but engaged in farming in Clay Township.

A. B. C. McFarland was born in Bellaire, Ohio, June 20, 1852, and was the son of Andrew and Margaret (Marshall) McFarland. He was educated at Westminster College, New Wilmington, Peuna., and at Monmouth College, Illinois, graduating from the latter institution in 1875. He then attended Allegheny Theological Seminary, Allegheny City, graduating in 1878. The same year he was ordained and installed pastor of the United Presbyterian church at Fairview, Butler County, by the Butler Presbytery. He remained pastor of the Fairview church until 1889, when he entered the law office of Hon.

Charles McCandless of Butler. He was admitted to the bar May 25, 1891, and practiced until his death, in December, 1903.

Thomas M. Baker, who was admitted to the bar in September, 1888, gave up the law for the banking business and is now cashier for the Guaranty Safe Deposit Company, of Butler.

William A. Ralston, a native of Slippery Rock Township, read law with his brother, E. L. Ralston of Butler, and was admitted to the bar in 1894. He subsequently practiced in Pittsburg and in Wheeling, but finding the practice of law distasteful he gave it up and he is now farming in his native township, residing on the old Ralston homestead.

Joseph T. Donley, a native of Venango County, was admitted to the Butler bar April 29, 1874. He was elected to the legislature on the Republican ticket in 1882, his contemporary being Hon. Jacob Ziegler, a Democrat. After his term in the legislature he practiced in Butler until 1892, when he removed to Pittsburg, where he died about 1901. A few years previous to his death he published a book on "Land Titles," which had a large circulation.

Frank M. Eastman was admitted to the bar April 14, 1873. He served as clerk of courts from 1869 to 1872 and was court stenographer from 1875 to 1885, and in 1888 was appointed postmaster of Butler by President Cleveland. At the close of his term as postmaster he removed to Saluda, Middlesex County, Virginia, where he is engaged in farming.

Joseph B. Bredin was the son of Hon. John Bredin and was born in Butler. He was admitted to the bar in October, 1875, and practiced until his death October 17, 1907.

A. T. Black is a native of Harrisville, Butler County, and was admitted to the bar October 19, 1875. He practiced in Kansas City, Kansas, for a few years and was in that state when the grasshoppers devastated the country. Seeing nothing in the country at that time but future prospects of howling desolation, Mr. Black returned to Butler and has built up a good practice in his native county.

James F. Brittain is the son of Joseph Brittain of Butler and was admitted to the bar in 1877 and practiced in Butler until the middle eighties when he moved to Tennessee.

Paul Cummings, a nephew of Hon. James Bredin, read law in Butler and was admitted to the bar in June, 1888. He spent a number of years in Chicago and in Denver in the practice of his profession and in 1903 he returned to Butler, where he has since resided.

N. W. Campbell, a native of West Sunbury, was admitted to the bar June 20, 1900. He died November 6, 1901, aged thirty-four years.

George A. Black, who was admitted to the bar in December, 1865, died in Butler July 5, 1881.

William H. Black read law with Capt. George W. Fleeger and was admitted to the bar June 14, 1869. He died in Butler in 1875.

B. L. Pollock was admitted to the bar June 11, 1877. After practicing in Butler for a few years he went to the west and is now in Denver, Colorado.

Joseph A. Humphry, a son of James Humphry, of Worth Township, read law with J. D. Marshall, and was admitted to the bar May 4, 1896. He taught in the Butler schools for several terms and is now practicing law at Ellwood City, Pennsylvania.

George C. Stewart, a native of Butler, was admitted to the bar August 22, 1899. After his admission he spent a few years in Denver, Colorado, after which he returned to Butler and engaged in the banking business. He was one of the organizers of the Guaranty Safe Deposit Company of Butler, and is the present secretary of the company.

THE BAR IN 1908.

The Butler bar in 1908 consisted of eighty-one members, all of whom with a few exceptions are in active practice. The oldest member in point of continuous service is Hon. John M. Greer, who began to practice in 1867, and has continued since, with the exception of ten years spent on the bench in the county. He is now at the head of the law firm of The Greers, and has as his partners his son Thomas H. and John B. Greer.

William H. H. Riddle preceded Mr. Greer at the Butler bar three years, but he has since retired and is not now in active practice.

Hon. J. David McJunkin was admitted to the Butler bar in 1863, and is the oldest living member, but he practiced in Warren County for ten years before locating in Butler in 1873.

The bar of today compares favorably with the bars of any of the county courts of western Pennsylvania, both in the personnel of its members and in intelligence and ability.

Hon. J. David McJunkin is the oldest of the practicing attorneys of the Butler bar in 1908, having been admitted June 8, 1863. Mr. McJunkin was born September 3, 1839, on the old homestead in Center Township, and is the son of William and Priscilla McJunkin. His primary education was obtained in the common schools, and he subsequently spent four years at the Butler Academy, the Witherspoon Institute, and West Sunbury Academy, and pursued the study of law under the late Judge Ebenezer McJunkin. After his admission to the bar he went to Franklin, Venango County, where he was elected to the legislature in 1869, and reelected in 1870 and 1871. Returning to Butler in 1873, he resumed the practice of law.

Politically Mr. McJunkin was a Republican and in 1880 and 1882 he was the choice of the Republicans of Butler County for the Congressional nomination. He was also choice of his party in Butler County for the Congressional nomination in 1908, but was set aside by the political arrangement that was entered into when the district comprised of Butler and Westmoreland Counties was formed, which gave the latter county control of the district. During the Civil War Mr. McJunkin was a member of Company G, Fourteenth Pennsylvania Militia, which was called out to assist in repealing Lee's invasion of the State.

William H. H. Riddle, who is now retired, is next to Mr. McJunkin in point of membership at the Butler bar. He was born in Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, December 11, 1840, and is the son of Samuel L. and Mary A. Riddle. He was educated in the public schools and at West Sunbury and Harrisville Academy, and read law with Col. John M. Thompson. He was admitted to the bar in 1864 and the following year was elected district attorney on the Republican ticket.

Washington D. Brandon was born November 1, 1847, on the Brandon homestead in Connoquenessing Township, Butler County, and is the son of John W. and Ruth A. Brandon. He was educated in the common schools, at Witherspoon Institute in Butler, and was graduated at Washington and Jefferson College in 1868. He commenced reading law with the late Judge E. McJunkin and was admitted to the bar in 1871. He continued to practice with Judge McJunkin for three years and was next in partnership with Clarence Walker, but since 1875 he has practiced alone and has built up a large legal business.

Robert P. Scott was born July 11, 1842, at Fairview, Butler County, and is the son of John Scott, who was sheriff of the county in 1860. After seeing service in the army he became a student of the Witherspoon Institute at Butler, and subsequently read law with Col. John M. Thompson. He was admitted to the bar in January, 1869, and the following year formed a partnership with Colonel Thompson, which continued until 1881. He has been attorney for the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad for twenty years and has built up a large legal practice.

Levingston McQuistion was the fourth son of William and Mary McQuistion and was born in Butler Borough May 16, 1849. He was educated in the public schools and the Witherspoon Institute, and read law in the office of L. Z. Mitchell. He was admitted to the bar June 10, 1870, and for the past thirty-eight years has been engaged in the practice of his profession. Mr. McQuistion is a Democrat in politics and has taken an active part in the affairs of his party in Butler County and in the state. He was elected district attorney in 1874 and was twice the choice of his party in Butler County for Congress, and twice for president judge. In 1880 he was a delegate to the National Democratic Convention which nominated General Hancock for President, and in 1888 was delegate to Denver convention, which nominated William J. Bryan for President, and was leader of the Bryan Ring of the Pennsylvania delegation. Mr. McQuistion is recognized as one of the leaders of the Butler Bar and has built up a large and lucrative legal business. He has associated with him in his office his son C. L. McQuistion, who is a graduate of Bucknell University, and was admitted to the bar June 3, 1901.

S. F. Bowser was born February 11, 1842, near Kittanning, Armstrong County, and is the son of Matthias and Margaret (Williams) Bowser. He received his preparatory education at Columbia University, Kittanning, and graduated from Washington and Jefferson College in 1872. He read law with Thompson and Scott, in Butler and was admitted to the Butler County bar in 1874. He has continued in active practice ever since, and has taken a leading rank as a counselor and an advocate. He has associated with him in his office his brother, A. L. Bowser, who was admitted to the bar September 1, 1883.

Theodore Chalmers Campbell was born in Butler in 1848 and is the son of James and Rebecca Campbell. He was educated in the public schools of the town and subsequently attended Witherspoon Institute in Butler and Phillips Academy at Andover, Massachusetts. He commenced to read law with Col. John M. Thompson in 1866, and completed his studies under Hon. Samuel A. Purviance in Pittsburg, where he was admitted to the bar in 1869. He practiced in Pittsburg until 1872, and then located in Butler, where he has since engaged in the duties of his profession, being now recognized as one of the leading members, as well as one of the oldest attorneys, at the Butler bar.

James B. McJunkin is the son of Hon. E. McJunkin, and was born in Butler. He was admitted to the bar on the 11th of March, 1875, and has continued in the active duties of his profession with the exception of several years devoted to the oil business. He was associated with Hon. James M. Galbreath as a law partner from 1882 until 1901, and since then has been practicing by himself. He has been elected a member of the school board and of the city council from his ward, which is strongly Democratic, and in 1906 he was appointed attorney to the county commissioners.

Andrew G. Williams, attorney-at-law, was born in Richmond, Virginia, September 8, 1840, and removed with his parents to Etna, Allegheny County, in 1848. He saw service in the Civil War and after his return home pursued a course of studies in Duff's Commercial College in Pittsburg and also read law at home. For some years he was engaged in working at his trade of nail-maker, which he had learned in Etna, keeping up his law study during the period. Mr. Williams came to Butler in 1875 and read law in the office of Hon. John M. Greer, and was admitted to the Butler bar the same year. Soon after he formed a law partnership with Alexander Mitchell, which is still in existence, and the firm of Williams and Mitchell has taken rank as one of the leading legal firms at the bar. Politically Mr. Williams is a Republican, and has taken a prominent and active part in public affairs. He filled the office of notary public from January, 1876, to 1891: was elected to the legislature in November, 1890, for one term, and to the State Senate in 1894.

Joseph C. Vanderlin is the son of Stephen and Eliza (Seaton) Vanderlin, and was born in Venango Township, Butler County. He commenced reading law in the office of L. Z. Mitchell of Butler in 1870, and was admitted to the bar in 1874. With the exception of a few years he has been in partnership with Levingston McQuiston and has continued an active practice up to the present time. Politically Mr. Vanderlin is a Democrat, and in 1894 was the Democratic nominee for Congress in the Twenty-fifth Congressional District.

Alexander Mitchell, attorney-at-law, is the eldest son of James Mitchell, who was associate judge in Butler County in 1861. He received a common school education and afterward attended the Witherspoon Institute in Butler. He was employed in the United States Revenue Department during the Civil War, and in 1864 he enlisted in Company A, Sixth Pennsylvania Artillery, and served until the close of the war. After his discharge in the army he entered the office of Charles McCandless of Butler, under whom he read law, and was admitted to the bar in 1869. He then accepted the position of cashier in the First National Bank, of Butler, which he filled until that institution went out of existence in 1879, when he formed a law partnership with Andrew G. Williams, and resumed the practice of his profession. Mr. Mitchell is an ardent Republican, and takes a deep interest in the success of his party, but has never held any public office.

Henderson H. Goucher was born in Richmond, Ohio, May 9, 1847, and was admitted to the Venango County bar in 1873. In April of the same year he located in Butler, and with the exception of five years spent in the West, has continued in the practice of his profession. He has been admitted to practice in the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, the United States District Court and many of the courts of the surrounding counties, as well as the courts of the state of Washington, where he resided for several years. He was appointed United States register in bankruptcy in 1878, which office he filled until 1883. Mr. Goucher has been in active practice for thirty-five years and has acquired a reputation as a sound lawyer and a safe advocate, and enjoys a lucrative practice.

Alexander M. Cornelius was born in Worth Township, Butler County, December 6, 1844. He was educated at the West Sunbury Academy and completed his studies at the Witherspoon Institute, Butler, and was admitted to the bar in 1880. Previous to his admission he was clerk in the prothonotary's office, and at the same time completed the study of law under W. D. Brandon. His death occurred in Butler, December 24, 1903.

William H. Lusk was the son of Dr. Amos and Agnes S. Lusk, and was born in Harmony, Pennsylvania. He was educated in the Butler schools of his district, and at the old Harmony Academy, and read law with W. D. Brandon in Butler. He was admitted to the bar in the fall of 1877. His death occurred in Butler, September 5, 1907.

Oliver D. Thompson, who was admitted to the Butler bar in June, 1880, is the son of Col. John M. Thompson, of Butler, and was born September 24, 1855. He was educated in the common schools of Butler, Witherspoon Institute, Phillips Academy at Andover, Mass., and at Yale College, graduating at the latter institution in 1879. In November following his admission to the Butler bar he was admitted to the Pittsburg bar, where he is now engaged in practice. Mr. Thompson was admitted to practice in the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania in 1883 and to the United States Court in 1893.

James N. Moore, attorney-at-law, is the son of Thomas and Mary Moore, and was born in Worth Township, Butler County, August 23, 1859. He was educated in the common schools of the county, subsequently entered Grove City College, where he graduated in 1880. He read law under the late Charles McCandless and was admitted to the bar in September, 1882. In 1887 he formed a law partnership with the late Capt. George W. Fleeger, which continued until 1889, and in 1896 he was associated with Levingston McQuiston in the practice of law. Mr. Moore has always been a staunch supporter of the Republican party, and has represented the party as a delegate in State and County Conventions and has been secretary of the county committee a number of times. He was elected to the legislature by the Anti-Quay Faction of the Party in 1894, reelected in 1896, and again in 1898. His last election was one of the historical political battles in Butler County, but Mr. Moore triumphed over his enemies by a safe majority. Mr. Moore was journal clerk of the House in the sessions of 1905 and assistant clerk in the session of 1907.

James B. Mates, attorney-at-law, is a native of Muddy Creek Township, Butler County, where he was born September 2, 1859. His early life was spent in Penn Township. He pursued the study of law under Charles McCandless, was admitted to the bar in 1883, and in 1886 he opened a law office in Butler where he has since been engaged in the active duties of his profession. In 1890 he formed a law partnership with Elmer E. Young which continued until 1905. Mr. Mates is one of the leading Republicans of the county, has served his party as chairman of the county committee in 1887, and in 1890 was appointed census supervisor of the Tenth District, the duties of which office he discharged in a satisfactory manner. He was elected to the legislature in the fall of 1892 and reelected in 1900.

Alfred M. Christley was born in Cherry Township, Butler County, January 13, 1860. He read law in the office of Col. John M. Thompson of Butler and was admitted to the bar in 1888. He has since been engaged in the active duties of his profession and has built up a large practice. Mr. Christley is one of the active Republicans of the county, has served as chairman and secretary of the county committee, and has always given his earnest support to the candidates and measures of his party. He was elected district attorney for one term in 1896, and was chosen city solicitor of Butler Borough in 1905. Mr. Christley was one of the ardent supporters of President Roosevelt in 1908, and was the delegate from this district to the Chicago Convention, which nominated William H. Taft for President. Mr. Christley was one of the three delegates from the Pennsylvania Delegation who voted for President Roosevelt when the ballot was taken. The other two delegates who voted with him were Hon. Thomas M. Phillips of New Castle and Mr. Davis of Mercer.

James W. Hutchison was born in Parker Township, Butler County, June 17, 1864. He is the son of James G. and Susan (Daubenspeck) Hutchison and the grandson of William Hutchison, who was one of the early settlers of Parker Township. He received a common school education, entered North Washington Academy in 1879, and graduated from Westminster College in New Wilmington, Pennsylvania, in 1887. The same year he entered the office of S. F. Bowser with whom he read law, and was admitted to the bar December 2, 1889; since that time he has been engaged in the practice of his profession. Mr. Hutchison is a Republican in politics and at present holds the position of referee in bankruptcy in this district.

John D. Marshall is the eldest son of James M. Marshall, and was born in Prospect, Butler County, June 20, 1860. He read law with W. D. Brandon at Butler, and was admitted to the bar in 1882. He has taken a leading rank among the members of the profession, and in 1908 was one of the leaders of the Butler bar.

William C. Findley was born March 23, 1864, in Clay Township, Butler County, and is the eldest son of Samuel and Sarah Findley. He read law with the late George A. Black and A. T. Black of Butler, and was admitted to the bar in June, 1878. He has taken an active interest in politics, was chairman of the Republican County Committee in 1888 and was delegate to the state convention in 1889.

Albert T. Scott was born in Kiskiminetas Township, Armstrong County, October 21, 1856, and is the son of Samuel and Mary S. Scott. He received a good education and in 1886 entered the office of McJunkin and Galbreath of Butler as a law student and was admitted to the bar in the spring of 1888. With the exception of a year which he spent in the service of the United States, he has since been engaged in the practice of his profession, and has a large clientage.

Elmer E. Young was born in Summit Township, Butler County, April 9, 1864, and is the son of Simon P. and Eliza Young. He began the study of law in 1887 in the office of the late Judge Charles MeCandless and was admitted to the bar in June, 1890. He continued in practice until 1905, when impaired health compelled him to give up legal work, and he retired to the Young homestead in Summit Township, where he is now residing.

Aaron E. Reiber is the youngest son of Martin and Mary Reiber of Butler and a brother to Ferdinand Reiber. He was graduated at Princeton College in 1882, read law with T. C. Campbell of Butler, and was admitted to the bar in 1885. He was elected district attorney on the Democratic ticket in 1889 and served in that capacity until 1893. Since leaving that office he has devoted his attention to the practice of his profession and was one of the promoters and secretary of the Butler Passenger Railway Company, which began business in 1901.

Porter W. Lowry is the son of Alexander Lowry of Butler, and was born February 12, 1855. He read law with Hon. E. McJunkin and was admitted to the bar in 1876. He has since been engaged in the active duties of his profession. Mr. Lowry was chairman of the Republican county committee in 1894, and reading-clerk of the Senate in 1903.

Frank X. Kohler is a native of Butler and a son of Gabriel Kohler, deceased. He read law with Hon. Charles McCandless and was admitted to the bar in September, 1882. He has since continued in the active duties of his profession and has built up a large clientele among the German-speaking residents of the county.

John R. Henninger is a native of Penn Township, Butler County, and is the son of Frederick Henninger. He was admitted to the bar January 13, 1896, and in 1901 was elected district attorney on the Democratic ticket, a position which he discharged with acceptability to the people of the county and credit to himself, for three years. Mr. Henninger is now engaged in the active duties of his profession and is considered one of the rising attorneys at the Butler bar.

Capt. Ira McJunkin was born in Butler, February 13, 1860, and is a son of James C. and Martha McJunkin. After he obtained a common school education and had attended Witherspoon Institute at Butler, he was appointed a cadet in the United States Naval Academy, at Annapolis, Md., by Col. John M. Thompson, who was then congressman from this district. He graduated from the academy in 1881, and after spending two years on the Asiatic Station in the United States Service, he was honorably discharged in 1883, and returned to Butler. He commenced the study of law the same year with Hon. E. McJunkin and was admitted to the bar April 10, 1886, since which time he has been engaged in the practice of his profession. He was elected district attorney of Butler County on the Republican ticket in 1892, and was elected to the legislature in 1906, and was one of the Republican candidates for reelection in 1908.

Clarence Walker is the son of Nathaniel and Sarah (Slater) Walker, and was born in Butler March 24, 1848. He read law with Hon. E. McJunkin and was admitted to the bar in 1871. He has since been actively engaged in the practice of his profession and is one of the leading attorneys at the Butler bar.

Ferdinand Reiber, a son of Martin Reiber of Butler, was admitted to the bar in 1869. He was elected district attorney on the Democratic ticket in 1871 and filled the position for three years. He continued to practice law until 1881, when he went into the oil business in which he has since continued.

George R. White was born in the borough of Butler in 1848 and is the son of Rev. William White, deceased, who was a prominent Episcopal minister of Butler. He received a primary education in the public schools and completed his studies in the old Butler Academy. He read law with Hon. James Bredin and was admitted to the bar of Butler County in March, 1871.

Francis J. Forquer is a brother of the late William A. Forquer and was admitted to the bar in 1879, having completed his legal studies under his brother's direction. He was associated with W. A. Forquer until the latter's death, and since then has been engaged in the active duties of his profession by himself.

William Z. Murrin is a native of Venango Township, Butler County, and the son of John and Mary (Fielding) Murrin. He was educated in the common schools of the county and Grove City College, and he then studied law under William A. Forquer, of Butler, and was admitted to the bar in March, 1891. With the exception of a short time that he practiced in Clearfield with his uncle, Francis Fielding, he has been engaged in the active duties of his profession in Butler. He formed a law partnership with Jacob M. Painter soon after his admission to the bar, which continued until 1902. In that year he formed a partnership with his brother, John Murrin, Jr., under the firm name of Murrin & Murrin. Mr. Murrin is a Democrat in politics and takes an active interest in his party organization. He has been elected a member of the school board and on the town council, has served as city solicitor, and has been prominently mentioned for higher political honors, which he has always declined.

Harry L. Graham is a native of Concord Township, and a son of Thomas Graham. He was educated at North Washington Academy and at the University of Wooster, Wooster, Ohio, read law in the office of S. F. Bowser, of Butler, and was admitted to the bar December 11, 1895. Mr. Graham is a Republican in politics, and has taken an active part in local affairs. He was elected school director of his ward and was secretary of the board in 1907 and 1908.

William C. Thompson is the son of the late Col. John M. Thompson, of Butler, and was admitted to the bar June 29, 1883. He was associated with his father in the practice of law until the latter's death, but since then has devoted most of his time to manufacturing interests.

Everett L. Ralston is a native of Slippery Rock Township, Butler County, and the eldest son of John and Hannah (McCoy) Ralston. He received his primary education in the common schools of his native township and subsequently attended Mount Union College and Grove City College, graduating from the latter school in 1881. He read law with the late Judge Charles McCandless, was admitted to the bar in 1883, since which time he has been actively engaged in the duties of his profession. In 1887 he formed a law partnership with Hon. John M. Greer under the firm name of Greer & Ralston, which continued until Judge Greer took his seat on the bench in January, 1893. Soon after the election of Judge Greer to the bench, his son John B. Greer became a member of the firm under the firm name of Ralston & Greer. Politically Mr. Ralston is a Democrat and one of the active members of his party. He was prominently mentioned as a candidate for judge in 1902, but was defeated for the nomination by Levingston McQuiston. Since 1902 Mr. Ralston has been practicing alone and has a large clientele.

J. M. Painter is a native of Clay Township, Butler County, and a son of Simon P. Painter. After receiving a good preliminary education he followed school teaching for several terms and later took up the study of law in the office of Col. John M. Thompson. He was admitted to the bar in 1890, and in 1895 formed a partnership with William Z. Murrin, which continued until 1902. He is a Republican in politics, and in 1898 was elected district attorney, filling that office for one term, and in 1894 he was appointed attorney for the county commissioners for three years. Mr. Painter has associated with him in his office his brother, Howard I. Painter, but he is practicing by himself, and has built up a large clientele.

Howard I. Painter is the son of Simon P. Painter, of Clay Township, and was admitted to the bar in 1894. He had previously obtained a good education and was engaged in school teaching in Butler County for a number of years after his admission to the bar. He was elected county superintendent of the public schools in 1898, and reelected in 1901. Since his retirement from the county superintendent's office, he has devoted his time to the practice of law, and is taking a leading rank among the younger members of the bar.

George E. Robinson is a son of the late Thomas Robinson, of Butler Borough, and was admitted to the bar in 1895. He has also been admitted to the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, and has qualified to practice in the Department of Interior, at Washington, D. C. He inherits a taste for politics from his father, and takes an active interest in the organization of the Republican party in the borough and in the county.

Parker C. Purviance, who was admitted to the Butler bar in 1835, was afterward appointed deputy attorney-general for Butler County.

Stephen Cummings is a native of Butler borough, and a nephew of the late Judge James Bredin. He was admitted to the bar May 31, 1880, and has built up a large office practice. Mr. Cummings takes an active interest in the Democratic party, but has never aspired to any political preferment.

Samuel Atwell is a native of Butler County and a son of David Atwell, of Marion Township. He read law under Hon. James M. Galbreath and was admitted to the bar May 23, 1903, and Mr. Atwell is a Republican in politics, and was the choice of his party as district attorney in 1907, but was defeated in the political upheaval that occurred that year.

Frank H. Murphy is the son of Francis

Murphy and was born in Chicora, Pennsylvania. He was educated in the common schools of his district and at Allegheny College, Meadville, read law in the office of W. A. Forquer, and was admitted to the bar June 13, 1893. He has since taken a leading rank as a counselor and enjoys a large practice.

William B. Purvis is a native of Butler Borough, and is the son of the late Joseph L. Purvis. He was educated in the common schools of the city, at Washington and Jefferson College, and subsequently entered the office of Hon. James M. Galbreath as a student of law. He was admitted to the bar July 13, 1901. He has been secretary of the Butler Driving Park and Fair Association since 1906, and is rapidly building up a paying practice.

Albert C. Troutman was born in Butler Borough and is the youngest son of Adam Troutman, a well-known business man. He was educated in the public schools of the town, Washington and Jefferson College, and the law department of the University of Pennsylvania, and was admitted to practice at the Butler bar June 1, 1901. He at once took a leading rank among the younger members at the bar, and in 1907 was elected district attorney, on the Democratic ticket.

William H. Martin was born in Penn Township, Butler County, and is the son of John Martin, deceased, who was a well known resident of the county. He read law in the office of Frank M. Eastman, was admitted to the bar September 22, 1882, and practiced in Beaver and Westmoreland Counties and in West Virginia. Mr. Martin was a Democrat in politics until 1906, when he became affiliated with the Prohibition party of Butler County, and was chairman of the county committee in 1908.

Newton C. McCollough is a son of Peter McCollough and a native of Chicora, Pennsylvania. He was admitted to the bar November 5, 1896, having previously served two terms as county superintendent of public schools, and taught in the schools of the county. In addition to his law practice Mr. McCollough is engaged in the real estate and insurance business with Leslie P. Hazlett, Esq., as a partner. He is also actively engaged in the oil business, and is one of the successful operators in the local oil fields.

Hunter E. Coulter is a native of Butler County and was admitted to practice at the Butler bar, January 21, 1888. Mr. Coulter is a Democrat in politics and for the past fifteen years has filled the office of secretary to the town council.

John W. Coulter is a native of Scrubgrass, Venango County, and the son of Rev. John R. Coulter, deceased, who was a well-known Presbyterian minister. He was admitted to the bar September 8, 1891, and has continued to practice since that time. He is a Republican in politics and has been a candidate for district attorney on several occasions, and run a large vote.

Samuel Walker is a native of Butler Borough and a son of the late Capt. Samuel Walker. He was educated in the common schools of the borough, at State College, and the University of Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia, and was admitted to the bar July 15, 1899. He at once took a leading rank among the younger members of the bar, and in 1904 was the choice of the Republican party for district attorney. His election at the fall election was a mark of his popularity and the esteem in which he is held by the citizens of the community.

Levi M. Wise was born in Jackson Township, Butler County, and is the son of Jacob F. and Sarah (Moyer) Wise. He was educated in the public schools and at Edinborough State Normal School and was admitted to the bar September 5, 1888, since when he has continued in the active duties of his profession. In 1903 Mr. Wise embarked in the newspaper enterprise and became part owner of the daily and weekly Eagle, of Butler, and since has obtained entire control of that publication. He is first of all a lawyer, however, and gives nearly all of his time to his practice. He is one of the active Republicans of the county and has taken a leading part in the party organization for the last fifteen years.

John H. Wilson is a native of Harmony, and was admitted to the bar June 1, 1894. He has been associated with Livingston McQuiston and J. C. Vanderlin since that time, and in 1907 and 1908 was chosen city solicitor by the town council of Butler. He is a Democrat in politics and has been the choice of his party for district attorney and for the legislature, but was defeated with the rest of his party ticket.

Theodore C. H. Keck was born in Butler, Pennsylvania, and is the son of Jacob Keck, Esq. He was admitted to the bar February 26, 1900, and has taken a leading rank among the younger members of the bar.

John H. Jackson is a native of Butler Borough, and was educated at the public schools and at Washington and Jefferson College. He subsequently read law with Williams & Mitchell, of Butler, and was admitted to practice February 26, 1900.

John C. Graham was born in Butler Borough and is the son of the late Walter L. Graham. He was educated in the public schools and at Lafayette College, and was admitted to practice March 11, 1892. Mr. Graham has devoted most of his attention to real estate, and in 1908 was secretary of the Butler Board of Trade.

William McDowell was born in 1858 at Kirkmuirhill, Parish of Lesmahagow, Lanarkshire, Scotland. He came to this country with his parents when a young man, attended State College, Pennsylvania, and afterward the State University of Columbus, Ohio, and began life as a civil and mining engineer. Later he pursued his course of studies at the Normal University, Ada, Ohio, and in the law department of the University of Indiana, and was admitted to practice in the various courts of Indiana, June 20, 1900. Subsequently he pursued the study of law in the office of John L. McCutcheon, of Pittsburg, and took a post-graduate course at the University of Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia. He was admitted to the Butler bar July 28, 1903, and has since taken a leading rank among the younger members of the bar.

Edgar H. Negley was born in Butler and is a son of the late John H. Negley, Esq. He was educated in the public schools, read law in the office of his father and was admitted to the bar in March, 1899. Previous to this he spent one year in the service of the United States in the Spanish-American War. Mr. Negley is one of the active Republicans of the borough and has served as a member of the school board from the Third Ward.

Lewis P. Litzinger is a native of Chicora, Pennsylvania, and was admitted to the bar December 24, 1902. He received a preliminary education in the common schools and later attended the Georgetown University in the District of Columbia, graduating from the law department in 1902. The same year he was admitted to practice in the supreme court and the court of appeals in the District of Columbia, of which Washington City is a part.

The following attorneys have practiced at various times outside of Butler Borough: At Parker City, J. P. Coulter in 1872, Wallace Martin in 1874; Slippery Rock, Charles C. McCarns in 1890, Clarence G. McGee in 1900; at Greece City, during the oil excitement, J. K. Wallace in 1873; at Chicora, J. H. Bowman in 1878, Joseph H. Cunningham in 1874, Ezra Crossman in 1878, M. B. McBride in 1871, J. S. McKay in 1873, G. B. McCalmont in 1873, Mark G. McCaslin in 1873, Joseph M. McCracken in 1873, George J. Wolfe in 1877; at Harrisville, D. J. Kyle in 1878.

There have also been a few others admitted to the Butler County bar who have never practiced in the county, either removing soon after their admission to other localities, or entering into other businesses or professions, whose names may not be here mentioned.

CHAPTER VIII

TRANSPORTATION FACILITIES

The first mention of public roads in connection with this county is found in the transactions of the county commissioners of Allegheny County under date of November 6, 1802. In December of the same year mention is made of a road that had been viewed and opened from Voris' cabin in Deer Township, Allegheny County, to Findley's cabin in the original township of Middlesex in Butler County. The second road mentioned is that built from Isaac Voris' house in Deer Township, Allegheny County, to Robert Galbreath's house on Big Buffalo Creek, in Butler County. This road was viewed in June, 1803. In November of the same year David Gilliland and four others were paid for laying out twelve miles of road from the east line of Butler County to the county seat.

From February, 1804, to May 1812, ninety-five petitions for roads were considered by the commissioners of Butler County. The first was for a road from Butler to Freeport on the Allegheny River and the last for a road from the point where the Pittsburg and Freeport Road crossed the Butler-Allegheny line to the line between Butler and Armstrong Counties near the mouth of Buffalo Creek. All of the ninety-five petitions were not granted, but a sufficient number of roads were opened to connect the principal settlements with the county seat.

A strong plea for additional roads was made in 1805 by Dr. Detmar Basse Muller, the founder of Zelenople, who, it seems, had already gone to some expense on his own account in the matter. His petition to the commissioners, though published in a previous history of the county, is of interest, both as showing the attention that was then being given to this subject and also because of the improvements introduced or proposed at that early date by Dr. Muller—in particular his importation of fine cattle and sheep, said to have been the first of the kind in the county. The petition reads as follows:

“WOULD HUMBLY show, that your petitioner labors under great disadvantage for want of good roads to and from the town of Zelenople. I would further state that I have been at great expense in cutting roads and making large improvements for the best to this settlement. That I procured for this country with great difficulties Spanish sheep, which cost 100 dollars per head 700 miles from this place, also, the best breed of English cattle in the United States, and that it would be necessary to have roads for me to accomplish my enterprises as well as for the public in general as a people in this settlement, which is now increasing very fast and probably will soon be a town of very considerable circumstance. I have now a good sawmill built, and in case the road from Pittsburgh to Mercertown can be laid out, opened and made through Zelenople, I shall proceed to build a merchant mill and furnace. A furnace will be of great utility to this country, as it costs as much to transport the iron to this country as it cost to purchase the iron where it is made. Now it will not be possible to build these works without roads. I am still willing to do myself more for the establishment of the road, by building a good and substantial bridge across the Connoquenessing Creek, opposite the town of Zelenople, at my own expense in case the road shall be laid out and made from Pittsburg to Mercertown through Zelenople. Now that the court will confirm this road or appoint some proper persons to lay it out as the law directs, for this your petitioner will ever pray."

Robert Morris also, prior to 1803, instructed his agent at Butler to give financial aid to road construction whenever possible. This led to the establishment, in 1805, of the state and county road leading by Cemetery Hill and known as the Graded Road. In 1821 the road passed into the control of the Butler and Pittsburg Turnpike Company. An easier route was selected and the state aided in the construction of the road from Butler to Erie, making it one of the great highways between the forks of the Ohio and the Great Lakes.

THE PITTSBURG AND MERCER ROAD.

The original Pittsburg and Mercer Road, called the Pittsburg and Mercertown Road, as shown by the Muller petition, was established in 1805. It passed through the western portion of the county through Zelenople and Harmony, and is the present Franklin Road. It was a favorite route with travelers going to the northwest from Pittsburg.

THE EBENSBURG STAGE LINE.

The Ebensburg and Butler Stage Line was established in May, 1825. W. W. Bell contracted to carry the mails between the two points by way of Indiana and Kittanning in eighteen hours, and guaranteed passengers close connection at Ebensburg with the Pittsburg and Alexandria Stage. In his advertisement, published in December, he assured prospective passengers that the clay turnpike over which his route lay was very much superior to the stone roads of the southern route. He made the trip between the two points once a week, leaving Butler on Sunday and arriving the following Wednesday.

A CANAL PROJECT.

A canal convention was held at New Castle in May, 1826, which had under consideration the construction of a canal from Pittsburg to Erie. Butler County was represented in this convention by William Ayres and Jacob Mechling.

THE ALLEGHENY AND SUSQUEHANNA CANAL.

The question of connecting the Allegheny and Susquehanna Rivers by a canal came up in 1825, and on January 29 of that year a meeting was held at Neyman's Hotel in Butler at which John Potts presided, with Jacob Mechling secretary. The meeting appointed as a committee to draft a memorial to the legislature John Bredin, John Gilmore, John Neyman, John Gilchrist and William Beatty. This committee prepared a lengthy address to the legislature then in session, but there was nothing definite in its character. In March of the same year John Gilmore, Jacob Mechling, Hugh McKee, William Gibson and John Bredin were constituted a local committee for the purpose of appointing delegates to the state convention of internal improvement. John Gilmore and John Bredin were appointed and attended the canal convention held at Harrisburg in August of that year. This movement resulted in nothing so far as Butler County was concerned, and is referred to merely to show the thought of the time upon the important subject of internal improvements and upon means of communication with the great centers of commerce.

THE PITTSBURG AND ERIE MAIL ROUTE.

In 1827 A. McGill & Company operated a line of mail stages between Pittsburg and Erie, the route passing through Butler. The fare from Pittsburg to Butler was $1.50, from Pittsburg to Meadville $4, and from Pittsburg to Erie $6.50. The stage left Pittsburg every morning, arriving in Butler the same evening; it left Butler for Meadville the next morning at four o'clock, arrived at Meadville the second evening, and at four o'clock A. M. on the third day left Meadville for Erie, arriving at its destination about noon. The return trip was made on the same schedule, thus avoiding the dangers of night travel. These old stages were drawn by four and sometimes six horses, and their arrivals and departures were watched with as much interest as is displayed by the youngsters of the present day over the arrival of the steam cars.

The Butler and Kittanning Turnpike Road was completed in 1828, and opened a large territory for Butler's trade. The officers of this company were John Gilmore, president, and William Hagerty, secretary.

THE BUTLER AND FREEPORT PIKE.

A new era to the pioneers of Butler County was announced in 1828, when the first steamboat, which ascended the Allegheny River, landed at Franklin in Venango County and discharged its cargo of 150 passengers and thirty tons of freight. This boat was known as the "William B. Duncan" and was of eighty tons measurement. It touched Butler County only at Freeport and at Parker's Landing, but its arrival on the waters of the Allegheny was soon after followed by the establishing of a post route from Freeport to Butler. The Freeport and Butler route was established in May, 1828, and during the same year a route was established from Anderson's Creek to Kittanning, one from Lawrenceburg to Mercer, and one from Harrisville to Whitestown.

In March, 1830, the "Allegheny," the first stern-wheeler, steamed up the river to Franklin, where she arrived on the 18th of that month.

In March, 1849, McElwain & Company established a stage line between Butler and Freeport, placing two four-horse coaches on the route. The schedule of arrivals and departures at Freeport was arranged in accordance with that of the Pittsburg packet-boats.

In October, 1859, J. W. McKee established a line of coaches from Butler to Freeport, making connections at Freeport with the Allegheny Valley Railroad, and reducing the time of travel to Pittsburg to six hours.

The Butler and Freeport Turnpike was constructed in 1833, and in 1845 a turnpike was constructed from Butler to Brady's Bend (then called the Great Western), the commissioners being David Dougal and George W. Reed of Butler County and William Hart of Armstrong County.

THE NATIONAL ROAD CONVENTION.

The National Road Convention which favored the construction of macadamized roads from Cumberland west and south to the Pacific and Gulf coasts, was held at Butler January 21, 1844, and was attended by 500 delegates. Gen. John N. Purviance of Butler was chosen president. Conventions were also held at Butler in 1845 and 1846, but nothing of importance appears to have been transacted.

THE BUTLER AND ALLEGHENY PLANK ROAD.

The question of building a plank road from Butler to Allegheny was discussed as early as 1848, but not until February, 1849, was any definite action taken. At that time a meeting was held in Butler at which John Negley presided, with John Duffy and John McKee vice-presidents, and James Campbell and Louis Z. Mitchell secretaries. This meeting appointed a committee to provide for a charter for a company authorizing the building of a plank road from Butler to Allegheny. John Bredin, C. C. Sullivan, J. G. Campbell, R. McNair, and George Miller were chosen members of this committee.

On April 5, 1849, the legislature passed an act authorizing the governor to incorporate the Allegheny City and Butler Plank Road Company. In May, 1850, the commissioners of Butler and Allegheny Counties at a meeting held at Bakerstown considered the matter under this act and ordered books to be opened at several points for receiving subscriptions for stock. In February, 1851, the citizens of Tarentum, Saxtonburg and Butler worked for the enterprise and by the close of the month the Allegheny and Butler Plank Road Company was organized with S. M. Lane, president; William Campbell, David Walker, T. H. Lyon of Butler, Charles F. Spang and T. W. Shaw, of Allegheny, managers, and James Jones, of Allegheny, treasurer. Ground was broken June 16, 1851, by contractor Walker of Butler, and the era of plank roads was introduced. John N. Purviance was elected president of the company in 1852 to succeed Mr. Lane, and Col. A. N. Mylert to succeed David Walker as manager. In November of the same year Dunlap McLaughlin of Butler was chosen treasurer and since that time the management of the road has been practically in the hands of Butler people.

The report of the commissioners appointed by the governor to inspect the road was filed July 7, 1856, and on the same date a charter was issued by Governor James Pollock and signed by John McPherrin Sullivan, Secretary of State. The commission that inspected the road was composed of John Duffy, Robert Carnahan, and Matthew White. The name of James Bredin first appears as secretary of the company in 1856, and he continued to hold that position until his death in 1906. During the last thirty years of his life he was treasurer and general manager of the company as well as secretary. The presidents that succeeded Mr. Purviance were William Campbell, Sr., R. M. Gibson, and William Campbell, Jr. Upon the death of the latter in 1907, W. D. Brandon of Butler was chosen president and D. H. Sutton of Butler was elected secretary and manager to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Mr. Bredin. The Butler Savings and Trust Company is the present treasurer.

In the early days of the road about ten miles in Butler County was constructed of stone and about the same number of miles in Allegheny County was constructed of heavy flag stone similar to a pavement, while the plank part of the road was constructed of split logs that had been dressed with a hand axe. About 1880 the entire length of the road was rebuilt with sawed plank and placed in an excellent condition. The Allegheny and Butler Plank Road proved a success from its first year and has paid its stockholders a neat profit on their investment. It is now probably the oldest plank road in operation in the state. In 1905 the commissioners of Allegheny County purchased that part of the road from Etna to the Butler County line for $65,000.00 and converted it into a macadamized county road. About the same time an effort was made to have the commissioners of Butler County purchase the road from Butler to the Allegheny County line, but this movement failed and the company still operates the division of the road in Butler County.

THE PERRYVILLE PLANK ROAD.

The Browington and Perrysville Plank Road Company was organized March 8, 1851, when subscription books were ordered to be opened. The signers of this order were Thomas H. Bracken, David Shannon, Jonathan Ransen, M. F. White, Joseph McElwain, Henry Buhl, Samuel Marshall, Alexander Graham, and John Fletcher. The organization was completed on the 2nd of July, when Samuel Marshall was elected president and Thomas H. Bracken vice-president. The legislature of 1852 authorized the construction of the Zelenople and Perrysville Plank Road and empowered the company to borrow $20,000.00 to build it. This road was in use for many years but was abandoned after the advent of the Pittsburg & Western Railroad.

The Butler and Callensburg Plank Road Company originated in the meetings of March, 1851, and in the Fairview meeting of March 24 of the same year. Nothing was ever accomplished by this company.

The Centerville and New Castle Plank Road Company was incorporated in 1852, and in November of that year Abraham Ziegler was elected president, Francis Wallace treasurer, and John Levis secretary.

FIRST RAILROADS.

More than thirty-five years elapsed from the first agitation in Butler County on the question of railroads until a road was finally completed into the borough of Butler. As early as 1836 a survey of the Freeport and New Castle railroad was made, locating a line through Butler Borough, and crossing the county from east to west. The preliminary work of this survey was made by Dr. Charles T. Whipple, who performed his work in the field so well that his field notes were sought after in later years, when the Northwestern Railroad Company entertained the idea of building a road across the county.

The question of building a railroad from the Pennsylvania Central Railroad through Freeport, Butler and New Castle to connect with the Cleveland and Mahoning road near the Ohio line, was agitated in 1852 and culminated in a meeting held in Butler which was presided over by J. G. Campbell, Andrew Carns acting as secretary. A committee of correspondence was chosen, which was composed of C. C. Sullivan, John Graham, James Campbell, Samuel A. Purviance, and G. W. Smith.

THE NORTHWESTERN RAILROAD.

The Northwestern Railroad Company, which resulted in financial disaster and almost endless litigation, was chartered February 9, 1853, and the first meeting of the directors was held at Butler June 1, 1853, when W. Warner was chosen engineer. On August 16, the president of the company, was authorized to produce the Lawrence County subscription of $200,000 and the Butler County subscription of $250,000, the resolutions providing for the construction of a road from Blairsville to Freeport, thirty-five miles, thence to Butler, twenty-three miles, and thence to New Castle, thirty-one miles, a total of eighty-nine miles. On May 10, 1854, a contract was made with Malone, Painter, Clark and Gouder, which bound that firm to complete the whole line for $3,800,000 before May 1, 1856. On June 1, 1856, only the grading and ballasting of the first division from Blairsville to Freeport was completed, and this failure to complete the whole line warranted the cancellation of the old contract. A new contract was made which was less favorable to the subscribers and by the close of 1856 the subscribing counties were in revolution, for their bonds had almost entirely passed out of official hands and there was little to show for the money expended.

Enthusiasm for this road was at a high pitch in Butler in 1854, when on the 22nd of February the news reached the town that the Common Council of the city of Philadelphia had appropriated $750,000 for the construction of the road. So jubilant were the Butler people that they celebrated the event by a grand illumination of the town. Before the close of August, 1854, a showing was made on David Walker's contract of the Northwestern Railroad four miles west of Butler, in Center Township. The big cut which is still in existence is 3,000 feet long and 71½ feet deep. One hundred and ninety-seven men and eighty-four horses were employed at this cut during 1855 and part of 1856, the whole force being under the superintendence of Smith Agnew. The entire excavation, part of which is in solid rock, was made by hand, and the material carted away to the dump in horse carts, a Herculean task that would now be accomplished with a steam shovel and a train of dump cars. In January, 1855, the Summit cut, five miles southeast of Butler in Summit Township, was being worked by Contractor Moorehead. Operations on both of these contracts ceased after 1856 and they resulted in financial disaster to all the parties concerned with them.

Col. A. N. Meylert, who was the first treasurer of the company, resigned in February, 1854, and D. Sankey, of Lawrence County, was elected. In October, 1854, a petition for an injunction against the payment of the Philadelphia subscription was filed in the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, and considered at the session held in Erie. Hon. C. C. Sullivan and John Graham of Butler represented the railroad company, and on their argument the petition was dismissed. The pent-up discontent of the people of Butler and Lawrence Counties about the management of the Northwestern Railroad Company found expression in the local newspapers, and the county commissioners were strongly urged to resist further payment toward the road. Prior to March, 1858, a sequestrator had charge of the company's affairs and in March the anxiously awaited report was issued which had the effect of increasing the discontent heard on all sides and determined those in authority to resist payment of the county bonds.

The trial of the Butler County Bond Case in the United States Circuit Court at Pittsburg was heard in May, 1859. The case is on the records as Jacob C. Curtis vs. The County of Butler. The county was represented by John N. Purviance, James Bredin, and John Graham, of Butler, and Thomas M. Marshall and A. M. Brown, of Pittsburg. The point was made that the commissioners of Butler County agreed only to pay interest on the bonds until the railroad would be completed. The contract for construction made with Malone, Painter, Clark and Gouder in May, 1854, provided that the road was to be completed in June, 1856. Little or nothing was done in Butler County, so that in August, 1856, a new contract was made which provided that the contractors would return to the company $331,000 in Butler and Lawrence County bonds, and take in lieu $50,000 in cash, $31,000 in the company's notes, and $250,000 in first mortgage bonds. This extraordinary proceeding was denounced by the Butler men, but Lawrence and Butler Counties were compelled to pay the bills. The commissioners of Butler County finally compromised with the holders of the county bonds issued to the Northwestern Railroad Company, the consideration being sixty per cent. of the face value. Sixty-five thousand dollars' worth of bonds were thus disposed of, and in May, 1865, $13,000 worth of these bonds were still outstanding. The county did not finally get free from the debt until about 1870.

THE ALLEGHENY VALLEY RAILROAD.

The advantages of railroad connection with the outside world were obtained in a limited way by the construction of the Allegheny Valley Railroad from Pittsburg to the mouth of the Kiskiminetas River. The company was organized February 12, 1852, and the road completed in October, 1855. The people of Butler patronized this road by using the old stage line from Butler to Freeport.

THE WEST PENN RAILROAD.

The Western Pennsylvania Railroad Company, commonly called the "West Penn," was incorporated March 22, 1860, and works under that and the special act of April 27, 1864, together with the supplemental acts of March 9, 1865, March 22, 1865, April 17, 1866, April 10, 1867, February 25, 1870, and March 25, 1871. One of the provisions of the act of 1864 is of special interest to Butler County people and reads as follows:

"Provided, that the right to use and operate the road by said Western Pennsylvania Railroad between Freeport and Allegheny City shall not be enjoyed until contracts are entered into with responsible parties for the completion of a railroad from Freeport to the town of Butler; And provided, that said contract shall be entered into within one year and the road completed within five years."

The late John H. Negley of Butler, who was a member of the legislature in 1864-65 contributed some history in regard to the above quoted proviso a few years before his death. Butler County had been disappointed a number of times in regard to the building of the Butler branch of the Western Pennsylvania Railroad, and the patience of the county's representatives in the legislature with Col. Thomas A. Scott, who was the political manager of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, was well nigh exhausted. At the session of the legislature in the winter of 1865, Col. Scott wanted Mr. Negley and William Hazlett, the other representative from Butler County, to vote for some special legislation that was desired by the city of Philadelphia. It so happened that the two Butler County representatives were in a position to either pass or defeat the bill, and Mr. Negley was quick to see the advantage he was placed in. When Col. Scott approached him in regard to the Philadelphia legislation Mr. Negley called his attention to the above proviso in the act of 1864. Mr. Scott did not want to enter into a contract or agreement to build the Butler branch at once, and resorted to all kinds of subterfuges to avoid the issue. Negley and Hazlett "stood pat" and the reluctant railroad magnate finally came to their terms and signed his name to the agreement. The contract was carried out on the part of Col. Scott, and in September, 1869, twenty-one sections of the Butler Branch Railroad from Butler to Freeport were placed in the hands of contractors. Shortly after work began on the Freeport end, and in February, 1870, ground was broken at Butler. The work was prosecuted with vigor and the road formally opened January 18, 1871. The event was made the occasion of a great celebration in Butler and along the line of the road, the festivities lasting two days. An excursion over the road was indulged in, the number of excursionists leaving Butler being 180. At Saxon Station, the number of excursionists was increased to 200, and on the return of the train to Butler in the evening a banquet was given which was patronized by 134 subscribers. The proceeds of the banquet, including the sum realized from the sale of dishes, knives and forks, muslin, etc., amounted to $622.98, the expenses being $520.01. The remaining amount was distributed among the poor by Henry C. Heineman of Butler, who was appointed a committee for that purpose. The first train run into Butler consisted of five coaches, a baggage car, and locomotive. W. B. Thompson was the conductor in charge and Jack Adams was the engineer.

MOCK FUNERAL OF THE STAGE COACH.

Perhaps the most interesting feature of the festivities in Butler was the mock funeral of the Butler and Freeport Stage Coach. The leading spirit in this affair was D. L. Walker, the superintendent of the old stage line, and he was assisted by many of the well-known citizens of the town who acted as mourners and pallbearers. The old coach was draped in black, while the trappings of the horses were of the same character. The mourners were all dressed in black clothes, silk hats and wore white gloves, and the pallbearers were given the place of honor inside the old coach. Walker acted as driver and, escorted by the Butler militia, made a round of the town. The old stage was deposited in a building in a back alley, where it remained for thirty years, and was finally resurrected in 1900 and took part in the civic parade in Butler held in commemoration of the centennial anniversary of the county. Alexander M. Hays, who was one of the drivers on the old stage line from Freeport to Butler, and is now one of the few surviving members of that interesting race of "Jehus" which long ago furl'd their whips and dismounted from the box forever, was a visitor at the centennial celebration and upon seeing the old stage coach, dedicated the following lines to its memory:

"It stands in the stable yard, under the eaves,
It leans to one side and is covered with leaves;
It once was the pride of the gay and the fair,
But it has now gone to ruin—that old stage there.

"It is battered and tattered, and it little avails
That once it was varnished and glistened with nails;
The varnish is cracked now, crooked and square,
Like canvas on top of that old stage there.

"See! Here is the thorough-brace, and here is the place
For the pole for the horses—but gone is their race.
It was cushioned with plush, it was wadded with hair,
As the birds have discovered in that old stage there.

"It was built in Troy. Here, under the seat
Is a nestful of eggs; 'tis the favorite retreat

Of an old speckled hen, who has hatched,
I dare swear,
Quite an army of chicks in that old stage there.

"I remember when I drove it on the Butler Plank Road,
The élite of Butler was often its load.
When we dashed o'er the bridge and on through the square,
All Butler Town welcomed that old stage there.

"Oh, the scandal it knows; oh, the tales it could tell
Of the young and the old, the rake and the belle!

But those tales of the times which would raise up your hair
Will ne'er be revealed by that old stage there.

"But here is a thing that remains to be said—
It deserves better fate than an old stable shed;
It should be painted and varnished with greatest of care,
And sent back to Butler—that old stage there.

"But as years roll around I suppose 'twill stand where
'Tis a home for the fowls and birds of the air;
But the mem'ry of the days when I drove it will e'er Still cling, fondly cling, to that old stage there."

The construction of the twenty-one miles of this road cost $400,000, and was carried out under the authority of the act of April 27, 1864, containing the proviso above quoted. In 1888 the road was leased to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company for a period of forty years, and the latter company still continues to operate the line.

The completion of this railroad marked a new era in the history of Butler Borough and of the county, and was the beginning of a period of growth and improvement which has since been realized in a notable increase in population and many other evidences of progress and prosperity.

The only serious accident that has occurred on this line happened on August 16, 1889, when a wreck occurred one mile west of Sarver Station which resulted in the death of William J. Powers of Pittsburg, and Katie, a four-year-old child of Mrs. M. Farrell, of Butler. Twenty-four persons were injured, among whom were George Spang, Mrs. David Gosser, Joseph Gray, and Mrs. Helen McJunkin, of Butler.

THE CONNOQUEENESSING VALLEY RAILROAD COMPANY.

In March, 1865, bills were passed in the legislature chartering the Connoqueenessing Valley Railroad Company and the Bear Creek Railroad Company. The Bear Creek Road was to run from Sharpsburg on the Pittsburg and Erie road to Martinsburg in Butler County, and among the incorporators of the company were Messrs. Bredin and Kerr of Butler. The commissioners named in the act of March 22nd were J. G. Campbell, J. N. Purviance, J. G. Muntz, E. McJunkin, R. C. McAboy, Thomas Robinson, A. Lusk, J. Levis, A. Ziegler, W. Irwin, J. M. McKinney, W. G. Rose, S. Griffith, Vance Stewart, J. R. Hanna, D. L. Imbrie, J. J. Cuthbertson, J. Ferguson, and J. W. Blanchard. Work was commenced on this road in Butler County in the fall of 1872, when the right of way for twelve miles was cut through the forest. Operations were then abandoned and the road was never completed.

THE PARKER AND KARNS CITY ROAD.

The narrow-gauge railroad from Parker's Landing to Karns City was promoted by S. D. Karns, who was elected temporary president at the meeting held August 20, 1872. The company was formally organized on the 27th of the same month, Mr. Karns presiding. At this meeting the committee on stock reported a subscription of $22,750. By May, 1873, the stock was increased to $100,000 and in August of the same year the work of construction was begun. Five miles of the road were graded by the end of October, five hundred men being engaged on grading the remaining five miles to Karns City. At this time the officers of the company were S. D. Karns, president, Charles P. Badger, superintendent, W. C. Mobley, secretary, and they, with Fullerton Parker, Robert L. Brown, and William Phillips, formed the directorate. The capital was increased to $150,000 and contracts were made for the rolling stock. The high viaduct, four hundred feet long and seventy-five feet high, over the north branch of Bear Creek, was completed in December, and on Christmas day four passenger trains were run south to Martinsburg, and four north to the Parker junction with the Allegheny Valley Railroad. The road was opened to Karns City for regular traffic in April, 1874.

In April, 1876, the Karns City and Butler Railroad Company was organized by the same parties interested in the Karns City and Parker Road, the citizens of Butler and Millerstown subscribing for its bonds. This road was constructed and opened for business in November, 1876, and continued in successful operation until June 10, 1881, when with the Parker and Karns City Railroad, it was consolidated with the Pittsburg and Western Railroad. The old narrow-gauge road from Butler to Parker had a good patronage, paid its projectors a handsome profit upon their investments, and demonstrated the practicability of narrow-gauge railroads in the oil regions. Much sport was made of its rolling stock, and it was a common remark among the patrons of the road that there was no danger of being hurt by the train leaving the tracks, as that part of the road never had a serious accident to its passenger trains, and never killed anybody.

THE PITTSBURG AND WESTERN RAILROAD.

The Pittsburg and Western Railroad Company was originally organized September 7, 1877, under the name of the Pittsburg, New Castle and Lake Erie Railroad. The original projectors of this road were Austin Pierce of Harmony, and Gen. James S. Negley, of Pittsburg. The road was opened between Etna and Zelenople in December, 1878, and was at first a narrow gauge. During the summer of 1879 the company became financially embarrassed on account of the general want of confidence in railroad enterprises and their inability to market their bonds and meet their obligations. The road was sold at sheriff's sale August 27, 1879, and purchased by Major A. M. Brown of Pittsburg, who organized the Pittsburg and Western Railroad Company, with James Callery of Pittsburg as its president. Under the new management the road was completed from Zelenople to Allegheny City and from Zelenople west to Wurtemberg.

In June, 1881, the Parker and Karns City, the Karns City and Butler, the Red Bank and Youngstown, and the Pittsburg East and West Railroads were consolidated with the Pittsburg and Western. James Callery was president of this company, Solon Humphreys, vice-president, A. J. Thomas, treasurer, W. K. Hyndman, manager, and W. C. Mobley, of the Karns City and Parker road, general agent. The road was extended from Wurtemberg to Youngstown, Ohio, and from Hiawatha Station, or Callery Junction, to Butler, in 1881, and the following year the main line from Youngstown to Allegheny City was changed to the standard gauge. In 1887 the branch from Callery Junction to Butler was changed to a standard gauge, and in 1904 the old narrow-gauge division from Butler to Foxburg was changed to the standard gauge. In the fall of 1881 the Pittsburg and Western was a link in the Wabash chain from Wurtemberg to Allegheny, and in 1882 the road was leased by the Baltimore and Ohio Company, and in 1893 the latter company secured complete control of the Pittsburg and Western system.

THE BESSEMER RAILROAD.

The Bessemer Railroad had its beginnings in the construction of the old Pittsburg, Shenango and Lake Erie Railroad, which was constructed from Shenango to Pardo in Mercer County in 1869, and completed to Harrisville in Butler County in July, 1872. The Pittsburg, Shenango and Lake Erie Company had its inception in the charter of the Bear Creek Railroad Company, which was granted March 20, 1865. The name was changed by a legislative act in April, 1867, to the Shenango and Allegheny, which name it bore until February 11, 1888, when a reorganization occurred and the title Pittsburg, Shenango and Lake Erie Railroad Company was adopted. Originally intended as a coal feeder to the Atlantic and Great Western, which ran north of Butler County, its purpose was to reach the coal field in the northern part of this county. In January, 1876, the road was extended to Hilliard in Washington Township, Butler County, and several branches were built in 1880, 1882 and 1883, tapping the coal fields in Butler and Mercer Counties.

In February, 1882, the Connoquenessing Valley Railroad Company was chartered to construct a road from Butler northward to the Shenango and Allegheny Railroad, connecting with the latter at Branchton. J. T. Blair, who was superintendent of the Shenango and Allegheny Railroad, was one of the principal promoters and stockholders of the new railroad, and he, with Thomas P. Fowler and A. H. Steel, financed the enterprise. The contract for building the branch from a point within one mile of Coal Town to Butler was let to W. W. Reed in August, 1882, and the work was completed August 9, 1883. Reed's contract provided that he should complete the road before six o'clock on August 9th. His hopes were suddenly dashed to earth on the morning of that day by some thirty of his laborers striking and refusing to go to work. Other laborers were quickly pushed into the field, and the contract was completed on time. On August 27th an excursion train was run from Greenville to Butler, carrying about nine hundred passengers from various points along the line, who were given the freedom of the town and entertained by the citizens of Butler.

The Bessemer and Lake Erie Railroad was organized in 1897 and is the successor of the old Pittsburg, Shenango and Lake Erie, which was completed from Shenango to Butler in 1882. The financial backers of this road were the Carnegie interests of Pittsburg, which at that time were seeking an outlet from the mills at Homestead and Braddock to the ore docks at Conneaut Harbor on Lake Erie. After the old Shenango and Lake Erie Road had been purchased, the lines were extended from Girard, Pennsylvania, to Conneaut, Ohio, and the old line from Shenango to Butler was rebuilt, making it a double track road. At the same time an extension of the road was built from Butler to North Bessemer in Allegheny County, which is used principally as a freight road. The construction of the Bessemer road placed Butler on a through line from Pittsburg to the lake, and gave the northern portion of the county an outlet for its coal and limestone.

BUFFALO, ROCHESTER AND PITTSBURG.

In 1899 the Buffalo, Rochester and Pittsburg Railroad Company, which had previously been operating in Jefferson and Indiana Counties, invaded Butler County and extended their line from Mosgrove on the Allegheny River through Clearfield and Summit Townships to Butler. This company had made traffic arrangement with the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad to reach Pittsburg and New Castle, and under this agreement the Harmony cut-off was constructed which leads from Riebold Station on the Butler division of the road to Harmony Junction on the main line. This cut-off is used for freight traffic west and the passenger trains on the B. R. & P. R. R. use the B. & O. tracks from Butler to Pittsburg. The advent of the B. R. & P. Road marked an era in the internal improvements of the county, and gave the town of Butler the advantages of a trunk line road from east to west.

THE WESTERN AND ALLEGHENY RAILROAD.

Following the organization of the Great Lakes Coal Company and the taking up of a large amount of coal land in the northern part of Butler County and in Armstrong County, the Western and Allegheny Railroad Company was organized for the purpose of giving the coal company an outlet to the lakes. In 1903-4 the company constructed a road from Queens Junction on the Bessemer Railroad in Clap Township through Concord and Fairview Townships to the Butler County line at Kaylor, and thence to Brady's Bend in Armstrong County. Subsequently the line was extended from Queens Junction west to New Castle, following the Muddy Creek Valley to the county line. One of the principal promoters of the enterprise was Thomas Liggett of Pittsburg, who is vice-president of the company. This road opened up extensive coal fields in Concord and Fairview Townships, and also furnished an outlet for the residents of Brady, Franklin, Muddy Creek and Worth Townships that had previously been shut out from railroad communication.

WINFIELD BRANCH.

The Winfield Branch is a tributary of the West Penn Railroad and was first promoted about 1890 by Joseph Brittain, of Butler, who, at that time, was developing the limestone and other mineral deposits of Winfield Township. The road was constructed from Monroeville in Buffalo Township to West Winfield in Winfield Township. At the time the road was promoted West Winfield was known as Rough Run, and Butler parties were engaged in manufacturing salt and developing the limestone in that district.

THE ARGENTINE AND EAU CLAIRE ROAD.

On May 14, 1906, Harry A. Kinsey, Norman Sebrig, John Forsythe, and Edward Lloyd filed articles of association in the recorder's office of Butler County for the Argentine and Eau Claire Railroad Company, with a capital stock of $30,000. The company proposed to build a road from Argentine in Washington Township to Eau Claire in Venango Township, a distance of about three miles. The purpose of the road was to reach the coal fields in the two townships, but nothing has been done towards its construction.

In 1903 the Pennsylvania Lines constructed a road from Volant in Lawrence County to Redmond Station on the John Tate farm in Slippery Rock Township. This line was built for a coal road and an outlet for the mines located at Redmond.

A branch of the Bessemer Road was constructed in 1907 to the Goff-Kirby mines in Venango Township, and in 1908 passenger trains were run on this branch to Degan Station, which is also the name of the postoffice at that point.

ELECTRIC PASSENGER RAILWAYS.

While many companies had been chartered for the purpose of building electric railroads in Butler County and in Butler Borough, nothing definite was accomplished until 1899, when J. V. Ritts, A. L.

Reiber, James B. McJunkin, Charles Duffy and John Berg, all Butler parties, formed an association to be known as the Butler Passenger Railway Company. In September of the same year the company was duly incorporated with a capital stock of $50,000. The following were the officers of the company: President, A. L. Reiber; vice-president, John Berg; treasurer, James B. McJunkin; secretary, A. E. Reiber. The above named officers and J. V. Ritts and Charles Duffy constituted the board of directors.

On the 3rd day of October, 1899, a franchise was obtained in the borough of Butler for its principal streets, and in the spring of 1900 construction was commenced on its tracks on Main Street and on Jefferson Street, which was completed and cars operated the first week of September, 1900. Extensions of track were made and continued until about five miles of track were laid within the borough limit. In 1903 the company purchased a tract of sixty acres of land about two miles west of Butler, and opened the resort called Alameda Park. In December, 1905, the company sold their plant to Pittsburg capitalists who are now operating the road.

THE PITTSBURG AND BUTLER ELECTRIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

In 1905 Pittsburg capitalists organized and promoted the Pittsburg and Butler Railway Company and the same year began construction of a line in both Allegheny and Butler Counties. The road was completed from Etna to Butler in January, 1907, and cars were running as far as Etna the same month. By an agreement made with the Pittsburg Traction Company, the Butler cars are now run into Pittsburg and passengers are delivered on Penn Avenue and Sixth Street. The company built extensive car barns at Mars in Adams Township, and a large power plant at Renfrew in Penn Township, and has been the means of developing a vast amount of real estate between Butler and Pittsburg.

In December, 1905, the Pittsburg and Butler Railway Company purchased the franchises and plant of the Butler Passenger Railway Company, and has been operating the local line since that time.

THE PITTSBURG, HARMONY, BUTLER AND NEW CASTLE RAILWAY COMPANY.

An electric railway system that has had much to do with the development of the southwestern portion of the county, brings Butler, New Castle and Pittsburg into close communication, and is one of the most important factors in the internal development and improvement of Butler County, had its inception at a meeting held in Pittsburg on the 9th of March, 1905. At this time the organization of the Pittsburg, Harmony, Butler and New Castle Railway Company was considered, and the officers and directors elected at that time were D. B. Magley, president; M. G. Hibbs, L. E. McKain, James K. Magley and S. C. Vickers, the latter being secretary. The promoters of this enterprise were principally Butler County men, the originators being W. A. Goehring and Edward Winters of Zelienople, and R. H. Boggs, of the Northside, Pittsburg, who is a member of the firm of Boggs & Buhl, of that city, and a native of Butler County. The Pittsburg, Harmony, Butler and New Castle Railway Company was chartered under the laws of Pennsylvania with the following officers: R. H. Boggs, president; Mark H. Hibbs, secretary and treasurer; W. A. Goehring, vice-president, and these with James Bryan, and Edward Winters constituted the directory. James Bryan is the chief engineer and Harry Ethridge, general superintendent. The same year the company entered into an agreement of consolidation and merger between the Pittsburg and Harmony Street Railway Company, the Thorn Hill Street Railway Company, the Callery and Evans City Street Railway Company, the Evans City Street Railway Company, the Butler and Harmony Street Railway Company, the Ellwood City and Hazeldell Street Railway Company, the Wayne Electric Railway Company, the Ellwood City Electric Railway Company, and the New Castle and Harmony Street Railway Company. The Union Trust Company of Pittsburg became the guarantor of the bonds of the company and the work of construction was commenced in Allegheny County in the fall of 1905. Work was continued the following year along all the divisions of the line in Butler and Lawrence Counties, and in July, 1908, the Butler and New Castle division was completed and opened for traffic on the 26th of July. The division of the road from Evans City to Northside, Pittsburg, was not completed until November, and was opened for traffic about the 15th of the month. By an agreement with the Pittsburg Railway Company the P. H. B. and N. C. Co. reaches Sixth Street and Penn Avenue, Pittsburg, over the lines of the former, and delivers its passengers in the heart of the city.

The company erected a large power plant at Eidenau Station in Jackson Township, and also has car barns located at that point.

THE NORTH PITTSBURG REALTY COMPANY.

The North Pittsburg Realty Company, which was organized in 1905, controls twenty-five hundred acres of land along the lines of the Pittsburg, Harmony, Butler and New Castle Railway and controls a large block of land at Eidenau which has been laid out in building lots. Already a large number of houses have been erected at this point for the accommodation of the employes of the railroad. The officers of the North Pittsburg Realty Company are R. H. Boggs, president; Mark H. Hibbs, secretary and treasurer; W. A.

Goehring, vice-president; and these with James H. Moore and Edward Winters constitute the board of directors.

LEECHBURG AND TARENTUM ROAD.

The Leechburg, Freeport and Tarentum Street Railway Company, which was chartered November 7, 1901, filed an extension of route in Butler County the same year. This company proposed to build a line from the Freeport and Tarentum road in North Buffalo Township, Allegheny County, to Butler by way of Saxonburg and Jefferson Center. This branch line was to connect with the main line of the road from Tarentum to Leechburg. The main line was never built and the extension into Butler was abandoned.

THE COTTAGE HILL STREET RAILWAY COMPANY.

The charter for the Cottage Hill Street Railway Company of Butler was granted June 4, 1903. This company proposed to build a line from the center of the town to the Cottage Hill Plan of Lots, which had been platted for sale by the Cottage Hill Land Company. The incorporators of the Street Railway Company were a number of Butler business men. John N. Muntz was president of the company and Charles Ritter, secretary. This line was never built.

THE CITIZENS' STREET RAILWAY COMPANY.

A number of Pittsburg capitalists who were interested in the development of real estate at West Butler organized the Citizen's Street Railway Company, of which Joseph A. Langfit was president and C. A. Bailey was secretary. An extension of their charter was secured on September 18, 1903, and the company did a large amount of work grading the road on the Marshall farm west of the borough. This enterprise was backed financially by the Standard Trust Company of Butler and Pittsburg capital, and after the trust company went into the hands of a receiver, the road was abandoned. R. W. Harvey of Pittsburg was the superintendent of construction and had charge of the work done at West Butler.

THE SAXONBURG STREET RAILWAY COMPANY.

The Butler, Saxonburg and Tarentum Street Railway Company was an enterprise promoted in 1907 by a number of Saxonburg citizens who filed articles of association and began the work of securing franchises and rights of way. The articles of association, which were filed on July 3rd, were signed by James Cirigliano, Emil F. Rudert, Edward C. Rudert, John E. Muder, and Otto W. Rudert, all of Saxonburg. The company failed to get the franchises they wanted and the enterprise was abandoned.

CHAPTER IX

AGRICULTURE

Pioneer Methods—Primitive Appliances—Butler County Farmers Progressive—Agricultural Societies—The Butler Driving Park and Fair Association—Millers-town Fair Association—Chicora Dairy Park and Fair Association—North Washington Agricultural Society.

Agriculture in the pioneer days required of its followers physical strength, great endurance and a sublime patience. Along with these qualities were combined a greater independence and self-reliance than is possessed by the husbandman of the present generation. These qualities were possessed, too, by the women and children of the pioneer homes in the forest to a certain degree, for disappointment and obstacles were always presenting themselves.

PIONEER METHODS.

To the farmer of the present day the clearing of the land of the primitive forest appears a Herculean task and a wilful waste of valuable timber. To the first settlers it was an ordinary duty. Felling the trees in winrows, logging and burning the piles of timber, was the work of this class of men, who were noted for their strength and giant physique. When the clearing had been made the work of cultivation began. Plows with wooden mold-boards were used at this time, and the harrow was an ordinary drag made by the farmer and supplied with wooden pegs for teeth until iron could be obtained from Pittsburg. The old "Western" plow with metal mold board came into use in the middle of the century and another product made at the local foundries was called the "Bull" plow on account of the difficulty experienced in handling it and the amount of horse power it took to run it. These gave way in time to the chilled mold-board plow, the sulky plow, and the modern inventions that make this part of the farm labor comparatively easy. The old spike-tooth drag harrow has given way to the spring-tooth harrow and the rotary disk harrow, while a weeding machine, run by horse power, has taken the place of the old hand hoe in cultivating the corn and potato field.

In harvesting the crops the first settlers used the sickle to cut the wheat and rye and the scythe for the grass. Hand rakes were used and, in the harvest time, the women and children were obliged to work in the field and assist the men in putting up the crops. Then, the harvest season lasted from about the first of July until the first of September, and the long days were utilized from sunrise to sunset. The hand cradle for cutting grain was the first improvement in the way of harvesting implements, and may be seen at the present time, but is not in common use. Mowing machines and reapers were introduced into Butler County about 1850, but were not in common use for many years, partly on account of their cost and partly because they could not be operated successfully in fields that were full of stumps. The last quarter of the century has seen marked changes, however. The fields full of stumps have disappeared; the old side-drop reaper has been replaced by the self-binder, and the two-horse hay rake, the hay tedder, and the hay loader are doing the work that was once done by hand. The potato crop is planted by machinery and harvested by machinery, and the old-time "husking-bee" that was once an event in the neighborhood in October, has gone the way of the harvest "frolic" and other industrial events that had social sides to them. The steam corn-husking machine has invaded the corn fields of Butler County, and a task that at one time was laborious and lasted several weeks, is now accomplished in a day or two.

No less marked is the advancement made in threshing the grain. In pioneer days and even in the middle of the last century, this task was saved for the winter months. The threshing was done with hand flails, or by using horses to tramp the grain out on a large threshing floor. This was followed by separating the grain from the chaff, which was done by winnowing and later by hand windmills. The old "chaff-piler" threshing machines were the first improvement in this line, and the name of the "Champion" and the "Bastian" are familiar to the older residents of the district. These were operated by treadle power run by one horse, the power being set on the barn floor alongside of the machine. The four and eight-horsepower machines came in a few years later and these have been supplanted by the modern thresher and separator operated by steam.

BUTLER COUNTY FARMERS PROGRESSIVE.

The farmers of Butler County adopted progressive and modern methods at an early date and the use of machinery became general as the conditions of the county would permit. Agricultural societies, societies for the improvement of live stock, farmers' institutes and agricultural exhibitions were organized at an early day and exhibits of farm implements at the county fairs were made as early as 1850. Much sport has been indulged in over that three-cornered cereal called buckwheat, which was a staple crop in the early day and served a double purpose. It not only tamed the rank, virgin soil after the timber had been removed and prepared it for the raising of the more pretentious grains, but served as an excellent article of food. And on more than one occasion when other cereal crops had failed because of June frosts, or extended droughts, an abundant yield of buckwheat in the fall caused the Butler County farmer to smile at the expense of his more pretentious neighbors.

The growth of the county in cultivated farms and material wealth has been phenomenal and its present extent may be estimated from the statistics compiled in the county commissioner's office in 1908. The amount of cleared land returned for taxable purposes was 398,903 acres, divided into over five thousand farms. The amount of timber land in the county after all the years of destruction and waste amounts to 77,316 acres. The value of horses and mules is $557,000, and that of cattle $207,773. There are twenty-five thousand taxables in the county, 15,984 voters, and an estimated population of 79,000. The amount of money at interest returned in 1908 was $6,500,000, which speaks wonderfully for the industry and thrift of the people of the community.

AGRICULTURAL SOCIETIES.

The first society in Butler County having, in part at least, for its object the promotion of agriculture, was organized at Butler April 7, 1830. William Ayres presided, with John Parker and John Ziegler, vice-presidents, and Alexander McBride and James Bovard, secretaries. The organization was termed "The Butler County Agricultural and Domestic Manufacturing Society," and a committee was appointed to prepare by-laws. Another committee, of twenty-eight persons—two from Butler and two from each township—was appointed to secure members and 100 subscribers were enrolled to assist the president in pushing forward the interests of the society.

The North Butler Agricultural Club, an organization of farmers, was founded in 1846, and was the successor of the old agricultural organization.

The Butler County Agricultural Society. In the spring of 1852, a meeting to organize an agricultural society was held at the home of Henry Kohlmeyer, being presided over by Samuel Anderson, of Venango Township, with John Say, vice-president, and Henry Kohlmeyer, secretary. A constitution was submitted by Samuel Halderman and T. J. Layton, in which the name "Butler County Agricultural Society" was used. This was adopted and signed by twenty-seven members. This organization accomplished very little, except to arouse an interest in the matter.

The Butler County Agricultural and Horticultural Society was founded March 30, 1853, on the ruins of the former one. John Murrin was chosen president; Samuel M. Lane, treasurer; Archibald Blakeley, William Campbell and Thomas Braeken, correspondents, and C. E. Purviance, secretary. There were twenty-six vice-presidents. The first fair was held at North Washington, October 13, 1853, at which prizes were awarded. The second fair was held at North Washington, in September, 1854, and, in one or other of the northern boroughs, fairs were held in 1855 and 1856. The fifth annual fair was held at North Washington, in September, 1857. The society, in November, 1857, elected Robert Ray, president; Allen Wilson, treasurer; Henry Kohlmeyer, correspondent; William C. Adams, recorder; and S. G. Meals, librarian. It struggled on some time, but the societies at the county seat won the battle for precedence.

The Semiconan Agricultural Society held the first annual exposition at Schoolhouse Number 1, East Connoquenessing, October 19, 1852. John Martin was then secretary. In 1853 the second fair was held, and in October, 1854, Prospect was honored with the third annual meeting. Soon after, the society merged into a broader organization.

The Butler Agricultural Association was organized in March, 1856, as the Fair Society, with John Anderson, president; James G. Campbell and George W. Crozier, secretaries; Archibald Blakeley, recorder; Eugene Ferrero, correspondent; James Campbell, librarian, and thirty-seven vice-presidents. This society held its first fair at Butler in September, 1856, and in December, Joseph Donthett was elected president, and J. B. McQuistion secretary.

The people of Butler borough and others from the southern townships held their second annual fair at Butler in September, 1857. In 1858 a successful meeting was recorded. During the war there was little attention given to such matters, so that from 1861 to 1863, inclusive, no fairs were held. The sixth fair was held October 4 and 5, 1864. The name of the society in November, 1866, was the "Butler County Agricultural and Stock Association." James Bredin was president, and H. C. Heineman, secretary, who held that position three or four years, or until its end.

"In 1866 the association leased five or six acres of the Thomas Steble farm, where fairs were held for several years, or until twenty-one acres, near the present fairgrounds, were purchased and fenced in. Fairs were held there for several years until the old society dissolved

THE WALTER AND GRAHAM MILL
(Photograph taken about 1875)

BUTLER ROLLER MILLS
(Geo. Walter and Sons)

and the land was sold by the sheriff. During the hey-day of this association, farmers' horses were entered for races, but no other horses were permitted to run. For several years there was no organization, and indeed, until 1877, there was no society.

"Prior to 1857 trotting horses were not considered in the community, although horse racing took place at intervals. It was the wild gallop in which the people delighted and on this gallop bets were offered and taken. The era of trotting matches in this county was introduced in May, 1857, when Thomas Fawcett, of Birmingham, and John Vensel, of Clarion County, bet $300 each on their respective horses, 'Bobb' and 'Jack.' The course was the plank road from Stewartstown to Zimmerman's Inn (now the Willard), at Butler, a distance of twenty-seven miles, and the time made was two hours and ten minutes. This extraordinary race drew the attention of the people to trotting matches, and scarcely a year has passed since in which races of this description have failed to draw a large crowd."

The Emlenton Agricultural Society was organized March 27, 1858, by citizens living in the northern part of the county, with others from Venango, Clarion and Armstrong Counties. Among its members were many who had belonged to the old Butler County Agricultural Society of 1853. Henry Kohlmeyer, of Butler County, was elected president. The first fair, held at Emlenton in the fall of 1858, was successful, but interest in the project then subsided and the organization disbanded.

The Butler County Colonization Society was organized January 25, 1860, with Rev. Loyal Young, president; Rev. Isaiah Niblock, and Rev. William A. Fetter, vice-presidents; and John Graham, secretary. "Robert R. Reed, agent of the State Colonization Society, was the organizer, and the object was to obtain an appropriation of $5,000 to be applied to the colonization of free negroes in Pennsylvania, which it was believed would benefit the agricultural interests of the State, as well as the negro."

The Wool Growers' Association of Slippery Rock Township, was organized in April, 1866, with David McKee, president; Dawson Wadsworth, vice-president; John Bingham, secretary, and Lewis Patterson, treasurer. This organization soon merged into the Agricultural Society and lost its identity.

The Butler County Farmers' Club held its first meeting in April, 1869, when the following named officers were elected: John Q. A. Kennedy, president; John Q. A. Sullivan, recording secretary; Edwin Lyon, corresponding secretary; Hugh Morrison, treasurer; W. H. Black, librarian, and ten vice-presidents. The following year this organization was merged into the Farmers' Institute.

The Farmers' Institute held its first fair at Butler in September, 1870. The Institute succeeded the Farmers' Club and the officers were simply the men who would have been selected by the club had it continued its organization. John Q. A. Kennedy presided in 1870, with Herman J. Berg and A. Cuthbert, vice-presidents; W. H. H. Riddle, secretary; Edwin Lyon, correspondent; Hugh Morrison, treasurer, and G. W. Shaffer, superintendent. The Institute has, through the passing years, grown into a profitable and most deserving organization. It is an educational society, important in its aims and successful in its workings. Meetings are held at stated intervals to which all agriculturists are invited, and at which ideas relating to farms and farmers are expressed and discussed. W. H. H. Riddle is the founder of the Institute in this county.

The Connoquenessing Valley Agricultural Association was organized in 1874, with Abraham Moyer, president; Dr. Amos Lusk, secretary, and Ira Stauffer, treasurer. For many years fairs were held regularly, and at length the association dissolved.

The Patrons of Husbandry attained great strength in this county during the seventies, Pomona Grange being the name of the county organization. A number of local granges exist in various parts of the county, though some of the earlier organizations have dissolved.

THE BUTLER DRIVING PARK AND FAIR ASSOCIATION.

The Butler Driving Park Association was organized October 15, 1877, with the following named officers: G. J. Cross, president; Joseph L. Purvis, James H. Tebay and G. A. McBride, vice-presidents; P. W. Lowry, recorder; W. P. Roessing, correspondent; Joseph L. Purvis, treasurer; L. M. Cochran, G. A. McBride, W. H. H. Riddle, and the president, treasurer and correspondent, directors. In October, 1877, this society leased a tract of twenty-three acres, just east of the old fair-grounds, from Mrs. Nancy Bredin, and transformed it into an excellent race track. In June, 1878, a race meeting was held, and a fair in the fall. The officers named, with J. S. Campbell and R. P. Scott, were the first stockholders. Under date, June 5, 1879, a motion providing for a fourth day races, and such telling references as "Dan Mace's Hopeful to beat 2:18 for $500," recorded. Later in June, a resolution to hold a fair in the fall was carried, and the original idea of confining the business of the corporation to racing and trotting, without regard to farm exhibits, was found to lack support.

In November, 1879, W. P. Smith, of Center Township, was elected president; E. A. Helmbold, Samuel Bolton and G. J. Cross, vice-presidents; W. P. Roessing, secretary, and John S. Campbell, treasurer. The success of the fall fair and the election of a farmer as president, abolished the original idea, and, in May, 1880, the association was reorganized.

The Butler Agricultural Association adopted a constitution in May, 1880, but there is no minute of the election of officers. The fact that W. P. Smith was president, Joseph L. Purvis vice-president, and John S. Campbell, W. H. H. Riddle, J. H. Tebay and W. P. Roessing, directors, shows that changes were made in the board of the old association. Other changes were subsequently made from year to year.

In December, 1889, the lease of five acres from Charles Duffy and seven acres from H. C. Heineman was reported. The lease of five acres from the Thomas Stehle heirs, with the other leases, form the present grounds.

The officers of the association in 1895 were W. H. H. Riddle, president; Jacob Keck, vice-president; Joseph Rockenstein, vice-president; W. P. Roessing, secretary; John S. Campbell, treasurer. The only changes in officials made from that time until 1902, when the association went out of business, were in the office of vice-president. The last officers elected were chosen in 1901, and consisted of William H. H. Riddle, president; Jacob Keck and Joseph Rockenstein, vice-presidents; W. P. Roessing, secretary; and John S. Campbell, treasurer. The board of directors were Joseph L. Purvis, J. Henry Troutman, John S. Campbell, Jacob Keck, Dr. J. M. Leighner, Robert D. Stevenson, and Alfred Wick, the latter being superintendent of grounds for several years previous to the dissolution of the association. After the organization of the first association in 1877, the grounds were increased from the original fifteen acres to almost fifty acres. When the Standard Steel Car Company located in Butler in April, 1902, the land purchased by the company for the site of their big mill included the ground occupied by the Butler Agricultural Association and held by the latter under a lease. The association disposed of their lease and plant to the Standard Steel Car Company, and a month later the business affairs of the association were brought to a close and the organization disbanded.

The Butler Driving Park and Fair Association was organized in Butler August 4, 1903, when sixteen business men and horsemen of the town met at the Lyndora Hotel for the purpose of considering the advisability of organizing a driving club and building a race track at some point convenient to the town. The meeting was attended by Burgess William Kennedy, R. W. Hervey, Joseph Manny, I. J. McBride, Charles Wendell, James Maxwell, Christ Steichner, Charles H. Gies, W. D. Winters, D. A. Slater, William J. Marks, Leon Schloss, M. W. Mays, H. J. Connelly, George Schaffner, and A. J. Frank. William Kennedy presided at this meeting and A. J. Frank acted as clerk. A permanent organization was effected by the election of George A. Schaffner, president; A. J. Frank, secretary; and E. W. Bingham, treasurer; with the following board of directors: Wm. J. Marks, I. J. McBride, C. H. Gies, Christ Steichner, and D. A. Slater.

On the 17th of October a charter was secured under the title of The Butler Driving Park and Fair Association, capitalized at $15,000.00, divided into six hundred shares of $25.00 each. In the meantime sixty acres of land lying on the top of the hill west of the borough between the New Castle and Whitestown road, had been leased from Charles Duffy for a period of twenty years, dating from April 1, 1904, and a contract had been awarded to the Butler Construction Company, of Butler, for the construction of a half-mile track. This piece of work proved more expensive than was at first anticipated, and on the 1st of March, 1904, the association decided to increase their capital stock to $25,000.00, and increase the membership of the board of directors from five to fifteen, and secured an amendment to their charter for that purpose. The addition of directors chosen to serve until the annual meeting were: Peter E. Duffy, D. F. McCrea, J. A. Klein, A. H. Sarver, Herman Leibold, Dr. W. C. McCandless, Dr. J. M. Leighner, John Younkings, John G. Jennings, and W. S. Dixon. On the 5th of May an executive committee was appointed consisting of J. M. Leighner, I. J. McBride, A. H. Sarver, John Younkings, and Dr. W. C. McCandless. About this time the association decided to hold an agricultural fair and race meeting in September, and for that purpose entered the Coal and Iron Fair circuit, securing on September 4-7 as the dates for their first fair. Dr. J. M. Leighner was appointed general superintendent, a position he still holds, and in June, Willis E. Rhodes and Joseph L. Purvis were elected directors to fill vacancies caused by the resignation of Peter E. Duffy and Christ Steichner. A. J. Frank resigned as secretary in the same month, and I. J. McBride was chosen to fill the vacancy. The race track, which was completed the 1st of July at a cost of over $10,000.00, is considered one of the best half-mile tracks in the state, and the other improvements on the ground cost the association an additional $15,000.00.

At the annual meeting held in December, 1904, the old officers and directors of the association were re-elected for 1905, and the only change in officials in 1906 was the election of John G. Jennings, vice-president in the place of William Kennedy. The board of directors for 1906 consisted of Jas. R. Kearns, W. M. Starr, W. S. Dixon, I. G. Smith, C. H. Gies, Frank Hildebrand, W. E. Rhodes, Dr. W. C. McCandless, D. F. McCrea, A. H. Sarver, G. A. Schaffner, John G. Jennings, J. M. Leighner, J. L. Purvis, and John Younkings. The executive committee for 1906 were J. M. Leighner, C. H. Gies, John Younkings, A. H. Sarver, and J. L. Purvis.

On December 4th, 1906, the death of Isaiah J. McBride, secretary of the association, is noted on the minutes, and William B. Purvis, who had been acting as assistant secretary, for the previous six months, was elected secretary to fill the vacancy, a position which he still holds.

On the 29th of April, 1907, the minutes of the association note the death of Joseph L. Purvis, a member of the board of directors, and of the executive committee. At the same meeting W. M. Kennedy was elected a director to fill the vacancy, and I. G. Smith was chosen to fill the vacancy on the executive board. Joseph L. Purvis, whose death is noted above, was one of the organizers and directors of the old Butler Agricultural Association, and was a leading spirit in that society for twenty-five years.

With the exceptions of the changes above noted, the officers and official boards of the association were the same as for the previous year. The board of directors for 1908 is composed of George A. Schaffner, president; John G. Jennings, vice-president; D. F. McCrea, James R. Kearns, Dr. W. C. McCandless, Dr. J. M. Leighner, W. S. Dixon, William Kennedy, Frank Hildebrand, I. G. Smith, W. M. Starr, Marion Henshaw, John Younkins, L. M. Brown, and O. K. Waldron. William B. Purvis is secretary and E. W. Bingham treasurer. The executive committee is composed of John Younkins, Dr. J. M. Leighner, I. G. Smith, Frank Hildebrand, and W. M. Starr.

The association has been successful from its first year and now takes a leading rank among the agricultural societies of the state. The aim of the management has been to give the people of the county a good, clean exhibition, free from all objectionable features, and they have proved to the satisfaction of the public and their own pecuniary gain, that such an exhibition will be liberally patronized. The first two years the association expended the surplus earnings in improvements on the fair grounds, and in 1906 a dividend of eight per cent. was paid to the stockholders, while in 1907 a dividend of fourteen per cent. was paid in addition to retaining a surplus in the treasury for improvements. The fair of 1908 broke all records in the county for attendance, and the dividend realized by the stockholders was equal to that of previous years. This is a record equalled by no fair association in western Pennsylvania.

While the association has paid particular attention to the agricultural display and stock exhibits at the annual fairs, they have also expended a large amount of money and effort on the race meetings, which are held in connection with the fairs. In addition to the annual meeting in August, matinee races have been held every year by the horsemen of Butler, and in 1908, three successful matinees were held.

On January 20, 1905, the representatives of the Coal and Iron Fair Circuit held a meeting at the Willard Hotel in Butler at which a new organization was effected and a schedule of dates fixed for the fairs in the circuit. In this schedule the Butler Fair was put back to the last week in August in 1905, and has held that date ever since. The new circuit was organized as the Coal, Iron and Oil Circuit, with the following towns represented: Punxsutawny, Kittanning, Butler, Brookville, Stoneboro, Tulaski, Clarion, and Rimersburg. The officers elected were: President, Ben. Record, of Punxsutawny; vice-president, J. S. Wood, of Tulaski; secretary, W. E. Noble, of Kittanning; treasurer, J. S. Laughlin, of Clarion.

The Millerstown Fair Association was the successor to The Millerstown Driving Park and Agricultural Association, which was organized in 1883, and chartered April 7, 1884, with a capital stock of $5,000, divided into five hundred shares. The Millerstown Fair Association was chartered in 1888 for twenty years, and succeeded the first organization. The permanent officers elected on March 11, 1884, were: S. D. Bell, president; Henry Moore, vice-president; W. A. Dennison, vice-president; H. J. Myers, acting secretary; P. A. Bell, permanent secretary; H. J. Hoyt, treasurer; C. H. Johnson, J. C. Nevills, Dr. Foster, Owen Brady, J. J. Westerman, R. K. Sutton, S. F. Showalter, H. C. Litzinger, and W. P. Turner, trustees. Fourteen acres of ground were purchased from Owen Brady and Fetzer and Myers at forty dollars an acre, and the improvements were made at once. A fair was held in the fall of 1884 and continued until 1891. Dr. S. D. Bell was elected president in 1885, William P. Turner in 1886, and C. H. Johnson in 1887. The association was reorganized and a new charter obtained in 1888, and C. H. Johnson was elected president. C. F. Pierce succeeded Johnson in 1889, and J. J. Westerman was president of the organization from 1890 to 1894. P. A. Bell was secretary in 1885 and 1886, but was succeeded by J. C. Gaisford in 1887, who filled the position until the association went out of business. The last agricultural fair was held on the grounds in 1890, and race meetings were held from time to time by the old association until 1907, when the charter of the association expired.

The Chicora Driving Park and Fair Association. The charter of the old fair association having expired, a number of business men of Chicora organized in June, 1908, The Chicora Driving Park and Fair Association, with a capital stock of $4,000, divided into eighty shares of $50.00 each. The officers of the association are C. H. Johnson, president; C. C. Ferguson, secretary; G. J. Myers, treasurer; and they, with C. L. DeWolf and S. H. Kamerer, form the board of directors. The new association took over the grounds of the old association, and conducted several race meetings during 1908.

The North Washington Agricultural Association, composed chiefly of farmers and business men in Washington and the surrounding townships, was organized in the spring of 1908, and the first fair of the association was held in September of that year, at North Washington. The first exhibition of the association proved a success in every particular, and the society has decided to continue its organization. The officers of the association are J. P. Harper, president; and H. T. Stewart, secretary.

CHAPTER X

MILITARY HISTORY

Early Militia Organizations—Butler Invincibles—War of the Revolution—Butler County's Line of Descent—Military Organizations to which the First Settlers Belonged—Revolt of the Pennsylvania Line—A Hero of Stony Point—The Critchlow Brothers and Thomas Scott at Saratoga—War of 1812—Butler Volunteers at Erie—Organization of the Second Infantry—The 138th Infantry—Rough Treatment of a Tory—Mexican War—Civil War—The Various Commands—Bounty Act—Balaam Association—Jubilee Meeting—Soldiers' Monuments—Spanish-American War—Departure of 15th Regiment—Death of Private Watters—Patriotic Societies—Roster of Company E, 15th Regiment—Names of Volunteers—National Guard—Roster of Company L, 16th Regiment—Company G, 21st Regiment.

The pioneers of the county brought with them a military spirit that was kept alive after the Revolution by the organization of the militia of the various states, under the laws providing for their organization and equipment and discipline. Pennsylvania had an organized militia previous to the Revolution which did gallant service during the struggle for independence, both in the field and in protecting the border from Indian raids. Provision was made for the organization of the militia under the new government and they were expected to be ready at all times to take the field against a foreign foe or protect the frontiers against the Indians. The organization and discipline were crude compared with the compact organization of the National Guard of today; yet they were a most effective body of men, bringing with them into the ranks a skill with the rifle, and the craft of the woodsman, hunter, and frontier scout that made them ideal soldiers.

Up until the Civil War muster days were appointed, when the soldiers of each district were required to meet for exercises and drill in the manual of arms and go through the evolutions of the company and battalion. These muster days are pleasantly remembered by the older citizens and were considered great events in the lives of the early settlers of the county. Fun, jollification, and hilarity generally, ruled; and the exercises of the drill manual were of minor consideration. The amusements often consisted of feats of strength, wrestling, and throwing the shoulder stone, and sometimes in a contest of physical endurance in which the contestants used bare fists and stripped to the waist. Rough and tumble rules governed these fights and they were conducted under an unwritten law of the land that was absolutely fair to both sides of the contest. Sometimes these contests arose between rivals of the same community over real or fancied grievances, and sometimes a bully or a strong man from a neighboring town or township would "butt in." He was always given a chance to prove his prowess and, whether defeated or the victor, was treated magnanimously after the affair was over. The muster, which usually lasted two days, closed with a banquet, the tables groaning with good things eatable and drinkable and enough of the latter on the side to lend enthusiasm to a long list of toasts.

Since muster day ceased to be observed the country passed through a civil war which added to her citizenship a large body of veterans who acquired military training on hard-fought fields and who have fostered and kept alive the military spirit among the people, in their regimental reunions and the state and national encampments. Largely through their aid and influence the National Guard of today owes its existence. The state militia was re-organized after the Civil War, in 1874, as the National Guard, and its officers and enlisted men were composed largely of old soldiers. The first encampments by regiments were held in 1874, and while these encampments were a force in so far as military discipline was concerned, they served a good purpose. And from an organization that was at first cumbersome, undisciplined and ill-equipped there has been developed one of the best organized, the best equipped and most efficient bodies of citizen soldiers in the United States.

When the second war with Great Britain broke out in 1812, Butler County was included in the Sixteenth Militia District, commanded by Major-General David Mead, of Meadville. When the British fleet on Lake Erie indicated a purpose of the enemy to invade Pennsylvania, the militia of Butler County responded to the call sent out by General Mead, and many of them subsequently enlisted in the volunteer regiment raised by Col. John Purviance of Butler.

A re-organization of the militia appears to have taken place in 1814, when Gov. Snyder commissioned John Duffy of Butler County a captain, on August 1st of that year. Captain Duffy commanded the third company of the Twenty-fourth Regiment. This commission is now in possession of Charles Duffy of Butler, a nephew of Captain Duffy.

In 1820 the officers of the Twenty-fourth Regiment met at the house of Captain Beatty in Butler to attend to regimental affairs. At this meeting Capt. Robert Storey and Capt. James McKee were appointed auditors to make a settlement of the quartermaster's accounts.

On April 12, 1823, the Butler Light Infantry, commanded by Capt. Robert T. Lemmon, assembled in Butler for training.

It appears that in 1823 Butler had a Volunteer Battalion commanded by Major Abraham M. Neyman, and the Second Battalion of the Twenty-fourth Regiment commanded by Major Jacob Mechling. The Butler Light Infantry assembled under Capt. Robert T. Lemmon "for training" on April 23d. In obedience to an order of Major Neyman, the Center Greens met for training at the house of John Timblin, on May 6th. Major Jacob Mechling ordered the Second Battalion, Twenty-fourth Regiment, to assemble at Butler on May 29th, 1823, for training. The Butler Rifle Company met in Butler, May 6th; they were commanded by Capt. William Beatty. On the 28th, 29th and 30th of May, 1823, the training at Butler was inspected by Samuel Powers, inspector of the First Brigade, Sixteenth Division, Pennsylvania Militia. Four companies appear to have been represented from the western part of the county.

The Butler Hornets were from Prospect, the Harmony Blues were commanded by Captain Goll. The Connoquenessing Rangers were commanded by Captain Davis; and the Connoquenessing Rifle Company by Captain Boston.

In 1825 the Bonny Brook Artillery, organized April 25th of that year, was commanded by Capt. Abraham Bunker. The Butler Light Artillery was commanded by Capt. William Beatty, and the Center Greens by Capt. John Glenn. These companies were leading attractions at the fête held in Butler on July 4th of that year and joined in thirteen cheers by which the toast—"Our militia and volunteers—the only bulwark of the Nation," was received. The Harmony Blues met the same day at Beam's Tavern in Harmony, the Buffalo Rifle Company at the house of Phillip Burtner, the Connoquenessing "Republicans" at Martins.

A re-organization of the Twenty-fourth Regiment, First Brigade, Sixteenth Division, took place March 20th, 1829. Major Jacob Mechling had been promoted to colonel. The staff comprised James Thompson, adjutant; J. L. Maxwell, quartermaster; John N. Purviance, sergeant major; George Linn, surgeon; A. Spear and James Graham, assistant surgeons. The eleven captains commissioned were Alexander McBride, Jacob Doudhiser, Thomas Dodds, Johnson White, Samuel Dodds, George Frazier of the First Battalion, and Alexander Craig, John Wier, Thomas Jolly, J. B. McConnell and George Wolf of the Second Battalion. The first and second lieutenants commissioned at that time were Eli Balph, Thomas Sullivan, James Sutton, Isaac Robb, James Glenn, and Edward Kennedy.

In May following the First Battalion, commanded by Major Graham, met for drill at Prospect. The Second Battalion under Major Sumney, met at Butler, and the Volunteer Battalion under Lieutenant-Colonel Haggerty and Colonel Cobert at Butler. A battalion commanded by Colonel Goll, of the One Hundred and Fourteenth Regiment, drilled at Harmony. The same year the Washington Battalion, commanded by Major John Welsh, met at the house of John Davis in Middlesex Township. Patrick Graham was adjutant of this battalion.

The organized militia in 1845 consisted of The First Rifle Battalion of Prospect, the Washington Volunteers and the Lafayette Battalions, meeting at the house of William Logan; the McDonald Volunteers, Major Brewster, meeting at Shoemaker's Old Stand; the Union Volunteers of Harrisville, Major Harris; the Second Battalion, Second Regiment (formerly 115th Regiment) at Brownington's Cross Roads; the Marion Volunteers of North Washington, Major Adams; the Second Battalion of the First (formerly 24th) Regiment; the First Battalion of the First; the First Battalion of the Second Regiment, and the Jackson Volunteer Battalion meeting at Harmony. The Portersville Volunteer Battalion met at Portersville; the German Guards, Captain Wiseman; the DeKalb Greys, Captain Ziegler, and the Butler Cavalry, Captain Evans, met at Butler.

The militia elections held in 1854 resulted in the choice of James B. Donaldson of Zelienople for inspector of the First Brigade, Nineteenth Division; Thomas McLaughlin Brigadier-General, and George W. Reed, W. C. Adams, R. E. Graham, J. E. Cornelius and E. A. Helmbold, majors of the Butler, Marion, Jackson, Prospect and the Lafayette Battalions respectively. The brigade was composed of the Saxonburg Light Infantry, the Butler Hornets, the DeKalb Greys, Middle Lancaster Guards, Connoquenessing Whites, Jackson Greys, Clearfield Blues, Centerville Artillery, German Guards, Republican Blues, Portersville Guards, Marion Guards, Invincible Guards, Washington Cavalry, Venango Blues, Middlesex Guards and the Slippery Rock Light Infantry, seventeen commands in all.

Under the new militia law the Butler Scott Guards was organized in May and June, 1858. The following year the companies voting for brigade inspector, June 6, 1859, were the Connoquenessing Whites, Prospect Guards, True Americans, Washington Rifles, Portersville Guards, Sunbury Blues, Jackson Greys, Venango Blues, Marion Guards, American Guards, Fairview Guards, Centerville Artillery, and Saxonburg Light Infantry.

The DeKalb Greys (new) was organized in June, 1859, with Samuel Coll, captain; Joseph B. Meehling and Prof. A. J. Rebstock, lieutenants; J. A. Sedgwick, John Lawall, John R. Denny, Benjamin W. Bredin were sergeants, and Samuel F. McBride, Hugh W. McBride, William Bowers, and Enoch Fields, corporals; John Cress and George Bowers, ensigns, and William Glenn, bandmaster.

In September, 1859, a new company known as the Butler Guards was organized, but its existence was short. These organizations kept alive the military spirit until the War of the Rebellion, when they were merged into the volunteer commands that went to the defense of the nation.

The last in the independent military companies was organized in 1865 with W. A. Lowry as captain; W. E. Moore, first lieutenant, Thomas F. Parker, second lieutenant, and J. T. Shirley, first sergeant. It was named the Butler Greys and its purpose was to go to the field as a volunteer company. The sudden termination of the war interfered with this plan, and the organization, which was composed of men who had seen previous service in the war, soon disbanded.

One of the prominent characters in the early history of the militia was Major George W. Reed, who was first captain, then brigade inspector in 1835, for Butler and Beaver Counties and in 1842 for Butler County alone. He was elected brigadier-general in 1848, and subsequently held commissions as major and adjutant of a battalion. Thomas Dodds, who was appointed captain of a company in 1829, was subsequently promoted to major.

BUTLER INVINCIBLES.

The Butler Invincibles, afterwards called the Butler Blues, were organized in 1833. A copy of the constitution signed by the original members is in the hands of Capt. A. J. Cumberland of Butler. There is no date to this document but the accompanying record sheets of the company show that on July 4th, 1833, Capt. James Potts issued a United States musket to each member and took a receipt for the same with bail for the return of the musket in 1835, when called for. The value of the musket was $16.00. The articles of the constitution fixed the number of drill days at six for the year, the dates being selected by a majority of the company on the day of parade for the next. The fines imposed for failure to attend parades on public days were $2.00 for a commissioned officer and $1.00 for a non-commissioned officer or private. For non-attendance on training days the fine was one-half the above. The uniform prescribed for the company was a citizen's blue coat, red belt, white braid trimming on the coat, white pantaloons, a black stock or cravat, and a black citizen's hat, with white cords, black rosette at the left side and a white plume, with red top. John Potts, Anthony Fallor and William Truxall composed the board of appeals that sat in Butler on November 2, 1835, and heard the cases of twenty members who had been reported by First Sergeant R. D. McKee for failure to attend a parade of the company on the 10th day of September of that year. In 1836 John N. Purviance succeeded Capt. James Potts as captain.

WAR OF THE REVOLUTION

BUTLER COUNTY'S LINE OF DESCENT.

It may be of interest to the student of local history to study the line of descent of Butler County in order to fully understand the part that the early settlers took in the War of the Revolution. As has been stated in previous chapters, the first settlers of the county came from Westmoreland, Washington, Allegheny, Fayette and Lycoming Counties. Many of them had been soldiers in the frontier wars and in the War of the Revolution, and their family names are found among the military records of these counties. Originally there were only three counties in the Province of Pennsylvania. They were Bucks, Philadelphia and Chester, and were created in 1682. Lancaster County was created in 1729 from part of Chester; Cumberland County was created January 27, 1750, from Lancaster; Bedford was formed from part of Cumberland County March 9th, 1771; Westmoreland County from Bedford February 26, 1773; Allegheny County from Westmoreland and part of Washington September 24, 1788, and Butler County from Allegheny March 12, 1800. Chester County originally included all of the territory southwest of the Schuylkill River to the extreme limits of the province. As the settlements grew and the exigencies of local government demanded, new counties were formed on the west in the order named.

REVOLT OF THE PENNSYLVANIA LINES.

When the Colonies declared their independence in 1776, Westmoreland County comprised all western Pennsylvania from Bedford County on the east to the Ohio line on the west. The territory north of the Ohio River and west of the Allegheny River was Indian lands and unsettled. Hence it is that Butler County has no military organization to the credit of the War of the Revolution, but the names of the first settlers are identified with the First, the Second, the Sixth, the Seventh, the Eighth, the Ninth Pennsylvania Regiments, the Light Horse Troop, the Maryland, New Jersey and Delaware Regiments and the Bedford Rangers. Most of the Pennsylvania regiments belong to the Division of the Colonial Army known as the "Pennsylvania Line," and were commanded by Gen. Anthony Wayne. These soldiers are described by Thatcher as "hardy yeomen, frontiersmen, remarkable for the accuracy of their aim." That they were remarkable for their patriotism and loyalty to the cause of liberty is emphasized by the conclusion of the incident mentioned in history as the Revolt of the Pennsylvania Line. The condition of General Wayne's troops in camp at Morristown at the close of the year 1780 was most deplorable. The soldiers were wearied out with the year's campaigns and privations and indignant at their officers for not properly representing their situation to Congress. The fault, however, was with Congress and not the officers. To make matters worse the treason of Arnold and the execution of Major Andre had a depressing effect on the colonies. The Pennsylvania Line had enlisted under the ambiguous terms of "three years or during the war," and considerable discontent had taken place on account of deficiencies of clothing, arrearages of pay, and depreciation of the currency, which as yet extended no further than private complaints and murmurs. New Year's day, 1781, the soldiers, inflamed by rum, and their real and imaginary grievances, broke forth into outrage and disorder. All attempts to quell the mutiny failed and at length the "Line" left their camp and marched to Princeton, where they fixed their quarters.

Relying on the repeated statements of the mutineers that there was not the least tincture of disaffection or that they had any intention of deserting to the enemy,

General Wayne set about to discover the truth of the situation so that redress might be had if the complaints were well founded. A committee of sergeants—one from each regiment—was appointed, who met with General Wayne and represented the grievances of the mutineers. So fair were the proposals made by the committee of sergeants that General Wayne reported the whole matter to the Committee of Congress in Philadelphia and urged that immediate steps be taken to settle the unhappy affair. President Reed of the State and a Committee of Congress arrived at Princeton on the 6th of January.

TREATMENT OF SPIES.

In the meantime information of the mutiny had reached the British at New York, and there was great elation among the enemy. Four or five thousand troops were dispatched to New Jersey under the impression that the Line was only waiting the opportunity to join them. A spy from New York, attended by a guide, appeared before the board of sergeants with a letter intimating that if the Line would march toward North River, the British troops would be ready to receive them and promising large emoluments to every soldier who would desert his country's cause. No sooner did the emissary make his errand known but the board of sergeants rejected the proposal and sent the spy and his companion under arrest to General Wayne, with a reserve, however, that they should be re-delivered to the board, if demanded.

The correspondence between the Board of Sergeants and the Committee of Congress lasted several days. The substance of the final agreement being: That no soldier should be detained longer than the time for which he had voluntarily enlisted.

That auditors would attend as soon as possible to settle the depreciations of pay with the soldiers and give them certificates. Arrearages of pay to be made up as soon as the circumstances would admit.

A pair of shoes, overalls, and shirt should be delivered to each soldier in a few days. Those who were discharged would receive the above articles at Trenton.

Pursuant to the order of General Wayne of January 2nd, "no man was to be brought to trial or censured for what had happened on New Year's day, but all matters were to be buried in oblivion."

Upon the conclusion of the articles of agreement General Wayne informed his Excellency, President Reed, that he had promised the two soldiers who conducted the British spies a reward of fifty guineas each for their fidelity. He accordingly sent for the men and offered them the gratuity. This, the two soldiers refused to accept, saying that they had only obeyed the orders of their superiors, the Board of Sergeants. The hundred guineas were then offered to the Board of Sergeants, who returned this remarkable answer: Agreeably to the information of two sergeants of our board who waited on your Excellency, that in consideration of the two spies, they informed the remainder of the board that your Excellency had been pleased to offer a sum of gold as a compensation for our fidelity; but as it has not been for the sake of or through any expectation of receiving a reward, but for the zeal and love of our country, that we sent them to General Wayne, we, therefore, do not consider ourselves entitled to any other reward, but the love of our country, and do jointly agree that we shall accept no other."

The two spies were tried on the 10th of January and, being duly convicted, were executed on the 11th, agreeable to their sentence.

Following the above incidents, the commissioners appointed by Congress settled with the discontented troops, man by man, and carefully inquired into their enlistments. Those whose time had not expired remained with their regiments, while the remainder almost to a man re-enlisted and served with General Wayne's army in the battles of the South up to the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown.

REVOLUTIONARY SOLDIERS WHO SETTLED IN BUTLER.

Many of the sturdy men who fought in the Pennsylvania Line and in other regiments during the Revolution became settlers in Butler County and they proved no less true to the duties of manhood in the pursuits of peace than in battling for liberty and independence. Among these men and their descendants have been found citizens that have reflected honor upon Butler County, and have contributed to her upbuilding in every department of human effort, and have given her a high place among the counties of the Commonwealth.

Among the names that are familiar to the student of local history are the following:

William Spear, the ancestor of a notable family of that name in western Pennsylvania and in Ohio; enlisted five times during the War of the Revolution and was with the army at Valley Forge.

John Harbison, whose wife, Massy Harbison, was captured by the Indians in 1792, and after terrible suffering escaped from the savages. He was a noted scout and spy and served under St. Clair against the Indians in 1791.

William Harbison served in Colonel Hand's regiment, later Broadhead's, and in 1779 served in Captain Jack's company, Eighth Pennsylvania Regiment.

John Galbreath, a native of Ireland, served in the Pennsylvania Line. He settled in Center Township in 1796 or 1797.

John Rankin served in William Huston's company of Colonel Watts' Rifle-men, from Cumberland County.

John Slator was a pioneer of Donegal Township. He was a soldier in the army of Count de Rochambeau; arrived with the fleet off Rhode Island in 1780; was in the battle of White Plains; was present at the surrender of Cornwallis and honorably discharged at Wilmington, Delaware, May 19, 1783.

John Johnston enlisted in Boston in Colonel Craine's Artillery and served until the surrender of Cornwallis.

John Ransom enlisted in 1776 in Captain Talbot's company of the Sixth Pennsylvania Regiment and served three years. In 1779 he was ensign in the Seventh Pennsylvania Regiment.

Samuel Porterfield served eighteen months in the troop of Light Horse of the Second Pennsylvania Regiment.

Andrew Dunn enlisted in Captain Morgan's Company of Virginia troops under Col. John Gibson in 1777 and was discharged at Pittsburg in 1783.

James Burnside served in the Eighth Pennsylvania Regiment in Captain Lloyd's company, under Colonel Bayard.

Hugh Murrin of Venango Township served in a New Jersey regiment.

Daniel Graham Sr. enlisted in the Cumberland Valley in Capt. Francis Negley's company, Ninth Pennsylvania Regiment, Col. Richard Butler. His discharge papers bear the signatures of General Butler and General Wayne.

Jacob Rudolph served as a ranger under Capt. Matthew Jaek in 1779, and aided in destroying the Indian towns at Muncie in 1780. He was stationed for nine months at Kittanning and subsequently enlisted in the Eighth Pennsylvania Regiment.

John Bell enlisted in 1777 in the Sixth Maryland Regiment in Captain Giesland's company and was discharged at the close of the war.

George Dobson of Slippery Rock Township, enlisted in the Continental Army in 1777 in Virginia under Captain Yates. In 1781 he joined the Bedford County (Penna.) Rangers under Captain Walker and Colonel Davis and served until September, 1781. The command was employed against the Indians.

James Glover, one of the first settlers in Adams Township, served in a New Jersey regiment during the entire war.

Thomas McKee, who settled in Butler Township in 1797, served in Captain Cluggage's company, First Regiment, Pennsylvania Line.

Peter Peterson settled in Butler Township in 1800. He was one of the six survivors of a company of eighty men who were in the hottest of the fight at Braddock's defeat in 1753. He served in the Revolution in one of the western regiments. His daughter, Jane, married David Pierce and became the founder of one branch of the Pierce family in the county.

William Gill, of Mercer Township, served under Gen. Anthony Wayne and was wounded at Paoli.

Andrew Cruikshank, a native of Ireland, came to America prior to the Revolution and served in an eastern regiment. He died in Butler County in 1824.

John Kennedy, a native of Ireland, served in the Colonial Army and afterwards settled in Winfield Township.

Thomas Watson, a native of Ireland, was taken prisoner at Brandywine while fighting in the ranks of the Colonial Army. He settled in Clinton Township.

John Green, a native of Ireland, enlisted in Colonel Hartley's regiment, Pennsylvania Line, in 1776 and was discharged at Sunbury, Penna., in 1781.

Nathaniel Stevenson, who was a resident of Center Township in 1827, served in Captain Rippey's company of Colonel Irwin's Pennsylvania regiment.

John Jameson, of Parker Township, served in Colonel McCoy's Eighth Pennsylvania Regiment. He enlisted at Hanafostown, Westmoreland County, and was discharged at Pittsburg in 1779.

Peter McKinney, for whom the town of Petersville was named, was a fifer in Captain Black's company, Eighth Pennsylvania Regiment. He entered the army as a mere boy and served six years and six months. He settled in Forward Township in 1792 and was probably the first settler in the Connoquenessing Valley.

Charles Sullivan, the ancestor of the Sullivan family in Butler County, served under Washington in the Continental Line and was with the army at Valley Forge.

Alexander Bryson, a native of Ireland, and a soldier in the Revolution, settled in Butler Township.

George Byers served in Colonel Cook's Pennsylvania regiment.

Philip Hartman, of Donegal Township, served in Colonel Ogle's regiment.

John Pierce, who settled in Butler Township in 1796, served in the New Jersey Line.

Among the other soldiers of the Revolution who became residents of the county may be mentioned:

Michael O'Hara, who served under General Anthony Wayne.

Andrew Orr, John Vanderlin, Patrick McDowell, James Shields, Luke Covert of Brady Township, and William Carson of Marion Township saw service in the Continental Army. James Critchlow, James Byrne, who came to Butler County in 1800; Abram Leasure, who settled in Winfield Township; John Allen, who settled in Allegheny Township; Enoch Varnum, who was in St. Clair's army, settled in Washington Township; John Moser, who settled in Oakland Township; William Elliott, who served two years in the militia and five years in the Continental Army; David Russell, a pioneer settler of Butler County; William Spear, who settled in Franklin Township; and Jacob Hilliard, who settled in Washington Township. General Campbell, who settled in Marion Township.

Joseph Snyder, of Worth Township, served in the Pennsylvania Line.

Thomas Martin, a native of Ireland, served from 1776 to 1781; settled in Middlesex Township.

Abdiel McClure, served in the Colonial Army from Westmoreland County. He came to Connoquenessing Township in 1796. He served as a wagonmaster in the War of 1812.

Enos Graham, who settled in Connoquenessing Township about 1800, served in the Continental Army in a Delaware regiment.

John Welsh, a pioneer of Connoquenessing Township, served in the Seventh Pennsylvania Regiment under Colonel Greer. At the battle of Brandywine he was shot through the abdomen by a musket ball and thought to be fatally wounded. The surgeons drew a white silk handkerchief through the wound as a test for perforation of the intestines. The test was satisfactory and Welsh was given a chance to get well. Students of antiseptic surgery would stand aghast at such a proceeding today.

CAPTURE OF STONY POINT.

John McCleod, another pioneer of Connoquenessing Township, enlisted in Captain Patterson's company, Second Regiment of the Pennsylvania Line. He was an aide-de-camp on the staff of Gen. Anthony Wayne at the battle of Stony Point and was with General Wayne at the battle of Fallen Timbers. The assault at Stony Point was made a little after midnight. Muskets were unloaded, flints taken off, and bayonets fixed; not a shot was fired. The conflict was short, sharp and decisive. General Wayne was wounded on the head and was carried to a place of safety by McCleod. Happily for the cause of liberty, General Wayne's injury consisted of a scalp wound that bled profusely, but was not dangerous.

One of the frontier commands that were noted for their daring, bravery and the deadly accuracy of their aim, was Col. Daniel Morgan's Sharpshooters. At the battle of Saratoga, General Gates' men were much annoyed by the skillful manoeuvring of one wing of the British troops under the direction of an officer, who could be seen stationed on a knoll that gave a commanding view of the firing lines. General Gates requested Colonel Morgan to pick this officer off with his Sharpshooters. General Morgan detailed six men for this duty, among whom were James Critchlow, William Critchlow and Thomas Scott. These men chose a position in an abandoned house, but were still out of effective firing range. The ground lying between the knoll and the Sharpshooters was covered with a rank growth of weeds almost as high as a man's head. Resolving on a desperate move, William Critchlow crawled on his hands and knees until he was within easy range of the British officer and his staff. Waiting his opportunity Critchlow arose and fired. There was a commotion on the knoll and a regiment of infantry fired into the patch of weeds, but Critchlow made his escape back to his command without injury. After the battle it was learned that the officer shot by Critchlow was General Frazier, who was second in command to General Burgoyne.

James and William Critchlow and Thomas Scott, above mentioned, were among the first settlers of Connoquenessing Township, and many of their descendants still reside in the county.

Henry Kuhn, of Center Township, was with the Continental Army at the battle of Bunker Hill.

James Maxwell, of Jefferson Township, one of the early sheriffs of the county, was a soldier of the Revolution.

David Studebaker, who came into Worth Township as early as 1890, had been an Indian captive for years, when a boy. He served under General Washington in the Revolution and died in Butler County in 1815.

Thomas Cross, another pioneer of Worth Township, was at the battle of Lexington.

Thomas Clark Sr., a pioneer of Worth Township, served from 1777 to the close of the war. He died in Butler County at the age of ninety-five.

Christopher McMichael, a Scotch-Irish man, was taken prisoner at the battle of Brandywine, while in the Continental Army. After his release he served as a scout in the Indian wars.

Thomas Martin, who first came to Middlesex Township in 1793, and was driven off by the Indians, was a native of Ireland. He saw service in the Revolution and became a settler of Middlesex Township in 1797.

Silas Miller, who was a pioneer of Middlesex Township, came originally from New Jersey. He served in a Westmoreland County regiment in the Revolution and in a Butler County command in the War of 1812.

John Shira came to Washington Township from Berks County in 1798. He served three terms of enlistment in the Continental Army.

Thomas Means, a Revolutionary soldier from Westmoreland County, settled in Franklin Township at an early date.

Samuel Robb and John Lowe, early pioneers of Oakland Township, were soldiers of the Revolution.

Robert Stewart was a corporal in Captain Evans' company, Third Pennsylvania Regiment, in Westmoreland County. He came to Butler County in 1796 and took up a large tract of land near the present town of Portersville.

Stephen Brewer, who was an early settler in Clinton Township, served in the Indian wars under General Wayne, and was a scout and frontiersman.

William Kiskaddon, an Irishman by birth, served seven years and six months in the Colonial Army. He settled in Buffalo Township near Monroeville, about 1797.

Philip Hartman, the progenitor of the Hartman family in Donegal Township, enlisted in Captain Ogle's company from Westmoreland County. His brother, Michael, served in the Continental Army and settled in Armstrong County.

In 1830 the Pennsylvania legislature refused a contribution to James Elliott, above mentioned, although his claims to recognition were strongly urged by William Purviance, of Butler, who was then a member of the House. In 1852 the legislature granted a pension of $40 a year to James McElvain, a soldier of the Indian War, and to Catherine Monks, widow of another soldier of the war. In 1840 there were twenty-six revolutionary pensioners residing in Butler County.

THE WAR OF 1812.

Smarting for thirty years over the loss of her North American colonies, England precipitated a second war by sending a fleet to our Atlantic coast and Great Lakes and threatening to invade the northern frontier with her army. The pioneers of Butler County were yet engaged in subduing the wilderness to the uses of civilization, but the call to arms aroused the patriotic sires of 1776 and their no less patriotic sons and they forsook the paths of peace to take up arms against the invader. In the ranks of the Butler County companies were found the survivors of many a hard fought field in the Revolution under General Wayne and in the Indian wars under St. Clair, and their sons proved their value on many a bloody field in the war that followed. It is not an uncommon thing to find on the muster rolls of the county in the War of 1812 the name of a father, followed by two, three, four and five sons. The struggle that followed was brief and forever settled the supremacy of the United States on this continent.

In July, 1812, the appearance of British and Indian forces off the harbor at Presque Isle, now Erie, caused alarm along the border, and under an order of the governor of the state dated July 15th, the Sixteenth Division of the State Militia was organized by General Kelso. This Division included Butler County. In his message to the legislature, December 3rd, of the same year Governor Snyder made use of the following language: "In the War of the Revolution our fathers went forth, as it were, with a sling and with a stone, and smote the enemy. Since that period millions of her sons have grown to manhood, and, inheriting the principles of their fathers, are determined to preserve the precious heritage which was purchased by their blood and won by their valor."

Acting on the suggestion of Governor Snyder, the legislature passed an act for an additional monthly allowance to the Pennsylvania militia, and energetic efforts were made to place Lake Erie in a state of defense.

In the spring of 1813 Commodore Perry was building his fleet at Erie harbor and the third detachment of 1,000 Pennsylvania militia was ordered to the defense of the Union, to protect the vessels of war building at Erie. At this time the British evinced a determination not only to destroy Commodore Perry's unfinished fleet but to invade Pennsylvania. Appreciating the gravity of the situation, Commodore Perry sent a courier to Meadville for reinforcements, and Gen. David Mead, commander of the Sixteenth Division of the State Militia, ordered his command to report at Erie with all possible haste. Butler County furnished her full quota of men for this expedition and they assisted in protecting public property and in getting the squadron over the bar at the mouth of the harbor and in the events that preceded the famous engagement of September 10th of that year.

Shortly after war was declared Col. John Purviance of Butler raised a regiment which was known as the "Second Regiment of Infantry," and formed part of the brigade commanded by Gen. Adamson Tannehill. Five companies of this regiment were recruited in Butler County. Under the call of 1813 the men of Colonel Purviance's regiment re-enlisted and served at Erie and northern posts. In 1851 Gen. John N. Purviance, a son of Col. John Purviance, secured from the War Department at Washington, D. C., copies of the roster of this regiment, which were published in the Democratic Herald of that year.

During the struggle Pennsylvania soil was never invaded by hostile foot, yet at one time, the state had more militia and more volunteers in the service than were at any time from any other state in the Union. A noteworthy fact that Pennsylvania's sons may remember with pride is that when General Van Rensselaer's brigade of 4,000 New York militia arrived at Buffalo in 1814 they refused to cross the line into Canada on the pretext that they were not obliged to, even to fight their enemies. Two days later General Tannehill's brigade of 2,000 Pennsylvania militia arrived at Niagara, promptly crossed the line and gallantly met the foe.

Pennsylvania militia also helped man Commodore Perry's fleet, and for this service were awarded silver medals by the legislature of the state. Among those who served in Commodore Perry's command was John Waldron, a pioneer of Forward Township.

It is a matter of history that the war of 1812 met with a lukewarm support for a time in some of the New England states, especially those bordering on Canada, but such lukewarmness cannot be attributed to Western Pennsylvania. The pioneers were ardent patriots and had no time nor use for Toryism. An illustration of this is given in the treatment of Andrew McClure, at Zelienople, in 1812. McClure was accused, unjustly, however, of having Tory affiliations, and was taken out one night by a party of militiamen, who poured tar over him and then gave him a coat of feathers.

There were five full companies that went from Butler County to the War of 1812, forming a part of a regiment of twelve companies raised in the district by Col. John Purviance and known as the Second Regiment of infantry. The five companies above referred to were those of Captains Abraham Brinker, Robert Storey, Robert Thompson, Samuel Jordan, and James Stewart. The Second Regiment formed a part of the brigade commanded by Brigadier-General Adamson Tannehill and saw service at Erie and other posts in Northern Pennsylvania. In response to a call issued in July, 1813, the men of Colonel Purviance's regiment re-enlisted.

In addition to the companies above mentioned there was also Captain Martin's company, which formed a part of the battalion commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel Miller, known as the One Hundred and Thirty-eighth Regiment.

MEXICAN WAR.

Butler County had no regular military organization in the war with Mexico. The Slippery Rock Guards, one of the militia organizations of the county, assembled at the house of Lieut. John Brackney at West Sunbury on June 13, 1846, and on motion of Capt. John Loudon tendered their services to the Governor of the State as a rifle company. A similar tender of services was made by the Washington Cavalry of Butler February 13, 1847. The quota of volunteers having been filled, the offers of these organizations were not accepted. A number of young men from the county enlisted in various commands and served through the war.

So far as known the only survivor of the Mexican War in the county at this writing is James Graham of Butler. Graham is a native of Butler County, but enlisted at Pittsburg, in Company G, Eleventh Pennsylvania Infantry, which was organized at Carlisle and was on its way to the front. Mr. Graham also served three years in the Civil War and is probably the oldest living veteran of the two wars in the state.

Charles Hoffman, who died recently in Saxonburg, enlisted in Pittsburg in the DeKalb Greys and served during the war. He was also a veteran of the Civil War.

Henry Hartung and Casper Hartung, two brothers of Butler Township, enlisted at Pittsburg and served during the war.

John Hoffman of Connoquenessing Township, enlisted from Beaver County and served in an artillery regiment.

Andrew G. Marshall, Richard Crozier and George L. Glenn returned to their homes in Butler from the war in 1848 and met with a warm welcome by their friends.

E. G. Smith, a returning soldier, en route to his home in Crawford County, died on the Pittsburg-Butler stage, and was buried in Butler with military honors, July 31, 1848.

Lafayette Sullivan, of Butler County, was a sergeant in Company E, Eleventh United States Infantry, of General James Shields' brigade. He died at the City of Pueblo, Mexico, in January, 1848.

James Bredin, ex-judge of this district, served on the U. S. Ship Ohio along the Mexican coast and was in the actions at Vera Cruz and Suspan.

Lafayette Kerr, of Slippery Rock Township, died on the field of honor.

James Reed of Oakland Township, was a wagonmaker in the employ of the Government.

John Kirkpatrick, a resident of Clinton Township, was killed in battle.

Samuel Patterson, who died in Butler in January, 1903, served in the Eighth Pennsylvania Regiment through the war. He also served in a West Virginia artillery regiment through the Civil War.

THE CIVIL WAR—1861-1865.

The first organization to take the field during the War of the Rebellion was The Butler County Blues, a company organized in Butler, April 22, 1861, at a public meeting held at the court house. The commissioned and non-commissioned officers chosen were: John N. Purviance, captain; Alexander Gillespie, first lieutenant; John G. Vandyke, second lieutenant; John B. McQuiston, first sergeant; Edwin Lyon, second sergeant; Oliver C. Redie, third sergeant; Samuel Mucket, fourth sergeant; Thompson Campbell, Jr., Andrew Carns, John P. Orr and Joseph B. Mechling, corporals.

Leaving Butler on the forenoon of April 22nd, the company proceeded to Freeport and thence to Pittsburg, arriving at the latter point the same evening. It remained at Pittsburg until April 24th, when, with other volunteer companies, and General Negley in command of the battalion, it proceeded to Harrisburg. On the 25th of April, the Butler County Blues were mustered into the United States service for three months by Capt. S. G. Simmons, and became Company H of the Thirteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers. In the regimental organization Thomas A. Rowley was commissioned colonel, and Capt. John N. Purviance, lieutenant colonel. Jacob Ziegler was elected captain of Company H, to succeed Captain Purviance, promoted to lieutenant colonel. Captain Ziegler resigned, however, on the 11th of May, and First Lieutenant Alexander Gillespie was promoted to captain, and George W. Smith to first lieutenant.

On the 26th of April the regiment proceeded to Camp Scott, near York, Pennsylvania, and went into camp for instruction, remaining there until June 4th. The command then moved to Camp Rowley, near Chambersburg, and on the 11th of June to Camp Brady, about three miles south of Chambersburg, where it reported to Col. Dixon S. Miles, commanding the Fourth Brigade, First Division, Patterson's Corps. Two days later the regiment was fully equipped, and, with five days' cooked rations and forty rounds of ammunition, started on the march southward. The first stop was at Camp Lee, two miles south of Greencastle, Pennsylvania, and on the 15th of June, the regiment proceeded to Camp Riley, a point two miles north of Williamsport, Maryland. The following day the Thirteenth was assigned the advance of the column and passing through Williamsport, crossed the Potomac River, camping that night on Virginia soil at a point called Camp Hitchcock, three miles from the river, thus being the first northern men to reach Virginia on this line.

From the 18th of June to the 2nd of July, the Thirteenth Regiment was engaged on the Maryland side of the river in constructing field work or redan for the use of Captain Doubleday's battery and repelling the attacks of enterprising bodies of the enemy on the picket lines. When Patterson's army of 20,000 men crossed the Potomac on the 2nd of July, the Thirteenth and the Eighth Regiments were left to garrison Williamsport. The next duty performed by the Thirteenth was to escort the Rhode Island battery of Colonel Burnside's command to Martinsburg, Virginia, on July 4th. This was followed by two weeks of picket and fatigue duty, when the regiment joined the main column and moved to Bunker Hill village, and on the 17th proceeded to Charleston, where it remained until the 21st, the day the First Battle of Bull Run was fought. From Charleston the regiment proceeded to Harper's Ferry and thence to Hagerstown, Maryland, arriving at the latter place on the morning of July 23d. On the 25th of July the command proceeded by rail to Harrisburg and thence to Pittsburg, arriving at its home station the morning of July 28th. The citizens of Pittsburg handsomely entertained the returning soldiers, and on the 6th of August, the regiment was mustered out of the service by First Lieut. John B. Johnston, of the Third United States Cavalry. The only other change made in the commissioned officers of Company H was the appointment of Second Sergeant Edwin H. Lyon to be first lieutenant.

Immediately after the muster out of the Thirteenth, Colonel Rowley set about the reorganization of his regiment for the three-year service and a full company was organized in Butler County. Many of the men who served in the old Thirteenth re-enlisted, and the new organization became known as the One Hundred and Second Pennsylvania Volunteers. This change in number happened through a dispute between Colonel Rowley, who wanted to retain his old regimental number, Thirteen, and the adjutant general, who positively declined to use the "hoodoo" number. When the dispute was settled, all the numbers under 102 had been taken, and that became the number of Colonel Rowley's new regiment.

When Company H, Thirteenth Regiment, was mustered out many of the members re-enlisted in other volunteer organizations that were leaving for the field in the summer of 1861, and made gallant records.

FOURTIETH PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS,
(ELEVENTH RESERVE.)

Under the first call for troops in April, 1861, three full companies were organized in Butler County, but only one had been accepted—Company H, Thirteenth Regiment—when the quota for the county was filled. The other two companies preserved their organization and were mustered in as Companies C and D, Eleventh Pennsylvania Reserve, in May, 1861. Company C was recruited at West Sunbury, this county, in April and May, and was named the Dickson Guards in honor of Rev. W. T. Dickson, who was principal of the West Sunbury Academy at that time. A large number of the members of this company were students of the academy, and were fired by the patriotic zeal of their teacher, who followed the command to the front, and served as chaplain of the regiment from August 28th, 1861, to November 28th, 1862. The first captain of this company was John Loudon.

Company D was organized in the western part of the county as the Connoquenessing Rangers by Capt. William C. Stewart. On June 10th the two companies reported at Camp Wright, near Pittsburg; on July 1st, the regimental and staff officers were elected and on July 29th the regiment was mustered into the United States service for three years at Washington, D. C. To rehearse the story of the arduous campaigns and hard fought battles of the Eleventh Reserve, is to repeat the deeds of the Army of the Potomac, and the fallen heroes of the two Butler County companies were left on the great battle fields in Virginia, Maryland and Pennsylvania. During its three years of service the regiment participated in the battles of Mechanicsville, Gaines' Hill, Charles City, Cross Road, second Bull Run, South Mountain, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Gettysburg, Falling Waters, Culpeper, Bristoe Station, Rappahannock Station, Mine Run, Wilderness, Spottsylvania, North Anna, and Bethesda Church.

Of the 108 men whose names appear on the roll of Company C, twenty were killed in battle; forty-three were wounded; nine died from disease, two of whom died in prison, and from disease contracted while in prison. Eighteen were discharged on account of wounds and thirteen on account of disability.

Company D paid almost as heavy a toll. Of 125 men on the roll, eighteen were killed in battle; fifteen died from wounds received in battle or from disease; two were missing after battle, and thirty were discharged because of wounds or disability on surgeon's certificates.

THE SEVENTY-EIGHTH REGIMENT.

The Seventy-eighth Regiment was organized at Camp Orr, Kittanning, in August and September, 1861. William Sirwell of Armstrong County was its colonel, Archibald Blakeley of Butler County, the lieutenant colonel, and Augustus Bonaffon of Allegheny County, major. Company H was recruited in Butler County under Captain William S. Jack. The regiment was brigaded with the Seventy-seventh and Seventy-ninth Regiments, and Muehler's battery under Brig. Gen. James S. Negley at Pittsburg, and proceeded at once by boat to Louisville, and thence to Nolan's Station on the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, where it was attached to Gen. A. McDowell McCook's Division of the Army of the Cumberland. From that time until August, 1862, it was engaged in guarding lines of communication in Tennessee and Kentucky, and was engaged in a number of skirmishes with guerrillas and cavalry. From August to December of the same year it was on garrison duty at Nashville with General John F. Miller's Brigade of Negley's Division. On October 17th the regiment assisted in the routing of Anderson's rebel camp, and the capture of the Thirty-second Alabama Regiment. Subsequently the regiment engaged in the battles of Stone River, on December 3, 1862, and January 1, 1863; at Chickamauga, September 19-20, 1863, and at Lookout Mountain, November 23-24 and 25, 1863. During the Atlanta Campaign in 1864, it participated in the engagements at Tunnel Hill, Buzzard's Roost, Resaca, Dallas and Kennesaw Mountain.

At the battle of Stone River the regiment lost 190 men in killed and wounded. Among the mortally wounded was Capt.

William S. Jack, Company H, who died in the hospital at Nashville, February 5, 1863. In this battle the flag of the Twenty-sixth Tennessee Regiment became the trophy of the Seventy-eighth.

Company H of this regiment was composed entirely of Butler County men. William S. Jack was its captain. After his death, February 5th, 1863, Hugh A. Ayres was promoted from first lieutenant to captain. The lieutenants were Joseph B. Meehling, Samuel J. McBride, and Frederick F. Wiehl.

On October 17th the time of the regiment expired and it was ordered back to Pittsburg to be mustered out. On the way home through Tennessee it was mounted and sent in pursuit of Wheeler's rebel cavalry. After more than three years of service the regiment arrived in Pittsburg on November 4th, 1864, and was mustered out.

Many, however, re-enlisted and new companies were organized to serve until the close of the war. Among these was Company E, recruited in the southwestern section of the county. Its captain was Robert I. Boggs, and the lieutenants were Alexander Gillespie and Lewis Gansz. In addition to Company E, about twenty men from the eastern section of the county enlisted in Company F.

In April, 1863, Colonel Sirwell was promoted to brigade commander and Lieutenant Colonel Blakeley was made colonel of the regiment.

The final muster out of the regiment took place September 11th, 1865, several months after the surrender of Lee's army at Appomattox.

The chaplain of the regiment was Rev. Richard C. Christy, who was at the outbreak of the war pastor of St. John's Roman Catholic Church, at Coyleville, in Clearfield Township. He resigned his pastorate to accept the commission as chaplain of the Seventy-eighth Regiment, and he was tireless and fearless in the discharge of his duties. He not only ministered to the sick and wounded in the camp and the hospital, but where the battle raged the hottest he was found speaking words of comfort to the wounded and the dying, and encouraging all by word and example. Because of his courage and devotion he was known throughout the Army of the Cumberland as the "Fighting Chaplain." His portrait occupies a place of honor in the Hall of Encampment, Number 45, U. V. L., of Butler.

ONE HUNDRETH REGIMENT—"ROUND HEADS."

The One Hundredth Pennsylvania Volunteers was recruited in the southwestern counties of the state, with the exception of one Company, C, which was recruited in Butler County. The captains of this company were James E. Cornelius, of Porterville, afterwards promoted to colonel, David Critchlow, and George W. Fisher. The lieutenants were: Philo S. Morton, Robert W. Weller, Matthew Stewart, Isaac W. Cornelius, and William Smiley. The regiment was sworn into the United States service at Camp Wilkins, August 31, 1861, and on September 2nd proceeded to Washington, D. C., where Company L was transferred to the 105th Regiment.

From the fact that the make-up of this regiment was principally the descendants of Scotch-Irish Covenanters, and of the Round Heads of the English Revolution, it became known as the "Round Head Regiment."

The field and staff officers of the regiment were: Colonel, Daniel Leasure; lieutenant colonel, James Armstrong; major, David A. Leckey; chaplain, Rev. Albert Audley Brown; quartermaster, H. H. Leslie; surgeon, Horace Ludington; assistant surgeon, Abraham Maas; adjutant, George Leasure.

At Washington the "Round Heads" were brigaded with the Eighth Michigan and the Fiftieth Pennsylvania, and the Seventy-ninth New York Highlanders, with Colonel Leasure as commander of the brigade, and ordered to South Carolina as part of the land forces sent against Port Royal. The regiment participated in the battles of Port Royal, Port Royal Ferry, and in the unsuccessful attempt to take Charleston in June, 1862. In July, 1862, the regiment was assigned to the Ninth Corps of the Army of the Potomac, and participated in the battles of Second Bull Run, Chantilly, South Mountain, Antietam, and Fredericksburg. In March, 1863, the Round Heads were transferred to the Department of the Ohio, and in June assisted in the siege and capture of Vicksburg. They also participated in the battles of Jackson, Miss.; Blue Springs, Campbell's Station, and the siege of Knoxville, in Tennessee.

In January, 1864, all of the regiment, with the exception of twenty-seven men, re-enlisted for a second term of three years and were granted a veteran furlough. Upon their return to the field the Round Heads were again assigned to the Army of the Potomac, and participated in the battles of the Wilderness, Spottsylvania Court House, North Anna, Cold Harbor, Petersburg, Mine Explosion, Weldon Railroad, Poplar Grove Church, Hatcher's Run, Fort Steadman, and the final assault on Petersburg. After a service of nearly four years the regiment was mustered out of service July 24th, 1865. The record of the Round Heads is one of valiant service and brilliant achievements, both officers and men distinguishing themselves by great personal bravery.

ONE HUNDRED AND SECOND REGIMENT.

Immediately after the Thirteenth Regiment was mustered out in 1861, Col. Thomas A. Rowley began recruiting its members for the three years' service. The dispute that arose over retaining the old number, Thirteen, was not settled until all the numbers up to one hundred and two had been taken, and that became the number of the new regiment. The old number stuck, however, and the regiment was known throughout its service as the "Old Thirteenth." Company H of this regiment was a Butler County company. Its captain was Thomas McLaughlin, who was promoted to major, June 1, 1863. His successor was Robert W. Lyon, who was commissioned major, June 25, 1865, and promoted to brevet lieutenant colonel.

The lieutenants were William Crooks, Charles Bartley, Armstrong Renison, Addison J. Brinker, and Isaac C. Stewart. The company was mustered into the service August 20, 1861, one hundred and thirteen strong. From 1861 to June 28, 1865, two hundred men served in its ranks. Of this number thirty-eight were killed or mortally wounded in battle, seventy-two were wounded, and twelve died of disease.

The regiment was engaged in the advance on Richmond, and the advance on Fort Magruder. It was afterwards engaged in the battles of Seven Pines, Fair Oaks, Chantilly, Antietam, Fredericksburg, Mary's Height, Salem Church, Rapahannock Station, Mine Run, Westminster and Funkstown. Early in 1864 the regiment veteranized by re-enlisting and was given thirty days' furlough. The same year it was again in the field and took part in the engagements at Petersburg, Opequon, Winchester, Five Forks, Sailor's Creek and Appomattox. The total losses of the regiment were one hundred and seventy-one killed in action, a much larger number wounded; eighty-two died from disease, and one hundred and forty reported captured or missing.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRD REGIMENT.

The One Hundred and Third Regiment was recruited in January, 1862, and embraced two full companies from Butler County and a part of the third. Company E was recruited in the western part of Butler County. Its captains were Samuel Martin and Eli G. Cratty. The lieutenants were Christian M. Otto, Robert R. Bryson and Peter Weisenstein.

Company I was recruited in the north-western section of the county, and had for its captains, William C. Maxwell and William Fielding. The lieutenants were W. C. McCrum, W. H. Kiester and G. K. Crawford.

Company B was recruited from Butler, Armstrong, Clarion and Venango Counties. The captains of the company were: George W. Gillespie, Joseph Rogers and Daniel Coe. Captain Gillespie was killed in the battle of Fair Oaks and Captain Rogers resigned.

The regiment was organized at Harrisburg, February 24, 1862, with T. F. Lehman, colonel, and Wilson Maxwell (captain of Company I) as lieutenant colonel.

This regiment participated in the siege of Yorktown, where it lost eighty-four in killed and wounded at Fair Oaks and in the entire Peninsular campaign. In the latter campaign it lost fifty per cent. of its original members. After Foster's expedition in North Carolina the regiment went into camp on the Neuse River. In 1863 the regiment accompanied Wessell's Brigade to Plymouth, where the Confederates attacked by land and sea, compelling the surrender of the Federal troops on the 20th of April. The horrors of the Andersonville and Florence prisons followed, and of the one hundred and thirty-two men of this command who died in these prisons, thirty-four were from Butler County. During the months of March and April, 1865, eight new companies were added to the regiment, but they were carried on the rolls as unassigned men. When the command was mustered out June 25, 1865, but eighty-one of the original men were present.

VIEW OF EVANS CITY

OLD PEOPLE'S HOME, ZELIENOPLE

ORPHANS' HOME, ZELIENOPLE

M. E. CHURCH AND PARSONAGE,
CONNOQUENESSING

BARNHART MILL, CHICORA

PUBLIC SCHOOL, ZELIENOPLE

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-FOURTH REGIMENT.

This regiment was organized at Camp Curtin under a call issued in July, 1862, by Governor Curtin for men for nine months' service. The organization was mustered into the United States Service in August following with the following officers: Matthew S. Quay, of Beaver County, colonel; Edward O'Brien, of Lawrence County, lieutenant-colonel; and John M. Thompson, of Butler, major. Colonel Quay resigned early in December, and on the 8th of that month Lieutenant Colonel O'Brien was promoted to colonel, Major Thompson was promoted to lieutenant-colonel, and Capt. William H. Shaw was promoted to major. Alfred G. Reed, who went out as lieutenant of Company C, was promoted to adjutant, and on February 17, 1863, Capt. Cyrus E. Anderson was promoted to major. Alfred G. Reed was wounded at the battle of Gettysburg, December 13, 1862, and died fourteen days later. Alfred G. Reed Post, G. A. R., of Butler, was named in his honor. Sergeant Major George Purviance was promoted to adjutant on January 1, 1863, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Reed. This regiment participated in the battle of Fredericksburg, and in the battle of Chancellorsville, and was mustered out at Harrisburg May 26, 1863. Among those who were killed at Chancellorsville was Capt. John Brant, of Company B. The loss of the regiment during its term of service was thirty-eight officers and privates killed, and sixty-seven who died from disease.

Four companies of this organization were recruited in Butler County. The first company recruited was Company C, which had for its Captains Cyrus E. Anderson, and John F. White. The lieutenants were Alfred G. Reed, and Peterson P. Brown. Captain Anderson's company was one of the largest taken from the county during the war. The well known character of the leader brought in recruits from all over the county and by the time the organization reached Harrisburg they had many more men on the roll than the quota required for a company.

Company F was recruited in Butler County, and its captains were W. O. Breckenridge, and Winfield M. Clark. The lieutenants were John J. Kelley, Samuel Hilliard, and James Timblin.

Company G, recruited in Butler County, had for its captains Alfred G. Riddle, and James M. Clark. The lieutenants were Sterns E. Tyler, and James P. Hall.

Company K, recruited in Butler County, had for its captains, Edwin Lyon, and William O. Campbell. The lieutenants were J. A. Millinger, Daniel McMillen, and William B. Lyon.

H. W. Koonce of Butler County served in Company H of this regiment, and William Curry, Robert Richeal, and William J. Stoner, as privates in Company B.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-SEVENTH REGIMENT.

In addition to the four companies furnished for the 134th Regiment, Butler County furnished three companies for the 137th Regiment, which was organized at Camp Curtin, at Harrisburg, August 22, 1862, with the following officers: Henry M. Bossert, of Clinton County, colonel; Joseph B. Kidder, of Allegheny County, lieutenant-colonel; and Charles B. Wingert, of Clinton County, major. The regiment entered active service September 12, as a member of Smith's Division of Hancock's Brigade, and was soon after engaged in the battle at Crampton's Gap in the South Mountain. It was present at the battle of Antietam, and later was sent in pursuit of J. E. B. Stewart, the rebel cavalry general, who had made a raid into Pennsylvania. It took part in the Burnside's second campaign, and subsequently went into camp at Belle Plain. In April, 1863, it crossed the Rappahannock at Franklin's crossing under a heavy artillery fire, and was present at Chancellorsville, where it was assigned the extreme right of the line. Its terms of enlistment having expired, it was ordered to Harrisburg and mustered out on the 25th of May, 1863.

Company D of this regiment was organized in Butler County, and had George W. Hays for its captain. The lieutenants were William Harvey, John B. McNair, and Matthew N. Greer.

Company F was recruited in the western part of the county by Capt. Henry Pillow. The lieutenants were Origen G. Bingham, Cyrus O. Kingsbury, and John Lemmon.

Company G was recruited by Capt. Allen Wilson, and has for its lieutenants Robert Storey and David Conn.

George H. Graham of this company was promoted to quartermaster of the regiment August 28, 1862. W. H. McCandless of Butler County served in Company B of this regiment.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY-NINTH REGIMENT,
(FOURTEENTH CAVALRY.)

The Fourteenth Cavalry was recruited in August and September, 1862, as a three years' service regiment, and was mustered into the United States service November 24th, with James M. Schoonmaker, colonel; William Blakeley, lieutenant-colonel; Thomas Gibson, Shadrach Foley, and John M. Daily, majors. The regiment consisted of twelve full companies, Company L being recruited in Butler County. The captains of this company were William H. Tibbles, R. M. Kiskaddon, and Saml. D. Hazlett. The lieutenants were David C. Beale and Robert Wilson. Captain Tipples resigned November 14, 1862, and Captain Kiskaddon resigned March 18, 1865.

At the close of December, 1862, the Fourteenth Cavalry formed the advance post of General Kelley's Division in the Shenandoah Valley. It rendered valuable services in Virginia from that time until June 11, 1865, when it was ordered to proceed to Fort Leavenworth, Kansas, where it was consolidated into a six-company battalion. On August 24, five companies were mustered out and Company A remained at Leavenworth until November 2, 1865, when it was mustered out.

ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY-NINTH REGIMENT.

Butler County furnished one company for the One Hundred and Sixty-ninth Regiment, which was recruited by Capt. John G. Bippus, and was mustered into the United States' service as Company E. The lieutenants of this company were Frederick Burry and James M. White. The organization of the regiment was completed November 28, 1862, with the following field officers: Lewis W. Smith, of Allegheny County, colonel; Emanuel W. Wickenshaw, of Allegheny County, lieutenant colonel; and William Smyth, of Butler County, major. This regiment was called out for nine months' service and was mustered out July 27, 1863. This organization was known as drafted militia. On the 1st of December the regiment started for Washington and upon its arrival was ordered to Fortress Monroe, where it reported to General Dix. On the morning of the 7th it was sent to Yorktown and the following day to Gloucester Point. Near the close of the month it was transferred to Fort Keyes, which it garrisoned and in addition performed picket duty in its front. On the 9th of July, 1863, the regiment was removed to Washington, and thence marched through Frederick City and Boonsboro to Funkstown, Maryland, where it reported to the headquarters of the Army of the Potomac on the 14th of July, and was assigned to the Eleventh Army Corps. The regiment joined in the pursuit of Lee's army after the battle of Gettysburg, and made a forced march to Williamsport, Maryland, where it arrived in time to receive a few parting shots and see the last rebel baggage wagon disappear on the Virginia side of the Potomac. A few days later it proceeded to Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, where it was mustered out on the 27th of July, 1863.

TWO HUNDRED AND TWELFTH REGIMENT,
(SIXTH ARTILLERY.)

The Sixth Artillery of the Two Hundred and Twelfth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers was organized at Camp Reynolds, near Pittsburg, in August and September, 1864. The organization was recruited in western Pennsylvania and contained many veterans who had served in other regiments during 1862-3, and had been discharged on the expiration of their enlistments. The organization was completed on the 15th of September by the selection of the following field officers: Charles Barnes, colonel; Joseph B. Copeland, lieutenant-colonel; Robert H. Long, Joseph R. Kemp, and Frank H. Wite, majors. The regiment left Pittsburg on the 17th of September for Washington, D. C., and was assigned to the Second Brigade of De Russey's Division. On the 29th of September it was detailed to guard the Orange and Alexandria Railroad over which supplies were transported for Sheridan's army, and in November it was ordered back to Washington. Up to this time the regiment had served as infantry, but it was afterwards drilled and detailed for duty as an artillery regiment. It served at Forts Marey, Renno, Craig, Ward, Albany, Lyon and others, and was mustered out at Fort Ethan Allen, June 13, 1865. The loss of this regiment was slight, being two men killed, while forty-four died from disease. Batteries A and B were almost wholly recruited by Butler County men. The captain of Battery A was William R. Hutchison, and the lieutenants, Thomas H. McElvain, William H. McCandless, James Harvey, and Milton

Wolford. The captain of Battery B was Gustavus L. Braun, and the lieutenants, W. H. H. Wason, John M. Kelsey, Robert O. Shira, and William C. Rudyard.

Butler County men served in other batteries in this regiment, as follows: Reuben Campbell, Battery C; James Atkinson, Felix H. Negley, Gottfried Reinhold, Samuel Schaffner, and William Watson, Battery D; John W. Brown, Battery H; William Lutz and Alexander C. Weller, Battery I; John Day, Battery K; Amos McCamant, John A. Hutchins, and Robert Hutchins, from Butler County, also served in this regiment.

FOURTEENTH MILITIA REGIMENT.

After the second battle of Bull Run, when General Lee threatened an invasion of Pennsylvania, an emergency was created which made it necessary to call into the service a force of the state militia to cooperate with the troops already in the field in repelling the invader. Butler County's response to this call was prompt. A company organized at Butler was mustered into the Fourteenth Militia Regiment as Company G, and was one of the first to report for duty. Many of the leading citizens of Butler Borough and of the county were members of this organization, and by reason of the large number of lawyers who joined, it was known as the "Blackstone Guards." Two Butler men were also numbered among the field and staff officers of the regiment. These were Major Charles McCandless and Assistant Surgeon Newton J. McCandless.

The Fourteenth Regiment was organized September 12 and 16, 1862, its colonel being R. B. McComb. It was immediately sent to the front to perform such services as might be demanded of it, but the battle of Antietam fought on September 16-17, resulting in the defeat of General Lee and his retreat into Virginia, relieved Pennsylvania from the danger that threatened her borders. The further services of the emergency men were not needed, and they were accordingly mustered out September 26 and 28. The captain of Company G was James Gilmore Campbell, and the lieutenants, Ebenezer McJunkin and Charles Duffy.

EIGHTEENTH MILITIA REGIMENT.

The Eighteenth Militia Regiment was also organized to meet the emergency arising from Lee's threatened invasion of Pennsylvania. It was with the army at South Mountain and Antietam, though it did not actively participate in those battles. It was mustered out of the service September 27, 1862, after the defeat of Lee at Antietam. Company C of this regiment was recruited in Butler County by Capt. William R. Hutchison, and the lieutenants were John Brown and Henry Flick.

FIFTY-SIXTH MILITIA REGIMENT.

The second advance made by General Lee's army and the threatened invasion of the state in 1863 created an emergency for which the state militia were called out in June of that year. The Fifty-sixth Regiment was mustered in from June 27th to July 5th for the defense of the state and served until August 13th, when the command was mustered out. Company F was recruited in Butler County by Capt. William R. Hutchison, who had recruited a company the previous year, and the lieutenants were Baxter Logan and John Brown.

FIFTY-EIGHTH MILITIA REGIMENT.

This command was organized in July, 1863, and mustered into service the same month under Col. George H. Bemis. On the 24th of July at the time of Morgan's raid, the regiment, with others, was ordered to hold the fords on the Ohio River between Steubenville and Wheeling, the Fifty-eighth occupying La Grange, opposite Wellsville. The watchfulness of this regiment led Morgan to seek a way of escape through Salineville, where he was attacked by Michigan cavalry and lost about three hundred of his men in killed, wounded and captured. The Fifty-eighth then took charge of the prisoners until they were placed in the Ohio penitentiary. After this duty was performed the regiment returned to Pittsburg and was mustered out August 14th and 15th, 1863. Company G of this regiment was raised in Butler County by Capt. Alexander Gillespie. The lieutenants were James G. Guthrie and John S. Brown. Company I was also recruited in Butler County by Captain William M. Clark, the lieutenants being William E. Moore and S. L. Daubenspeck.

THE FOURTH PENNSYLVANIA CAVALRY.

The Fourth Pennsylvania Cavalry was organized in October, 1861, and served until July 1, 1865, when it was mustered out. This regiment saw some of the hardest service of the war and lost ninety-eight men killed in action, while two hundred and sixty died from disease. Butler County did not have a full company in this regiment, but a number of men were in its ranks.

MISCELLANEOUS COMMANDS.

In addition to the foregoing companies and parts of companies credited to Butler County, a large number of her citizens and young men claiming the county as their home enlisted in other counties of Pennsylvania and in regiments raised in other states.

Col. James Cooper McKee, M. D., of Butler, was appointed and commissioned assistant surgeon of the United States Army in 1858. At the second battle of Bull Run he served as assistant medical director of Pope's army, and at Antietam as assistant medical purveyor of the Army of the Potomac. In 1863 he was promoted to captain in the regular army and placed in charge of Lincoln United States Hospital at Washington, D. C., in which position he continued until the close of the war. After the war he was transferred to New Mexico, serving there as chief medical officer of the army, and afterwards as medical director of the Department of Arizona. He also served in the same capacity at Vancouver Barracks, Department of Columbia. In 1891 he was retired from active service, with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, by reason of injuries received in the discharge of his duty.

Dr. Samuel Graham, of Butler, after serving three months in Company H, Thirtieth Pennsylvania Volunteers, completed a course of medicine in Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, and entered the service as assistant surgeon of the One Hundred and Seventy-fourth Pennsylvania Volunteers. He was subsequently appointed surgeon of the Eighty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers.

BOUNTIES AND DRAFTS.

In the early days of the war patriotism ran high in Butler County and the enlistments were rapid. Later on, though there was no diminution in the patriotic spirit, the burdens of war began to be heavily felt. The county was drained of its young men and extraordinary taxes were levied in order that the war might be prosecuted to a successful issue. The men in the field had to be encouraged and made to feel that the people at home were back of them and that the call for more troops would be promptly responded to. This imposed a duty of vital importance on those at home, demanding many sacrifices, and much patriotism in order that the county might acquit itself with credit to the state, and with honor to the Union cause.

When more troops were needed enlistments were encouraged by the aid of bounties and other inducements. In 1862 a relief tax amounting to $3,154.00 was collected, and in 1863, $9,752.18 were paid in bounties. The same year, under the draft of July, the county furnished 323 men.

Many of those drafted furnished substitutes. The plan adopted in Butler County appears to have been for a number of those subject to draft to subscribe to a fund to pay substitutes, and after the requisite number of substitutes had been secured, to divide up the surplus, if any, among the subscribers.

In January, 1864, Capt. Henry Pillow, a United States recruiting officer, announced the extension of the time for paying bounties, and asked for volunteers. At this time the quotas required from the counties comprising the Twenty-third district were published, showing the quota of Butler County to be 316, to be secured from 2,320 men of the first, and 1,317 men of the second class. The borough of Butler furnished fourteen recruits, and was clear of the draft. In order to accomplish this object, the local committee collected $3,070.00, of which $1,770.00 was paid for the fourteen substitutes. The sum of $35.00 was charged to the expense account, leaving $1,265.00 to be returned to the subscribers. Under the call of February 1, 1864, for 500,000 men, Butler Borough filled its quota and had a surplus of money to return to the subscribers.

BOUNTY ACT OF 1864.

A call for two hundred thousand men was made March 15, 1864, and the general bounty was paid until April 1, 1864. On the 14th of April an act providing for the payment of bounties in Butler County was approved by Governor Curtin. Power was given to the school directors to levy a tax sufficient to pay a bounty of $300 to each volunteer enlisted and credited to the school district making the levy. They were also empowered to levy a per capita tax not exceeding $25 from each taxable citizen subject to the draft, and to repay to subscribers moneys advanced to aid in raising volunteers.

A prompt response was made to the call of March 15, 1864, and when the draft was made, June 3rd, only nine districts in the county were behind with their quotas. In those nine districts, ninety-one men were called out by the provost marshal. A supplemental draft was ordered for June 27th, when sixty-five men were called out. Ten of the ninety-one men drafted on June 3rd failed to appear. Forty-four paid a commutation of $300 each, thirty-three were exempted, and two were reported dead. A call for another draft was made July 18, 1864, and it took place September 19th. On the 30th of November the number of men subject to draft in the county was placed at 2,780, which estimate included a large number of soldiers who had served two years or more, and had received their discharges.

The drafts of 1864 were made necessary chiefly for the reason that during that year the terms of a large number of those who had enlisted in 1861 for three years had expired, and new men had to be obtained to fill their places. It should be borne in mind that a majority of these men re-enlisted in the field and that volunteers were constantly coming forward in every township.

THE BALAAM ASSOCIATION.

While so large a portion of the sturdy manhood of the county was at the front battling for the preservation of the Union, an urgent duty devolved upon those at home to care for the dependent widows and orphans of those who had fallen in battle, and also a necessity to care for the sick and wounded in the hospitals and in their homes. For the former purpose a relief tax was ordered in addition to the voluntary contributions. For the latter purpose a society was formed in 1864 known as "The Balaam Association," which had active working members in the different townships.

PITTSBURG SANITARY FAIR ASSOCIATION.

Butler County people became liberal contributors to the Pittsburg Sanitary Fair Association and in the spring of 1864 committees to solicit subscription of money and clothing were appointed in each township in the county. On June 1, 1864, the collections amounted to $2,606.51 in cash, including $160.00 received from the Balaam Association. Clothing and provisions were also contributed to the amount of $736.14.

JUBILEE MEETING.

The success of the Union cause, as announced by the fall of Richmond and the surrender of the Confederate forces under General Lee, and the final return of peace, caused much rejoicing throughout the North. In Butler the joy of the people found voice at a "Jubilee Meeting" held at the court house, April 7, 1865. This meeting was presided over by Hon. Lawrence L. McGuffen, the vice-president being Capt. Samuel Loudon, William Campbell and William Stoops, and the secretaries Col. John M. Thompson, Capt. George W. Fleeger, Jonathan Clutton, and James Bredin. After a number of patriotic speeches were delivered the following resolution, offered by John Negley, was adopted:

"Resolved, That we learn with irrepressible joy of the success of the armies of the Union; the downfall of the rebel capital, and the surrender or capture of the rebel hosts. Victory and peace have come through war, and, God be praised, the Republic lives."

These exuberant manifestations of joy were interrupted by the sad news of the assassination of Abraham Lincoln. For the purpose of giving fitting expression to their sorrow, a meeting of the people of Butler Borough was held on the afternoon of Wednesday, April 19th, 1865. Gen. John N. Purviance was chosen president, James Gilmore Campbell, William Stewart, Charles McCandless, E. McMinkin, and E. M. Bredin, vice-presidents, and Wm. S. Ziegler, Thos. Robinson and James Bredin, secretaries of this meeting. Addresses in English were delivered by Rev. White, Tibbes, Niblock and Limberg, and in German by Rev. Myser. William Stewart, the chairman of the committee on resolutions, reported a preamble and a series of resolutions expressive of the general sorrow of the community.

SOLDIERS' MONUMENTS.

A suggestion for the erection of a monument to the memory of the Butler County soldiers who had fallen in battle or died in the hospitals or prisons of the South, was made not long after the close of the war, but owing to a lack of organized effort, the matter failed at that time to take a practical form. It was not until September 15, 1892, that any practical step was taken, when a meeting of soldiers and citizens was held in Butler at the suggestion of Col. John M. Sullivan. A board of directors was appointed at this meeting and in order to give it the proper authority, it was duly incorporated as the Butler County Monument Association, and a board of directors was elected, of which G. D. Swain of Harmony was chairman; I. J. McCandless, of Butler, secretary; and Charles Duffy, of Butler, treasurer. This board named committees to solicit funds in each voting district in the county, and in December of 1892, the collections had so far advanced that the board deemed it safe to advertise for bids and the presentation of designs. The contract was subsequently awarded to Campbell and Harrigan, of Pittsburg, for $3,500.00. The monument was completed, placed and ready for the dedication by July 4, 1894. The dedicatory ceremonies which took place on that day were appropriate and impressive, and were participated in by the old soldiers and citizens from all parts of the county. An address turning over the monument to the old soldiers and to the people of Butler County was delivered by G. D. Swain, president of the Monument Association.

The address accepting the monument was delivered by Capt. George W. Fleeger, of Butler.

The monument is of Barre granite, twelve feet square at the base and forty-eight and one-half feet high. The shaft is surmounted by an infantry soldier in full dress standing at ease. On the sides of the shaft are emblazoned crossed muskets, sabers, cannon, and one anchor, representing the four branches of the service, and at the base are these words: "Our Silent Defenders." The monument stands on the public park facing the court house, and is one of the first objects that attract the attention of the visiting strangers.

The soldiers' monument at Evans City was dedicated August 29, 1894. It was erected to the memory of the brave men who went into the service from Jackson, Forward, Commonwealth, Lancaster, Cranberry, Adams, Middlesex and Peem Townships, who sleep in unknown and unmarked graves in the South. The project was started by Capt. William Stewart Post No. 573, G. A. R., of Evans City, in 1892. The committee appointed to take charge of the work consisted of D. B. Douthett, John Rohmer, Dr. Wm. Irvine, Edward Dumbaugh, Enos Barkey, Capt. J. P. Boggs, H. C. Boggs, and George Marburger. On December 6, 1893, the contract for the erection of the monument was let to J. B. Evans of Evans City, and cost when completed about $1,400.00. The monument stands in the center of a plot donated to Stewart Post, G. A. R., by the Evans City Cemetery Association. It is of Quincy granite, nineteen feet three inches high, and is surmounted by the figure of an eagle standing on a globe. On one side is a wreath and crossed swords, and on the four sides of the die are inscribed the names of the dead whose memory the monument is designed to perpetuate, the number forty-five in all. There is also inscribed on one side these solemn and appropriate lines:

The muffled drum's sad roll has beat
 The soldier's last tattoo;
 No more on life's parade shall meet
 That brave and fallen few.
 On fame's eternal camping-ground
 Their silent tents are spread,
 But glory guards, with solemn round,
 The bivouac of the dead.

From first to last Butler County sent into the field twenty-five full companies, besides parts of companies. In addition to the organizations that are identified as belonging to the county, a large number of men claiming Butler County as their home enlisted in other volunteer regiments of the state and in other states, as well as in the United States regiments. The names of Butler County men are found on the muster rolls of fifty of the regimental organizations of Pennsylvania, and seventeen representing other states in the Union. For the roster of the Butler County companies reference may be had to Bate's History of the Pennsylvania Volunteers, which gives a record of each man enlisted.

SPANISH-AMERICAN WAR.

STIRRING SCENES OF 1898.

Butler County had but one military organization when war was declared against Spain in 1898—Company E, Fifteenth Regiment of the National Guard. Upon the first call for troops this organization promptly tendered its services and was accepted with the other National Guard companies of the state. For three days before the departure of the command for the point of mobilization the military spirit of the town rivaled that of 1861, when the first company left for the front in the Civil War. Blue-coated guardsmen on the street were the admiration of the girls and the envy of the less fortunate boys who wanted to enlist but did not have the opportunity. On Sunday, April 24th, the services in all of the churches partook of a patriotic nature and were attended by many soldiers in uniform. A mass meeting was held in the Y. M. C. A. hall in the afternoon which was attended by the old soldiers and the members of Company E, and a patriotic address was made by Col. John M. Thompson, who had delivered a similar address to the first company that left Butler for the front in 1861.

DEPARTURE OF THE FIFTEENTH REGIMENT.

The greatest military pageant in the history of the town took place on Wednesday, April 27th, when the entire Fifteenth Regiment passed through Butler on the way to the point of mobilization of the state troops at Mt. Gretna, and were the guests for three hours of the citizens of Butler. The train left Erie at 10 o'clock a. m. with Companies A and C, picking up Company B at Meadville; regimental headquarters and Company K at Greenville; Company F at Grove City, and arriving in Butler at 5 o'clock p. m. At this point Company E of Butler, Company D of Clarion and Company G of Sharon were picked up.

The regiment was met at the station by a committee of citizens, the G. A. R. and the U. V. L., and escorted to the court house, where lunch was served to the men by the young ladies of the town and the regimental officers were entertained at one of the hotels. At 7 o'clock the regiment formed at the court house and marched to the train. The line of march for more than half a mile was one continuous ovation, the entire population of the town turning out to wish the departing soldiers godspeed.

The command arrived at Mt. Gretna about noon on April 28th and remained in camp there until the 11th of June. In the meantime Lieut. A. T. Scott and Sergeant O'Donnell returned to Butler early in May and enlisted twenty-six recruits and the company was mustered into the United States Volunteer Service along with the other companies of the Fifteenth Regiment on the 10th and 11th of May. At this time the muster roll of the company contained seventy-five enlisted men and three officers, which was later increased to 106 enlisted men and three officers. Three of the men who left Butler with the original company were sent home by the examining surgeons because of physical disability, and one on account of sickness in his family. Two of these men assisted in the organization of the Butler Volunteers, one enlisted in another volunteer command and the fourth enlisted later in the United States regulars and was killed in action in the Philippines.

On June 19th the Fifteenth Regiment proceeded to stations at Sheridan Point, Virginia, and Ft. Washington, Maryland. Regimental headquarters and four companies were stationed at Sheridan Point and four companies, including Company E, under Lieut. Col. William T. Mechling, were stationed at Ft. Washington. Company E was assigned the care, preservation and drill of Emplacement C, having two ten-inch guns mounted on disappearing carriages. The inspection drill given by the company at Emplacement C was highly commended by Major Crozier and Major Greenough of the regular army, who were the inspecting officers.

The signing of the Protocol August 12th, 1898, destroyed any hope the Fifteenth Regiment had of getting into the field and the service performed thereafter was garrison and camp duty. On September 9th the regiment was united and proceeded to Camp George S. Meade at Middletown, Penna., and was assigned to the First Brigade, Second Division of the Second Army Corps. The regiment did provost guard duty until October 7th and participated in the Peace Jubilee at Philadelphia October 27th. Company E proceeded with the regiment to Camp Haskill, at Athens, Ga., on November 11th, and remained in camp there until mustered out of the volunteer service January 31, 1899.

DEATH OF PRIVATE WATTERS.

During the service of nine months Company E lost but one man—Private Charles

A. Watters, who died from typhoid fever in the hospital at Ft. Washington, August 9th, 1898. Private Watters had the distinction of being the only colored soldier enlisted in the Pennsylvania volunteer regiments. He was born in Liberty Township, Maryland, in 1860, and had been associated with Company E, Fifteenth Regiment, National Guard, since 1881.

The body of Private Watters was brought to his home in Butler and on August 12th was buried with military honors. Funeral services were held at the Methodist Episcopal Church, and that large auditorium could not hold half of the people who assembled to pay their respects to the dead soldier. All of the ministers in town were present and many from the country. The funeral pageant consisted of the Germania Band, A. G. Reed Post, No. 105, G. A. R.; Camp 45, U. V. L.; Company G, Twenty-first Regiment National Guard; ex-members of Company E, Fifteenth Regiment National Guard, and members of the Fire Department. He rests in the North Cemetery, on a beautiful hillside facing the Southland which he loved, and there awaits God's reveille when he shall answer the last roll call with his comrades in arms.

PATRIOTIC SOCIETIES.

Patriotic feeling ran high in Butler County after the departure of the troops for the field and immediate steps were taken to sustain the troops in the field and look after the comfort of the soldiers in camp and of their families at home.

Among the first organizations was the Butler Volunteers, mentioned in the militia chapter.

On May 28th, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U., a meeting was held at the home of Mrs. Levi M. Wise on North Main street for the purpose of making comfort bags for the soldiers and providing literature for their use in camp. The committee appointed consisted of Mrs. Levi M.

Wise, Mrs. O. M. Russell and Mrs. C. A. Bailey. These good women did work that was much appreciated by the boys in camp.

Meanwhile the Men's Patriotic League was formed for the purpose of looking after the material needs of the families of the soldiers in the field.

The general committee met on May 31st and elected Alex. Mitchell, president, and William C. Findley, secretary. Ward committeemen were named as follows: First ward, D. H. Sutton; Second ward, J. D. Jackson; Third ward, William H. Ritter; Fourth ward, A. B. Richey; Fifth ward, James N. Moore.

The following composed a finance committee: J. V. Ritts, Chas. Duffy, William Campbell, Joseph L. Purvis, L. C. Wick, H. H. Boyd, Major R. J. Phipps, Geo. J. Stamm, J. J. Leidecker, W. C. Thompson, Wm. G. Douthett and Calvin G. Christie.

An event of importance on June 25th was the presentation of a handsome silk field flag to Company E, Fifteenth Regiment, at Ft. Washington. The flag was the gift of the people of Butler, who were represented on the occasion by Wm. C. Thompson and a delegation of Butler ladies.

Flag raisings were events throughout the community and were attended by masses of people, school children and the patriotic societies.

The news that the Pennsylvania Volunteers had been mustered out at Athens, Ga., January 31, 1899, caused gladness throughout the land and Butler got ready to give the members of Company E a rousing reception. The company was met at the railroad station the morning of February 2nd by a reception committee of representative citizens, members of the Grand Army, the Union Veteran Legion, Company G, Twenty-first Regiment, National Guard, and the Germania Band. The route of the parade to the court house was lined with thousands of people, who braved zero weather to welcome the soldier boys home again. In the evening at the opera house an address of welcome was delivered by Col. John M. Thompson, and responded to by Capt. Ira McJunkin. Secretary J. B. Carrothers, representing the Y. M. C. A., presented each soldier with a free membership ticket for one year. The events of the day closed with a banquet tendered the members of the company in the armory.

The services performed by Company E in the Spanish War has none of the glory of the battlefield and is without any event of importance. But to the young men of the county who so promptly offered their services at the call of their country must be given the credit of a faithful performance of every duty assigned them and patriotic zeal that is the lasting heritage of a great nation.

ROLL OF COMPANY E, FIFTEENTH PENNSYLVANIA VOLUNTEERS.

Captain—Ira McJunkin.
 First Lieutenant—George S. Mechling.
 Second Lieutenant—Albert T. Scott.
 First Sergeant—Isaac Andrews.
 Quartermaster Sergeant—Horatio S. Vanderlin.
 Sergeants—John W. Alexander, Charles Collins, Francis J. O'Donnell, Joseph F. Moore, John J. Matrin, Charles A. McElvain.
 Corporals—William J. Jackson, Frank D. Pierce, William J. P. Collins, Elmer P. Kuhn, Hardie H. Hepler, Thomas McK. McKee, Howard C. Hazlett, Oscar C. McClung, Joseph A. Heineman, Clifford W. Penton, Harry G. Krag, William H. Reburn (company clerk), Clyde C. Green.
 Musicians—John A. Kelley, Alfred E. Black.
 Hospital Corps—Harry A. Cook.
 Artificer—Harry H. McFann.
 Wagoner—Vance Stroup.
 Privates—Robert J. Adams, Charles A. Allshouse, Cullen Armstrong, Lewis L. Beatty, Harry H. Boston, John M. Brown, Charley J. Burkhalter, Roy I. Burtner, Verne F. Caldwell, Charley L. Campbell, John H. Christy, Harry E. Cox, Charles A. Cummings, Harry S. Dersheimer, Walter R. Duncan, Samuel V. Eckelberger, Russell C. Eekman, Carl M. Eisler, Charles C. Elliott, David H. Ensminger, Harvey A. Evans, Ernest C. Faber, William G. Faber, Charles F. Fisher, William X. Foulis, Clarence E. Graham, Thomas D. Greer, Charlie E. Harrington, Rufus D. Hindman, John F. J. Heselton, John H. Jackson, Charles E. Kalb, Marcus B. Livingston, Marcus B. Mechling, Harry W. Metzgar, Charles E. Miller, Ralph H. Minks, James T. Morgan, Augustus S. Morrison, Ira A. Murphy, Josiah M. McCandless, James R. McClymonds, Walter F. McCormick, Henry F. McCullough, Louis A. McDonald, Laurence H. McDowell, Robert K. McIntyre, Edgar H. Negley, John A. Pierce, George A. Rae, Walter S. Reynolds, Jacob A. Rimer, William H. Ritter, Jr., Fred T. Roessing, Charles E. Sankey, Samuel S. Scott, George W. Shaffer, Oscar A. Shaffer, Frederick E. Shetter, Charles E. Smith, James L. Smith, Paul P. Smith, Neal Strawick, Harry E. Sumney, William D. Sutton, Edward F. Thomas, Andrew J. Thompson, Earl D. Thompson, George W. Thompson, Milton S. Tyler, Walter V. Tyler, James C. Vogley, Charles A. Watters, Aubrey R. Williams, Benjamin R. Williams, John G. Williams, Charles H. Wilson, Charles M. Wise, Alphons Wanlin, Thomas W. Watson.

Private Frederick E. Shetter was promoted to First Lieutenant and Regimental Quartermaster and was mustered out with the regiment.

Lieut. A. T. Scott performed the duties of regimental ordnance officer in addition to his duties in the line.

In addition to the roster of Company E the following volunteers from Butler County served in other commands:

In addition to the roster of Company E, the following volunteers from Butler County served in other commands:

William T. Mechling of Butler served as lieutenant-colonel of the Fifteenth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Harry H. Morrison of Company D, Fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

James L. Barton of Butler in Company H, Eighteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Robert M. Little of Butler in Company A, Eighteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

William A. Caldwell of Butler in the Seventeenth Regiment U. S. Infantry.

William E. Double in Company L, Nineteenth U. S. Infantry.

William A. Wade of West Sunbury in Company F, Fifteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Bert L. Wiseman of Butler in Company H, Fifth Ohio Volunteers.

Peter Cummings of Butler in Company H, Fifth Ohio Volunteers.

Harley McClellan in Company G, Fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

William J. Curley in Company H, Ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Fred Wigton in Company K, Sixteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Cameron G. Brandon in Company F, Fifteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Edward McKnight in Company I, Tenth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Fullerton Parker in Company H, Tenth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

George Gibson of Glade Mills in Company B, Eighteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Fleming Hepler of Clinton Township in Company B, Eighteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Joseph C. Hutcheson of Butler in Company H, Eighteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Charles H. Otterman of Zelenople in Company C, Eighteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

William E. Stevenson of Harrisonville in Company B, Eighteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Claude C. Ziegler of Butler in Company C, Eighteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

William J. Sterritt of Downieville in Company B, Fourteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

William H. Miller of Parkers Landing in Company C, Fourteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Charles E. Bartley of Mars in Company B, Sixteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Howard C. Harper of Butler in Company B, Sixteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Alton G. Say in Company G, Sixteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Peter Dunkle in Company G, Sixteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Bernard Gallagher of Butler in Company G, Eighteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Martin L. Walters of Clinton Township in Eighteenth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Edward Westerman of Clinton Township in a United States regiment in the Philippine service.

Fred Diekey of Butler in the Forty-first U. S. Volunteers Philippine service.

George A. Gill of Monroeville in Light Battery B, Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Alfred Jennings of Petrolia in the Fourth U. S. Artillery.

Charles Henry of Butler in the Rough Riders.

Hale T. Planie in Company G, Fourteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

William Hunter of Butler in the Seventeenth U. S. Infantry.

Frank Killen of Butler in the Fourth U. S. Artillery.

Wallace O. Rimer of Butler in the Fourth U. S. Artillery.

Ira A. Murphy of Butler served two years in a United States regiment in the Philippines.

The following were enlisted in Company F, Fifteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers:

Sergeant—Clarence Imbire, Harrisonville.

Privates—Edward Christley, Slippery Rock; L. M. Daubenspeck, North Washington; E. P. Storey, Evans City; James Orr, J. H. Irwin; G. F. Thompson, Harrisville; Frank Bovard, Harrisville; Joseph H. Bovard, Harrisville; Wilbur L. Brandon, Butler; Charles B. Fuhrer, Harrisville; Robert W. Friskoen, Evans City; James Love, Butler; Herman Pond, West Sunbury; John M. Roth, Prospect; Charles C. Starkey, Zeno; John B. Storey, Baldwin.

Ernest Koen of Butler served as a private in Company C, Fifteenth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Hugh C. Sproul of Boyer served as a private in Company C, Fifteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Charles A. Cummings, who served as a private in Company E, Fifteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, was commissioned First Lieutenant in the Forty-seventh U. S. Volunteer Regiment and served in the Philippines.

William S. Barr of Butler, who volunteered with Company E, Fifteenth Regiment, National Guard, enlisted in Company C, First U. S. Infantry, in the Philippine service and was instantly killed on the firing line in one of the battles in which the regiment was engaged.

William A. Teague of Butler served as a private in Company G, Fifteenth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers, in the war with Spain, and enlisted in Company B, Twenty-eighth United States Volunteers in the Philippine service.

George R. Graham of Butler served as a private in the Fourth United States Artillery.

William C. Faber of Butler enlisted in the Philippine service and served in one of the regular regiments.

NATIONAL GUARD.

Following the independent commands after the Civil War came the organization of the National Guard of Pennsylvania. In 1873 Butler Borough had two military organizations, Captain George W. Fleege's company, and Captain John M. Greer's company, the latter organization being known as the Aaron Sullivan Guards.

Some rivalry existed as to which organization would be taken into the new guard, and in 1874 F. A. Cochran of Apollo, who was on the staff of General Harry White, came to Butler and inspected the companies. On his recommendation the Aaron Sullivan Guards were selected for a place in the new organization, and were mustered in the state service as Company A, Thirteenth Regiment, Eighth Brigade, of the Ninth Division. The officers of the company were John M. Greer, captain; William Burton, first lieutenant; John Rosenberg, second lieutenant. In 1877 the officers of the company were: Captain J. B. Storey; first lieutenant, William H. Ensminger; second lieutenant, William A. Stein. The same year the company did service at the riots in Pittsburg.

Following the riots a reorganization of the National Guard took place and the Butler Company was transferred and became Company E, of the Sixteenth Regiment. Captain Storey was promoted to major and later to lieutenant colonel. William H. Ensminger was promoted to captain of the company; William T. Mechling to first lieutenant, and Eli D. Robinson to second lieutenant. This arrangement lasted until 1882, when the Butler company was again transferred and became Company E, Fifteenth Regiment of the Second Brigade. William T. Mechling was promoted to captain; Eli D. Robinson to first lieutenant, and John B. Brown, second lieutenant. The company went to the Homestead riots in 1892 with Ira McJunkin as captain; Alexander Borland first lieutenant, and George S. Mechling second lieutenant. Captain William T. Mechling had been promoted to lieutenant colonel and John W. Brown to battalion adjutant.

When President McKinley called for volunteers for service in the war against Spain in 1898, every man on the roll of Company E volunteered—a record equaled by but one other company in the state. The command left Butler on the 27th of April for Mt. Gretna and on the 10th and 11th of May were mustered into the United States volunteer service. The officers of the company were Ira McJunkin, captain; George S. Mechling, first lieutenant; Albert T. Scott, second lieutenant.

For roll of company, see muster roll of Company E, Fifteenth Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers, Spanish War.

When the volunteer organizations returned from the war in 1899, they were assigned their old places in the National Guard. At the reorganization of the Fifteenth Regiment, William T. Mechling of Butler was elected colonel. Captain Ira McJunkin was promoted to regimental adjutant, and Ben R. Williams to first lieutenant and battalion adjutant. The company officers were J. E. Moore, captain; John J. Martin, first lieutenant, and Oscar MeChung, second lieutenant.

The following year, 1900, there was another reorganization of the guard which affected the Butler company. The Fifteenth regimental headquarters at Butler were disbanded and the officers placed on the retired list. Companies A, B, E, F, and K were transferred to the Sixteenth Regiment and the other companies were mustered out of the state service. In the new organization the Butler company is designated as Company L, Sixteenth Regiment. In 1901, John J. Martin was elected captain of the company, Thomas M. McKee first lieutenant, and Arda J. Cumberland second lieutenant. Captain Martin resigned in 1902 and James A. McKee was elected to fill the vacancy. On the 7th of October of the same year the company was ordered to the anthracite coal regions and did duty for twenty-eight days at Mt. Carmel and Shenandoah. The present officers of the company are: Arda J. Cumberland, captain; Andrew J. Thompson, first lieutenant; Roy J. Burtner, second lieutenant.

In the thirty-five years of its existence the company has been called out into the service of the state three times and into the United States service once, and on each occasion has responded with a full quota of men in record-making time. It has been recognized as one of the most efficient commands in the state by the inspecting officers, and has taken both regimental and brigade honors. In 1907 it led the regiment in the number of expert rifle men.

ROSTER OF COMPANY L, SIXTEENTH REGIMENT, NATIONAL GUARD.

First Sergeant—William J. P. Collins.

Quartermaster Sergeant—Robert A. Brookhart.

Sergeants—William M. Teague, James F. Pollock,

William A. Cappean, James E. Fisher.

Corporals—Merrill W. Shawky, Earl R. Ellenberger, Charles R. Harling, Lewis F. Euby, Lewis M. Cumberland.

Musician—George Brookhart.

Artificer—Oliver B. Holt.

Company Clerk—Harry L. Kelley.

Cooks—Samuel McCullough, Daniel A. Kamerer.

Privates—Joseph T. Black, Claire Burtner, Arthur Deimling, Fred F. Eichelberger, Grover C. Fredey, Howard H. Hutchison, Arba A. Humes, William C. Jackson, George Kelley, Lewis C. Kelley, William C. Lampton, Frank Montgomery, Samuel J. McCall, Cecil N. McCandless, William C. McCandless, Raymond McCullough, Wilbert McCullough, John R. McCracken, David M. Orr, Paul R. Robb, Ben P. Sherman, Frederick Shoupp, Harry A. Smith, Eddie E. Starr, Don R. Urquhart, Edward Zimmel, James W. Wilson, Frank O. Wilson, Clyde Ramsey, Raymond S. Anchors, Findley E. Bartley, Harry

L. Condon, Charles A. Mattern, Earl Ralston, Harry Mosher, Frank Renshaw, R. Bracken, Leo Bradley, Emory D. Baker, William L. Walker.

Captain—Arda J. Cumberland.

First Lieutenant—Andrew J. Thompson.

Second Lieutenant—Roy I. Burtner.

THE SIXTEENTH REGIMENT BAND.

About the first of July, 1903, Col. Willis J. Hulings of Oil City, commander of the Sixteenth Regiment, National Guard, found that he had no regimental band for camp that year. He communicated with the Germania Band of Butler through Capt. James A. McKee, who was in command of Company L, Sixteenth Regiment, at that time, with the result that the local musical organization was recruited up to twenty-eight men and mustered into the state service a few days before the annual encampment of the guard. The organization at once took a leading place among the military bands of the state, and has been highly commended by both the state and regular army officers. The officers are: Principal musician, Eugene Morrison; chief musician, A. Judson Bowser; drum major, Ben Christley.

COMPANY G, TWENTY-FIRST REGIMENT.

When Company E, Fifteenth Regiment, left for the war with Spain the patriotic spirit ran high in Butler County. It was understood at the beginning that only the organized militia would be taken in the 100,000 volunteers called for by the President, and that when the National Guard companies were fully recruited the quota of Pennsylvania would be filled. Few, indeed, thought there would be no further call for troops. Capt. Ira McMakin, commander of Company E, urged several former members of the company to organize a second company, so that there would be no delay in furnishing troops if further calls were made. On April 27th, 1898, after the departure of Company E, and the Fifteenth Regiment from Butler for the point of mobilization at Mt. Gretna, a mass meeting was held in the armory to organize a military company. Fifty-two names were enrolled that night and at a meeting held two nights later the number had been increased to 103. The company was named the Butler Volunteers. James A. McKee was elected captain; James M. Maxwell, first lieutenant, and John C. Graham, second lieutenant. All of the officers had served six years in the ranks of Company E, Fifteenth Regiment, of the National Guard. Drilling was commenced at once and the services of the company tendered to the governor of the state and the War Department. When the second call came, the new organizations were taken from counties which had no representation in the Guard previous to the war, and the Butler Volunteers were placed on the waiting list.

The efficiency of the Butler organization was recognized by the military authorities of the state, however, and it was tendered a place in the provisional guard, organized to take the place of the old organization. The company was mustered into the state service July 8th, 1898, by Major John Penny, of the staff of General Charles Miller, as company G, Twenty-first Regiment, Col. E. V. D. Seldon. During its short existence the company furnished many drilled recruits to the organization in the field, both volunteer and regular, and in the Philippine service. It passed two creditable inspections and was mustered out of the state service March 9, 1900, along with the other companies of the provisional guard, to give place to the old guard, which had been promised reinstatement upon their return from the volunteer service. The career of Company G was short and the service inglorious, but its members are entitled to the consideration of having prepared themselves for active field service at a time when it was thought that their services would be needed. The roster of the organization is as follows:

Captain—James A. McKee.
 First Lieutenant—James M. Maxwell.
 Second Lieutenant—John C. Graham.
 Sergeants—Alex. G. Kelley, William F. Parker.
 J. O. Mitchell, Clarence Kelley, William F. Parker.
 Corporals—John G. Dunn, Arda J. Cumberland, William R. Eastman, F. E. Kelley, Philip Coulter, Hazard H. Jackson, Hermann Liebold, James A. McDowell.
 Company Clerk—Alfred J. Weigand.
 Privates—Robert J. Allen, Joseph M. Atchison, Plummer L. Bellis, William M. Briner, Edward B. Black, William B. Bowser, William E. Bathgate, Albert Bowers, Jacob Bowers, Ira Benninger, Phillip Coulter, Andley Campbell, Horace G. Christy, Harry Cumberland, E. E. Campbell, William Dufford, Michael L. Davis, William J. Dunbarr, John H. Dickey, Albert Duwell, Fred Deckey, Alfred Fullerton, Theodore Fair, George Fredley, J. B. Floyd, William Hunter, Samuel Jackson, Eckart W. Kalb, Warren E. Kirk, Frank Killen, Albert G. Kettirer, William J. Lee, Frank Lewis, William J. Manny, Joseph M. Miller, John C. Murtland, Harry Mangel, Edward Mahood, Robert M. McCullough, Stewart J. McMarlin, William McCall, Charles Maxler, E. L. Marshall, Paul Osterling, Patrick Rabbit, Wallace Rimer, J. L. Ralston, Charles W. Stromp, George B. Slentz, William V. Smith, Cornelius Snodgrass, A. B. Swaney, H. G. Smith, John D. Sharp, Miles F. Weaver, Ira A. Wilson, Elmer E. Wise, John W. Zeigler.

CHAPTER XI

THE MEDICAL PROFESSION

The Old Doctor—Some Borough and County Physicians—Homeopaths—Osteopathy—Registered Physicians—Butler Medical Association—Typhoid Fever Epidemic—Relief Society Organized—Ladies' Auxiliary Committees—Dr. Batt's Work—Hospital Established—Supply Rooms—Diet Kitchen—Clara Barton's Visit—Relief Fund—History of the Water Supply—Financial Report—Butler County General Hospital—Nurses' Training School.

The first physicians to come within the limits of Butler County were those connected with the Rapp settlement at Harmony in 1705. Previous to that the leech or the "blood letter" was the physician of the community, and in fact for many years after, the practice of bleeding for many ailments was common among the people and was not despised by the old-time physicians as late as the middle of the last century. Midwifery was then practiced by the women, though in serious cases a doctor would sometimes be called from Greensburg or Pittsburg.

The pioneer physician was an educated man for his day, but he was illy equipped with instruments and the remedies he used were few and simple. In waging an unequal war against disease he was compelled to depend largely upon his common sense, thereby establishing an individuality that was always marked and occasionally peculiar and eccentric. He learned to know the people and to treat their complaints with as fair a degree of success as could be expected, and he left behind him when he died an honorable name as the principal heritage of his descendants.

THE OLD DOCTOR.

No better pen picture of the "Old Doctor" could be given than is contained in the following sketch taken from a paper read by Dr. A. M. Neyman, retired, of Butler before the Butler County Medical Association at the annual banquet in 1900. Dr. Neyman is now in his eighty-third year and as he knew personally nearly all of the doctors of the old school, as well as those of the new, mentioned in this work, he is speaking as an old-time doctor about the doctors of 1830 to 1850.

"The 'Old Doctor' of my earliest recollection—of sixty to seventy years ago, as I remember him—was quite in contrast with the medical man, even with the old doctors, of to-day. Different in appearance, manner, and especially in methods.

"I hope to be altogether impersonal or uncritical in anything I may say of him, as the remembrance of his general demeanor compares very favorably with the average physician of the present, and as I might myself be considered as 'dragging my slow length along' in professional work to an unreasonable extent.

"He was almost universally a general practitioner—physician, surgeon, dentist, obstetrician. Specialists were rare in those days. In appearance he was not so particular as to personal adornments as in dignity of manner. He had usually enough clientele and was not tempted to resort to unprofessional terms to increase it.

“He spent much of his time on horseback, and was usually an expert horseman. The country being thinly populated, wheeled vehicles were few and often impracticable. Everybody got about on horseback; even the women showed expert horsemanship, and captivated many a heart among the sterner sex by their management of a proud charger. The doctor’s horse was bred for the saddle; high withers, short back, round barrel, compact in loins, pliant neck, ears well set up on bony head, and pasterns long and elastic. They were often from strains of Rappahannocks, bred in Virginia or Kentucky. When a doctor mounted a horse of this kind, with saddle-bags of the pattern of the day, open on one side, laced with a leathern strap, leggings enveloped his nether limbs down to the toes, spurs at heels, and a top coat rolled up like a knapsack on the saddle cloth, he commanded the admiration of the whole community.

“In manner the Old Doctor was more dignified than his successor of to-day. The age required it. He was an educated man usually, and was accorded a high place in the community. His department in the sick room would perhaps be considered brusque in the present day.

“I have known him, off and on, for some seventy years; have sympathized with him and hated him periodically all these years. I began to know him most thoroughly when about five years old, and when ill with the croup. He was invited in, and like doctors of to-day, ever ready to obey such invitations, he promptly appeared. Short, stout and active, Kris Kingle-like with a portmanteau, but not suggestive of Christmas things at all. His appearance and manner impressed and helped my breathing somewhat at once, and when he put me into a tub of hot water and stirred a large yellow powder in a cup of warm water with a thick, dumpy finger and forcibly assisted me in swallowing it—I felt sick, paid tribute in fact, until there was no more croup or anything else. I became deeply impressed with the thoroughness of his methods. The next time I met him was some years later when I had a tooth to pull. I found him, the doctor, this time a fine-looking gentleman, easy and quiet in manner. After investigating the tooth he went in the same easy manner to a drawer and secured a piece of iron armed with a cant-hook at one end and a cork-screw handle at the other, and—my toothache was gone. He insisted, however, on my seating myself on the floor while he, sitting behind me, his knees clasping my head, forced the hook on the offender and twisted it out. If there be any sudden torture equal to that, language fails me.

“His methods and medical armament were in that day crude, comparatively. We now wonder how he got along with his calomel and jalap, emetics and clysters, blisters and lancets. Blood flowed in those days and invalids who rose from under his care felt that they had been having “a spell of sickness.” And they often did rise to commence life anew, and indeed everything in them had to be made new. All the vitalities went to work so vigorously that convalescence from acute attacks was hastened and pronounced. In fact, I think a little of the ‘old doctor’s’ decisive method, if applied to-day in some medical matters, might be of benefit. But it would be unfair to criticize him in his day in comparison with the practitioners now. He had no sugar-coated pellets or alkaloids—not even morphine; no fluid extracts, nor elixirs, nor other desserts. Drugs were in bulk in his time, pharmacy was in its infancy; hence doses were large and often nauseous. He had no cocaine to relieve pain; no hypodermic syringe; no anesthetics, no ether, no chloroform. Sickness is a comfort now compared with then. Doctors of medicine now extract the active principles of the old crude materia medica, and prescribe them in diminutive pellets, sugar-coated, or they cover up the objectionable qualities with the aromatics to suit the modern taste, as the doctors of divinity now talk of doing with the old Westminster Confession of Faith.

"In one characteristic, however, the Old Doctor resembled the medical man of today. He never, or rarely, accumulated wealth—rarely acquired more than a good living for himself and family through all his toilsome life. His life work educated him away from money-getting. He lived too constantly at the hearth-stone of the sick and distressed. His mind was too constantly occupied with the emotional and sympathetic side of life to study finance or Wall Street.

"As one grows old he grows far-sighted—presbyopic, as oculists call it; that is, he sees more clearly objects at a distance. So in his mental eye the Old Doctor is inclined to be far-sighted, and loves to recall the incidents that came into his former life."

SOME BUTLER COUNTY PHYSICIANS.

The pioneer physician of the county outside of those who came to Harmony with the Rapp community, was Dr. George Miller. He was the son of Prof. Samuel Miller, who filled the chair of mathematics and natural sciences at Jefferson College in Canonsburg. Dr. Miller graduated from Jefferson College in 1813 and immediately began the study of medicine under Dr. Letherman of Canonsburg, a man of acknowledged ability in his profession. Having completed his studies he came to Butler and is said to have been the only physician in Butler County at the time of the agrarian troubles on the Maxwell farm, which took place in 1815. In October of that year, when Maxwell was wounded, Dr. Miller came to his aid, while a messenger was sent to Pittsburg for Dr. Agnew, who arrived the evening of the day of the tragedy. Dr. Miller practiced in Butler about eight years, removing in 1823 to Ohio, where he died prior to 1830. He married Martha, daughter of William Anderson, who resided near Warren, Trumbull County, Ohio, who with four children survived him. After the death of Dr. Miller his family returned to Butler and lived here many years. Dr. Miller was a member of the first Borough Council in 1817, and was treasurer of the old Butler Academy.

HENRY C. DEWOLFE was second resident physician of Butler and a native of Hartford, Conn. He was a graduate of Yale College, and shortly after coming to Butler in 1817 or 1818 he married Miss Jane McQuiston. He was chosen trustee of the academy in 1821 and treasurer of the borough in 1825, and filled many other offices of trust during his long residence here. His death occurred July 24th, 1854, in his seventy-third year. His son, T. R. DeWolfe, practiced here from 1851 to August 24th, 1859, when death removed him in his thirty-fifth year. He was born in 1824 and was a graduate of Jefferson College and the Cleveland (Ohio) Medical College.

Dr. GEORGE LYNN came to Butler from Mercer County in 1823 and was one of the two physicians here that year. He married Elizabeth Gibson in 1825 and was making rapid progress in his profession when called away by death in 1833. He was one of the pioneers of the temperance movement in Butler County.

Dr. JAMES GRAHAM came here soon after the death of Dr. Lynn and shared the patronage of the people with Dr. DeWolfe until his death in 1845. Dr. Graham was a native of Ireland and studied medicine before coming to this country. Shortly after his arrival here he opened school in a building on McKean Street, opposite what has been known as the Rink, and on the site of the residence of Captain Thomas Hayes. He brought with him from the old country some of the old methods of school teaching, and it is said that he was a past master in the use of the cat-o'-nine-tails. He was, however, a thorough physician and a scholar and in his sober hours was popular, but the use of drink led to his death.

Some other physicians who practiced here between the periods of 1834 and 1835 were Drs. Donnell & McQuaid, partners, Dr. George W. Gettys, and Dr. Goodall.

DR. GOTLEIB MILLER, a graduate of Marburg University, Germany, came to Butler in 1841, and enjoyed a prosperous practice until his death, which occurred in 1849.

H. C. LYNN, a nephew of Dr. George Lynn, began to practice in Butler in 1833. In 1835 he removed to West Sunbury, where he practiced until 1878, when he returned to Butler and entered the drug business.

DR. ISAIAH McJUNKIN began to practice in Butler in 1844. He was born in Center Township, Butler County, in 1817 and received his education at the old Jefferson College at Canonsburg. He studied medicine under Dr. O. D. Palmer of Zelenople, in 1841, and later in the Louisville Medical College. He removed in 1860 to Chicago, and at once took a leading place among the physicians of that city. His death occurred in 1863.

DR. AGNEW practiced at Butler for a short time as the partner of Dr. McJunkin. He practiced at Harmony after the Rapp community left and afterwards removed to Zelenople. He was the father of the late Judge Daniel Agnew, who was president judge of the district in 1851 to 1863, and who in later years filled an honorable career on the Supreme Bench of the State.

DR. CHARLES STEIN, a graduate of the University of Bonn, Prussia, practiced in Butler and at West Sunbury from 1850 to 1870. In the latter year he removed to Wheatland, where he died in 1876, at the age of seventy-one years.

DR. THEODORE FRICKENSTEIN practiced in Butler from 1864 to 1868. He removed to Brooklyn, N. Y., where he died recently.

DR. CHARLES EMMERLING, who was one of the ablest members of the profession in western Pennsylvania, came to Butler about 1854 and remained until 1865. He attained a large practice, but was even more successful in Pittsburg, where he went from Butler.

DR. GEORGE M. ZIMMERMAN, who practiced in Butler from 1869 to 1900, was the son of John Michael and Mary Barber Zimmerman, and was born in Butler November 18, 1842. He graduated from Jefferson College, now Washington & Jefferson College, of Washington, Penna., in 1867, and read medicine with Dr. Stephen Bredin. He attended the College of Physicians and Surgeons in New York City during the winter of 1867 and 1868 and the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia the winter of 1869 and 1870. After his graduation he practiced in Winona, Minn., for a short time and in Hubbard, Ohio, removing from the latter place to his native town in 1872, where he continued to practice until his death.

DR. A. M. NEYMAN, who is now living in Butler, is in his eighty-third year, and is the oldest living physician in the county. He was the son of Abraham Markel and Eleanor (McCleary) Neyman, and was born in Butler February 6, 1826. He received his education in the old Butler Academy under the late Rev. William White, who was at that time considered one of the finest linguists in the State. Subsequently he taught school in the country and clerked in the office of justice of the peace, but conceiving a fondness for the study of medicine, he went to Zanesville, Ohio, in 1845 and began reading medicine with Dr. Washington Morehead of that place. In 1847 he returned to Butler and again resorted to school teaching and other occupations to sustain himself and provide means for future study. In 1849 he was associated with Rev. William White and taught the English branches in the old Butler Academy. In the spring of 1850 he again resumed the study of medicine under Dr. W. J. Randolph, who was then a successful physician of Butler. He attended the Western Reserve Medical College of Cleveland, graduating from that institution in 1853. Immediately after his graduation he returned to Butler and opened the practice which he has followed very successfully until a few years ago, when the infirmities of his advanced age compelled him to retire. There is perhaps no member of the medical profession in Butler County with a wider reputation than Dr. Neyman, as his many years of practice has made him known to every household. What he has done in the several branches of surgery and medicine cannot be detailed here, but one case that is worthy of mention, and has been little heard of is told with his permission. It was Cæsarean section done by Dr. Emmerring and him in the summer of 1860, both mother and child surviving. It was the first authenticated operation of its kind west of the Allegheny Mountains, with a result of which any surgeon might feel justly proud. Dr. Neyman is a doctor of the old school, but has kept thoroughly abreast of the times, not alone in medicines, but in the arts and sciences; a thorough gentleman, his code of professional ethics is, and always has been, above reproach; modest, honest, dignified and just in all his dealings with all his fellow men, his daily life and acts are surely worthy of emulation.

DR. SAMUEL GRAHAM practiced in Butler from 1865 to 1897. He was born in Butler, January 31, 1836, and was the son of John B. and Sarah (Gilkey) Graham, and grandson of Robert Graham, one of the first settlers of the borough. He was educated in the public schools and in the old Witherspoon Institute, Butler. He commenced the study of medicine with Dr. L. R. McCurdy, of Butler, and entered the National Medical College of Washington, D. C., where he remained two years. In 1861 he answered the call of his country and enlisted in Company H, Thirteenth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and served three months. He then entered Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, from which he graduated in March, 1862. He again entered the service of the United States as assistant surgeon of the 174th Pennsylvania Volunteers, with which he remained until 1863. In 1864 he joined the United States Medical staff in Emory Hospital, Washington, D. C., and was subsequently appointed surgeon of the Eighty-first Pennsylvania Volunteers, with which regiment he remained until the close of the war. Dr. Graham was president of the County and State Medical Society and a member of the U. S. Pension Board in this district for ten years previous to his death, June 10, 1897. While Dr. Graham was a skillful physician, he was preëminently a surgeon, in which branch he acquired a greater popularity than usually comes to the life of the all-around doctor. His death was lamented by a large clientele, and he is missed by the profession, not only for his professional attainments, but for his amiable and happy influence in councils.

DR. W. J. RANDOLPH was one of the successful surgeons in Butler from 1850 to 1853. He was afterwards in the army and when the war closed engaged in cotton raising in North Carolina, where he resided until his death.

DR. DUPANCHELL, a French physician, was here in the thirties. He is said to have been a polished and learned gentleman, a skillful physician and surgeon. One of the stories told about his skill in surgery concerned a hostler employed at Patrick Kelly's hotel, who was of somewhat deficient mental powers. It is said that Dr. DuPanchell trepanned the hostler's skull with success as to render him a sensible mortal.

Dr. JOHN COWDEN, the founder of a family that was noted for the number of its physicians, was a native of Butler County. He read medicine in Ohio and established himself as a physician at Portersville as early as 1818. After a labor of fifty years among the first settlers of the northwestern township and their children and grandchildren, he removed to Allegheny City, where he died February 15th, 1880, in his eighty-third year.

Dr. WILLIAM R. COWDEN, of Middle Lancaster, was the son of Dr. John Cowden above mentioned, and was born in Portersville in 1820. He graduated from Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia in the spring of 1846 and began practicing in his native town. With the exception of three years spent in West Sunbury and a few years in Worth Township, he was engaged in active duties of his profession for nearly fifty years at Portersville, removing to Middle Lancaster about 1893, where he died in April, 1897.

Dr. WILLIAM RUSH COWDEN and Dr. JOHN VICTOR COWDEN of Butler are sons of William R. Cowden, M.D., above mentioned. William R. is a graduate of the Kentucky School of Medicine at Louisville in the class of 1894. He practiced at Zelenople and Renfrew before he came to Butler. Dr. John Victor Cowden is a graduate of West Penn Medical College of Pittsburg, in the class of 1899, and the Philadelphia Polyclinic in 1902, and practiced at Middle Lancaster and Renfrew before moving to Butler in 1902.

Dr. GLEASON, a Philadelphian, attained some prominence as a lecturer on medical and sanitary subjects, and was here in the forties.

HENRI DECOLIERE was a French physician who located in Butler in the forties and obtained much notoriety. He had his office on Main Street, adjoining Anthony Rockenstein, and near the Col. John M. Sullivan residence, now occupied by the Schultis and Koch buildings. A fire in 1859 destroyed the Rockenstein building and the one occupied by Dr. DeColiere, and when it became known that the French doctor had his property heavily insured, many looked upon him as the incendiary. Owing to his fondness for using the knife he was generally feared by the people, though he was believed to be a skilled physician and surgeon. Owing to this propensity he was once placed on trial for manslaughter, but escaped the jail. On another occasion he was called to attend a case of delirium tremens in Butler. After diagnosing the case, he declared that the patient would die "in three minutes" and it was said that, to make his prediction good, he administered a poison which killed the man within the time specified.

Dr. GEORGE K. McADOO began the practice of medicine in Butler County in 1892. He was the son of W. F. and Maria (Dumars) McAdoo of Sugar Grove, Mercer County, Penna., and was born July 21, 1866. He was educated at Thiel College, Greenville, and Grove City College, and graduated from the West Penn Medical College, Pittsburg, in the class of 1892. He practiced at Anandale and at Slippery Rock from 1892 to 1898, when he removed to Butler. He went to Europe in 1900 and took a post-graduate course and was engaged in special work in Butler when his death occurred on December 23, 1903, from typhoid fever, being one of the victims of the epidemic in Butler that year.

Dr. JOHN E. BYERS was born in Summit Township, Butler County, June 15th, 1848. He was educated at Witherspoon Institute, Butler, and entered the office of Dr. A. M. Neyman as a student of medicine in the early seventies. He graduated from the Medical University of New York City in 1878 and located in Butler the same year. He was a member of the County Medical Society, the State Medical Society and the National Association of Railway Surgeons. At the time of his death he had been surgeon for the Pennsylvania Railroad at Butler for over twenty years. When the typhoid fever epidemic broke out in Butler in the winter of 1903-1904 Dr. Byers was a member of the Butler Board of Health. Although suffering from impaired health he performed Herculean labors in taking care of the sick and the distressed in the dark days of November and December and literally died at his post of duty. While visiting a fever patient on February 8, 1904, he suddenly collapsed and in a few hours a life of noble sacrifice had ended.

DR. JOHN F. TURNER of Hooker registered in Butler County in 1893. He is now in charge of the Government Sanitarium for the care of Indians in South Dakota.

DR. FRANK CRAWFORD was born in Cranberry Township, Butler County, and was the son of Dr. Elder Crawford, who is now a resident of Mars. He graduated from the West Penn Medical College of Pittsburg, in 1896, and practiced at Glade Mills, Allegheny City and Mars. His sudden death in 1906 cut short a promising career and caused genuine sorrow in the community.

DR. McCURDY BRICKER was born in Buffalo Township, Butler County, on April 2, 1868, and was the son of John Bricker. He began the study of medicine in the Western University of Pennsylvania at Pittsburg and completed his studies at the Medical College at Indianapolis in 1894. He became associated with Dr. A. M. Hoover of Butler, the same year, and a year later opened an office himself. At the time of his death January 10, 1908, he had a large practice and was one of the leading physicians of Butler.

DR. SYLVESTER D. BELL was one of the leading physicians of Butler at the close of the last century. He was born in Armstrong County in 1847 and was the grandson of Samuel Bell, an early settler of Washington Township, Butler County. His parents were Samuel S. and Margaret (McClymonds) Bell. His preceptor in the study of medicine was Dr. T. M. McMillan of Fairview Township, and he graduated from the Western Reserve Medical College at Cleveland, Ohio, in 1874. He practiced at Chicora (Millerstown) until 1890 when he removed to Butler and continued his practice until 1901, when he removed to Prescott, Arizona, where he died January 14, 1902. Dr. Bell was a member of the Butler County Medical Association and the State Medical Society. He was vice-president of the latter society for one term, president of the Butler County Medical Society for one term, and secretary and treasurer for three successive terms. He was a Republican politically, and was elected to the State Legislature on the Republican ticket in 1881. He served one term as county chairman and was one of the presidential electors in 1892.

DR. HARRY A. BELL was born in Chicora (Millerstown), Butler County, and was the son of Dr. Sylvester D. Bell of Butler. He received his preliminary education in the high schools of Butler and in Washington and Jefferson College, graduating from the latter institution in 1894, and from the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania in 1897. He succeeded to the practice of his father in Butler and continued to practice here until 1902, when he removed to Arizona, where his death occurred November 17th of that year.

DR. C. F. MCBRIDE, a native of Butler, graduated from Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in 1875. He practiced at Butler, Harrisville and Fairview until 1882, when he removed to Youngstown, Ohio.

DR. STEPHEN BREDIN, second son of Hon. John Bredin, began the practice of medicine in Butler in 1861. He had graduated from the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania in Philadelphia in 1856 and practiced several years in the west before locating in Butler. He continued practicing in Butler until 1885, when he removed to Franklin, Penna. He is now living in New Jersey.

DR. WALTER SCOTT PATTERSON was born in Beaver County, Pennsylvania, and is a graduate of the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in the class of 1901, and of the Ada (Ohio) School of Pharmacy in the class of 1898. He located in Butler in 1902 and has built up an extensive practice. He takes an active interest in political affairs, and was elected county coroner on the Republican ticket in 1905. He has associated with him, in his practice, his wife, Dr. Ella A. H. Patterson, who is a physician of recognized ability.

DR. FRANK L. HAZLETT was born in Connoquenessing Township, Butler County, April 24, 1878, and is a son of Leslie P. Hazlett, Esq., of Butler. He was educated at Grove City College, class of 1898, and at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, graduating from that institution in 1903. He practiced in Butler from 1903 until 1906, when he removed to Bruin, Butler County, where he died on July 24, 1907.

DR. LESLIE R. HAZLETT is the son of Thomas Hazlett, of Butler, and was born in Butler Township September 1, 1868. He graduated from Edinboro (Penna.) Normal School in the class of 1890, and followed the profession of school teaching for several years before taking up the study of medicine. He graduated from the Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia in the class of 1896, and the same year located in New Galilee, Penna., where he practiced for six years. After completing a post-graduate course in Philadelphia in 1902, he located in Butler. He has built up a large general practice, besides a line of special work, and is one of the leading physicians of the town.

DR. JOHN WESLEY FLICK MOORE was a native of Armstrong County. He graduated from the Jefferson Medical College in 1894 and located in Butler in the same year. He was a man of exceptional social qualities and an able physician. On June 14, 1903, he met with an accident which caused his death.

DR. WARREN E. HIGH was a native of Reading, Penna., and a graduate of the medical department of the Western University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, in the class of 1894. He entered the United States Navy and saw service in the Spanish-American war and in the Philippines. Ill health caused him to leave the navy and he registered in Butler as a practicing physician in 1906. His death occurred in Butler in May, 1907.

DR. NICHOLAS N. HOOVER, who is now a resident of Butler, was born in Armstrong County in 1836, and is the son of David and Mary (Myers) Hoover, who were both descendants of German families of the eastern part of the State. He was educated at the old Freeport Academy and began the study of medicine with Dr. Thomas McGill of Freeport. He attended lectures at the Cleveland Medical College in 1860-1861, and the summer of 1861 found him enlisted in his country's defense and a private soldier of the Sixty-first Regiment of Ohio Volunteers. He served with much credit until the expiration of his time in July, 1864, having participated in various campaigns and battles through the states of Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee and Georgia. During the battle of Wau Hatchie, Ga., fought at night between General Hooker's troops and the rebel General Bragg's, he was slightly wounded. With the close of his first term of military service, he again turned his attention to medical work and attended a course of lectures at Jefferson Medical College at Philadelphia, graduating from that institution in March, 1865. He was immediately commissioned assistant surgeon of the Eighty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and at once assumed his duties, remaining in the field until the close of the war. In the fall of 1865, he located at North Washington, where he practiced until 1888, when he removed to Butler. He continued in the active duties of his profession until 1903, when ill health compelled him to retire.

DR. JAMES COOPER MCKEE, lieutenant-colonel and surgeon of the United States army, was born in Butler Borough May 18, 1830, and died at his residence in Butler, December 11, 1897. He was the son of Hugh McKee, a pioneer manufacturer of Butler, and the grandson of Thomas McKee, a soldier of the Revolution, who settled in Butler Township in 1777. He was educated at the public schools and at the Butler Academy and in 1848 he attended Duquesne College at Pittsburg. He began the study of medicine under Dr. William Thompson, of Indianapolis, and attended lectures at the University of Pennsylvania, at Philadelphia, graduating from that institution in 1852. Dr. McKee began practice at Altoona, where he continued until 1856 and for the next year he practiced in Hollidaysburg. He was commissioned assistant surgeon in the United States army in 1858, and his first duty was in charge of a body of recruits across the plains from Ft. Leavenworth, Kansas, to Ft. Union, New Mexico, a march of 800 miles. He participated in the campaign against the Navajo Indians in New Mexico in 1858 and 1859, and in the campaign against the Apache Indians in Arizona in the winter of 1859 and 1860. In September, 1860, he was ordered into the Navajo Indian country under Gen. Canby, a winter campaign ensued, and the party did not get back to Fort Fillmore until the following June. The Rebellion having broken out, Dr. McKee was taken prisoner by Major Baylor, who commanded the Texas militia, was paroled and returned to Fort Leavenworth, and thence to Jefferson Barracks, Missouri. He was soon afterward relieved from parole by exchange and was assigned to duty in the army. He was ordered to Fort Wayne, Ind., thence to Camp Butler, Illinois, where he had charge of the rebel prisoners of war. He was next ordered to Chester, Penna., where he organized a hospital; thence to join Gen. Pope's army at Second Bull Run, where he served as assistant medical director of the army. At the battle of Antietam he was made assistant medical purveyor and was stationed at Frederick City, Maryland, after the battle. He was next sent to Baltimore and to Pittsburg, where he established hospitals, and in 1863 he was promoted to the rank of captain and placed in charge of Lincoln United States Hospital, Washington, where he remained until the close of the war.

Dr. McKee was next ordered to New Mexico, where he served as chief medical officer. Subsequently he was medical director of the department of Arizona and of the department of the Columbia, with headquarters at Vancouver Barracks, Washington. He was also stationed at Fort Wadsworth, New York Harbor, and at Watertown Arsenal. He was finally retired in 1891 for disabilities received in the line of duty, with the rank of lieutenant colonel. Colonel McKee was a man of dignified character, fine literary tastes, and a skillful surgeon. While on the frontier he performed the first operation on the peritoneum recorded by the medical department of the army. The case was that of a young soldier who had swallowed a shingle nail and the piece of iron had lodged in the groin. Colonel McKee was the author of a pamphlet giving the details of the surrender of his command at Fort Fillmore, which ran through several editions and was highly prized by military men. At the time of his death Colonel McKee had a valuable library, which he left to the high school of Butler.

HON. JOSEPH B. SHOWALTER was born in Fayette Township, Penna., February 11, 1851, and is the youngest in the family of Levi and Elizabeth Showalter. He obtained his education in the public school and at Georges Creek Academy at Smithfield. When sixteen years of age he began teaching school in Preston County, W. Va., and followed this vocation for several years in West Virginia, Indiana and Illinois. He came to Millerstown, now Chicora, with his brothers in 1873, and began operating in the oil field. These operations were extended through various fields until the Showalter brothers were rated among the extensive producers of the state. While teaching he began reading medicine and spent the year of 1883 at Long Island College Hospital, Brooklyn, N. Y. Later he entered the College of Physicians and Surgeons, Baltimore, Md., where he was graduated March 4, 1884. He at once commenced practice at Chicora and continued his professional duties until 1890, when he retired. Dr. Showalter was elected to the legislature on the Republican ticket in 1886, and to the State Senate in 1888, and served his constituents with ability and fidelity. While he was in the Senate, he was chosen chairman of the committee on health and sanitation, and introduced and secured the passage of the Medical Examination Bill, for which he received a vote of thanks from the Pennsylvania State Medical Society.

By the death of Congressman J. J. Davidson of Beaver County, January 2, 1897, a vacancy occurred in the Twenty-fifth District, and at a special election held April 20, 1897, Dr. Showalter was elected to fill the unexpired term. He was re-elected for the full term in 1898 and again in 1900. The reapportionment of the congressional districts in 1901 placed Butler in the district with Westmoreland County and at the succeeding election Col. George F. Huff was elected to succeed Dr. Showalter. Upon his retirement from his public duties in Washington City in 1904, Dr. Showalter removed to Butler, where he resided until 1907, when he removed to Pittsburgh.

DR. THOMAS M. MAXWELL is a son of Dr.

J. K. Maxwell of Worthington, Armstrong County, and was born April 19, 1878. He graduated from Grove City College and from West Penn Medical College in 1903 and located in Butler the same year. He is a member of the Butler County Medical Association and the present secretary of the society. He is also a member of the State Medical Society, secretary of the Board of Health of Butler Borough, and local registrar of vital statistics for the district composed of Butler, Center, Summit, Clearfield and Penn Townships and Butler Borough. He is assistant examiner of the State Tuberculosis Dispensary No. 15, located in Butler. Dr. Maxwell was married June 2, 1904, to Miss Mary B. Claypool, daughter of James E. Claypool of Worthington. They have one daughter, Elizabeth. The family are members of the Second Presbyterian Church.

DR. HARVEY D. HOCKENBERRY was born in Centerville, Butler County, October 17, 1850. He received his primary education in the public schools and took an academic course at the West Sumbury Academy, after which he attended lectures at the medical department of the Wooster University, Cleveland, Ohio, and afterwards took a post-graduate course at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia. He located in West Sumbury in 1879 and has continued in the active duties of his profession. Dr. Hockenberry is a member of the State Medical Society, and of Butler County Medical Society, of which he was president in 1893 and in 1899. He is medical examiner of the State Tuberculosis Dispensary No. 15, and county inspector for the State Board of Health. Since locating in West Sumbury he has built up an extensive practice, and is one of the well-known physicians of the county.

DR. GEORGE H. SCOTT was born in Butler, April 3, 1879, and is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Presley Scott, of this city. He received his education in the high schools of Butler, and at Lafayette College, Easton, Penna., and was graduated from the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia in June, 1902. He was commissioned first lieutenant and surgeon of the medical corp of the United States army, September, 27, 1902, and promoted captain, September 27, 1907. He saw three years' service in the Philippines and is at present located at Port Logan, Colo. He is a successful physician and surgeon and has a bright outlook for the future.

DR. GEORGE D. THOMAS began practicing medicine in Chicora in 1890 and continued until 1908 when he removed to Meadville, Penna.

DR. HARRY M. DAVIS is a son of I. H. Davis and was born in Franklin, Penna. He graduated from West Penn Medical College in Pittsburg in 1897 and took a post-graduate course in the New York Post-graduate College in 1905. He practiced in New Lebanon, Mercer County, for seven years, and at Cochranton, Crawford County, for two years coming to Butler in July, 1908. He succeeded to the practice of the late Dr. McCurdy Bricker.

DR. JAMES C. BOYLE was born at New Hope, or Bovard's Mills, Butler County, November 14, 1864, and is the son of Thomas and Jane (Stoughton) Boyle. His boyhood days were spent in Worth Township, where he attended the public schools of the district, and subsequently he attended Edinboro State Normal School, graduating from the latter institution. He taught in the public and graded schools of the state for eight years and at the same time pursued a course of studies in medicine, graduating from the West Penn Medical College at Pittsburg in 1892. He first practiced with Dr. Beatty at Leeper, Clarion County, and for a short time at Marionville, Jefferson County, and then established himself at Taylorstown, Washington County, Pennsylvania, where he remained for four years. Dr. Boyle located in Butler in 1896 and at once built up a large private practice. In 1902 and 1903 he took a special course in the Philadelphia Polyclinic and College for graduates in medicine, and in 1905 he attended the Royal London Ophthalmic and Westminster Ophthalmic Hospitals, and the Central London Ear and Throat Hospital, of London, England, where he made a special study of the eye, ear, nose and throat. Upon his return to Butler he gave his entire time to special work, and in 1908 established an eye and ear hospital in Butler, which is the first institution of the kind in Butler County. The hospital is thoroughly equipped and has a capacity of ten to fifteen beds. Dr. Boyle was married in 1894 to Miss Kathleen McNair of Butler and they have one son, James C., Jr. The family are members of the Episcopal Church. Dr. Boyle is a member of the Masonic order, the Maccabees, the Protected Home Circle and the Home Guards of America. Politically he is an independent Republican.

DR. R. L. MCCURDY, who recently died in Freeport, was a well-known physician in Butler in the sixties. His son, Dr. Redick Coulter McCurdy, practiced in Butler in 1885.

COUNTY PHYSICIANS.

HARRISVILLE.

DR. JAMES OWENS. The first resident physician of Harrisville was Dr. James Owens. He came from New York State and after about ten years' practice went West about 1850. Dr. James McConnell practiced in Harrisville in the early fifties. He sold his practice to Dr. Ellrick and went to California, where he died.

DR. JACKSON McMILLAN, who was regarded as a very competent physician, practiced in Harrisville from about 1845 to 1860 when he went to Kansas, where he died.

DR. J. H. ELRICK located in Harrisville in 1856 and practiced until the latter part of the eighties, when he retired to private life. He is still living in Harrisville, and is probably one of the oldest physicians in the county.

The physicians practicing in Harrisville in 1908 were Dr. Walker W. McConnell and Dr. Wilbert B. Campbell.

BREAK NECK, OR EVANS CITY.

The first physician at Break Neck, now Evans City, was Dr. Sample, who located there in 1844, but left in 1845. He was succeeded by Dr. William Sterrett, who practiced from 1848 until 1855, when he moved to Allegheny County, where he died a year later.

DR. WILLIAM IRVINE. The successor of Dr. Sterrett at Evans City was Dr. William Irvine, a graduate of the Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia, in the class of 1855. He was the son of Samuel Irvine, an early settler of Adams Township, and was born in 1828. From 1855 to 1868 he was the only practicing physician in the village. He was examining surgeon in 1862 and in 1876 was a member of the State Legislature.

The contemporaries of Dr. Irvine at Evans City were Dr. Theodore Kirsting, who located there in 1867, Dr. Joshua M. List in 1875 and Dr. Floyd B. Brooks in 1877.

The resident physicians in 1908 were: Dr. V. F. Thomas, Dr. Leo A. Dombart and Dr. Harry M. Wilson.

WEST LIBERTY.

DR. ALBERT A. KELLY was the first settled physician at West Liberty. He was a graduate of the Cleveland Medical School in 1873 and came to Butler County in 1876.

DR. EDWIN C. THOMPSON located in West Liberty in 1891.

The first physician at Mechanicsburg was Dr. George Kirkpatrick, who also kept a general store at that place for six years. He died at North Liberty in 1841, and was succeeded by one Dr. Steen, who was a "water doctor."

DR. ABERNATHY was one of the physicians in Mechanicsburg community in 1872. He was a graduate of the Jefferson Medical College, and also of the School of Medicine in New York City.

CHICORA.

Among the early physicians of Chicora were Dr. Marks, who remained but a short time; Dr. McLaughlin, who lived in the borough about two years; and Dr. Gettes, who remained about an equal length of time.

DR. JOSIAH McMICHAEL, a native of Meadville, began the practice of medicine in Venango County when twenty-six years of age. He located at Chicora in 1858 and was prominent in professional and local affairs until his death January 12th, 1880.

DR. R. L. PATTERSON located at Chicora about 1872. He was a native of Mercer County and was born in 1852. He graduated from Allegheny College at Meadville and from the Cleveland Medical College in 1872. After his graduation he engaged in the hospital practice in Cleveland for six months and then attended a course of lectures in the University of Pennsylvania in Philadelphia. He began to practice at Greece City, then a flourishing oil town, and following up the oil excitement, changed his residence to the now defunct village of St. Joe, where he practiced but a short time until he again changed to Chicora. Dr. Patterson was numbered among the successful physicians in the county, and the reputation was worthily bestowed.

PETROLIA.

During a period of ten years, from 1872 to 1882, the town of Petrofia had as many as fifteen physicians. The first was Dr. Lyman Willard, who located in the town in 1872 and removed to New York State in 1878.

Dr. F. C. CLUNTON, a man of education and an accomplished gentleman, succeeded Dr. Willard, and removed to Bradford, following the oil excitement in 1880.

Dr. J. H. SUTHERLAND, originally of Canada, practiced in the town from 1874 to 1881. He went to Richsburg, N. Y.

Dr. E. P. SQUIRE was a partner of Dr. Sutherland from 1876 to 1880 and in the latter year removed to New York State.

Dr. STEWART, now of Bradford, came to Petrolia during the first oil excitement and remained until 1878.

Dr. G. RENO, Dr. JOHN MECHLING and Dr. DEITRICK were among those who practiced from one to three years between 1872 and 1880.

Dr. W. C. FOSTER located in Petrolia in 1876. He was a graduate of the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in 1874, and practiced two years in New Bethlehem, Clarion County, before coming to Butler County.

Dr. C. C. RUMBERGER, who practiced for ten years in the community, was the son of Col. W. F. Rumberger, and was born in Slippery Rock Township, Butler County, in 1851. He graduated from the University of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia in 1872, and first practiced at Buena Vista, where he remained until 1881, when he removed to Petrolia. Subsequently he gave up the practice of medicine and entered the ministry of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

KARNS CITY.

The members of the medical fraternity who practiced at Karns City in the days of the oil excitement were Dr. S. H. Pettigrew, who located there in 1872 and removed to DuBois, Penna., in 1881; Dr. Blinckard practiced about one year, commencing about 1874, and Dr. William F. F. Mahueke for two years, commencing in 1878.

Dr. DAVID HARPER, a graduate of the University of Michigan, located in Karns

City in 1873 and practiced for about ten years.

BRUIN AND FAIRVIEW.

The early physicians of Bruin were Dr. Samuel Wallace and Dr. Goe, both of whom were residents of Armstrong County. The first resident physician was Dr. David Fowler, who moved to that place from Fairview about 1845. Dr. Fowler also practiced in North Washington and Harrisville.

Dr. B. E. DENNISON located in Bruin in 1872. He was educated at Hiram College, Ohio, under President Garfield, and subsequently graduated from Harvard University. He graduated from the Louisville Medical College in 1860 and at the breaking out of the rebellion was practicing in Missouri. He entered the Union Army as a surgeon and in 1864 and 65 was one of the staff of the assistant surgeon general at Louisville, Ky.

Among those who have practiced in Bruin from one to three years each since 1872 have been Dr. S. H. Pettigrew, Dr. J. W. Kelley, Dr. A. Bryan, Dr. C. M. C. Campbell, Dr. S. H. Kerr, Dr. Thomas, and a Dr. Adair.

Dr. H. C. BURCHARD, who was a graduate of the Bellevue Hospital Medical College, New York City, practiced in Fairview in 1873.

Dr. J. W. BEATTY, who settled in Fairview in 1855 or 1856, practiced in that field until his death in 1881.

HENRY BULLARD, who died in Fairview in 1850, was a contemporary of Dr. Beatty and Dr. Fowler and of Dr. A. Barnhart, who began to practice in that community in 1840.

FARMINGTON.

The physicians located at Farmington in the last quarter of the century were Dr. T. B. Rhodes, from Ohio, who began practicing in 1875, and Dr. Albert Richey, who began in 1881.

DR. R. J. McMICHAEL, who is one of the present physicians, is a native of Clay Township, Butler County, and began to practice at Sumbury in 1879. He located in Farmington in 1881.

HARMONY AND ZELIENOPE.

The first physician to practice at Harmony and Zelenople after the departure of the Rapp community was Dr. Agnew. He was succeeded by Dr. J. McHenry, who practiced from 1815 to 1823. Dr. McHenry was a man of literary tastes and the author of several books, mostly novels and poetry. He was the father of the McHenry who was a well-known railway magnate in the eighties. He removed to Philadelphia in 1823 and died in that city.

DR. ORIN D. PALMER practiced in Zelenople from 1836 to 1860. He was a worthy representative of the medical profession and was esteemed both in his professional capacity and as a citizen.

DR. LORING LUSK, who practiced in Harmony and Zelenople at various times from 1823 to 1878, was born in Ontario County, New York, in 1799. He studied medicine in Mercer, Pennsylvania, with his brother-in-law, Dr. Cossett, and married Miss Smith, daughter of Joseph Smith of Mercer. He practiced in Harmony from 1823 to 1829 and then went to Beaver County, where he remained for a few years. He next became an extensive contractor on the state works on the Ohio River to Lake Erie, and was thus engaged until 1844, when he returned to Harmony and resumed practice. In 1854 he went to Cannon, Missouri, and was practicing in that place when the Civil War broke out in 1861. He was elected surgeon of the Twenty-first Regiment of Missouri Volunteers, and after serving one year, he returned to Zelenople and engaged in the drug business. His death occurred in 1878.

DR. JOSEPH S. LUSK was born in Harmony in 1826 and was the son of Dr. Loring Lusk above mentioned. He received his education at the Mercer Academy, and graduated from the Western Reserve Medical College, Cleveland, Ohio, in 1850. The same year he began to practice at Harmony and continued until 1887, when he removed to Butler, and practiced until his death, February 3, 1889. Dr. Lusk was especially a physician, a medical adviser of high order, and commanded the respect and admiration of his fellows of the profession. He was elected a member of the Legislature on the Republican ticket in 1870 and served in the session of 1871-74-76.

DR. AMOS LUSK began practice in his native town in 1849. He was the son of Dr. Loring Lusk and a brother of Dr. Joseph L. Lusk, before mentioned. He located at Zelenople in 1851 and in 1853 was appointed in charge of the United States Marine Hospital in Pittsburg. He moved to Missouri in 1857 and returned to Zelenople in 1861, where he practiced until his death, November 17, 1891. Dr. Lusk attained eminence in the profession for his learning and successful management of disease. He studied many languages and was a lover of books. It has been said that he had mastered thirty-five languages.

The code of ethics prohibiting a physician from advertising was not in force in 1828. If it existed at all it was not observed by Dr. Beriah Magoffin, who settled at Harmony in that year. In the "Repository" of 1829, Dr. Magoffin publishes a card in which he offers his services in the various branches of his profession, setting forth that he had studied both at Europe and Transylvania, Kentucky. His office was at the house of John Flemming, Esq., of Harmony. Dr. Magoffin afterward removed to Mercer where he built up a large practice.

MIDDLE LANCASTER.

The first practicing physician to locate at Middle Lancaster was a Dr. Brothers, who located there in 1853. He removed to Ohio some four years later, and was succeeded by a Dr. White and a Dr. Acre. None of these remained more than five years, Dr. White removing to Harlensburg, where he was practicing in the latter part of the eighties.

Dr. A. H. METZ was a native of Middle Lancaster and a graduate of Jefferson Medical College of Philadelphia. He practiced in the village from 1871 to 1875, when he left the county.

Dr. GEORGE A. McCANDLESS, a native of Center Township, Butler County, and a graduate of the Louisville Medical College, succeeded Dr. Metz at Middle Lancaster.

WHITESTOWN.

In the Whitestown settlement the first doctor was Dr. Andrew Spear and his brother, Matthew W. Spear, both of whom practiced in Prospect later. After the death of Dr. Andrew Spear there was no settled physician in Whitestown until the arrival of Dr. Wilson N. Clarke, who settled there in 1867. Dr. Clarke was a native of Meadville, Pa., and a graduate of the University of Michigan and the Cleveland Medical College. Dr. Clarke was succeeded in 1883 by Dr. Thomas Dunn McConnell, who is now practicing in Prospect.

PROSPECT.

Dr. MATTHEW W. SPEER, who studied medicine with Dr. Andrew Spear of Whitestown and Dr. DeWolfe of Butler, began practicing in Prospect about 1830 and was the first resident physician of that place.

Dr. B. H. B. BROWER, who was a member of the legislature from Butler County in 1849-50, settled in Prospect as a practicing physician in 1838. He was burgess of the borough, captain of the military company and an orator of no mean ability. He was a man of literary and scholarly tastes and was the editor and publisher of the Pros- pect Record which was published for six months and then moved to New Brighton. Dr. Brower removed to Danville, Penna., where he resided until the time of his death. After leaving Prospect Dr. Brower established twelve newspapers in various parts of the state.

Dr. JAMES P. ALCHORN, a native of Indiana County, practiced at Prospect for five or six years and removed to Ohio.

Dr. WALTER BARBER practiced in Prospect in 1883. The resident physicians of the town in 1908 were Dr. THOMAS D. McCONNELL and Dr. JAMES B. THOMPSON.

SAXONBURG.

Dr. F. SCHMIDT was the pioneer physician of Saxonburg. He arrived early in the thirties but left the settlement prior to 1840. His successor was Dr. AUGUST KOCH, who practiced in the village for ten years or more and then removed to Missouri. The next physicians to locate in that community were Drs. SWEET and BLEIHOLDER. All of these physicians were Germans and were educated in their native country before coming to America. Their successors in the seventies were Dr. J. H. KING, who located in Saxonburg in 1872, Dr. E. N. B. MERSHON in 1877, and Dr. H. L. MERSHON in 1880.

Dr. W. W. LASHER, the present physician of Saxonburg, located there in 1893.

CONNOQUENESSING BOROUGH.

Dr. GEORGE WELSH was the first settled physician in Connoquenessing. He came in 1853, remained a few years, and then went to Saxonburg, where he practiced for three or four years. He returned to Connoquenessing where he died in 1852. His successors at Connoquenessing were Dr. N. M. RICHARDSON and Dr. COVERT, who each practiced for a short time. Dr. PORTER succeeded to the practice of Dr. Welsh but only remained for a few years when he removed to Prospect.

The next physician to practice in Connoquenessing was Dr. C. A. McCaskey who was succeeded in 1877 by Dr. J. L. Christy, who is the present physician of the town. Dr. Christy was born in Concord Township, Butler County, and received his education at the old Wither-spoon Institute in Butler and at the Pine Grove Academy, now Grove City College. He graduated from the Miami Medical College at Cincinnati in the spring of 1877 and began practicing the same year.

PROSPECT.

Dr. N. M. RICHARDSON began his professional career in Prospect in 1859. He was born in Connoquenessing Township, Butler County, in 1830, and studied medicine with Dr. O. D. PALMER of Zelenople. He graduated from the Jefferson Medical College in 1853. For fifty years he was one of the most successful physicians in the western part of the county.

Dr. DAVID FOWLER practiced in what is now Washington Township and at Martinsburg in 1845. He removed to Englewood, Ill.

SLIPPERY ROCK.

Dr. LYMAN L. HOWARD, a native of Ithaca, N. Y., located at Slippery Rock about 1835, but a year later removed to Harrisville, where he practiced until 1854 when he removed to Indiana. Dr. Howard's contemporaries at Harrisville were Dr. JAMES OWENS, who left the settlement for the western country the latter part of the fifties, and Dr. JAMES McCONNELL, who moved west in 1856.

Dr. SAMUEL MARKS, who died at Slippery Rock about 1855, located in that place in 1847. Dr. McMillian practiced in the same place in 1874.

Dr. G. W. COULTER, a native of New Lisbon, Ohio, located in Slippery Rock in 1862, where after eleven years of successful practice, he died in 1873. He was secretary of the County Medical Society at the time of his death.

Dr. ELI G. DEWOLFE moved from Ohio to Slippery Rock in 1825. He married Miss Sarah A. Harris of this county, and for over twenty-two years was one of the most progressive men of the village. His death occurred in 1847.

Dr. BENJAMIN PEARSON, a graduate of Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, began to practice in Slippery Rock in 1862, where he remained until 1866, in which year he removed to Tionesta, Penna. In 1868 he returned to Slippery Rock, where he has been engaged in continuous practice for the past thirty-eight years.

Dr. A. M. PATTERSON was the successor of Dr. Coulter and began to practice in Slippery Rock in 1873. He was educated in Butler and Sunbury Academies and graduated from the medical department of the University of Wooster at Cleveland in the year in which he began to practice.

Other physicians who practiced in the village at an early date were: Dr. Dodds, Dr. Gamel, Dr. Gettis, Dr. James B. Livingstone. They covered periods from 1850 to 1872. A Dr. Smith was in practice with Dr. Coulter for a short time and also with Dr. Livingstone.

UNIONVILLE.

Dr. JOSIAH McCANDLESS was engaged in the practice of medicine in Center Township from 1839 to 1875. He was the son of William and Nancy (Fish) McCandless and was born in Center Township, Butler County, March 6, 1816. He pursued a course of studies for three years under Dr. J. Whittaker of Allegheny City, after he began to practice in his native township and some ten years later moved to Unionville, where he remained until his death January 5, 1875. His son, Dr. William C. McCandless practiced at Glade Mills, Butler County from 1881 to 1895, when he removed to Butler and is now one of the leading physicians of the county seat.

C. H. BARNHART'S HOUSE AND SHOP, BUTLER

ST. PATRICK'S CHURCH, SUGAR CREEK, DON-EGAL TOWNSHIP

CONCORDIA HOME, MARWOOD

BEAM HOTEL, ZELIENOPLE

STORE OF CHARLES R. BORLAND,
HARRISVILLE

BUTLER GENERAL HOSPITAL, BUTLER

DR. MARY E. HARPER. The first woman physician to register in Butler County was Mrs. Mary E. Harper, who located in Bald Ridge, now Renfrew, in 1883.

DR. ELIJA GROSSMAN was the next. She registered in 1890 and was associated with her husband, Dr. R. J. Grossman, in Butler, until her death.

DR. LOUISA M. SHRYOCK, a native of Butler County, graduated from the University of Wooster, Ohio, and the West Penn Medical College of Pittsburg, in 1893. She first practiced at North Hope, Butler County, and later moved to Butler where she continued to practice until her death.

DR. JASMINE McALPIN was born in Welland, Ontario, and is the daughter of the late Dr. Volney McAlpin, deceased, of Butler, who was a prominent dentist. She graduated from the Woman's Medical College of Baltimore, Md., and began to practice in Butler in 1896.

DR. MARY LOUISE JONES is a native of Pittsburg and a graduate of the class of 1903 of the Woman's Medical College of Baltimore, Md. Dr. Jones was associated with Dr. McAlpin for three years, and moved to Pittsburg in 1907.

DR. ELLA AVERILL HACKETT PATTERSON is a native of Washington, D. C. She is a graduate of the Philadelphia Normal and the Women's Medical College, of Philadelphia, in the class of 1901. She registered in Butler County in 1903 and is associated with her husband, Dr. Walter Scott Patterson of Butler, in an extensive practice.

DR. NANNIE BELL DRAKE, a native of Lawrence County, registered in Butler County in 1907 and is practicing at Portersville. She is a graduate of the Ohio Medical University.

The school of Homeopathy does not have a large representation in the county, although physicians of that school of medicine have been practicing here for many years.

DR. P. S. DUFF appears to have been the first doctor of the new school who practiced in Butler County. He located in Jefferson Township in 1863 and was practicing at Great Belt as late as 1890. He was a man of education, a successful physician and a useful citizen.

DR. E. N. LEAKE, son of Rev. D. N. Leake, a prominent Methodist Episcopal minister, located in Butler in 1881. He was born in Buffalo, N. Y., in 1855, and graduated from the New York Homeopathic College in 1880. He was successful as a physician and surgeon and had a large practice. He went to Nebraska in 1897, where he is still practicing.

DR. W. R. TITZEL located in Butler in 1888 but only practiced for two or three years.

DR. JESSE E. MANN, a graduate of the Hahnemann Medical College in Chicago, came to Butler in 1890 and was associated with Dr. Leake until 1897, when he went to the West.

DR. WILLIAM H. BROWN was born in Penn Township, Butler County, and was the son of Mr. and Mrs. Adam K. Brown. He graduated from the Hahnemann Medical College, of Chicago, in 1893 and located in Butler in 1894. He continued his practice in Butler until May, 1904, when he was compelled to relinquish his work on account of failing health. Dr. Brown was one of the medical fraternity who did noble work in Butler during the winter of 1903 and 1904, made memorable by the typhoid fever epidemic. The exposure of the winter brought on a fatal disease that caused his death in June, 1905.

DR. EDWARD H. HARRIS is a native of Bellefonte, Penna., and a graduate of the Hahnemann Medical College, of Philadelphia, in the class of 1900. After a year's work in St. Luke's Hospital, Philadelphia, he located in Butler and has built up an excellent practice.

DR. OLIN A. WILLIAMS is a native of Luzerne County, Pennsylvania, and a graduate of the Hahnemann Medical College, of Chicago, Ill., in the class of 1890.

He practiced in Union City Penna., until December 21, 1897, when he removed from Butler and succeeded to the practice of Drs. Leake and Mann. Dr. Williams has a large practice and is one of the most successful physicians in western Pennsylvania.

DR. JOHN C. SUTTON was born in Butler, Pennsylvania, and is the son of Mr. and Mrs. John H. Sutton. He graduated from the Hahnemann Medical College in Philadelphia in 1903 and practiced in Butler for a short time. He is now in New Brighton, Penna.

Like all teachers of a new philosophy, the pioneer osteopaths of the county were much scoffed at. With the exception of one or two itinerant practitioners, who remained but a short time, there were no recognized osteopaths in the county until 1901, and the first to enter the field was Dr. Smith, the first teacher at the Kirksville school. There are now four recognized osteopaths in the borough of Butler and the community has turned out a number of students who are successful practitioners in other localities.

DR. WILLIAM SMITH. The pioneer practitioner of Osteopathy in Butler County was Dr. William Smith, a graduate of a regular school of medicine in Scotland. He came to America to take up the practice of medicine, but instead became interested in Osteopathy, and became the first teacher of Anatomy, Physiology and Surgery in the first school of Osteopathy in Kirksville, Missouri. He subsequently lectured at the American School of Osteopathy, and at the Atlantic School of Osteopathy at Wilkesbarre, Pennsylvania, until the early part of 1901, when he came to Butler and opened an office for general practice. He only remained in Butler a few months, when he gave up his work here for the lecture room and is now a member of the faculty of the American School of Osteopathy at Kirksville, Missouri. Dr.

Smith was the first recognized osteopath to practice in the county.

E. H. MERKLEY, D. O., was born in Kingston, Ontario, Canada, and graduated from the American School of Osteopathy, Kirksville, Mo., in 1900. He came to Butler in 1901 after Dr. Smith left and was the real pioneer osteopath of Butler. Pioneer work was no obstacle to him, however, for he soon needed an assistant, who came in the person of his brother, Dr. W. A. Merkley. In June, 1902, Dr. E. H. Merkley sold his practice to Dr. Julia E. Foster and removed to Pittsburg, Penna.

W. A. Merkley, D. O., was born in Kingston, Ontario, Canada, and graduated from the American School of Osteopathy, at Kirksville, Mo., in 1901. He came to Butler as assistant to his brother, Dr. E. H. Merkley, in 1901, and in the following year went to New York city, where he is now practicing.

DR. R. B. POWEL and Dr. Anna H. Powel graduated from the American School of Osteopathy in 1900 and first located in Colorado. They came to Butler in 1902 and practiced here until September of that year, when they returned to Colorado. They are now located in Denver.

DR. JULIA E. FOSTER was born at Royalton, Vermont, and graduated from the Atlantic School of Osteopathy, in 1902. She came to Butler the same year to succeed to the practice of the Drs. Merkley. She now has a suite of offices in the Stein building and has a large clientele. In 1903 she was assisted by Dr. C. M. Lowe, and since 1906 her assistant has been her son, Dr. J. C. Foster.

DR. CLARA E. MORROW was born at Branchton, Butler County, and is the daughter of George Morrow of Slippery Rock Township. After completing the course of study in the common schools of the county she attended Slippery Rock State Normal School at Slippery Rock, Penna., and subsequently taught in the common schools of the county. She went to Providence, Rhode Island, in 1897, and entered a training school for nurses, and after completing the course she entered the Boston School of Osteopathy, graduating in 1902. She came to Butler in September of the same year and succeeded to the practice of the Drs. Powel. She is now located in the Boyd Building and has an extensive practice in the town and county.

DR. E. E. HARDEN was born in Meadville, Crawford County, Pennsylvania, May 25, 1875, and after completing his education entered a business career at Comeaut, Ohio. He gave up a paying business to enter the American School of Osteopathy, where he graduated in June, 1904. He first located in Columbia City, Indiana, where he practiced until April, 1905, when he removed to Butler and located in a suite of rooms in the Younkens Building on South Main street, where he still has an office. While a resident of Comeaut Dr. Hardin married Miss Lida Sharpe, of that place, on August 23, 1897.

DR. GRACY F. PURVIS was born in Butler, Pennsylvania, September 6, 1882, and is the son of Samuel L. Purvis, of West Pearl street. He was educated in the Common and High schools of Butler and at the Staunton, Virginia, Military school, and graduated from the Atlantic School of Osteopathy (a branch of the American School) in February, 1906. He located in Butler the same year and continued to practice until July, 1907, when he removed to Buffalo, New York, where he is engaged in his chosen work. Dr. Purvis was married July 26, 1907, to Miss Florence Leidecker, of Butler.

DR. J. C. FOSTER was born at Royalton, Vermont, February 3, 1884, and came to Butler with his parents in 1902. He graduated from the Butler high school in the class of 1904 and went directly to the American School of Osteopathy at Kirksville, Missouri, where he graduated in the class of 1906. After completing his studies he returned to Butler and took up active practice in the office with his mother, Dr. J. E. Foster, in the Stein Block, on South Main Street. He lives at the family home on North Main Street.

DR. RAYMOND W. BAILEY was born in Chicora, Butler County, in July, 1882, and is the son of Charles A. Bailey. His boyhood days were spent in Butler, where he attended the common and high schools, graduating from the latter in the class of 1902. He graduated from the Atlantic School of Osteopathy in 1904 and the same year located in Butler, where he practiced for six months. He then removed to Philadelphia, where he is now practicing.

REGISTERED PHYSICIANS.

The physicians registered in the prothonotary's office of Butler, as required by the law of June 8, 1881, together with the location at the time of the registration and the date of beginning practice, are as follows:

- George G. Aitken, Great Belt, 1871.
- S. D. Bell, Chicora, 1874.
- H. C. Birchard, Fairview, 1855.
- Stephen Bredin, Butler, 1861.
- Floyd V. Brooks, Evans City, 1877.
- John E. Byers, Butler, 1878.
- C. L. Campbell, Brownsdale, 1876.
- C. M. C. Campbell, Bruin, 1881.
- George H. Chandler, Karns City, 1865.
- J. L. Christy, Petersville, 1877.
- William E. Cowden, Portersville, 1846.
- W. N. Clarke, Whitestown, 1807.
- Elder Crawford, Mars, 1878.
- B. L. Davis, Petrolia, 1863.
- A. V. Cunningham, Zelenople, 1863.
- John Deitrick, Petrolia, 1870.
- B. E. Dennison, Bruin, 1860.
- W. L. DeWolfe, Coalville, now Chicora, 1879.
- P. S. Duff, Great Belt, 1863. (H)
- Andrew J. Edmunds, Martinsburg, 1873.
- Joseph Eggert, Parker Township, 1848.
- George L. Eggert, Parker Township, 1881.
- J. H. Elrick, Harrisville, 1856.
- Robert Everett, Prospect, 1879.
- William C. Foster, Petrolia, 1876.
- Samuel Graham, Butler, 1862.
- David Harper, Karns City, 1870.
- B. A. Henlon, North Washington, 1875.
- Harvey D. Hockenberry, West Sunbury, 1879.
- James A. Holman, Unionville, 1879.
- Albert Holman, Unionville, 1881.
- N. N. Hoover, North Washington, now in Butler, 1865.
- William Irvine, Evans City, 1853.

Albert A. Kelly, West Liberty, 1872.
 Clinton S. Kerr, Byron Center, 1876.
 Theodore Kersting, Evans City, 1867.
 John H. King, Saxouburg, 1872.
 E. N. Leake, Butler, 1850. (H)
 H. C. Lynn, Butler, 1833.
 Joshua M. List, Evans City, 1875.
 Amos Lusk, Harmony, 1849.
 Joseph F. Lusk, Harmony, 1850.
 C. F. McBride, Fairview, 1877.
 George A. McCandless, Middle Lancaster, 1877.
 W. C. McCandless, Glade Mills, 1880.
 C. A. McCaskey, Chicora, 1874.
 Samuel E. McLymonds, Portersville, 1877.
 W. B. Marquis, Glade Mills, 1881.
 Samuel H. Matheson, Slippery Rock, 1854.
 E. B. Mershon, Saxouburg, 1877.
 Homer L. Mershon, Saxouburg, 1878.
 A. N. Neyman, Butler, 1851.
 Asa M. Patterson, Slippery Rock, 1873.
 R. L. Patterson, Chicora, 1872.
 Benjamin Pearson, Slippery Rock, 1862.
 Raymond H. Pillow, Whitestown, now in Butler, 1876.
 O. P. Pisor, Harrisville, 1881.
 Thomas B. Rhodes, Farmington, 1875.
 C. C. Rumberger, Petrolia, 1872.
 J. M. Scott, Cabot, 1871.
 S. O. Sterritt, Valencia, 1880.
 S. L. Strain, Harrisville, 1858.
 D. J. Washbaugh, Anandale, now in Grove City, 1876.
 David W. Webster, Harrisville, ———.
 Adam Weiser, Zelenople, 1848.
 H. R. Wilson, Portersville, 1873.
 W. R. Wilson, Portersville, 1881.
 Frank Winters, Zelenople, 1878.
 George M. Zimmerman, Butler, 1870.

Those registered in 1882 are:

James M. Blaine, Sarversville.
 Oroville A. Rhodes, West Sunbury.
 B. L. Davis, Petrolia.
 T. W. Hopkins, Millerstown.
 David J. Jones, Forestville.
 H. S. George, Cabot.
 James E. Montgomery, Clinton Township.

Those registered in 1883 are:

Thomas Dunn McConnell, Whitestown, now in Prospect.
 Walter Barber, Prospect.
 N. M. Richardson, Prospect.
 Thomas Hayes Donley, Mars.
 Mrs. Mary E. Harper, Renfrew.

Those registered in 1884 are:

Joseph C. Irvine, Forward Township.
 Samuel M. Bippus, Butler.
 J. B. Showalter, Chicora, now in Pittsburg.
 A. J. Pyle, Zelenople.

Those registered in 1885 are:

Harry Navigo, Karns City.
 G. W. Sloan, Butler.
 J. C. Barr, Mars.
 Rediek Coulter McCurdy, Butler.

Those registered in 1886 are:

Daniel W. Fiedler, Harmony.

Edward P. Logan, Saxouburg.
 George W. Beane, Butler.

Those registered in 1887 are:

John F. Moore, Butler.
 Andrew Edmunds, Bruin.
 William Linnenbrink, Zelenople.
 D. Elmer Wiles, Butler.
 Charles T. W. Seidel, Harrisville.

Those registered in 1888 are:

M. B. Cullinan, Petrolia.
 W. R. Titzel, Butler. (H)
 Walker W. McConnell, Harrisville.
 George M. Silvers, Evans City.
 John Charles Hoye, Jacksonville.

Those registered in 1889 are:

John Calvin Cort, Renfrew.
 W. J. Kelly, Parker Township.
 M. E. Headland, Zelenople, now in Butler.
 W. H. McCafferty, Sarver Station.
 Robert W. Waterston, Zelenople.
 Samuel E. Ralston, Harmony.
 Joseph L. Campbell, Chicora, now in Renfrew.

Those registered in 1890 are:

Charles L. Tilton, Evans City.
 William H. Wallace, Butler.
 George D. Thomas, Chicora.
 Jesse E. Mann, Butler. (H)
 J. L. Astell, Chicora.
 Lysander Black, Butler.
 V. F. Thomas, Fairview, now in Evans City.
 Mrs. Eliza E. Grossman, Butler.
 George J. Peters, Butler.
 Arthur Foster, Saxouburg, now in Pittsburg.
 Levi M. Reinsel, Butler.

Those registered in 1891 are:

Harry M. Wilson, Evans City.
 Joseph Forrester, Butler, now in Chicago.
 Joseph W. Miller, Butler.
 Albert G. Price, Evans City.
 Horace S. McLymonds, Brownsdale.
 George G. Shoemaker, Butler.
 Edwin C. Thompson, West Liberty.

Those registered in 1892 are:

William J. Grossman, Coaltown.
 James B. Thompson, Prospect.
 Charles J. Stein, Zelenople.
 Edwin J. Fithian, Portersville.
 Thomas H. Newcome, Karns City.
 George K. McAdoo, Anandale.
 M. C. Smith, Zelenople.
 J. C. Wilson, Evans City.

Those registered in 1893 are:

William R. Cowden, Middle Lancaster, now in Butler.
 Walter N. Humphrey, Portersville.
 James A. Wallace, Petrolia, now in East Brady.
 R. Lee Brush, Slippery Rock.
 W. W. Lasher, Saxouburg.
 Charles E. Beck, Middle Lancaster.
 George L. Fife, Saxouburg.
 William Plummer McIlroy, Butler.

John Franklin Turner, Hooker, now in Dakota.

Physicians registered in Butler County in 1894:

Simeon N. Andre, Petrolia.

Benjamin Harris Brewster, Euclid.

McCurdy Bricker, Butler.

William H. Brown, Butler. (H)

Those registered in Butler County in 1895:

John Wesley Flick Moore, Butler.

Adam Clark Davis, Buffalo Township.

Louisa May Shyrock, Butler, North Hope.

Joseph James Schultis, Butler.

Lawrence H. Stepp, Glade Mills.

Joseph Clarence Caldwell, Emlenton, now in Butler.

William Griffith Pennyhiel, Slippery Rock.

Thomas Kerr McKee, Chicora.

H. G. Deane, Butler. (H)

Charles R. B. Hunt, Butler.

L. A. Barber, Mars.

George B. McClelland Reese, Glade Mills.

Those registered in Butler County in 1896:

Charles S. Shoaff, Jacksonville.

Jasmine McAlpine, Butler.

James Clyde Boyle, Butler.

William Plummer McIlroy, Allegheny City.

Leon Vance Grove, Annandale.

Robert Henderson Warnock, Portersville.

A. A. Bancroft, Butler.

Robert J. Greer, Eau Claire.

Jesse L. Black, Sarversville.

Those registered in Butler County in 1897:

Harry A. Bell, Butler.

W. F. Hall, Butler.

Everett Miner Baker, Brownsdale.

A. L. Howe, Petrolia.

Willard B. Campbell, Harrisville.

William Rush Hockenberry, Slippery Rock.

Charles Stewart McClelland, Glade Mills.

William Beame Clarke, North Hope, now in Butler.

Frank Hamilton Crawford, Glade Mills.

George W. Kennedy, Portersville.

Olin A. Williams, Butler. (H)

Those registered in Butler County in 1898:

R. J. McMichael, West Sunbury.

James Ambrose Osman, Harmony.

J. C. Atwell, Butler.

Walker W. McConnell, Harrisville.

Elgie L. Wasson, Callery Junction, now in Butler.

Harry E. Gray, Zelenople.

Boyd B. Snodgrass, Butler.

Edward A. Russell, Butler.

Robert J. Greer, Eau Claire.

Those registered in Butler County in 1899:

John Victor Cowden, Middle Lancaster, now in Butler.

John L. Halstead, Clinton Township.

Robert J. Grossman, Cherry Township, now in Butler.

Those registered in Butler County in 1900:

Robert Todd Post, Slippery Rock.

Charles S. McGeorge, Mars.

George Thomas McNish, West Winfield.

Those registered in Butler County in 1901:

Samuel A. Kamerer, Butler.

Harry S. Lake, Portersville.

Those registered in Butler County in 1902:

Nicholas Dombart, Evans City.

Herman H. Dight, Middle Lancaster.

Edward H. Harris, Butler.

Leslie R. Hazlett, Butler.

Harry R. Wilson, Callery.

Charles L. DeWolfe, Chicora.

Alfred E. Ewing, Lyndora.

Walter S. Patterson, Butler.

Those registered in Butler County in 1903:

Robert B. Elrick, Petrolia.

Mary Louise Jones, Butler.

Frank Hugh Smith, Kaylor.

Roy L. Stackpole, Butler.

Ella Averill Hackett Patterson, Butler.

Leo Fink Elstein, Butler.

Thomas McVay Beatty, Butler, now in Chicora.

Arthur W. Heilman, Butler.

Frank L. Hazlett, Butler.

John C. Sutton, Butler. (H)

Raymond A. Thompson, Butler.

William McCurdy Scott, Cabot.

C. D. B. Eisman, West Moreland County.

Thomas McCollough Maxwell, Butler.

Those registered in Butler County in 1904:

James H. Ralston, Harmony.

L. Leo Doane, Butler.

Robert Spear Lowry, Butler.

Those registered in Butler County in 1905:

Richards Shields Keiler, Butler.

Franklin N. Straub, Butler.

Arthur H. Straub, Chicora.

William C. McCord, Mars.

Ernest Hugh Snyder, Portersville.

Francis W. Halstead, Butler Township.

Francis Wallace Cunningham, Zelenople.

Those registered in Butler County in 1906:

Arthur E. Allen, Mars.

Russell A. Reid, Zelenople.

Charles B. Painter, Bruin.

Charles F. Perry, Butler.

Warren E. High, Butler.

Guy A. Brandenburg, Butler.

E. E. Campbell, Butler.

John Fife McCullough, Lyndora.

Henry Swartz Crouse, Butler.

John S. Campbell, West Sunbury.

James F. Minter, Lyndora.

Harrison Allen Kitchen, Butler.

Those registered in Butler County in 1907:

Harry P. St. Claire, Butler.

Francis E. Long, Hilliard.

Charles C. Ross, Sarver Station.

Nannie Bell Drake, Portersville.

Alfred H. Zeigler, Butler.

George Hoskins Scott, Butler.

Those registered in Butler County in 1908:

Harper Ansel Wright, West Winfield.

James Rhea McDowell, Sarver Station.

THE BUTLER COUNTY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION.

The Butler County Medical Association was organized November 3, 1866, to cooperate more effectually with the State and National Associations in the work of advancing the knowledge of medicine and the status of the physician. The first officers were Amos Lusk, president; A. M. Neyman, vice-president; Stephen Bredin, secretary; William Irvine, treasurer; W. S. Huselton, corresponding secretary; W. R. Cowden, Joseph S. Lusk, Josiah McMichael and William Irvine, censors; W. R. Cowden, Amos Lusk, Stephen Bredin, N. M. Richardson and A. M. Neyman, committee on constitutions.

The Articles of Association, dated January 3, 1867, were signed by the following physicians: J. B. Livingstone and G. W. Coulter of Slippery Rock, E. F. Anderson of Coultersville, S. H. Matheson of Saxonburg, T. J. Blackwood of Glade Mills, Theodore Frickenstein of Butler and N. M. Hoover of North Washington.

The first Act of the new Association was the adoption of a Fee Bill.

The presidents of the society since its organization are as follows: Amos Lusk, 1867; Stephen Bredin, 1868; W. R. Cowden, 1869; Stephen Bredin, 1870 to 1875; Samuel Graham, 1876; S. D. Bell, 1877; W. N. Clarke, 1878; David Harper, 1879; Josiah McMichael, 1880; Joseph S. Lusk, 1881 to 1883; William Irvine, 1884 to 1885; R. H. Pillow, 1886; W. L. DeWolfe, 1887; F. V. Brooks, 1888; John E. Byers, 1889; N. M. Hoover, 1890; A. M. Neyman, 1891; J. C. Barr, 1892; H. D. Hockenberry, 1893; Samuel Graham, 1894; J. L. Christy, 1895; G. D. Thomas, 1896; A. Holman, 1897; M. E. Headland, 1898; H. D. Hockenberry, 1899; A. C. Davis, 1900; J. W. F. Moore, 1901; George J. Peters, 1902; J. E. Byers, 1903; W. Rush Hockenberry, 1904; E. L. Wasson, 1905; J. C. Atwell, 1906; R. B. Greer, 1907; R. J. Grossman, 1908.

The office of secretary has been filled by the following named physicians: Stephen Bredin, 1867; A. M. Neyman, 1868; G. W. Coulter, 1870; S. S. Towler, 1875; S. D. Bell, 1876; C. F. McBride, 1877; R. H. Pillow, 1878-79; John E. Byers, 1880; J. L. Christy, 1881-89; S. D. Bell, 1890-94; Joseph Forrester, 1894-96; George J. Peters, 1897-99; J. C. Atwell, 1900-02; W. B. Clarke, 1903-04; T. M. Maxwell, 1905-08.

THE TYPHOID FEVER EPIDEMIC.

The typhoid fever epidemic during the winter of 1903 and 1904 has gone down in history as the greatest epidemic of typhoid, in point of numbers according to population, of which we have any record. From the 1st of November to the 29th of January 1,348 persons were stricken and 111 died, according to the official report made to the State Board of Health. The number of cases recognized by the relief committee from November 1 to April 1 when the work was closed was 1,587 and the number of deaths 127.

Previous to 1903 the town had but few cases of typhoid fever, as the record of vital statistics will show. From January 1 to October 1, 1903, two cases had developed in the town and seven deaths had occurred, the latter being of persons who had been infected elsewhere. During the latter part of October forty-seven persons sickened, but no serious alarm was felt and the local physicians were in some doubt as to whether it was really typhoid. During the first week of November new cases developed to such an extent that the attention of the Board of Health was called to the matter and these officials began to look for the cause. The idea that the source of water supply of the town might be polluted with typhoid fever germs was scoffed at by some people and statements were published in the daily papers to the effect that the water was up to the standard of purity. A meeting of the Board of Health was held on Saturday night, November 7, at which the situation was talked over and before daylight the next morning Health Officer Robert B. Fowser, and Dr. John E. Byers, county inspector, made a trip to the Thorn Run dam and inspected a house where typhoid fever had been reported. Here they found three cases of typhoid fever and also that the drainage of the house and yard ran into Thorn Run and thence into Connoquenessing Creek.

It was also found that the water for the town was at that time being taken from an intake on the creek above the pump station. Subsequent inspections of the water sheds of the Thorn Run and Boydstown dam revealed the fact that in the summer of 1903 eight or nine cases of typhoid had developed in the Connoquenessing Valley north of Butler, and below Boydstown. An adjourned meeting of the local board of health was held on Sunday afternoon, the 8th of November, which was attended by Dr. M. E. Headland of the First Ward, Dr. J. C. Atwell of the Second Ward, Dr. J. M. Lieghner of the Third Ward, Bernard Kemper of the Fourth Ward, and Robert B. Fowser of the Fifth Ward. The report of the inspecting officers was heard and on the following day the board issued an official proclamation advising the citizens of the town to boil all water used for domestic purposes.

From November 10 to November 20 516 cases were reported and by the end of the month the number had increased to the astounding proportions of 976. During the worst period of the epidemic 710 cases were reported to the relief committee in seventy-two hours. By this time the alarm was widespread. Bacteriological tests of samples of water taken on the 8th of November showed the existence of typhoid germs and settled the question of the cause of the epidemic. Worse things were in store for the people of Butler. The work of the Board of Health was interrupted by the illness of Health Officer Fowser, who was stricken with fever, and every member of the board had one or more cases in his family. In this dilemma the local board called on the State Board of Health for assistance, which was readily granted. On the 23rd of November the school board closed the public schools and they remained closed until the first of January. A canvas of the different wards was made to ascertain the number of cases and the necessities of the families where fever existed and the situation was found to be truly appalling. At least one house in every five on every street in the town had from one to five cases of fever. The infected houses were not confined to any particular street or district. The First Ward, however, was the one that was the least effected. The local doctors were working night and day and it was found that there was general suffering from the lack of medical attention, proper nursing, and sick-room necessities, and even necessities of life among families who were under ordinary circumstances considered among the well-to-do classes. In many instances the bread winner of the family was stricken and along with him three or four children or probably the mother. It was not unusual to find four or five cases of fever in a house of four rooms, and even two and three cases in one room. In one instance the committee found a grandmother almost eighty years of age trying to nurse her sick son and his wife, and at the same time cook for a family of small children. Rev. Father Carroll of St. Paul's Catholic Church called for volunteer nurses from among his people, and for financial assistance, which was met with a prompt response; and similar efforts among the other churches were made to relieve the suffering and destitute among their own people.

While the Board of Health, the School Board, and the state authorities were investigating the causes of the fever, active steps were taken to relieve the suffering and the destitute, and to this end a mass meeting was called at the courthouse on Sunday, November 28, at which a plain statement was made by those who conducted the investigation, and the temporary organization of a relief society was effected. At this meeting subscriptions were called for and the contributions to a relief fund amounted to $7,100.10.

The Executive Committee met the following day and began the relief work, which was continued until the last of March in 1904. The General Relief Committee had headquarters in the council chambers in the Duffy Block, and the ward committees and the ladies' auxiliary committees reported to the General Committee every day. Those were dark days that followed the inauguration of the work of the Relief Committee. It will be seen from the list published below that there were 115 people connected with the relief association, who gave of their time and services voluntarily and there was probably not one of the entire number that did not have sickness in their own family. Many of the committeemen after laboring night and day for weeks succumbed to the dread disease themselves, and their places were filled by others. Night after night the members of the general and executive committees held their meetings and received reports at which some of their personal friends or some member of the committee perhaps was reported ill or dying. People who were afraid of the fever and could get away left the town. Strangers traveling avoided the place as though it were in the grasp of a pestilence equal to the black plague. Indeed, so many exaggerated stories were published throughout the land about the nature of the epidemic in Butler, that it was not much wonder a stranger was afraid to enter the gates of the city. Business houses in the town were practically paralyzed and the whole community had the appearance of being smitten with a blight from which it would never recover.

The wealth of sympathy and the generosity of the American people for a sister town in distress soon made itself manifest, in the contributions to the relief fund that poured in from towns and cities and private individuals all over the country and in the voluntary assistance that came in the way of physicians, trained nurses, and others who gave of their time without remuneration. The relief committee employed from first to last two hundred and eight trained nurses, and forty-eight domestics, while the number of physicians who came here voluntarily and rendered assistance cannot be estimated.

The kindness of the people in the surrounding towns made itself noticeably felt at Christmas time, which was probably the most gloomy period of the epidemic. Part of the work of the ladies' auxiliary committee was to make personal visits to the homes of families where fever existed and to provide any of the comforts and necessities needed, and to look after the sick children. A day or two before Christmas, contributions of such articles as make the hearts of the children happy during the holiday season began to pour in from all sources, and by Christmas eve there was a sufficient supply on hand to provide a Christmas present for every sick child in the town, as well as many others whose parents were left in such a position by the epidemic that they were unable to supply Christmas reminders for the little ones. One of the most notable contributions to this purpose was a box from a wholesale house in Pittsburg containing several gross of dolls. There were big dolls and little dolls, dolls that could talk, and dolls that opened and shut their eyes, and they were distributed without favor until every little girl whose family was numbered among the fever victims, was the recipient of one of these beautiful presents.

RELIEF SOCIETY ORGANIZED.

On Sunday afternoon, the 28th of

RESIDENCE OF J. C. KELLEY, BUTLER

RESIDENCE OF E. E. ABRAMS, BUTLER

RESIDENCE OF WILLIAM B. McGEARY, BUTLER

THE REIBER HOME, BUTLER

SULLIVAN RESIDENCE, BUTLER

November, a mass meeting was held at the courthouse at which the relief society was organized. Rev. L. A. Carroll, assistant pastor of St. Paul's Roman Catholic Church, called the meeting to order. C. M. Heineman was elected chairman pro-tem, and Harry T. Rattigan and Raymond Locke, secretaries, and T. J. Shufflin, treasurer. An executive committee was chosen as follows: I. G. Smith, C. M. Heineman, E. G. Caughey, Marion Heushaw, Hon. A. G. Williams, Rev. L. A. Carroll, Dr. R. B. Greer, Hon. James N. Moore, Alexander Mitchell, J. V. Ritts, William F. Rumberger, Hon. James M. Galbreath, Harvey H. Boyd, Isaac Hauck, and W. A. Cowan. To the above list of members of the Executive Committee, the following gentlemen were elected from time to time: T. J. Shufflin, W. H. Pape, John W. Brown, Charles H. Oliver, Dr. Wilbur R. Batt (state quarantine officer), Blair Hooks, J. D. Jackson, Dr. J. E. Byers, Dr. J. M. Leighner, Dr. J. C. Atwell, Dr. M. E. Headland, Bernard Kemper, and R. B. Fowser.

The chairmen of the ward committees were as follows:

First Ward, Blair Hooks; Second Ward, W. Z. Murrin; Third Ward, E. H. Negley; Fourth Ward, A. W. McCollough; Fifth Ward, T. C. H. Keck.

Finance Committee: A. C. Troutman, John H. Jackson, W. H. Pape, Charles A. Douglass.

The Ministerial Committee consisted of all the clergymen of Butler.

From time to time changes were made in the ward committees, and new chairmen were substituted as follows: Second Ward, Theodore D. Pape, in the place of Mr. Murrin; Fourth Ward, George A. Evans, in the place of A. W. McCollough; Fifth Ward, Ed. McShane succeeded Mr. Keck who was stricken with fever, and Robert Lowry succeeded McShane. The ward chairmen were assisted by the following: Thomas Robinson, Jr., First Ward; J. D.

Jackson, Second Ward; James Hayes, Third Ward; A. W. McCollough, Fourth Ward; Charles Reiber, Fifth Ward.

The first meeting of the Executive Committee was held in the council chambers at seven o'clock on the evening of November 29, at which time the actual work of relief began. James N. Moore was chosen chairman of the General Relief Committee, Richard H. Broadhead was elected secretary, Miss Louise DeHaven stenographer and typewriter, and T. James Dodds, Andrew Williams, Jr., and James O. Campbell clerks. I. G. Smith was elected treasurer.

THE LADIES' AUXILIARY COMMITTEES.

The chairmen of the ward committees appointed the following Ladies' Auxiliary committees in the different wards: First Ward, chairman Mrs. O. H. Heiner, Mrs. M. L. Armstrong, Miss Adelaide Robinson, Mrs. George Lambert, Miss Joe Harper, Mrs. William Sloan, Mrs. G. A. Spang, Miss Charlotte Heiner, Mrs. Richard H. Wick, Miss Maud Hooks, Miss Frances Harper.

Second Ward: Chairman Miss Isabel White, Mrs. Charles Abrams, Mrs. Charles Duffy, Mrs. C. N. Boyd, Mrs. Samuel Woods, Miss Loretta Murrin, Mrs. Rev. Barlow, Mrs. J. W. McKee, Mrs. J. J. Donaldson, Miss Madge Douglass, Mrs. W. J. McDowell, Miss White.

Third Ward: Chairman Mrs. William Campbell, Mrs. James Hayes, Mrs. Vogan, Mrs. Clara Starr, Mrs. J. W. Wagon, Mrs. V. K. Phillips, Miss Catherine Stewart, Miss Mary Bowser, Miss Eleanor G. Graham.

Fourth Ward: Chairman Miss L. E. Young, Miss Mary McBride, Miss Lizzie Evans, Miss Vera Younkins, Miss M. S. Smith, Miss Clara Mitchell, Mrs. J. S. McKee, Mrs. C. E. Herr, Mrs. J. D. MeJunkin, Mrs. E. E. Abrams, Mrs. Laverne Butler.

Fifth Ward: Chairman Miss Frances G.

Wick, Mrs. George Enterline, Mrs. Isaac Hauck, Mrs. James Miller, Mrs. McClure, Mrs. James Thompson, Mrs. W. A. Slater, Mrs. Speilman, Mrs. Matthews, Miss Blanche Wick.

On the 11th of December the ladies were called together and arrangements made for assigning workers to the different portions of the wards they represent. As the relief work progressed additional committees were authorized as follows:

Committee on Supplies: C. G. Christie, T. J. Shufflin, I. G. Smith.

Case Committee: James N. Moore, I. G. Smith, W. A. Rumberger, C. N. Boyd, A. W. McCollough, Richard H. Broadhead.

Coal, Water and Domestic Committee: Charles H. Olliver, chairman.

Laundry Work: John W. Brown, C. Ball, Carl Ihlenfeld.

Supply Room: Harry Grieb, manager; Miss Maude Sutton, Miss Fay Thompson.

Manager of supplies for Red Cross of Pittsburg: Miss Mabel Graham.

Ambulance drivers: James Stewart and Robert Girard.

Ambulance physician: Dr. Sullivan.

Committee on Nurses: James N. Moore, C. G. Christie, T. J. Shufflin.

Nurses in charge of dispensary: Miss Lydia E. Betz and Miss Jennie Randall.

The total number of workers connected with the Butler Relief Association was 115. Number of nurses employed, 208; number of domestics, forty-eight.

DR. BATT'S WORK.

Dr. Wilbur R. Batt, quarantine officer at large, came to Butler on the 1st of December, and with the other officers of the State Board of Health assisted the local board in taking care of the epidemic. Under the direction of the State board, Dr. Batt installed a destructor for the destruction of typhoid fever excreta at the Butler County General Hospital, and built three sedimentation or filtration beds at the outlet of the sewage system of Lyndora. He also established a dispensary in rooms in the Duffy Building at the corner of Main and North streets, where a complete supply of disinfectants and chemicals was kept, and a skilled nurse was placed in charge to instruct the people how to use them. These supplies were distributed free of charge. Dr. Batt remained in Butler until the close of January, 1904, when his services not being needed longer, he returned to Philadelphia. He was assisted from time to time by Dr. Thomas N. McKee of Kittanning, Dr. Adams of Philadelphia, and other members of the State board.

HOSPITALS ESTABLISHED.

Six hospitals were established and in operation from December 1 to March 1. Five of these hospitals received and cared for typhoid fever patients, the sixth confined its work to the preparing of delicacies of all kinds which were distributed gratuitously and for furnishing sleeping quarters for homeopathic nurses only.

The City of Brotherly Love Hospital was established through the generosity of Earl D. Clinton, proprietor of the Standard Hotel, on Fairground Avenue, who volunteered the use of his property, and through the Citizens' Permanent Relief Society of the city of Philadelphia, who sent Doctors French and Houston, Miss Lane as head nurse, and twenty-five other nurses, five from each of the five principal hospitals of Philadelphia. The local Relief Committee furnished all the supplies, paid all the domestics and employes connected with the hospital with the exception of the doctors and nurses sent by Philadelphia. This hospital was in operation forty-five days, from December 3 to January 18, during which period forty typhoid patients were received and treated, and four other patients, not typhoid, making a total of forty-four. When the hospital was closed by Drs. McKinney and Fox, all medicinal supplies sent by the Philadelphia Relief Society were donated to the Butler County General Hospital.

The Wagner Hospital was established through the generosity of the Misses Bertha and Lena Wagner, who volunteered the use of their residence on South McKean Street. This hospital was put into actual operation on December 1, and closed on March 28. Twenty-nine patients were received and treated, ten of whom were nurses. The Relief Committee furnished the supplies and paid all the nurses, who were under the leadership of Miss Durkin. On account of being centrally located, this hospital was of the greatest possible benefit, and was the last institution to be closed when the epidemic had run its course.

The Emergency Hospital was donated through the kindness of the county commissioners, who turned over all of the available room in the County Home to be used for hospital purposes. The county authorities furnished one nurse and the Relief Committee three nurses in this institution. The portion of the County Home utilized as an emergency hospital was opened December 6, 1903, and closed February 27, 1904. The number of patients admitted was twelve.

The Lyndora Hospital was established through the individual efforts of Mr. E. G. Caughey, who was then assistant general manager of the Standard Steel Car Company. This hospital was used almost entirely for the care of the employes of the Standard Steel Car Company, and received the personal attention of Mr. Caughey. The hospital was opened November 28, 1903, and was closed January 16, 1904. The doctors in attendance were R. B. Greer and E. L. Wasson. Seventeen patients were received and treated at this institution.

The Homeopathic Nurses' Home was established on East Jefferson Street through the efforts of Mr. J. C. Say, and the Homeopathic Hospital of Pittsburg, assisted by Mrs. Dillworth and Mrs. William Thaw. It was the intention of Doctors McClellan and Willard and Mr. Childs of the Pittsburg Hospital to establish a homeopathic hospital, but on account of their being so few homeopathic doctors and nurses in Butler, the project was abandoned, and the Say Building on East Jefferson Street was used as sleeping quarters for homeopathic nurses. It was also used for the preparation of delicacies for the sick which were distributed by the nurses in charge, and for the distribution of supplies which were furnished by the ladies of the Homeopathic Hospital of Pittsburg.

The importance of a well established and well equipped hospital was demonstrated in the early days of the epidemic. The Butler County General Hospital had opened wide its doors to the Relief Committee before the emergency hospitals were established, and in all forty-nine relief committee patients were treated free at this institution, including the services of staff physicians. Sixty-nine cases were treated from December 1, 1903, until the close of March, 1904.

THE SUPPLY ROOMS.

The basement of Snaman's furniture store on North Main Street was rented by the Relief Committee as a supply room. Here was received an endless variety of clothing for men, women, boys and girls, bedding of all kinds, eatables, etc., which were contributed by people and societies from towns and cities from all over the country. One of the most acceptable donations of this kind was received the first week of December from the people of New Castle, who sent a carload of woolen blankets and bedding. As the weather was extremely cold there was in many cases suffering caused by the lack of proper bedding in families where there were several cases of fever to be taken care of. This department was in charge of Harry Grieb, who was assisted by Miss Fay Thompson, Miss Sutton and Miss Stewart.

The Pittsburg Red Cross Society represented by Mrs. Anderson, Mrs. Jones, and Mrs. Vandergrift, also contributed a large amount of supplies which were stored in the basement of the Snaman building in part of the room occupied by the Relief Committee, which was in charge of Miss Mabel Graham. The records of the society show that a total of 4,038 pieces were distributed by the Red Cross, and 9,600 pieces by the Relief Committee. The Relief Committee received a total of 12,200 pieces, four-fifths of which were donated. The balance of these articles at the close of the epidemic were donated to the proper officers of the Children's Aid Society of Butler.

HISTORY OF THE WATER SUPPLY.

On the 1st of December, 1903, Dr. Wilbur R. Batt, quarantine officer at large, on duty in Pittsburg, investigating the outbreak of the smallpox in that city, was directed by the State Board of Health to come to Butler and investigate the water supply at this place. He was accompanied by Dr. John W. Adams, veterinarian to the State Board of Health of Philadelphia, who investigated the milk supply, and Dr. Thomas N. McKee, quarantine officer of Armstrong County, who is a member of the State Board of Health. These officers met with the members of the local board of health, the representatives of the School Board and representatives of the Town Council, and a thorough investigation was made of the water sheds at Thorn Run and Boydstown.

The water supply of Butler at this time was obtained from two sources. The Mutual Water Company of the Southside supplied a large area in the First Ward from five wells which were drilled at the top of the hill south of the town, in 1891. The main supply for the old part of the town was obtained from the Butler Water Company, which had a storage dam at Boydstown, and was then constructing a second storage dam on Thorn Run in Oakland Township. A brief history of the water supply of the town was given by Dr. Batt in his report on the typhoid fever epidemic at Butler, on the 31st of January, 1904, and may be of interest.

Previous to 1877 the water supply of the town was obtained entirely from drilled wells. The Butler Water Company was chartered November 1, 1877, and built a reservoir at the top of the hill near the old St. Paul's Orphans' Home property, which had a capacity of 3,000,000 gallons of water. The supply was taken from an intake on the Connoqueussing Creek near the pump station. In 1896 the water company experienced some difficulty on account of salt water pollution, which was caused by pumping oil wells along the Connoqueussing Creek Valley below Boydstown. In order to obviate this pollution of the water, the water company built the Boydstown dam, which has a drainage area of 9,000 acres. In July, 1897, the Butler Water Company disposed of their plant to the American Water Works and Guaranty Company, who are the present owners. During the summer of 1903 the company purchased a large tract of land on Thorn Run in Oakland Township and built the Thorn Run Dam, which was completed the last of October.

The consumption of water in the town increased from one and a quarter million gallons in 1901 to three million gallons daily in 1903. This sudden increase in consumption was caused by the erection of the Standard Steel Car Plant and the rapid increase in population that followed. In 1902 the Water Company installed a large filter plant at the pump station, and the consumers were thereafter supplied with filtered water. A succession of heavy rains and consequent high water destroyed the Boydstown dam on the 28th of August, 1903, and from that time until the 15th of November the water supply of the town was taken from an emergency intake on the creek above the pump station. This water was filtered and was of a fairly good quality until about the 20th of October, when the filter beds were out of commission for a few days on account of repairs. During this time the water supply was taken from the creek and pumped into the reservoir unfiltered. The officers of the State board found on examination of the water sheds of the Boydstown dam, the Thorn Run dam, and the valley of the creek below the Boydstown dam, that a number of typhoid fever cases had existed in farm houses and that the excreta from these dwellings was thrown into the runs that were tributary to the creek. It was also discovered that during the few days that the water supply had been taken from the bed of the creek, unfiltered, the water had been sufficiently contaminated with typhoid fever germs to cause the fearful epidemic that began about the first of November.

As further evidence of this fact Dr. Batt shows in his report that from 1876 to 1896 the water supply of the town was taken from the Connoquenessing Creek and pumped into the reservoir unfiltered. From July, 1896, to July, 1897, the supply was obtained from Boydstown dam unfiltered. From July, 1897, to December, 1897, the supply again was taken from the Connoquenessing Creek unfiltered. From July, 1902, to August 28, 1903, the supply was taken from Boydstown dam and filtered. From August 28, 1903, to October 20, 1903, the supply was taken from the emergency intake on the Connoquenessing Creek and filtered. From October 20 to November 2 the supply was taken from the Connoquenessing Creek and the filter beds being out of commission at this time the water was furnished to the consumers unfiltered. From November 2 to November 15 the supply was taken from the creek and the filter beds having been repaired the water was filtered before it went to the consumers. On November 15, the Thorn Run dam, which had been completed, was placed in commission and the supply was taken from that source and the water filtered before it was pumped into the reservoir. The result of the investigation proved the contention of the local board of health that the fever was caused by contamination of the water supply.

The conclusion of Dr. Batt's report on the subject of pollution of the water is as follows:

"That following the destruction of the Boydstown dam August 28, 1903, the water for distribution to the people of Butler was taken from Connoquenessing Creek through an emergency intake. An examination of the water of the creek showed that it maintained a fairly constant evidence of pollution and that at various periods the operation of the filter plant was particularly or entirely suspended and that as a result of this polluted water being used for domestic purposes, 1,348 persons were stricken with typhoid fever between October 1, 1903, and January 29, 1904, with 111 fatalities."

The previous records of typhoid fever epidemics were broken at Butler. In 1885 a similar epidemic occurred at Plymouth, Pennsylvania, a town of 8,000 population. The number of cases reported at that time was 1,104, and the deaths 114. At Ithaca, New York, an epidemic occurred, in May, 1903, in which there were 1,300 cases reported, and seventy-eight deaths, among a population of 13,000 people.

George R. Harlow, of Philadelphia, engineer and inspector of the State Board of Health, made an official visit to the Boydstown dam and water shed on the 12th of December, 1903, and reported that eight cases of typhoid fever had been located in the vicinity of Boydstown from the first of August to the date of his visit in that year. This inspection confirmed the belief that the fever epidemic was caused by polluted water, and that the cause of the pollution came from the infected houses along the creek valley north of Butler.

In justice to Superintendent M. F. Wright and the American Waterworks & Guaranty Company it is recorded that the company, through its officials in Butler, did everything within its power to assist the State and local boards of health, and spared no expense in their efforts to remedy the evils that existed at that time, and to safeguard the health of the community in the future.

FINANCIAL REPORT.

The financial report of the executive committee of the Relief Society which was audited and filed with the other reports of the epidemic show that the committee received from first to last a total of $65,567.48. The total amount expended by the Relief Society was $58,415.90. The balance of $7,151.58 was turned over to the Butler County General Hospital when the Relief Society closed its books. To the above amount may be added the donations of grocers, and other supplies by merchants amounting to $1,039.41, and a large amount of clothing, bedding and other supplies on which no value was placed, but which approximates $10,000 or more.

In addition to the above amounts must be considered the report of Burgess William Kennedy. The Burgess received from all sources $12,021.28. Of this amount $9,527.20 was turned over to the Relief Society, and the balance of $2,494.08 was disbursed by him on vouchers, a report of which is on file in the office of the secretary of the town council. This makes the total amount of cash contributions $68,061.56. No account is taken in the financial statement of the $3,038 in the hands of the Mayor of Pittsburg, which the Relief Society did not receive, nor is any account taken of the discounts on bills allowed by the grocerymen, the merchants, and the gas companies. Nor is any account taken of the discount amounting to 33 1-3 per cent. allowed by the real estate owners on rentals paid by the relief committee.

THE DIET KITCHEN.

On November 29 the use of the kitchen and dining-room of the Second Presbyterian Church was offered by the pastor as a place in which food might be prepared for fever patients. This idea was abandoned when it became known that there was some difficulty in providing meals for the professional nurses who had come from various parts of the country in response for help, and under the direction of the Relief Committee this work was undertaken at the church. The supervision of the work was committed to the pastor Rev. E. R. Worrall, Hon. Thomas Hayes, a member of the session, Mrs. C. E. McIntire, president of the Ladies' Aid Society, and Miss Maude Hayes. About one hundred and forty ladies of Butler participated in this work and all the necessary help was gratuitous with the exception of the cook and errand boy, who were paid by the committee. Meals were served to nurses at the church during a period of seventy-three days, from December 4, 1903, to February 14, 1904, during which time the average number of meals served daily was seventy-one. The average for the first week was fifty-three, and the third week, one hundred and eighteen, which was the highest average during the time the institution was open.

CLARA BARTON'S VISIT.

On the 14th of December, 1903, Butler was visited by Miss Clara Barton, of the National Red Cross Society, accompanied by Gen. W. H. Sears, J. B. Hubbell and Dr. A. W. Hitt. She was also accompanied by Mrs. J. L. Anderson and Mrs. Mary Chalfant McKee, of the Pittsburg Red Cross. Miss Barton and her staff made a thorough examination of the hospitals, the diet kitchen, the supply department, and the method of conducting the relief work by the relief committee, and expressed themselves so well pleased with the work being done that they thought it was not necessary for the officers of the Red Cross Society to remain in the field. Miss Barton was especially complimentary on the manner in which the relief work was organized in Butler, and said it was the equal of the work done at Galveston and other places where the National Red Cross Society had taken charge.

THE RELIEF FUND.

Acting on the advice of Miss Clara Barton, who said that it would probably take one hundred thousand dollars to meet the expenses of the Relief Committee, the Executive Committee held a meeting on the night of December 15, and prepared a statement which was given to the Associated Press and published in all the newspapers in the United States the following day. As the result of this appeal for aid, the committee received from all sources the sum of $65,567.48. Money poured in from all parts of the country, from towns and cities, from lodges and benevolent societies, and from private individuals. The smallest donation was ten cents from a private individual at Tacoma, Washington, and the largest was $5,000 from a gentleman who had been a former resident of Butler County, but withheld his name.

On January 11, 1904, a meeting of the general relief and executive committees was held at which a complete and exhaustive discussion relative to the funds received up to that time, took place, and a second statement was given to the Associated Press for publication stating that the relief committee felt satisfied that with the funds received up to that time they would have sufficient money to pay all debts contracted for, and which might be incurred thereafter, providing no unforeseen contingencies occurred; and that further contributions on the part of the public would be unnecessary.

About the time the second statement was given out setting forth that the Relief Committee had sufficient funds in hand to finish the relief work in Butler, there remained in the hands of the Mayor of Pittsburg, $3,067.20, which had been sent to him as custodian of the Butler Relief fund, and which had not been forwarded to Butler. About this time the frightful disaster at the Harwick mines in Allegheny County took place, in which one hundred and seventy men lost their lives. At a meeting of the executive committee, a motion was unanimously adopted instructing the secretary to wire the Mayor of Pittsburg as follows:

"Hon. W. B. Hayes, Mayor of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania:

"I have been authorized to wire you as follows: That it is the sense of this executive committee and the general relief committee that the officers of both committees, while still claiming their legal and moral right to the balance of the funds in your hands, we now request that it be transferred to the proper authorities for the benefit of the Harwick sufferers; and in addition we wish to say to you that, notwithstanding the fact that we are still in the throes of the typhoid fever epidemic here, this relief committee and the citizens of Butler generally stand ready to aid in any way they can in this disaster of our sister county." Signed, R. B. Broadhead, secretary.

The work performed by the Relief Society of Butler in connection with the epidemic of typhoid fever was of such great importance and so effective in its results as to play a very important part in securing the rapid abatement of the disease as well as relieving suffering and want. The work was of such magnitude that the details cannot be given here. The manner in which the affairs of the Relief Society were administered testify eloquently to the intelligence and integrity and the unselfishness of those who devoted both of their time and substance to the relief of the stricken fellow towns-people.

Nor should the personal sacrifices of individuals be passed unnoticed. Dr. John E. Byers, county medical inspector, had an extensive practice in Butler. While visiting a fever patient in January, 1904, he was stricken with cerebral hemorrhage and died in a few hours. Dr. William H. Brown contracted a disease from exposure during the winter that caused his death in June, 1905. Miss Gertrude Vanderlin, daughter of Attorney J. C. Vanderlin, of Butler, who was one of the first volunteer nurses, attended a poor family where there were four children ill with fever. She became infected with the disease and died in December when the epidemic was at its height. For performing deeds of valor on the field of battle and in time of war, men and women have had their names written on marble and bronze. The men and women who faced the Grim Reaper during the long weeks of the epidemic, nursing the sick and comforting the dying to be themselves stricken and finally give up their lives, are of heroic mould, and their memories will long be cherished by a grateful people. Of them it can be written: "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

BUTLER COUNTY GENERAL HOSPITAL.

The movement to build a hospital in Butler as a public charity and also for the care of private cases, had its inception in the fall of 1896. The deaths of two young men from fever under circumstances that were particularly sad, and a number of serious railroad accidents of the previous summer, attracted public attention to the matter of taking care of the sick strangers in our midst and enlisted the sympathies of the women of the town who were engaged in charitable work. As in every good cause, the women were the first to make a move. Mrs. Elizabeth McCandless, now deceased, Mrs. Harriet Cooper and Mrs. T. J. Steen prepared a letter setting forth the needs of the town, which they sent to Andrew Carnegie, and was the means of securing from him the promise of a check for $1,500.00 for the building of a hospital whenever the people of Butler showed their good faith by affecting an organization and raising a fund for the enterprise. Following this a meeting of the women of the town who were interested in the hospital movement was held in the Y. M. C. A. building on November 17, 1896, at which Mrs. W. D. Brandon presided, with Mrs. C. E. Herr as secretary. This meeting was attended by about eighty women, representing all of the churches of the town, and the various women's societies. Mrs. M. S. Templeton, Mrs. J. B. Black, and Mrs. W. C. Thompson were appointed a committee to prepare a constitution and by-laws, and present them for adoption at the next meeting.

At a meeting held on the 24th of November a regular organization was affected by the election of Mrs. W. D. Brandon, president; Mrs. J. S. McKee, vice-president; Mrs. C. E. Herr, secretary; and Mrs. John S. Campbell, treasurer. A committee on finance was appointed consisting of Mrs. John S. Campbell, president; Mrs. N. B. Jacobs, Mrs. R. P. Scott, Mrs. William Aland, Mrs. J. V. Ritts, Mrs. William Cooper, Mrs. H. W. Christie, Mrs. Alfred Wick, Mrs. W. C. Thompson, Mrs. A. W. McCullough, Miss Allie Collins, and Miss Mary McKee.

At the same time a board of management was elected, consisting of two representatives from each of the churches in the town. This board was as follows:

Baptist Church—Mrs. W. H. Collins.
St. Paul's Catholic Church—Mrs. Charles Duffy, Mrs. Joseph Vanderlin.

St. Peter's Catholic Church—Mrs. Harry Grieb, Mrs. William Aland.

Church of God—Mrs. J. W. Davis.

Grace Lutheran Church—Mrs. Eli Miller.

Free Methodist Church—Mrs. L. C. Wick.

First Presbyterian Church—Mrs. D. B. Campbell, Mrs. R. C. McAboy.

United Presbyterian Church—Mrs. Jos. L. Purvis, Mrs. R. H. Pillow.

St. Peter's Episcopal Church—Mrs. J. B. Black.

First English Lutheran Church—Miss Lena Reiber, and Mrs. Elizabeth Smith.

St. Mark's Evangelical Lutheran Church—Mrs. Theodore Vogeley, and Mrs. Jacob Lawall.

Bethany Reformed Church—Mrs. T. Klingensmith.

St. Paul's Reformed Church—Mrs. D. N. Harnish.

Members at large—Miss Isabelle White, Mrs. J. M. Greer, Mrs. J. H. DeWolf, Mrs. J. S. McKee, Mrs. J. Henry Troutman, Mrs. J. S. Campbell, Mrs. Chas. E. Herr.

Committee on site—Mrs. J. Henry Troutman, Mrs. R. C. McAboy, and Mrs. L. O. Purvis.

The title adopted was the Ladies' Hospital Association.

There have been few changes in the officers of the association since its first organization. Mrs. R. P. Scott was appointed donation secretary after the hospital was opened, and Mrs. J. B. Black succeeded Mrs. C. E. Herr as recording secretary. In 1908 the association had over fifty members who were working for the interests of the hospital through the various committees. The officers were as follows:

President, Mrs. J. Henry Troutman; vice-president, Mrs. C. G. Christie; donation secretary, Mrs. B. C. Huselton; recording secretary, Mrs. J. B. Black.

The following committees were fully organized and doing excellent work:

Executive committee: Mrs. R. C. McAboy, Mrs. R. P. Scott, Miss Isabel White.

Purchasing committee: Mrs. R. C. McAboy, Mrs. N. M. Hoover, Mrs. W. D. Brandon.

Entertainment committee: Mrs. Jno. S. Campbell, Mrs. R. P. Scott, Mrs. C. N. Boyd.

Flower committee: Mrs. W. H. Goehring, Mrs. W. C. Thompson, Mrs. Frank Beidenbach, Mrs. W. H. Miller, Mrs. J. B. Black, Miss Anna White.

Needle-work committee: Miss Isabel White, Mrs. Louis B. Stein, Mrs. Chas. E. Herr, Mrs. T. C. Campbell, Mrs. Alfred Wick, Mrs. J. D. McJunkin, Mrs. Jas. Heydrick, Mrs. W. H. Heydrick, and Miss Allie Harper.

The first advisory board consisted of L. O. Purvis, John S. Campbell, Alfred Wick, Joseph Hartman, J. M. Galbreath, W. T. Mechling, Dr. A. M. Neyman, L. R. Schmertz, and Daniel Younkins.

In January, 1897, a joint meeting of the Ladies' Hospital Association, the advisory board, and others interested in the project was held in the Y. M. C. A. Building at which an organization was formed, the object of which was to maintain a general hospital, as a public charity at Butler, Pennsylvania, to be known as "The Butler County General Hospital." In order to carry out the purposes and object of the corporation, it was decided to apply for a charter, which was granted on the 18th day of January, 1897, and the following board of directors was named for the first year: William T. Mechling, president; Thos. J. Shufflin, vice-president; J. V. Ritts, treasurer; A. E. Reiber, secretary; and L. O. Purvis, Amos Steelsmith, Jos. W. Aland, Watt Tait, L. R. Schmertz, Mrs. Theodore Vogeley, Mrs. C. D. Greenlee, Mrs. N. M. Hoover, Mrs. T. J. Steen, Mrs. Harry Grieb, Mrs. J. Henry Troutman.

In addition to the above directory, the following committees were appointed: Executive committee, A. E. Reiber, W. F. Tait, Amos Steelsmith, Mrs. J. Henry Troutman, Mrs. N. M. Hoover.

Finance committee, J. V. Ritts, L. R. Schmertz, T. J. Shufflin, Mrs. C. D. Greenlee, Mrs. T. J. Steen.

Auditing committee, Jos. W. Aland, Mrs. Theodore Vogeley, Mrs. Harry Grieb.

Building committee, L. O. Purvis, A. E. Reiber, Mrs. J. H. Troutman.

At the annual meeting held on January 20, 1898, the above named committees were continued, and in 1899 T. J. Shufflin succeeded W. T. Mechling as president, and Mrs. J. Henry Troutman was elected president. The secretary and treasurer were continued. There were no changes in officials until the annual meeting of 1901, when W. F. Rumberger was chosen secretary to succeed Mr. Reiber. In July, 1905, Mr. Rumberger resigned as secretary and L. B. Stein acted as secretary until the annual meeting in 1906, when Jos. W. Aland was elected.

In 1908 the board of directors consisted of T. J. Shufflin, president; Mrs. J. H. Troutman, vice-president; Louis B. Stein, treasurer; Jos. W. Aland, secretary; and Miss Isabella White, Mrs. N. M. Hoover, Mrs. J. S. Campbell, Capt. Thos. Hays, A. E. Reiber, J. V. Ritts, L. S. McJunkin, and M. F. Wright.

In 1897 the building committee secured a site from the John Muntz estate south of the Connoquenessing Creek at the foot of Main Street, and the contract was let for a two-story brick building that would meet the needs of the time. The building was erected and equipped at a cost of about $25,000. With the exception of the donation made by Andrew Carnegie, the money for this purpose was contributed by the people of Butler and Butler County. For several years after the hospital was opened it was maintained by the benevolence of the people of the community, but in 1902 State aid was secured and the legislature of 1907 made an appropriation of $10,000 for building purposes, and a similar amount for maintenance for the two succeeding years.

When the building was ready for occupancy the Masonic order of Butler furnished and equipped the dining-room, and the four private rooms were furnished by the B. P. O. E., the Woodmen of the World, the I. O. O. F., and the C. M. B. A., respectively.

The hospital takes a leading rank among the public institutions of the State, and has performed a noble work in the community. During the typhoid fever epidemic of the winter of 1903-4 the institution received and cared for sixty-five patients from November until the first of March. At the time of the explosion at the carwheel foundry on the night of October 8, 1907, forty-one of the victims were taken to the hospital and properly cared for, although the capacity of the institution was only twenty beds.

On the anniversary of this catastrophe in October, 1908, the Standard Steel Car Company through their treasurer, Mr. Gillespie, sent the Hospital Association a check for $5,000 as a donation in appreciation of the services rendered at the time of the accident at the mill.

The first matron and superintendent of the hospital was Miss Emma Walker; she was succeeded by Miss Emma Limberg; and Mrs. A. M. Reinhardt, the present superintendent, came to the institution in November, 1902. Miss Cook and Miss Anderson filled the position of matron for short periods during 1901 and 1902.

THE NURSES' TRAINING SCHOOL.

The training school for nurses was established in 1901, and the first class was graduated in 1903. The graduates that year were Miss Elizabeth Ammon, and Miss Lue Donaldson. The latter died during the winter of the epidemic in Butler.

The class of 1904 was composed of Miss Anna Pifer, Mrs. Jennie Murphy, Miss Mabel Campbell, and Miss Florence Halderman.

The class of 1905 consisted of Miss Jessie Ray, Miss Amy Pifer, and Miss Sara Kline.

The class of 1906 was composed of Miss Margaret Walter, Miss Susan Borford, Miss Carrie Kline, Miss Stella Campbell, Miss Emma Fuhrer, Miss Rachel Zufall, Miss May Soper. The class of 1907 was composed of Miss Anna Brown, Miss Alice McQuillan, Miss Stella Gilson, Miss Rose Whitney and Miss Phoebe Pasch.

Eleven nurses were in training in 1908 of whom five were on probation.

The alumni association was formed in October, 1908, with eleven members and the following officers: Mrs. Jennie Murphy, president; Miss Florence Halderman, secretary; Miss Amy Pifer, treasurer; and Miss Stella Campbell, vice-president.

The official staff of the hospital in 1908 was composed of Mrs. A. M. Reinhardt, superintendent; Miss M. E. Foster, head nurse; Miss Ruth Woodworth, dietician; and Miss Margaret Annaeaker, of Pittsburg instructor in massage.

The location of large industrial plants in Butler and the increase in population since 1902 has caused a corresponding increase in hospital cases, and has created the necessity of enlarging the building. In 1904 a two-story brick addition was built. The first floor is used as a laundry, and the second floor as living apartments for the help. In 1908 the south wing was erected at a cost of about $15,000, which increased the capacity of the hospital to about sixty beds. The Hospital Association has in contemplation the erection of a west wing, that will further increase the capacity of the institution to about one hundred beds.

CHAPTER XII

BANKS AND BANKING

First Banking Institution—First National Bank—John Berg & Co.—Butler Savings Bank—Butler Savings and Trust Co.—Butler County National Bank—Farmers' National Bank of Butler—Guaranty Safe Deposit & Trust Co.—Standard Trust Co.—First National Bank of Harrisville—First National Bank of Zeligople—Citizens' National Bank of Slippery Rock—First National, Slippery Rock—Mars National Bank—First National Bank of Bruin—Citizens' National Bank of Evans City—Lyndora National Bank—Harmony Savings Bank—Commercial Bank of Harmony—Prospect Savings Bank—Millerstown Savings Bank Association—Millerstown Deposit Bank—Butler County Bank—Fairview Banks—Argyle Savings Bank, Petrolia.

There were no banking institutions in Butler County previous to 1854. The merchants did a credit business, or issued scrip and the people throughout the country districts often had difficulty in getting ready cash for their immediate uses. The merchant, mechanic, doctor, and preacher were paid in the product of the farm, and they in turn, were compelled to trade for the things they needed. If there was any balance coming to the farmer when he had completed his trading with the merchant, he received the merchant's scrip or due bill, but rarely any money, or at the most he would receive half cash, and the balance would be taken in trade at some future date. The currency issued by the state banks of that day had an uncertain value and the correction of the bank note list in the newspapers was one of the features of the financial columns that was closely watched by the dealers and merchants. The insecurity of the bank notes made gold and silver the only safe money for the people in the country districts to handle, and this was hoarded in old stockings and various places of security about the farm house. Bank notes were looked on with suspicion, as the possessor usually had to refer to the latest published list to see whether the note was good, and then take chances on the institution failing, which often happened, before the paper could be presented to the bank of issue for redemption. This condition of things made the country people naturally suspicious of banks in general, and for many years after banks had been established in Butler Borough and elsewhere in the county, the country people preferred trusting their savings with their local merchant to depositing their money with the banks. This custom led to private banking in the smaller towns, which prevailed to a considerable extent until the beginning of the present century.

From 1854 to 1867 the only banks in the county were in Butler Borough. In the latter year a bank was organized and established at Harmony, and in 1872, banks were established at Fairview and Petrolia. The following year two banks were established at Millerstown, which was then a booming oil center, and in 1874 a bank was organized and established at Prospect. A year or two later the Prospect bank went into private hands and it has been continued as a private bank since that time. In 1892 but one of the oil country banks remained, and that was the Millerstown Deposit Bank, which is still in existence, but under private management. Private banking enterprises were carried on in the last decade of the nineteenth century by W. Henry Wilson at Slippery Rock, J. H. McClure at Prospect, James M. Marshall at Portersville, Jacob and Edward Dambach at Evans City, and the Gelbach brothers at Zelenople, but these concerns with one or two exceptions have given way to the national banks that have been organized during the past ten years. In addition to the three banking houses and two trust companies in Butler Borough in 1908, there were nine national banks and two private banks doing business in the county. The combined capital of these institutions is about $2,000,000.00, and they are rated among the leading financial institutions of western Pennsylvania.

THE FROST BANKING INSTITUTION OF BUTLER.

The transactions of the county commissioners during the first half of the century show that the moneys of the county were kept in Pittsburg banks, and the merchants of Butler and other points in the county were compelled to do their banking business in that city. A good deal of uncertainty surrounded dealings with outside banking concerns, so that in the year 1854 James Campbell, James Bredin, Samuel M. Lane, Dr. Isaiah McJunkin and A. N. Meylert determined to found a bank here. James Bredin was selected president or manager, and Isaac J. Cummings as cashier. A year later Mr. Cummings became sole owner, and continued so down to the organization of the First National Bank in 1864. Besides attending to his duties as a banker Mr. Cummings was financial editor of the Butler newspapers, and corrected the bank note list weekly.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF BUTLER.

The First National Bank of Butler was chartered January 27, and organized February 2, 1864, with the following officers: James Campbell, president, I. J. Cummings, cashier, John Berg, Jr., Louis Stein, John N. Purviance, H. Julius Klingler, James Bredin, E. McJunkin, John M. Thompson, R. C. McAbby, and James Campbell, directors. Charles McCandless, Charles Duffy, Thomas Stehle, Jacob Ziegler, John M. Zimmerman, Mary A. Reed, John A. Graham, Christian Seibert, Jacob Walter and William Campbell, were unofficial stock-holders. The business of the institution was carried on in the old building, later the property of Thomas Stehle, until 1875, when the bank was removed to their new building on the corner of Main and Jefferson Streets, now occupied by John Berg & Company. Some years previous to this event Charles McCandless succeeded James Campbell as president and filled that position until 1878, when he resigned to accept the appointment of chief justice of New Mexico, and Charles Duffy was elected his successor as president. Mr. Duffy was succeeded as president by W. H. H. Riddle, who filled the office when the bank closed its doors in 1879. Edwin Lyon succeeded I. J. Cummings as cashier and he in turn gave place to John Berg, Jr. In 1870, Alexander Mitchell who had previously been teller of the bank was elected cashier, which office he held until the bank was closed by Examiner Hugh Young July 18, 1879. The receiver appointed was Henry C. Cullom, who served until January, 1880, when he was succeeded by John N. Purviance. Notwithstanding the depreciation of securities Mr. Purviance succeeded in winning for the depositors a large percentage of their money.

THE PRODUCERS' BANK OF BUTLER COUNTY.

This bank was established in Butler May, 1873, and about the same time a branch was opened at Greece City, which was then a booming oil town. The officials of the company were J. W. Irwin, president, J. E. Ray, cashier, of Butler; H. Howe, assistant cashier; J. Stambaugh, James Adams, William Miller, Samuel A. Woods, H. McWalters, Lewis P. Walker and the above officials, were the directors. The business was conducted until 1875, when J. W. Irwin appears to have purchased the stock and later entered the Butler Savings Bank as a stockholder.

JOHN BERG & COMPANY.

The banking house of John Berg & Company was established in 1870 by John Berg, Sr., and John Berg, Jr., and was carried on by them until the death of the senior partner in 1884. By the terms of the will of John Berg, Sr., the title and system of business were to be observed for five years or until 1889. In that year the company was re-organized with John Berg, Henry A. Berg and Louis Berg as partners under the style and title of John Berg & Company. John Berg, Jr., died in November, 1906, and since that time the business has been carried on by Henry A. Berg and Louis Berg. The first banking office was at the corner of Main and Cunningham Streets, and in 1883 the firm purchased the First National Bank building on the corner of Main and Jefferson Streets, where for the past twenty-five years they have transacted a large and constantly increasing business.

THE BUTLER SAVINGS BANK.

The Butler Savings Bank was organized

January 29, 1868, and opened its doors for business February 3d of that year, with James Bredin, president, Edwin Lyon, cashier, Adam Troutman, J. C. Reddick, Eugene Ferrero, William Dick, E. A. Heubold, Gabriel Etzel, R. A. Mifflin, David Kelly, and Samuel Marshall, trustees. The company received a state charter by a special act of May 20, 1871, and under that charter John M. Thompson was elected president October 30, 1871, and served until February 21, 1877, when William Campbell, Sr., was elected as his successor. The latter served until February, 1880, when J. W. Irwin was elected. William Campbell, Sr., was again chosen president January 12, 1886, but resigned December 27, 1887, when Joseph L. Purvis was elected to fill the vacancy. Mr. Purvis continued as president until 1901, when he resigned and William Campbell, Jr., was elected president. At the same time Louis B. Stein, who had been teller, since 1885, was promoted to cashier.

Edwin Lyon, the first cashier of the bank, resigned in 1871, and William Campbell, Jr., was appointed and filled that position until 1901, when he was elected president, and Louis B. Stein, who had been appointed teller in 1885, was chosen cashier to succeed Mr. Campbell. In January, 1891, the bank was re-chartered for twenty years, to date from May 20, 1891. In the summer of 1902, the company was reorganized under the title of the Butler Savings and Trust Company, and the capital stock increased from sixty thousand to two hundred thousand dollars. A charter was granted on the 4th of September, 1902, and the old Savings Bank as an institution went out of existence on the 31st of December of that year. The Savings Bank was dominated largely by the Campbell, Stein and Troutman families of Butler and had on its board of directors the most conservative business men of the town and county. It was the main support of many of the public improvements of the town, among which were the electric lighting system of the town and the Home Natural Gas Company, and was one of the principal factors in the organization of the Standard Plate Glass Company. It was also instrumental in bringing the Standard Steel Car Works to Butler, which inaugurated a new era in the commercial and industrial growth of the town.

THE BUTLER SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY.

The Butler Savings and Trust Company is the old Butler Savings Bank reorganized under a new charter. The company was organized in 1902, the charter granted September 4th of that year, and its doors were open for business on January 1, 1903, in the building formerly occupied by the Butler Savings Bank. The first officers of the company were William Campbell, Jr., president; J. Henry Troutman, first vice-president; W. A. Stein, second vice-president; Louis B. Stein, secretary and treasurer; U. E. Cronenwett, assistant treasurer; W. D. Brandon, solicitor; and the following Board of Directors: Wm. Campbell, Jr., J. Henry Troutman, W. D. Brandon, W. A. Stein, John S. Campbell and Louis B. Stein.

William Campbell, Jr., died on July 27, 1907, and J. Henry Troutman was elected president, a position which he still holds. John S. Campbell was elected first vice-president to fill the vacancy, and Dr. R. H. Pillow was chosen a member of the board of directors to fill the vacancy. The other officers of the institution are Gardner C. Lowry, general bookkeeper; John W. Brandon, C. DeWitt Breaden, H. S. Ehrman, Frank W. Christy, individual bookkeepers; J. Hervey Murland, corresponding clerk.

The company conducts a general banking department, savings department and trust department, and the business is conducted along the safe and conservative line established by the founders of the old Savings Bank and successfully carried on for forty years. The statement of the resources and liabilities of the institution shows a capital of $200,000.00, a surplus of $200,000.00, undivided profits of $158,639.59, and deposits of $1,562,056.13. The amount of trust funds invested and uninvested are $261,404.17.

BUTLER COUNTY NATIONAL BANK.

From 1879 to 1890 Butler was without a National bank and the only banking institutions in the town were the Butler Savings Bank and John Berg & Company. Several bankers and capitalists had proposed from time to time the organization of a new bank, but nothing definite was done until early in 1890, when J. V. Ritts, a banker well known in Western Pennsylvania, representing a number of business men, joined R. B. Taylor, E. E. Abrams, C. D. Greenlee, I. G. Smith, O. M. Russell, and others, in promoting the enterprise and held a formal meeting in the office of Mr. Abrams April 1, 1890. The title selected was "The Butler County National Bank," and upon application to the comptroller of the currency, a charter was granted July 19, 1890. The bank was opened for business on August 18th of the same year, under the following organization: R. B. Taylor, president; J. V. Ritts, vice-president; David Osborne, cashier, and Charles A. Bailey, assistant cashier.

Including the president and vice-president, the directory was composed of the following: Leslie P. Hazlett, E. E. Abrams, O. M. Russell, C. D. Greenlee, I. G. Smith, C. P. Collins, and Henry McSweeney.

Mr. Taylor resigned the presidency on September 3d, 1890, and Mr. Ritts assumed that position until the election of Hon. Joseph Hartman on September 30th following. Mr. Hartman continued in the office of president until his death in 1904, when Leslie P. Hazlett was elected to fill the vacancy, and at the next annual meeting of the stockholders and directors, he was re-elected and continues to hold that position. Mr. Osborne resigned his position as cashier about one year after the bank began business, and C. A. Bailey was promoted to the position of cashier, and John G. McMarlin to assistant cashier. In 1900 Mr. Bailey resigned to accept a position with a new bank then being organized, and Mr. McMarlin was promoted to the position of cashier, which he now holds. At the same time, Albert G. Krug was appointed to the position of assistant cashier.

The original capital of the bank was $100,000.00, which was increased in 1900 from $100,000.00 to $200,000.00, and in 1904 the capital was again increased from $200,000.00 to $300,000.00. At the close of 1908 the bank had a full paid up capital of $300,000.00, and surplus and undivided profits amounting to over $475,000.00. The bank at present is the largest in Butler County, and has assets aggregating $2,500,000.00. It has always maintained full currency payments without notice, and in addition to doing a general banking business conducts a savings department, which is also backed by the bank's large capital and surplus. It pays interest on time deposits, compounded semi-annually, and carefully looks after the interests of its patrons in this branch of the business.

The first home of the Butler County National Bank was in a three-story brick building, purchased in 1890, that occupied part of the site of the present building. In 1902 the bank purchased the property of John H. Negley and Col. John Thompson on Diamond Street and the McQuiston property on Main Street and began the erection of the present six-story banking and office building, which was completed and occupied in August, 1903. The total cost of this improvement was about $200,000.00. One of the features of the equipment of the banking room is the safe deposit vaults which are considered among the best in this part of the country.

The following constitute the board of directors in 1908: Leslie P. Hazlett; Alphonse Krause; Harry Heasley; Joseph Hartman, Jr.; Dr. W. C. McCandless; H. C. Litzinger; H. McSweeney; Blair Hooks; A. E. Russell; C. P. Collins; W. H. Larkin; H. C. Keasey; A. L. Reiber; T. P. Mifflin; Dr. J. J. Schultis; I. G. Smith; Marion Henshaw; M. N. Heinzer; R. A. Marks; and J. V. Ritts.

The officers of the bank are: Leslie P. Hazlett, president; A. L. Reiber, vice-president; T. P. Mifflin, vice-president; J. V. Ritts, vice-president; John G. McMarlin, cashier; Albert C. Krug, assistant cashier; W. S. Blakslee, assistant cashier; W. A. Ashbaugh, assistant cashier; George W. Hazlett, general book-keeper; W. A. Rittsteller; S. R. Hill, proof clerk; R. H. McClester, corresponding clerk; G. K. Hazlett, individual book-keeper; George D. Smith, individual book-keeper; J. H. Forelt, discount clerk; J. H. Stewart, collector.

The bank has been prosperous, aggressive and progressive and has had a phenomenal growth from its first year. It is the largest banking house in Butler County and is rated one of the most solid institutions in western Pennsylvania. It has always taken an active interest in the promotion of the industrial welfare of the town and county, and has been the financial backing of a number of the most important business enterprises that have been established in this district in the last eighteen years.

THE FARMERS' NATIONAL BANK OF BUTLER.

The Farmers' National Bank of Butler was organized early in 1900, with a capital of $100,000.00, and began business July 2d of that year in the building now owned by the company on South Main Street. The first officials of the company were John Younkins, president; John Humphrey, vice-president; Charles A. Bailey, cashier, and the following directors: Daniel Younkins, Henry Miller, E. E. Abrams, Thomas Hays, Levi M. Wise, D. L. Cleeland, W. F.

Metzger, D. B. Campbell, C. N. Boyd, A. H. Sarver. In 1905, A. H. Sarver was elected vice-president to fill the vacancy caused by the death of John Humphrey, and John Henninger was elected to fill the vacancy on the board of directors. In 1903, C. A. Bailey resigned as cashier to accept a position with another banking institution and E. W. Bingham was promoted to cashier. In 1906, James F. Hutzler was elected cashier to succeed Mr. Bingham, who had resigned, and R. W. Dixon was promoted to the position of assistant cashier. With the exceptions of the change in the vice-presidency and in the board of directors above mentioned, the officials of the bank are the same as when it was first organized. The officers in 1908 are John Younkens, president, A. H. Sarver, vice-president, James F. Hutzler, cashier, R. W. Dixon, assistant cashier, A. R. Williams, teller, C. B. McMillen, book-keeper, and Robert P. Scott, clerk. This institution has always conducted a safe and conservative business, and has won a leading rank among the financial institutions of western Pennsylvania. The following statement of the condition of the bank was made September 23d, 1908.

RESOURCES.
Loans and discounts.....	$453,081.97
United States bonds.....	104,000.00
Banking House and other real estate.....	24,952.62
United States treasurer.....	5,000.00
Cash and due from banks.....	221,757.53
	<hr/>
	$808,792.12
LIABILITIES.
Capital.....	$100,000.00
Surplus and profits.....	86,423.90
Circulation.....	100,000.00
Deposits.....	522,368.22
	<hr/>
	$808,792.12

GUARANTY SAFE DEPOSIT AND TRUST COMPANY.

The pioneer trust company in Butler County is the Guaranty Safe Deposit & Trust Company of Butler, which began business in Butler July 1, 1903. The promoters of the company were A. E. Reiber,

J. V. Ritts, Daniel Younkens, and W. D. Brandon, all of Butler. A. E. Reiber was president of the first organization and W. D. Brandon, secretary. A charter was granted by the State department on the 19th of April, 1901, and the company opened offices in the old Park Theatre building on East Diamond Street. George C. Stewart succeeded W. D. Brandon as secretary and treasurer, and Wayne Walker was chosen for the position of book-keeper. On September 15, 1902, the capital stock of the company was increased from $125,000.00 to $250,000.00. The company purchased the business block owned by J. F. Balph on South Main Street, and had it remodeled and fitted for a banking house. The building is equipped in modern style, provided with metal furniture, and in all respects is one of the most complete buildings of its kind in western Pennsylvania. The doors were opened for business on July 1, 1903, and the company has continued to conduct a general banking business, savings department, trust department, and real estate department. The officials of the company are A. E. Reiber, president; W. D. Brandon, first vice-president; W. G. Douthett, second vice-president; George C. Stewart, secretary; T. M. Baker, treasurer; Wayne Walker, assistant treasurer; W. F. Rumberger, manager of the real estate department; Plummer Beighley and Nettie Frazier, clerks. The official board of directors are A. E. Reiber, W. G. Douthett, J. V. Ritts, A. L. Reiber, William Watson, W. D. Brandon, T. M. Baker, George A. Schaffner, W. H. Larkin, Daniel Younkens, and George C. Stewart. The company has been successful from the start and has won a leading rank among the institutions of its kind in western Pennsylvania. It has paid 6 per cent. dividends on its capital stock from the first year, and its last statement of resources and liabilities shows a capital of $250,000.00, surplus and profits amounting to $123,792.49; deposits of $505,406.81; and investments of $80,000.00. The trust department shows trust funds held to the amount of $181,487.40, and the corporate trusts amount to $2,437,000.00. Among the institutions financed by this company is the T. W. Phillips Oil and Gas Company for $1,500,000.00.

The first treasurer of the company was Louis Berg, who resigned July 1, 1904, and was succeeded by T. M. Baker, who is the present treasurer.

THE STANDARD TRUST COMPANY.

During the early part of 1903 a number of Pittsburg promoters who had real estate interests in Butler organized The Standard Trust Company, and applied for a state charter, with the following named officers: C. D. Greenlee, formerly of Butler, president, W. D. Wiley, of Pittsburg, vice-president, and Charles A. Bailey, of Butler, secretary and cashier. These officers with J. A. Langfit, and R. W. Hervey, of Pittsburg, composed the board of directors. The capital stock was $150,000.00 and the stockholders comprised a number of Butler citizens as well as Pittsburg capitalists. The company secured quarters in the Wm. A. Forquer building on South Main Street, and began business in May, 1903, and continued to do a general banking and trust business until March 23d, 1904, when it was closed. Harry A. Stauffer of Butler was appointed temporary receiver, and on the 31st of March he was continued as a permanent receiver. Mr. Stauffer made a record never before equalled in the state in closing up the affairs of the company. In four months' time he had collected all the assets of the company, and inside of nine months from the date of the appointment of the receiver, all the depositors and other creditors were paid in full with interest. Mr. Stauffer applied for his discharge as receiver in March, 1905, but at the solicitation of some of the stockholders, who were dissatisfied with the way the directors had managed the affairs of the company, the court continued Mr. Stauffer as receiver, and he is still holding that position. Suits were instituted in court by the receiver at the instance of the dissatisfied stockholders against the directors of the company, and some of these suits are still pending.

HARRISVILLE.

The First National Bank of Harrisville was organized and began business in 1903, with a capital stock of $25,000.00. The officers of the company are Robert L. Brown, president; Dr. W. B. Campbell, vice-president; and J. M. Elrick, cashier. The board of directors including the above officers are E. E. Wick, J. H. Morrison, E. W. Humphrey, W. W. McConnell, T. V. Porter, and J. V. Ritts. The company has transacted a safe and conservative business, and is one of the prosperous country banks. Its statement issued at the first of the year shows a surplus of $20,890.27, deposits amounting to $2,520,646.70, and loans, bonds and securities amounting to $200,000.00.

ZELIENOPLE.

The First National Bank of Zelicenople is the successor to the private bank established by M. Dambach & Son in 1881. The Dambach bank was succeeded by Amos Lusk & Son, and they in turn by Lusk & Gelbach in 1887, and in 1888 the business was conducted by Gelbach Brothers. The First National Bank which took over the business of Gelbach Brothers was organized in 1902, with the following officers and official board of directors: J. A. Gelbach, president; Edwin Meeder, vice-president; W. H. Gelbach, cashier; H. Klossenstein, assistant cashier; Josie E. Gelbach, bookkeeper. The directors were A. Sitler, C. S. Passavant, P. D. Gelbach, J. A. Fraenheim, H. M. Wise, S. O. Wright, and C. B. Harper. In 1904 the company erected a handsome brick block on Main Street, in which they have a banking room that is complete in all its equipments, and which is a credit to the enterprise of the directors and an ornament to the town. The bank is one of the conservative and well conducted financial institutions of the county, and has made an excellent record. It has paid four per cent. dividends semi-annually since its organization, and its surplus at the close of 1907 was $22,000.00. Ira S. Ziegler succeeded J. A. Gelbach as president. He has recently been succeeded in that office by H. M. Wise, with Fred Zehner, C. S. Passavant, and C. B. Harper, vice presidents; W. H. Gelbach, cashier; and H. Kloffenstein, assistant cashier.

Believing that there was a field for a second banking institution in Zelenople, a number of business men organized the People's National Bank in 1904, with the following officers and directors: C. J. D. Strohecker, president; W. J. Lamberton, vice-president; A. B. Crawford, cashier; and E. P. Young, assistant cashier; J. S. McNally, W. C. McKee, William Eicholtz, N. B. Duncan, J. G. Lamberton, A. Seaton, A. B. Crawford, J. H. Shiever, directors. The institution is capitalized at $50,000.00 and its statement in 1908 showed handsome earnings and a surplus of $6,000.00. The men at the head of the institution are among the progressive and enterprising element of the Connoquenessing Valley, and the People's National Bank has a bright outlook for the future. The present officers are C. J. D. Strohecker, president; W. J. Lamberton, vice-president; A. B. Crawford, cashier; and E. P. Young, assistant cashier.

SLIPPERY ROCK.

The Citizens' National Bank of Slippery Rock was organized in 1904 with a capital of $25,000.00. The officers are William Humphrey, president; B. Pearson, vice-president; and H. R. Smith, cashier. This bank is doing a good business and is one of the progressive financial institutions of the county.

The First National Bank of Slippery Rock is the successor to the private bank of W. Henry Wilson, which was established in 1887. The First National was organized in the latter part of 1902, and began business January 1, 1903. The officers and directors are W. Henry Wilson, president; J. E. Bard, vice-president; J. A. Aiken, cashier; Ray P. Wilson, assistant cashier; and the directors are, J. E. Bard, J. V. Ritts, J. A. Gelbach, W. Henry Wilson, and John Aiken. The capital of the company is $25,000.00, and the statements published in 1908 show a surplus of $15,000.00.

MARS.

The Mars National Bank was organized and began business November 7, 1900. S. J. Irvine of Evans City was one of the promoters, and the first president of this bank. The officers of the bank are Christ Gelbach, president; J. E. Hosack, vice-president; E. P. Sutton, cashier; and the following directors: L. H. Hamilton, William Fowler, P. D. Gelbach, and H. W. Sutton. The bank is capitalized at $25,000.00 and has paid six per cent. dividend since the first year. The financial statements published in 1908 show that the institution has a surplus of $27,000.00; deposits of $243,000.00; cash on hand, $42,000.00; and loans, bonds and securities amounting to $259,000.00. It is one of the staple institutions of the southern part of the county and is making an excellent record.

BRUIN.

The town of Martinsburg or Bruin was without banking facilities until 1908, when the First National Bank was organized and opened its doors for business the 1st of January. The officers of the institution are, J. F. Shiever, president; C. M. Myers, vice-president; and M. M. Lockwood, cashier.

LYNDORA.

The Lyndora National Bank was organized and began business in 1907 at Lyndora with a capital of $25,000.00. The officers are Frank X. Kohler, president; O. K. Waldron, vice-president; and Elias Ritts, cashier. This bank is doing a prosperous business in the little steel town just outside of Butler Borough, and at the close of 1908 had adopted plans for a handsome brick and stone banking house, which will be erected early in the coming years. The board of directors is composed of O. K. Waldron, I. G. Smith, J. V. Ritts, F. X. Kohler, Andrew Christianson, and W. J. McKee.

EVANS CITY.

The Citizens' National Bank of Evans City was organized in 1897 with a capital of $50,000.00 and is the successor of the private banking establishment of Jacob Dambach and Son, which was established in 1880. Jacob Dambach, who was the pioneer banker of the town, opened an office about the year above mentioned and about two or three years thereafter formed a partnership with his son Edward and John Rohner. This partnership lasted until 1894, when they with some others took out a charter for a state bank and called it "The Citizens' Bank of Evansburg." The officers of this bank were Edward Dambach, president, and John Rohner, cashier. Mr. Rohner died in 1897 and S. J. Irvine, who had been employed by Edward Dambach at his planing mill in Evans City as office man, was elected cashier. Mr. Edward Dambach's health failed, and he died in California, May 25, 1905.

On the 3d of September, 1907, the bank surrendered its charter as a state bank and entered the national system by conversion and took the title of "The Citizens' National Bank" of Evans City. The officers of the institution are Dr. J. M. List, president; Dr. H. M. Wilson, vice-president; S. J. Irvine, cashier; and C. H.

Behm, assistant cashier. The board of directors are Dr. J. M. List, Dr. H. M. Wilson, Jacob Dambach, P. D. Gelbach, J. D. Fowler, L. N. Burry, and S. J. Irvine. The financial statement published in September, 1908, shows a capital of $50,000.00; circulation and undivided profits, $47,604.00; circulation, $25,000.00; and deposits amounting to $238,296.00.

Jacob Dambach, the pioneer in the banking business in the southern part of the county, still lives in Cranberry Township, and although past eighty years of age takes an active interest in the affairs of the bank, of which he is a director.

HARMONY.

The Harmony Savings Bank was incorporated in 1867, and organized a few months later, in 1868, with Alfred Pearce, president, R. H. Palmer, treasurer; George Beam, George Enslin, Henry Goehring, Joseph Schwartz, J. C. Scott, and the officials named, as directors. In 1877 Henry Goehring was elected president and George Beam treasurer. They, with Messrs. Pearce, Goehring, Enslin, Jacob Sleppy, David Ziegler, E. F. Winter, and J. C. Scott, were the directors. William Wilson presided in 1882, with H. M. Wise, cashier, who held the office from 1878 to 1884. Ira Stauffer, Abraham Stauffer, and Alexander Stewart served on the board of directors subsequent to 1884, while Henry Goehring served as president of the institution.

The Harmony National Bank was organized in 1876, with W. H. H. Riddle of Butler, president, and H. J. Mitchell, cashier. John Dindinger was one of the promoters of this bank, and for a long time the principal stockholders and directors were Butler men. Edward Mellon was elected president of the bank in 1882, and a few years later the institution closed its doors and quit business.

The last banking enterprise promoted in Harmony was The Commercial Bank es- published by S. E. Niece, March 1, 1892. Mr. Niece was one of the early oil operators in Harmony and well known in banking circles, and the new bank was established for the accommodation of the oil operator and the business men of the community, but it only lasted for a brief period.

PROSPECT.

The Prospect Savings Bank was open for business May 1, 1874. David Marshall was president and J. M. Leighner, cashier. The directors were David Marshall, George Beam, John Enslin, William Dick, William R. Riddle, John Martineourt, and Joseph Allen. They carried on the institution for a number of years, when J. M. Leighner became the sole owner and conducted it as a private bank. He was succeeded in 1893 by J. H. McClure, who is the present proprietor.

MILLERSTOWN.

The Millerstown Savings Bank Association was organized June 6, 1873, with Charles Duffy, president, G. W. Stoughton, vice-president, J. C. Scott, cashier, and the following directors: Andrew Barnhart, Martin Hoch, Henry L. Westerman, Charles McCandless, John M. Thompson, and W. G. Stoughton. The stockholders were the foregoing officers and Andrew Barnhart, Jacob and Henry Frederick, W. H. Riddle, John G. Myers, B. B. Seibert and G. F. Fetzer. During the year 1874, John Walker was appointed cashier, and he held that position until the German National Bank was established.

In 1875 the Savings Bank Association was reorganized under a charter dated May 1 of that year, and the new organization was given the title of "The German National Bank." In the busy oil days of the Millerstown field, the weekly deposits of this bank averaged three hundred thousand dollars, and the institution became famous throughout the State and well known in American banking circles. Charles J. Westerman was the first teller, holding the position until 1880, when Henry J. Myers succeeded him. Myers was promoted to cashier and when the bank went into voluntary liquidation in 1885, he was appointed liquidating officer by the National bank commission.

The Millerstown Deposit Bank was organized in 1887 by John G. and Henry J. Myers, with the latter as cashier, and Charles L. Myers, teller. It is the successor of the old Savings Bank, and until 1907 was the only banking institution in the northeastern part of Butler County. It is conducted as a private bank, and does a good and safe business.

The Butler County Bank was organized at Millerstown in 1873, with John Satterfield as president, George G. Stiles, cashier, and H. J. Hoyt, teller, under the firm name of H. L. Taylor & Company. Six years later H. J. Hoyt took the place of Stiles as cashier, and E. C. Evans, who died in April, 1894, was appointed teller. In 1880, Patrick and Thomas Dorsey, H. J. Hoyt, and others, purchased the interest of H. L. Taylor & Company, and on August 1st of that year assumed control with Thomas Dorsey, president, H. J. Hoyt, cashier, and C. A. Bailey, teller. With the stockholders named were Hon. Joseph Hartman, A. H. Simpson, and Owen Brady. The bank was quite prosperous for several years, and finally H. J. Hoyt purchased all the stock and became sole proprietor. He conducted the business until January 29, 1892, when he assigned it to Francis Murphy, and the business was suspended. John Satterfield, who was the first president of this bank, was a member of the firm of Satterfield & Taylor, who were prominent oil operators in the Millerstown field in the seventies. He died in Paris, France, in April, 1894.

The Fairview Deposit and Savings Bank was established in August, 1872, by Ralston, McQuade & Company, to transact a general banking and exchange business. The firm had also an office at Karns City and transacted business at both places for some time, with D. A. Ralston, president, and R. W. McKee, cashier. During the busy days of the oil excitement about Karns City and Fairview, the bank did a good business, but later it met with financial reverses, and on March 15, 1882, the concern closed its doors, leaving nominal assets and liabilities aggregating $225,000.00, which represented the savings of a thousand people, and the capital of many oil operators and merchants.

PETROLIA.

The Argyle Savings Bank was an institution established August 22, 1872, at Petrolia. The company completed an office building at Petrolia in 1873, and for several years transacted a large business with H. A. Taylor as president and E. A. Taylor as cashier. The firm transferred its interest to a new company in the latter part of the seventies, under whose management the institution suspended.

CHAPTER XIII

THE PRESS

Newspapers and Editors of the Past and of the Present.

Journalism had its inception in western Pennsylvania July 29, 1786, when John Scull founded The Pittsburg Gazette, which was the first newspaper published west of the Allegheny Mountains. Butler County had not then been organized and there were no settlers within its limits. North of Pittsburg the first newspaper enterprise was the Crawford County Weekly Messenger, published at Meadville, in 1805, and this was followed three years later by The Mirror at Erie, which was founded by George Wyeth. The Western Press was founded in 1811 at Mercer by Jacob Herrington, and it probably had some circulation in the northern part of Butler County. After a checkered career of almost one hundred years, the Press is still in existence, and is one of the leading weekly papers of Mercer County. Its present editor is Captain Whistler, who is one of the well-known journalists of western Pennsylvania.

The pioneer newspaper of Butler County—the Butler Palladium and Republican Star—was issued in 1818. Previous to this time the transactions of the county commissioners show that Butler County depended on Pittsburg for enlightenment on current events and political information, and that all the legal notices of the county were published in the Pittsburg papers.

Journalism in the early days was a precarious way of earning a living and a thorny path to public favor. The men who entered the profession did so from the love of it and a strong adherence to principles for party, and they usually impressed their individuality on the journals they published. Thus it happened that the patrons of the old time weekly newspaper often subscribed for it because it was "Uncle Jake's" paper, or Tom Robinson's paper, or Clark Wilson's journal, and they wanted to know what these particular editors had to say on the political questions of the day, whether they belonged to the same party or not. Some of the pioneer editors and those who came on the scene fifty years later, are worthy of special mention in this chapter. John Galbraith, who was the pioneer editor of the county, afterwards gave his attention to the law, and at the time of his death in 1860, was president judge of the courts of Erie County.

Joseph Buffington, who was associated with William Stewart in the publishing of the Sentinel in 1824, afterwards removed to Kittanning, became a prominent lawyer, and filled the position of judge of the court in that district. George W. Smith, who was a lawyer of local reputation in 1830, was associated with Parker C. Purviance in the publishing of the Sentinel, and afterwards went to Kansas where he took an important part in the political affairs of that state.

James W. Thompson, who learned the printer's trade and was the first printer's devil in the office of the old Butler Palladium in 1818, afterwards became chief justice of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania.

Jacob Ziegler entered the office of the old Democratic Herald as printer's devil in September, 1831, and from that time until his death in 1888 he was identified with the publication of the Herald as printer, editor and manager, with the exception of a few years that he was engaged in public duties. Mr. Ziegler was born in Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, September 19, 1813, son of George and Gertrude Elizabeth Ziegler. Subsequently the family removed to a farm some three miles from Gettysburg, where he assisted his parents in the work on the farm. Finding agricultural pursuit ungenial, he concluded to seek his fortune elsewhere, and leaving home without his parents' knowledge, and with a capital of but $1.12 in his pocket, he went to Gettysburg, thence to Pittsburg, and from the latter city came to Butler, traveling the whole distance afoot, and living on the scantiest of fare during the journey. He arrived at William Beatty's Tavern on Main Street, on the evening of August 21, 1831, with only twelve cents of his capital left. William Beatty, the proprietor of the hotel, became interested in the young traveler, and after learning the circumstances, gave him his supper and a night's lodging. During the evening he met David Agnew, an old school-mate, and the following day he took up his abode at Mr. Agnew's home. About a month later he entered the Repository office for the purpose of learning the printer's trade. James McGlaughlin, one of the editors, asked him to take the place just made vacant by the death of his former apprentice, Neil McBride, and in his personal biography Mr. Ziegler says: "I agreed to do so on condition that I was to eat at the same table with the family. He said, 'Certainly, but I would find the victuals d——n poor.'"

He remained faithful to his agreement, served his full time, and continued to work in the office as a journeyman. About this time his parents learned of his whereabouts, and came to see him. His father was so well pleased with the record that the young man had made, that he purchased an interest for him in the office. In May, 1842, he became a partner of McGlaughlin and established The Democratic Herald, which was the successor of the old Repository, and which in later years became widely known as Ziegler's Herald.

In the meantime Mr. Ziegler became prominent in public affairs, and began to wield a great influence in the councils of the Democratic party. From 1835 to 1838 he served as clerk of the board of county commissioners, and in the latter year he was appointed prothonotary by Governor Porter. The office of prothonotary becoming elective in that year he was elected his own successor at the October election, and served for three years. During this period he had studied law under Hon. John Bredin, and was admitted to the bar April 18, 1836. He practiced for a few years, after his admission, but soon gave up the law for his chosen profession of journalism and politics. In 1843 he was chosen transcribing clerk of the state senate, serving in that capacity for two years, and afterward was chosen assistant clerk of the same body for one year. In 1847 he was elected a member of the legislature, served one term, and was then appointed a clerk in the pension department at Washington, D. C. Civil service had not then been established in the departments in Washington, and when General Taylor became president, Mr. Ziegler's head was one of the first that fell under the official ax. He returned to Pennsylvania and in the spring of 1849 joined the Argonauts, and went to California where he spent fourteen months in the mines of the Golden State. Returning to Pennsylvania in 1851 he was appointed chief clerk in the office of the secretary of the commonwealth, and served in that capacity during the administration of Governor Bigler. He was appointed assistant clerk in the House of Representatives in 1857, and served as chief clerk from 1850 to 1860. In 1861 he was again elected chief clerk of the Senate and served one term. While acting as chief clerk of the House Mr. Ziegler wrote a book on Parliamentary Law, which embraced the rules and laws governing the general assembly and various other matters of interest. This work became known as "Ziegler's Manual" and was the foundation of what is now "Simml's Legislative Hand Book." He was a recognized authority on parliamentary law and few men of his time possessed so thorough knowledge of the rules governing legislative bodies.

It may not be generally known that Mr. Ziegler was the originator of the Credit Mobilier, and that from his fertile brain sprung the plan to raise funds for the construction of the Union Pacific Railroad. So wide was Mr. Ziegler's reputation for some years succeeding the rebellion that the New York Herald once mentioned his name among the prospective presidential candidates. He was again elected to the legislature in 1882 and was the recognized leader of the Democratic party in the House. Mr. Ziegler was a fluent and forcible speaker, a celebrated story teller, and the life of every political and social gathering. For fifty years he was connected in various ways with the public life of the community and state and had acquired a knowledge and acquaintance with the leading men in state and national politics that gave him a reputation that was almost international.

His title of captain was derived from his connection with the DeKalb Grays, a celebrated military company of Butler County prior to the Rebellion. He organized, equipped and drilled this company and was its leading spirit during its existence. When Fort Sumter was fired on, Captain Ziegler took a firm stand in the defence of the Union and became a voluntary recruiting officer in raising men for the service and did all in his power to assist the government during the four long years of civil strife. Upon his return to Butler he served as Burgess several terms and also in the borough council. In 1867 Captain Ziegler became the owner of the Herald and took his son Alfred G. Ziegler into partnership. He continued as editor and publisher to the time of his death, which occurred at Butler June 19, 1888, in the seventy-fifth year of his age. As a distinguished mark of respect, all places of business in Butler were closed during the funeral, and the whole town assumed an appearance of mourning. His sterling character endeared him most to those who knew him best, while the affectionate and familiar title of "Uncle Jake" given to him by young and old alike was but another tribute to his kindness of heart and fatherly bearing from the people among whom he had lived for more than half a century.

Captain Ziegler was married June 30, 1835, to Sarah Brinker, a daughter of Capt. Abraham Brinker, a pioneer tavern-keeper of Butler, and later an honored resident of the Bonny Brook settlement in Summit Township, now East Butler. He and his wife were the parents of three sons and four daughters, namely: Amelia; George W.; Julia E.; Annie L., wife of W. A. Lowry; Mary A.; Alfred G.; and Henry. All are now dead excepting Mrs. Lowry, who resides in the old Ziegler homestead on East Diamond Street, and George W., who is a resident of California. The family were zealous members of St.

Peter's Protestant Episcopal Church and for many years Mr. Ziegler was a vestryman and warden in that society.

William Hazlett, who was a contemporary of "Uncle Jake" Ziegler, was one of the well known newspaper men of the county. He established the Butler County Whig in 1846 and in later years was connected with The Butler American and The Butler County Press. He was also prominent in local politics and was elected to the legislature in 1844 and to the state senate in 1849, and again in 1863.

Dr. D. H. B. Brower, who established the Record at Prospect in 1853, afterward removed to the eastern part of the state and engaged in newspaper enterprises and before his death had established twelve newspapers.

Rev. A. S. Thorne, who was principal of the West Sunbury Academy in 1872, established the Hem at Greece City, and a paper under the same name at Karns City during the oil excitement, and also established the Review at Millerstown. None of these enterprises were successful, and Rev. Thorne finally removed to Kansas where he became one of the pioneer publishers of that state.

Col. Sam. Young was one of the well known characters in the newspaper field in Butler County for more than a quarter of a century. He founded The Reporter at Fairview, in 1872, when Fairview was a booming oil town and subsequently went to East Brady where he established a paper and remained for a few years. His last newspaper work was at Zellenople where he established the News, which is now the leading weekly of the Connoquenessing Valley.

George N. Ifft is one of the Butler boys who has made good in the field of journalism in the present generation. He was born in Butler, received a preparatory education at Witherspoon Institute and subsequently entered college at Lancaster, Pennsylvania. After completing his college course he entered a university at Heidelberg, Germany, and took up the study of political science. He subsequently attended lectures on the same subject at Paris, France, after which he returned to America and engaged in newspaper work. He was employed as Washington correspondent of the Pittsburg Gazette for a time, and then went to the west where he became part owner and manager of the Times, an evening paper of Salt Lake City. He disposed of his interests in Salt Lake City and removed to Pocatello, Idaho, where he became owner and editor of a tri-weekly paper, which he published until about 1903. While in the latter place he became identified with the political interests of Senator Duboise and later took a prominent part in the Republican politics of that state. About this time he received an appointment to the consular service, and was sent to Canada and later to Germany, where he is now residing.

The Butler Palladium and Republican Star was the pioneer paper of the town and county and was first issued August 17, 1818, by John Galbraith. Old copies of this journal still in existence show it to have been a four-page folio of four columns to the page. The local news is confined almost exclusively to the advertising columns and the foreign news is from a month to six weeks old. The subscription rate per annum was $2 in advance, or $2.50 if paid within the year, and the advertising rate $1 per square for three insertions.

John Galbraith, the founder of the Palladium, was a son of John Galbraith, Sr., a native of Ireland, who served in the War of the Revolution as a soldier in the Pennsylvania line, under General Wayne. The family came to Butler County in 1796, where the sons, John, Alexander W. and James, became well-known pioneers. The mother was a daughter of Matthew White, after whom Whitestown in this county is named, and brought from Huntington County a female slave who became free before the emancipation act of Pennsylvania was passed, but remained with the Galbraith family until her death. John Galbraith read law with William Ayres, and was admitted to practice November 10, 1818. Having established the Palladium he devoted his attention to his newspaper until his removal to Franklin, Venango County, in 1819. He soon afterward married Amy Ayres, a daughter of Rev. Robert Ayres, an Episcopal minister of Franklin. He was elected to Congress in 1832, and reelected in 1834. Previous to his election to Congress he served four years in the state legislature, beginning in 1828. He removed to Erie in 1837, and in the following year was again elected to Congress from that district. In 1851 he was elected president judge of the Erie district, a position he held until his death, June 15, 1860.

The successor of the Palladium was the Butler Centinel, which was established in October, 1820, by Moses and John Sullivan, who were the editors and owners. This journal espoused the cause of the Federalist party, and in 1824 was intensely anti-Jacksonian. The editors of the Centinel adopted, as the motto of their journal the following phrase of Washington: "Watching with zealous anxiety for the preservation of your National Union, and discountenancing whatever may suggest even a suspicion that it can in any event be abandoned." The Sullivans who were prominent factors in the pioneer history of Butler County published the Centinel for about four years and made the journal a fair newspaper for the time and place. The Centinel was the same size as its predecessor, being a folio of four pages of four columns each and printed in old time small pica. The news was generally foreign and little attention was given to local matters.

William Stewart and Joseph Buffington bought the plant in the fall of 1824 and changed the name to Sentinel; they enlarged the paper and extended its line of news. Joseph Buffington retired from the firm on the 14th of April, 1826, and Stewart continued the publication. In his salutatory he says: "Taught from the cradle to revere those principles for which the fathers of the Revolution pledged their lives and sacred honors; educated where alone Republicanism in its purity is to be found, in the cabin; it need not nor will it be thought strange that my predilections are strongly in favor of the Democratic party."

In May, 1826, the office was moved to the house then occupied by Rev. Isaiah Niblock, formerly used as a printing office by John Sullivan, on the corner of Washington and West Streets. The prices which Stewart paid for type and printers' supplies in 1829 form an interesting comparison with the prices of the same material in 1908.

In 1830 Parker C. Purviance and George W. Smith purchased the Sentinel, cleared the office of all Democratic tendency, and being true Whigs gave battle without quarter to the Democrats. The Anti-Masonic movement which had been gathering some force throughout the country had reached Butler in February of 1830 and found Smith among its strongest advocates. The new editors of the Sentinel not only made their paper strongly Whig, but also fiercely opposed the Masonic order. The Sentinel finally discontinued publication in 1840.

The Repository. March 14, 1823, Maurice and John Bredin established a newspaper in Butler called The Repository. The publishers as Democratic Republicans claimed the right of expressing their opinion on public men and affairs, but declared that the columns of The Repository should be open to the opinions of all. The journal was issued every Friday at the rate of $2 per year. In size and make-up it compared with its contemporary, The Sentinel, and in addition to the usual European and Asiatic news, which occupied nearly two pages, a half a page or more was devoted to state politics. The spirit of rivalry and competition was at work even at that early date, as appears in the following editorial item under date of December 3, 1824:

"We have understood that Messrs. Stewart and Buffington, to whom the Butler Sentinel has been transferred, have enlarged their paper. Although the support that a new country like this can afford a newspaper will scarcely meet the expenses incident to the publication of a paper on a super-royal sheet, yet, being desirous that our readers shall have no reasonable cause of complaint, as to the size of our paper, we will make arrangements immediately for publishing The Repository on a larger sheet, and expect that in two or three weeks at farthest The Repository will appear in a new dress."

The promise was carried into effect on December 17, 1824, when four five-column pages printed in long primer were presented to its readers. With the exception of four advertisements and the announcement of the enlargement of the paper, the new issue did not contain a reference to Butler County affairs.

John Bredin was commissioned judge of the new Seventeenth Judicial District in 1831, and his retirement from journalism took place the previous year. Maurice Bredin also retired at the same time, and the office became the property of James McGlaughlin and John McClelland who appear to have carried on The Repository until June, 1835, when it bears the imprint of McGlaughlin and Ziegler. Shortly after David Shannon and John Little became owners and they carried on its publication down to May, 1842, when The Repository sunk its identity in the new Democratic Herald.

The Butler Herald. George W. Smith, who was a member of the bar and one of the publishers of The Sentinel, in July, 1829, issued the prospectus of a new paper to be called The Butler Herald. He proposed to make the new journal the organ of the anti-Masonic and anti-intemperance people of Butler, as well as of the colonizationists. The editor designed it as a semi-monthly periodical, then as a weekly, but seeing the two papers already in the field, he concluded to abandon his proposed enterprise.

The Freeman's Journal. In 1830 Peter Duffy proposed the publication of The Freeman's Journal, and issued a prospectus which appeared in the two local papers of the town under date of May 25 of that year. His object, or one of them, was to teach the dangers of class government, and he looked upon the opposition to the Masons as based largely upon selfish foundations. His newspaper project was not carried out as he concluded to use the columns of the two journals then published in Butler for the dissemination of his political ideas.

The Democratic Herald was founded in 1842 by James McGlaughlin and Jacob Ziegler, and was the successor to the old Repository established in 1823 by the Bredin brothers. McGlaughlin and Ziegler continued to publish the journal until November 19, 1845, when James McGlaughlin retired as a publisher and Samuel G. Purvis became associated with Jacob Ziegler in its management and issued his salutatory. On June 27, 1848, the names of Samuel G. Purvis and Joseph McMurtry appear as publishers, and so continued until February 3, 1849, when James McGlaughlin again became owner with Cornelius Coll as a partner. On January 12, 1850, the name of Andrew E. Marshall was substituted for that of McGlaughlin and the firm name was changed to Marshall & Coll. On March 15, 1851, Jacob Ziegler resumed his place as owner in the place of Coll and announced that "as long speeches are never read, we shall snap them short off by saying: We are Democratic in thought, word and deed, and shall endeavor to be as honorable to political opponents as their conduct deserves." In April of the same year the office was moved to the house formerly occupied by R. and J. Cunningham, on Main Street, where it was issued for some years. On the 5th of July, 1854, the editor charged that the Know Nothing journals were edited by foreigners and asserted that Know Nothingism was not a conviction but a pretense used conveniently by demagogues. The Whig suffered defeat and the editor stated that said party rarely, if ever, obtained victory, except by some kind of an "ism," or an unnatural and unhealthy excitement built on some "ism."

Another change took place in the management of the Herald on March 21, 1855, when Jacob Ziegler retired as editor and Joseph P. Patterson assumed the duties of that office. The new editor continued the policy of his predecessor, but his career as editor did not last long. On November 28 of the same year John N. Negley assumed control of the Herald and continued until July 3, 1858, when he retired and Samuel and John C. Coll became the editors and publishers. Under date of December 4, 1861, it was announced that the Herald would be mailed to the subscribers of the Butler Union, according to arrangements made with Mr. S. P. Irvine. In the issue of December 11, Mr. Irvine announced his retirement and the consolidation of the Butler Union with the Herald under the title The Union Herald. On the last given date the new title appeared at the head of the old Herald with the firm name of J. C. Coll & Company as publishers. In 1867 Jacob Ziegler again became editor and publisher of the paper and with his son Alfred G. Ziegler purchased the plant from Coll & Company. In 1872 and 1873 the paper was called Ziegler's Democratic Herald, but this title was soon changed to the original name, The Democratic Herald.

Mr. Ziegler continued to publish the Herald from 1867 up to his death in May, 1888. During that time the paper enjoyed a fair share of prosperity and its pages bore the imprint of the originality of its editor. After his death Judge Bredin and Stephen Cummings, the administrators of the estate, were the actual managers of the paper until October 26, 1888, when the office was sold to William G. Ziegler, a nephew of "Uncle Jake," and James A. McKee, who were its editors and publishers until June, 1889. Messrs. Ziegler and McKee sold the office to P. A. Rattigan & Sons, of Millerstown, who combined The Democratic Herald and The Millerstown Herald and removed the plant of the latter paper to Butler. Soon after this change was made the title of the paper was changed to The Butler Herald. P. A. Rattigan, who was the editor and senior member of the firm, died on the 25th of January, 1901, and since that time the paper has been published by P. A. Rattigan's sons, Harry T. Rattigan and W. J. Rattigan. The paper continues to be the organ of the Democratic party of the county and enjoys a fair share of patronage. Since Jacob Ziegler's time the office has experienced four removals, first from the old Beatty Hotel building on Main Street, now the present site of J. G. & W. Campbell building, to the frame building at the rear of Troutman's store, formerly the postoffice kept by Thomas White; and again in August, 1893, to the brick Democratic Herald building on West Cunningham Street, in rear of Troutman's store. In 1901 the office was removed to a frame building on East Cunningham Street in the rear of the old Heineman store building, and again in 1905 to its present quarters on the second floor of the Geis building adjoining the Majestic Theatre.

The Butler County Whig. William Hazlett revived the old Sentinel in 1846, and under date of June 24, issued The Butler County Whig as its successor. The Whig was opposed to Know Nothingism and to secret and oath bound societies. October 10, 1850, J. L. Bredin became associate publisher and editor, and this partnership was continued until August 25, 1852. In April, 1855, Mr. Hazlett sold the Whig to William B. Lemmon and the paper eventually lost its identity in The Butler American.

The Butler American. The new editor of the Whig appeared to have different opinions from Mr. Hazlett, for he had no sooner purchased the Whig when in April, 1855, he bought The Star Spangled Banner, the organ of the Know Nothing party, from Johnston, its publisher. The title of the Whig had been changed to The Butler American and the two papers were consolidated under the title The Butler American and Star of Liberty, and Mr. Lemmon declared the combination ready to espouse Know Nothingism in any shape. Edwin Lyon became part owner in 1859, and in 1861 Mr. Hazlett again got control of the paper and was its editor and publisher. Hazlett continued to publish the American up to October, 1865, when the plant was purchased by Thomas Robinson, and the material removed to the office of the Citizen. Two years after disposing of the American, Mr. Hazlett established the Butler County Press, and continued its publication until the spring of 1869, when he sold it to John H. Negley, and retired permanently from the newspaper field.

The Star Spangled Banner was a small paper published in 1853 to 1855 by a man named Johnston, and was known for the viciousness of its editorials and the misstatements of its news columns. As a "yellow journal" it would compare with some of the later day productions about which there is so much complaint. The Butler American and Star of Liberty was much the same kind of a sheet while under the control of W. B. Lemmon.

The Butler Union was suggested late in 1860 by Samuel P. Irvine, who was the editor and publisher of the paper until December 11, 1861, when the Union was merged into the Democratic Herald, and the title changed to The Union Herald. The Union Herald was published by J. C. Coll & Company, and on January 21, 1863, its volume number was 21, and issue number 29, showing it to be The Democratic Herald of 1842 under a new name. Clark Wilson was then the editor and publisher.

The American Citizen was established by Thomas Robinson and Maj. Cyrus E. Anderson and issued December 9, 1863. Owing to his duties in the provost marshal's office requiring all his attention, Major Anderson retired in April, 1865, and Mr. Robinson assumed sole control. On October 11, 1865, William Hazlett closed his connection with the Butler American, and the office became the property of the American Citizen. Major Anderson again became owner and editor of the paper on December 12, 1866, when he purchased the interest of Mr. Robinson, and continued to publish the paper until April 14, 1869. On April 7, 1869, John H. Negley purchased the Citizen from Major Anderson, and in the following month he bought the office of the Butler County Press, which had been established by William Hazlett in 1867, and combined the two papers, as the Butler Citizen.

The Butler Citizen is the lineal descendant of the Centinel of 1820, and all the Federal, Whig, American and Republican newspapers published here prior to 1870. In its foundation are found the old Centinel, the Butler County Whig, the American Citizen, the Press, the Butler County American, and the Star Spangled Banner. Mr. Negley, the first owner and publisher of the paper purchased the plant of the American Citizen and that of the Butler County Press in 1867, and issued the two papers under the title of The Butler Citizen. In 1872 he took his son, William C. Negley, into the office as his partner, and the firm continued until 1888, when William C. Negley became sole owner. During its career of almost forty years the Citizen has been noticeable for its attention to pioneer matters such as deaths of old residents and historical notices. The office has experienced two or three changes in its location since first established, having been moved from the Reiber Building on Jefferson Street to the old Negley Building on Diamond Street, and again in 1901 to its present quarters in the building formerly occupied by the Eagle on Main Street. On the 1st of November, 1908, the plant, subscription list and good will of the Citizen was sold to A. M. Christley and L. E. Christley, who are the present owners, the latter being the editor and manager. The new firm erected a handsome brick building on South McKean Street to which the office was removed on the 1st of March, 1909. William C. Negley, who had been the previous owner for twenty years, retired from the newspaper business on the 1st of January.

Laurell E. Christley, editor of the Citizen, was born in Cherry Township, Butler County, October 31, 1872, and is the son of Thomas F. and Anna C. (Hill) Christley, both deceased. He was educated in the common schools of the county, at West Sunbury Academy, and at Slippery Rock State Normal School, and subsequently taught school in the county for several terms. During the summer of 1893 he was engaged in business in Chicago, and in 1894 he returned to Butler County and engaged in teaching in the public schools. He taught several terms at Callery Junction, was principal of the Mars schools for two years and held the same position in the Evans City schools for two terms. During the summer months he was employed by the American Book Company. He was elected clerk of courts in Butler County in the fall of 1905, and in 1906 was elected school director from the second ward of Butler borough, of which he is a resident. After the completion of his term as clerk of courts he was employed by the American Book Company until the fall of 1908, when he formed a partnership with his brother, A. M. Christley, and purchased the Butler Citizen.

Mr. Christley was married October 11,

1905, to Miss Effie M., daughter of George S. and Sarah M. Mason of Rocky Grove, Venango County. They attend the Methodist Episcopal Church of Butler, and take an active interest in the work of the different church societies. Mr. Christley is a member of the Odd Fellows and the Masonic Order, and of the Woodmen of the World. In politics he is a Republican, and for the past ten years has taken an active part in the affairs of his party in the town and county.

The Butler County Press was established by William Hazlett, August 14, 1867, and was carried on by him until its suspension in 1869. In the latter year the office was purchased by John H. Negley, as stated previously, and a short time afterward the publication ceased.

The Fair and Festival. The first daily paper issued in Butler was offered for sale December 26, 1868, and continued publication until January 14, 1869. The paper was called The Fair and Festival, and was suggested by Maj. J. B. Butler for benevolent purposes. Though only a one-column daily, it showed the editorial, advertisement, and news division of a modern journal. The little paper was devoted entirely to the interests of the Ladies' Fair and Festival which was being held that winter for the benefit of St. Paul's Catholic Church. Major Butler, with whom the idea originated, was the editor of the paper. He died in 1893, and his remains rest in the Catholic Cemetery north of the city.

The Northwestern Independent was a monthly paper edited by Clark Wilson, the first number of which appeared in July, 1869. The life of the Independent was brief, and it appears that the editor abandoned his enterprise in Butler in the latter part of the year to establish the Oil Man's Journal at Parker.

The Butler Eagle. In 1870 a company was organized the leading spirit of which was Thomas Robinson, with the object of providing the county with a newspaper which would expound the ideas of the soldier or military element of the Republican party and inculcate lessons of patriotism from their point of view. The directors of the company were Walter L. Graham president, Hugh Morrison, F. M. Eastman, J. B. Clark and Cyrus E. Anderson, all veterans of the Civil War. The Eagle was established in February, 1870, and was issued at first from the old George W. Smith building on the corner of the Diamond on the site of the Y. M. C. A. building. The editorial staff consisted of Thomas Robinson, political editor; John M. Greer, local editor; Edwin Lyon, agricultural editor; and Frank M. Eastman, business manager. Owing to differences of opinion Mr. Robinson resigned and Hugh Morrison and J. B. Clark were appointed his successors. Changes in the management did not prove satisfactory, and in 1871 the company disposed of the office to Mr. Robinson, who became the sole owner. Mr. Robinson continued to edit and manage the paper until January 1, 1879, when he disposed of his interests to his son, Eli D. Robinson, who had been associate editor for some time previous. In February, 1881, James M. Carson purchased an interest in the plant and assumed the position of associate editor, and in 1885 the quarters of the paper were changed from the old George Smith building on Diamond Street to the brick building on Main Street, now occupied by the Citizen. Under the new management the Eagle prospered financially and took a leading rank among the country newspapers of western Pennsylvania. Prof. P. S. Bancroft held a position in the local department of this paper from March, 1888, to October, 1889. In February, 1895, Mr. Robinson purchased the interest of Mr. Carson and again became sole proprietor. The same year George W. Shiever, who had previously been foreman of the printing-room, purchased an interest in the paper and became associate editor, filling that position until May, 1902.

The Daily Eagle, an evening paper, was established in May, 1902, by Robinson & Shiever, who were then owners of the Weekly Eagle, and it was issued from the brick building on East Cunningham Street, to which the plant had been removed the previous year. Shortly after the Daily Eagle was established, George W. Shiever disposed of his interests in the daily and weekly Eagle to Mr. Robinson, who continued as sole proprietor until the 29th of January, 1903, when The Butler County Observer was merged with the Eagle. At this time a stock company was organized and capitalized at $25,000, of which Eli D. Robinson was president, Raymond Locke, secretary, and Levi M. Wise, treasurer. These officers, with A. L. Weihe, and Bertha L. Wise, composed the board of directors. The company took over the plant of the daily and weekly Eagle, and the plant, subscription list, and good will of The Butler County Observer at Evans City. The publication of the Observer was discontinued, and the Weekly Eagle thus obtained the largest subscription list, with a few exceptions, of any country weekly paper in western Pennsylvania. On the 21st of October, 1903, Mr. Robinson disposed of his interest and stock in the plant to Levi M. Wise, who then became the principal owner, and the business is now carried on under the title of The Eagle Printing Company. The officials of the company were Levi M. Wise, president and treasurer; Bertha L. Wise, secretary, and Willis Briggs, managing editor. On the 1st of April, 1904, the plant was removed to the Wise Building on West Diamond Street, which has been enlarged and fitted up for a first-class printing office. About the 1st of January, 1907, George I. Woner succeeded Willis Briggs as managing editor, and Ben. Courtney was employed as local editor. The Daily Eagle is a seven-column eight-page paper, well printed and edited, and has a circulation of over four thousand, which is still increasing. The Weekly Eagle also has a large circulation, and occupies a leading rank among the Republican newspapers of western Pennsylvania.

The Oil Man's Journal. Clark Wilson, who was interested in a number of newspaper enterprises in Butler as editor and promoter, established the Oil Man's Journal at Parker in 1869. In November, 1872, his son, H. C. Wilson, was admitted as a partner in the business, and in January, 1877, the office was moved to Butler, where the journal was issued from the old office of the American Citizen on Jefferson Street, opposite the Hotel Lowry. While the journal was published in Butler, Clark Wilson was the editor and proprietor. Finding that the newspaper field in Butler was already well occupied, the publication of the journal was finally suspended, after an existence of a few years, which were full of trouble.

The Butler County Record, formerly the Petrolia Record, was founded October 27, 1877, at Petrolia by Charles E. Herr, who carried on a job printing establishment there. In April, 1878, the size was increased from the original folio of twenty columns to the folio of twenty-eight columns, and in every respect the Record was made worthy of the busy oil center which Petrolia then was. Among the reporters and associate editors employed on the paper at Petrolia were D. W. Moorehouse, now a preacher of the Gospel at Newburyport, Massachusetts; Dr. B. L. Davis, F. F. Herr, W. F. Jordan, and L. H. Patterson. On the 6th of June, 1888, the office was removed to Butler and the title of the paper changed to The Butler County Record. It was first issued from the building occupied by Colonel Thompson's law offices on Diamond Street, and when that building was torn down in 1902, to give way to the present Butler County National Bank Building, the Record office was removed to the old Park Theatre building on East Diamond Street. L. H. Patterson was associate editor for several years after the Record was established in Butler, and on October 1, 1889, Prof. B. S. Bancroft, formerly of the Witherspoon Institute, and later of the local department of the Eagle, was engaged as associate editor, a position he still holds. The office was burned out in the great fire of November 23, 1903, which destroyed the Park Theatre and a number of buildings on Main Street, and the entire plant was a total loss to its owner. With characteristic energy Mr. Herr went to work immediately after the fire, secured a new location in the Herald Building from W. G. Ziegler, on West Cunningham Street, purchased a new outfit and issued his paper with scarcely a week's delay. The form of the paper has been changed from an eight-column folio to a six-column quarto, and it is neatly printed and carefully edited.

The Times. The semi-monthly Times was established in September, 1881, by C. M. and W. J. Heineman as a magazine and was issued from the office in the Heineman Building until 1884. Two or three other little papers were published at intervals but never for any length of time.

The Daily Times, an evening paper, was founded April 14, 1884, by Charles M. and W. J. Heineman and W. G. Ziegler as The Times Publishing Company, the object being to furnish the public of Butler the cream of the daily news and the details of the oil field. The beginnings of the paper were small, but not to be despised. It was at first a four-page journal, neatly printed, each page being eleven by eight inches. On January 1, 1885, it was enlarged to eleven by fifteen inches and on August 3, 1885, it was again increased to twenty-two by fifteen inches, being a four-column folio. About the close of 1885 W. G. Ziegler sold his interest in the paper to the Heinemans, since which time the brothers have carried it on with good success. The size of the paper has been increased from time to time until it is a seven-column quarto, and the circulation has increased from less than five hundred in 1885 to three thousand in 1908.

The Weekly Times was established in August, 1884, as a seven-column four-page journal, and is now an eight-page paper of forty-eight columns. In 1894 a new two-story printing-office was erected on East Cunningham Street, which is thoroughly equipped with linotype machine, duplex printing-press, and all the equipments of a modern newspaper office. The job printing department of the office is also very complete, and the patronage large. In 1903 the Weekly Times was changed to a semi-weekly edition.

The Orphan's Friend is a periodical published in the interest of St. Paul's Orphan's Home, and is edited by the superintendent and the faculty of that institution. Its first editor was T. F. Stauffer, who was superintendent of the home previous to 1882, and he was succeeded by Rev. P. C. Prugh. The present editor is Rev. Leader.

The Tidings was a denominational paper published by Rev. J. Q. Waters of the English Lutheran Church and was issued in April, 1883. Its life was not of long duration and the publication was abandoned the same year.

The Magnet was a semi-monthly magazine published by the students of the Butler High School from 1892 to 1897.

EVANS CITY.

The record of newspaper enterprises in Evans City is that of a few years and much trouble. About 1895 John R. Young, who had previously been associated with his father, Col. Samuel Young, in the publication of the Comoqueenessing Valley News, at Zelenople, moved to Evans City, and founded the Evans City Times. The first editions of the paper were published in a magazine form, and showed considerable enterprise and originality in their make-up. The form of the publication was afterward changed to a six-column quarto with a patent inside. Young sold the plant to J. S. Spence, who in turn disposed of it to a stock company, of which the leading movers were J. C. Dight and H. W. Bame. History repeated itself in so far as the stock company was concerned, and in 1901 the plant was disposed of to Levi M. Wise of Butler, who became the sole owner, with A. L. Weibe as editor and manager. The title of the paper had been changed in 1900 to The Butler County Observer, and the publication was continued under that name until the plant was merged with the Butler Eagle in January, 1903. The Observer enjoyed a fair share of patronage during its existence, but the business of the community did not justify the owners of the paper in continuing it.

PROSPECT.

The history of journalism in Prospect is not a record of brilliant successes. The first newspaper published in the place was the Prospect Record, established in 1852 or 1853 by Dr. D. H. B. Brower, and edited by John S. Fairman. It was a good-sized paper, all printed at home and ably edited, but it expired after one year's existence, not from lack of patronage, but for want of good management.

The Mirror and News was issued at Prospect, September, 1854, by Spear and Fairman, in the form of a six-column folio. Like the pioneer venture, twelve months of "love's labor lost" convinced the editors that their hopes of establishing a newspaper were futile, and the publication was suspended.

Two years after the suspension of the Mirror and News a new paper was issued in Prospect called The Trump. It led a precarious existence for three months and went the way of its predecessors.

The Camp Meeting Register was a daily morning paper issued at Prospect in August, 1859, by John S. Fairman. It was a part and parcel of the great camp meeting which was organized there by Rev. Samuel Crouse, and the local preachers. There appears to have been no issue of the paper after August 26 of that year.

The last newspaper enterprise in Prospect grew up in the job printing office of S. B. Martincourt. It appeared in December, 1879, as a four-column eight-page paper, and was continued until the beginning of April, 1880. This paper was called The Prospect Leader. It became evident to the publisher after four or five months that the town would not support an enterprise of that kind and the enterprise was abandoned.

ZELIENOPLÉ.

The first newspaper published in the county outside of the borough of Butler was the Zelienople Recorder, published about 1847, which is said to have had a short and precarious existence.

In October, 1878, the late Col. Samuel and J. R. Young established the Connoquenessing Valley News, and in the salutatory the publishers promised that nothing of a sectarian or political character should occupy its columns, but that the purpose of the paper should be "to advance the varied local interests of the region and advocate every idea that is calculated to benefit them." On July 10, 1879, Samuel Young became sole proprietor and published the paper until his death which occurred March 27, 1891. Editor Young was a man of marked individuality of character and was known throughout the western part of Pennsylvania as "Colonel." After his death his son J. R. Young succeeded him as editor and proprietor until 1895 when he disposed of the plant to Ira Ziegler. Mr. Ziegler carried on the business for a number of years and then sold it to J. E. Kocher, who is the present editor and proprietor. The News continues to be an influential factor in the Connoquenessing valley and is one of the prosperous weekly papers in the county.

SLIPPERY ROCK.

The Centerville Casket was the title of a paper published in Slippery Rock for some time prior to August, 1879, and was edited by W. S. Fulkman, known as Stanley Fulkman, who afterward moved to Beaver, Pennsylvania, and established an office in that place. The career of this paper was short and uninteresting, and the last number was published on the 8th of August, 1879.

After the opening of the State Normal School at Slippery Rock the Signal was established by R. D. Young, February 12, 1892. He carried on the paper until the close of the summer of that year, when a stock company took charge, and Young went to New Castle where he engaged in the publication of the New Castle Courant. In January, 1894, Albert L. Weihe, formerly of the New Wilmington Globe, purchased the office and published the paper for about a year. R. C. McClymonds succeeded Weihe as editor of the paper, and in 1897 publication was suspended for want of patronage.

The Saxonburg Herald was first issued in 1888 by Paul F. Voigt, and was an eight-page weekly journal of forty-eight columns. The paper was not printed in the borough, but the local columns were usually well filled. Charles Hoffman was the local manager and reporter at Saxonburg, the main office of the paper being at Natrona. The discovery of the Saxonburg oil field and the consequent influx of people to that community led to the establishing of the Herald, and when the excitement died out the patronage of the paper fell off to such an extent that its publication was abandoned. About 1895 Albert L. Weihe, who had formerly published the Signal at Slippery Rock, made an attempt to revive the Herald at Saxonburg, but was unsuccessful.

PETROLIA AND VICINITY.

During the days of the oil excitement at Petrolia, Karns City and Fairview, no less than eight newspapers were established in a period of ten years—from 1872 to 1882. The first newspaper to enter the field was the Advertiser, which was published at Buena Vista in December, 1873, as a tri-weekly. Its editor was J. T. Springstead. Old newspaper men of Butler do not remember this paper, but yet it is on record and is recalled by the early operators of the Buena Vista oil field.

The Item was established at Greece City in March, 1873, and after a brief and tempestuous existence, went the way of that phantom oil town. The editor of the paper was Rev. A. S. Thorne, a Presbyterian preacher, and principal of West Sunbury Academy. W. W. McQuiston and Andrew Fitzsimmons of Butler were the typos and assisted him in the office. They called the place "Grease City," and said other disagreeable things about this extraordinary little oil town that did not make the paper or its editor many friends.

The Fairview Reporter was founded in 1872 by Col. Samuel Young and continued publication for about twelve months. The enterprise wasn't a success and Colonel Young suspended publication after about twelve months and sought a more promising field, finally locating in Zelienople. Among the aids of Colonel Young in the publishing of the Reporter was R. W. Criswell, who afterwards became a reporter for the Oil City Derrick and in later years became a humorous writer of national reputation and was employed on the leading papers of New York City.

The pioneer journal of Petrolia borough was the Advertiser, which was published by Lerch and Mapes in 1877 and antedated the Petrolia Record by a few months. The history of this journal was uneventful and its publication was soon abandoned.

In 1878 Lerch and Mapes established the Producers' Free Press as a journal wholly devoted to the interests of the Petrolia oil field. To insure the success of their second venture they engaged P. C. Boyle as editor, and while he edited the Free Press it met with a fair measure of success. Subsequently the owners made the way clear for The Record, finding the battle for precedent to be against them.

The first newspaper issued at Karns City was the Item. It may have been the same as that of Greece City with the title changed to suit Karns City, or vice versa. Publication ceased after a year.

The successor of the Item at Karns City was the Telephone, which was established in 1878 by Dr. J. Borland, and was regularly published until 1882, when the office was moved to Grove City, Mercer County.

The first paper published in the oil region in the interest of labor was Labor's Voice, which was founded at Martinsburg or Bruin in 1877, by Patrick C. Boyle. Boyle was born in Denegal County, Ireland, and came to the United States in 1846, settling with his parents at Brady's Bend in Armstrong County. He entered the Fifty-fourth Pennsylvania Volunteers in January, 1862, and re-enlisted in 1864. From 1868 to 1874 he was connected with wells and pipe lines in the Butler and Armstrong County fields and in the latter year entered the domain of journalism. Want of patronage caused the early demise of Labor's Voice, and Boyle was subsequently engaged as editor of the Producers' Free Press at Petrolia. Shortly after leaving Petrolia he became editor and manager of the Oil City Derrick at Oil City, and has become one of the best known journalists in the country.

MILLERSTOWN.

The Sand Pump was issued at Millers-town in August, 1873, by O. H. Jackson. The first number was a trial issue to learn how far the editor could depend on the oil men and business community for support in publishing a daily journal. The paper was issued regularly during the month of September, 1873, and at first met with some encouragement. It was an eight by ten inch sheet filed with news of the oil fields and advertisements. The people tired of it, however, in a little while, and The Sand Pump went the way of the oil field.

Rev. A. S. Thorne, who had attempted to establish a paper at Greece City and at Karns City, began the publication of the Millerstown Review in 1875. This paper was published with some degree of regularity until 1879, when Thorne removed to Atwood, Kansas.

The Millerstown Herald was founded by S. J. Small, in 1876. On May 19, 1877, he sold his interest in the paper and material to P. A. Rattigan, who made it a photograph of the oil field as well as a staunch supporter of the Democratic party. The Herald became a popular vehicle of news for the oil fields, and obtained a large circulation in the county. In June, 1899, Mr. Rattigan removed his plant to Butler, where he had purchased the Democratic Herald from Ziegler and McKee, and consolidated the two papers under the title of The Butler Herald. Shortly after the removal of the Herald another paper was started in Millerstown by R. C. McClymonds in the office formerly occupied by Mr. Rattigan. This plant was burned out January 25th, 1901.

A coincidence connected with the fire was the sudden death of P. A. Rattigan, its former owner, in Butler on the same day.

After the fire the paper was revived by R. C. McClymonds, who sold it to William R. Brown, the present owner and publisher. The new Herald is a neatly printed eight-page paper and its editor enjoys a liberal patronage from the community.

CHAPTER XIV

EDUCATION

The subject of education was one to which the pioneer settlers of this region could give but little attention, whatever degree of importance they may have attached to it. Doubtless there were among them here, and there, men possessing some degree of scholarship, but as in every new country, in its early stages of development, material wants take precedence over everything else, and the axe and the plow go before the spelling-book. Not that our forefathers were unmindful of the desirability of furnishing educational opportunities to their children. They yielded simply to necessity in at first subordinating the cultivation of the mind to the taming of the soil. As soon as a fair start had been made in the latter direction, and white settlements had begun to appear, scattered through the primeval forest, they installed the schoolmaster, who thenceforth became a man of influence in every community.

The latter's position at first was no sinecure. In most communities school was held only during what may be termed the winter months, or during that part of the year when there was comparatively little work to do on the farm. When the spring plowing began, not only the male pupils, many of whom were grown-up young men, but the teachers also, rolled up their sleeves, cast all thoughts of books aside and went forth into the fields to do battle with the soil; and thereafter there was little intermission in the regular routine of farm drudgery until well on in the fall when all the crops had been harvested and everything made snug for the coming winter.

The cost of supporting the early schools was usually met by a sort of regulated subscription of the patrons, each one contributing in amount according to the number of pupils he furnished to the school. These pupils, as already intimated, were in many cases grown-up young men and women, who thus sought to make up in some degree for their lack of earlier opportunities. It often happened that they were inclined to be unruly, and upon such occasions it took a firm will and wise judgment, and not infrequently a stalwart arm, to deal with them, especially with the older boys who found the restraint of the schoolroom irksome to them. For this reason physical prowess was considered a desirable and often indispensable qualification in a pedagogue, and it may be said that in this respect, at least, the pioneer schoolmasters were seldom found lacking. As to their ability to impart knowledge, much was not required of them. To be able to spell correctly, to know the arithmetic to the "single rule of three," and to write a good hand, were deemed sufficient in most districts. Writing was the accomplishment on which they chiefly prided themselves, and he who wrote a good hand was often taken to be educationally proficient without much further inquiry being made. Grammar did not come until later and was a study at first undertaken by few, while the ambitious pupil who wished to go beyond the rule of three in arithmetic had to tread the thorny path of higher mathematics alone. Some among the early teachers—especially the Scotch and Irish—were better educated, and as a rule all did their work well, as is sufficiently attested by the great statesmen, writers and orators of the middle of the nineteenth century, many or most of whom were graduates of the pioneer schoolhouse.

The first schoolhouses were rude log structures, very similar to those in which the majority of the settlers were then living. One end of the schoolhouse was almost entirely occupied by the huge chimney where great roaring wood fires were kept in the winter time. The best of these had a single horizontal row of panes of glass to serve for a window. Against the wall beneath this window, a long board supported by wooden pegs driven into the wall served as a desk for the older pupils who were learning to write. Schoolhouses of this form substantially continued to be used for many years until the region became more thickly settled, and a better grade of schoolhouses came into vogue. One of the latter, which flourished early in the fifties in a neighboring county, was thus described a few years ago by one who had learned in it his first lessons in reading and writing.

"It was built of hewed logs and contained three windows, each having eight small panes of glass. Instead of the huge fireplace, a coal stove stood in the middle of the room. The board for a desk still decorated three sides of the wall, and between these desks and the stove were three long low benches, on which the smaller scholars sat and very often roasted, especially if the weather was very cold. The chinks between the logs were filled with mud from the road, which had been thoroughly kneaded by horses and vehicles, and one of the tasks which the boys especially enjoyed was that of patching up the walls and filling the crevices, on some mild winter day, when the road had been thawed. The only ventilation in this room was caused by the accidental breaking of a window-pane, and as the schoolhouse was a long way from town, it usually happened that two or three such apertures were to be seen. In extremely cold weather these were sometimes stopped up with a hat or a piece of paper."

The school law of 1790 relating to subscription schools was first observed in the limits of Butler county about 1799 or 1800, when a school was opened south of Coyleville in Clearfield Township. This school was presided over by John Smith in 1807. Subscription schools were multiplied under the act of 1802, the people giving more than ordinary attention to making provision for the education of their children, and as early as 1810 this interest culminated in the establishment of an academy at Butler.

Under the provisions of an act passed on March 29, 1824, providing for the education of poor children, Robert Cunningham, a school teacher of Buffalo Township, petitioned the court in October, 1825, to appoint school men for that district. The petition stated that his action was made necessary by the number of poor children sent to him to be educated, and the non-existence of any authorized person to pay him for such service. The court thereupon appointed Francis Anderson, William Hesselgesser and Robert Elliott, school men. The transactions of the county commissioners show that at various times sums of money were paid in the different townships for the education of poor children under this act. The act of 1824 proved so beneficial generally that a desire was created among the people for laws giving greater educational advantages to the poor of the state, and led to a movement having for its purpose the passage of a common school law. With this object in view "an Association for the Promotion of Education" was organized in Philadelphia, which soon had branches in all parts of the state, one being organized in Butler County in 1827.

The common school system was adopted in Pennsylvania in 1834, but met with a strong opposition and was not willingly acquiesced in by many of the districts of Butler County until several years later, the people not being able or willing to see its many advantages over the old system. In October, 1834, public meetings were held to denounce the law, which was declared to be unjust and impolitic, it being asserted that the Constitution never intended that the education of other than the children of the poor should be at public expense. The landed interests were especially hostile to the new measure, because the principal burden of taxation necessary to carry its provisions into effect was borne by the land.

FIRST TAX LEVY.

The first tax levy under the new law for school purposes was made in 1835 and the amounts collected in each township were as follows: Butler Borough, $122.19; Butler Township, $108.14; Centre Township, $214.47; Slippery Rock, $191.84; Mercer, $69.77; Venango, $57.32; Parker, $103.37; Donegal, $128.43; Clearfield, 63.13; Buffalo, $106.15; Middlesex, $175.51; Cranberry, $123.52; Connoquenessing, $264.29; and Muddy Creek, $204.41. The total was $3,113.63.

Gradually, however, the people grew reconciled to the new law, and in 1854, twenty years after its adoption, there were in Butler County no less than 175 school buildings, most of them a decided improvement upon the log cabins of the subscription school days.

The committee appointed by the court in 1853 to re-district the county into townships found a number of objections urged in connection with the arrangement of the school districts, and in their report they quote from the report of the superintendent of common schools for the year ending June, 1852. The number of schoolhouses then in the county was found to be 225, and thirteen school districts were not yet provided for. Of the 225 schoolhouses, less than fifty had the conveniences requisite for school purposes, and the remainder were dilapidated, being mostly log buildings put up for temporary purposes immediately after the passage of the school law. The amount of tax levied for school purposes in the county at that time was $11,668.14, and the amount received from the state, $2,934.06. The average term of school in the county was five months. Under the new arrangement of townships the number of school districts was reduced to 132, and two years later the number of school houses reported in the county was 175. The report of Isaac Black, the first county superintendent of common schools, made in 1856, shows that there were 182 schoolhouses, eighty-four of which were unfit to enter. Forty-one could be made tolerable, and 57 were tolerable. Eighty of the buildings showed ceilings not over seven feet in height, seventy-nine were log structures, 108 were destitute of furniture (save the backless benches so high that the pupils' feet could not reach the floor), while only fourteen had suitable furniture. An era of school-house building followed, from 1854 to 1860, and many of the new schoolhouses were built in the shape of an octagon with benches and desks built in a circle around five sides of the room, and facing the center. The number of schools reported in January, 1861, was 212, and the number of pupils, 6,585. In 1872 Superintendent Glenn stated that of the 220 schools in operation in the county, not one failed in reaching the statutes standard. In 1875 modern furniture was provided in a few of the schools in the townships and in Butler Borough, and this matter was made the subject of a satisfactory report of Superintendent Young. In 1876 and 1877 there were 246 schools in existence which were open for an average of 5 65-100 months that year. There were 177 male and 175 female teachers employed, the average salary being $38.12 for the former, and $30.01 per month for the latter. The total number of pupils enrolled was 13,251, and the average attendance was 9,583, while the average cost per month was $0.70 per capita. The tax levied for school purposes and building purposes that year was $69,912.02, and the state appropriation, $11,829.64. Fairview Township then had eleven schools exclusive of two in Fairview Borough, two in Karns City and three in Petrolia. Butler Borough had nine schools; Greece City, one; Harmony, two; Harrisville, two; Millerstown, six; Portersville, one; Prospect, two; Saxonburg, one; West Sunbury, one; and Zelenople, one.

In 1881 there were 260 schools in operation, with 169 male, and 168 female teachers employed, at an average salary far exceeding that of 1876. The total revenue that year was $82,245.56, and the total value of school property, $235,304.00.

The report for the year ending June 6, 1892, eleven years later, showed 289 school houses, 137 male and 211 female teachers, employed at an average salary of $37.20 for the former, and $33.24 for the latter. The total tax levy for school purposes that year was $87,384.98. The state appropriation was $22,204.48, and the total receipts from all sources, $123,894.50. Seventeen new public schoolhouses were built during this year.

The official report of the state superintendent of public instruction issued in January, 1908, credits Butler county with 368 schools, ninety-four male teachers and 273 female teachers. The enrollment of scholars for the previous years was 12,952, and the average attendance was 10,104. The cost per capita per month was $1.71, and the length of the school year ranged from seven months in the country districts to nine months in the borough of Butler, an average of 7 26-100 months. The average salary paid male teachers was $52.55 per month, and that of female teachers, $41.66 per month. The amount received from taxes and all sources was $211,387.86, and the state appropriation amounted to $54,246.00. The different districts expended $30,912.00 for new buildings, and $135,- 029.64 on teachers' salaries. The total expenditures of the county were $243,751.43, leaving a balance of $21,883.23. The resources in excess of the liabilities was $129,903.79.

The law requiring instruction in physiology and hygiene and the effects of alcoholic drinks in the pupil schools went into effect in 1885. This was followed by the free school-book law which went into effect in July, 1893. Under this law it is the duty of the directors to make provision for furnishing and equipping the schools with the text books and supplies generally needed by pupils for daily use in the schools. An act was passed in 1895 making attendance upon the public schools compulsory for children under the age of thirteen. The same year an act was passed authorizing the school board to provide libraries for the public schools and the high schools.

THE MINIMUM SALARY ACT.

The teachers' minimum salary bill was passed in May, 1907, fixing the minimum salary of teachers in the common schools of the state. This act provides that the salary of teachers holding professional, permanent, or normal school certificates shall not be less than $50.00 per month, and that the minimum salary of teachers holding certificates of less grade, shall not be less than $40.00 per month. Under the act of 1893 providing for the establishing of high schools in cities, and boroughs, high schools were established in Butler Borough, Mars, Evans City, Zelenople, and Bruin.

TOWNSHIP HIGH SCHOOLS.

Under the act of 1895 and the supplementary act of 1907 authorizing the school board in the townships to establish high schools, there have been six high schools established in Butler County. The first district to take advantage of this act was Penn Township, and this was followed by Franklin, Muddy creek, Concord, Middle-

ST. PAUL'S PAROCHIAL SCHOOL, BUTLER

FIRST BRICK SCHOOL BUILDING, BUTLER

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, BUTLER

SECOND PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, BUTLER

NEW HIGH SCHOOL, BUTLER

BROAD STREET SCHOOL, BUTLER

sex, and Fairview Townships. The boroughs having high schools organized under this act are Mars, Harmony, Evans City, Zelenople, Harrisville, Chicora, and Bruin.

COUNTY SUPERINTENDENTS SINCE 1856.

The acts of 1854 provided for the election of county school superintendents to serve for a term of three years. The first election was held in June of that year, at which Isaac Black was elected, and a salary fixed at $300.00 per year. The names of those who have been elected since that time are as follows: Thomas Balph, 1857; Eugene Ferrero, 1860; Asa H. Waters, 1863; John Crafty, 1866; Samuel Glenn, 1869; Robert H. Young, 1872; J. B. Matthews, 1875; David F. McKee, 1878; J. H. Murtland, 1881; W. G. Russell, 1884; J. L. Snyder, 1887; W. G. Russell, appointed in 1888 to fill vacancy caused by Mr. Snyder's resignation. N. C. McCollough, 1890, re-elected in 1893; S. M. Cheesman, 1896; Howard I. Painter, 1899, re-elected in 1902; R. S. Penfield, 1905, re-elected in 1908.

The committee of Butler County on permanent certificate appointed in 1907 for three years was composed of G. P. Weigle, of Prospect; Isaac M. Dyke, of Connoquenessing Township; and Miss Mary C. O'Brien, of Butler.

BUTLER COUNTY TEACHERS' INSTITUTE.

On November 19, 1855, the Butler County Teachers' Institute was organized with Isaac Black, county superintendent, president; A. J. Rebstock and Matthew Greer, vice-presidents; Thomas Balph, recorder; Jacob P. Myers, treasurer; and Isaac Black, Samuel P. Irvine, Mary McTaggart, M. Louisa Butler, and Emma Prosser, executive committee. The Institute recommended as school books, McGuffey's pictorial primer, spelling book, first, second, third, fourth and fifth readers. Ray's mathematics, McNally's geograph, and Pineo's series of grammars. Early in 1856 a movement, started to abolish the office of county superintendent, was defeated by a small majority. Ever since the organization, teachers' institutes have been held with more or less success, and in the past twenty years the Butler County institutes have taken a leading rank among those in the state. The fifty-fourth annual session was held in Butler in December, 1908, and was attended by 368 teachers.

In 1908 the surviving teachers who attended the first institute, held in Butler County in 1855, were Enos McDonald, of Prospect; J. Christy Moore, of Slippery Rock; Matthew Greer, of Buffalo Township; and Rev. Thos. Balph, of St. Clairsville, Ohio.

In addition to the annual institute held in 1907, Superintendent Penfield held seventeen local institutes during the school year that closed June 30, 1908, and an equal number will be held during the year which ends in June, 1909.

BUTLER COUNTY TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION.

The Butler County Teachers' Association was organized May 26, 1881, with Prof. J. C. Tinsman, president; T. F. Stauffer, vice-president; Louise McClure, recording secretary; P. S. Baneroff, correspondent and treasurer; J. C. Brandon and O. P. Cochran, enrolling secretaries. This organization was short-lived and finally gave way to the county institute which was more practical, and had a broader field to work in.

February 22, 1877, an "Intellectual Fair" was held at the court house in Butler for the purpose of discussing educational and scientific topics. Great interest was taken in the proceedings on account of its novelty, and the meetings were largely attended. It was presided over by D. B. Douthett, with Leander Wise secretary. The judges were L. J. Levis, H. H. Goucher, J. J. Mellyar, J. H. Sutton.

R. C. McAbey, Walter L. Graham, W. I. Brugh, Samuel McClymonds, S. H. Pearsol, Mrs. Conn, and Miss N. McJunkin.

Besides the opportunities afforded by the public schools of the county, for the instruction of the children of her citizens, in the ordinary English branches the cause of education has been still further advanced by the maintenance of other schools, academies, and colleges of either a secular or a denominational character. Among the more prominent of these may be mentioned the old Butler Academy, Witherspoon Institute, St. Peter's and St. Paul's Catholic Schools, and St. Paul's Orphan Home at Butler, St. Mary's College in Summit township, the Academies at West Sunbury, Prospect, and North Washington, the Select and Manual Labor Schools at Harmony, the Select School, the Academy, and the Lutheran Orphans' Home at Zelenople, the Normal School carried on by the auspices of the State at Slippery Rock, the Academy at Eau Claire, Cabot Institute at Cabot Station, Renfrew Academy, and the Evans City Academy. Many of the older institutions have served their purpose and gone out of existence, but all of the various schools, academies and colleges are eloquent witnesses of the interest taken in the cause of education by the people of the county.

THE SCHOOL DIRECTORS' ASSOCIATION.

From the holding of the first teachers' institute in 1856 to the present time, the school directors of the county have taken an active interest in the proceedings of the annual institutes held in Butler, and for many years at least one day of the institute was devoted to the discussion of topics of interest to the school boards. This led to the organization in 1902 of the School Directors' Association of Butler county, and the holding of annual meetings in Butler at which all of the directors in the county are in attendance. The officers of the association for 1908 were Rev. Hugh Leith, of Zelenople, president; Rev. A. H. Ginder, of Evans City, secretary; Robert Irwin, of Forward Township, and E. H. Pyle, of Muddycreek Township, vice-presidents; and John S. Jamison, of Fairview Township, treasurer.

MEMBERS OF THE SCHOOL BOARD OF BUTLER BOROUGH FOR 1908.

President, Philip W. Ruff; secretary, Harry L. Graham; treasurer, John Rauschenberger; Thomas A. Frazier; Dr. Robert J. Grossman; W. W. Robinson; A. C. Krug; W. G. Douthett; Edgar H. Negley; Norman J. Boyer; Frank L. Wiegand; Thomas H. Greer; James L. Garroway; Col. Wm. T. Meehling; C. E. Cronenwett.

CHAPTER XV

PUBLIC UTILITIES

Roads and Bridges—Electric Railways—Telephone and Telegraph—Bell Telephone—Postal Telegraph Company—People's Telephone Co.—Specchley Telephone Co.—Butler and Coyleville Telephone Co.—Burton Telephone Co.—Slippery Rock Telephone Co.—Saronburg Telephone Co.—Butler County Telephone Co.—Harrisville Telephone Co.—Pittsburg and Butler Telephone Co.—Portersville Telephone Co.

Closely following the individual improvements by the pioneers, came the laying out of public roads and the building of bridges. The building of county roads was followed by the construction of State Highways, the town of Butler being on one of the main roads from Pittsburg to Erie. Another main thoroughfare traversed the western section of the county and was the principal route of travel from Pittsburg to the northwest. The subject of public roads will be found treated more at length in the chapter on Transportation, wherein also mention is made of steam and electric railroads.

Bridges were almost as necessary as public roads, and their construction constitutes a large part of the transaction of the commissioners in the early days of the county. The first bridge built in the county was across the Connoquenessing Creek south of Butler, on the Pittsburg and Butler road, and was constructed in 1805. The next bridge built was in 1809, at the Kearns farm northeast of Butler, on what was then called the Bear Creek Road, now known as the "Transfer" in Butler Township. The same year a bridge was built at Harmony and the following year a petition for a bridge by the people of Slippery Rock was considered, but the bridge was not built until 1812. In 1814 a bridge was built at Anderson's on the Connoquenessing Creek, where the Franklin road crosses that stream. In 1814, Wolf Creek was spanned by a bridge where the stream is crossed by the Butler and Mercer Road. On the petition of Detmar Basse Muller, a bridge was built at Zelenople in 1815, and in 1817 the Little Connoquenessing Creek was spanned by a bridge at Christy's mill. These were the most important bridges built in the first twenty years of the county, and were placed at such points along the streams as to be of advantage to the largest number of people.

The era of turnpike roads began in 1820 and was followed by the plank roads in the fifties, but the advent of the railroads in 1871 called a halt in the building of pike roads for more than thirty years, when the building of macadamized roads began under the direction of the State Highways Department. The first macadamized road completed in the county by the state was a section of the Three Degree Road in Butler Township from the toll gate at the Plank Road to Bredinville. This was followed by a section of four miles of the old Butler and Erie Pike north of Butler to Center Township, which was built in 1906-7. In 1907 a section of the old Bear Creek road was paved with brick from the borough line to Kearns's Crossing in Butler Township. In 1908 a section of road was macadamized from Sarversville Station in Buffalo Township to the Armstrong County line. In Mercer Township a section of the old Franklin Road was macadamized from Harrisville Station to the town of Harrisville, and another section of the Grove City Road from the town of Harrisville to the Mercer County line. In the southern part of the county a section of road was macadamized from the borough of Valencia to the Allegheny County line, and in Butler Township three miles of the New Castle Road were macadamized from the borough line to the top of the hill at Crammer's Mill. The first half mile of this road leading up the Dufftown hill past the fair ground was paved with brick.

Improvements in the way of road building are no less noted than in bridge building. Steel construction and re-inforced concrete have taken the place of the old wood bridges, and the county now expends annually several thousand dollars in bridge repairs, while in 1906 and 1907 the amount expended for new bridge work was about forty thousand dollars.

In addition to the road improvements in the county the state also built the Allen bridge at Zelenople, and the Bull bridge on the Evans City and Butler Road at Connoquenessing Creek.

Good roads and bridges have not only brought the people of the county into closer communication with each other, but with the surrounding counties, and have been the means of establishing the rural free mail delivery routes which bring the farmer in daily touch with the cities.

ELECTRIC RAILWAYS.

Interurban electric railways did not reach Butler County until the beginning of the new century, just one hundred years after the organization of the county. The first electric line built in the county was the Butler Passenger Railway, and this was followed by the Pittsburg and Butler Line which was completed in 1907, and the Pittsburg, Butler, Harmony and New Castle Line which was completed in 1908. Other lines north and east of Butler are being promoted and will doubtless be built within the next few years.

When Maxwell was shot at the meeting of the United States marshal and the settlers on the Duffy farm west of Butler Borough in 1815, a special messenger rode to Pittsburg, 35 miles, on horseback for Dr. Agnew. It was almost twenty-four hours before the doctor arrived at the scene of the tragedy. In 1908 the same feat could be accomplished in two hours. The long distance telephone would take the place of the messenger on horseback, and a special car on the interurban electric railway would do the rest.

TELEPHONE.

Probably no public improvement has done more to bring the urban and country population into close touch with each other, and mitigate the isolation of country life in the rural counties of western Pennsylvania than the telephone. The first telegraph office was opened in Butler in 1861, and was a long stride toward rapid communication, but it did not reach the country districts. The first telephone system was established in Butler Borough about 1888, and since that time there have been established twelve independent companies, all of which with but one exception, were established in the country towns and districts and some of them being owned and operated exclusively by farming communities.

TELEGRAPH LINES.

Rapid communication was unknown to the citizens of Butler County previous to 1861, and the only way of reaching the outside world was by means of the mail carrier who made his trips once a week or in case of great haste, a special messenger was employed who was compelled to ride on horse-back over country roads that were sometimes almost impassable, and often through blind trails through the forest that were little better than cattle paths. The daily stage line between Butler and Pittsburg, which was established in 1827, was a great advantage for the people of Butler, but did not materially affect the residents of the country districts. In 1861, three years after the successful laying of the Atlantic Cable, a telegraph line was carried through Butler County from Pittsburg to Franklin. It preceded the first railroad just ten years, and was the first line of telegraphic communication between Pittsburg and the oil regions of Venango County. It was called the Oil Valley Telegraph Line and was built by an Englishman named Coldstream Barry. There was no office between Pittsburg and Franklin, and at Butler a box was fixed on one of the poles and Henry Zimmerman of Butler was employed to test the current daily. In 1862 an office was opened in the Lowry House by A. B. Gildersleeve of Franklin, who was the pioneer telegraph operator of the oil region. This was the first telegraph office in Butler County, and David Potts of Butler was placed in charge as its operator.

The Oil Valley Telegraph Line was succeeded by the Western Union Telegraph Company, which had as its first operator Charles Rebhun. He was succeeded by Ed. Dumean, and about 1873 John A. Hanck of Butler was placed in charge as manager. When the Trunk Line telegraph was constructed by the Western Union Company from New York to Chicago and St. Louis, the main line crossed Butler County; Butler became one of the repeating stations, and it is now one of the most important relay stations outside of Pittsburg. Hanck was succeeded as manager by William McCandless, and he in turn by W. A. Hanck and Jack Gall. The present manager of the office is George Elliott, Miss Josephine Smith is wire chief, Barney McKeown is electrician, and W. A. Hanck is night chief. The company's lines reach every important town and village in the county, and for the past fifteen years has given to the people of Butler the advantages of an all night service that is not enjoyed by cities of much larger population. The most important piece of business handled by the local office was on the first of February, 1902, at the time the Biddle brothers were shot in this county and brought to the Butler jail to die. During the first night of that eventful affair, over three hundred thousand words were sent out of the local office to all parts of the United States. The operators worked in relays and, for forty-eight hours, were driven to the point of exhaustion.

THE BELL TELEPHONE.

The Bell Telephone Company established a local exchange in Butler in 1889, with Miss Maggie Harrington and Miss Angie Slater in charge of the central. The plant was installed by Barney McKeown, who was the electrician and also manager of the district for six or seven years. The first 'phones established by the company did not always prove successful and the district manager had his own troubles in collecting his rentals and pacifying the irritable tempers of his patrons. During the first years of the local office there were not more than a dozen 'phones on the line, and these were in the offices of the most important business houses and factories. The rental of $60.00 a year for each 'phone made the price almost prohibitive for private residences, and it was not until a competing company entered the field that the rates were reduced to a reasonable figure.

The Bell Company has met the requirements of the town and community and at the present time it reaches almost every town in the county as well as affording its patrons the advantages of long distance telephone communication to all parts of the country. In addition to a long list of patrons in Butler Borough, the company has over one thousand 'phones in the county, many of which are in farm houses, thus bringing the farmer in close touch with the merchant and the business men of the town. The company has under sublease the local lines at Princeton, Connoquenessing, Saxonburg, Mars, Portersville, Parker, and the short lines at Lancaster and Jackson Townships. The division superintendent for the district north of Allegheny County is J. H. Clune, who has an office in Butler.

THE POSTAL TELEGRAPH COMPANY.

The Postal Telegraph Company established an office in Butler about 1881 or 1882, with Harry Walker as operator. A line was built to Butler from Pittsburg by Samuel Kidd, who had formerly been a district lineman for the Western Union Company. The company now has an office with the American Express Company in the Byers Building on South Main Street.

THE PEOPLE'S TELEPHONE COMPANY.

The People's Telephone Company of Butler had its inception in September, 1893, when J. E. Forsythe and Thos. J. Shufflin, of Butler, constructed a line from Butler to the Cooperstown oil field. This line consisted of a single wire and had but two 'phones, one in the office of Thos. J. Shufflin and J. E. Forsythe in Butler, and one at Cooperstown. The success of this line induced its builders to branch out and in 1895 the People's Telephone Company was organized by a number of Butler business men, of which Forsythe and Shufflin were the leading spirits. At a meeting held on August 19th of that year the following officers were chosen: President, John Younkins; vice-president, T. J. Shufflin; treasurer, J. V. Ritts; secretary and manager, J. E. Forsythe. The directory consisted of the above officers and Daniel Younkins, W. J. McDowell, W. H. Larkin, D. D. Buck, A. L. Reiber, T. P. Klingensmith and J. G. Stamm. Work was commenced in October, 1895, and the local plant was completed and ready for business January 1, 1896, with a list of one hundred subscribers. This was the first competition that the Bell Telephone Company met in Butler, and the telephone war that ensued is a bit of history that resulted to the financial benefit of the people of the town, but is something that the managers of the new enterprise do not like to think about. The new company had to fight for its existence, and fight hard, with the result that it now has one of the most complete systems in western Pennsylvania, and numbers among its patrons many thousands in Butler and the surrounding towns.

In January, 1898, the name of the company changed to the People's Telephone Company, Limited, and articles of association were filed in the recorder's office of Butler County, showing the capital of the company to be $20,000.00. The articles of association were signed by William Green, Marion Henshaw, T. P. Klingensmith, W. H. Larkin, William J. Marks, W. J. McDowell, J. E. Forsythe, A. L. Reiber, J. George Stamm, Daniel Younkins, T. J. Shufflin, John Younkins, J. V. Ritts, J. Henry Troutman, and J. D. Marshall.

The plant was reconstructed during 1902-3, and on August 16, 1904, a charter was secured under the title of "The People's Telephone Company of Butler." The officers of the company at that time were: John Younkins, president; A. L. Reiber, secretary; T. J. Shufflin, treasurer; and these with J. V. Ritts, and Marion Henshaw, composed the directory. The officers in 1905 were A. L. Reiber, president; Marion Henshaw, secretary; and T. J. Shufflin, treasurer, with the board of directors remaining the same as the previous year. No change was made in the officers in 1906, except that J. H. Troutman was elected a director to fill a vacancy. In January, 1907, A. L. Reiber was elected president; J. H. Troutman, vice-president; T. M. Baker, secretary; and T. J. Shufflin, treasurer and manager, and these officers were continued in 1908. J. E. Forsythe, who superintended the construction of the first line from Butler to Cooperstown, in 1893, has been the general superintendent of the People's Telephone Company since its organization. The manager and superintendent have been assisted in building up this splendid enterprise by an able board of directors, who have given their best efforts to the construction, equipping and operating the large plant.

The company began to branch out in business in 1902, when a line was constructed from the central office in Butler to the Speechley oil field in Washington Township. The Speechley Telephone Company was then organized, which is now controlled as a branch line of the People's Telephone Company. The company is now operating exchanges at Mars, Evans City, Zelenople, Connoquenessing, North Hope, Bruin, and Chicora, and controls by a lease or otherwise, the Speechley Telephone Company, the Butler-Coylesville Telephone Company connecting line, the Burton Telephone Company of Penn Township, the Eau Claire Telephone Company, the Slippery Rock Telephone Company, and connecting lines with the Emlenton Telephone Company in Venango County, the Plain Grove Telephone Company in Lawrence County, and the Ridge Telephone Company in Cherry Township.

In 1904 the Pittsburg and Butler Trunk Line was built, which connects the central office at Butler with the central office of the Pittsburg and Allegheny Telephone Company at Pittsburg, which is one of the largest independent lines in western Pennsylvania and eastern Ohio. This connection gives the People's Company long distance connections with the towns south and southwest of Pittsburg, while a similar arrangement with Kittanning gives connections with the towns in the east.

From 1896 until 1906 the company was quartered on the second floor of the brick building on West Jefferson Street, now owned by Robert Kirkpatrick, but in the latter year the offices were removed to the present quarters at the corner of West Jefferson and Washington Streets. The People's Telephone Company of Butler is an enterprise of which the people of the county may feel justly proud. It was promoted, financed and built by Butler people under difficulties which would have made the faint-hearted quit. It now has the largest patronage of any company in the district, and is constantly growing in strength and usefulness.

THE SPEECHLEY TELEPHONE COMPANY.

The oil developments in the Speechley field in Washington Township led a number of oil operators and business men who were interested there to organize the Speechley Telephone Company and build a line from Butler to North Washington. There were forty-six subscribers to the articles of association and the capital stock and the formal organization was effected June 9, 1902, by the election of T. J. Shufflin, president; A. L. Reiber, secretary, and John Younkins, treasurer. These with J. F. Harper and B. M. Steindorf composed the directory. This company was sub-leased and is now a part of the plant of the People's Telephone Company.

THE BUTLER AND COYLESVILLE TELEPHONE CO.

The Butler and Coyleville Telephone Company was organized in 1904 by the business men of Kittanning, and a line built from Kittanning to Coyleville. A charter was taken out by the company on the 13th of March, 1905, extending the line to Butler. The officers of this company and incorporators are K. B. Schotte, John G. Ayers, F. M. Monks, and C. J. Jessop, all of Kittanning.

THE BURTON TELEPHONE COMPANY.

The most extensive rural line built in the county was the Burton Telephone Company's line, which was built in 1906. The directors of the company were W. J. Burton, of Penn Township; Robert J. Marks, of Glade Mills; Joseph L. Campbell, of Renfrew; Langdon S. Riley, of Penn Township, and Thos. J. Shufflin, of Butler. This company constructed a line from Renfrew to Zelenople by way of Brownsdale to Evans City and Harmony; a line from Renfrew to Prospect by way of Connoquenessing and Whitestown; to Mars by way of Valencia; to Saxonburg by way of Cooperstown and to Butler. This company was eventually taken over by the People's Telephone Company of Butler.

SLIPPERY ROCK TELEPHONE COMPANY.

The Slippery Rock Telephone Company was organized in 1905 and the charter granted on July 11th of the same year. The incorporators were J. E. Bard, H. P. Griffith, William Christie, John P. Castor, F. P. Bingham, A. L. Cooper, John P. Buchanan, and F. W. Prouty. The charter called for the construction of a line from Slippery Rock to Butler by way of West Liberty and Prospect, a line from Slippery Rock to Branchton, West Sunbury and Annandale, a line to Grove City, and one to New Castle.

THE SAXONBURG TELEPHONE COMPANY.

The Saxonburg Telephone Company was chartered July 9, 1907, by Samuel Moore, Thomas Kennedy, Wadsworth Ekas, Martin Monks, Dr. W. W. Lasher, G. O. Hammer, and T. G. Wilhelm. This line was constructed and is now operated under a lease by the Bell Telephone Company.

THE BUTLER COUNTY TELEPHONE COMPANY.

The Butler County Telephone Company was chartered December 26, 1906, its incorporators being Harry Hamilton of Grove City, W. T. McDonald of Eau Claire, A. O. Miller of Eau Claire, and Thomas H. Greer of Butler. Its charter provides for the construction of a telephone line from the central office at Eau Claire to Parker and in the counties of Armstrong, Butler, Crawford, Clarion, Mercer, Lawrence and Beaver.

THE HARRISVILLE TELEPHONE COMPANY.

The Harrisville Telephone Company was chartered January 2, 1907, with the following directors: W. A. McWilliams, H. A. Kelley, W. B. Campbell, E. E. Wick, J. C. Buchanan and H. L. Johnson. The company operates in the northern part of the county and has its central office at Harrisville.

THE PITTSBURG AND BUTLER TELEPHONE CO.

The Pittsburg and Butler Telephone Company was chartered August 18, 1904, with a capital of $25,000.00 for the purpose of constructing a line from Pittsburg to Butler to connect with the People's Telephone Company of the latter place. The directors of this company were J. G. Splane of Pittsburg, J. W. Weller of Pittsburg, and Thos. J. Shufflin of Butler. The effect of the organization of this company and the building of the line to Butler was to give the local patrons of the People's Telephone Company the advantage of direct communication with Pittsburg through the Pittsburg and Allegheny Company of that city.

THE PORTERSVILLE TELEPHONE COMPANY.

The Portersville Telephone Company, with a central office at Portersville, Butler County, was organized in 1905, with the following officers: James McConnell, president; Edwin W. Humphrey, treasurer; and N. L. Gardner, secretary. This company operates in Muddycreek, Worth, Brady and Franklin Townships in Butler County, and in Lawrence County, and is now under lease, being operated by the Bell Telephone Company.

Short lines that are in operation in the country districts are the Jackson line, the Lancaster line, and the Ridge line in Cherry Township, the latter having a central office at Amos Hall's.

CHAPTER XVI

BUTLER BOROUGH

Founders of Butler—The County Seat—First Sale of Lots—Original Maps—Dispute about Title—First Settlers—Incorporation of the Town—First Public School Tax—Fire Department Considered—Extension of Borough and Street Lights—Light and Fuel Companies—Fire Insurance Companies—Water Companies—Railroads—Telegraph Lines—Board of Trade—Business Men's Association—Grocers' Association—Chamber of Commerce—Public Buildings—Taverns and Hotels—Manufactures—Machine Shops—Brick-yards—Building and Loan Associations—Churches—Schools—Religious and Charitable Societies—Graveyards and Cemeteries—Postmasters.

The borough of Butler doubtless owes its origin to the foresight and shrewdness of the Cunningham brothers, a family which has passed away leaving no descendants in the town or county, but leaving its name and the marks of its energy fixed upon both. There were three brothers in this family, viz.: John, Samuel and James, and they came originally from the Conestoga valley in Lancaster county. James Cunningham was a surveyor and surveyed the lands in what is known as Cunningham's district of the Depreciation lands.

Robert Morris, the Revolutionary patriot, was the owner of the ground upon which the borough of Butler has been built and of at least 80,000 acres more within the limits of the county. He had three hundred and eleven warrants made out in the name of Lancaster County citizens, but assigned by them to him, and these warrants, which were each good for 250 acres of land or more, he caused to be located by his agent James Cunningham, who was also the surveyor of what is known as Cunningham's district. A number of these warrants had been taken out in the name of John Tressler and Andrew Reighert, and by them assigned to Morris. The patent on the Tressler tract was not received by Samuel J. Cunningham until May 13, 1805. It sets forth that it was granted in consideration of moneys paid by John Tressler into the receiver general's office at the granting of the warrant and of the sum of $158.00 paid by Samuel J. Cunningham, and also in said Samuel J. Cunningham having made it appear that he made or caused to be made an actual settlement, and continued his residence agreeable to the settlement law of 1792 on a tract of land called Butler. These warrants were located several years before Butler County was organized. The warrants for the tracts of land on which it was destined a thriving city should arise, passed into the possession of John and Samuel J. Cunningham in 1805, and the land adjoining upon the north became by settlers' right the property of Robert Graham, who located in 1797, where the residence of John Berg now stands, on North Main Street.

THE COUNTY SEAT.

When Butler County was erected by the act of March 12, 1800, it was provided that the place for holding courts should be fixed at any place distant not more than four miles from the center of the county. The Cunningham brothers doubtless were aware, a considerable time previous to March 12, 1800, where the boundaries of the county would be established, and anticipated that the seat of justice would be located approximately in the center. They owned the most available site for a town within the prescribed radius of four miles and profited by their shrewdness or good fortune in having secured it. Other locations were proposed, one near the present site of Boydstown and another on Slippery Rock Creek.

One of the commissioners under date of June 7, 1802, writes of the land proposed by the Cunninghams for county seat as follows:

The situation is beautiful, being on an eminence which descends in all directions; the land scarce of timber, but sufficiently dry, and large bodies of meadow ground near the seat. This site will have the advantage of the creek with sundry springs of water, and coal banks near, limestone and freestone quarries partly adjoining the site. The ridges, all pointing into the little valley, will be convenient for roads from every direction.

The commissioner who wrote the above paragraph in his diary was favorably impressed, and his impressions were doubtless strengthened during the evening by a conversation with one of the Cunningham brothers. That night Isaac Weaver, John Hamilton and Presley Car Lane of the committee lodged with Samuel Cunningham at the millhouse near the site of Walter's mill, and the other two commissioners, Thos. Morton and James Brady, lodged at the cabin of Robert Cunningham near the Salt Lick, about two miles north of Samuel Cunningham's place. All of the commissioners that night were guests at the millhouse, which was probably kept by John and Samuel J. Cunningham, who had built a mill about two years previous. The Cunninghams and Robert Graham proposed to lay out in town lots three hundred acres of land, five acres of which should be devoted to the use of the county of Butler, should their location be made the seat of justice.

How well they succeeded in their purpose was first made known to the general public when the legislature upon the 8th of March, 1803, passed an act of which the following are the important sections:

Section 1. "Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in General Assembly met, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same, that John McBride, Esq., William Elliott, Esq., and John David, be and hereby are appointed trustees for the county of Butler, and the said trustees, or a majority of them, are hereby authorized and required to survey, or cause to be surveyed, 300 acres of land situate on the north side of Connoquenessing Creek, near Samuel Cunningham's mill, agreeably to a description given of the situation and boundary thereof expressed in the grant and obligation of Samuel Cunningham, John Cunningham and Robert Graham, made by them to the Governor for the use of the county of Butler, and the said trustees are hereby authorized and required to lay out a convenient lot or lots of land within the said 300 acres not exceeding five acres, whereon the public buildings shall be erected for the use of the county of Butler, and the surplus or residue of said 300 acres of land, which shall remain after the sites for the public buildings are set apart and determined, shall be laid out for a town, with suitable town lots, at the discretion of the trustees, with necessary reservations for a quarry, streets, lanes, alleys and roads or highways; provided, however, that no outlots shall exceed five acres, and the town hereby directed to be laid out shall be called Butler."

Section 2. "And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That it shall be the duty of the said trustees, or a majority of them, to sell by public auction the said town lots and outlots at such times as they may judge most advantageous to the county, which sale shall be held at the said Cunningham Mill, in the said county, previous to which the said trustees shall advertise the same three times at least in one or more newspapers published in Pittsburg, Greensburg and Washington one month before the day appointed for such sale; provided, that before the said commissioners proceed to the discharge of the duties herein enjoined and required, they shall demand and receive from the aforesaid Samuel Cunningham, John Cunningham and Robert Graham sufficient deeds in fee simple of the above-described 300 acres of land in trust for the use of the said county of Butler, agreeably to the grant thereof heretofore made to the Governor for the use of the county of Butler by the said Samuel Cunningham, John Cunningham, and

Robert Graham, and shall procure the same to be recorded in the office for recording of deeds in Allegheny County, and when the said trustees shall have so done they shall have authority, and it shall be their duty, to make out and grant sufficient deeds in fee simple for the town and outlots by them sold in pursuance of this act.

FIRST SALE OF LOTS.

In August, 1803, the village was duly laid out, the plot containing seventy-six acres and seventy-nine perches. This was deeded to William Elliott, John David and John McBride, as trustees for the county, and the sales of the lots were made through them at a public auction, August 10th. David Dougal purchased lot No. 1 on the northeast corner of the Diamond for $100.00, which was the highest price paid for lots in that locality. This is the property now owned by C. N. Boyd. Other lots were sold along Main Street at prices ranging from $20.00 to $126.00, which in 1908 were valued at $1,000.00 per foot front regardless of the improvements.

The fact that the new town was to be the seat of justice held out great promises of financial returns to the people, and the lots were readily sold. The pioneer villagers then entered upon the humble beginnings of what, as a rule, were to be successful careers. The promise of prosperity was realized by almost everyone except John Cunningham, one of the founders of the town. His financial affairs became involved, and it was said that he was hurried to his grave by the disappointments he met with. He died in 1805, and was buried in the cemetery which he and his brother had donated to the borough of Butler.

The deed of release, which describes the ground now occupied by the court house, was executed in favor of John Cunningham by his creditors Simon Gratz and Heyman Gratz, trading under the firm name of Simon & Heyman Gratz; William Wistar, John Price, and John Wistar, trading under the name of Wistar, Price & Wistar; John Wistar and his private right; Joseph Karrick and Joshua Percival, trading under the name of Karrick & Percival; and Thomas Ryerson, all of Philadelphia, and is the first recorded instrument in the recorder's office in Butler. The deed was executed in Philadelphia on the 5th of October, 1803, and recorded on the 23d of January, 1804.

John Cunningham was a brother of Samuel and James Cunningham, and was a native of Lancaster county. In all probability he was engaged extensively in business elsewhere than in the village of Butler, and was the victim of the fever for land speculation that had ruined Robert Morris and other prominent men of that time. When he became financially embarrassed, his share in the 300 acres set apart for the town of Butler was seventy acres. Judgments were laid upon his property by the creditors living in Philadelphia, and it became necessary in order to give perfect title to have a deed of release for the property included in the town site. Such a deed was made. It recites that the release was granted in consideration of the fact that John Cunningham had other lands adjoining the town which were bounded by judgments which his creditors had obtained, and that these lands were so materially increased in value by the location of the county seat as to make them ample security for his creditors.

David Cunningham, another brother of John and Samuel, resided in Butler in 1804, and was one of the first attorneys registered at the Butler Bar. He is said to have been a lawyer of ability, but nothing is known of his career after he left Butler. Samuel Cunningham lived and died in Butler, and was buried in the old cemetery with his brother John, but the graves of these two pioneers were never marked, and all trace of them was lost many years ago. When the high school building was erected on the site of the old cemetery a tablet was placed on the wall in the corridor to the right of the McKean Street entrance, which bears the names of John and Samuel J. Cunningham, the founders of Butler.

THE ORIGINAL MAPS.

The original survey of the town lots of Butler made in 1803 exists, and a map of the town made by Harvey Boyd in 1828, which was taken from a plat of J. E. Brown, is in the possession of John S. Campbell, of Butler. This old map is made on parchment and is an excellent example of the work done by surveyors of that day. According to the boundary lines shown on the map, the northern limit of the town was an alley which is now Penn Street, and the southern limit was the quarry reserve which began at the alley south of Wayne Street and extended to the creek. The western limit was the first alley west of Washington Street, and the eastern limit ended at Franklin Street. All of the territory lying east of Main Street and north of North Street, now in the fourth ward, was known as the outlots, and the territory lying south of Jefferson Street and east of McKean street as far as the creek was placed in the same class. Jefferson Street extended west to the first alley west of Washington Street, and Mifflin Street extended to Walker's brick yard, which lay between Bluff and Chestnut Streets. The main road leading to the west and northwest at that time left the Willard House corner and followed Wayne Street and what is now Water Street to the junction of New Castle and Mercer Street. This point was then known as the forks of the New Castle and Mercer roads. The cemetery lot was located on the site of the High school building on North McKean Street, and the academy building was marked on the corner of McKean and Jefferson Streets, now occupied by the Jefferson school building. The millhouse is marked on the banks of the creek outside of the quarry reserve. The quarry reserve was so called because of the existence of a stone quarry, where the early inhabitants secured stone for building purposes.

On August 14, 1804, the trustees made the terms of sale more liberal, giving one year for second payment, and two years for third payment. Under this rule fifty-seven lots were sold August 14, 15, and 16, 1804, the total sum realized being $1,612.25.

DISPUTE ABOUT TITLE.

It would appear from the events that followed the laying out of the town lots and the public sale that Robert Graham and the Cunninghams donated lands to which they had no legal title. Following the settlement with the creditors of John Cunningham, another cloud arose in 1807 which threatened to affect the title of every lot owner in the town. In the early part of that year the effects of Robert Morris were sold at the Merchant's Coffee House in Philadelphia at United States marshal's sale to satisfy some of his foreign creditors. Stephen Lowry of Maryland and other land speculators purchased the Butler County warrants. The John Tressler warrant and the Adam Reighert warrant came into the possession of Lowry and on December 12, 1807, Thomas Collins, attorney for Lowry, notified the commissioners of Butler County of his claims on the land comprising the town site of Butler. It will be noticed that Robert Graham claimed ownership of the Adam Reighert warrant by right of settlement, and that John and Samuel Cunningham did not secure their patent for the Tressler warrant until 1805. The attorney for Lowry threatened to bring suits of ejectment, and after a correspondence of more than two years, the matter was finally compromised. The commissioners released their claims to the lots in the original plan that had not been sold at that time, and Lowry executed quit claim deeds to the commissioners for the lots that had been sold up to that date in both the tracts donated by the Cunninghams and Robert Graham, thus confirming the titles made by the trustees of Butler county at the first sale of lots. These deeds were executed on the 12th day of February, 1810.

In the original plan of lots, Jefferson Street is the dividing line between the Tressler warrant owned by the Cunninghams, and the Adam Reighert, Sr., warrant, upon which Robert Graham had made a settlement. The eastern limits of these warrants was Monroe Street, and the western limits was Bluff Street. The present limits of the city now comprise in addition to the two warrants mentioned the Adam Reighert, Jr., warrant in the Institute Hill district, the George Slough warrant in the first ward, the Christian Stake warrant and the John Greaff warrant comprise all that part of the town west of Bluff Street known as Duffytown, and part of the property now owned by the Standard Steel Car Company, and Charles Duffy. The Tressler warrant extended from Jefferson Street to the top of the hill south of town, and the Adam Reighert, Sr., warrant extended from Jefferson Street north to the foot of cemetery hill, and was designated on the early documents as "Warren Point."

FIRST SETTLERS.

The first settlers within the original limits of Butler were among those who purchased lots at the first sale, and who began immediately to erect buildings on their new possessions. James Thompson, a blacksmith, erected the first building on the Diamond. Other houses were built in their order by William Young, William Neyman, Abraham Brinker, and Jacob Funk. The Neyman house stood next to the Boos building on South Main Street. Abraham Brinker's house was on the other side of the street, and the Funk house stood on the ground now occupied by the residence of W. A. Lowry on East Diamond Street. John Potts built a log house on the corner now occupied by A. Troutman & Sons' store. He resided in this house for two or three years, and then built a substantial hewed log house upon the opposite side of the street on ground now occupied by the store of Alf. M. Reiber. This log house was considered one of the fine residences of the town, and stood until 1892 or 1893, when it gave way to the present brick building. Other houses were built, all of a very primitive character, by John Emfrey, George Powers, and Stephen Crawford.

While the foregoing men were the first settlers within the original limits of the town, John Negley had settled in 1800 south of the creek, opposite the Cunningham Mill, now the Walters Mill, and in the third ward of the city. Robert Graham and his family had also settled in Butler Township in what is now the Fifth Ward. Robert Graham's son William was the first child born in the district, and made his advent in December, 1803. The first female child was Sarah, daughter of John and Jane Potts, who was born at the Potts residence on Main Street in March, 1805. She married Squire Robert Carnahan, and resided in Butler all her life, her death occurring near the close of the century.

The winter of 1803 and 1804 was a dreary one. The only means of communication with the outer world was by means of a bride path leading straight over the hills to Pittsburg. Among the new residents of the town who came at the beginning of 1804 was William Ayres, Esq., the first prothonotary of Butler County, and his clerk, Henry M. Brackenridge, son of Judge H. H. Brackenridge, of Pittsburg. The young clerk afterwards became a noted lawyer and a distinguished member of the bench of Pennsylvania, and the author of a History of Western Pennsylvania, which bears his name. In his "Recollections of the West," he says of his first visit here: "On my arrival at Butler there were a few log houses just raised, but not sufficiently completed to be occupied. It was not long before there were two taverns, a store, and a blacksmith shop. It was then a town. The country around was a howling wilderness with the exception of a few scattered settlements as far removed from each other as the kraals in the neighborhood of the Cape of Good Hope."

The first public assembly for social and patriotic purposes was held on the Fourth of July, 1804, when the natal day of American independence was celebrated in an appropriate manner. The meeting was held at the Federal Spring at the foot of Main Street, now on the property of John McQ. Smith, and it is from this circumstance that the spring was so named. A table about one hundred feet long had been prepared, which was supplied with the best the country afforded, to which all present did ample justice. After the dinner William Ayres was appointed president and John McCandless, then sheriff, vice-president. Patriotic toasts suited to the occasion were read by the president at the head of the table, and repeated by the vice-president at the foot. Then followed the drink, the cheers, the firing of musketry, and the music of drum and fife playing the old Revolutionary tunes of "Yankee Doodle" and "Hail Columbia." The entire population of the town was represented at this meeting as well as representative citizens from the surrounding country.

INCORPORATION OF THE TOWN.

It was not until some fifteen years later that the inhabitants of Butler began to think of taking steps towards the formation of a corporate government. The question was finally brought before the legislature, on February 6, 1817, by an act entitled "An act to erect a town of Milton in the county of Northumberland, and the town of Butler in the county of Butler, into boroughs." This act was passed February 26, and the charter was issued May 2, 1817, by Governor Snyder, and Butler at once assumed its new duties as an incorporated town. The section of the act relating to the incorporation of Butler is given herewith:

"Section 16. And be it further enacted, etc., That the town of Butler in the county of Butler shall be and the same is hereby erected into a borough which shall be called the 'Borough of Butler,' and contained within the following metes and bounds: The original plat or draft of the town of Butler, beginning at a black oak on the bank of the mill dam; thence north seventy-eight degrees west seven perches; thence south 52 degrees west eight perches; thence south eleven degrees west seven perches, south three degrees east ten perches, south 36 degrees east eight perches, south 73 degrees west eleven perches, north ten degrees west fourteen perches, north ten degrees east fourteen perches, north 40 degrees west 12 perches, west sixteen perches, south 59 degrees west 23 perches; thence south eleven degrees 13 perches, south 25 degrees east five perches, south twenty degrees west 14 perches; thence south 18 perches; thence south 52 degrees west 26 perches, south 41 degrees west six perches, south sixty-one degrees west 13½ perches, south 57 degrees west 7½ perches to a hickory; thence leaving the dam north 77 degrees west nine perches, thence north 57 degrees west 57 perches to two hickory trees on the banks of the creek; thence north fifteen degrees west 40 perches, north three degrees west 152½ perches; thence north 87 degrees east 173 perches; thence south three degrees east 133.2 perches to the place of beginning."

The part of the city included in the above description is bounded approximately by Monroe Street on the east, Penn Street on the north, Bluff Street on the west, and the Connoquenessing Creek on the south. The population of the town in 1820, two years after the borough was erected, was 250.

It was also provided by the act in section 17 that the inhabitants of the borough entitled to vote for members of the legislature having resided within the limits of the borough at least six months preceding the election, should "on the Friday immediately preceding the third Saturday of March next" have power to cast their votes between the hours of one and five in the afternoon for one chief burgess, one assistant burgess, and seven citizens to be a town council, also one high constable.

Under this act the first election for borough officers was held May 30, 1817, at the dwelling house of Adam Funk, and for subsequent years the elections were mostly held at the house of Jacob Meehling, who was chosen one of the first councilmen to aid in shaping the destinies of the infant borough.

The new borough officers were prompt to organize and discharge their functions, as is shown by the fact that they entered upon their duties the very day that they were elected. The first minute book of the borough council under date of May 30, 1817, noted the fact that William Ayres, Esq., had been duly elected chief Burgess, and John Gilmore, Esq., assistant Burgess. William Campbell, John Potts, Dr. George Miller, Hugh McKee, David Dougal, and James Stephenson, duly elected members of the town council for the borough of Butler, met at the house of Adam Funk and took the oath of office before Robert Scott, Esq., a justice of the peace, as directed by the act of Assembly passed the 26th day of February, A. D. 1817, creating the town of Butler in the county of Butler, into a borough. At this meeting John Potts was duly elected president of council, John Bredin was appointed clerk, James Hill was appointed borough treasurer, and Maurice Bredin was elected collector of the borough taxes.

Jacob Meehling qualified as councilman at the meeting held July 7, 1817, and voted with the other members for levying a borough tax as well as for the adoption of the seal of the Circuit Court as the seal of the borough.

In 1819 an ordinance was adopted establishing a regular market day, and also rules were adopted for preventing sheep and swine from running at large, and persons from galloping on the streets. In 1820 a tax levy of four mills was made for the borough expenses, which was considered sufficient to justify the borough officials in fitting up a pound or pen on William Beatty's lot for hogs and a place in Eli Skeer's stable for the keeping of sheep, and thereafter all stray animals of this kind found roaming on the streets were taken into custody by the high council.

In 1820 the building used as a market house appears to have served its purpose, and in September its sale was reported and $18.00 for brick paid into the treasury.

In 1821 street improvements were decided on and in December the street commissioners were ordered "to cut the Diamond as much as may be necessary, the side walks on the Diamond level or nearly so, with the turn-pike (Main Street), and that West Street be dug and filled, so that the ascent thereof would not exceed seven degrees of a horizontal line."

During this year the extension of McKean Street as far as the inlots extended was ordered.

The first vote recorded by the borough of Butler for state and county officers was that of October 14, 1817. For governor William Findley received twenty and Joseph Heister, sixteen votes. For State Senate John Gilmore received twenty-nine and Walter Lowrie, eight votes. For representative to the State legislature, Samuel Douglass received twenty-seven, William Marks, twenty-seven, John Wilson, ten, Andrew Christy, twenty-one, William Ayres, twenty-nine, William Wilkins, sixteen, John Robinson, nine, and John Ross, nine votes. For county commissioner Francis Fryer received twelve votes, Abraham Brinker, fourteen, David Dougal, eight, and Mosen Hanlen, three. For auditor, John Bredin received thirty-six votes, and David Dougal two. For trustees of the Butler Academy Jacob Meehling received twenty-three votes, John Galbraith, thirty-six, and Thomas Lyon, thirteen. Samuel Glass was elected inspector, Robert Scott, judge, and Moses Sullivan and J. Williamson, clerks of the election of the borough. The total vote polled at this election would indicate a population of about two hundred.

The assessment list of 1821 shows that there were but thirty-four houses in the borough not including the county, school and church buildings. There were forty-nine owners of lots that had improvements on them, and twenty-five vacant lots were assessed against their reputed owners.

More importance was attached to the office of high constable than at the present day. At a meeting of council held March 16, 1822, it was resolved that Samuel Johnson, the newly elected high constable, should give security in the sum of $400.00 for the faithful performance of his duty. Adam Fink became his bondsman. With the duties of this office and the responsibilities increased two hundred fold, all the security demanded now is $200.00.

John McQuiston was appointed borough treasurer, in 1822, and an ordinance was passed directing that the owners of property on Main Street who desired to build side-walks in front of their property should construct such side-walks nine feet wide.

In 1823 John Reed was elected high constable, John Welsh was appointed clerk, and Samuel Johnson, collector. One of the important items of business this year was the opening of Franklin Street, paralleling McKean.

At a meeting held the 8th of April, 1824, a resolution was introduced by Mr. Bredin directing that a committee of three be appointed to draft an ordinance and employ an artist to fix the corners of lots, streets and alleys. Under the authority of this ordinance David Dougal, the famous surveyor, was employed, and he resurveyed the town and reestablished the corners and lot lines.

The subject of fire protection was discussed by council in 1825, and a motion that the sum of $25.00 be appropriated towards the erection of an engine house on the public square, and toward furnishing it with engine, hooks and ladders, was voted down. The fire-fighting apparatus was purchased two years later by the subscription of private citizens and was the inception of the present volunteer fire department. In July, 1827, the county commissioners agreed to assign to the borough council a judgment to be applied on the purchase of an engine and other fire apparatus, and on the 28th of that month Mr. Gilmore reported that he had purchased an engine for $400.00, of which half was to be paid within six months, and half in twelve months. This report was accepted by council, and a resolution was passed ordering the erection of an engine-house in the rear of the court house. This building was erected by R. Strain for the contract price of $60.00.

In January, 1828, N. Foltz transferred lot No. 152 to the borough for cemetery purposes, and the council adopted measures for fencing in this lot with the old cemetery.

In the same year Samuel Gilmore, the clerk, was paid $8.00 for his services. In 1835 the salary of this official had been advanced to $15.00 per year, in 1895 it was $250.00, and in 1908 it was $750.00.

FIRST QUARTER CENTURY.

The population of Butler in 1828, twenty-five years after the founding of the town, numbered between four and five hundred, and the village had begun to assume the airs of prosperity. The streets had been graded and side-walks laid, and the primitive log cabins were gradually giving way to the more substantial brick dwellings. The most pretentious mansion of that time was the dwelling of William Ayres on the corner of South Main and Wayne Streets, opposite the Hotel Willard. It was built of logs, and was three stories high. Brick houses were built in the town as early as 1812, and the old Sullivan residence in the rear of the court house is the only one of these structures that is now in existence. The whole number of dwellings in 1828 was about seventy, of which twenty-one were brick.

In May, 1829, the borough contained three blacksmiths, four shoemakers, three tailors, two tanners, two saddlers, two potters, two plasterers, two brick layers, three cabinet makers, four carpenters, two farmers, two hatters, one wagon maker, one painter, one cooper, and one chair-maker. The professions were represented by seven lawyers, two physicians, two resident clergymen, four school teachers, and two or more editors. There were also fourteen merchants, and two printing houses. The public and semi-public buildings comprised the court house and jail, the Butler Academy, while there were two stone churches owned respectively by the Catholics and the Presbyterians.

August 14, 1828, it was resolved by the council that the court house bell be rung from the 1st of April to the 1st of October on the Lord's day at the hours of nine and eleven A. M., and one P. M., and at no other hour on that day. Also from the 1st of October to the 1st of April to be rung at the hours of 10 A. M. and 12 M., and at no other time.

In 1830 Dr. DeWolf, Francis McBride, and Hugh McKee were appointed a committee to inquire into the water supply and examine the springs adjacent to the borough. The paving of side-walks, grading of streets and removal of fences off the streets and public grounds also occupied the attention of the council during this year.

THE FIRST PUBLIC SCHOOL TAX.

In the meanwhile the question of education was not neglected, and at a public meeting held June 29, 1835, it was resolved that the sum of $250.00 be levied on the borough of Butler for school purposes in addition to the sum already levied for that year, the money to be applied by the directors according to the act of Assembly. General William Ayres presided at this meeting, and William Stewart acted as secretary. After some months of discussion the action of the meeting was officially laid before the council March 9, 1836, and at a subsequent meeting held on the 11th, the clerk was ordered to add $250.00 to the duplicate. This was the practical beginning of the public school system in Butler borough.

In March, 1838, the citizens of the town exercised their right of petition against the erection of blacksmith shops within sixty feet of High Street, or the Diamond. This petition was referred to a committee, who, after due consideration and investigation of the subject, reported that they were decidedly of the opinion that the citizens had a right to construct on their own property any building they may deem proper, being responsible to any persons they may annoy in the enjoyment of their property.

While the committee found that the question of removing the blacksmith shops was one over which council had no control, they respectfully recommended to the citizens generally "not to construct shops or other improvements so as to disturb their neighbors or retard the improvement of the place."

In 1838 the water supply question was revived, when council authorized the cleaning out and walling up of Federal Spring at the foot of Main Street. In January, 1839, the original quarry reservation lying between Wayne Street and the creek was vacated and the survey of the ground into town lots was authorized; the proceeds of sale of such lots between Washington and McKean Streets to be appropriated to the aid of the female seminary in Butler, should the legislature agree to such proposition.

An ordinance was passed in 1846 to prevent the quarrying of stone on the reservation, but in January of the following year permission was granted to the building committee of St. Peter's Catholic church and Samuel Lane, the contractor, to take out the stone for the new church and parochial residence, on the condition that the committee should fill up the space between Duffy's and the opposite property.

FIRE DEPARTMENT CONSIDERED.

During the ensuing twenty years the care of the streets and alleys appears to have been the principal business of the council. The organization of a fire department was considered in 1859, and in February, 1862, a joint celebration was held of Washington's birthday and the fall of Fort Donaldson.

In 1864 the present system of council committees was adopted, and the appointments made.

EXTENSION OF BOROUGH AND STREET LIGHTS.

An important transaction in 1869 was the extension of the limits of the borough to take in annexed territory, and a new survey of the town which was made by James Dunlap. The question of street lights also came up in 1869 and in October a petition was presented to council demanding the erection of street lamps along Main Street. The council appointed Gabriel Etzel and Jacob Keek a committee to ascertain the cost of lighting the streets. Previous to this time the only street lights provided were those of the merchants, in their store windows, and the inhabitants of the back streets were obliged to carry a lantern when they left their homes after night-fall. Some propositions by Colonel Sirwell were considered, but when it was found that the cost of the street lights would exceed the whole tax levy for borough purposes, the subject was summarily disposed of, and the borough remained in darkness for another decade. In November, 1877, the proposition of Henry C. Heineman, manager of the Butler Gas Company, to place burners on lamp posts and keep them lighted each evening as the council determined, at a cost of $3.50 per lamp, was accepted, and on December 8th of that year the streets of the town were lighted. Natural gas was substituted for the manufactured product in 1885, and in 1890 the present system of lighting by electricity was adopted.

In 1890 council considered a sewerage system for the town and after some consideration adopted the Waring plan. Work on the construction of the trunk sewers was commenced that year, and the plant has been extended from time to time as the necessities of the town demanded. The same year a petition was presented for the paving of Main Street with brick. This work was commenced in the summer of 1890, and completed in 1891. Jefferson Street was paved in 1891 and other streets have followed, until the town at the present time has about fifteen miles of paved streets, including Pierce Avenue, which connects the main town with Lyndora.

H. E. Coulter, the present secretary of council, was elected in 1893, succeeding T. M. Baker, and has served continuously since that time.

The treasurer of council in 1890 was Peter Schenk and he has been succeeded in turn by Harry Grieb, John Lawall, and W. F. Rumberger, the latter being the incumbent in 1908.

The borough officials in 1908 were Elmer E. Bell, Burgess; Ellsworth Miller, president of council; William F. Rumberger, treasurer; H. E. Coulter, secretary of council; Jno. H. Wilson, solicitor; Archie Davidson, tax collector; Ed. Kramer, high constable; Jasper Ritzert, street commissioner; H. B. Graves, borough engineer; John W. Vogel, sewer inspector; and the following auditors: V. W. Parker, Harry Foreht, T. James Dodds.

The members of council were from the First Ward: John C. Clark, Thos. H. Brown, Joseph E. Schnitzer. Second Ward, Geo. Mellinger, Saml. L. Irvine, Geo. E. Sherman. Third ward, John G. Dunn, Lewis E. Ruby, A. C. Moxie. Fourth Ward, Ellsworth Miller, Jos. Ball, Geo. H. Limberg. Fifth Ward, A. M. Aiken, Geo. Arbuster, E. R. Maxwell.

On account of the records of the transactions of the town council being destroyed by fire, on the night of November 20, 1903, the organization of the council from 1894 to 1908 is omitted. Under the new division of the borough into five wards, the council is composed of fifteen members, one being elected from each ward every year. The names are given in the numerical order of the wards and are only of the members elected for that year.

LIGHT AND FUEL COMPANIES.

As early as 1865 a movement was started in Butler to light the town with manufactured gas. A stock company was organized and a gas plant was erected on ground now occupied by the Bottle Glass Works near the West Penn Depot. But little is known about the organization of this company. The plant appears to have been erected by John Goetz, who also erected a plant at Freeport, and was manager of both concerns until 1875, when he came to Butler and gave his time to the local plant until 1883, when he engaged in the planing-mill and lumber business. The streets of the town were piped and the product of this plant was used for lighting the houses and the streets. About 1883 or 1884 the plant came into the hands of David Kirk, who organized the Home Mutual Gas & Fuel Company and supplied the town with natural gas. Subsequently the old gas plant was dismantled and the Bottle Works were erected on the site.

Charles Duffy, who is a life-long resident of the town, has some interesting recollections concerning the organization of the first gas company and the use of natural gas as a fuel. In the early part of the eighties David Kirk, who was then a young man operating in the oil fields of Butler County, was talking to Mr. Duffy about utilizing the gas at the Burns Well on the Duffy Farm in Clearfield township, when the latter suggested that the fuel of the future was natural gas, if the manufacturers and business men of Pittsburg and the large cities could be made to see its value. At that time the Burns well on the Duffy farm was wasting millions of feet daily, and the owners were getting nothing in return for the money expended in drilling the well. Mr. Kirk was a man of action, and he at once proceeded to Pittsburg where he interested the Chalfants, Dilworth, Joseph Over and others in the Burns Well, and made arrangements to have them come to Butler and visit this natural gas wonder. The trip was arranged so the visitors arrived here on the evening train, where they were met with carriages and driven to the well. It was very dark when they reached the Duffy farm, and Mr. Kirk had planned an original surprise for them. In the woods near the well a large sign had been erected and gas pipe bearing the words "Gas, the fuel of the future." The well was under control by this time, and the sign was so arranged that it could be lighted with the opening of a throttle and the touch of a torch. When the Pittsburg parties alighted from the carriages, the place was so dark they could scarcely see each other's faces. In an instant the woods were aflame with a bright light, and the immense sign could be seen with the words illuminated as above quoted. The originality of the surprise delighted the Pittsburg party, and upon their return to Butler that night a banquet was spread at one of the hotels at which the principal topic of conversation was the possibilities of natural gas as a fuel for domestic and manufacturing purposes. The piping of gas from the Burns Well to Freeport soon followed, and may be said to have been the beginning of an industry in the county that is only second to the production of petroleum.

Incidentally it may be said here that the famous Burns gas well is still producing gas, and pays the owner of the farm a royalty of $40,000 a year. Originally the owners of the well allowed the gas to go to waste because they did not know how to handle it or did not know its value.

The Home Natural Gas Company was first organized by David Kirk in 1885 as the Home Mutual Gas & Fuel Company. This company supplied the town with natural gas until 1888, when dissatisfaction arose among the consumers over a proposed raise in the price. This led to a public meeting held in the old skating rink on South McKean Street, and the subsequent organization of a new company, which obtained a charter under the name of Home Natural Gas Company. The officers of the company at that time were H. J. Klingler, president; J. Henry Troutman, William Campbell, Ferd Reiber and H. H. Clark, directors. The new company purchased the interests of David Kirk & Company, and operated the plant until the fall of 1891, when it was sold to the Eastern Oil Company, of which George V. Foreman was president. John F. Anderson then became secretary and local manager of the company, and continued in that position until the fall of 1894, when the plant was sold back to the Butler Company. The officers of the new company were John S. Campbell, president; A. E. Reiber, treasurer; John F. Anderson, secretary; and these with J. H. Troutman and V. K. Phillips composed the board of directors. In 1904 the plant was again sold to the T. W. Phillips Gas & Oil Company, the present owners.

The T. W. Phillips Gas & Oil Company was chartered in July, 1904, with a capital of $2,000,000. T. W. Phillips is president of the company; Clarence Walker, vice-president; and T. W. Phillips, Jr., secretary and treasurer. Previous to the organization of the new company the Phillips Oil Company had been supplying gas to a large number of consumers in the county, and were the largest producers of gas operating in this territory. In August, 1904, the company purchased the plant of the Home Natural Gas Company of Butler, and have since operated it. They also own plants at Freeport, Punxsutawney, New Kensington, Braeburn, Slate Lick, West Kittanning and in addition supply many of the small villages throughout the county.

The Independent Natural Gas Company was organized February 1, 1888, with Henry Reiber, president, George L. Reiber, treasurer, and Edward Reiber, secretary. It was the first natural gas company incorporated in Butler for the purpose of supplying fuel to the town, and the gentlemen named are the present owners of the plant. This company has over fifty miles of pipe supplied by their own gas wells within a radius of ten miles of Butler, and has a fair share of the local patronage. This company has furnished gas to the consumers at a lower rate than any other home company in the field, and has been the last to advance prices to the consumers.

The People's Gas Company had its inception in the fall of 1890, when Blair Hooks purchased a gas well from the Standard Plate Gas Company, located on a lot in Springdale, and obtained a permit from council to pipe that part of the borough. During the winter of 1890-91 he supplied about forty families, and subsequently he drilled another well. In 1892 he organized the People's Gas Company, the incorporators being Blair Hooks, Otto Limberg, and William H. Larkin. The company continued to extend their plant until 1895, when it was purchased by the Home Natural Gas Company.

Citizens' Gas Company. — Dissatisfaction over the proposed raise in prices by the Home Gas Company in 1892 was the means of bringing a new organization into the field. At a meeting held on December 14, 1892, the Citizens' Gas Company was organized with Peter Schenck, president; H. H. Goucher, vice-president; Joseph Rockenstein, treasurer; and T. M. Baker, secretary. This company obtained a permit to pipe the town, and having secured a large number of contracts for fuel, began business immediately. The supply of gas was obtained from wells east of Butler, and the company continued in business for several years when it suspended.

The Butler Electric Light and Power Company was first chartered July 21, 1885. The incorporators were R. H. McBride, John S. Campbell, Chas. H. Taylor, W. C. McCandless, and A. H. Daniels. The officers were R. H. McBride, president, John S. Campbell, secretary and treasurer, and W. C. McCandless, superintendent. The capital stock of the company at that time was $10,000. The power house was located on South Washington Street, and was started running October 4, 1885.

The original plant was operated until 1890, when it was sold to the present company, which was chartered March 7, 1890, under the title of The Butler Light, Heat and Motor Company. The incorporators of the new company were John S. Campbell, J. Henry Troutman, W. D. Brandon, William Campbell, Jr., L. R. McAboy, and B. H. Jack. The capital stock was $50,000. The same year the company located in a brick building on the corner of East Cunningham and Monroe Streets, and installed two 300 horsepower engines to run the machinery of their plant.

In 1902 the present building on Spring Street was erected and a 1,000 horsepower light and power plant was established. From September, 1900, to February 26, 1907, the company furnished the power for the Butler Passenger Railway Company in addition to furnishing the street lights for the town and supplying a large number of private consumers. The officers of the company in 1908 were John S. Campbell, president, W. D. Brandon, vice-president, J. Henry Troutman, secretary, and L. R. McAboy, treasurer. John H. Humphrey, the general manager, has been with the company since 1890 with the exception of about one year in 1902-3.

The Butler Ice Company was incorporated in 1902 for the manufacture of ice and was promoted by John S. Campbell, W. D. Brandon, J. Henry Troutman and others who are connected with the Butler Light, Heat and Motor Company. A plant having a capacity of twenty-five tons daily was erected on Spring Street adjoining the Electric Light Plant and has been in operation ever since. The present officers of the company are W. D. Brandon, vice-president; J. Henry Troutman, secretary and treasurer, and J. E. Flack, manager.

MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANIES.

(Borough and County.)

The mutual fire insurance companies of Butler County have been uniformly successful and at the present time there are seven of these companies in existence carrying fire insurance aggregating $10,000,000. One of the oldest companies in point of continuous service is the German Mutual Fire Insurance Company, of Zellenople. This company was incorporated April 4, 1866, and the present officers are Tobias Meeder, president, and J. Laderer, secretary.

The Glade Mills Mutual Fire Insurance Company was incorporated June 2, 1873, and is at the present time carrying policies amounting to about $1,000,000. The officers are D. H. Sutton, president; W. W. Hill, secretary; and Rev. A. Kilpatrick, treasurer. The home office is at Valencia.

The Worth Mutual Fire Insurance Company, which has offices at Slippery Rock, was incorporated January 13, 1875, and at the present time has about $1,500,000 insurance on its books. The officers are James Humphrey, president; and S. J. Taylor, secretary.

The Farmers' Mutual Insurance Company of Hannastown was incorporated March 23, 1860. F. W. Witte is president of the company and Alphonse Kranse, secretary. The offices of the company are at Marwood.

The Excelsior Mutual Fire Insurance Company was incorporated November 19, 1878, and has offices at North Washington. The president of the company in 1908 was Norman Glenn, and J. Harvey Bell was secretary.

The Butler Patrons' Mutual Fire Insurance Company was incorporated July 15, 1904, and is located in an agricultural community. The home office is at Euclid, and the officers of the company are R. C. Thompson, president, and O. G. McCandless, secretary.

The Butler County Merchants' Mutual Fire Insurance Company was organized September 17, 1902, by a number of merchants in Butler borough and the surrounding towns who rebelled against the high rate of insurance exacted by the old line companies. The leading spirit in the movement was G. D. Swain of Harmony, who was also the first president of the company. The first officers elected by the company in addition to the president, were Jacob Boos, of Butler, treasurer; and Harvey Colbert, of Butler, secretary. The company has been successful from the start, and now has about $1,000,000 of insurance on its books. It has made but three assessments since its organization, the last one being for one-fourth of one per cent., in 1908, which met all of the expenses for that year. The present officers of the company are: J. H. Harper of Butler, president; M. M. Heinzer, of Butler, treasurer, and Harvey Colbert, secretary. The board of directors is composed of James Barr of Prospect, Edwin Meeder of Zelenople, A. L. Reiber, J. H. Harper, and M. M. Heinzer, of Butler, A. Krause of Marwood, H. C. Litzinger, of Chicora, T. P. Mifflin, of North Washington, D. W. Humphrey of Harrisville, J. F. Shiever of Brinn, and J. E. Stroops, of Slippery Rock.

WATER COMPANIES.

Previous to 1877 the water supply of the town was obtained from springs and drilled wells. During that year Charles Duffy and Samuel G. Purvis were the prime movers in the project to form a water company, the former subscribing for eight hundred and ninety-two shares of the stock. On the 1st of November, 1887, a charter was granted for the Butler Water Company, with a capital stock of $49,000.00. The Company then contracted with James McCollough, Jr., of Kittanning, to construct a plant for $49,000.00, payable partly in cash and the balance in bonds and stock of the company. Mr. McCollough thus became the principal owner of stock, and had a controlling interest in the company until the time it was sold to the present owners. The company built a dam on the Comoqueenessing Creek above the old Reiber mill dam, from which the water was pumped to the reservoir constructed on the hill north of the Orphans' Home. The reservoir had a capacity of 3,000,000 gallons, which at that time was sufficient to last the town for several days. The plant was completed and the water turned in the lines in the fall of 1878. The officers of the company were W. D. Brandon, of Butler, president, and W. B. Meredith, of Kittanning, general superintendent, and J. H. Conard, manager. In 1896 the company had trouble with the supply of water, on account of the drilling operations carried on in the Boydstown oil field, and the consequent pollution of the water by salt water pumped in the oil wells, and in order to obviate this difficulty an impounding dam was constructed above Boydstown. This dam held a large supply of water which was sufficient for the requirements of the town at that time, and continued to be the sole source of supply for a number of years. In July, 1897, the plant was purchased by the American Water Works & Guaranty Company, who are the present owners. In order to meet the new conditions arising in the town from the erection of the large steel car plant, the water company constructed the Thorn Run dam in 1903. In 1902 large filter beds were constructed and the water supply for the town was filtered. The consumption of water daily in the town since 1902 is about 3,000,000 gallons daily. Since the typhoid fever epidemic in 1903-4, which was caused by extraordinary circumstances, the company has had monthly tests made of the water supply from both the Boydstown and Thorn Run dams, and the water has proved to be of a quality superior to any of the towns in the surrounding country. J. H. Conard, who was the first manager of the local plant, died in 1895, and was succeeded by M. F. Wright, who continued as manager until the 1st of October, 1908, when he was succeeded by the present manager, Mr. Watt.

The Mutual Water Company.—The South side of town is independent in respect to its water supply. In 1891 a number of residents of the first ward associated themselves together as the Mutual Water Association, organized for the purpose of building a reservoir and sinking wells. The capital stock of the concern was $12,000.00, and the official board consists of three trustees, and nine directors. Two wells were drilled at the top of the hill, and a strong supply of pure water was struck at 250 feet. The reservoir has a capacity of 3,000 barrels, and is supplied by the use of two hot-air pumps for raising the water from the wells. The association started with sixty-five consumers and about two miles of six-inch and four-inch water main, and the cost for the ordinary family has averaged about $1.00 per month. The first officers of the association were Prof. E. Mackey, president, and John Findley, secretary. The officers of the company in January, 1909, were C. C. Cochran, president; R. L. Aiken, secretary and manager; Dr. M. E. Headland, L. C. Wick and Philip Crouse, trustees. The company has a plant valued at about $40,000.00, and at the present time supplies over three hundred customers.

The East Oakland Mutual Water Association was organized in the fall of 1908 with the purpose of supplying the residents of Institute Hill and in the vicinity of the Orphans' Home property. Wells were drilled and over one hundred houses are supplied, the owners of which are subscribers to the association. The president of the association is J. H. Gibson; and the secretary, W. S. McKee.

The McGeary Water Plant is a private concern established by W. B. McGeary in the west end of town about 1895. The water is supplied from drilled wells, and the business had grown from a half a dozen consumers in 1895 to over one hundred and fifty in 1899. The plant is located on Fourth Avenue and supplies that part of the town lying east of Fourth Avenue to First Avenue.

Another private water plant that supplies about two hundred consumers is located in Duffytown north of New Castle Street. It is owned by S. B. Cross who first began supplying a few houses in his neighborhood from a private well, and in the course of four or five years had extended the plant to the present dimensions.

The Citizens' Mutual Water Company of the Fifth Ward was organized in the summer of 1908, and established a water plant by drilling wells on the hill north of the town, and supplying a large number of customers in the Fifth and Third Wards. The directors of the company elected for 1909 were as follows: For three years, C. E. Cronenwett, John H. Robb, Charles Barnhart and J. E. Forsythe; for two years, C. R. Miller, Daniel Lardin, Theodore Schenck and Jacob Painter; for one year, George Heckart, John Murrin, Dr. Thompson and Milton Miller. The president of the company is J. E. Forsythe, John Murrin was vice-president, Daniel Lardin, secretary, and C. E. Cronenwett, treasurer.

RAILROADS.

The history of the railroad systems of Butler appears in the chapter on Transportation, and need be but briefly referred to here. The first railroad to enter Butler borough was a branch of the Pennsylvania built from Freeport to Butler. Its opening for travel January 12, 1871, was made the occasion of a memorable demonstration. How near the construction of this road came to changing the complexion of the old town of Butler was related not long ago by Charles Duffy, who was one of the young business men of the town at that time, and took an active part in bringing the road here and locating the depot. Some difficulty was encountered in getting a site for the depot, as the owners of the real estate demanded high prices. One morning it was discovered that the chief engineer had received orders to locate the depot on the south side of the creek on land offered by William S. Boyd. This meant business disaster for the merchants of Main Street north of the Court House, who had anticipated making the corner of Main and Jefferson Streets the business center of the town. Mr. Duffy and others immediately got busy, raised sufficient money to purchase the present site of the depot on East Jefferson Street, and Mr. Duffy donated a right of way between that and the creek, thereby securing the terminus of the road for the old part of the town.

The troubles of the early merchants were not ended with the completion of the railroad. Being sole owners and possessors of everything in sight, the railroad company charged such high tariffs and acted so independently about accommodating the public that the town was little better off than it was in the days of the Plank Road freighters and stage coaches. An additional hardship was the fact that the freight house was closed at four o'clock in the afternoon, thus compelling the country merchants and others coming in from a long distance, to remain over night, unless they could get away before that hour in the afternoon.

Realizing that something had to be done, a number of business men made overtures to the officials of the Karns City and Parker Railroads, who were then contemplating extending their line to Millers-town, and thence to Great Belt. The result of this conference was that the company agreed to extend their line to Butler in consideration that Butler business men would subscribe to $50,000 of the railroad company's bonds. The required amount was subscribed after many delays and difficulties had been overcome, one of the business men becoming personally responsible to a number of subscribers for $15,000 worth of bonds. The completion of this road led to the extension of a branch of the Pittsburg, New Castle & Lake Erie Narrow Gauge Road from Callery Junction to Butler, and resulted in the long hoped for advantages in freight rates and railroad accommodations. The next road to enter the town was the Shenango & Allegheny, now the Bessemer, which was built from Branchton to Butler in 1882. The extension of the Bessemer Road south from Butler to North Bessemer was built in 1896-7, and this was followed in the next two years by the construction of the Buffalo, Rochester and Pittsburg Road from Punxsutawney to Butler.

The construction of the lines of the Butler Passenger Railway Company was commenced in 1900, and the electric railway from Butler to Pittsburg was completed in 1906. The Pittsburg, Harmony, Butler and New Castle Electric Railway entered Butler in July, 1908, and other electric lines are being promoted which in the course of a few years will connect the town with the principal cities north and east.

TELEGRAPH OFFICES, ETC.

The first telegraph office was opened in Butler in 1861. It was a crude affair and merely used as a testing station on the line between Pittsburg and Franklin. The first regular office to receive and transmit messages was opened in 1862 in the Lowry Hotel. This was also the first telegraph office to be opened in the county.

An office of the Postal Telegraph Cable Company was established in Butler in 1884, and is still in successful operation. This line was worked in connection with the McCabe-Bennett Cable Company and transmits messages to Europe.

The Bell Telephone Company established an exchange in Butler about 1888, and the People's Telephone Company had its inception in 1893. For a history of telephone companies in Butler and Butler county the reader is referred to the chapter on Public Utilities.

With the opening of the Butler Branch Railroad in 1871, the Adams Express Company opened an office in Butler. This was followed by the Wells Fargo, the United States and the American Express Companies.

BOARD OF TRADE, ETC.

The Butler Board of Trade was organized December 9, 1896, for the purpose of helping along any industries then in Butler, and to make an effort to secure new ones of a desirable nature that would aid in building up the town. As a consequence of this effort on the part of Butler's business men, the town has grown from a population of about 10,000 until it now has a population in the neighborhood of 25,000.

The first regular meeting of the board was held December 22, 1896, when the following officers and directors were elected for that year: President, J. Henry Troutman; vice-presidents, Joseph Hartman and Peter Schenk; secretary, Ira McJunkin; treasurer, William Campbell, and a board of directors composed of one member from each ward. At the annual meeting held on January 28, 1898, the board of directors was increased to fifteen, being three from each ward. The officers chosen that year were: President, J. M. Leighner; vice-presidents, C. N. Boyd and J. H. Troutman; treasurer, William Campbell; secretary, George W. Shiever. On January 26, 1899, W. G. Douthett was chosen president; A. G. Williams and William C. Thompson, vice-presidents; John W. Brown, treasurer; and W. F. Rumberger, secretary. In January, 1900, the old officers were re-elected with the exception of W. J. McDowell being elected first vice-president in the place of A. G. Williams.

In January, 1901, W. C. Thompson was elected president, T. J. Shufflin and Daniel Younkens, vice-presidents; John C. Graham, secretary; and C. N. Boyd, treasurer. From 1901 to 1905 there were few important changes made in the organization of the board. In the latter year William H. Miller was elected president; H. B. Snaman, vice-president; John C. Graham, secretary, and Peter Duffy, treasurer. In January, 1906, the officers chosen were L. B. Stein, president; C. A. Abrams, vice-president; John C. Graham, secretary, and H. B. Snaman, treasurer. The officers of 1907 were those of the previous year. The organization at the close of 1908 was as follows: President, L. B. Stein; vice-presidents, M. E. Headland, J. H. Whiteside; secretary, John C. Graham; treasurer, Elias Ritts.

During the thirteen years of its existence the board has done excellent work in securing manufacturing plants and advertising and promoting the interests of the community. It has also been watchful of the interests of the public, and has been the means of preventing the people of the town from being imposed upon by promoters of fake enterprises and speculative schemes. In so far as they have been able they have assisted financially and otherwise legitimate manufacturing enterprises in locating in Butler, and have promoted in every way possible the business interests of the town. One of the first enterprises brought here by the board was the American Mirror Works located on the Southside in 1896. This plant is still in operation, employing a large number of men. The National Cigar Company, which employed a large number of people for several years, was brought here in 1898.

In 1899 the board secured the location of the Davis White Lead Works. Charles Duffy donated the land needed on Fairground Avenue, and the Bessemer and Lake Erie Railroad laid the switch. One-fourth of the capital stock of $100,000 was subscribed by Butler people, and the four-story brick plant erected, which employed about 100 men until the company was absorbed by the trust and the factory closed.

During 1900 the board purchased three and a half acres of land from Judge Bredin for the location of a pickle factory. Considerable stock was subscribed by Butler people, and a large factory erected at the junction of Pierce Avenue and the Bessemer Railroad. The ground and factory was purchased in 1902 by the Standard Steel Car Company. The same year an eastern concern came before the board with a proposition to establish a silk mill. After some consideration the proposal of the eastern parties was turned down, and members of the board afterwards took the matter up themselves and organized the company that is now operated as the Butler Silk Mill on First Street. The same year the board secured the machine shops of George A. Spang, which were moved from Renfrew and located on Etna Street, and have since developed a large plant operated by George A. Spang & Company.

Through the efforts of the board in advertising the advantages of Butler as a manufacturing center, the securing of Pittsburg freight rates at this point, the attention of manufacturers was turned in this direction in 1901-2, and resulted in the establishing of the large plant of the Standard Steel Car Company in Butler in the spring of 1902. In 1905 the board closed their contract with the Pittsburg Dry Goods Company, which was operating a shirt factory on South Washington Street, and in its place secured the plant of Becker Brothers, which is still in operation and employing about fifty people.

During the past six years the board has assisted a number of small manufacturing concerns in the way of securing leases, manufacturing sites and along other lines that would help benefit the town industrially. No large bonuses have been paid for the location of plants, and the matter of subscribing to the capital stock of the various plants brought here has been left to the judgment of the people after the concern has decided to locate. The board opened the year in 1909 with an increase of membership, and a number of propositions before it for consideration.

The Business Men's Association of Butler borough was organized in 1906 and incorporated in 1908. It comprises practically all of the business houses of the town, as well as members of the professions. The purpose of the association is the mutual protection of its members as well as the promotion of the business interests of the town and community. The officers of the association in 1908 were W. A. Stein, president; A. C. Krug, vice-president; B. H. Jack, secretary; and W. G. Douthett, treasurer. The advisory board was composed of C. A. Templeton, W. A. Fisher, A. M. Reiber, Dr. W. S. DeWolfe, H. S. Klingler, George Whitehill, P. W. Ruff, L. G. Moore, H. B. Snaman and W. A. Stein.

The Grocers' Association was organized in 1899, and has enrolled as its members all of the grocerymen of the borough and Lyndora. The association meets once a week and arranges a schedule of prices and attends to such other business as may come before it. A social feature of the organization is the annual outing, which has been held in August of each year since 1900. The present officers of the association are Howard Reiber, president; and William Kirkpatrick, secretary.

The Butler Chamber of Commerce is a new organization of business men that had its inception in the fall of 1908. The officers elected in January, 1909, were A. M. Christley, president; D. K. Albright, vice-president; Daniel Younkins, vice-president; Newton T. McCollough, secretary; and D. A. Sutton, treasurer. Ward committees were appointed, and the new society started out with a membership of over one hundred. The new organization does not conflict with the old Board of Trade, and hopes to accomplish a great deal for the town along lines which the old organization was not able to pursue.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

The first public building erected in the borough was the Court House of 1807, which was followed by a new court house in 1853, and the present edifice, which was erected in 1884. A history of these various edifices and views of the same appear in another chapter. The Butler County General Hospital, the County Home, and Public School Buildings and the various churches are also elsewhere described. The first steps towards procuring a city building have been taken by the town council in the purchase of a lot on West North Street, and the proposition to issue bonds for the purpose of erecting a suitable building will soon be submitted to the citizens of the town. In 1902 the government purchased a lot on the corner of Washington and West Jefferson Streets to be used as the site for a federal building.

In the early days public meetings were held in the court house or in some one of the churches. Public places of amusement were out of the question, as only a few halls could be found in the town and they were not suited for theatrical purposes. About 1881 T. J. McCandless, W. C. Thompson, and others, secured the old Lutheran church property on the corner of East Wayne and South McKean Streets, now occupied by the Evans Manufacturing Company and the McDowell Steam Laundry, and remodeled the building for theatrical purposes. This answered the purposes of the town until September, 1891, when it was destroyed by fire. In the meantime it had passed through several hands and at the time it was burned the property was owned by Andrew Root of Butler.

The Armory Building, also known as Park Theater, had its inception March 11, 1891, when the Armory Building Association was incorporated by John W. Brown, president, W. T. Mechling, secretary, S. H. Huselton, treasurer, and Ira McJunkin. The building was erected the same year, but before its completion the old opera house on McKean Street was burned and the company converted the new Armory building into a theater. This was accomplished by the erection of an addition to the rear and placing the armory on the third floor, thus serving the double purpose of an armory and an opera house. The opera house was on the first floor, the second floor was used for offices, and the third floor was occupied by Company E, Fifteenth Regiment, and later by Company L, Sixteenth Regiment. On July 30, 1894, the Park Theater Company of Butler were granted a charter with a capital stock of $45,000. The officers of the company were Jno. W. Brown, president; George Schenck, vice-president; W. T. Mechling, secretary; Peter Schenck, treasurer; Ira McJunkin, George Ketterer and William H. O'Brien, directors. November 20, 1903, the Park Theater building was destroyed by fire and for the year following the town was without a public place of amusement or a large hall in which to hold public meetings other than the court house.

The Majestic Theater Company was incorporated by George A. Troutman, Jacob Keck, T. C. H. Keck, George Burkhalter, and P. L. King, in January, 1904, and the same month the Byerly and Krug properties on the corner of East Cunningham and McKean Streets were purchased and preparations were commenced for the erection of a theater. The plans for the building were prepared by Porter & Gaisford of Butler, and the contract awarded to the Builders' Supply Company. The work was rushed as rapidly as possible, and the theater part of the building was formally opened on the 16th of November, the same year. The building is 64x123 feet, and in addition to the theater, which is on the ground floor, has a large hall that is used as an armory by the local military company and for public assemblies. The building is an imposing-looking structure, modern in architecture, thoroughly equipped, and represents an investment of about $85,000.00. The present officers of the company are George A. Troutman, president; T. C. H. Keck, secretary and treasurer; and George Burkhalter, manager.

TAVERNS AND HOTELS.

In the winter of 1803-4 there were only two taverns in the village of Butler. At the February session of court held in 1804 by Judge Moore, licenses were granted to William Ayres and James Thompson to keep public houses. As the granting of a license implied the right to sell liquor, it is to be inferred that these two were the first regularly authorized landlords in the town. At the May term of court in 1804, tavern licenses were granted to John Moser, Robert Graham, George Bowers and William Brown. Thus within one year from the building of the first houses, Butler had six taverns. From that time to the present many persons have been engaged in the business.

Among the oldest was Adam Funk, who kept a log tavern facing the Diamond, for which he got a license in 1805. This house stood on the present site of the Nixon Hotel, and is said to have been the building in which the first courts were held.

"The Buck" was a famous old tavern that occupied the present site of the Park Hotel. Its proprietor was Patrick Kelley, who was famous as a landlord. A stately buck with branching antlers was painted on the sign of this hotel, and it was from this sign that the tavern got its name. This tavern was the favorite resort of the local militia on muster days, and also a place for holding political meetings.

The sign of "The Rising Sun" on South Main Street was a noted hotel kept by David Scott. This hotel occupied the site of the present Arlington Hotel, and was erected at an early date, previous to 1820. Scott was a man noted for kindness of heart, and his guests often took advantage of him. He was succeeded by Abraham M. Neyman. The latter, with his son Thomas, was killed by the falling of a tree April 12, 1827. This accident was one of the tragedies of the early days. Neyman and his wife and two children, one an infant in its mother's arms, were returning from the country in a wagon when they were overtaken by a storm. A tree fell across the road, crashing into the wagon and killing Mr. Neyman and his son. The mother and the infant escaped miraculously. The infant grew to manhood, and is known today as the venerable Dr. A. M. Neyman, living in retirement on Oak Street.

"The Rising Sun" afterwards passed through several hands, in 1848 William Vogeley becoming the proprietor. The name was changed to the Vogeley House. In 1867 Mr. Vogeley retired and William H. Ensminger became the lessee to the property. He was succeeded in turn by Jacob Fiedler, Geo. W. Campbell, Beck & Faubel and C. Snodgrass. In July, 1892, the house was purchased by Capt. Herman Leibold from the Vogeley heirs, and he conducted the hotel until 1907, when the property was purchased by A. Rockenstein, who is the present proprietor. The present brick building was erected in 1833.

The Mansion House.—Soon after the town was laid out, Abraham Brinker, who was one of the notable pioneers, erected a log building which stood on the site of the old Citizen and Record offices on South Diamond, facing the court house. He was granted a hotel license in 1805, and continued as proprietor of "The Mansion House" until 1809, when he sold the property to Jacob Mechling, one of the leading citizens of the town. Under the latter's administration this hotel obtained a wide reputation, and was a stopping place for many distinguished citizens of the country travelling on their way from Pittsburg to Erie. It was at this house that Gen. Lafayette was entertained on June 1, 1825, while enroute from Pittsburg to Erie and Canada.

Andrew Birns was the successor of Jacob Mechling as proprietor of the Mansion House. He conducted the place for a number of years, when it was closed as a place of public entertainment.

First Temperance House.—One of the first taverns of the town was built by William Brown on the site of Miss Sarah Mequistion's residence on South Main Street, recently purchased by the Masonic order. The house now standing was the rear part of the old hotel building. Brown was granted a license in May, 1804, and ran the business until succeeded by Samuel Marquis, Rudolph Kelker and John M. Zimmermann. Bennett Dobbs came later and converted it into a temperance house, the first in the town. The old building came into possession of the late John Negley about 1850, when the front part of it was torn down.

The Willard Hotel.—A log building was erected on the site of the present Willard Hotel at an early date, which was used for tavern purposes, but the early proprietors are not now known. Jacob Brinker, a son of Abraham Brinker, erected the first brick building about 1834 or 1835, and carried on the hotel business for a long period. He was succeeded by several others, among them W. J. Reihing, who remodeled the building and enlarged it to its present capacity. He conducted the house until his death in 1890, after which his widow continued the business for a short time. George W. Campbell purchased the property and conducted the hotel for two or three years, when Mrs. Mattie Reihing again became the owner. Kemp and Kline were the lessees until 1903, when Mrs. Reihing took charge, remodeled the building, and is at present conducting the business.

The Black Horse.—One of the noted hotels previous to the Civil War was "The Black Horse," which stood on the corner of Cunningham and Main Streets, and was owned by Patrick Haggerty previous to 1826. Haggerty was succeeded by his sons William and Alexander, and after the Civil War a hotel was conducted at this place by Patrick Kelley, until 1872 or 73, when John Hackett became the lessee and conducted the business until 1884. The property was then sold to A. & H. Reiber, who erected the Reiber block.

The Beatty House.—Another famous tavern that existed about the middle of the last century was "The Beatty House," which stood on the site now occupied by the Troutman Block and J. G. & W. Campbell's store. The sign was an American eagle with extended wings surrounded by thirteen stars. In some respects the "Eagle" was the leading public house of its day. It was in successful operation as early as 1828 and continued to be one of the leading hotels until after the advent of the railroads and the old stage line from Butler to Erie had been abandoned. Mr. Beatty, the first proprietor, was a man of dignity and high integrity, who would allow no disorderly characters about the premises. In 1848 he sold the hotel property to Jacob Reiber, and in 1850 Col. Alexander Lowry became the owner and conducted the house until 1863, when he sold the property to Benjamin Jack, who conducted it for a few years, and then discontinued the business.

The Lowry Hotel.—Previous to 1820 a log building was erected on Jefferson Street near the corner of Main, which was afterwards clapboarded and given the appearance of a frame house. In 1820 Col. Francis McBride opened the place as a tavern, and gave it the name of the "United States." Subsequently a frame addition was built on the corner. In 1849 the property was purchased by H. Julius Klinger, who, in 1852, removed the old log and frame building and erected the first three-story brick hotel building in the borough. Plummer Jack became the owner in 1864, and he in turn sold the property to Col. Alexander Lowry, who changed the name of the hotel to the Lowry House. Col. Lowry and his son, John F. Lowry, carried on the business until 1890, with the exception of a few years that Cross & McOmber were the proprietors. In the latter year the property was sold to Thompson & Brown, after building an addition to the Jefferson Street side of the building. The new owners built another addition to the Main Street side of the building, involving an expenditure of about $20,000, and conducted the business until August, 1894, when W. J. McCafferty and D. W. McCrea became the lessees of the property. Morgan and Phillip Davis next became the owners of the property and the lessees under them were Louis Weisberg and W. A. Kemp. Charles H. Hosford purchased the property from the Davis brothers in 1904 and conducted the business until February, 1907, when Ralph Gregg, the present owner and proprietor, took charge.

The Butler Hotel on South Main Street dates back to 1840, when it was known as the Swaney House. At this period Christian Otto was the proprietor, and continued to run the place for a number of years. Subsequently the building was converted into offices and a dwelling, and was used for that purpose until about 1887, when Henry Eitemiller established a hotel. He was succeeded by Harry Faubel and Andrew Root, and they in turn by the present proprietor, D. F. McCrea.

Park Hotel.—The building now occupied as the Park Hotel was originally the dwelling house of Maurice Bredin, who also conducted a store in the same building. It was converted into a hotel by Henry Eitemiller in 1873, who conducted it for a number of years and then sold it to James Sellers. Sellers was succeeded by Frank Clark, and he in turn by T. B. Humes, Joseph Shirley, Ralph Gregg, William Kennedy, and Louis Weisberg, the latter being the present proprietor.

The old Schreiber House on North Main Street, kept by Adam Schreiber, was one of the well known taverns in the days of the early oil excitement at the beginning of the seventies. William Boyd erected a large hotel building at the corner of Zeigler Avenue and Center Avenue on the Southside, which was used for a hotel in the seventies, but after the decline of the Greece City oil boom the building was converted into a dwelling.

The Rowce House was one of the old time taverns that existed in the days of the stage coach, but went out of business with the advent of the railroad. The building is still standing at the foot of South Main Street, opposite the hospital.

Nixon's Home was a place of public entertainment that had a wide reputation in the last decade of the nineteenth century. The building was located on the site of the Methodist Episcopal parsonage on North McKean Street, and the proprietor of the place for years was Simeon Nixon.

The name tavern is no longer applied to public houses, and such places are now known only as hotels. In their equipment and style the modern hotel is far superior to the tavern of seventy-five years ago, and it is doubtful if there is any more good cheer dispensed today or a guest received with more genuine cordiality than he was by the inn-keepers of the fifties. Butler has not suffered from the transition from the tavern to the modern hotel. The hotels of today have kept pace with the improvements of the town, and take rank with the cities of larger and more pretentious conditions and surroundings. The old time taverns and hotels above enumerated are all the creations of the past century. The beginning of the new century has marked a number of modern hotel buildings which are in keeping with the new conditions and surroundings of the town. In enumerating the hotels of 1909, the Lowry, Willard, Arlington, Park and Butler Houses may be said to belong to the past decades, but their proprietors have kept pace with the times, and these hotels are numbered among the leading places of public entertainment in this section. The following list comprises hotels that have been erected in the present decade, and mark a new era in hotel building in Butler.

The New Nixon faces the public square from the south, and occupies the site of one of the first taverns of the town—the Adam, Funk house. Subsequently the property was occupied by a dwelling house until 1892, when the Park Theater and Armory were erected. The fire of November 20, 1903, destroyed the theater and Armory and the following year Nixon Brothers bought the plot of ground fronting 65 feet on Diamond street and running through to the alley in the rear, 200 feet. The present hotel building is a buff brick structure, five stories high, including the basement, and covers the entire plat 200x 65 feet. One of the features is the roof garden, overlooking the Park and giving an excellent view of the town. The building is equipped with steam heat, elevators, private baths in each of the 125 bed rooms, telephones and all of the conveniences of the modern hotels of the big cities.

The new hotel is the successor of the Central Hotel, which was established by Mrs. Jennie Nixon on the southside of the Diamond about 1896. Subsequently the business was conducted by her sons, Simeon and J. B. Nixon, until the new hotel was completed in 1906. The New Nixon is at the present time under the management of Simeon Nixon.

The Hotel Bowman is the only public house on the Southside. It is located on Center Avenue and was erected in 1898 by Jacob Bowman, who conducted the business for several years, when G. C. Haworth became the proprietor. The hotel is a three-story brick structure, containing thirty rooms with all modern improvements. Mr. Haworth conducted the business until October, 1907, when C. C. Reeder, the present proprietor, took charge.

The New Monroe Hotel on East Jefferson Street opposite the West Penn Depot, occupies the site of the old West Penn House, which was a noted place of public entertainment during the palmy days of the oil excitement in Greece City and Chicora. The new hotel is a three-story pressed brick building, containing fifty-two bed rooms, and represents an investment of about $80,000. It is equipped with electric lights, gas and steam heat, telephone service, and is in every way modern in all its appointments. The property is owned by J. H. Harvey, who for five years was proprietor of the old Monroe Hotel on the corner of Monroe and East Jefferson Streets. The new hotel was erected in 1908, and was opened to the public the first of March, 1909.

The Atlas Hotel at the corner of Center Avenue and McKean Street was erected by C. H. Geis and Joseph Franklin in 1907. It is a splendid brick building containing twenty-two bed rooms, a commodious dining room, and is equipped with gas and electric lights, steam heat, telephone service, and baths. The present proprietor of the hotel under lease is ex-

Sheriff A. M. Campbell, who took charge in January, 1909.

The Keystone Hotel at the corner of Center Avenue and Cliff Street, was erected in 1906, by Hugh A. McNamee, who is the present proprietor. It is a three-story brick building, containing forty-five bed rooms, and all of the modern conveniences. It has been run as a temperance house since it was opened.

The Hotel Clinton on the corner of Race Street and First Avenue was erected in 1906 by Earl D. Clinton, who previous to that time had conducted the Standard Hotel on Fairground Avenue. The building is three stories high, constructed of Shawnee mottled brick, and brown stone trimmings. It contains thirty-five bed rooms, and is equipped with steam heat, gas and electric lights, telephone service, and baths. The interior is finished in hard wood, and the floor of the office is laid in tile. This hotel is conveniently located to the P. H. B. & N. C. and P. & B. Electric Railways, and besides caring for a liberal transient trade, makes a specialty of banquets and receptions.

The Commercial Hotel on West Jefferson Street was established in 1906 by J. C. Moser, who purchased during that year the Steelsmith building and the property of John Lefevre. The buildings on the Lefevre property were torn down, and an addition was built to the three-story brick building on the Steelsmith lot. The hotel was opened to the public about January 1, 1906, and has since that time enjoyed a large share of the public patronage. It is equipped with all modern conveniences, and is noted for the excellence of its table. This hotel is much patronized by the theatrical profession.

The Lyndora Hotel, located at the junction of Pierce Avenue and the lower Butler Road in the edge of Lyndora, was erected during the summer of 1902, by C. H. Geis, P. A. McCool and F. X. Kohler. The building is a frame structure three stories high, containing twenty-five bed rooms, a large dining room, and a bar in the basement. The first proprietor of the hotel was Charles Geis, who operated it under a lease. Subsequently the property was purchased by P. A. McCool, and in 1907, C. D. Shreiner became the owner of the property, and has since conducted the hotel business.

The Waldron. The building occupied by the Waldron Hotel in Lyndora was first erected in 1903 and occupied for a short time as a theater. In 1906 the building was remodeled and constructed into a hotel by J. Brown Nixon, who is the present proprietor. The building is two and a half stories high, contains fifteen bed rooms, steam heat, gas and electric lights, and baths on each floor. The hotel has a large dining room on the first floor, and a bar in the basement.

The Wick House, the Waverly and the Williams House are well known public houses run on the temperance plan, that have a large share of the public patronage.

EARLY MANUFACTURES.

The first manufactory in the present limits of Butler Borough is what is now known as the Walter Mill on the Connoquenessing Creek, at the foot of Washington Street. The original mill was a log building erected in 1802 by Samuel and John Cunningham, and it may be mentioned as a historical fact that the title to the land can be traced back to Robert Morris, of Revolutionary fame. The Cunninghams had a cabin near the mill called the mill-house on the early maps of the town and it was at this cabin that the commissioners were entertained who came to Butler to locate the county seat. The Cunningham brothers sold the mill to John Negley, one of Butler's pioneers, who in later years was the promoter of a number of the industries of the town. At the time of this purchase the mill property was in Butler Township outside of the limits of the borough. Mr. Negley owned and carried on the mill for nearly thirty years. During this time he added to it a large woolen mill which was operated by his brother-in-law, Malachi Richardson. A cabinet-making shop was also one of the enterprises promoted by Mr. Negley, and in 1832 he established a salt manufacturing plant between the mill site and South Main Street, which was operated for a number of years. Between 1816 and 1826 Mr. Negley lived in the log house near the mill which had been built by the Cunninghams. The primitive mill was operated by water power and was rudely equipped, the machinery consisting of a set of old-fashioned stone buhrs which served the settlers well at that time. In 1833 Mr. Negley sold the mill to Robert McNair and Brothers, who carried it on for fifteen years. The old building was torn down and a new mill erected in 1840, which was operated by steam. In 1842 a fire destroyed the entire plant, but the flouring part of it was immediately rebuilt and is a part of the present structure. In 1848 it became the property of William Beatty, who in turn sold it to John McCarnes, who carried it on until 1856. In 1857 the interests of McCarnes and Beatty were conveyed to Jacob Walter and John C. Grohman, who carried it on until the death of Mr. Walter in 1865. At this time the mill had a capacity of about forty barrels of flour per day. Mr. Walter was succeeded by his son, George Walter, and the firm became Walter & Grohman. Jacob Boos bought the interests of John C. Grohman in 1872, and the firm then became Walter & Boos. In 1890 Mr. Walter became the sole owner, and associated with him his sons, J. A. and C. E. Walter, the firm becoming George Walter & Sons. The present building is 44x 60 feet, four stories in height and operated entirely by steam. The old mill dam, which was a feature of the town for almost a century, has been abandoned. The roller system is now in use in the mill, which has a capacity of sixty barrels of wheat flour, three hundred bushels of buckwheat per day, and two tons of chop per hour. Mr. Walter remained in charge until his death in 1902, and since that time the business has been carried on by the sons under the old firm name. This firm has an extensive country trade and also does a large business in builders' supplies. Buckwheat flour from this mill is shipped all over the United States.

The Reiber Grist Mill on the Connoquenessing Creek, north of the Walter Mill about one mile, was built in 1842 by Archibald McCall, a wealthy Philadelphia merchant and land agent. He sold it to Thomas Frazier who ran it for a short period and the property then passed into the hands of Clymer and Mylert. In 1856 the property was purchased by George Reiber who operated the plant up until 1895. During this period the mill was remodeled and improved three times and in addition to the buhr system it contained the full roller process and had a daily capacity of one hundred barrels of flour. Mr. Reiber also carried on a distillery in connection with the mill for a few years, and later he erected a distillery closer to the railroad which he operated until 1873. About 1890 Mr. Reiber took into partnership with himself his three sons, Edward, George L. and Henry Reiber, under the firm name of George Reiber & Sons. The construction of the Bessemer & Lake Erie Railroad in 1897 and the extension of the railroad yards in the vicinity of the mill property was the means of destroying the large country patronage of this mill and the plant was finally closed.

The Oriental Mills. In 1867 H. J. Klingler erected a mill on Mifflin Street known as Klingler's Mill. In 1883-4 the mill was remodeled and enlarged when the present title, the Oriental Mills, was adopted. The capacity of the first mill was sixty barrels per day. The old buhr system operated by steam power was in use until 1884, when the roller system was adopted. The present building is 40x45 feet, three stories high, with cupola and iron roof, and an annex of 28x80 feet. The capacity of the mill is 150 barrels per day. In 1886 the firm name was changed to H. J. Klingler & Company, Harry S. and Fred J. Klingler becoming partners with their father. In 1897 Fred J. Klingler retired, and since that time H. J. Klingler and Harry S. Klingler have composed the firm of H. J. Klingler & Company, of which Harry S. Klingler is the general manager. In 1889 the firm built the Specialty Roller Mills near the West Penn depot, and have since carried on both mills very successfully. In 1903 the building at the West Penn depot was enlarged by the addition of a grain elevator, which is fully equipped with modern machinery, and the Millin Street mill was also improved by the installation of a complete new roller process which increased the output of the mill and enhanced the value of the product.

EARLY TANNERIES.

One of the earliest and leading industries of the town was the tanning business. A pioneer tannery was located on the corner of East Jefferson and Franklin Streets, and started soon after the town was laid out. The second tannery was established by Hugh McKee on the site of Berg's bank, on the corner of Main and Jefferson Streets, and was an extensive plant for those days. It was the largest manufacturing institution in the town for many years.

In 1841 Conrad Roessing opened a tannery on North Washington Street, between Clay and Pearl, which he operated until 1886, when the property was purchased by Henry Wagner. Soon after the buildings were removed and dwelling houses took the place of the tannery.

For many years William McQuiston operated a tannery on South Washington Street on the property now owned by Levingston McQuiston and Mrs. L. Beaumont. Abdiel Martin carried on the tanning business in Butler about the same time, on West Cunningham Street on the Jacob Lawall property. William Mardorf commenced the tanning business about 1870 at the foot of West Cunningham Street and continued the business until about 1888.

WOOLEN MILLS.

The pioneer woolen-mill and carding factory was established by John Negley about 1810, and was operated by Malachi Richardson. About 1833 O. G. Croy and George W. Smith operated a woolen mill which stood on the north side of Jefferson Street, between Main and McKean Streets, in the neighborhood of the Weisner property. This mill was the first of the kind in the limits of the borough, and the power was furnished by a horse-tread mill. What was long known as the Union Woolen Mills on the south side of the creek, was erected in 1842 by William J. Ayres. After conducting it a few years he sold it to William P. Mackey, who used a part of the building for a grist-mill. John H. Thompson was the next owner, and in 1861 the plant was purchased by Hugh Fullerton who operated it as a woolen-mill until his death in 1892. The mill was operated for about a year after Mr. Fullerton's death by James Fullerton, and in 1894 the building was sold to J. B. Sherman who converted it into a machine shop.

In 1812 John Gilmore brought a carding machine to Butler, which was operated for many years and was of great utility to the people of the community. It was the custom of the farmers to bring their wool to the carding machine and have it carded into long rolls. It was the duty of the women during the long winter evenings to spin the yarn from which socks and woolen garments were made for the use of the family. This was also the custom in the town as well as in the country and nearly all of the woolen goods were manufactured in this way.

PIONEER FOUNDRIES.

The pioneer foundry was established by John and Alfred McCarnes about 1840 or 1841. They carried on the business until 1847, when James G. and William Campbell purchased an interest and five years later became sole owners of the plant. In the early days the foundry manufactured plows, stoves, and did a general line of work that met the requirements of the community. The plant is still operated by the heirs of the Campbell estate, and does a general line of foundry work. The foreman in charge of the plant, who is one of the oldest foundrymen in the town, is Philip Crouse.

A few years after the Campbell foundry was started, Carns and McJunkin established a foundry at the corner of North Washington and West Clay Streets. This property was purchased by H. J. Klingler and Martin Reiber in 1859, and after passing through a number of ownerships, ceased operations about 1875.

About 1850 S. Tinker established a foundry and shops for the manufacture of farm implements and threshing machines on Mifflin Street, adjoining the Klingler Mills. About 1865 the plant was purchased by William Bauer, who manufactured farm implements for many years. Originally the shops extended from Mifflin to North Street and a large number of men were employed. The shops have long since been abandoned, but the foundry part is still operated on a small scale by Mr. Bauer.

STANDARD PLATE GLASS WORKS.

The first large manufacturing enterprise of importance to be started in Butler was the Standard Plate Glass Works on the Southside, which were opened July 30, 1887, when the first pot was taken from the furnace and cast into the molds. Ten plates, each 9-16 of an inch thick, 12 feet long and 6 feet wide, were cast and tempered, and within the ensuing week twenty pots were rolled and tempered daily, and a force of 140 men were employed. The first large plate produced here was purchased by D. H. Wuller for the window of his store on South Main Street, now known as Wuller's Pharmacy.

The local stockholders and originators of this industry were J. H. Shields, H. J. Klingler, Rev. William A. Nolan, William A. Stein, J. Henry Troutman, William Campbell, Jr., and John Kirkpatrick, while the non-resident stockholders were R. C. Schmertz, W. A. Schmertz, A. F. Chandler, Jas. A. Chambers, H. S. McKee, Simon Cameron, Morton McMichael, and E. K. Jamison. A. C. Boyd, who was the first manager of the plant, was also one of the first stockholders. The first officers were H. J. Klingler, president; R. C. Schmertz, vice-president; A. F. Chandler, secretary and treasurer. R. Brockman, who introduced glass-grinding machinery in France, was manager, and under his direction there were four hundred workers from France, Belgium and Germany.

Since the inauguration of this industry many changes have been made in the official board. James A. Chambers succeeded Mr. Klingler as president the second year, and in January, 1893, J. T. Hamilton of Pittsburg, was elected president, a position which he still holds. A. F. Chandler, the first secretary, was succeeded by E. J. Howard, and he in turn by J. Henry Troutman of Butler. Mr. Chandler was also the first treasurer, and when he retired from the secretaryship, W. A. Schmertz of Pittsburg was elected to position of treasurer. Subsequently these two offices were united, and at the present time J. Henry Troutman is the treasurer and secretary. The office of manager was first filled by A. C. Boyd, next by R.

Brockman, and subsequently by D. E. Wheeler, Edmund Brown, H. A. Tilton, and George F. Neale. The latter was succeeded in July, 1907, by Daniel K. Albright. In 1891 the office of superintendent was abolished, being merged into that of general manager.

The railroad privileges enjoyed by the company are all that can be desired. Tracks lead to every large building, where machinery for handling and delivery of raw material and loading the finished product is of modern design. The company owns its own gas plant, and one of the wells drilled by this concern is the deepest exploration for gas or oil in Butler County. At the beginning of the industry, the fire-clay for the manufacture of pots was obtained from Missouri, while the melting-sand was taken from Mapleton, Pennsylvania. Today much of the melting-sand is procured in Butler County, and nearly all of the material, much of which was imported a few years ago, is now obtained within the State, with the exception of sulphate of soda, which is secured at Syracuse, New York. When the works were first operated the buildings covered three and one-half acres of ground. They have been extended from time to time, until today they cover an area of about ten acres. The original output has been increased from one million feet per year to four million feet. During the winter of 1908-9 a large addition was built to the main factory, and new machinery installed that materially increases the output. At the present time the plant is employing five hundred men, and the pay roll aggregates $350,000.00 a year. The present officers of the company are James T. Hamilton, of Pittsburg, president; John F. Anderson, of Butler, vice-president; J. H. Troutman, secretary and treasurer; and D. K. Albright, general manager. The above officers with the following compose the directors: Hon. John M. Kennedy, of Pittsburg; A. M.

Imbrie, of Pittsburg; George A. Kim, of Pittsburg; and John S. Campbell, of Butler.

The quality of glass produced by this factory is superior to that of the majority of the factories in the United States, and the local concern finds a ready market for all the glass it can produce, and has kept the works running night and day for the past ten years.

One of the feats performed by this factory was the casting of the big lens for the observatory at Washington, D. C., in 1898. This lens is the largest glass reflecting lens in the world, and the work of casting it was accomplished with much difficulty.

HAMILTON BOTTLE WORKS.

The Hamilton Bottle Works had their beginning in the fall of 1882, when Dominick Ihmsen established an eight-pot furnace on the site of the present plant. About a year later the Butler Flint Bottle Company, Limited, was organized, embracing ten glass workers, and the Ihmsen plant purchased. The company was composed of the following persons: D. Ihmsen, president; W. J. McKee, secretary and treasurer; Conrad Smith, John Smith, John Farel, James J. Hayes, John W. Vogel and A. P. McKee. In June, 1888, the works were burned, and on August 30th following, the Butler Glass Company, Limited, was organized. Charles Duffy was president and Thomas H. Gallagher, secretary. They, with John W. Vogel, James J. Hayes, Peter Vogel, John F. Lowry, Jacob Faller, Michael Buechle, Mrs. E. Grieb, William Aland, Albert Hammen, Frank Simper, John Kiehn, Peter Kiehn, John Kappler and J. H. Troutman, were the stockholders. A building was erected on the original site and the works were carried on about one year and then sold to the Hamilton Brothers, who have since operated the plant very successfully. In October, 1893, the buildings were partially burned, but they have since been rebuilt and equipped in first class order. The works contain one twelve and one eight-pot furnace, and all kinds of flint prescription bottles are manufactured. The fuel used is natural gas, supplied by the firm's wells in Center Township, whence the fluid is piped to the works.

The Standard Steel Car Company, which has been an important factor in the development of Butler, was incorporated January 2, 1902, with a capital of $3,000,000. This was subsequently increased to $4,000,000. The incorporators and principal stockholders of the company are residents of Pittsburg, and the officers of the corporation at the time of its organization were J. M. Hansen, president; A. R. Fraser, vice-president and treasurer; and A. S. Valentine, secretary. In April, 1902, the company purchased a tract of land in the Third Ward of Butler Borough, lying between Fairground Avenue and the Pierce Road, and extending from Pillow Street to the Creek, for a manufacturing site, and at the same time purchased the John McElroy farm southwest of the borough in Butler Township, for a town site. The manufacturing site in the borough includes the properties owned by J. Geo. Stamm, on which the brick factory stood, Charles Duffy, Mrs. Caroline Pillow, James Bredin, the Butler Savings Bank, the heirs of Thos. Stehle, Mrs. Ellen McShane, and T. J. Shufflin. The latter purchase was a tract of three and one-half acres that belonged to the Butler Pickle Factory. The company also purchased the leases and plant of the old Butler Fair Association, and occupied the old fair grounds as the site for their first buildings. The erection of the plant was accomplished in record-breaking time. Ground was broken for the large plant on the 20th of April, and the works were completed and the first cars turned out on the 1st of October, 1902. The excavation was done by David Winters & Son, of Pittsburg, the foundation work was done by Hugh Ferguson, and the structural iron work by the McIntock-Marshall Company of Pittsburg. The main building erected at that time was sixteen hundred feet long and four hundred feet wide. A large power-house and machine shops were also erected at the west side of the main building, and the paint shops and the main office at the east side, on Fairground Avenue. The entire plant was completed, the machinery installed, and the first steel cars turned out on the 1st day of October, 1902. At that time the capacity of the plant was from fifty to sixty cars a day, and employment was furnished to about 2,500 men.

An extension was built to the main building in 1903, and other additions have been made since that time until the present capacity of the works is from 100 to 125 cars per day. When running full time the plant employs about 4,000 men, and its pay-roll amounts to over $300,000 a month. The present officers of the company are J. M. Hansen, president; J. B. Brady, vice-president; William Bierman, secretary; T. H. Gillespie, treasurer; and W. Fletcher, assistant treasurer.

The first manager of the plant was P. F. McCool, who superintended the erection of the building and turned out the first cars. He was succeeded by E. G. Caughey in 1903, and the latter in turn by J. H. Allman, the present manager, who took charge in 1905. The chief engineer is A. Christianson.

For the first two or three years after the organization of the company the main offices and the auditing department were kept in Pittsburg. In 1905 a frame building was erected on the west side of the plant on Pierce Avenue, and the auditing department and all of the officers, except that of the president, were removed to Butler.

The Standard Steel Car Company has been called the young giant of the steel car industry, and in the short space of seven years it has doubled the capacity of

BIRD'S EYE VIEW OF BUTLER, LOOKING WEST FROM
BUTLER COUNTY NATIONAL BANK
(During high water in 1906)

BIRD'S EYE VIEW OF BUTLER, LOOKING EAST FROM
BUTLER COUNTY NATIONAL BANK
(During high water in 1906)

BIRD'S EYE VIEW OF EAST BUTLER

ALAMEDA PARK, BUTLER

its plant, and taken a front rank among the manufacturing industries of the country. Among the subsidiary companies controlled by the Standard are the Butler Bolt & Rivet Works, the Butler Car Wheel Foundry, located at Butler, the Steel Car Plant at New Castle, Pennsylvania, and the large plant at Hammond, Indiana. The Standard was one of the last concerns to be affected by the financial depression of 1908, and the plant here was in operation long after the other car-manufacturing plants in the country had closed down. After work was suspended here, the company employed a large number of men in making repairs, and placing the plant in first-class condition to resume business, and also kept their organization intact.

The Forged Steel Wheel Company was incorporated June 20, 1906, by a number of Pittsburg capitalists who are also interested in the steel car business. The president of the company is J. M. Hansen, and T. H. Gillespie is the treasurer. A large plant was erected south of the town of Lyndora on the property of the Standard Steel Car Company, and heavy machinery installed for carrying on the work. Forged steel wheels were at first an experiment, and the plant erected here was considered an experimental plant. The last couple of years has demonstrated the practical ability of the new wheel, and the resumption of the iron and steel business will mean the employment of a large number of men at the new factory in Butler.

The Butler Bolt and Rivet Company is a subsidiary company of the Standard Steel Car Company, and was incorporated June 28, 1906, with a capital of $200,000. The plant was erected on Pierce Avenue north of the main plant of the car works in 1906, and gives employment to about 200 men.

The Butler Car Wheel Foundry was incorporated December 22, 1905, with a capital of $300,000. This company is also subsidiary to the Standard Steel Car Company. The plant was erected in the winter of 1905-6, and adjoins that of the Bolt and Rivet Works. It has a capacity of about 800 cast car wheels a day, and furnishes employment to about 300 men. When running full time the work distributes about $35,000 a month with its pay roll.

WAGON FACTORIES.

The manufacture of wagons was commenced in 1848 by John Lawall, Sr., who established the business in the rear of Reiber Brothers' blacksmith shop on West Cunningham Street. He conducted the factory at this point until 1860, when he removed to South Washington Street, adjoining his residence. In 1872 he began the manufacture of buggies and carriages, which he continued until his death in 1877. The business was then carried on by his sons, John and Jacob Lawall, until about 1885. At this time the growth of great carriage factories equipped with the most improved machinery rendered the manufacture of wagons and carriages by the old process an unprofitable business, and destroyed the industry in the smaller towns.

The Thompson Brothers were pioneers in the same line, opening a factory on West Cunningham Street in 1857. This factory was located on the corner of Church Street and West Cunningham Street, and was quite an extensive affair for its day. The Thompsons sold the plant to Geo. C. Roessing and removed to Prospect, where they established a factory. Mr. Roessing conducted the business of manufacturing buggies and wagons in connection with the undertaking business until 1888, when the factory was closed and the undertaking business was removed to West Jefferson Street.

George C. Roessing established a cabinet-maker's shop in 1847 on the Patton Kearns property on West Jefferson Street in the rear of what is now the Zimmerman store. It was the business of the furniture makers of those days to make coffins for the burial of the dead, and the business of undertaker was usually associated with that of cabinet-making. In 1860 Mr. Roessing purchased the wagon and carriage works of Thompson Brothers on West Cunningham Street, which he conducted in connection with the undertaking business until 1888. The introduction of factory-made work made the wagon and carriage business unprofitable to the small operators, and Mr. Roessing closed this branch of his business and removed the undertaking department to the Odd Fellows building on West Jefferson Street. At this time Mr. Roessing had associated with him his son, W. P. Roessing, under the firm name of George Roessing & Son.

Martin and George Reiber were engaged in the wagon manufacturing business in the fifties, having a shop on West Cunningham Street on the McQuiston property.

MACHINE SHOPS.

Butler first attracted attention as a center for the manufacture of oil well tools and supplies in 1880 about the time the Bald Ridge oil field was opened up. Previous to that time there were no shops of importance in the town and nothing outside of a small line of repair work was attempted.

William Kesselman & Company established their shops here in 1881 for the manufacture of drilling and fishing tools, heavy forgings, and the repairing of engines. Their plant was located along the B. & O. Railroad tracks on the south side of the creek, the main building being 31x87 feet, with a machine shop 28x40 feet. Steam hammers were used in this shop for the first time in Butler, and the firm has since kept pace with all the modern improvements.

The shop now operated by W. H. Larkin & Company on Center Avenue was founded in 1885 by Thomas and W. G.

Hays. Their business consisted of the manufacture of drilling and fishing tools, as well as dealing in oil well supplies. In 1887 the Hays brothers disposed of their interests to Larkin, Warhus and Company, and in 1890 Mr. Warhus disposed of his interest in the partnership to John Feigel. Since that time the business has been carried on under the firm name of W. H. Larkin & Company. In addition to carrying on a general manufacturing business the firm manufactures gas engines, and has an extensive trade throughout the entire oil country.

The Butler Boiler Works were established about 1888 by Mr. Kane, who afterwards sold the plant to James Meehan. In 1891 they were purchased by Hughes brothers, and for many years they were one of the valuable acquisitions to the manufacturing industries of the town.

The Butler Manufacturing Company, Limited, was established in 1888 with a capital stock of $20,000, and the incorporators of the company were J. W. McKee, president; H. S. Gibson, secretary and treasurer; and D. W. Younkens and J. E. Russell, directors. The plant was located on Monroe Street opposite the old Electric Light plant, and for a number of years an extensive business was carried on in the manufacture of engines, boilers, and general foundry work. Originally the plant was erected at Bradford for the manufacture of ball engines and in the year above mentioned it was removed to Butler and enlarged.

F. H. Bole established a machine shop for the manufacture of oil well and fishing tools in 1884 at the corner of South McKean & Quarry streets. He carried on the business until 1895, when he disposed of his property and removed to Pittsburg.

The Star Iron Works were first established at Karns City by Sherman & Johnson. In 1894 they purchased the old Fulerton Woolen Mill property on Etna Street and removed their plant to Butler. They manufacture engines, pumps, casing cutters, fishing tools of all kinds, and make a specialty of the manufacture of brass goods.

Spang & Company. The large establishment on Etna Street occupied by George A. Spang & Company had a small beginning. In 1893 George A. Spang established a small machine shop on the site of the present building and engaged in the manufacture and repair of fishing tools. The working force consisted of the proprietor and one or two helpers. In the fall of that year the shop was removed to Glade Mills, then the heart of an oil excitement, where the business was enlarged and conducted till 1896. In 1897 the shops were removed to Renfrew, and in the fall of 1900 a limited partnership was organized with D. B. Campbell as chairman, Emery Brandon secretary and George A. Spang, manager. The firm engaged in the manufacture of drilling and fishing tools, oil well packers and machine work. That year the plant was removed to Butler, and the shops established on Etna Street at the present location. The business grew rapidly and soon required an additional capital to carry it on, and larger quarters, and in 1907 the company was incorporated as George A. Spang & Company, the officers being John F. Anderson, president; J. W. Brandon, secretary, and George A. Spang, treasurer and manager. The same year the concrete building now occupied by the company was erected. This building has a floor space of 15,000 square feet, and the different shops of the concern occupied the floor space of 34,000 square feet. In January, 1909, the company purchased the plant and business of the Etna Manufacturing Company of Butler, and consolidated the two plants. They employ about fifty men, all skilled mechanics, and make a specialty of fishing tools and oil well packers. The fishing tools and packers manufactured by this concern are shipped to all parts of the United States and to the oil fields of Europe. In addition to the shops in Butler the company carry on a branch shop in Coffeyville, Kansas.

The Evans Manufacturing Company owes its inception to Evan Evans, who first began with a small shop at Chicora, where he made a specialty of brass fittings and valves. The shop was removed to Butler in 1893 and established on Center Avenue, where the business was enlarged and a general line of oil well supplies was manufactured. Mr. Evans was a man of inventive turn of mind and began experimenting with the clutch pulleys and gas engines, and in 1896 the present building was erected on the corner of South McKean and East Wayne Streets, where the manufacture of these inventions was commenced. In 1898 Mr. Evans formed a partnership with C. A. Templeton, under the firm name of the Evans-Templeton Company. This firm continued for about two years, when the present company was organized under the title of the Evans Manufacturing Company. Mr. Evans continued in the active management of the business until his death in 1906, and since that time his son, H. A. Evans, has been the superintendent and manager. The present officers are Daniel Younkins, chairman; George M. Jacobs, secretary and treasurer, and H. A. Evans, superintendent. In addition to the machine shop the company has a brass and metal foundry and manufactures castings of all kinds for the oil well trade. They also manufacture gas and gasoline engines, clutch pulleys, and a general line of oil well supplies, and employ from forty-five to fifty men.

The Masseth Packer and Machine Works on West Wayne Street are the successors to Benjamin Masseth, who established the business in Butler in 1889. Mr. Masseth owned the patents for oil and gas well packers and other valuable inventions in use in the oil country and, previous to coming to Butler, had followed the fortunes of the oil field from Pithole in 1862 to Butler in 1889. He established a machine shop on Wayne Street with J. B. Sherman as a partner, and later he took in D. W. Black, who is a practical machinist and inventor. Afterwards Mr. Masseth purchased the interest of Mr. Sherman and the firm of Masseth & Black operated the machine shop until the death of Mr. Masseth on June 30, 1903. The business of Mr. Masseth was carried on separate from the machine shops. After his death J. N. Hyle became the owner of Mr. Masseth's interests, and the business is now carried on under the title of the Masseth Packer and Machine Works, D. W. Black being the other partner. The company manufactures Masseth's patent self-supporting wall packers and all kinds of machinery for oil, gas, and artesian wells, gas pumps, engines, etc.

The Butler Engine and Foundry Company is the successor of the Butler Manufacturing Company, having purchased the plant of the latter concern on Monroe Street in October, 1904. The officers of the company are H. B. McKinney, president; John J. McKinney, secretary; M. M. McKinney, treasurer; J. C. Thompson, vice-president; and these, with Thos. G. Russell, compose the board of directors. The company is capitalized at $45,000.00, and does an extensive business in steam and gas engines and foundry work. In addition to the machine shops, the company operates an iron and brass foundry.

The Phillips Machine Shops were first located at Great Belt, where their principal work was in the line of repair of oil well machinery for the Thomas W. Phillips Oil Company. The shops were moved to Butler about 1897, and engaged in the manufacture of oil well tools and gas engines. On April 11, 1907, the T. W. Phillips Manufacturing Company was incorporated with T. W. Phillips, president; Thomas W. Phillips, Jr., H. C. Phillips, and Clarence Walker. Since that time the company has been extensively engaged in the manufacture of steam and gas engines and oil well tools, and has employed a large force of men night and day operating the extensive plant.

The machine shops of C. W. Hecker & Son are located on Etna Street, and are engaged in the manufacture of drilling tools, fishing tools and oil well packers. The company was incorporated in 1905, and at the present time furnishes employment to thirty to forty men.

The machine shops of George Palm on Kittaming Street, the Campbell Machine Shop on East Wayne Street, and Pool's Brass Foundry on the same street, complete the list of shops of this class.

SILK MILL.

The Butler Silk Mill was first organized in 1900 as an association. Previous to that time parties representing an eastern silk manufacturing company had made a proposition to the local Board of Trade to establish a mill at Butler. The proposition of the eastern people was not satisfactory, and after their departure local parties took up the matter with the result that a company was organized and capitalized in Butler. The old Institute Building on First Street was secured for the site, and the factory opened the same year. In 1902 the company was incorporated, and in 1908 the following were the officers and managers: Wm. C. Thompson, president; Alf. M. Reiber, treasurer; Wm. H. Miller, secretary; Alf. M. Reiber, W. J. McDowell, and L. C. Wick, managers. The factory employs from forty to fifty people and has a daily capacity of five hundred yards of broad silk.

PLANING MILLS.

The first planing mill established in the borough of Butler is still in operation. In 1832 Samuel G. Purvis came to Butler and engaged as a carpenter with the local contractors of that period. In 1834 he commenced contracting and building, and continued until 1867, when the firm of S. G. Purvis & Company was organized, his son Joseph L. becoming a partner. In 1869 they embarked in the planing-mill and lumber business, which they carried on in connection with contracting and building. In 1876 Levi O. Purvis was taken into the firm as a partner, and in 1879 the firm commenced the manufacture of sash, doors, and blinds, since which time they have gradually increased the business to its present capacity. After the death of Samuel G. Purvis in 1879 the business was conducted by the sons under the old firm name until 1907, when the partnership was dissolved, and the business is now conducted by Levi O. Purvis. The plant is located on the corner of Franklin and North Streets, and is equipped with machinery of the latest and most improved kind. From 125 to 200 hands are furnished employment.

Bauer's Mill. About 1860 Henry, Benjamin and Philip Bauer engaged in the manufacture of farm implements, and had shops on West Jefferson Street at the corner of Bluff Street. They subsequently built a saw-mill on the opposite side of Jefferson Street, which they operated for a number of years, and about 1872 they established a planing mill in connection with the saw-mill. In the early part of the eighties the business outlook of Butler did not justify two planing-mills, and the Bauer's mill was removed to Allegheny County.

L. C. Wick Lumber Yards. The lumber yards of L. C. Wick, located on Spring Avenue and the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, Southside, were established in 1882. Subsequently Mr. Wick erected a brick building south of Center Avenue near the creek, and established a planing-mill, which he operated for a number of years, and then sold the building and machinery to the Daugherty Manufacturing Company.

The latter concern manufactured church furniture for a short time, when the plant again came into the possession of Mr. Wick. The mill has been standing idle for the past year, Mr. Wick giving his sole attention to the lumber business.

W. E. Wick & Co. The lumber yards of W. E. Wick & Company on Monroe Street were established in the early part of the nineties, and are the successors of Hewitt & Company. They deal entirely in builders' supplies, rough and dressed lumber.

The Cornelius Lumber Company was organized in 1902, and opened yards on Kittinging Street. Early in 1908 the firm was dissolved, and Raymond S. Cornelius became owner and manager of the business, which has continued as the Cornelius Lumber Company.

The J. C. Thorn Lumber & Planing Mill Company was incorporated and chartered in 1906, and erected a large brick planing-mill in the island district on Negley Avenue. The enterprise was not successful and the business was abandoned in 1907. The buildings are now used as a factory by the Butler Concrete Manufacturing Company.

W. H. Miller Planing Mill. William H. Miller, a native of Germany, located in Butler in 1834 and established the furniture-making business on North Main Street, on the property now owned by the Masonic Order. He continued in the business until his death in 1875. In 1870 Wm. F. Miller, who had learned his trade with his father, established a factory on North Washington Street and engaged in the manufacture of scroll work, stair rails and fancy wood work. He conducted a planing-mill in connection with his factory and in 1890 he established a chop and feed mill which was operated for a few years. This mill has not been in operation since 1900.

S. G. Purvis & Co. The lumber yards of S. G. Purvis & Co. were established by Samuel G. and Joseph L. Purvis about 1875, and were operated in connection with the planing mill. When the firm of S. G. Purvis & Co. dissolved in 1906, Joseph L. Purvis retained the yards and continued in the lumber business under the firm name of S. G. Purvis & Co., taking into partnership with him his sons, S. H. and Willis Purvis. Since the death of Joseph L. Purvis in 1907 the business has been conducted under the old firm name, with S. H. Purvis as manager.

John Goetz Planing-Mill. John Goetz erected a planing-mill on Spring Avenue in 1883, and conducted a general contracting and building business in connection with his mill until about 1895, when he disposed of his plant. The site of the mill is now occupied by the L. C. Wick lumber yard.

EARLY BRICK YARDS.

The manufacture of brick was an important industry in the early history of the town and at one time several factories were in existence within the present limits of the borough. As early as 1823 William Borland established a brick yard on the site of the present car wheel foundry of the Standard Steel Car Works on Fairground Avenue. The brick used in the erection of the first brick houses in Butler were manufactured at this site, and it is probable that the brick for the first court house came from the same locality.

The second brick yard was opened by the Brackney Brothers on the property of Moses Sullivan. This was about 1827, and the brick used in the erection of the old United Presbyterian Church in that year were manufactured at this yard.

The third yard was opened by John Graham on the corner of North Main and Fulton Streets. This yard finally superseded the Brackney and Borland yards, and was operated for many years.

The next to embark in the business was David Walker, who opened a yard on Mifflin Street near the corner of what is now Chestnut. This was one of the largest enterprises in the town. Mifflin Street at that time was a twenty-foot alley which ended at the brick yard, and in order to get an outlet for his yard, Mr. Walker opened out Mifflin Street to its present width as far as Main Street, at his personal expense. Mr. Walker was succeeded in the business in 1847 by his brother, Nathaniel Walker, who conducted it for many years. The Walker brick yards were considered the most extensive operations of the kind in the county.

After the establishment of the Walker yards, Franklin Fisher operated a brick yard on West Cunningham Street, and in later years on West Penn Street, the latter yard being in operation about 1880.

J. George Stamm began the manufacture of brick in 1881 on the site of the old Borland yard at the corner of Pillow Street and Fairground Avenue, which he continued down until 1902, when he disposed of his property to the Standard Steel Car Company. Stamm's yard covered seven and three-quarter acres of ground, and his factory had a capacity of 30,000 bricks per day. Natural gas for burning purposes was used in this yard for the first time in the county.

The brick yards of Shull & Badger on the south side of the creek were established about 1902. These yards were established by Reed Brothers, and were subsequently sold to the present owners. The concern furnishes employment to about thirty men the year round, and is one of the substantial industries of the town.

The Butler Brick and Tile Company was organized in 1896 as a limited partnership and established a plant at the Transfer on the Bessemer Railroad. The capital of the company was $11,000, which was afterward increased to $15,000. The concern employs twenty men and has a capacity of about four million brick per year. The manager and treasurer of the company is George E. Howard.

George Miller ran a cabinet-maker's shop and furniture factory on the site of the building now occupied by the Pure Milk Company on South McKean Street, which was an extensive enterprise for its day. Steam power was used and a large number of men employed. Mr. Miller came to Butler about 1826 and soon after established the business that for almost half a century was one of the leading industries of the town.

MISCELLANEOUS ENTERPRISES.

The manufacture of plows furnished employment for a number of shops previous to the civil war. William Balph manufactured wagons and plows at a shop on East Wayne Street and Gabriel Moser manufactured plows and farm implements on West North Street. Wooden beams and plow handles were worked out by hand at these shops and the local foundries furnished the metal parts.

Sebastian's cooper shop located on the site of Dillon's meat market and Philip Killian's shop on South Washington Street furnished the barrels and kegs for the entire county, while Henry Wagner's pottery on North Street supplied the dairymen with crocks and the rest of the community with earthenware. The site of this old pottery was recently purchased by the borough for a public building.

The first white lead factory in Butler was established some time prior to 1840, by Campbell E. Purviance. This factory stood on the bank of the Connoquenessing Creek at the foot of West Diamond Street. Mr. Purviance afterwards became associated with his uncle William Purviance in the manufacture of gun powder in Connoquenessing Township. The powder factory was located on what is now known as the Reiber farm on Powder-mill Run, and was considered an important industry of its time. The owners carried on the industry for a number of years when an explosion demolished the plant and it was never rebuilt.

The Davis White Lead Works were established in Butler in 1899 through the influence of the local Board of Trade. The officers and principal stockholders of the company were Pittsburg capitalists, and one-fourth of the stock was held by Butler people. The plant was known as the Davis White Lead Works, and consisted of a four-story brick building on Fair-ground Avenue, besides a number of smaller buildings used as power house, ware room, and other purposes. The company employed from fifty to one hundred men until 1906, when the concern was taken over by the White Lead Trust, and the plant closed.

The American Mirror Works on the Southside is one of the growing industries of the town, and at the present time employs from fifteen to twenty people. The plant was established in 1896 by John B. Snell, who is the present manager.

A large distillery was built on the site of the bottle works in the seventies, and during its existence it was one of the most extensive distilleries in western Pennsylvania.

One of the first breweries established in the town was erected by Andrew Miller on what is now known as the McClymonds property on Morton Avenue, and east of the South Cemetery. The building used was a log affair, and one of the inducements for establishing the plant at that point was the existence of an excellent spring of water. Subsequently Mr. Miller erected a brewery in the rear of the buildings on South Main Street now owned by his heirs, and conducted the business here at that point for a long time. Part of this old brewery is still in existence, but the plant has not been operated for more than a quarter of a century.

Another brewery that was well known to the older residents of the town was George Knight's establishment on Race Street, on the banks of the Connoquenessing Creek. This brewery was established about the same time that the Miller brewery was erected south of the creek, and was operated for many years. The plant was closed down about 1880, and the buildings have long since been torn down and the plant dismantled.

The Butler Brewing Company was incorporated in May, 1902, by H. W. Kline, David Smith, Frank Peffer, George McLean and L. A. Thompson. The present plant was erected on Negley Avenue near the Bessemer Railroad the same year at a cost of about $50,000.00. The company which was composed of Pittsburg and Tarentum capitalists who operated the plant until 1905 as an independent concern, but in the latter year it was taken over by the Trust. The plant employs from forty to fifty men and is still in operation.

McDowell & Co. Laundry. The pioneer in the steam laundry business in Butler is W. J. McDowell, who came here from Mercer County and established the business on Center Avenue in 1891. The company is a limited partnership of which W. J. McDowell and Rev. J. Q. A. McDowell are the principal owners. In 1896 the plant was moved into the present quarters adjoining the Evans Manufacturing Company on South McKean Street, and since that time has been enlarged until it is now one of the best equipped laundries in the country. The company has a large local patronage, and also has an extensive business in the surrounding towns. The present superintendent is W. J. McDowell.

The Butler Steam Laundry was incorporated in 1899 by N. C. McCollough, A. M. Christley, E. E. Bell, and others, and the business was commenced on West Cunningham Street in the building formerly occupied by George C. Roessing's wagon and carriage shops. In 1906 the company erected the present brick building on West Cunningham Street which is equipped with modern machinery and employs about twenty people. The superintendent and manager of the laundry since its beginning is George Ketterer.

The Lyndora Land and Improvement Company was incorporated May 26, 1902, with a capital of $200,000. Its officers at that time were J. M. Hansen, president; A. R. Frasier, vice-president and treasurer; and A. S. Valentine, secretary. The company purchased the John McElroy farm just outside the borough of Butler and laid out the town of Lyndora. During the summer of 1902, two hundred separate dwelling houses were erected in Lyndora, and eleven blocks of tenements were erected on Pierce Avenue for the use of the employes of the works. Subsequently the tenements were increased to twenty-two, having one hundred and thirty-two dwellings. The individual dwelling houses at Lyndora erected by the company are each supplied with natural gas, hot and cold water, and bath, and are rented to the employes of the works at a nominal figure. The class of houses erected by the company for their employes is the best to be found in the United States. The town of Lyndora has thirty-two business houses, a number of brick business blocks, a bank, two hotels, two churches, and is in every way a flourishing suburb town. The town is not incorporated, although it has the population required for a city of the third class.

PIONEER MERCHANTS.

The pioneer merchant of the town was John Potts, who established a store on the southeast corner of Main and Cunningham Streets, in 1804, and continued the business until his death in 1838. This store building occupied the present site of the Odd Fellows Temple.

Maurice and John Bredin kept a store on the south side of the Diamond about 1820. Subsequently Maurice Bredin conducted the business in the building now occupied by the Park Hotel on the north side of the Diamond.

David Dougal, who was the pioneer surveyor of the county, conducted a small store for many years on the northeast corner of the Diamond, on the site of Boyd's drug store.

The public square appears to have been the center of business during the first fifty years of the town's existence. William Purviance and Samuel Hill conducted a store on the south side of the Diamond. Adam Funk, who appears to have been an early hotel keeper, also had a store. Walter Lowrie conducted a store at the west end of the square. He was succeeded by John Sullivan in 1827, who carried on the business until 1831, when Clark McPherrin succeeded him.

Robert and James Cunningham came on the scene about 1832, and conducted a store at the corner now occupied by the Butler County National Bank.

John and Peter Duffy commenced business on the Diamond as early as 1823. John Duffy retired in 1840, when he became associate judge of the county. The store was carried on by his brother, Peter Duffy, until 1863, when he was succeeded by his son Charles, who is still a prominent merchant of the town. Subsequent to 1863 the business was removed to the present location on North Main Street. The Duffy store is the oldest mercantile establishment in the town.

Oliver David opened a store on the Diamond about 1828, and subsequently removed it to South Main Street near the corner of Jefferson. It was continued in succession through the terms of David & Lane, David & Campbell and others, when it ceased.

Daniel Coll was another old-time store keeper who was in business on the corner of Cunningham and Main Streets as early as 1830. William Haggerty was an early merchant on Main Street, as were also Harry Mitchell and Parker & Donley. The location of the latter store was on the present site of Stein's dry-goods store. James Frazier and Jonathan Plummer conducted a general store opposite the Hotel Lowry at an early date.

The present firm of J. G. & W. Campbell, dealers in hardware, dates back to 1835, when William Campbell, Esq., engaged in general merchandise, taking into partnership with him his sons James Gilmore and William, under the firm name of William Campbell & Sons. The father retired at the end of ten years, leaving the sons in control of the business. They continued as J. G. & W. Campbell for a number of years, when they changed the general character of the business, in 1877, to farm implements and hardware. About 1882 oil well supplies were added, but this branch of the business has since been discontinued. James Gilmore Campbell died in 1885, and his brother William in 1893. Subsequently the business was conducted by William Campbell, Jr., and John S. Campbell, sons of William Campbell, Sr., under the old firm name. William Campbell, Jr., died in 1906. The store is still carried on under the firm name of J. G. & W. Campbell, the manager being John S. Campbell.

James Campbell, who married a daughter of Oliver David, was one of the old time merchants of the town. He became the partner of Oliver David in the mercantile business, and when the latter retired the firm was changed to Campbell & Yetter. Mr. Campbell finally retired from the firm and went to Allegheny City, where he engaged in business for a number of years. Subsequently he returned to Butler and died here.

The hatting business was regarded as very important in pioneer days. Paul Bratton was the pioneer in this business, who set up a shop in Butler Township, just south of the town. John Gilchrist and Robert Gilchrist were engaged in the business on Main Street in 1820. Isaac Colbert began the manufacture of hats in Butler Township in 1835, and the following year moved into the borough. He carried on the business until his death in 1872, and since that time the business has been carried on by his son, Harvey Colbert, who now conducts a hat store on South Main Street.

John Berg, Sr., was one of the early merchants of the town, coming here in 1835. He was engaged in the mercantile business for years at the corner of Main and Cunningham Streets, and in 1872 he engaged in the hardware business with George A. Cypher as a partner, in the Berg block on South Main Street. He continued this business until his death in 1884. He was also the founder of the banking house of John Berg & Company, which in later years was conducted by John Berg, Jr., and is now conducted by Henry and Louis Berg.

Herman J. Berg, a brother of John Berg, Sr., was engaged in the mercantile business with his brother for a number of years, and in later years was identified with a number of manufacturing and mercantile interests of the town.

Thomas Stehle was an early merchant and gunsmith, who conducted a business on South Main Street, in the building now occupied by his daughter, Mrs. William Aland. He came to Butler in 1832 and continued in business until his death.

The dry goods store of Louis Stein's Sons on North Main Street was established by Louis Stein and Bernard Roessing in 1840. The firm of Roessing & Stein carried on a general store for more than thirty years, when Mr. Roessing retired and the business was continued by Mr. Stein. Subsequently he took into partnership his son, W. A. Stein, and after the death of the father in July, 1894, the business was continued by Wm. A., Louis B., and Albert C. Stein, as Louis Stein's Sons.

Anthony Roekenstein came to the town in 1841 and opened a merchant tailoring establishment. The tailors prior to him were John Welsh, James Glenn, Mark McCandless and David A. Agnew.

Another successful merchant of this period was William S. Boyd, afterwards the founder of Springdale. He first began business as a druggist on the Diamond, but early in the forties he established a dry goods store at the corner of Main and Jefferson Streets.

Joseph McQuiston was one of the pioneer shoemakers, and in 1840 a shoe-shop was opened on Jefferson Street by Philip Bickel and Adam Schenck.

The jewelry store now conducted by Harry Grieb on North Main Street was first opened by Francis X. Grieb in 1849. Three years later he purchased the property on North Main Street now owned by his heirs, and established the first jewelry store in the borough. He continued in business until his death in 1865, and since that time the store has been conducted by his son Harry.

J. J. Sedwick was the pioneer harness maker of the town and one of the early postmasters. He was followed in this line of business by William Criswell and Major George W. Reed, who were among the prominent citizens of the town during the middle period of the century.

MODERN BUSINESS HOUSES.

Among the modern merchant houses, there are only a few existing today that date back to the pioneer days of the town. These have been enumerated under the caption of pioneer merchants. In 1804 there was but one merchant on Main Street north of the court house, and the number of business houses located on the public square might have been counted on the fingers of one hand until as late as 1820. The mercantile appraisers' list for 1908 credits the borough of Butler with 232 mercantile houses, including hotels, exclusive of the town of Lyndora. In the latter town there are thirty-nine such houses, making the total for the district 271. Among the oldest houses on Main Street are the dry goods establishment of Charles Duffy, Louis Stein's Sons, J. G. & W. Campbell's hardware store, and Harry Grieb's jewelry store. These stores were all established previous to 1850.

The firm of A. Troutman's Sons, dry goods merchants, was established by Adam Troutman in 1861 at the corner of Main and Mifflin Streets. About 1876 Mr. Troutman took his son, J. Henry, in as a partner, and the business was continued under the firm name of A. Troutman & Son. In 1890 the business was removed to the Troutman block at the corner of Main and Cunningham Streets, which had been completed that year. Adam Troutman retired in 1897, and the business has since been conducted under the firm name of A. Troutman's Sons, the partners being J. Henry Troutman, Wm. J. Troutman, and Geo. A. Troutman.

Alf. M. Reiber established a dry goods business in 1888, in a room in the Reiber block, now occupied by Dothett & Graham's clothing store. Subsequently he removed to the present location, No. 205 South Main Street, where he carries on a large business.

The pioneer shoe merchant of the town was John Bickel, who first started in the shoe manufacturing business about 1872. Subsequently he engaged in the boot and shoe business at the corner of Main and Mifflin Streets, with Al. Ruff as a partner. The business was carried on here for a number of years, when the partnership was dissolved, and Mr. Bickel established a store in an old building on the site of the present Bickel block on South Main Street, which was erected in 1897.

Al. Ruff engaged in the boot and shoe business with John Bickel as a partner at the old corner of Main and Mifflin Streets, and when the partnership was dissolved, he established a store at the present location on South Main Street. The store has been enlarged until it now extends from Main Street to Jackson Street in the rear. Philip Ruff was taken into the store as a partner in 1898, and the business is now conducted under the firm name of A. Ruff & Son. In addition to carrying a large line of goods for the retail trade, the firm does a wholesale business in rubber and felt goods.

The shoe house of B. C. Huselton is also one of the pioneers in that line of trade, and was one of the first established after the merchants of Butler began to change from the general store to the special line. Other firms that have been established since 1890 are C. E. Miller, Ketterer Bros., and Walker & Young.

Campbell's furniture house was established in Butler about 1892 by A. A. Campbell and C. A. Templeton, who removed their store from Brady's Bend and located first in the old Troutman building on North Main Street. Subsequently the Campbell block was built on South Main Street, and the business removed there. C. A. Templeton retired from the firm in 1899, and the business has since been conducted by A. A. Campbell. The establishment occupies three floors of the building and basement, and is one of the largest furniture houses in this part of the country.

George Ketterer first began the furniture business in rooms at the corner of Main and Mifflin Streets in the early part of the eighties. He conducted a repair shop in connection with the business, and in 1887 he erected the business block on South Main Street which is now occupied by him and by Ketterer Bros.' shoe store.

In 1908 the principal merchants in the dry goods trade were Charles Duffy, Louis Stein's Sons, Mrs. J. E. Zimmerman, Whitekettle & Morgan, Mrs. Lizzie M.

Young, A. Troutman's Sons, Alf. M. Reiber, Joseph Cohn, and Eisler & Mardorf.

The furniture dealers were George Ketterer, A. A. Campbell, Patterson Bros., and Snaman Bros.

The druggists were Reddick & Grohman, Louis A. Jamison, R. A. Reed, the Crystal Pharmacy, Wuller's Pharmacy, Bell's Pharmacy, S. G. Purvis, Boyd's Pharmacy, Dixon's Pharmacy, the Southside Pharmacy, the West End Pharmacy, and Robert Gurrard on East Jefferson Street.

The jewelry houses were represented by Harry Grieb, D. L. Cleeland, Ralston & Smith, Carl Leighner, and R. L. Kirkpatrick, G. F. T. Pape.

The boot and shoe trade were represented by B. C. Hinselton, A. Ruff & Son, Walker & Young, John Bickel's Sons, C. E. Miller, and Ketterer Bros.

The hardware dealers were Joseph Roekenstein, Niggel Bros., L. G. Moore, Koch Bros., J. G. & W. Campbell, Henry Biehl, and Joseph Roekenstein.

The clothing houses were represented by Donthett & Graham, Green & Young, William Roekenstein, Leon Schloss, the Ideal Clothing Parlors, Schaul & Levy, J. S. Wick & Son, J. G. Runkle, Harry V. Kidd, Harvey Colbert, and Samuel Cohn.

The general stores are conducted by C. A. Templeton & Company in the Stein Block on South Main Street, DeArme in the Cypher Block.

The principal grocery and provision houses, are conducted by G. Wilson Miller and A. A. Marshall on East Jefferson Street, W. A. Kamerer in the West End, W. A. Kirkpatrick, J. G. Moore, C. Koch & Sons, and Ed. Graham on North Main Street, A. & H. Reiber, W. A. Fisher, W. W. Miller, Henry Miller & Son on South Main Street, Harper Bros. and J. C. Hoch on Center Ave., C. A. Ellenberger and Barnhart & Geyser on Second Street, Borland & Wigton on Carbon Street, C. C. Shira and R. G. Ferguson on Loenst Street, Quigley & Myers, New Castle Street; Raisley & Whiteside, New Castle Street; J. H. Robb, W. Jefferson St.; N. M. Heinzer, Zeigler Ave.; C. Hinchberger on Franklin St.; R. Parkin, Center Ave.; W. F. Limberg, W. Penn St.

The harness and buggy business is represented by Joseph Roekenstein, B. E. Roesing, Martincourt & Daugherty, J. G. & W. Campbell, and Kemper.

The wholesale business is represented by the Atlantic Refining Company, the Oil Well Supply Company, the Leedom & Worrall Grocery Company, the Lloyd Confectionery Company, B. F. Shannon, flour and feed; George Walter's Sons, feed and builder's supplies; H. J. Klingler & Company, flour and feed; the Cudahy Packing Company, and Goehring & Richards, produce house.

The Leedom & Worrall Company, wholesale grocers, was organized in 1904, and chartered on February 24th, 1905. The company purchased a lot at the corner of Center Avenue and the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and erected a four-story brick building, which it now occupies. The president and principal stockholder of the company is Nelson Moore, the secretary is P. W. Leedom, and the treasurer and manager is George Worrall. A large amount of Butler capital is invested in this enterprise, which is taking a leading rank among the wholesale houses of Western Pennsylvania.

The Lyndora Building and Loan Association was chartered September 10, 1907, and has its office at Lyndora. The subscribers to the charter are residents of the town of Lyndora and Butler, and the association has done a prosperous business, notwithstanding the fact that it was confronted with a panic the first year of its existence. The subscribers to the charter are Jos. Criswell, B. Wendel, John Buccos, F. J. Chroust and H. A. Kitchen.

THE CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY.

The Butler Co-operative Association was organized in the latter part of 1907, and began business on the 1st of January, 1908. Articles of association were filed at that time showing a capital of $10,000.00 and 122 subscribers. The directors were C. R. Watson, president, D. H. Lardin, secretary and treasurer, Charles N. Rush, G. F. Pfister and L. A. Garfield. The association purchased the store of A. F. Eisler & Company on the corner of Jefferson and McKean Streets, and engaged in the grocery and provision business. The association met with success from the start, and is now contemplating the enlargement of the business by establishing a boot and shoe department, as well as furnishings and dry goods as soon as a desirable location can be secured.

BUILDING AND LOAN ASSOCIATIONS.

The Building and Loan Association of Butler, organized March 4, 1876, and incorporated March 31, 1876, received bids as high as forty per cent. for loans. When the panic of that period was over, the association began buying stock, and continued this policy until November, 1881, when some dissatisfied stockholders applied to the attorney general to have the legal status of the institution defined. The stated number of shares at the beginning was 2,500, valued at $200 each. The first officers were G. C. Roessing, president; G. Etzel, vice-president; J. S. Campbell, secretary; Louis Roessing, treasurer, and John M. Miller, solicitor. The directory comprised H. C. Heineman, J. M. Miller, Jacob Ziegler, Jacob Boos, Dr. Stephen Bredin, Casper Rockenstein, Joseph L. Purvis and William Enslinger. The effect of the petition of 1881 was simply to hasten the dissolution of the association.

The People's Building and Loan Association was organized April 6, 1886, with G. Wilson Miller, president; Chas. M. Heineman, secretary; Joseph S. Gray, treasurer, and Williams & Mitchell, solicitors. The directors were Charles Reibun, A. Park

McKee, S. D. Purvis, Dr. G. M. Zimmerman, Jacob Boos, Peter Schenck and Frank Shepherd.

The Eureka Building and Loan Association was incorporated in May, 1886, with W. G. Hays, Jacob Ziegler, Dr. George M. Zimmerman, A. Frank, J. W. Ziegler and R. C. McCurdy, directors.

The Mechanics' Building and Loan Association was organized in February, 1889, when 1,000 shares were subscribed. The officers were Dr. Samuel Graham, president; O. M. Russell, vice-president; C. A. Abrams, secretary, and L. W. Zuyer, treasurer. David E. Dale succeeded Dr. Graham as president in 1892, and J. N. Moore succeeded Mr. Abrams as secretary in 1893, when the last named was elected treasurer.

Chautauqua National Building and Loan Association was organized October 25, 1893, with D. Carmondy, president; G. M. Zimmerman, secretary-treasurer; John West, Joseph Niggel and J. W. McDowell, appraisers, who formed the board of directors, with William Keeshman, Jr., William Harless, Joseph Low and J. F. Jewell, W. C. Findley was chosen solicitor.

INSURANCE COMPANIES.

Butler County Mutual Insurance Company was organized September 5, 1853, with Samuel A. Purviance, president; John T. Bard, S. M. Lane, J. T. McJunkin, J. G. Campbell, Francis McBride, Emil Maurhoff, William Haslett, A. N. Meylert, Herman J. Berg, Ebenezer McJunkin, Andrew Carns and John M. Sullivan, managers; Ebenezer McJunkin, secretary; Andrew Carns, treasurer, and Emil Maurhoff, general agent. The company ceased work prior to 1859.

The Butler County Mutual Fire Insurance Company was incorporated by the legislature in April, 1859. In May, Saml. G. Purvis was elected president; I. J. Cummings, treasurer; Edwin Lyon, secretary; William Campbell, E. McJunkin, Dr.

W. R. Dowden, James Campbell, Abraham Ziegler, Jacob Walter, E. Kingsbury, E. Maurhoff, W. S. Boyd, and John Murrin, directors. Henry C. Heineman was elected secretary in 1860, and has held the position down to the present time. After the death of Saml. G. Purvis, Geo. C. Roessing was elected president, and served until his death, when Jas. Stephenson was elected to fill the vacancy.

The Farmers' and Breeders' Mutual Live Stock Insurance Association was organized in 1883, with A. D. Weir, of Buffalo township, president; Thomas Hays, of Fairview, vice-president; R. D. Stephenson, of Butler, treasurer; Dr. J. E. Byers, of Butler, secretary; James Stephenson, of Bonny Brook; James S. Hays, of Butler; Jno. A. Clark, of Prospect; Isaac Lefevre, of Saxonburg, and Bartholomew Nebel, of Herman, unofficial members. This association dissolved within six or seven years without loss to stockholders, although a large sum of money was paid out for injury to cattle.

The Citizens' Building and Loan Association of Butler was organized with G. Wilson Miller, president; L. S. McJunkin, vice-president, and C. M. Heineman, secretary. The directory was comprised of J. D. Jackson, S. D. Purvis, Frank Shepherd, L. F. Ganter, Jacob Boos, and Peter Schenck. Ira McJunkin was treasurer, and Williams & Mitchell, solicitors. Each series of stock was composed of not less than one thousand shares of a par value of $100 each. Since the organization the association has matured twelve series of stock, and has five series now running. The present officers are G. W. Miller, president; T. M. Baker, secretary, and the following trustees: L. S. McJunkin, L. R. McAboy, Ed. Weigand, George Oesterling, Leonard Schenk, E. S. Critchlow, and Alf. M. Reiber.

The Workingmen's Building and Loan Association was organized in February, 1892, and is the successor to the Workingmen's Equitable Association, which was first organized about 1888. The first officers of the Workingmen's Association were F. M. Renno, president; Jacob Keck, secretary; Joseph Rockenstein, treasurer; and A. T. Black, solicitor. This association has matured fifteen series of stock, and has five series running at the present time. It is the custom to start a new series and mature a series each year. With the exception of the president and the solicitor, the officers are the same as in 1892. The present board of directors consists of Philip Krause, president; Jacob Keck, secretary; Joseph Rockenstein, treasurer; N. J. Criley, Henry Miller, J. C. Burkhalter, George Miller, F. W. Koch, B. Kemper, Harry Grieb, G. E. Sherman, and Philip Wisener. T. H. C. Keck is the solicitor.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The pioneers of the borough considered protection from fire as one of their first duties, and as early as February 19, 1825, the town council considered plans for fire protection. At this time John Potts, Jacob Mechling, Maurice Bredin, William Beatty, Abraham Maxwell, and William Haggerty were appointed a committee to solicit subscriptions for buying a fire apparatus. At the same meeting John Gilmore, John Bredin, and Robert Scott were appointed a committee to draft a constitution for a fire company. The preliminary arrangements having been completed, a fire engine was bought from the Allegheny Fire Company in 1827, for $400.00, and the following year the council appropriated money to build a house for the engine. This was the beginning of the fire system in Butler. Previous to that time the only fire protection the citizens had was the bucket brigade and such water supply as could be obtained from the wells and town pumps.

The old engine did service until worn out, and in 1842 a small hand-engine was in use for a short time. This was followed by a period of almost thirty years that the town had to depend on the old bucket brigade in case of fire. In 1870 the matter of fire protection was again taken up by council, and Henry C. Heineman and Joseph J. Elliott were instructed to purchase a truck of the Hook and Ladder Company for $400.00. Of this sum $300.00 was appropriated by the council, and the balance was raised by subscription. This hook and ladder truck answered the purpose of the times until after the establishment of the city water works in 1878. Henry C. Heineman, who may be said to be the father of the Butler fire department, was ever alive to the importance of having a good service and never relaxed his efforts until the Volunteer Fire Department was organized and placed on an effective working basis.

The First Ward Hose Company. The first regular organization was made August 31, 1878, when the First Ward Hose Company was organized with thirty-three members. They chose the following officers: Henry C. Heineman, president; Jacob Roos, vice-president; A. T. Black, secretary, and C. W. Coulter, treasurer. The company is quartered in the Odd Fellows' Temple on East Cunningham Street, where it has handsome rooms fitted up. The present membership is forty-eight, and the following are the officers: President, J. W. Bayer; vice-president, W. H. Ensminger; secretary, H. A. Worth; treasurer, the Guaranty Safe Deposit & Trust Company; foreman, W. J. Heineman; assistant, Geo. N. Burkhalter; trustees, John Bauer, Leonard Milheim, C. N. Watson, P. E. Cronenwett, C. E. Cronenwett, and C. H. Douglass.

The First Ward Running Team was organized in 1893, and participated in the ten years of its existence in more races than any other team in the history of the sport. It has the record of having won seven thousand dollars of money, twenty-three state, district and world's championships, and altogether having to its credit sixty-six firsts and seconds in seventy-two starts.

The team won the Pennsylvania State championship in 1894-95-96-1900-1901; the Western Pennsylvania championship in 1896-97-98-1900-1901-2; the Northwestern Pennsylvania championship in 1895-97-99; the Northeastern Ohio championship in 1895; the Central Pennsylvania championship in 1900; the Pan-American Hook and Ladder championship in 1901; the Pennsylvania Hook and Ladder championship in 1900-1901-2; the Western Pennsylvania Hook and Ladder championship in 1900-1901-2.

The best time made by the team for 250 yards distance was thirty-two seconds, and for the 200 yard distance, twenty-six seconds.

Good Will Hose Company.—The second company to be organized was the Good Will Hose Company in October, 1878. Its first officers were Philip Bauer, president; James B. Mitchell, vice-president; Geo. J. Reiber, secretary; G. Wilson Miller, assistant secretary; John Irwin, foreman; James Moffit, assistant foreman; and W. A. Stein, treasurer. The present membership of the company is fifty-eight, and its officers are W. J. Rattigan, president; August Collins, vice-president; Earnest Faber, secretary and treasurer; J. W. Heckert, assistant secretary; Theo. Smith, foreman; John Lefevre, assistant foreman; S. M. Hildebrand, John Dickey and L. S. McJunkin, trustees. The company is quartered in a rented building on East Jefferson Street.

Campbell Hose Company.—When the fire department was first organized, the town was divided into the first and second wards, Jefferson Street being the dividing line. The two original hose companies were named for their respective wards. In 1888, a redivision of the town was made into five wards, placing both of the old companies in the second ward. A new company was organized in the fifth ward November 1, 1888, and named in honor of John S. Campbell, who was one of its promoters. Among the charter members were John S. Campbell, David E. Dale, Wesley P. Roessing, J. A. Bonner, George Reiber, William Kennedy, Ralph Gregg, W. M. Starr, George W. Zeigler, Edward MeShane, August Miller, Joseph Northrup, Harry Gregg and William Bassitt. The company was first quartered in the Kirkpatrick building on North Main Street, but subsequently removed to the Younkins building on West North street. The present membership is fifty-nine, and the officers are F. N. Cooper, president; Edward Archer, vice-president; L. H. Clouse, secretary; John Allison, assistant secretary; A. M. Aiken, treasurer; M. M. Dobson, foreman; N. S. Snow, first assistant; John Bracy, second assistant foreman; Thomas McGuirk, Joseph Keeling and R. B. Allison, trustees.

The Southside Hose Company was organized in 1903 by merging the old Springdale Hose Company and the Markham Hook and Ladder Company. The former was organized June 11, 1888, and the latter in 1889. The new company has a membership of thirty-eight, and its officers are E. T. Burns, president; F. E. Stewart, vice-president; F. R. Zeigler, secretary; James Shaffer, treasurer; Paul Lehere, foreman; James Dunn, assistant foreman; Roy Campbell, Harry DeHaven and C. H. Skillman, trustees.

The Rescue Hook and Ladder Company.—In 1893 David Sypher effected the organization of a Hook and Ladder Company in the west end of town, and the new organization was named the Sypher Hook and Ladder Company. Subsequently the name of the company was changed to the Rescue Hook and Ladder Company, as it was supplied with a hose-cart as well as the hook and ladder truck.

Commencing in 1896 the company did some racing, winning the Hook and Ladder championship at Johnstown that year, at Beaver Falls the year following and at McKees Rocks in 1898. In the latter year the company won the Hose Race at McKees Rocks, and at Scottdale in 1899 the team won the Hook and Ladder race, the Service race and the Hose race. In 1900 the team won second money in a number of hook and ladder contests, as well as hose races. The present membership of the company is thirty-one. The officers are I. A. Weter, president; G. O. Schenk, vice-president; Jas. A. McDowell, secretary; T. E. Sullivan, treasurer; C. G. Ihlenfeld, foreman; Frank Grayson, assistant foreman; Will Sullivan, second assistant and O. A. Dershlimer, G. O. Schenk and T. Heberling, trustees. The company has quarters on Mercer Street which are handsomely fitted up.

The East End Hose Company is the youngest of the fire-fighting companies in the town, and the only one to own its own building. The company was organized December 12, 1898, and subsequently erected a frame building at the corner of Second and Brady Streets, which is used as a storage house for the apparatus, and club rooms for the company. The membership of the company is forty-seven, and the following are the officers: E. S. Critchlow, president; Thomas Craig, vice-president; Lewis Cumberland, secretary; Ed. E. Starr, assistant secretary; Daniel Younkins, treasurer; George Williams, foreman; L. A. Goepfner, first assistant; and L. S. Hoon, Sr., second assistant foreman; George Williams, C. Biehl, and W. J. Eury, trustees.

Firemen's Relief Association.—Among the organizations of the Butler Fire Department is the Firemen's Relief Association, which pays benefits to firemen who are injured while on duty. The association derives its revenue from a tax imposed on foreign insurance companies doing business in Pennsylvania. Butler firemen have been extremely fortunate, and the expenditures of the organization in the ten years of its existence have been extremely light. As a result there is at the present time over $5,000 in the treasury with which to meet the future demands of the organization. The present officers are M. H. Reiber, president; W. J. Heineman, vice-president; and C. H. Douglass, secretary and treasurer.

When the fire department was organized in 1878, A. L. Reiber was elected chief, and continued to hold that position until 1900, when he retired, and Jacob C. Burkhalter, the present chief, was elected. Chief Burkhalter is a charter member of the Good Will Hose Company, and has been a member of the volunteer fire department since its organization. J. A. Walter, a member of the First Ward Company, was assistant chief for a number of years, but this office was abolished in 1907. The fire police is composed of three members from each company under command of J. W. Zeigler.

Paid Department.—The first steps toward a paid fire department were taken in January, 1909, when the city council purchased two hose and chemical wagons, and two teams of horses for the use of the department, and set about its re-organization. One of the paid companies is located on Lookout Avenue, Southside, and the other on West North Street, on the property recently purchased by the city for a City Building.

FUNERAL DIRECTORS.

The early funeral directors and undertakers' business was associated with that of cabinet-maker. One of the pioneers to engage in the business was George Miller, who manufactured furniture and coffins on South McKean Street, and performed the duties of funeral director whenever his services were required.

George Roessing engaged in the business on West Jefferson Street about 1847, and subsequently conducted an undertaking business at his carriage and wagon-making shop on West Cunningham Street until about 1888. The business was then removed to West Jefferson Street, and subsequently to the present location on North Main Street. For many years the firm was known as George Roessing & Son, the junior member of the firm being Wesley P. Roessing. After the death of the father, the son continued the business as W. P. Roessing, and at the present time he has associated with him his son, Fred Roessing.

The undertaking business now conducted by M. A. Berkimer was established in 1893 by Berkimer & Taylor. They first had rooms in the Cratty Building, two doors south of the present location, where they continued for two years, when Mr. Taylor retired, and Mr. Berkimer became the sole owner. He has an up-to-date establishment, and in addition to his undertaking business conducts a livery at the rear of the Y. M. C. A. Building.

The firm of Amy & Eyth began the undertaking business in the old postoffice building on South Main Street in 1904. Frank Eyth retired from the firm in May, 1905, and the business has since been conducted by George W. Amy. In the spring of 1908 the business was removed to North Main Street, the present location.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

The first justice of the peace in the town was Samuel Cunningham, the pioneer. The records show that in 1808 he united Walter Lowrie and Miss Amelia McPherrin in marriage. In 1809 Mr. Lowrie was appointed justice. After him came Abraham Brinker, Reuben Ayres, Hugh McKee, John Duffy, John Sweeney and Patrick Kelley, Jr. These justices were all appointed by the respective governors previous to the adoption of the Constitution of 1839, after which the office became elective. From 1840 to 1908 the following have served: Patrick Kelley, 1840; Robert Carnahan, 1841-45-50-55; Samuel C.

Stewart, 1841; Samuel G. Purvis, 1845-50-55-60-65; James Glenn, 1846-51; George C. Roessing, 1856-61; James McNair, 1865; William S. Ziegler, 1866; Jacob Keck, 1869-1908, inclusive; Robert McClure, 1869; John G. Muntz, 1871-76; John B. Butler, 1875; Henry Pillow, 1878-79; Lewis P. Walker, 1881-86; John B. Black, 1881; Samuel P. Irvine, 1882; John W. Brown, 1885; J. P. McQuistion, 1886; R. C. McAboy, 1888-91; Cyrus E. Anderson, 1891-96-1901; R. B. Gilchrist, 1896; Reuben McElvaine, 1901; R. C. McAboy, 1903 (appointed); James Maxwell, 1904; H. W. Christie, 1904; J. H. Sutton, 1907 (appointed); Wm. F. Lytle, 1907; F. H. Davy, 1908.

The Butler County Humane Society, a branch of the Federated Humane Society of Pennsylvania, was chartered by the Courts of Butler County, December 10, 1897, with one hundred and forty-three charter members. The purpose of the society is to protect animals, children and aged people from abusive treatment, and enforce such laws as have been enacted by the State covering the subject. For a number of years the local society was supported by the subscriptions of the members, but within the last two years the fines enforced have been sufficient to pay the running expenses of the local branch. The local society has representatives in all of the townships and boroughs of the county, and is governed by a board composed of the following: L. B. Stein, Al. Ruff, C. E. Cronenwett, Lewis P. Walker and E. E. Abrams. C. G. Christie is president of the board, E. E. Abrams, secretary, and John H. Sutton, agent. During the past year the society has investigated sixty cases of cruelty to animals, and tried twenty cases in the court, and in the past eighteen months they have prosecuted three cases of cruelty to children. The society is represented on the State Board by C. G. Christie.

The Butler Public Library is kept up by an organization of public spirited ladies of the town, of which Mrs. H. C. Phillips is president; Mrs. J. D. Lowrie, vice-president; Miss Grace Prugh, secretary; and the Butler Savings & Trust Company, treasurer. The association occupied a rented building at 226 North Main street for a number of years where the library was kept open every afternoon and evening, and a public reading room was maintained in connection with the library. In the fall of 1908 the association moved the quarters to the old school building on East Jefferson Street. Miss Clara B. McJunkin is the librarian.

CHURCHES.

First Presbyterian Church of Butler is the oldest congregation in the city. The records of the church, however, post-date its organization twenty years and the settlement of Presbyterians here by at least thirty-three years. A few years before the close of the eighteenth century, there were found among the settlers a few individuals who, though ridiculed by the world, maintained the domestic and social worship of God and were members of the Presbyterian church, though not yet regularly organized as a congregation. It is thought that Rev. Mr. Gwinn was the first minister of the gospel who preached to them, in the fall of 1797. Rev. Mr. Moorehead preached here in 1798, and he was followed by Revs. Samuel Tait, William Wylie, and others. These men preached during the season of the "Bodily Exercise," which prevailed throughout the country, and to some extent in this place, particularly in 1803 and 1804. The gospel was now preached, for the most part, at Thorn's tent and Russell's tent—the former within the bounds of Butler congregation, near the house where William Kearns resided (in 1837), and the latter was within the bounds of the Concord congregation.

The church of Harmony was organized in 1805, with sixteen members, by Rev. John McPherrin.

On April 7, 1813, Rev. John McPherrin was installed pastor of the churches of Butler and Concord by the Presbytery of Erie. He began preaching in the court house at Butler, to the newly organized church of this borough, devoting three-fourths of his time to it and giving one-fourth to the church at Concord. In 1815, a stone meeting-house was erected, on the site of the present building, and in it the pioneer preacher held regular services until his death, February 10, 1822.

In the fall of 1814 the movement to erect a house of worship was inaugurated, and the contract was awarded to John Neyman for $1,500. Rev. John Coulter was ordained and installed pastor of the united churches of Butler, Concord and Muddy Creek September 10, 1823,—giving one-half his time to Butler. In the spring of 1833, he resigned the Butler charge, and in July of that year Rev. Loyal Young commenced preaching at Butler, and was ordained pastor, December 4, 1833. He found on the list the names of 105 members.

In 1833, the suggestion of a new building was carried out, and $3,200 expended on a house fit to accommodate the large congregation.

A constitution was adopted June 30, 1823, and on the 8th of January, 1824, the congregation was incorporated. A second charter was obtained in 1854, which is now the law of the church. In December, 1834, resolutions against the theatrical meetings, then being held at Butler, were adopted, and the elders exercised the closest supervision over the members of the congregation, calling on many of them to confess and reform. In 1836, the question of betting on elections was presented, and one member was suspended because he would, "under similar circumstances bet again." In December, 1858, Elders Boyd, Martin and Graham were appointed a committee to secure a lot for a church building, south or southeast of Butler, for the accommodation of members living distant from the town in the direction indicated. In January, 1859, the committee of elders reported that an acre of land was secured from Joseph Robinson for twenty dollars, the location being five miles southeast, on the Saxonburg Road, and that funds of building to the amount of $350 were on hand. The years 1862 and 1863 are noted for the erection of a new church building.

April 28, 1868, Mr. Young's relation with the church was dissolved. During his ministry nearly 450 persons united with the church and several revivals of marked interest occurred. Witherspoon Institute owed its existence to him more than any other man. The work of calling the convention which brought the school into existence, of preparing the charter, of raising money and of starting the school, devolved principally upon him, and he was its principal for a considerable period.

In May, 1868, Rev. W. I. Brugh was stated supply. He was installed pastor November 2, 1869, and resigned in April, 1871. On January 23, 1872, Rev. C. H. McClellan was installed pastor.

Rev. W. T. Wylie was installed pastor in June, 1879. He resigned December 25, 1881. In June, 1882, Rev. W. E. Oiler was elected pastor; in December, W. D. Brandon was chosen superintendent, and Joseph S. Gray assistant, of the Sabbath school.

The present church is simply an extension of that erected in 1862-63, the work being accomplished in 1874-5. With the exception of the court house, and Jefferson Street school building and high school, this church building occupies the finest site within the borough limits. The extension was completed in 1880 at an expenditure of about $16,000. With the exception of reseating, the addition of a gallery, and some repair work, the building has remained the same. A new pipe organ was installed in 1899 at an expense of about $2,500.

In 1897 one hundred and sixty-two members of the congregation were dismissed by letter to form the Second Presbyterian Church of Butler. The membership of the old congregation in 1908 was 601. John F. Anderson was superintendent of the Sunday school, George B. Wick, director of music, W. D. Brandon, teacher of the young men's bible class, and A. T. Scott, teacher of the Sullivan Men's Bible class. This class is one of the interesting features of the church, and was organized under the instruction of Col. John M. Sullivan, February 5, 1888. Col. Sullivan continued as teacher of the class until his death July 26, 1896, the membership at that time being about fifty. After the death of Col. Sullivan, A. T. Scott, Esq., a member of the Butler Bar, was chosen teacher, a position which he still holds. After the organization of the Second Presbyterian Church, the class was divided, but it still retains a large membership. The branch of the class in the Second Church is instructed by D. D. Quigley.

The trustees in 1908 were W. C. Thompson, A. D. Sarver, Frank Mitchell, H. H. Boyd, E. I. Brugh, and E. E. Abrams. The elders were W. D. Brandon, John C. Reddick, C. N. Boyd, John F. Anderson, Robert M. Anderson and P. W. Lowry. The death of Elder William Campbell, Jr., and Elder James Stevenson was noted during 1907.

St. Mark's Evangelical Lutheran Church is one of the oldest church organizations in Butler, dating from 1813, in which year and subsequently Rev. Jacob Schnee made missionary visits, baptizing a large number of German residents. Early in November, 1821, Bishop J. C. G. Schweitzerbarth, a scholarly divine hailing from Stuttgart, Germany, took charge of the interests of Lutheranism in this place. When he came here he found but six members. June 3, 1821, he first administered communion to the congregation, having the day previous confirmed his first class of catechumens and effected a preliminary organization. The officials chosen were Jacob Mechling, John McCollough and John Henshew. Ten years later steps were taken to draft a permanent constitution, to secure a charter, and build a church; and in 1841 the council was constituted a corporate and body politic by the title, "The Ministers, Trustees, Elders and Deacons of the German Evangelical Lutheran Congregations of St. Marcus Church in Butler."

The new church, a brick structure forty by sixty with an annex of twenty-two feet, and a belfry, was dedicated September 26, 1841.

The cost of the building, about $4,000, entailed some financial hardships on the members, but by a strong and united effort they succeeded in meeting the most pressing obligations. Prosperity again returned in 1847, a small organ was bought, and soon after a burial ground was purchased.

The congregation originally had among its numbers a sprinkling of American born people. Some of these, together with others, were, through Rev. G. Bassler, organized into an English Lutheran congregation on the 16th of January, 1843, and for a few years they held service in the German church. This drew off the English element, and in consequence St. Mark's congregation remained purely German. Bishop Schweitzerbarth's pastoral relation with the congregation continued till April, 1849, a period of nearly twenty-eight years.

On the 8th of April that year Rev. William A. Fetter became the first resident pastor. He remained till the summer of 1863, when he removed to Millerstown. The congregation was supplied by Rev. J. N. Wolf, and others, till January, 1864, when Rev. G. F. H. Meiser was secured as pastor. During the time of his service a comfortable parsonage on Wayne Street was secured, and a large pipe organ for the church purchased. Rev. Meiser resigned and was succeeded in January, 1869, by Rev. C. H. W. Luebker. He retired in 1876, his successor being Rev. E. Cronenwett, who has remained as pastor to the present time.

The corner stone of a new church edifice was laid August 15, 1878, in a new location on the corner of Washington and Jefferson Streets, and the dedication of the new building took place September 7, 1879. The cost of the entire property, site, structure, sheds, fencing, pavements, etc., was about $18,000.

During the past sixty years St. Mark's congregation, in addition to the usual loss of members by death and removals, has suffered several extensive drains through branch organization of its membership. Out of it grew in some measure the English Lutheran Church of Butler, organized in 1843. The next was an effort to form an Evangelical Church in Butler which turned out German Reformed, and then became extinct about 1870, and in 1876 the German Lutheran Church of Summit Township was organized about four miles east of Butler. The so-called "White Church" four miles west of Butler, was another branch organized about 1890, but has since become extinct, the members uniting with the church in Butler. The territory of the congregation still extends in its extreme limits from five to seven miles in all directions from Butler. In January, 1909, the number of communicant members was 700. The young people and three-fourths of the adult membership are English, though services in the German language are still regularly held on every alternate Sunday morning. The Sunday-school has an enrollment of 185 scholars, and ten teachers. J. H. Troutman is superintendent, and C. E. Cronenwett and Frank E. Troutman, assistant superintendents. Two women's societies are in active work in the congregation, the Senior and the Junior Ladies' Missionary Societies.

Rev. E. Cronenwett, D. D., pastor of this congregation, entered on the thirty-third year of his pastorate here in January, 1909, and is in the forty-sixth year of his ministry. He is at the present time the senior resident pastor of Butler.

United Presbyterian Church.—This is the second oldest church organization in the borough of Butler. At a meeting of the Associate Reformed Presbytery of the Monongahela, held at "Yough Meeting House," June 25, 1804, a petition was presented for "supplies of gospel ordinances" from the congregation of "Butlertown." So far as any records that are extant show, this was the origin of the present United Presbyterian congregation of Butler.

The petitioners, though probably few in number, must have pressed their petition very earnestly, and the Presbytery must have regarded Butler town as no unpromising field, for the petition was promptly granted and Rev. Joseph Kerr, a young man who had just been ordained, was appointed to supply on the first Sabbath of August, 1804.

It is evident that the congregation of Butler town was well pleased with the young minister, for we find them three weeks after hearing the first sermon present at a meeting of Presbytery, either by commissioners or petition, asking "for supplies of preaching." Again in the following spring a similar application was made by the congregation of "Butler town."

Rev. Mungo Dick was appointed to preach in Butler on the second Sabbath of July, 1805. September 3, 1805, the Presbytery "received a petition from the congregation of Butler town and Deer Creek praying to be united and have as frequent supplies of sermons as can be afforded."

which petition was granted. In March, 1811, the Butler society presented a petition to the Presbytery "praying for the dissolution of their connection with Deer Creek and the establishment of a connection with Slippery Rock." The Butler congregation with its new partner at once put forth an effort to obtain a pastoral settlement, but, as on previous occasions, met with disappointment. After various unsuccessful attempts had been made to secure a regular pastor, the prayers of this people were answered, and on May 17, 1819, Rev. Isaiah Niblock, a young man and a licentiate from the Presbytery of Monaghan, Ireland, presented credentials, on the credit of which he was received as a probationer under the direction of Presbytery. He gave satisfaction and was ordained and installed on the 17th of November, 1819, when for the first time the Associate Reformed Presbytery met in Butler. The first communion service was held in the valley just south of the North cemetery. It was the first service of the kind conducted by the young minister, and the first time the congregation of Butler was permitted to receive the sacrament at the hands of their own pastor. The occasion was a memorable event. Rev. Niblock organized a Sunday school but the exact date is unknown; but it was evidently the first held in Butler, for while conducted by the Associate Reformed congregation, members of other denominations were among its officers and teachers.

For some years after the advent of Mr. Niblock the congregation labored under the disadvantage of having no church building. For a time services were held in the court house, but as other denominations met there, appointments often conflicted. Arrangements were then made to hold services in the ravine below the cemetery, where the first communion was held. Hugh McKee obtained permission and the congregation hauled logs and put blocks under them, and on these rough hewn pews they sat for hours listening to the word of life.

In 1824 a deed was given by Robert Campbell and Jane his wife to John Potts in trust for the Associate Reformed church of Butler, for lot 138 on which the church now stands. A brick meeting-house was proposed and the contract let. When completed, it was an oblong square-cornered brick building costing four or five thousand dollars. "The old church," says Rev. Mr. Niblock, "forms a distinct picture in my mind. High upon the wall was the little old-fashioned red box pulpit with its closed doors. The pews were large with doors to each; and every seat was occupied by one or more families. The gallery ran around the three sides of the church and was comfortably seated. The church was generally filled with worshipers, and on communion Sabbaths, which were always high days, a large audience crowded the building to overflowing."

In addition to the onerous duties of the pastorate, Mr. Niblock was appointed county treasurer by the commissioners in 1826. At the close of the year we find published a full report of his receipts and expenditures amounting to $5,785.23.

After eighteen years of arduous service Mr. Niblock was, at his own request, owing to ill health, released from White Oak Springs of his charge, October 23, 1835. In 1839 additional seating accommodations were required, and pews were placed in the gallery of the Butler church at a cost of $153. In 1845 an arrangement was entered into between the Butler and Union congregations by which a portion of Mr. Niblock's time was given to them. This arrangement continued until 1853, after which this congregation became a separate pastoral charge. In 1849 the charter of the congregation was amended by reducing the number of trustees from nine to three. Some time in 1851 a portion of ground south of the borough, containing one and a half acres or more, was given by John McQuiston to the trustees in trust for the congregation, to be used as a burying ground.

In 1858, the degree of doctor of divinity was conferred on Rev. Niblock by Westminster College. At the opening of the year 1864, Dr. Niblock, who had never been a very strong man, began to show signs of failing health, and on Wednesday afternoon, June 29, 1864, he peacefully entered into heavenly rest. Greatly honored and respected through life, his memory will ever remain green in the hearts of those who knew him.

The congregation remained without a pastor for nearly two years, when Mr. John Gailey, a licentiate under the care of Monongahela Presbytery, was called. He was ordained and installed April 24, 1866. Soon after it was decided to enlarge the building, and the work was completed during the winter following at a cost of $5,800. In 1871 an addition of twenty feet was made to the east end of the church at a cost of about $3,000.

Rev. Gailey was released at his own request, December 26, 1871, and was succeeded by Rev. George McCormick, who was ordained and installed October 22d, following. He resigned to enter upon missionary work in the far west, and was released April 22, 1873. A year later the congregation secured the services of Rev. R. G. Ferguson, who was installed January 18, 1875. On July 8, 1884, he was released to accept the presidency of Westminster College.

Three weeks after the resignation of Dr. Ferguson the congregation extended a call to Rev. John S. McKee, D. D., of Mercer. He began his work here the first of October, 1884, and continued until his death, March 5, 1903. During his pastorate of almost twenty years the congregation more than doubled in numbers, erected a handsome new church edifice, and had grown to be one of the strongest churches in the denomination. At a meeting of the congregation held in June, 1903, a call was extended to Rev. A. R. Robinson, of Martins Ferry, which was accepted, and he began his work the first of September that year. He was installed at the regular meeting of Butler Presbytery, which was held in October. Rev. Robinson continued as pastor until February 1, 1907, when he was released at his own request to accept a call from the Sixth United Presbyterian Church at Pittsburg. The congregation was without a pastor for a little over a year, when a call was extended to Rev. R. B. Miller, who was then pastor of the United Presbyterian Church at Beaver, Pennsylvania, which was accepted. He began his labors here April 1, 1908.

As the church increased in strength from year to year, the old house became too small to accommodate the worshippers, and in March, 1891, it was unanimously voted to build a new church. A piece of ground fronting fifteen feet on McKean Street and extending one hundred feet back, was purchased for $1,200, in order to give more room. The plan as finally settled on was for a stone and brick building in the Romanesque style of architecture, comprising an audience room sixty-nine by seventy-six feet, with a lecture room forty-nine by fifty-four feet. On July 9, 1891, contracts were made for the construction of a building to cost a little over $20,000. Sunday, July 12, 1891, the last service was held in the old building, and on the following Monday the pews were removed to Reiber's Hall, and on the 20th the work of demolition was commenced and such progress made that on August 12th the corner-stone was formally laid. December 27, 1891, the lecture room was occupied for the first time, the congregation having worshipped twenty-three Sabbaths in Reiber's Hall. The building was completed January 8, 1894, and on the 22d of February of the same year it was dedicated. It presents a fine appearance both externally and internally, the acoustics are good, and the total seating capacity of both rooms is about 1,200. The cost, including fixtures, was $26,153.28.

In 1904 the congregation erected a parsonage on the lot east of the church on Jefferson Street at a cost of about $5,000, exclusive of the ground. The membership of the congregation has increased from 231 on October 1, 1884, to 752 on January 31, 1909. The church has a well organized Women's Missionary Society, Young Women's Society, Christian Union and Junior Society, and an attendance of about 300 in the Sabbath school, of which Hon. James M. Galbreath is superintendent, S. B. Pollock assistant superintendent, and Miss Emily M. Brittain, associate superintendent. The members of the session in 1909 were Samuel D. Purvis, John T. Kelley, W. B. Shrader, Thornley C. Johnson, James M. Galbreath, and M. L. Armstrong. The trustees were William G. Douthett, president, Raymond S. Cornelius, secretary, C. G. Christie, John G. McFarlin, Al. Ruff, Aaron Bieghley. Miss Jean McKee is treasurer.

The Italian Mission, under the care of this church, was organized in the fall of 1906, with Rev. Michael Renzetti, as pastor. The services are held in a rented hall on Elm Street, which is also used for the purpose of holding night school during the week. At the present time there are forty members attending the mission. The Sabbath school has an enrollment of seventy, and the night school an enrollment of thirty. Rev. Renzetti is the superintendent of the Sabbath school, Salvatora Schallanbbi is secretary, and Frank Tremarke is treasurer. Miss Mary McKee is the organist.

First Evangelical Lutheran Church.—The first meeting of those favorable to the organization of an English Lutheran Church in Butler was held in the German church of the same denomination then located on South McKean Street, on the 16th of January, 1843. Jacob Meehling served as secretary of this meeting, and Rev. Gottlieb Bassler was chosen treasurer. A church constitution for the guidance of the organization was adopted at this meeting, and at a subsequent meeting the first church council was elected. The constitution adopted by the society was signed by forty-five individuals, twenty-two males and twenty-three females.

Services appear to have been held in the German Church or in the court house until 1848, when the question of building a church was considered. An offer by Michael Emerick of a lot on West North Street (now the site of Bethany Reformed Church), was accepted, and the latter donated the ground in fee simple to the congregation. The building was begun in 1849 and completed and dedicated in September, 1850. This building served its purpose for twenty-seven years, when negotiations were entered into for the purchase of the Witherspoon Institute property on North Main Street, which occupied the site of the present church. The purchase of this property was made early in 1876, and the changes and improvements made at that time, including the original cost of the property, was about $7,700.00.

A charter was obtained for the association in 1852 during the pastorate of Rev. Bassler.

An event of historical importance to English Lutherans in Western Pennsylvania took place in Butler about a year after the organization of the church. The Pittsburg Synod was organized in 1844, and it was in Butler that the preliminary conference was held for the purpose of making arrangements for the organization of the Synod. A number of prominent ministers of the denomination were present.

After the Rev. Bassler the pastors succeeded as follows: Rev. A. H. Waters, 1855-1861; Rev. J. H. Fritz, until 1869; no pastor for about ten months; Rev. L. H. Geshwind, 1870-1874; Rev. J. Q. Waters was next called and began his work here in July, 1875, to August, 1884; Rev. D. L. Roth, November, 1884, to October, 1888; Rev. G. E. Titzel, November, 1888, to November, 1891; Rev. Enoch Smith, 1891, until his death, May 23, 1894; Rev. D. L. Roth second time, November 18, 1894, to 1898; Rev. S. M. Mounitz, called 1898, with Rev. T. B. Roth, D. D., then president of Thiel College, Greenville, as associate pastor, until July, 1903; no pastor until March 6, 1904, when Rev. Robert D. Roeder, of Norristown, who had previously accepted a call, was regularly installed. He is the present pastor.

The large increase in membership from 1885 to 1895 created the necessity of larger and better quarters, and in 1897 the congregation began the erection of the present handsome stone church building which was completed and dedicated the following year at a cost of about $25,000, exclusive of the lot and the interior furnishings. This building occupies the site of the old Witherspoon Institute building at the corner of Main and Clay Streets, which was one of the historical educational institutions of the town.

An event of importance to the congregation took place on March 8, 1908, when a new pipe organ which had been donated by the children of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Reiber, was dedicated at the morning services, and in the evening a jubilee service was held at which the church mortgage was burned. These services were attended by Rev. T. B. Roth, D. D., Rev. Warren Roth, D. D., Rev. D. L. Roth, D. D., and Rev. H. K. Shanor.

The membership of the congregation in January, 1909, was 350, and the following composed the church council: William Kesselman, A. E. Reiber, John R. Henninger, D. F. Reed, W. H. Hildebrand, J.

F. Kittleberger, H. G. Graham, George Krug, Jr., and Lonis G. Nicol. The society has a well organized Sunday school, with A. E. Reiber as superintendent, a Women's Missionary Society, Junior Missionary Society, and the Luther League.

Grace Lutheran Church.—The Grace Lutheran congregation, a branch sanctioned by the General Synod, was organized here in 1890 by Rev. H. B. Winton. The first meeting of the society was held June 16, 1890, and the formal organization took place in August of the same year, when thirty-five charter members were enrolled. Rev. Winton supplied the new congregation until October, 1891, when Rev. J. E. Maurer was installed pastor. He was succeeded on February 1, 1893, by Rev. Eli Miller, who continued as pastor until August 6, 1901, when he resigned to accept a call to St. Mark's Church, Northside, Pittsburg. Rev. J. C. Nicholas, the present pastor, was called November 1, 1901.

For the first few years after its organization the society held services in a rented hall in the Reiber Building on South Main Street. A charter was secured May 13, 1893, and the same year a lot was purchased from H. J. Klinger on the corner of Mifflin and Church Streets. A brick edifice was erected which was completed in the early part of 1905 at a cost of $5,350.00. In 1904 a Sunday-school room was erected at the north side of the building, and a pipe organ installed, the services incident to the rededication of the church taking place on September 25th of that year. The total value of the church property in 1908 was about $20,000.00. The membership of the society is 400, and in addition it has a Woman's Missionary Society, Young Women's Missionary Circle, Christian Endeavor Society and Junior Society. E. A. Whitekettle is superintendent of the Sunday-school, and J. H. Murtland president of the Christian Endeavor Society. The official board in 1908 was composed of Elders J. H. Reiber, W. M. Bellis, L. H. Craig and D. W. Johns. The deacons were Charles H. Barnhart, W. H. Ensminger, J. B. Hutchison and W. J. Daugherty.

The Second Presbyterian Church, of Butler, is the daughter of the First Church, and had its inception at a meeting of the session and board of trustees of the First Presbyterian Church held on May 12, 1897, at which David L. Cleeland and Dr. John E. Byers were authorized to secure the services of a minister and provide a place for holding worship for six months with a view of determining the propriety of organizing a second Presbyterian church in Butler. This committee secured the use of the assembly rooms of the Y. M. C. A. building and the first services were held June 6th, 1897. The formal organization was effected on the 11th of October, 1897, by a committee of Butler Presbytery composed of Rev. J. B. Coulter, D. D., chairman; Rev. W. E. Oller, D. D., Rev. I. D. Decker, D. D., and Elder Elliott Robb, of Prospect. One hundred and sixty-two persons were received by letter from the First Presbyterian Church, of Butler, forty from other churches and twenty-seven on examination. Rev. I. D. Decker presided at the meeting, and after the preliminaries had been arranged officially declared the church regularly organized as the Second Presbyterian Church of Butler.

The new congregation was supplied until October 27, 1897, when a call was extended to Rev. Edwin R. Worrell, of Waverly, Kansas, which was accepted. Rev. Worrell continued as pastor until the beginning of 1907, when he resigned to accept a position as field secretary in the temperance work. In the ten years of his pastorate here the congregation had almost doubled its membership, erected a church building and was well equipped for excellent work. Rev. Geo. C. Miller, a graduate of the Western Theological Seminary, at Allegheny, class of 1907, was elected in April, 1907, and installed by a committee of Butler Presbytery July 11th. Under his pastorate the congregation has experienced a steady growth and has an effective working organization.

The death of Dr. John E. Byers, one of the first elders, was recorded on February 8, 1904, on the minutes of the session. In 1908 the session was composed of Thos. B. White, Robt. A. White, Thomas Hayes, C. B. Conway, Dr. W. B. Clark, David L. Cleland, J. E. Brandon, D. D. Quigley and J. P. Whiteside. The deacons were J. C. McNees, H. H. Hull, and Geo. D. Kameron. The trustees were P. H. Sechler, Ira McJunkin, J. H. Starr, C. E. McIntyre, T. B. Young and D. H. Sutton. The superintendents of the Sabbath school since its organization have been David L. Cleeland, Levi M. Wise, Robert A. White and Ira McJunkin. The congregation had 561 members in 1908, a well organized Christian Endeavor Society, a Women's Missionary Society, Ladies' Aid Society, and Young Women's Missionary Society.

Soon after the organization of the congregation steps were taken towards securing a suitable house for worship. A lot was purchased from the Graham heirs on the Southeast corner of the Diamond for which six thousand dollars was paid. T. B. Young, Ira McJunkin and Thomas Hayes were appointed a building committee and in 1902 the contract for the present church was let to George Schenk, of Butler. The church was completed and dedicated on October 7th, 1903 at a total cost of $34,000.00. The building and lot represents an investment of $40,000.00. Subsequently a pipe organ was installed at a cost of $2,500.00. The church is constructed of native sandstone, medieval in style of architecture, and modern in all of its appointments. With the exception of $2,500.00 subscribed by members of the First Church, the entire expense has been met by the Second Church, and in 1908 the indebtedness of the society had been reduced to $8,000.00.

Rev. George C. Miller, pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church of Butler, was born April 1, 1878, near Punxsutawney, Jefferson County, Pennsylvania, and is the son of Eli F. Miller. He was educated in the common schools of the county and at Indiana (Pa.) State Normal, and subsequently taught school for three years. Later he entered the Missouri Valley College at Marshall, Missouri, and graduated in the class of 1904. In the fall of 1904 he entered the Western Theological Seminary at Allegheny and was graduated in the class of 1907. While a student at the seminary he was ordained in Allegheny Presbytery of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, September 10, 1905, and did supply work for New Salem Cumberland Presbyterian Church. He was moderator of the Union Presbytery for one year during this time. While a student of the third year he supplied the Second Presbyterian Church of Butler, and in April, 1907, was elected pastor of that congregation to succeed Rev. Edwin R. Worrell. This call was accepted, and he was installed by a committee of Butler Presbytery July 11, 1907. At the annual meeting of Butler Presbytery held in June, 1908, he was elected moderator, which position he now holds. Rev. Miller was married September 12, 1904, to Miss Alice Newton, of Warrensburg, Missouri. They have one daughter, Catherine Virginia.

St. Peter's Episcopal Church.—The history of St. Peter's Protestant Episcopal Church of Butler dates back to some time in 1818, when the Rev. Jackson Kemper (afterwards Bishop) visited the locality as agent for the "Society for the Advancement of Christianity in Pennsylvania," and held Episcopal services in the parlor of the residence of Hon. John Gilmore. After the services a number of children were baptized. There is no record of any regular visitations by Episcopal ministers until 1824, when the Protestant Episcopal Church of Butler was organized. The officiating minister at this time was Rev. Robert Ayres, and the membership consisted of but a few families. The first meeting held to take steps towards the erection of a church building was in the court house. The Right Rev. John H. Hopkins, then rector of Trinity Church, Pittsburg, and afterwards bishop of the Diocese of Vermont, presided at this meeting. Judge Bredin proposed and did donate the lot of ground on East Jefferson Street on which the building was afterwards erected, and which is the site of the present edifice. One thousand dollars was subscribed towards the church building fund at this meeting, and immediate steps were taken towards the erection of the building. Prior to its completion services were held by Rev. Ayres in the Court House.

The first pastor of the new church was Rev. M. P. Bonnell, who began his work in 1824 and continued until 1827. He was succeeded by Rev. Wm. G. Hilton, who remained six years, and he was followed by Rev. Thomas Crompton, who served about six months. Rev. B. B. Killikelly came in 1833, and was succeeded in 1837 by Rev. Wm. White, D. D., who continued as pastor of the congregation for forty years. Rev. White resigned in 1877, and was succeeded by Rev. Daniel I. Edwards, who took charge January 8, 1878. He resigned April 13, 1880, and in December of that year Rev. Edmond Burke took charge as rector and remained until August 8, 1882, when he was succeeded by Rev. S. H. S. Gallaudet. He was succeeded in 1884 by Rev. John London, and the latter in turn on the 15th of September, 1892, by Rev. Miles S. Hemenway. During the pastorate of Rev. Hemenway the new church building was begun and the congregation made substantial progress. He resigned on September 12, 1898, and was succeeded by Rev. T. B. Barlow, who was called March 26, 1899, and continued as pastor until June 4, 1904, when he resigned. During this pastorate the church edifice was completed and the new pipe organ installed, the latter being the gift of Mr. Andrew Carnegie. The present pastor, Rev. Mark H. Milne, was called October 27, 1904, and assumed the duties of his position shortly after.

The present church is an imposing structure, costing about twenty-five thousand dollars, exclusive of the furnishing and the lot. It stands on the site of the old church on ground donated by Judge John Bredin. The present membership of the congregation is 330 and the Sabbath school has an enrollment of 130.

St. Peter's Catholic Church.—The first Catholic church in Butler was erected by the English-speaking Catholics in 1822. It was the old St. Peter's, was built of stone, and stood upon the hill in the eastern part of the borough, where the old Catholic burial ground is now located. The building committee were John Duffy, Norbert Foltz, and William Hagerty, the last mentioned being also the contractor. Prior to the construction of the church, Rev. Charles Ferry came here in 1821, and organized the congregation. The first bishop to visit the church was Francis Patrick Kenrick, of Philadelphia, in 1834, when it was dedicated. It was superseded by the present German church, which was erected in 1849, on Franklin Street. On the occasion of the laying of the corner-stone, Hon. James Buchanan, who was on a visit to Butler at the time as the guest of Hon. William Beatty, was among the strangers present. The church was dedicated October 14, 1849, by Right Rev. Bishop O'Connor, of Pittsburg. The old stone chapel was taken down in 1853, and the English-speaking Catholics erected St. Paul's church in 1866.

As early as January 15, 1829, Mrs. Sarah Collins deeded to the Right Rev. Henry Conwell, D. D., bishop of Philadelphia, in trust for the members of the old St. Peter's Catholic Church, one acre and seven perches, together with right of way from this land to the Butler and Kittanning turnpike. This deed was granted for a valuable consideration and for the encouragement of the congregation in Butler to the trustee named and his successors in trust for St. Peter's Catholic Church. It was a part of a tract called "Newry," patented by the State, April 22, 1807, to Stephen Lowrey and bequeathed by him, November 29, 1821, to his daughter, Mrs. Sarah Collins. The only reservation in the deed of 1829, was that which preserved to her and to her heirs the right of burying, in the Collins tomb, deceased relatives by blood or marriage.

Rev. Charles Ferry was pastor of St. Peter's from 1821 to 1825; Rev. P. P. O'Neil from 1826 to 1834. He was succeeded by Rev. P. Rafferty, who served until 1837, then Revs. Gallagher and Joseph Cody up to 1840. Rev. John Mitchell followed and was pastor until 1846. After him came Rev. Joseph Creedon, who served as pastor until 1848. For several years after this the Benedictine Fathers had charge of the church and furnished pastors from time to time. They were succeeded by the Carmelite Fathers, who remained in control until the fall of 1880.

Rev. Jacob Rummelfanger became pastor of St. Peter's Church in the fall of 1880, and served the congregation until his death, in 1906. He was succeeded by Rev. Leonard Stenger, the present pastor. Rev. William Frome was appointed assistant in 1907. In 1889 the church was enlarged at a cost of about $3,000.00, and in 1900 the building was again repaired and remodeled at an expense of about $10,000.00. The congregation now embraces about 1,500 souls, and has a flourishing Sunday-school and a parochial school, which at the present time employs eight teachers. The recent growth of the congregation and the parochial school necessitates additional buildings, and a new school building is contemplated in the near future.

St. Paul's Catholic Church.—The original members of this church were among the first Catholic settlers of the county, and before the present church was built worshiped in St. Peter's, which they in no small degree helped to erect. A strong tide of German Catholic immigration to this place set in, and in a few years after, the original members of St. Peter's found themselves largely outnumbered by the German element. It was not long before a German priest was placed in charge of the church, and ultimately it came about that nearly all the sermons and instructions were given in the German language.

Urged by this condition of things, the English-speaking members determined to build a church for themselves. The initiative in this work was taken by Peter Duffy. He not only contributed largely to the erection of the church, but gave the building of it his personal supervision. The other members likewise contributed according to their means. The church was dedicated in February, 1867, by Bishop Domenee of Pittsburg, assisted by a large number of diocesan clergy. The membership of St. Paul's, although at first small, has been gradually increasing. In the pastorate of Rev. William Nolan, 1876-1891, St. Paul's Catholic Parochial school was established, and the new cemetery incorporated.

Father Nolan was succeeded immediately after his death in 1891 by Rev. Daniel Walsh, who continued in that relation until his death in December, 1903. Rev. L. A. Carroll, who was assistant under Father Walsh, had charge for a short time, when Rev. P. K. Collins became the pastor. The assistant pastor in 1908 was Rev. M. A. Leen. The old church, which was a neat and attractive structure, occupied a convenient position on McKean Street opposite the High School building. At a meeting of the congregation held on the first of January, 1909, it was decided to erect a new church, and a building committee was appointed. At the same meeting it was announced that the congregation had purchased the Charles Duffy property immediately north of the parish house for $40,000.00, and that this purchase would give the congregation the additional ground required on which to erect a new building. One of the considerations of the purchase was a donation of $5,000 made by Mr. Duffy for the building fund for the church, and another was a credit of $9,500 allowed to the church, which was a bequest made by the late Peter Duffy, the father of Charles Duffy, about forty-five years ago, and which will be held in trust. The old church and parish house were torn down in the spring of 1909, and the erection of the new building commenced. The new church when completed will cost approximately $100,000.00. The purchase of the Duffy property and the erection of the magnificent edifice at this time was made possible by the legacy left to the church by the late Mrs. Nancy Evans. This legacy consisted of real estate in Butler and money in bank amounting to about $40,000.

St. Paul's parish is one of the wealthiest in the Pittsburg Diocese; a reasonable value of its property in Butler would not fall short of $250,000.00. As it now stands, the church has no indebtedness; it had cash on hand amounting to $65,000.00, and outstanding subscriptions amounting to $10,000.00. Nearly two years will be required to complete the new church, and in that time it is hoped to gather in a sufficient amount of money to have the church consecrated free of all incumbrances except the Duffy mortgage.

In 1906 the congregation erected Parish Hall on the school lot on Monroe Street at a cost of about $9,000.00, which will be used for holding services until the new church building is completed. The membership of the congregation is now about 1,500, and it has several societies and a prosperous Sunday-school working in harmony with the church.

Methodist Episcopal Church. — As nearly as can be ascertained the first society or class of the Methodist church in Butler was organized about 1825. In 1826, Rev. John Chandler was appointed as preacher in charge, at which time Rev. William Swarzie appears to have been presiding elder of the district. In 1827, Caleb Brown, the class leader of the preceding year, by the vote and recommendation of the society, was licensed as an exhorter, and in the fall of the same year was placed in charge of Meadville circuit as a supply, in place of Rev. J. Leach, whose health had failed.

From 1828 to 1830 the records are missing. But from the organization it was one of the regular appointments of the Butler circuit up to August 9, 1851, when, by a vote of the quarterly conference, it was set off as a station, having sixty-two members. It remained a station for only one year, when it was again united with Butler circuit.

The first church building was a plain, but substantial, brick edifice of one story, erected, as nearly as can be ascertained, about 1827, in the southwest part of the town, on lot Number 67, purchased from John Negley, Sr. April 24, 1841, the membership was reported at seventy-nine. The society had its misfortunes as well as its drawbacks. During the prevalence of a terrible storm April 19, 1856, a considerable portion of the walls of the church was blown down, and about $1,000 was required to repair the damage.

In December, 1860, the Methodist Episcopal church of Butler was incorporated, with George C. Roessing, Joshua J. Sedwick and others. From that time there has been a gradual increase in membership.

In 1865 Butler circuit was composed of four appointments, viz.: Butler, Brownsdale, Petersville and the Temple, which imposed much hard work on the pastor in charge. To reduce the labor, Butler appointment was set off as a circuit in the spring of 1867, with Rev. J. D. Legget as preacher in charge. On the fifth of November, 1868, the church decided to erect a new house of worship, as the congregation had become too large for the old building. The present location, on the corner of McKean and North streets, was purchased April 1, 1873, for $3,500, and the old church property was sold for $2,500. The present brick church building was completed in the spring of 1874, at a cost of $16,000, the furnishings costing $2,000. Rev. E. J. Knox, the present pastor, assumed charge in October, 1908.

The present church edifice was dedicated October 4, 1894. It occupies the site of the old brick structure on the corner of North and McKean streets and was erected at a cost of about $50,000, exclusive of the lot. During the same year the society purchased the old Nixon Hotel property on McKean Street adjoining the church property, and erected the present parsonage at a cost of about $6,000. Previous to the building of the new church a pipe organ was installed in the old church building at a cost of about $3,000, and this was installed in the new edifice when it was completed. The present membership of the society is 775, and it has a thoroughly equipped organization. J. A. Gibson is superintendent of the Sunday school, and Elias Ritts, assistant superintendent.

The German Reformed Church. The German Reformed Society of Butler was organized some time previous to 1864, and for a number of years the services were held in the court house. In 1864 the church building was erected on Mifflin Street, which is now occupied by the First Baptist Church, and was dedicated as St. Paul's German Reformed Church of Butler. Owing to dissensions in the congregation this society dissolved about 1870. The church building was sold to the First

ST. PAUL'S CATHOLIC CHURCH,
BUTLER

ENGLISH LUTHERAN CHURCH,
BUTLER

FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH,
BUTLER

ST. PETER'S CATHOLIC CHURCH,
BUTLER

EPISCOPAL CHURCH, BUTLER

GERMAN LUTHERAN CHURCH,
BUTLER

Baptist Congregation in 1878, and about the same time the English speaking members of the old society joined in with the new organization started by Rev. T. F. Stauffer on West North Street.

St. Paul's Reformed Church, Southside, dates back to 1877, when Rev. T. F. Stauffer, who was then superintendent of St. Paul's Orphans Home at Butler, commenced preaching to a few members of the Reformed Society residing in Butler borough and vicinity. These services met with success, and on the evening of August 22, 1878, an organization was effected. Immediate steps were taken towards securing a house of worship, and the old Evangelical Lutheran Church, located on the corner of North and Church Streets, which was then vacant, was purchased, refitted and dedicated on the 25th of August, 1878. Rev. Stauffer continued as pastor until September 1, 1882. He was succeeded December 1, 1886, by Rev. D. N. Harnish, who is the present pastor.

It being found desirable to build a new church in Springdale, a handsome brick edifice on Walker Avenue was erected, and dedicated in June, 1890. The cost of the building was $12,000, including the lot, the latter being a donation by Mrs. Sarah Mackey. A parsonage was erected in 1898 at a cost of $3,000, on ground donated by Mrs. Mackey. A pipe organ was installed in 1903. The membership of the society in January, 1909, was 320. V. K. Irvine was superintendent of the Sunday school. The church has a number of well organized societies. The membership of the Sunday school is about 300.

Bethany Reformed Church. The early history of Bethany Reformed church is that of St. Paul's Church until June, 1890, when the latter society erected their new church edifice and removed to the south side. A number of members of the old society who were opposed to removing the congregation to the new location, retained the church property at the corner of North and Church Streets, and organized a new society under the above title. Rev. J. W. Pontius, the present pastor, was called on December 1, 1907. The present membership of the congregation is 106. W. A. Ashbaugh is superintendent of the Sunday school.

St. Paul's Orphans Home is an institution that has occupied a prominent position in Butler for forty years. The buildings are situated on the hill on the east side of the town, now occupied by residences, and within the limits of the borough. The main building is three stories high, and contains parlors, a library, reading rooms, superintendent's offices, living-rooms for the officers, dining-rooms, and kitchen. This building was originally erected as a dwelling by Captain McCall about 1840. The other buildings on the grounds are the boys' dormitories, a large schoolhouse, stables and other buildings of the institution. These buildings originally stood in the midst of a beautiful lawn surrounded by thirty acres of land, with a capacity to accommodate about 200 children.

The home was dedicated December 10, 1867, by Rev. George B. Russell, D. D., assisted by Rev. T. J. Barkley, Rev. F. K. Levan and Rev. Wm. M. Landis. It was chartered by the state March 23, 1868, the charter granting the privilege of receiving orphan children of all denominations of christians, and also children of deceased soldiers and sailors who were citizens of the State of Pennsylvania, and served in the War of the Rebellion. The home was founded originally by St. Paul's Classis of the Reformed Church, but the title was subsequently transferred to the Pittsburg Synod of the Reformed Church in the United States, and is under the general management of the boards of that denomination.

The first superintendent of the home was Rev. C. A. Limberg, now deceased, who held the position until 1871, when he resigned. He was succeeded by Rev. J. B.

Thompson, who entered upon his duties June 1, 1871, and continued until April 1, 1877. Rev. T. F. Stauffer, who had been elected November 21, 1876, at a meeting of the board of directors, assumed the duties of superintendent until April 5, 1877, and continued until September 5, 1882. During his term a north wing was added to the main building, greatly increasing the capacity of the home.

At the meeting of the board of directors held in June, 1882, Rev. P. C. Prugh, D. D., of Xenia, Ohio, was elected superintendent, and took charge of the home September 5, 1882. He continued as superintendent for a period of more than twenty years, during which time large additions and improvements were made on the buildings and grounds at a cost of $13,000. A full third story was placed on the main building, additional dormitories and store houses built, and a large brick chapel and school erected. A large number of soldiers' orphans were inmates of this home up until about 1893, when the State authorities consolidated the soldiers' orphans school under their care and withdrew the patronage from the local institution. During this time the school became noted for its efficiency, and received the highest commendations by the State Board of Soldiers and Sailors' Orphans' Schools. The largest number of children at any one time previous to 1895 was 190, 165 of which were soldiers' orphans. Rev. Prugh resigned as superintendent, and was succeeded in September, 1903, by Rev. D. H. Leader, the present incumbent.

As early as 1902 the question of removing the home to some other location within the territory of Pittsburg Synod was advocated, but met with strenuous opposition on the part of the members of the Reformed Church and the directors of the Home in the Butler district. The extension of the residence portion of the town in the direction of the Home and almost surrounding the grounds, made the property very valuable, and in July, 1906, the board of directors considered a proposition made by real estate parties of Butler, and the Home and grounds were sold for a consideration of $80,000. After some difficulty a new location was secured at Greenville, in Mercer County, where suitable buildings were erected in 1908-9, and the old institution was formally closed on the 1st of April of that year and the inmates removed to the new home.

The object of the founders of this institution was to provide for the maintenance and christian training of orphan children, principally of the Reformed Church, and also for others for whose support payment is made by guardians and friends. Application for admittance may be made to the superintendent, to the board of directors, and children are received by indenture. This enables those in authority in the Home to again indenture them when suitable christian homes can be found and retain guardianship over them until of age.

The Church of God, located on Second Street, Institute Hill, was organized by Elder J. W. Davis and his son, Rev. George W. Davis, who was the first pastor, January 1, 1893. Previous to that time these two ministers held a series of meetings beginning in October, 1892, in the chapel of the old Institute Building. These meetings were attended with success, and the organization followed. In March, 1893, a building committee was appointed, a lot was secured on Second Street, and a frame structure 40x50 feet in size was erected at a cost of $3,000, and was dedicated September 17, 1893. At this time J. W. Davis, F. M. Hewitt and A. J. Avey were chosen trustees. The total value of the property owned by the society in 1908 was about $12,000. The present pastor, Rev. R. B. Bowser, came here in October, 1908. The membership of the society is 100, and the Sabbath school enrollment averages from ninety to 100. The society is in a flourishing condition and is increasing in membership.

The First Baptist Church of Butler was organized April 29, 1876, at Boyd's Hall in Springdale, with about six members. A number of persons participated in the first organization, but did not have their letters to unite with the members of the society at that time. Meetings were held every Sunday which were led by B. H. Osborne until November 8, 1876, when the association was formally recognized as a regular Baptist Church. Rev. T. H. Jones was the first pastor installed, who gave the society about half of his time, Mr. Osborne conducting the alternate meetings. A charter was granted March 13, 1877, to the society on petition of B. H. Osborne, W. M. Farnsworth, William Watson, C. Morse and Adolphus Haberlin, who were named as directors and trustees.

On the 16th of June, 1877, the society purchased the German Reformed meeting house on Mifflin Street, which they immediately occupied, and services were held every Sunday. After a thorough renovation and material improvement, the church was dedicated November 4th of that year, Rev. J. P. Jones officiating. Rev. U. L. Joyce, the present pastor, assumed charge in 1908, succeeding Rev. G. E. Enterline. The present membership is about 175 and the congregation is enjoying a prosperous growth.

Free Methodist Church. Previous to 1893 Rev. Mr. Toby, Rev. Mr. Wayne and Rev. Mr. Shelheimer, preachers of the Free Methodist Society, held services in the Springdale Hose House, and in a tent on Spring Avenue. The present society was organized early in 1893, and the first regular pastor assigned to the congregation was Rev. R. H. Freshwater. In the meantime a lot had been secured on Spring Avenue, and the building which had been commenced under the pastorate of Rev. Wayne was completed under the care of Rev.

Freshwater. The society has prospered from the beginning, and at the present time has ninety-four communicant members, a large Sunday school, and a well organized missionary society. Rev. Mr. Grace is the present pastor.

The Second Baptist Church (Colored) was organized about 1895 by Rev. Pleasant Tucker, who came here from Youngstown, Ohio. He was assisted in the organization by F. P. Perry. At that time there were about eight members, and probably a dozen colored families in the town. Through Mr. Tucker's efforts a lot was secured on West North Street, and a frame building erected at a cost of about $500, which was dedicated in October, 1900. In October, 1907, Rev. M. C. Smith, the present pastor, took charge of the congregation. The present membership is about twenty-five.

The Shiloh Baptist Church (Colored) was organized about 1906 by the colored people of the west end, and services are now held in a rented hall on Pillow Street. The pastor is Rev. D. D. Dade.

The African Methodist Episcopal Church was organized about 1904, and holds services in a rented hall on Water Street. The membership of this organization is small. Rev. J. W. Riley is the pastor.

B'Nai Abraham Congregation (Hebrew) was chartered by the courts of Butler County March 22, 1906. The subscribers to the charter were Sammel Oram, A. Smulovitz, A. Jacobs, H. Zuckeman, Arthur Smulovitz, Aaron Fisvitz, Joseph Eskovitz, Joseph Breman, Max Zeefe, A. Wohl, Joe Pollack and Morris Pollack. The congregation now numbers about seventy members and holds services in a hall in the Reiber block on South Main Street. The present pastor is Rev. Harris Rosenberg. The society has purchased a lot and contemplates the erection of a suitable house of worship in the near future.

Westleyan Methodist Church. In the winter of 1908-9 Rev. F. B. Hawk began preaching to a small society of people in the west end of the town, which was organized as the Wesleyan Methodist Church. Services were held at No. 12 First Avenue, and in February, 1909, the membership was large enough to consider the advisability of a formal organization. The society has gained the recognition of the boards of the Wesleyan Church, and a new church will be erected here in the near future.

Millennium Dawn. A branch of the religious society known as the "Millennium Dawn" has been in existence in Butler since 1888. The head of the society is Rev. Russell of Pittsburg. Meetings were held for a number of years at the residence of the late George Walters, and in recent years meetings were held twice a week in the building on Center Avenue owned by Miss Louisa and Miss Annie Reif. Brother Hersh of Pittsburg has been ministering to the local society, and also a small circle of the believers at Mount Chestnut and at Prospect.

Christian Science. The Christian Science reading room was established in July, 1908, in the Butler County National Bank building. The local society, which is increasing in numbers gradually, is a branch of the mother church in Boston. Meetings are held on Wednesday evening, and on Sunday morning, and are conducted by Miss Harriet Putnam, who is the first reader, and Mrs. Homer Graves, who is the second reader. The local society was organized through the efforts of Mrs. Thomas McNair and others.

The First Christian Church of Butler was organized in 1907, and the meetings of the society are held in the Y. M. C. A. Building on the Diamond. A charter was secured for the congregation June 29, 1908, and during that year a lot was purchased on West North Street, and the erection of a church building commenced. The subscribers to the charter are Thomas W. Phillips, Jr., George W. Holoanah, H. C.

Phillips, John Douglass, and T. W. Lati-mer. The pastor of the congregation is Rev. George Rader.

St. John Nepomucene Roman Catholic Church (Polish) was organized in 1904 among the Polish and Slavish residents of Lyndora by Rev. Father Beckaviek. The society has a large number of communicants, and has erected a handsome church and parish house in Lyndora.

St. Michael's Greek Catholic Church was chartered February 4, 1907. The society has a large membership among the Greeks of the town, and has a church building in Lyndora in which the services are held. The pastor is Rev. F. Michael.

The Orthodox Greek Church, or the Church of Russia, has a society of about sixty families, of which Rev. Philip Schedenovitch is the pastor. Services are held in halls, or at the homes of its members. Rev. Schedenovitch is also the editor of a paper which he publishes in the interest of his people in this community.

The Gospel Prohibition Church. A number of people who were interested in the advancement of the Prohibition party organized a religious association in Butler about 1898, which was known as The Gospel Prohibition Church. The leader of the movement was Rev. I. G. Pollard, of Butler, who was an ordained minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church. The movement was backed financially by several well known business men of Butler, who were affiliated with the Prohibition party, and who believed that too much restraint was placed on the ministers in discussing temperance and political reform from the pulpit.

Rev. Pollard succeeded in organizing a small society in Butler and building the brick church on Mercer Street, now occupied by the Christian and Missionary Alliance. Another organization was effected at Callery Junction and a small church built there, while the third congregation was organized at Renfrew, and for several years services were held in a rented hall. While the new organization met with the approval of a certain element in favor of the political reforms of the Prohibition party, it failed to meet with the financial support it needed, and in the course of a few years the three organizations died out.

The Christian and Missionary Alliance was organized in Butler in 1904, by Rev. George W. Davis, who had previously to that time been pastor of the Church of God on Institute Hill. A charter was granted on June 17, 1905. The new association purchased the property of the Gospel Prohibition Church on Mercer Street, and the following year built a brick parsonage which adjoins the church building. In 1906 Rev. Davis was succeeded by Rev. John Cox, the present pastor, and the congregation is now in a flourishing condition.

SCHOOLS (PRIVATE).

Butler Academy. The beginnings of education in Butler borough date back to the first decade of its history. Soon after the town site was established the pioneers began the movement for education which resulted in the founding of Butler Academy, an institution which is referred to by many of the older citizens of the town. The Butler Academy was founded under the act of February 6, 1811, which provided for the election of six trustees and appropriated the sum of $2,000 towards sustaining such an institution, $1,000 of the amount to be expended on the building and apparatus, and $1,000 to be invested, the interest on which was to be applied toward the payment of teachers, and the education of five poor children. The organization of the trustees of the academy was effected March 27, 1811, when lots were cast for the term of service. Jacob Mechling and Walter Lowrie were to serve one year, Samuel Williamson and John Gilmore for two years, and John McQuiston and Robert Graham for three years. Subsequently the trustees of the institution were elected at the October election. John Gilmore was chosen secretary of the first board, and the first order drawn was on the State treasurer for $1,000 in favor of William Purviance for the purpose of erecting a building and purchasing books for the use of the academy. Two days later the board loaned to John Negley $1,000 from the productive fund, which was secured by his house and lot in Butler, and his mill near the town, now the Walter mill. Mr. Negley not only paid a heavy interest for the loan, but donated $150 to the academy fund. In July, 1811, John Purviance was awarded the contract for building the academy, the price being seven hundred and ninety-eight dollars. The board also elected Jacob Mechling treasurer and, Walter Lowrie librarian. This building, which stood at the northeast corner of McKean and Jefferson streets, was completed in August, 1812. In May, 1813, donation lot No. 13, consisting of five hundred acres patented to the academy March 25, 1813, was sold to Arthur and George Frazier for $750, to be paid in three installments.

The academy was opened in 1812, and Samuel Glass was employed as the first teacher. His salary was $60 per annum, besides which he charged each pupil an extra fee for tuition. A Mr. Williamson taught about the same period, and later Adam Kuhn was employed, who conducted an English and Latin school. In the twenties a teacher's salary seems to have been $100, with what he could collect from the patrons in addition.

In 1832 the trustees of the academy discussed the qualifications of a classical teacher, and resolved to employ no one who could not at least teach the Latin and Greek languages, and algebra and surveying. Rev. Isaiah Niblock and Dr. James Graham were soon after appointed teachers, and in 1833 Thomas Mahard was employed to take charge of the academy. Rev. Loyal Young, then pastor of the Presbyterian church of Butler, was employed as a teacher of the languages in 1834, and discharged his duties for several years in a highly satisfactory manner.

Subsequent to 1838 the annual tuition fee was reduced to $8 for the classical department, and $2 for the English department. In September, 1843, DePark Taylor was hired as principal at an annual salary of $1,000, and in 1847 the tuition was fixed at $4 for the course in classics, and $3 for the common English branches. Rev. William White was principal from 1848 to April, 1860. During the existence of the academy the board of trustees embraced many of the leading pioneers of Butler.

The question of consolidating the Butler Academy and the Witherspoon Institute was suggested to the board March 8, 1865, and William S. Boyd and Ebenezer McJunkin were appointed a committee to consult with the Presbytery of Allegheny of the Presbyterian church. The articles of consolidation were signed in June, 1865, and in November the conditions presented by Allegheny Presbytery were accepted. On August 20, 1866, the last act of the academy trustees was recorded, which conveyed the real estate, buildings and funds of the Academy board to the school directors of Butler borough, subject to the restrictions given in the act of April 11, 1862.

Many of the leading men of Butler today were educated in this old academy, and many who honor the professions and trades outside of the county received liberal instruction within its walls. The old stone academy stood on the site of the Jefferson Street School Building and faced Jefferson Street. It was built of dressed stone, was two stories high, and had one room on each floor. The upper floor was reached from the north side by a massive stone stairway on the outside of the building. This old historic pile was removed in 1876, to make way for a more commodious and modern building.

Witherspoon Institute, which was one of the prominent educational institutions in western Pennsylvania during the middle of the century, owed its origin in a large measure to Rev. Loyal Young of Butler. On the 6th of February, 1849, a convention of Presbyterians was held in Butler to consider the project of establishing an academy within the bounds of the Butler congregation. Rev. J. M. Smith presided at the meeting, with Rev. Newton Braeken secretary. A resolution favoring the project was adopted, and a committee was named to raise a fund of $5,000. Township and borough committees were appointed at the same time, and on December 14, 1849, a literary and religious institution was incorporated.

Meetings were held at intervals until April 10, 1850, when the Presbytery of Allegheny established a school at Butler and gave it the name of "Witherspoon Institute." Rev. Loyal Young was appointed principal, and David Hall assistant. The school was opened May 13, 1850, in the basement of the First Presbyterian Church. In July, 1851, Rev. L. Young resigned as principal and was succeeded by Rev. Martin Ryerson, who continued until 1852, when he resigned because of ill health. Rev. L. Young was again elected principal, and J. R. Coulter assistant. From that time up to 1878 the principals were, in succession, T. R. Coulter, Rev. John Smalley, Rev. L. Young (third time), Mr. J. S. Boyd, Rev. William I. Brugh, Rev. J. W. Hamilton, Prof. Creighton, and Rev. H. Q. Watters.

Up to this time the institute had been conducted as a sectarian school under the care of Allegheny Presbytery. In April, 1897, the institute was opened by Prof. B. S. Bancroft as a non-sectarian school, and the following September Prof. J. C. Tinsman became associated with Prof. Bancroft. Under Prof. Bancroft's direction the school flourished, and in 1882 one hundred and seventy-two students were enrolled, and a corps of seven teachers employed. Prof. Bancroft conducted the institute until the fall of 1887, when a lack of patronage induced him to close it and open a private school. The loss of patronage was principally due to the higher prices charged students for board in Butler than in other towns where academies were conducted.

The first institute building was erected in 1851, on North Main Street, on the site of the English Lutheran Church. North and south wings were added to the building in 1864, the Commonwealth granting $2,500 toward the expense of this improvement. This property was sold in 1877 by the trustees of the institute to the English Lutheran Church for $6,000. Rev. Mr. Brugh was the leading spirit in the project to found a college on Institute Hill. Four acres were purchased on First street, and a building erected and occupied. The Allegheny Presbytery finally withdrew its support from the school, and the property was sold to W. H. H. Riddle and passed from the ownership of the Presbyterian church. In March, 1889, it was purchased by Charles Duffy, and at the present time it is owned by the Butler Silk Mill, and is used for a factory.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

But little is known about the early common schools of the town. During the first twenty-five years the Butler Academy supplied the principal facilities for the education of the youth of the town. Spasmodic efforts were made from time to time to carry on a common school on the subscription plan, as was the custom throughout the country. No records were kept of these schools, and but little information can be obtained about the early teachers and the schoolhouses. A log house on South McKean street on the present site of Capt.

Hays' residence was used for common school purposes in 1818, and other houses on Main Street were used at an earlier date. In the winter of 1834 Joseph Sterritt taught a subscription school in a room of the old Academy building, which was liberally patronized. Dr. James Graham, who studied medicine in the north of Ireland, arrived in Butler about 1834, and taught a school in a log building on South McKean Street on the site of the old skating-rink. Later he taught in the old Academy. A reference to the transactions of the town council will show that that body made a special levy of $250 in addition to the ordinary school taxes for the year 1836, which may be said to be the beginning of the public school system in the town.

In 1838 John Gilmore and John Bredin, a committee of the school directors of Butler borough, applied for a lease of part of the academy ground for the purpose of erecting a schoolhouse thereon. The application was granted and a lot fronting sixty feet on Jefferson Street and one hundred and eighty feet in depth, running to the alley between the present high school building and the Jefferson Street school ground was leased for ninety-nine years. It would appear that the early common schools were intended for boys, or at least, so used, for in 1841 the girls' department of the common schools was located in the Academy building. The public schools occupied a part of the Academy building until 1850. Thomas Berry was one of the early school masters and was employed as a teacher in School Number 1 in 1838. In 1854 extraordinary efforts were made to build up the common school system of the town, but for twenty years little progress was made, although the teachers employed were generally competent, and many of them were talented.

The first school buildings were primitive affairs, and prior to the completion of the Jefferson Street building there were only two small schoolhouses in the borough. In 1866 the trustees of Butler Academy conveyed the real estate, buildings, funds, etc., belonging to the Academy to the directors of the public schools and the old Academy building answered the purposes until 1874, when a new era in the public school system in Butler began.

The Jefferson Street School building, which was completed in 1874, was the index to modern Butler. It told the visitor and the resident that times had changed, and that ideas had expanded. The erection of this building was not accomplished without protest on the part of some of the town citizens, who thought that the new enterprise on the part of the school board was a colossal waste of money and that the town would never be able to pay for it nor furnish enough scholars to fill it. The building, which is an imposing brick structure containing twelve rooms, cost $33,000, and occupies the site of the old stone Academy and part of the ground originally leased for ninety-nine years by the school board for the erection of the first school building. The plan pursued for raising the sum named and the additional sum of $11,000 necessary for furnishing the new building was well laid out and executed.

The act approved May 6, 1871, authorizing the survey of the "Quarry Reserve" into lots, the sale of the lots, and the appropriation of part of the proceeds towards school building purposes, was a part of the plan. The "Quarry Reserve" was that part of the commons lying between Washington and McKean Streets south of the laid out lots to the old southern limit of the borough. The sale of the old schoolhouse that stood on the site of the Methodist Church was another item in the plan, while a special tax levy and the State appropriation of $15,000 formed the third.

The completion of the Jefferson Street School building was the beginning of an era of building in Butler. The discovery of oil at Greece City and other oil developments in the county caused a rapid increase in the population of the shire town, and it was only a matter of a few years until the new school building was filled to overflowing. From 1880 on the population of the town steadily increased, and in 1885 the school board found it necessary to erect a new building. In June of that year the construction of the McKean Street School building, containing eight rooms, was commenced, and completed in November, at a total cost of $10,088.

Four years after the building of the McKean Street School, the Springdale School building was erected at a cost of $22,400. This building contained eight rooms, two recitation rooms, and a principal's room, and was heated and ventilated by the Smead system, which was the first improvement in the way of modern heating and ventilating made in the school buildings of the town.

In 1891 the western section of the town demanded additional school facilities, and a frame building was erected on Millin Street opposite the Oriental Mills, which was used for temporary quarters for several years. This building contained four rooms, which were overcrowded from the start. About the same time an annex was erected on McKean Street on the school lot which contained two rooms, and the little brick building on Jefferson Street was fitted up for a primary room. The increasing demand for school facilities hurried the erection of a new building which was commenced in 1859, when the school board purchased a lot from H. J. Klingler on Broad Street. The following year the Broad Street School building was erected at a cost of about $25,000. It is a substantial two-story brick building, containing eight rooms, recitation and principal's room. The Institute Hill building was completed in 1900, and the annex to the Springdale school in 1902.

The Butler High School had its inception in 1885, when the first class graduated under Prof. E. Mackey, who was then principal of the Butler schools. It was not until 1888 that this department of the public school system of the town was formally organized by Prof. Mackey, under whose efficient management the school attained a gratifying success. When Prof. Mackey was promoted to the position of superintendent of all the city schools, Prof. John A. Gibson, of Meadville, was elected principal of the high school, in 1891, and held that position until 1896, when he was elected superintendent of the city schools to succeed Mr. Mackey. Prof. V. K. Irvine succeeded Prof. Gibson as principal of the high school, and has continued in that position ever since. The curriculum of the high school covers a course of four years' study equivalent to an academic or a preparatory course for college, the students of the Butler school being admitted to many of the colleges in the freshman and sophomore years. A commercial course was added in 1908, and it is expected in the near future that manual training and domestic science will be a part of the regular high school course.

One of the features of the high school is the publication of the Maguet, a monthly magazine issued in the interests of the public schools of the city and edited by the high school pupils. This paper was first issued in 1891, and after a successful career of five or six years was suspended for a time, and the publication of the new Maguet begun.

The Alumni Association of Butler High School dates back to 1890, when the graduates of the first class under Prof. Mackey in the public schools, and the high school graduates, held a banquet in the Reiber Hall, and effected a formal organization. The purpose of the association was to promote the interests of the public schools of Butler, and especially of the high school, which was then in its infancy. The association holds meetings annually, and at the present time has an enrollment of over six hundred members. The high school lecture course is financed and promoted by the members of this association, and has been one of the features of the winter entertainments of the town for many years.

For the first ten years of its existence the high school was quartered in the Jefferson Street School building, and in 1898 a new building was erected in the rear of the McKean Street school building which was used for high school purposes for another decade. This annex was a two-story brick affair, containing the necessary recitation rooms and chapel, and served its purpose until the increasing population of the town caused the necessity of additional school facilities.

In 1905 the school board began proceedings in the Common Pleas Courts of Butler County to secure the possession of the old cemetery lot on the corner of McKean and North Streets, as a site for the new high school building. On the 13th of March, 1905, on petition of John Findley, president of the board, the court appointed R. C. McAboy, W. S. McCrea and William Walter a board of viewers to assess the damages that would arise by reason of condemning the property and ascertain the parties to whom the damages should be paid.

On the 5th of June, 1905, the board of viewers reported that the lot contained 83-100 of an acre by actual measurement, and that they found the amount of damages to be $6,000, $4,200 of which should be paid to Butler County, and $1,800 to the borough of Butler. Exceptions were filed to this report by John A. Richey and George McCandless of Butler borough, an appeal was taken, and the case was not finally decided until the March term of Court, 1906, when the report of the viewers was sustained. There was some subsequent litigation on the part of the Foltz heirs, who claimed an interest in the property, but the case was finally decided, in January, 1907, in favor of Butler borough.

The services of W. G. Eckles of New Castle were secured as architect, and a contract was awarded in 1906 to J. G. Unkefer & Company, of Minerva, Ohio, for the new building. The bodies in the old grave yard were removed in November, 1906, and the work of excavation begun. The building was not completed until July, 1908, and the formal dedication took place on the 20th of November of that year. The building is a handsome three-story structure, built of buff brick and trimmed with Hummelstown stone. The total cost of the building, including the furnishings, was about $125,000, exclusive of the value of the lot.

The value of the school property in the borough in 1909 is about $475,000, distributed as follows: High school building and grounds, $200,000; Jefferson Street school building and grounds, $75,000; Broad Street school building, $40,000; McKean Street school building, $60,000; Institute Hill school building, $50,000; Springdale school building, $50,000.

The enrollment of pupils in January, 1909, was as follows: Jefferson Street, 606; McKean Street, 428; Broad Street, 573; Springdale, 578; Institute Hill, 366; High School, 330; total, 2,881.

For the term beginning August 31, 1908, there were employed in the public schools, exclusive of the superintendent, three principals and seventy-three teachers, with John A. Gibson superintendent.

Board of Directors, 1908.—President, Philip W. Ruff; secretary, Harry L. Graham; treasurer, John Rauschenberger; Thomas A. Frazier, Dr. Robt. J. Grossman, W. W. Robinson, A. C. Krug, W. G. Douthett, Edgar H. Negley, Norman J. Boyer, Frank L. Wiegand, Thos. H. Greer, Jas. L. Garroway, Col. Wm. T. Mechling, and C. E. Cronenwett.

PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS, ETC.

St. Peter's Parochial School was opened in 1858 in the present convent residence on Franklin Street north of the church. During the Civil War a one-story brick building was erected south of the church to which the school was removed. It was taught by lay teachers for several years, and was then placed in charge of the Sisters of St. Francis, who have since been succeeded by the Sisters of Mercy. The present school building east of the church was erected in 1889 at an expense of about $7,000. It is a substantial two-story brick building, with basement, and contains four school rooms. It was opened in the fall of 1889, and has an attendance of about two hundred scholars. Eight teachers are employed.

St. Paul's Parochial School owes its origin to the bequest of Mrs. Margaret Dougherty of Butler, who donated the sum of $15,000 toward its establishment. Rev. Father Nolan, who was at that time pastor of St. Paul's Church, took the project in hand and purchased from Herman J. Berg a site of four acres at the corner of Monroe and Locust Streets. The corner-stone of the new building was laid May 27, 1888, and it was completed the same year. The building is a handsome brick structure, two stories high, containing eight rooms, and is equipped with the most approved style of modern school furniture. This is regarded as one of the finest school properties in the county. The convent was erected close by the same year, and is the home of the Sisters of Mercy, who have charge of the school. The total cost of the improvements made in 1888 was about $30,000, and the average attendance since that time has been over two hundred.

The Butler Business College was established in 1893 by Clark Bros., who conducted it until the fall of 1894, when J. M. Bashline became the proprietor. A. F. Regal, the present owner and head of the school, took charge in the fall of 1898, and under his able management it has taken a leading rank among the business schools of the state. The average attendance is about one hundred and fifty for the year.

RELIGIOUS AND CHARITABLE SOCIETIES.

The Young Men's Christian Association of Butler had its inception in June, 1886, at a meeting held in the Presbyterian Church under the auspices of the Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union, for the purpose of considering the most effective means of doing christian work. A plan of instituting a special line of work for young men was suggested by W. D. McJunkin, which obtained favor at the meeting, and a subsequent meeting was held in the same month, which was conducted by Col. George Woodford, and a committee consisting of A. J. Henry, W. D. McJunkin, Gilbert Walker, W. H. Miller and Ira McJunkin, was appointed to take steps towards a permanent organization. A constitution was adopted under the title of the Y. M. C. A. of Butler, and a board of fifteen directors chosen, with the following temporary officers: Dr. E. W. Leake, president; Ira McJunkin, secretary, and Prof. E. Mackey, treasurer.

At the meeting held August 16, 1886, the temporary board of directors and officers resigned, and the following permanent board was elected: Capt. Jacob Ziegler, Col. John M. Sullivan, Henry C. Heiman, John H. Negley, Joseph L. Purvis, William Campbell, Jr., Dr. E. W. Leake, W. D. Brandon, Chas. S. Bailey, James M. Galbreath, Eli D. Robinson, Prof. E. Mackey, Fred J. Klingler, Aaron E. Reiber and William G. Krug. At the organization of the board the following officers were elected: Dr. E. W. Leake, president; Capt. Jacob Ziegler and John H. Negley, vice-presidents; Ira McJunkin, general and recording secretary. After the formal organization had been effected, the association was incorporated in November, 1886, and effective work has been steadily going on up to the present time. Many changes in officers have taken place during the twenty-two years of its existence, but there has been no abatement of zeal, and the spirit of the association has been in keeping with the rapid advancement among all lines of social, religious and scientific progress.

Since the organization the presidents of the association that have succeeded Dr. Leake in turn are Ira McJunkin, John Weitzel, Prof. E. Mackey, John F. Anderson, C. B. McMillen, James E. Marshall and Gardner C. Lowry.

The present board of trustees is composed of W. D. Brandon, Juo. V. Ritts, Jno. F. Anderson, Hon. J. M. Galbreath and Gardner C. Lowry. The board of trustees holds all the property of the association in trust. The present board of directors is composed of J. E. Marshall, W. D. Brandon, V. K. Irvine, E. H. Cronenwett, J. G. Runkle, J. G. McMarlin, T. M. Baker, Elias Ritts, O. C. Funkhouser, D. K. Albright, C. O. Lowry, Geo. A. Spang, Dr. F. H. Hays, Jas. O. Campbell and J. B. Foster. The officers of the board in January, 1909, were Gardner C. Lowry, president; Geo. A. Spang, first vice-president; Dr. F. H. Hays, second vice-president; Jas. O. Campbell, treasurer; J. B. Foster, secretary; H. W. Love, general secretary, and A. F. Fehr, physical director.

The general secretaries in charge of the work since the organization have been Ira McJunkin, Joseph E. Forrester, J. B. Caruthers, J. M. Corry, E. G. Randall, L. W. DeGast and H. W. Love.

The Ladies' Auxiliary has been in existence since the first organization, and has done effective work. The present officers of the auxiliary are Mrs. C. E. McIntire, president; Mrs. A. T. Scott, first vice-president; Mrs. C. H. Findley, second vice-president; Mrs. L. W. Zuzer, secretary, and Miss Mary Grohman, treasurer.

The association has always enjoyed a substantial membership, ranging about four hundred, except in times of financial depression. The daily attendance in the building is over two hundred, and the attendance in the gymnasium and auditorium classes averages twelve hundred men per month in the winter. The work carried on by the association is four-fold; religious, educational, social and physical. The educational work is carried on in its own room, and consists of classes in mechanical drawing and English. The religious work consists of bible classes for boys, young men, and men, as well as public meetings and personal work. The physical work consists of gymnasium classes for men and boys, and outdoor athletics. The social work consists of events arranged from time to time by the different departments of the association and the Ladies' Auxiliary.

For the first ten years of its existence the association was quartered in the Reiber building on the corner of Main and Cunningham Streets. In 1894 a lot was purchased in the northeast corner of the Diamond, and during that and the following year the present brick building was erected at a cost of about $15,000, exclusive of the lot and the furnishings. The building is provided with a chapel, reading rooms, boys' game rooms, parlors, gymnasium, running track and auditorium. The present value of the building and lot is about $35,000, and the fixtures and equipment, $2,000. Much can be said of the work and attainments of the organization, but the following words of appreciation from a man prominent in public affairs will suffice: "I appreciate enormously the work your association is doing. You are one of the great potent forces for good; one of the forces which must be continually built up if we wish to overcome the forces of evil."

Theodore Roosevelt,

President of the United States.

The Butler County Children's Aid Society was organized in November, 1886, as an auxiliary of the western branch of the State Society, which was formed at Pittsburg in November, 1885. At the time of the organization of the local branch Mrs. J. N. Bolard was chosen president; Miss Mary E. Sullivan and Mrs. S. McKee, vice-presidents; Mrs. M. S. Templeton, secretary, and Miss Etta Prugh, treasurer. The board of managers comprised Mrs. A. M. Neyman, Mrs. B. C. Huselton, Mrs. J. L. Purvis, Mrs. C. D. Greenlee, Mrs. John D. Lowry, Mrs. A. E. Cratty, Mrs. M. H. Negley, Mrs. J. F. Balph, Mrs. C. G. Christie, Mrs. John M. Greer, Mrs. S. A. Johnson, Mrs. M. E. Nicholls, Miss Belle Purvis and Mrs. Levi O. Purvis. The society is a charitable organization to take charge of children from the ages of two to sixteen years who are removed from almshouses under the law of 1883. Miss Belle Purvis succeeded Miss Prugh as secretary of the society in 1887, and has continued to hold that position since. Mrs. B. C. Huselton was elected assistant secretary in 1887, and Mrs. J. L. Purvis and Mrs. C. D. Greenlee were chosen vice-presidents. Mrs. J. D. McJunkin was elected secretary in 1889 to succeed Mrs. Templeton, resigned. At the next annual election of officers Mrs. Templeton was re-elected secretary, Mrs. McJunkin having been transferred to the advisory board. There have been few changes made in the officers of the society since 1889. In 1908 Mrs. S. M. McKee was president; Miss Clara McJunkin, secretary, and Miss Belle Purvis, treasurer. Mrs. J. H. Troutman was chosen representative of the local society on the State Board. Since its organization the local society has furnished homes and cared for about seventy children, and at the present time thirteen children are under the care of the society.

The Butler County Sabbath Association was organized in February, 1893, by electing Rev. S. M. Bell president; Rev. P. C. Prugh, Rev. N. B. Tannehill, Rev. W. E. Oller, Rev. J. R. Coulter, and Mrs. D. B. Campbell, vice-presidents; Rev. D. N. Harnish, secretary; Rev. Jno. S. McKee, corresponding secretary; and J. A. Clark, treasurer. The object of the association was to oppose the publication of Sunday papers and Sunday work in general. This association is practically a continuation of the Lord's Day Union, which was organized in December, 1891, of which Rev. D. N. Harnish was president; Rev. W. E. Oller, secretary; W. D. Brandon, J. M. Galbreath, and Prof. E. Mackey, vice-presidents.

The Christian Endeavor Union of Butler County was first organized in 1892, with Rev. Eli Miller of Butler as president, and Miss Lotta B. White as secretary. At first the union was composed of all the Christian Endeavor Societies in the county, and represented about thirteen denominations. At the present time there are about forty societies represented, and six denominations. The officers in 1908 were Rev. R. C. Stewart of Bruin, president; Miss Erla Black of Bruin, corresponding secretary; Miss Lotta B. White of Butler, recording secretary; and William B. Ferguson of Chicora, treasurer.

The Bible Society of Butler County was organized August 12, 1828, by Rev. Mr. Joyce, agent of the Philadelphia Society. John Potts and Rev. Reed Bracken were elected presidents; the vice-presidents were Revs. Isaiah Niblock, John Frantz, Robert Greer, S. Stoughton, John Coulter, J. C. G. Schweitzerbarth, Thomas McIntock, and Robert Brown; John Bredin was secretary, and Robert Scott treasurer. The board of managers comprised John Sullivan, Hugh McKee, Hugh Gilliland, Robert Martin, Barnet Gilliland, Henry Muntz, David McMakin, William McMichael, John Christie and James McCurdy. Two agents were appointed in each of the thirteen townships, and two for the borough of Butler, who were to assist in the circulation of the bible without note or comment. John Bredin acted as secretary of the first meeting, while the presiding officer was Walter Lowrie, who resigned his office as secretary of United States Senate in 1836, to become secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions.

The Butler County Sabbath School Association adopted a constitution May 7, 1867, and elected Rev. Loyal Young president; Rev. J. H. Fritz and William R. Hinchison, vice-presidents; C. E. Anderson, secretary; H. J. Klingler, treasurer; Dr. A. M. Neyman, George A. Black, I. J. Cummings, George Vogeley and Theodore Huselton, executive committee. Since that time the association has extended its field into all the townships and boroughs in the county. The president of the association in 1908 was Prof. R. S. Penfield of Chicora; the secretary was Miss Mina Waldron of Evans City; and the treasurer, Robert McMeekin of Chicora. The county has been divided into nine districts, and district conventions are held each year as well as county conventions. The primary department is under the care of Miss Lotta B. White of Butler, and chose an enrollment of 146 classes in the county. The number of Sabbath schools enrolled is 150.

The Ministerial Association of Butler is composed of all the ministers of the Protestant denominations, and was organized as early as 1893. Since its inception it has taken an active part in all of the reform movements, and aided in remonstrating against the granting of licenses by the courts of the county. The association has since its beginning arranged the programs for the Thanksgiving services in the different churches in the town, and appointed the ministers to fill the pulpits on the occasions. The president of the association in 1909 was Dr. P. C. Prugh, and the secretary H. W. Love. The meetings are held on the first Monday of each month, in the parlors of the Y. M. C. A. building.

The Industrial Club was formed in June, 1903, through the efforts of Miss Margaret Brandon (deceased) of Butler, in the interests of the foreign children of Lyndora. The school meets every Saturday afternoon at the public school building in Lyndora, and conducts a kindergarten and sewing classes for the foreign children of that district. At the present time there are over one hundred children enrolled, and an average attendance of sixty. The expenses of the school are met entirely by the Industrial Club, which is composed of a number of young ladies of Butler. At the present time the club is composed of thirty active members, and fifty honorary members. The president of the club is Miss Mary Williams; Miss Mande Sutton is vice-president; Miss Juliet Campbell, secretary; Miss Mary Pillow, treasurer; Mrs. Harvey Wilder and Miss Iona Leidecker, superintendents of sewing classes, and Miss Edith Galbreath and Miss Florence Roessing, superintendents of kindergarten.

The Butler Educational and Industrial School for Foreigners was organized in December, 1906, and opened a night school for foreigners at Lyndora in March, 1907. The society is composed of representatives from all of the churches of the town and philanthropic societies, and is financed by the business firms, individual subscriptions and the Standard Steel Car corporation. The first officers were Levi M. Wise, president; E. J. Randall, secretary, and D. L. Cleeland, treasurer. The purpose of the society is to teach the foreign population the English language and instruct them in good citizenship and American customs. The Lyndora school has a total enrollment of about 500, and an average attendance of about seventy. The teacher in charge is E. Hale Sipes. The following are the officers and board of directors in 1909: W. D. Brandon, president; H. W. Love, secretary; D. L. Cleeland, treasurer; C. H. Gillespie, Rev. R. B. Miller, Miss Mary A. McKee, George A. Henney, C. E. Cronewett, Rev. Geo. C. Miller, Levi M. Wise, Rev. M. H. Milne, Mrs. J. L. Marsh.

The Elm Street Night School for Italians was organized in May, 1905, by the Womans Missionary Society of the United Presbyterian Church. A Sabbath school and mission was established during the summer, and in November, 1905, Rev. Michael Renzetti was installed as missionary. The night school has an attendance of about thirty, and the Sabbath school enrollment of about sixty, while the members of the mission number about seventy-eight. The teachers of the night school are Miss Mary McKee, Miss Madge Douglass, Mrs. E. H. Dodds, Mrs. Eleanor Trumbull. The night school and the Sunday services are held in a rented building, but in the near future it is expected that a suitable house of worship will be erected. A lot has already been purchased, and money for the building has been appropriated by the Board of Home Missions of the United Presbyterian Church.

GRAVEYARDS AND CEMETERIES.

The first burial place in the borough of Butler was the old cemetery on the corner of North McKean and East North Streets on the present site of the high school building. This plot of ground was included in the tract of land donated by John and Samuel Cunningham and Robert Graham to the governor of the State for the use of Butler County. In the original plot of the town Lots No. 150, 151 and 152 lay on the east side of McKean Street, and between the alley and North Street. At a sale of lots held August 15, 1804, Lot No. 150 was sold to Abraham Brinker and John Cunningham "for use of a graveyard" for $10. The next day Lot Number 151 was sold for the same purpose to the same parties for $10, and Lot Number 152, on the corner, was sold to James Brown for the same price, but the deed was subsequently made out to John Negley. In 1826 John Negley and his wife, Elizabeth, conveyed lot No. 152 to Norbert Foltz, and the latter in turn conveyed it by a deed dated June 10, 1828, "to the burgess and assistant burgess and the town council of Butler, and their successors, for burial purposes forever." The consideration was $50. This purchase made the cemetery complete, and the same year the town council took steps towards enclosing the ground with a stone fence which was the practice at that time. A committee of the council was appointed to present the subject to the people of the borough at a public meeting held in the court house June 10, 1828, and $300 was subscribed for that purpose.

The first person buried in the cemetery was Charles McGinnis, who died in 1805, and many pioneers and some notable people found their last resting place on earth in this cemetery.

As early as 1856 the town council passed an ordinance forbidding further interments in this cemetery, and for half a century the grounds were practically neglected. About 1866 an attempt was made by the Butler School Board to condemn the old burial ground for school purposes. The project met with an indignant protest by the citizens of the town, and for the time being further efforts were abandoned. About 1880 the late Colonel John M. Sullivan, Thomas Robinson, Col. James C. McKee, William Campbell, Jr., and others, raised a fund for the purpose of beautifying the grounds and taking care of the graves that were marked on the old plot. In the years that had intervened after further burials had been forbidden by the town council, the stone fence had been removed and the grounds were practically abandoned by the borough council. In 1902 the borough council undertook to sell the property for the purpose of paying the liens against it for paving McKean Street and North Street. This met with opposition from those who had relatives buried in the old cemetery, and others who from patriotic and other reasons wished to see the old burial place preserved as a park. A part of the original fund raised in 1880 was at that time in the possession of William Campbell, Jr., and this was turned over to the city council for the purpose of repairing the grounds. In 1905 the question of condemning the old cemetery for the purpose of erecting a High School building on the grounds was again brought up, and there being no resistance at this time the project was carried through. In November, 1905, all of the known graves in the cemetery were removed to a plot which the school board purchased in the North Cemetery, and there reinterred, and the proper markers placed at each grave. The following year the construction of the new high school building was commenced, and completed in 1908. In the main entrance to the school building a tablet has been erected on which is inscribed the names of John Cunningham and Samuel Cunningham, the founders of the borough of Butler, both of whom were buried in the cemetery.

Over seven hundred graves were removed from this old cemetery and of this number only eighty-three could be identified by means of a tomb-stone or other mark.

Those identified included the names of many families who are among the first settlers of the borough and of the county. A plot with the graves marked may be seen at the office of the superintendent of the public schools of the city in the high school building. A similar plot of the ground purchased by the school board in the north cemetery with all of the graves properly marked is also on file at the same place.

St. Peter's Catholic Cemetery, the second burial place in Butler, was laid out in 1830 on ground deeded for the purpose by Sarah Collins, a daughter of Stephen Lowrey. An addition was made to it in 1834 of ground deeded to the Catholic Church by Valeria Evans, a daughter of Mrs. Collins, and her husband, E. R. Evans. This cemetery is located on College Street, and was used for burial purposes until about 1880, when the interments were discontinued. Many of the Catholic pioneers of the town and surrounding country are buried in this old grave yard.

South Cemetery. What is known as the South Cemetery on the hill south of the creek is owned by the German and English Lutheran and the United Presbyterian Congregations. In 1850 John Negley deeded land to the German Lutherans and subsequently to the English Lutherans for burial purposes and still later the McQuiston heirs deeded a small tract of land adjoining on the west, to the United Presbyterian Church. The enclosure which comprises about seven acres occupies a commanding position and is an ideal spot on which to establish God's acre. In this old cemetery lie the remains of many pioneer settlers of Butler and the surrounding community, including those of John Negley, the donor of the ground, who succeeded the Cummings as owner of the mill property and who was identified with nearly every movement for the betterment of the town.

The Butler Cemetery Association was chartered by act of March 24, 1851. Seven acres of ground were purchased from Ebenezer Graham lying on the north line of the borough overlooking the town. Soon after the incorporation of the association steps were taken towards laying out the ground in lots and at the same time the borough council passed an ordinance forbidding interments in the old cemetery on North McKean Street. Additional purchases of ground were made from time to time and from 1851 to 1857 this cemetery was one of the principal burial places of the borough. For many years Col. John M. Sullivan was president of the Association, Major Cyrus E. Anderson, secretary, and R. C. McAbey, superintendent and treasurer. The officers in 1908 were P. W. Lowery, president, George C. Stewart, secretary, Louis B. Stein, treasurer, and T. C. Campbell, R. B. Fowser and L. O. Purvis, directors. In 1902 P. L. King took charge as superintendent. The first interment in the cemetery was in December, 1852, when Robert Howard Hill, who had died from scarlet fever, was buried there. Many of the prominent and well known early settlers are buried in this cemetery, and scores of graves are marked by handsome monuments. A curious feature about this cemetery association is the fact that each purchaser of a burial lot received a deed for it in fee simple, and is the outright owner of the ground. This circumstance has caused the association much trouble in keeping the grounds in proper condition, as they have been unable to assess the lot owners for the necessary funds to carry on the work. An effort is to be made in the near future to remedy this defect.

The North Side Cemetery Association was chartered July 2, 1887, and has been duly incorporated. Thirty acres of ground were purchased of Charles Duffy adjoining the old cemetery on the north and was laid out in lots. The leading spirit in the new organization was John S. Campbell, who was also the first president. In 1908 John S. Campbell was president, Harvey Colbert, secretary, and P. L. King, superintendent. D. S. McCullough was the first superintendent of the ground and filled that position until 1902, when he was succeeded by Mr. King. Many substantial and costly monuments have been erected during the past twenty-two years, and several of the pioneers of the town have found their last earthly homes in this cemetery.

Calvary Cemetery Association was incorporated July 9, 1887, by Rev. William A. Nolan, then pastor of St. Paul's Catholic Church, Charles Duffy, George Shaffner, William H. Reihing, David Niggel, Thos. F. Niggel, William G. Vinroe, Patrick Kelley, Daniel McLaughlin, N. J. Criley, D. H. Wuller, John McCune, P. A. Golden, Hugh D. McCrea, Jacob Faller, Jos. J. Lavery, and Charles F. Cane. Thirty-five acres were purchased from Charles Duffy immediately north of the North Side Cemetery, twenty of which belong to St. Paul's Congregation and fifteen to St. Peter's. The grounds lie immediately at the top of the hill and form an ideal burial place. Improvements have been going on rapidly, and in a few years this cemetery will be one of the beautiful spots about the town.

This combination of three cemeteries is embraced in one enclosure and is dedicated to the uses of all denominations. The entire area now covers about one hundred acres. The location is admirably suited for the purpose to which it is dedicated, and in time it will become a beautiful city of the dead.

SOCIETIES AND NATIONAL ORDERS.

The Sterling Club is a social organization organized about 1890, and at the present time has a membership of about 100. During the first two or three years of its existence the club had rooms in the Berg Bank building on the corner of Main and Jefferson Streets, but when the Campbell building was completed on South Main Street in 1891, the club secured a lease of the entire third floor and fitted up elegant apartments which they still occupy. The rooms consist of parlors, billiard-room, dining-room, and ball-room. The present officers of the club are Edward S. Riddle, president; Samuel Walker, vice-president; John H. Jackson, secretary; James O. Campbell, treasurer; and the following board of governors: John Murrin, John H. Wilson, Robert M. Little, James A. Feldman.

The Country Club was organized in 1904 by a number of business men of Butler who were interested in golf and athletics. Golf links were established on rented ground at Lyndora, and the following year the club purchased the George Huselton farm in Penn Township, on the line of the Pittsburg & Butler Electric Railway. A clubhouse was erected and a number of improvements made, which make the place an ideal location for a country resort. The club was incorporated and capitalized at $25,000.00. The president of the club in 1908 was Edward Bredin, and the secretary John Brandon.

The Masonic Order in Butler is represented by Butler Lodge Number 272, F. & A. M., which was chartered March 7, 1863, and instituted August 3rd of the same year. The charter members and first officers were James Bredin, W. M.; David A. Agnew, S. W.; Felix E. Negley, J. W.; William Criswell, treasurer; Geo. W. Crozier, secretary; Jos. P. Patterson, John McCarnes, J. J. Sedwick, Hugh McKee and Andrew Fitzsimmons. From this parent lodge several other prosperous lodges in Butler County have been organized. The hall is in the Reiber Block on Main Street, and the present membership is about 150. The present officers are B. R. Williams, W. M.; Geo. W. Hazlett, S. W.; John S. Douglass, secretary; and Harvey Colbert, treasurer.

Butler Chapter Number 273, R. A. M. was chartered December 27, 1890, and constituted March 24, 1891. The first officers were as follows: William C. Thompson, H. P.; Charles N. Boyd, K.; Francis M. Coll, S.; Josiah B. Black, treasurer; and Newton Black, secretary. The place of meeting is in the Reiber Block on South Main Street. The present officers are John H. Douglass, H. P.; C. D. Holmes, K.; J. H. Wilson, Scribe; W. A. Stein, Secretary; and P. W. Lowry, treasurer.

In addition to the membership of the two Masonic lodges mentioned above, there are a large number of members of Knight Templars who belong to the lodges of Greenville and Pittsburg. In January, 1909, the local lodges purchased the property of Miss Sarah B. McQuiston on South Main Street for $25,000, and an elegant Masonic Temple will be erected within the next two years.

Independent Order of Odd Fellows. The pioneer secret society of the town is Connoquenessing Lodge, No. 278, I. O. O. F., which was instituted December 11, 1847, the charter having been granted on November 8th. The charter members were Jacob Ziegler, Alfred Gilmore, John Graham, and Dunlap McLaughlin. The first members admitted at the same meeting were John H. Negley, William Balph, Cornelius Coll, and Thomas W. Wallace. The first officers elected were Alfred Gilmore, N. G., Jacob Ziegler, V. G., John Graham, secretary, and Dunlap McLaughlin, treasurer. The second meeting of the lodge was held on the 23d of December, 1847, in the court house. This lodge has been quite prosperous during its existence, and at the present time is one of the strongest lodges in the county. The meetings were held in a hall rented for the purpose until 1887, when a lot was purchased on West Jefferson Street, and a two-story brick building erected, which is now occupied by the People's Telephone Company. In 1899 the Henry C. Heineman property was purchased at the corner of Main and Cunningham Streets, upon which the present magnificent temple was built in 1906, at a cost of about $90,000.00. The trustees are David E. Dale, Alexander Mitchell and E. I. Brugh. The managers of the club rooms are Thomas H. Greer and Raymond S. Cornelius. The officers in October, 1908, were Geo. R. Slentz, noble grand; Jesse E. Neyman, vice-grand; John E. Flaek, secretary; Harley McClelland, recording secretary; William Cromm, treasurer. The membership was 226.

Clement Encampment No. 238, I. O. O. F., was organized in 1897, and at the present time has a large membership. The meetings are held in the Odd Fellows' Temple on South Main Street. The officers of the Encampment are W. A. Ashbaugh, C. P.; W. J. Snyder, H. P.; T. C. Patterson, S. W.; C. D. Frazier, Jr. W.; S. M. Swartzlander, scribe; and D. E. Dale, treasurer. The trustees are J. L. Garro-way, John J. Shiering and H. L. Richey.

Ziegler Lodge No. 1039, I. O. O. F., is an off-shoot of the parent society and was instituted April 23, 1892, with twenty-four charter members. The first officers were Dr. G. J. Peters, N. G., J. H. Conard, V. G., S. M. Swartzlander, secretary, A. M. Borland, assistant secretary, and Dr. N. M. Hoover, treasurer. The lodge prospered from the start, and now has a membership of over two hundred. The lodge room is on Center Avenue, in Springdale. The officers of the lodge in January, 1909, were Camden McKee, noble grand; O. F. Rhoda-berger, vice-grand; S. M. Swartzlander, secretary; R. L. Kirkpatrick, treasurer; and the trustees were J. W. Brown, S. M. Swartzlander and J. L. Garro-way.

A. O. U. W. The first lodge having an insurance feature to be organized in Butler was Butler Lodge Number 94, Ancient Order of United Workmen. This lodge was instituted January 18, 1876, and had for its charter members Lewis P. Walker, S. R. Diffenbacher, T. A. Templeton, A. L. Reiber, T. B. White, David Cupps, Alexander Mitchell, H. Gumpper, Elliott Robb, T. S. Greene, D. A. Heck, C. Rehban, Samuel Walker, and John F. Lowrey. The lodge embraced in its membership some of the best citizens in the borough, and at one time its membership was over three hundred.

Knights of Honor. A. L. Reiber Lodge, No. 679, K. of H., was instituted January 22, 1877, with twenty-nine charter members. It had a steady growth and was fairly prosperous for many years.

Royal Arcanum. Butler Council, No. 219, Royal Arcanum, was instituted May 3, 1880, with sixteen charter members. This was a benevolent and insurance society which accomplished a great deal of good but has been driven out of the field by the younger organizations. C. C. Cochran is secretary.

A. L. of H. Butler Lodge No. 732, A. L. of H., was instituted September 30, 1881, with twenty-five charter members, including several business men of the community. This society has held its own among the fraternal associations of Butler and has had a fairly prosperous career.

B. P. O. E. Butler Lodge, No. 170, Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks, is one of the later fraternal societies in Butler. It was chartered and organized July 10, 1890, by J. B. Black, William T. Mechling, F. M. Coll, J. D. Northrup, E. W. Tibbles, Wm. H. Reihing, I. G. Smith, and Dr. Lysander Black. The first officers were J. B. Black, E. R., W. T. Mechling, E. L. K., F. M. Coll, E. L. K., J. D. Northrup, E. L. K., E. W. Tibbles, secretary, and I. G. Smith, treasurer. The lodge grew rapidly and within the first year had a membership of fifty. Its present membership is about two hundred and fifty. The first home of the lodge was in the brick building on the corner of Main and Diamond Streets, formerly occupied by the Butler County National Bank. The present quarters are in the Bickel building on South Main Street, where the lodge has the entire third floor fitted up as a lodge room, parlors, and a club-room. In 1907 the lodge purchased the Geis Building on East Cunningham Street, adjoining the Majestic Theater, where permanent quarters will soon be established. The Order of Elks is a purely social and benevolent society, the underlying principle being charity. Bert Forquer is the present exalted ruler and J. A. Heineman, secretary.

C. M. B. A. Branch Number 56, C. M. B. A., was organized March 16, 1889, with the following charter members: Joseph Rockenstein, Bernard Kemper, Jr., A. Rockenstein, Joseph Niggel, Harry Grieb, Norbert T. Weser, Ed McShane, Albert Frank, Andrew Liebler, John Kappler, John Garber, Casper Eyth, Thomas H. Gallagher, Henry C. Plohr, J. N. Harvey, Thomas J. Moran, Charles McCarthy, J. C. Wagner, Fred J. Morall, Theodore D. Pape, W. J. McCafferty. The organization was effected through the efforts of Bernard Kemper and William H. O'Brien, the latter having previously belonged to the branch at Oil City. The first president of the local branch was Joseph Rockenstein.

The present membership of the C. M. B. A. is 207, and the officers are H. T. Rattigan, president; Earl F. Young, vice-president; Charles E. Connell, recording secretary; C. Dugan, financial secretary; Jas. W. Bayer, treasurer; Rev. M. Stenger and Rev. P. K. Collins, spiritual advisors. The association meets the first and third Tuesdays of each month in the Rockenstein building.

Branch No. 92, L. C. B. A., was organized September 17, 1891, by Supreme Deputy Mrs. J. A. Royer, of Erie, Pennsylvania, with seventeen charter members. The presiding officers have been Lena Grieb, M. C. Rockenstein, and Amelia Shaffner.

The Knights of Columbus is a social and beneficiary order which was first established in Butler in 1904. The order now has 125 members and has handsomely appointed club rooms in the Stein Building on South Main street. The present officers of the order are John Murrin, grand knight; M. F. Carroll, deputy grand knight; F. B. Duignan, chancellor; Clarence Kelley, recorder; L. C. Yungert, financial secretary; E. A. McShane, treasurer; E. H. Burke, advocate; and B. McKeown, warden. In 1908 the order took over the membership and club rooms of the Young Men's Institute, which has been in existence for several years and had club rooms in the Stein Building.

Keystone Camp No. 8, Woodmen of the World, is the strongest fraternal and insurance order in point of membership in Butler. It was organized in 1892, and at the present time has 683 members in good standing. The present officers of the camp are P. C., W. E. Cooper; C. C., J. B. Hutchinson; Adv. Lieut., James Wood; Clerk, Samuel Hughes; Banker, J. L. Emerick;

Watchman, Henry Beck; Sentry, F. L. Stauffer; Managers, F. H. Davy, E. Miller, and E. B. Bell; Physicians in Butler, M. E. Headland, L. R. Hazlett, W. J. Grossman, R. J. Grossman, W. S. Patterson, W. B. Clark; Homewood, C. B. McAbey; Renfrew, J. L. Campbell, R. S. Keeler; Evans City, E. Cuthbert; Elwood, R. L. Lowry; Callery, H. R. Wilson.

Lyndora Hall Association was organized in 1905 for social purposes by the foreign residents of Lyndora and Bredinville. A charter was secured on August 5th of that year, the subscribers being Earnest Calderora, John Buccos, H. L. Connelly, John Bungar, W. E. Merwin, John Tonko, and Joseph A. Kalina.

The Galli Society was organized in August, 1905, for social and musical purposes, by the Belgian and French residents of the Southside. The society owns a lot and a hall on Ziegler Avenue, and the French Band of the Southside is a musical organization which owes its existence to this society. The president of the society at the time the charter was granted was Emile Chenot, Victor Bayonet was secretary, and Arthur Dumont, treasurer. John Werry is the musical director.

The Italian Fraternal and Beneficial Society of Butler was organized in 1908 among the Italian residents of the town for social and beneficial purposes. The society has an insurance feature, and its purpose is to help its members who may be in distress from sickness or misfortune. The subscribers to the charter were Pietro Fosatti, Cesare Binnuci, Fiori Mazzanti, and Leonard DeFoggi.

Butler Ruling Number 729, Fraternal Mystic Circle, was organized in 1899 with 125 members. It has had a prosperous growth and at the present time has 154 members. The officers are W. K. Hays, worthy ruler; C. P. Hoffman, vice ruler; Bert Teitsworth, past worthy ruler; Geo. W. Amy, chaplain; Harry L. Graham, recorder; and Dr. W. J. Grossman, collector.

The order is fraternal, with an insurance feature. The meetings are held in the K. of P. Hall in the Reiber Building. Dr. W. J. Grossman is grand ruler for the district comprising the States of Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

Butler Tent No. 234, Knights of the Maccabees, was first organized in 1887, and disbanded in 1889. It was reorganized in December, 1889, with a large membership, and is now one of the strongest insurance orders in the county, having a membership of over 400. The officers in 1909 were G. L. Sebroth, P. C.; D. D. Quigley, C.; T. C. Kearns, L. C.; Howard I. Painter, record keeper; and D. A. Kamerer, finance keeper. The meetings are held in K. of P. Hall in the Reiber building on South Main Street.

The Ladies of the Maccabees is an auxiliary society that has a strong membership, and meets in the same hall with the Sir Knights.

Butler Lodge No. 211, Knights of Pythias, was instituted in April, 1889, and the present membership is 175. The meetings are held in the Reiber Building, and the present officers are A. L. Oesterling, chancellor commander; W. R. Gilmore, vice chancellor; D. L. Aiken, master of the exchequer; J. W. Hutchinson, keeper of records and seals. The lodge is in a flourishing condition, and has a well organized uniform rank.

Butler Circle No. 22, Protected Home Circle, was organized in the fall of 1887, and at the present time has a membership of 314. The meetings are held on the second and fourth Tuesdays of the month in a hall in the Reiber Building on South Main Street. The officers are Ella McDermitt, president; Joseph Benigh, vice-president; William Sanders, secretary; John M. Reed, accountant; J. M. McCormick, treasurer. J. M. Reed has served as accountant since the organization of the lodge, and is a life member of the Supreme Lodge.

Butler Camp No. 9616, Modern Woodmen of America, was instituted in May, 1901, with about twenty-three charter members. The present membership is sixty-two and the officers are Joseph Standacher, V. C.; W. D. Weitzel, worthy advisor; J. E. Shaw, clerk; A. R. Graham, banker; and W. W. Ross, W. B. Turner, B. R. Mattison, managers. The lodge meets the second and fourth Fridays of each month in the Reiber Building.

Butler Lodge No. 470, Fraternal Order of Eagles, was instituted in 1904, with a membership of over one hundred. It is a fraternal and beneficiary order, and has had a prosperous career since its organization. The order has lodge and club rooms in the Berg Bank Building at the corner of Main and Jefferson Streets. Al. Field is the president; D. C. Henshaw, secretary; and John D. Clark, treasurer.

Loyal Order of Moose. The youngest order and also the largest in point of membership is Butler Lodge No. 64, Loyal Order of Moose. The lodge was organized November 8, 1908, with seven hundred members and the following officers: Past dictator, George Cummings; worthy dictator, B. R. Williams; vice dictator, Peter Peterson; secretary, C. R. Watson. The Lodge purchased the R. B. Taylor property on West Jefferson Street in January, 1909, and contemplates the erection of a splendid lodge-room, gymnasium, and bath rooms.

Butler Tent, No. 128, L. O. T. M., was organized in the fall of 1896, and the present membership is one hundred. The officers are Mrs. C. E. McIntire, P. C.; Mrs. E. Howarth, C.; Mrs. George Spang, Lieut. Com.; Miss Florence Whitmire, record keeper; Miss Flora Smith, finance keeper; Mrs. D. F. McCrea, chaplain.

MILITARY.

Encampment 45, Union Veteran Legion of Butler, was chartered June 20, 1889, with nearly seventy members, who were mustered in on June 27 and 29 following. In July of the same year another muster took place at which eighty members were enrolled, and subsequently the membership was increased to over two hundred. The first officers were Robert J. Phipps, colonel commander; O. C. Redic, lieutenant colonel; W. A. Clark, major; Jefferson Burtner, chaplain; D. M. Ward, adjutant; H. Z. Wing, quarter-master; R. S. Nichols, officer of the day; and Casper Sherman, officer of the guard. To be admitted to the Veteran Legion every member must have been active service in the field for at least two years, and veteranized. The open meetings held by the local legion were looked forward to with pleasure and attended by large audiences who were royally entertained by the members. In recent years the membership has declined, and at the present time there are not over fifty on the roll. The officers in 1908 were John T. Kelly, Colonel; O. C. Redic, lieutenant colonel; Thos. J. Hazlett, major; E. A. McPherson, adjutant; and J. H. Gibson, quartermaster. The meetings are held in the hall in the Reiber Building, South Main Street.

A. G. Reed Post No. 103, G. A. R., was organized May 12, 1881, and named in honor of Alfred G. Reed, one of Butler's patriotic sons, who fell on the bloody field of Fredericksburg. The charter members were as follows: George W. Fleeger, Wilson E. Reed, James R. Storey, Joseph Kelley, William A. Wright, C. E. Anderson, A. B. Ritchey, Henry Korn, Geo. W. Johnson, H. A. Ayres, Daniel Beighley, Casper Sherman, Samuel G. Hughes, Alexander Russell, Ferdinand Weigand, A. G. Williams, D. S. McCollough, John L. Jones, John K. Fleming, James Graham, Samuel P. Shryock, and John Kennedy. The successive commanders of the Post since its organization have been as follows: George W. Fleeger, W. A. Wright, Newton Black, A. G. Williams, John T. Kelley, John M. Greer, Cyrus E. Anderson, Alexander Russell, R. P. Scott, W. A. Lowrey, Joseph Criswell, I. J. McCandless,

A. B. Ritchey. The officers of the post in 1909 were Thomas Hayes, commander; R. P. Scott, quartermaster; Rev. Long, chaplain; W. A. Lowrey, adjutant; and A. G. Morrison, officer of the day.

The Post held its meetings in the Odd Fellows' Hall on Jefferson Street until 1905, when the quarters were moved to the hall on Center Avenue in Springdale. The Post at one time had a membership of over 200, but at the present time it is only 150, indicating that the ranks of the great army of 1861 and 1865 is rapidly thinning, and in a few years will live only in the memories of the sons and grandsons of its members.

Connected with the Post is the Relief Corps Number 97, which contains about twenty-five members.

Butler Camp No. 33, United Spanish War Veterans, was mustered April 19, 1907, by Major Davis of Pittsburg. The officers of the camp are Lieutenant A. T. Scott, Commander; Howard C. Hazlett, Senior Vice-Commander; Samuel S. Scott, Junior Vice-Commander; Jno. H. Jackson, Quarter-master; Charles A. McElvaine, Adjutant; Robert M. Little, Chaplain; Earnest C. Faber, Sergeant; Col. W. T. Mechling, Lieutenant; Geo. S. Mechling and William Double, trustees. The following are the charter members: Isaac Andrews, Robert J. Adams, Roy I. Burtner, Cameron G. Brandon, Chas. B. Burkhalter, Harry A. Cook, Wm. J. P. Collins, Peter A. Cummings, Wm. J. Curley, Wm. A. Caldwell, Carl M. Eisler, David H. Ensminger, Harvey A. Evans, Clarence E. Graham, Hardee H. Hapler, Jos. A. Heine-man, John H. Jackson, Wm. J. Jackson, Ira McJunkin, Lawrence H. McDowell, Josiah M. McCandless, Roy R. McIntire, Marcus B. Mechling, Harley McClelland, Jas. T. Morgan, Louis A. McDonald, Harry H. Morrison, Charles E. Miller, E. H. Negley, Fred T. Roessing, Wm. H. Ritter, Jr., Harry E. Sumney, Chas. E. Smith, Samuel S. Scott, Oscar A. Schaffer, A. J. Thompson, Geo. Thompson, Jas. C. Voegley, Horatio S. Vanderlin, B. J. Williams, A. Rex Williams, John G. Williams, Bert L. Wiseman, Thos. W. Watson, Fred E. Wigton, William A. Wade, B. H. Smulovitz, Ira A. Murphy, S. V. Eckelberger, Jno. J. Martin, W. H. Reburn, Jno. W. Alexander, R. W. Laughlin, and Jas. L. Barton.

Other lodges or societies having organizations in the town in 1908 are the Home Guards, Sons of St. George, and Human Rights.

The United States Board of Examining Surgeons connected with the Pension Department, is composed of Dr. A. V. Cunningham, of Velienville, president; Dr. R. B. Greer of Butler, secretary; and Dr. L. B. Grove, of Anandale, treasurer.

The Butler County Medical Society meets once a month in rooms in the Reiber Building on South Main Street. Dr. T. M. Maxwell is secretary of the society. A history of the society is noted in the medical chapter of this work.

THE POSTOFFICE.

Previous to the founding of Butler Borough a mail route was established in 1801 from Erie to Pittsburg. The mail carrier traveled on horseback, sometimes on foot, and visited the community about once a month. In 1805 the mail carrier visited Butler every two weeks. Subsequently the trips were made once a week. For many years it was said the amount of mail was often so small as to be easily stowed away in the pockets of the carrier. Later the mail pouch was thrown across the back of the horse of the carrier, and then two horses were used to transport the increasing correspondence. When the public roads had been completed from Pittsburg to Butler, and thence to Mercer, a wagon was used to carry the mail, and any travelers between the points on the route. A semi-weekly mail was established through Butler from Pittsburg to Erie in 1818; a tri-weekly in 1824; and a daily mail in 1827. The stage coach came in 1821, and the mail was carried by the stage line until the advent of the railroad in 1871. The next advance was two daily mails between Butler and Pittsburg, and in 1909 the number of mails between Butler and Pittsburg and all eastern and western points is six, and a two-horse wagon is required to transport the large number of mail sacks from the postoffice to the various depots.

Little is known about the location of the early post-offices. Patrick Kelley had the post-office at one time at his tavern on the Diamond. Joshua J. Sedwick conducted the office for a number of years in the fifties at the corner of North and Main Streets, now occupied by the Duffy Block. Later the office was kept in the tavern building of Patrick Kelley, Jr., at the corner of Main and Cunningham Streets. In the early part of the seventies a frame building was erected at the rear of the Troutman Building on West Cunningham Street, which served its purpose until about 1888, when new quarters were rented in the Byers Building on South Main Street, now occupied by Covert's Cafe. The present quarters were leased from the Butler County National Bank Building in 1903. In 1902 the first steps were taken towards obtaining a federal building for the town, and Congress appropriated $20,000 for the purchase of the lot at the corner of West Jefferson and Washington Streets, from the heirs of the late Col. James C. McKee and Isaiah J. McBride.

The following is a list of post-masters of Butler with dates of appointment:

William B. Young, October 1, 1805; John Potts, July 1, 1807; William Gibson, December 8, 1813; Jacob Mecling, Jr., April 1, 1816; James P. Howard, February 10, 1817; John Gilchrist, January 24, 1824; Peter Duffy, December 10, 1830; James Potts, December 31, 1832; William B. Lemmon, July 10, 1841; David A. Agnew, May 16, 1845; Joshua J. Sedwick, March 26, 1849; Daniel Coll, April 28, 1853;

Joshua J. Sedwick, June 8, 1861, reappointed March 2, 1867; Frank M. Eastman, April 21, 1869; Thomas B. White, April 3, 1871, reappointed March 15, 1875; Sallie A. Robinson, March 27, 1879, reappointed June 26, 1883; Frank M. Eastman, May 10, 1888; John T. Kelley, May 20, 1892; John W. Brown, July 21, 1896; J. B. Black, July, 1900; Eli D. Robinson, August, 1904; James B. Mates, January 26, 1909.

BOROUGH OFFICIALS IN JANUARY, 1909.

Burgess, Elmer E. Bell; president of council, Ellsworth Miller; treasurer, Wm. F. Runberger; secretary, H. E. Coulter; city solicitor, John H. Wilson; tax collector, Archie Davidson; high constable, Ed. Kramer; auditors, V. W. Parker, Harry Porcht, T. James Dodds; street commissioner, Jasper Richard; borough engineer, H. B. Graves; sewer inspector, John W. Vogel. Members of Council—First Ward, John C. Clark, Thos. H. Brown, Joseph E. Schmitzer; Second Ward, George Mellinger, Samuel L. Irvine, Geo. E. Sherman; Third Ward, John G. Dunn, Lewis E. Ruby, A. C. Moxie; Fourth Ward, Ellsworth Miller, Joseph Ball, Geo. H. Linberg; Fifth Ward, A. M. Aiken, Geo. Ambruster and E. R. Maxwell.

POLICE FORCE.

The Police Force of the city in January, 1909, was composed of Joseph Angert, chief; Lewis Hays, lieutenant; and patrolmen R. H. Graham, E. L. Shultz, Wesley Hoover and George Rodgers.

MODERN BUTLER.

We have attempted to trace the history of Butler through its various stages down to the present time. It has grown from an obscure hamlet of less than fifty inhabitants more than a hundred years ago to a thriving city of 25,000 population. Since the incorporation of the borough in 1817 there has been no backward steps taken, although it is true that for many years the borough languished and gave but feeble signs of life. When John Galbraith established the Palladium in 1818, his was the only printing office between Pittsburg and Mercer. Today there are five weekly and two daily papers published in the town, which is now recognized as the social and commercial center of a rich and populous county. For three-quarters of a century the streets were unpaved, the sidewalks poor and the buildings typical of a backwoods period. A better day dawned, however, upon the town, when nature developed her vast stores of wealth, and the discovery of oil and gas made the county an inviting field for speculation and investment. The advent of the steam railroads opened a new field of industrial endeavor, and in the last two decades the shire town has become the center of a vast manufacturing district.

Modern Butler may be said to date from 1871, when the first steam railroad was completed to the town. A new era of improvement and building set in which began with the erection of the Jefferson Street School building, the bank building on the corner of Main and Jefferson Streets, and the Berg Hardware Building on South Main Street. The boundaries of the borough were enlarged, new streets were opened, stone and brick side-walks were laid, and comfortable dwelling houses constructed in the modern style of architecture were erected on the new streets and avenues. A period of depression followed the Greece City oil excitement, but was followed by renewed activity in the eighties. During this decade noted improvements were made in the erection of business blocks on Main Street, and the removal of Dougal's Row, which consisted of a pile of dilapidated old shacks, north of the Court House, and the erection of the present substantial business blocks. The present court house was erected in 1884, and about the same time the Reiber Block on the corner of Main and Cunningham Streets took the place of the old frame buildings that were formerly occupied by Kelley's Hotel.

The last decade of the century was marked by rapid advancements. The streets were lighted with electricity in 1890, the Waring sewage system was installed the same year, and Main Street was paved with brick. Other streets followed until at the present time all of the principal streets and avenues of the town are paved with brick or asphalt block. Three-story business blocks began to appear on Main Street, the Troutman Block being erected in 1890, the Campbell Block in 1891, the Farmers National Bank Building, the Younkens Building, the Stein Block, south of the Court House, Campbell's furniture store, and the Thompson and Younkens Block now occupied by the Butler Business College, were all erected during the latter part of the nineties. The first decade of the new century was marked by the evolution from the three-story business block to the modern sky scraper, and in 1903 the Butler County National Bank Building, six stories high, was erected, and the following year the new Nixon Hotel Building, which is four stories above the sub-story, was completed on the south side of Diamond Street. The Odd Fellows' Temple on South Main Street, the Duffy flats on North Main Street, the Kirkpatrick Building, and Koch's grocery building, were all erected since 1902. Modern hotel buildings have taken the place of the old taverns, among the more recent being the new Nixon, the Clinton, the Commercial, the Monroe, the Atlas, and the Keystone, all of which have been completed in the past few years.

The Butler oil and gas fields are still a source of unmeasured wealth, the lime and coal industries are in their infancy, new manufacturing plants are being erected and new electric railways are being promoted. The outlook is hopeful and the succeeding years will see greater advancement than the past.

CHAPTER XVII

THE TOWNSHIPS

ADAMS TOWNSHIP.

This township, named in honor of an early president, John Quincy Adams, was erected in 1854 from territory set apart from Cranberry and Middlesex townships, and is located along the base line of the county, in the second tier of townships from the western boundary. It is of fertile soil, well drained by Breakneck and Little Breakneck Creeks and Glade Run, and is well adapted for agricultural pursuits. Cannel, Upper Freeport and Brush Creek coal have been mined in different parts of the township with good results, and the development of the oil fields has shown this territory rich in oil and gas.

The first settler of the township was James Glover, a native of New Jersey, who had come west to Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, where he was one of the pioneers. He was a great huntsman and on his expeditions found a deer lick in what is now Adams Township. Close by this lick he in 1792 put up a rude log cabin; in 1795 he made a clearing here, and the following year laid claim to 400 acres of land. In 1796 he erected a log-house, the second in the township, and there resided until his death in 1844, at the age of ninety-one years. The first house was that built by James Irvine, who had the added distinction of being one of the pioneer school teachers. In the center of his claim of 100 acres, he built a large house of round logs, in which he lived until his death in 1830. He was an Irishman by birth, and upon coming to America in 1770, first took up his residence in Westmoreland County. William McCandless, a tailor; William McCandless, a distiller, and Robert McCandless settled at the same period, and in 1796 came Adam Johnson, Sr., Adam Johnson, Jr., Joshua and George Stoolfire, Moses Meeker, Timothy Ward and David Spear. Timothy Ward, who was a school teacher, and Moses Meeker, did not remain long. Adam Johnson, Sr., was well advanced in years at the time of his arrival, and died here in 1827, at the remarkable age of 103. The year 1798 witnessed the arrival of the following men with their families: William Criswell, William Roseboro, James Park, Matthew Park, Silas Miller, Isaac Covert, Joseph Means, Thomas Means, and some of the Gillilands. John Richardson, William Forsythe, James Davidson, Sr., and his son James, came into the country about the close of the eighteenth century. Thomas Kennedy and Andrew Bar arrived about the year 1813; Robert McKinney in 1816; and Job Staples, school teacher, minister and farmer, came in about that time. Other names prominently connected with the township history at an early period are: McMarlin, Kennedy, Marshall, Plummer, Orr, Cashdollar, Kidd, Walter, Cooper and Hall. The first birth record in the township is that of John Gilliland, born November 25, 1798. Very little manufacturing has been done here. Matthew Park established a grist mill in the early days near the site of Mars, and Samuel Roseboro erected one in the same locality in 1883. The distillery of Robert McKinney was established in 1819.

School classes were organized and instruction in the common branches given in various homes for several years prior to the building of the first school, a log structure, in 1805. These classes were taught by wandering teachers or by some of the pioneers, of whom quite a number were teachers. Robert Hill taught in the first building erected for school purposes, it being located on or near the old Davis farm. Near the present village of Callery, a log school was built in 1837, and about the year 1848 Samuel Hood taught the first school in the neighborhood of Robbins Mill, it being held in the house vacated by Reuben Conaby. There are now eight schools in the township, and education matters are in a flourishing condition. The school board is composed of the following directors: W. L. Marburger, W. J. Remison, Chris. Thileman, J. A. Humes, D. B. Stoup, and Thomas W. Hayes.

The United Presbyterian Church of Adams Township, known as the Union Church, was organized near Brownsdale in 1806, where it continued until 1820, in which year the tent, in which services were held, was conveyed to a point near the present church of the congregation. In 1824 two acres of land was purchased from Robert McKinney, and the following year a log building was erected. In 1833 a division of the congregation took place, one branch being known as the "Old School," and the other as the "New School." The latter held the church property. The history of the former division is given under the head of the North Union Reformed Presbyterian Church of Forward Township. The "New School" occupied the old log building until 1839, when it was abandoned. The "Old School" in that year erected a brick building, adjoining the old, and following the example set, the "New School," also in 1839, purchased a lot about one mile northwest and constructed a large brick edifice. The members from the vicinity of Brownsdale withdrew in 1859 to unite with a new organization there, and in June, 1859, the Union Congregation joined with the United Presbyterians. About this time, the charge was transferred from the Allegheny to the Butler Presbytery. Union and Brownsdale churches united in one charge. In 1864 the town churches dissolved connection and the pastor devoted his whole time to the old Union church. The church society was incorporated June 14, 1866, with Jacob Hutchman, Francis H. Davidson and Samuel Orr as trustees. The old church was destroyed by fire in 1905 and has since been replaced by a neat and attractive building representing a cost of about six thousand dollars, which was dedicated in 1906.

Crest View Presbyterian Church of Adams Township was organized in 1890, letters being granted on August 10, of that year to twenty-seven members by the session of Plains Church. The petition was presented by Rev. R. C. Yates. The society was incorporated February 15, 1892, with Nicoll Allen, F. C. McNeal and Alfred Richardson as trustees.

The United Presbyterian Church of Mars, the early history of which coincides with that of Union Church, was moved to Mars in 1877. It was incorporated May 16, 1893, on petition of Dr. John C. Barr, T. M. Marshall, John Davidson, John A. Criswell and Presley Duncan. In 1894, a new church building was completed at a cost of $4,000.

The Methodist Episcopal Church of Mars was organized with a membership of eight, and a church building soon after erected.

The Evangelical Association is the most recent of the churches established in Adams Township, and has a fair sized congregation.

Mars Borough, the principal center of population in Adams Township, is a thrifty and well built little town, which has had a steady growth. It has fine stores, residences and churches, and a progressive class of citizens. The United States Census Report of 1900 shows its population more than double that of the preceding report. The place was known as Overbrook Post-office from the time of establishing an office at this point until 1882, when the name of Mars was adopted. The post-office was started in 1875, and Samuel Park, the miller, made the first post-master. The completion of the Pittsburg and Narrow Gauge Railroad to this point caused a raise in property values and considerable building activity. Frank Johnston immediately erected a building and conducted a store until 1877 or 1878, when he sold out to W. H. Walters and W. J. Gilliland. They carried on the business for two years, and then sold out to J. B. Dickey. Mr. Gilliland erected a larger building west of the depot for store purposes, and this too he sold to Mr. Dickey. A new store building was in the course of construction by Oliver Pinkerton, when the report was circulated that the depot would be removed to Little Breakneck, and the building plans were checked. This report also caused Mr. Dickey to sell his building, the purchaser being W. H. Walters, who carried on the business for a year, and then sold out to Samuel and Andrew Thompson. W. J. Gilliland erected the building later occupied by Marshall's store, on a five-acre tract purchased from the S. A. Kennedy property. In the fall of 1883, Mr. Gilliland and D. G. Marshall erected a store and depot, where they carried on business until the following year, the railroad office being moved to that building. D. B. Wilson, a new arrival, built a house which he later traded for the Thompson store, carrying on the business for a time. F. P. Confer erected a shop and residence and was the first blacksmith in the place, being succeeded in turn by John Conley and Samuel Zeigler. Stores which were established and prospered at a later period were those of Dr. J. C. Bar and Charles Willetts, drugs; H. W. Walters, harness; Al Ziegler, hardware; J. D. Marshall, Jordan & Company, and Ziegler and Schwab, general stores; Simon and Cohen, clothing; Mars Milling & Feed Co.; Irvine Brothers, furniture dealers; W. J. Link, coal dealer; W. D. Boyd, lumber dealer; Edward Wise, M. J. Roberts, and M. Hinchey, stores.

The borough officers for 1908 are as follows: Justice of the peace, Alexander Lurting; auditor, O. C. Pinkerton; high constable, Clinton McCandless; school directors, A. C. Irvine, G. H. Kandaell; council, John Toy, B. M. Phipps, William Dan; constable, D. L. Fair; judge of election, J. C. Hespeneid; inspectors, W. A. Davidson and Presley Duncan; town clerk, W. W. Donaldson; street commissioner, W. A. Davidson; tax collector, L. E. Irvine; assessor, Mercer Marshall. The present postmaster is W. D. Boyd.

Callery Borough, formerly known as Callery Junction, is a prosperous little railroad town in Adams Township, which was named in honor of the president of the Pittsburg & Western Railroad, now a part of the Baltimore & Ohio System. It is the junction point of that road with the Butler branch. A post office was established here in 1880, but it was not until 1883 that there was much building activity. In that year, William Gilliland sold lots to P. H. Murray, Alexander Blair, A. M. Beers, T. M. Marshall, and F. C. Meeder, among others, all of whom had buildings erected by April, 1883, prior to the completion of the depot. The Meeder House was opened for business in July of that year. Essentially a railroad town, as well as a good shipping point, numerous hotels and poolrooms, as well as stores, came into being, and made a thriving and active appearance. The conflagration of October 29, 1892, destroyed the stores of James Little and W. Shannon; Murray's restaurant; the hotels of W. H. White, H. Maters and VanBoise; the railroad depot and freight house, and six dwellings, entailing a loss of $25,000, about three-fifths of it covered by insurance. What promised to be a serious set back to the village proved the reverse, as the new buildings erected were larger, more substantial and modern in type. Within a year business was fully resumed and the following merchants and firms active in the field: John F. Shannon, general merchant; J. H. Thomas, general merchant; H. B. Hunt, proprietor of a restaurant; M. J. Goddard, coal dealer; and Caruthers, Peters. & Company, machinists and blacksmiths, which subsequently merged into the Bessemer Gas Engine Co. at Grove City. Mrs. Bessie A. Shannon is the present postmistress.

The town was incorporated as a borough July 3, 1905, when the court appointed Perry Dunlap, J. M. Little and A. McCollough, election officers to hold the first borough election.

The elections of 1908 resulted in the choice of S. E. Miller and W. E. Dunbar for auditors; J. H. Stone for high constable; D. Lambert for constable; J. F. Shannon and George Kaufmann for school directors; B. Guthrie and George A. Kaufmann for council.

John F. Shannon is the present justice of the peace in the borough, having been elected in 1905.

In 1908 the mercantile interests of the town were represented by the general stores of John F. Shannon and R. A. Marks, and the Callery Pharmacy of which W. B. Staples is the manager.

The industrial interests are represented by the Pittsburg-Callery Brick & Tile Company, which is the successor of the old Callery Brick Company. This company has a plant representing an investment of about $30,000, and gives employment to thirty men. The company owns thirty acres of land at the site of its plant, and is doing an extensive business.

The Pittsburg Fuse Manufacturing Company has a capital of $50,000, and is operating a plant on the old James Walters farm in the limits of the borough. This concern manufactures fuse for blasting, and employs fifty-three people. It is owned and managed by Pittsburg people.

The Vanvoy Hotel conducted by Thomas Louther, and P. H. Murray's restaurant furnish entertainment for the travelers who may stop at this point.

Four companies supply the town with natural gas. They are the Evans City Natural Gas Company, which is controlled by Butler parties, the Forrest Oil Company and the United Natural Gas Company. The Callery Natural Gas Company was recently organized by Samuel Kaufmann and W. B. Staples, and is supplying a number of consumers from wells on the Mandana Staples farm about two miles west of Myoma.

The borough council in January, 1909, was composed of B. H. Guthrie, president; Perry Dunlap; W. H. Lobough; A. J. Webber; W. B. Staples; Dr. H. R. Wilson, and A. McCollough; John Shannon is clerk; Samuel Kaufmann was street commissioner in 1908.

The borough has two public schools, a commodious school building which was erected in 1907, and an enrollment of about ninety scholars and a population of about 450.

The Free Methodist Society was organized at Callery Junction about 1899, and has had practically the same pastors as the congregation at Mars. In the fall of 1908 the society purchased the building that had been erected by the Gospel Prohibition Church, the latter society having been disorganized. The pastor in charge of the Free Methodist Society in 1908 was Miss Elizabeth Bergman, who also has charge of the congregation at Mars. The membership of the Free Methodist Society is small, having at no time exceeded twenty-five since its organization.

The Gospel Prohibition Church above mentioned is one of the three societies organized in Butler County by Rev. I. G. Pollard, of which mention is made in the chapter on Butler Borough.

Crest View Presbyterian Church. The early history of Crest View Presbyterian Church at Callery Junction is identified with that of Plains Church in Cranberry township. On August 10, 1890, the Session of Plains Church granted letters of dismissal to twenty-six of its members, who, with Rev. R. C. Yates, composed the nucleus of the new congregation, which was organized at that time. The society was incorporated February 15, 1892, the trustees named in the charter being Nicoll Allen, F. C. McNeal and Alfred Richardson. The pastor of the congregation in 1908 was Rev. P. R. Harvey, and the elders Cyrus W. Hall, John Staples, James Little, Charles Kiser and Flemming West.

Downeyville is the name of a small settlement in the southern part of Adams Township, near the Allegheny County line. The plant of the Downey Pump Works, established here in the early nineties, was recently purchased by the Pittsburg Horse-shoe Manufacturing Company, who have begun the erection of additional buildings. The concern will employ about 100 men, and in consequence the future prospects of the village are very promising. F. C. Windhorst conducts a general store here.

Myoma is a small place in one of the richest agricultural sections of Adams Township, and with a good substantial class from which to draw trade, has maintained some good stores, a blacksmith shop and postoffice. Among the merchants who have been located at this point may be mentioned J. C. Davidson, C. B. Irvine and H. H. Berringer. A church and school are located here.

Valencia Borough, surveyed and named by Dr. S. O. Sterrett, is located in the southern part of Adams Township. Dr. Sterrett established a general store at this point, as did J. A. & W. F. Anderson and A. L. Cooper; and J. C. Barr an agricultural implement store and coal yard. In 1908 Geo. Dickson and J. R. Stoup were conducting a general store, Morrow and Buxton a hardware establishment, Willetts Brothers a drug store, and Jacob Kanaell a market. The town has one public school. Valencia was changed from a village to a borough in 1897.

Township officials (1908): Tax collector, William L. Kauffman; constable, E. F. Holzer; assessor, John Cashdollar; auditors, W. W. Hill, Joseph Gilkey and J. A. Kennedy; road supervisors, John Kline, W. J. Blakeley, S. D. Swaney, R. J. Orr and W. L. Marburger.

CONCORD TOWNSHIP.

Concord Township, at one time the most important center of the Butler oil fields, is a well watered section of the county, and has fertile farming land, besides coal deposits, of which some small banks are now operated for local consumers. The names of its streams, Bear, Buffalo, Muddy and Slippery Rock Creeks, were once well known on the Oil Exchange, for along these streams or not far removed, were drilled the wells that in 1872 and a few years later attracted the interest of financiers in every section. There are several hundred wells still producing, though the production of each is small. Drilling is still carried on to some extent, the oil being found in the third sand and the Speechly sand. There are also several small gas wells operated for local consumption. The Western Allegheny Railway runs through the central part of the township.

The first permanent settlers were probably Widow Thankful Aggas and her two sons, who established their home in the wilderness in 1796. Their first neighbors were Edward Graham and family, William Dickey and John Campbell, Sr., and sons, the latter settling in 1797. There are also found the names of William and Andrew Christy and Samuel Campbell, while other prominent pioneers up to 1826 were the Conways, Samuel Campbell, James Russell, John, Joseph and George Timblin, Jeremiah and Platt Sutton, John Shryock, and William and John Thompson. Joseph Sutton came in 1819, John Starr in 1821, Rev. John Coulter in 1823, and William T. Jamison in 1826. The grist mill built by Andrew Christy, in 1801, in Concord Township, was the third in the county, Neyman's mill, situated at the mouth of Bonny Brook, being the second.

The first schoolhouse, a mere shelter of logs, with a huge fireplace, was erected near Concord Church, and one of the early teachers was Dr. Steadman. A number of similar log structures were put up in various parts of the township, and subscription schools held during a few months of the year, but after the establishment of the public school system, in 1835, Concord Township showed an equal interest with her sister townships and made quite as much educational progress. There are now eight schools, with as many teachers and 262 pupils. The township high school is located at Middletown. H. A. Brown, Joseph Campbell, F. F. Bauer, A. R. McKinney and I. P. Murtland were school directors in 1908.

In 1799 came Rev. John McPherrin, a devout Presbyterian, from Westmoreland County, and after gathering a congregation that came from the different isolated sections, irrespective of former creeds, and gladly listened to his preaching of the Word, under a spreading tree, he was so impressed that he offered the name of Concord to the assemblage, and that name continues to the present day. In 1803 he returned, and in the autumn of 1804 he completed the organization of the Concord Presbyterian Church and was installed as pastor. The Covenant was the name of one of the early church bodies, now passed out of existence.

Zion Evangelical Lutheran Church was organized in 1858, when a church building was completed. It has now twenty-four members. Rev. Ibauch is pastor.

The Methodist Episcopal Church of Greece City was organized into a definite body in 1870, although prior to this meetings had been conducted at the Hazel Dell Schoolhouse, which were often largely attended by the transient oil men. The present edifice was built in 1883. The congregation is now very small.

The Springdale Evangelical Lutheran Church was organized in 1875, and in the year following the church building was dedicated. The congregation now numbers seventy members.

The Troutman M. E. Church, Rev. Lowthian, pastor, has a membership of seventy.

The villages which have been the centers of much of the business of the township, some of them entirely products of the oil industry, were: Middletown, Greece City, Modoc City and Troutman or Magic, the latter being the postal name of the old settlement.

Middletown was founded in 1846 and the early business men were Porter McConnell, Andrew Bullman, John McLaughlin, John G. Christy and Conway & Kuhn. There are now two general stores, one owned by H. Coon and the other by T. Z. Levy.

Greece City. From 1801, when Andrew Christy put up his mill, the present site of Greece City, for some seventy years was known as Christy's Mill, Harper's Mill and Jamison's Mill. When the place was opened for oil operations, the name of Greece City was adopted, and the population increased so rapidly that a petition to have the place made a borough was readily granted, in November, 1873. In the same year a postoffice was established and houses of all kinds went up with amazing rapidity. In December, 1872, the first bank was established, later Woods Bank and the Concord Savings Bank became factors, the National Transit Company did a large business, and during the period before the destructive fire of December, 1873, there was every evidence that the place would rival all others in Butler County. The days of '73 were also rendered lively by the faction fights between the rival tribes of oil men, on June 7th that year no less than 500 men participating in a great riot, which resulted in fourteen casualties. The place has lost most of its former importance. The pumping station of the Producers' Refining Company is located here, and there is one general store, conducted by N. B. Kregar. The place has the Speechly Telephone.

Modoc City has not entirely lost all its traces of its one-time position as an oil city, but here, too, fire, in 1874, destroyed $100,000 worth of property and brought many enterprises to an end.

Troutman at one time was filled with the paraphernalia of the oil industry, accompanied by the conditions that elsewhere prevailed. In April, 1877, it was practically destroyed during an electric storm, by the lightning striking a large oil tank. The place is now a station on the W. Allegheny Railway. There is one store, run by P. Stewart.

Old residents of Concord Township readily tell of the early events of the discovery of oil here and tell of the wonderful strike in the Fourth sand in August, 1872. Many notable wells were soon after developed, wealth came to many families from this unexpected source, and Concord Township numbers many men of large substance.

Township Officials.—M. Cocheran, justice of the peace; tax collector, P. Sutton; constable, R. Kinzer; tax assessor, M. Campbell; road commissioners, J. Campbell, T. Starr and L. Sutton; auditors, P. R. Wick, W. H. Coon and J. H. Christy; clerk, R. Adams.

MUDDY CREEK TOWNSHIP.

Muddy Creek Township, deriving its name from the body of water known as Muddy Creek, which forms its northern boundary and separates it from Worth Township, was reduced to its present area in 1854, although, when originally constituted as one of the thirteen townships in which Butler County was divided in 1804, it included the land now forming parts of three other townships—Franklin, Worth and Connoquenessing. This township shows a variety of soil and is the field of agricultural and mining activity. It has been found rich in coal, iron ore and limestone, and the development of these natural gifts of Nature have brought wealth to many families and have attracted a solid, industrious laboring class from other sections. The surface of the land is somewhat broken, the coal and limestone being in evidence, but the township can also show some of the best farming land in Butler County. The highest measured point is near Portersville, the height there being 1,375 feet above sea level.

Oil has been produced in Muddy Creek Township for a number of years; a new field was opened up during the past year and about eighteen or twenty wells put down. Almost the entire township is underlain with coal, there being a vein from three and a half to five feet in thickness. Its production at the present time, however, is not large enough to be of commercial importance. Farming is the principal occupation of the people. The township has good telephone service. There is one grist-mill, owned and operated by H. Bander & Son, which was erected about forty years ago.

No records of this section prior to 1794 have been discovered, and the first known resident was a negro named Caesar, who was found occupying a log cabin when Robert Stewart, the first white settler, appeared here in 1796. Mr. Stewart recognized the negro's priority and came to an amicable settlement with him, purchasing his land and later founding the village of Stewartville, which is now known as Portersville. It was a wild region in those days, and as Mr. Stewart desired companionship for his family, he deeded 100 acres of his land to Thomas Brandon as an inducement to him to bring his family and locate. Other very early settlers were Thomas Clark, James, Robert, Thomas and Rachel Cratty and Henry Shanor. The beginning of the new century brought David Kennedy, Arthur Cleland, James White and Marvin Christie, and soon after came John Myers, John Boston, Edward and James White, Thomas Christie, James English, John Wimer, Dr. John Cowden, Joseph Tebay, Johnson McKnight, Thomas Oliver, Thomas Garvey, Richard McKee, with others, and in 1831 came the McClymonds. Many of these pioneer families are still largely represented in the best citizenship of the township.

Muddy Creek Township, like other early sections, had to solve its public problems, and one of the earliest was the providing of adequate school facilities for the rapidly increasing population. Johnson McKnight probably taught the first school in 1821, on his own farm. In 1823 the Concord schoolhouse was built, about the same time one also was erected on the Christie farm, and other structures were put up by private parties prior to 1835, when the common school law went into effect and public schools were soon dotting the whole township. They were well attended, for the early settlers of this section were notably people of intelligence as well as thrift.

There are now seven schools in the township, including the high school in Portersville, which is a joint borough and township school. The total enrollment is 198 pupils. The present township school board consists of Addison McClymonds, president; Robert Kennedy, treasurer; Joseph Stickle, J. H. Pyle, Joshua Gallagher and Hosea Gallagher. The enrollment of pupils in Portersville borough is: Common school, 43; high school, 22. The high school serves both for the borough of Portersville and for Muddy Creek Township.

As indicated, the main industries of the township have been farming and mining, manufacturing being generally confined to the operating of grist- and saw-mills. The earliest record of a public grist-mill is in 1831, when David Kennedy built a grist-mill and a fulling-mill on Muddy Creek, this later being followed by a second mill, and in 1867 the third grist-mill in the township was erected by John and Henry Bauder. This lack of manufacturing interest does not reflect on the enterprise of the good people of Muddy Creek Township, but rather emphasizes their judgment, for just across the line the Slippery Rock mills supplied the entire needs of this section.

Portersville. The most important settlement in Muddy Creek Township is Portersville, which was made a postoffice in March, 1826, and was then renamed in honor of Governor Porter. The first postmaster, John Stewart, son of the founder of the town, held office until 1836. Although the whole neighborhood was a wild bit of forest when Robert Stewart settled here in 1796, by 1814 enterprising men began to look for sites, and in that year Thompson McCosh opened his cabinetmaking shop. Robert Craig was the first merchant who opened a stock of goods—in 1829; in 1831 John W. Riddle started a wagon and furniture factory, utilizing steam as power, this being a remarkable example of enterprise. In 1836 William Williams opened up his cabinet shop, and in 1845 James Newton and John Hall engaged in merchandising. The Oliver House was the first hotel, and after it was burned down in 1874, a more substantial structure was built in its place. In 1868 William Humphrey opened his general store, and for a long time was at the head of a large business. As time went on and population increased, almost every line of business was represented, and today it would be hard to find a busier or more prosperous town of its size in Butler County. The Portersville Creamery Company, proprietor, R. V. Thompson, is a large industry, and its products have a heavy sale.

Among other Portersville enterprises are numbered William Humphrey & Son and D. J. Brennerman, general stores; G. B. McDonald, hardware; M. C. Glenn, undertaker; S. Hay, druggist; W. H. Dunn, harness; H. Heberling, tin shop; J. S. Brennerman, feed store; E. R. Lubin, wagon maker; Beighley Hotel, proprietor, E. L. Beighley; Dr. E. U. Snyder, physician; Dr. J. L. Buchanan, dentist; besides which there are blacksmith shops, millinery stores, and barber shops. The present postmaster is Joseph Lehman.

Lodge No. 909, I. O. O. F., is located here and has fifty-three members—instituted in 1875. The lodge owns its own hall, which is a fine building.

Portersville was incorporated as a borough December 16, 1844. The first election took place January 6, 1845, when Dr. John Cowden was chosen first Burgess, with Joseph P. Work, John Cleeland, William McClelland, John A. White and Jesse Johnston as first board of councilmen. The borough officers at present are as follows: Council, John R. Humphrey, president and acting Burgess; G. W. Kinsey, I. L. Moore, John Weitzel, Jos. L. Buchanan and M. C. Glenn; school board, W. L. English, W. H. Heberling, M. C. Glenn, E. H. Laderer, William Humphrey, Harvey Marks; auditors, J. H. Marks and Robert Glenn; tax collector, H. W. Dunn; assess-sors, E. L. Beigley and J. R. Humphrey. The population of Portersville is now about three hundred.

Telephone service is furnished by the Portersville Telephone Company in connection with the Bell Long Distance 'phone. The local company was incorporated as a mutual company in 1904, with a capital of $12,000, and now has 322 subscribers. James McConnell is president and E. W. Humphrey treasurer and manager.

The founding of the early churches in a new section always contributes an interesting chapter to any history. The first Muddy Creek Township religious organization was the Presbyterian. As early as 1814 Rev. Reid Bracken, a pioneer evangelist, visited this neighborhood and held services in the cabinet shop of Thompson McCosh. The church organization was effected in October, 1820, and it was incorporated in April, 1844. The present edifice of the society is the third erected, and dates from 1840. The first was a log structure, which was followed by a frame building. The church now has about three hundred members. The present pastor, Rev. J. G. Timblin, has been pastor for eight years. The Sabbath school, of which E. H. Laderer is superintendent, numbers 150 members.

The United Presbyterian Church was organized in December, 1841, as an Associate Reformed Society, with Rev. William Douthett as first pastor. The society now numbers about sixty members but has no church building.

The Old Covenant Church had its beginning away back in 1833, and through various vicissitudes continued until 1890, when it disbanded as a separate body, its members transferring to the church of the same faith, at Rose Point, in Lawrence County.

The Civil War had many brave soldiers in the ranks from Muddy Creek Township. Many of these never returned to their old homes, their remains lying in far distant graves, but Watson Brothers Post, No. 478, at Portersville, has a goodly showing of veterans whose records reflect honor on their township. Roundhead Camp, Sons of Veterans, No. 84, which was instituted at Portersville in September, 1887, with James McComell as captain, is another patriotic organization well supported. The leading secret societies have found a footing in the township, and the Odd Fellows, in particular, are very strong. The first lodge of this order was organized June 30, 1875, with James Porter as Noble Grand.

Township Officials.—Justice of the peace, William C. Tebay; constable, Grant Jones; collector, William F. English; assessor, Austin McClymonds.

CRANBERRY TOWNSHIP.

Cranberry is situated in the southwest corner of the county, and is one of the thirteen townships into which the county was divided in 1804. The township is said to have derived its name from the fact that in the early days a cranberry swamp existed near its southern limits. Its surface is watered by the tributaries of Breakneck on the east, and Brush Creek on the west. The township is rich in coal and oil, but the principal business of the inhabitants for the first century of its existence was agriculture. The Freeport coal is found in the bed of Brush Creek near the northwestern corner of the township, and the vein at this point reaches the abnormal thickness of five feet. The Brush Creek coal and Bakerstown coal have been mined for many years for domestic use in the neighborhood. The Brush Creek oil field obtained prominence in 1896-7, and the principal fields in the limits of Cranberry Township are the Henderson, Garvin and Duncan. Drilling operations are still carried on in these districts, and some paying wells have been obtained in 1908.

The township was without railroad facilities of any kind until 1908, when the Pittsburg, Harmony & Butler Electric Railway was completed, and opened for traffic. This line enters the southern quarter of the township east of Brush Creek, and extends nearly the entire length of the township, leaving it at the northeast corner.

The first settlements of the township were made in the Brush Creek neighborhood as early as 1796. The pioneers that came that year were Benjamin Johnson and his family, Matthew Graham, William Graham, John Henry, Alexander Ramsey, Paul Vandivort and Samuel Duncan. The mother of the Graham brothers, then Mrs. Long, came in 1797, and Benjamin Davis and George Stoolfire arrived the same year.

David Garvin and family, and his son, Alexander and his family, arrived in the township in 1800, William Henry Goehring in 1801, James Cooper in 1807, and Jacob Stout and his father of Northumberland County in 1811.

Matthew Graham established the Black Bear Tavern on the Pittsburg and Mercer road in 1813. Previous to that time he carried on a house of entertainment, and was well known to the teamsters over the old trail that was used prior to the construction of the public road.

Samuel Duncan's saw-mill was probably the earliest industry of the township, and it was erected prior to 1803 on Brush Creek. He also ran a little distillery, which obtained a wide reputation for the quality of whiskey turned out.

The Brush Creek saw-mill was erected by Matthew Graham in 1831. In 1833 he built the first grist-mill on the creek, which was also the first in the township.

Plains Presbyterian Church dates back to 1805 or '6, the first minister of the denomination to visit the settlement being Rev. Reed Bracken, who was installed pastor in 1808. The first services were held in groves and in a tent, but some time between 1820 and 1824 a log building was erected on a lot donated by Benjamin Davis, on the site of the present church. After Rev. Bracken left in 1819 the church was for some time without a regular pastor, and after 1831 the visits of ministers became so rare that the old church may be said to have passed out of existence. In 1838 a union was effected with the Cross Roads Church in Allegheny County, the Rev. L. R. McAboy becoming pastor. At the same time a reorganization of the church took place. In 1839 a brick house was erected close beside the old log house. The society was incorporated November 16, 1849, the trustees being David Garvin, James W. Garvin and Jas. Sample. In 1866 the Plains Church was transferred from the Allegheny Presbytery, now Butler, to Allegheny City Presbytery. In January, 1878, services were authorized to be held in the Baptist Church at Evans City, and in February, 1883, thirty-nine members were dismissed from the old church to form the new one. The old church was torn down in May, 1878, and a new one dedicated November 3, 1879, by Rev. W. H. Jeffers. March 31, 1878, the statistical report of the congregation showed a membership of 231 communicants and 160 attendants at Sunday school. Since that time the membership has declined to about 150, on account of the heavy draft made on the old society by the organization of new societies at Evans City, Crest View and Mars. In 1908 the session was composed of O. P. Graham, Christian Hoehn and J. M. Covert, and the pastor was Rev. P. R. Harvey.

St. John's German United Evangelical Lutheran and Reformed Church, formerly known as St. Daniel's Church, was formally organized June 7, 1869, at a meeting of members which was presided over by Christopher Kirschler. John G. Hoffman acted as secretary and Andrew Kirschler treasurer. The three parties named were also the trustees of the society. Rev. C. A. D. Freseman of Mars is the present pastor.

Dutillh Church. There was no Methodist Society in Cranberry Township until 1879. Previous to that time the adherents of this faith residing in the township belonged to a class of Plains Church in Allegheny County. In 1879 the trustees of Plains Church, living principally in this township, concluded to build an edifice here. The church was built near what is now known as Crider's Corners on farm No. 91, belonging to Charles Dutillh, of Philadelphia, but who donated one and one-fourth acres of ground for church purposes. The building was completed and dedicated November 30, 1879. The church is attached to Salem in Allegheny County, and Mars in Adams Township, in a pastoral charge.

The Mount Pleasant United Presbyterian Society was originally a part of the Associate Reformed Presbyterian Church, and was organized under the ministry of Rev. T. C. Guthrie about 1847. From 1847 to 1850 services were held in the Fowler schoolhouse on Brush Creek, and in 1850 the first church edifice was erected on an acre lot donated for that purpose by Joshua Stoolfire. The location of the church is just outside the limits of the township, in Allegheny County, but a large proportion of the membership are residents of Cranberry Township. This congregation was originally connected with Union Church in the northern part of Adams Township, and in 1850 presented the united call to Rev. Andrew Walker, the first pastor. He resigned this charge in 1853, and in 1854 the union between Mt. Pleasant and Union congregations was dissolved. When the United Presbyterian Church was organized in 1858, Mt. Pleasant came into the new society, and since that time has been known as Mt. Pleasant United Presbyterian Church. Rev. J. M. Dight, the present pastor, was called in 1880. The present house of worship was built in 1860 on the site of the former one. The membership of the congregation in 1908 was eighty-five.

The early schools of the township were conducted on the subscription plan, and among the first teachers were Job Staples, Andrew Dodds and Rev. Reed Bracken. One of the first conventions or teachers' institutes was held at Plains Church on the 25th of February, 1852, and on the following day a similar convention was held at Union Church, Evans City. In 1908 the number of children of school age in the township was 197, and the number of schools six, with six teachers.

The population of the township at the first census, taken in 1810, was 543. This had increased to 2,236 in 1850, but redivision of the county into the present townships reduced the population of Cranberry to 931 in 1860. In 1900 the population was 981, and in 1908 the estimated population was 1,065.

The township officers in 1908 were: Constable, Nicoll Allen; auditors, W. W. Vandivort, Samuel Leonburg, Henry Reef-er; road supervisor, A. J. West; township clerk, Jacob Dmubach; assessor, J. M. Covert; tax collector, A. Kirschler.

There are no towns or villages of importance in the township. For many years Ogle was the local postoffice, situated on the old Mercer and Pittsburg road, but after the establishing of the rural free delivery in 1903 the office was discontinued. For some years after this office was established Thomas Robinson was the postmaster, and had the office at his home. A store at this point has been conducted by William Garvin, J. A. Boggs, John Frantz, H. M. Johnson, and at the present time William Garvin is conducting the business.

Hendersonville was a thriving hamlet as early as 1830, when Robert McKee kept a tavern at that point, and also manufactured wagons and farm implements. The first postoffice of the township was established at Hendersonville, but was superseded by Mars after the construction of the railroad to that point in 1880. The Hendersonville oil field brought in a number of new residents in the latter part of the nineties, but these have moved away, and in 1908 there was nothing left but the residence and office formerly occupied by Dr. Elder Crawford.

Crider's Corners is one of the old settlements of the township and has come into prominence within the past two years. The location is now a station on the Pittsburg, Harmony & Butler Electric Railway, and besides several dwelling houses there is a general store, conducted by Henry Needer.

A. G. Hendrickson's store on the Evans City road is a new business enterprise that has been in existence but a short time.

Rowan Station was established in 1908 on the line of the new electric railway, and gives promise of being a lively hamlet in the near future.

SOCIETIES.

The Brush Creek Protective Association was organized in 1878 with fifty-eight members. The total risks of the company in 1908 were about $100,000, distributed in Butler, Allegheny and Beaver Counties.

Cranberry Grange Number 908, Patrons of Husbandry, was organized in January, 1890, with eight members. The Grange Hall is located on the Leise farm near Plains Church.

The Farmers' Alliance had a membership in this township in 1895, but the organization has since disbanded.

WASHINGTON TOWNSHIP.

Washington Township, with its valuable coal veins, its undiminished oil reservoirs and its fertile agricultural valleys, has offered many inducements to home seekers and the investment of capital, from the date of its creation in 1846, when it was given its name in honor of President Washington, Father of his Country. It is situated west of Parker and south of Venango, and assumed its present area in 1854. The coal veins, practically underlying the whole township, and including the finest cannel, Clarion and Kittanning, through their development have made this one of the richest sections of the county. There is some oil in the southern part of the township, and enough gas for local consumption. There are also limestone deposits in the northwestern part of the township, which have not yet been opened up. The Bessemer Branch Railway communicates with the northern part of the township, with forks to Hilliards and Argentine.

As early as 1796 one George Meals settled and cleared a tract of land lying on the north line of what is now Concord Township, and he is recognized as the pioneer settler, but in the same year came also John and Jacob Mechling, Samuel Campbell and William Bell. In 1797 the parents and other members of the family joined George Meals, journeying from York County, where their German ancestors had settled. In 1897-8 came John Christy, from Westmoreland County, who later was one of the first justices of the peace in the settlement; James Gibson with wife and nine children; John Shira and Robert and John Hindman. A number of these early settlers later served in the War of 1812 and very many of them have descendants in Washington Township who still own portions of the original farms. Another early settler was James Mahood, from Ireland, and his descendants own a portion of his early purchase of 500 acres, southwest of North Washington. In 1802 came Jacob Hilliard and sons and in the same year came many of the pioneer families that had settled still earlier in adjacent townships.

The first general election held in Washington Township was in March, 1846. Subscription schools were the first efforts in the direction of general education and to John Christy belongs the credit of being the first teacher in the township. Washington Township now supports as good schools as can be found in any part of the county, there being nine schools, with 358 scholars.

The North Washington Institute, situated at North Washington, is an educational institution of a superior class. This school was organized in 1879 and R. B. Gilfillan was the first principal. Its aim is to give sound and thorough instruction in the liberal arts: The first school building was erected in 1878, thoroughly remodeled in 1893 and still further enlarged and better equipped in later years. A collegiate course is offered students, and a faculty of trained educators maintain a very high standard.

The leading points of population in Washington Township are North Washington, Hilliards, Annisville, or Shira, and other villages, some of the latter having had rapid growth around mines and in the oil fields.

North Washington, North Hope Post-office (present population 200), was platted in 1834, the first house, a tavern, having been built here prior to 1830, by Samuel Bell, which was known as Summit Tavern. In 1830 John Jack put up a brick house and the town grew around it. Among early business men were Thomas Parker, Christopher L. Henlen, H. P. McClymonds, Dr. David C. Fowler, Thomas Russell, Samuel Jack, W. Parks, John Diamond and Shyroek Harper.

At the present time Mifflin & Mifflin conduct a general store here, I. N. Thompson deals in drugs and groceries, and H. Stewart in hardware. McGarvey's livery and the Hayes Hotel are the other leading business concerns. There is a township high school here with an enrollment of forty-nine pupils. Mrs. E. Campbell is postmistress. The churches are the Methodist Episcopal, Rev. Walker, with a membership of seventy-five, and the Unite Presbyterian, Rev. McNiece, with a membership of sixty-five.

Hilliards, formerly Hilliard Station or Hilliard's Mills, can lay claim to being one of the first settlements in Washington Township. Jacob Hilliard settled on a stream known as Hilliard's Run in 1802, and his son, John Hilliard, built there a grist-mill, which was conducted for many years, and until within a short period remains of the old dam remained. The grading of a railroad line to this point gave an impetus to what had been even less than a hamlet up to 1874, and two years later a passenger train brought investors into the valley, and in a remarkably short time a hotel and railroad depot were built. In 1879 the Cleveland Pipe Line Company established a pumping station at this point, and in 1883 the Allegheny Coal Company began to develop the rich coal deposits here. These enterprises brought others, a planing and saw-mill were soon built, and the sand mills of the Standard Plate Glass Company of Butler here found location. The population is now about 250 people. The leading business concerns are the Central and Galloway Hotels, Jones Bros.' livery, Miller & Racusen, William Boyle, Mrs. T. Altmyre, and R. B. Weakley & Co., general stores, and McKee & Co., hardware. Miss W. E. Turk is postmistress. The Speechley telephone is installed and there are express and telegraph offices. The Methodist Episcopal Church, pastor, Rev. William Walker, has a membership of fifty. The Knights of Pythias and the Odd Fellows are represented by lodges.

Annisville was surveyed for Charles Hilliard in 1838, and among the old families who owned property and carried on business here may be named the Coverts, and Mahoods, and Samuel Hilliard, with the Millers, the Millisons, the Henrys, the Mays, the Scotts, the Shannons and the Marshalls. The population is now about forty-five. There are two stores, kept by P. E. Cook and M. Lewis.

Argentine is a mining settlement of about 200 people, mostly foreigners, employed in the coal mines. There are several stores here.

Higgins Corners perpetuates the name of James Higgins, who was the pioneer of Three Points. Other small settlements are Parsonsville and Whiskersville, the latter consisting of about 100 people, with two stores, kept by E. C. Thompson and Harry Hoves, and a United Brethren Church with seventy members.

In naming the religious bodies that have been organized in Washington Township during its existence of more than sixty years mention must be made of the following: First Presbyterian Church, Mt. Varnum United Presbyterian Church with a present membership of forty, North Washington Presbyterian Church, the New Salem Presbyterian Church, the North Hope Methodist Episcopal Church, the North Washington Lutheran Church and the Church of God, indicating a strong religious sentiment in the township.

The First Presbyterian Church, organized in 1817, was more or less absorbed by the Mt. Varnum United Presbyterian Church in 1835, when Rev. Joseph Johnston was instrumental in forming the Associate Reformed Society, having previously presided over the Bear Creek and Washington and West Unity Presbyterian Churches. The membership is large and the church edifice adequate to the needs of the body.

The North Washington Presbyterian Church was organized in May, 1880, and in the following year a fine church building was completed, Andrew Jack having donated two lots to the organization. It represents a large body of Presbyterians in this section.

The New Salem Presbyterian Church of Annisville was another of the early churches of this faith which came about as the result of Christian zeal, holding its first services in a barn in 1847. It still ministers to the religious life in that section, and has a membership of about fifty-five. Rev. M. Niece is pastor.

The North Hope Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in 1842 by Rev. I. Mershon. In 1842 a substantial building was put up, which, through the generosity of the large church membership, was later remodeled and modernized and today the society has a fine structure.

The North Washington Lutheran Church was organized in 1845, under Rev. Elihu Rathburn, who served as pastor until 1847. The society was originally a German Reformed congregation and at first had no building of its own, but in 1847 built a church, and in 1891 erected the present imposing structure.

The people of Washington Township have been identified with a number of the leading fraternal and secret organizations and have been active in promoting the objects for which each body stands. Among these may be mentioned North Hope Grange, probably the oldest, which was organized in 1872; and different lodges of the Odd Fellows, the I. O. G. T., the K. O. T. M., and the O. U. A. M.

Among the prominent business enterprises of the township are the Nellie Coal Company; the Lochrie Bros. Coal Company (T. Lochrie, superintendent), which is closed at the present time (February 1, 1909); the Standard Coal Company; the Mutual Coal Company, and the Ferris Coal Company, J. Deal, manager, located in Ferris, which employs about seventy-five men. This last mentioned plant is closed at present. The Excelsior Mutual Fire Insurance Company, chartered in 1878, in 1908 carried about $1,000,000 in policies.

Township Officials.—Justices of the peace, P. Groom and P. Hilliard; tax collector and assessor, B. Arner; constable, T. Bell; road commissioners, L. B. McFarland, N. Glenn, I. N. Thompson; auditors, R. O. Lewis, J. H. Glenn and William Witherup; clerk, H. Stewart.

OAKLAND TOWNSHIP.

Oakland Township was established under its present name and within its present boundaries in 1854. It was probably settled about the same time as was Butler and Donegal Townships, it forming a part of these until the year above mentioned. The O'Donnells, of Donegal, Ireland; and the Whitmires, of Berks County, Penna., both came to this section in 1798, and other pioneers of near the same period were Thomas Dugan and wife and John Green and John Lowe.

Before the county was organized land was owned here by Samuel Hamilton and John Robb, and in 1810 Robert Riddle sold 260 acres with a cabin to William Robb, indicating that he had located here very early. Others were John Moser, who, after his service in the Revolutionary War, came here with his son to found a home, and others who had been connected with military life were William, George and Alexander Hutchison. During the War of 1812 John Neyman brought his family from Westmoreland County, and he and his brother William became active and useful men in the settlement, erecting mills and engaging in manufacturing. In 1814 James Douglas built his cabin, Robert Hamilton in 1818, Henry Hoon about the same time, Daniel McElwee in 1822, the Pattons in 1829 and 1839, the Stroups in 1834, the Eyths in 1839, and many others whose names are closely connected with all that has gone to the improving and developing of this part of Butler County.

The occupations of the people of Oakland Township have been largely of an agricultural nature. Not being so rich in either oil or coal as many of its sister townships, it has experienced less of the excitements and advantages and disadvantages of sudden wealth and as sudden poverty which marked many sections from 1870 for a decade later. Perhaps this fact has had an influence in making the people of this district notably industrious, home-loving and church supporting—the very best class of citizens.

There are a number of coal banks being operated for local consumption—all small—operated respectively by S. W. Whitmire, F. E. Thornbury, C. E. Conway, and one owned by the Wilson heirs and operated by E. Friend. There is some oil produced, the Whitmire wells probably being the largest. Drilling is still carried on and oil is found in both the 100-foot and fourth sand. Pumping has been carried on at some of the wells for twenty years. There is also a gas well that has been producing for twenty years.

The Baltimore and Ohio, running through the southeastern part of the township, is the only railway, and St. Joe the only station.

The people of the township have liberally supported their schools, the first of which there is any record having been established as early as 1817. It was taught by John Thompson in what had been the log cabin home of James Douglas. As there were many Catholics in the settlements, a Catholic teacher conducted a school for some time in their interest, but later, as the public schools were entirely unsectarian, general attendance was given them all over the township. At the present there are six schools in the township, with an enrollment of 295 scholars. The directors are W. B. Davis, C. W. Hoon, S. W. Whitmire, Joseph Lane, M. J. McGinley and Frank Smith.

St. Joseph's Catholic Church (German) probably dates farther back than any other religious organization in the township; surely as far as 1847, when its first building was erected, and almost certainly thirty years before that as a mission. Prior to 1877 the same priests officiated for what is now called St. Joseph's English Catholic Church, its history up to that time being identical with the German church. Both bodies have a large membership and substantial church structures. St. Wendelin

Catholic Church, which stands on the line of Summit Township, was founded also in 1847, and has a large congregation.

North Butler Presbyterian Church was organized in January, 1848, and before a proper place of public worship was provided the little body met in the Hutchison home. In 1849 the first church building was completed, and the one at present occupied is the third one erected. The Bewlah Baptist Church was organized in March, 1861. The congregation is now small.

There are two dams located in the township—the Boydstown dam and Thorn Run dam—both owned by the Butler Water Company, and from them Butler receives its water supply. The water runs by gravity to the pumping station, located just out of Butler, and from there is pumped to a reservoir above the station. The Boydstown dam covers about forty-five acres and holds about 90,000,000 gallons. It is located on the Connoquenessing Creek. The Thorn Run dam is located on a tributary of the Connoquenessing and covers about 100 acres and holds over 200,000,000 gallons of water.

The villages of Oakland Township have borne respectively the following names: Springfield, North Oakland, Woodbine, Boydstown, St. Joe Station (on the B. & O. R. R.), and Oncida. Inducements were offered settlers in 1830 to locate near the Donegal Township line, at Springfield, it being represented that stone, coal, limestone and fire-clay there abounded in sufficient quantities to make it an active business center. The locality never developed, however, to any great extent. North Oakland, after 1847, became a great Catholic center, St. Joseph's Church being built there, and the new church of that body, a fine structure costing a very large amount, was completed in 1873. The place now has one general store, kept by George Ball. For a short time in 1873 a well on the Martin farm, south of Boydstown, produced oil, in such abundance that this hamlet began to assume the features of an oil town, but a failing in the supply led to the abandonment of many enterprises and the place no longer is of much importance. It has a general store, operated by S. B. Badger.

The secret societies have never made great headway in Oakland Township. The K. O. T. M. was chartered March 16, 1888, and other bodies, mainly beneficiary in their nature, exist.

Township Officials.—Justices of the peace, P. Higgins; tax collector, J. F. P. McGinley; constable, P. Weiland; tax assessor, E. Davis; road commissioners, T. I. Whitmire, C. Hoon and C. Conway; auditors, C. Conway, W. J. Beatty and E. Davis; clerk, R. E. Robb.

LANCASTER TOWNSHIP.

Lancaster Township, which is situated directly west of Conoquenessing Township, was formed from the latter when it was organized in 1854. Although, on account of its somewhat rugged surface, it did not offer so many apparent advantages to early settlers as did some of the sister townships, there were many pioneers who found in its hills, valleys and streams full of fish, just the surroundings which they desired. Prior to 1796, when the Beighleys came, a lone hunter and trapper had lived in this section, but so little impress did he leave that only the bare knowledge of his name, Eli Scholar, remains, there being no record of whence he came nor whither he went.

In 1796 Henry, John, George and Peter Beighley came to what is now Lancaster Township, penetrating into what was then a dense wilderness. The first cabin erected by Henry Beighley was torn down by marauding Indians in his absence. In 1801 came William Martin and family, from Ireland, and in the same year came the noted hunter, Samuel Stewart, shortly followed by Mrs. Anne and William Freeman. John and William Morrison came as early as 1801, and between 1803 and 1814 the township gained such settlers as Henry Baumgartner, Joseph and John Neely, John Ruby, Abraham Moyer, Thomas Ruby, Jacob Neely, Peter Neely, John Boyer and William Bellis. Different localities were selected and for a number of years pioneer conditions existed, on account of the people being widely separated. In 1815 the Harmonists, or Economists, who had established the village of Oilbronn, two miles north of Harmony, in 1808, sold their property to Abraham Ziegler, and this had much effect on the final settlement of the township. Prior to the thirties, the important families who became established here were those of Henry Rice and George Kneiss, of Harmony; Samuel Moyer, of Northumberland County; David Stauffer, in 1819, from Westmoreland County; Daniel Ramsey, from Cranberry Township; John Scott, of Lawrence County; Lewis Teats, John Lutz, John Myers, Hosea King and John Shaffer, followed in 1823 by the Matthews and Schoener families, and in the following decade came the Flinners and the Schiedemantles.

The character of the early settlers in Lancaster Township is shown in the fact that all early records tell of the faithful ministrations of the pioneer preachers and the hearty welcome accorded them by the people. Scarcely had the earliest settlers provided a roof for their families when they joined together as a religious body and St. John's Evangelical Lutheran Church in its inception dates that far back in the past. As may be supposed, the earliest preaching was heard in the home of a Beighley, and interest was so aroused that in 1818 a log house was erected for church and school purposes, and a first communion service was celebrated in it in December, 1822, when thirty-two confirmations took place and the membership of the church became seventy-four. The history of Lutheranism in Butler County, its spread and preservation, is one of much interest, and the Lutherans of Lancaster Township were among the leading members of the faith.

About 1840 the Zion German Lutheran Church was organized as a German society and since 1892 this organization has been entirely German. The congregation now numbers 100 communicants. Rev. F. H. Myer is the present pastor.

The English Lutheran Church was organized in the early days and was carried on in connection with the German branch until 1892, since when it has been separate. It has a membership of 130. Pastor, C. L. V. Dozer.

The Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in 1841, by John Seachrist, but later it was discontinued.

St. Peter's Reformed Church, situated in Middle Lancaster, was organized in 1856. In 1863 the society took possession of a fine brick church building and in 1878 the society was incorporated. The first pastor was Rev. H. F. Hartman.

The Stone Church of Lancaster Township has for present pastor the Rev. C. L. V. Dozer.

Prior to 1820 a school was established near the western line of the township and the first teacher was Samuel Pollock. In 1818 a log cabin was erected west of Whitestown and was utilized for church and school purposes, and other school buildings soon followed. The township now has seven good schools, with a total enrollment of 151 scholars. The school board is composed of the following members: Phillip Kock, president, J. C. Bellas, secretary; J. F. Warner, Geo. A. Beiber, Jesse Rice and Frank Bremer.

Middle Lancaster, the leading town of Lancaster Township, has been a post-office since 1847, and when it was established, William Beighley, Sr., was made postmaster. The pioneer settlers at Middle Lancaster were John and Elizabeth (Bammgartner) Ruby, and together they first cleared a site from the forest and erected a log cabin, this being probably about 1820. This property passed into the hands of Lewis Teats, who subsequently sold to Thomas B. Baldwin, a negro, and possibly for some time this fact prevented the investing of capital by the white residents. William Beighley, however, appears to have been a man of broadened views and after he built a house others followed, Jacob Christophel opening first a tavern and later a grocery store. Two years later, in 1846, Andrew Met opened up a store south of the hamlet, but in 1847 moved into Middle Lancaster. Even at that time the village had made but slow progress, but, as time went on, people with capital found this a remunerative field for mercantile effort and at the present date of writing almost every trade and industry is represented and well supported. The people are quiet and law abiding, and while there may not be as much enterprise displayed here as at neighboring and larger towns, there is little poverty and the town lockup is seldom in requisition.

The first township justice of the peace was Abraham Moyer, who served from 1854 to 1866. J. P. Gettman is the present justice. The other township officers are: Constable—Irvine Eppinger; tax collector—John H. Bremer; assessor—William Druschel; auditors—Julius Miller, Jacob Kradle, and C. W. Scheel; supervisors—Philip Koch, S. R. Moyer, and J. P. Gettman.

Lancaster Township has one general store, which has been conducted for the last thirty-two years by A. E. Metz & Son, and which has been located where it now stands for about sixty-three years. Previous to that time the father of the present proprietor conducted a mercantile business in a building which is still standing near Middle Lancaster. Mrs. A. E. Metz is still living, being now ninety-one years of age.

Oil and gas are produced to some extent in the township, several new wells having been put down recently. The inhabitants are, however, chiefly engaged in agricultural pursuits.

There are said to be good coal veins located about eighty feet beneath the surface and a few surface banks are worked for local consumption, but at present coal is not mined in commercial quantities.

DONEGAL TOWNSHIP.

Donegal Township, in the county organization of 1804, was formed from Butler Township, but changes in its territory were made in the general re-subdivision of 1854, when its present limits were defined. In its early days of settlement and all through the pioneer period, Donegal was cited as the finest agricultural region of Butler County. The great discoveries that later made her a famous oil and gas field, were not made for many years afterward. With the exception of the valley of the Big Buffalo and its feeders, its conformation belongs to that known as the Lower Barren Measures. Coal, also kaolin and other commercial clays, were early known to exist, but it was in farming and stockraising that the pioneer settlers prospered and flourished.

Oil has been produced in Donegal Township in the past in large quantities, chiefly from the third sand and the 100-foot, with some from the fourth sand. Drilling is still going on and results in small producers. A number of good gas wells are in operation, which suffice to meet the local demand; also the Philadelphia Gas Company and other smaller companies have pipe lines to various cities in the State.

The whole township is practically underlaid with two good veins of coal and small banks are in operation to supply local consumption. There is also a large amount of limestone in the township, which, however, is undeveloped on account of the lack of transportation facilities. The B. & O. is the only railroad and runs through the northwestern part of the township.

The first settler credited to Donegal Township, was James Hemphill, who came in 1794 and selected the present site of Chicora, or Millerstown. In 1795 the elder Jacob Barnhart settled three miles eastward and in 1797 his two sons also located. Among those who soon followed were Adam Hemphill, John Forquer, Patrick McElroy, Charles Duffy, John Gillespie, Moses Hanlen and John Slater. Others who deserve pioneer honors were the Dugans, McCues, O'Donnells, Boyles, McFadens, Blacks, Haggertys, Stewarts, Maloneys, McClungs, Breadens and Hunters, the majority being from County Donegal, Ireland; and the Barnharts, Wolfords, Pontines, Slaters, Sandersons and Hartmans. Not only were these early settlers, but in everything pertaining to the civilization and improvement of the section, they seem to have accepted all the responsibilities. They subdued the wilderness, built comfortable cabins, established mills and made roads and there is every evidence to show that they early concerned themselves about the educating of their children and supplying them with religious influences.

Among the earliest industries started in the township was a distillery built by James Hemphill prior to 1803, the Lasher grist-mill, in 1805, and the pottery of Gabriel Pontius, where manufacturing was carried on for some time. Owners of land were usually also the builders of the mills.

Chicora. Prior to the discovery of oil in Donegal Township, life, as indicated above, was followed along agricultural lines, many of the farms carrying on milling, blacksmithing and other industries for themselves. Here and there little hamlets grew, generally around a mill or general store, but the only one of real importance was Millerstown, now known as Chicora. The former name was given it on account of the building of the Abraham Lasher mill at this point, and this place became the chosen home of the Hemphills and the Barnharts—its real founders. The situation is on the Pittsburg and Narrow Gauge Railroad, near the northern boundary line of Donegal Township. On the heights above the town there are fine water supplies, coal in the vicinity is plentiful and the natural advantages of the place were early seized upon by those who had capital to engage in business.

The milling and lumbering industries were the first important ones. In 1849 Martin Hoeh and Martin Reiber established a distillery. The purchaser of the first town lot was John F. Wiles and he inaugurated its mercantile life. In 1843 Andrew Barnhart opened a bakery and afterwards came men representative of other lines, but prior to 1873 no exceptional growth had been made in population. Then came the discovery of oil, in the Shreve well, on the Stewart farm and the Lambing well on the Barnhart farm. The story of this interesting period may be found in the chapter on gas and oil. In 1874 the first newspaper was launched, the Sand Pump, and in the following year followed the Review and in 1876, the Herald. In 1877 the latter journal was purchased by Peter A. Rattigan and a number of Chicora's citizens were later connected with that journal.

The first physician was Dr. Marks, who was immediately succeeded by Drs. McLaughlin and Geddes. The first druggists were Samuel McBride, Harry Sanderson, Aldinger & Bole and Dr. Beatty. An opera house was built, city ways were introduced and, as in all oil towns, through the period of the excitement, money was lavishly squandered.

Following the discovery of oil a large number of hotels were built; some of these are still standing, while others were destroyed by the fires which have several times visited the place.

In 1882 the Millerstown Oil Exchange was organized, which occasionally influenced the oil market of the world. The United Pipe Lines' Station was established in 1873. The Millerstown Savings Bank Association was organized in 1873, and in 1875 was reorganized as the German National Bank. The institution went into voluntary bankruptcy and was succeeded by the Millerstown Deposit Bank, organized through the efforts of John D. and H. J. Myers. This Bank is still doing business and is in a prosperous condition. The Butler County Bank, organized in 1883, continued in business until 1892. The National Building, Loan and Protective Association was organized in 1890, and the Life Protective Savings and Loan Association was organized in 1894. The Citizens Light and Fuel Company, which operates many miles both in and outside the borough, was organized in October, 1887. The Chestnut Hill Stock Farm, one of the township's interesting show places, now occupies what was formerly the fair grounds. The farm was established in 1890 by the Tittle Brothers, and here may be seen some famous stallions, mares and colts and herds of registered Jersey cattle.

Millerstown was incorporated as a borough in 1855, the post-office being Barnhart's Mills. Prior to this a log cabin had been built—sometime in the forties—to accommodate the children, but afterward constant agitation on the subject resulted in the erection of the present fine school building.

The church organizations of the borough are: The First Evangelical Lutheran, organized in 1849; St. Paul's German Evangelical Lutheran, in 1849; St. John's German Reformed, in 1870; the Methodist Episcopal, 1874; and Mater Dolorosa Catholic Church, in 1873. The churches outside the borough enumeration include Demison M. E. Chapel, and old St. Patrick's, (Catholic) founded in 1806, by Rev. Father Whelan, to which so many of the old families of Donegal Township gave allegiance. Much local church history has been written of this oldest of all church organizations in Butler County. Almost all these church buildings have cemeteries attached and there are, also, some private burying lots, and in all these sacred spots lie the remains of those to whom the present generation owes more or less of a debt.

Since 1895 Chicora, or Millerstown, has been the only borough in the township, and has about held its own in population, which now numbers 1050. In its palmy days as an oil centre, however, it had a population of 7500. The principal business firms at the present time are Hoch Bros., E. F. Hays & Sons and C. H. Johnson, hardware and oil well supplies; Westerman Bros., general store; F. Scharbach, jewelry; H. Stahl, tailor and glove manufacturer; Purkerick & Frederick and Tadder & Aldinger Bowers, machine and repair shop; Frederick & Shultz, planing-mill; Chicora Tile & Clay Co.; Chicora Whip Co.; Chicora Coal and Coke Co.; Prospect Oil and Gas Co.; J. C. Wiles, Vensel & Son, and T. Reddick, livery; C. E. Uber, and Charles Fetzer, gents furnishings; R. Gaisford and De Wolf Bros., drugs; W. W. Campbell, E. C. Dunlap and Geo. Glass, groceries; Mrs. C. Teske and E. Frank, notions; Central House, A. A. Hoch, proprietor; Foryner House, B. J. Foryner, proprietor, and Lackey Hotel, W. E. Lackey, proprietor.

Chicora has a good water system which is furnished by drilled wells north of the town. The lighting is done by the Prospect Oil and Gas Company. The Chicora Volunteer Hose Company furnishes good protection against fire. There are two reservoir tanks north of the town which are kept always filled and they are supplemented by a force-pump at the planing mill, which is kept always ready for action. There are twenty-four men in the fire company, of which W. E. Lackey is chief. This company took the first prize at Butler and East Brady as the best equipped volunteer department in this section of the country. The present postmaster of Chicora is Lott L. Leech. The U. S. Express Company has an office here and the Peoples Telephone is installed. The town is on the B. & O. Railroad.

The Prospect Oil and Gas Company of Chicora was originally known as the Citizens Light and Fuel Company of Millerstown, which received its charter in 1887. In 1897 a new charter was taken out under the present style. The company operates its lines through western Pennsylvania. Its officers are A. Fleeger, president; A. A. Houk, secretary; H. J. Myers, treasurer, and M. G. Houk, general manager.

The Chicora Whip Company, Limited, was established in 1900, and now employs about forty-five hands, about one-third of them being girls. They have a capacity of three hundred whips a day, and it is the largest concern of the kind in the State.

Chicora Officials: Justices of the peace—M. L. Leonard and G. W. Huselton; constable—Geo. Garver; tax assessor—P. G. Frederick; road commissioner—F. Damm; auditors—P. Doty and H. Walford; clerk—C. F. Aldinger; burgess—R. Houk.

St. Joe, Plummer, Danville, Greer (or North Oakland), and Rattigan, have all been villages within the limits of Donegal Township, which were more or less developed on account of the oil fields, and of these St. Joe, Greer and Rattigan are post-offices. St. Joe has the Peoples' phone and a general store kept by Mr. Graham. There is a store at Rattigan kept by Mr. Porterfield.

The fraternal and other societies represented in Chicora are the Masons, the Knights of Pythias, the Odd Fellows, the Maccabees, the Woodmen of the World, Modern Woodmen, the Home Circle, and the Grand Army of the Republic.

Donegal Township now has eight schools with an enrollment of 290 pupils. There is also one school in Chicora with 286 pupils, and the educational interests of the township are well cared for. The present school directors are John F. Rodgers, S. F. Schultz, W. C. Pontius, John F. Black, John Oesterling and Peter Landgraaf.

Township Officials: Justices of the peace—S. Pontious and J. J. Kaylor; tax collector—H. Graham; constable—J. B. Rumbough; tax assessor—J. Johnson; road commissioners—H. Graham, J. Wohl, and S. Pontious; auditors—C. H. McGuire, H. G. Frederick and J. Richards; clerk—A. Snyder.

BUTLER TOWNSHIP.

Butler Township was one of the original thirteen townships organized in 1804 and occupied an area of about eight miles square. Subsequently divided into North Butler and South Butler. It thus remained until 1854, when the township was established within the present limits, embracing about five miles square. Its surface is diversified and it is drained chiefly by Connoquenessing Creek, which enters the territory at the northeastern corner and flows in a southwesterly direction through the southern half of the township. The general surface of the township is hilly and the soil varies from a stiff clay to a light sand. A fair proportion of the land is tillable and highly productive wherever it is cultivated. The Upper Freeport Coal underlies most of the hills, and has been mined from an early day.

The early settlers of the township were immigrants from Westmoreland County and other eastern counties, and were the descendants of the Scotch-Irish. Many of them had seen service in the War of the Revolution, and others were the sons of Revolutionary soldiers. The Germans and some French came into the township about 1820 and later and settled in the southern and western parts.

The first actual settler in the township was probably William Kearns, who came here from Westmoreland County in 1795 and took up a large tract. His sister, Jane, who married John Potts, came with him and selected one hundred acres in her own name. The first graveyard in the township was located on the land taken up by Jane Kearns, and became the resting place of many of the old pioneers.

James McKee came to the western part of the township in the spring of 1795, his father Thomas McKee, coming with the rest of the family a year later. James was sheriff of the county in 1818 and representative in the legislature in 1828. Another son of Thomas McKee, named Robert, settled in Hendersonville in Cranberry Township, while a third son, Hugh, was one of the pioneer manufacturers of Butler borough.

John Pierce, a Revolutionary soldier, came here from Westmoreland County in 1796, and settled on a tract of land west of the Standard Steel Car Works, where he built a cabin.

John McQuiston, who was a native of Ireland, came in 1796. He purchased land now occupied by the County Home and erected a large tannery. He also built the first stone house in the county. He took a prominent part in public affairs.

James and Andrew Moore located west of Butler about 1797. Robert Graham, a native of Dauphin County, came in the same year and purchased one hundred acres of land in what is now Butler borough. In 1803 he sold it to the trustees of Butler County, who laid out a portion of the town of Butler thereon.

William Wilson and John Morrow came here in 1797 or 1798 and located in the western part of the township. Wilson afterwards removed to Indiana.

Peter Peterson, a Revolutionary soldier, who was also a survivor of "Braddock's Defeat," came to Butler County about 1798. His daughter Jane married David Pierce, and became the progenitor of one branch of the Pierce family in Butler County.

John Burkhart, who was a noted hunter, came from Allegheny County in 1800 and settled in the southeast section of the township.

Robert Maxwell and his son, Abraham, came here from Maryland in 1800 and settled on the tract of land just west of the Standard Steel Car Plant. The story of the shooting of Maxwell is given in an earlier chapter of this volume.

Abram Fryer came into the western part of the township in 1801. The same year John Bailes, known as "Little John" to distinguish him from the John Bailes of Connoquenessing Township, settled on a tract adjoining Fryer.

Lawrence King settled four miles west of Butler in 1801. Alexander Bryson settled in the northwestern corner of the township about 1800, and about 1820 he removed to Ohio, where he died.

Paul Bratton, who was a hatter by trade, came to the township about 1800 and settled on a tract of four hundred acres of land south of Butler. His marriage to Hannah Pierce was the first solemnized in the township.

Colonel Robert Lemmon, a native of Ireland, came to the county in 1796 and located in the village of Butler soon after it was laid out. He served in the War of 1812 as a sergeant and after its close he settled on a farm southwest of Butler, which afterwards became the home of his son Andrew, who died in 1908. A number of settlers came in 1805.

Leslie Maxwell located in the northwestern section of the township in 1815, married the daughter of Alexander Hamilton, the pioneer, and died on the homestead about 1860.

Among the German settlers were Jacob and Henry Dufford, who came in 1817, Henry Young from Luzerne County in 1824, Joseph Bernhart Sliker, from Baltimore in 1830, and Francis Criley from Germany, in 1831. Other arrivals about this time were David McElwain, who settled in 1835, and the Cummings, Mechlings, Negleys, and Brinkers.

Among the early enterprises of the township, in addition to the tannery and Paul Bratton's hat factory, was a distillery run by John Cratty and a saw-mill operated by William Freeman, while Moses Sullivan had two saw-mills erected on Sullivan Run, a short distance northwest of Butler. This latter property came into the possession of George, Jacob and Martin Reiber in 1857, who erected a distillery on the site of the upper mill, and carried on the manufacture of whiskey for a number of years.

About 1850 William Ralston, Sr., built a grist-mill and a saw-mill on Little Connoquenessing Creek at the intersection of the Butler and Prospect Road. The grist-mill is now owned by John Cranner of Mount Chestnut.

Zion Reformed Church, near the junction of the Meridian and Harmony Road, was organized in 1845 among the German-speaking residents of the district by Rev. Samuel Miller of Westmoreland County. The first meetings were held at the Henshaw schoolhouse. The cornerstone of a new church edifice was laid May 28, 1847, and the building was dedicated in the following December. In June, 1870, Rev. W. M. Landis organized an English society under the name of St. John's Congregation, and both societies used the same building and were supplied by the same minister. Previous to 1877 the German Congregation had been united (in 1873) with the church at Harmony as one pastoral charge. This charge had been united with Prespect and Butler, the three being known as the Butler Charge. The German Congregation was constituted an independent charge in 1877, known as the Henshaw Charge, and in 1880, Rev. Josiah May, became the pastor of both congregations.

After this period the German congregation dwindled in numbers, while the English congregation increased. The former being too weak to maintain a pastor and hold regular services, the latter undertook to gain possession of the church property. This resulted in both congregations being incorporated in 1887, and the German congregation retaining possession of the property. The English congregation then withdrew and erected a new church. In 1889 the members, to the number of nineteen, united themselves with St. Mark's Church, and the Zion Reformed Church passed out of existence.

St. John's congregation of Zion Reformed Church, was organized June 19, 1870, by Rev. Landis, who was at that time pastor of the German congregation of Zion Reformed Church. In the fall of 1870 the congregation united with the German congregation in calling Rev. F. A. Edmonds of Harmony as pastor. A dispute over the legal title to the old church building having been settled in 1887, in favor of the German congregation, the new society concluded to erect a house of worship of its own. A lot was donated by Andrew O. Eberhart at the junction of Meridian and Harmony Roads, and a frame building was erected at a cost of about $1500.00. This building was dedicated in February, 1889. In 1901 St. John's congregation was united with the Connoquenessing congregation under the title of Olivet Charge. In 1904 the church building was enlarged and remodeled at an expense of $4500.00. The present membership is two hundred and five. St. John's cemetery was established the same year that the new church was built—1889.

The Butler Camp Meeting Association flourished in this township for many years, meetings being held under the auspices of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Brownsdale. These meetings attracted people from all over the country for about ten years. They were abandoned in 1890.

Eureka Grange was organized in 1875 and for many years held meetings in a hall that stood on the A. O. Everhart farm. About 1892 a hall was erected at Buttercup post-office in Connoquenessing Township, where the meetings were held until 1905, when the present hall was erected at the intersection of the Harmony and Meridian roads. In 1908 the membership was one hundred and fifty.

TOWNS AND VILLAGES.

The only towns within the limits of Butler Township are the shire town of Butler and the steel car town of Lyndora. The latter had its inception in 1902, when the Standard Steel Car Works was built at Butler. The Lyndora Land Company that year purchased a tract of land known as the John McElroy farm and erected four hundred houses for the use of the employes of the works. The population of the town varies with the condition of the times, and is mostly foreign. It has two public schools, a Roman Catholic Church, a Greek Catholic Church, and a night school for foreigners. There are a number of business houses doing a large trade and the town is a thriving suburb of the county seat. A post office was established in 1903. The administration of justice is in the hands of Squires Joseph Criswell and James McNally.

West Butler is a small hamlet that had its inception in the real estate boom that struck Butler in 1902. A party of Pittsburg capitalists purchased the Kennedy Marshall farm one mile west of the Car Works, plotted it into lots, and commenced the construction of an electric railroad from Butler through the tract of land to the John Forcht farm on the west. A public sale of lots was held in September, 1903, and a number of houses were erected that year. The financial troubles of the owners of the land caused a suspension of the building and nothing was done with the property until 1908, when a number of additional houses were erected.

In 1903 P. A. McCool and others purchased a tract of land on the Connoquenessing Creek from J. R. Kearns about one mile north of the Transfer, and plotted it into lots for building and manufacturing purposes. A financial depression in the

GRAMMAR AND HIGH SCHOOL, MARS

PUBLIC SCHOOL, RENFREW

STATE NORMAL SCHOOL, SLIPPERY ROCK

PUBLIC SCHOOL, BRUIN

WEST SUNBURY ACADEMY

OLD WITHERSPOON INSTITUTE

spring of 1904 was the means of the enterprise being dropped, and no building was done at that location. The name given to the proposed town was North Butler. About the same time McJunkin and Stover plotted a tract of land at the junction of the Bessemer Railroad and the Butler and Millerstown Road and erected a number of houses. Since that time an extensive village has grown up at the Transfer and this is sometimes called North Butler.

The Butler Brick & Tile Company has a manufacturing plant at the Transfer which is described under the manufacturing industries of Butler borough.

The pioneer schools of the township are identified with those of Butler borough. One of the early schoolhouses under the public school system stood near the site of Zion Reformed church on the west side of the township. When the present township was erected in 1854 it was divided into seven school districts. The frame, octagon-shaped school houses erected that year was the conception of Garret Pierce, who also built a dwelling-house on the same plan. These curiosities have long since disappeared and modern buildings have taken their places. The encroachments of Butler borough reduced the number of schools to six at the close of the last century, but since 1902 the number has increased to nine. The enrollment of scholars in 1908 was over 400 and the total receipt of the district were $6462.00.

The population of the township has varied. The extension of the borough from time to time has taken liberal slices of territory and also drawn heavily on the inhabitants. The population in 1810 was 453, including the town of Butler. The next decade saw the incorporation of the borough and in 1820 the population of the township was 472. There was a gradual growth until 1850, when the census showed 2622 inhabitants. The re-division of the townships in 1854 split the population of Butler in half and it did not get above the 1300 mark until the beginning of the new century. The last census shows a population of 1591, while the estimated population in 1908 was 2850, based on the registered vote of the election district. This does not include the foreign population of Lyndora.

CENTER TOWNSHIP.

On account of its geographical location in the county, Center Township acquired its name (formerly spelled Centre). Not only is it favorably situated but it has been dowered by Nature with fertility of soil and with coal deposits which have brought much revenue into this section. Its most elevated point is 1400 feet and this is about 5000 feet north of its south line on the Butler and Unionville road.

Center is principally a farming township. There are three small coal banks that are being operated chiefly for local consumption, the respective proprietors being E. D. Eagle, G. B. Heck, and R. D. Elliott. No operations are being carried on in oil or gas, and there are no large towns or boroughs.

The history of Center Township is interesting from the fact that its pioneers came in a colony and took up residence here without the assistance of constitution or by-laws—a somewhat unusual proceeding. This colony was made up of sixty hardy men, who came from Allegheny, Westmoreland, Juanita and Cumberland Counties, in 1796. They were home-seekers and were men of peaceable disposition, willing to subscribe to the will of the majority and we find them the founders of the leading families that now maintain the integrity of the township. The land was unsurveyed and, while each member was, according to their agreement, entitled to 400 acres of land, they realized that the survey might disturb some of the selections, therefore they entered into a pledge that such differences should be amicably adjusted. Subsequently seven of the sixty colonists settled in what is now Franklin Township and a few wandered farther afield but later many of these returned to become permanent residents of Centre Township. A number of these early settlers were of Irish origin, as their names indicate, and their descendants have filled many places of honor in Butler County and in other sections. There appears to have been comparatively little trouble with the Indians encountered by the early men of Center Township, the most notable disturbance having taken place in 1797, when the savages made demonstrations which resulted in some of the colonists returning to the more civilized part of the State. The names of the early possessors of land—those who became permanent settlers—are as follows: Baumgartner, Byers, Cook, Curry, Elliott, Fleeger, Freeman, Fryer, Galbraith, Hoge, McCandless (a large family), McCleary, McGrew, McKissack, Moore, McJunkin, Rudebaugh, Scott, St. Clair, and Thompson, while many others came a few years later than the original body.

It was recognized very soon that in order to promote public business and provide for contingencies, proper courts and officers must be established. Hence, on October 8, 1805, following the organization of the Township, an election was held, votes being cast for governor, congressman, senator and county commissioner. The justices of the peace were selected from well known families and were in general men of ability, well competent to discharge their official duties, as indeed they have been since.

One of the earliest demands of the intelligent pioneers of Center Township was for the establishment of a schoolhouse and in 1803 a log structure was erected on the farm of Benjamin Wallace. It is probable that the first teacher was William Wallace. A second schoolhouse was shortly afterward built on the farm of David McJunkin and here Samuel Cook, Samuel N. Moore, one of the Sloans from Venango and one of the Campbells, of Washington, are known to have taught here prior to 1835, when the common school system was adopted. The township now has six schools with 185 pupils. The directors (1908) were Warren Aggus, H. F. Herold, Geo. H. Shanor, J. D. Smith, W. R. Bartmas, and Daniel Reiger.

Evangelical Lutheran Church. The first regularly organized religious denomination was the Evangelical Lutheran Church, which was organized in 1843 and adopted articles of association in 1848. This meeting was presided over by Christopher Rider, with Rev. Eli Fair as secretary. When the society was incorporated the board of trustees was made up of Jacob Rider, Sr., Daniel Heck, Jr., and William Byers. The first church structure was put up in 1844 and the first pastor was Rev. Gottlieb Bassler. The present pastor is the Rev. Ibanah and the congregation has about seventy-five members.

The Holyoke United Presbyterian Church was made up of a large body of earnest Christians, who, prior to the erection of their first church edifice, assembled for worship in Robert Miller's barn. They put up their early building in 1874, having organized on August 28, of that year. The first regularly installed pastor was Rev. W. P. Shaw. The church now has about forty-two members, with Rev. Breden, pastor.

The Unionville Presbyterian Church, which was organized October 30, 1877, was made up of members of the Presbyterian faith, who, for three-quarters of a century had worshipped at different points in this section of Butler County, not having a church home near at hand. The first pastor was the Rev. Samuel Williams. There is now a strong congregation of 104 members, with Rev. Shaw, pastor.

The "Church of God" was represented in the seventies by a congregation organized in 1872 by Rev. Joseph Grim. In 1874 they built a frame house of worship. They enjoyed some years of subsequent growth and prosperity.

Unionville, in the northwest corner of the township, was founded by Samuel Thompson, in 1828. He was the first merchant, his brother, James Thompson, succeeding him in 1830. David Stewart succeeded the Thompsons and other early merchants were: Blaisdell & Cornish, David and Mark McCandless and Joseph Coulter. David Stewart was the first postmaster, in 1839. The place has a general store, conducted by D. C. Miller, who also operated a hardware store, the two stores being located in different buildings. There is also a drug store of which Dr. D. A. Holdman is the proprietor.

Fleeger, in the north-eastern part of the township, is simply a locality marked by a store owned by F. Fleeger. There is substantially no settlement here.

Jamisonville, located in the northeastern part, is a station on the Bessemer Railroad. It has the Wells-Fargo Express and a telegraph office, but no stores.

Onida, also a station on the Bessemer railroad, is located in the eastern part near the center. It has the Speechley telephone and a telegraph office.

Township officials: Justices of the peace—J. G. Renick and S. S. Allen; tax collector—J. G. Renick; constable—D. P. Smith; tax assessor—E. Albert; road commissioners—J. G. Renick, A. Pollock, and N. McCall (serving on unexpired term of G. W. Vernon); auditors—W. Stevenson, A. Rieger, and A. Blain; clerk—George Smith.

VENANGO TOWNSHIP.

Venango Township, on account of the fertility of its valleys, became the home of the pioneer at a very early date and when the development of its rich coal deposits began, its population outgrew that of some of the larger townships. It is one of the original thirteen divisions of the county, made in 1804. When the question of subdividing the county was discussed in 1853, the leading men of Venango Township offered objection, on the ground that the proposed change would disarrange the school districts and increase taxes beyond their ability to stand. Their protest, however, bore no fruit and the subdivision of 1854 was effected.

The physical characteristics of Venango Township include many waterways, including Slippery Rock Creek, Little Scrub Grass and Bear Creeks and many tributaries, ensuring large sections of well watered land and making agriculture not only a possible but a profitable occupation. The highest elevation is at Farmington, where the land rises 1,550 feet above sea level. Coal deposits may be found in almost every part of the township, not all of these being promising as to development, but cannel coal and Brookville coal have long been extensively mined and without perceptible decrease in either quality or quantity. The oil industry has also been an important factor in the commercial development of the township, though the business has been carried on quietly since 1895 and there are now no large producers. The oil is obtained in the northern part of the township.

The Manufacturers' Heat and Light Company are the largest producers. The township also contains extensive beds of limestone, which, however, have never been opened up. The Bessemer Railroad—the only one in the township—has a branch line running to Goff.

Settlement was made very early in Venango Township, probably in 1792, when it is known that Thomas Jolly visited this section, but he did not establish his permanent residence here until 1796, when he came with companions, to accept the offer of the owner of what we know as the Field tract, the latter giving a deed for 150 acres of land. Thomas Jolly and his companions lived together in a log cabin through the first year, and then returned east for their families. It is related that he brought fruit trees from Armstrong County and set out the first orchard on his farm of 300 acres. Sannel Barron owned 200 acres and built a weaving-shop, and Samuel Thompson cleared 170 acres. The Murrins were among the earliest settlers and were among the most enterprising of the pioneers. Hugh Murrin owned 400 acres and built one of the first mills and later a distillery, Michael Kelly became the owner of 400 acres and Nicholas and John Vanderlin, acquired 540 acres of land. Both were Revolutionary soldiers, natives of Holland, and they came in 1799. Other representative men were Samuel Campbell, Robert Cochran, William Adams, John Logne, Thomas and James Conlter, Samuel Sloan, Robert Leason, Joseph Kerr and James and John Shields. Among other pioneers who settled here prior to 1812 were John Watt, Samuel Culbertson, Alexander Strain, Ephraim Turk, Andrew Maitland, Levi Williams, John Donaldson, John Jamison, the Stalkers, the Williamses, James Porter, William Parker, Robert Cunningham and John and William B. Stewart, the latter of whom is credited with building the first frame house in Butler County. A number of these men of sturdy strength and courageous spirit had been soldiers in the Revolutionary War, and many more left their pioneer farms and mills to serve in the War of 1812. They were an industrious, frugal class, naturally intelligent, although but few had enjoyed educational advantages, and being inured to hardships, they cheerfully faced conditions of living that none of their descendants would willingly undergo.

The Associate Presbyterian Church of Unity is the name of the old Seceder Church, organized as early as 1800. This body separated from the United Presbyterians in 1858. In 1868 a frame church building was erected, but in recent years better accommodations have been afforded and the church was incorporated in May, 1888. Its list of members today shows many of the names of the original families.

East Unity United Presbyterian Church was organized in 1802, by Rev. Thomas McClintock, who was installed pastor in May, 1803, and continued his ministry until March, 1832. The original elders were: Samuel Sloan, Reuben Irwin, Robert Riddle and Robert Crawford. The humble little log church was made use of from 1802 until 1820, when a more commodious building, also of logs, was erected, for cold and inclement weather, for during the summer seasons the congregation worshipped under a spreading tree or in a tent. A brick structure, put up in 1868, was destroyed by fire in 1875, but in the same year a very substantial modern edifice took its place.

The Methodist Episcopal Church of Farmington, up to 1851, had no special church edifice, services being held in various places, including tents, groves, school-houses and private dwellings. For twenty-one years thereafter the earnest little body of Christians used a small frame church building, but an increasing membership made a new edifice necessary and under the efforts of Rev. James Groves the present handsome church building was completed in 1872.

St. Alphonsus Catholic Church of Murrinsville has always been largely supported by the Catholics of Venango Township. A history of this old church organization is given in the record of Marion Township.

Venango Township's schools deserve more than a passing comment. Prior to 1800, Hugh and John Murrin instructed the numerous Murrin children, the family being a large and prolific one. In 1802 Robert Cunningham kept a subscription school in a log hut standing two and one-quarter miles north of the present town of Eau Claire. There are now seven schools in the township with 244 pupils, while the Eau Claire Academy, which was founded in 1893, affords academic advantages to ambitious students.

The leading villages of Venango Township are Eau Claire, formerly Farmington, and Ferris, of Keystone, Deegan and Goff.

Ferris is chiefly a product of the Turner Coal, Coke and Mining Company. It has a population of about 125, mostly foreigners. E. L. Stevens is postmaster and manager of the company's store. The Erie Coal & Coke Company of Summit County have a mine here and employ about 100 men with an output at present of 200 tons daily.

Eau Claire, or Farmington, was surveyed in 1848, on John Rosenberry's farm, and in June, 1849, William H. Tebay built and occupied the first house. A hotel was shortly afterward put up, merchants engaged in business and other interests grew, but it was not until 1870 that a brick structure appeared in the shape of a store building for A. M. Reynolds. In March, 1856, a post-office was established at Bovard's store, but in a few years it was removed to Farmington, which was officially named Eau Claire. H. A. Sloan is the present postmaster. The town was incorporated December 5, 1900, under the title of Eau Claire Borough, the petition being signed by twenty-six free-holders and twenty-one voters of the district. There are two general stores here conducted respectively by Coulter & Reynolds and W. C. Jameson & Company, while W. P. Stickle conducts a harness business, and is also justice of the peace of the borough; Wm. A. Rosenberry is Burgess, J. W. McCandless conducts a blacksmith and repair shop, W. H. Shaffer a meat market, while R. L. Allison and R. J. McMichael are physicians. Eau Claire has the Speechley Telephone.

Eau Claire Academy was established in the fall of 1893 under Professor Robertson, with Miss Chapin, teacher of music, and has made a good record as an educational institution. An Academy building was erected in 1894, which is now used for high school purposes by the borough and township.

Deegan—The village of Deegan, near the west line of the township, owes its existence to the Goff-Kirby Coal Company which is operating extensively in that locality. A switch has been built from the Hilliard branch to the mine, and the town of a couple of hundred in population has grown up the past few years. There is one store in the village, conducted by Charles Black, who is also the postmaster, the new office having been established in 1907.

Goff is a settlement of about 200 people, mostly foreigners. The Goff-Kirby Coal Company is located there and has a company store. The postmaster is W. Black.

Extensive oil interests have contributed to the development of all this section, making Venango one of the most important townships in Butler County.

Township officials: Justice of the peace—J. Blair; tax collector—M. Higgins; constable—M. Higgins; tax assessor, M. Higgins; road commissioners—M. Williams, G. Vanderlin; auditors—F. Sloan, L. Coldmere, and J. Meals; clerk—E. Jamison. W. H. Campbell was also justice of the peace and road commissioner, but died in the fall of 1908.

JACKSON TOWNSHIP.

This township, lying in the southwestern part of Butler County and adjoining Beaver County on the east, was erected in 1854, but it is the early settlement and development of the territory therein embraced, and its various communities, that is of peculiar interest and renders its history distinctive from that of the other townships of the county. It is not only a good agricultural township but has important mineral resources, including deposits of iron, ore, coal and limestone, though but one coal mine of any size is being worked at present. The volume of business in the various industries and in agriculture has been very large ever since the Harmonists became well established here early in the nineteenth century. The land is well drained by Connoquenessing Creek, and numerous tributaries.

The first of the pioneers of Jackson Township was James Magee, a native of County Down, Ireland, who made settlement in 1797. He afterward fought in the War of 1812 and continued to reside here until his death in 1846. William Martin, also a native of Ireland, located one mile west of the present borough of Evans City in 1797. His brother, Michael Martin, came in 1800, as did Thomas Wilson, Thomas Scott; John Dunn, who was killed at the forks of the Youghiogheny, while returning to his former home; David Young, James Donaldson, and Joseph Morris. Dr. Detmar Basse, or as he came to be known, Dr. Müller, settled at Zelenople in 1802, and Christian Buhl, a shoemaker by trade, located there later in the same year. In that or the following year, Morris and Philip Covert made settlement, and the former became a soldier in the American army during the War of 1812. Daniel Fiedler settled on the site of Zelenople in 1803, and there were others who came in during the pioneer days who are mentioned in the history of the boroughs of the township. John Nixon came to this locality from New Jersey in 1812, and afterward settled in Penn Township, where he was instrumental in having the Harvest Home feast celebrated after the departure of the Harmony Society from this vicinity. John Fleming, the teacher, came in 1815; also Jacob Keller and Samuel Beam; Thomas H. Harper came in 1820; John Hartzell in 1820; Lewis Gansz and Jacob Dambach in 1832; George and Henry Marburger, with their father, in 1839; Henry Stoker in 1846; and Dr. Adam Weiser in 1856.

Dr. Detmar Basse, upon coming to this country, acquired 10,000 acres, lying in Beaver and Butler Counties, and in 1804 had the honor of building the first saw-mill in the township, it being in fact the first industry of any kind started there. In 1806 he built the Müller grist-mill, where the modern plant of Seidel Brothers was later erected. John Herr built a mill, which later became the property of Albert Seidel and Joseph Schwartz and afterwards passed through various hands. George Rapp and his associates, in 1806 or 1807, built a grist mill on Scholar's Run, and not long after erected the big mill at Eidenau, the oil-mill, the fulling and carding-mill and the distillery on the Little Connoquenessing. In 1837, David Ziegler and Aaron Schontz converted the great barn of the Economites into a steam flouring-mill, and later Jacob Zeigler built a distillery near the big mill, above Harmony. The Bassenheim Furnace was established by Dr. Müller in 1814 and conducted by him until 1818, the last two years under the superintendence of his son-in-law, P. L. Passavant. Native ore was used and the water of the creek furnished the power until the dam gave way, when steam power was substituted. The concern was owned and operated by Daniel Beltzhoover & Company from 1818 until 1824, when it was closed down. The Wilson salt works were established at Harmony in 1816. Numerous tanneries and distilleries flourished in the township in the early days.

Among the prosperous business enterprises of the present time is the John Turner Coal Company, which employs about thirty men, with an output of two cars per day. Several coal banks of minor importance exist, and there is some oil production in the township.

The P. H. B. & N. C. Electric Line has a large power plant and car barns in the township.

The first schools of the township were introduced by the Harmonists, and after their departure in 1815 subscription schools were established and carried on until the common school law came into effect in 1835. There are now nine schools within the limits of the township with a total attendance of 264 pupils. The board of directors consists of John A. Eichert, president; C. F. Knauff, treasurer; Edwin Ramsey, secretary; Rev. H. Voegley, Amos Rape and Edward Eicholtz.

Harmony, Zelenople and a part of Evans City are located within the limits of Jackson Township, as is the village of Eidenan, the last named having been quite a settlement in the early days. An old Indian town was located just north of the river, but was practically abandoned in 1792, although the Indian women and children continued to live there until the coming of the pioneers. The village of Ramsdale, a half mile north of Harmony, also flourished in the early days, and was an Indian town before the arrival of the whites.

Township officials—Edward Eicholtz, J. P. (elect); supervisors, Charles Hartung, John Behn, and Mr. Goegety; collector, Michael Zeigler; assessor, Edward Zehner. There are two voting precincts—the East Precinct, with Jacob Rheinhart, judge, and inspectors Amos Rape and H. Goehring; and the Western Precinct, with C. H. Knauff, judge, and E. E. Goehring and John Pflug, inspectors.

St. Peters (Independent) Church of middle Lancaster organized about 1847, has for pastor Rev. A. H. Ginder.

Zion's Lutheran Church of middle Lancaster has for pastor Rev. Frederick H. Myers.

HARMONY BOROUGH.

This borough had its inception in the founding of a communistic colony by the United Society of Germans, familiarly known as Harmonists or Economites, who left their native land in search of religious liberty. George Rapp, their leader, was sent ahead in 1803 to find a location and prepare for the coming of the society. Accompanied by his son, John, and a few others, he landed at Baltimore. He visited many localities and various states, finally completing arrangements for the purchase of 5000 acres of the 10,000 acre tract of Dr. Detmar Basse in Butler County. Three hundred of the society arrived in Baltimore, July 4, 1804, where temporary quarters were provided for them for the winter. In the meantime Rapp and a party of workmen founded the village of Harmony and prepared homes for the members of the new colony. The second body of Harmonists, under Frederick Rapp, arrived six weeks after the first, landing at Philadelphia, and were soon followed by a third. The latter were met by a representative of George Rapp, named Haller, who persuaded most of them to locate in Lycoming County. There were one hundred and thirty-five families in the settlement at Harmony, when the organization of the society was perfected on February 15, 1805, and all were apparently pleased with their new home. The deed to the property was executed October 17, 1804. Its development was rapid. At the end of the first year, 150 acres were cleared; fifty log cabins, a grist mill, barn, machine shop, and a house of worship were standing. By the end of the second year, 600 acres were cleared, a vineyard of 4 acres set out, and a distillery, tannery, brick yard, saw-mill and large brick granary built. The progress made was astounding and the products for the year 1809 were: 6,000 bushels of corn, 4,000 bushels of wheat, 4,500 bushels of rye, 5,000 bushels of oats, 10,000 bushels of potatoes, 4,000 bushels of flax and hemp, fifty gallons of sweet oil, thousands of gallons of whiskey, besides more beef, mutton and pork than the community could use. A woolen factory was established in 1810. The work was done under the direction of Rapp, on the division of labor plan, a man being employed at one kind of work at all times, except in rare instances when a large force was required in the harvest fields. The members of the colony profited share and share alike, none being poor and none rich. They lived in happiness in the midst of plenty. It became their custom to have three feasts each year, beginning in 1805, they consisting of the products of the farm, with native wine, whiskey, beer, sauerkraut, rice and ginger cakes served in a large barn, which was thrown open to the people in general. They found their warrant for these feasts in the XXIII Chapter of Exodus, the Love Feast in early spring; the Harvest Home when the small grains were in, and the Feast of the Ingathering when harvest was over with. Harvest Home became an event to be looked forward to and was held long after the departure of the Economites.

When it was determined to seek another home for the Society and the property was offered for sale in 1814, the sale bill prepared by George Rapp showed there were in the village of Harmony 130 buildings, some brick and others frame and log; that there was a tavern, built of brick and stone, with twelve rooms, a brick house for spinning and weaving; a brick house for dyeing; a brick church; a frame granary, 80x40 feet, four stories, and equipped with machinery; two distilleries, one built of brick and the other of stone; a grist mill on the Big Connoquenessing, a fulling mill with two sets of carding-machines attached to it; a grist mill on Little Connoquenessing and a fulling and hemp-mill, with one set of cotton carding-machines; two saw-mills; a well equipped tannery; a brick-yard; a potash factory; rope walk; brewery; a smithy with four hearths; a nail factory; other buildings suited to various branches of mechanism; four large barns with stables underneath; and seven large sheep barns that would hold 5,000 sheep; twenty log buildings and barns in Ramsdale; about the same number of houses and barns at Eidenau; and eight or ten houses and barns at Oilbrom; two miles north of Harmony. These villages were on the Society's estate. The bill further stated there were 3,000 acres cleared; two principal orchards with 2,000 bearing apple trees and numerous small orchards; two vineyards and a number of sugar camps; that there were supported from the improvements and produce of Harmony, annually, 3,000 sheep, 600 horned cattle, and a number of horses, besides the grain to feed the distilleries, still affording large supplies to the country.

The property was sold to Abraham Zeigler for a consideration of $100,000, and in 1815 the Harmonists moved to Posey County, Indiana, and started the town of New Harmony. At the end of ten years they returned to Pennsylvania, founding the towns of Economy and Harmony on the east bank of the Ohio River, in Beaver County, where the life of the society was rounded out.

A word here as to the origin of the Harmonist Society would not be amiss. George Rapp, the founder, was born in Iptingen, Wurtemberg, Germany, in 1757, and was reared on a farm. He received a fair education in the common schools and in his youth became an avid reader of the Bible, with pronounced views as to its interpretation. He developed some ideas along the line of common ownership of property and a return to the simplicity of early Christian life, incompatible with the government of his land and the established church. He got beyond privately giving expression to his views, and when about thirty years old would gather his friends and followers at his home and to them expound the scriptures. Restrictions in his own country resulted in the removal to this country, as above related. It is impossible to say with exactness what his views were along spiritual lines, as they changed as years went by. Common ownership of property, celibacy, the leading of blameless lives, and belief in the early second coming of Christ were doctrines he and his disciples came to advocate in later years. It was his opinion that the world would be destroyed in 1837. Celibacy and a lack of proselyting reduced its membership rapidly, and the life of the society in America was less than a century. George Rapp died August 7, 1847, aged nearly ninety years. More than one hundred of his followers were buried in Harmony prior to their removal from Butler County.

Abraham Ziegler took possession of his property in 1815, and soon found that community of interest, on a small scale, was not a bad idea. He got into financial straits and finding it impossible to meet the unpaid balance of the purchase money, went to New Harmony, Indiana, where he offered to turn the property back to the Harmonists. Rapp urged him to hold on to the property, cancelled some of the interest coupons, and agreed to pay fifty cents a pound for all the wool he could raise. Returning home, Mr. Ziegler secured the services of David Stauffer, John Schwart, Jacob Swain and other early settlers, as shepherds, each to receive as compensation a tract of land surrounding his home at the end of a given time. It was a common cause, and each putting forth his best efforts, the incumbrance was cleared away in a few years. The promises were kept and all parties concerned reaped large returns.

In 1815 Samuel Bean started a blacksmithing establishment here, and Jacob Kelker came in and conducted a tavern in one of the old log houses. That and the following year saw the following pioneers established at Harmony: John Fleming, who taught school; the Stauffers; the Latshaws; the Schwartzes; the Herrs; Johann Ladenschlager, an Economite; Baltzer Gull, a butcher; John Roth, a blacksmith; Philip Noss, a cooper; Joseph Tinsman and Francis Bassler, coopers; Jacob Gross, a weaver; John Tinnells; John Scheely; John Boyer, a Mennonite minister; and the Zieglers. John Fleming kept the first store in the town under the new regime, and later Henry and John Schwartz started a store. They were followed by George Howell, Alfred Pearce and others. In 1837 Schontz & Ziegler established a grist-mill in the big Economite barn built in 1806, and conducted a successful enterprise there until its destruction by fire in 1852, other old buildings of the Economites meeting the same fate at that time. Mr. Schontz then became owner of another of the original barns, which he mantled with machinery, and continued the milling business until he sold to John Pearce. The latter was succeeded in 1872 by David Ziegler, who continued the plant as it was until 1880, when it was remodeled and new machinery installed. Mr. Schontz also started up the woolen mill in 1837, and conducted it until it burned down in 1842. He rebuilt on the same site, put in new machinery, and conducted the industry alone until he disposed of an interest to Robert Sample in 1850. In 1865 he sold his remaining interest to John Pearce, and the business was conducted on a larger scale than before. Mr. Pearce became sole owner in 1871, and later made his son a partner, the mill developing into a large and flourishing plant. In recent times many important industries have been established and maintained, among which may be mentioned the planing-mill of H. M. Bentle & Company, a firm which operates a similar establishment at Zelenople.

The first bank in operation in Harmony was the Harmony Savings Bank, which was incorporated in 1867 and in 1868 opened its doors for business, with Alfred Pearce as president, and R. H. Palmer as treasurer.

The Harmony National Bank was organized in 1876, with Butler capitalists as the principal stockholders and directors. John Dindinger was one of its most active organizers. W. H. H. Riddle was the first president, and H. J. Mitchell, cashier.

The Commercial Bank of Harmony, established March 1, 1892, was an undertaking of S. E. Niece, a man of prominence in oil operations and in banking circles, but the institution was not of long duration.

The first school in the borough after the departure of the Economites was that established in 1815 or 1816 by John Fleming, later known as the poet postmaster. Many others taught prior to the establishment of the public school system in 1835, among the best known being John Heberling, the mason, and William Huntzberber. From an early period there has been a succession of private or select schools, of which the Harmony Collegiate Institute is an outgrowth. There is now one public school, of four rooms, including a three years' high school course. There are four teachers, with an enrollment of 150 pupils.

The borough of Harmony was incorporated in 1838, and William Keck was elected as the first burgess. A postoffice was established here in 1813, when Andrew McClure, upon being tarred and feathered by volunteer soldiers for giving expression to his Tory sentiments, in his pique, left Zelenople for Harmony. The postoffice followed him, and an Economite was placed in charge. John Fleming was the next postmaster, and served here until 1835, when he moved the office to Zelenople. There was for many years much rivalry between the two boroughs over the question, as the citizens of the one without an office were obliged to go to the other for mail. Ill feeling died down in later years, when offices were maintained in both places. Upon being re-established at Harmony, S. P. Young was first postmaster. He has had a number of successors, the present incumbent of the office being Mrs. Susan Fielder.

The census report of 1870 showed the population of the borough to be 414; in 1880, 497; in 1890, 585, and in 1900, 645. The present population of the borough is about 1,000, with an additional 400 or 500 in the immediate vicinity, making a town of substantially 1,400 or more population.

CHURCHES.

The Mennonite Church was the first in Harmony after the departure of George Rapp. Rev. John Boyer was the first preacher, and at first preached in a small edifice which they erected in 1816. Abraham Ziegler was the principal supporter of the church from its organization until his death in 1836, and in 1825 was instrumental in the building of a stone church, which served the organization for many years. Other formerly-existing churches were the German Evangelical Lutheran, organized by Rev. Eli Steaver in 1843; the Baptist, which had a brief and precarious existence, and the Church of God, organized by Rev. W. B. Long.

Grace Reformed Church was organized in 1826 by Rev. John Koch and the sermons preached in the German language. The old brick church erected by the disciples of Rapp in 1806 was purchased as a house of worship, and was frequently remodeled and enlarged to meet the demands of an increasing congregation. The present pastor is Rev. Lewis Reiter. The church has a membership of three hundred.

The Methodist Episcopal Church was organized at Zelenople in 1842, as related in the chapter on that borough, and in 1880 was removed to Harmony. Here they erected a new church building at a cost of $2,000, it being dedicated on August 15, 1880. The present membership is 130; pastor, Rev. M. R. Hackman.

The Presbyterian Church has a membership of about 240, and is a flourishing organization. The pastor is Rev. Hugh Leith.

The first cemetery in the community was that used as a burial ground by the Harmonists from 1805 until 1815. Upon the departure of that society they covered the graves with rock to a depth of several feet, so that the bones of their dead would not be disturbed. In 1869 a fitting tribute was paid these long departed pioneers by old representatives of the community. They caused the rock to be removed and the graves marked, and built a substantial wall about the graveyard, the expense being something over $7,000.

Among the leading business enterprises of the present day are the following: H. C. Mullerman, general merchandise; W. B. Cranmer and J. K. Scott, livery; Enoch Knox and J. Weigel, blacksmiths; Harmony Creamery Co.; Zeigler & Stamm, furniture; S. D. Kirker, feed store; H. M. Wise, lumber; Harmony Cereal Co., A. H. Knauf, proprietor; H. W. Bame, grocer; the Hotel Bean, S. A. Bean, proprietor; Zeigler House, L. N. Zeigler, proprietor; Oil Well Supply Co.; Edward Sahli, meats; Sitler, Swain & Moyer, general merchandise; Barnhart's Pharmacy; A. W. Flowers' Foundry, and the Harmony Hardware Co. (H. H. Beighlea, manager of implementation department). Resident physicians are D. W. Fiedler, J. H. Ralston and Arthur S. Stewart.

The B. & O. Railroad and the B. R. and P. Railroads supply steam connection with outside points. The Pittsburg, Harmony, Butler and New Castle Electric Line began operations about July, 1908.

Telephone service is furnished by the Bell and P. & A. systems, while there are adequate telegraph and express accommodations.

The fraternal orders represented in Harmony are the Odd Fellows, the Royal Arcanum, the Knights of Pythias and the K. O. T. M.

Officials.—Burgess, A. Eppinger; president of council, H. H. Beighlea; secretary, H. A. Halstein; treasurer, E. G. Kristophel; constable, Fred Schaffer; high constable, Jacob Weigel; tax collector, Levi Boyer; assessor, Thomas Wheeler.

ZELIENOPLE BOROUGH.

Zelienople is a beautiful and prosperous little borough, located on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad and on the Pittsburg, Harmony, Butler and New Castle interurban line. Its name is derived from that of Zelig, daughter of Dr. Müller, the founder of the place. Dr. Müller, or more correctly, Dr. Detmar Basse, was a scholarly man of large ideas and ambitions. He was an influential man in his native Germany, and at one time represented the City of Frankfurt as an ambassador to Paris. In 1802 he came to this country and purchased a vast tract of 10,000 acres lying in Butler and Beaver counties, Pennsylvania, his idea, apparently, being to establish a baronial estate amid romantic and picturesque surroundings in this part of the then growing West. He was a man of large means, and after laying out the village built him a palatial home of three stories in the architectural style of an old castle, with its towers, turrets and battlements, to which he gave the name of Bassenheim. A part of his holdings he disposed of in 1804 to George Rapp and his associates, retaining some 5,000 acres. An account of his mills and furnace is given in the history of Jackson township. It was his connection with the mills and his custom of signing his name Detmar Basse Müller that caused him to be known thereafter as Müller. He went back to Germany, temporarily, in 1806, and returned in 1807, accompanied by his daughter, Zelig, and her husband, Philip L. Passavant. He then devoted himself actively to the success of his undertaking and the upbuilding of the village and the development of its resources. He returned to his native land in 1818, leaving his interests to be cared for by Mr. Passavant, to whom he sold all of the unsold lots in Zelienople for $1,400. Bassenheim and 400 acres surrounding it was sold to Joseph Allen in 1836, and six years later was destroyed by fire.

Philip L. Passavant established the first store in the village in 1807, and was otherwise an important factor in the development of the community. He conducted the store for forty-one years, and was then succeeded by his son, C. S. Passavant. As early as 1804, Christian Buhl, the hatter, and Daniel Fiedler, distiller and ferryman, erected cabins, which were the first built on the town site. Jonathan Baybury; Andrew Diemer and his son, masons by trade; and John G. Muntz, who moved to Harmony in 1804 or 1805; McIntyre, the spinning wheel manufacturer; Jacob Heberling, the third stone mason of the village, and John Lock, the miller, were all early members of the colony here. Andrew McClure moved in from his farm and kept tavern where the Grand Central Hotel of modern days was built. Charles Cist opened a small store here in 1814, and about the same time there came to the settlement, Jacob Hoffa, David Arneal, and a man named Hungenmeyer, who was a carpenter by trade. Robert Bolton and Frederick Bentle, blacksmiths; John Boyer, a preacher; and Vance Randolph, a millwright, came in 1816, and were followed not long after by John A. Beyer, Adam and H. W. Goehring, John Lambert, and others. The McClure tavern was established shortly after the first log cabins were built, and was taken in by the house erected by John Randolph in the twenties. Both buildings were later united to form the Bastian House, and in 1878 the property was purchased by H. W. Stokey, who converted it into a good modern hotel, which was named the Grand Central. The Eagle Hotel was built in the twenties by Rudolph Kelker, and was conducted by various landlords until 1878, when Henry Stokey became proprietor. The latter was succeeded by his son, Charles Stokey, who conducts the New Stokey, a modern, up-to-date and well patronized house of entertainment.

The pioneer newspaper of the borough was the Zelenople Recorder, published in 1847. It was followed by the Connoquenessing News, which was established by Samuel Young and by him conducted until his death, when a son, J. R. Young, became owner and editor. The first passenger train entered the borough the first day in the year 1879, and in 1880 the American Union Telegraph Company began operating here.

Nicholas Dambach in March, 1882, established a private bank, which was purchased the following year by Dr. Amos Lusk and son. Dr. Lusk died in 1891, and Amos M. Lusk carried on the business in partnership with John A. Gelbach until March, 1893, when he disposed of his interest to Jacob Gelbach. The banking firm of Gelbach Brothers established the institution as one of the safest and most sound in Butler County.

The German Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Zelenople was organized by some of the most substantial men of the community, and its affairs soon placed in a thriving condition.

Andrew McClure, the pioneer tavern-keeper, was also the first postmaster and served until his pro-British sentiments during the War of 1812 got him into disfavor. In 1813 he was tarred and feathered by volunteer soldiers, en route to Lake Erie, and in revenge resigned the office to a citizen in Harmony. The town was then without a postoffice until 1835, when John G. Muntz was appointed postmaster at Zelenople. The present incumbent is N. B. Duncan.

The population of Zelenople, as revealed by the census reports, shows the growth was steady and continuous. It was 387 in 1870, 497 in 1880, 639 in 1890, and 963 in 1900. With the Extension it is now about 1,800.

Prior to 1810 the schools of Harmony served also as the schools of this borough, but in that year an octagonal brick house was erected on the Diamond for school and religious purposes. In 1817 Jacob Hoffa's wife conducted a primitive subscription school, and she was succeeded by a Mr. Brewster, and later by Jacob Heberling. In 1825 the manual labor school was established by the Presbytery of Pittsburg in the Bassenheim, and was conducted under Superintendent Saunders until 1836. In 1835 the common school law was adopted, and in time a good system of schools was built up, but almost continuously there has been a private school conductor under the various titles of high school, academy or college. The Zelenople select school of 1845 was presided over by Rev. L. F. Leake, and the Connoquenessing Academy, under Dr. G. Bassler, C. G. Holls and Josiah R. Titzell, soon followed. Dr. Amos Lusk, among the foremost business men and citizens, was a man of scholarly attainments and was always a friend to the educational institutions, which he did much to bring into being and improve. In April, 1883, after title to the old school on the Diamond had been proved faulty, a fine new school building was erected at the head of Main Street. The school building has seven rooms, with seven teachers, including the principal, F. A. McClung, and an enrollment of 305 pupils. The high school course has recently been raised from a three to a four years' course.

The borough of Zelenople was incorporated in 1840, and Dr. Orrin D. Palmer was the first burgess. The first justices of the peace were Christian Buhl and John Levis.

St. Paul's Evangelical Lutheran Church was organized as a German Lutheran church in 1822, with H. W. Goehring, Casper O. Muller and P. L. Passavant as trustees. The first pastor was Rev. J. C. G. Schweitzerbarth, who served as such for nearly thirty years. A stone meeting-house, constructed of native sandstone and of Gothic design, was dedicated June 10, 1827, and is still in a good state of preservation. The church now has about 200 communicants. The church property consists of three acres, donated by P. L. Passavant, and is devoted to the church building, the cemetery and the parsonage, which latter was remodeled in 1907. The present pastor is Rev. Frederick H. Myer.

The United Presbyterian Church was organized April 7, 1895, with twenty-four charter members. Rev. Edward S. Littell became pastor January 4, 1901, when the membership numbered forty-eight. Since then there has been a steady growth, and there are now 104 members, with a Sabbath school enrollment of sixty-five. The church building was erected at a cost of about $9,000.

The English Lutheran Church was organized January 21, 1843. A plain brick church was erected, and on July 6, 1845, was dedicated. It was the home of the congregation until the new and modern brick church was completed. The latter was dedicated on April 28, 1884. Rev. Bassler was the first pastor and continued with the church until April, 1864, when he resigned to enter upon his duties as superintendent of the Orphans' Home. During his pastorate the church society was incorporated, the date being June 16, 1860. In 1904 the present handsome church edifice was erected at a cost of about $25,000. It is a fine stone structure of modern architecture. The present pastor, Rev. L. J. Baker, has served the congregation since November, 1905. The church now has a membership of 275, with a Sunday school of 233, and is in a very prosperous condition.

The Presbyterian Church was organized in 1845 by Rev. L. F. Leake. Meetings during the first decade of its existence were held in the Baptist or Methodist church, or in the schoolhouses of Zelenople and Harmony. A church building was erected in 1885, and Rev. Webber was installed as pastor. He continued until 1863, and was succeeded by Rev. D. D. Christy (stated supply), and others.

St. Peter's Evangelical Protestant Church (independent) was organized and built in 1858, with Rev. E. F. Winter as the first pastor, who served the congregation over twenty-two years. The Rev. O. D.

Miller, who is the present pastor, succeeded Rev. Ebbinghaus in 1900, and under his able ministrations the church has increased its membership to 434, with a Sunday school enrollment of one hundred and twenty-five.

The United Evangelical Church, known as the German United Evangelical Protestant Congregation of St. Peter's Church of the borough of Zelenople, was organized January 1, 1859, by Rev. E. F. Winter, and in 1861 a frame church building was erected at a cost of $3,000. The society was incorporated in January, 1873. Prior to the erection of the church services were held in the Presbyterian church.

Monroe Chapel of the Methodist Episcopal Church was organized at Zelenople, and on March 24, 1862, was incorporated. The place of meeting was moved to Harmony in 1880.

St. Gregory's Roman Catholic Church was erected in 1906 and is located in Zelenople Extension. It has a resident pastor and gives promise of being a strong and permanent organization.

ORPHANS' HOME AND ORPHANS' FARM SCHOOL.

[Compiled mostly from Rev. Dr. H. W. Roth's "Fifty Years Among the Orphans."]

In 1849 Pastor Theodore Fliedner of Kaiserwerth, Germany, came to Pittsburg, Pa., at the earnest solicitation of the Rev. W. A. Passavant, of blessed memory, to take part in the dedication of The Pittsburg Infirmary, and to begin a Deaconess Mother House in America.

At a little gathering of friends in the home of a Pittsburg German pastor, Fliedner urged the duty of providing also for the care of the orphan children. At this little gathering one of the company placed a dollar into the hands of this German pastor, saying: "Here you have a beginning for an Orphans' Home." A few years later this lone dollar was given "in trust" to the Rev. Passavant.

HOW THE ORPHANS AND THE HOME CAME.

In the Infirmary a German clergyman died. Also a Swiss schoolmaster, and others. Pitiiful were their prayers for the boys and girls, their children, whom they left homeless as they themselves had been.

While in London, three years before Fliedner's visit to Pittsburg, Rev. Passavant found refuge from a sudden shower in a Jewish Orphanage. His heart was strangely moved, and there the good Spirit of God awakened and deepened a purpose to begin at home some work of like character. And now that orphans were sent, it was resolved in humble reliance upon the Father of the fatherless, to care for those homeless children. In April, 1852, Sister C. Louisa Marthens, the first American deaconess, was appointed matron, and the first Orphans' Home began in the Infirmary buildings, corner Roberts and Reed streets, Pittsburg, Pa.

ORPHANS' FARM SCHOOL, ZELENOPLÉ, PA.

The Rev. Paul Anderson brought two boys and a girl, the children of Norwegian parents who died in Chicago, and these were the first admissions to the newly organized Home. From Pittsburg the ravages of cholera sent many children, and the Home was full.

In September, 1852, Rev. Passavant and the Rev. Gottlieb Bassler purchased from Joseph Zeigler some twenty-five acres near Zelenople, and entered upon the establishment of The Orphans' Farm School. In 1853 the director's house was built and other improvements made.

In April, 1854, Rev. G. Bassler, A. M., took charge as director, and moved from Middle Lancaster, Penna., into the new residence. In May, 1854, Mr. Asa H. Waters, a student of theology, opened the Academy in the property of Rev. C. G. Schweitzerbarth. Into this eight boys were brought from the Home in Pittsburg. The excellent mother of Mr. Waters looked after the housekeeping of the family, and

Mr. J. Q. Waters, a student at the Academy, had oversight of the boys at their work on the little farm and at their studies.

THE BUILDING OF THE PARENT HOUSE.

This was a big undertaking with only seventy-five cents in the treasury. But these men of faith went forward, and July 4, 1854, many people in attendance, and with appropriate services and addresses, the corner-stone was laid, notable as the first event of the kind in the whole Lutheran church of America.

FELLOW LABORERS AT THE ORPHANS' FARM SCHOOL.

In November, 1855, Mr. C. G. Holls, a pupil of Dr. Wichern of "Das Rauhe Hans" fame, was duly installed as head master and house father in the newly finished Parent House. For eleven years he discharged the duties of his position with marked ability. During the illness of the Rev. G. Bassler, the first director, Rev. G. W. Frederick, then pastor of the church at Zelenople, efficiently served the interests of the Home. Mr. David L. Debendarfer was called as assistant to the director, and on the lamented death of Rev. G. Bassler, Oct. 3, 1868, was chosen director. Until called to his reward in 1877, the Rev. Debendarfer and his devoted wife faithfully performed the difficult duties of their responsible positions.

In the spring of 1878 the Rev. J. A. Kribbs, A. M., with his estimable wife as matron, entered the Orphans' Farm School as third director, and began the successful service which has been continued for over thirty years. The girls remained in their Pittsburgh Home after the boys had gone to Zelenople, until May, 1862, when they moved to Rochester, Pa., where houses had been built for their residence in families.

In 1895 the Orphans' Home at Rochester was united with the Orphans' Farm School at Zelenople, and the two bands became one, the girls becoming inmates of the institution under the care of Rev. and Mrs. J. A. Kribbs.

This Home is clearly a child of Providence. God has graciously and tenderly cared for every want, in His own time and in His own way. During the fifty-four years of trial, struggle and triumph of God's cause, the orphans in this Home have never wanted, but every day received their "daily bread." The great founder of this Home, that man of God, the Rev. W. A. Passavant, D. D., in prayer and faith for forty years stood between the helpless and the Great Helper, pleading the cause of the destitute, friendless orphans, and they have been cared for, clothed and fed.

The following facts in the history of these homes are worthy of note. In the early beginnings of this beneficent work twenty-five acres of land were purchased for the uses of an Orphans' Home, and a $25,000 building erected thereon and paid for. Later one hundred acres of land, and again two hundred and seventy-five acres of land, were purchased and paid for. In December, 1862, the first building was destroyed by fire. Another central building, with additional dormitories and school building, was erected at a cost of some $20,000 and paid for. Again, in 1889, the second building was destroyed by fire. This was rebuilt and enlarged, and with recent additional new buildings and improvements at a cost of $30,000 or more, and all paid for. Today the beautiful farm and woodland of four hundred acres and all our buildings stand free of debt.

It is also worthy of note that in all these years our Homes have never had a financial agent out in the field collecting funds. It is true the cause of the orphans has been brought before our churches, Sunday schools and individual friends, and appeals have been made through church papers, circulars and reports. The support during all these more than fifty years has come from the gratuitous responses of the consecrated hearts and hands of God's people.

The Orphans' Home founded in Pittsburgh by Rev. W. A. Passavant, D. D., and the Orphans' Farm School founded in Zelenople, more than fifty years ago, are to be measured not only by the actual work done here, but rather by the influences put in motion, and the impetus given to orphan work throughout the Lutheran church in this country and also among other Protestant denominations. These Orphan Homes were the first of their kind for many years among the Protestant churches. Today there are some fifty orphanages in the Lutheran church and quite a number among other Protestant churches.

In the good Providence of God, the sainted Dr. Passavant, who was called to his eternal home June 3, 1894, sowed the good seed which sprung up, grew and spread its branches. It is true, "one soweth and another reapeth," but "both he that soweth and he that reapeth rejoice together," and "shall reap fruit unto life eternal." All praise to God for whatever good has been done in this great field of beneficence.

The Rev. J. A. Kribbs, after a service of more than thirty years, as director, retires January 1, 1909, and the Rev. Charles W. White, duly elected by the board of managers as director of these homes, enters upon the duties and responsibilities of this office at the same date, January 1, 1909.

THE OLD PEOPLES' HOME OF THE PITTSBURG
SYNOD OF THE EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH IN ZELIENOPLE, PENN-SYLVANIA.

The Lutheran Church is noted for its numerous institutions of mercy in all parts of the United States, and there are several such in Butler County and the adjoining county of Allegheny. But until quite recently there was not among them any home for old people; but the Pittsburgh

Synod had for a number of years in contemplation the founding of such a home, and made all the preliminary arrangements about three years ago. And in the spring of 1907 a dwelling-house was rented for the accommodation of several persons who had asked to be cared for, and the temporary home was placed under the care of an experienced and trusted deaconess, Sister Katherine Foerster. Eight acres of land were purchased for the permanent home, but at that juncture the very valuable gift was received from Mrs. Jane R. Passavant of a beautiful oak grove of ten acres adjoining the eight acres and fronting 540 feet on Main Street in the village, which gives the institution an ideal location.

On this ground two beautiful memorial cottages have been erected by a gentleman notable for his works of charity; and the board of managers have finished Sections One and Two of the ultimate large structure. These buildings are substantial and beautiful and are equipped with all the latest improvements and appliances of such institutions. The amount invested at the present time is fully $45,000.

The Zelenople Flouring Mills, of which C. B. Harper is proprietor, has a capacity of fifty barrels of flour and fifteen tons of feed daily. The first mill on the site was erected in the early part of the nineteenth century, and was operated for many years by water power, but for the last forty years both steam and water power have been used. The present building was erected in 1853 by John Herr. The mill subsequently became the property of Albert Seidel, who owned and operated it for about forty years, when, in 1891, it was purchased by its present owner, Mr. Harper. The latter also owns a large feed store in Zelenople, which is doing a prosperous business.

The Iron City Sanitary Manufacturing Company was organized in 1899. Its officers are A. A. Fraunheim, president; J. A.

general offices in Pittsburg. The plant occupies twelve acres and gives employment to six hundred men. The manufactured product consists of plumbers' supplies and enameled ware and commands a wide and increasing market. The company owns considerable property in the west end of the borough and has made some notable improvements, building a number of cottage homes. It is the largest manufacturing concern in Zelenople.

There are several other manufacturing concerns beginning operations in Zelenople, among them the Specialty Foundry Company and the Kerner Manufacturing Company.

Among the leading merchants are the following: Chas. E. Reed and Alpheas Sittler, druggists; A. Seaton & Son, lumber; P. C. Frederick, proprietor of the Stahl Distillery; H. W. Kauffman, boots and shoes; Geo. King, confectioner; John Blum, shoe store; the Herman Pneumatic Machine Company, incorporated in 1906, with a capital stock of $75,000; J. J. Kennedy, groceries and builders' supplies; Zenas McMichael (J. P.), real estate and insurance; Edwin Meeder, general merchandise; Fred Zehner, farm implements and feed store; H. E. Dean & Co., clothiers; A. H. Meeder, dry goods; Fred Eyles, music store; John E. Koehner, proprietor of the Connoquenessing Valley News; J. Dindinger & Son, dry goods; F. S. Goehring, tinner; G. Householder, farm implements; A. Latshaw & Son, grocers; H. G. McCinn, merchant; Edwin Zehner, furniture and undertaking; Zelenople Hardware Co.; B. M. Hildebrand, clothing; Solomon's Clothing Store, and Hess and Son, merchant tailors. Doctors, A. G. Duncan, R. E. Gallagher and F. W. Cunningham have up-to-date dental parlors, while among the leading physicians are Drs. A. V. Cunningham, S. E. Ralston, R. A. Reed and John A. Kerr.

The new Hotel Stokey, proprietor, Henry W. Stokey, is an up-to-date, well equipped hostelry. The Stokey House, conducted by William and A. G. Eicholtz, is also doing a successful business.

The Peoples National Bank commenced business in October, 1904, and is operated under a capital of $50,000. Its present officers are C. J. D. Strohecker, president; W. J. Lamberton, vice president; A. B. Crawford, cashier, and E. P. Young, assistant cashier. Its directors are all men of business ability and experience.

The First National Bank of Zelenople began business in 1881 and was organized as a national bank in 1902. Its capital is $50,000. It is now in its twenty-eighth year of successful banking. Every accommodation consistent with conservative banking is accorded to its patrons. The officers are H. M. Wise, president; C. B. Harper, vice president; C. S. Passavant, vice president; W. H. Gelbach, cashier; H. Kloffenstein, assistant cashier.

Zelenople has two systems of telephone service—the Bell and the Peoples of Butler, which is associated with the P. & A. telephone system of Pittsburg, with an exchange near Zelenople.

The borough has an efficient Volunteer Fire Department, under the command of Chief M. S. Shaw; also an adequate water plant, which was installed at a cost of $27,000. There are over five miles of sewerage, $4,500 having been spent for this purpose during 1908.

The B. & O. Railroad and the B. R. & P. R. R. furnish steam railroad service, the latter entering the borough over the tracks of the B. & O. The P., H., B. & N. C. Railway furnishes electric communication with outlying points.

Zelenople has a commodious opera house, located on the second floor of the First National Bank Building.

The fraternal orders are represented by the Masons, Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias, etc., the lodges being all in a prosperous condition.

Captain Wilson Post, No. 496, G. A. R., was organized March 23, 1883, with twelve charter members.

Major L. C. Brinton Camp, No. 221, Sons of Veterans, was established at Zelenople in October, 1888, with J. F. Knapp as captain, and Cyrus Ruby and George Kradel as lieutenants.

The Women's Christian Temperance Union was organized May 24, 1886, its first officials being Mrs. F. G. Frishkorn, president; Mrs. C. S. Passavant, vice-president; Eliza Bastian, secretary, and Mrs. H. M. Bentle, treasurer.

Town Officials.—Burgess, Chas. Stokey; councilmen, E. P. Young, Chas. S. Passavant, Jr., Wm. Frishkorn, A. G. Eicholtz, H. E. Seaton, Jacob Gelbach, Gillert Goehring; borough clerk, Dr. F. W. Cunningham; tax collector, Geo. Henseholder; borough treasurer, A. B. Crawford; water works superintendent, John Lauten; school directors, Rev. Hugh Leith, Dr. S. E. Ralston, Geo. King, Chas. Gallagher, Fred Frishkorn, Wm. A. Swain; justices of the peace, Zenas McMichael, H. N. Teeple; constable, John Loten; chief of police, Edward Knauff.

EVANS CITY.

This borough, incorporated in 1882, dates back as a settlement to the pioneer days, when it was known as Boggs' Mill. It was surveyed and laid out by William Purviance for Thomas B. Evans in 1838, and was thereafter known as Evansburg until it received its present appellation. Although an old settlement, its advancement was slow and uncertain until the advent of the railroad in 1878, since which time its growth has been phenomenal. Its population of sixty-eight in 1880 could almost be multiplied by ten in 1890, the census of that year showing it to be 637. It was nearly doubled in the next decade, with a population of 1,203 in 1900, and is about 1,500 at the present time (January, 1909). The total assessed value of Evans City is $66,727.

The borough is located on Breakneck Creek, lying partly in Jackson and partly in Forward Townships. Before white settlement had been made, the site was a favorite Indian camping ground, the red men giving the name of Big Beaver Run to the creek. The French, however, knew it as Casse-con-ase, or Breakneck Creek, a name which survived the times.

Robert Boggs, in 1796, exchanged a mare for 400 acres of land and erected a log cabin where now is a store in Evans City. He opened a tavern, the nearest settlement at that time being Duncan's tavern, six miles away. He was followed here soon after by John Dunn, John Rea, and William and Michael Martin. In 1804 the Boggs mill was built, and although it was a rude structure and crude in its equipment, it was kept very busy, being a valuable adjunct to the community. Major Reese Evans worked in this mill for some years prior to 1820, and under him Thomas B. Evans learned the trade. The latter, in 1836, purchased the mill and 200 acres of Boggs, and in 1838 built the new mill and had the town laid out. His death occurred within a few years, before he had a chance to make a success of his venture in town building. His widow subsequently married Jacob Balkams and moved away.

The first store here was started by John Rea, whose success as a merchant led to his embarking in the hotel business. His son, William Rea, of Adams Township, was one of the prominent early-day politicians of Butler County. John Rea finally traded his hotel for the farm of John O'Connor, whose success in the business did not prove so good. He rented to W. H. Johnston, who was a son-in-law of Michael Martin. Mr. Martin kept store in Harmony before moving here, as did Jonathan Ransom. Thomas Wilson, a large land owner of Jackson Township, moved to the village and was one of the first to build after it was laid out. Thomas McQuoil and Samuel Bishop were early shoemakers in this district; and Joseph Mellwain, who was known to the settlers as "the generous peddler," became a merchant of the place. He for twenty-five years made weekly trips to Pittsburg with farm produce, returning with dry goods, notions and groceries for his trade. Other early residents, many of whom did not remain long, were William and Josiah Logan, brothers-in-law of Thomas B. Evans; "Big Dan" and "Little Dan" McIntosh; the McCunes; Joseph McAllister, the wheelwright; Samuel Kirk, the justice; a man named Turk, who was working on an invention to run machinery by sand; the Balkams; James Wilson, an apothecary; Kade Miller, a school teacher; Thomas Reed, a blacksmith; Jonas Bollaender, who cast aside his trade as a wagonmaker and engaged in school teaching; Henry Barkey, local preacher of the Church of God and one of the early merchants here, who afterward founded the town of Barkeyville; John Barkey, who conducted a store here; James Harbaugh, a horse trader; Joseph Harbaugh, for years the leading blacksmith and a respected citizen; Henry Mickle, a freighter and huckster, who became established in the hotel business in the fifties, and Abraham Huntzberger. John Kane, a stonemason by trade, in the early years cut the markings on the headstones in the cemetery. He established a quarry near the Plains church in Adams Township, and after years of solitude moved to Evansburg. He built an air-furnace, much to the curiosity of the people and more to their surprise when a moulder named Symmington pronounced it practical and rented it. Mr. Symmington carried on a successful business in plows, points, stoves and other necessary articles of hardware until the Kane Furnace was burned out. In 1843 Joseph Mellwain established a tannery, and in 1844 employed Lewis Gansz, who had previously been foreman in the Harmony tannery and also operated Magee's tannery on the Connoquenessing. Mr. Gansz purchased the plant in 1849 and operated it until he was succeeded in the business by his son, who continued for some years.

Dr. Cornell was the first local practitioner of medicine and his opportunities were great, as the nearest competitor was at Harmony. He remained but a short time. The next to locate here was Dr. William Sterrett, who prospered, as did his successor, Dr. William Irvine.

The first hotel with any pretensions of class was the one established by Henry Stokay in 1864, in the old Randolph House, and four years later J. N. Miller, who had been a shoemaker, entered the business. Eight years later the latter erected one of the finest hotels in the county, at that time, giving it the name of the Miller House. The roof was carried away in the storm of August 19, 1880, and the building otherwise damaged, but at a considerable expense the damage was immediately repaired. Charles H. Miller succeeded to the ownership of this hotel in 1891, and in 1893 made further extensive improvements in the building and its furnishings. The Central House, opposite the Miller House, was opened up by Henry W. Stokay in 1881, who conducted it until 1888. It was later conducted by Jacob Hyle under the name of the Hyle House. The Commercial Hotel is now conducted by G. A. Gehm.

The Citizens Bank of Evans City was incorporated February 8, 1894, with a capital stock of $50,000. Edward Dambach was elected president; Daniel Markel, vice-president, and John Rohrer, cashier. These gentlemen, with Jacob Dambach, Zeno Markel, W. Fowler, A. M. Fowler, W. H. Weir and P. D. Gelbach, were stockholders. This bank succeeded the well known banking establishment of Jacob Dambach & Son, which had its inception in 1878. On September 1, 1907, this bank became the Citizens National Bank of Evans City, a Savings Department also being added at that time. The institution is in a prosperous condition.

Evans City, or rather the settlement of the early days, was in the school district whose school was the old log house a half mile west. The village continued under the Jackson township school board jurisdiction until its creation as an independent school district in 1882. There is now one public school, with rooms, six teachers, and an enrollment of 300 pupils.

After the incorporation of the borough in 1882 Edward Dambach was elected the first burgess, the date of his election being September 22d. With the rapid growth of the borough, safeguards were established for the citizens and their property, and all the conveniences of a model residence city provided. In 1888 a calaboose was erected; in 1889 fire apparatus was purchased; in April, 1890, street lamps were ordered, as well as water pipes for a system of water-works. In August, 1892, permission was given to the Evans City Natural Gas Company to lay pipes and furnish gas to the citizens.

Amana Baptist Church was organized March 22, 1820, and Rev. Andrew Clark came as the first pastor. In 1850 the church at Breakneck united with that at Zeligople as Amana church. About the time of the war the church organization all but ceased. In 1881 some thirty-three members withdrew from an independent Baptist Church, and in 1882, when the Evans City Baptist church was constituted, the council of Amana Baptist church decided that there was not sufficient Baptist strength here to support two churches. Twenty-six members of the Amana society and seven former members organized the new church, which now has a membership of about one hundred and forty. The present pastor is Rev. W. E. Ruch.

The United Presbyterian Church was founded about the year 1837 by Rev. Mr. Breaden and Elder Hall of Portersville. Services were held in the frame school building standing in the old United Presbyterian Cemetery until 1842, when a brick house of worship was erected where the present church stands. The church building was burned during the dry summer of 1854. The present frame edifice was erected at a cost of $4,000, and was dedicated in April, 1888. A fine parsonage was erected at the head of Van Buren Street in 1890, at a cost of $2,500. The present pastor is Rev. C. H. Marshall. The church has a membership of about 130; the Sabbath school seventy-five to eighty.

St. Peter's Evangelical Lutheran Church organized by Revs. Bassler and Muntz, is a contemporary of the German Lutheran and Reformed Congregation. In 1849 it was known as the Reformed Church, then united with the German Lutherans. They continued until August 2, 1853, when fifteen of the thirty families forming the united congregation held distinct Reformed services in the church. In 1869 the society received from former associates a share of the value of buildings and grounds and erected a church building. A second church was built in 1875 and used as a German Lutheran church, being changed in the latter part of 1907 to both German and English. Rev. Charles J. Zeigel, who assumed the duties of the pastorate in 1907, is still in charge. The congregation has 230 communicants; Sabbath school attendance, 150. Two of the charter members are still living—George Marburger and Mrs. Lotz, the former being now ninety-six years old. The present building, a fine brick structure, was erected in 1897 at a cost of about $20,000.

St. Peter's Evangelical Union Church was organized in 1849 by Rev. Henry Muntz as the Evansburg Lutheran and Reformed Church, but the union was of short duration. The congregation divided on August 2, 1853, Rev. Muntz organizing St. Peter's German Lutheran church and taking with him fifteen families, this branch of the church retaining the original building, which had been erected in 1849-1850.

The Presbyterian Church was founded in 1882 by some of the members of the old Plains Church congregation, not as the result of any dissension in the church, but because of the great distance to the house of worship. Rev. G. M. Potter, who was at that time supply at the Plains church, assisted in the organization of the new congregation and in raising funds for the erection of the church at Evans City. A building was erected at a cost of $1,800 on a lot donated by James Sutton, and was ready for occupancy in January, 1883, being dedicated the first Sunday in that month, with Revs. Dr. Smith and Potter officiating. The small debt remaining was soon cleared away, and the church has been exceedingly prosperous.

St. John's Reformed Church was organized about 1888, and has at present a membership of about 300, with a flourishing Sunday school of 230. Rev. A. H. Ginder has been pastor since 1904.

The Methodist Episcopal Church is the outgrowth of the old class at Caleb Richmond's in Forward Township, which later consolidated with the Brownsdale Class. A church building was erected at a cost of $3,000, the lot being donated by John Stewart, and the church was dedicated on October 27, 1889. Rev. Frank Prosser was the first pastor. The church was joined to the Harmony circuit in 1893, when it became a station. A parsonage was erected in 1896, also costing $3,000. In 1895 the church was repaired at a cost of $500, largely due to John Irwin. The present pastor is Rev. Albert C. Saxman. There is a membership of 140, with a Sunday school enrollment of ninety. The school has a library donated by Mr. Irwin.

There were originally burying grounds maintained in connection with the various churches in or near the borough. In February, 1890, further burials were prohibited in them on petition of numerous citizens, because of the drainage, which, it was set forth, was a menace to the health and life of the residents of a populous section of the borough.

The Evans City Cemetery Association was incorporated, January 7, 1891, with H. J. Ifft, John Rohner, George Marburger, Enos Barkey and J. A. Ripper as directors. A suitable site was obtained and laid out into lots, and has been made most attractive in its beauty. It contains many handsome monuments, one of which is the soldiers' monument to the unknown dead, erected in 1894.

Capt. William Stewart Post, No. 573, G. A. R., was formerly number 513, the change being made in 1894. The post received its charter April 23, 1888, the name bestowed upon it being in honor of Capt. William Stewart, who lived in Adams Township when the war broke out. In 1862 Captain Stewart organized at Evans City a company of soldiers, which entered the service as Company D, Eleventh Pennsylvania Volunteers. He met death in the battle of Fredericksburg, and in compliance with the request he had previously made was buried on the battlefield. James P. Boggs was the first commander of the post. The present commander is Nicholas Kramer; commander elect, S. Q. Blair. A handsome monument has been erected by the post at a cost of $1350, to the thirty-eight comrades from Evans City and the vicinity, buried in unknown graves, this being the second monument of the kind erected in the United States. This post, through the congressman of the district, also secured the passage of a law to donate cannons to the various G. A. R. posts, Stewart post receiving two of these military souvenirs.

Some of the leading fraternal orders are represented in Evans City, including the Odd Fellows, the Knights of Pythias, the Modern Woodmen, the K. O. T. M., etc., all of which are in a prosperous condition.

The Bell and People's systems supply good telephone service to the people of Evans City, the former being established prior to 1895 as a pay station. The People's system was put in about five years since.

Evans City is on the main line of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad between Pittsburg and Chicago. The city has electric transportation facilities by means of the Pittsburg, Harmony, Butler & New Castle Railway, which has operated cars since July, 1908, this place being a junction on the line from Pittsburg to New Castle and Butler.

The present borough officials are as follows: Burgess, H. C. Boggs; members of council, W. C. Douglas, S. J. Irvine, Samuel Hill, Enos Barkey, Oscar Shoup, Albert Clay and E. A. Gibson. Treasurer, George Fehl; secretary to council, Albert Lutz; tax assessor, John Staff; tax collector, S. Q. Blair; judge of election, Charles Anthony; inspectors—Victor A. Barnhart, Albert Lutz; justice of the peace, I. N. Graham; constable, Nicholas Kramer; auditors, V. A. Barnhart and Joseph Cooper. School directors—C. Fred Hyle, Dr. N. A. Dombart, Dr. F. V. Thomas, A. F. Pfeifer, John Kline and J. E. Holbein. The postmaster is Miss Lily Watters.

Evans City can boast of paved streets and cement sidewalks.

Among the leading business houses may be mentioned Zeman's dry goods establishment; B. H. Eber's "Pittsburg Bargain Store;" Geo. Ifft & Sons (H. J. Ifft, proprietor), general merchandise, wagons, farm implements, etc.; Meeklas Bros., and Robert Hudson, general merchandise; C. I. Dunbar, groceries; Smathers & Cooper, groceries and feed; D. Bates, boots and shoes; Bussy, Markel Co., hardware, wagons, farm implements, etc., also plumbing and gas fitting; Mrs. L. E. Shoup, hardware and crockery; B. W. Dunbar, hardware; J. D. Thomas and J. M. List, druggists; Andrew Schoeffels, merchant tailor; C. Ferd Hyle, furniture and undertaking; John Marlburger, meat market; W. C.

Douglas, harness store; E. Barkey, coal and feed. A. J. Dambach and P. J. Ripper conduct blacksmith's shops, V. A. Barnhart deals in real estate; Drs. A. W. Hyle and F. V. Waldron conduct up-to-date dental parlors and Doctors J. M. List, H. M. Wilson, V. F. Thomas and N. A. Dombart take care of the general health of the community. The United States Express has an office here, while the Western Union Telegraph Company is also represented.

MANUFACTURERS.

The Edward Dambach Company was established about 1883 by Edward Dambach, and was incorporated October 22, 1903, as the Edward Dambach Company, with a capital stock $60,000 and with S. J. Irvine, president, W. P. Kinsey, vice-president, and J. E. Holbein, secretary and treasurer. The concern employs fifty men, turning out a general line of planing-mill work amounting to from $75,000 to $100,000 annually; also interior finishings of all descriptions. It is the largest concern of the kind in this section and has had a very prosperous existence from the start.

The Evans City Jobbing Foundry was established in 1907 and is owned by Theodore and Jacob Ulrich and George Burrows as a partnership. It is engaged in general repair work.

W. C. Laderer conducts a manufactory of buggies and other vehicles which was originally conducted (from 1888 to 1894) as a repair shop. The manufacture of vehicles was begun in 1894 and the business has since grown to its present large proportions. The factory turns out 1200 jobs annually and in addition 300 sleighs, besides a large amount of repair work. The volume of business is from $100,000 to $125,000 annually, and employment is given to fifty men.

Evans City Roller Mills were established in 1835 by Thomas Evans and the mill is now the oldest building in the town. It has a capacity of fifty barrels of flour per day.

South Penn Oil Company, Midland Division, Boiler Department, is under the supervision of A. E. Dunkle. Repair shop for the South Penn Oil Company. Offices for the Northern Division South Penn Oil Company; supply store for all kinds of oil well supplies for use of the company. Nine men are employed besides the office force.

The reservoir and pumping station for supplying water to the borough was installed in 1894 at a cost of $14,000, with a 20,000 bbls. reservoir and 140 lbs. pressure.

A volunteer fire department was established in June, 1896. The department is now a well drilled organization and took the first premium at McKees Rocks for the best drilled company in the vicinity. The cost of the fire building and hall was largely donated by John A. Irvine, the balance being raised by the citizens.

MERCER TOWNSHIP.

Mercer Township, one of the original thirteen townships of Butler County, established in 1804, was so subdivided in 1854 as to become the smallest of all the final thirty-three townships, but, nevertheless it has always made a good showing and in some respects has advanced beyond other sections of larger area. Its citizens are uniformly of a class that has been home-making and home-building and its lands are notably well tilled and improved and its natural resources, especially its fine coal deposits, have been developed.

One of the most interesting facts concerning any section is the establishing of the personality of the men whose courage and enterprise made it habitable for those who came after and undoubtedly this honor belongs to one Col. Robert Reed, in reference to Mercer Township. He appears to have come to this section from Cumberland County, Penna., and opened the first tavern in Butler County, building his inn in 1797, on the old Indian road to Franklin.

He was an officer in the militia and was locally noted for many of the attributes most valuable in a pioneer. While many of the subsequent early settlers came from the eastern counties of the State, very many others immediately located in Butler County after landing in the United States, a large percentage coming from Ireland. From County Down came Samuel Barnes and family and his descendants still own a part of the original property. Other early pioneers were: James Shields Major John Welsh, Thomas Dean, Ebenezer Brown and Michael Powers. Indians were numerous and not always friendly and early records show this added danger to the peaceful settlers. The old Indian chief, Cornplanter, and many of his warriors, in the course of time accepted the invasion of the whites and even became visitors in the homes of many settlers, but all danger from wandering savages was not removed, in remote regions, for many years.

The names of all the early pioneers have scarcely been preserved, but a list of those who, by the purchase of land or for other reasons became prominent in this section, between 1798 and 1830, includes James Hartley, David McKisson, Francis Wilson, Adam Funk, Zelotus Jewell, John Evans, Henry Evans, Ezekiel Brady, William Gill, Ephraim Harris, John R. Harris, Robert Walker, Alexander Seaton, Alexander Donaghy, the Johnsons, James Bell, the Cochranes, James Lee, Jonathan McMillan, William Stanley, William Waddle, John McCoy, Washington Parker, William P. Brown, James Forker, Josiah Hardy, Thomas McElree and John Dougherty.

Mercer Township kept abreast of other sections in the matter of educating its children and providing religious privileges. Even as early as 1799 a school was established on the site of the present borough of Harrisville and the first teacher was Frederick Peel. In a few years other schools were established and Mercer Township has the honor of having employed the first female teacher, in Butler County, a Miss Jane Smith. After Harrisville became the center of business and population in the township, much interest in educational matters was shown there. In 1830 a school was conducted and taught by Samuel E. Harris and among the subsequent teachers were many men who later became prominent in professional life. In April, 1856, an academy was started and later fine school buildings were erected which gave the children of the township all reasonable advantages. In 1908 there were four public schools in the township with an enrollment of about ninety pupils.

Aside from the tilling of the soil and often in conjunction with it, many homely industries flourished in early township life. Blacksmiths opened their shops, merchants displayed stocks of goods, mills were built and by 1845 the development of coal deposits had begun. Forestville was a town that grew up around the coal mines and, although the coal banks there have been about exhausted, many people make the place their home and business houses find customers. The distilling industry was one of considerable importance between 1830 and 1847, there being ten distilleries in operation within a radius of three miles.

Harrisville, now a busy mart of trade in the township, was surveyed for Ephraim Harris as early as 1825 and he was the first postmaster and was succeeded by his son, Samuel E. The town was incorporated as a borough in 1846. The first business house in this tract was the blacksmith shop of Ezekiel Brady, the first tavern was built by Col. Reed and the first land improved here as a farm, was by James Hartley, and old residents who are proud of their prosperous borough, refer to these three men as the founders of the place. By 1865 there were four stores, a foundry, three blacksmith shops, a carriage shop, one pottery, one cabinet shop, three harness shops, three shoe shops, one grocery, one saloon and two temperance hotels, with three churches and a fair representation of the professions.

Since that time various interests have sprung up and flourished. The flouring mill was built in 1882 by Kerr and Walker and it subsequently passed through several hands until it came under the control of J. M. Sutton & Son, on the death of its previous proprietor, Samuel B. Bingham. The King House now conducted by Frank Webster, was known as the Kerr House until 1893, when E. A. King purchased the property from the widow of Samuel Kerr. The Central Hotel was an old landmark that passed out of existence about 1890.

In 1908 the business interests of the town were represented by C. B. Borland's store, R. L. Brown's furniture store, W. E. Brown, meat-market; R. E. Elick, drugs, D. W. Humphrey & Company's store, H. A. Kelley, farm implements, J. H. Morrison, Jr., harness store, Chas. Snyder's store, W. L. Morrison's store, J. W. Williamson's hardware, Magee & Gibson's clothing store, L. R. Cummings' meat-market, F. L. Moyer's cigar store, J. H. Cochran's tobacco factory, Miss Bird Steen, millinery, James Morrison's livery. The First National Bank, and the Harrisville Telephone Company are noticed in the chapters on banking and telephones. Frank Webster conducts the King House, the only hotel in the town. The estimated population of the town was five hundred and fifty-five. C. M. Brown is the present postmaster.

The borough officials in 1908 were as follows: Burgess—J. F. Struthers; council—Dr. W. B. Campbell president, R. W. Taylor, W. F. Magee, J. M. Williamson, P. A. Shannon, Dr. J. C. Buchanan, secretary; tax collector F. B. Magee; assessor D. J. Kyle; constable—J. W. McGill; street commissioner—J. H. Cochran; treasurer—the First National Bank of Harrisville; auditors—Hugh Morrison, Chas. Snyder, and E. E. Wick.

Harrisville Independent School District, directors: W. E. Foster, president; R. W.

EAU CLAIRE ACADEMY

PUBLIC SCHOOL, EVANS CITY

NORTH WASHINGTON ACADEMY

GERMAN LUTHERAN CHURCH,
ZELIENOPLE

B. P. O. E. BUILDING, BOTTLER

BUILDING USED FOR HIGH SCHOOL,
RENFREW

Kyle, secretary; J. P. Orr, Thos. Hindman, J. M. Farrel and W. E. Bovard; First National Bank of Harrisville, treasurer.

The earliest established church in Mercer Township was the United Presbyterian Church of Harmony, then known as the Boiling Spring Church, which dates back to 1800. The first pastor was Rev. Thomas McClintock, who accepted the call in April, 1803, and served the congregation for thirty years. Worship was first carried on in a log cabin, on Swamp Creek, in 1836 it was succeeded by a frame edifice and in 1889 a commodious stone and brick structure was erected at a cost of about $11,000.00. The Church has a membership of about 280, with a Sabbath School enrollment of over 100, many of the leading families being represented both on its official board and in its benevolent activities, year after year. Rev. H. C. Hildebrand, the present pastor, was called December 1, 1908.

The Presbyterian Church of Harrisville was first organized in 1807, the name then used being West Unity or Unity, and its earliest meeting was in a tent pitched at Rocky Springs. A very eloquent divine, Rev. Samuel Tait, is recalled, who attracted a congregation from fifteen miles distant. The first permanent pastor was Rev. Cyrus Riggs, who served from 1814 until 1834. Later, when some question of church policy became a matter of difference of opinion, a division took place and an Associate Reformed branch came into existence. The last pastor, Rev. H. E. Kaufmann, resigned in February, 1909, and the church is at present without a pastor. The membership is 120 with a Sabbath school of about fifty.

The Methodist Episcopal Church of Harrisville was organized in 1834 by Rev. William Carl and its membership was gathered from Mercer and adjacent townships. Its early services were held in the first public school-house in the township, but in 1842 a meeting-house was built which served its purpose until 1896, when the present edifice was erected at a cost of about $3500.00, the lot being donated by Ashland Walker. The present membership is about 100, with a Sabbath school of about eighty. Rev. J. M. Farewell is the present pastor, he having assumed the charge in Oct. 1905.

Z. C. McQuillen Post, No. 246, G. A. R., was mustered in May 12, 1882, with the following named veterans: C. M. Brown, A. J. McCoy, Lemmel McGill, L. R. Cummins (present commander), W. A. Roberts, W. Cochran, W. J. Neyman, N. J. Maxwell, J. W. Campbell, L. G. Jenkins, David Jenkins, D. W. Locke, W. B. Henderson and Alexander Williams. Time has taken its toll from these honored survivors of the Civil War but the organization, though not holding regular meetings, is still maintained for the purpose of observing Memorial Day and attending the funerals of comrades.

The secret societies of the K. of H., and the J. O. U. A. M. are well supported and show constant interest in the aims for which they were organized.

THE HARRISVILLE MINES.

The first coal mining enterprise on an extensive scale in Butler County had its beginning in 1868 when Benjamin Niblock of Youngstown, Ohio, James M. Bredin, of Butler, and Thompson Kyle, of Harrisville, secured leases on some 50,000 acres of land lying in Pine Township, Mercer County, Irvine Township, Venango County, and in the townships of Mercer, Marion Venango, Allegheny, Parker, Washington and Cherry, in Butler County. This enterprise was undertaken on the supposition that the so-called Harrisville vein of coal which is four feet thick was the principal mining vein in that district. Soon after the first leases were made by Niblock, Bredin and Kyle, a number of capitalists organized the Mercer Mining and Manufacturing Company, and this company built the Shenango and Allegheny Railroad from Shenango Junction to Mercer County to Pardoe and Grove City, and from thence extended the line to New Hope in Butler County. The Harrisville Mine, two miles south of the village of Harrisville, was opened soon after the completion of the road, and was operated until a few years ago, when the vein became exhausted. Coal is being taken from beneath the farms in Mercer Township along the Mercer County line from openings made by the Westerman-Filer Company, near Grove City.

Forestville. This village had its inception when the coal mines were opened at Harrisville Station on the Bessemer Railroad. It is purely a mining village and had a varying population as long as the mines were in operation. Originally it was known as "The Blocks." The post-office was discontinued after the establishing of the rural mail route. After a period of decay lasting almost a decade, the village took on new life, and at the present time it is composed of about twenty-five comfortable dwelling houses, two stores, and a Catholic chapel, the latter being erected in the fall of 1908. The stores of the town are conducted by L. Owens and Nanny Shields. St. Anthony's Chapel was erected during the summer of 1908, and dedicated in October of the same year. It is in charge of Father Lewis of the Capuchin Order at Herman, who conducts services twice a month.

Harrisville Station at the intersection of the Bessemer Railroad and the old Franklin and Mercer Pike, is the successor of the old station that existed for twenty-five years at Harrisville mines. J. C. Bovard & Son's lumber yards are located at the station, and a number of dwelling houses have been erected, indicating that an important village will spring up here within the next few years.

Carter Station, two miles north of Harrisville Station, gave promise of being a village at one time, but since the Harrisville mines were abandoned the only buildings in Carter are the office of the station agent. This locality was once known as Brownville.

Township officials: The township officials in 1908 were as follows: Auditors—Charles Fuhrer, William McLafferty, and Harry Green; road supervisors—Joseph Brown, Abram Snyder, Morris Dunlap, John McCoy; township clerk—Lewis Hamilton; constable—C. C. Kerr; judge of elections—Earl Snyder; inspectors of elections—William McTaggart, M. G. Kane; tax collector—W. H. Williamson; assessor—H. J. Dunwoody.

CHERRY TOWNSHIP.

Cherry Township, partaking in some degree of the characteristics of adjacent townships, was organized in 1854, one of the thirty-three divisions then made of Butler County. Its water courses are Slippery Rock Creek, and Murrin's and Findley's Runs. There is considerable coal in the township, but the only important operations in this line now are those of the W. L. Scott Coal Company, which employs about thirty-five men and loads sixty tons daily. Its property is known as the Windy Mine and is located about two and a half miles northwest of Moniteau. There are also some small banks operated respectively by W. W. Daugherty, W. W. McGregor, E. J. Sproul, L. Walford and T. Simpson, for local consumption only. There is but little oil in the township and none has been found in paying quantities. There is, however, one gas well. Cherry Township is well supplied with limestone, though as yet it has not been much developed as an industry. There is one quarry on the Chas. Bovard farm west of Branchton on the border of the township. Farming is the principal occupation of the inhabitants.

The territory embraced by Cherry Township was opened up about the same time as the sections adjoining it, and it claims Benedict Grossman as its first settler. He came to Cherry Township in 1797.

accompanied by his family, which included his son-in-law, Robert Black, and brought with him a small stock of goods for sale. His wife was Betsy Stivert, around whom might have been woven an interesting romance, for it was her fate to have been taken captive by Indians, in York County, by whom she was kept from 1756 until 1863, when she was permitted to return to her own people. The Grossmans were joined in 1798, by Michael and Sarah Stevenson and their sons, John, James and William, all three of them serving in the War of 1812, and all three dying, of the dreaded Black Rock fever, within ten days of their return home. In 1798 the little settlement was augmented by Andrew Stewart, who served at Black Rock in the War of 1812 and later was a pioneer teacher. John Christy came in 1799, taking up 400 acres of land, a part of which is owned by his descendants, and in the same year came Robert McCallen, who married a daughter of Benjamin Grossman. Other pioneers, who either came directly to Cherry Township from distant sections, or, as in many cases, from adjacent townships, were Alexander Hutchison and family, the five Russells, Joseph Porter, John Hockenberry, John Smith, Sr. and James Bovard—a somewhat incomplete list, but one bearing representative names.

Coaltown. Coal mining being formerly the important industry of this locality, the villages of the township mainly grew in the vicinity of the mines. The most important of these was Coaltown, or Coalville. It is situated on the line between Slippery Rock and Cherry Townships and its building followed the beginning of operations by the Union Coal and Coke Company, in 1879. A branch of the Shenango Railroad connected with Butler, and in the year following the founding of the place, the company had thirty coke ovens completed and twenty-two two-story dwelling. The mines were worked out years ago, however, and operations here were abandoned. The postoffice was established in 1882. There is now one store, conducted by H. Elliott.

Gomersal. The village of Gomersal, so named by the Gomersal Coal Company, was another thriving coal center, having many company houses beside outside buildings, and railroad connection with other points. It has since been entirely abandoned.

Anandale was organized about 1840, when John Hanna built a tavern and opened the first store. He was the first postmaster and a leading man in the affairs of the place. The post-office was discontinued when free rural mail routes were established. The village now has one general store conducted by W. S. Graham. There is also a German Lutheran church here. The village contains about thirty-five people.

Moniteau is a village with a population of about thirty people. There is now no post-office. E. S. Sankey conducts a store here.

New Hope Post-office or Bovard Station, is located in the western part of the township on the Bessemer Railway and has about fifty people. The postmistress is C. Duffy, who also conducts the only store. There is also a mill owned by E. Riddle. The New Hope Presbyterian Church, having ninety members, is located here with Rev. Taylor, pastor.

A destructive cyclone, in which an immense amount of property was destroyed and Mrs. William Barron and Henry Hendley lost their lives, while many others were seriously injured, swept through this township on June 30, 1882, and is yet vividly recalled, but has fortunately never been repeated. The cyclonic cloud is described to have been from forty to fifty rods wide, with a rapidity of motion not to be measured.

Cherry Township's early schools were of a primitive type, and none appear to have been considered prior to 1815. Andrew Stewart and Joseph Porter were the earliest teachers. In 1908 there were seven public schools, 187 scholars enrolled, and seven teachers.

As in other sections of Butler County, the Presbyterian faith is strong in Cherry Township and among the earliest religious organized bodies was the Pleasant Valley Presbyterian Church. This was organized in 1845, by Revs. Young and Munson. The society built a proper house of worship in 1846, and in 1847, Rev. John Moore was installed as first pastor. The society was incorporated in 1888. Rev. Bradshaw is the present pastor.

The New Hope Presbyterian Church was organized November 17, 1879, by Rev. J. H. Marshall, with a membership of forty-two individuals, and the first pastor was Rev. A. W. Lawrence.

The Methodist Episcopal Church of Anandale was organized in 1858 and belongs to the Centerville circuit. The log structure erected in 1859 was destroyed by fire a few years later. In 1873 a church building was completed at Anandale village at a cost of about $2000. This church is in the same pastoral charge with North Hope and West Sumbury.

Township Officials: Justices of the peace—U. Book and J. S. Campbell; tax collector—J. Critchlow; constable—S. E. Christy; tax-assessor—U. Book; road commissioners—E. S. Sankey, B. L. Kockenberry, and J. T. Black; auditors—M. Hockenberry, R. Black and J. Wolford; clerk—D. Christy.

CONNOQUENESSING TOWNSHIP.

This was one of the four original townships which embraced that territory now included in Butler County before its segregation from Allegheny County. Within its limits lay all of what now constitutes Cranberry, Jackson, Lancaster and Muddy Creek Townships, and parts of Worth, Brady, Franklin, Connoquenessing, Forward and Adams townships. It was one of the thirteen townships as erected in 1804, with an area nine miles square, and in 1842 was divided into East and West Connoquenessing townships. Its present boundary was fixed in 1854, and has since remained unchanged. Although exceedingly hilly and precipitous in sections, it was distinctly an agricultural township until the development of the oil industry. Farming and oil production are now the principal industries. Coal mining was carried on in a small way at an early day and there is still some slight production. Grist, saw and powder-mills were in operation on the various streams, which furnished excellent water power, but the chief occupation of the thrifty class who settled the country was farming, for which the land is well adapted. All parts of the township are well drained by small streams, which are mainly tributary to Crab Run, the Little Connoquenessing, and the Semicoman. The name, Connoquenessing, was derived from the creek bearing that name, and is an Indian word, meaning, "for a long way straight."

Connoquenessing Township is peopled with a sturdy and intelligent class, many of whose ancestors came from Scotland, Ireland, England and Germany and cast their fortunes with this new country in its creative period. Some there were who had rendered valiant service to the country in its fight for independence, among whom may be mentioned Peter Kinney or McKinney, who was the first settler here, John Welsh, Daniel Graham, Angus Graham and Abdiel McClure. Captain Robert Martin was in command of a company in the War of 1812, and among others who went to the front during that struggle with England were sons of John Welsh, Angus Graham and Abdiel McClure, above named. Peter McKinney, the first settler, located first in what is now Forward Township in 1792, and shortly after became established at what is now Petersville, the name of which was derived from his Christian name. He built and conducted a tavern at this point, where he continued to reside until his death in 1849. Among the arrivals in 1795 was an unscrupulous land speculator, Dunning McNair by name. He laid claim to a part of the Morris lands, which he sold to some five or six Scotch families of Westmoreland County, who located thereon; these families later made purchase from the rightful owner. John Ekin arrived and erected a cabin in 1795, and the following year brought his wife into the country. Leonard Shannon also came and built a cabin in 1795, but did not bring his family until 1799. Daniel Graham arrived in 1796, and with various other members of the Graham family accumulated several thousand acres of land. Mordecai McLeod, John and Henry Beighley, Francis Stanford, Nicholas Muhleisen, William Campbell, James Plummer, Abdiel and Andrew McClure, and Stephen and Joseph Crawford made settlement in 1796, and became large land-owners. A year or two later witnessed the arrival of Peter, George and Jacob Beighley, and they were soon followed by Charles McGinnis Sr. and his son Charles, Israel Gibson, Thomas Gray, John Girty, Thomas Girty, Ann Girty, Alexander Bryson, John Welsh, Matthew White, John Richardson, Col. Henry Pillow and Moses Richardson. Nicholas Muhleisen was a weaver, cooper, carpenter, tinner and all-around mechanic who was a valuable addition to the community. The Girtys, above mentioned, were related to the notorious Simon Girty, known to history as a traitor to the American cause during the Revolution. Thomas Dodds, who settled south of Mt. Chestnut in 1800, was one of the early commissioners of Butler County. Robert Martin, whose father, William Martin, came from Ireland and located in Connoquenessing in 1801, was captain of a company during the War of 1812, and afterward served with ability in various public offices in the county. Robert Hays operated a distillery in this township early in the nineteenth century; his son, Samuel, established a store near the west line of the township, later, and also traveled about, selling goods. William Purviance, a man of prominence in the community, at an early period, was a surveyor by profession and was also owner of the old William Campbell farm and mill, which he purchased in 1810; he served two terms in the State Legislature and was county surveyor three terms. Thomas Alexander came from Ireland prior to 1820, and James Stevenson, George Cowan and Harrison Dyke arrived between 1820 and 1830. Many other substantial citizens became established in the township shortly after 1830.

Numerous mills of various kinds and distilleries have been operated in Connoquenessing Township at different times. The first was the grist-mill of Alexander Bryson, which he erected in 1805 on the Little Connoquenessing south of Mt. Chestnut. Upon his removal from the township he was succeeded as proprietor of the mill by his son, Richard Bryson, who carried on the business until 1828. The latter then sold out to his brother, Joseph, who in 1831 erected a saw-mill near by and operated the grist mill in connection. In 1835 a new mill was begun and was completed in 1837; through numerous changes in ownership, remodeling and repairing, this mill has continued in almost constant operation to recent times. It finally passed into the hands of O. W. Eagle, who built up a flourishing business. Powder Mill run, near Petersville, afforded good water-power which was availed of as early as 1807 by William Campbell, who in that year erected a small grist-mill. He sold out to William Purviance about the year 1810, and the latter converted it into a powder mill. Campbell E. Purviance also built a powder-mill on this stream, which continued in operation until 1854, some years after the other had been abandoned. Numerous mills have been on Crab Run, the first being that constructed by Henry Beighly in 1811, which was conducted by him until his death in 1836. In 1818, David Shannon built the grist, carding and saw-mills on the Semiconan, which bore his name for many years; these gave way in 1849 to a new grist mill erected by William Allen. In 1827, or the year following, Hugh Gibson built a grist mill along the Semiconan, which was later replaced by a new and more modern mill. The latter was conducted successfully by James McKinney until 1865, when he sold out to R. S. Hays.

The pioneers of Connoquenessing early showed an appreciation of the necessity for schools as a foundation for the development and upbuilding of their community. Nicholas Muhleisen was the pioneer teacher and taught in the German language for many years, in the schoolhouse erected on the farm of John Beighley, one and a half miles west of Whitestown. The first English school was conducted at the Ekin home, east of Whitestown, in 1799, by a man named Irvine. The second school building erected was on the trail from Fort Pitt to Venango, between the Connoquenessing and the Little Connoquenessing, about three miles from Evans City. A Mr. Evans was the first teacher, and another of the early teachers was George Lee, who later met his death by drowning below Amber-son's bridge. The township now has seven schools with an attendance of 194 pupils. Daniel Brinamer, Finley Cable, Samuel Steen, Henry Louten, George Eymann, and Alexander Walker comprise the present school board.

The Petersville Methodist Episcopal Church, now known as the Connoquenessing M. E. Church, was organized in the year 1857. This organization was the outgrowth of a campmeeting held in the village of Petersville under the care of Rev. D. P. Mitchell, presiding elder of the Allegheny District. Early in the spring of 1858 an acre of ground was purchased for a church site, and John Ansley, preacher in charge, appointed a building committee. The building was commenced early in the summer and dedicated the following winter. Rev. S. Cronse was the pastor at the time. The sermon was preached by Rev. Wm. Taylor, "Missionary Bishop of Africa." Early in its history the Petersville Church was a part of the Butler Circuit, later it became a part of the Brownsdale and Harmony Circuit, about twenty years ago it was placed with Prospect and Renfrew and the Circuit has since been known as the Prospect Circuit.

The original building is still in use, it is in excellent condition, having been repaired at different times. During the pastorate of Rev. F. B. Cutler a very comfortable parsonage was erected close to the church. Rev. A. B. Leonard, Missionary Secretary of the Methodist church, was pastor in 1863, he was drafted for service in the army but the circuit raised $300 and secured a substitute. In its history this church has held some wonderful revival seasons, times of spiritual refreshing in which hundreds were brought into the Kingdom of God. Rev. F. J. Sparling is the present pastor. The Smday School superintendent is W. C. Fowler.

Mt. Nebo Presbyterian Church, of Whitestown, during its existence of more than a century, has been no mean factor in the development of Connoquenessing Township. In 1805, under the leadership of Rev. Reid Bracken, a church organization was effected. Rev. Bracken was made pastor by the Erie Presbytery, April 20, 1808, and soon after a log church was erected on the site of the present structure. This imposing structure served as the church edifice until late in the twenties, when a stone church was built. Services were held in the latter for more than thirty years, when the present substantial brick building was erected to replace it, in 1859. A charter was granted the church by the Common Pleas Court, on January 6, 1847, and William C. Martin, Abdiel McClure and Thomas J. Gibson were made trustees. Rev. Bracken served the charge with zeal and devotion for a period of thirty-six years, leaving it in 1844. He has had a number of worthy and faithful successors. There are now 112 members. The last regular pastor was the Rev. George Stewart, whose pastorate closed in September, 1907. In 1905 the church celebrated the centennial of its organization. The Sabbath school has an enrollment of sixty. The cemetery belonging to this church had its inception in 1801, when in August a child of Matthew and Frances White, was laid to rest there.

White Oak Springs United Presbyterian Church was organized in 1818 by seceders from the Mt. Nebo Presbyterian Church, under the guidance of the Rev. Isaiah Niblock. Others from that district joined with them, making sixteen members in all. The congregation worshipped in a tent until the completion of their edifice in 1829; the building was of brick and was occupied by them until 1862, when it was replaced by the present frame structure, which was erected at a cost of $3,500. The church was incorporated November 21, 1883. Henry Brunermer, William Shorts, John M. Rose, I. N. Duncan and Dr. J. L. Christie signing the constitution. At the present time there are about 176 members in the congregation, with a Sabbath school enrollment of 128. The Rev. J. M. McCalmont has been the pastor in charge since 1905. Dr. J. L. Christie is clerk of sessions, and J. C. Brandon, superintendent of the Sabbath school.

St. Paul's Reformed Lutheran Church was organized in 1865. The present edifice, which is the second, was erected in 1887. There are now eighty communicants, with a Sunday school enrollment of 104. The Rev. Charles Faust is pastor.

The Church of God, though without a church building, has here a membership of twenty, with Henry Nolshime as overseer.

St. Paul's German Evangelical Protestant United Church of Petersville (Connoquenessing), was organized September 28, 1885. In 1887, a substantial house of worship was erected at a cost of $1,000, and on March 16, 1887, the church organization was incorporated. Rev. E. H. Otting, of Grace Reformed Church, Harmony, accepted this as a charge in 1887 and continued as pastor until March 18, 1894, when he resigned from this and his other charges in the district.

St. John's Evangelical Lutheran Church of Petersville was organized by Rev. E. Cronenwett of Butler. A formal organization was effected on September 25, 1886, and on November 3, of the same year organization was completed at the home of Conrad Nicklass. A house of worship was erected and was dedicated on April 22, 1888. Articles of incorporation were taken out on December 14, 1887. The first pastor, Rev. E. Cronenwett, served until September 14, 1889, and on September 29, 1889, Rev. Louis Wagner was named as his successor. There is now a membership of sixty-five with a good Sunday school attendance.

Whitestown is the oldest village of Connoquenessing Township, dating back to 1799, when Matthew White established a tannery and tavern at this point. It was after the death of this pioneer, that his son, Edward White, had the town laid out in lots, in 1813. The latter succeeded his father as tavern-keeper, and was in turn succeeded by a relative named Matthew White, who conducted the tavern until 1831, when a wave of temperance struck the village and resulted in the tavern being closed. In 1859, a brick building was erected to take the place of the old log structure and frame house which had stood for so many years, and there Joseph Pyle conducted a tavern for a time. In later years S. O. and J. C. Wright and W. H. Alexander leased the building and carried on a general merchandising business; W. H. Alexander and J. H. Dount became owners of the property and also engaged in the mercantile business and conducted the post office. The first merchant in the village was Alfred Pearce, and he was followed by Joseph W. Pollock and John W. Brandon. Samuel Reed also kept store in the brick building which replaced the old tavern, and among other business men who were located here at one time were: Andrew Spear, Jacob Cratty, Thomas Cratty and Andrew W. McCollough. Mr. Neese now keeps a store here. Edward White was the first postmaster, serving from 1831 until 1839.

Connoquenessing Borough, formerly known by the name of Petersville, and at a still earlier date by that of Petersburg, was first named in 1848 in honor of Peter McKinney, the pioneer, who came to Butler County in 1792 and soon after settled at this location. In the early days the place went by the name of McKinney's Tavern. In 1812 John Crowe settled on the site but after a time moved away. The first merchant was Alexander Douthett, who before becoming permanently established here, came to the tavern one day each week and disposed of wares. He finally settled here and opened a store. His example was followed by Thomas Critchlow. The Douthett store was sold in 1837 to William and Henry Purviance, and afterwards passed through a number of hands. David Marshall opened a store in 1848, and Hugh Stevenson a tavern in 1849. A survey was made of the place in June, 1849, and town lots laid out, many sales being recorded during that year. The village has always been a good trading point, and the general stores of W. C. Nicklass, J. T. and W. A. Purviance, and R. Barnhart & Son, and the drug store of Dr. J. L. Christie, who is also the resident physician, have thrived under a liberal patronage of the people in recent times. In 1880 began the manufacture of agricultural implements which developed into a good business. Thomas Critchlow was made the first postmaster in 1848, and he was succeeded by George Brunermer, Hugh Stevenson, and others. The name of the office was changed to Connoquenessing in 1871. The present postmaster is Miss Laura Heckert. The nearest railway station is Reibold, two miles distant on the B. & O. Railroad. The P. H. B. and N. C. Electric line passes through the borough. The People's and the Bell Telephone systems are installed here. There are seventy-six producing oil wells within the limits of the borough. The present burgess is W. A. Purviance; council—William Burr, J. H. Varner, John Black, Chas. Lobaugh, Daniel McNaughton and F. E. Barnhart; assessor—J. E. Brandon; collector—J. L. Van Dyke; justice of the peace—J. C. Brandon; high constable—John Nolsheim; constable—Geo. Gerwig; auditors—Ira Henshaw, Carl Bish, and Conrad Nickolas.

There is one public school building, with two rooms and two teachers and an enrollment of over one hundred pupils. It was erected as a single-room building, but afterwards remodeled and arranged as at present. It is an excellent school. The population of the borough is 450.

Buttercup is the name of a small settlement, the history of which dates back to the fifties when a store was established there by George Ansley and P. W. Thomas. They continued the business for sixteen years, after which it passed through hands. In 1892, R. S. Henry erected a new store building and embarked in business. Buttercup Post Office was established in the seventies, J. N. Stephenson being the first postmaster.

C. E. Shannon and J. B. Martin are the present justices of the peace in the township. William Cooper is constable; Calvin Stevenson, tax collector; Joseph Shakely, assessor.

BRADY TOWNSHIP.

Brady Township was organized in 1854 and was named in honor of Captain Brady, the famous scout. Through the northeastern part, along the north boundary line, flows the picturesque Slippery Rock Creek, and the south boundary line is formed by the Muddy Creek, these, with their small tributaries affording the township excellent drainage. The surface is in places rugged and excels in scenic beauty, the summits of the divide between the two streams sometimes reaching a height of 350 to 400 feet above the bed of the streams. Coal underlies much of the land, and of the industries mining has always taken the lead in this community. Potter's clay and iron ore have been found in certain sections, and great boulders lying about has made quarrying easy. There are many excellent farms throughout the townships, whose improvements are in keeping with the high type of citizenship here to be found.

The pioneer of the country now embraced within Brady Township was Luke Covert, a native of Holland, who settled in 1796, and he was followed in the same year by James Campbell, Alexander Irvine and Bartol Laffer. Daniel and Elizabeth McDeavitts, with three children came in April, 1797, and the following year witnessed the arrival of Edward, James and Andrew Douglass and John McClymonds. The Douglass family located on and cleared the land on which the historic old Stone House was built in 1822. John Thompson, a native of Ireland, located about a mile south of the Douglass cabin in the spring of 1809, and was followed in the same year by James, William and John McJunkin, John Wigton and Daniel Carter. In 1800, Conrad Snyder, Sr., a native of Switzerland, together with his son, Conrad, and Andrew Ellsworth, a veteran of the Revolutionary War, settled northeast of the Douglass cabin. Other pioneers and the time of arrival were John Morrow in 1801, John Hockenberry in 1803, John Ralston in 1803, and Robert Hockenberry in 1810. Soon after his coming, John Ralston built a log mill near the site of the present village of West Liberty. The Snow Flake Mill, operated for years by the Crolls, was built on the same site. The Iddings grist mill was built in 1808, or the year following, and among its various owners were Henry Evans, John Wick, Caleb Jone, Jonathan Clutton and Samuel Turk. This mill stood until destroyed by the ravages of Time, and was located south of the Douglass cabin. On McDeavitt's Run was built about the year 1810 what was known as the Smith Neil mill, afterward owned by Nicholas Klingensmith and the Hoge Brothers. This mill did not survive the early period.

The census reports of Brady Township shows the following population at the periods mentioned; 701 in 1860; 600 in 1870; 772 in 1880; 729 in 1890. Its present population is about 935, including West Liberty borough. In 1906 J. W. McNeese was elected justice of the peace.

It was some years after the arrival of the pioneer settlers that a schoolhouse was built, but as in other communities classes were organized and taught, either by some of the settlers or wandering teachers. A school was taught about the year 1808 by Henry Evans, and later another was taught where the Franklin road crosses Muddy Creek, by a man named Fletcher. John Wigton, who was not an educated man but gifted as a scribe, conducted writing classes at his home, and also at West Liberty and other places. Thomas Gorley taught in an old log schoolhouse at West Liberty. In 1908 there were five schools in the township, as many teachers, and 111 scholars.

Forest Grange No. 370, was organized in 1874 and for many years was one of the strongest organizations of farmers in the county. In 1904 a new hall was built. T. J. Thompson was master in 1908 and R. C. Thompson secretary.

The Cumberland Presbyterian Church of West Liberty had its inception in meetings which were held by John and Jacob Covert, Jesse Cornelius and John Wick, and their wives, in the barn of John Wick, where they gathered to hear Rev. A. M. Bryan or Mr. Gallagher preach. Some years after organization, they, in common with the people of various other Protestant denominations, erected what became known as Union Church, but as the church thrived and their congregation grew they became sole owners. Prior to the erection of this edifice they held meetings in a log-house, which on week days was devoted to school purposes.

St. John's Methodist Episcopal Church, in the Centreville charge, was organized about the time the Civil War closed, to succeed the disbanded society at Hickory Mills. It became familiarly known as Hall's Church, through the activity of Jesse Hall in its organization and maintenance and his instrumentality in securing the erection of a house of worship in 1868.

The Methodist Episcopal Church of West Liberty was organized in 1873, and in 1875 erected a church edifice in conjunction with the United Presbyterians, the building being completed in 1876.

The United Presbyterian Church of West Liberty was organized June 15, 1875, and the following year Rev. W. P. Shaw was installed as pastor. Under his guidance, the congregation had a good healthy growth and he continued with the charge until 1889, when he was succeeded by Rev. James A. Clark. A church building was erected in 1875-1876 by this congregation and that of the Methodist church at West Liberty.

St. John's Evangelical Lutheran Church of Brady Township, began erecting a house of worship before its organization was perfected on May 14, 1878. Rev. H. W. Roth was the first pastor, and was succeeded by Rev. George W. Critchlow, Rev. R. R. Durst and others. There are now about sixty members in the society.

WEST LIBERTY.

West Liberty, located at the intersection of the Butler-Mercer and Mt. Etna-Basingheim roads, in Brady Township, was laid out as a town February 13, 1829, by James J. Hoge, a surveyor. It did not make any headway as a settlement until resurrected by John and Jacob Covert in 1845, and two years later a plat of the village was recorded. The first store here was established by John J. Croll, although that of Hoevler about a mile away, antedated it. Henry E. Wick established a store in 1854, and was succeeded in its ownership by Jonathan Clutton, John Allen, John Kocker and Miss Clutton. W. W. Robinson and G. W. Eicholtz started stores here at a more recent date, the latter erecting a store building on the northwest corner, at the intersection of roads. A post-office was established here under the name of Bulger, by which the place was known a time. The town was incorporated as a borough Sept. 5, 1903, and its area—1400 acres—is the largest of any borough in the state having the same population. In 1908 the officers were: I. S. Badger, justice of the peace; D. E. McDeavitt, auditor; I. W. McDeavitt, constable; J. P. Castor and Dr. E. C. Thompson, school directors; R. N. Dickey, A. J. Sager, and T. B. Clymonds, members of council; and J. W. Boyd, treasurer.

Stone House is a historic old point in Brady Township, a tavern having been established there in the early days and continued for many years. The old log house built by the Douglass family was used for that purpose by John Elliott, and afterward by John Brown, who in 1822 erected the Stone House. The latter got into financial straits and the house subsequently fell into many hands, its most prominent landlord being Richard Doncaster. In 1833 another hotel was built here by Robert Thompson and conducted by him for more than a score of years. Some time in the forties, a man named Julius C. Holliday came in from Ohio and occupied a residence here with his family. With his advent began the coming of mysterious strangers, the names of none of whom were known, who boarded at the Stone House.

As many as twenty of them would come at a time and spend their time in revelry, apparently having no need to work. Holliday, the leader, died of diphtheria, as did six of his children, and some of his companions finally landed in the penitentiary. It is said they were engaged in the manufacture of spurious coins here. William Turk, an old stage driver, suddenly disappeared on July 4, 1853, and the belief was that he had been killed by the mysterious strangers. Time proved this belief wrong, however, as he returned after a lapse of thirty-two years, to find his wife had remarried and moved West, and his children had scattered.

Forest House, at one time a post-office, was the house above mentioned, established in 1833 by Robert Thompson. A store, known as the Eyth store, was started here in 1857 or 1858. Mr. Thompson retired from business here in 1854, owing to the disrepute into which the neighborhood had been brought by the counterfeiter.

Browning post-office, which was abandoned in 1870, was established about the same time as the one at Stone House, and was abandoned in the forties. It was re-established in May, 1858, but in 1870 was finally discontinued. The locality is known as the Stone House.

Elora, a former post-office, was established to succeed Memphis post-office, which was established in 1873 as a successor to the Forest post-office. Josiah M. Thompson, postmaster and general storekeeper, met with a serious loss on January 9, 1894, when his store and its entire contents, including undelivered mail, was destroyed by fire, entailing a loss of $3,000. Elora postoffice was discontinued when the rural free mail routes were established.

Hallston is a station on the Bessemer & Lake Erie Railroad, located in the northeast corner of Brady Township. The McNees pottery was established here in the eighties and in the early days Constantine Weidel operated a rude pottery here, making earthen crocks and jars. The name of the post-office at this place is Pump.

MIDDLESEX TOWNSHIP.

The territory now included in Butler County originally consisted of four townships, of which Middlesex was one. Its area was reduced at various times until 1854, since which time it has remained as at present. The land is well watered, Glade Run being the principal stream, and is rich and productive; coal mining has been engaged in since the early days, and oil production has added materially to the prosperity of the people.

The first actual settlements in this township were probably made in 1795, although for some two or three years before various pioneers had come in, selected farms and started improvements. James Harbison, James Hall, Abraham Fryer and William Hultz camped here on the night of January 10, 1793, and, it is said, engraved their names on some forest trees prior to their return home. Early in 1794 they returned to the location, chose their farms and erected cabins, but did not take up their residence here until 1795. In the meantime, Thomas Martin, a veteran of the Revolutionary War and a native of Ireland, came in in 1793 and made various improvements, which entitled him to the honor of being the pioneer settler. He in that year fled to the block-house at the mouth of the Allegheny, but in 1795 he returned to his claim and resumed the improvement of the place, prior to the return of those above mentioned. James Fulton, who established a reputation as a hunter here in 1793, also returned to make settlement, as did George Hays and Silas Miller. Mr. Miller was one of the scouts of 1792, and was well known as a hunter here from 1794 until his death. He also was a pioneer school teacher, teaching for a time in Cranberry Township. William Thompson was one of the first to arrive, and had a son, John, who was born in the new settlement in 1795; another son, William Thompson, Jr., was born here in 1797. William Martin, who failed in his attempt to gather about him a colony of rent payers in cabins which he erected, but nevertheless did much to advertise the new country; Matthew Wigfield, and John Brown, who settled in 1796. Others of the early period prior to the birth of the new century were: Thomas Park and family in 1798; Thomas Denny, who built a log house for school purposes in 1796; James McCallum, who came in 1798 and the following year opened up the first store in the township; Samuel Rippey, the first justice of the peace in the new community; Thomas Baker, in 1798; John David and family in 1798; James McBride, the apothecary, in 1800; and the Linns, Lists, Lyons and Boyds. Joseph Flick arrived in 1801; Absalom Monks in 1801; John and James Bartley, who came from Ireland, in 1800; Thomas Trimble in 1807; John Davis in 1812; and John Criner, Philip Snyder, and Samuel Crooks about the year 1815. Oliver David, a son of John David, above mentioned, operated a tannery and distillery here at an early date. The Glade Mills which has been in operation down to modern times, was established early in the nineteenth century by John Woodeck as a grist-mill. In connection he subsequently operated a saw-mill and carried on both enterprises with great success for many years. Many changes took place in the buildings and ownership, but Glade Mills has been a name known to every generation. In 1877 William Starr and Julius Baker became owners and the following year changed from water to steam power. In 1879 Mr. Starr became sole owner and operated the plant until he was succeeded by his sons, J. H. and J. W. Starr. Another of the early industries was the carding-mill built by James Fulton in 1822; he invented a special machine to be run by water power, and had a very successful business career. He also was the manufacturer of coffins for this vicinity. The old Hays Mill and the Park grist- and saw-mills, southwest of Cooperstown, were also flourishing plants in the early days. On the plank road, above Glade Mills, a tavern was successively conducted by Oliver David and William Crooks, being known in its later years as Crooks' Tavern. It was in existence from 1830 until Civil War times. George Cooper also conducted an early day tavern at what is now Cooperstown.

William Powell was the first school teacher in the township, and taught in the log structure erected by Thomas Denny. Many other followed in various parts of the township with the succeeding years, various select and subscription schools being maintained until the public school system came into being in 1835. There are now seven schools in the township, with an enrollment of 280 pupils. The present members of the school board are: Hal Parker, president; Charles Frisbee, secretary; A. Wilson, treasurer; James Mahan, William Monks, and Dr. C. S. McClelland.

The Middlesex Presbyterian Church had its beginning when, in the fall of 1800, Rev. Abraham Boyd came into the township. For two years he preached in the open air, and a few months after his coming the church was organized, with Robert McCandless, Hugh Gilliland and William Johnson as elders. A log cabin church was erected north of Glade Run in 1803, and was replaced by a hewn-log building in 1817. In 1842 a brick edifice was erected on the site of the pioneer cabin. The present church edifice and parsonage—fine brick structures—were completed in 1907. The church was incorporated October 3, 1855, with William Thompson, Alexander Hunter, James Welsh, Dr. Jacob Stewart and William Marshall as trustees. The congregation now consists of about 400 members, with a Sunday school enrollment of 200. Rev. W. L. McMillan has been pastor since 1904. A. L. Wilson is superintendent of the Sunday school.

The Middlesex Methodist Episcopal Church had its origin also about the beginning of the nineteenth century, although formal organization was not perfected until 1870. In the early days the Wesley followers held meetings in Matthew Wigfield's cabin, which meetings ultimately were resolved into an unorganized Union church. This continued until the congregation was organized in 1870. Rev. C. Danks was the actual prompter and leader in the movement. A frame edifice was erected in 1872 at a cost of $1,200. The church membership is now something less than a hundred; Sabbath school about forty. The pastor is Rev. E. L. Pierce.

Glade Run United Presbyterian Church was organized in 1812 and a log cabin was erected as a house of worship. Before it could be dedicated it was reduced to ruins by fire, but was soon replaced, the new building being completed in 1815. Revs. Bruce, Ramsey and Dunn were early pastors of the church, and in 1820 Rev. John France was installed. While the last named was in charge a new log house of worship was built, its dimensions being twenty by twenty-four feet, and this in turn was replaced in 1854 by a more imposing edifice. The congregation was incorporated September 25, 1860, with Edward Sefton, George Wallace, George Greer, John Park and S. B. McNeil as trustees. The present membership is 200, with 150 names on the Sunday school roll. Rev. M. B. Maxwell is pastor. The present church edifice, of pressed buff brick, was erected in 1901, at a cost of $15,000.

The Church of God was established in the township in comparatively recent times.

Cemeteries were established by the Middlesex Presbyterian and United Presbyterian churches, that of the former having been established many years before the other. The United Presbyterian Cemetery had its beginning in 1821, and both contain the graves of many who are enrolled among the pioneers of this part of the county.

Glade Mills, as a settlement, dates back to the days when John Woodcock operated his grist and saw mills at this point. The extensive business conducted by him made it quite a busy place and a desirable location for a store. William Starr, the miller, at one time conducted a store here, and W. J. Marks & Brother became merchants here in 1883. During the oil days it became quite a prosperous little place, and in 1900 had a population of 205. C. E. Aiken conducts a large general store here in a fine building recently erected.

Cooperstown, about one-half mile south of Glade Mills, on the old plank road, was named in honor of George Cooper, the pioneer tavern keeper at that point. In the boom days of the oil development it made its greatest strides as a village, and in 1900 had a population of 243, which has since materially decreased. Cooper & Croft are now the general merchants here, and there is also a blacksmith shop and livery stable.

McFann's general store is one of the successful business enterprises of the township, and oil production is carried on to some extent. Burton's telephone in connection with the Peoples, are the systems installed here, with a central office at Renfrew. Doctors C. S. McClelland and L. H. Stepp look after the health of the community. The Modern Woodmen are represented by Lodge No. 9075.

Officials: Justices of the peace, Willard Starr and Samuel Leslie; constable, Martin Bowers; assessor, Willard Starr; collector, William Denny; auditors, Wilson Cooper, John Fulton and William Trumble.

FORWARD TOWNSHIP.

Forward township was organized in 1854 from the original territories of Connoquenessing and Middlesex townships. It is exceedingly rich in oil, gas and mineral deposits; lime kilns have been operated, and there has been especial activity in coal mining and oil production. The soil is rich and productive and the township abounds in well improved farms and good homes. Connoqueness Creek, into which enters Glade Run at about the center of the township, and Breakneck Creek, affords exceptional drainage to the land.

The first settlers of the township were Peter McKinney and his wife, of whom much has been written. They were followed in 1795 by William and James Critchlow, veterans of the Revolution, who in that year came from Westmoreland County, to select homes, and the following year settled here. James Amberson, an extensive land owner, came in 1796, as did Enos McLeod, a Scotchman; Joseph Blakeley, a native of Ireland, and Robert Briggs, who located on the site of Evans City. David and Adam Gilliland were of about the same period, or a little later, and Joseph Douthett arrived with his family in 1799, locating west of Brownsdale. Archibald McAllister, the school teacher, came in 1801, and Daniel Martin, who was of Scotch birth; Henry Isaac, Joseph and Jesse Evans were here about 1802. William Martin, a native of Ireland and a contemporary of those named, was a carpenter by trade. Prominent among the residents of that time were John Brandon, afterward county commissioner, and Thomas Brandon, who were leaders in the temperance movement of 1830. Adam Brown came in from Middlesex Township early in the century, and during the War of 1812 served with Perry on Lake Erie. Joseph Ash, one of the first mail carriers between Pittsburg and Erie, came to the township in 1803 and lived here until his death in 1813. He was a man with a most interesting career, having been captured by the Indians when a boy. His mother and sister were killed and a brother was also captured. He was ransomed after two years, but always bore marks of his captivity, the savages having slit his ears. Matthew Williams, a Covenanter preacher, settled here in 1804, and was soon followed by John McCollum. Between 1810 and 1820 the following became residents of the township: John Crowe; Archibald Irwin, a blacksmith and an early school teacher; John Hamel; John Waldron, and Samuel V. Waldron, who was a soldier in the War of 1812, serving on Lake Erie with Perry. Other well known families who came at a later period were the Gelbachs, Behns, Hunters, Raders, Hazletts and Stammus.

The first of the industries established in Forward Township were the grist and saw-mills of Adam and David Gilliland. Then came the Robbins Brothers' grist- and saw-mills; the Adam Brown mill, run by horse-power; the Reese Evans grist-mill; and the Minnis fulling-mill. David Gilliland built a log mill on the old McKinney farm in 1802, and Barney Gilliland replaced it with a larger mill in 1827, which passed into the hands of Adam Gilliland and was by him operated until 1850. He was in that year succeeded by Henry Buhl, and the mill was in later years successively operated by Peter and James Ray and A. J. Evans. Adam Brown's mill, built early in the nineteenth century, was located on his farm. He later became owner of the Reese Evans mill on Glade Run, and Browns mill has since been a familiar name in this region. Adam Brown, Jr., in 1833, bought the mill from his father's estate, and replaced it with a new saw- and grist-mill. In the fifties he tore the buildings down and erected new ones more suitable to the times. Unfortunately his plant was destroyed by fire in 1859, but was immediately rebuilt and operated by him until 1861. R. H. Brown was then the miller here until 1880, when Philip Gelbach became proprietor, but in 1891 R. H. Brown resumed its operation. Lewis Blakeley at one time owned and operated a distillery on the old Blakeley farm.

The first schools of Forward Township were taught by John Waldron and Archibald Irwin, before any school buildings had been built. A log house was built north of the present borough of Evans City, and Dr. Irvine, Archibald McAllister, Capt. Gray and John Supple were among the early teachers in it. Three other buildings were erected and school conducted prior to the establishment of the public school system in 1835. The township now has nine schools—one a double school—with an enrollment (1908) of 288 pupils. The school board is composed of the following: R. S. Irwin, president; James Robertson, secretary; Samuel Cooper, treasurer; Edwin Gifford, B. J. Rader and Alex. Schilling.

The population of the township at various periods, as shown by the census, follows: 1,020 in 1860; 1,925 in 1870; 1,133 in 1880; 1,724 in 1890, and — in 1900.

The Reformed Presbyterian Church was organized near the village of Brownsdale, on Straight Run, in 1806, and in 1807 Rev. Matthew Williams was installed as pastor. For fourteen years services were held in groves in the neighborhood or in tents. In 1820 the tent was moved south to the site of the Union Church, where meetings were held until the pastor's death in 1828.

North Union Reformed Presbyterian Church was organized following the split in 1833 in the Union Church congregation of Adams Township, into what was designated the "New School" and the "Old School." The "Old School" called Rev. Hugh Walkinshaw, who remained until he was succeeded by Rev. John Galbraith in April, 1843. The latter served with great zeal and faithfulness for a period of forty-six years, leaving the charge in 1889. A house of worship was erected on the David Crowe farm in 1861.

The Richmond Methodist Episcopal Church had its origin in the class established in 1827 by Caleb Richmond. A constitution was adopted and at long intervals there was preaching by various ministers, who traveled this circuit. During 1854-55 a meeting-house was erected, which was sold ten years later when the class consolidated with the Brownsdale class.

The Brownsdale Methodist Episcopal Church had its origin in the Wigfield settlement, where the Wigfield Class was formed and maintained under the leadership of Robert Brown for a period of thirty years. The original members were the families of Adam, John and Robert Brown, and Joseph Miller, and was organized by Dr. John Rathbun, a traveling physician. Meetings were held in Robert Brown's house until the church was completed and dedicated, July 7, 1860. Among the pastors who have served the charge may be mentioned Revs. Stover, Henry Long, T. B. Thomas and others.

The Methodist Episcopal Church of Petersburg (Connoquenessing borough). See Connoquenessing Township.

The Catholic Mission of Forward Township owes its existence to a desire on the part of a few Catholic families to have a building in which services could be held when desired. Purchase was made in 1864 of the property formerly owned by the Richmond Methodist Episcopal Church, by John McNeal and wife, and Francis, Thomas and Eliza McCafferty, who in 1865 conveyed it to Right Rev. Michael Domec, Bishop of Pittsburg, to be held for the use of the Catholic congregation of Forward Township.

Forward Township is one of the leading oil producing districts of the county, and some of the largest producing wells were put down in what is known as Glade Run. Six wells have been recently completed, and three more are being drilled at the present time.

The Pittsburg Coal and Fuel Company, located at Wahlville, have about the only coal mine of commercial importance that is now being operated. The company is capitalized at $100,000, with W. J. Burke, president. Employment is given to about fifty men.

At Browndale there is a grist mill operated by F. D. Nicklass.

Alexander Schilling is carrying on a successful mercantile business at Reibold.

Aside from the oil industry the population of Forward Township is chiefly engaged in farming.

Township Officials.—Assessor, Geo. J. Marburger; collector, Geo. J. Marburger; auditors, Guy Stamm, Elmer Gelbach, and Samuel Riley; supervisors, D. L. Dunbar, W. W. Hunter and Robert Marshall; justices of the peace, Daniel Dunbar and Alexander Schilling; constable, A. J. Pultz.

PARKER TOWNSHIP.

Parker Township, lying on the Armstrong County line and just north of Donagel Township, was especially noted in the seventies for its rich deposits of oil. Prior to 1872 it was regarded as an agricultural section, and on account of its deep streams, well adapted to manufacturing, while iron ore was also mined. The name of Parker commemorates a family who have every right to lay claim to the honor of being the first settlers. John Parker, of Westmoreland County, was sent to this section to survey a large tract of land for a man named Moore, and while in Butler County did other surveying and thus gained a fair acquaintance with the various sections open to settlement in 1794. With other members of his family, he acquired 600 acres of land, 400 of which he owned himself in what is now Parker Township, while Washington, William and George Parker, each owned large tracts. John Parker, in 1815, surveyed the site of Lawrenceburg and for a number of years did surveying in Butler and adjacent counties. Prior to his death in 1842 he served as associate judge.

Parker Township's early settlers were of an equally good class at the Parkers, a large number of them being natives of the North of Ireland, a few of a sturdy German type, and a number, among whom were natives of the eastern counties of Pennsylvania, had served in the Revolutionary War and thus, by training and the test of courage, became ideal pioneers in a section where Nature was, as yet, entirely unsubdued and Indians still claimed homes in the surrounding forests. As far as preserved, the names of the settlers who came to this region about 1796 were: John, Thomas, John and Charles Martin; Capt. Robert Storey, who later was a soldier in the War of 1812, with Jacob Daubenspeck, with his sons, George and Philip, John Gibson, William Ferguson, and James, William and John Turner. Later settlers were: Archibald Kelly, who was probably the first school-teacher in the township; Charles McCafferty, John and Robert Hindman, John Jamison, Benjamin Fletcher, William Hutchison and probably Henry L. Sanderson, all came before 1800. John Say, Archibald Fowler, James Simpson and Michael Shakeley all were large landowners in 1803. In 1808 came William Fleming, who was a participant in the Irish Revolution of 1798.

Prior to 1819 the settlers in Parker Township suffered much inconvenience from a lack of grist mills, in many cases long distances having to be traversed in order to have their grain ground, and when Benjamin Fletcher erected his log grist-mill at Martinsburg, he was looked on almost as a public benefactor. Several years later John Shryock established a mill on Silver Creek, not far from the Washington Township line, and in 1824 William Turner built a grist-mill on the north branch of Bear Creek. Other mills were erected and manufacturing and milling was an important industry along the numerous streams long before the aggregation of houses at any one point was more than a log settlement. The Harvey Gibson mill at Martinsburg dates back to 1857; there was a saw-mill built by the Fowlers on the old Stone House farm; William Sedgwick built both a mill and foundry, and William Martin built a large mill as early as 1833. In 1857 the Dudley furnace was established at Martinsburg and was conducted until 1862. As early as 1845 the Hopewell Woolen factory, an ambitious business enterprise, was in operation on Silver Creek, William F. Rumberger and James Dunlap being the proprietors. Woolen goods were manufactured, including narrow cloths, cassimeres, satinetts, white and brown flannel and blankets, and, for a time, the industry was remarkably successful and indicative of a large amount of enterprise. In 1857 the factory was purchased by E. E. Evans, who continued to operate it until 1877, after which it was no longer rememorative.

Bruin. Martinsburg, now Bruin Borough, the chief town of Parker Township, was surveyed for John Martin, in 1837, and it was the proximity of Fletcher's mill that probably caused its selection as a town site. The first cabin was built by Z. B. Sheppard, and shortly afterward other log structures indicated the beginning of the present prosperous place. In 1841 Robert Black opened up a stock of goods and the different trades were soon well represented. In 1851 the post-office denominated Bruin was established, Perry Week becoming the first postmaster. Archibald Martin opened the first regular hotel in the place. From 1857 until 1872 there was no notable growth, but in that year, with the development of the oil industry, came people of different stations in life and the sleepy little hamlet became a stirring and progressive town. The high tide of prosperity continued until 1877, when a decrease in oil production marked a falling off, and added to this, the place suffered from an epidemic of smallpox, from which it was long in recovering.

Bruin became a borough in 1901 and now has a population of about four hundred. The place is furnished with electric and gas lights, the electric plant being owned by local people, but not incorporated. The Woodmen of the World are here represented by a lodge. The Free Methodist Church, Rev. Kelly, has a membership of twenty. The other churches are noticed elsewhere in this article. The postmaster of Bruin is H. A. Ritner. R. M. Black & Son and Sprunt & Shiever operate general stores, H. Sutton keeps a jewelry store, and T. W. Phillips Co. of Butler are engaged in the hardware and oil well supply business and also operate a machine shop. P. M. Black & Son and the Gibson Heirs operate grist mills. Bruin is on the B. & O. Railroad and has the U. S. Express, the Bell and Peoples' telephones and is a telegraph and money order station. S. R. Gibson is burgess and justice of the peace; H. Steel, J. Steel, T. G. Russell, W. H. Edmonds, J. W. Kelly and G. Buckley are members of the council; S. Amsler, road commissioner; J. H. Orr, treasurer; W. A. Kelly, constable; G. M. Say, tax collector, and W. M. Emerick, G. Helfrich and W. B. Fletcher, auditors. The school directors elected in 1908 were A. J. Edmunds and R. C. Stewart.

El Dorado, a village of about sixty people, has one store, kept by W. S. Allen. There is also a Methodist church here, of which Rev. Mr. Ritch is pastor, this being the only church in the township outside of Bruin. The membership is small.

Hooks City, near Bruin, was a village that had a brief existence in the days of the oil boom. With the decline of the oil field it went out of existence.

The former importance of Parker Township as an oil field has been already alluded to, but at present the production of both oil and gas is small. The oil field today is confined chiefly to the northwest corner and the center. There are no coal mines, but several banks furnish coal for local consumption, the largest being those of S. T. Thompson and the Hilliards Bank. The people of the township are chiefly engaged in farming, and to a lesser extent in oil production. The Baltimore and Ohio Railway affords railway communication with outside points. Stone House is the name of a stop on this railroad.

The schools and churches of Parker Township have been well supported. To name the early teachers in the days of the subscription schools would be to repeat the names of many of the most reliable men of each settlement. Archibald Kelly was a noted educator, his training both in Ireland and in Westmoreland and other counties having fitted him for far more exacting duties than he found in Parker Township, while many others were not less well equipped. The first school-house stood on the old Daniel Walker farm. In 1908 there were eight schools in the township, not including Bruin Borough, which has three. In 1907 the tax levied in the township was $3261; in the borough $1524.

The Methodist Episcopal Church of Martinsburg was organized in 1834, and in 1835 Benjamin Fletcher donated land on which a church building was erected, one that sufficed for thirty-nine years. In 1874 a commodious building, in accord with the increased strength of the membership, was erected. Rev. Mr. Rich is the present pastor. The membership is one hundred and fifteen.

The Wesleyan Methodist Church of Martinsburg was organized in 1852, and in the same year a small building was erected, but later the society disbanded and the building was used for a district school-house.

The Martinsburg Presbyterian Church was organized in November, 1870, with thirty-two members, the first elders being: John C. Martin, Hamilton H. Say and Amos Young. A fine church building was completed in December, 1873, and was dedicated in September, 1874. In another part of this work the destructive cyclone which passed through Butler County is mentioned, and in this disaster the new church was considerably damaged. Later it was restored and its congregation is in a flourishing condition, with a membership of one hundred and eighty. Rev. Mr. Stewart is pastor.

The population of Parker Township in 1810 was 399. It reached its high tide in 1880, when it had 2516. In 1900 the population was 1317, and its estimated population in 1908 was 1645, including the borough of Bruin.

Township Officials: Justice of the peace, A. D. Groom; tax collector, W. S. Allen; constable, A. H. Walley; road commissioners, G. W. Christy, P. Zeertz and J. W. Everett; auditors, W. P. Hoover, J. Collins and J. Billingsley; clerk, J. W. Everett.

SLIPPERY ROCK TOWNSHIP.

Slippery Rock Township, deriving its name from Slippery Rock Creek, which flows through it in a westerly direction, is situated in the northwestern part of Butler County and is one of its most important and highly developed sections. In 1804, when Butler County was separated into thirteen townships, one was continued as Slippery Rock, a name given when Butler was taken from Allegheny County, and had but four townships in all its territory. Since 1854 it has maintained its present number of square miles. Coal mining and gas development are the main industries, although there are fertile tracts along the streams, and in the larger villages and boroughs all lines of activity are successfully engaged in. Limestone has also been mined extensively. The people, as a class, are more than usually intelligent, supporting a State Normal School, newspapers, contributing capital to large business enterprises and founding churches and charities.

It is probable that the earliest settlers in the township were Adam Barber, David Cross and John and William Burrows, but as they made no permanent settlement, credit is usually given to Nathaniel and Zebulon Cooper, who came from Washington County in 1796 and settled on Wolf Creek in 1798. In 1797 came the McKees, followed in the next year by Adam Funk, and in the first year of the new century came Jonathan Adams, John and Jacob Stillwagon, John Moreland, Alexander McDonald and John Slenmons. Philip Snyder came in 1801 and found much favor with the settlers on account of his success in making maple sugar, a highly prized commodity in those days. In 1805 came John Walker, followed by William Bigham and sons and Samuel Cross. From this date up to 1840, came the following men, who are recalled on account of their enterprise, the larger number having been identified with all the material progress the section made within that time: James Stephenson, Samuel Weakley, Philip Kiestler, Joel Beckwith, Thomas Miffin, Dr. John Thompson, John Christley, Michael Christley, Samuel Kerr, Samuel Bard, William Hill, Isaac S. Pearson, Dr. Eli G. De Wolf, Cornelius Gill, James A. Patterson, John McNulty, Samuel Caldwell, Peter Sowash, John Neal, William Miller, Joseph C. Swearingen, Henry Wolford, Jonathan Maybury and John Reed. It was in this township that the brutal murder by the Indian Mohawk took place, that is described in the chapter on Bench and Bar.

What is known as the Pittsburg Academy Lands, now the Western University of Pennsylvania, consisted of several 400 acre tracts in Slippery Rock Township, which were gradually sold to the settlers. Three of these tracts were in a body, commencing at the north line of the township and running as far south as Centerville, now Slippery Rock borough. James McKee, the pioneer, first settled on a part of this land and built a house on the tract later occupied by Eli Beckwith. Finding that he had located on land belonging to the Pittsburg Academy, McKee moved to the farm now owned by W. M. Humphrey.

The pioneer village of the town bore the name of Mt. Etua, this being suggested apparently because it was built up around an early furnace, established by Dr. John Thompson on Slippery Rock Creek, in 1822. In 1824 a post-office was established there and was named Slippery Rock, but two years later it was moved to what was formerly Centerville but is now known to the Post-Office Department as Slippery Rock. Other villages have been built as various railroad lines have been extended through the township and the most important of these are Kiesters, Branchton and Wick. Adjoining the first named place is Slippery Rock Park, which is maintained as a summer resort and is of great natural beauty.

Redmond is a mining village that has sprung into existence since the opening of the coal and limestone mines along the line of the Pennsylvania Railroad. It is also the terminal of the railroad in this county. The mines and village are located on the Louis Patterson farm about one mile and a half north of Slippery Rock Borough and at the present time is composed of about one hundred houses besides the buildings of the railroad company, and the Sharon Coal & Limestone Company, the operators of the mines. About three hundred miners are employed here when the different mines are in full operation.

The Climax Limestone Company of Pittsburg are operating limestone mines on the Josiah Adams farm, and Heath & Filer of Mercer are carrying on extensive operations at Branchton. From one hundred to two hundred men are employed constantly at these mines, the output being used to a great extent by the different mills of the United States Steel Company for fluxing purposes, and also for construction of public roads.

Slippery Rock Township has been a prolific producer of gas for the past twenty years, and a number of small oil fields have also been found within its limits.

The vast mineral resources of the township have only come into public notice in the past ten years, and the mining industry in the township is yet in its infancy.

The Hercules Mining Company, of which Henry Lang is the manager, has options on a large acreage along Wolf Creek which will be developed as soon as the railroads can be induced to enter the field. A railroad is now being projected from Franklin to Elwood City and will follow the Wolf Creek valley through this township.

The early industries of the township may be briefly mentioned: The Mt. Etna furnace established by Dr. John Thompson, in 1822, has been already referred to; it was continued in operation until 1841; Hickory furnace, founded in 1836, by Joseph Swearengen, was operated for twenty-four years; the Bard & Bingham foundry was opened in 1838; Charles Coulter's fulling and carding mill was one of the earliest built on Slippery Rock Creek; Wolf Creek woolen factory, manufacturing carpets and Kentucky jeans, was in operation in 1845; prior to 1839 tanneries were operated by members of the Stephenson, Fleming and Christley families; the Thompson grist mill on Slippery Rock Creek, was built in 1822; the Wolf Creek mill was built in 1832, by James and Robert Vincent; in 1844 a flouring mill was built by Stewart & Sullivan, at the falls of Slippery Rock Creek; and early saw-mills were built and operated by many of the settlers. The development of coal and gas came at a later date.

The leading point of business in Slippery Rock Township is Slippery Rock Borough, previously known as Centerville, although, when the Coopers settled here and long after, it was called Ginger Hill. The postoffice was established in 1826. It is a thoroughly modern place, all trades, industries and lines of business being in a prospering condition. During the Mexican War it was a busy trading center and the descendants of those who founded the old business houses and made the first improvements and formed the first laws, still, in many cases perpetuate the sterling virtues of their ancestors. A Savings Bank was established in 1873 by John T. and Austin F. Bard. The Co-operative Creamery Association (Limited) was incorporated in 1874. One newspaper, the Slippery Rock Signal, was established in February, 1892. The borough was incorporated in 1841. There are eleven schools with 222 scholars enrolled. The schools are in charge of the Normal faculty.

As early as 1887 the borough was supplied with natural gas by H. P. Griffith, who established a gas plant and obtained fuel from four wells drilled in the limits of the borough. Mr. Griffith continued to operate the plant for a number of years, when it was taken over by the Union Heat and Light Company of Grove City, the present owners.

Dissatisfaction over the prices charged for fuel by the old gas company was the means of a new company being organized and chartered in 1906—the Slippery Rock Heat & Light Company—which was capitalized at $10,000, and the same year drilled wells in Slippery Rock Township and piped the borough. At the present time the company has a plant valued at about $30,000, and ten producing gas wells. John C. Kerr is president and general manager of the company.

The Slippery Rock Telephone Company was chartered April 24, 1905, and the officers at the present time are as follows: President, John B. Buchanan; secretary, Dr. W. M. Barber; treasurer, John A. Aiken; manager, John P. Caster. The company has a large patronage in the borough and surrounding country, and is in a prosperous condition. It has long distance connections with the local companies at Harrisville, and Plain Grove, and the People's Lines of Butler.

Fire Department. The Slippery Rock

Volunteer Fire Company was organized in 1907 with a membership of thirty-four, and the company has quarters in a rented building on Franklin Street where the meetings are held and the fire-fighting equipment stored. The equipment consists of two hose-carts and eight hundred feet of hose. The officers of the company are as follows: Dr. J. M. McClymonds, president; C. H. Maybury, vice-president; O. K. Bingham, secretary; and M. A. Gibson, treasurer.

City Water Works. The borough of Slippery Rock is one of the small towns that owns its own water plant, and operates it successfully. In 1892 John McGonegal established a private plant about fifty rods north of the buildings of the State Normal School from which he supplied the greater portion of the town with water from drilled wells. He continued to operate the plant until 1905, when he sold it to the borough and the latter has since been operating it. The plant now consists of several drilled wells, two storage tanks of 1,600 and 1,000 barrels each, and a pumping plant run by a gas engine. The town is not only supplied by an excellent quality of water, but the plant is operated at a profit.

Borough Officials. The borough officials of 1908 were James S. Wilson, Burgess; John Kerr, tax collector; David Wilson, assessor; W. R. Hayes, street commissioner; William Kelley, superintendent of the water works; John Stillwagon, high constable; Coulter Campbell, constable; and the following members of council: C. N. Moore, president; James I. Hogg, treasurer; John Buchanan, secretary; W. R. Hockenberry, C. P. Hancock, and William Moore.

Post-Office. In 1826 the Slippery Rock post-office was established and I. S. Pearson was appointed post-master. The same Slippery Rock has been continued as the name of the post-office to the present time. From Ginger Hill the official title of the town was changed in 1841 to Centerville borough, when the village was incorporated, and the title was again changed in 1896 to Slippery Rock borough to correspond with the name of the post-office.

Centerville Lodge Number 331, Knights of Pythias, was organized January 21, 1891. The present membership of the lodge is fifty including twelve members in the endowment rank.

Mylert Lodge Number 435, I. O. O. F., was instituted July 24, 1851, with Joseph M. McNair, Noble Grand, and W. M. Wells, secretary. On account of some irregularity the charter was surrendered in 1856, and the lodge was not reorganized until April 14, 1875, when A. J. Bard, William Claugerts, David Hayes, Jonathan Clutton, Richard Critchlow and twelve other members formed the present lodge. At the present time the lodge has over one hundred members on its roll, and owns a two story frame building on Franklin St., in which the meetings are held.

Slippery Rock Tent Number 307, K. O. T. M., was organized in 1894, and has a membership of thirty-two.

Slippery Rock Council Number 350, Junior A. O. U. M., was first organized September 13, 1889, with twenty-one charter members. The Council flourished for a number of years, and then became disorganized. A reorganization took place in November, 1907, and the present membership is ninety-six.

O. C. Bingham Post Number 306, G. A. R., was mustered in March 6, 1883, with sixteen charter members. At one time the post had a membership of sixty-five, but the roll has decreased to fourteen members in 1908. Few of the charter members are living. The organization is still kept intact, but the meetings are irregular, and are only called when the post has some business to transact.

Slippery Rock Lodge Number 108, Ancient Order of United Workmen, was organized May 18, 1877. The lodge had a large membership for many years, but met with the same misfortune that overtook many of the fraternal insurance orders.

Friendship Lodge Number 1188, Knights of Honor, was organized in August, 1878, with twenty members.

The Alta Club is a social organization organized by the young men of the town in 1907. The trustees are James Gerlach, William Bolton and J. M. McClymonds. The club has a membership of twenty-five, and has a neat and attractive club room on Main Street where the club parties and other social functions are held.

May 23, 1900, an amendment to the charter of the borough was secured, changing the official name from Centerville to Slippy Rock. The last decade has marked a number of improvements in the town such as establishing a city water works, the macadamizing of Main Street, and the paving of Franklin Street with brick. The latter was done in 1908. The borough council also contemplates the establishing of a sewerage system in the near future. The streets are well lighted with natural gas, and the side walks paved with Cleveland stone.

The business interests of the town in 1908 were represented by the general stores of H. E. Bard & Son, Kerr & Gibson, M. E. & S. A. Moore, J. E. Stoops, O. M. Williams, Watson & Williams, B. F. Stillwagon, notions, F. P. Bingham, hardware, Peter Bartz, tobacco, J. E. Freidman & Bro., clothing, Maybury & Pizor, drugs, S. D. Keister, furniture, S. L. Cheeseman, feed; S. V. Patterson, wall paper; J. T. Bingham, farm implements; Mrs. M. E. Gibson, millinery; Heinz & Cooper, tobacco; J. M. Roberts, buggies; J. N. Stillwagon, harness; Dougherty & Moore, millinery; Uber & Sons, furniture; McQuiston & Martin, meat market; Scheibel & Edeburn, meat market; A. Bowers & Son, drugs; Jeff. Campbell, hotel; Slater & Welsh, livery, and F. L. Forrester, lumber.

The First National Bank and the Citizens' National Bank are noticed in the chapter on banking. The town has no telegraph service at the present time, but is supplied with an excellent telephone service of the local telephone company the Bell Telephone Company. The future prospects of the town are excellent. Both the Pennsylvania and the Bessemer Railroads are contemplating extensions of their lines into the village, and a corps of engineers are at work surveying a route for an electric railway from Butler to Slippy Rock, and thence to Grove-City.

In religious and educational matters, Slippy Rock Township has more than kept pace with other sections of the county. The first school-house was erected on the Wolford clearing, a short distance from Centerville, and in 1822 a second building was put up for school uses on the Abraham Snyder farm, and in 1830 the Stillwagon school was built on the Mawha farm, south of Centerville. In the latter place, as in the country, better advantages were given after the adoption of the public school system in 1835. The number of schools in the township in 1908 was eleven, with 312 pupils.

SLIPPY ROCK STATE NORMAL SCHOOL.

In 1881 a fine school building was erected at Centerville, which now is the property of the State Normal School at this point. The history of the establishment of this admirable institution demonstrates the effect of persistent effort combined with the hard work that is demanded in order to make any enterprise successful. The first meeting was called by J. T. Bingham, was presided over by John Reed, while Rev. Mr. Robinson of the Presbyterian Church gave reasons for advocating the founding of a high school of learning. He aroused enthusiasm, the necessary amount of money for a beginning was soon made and thus the ball was started rolling and the result of all this energy is now seen in the stately, finely finished and equipped buildings of modern construction, which stand on ten acres of improved land, in the southeastern part of the borough. These buildings were formally dedicated by Governor Beaver, on February 1, 1889, and school work began in the following month. A high standard is maintained and the faculty is made up of educators of known ability. Since 1893 many improvements and additions have been made in the buildings and plant of this school. The attendance in the winter term of 1908-1909 was 579.

The church organizations outside of Slippery Rock Borough were established as follows: the Methodist Episcopal body founded an organization in the thirties, at Hickory Mills, but it is no longer maintained. Bethel United Presbyterian Church is the successor of the Covenanter Society, which was organized in 1833 but passed out of existence in 1866. In 1868 a reorganization took place under the present name. The Branchton Methodist Episcopal Church was organized and chartered March 5, 1906. A church building was erected in 1907 and the congregation is now attached to Harrisville charge. The churches in Slippery Rock Borough are two in number, the Methodist Episcopal, dating to 1834, with a present membership of 150, and the Centerville United Presbyterian Church (now known as the First United Presbyterian Church of Slippery Rock Borough) which was organized in September, 1848, and which now has a membership of two hundred, Rev. G. A. Brown being the present pastor. Slippery Rock Township was nobly represented by patriots in the Civil War and O. G. Bingham Post, No. 305, G. A. R., is in a flourishing condition, although, on more than one occasion, death has claimed a veteran, that being the one enemy he could not overcome.

Secret orders are well supported here, there being organizations of the A. O. U. W., the K. of H., the A. O. U. M. and the K. of P. In 1908 the estimated population of the township was 1740 exclusive of Slippery Rock borough.

The township officials in 1908 were E. Fielding, tax collector; L. M. Doube, H. M. Reddick and A. C. Renick, road supervisors; Russell Bolten, A. S. Rodgers and John Snodgrass, auditors; W. B. Cooper, township clerk; Frank Gerlach, treasurer; J. B. Campbell, assessor; L. W. Dongherty, constable; A. L. Cooper, judge of election; John B. Dimit and F. J. Doer, inspectors. Justice of the peace, W. H. Bovard.

JEFFERSON TOWNSHIP.

Jefferson Township, lying southeast of Butler Township, is not only one of the richest agricultural sections of Butler County, but has great wealth in its carboniferous deposits, and has, to some slight extent developed oil and gas. On account of its many waterways, it has been to some extent a manufacturing district.

The earliest settlers of Jefferson Township were natives of Ireland but Germans and other nationalities were soon afterward represented. The township had veterans of both the Revolutionary and 1812 wars among its pioneers. In 1895, Patrick Graham, a native of Ireland, came to what is now Jefferson Township, prospecting for desirable land and in the following year he put up his lonely cabin near the west line of the township. He had left his wife and two sons in Westmoreland County, and they then joined him and in the following year a third son, named for the father, was born, he being the first white child born in Jefferson Township. The elder Patrick Graham lived to within three years of his century mark, dying in 1844. He is credited with being the township's first settler but was closely followed by S. Phipps. The latter attempted to build his cabin on the land already secured by Mr. Graham and when objection was made, moved to parts unknown. Several others made partial clearings in the vicinity but do not seem to have taken up permanent residence and in the year of 1798 the Graham family were the only known residents of the whole territory. In that year they gained neighbors, the Strawicks, the Braceys and Thomas Burbadge and family came, built cabins, began to clear land and Andrew Strawick set up his anvil and was the pioneer blacksmith. Benjamin Thomas is also credited with settling here in 1798 and is remembered as having set out the first peach orchard. William Wright, James Maxwell, Bernard Dougherty and Daniel Mularkey, with Nathan Skeer were here in 1805. In 1819, Thomas Welsh purchased 4,500 acres of land in the southeast corner of the township and lived there until his death, in 1853. In 1821 he was joined by his brother John and they became very prominent in county affairs and men of large wealth from the development of coal on their lands. These pioneers faced many hardships, in the overcoming of which they developed the present sterling type of men and women, and before the land responded to cultivation they subsisted on the game in the forests and the fish in the streams as well as on the birds of the air, at that time, it is related, there being so many pigeon roosts in this part of the county that a flight of the birds almost shut off daylight.

One of the early and useful industries which was welcomed by the pioneers, was the grist-mill which was built on Thorn Creek, by Alexander Martin, in 1826. Thomas Welsh had put up a saw-mill in 1825, and in 1827 the Widow McCurdy hired Robert McNair to erect a saw-mill on Thorn Creek. In 1845, George Welsh built a saw-mill and later a grist-mill and when it became the property of Thomas Frazier it was fitted with better machinery and it was still operated in 1888, having in the meanwhile, been improved with modern roller machinery. Other mills were built in different sections, some of which still stand while others have left no trace.

In considering the development of Jefferson Township, the founding of its hamlets, towns and borough were the great factors which brought civilization into the wilderness and many of the pioneers had much to do with their first inception and later growth.

Hannahstown, probably named for a good wife or well remembered mother, was founded in 1829 by Nathan Skeer and Abraham Maxwell, it having previously been a cross-roads school center. Nathan Skeer conducted a tavern here and he was a unique dram-seller, his law being to sell no more than one drink to a customer until he was satisfied as to the latter's capacity. In 1860 J. N. Pugh established the manufacture of agricultural implements at this place. It now contains but twenty-five people. There is a German Lutheran Church here.

Jefferson Center once was a busy manufacturing point, artesian wells furnishing the water here both for manufacturing as well as domestic purposes. Better facilities in larger places have withdrawn much capital from this place. It was established in 1825, by Thomas Welsh. It now contains about fifty people.

Great Belt, platted in 1876, in and around Coyle's Station, where a post-office has been established in 1870, has not developed much, though there are some comfortable homes in the vicinity. Golden City, founded in 1884, was named in honor of Mr. Golden, one of the owners of the celebrated Rock well. In July, 1888, the Leota post-office was established, with Eli Graham as postmaster.

Saxonburg Borough, now with a population of 450, is the result of German thrift and energy. Through the efforts of Charles F. and John A. Roebbling, in the spring of 1832, 300 families left Old Saxony, Germany, to colonize 16,000 acres of land which had been purchased for them in Jefferson Township, Butler County. Those who finally settled on the present site of Saxonburg were the Roebblings, Fred Baehr, A. Eisenhart G. Kinne, Rev. William Fuhrmann, C. G. Lamb, August Kunz, A. Steubgen, Christian Steubgen, A. C. Bernigau, J. H. Muder, G. Franke and Charles Tolley. Charles F. Roebbling died at Saxonburg, in 1838, and was survived by two children. John A. Roebbling was one of the remarkable men of his time. He was born in Saxony, in 1806, and from boyhood his education and training had been along the lines of architecture and engineering, for which natural talents fitted him. Prior to coming to America he had thoroughly studied bridgebuilding and submitted plans entailing the use of a wire rope or cable, of his own invention, for a suspension bridge to be erected in Prussia. By 1842 he had so perfected this invention that he secured a patent in that year and soon afterward he began the manufacture of this cable rope, with the assistance of John Reidel, at Saxonburg, and the first practical test which was thoroughly satisfactory, was at the Sharpsburg Ferry. Subsequent and oft repeated tests, together with proofs of his engineering skill, brought about a revolution in bridge building, many of the great suspension bridges all over the country being his work, including the one across the Niagara River below the falls, and the East River Suspension Bridge which connects New York and Brooklyn, which was completed in 1883. His death took place as the result of an accident in 1869. The manufacture of his cables are carried on at Trenton, New Jersey, by his sons. The first industry at Saxonburg was the Roebbling brick-yard and immediately following factories were started and in a short time the busy life of old Germany was bringing prosperity to the colony.

The borough of Saxonburg is lighted with gas supplied by the Saxonburg Heat and Light Company. The Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias and Maccabees are here represented by prosperous lodges. The leading merchants of the place are G. W. Maurhoff, A. Krause & Son, and C. F. Schoentag, general stores; W. Berger, gents' furnishings; J. E. Muder, proprietor of the Central Hotel; G. O. Hammer, proprietor of the Roebbling Hotel; Dr. E. B. Mershon, drugs; W. Schroth, harness; E. C. Drescher, machine shop. There is one school with ninety-seven pupils. A Volunteer Fire Department is now (February, 1909) being organized and a chemical engine has been ordered. The postmaster is J. R. Helmbold; burgess, G. Shoemaker; treasurer, A. Yeakel; constable, J. Long; justices of the peace, W. D. Hoffman and W. Knoch; clerk, F. B. Lensner; assessor, H. C. Lensner; collector, W. D. Hoffman; road commissioners, W. Ecklerly, W. J. Steubgen, P. R. Krause, W. Rudert, E. L. Rudert, C. Reddick and D. Stewart.

Near Saxonburg are located the Saxonburg Mineral Springs which are well known throughout this section as a popular health resort. In the immediate vicinity is the large and beautiful Hotel Tredur, the location being at an altitude of nearly 1,400 feet above sea level, and surrounded by the most picturesque scenery in Western Pennsylvania. It is a delightful spot for seekers of quiet, rest and recreation. This place has been well called "A home in the country." The waters have been subjected to careful analysis and proved rich in health-giving qualities. They were much used by the Seneca Indians before the advent of the whites.

The Saxonburg Telephone Company was organized in 1907, the company purchasing from the Bell Telephone the right of way in this section. Saxonburg has a German and English Lutheran Church.

The kind of people making up the citizenship of Jefferson Township, early brought about a demand for schools and churches. St. Lucas' Evangelical Lutheran Church was established in 1838, when it was in Buffalo Township and a church was built near Hannahstown. In 1847 an organization of the English and German speaking Lutherans was effected and they worshipped together until 1869. In 1854 when the society was incorporated, one of the church articles was the prohibition of the interment of suicides or unbaptized children in the cemetery.

The Shiloh United Presbyterian Church was organized in 1864 with Rev. W. R. Hutchison as first pastor. The church building is situated at the junction of the old Bull Creek and the Glade Mills road. The Jefferson Summit Presbyterian Church dates back to April, 1864, and in June, 1867, a church building was completed and dedicated, and in January, 1869, the society was incorporated. The Jefferson Center Presbyterian Church was organized in July, 1871, and was incorporated in October, 1873, Rev. C. W. Seaman being pastor. The Methodist Episcopal Church of Great Belt was organized in 1877, but is no longer in existence. The German Evangelical Protestant Church of Saxonburg really dates back to 1837. St. Luke's Evangelical Lutheran Church was founded in 1869.

The Mission Synod of the Lutheran Church pays the expenses of the Concordia Orphans' Home, near Delano, founded by a Mr. Oertel and dedicated in 1883. It is a magnificent charity designed for aged persons and orphans. Secret societies, fraternal bodies and musical organizations are found in the township and are well supported.

Township officials: Constable, H. H. Aterholt; tax collector, W. Pouff; tax assessor, A. Aterholt; road commissioners, W. Aterholt; Geo. Grim and W. Campbell; auditors, A. Bekert, C. Wetzel, and J. Hartzel; clerk, W. Montagne; treasurer, E. Montagne.

MARION TOWNSHIP.

Marion Township, which perpetuates the name of General Francis Marion, the famous "Swamp Fox" of Revolutionary days, has an area of five and one-quarter miles east and west by five miles in length, and within these dimensions may be found a variety of soil, mineral deposits and productive oil fields, while Slippery Rock Creek and smaller streams water productive agricultural sections. The establishment and maintenance of various manufacturing plants and other business enterprises, together and chiefly with the development of the agricultural resources, almost from the first years of settlement, prove that Marion Township has always possessed its full share of capable and industrious citizens.

The oil sands of this section are rather shelly, as has been learned from the records of the Emerson and Bronson well drilled near McMurry's mill in 1877, and from the record of the wells drilled at Murrinsville in 1893-4. A fairly productive oil field was struck at Murrinsville in the years mentioned, but the wells soon declined. More drilling was done in this township in 1908 than in any section of the county. There is a large limestone quarry near Anandale, which is now being operated. There are also large deposits of limestone that have not yet been developed. The highest elevation in the township is at the village of Murrinsville, which is 1,440 feet. At the crossing of the Murrinsville and Clintonville road it is 1,400 feet, and a mile southwest of Murrinsville it is 1,350 feet.

The population in 1860 was 789, and 1900 it was 878. The development of the coal field of the township in the past ten years has been the means of increasing the population, and at the close of 1908 the township had a population estimated at 1,215.

Probably one of the very first permanent settlers of Marion Township was Samuel McMurry, a native of County Down, Ireland, who reached this section with his wife, in 1798, settling near a historic spot known yet as Daniel's Garden. A trader named Daniel or Daniels, came still earlier and built a cabin near what is now Anandale, surrounded it with a bit of cultivated land and named it a garden. He subsequently deserted the place on account of trouble with Indians. Other settlers who came early and took up land or otherwise established themselves were John Vincent, settling in 1798; John Vandyke, in the same year; John and Jane Black, in 1799; Robert Waddle, with wife and six sons, in 1800; Robert Seaton, with wife and three children, in the same year; William, Robert and Samuel Black, in 1803; in the same year Robert Cochran, Hugh Gilmore, Joseph Blakeny and possibly Robert Read and John Walsh. Joseph Porter and wife came in 1817; Alexander Mortland, in 1806, and George Ray, in 1810, the latter making his home with his uncle, George Ward, who had settled here much earlier and at that time was one of the largest landowners in Marion Township. In 1816 came Robert Atwell; in 1818 came Robert Kellerman and family; in 1819, came William Gilchrist and family and in 1820, came James Dugan. This list by no means includes all of the early settlers but many of these mentioned have left descendants who still own the lands they gained through their industry and foresight, in the earliest days.

One of the earliest mills built in Marion Township was erected by a Revolutionary officer, General Campbell, which later was owned by the Ray family and for many years was operated, custom coming from remote parts of the newly settled township. In 1810, the McMurry distillery and grist-mill was built; in 1815, Robert Seaton erected a tannery and a fulling-mill; in 1825 the Blacks built a saw-mill and grist-mill, and William Evans also owned a saw-mill and an iron furnace. In 1850 the Marion furnace was established, by James

Kerr and Robert Breaden, who conducted it until 1862. An abundance of iron ore and thick veins of pure cannel coal as well as Brookville coal, has given a certain trend to the industries of the township and many furnaces have been built and coal mining has given employment to many.

One of the pioneer mercantile enterprises of the township was Bailey's store near the western boundry, which has been carried on for many years by Joseph Bailey. He is probably the oldest merchant now in active service in the state, being over ninety years of age.

The leading villages of Marion Township are Murrinsville and Anandale Station, or Boyers Post-office. In 1828 the former village was surveyed for John Murrin, the head of one of the most prominent and substantial pioneer families of this section of Butler County. His descendants still own large tracts of land in the valley east of the town. It has always been more or less a Catholic stronghold and supports a fine Catholic Church. J. H. Gormley conducts a general store and there is a feed stable of which Murrin Brothers are the proprietors.

Anandale Station, Boyers Post-office, on the Bessemer Railroad, was founded in August, 1873, under the name of Byers-town, from one of the early settlers at that point, Frederick Byers and family having purchased land here in 1840. The hamlet remained almost stationary until 1879, when a hotel was built by a member of the Byers family and the building of railroads further advanced its progress. Hugh and E. G. Sprone built a steam grist-mill here in 1878, E. A. King becoming manager in 1880. The mill was burned in 1904 and the site is now occupied by a small feed mill. In January, 1882, a post-office was established at Anandale Station, with W. G. Smith as postmaster. The present incumbent of that office is L. J. Sisseney, who also conducts a general store. The other merchants are H. Mittendorf, general store, and S. W. Kerr, grocery and hotel. There is a K. of P. lodge here. At the present date of writing, Marion Township has seven schools with 186 pupils, the average attendance being normal and general intelligence prevailing. One of the first schools was held in the old log cabin Presbyterian Church and was taught by David C. Cunningham, among whose more immediate successors were John Walsh, Nancy Breckeuridge and Lydia Waters. The school directors (in 1908) were James Walter, T. McFadden, John Gilgrist, James McNeese, Clayton Duffy, W. F. Kerr and the First National Bank, Harrisville.

The United Presbyterian Church of West Unity dates back to about 1807 and was the result of the efforts of several Presbyterian preachers who obtained church permission to organize churches through the county wherever possible, although the widely separated settlers made the duty sometimes a difficult one. Many of these settlers were of a religious turn of mind but they could not all agree on some of the essential points of doctrine, and hence, there were, by 1825, small bodies calling themselves Presbyterian, Associate Reformed, Seceders, and Covenanters. In Rev. Cyrus Riggs, however, was found a tactful man as well as earnest preacher and he ministered to the assembled branches until 1830. Changes took place, but the present church body was incorporated in February, 1886. The present membership is about one hundred. The elders in 1909 were James Dougan, Alex. Buchanan, Joshua Black, and J. C. Vandyrke. Pastor, Rev. J. J. Imbrie.

St. Alphonsus Catholic Church was not formally founded prior to 1841, but for many years prior to that the Murrin homestead had been utilized for the service of the Mass, as the visiting priests could make their pastoral rounds. As early as 1800 missionary fathers of the Catholic faith had visited here as well as other parts of the county and in 1807 came Father Ferry, who was put in charge of St. Patrick's Church on Sugar Creek. In 1839, John Murrin donated an acre of land for church and cemetery purposes and in 1841 a substantial stone church was erected. Subsequently fire destroyed a part of the structure, but rebuilding soon followed and the Catholic contingent has one of the best church edifices in this part of the county. Its membership—about 343—includes a great part of the wealth and substantial citizenship of the community. Father McKenna is the present pastor.

The Methodist Episcopal Church in Anandale has a membership of two hundred, with Rev. Mr. Walker as pastor.

The Church of God is a religious society that was organized about 1874 by a Rev. Mr. Manchester. Shortly after the present house of worship was erected on the Cook farm. The present membership is about twenty-five.

Township officials: Justices of the peace, J. Haslett and J. T. Black; tax collector, J. A. Gillghrist; constable, J. Dujey; tax assessor; J. E. Atwell; road commissioners, L. E. Rumbaugh, J. McFadden and J. A. Murrin; auditors, G. Gormley, J. J. Gilmore and L. Murrin; clerk, J. Kerr.

PENN TOWNSHIP.

Penn Township is one of the agricultural townships of Butler County, its residents being mainly those who have come here to found homes, rather than to temporarily engage in industries of no permanent character. Hence, here, perhaps more than in any other township, may be found the larger number of thoroughly tilled farms and comfortable farm surroundings. Penn Township was one of the thirteen re-subdivisions of Butler County made in 1854, its territory forming a part of the original Middlesex and Connoquenessing Townships. It is well watered by Connoquenessing and Thorn Creeks and Glade Run and in some portions the landscape presents fine scenery for the artist. In the northwest corner, particularly, the high "Town Rocks" resemble in general character some of the formations that have made sections of Colorado famous. It is not entirely lacking in coal or oil, but the development of these natural products has never assumed large proportions, with the exception of that in the Bald Ridge District.

RESIDENCE OF W. H. H. RIDDLE, BUTLER

GOEHRING & RICHARDS BUILDING, BUTLER

DR. BOYLE'S EYE AND EAR HOSPITAL, BUTLER

There is no difficulty in fixing the name and date of the first settler of Penn Township. He was Robert Brown, who was the founder of the Methodist faith in Butler County, and for a quarter of a century served in the new settlement as a justice of the peace. He came from New Jersey and lived in the cabin he built as early as 1797, the builder of another cabin in the previous year, not occupying the same until a later date. This was Clark Rathbun, whose daughter later married Robert Brown. James and George Boyd came shortly afterward, George purchasing the Rathbun tract of land, with an additional 400 acres, and in 1803, James Boyd is credited with 250 acres. Adam and Joseph Brown were here in the same year, while Thomas and William Dixon came in 1800. The latter was one of the pioneer teachers and a justice of the peace. The veterans of the Revolutionary War were also represented among the early settlers, one of these, John Rankin, a native of Ireland, being the head of a numerous family. He came here from Maryland about 1805. Other prominent settlers who founded families, acquired land and became of importance to this section until the close of what is generally termed the pioneer period were: Matthew Cunningham, prior to 1805; John Maharg, about the same date; Joseph Logan, in 1807; John Dodds, in 1808, later serving in the War of 1812; John Reese, Daniel Harper and David Sutton about 1807-8; Thomas Bartley, in 1808; Robert Bartley, in 1810; Moses Crispin, prior to 1820, Jesse Sutton coming in the latter year. James Marshall with wife and eleven children, in 1824; Adam Weber, one of the founders of the Lutheran faith, in 1831; Edward Hays, in 1831; Israel Seaman, in 1833; William Fisher, in 1834; Thomas Robinson, in 1835; William C. Wallace, in 1837; David A. Renfrew, in 1840.

In 1820, Moses Crispin had built probably the first saw-mill in the township, and in 1844, David A. Renfrew built a second one and added a grist-mill in 1868. Very early, Robert Bartley and Robert Eady conducted distilleries. In 1860 the whole population of the township was 914 individuals. The largest developments of coal in the township have been carried on on the Andrew Welsh farm, the Lavery farm, the Fisher and Kennedy farms and the Renfrew lands, three coal beds having been worked by Mr. Renfrew. The history of the Bald Ridge oil developing is given elsewhere.

Brownsdale, Maharg, Renfrew, Phillips City, McBride City and Critchlow City, may be named as the leading villages in the history of the township. These acquired their names from important families in their vicinity, and their population and business enterprises, in some cases, were determined by the fluctuations in the oil industry. In 1844 A. M. Brown established a store on his land and in the following year the post-office of Brownsdale was established, with Adam Brown as postmaster. The little hamlet slowly grew to the proportions of a village as various trades and industries gained a foothold here.

Maharg is mainly distinguished as being the second post-office village established in the township, E. Maharg being the first postmaster.

Renfrew, once one of the famous oil centers of the country, was located in April, 1882, on part of the Renfrew land, on which David A. Renfrew had settled and built a saw-mill in 1840. A prior owner to a large portion of this district was William Purviance, who had acquired his right in 1838. The long litigation which subsequently ensued after the discovery of oil in this district, was carried into the Butler County courts, and later to the Board of Property; still later other court proceedings took place, the history of this case making an interesting chapter in Butler County records and involving a number of the township's most prominent families. The credited business pioneer of Renfrew was Simeon Nixon, who established his restaurant in January, 1882. In the following April drilling for oil was commenced and as this and the surrounding district proved of unusual oil wealth, the usual crowd of speculators and workmen were attracted to the place and by the close of August a town had sprung up. W. W. Patton erected the first building for hotel and boarding house purposes, and other lines of trade soon followed as the inflowing population demanded necessities and also luxuries. The first postmaster was H. W. Koonce.

The leading merchants and industries at the present time are the following: Kirkpatrick Brothers and L. D. Van Rensselaer, general stores; R. M. Bowser & Son, lumber and hardware; Webbers Pharmacy; Price Brothers (A. C. and E. E. Price), machine and boiler shop. The shop of the last mentioned concern, which employs seven men, was erected in 1886. Here gas engines are built and all kinds of repair work done. The concern also deals in second-hand oil well supplies. Another machine and repair shop in Renfrew is that of John Fagan. Doctors D. H. Keeler and J. L. Campbell are the local physicians and surgeons.

The township high school is located in Renfrew with twenty-seven pupils. There are two other school rooms, with a total (in the two) of 115 pupils. Mrs. E. J. Campbell keeps the only hotel in the borough, while J. C. McClelland has a livery stable. The present population of Renfrew is about 500, most of which has accrued since the time of the first oil developments. The place has connection with outlying points by three railroads—the Bessemer & Lake Erie, the Baltimore & Ohio, and B. R. & P. The People's and Bell telephones are installed here and there is an office of the United States Express Company. Renfrew also has electric communication by means of the Pittsburg & Butler Electric Line, which has a power-plant here.

Utopia Tent No. 96, K. O. T. M., is located in Renfrew and has a membership of about seventy-three. It has been organized twenty-one years. There is also a ladies branch of the Maccabees here. The order owns a fine hall erected in 1890. Renfrew Camp No 8608, Modern Woodmen, has a membership of forty-four and has a hall of their own.

The present postmaster of Renfrew is L. D. Van Rensselaer. J. W. Kaftenbaugh and W. J. Burton are justices of the peace; G. W. Nixon, constable; W. S. Dixon, assessor; T. J. Graham, collector; auditors, Mark Starr, Chas. Phillips and J. C. Dodds. School board, W. W. Phillip, S. J. Patterson, J. M. Douthett, Harvey Wise, C. H. Wible, and E. E. Price.

The unexpected richness of the site of Phillips City, on Thorn Creek, brought that village into existence in August, 1884, as also McBride City, in February, 1885, and Critchlow City, in 1886. These villages have been the oil centers, their prosperity depending on the production and market manipulation of this great commodity.

Brownsdale is a small settlement where L. D. Van Rensselaer operates a branch store. There is also a Methodist Church at this point, elsewhere mentioned in this article.

When schools and churches are mentioned in connection with the settlement and present status of Penn Township, the prevailing intelligence and sterling character of its people are manifest. The early settlers in the southern part of the township had as their first teachers members of their own families, natural intelligence often taking the place of pedagogic training. More than in any other township have literary societies and educational organizations been favored here and on numerous occasions debating contests have been held that attracted considerable outside interest. For some years the Renfrew Academy gave students fine academic opportunities. There are now nine public schools in the township including the high school, with a total enrollment of 481 pupils.

The United Presbyterian Church of Brownsdale, a branch of the old Union, Clinton and Butler Churches, is the oldest church society in the township. It was organized about or previous to 1860, in which year the first church edifice was put up. The first pastor was Rev. R. M. Patterson. Its membership of one hundred includes many of the oldest and most prominent and worthy families of the township, the Douthetts, the Dodds, the Browns, the Martins, and the Mahargs being greatly in the majority.

The Thorn Creek Methodist Episcopal Church existed as Kennedy's Class as early as 1837 but it was not until 1865 that it was placed under its present organization and it then erected a suitable house of worship. To this church and among the earnest workers in the faith from its earliest records belonged the Kennedys, the Robinsons, the Cummings, and the Burkharts.

The Zion Baptist Church was organized in 1840 and services were held in the house of Isaac Sutton until 1850, when a building was erected and an interesting fact in this connection is that its early pastors not only ministered to the flock but also were the practical builders of the structure. The Suttons, the Phillips, the Nixons, the Luces, the Snows, the Boyds and the William McCandless families have always been identified with this body.

The Methodist Episcopal Church of Renfrew, was organized in 1888, and by March, 1890, the congregation had developed enough interest and strength to complete a church building costing $1,500. The church now has a membership of sixty, with a Sunday-school enrollment of eighty. Rev. Spaulding is pastor.

Brownsdale M. E. Church was organized in 1860. The congregation is now small.

CLAY TOWNSHIP.

Clay Township was organized in 1854, and was named in honor of Henry Clay, the distinguished orator and statesman of Kentucky. It lies directly north of the center of the county, and is marked by several high summits which are approximately 1,400 feet above ocean level and from 250 to 300 feet above the bottom of Muddy Creek. The township is drained by Muddy Creek, which arises near West Sunbury and flows westward through the southern half, and by the tributaries of the Slippery Rock, which arise north of West Sunbury and flow north. A small area in the southeastern corner of the township is drained by the tributaries of the Connoquenessing.

The Freeport and Kittanning coals are found in abundance in this township, and at an early date coal banks were operated on the Samuel McElvain farm near West Sunbury, the Thompson, McMichael, Painter, Patterson, Glen, Mock, and Hall farms. Banks were operated on the McAnallen, the Young and the Robert Patterson farms prior to 1861, and after the construction of the Shenango and Allegheny Railroad in 1882, extensive operations were carried on at Claytonia by the Crawfords, and the Steel and Blair mines at Standard were opened about the same time and abandoned about 1895. The George S. Stage mines were opened at Claytonia in 1894, and are still in operation, while the Mesner mine is located on the Carothers farm, each employing about sixty men. The Sherwin mine on the Sherwin farm employs about twenty-five men. There are also several small banks operated for local consumption. Building stone is abundant in this township, and much of the stone used in the construction of the court house at Butler was quarried on the farm of Joseph Kelly near the west line of the township. The construction of the Allegheny and Western Railroad from Queen's Junction east to Brady's Bend, and the western division of the road along Muddy Creek to the Armstrong County line, will be the means of developing the mineral resources of the southern part of the township. There is practically no oil or gas in the township, except two wells that furnish gas for the borough of West Sunbury, and the inhabitants are engaged chiefly in farming.

The pioneers of the township are found among the early settlers named in the townships now known as Parker, Fairview, Center, Brady, Butler, and Penn. Christopher McMichael, a soldier of the Revolution, is credited with building a cabin just east of West Sunbury borough, as early as 1797. There is no mention made of him in the records of 1803, but his son William is named as a tax payer in what is now Cherry Township, but at that time was Slippery Rock Township.

John Thorn was one of the pioneers who came in 1797 or previous to that time. The same year James Russell settled north of West Sunbury, but a few years later moved into Concord or Washington township. The settlers of 1798 were Samuel Findley, a soldier of the Revolution, Robert Findley, David Findley, and Sannel Findley, Jr. James McJunkin came from the north of Ireland the same year, and William Barron came from Marion or Venango Township in 1798. Jacob Beighley, who joined his brothers in Connoquenessing township in 1797, came to Clay Township in 1798 or 1799. Robert Graham, who made the first improvement on the site of West Sunbury, came into the township in 1803. Joseph Thorn arrived about 1800 and died a few years later. The body was placed in a hollow log, to which oxen were hitched, and thus the rude coffin was hauled to the grave.

The settlers of 1803 were Joseph, John, James, William, and Samuel Glenn, Mrs. Jenet (Sterling) Glenn, Margaret Glenn, Mary Glenn and Mrs. A. M. Porter came in 1808. The father of this family was James Glenn, who selected the land settled, but died in Westmoreland County. John Glenn, known as Captain Glenn, commanded a company of Pennsylvania volunteers in the War of 1812. Among the later settlers were Stephen Allen, John Adams, who came in 1820 and reared a family of twenty children, Robert McCandless from Center Township in 1820, Asaph Cramer from Clay Township in 1823, William Gibson from Butler in 1827, Jeremiah Wick from Armstrong County in 1796, John and Jesse Sutton from the southern townships in 1829, and the Bartley family of Penn Township, the Thompson family of Brady Township, the Rudolph Bortmas family, the McElvains, Timblins, and Pattersons, may be classed among the pioneers, although they selected other townships for their first homes in the county.

John McDevitt came from Tyrone County, Ireland, in 1825, and to Clay Township in 1830. John Young, a son of John Young who settled in Allegheny County in 1790, came to the township in 1830. William A. McAnallen, one of the early settlers, was a son of Patrick McAnallen, who came from Ireland in 1788, and to the territory of Butler County some time previous to 1803.

The first grist mill in the township was erected by William Carruthers about 1835 on the head of Findley Glade Run, about two miles northwest of West Sunbury. It was a rude affair constructed of round logs and operated by water power. A dam was built about forty rods above the mill whence the water was brought in a flume constructed of hollow logs to an upright box over the water wheels at the mill. This mill was destroyed by fire in 1851.

What is known as the old Shroyer mill near the west line of the township was built about 1835 and was first operated by Henry Black. Dr. Josiah McCandless built a new mill on the site of the old one about 1870, but in 1892-3 it was removed, the material being used in other buildings.

The old Painter saw-mill and planing-mill at Euclid Station on the Bessemer Railroad, was converted into a chopping mill by Joseph Mechling and used as such until 1894, when it was destroyed by fire.

The flouring-mill at West Sunbury was erected in 1871 by Reed Bryson, who was a prominent millwright and builder of his day. The first owners were Allen Wilson, Charles McClung and J. W. Christie. In 1895 the owners were J. C. Bredin, George Wolford and William Wick. This mill was destroyed by fire in 1902, and was subsequently rebuilt.

Muddy Creek Presbyterian Church is one of the oldest religious societies in the county. As early as 1799 Rev. John McPherrin, who was the pioneer Presbyterian preacher in the county, held services in the neighborhood, and the first organization was effected in 1803. Rev. McPherrin continued as stated supply for two years after the organization, and in 1805 he was installed pastor, and remained until 1813. For the next ten years the congregation was without a regular pastor, and in 1823 Rev. John Coulter, a licentiate of the Ohio Presbytery, was installed pastor. The congregation was reorganized at this time, and Rev. Coulter continued as pastor until 1850, when he resigned.

The first house of worship was erected in 1803, and was constructed of round logs. This was used until 1824, when a new meeting-house, 30x60 feet in size, was built of hewn logs, and oak shingles were used for roofing, the interior being plastered. The present brick building was completed in 1852 and is still in good condition. The church was incorporated March 29, 1864, with Josiah McJunkin, John R. McJunkin, and James Findley as trustees. A constitution was adopted December 7, 1863.

West Sunbury. This borough, which now has a population of about 350, had its origin before the Civil War and has seen some prosperous days, though at present its growth is not rapid owing to the competition of other villages and boroughs possessing academies and other similar attractions. The Royal Arcanum and the Woodmen of the World have lodges here, and there are three churches—the Presbyterian, Rev. Bradshaw, pastor, with a membership of about 190; the United Presbyterian, Rev. Breaden, with 140 members; and the Methodist Episcopal, Rev. Walker, with seventy members.

The leading business men are the Russell Livery stables; Campbell & Smith, hardware; Breaden, Conway & Co. and J. B. Arthurs, general stores; H. C. Hindman, drugs, and the Phoenix Milling Company. Euclid Station on the Bessemer Railroad is the nearest shipping point. The borough is lighted with gas furnished by W. W. Russell, who owns the two gas wells in the township, he succeeding the Greenville Gas Company in the proprietorship. The Peoples' Telephone is installed here and there is also a Bell 'phone connection. The present postmaster is O. P. Campbell. The borough officials are: Burgess, W. J. Breaden; justices of the peace, A. Thompson and P. P. Brown; assessor and collector, G. C. Gibson; constable, J. McClymonds; road commissioner, H. C. Pryor; auditors, C. Campbell, J. B. Arthurs and A. Mechling.

Queen Junction is the junction of the Bessemer and W. Allegheny Railroads. C. W. Buckham is postmaster here.

Claytonia, with a population of about fifty, is a station on the Bessemer Railroad which was originally known as Caledonia. It derived its name from the coal mines which were opened at that place by the Crawford brothers, and called the Caledonia mines. The Standard Mining Company also opened a mine in the same locality, which was afterwards operated by Steele and Blair, but both mines were abandoned previous to 1895. In 1894 George S. Stage of Greenville opened mines in the vicinity, and named the place Claytonia. There is one store, kept by James Welsh. Miss C. Welsh is postmistress.

Sherwin is a mining village of forty people on the Bessemer Railroad, and was founded by P. D. Sherwin, who opened the Sherwin mines at that place. A post-office, general store, and about twenty miners' houses compose the village. The postmaster is J. D. Sherwin, who also conducts the store.

Euclid Station is located on the divide between Slippery Rock and Muddy Creeks on the Bessemer Railroad, and the place was known for many years as the Center schoolhouse. When the railroad was completed to the summit, it was called Sunbury Station, and shortly after the completion of the road the name was changed to Euclid. The Painter saw-mill and planing-mill and a creamery were among the first industries of the place, but they were destroyed by fire February 9th, 1894. At the time of the fire, the planing mill was owned by Joseph Mechling, who occupied a part of the building with a chopping mill. The other part of the mill contained a single saw-mill owned by D. B. McCandless, Warren Thompson, Jasper Keister and Joseph Mechling. The place now has about fifty people. McKissack & Lutz conduct a general store; W. Christley is postmaster, and there are express and telegraph offices.

The early schools of the township were kept up by subscriptions, as were the cus-tombs of that day. The first building erected for school purposes was in the Me-Junkin district, and was constructed in 1824 from the logs of the abandoned Muddy-creek Presbyterian Church. This building was turned over to the school district in 1835, when Daniel Carter became the teacher, and after him, John R. McJunkin. About 1820, Robert McElvain taught in a log school house which stood north of the site of West Sunbury, but early in the thirties he moved his headquarters to a log house near the old church at Middletown in Concord Township. In 1908 there were seven schools in the township, 253 scholars, and the total receipts of the school district were $2,672.00.

The population of the township in 1860 at the first census after its organization was 1,039, and in 1900 it was 1,388, including West Sunbury borough. The estimated population in 1908 was 1,620. J. H. Timblin was justice of the peace from 1898 to 1908.

Township officials: Tax assessor and collector, H. C. McClung; constable, A. McKinney; road commissioners, J. Hindman, J. J. Brown and C. S. McCandless; auditors, A. C. Wick, J. M. McKinney and E. White; clerk, M. Mahood.

FRANKLIN TOWNSHIP.

Franklin Township, abounding in well improved and highly productive farms, has, from its organization, attracted agricultural settlers. Its name comes from the Franklin Road, a public highway that passes entirely through it from north to south. It originally comprised the eastern half of Muddy Creek Township, but when the boundaries were changed, in the township division of 1854, a part of Centre Township was taken in, and later, when further changes in boundaries were made, that part of Brady Township south of Muddy Creek was added to it. While its main importance is agricultural, the oil industry has been somewhat developed, and there is some oil now produced in the township to a fairly profitable extent. There is also a vein of coal from three and a half to five feet thick underlying the township, but it has been mined chiefly for local consumption.

Probably the very first pioneers in what is now Franklin Township were John McCandless and Aaron Moore. In 1796 a colony of sixty persons settled in the adjacent township of Centre, but in the year before this, McCandless and Moore had selected homes in the wilderness of Franklin Township, to the east. Other pioneers soon joined them, some coming from the Centre Township settlement, and among the early names which appear in connection with civilizing enterprises may be noted those of James, George, William and Garrett Moore, Lewis Wilson, William McCandless (1st and 2d), Robert McCandless, Henry Montooth, Eliakin Anderson, Charles Sullivan, Stephen and Joseph Crawford, George Bowers, John and Peter Saltzman, Thomas and William Dodds, Jesse and James Nash, Abner Coates, John Thompson, James McGrew, Edward White, Nathaniel Stevenson and others of his name, together with many more. A number of these early settlers were natives of Ireland, although other countries were well represented. While the majority came hither attracted by the fertility of the soil and with the intention of engaging in farming, others were already equipped with excellent trades, which they followed to their own profit and the convenience of the settlement. Stephen Crawford started his blacksmith business in 1803; one William McCandless was a tailor and followed his trade in connection with farming, as did the other William McCandless engage in distilling, the latter business also being engaged in by Robert Hays. Many industries were carried on in the homes of the settlers, thrift and industry sufficing to supply all their imperative needs. Later, as towns and villages came into existence, improvement was rapid, business increased and education and religion made great advances.

Between 1800 and 1833 the settlement in Franklin Township was increased by a number of families which subsequently became very important, and among these may be mentioned the McClures, Joneses, Kirkpatrick and Riddles. In 1799 came Adam Albert, who may be called the pioneer of the Luther faith in Butler County, and in the same year came Henry Shaffer, who was the first orchardist of the settlement, planting apple seeds from which have been developed the fine fruit of this section.

The early settlers of Franklin Township were not unmindful of their duties in regard to educating their children. Seven years after the first settlement was made, John Thompson fitted up a log cabin and conducted a subscription school for a time and was then succeeded by Charles Sullivan, who in turn was succeeded by Samuel Cook. A building for school purposes, of log construction, was put up in 1811, near the Sullivan farm, and various teachers were employed, each year showing a larger student roll. Franklin Township now has as fine a school system as any of her sister townships and as intelligent a class of citizens. There are seven schools in the township, exclusive of the borough and the joint high school in Prospect, the seven schools having an enrollment of one hundred and ninety pupils.

The churches outside of Mt. Chestnut and Prospect are not numerous, ample transportation making attendance easy. The Muddy Creek Baptist Church, the pioneer religious organization, was founded October 19, 1819, and its membership was made up of residents of Franklin, Brady, Muddy Creek and Connoquenessing Townships. The United Presbyterian Church at Mt. Chestnut was organized in 1857 by Rev. William Brandon. It now has a membership of 164, with a flourishing Sunday school. The United Presbyterian Church at Prospect, which was formerly known as the Associate Reformed Church, dates back to 1823. The Emanuel Evangelical Lutheran Church was organized January 2, 1843. The German Reformed and Lutheran Church completed its organization about 1843. The Bethel Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in 1844. The Cumberland Presbyterian Church, which was dissolved in 1887, was organized about 1844. On July 8, 1887, the Presbyterian Church at Prospect was organized. These include the leading church bodies in the history of Franklin Township.

Mt. Chestnut and Prospect are the prominent centers of the township. In 1850 the land now covered by Mt. Chestnut was surveyed around the home of James D. Anderson, who had cleared the land and in 1849 had built the Stevenson Hotel. He was a merchant and was the first postmaster. The next settlers were Jesse Dutter, Joseph Dufford and others. In 1856 came J. J. Stevenson, who was a blacksmith, hotel keeper and for eighteen years postmaster. Village industries of all kinds flourish and the town is the source of supply to a large out-lying territory.

Prospect Borough, which is situated near the south line of Franklin Township, is the central point for a large and rich agricultural region. In 1825 it was laid out and surveyed on those portions of the farms of Andrew McGowan, Matthew McCullough and David Davis which cornered at the crossing of the Franklin and Pittsburg and the New Castle and Butler roads. The first merchant, George A. Kirkpatrick, gave the name to the place. In 1836, in partnership with Robert Allen and G. W. McCaskey, he opened a stock of goods in the first frame building erected in the village. The first postmaster was Dr. M. W. Spear. The first burgess after the place was incorporated as a borough was Lewis Roth—March 28, 1846—and the first justice of the peace was Samuel Piper. A large amount of business is transacted at Prospect, where many men of enterprise have invested capital. The Prospect Savings Bank was opened for business on May 1, 1874, with David Marshall as president and J. M. Lieghner as cashier, the latter subsequently becoming sole proprietor, in 1893 being succeeded by J. H. McLure. The Morrow Tannery was one of the early industries. It was started by Robert Allen and was later conducted by Andrew Douglas, and later by William Morrow. Other tanneries did business for a number of years in this section, conducted by Henderson Dick and Alfred Riddle. In October, 1880, occurred a fire which destroyed a steam grist-mill and steam saw-mill, owned by Martin & Edmundson. The present milling activity is due to William Ralston, who owns the Ralston Roller mill and a saw-mill. The Prospect Creamery is an important local enterprise and butter made in this plant is shipped to distant points. Secret societies are well supported, all the leading organizations being represented, and excellent school facilities are afforded. The Prospect Academy, an institution of considerable note, attracts students from near and far on account of the high educational standard maintained.

Among the leading business concerns in Prospect at the present time may be mentioned the following: W. R. Riddle & Co., T. J. Critchlow and E. L. McClure, general merchandise; J. G. Glenn, furniture and funeral director; J. C. Scott, hardware; A. Bowers, druggist; J. H. McClure, private bank; James H. Myers and J. B. Dick, livery stables; Roath Milling Company, planing mill; R. S. Weigle, Martin Heyle and J. W. Heyle, blacksmith shops; Drs. J. B. Thompson and T. D. McConnell, physicians; L. M. Roath, dentist, P. L. Hunter, proprietor of the Hunter Hotel.

The fraternal orders are represented by Rustie Lodge, I. O. O. F., organized in 1874, present membership 100; Prospect Camp, Woodmen of the World, No. 120, organized 1904, and a Ladies Branch of the Maccabees, though the membership of the last mentioned is not as yet large.

Prospect Borough has a fine brick public school building, with an enrollment of sixty-five pupils, and two teachers. The high school, which is a joint school for the borough and township, has an enrollment of twenty, with one teacher.

Borough Officials (1909): Burgess, T. D. McConnell; council, S. S. McCullough, L. M. Roath, W. R. Riddle, J. W. Neely, G. A. Warren and A. Bowers; school board, J. H. Barr, L. M. Roath, J. H. McClure, P. L. Hunter, C. E. Weigle and James Moore; justices of the peace, John Weigle and J. F. McKee; constable, A. W. McClure; assessor, J. W. Schaffer; collector, Peter Kramer; auditors, G. C. Schaffer, Hugh Weigle and G. W. Beighley. Postmaster, Reuben Shanor.

Isle is a settlement in the northwestern part of the township having a Baptist church, with Rev. Warren, pastor. There is also a general store, kept by William Watson & Sons, and a blacksmith shop.

The Patrons of Husbandry are represented in Franklin Township by a flour-ishing grange.

Township Officials: School directors, David Pflugh, John Barkley, Ira Thompson, William Scott, Harvey Morrison and Ed. Scheiver; justices of the peace, J. T. McBride; constable, Augustus Shannon; assessor, A. G. Shannon; collector, J. J. Riddle; auditors, Geo. Barkley, Mr. Hackett and Jacob Albert.

ALLEGHENY TOWNSHIP.

Allegheny Township, located in the northeast corner of Butler County, was organized in 1854 and was created from parts of Parker and Venango Townships. The Allegheny River touches the northeast corner. Its greatest resource has been oil, its surface being too broken and uneven for an agricultural township, although there are many excellent and productive farms within its limits. There are a few small coal banks. The oil wells now in operation are small, and there is but little gas.

There was quite an influx of people here in the closing years of the eighteenth century, beginning in 1797, when John Lowrie, John Crawford, Sr., John and George Crawford, Samuel and William Porterfield, Charles and James Pollock, Alexander Grant and John Roseberry arrived, probably in the order named. James Anderson was here in 1797, or 1798, as were also George Parker, Alexander Brown, Ebenezer and John Brown. William Jack, a soldier of the Revolution, settled on the site of Byron Centre in 1798, and the same year witnessed the arrival of Samuel Graham, a son of a Revolutionary soldier, and himself a soldier of the War of 1812, in which he lost his life. John Redick, Sr., John Allen, Levi Gibson, and Samuel Coulter were all located here in 1799. Levi Gibson established a small distillery on his place, which was in operation for some years on a small scale. John Truly also was one of the pioneers and on his farm of 400 acres erected a small mill, the site being the same as that used by Pierce and Black, when they erected their mill on Bear Creek in 1846. This latter changed hands a number of times, being later known, first as the Adams Mill and then as the Horner Mill. John Turner and Benjamin Law were other early arrivals. The first white child born in the township was probably John Allen, the date of his birth being 1799. One of the first deaths recorded was that of James Crawford, Sr., January 18, 1891, as a result of injuries received while on a hunt with a party of friends. At the confluence of Allen Run and the North Branch of Bear Creek, they fired the brush in order to drive out the game; the fire got beyond their control and they climbed trees for safety, all being seriously burned. John Parker, another of the hunting party, suffered through life from the injuries received, which probably hastened his death.

John Lowrie, who settled on 800 acres of land in Poplar Bottom, opened a store there in 1811, it being later conducted by a man named Dumars, and still later by Pierce and Black. Walter Lowrie, a son of John, was reared there, and afterward rose to distinction, becoming United States senator. The Lowrie saw and grist mill was erected at an early date, as was also the more pretentious and better equipped Rogers mill. A mill was erected by Samuel Anderson in 1834, and later was known as the Sedgwick mill. Maple Furnace was established in 1844 by George and James Boyard, was sold in 1847 to Henry Graft, and in 1854 to M. S. Adams, who operated it until it was abandoned in 1865. The store established the same year as the furnace survived the latter three years. The Kensington Furnace was in operation from 1846 to 1852, and was owned by Church, Carruthers & Crawford. The township was very backward in its development until the oil boom, when its population increased rapidly. It has never developed a village of any size, Maple Furnace, Kensington Furnace, Six Points, Sandy Point, Byron Centre and Register City not being more than small trading points at any stage of their existence. A post-office was established at Six Points in 1866, with James McMahon as postmaster; and later one at Byron Centre, which was founded in 1879 after the oil developments.

Allegheny Township has six schools with 168 pupils. The school board in 1908 was composed of J. A. Crawford, T. L. Anderson, H. H. Gates, W. A. McQuiston, M. E. Blair and James Meek. The educational facilities are good and a high grade of scholarship is maintained.

The Methodist Episcopal Church, of Maple Furnace, was organized in 1854 by M. S. Adams, through whose instrumentality, largely, a church building was erected.

The principal members at that time were the men employed at the furnace.

Mount Olive Evangelical Church of Allegheny Township was organized March 20, 1869, by Rev. A. S. Miller, and the following year a $3,000 church building was erected on a lot purchased from James Crawford, located near Six Points. Eleven of the members of the congregation had formerly belonged to Mt. Pisgah Church of Venango Township. Among the pastors of this church may be mentioned Rev. Isaiah Delo, Revs. Reese, Smith and Zimmer.

The Allegheny Presbyterian Church was organized May 20, 1875, by Revs. Coulter and Williams, and Elder James Crawford. The elders were John R. Allen, S. P. Eakin, A. R. Carnahan and C. C. Cooper. J. C. Kiskaddon and J. P. Milford were added to the session. In the pioneer days of the township, the Presbyterians crossed the Venango County line and attended services at Scrubgrass Presbyterian Church. Rev. James Coulter was the first pastor of Allegheny Church, and was succeeded in 1880 by Rev. Samuel A. Hughes, who continued as stated supply for two years. Rev. William J. Hazlett was installed as pastor September 24, 1883, and continued with this charge for a period of ten years, when the pulpit again became vacant. The present pastor is Rev. Mr. Witherspoon. The church has a membership of eighty.

The Grant Methodist Episcopal Church was organized by Rev. Peters in 1876, and in 1877 a house of worship was erected on the farm of John Rosenberry.

The Allegheny Church Cemetery had its inception in a charter granted, January 11, 1876, to J. P. Milford, S. P. Eakin, J. R. Allen, D. S. Allen and Henry Jamison, with authority to establish and maintain a cemetery. Including the church site, the property includes six and three-quarters acres obtained by purchase from the John Rosenberry and Mrs. Martha Allen farms, a part of the purchase money being turned back to the church by the sellers. It is a well-kept burying ground and is a credit to the church and township.

At Bonus there is a store operated by J. Meek. Six Points, northwest of the center, has a store and country inn kept by E. Parks. At Byron there is a school and two or three farm houses.

Township officials: Tax collectors and assessor, J. S. Glenn; constable, J. K. Boozell; road commissioners, J. T. Joseph, W. R. Bennett and E. C. Parks; auditors, N. Louchner, J. Anchors and A. Wilson.

FAIRVIEW TOWNSHIP.

Fairview Township, for a number of years distinguished on account of the remarkable development of oil, making it one of the most productive of this commodity in all Butler County, has many other claims to particular notice and at the present writing has a population of substantial farmers and progressive business men. It was established in March, 1846, by a legislative act providing that it be formed out of Donegal Township, and was given its present area in 1854. On account of the rise and ebb of the oil industry, its population has fluctuated.

The first actual settlers in Fairview Township were Samuel and John Wallace, in 1795, although, in the previous year Rudolph Barnhart had made a temporary stay of a few months. From that date on up to what may be called the close of the pioneer period, came many others, mainly home-seekers, and in a large number of cases their descendants still occupy the land. The old names, many of them familiar because of the sterling character and enterprising efforts of their owners, included John Hemphill, Jacob Barnhart, Jr., Daniel Barnhart, Joseph Smith and son John, the latter later known as a Methodist preacher, John Craig, Paul McDermott, Matthew Smith, William Wilson, James Bovard, Alexander Storey, Samuel Kinkaid, Thomas Jackson, Patrick O'Farren, William Ray, Samuel and Stephen Hall, Leonard Reep, George Robertson, Samuel Riddle, John Irwin, William Moore, John Cumberland, David and Rev. William Morehead, John and James Craig, Andrew Campbell, Charles McClung, Samuel Irwin, John Snow, John and George Emrick, William Fleming, Jonathan Keppel, together with the Thorns and Hays.

The early settlers of this township were of the sturdy type that gave promise of future excellence. At first they were concerned in the acquiring of land and the developing of farms and probably up to 1826 few merchants had opened up stocks in any part of the township. Here, as in other districts, a lack of good roads prevented much social intercourse, the separated settlers often having to travel long distances to attend a "preaching" or to reach a mill with their bag of grain. Nevertheless settlements eventually grew into hamlets and these into villages, while the boroughs, Fairview and Petrolia, and the village of Haysville, for some years occupied the limelight as great oil centers.

Fairview. Between 1826 and 1839, thirteen houses, including a tavern, a store, a cabinet and a blacksmith shop, comprised what is now the borough of Fairview. In 1844, Col. James A. Gibson and M. B. Adams established a foundry, which, under other owners was operated until 1872. In September, 1867, the petition for the incorporation of Fairview as a borough was granted and four years later, after a placid growth of forty years, the place became one of the noisiest, busiest, and for a time one of the most reckless spots in all Pennsylvania, the people, in every walk of life apparently having become crazed by the oil fever. The first oil was discovered just west of Petrolia in the fourth sand. From a village of 200 population in 1870, it grew by 1876, to one more than 1,000. Local enterprise, together with outside capital, rapidly provided for the increased number of inhabitants, and hotels and business houses went up with remarkable celerity. A number of concerns started and flourished for a short season, but when the great boom was over, suspended operations and in some cases caused heavy losses to those who could but poorly afford it. The borough has suffered from a number of destructive fires and the loss of much property and some life. In August, 1872, occurred the great fire at the Jameson well.

Fairview Borough has now about 235 inhabitants. Among business enterprises may be mentioned the Hotel Adams, proprietor, Mrs. Adams; the general store of C. Scott; and the cigar and notion store of S. H. Templeton, who is also postmaster. There is one school, with about forty pupils.

Of churches there are the United Presbyterian, dating back to 1834, with a present membership of 145, Rev. Campbell, pastor; the Presbyterian, organized in 1875, which now has forty members, Rev. Stewart, pastor; and the Methodist Episcopal, organized in the thirties of the last century, whose present pastor is the Rev. Lowthian, membership thirty.

Petrolia. In February, 1872, when the "Fannie Jane" oil well was drilled with such surprising results, the present borough of Petrolia was represented by the farm homes of J. B. Jameson, A. L. Campbell and George H. Graham. W. E. Clark in that month erected a small building. By December, 1873, there were standing four hotels, twelve grocery stores, two hardware stores, three clothing stores, two bakeries, seven barber shops, three machine shops, two meat markets, two drug stores, two billiard halls, one news room, three physicians' offices, while several lawyers had put out their shingles, and, while probably there were more saloons than all other business houses together, there was at least one organized church, the pioneer being the Methodist Episcopal. Petrolia is described as having been an extraordinary place between 1875 and 1877, overrun by an outside element totally foreign to the one which had originally settled along Bear Creek. Among the characters still remembered by Petrolia and vicinity, and recalled as typical of a certain class that inevitably appears, wherever gathers a large and irresponsible population led by greed and excitement, was Ben Hogan, who, after a spectacular career of vice, relieved by astonishing charities and attempts to gain official recognition, later became an evangelist, but in this capacity never returned to Petrolia. Fortunes were made and lost during the height of the oil boom. As at Fairview, destructive fires have occurred in this borough, several of them destroying a large part of the business and residential sections of the town. Local enterprise, however, has been equal to the emergency, and Petrolia, in spite of other misfortunes, still is a leading point of interest and business in the township. The great flood of July, 1879, was most disastrous, causing a loss estimated at $75,000.

The town is supplied with telegraph and U. S. Express, and has the Bell and Speechley telephone systems installed. The Standard Oil Company supplies gas for lighting purposes. The leading business firms are: W. H. Daugherty & Co. and Thomas Roach, oil refineries; W. C. Foster, drugs and shoes; Geo. Yough, clothing; William Stoughton, groceries and hardware; C. M. Williams, groceries; Mrs. J. Duffey, proprietor Central Hotel; J. M. Hawk & Son, general store and furniture; E. P. Chesbro, dry goods; O. P. Berry, machine shop; Imbrie Bros., hardware; Rinky & Spence, general store, and J. M. Barney, boiler shop. The postmaster is C. J. Gray. The fraternal orders are the Royal Arcanum, the Maccabees, the Knights of Pythias, the Modern Woodmen and the G. A. R.

Petrolia has three churches—the Methodist Episcopal, organized in 1873, which now has 100 members, with Rev. Recht as pastor; the Presbyterian, organized in 1877, now having ninety-eight members, Rev. Stewart being the pastor; and the Roman Catholic (St. James'), presided over by Father Hopkins, which has a membership of fifty-eight. Petrolia has one school, with an attendance of about 100 pupils. Town Officials: F. M. Fritz and C. Butzer, justices of the peace; C. Butzer, tax collector; H. Cromblin, constable; C. Butzer, tax assessor; J. Hover, road commissioner; W. Stoughton, R. Imbury and T. Gibbons auditors; M. Roach, burgess.

Karns City was incorporated as a borough in January, 1875, with L. D. Akin as first burgess. The history of this remarkable oil town is told, in large measure, in those of Fairview and Petrolia. The first well, on the Hugh P. McClymond's farm, was named the "Shasta" and in June, 1872, it was producing 120 barrels of oil a day. Believing that a permanent town would be built here, from the excitement and interest shown, the McClymonds made a plat of their land and the borough, when incorporated, included this farm and ten acres of the Riddle farm. In honor of a prominent citizen the place was named Karns City and it became the terminus of the Parker & Karns City Railroad. On the McClymonds farm great subsequent oil development took place, the famous "Rob Roy" well being produced here. A great population of speculators, drillers, pumpers and all classes of workmen and representatives of almost every profession, as well as those of none, poured in, with the usual results. Amazing fortunes were made daily, others were lost as quickly, pretentious buildings were put up and lavish expenditure gave a metropolitan air to the place. However, from a population of over 2,000 in 1876, by 1890, it has fallen to 427. Fire and flood did fearful damage to Karns City; as to the other oil towns, one particularly distressing conflagration being that of the burning of the Bateman House, in March, 1877, when Mrs. Bateman, her three children and a guest, were burned and F. E. Bateman and son and another guest later died as the result of their injuries.

The leading firms in Karns City are the Pennsylvania Refining Company, the Starlight Refining Company, the Cleman Hardware Company, J. Wersh Jr., proprietor, and the J. Wersh general store. The Methodist Church, organized in 1874, is now presided over by Rev. Lowthian. Its membership is about twenty.

The town is lighted by gas and there is one school with about eighty-five pupils. The Odd Fellows and United Workmen are here represented by lodges, and there are express, telephone and telegraph conveniences. The present population is about 200.

To indicate the large amount of business done in the township of Fairview, including those of the boroughs and of the villages of Beuna Vista, which was surveyed in 1847 and a very important oil district in the fall of 1873 and later; Argyle, Angelica, Iron City and Haysville, may be mentioned: the Argyle Savings Bank, the Oil Exchange, the Washington Building and Loan Association, the machine shops of the United Pipe Lines Company, the latter forming a great industry, the machine shops of Ireland & Hughes, the boiler works of Frank W. Quinn & Company, the Petrolia Refining Company, the oil refinery on Oil Creek, of W. H. Daugherty & Sons, with numerous other refineries, and the Petrolia Creamery. This does not include the many financial institutions which were of short duration.

The township still produces considerable oil, there being probably some 1200 wells in operation, though all are small producers. Drilling is still going on, though nothing large has been struck in recent years. There is enough gas to provide for local consumption. The Starlight Refining Co., the M. H. Daugherty Refining Co., the T. Roach Refining Co. and the Pennsylvania Refining Co. operate important refineries.

Of coal the township has some important mines, among them the Sherwin, which turns out 300 tons per day and gives employment to seventy men. In addition there are some smaller banks operated for local consumption.

There are deposits of limestone on Bear Creek, which have not yet been developed, but which will doubtless prove a source of future wealth.

There is one store, kept by Mr. Day, at Buena Vista, which is a station on the Western Allegheny Railway. There is also a United Presbyterian church here, where services are held occasionally. Other stations within the limits of the township are Angelica, on the B. & O. Railroad, and Fairmount, also on the B. & O.

St. Paul's Reformed Church, formerly known as the Union Church, built its first log house on the Andrew Barnhart farm, on land he donated in 1813. The congregation was originally a combination of Lutheran and Reformed. After many changes the Reformed body became the owners of the site on Sugar Creek now known as the "White Church." The German Lutheran Church was organized at Fairview in 1832. St. Peter's Reformed Church, probably was organized in 1845, and the United Presbyterian Church in 1834. The Presbyterian Church of Fairview and the Presbyterian Church of Karns City were both organized in 1875. The Methodist Episcopal Church of Fairview dates back to the thirties and that of Petrolia in 1873. The Presbyterian Church of the latter place was organized in 1877. St. James Catholic Chapel, in 1874, and the Church of Christ in 1880. Both in religion and education the residents of Fairview Township have displayed earnestness of purpose, enlightened view and practical qualities.

Township Officials: Justice of the peace, W. P. Day; treasurer—S. McCollough; road commissioners—R. Johnson, C. Ellenbergh and R. McCollough; constable—J. Jackson; tax assessor and collector—J. J. Campbell; auditors—G. G. McCollough, W. P. Day, and C. F. E. McCollough.

United Presbyterian Church of Fairview, first known as the Bear Creek Presbyterian Church, had its beginning previous to the year 1800. The members first worshipped in a tent which stood on a spot called "Deer Lick," in the old grave-yard midway between Fairview and Karns City. About 1800 Samuel Kincaid, Joseph Smith, John Craig and others constructed the first church building, which was a small unplastered log structure that could be used only in summer. It was located about a mile east of Fairview, in the present lower Bear Creek Cemetery.

In 1803 Rev. Robert Johnston became the first pastor, giving a part of his time to the Scrubgrass congregation. He remained until 1807, after which the church was supplied for several years by Rev. Robert Lee. For several years, beginning with 1812, the congregation was without a regular pastor. Rev. Alexander Cook, who came in 1821, was the second regular pastor. Soon after, a larger and better building was erected in the Upper Bear Creek Cemetery. It was built of hewed logs, 40x60 feet and 20 feet in height and like the first building, was unplastered.

Rev. Alexander Cook was succeeded in 1830 by Rev. Joseph Johnson, lately from Ireland, as supply. The latter's failure to produce his ministerial letter caused a schism in the congregation and led to the organization of the Bear Creek Associate Reformed Church. In 1837 Mr. Johnson went back to Ireland and for some time thereafter Rev. James Green ministered to the congregation, though not called as pastor. Rev. R. W. Oliver was the fourth settled pastor, coming in 1843. A part of his time was given to Laurenceburg and Mt. Varnum. He remained but a few years, Rev. Mr. Riddle being stated supply in 1847. The latter was the first pastor to preach against intemperance. During these early years only two communions a year were held, usually in May and October.

In 1848 Rev. James H. Fife became pastor. Soon after, the congregation decided to build a new house of worship, and in 1850 an edifice was erected on the site of the present building. It was of frame construction, 59x45 feet, and was furnished with a fine bell, but had no spire. It was erected at a cost of over $1500.00. The use of the pews was sold to meet the expenses of the pastor's salary. At this time there were fifty-one pew holders.

Mr. Fife, who proved a satisfactory pastor, was released some time previous to June, 1856, and was succeeded by Rev. John A. Campbell in the fall of that year. During his short pastorate of two years the congregation entered the union forming the United Presbyterian Church, the Session at this time being composed of David Thompson, Robert Campbell, James Say, James Wilson, William McGarvey, Thomas Kelley and Andrew J. Christy.

Rev. W. P. Breden became pastor in the summer of 1859, and on Communion Sunday, October 30, 1864, the first offering for Foreign Missions was taken, and about this time the different congregations began making their annual report to the General Assembly.

Mr. Breden, whose pastorate was very acceptable, was succeeded by Rev. David Dodds in the fall of 1872 and in the same year a Church Aid Society was organized. In Mr. Dodd's time also a library was purchased, the congregation was districted for weekly prayer-meetings and there was a strong spiritual growth. In the spring of 1875 Buena Vista congregation was organized with twenty-one members from Fairview and others in the vicinity.

After Mr. Doods' departure the pastorate was vacant for a year. Then the congregation called Rev. A. B. C. McFarland, who began work in September, 1878. By this time the congregation needed a new church edifice and a brick two-story building was accordingly planned, 48x68 feet, at an estimated cost of $15,000.00. It was dedicated August 24, 1883, free of debt. In 1886 the Woman's Missionary Society was organized. In January, 1889, Mr. McFarland resigned as pastor owing to causes that cast a cloud over the church during the latter part of his pastorate. He was followed by the Rev. R. M. Sherrard, who assumed his duties in the fall of 1890. On October 26, 1898, the congregation met with a discouraging experience, the fine church building, with all its equipments, being destroyed by fire. The members, strong in their sense of union, rose to the occasion, however, and cleared away the rubbish, and by their determined efforts a new and more convenient though less costly building was erected, and was dedicated February 8, 1890, free of debt. Mr. Sherrard gave up the charge September 16th following and the Rev. J. A. C. McQuiston became pastor on the first of August, 1901. He was succeeded by the Rev. Mr. Campbell, the present pastor. The church now has a membership of 145 with a flourishing Sunday school, and is a powerful factor in the religious life of the community.

CLINTON TOWNSHIP.

Clinton Township, which was organized in 1854, out of parts of the original Middlesex and Buffalo Townships, possesses many of the natural features which appeal to those in search of quiet homes and these were recognized at a very early period in the settlement of the county. It is well watered land, the tributaries of Bull Creek giving necessary moisture, and its soil varies from heavy clay to sandy loam, while its coal deposits, when entirely developed, will probably make this township equal to many others in wealth from that source. There is but little oil or gas and as yet no limestone deposits have been opened up. Banks to supply local consumption are now operated.

One of the first pioneers to venture into this locality was Patrick Harvey, of County Down, Ireland, who selected a tract of land as early as 1792. He returned to his family in Westmoreland County until 1794, when he came back to Butler County and cleared ten acres of his farm and built his log cabin on the same and then brought his wife and children to the lonely spot. The only other pioneer of that year, of whom there is record, was James McKee. In March, 1797, came Samuel Copeland and after his log hut was built, his family joined him. Other settlers of about the same time were George Plants and John Burtner. George Stinchcomb came in 1796, but soon sold out to Barnett Stepp, and about the same period Henry Sefton, Thomas Stewart and Robert McGinnis appeared. Revolutionary soldiers were well represented in the years following, and the majority of these early settlers were of Irish extraction. The names of Thomas Watson, Hugh and Robert Riddle, John Burtner and Samuel A. Rippey were known in this section prior to 1800. In that year came James and Edward Byrne; in 1801 came Daniel Pugh, the founder of the Pughtown settlement; in 1802 came Francis Anderson, who was commissioned a justice of the peace two years later and served in the War of 1812. Thomas Lardin, who owned one of the first iron plows in the neighborhood, is mentioned in 1803, as is also John Hay; in 1805 came John Cunningham; in 1806 came William Love, the founder of a large family, and in 1816 and 1818 came other members of the same family. In 1822 three of the Walker family purchased 1800 acres of land here and as they subsequently occupied and improved it, they were among the early prominent and reliable men. There are many other names which might appear among the founders of the various industries, the builders of the homes and the moulders of public sentiment in Clinton Township through what is usually termed the pioneer period, and among these may be included the Moores, the Brewers, the Thompsons, the Gibsons, the Criswells, the Westermans, the Bicketts, the Hemphills and the Norrises, and it is remarkable how these names still figure in all that concerns the township at the present day.

In Clinton as in other townships, one of the first coveted and needed industries was a grist mill and second was a sawmill. Daniel Lardin, son of Thomas, the pioneer, was the probable founder of the village of Lardintown, built the first grist-mill, locating it at the headwaters of Bull Creek. It was subsequently owned by William Lardin, grandson of the pioneer. After it was destroyed by fire, a new mill was erected on the same site. The first frame house in the township was erected in 1840, from lumber provided, in all probability, by the Riddle saw-mill. In 1848 the Kirk carding and woolen-mill was started and successfully operated until 1861.

Clinton Township being mainly agricultural and thus self-sustaining, has fewer hamlets and villages than some of her sister districts. Population is evenly distributed and a similarity of interests has brought about much unity of feeling on all public questions. The matter of educating the children of the township was early agitated and houses were utilized at first on the farms of the Riddle and Davis families. Among the early instructors may be noted the familiar names of Cunningham, Heron, Jack, Love, McCorkle, McGarry, Watson and Anderson. The most pretentious educational enterprise of the township is the Clinton Normal and Classical Academy, which was chartered September 8, 1890, with thirty-seven stockholders. It is liberally supported and offers a fine opportunity for obtaining a thorough education along academic lines. There are six district schools with an enrollment of 217 scholars. The Saxonburg Telephone is installed throughout the township.

Clinton Township is more or less the home of Presbyterianism. The earliest organization, the Westminster Presbyterian Church, was founded June 12, 1835, by Rev. Newton Bracken, with a membership of nineteen. It appears that no regular church building was put up until 1845, when one of logs was constructed, which served the purpose until a new building was completed in 1853. At present it has no regular minister.

The United Presbyterian Church of Clinton was organized April 20, 1845, as the Associated Reform Church and was incorporated under its present title, December 7, 1863. In 1845 a log house of worship was erected on land donated by James M. Hay and at first its furnishings were very primitive. In 1854 the congregation had so increased that a new building was necessary, and a commodious frame structure was built. The first pastor was Rev. Isaiah Niblock.

Clinton United Presbyterian Church, located in the northwestern corner of the township, has a membership of 180. Rev. Mr. McMichael is pastor.

The Oak Grove United Presbyterian Church was organized August 27, 1878, and a frame building was put up which was dedicated in March, 1879. At present the church has no regular pastor. Its membership is about seventy.

The three cemeteries in the township are the Oak Grove, the Clinton and the Westminster, the latter being the oldest burial ground. In these sacred spots rest the ashes of many of the best known and most useful and revered of the township's pioneers.

Clinton Township has a well supported Grand Army of the Republic organization in Harvey Post, No. 514. It was organized March 25, 1886, at school-house No. 2, with the following charter members: William Harvey, John S. Love, J. B. Cunningham, J. P. Kirkpatrick, William Thompson, M. Thompson, G. P. Harvey, John Halstead, Martin Gibson, H. H. Halstead, E. Sefton, Adam Ekas, D. Huey, J. Jones, John E. Burtner and H. J. Burns. The first commanders were Adam Ekas and John S. Love, both of whom served through two terms. The post enjoys a fine hall and armory, being indebted to John S. Love for the ground on which they stand.

Riddles is a locality near the center part of the township. It has a very small population.

Houseville, a station on the Bessemer Railroad, is a settlement of about twenty people.

Barkley, also on the Bessemer Railroad, has about twenty-five people. T. Kennedy and J. Thompson conduct stores here and the Adams Express Company has an office.

Woods Station, on the Bessemer Railroad, has a telegraph office. There are about a dozen people residing in the vicinity.

Clinton Springs is a health resort where there is a hotel conducted by Anderson and Jones. There are eight cottages in the vicinity. A. Hay conducts a store near Clinton Church.

Township Officials: Justices of the peace—J. B. Cunningham and J. D. Harbison; constable—William Harvey; tax assessor and collector—J. McCall; road commissioners—A. E. Kas and J. Brewer; clerk—J. Harvey; treasurer—M. Love; auditors—W. Krume, T. Woods, and L. Lardens; school directors (1908)—W. C. Gibson, Thomas Hay, Harvey W. Love, R. D. Sefton, G. A. List, and C. R. Anderson.

BUFFALO TOWNSHIP.

Buffalo Township was one of the four townships which made up what now is Butler County, while it was still attached to Allegheny County, and included a large area. It was one of the thirteen townships erected in 1803, and continued one of the largest in the county until reduced to its present area in 1854. It is of very rugged surface and did not settle up as rapidly as some of the other townships; it is well drained by Big Buffalo Creek, Little Buffalo Creek, Sarver's Run and Little Bull Creek, and contains many excellent and well improved farms. The Allegheny River touches the extreme southeastern corner. Coal mining has been carried on quite extensively in various parts of the township, and is of the Upper Freeport character. The township is the divide between the oak and pine hills, the latter beginning at Sarversville and extending toward the south and east boundaries of the county.

Buffalo Township has very little oil or gas. A good quantity of coal is found. The Kerr Coal Company is operating near the southern boundary and has the only mine from which shipments are made to outside points. There are, however, a number of small banks operated. The Pennsylvania Railroad is the only one in the county.

The first actual settlement here was made in 1795 by a man of Irish birth, George Bell, after whom a hill and a creek were named. He was followed in the same year by Robert Elliott, also a native of Ireland, who in 1796 brought out his wife and a large family of children. He also brought with him a quantity of young fruit trees and set out one of the first orchards in the county. Benjamin Sarver, prior to taking up his residence here, came up from Tarentum every Monday and remained until the following Saturday noon, working on the mill which he operated here some time later; he made a settlement at Sarversville in 1796. Mrs. Mary Steele and her children, John and Mary, arrived in 1796, as did some of the Jeremiah Smith, Sr., family, John Brooks, William Kiskaddon, a veteran of the Revolutionary War; and Joseph Simmers. In 1797-1798, Robert Carson, John Barker, Thomas Fleming, Andrew Easley, with their respective families, and the Kirkpatrick family took up their homes here. John Harbison, and his wife Massy, who had been residents opposite the mouth of Buffalo Creek, located in Buffalo Township in 1807. After the War of 1812, there were many new arrivals in the settlements, which had been backward in their growth and development. John Ekas settled at what now is Ekastown in 1818, and he was soon followed by the Roney and Weir families. Jacob Byerly and family arrived in 1823, and Thomas Harbison in 1824. Other pioneer families became established here in the thirties and forties, among which may be mentioned the Doyles, Halsteads, Blacks, Sedwicks, McKees, Wilsons, Walters, Walkers, Mortons, Painters, McCaffertys, Gardners and Hoovers.

The Sarver grist-mill was the first industry in operation in the township, and the log dam and water-wheel are still to be seen in the creek at Sarversville. Thomas Fleming established a small distillery in 1799, and for some years furnished his neighbors with corn whiskey. John Harbison built a saw-mill on Buffalo Creek in 1807, and operated it until his death in 1822. The mill built about the same time at Sarver's Station, by one of the Smiths and Caleb Jones, was run by them for years and later was owned by Alexander Douthett. David Kelly in 1866 built a mill at the same point, which he sold in 1868 to Jacob Ehrman and which is still known as the old Ehrman mill. William Colmer and Jacob Weaver built what later was known as the Cratty mill, and the Hill mill on Big Buffalo Creek was another mill which thrived in the early days. The most important of the business enterprises of the township is the large distillery of Guckenheimer & Company, or rather of the Pennsylvania Company, located in the extreme southeastern part of the township. The buildings first erected were for P. McGonigle & Son, and were built in 1869; the plant was started in operation in 1870 and at that time had a capacity of eighteen barrels per day. In 1875, the firm of Guckenheimer & Company, composed of A. Guckenheimer, Samuel Wertheimer, Emil Wertheimer and Isaac Wertheimer, was organized and purchased the plant, which they operated without interruption until it was destroyed by fire in July, 1889. Large and modern buildings took the place of those destroyed, with a capacity of fifty barrels per day. It is a large and successful enterprise.

It was long after the first settlement that a school building was erected in Buffalo Township, although classes were organized in the early days and taught by some one who came from some other locality for that purpose. Among the first teachers here were Robert Cunningham, Michael Herron, Robert Hamilton, William McGarry, and Thomas Watson. The first common school was established in District No. 2, in 1836, and was taught by George C. Sedwick. At the present time the township contains six schools, all of which are in a gratifying state of efficiency.

Buffalo Presbyterian Church, located one and a half miles east of Sarversville, was organized August 3, 1843, by Revs. Abraham Boyd, Thomas W. Kerr and Elder Hill, and during that and the succeeding year a small and rude house of worship was built. A new edifice was erected soon after the close of the Civil War, and was dedicated in 1867; a burying-ground surrounds the church and consists of two acres of land. The first elders of the church were Andrew McCaskey and William Cruikshank, and the first pastor was Rev. Abraham Boyd, who had preached to the members for some time before an organization was effected. He served the church until 1846, and was succeeded by Rev. D. D. McKee, Rev. Newton Braeken and others. The church at present (February, 1909) has thirty-five members, but no regular pastor.

